enriched with the notions of other heretics, would be thought the only knowing persons) dressed up Christ with, not like himself. Their philosophy being a falsely so called science or knowledge, 1 Tim. vi. 20, whatever show of wisdom it might seem to carry along with it, ver. 23, it was not really profitable; but a vain deceit, or seduction, as several take the next clause appositively, and the conjunction expositively; yet, if we consider what follows, we may understand another general imposture, viz. superstition, seeing vain deceit, after the tradition of men, is so like that superstition our Saviour doth rebuke in the Pharisees, Matt. xv. 9, several branches of which the apostle doth afterward in this chapter dispute against, ver. 16—23: superstition might well be called deceit, from the cheat it puts upon men, and the notation of the Greek word, which imports a withdrawing men from the way. Christ, and from his way of worship prescribed in his word; and vain it is as well as a deceit, since it is empty and unprofitable, not accompanied with God's blessing, nor conducing to the pleasing of him, but the provoking of him, Psal. cvi. 29, 43. Being led by no other rule than the tradition of men, which is the same with the precepts of men, Mark vii. 8, which God likes not, Isa. viii. 20; xxviii. 13; John xx. 31; Acts xxvi. 22; 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16; he would not give place to human traditions in his house, nor to the rudiments of the world, (in allusion to grammar, wherein the letters are the elements or rudiments of all literature,) i. e. the ceremonies of the Mosaic law, containing a kind of elementary instruction, for that seems to be the apostle's meaning, comparing this verse with the 20th and 21st of this chapter, and other places, Gal. iii. 24, these being but corporeal, carnal, and sensible ordinances, suitable to a worldly sanctuary. Heb. ix. 1, 10, not to be imposed in that spiritual one which Christ hath set up, John iv. 23, 24; Gal. v. 2. Whatsoever philosophical colours or Pharisaical paint they might appear in, they are not after Christ: we say a false picture of a man is not after the man, being not taken from or resembling his person, but clean another; such descriptions of him, as were not taken from the life and truth that was in him. And therefore he who is Head of his church, and likes not to be misshaped or misrepresented, will not accept of homage from those of his own house, in a livery that he hath not given order for, Lev. x. 1; Jer. vii. 31; 2 Cor. v. 9, how specious soever it may be in the wisdom of this world and the princes thereof, 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7.

p John 1. 14.
ch. 1. 18.

9 For <sup>p</sup> in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

For; the causal particle induceth this as an argument to enforce the caution immediately foregoing, against those who did seek to draw from Christ by philosophy, as well as urging the ceremonial law; else the apostle's reasoning were not cogent unless against both. In him; it is evident that the Lord Jesus Christ himself, whom he had described and but just now named, is the subject, the person of whom he speaks, and in whom is seated, and unto whom he attributes, what followeth, chap. i. 19; John i. 4; 1 Tim. iv. 16. He doth not say, in his doctrine, whatever Socinians cavil, as if they would render the apostle absurd, and not to agree with himself in what he asserts of Christ's person before (as hath been showed) and after in the context. It is plain this relative him, respects not only ver. 8, but ver. 11, &c. in whom the believing Colossians are said to be complete as their Head, both in the former chapter, and soon after in this. Would it not be absurd to say, Christ's doctrine is the head of angels? we are crucified in the doctrine of Christ? buried and quickened together with his doctrine? the hand-writing of ordinances was nailed to the cross of doctrine? Is a doctrine the head of principalities and powers? can a doctrine be buried in baptism? &c. To silence all the earth, that they should not restrain it to Christ's doctrine only, what he asserts of his person, Paul, after Christ had been several years in heaven, put it in the present tense, dwelleth, not dwelt, (as 2 Tim. i. 5.) in regard of the person eternally the same, Heb. xiii. 8; for his argument had not been cogent, to contain Christians in the faith of Christ, and their duty to him, to have alleged, in the doctrine of Christ now in heaven hath dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily (could propriety of speech have allowed it); but from the other respect, because in their very flesh (the body of Christ, now an inhabitant of the heavens) the very Godhead, in the whole fulness thereof, personally, from the moment of his incarnation, doth yet dwell. What will not the faithful perform and work out with their utmost faith, that they may never suffer themselves to be rent from spiritual and mystical union with him, in whom they understand that even they themselves shall be also divinely filled, ver. 10, i. e. in their measure be made partakers of the Divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. Dwelleth imports more than a transient stay for a few minutes, or a little while, even abiding in him constantly and for ever, as dwelling most usually notes, 2 Cor. vi. 16. That which doth thus perpetually abide in his person, as denominated after the human nature, is all the fulness of the Godhead, viz. that rich and incomprehensible abundance of perfections, whereof the supreme and adorable nature is full; so that indeed there is not at all any perfection or excellency in the Divine nature but is found abiding in him. And after no common or ordinary way, but by a hypostatical or personal union of the Godhead with the manhood in Christ; which is not by way of mixture, confusion, conversion, or any other mutation; but bodily, to exclude that inhabitation which is only by extrinsecal denomination. It being an adverb, doth denote the manner as well as the subject; wherefore when he speaks of the temple of his body, John ii. 21, that doth not fully reach the apostle's meaning here: but it must be expounded personally, since in the Greek that which signifies with us a body, and so our English word body, is put for a person, Rom. xii. 1; 2 Cor. v. 10; Rev. xviii. 13: somebody or nobody, i. e. some person or no person. There is a presence of the Godhead general, by essence and power; particular, in the prophets and apostles working miracles: gracious, in all sanctified ones; glorious, in heaven, in light which no man can approach unto, 1 Tim. vi. 16; relative, in the church visible and ordinances, typically under the law, and symbolically in the sacraments: but all these dwellings, or being present in the creature, fall short of that in the text, viz. bodily, connoting the personal habitation of the Deity in, and union of it with, the humanity of Christ, so close, and strait, and intimate, that the Godhead inhabiting and the manhood inhabited make but one and the same person, even as the reasonable soul and body in man make but one man. The way of the presence of the Deity with the humanity of Christ is above all those manners of the presence of God with angels and men. The Godhead dwells in him personally, in them in regard of assistance and energy: Godhead notes the truth of it; Christ was not only partaker of the Divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4, but the very Godhead dwells in him: it is not only the Divinity (as the Socinians, following the Vulgar Latin in this, would have it) but the Deity, the very nature and essence of God. Now it is observable, though in God himself Divinity and Deity be indeed the same, Rom. i. 20, and may differ only from the manner of our conception and contemplation; yet here, when the enemies to Christ's Deity might by their cavilling make more use of the word Divinity, (as when the soul of man is said to be a divine thing,) to insinuate as if it here noted only the Divine will exclusive to the other attributes, (which exclusion the term all doth significantly prevent,) the apostle puts in Deity or Godhead. Then lest Christ might (as by the Arians) be deemed a secondary God, or (as some since) a made god, inferior to the Father, he saith the fulness of the Godhead, which speaks him perfect God, coequal with the Father: further, connoting a numerical sameness of essence betwixt the Godhead of the Father and the Son, all the fulness of the Godhead dwelleth in him. There is not one fulness of the Father and another of the Son, but one and the same singular Godhead in both, John x. 30. The fulness of the manhood in Adam and Eve were not numerically the same, but the Godhead of the Father and the Son is: yet is not the manhood of Christ co-extended and commensurate with the Godhead (as some Lutherans conceit); but where the manhood is, or Christ as man is, or hath his existence, there the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily: so that this fulness is extended as the manhood only in which it is, and not as far as the Deity in which this derivative fulness is not as in its seat, though it be all originally from it, but inherently or subjectively in Christ.

10 <sup>a</sup> And ye are complete in him, q John 1. 14.

<sup>r</sup> Eph. i. 30, <sup>21.</sup> 1 Pet. 3. <sup>22.</sup> <sup>s</sup> ch. i. 18. and power:

And ye; ye saints and holy brethren, chap. i. 2, who have received Christ, chap. ii. 6, 7, and so are mystically united to him, in whom dwelleth all fulness (as you have heard); being in him, having one Spirit with him, as members with the head, Rom. viii. 1, 9; Eph. i. 23, are complete; are implete, or filled, and so mediately and causally complete from the all-fulness that is in your Head, yet not immediately and properly complete with it (as some have been apt to think). But in him ye have that completeness and perfection which is reckoned and made over to you and accepted for you to justification, so that of his fulness ye receive, and grace for grace, John i. 16; 1 Cor. i. 30; 2 Cor. v. 21; Eph. i. 6; Phil. iii. 9; derive in and from him all spiritual blessings, Eph. i. 3; so that every one hath grace sufficient, 2 Cor. xii. 9, to do all things incumbent on him, through Christ strengthening him, Phil. iv. 13. It is true there is here in this state no being complete or perfect actually, as to glorification, yet, virtually and seminally, that may in a sort be said of true believers, not only in regard of their Head, but in regard of their certain hope of being saved in Christ, yea, and indeed as to the earnest, the seed and root of it, having already that life which shall never have an end, John iii. 36; iv. 14; Rom. v. 2; Eph. iv. 30; 2 Thess. ii. 13; Heb. ix. 15; x. 14; 1 Pet. i. 3, 4; 1 John v. 12. Which is the head of all principality and power: the apostle, for consolation of the saints, and in opposition to those who did endeavour a withdrawing from Christ to the worshipping of angels, ver. 18, doth further infer, from the personal union, the dignity of the human nature of Christ, in regard of the good angels, which are here meant by principality and power, by reason of their excellency by nature and grace, and their authority delegated to them by God over other creatures, Matt. xxiv. 36; 2 Cor. xi. 14; 1 Tim. v. 21. Christ having the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him bodily, is Head unto the good angels in regard of his excellency and eminency above them, who are far below him in perfection, Eph. i. 21; Heb. i. 4; the best of them are ministering spirits and subject to him, and so under his authority and at his command, Matt. xiii. 41; xvi. 27; xxiv. 31; Eph. iii. 10; Heb. i. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Rev. i. 1; xxii. 16.

<sup>t</sup> Deut. 10. <sup>16.</sup> 2 Cor. 6. <sup>Jer. 4. 4.</sup> <sup>Rom. 2. 29.</sup> <sup>Phil. 3. 3.</sup> <sup>u</sup> Rom. 8. 4. <sup>Eph. 4. 22.</sup> <sup>ch. 2. 8, 9.</sup> 11 In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in "putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ":

In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands: he removes what they who are addicted to superstition might suggest, as if there were somewhat defective to a completeness in Christ, by showing there was no need of any addition to what he required in the gospel; for that they might most plausibly urge of circumcision, as being the seal of the old covenant, and an obligation to the whole law, Gal. v. 3, which some pressed as necessary to salvation, Acts xv. 1, 24, he here shows was altogether needless now, that they were sanctified and had the thing signified by it, the circumcision of the heart, Rom. ii. 28, 29; Phil. iii. 3, and were complete in Christ without it; yea, that the urging of that and other ceremonies now, was a pernicious error, tending to annihilate the cross of Christ, and overthrow the whole mystery of his grace. It is true it was appointed to the Jews, a figure of a thing absent; they therefore who retain that figure after the coming of Christ, deny that to be complete which it doth figure, and so abolish the presence of the truth; by sticking for the shadow, they let go the substance, viz. the circumcision not made by the operation of man, but of God; not with the knife of Moses, but the word of Christ, sharper than any two-edged sword, Heb. iv. 12: and if we compare this with the verse following, and Phil. iii. 3, the apostle intimates that baptism is the same to us Christians which circumcision was to the Jews; and that is often ascribed to the external administration, that is only the internal operation of the Spirit, as Rom. vi. 3, 4; Gal. iii. 27, 28; Tit. iii. 5; 1 Pet. iii. 21. Now though there was during the shadow of it, Heb. x. 1, under the Old Testament, the circumcision of the heart, as well as under the

New, Deut. x. 16; xxx. 6; Jer. iv. 4; yet under the New Testament Christ the substance (who was only before in the promise) being now exhibited, having abolished the old symbol and instituted baptism in the room of it; that with the hands in the flesh, Eph. ii. 11, which they who received not the promise, i. e. the Messiah promised, used, Heb. xi. 39, was to be no more urged, now the benefit by the merit of his obedience unto the death of the cross, whereby he circumciseth from sin, might be enjoyed, as was signified by baptism, appointed to this end, Matt. xxviii. 19; Acts ii. 38; Rom. vi. 3, 4; Gal. iii. 27; 1 Pet. iii. 21. In putting off the body of the sins of the flesh: hence he doth illustrate this spiritual circumcision by describing the parts of it, beginning with the mortification of the old man, corrupted nature, containing not only the body and senses, but the soul tainted with the defilements of sin, chap. iii. 5; Rom. vi. 6; Gal. v. 19—21, 24; Eph. iv. 22. The body of sins which do mostly exert themselves in the flesh, every member and power while unregenerate being active in the committing of sin, till the new man be put on, Eph. iv. 24, and the dominion of it be subdued; not by any natural part which a man hath of himself for that purpose, but by the circumcision of Christ, not properly that whereby he himself was circumcised in the flesh the eighth day, but that which he hath indispensably required to have admission into his kingdom, John iii. 3, and which he himself is the worker of, doth procure by his merit, and effect by his Spirit, which all the suasion of the sublimest philosophers, and devotion of superstitious ones, cannot do.

12 <sup>x</sup> Buried with him in baptism, <sup>x</sup> Rom. 6. 4. wherein also <sup>y</sup> ye are risen with him <sup>y</sup> ch. 2. 1. through <sup>z</sup> the faith of the operation of <sup>z</sup> Eph. 1. 19. God, <sup>z</sup> who hath raised him from the dead. <sup>z</sup> 2. 7. <sup>z</sup> Acts 2. 24.

Buried with him in baptism: he shows that in Christ they who are found have not only the thing signified, but right to the outward sign and seal, viz. baptism, in the room of circumcision abolished; the death and burial of Christ is not only the exemplar, but the cause of the death of the old man, signed and sealed in baptism: or, by baptism into death, Rom. vi. 3, 4, analogically, or symbolically, or sacramentally, when the Lord, together with the external sign, conferreth his grace signified by that sign; for even then the sins of such a one are buried with Christ so as they shall appear no more, either to his eternal condemnation, or in their former dominion, Rom. vi. 6, 9, 14. Wherein also ye are risen with him; in or by which baptism becoming effectual, having mortified the body of sin, like as Christ was raised from the dead, ye are quickened and raised to newness of life, Rom. vi. 4; Gal. iii. 27—29; Eph. iv. 23, 24; v. 14, 26, 27; Col. iii. 10, 11. By virtue of Christ's resurrection, a spiritual and mystical one is produced in you, which hath a resemblance and analogy to his. Through the faith of the operation of God; not of yourselves, but through faith, Eph. ii. 8, and that wrought in you by the energy or efficacy of God, John vi. 29; Phil. i. 29; ii. 13; Heb. xii. 2. Who hath raised him from the dead; who did exert his power in raising up Christ from the dead: compare Rom. iv. 24, with Eph. i. 19, 20. This faith is not only wrought by God, as the circumcision without hands, but it doth respect that wonderful power of God put forth in the raising of Christ, as the subject, which he mentions by way of congruity, speaking of our resurrection, and of Christ's. And he specifyeth faith rather than love or other graces which are wrought also by God, because in this grace, which is the constitutive part of the new creature, God comes in with a greater irradiation upon the soul, being it hath not one fragment or point of nature to stand upon; carnal reason and mere moral righteousness being opposite to it, whereas other graces are but as the rectifying of the passions, and setting them upon right objects.

13 <sup>b</sup> And you, being dead in your sins <sup>b</sup> Eph. 2. 1, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath <sup>b, 6, 11.</sup> he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses;

And you, being dead in your sins: he further shows they had no need of circumcision in the flesh, Eph. ii. 11, having all in Christ for justification as well as sanctification, though they (as well as the Ephesians, see Eph. ii. 1, 5) were by nature spiritually dead in sins, deprived of the life of grace, and separated from the life of glory. And the uncircumcision of your flesh; and having the foreskin of their flesh in paganism; which was true literally, but, considering the internal circumcision, ver. 11, the apostle's expression here is to be expounded of the internal corruption of our nature, the uncircumcised heart, original corruption derived unto all by carnal propagation, which is predominant in the unregenerate. These being dead as to the life of grace, Matt. viii. 22; John v. 25; Rom. viii. 7; 1 Cor. ii. 14; 1 Tim. v. 6. Hath he quickened together with him; you who were strangers from the life of God, Eph. iv. 18, hath he now quickened or revived to a spiritual life with him here, and hereafter to eternal life, 1 Cor. xv. 22. Having forgiven you all trespasses; having freely pardoned to you (the word noting a free affection to give and forgive, 2 Cor. ii. 10; Eph. iv. 32) all your sins, after as well as before baptism, which is the sign and seal of it, Psal. ciii. 3; so that the Spirit of Christ doth not only infuse a principle of grace, and implant a living and abiding seed to work out vicious habits, but God, upon the account of Christ's plenary satisfaction, doth freely remove all the guilt that binds over to eternal death, and doth not impute to believers any of their sins in whole or in part, but treateth them as if they had committed none at all, Matt. xxvi. 28; Acts x. 43; Eph. i. 7; Heb. ix. 15, and will remember them no more, so that when they are sought for they shall not be found, Jer. xxxi. 34; 1. 20; Heb. x. 17. What the papists say of the fault being remitted, when the punishment may be exacted either in whole or in part, that they may have a pretence for human satisfactions, (the groundlessness of which was hinted, chap. i. 24.) is a mere figment of the schools, against Scripture and reason.

<sup>e</sup> Eph. 2. 15, 16. 14 <sup>e</sup> Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us: having just before manifested God's grace in the free forgiveness of all their trespasses, he doth here adjoin the foundation and means of this remission, viz. "Wiping out the bill of decrees," as one reads; or effacing and cancelling "the hand-writing that was against us, which was contrary to us in traditions," as another, pointing after chirograph or hand-writing: upon the matter in the explanation there will be no difference from our reading of it. Sin, in Scripture, is frequently accounted a debt, and the acquitting, the pardoning of it, Matt. vi. 12; Luke xi. 4; xiii. 4: as the debtor is obliged to payment, so the sinner to punishment; only it is to be remembered, that though a private creditor may forgive his debt, yet unless the conservator of public justice do exempt an offender against the law, he is not acquitted, but is still under an obligation, bond or hand-writing, having, as they under the Mosaic law, professed allegiance, Exod. xxiv. 7, which upon default was an evidence of this guilt to avenging justice. The law prescribed by the ministration of Moses was appendaged with many ceremonial ordinances, to the observation of all which circumcision did oblige: this obligation interpretatively was as a hand-writing which did publicly testify a man's native pollution, and was a public confession of his sin and misery, as washings did testify the filth of his sins, and sacrifices, capital guilt to them who lived under it, and did not perform it; that they were accursed, Gal. iii. 10, 19, under a ministration of death, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 9; while by laying their hands on the sacrifices, they did as it were sign a bill or bond against themselves, whereby conscience of guilt was retained, Heb. x. 2, 3, and a conscience of sin renewed, so that the heart could not be established in any firm peace, Heb. ix. 9: x. 1; but they did confess sin to remain, and that they did want a removal of the curse by a better sacrifice. Upon the offering up of this, the law of commandments was blotted out, cancelled or abolished, even that contained in ordinances, saith the apostle elsewhere; see Eph. ii. 15, compared with, ver. 16, 20, 21, of this chapter; and therefore there is no condemnation to them that are circumcised with the circumcision of Christ, being found in him, ver. 11, with Rom. viii. 1; vii. 4. Which was contrary to us; so that however the law, which was in itself holy, just, and good, through sin became in some sort contrary, or subcontrary, to us, in that it did serve to convict, and terrify with the curse for our default, Rom. vii. 5, 9, aggravating all by its ceremonies, and shutting the gate of God's house against the Gentiles, of whose number the Colossians were, strangers from the covenants of promise, Eph. ii. 12; yet this obligation was abrogated and annulled by the death of Christ, as the apostle expresseth it with great elegancy, having not only said that the debt was wiped out, defaced by the blood of Christ being drawn over it, as they used to blot out debts or draw red lines across them; but he adds, and took it out of the way; taken out of the way, as the debtor's bond or obligation is, being cancelled and torn to pieces, so that there is no memorial or evidence of the debt doth remain, all matter of controversy being altogether removed. Yet, if it may be, to speak more fully and satisfactorily, he annexeth, nailing it to his cross; what could be more significant? implying that Christ, by once offering himself a sacrifice on the cross, had disarmed the law, and taken away its condemning power, Rom. vii. 4; Gal. iii. 13. It being customary (as learned men say) of old, especially in Asia, to pierce cancelled obligations and antiquated writings with nails; Christ by his plenary satisfaction did not only discharge from the condemnation of the law, Rom. viii. 1, 34, but he did effectually, with the nails with which he himself was crucified, by interpretation, fasten the hand-writing of ordinances to his cross, and abolished the ceremonial law in every regard, since the substance of it was come, and that which it tended to was accomplished, in giving himself a ransom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6, to the putting away of sin, Heb. ix. 26, and obtaining eternal redemption, Heb. ix. 12.

15 <sup>d</sup> And <sup>d</sup> having spoiled <sup>d</sup> principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them || in it.

<sup>d</sup> Gen. 3. 15. P. a. 08. 18. In. 53. 12. Matt. 12. 29. Luke 10. 18. & 11. 22. John 12. 31. & 16. 11. Eph. 4. 8. Heb. 2. 14. e Eph. 6. 12. Or, in himself. And having spoiled; some render it, seeing he hath stripped or made naked, as runners and racers used to put off their clothes. Principalities and powers; hence some of the ancients read putting off his flesh (possibly by the carelessness of some scribes, writing that which signifies flesh instead of that which signifies principalities, in all the authentic copies); but besides that Christ hath not put off the human nature, only the infirmities of the flesh, 2 Cor. v. 16; Heb. v. 7, it doth not agree with what follows. One conceits that by principalities and powers are meant the ceremonies of the law, because of the Divine authority they originally had; and that Christ unclathed or unveiled them, and showed them to be misty figures that were accomplished in his own person. But I see no reason thus to allegorize, for it is easy to discern the word is borrowed from conquering warriors having put to flight and disarmed their enemies, (as the word may well signify disarming, in opposition to arming, Rom. xiii. 12; Eph. vi. 11, 14,) and signifies here, that Christ disarmed and despoiled the devil and his angels, with all the powers of darkness. We have seen that by principalities and powers are meant angels, chap. i. 16, with Rom. viii. 37; Eph. i. 21; and here he means evil ones, in regard of that power they exercise in this world under its present state of subjection to sin and vanity, Luke iv. 6; John xii. 31; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12; 2 Tim. ii. 26; whom Christ came to destroy, and effectually did on his cross defeat, Luke xi. 22; John xvi. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 55; Heb. ii. 14; 1 John iii. 8; delivering his subjects from the power of darkness, chap. i. 13, according to the first promise, Gen. iii. 15. He made a show of them openly; yea, and Christ did, as an absolute conqueror, riding as it were in his triumphal chariot, publicly show that he had vanquished Satan and all the powers of darkness, in the view of heaven and earth, Luke x. 17, 18. Triumphing over them; even then and there where Satan thought he should alone have had the day by the death of the innocent Jesus, was he and his adherents triumphed over by the Lord of life, to their everlasting shame and torment. What the papists would gather hence, that Christ did, in this triumphant show upon the cross, carry the souls of the patriarchs out of their Limbus, i. e. their appointment to hell, is a mere unscriptural fiction; for those that he made show of in his victorious chariot are the very same that he spoiled to their eternal ignominy and confusion. In it: some render this, (as in the margin,) in himself, or by himself, i. e. by his own power and virtue, and not by the help of any other; the prophet saith he trod the winepress alone, and had not any of the people with him, Isa. lxiii. 3: yet it seems here better to adhere to our own translation, in it, considering what went before of his cross, that he triumphed over Satan on it or by it, because the death that he there suffered was the true and only cause of his triumphs; there he trod Satan under his feet, there he set his seed at liberty, and they who go about to bereave them of it, and bring them into bondage, do no other than restore to Satan his spoils.

16 Let no man therefore 'judge you
f Rom. 14. 3, 12.
 i Or, for eating and drinking.
 g Rom. 14. 2, 17.
 i Cor. 8. 8.
 i Or, in part. ||<sup>s</sup> in meat, or in drink, or || in respect <sup>h</sup> of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days:

Let no man therefore judge you; he infers none should be condemned: none condemns another for exercising Christian liberty; none hath power to judge and censure herein: q. d. Suffer not any one (he excepts none) to impose upon you that, as necessary in the use and practice of it, which is not after Christ, ver. 8, not warranted by his law of liberty, Rom. xiv. 3, 4; Gal. v. 1; James i. 25. Paul himself would not be imposed on, 1 Cor. vi. 12; vii. 23; Gal. ii. 5, 11, 14, &c.; he would not (as one of the words doth note) be domineered over by any, or suffer any to exercise authority over him, who held the Head, and owned Christ to be Lord of the conscience, and sole dictator of what way he will be served in. In meat, or in drink; he therefore would not have the practice of ceremonials obtruded, instancing in some, as the difference of meats and drinks, in the use or not use of which (now after Christ had nailed those decrees to his cross) superstitious ones would, from the antiquated rites of the Jews and Pythagorean philosophers, place holiness in, and add them to the Christian institution. Or in respect of an holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; or the difference of festivals and sabbaths, whether annual, or monthly, or weekly, from the Levitical institutions.

17 Which are a shadow of things to i Heb. R. S. & 2. S. & 10. 1. come; but the body is of Christ.

Which are a shadow of things to come; which, as they were but obscurer representations or shadowy resemblances of future benefits procured by Christ, Heb. viii. 5; ix. 11; x. 1, whatever temporary glory they had from the former institution, till the time of reformation. Heb. ix. 10, yet that was done away, and they now had none, in respect of the glory that excelleth and remaineth, 2 Cor. iii. 10, 11. So that this doth no way gainsay the sacraments now of Christ's own institution, which may be called figures and shadows, not of things future, of Christ not yet come, but as already exhibited, whom they manifest to the mind and faith to be present, to those who rightly partake of them: we cannot say he condemns all distinctions of meats and drinks, viz. bread and wine in the Lord's supper; or of days; only the decrees and ordinances of Moses, or any other which the false teachers cried up, that were not after Christ. But the body is of Christ; who is really the substance and antitype of all the Old Testament shadows, which have completion or accomplishment in him, John i. 17; Rom. x. 4; Gal. iv. 10-12; as all the promises were in him yea and Amen, Dan. ix. 24; 2 Cor. i. 20; all was consummated in him, John xix. 30, who came in the place of all the shadows. He is Lord of the sabbath, Matt. xii. 8, and therefore, having broken the devil's head-plot by his propitiatory sacrifice, and entered into his rest, ceasing from his own works of redemption by price, as God did from his of creation, Heb. iv. 10, he did away (2 Cor. iii. 7, 11) all that was typical and ceremonial of the old sabbath, (as other types of himself,) keeping only that which was substantial, for a holy rest of one day in seven, and appointing that in commemoration of the Father's work and his to be, from his resurrection, observed on the first day of the week, for the edification of his church; which he honoured by his appearance amongst his apostles on that day, and that day seven-night after, which proceeded originally from his instituting of that day (to prevent dissension) for public worship in Christian assemblies. Some have observed that the Jewish doctors did foresay, That the Divine Majesty would be to Israel in a jubilee, freedom, redemption, and finisher of sabbaths; and that four sabbaths did meet together and succeed each other at the death and the resurrection of Christ, viz. 1. The sabbatical year of jubilee, Luke iv. 19. 2. The high sabbath, John xix. 31. 3. The seventh-day sabbath, when his body rested in the grave. 4. The first day of the week, when he rose a victorious conqueror of the devil, and had all put in subjection to him, unto whom all the rest did refer, and therefore they were to disappear, upon his estating his people in a rest which the law could not; whereupon his people are obliged in public adoration and praise to commemorate him on the first day of the week, or the Lord's day, to the end of the world, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2; Rev. i. 10.

18 *Let no man || beguile you of your k ver. 4.
 i Or, judge against you.
 i Or, being a voluntary in humility, ver. 23.
 i Each. 13. 3.
 1 Tim. 1. 7. reward † in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind,

Let no man beguile you of your reward: the original compound word, peculiar in the New Testament to Paul, and that in this Epistle only, (and not very frequent in other authors,) hath occasioned interpreters here to render it variously, some joining the next following word with it, and some (as we read it) to that which follows after. The simple word is, chap. iii. 15, read rule, or judge, and it may be rendered intercede. Yet Paul doth not elsewhere use this word simply or in composition where he speaks of judging and condemning, Rom. ii. 1; however, it is borrowed from those who were judges or umpires in their games, the apostle most likely alluding to those who through favour or hatred determined unjustly, to the defrauding those victors of their prize or reward to whom it was due. Hence some would have the import to be agreeable to our translation; Be careful these unjust arbiters do not defraud you of gaining Christ, and deceive you, (as Matt. xxiv. 4; Eph. v. 6; 2 Thess. ii. 3,) by prescribing false lists and giving you wrong measures, and so judging against you. One renders it, Let no man deceive you with subtle argument, who pleaseth or delights himself in humility; another, Let no man take your prize; others, Let no man master it or bear rule over you at pleasure; let none take upon himself, or usurp to himself, the parts or office of a governor or umpire over you. The apostle labours to fortify the true followers of Christ against such superstitious subtle ones, who by their artifice did assume a magisterial authority (without any sure warrant from God) to impose their traditionary and invented services upon them, and determine of their state, accordingly as the papists do at this day. One learned man thinks the apostle had not used this word here, but for some notable advantage, viz. because the simple word may signify to intercede as well as to judge; it made wonderfully to his purpose in this composition, (as he uses concession, Phil. iii. 2.) to disparage those seducers who did, from some notions of the Platonists, labour to gain credit to that opinion that the angels were intercessors betwixt God and man. In a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels; covering their imperious spirit by being volunteers in humility, or by a pretence of voluntary, uncommanded humility, alleging it would be presumption in them to address themselves immediately to God, and therefore they would pay a religious homage to angels, as of a middle nature betwixt God and them, presuming they would mediate for them: an instance to express all that invented worship, which, how specious soever it may seem to be, hath no warrant from Christ, who alone can procure acceptance of our persons and services. He expects that his disciples should assert his rights, and the liberty with which he hath made them free, against the traditions of self-willed men, and no more to solemnize for worship, than teach for doctrines, the traditions of men, Matt. xv. 2, 6, 9. We must not, under any pretext of humility, presume to know what belongs to our duty and God's service better than Christ doth, showing us that he alone is the true and living way, and we may come boldly by him, Matt. xi. 28; John xiv. 1, 6; Eph. iii. 12; Heb. iv. 16; x. 19, 20. And therefore the adoring and invocating of angels as heavenly courtiers, whatever the papists out of a show of humility do argue, is not after Christ, but against him. Intruding into those things which he hath not seen: yea, and for any one to assert it, and the like, is to be a bold intruder upon another's possession, a thrusting a man's self into the knowledge and determination of that which is above his reach, Psal. cxxxii. 1, and he hath no ground at all for, but doth pry or wade into a secret which a man cannot know. The apostle useth a Platonic word against those who did indulge themselves out of curiosity in the opinions of the Platonists about angels, the worshippers of which, amongst those who were professed Christians in Phrygia, were so tenacious of their error that they were not rooted out after the third century, when a canon was made against them under the name of Angelici, in the council of Laodicea near Colosse. Vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind; the first rise of such foolish presumption, was a being rashly puffed up with the sense of their flesh, a deluded mind moved by some carnal principle, setting out things with swelling words of vanity, wherewith in truth they have no acquaintance, and whereof they have no experience, 1 Tim. i. 7.

m Eph. 4.
15, 16.

19 And not holding <sup>m</sup>the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

And not holding the Head: here the apostle suggests, that those things he had before taxed did proceed from hence, that they let go the Lord Christ himself, ver. 8, 9, from whom all truths are to be derived, and consequently he is all truth itself, John xiv. 6; not to adhere to him is the spring of all apostacies, he being the Head: see Eph. iv. 15, 16. From which all the body; whence is communicated and distributed such influence to the body, the church, as is necessary to all the sensations and motions thereof. By joints and bands having nourishment ministered; being in all its members fitly framed together by the Spirit, Eph. ii. 21, 22, and united by faith, Eph. iii. 17, hath a continual subsidy of life and vigour. And knit together; and fastened together in a spiritual union, which joineth all believers to their Head, and each of them to the other in him, 1 Cor. x. 17; xii. 12, 20, 25, 27. Increaseth with the increase of God; wherupon, to mutual edification in love, it groweth with a Divine growth and spiritual increase, arising from the efficacy of God, and tending to his glory; being filled with the influences of his grace, 1 Cor. iii. 6, it is established and strengthened by little and little, in light and purity, and all graces, till it attain to the measure of its perfect stature in Christ Jesus our Lord; whereas an increase in the traditions of men, and the inventions of flesh, do only blow it up with wens and imposthumes, to the disfiguring, deforming, and destroying of it.

n Rom. 6, 3,
5, 7. 4, 6.
Gal. 2. 19.
Eph. 2. 15.
o ver. 6.
p Or,
elements.
q Gal. 4. 3, 9.

20 Wherefore if ye be <sup>n</sup>dead with Christ from <sup>o</sup>the <sup>p</sup>rudiments of the world, <sup>q</sup>why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances,

Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world: here the apostle doth further argue against all impositions of superstitious observances, obtruded as parts of Divine worship, whether in reviving those abrogated, or setting up new ones, upon supposition of their union with Christ their Head, and their being dead in him as to all beggarly elements from which he had freed them by his death, Rom. vi. 3, 5; vii. 4, 6; Gal. iv. 9, 10, 11, with ii. 19; no uncommanded worship or way of worship being after Christ, ver. 8, in whom they were complete, ver. 10, being buried with him in baptism, ver. 12, having nailed those ritual ordinances to his cross, as antiquated or outdated, ver. 11. Why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances? why should they, who held the Head, ver. 19, as if they lived in the old world with those children in bondage, Gal. iv. 3, before Christ came, be subject to ceremonial observances? q. d. It is most injurious that they should impose this yoke upon you, (Acts xv. 10,) ye are most foolish if ye submit your necks; for God would not have a ceremonial worship which he himself instituted to be abrogated, that a new one should be invented by men.

If the Head of the church like not the reviving that worship he hath laid aside, be sure he will not approve of any new one which he never appointed. The apostle is not here speaking of the magistrates' ordinances about things indifferent in their use, for the real good of the civil government, but of the way of worshipping God by religious abstinences, &c.

21 <sup>r</sup>Touch not; taste not; handle <sup>s</sup>1 Tim. 4. 3 not;

Which he doth here by way of imitation, upbraiding of them, elegantly recite in the words, phrases, or sense of those imposing dogmatists, whose superstition and lust of domineering over the consciences of Christians is taxed, in the gradation which the well skilled in the Greek judge to be in the original. For though the first, and which we render touch not, be sometimes so rendered, yet, considering here the coincidence or tautology will, so rendered, make with the last, the sense of it, as the most judicious and learned have evidenced, seems to be, eat not, as noting they did forbid the eating, i. e. using certain meats at their ordinary meals; (against the reviving of which imposition above, ver. 16, as will bring in a new one of like import, the apostle elsewhere expresseth himself, Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. viii. 8; 1 Tim. iv. 3;) obtaining which, they proceeded to forbid the not tasting, and then the not handling, or touching of them with the hand, as if that would defile. It being more not to taste than not to eat, and likewise more not to touch with the finger than not to taste. Expressing the ingenuity of such superstitious imposers, that they heap up one thing upon another to the burdening of consciences, not knowing where to make an end in their new-invented external devotions and observances, which, as snares, do first bind fast, and in tract of time strangle. He speaks of these as distinct from those, ver. 16, they being for antiquated rites which had been of God's appointment, these for innovations of man's invention, as is apparent from the last verse.

22 Which all are to perish with the using;) <sup>t</sup>after the commandments and <sup>u</sup>doctrines of men?

r In. 20. 13.
Matt. 15. 9.
Tit. 1. 16.

Which all are to perish with the using: he adds his reasons why, under the Christian institution, acceptable worshipping of God doth not consist in such observances, both because meats, drinks, garments, &c. are designed unto the benefit of man, for the preserving of his temporal life, and are consumed in their use. They cannot, in or by themselves, either make a man holy or render him unclean, Matt. xv. 11; Mark vii. 19; Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 13; 1 Tim. iv. 3; they all come to corruption, or are consumed in doing us service, they cannot otherwise be of use; which may evince that all the benefit we receive from them doth only respect this mortal life, it not being imaginable that what perisheth in our use should be of any force to the life of our soul, which is immortal and incorruptible. And therefore to urge the reviving of antiquated ordinances, or bringing in such-like new ones, is to corrupt or consume the creatures without any spiritual advantage, whereupon such impositions must needs be destructive; and because of the apostle's stronger argument, they are not after Christ, but after the precepts and decrees of men, compare ver. 8, which is our Lord and Master's argument against the innovations of the Pharisees, Matt. xv. 9, agreeing with the prophet, Isa. xxix. 13. To bring in additionals of uncommanded worship, or rites and ways of it, is forbidden of God, Deut. xii. 32; John xiv. 26; xvi. 13; Rev. xxii. 18; who (according to the purport of the second commandment) must be worshipped in a manner peculiar to him and appointed by him; and therefore worship not appointed, i. e. not commanded, is forbidden by him, who will accept of no homage from Christians in the business of religion, unless it be taught by him, and not by men only.

23 <sup>v</sup>Which things have indeed a shew <sup>w</sup>1 Tim. 4. 6 of wisdom in <sup>x</sup>will worship, and humility, <sup>y</sup>t ver. 8 and <sup>z</sup>neglecting of the body; not in any <sup>aa</sup>honour to the satisfying of the flesh.

aa Or, punishing, or, not sparing.

Which things have indeed a show of wisdom: by way of concession the apostle here grants that the precepts and doctrines of men about religious abstinences had a show of wisdom; and it was but a mere show, a bare pretext, a specious appearance, a fair colour of wisdom, which is of no worth, not the reality and truth of Christian wisdom, however it might beguile those that were taken more with shadows than substance, ver. 3, 4, 8, 17. In will-worship; 1. In arbitrary superstition, or human invention, or self-willed religion, rather than Divine institutions; as all the ancients, and almost all the moderns, do interpret that word, it having no good, but an ill character; accounting the compound word here which we render will-worship, of no better import, as to the ordainers of worship, than the two simple words of which it is compounded, expressing human arbitrariness and worship, ver. 18, (even as the apostle doth, by a compound word which signifies peace-making, chap. i. 20, understand the very same thing which he expressed by the two simple words of which it is compounded in another Epistle, Eph. ii. 15,) it being rational to conceive, considering the apostle's drift in the context, that by will-worship he doth connote the same here, that by willing in worship he doth asunder there. For though a performing those acts of worship willingly, which God himself hath commanded, be necessary, and commendable in his willing people, Psal. cx. 3, and they cannot be acceptable otherwise; yet when the will of man, in contradistinction to the will of God, is considered as constitutive of that worship which is offered to God of a man's own brain and devising, without God's warrant, then that will-worship is hateful to God, and the more voluntary the more abominable. It being most just, that not in what way we will and choose, but only in that way which he willet and chooseth, we should worship him with acceptance; which should be our greatest care, 2 Cor. v. 9. We know, amongst men, those persons of honour that give liveries to their servants, would discard such of them as should come to attend them in new ones of their own devising, though those servants might be so foolish as to conceit those of their own devising were more expressive of their humble respects. Much more is worship of man's devising distasteful to the all-wise God, who sees through all colours, and though he loves a willing worshipper, yet he hates will-worship. And humility; however it be palliated, 2. With a pretended demission of mind, or an affectation of humility, as if more self-abasement were designed in such an arbitrary way of worship; like those hypocrites in their fasts, who put on mortified looks and a neglected garb, with disguised countenances, Matt. vi. 16, showing themselves most submissive to the orders of their superiors in that way of man's devising. And neglecting of the body; wherein the more superstitiously devout do labour to outdo others, 3. In punishing, not sparing, neglecting, or afflicting the body; as some monks at this day in the papacy, in denying it that with which nature should be supplied. Not in any honour, which a learned man thinks the apostle would have read as included in a parenthesis, as conceiving the series of his discourse requires these to be joined, viz. neglecting of the body as to what pertains to the satisfying of the flesh. So by not in any honour, is not here meant a sparing of the body in order to real sanctification, temperance and continence, in opposition to the dishonouring of the body by luxury, as Rom. i. 26, with 1 Cor. vi. 18—20; 1 Thess. iv. 4; Heb. xiii. 4. That honour of the body the apostle doth elsewhere require, he doth here oppose to the seducers' pretended mortifications. For their religious abstinence was not from that which occasioned luxury, only from some certain sorts of meat, the use of which no way defiles the body, nor violates in any manner the holiness and honour it ought to be kept in. Others read, neglecting the body, which is in no esteem. To the satisfying of the flesh; for pampering the flesh. Not in any esteem, i. e. with God, or not in any honour to God, but in a tendency only to make provision for the flesh, as Rom. xiii. 14. Others take honour for regard; q. d. In no regard to the supplying of nature with that which is due to it. Others take honour for having a care of, 1 Tim. v. 3; q. d. Neglecting the body in taking no care of it, or not at all valuing the things that are requisite to the due nourishment of it: this is somewhat generally received; having no care that the body may have that which will satisfy nature. And if the last phrase, which we translate to the satisfying of the flesh, seem not so well to express moderate satiety, we should consider it is said in a good sense, God filled the hungry with good things, Luke i. 53, and Christ filled the multitude, John vi. 12; yea, the use of the word in authentic Greek authors may be found to note a moderate as well as immoderate filling, i. e. in a good sense, for a satiety (or enough) that is not vicious.

CHAP. III

The apostle exhorteth to be heavenly-minded, 1—4; to mortify carnal lusts, and to put away all malice and ill dealing in respect of one another, as becometh Christians, 5—11. He recommendeth brotherly kindness, charity, and other general duties, 12—17; the relative duties of wives, 18, and husbands, 19, of children, 20, and parents, 21; and of servants towards their masters, 22—25.

IF ye then <sup>a</sup> be risen with Christ, seek <sup>a Rom. 6.5</sup> those things which are above, where <sup>Eph. 2.6</sup> <sup>ch. 3.12</sup> Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. <sup>b Rom. 8.34</sup> <sup>Eph. 1.20</sup>

If ye then be risen with Christ: having refuted superstitious observances placed in things earthly and perishing, and called them off from shadows to mind the substance; he doth, upon opposition of what he had asserted before, chap. ii. 12, 13, here infer that, since they were risen again with Christ, it did behove them to set about the duties required of those in that state: not of the proper resurrection of the body, which, while here below, can only be in our Head by virtue of the mystical union, as in regard of right the members of Christ are said to sit with him in heavenly places, Eph. ii. 6, signified and sealed by baptism: but the metaphorical and spiritual resurrection from spiritual death, which is regeneration, Rom. vi. 4; Tit. iii. 5, wrought by the same Spirit which raised Christ, and whereby renewed Christians live in certain hope of that proper resurrection of their bodies, which Christ hath procured. Seek those things which are above: hereupon he urgeth them, (in the same sense our Saviour doth command to seek his kingdom, Matt. vi. 33,) with diligence to pursue heaven and happiness as the end, and holiness as the means to the attaining of it; to have their conversation in heaven, Phil. iii. 20. Where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God: while the apostle speaks of God after the manner of men, we must take heed of the gross error of the Anthropomorphites, who did imagine God to sit in heaven in the shape of a man. Some indeed, who abhor such a gross imagination, yet conceive that because more generally the heaven is God's throne, and shall be so for ever, Jer. xvii. 12; Lam. v. 19; Matt. v. 34, that he hath a particular throne in heaven, whereon he doth show himself specially present, as in his temple, 1 Kings xxii. 19; Psal. xi. 4; and so, though Christ is set properly on the right hand of this throne, Heb. i. 3; viii. 1; xii. 2; Rev. iii. 21; but because the conception of such a particular material throne, with extension of parts and proper dimensions, may (besides other inconveniences) misguide our apprehensions, and occasion adoration to the creature, which should be terminated on God alone, who is a pure Spirit; and whereas sitting is not taken properly, since Stephen saw Christ standing, Acts vii. 55, and is opposed to the ministration of angels, which have no bodies or bodily parts, Heb. i. 13; by most it is taken metaphorically, importing that Christ hath all real power and dominion put into his hands, connoting his authority and security from his enemies, who are put under his feet, Matt. xxviii. 18; 1 Cor. xv. 25, is crowned with majesty, glory, and honour, Heb. i. 3; ii. 9, enjoying all blessedness in a most transcendent way, Psal. xvi. 11; cx. 1; Acts ii. 33, 36; having the human nature filled with abilities to execute all when he entered into glory, Isa. xvi. 5; Luke xxii. 29, 30; xxiv. 26; 1 Cor. xv. 43; Rev. xix. 6; where he resides possessed of all in safety, Acts iii. 21; Rev. iii. 21. It was above whither Christ ascended by a local motion from a certain where here below into a certain where above; so that whatever the Lutherans argue from Christ's glorious ascension and session, to prove Christ's body a ubiquitary, or every where present, is inconsequent, since it is in heaven where he wills that he-lievers should be to behold the glory that his Father hath given him, John xvii. 24: wherefore,

1 Or. mind. 2 Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

Set your affection on things above: that the hearts of believers here might be where their treasure is, the apostle here repeats his exhortation, using another word, importing they should intensely mind things above, Rom. viii. 5, viz. the inheritance reserved in heaven for us, 1 Pet. i. 4, with heart and affections, together with all that God hath appointed to be a furtherance to the enjoyment of it; not curiously to search the deep things of God, which cannot be found out, but to mind things above with sobriety, Rom. xii. 3. Not on things on the earth; taking off the mind and heart from all that is opposite to heavenly things, viz. not only those human, carnal ordinances and ceremonies, chap. ii. 22, with Phil. iii. 18, 19, but also from the eager pursuit of the pleasures, profits, and honours of this world, which the men of it do inordinately desire, ver. 5, with Matt. vi. 33; Gal. v. 24, and are carried away with, Tit. ii. 12; James iv. 4; 2 Pet. i. 4; 1 John ii. 17. Christians should not be, to the neglect of things spiritual; however, they are obliged, in a due subordination, to take care of themselves and families for these things below, so far as to put them into a capacity of raising them more heavenward.

3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

For ye are dead; the apostle adds another reason why the believing Colossians should not be earthly-minded, because they were dead, not absolutely, but in a certain respect, viz. of sin, and the world. 1. In regard of that carnal, corrupted, sin-infected life, received from our first parents by carnal generation, the life of the old man, altogether depraved, the real members of Christ are dead: see chap. ii. 11, 12, 20; Rom. vi. 2, 4, 6—8, 11; viii. 9; 2 Cor. v. 14, 17; Gal. v. 24. 2. In regard of the world, by communion with Christ their Head, Psal. xxii. 15; Isa. xxvi. 19; Gal. vi. 14; 2 Tim. ii. 11; 1 Pet. iv. 1, 2. And your life is hid with Christ in God; and their spiritual life, (opposed to the life of sin,) which is received by their receiving of Christ, the life they now live by faith, quickened together with Christ, chap. ii. 13; John xi. 25, 26; xiv. 6; Gal. ii. 20; Heb. x. 38; 1 John v. 11, 12; this is hid with Christ by virtue of their union with him, as Christ is in God by union with the Father; Christ in God, and our life in Christ, John xvii. 21, because in him lie the springs of our spiritual life, which in and by our regeneration, renovation, and sanctification is communicated to us; and its progress in fruitfulness till it arrive to perfection, Phil. iii. 10, 14.

4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

When Christ, who is our life, shall appear; which will be, according to the purpose and promise of God, with whom it is laid up, chap. i. 5, when Christ by whom they live shall so appear that they shall be like him, 1 John iii. 2, and be taken to be with him in the heavenly inheritance, 1 Pet. i. 4; then their conformity to him, began here, partly in holiness and partly in sufferings, Rom. viii. 18, shall be completed at last in glory and felicity, Phil. iii. 21; Heb. xi. 26, 35. Then shall ye also appear with him in glory; and then shall these adopted children be brought into glory with him, Heb. ii. 10, out of whose hands none shall be able to pull them, John x. 28; but however the world look upon them as despicable, John xvi. 2, and sometimes they are so in their own eyes, wherein oftentimes there be tears, so that they can see but as through a glass, darkly, Psal. xxxi. 22; 1 Cor. xiii. 12; but then they shall see Christ face to face, all tears shall be wiped away from their eyes, Rev. vii. 17, and at the last day they shall shine as the sun in glory, Matt. xiii. 43; 1 Cor. xv. 43, 53; 2 Thess. i. 7, 10, 12.

5 Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:

That they might not think he, who had given check to superstitious abstinences, was for the indulging of any carnal affections, he infers here. how the exercise of truly Christian mortification was incumbent on those who were dead to sin and had their life hid in Christ. Neither is it any incongruity, that they who are in a sort already dead should be exhorted to mortification, if we do but distinctly consider of mortification, and what they are to mortify, or endeavour to make dead. 1. As to mortification; which may be considered either as to its inchoation, when, upon effectually calling, a mortal wound is by the Spirit of God given to the old man, or to the habit of sin, which will in the end or consummation be a total privation of its life, though as yet it be but partial. It is not in regard of this inchoative mortification, which was begun upon their effectual calling, that the apostle exhorts the saints at Colosse in this verse to mortify. But mortification may be considered as to its continuation, and the carrying on the life of grace, in the making dead all that is contrary to it; even the renewed person should be continually solicitous to have the old man killed outright without any reprieve. This is it that the apostle put the believing Colossians upon, not to spare any remaining ill dispositions or depraved habits of the old man; but by the assistance of the Spirit, (for it is not a natural, but spiritual work,) Rom. viii. 13; Gal. v. 24, continually to resist to the killing of it, or putting it to death: never to desist in this war. 2. As to the earthly members of it. The apostle expresseth the object of mortification, or what they are to mortify, by their members upon the earth; not as if he designed to put them upon a dismembering of their bodies, or a deadening of those bodily natural parts whereby the sex is distinguished, Rom. vi. 13, (though, agreeably to his own practice, he would have the body kept under and brought into subjection, 1 Cor. ix. 27,) but upon subduing inordinate motions and carnal concupiscences, as is evident from the particular vices following, which, taken as collected and heaped up together, may well pass under the notion of a body. He had before in this Epistle mentioned the body of the sins of the flesh, chap. ii. 11; this he might say not only metonymically, by reason such lusts do reside in the natural body and members of it, Rom. vi. 6, 12, 19; but (and that chiefly) metaphorically, the mass of corrupt nature dwelling in us is compared to a person, the old man, or old Adam, or body of sin, ver. 9; Rom. vi. 6; vii. 24; Eph. iv. 22; and, continuing the metaphor, the parts of this corrupt body are called members, and our members, the whole body of the old man being made up of them, which are said to be upon the earth, as being inclined to earthly things and employed about them, taking occasion from sensual objects here below to get strength, unless we be continually upon our watch to abolish all that contributes to the life of the old man in the particular members; viz. fornication: see the parallel place, Eph. v. 3, with 1 Cor. vi. 9, where he begins with this, as most turbulent, understanding by it not only the outward act, but the inward affection, which the heathens were apt to reckon no fault, though the Spirit of God in the Scripture do greatly condemn it, Matt. v. 28; Rom. i. 29; 1 Cor. v. 1; vi. 18; vii. 2; x. 8; 1 Thess. iv. 3. Uncleanness: see Eph. v. 3: impurity which is more unnatural, whereby they dishonour their own bodies, Rom. i. 24, 27; Gal. v. 19; 1 Thess. iv. 7; Rev. xvii. 4. Inordinate affection; that passion which some render softness, or easiness to receive any impression to lust, i. e. the filthy disposition of a voluptuous, effeminate heart, delighted with lascivious objects, Psal. xxxii. 9; Rom. i. 26, 27; 1 Cor. vi. 9, with 1 Thess. iv. 3, 5. Evil concupiscence; that concupiscence which in nature and measure is excessive, being an irregular appetite, and an undue motion against reason, especially against the Spirit, Gal. v. 17. And covetousness; and an immoderate desire after and cleaving to the things of this world, either in propping for them, or possessing of them to the feeding of other lusts, and so estranging the heart from God, Eccles. v. 10; Luke xii. 18; trusting in riches rather than in the living God, Job xxxi. 21; Matt. vi. 24; 1 Tim. vi. 17. Which is idolatry; upon which account it may pass under the title of idolatry, as the covetous person is an idolater; see Eph. v. 5: and further he might reckon covetousness to be idolatry, because nothing was more execrable in the judgment of the Jews than idolatry was, it being ordinary with the Hebrews to note sins by the names of those most detested; as rebellion against God by witchcraft, 1 Sam. xv. 23, <sup>h</sup> Rom. 8. 13.

Gal. 5. 24.

<sup>i</sup> Rom. 8. 13.

<sup>k</sup> Eph. 5. 3.

<sup>l</sup> Thess. 4.

<sup>m</sup> Eph. 5. 5.

<sup>n</sup> Eph. 5. 5.

not that it is so formally, but that the Spirit of God may show how odious an incorrigible obstinacy of mind against God is unto him. Hence, considering the odiousness of these vices, the apostle would have us not to content ourselves to cut off some branches of them, but to grub them up by the roots.

6 For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience :

Especially remembering how the indulging or sparing any of them will be of dreadful consequence ; see Eph. v. 6 ; for however they may by carnal men be looked upon as little faults, which God will overlook of course, yet they do certainly incur Divine displeasure, and will bring most inevitable judgments upon those unpersuadable, rebellious, and contumacious ones, who would be thought God's children and yet remain incorrigible, Matt. xxiv. 38, 39 ; 1 Cor. vi. 9 ; Gal. v. 21.

7 In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them.

In the which ; some render it, amongst whom ; but, alas ! they lived amongst such disobedient ones still ; therefore we do better render it in which, i. e. sins or vices. Ye, the now believing Colossians, also walked some time ; had heretofore practised and exercised ; and had not only been infected with the venom of them, in descending from polluted parents, but lived in them, were servants to them, Rom. vi. 17, 19, while in a sensual course of life they were carried away with them, 1 Cor. xii. 2, before their conversion, when they did live and reign in their mortal bodies, chap. i. 21 ; 1 Cor. vi. 11 ; Eph. ii. 3, 11, 12 ; v. 8.

8 But now ye also put off all these ; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.

But now ye also put off all these : having minded them of their former condition under paganism in a state of sin, while they served various sensual lusts, he doth here in their present circumstances under Christianity in a state of grace, show them that, now they professed to walk as children of light, Rom. xiii. 12 ; Eph. v. 8, with 1 Thess. v. 5, 8, they were more strongly obliged to lay aside those inordinate affections which were more spiritual, Eph. iv. 22 ; some of which he doth instance in, viz. anger ; where-by he doth not mean the passion itself, Eph. iv. 26, with 31, but the inordinacy of it, being a vindictive appetite to hurt another unjustly for some affront conceived to be given or occasioned by him. Wrath ; indignation, Rom. ii. 8, a sudden, hasty, and vehement commotion of the offended mind apprehending an injury, when it shows itself in the countenance in a manner and measure unbecoming a Christian, as in them who with rage thrust Christ out of the city, Luke iv. 28, 29, with Eph. iv. 31. Malice ; connoting both the evil habit and the vicious act : now though this word be taken oftentimes more generally, for that mischievous vitiosity and venom which runs through all the passions of the soul, reaching to all sins, 1 Cor. v. 8 ; xiv. 20 ; yet here it seems to be taken more specially, for a secret malignity of rooted anger and continued wrath, remembering injuries, meditating revenge, and watching for an occasion to vent it, being much the same with that which the apostle in a parallel Epistle calls bitterness, Eph. iv. 31, compared with other places, Gen. iv. 5 ; Rom. i. 29 ; Tit. iii. 3 ; 1 Pet. ii. 1. After he had urged the laying aside of heart evils as the cause, he moves to the laying aside those of the tongue, viz. blasphemy, which in a like place we render evil speaking, Eph. iv. 31 ; the original word, according to the notation of it, doth signify the hurt of any one's good name, which when it respects God we do more strictly call blasphemy. When it respects our neighbour, though more largely it be so, defamation, Rom. iii. 8 ; 1 Cor. iv. 13 ; Tit. iii. 2 ; yet more strictly, if it be done secretly, it is detraction or backbiting ; more openly, reviling or slandering, Matt. xv. 19 ; Mark vii. 22 ; 1 Tim. vi. 4. Filthy communication out of your mouth : obscene discourse, dishonest talk, should not come into the Christian's mouth, chap. iv. 6 ; see on Eph. iv. 29 ; v. 4 : wanton, lewd, and unclean speeches should not proceed from a Christian's tongue, 1 Cor. xv. 33.

9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds ;

Lie not one to another : here he puts them upon laying aside that vice which violates the ninth commandment, being opposite to truth in word and work : see Eph. iv. 25, where he doth more fully urge the putting away lying, from the same argument that follows here : a lie being no other than that voluntary expression by word or deed, which accords not with the conception of the mind and heart, on purpose to deceive those with whom we do converse ; contrary to the principles of a new creature, because God, after whose image he is renewed, hates it more than any vice, since it is contrary to truth, and proceeds from the father of lies, Psal. v. 6 ; xv. 2 ; Prov. xii. 22 ; John viii. 44 ; Rev. xxi. 8, 27. They who in conversation do most stomach to be told of it, are most ordinarily guilty of it. But the apostle requires Christians indeed to put away all fraud and fallacy in commerce with men and one another, (as well as converse with God,) that there may be in all due circumstances a just representation of that without which is conceived within, Eph. iv. 15 ; James iii. 14. Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds : the apostle subjoins his reason from the parts of regeneration or sanctification, viz. 1. Mortification, which he reassumes under an elegant metaphor, (intimating his solicitude to have the foregoing and the like vices to be wholly laid aside, as much as was possible in this life,) borrowed from the putting off old and worn garments, which did as it were crawl with vermin ; intimating that if the old man, as the cause, were put off with loathing, then those inordinate affections and actions which did proceed from it would also be removed ; see on Rom. vi. 6, 11, with Eph. iv. 22 : if that which is born of the flesh and contrary to the Spirit, John iii. 6, with Gal. v. 17, then inordinate affections and lusts, Gal. v. 24.

10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him :

And have put on the new man : 2. Vivification, or renovation ; this he connecteth with the former, continuing the metaphor. As in natural generation the expulsion of the old form is attended with the introduction of the new, so in spiritual regeneration, having put off the old Adam they had put on the new, i. e. Christ, not only sacramentally, chap. ii. 12, 13 ; Gal. iii. 27, but really, being new creatures in Christ Jesus, 2 Cor. v. 17 ; Eph. ii. 10, renewed in the inward man, Rom. vii. 22 ; 2 Cor. iv. 16 ; see on Eph. iii. 16 ; iv. 24 ; and endowed with a new frame of heart and a new spirit, Ezek. xi. 19 ; John iii. 5, 6, new qualities and affections. Which is renewed in knowledge ; the understanding being savingly enlightened, and the will powerfully inclined by the victorious working of the Spirit, Eph. i. 18—20 ; see on Eph. iv. 23, with Phil. ii. 13 ; 2 Thess. ii. 13, 14 ; and brought to more than a speculative, even to a lively and effectual knowledge, 1 John ii. 3. After the image of him that created him ; agreeable to the impress of him that had new framed or created them in Christ Jesus, 1 Cor. xv. 49 ; 1 Pet. i. 15, 16, by the renewing of the Holy Ghost, Tit. iii. 5 : for as the natural image of God consisted in knowledge and righteousness ; so it was requisite that the spiritual image restored by grace should consist in the rectifying of the faculties of the soul, the understanding with spiritual knowledge, and the will with a spiritual inclination to embrace the things that please God ; in communion with whom sanctified souls do take in hand a new course of life, and move therein, in a spiritually natural way.

11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free : but Christ is all, and in all.

He prevents the reasoning of those, who did not neglect regeneration, and place religion in mere externals, showing that in the new man, or true sanctification, and real Christianity, there was sufficient to save us, in communion with Christ, without those external observances false teachers did stickle for as necessary. Where there is neither Greek nor

Lev. 19. 11.
Eph. 4. 25.
Eph. 4. 22.
24.

Rom. 1. 18.
Eph. 5. 6.
Rev. 22. 15.
Eph. 2. 2.

Rom. 6. 19.
20. & 7. 5.
1 Cor. 6. 11.
Eph. 2. 2.
Tit. 3. 3.

Eph. 4. 22.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
Heb. 12. 1.
Jam. 1. 21.
Eph. 4. 29.
2. 4.

Rom. 12. 2.
Eph. 4. 23.
24.
Eph. 2. 10.

Rom. 10.
12. 1 Cor.
12. 13 Gal.
13. 28. & 5. 6.
Eph. 6. 8.
Eph. 1. 23.

Jew; God, in effectually calling persons into a state of regeneration, had no regard to those known distinctions then in the world, of those who were born of the Gentiles or the seed of Abraham, Matt. iii. 9; John viii. 39; Rom. ii. 11; x. 12; xi. 7, 11, 12: see on Gal. iii. 28. Circumcision nor uncircumcision; he works upon those who are not circumcised, as well as on those who are circumcised, now Christ is come, Gal. v. 6; vi. 15, since which the posterity of Japheth, constituting the greater part of the Gentile church, do dwell in the tents of Shem, according to Noah's prophecy, Gen. ix. 27. compared with Balaam's, Numb. xxiv. 24. Shem and Ham are not excluded, yet (a learned man observes) the faith of Christ from the ages of the apostles hath flourished most hitherto in Europe, and the parts of Asia where Japheth's lot lay; and as of old some of the latter might, so we know of the former many of late have passed into America. Upon the apostle's adding Barbarian, Scythian, without conjunction either copulative or disjunctive, some have inquired whether these two should be balanced in the like opposition with the former? And it may be said, there is no more necessity for such exactness here, than elsewhere in the like form of speech, Rom. viii. 39; 1 Cor. iii. 22: and the most think here is an increase of the oration, understanding by Scythian (which is now more strictly the Tartarian) the most barbarous of the Barbarians. Yet, because the Grecians sometime accounted the world, besides themselves, (who were polished with human learning and philosophy,) Barbarians, if any think there ought to be an opposition betwixt the Barbarian and Scythian, then by Barbarian (i. e. in the philosophers' reckoning) may be understood the Jews; by Scythian, the Gentiles. So Jew, circumcision, Barbarian, as in a parallel, are opposed to Gentile, uncircumcision, Scythian. For Scythians being numerous, thereby some used to express the nations, (as Symmachus translates Gen. xiv. 9, Tidal king of the Scythians.) and so reckon the whole world might be divided into the Jews and Scythians, no otherwise than into circumcised and uncircumcised. Bond nor free; as to acceptance with God in Christ, the distinctions of people were abolished with their observances and polities, because, some where they were more free, having milder laws; some where they were more servile, having more severe laws, which was an indifferent thing now as to their being in Christ, concerned to submit to certain honest laws, ordinances of magistrates, 1 Pet. ii. 13, though not Judaic or judicial ones. In every condition, high or low, whether of service or freedom, Acts x. 34, 35; 1 Cor. vii. 20—22, whosoever hath put on the new man in Christ is accepted. Neither the eloquence of the philosopher nor the rudeness of him who is uncultivated, neither the liberty of the freeman nor the bondage of the slave, doth further or obstruct the work of the new creation. But Christ is all, and in all; but they that are truly interested in Christ, have really put him on, they are certainly privileged with that which answers all, they are indeed the blessed with faithful Abraham, whether they be of his seed according to the flesh, yea or no, Psal. xxxii. 2; Gal. iii. 7—9; having put on Christ, Rom. xiii. 14. they are all complete in him, chap. ii. 10. He is all things to and in all those who are renewed, both meritoriously and efficaciously, 1 Cor. i. 30; xv. 10; Gal. ii. 20: being by faith one with him who hath all, they have all, Eph. iii. 17, either for their present support or their eternal happiness, Acts iv. 12.

12 <sup>b</sup> Put on therefore, <sup>c</sup> as the elect of God, holy and beloved, <sup>d</sup> bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering;

Put on therefore: as he had mentioned some particular vices of the old man they were to put off, ver. 8, he doth here infer, that they might be complete in Christ, there be particular virtues and graces of the new man they are to put on, or, being new creatures, continually to exercise themselves in. As the elect of God, holy and beloved; chosen of God before all time, and effectually called in time from the rest of mankind; see John xv. 16; Rom. viii. 29, 30; Eph. i. 4, 5; 2 Thess. ii. 13: saints not only by oblation, but renewed by the sanctifying Spirit, chap. i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 2; beloved with a gratuitous and special love of complacency, John xiv. 21; Rom. i. 7; 1 Thess. i. 4. Bowels of mercies; he would have us put on, i. e. exercise, (being sanctified by the Spirit,) mercy, not simply, but according to the Hebrew phrase, bowels of mercies, i. e. tenderesses of compassions, resenting the miseries of our brethren, as sharing with them in their sufferings, from our very heart: see Luke vi. 36; Rom. xii. 15; Gal. vi. 2; Eph. iv. 32; 1 Pet. iii. 8. Kindness; courtesy and goodness, Gal. v. 22; endeavouring to succour one another in all offices of benignity, 2 Cor. vi. 6; 1 Pet. v. 14. Humbleness of mind; a sincere (not an affected) lowliness of spirit: see on Eph. iv. 2; Phil. ii. 3. Meekness; gentleness and mildness, receiving one another with an open heart and pleasant countenance: see Gal. v. 13, 23; vi. 1; 1 Thess. ii. 7. Long-suffering; patience, bearing affronts and outrages, with other vexatious afflictions, without exasperation, abiding sedate after many wrongs offered, chap. i. 11; Acts v. 41; 2 Tim. ii. 10; iv. 2; 1 Pet. iv. 16.

13 <sup>e</sup> Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.

Forbearing one another; clemency towards each other, not only in undergoing affronts, but a suspending to take advantage from the infirmities of others, so as not to irritate them to passion, or to take them tripping, so as to aggravate their failings, Prov. xvi. 32; 1 Cor. iv. 12; Gal. vi. 2; Eph. iv. 2; 2 Thess. i. 4. And forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; yea, and if one hath any just complaint against another, mutually passing it by amongst ourselves: we render forgiving one another, that which in the Greek is forgiving ourselves; and indeed he that doth see the need he hath of pardon himself, will pass by the fault of his brother, (so ourselves here is put for one another.) Mark x. 26; Luke xxiii. 12. Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye; considering the exemplar cause here added as a motive to mutual forgiveness, viz. our Head the Lord Jesus Christ forgiving of us, who are bound to conform to him in forgiving others; see on Matt. vi. 14; xviii. 32, 33; Mark xi. 25, 26; John xiii. 14; Eph. iv. 32, with 1 Pet. ii. 21; yea, the strong to indulge and gratify their weak brethren in smaller matters for their good, Rom. xv. 1—3.

14 <sup>f</sup> And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

And above all these things put on charity: that which we render above, as surpassing all, some read upon, or over, and some, for all these things, viz. the graces he exhorted them to be clothed with. Both agree, that mutual Christian love or charity is the chiefest garment the new man can put on, being the livery of Christ's disciples, John. xiii. 35. But in prosecuting the allegory under the former notion, there is some danger of being over fine; and therefore it may be very pertinent to understand the putting on or exercising of charity, for the performance of the other graces and exercises, this being that which sets them on work with reference to their several objects, engaging to sincerity in their actings, without which the motions of the new man are no way acceptable; this links them together, and so is in a sort, as the apostle says elsewhere, a fulfilling of the whole law, Rom. xiii. 8, 9; Gal. v. 14, with Matt. xxii. 39, 40; being the subjects of this hearty and regular affection of love to God and our neighbour, are inclined by it to do good continually, and to avoid the injuring of another in any respect. Not that there is any fulfilling of the law perfectly in this state, as the papists argue impertinently from what follows of charity, that it is the bond of perfectness, or, by an hypallage or Hebraism, the most perfect bond, therefore we are justified by it, and so by the works of the law before God. For, 1. Love, or charity, itself is not perfect, and so the very best of the new creatures who have put it on, however they may be perfect with a perfection of integrity or parts, yet not with a perfection of maturity or degrees, absolutely, while in this life; see on Eccles. vii. 20; Rom. vii. 18, 19; Gal. v. 17; Phil. iii. 12, 15, with Jam. iii. 2, &c. 2. Upon supposition that charity in a new creature doth in some sort perfectly fulfil the law,

<sup>b</sup> Eph. 4. 24.
<sup>c</sup> 1 Thess. 1.
<sup>d</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 2.
<sup>e</sup> 2 Pet. 1. 10.
<sup>f</sup> Gal. 5. 22.
<sup>g</sup> Phil. 2. 1.
<sup>h</sup> Eph. 4. 3, 32.

<sup>f</sup> 1 Pet. 4. 8.
<sup>g</sup> John 13.
<sup>h</sup> Rom. 13.
<sup>i</sup> 1 Cor. 13.
<sup>j</sup> Eph. 5. 4.
<sup>k</sup> ch. 2. 2.

<sup>l</sup> 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 Tim. 1. 5. 1 John 2. 23. & 4. 21. h Eph. 4. 3.

from the time he is endowed with it of God's grace, and a man hath put it on; he could not by it be justified from the breach of God's law before, he being a transgressor of it in time past, 1 John i. 8, 10. 3. That perfection of which charity here is said to be the bond, doth most likely respect the integrity and unity of the members of the church, holding the Head, being knit together in one body; see on chap. ii. 2, 19, with Eph. iv. 16: the Greek word we translate bond here, noting such a collection and colligation of parts whereof a body is composed; and in one Greek copy it is found written, the bond of unity. As a prevailing love to God, and to those who bear his image, for his sake, doth bind up the other graces in every regenerate soul, so it doth the true members of the body of Christ one to another, being the best means for the perfecting of them under Christ their Head, who hath upon that account expressly required mutual love amongst his followers, John xv. 12; 1 John iii. 23; iv. 21: and the cogent reason hereof is, (as above in that 4th chapter of John's Epistle, ver. 10, 11,) God's loving of us: and then indeed, when we entirely love God and his children, we show our love to be the bond of perfectness in returning love to him and his; when by this reciprocal affection both ends of the band of love do meet and are knit together, we become one with God, and in him, through Christ, as one soul amongst ourselves, walking in love according to his commandment, Acts iv. 32; Eph. v. 2; 1 Thess. iv. 9.

15 And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful.

And let the peace of God; he doth not say the peace of the world, but the peace of God, or, as some copies, the peace of Christ; be sure, without the mediation of Christ we can have no peace with God; he alone hath made peace, chap. i. 20, with ii. 14; he is our peace, making it with God and amongst ourselves, to whom he hath preached it, Acts x. 36; Eph. ii. 14—17, and whom he hath brought into the bond of it, Eph. iv. 3; the Lord of peace himself, who always gives it where it is enjoyed, John xiv. 27; 2 Thess. iii. 16. It is then the peace of God through Christ; see Phil. iv. 7, 9; by faith in whom we have peace in our own hearts with God, Isa. xxxii. 17; Rom. v. 1, and xiv. 17, and with one another, John xvii. 21; Rom. xv. 6, 7, 13. That the members of Christ may live in this peace, 2 Cor. xiii. 11, the apostle here enjoins, as we render the word, let it rule in your hearts: the Greek word (both simple here, and compound, chap. ii. 18) is no where else to be found in the New Testament but in this Epistle, and it may signify either to arbitrate, or to mediate: our translation and the generality of interpreters take it in the former notion, for to arbitrate, or to rule, govern, sway, or moderate by way of arbitration, as he who sat judge, or umpire, to adjudge the reward in the agonistics. So the import of the apostle's injunction is, let it regulate, govern, superintend, or give law to the rest of the affections of the new man; let it be mistress and governess of all your motions, to keep them in due respect, and withhold them from attempting any thing disorderly, and to oversway disinclinations to the Divine pleasure or the good order of Christian community. The Arabic version is, let it be as the centre. Yet one learned man, conceiving the apostle doth here, as before, chap. ii. 18, glance upon the false apostles, (who would insinuate the mediation or intercession of angels,) thinks because the word signifies also to mediate, intercede, or interpose, the apostle's meaning may be, let the peace of God be to you instead of all conceited angelical mediators or intercessors, which would derogate from him that made peace, chap. i. 20, nailing what hindered to his cross, chap. ii. 14; let that preponderate with you in your hearts to overbalance any thing that can be suggested to the contrary. To the which also ye are called in one body; considering the Divine vocation, or the call of God, Rom. xii. 18; 1 Cor. vii. 15, and the condition or unity of the body into which ye are called under Christ your Head, 1 Cor. x. 16; xii. 12, 13, 25, 26; Eph. iv. 4. He adds, and be ye thankful; be ye gracious, or amiable, of an obliging temper (as some render the word, passively); or rather, as we take it, actively, be ye thankful, i. e. to God and Christ, and Christians; be mindful of the benefits ye have received, giving thanks to God always for all things, Eph. v. 20, and behaving yourselves as becomes the gospel.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

n 1 Cor. 14.
26. Eph. 5.
19.
o ch. 4. s.

Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom: one learned man conceives Paul to have written this first clause of the verse as in a parenthesis, joining in the sense what next follows to be ye thankful in the foregoing verse; another would have the parenthesis to begin from the 14th verse. The thing here exhorted to, is the plentiful inhabitation of the doctrine of the Bible, more especially of the gospel, that it may take up its residence and abide in our souls, which comes from the spiritual incorporation or mixing of it with faith, Heb. iv. 2: without which it may enter in as a stranger, but will not abide; it may cast a ray, or shine, but is not comprehended and doth not enlighten, John i. 5; 2 Cor. iv. 4; it may afford some present delight, Mark vi. 20, but not lasting. The apostle would have the word to be diligently searched, heartily received, and carefully observed; a child may have it in his memory, that hath it not in his heart: this indwelling of the word imports a regarding, as well as a remembering of it, Psal. i. 2; John v. 39; xx. 31; Acts xvii. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 15—17. If all the saints at Colosse were concerned in this exhortation, the papists oppose the Spirit of God in excluding (those they call) the laity from familiarity with the Scriptures in their mother tongue, being that all Christians are here indispensably obliged to instruct and warn themselves, (according to the original word,) as well as each other mutually, see Eph. v. 19. Then the use of the word, and the manner of expressing their thankfulness to God amongst themselves, is in singing to his praise psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs. He doth not say teaching and admonishing from these, (as elsewhere, Acts viii. 35; xxviii. 23,) but in them; implying it is a peculiar ordinance of Christ for Christians to be exercised in holy singing, as James v. 13, with an audible voice musically, Psal. xcv. 1, 2; c. 1, 2; Acts xvi. 25, as foretold, Isa. lii. 8, with Rom. x. 14. Some would distinguish the three words the apostle here useth from the manner of singing, as well as the matter sung; others, from the Hebrew usage of words expressed by the seventy, in the book of Psalms; yet, whoever consults the titles of the Psalms and other places of the Old Testament, they shall find the words used sometimes promiscuously; compare Judg. v. 3; 1 Chron. xvi. 8, 9; 2 Chron. vii. 6; xxiii. 13; xxix. 30; Psal. xxxix. 3; xlv. 1; xlvii. 1; xlviii. 1; lxxv. 1; cv. 1, 2; Isa. xii. 2, 4; xlii. 10; or conjunctly to the same matter, Psal. xxx., xlvi., lxxv., lxxviii., lxxxiii., lxxxvii., titles. Hereupon others stand not upon any critical distinction of the three words, yet are inclined here to take psalms by way of eminency, Luke xxiv. 44; or more generally, as the genus, noting any holy metre, whether composed by the prophets of old, or others since, assisted by the Spirit extraordinarily or ordinarily, Luke xxiv. 44; Acts xvi. 25; 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26; James v. 13. Here for clearness' sake two modes of the psalms, viz. hymns, whereby we celebrate the excellencies of God and his benefits to man, Psal. cxliii.: Matt. xxvi. 30; and odes or songs, which word, though ordinarily in its nature and use it be more general, yet here synecdochically, in regard of the circumstances of the conjoined words, it may contain the rest of spiritual songs, of a more ample, artificial, and elaborate composure, besides hymns, Rev. xiv. 2, 3; xv. 2, 3; which may be called spiritual or holy songs from the efficient matter, or end, viz. that they proceed from the Holy Spirit, or in argument may agree and serve thereto; being convenient they be so called from the argument, as opposed to carnal, sensual, and worldly ditties. Singing with grace in your hearts; and then that this holy singing be not only harmonious and tunable to the ear, but acceptable to God, it is requisite it do proceed from a gracious spirit, or grace wrought in the heart by the Holy Spirit, and the inhabitation of the word, Isa. xxix. 13; Matt. xv. 8. To the Lord; to the honour of God through Christ our Lord, Luke i. 46, 47; John v. 23; 1 Pet. iv. 11.

p 1 Cor. 10.
31.
g Rom. 1. 8
Fph. 5. 20.
ch. 1. 12.
& 2. 7.
1 Thee. 5. 18.
Heb. 13. 15.

17 And <sup>p</sup> whatsoever ye do in word or deed, <sup>do</sup> all in the name of the Lord Jesus, <sup>g</sup> giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

And whatsoever ye do : here the apostle give a universal direction how in every capacity, both personal and relative, in every motion, a Christian may do all so as to find acceptance with God. In word or deed ; and that is in his expressions and actings, viz. c prehending his internal as well as external operations; his reasonings and resolutions within, as well as his motions without; the thoughts of his heart, as well as the words of his tongue and the works of his hand; to take care as much as possible that all be in the name of the Lord Jesus : elsewhere writing the same thing, the apostle adds Christ, Eph. v. 20. Plato could say, Not only every word, but every thought, should take its beginning from God; but he understood nothing of the Mediator, of the love of him and the Father: but Christians know, as there is salvation in no other name, Acts iv. 12, so there is no acceptance of their persons and performances in any other name than in his in whom they believe, Phil. ii. 10; Heb. x. 19, 20; 1 John v. 13; and therefore in all their desires they are to respect him, John xiv. 13, 14; xv. 3, 16; xvi. 23, 26; looking for his authority and warrant, Matt. xviii. 18—20; Mark xi. 9; 1 John v. 14; following his example, Matt. xi. 29; xvi. 24; John xiii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 21—24; 1 John ii. 6; in all they set about, desiring strength from him, Psal. lxxi. 17; Acts iv. 7, 10; 1 Cor. xv. 10; Phil. iv. 13; 2 Tim. ii. 1; living by faith upon him, Gal. ii. 20; Heb. x. 38; 2 Pet. i. 2, 3; waiting upon him, worshipping and serving of him, according to his prescription, Micah iv. 5; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Acts ii. 42, 43; 2 Tim. ii. 19; for his sake, Matt. xix. 29; xxiv. 9; Acts ix. 16; Rev. ii. 3, 13; iii. 8; to his honour and glory, Psal. xxxi. 3; 1 Cor. x. 31; Rev. iv. 9, 11; v. 12, 13; xi. 13. Endeavouring to render hearty thanks unto God and the Father, i. e. to God the Father: the Syriac and Arabic do omit the conjunction copulative; however, it is to be understood expositively of God the Father of Christ, and our Father, who doth embrace us as his children. By him; by or through Christ, Eph. v. 20; Heb. xiii. 15, the only Mediator.

18 <sup>r</sup> Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, <sup>a</sup> as it is fit in the Lord.

The apostle, entering upon an exhortation to relative duties, begins first with that which wives owe to their husbands to whom they are married, by reason this relation is the first in nature, and the fountain whence the rest do flow, Gen. ii. 22; Psal. cxxvii. 3; cxxviii. 3; Prov. v. 15, 16. That which he requires is self-submission in every thing, see Eph. v. 22, expressing a subjection with reverence, ver. 24, 33; 1 Pet. iii. 1. The God of order made the woman inferior, Gen. ii. 18, 22; iii. 16; 1 Cor. xi. 7—9; 1 Tim. ii. 13; Tit. ii. 5; yet her submission is not to be servile, as that of a handmaid, but conjugal, as of a meet companion. As it is fit in the Lord; suitable to God's institution, in a becoming manner, agreeable to the mind of Christ, Acts v. 29; 1 Cor. vii. 39; Eph. vi. 1, 5.

19 <sup>t</sup> Husbands, love your wives, and be not <sup>u</sup> bitter against them.

The husband's duty is love, which the apostle doth ever inculcate from the most obliging considerations when he speaks of this relation; see Matt. xix. 6; 1 Cor. vii. 3, with Eph. v. 25, 33; to sweeten on the one hand the subjection of the wife, and to temper on the other hand the authority of the husband. And be not bitter against them; who, that upon his authority he may not grow insolent, the apostle forbids him forwardness with his wife, thereby requiring a conversation with her full of sweetness and amity: wrath and bitterness is to be laid aside towards all others. ver. 8, with Eph. iv. 31, much more towards his own wife, in whom he is to joy and delight, Prov. v. 15, 18, 19; 1 Pet. iii. 7.

20 <sup>x</sup> Children, obey your parents <sup>y</sup> in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.

By children he understands both males and females.

Obey your parents; he requires them to yield humble subjection to those that brought them forth, or have just authority over them; see Exod. xx. 12; Eph. vi. 1; paying reverence to them, Lev. xix. 3; Heb. xii. 9; observing their holy and prudent prescriptions, Luke ii. 51; showing piety and kindness to them in all grateful offices, 1 Tim. v. 4, and submitting to their parental discipline, Jer. xxxv. 6; Heb. xii. 9. In all things; in whatsoever is agreeable to the mind of the supreme Governor, who is absolute Sovereign, Acts iv. 19; v. 29. For this is well pleasing unto the Lord; and this upon the most cogent reason imaginable, because it is not barely pleasing, but well pleasing, or very acceptable, to the Lord, who arms parents with authority over their children, Eph. vi. 1—3.

21 <sup>z</sup> Fathers, provoke not your children <sup>a</sup> to anger, lest they be discouraged.

Fathers, provoke not your children to anger: and to moderate the parental authority, that they may exercise it Christianly, he allows not parents to do that which is in a direct tendency to irritate or move the passions of their children merely for their own pleasure, without a principal regard to God's glory, and their children's profit, Heb. xii. 10. Indeed, he seems here more strictly to guard fathers against mal-administration of their power in this extreme than he doth elsewhere, when writing upon the same subject, Eph. vi. 4, considering the original word he here puts the negative upon, to engage them to lay aside rigour in their government, (as well as unwarrantable indulgence,) and that upon a very weighty reason, drawn from the end, viz. lest they be discouraged; lest some children, who might with a moderate hand be reduced to obedience, should be (as it were) dispirited, by the roughness of their father's discipline, and even pine away with grief, or grow desperate.

22 <sup>b</sup> Servants, obey <sup>c</sup> in all things your masters <sup>d</sup> according to the flesh; not with eyeservice, as menpleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

Servants: the apostle knowing how hard the condition of servitude was, both under the Jews and Gentiles, lest any believers in that mean condition should disgust so strict a subjection, especially to unbelieving masters, and cast off the yoke by breaking their covenants, to the disturbance of human society, and the disparagement of the Christian institution, he takes a special care to sweeten the harshness of it to all those indefinitely whose lot it was, by recommending the duties of it to them from the consideration of the acceptableness of them to God, who of his unconstrained grace would vouchsafe to them the noblest reward. Obey in all things your masters according to the flesh: wherefore Christianity requires that servants of all sorts should readily receive and cheerfully execute all the commands, (see ver. 20,) in things lawful and honest, of those of both sexes, whom God in his wise providence hath given a just authority over them according to the flesh; (see also Eph. vi. 5;) which expression is not only for distinction from the Father and Master of spirits, Heb. xii. 9, but for mitigation of their servitude, in that their earthly master's power reacheth only things corporeal and temporal, not the conscience and things that are eternal, which might be some comfort, that the servitude would not last long, and in the mean time they were God's free-men, 1 Cor. vii. 22, whom they might serve with the spirit in the gospel of his Son, Rom. i. 9. Not with eye-service; yet their masters after the flesh, in those civil things wherein they had power to command, were not lightly to be respected or served to the eye, or only to be observed while their eye was upon them, Eph. vi. 6. As men-pleasers; as if regard were to be had to the pleasing of men, and not to the pleasing of God, who searcheth the heart, and by his gospel (which they should adorn) expects they should remember his eye is ever upon them, Tit. ii. 9; 1 Pet. ii. 18. But in singleness of heart, fearing God; and expects that, in a holy awe of him, they should do all that is incumbent on them, in the sincerity of their souls, (see Eph. vi. 5, 6,) with more regard to God than man.

23 <sup>d</sup> And whatsoever ye do, do <sup>e</sup> it <sup>f</sup> heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men;

r Eph. 5. 22.
Tit. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 3. 1.
a Eph. 5. 3.

t Eph. 5. 25,
26, 33.
1 Pet. 3. 7.
u Eph. 4. 31.

x Eph. 6. 1.
y Eph. 6. 24.
Tit. 2. 9.

a Eph. 6. 5,
&c. 1 Tim.
6. 1. Tit. 2.
9. 1 Pet. 2.
16.
b ver. 20.
c Philem. 16.

d Eph. 6. 6.
7.

Yea, courageously and cheerfully, from the very soul, not constrainedly and murmuringly, though they be froward and their commands harsh; making account it is Jesus Christ, (who hath power over soul and body, Matt. x. 28.) not mortal men only, or in and for themselves, whom you serve, (see Eph. vi. 7.) have an eye unto this Sovereign Lord, in the servile office your masters on earth do employ you.

<sup>e</sup> Eph. 6. 2. 24 *Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: <sup>f</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 22. 'for ye serve the Lord Christ.

Knowing, being fully persuaded of this undoubted truth, that of the Lord, who superintends all your services, (not for any merit of yours,) Eph. vi. 8, the recompence which your Master in heaven hath purchased, Eph. i. 14, 18, shall be freely settled upon you whom he hath adopted into his family, Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iv. 7; Eph. i. 5; for in those duties you Christianly perform to masters of the same mould with yourselves, he really looks upon you as his own servants, (see Eph. vi. 6.) yea, and free-men, 1 Cor. vii. 22; so that, as Onesimus, Philem. 10, ye may more cheerfully submit to your masters' yoke, according to the command and for the sake of Christ, who reckons what you do upon that account as done to himself, Matt. xxv. 40, and will instate you in that eternal inheritance, to which neither you nor any mortal man had naturally any right at all.

<sup>g</sup> Rom. 2. 11. 25 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: <sup>h</sup> Eph. 6. 9. <sup>i</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 17. <sup>j</sup> See Deut. 10. 17. and *there is no respect of persons.

But he that doeth wrong; but if the reward will not engage to a right discharge of these relative duties, the injurious person, whether he be bond or free, Eph. vi. 8, an inferior servant or a domineering master, who doth violate the rules of right, agreeing with the law natural and eternal, shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; shall have the just recompence of that injury, whereby he wrongs his correlate; the penalty apportioned to his fault, Rom. ii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 10; 2 Pet. ii. 13. And there is no respect of persons; from the impartiality of Divine justice, there is no respect of persons with God, Rom. ii. 11, or with Christ, in the place parallel to this, Eph. vi. 9, who is so righteous a Judge that he is not swayed by the outward circumstances and qualifications of men, whether potent or poor, Lev. xix. 15; Job xxxiv. 19: he seeth not as man seeth, he looketh not on the outward appearance, but on the heart, 1 Sam. xvi. 7: in the distribution of justice, he will put no difference betwixt the mightiest monarch and the most enslaved peasant; the purloining servant, and oppressing master shall certainly receive answerable to their doings from his impartial hand: the mean one who is at present abused without relief, and the great one who doth tyrannize without control, shall one day have right, and be reckoned with by the righteous Judge, 2 Tim. iv. 8, who will show to all the world that he will honour those that honour him, and lightly esteem those that despise him, 1 Sam. ii. 30, and that he is the avenger of all those that are wronged, 1 Thess. iv. 6; 2 Thess. i. 6.

CHAP. IV

The duty of masters towards their servants, 1. A general exhortation to perseverance in prayer, 2—4, discreet conduct, 5, and well-ordered speech, 6. The apostle commendeth Tychicus and Onesimus, by whom he sent this Epistle, 7—9; and concludeth with divers salutations, and a blessing, 10—18.

<sup>n</sup> Eph. 6. 9. MASTERS, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven.

That this verse doth refer to the foregoing chapter, and that it was unadvisedly divided from it, is generally agreed. Masters: having put servants upon their duty, he doth here engage all those who have a just right over servants to mind their own duty toward those under their command. Give unto your servants that which is just; though your extract or estate hath advanced you above them in human society, yet you have the same nature and infirmities that they have, and (as in the foregoing verse) must appear with them before the same Judge and rewarder at the same tribunal. And the apostle doth elsewhere, Eph. vi. 9, require of masters in their superior relation, what he doth of servants in their inferior one, to do the same things, i. e. not the particular offices of their servants, but, according to general rules of right reason, that which, by the law of God, nature, and nations, is common to and incumbent on all relatives, Rom. xiii. 7, 8; Gal. v. 13; Eph. vi. 9. As he doth here require masters to do their servants right, give to them that which is their due for soul and body, Gen. xviii. 19; Exod. xii. 44; with respect to work, that it be neither too much nor too little, Prov. xii. 10; xxix. 21; to food, that it be convenient for nourishment, not luxury, Prov. xxvii. 27; xxxi. 15; Luke xii. 42; xv. 17; wages, Exod. ii. 21; James v. 4; and recompence, Deut. xv. 13. And equal; ye are likewise to give them that which is equal, or equitable, as well as just, which implies you should not be cruel to them, or discourage them; as you expect they should serve you with good will, so you should govern them wisely, and be good and gentle to them, Psal. ci. 2; 1 Pet. ii. 18, who are faithful, allowing them seasonable rest and refreshment, Deut. xv. 14, not despising their prudent answers, Job xxxi. 13, 14, but showing them favour in sickness as well as in health, 2 Kings v. 5, 6; Prov. xiv. 35; Matt. viii. 6. Knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven; and that upon this weighty reason, intimated before, that he above, whom you serve, will treat you as you do them; this you may be assured of, Eph. vi. 8, 9. If you expect favour at his hands, when he comes to distribute rewards and punishments, show it now to your inferiors, who will then appear as your fellow servants, when you must give an account of your stewardship, Matt. xxiv. 49—51, with Luke xvi. 2.

2 <sup>b</sup> Continue in prayer, and watch in <sup>c</sup> the same <sup>d</sup> with thanksgiving;

Continue in prayer; persevere or hold on strongly in prayer with fervency: we are apt to grow sluggish and indisposed, and therefore have need of quickening to this duty, Luke xviii. 1; Eph. vi. 18. And watch in the same; endeavouring to keep the heart in all fit seasons unto this, as a help to the precedent and subsequent duties, Psal. v. 3; Mark xiii. 33, &c.; Acts xii. 12; Rom. xii. 12; 1 Thess. v. 17; James v. 16; Rev. iii. 2. With thanksgiving; with acknowledgment of thanks for what we have already received, Psal. cxvi. 12, 13; 1 Thess. v. 18.

3 <sup>e</sup> Withal praying also for us, that God would <sup>f</sup> open unto us a door of utterance, to speak <sup>g</sup> the mystery of Christ, <sup>h</sup> for which I am also in bonds:

Withal praying also for us; not only putting up petitions for themselves, but also interceding for Paul, and others with him, especially Timothy, mentioned in the salutation, chap. i. 1, 7; Rom. xv. 30; 2 Cor. i. 11; Phil. i. 19; 2 Thess. iii. 1; Philem. 22. That God would open unto us a door of utterance; that God would vouchsafe to us freedom of speech: see on Eph. vi. 19. To speak the mystery of Christ; effectually to preach the mystery of Christ: see chap. i. 26, 27; ii. 2; Matt. xiii. 11; 1 Cor. xvi. 9; Eph. i. 9. For which I am also in bonds: for which I am an ambassador in bonds, or, in a chain, Eph. vi. 20; i. e. with the soldier that kept him in his own hired dwelling, Acts xviii. 16, 20, 30, 31.

4 That I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak.

That I may manifest, or open and clear, it in due circumstances, as becomes an able minister of Christ, Rom. i. 15; 1 Cor. ii. 4; ix. 16; with 2 Tim. ii. 15; iv. 2.

5 <sup>i</sup> Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, <sup>j</sup> redeeming the time.

Walk in wisdom; let your course of life be managed with all Christian prudence, that you may not any way disparage the Christian institution, 2 Sam. xii. 14; Rom. ii. 23, 24, with 1 Tim. vi. 4; with your innocency be wise as serpents, Matt. x. 16; see Eph. v. 15; yet, while you become all things to all to gain some, 1 Cor. ix. 20—23, you must take heed of such a compliance, whereby you may wound your consciences, Exod. xxxiv. 15; Eph. v. 11; and, on the other side, of such a contempt of them without just cause as may provoke them to persecute you. Paul was wary in his reasoning with those who were not Christians, and would have others to be so, Acts xvii. 24, 25, &c., with 1 Cor. v. 12, 13; not denying any of them what is due to them by Divine and human rights, Matt. xxii. 21; Rom. xiii. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 13. Toward them that are without; considering they are not of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10, as you profess to be, you should be more circumspect, that you do not give occasion of offence to them, 1 Tim. v. 14, as well as take care you be not infected with their practices, 1 Cor. v. 6, but endeavour to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, Tit. ii. 10. Redeeming the time; showing your prudence, say some learned men, in gaining time by honest craft, to secure you from spiritual dangers to your souls, or divert those who have power from persecutions: taking the expression proverbially. And for that purpose cite a passage in the prophet from the Septuagint, Dan. ii. 8. Others, and the most, import of the original words, take time for opportunity, or the fitness it hath for some good; and the participle we render redeeming, to import either morally, (not physically, which is impossible,) a recalling or recovery of time past that is lost, by a double diligence in employing what remains; or a buying up the present time, i. e. parting with any thing for the improvement of it to our spiritual advantage; or a buying it out, i. e. a rescuing it, as it were, out of the hands of Satan and the world, which by distracting cares and tempting pleasures do occasion often the misspending of it: see Eph. vi. 16.

<sup>k</sup> Eccles. 10.
12. ch. 3. 16.
<sup>l</sup> Mark 9. 50.
<sup>m</sup> 1 Pet. 3.
15.

6 Let your speech be always <sup>k</sup> with grace, <sup>l</sup>seasoned with salt, <sup>m</sup>that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man.

Let your speech be always with grace: because discourse is the tenderest part of our converse with men, especially those without, and ought to be managed with the greatest circumspection, upon occasions in every fit season, in imitation of Christ, who entertained those that did converse with him with gracious words, Luke iv. 22, you should endeavour so to speak when called, that the hearers may conceive your discourse doth proceed from a gracious spirit, or grace in the heart, chap. iii. 16, teaching your mouth, Prov. xv. 23, 24, with meekness of wisdom, James iii. 13, using knowledge aright, Prov. xv. 2, being in its tendency gracious, Eccles. x. 12; not ungrateful, (as tintured with gall or venom,) but ministering grace to the hearers, Eph. iv. 29. Seasoned with salt; even as meat duly powdered with salt (Matt. v. 13) becomes acceptable to the discerning palate, so to the ear that trieth speech, fitly spoken words (Prov. xxv. 11) are of a grateful savour, cleansed from corruption, Job xxxiii. 3; Mark ix. 50. That ye may know how ye ought to answer every man; to this purpose chiefly in the main points of Christianity, that in a gospel-becoming manner, you may be able to give a reason of the hope that is in you (to those that ask you) with meekness and fear, Matt. vii. 6; 1 Pet. iii. 15, courteousness and sincerity, Eph. iv. 25, free from those evils of speech he had before enjoined them in this Epistle to put away, chap. iii. 8.

<sup>n</sup> Eph. 6. 21.

7 <sup>n</sup>All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellowservant in the Lord:

All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you: the apostle drawing to a conclusion, that he at so great distance might certify them of his love to them, and care for them, doth here acquaint them that with this Epistle he was sending two persons of integrity, for their satisfaction and his, viz. Tychicus, an Asiatic, their countryman and his fellow traveller, Acts xx. 4, whom he sometimes sent to others, 2 Tim. iv. 12; Tit. iii. 12, who would give them to understand what circumstances he was in, and all his affairs: see Eph. vi. 21, 22. Who is a beloved brother; whom he recommends to them as being a good man, a brother, as Timothy, chap. i. 1, and Epaphroditus, Phil. ii. 25, beloved of the people. And a faithful minister; and whom he had experimentally found to be a faithful deacon, in the larger acceptation, or minister, i. e. of Jesus Christ, and his messenger. And fellow servant in the Lord; and owned as his colleague, or fellow servant in the Lord, that they might more kindly receive him.

8 <sup>o</sup>Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, and he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts;

Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose; who was Paul's messenger to them, as to let them know how it was with Paul, so to this end, 1. That he might know your estate; that he might clearly understand, how their matters stood, (as Eph. vi. 22,) especially with respect to spirituals, chap. ii. 1, 5. 2. And comfort your hearts; and cheer up their spirits, (as Eph. vi. 22,) that under the temptations of Satan, and tyranny of persecutors abroad or at home, they might not be discouraged, 2 Cor. iv. 17.

9 With <sup>p</sup>Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here.

With Onesimus, whom he adjoins to Tychicus. Some, because of his following commendation, think him to be another person different from the fugitive servant of Philemon; but the most, comparing the description here with the circumstances in the Epistle to Philemon, ver. 10, 16, &c., conclude him to be the very same, taking Philemon for a Colossian. A faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you; there, as here, being expressly called a beloved brother, yea, and, which may answer to faithful, Paul's spiritual son, who (whatever he had been) would be profitable and a benefit to Philemon, whom Paul would have to receive him as his own bowels. And that which might commend him to the Colossians was, that he was one of that city, or the same birth with themselves. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here; these two persons of credit (upon the apostle's testimony) in their different circumstances, might, as joint witnesses, give them a full and certain account how things went with the church, and particularly with Paul, now a prisoner at Rome.

10 <sup>q</sup>Aristarchus my fellowprisoner saluteth you, and <sup>r</sup>Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments: if he come unto you, receive him;)

Aristarchus my fellow prisoner saluteth you: here he doth wish prosperity to them, Luke x. 5, in the name of others, beginning with those of the circumcision, viz. Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, who had been his fellow traveller, Acts xix. 29; xx. 4; xxvii. 2; yea, and now his fellow prisoner, and fellow labourer, Philem. 24. And Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas; and John Mark, who was nephew to Barnabas, Acts xii. 12; xiii. 13; and having sometime displeased Paul by his departure and accompanying his uncle Barnabas, Acts xv. 37, 39, yet afterwards repented, and was reconciled to Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 11; Philem. 24; being profitable to him for the ministry as an evangelist. Touching whom ye received commandments: if he come unto you, receive him: concerning this same Mark, Paul had given orders to them, as well as to other churches, (who otherwise, likely, might be prejudiced against him for leaving Paul and his company in Pamphylia, Acts xiii. 13.) that if he came amongst them, they should entertain him kindly, who as Peter's spiritual son, 1 Pet. v. 13, did elsewhere also salute those who were scattered. Some conceive from the commandments here they had received, that Barnabas had written to the Colossians in commendation of his cousin Mark.

11 And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me.

And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision; a third person of those who had been Jews mentioned in this salutation, is Jesus, surnamed Justus, (probably from his just conversation,) whether the same with him mentioned in Luke's history of the Acts, chap. xviii.

7, is not evident. The Greeks use Jesus for the Hebrew Joshua, Heb. iv. 8, it being common with them to more than one. However, the Christians, since the resurrection of Christ, out of reverence to their Lord and Master, (who is God as well as man,) have forborne to call their children by the name of Jesus. These only are my fellow workers unto the kingdom of God; these three alone, i. e. of the Jews, (as for Timothy, his father was a Greek or Gentile, Acts xvi. 1, 3, and others were Gentiles, Acts xxviii. 28,) were assistant to him at Rome (where it seems Peter was not) in expounding and preaching the gospel, enlarging the kingdom of grace in converting of souls, Matt. iv. 23; Mark iv. 11. Which have been a comfort unto me; the carrying on of which work did administer matter of great consolation to him in his bonds.

12 * Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always || labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you: after he had given them the good wishes of some of the Jews, he doth here give the like from some of the Gentiles, beginning with Epaphras, whom he had before commended, chap. i. 7, 8, and doth here recommend him as born and bred amongst them, devoted to their service, in being the servant of Christ, as Paul, separated to the preaching of the gospel, Rom. i. 1, yea, a fellow prisoner with the apostle upon that account, Philem. 23. Always labouring fervently for you in prayers; and, as it became such a one, faithful in his office, not diverted by distance of place or length of time, was night and day contending zealously with prayers to God for their spiritual, temporal, and eternal welfare, as Rom. xv. 30. That ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God; that they might attain a sufficient perfection in all that which God would have them reach to: see on chap. i. 28, 29; Phil. iii. 15. The distance betwixt Colosse and Philippi, &c. render it improbable, whatever a learned man conceits, that Epaphras should be the same with Epaphroditus.

13 For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you; for, saith the apostle, though I am not privy to his secret prayers, yet I can bear him witness, and do give him mine own testimony, that he hath a most ardent and special affection for you Christians at Colosse. And them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis; yea, and for those also in your neighbour cities: see the argument, and chap. ii. 1; viz. Laodicea, the last of the seven churches, to whom excellent epistles were written, recorded by John the divine, Rev. i. 11; iii. 14; and Hierapolis, or the holy city, about six miles distant from the former, say geographers.

14 * Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you.

Luke, the beloved physician; whether this Luke was the same with him that penned the Gospel and the Acts, because the apostle here gives him no higher a commendation, some doubt. But others, and the most, conclude that as Matthew from a publican became an apostle, and others from fishers of fishes, fishers of men, so Luke from a physician of the body became a physician of souls, and that this was the very person who was Paul's perpetual and individual companion in his travels, 2 Tim. iv. 11; Philem. 24; considering from his style he was an excellent Grecian, (very fit for a physician,) and made use of proper medical terms, Acts xv. 39; xvii. 16: and here the apostle calls him beloved, as he had done Tychicus, ver. 7, and elsewhere his fellow labourer, who only of those that were not prisoners stuck to him, 2 Tim. iv. 11. Some think it to be Luke whose praises are celebrated in the gospel, or evangelical churches, 2 Cor. viii. 18; others would have that to be Barnabas, or some other: his practising of physic was no more inconsistent with being an evangelist than Paul's tent-making with being an apostle, 2 Thess. iii. 8. And Demas, greet you; he adds a third in this salutation from others, and that is Demas, who hitherto did persevere, and that as one of his fellow labourers, Philem. 24; though it should seem, afterwards, when the persecution grew hotter, he did for some worldly respect leave Paul, and depart unto Thessalonica, 2 Tim. iv. 10.

15 Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house.

Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea; having saluted the Colossians, in the names of others, circumcised and uncircumcised, he desires them in his own name to salute the Christians in the church at Laodicea. And Nymphas; and some pious man called Nymphas, probably living either in the country near the city of Laodicea, or some eminent Christian of chief note in the city. The masculine article adjoined shows this person to be a male, and not a female, as some have inconsiderately reckoned. And the church which is in his house; and the company of believers, either of his own family or neighbourhood, who did, under his protection or inspection, meet to worship God according to his appointment, Rom. xvi. 1, 5; 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 19.

16 And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.

And when this epistle is read among you: the apostle takes it for granted, that, when this Epistle came to their hands, it would be publicly read in a solemn assembly of the church, or brethren, convened to that purpose, as elsewhere usual. For indeed he doth strictly enjoin and adjure the Thessalonians, under the penalty of the Lord's displeasure, that the Epistle or letter which he wrote unto them should be read unto all the brethren, 1 Thess. v. 27: it being an indispensable duty of Christ's disciples, to search the Scriptures, John v. 39, and there solemnly to read them in the assembly for the edification of all ministers and people, old and young, Deut. xvii. 19; Psal. i. 2; cxix. 9; Mark xiii. 37; Acts xiii. 15; xvii. 11, 12; xviii. 26-28; Rom. xv. 4; 1 Tim. iv. 13, 15. Cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans: hence (as it follows) the apostle (who it is likely had not an opportunity at Rome to have a copy of it transcribed) chargeth them at Colosse, to see or take care after the reading of this same Epistle amongst themselves, that, a copy of it being prepared for that purpose, it might, as from him, be also solemnly read or rehearsed in a public assembly of the Christians at Laodicea. And that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea; and he further chargeth those to whom he wrote at Colosse, that they should take care that the Epistle (as we rightly with the generality of ancients and moderns render it) from Laodicea, be read amongst them. The Ethiopic version (as we have it thence in the Latin) reads, send it to Laodicea, that the Laodiceans also may read it, in the house or congregation of Christians there. The Vulgar Latin, that ye likewise may read the Laodicean Epistle, or the Epistle of the Laodiceans. Whence some of old and of late would have it thought, that St. Paul wrote a distinct Epistle to the Laodiceans. In favour of this opinion, some bad man, out of this Epistle to the Colossians, and that to the Ephesians, patched up and forged a short, but gross and trifling, Epistle, and fathered it on the apostle, though very dissimilar from his character and style; whereupon it hath been rejected as spurious and apocryphal by the learned fathers, and the second council of Nice; and since by the learned on all hands, except some few of the papists, and except quakers, who printed a translation of it, and plead for it. Some papists urge this, to argue that the church gives the Scripture authority amongst Christians. But though she is bound to preserve the books of Divine authority, it doth not belong to her to authenticate them, or prescribe them as the rule of faith; that were no less than to outrage the majesty of the Author. Others allege it, as being lost, and thereupon would infer the canon of Holy Scriptures to be defective. But supposing, yet not granting, that Paul had written an Epistle to the Laodiceans, which had not come down to us, it were altogether inconsequent that the canon of Scriptures we have doth not contain all things necessary to salvation. Some, still harping on the Vulgar translation of the Laodicean Epistle, (though that in common speech might argue they wrote it rather than received it,) would fancy that it was the Epistle Paul wrote to the Ephesians; but Tertullian did brand the impostor Marcian for changing the title of Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. Others conceit it may be understood of Paul's Epistle to Philemon, whom Paul calls his fellow labourer, likely exercising his ministry in the neighbour city of Laodicea, which was sent by Onesimus, and for the sake of Onesimus, who was a Colossian, was to be read at Colosse. Others, because Luke is mentioned, ver. 14, that it was an Epistle of his to the Laodiceans; but of that there is no evidence. Neither is it probable that Paul would in this Epistle to the Colossians have saluted the Laodiceans, had he written a distinct Epistle to them. Wherefore it is most rational to understand it, not of an Epistle of Paul written to the Laodiceans, but as our Bibles, according to an authentic copy, have, with the Greek fathers, faithfully translated and represented it, written from Laodicea. Some conjecture it to be the First Epistle of John, which they conceive was written from the city of Laodicea. Others think it was the First Epistle to Timothy, from the inscription or subscription of a long time put at the end of it, as if written from Laodicea. But against that it may be excepted, there is no mention of Pacatiana, in the writers of the first age, but only in after-times, dividing the Roman empire into provinces; and some say this was first mentioned in the ecclesiastical records in the fifth synod at Constantinople. Further, there be several passages in the Epistle itself do intimate that it was written from some place in Macedonia, if we consult chap. i. 3, with iii. 14; iv. 13, not from Laodicea. Some think it to be meant of the Epistle from Laodicea, wherein they would answer the Colossians; how probably I determine not. Wherefore it is most probable, that the Epistle was written from Laodicea, to Paul at Rome; either by the church there, or some of her officers, which (likely he in straits of time enclosed, and) he would have read, as helpful to the edification of the Colossians, for the better clearing of some passages in this Epistle to them, wherein he had obviated such errors as he might hear seducers were attempting to disseminate amongst them.

17 And say to <sup>b</sup>Archippus, Take heed <sup>b</sup>Philem. 2. to 'the ministry which thou hast received <sup>c</sup>1 Tim. 4. & in the Lord, that thou fulfil it.

He also enjoins them to advise or advertise Archippus, whom he doth elsewhere call his fellow soldier, i. e. minister in the gospel, Philem. 2, on his and Timothy's behalf, to see to, or be mindful of, the nature of that excellent ministry he had undertaken, Rom. xi. 13; Eph. iii. 7; 1 Tim. iv. 6; yea, and to be more heedful, Acts. xx. 28, 29; 1 Pet. v. 1, 2, considering the authority of the Lord Jesus, in whose name he had been called to it, and intrusted with it, Matt. ix. 38; Phil. i. 17; 1 Tim. v. 1, 21; having been colleague to Epaphras, or in his absence newly received into this sacred charge, to encourage him to a faithful discharge of his duty therein, to fill-up all the parts of his office, and leave none of them unperformed: see chap. i. 25; 1 Cor. ix. 16, 17; 1 Tim. iv. 16, with 2 Tim. iv. 5.

18 <sup>d</sup>The salutation by the hand of me Paul. <sup>e</sup>Remember my bonds. <sup>f</sup>Grace <sup>d</sup>1 Cor. 16. 21. <sup>e</sup>2 Thess. 3. 17. <sup>f</sup>Heb. 13. 3. Amen. <sup>f</sup>Heb. 13. 23.

The salutation by the hand of me Paul: the apostle having them on his heart, and here (as elsewhere) likely having used an amanuensis to pen the body of his Epistle, to prevent fraud and forgery he doth subscribe his salutation and apostolical benediction with his own hand, which was well known, Rom. xvi. 22; 1 Cor. xvi. 21; Gal. vi. 11; 2 Thess. ii. 2; iii. 17; Philem. 19. Remember my bonds; importuning them to be very mindful of his imprisonment in their prayers, ver. 3; Heb. xiii. 3, imitating his constancy and patience if called to suffer; see Phil. i. 14; his sufferings being an excellent seal to the truth of his gospel, and his ardent affection to them and other Gentiles, for whose sake he was in bonds. Grace be with you; then earnestly praying that the special grace and favour of God the Father in the Lord Jesus Christ might be ever present with them: see Rom. xvi. 24; 1 Cor. xvi. 23, 24; Phil. iv. 23. In testimony of the reality of his desire, and assurance to be heard, he concludes (as elsewhere) with Amen.

¶ Written from Rome to the Colossians by Tychicus and Onesimus.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

THESSALONIANS

THE ARGUMENT

THE apostle Paul, being more especially the minister of the uncircumcision, and preacher of the Gentiles, in his progress through their cities and countries comes to Thessalonica, a chief city in Macedonia, for thither he was called in a vision, Acts xvi. 9. A man of Macedonia prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. In obedience to which he loosed from Troas, and came to Samothracia, from thence to Neapolis, and from thence to Philippi, where he abode certain days, ver. 12; and after passing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews, Acts xvii. 1, whither, as his manner was, he went, and preached that Jesus was the Christ. Whereupon some believed, and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. But the Jews which believed not raised a persecution against him, whereupon the brethren sent him and Silas away to Berea, ver. 10, where he also went and preached in the Jews' synagogue. But the unbelieving Jews of Thessalonica following him to Berea, he was conducted thence to Athens; and from thence, it is thought by some, he writes this Epistle to the Thessalonians, as is asserted in the postscript. Wherein he gives account of the great success of his preaching among them, for which he gives thanks to God, and makes an honourable mention of them in several places. But because they were new converts, and met with persecution from their own countrymen for the gospel's sake, the apostle was the more solicitous for them, to confirm them in the faith they had received. Whereupon he endeavoured once and again to come to them himself, but some way or other was hindered by Satan, as he tells them, chap. ii. 18. And therefore he sends to them Timothy in his room, to know their faith, and to establish them in it; who bringing an account thereof to him, and of their state, he writes this Epistle to them, according to the account he received by Timothy, and his own observation and knowledge while he was amongst them. Particularly,

1. He gives thanks for the eminency and operation of the graces of God in them, for the special presence of the Holy Ghost in his ministry amongst them, for their exemplary faith and conversation, chap. i.

2. He puts them in mind of his ministerial labours and personal conversation among them, of the malicious carriage of the Jews both against Christ and his apostles, and particularly against himself, whereof he knew they themselves were eye-witnesses; and declares his present rejoicing and glorying in them, chap. ii.

3. He next gives the reason of his sending Timothy to them, and speaks of the good account he gave of them, and the great refreshing and comfort he received thereby; and that he was greatly desirous to see their face; and prays that they might increase in love, and be established in holiness, chap. iii.

4. He then proceeds to exhort them about their personal walking, according to the directions and commandments he had given them from the Lord Jesus. And he instanceth in marriage chastity, righteousness in dealing, brotherly love, peaceable carriage, minding their callings, and diligence therein; and not to mourn inordinately for them that die in Jesus, as knowing that they shall rise from the dead, and meet the Lord in the air, as well and as early as those that shall be found alive at his coming, chap. iv.

5. He next describes the manner of Christ's coming, that it will be sudden and unexpected, whereby many will be surprised in their security; and therefore exhorts these Thessalonians to be watchful, sober, and armed for that day, which will be to them a day of salvation which they had been appointed to. And then he exhorts them to duties belonging to their church state, and communion; to have a high esteem for their guides and teachers; to warn, support, and comfort one another; not to retaliate evil for evil, &c. And so, in the close of the Epistle, recommends them to God in prayer, begging they would also pray for him, and salute one another, and communicate this Epistle to all the brethren; and so concludes with his usual salutation.

This is the substance of the Epistle.

As to the place whence it was written, we need not inquire, whether it was, as is expressed in the postscript, from Athens; or from Corinth, as Grotius and others imagine.

As to the time, it was surely not long after Paul's coming from Thessalonica; for indeed the present state of the Thessalonians did require that he should not long delay it, as his secret affection to them would not suffer it neither.

And as to the order of the Epistle, that that which is called the Second Epistle should be really the first, and by some carelessness misnamed and misplaced, is a bold, groundless conjecture of Grotius, and needs no confutation.

But this is more probable, that it was the first Epistle that the apostle wrote to any church, though other Epistles are in order set before it. The gospel was more early preached here than at Corinth or Rome, as appears in the Acts of the Apostles, and the success of it was more sudden and eminent than in any other city, and their persecutions more, whereby they might obtain an Epistle from the apostle before any other church.

CHAP. I

The salutation, 1. Paul showeth his thankful remembrance of the Thessalonians in his prayers on account of their faith, charity, and patience, 2—4; applauding them for their exemplary reception of the gospel, and improvement under it, 5—10.

A. D. 64. PAUL, and *Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: <sup>b</sup>Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Paul and Silvanus: why not Paul the apostle, as in some other Epistles? Because his apostleship was not doubted of by them, they had such an eminent seal of it upon their hearts; and there was no false apostles among them to question or deny it. And he joins Silvanus with him; whom Peter calls a faithful brother, 1 Pet. v. 12, and was a minister of the gospel joining with himself in that work among the Corinthians, 2 Cor. i. 19, as also among these Thessalonians, as appears, Acts xvii. 4, though there called by contraction of his name, or by another name, Silas; who is also mentioned, Acts xv. 22, as one chief among the brethren, and sent by the church of Jerusalem to accompany Paul and Barnabas to Antioch; and styled a prophet, ver. 32; and chosen by Paul to accompany him rather than Mark, ver. 40. And being an instrument with himself in converting these Thessalonians, and being also in their love and esteem, he joins his name with his own in the Epistle. And Timotheus; his name is Greek, for his father was a Greek, but his mother a Jewess, Acts xvi. 1, whose name was Eunice, 2 Tim. i. 5. He was brought up in the Jewish religion, instructed from a child by his parents in the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament, but instructed by Paul in the faith of Christ, whom therefore he calls his son in the faith, 1 Tim. i. 2, well reported of by the brethren, Acts xvi. 2; whom Paul laid hands upon with other elders to separate him to the work of the ministry, and the office of an evangelist, and thereby had a gift of God bestowed upon him, 2 Tim. i. 6; called by Paul his συγγυός, or work-fellow, Rom. xvi. 21, and particularly in the conversion of these Thessalonians, together with Silvanus, as appears,

Acts xvii. 14. He abode with them when Paul was persecuted from them, as there we find; and was sent to them from Athens afterwards by Paul to know their state, and strengthen their faith, chap. iii. 1, 2. And thereupon, that his Epistle might obtain the greater respect, he joins his name also in it; as he doth also in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, in his Epistle to the Philippians, and to the Colossians. He being Paul's companion in his ministry among the Gentiles in their first conversion, and a man of great name in the churches, he therefore so frequently joins his name with his own. And also that he might show their consent in the truth they delivered to the churches, which might the more confirm their faith in theirs. Unto the church of the Thessalonians; the church inhabiting Thessalonica, which was a chief city in Macedonia, a metropolis, famous for antiquity, largeness, pleasant situation, and commerce. Plin. lib. iv. 10. First called Thessalia, and being conquered by king Philip, was called Thessalonica. Philippi was also another great city of Macedonia, where was planted another church, to whom the apostle writes; whereby we may see that God had a great work for Paul here, when he called him in a vision to go to Macedonia. Which is in God the Father; not as the Son of God is in the Father, to be one substance and essence with him; nor as the human nature is in the Divine nature of Christ, to be one person with the Father; but it imports either their forsaking false gods and joining themselves to the worship of the true God, as in the 9th verse of this chapter, ye turned from idols to serve the living and true God; called therefore in a distinction from them, God the Father: or else their worshipping God according to the revelation made of him in the gospel, where he is called Father. But in a sense differing from what Plato or Homer, and other heathens, understood when they called the chief God, Father; either with respect to their inferior deities, of whom they styled him Father, or the works of creation proceeding from him as his offspring. And their being in him may yet imply more than this; which is their being joined to God in covenant, as their God and Father; and so believing in him, established upon him as their foundation, and as their centre resting in him. It may also further imply their union and communion with God through the Spirit, whereby the saints are said to abide in God, and to dwell in him, and he in them, 1 John ii. 27, 28, yea, to be in him who is the true God, 1 John v. 20. And in the Lord Jesus Christ; these two are put together, because there is no access to God the Father, no true worship of him, no union or communion with him, and so no being in him, but through Jesus Christ. And by both they might see the blessed state they were now brought to by the gospel; being before strangers to God the Father and Jesus Christ, but now in them. And though being in God the Father is first mentioned, yet in the order of nature we are first in Christ, and through him in God the Father. And the apostle the rather asserts this of them, because the gospel came to them not in word only, but in power. And hereby he gives them the character of a true church of Christ, what it is, at least what it ought to be; for to be in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ, imports more than literal knowledge, dogmatical faith, or outward profession. Grace be unto you, and peace; this the apostle calls his salutation with his own hand, which is my token, saith he, in every epistle, so I write, 2 Thess. iii. 17. Read 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2, &c. And under the Old Testament the Jew's usual salutation was, Peace be to you; under the New it is, Grace and peace. Peace comprehends all blessings; and grace or favour, the spring out of which they flow. The grace of God is now said to have appeared and to shine forth, Tit. ii. 11, and the church of God to be blest with all spiritual blessings, Eph. i. 3; so that now the apostle Paul salutes the churches with grace and peace; and the apostle Peter adds, Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, 2 Pet. i. 2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied, Jude 2. Or if we take grace for grace inherent in us, as sometimes it is taken; and peace for the inward tranquillity of mind, heart, and conscience; the text may bear it. Yet the former rather meant to you, to you that are in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ: not to infidels out of the church; grace to you, and peace. From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ; wherein are showed grace and peace in their original, from God; and not from God absolutely considered, but as our Father: as a Father he conveys the blessings of grace and peace to his children; but yet not immediately, but through Jesus Christ, as merited by his blood, and procured by his intercession. The Holy Ghost is not mentioned, though he must be understood; but he is rather considered as the actual conveyer of these blessings, than the original or procurer of them. And the three Persons work in the same order in the work of redemption as of creation, though more distinctly.

e Rom. 1. 8.
Eph. 1. 16.
1 Phil. 4.

2 ° We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers;

We give thanks to God; after his salutation he adds his thanksgiving and prayer for them. He saw in them an eminent seal of his apostleship, and effect of his ministry, and advantage to the gospel in their example, and so gives thanks. And his thanks is to God, because the success of the gospel was more from his blessing than his own ministry. Always; πάντοτε, that is, in a constant course; or affectu, though not actu, by a grateful sense he had of it continually upon his heart. For you all; for he had a good report of them all from Timothy, chap. iii. 6, and we find not one reproof in this First Epistle to any one, as in the Second. Making mention of you in our prayers; he adds also his prayer for them, wherein he made mention of them by name, as some understand the words, μετὰν ὑμῶν ποιούμενοι. Prayer and thanksgiving ought to go together, especially in the ministers of the gospel, and in the work of their ministry. And thus the apostle practised towards other churches also, as Rom. i. 8; Phil. i. 3, &c.

d ch. 2. 15.
e John 8. 29.
Gal. 5. 6.
ch. 3. 6.
2 Thess. 1.
3. 11.
Jan. 2. 17.
1 Heb. 16. 6.
1 Heb. 6. 10.

3 ° Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;

Remembering without ceasing; the occasion of his constant thanksgivings was his constant remembering of that grace of God that did so abound and work powerfully in them, not as if he had always an actual remembrance of it, but he did not forget it, the habitual sense of it was continually in his mind, and was often actually in his thoughts, especially in his approaches to God; and that is all which is meant in the original word, ἀδιάλειπτος. While the apostle was with them he saw this in them, but being now absent he remembered it; and with such a practical remembrance as stirred up his heart to thanksgiving. That is a good memory where is treasured up matter of prayer and thanksgiving. Your work of faith; or the work of the faith of you, that is, their faith and the work of it; whereby he intimates their faith was true and real; a faith unfeigned, 2 Tim. i. 5; the faith of God's elect, Tit. i. 1; and so distinguished from a dead faith, James ii. 26. They received the work in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost; they turned from idols to the service of the true God; they waited for the coming of Christ, &c.; here was the work of faith. And labour of love; a labour to weariness, as the word imports; laborious love. True faith hath its work, but love hath its labour; and when faith worketh by love it will work laboriously. Whereby the apostle declares the reality of their love, as well as their faith; it was unfeigned love, yea, fervent love, the labour of it went forth towards that true God whom they now worshipped, that Jesus Christ on whom they now believed, and to the saints that were now their fellow brethren, chap. iv. 10; and particularly to the apostle himself, as in other ways, so particularly in the pains and labour that some of them took to conduct and travel along with him from Thessalonica to Athens, Acts xvii. 15. And patience of hope: the apostle had mentioned before their faith and love, and now their hope; which are called the three cardinal or theological graces, all mentioned together by him, 1 Cor. xiii. 13; and by which we have all our communion with God on earth. And as their faith had its work, and love its labour, so their hope had its patience as the fruit and product of it. There is a patience with respect to an expected good, and with respect to an incumbent evil; and both produced by hope. The former is more properly called μακροθυμία, or length of mind, consisting in waiting for and expectation of some desired good; the latter is ὑπομονή, consisting in patient suffering, or abiding under some present evil. Their former patience is mentioned in the 10th verse of this chapter, they waited for his Son from heaven. The latter in the second chapter, 14th verse, Ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, as they (i. e. the churches of Judea) have of the Jews. This latter is here specially meant in the text; and for which he gives God thanks, 2 Thess. i. 4. And hope produceth the former patience, as it looks upon the expected good as that which will come at last; and the latter patience, as it looks upon the suffered evil as that which will not always continue. And when with respect to both these the mind of man is kept sedate and quiet, this is the patience of hope. In our Lord Jesus Christ; or, of our Lord Jesus Christ, as the efficient and author of this hope, and of their faith and its work, and love and its labour: or, in our Lord Jesus Christ, as here rendered; and so he is the object of this hope, 1 Cor. xv. 19; 1 Tim. i. 1. And by this the Christian's hope is distinguished from all other. All hope worketh patience. The husbandman's hope to receive the former and latter rain, maketh him wait for it with patience, James v. 7; the hope of the merchant, for the return of his adventure; the hope of the heir, for his inheritance; but the Christian's hope worketh patience as fixed upon Christ: other hope resteth upon the things of this lower visible world, but this is as an anchor sure and steadfast, entering within the veil, where Christ is entered as a forerunner, &c., Heb. vi. 19, 20. Faith and love both have Christ for their object; but considered as present; but the patience of hope in Christ respecteth something future, some revelation of him, and salvation by him, which is yet to come. If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it, Rom. viii. 25. In the sight of God and our Father: these words are not in the Syriac or Arabic version. And they respect either the apostle's thanksgiving and prayer for them, and his remembering the grace of God in them when he solemnly approached God's presence; for in all duties of worship we come before God, and present ourselves in his sight, and their graces he before mentioned, he remembered them to God, and presented them to his view: or they respect the omniscience of God, that their work of faith, labour of love, &c. were all in God's sight, and he was a delighted spectator of them: or, lastly, they may respect the sincerity of their hearts in all the actings of their faith, love, and hope; they did all this in the sight of God. As the apostle asserts his sincerity in his ministry by this, We speak as in the sight of God, 2 Cor. ii. 17. And thus the apostle mentions their graces, not as the heathen orators, who made great encomiums of virtue to the praise of men, but to the honour and praise of God.

4 Knowing, brethren || beloved, *your election of God.

Another ground of his thanksgiving for them. By the manner of their receiving the gospel, and the evident operation of the graces of God's Spirit, the apostle knew their election of God. We cannot know election as in God's secret decree, but as made manifest in the fruits and effects of it. As there is a knowledge of things a priori, when we argue from the cause to the effect, so a posteriori, when we argue from the effects to the cause. And thus the apostle came to know their election. Not, we hope it, or conjecture it, but we know it; and not by extraordinary revelation, but by evident outward tokens. And if the apostle knew this, why should we think they themselves might not know it also; and the words may be read, Ye knowing your election of God. And election imports the choosing of some out of others; for election cannot comprehend all. Some deny all eternal election of particular persons, and make it a temporal separation of persons to God in their conversion; but is not this separation from a pre-existing decree, God doing all things after the counsel of his own will? Eph. i. 11. Or, they will yield an eternal election of persons, but only conditional; one condition whereof is perseverance to the end. But the apostle asserts their election at present, before he saw their perseverance.

5 For <sup>h</sup>our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and <sup>i</sup>n the Holy Ghost, <sup>h</sup> and in much assurance; as <sup>l</sup>'ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

The former part of the verse asserts the reasons on which the apostle built the knowledge of their election, which is the manner of the gospel's coming to them. Our gospel; because preached by him and others to them; or intrusted with them ἑνεσθῆναι εἰς υἱᾶς. Came not unto you in word only, but also in power; confirmed by miracles, and had powerful operation upon your hearts. The power of God went along with our ministry, which did not with the false teachers, 1 Cor. iv. 19; and the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power, ver. 20. And in the Holy Ghost; either in gifts of the Holy Ghost which ye received, or that power which ye felt from the gospel upon your hearts was through the Holy Ghost: that they might not think it was their ministry, or the word alone, that had this power upon them. And in much assurance; ye giving full assent to the truth of the gospel, without doubting on your part; or preached to you with much confidence and assurance on our part. The former sense is best. And there is an allusion in the word to a ship riding upon the sea with a full gale, and not turned out of its course by a contrary wind. Your faith triumphed over the waves of all objections, disputes, or hesitations of mind. For doubtings of mind do much hinder the power of the word upon the heart. And this assurance they had from the Holy Ghost. As ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake; we did not carry ourselves among you like ordinary men, but by our labouriousness and zeal in preaching, our patient suffering for the gospel we preached, by our holy conversation, by our denial of ourselves in labouring with our hands amongst you, and by our great tenderness and affection to you, you might perceive that we were men sent of God, and our ministry was from heaven, and that we sought not yours, but you; whereby you had an advantage to entertain the gospel preached by us with greater assurance. And in all these things we had respect to your salvation. And for the truth of all this, he appeals to their own knowledge, and that mighty presence and assistance of God in their ministry among them; as they could not but perceive it, so it was all for their sake.

6 And <sup>m</sup>ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, <sup>n</sup>with joy of the Holy Ghost:

And ye became followers of us; as you received our gospel in the power of it into your hearts, so you showed it forth in your conversation, becoming followers or imitators of us in our patient and cheerful sufferings, and our holy and self-denying carriage. The doctrine of the gospel which we taught you, we practised it before your eyes, and you followed us therein; though before you walked according to the course of the world, and were followers of the religion and manners of the heathen. The examples of ministers ought to be teaching as well as their doctrine. And of the Lord; we have followed the example of Christ, and ye followed us. So that as you believed on Christ as your Saviour, so you followed his commands and examples as your Lord and Master; as he exhorts the Corinthians, Be ye followers of me, as I also am of Christ, 1 Cor. xi. 1. Having received the word in much affliction: though affliction and persecution attended the word, yet you received it; and this receiving was not only into your heads by knowledge of it, and into your hearts by an effectual believing it, but into your practice by a walking according to it. For receiving the word, in the Scripture phrase, comprehends all this in it. With joy of the Holy Ghost; though afflictions attended you, they did not deject your spirits, but you had joy in your hearts by the Holy Ghost; who usually doth give forth his joy most to the saints when under suffering, which is one instance of the gospel's coming to them not in word only, but in the Holy Ghost, as was said before. The glad tidings of the gospel did more comfort them, than all their sufferings did cast them down.

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia.

As ye followed our example, and of the Lord, so ye were examples yourselves, and such great examples that influenced all the believers both of Macedonia and Achaia. Your example reached beyond the confines of Thessalonica, unto the believers of all Macedonia, yea farther, to the believers of all Achaia. And though the Philippians of Macedonia received the gospel before you, as appears in the story, Acts xvi., yet ye exceeded them, and became examples to them in your faith and patience, &c.

8 For from you <sup>o</sup>sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also <sup>p</sup>in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

How could they be examples to persons so remote, amongst whom they had no converse? The apostle here resolves it. It was by way of report. Things that are eminent, and done in eminent places, such as Thessalonica was, easily spread abroad, either by merchants, travellers, or correspondence by letters. And this report is compared to a sound that is heard afar off, that made an echo, as the word implies. And that which sounded out from you was the word of the Lord. The word is said to sound by the voice of the preacher, 1 Cor. xiv. 8, 9; Gal. vi. 6, and by the practice of the hearers. The mighty power and efficacy of it was made known abroad, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place; not strictly every where, but here and there, up and down in the world. As it is said of the apostles' ministry, Their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world, Rom. x. 18; the report of the gospel went farther than the preachers of it, and their receiving the gospel sounded abroad far and near. And not only the word, but your faith to God-ward is spread abroad, ἔξεσθῆλυθεν. Your faith being so eminent, it was spoken of far and near. That ye believed so soon at our first entrance, as ver. 9; and though we had been shamefully treated at Philippi a little before our coming to you, and persecution followed us and the gospel we preached to you, yet ye believed, and your faith was eminent in the fruits and operations of it also, as was mentioned before, and is afterwards in the Epistle. And it was faith God-ward; it rested not upon men, no, nor only the Man Christ Jesus, whom we preached to you, but upon God himself, though through Christ ye became worshippers of the true God, and believed on him with an exemplary faith. So that we need not to speak any thing, either of the manner of our preaching the gospel, or of your manner of receiving it. Where men's deeds speak and commend m 1 Cor. 4. 16, & 31. 1. Phil. 3. 17. ch. 2. 14. 2 Thess. 3. 9. n Acts 5. 41. Heb. 10. 24.

o Rom. 10. 18.

p Rom. 1. 8. 2 Thess. 1. 4.

men, words may be silent. And the apostle might have thought it needful to have divulged these things abroad for the advantage of the gospel, and the examples of others, if he had not been prevented by the report already spread abroad. The good examples of the people may ease their ministers of some labour in spreading the gospel.

9 For they themselves shew of us
q ch. 2. 1. what manner of entering in we had unto r 1 Cor. 12. 2. you, and how ye turned to God from Gal. 4. 8. idols to serve the living and true God ;

For they themselves show of us, what manner of entering in we had unto you : the believers of Macedonia and Achaia do speak of these things ἀπαγγέλλουσιν, openly, whereby it is evident the word of the Lord sounded forth to them from you, and they, without any information from us, declare the great entertainment you gave us and our gospel at our first entrance among you. And how ye turned to God from idols ; particularly your forsaking your former idolatry, when you worshipped idols, that were either the images or shapes of the true God, formed by men ; or men whom they deified, and set up as gods, and worshipped them and their images ; or inanimate creatures, as sun, moon, and stars, or whatever creature they found beneficial to them, the heathens made idols of them. These ye turned from : though it was by the power of God and the gospel upon your hearts, yet it was an act of your own. And though it was the worship of these idols you had been trained up in, and was generally practised, yet you turned from it. And as to the manner of it, how ye turned from these idols, as in the text ; that is, how readily, how sincerely, how speedily, with a holy indignation of them : or, πῶς, how, that is, by what means ; meaning by our entrance amongst you, and the power of our gospel upon your hearts, according to that prophecy, Isa. ii. 20, 21, which refers to gospel times. To serve the living and true God ; to serve with religious worship proper to God ; though the papists would confine the Greek word δαλεῦσθαι to some lower worship they give to saints or angels ; or it may signify the whole service of God. And here the apostle speaks of their religion in the positive part, the former being negative. The living God, so called in opposition to idols, which were either images without life, or inanimate creatures, or men that were dead whom they worshipped ; or living, because God is so eminently, being life essentially, originally, eternally, immutably, and derivatively to all things that live. As I live, saith the Lord, as if none had life but himself, Isa. xlix. 18, &c. And called the true God in opposition to false gods. The heathen gods had no deity but what men gave them by worshipping them. They were not gods by nature. Gal. iv. 8, and so not true. And as these things are spoken to show the power of the gospel, so in a way of commendation, that they did not only turn from idols, but did serve the true God ; many profess the true God, but serve him not. As also they denote their privilege, that they served a God that could save them, which their idols could not.

10 And *to wait for his Son †from q Rom. 2. 7. heaven, †whom he raised from the dead, Phil. 3. 20. even Jesus, which delivered us ‡from the
Tit. 2. 13. wrath to come.
2 Pet. 3. 12.
Rev. 1. 7.
† Acts 1. 11.
ch. 4. 16.
‡ Thess. 1. 7.
u Acts 2. 24. x Matt. 3. 7. Rom. 5. 9. ch. 5. 9.

And to wait for his Son from heaven : this is added to show the further power of the gospel upon them, they had not only faith to God-ward, as was said before, but to Christ-ward. They did not only turn to the true God, in opposition to the heathen, but to the Son of God as the true Christ, in opposition to the unbelieving Jews. For though he was the Son of David after the flesh, yet he was the Son of God also ; and not by creation, as the angels are called the sons of God, nor by adoption, as the saints are, but by eternal generation, though the Man Christ Jesus by his personal union is the Son of God. And their faith respecting the Son of God, was their waiting for him from heaven ; not that their faith consisted only in this, but it suited their present state of affliction to wait for Christ's coming as a deliverer and rewarder, therefore here mentioned by the apostle ; and their faith, hope, love, and patience may all be included in it. They believed that he was gone to heaven, and would come again, which are two great articles of the Christian faith. And though there was nothing in sense or reason, or any tradition, to persuade them of it, yet they believed it upon the apostle's preaching it. And though the time of his coming was unknown to them, yet their faith presently put them upon waiting for it. And the certain time of his coming is kept secret, that the saints in every age may wait for it. Though he will not come till the end of the world, yet the saints ought to be influenced with the expectation of it in all generations that do precede it. It is to their advantage to wait for it, though they live not to see him come. And here the apostle concludes his account of the glorious effects of the gospel upon these Thessalonians ; that which follows in the chapter is by way of doctrine concerning the Son of God. Whom he raised from the dead ; he mentions his resurrection from the dead after his sonship ; for he was there declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4. And, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, applied to Christ's resurrection, Acts xiii. 33. Or the apostle mentions it to confirm their hope of his coming again. Had they heard of his death, and not of his rising again, they could not have expected his coming from heaven. It is used as an argument by Paul to the Athenians, that Christ will come again to judge the world by God's raising him from the dead, Acts xvii. 31. And these believers also might comfortably expect their own resurrection, seeing that he himself is already risen, at his coming ; and so be supported under their present sufferings, though they should reach to the killing of the body. Even Jesus : he that was before called the Son of God, is here called Jesus, or Saviour ; a name that might more endear him to them, than by calling him the Son of God. And he mentions a great act of his salvation in the next words, and therefore here properly called Saviour ; and when he comes, he will come to his people's salvation, Heb. ix. 28. Which delivered us from the wrath to come : if we read the word as our translation hath it, delivered, it looks to what Christ hath already done and suffered for our deliverance. If in the present tense, as the Greek now hath it, it implies a continued act : he is delivering us from the wrath to come, either by his intercession, or by supplies of his grace delivering us from the power of sin and temptations, and so preserving us in a state of salvation. Or if we read the word in the future tense, who will deliver us, as we often find the present tense both in the Hebrew and Greek to have a future signification, it refers to his last coming ; and therefore the saints need not be afraid of the terror of that day, but wait for it ; for though the wrath to come is greater than ever yet brake forth in the world, Rom. ii. 5, yet a drop of it shall not fall upon them. Though they may meet with temporal afflictions and chastisements at present, and may be assaulted by the wrath of men, yet they shall be free from the wrath to come. And this will be done by a powerful rescue of Christ, as the word imports, ῥυόμενον, notwithstanding all the danger and difficulty that may attend it.

CHAP. II

Paul setteth forth in what manner he had preached the gospel to the Thessalonians, 1—12, and they had received and suffered for it, 13—16. He showeth his desire of coming to them, and the cause which had hitherto prevented him, 17, 18 ; testifying his joy and satisfaction in them, 19, 20.

FOR *yourselves, brethren, know our †ch. 1. 5, 9. entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain :

For yourselves ; αὐτοί, which some read, they themselves, &c. ; and then the words refer to the believers in Macedonia and Achaia, mentioned before, chap. i. 9, 10. Or, if we read, ye yourselves, he appeals to their own experience and knowledge. Know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain ; κενόν, was not vain, or empty, without fruit ; our very first preaching had great success. Though the gospel is always either the savour of life unto life, or of death unto death, yet if no good fruit spring from a man's ministry, it may be said to be vain ; as the prophet complains,

I have laboured in vain, Isa. xlix. 4. Or, as some, our preaching was not about things vain and unprofitable.

2 But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at <sup>b</sup>Philippi, <sup>c</sup>we were bold in our God <sup>d</sup>to speak unto you the Gospel of God <sup>e</sup>with much contention.

Here the apostle begins a new discourse, giving an account more particularly of himself, and of his carriage among them, which he mentions as a subordinate reason why his ministry was so successful; for the evil example of ministers often spoils the success of their ministry. And what he speaks would savour of vain-glory, but that he had therein a holy end; as he excuseth his boasting to the Corinthians and other churches upon the same account. And he first mentions his carriage in the discharge of his ministry among them. A little before his coming to them he had suffered, and was shamefully entreated, at Philippi, where he and Silas were beaten, thrust into an inner prison, and set in the stocks as a couple of villains, Acts xvi. 23, 24; yet this did not damp their spirits, nor discourage their coming and preaching to them. We were bold; εραρρησιασάμεθα, we used great confidence and liberty of speech, we were not afraid to speak the gospel freely, notwithstanding our sufferings. The same he asserts, 2 Cor. iii. 12. And this becomes the gospel, and will be to the advantage of it, and is most commendable in a time of persecution. In our God; depending upon his protection and help, who is our God, and who sent and called us to the work of the gospel, and particularly in Macedonia; and to show he was not bold beyond his call and duty, or the rules of truth and sobriety. To speak unto you the gospel of God; the glad tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ; which gospel, though we have called it ours because preached by us, yet it is the gospel of God, as being the original author and ordainer of it. With much contention; with much agony: which is either to be taken actively, for their great earnestness and zeal in speaking, as Luke xiii. 24; or passively, for the perils they encountered therein, Phil. i. 30: by both which the Thessalonians might be induced, though not enabled, to believe. As he elsewhere calls the ministry a warfare, 1 Tim. i. 18, and a fight, 2 Tim. iv. 7, (the very word used in the text,) with respect to the difficulties and dangers attending it, or the opposition of false teachers; they contending for the faith, Jude 3.

3 For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile:

Our exhortation; whereby he means either the whole gospel he preached, by a synecdoche, or particularly that which is hortatory; what was first taught doctrinally was followed with exhortations to faith and practice. The decrees of the council at Jerusalem are called an exhortation, Acts xv. 31; when Paul, and others with him, were desired to preach in the synagogue, the rulers said, If ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on, Acts xiii. 15; but taken more strictly, Rom. xii. 8, in a distinction from prophecy and teaching. Was not of deceit; this refers either to the doctrine taught by them; it was true, not fallacious, not a devised fable, and did not issue out of any error of judgment; and so the apostle gives a reason why they were so bold in preaching it, because they knew it was all truth. Or to their sincerity in preaching; We did not use any impostures, we designed not to seduce men, as the false apostles did, but we really sought your conversion and salvation. Nor of uncleanness; εξ ἀκαθαρσίας. If this refers to the doctrine preached, it denotes the purity of it, which did not tend to gratify the flesh, as that of the Nicolaitanes and Libertines, &c. If we refer it to the manner of their preaching, it denotes the purity of their hearts; they were not acted by any impure lusts in their preaching, as covetousness, pride, or vain-glory. Nor in guile; this seems to be mentioned before, and therefore some expositors refer the two former expressions to the matter that they taught, and this only to the manner, which is most probable. They had no cunning designs upon them, to make merchandise of them, as the false apostles did; but approve their hearts to God, and make themselves manifest to every man's conscience in the sight of God. And the apostle allegeth all this as a further reason of his boldness in preaching, for sincerity breeds boldness; or as some cause also of his great success, for uprightness is usually attended with a blessing; or as an argument to these Thessalonians to continue their affection to him, and to abide in the doctrine preached to them, for suspicion of insincerity in the preacher hinders the efficacy of the word upon the people.

4 But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel: this verse gives the reasons of what the apostle spake in the former about his sincerity. The one is taken from his trust; God intrusted him with the gospel, to preserve it from corruption by error, therefore his exhortation or doctrine was not of error or deceit, but he preached the gospel in simplicity and purity; he did not, he durst not, adulterate or corrupt it, for it was committed to his trust; as he calls the gospel his trust, 1 Tim. i. 11. And the sense of this great trust kept him also from uncleanness and guile in the discharge of his ministry. And he had this trust by God's appointment or approbation, God approved of him for this trust, and that upon knowledge and judgment, as the word signifies, δεδοκμασάμεθα, and as he speaks, 1 Tim. i. 12, he judged me faithful, putting me into the ministry. Not so before his conversion, being a persecutor, blasphemer, &c.; but God fitted him by extraordinary revelations, gifts, graces, and made him faithful, and then put him into the ministry, and intrusted him with the gospel. And because he speaks in the plural number, we were allowed of God, &c., therefore Silvanus and Timotheus, yea, and other apostles and ministers, are to be understood as comprehended with him in this trust. Even so we speak; that is, as men thus approved of by God, and intrusted with the gospel, that we may faithfully discharge our trust, and be able to give a good account of it, as stewards of their trust, 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2. Not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts: this is another reason of their faithfulness and integrity, mentioned in the foregoing verse, which was the sense of God's omniscience, knowing and trying their hearts. Trying imports more than mere knowing, it is a knowledge upon search and proof, as gold and silver are known by the touchstone. And though God trieth the hearts of all men, yet especially such as are intrusted with the gospel. Or these last words may have a more immediate reference to the foregoing; we speak not as pleasing men, because we know God trieth our hearts. And this confirms what he said before concerning his exhortation, that it was not of deceit, uncleanness, or guile. If it had, he would have so preached as to please men; the opinions, the lusts, the practices of men. In some cases the apostle did seek to please men, 1 Cor. x. 33, even as I please all men in all things. But he pleased not men when it stood in competition with his pleasing God; we speak, not as pleasing men, but God. Otherwise the rule takes place with all, Rom. xv. 2, Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification. Ministers of the gospel are Christ's servants by office, and as servants, they are to please their own Master. If I pleased men, saith Paul, I should not be the servant of Christ, Gal. i. 10. And this made the apostle have regard not only to his doctrine and outward conversation, but the inward aim and intentions of his heart, as knowing God tried his heart. And expecting the reward of his labours more from God than men, he therefore sought to please God rather than men, and approve his heart unto him. And herein he reflects upon those false apostles that sought to please men, preached up the law of Moses to please the Jews; or others, that preached and abused the doctrine of the gospel to gratify the lusts of men.

5 For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; God is witness:

In the former verses the apostle had asserted his integrity more generally; here, and in the next verse, he instanceth in particulars. He vindicates his ministry from the guilt of three vices which too often attend it; flattery, covetous-

<sup>b</sup> Act. 16. 22.
<sup>c</sup> eph. 1. 5.
<sup>d</sup> Act. 17. 2.
<sup>e</sup> Phil. 1. 30.
Col. 2. 1.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Cor. 7.
<sup>h</sup> 26. 1 Tim.
<sup>i</sup> 11. 12.
<sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 2.
<sup>l</sup> 17. Gal. 2. 7.
<sup>m</sup> Tit. 1. 3.
<sup>n</sup> 1 Gal. 1. 10.
<sup>o</sup> Rom. 8. 27.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Cor. 7. 2.
ver. 5.
<sup>2</sup> Pet. 1. 16.

<sup>1</sup> Act. 20. 33.
<sup>2</sup> Cor. 2. 17.
<sup>3</sup> 2. 4. 2. 4. 7.
<sup>4</sup> 2. 12. 17.
<sup>5</sup> Rom. 1. 9.

ness, and vain-glory. For neither at any time used we flattering words: first, flattery, ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας; or, we were not, i. e. conversant, in a word of flattery, as in the Greek; our word was not a word of flattery, as if we sought to please men. When we ascribe to men good things that they have not, or above what they have, or when we applaud or extenuate the evil that is in them, we flatter them. This is reproved often in the false prophets of the Old Testament, Isa. xxx. 10; Ezek. xiii. 10, 18; and in the false teachers in the New. The flattery of ministers is, their preaching of smooth things, rather to please than profit; when they avoid just reproofs, and searching truths, and close applications, that they may not displease; and affect wisdom of words, and rhetorical discourses, that they may please: when they either conceal some part of truth, or pervert it, that people may think their doings better than they are, or their state better than it is. As ye know: their words in preaching being an overt act, they themselves could judge of, and therefore the apostle doth appeal to their own knowledge in that. Nor a cloak of covetousness, God is witness: in what they could not know, which was their inward aims and designs, he appeals to God, which is a form of swearing; and in all oaths men solemnly do concern God therein; the same in effect that is called protesting, 1 Cor. xv. 31. And that wherein he thus appeals is, that he had no covetous design in his ministry, which he calls a cloak of covetousness; which lies either in undue withholding what we have, or inordinate desire of more. The latter is here meant, as the Greek word imports. And the word cloak is a metaphor as the word is translated here, and John xv. 22: as that covers the inner garments, so when bad designs are covered with specious pretences, this we call a cloak. The word in the text, ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας, is often used, Matt. xxiii. 14; Mark xii. 40; Luke xx. 47, and sometimes rendered occasion, but for the most part pretence, and so to be understood here; and in heathen authors sometimes used for accusation. And this is contrary to what is said of false prophets. 2 Pet. ii. 3, Through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you.

6<sup>a</sup> Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

Nor of men sought we glory: this is the third vice he vindicates his ministry from. The word glory first signifies some excellency in any subject; secondly, this excellency as displaying and manifesting itself; thirdly, the opinion and esteem thereof in the minds of men, as the Greek word imports, and so taken in the text: we did not seek men's honour, high esteem, or applause; we sought them not in the inward bent of our thoughts, or the studies of our mind, nor in the outward course of our ministry and conversation, to form them so as to gain glory from men. Though honour and esteem was their due from men, yet they did not seek it. Honour is to follow men, men not to follow it. This Christ reproved in the scribes and Pharisees, that in their prayers, alms, fasting, affected habits, and titles, they sought the praise of men, Matt. vi. How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only? John v. 44. Every man ought, with reference to actions honourable and praiseworthy, and a good name is a blessing; but to seek honour, that is the evil. And as the apostle did not seek it himself, so he forbids it to others. Gal. v. 26, Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, &c.; and notes some false teachers as guilty of it, 2 Cor. x. 12. It is a vice directly opposite to humility, unbecoming a man as man, and highly dishonourable to God, and contrary to the gospel. The heathens cherished it as the spur to great achievements, it is one of Tully's rules for the institution of princes; but the Christian religion, that gives all glory to God, condemns it. And yet we may seek the vindication of our name, when thereby we may provide for the honour of the name of God, as the apostle Paul often did.

Neither of you, nor yet of others; he adds this to show that this was their general practice among others as well as these Thessalonians; they were not guilty of flattery, covetous designs, or seeking the glory of men among any churches, or in any place; their practice in their ministry was uniform, and in all places upright and sincere. When we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ; or, we were able to be in, or for, a burden, a Hebraism. By burden some understand authority: q. d. We might have used our ministerial authority more than we did, whereby to get greater honour and respect to our persons among you. And indeed all authority and honour have their weight and burden. Others by burden understand maintenance. And then he means, we might have been chargeable to you, according to the power given by Christ to his apostles to reap carnal things from them to whom they sowed spiritual things. And at the first sending them forth in Judea, it was so ordained by Christ, that they should be maintained at the people's charge: see 1 Cor. ix. But they were so far from covetousness, that they took not all that was their due, and what they might of their outward substance, and from seeking their own honour, that they did not use what authority they might to procure it among them; for they laboured with their hands night and day, that they might not be chargeable, ver. 9; though they might have challenged not only maintenance, but honourable maintenance, 1 Tim. v. 17.

7 But we were gentle among you, as a nurse cherisheth her children:

But we were gentle among you: he next gives account of their carriage more positively: and first he speaks of their gentleness among them; ἡπιον, the Latin takes it for νιπτιον, infants, we were as infants to you, as nurses are as infants with their infants, and children with children. This is one of the fruits of the Spirit, Gal. v. 22; it stands opposite to moroseness, austerity, and roughness of temper, and is commendable in all, especially in ministers, 2 Tim. ii. 24; and was eminent in Christ, as was prophesied of him, Isa. xl. 11; xlii. 3; and the contrary he reproveth in James and John, Luke ix. 54, 55. It springs from humility, meekness, and patience; as the contraries are pride, passion, and frowardness. In some cases sharpness and severity may be needful; prudence is to direct, therefore, our carriage. The apostle had now to do with young converts, and under the trial of persecution; and not apostates and obstinate sinners, against whom we find he was sometimes severe and sharp, as Jude required, ver. 22, 23. Even as a nurse cherisheth her children; and he represents this gentleness by that of a nurse to her children; not of a hired nurse, but a mother nurse, Numb. xi. 12, who useth all tenderness towards them, beareth with their frowardness, condescends to the meanest offices and employments, and draws out her breasts to them, and lays them in her bosom, and all this to cherish them. And she doth this not out of hope of gain, but out of motherly affection. Thus, saith the apostle, were we gentle among you. As he converted them to Christ, he was their spiritual father, but his gentleness was like that of a mother, nursing her own children. He considered their weakness in their first believing, and bore with it; their many infirmities, temptations, afflictions that were upon them, had compassion over them, and supported them under them, and cherished them with the sincere milk of gospel truths; and he did all this not for gain, but out of sincere affection and a willing mind. Some extend the word we render nurse to the brute creatures themselves, especially birds, that hatch, and then cherish their young with the warmth of their own body, and care in feeding them: τρόφος, the word signifies a feeder, and so may have a more general signification: see Job xxxix. 14.

8 So being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

A further account of their behaviour among them. The former verse showed their great gentleness, this their great love; expressed, first, in their affectionate desire of them; as the Latin phrase, cupidissimus fui, imports love to the person. And it was the desire of their salvation, first in their believing, and then perseverance and progress in faith. It was themselves, not their goods, they desired; as Paul elsewhere saith, We seek not yours, but you. Secondly, in n John 5. 41,

44, & 12. 43.
1 Tim. 5. 17
o 1 Cor. 9.
4, 8, 12, 16,
2 Cor. 10. 1,
2, 10, 11,
& 13. 10.
2 Thess. 3. 9. Philem. 8, 9. | Or, used authority. p 2 Cor. 11. 9. & 12. 13, 14. 2 Thess. 3. 8. q 1 Cor. 9. 1, 2, 6.

p 1 Cor. 2. 3.
& 9. 22.
2 Cor. 13. 4.
2 Tim. 2. 24.

r Rom. 1. 11.
& 15. 29.

s 2 Cor. 12.
13.

the effect of it, which was imparting the gospel to them, whereby they might be saved; which is amplified by two things: 1. That they did this willingly, not out of mere necessity, with a backward mind; the word is εὐδοκούμεν, we were well-pleased to preach, and with complacency of mind. 2. That they were willing to impart their souls to them; that is, to hazard their lives for them in preaching to them, as Acts xvi.; the same word signifying both the soul and life, and he that dies for another gives his life to them. Or, it may refer to their labours and hardships, whereby they endangered their lives for them, labouring night and day, ver. 9. Others understand the words only as an expression of their great affection to them; a man imparts his soul to the person whom he entirely loves, as Isa. lviii. 10; when a man gives relief to a person in want out of love and compassion, he imparts his soul in what he gives. So did they in the gospel thus preached. And the word imparting is used to express relief to the wants of the body, Rom. xii. 8; and the gospel is the bread of life to give relief to the soul, and used in this sense also, Rom. i. 11. The apostle may here further allude to mothers that are nurses, who impart not only other food, but their milk, which is their blood, to cherish their children. Ye were dear unto us; or, ye have been beloved of us; wherein the apostle more plainly declares their love to them as the ground of all their labours and perils in preaching to them; yea, it may reach to all that he had said before concerning their carriage among them, all was from love.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for labouring night and day, *because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God.

To make good what he had asserted before about their integrity in preaching the gospel, that it was without covetousness, and vain-glory, &c., and about their great affection to them therein, he appeals to their own memory. Our labour and travail: labour, in what we suffered, attended with care and solicitude of mind, as the word imports; and travail, in what we did, attended with weariness, as some distinguish of the words. For labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you; this refers to some bodily labour they used, which I find not mentioned in the story while they were at Thessalonica, though Paul did practise it at Corinth, Acts xviii. 3. To prevent scandal and misconstruction that may arise from receiving maintenance, and in case of the church's poverty, the apostle would refuse it; but without respect to these he pleaded it at his due, 1 Cor. ix. 1, &c. And his refusing was no work of supererogation, as the papists plead hence; for in such cases it was a duty with respect to the honour of his ministry; so that it ought not to pass into a rule, either that ministers in no case may labour with their hands to get their bread, or that they ought so to do always, as some would conclude hence, and preach freely. However, he commends them that they forgot not the labour and travail they underwent for their sake, and that both night and day, which implies assiduity and diligence, as chap. iii. 10; Psal. i. 2; Luke ii. 37; and so to be taken here. Though it may signify their spending part of the night as well as the day in some bodily labour, (the same we read 2 Thess. iii. 8.) yet not to be understood as if they spent the whole night and day therein; for how then could they have preached the gospel to them, as he here addeth; and they would take nothing of maintenance from any of them, or be chargeable or burdensome to them; not from the poor, to whom it might really be a burden, nor from the rich, who yet might be backward, and account it a burden.

10 Ye are witnesses, and God also, *how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

The former verses gave account of their carriage in the ministry, this here of their Christian conversation; holily, with respect to God; justly, with respect to duties commanded towards men; and unblameably, in denying themselves in lawful liberty to avoid all occasion of blame from any of them. And for the truth of this he appeals to themselves; yea, to God himself. There is the witness of men, and the witness of conscience greater than of men, and the witness of God greatest of all, 1 John iii. 20. He appeals to them as witnesses about their external actions, and to God about the integrity of their hearts; and he doth this not in a way of boasting, but to be an example to them, and as a further reason of the great success of his ministry. The conversation of ministers hath great influence upon the success of their labours.

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children,

Besides his public ministry, he dealt more privately with them, as Acts xx. 20; and that in a way of exhortation and comfort; by exhortation to quicken them, and by comfort to support them under troubles both outward and inward. And he did this as a father to his children, with much earnestness, compassion, and love, yea, and authority also. He was before represented as a mother, ver. 7; and here as a father, whose work and duty is to exhort, counsel, and comfort his children privately at home; so did he as well as publicly, for he was their spiritual father, as he begat them to Christ by the gospel, as he tells the Corinthians also, 1 Cor. iv. 15. As before he represented his gentleness, so here his fatherly care. Or, at their first conversion he carried it with gentleness as a mother, but afterwards used his fatherly authority. And in this he appeals to their own knowledge also, calling their own consciences to bear witness to what he speaks, that it might leave the greater impression upon them.

12 *That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

In the Greek text the word charged, mentioned in the former verse, begins this verse; μαρτυρούμενοι, it signifies testifying: some read it, we obtested, which is as much as beseeching; others, contested, which is a severe charge, containing a threatening, as Exod. xix. 21, Charge the people, saith God to Moses; in the margin, Contest the people, or wish the people. It is a charge here which the apostle gives solemnly in the name of God to them, calling in the witness of God to it. That ye would walk worthy of God; that is, suitably to the nature of that God who is the true and living God. That you may walk like a people who belong to such a God, and express the virtues of this God in your conversation, 1 Pet. ii. 9; or, suitably to the great mercy and glorious privileges you have received from him, which he mentions in the following words. Who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory; or, who is calling you; then by God's kingdom and glory we must understand the future state of heaven: though they were not yet possessed of it, yet by the gospel God had called them to it, as Phil. iii. 14; 1 Pet. v. 10. Or, who hath called you, as we read it; then he means their present state since they believed and obeyed the call of the gospel, they were brought thereby into God's kingdom and glory; or, his glorious kingdom, wherein the glory of God, especially the glory of his grace, mercy, love, and wisdom, eminently shine forth. Hereupon a Christian's calling is termed a high calling, Phil. iii. 14; a heavenly calling, Heb. iii. 1. And they being called by God out of Satan's kingdom into this glorious kingdom, the apostle chargeth them to walk worthy of God and this calling, by having a conversation suitable thereunto, Eph. iv. 1; Col. i. 10; to walk according to the laws of this glorious kingdom they were already brought into, and suitably to the glory of heaven that they were called to the hope of.

13 For this cause also thank we God

*without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it *not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

The apostle having given the reasons on his part and his fellow ministers', why the gospel had such effect upon them, he next proceeds to show the reason on their part, for which he giveth God thanks. And that is, from their manner of u Acts 20. 34.

1 Cor. 4. 12.
2 Cor. 11. 9.
2 Thess. 3. 8.
x 2 Cor. 12.
15. 14.

12 *That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

2 ch. 5. 24. 2 Thess. 2. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 9.

a Eph. 4. 1.
Phil. 1. 27.
Col. 1. 10.
ch. 4. 1.
b 1 Cor. 1.
2 Tim. 1. 9.

7 ch. 1. 8.
2 Cor. 7. 2.
2 Thess. 3. 7.

c ch. 1. 3.
d Mat. 10. 40.
Gal. 4. 14.
2 Pet. 3. 2.

receiving it; though this, as well as the former, are but subordinate reasons. First, they heard it; some will not do that; and therefore the apostle here calls it a word of hearing, a Hebraism, as Rom. x. 17, Faith cometh by hearing. 2. They received it: the word importeth a receiving with affection, as Joseph the virgin Mary to his wife, Matt. i. 20. 3. They received it not as the word of men, which we receive sometimes doubting, sometimes disputing it; or believing it only with a human faith, upon grounds of reason, as the dictates of philosophy, or on the reports of men, and without the impression of the authority of God upon our minds; or when we receive the word of God because of the eloquence or learning of the preacher, and the affection we bear to him, or admiration of his person; or, as the papists, we believe it because the church believeth it. But as it is in truth, the word of God; with a divine faith, ready subjection of our souls to it, and with reverent attention, as a word that is from heaven; which the apostle positively asserts in way of parenthesis. As it is in truth, or truly, they believed, so he dispersed the word to them, and so they received it. And for this cause he gave thanks to God. Having mentioned before the subordinate reasons of the efficacy of the word, he now mentions the principal, which is God himself. That any receive the word as the word of God, it is not from the preachers so much as from God. And it is a great cause of thanksgiving to God, when ministers find a people receive the word with a Divine faith, which is not done without Divine grace: then they see the fruit of their ministry, for which they ought to give thanks. Which effectually worketh also in you that believe: the powerful working of God is usually expressed by this word, Eph. i. 19; Phil. ii. 13; and the working of Satan also, Eph. ii. 2. Men possessed with the devil are called energumens. And where the word is believed and received as the word of God, there it hath this energy, or worketh effectually, so as to promote love, repentance, self-denial, mortification, comfort, and peace, &c. The apostle had mentioned before their work of faith, labour of love, patience of hope, chap. i. 3; and all from hence, their receiving the word as the word of God, and so retaining it.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers
 e Gal. 1. 22. * of the churches of God which in Judæa f Acts 17. 5, are in Christ Jesus: for 'ye also have 13. suffered like things of your own country-g Heb. 10. men, <sup>e</sup> even as they have of the Jews :

This proves the assertion of the foregoing verse, as the illative for doth show. They were followers of the churches in Judæa, which showed the word wrought in them effectually. Though the greatest part of the Jews believed not, yet many did, and hereupon we read of churches in Judæa. Though there was before but one national church, yet now in gospel times the churches were many. And believing in Christ they are called churches in him, gathered together in his name, into his institutions, and by his Spirit; and these Thessalonians became followers or imitators of them, or in the same circumstances with them. The churches among the Jews were the first planted, and the Gentile churches followed them, conforming to the faith, worship, and order that was first in them, yea, and imitating their faith and patience in suffering. For ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen; the Jews that believed suffered from the unbelieving Jews of their own country; so did these Thessalonians. But whether the apostle means only the Gentiles of Thessalonica, or the Jews that dwelt there and were born among them, is uncertain; for the persecution mentioned Acts xvii. was chiefly from the Jewish synagogue, though the Gentiles might also join with them therein. Even as they have of the Jews: they suffered as the churches of Judæa, namely, in the same kind, as Heb. x. 32—34; and in the same cause, and with the same joy, constancy, and courage. And here Christ's words are fulfilled, that a man's enemies shall be those of his own house, Matt. x. 36.

15 <sup>h</sup> Who both killed the Lord Jesus, h Acts 2. 23. and <sup>i</sup> their own prophets, and have || peri Acts 3. 15. & 5. secuted us; and they please not God, k Acts 7. 52. and are contrary to all men :

<sup>l</sup> Or, chased us out. k Esth. 3. 8.
 l Who both killed the Lord Jesus; no wonder then though they have persecuted you, and the believing Jews their countrymen. They killed the Lord Jesus by the hands of Pilate, crying, Crucify him, crucify him. Though it was by God's determinate counsel, and the Roman power, yet by the Jews' malice they killed him; Matt. xxi. 38, This is the heir; let us kill him. And their own prophets; of their own nation, and directed and sent particularly to them of God; so that it was no new thing in them thus to do. Not that these individual Jews who persecuted Paul killed the prophets, but they were of the same nation, the same blood, and of the same spirit with them, and were the children of them that killed the prophets, as our Saviour charged them, Matt. xxiii. 31. The spirit of persecution was natural to them, it descended from one generation to another; their kings were guilty of it, their priests, their false prophets, and the common people. And though better things might be expected of the Jews than any other people, yet thus they did. And it was not only because of the new doctrine or worship that the apostle preached, for they killed their own prophets before them; but it was their love to their lusts, hatred of reproof, enmity to holiness, &c., that was the cause. And Christ himself chargeth them with the same things, Matt. xxiii. 37, O Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, &c.; and foretells it as that which they would yet practise, Matt. xxiii. 34. And they please not God; by the figure called meiosis; it is meant they highly displeased God, and were haters of God, and hated, and now rejected, of him. Though they had the advantages and reasons to please God above all other people, having had the law and ordinances of his worship among them, yet they pleased not God, and particularly in their persecutions of the gospel and the apostles, though they might think that therein they did God good service, as John xvi. 2. And are contrary to all men; contrary in their worship, laws, and customs. Or rather, contrary to all men, in hindering the course of the gospel appointed for men's salvation. And despising all other nations in comparison of themselves, they were apt to be seditious, and raise tumults every where, and to disdain familiarity and common friendship with the Gentiles.

16 <sup>m</sup> Forbidding us to speak to the m Luke 11. 52. Gentiles that they might be saved, <sup>n</sup> to n Acts 13. 50. fill up their sins alway: <sup>o</sup> for the wrath is o Luke 14. 5. 19. & 17. 5. 13. & 18. 12. & 19. 9. & 22. 21, 22. come upon them to the uttermost.

<sup>p</sup> Matt. 23. 32. n Matt. 24. 5, 14. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved: their contrariety to all men is expressed particularly in this instance; they forbade the apostles to preach to the Gentiles, which were the greater number of men; though they opposed also their preaching to the Jewish nation: for the Jews could not endure to hear that the Gentiles should be received into the church, or into special favour with God; as appears by Christ's sermon in the synagogue, Luke iv. 28, and in the apostle's apology for himself at Jerusalem, Acts xxii. 21, 22. And their forbidding them implies, not an act of authority, for they had it not, but their hindering them what they could, and stirring up the people and rulers against them, as Acts xvii. 6. To fill up their sins alway; to cause it to rise up to such a measure and degree as will at last bring destruction. Though this was not their intention, yet through the just judgment of God it was the event. They killed the prophets; but killing Christ, and persecuting the apostles, and hindering the salvation of mankind thereby, this filled up their sin. The expression alludes to what is said of the Amorites, Gen. xv. 16, and foretold by Daniel, chap. ix. 27, called the consummation. As here is a perfecting of holiness, and filling up of grace, so also of sin. And sin against the gospel ripens sin more than against the law. And because they made a constant progress in sin, they are said to fill it up; Fill ye up the measure of your fathers, Matt. xxiii. 32. For the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost: first they filled up their sin, and then comes this wrath, or that wrath foretold by Daniel, chap. ix. 27; and by our Saviour, Matt. xxiii. 38. It was their last destruction by the Romans. God's wrath broke forth upon them some several times before, but not to the utmost till now. Or, to the end, as in the Greek. In former punishments God removed his wrath and restored them again, but this continues to the end. Or, some, by the end, understand only the perfection and consummation of this wrath. And its coming may be read in the Greek, it hath prevented them; as bringing them to judgment beforehand in this world; as the destruction of the old world, Sodom, and Jerusalem, were figures and forerunners of the last judgment. And yet this doth not contradict what the apostle speaks, Rom. xi., and many of the prophets, concerning their calling into the faith and church of Christ before the end of the world. Also we must understand it with an exception of the remnant of God's election that was amongst them.

17 But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time <sup>a</sup>in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly <sup>b</sup>to see your face with great desire.

The apostle here makes his apology, for his so soon departing from them, and his continued absence. They were under great sufferings for receiving the gospel he had preached, and for him therefore to leave them so soon as he did, (as appears in the story, Acts xvii.) and not presently to return, might discourage their hearts and make them question his love. 1. For his leaving them, he tells them it was not voluntary, but forced by the persecution of the Jews, he being sent away in the night by the brethren to Berea, Acts xvii. 10; and therefore he calls it a taking away, rather than a going away from them. And (as the Greek word imports) it was, 2. A thing grievous to him, as children that are bereft of father and mother, and left orphans, are greatly troubled. And he was afflicted as a father bereft of children; so were these Thessalonians to him, having begotten them to Christ by the gospel. 3. It was but for a short time, for the time of an hour; when he left them, he intended but a short stay from them, only to avoid the present storm: others think he means by the words his sudden leaving them before he took solemn leave of them. 4. He left them in presence, quoad faciem, as to outward sight, not in heart: the proper genius of true lovers, who are present with each other in soul when separated in body. 5. He tells them of his endeavours to see their face; and that the more abundantly, because he came away so suddenly from them. And lastly, he did this with great desire, his endeavours herein were acted with great affection.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but <sup>a</sup>Satan hindered us.

This he adds further to satisfy them of his real affection to them, that he attempted to come to them once and again, that is, often, as Neh. xiii. 20; Phil. iv. 16. And that they might be assured it was not his fellow ministers' desire only to come, therefore he expresseth his own name particularly in a parenthesis (even I Paul). Or by his saying, even I Paul, he assures them concerning his own desire to come to them; at least I Paul, though others did not so; as the French Bible reads it. And he had come to them had not Satan hindered him, either by raising up disputes against the gospel at Athens by the philosophers there, which he was concerned to stay and answer, Acts xvii. 18; or else by stirring up wicked men to lie in wait for him in the way: or by raising tumults, as the Jews did at Berea, whereby he was constrained to go as it were to the sea, Acts xvii. 14; or by sowing dissensions in other churches, which detained him to end them. Or by what way it was, is somewhat uncertain; but being thus hindered it made his desire the more fervent by the opposition. And hereby we see Satan's enmity to the gospel, especially to churches newly planted, that they might not take rooting.

19 For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of || rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ <sup>a</sup>at his coming?

Here the apostle gives the reason of his desire to see them. He first calls them his hope; that is, the matter of his hope, that among others they should be saved in the day of Christ. Secondly, his joy: he at present rejoiced in their ready and sincere receiving the gospel preached by him. Thirdly, his crown of rejoicing, which signifies the triumph and height of joy: and seeing he mentions the presence and coming of Jesus Christ, he looks to the crown that he should receive at that day, which he speaks of, 1 Cor. ix. 25; and these Thessalonians, among others, would help to make up this crown of rejoicing to him. And in the words we may observe an eminent gradation, as also that the crown of ministers will arise not only from Christ, but from their people also.

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

He redoubles the expression, to show his great affection, and complacency of heart in them; or to show that they more than others were this occasion of rejoicing to him. And he mentions glory as well as joy, for the great success of his ministry among them would redound to his glory in the day of Christ; as Dan. xii. 3, They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever. Or, they were his glory at present, a glory to his ministry, and a seal to his apostleship.

CHAP. III

The apostle showeth that out of his great care for the Thessalonians he had sent Timothy to comfort and strengthen them in the faith, 1—5; whose good report of them had been a great consolation to him in his distresses, 6—8. He testifieth his thankfulness to God, and earnest desire to see them, 8—10; praying God to guide him to them, and for their increase in love and holiness unto the end, 11—13.

WHEREFORE <sup>a</sup>when we could no longer forbear, <sup>b</sup>we thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

The apostle proceeds upon the same argument to confirm his love to them, and care of them, that they might not doubt of it because of his long absence from them. Therefore he tells them, that though he could not come himself, yet he sent Timothy to them from Athens; which we find not mentioned in the Acts by Luke: and his love herein is commended the more, 1. Because he sent him out of a strong impulse of affection, he could not forbear any longer, or bear, it was a heavy burden to him till he had done it, as the word imports. 2. He was content to be left at Athens alone by parting with Timothy, though his company was so desirable and useful to him at that time. And he was well pleased so to do for their sakes; εὐδοκῆσαμεν, he had a complacency of mind in so doing, so much he preferred their good before his own contentment.

2 And sent <sup>c</sup>Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the Gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith:

3. By the description he gives of him in the text: a man dear to him, and as his right hand in the service of the gospel. And his care of them is commended the more by sending so eminent a person to them. 4. From his end in sending him; which was to establish them, that through the fear of suffering, or any temptations, they might not forsake the faith they had received; and to comfort them concerning their faith: the word sometimes signifies to exhort, and the sense is good if we so read it; but because the faith they had embraced presented much matter of comfort to them, therefore our translation well renders the word.

3 <sup>d</sup>That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that <sup>e</sup>we are appointed thereunto.

The apostle had mentioned before his great afflictions, and they knew well what he himself had suffered both at Thessalonica and Berea, Acts xvii., and therefore might fear they might hereupon be shaken in their faith. And Timothy therefore was sent to comfort and establish them: God could do this without him, but the ministry is his ordinance he works by. And when he saith, that no man should be moved, it shows what is a Christian's duty, to be unmoved by sufferings for the gospel. The word here used by the apostle answers another word, used 2 Thess. ii. 2, which alludes to the waves of the sea shaken by the

<sup>a</sup> 1 Cor. 5. 3.
<sup>b</sup> Col. 2. 5.

<sup>c</sup> p ch. 3. 10.

<sup>q</sup> Rom. 1. 13.
<sup>r</sup> & 15. 22.

<sup>s</sup> Phil. 2. 16.

<sup>t</sup> & 4. 1.

<sup>u</sup> & Prov. 16.

<sup>v</sup> 31.

<sup>w</sup> 1 Cor.

<sup>x</sup> 1 Cor. 15.

<sup>y</sup> 23. ch. 3. 13. Rev. 1. 7. & 22. 12.

<sup>z</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 14.

<sup>aa</sup> Phil. 2. 16.

<sup>ab</sup> & 4. 1.

<sup>ac</sup> & Prov. 16.

<sup>ad</sup> 31.

<sup>ae</sup> 1 Cor.

<sup>af</sup> 1 Cor. 15.

<sup>ag</sup> 23. ch. 3. 13. Rev. 1. 7. & 22. 12.

<sup>ah</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 14.

<sup>ai</sup> Phil. 2. 16.

<sup>aj</sup> & 4. 1.

<sup>ak</sup> & Prov. 16.

<sup>al</sup> 31.

<sup>am</sup> 1 Cor.

<sup>an</sup> 1 Cor. 15.

<sup>ao</sup> 23. ch. 3. 13. Rev. 1. 7. & 22. 12.

<sup>ap</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 14.

<sup>aq</sup> Phil. 2. 16.

<sup>ar</sup> & 4. 1.

<sup>as</sup> & Prov. 16.

<sup>at</sup> 31.

<sup>au</sup> 1 Cor.

<sup>av</sup> 1 Cor. 15.

<sup>aw</sup> 23. ch. 3. 13. Rev. 1. 7. & 22. 12.

<sup>ax</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 14.

<sup>ay</sup> Phil. 2. 16.

<sup>az</sup> & 4. 1.

<sup>ba</sup> & Prov. 16.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 16.

<sup>d</sup> 21. 1 Cor.

<sup>e</sup> 16. 10.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 18.

<sup>d</sup> Eph. 3. 13.

<sup>e</sup> & Acts 9. 16.

<sup>f</sup> & 14. 22. &

<sup>g</sup> 20. 23. & 21.

<sup>h</sup> 11. 1 Cor. 4.

<sup>i</sup> 9. 2 Tim. 3.

<sup>j</sup> 12. 1 Pet. 2. 21.

winds. Fears, and doubts, or hesitations of mind, do move and shake it, which the apostle sent Timothy to prevent, or remove. And besides, he addeth an argument of his own to confirm them, when he tells them, ye know that we are appointed thereunto. The word is used Luke ii. 34; 1 Tim. i. 9. But he means, we suffer afflictions according to the purpose and intention of God; they come not by chance, or merely from men's wrath and enmity, but from the appointment of God. And whether the apostle speaks only of his own sufferings, and other ministers of the gospel, or of all saints in general, as Acts xiv. 22; Rom. viii. 17, 36; 2 Tim. iii. 12, is uncertain; we may well understand it of both; so that he would not have these Thessalonians think it strange, as if some strange thing happened to them, 1 Pet. iv. 12, whereby to be shaken in their minds.

4 For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

The apostle having said that they knew they were appointed to sufferings, tells them here they knew it because he had told them of it. Paul, by some extraordinary instinct or revelation, often foresaw his sufferings, and God more generally told him of them at his first conversion, Acts ix. 16; and he told them of them that they might reckon upon sufferings. A faithful minister will not only tell the people of the crown, but of the cross of Christ. And what he foretold of his sufferings, he tells them came to pass; whereby they might be strengthened further in their faith about the gospel he had preached to them, and not be offended at his sufferings, being foretold to them, as well as appointed of God.

5 For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

The apostle here gives a further account of the reason why he sent Timothy to them, which was to know their faith, whether it continued stedfast under all their sufferings and temptations. He feared Satan, whom he calls the tempter, might have some way or other tempted them, either by false teachers to seduce them, or by sufferings to affright them. He was more concerned about the inward state of their souls, than their outward condition; and commonly temptations go along with persecutions. And the apostle, having bestowed great labour upon them, feared lest it might be in vain, that the tempter had prevailed. Satan's first work is to keep men from believing, his next is to destroy their faith: young converts are commonly most assaulted. Paul's heart was therefore very solicitous for them, so that (as he said before) he could no longer forbear sending to know how it was with them.

6 But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you:

We had before an account of Timothy's sending, now of his return, wherein we have the message he brought, and the effect thereof upon the apostle. The message may be considered, 1. As to its new-coming, But now when Timotheus came, &c.; so that this Epistle seems to be written presently upon his return. 2. As to the good account it brought of them: it brought good tidings (the same word is here used that expresseth in the Greek the glad tidings of the gospel) of their faith, that it continued still stedfast; and of their charity, or love, that they had love joined with their faith, and their faith working by love, which showed it was living, and of a right kind. And that ye have good remembrance of us always; they forgot him not, though absent some length of time from them; and it was a good remembrance, joined with love and esteem of his person, and of his ministry amongst them; and it was always, which implies the constancy of it. Desiring greatly to see us; and not satisfied with this good remembrance of him being absent, they greatly desired his presence, to see him and his fellow labourers. And to answer their love on his part, he addeth, as we also to see you. By all which he seeks to satisfy them of his continued care and remembrance of them, which was the effect of this message.

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

He was comforted by this faith of theirs in all his own affliction and distress. The faithfulness and constancy of a people is the great comfort of their teachers. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth, 3 John 4.

8 For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord.

The comfort of their faith was so great that it would be as life to him, if they stood fast in it; which he calls a standing fast in the Lord. Life is not only the union of soul and body; comfort is the life of the soul, especially that which springs from Divine causes. And on the contrary, the apostasy and degeneracy of a people doth kill the hearts of their faithful teachers.

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

This is another effect of the message Timothy brought, it caused in the apostle great thanksgivings to God. First he rejoiced in their faith, and then gives thanks to God for that joy. The matter of his rejoicing was their faith, but the author and upholder of this faith was God; and in giving thanks to God for his joy, he gives thanks also to God for their faith from whence it sprang. The joy that ministers have in their people's faith should break forth into thanksgivings. And the apostle's thanks to God was beyond what he could return or express, as appears by the form of his speech, For what thanks can we render? &c.; as Psal. cxvi. 12, What shall I render unto the Lord? said David. And his rejoicing before God implies both the nature of it, it was divine and spiritual, and his respect to God therein, as David danced before the Lord with all his might, 2 Sam. vi. 14; i. e. with a respect to God's goodness then declared. Or the apostle might mean his joy was inward, before God, rather than before men.

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

We have here the last effect of Timothy's message upon the apostle, it put him upon prayer for these Thessalonians; expressed by the assiduity of it, night and day, &c., that is, in a constant course; as we noted before, chap. ii. 9. And by the fervency of it, exceedingly, or excessively. The Greek word cannot well be Englished, yet is often used by the apostle when he would express any thing with an emphasis, as Eph. iii. 20, and in this Epistle, chap. v. 13. And by the matter of it; that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith. Though his Epistles might avail towards it, yet his personal presence would do more. There is a peculiar blessing attends oral preaching, more than reading. The like prayer he made with respect to the Romans, and upon the same account also, Rom. i. 10, 11. Though the apostle had before commended their faith, yet there was something lacking in it. No faith is made perfect at first; yea, the best faith may have some defects. And the word is used elsewhere to signify something that is wanting, or left behind, 1 Cor. xvi. 17; Col. i. 24. And their faith might be defective, 1. As to the matter of it, some mysteries of faith they might not yet understand; as the disciples did not, till after Christ's ascension; and some of the Corinthians a while doubted the doctrine of the resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 12, &c. 2. As to the clearness of it, with respect to the truths they did already know and believe. As to the lively operations and fruits of it. The former defects are removed by doctrine, the last by exhortation and comfort, and the apostle desired to see their face on the account of both: and to perfect a thing is to make it complete, both as to parts and degrees. The word here used we find often in the New Testament, 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Gal. vi. 1, &c.; and variously rendered in the several translations, but yet much to the same sense: the apostle being so suddenly driven from them, he left them as a house half built; but his affection to them was so great, that he longed to return to them for the perfecting of their faith, though he had met but a while before with such great perils at Thessalonica.

¶ Or, guide.
¶ Mark 1. 3.
11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ¶ direct our way unto you.

Here his prayer is expressed. The person to whom he prays is God himself, personally considered as God the Father, and relatively, when he styles him our Father: so ought believers to address themselves to God, not absolutely, but as to their Father. So Christ taught his disciples to pray, Our Father; and so the Spirit of adoption doth prompt the saints to pray: we come to God with greater freedom and confidence when we can come to him as a Father. And he prays also to Christ, whom he styles our Lord Jesus Christ. Whence we may have an argument that Christ is God, else he could not be the object of Divine worship: not that we are to present our prayers distinctly to the Son without considering his union with the Father, nor to the Father distinctly from the Son, but to the Father in and by the Lord Jesus Christ; for so only we can consider him as our Father in prayer. And he speaks of Christ also in his relation to his people, our Lord Jesus Christ. And the thing he prays for is, that God would direct his way unto them; that the hinderances of Satan, whatsoever they were, might be removed, and the providence of God open him a way to come to them: the word direct signifies in the Greek to make straight, and, 2 Thess. iii. 5, is applied to the heart, The Lord direct your hearts, &c., which is setting the heart straight towards God; answering to the Hebrew word Jashar, which signifies to be upright, and is often used in the Old Testament. The French read it, address our way. And hence we learn our duty by the apostle's practice to pray to have our way in all cases directed by God.

¶ ch. 4. 10.
¶ x. ch. 4. 9.
¶ 2 Pet. 1. 7.
12 And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you:

Increase and abound; these two words denote an increasing and overflowing abundance. This is another thing he prays for; the former respected himself, this respected them. He desired to come to them to perfect that which was lacking in their faith, and he prays now for the abounding and increase of their love; not only to love one another, but to increase and abound in it; to increase the habits and abound in the fruits of love. They were under sore persecutions, and their love to one another was more necessary at such a time. And not only to one another, but to extend their love towards all men. Either all men in general; for love is a general duty we owe to all men, Owe no man any thing but to love one another, Rom. xiii. 8; and therefore all our duty to men is comprehended under it. And the apostle requires this love to be added to brotherly kindness, 2 Pet. i. 7; yea, love is required to enemies, Matt. v. 44, though not as enemies, yet as men. Or more particularly, believers; as sometimes all men is taken under that restriction, Tit. ii. 11. Even as we do toward you: and he setteth before them his own love to them, both as a pattern and motive hereunto. Though the love of Christ is especially to be looked at, and is proposed often by the apostle Paul as the great argument of love to men, yet he mentions his own love to them here to show the constancy of his affection to them though absent from them, and to show that he persuaded no duty to them but what he practised himself.

¶ 1 Cor. 1. 8.
¶ Phil. 1. 10.
¶ ch. 5. 23.
¶ 2 Thes. 2. 17.
¶ 1 John 3. 20.
¶ 21.
¶ 2 Cor. 14. 6.
¶ Jude 14.
13 To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

These words some refer only to the verse immediately preceding: by increasing and abounding in love, their hearts would be established unblameable in holiness. Which is true, for that holiness is justly to be suspected, at least is to be blamed, which is without love to men. And love itself is a great part of holiness; and who will blame holiness when it shines forth in love? yea, it will be unblameable before God and men. And when God doth cause a people to increase in love, he doth hereby establish them in holiness that is unblameable; where love is wanting the heart is not established. The hypocrite will fall off in an hour of temptation, because he wants love; and though he may for a while make a fair show before men, yet he is not unblameable before God, who searcheth the heart: neither will he be found so at the appearance of Jesus Christ; which the apostle prays for here with respect to these Thessalonians, that they might be established in holiness until the coming of Christ; or that they might be found unblameable in holiness at his coming. Whereby the apostle signifies there is yet another coming of Christ, when there will a strict trial pass upon men, and therefore the saints should labour to be then found unblameable, or without spot and blemish, as 2 Pet. iii. 14. At the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints; whereof he gives a particular account in the next chapter. Others carry this verse as referring also to the 10th verse, where he desired to see their face to perfect their faith, that both by their faith and love they might be established unblameable in holiness.

CHAP. IV

Paul exhorteth the Thessalonians to proceed in their endeavours to please God by a holy and just conversation, 1—8. He commendeth their love to one another, entreating them to abound in it, 9, 10, and quietly to follow their respective callings, 11, 12. And that they might not sorrow for the dead, as men without hope, he briefly describeth the resurrection of the just, and Christ's second coming, 13—18.

FURTHERMORE then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more.

He descends to some particular duties about their walking, which he ushers in by a general exhortation in this 1st verse; wherein we may observe his style: he calls them brethren, and speaks to them with much condescension and earnestness, and in the name of Christ, &c. And the subject he insists on is their walking, the course of their life and conversation, which he describes by the rule of it, as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk; he refers them to the directions he had given them about it as the rule; for he did in his ministry not only open gospel mysteries, but explain moral duties. And not only to walk in them, but to abound more and more, to press forward to a greater exactness and excellency in their Christian conversation. And he here useth motives: 1. From the Person in whose name he speaks to them, which is the Lord Jesus Christ; for he was but Christ's minister and ambassador. 2. From the knowledge they had received of their duty, and therefore they could not plead ignorance. 3. Their walking as they had been instructed by him would please God.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

This explains what he said before; what they had received of him about their walking he here calls commandments, not so much his own as the Lord's, as the word itself imports here used, and is expressed in the text. By the Lord Jesus: though the apostle had authority, yet it was but derivative from Christ; and therefore not to walk as the apostle had commanded would be disobedience to Christ himself. And he minds them of what they knew, that their knowledge might be exemplified in practice; for as faith, so knowledge, is dead which doth not influence the life; and they knew that he commanded them not in his own name, but in the name of Christ.

d Rom. 12.2.
Eph. 5. 17.
e Eph. 5. 27.
f 1 Cor. 6. 14.
1a. Eph. 5. 3.
Col. 3. 5.

3 For this is <sup>a</sup>the will of God, even <sup>b</sup>your sanctification, <sup>c</sup>that ye should abstain from fornication :

What in the former verse he called commandments from Christ, he here calls the will of God; or he had some further duties to lay before them, which he had not yet given commandments about, which were the will of God. There is the secret and revealed will of God, and his revealed will is about things to be believed or practised. The latter is here meant, so that the will of God is put figuratively here for the things he willeth, or commandeth of us. And that which the apostle first mentions is sanctification, which is often taken for holiness in general, which consists in men's conformity to the will of God both in the heart and life. But I think not so taken here, but for chastity, as opposite to the sin of uncleanness, as the apostle explains it in the next words. For to abstain from fornication is the will of God. And by it is meant all unchasteness, either of persons married or unmarried; and that either in the heart, or in speech, or in the eye, or lascivious gesture, as well as in the very act itself. It was a sin common among the Gentiles, especially the Grecians, and judged as no sin. And therefore it is particularly mentioned and forbidden to the believing Gentiles by the council of Jerusalem, lest they should apprehend it not to be an evil, Acts xv. 20. For it is not so evident by the light of nature as many other moral evils; and therefore the apostle tells the Thessalonians that it is the will of God they should abstain from it, and that is a sufficient ground either of doing or not doing. This will of God is expressed in the seventh commandment, which though the Jews well knew, yet these new-converted Gentiles might not yet so well understand. And therefore the apostle in his several Epistles to the Gentile churches doth dehort them from it, especially the Corinthians, 1 Cor. vi. 9, and that by many arguments. It is a sin which corrupts and effeminates the mind, captivates the heart, consumes the flesh, and wastes men's estates. So that this will of God that forbids it is a good will, Rom. xii. 2, as all the commandments of God are said to be for our good, Deut. x. 13.

g Rom. 6. 19.
1 Cor. 6. 18,
12.

4 <sup>a</sup>That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

This is added as a means to prevent that sin. By vessel some understand the married wife, who is called the weaker vessel, 1 Pet. iii. 7; and her husband is to possess her in sanctification, in chastity, as the Greek word may signify here. And honour; for as marriage is honourable to all men, Heb. iii. 4, so to live chastely in a married estate is honourable also. For by whoredom man gets dishonour, and his reproach shall not be wiped away, Prov. vi. 33. Others by vessel understand the body, which is the vessel of the soul; the soul carries it up and down, useth it in the several functions of the vegetative, sensitive, and intellectual life. And so some understand the words of David to the priest, 1 Sam. xxi. 5, The vessels of the young men are holy, being kept from women; that is, their bodies. Fornication is said above all other sins to be a sin against the body, 1 Cor. vi. 18, and he that keeps his body chaste possesseth his vessel, keeps it under government; whereas by fornication we give it to a harlot, and that which is a member of Christ we make it the member of a harlot, 1 Cor. vi. 15; and though the words are directed properly to the masculine sex, the word ικαστον being masculine, yet under that the female is comprehended. And because the practice of this duty requires care, skill, and much watchfulness against temptations, therefore saith the apostle that every man may know how to possess his vessel in sanctification. To which is added, and in honour; for acts of uncleanness dishonour the body; Rom. i. 24, God gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies, &c. God hath bestowed much curious workmanship upon the body, it is part of Christ's purchase, and, with the soul, is a member of Christ, a temple of the Holy Ghost, in all true saints, and therefore should be possessed with honour. Or it is to be kept to the honour and glory of God, as 1 Cor. vi. 20, and to be offered up a holy sacrifice to him, Rom. xii. 1.

h Col. 3. 5.
Rqm. 1. 24.
i Eph. 4. 17,
16.

5 <sup>a</sup>Not in the lust of concupiscence, <sup>b</sup>even as the Gentiles <sup>c</sup>which know not God :

1 Cor. 15. 34. Gal. 4. 8. Eph. 2. 12. & 4. 18. 2 Thess. 1. 8.

Any violence of affection we call passion, whether of love, or anger, or desire, because the soul is passive, or suffers thereby. The Stoics said passions were not incident to a wise man; and They that are Christ's, saith the apostle, have crucified the flesh with the passions and lusts, Gal. v. 24. And lust is usually taken for all inordinate affection, either with respect to the object or degree; though the Greek word doth signify only desire, and is sometimes taken in a good sense, as Phil. i. 23; for there are good lustings as well as evil, as Gal. v. 17, the Spirit lusteth against the flesh; but here the word is taken in a bad sense, for the lust of uncleanness, which the apostle here calls the lust of concupiscence. The philosophers distinguish of the affections or passions of the soul, some are irascible, some concupiscible. The former are conversant about evil, to repel it or fly from it; the latter about good, either real or imaginary, to pursue it or embrace it. And the lusts of concupiscence are either of the mind or of the flesh, Eph. ii. 3: here we understand the latter, that fleshly concupiscence that is conversant about women, which if by vessel in the former verse is understood man's lawful wife, then he forbids all unchasteness even towards her; if the body, then he forbids all unchaste usage of the body in any kind, or towards any person whatsoever. And, to avoid fornication, he forbids lust that leads to it. Even as the Gentiles which know not God; which the apostle useth as an argument to them, Though ye are Gentiles by nation as well as others, yet not in state, such as know not God. There is a natural knowledge of God, which the apostle speaks of, Rom. i. 21, which the Gentiles had; and supernatural, which is by the Scriptures; to know the mind, will, nature, decrees, and counsels of God as they are there revealed: and the knowledge of God in Christ; this is meant in the text, and this the Gentiles had not, and therefore no wonder though they followed the lust of concupiscence, they wanted the rule of God's word to direct them, and that effectual knowledge of God, and presence of his grace, that would have restrained them from such lust. But these Thessalonians now, since their conversion by the gospel, were come to this knowledge of God, which they had not before, and therefore were not to live as before they did. Knowledge ought to influence our hearts and lives, and to sin against knowledge is the great aggravation of sin, and will make men more inexcusable. But yet where knowledge is wanting what wickedness will not men practise! The Gentiles were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that was in them, Eph. iv. 18. The Jews crucified Christ, and Saul persecuted the disciples, through ignorance, 1 Tim. i. 13. Much more are those Christians to be condemned, who, having more knowledge than the Gentiles, yet practise worse than they; as the apostle upbraids the Jews upon this account, Rom. ii. 27.

1 Jer. 19. 11,
12. 1 Cor. 5.
Or,
oppress, or,
overreach.
Or, in the matter.
1 3 Thess.
1. 8.

6 <sup>a</sup>That no man go beyond and || defraud his brother || in any matter: because that the Lord <sup>b</sup>is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

This some understand to be another part of sanctification, mentioned before, ver. 3, taking the word sanctification in a more general sense. And as before he spake of chastity, so here of commutative justice in commerce and traffic; and the rather because Thessalonica was a city of great trade and merchandise, and it is true that sanctification doth comprehend this righteousness in it, and will restrain men from that which is opposite to it, which, as the apostle speaks, is going beyond and defrauding his brother. To go beyond, is that which we call overreaching; when in buying or selling we keep not a just measure, when we observe not a due proportion betwixt the price and the commodity, considering it either in its natural worth, or in such circumstances as make it more or less valuable: or, to take advantage of another's ignorance or necessities, to take unreasonable profit: or, to break covenant with another, answering to the Hebrew word Gnabbar, used in this sense, Deut. xvii. 2: the original word signifies to transgress, or go above the due bounds. And to defraud is, when, out of a covetous mind, we exact upon another beyond what is meet. Some refer the former word to injustice by force, and the latter by fraud, 2 Cor. vii. 2. And the evil is the greater because done to a brother. There is a brother by a common relation, and so all men that partake of human nature are brethren; or by special relation, which is either natural, civil, or spiritual. We may understand the word in all these senses, especially the last, that those that are brethren in Christ and in the faith, should not defraud one another, And when the apostle adds, in any matter, the word any not being in the Greek, we may better read it, in dealing, or doing; the word is general, and is to be restrained by the subject-matter spoken of. There is another sense of the words, agreeable to the former verses, and the verse that follows, and so some understand the apostle as still speaking of chastity; and so here he forbids the invading another's bed, transgressing the bounds of marriage, whereby men go beyond or defraud their brother, usurping the use of another man's wife, whom he hath no right to. And then in any matter we must read, in that matter which he had been speaking of before, or it is a modest expression of the act of adultery. The Hebrew Bo is often used in the Old Testament for carnal copulation, and thence the Greek βαίνω and ὑπερβαίνω, here used; and the other word, πλεονεκτείνω, denotes excessiveness in it, Eph. iv. 19. And the reason he adds is, because the Lord is the avenger of all such. Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord, Deut. xxxii. 35; Rom. xii. 19. Whether we understand it of fraud, or overreaching in dealings, when man cannot right and relieve himself, the righteous God will avenge the unrighteousness of men; or of the fraud of the marriage bed, which is done in secret, and man cannot avenge himself, Heb. xiii. 4. As we also have forewarned you and testified: and this the apostle saith he had forewarned them of, and testified. Though the light of nature told the heathen that God was an avenger of wickedness, Acts xxviii. 4, and the heathen could say, Ἐχει Θεὸς ἐκδικῶν ὄμμα. God hath a revengeful eye; yet the apostle had in his preaching assured it. He had told them of Christ's coming to judge the world, when he would execute vengeance, Jude 15; and this they were before ignorant of: and though God sometimes takes vengeance in this world, yet he seems to refer to this last vengeance, because he speaks of it as that which he had forewarned them of, and testified in his ministry, and whereof they had not so clear a testimony in natural conscience.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness.

8 He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

These two verses are added, as further arguments to persuade to that chastity he had spoken of, called sanctification, ver. 3, 4. The first is taken from their Christian calling, which is not to uncleanness, but to chastity, called holiness. When they were Gentiles in state, they lived in the lust of uncleanness, but they were now called by the power of the gospel, and brought to such a profession that did forbid and condemn it. And the author of their call is God himself, though the apostles and other ministers were the instruments. Whence he fetcheth this second argument, ver. 8, that if this chastity be despised, or rejected, as we may read the text, it is not man, but God, that is despised. To despise a minister in a commandment he delivers from God is to despise God himself, Luke x. 16, &c.; and the apostle doth here intimate, not to obey the commandment of God is a despising God. Or, that the apostle was despised by some because of the outward meanness of his person, or questioning his authority. Who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit: this he adds as a third argument; so that what he had preached to them, was not from himself, but from the Holy Spirit. Or if by us he means these Thessalonians also, as some copies read it, he hath given you, &c., then he argues from the gift of the Holy Spirit they had received against living in the sin of uncleanness. This would be very disagreeable, not only to their holy calling, but the Holy Spirit God had given them. Or else these arguments of the apostle are to persuade to universal holiness, taking sanctification and holiness in a larger sense; and uncleanness, for all sin in general standing opposite thereunto. Sin is often spoken of in Scripture under the notion of filth, defilement, pollution, &c., and so was typed forth under the law; and to be cleansed from sin is a cleansing man from filthiness, 2 Cor. vii. 1; so that to live in sin, as the apostle argues, is to live in uncleanness, to contradict our holy calling, to despise God, and to walk contrary to the nature and dictates of his Holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.

But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: the apostle proceeds from chastity and justice to speak of brotherly love, which is love upon a spiritual ground; to love the saints as such, with respect to God as a common Father, and so all his children are brethren, chap. ii. 8, 9; so Heb. xiii. 1. And he persuadeth the practice of it by a loving and winning insinuation; Sure you are forward enough of yourselves; as he useth the same artifice, Acts xxvi. 27, 28; 2 Cor. ix. 1; wherein the apostle tacitly commends them, and hereby would engage them to answer the commendation, and good opinion he had of them. For ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another; what need I write to teach you that which you have already been taught of God? The saints have this promise, Isa. liv. 13; Jer. xxxi. 34; fulfilled, 1 John ii. 26, 27; and this Divine teaching is always efficacious, for none teacheth like God. Not that all teaching of men is to be laid aside, as some enthusiasts would hence infer, but that the apostle thought he had less need to teach that which God himself had so effectually taught them. Hereby we perceive that God's teaching doth not only enlighten the mind, but reacheth the affections, and especially inclines the heart to love, for God is love; and though they were taught other things of God besides this love, yet he mentions only this as the most proper work of the Spirit of God by the gospel; and though common love of man to man may be found in mere nature.

10 And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more;

As an evidence of the truth of their love for which he commended them, and that they were taught it of God, he gives a practical instance of it in this verse; else the apostle might have been thought to flatter, or to command a love that was without fruit; and therefore he saith not, ye profess it, but ye do it: so 2 Cor. viii. 11, perform the doing of it. Toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia; which was a large province, wherein were planted many churches. Their love was not guided by interests, opinions, civil relations, or self-respects, but it reached to all that were brethren; and that in some real effect of it, in some work of charity, or liberality, or otherwise, not here mentioned, but we read of it, 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2. But we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more; but, however, their love was not yet perfect, and therefore he beseecheth them to abound more and more; either meant as to the extent of it, not to confine it only to Macedonia, or as to the degree of it, to excel men in it, as the Greek word may be rendered: and the same word the apostle useth, and upon the same account, 2 Cor. viii. 7. Neither love, nor any other grace, is made perfect at once; even those that are taught of God, are taught by degrees. And love being a grace so suitable to the gospel, and their present suffering state, he therefore especially exhorts to a progress in it.

11 And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

And that ye study to be quiet: he exhorts to quietness, and yet to be diligent; and probably he might see this needful, either by what he himself had observed amongst

q ch. 6. 1.
r Jer. 31. 34.
John 6. 45.
A 14. 28.
Heb. 8. 11.
1 John 2. 20.
27.
s Mat. 22. 39.

John 13. 34. & 15. 12. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 8. 1 John 3. 11, 23. & 4. 21.

1 ch. 1. 7.
u ch. 3. 12.

x 2 Thess. 3.
15. 1 Pet. 4.
y Acts 20. 36.
Eph. 4. 28.
z 1 Tim. 3. 7.
8, 12.

them, or by what he had heard of them, as appears by what he writes in his Second Epistle, chap. iii. 10, 11. To be quiet is to be of a peaceable temper and carriage, as the Greek word ἡσυχάζειν importeth both; and stands contrary to strife, contention, division, either upon a civil or religious account. And to study to be quiet, because the thing may be difficult, especially in some circumstances of times, places, and persons. And the Greek word φιλοριμῆσθαι implies an ambitious study. Quietness we should pursue with a holy ambition, as that which is honourable to ourselves and our profession, Prov. xx. 3: The same word is used 2 Cor. v. 9, where it is rendered we labour, &c. Study is properly the exercise of the mind, yet it here comprehends any kind of labour. This agrees with what the apostle elsewhere exhorteth to, Heb. xii. 14: see 1 Pet. iii. 11. And to do your own business: he next commendeth to them diligence, and that in our own business; and this he prescribeth as a good way for quietness, contentions often arising from meddling in the affairs of other men which concern us not; for which he rebukes some in this church, 2 Thess. iii. 11. But yet only to seek our own things is a great fault, and lamented by the apostle, Phil. ii. 21. We are to concern ourselves in the affairs of others when called to it, and not otherwise; and then we may reckon them among our own things. A Christian's calling is either general or particular, and what falls not within the compass of one of these, is to be accounted not our own business. And our doing and suffering ought to be kept within the sphere of our calling; for to suffer otherwise, is to suffer as busybodies, which the apostle cautions against, 1 Pet. iv. 15; as a bishop intruding himself into another's office, to which the word there alludes. And to work with your own hands; this condemneth idleness, and living out of a calling; we are not only to keep within our own sphere, but to stretch forth our hands to work. The same precept he gives to the Ephesians, chap. iv. 28, not to steal, but to work with their hands, that they may not only eat their own bread, 2 Thess. iii. 12, but have to give to him that lacketh. Not that there is no other work but that of the hands; the ministers of the gospel are excused from that, 1 Cor. ix. 6, but not from work; there is the work of the head, and the tongue, and the foot, and the lungs, as well as of the hands; but either under one species he comprehends all, or it may be he fitteth his speech to the condition of the people to whom he writes, who generally had such occupations wherein they wrought with their hands, Thessalonica being a great place of trade. And the apostle speaks of the churches of Macedonia as a poor sort of people, 2 Cor. viii. 2, and liberal beyond their power; though some among them might be tempted to idleness by the charity of others to them, which, as some conceive, was the occasion of the apostle's thus writing. But if men have estates, and upon that account need not work, yet no man is to be idle: men's time, parts, or other talents are to be employed, and account thereof is to be given, Matt. xxv. 19; and the unprofitable servant is cast into outer darkness, ver. 30. Some way or other every man is to work, and may work, for profit to himself and others, unless under some invincible impediment. As we commanded you; he means, when he was with them. He might probably observe some occasion for this commandment. Industry is of good report with all; and by meddling in others' affairs, and unquiet carriage and idleness, they might dishonour their Christian profession among the heathen, which might be the chief reason of this commandment: and the apostle doth not act herein as a civil magistrate, commanding about civil affairs for the public welfare; but as a minister of Christ, with respect to a spiritual end, as appears by what follows.

<sup>a Rom. 13.</sup> <sup>b 2 Cor. 9.</sup> <sup>c Col. 4. 5.</sup> <sup>d 1 Pet. 2. 12.</sup> <sup>e Or, of no man.</sup> 12 *That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack || of nothing.

He enforceth his commands by a twofold reason, the former is ab honesto, the other is ab utili. First, That ye may walk honestly, or decently, as the word is rendered, 1 Cor. xiv. 40. Toward them that are without; that is, Gentiles, infidels, so they are described, 1 Cor. v. 12; Col. iv. 5; as those that were received into the church of Christ are said to be within. The apostle would have them honour the gospel before the heathen in such civil actions which they did approve of, and were able to judge of, not understanding the higher mysteries of faith and gospel holiness; which he calls walking in wisdom towards them that are without, Col. iv. 5. The other reason is ab utili, That ye may have lack of nothing; or, of no man, have no need to beg of any man. It might offend and be a stumbling-block to the Gentiles, to see Christians to beg of any, and especially of themselves, for their necessary relief. Or, of nothing; that you may by your own labour be able to subsist, and not depend upon others, and so not be a burden to friends, or a scandal to strangers. For every man to subsist by his own labour, was the primitive law to Adam, Gen. iii. 19, commended often by Solomon in his Proverbs, and enjoined by the apostle to believing Christians, 2 Thess. iii. 10.

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, <sup>a See Lev. 19. 28.</sup> <sup>b Deut. 14. 1.</sup> <sup>c 2 Sam. 12. 20.</sup> <sup>d Eph. 2. 12.</sup> even as others <sup>b</sup> which have no hope.

The apostle now proceeds to a new discourse, about moderating of their sorrow for the dead, not for all, but the dead in Christ. He had either observed their sorrow in this kind excessive, while with them; or else by Timothy, or some other way, he had heard of it. Wherein observe in general, he doth not condemn their sorrow, but the excess of it. Grace destroys not nature, but regulates it; nor reason, but rectifies it; nor takes away the affections, but moderates them; doth not make us Stoics, or stocks. Affections are good when set upon right objects, and kept within due bounds, and this Christianity doth teach, and grace doth effect. And to mourn for the dead, especially the dead in the Lord, is a duty that both nature and grace teach, and God requireth; and the contrary is reproved by God himself, Isa. lviii. 1, and to die unlamented is reckoned as a curse, Jer. xxii. 18, 19. It is only then immoderate sorrow the apostle here means; and to prevent it, or remove it, gives many instructions and arguments. And he supposeth their ignorance might be a great occasion of it, and so instructs them about the doctrine of the resurrection, and Christ's personal coming again, which by the light of nature, while Gentiles, they knew nothing of, or were very uncertain in. And the apostle, because of his short stay among them, had not had opportunity to instruct them about these things, and therefore doth it here distinctly and fully; as he doth the Corinthians, hearing there were some among them, even of the church itself, that said there was no resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 12. It is such a mystery to reason, that it is hard to believe it; and the most learned of the heathen doubted of it, and some exploded and scoffed at it, as we find, Acts xvii. 18, even such as yet held the immortality of the soul. And hereupon in this verse the apostle doth assert two things in general to relieve them against immoderate sorrow. 1. He calls the death of the saints a sleep. (see Dan. xii. 2; Luke viii. 52; John xi. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 20, 51.) whether referring to those that are already dead, or do die, or that shall afterwards die; and why should they then excessively mourn? After sleep we know there is awaking, and by sleep nature is revived; and so it shall be with the saints in death. Hereupon the grave is called a bed, Isa. lvii. 2; and the burying-place, cemeteryum, a place of sleep. And, 2. There is hope in their death, as Prov. xiv. 32; there is hope concerning their happy state after death, and hope of their resurrection, and seeing them again at Christ's coming; it is not an eternal farewell. This the apostle here intends. And they will be then seen in a more excellent state, and probably so seen then as that their Christian friends may know them; else the apostle's argument would not have so much strength, and so well suit the present case. The heathen and infidels buried their dead without this hope, as they are said to be without hope, Eph. ii. 12; and so were excessive in their sorrows, which they expressed by cutting their flesh, making themselves bald, doleful songs, and mourning ejaculations, expressed sometimes upon instruments; and which the Jews had learned from them, as appears by God's often reproving it, and Christ's putting out the minstrels, Matt. ix. 23, 24; and as that which he forbade them, Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1. And the apostle may refer to this in the text, as that which is not only grievous to nature, but dishonourable to a Christian's faith, hope, and profession. We are hereby the betrayers of our faith and hope, and the things we preach will seem false and feigned. Cypr. de Mortalitate. And though man is said to die without hope as to a return to his former state of life here, Job xiv. 7—10; yet not with respect to the life at the resurrection, in them that die in Jesus.

<sup>e</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 13. 14 For <sup>e</sup> if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so <sup>e</sup> them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

As in the former verse the apostle made use of the hope of the resurrection, as an argument against immoderate sorrow, so here he proves the resurrection by Christ's rising again, &c. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again; he supposeth they did believe that Christ died and rose again; it was that which he had taught them, and which they had received, as being the two first and fundamental points of the Christian faith, without which they could not have been a church of Christ. Quest. But how doth Christ's resurrection prove the resurrection of the saints? he being the eternal Son of God, might have a privilege above all. Ans. This first shows the thing is possible, God hath already done it in Christ. 2. Christ rose for our justification, Rom. iv. 25; and in justification sin is pardoned which brought in death, and which alone by its guilt can keep under the dominion of death. 3. Christ rose not as a private person, but as the Head of the body, his church, Eph. i. 4, 20, &c., and so loosed the bands of death, and conquered the grave, for his people. 4. As the first-fruits, 1 Cor. xv. 20, which was a pledge and assurance of the whole harvest to follow. 5. God hath predestinated the elect, whom he foreknew, to be conformed to the image of his Son, Rom. viii. 29. 6. He is not complete without them, Eph. i. 23. Lastly, They sleep in Jesus, as the text speaks; not only live but die in him, Rev. xiv. 13, their union remains with Christ even in death. Even so them also which sleep in Jesus; by which words also the apostle distinguisheth believers from all others; it is only they shall have the privilege of this blessed resurrection who sleep in Jesus. And perseverance in Christ to the end is here also intimated. Will God bring with him; and though their resurrection is not expressed in the text, yet it is implied in this saying. By God is meant, as some understand here, the Son of God, who is to come from heaven, chap. i. 10, and who will bring the spirits of just men, made perfect in heaven, with him, and unite them to their bodies, which cannot be done without their resurrection: whereby the apostle gives another argument against excessive sorrow for the saints departed, they shall return from heaven again with Christ at his coming. Others understand it of God the Father, who will raise the dead, and then bring them to his Son, and bring them with him to heaven. Those that read the text, those that sleep, or die, for Jesus, and so confine it only to martyrs, restrain it to too narrow a sense.

<sup>e</sup> 1 Kings 13. 17, 18. & 20. 26. <sup>f</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 51. 15 For this we say unto you <sup>e</sup> by the word of the Lord, that <sup>e</sup> we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

The apostle here sets down particularly the manner of the Lord's coming, the method and order how all the saints shall then meet with him and with one another, which we find not so distinctly in any other scripture; and whereby he further prosecutes the argument he is upon. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord; that they might not think that what he speaks was either by some tradition from others, or an invention of his own; and that is ground enough for faith, to which our judgment and reason ought to be captivated. That we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep: that which he saith here about the resurrection, Christ's coming, the ministry of angels, the sound of a trumpet, the voice of Christ at that day, we have it in the evangelists; but the method and order of all the saints meeting together, and meeting the Lord in the air, we find not in any express words before written; the apostle speaks it here by extraordinary revelation, which is the word of the Lord, though not then written. And this order is expressed, 1. Negatively. The saints then living upon earth shall not be with Christ sooner than those that were fallen asleep, and be caught up into the air while the others are in the grave; and the apostle speaks as if he should be one of that number: surely he could not think the coming of Christ should be in the age wherein he lived; he speaks otherwise, 2 Thess. ii. 2; or that his life should be prolonged to that day; for the time of his departure, he saith, was at hand, 2 Tim. iv. 6. But he looks upon the whole body of saints together, and himself as one of that number, and so speaks, we which are alive and remain, &c.; as in 1 Cor. xv. 51, We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. 2. Affirmatively. The dead in Christ shall rise first, that is, before they that are alive shall be caught up into the air; they shall stay till the rest be risen: as 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, We shall not all sleep, but be changed, and in a moment; which the apostle calls clothed upon, 2 Cor. v. 2, and which he rather desired than to be unclothed, ver. 4: and then they that are dead in Christ shall rise, and be united to these in one visible body.

16 For <sup>e</sup> the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with <sup>b</sup> the trump of God: <sup>a</sup> and the dead in Christ shall rise first:

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout; the means which effect this. The word shout in the Greek signifies a command, or word of command; al-luding to mariners or soldiers summoned to be ready with their assistance when called upon; and may refer to the angels whom Christ now summons to attend and assist in that day. And the evangelist speaks of the voice of Christ, John v. 28, which is there said to raise the dead. Whether this is an oral shout and voice from the mouth of Christ, or only an expression of his Divine power, whereby he shall awaken them that sleep out of their graves, is a question I shall not be curious about. With the voice of the archangel: Christ is said to come with all the holy angels, Matt. xxv. 31; and to send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, Matt. xxiv. 31. But here is mentioned only the archangel and his voice, instead of all the rest, they all coming under his conduct. Though there be not such distinct orders of angels as the schoolmen affirm, yet there is order among them, as archangel implies. And whether he will put forth an audible voice or not at that day, or whether this archangel be not the same with Christ himself, who is the Head of all principality and power, Col. ii. 10, I leave it as doubtful; but, however, it is certain the angels shall be ministering to Christ at that day, especially in the resurrection of the elect, Matt. xxiv. 31, and severing the righteous from the wicked, Matt. xiii. 41. And with the trump of God; as 1 Cor. xv. 52. And whether this is to be taken literally, and distinct from the shout and voice before mentioned, or used only to show forth the Divine power of God that shall gather all the elect together out of their graves, as the trumpet in war gathers the scattered army, or as the silver trumpets under the law assembled the congregation of Israel, I shall not be positive. And this is the account of the saints that are raised.

17 <sup>b</sup> Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them <sup>1</sup> in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so <sup>m</sup> shall we ever be with the Lord.

Christ will have a church to the end of the world, and some will be found alive at his coming, and will be caught up, or snatched up, to denote its suddenness, it may be in the arms of angels, or by some immediate attractive power of Christ; and it will be together with them that are now raised from the dead; they shall all ascend in one great body, and it will be in the clouds; as Christ himself ascended in a cloud, Acts i. 9, and so will return again, Matt. xxiv. 30, he making the clouds his chariots, Psal. civ. 3. To meet the Lord in the air: 1. To congratulate his coming, when others shall flee and tremble. 2. To put honour upon him; as the angels will also attend him for that end. 3. To receive their final discharge. 4. To be visibly joined to their Head. 5. To be assistants with him in judging of the world, and to reign with him upon earth. And whether the last judgment will be upon the earth, or in the air, I shall not determine; but after this Christ and his saints shall never part. Their first meeting shall be in the air, and their continuance will be with him while he is in this lower world, and after that they shall ascend with him into heaven, and so be for ever with him. Augustine imagined that the saints that are found alive shall in their rapture die, and then immediately revive, because it is appointed to all men once to die; but the apostle saith expressly, We shall not all die, but we shall all be changed, 1 Cor. xv. 51.

<sup>g</sup> Matt. 24. 30, 31. <sup>h</sup> Acts 1. 11. <sup>i</sup> 2 Thess. 1. 7. <sup>j</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 52. <sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 23, 62.

<sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 51.

<sup>l</sup> Acts 1. 9. <sup>m</sup> Rev. 11. 12. <sup>n</sup> John 12. 26. & 14. 3. <sup>o</sup> 17. 24.

<sup>n ch. 5. 11.</sup> 18 <sup>U Or, exhort.</sup> Wherefore || comfort one another with these words.

The apostle makes application of all this discourse to the end he designed, which was to comfort them under their sorrows for departed Christian friends; and he saith not, be ye comforted, but comfort one another, to put them upon the great duty of Christian sympathy; though this is a duty we owe to all, yet especially to the saints, and more especially of the same particular congregation. And funeral sorrows are usually most afflictive, and therefore need to be allayed with words of comfort; and not with any words, but, saith the apostle, with these words, or these things, as the Hebrew, the things or words that he had before laid before them. The philosophers used many arguments against the fears of death, and for comfort under funeral sorrows, but Christians should fetch their comforts from the Scriptures. These are the best, most solid, most durable, and universal, and therefore the apostle commends them to the believing Romans, Rom. xv. 4, as here to these Thessalonians particularly. These considerations, that those which sleep in Jesus shall rise again, and that we shall meet them again, and we and they shall be for ever with the Lord together, are a great relief against the sorrows of their departure hence. And the comforts arising hence may serve to support under other sorrows as well as these, which the apostle also might intend in the words.

CHAP. V

The apostle proceedeth to show that Christ's coming will be sudden, exhorting Christians to watch and be sober, so as not to be taken by surprise, 1—11. He beseecheth them to respect their spiritual guides, 12, 13; and giveth divers other precepts, 14—22; concluding with a prayer and salutations, 23—28.

<sup>a Matt. 24.</sup> BUT <sup>3, 36.</sup> of <sup>Acts 1. 7.</sup> the times and the seasons, brethren, <sup>b ch. 4. 2.</sup> ye have no need that I write unto you.

But when shall these things be? might some say, as the disciples asked Christ, Matt. xxiv. 3, 36; Acts i. 6. He tells them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons; not that they knew them in particular already, but there was no need they should know them. It may be some among them were too curious to inquire. He doth not say they could not be known, as being put into God's own power, as Acts i. 7; but, ye have no need that I write of them. The apostle, as in his preaching, so in his writing, had respect to what was most needful and profitable for the people: as when the disciples asked, Are there few that be saved? Christ answered them in that which was most needful to them, Luke xiii. 24: and so doth the apostle here; instead of acquainting them with the times and seasons, he puts them upon watchfulness, that they might not be surprised, as in the following verses; and to improve the knowledge they had already, which was this, that Christ's coming would be sudden.

<sup>c Matt. 24.</sup> 2 For yourselves know perfectly that <sup>43, 44, & 25.</sup> the day of the Lord so cometh as a <sup>13. Luke 12.</sup> thief in the night. <sup>39, 41.</sup> <sup>2 Pet. 3. 10.</sup> <sup>Rev. 3. 3.</sup> <sup>& 16. 15.</sup>

By times and seasons then, before mentioned, he meant the time of the Lord's coming, or he applies what he spoke in general to this particular, which he here calls the day of the Lord. And though they knew not the particular time, yet they did know this, it would be sudden and unexpected, coming as a thief in the night, Rev. xvi. 15: the comparison is to be restrained only to the suddenness of it; for his coming will be welcome, and so not as a thief, to all that believe. And it is called the day of the Lord here and elsewhere, 1 Cor. iii. 13; Phil. i. 6, 10, and that day, 2 Tim. i. 18, not to be taken for a natural day, but a certain period of time. Any eminent manifestation of God, either in works of mercy or judgment, is called his day in Scripture, Isa. ii. 12; Jer. xlvi. 10. And so because Christ will be more eminently manifested now than ever before, therefore his coming is called his day; and that it would be sudden they did not only know, but know perfectly, or accurately; Eph. v. 15, circumspectly: there could be only conjectures about the particular time: the influence hereof was powerful upon their hearts, and so they may be said to know it perfectly. In religion, knowledge is not perfect which is not operative.

3 For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then <sup>d 1s. 13.6.—9.</sup> sudden destruction cometh <sup>Luke 17. 27,</sup> upon them, <sup>26, 29, & 21.</sup> as travail upon a woman <sup>34, 35.</sup> with child; and they shall not escape. <sup>2 Thess. 1. 9.</sup> <sup>e Jer. 13. 21.</sup> <sup>Hos. 13. 13.</sup>

For when they shall say, Peace and safety: by these words the apostle proves that the day of the Lord will come unexpected, by the security that will be then found in the world. They say it in their hearts and practice, if not with their tongues. And he useth two words the better to express the greatness of this security, present peace, and no danger of sliding, as the words import. And as the effect of Christ's coming will be destruction to such, which will be salvation to others, Heb. ix. 28; so through their security it will be sudden destruction, which he describes under the similitude of travail upon a woman with child, which doth for the most part come of a sudden, and is the most exquisite pains in nature, and is often made use of in Scripture to set forth extremity of misery, Isa. xiii. 8; Jer. xiii. 21. And these pains come upon her unavoidably; so saith the apostle of these men's destruction, and they shall not escape, or in no wise escape, expressed in the Greek by two negatives, which do strongly affirm.

4 'But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. <sup>f Rom. 13.</sup> <sup>12, 13.</sup> <sup>1 John 2. 8.</sup>

Lest these believing Thessalonians should be terrified in their minds by this discourse, he adds this by way of comfort to them, that they shall not be surprised as others; though they did not know the particular time of Christ's coming, yet it would not find them unprepared for it as the world would be; and the reason he gives is, because they are not in darkness. Darkness is to be taken metaphorically; and so in Scripture it is taken either for sin, ignorance, or misery. The two former are here meant, especially ignorance. These Thessalonians were brought into the light of the gospel; they had the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation by him; particularly they knew of his coming, and the manner and ends of his coming, which the infidel world did not; and though Christ's coming would be to others as a thief in the night, yet not to them.

5 Ye are all <sup>g Eph. 5. 14.</sup> the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

And because the night is the time of darkness, and the day of light, he therefore hereby describes their present state: 1. Positively, Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; which is a Hebraism: Ye are partakers of a spiritual light, and this light is not the darker light of nature, or the light of prophecy, which the Jews had, compared to a lamp, 2 Pet. i. 19; but ye are children of the day, as the time of the gospel is called day, Rom. xiii. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 2. 2. Negatively, We are not of the night, nor of darkness; your state is exceedingly different from other Gentiles, and from what it once was, as the light is from darkness, and day from night: not as if there was no ignorance remaining in them, for the best men see but through a glass, darkly, 1 Cor. xiii. 12; but the apostle compares them with their former estate when they were Gentiles, and with the Jews under the law; and with respect to their state in Christ, they were not children of the night, or, as to their state, of the night, but children of light, and of the day.

h Matt. 25. 5. 6
i Matt. 24. 42. & 25. 13.
Rom. 13. 11, 12, 13. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

6 <sup>h</sup>Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but <sup>i</sup>let us watch and be sober.

The apostle draws this inference from the foregoing verses in a twofold duty: 1. Negative; Let us not sleep, as do others; sleep is not proper for the children of the day, but of the night. And as the night and darkness are to be taken metaphorically, so the sleep. And though it hath several acceptations in Scripture, yet it is here taken for security. As the natural sleep binds up the senses, and men are not aware of approaching danger, so doth the sleep of the soul: it darkens the mind, stupifies the spiritual sense, that men prepare not for the coming of Christ, nor to avoid the destruction that will then come suddenly upon them. Rom. xiii. 11, 12, is a place parallel to this: It is high time to awake out of sleep, &c. The night is far spent, the day is at hand, &c. 2. Positive; Let us watch: watching stands contrary to sleep; the senses are then in exercise, which were bound up by sleep. When the soul is watching, the faculties are in a spiritual exercise to apprehend both our interest and our duty, to take hold of that which is good, and to avoid the evil, the evil of sin and the evil of suffering. But watching here in the text especially refers to the coming of Christ, to prepare for it, that we may not be surprised as others will, and to be in a readiness to be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless, 2 Pet. iii. 14. And be sober: sobriety is reckoned to be one branch of temperance, and one of the fruits of the Spirit, Gal. v. 23, and one link of the chain of grace, 2 Pet. i. 6. It hath its name in the Greek, signifying either soundness of mind, or continency of mind; a mind kept or held within its due bounds. It is usually taken for moderation in meats and drinks, setting bounds to the appetite; but it extends to all earthly things, as honour, riches, pleasures, to have our affections to them, our cares about them, our endeavours after them, kept within due bounds; and all this upon the account of Christ's coming, as a necessary preparation for it: see 1 Cor. vii. 29—31; 1 Pet. iv. 7. Sobriety and watching are here joined together, and so 1 Pet. iv. 7; v. 8. For as intemperance in meats and drinks makes the body dull and sleepy, so without temperance and sobriety the soul will be disenabled to watch.

k Luke 21. 34, 35.
Rom. 13. 13.
1 Cor. 15. 34.
Eph. 5. 14.
1 Acts 2. 15.

7 For <sup>k</sup>they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken <sup>l</sup>are drunken in the night.

The apostle enforceth the former duties of watchfulness and sobriety from the consideration of their present state. They that sleep choose the night to sleep in, and they that would be drunk choose the night for it: drunkenness being so shameful a vice, especially in the apostles' time, that men were ashamed to be seen drunk in the day-time; see Acts ii. 15; Eph. v. 12, 13; and in ancient times they had their feasts in the night. Ye therefore that are not in the night of your former ignorance, ought neither to be found in the sleep of security, nor in the sin of drunkenness, whereby may be meant also any kind of intemperance; for a man may be drunk, and not with wine, Isa. xxix. 9; drunk with pleasure, with cares, with sensual love and desires, with passion, and by spiritual judgments upon the soul, Isa. xxix. 10.

m In. 39. 17.
Eph. 6. 14.
16, 17.

8 But let us, who are of the day, be sober, <sup>m</sup>putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

The apostle here commands two spiritual duties, and the former is sobriety; which he mentioned before, ver. 6, as a preparation for Christ's coming; but here, as that which was suitable to their present state, and as standing opposite to that drunkenness in the foregoing verse. It is not sufficient to abstain from vice, without practising the contrary virtue. The other duty is, putting on their spiritual armour. The former was to secure them against the good things of the world, the latter against the evil of it, that they be not overcome of either. The armour he mentions is spiritual. Soldiers have their breastplate and helmet for their bodies, so hath the Christian these for his soul. As the breastplate and helmet secure the principal seats of the natural life, the head and the heart, so doth the Christian's armour secure the life of the soul, and therefore these two pieces are only mentioned, as being most necessary. His breastplate is faith and love. First, faith; in Eph. vi. 16, it is called a shield; here, a breastplate. Great things are ascribed to faith in Scripture; it is that whereby we are justified, adopted, united to Christ, have our hearts purified, &c.; but here it is to be considered as a defensive grace; and it doth defend as it assents to the doctrine of the gospel as true, particularly the doctrine of the resurrection, and the coming of Christ, with the effects and attendants thereof, before mentioned. And as it doth depend upon God's faithfulness and all-sufficiency to perform his promises, and applying them to ourselves for our support and comfort, so faith is a breastplate or defence; and as it is a defence against temptations, so particularly against that sudden destruction that will come upon the secure world, before mentioned. Secondly, love; and love is joined with faith to show it to be a true and lively faith, when it worketh by love, Gal. v. 6; and love, when it worketh, produceth many blessed effects, and particularly, as faith, it will be a breastplate of defence. It will defend against the persecutions and afflictions of the world: Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it, Cant. viii. 7. Slavish fear will overcome us if we want love to defend against it, when true religion is under disgrace and persecuted in the world: love will defend against apostacy, and so help us to persevere to the coming of Christ, which the apostle had been speaking of; and love being seated in the heart, is well compared to a breastplate that encompasseth the heart. Secondly, the other piece of armour is the helmet, so called in the Greek from encompassing the head; and this helmet is here said to be the hope of salvation. In Eph. vi. 17, we read of the helmet of salvation, but the hope of it is there to be understood, for salvation is no grace of the Spirit, and so, of itself, no part of a Christian's armour. Hope of salvation is of great use to a Christian many ways: it is a cordial to comfort him, a spur to quicken him, a staff to support him, a bridle to restrain him, and so also a helmet to defend him: and therefore no wonder that the apostle calls true hope a lively hope, 1 Pet. i. 3. And as itself is lively, so it is a defence to the life of the soul, as a helmet is to the life of the body. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, saith Solomon; but if quite disappointed and lost, the heart sinks and dies. Let afflictions and distresses break in like a flood, yet hope will keep the head above water; and if Satan assault the soul to drive it into despair, this hope of salvation will be a defence to it. So that the Christian's armour mentioned in this verse are faith, love, and hope, which divines call the three theological graces, and placed together by the apostle, 1 Cor. xiii. 13. And these the saints, who are children of the day, are to put on, whereby they shall be armed for the coming of Christ with this armour of light, Rom. xiii. 12, and against the destruction which will then surprise the children of the night.

n Rom. 9. 22.
ch. 1. 10.
1 Pet. 2. 8.
Jude 4.
o 2 Thes. 2. 13, 14.

9 For <sup>n</sup>God hath not appointed us to wrath, <sup>o</sup>but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ,

For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation: some expositors make these words an argument to all the duties of holiness mentioned both in this and the foregoing chapters; and it is true, that the knowledge of our being elected, or appointed to salvation, doth not in the elect encourage to sin or sloth, as some affirm, but engage to all holiness: but I had rather restrain the words, and that either to the hope of salvation, mentioned immediately before, and then the sense to be this, we may well hope for salvation seeing God hath appointed us to it; or, to his whole discourse about the coming of Christ, and so they may give the reason why the dead in Christ must rise, and must, with the living saints, meet the Lord in the air, and be for ever with him; yea, and why they need not fear the destruction that will come upon others at that day, and why they should be watchful for its coming, because, saith the apostle, God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, &c. Having spoken of two sorts of persons, the children of the day, and children of the night, and the sudden destruction of the one and salvation of the other at the coming of Christ, he here ascends to the first original of both, which is God's appointment, which is an act of God's sovereign will, determining men's final estates; which seems to be more than mere prescience or foreknowledge, an act of God's mind, as appears by Rom. viii. 29; 1 Pet. i. 2, or more than appointing of the means and way of salvation; but not of persons to be saved, or of persons only materially, as to the number how many, but not formally, or individually, who they are that shall be saved; whereas the apostle writes of some whose names are in the book of life, Phil. iv. 3, and that from the foundation of the world, Rev. xvii. 8, and chosen before the foundation of the world, Eph. i. 4: otherwise, every man's salvation would depend more upon the uncertainty of man's will, than the eternal and immutable will of God; whereas whatever God works in man's salvation, is according to the counsel of his will, Eph. i. 11; and God's counsel is certain, immutable, and eternal, extending not only to actions and means, but persons, Rom. viii. 29, 30. Neither is this appointment of God grounded upon the foresight of man's faith; for if faith be the gift of God, this gift proceeds from God's counsel and fore-appointment; else men may say, That I may be saved I must thank God, but that I am saved I must thank myself: and hence there is a possibility for no man to be saved, and all the counsels of God in Christ to be made frustrate. But this is no place for controversy; only where God appoints to salvation, he appoints also to means, and without the means there is no attainment of the end, Eph. i. 4; 1 Pet. i. 2. And the apostle here makes salvation stand opposite to wrath; what before he called destruction, ver. 3, he here calleth wrath, because God's wrath produceth it, and is manifested in it. And those that are saved are delivered from it; and the supreme reason is, because they were not appointed to it, but to salvation, and none that are appointed to the one are appointed to the other. The vessels of wrath and of mercy are set in an opposite distinction, Rom. ix. 22, 23, and so in the text, to illustrate the mercy of God the more in them that are saved. And whereas the apostle calls it the obtaining of salvation, it implies man's endeavours for it, though he be appointed of God to it; and speaking positively, not only of himself, but these believing Thessalonians also, he hath appointed us to obtain salvation, doth not this also imply that some good assurance of salvation may be obtained in this world. By our Lord Jesus Christ; the decrees of salvation are executed in him, and by him; and there is no salvation in any other, Acts iv. 12. And he saveth not only by his doctrine and example, as some have affirmed, but by his blood as the meritorious, and his Spirit as the efficient, cause of salvation. Whether the infinite wisdom of God could have found out another way I shall not inquire, but this it hath pitched upon, wherein mercy and justice are admirably glorified together, and the highest engagement imaginable laid upon men to love, serve, and honour their Creator. And as the freeness of God's grace is manifested in his appointing men to salvation, so the exceeding riches of it, in saving them by Jesus Christ. And whereas two things are necessary to it, the reconciling us unto God, and restoring his image in us, the former we have by the merit of his blood, and the latter by the operation of his Spirit; so that we have no ground for that fond opinion, that if men walk honestly and uprightly, they may be saved in any religion.

<sup>p</sup> Rom. 14.
8, 9, 2 Cor.
8. 15.

10 <sup>p</sup> Who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

Some refer these words to the latter end of the foregoing chapter, where the apostle had spoken of the saints' death and resurrection, which is their sleeping and waking, as they are here called. And their being for ever with the Lord, is here called their living together with him. And lest it might be thought that none should be with Christ until they awaked at the resurrection, he therefore speaks of living with Christ even when we sleep. He had spoken of sleep in another sense, ver. 6, as meant of security; but here meant of death, as it is taken chap. iv. 14. And as watching is set opposite to the former sleep, so here waking to the latter, which is a resurrection from death. And we hence gather that the soul doth not sleep with the body, but lives with the Lord when that sleeps in the grave; as the apostle expected to be with the Lord upon the dissolution of his body, Phil. i. 23, and he mentions it as the privilege of other saints as well as his own, 2 Cor. v. 1. When we sleep we are with him only in our souls; when we wake we shall be with him both in body and soul. And both these we have from Christ's death. If he had not died, heaven had been shut against our souls, for our entrance into the holiest of all is by his blood, and the veil of his flesh rent for us, Heb. x. 19, 20; and the grave would have shut up our bodies, and there would have been no resurrection; so that our living with Christ, both when we sleep and when we wake, springs out of his death. Others carry these words no further than the foregoing verse, showing how we are saved by Christ; saith the apostle, he died for us. As God appointed persons to be saved, and Christ to be the person to be saved by, so also to be saved by his death; with respect to his Father he is said to be put to death, 1 Pet. iii. 18; with respect to his own freedom and willingness, he is said here to die for us. And his dying for us implieth the greatness of our guilt, and expresseth the greatness of his own love, John xv. 13. He loved us, and thereupon would have us live with him; and he died that we and he may live together. And so he may be said to die for our salvation, the substance whereof consisteth in our living with him. To live with so glorious a Person, and a Person that is full of love to us, and shall then be perfectly beloved of us, and that stands in many near relations to us, and whose presence will have such a blessed influence upon us, and in such a place as heaven is, and that for ever, surely carries the substance of our salvation in it. And if this was the end of his death, surely it was more than to be an example of faith, patience, and submission to God, or to confirm to us the doctrine he preached; it was to satisfy Divine justice, and obtain the pardon of our sin, and merit for us the privilege of living with him.

11 <sup>a</sup> Wherefore || comfort yourselves <sup>q</sup> ch. 4. 18.
together, and edify one another, even as <sup>r</sup> Or, exhort.
also ye do.

These words are an exhortation to the whole church of Thessalonica, to comfort and edify one another. Though the ministry is appointed to this by especial office, yet private Christians are to practise it to one another; the former doth it in way of authority, the latter in a way of charity. Comfort yourselves together: the apostle had laid before them many comfortable truths, which they were to comfort one another by; and if we read the words, exhort one another, it refers to the necessary duties of religion he had mentioned in this and the foregoing chapter. And edify one another; and this follows from both the former, as alluding to a house that is built up by degrees: and so is every church the house of God; and consisting of living stones, every part is to seek the building up of the whole; and by mutual exhortation and comfort the whole may be edified. Christians, then, are to be blamed that only seek to edify themselves, and much more they who pull down, and divide, and destroy, instead of building-up. Even as also ye do: and what the apostle exhorted them to, they were already in the practice of; for which he here again commends them, as he had done upon several accounts before, not to flatter, but to encourage them to proceed, and to set before other churches their example for imitation.

12 And we beseech you, brethren, <sup>t</sup> to know them which labour among you, and <sup>r</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
are over you in the Lord, and admonish <sup>u</sup> 18. Phil. 2.
you; <sup>v</sup> 29. 1 Thim. 5.
<sup>w</sup> 17. Heb. 13.
7, 17.

13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. <sup>x</sup> And be at peace among yourselves. <sup>y</sup> Mark 2. 50.

The apostle spake before of their private duties as Christians to one another, now of their duties to their pastors and teachers, lest by what he had said they might think the ministry needless. It seems this church was settled under officers, which is called an organical church. And though the apostle himself was driven from them by persecution, yet they were not without ministers and teachers; and they owed a great duty to them, to which he doth lovingly exhort them. And he describes them not by the name of their office, as pastors, elders, or ministers, but by the work of it. Them which labour among you; the word imports diligent labour, causing weariness, as 1 Tim. v. 17, who labour in the word and doctrine; which shows both the nature of the work of the ministry, it is laborious; and the duty of ministers therein, not to seek the honour and profit of the office, and refuse the labour of it; they have the work of teaching, and of oversight or government, and admonition, and all require labour. And are over you in the Lord: the same word is used 1 Tim. v. 17, and translated rule; it signifies that superintendency and precedency, which the elders or ministers have over their respective flocks; and it is said to be in the Lord, either to distinguish them from civil officers, or to show both the original, rule, and end of their office; it is from the Lord by institution, and to be managed according to his laws, and directed to his service and glory as its end. And admonish you: the word is often used in the New Testament, Acts xx. 31; Rom. xv. 14; Col. i. 28; iii. 16; and signifies either the putting into the mind by way of instruction, or upon the mind by way of counsel, threatening, or reproof; and that either publicly or privately. Now the duty they owed to them is, 1. To know them, as in the former words; that is, to own them in their office, to have regard to their teaching, and to submit to their government, and to reward their labours; as knowing is often taken in Scripture to express the acts of the will and affection, and the actions also of the outward man, as well as of the mind; as Psal. i. 6; ci. 4. 2. To esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake; ὑπερεκτιμῆσατέ; see Rom. v. 20; 2 Cor. vii. 4. The words in the Greek carry such an emphasis as cannot well be expressed in English, importing esteem and love to an hyperbole; their love was to be joined with esteem, and esteem with love, and both these to abound and superabound towards them. We read of a double honour, 1 Tim. v. 17, which contains the whole duty of people to their ministers. For their work's sake: whether of teaching, ruling, or admonition. Their work is in itself honourable, and work that tends to your salvation, and though their persons be meant, yet to esteem and love them for their work; or if upon any other account they deserve it of you, yet their work is to be the chief reason thereof; especially considering that their work more immediately respected them of this church rather than any others; and their labour was amongst them; or, as some read it, in you, to instruct, edify, and comfort your inward man. And be at peace among yourselves; some copies read it, with them, ἀλλήλοις for ἑαυτοῖς, by a little alteration of the Greek word; and then it still refers to their teachers, they should be at peace, or live in peace, with them; for oftentimes dissensions arise betwixt ministers and people, whereby their edification is hindered. But I rather follow our own translation; and so it is a new duty of the people towards one another, to preserve mutual peace among themselves, and yet these words may respect the former. For if the people give honour and respect to their ministers, it may be a means to preserve peace among themselves: among the Corinthians, the applauding of some of their teachers, and the contempt of others, made great schisms and divisions amongst them. Our Saviour useth these very words to his disciples, Mark ix. 50, from whence the apostle might take them. And the duty of peace he often presseth in his Epistles, Rom. xiv. 19; 1 Cor. vii. 15; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Col. iii. 15; Heb. xii. 14; which was to prevent schism, which breaks the bonds of peace, and may make the labours of their teachers less successful.

14 Now we exhort you, brethren, <sup>1</sup>warn them that are unruly, <sup>2</sup>comfort the feeble-minded, <sup>3</sup>support the weak, <sup>4</sup>be patient toward all men.

Now we exhort you, brethren: some think the apostle now turns his speech to their teachers, whom he here calls brethren in a more peculiar sense, and because the duties here enjoined do more properly belong to the ministry. But others more truly judge he continues his discourse to the whole church, and the several members of it. The same duties are to be performed by both, though under a different obligation: as in the civil state all are to seek the good of the commonwealth, though the magistrates and the governors are more specially obliged by office. Warn them that are unruly; or admonish, as the same word is rendered in the former verse, here meant of brotherly, there of ministerial, admonition; wherein great prudence is to be used, as to time, place, persons, manner: and the unruly are such as keep not their place, alluding to soldiers that keep not their rank and station, and they are called in the margin disorderly, and that, 1. In civil respects, when men live without a calling, or, being in it, neglect it, or intrude into other men's business, and perform not the duties of their civil relations. 2. In natural respects, when men follow not the light of nature, and fulfil not the law of natural relations. 3. In spiritual respects, when men neglect or transgress the rules and order of their walking in their church state, either with respect to their teachers or one another. Admonition belongs to such, and is the first step of church censure when regularly performed. Comfort the feeble-minded; ἀλιγούψυχος, or the pusillanimous, men of little souls, as the word imports, such as dare not venture upon hazardous duties, or faint under the fears or feeling of afflictions, or are dejected under the sense of sin, and their own unworthiness, or fears of God's wrath, and assaulted by temptations which endanger their falling. Support the weak; ἀντίχεσθε: an allusion to such as lift at one end of the burden, to help to bear it, answering to the word συναντιλαμβάνεται, Rom. viii. 26, The Spirit helpeth our infirmities: and the weak are either the weak in knowledge, weak in faith, that understand not their own liberty in the gospel, Rom. xiv. 1; 1 Cor. viii. 9; and hereupon cannot practise as others do; their conscience is weak, 1 Cor. viii. 12; and so were in bondage to some ceremonial rites, when those that were strong stood fast in their liberty. These are to be supported, dealt tenderly with, and not to be despised, or rigorously used. Or, weak in grace, new converts, babes in Christ, tender plants, not well rooted in the gospel. Be patient toward all men: this duty is universal; the former concerned only the saints. The word signifies longanimity, or long-suffering, and is often attributed to God, Exod. xxxiv. 6; Rom. ix. 22. It consisteth in the deferring or moderating of anger, to wait without anger when men delay us, and to suffer without undue anger when they deal injuriously with us, whether they be good men or evil, believers or infidels, the strong or the weak, ministers or people.

15 *See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

These words seem directed to the guides of the church, who are called overseers, Acts xx. 28, and therefore the apostle requires them to see that none render evil, &c. Or if to the whole church, as before, then it is a solemn charge which they ought to be all circumspect in observing. And the charge is, 1. Negative, not to render evil for evil; which is to revenge themselves; and that is forbidden by the apostle, Rom. xii. 17, 19; 1 Pet. iii. 9; and is the resisting of evil forbidden by our Saviour, Matt. v. 39. But it is to be understood of private revenge rising out of malice, not of public censures, either civil or ecclesiastical, or of seeking reparations for injuries received in courts of justice according to law and equity. This private revenge cannot consist with that patience that he required towards all men in the foregoing verse, nor is it conformable to the example of Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 23, nor to the Christian calling and profession, 1 Pet. ii. 21. 2. Positive; good in itself, or that which is good to others, as the word is often taken, Matt. vii. 11; Luke i. 53; Gal. vi. 6; and so stands opposite here to the rendering of evil. And the word follow signifies an earnest following, which is sometimes taken in a bad sense, for persecution, Matt. v. 11, and sometimes in a good sense, as Heb. xii. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 11; and to follow good imports more than only to do good, 1 Pet. iii. 11, when the inward bent of the soul and the outward endeavours are towards doing good. And this ought to be ever, or always, that is, in all places, times, occasions, company. Man's course of life ought in this to be uniform, though his outward condition vary; sometimes to do good to the souls, sometimes to the bodies of men, and that either in a privative or positive good; preventing evil, or bestowing that which is good. Both among yourselves, and to all men: Do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10. As they say of good, the commoner the better; but the contrary of evil. Christians stand in a special relation to one another, but in a 1 Or. oversee.

2 Thess. 3.
11, 12.
3 Or. disorderly.
u Heb. 12. 12.
x Rom. 14. 1.
4 15. 1. Gal. 6. 1, 2. 7 Gal. 5. 22. Eph. 4. 2. Col. 3. 12. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

5 Lev. 19. 18.
Prov. 20. 22.
6 24. 29.
Matt. 5. 39.
44. Rom. 12.
17. 1 Cor. 6.
7. 1 Pet. 3. 9.
a Gal. 6. 10. ch. 3. 12.

common relation to all, and every relation ought to be filled up with good. As love is a common debt to all men, so the fruit of it, which is doing good. Our doing good should not be confined among Christians only of one way, opinion, or congregation; nor to men only under some limiting circumstances; but it should reach all men as we have ability, opportunity, and call, even enemies themselves, as our Saviour requires, Matt. v. 44. This is to act like God, and may commend religion to all men, and is not to be looked upon as commended by way of counsel, as the papists say, but commanded by precept. And it is not enough not to do evil, but we must do good: not to save a man's life when we have power to do it, is to kill him, as Christ argues, Mark iii. 4; so not to save a man's estate when we may, is to steal from him.

1<sup>2</sup> Cor. 8. 10.
Phil. 4. 4.

16 <sup>b</sup> Rejoice evermore.

Here the apostle adds more Christian duties, briefly expressed, and set close one to another; and they seem to have a mutual connexion, but not so relative to others as those before mentioned, but personal to themselves. He begins with the duty of rejoicing. Joy is an affection of the soul springing from the hope or possession of some suitable good. And it is either natural, which is common to men with beasts, arising from that good that is suitable to their several natures; or spiritual, which is joy wrought by the Spirit, and exercised upon spiritual objects. And thus the apostle here means, and is called rejoicing in the Lord, Phil. iv. 4, and joy in the Holy Ghost, Rom. xiv. 17; arising either from what spiritual good we already possess, or hope to possess, exhibita et promissa, Bernard; which is thereupon called a rejoicing in hope, Rom. v. 2; xii. 12. The apostle speaks here of the duty indefinitely, only requires it to be evermore; so Phil. iv. 4. Though God sometimes calls to mourning, yet it is no where said. Mourn evermore, because rejoicing ought to be in a more constant practice, and all spiritual mourning tends to it, and will end in it; and he commends it as seasonable to these Thessalonians, to support them under their present sufferings. The grounds of a Christian's joy always abide, and he is not only to retain it in the habit, but to mix it with all his sorrows and sufferings, as 1 Pet. i. 6, Ye greatly rejoice, though for a season in heaviness: whereas carnal mirth is mixed with sadness, Prov. xiv. 13. So that a Christian ought to rejoice in every condition, not only in prosperity but adversity, and especially when called to suffer for righteousness sake; as Matt. v. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 13. It is not only allowed but commanded. This joy is one great part of God's kingdom even in this world. Rom. xiv. 17; much more in the world to come. And therefore the apostle speaks of rejoicing evermore, whereas mourning is but for a time, and ends to the saints in this life.

c Luke 18. 1.
& 21. 36.

17 <sup>c</sup> Pray without ceasing.

Rom. 12. 12. Eph. 6. 18. Col. 4. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 7.

This is a means to maintain our rejoicing, and therefore next mentioned. Prayer is a making known our requests to God, Phil. iv. 6. And it is either mental, in the heart only, as Hannah's was; or vocal, expressed with the voice; or, as some add, vital: so good works have a voice to bring down blessings, as men's sins cry for vengeance. Without ceasing; not as the Euchites and Messalians of old, who hence thought no other duties were required, but always praying; but by the word in the text, is either meant a praying without fainting, as in the parable, Luke xviii. 1, and which the apostle calls a perseverance in prayer, Eph. vi. 18; Col. iv. 2; προσκαρτερεῖτε, or praying with strength, as the Greek word there imports, and so not to faint; so Rom. xii. 12. Or a praying in every thing, as Phil. iv. 6, In every thing let your requests be made known, &c. Or, in every season, as Eph. vi. 18; to take hold of the seasons of prayer. Or, in all seasons and times, whether good or bad, yet still to pray. And all this is meant by the word in the text, which is also used chap. i. 3; ii. 13; Rom. i. 9; and implies in general no more but a constant course of prayer, so Col. iv. 2, to watch unto prayer, as that the course of it be not interrupted by any diversions. As also to preserve a heart disposed to pray at all times, and to mingle ejaculatory prayers with the several actions of our lives: our wants are continual, and God will be acknowledged in all our supplies, and therefore we ought to pray continually.

18 <sup>d</sup> In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

d Eph. 5. 20
Col. 3. 17.

In every thing give thanks: when we have obtained mercy by prayer, then we are to give thanks, and whatever we may pray for, that we ought to give thanks for. And so by that understand and limit the general expression in the text. We are not to give thanks when we fall into sin, for that we ought not to pray for; yet if we have the pardon of it, or get any good by it, we should then give thanks: and so may be said concerning affliction; we are to give thanks in every condition, either of prosperity or adversity. And with all our supplications, we are to join thanksgivings, Phil. iv. 6; Col. iv. 2; and thanksgiving properly refers to some mercy received, whether privative or positive, temporal or spiritual, private or public, and we are in all these to give thanks. Though praising God may reach further, which is to adore the excellencies of his being as they are glorious in themselves, or the excellencies of his works as they are in themselves praiseworthy. And thanksgiving for mercy received is, 1. A taking notice of it as coming from God. 2. Setting a due value upon it. 3. A sense of God's goodness and our own unworthiness. 4. Praising him for it. For this is the will of God: some carry this as a motive to all the preceding duties; but rather to this last mentioned: as if this was in special the will of God, being a duty so much to his own glory and our good; and by will we must by a metonymy understand the thing willed, Eph. vi. 6; Col. iv. 12. It is required by the law of nature not written, which is part of God's will. The heathen are reproved for not being thankful, Rom. i. 21; and they made laws to punish it, and accounted it the greatest reproach, ingratum si dixeris omnia dixeris. And it is required by the law of God that is written. The moral law requires it; and the ceremonial law required offerings by way of thanksgiving, which we call gratulatory. And the gospel requires it, it being one of the gospel sacrifices, Heb. xiii. 15, and pleaseth the Lord better than the greatest of the legal sacrifices, Psal. lxxix. 30, 31: and it being said to be the will of God in the text, it must needs be pleasing to him. In Christ Jesus; either meant as this will of his is signified to us by him, not only by the law of nature, or of Moses, but by Christ Jesus; and so it may be of greater force upon Christians, and hereby it is to be looked upon as one of the commandments of Christ also. Or we may understand it, upon the account of Christ, and the great love of God in him. Though thanksgiving is due for the least mercy, yet God's will especially requires it with respect to Christ. And so especially of Christians who partake of Christ, and the love of God in him; as the apostle here adds, eis υμᾶς. Concerning you; or towards you in special: the heathens were obliged to thankfulness for rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, these common blessings; much more are Christians for the special blessings they receive by Christ Jesus.

19 <sup>e</sup> Quench not the Spirit.

e Eph. 4. 30.
1 Tim. 4. 14.

2 Tim. 1. 6. See 1 Cor. 14. 30.

That ye may be enabled to pray and give thanks, as before, Quench not the Spirit. And, by the figure meiosis, he means, cherish the Spirit. The Spirit is compared to fire, Matt. iii. 11; and he came down upon the apostles in the similitude of tongues of fire, Acts ii. 3; but the Spirit himself cannot be quenched; he means it therefore of his gifts and operations; which are either ordinary or extraordinary. Many had extraordinary gifts in the primitive times, of healing, tongues, government, prophecy, &c.; those that had them, without question, should have taken care not, by any fault of their own, to lose them. Especially that of prophecy, which the apostle prefers before all others, 1 Cor. xiv. 1, and mentions here in the following verse; and which the apostle exhorted Timothy to stir up in himself, 2 Tim. i. 6, as we stir up the fire to quicken it, so the word ἀναζωοποιεῖν imports. The like is required of ministers with respect to their ministerial gifts which are now given. But there are ordinary gifts and operations of the Spirit common to all Christians, as enlightening, quickening, sanctifying, comforting the soul: men by sloth, security, earthly encumbrances, inordinate affections, &c., may abate these operations of the Spirit, which the apostle calls the quenching it: the fire upon the altar was kept always burning by the care of the priests. Fire will go out either by neglecting it, or casting water upon it. By not exercising grace in the duties of religion, or by allowing sin in ourselves, we may quench the Spirit; as appears in David, Psal. li. 10—12. Not that the habits of grace may be totally extinguished in the truly regenerate, yet they may be abated as to degree and lively exercise. Yet those common illuminations and convictions of the Spirit which persons unregenerate, especially such that live under the gospel, do often find, may be totally lost, Heb. vi. 4—6; and we read of God's Spirit ceasing to strive with the old world, Gen. vi. 3, and the scribes and Pharisees resisting the Holy Ghost, Acts vii. 51, which were not persons regenerate. He may sometimes strive with men, but not overcome them. And there is a quenching of the Spirit in others as well as ourselves; people may quench it in their ministers by discouraging them, and in one another by bad examples, or reproaching the zeal and forwardness that they see in them.

f 1 Cor. 14.
1, 20.

20 'Despise not prophesyings.

Thereby we may quench the Spirit, which usually works upon men's minds and hearts by it. By prophecy is sometimes meant foretelling of things to come, and speaking by extraordinary revelation, 1 Cor. xiv. 29, 30; sometimes the Scriptures are so called, especially the Old Testament, 2 Pet. i. 21; and sometimes the interpretation and applying of Scripture, which is the same that we now call preaching, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. And the duty with respect to it, is not to despise it, to set it at nought as a thing of no worth. The word is often used in the New Testament, Luke xviii. 9; Acts iv. 11; Rom. xiv. 3, 10. But the apostle useth again the figure meiosis before mentioned, and means, prize, value, and highly esteem it, attend upon it, have great regard to it; it being an ordinance of God for instruction and edification, yea, and for conversion also, 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. Some despise it because of the outward meanness of the persons which prophesy; some, through a proud conceit of their own knowledge; some, by a contempt of religion itself. These Thessalonians had been commended for their great proficiency, and yet were still to attend upon prophesying in the church; which he calls prophesyings, in the plural number, referring either to the several prophets that prophesied, or to the several parts of their prophecy, or the times they prophesied. And the prophets were either such as prophesied only by an extraordinary gift, and immediate revelation, which some private members of the church had in those times, 1 Cor. xiv. 29, 30; or such as prophesied not only by gift, but office also, Eph. iv. 11.

g 1 Cor. 2. 11,
15. 1 John
4. 1.
h Phil. 4. a

21 'Prove all things; <sup>h</sup> hold fast that which is good.

Prove all things; this duty relates to the former; as they were to attend upon prophesyings, so to exercise a discerning judgment about what was prophesied; for all things is not to be taken here universally, but for doctrines and opinions in religion which were delivered by the prophets. The same which the apostle John requires, Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, &c.; δοκιμάετε and it is the same word there which in this text we read prove; alluding to gold or other metals, which are tried in the fire, or by a touchstone, as some think. And though there was a peculiar gift of discerning of spirits, 1 Cor. xii. 10, yet it is the duty of every Christian to try men's spirits and doctrines whether from God or no. The apostle speaks here to the saints in general, and so doth the apostle John, 1 John iv. 1. And men's doctrines are to be judged by the Scriptures as the standard of truth, as the Bereans were commended for searching the Scriptures about the apostle's doctrine, Acts xvii. 11; and the apostle prays for the Philippians, that they might discern things that differ, Phil. i. 10; and if they had not yet attained it as they ought, yet he prays that they might, and not be always babes, but such as the apostle speaks of, who have their senses exercised in the discerning of good and evil, Heb. v. 13, 14: the people are to look upon them as their guides and leaders, as they are called, Heb. xiii. 7, 17, and such as are to go before them in the searching and dispensing of truth; yet, because the best are but infallible, they ought to try their doctrine by the rule of truth. Which is that judgment of discretion which protestants allow to the people in their disputes with the papists against their doctrine of infallibility and implicit faith, which grounds the people's faith upon the authority of men, which ought to rest upon the authority of God. As we ought not easily to reject the authority and faith of the church, so not to believe with a blind faith, or obey with a blind obedience. Hold fast that which is good: the good here meant is truth, which is an intellectual good; the contrary to which is error, which is a mental evil. When we have proved men's doctrines and opinions, what we find agreeable to the Scriptures of truth we ought to hold fast. And though all truth hath a goodness in it, yet especially Divine truth, and the doctrine of the gospel, which the apostle calls, that good thing committed to Timothy, 2 Tim. i. 14. It is good with respect to the soul, and so better than any bodily good; and good that refers to eternity, and so better than any temporal good. Now this good we are to hold fast; to hold it fast against adversaries and all opposition, as some understand the word; to hold it as with both hands, against seducing doctrine, Satan's temptations, and the world's persecution. The same word is used concerning the good ground that held fast the seed of the word, Luke viii. 15. So 1 Cor. xi. 2, we are to retain the truth, but not detain it, as the heathen are said to do, Rom. i. 18, where we find also the same word as in the text. It is a duty much pressed by the apostles in their Epistles to the saints and churches that had received the gospel, that they would hold it fast, 2 Tim. i. 13; Tit. i. 9; Heb. iv. 14; Rev. ii. 13, 25; iii. 3. And there is holding fast the truth as well in practice as opinion, and which may be the ground of the name given to such as opposed the errors of antichrist before the word protestant was known, called fast-men.

22 <sup>i</sup> Abstain from all appearance of evil. <sup>i</sup> ch. 4. 12.

To make this verse have its connexion with the former, some expositors understand it of doctrines and opinions only; to take heed of opinions that seem erroneous, and not rashly to receive them without due examination. Though this sense is not to be excluded, yet the verse need not be confined to it, but to extend to practice also; as in worship to abstain from the show of idolatry; as to eat meat in an idol's temple was not always gross idolatry, but had some appearance of it, and therefore the apostle forbids it, 1 Cor. x. 14. And so in civil conversation, not only to abstain from vice, but the appearance of it; as of pride, covetousness, drunkenness, whoredom, &c.; and that both with respect to ourselves, lest by venturing upon that which hath some show of evil, we step into the evil itself; and with respect to others, that we may not occasion the taking offence though not justly given, or do that which may any way encourage a real evil in them by that appearance of it which they see in ourselves; yet we ought not upon this account to forbear the discharge of any necessary duty. Some read the words, Abstain from all kind of evil, Ἀπὸ παντὸς εἶδους πονηρίας, and the Greek word is so used by logicians: but here to insist on particulars is infinite. And thus the apostle concludes all these positive duties with a general precept which he leaves with them at the close of his Epistle; having dehorted them from many evils, now he exhorts them to abstain from the appearance of them.

23 And <sup>k</sup> the very God of peace <sup>k</sup> sanctify you wholly; and <sup>l</sup> I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body <sup>m</sup> be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. <sup>k</sup> Phil. 4. 9. <sup>l</sup> ch. 3. 13. <sup>m</sup> 1 Cor. 13.

The apostle here concludes all with prayer, as knowing all his exhortations and admonitions before given would not be effectual without God; and he prays for their sanctification and preservation. Though they were sanctified already, yet but in part, so that he prays for further progress in it to perfection, which he means by wholly; a word no where used by the apostle but in this place, and variously rendered; some render it throughout, some, perfectly, some, in every part, some, in all things, some, fully, and the French, entirely. It may refer to all the parts of holiness, and the degrees of holiness, and to the whole man in the several faculties of soul and body, expressed in the next words by spirit, soul, and body, that their whole man may be entirely separated and consecrated to God, offered up to him as a sacrifice, Rom. xii. 1; and hence we observe that not only the beginning, but progress in grace is from God. The apostle therefore prays for it to God, (whom he calls the God of peace, to enforce his exhortation to peace, ver. 3.) which confutes the Pelagians, who thought objective grace sufficient to sanctify, or that man's nature needs only at first to be excited by God, and then can go forward of itself, being only maimed, not totally corrupted by the fall. It is true, our faculties co-operate with God, but not of themselves, but as acted by his inherent grace and indwelling Spirit. And what the apostle prays for, that Christians should endeavour after, which is a progress in sanctification to perfection. We may also note, that true sanctification reacheth to the whole man, spirit, soul, and body. 2. Preservation, which we call perseverance, expressed here both by the subject and term of it. The subject is the whole man, branched into three parts, spirit, soul, and body, figured, at least resembled, by the three parts of the temple. Consider man naturally; and then by spirit we mean his superior faculties, as the mind, conscience, rational will. By soul, his sensitive appetite, with the affections and passions. By body, the outward man, the tabernacle and instrument of the soul. The Jewish rabbins and others think all these are expressed in the creation of man, Gen. ii. 7; God formed man of the dust of the ground, there is his body; and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, or lives, Nishmath Chaiim, Nephesh Chaijah, that is, the faculties of the rational soul; and man became a living soul, that is, the animal and sensitive life. Neither is properly meant here the Spirit of God, for he saith, your spirit; nor the sanctified part of the soul, for he prays for the preserving of their persons. Only observe, when he speaks of their spirit, he calls it their whole spirit. And by the figure zeugma, the word whole is to be carried also to soul and body; so that as he prayed their whole man might be sanctified, so their whole spirit, their whole soul, their whole body might be preserved; and the same word we find James i. 4, where it is rendered perfect, alluding to the perfect possessing of an inheritance or lot that belongs to a man. And by preserving, he means not so much the substance of the spirit, soul, and body, to preserve them in being, as to preserve them in holiness. And they are preserved, partly by being delivered from the sinful distempers that are naturally in them, as ignorance, vanity, impotency, and enmity in the mind, reluctance and obstinacy in the will, inordinacy and irregularity in the affections, disobedience to the law of God and the regular commands of the soul in the body. If these prevail, they will bring destruction; as diseases prevailing destroy the natural life. And partly also by being supplied with that grace whereby they act regularly towards God, and are serviceable to the end of man's being, as supply of oil preserveth the lamp burning. And hereby we may understand, that not only the inferior faculties are corrupted in man's fall, but the superior and the supreme of all, else the apostle need not have prayed for the spirit to be sanctified and preserved, as well as the soul and body. And elsewhere he prays for a renewing in the spirit of the mind, Eph. iv. 23. Next we may consider this preservation with respect to the term of it, preserved blameless unto the coming of Christ: the same which the apostle means by being preserved to God's heavenly kingdom, 2 Tim. iv. 18; 2 Pet. iii. 14. And those that are preserved to that day, are preserved to the end, and will be found blameless; and their whole man, spirit, soul, and body, being first sanctified, and then preserved, shall be saved and glorified. And the apostle insinuates in the word ἀμώπτως, blameless, that strict discovery that will be made of persons at that day, wherein some will be blamed, and others be found without blame. And herein the apostle may have respect both to the teachers and ministers in this church, and the private members of it, that with respect to their several duties belonging to them they may be found blameless; and though, according to the strictness of the law of God, none can be without blame, yet, those that have been sincere, and have their sin pardoned, and their persons accepted in Christ, may be found blameless in the day of Christ: however, it is that which we should strive after.

n 1 Cor. 1.9.
& 10. 13
2 Thess. 3.3.

24 Faithful is he that calleth you,
who also will do it.

We had in the former verse the apostle's prayer, here his faith; and he speaks it by way of consolation to them, that what he had prayed for God would effect. What need he then have prayed? Because God's decrees and promises, though immutable and infallible, yet are to be accomplished in a way of prayer. Prayer is our duty, and God's decrees and promises are no dispensation from our duty: besides, duties are more known to us than God's decrees; and God decree the means as well as the end. But what is it he saith God will do? It is not here expressed, and the word it is not in the original, but only God will do, God will effect. He had prayed God would sanctify them wholly, and preserve them blameless, &c.; and this he would do or effect. And he grounds his confidence partly upon God's calling them. For the apostle knew that God's gifts and calling are without repentance; and whom he called, them he justified, and glorified, Rom. viii. 30; xi. 29. And this the apostle saw in these Thessalonians, by that efficacy of the gospel upon their hearts, that they were effectually called and chosen, as chap. i. 4; whence he concluded they should be at last wholly sanctified and finally preserved, which is a strong argument against final apostasy from a state of grace; though many that are outwardly called are never sanctified, much less wholly. But of this call the apostle speaks not here, at least not only. And partly also upon God's faithfulness, who had called them. He doth not say, God is able to do it, though that is true, but he is faithful, and will do it. Those that are effectually called are brought into God's covenant, where perfection and perseverance are promised, and God's faithfulness obligeth him to make good his covenant. It is an act of grace and mercy to call men; but when called, God's faithfulness is engaged to preserve them, and perfect the work begun; as, 1 Cor. i. 8, the apostle tells the Corinthians, God will confirm them, to the end they might be blameless in the day of Christ; and his argument is, for God is faithful, by whom ye were called, &c., ver. 9.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

o Col. 4. 3.
2 Thess. 3.1.

The apostle a little before had prayed for them, now he begs prayers of them, as he doth of other churches, Rom. xv. 30; Col. iv. 3. Ministers and people need each others' prayers, and it is a mutual duty they owe to one another. Ministers are obliged by special office, people by common duty, with respect to the success of the gospel in general, 2 Thess. iii. 1, and their own edification by their labours. The apostle, as he did not think it below him to call these Thessalonians brethren, so neither to beg their prayers. Those that stand highest in the church may stand in need of the meanest and lowest; the head cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee. Those that preach not the gospel, may yet promote it by their prayers; yet this gives no warrant to beg the prayers of saints departed, for which we have no precept, promise, or example, as we have for the other; and what is without faith is sin. It is at the best doubtful whether they know our state below, or can hear us when we pray; and certainly God never required us to pray upon such uncertainties, and it cannot be in faith.

26 Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss.

p Rom. 16.
16.

The apostle concludes several of his Epistles with greeting, or salutations, as men usually do at this day; sometimes with salutations from himself alone, sometimes from others, either particular persons, or churches which he sometimes names, as Rom. xvi. 6, &c.; 1 Cor. xvi. 19; and sometimes commends to the saints their saluting one another, as Rom. xvi. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 20; so here in the text. The persons to be saluted are all the brethren, that is, all believers incorporated into the gospel church, under one common Head and common Father; more particularly, those of this particular church. We call men brethren, sometimes upon a natural, sometimes a civil account; and why not much more upon a spiritual account? And as their love should reach to the brotherhood, 1 Pet. ii. 17, so their salutation should reach all the brethren, poor and rich, high and low, bond and free. With an holy kiss; ἐν φιλήματι ἀγίω. The rite or ceremony of men kissing each other was much used among the Jews, and in the Eastern countries, in their salutations, Gen. xxvii. 26; Prov. xxiv. 26; Luke vii. 45; and thence it came to be practised in the churches of Christ as an outward symbol and token of love and friendship; which is not now practised with us amongst men, but is of the same signification with joining of hands; the uniting of lips or hands together denoting the inward conjunction of the heart. The word in the Greek signifies love or friendship, and is called a kiss of charity, 1 Pet. v. 14. And though the ceremony is ceased, yet that which it signified is to be preserved in all churches, places, and ages. It was practised in the time of Justin Martyr, Just. Mar. Apolog. 2., and Tertullian, Tertul. de Oratone; and called osculum pacis, a kiss of peace; and used especially at their meeting together at the Lord's supper, their love feasts, and other solemn assemblies. It is called a holy kiss, to distinguish it from the treacherous kiss of Judas, or the lustful kiss of the harlot, Prov. vii. 13. And why it is not used among us now, we need say only, as concerning washing of feet also, We have no such custom, nor the churches of Christ; or, as the apostle speaks, 1 Cor. iv. 8. Whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report, &c.

<sup>1</sup> Or, adjure. 27 I || charge you by the Lord that <sup>2</sup> this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

The apostle having now finished the Epistle, lays a solemn charge upon them all, especially their elders and teachers, to have this Epistle published. He now being himself hindered from preaching to them, he sends this Epistle to them to be read to all. He wrote it for public use, and therefore would have none ignorant of it, whereby they might all understand what he had written about his great love and care of them, and the commendations he had given of them, and the instructions, admonitions, exhortations, and comforts that were contained therein, of great use to them all. And his charge herein is in a way of adjuration, Ὁρκίζω ὑμᾶς τὸν Κύριον, imposing it on them as by an oath; as Abraham did upon his servant in the case of providing a wife for Isaac, Gen. xxiv. 3. And so the high priest said to Christ, I adjure thee by the living God, &c., Matt. xxvi. 63; answering to the Hebrew word Hishbagnti, I adjure you; Cant. v. 8, I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, &c. It imports the requiring of a thing in the name and authority of God, with a denunciation of vengeance if it be not done. And all this charge is about the reading of this Epistle; as he commands the Epistle to the Colossians to be read in the church of the Laodiceans, and that from Laodicea to be read to them, Col. iv. 16, but not with that solemn charge as this is. Hence we may gather the duty of reading the Scriptures in the church assemblies, as the law of Moses was read in the synagogues. And very early in the Christian churches there were some appointed to be readers. Julian the Apostate was a reader in the church at Nicomedia. And if this was the first Epistle written by the apostle, as some suppose it, he lays this solemn charge first for the reading of this, to show the duty of the several churches to the rest of the Scriptures, as they should come to their hand. The word of God should dwell richly and plentifully in the people, and therefore reading it is necessary, together with expounding and applying it. And we hence also may prove against the papists, it ought to be made known to the people, even all the holy brethren, and not confined to the clergy; and to be read in their own tongue, for so, without question, was this Epistle read in a language which the people understood. The apostle was not for confining of knowledge, and keeping the people in ignorance, as those are who make it the mother of devotion.

28 The grace of our Lord Jesus <sup>1</sup> Rom. 16. 20, 24. <sup>2</sup> Thess. 3. 16. Christ be with you. Amen.

Having exhorted them to salute one another, he now sends them his own salutation; not in a lip compliment, as the mode now is, but in a serious expression of the desire of his soul: and this, or words to the same purpose, are his salutation in every Epistle, which he makes to be his token, 2 Thess. iii. 17. And by grace here he means favour and good will, rather than inherent grace: and all blessings which spring from grace, as sometimes all are comprehended under the word peace. Yet grace and peace are sometimes in his salutations both joined together. And though here Christ is only mentioned, yet in many other places God the Father is mentioned with him, 2 Thess. i. 2; 2 Pet. i. 2; yea, and God the Holy Ghost also, 2 Cor. xiii. 14; and where they are not mentioned, yet are all to be understood, for in all works ad extra they co-operate. And because grace is so eminently manifested in the whole work of our salvation, therefore the apostle doth still mention it in all his salutations. And with this he concludes this Epistle, and with this St. John concludes the whole Bible, Rev. xxii. 21. And the seal added, not to shut up, but confirm the whole, is, Amen; and is added as the voice of the whole church upon reading the Epistle, as some think, and not by the apostle himself.

¶ The first epistle unto the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

These postscripts to the apostle's Epistles are judged to be added by some scribes that copied them out, and not by the apostle himself, as might be made evident; and they are not found in any Epistles but in St. Paul's alone. But as it is usual to date letters from the places where they are written, so is this dated from Athens. Hither he was conducted by some brethren after his persecution at Thessalonica and Berea, Acts xvii. 15, and here we read he stayed for some time; but that from thence he wrote this Epistle, either then, or any time after, is but conjecture; it is more probable he wrote it from Corinth, because he sends it from Timotheus and Silvanus, as well as from himself, and they came to him from Macedonia when he was at Corinth, as Acts xviii. 5.

THE SECOND* EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

THESSALONIANS

THE ARGUMENT

THE apostle being yet hindered from coming to them, and understanding some mistake of what he wrote in his former Epistle about the coming of Christ, he thereupon sends this Second Epistle; where, after his usual salutation, he gives thanks for them, and hearing of the continuance of their faith and patience under all their persecutions, he glories in them; and then comforts them by arguments taken from the righteous judgment of God, and the different manner and effect of Christ's coming, both to themselves and all the saints that believe, and to their adversaries, and all that knew not God, nor obeyed the gospel; and then prays for the perfecting of their faith to the glorifying the name of Christ, chap. i.

* Δευτέρα. This is well called the Second or latter Epistle to these Thessalonians, for so it is; though Grotius would have it the first, if not sent, yet first written.

But hearing they were shaken in their minds about the time of Christ's coming, as if it should be presently, in the age wherein they lived, he doth vehemently caution them against such a mistake; and tells them of a great apostacy, and the revelation of the man of sin, which must precede that day, which he doth particularly describe in the manner and effects thereof: but speaks of these Thessalonians with thanksgiving to God, as such as God had chosen, and called to obtain the glory of the Lord Jesus; and then prays for their comfort and establishment, chap. ii. He next proceeds to desire their prayers, both with respect to the success of the ministry, and the safety of the persons who were employed therein; and declares his confidence in them that God would establish them, and that they would obey the commandments they had received from them; and gives them some further commandments about such in the church as did walk disorderly; and so concludes his Epistle with prayers for their peace, and recommending them to the grace of Jesus Christ, chap. iii.

CHAP. I

The salutation 1, 2. Paul certifieth the Thessalonians of the good opinion which he had of their faith, love, and patience. 3—5; of the righteous judgment of God in punishing their enemies, and recompensing their sufferings, 6—10; and of his prayers that God would fulfil his gracious purpose in them, 11, 12.

A. D. 54. PAUL, <sup>a</sup> and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians <sup>b</sup> in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

c 1 Cor. 1. 3. 2 <sup>c</sup> Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

These two verses are the same as in the former Epistle, and therefore I proceed.

d 1 Thess. 1. 2, 3. e 2. 4, 5. f 2 Cor. 2. 13. 3 <sup>d</sup> We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

The apostle begins this Epistle as the former, with thanksgiving; only there he gave thanks for their faith, hope, and love, here he only mentions their faith and love; there for the efficacy of their grace, here for the growth of it. There he said only, We give thanks, here he addeth We are bound, and as it is meet; as if he was obliged to give thanks for them now somewhat more than before, perceiving their grace did not only yet abide, notwithstanding all their persecutions, but increase and grow. But the apostle's thanksgiving here respects particularly these Thessalonians' growth. Not only the beginning, but growth of grace is from God; else why doth the apostle give thanks for it? as Phil. i. 6. Hence he is styled the God of all grace, 1 Pet. v. 10, weak and strong, first or second. The manner of its growth, whether by infusion of new degrees, as the first grace is infused, or by co-operating only with it, and so it is increased by exercise, is a question I leave to the schoolmen. However, growth is a duty, and commendable in churches. And the apostle mentions particularly, 1. Their growth in faith; and that to a great degree, ὑπεραξάνει, it groweth exceedingly; it grows over and above, above the ordinary rate of growth, or the common pitch of faith. Their progress was from faith to faith, their assent to the doctrine of the gospel grew more firm and rooted, and the persuasion of their happy state in Christ was much confirmed and strengthened, with a more confident reliance on him; or their faith was extended to more objects by the increase of their knowledge. 2. Their increase in love; which he also expresseth by an emphatical word, πλεονάζει, which signifies increasing to more and more; their love grew in the habit, and abounded in the fruits of it. And this love he sets forth by the universality of it, and the reciprocalness of it, it was the love of all to each other; they all did love, and were all beloved of one another; there was no schism among them, as in some other churches. Faith and love are two sister graces, and are always more or less together; only in the order of nature, faith is first, and worketh by love; but not first in time; and then afterwards, when it brings forth, love is fides formata, faith formed, as the papists speak. Hence some have said, that there was not one hypocrite or false Christian in this whole church. Now the apostle and his fellow ministers hereupon judged themselves bound to give thanks. Christians are obliged to give God thanks for the grace of God in others as well as in themselves; and especially the ministers of the gospel, for the people that have been converted by them, or are committed to them. Hereby the apostle's joy was increased at present, and his future glory might be advanced also.

4 So that <sup>e</sup> we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God <sup>f</sup> for your patience and faith <sup>g</sup> in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

In the former verse the apostle gave thanks for them, in this he glories in them; he gave thanks for them to God, and glories in them before men. Wherein Silvanus and Timotheus are to be understood as joined with him herein. Glorying includes in it high estimation of a thing, rejoicing in it, high commendation of it, and applauding ourselves in it; and it must be some great thing, either really or in opinion, and in which some way or other we ourselves are concerned. And glorying is good or evil according to the matter or object of it. To glory in our wisdom, strength, riches, Jer. ix. 23; to glory in men, 1 Cor. iii. 21, in our own works, Rom. iv. 2, in what we have received as if not received, 1 Cor. iv. 7, after the flesh, 2 Cor. xi. 18, or in our shame, Phil. iii. 19; all this glorying is evil. But to glory in God, Isa. xli. 16. in his holy name, 1 Chron. xvi. 10, with God's inheritance, Psal. cvii. 5. in the knowledge of the Lord, Jer. ix. 24, in the cross of Christ, Gal. vi. 14, in tribulation, Rom. v. 3, in Christ Jesus, 1 Cor. i. 31, in hope, Heb. iii. 6, and of the success of the ministry in the church's growth, and their faith and patience, as here in the text; all this glorying is good: as elsewhere he boasted or gloried in the Corinthians' liberality, 2 Cor. ix. 2; but his glorying in them was not to exalt himself, but to magnify the grace of God, and provoke other churches to imitate them. In the churches of God; where the excellency of grace is known, and the commendation of it will be received and imitated; and not amongst carnal men, who scoff at true goodness. And it was the apostle himself, and Silvanus and Timotheus, that thus gloried in them. It adds to persons' commendation, when it is by men of great knowledge, wisdom, and goodness. And it was by such as well knew them, and understood their state; and being instruments in their conversion, were more concerned to glory in them than any other apostles or ministers. And their glorying in them, as it respects what he said of them in the former verse, so what he further adds in this, which is their patience and faith in all their persecutions and tribulations. Persecutions are properly sufferings for righteousness' sake: tribulations, any kind of suffering, as some distinguish. And it seems they had many of both, when he saith all, &c. And yet they endured them, that is, not only suffered them because they could not cast them off, but in the sense of the apostle James, chap. v. 11, Behold, we count them happy which endure; which is a suffering out of choice, and not mere necessity, as Moses did, Heb. xi. 25, when sufferings stand in competition with sin, or the dishonour of the Christian profession. Sufferings in themselves are not desirable, and the apostle did not glory in their sufferings, but in their faith and patience. As he before joined faith and love together, so here faith and patience; and as love springs from faith, so doth Christian patience, whereby it is distinguished from patience as a mere moral virtue found among the heathen, either that of the Stoics, Peripatetics, or Platonists. Faith and patience are well styled the two suffering graces, and therefore here mentioned by the apostle when he mentions their sufferings. Faith, as it depends upon God, and sees love under afflictions, believes his promises, looks at the recompence of reward, &c., so it supports under suffering. And patience, as it keeps down passion, and quiets the soul under its burden, makes it to sit lighter, and gives advantage to the exercise of that grace and reason, whereby a Christian is strengthened under his sufferings. Now hereupon the apostle glories in them, as men are apt to do in the heroic acts of great conquerors; or the captain of an army, in the valiant performances of his soldiers.

<sup>h Phil. 1. 28.</sup> 5 Which is <sup>h</sup> a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, <sup>l</sup> for which ye also suffer:

<sup>11 Thess. 2. 14.</sup>

These words seem to follow by way of argument, to comfort these Thessalonians under their sufferings: 1. By what they manifest, viz. the righteous judgment of God; they are a plain indication of it, or demonstration, as the word is used by logicians. And by judgment we must not here understand the judgments or afflictions God inflicts in this world; so that when God doth not spare, but chasten his own children, it is a token of his righteous judgment. But rather under understand it of the last judgment: when we see the righteous suffering such wrongs and injuries from wicked men, and they go unpunished, we may argue thence that there is a judgment to come; we cannot else well vindicate the righteousness, wisdom, goodness, and faithfulness of God in his governing the world: as Solomon so argued, when he saw so much unrighteousness in the very seat of justice; I said in my heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time for every purpose and work. Eccles. iii. 16, 17. And this judgment is called here righteous judgment, by way of eminency, as it is expressed by one word, δικαιοκρισία, Rom. ii. 5. (for all God's judgments are righteous.) (1.) Because the wicked will then meet with justice without mercy, which is not so in any present judgments. (2.) Justice will then be clearly manifested, which now lies obscure, both with respect to the righteous and the unrighteous. And in this sense the words carry an argument of comfort to the saints, under their present unjust sufferings from their enemies. As to the same purpose the apostle speaks to the Philippians, Phil. i. 28. 2. The other argument of comfort is from the result of their sufferings, the great advantage which will arise out of them; they will be hence accounted worthy of the kingdom of God: not by way of merit, as the papists say; the Greek word in the text, in its usual acceptation, will not favour that opinion, it signifies no more in the active voice, than the Latin word dignari, which we English to deign, or vouchsafe; and yet we may allow the word to signify more here, not only that this kingdom may be vouchsafed, but that ye may be meet or worthy to receive it; not that all their sufferings could deserve this kingdom, for the apostle saith, Rom. viii. 18, I reckon the sufferings of this present time not worthy of the glory, &c. There is no proportion betwixt them. and so they cannot merit it, yet God may account those that suffer for this kingdom worthy of it, according to the grace of the new covenant in Jesus Christ, and as it hath a congruity with the nature of God, and his faithfulness in his promises; and so our translation renders the word, not that ye may be worthy of the kingdom of God, but accounted worthy; God of his free grace will account them worthy. The kingdom of God is propounded to men in the new covenant upon certain conditions, and those that perform them have a worthiness of right, as Rev. xxii. 14, but not of merit. But God enables men to perform the conditions, so that there is nothing on our part properly meritorious; yea, when we have performed them, yet our worthiness is to be attributed to Christ, and God's grace, and not to ourselves, else man would have whereof to glory. The Scriptures call eternal life the gift of God, Rom. vi. 23, and attributes salvation to grace, Eph. ii. 8. We must allow a worthiness only that is consistent with grace; but when we have done all we must say, We are unprofitable servants. Luke xvii. 10; and after all we have done and suffered for the kingdom of God, must pray, as Paul for Onesiphorus, that we may find mercy of the Lord at that day, 2 Tim. i. 18. For which ye also suffer; the sense either respects their enemies, that it was upon the account of this kingdom that they persecuted them, having nothing else justly against them; or else their own aim and intention in suffering, it was for the kingdom of God. And hence we may learn that his kingdom is worth suffering for, and that in some cases it cannot be obtained without suffering; and he that then refuseth to suffer will be accounted unworthy of it; as he that doth suffer for it, as these Thessalonians, hath, upon the account of God's covenant, and the merits of Christ, not only the grace and mercy, but the justice and faithfulness, of God engaged to bestow it upon him. And also that we may and ought in our sufferings look to the reward, as Moses did, Heb. xi.

6 <sup>h</sup> Seeing it is a righteous thing with <sup>h</sup> God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

By these words the apostle doth illustrate his argument for a judgment to come, taken from the persecutions and tribulations of the saints. It is of necessity that God should be righteous, and recompensing is a necessary act of righteousness; but we yet see it not, therefore there is a judgment to come. And this recompense is both to the righteous and the wicked, the persecutors and persecuted. The former he here speaks first of: and to recompense tribulation to them that trouble the people of God, is a just recompense; it is according to the law of retaliation, whereof we have some instances in this world, as in Pharaoh, Adoni-bezek, Haman, &c.; and many others, whereof we have a large account in the history of the church and her persecutors; but this will be more fully verified in the judgment to come, called the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, Rom. ii. 5. And God's recompense to them is here called tribulation; so Rom. ii. 9. And though in other scriptures the punishment of the wicked is set forth by other names, yet here it is called by this name; not only for elegance of speech, by a paranomasia, but to parallel their suffering to their sin; they brought tribulation upon others, and God will bring it upon them. And under this word is comprehended all the torments of hell, which our Saviour expresseth by weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, Matt. viii. 12, which is the extremity of tribulation. And it is said here, God will recompense, &c., which should teach us not to revenge ourselves; as Psal. xciv. 1; Rom. xii. 19. And this the apostle sets before these Thessalonians by way of comfort; not that we ought to rejoice in men's destruction merely for itself, but in the honour that will thereby arise to God's justice, and in the favour, honour, and salvation God will vouchsafe to his people herein.

7 And to you who are troubled <sup>l</sup> rest with us, when <sup>m</sup> the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with † his mighty angels,

<sup>1 Rev. 14. 13.</sup>

<sup>m 1 Thess. 4. 16. Jude 14. † Gr. The angels of his power.</sup>

Having spoken of the recompense of the troublers, here of the troubled: and in this we may observe a parallel, as in the former. The recompense to these is expressed by rest; in the Greek, dismissal, or cessation from labour or trouble; as Heb. iv. 9, There remaineth a rest to the people of God, where the word is, keeping a sabbath, importing a rest from labour, as this text doth speak of a rest from trouble. And though the word rest is properly negative, yet under it the apostle comprehends all the felicity of the future state; elsewhere called a crown, a kingdom, an inheritance, glory, salvation, eternal life, yea, it contains in it the perfect satisfaction of the soul in the fruition of God, &c. And this is said to be given them by way of recompense, as tribulation is to their troublers; though there is no parity betwixt their troubles and the rest, that is, their recompense, yet it is a proper recompense; and therefore the grace and mercy of God will be much manifested therein, though it is said to come from God's righteousness in the text. The righteousness of God dispenseth both these recompenses; but yet the righteousness in both is not alike; ἀκριβοδικαίον, strict justice, dispenseth the one, and the punishment of the wicked riseth from the nature of their sin, and the merit of it; but it is only ἐπιείκεια, equity, that dispenseth the other, and that not so much with respect to the nature of the saints' duties or sufferings, as the promises and ordinance of God, and the merit of Christ for them. And this rest the apostle sets forth before them, under a twofold circumstance: 1. Rest with us. Us, the apostles and ministers of Christ, we and you shall rest together; as we have partaken of troubles together, so we shall of rest. And you shall enjoy the same felicity with the apostles themselves, in the same state of rest. And though now place doth separate us, yet we and you shall rest together, which will the more sweeten this rest to you and us. 2. When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven; the other circumstance. This is the time of their entering into this rest. Christ's coming is sometimes called his ἐπιφάνεια, appearing, 2 Tim. iv. 8, or shining forth; sometimes, φανερῶσις, his manifestation, 2 Cor. iv. 2; 1 John iii. 2; sometimes, ἀποκάλυψις, his revelation, as in the text. Now the heavens contain him, but he will come in person, and his glory shine forth: though before that their souls shall be at rest in heaven, and their bodies in the grave, yet not till then shall their persons be at rest. And as Christ himself is already entered into his rest, Heb. iv. 10, so he will come again to take his people into the same rest with him.

n Heb. 10.
27. & 12. 29.
2 Pet. 3. 7.
Rev. 21. 8.
1 Or.
yielding.
o Ps. 79. 6.
1 Thess. 4. 5.
p Rom. 2. 8.

8 <sup>a</sup> In flaming fire || taking vengeance on them <sup>o</sup> that know not God, and <sup>p</sup> that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ :

But his coming will be upon another account to many others, which is said here to be to take vengeance, for which purpose he is said to be revealed with his mighty angels, or angels of might; and elsewhere, with all his holy angels. They are said to excel in strength, Psal. ciii. 20, or to be mighty in strength, and have the name of might, Eph. i. 21. And here called mighty, because as the work Christ comes upon is great and difficult, so he will have instruments sufficient for it, and none shall be able to hinder. And though he hath power himself sufficient, yet the angels must attend him to solemnize this great day, and to be serviceable to him in the work thereof, which, as it will respect the saints in their resurrection from the dead, and their gathering from the four winds, and separating them from the ungodly, as tares from the wheat and sheep from the goats, so the taking vengeance also in this day of the Lord's wrath, which the apostle, especially, is in these verses speaking of, is the work they shall be employed in. As also in flaming fire, or the fire of flame, a Hebraism. Fire is the most dreadful of all the elements, especially flaming, to denote the great wrath of that day, and its breaking forth, as fire when it flameth. God's wrath is often expressed in Scripture by fire, Deut. xxxii. 22; Psal. xcvi. 3, &c.; Jer. xxi. 12; Heb. x. 27; and as that which attendeth the great day of Christ, Dan. vii. 10; 1 Cor. iii. 13; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 12. And whether this flaming fire is material, or only metaphorical; if material, whether the present elementary fire, which shall descend, and be joined with that which shall break forth out of the bowels of the earth, as in Noah's flood the waters were from above and from beneath; or whether it shall be some new-created fire, and the action of it natural, or supernatural, I shall leave it to the schoolmen. Yet it is generally conceived it is a material fire; else how can the elements be said to melt with fervent heat, and the world and the works thereof burnt up, as the apostle Peter speaks, 2 Pet. iii. 10; and parallels it with the deluge in Noah's time, which was with material water. But yet it is to be a manifestation of the fire of God's wrath, and an instrument of it also in the destruction of ungodly men, 2 Pet. iii. 7; for it is said in the text, Christ is revealed in it to take vengeance. Vengeance is an act of justice; it is a retribution of evil for evil, the evil of suffering for the evil done: and God claims it as belonging to himself, Psal. xciv. 1; Rom. xii. 19; Heb. x. 27; and it is mentioned in the parable, Luke xviii. 7, 8, as one great work of Christ, at his coming, to avenge the elect. On them that know not God; these are the persons upon whom he will execute vengeance: by whom some think are meant the heathen, who had not the gospel. Those that had not the gospel, yet had means to know God, by the light of nature, and the works of creation and providence, which if they did not improve, but remained ignorant of God, will fall under this vengeance. And by knowledge here is not meant so much a speculative as a practical knowledge of God; and so such as do not fear, love, and honour God, may be said not to know him. As the Gentiles, who are said to know God, Rom. i. 21, but yet not glorifying him as God, and living in idolatry, are said not to know him, Gal. iv. 8; 1 Thess. iv. 5. And as God tells the king of Judah, that to do justice and judgment is to know him, Jer. xxii. 16. And Eli's sons, though priests, yet are said not to know the Lord, 1 Sam. ii. 12. And that obey not the gospel; which may be taken in conjunction with the former words, and then such as obey not the gospel are the same with them that know not God. As God is not known aright but by the gospel, so they only know God aright by the gospel who obey it. Some are ignorant and know not God, though they live under the gospel. Or, such as have knowledge, yet are not obedient. Knowledge and obedience ought to go together. And this obedience is called the obeying of the gospel. The gospel hath not only promises to be believed, but precepts to be obeyed. Yea, faith itself may fall under its precepts, and then those that believe not the gospel do not obey it: as the same word in the Greek signifies to believe and obey. And as the gospel hath some peculiar precepts and institutions, so all the commands of the moral law are comprehended in it; and the equitable part of the judicial law, yea, and the ceremonial law also, where that which is moral is figured by it; and so far as the gospel commands, men ought to obey; and disobedience appears to be a great evil, when it will expose men to this great vengeance. So Rom. ii. 8, 9, To them that do not obey the truth, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, &c. Not to obey the law of nature, exposed the heathen to God's wrath, Rom. i. 18; and to disobey the law of Moses, the Jew, Rom. ii. 2; Heb. ii. 3; x. 28; xii. 25; much more not to obey the gospel. Christ is said here especially to take vengeance of such at his coming. Gospel sins are most heinous and most provoking, and will be most severely punished.

9 <sup>a</sup> Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and <sup>r</sup> from the glory of his power ;

q Phil. 3. 10.
2 Pet. 3. 7.
r Deut. 32.2
Is. 2. 19.
ch. 2. 8.

This is the vengeance before spoken of; it is here called destruction, not an annihilation, and cessation of being, but of all well-being; and elsewhere called death, Rom. vi. 23, and the second death, Rev. xx. 6, which imports also not all ceasing of life, but all comfort of life. And it is not the body alone, nor the soul alone, but their persons, who, &c.; and as fire is a great destroyer, so Christ's coming in flaming fire brings their destruction. And this destruction is everlasting: the fire that destroys them is never quenched, Mark ix. 43, 44. As the fire of the altar, which was a fire of mercy, was not to go out, so the fire of Tophet burns for ever, Isa. xxx. 33, which is the fire of justice; and God living for ever, and his justice never satisfied, their destruction is for ever. They sinned in their eternity, and will be punished in God's eternity. There was a remedy provided in the gospel for men, but rejecting the gospel, and not obeying it, there remains no hope; their destruction is everlasting. And this destruction is called punishment, δικην τίσαναι, panam hient; not the chastisement of a Father, as the temporal affliction of God's people. It proceeds from vindictive justice; it is taking vengeance. And this punishment is twofold, punishment of loss and sense, and from both together proceed perfect destruction. From the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; the preposition from in the first expression noting separation, in the second noting efficiency. Others conceive efficiency to be meant in both, their destruction proceeding from the face of Christ frowning on them, frowning them into hell, (which smiling upon others, will bring their salvation,) as well as from his glorious power manifested against them to destroy them, Rom. ix. 22. And yet others interpret the preposition in both places to note separation, both from the face of Christ, which the saints shall behold and rejoice in for ever, and from his glorious power; which will work in some for their complete salvation in the day of his appearing, as it had done before in their first conversion, and sanctification. The destruction of the wicked will be from or by the power of Christ; but by this glory of power may be meant only that power which will bring glory both to the bodies and souls of the saints, and this the wicked shall have no experience of in that day.

10 <sup>a</sup> When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

b Ps. 69. 7.
c Ps. 66. 25.

This speaks the different manner of Christ's coming towards the saints and believers; not in flaming fire to destroy them, as in the former verse; but to be glorified and admired in them. He saith not to be glorified by them, by their adoring and praising of him, but in them. He hath a personal glory, wherein he will appear glorious, and another mystical, in his saints. The Head will be glorified in the members, as they are glorified in and from the Head: as the sun hath a lustre and glory in the moon and stars besides what it hath in its own body, as Col. iii. 4. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory. The glory God gave his Son, he hath given it to his saints, John xvii. 22, and will put it upon them, and be glorified in it in the day of his appearing; as God is said to have glorified himself in Israel, Isa. xlii. 23. And to be admired; and this glory will be so great, that he shall be admired in it, as the word signifies. It will set the saints themselves, and all the angels of heaven, yea, the whole world, a wondering. Small things do not cause admiration, but what is great and we cannot comprehend, that we admire. And Christ will not only be admired by them, but in them; the wonderful love, grace, mercy, wisdom, and faithfulness of Christ towards them will be admired. To raise up such a number of poor, sinful, despicable worms out of the dust into such a sublime state of glory and dignity, will be admirable. Because our testimony among you was believed; and that these Thessalonians might have the comfort of this particularly, he having spoken of saints, and those that believe in general, the apostle applies this therefore to themselves in way of parenthesis: q. d. Christ will be admired in all that believe; and ye are among them that believe; ergo, &c. And the doctrine of the gospel he had preached, he called it his testimony, as John iii. 33; 1 Cor. iii. 6; which implies it was not an invention of his own, he did not speak of himself, as the word implies: and this testimony found different entertainment, some believed it not, others believed it and received it; upon which account the Thessalonians are commended and comforted here by the apostle. The Syriac read the words in the future tense, without a parenthesis; Christ will come to be thus glorified and admired in his saints, because our testimony among you concerning it shall be believed or confirmed in that day; he means the day of Christ's last coming, which he called the day of the Lord, 1 Thess. v. 2; and because it is so great a day, is therefore by way of emphasis called that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would <sup>u</sup>count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and <sup>x</sup>the work of faith with power:

† Or, rouchaufe.
u ver. 5.

x 1 Thess. 1.3.

The apostle here again mentions his praying for these Thessalonians, as he had often mentioned it in the former Epistle. And the reason might be, because he was absent from them; they might the more need his prayer, and by telling them of it, he thereby assures them that he forgot them not. And the prayer he here makes for them hath reference to the discourse he had been upon, as appears by this word Eis o, Wherefore, or for, or in order to which, we pray, &c. This calling; which is figuratively to be understood of the blessed state they were called to, for the calling itself they had received already. And so it is the same in effect mentioned before, ver. 5, called the kingdom of God; or to have Christ glorified and admired in them, ver. 10. And elsewhere termed the prize of the high calling of God, Phil. iii. 14. And that God would count them worthy of it; as he had used the same expression before; only there it was mentioned with respect to their sufferings, here in a way of prayer. He encouraged them under their sufferings, that they might thereupon be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, and now prays that God would count them worthy; their worthiness arising more from the gracious account of God than their own sufferings. A Christian's calling hath duty annexed to it, whereupon the apostle exhorts the Ephesians to walk worthy of it in discharge of those duties, Eph. iv. 1, 2. And it hath a state of blessedness belonging to it, which is meant here; and none shall partake of it, but those whom God shall count worthy of it. But God's account is not according to the strictness of the law, but the gracious indulgence of the covenant of grace; but yet his prayer implies such a walking according to this covenant, as whereby they might be counted worthy of the blessed state they were called unto. And fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness: the gracious purposes of God towards his people are called often his good pleasure, as Matt. xi. 26; Luke xii. 32; Eph. i. 5, 9; and the same is meant Isa. liiii. 10, The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; the Hebrew word Chephets being of the same signification with the Greek word here used. Christ shall accomplish the gracious purposes of God towards his people. And called his good pleasure, partly because they have no reason out of the sovereign will of God, and they are such also as he hath great complacency and delight in; and though they are executed in time, yet they were in his heart from everlasting, and therefore called eternal, Eph. iii. 11. And I fulfil purpose and good pleasure put both together, Eph. i. 9. It is here called the good pleasure of his goodness, which is not a tautology, as it may seem to be, but to make his expression of God's grace the more emphatical; or rather, to show that this good pleasure of God towards his people ariseth out of his goodness. God hath purposes of wrath towards some, but such cannot be called the good pleasure of his goodness. Goodness is that excellency in God, whereby he is ready to communicate good to his creature; but by goodness here is meant God's special goodness, which is peculiar to his people whom he hath chosen. To fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, is to accomplish all those good purposes that were in his heart; some whereof were already fulfilled in their calling, adoption, justification, and sanctification begun, but the whole was not yet fulfilled, which he therefore here prays for; so that as their election, and their first conversion, were not from any worthiness or foresight of faith in them, but the good pleasure of his will, so the progress and perfection of their salvation was also to be from the same good pleasure. And the work of faith with power: by the work of faith is either meant faith itself, which is the work of God, or else the fruits of faith; and so work is here taken for works or operations of faith. And the apostle addeth this in his prayer, to show that we are not saved only by God's good pleasure without faith, such a faith that worketh. And to perfect their salvation is a fulfilling the work of faith, for perseverance and progress towards perfection is from the work of faith. Or it may particularly refer to their patience and constancy under their sufferings, which he had before spoken of, and which is a peculiar work of faith. But because faith is not sufficient of itself, and the work of faith may fail, he therefore addeth, in power, or with power; that is, the power of God, which is his Spirit, so called, Luke i. 35. Our faith and the power of God are here joined together, as 1 Pet. i. 5. The same power that first worketh faith, afterwards co-worketh by it and with it.

12 That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

† 1 Pet. 1.7 & 4. 14.

That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him; ὁπως. All expositors agree that these words contain in them a final cause, as the Greek word imports; and so understand them as the ultimate end of the apostle's prayer for them; he had prayed for things that did concern their salvation, but he looked further, which was, that thereby the name of the Lord Jesus may be glorified in them. The glory of Christ and the saints' salvation are wrapt up together; and though they are to look immediately to the latter, yet ultimately to the former. But whether the apostle means the glorifying Christ in this life, or the life to come, is a question. I rather think the words refer to the life to come, when the name of Christ shall be for ever glorified in the salvation of his people, when all the good pleasure of God's goodness shall be fulfilled upon them, they having been kept in the faith by the power of God unto the end, through Jesus Christ; and then also they shall be glorified not only by him, as we may read the text, but in him, in being received into a participation of the same glory with Jesus Christ, and by their union with him are glorified in him, John xvii. 22; Col. iii. 4; 1 John iii. 2. And when this is done, then have they received the prize of their calling, then is the whole good pleasure of God's goodness fulfilled, then is the work of faith accomplished; which things the apostle saith he prayed for in their behalf. According to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ: what the apostle before called the good pleasure of God's goodness, he here calls his grace, and he adds the grace of Christ, because the grace or favour of both are so eminently manifested in these things, whereby not only the name of God, but of Christ also, shall be glorified, as he said before; and that it may be glorified in them according to his grace, that is, greatly glorified; and they glorified in him according to the grace of God and Jesus Christ, that is, greatly glorified, as we may further understand the words; the grace of God being exceeding great towards them in Jesus Christ. And hereby the apostle would exclude all thoughts about their own merit, ver. 11.

CHAP. II

Paul warneth the Thessalonians against the groundless surmise that the day of Christ was near at hand, 1, 2; showing that it would be preceded by a great apostacy, and that the man of sin would be first revealed, and by his wicked impostures draw many into perdition, 3—12. He repeateth his good hopes concerning them, 13, 14; exhorting them to stand fast in his doctrine, and praying God to comfort and stablish them in all goodness, 15—17.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Thess. 4. 16. <sup>b</sup> Matt. 24. 31. <sup>c</sup> Mark 13. 27. <sup>d</sup> 1 Thess. 4. 17.

NOW we beseech you, brethren, <sup>a</sup> by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, <sup>b</sup> and by our gathering together unto him,

The apostle now comes to refute the opinion that some at least of these Thessalonians had received, as if the day of Christ was near at hand. He having said, 1 Thess. iv. 17, We which are alive and remain shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, &c., then some might think his coming would be in the apostle's time, or some other way they might fall into this conceit; and some do conceive this was the chief reason of the apostle's writing this Epistle. And because this mistake might be of dangerous consequence, therefore he is very vehement and particular in refuting it: for hereupon they might be brought to question the truth of the whole gospel when this should not come to pass: they might be unprepared for the sufferings that were to come upon the church; and their patience might fail in expecting this day, and their minds be doubting about the coming of Christ at all. This opinion also would much narrow their thoughts about Christ's kingdom, and the enlarging of the gospel among other Gentiles; and the profane might abuse it to sensuality, as 1 Cor. xv. 32, Let us eat and drink, &c. That he might the better persuade, he calls them brethren, and beseeches them, &c. And next, conjures them, using the form of an oath, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. We conjure men either by what they love, or by what they fear; as they would enjoy the one, or avoid the other. The coming of Christ was what they desired and rejoiced in, as that which would bring rest to them, and tribulation to their adversaries; and by this he doth therefore beseech or adjure them: and therefore we must understand this of Christ's last coming, as the word παρουσία, in the text, is still applied to this coming, 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13, &c.; and not of his coming to destroy the Jewish church and state, for that coming was at hand. And by our gathering together unto him; at his last coming, when the whole body of Christ shall be gathered to him, to meet him in the air, 1 Thess. iv. 17. And then the sense is, As ye hope ever to see such a blessed meeting, and to be of that number, so take heed of this opinion. Yet some read the text otherwise, because in the Greek it is not διά, but ὑπὲρ τῆς παρουσίας, and so the same with πῆρ, not we beseech you by, but concerning the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him, as denoting only the subject matter treated of. I prefer the former; and so the apostle conjures them not to be soon shaken in mind, but to stand fast in the truth about the doctrine of Christ's coming, which they had been taught, and very lately taught, and therefore it was the greater evil to be soon shaken; as the apostle upbraids the Galatians, Gal. i. 6, and God the Israelites, Psal. cvi. 13.

2 <sup>c</sup> That ye be not soon shaken in mind, <sup>d</sup> or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. <sup>e</sup> Matt. 24. 4. <sup>f</sup> Eph. 5. 6. <sup>g</sup> 1 John 4. 1.

That ye be not soon shaken in mind; σαλευθῆναι it is an allusion to the waves of the sea that are tossed with the winds, as false doctrines tend to unsettle the mind, as Eph. iv. 14; Heb. xiii. 9; and to be established in the truth is often commanded, 1 Cor. xvi. 13; Phil. iv. 1; Col. i. 23, &c. And by mind here is either meant the faculty itself; and then the apostle beseecheth them to keep company with their understanding, not to be removed from their mind: as false doctrine is said to bewitch men, Gal. iii. 1, and to make men foolish, ver. 3; as madness is called amentia, or dementia, as that which doth as it were unmind men, and corrupt the mind, and pervert the judgment, 2 Tim. iii. 8, 9, as Jannes and Jambres deceived the people by their enchantments, as the apostle there mentions. Or else, the sentence and judgment of the mind; and then he beseecheth them to hold fast the right judgment they had entertained about Christ's coming, and not to hesitate and waver about it; so the word is taken, 1 Cor. ii. 16. Or be troubled; τροϊσθαί, alluding to soldiers affrighted with a sudden alarm. We find the word, Matt. xxiv. 6; Mark xiii. 7, used in this allusion. And the opinion of Christ's coming to be at hand might occasion this trouble in them, either lest they might be surprised by it, and unprepared for it, or by judging themselves mistaken in their former apprehensions about it; and those false teachers that broach this opinion, did also perhaps so represent this coming in such terror as to cause this trouble; as false teachers in general are such as are said to cause trouble, Gal. i. 7; v. 12; though the coming of Christ is in itself rather the saints' hope and joy, than ground of trouble, as 1 Thess. i. 10; iv. 18, &c. And it may be some did pretend for this opinion the Spirit, or some letter from the apostle, either the former Epistle to them, or some letter that was forged, or some word he had spoken, or preached. And those words as from us may refer to all these: the Spirit, as from us; or word, as from us; or letter, as from us. Neither by spirit; some extraordinary revelation of the Spirit, which the false teachers pretended to, especially in the primitive times, when they were more ordinary; as in the church of Corinth, 1 Cor. xiv. 6, and the churches of Galatia, Gal. iii. 2, 5: some would pretend the Spirit that called Jesus accursed, 1 Cor. xii. 3, and therefore the apostle bids, Try the spirits, 1 John iv. 1. Simon Magus pretended to it, and had his Helene, Montanus his Paraclete, Mahomet his Dove: and the man of sin pretends to this Spirit, though it is in truth the spirit of antichrist, 1 John iv. 3, and the spirit of Satan, in the next chapter of this Epistle, as was foretold that in the last times there would arise seducing spirits, 1 Tim. iv. 1; as there was in the times of the Old Testament false prophets that pretended to the Spirit, as 1 Kings xxii. 24; Micah ii. 11. And the very heathen would pretend to divine oracles, inspirations, and revelations, especially their kings and lawgivers, as Numa Pompilius, Lycurgus, &c.; and still there are enthusiasts who make these pretences. Nor by word; διά λόγου, whereby some understand calculation by astrological rules, that the day of Christ was at hand; others render the word reasoning; and so from the declining of the vigour of the earth, and the nearer approach of the sun to it, as Ptolemy observed in his time, or some other natural causes, they reasoned the coming of Christ and the dissolution of the world to be nigh at hand: but rather we understand by it some word from the apostle's own mouth, which was pretended he had spoken or preached some where, though not written. As the Church of Rome pretends to traditions, besides the written word, upon which they ground many of their superstitions and idolatries, not warranted by Scripture. As the Jews had a second Mishneh, and their Cabbala, collected in part from the sayings of Moses, or some other of their prophets, which they did not write. Nor by letter; some letter that was sent to them from some other hand, or else by some forged letter as from the apostle himself, or his former Epistle misunderstood. As that the day of Christ is at hand. Object. But it is not said that the day of the Lord, or the coming of the Lord, is at hand, 1 Cor. x. 11; Phil. iv. 5; James v. 7, 8;

1 Pet. iv. 2? Ans. The word used in those places differs from this in the text; for it signifies either that which is actually present, or very near it, as Rom. viii. 38; Gal. i. 4; as that which is to be done presently is spoken of as done, John xvii. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 7. Or those places mean his coming is at hand, as to God's account of time, though not as to man's. And in that sense Christ saith, Behold, I come quickly, Rev. xxii. 7. But the error the apostle warns them of is, as if the coming of Christ would be in the age in which they lived. The apostles all said that the coming of the Lord was at hand, but their right meaning was perverted to a false sense, as seducers usually do.

d Mat. 24. 4.
Eph. 5. 6.
e 1 Tim. 4. 1.
f Dan. 7. 25.
g John 2. 18.
Rev. 13. 11.
h c.
See 1 Mac. 2.
48, 62.
i John 17. 12.

3 <sup>a</sup>Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, <sup>b</sup>except there come a falling away first, and <sup>c</sup>that man of sin be revealed, <sup>d</sup>the son of perdition;

Let no man deceive you: here the apostle urgeth again his charge against this error, though in other words, and begins his arguments to refute it. He had adjured them not to be shaken, and here he cautions them against being deceived, for the one makes way for the other; so also not to be troubled, ver. 2, for troubled minds are apt to be made a prey to seducers. And the caution in the text proves that their shaking and trouble did arise from some deceivers that were amongst them, rather than any misunderstanding of their own of what he wrote in the former Epistle about Christ's coming. To be shaken in mind is bad, but to be deceived is worse, for it is a going out of the path, as the word signifies; and therefore his caution against it is universal, both as to persons and ways: Let no man deceive you, though he pretend to revelations, or be of the greatest reputation in the church. By any means; either of craft, flattery, pretending love, or plausible arguments, or misrepresenting our words, or forging of letters, or misinterpreting our Epistle to you or any other part of Scripture, or feigned miracles, &c. Then he enters the arguments to confute it, which are, 1. The general apostacy. 2. The revelation of the man of sin. Neither of these are yet, nor will be in this age; and yet that day shall not come till these both first come. For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first; there is a supplement in our translation, for in the Greek it is only, for, except there come a falling away first, &c., or an apostacy, a recession, a departing, or a standing off, as the word imports; so that apostacy may be either good, when it is from evil to good, or evil, when it is from good to evil: it is always used in this latter sense in Scripture. Again, it is either civil or spiritual: civil, as when people fall off from the civil government they were under, and so some would interpret the text of the defection from the Roman empire, the east part from the west, and the ten kingdoms that arose out of it; which was the opinion of Hierom, Epist. ad Algasiam. But the apostle writing to the church speaks not of civil government, and the affairs of state, and speaks of such an apostacy which would give rise to the man of sin, and the revelation of him. And this man of sin riseth up in the church, not in the civil state; and the consequence of this apostacy is giving men up to strong delusions to believe a lie, and then follows their damnation; and the cause of it is said to be, not receiving the truth in the love of it; so that it is not a civil, but a spiritual apostacy, as the word in Scripture is always (I suppose) so taken. And it is not of a particular person, or of a particular church, but a general apostacy of the church, though not of every individual; that church that is afterwards called the temple of God, where the man of sin sitteth, and is exalted above all that is called God; which cannot be in any particular church; and would not the apostle have specified that particular church? Neither is it some lesser apostacy which may befall the best church; but such as would be eminent, called ἡ ἀποστασία, that apostacy, greater than that of some believing Jews to Judaism, or of some Christians to Nicolaitanism, which some think is meant. Much less can it be Caius Cæsar, as Grotius interprets, or any one person, for the apostle saith not apostate, but apostacy; else a man of sin could not rise out of it, and exalt himself above all that is called God, and worshipped. It is an apostacy from sound doctrine, instituted worship, church government, and true holiness of life, as may be further considered afterwards. Neither is the apostacy all at once, but gradual; for out of it ariseth a man of sin, who grows up to this manhood by degrees; and sin and wickedness are not completed at first, as well as holiness. Much less is this apostacy a falling off from the Church of Rome, as some papists affirm, and make the Reformation to be the apostacy, which was a return from it. Doth the man of sin rise out of the Reformation? Did any of the first Reformers oppose and exalt themselves above all that is called God, or is worshipped? or, as God sat in the temple of God, &c.? Was any of their coming with all power, and signs, and lying wonders? or did any of them forbid to marry, and to abstain from meats, &c.? which is the character our apostle gives of this apostacy, 1 Tim. iv. 1—3. Neither is the Mahometan religion this apostacy, for Mahomet sitteth not in the temple of God. Neither is it in the falling of the converted Jews from the Jewish church to the gospel church; the apostle would never call that an apostacy. And that man of sin be revealed: the next argument is from the revelation of the man of sin; this is also to precede Christ's last coming: it is a Hebraism. A warlike man is styled a man of war; a bloody man, a man of bloods; a deceitful man, a man of deceit, &c.: so a man eminent in sin is here called a man of sin; not only personally so, but who doth promote sin, propagate it, countenance it, command it. See Platina, Sigebert, Blonetas, Beuno Usprengensis, Matt. Paris. In sins of omission, forbidding what God requireth; in sins of commission, requiring or allowing what God hath forbidden. In sins of the first table; corrupting God's worship by superstition and idolatry, taking God's name in vain by heartless devotion, dissembling piety, dispensing with perjury and false oaths, taking away the second commandment and the morality of the fourth commandment, and making men's faith and obedience to rest upon a human authority, &c. In sins of the second table; to dispense with duties belonging to superiors and inferiors; with murder, adultery, fornication, incest, robbery, lying, equivocation, &c. And besides all these, promoting a false religion, and destroying the true, by fines, imprisonments, banishments, tortures, poisons, massacre, fire, and faggot. And this man of sin is not a single person, but a company, order, and succession of men; because all are acted by the same spirit, therefore called a man; as the man of the earth, Psal. x. 18, is all men of an earthly spirit, and a man of the field, Gen. xxv. 27, is men whose minds and employments are in the field. Or, it is a sinful state. As the civil state of the four monarchies in Daniel is represented by four single beasts, and the antichristian state by a beast rising out of the sea, Rev. xiii. 1; so by man of sin is meant a sinful state, which though it consisteth of many people and nations, yet, being under the influence and government of one man, may be also styled the man of sin upon that account; impietatis Coryphaeus. Moulin. And because the sin of the whole community is chiefly centred in him, and springs out from him; a man in whom is the fountain of all sins. Hierom ad Algasiam. And the sin of this state is called a mystery of iniquity, ver. 7, and so differing from the sin in all other political states; and therefore may well be judged to be the same with the whore sitting on many waters, that hath mystery written in her forehead, Rev. xvii. 1, 5. And as no expositor takes the whore to be meant of a single woman, and the true apostolic church is represented by a woman in travail, Rev. xii. 1, 2, why then should we take the man of sin to be a single man, as the papists do? viz. a Jew of the tribe of Dan, that shall erect his kingdom and temple in Jerusalem, seduce the Jews, continue three years and a half, make great havoc of the church, to be opposed by Enoch and Elias, and is to come a little before the end of the world. Ridiculous! Neither can this man of sin be Simon Magus and his followers, for he was revealed in the apostle's time, seeing the mystery of iniquity belonging to this man of sin began to work in the apostle's days, as ver. 7, and he is the same whom St. John calls antichrist, 1 John ii. 18; and the spirit of antichrist began to be in the world in his time, chap. iv. 3; and the nations are to be made drunk with the cup of his fornication, and to serve and obey him, &c., Rev. xiii. 8; xvii. 4; all which requires more time than is allotted by them; but they set him a great way off, that none may suspect him to be among themselves; but he that will compare the Church of Rome in the apostle Paul's times with what it is now, and the doctrine of the council of Trent with that laid down in his Epistle to the Romans, may say, How is the faithful city become a harlot! And this man of sin is to be revealed also, which shows that he is not a single person, not yet born: revealing relates not so much to a person, as a thing; in particular to the mystery of iniquity, mentioned ver. 7: his revealing is either quoad existentiam, or apparentiam. The former is meant here, and the latter ver. 8. He grows up into an existence, as the apostacy grows, as vermin grows out of putrefaction. As the church's purity, faith, love, holiness declined, and as pride, ambition, covetousness, luxury prevailed, so he grew up: and which was the direct point and time of his full revelation in this first sense is conjectured by many, but determined by none; it is most generally referred to the time of Boniface the Third, to whom Phocas granted the style of œcumenical bishop, and to the Church of Rome to be the mother church. But as the apostacy brings forth this man of sin, so as he riseth he helps it forward; so that he both causeth it, and is caused by it. As corruption in doctrine, worship, discipline, and manners brought him forth, so he was active in corrupting them more and more. The son of perdition; another Hebraism, where sometimes that which any way proceeds from another, as its cause, is called its son, as sparks the sons of the coal, Job v. 7, and branches sons of the tree, Gen. xlix. 22, and the learner the son of the teacher, Prov. iii. 1; and sometimes that which a man is addicted to, as a wicked man is the son of wickedness, Psal. lxxxix. 22. Again, that which gives forth what it hath in itself, as the branches of the olive trees giving oil are called the sons of oil, Zech. iv. 14; and in the text, the man of sin is the son of perdition, as Judas is called, John xvii. 12: and he is so either actively, as he brings others to destruction, and so may be called Apollyon, Rev. ix. 11; or rather passively, as devoted to perdition; as Rev. xix. 20, the beast and false prophet are both cast into the lake of fire and brimstone; and the beast that was, and is not, is said to go into perdition, Rev. xvii. 11. The destroyer of others both in soul and body will be destroyed himself: first, morally, by the word and Spirit, as ver. 8; and then judicially, by God's revenging justice in this world, and that to come. The apostle, at the very first mentioning him, declares his destiny; at his first rising and revealing, mentions his fall and ruin.

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

A further description of this man of sin, by his opposition and exaltation. Who opposeth; or, ἠντικειμενος, the opposer; or rather, opposing, expressed in the participle of the present tense, denoting a continued act, or that which he bends himself strongly to. But against what? The same that he exalteth himself above, as some conceive; but the grammar will not well admit that sense, and we should not so restrain it; and therefore we will take the word indefinitely, as expressed in the text. But we may well conceive, it is Christ himself whom he opposeth; as his name given him by the apostle John doth evidence, when he is called antichrist, or the antichrist, one that is against Christ; not that he openly and professedly opposeth him, but as Judas kissed his Master, and betrayed him: see those that have written of antichrist, as Philip Nicholas, Whitaker, Danæus, Chamier, Moulin, Junius, &c. It is iniquity in a mystery. He serveth Christ, but it is to serve himself upon him. He acknowledgeth him in all his offices, and yet doth virtually deny and oppose him in them all: called antichrist, as opposite to the unction of Christ: Christ signifies anointed, and so he opposeth him in the offices to which he is anointed, while he owns his natures. He profeseth himself a "servant of the servants of God," and yet persecutes, curseth, proscribes, and killeth them, opposing Christ in his members. He maketh war with the saints, Rev. xiii. 7. He hath two horns like a lamb, and speaks as a dragon, ver. 11; speaks lies in hypocrisy, 1 Tim. iv. 2. And then he is described by his exaltation;

ὑπεραιρόμενος, exalted, which is well supplied, he exalteth himself: it is not from God. He exalteth himself, or lifteth himself, above all that is called God, though not really and essentially God. The apostle well knew that in the Old Testament magistrates were called gods, Psal. lxxxii. 1, 6; and 1 Cor. viii. 5, There be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth. Magistrates and rulers are of several degrees; some inferior, some superior; some supreme, as kings and emperors; but he exalteth himself above them all, and that not only in spirituals, by excommunications, but in civils, by deposing kings, disposing kingdoms, yea, making emperors to wait at his gate, hold his stirrup, prostrate themselves to kiss his toe, and then to tread upon their neck, as Alexander the Third did to Frederic Barbarossa; and this not condemned as the extravagancy of some particular persons, but allowed and justified by the doctrine and doctors of the Romish Church. And Bellarmine, de Rom. Pont. lib. 5. c. 8, gives it as the reason why the pope would not come to the council of Nice, lest if the emperor should come thither he should attempt to sit above him. So that by these two words in the text, the apostle describes him both in his enmity and pride, opposition and exaltation. Observe, first, He assumeth to himself a higher power than those that are only called gods; theirs is human, his is Divine; theirs on the bodies or estates of men, his over the conscience; theirs only to the living, his to men's souls after death. Next, he makes himself like God, and is as God, as the king of old Babylon said, I will be like the Most High, Isa. xiv. 14. As God's residence of old was in the temple of Jerusalem, so he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God: not that temple that was built by Solomon, and afterwards rebuilt, and to be built again, as the popish doctors speak: for it is now destroyed, and if it be built again by this man of sin, as they say, at his coming, would the apostle call that the temple of God? 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rev. iii. 12, &c. But it is a spiritual temple, as the church is called, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. So Augustine, Jerome, Hilary, Chrysostom, understand it. And he is said here to sit, to have here his cathedra. The apostle speaks of him as a bishop, whose episcopal see is called a seat, or cathedra; and here he sitteth as God: the popish writers give the pope that and suchlike titles. Dominus Deus noster Papa, Idem est Dominum Dei et Papæ, Tu es alter Deus in Terra, "Thou art another God on earth." Concil. Later. sess. 4. And as God he maketh laws to bind the conscience, and dispenseth with laws natural and moral; pardons sin as he pleaseth, past, present, and to come; can deliver souls out of purgatory, and translate them to heaven: so that this man of sin is not to be looked for among the Turks, pagans, or infidels. He sitteth in the temple, the church, of God; not that it can be the true church where he thus sitteth and acteth, but rather the synagogue of Satan; but that which he calleth so, and which beareth that name, and which before the falling away was really so, Rom. i. 8. As Jerusalem is called the holy city after it had lost its holiness, Matt. iv. 5; and the faithful city, when become a harlot, Isa. i. 21; and Mount Tabor a holy mount, 2 Pet. i. 18; because once so: or called so according to men's opinion; as idols, that are nothing, are yet called gods, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23; 1 Cor. viii. 5. Some read the words, eis τὸν ναόν, in templum Dei, as we say, in amicum. i. e. velut amicus, he sitteth for the temple of God, as if he himself was the temple and church of God. So Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. 20. c. 19. And so some of our protestant writers, applying it to the pope, who, as the head of the church, hath the whole church virtually in himself, and doth exercise all church power. Shewing himself that he is God; not saying it with his mouth, as Œcumenius saith, but making such a show before men; though Bellarmine interprets it of an open boasting and vaunting himself to be God, which, saith he, the pope doth not; but by pretended miracles, signs, and wonders, by pardons, indulgences, canonizing saints, dominion over princes and kingdoms, he shows himself as a God before men, and claims a power to be judged of no man, and to be judge of all men. A seculari potestate non solvi posse nec ligari pontificem, quem constat a Constantino Deum appellatum, cum nec Deum ab hominibus judicari manifestum sit. Decret. distinct. 96. c. 7. Yea, lastly, he exalteth himself above God himself, when he maketh the Scriptures to derive their authority more from the pope's canonizing, than God himself; and without it no man is bound to believe them. Decret. lib. 2. tit. 23. Again, If the pope should err by commanding vice and forbidding virtue, the church was bound to believe vice to be good and virtue to be evil. Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Summo Pont. c. 5. And it is frequent among their divines and canonists to say, that the pope can dispense against the apostles and the Old Testament, and the Scriptures are inferior to his decrees, and without the authority of the church are a nose of wax, paper, and parchment, &c.; so that upon the whole, as John's disciples asked concerning Christ, Art thou he that should come, or must we look for another? so, may we not say to the pope concerning antichrist, Art thou he, &c.? I will speak boldly, either there is no antichrist, or the bishop of Rome is he. Chamier. l. 16. c. 8.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

The apostle tacitly upbraids them for their forgetfulness. To forget the things that have been taught us, is a great evil: Solomon often cautions against it, Prov. iii. 1; iv. 5; and it is often reproved, Heb. xii. 5; Jam. i. 24; and the contrary required, Mal. iv. 4; John xvi. 4; Jude 17; Rev. iii. 3. David hid the word in his heart, Psal. cxix. 11, and the virgin Mary kept the angel's sayings, Luke ii. 19. The apostles did take care to tell the churches of the apostacy that would come, and of false prophets and teachers that would arise, as Paul the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx. 29, 30, and Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 1, and St. John of the coming of antichrist, 1 John ii. 18; and more fully, though obscurely, in the book of the Revelation; and the apostle here in this verse minds these Thessalonians that he told them of the coming of the man of sin before the coming of Christ, so that they should not have been shaken in their minds about Christ's coming in that present age. And they told the churches of these things, that they might not be surprised by them, or offended at them, when they came.

6 And now ye know what || withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

And now ye know what withholdeth: the apostle it seems had told them, as of his coming, so of what at present withheld the revealing of him. And what this was is difficult to know now, though it seems these Thessalonians knew it: there are many conjectures about it. This I shall say in general: 1. It was something that the apostle thought not safe openly to declare in writing; else he would not have written of it so obscurely. 2. It was both a thing, and a person; a thing, τὸ κατέχον, in this verse, that which withholdeth; and a person, as in the next verse, ὁ κατέχων, he who letteth. 3. It was also such a thing and such a person as were to be removed out of the way, not totally, but as they were hinderances of this revelation. Expositors, both popish and protestant, pitch upon the Roman emperor and empire as most probably meant here by the apostle; and therefore he wrote not plainly, lest by writing of the taking away that empire, which the Romans thought to be eternal, he might stir up their hatred against the Christians. Some understand it of the removing only the seat of the emperor from Rome to Constantinople, whereby the bishop of Rome had opportunity to grow up into greater power. The popish writers understand it of the total destruction of the empire, which because they see not yet done they conclude the man of sin is not yet revealed. Our protestant writers understand it only of such a weakening of the empire and imperial dominion, as gave the bishop and clergy of Rome advantage to rise up into power both spiritual and secular; as some learned writers have given an account thereof. When the empire was broken into ten kingdoms, the imperial power of the emperors was much weakened; and being afterwards united in the pope as an ecclesiastical monarch, he grew up, and the imperial power declined, the grandeur of them both could not stand together. And this is the beast with the ten horns, and ten crowns upon the horns, which is spoken of, Rev. xiii. 1; whereupon this beast is worshipped, and the voice is, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? ver. 4. Some of the ancient fathers had this sense of the text: see Tertul. de Resurrect. l. 4. c. 24. Chrysost. in locum. Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 19. c. 20. Jerome, when he heard of the taking of Rome by Alaricus, expected the coming of antichrist not far off. Whereupon the ancient church did pray that the Roman empire might continue long, that his coming might be delayed: Tertul. Apol. c. 32, 39. But it is now evident how it is fallen from what once it was. The eastern part is under the dominion of the Turk; the western divided into ten distinct kingdoms under distinct governments; and in Germany, where it is most remaining, the empire is little more than titular; and Italy and Rome wholly in the pope's possession: and hence this man of sin hath been long since revealed. That he might be revealed in his time: as God appoints seasons for all his works, so for the revealing of him, as also for his ruin.

7 For <sup>k</sup> the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way.

For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; the way was prepared by degrees for the man of sin, before he came actually to be revealed, or constituted in his complete existence; and this was by the working of the mystery of iniquity. A mystery is something in general which is abstruse, intricate, and not easily discerned. And there are mysteries in doctrine, and in practice; mysteries of godliness, and mysteries of iniquity; mysteries of the kingdom of God, and of the devil's kingdom. So there are the deep things of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10, and the depths of Satan, Rev. ii. 24. The mystery ushering in the man of sin is a mystery of iniquity. It is not open sin and wickedness, but dissembled piety, specious errors, wickedness under a form of godliness cunningly managed, that is here meant: see the book called The Mystery of Jesuitism, or the Provincial Letters. And it is a mystery that worketh; it doth exert and put forth itself, but secretly, as a mole which worketh under ground. And its working is not against the being, providence, and attributes of God, or natural religion; but to undermine Christianity in the peculiar doctrines, worship, and practice of it. In doctrines are brought in privily damnable heresies, 2 Pet. ii. 1. In worship, inventions and commandments of men, under pretences of greater reverence, devotion, and humility, Col. ii. 22, 23. In practice, dispensations to moral impieties under colour of service to the catholic church. And this mystery, saith our apostle, already worketh; in the false doctrines of the false teachers of his time, in the traditions and inventions of men obtruding themselves into the worship of God in his time, in the affectation of pre-eminence in the church in his time, and making merchandise of the gospel in his time, and gain godliness; and in mingling philosophical notions with the simplicity of the gospel, and gratifying the flesh under a form of godliness, and pretence of gospel liberty. And it was not among the heathen, or the Jews, but among the professors of Christianity, that this mystery was then working, as I suppose the apostle meaneth. And when the man of sin was fully revealed all these corruptions did centre in him, as sinks in the common sewer; the lesser antichrists in the great antichrist. Only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way: the idolatries and persecutions of the heathen emperors must be taken out of the way, to make way for those that arise under a Christian, or rather antichristian, state, the dragon giving his seat, spirit, and power to the beast. And the power that was in the Roman emperor, whether heathen or Christian, must be taken out of the way to make room for the exaltation of this man of sin. For notwithstanding all corruptions in doctrine, worship, or practice which might be introduced before, yet he is not fully revealed till he hath his jurisdiction and secular power also in his hand. And then this mystery of iniquity is arrived to its height; which St. John saw written in the forehead of the great whore, Rev. xvii. 5. Mystery, Babylon the great, &c., and which, some have said, was written anciently in the pope's mitre.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, <sup>l</sup>whom the Lord shall consume <sup>m</sup>with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy <sup>n</sup>with the brightness of his coming:

And then shall that Wicked be revealed: this revealing I think differs from that mentioned before, ver. 3; he is first revealed, as I said, quoad existentiam, when he comes forth into being, and then quoad apparentiam, when he comes to be discovered. And this I suppose is meant here,

<sup>k</sup> 1 John 2. 18. & 4. 3.

<sup>l</sup> Or, holdeth.

<sup>l</sup> Dan. 7. 10, 11.
<sup>m</sup> Job 4. 9.
<sup>n</sup> Is. 11. 4.
<sup>o</sup> Heb. 6. 6.
<sup>p</sup> Rev. 2. 16.
<sup>q</sup> R. 19. 15, 20, 21.
<sup>r</sup> n ch. 1. 8, 9.
<sup>s</sup> Heb. 10. 27.

because his destruction is mentioned as following upon it; for the discovering of him is the first step to his ruin, and here is called by another name. At his first rising he is a man of sin; but after he hath violated the laws of God and the laws of Christ by setting up his own, he is well called ἀνομος, that lawless one; and now he that pretended so highly for Christ is discovered to be antichrist. The mystery of iniquity that before lay hid comes to be revealed. God enlightening the eyes of many learned ministers and princes, yea, and of multitudes of people herein; the Scriptures, before shut up in an unknown tongue, being now translated to the understanding of the common people; those that were made drunk with the wine of her fornication, Rev. xvii. 2, now put away their wine from them, as Eli said to Hannah; and the kings and kingdoms that gave their power to the beast, now come to hate the whore, &c., the time being come for the fulfilling the words of God herein, Rev. xvii. 17. And this revelation is signified and foretold when the angel said to John, I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, Rev. xvii. 7. There is need of a Divine revelation to know the mystery of iniquity, as well as the mystery of godliness. And the woman is the same with the man of sin mentioned before, once the spouse of Christ, but now by her idolatry become a whore, and divorced from him; said to be also that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth, Rev. xvii. 18. By the understanding these things this wicked one comes to be revealed. Whom the Lord shall consume; which is not done all at once; his consumption goes before his destruction. As Jezebel, the prophetess who seduced the servants of God to commit fornication, is said to be cast into a bed of languishing, Rev. ii. 20, 22; as he rose up by degrees, so shall he be consumed gradually. His power declines by degrees, both civil and ecclesiastical, and the authority he had got both in and over the consciences of men. The seven vials are the seven last plagues, which do gradually consume him. And this is said to be done by the Lord himself, which is the Lord Jesus. He that made war with the Lamb is overcome by the Lamb, Rev. xvii. 14; though many instruments may be employed herein; for he is said to have those with him who are called chosen and faithful; and it belongs to him, as all power of heaven and earth is given to him, to save his people, and to destroy his adversaries; as it is said of him, Psal. xcvi. 3, A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about. As he is a refreshing, directing light to his people, so a consuming fire to his adversaries. The stone cut out of the mountain without hands, Dan. ii. 34, smites the image in the time of the fourth monarchy, when Christ came into the world, and in the latter end of it, under the antichristian state, it is broken in pieces. With the spirit of his mouth; as was prophesied of him, Isa. xi. 4, With the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked, even this wicked one here in the text, Rev. xviii. 8; xix. 15. And this, as some interpret, he shall do with ease, as by a word speaking; or by a word of command, saying, Let it be done, and it shall be done. Or, as we may read it, with the spirit of his lips, because of the power or spirit that goes along with his word. But this breath of Christ's mouth Cajetane and others understand of the word of the gospel, which is the breath of Christ's mouth in the mouths of his ministers, called the everlasting gospel, Rev. xiv. 6, which an angel flying through the midst of heaven is said to have, to preach to them that dwell upon the earth; and then followed by another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, ver. 8. The mystery of iniquity will be unveiled by the clear preaching of the word; and the primitive pure institutions of Christ, and doctrines of the gospel, will be vindicated from the antichristian corruptions and innovations. And the spirit of Christ going forth with the gospel, will make it effectual hereunto. These are the rod of his strength, whereby he rules in the midst of his enemies, Psal. cx. 2, and whereby he shall consume this man of sin. Nations and people will fall off from him as they come to understand the truth by the word preached. And shall destroy; after his consuming follows his destruction, καταργήσαι: the word destroy here signifies to abolish, enervate, to make of no force; and so used often in the New Testament: sometimes applied to the law, Rom. iii. 31, sometimes to the body of sin, Rom. vi. 6, sometimes to persons to whom Christ will not be effectual, Gal. v. 4; here to the man of sin: so that whatever remains there may be of him in the world, they shall be without any efficacy or power: his jurisdiction shall be abolished, his keys shall not be able to open or shut, the edge of both his swords shall be quite blunted, his triple crown shall fall off his head, his purgatory fire shall be put out, his images shall lose their veneration; the spell of the cross shall be detected, the intercession of saints shall be found to be a fiction, infallibility shall be found to be a deceit, supremacy of the church shall fall to the ground; the rivers of his large revenues shall be dried up, &c., and the beast that was, and is not, and yet is, Rev. xvii. 8, shall now utterly cease to be. With the brightness of his coming: the breath of his mouth wasted him, and the brightness of his coming destroys him. Some interpret this of Christ's personal coming to judgment, which will be with great brightness, as Matt. xxiv. 27, As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be; coming in the glory of heaven, and every eye shall see him; and of his coming he spake 1 Thess. iv., and in this chapter also, as that which was not so near at hand as some imagined. And without question this coming will destroy him, if not destroyed before, as well as the rest of the wicked, chap. i. 9; but whether judgment may not first proceed against the antichristian state, and those that have sinned under the gospel, is a question. It is sometimes mentioned particularly with respect to them: as in the parable of the tares and wheat, Matt. xiii., of the ten virgins, and the talents, Matt. xxv. And the beast and false prophet are cast into the lake of fire, Rev. xix. 20, before the general judgment, mentioned Rev. xx. 12. So that at Christ's personal coming his judgment will, as some conceive, begin here, and then proceed to the rest of the world; whereupon many assign some great length of time to Christ's stay upon earth, and judging the world. Others take the brightness of his coming in a spiritual sense, for a clearer manifestation of Christ in the world. As the kingdom of antichrist, or of this man of sin, is founded in darkness, so the brightness of this coming will dispel and destroy it. With respect to his eternal generation, Christ is said to be the brightness of his Father's glory, Heb. i. 2; but this is a brightness with respect to men. And though he hath come in his Spirit to enlighten his church from the beginning of the world, and more eminently after his ascension, yet this will exceed all the former, and is peculiarly styled the brightness of his coming. And so they expect this destruction of this man of sin before Christ's coming to judgment; for if it be the same with the fall of Babylon, mentioned in the Revelation, many things are to be done here upon earth after that, before Christ's last coming, and they mention the calling of the Jews, the destruction of those enemies called Gog and Magog, the coming down of the new Jerusalem from heaven, which is some glorious state of the church here upon earth. However, the apostle here mentions nothing of a destruction by the material sword; what princes may do of different religions upon a civil account, I do not know, but as this man of sin rose out of the apostasy of the church, so he will not be consumed and destroyed but by a return from it, which is done by the breath of Christ's mouth, and the brightness of his coming. But yet, by some instruments or other, God will avenge the blood of his servants upon this man of sin in the time and way appointed of him.

9 Even him, whose coming is <sup>o</sup> after <sup>o</sup> the working of Satan with all power and <sup>o</sup> signs and lying wonders, <sup>o</sup> Eph. 2. 2. Rev. 19. 23. p. See Deut. 18. 1.

Mat. 24. 24. Rev. 13. 13. & 19. 21. The apostle still continues his discourse about this man of sin. He had declared whence he arose, and to what height of power, and the manner and place of his exercising it, and what opened him the way to it, and also his destruction, with the means of it. But he thought it needful to explain particularly the manner of his rising into all this power, and preserving himself in it, and the persons over whom he doth exercise it. Whose coming is after the working of Satan; Κατ' ἐνέργειαν. Christ's coming is in power, and so is his: Christ comes with the Spirit of God, and his is with a spirit also, but it is of Satan: and the Spirit of God worketh with Christ in his coming, and the spirit of Satan with the man of sin in his coming; which implies either the principle of this working in his coming, it is the devil; or the similitude of it, it is like the working of Satan. If in the first sense, it shows by what spirit the antichristian church was first formed, and by which it is still informed and acted; as in natural bodies the matter is formed and informed by the spirit within it. The true church hath the Holy Spirit, that forms it into a spiritual temple, Eph. ii. 21, 22; the false church hath the spirit of the devil, forming it into the synagogue of Satan, Rev. ii. 9. The dragon is said to give the beast his power, seat, and great authority, Rev. xiii. 2; and this dragon is the devil in the heathen empire, who being cast out of his seat and power when the emperor became Christian, found the antichristian church, and here exercised that power and authority which he did formerly in the imperial seat of the heathen emperors; whence we may see whence all the furious zeal and bloody cruelties appearing in the popish church do spring, notwithstanding all their outward shows of devotion. If we take the words in the latter sense, then his coming is like the working of Satan; either with great power and energy, as the word imports: the Greek word is often used in a good sense; for God's working in the heart, Phil. ii. 13, for the working of the word, 1 Thess. ii. 13, for the working of the heart in prayer, James v. 17: or by the same methods; by pretences of piety and devotion, as Satan transforms himself into an angel of light; or by keeping men in blindness and ignorance, so doth Satan by setting before men secular grandeur, and the pomp of the world, as thus Satan dealt with our Saviour, Matt. iv.; or by suggesting lies instead of truth, so he dealt with our first parents, and is called a liar from the beginning. With all power; ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει. Besides that energy of Satan that works inwardly in this man of sin, which was mentioned before, he hath outward strength or power wherein he comes; which may be here meant. He hath the secular power to assist him, the kings of the earth giving their power to the beast; and we read of ten horns upon his head, which are the emblems of strength and power, Rev. xiii. 1; whereupon it is said, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? ver. 4. And signs, and lying wonders: some, by the figure called hendyadis, read it, by the power of signs and lying wonders; but not properly. Observe how Satan is God's ape; God confirmed the gospel with signs and wonders, Rom. xv. 19; God bearing them witness, with signs and wonders. &c. Heb. ii. 4; and Satan brings this man of sin into the world in the same manner: God did it to confirm the truth, but Satan to countenance a falsehood. But though he comes with signs and wonders, yet not properly with miracles, as the Greek word is rendered in Heb. ii. 4; because though the devil can work the one, he cannot the other: he can by his great natural knowledge and experience improve natural causes to their utmost, but he cannot effect things above all possibility of nature, which is the same power as creating. The schoolmen give their distinction between wonders and miracles, which is not needful here to insert: all miracles are wonders, but all wonders are not miracles; and yet are esteemed miracles when their cause is not known. The Romish legends are full of stories of miracles wrought to confirm their false doctrines of purgatory, of relics, invocation of saints, &c.; which might be wonders really wrought by the devil; such as were wrought by Jannes and Jambres in Egypt, and by Simon Magus, and Apollonius Tyaneus, &c.; who used magic arts, and the people, not knowing them in their causes, might judge them miracles. And being wrought for such ends, they are termed signs. For a sign is any thing that is used to make signification, whether it be a natural or artificial, an ordinary or extraordinary sign; used either for a good end, as those shown by Christ and the apostles, or for a bad end, as those used by this man of sin. People are apt to be affected with signs. The Jews, saith the apostle, require a sign, 1 Cor. i. 22, as they often desired Christ to show them a sign, and therefore this man of sin comes with signs. Some signs are only for representation, as the sign of the cross, and the images of Christ, and of his death and resurrection, &c.; and he comes in these: others are for confirmation, which are either real miracles, or such as seem so; and he comes in these latter also, which are here called τέρατα ψεύδους, lying wonders, or wonders of a lie, Hebrew. Though the Greek word is oft used for a real miracle, yet not so here; for miracles are the effects of a Divine power only, Rom. xv. 19; Heb. ii. 4, and not diabolical. And called lying wonders, either because they are used to confirm a lie, or because they are not real, but feigned wonders; impostures, to cheat the people, and make them wonder; whereof we have account in Gregory's Dialogues, and in Paulus Diaconus, and others; and yet such miracles as these the papists boast of as marks of their church to be true, though they are here by the apostle made the marks of the man of sin. And Christ foretells of false prophets that should show great signs and wonders, to deceive, if possible, the very elect, Matt. xxiv. 24. See Deut. xiii. 1; Rev. xiii. 13, 14.

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness; or, deceit of unrighteousness, unrighteous deceit, or deceitful unrighteousness. And it is universal, all. It is unrighteousness managed with great subtlety to deceive; and so the same with the mystery of iniquity, mentioned before, or the mystery of unrighteousness, as we may read it. All sin is unrighteousness, whether against God or man, as all virtue is comprehended in righteousness. The apostle here means unrighteousness so cloaked and covered, that men discern it not, but are deceived by it: as the Pharisees, who devoured widows' houses, and for pretence made long prayers; and so also they tithed mint and cummin as exactly religious, built the sepulchres of the prophets, made broad their phylacteries, would not eat with unwashen hands, &c. The like we find in the Church of Rome, as I mentioned before, where men are ambitious, covetous, cruel, superstitious, &c., and all under a pretence of righteousness, and for honour to Christ and the church: make use of Peter's keys to open rich men's coffers; and for a sum of money, to absolve men in this world, or to redeem them out of purgatory in the other world; which is a mere cheat, &c. Thus comes this man of sin, and by such ways he hath advanced himself. In them that perish: this shows who they are that are deceived by him. Reprobates are often so described, 2 Cor. ii. 15; iv. 3; and it is the same as elsewhere signifies damnation. The word signifies men that are lost, so used Matt. xviii. 11, or destroyed, 2 Cor. iv. 9. They are such as have not their names written in the book of life, Rev. xiii. 8; and who shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever, Rev. xiv. 10, 11. Because they received not the love of the truth: and the apostle gives the reason why they are thus deceived. He saith not they had not received the truth, but the love of it, and so hold it not fast, but are carried away with the general apostacy. Truth is either natural, which the heathen had, and detained in unrighteousness, Rom. i. 18; or supernatural, from Divine revelation. This is meant, for he speaks not of heathens, but Christians; not the world, but the church. That they might be saved: and the truth here meant is saving truth, as the gospel is called the word of truth, Eph. i. 13; Col. i. 5; for had they received it in love they might have been saved, but for want of that they perish; so that it is unsound, notional professors that are carried away by the man of sin, and deceived by him. Truth, if it be not received into the heart as well as the head, will not secure against apostacy or popery, nor prevent perishing. And the amiableness that is in gospel truth calls for love, as the certainty of its revelation calls for faith; and had they so received the truth they might have been saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie:

And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion: we had account in the former verse of such as are deceived by the man of sin, of their sin, and here of their punishment. They were first deluded, which was their sin; and God sends them strong delusion, and that is their punishment. They did not receive the truth in the love of it, which was their sin; and therefore are given up to believe a lie, which is their punishment. Had they received the truth aright, they might have been saved; but not receiving it, they are damned. And they were said to be such as perish, and their perishing is here called damnation. So that though God is not the author of sin or falsehood, Deus

q 2 Cor. 2. 15. & 4. 3.

r Rom. 1. 24. &c. See 1 Kings 22. 22. 23. & 14. 9.

s Matt. 24. 5. 11. 1 Tim. 4. 1.

non est auctor cuius est ultor, Fulgent.; yet he may in justice give men up to them, which the apostle here calls God's sending, &c.; which imports either, 1. Tradition, delivering men to Satan to tempt and deceive. 2. Desertion, withholding or withdrawing that grace that might preserve them. 3. A judicial permission, God purposing not to hinder men to fall into that sin or delusion which he seeth their own hearts incline them to. God concurs to evil, not positive, but privative; not efficient, but deficient; Schoolmen. God in Scripture is often said to do that which he permits to be done; as in the case of Joseph's selling into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 7, David's numbering the people, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, compared with 1 Chron. xxi. 1; and the ten kings giving their power to the beast, by God's putting it into their hearts, Rev. xvii. 17: and it is not a bare permission, for what evil God permits, he decreed to permit it; and he decreed the circumstances attending it, and the end to which he would order and dispose it, and the degree to which it should break forth. They were deceived into error, and God gave them up to it. And it did work with great efficacy; which either relates to the man of sin, that did lead them strongly into it, or to them that were led by him. When error doth vitiate the life, and one error begets another, and makes men violent against the truth, then it is the efficacy of error. And thus God doth judicially punish sin with sin, and delusion with delusion; and then they are always most operative, and most incurable. But men fall not presently under these judicial acts; men first refuse to see, before God sends blindness, and first harden their own hearts, before God hardens them. These in the text first refused to receive the truth, before they were given up to believe a lie: see Rom. i. 24. So that both God and this man of sin, and themselves also, are concerned in these evils; but they sinfully and unrighteously, but God judicially and in righteousness. That they should believe a lie: and the lie they were given up to believe, is a doctrinal lie: false speaking is a lie in words, hypocrisy is a lie in fact, and error is a lie in doctrine, Hos. xi. 12; Acts v. 3. Some by lie here suppose is meant the lying wonders before mentioned; and this sense need not be excluded, but I rather interpret it of false doctrine, as that which stands opposite to the truth before mentioned, and again mentioned in this verse. Sometimes idols are called lies, Isa. xlv. 20; sometimes, the things of the world, Psal. iv. 2; sometimes, the great men of the world, Psal. lxxii. 9; sometimes, false divinations, Ezek. xxii. 28; Zech. x. 2; sometimes, false prophesyings and predictions, Jer. xiv. 14; xxiii. 25, 26; and sometimes, false doctrines, as 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2, where we read of false prophets, who shall arise in the last time, and speak lies in hypocrisy, &c. And false apostles are said to be liars upon that account, Rev. ii. 2. And such are many popish doctrines, which the apostle here probably refers to. What is transubstantiation but a lie? purgatory, infallibility of the church, mediation of saints, their opus operatum, &c.? Men must be strongly deluded to believe such doctrines, and it is mentioned as a great judgment of God upon them to believe such lies, as it is a great mercy to believe the truth, especially if we consider what follows upon it.

12 That they all might be damned who 1 Rom. i. 32. believed not the truth, but 'had pleasure in unrighteousness.

That they all might be damned, or condemned. The Greek is, judged, but often translated as in the text; the simple verb being taken for the compound: so John iii. 17; 1 Cor. xi. 29; Jude 4. It is true a man may be judged and not condemned, but the judgment of the wicked is condemnation; and damnation is here mentioned either as the event, or the effect of their believing lies, or as the purpose of God in sending them strong delusions. They are first justly punished with spiritual judgment, and then eternal, and God is just in both; whence we see that there are some errors in judgment which are damnable. As we read of damnable heresies, 2 Pet. ii. 1, or heresies of destruction; such are many in the Romish Church; and the apostle speaks of such, Col. ii. 19, not holding the Head, &c.; not meant of a total rejection of Christ, but of voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, mingled with the true worship of the gospel; and such cannot be saved. Who believed not the truth: where we have a further description of these persons who are to be damned, which is added by the apostle, either to clear God's justice, as in sending them strong delusions to believe a lie, so also in their condemnation; or to assign the cause why they believed a lie, because they believed not the truth. Those will easily be brought to believe a lie who believe not the truth; and the belief here mentioned is that of assent, yet such an assent as is operative and practical, which they had not; for it was said before, they received not the truth in the love of it. But had pleasure in unrighteousness; did not only practise, but had great complacency and contentment of mind in it, as the Greek word imports, and so had rather believe a false doctrine which will countenance their practice, than the truth which doth condemn it: see Prov. x. 23; Rom. i. 32. By unrighteousness some expositors understand false doctrine, or error, because it is set in opposition here to truth, as sin is set in opposition to it, John viii. 46; and that the apostle hath peculiar reference to the corrupt doctrines of Simon Magus and the Nicolaitanes, that gave liberty to the lusts of the flesh. But why not rather to the doctrines of the man of sin, which he had been before speaking of? I rather take the word in the largest sense, so all sin is unrighteousness; and the apostle St. John saith, all unrighteousness is sin, 1 John v. 17, where unrighteousness is expressed by ἀνομία, a word which imports transgression of the law, as in this text by ἀδικία, a word which signifies injustice. So that we see here an erroneous mind and a vicious life going together. And when sin is come to this height, that men take pleasure in it, it makes them ripe for damnation. And how well these things agree to the antichristian church, let men consider and judge.

13 But 'we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God 'hath' from the beginning chosen you to salvation 'through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth':

u ch. 1. 3.
 x 1 Thess.
 1. 4.
 y Eph. 1. 4.
 z Luke 1. 75.
 1 Pet. 1. 2.

The apostle here exempts these Thessalonians out of the number of those reprobates that he had before spoken of, and speaks of them as such as should be preserved from apostacy in faith or practice, and obtain salvation. And this he mentions for comfort to them, and with thanksgivings to God. He had often before given thanks for them, 1 Thess. i. 2; ii. 13; iii. 9; and in the 1st chapter of this Epistle, ver. 3; and both here and there mentions it as a debt he was bound unto, or a duty he owed, we ought to give thanks, as in the Greek. And here he styles them, not only brethren, as often before, but beloved of the Lord, such as have been and are beloved; and therefore not in the number of them that should be damned, mentioned in the former verse. Because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation: which words are either to give the reason of the apostle's thanksgivings, or rather all arguments to evidence they were beloved of the Lord. And he instanceth in their election as a proof of it. There is an election to office, as David to be king, 2 Sam. vi. 21, and Judas to be an apostle, John vi. 70; and election to a visible church, and means of salvation, and thus the seed of Abraham were chosen, Deut. xxvi. 18; Psal. cxxxv. 4; cxlvii. 19; and election to salvation, as in the text; which is either that which follows faith, as some understand that place, Matt. xxii. 14, or rather that which goes before it, said here to be from the beginning: not from the beginning of the gospel, as some say; nor from the beginning of our preaching to you, or of your effectual calling, as others say; no, nor yet is it meant from the beginning of the world, which was the beginning of time; or immediately upon Adam's fall: but by beginning is here meant eternity itself, as election is said to be from before the foundation of the world, Eph. i. 4, which is from eternity. Though beginning seems to relate to time, yet the Scriptures often express eternity by such words as relate to time: as when God is called the Ancient of days, Dan. vii. 9, it signifies his eternity; and Jude speaks of some that were of old ordained to condemnation, Jude 4, πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι, God's eternal decrees being compared to a book wherein names are written. When was their ordaining but from eternity? And it is election to salvation, complete salvation, which is here meant, in the full fruition of it; not in the title to it by faith, or the first-fruits of it in sanctification, because they are here mentioned as the means that tend to it. Through sanctification of the Spirit: election is to the means as well as the end, as Eph. i. 4. Holiness is not the cause of God's election, but God hath decreed it to be the way to salvation; without holiness none shall ever see the Lord, Heb. xii. 14. And belief of the truth: and therefore those were spoken of as persons to be damned who believed not the truth, in the former verse. And so it is evident, election is not upon the foresight of faith, it is through it we have salvation, but not election: but of this before, 1 Thess. iv. And the apostle joins sanctification and faith together, for they are not and cannot be put asunder. Now by all this the apostle proves they were beloved of the Lord. He saw the fruits of election in their sanctification and belief of the truth, thence concludes they were elected, and therefore loved.

14 Whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Whereunto he called you by our gospel: before, the apostle mentioned their election, now their calling; which are often in Scripture put together, Rom. viii. 30; 2 Pet. i. 10; and are both applied to Christ himself, Isa. xlii. 1, 6. They are those two sovereign acts of God, prerequisite to a state of salvation; the one eternal, the other in time; the one immanent in God, the other transient upon the creature; and it is the first transient act that flows from election. And because there is an outward and inward call mentioned in Scripture, we must here understand the apostle of both: for Εἰς ὃ, Whereunto, or to which thing, mentioned in the beginning of this verse, refers to all that he said in the former verse, which is, salvation, sanctification, belief of the truth, which they could not attain with a mere outward call, though they had that also; for the apostle mentions here the gospel, which he calls our gospel, because preached by them, and intrusted to them, though the original of it is from God, and the matter of it from Jesus Christ. And he puts them in mind of the great mercy they had received in their preaching the gospel to them, for thereby they were called into a state of salvation; as also of the way wherein they are to obtain this salvation, which is through sanctification of the Spirit, and the belief of the truth, that they might be careful to persevere both in faith and holiness; and not to expect it from the law, or the speculations of philosophy, which some false teachers might suggest, for as faith cometh by hearing the gospel, Rom. x. 17, so it is that only which is the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16. And by this he confirms to them also their election, because they had been thus effectually called by the gospel: for no man can conclude his salvation from election, if he hath not been also thus called, which is by feeling the power of the gospel in the heart, and yielding obedience to it in his life. What the apostle before called salvation, he here styles the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. Though in 1 Thess. v. 9, he had there also called it obtaining salvation, and by the same word here used in the text: yea, the word περιποίησις, here rendered obtaining, sometimes signifies salvation itself, Heb. x. 39, and, which is equivalent, the purchased possession, Eph. i. 14; and it may signify in the text, the obtaining the glory of Christ in a way of purchase, as also by diligent endeavours after it, by way of acquisition, as the word seems to signify. And by the glory of Christ is not meant the glory we give to him, as some would strain the words to that sense; but rather, the glory we shall receive from him, which is the same which the Father hath given to him, and which he hath given to his people, John xvii. 22, whereby they are co-heirs with him, Rom. viii. 17. And so the apostle sets forth the greatness of this salvation, to which these believers were called, it is to the obtaining the same glory with Christ, in kind at least; and shows their different state from those that perish, and will be damned, mentioned in the former verses. Or if we read the words, ye are called to be a peculiar people, as the Greek word is so rendered, 1 Pet. ii. 9, λαός εις περιποίησιν, a peculiar people, and understand by the glory of Christ, that glory of his grace he hath manifested herein, it shows also how God hath distinguished them from those before mentioned.

15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

b 1 Cor. 14.
12. Phil. 4. 1.
c 1 Cor. 11.
2. ch. 3. 6.

The former verses contained consolation, this is an exhortation: the apostle had assured them of their being elected and called, yet exhorts them to their duty. Assurance of salvation doth not encourage negligence; the apostle takes his argument from thence to quicken them, Therefore, &c. And that which he exhorts them to is, 1. To stand fast; a military word, speaking as a captain to his soldiers; so 1 Cor. xvi. 13; Eph. vi. 14; having before foretold a great apostasy that would come. Or because he had told them of the great glory they had been called to the obtaining of by the gospel, he exhorts them to stand fast, which implies a firm persuasion of mind and constant purpose of will, and stands opposite to hesitation and despondency. 2. To hold the traditions which they had been taught. The word tradition signifies any thing delivered to another; especially meant of doctrines. The Pharisees' doctrine is called tradition, Matt. xv. 3; and so the true doctrines of the gospel, being such as the apostles delivered to the people; as the doctrine of the Lord's supper is said to be delivered, 1 Cor. xi. 23; and so Rom. vi. 13. Whether by word, or our epistle; by word of mouth in public preaching, or private instruction. The apostle had both preached and written to these Thessalonians, before he wrote this Second Epistle. And that the papists should hence infer that there are matters of necessary consequence in religion, not contained in the Scriptures, is without ground. These they call traditions, some whereof are concerning faith, others concerning manners, others ritual, with respect to the worship of God, or the external polity of the church. But who can assure us what these are? What a door is here opened to introduce what men please into the church, under pretence of tradition! Who were the persons the apostle intrusted to keep these traditions? why should he not declare the whole system of gospel truths he had received from Christ in writing, as well as part? why should he conceal some things, when he wrote others? And doth not the apostle assure Timothy that All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works? 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. What need then traditions? And how can we know that they are by Divine inspiration, as we are assured all Scripture is? Our Saviour reproved the Pharisees about their traditions, when from hence they would observe and impose ceremonies of washing hands, cups, and platters, Matt. xv. 2—6, yea, and by them make the commandments of God of none effect; which the apostle cautions the Colossians about, Col. ii. 8; and whereof Paul declares his zeal before his conversion, Gal. i. 14: and we find men's zeal still more about them than moral duties, and express institutions of God's worship. All the apostle's doctrine, whether by word or epistle, he calls by the name of traditions in the text here, and he commends the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xi. 2, that they kept the traditions delivered to them; but were not they all committed to writing in some place or other of his Epistles? and which were, and which were not, who can be certain? And why should traditions be confined only to those things which the apostle did not write? He exhorts the Thessalonians to hold the traditions which they had been taught, whether by word or epistle. And if they hold them with strength, as the word is, by this means they would stand fast.

16 Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace,

d ch. 1. 1, 2.
e 1 John 4.
10. Rev. 1. 5.
f 1 Pet. 1. 2.

The apostle here addeth prayer to his exhortation: the word and prayer are to go together, whether it be written or preached; as the twelve told the disciples, Acts vi. 4. We will give ourselves to the word and prayer. He had planted them a church, but he knew God gave the increase, 1 Cor. iii. 6. The persons he prays to are here, first, our Lord Jesus Christ; which was a good argument in Athana-suis time, for the dignity of Christ, against the Arians; and so it is still, and now against the Socinians: for God alone is the object of worship, and the bestower of those gifts which he here prays for. Only the apostle, when he mentions Christ, delights to mention him in his relation to his people; so he doth for the most part in all his Epistles, and so in this text. He useth a pronoun possessive, our, for it is relation and interest which commendeth and sweeteneth any good to us. And the other person is God the Father, who is the Father of lights, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, James i. 17; and whom in his prayer he mentions together with Christ, because no access can be to God but through Christ, and no good gift descends to us but through him. And so God the Father is mentioned in his relation to his people also, God, even our Father; and when Christ is ours, in him God is ours also. And the apostle thus looking, and thus speaking of Christ and of God, strengthens his own and their faith, for the obtaining of the gifts he prays for. Which hath loved us: another argument is from God's love: our doubts in prayer arise more from unbelief in God's will, than his power, which will vanish when we look upon him in his love to us; for the nature of love is velle bonum, to will good to whom we love. Another is, from gifts already received, which are, first, everlasting consolation; whereby it appears, that God's love is communicative, and that it is not common, but his special love he spake of. Outward comforts are common gifts, but these the apostle means not here, because they are not everlasting; they continue not beyond death; they begin in time and end with time: but this consolation begins in time, and abides to eternity; and this man cannot give, the world cannot give, nor we give it ourselves, God giveth it only; and he gives it to whom he loveth, as every man seeks to comfort those whom he loves: and though some whom God loves may not feel his consolation, yet they have a right, and God hath it in reserve for them: Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart, Psal. xcvi. 11. And though sometimes it may be interrupted where it is felt, yet not so as to be destroyed in its foundation, and to hinder its return, either in the temporal or eternal world, where it will be everlasting; so that as God is styled the God of all grace, 1 Pet. v. 10; so, the God of all comfort, 2 Cor. i. 3. And by us in the text he means these Thessalonians as well as himself, for he had spoken before of their joy in the Holy Ghost, 1 Thess. i. 6. And the other gift is, good hope. Hope, as a natural affection, is the expectation of the soul; and the object of it is bonum futurum, arduum, possibile; good, future good, difficult, and possible. But, as a grace, it is the expectation of the good things God hath promised, and not yet exhibited. And it is called good hope, good by way of eminency; with respect to the objects of it, which are eminently good; the certainty of it, it will not make ashamed, Rom. v. 5; compared to an anchor sure and stedfast, Heb. vi. 19: the regularness of it; things promised only, and as they are promised; else it is presumption, and not hope: the fruits of it; peace, purity, industry, and consolation also, and therefore joined with it here in the text: as the apostle speaks elsewhere of rejoicing in hope, Rom. v. 2; xii. 12; Heb. iii. 6. Or, as some, it is called good hope, with respect to the degree they had attained of it in their hearts; though they had not yet the good things promised, yet they had good hope of enjoying them. And by this epithet he distinguisheth this hope from the carnal vain hope of the men of the world, and the false hope of hypocrites, Job viii. 13; and themselves also from the state they were in when Gentiles, without hope, Eph. ii. 12. And this also is God's gift, as he is called the God of hope, Rom. xv. 13, not only as the object, but the author of it. And both these gifts are here said to be through grace; for else we could have had no ground either of hope or comfort. Sin had shut up our way to both, it is only grace that hath opened it to us. What we enjoy at present, and what we hope to enjoy, is all through grace. And from these gifts already received the apostle strengthens his faith about the other things he here prays for.

17 Comfort your hearts, *and stablish you in every good word and work.

Next, we have the things prayed for: Comfort your hearts; though he said before, who hath given us everlast- ing consolation. The apostle means, either actual possession of what God had given title to, or a continued supply and increase of comfort already received. And he prays for this either in respect of the afflictions they suffered, that they might not faint; or to enable them the better to stand fast in the faith, and not fall away, as others. And so it agrees with the next petition for them. And stablish you in every good word and work: the word of truth is this good word, Prov. iv. 2, as the gospel is called, 2 Cor. vi. 7. And the doctrines of it are all good, 1 Tim. iv. 6; they are good for instruction, for correction, for reproof, for doctrine, 2 Tim. iii. 16. All truth is an intellectual good, whether natural or moral; but evangelical truth is by way of eminence good. It is a good word which is a word of salvation, Acts xiii. 26; and to be established in it, is firmly to believe it, and to hold it fast against seducing opinion, or persecutions; and by every good word he means all Divine truth, especially the greater truths; not to hold some truths and let others go. And to word the apostle adds work, that there may be a harmony betwixt faith and practice. As the doctrines of the gospel are true, so the works they require are good. And good works are manifold, respecting God, our neighbour, and ourselves. A Christian should not only practise them all, but be established in them, which implies constancy, perseverance, and resolution. True religion is not word only, but work; it is not only speculative, but practical. A sound mind ought to be joined with a holy life. And to make a work good, the principle, rule, manner, and end must all be good.

CHAP. III

The apostle desireth the Thessalonians to pray for him, 1, 2, testifying his confidence in them, 3, 4, and praying God to direct them, 5. He censureth the idle and disorderly, and requireth others to abstain from their company, 6—15: concluding with prayer and salutation, 16—18.

FINALLY, brethren, *pray for us, that the word of the Lord †may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you:

The apostle now draws towards the close of his Epistle, as appears by the word finally, which he also useth in the close of other Epistles, as 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Eph. vi. 10; Phil. iv. 8: τέλειον. It imports the adding of something that remains. And that which he first addeth, is the desire of their prayers; as he had desired them in the former Epistle, chap. v. 25; and so of other churches, 2 Cor. i. 11; Eph. vi. 19; Heb. xiii. 18, &c. He had prayed for them in the foregoing chapter, and now he begs their prayers. It is a mutual duty that ministers and people owe to one another. Though the apostle gave himself to the word, and prayer also, Acts vi. 4, yet the prayers of many may be more prevalent than of one, though an apostle: and they being concerned for the advancing of Christ's interest in the world, as they were Christians, were therefore engaged to pray for him. And the apostle was sensible of the greatness of the work which was in his hand, and his own insufficiency, without God, therefore he desires prayer; and it is of them whom he here calls brethren: he knew the prayers of the wicked and unbelievers would avail nothing; and though he was a great apostle, yet the greatest in the church may stand in need of, and be helped by, the prayers of the meanest brethren. And their prayers he desires are, first, with respect to his ministry, that the word of the Lord may have free course, or may run; that the course of it may not be stopped, it being as a river of the water of life. The apostle was to teach all nations, and so desires the word may pass from one nation to another, yea, and run down from one generation to another, that it may spread and diffuse itself, and disciples might be multiplied. This is called the increasing of it, Acts xii. 24; the growing and multiplying of it, Acts xix. 20; which Christ sets forth by the parable of the mustard-seed, which grew and spread; and of the leaven, that diffused its virtue in the meal, Matt. xiii. 31—33: the apostle referring here to the

† 1 Cor. i. 8.
1 Thess. 3. 13.
1 Pet. 5. 10.

* Eph. 6. 18.
Col. 4. 3.
1 Thess. 5. 25.
† Gr.
may run.

external course of the word, rather than its inward efficacy in the soul, as also Christ seems chiefly to do in those parables. There are many things that hinder the course of the gospel; sometimes wicked rulers make laws against it, sometimes great persecutions have been raised, sometimes false teachers oppose it, sometimes professors prove apostates and scandalize the world against it, sometimes reproaches are thrown in the way of it. And to the free course of it is required, on the contrary, a provision of suitable help herein, both of magistracy and ministry, and the bestowing of the Spirit, and the blessing of endeavours used herein. All these are to be prayed for, as the former to be prayed against. And be glorified: he means, that it might have honour, reputation, and high esteem in the world, and not lie under reproach; as the Jews accounted it heresy, and the Gentiles foolishness: as it is said of those Gentiles, Acts xiii. 48, they glorified the word of the Lord, by their honourable respect to it, and joy in it. As also that it might produce glorious effects in the world, in subduing people to God, and making men new creatures, and bringing them out of the devil's into Christ's kingdom, &c.; that it may evidence itself to be from heaven, and the power of God to men's salvation, and not an invention of man; to which we may add, that it may be honoured in the unblamable and exemplary walking of the professors of it. Even as it is with you: the glorious success of it with them he had largely shown before in both these Epistles; and he would have them pray for the like with others. Those that have felt the power of the gospel themselves to their conversion and salvation, should pray that others may partake of it with them. Herein they show their charity to men, and love to God, which the apostle here puts them upon, as that which would be acceptable to God; and the rather, because their own experience might teach them what God was able to do for others. Or else the apostle in these words sets forth these Thessalonians as a pattern of the mighty success of the word: it had its free course and was glorified among them; they received it as the word of God, and not of men. As if the apostle should say, They that would know the glorious success of the word of the Lord, let them go to Thessalonica.

1 Rom. 15. 2 And <sup>b</sup> that we may be delivered from
31. † unreasonable and wicked men: <sup>c</sup> for all † Gr eband. men have not faith.
c Acts 24. 24.
Rom. 10. 16.

Their prayers are here desired by the apostle with respect to their persons, which relates to the prayer desired before with respect to the word; for the apostle and his fellow labourers met with such men that did oppose them, and by that means were hindered in their work of the ministry, and the free course of the word obstructed. What were these men? were they the persecuting Gentiles? they met with such: or the envious, malicious Jews? they met with such also; and here at Thessalonica in particular, and which followed Paul to Berea, Acts xvii. Or were they false brethren crept into the church? as he complains of his perils by them, 2 Cor. xi. 26; which some think most probable, by what he adds, for all men have not faith, even of those that make profession. Why may not we take in all these? But whoever they were, he styles them, first, unreasonable men, men out of place, as the word imports; taken either literally, for vagrants, wanderers, not keepers at home; or such as follow the apostle from place to place, to hinder his ministry. Or logically, for men that argued absurdly, and kept to no sound topics in reasoning; either false teachers among the Jews, or the heathen philosophers, such as he met with at Athens, whom he disputed with, Acts xvii. Or morally, for men that had corrupt principles and practices, that kept not to the duty of their place and station, (desordonnez, French translation,) and wandered out of the path of righteousness. We render it unreasonable men; men transported with fury and passion against all reason, as we read of the Jews, Acts xvii. 5. Or such as acted contrary to reason, as the apostle speaks of such Jews in the former Epistle, who were contrary to all men, forbidding them to preach to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. Or men of sensual lives, living more like brutes than reasonable creatures. Secondly, wicked men; so that whoever they were, whether Jews or Gentiles, teachers or the common people, learned or unlearned, they were wicked; and whatever was meant by the former word, yet this is plain; and the word imports either men that are laborious in wickedness, or that by their wickedness create labour and trouble to others. And such the apostle met with at Thessalonica, Jews who took to them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and drew Jason and others before the rulers, assaulting his house, Acts xvii. 5, 6: and indeed wherever they came, they met with such kind of men. Through the lusts of men's hearts; and the enmity and malice of the devil, faithful ministers will meet with opposition, and such as will hinder what they can the free course of the word. And therefore the apostle desires prayer to be delivered from them, ἵνα σωθῆμεν, the word signifies a rescue by strength from some impending or incumbent evil, oft used, Luke i. 74; Col. i. 13; 1 Thess. i. 10. And he desires deliverance rather for the gospel's sake than his own. And though it is honourable to suffer for the gospel, yet it is desirable to be kept out of the hands of such men as these. The apostle subjoins the reason why men are thus, for all men have not faith. He needed not say this of infidels, which all men know to be without it, and therefore it is thought the apostle here means professors. There may be true faith wanting where faith is professed. Faith is sometimes taken for fidelity, a moral virtue, and some think is meant here, because it follows in the next verse by way of antithesis, But the Lord is faithful. But rather, I take it for a theological grace; for that true evangelical faith which purifies the heart, and worketh by love, and brings forth the acts of obedience to all God's commandments. Had they this faith they would not be unreasonable and wicked. But can we suppose such to be in the church? As well as those, 2 Tim. iii. 5, whom the apostle describes to have a form of godliness under all that wickedness he there mentions. But let men have civility, sobriety, external devotion, and profession, yet if they oppose the gospel, in the power, purity, and progress of it, they may be styled unreasonable and wicked men; and from such men we may pray, as the apostle desired here, Good Lord, deliver us. And it is the duty of people with respect to their faithful ministers, and the work of the gospel in their hands, to pray that they may be delivered from such men.

3 But <sup>d</sup> the Lord is faithful, who shall <sup>d</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 9
establish you, and <sup>e</sup> keep you from evil. <sup>e</sup> 17 Thes. 5. 24
2 John 17. 15
2 Pet. 2. 8

These words are added by way of consolation: 1. With respect to their establishment, which the apostle had before prayed for, chap. ii. 17, and here he assures them of it. What God hath promised, yet we may and ought to pray for; and ministers should exhort people to seek that grace which they may be sure beforehand God will give. And this establishment respects either their mind, in the belief of the gospel against false doctrine; or their hearts, against inordinate fears of men; or their practice, against departing from the way of holiness. The apostle well knew the tenure of the new covenant, which contains promises of perseverance and establishment, as well as of pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace, Jer. xxxii. 40; and he grounds his confidence of their establishment upon God's faithfulness, as upon the same account he comforts the Corinthians, 1 Cor. x. 13, and these Thessalonians, 1 Thess. v. 24, and it may be the apostle hath here reference to what he had said before; Though we shall meet with wicked and unreasonable men, yet fear not, God will establish you, for he is faithful. As God's promises are according to his purposes, so his performances will be according to his promises, which is his faithfulness. 2. As God would establish them, so keep them from evil. There is moral and penal evil, of sin and suffering; the Greek word imports the former; never used but for sinful evil, or sometimes for the devil, with respect to the sin that dwells in him, and occasioned by him, Eph. vi. 16; 1 John v. 18. And it is true, that God will keep his people from the devil, as some read the word. But I suppose the apostle means here by evil, evil work; as he speaks, 2 Tim. iv. 18, The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. But whether the evil work of others, or their own? the latter I incline to, for he could not well assure them of the former. But how could he assure them of the latter? did he think God would keep them from all sin? The apostle doth not mean so, nor say so; God keeps his people from much evil and sin which others fall into, though not from all. And he keeps them from falling under the power of it. Though they may be tempted by Satan, the world, or their own hearts, yet not so as finally to be overcome. However, the more God doth establish his people, the more will they be kept from evil. And the apostle doth also comfort them in this from the consideration of God's faithfulness. But these promises of God's keeping us do not exclude our endeavours of keeping ourselves: He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not, 1 John v. 18. Hence those exhortations, Keep thy heart with all diligence, Prov. iv. 23, and Keep yourselves in the love of God, Jude 21, &c. And our keeping is ascribed to our own faith with the power of God, 1 Pet. i. 5.

13 Cor. 7. 16.
Gal. 5. 10.

4 And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you.

The apostle had before declared his confidence that God would establish them and keep them from evil, and now here declares his confidence in them concerning their obedience; for he knew well that this is the way of God's keeping men; and hereby he shows that he built his confidence concerning what he had before declared about their election, calling, establishment, and preservation upon some good ground. And he describes their obedience by doing what the apostle and his fellow labourers in the gospel among them commanded them, whether they were commandments about the duties of the law of the first or second tables, or the doctrine, order, worship, or discipline of the gospel; so that their commandments were no other but the commandments of the Lord himself, Matt. xxviii. 20; 1 Cor. xiv. 37. Ministers are not arbitrary commanders in the church; not lords over God's heritage, 1 Pet. v. 3, or have dominion over the people's faith, 2 Cor. i. 24; nor may they, as the Pharisees, teach for doctrines the commandments of men, Matt. xv. 9. And he speaks before of these Thessalonians, that they received the word preached by them, not as the word of men, but of God, 1 Thess. ii. 13. Both our faith and practice in religion are to be built upon Divine authority; either upon what God hath expressly declared, or what by clear consequence may be derived from it. So that what they command the people is from the Lord, and not themselves. Their work is to search out the mind and will of Christ, as revealed in the Scripture, seeing they have not that immediate infallible inspiration that the apostles had, who were called to lay the foundation which others were to build upon. And as to those things that are but appendices, and not of the substance of religion, and for which no particular rule is or can be laid down, Christian prudence is to regulate them according to general rules, wherein the advice, appointment, and authority of the minister is to be regarded in every church. Yet nothing ought to be enjoined in these things that is uncomely, that is not for edification, that is not of good report, that hath an appearance of evil, that gives just occasion of offence, that transgresseth the general rule of mercy, that is a direction of superstition, whereby many of the commandments of the Romish Church are justly condemned. And obedience to these commandments of the apostle he describes by the universality of it, the things that we command you; that is, all things; the indefinite being equivalent to the universal. And by the constancy of it, that ye both do and will do, &c.; ye will persevere to do what commandments ye have already received, or any new commandments we shall further give you; some whereof are probably such as are mentioned in the following part of this chapter. And their present obedience gave the apostle confidence about that which was future; at least he declares to them this confidence, as an insinuating argument to persuade them thereunto.

1 Chron.
25. 15.
1 Or.
the patience of Christ.
1 Thess. 1. 3.

5 And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and || into the patient waiting for Christ.

Here the apostle prays for them again, as he had done a little before, chap. ii. 17; and as this shows how much they were in his heart, so the frequent mingling of prayers with his exhortations shows they could not be effectual without God. And he prays for two things: 1. To have their hearts directed into the love of God; which is either meant passively, for God's love to them, to have their hearts, that is, their whole soul, engaged in the study, contemplation, and admiration of this love; or rather actively, for their love to God, to have their hearts set straight into the love of God, as the Greek word imports; drawn out towards him as a straight line to its centre, or as an arrow directed to the mark. Till man's love is set upon God, the motions of the heart are crooked and irregular; as the ways of sin are called crooked ways, Psal. cxxv. 5; and John Baptist's ministry was to make crooked things straight, Isa. xl. 4. The turning man's heart and ways towards God makes them straight. David prays, Psal. cxix. 36, Incline my heart unto thy testimonies; כִּי יִשְׁרֹת, bend my heart; as we bend a crooked stick to make it straight. Or as he prays God to unite his heart to his fear, Psal. lxxxvi. 11; so here Paul, to direct theirs to his love, by which some understand all religion. We learn hence, that to direct man's heart to the love of God is the work of God, and beyond our power. And the hearts of the best saints stand in need of a more perfect and constant direction unto the love of God. Patient sufferings for Christ's sake; as the apostle calls his sufferings for Christ's sake, the sufferings of Christ, often, 2 Cor. i. 5; Phil. iii. 10, &c.; and patience for his sake, is called the patience of Christ, Rev. i. 9. In this sense, the apostle prays they may have hearts ready to suffer, and patiently to suffer for Christ's sake, Heb. x. 36; James v. 10; and suited to a suffering state, which the heart is naturally averse and disinclined unto. And the word is often used in this sense for patience under the cross. And so the apostle hath his eye in his prayer upon the suffering state these believers were in for Christ's sake. If the sense be rendered as in our translation, he prays for their hearts to be fixed upon the coming of Christ, to look towards it, and patiently to wait for it; the Greek word being often taken for the patience of expectation as well as of suffering, Rom. viii. 25; Heb. x. 36: and so it is the same as waiting for the Son of God from heaven, mentioned 1 Thess. i. 10, and looking for the Saviour, Phil. iii. 20; that hereby they might not faint under his sufferings, nor be surprised by his coming. And because the hearts of the best are apt either to be remis or secure upon the delay of Christ's coming, he therefore prays their hearts might be directed to a patient waiting for it, as the apostle Peter upon the same account exhorts believers to the girding up the loins of their mind, 1 Pet. i. 13.

6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

Here the apostle proceeds to a discourse of another kind, which is about their carriage to disorderly members in the church. And having before declared his confidence, ver. 4, that they did and would do the things he commanded them, he now tells them what he commands; and because either it is a matter of great importance, or that which they would be backward in, he therefore speaks with great vehemence. When he spake in the former Epistle, chap. v. 14, of warning the unruly, he then spake with greater mildness, We exhort you, brethren, &c.; but now to withdraw from them is a harsher duty; or they having first warned them, if they reform not, next they are to proceed to withdraw from them. And this he now commands as that which he supposeth they might be backward to. Παραγγέλλομεν the word properly signifies a command conveyed from another, so the apostle commands here in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though he had authority to command as an apostle, yet it was derived to him from Christ, and therefore he usually conjoins Christ with his exhortations and commands. That ye withdraw yourselves from every brother; or avoid, as the word signifies, and is so rendered, 2 Cor. viii. 20. The word is used also, Gal. ii. 12, of Peter's withdrawing himself from eating with the Gentiles; and rendered drawing back, Heb. x. 38, alluding, as some think, there to a soldier that draws back from the battle; but here in the text to a mariner that steers his ship from the rocks; and so it implies the danger of not withdrawing, which may be the reason of the apostle's so solemn command about it. And it is not from a heathen man, but a h Rom. 16.

17. ver. 14.
1 Tim. 6. 5.
2 John 10.
1 Cor. 5.
11. 13.
k 1 Thess. 4.
11. & 5. 14.
ver. 11, 12,
14.
1 ch. 2. 15.

brother, one that is of the church; and it is every brother, let him be rich or poor, high or low, &c.; as he writes to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. v. 11, If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, &c. That walketh disorderly: alluding, as some think, to soldiers who keep not their rank, not walking according to rule, or, as he expresseth it, not after the tradition which he received of us. What is to be meant by tradition, is explained in the former chapter. And he cannot be understood to speak here of rites and ceremonies relating to church worship or order, as some imagine; the apostle doth in the following verses explain himself otherwise. But what is this withdrawing? Is it excommunication, the greater or the less? In a general sense it may be so called, for it is an abstaining from communion; but it is not so properly, for that is called putting away a person, a purging out the old leaven, 1 Cor. v. 7, this is only a withdrawing from him; much less is it a delivering up to Satan, which the apostle required, 1 Cor. v. 5, and himself inflicted upon Hymeneus and Alexander, 1 Tim. i. 20. The nature of the crime here mentioned will not bear that. It was not incest or blasphemy, as in the former instances, but only disorderly walking, which he specifies afterwards. And with respect to such the apostle required in the former Epistle warning only, Warn the unruly. And though this is something more, yet it implies not a casting a man out of the church, which is Christ's visible kingdom, into Satan's kingdom, for he is still to be admonished as a brother, as ver. 15. And excommunication is the exerting an act of church power, as 1 Cor. v. 4, whereof no mention is made here; or of an absolute rejection, which is elsewhere required, Tit. iii. 10. It seems then to be only a withdrawing from familiar converse and society, as 1 Cor. v. 11, If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, covetous, &c.; with such an one not to eat; alluding to the custom of the Jews, who would not eat with the Gentiles; and by eating is expressed communion in Scripture, and profane writers also. And such communion is forbidden to such a brother, which the apostle allowed them to have with such sinners that were of the world, and not of the church, as ver. 10, which cannot be meant of sacred communion. And familiarity with such a brother would harden him in his sins, and reflect dishonour upon religion, and endanger their infection, more than with a pagan, or infidel: which therefore the apostle forbids them to a brother, as he did the Corinthians mentioned before, as also the Romans, chap. xvi. 17. And which may be a step towards excommunication from spiritual communion, which is the greater punishment, especially if the brother be not hereby made ashamed, and reform his course, and doth not only now and then do a disorderly action, but walketh disorderly, and that after warning also. Others think it is meant of excommunication, and judge not the reason against it to be cogent.

7 For yourselves know <sup>m</sup> how ye ought to follow us: for <sup>n</sup> we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you;

Whereby the apostle intimates the aggravation of their crime who did walk disorderly, and so justifies the withdrawing from them. For they would be reproved not only by his doctrine, but example: what he required of others he practised himself, and that in some cases for this end alone, that he might be an example; examples teaching more than precepts, especially in ministers. And they did not only know how the apostle and his fellow ministers walked among them, but their end therein, whereby they knew they ought to follow them, and how to follow them; being guided as well as excited by their example. And this is expressed more generally. First, negatively, We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you, which he speaks not in a way of self-commendation, but for their imitation; and he useth here the same word to express his own practice which he did in theirs, being properly a military word, as was said before. He went before them as a captain before the army, and taught them order by his own example; for in the negative the positive is included.

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but <sup>o</sup> wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought: the apostle here gives a particular positive instance of what before he speaks negatively, and in general; and brings his discourse home to the present case, and declares his orderly working in this, that he wrought for his own bread, and did not eat for nought, or live upon that which was freely given. Δωρεάν the word is sometimes taken for that which is without effect, as Gal. ii. 21, answering to the Hebrew word Chinnam, oft used, Psal. vii. 4; xxv. 3; lxi. 4; cxix. 61. Or, that which is without cause; and that either with respect to injury received, as John xv. 25, or benefit bestowed, as Rom. iii. 24, when it is freely given without merit. The apostle means that he preached the gospel to them freely, as he tells the Corinthians, 2 Cor. xi. 7. Though if he had received maintenance for his labour in the gospel among them, it was that which he well deserved, and he had not eaten their bread for nought; but he wrought with his own hands to maintain himself, as he did at Corinth, Acts xviii. 3. But wrought with labour and travail; and he wrought laboriously, with wearisome and toilsome labour, as the words import; and that night and day; as he had told them in the former Epistle, chap. ii. 9; only he speaks of it here upon a different account; there, to clear his ministry from suspicion of covetousness, and to evidence his sincere affection to them; here, to set before them an example of industry against such who lived idly, and did eat others' bread. Had he not wrought with his hands, he had not walked disorderly; but lest any should think so, he would do it to take away all occasion of evil. For though the labour of the ministry in the exercise of the mind and study may be reckoned as the greatest, yet most people cannot judge of it, and think it such; and though he had power to forbear working, as he tells the Corinthians, 1 Cor. ix. 6, yet he would do it rather than any good should be hindered, or any evil furthered thereby.

9 <sup>p</sup> Not because we have not power, <sup>q</sup> but to make <sup>r</sup> ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us.

The contents of this verse are already spoken to in the former, only the apostle asserts the right of maintenance due to the ministry by the name of power. It may be claimed by authority from Christ, though it should not be commanded by any laws from men. As the priests under the law had their maintenance settled upon them by the law of God; so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel, 1 Cor. ix. 14; Gal. vi. 6. And though this power may be claimed, yet in some cases it is to be denied, as the apostle did, 1 Cor. ix. 12, We have not used this power; lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ. And so he did here, to make himself an example, τύπος, which signifies any mark that is cut or engraven to stamp things into its own likeness; oft used in the New Testament, and variously applied. But to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us: it is desirable to follow good examples, but more to become a good example; and as the old verse is true, Regis ad exemplum, &c., so the old proverb, "Like priests, like people;" and to follow them is to imitate them, as 1 Cor. xi. 1, Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ. He is the first pattern, and others are to be regulated by it; and so far, and no further, to be imitated. As ministers ought to be patterns, Tit. ii. 7; 1 Pet. v. 3; so the people ought to be followers, and their sin will be the greater if they follow not their doctrine, when it is exemplified in their practice.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, <sup>r</sup> that if any <sup>s</sup> would not work, neither should he eat.

The words contain a reason, as the illative for imports; but what it refers to is uncertain; most probably a further reason of the apostle's working with his hands, because when with them he left this command, that if any would not work, neither should he eat; he would therefore practise himself what he commanded them, and not be thought to be as the Pharisees, binding heavy burdens upon others, and he not touch them himself. And this is another of the commandments which the apostle gave them, which he declared his confidence that they would do, ver. 4. And this command seems grounded upon the law given to Adam,

<sup>o</sup> Acts 18. 3.
<sup>q</sup> & 20. 34.
<sup>r</sup> 2 Cor. 11. 9.
<sup>s</sup> 1 Thess. 2. 9.

<sup>p</sup> 1 Cor. 9. 6.
<sup>q</sup> 1 Thess. 2. 6.
<sup>r</sup> 4 ver. 7.

In the sweat of thy face shall thou eat bread, Gen. iii. 19. For when he recommends a practice not directly grounded upon some word of God, or of Christ, or from infallible inspiration, he calls it a permission, as 1 Cor. vii. 6; but when otherwise, he saith, I command, yet not I, but the Lord, ver. 10; and calls it the commandment of the Lord, 1 Cor. xiv. 37. And this in the text is not his alone, but the Lord's, and is elsewhere mentioned, as Eph. iv. 28, Let him that stole steal no more, but work with his hands, &c.: see 1 Cor. vii. 20. God requires it of us as men, that we may be profitable in the commonwealth, supply our own wants and of those that depend upon us, and have wherewith also to supply the wants of the poor. Eph. iv. 28, to be kept from the temptations of idleness. Christianity doth not extinguish the profitable laws of nature or nations. Yet this general command admits limitations; if men have ability and opportunity to work, or if the ends of working are not otherwise supplied. For he that lives out of the reason of the law seems not bound by the law; or if the work be mental, and not manual, the law is fulfilled; and the equity of the law reacheth all men so far, as that none ought to be idle and useless in the world. And the apostle's argument for it in the text is cogent from nature itself; agreeably to that of Solomon, Prov. xvi. 26, He that laboureth laboureth for himself, for his mouth craveth it of him. Whereupon some judge these believing Thessalonians to be generally a people that lived by some handicraft trade, or some other manual labour. And the eating here intended is meant of relief from the stock and charge of the church: such should not be relieved who would not work, as it is in the text; who could, but would not, the fault being in the will.

<sup>s ver. 6.</sup> <sup>t 1 Thess. 4.</sup> <sup>11. 1 Tim.</sup> <sup>6. 12.</sup> <sup>1 Pet. 4. 15.</sup> 11 For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies.

For we hear: the apostle gives the reason of this discourse he fell into about disorder, and commends, yea, commands, a remedy against it. He had heard of this disorderly walking, else his discourse might have been esteemed vain and needless. Reports are to obtain credit according to the quality of the person that makes them, his end therein, and probability of truth. He took notice of reports brought to him about the divisions that were at Corinth, 1 Cor. xi. 18. That there are some among you: and the persons that he here chargeth the report upon, are not all, but some only, and he nameth none; for as to the body of the church, he had confidence they did, and would do, the things he commanded, ver. 4. And he requires them to withdraw from the disorderly. Which walk among you disorderly, working not at all: and the disorder he chargeth upon these some is, 1. Μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους, that they worked not at all, at least not the work of their own place, as it follows. 2. But are busybodies; busy, and yet idle, and not working; περιεργαζομένους curiously, French Bible; as the curious arts of sorcerers are called περιεργα, Acts xix. 19. The word signifies working about, and denotes either vain curiosity, meddling in matters that they ought not, or going round their proper work, but not falling or fixing upon it. The same the apostle speaks of younger widows, 1 Tim. v. 13, who learnt to be idle, and yet were busybodies; and such are called ἀλλοτριοπισκοποι, 1 Pet. iv. 15. And the one follows from the other; for they that are idle and neglect their own business will be apt to intermeddle in another's: and they that are not keepers at home, will be gadders abroad, and so not eat their own, but others' bread, which the apostle here reproves, as dishonourable to the Christian profession; and, as a further remedy, doth with much earnestness address his speech particularly to them.

<sup>11 Thess.</sup> <sup>4. 11.</sup> 12 Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ: he had before given command to the church to withdraw from them, ver. 6: and now he lays he commandment upon themselves, and that in the name of Christ. That with quietness they work: working is set opposite to their idleness, and quietness to their busy meddling where they ought not, whereby they might occasion strife. The apostle here, and in many other places, requires Christians to live peaceably, as 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Col. iii. 15; 1 Thess. v. 13; Heb. xii. 14. And eat their own bread: not to live as drones, upon another's labours; yet he forbids not dealing their bread to the hungry, nor requires this of the poor that are necessitated to live upon alms. And by eating their own bread the apostle means, maintaining themselves and families, for bread is taken in Scripture for all things that maintain the natural life: and the apostle here insinuates a blessing upon honest labour, that thereby men shall have bread of their own; and doth assert property against that community which some have pleaded for, the civil right that men have to what they honestly get and possess; but hereby condemns oppressors, pirates, robbers, cheaters, usurpers, yea, and tyrannical princes, who maintain themselves upon the spoil of others, and take their bread out of others' mouths; and why not also such as are not quiet and contented with their own portion, but either envy others, or murmur against providence?

13 But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing.

But ye, brethren: the apostle now directs his speech to those of the church that were not guilty of the disorders before mentioned, to whom he speaks in mild and familiar language, as if the others deserved not to be so called. Be not weary in well doing: and that which he speaks to them is, not to be weary of well doing. The Greek word is often used about sufferings, as 2 Cor. iv. 1; Eph. iii. 13; and then usually translated fainting, and which seems to be its most proper use, to shrink or faint as cowards in war; Μη ἰκκακήσητε, Ne segnescite, definite, defatigamini; it signifies a receding or fainting, or tiring in our duty, because of the evil that attends it. Sometimes it is used of prayer, Luke xviii. 1; and sometimes generally of all duties of religion, which are generally called well doing, Gal. vi. 9, and signifies either a slothfulness in them, or weariness of them: as those whom the prophets complain of, Amos vii. 5; Mal. i. 13. The apostle useth the same word in this sense, Gal. vi. 9, Let us not be weary in well doing; and in the text, those that did walk orderly, he exhorts them to hold on their course, either more peculiarly to the works of charity, which are called well doing, Phil. iv. 14; though those that worked not did not deserve them, or enjoy them, yet this should not discourage them from practising them towards others: or the word may extend more generally to all good works; we should persevere in them without fainting or weariness, notwithstanding the evils that may threaten us therein.

14 And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed.

Here we have further commandments given concerning the disorderly; in case of obstinacy, to proceed further against them. The apostle had given commandments about their walking in his first preaching to them, after that he repeats them in his First Epistle, and again in this Second. And now if any man obey not our word by this epistle, saith he, note that man; and he would have none excepted, either through fear or favour, and nothing done by partiality, 1 Tim. v. 21. What is meant by noting is disputed among expositors; more seems to be meant than marking them, Rom. xvi. 17. Some take it for what we call excommunication; so Aug. lib. 3, Cont. Epist. Parmen. cap. 4. Theophyl. in locum; either the casting him out of the church, which is the greater, or suspension from the Lord's supper, which is the lesser. As there were degrees of church censure among the Jews, so also we read practised in the gospel church, as is evident in the councils. Others think it is no more than a withdrawing from him, as was mentioned before, ver. 6; but then the apostle saith the same thing over again, which seemeth needless. And he speaks here of some greater contumacy than before, when his word in this Second Epistle is not obeyed. We may suppose the apostle may mean not only a withdrawing from familiarity with him, but exposing his name to some public notice in the church, that both his crime and his name should be publicly noticed; as the apostle speaks of Hymeneus and Alexander, and Philetus, by name in his Epistles that were made public. Σημειώσε, note him by a sign, as the word signifies, which cannot well be done by a mere withdrawing. And seeing he speaks here of one that is not only disorderly, but obstinate, some further and more signal act of discipline is to be inflicted on him. And what word the apostle refers to in this Epistle as not obeyed is not expressed, neither need we limit it, but it may be meant of all his commandments herein, to which obedience was required. And the word, as written, is the word of God, and is to be obeyed as well as that which is preached. I know there is another reading of the text, If any man obey not our word, note that man by an epistle; and so it is in our margins. But this is not probable. By an epistle? to whom? to the apostle himself? And for what? to know how to proceed towards such a one? What need that, when he here gives direction about it to them; which follows. And have no company with him; or be not mingled with him, which refers either to his crime, as the Greek word is so applied, Eph. v. 11, or to his person also, as the word is used, 1 Cor. v. 9. And yet some think the apostle here forbids only civil communion, not sacred, because the word in the text is generally so used, and so rendered by expositors; but sacred communion is expressed in the New Testament by another word, 1 John i. 3. And if meant of sacred, it is then casting him out of the church, which is a delivering him up to Satan: see Estius in loc. And that seems not to agree with what follows, Admonish him as a brother; and so not to be accounted as a heathen or a publican, Matt. xviii. 17. And we know admonition goes before casting out. But to be thrust out of the company of the people of God in all civil, friendly society, is a great punishment and affliction. And some think, that the noting of him was to be done by the governors of the church, and the renouncing his company, by all the people: let the reader judge. That he may be ashamed: the end of both is here expressed. This is not added before as a reason of withdrawing, and therefore some think the apostle required that only to avoid the infection of sin by familiar society; but this further proceeding here mentioned is to make the man ashamed that is obstinate in disobedience; but we need not so limit it. And this making him ashamed is not to be out of hatred to his person, but for his good, as all church censures ought to be so intended, to bring him to that shame that may be the first step to true repentance. There is a shamefulfulness in sin; and when sinners repent, they see it, and are ashamed, Isa. i. 29; Ezek. xvi. 61; Rom. vi. 21; and God complains of sinners when not ashamed, Jer. iii. 3. Shame is a natural affection in men, and is not in the nature of beasts, neither was it in man before the fall; and though in itself it is no virtue, being the proper effect of sin, yet it is of use to restrain much open wickedness, and to keep decorum in men's outward actions: and God makes use of it also in leading men to true repentance. To shame men out of envy or hatred is sinful, and against the law of charity; but to do it to bring them to repentance, is better than by flattery or familiar society to harden them in sin.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. 19. 17. <sup>b</sup> 1 Thes. 5. 14. <sup>c</sup> Tit. 3. 10. 15 Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.

They having thus proceeded against the disorderly and disobedient, the apostle directs them about their after-carriage, which either respects their inward opinion of the mind, or outward action. Yet count him not as an enemy; they should not count him an enemy, putting a great difference betwixt an offending brother and a professed enemy. They ought not to hate him as an enemy, nor look upon him as upon such who out of enmity to the gospel persecute Christianity, nor to have an unreconcilable mind towards him. But admonish him as a brother; and as to outward action, should admonish him as a brother. It is either private or public, ministerial or fraternal, gentle or severe, joined with commination. The Greeks express it in the degrees of it by three words, νοθεσία, ἐπιτιμία, ἐπίταξις. The word in the text signifies a putting in mind: they were to put the offender in mind of his sin, and in mind of his duty. Though they were to have no company with him in a way of familiarity, yet to be in his company so as to admonish him; and the admonition here meant is either public, in the church, or private; or first private, then public, as our Saviour gives the rule, Matt. xviii. 15—17. So that his repentance is to be endeavoured not only by abstaining his company, but by admonition. And it is to be performed to him as a brother, which either respects the state of the person admonished: he is not an enemy, or pagan, or one out of the visible church, but a brother, whereby some conceive that the apostle had not before spoken of his excommunication. Or it respects the way of admonition: it is to be performed with love, tenderness, and compassion, as to a brother, not to upbraid him, but to gain him; as Matt. xviii. 15, If he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. And for that end great prudence is to be used. The temper of the offenders, the quality of the sin, their outward condition in the world, their age, yea, the circumstances of time and place, are to be considered.

16 Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 16. 20. <sup>d</sup> 1 Cor. 14. 33. <sup>e</sup> 2 Cor. 13. 11. <sup>f</sup> 1 Thes. 5. 23.

Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace: the apostle is now taking his leave, and closing up his Epistle; and this he doth with prayer; and what he prays for is peace: and though the word peace hath various acceptations, and is of comprehensive signification, yet here it is to understood of brotherly peace and unity. Whether it was occasioned by any dissensions that were actually among them, or his fears of such to arise upon the practice of their duties to the disorderly among them, that he thus prays, is uncertain. And it is that which he much preseth and prays for in his several Epistles to the churches, as being that where-in the honour of the gospel, and their own comfort and edification, were so much concerned. And the person he prays to he styles the Lord of peace, whereby I suppose he means Jesus Christ, who is sometimes called the Prince of Peace, Isa. ix. 6; as God is called the God of peace, 1 Thess. v. 23. It is he that hath made peace betwixt God and us, betwixt the Jew and Gentile, and it is one of the fruits of his Spirit in the hearts of Christians, Gal. v. 22. True Christian peace is the gift of Christ, and therefore the apostle prays the Lord to give it, and saith, the Lord himself, as intimating none but he can give it, and that it is a singular blessing to enjoy it, as we must so interpret the phrase when at any other time we find it, as 1 Thess. v. 23. Always by all means: he shows both the desirableness and difficulty of peace. It is worth the using all endeavours for it, and without such we shall hardly attain it, as Rom. xii. 18, If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men; quite contrary to the temper and practice of some men, who will live peaceably with no man: and elsewhere we read of following peace; Heb. xii. 14, and seeking peace and pursuing it, 1 Pet. iii. 11, and endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, Eph. iv. 3. And the apostle prays for it in the text with much earnestness, and that they might enjoy it without interruption, always; that there might be no schism rise up among them at any time. And if we read the next words, in every thing, he prays that their peace might be universal with respect to opinions, words, and actions. And as a final farewell he addeth, The Lord be with you all; which shows his affection to them all, though he had reproved sharply the disorders that some were guilty of. And a greater thing he could not desire for them, it comprehends all blessings in it, and the very blessedness of heaven itself; as a usual farewell word, Adieu, is a recommending a person to God.

17 The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write.

<sup>d</sup> 1 Cor. 16. 21. <sup>e</sup> Col. 4. 18.

This the apostle addeth after he had finished his Epistle, and taken his farewell, as a proof that the Epistle was genuine, and came from himself; because it may be there were some then who did counterfeit his Epistles, as there have been many since who have counterfeited creeds, liturgies, gospels, writings of the fathers, &c., and he knew it might be of dangerous consequence to the churches, to have his writings counterfeited. Heretics in several ages, and the Church of Rome particularly, have herein been deeply guilty. And though it is probable the body of this Epistle was written by some amanuensis, as is evident of the Epistle to the Romans, that it was written by one Tertius, Rom. xvi. 22; and when he tells the Galatians, Gal. vi. 11, he wrote their Epistle with his own hand, so Philem. 19, it implies sometimes he did not so; yet this salutation he wrote with his own hand, which he practised not only in this, but in all his other Epistles, as he here affirmed. And he wrote it in such characters whereby his own hand might be known; else it was an easy matter for any impostor to write the same words. And the words of it are here set down, but elsewhere explained, and therefore nothing is further needful here.

18 *The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ <sup>16</sup> Rom. 16. <sub>24</sub> be with you all. Amen.

† The second epistle to the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

T I M O T H Y

THE ARGUMENT

TIMOTHY is thought to have been a native of Lystra in Lycaonia, Acts xvi. 1. His mother, Eunice, was a Jewess, Acts xvi. 1; a believer, 2 Tim. i. 5. His father a Greek, Acts xvi. 1, but (possibly) proselyted to the Jewish religion. They gave Timothy his name, signifying thereby their pious desire that their son should fear and honour God, and be put in mind of his duty by his name. They bred him up in the knowledge of the Scriptures from a child. When it was he first became a disciple to Paul doth not appear; but it appears from 2 Tim. iii. 11, that he was with Paul at Antioch and Iconium, which was before he came to Lystra, Acts xvi. 1, where Paul circumcised him. After this Paul made him his companion, and sent him upon several messages. He was a sickly person, 1 Tim. v. 23, but eminent in gifts and graces, 2 Tim. i. 5; iii. 15; 1 Cor. iv. 17. After this he was ordained a minister by Paul and the presbytery, 2 Tim. i. 6. He became very dear to Paul for his faithfulness, Phil. ii. 19—21; so as he calls him his beloved son, and faithful, 1 Cor. iv. 17, his son in the faith, 1 Tim. i. 2, his dearly beloved son, his fellow worker, fellow labourer, &c. Paul left him a time at Thessalonica and Berea, Acts xvii. 13, 14; then sent for him to Athens, ver. 15. He came to him at Corinth, Acts xviii. 5. Thence he sent him into Macedonia, Acts xix. 22. From thence he came to Corinth, and goes with Paul into Asia. Acts xx. 4; where Paul entreats him to stay some time at Ephesus, as an evangelist, to settle the churches there, 2 Tim. iv. 5. From thence he sends for him to Rome, 2 Tim. iv. 9, and sends Tychicus in his room to Ephesus, ver. 12. Paul having left Timothy, a young man, in this great trust, being himself to be absent, writes this Epistle to him, to encourage him against all dangers, and to direct him in the management of his office. The scope of the Epistle is to direct Timothy in the first place, and then all ministers of the gospel, how to behave themselves in the ministerial work, as to preaching, praying, government, opposing gainsayers, &c.; so as it is the most perfect direction we have in all Scripture for the discharge of the ministerial office. The time when Paul wrote this Epistle is uncertainly judged, but guessed to be the one and twentieth year after Christ's death, and about the nineteenth after Paul's conversion; it is certain it was when he was in Macedonia, and before he returned to Ephesus, Acts xix. 1.

CHAP. I

The salutation, 1, 2. Timothy is put in mind of the charge before given him by Paul, 3, 4. The end of the commandment is charity, from which some had turned aside to teach the law, which they understood not, 5—7. The scope of the law was to condemn wickedness, which is the design of the gospel also, 8—11. Paul blesseth God for calling him to the ministry notwithstanding his great demerit, whereby all penitent sinners that believe are assured of mercy through Christ, 12—17. He urgeth Timothy to a due discharge of his trust, warning him of some who had deserted the truth, of whom Hymeneus and Alexander had been delivered by him unto Satan, 18—20.

A. D. 65. PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ *by the commandment <sup>b</sup> of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, *which is our hope;

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ; one immediately sent by Jesus Christ, by his voice from heaven, Acts ix. 15, though not by his voice upon earth, as those, Matt. x. By the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ: through the will of God, 1 Cor. i. 1, not his permissive, but preceptive will; and this is the same with his being called to be an apostle, Rom. i. 1; 1 Cor. i. 1. By our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father not being excluded, but the Son only being named, to whom the mediatory kingdom was committed. Which is our hope: our hope, there is no more in the Greek, that is, the object of our hope: as when it is said, Gen. xxxi. 53, that Jacob swore by the fear of his father Isaac, that is, by the Deity whom his father feared. This glorious eulogy belongs to our Saviour, in whom there is a concurrence of all that is requisite to free us from destructive evils, and to make us everlastingly happy: for he is wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Hence the Gentiles without Christ are said to be without hope, Eph. ii. 12. And from hence it is evident that Jesus Christ is the eternal God, for if he were only a man, though in excellence above all others, he could not be our hope, for cursed is he that trusteth in man, Jer. xvii. 5.

2 Unto <sup>d</sup> Timothy, *my own son in the faith: 'Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

He dignifies Timothy with the title of his son in the faith; that is, being converted by him to Christianity, and begat to the Divine life: and by styling Timothy his own son, he signifies his piety and virtue, that rendered him a worthy son of such a father, whom he imitated and honoured, and with whom he corresponded in a grateful, obedient affection. Having thus designated the person to whom he writes, he expresses his ardent desires of his complete felicity; which is included in grace, mercy, and peace. By grace he means the free favour and good will of God, with all the

a Acts 9. 15.
Gal. 1. 1, 11.
b ch. 2. 3.
c 4. 10.

Tit. 1. 3. & 2. 10. & 3. 4. Jude 25. c Col. 1. 27.

d Acts 16. 1.
1 Cor. 4. 17.
Phil. 2. 19.
1 Thesa. 3. 2.
e Tit. 1. 4.
f Gal. 1. 3.
2 Tim. 1. 2.
1 Pet. 1. 2.

spiritual gifts that proceed from it, either requisite for salvation, or the great work of the evangelical ministry. By mercy, his compassionate tender love, pardoning, relieving, supporting, and assisting us in our Christian course. By peace he signifies, principally, the peace of God, that divine calm of conscience, that tranquillity and rest of soul, which proceeds from the assurance that God is reconciled to us in Christ, and our freedom by the sanctifying Spirit from the tyranny of carnal lusts: this peace can never be to the wicked. And besides this principal peace, we may understand peace with man, that is, a quiet state, exempt from hatred and persecutions, that Timothy might more comfortably and successfully perform the work of his ministry. He prays for these blessings from God, who is the original Fountain of all good: and from Jesus Christ as the channel, by which all the gifts of God are conveyed to us; for without his mediation the Deity is as a sealed fountain, no grace would flow to us. He styles God our Father, because he has adopted us in his Son, and in that quality he communicates his grace, mercy, and peace to us: he styles Christ our Lord, who hath supreme power over us, as well by the right of creation as of redemption.

3 As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine,

g Acts 20. 1,
3. Phil. 2.
24.
h Gal. 1. 6, 7.
ch. 4. 3. 10.

Ephesus was a great city in Asia the Less, whither Paul came, Acts xix. 1; where Demetrius raised a tumult against him, which the town clerk appeased, as we read there. From thence he went into Macedonia, Acts xx. 1—3. Upon this his motion into Macedonia (as divines judge) he left Timothy at Ephesus. The end of leaving him at Ephesus was, that he might charge some that they preached no other doctrine, that is, none contrary to what he had preached, none contrary to the doctrine of the gospel, Gal. i. 8, 9. What power was here committed to Timothy is by some questioned; supposing (which is very probable) there were a greater number of disciples than could meet in one assembly, his power was more than pastoral, for he had a power over the teachers. Whether this power was extraordinary, or ordinary, and what God intended ever to continue in the church, is the question. Those who make it to be such, make it to be episcopal; those that make it extraordinary, say it was the work of an evangelist, 2 Tim. iv. 5. That there was such an officer in the primitive church appears from Acts xxi. 8; Eph. iv. 11. That this was Timothy's work appears from 2 Tim. iv. 5. Nor is it a new thing, but very common in the settlement of all new governments, to authorize some special commissioners, and to give them an extraordinary power for a time, till the government can be settled and things brought into a fixed order. If we consider the words without prejudice, I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, they seem to signify that Timothy was not the established bishop of Ephesus; for to what end should the apostle desire a bishop to reside in his own diocese, which he could not forsake without neglecting his duty, and the offence of God? This were a tacit reflection, as if he were careless of his duty. And the word abide, προσμεῖναι, does not necessarily import his constant residence there; for it is used to signify continuance for some time only; as it is said of the apostle, that he remained many days at Corinth, Acts xviii. 18, when his stay there was only for some months. The intention of the apostle seems to be that Timothy should continue for a while at Ephesus, and not accompany him in his voyage to Macedonia, as he was wont to do upon other occasions. And it is evident by the sacred history, that about six months after Timothy was with the apostle in Greece, that he went with him to Macedonia, and Troas, and Miletus, Acts xx. 1, 4, where the apostle sent for the elders or bishops of Ephesus, to leave his last solemn charge with them. In short, if Timothy had been appointed the bishop of Ephesus, the apostle would probably have given this title of honour to him in the inscription of his Epistle. Upon the impartial considering of the whole matter, though the passion of prelacy is so ingenious as to discover so many mysteries and mitres in a few plain words, (viz. that Timothy was bishop of that city, metropolitan of the province, and primate of all Asia,) yet it is most likely that Timothy was left only for some time with a kind of apos-tolical power in the church of Ephesus; of which power this was one branch, authoritatively to command seducers not to teach another doctrine than what was taught by the apostles, who were Divinely illuminated: a Divine rule, and most worthy of perpetual observation by all in the office of the ministry. And this showeth the mighty proneness of men, as to deviate in their conversations from the right ways, so in their judgments from the truths of God, otherwise Paul had no need to have left Timothy for that end in this church so newly planted.

4 Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.

1 ch. 4. 7.
2 ch. 4. 20.
2 Tim. 2. 14.
16. 22. Tit.
1. 14. 2. 9.
h ch. 4. 4.

Neither give heed to fables: by fables he probably meant the Jewish fables, and commandments of men, mentioned Tit. i. 14; or more generally, all vain and idol speculations. And endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying; whatsoever tendeth not to build men up in godliness, which is the end of preaching. The Jews had many unwritten fables, about what God did before he made the world, &c., and many unwritten endless genealogies, which were as so many labyrinths, intricate, without an issue out of them: and it is probable that some of them (converted to the Christian faith) still busied their heads about them, according to their education and the practice of the Jewish doctors, and made the subject of their sermons and discourses to the assemblies of Christians; which is the thing the apostle here declareth a corruption of the ordinances of preaching, and inveigheth against, chap. vi. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 23; Tit. i. 14; iii. 9; and willett preachers to avoid, and people to give no heed to them, as nothing tending to the building Christians up in holiness, which he here calleth οικοδομῶν Θεῷ, the building up of God, either so objectively, or efficiently, or by his command, because it is in God, viz. in the knowledge of God, and an increase in the love of God, and other spiritual habits; or from God, being wrought by him, and serving for his honour and glory, or according to his will. Which is in faith: he tells us this edifying can be no otherwise than in faith, preaching the doctrine of the gospel, and embracing that which is the doctrine of faith, a doctrine of Divine revelation, to which men must give their assent, because of the authority of God revealing it. So as no discourses which are not founded in a Divine revelation, and to be proved from thence, can possibly tend to any building of God, which cannot stand in the wisdom of men, but must stand in the power of God. From this text we may observe the vanity and proneness of some persons, even from the infancy of the church, to make up what they call sermons of discourses about fables, idle questions, and speculations, and genealogies of which there is no end; the teachers being able to bring the minds of hearers to no rest about them, nor they tending to any good and saving use, but merely to show men's wit and parts; and we may also learn, that this is no religious preaching or hearing, it being impossible men should be under any religious obligations to hear any but prophets, that is, such as reveal the Divine will. For other discourses, men in their seasons may hear them, or let them alone, and credit or not credit them as they see reason.

5 Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned:

1 Rom. 13.
9. 10.
Gal. 5. 14.
22. 2 Tim. 2.

Now the end of the commandment is charity: the word translated commandment here is παράγγελία, which rather signifies a particular charge given by superiors as to some thing, than a general law, Acts v. 28; xvi. 24; and so in this chapter, ver. 13; which inclineth me to think, that though the proposition be true of the whole law of God, (for love is the fulfilling of the law.) and more eminently of the Divine doctrine in the gospel, for the end and perfection it aims at and produces is a pure, ardent love of God, and of men for his sake, and of the gospel, yet it is rather here to be restrained to the commandment relating to preaching, or discoursing the revealed will of God relating to men's salvation, the end of which is doubtless charity, which ought to be fnis operantis, the end of the workman, what he ought to intend and aim at; and is fnis operis, the effect of the work, viz. the begetting in the souls of people love to God and their neighbour, neither of which can rationally be obtained by preachers telling people idle stories, and filling their heads with idle questions and speculations. Out of a pure heart: which love to God and men must proceed from a clean, and holy, and sincere heart. And of a good conscience; and a good and holy life, when conscience doth not sourly reflect upon men for presumptuous miscarriages. And of faith unfeigned; which must all be rooted in and attended with a faith unfeigned; rooted in it, as faith signifies a steady assent to Divine revelation; attended with it, as it signifies the soul's repose and rest upon Christ for the fulfilling of the promises annexed to him that believes and liveth up to such propositions. These are the noble ends of the whole law of God, and particularly of the charge or command God hath given ministers as to preaching, which can by no means be attained by teachers' discoursing fables and endless genealogies to people, nor by people's attendance to such discourses, for they can only fill people's heads with notions and unprofitable questions, which serve to gender strife and contention amongst people, instead of love either to God or men, and so to defile instead of purifying the heart, and have no influence at all upon a holy life, all which can grow out of no root but an unfeigned faith.

1 Or, not aiming at.
21 ch. 6. 4.
20.

6 From which some || having swerved have turned aside unto <sup>n</sup> vain jangling;

From which; from which things (for the article is plural, ἅν); from which commandment, and from the end of which commandment, from which pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfeigned. Some having swerved: ἀποχρισάμενοι, the word signifies to wander from a scope or mark. Some men either propounding to themselves ends in their discourses to people different from the command concerning preaching, and the true end of that, or at least wandering from that true end, they have turned aside. To do an action well, two things are necessary: 1. The propounding to ourselves a right end; 2. A moving to it by due means and in right order: whoso faileth in either of these, can no more do an action well, than he can shoot an arrow well, that either eyeth no mark, or levelleth his arrow quite beside it. The preachers reflected on by the apostle, either never considered the true end of preaching, or never regarded it in their action; this made them turn aside from theology to matæology, from preaching to vain jangling; so we translate it, but the word signifieth foolish talking; so we translate the adjective, Tit. i. 10, and so the word properly signifieth, any kind of foolish, impertinent discourse, either serving to no good end, or at least not that which the discourse pretendeth to. And indeed all discourses of fables, and unprofitable, idle questions, tending not to edifying, is no better than foolish talking.

7 Desiring to be teachers of the law; <sup>c</sup> understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

Desiring to be teachers of the law; Νομοδιδάσκαλοι. This term lets us know, that the apostle reflecteth upon some who were or had been Jews, who either pressed the observance of the law in order to justification, or spent their time in pressing the traditions of the elders, and constitutions of the scribes, as seppimenta legis, hedges (as they called them) to the Divine law, though not of the letter of it; upon which there arose a great many questions as insignificant as their traditions themselves, which these vain preachers spent their time in speaking to. Understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm; neither understanding the Divine law, nor the questions themselves started and spoke unto, yet ambitious to be accounted teachers of the law. This vain desire of reputation, as persons of excellent skill in the land, was the cause of their erroneous, idle sermons: and their ignorance is aggravated and inexcusable, in that they with presumptuous boldness assert the things of which they are ignorant.

p Rom. 7.12. 8 But we know that <sup>p</sup> the law is good, if a man use it lawfully;

But we know that the law is good: not that I speak against the law of God, I know that it is holy, and spiritual, and just, and good, Rom. vii. 12, 14. It is good, though not for justification, yet for conviction, to convince men of sin, and as a schoolmaster to lead men unto Christ, and to direct us in our walking with God; the equity and sanctity of its precepts are evident to the sincere and purified mind. If a man use it lawfully: and as the law has an intrinsic goodness in its nature, so it is good to men when it is used for the end to which God gave it.

9 <sup>g</sup> Knowing this, that the law is not <sup>g</sup> made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers,

By the law is to be understood the moral law, (though possibly not excluding the law of Moses, consisting in many ordinances,) as it is armed with stings and terrors, to restrain rebellious sinners; by the righteous man, one in whom a principle of Divine grace is planted, and, from the knowledge and love of God, chooses the things that are pleasing to him, and is ardent and active to do his will. Now it is true, the holiness commanded in the law, that consists in the love of God and our neighbour, obliges every reasonable creature indispensably and eternally; but as the law was delivered in so terrible a manner, as it has annexed so many severe threatenings to the transgressors of it, it is evident that it is directed to the wicked, who will only be compelled by fear from an outrageous breaking of it. And this may be emphatically signified in the word here used, κείρα, for it signifies to be laid, as well as to be made. The law non obicitur is not laid against a righteous man. Thus we translate it, Matt. iii. 10. The axe is laid unto the root of the trees: there is some difference in the construction; here it is immediately joined with the dative case, there with an accusative case, with the preposition πρός betwixt the verb and the case; but that must be the sense. It is very probable, that these false teachers had been terrifying the Christians with the law, in opposition to whom the apostle saith, the law was not made for a righteous man, as to its condemning office; it was never intended against a righteous man, but against men that committed and lived in gross sin and wickedness. These sinners are first mentioned in general terms, then the apostle proceedeth to a more particular enumeration of them; whether in them (as some think) the apostle hath respect to the several precepts of the decalogue, I cannot determine. By the lawless he meaneth persons living without any respect to the laws of God or men. By the disobedient he meaneth such as will live in subjection to no government. The word by us translated ungodly, signifieth such as live without any religion, having no regard to the worship of God, ἀσεβῆται. The word translated sinners signifies infamous, scandalous sinners. Unholy and profane are also general terms, signifying persons that have no piety, but lewdly talk of things sacred, and live as lewdly. Murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers: the words signify such as strike or beat their parents, though they do not give them mortal wounds, and well expresseth violators of the fifth commandment. Manslayers, ἀνδροφόνους, signifies such as kill men, whether maliciously or passionately, violators of the sixth commandment.

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary <sup>r</sup> to sound doctrine;

The two next terms express violators of the seventh commandment, whether by fornication, adultery, incest, sodomy, or any beastly lusts. Men-stealers; the word signifieth such as carry men into captivity, or make slaves of them in the first place; it signifies also any stealing of men. It is probable the first of these is the man-stealing principally intended, being the most common sin by pirates at sea, and soldiers at land; yet not excluding any other stealing of men from their relations, which he instanceth in, as one of the highest violations of the eighth commandment. By liars he meaneth such as knowingly speak what is false, especially to the prejudice of others. By perjured persons he means such as swear falsely. And be-

r ch. 6. 3.
2 Tim. 4. 2.
Tit. 1. 9. &
2. 1.

cause it would be too long to reckon up all kinds of sinners, he comprehends them all in a general phrase, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine, that is, the holy and pure truth of God, that is not corrupted, but judges aright of good and evil: for these he saith the law is made, that is, to deter from such crimes, or to condemn for them; but not to terrify such who either never were guilty of such flagitious crimes, or if they have been guilty, yet are now washed, and sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of God, as the apostle speaks, 1 Cor. vi. 11. The law (as the apostle here saith) was never made to terrify, or to condemn and affright, these, for, Rom. viii. 1, There is no condemnation to those that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 6. 15.
<sup>2</sup> 1 Cor. 9. 17.
<sup>3</sup> Gal. 2. 7.
<sup>4</sup> Col. 1. 25.
<sup>5</sup> 1 Thess. 2. 4.
<sup>6</sup> ch. 2. 7.
<sup>7</sup> 2 Tim. 1. 11. Tit. 1. 3.

11 According to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.

Here the apostle specifies the sound doctrine of which he spake; that it is contained in the gospel, the perfect rule of righteousness, which he styles the glorious gospel of the blessed God, it being a doctrine revealed from heaven, wherein the concurrence and command of the Divine attributes, wisdom, power, mercy, and justice, do most clearly shine to the glory of God, 2 Cor. iv. 6; Eph. i. 6, 12; and he gives the title of blessed to God, thereby to signify his transcendent goodness, in that, being infinitely happy in the possession of his own excellencies, without any possible advantage and profit from any creature, yet he was pleased to give his Son to be our ransom, and with him grace and glory to us. The apostle adds, which was committed to my trust, to distinguish it from the false doctrine which seducers published under the name of the gospel.

12 And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry;

Here St. Paul expresses his most humble and solemn thanks to Christ for his rich favour in calling him to the high office of an apostle, for by the ministry that is to be understood; and it is so called by way of excellence, it being the most glorious and Divine ministry that ever was established in the church: and he ascribes to our Saviour the praise of all that he performed in the faithful discharge of it. He saith, Christ enabled me, that is, endowed him with fidelity, zeal, courage, and all other qualifications requisite for that honourable and difficult ministry, 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6. The end of that sacred ministry was, to enlighten and reform the world from superstition, and that vicious and vain conversation that was so pleasing to carnal men, to abolish those corrupt customs that had taken such deep root, and to plant the truth that comes from above, and to publish a holy law so opposite to corrupt nature. This work was opposed by the craft and cruelty, the artifice and violence, of the powers of darkness, in conjunction with the perverted world; and the glory of the apostle's resisting such enemies is entirely due to Christ. He adds, as a motive of his thankfulness, that Jesus Christ counted him faithful, which is an evident proof that he intends that he made him faithful. His faithfulness was not the cause or motive, but the fruit and effect, of the grace of God in calling him to the ministry. This he expressly declares, 1 Cor. vii. 25, hath obtained mercy to be faithful. If our Saviour had only discovered his fidelity, without bestowing that grace upon him, there had not been a reason of such affectionate thanksgiving; for that always supposes some favour and benefit received.

<sup>1</sup> Acts 8. 3.
<sup>2</sup> & 9. 1.
<sup>3</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 9.
<sup>4</sup> Phil. 3. 6.
<sup>5</sup> Luke 23.
<sup>6</sup> 24. John 9.
<sup>7</sup> 28. 41.
<sup>8</sup> Acts 8. 17.
<sup>9</sup> & 26. 9.

13 Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.

The kindness of God in putting me into so noble a service was the greater and more thankworthy, because before that time I was a blasphemer, one who spake of Christ reproachfully, for that blasphemy signifieth. Paul was a zealous man in the Jewish religion, his blasphemy therefore only respected the Second Person in the Trinity, which the Jews owned not. Paul compelled others to blaspheme, Acts xxvi. 11. And a persecutor: of his persecution, see Acts viii. 3: he entered houses, haled men and women to prison; he breathed threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, Acts ix. 1; he persecuted Christianity even to death, Acts xxii. 4, 5. Thus he was injurious, for in other things he was, as to the law, blameless, Phil. iii. 6, bred up a Pharisee according to the strictest sect of the Jewish religion, Acts xxvi. 5; but he verily thought with himself that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, ver. 9; so as he went according to his conscience, (such a one as he had,) and, ver. 10, he had also authority from the chief priests. But neither the dictates of his own erroneous conscience, nor yet the command of his superiors, could (according to Paul's divinity) excuse him from being a persecutor, and injurious, and standing in need of the free pardoning mercy of God, which he saith he obtained of God's free grace, because he did it ignorantly. We cannot reasonably think that ignorance of the Divine law (once published) should excuse any transgressor of it, we see men will not allow it as to their laws, after promulgation; so that although Paul persecuted Christians ignorantly, yet he stood in need of mercy. Ignorance excuseth not a totò, but a tanto, not in whole, but in part, and makes the sinner's sin not to be exceeding sinful, especially where it is not vincibile. Paul's ignorance here mentioned was vincibile; he lived in Judea, where the gospel had been preached some years before he persecuted the professors; he might have heard the sermons preached, and seen the miracles wrought, by Christ and the apostles; but he was bred a Pharisee, and under the prejudices of that sect which were implacable enemies to Christ, this kept him in ignorance. Christ allows something for the prejudices of men's education. He did what he did also while he was in a state of unbelief. He believed one true and living God, (all the Jews did so,) and worshipped him according to the Jewish manner, yet styles himself an unbeliever. Every man is an unbeliever (in a gospel sense) that receiveth not Jesus Christ as the Son of God and his Saviour, though he believes there is one God, &c. Paul addeh this circumstance of his ignorant blaspheming and persecuting the truth, partly to justify the Divine mercy that pardoned and preserved him; for the gospel peremptorily excludes from pardon all that sin against the Holy Ghost, such who, being enlightened by the knowledge of the saving truth, yet for carnal reasons deliberately and maliciously oppose it; now the showing mercy to Paul was no contradiction to this most wise law of God: and partly he mentions his ignorance to prevent the abuse of the Divine mercy by men; as if from his example they might securely imitate his persecuting the saints, or live in a course of sin, though convinced of their wickedness, and hope for mercy at the last.

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant; the free love of God towards me, in justifying such a guilty creature, and sanctifying such an unholy creature, and afterwards calling me to the office of an apostle, fitting me for it, and trusting me with that great work and employment, abounded beyond all measure and possibility of expression. With faith and love which is in Christ Jesus: Christ working faith in me, enabling me to receive him as the Son of God, and my Lord and Saviour; and to love him, whom I formerly thought I ought to do much against, and his disciples, whom I formerly haled to death, of whom I made havoc, persecuting them to death. He mentions faith and love, the two principal graces, in opposition to the reigning sins in his unconverted state: faith in the doctrine of the gospel, in opposition to his former ignorance and infidelity; and love to Christ and believers, in opposition to his former rage and cruelty against them. And these graces were from Christ, the fruits of his merit, and Holy Spirit.

15 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

<sup>1</sup> b Rom. 6. 29.
<sup>2</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 10.
<sup>3</sup> c 2 Tim. 1. 13.
<sup>4</sup> d Luke 7. 47.

<sup>1</sup> e ch. 3. 1.
<sup>2</sup> & 4. 9.
<sup>3</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 11.
<sup>4</sup> Tit. 3. 8.
<sup>5</sup> 1 Matt. 9. 13.
<sup>6</sup> Mark 2. 17.
<sup>7</sup> Luke 5. 32.
<sup>8</sup> & 19. 10. Rom. 5. 8. 1 John 3. 3.

This is a faithful saying; the following saying, which is the great proposition of the gospel, is a saying that is in itself true, and wherein God hath declared his truth. And worthy of all acceptation; and worthy to be with all thankfulness received, believed, and accepted. That Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; that Jesus Christ, being sent of the Father, in the fulness of time, was incarnate, lived, and died in the world; not only to set sinners an example of a better life, nor only to make God placable towards men, that if they would they might be saved; but to purchase a certain salvation for sinners, satisfying Divine justice, and meriting all grace necessary to bring them to salvation, to carry the lost sheep home upon his shoulders; yea, though they had been great wanderers, ἀμαρτωλῶν. Of whom I am chief; and I was as great a one as any other, yea, the chief. Paul, though converted, had his former sin of persecution before his eyes. Persecutors are some of the chief sinners. Some will have the relative of whom to refer to the saving mentioned: of which sinners brought to salvation I am the great president, having been so great a sinner as I have been and yet received to mercy.

g 2 Cor. 4. 1.

16 Howbeit for this cause <sup>g</sup> I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, <sup>h</sup> for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

h Acts 13.39.

Ἄλλὰ, the word we translate howbeit, is as well to be translated but, and ordinarily is so. For this cause, that is, for this end, God showed me mercy. That in me first; that in me, the first, (so it is in the Greek, for it is an adjective,) that is, as he said before, the chiefest or greatest sinner, Christ might show forth all long-suffering, bearing with me while I was in my rage against his gospel and saints, and then changing my heart to embrace him and to love him. Or, that in me first, may respect the design of our Saviour in sending Paul to convert the Gentiles: for such a conspicuous example of his clemency and grace towards so great a sinner, whom he not only pardoned but preferred to the dignity of an apostle, would be a strong persuasive to them to receive the gospel with faith and obedience. For it follows, for a pattern of God's patience and free grace to other sinners, from whence they might learn, that if they also shall receive and believe in him, their past sins need not be to them any reason to despair in his mercy. To life everlasting: there being a certain connexion betwixt true believing in Christ and eternal life.

i Ps. 10. 16.

k 143. 19.

l Dan. 7. 14.

m ch. 6. 15, 16.

n Rom. 1.23.

o John 1. 18.

p Heb. 11. 27.

q 1 John 4. 12.

r 1 Rom. 16. 27. Jude 25. n 1 Chron. 29. 11.

The apostle falleth out of this discourse with a doxology, or sentence giving glory to God, whom he calls the King, that is, the Moderator and Governor of all things. Eternal; without beginning of days or end of life. Immortal; not subject, as creatures, to any passion, or determination of being. Invisible; not obvious to our senses, whom no mortal eye ever saw. Only wise, primitively and originally, and eminently, from whom all wisdom is derived. Be honour and glory for ever and ever; be given all praises, homage, and acknowledgments, by which he can be made glorious for ever.

s ch. 6. 19.

t 14. 29.

u 2 Tim. 2. 2.

v Eccl. 46.

w 1. ch. 4. 14.

x ch. 6. 12.

y 2 Tim. 2. 3.

z 4. 7.

18 This charge <sup>o</sup> I commit unto thee, son Timothy, <sup>p</sup> according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest <sup>q</sup> war a good warfare;

This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy: the term son, here applied to Timothy, whom he elsewhere calls his brother, is not a term of natural relation, but of spiritual relation, and of affectionate friendship and endearment. By the charge mentioned he probably means that before mentioned, ver. 3, 4, to charge the false teachers to teach no other doctrine, nor give heed to fables, &c. According to the prophecies which went before on thee: these prophecies were either the judgments of good men before concerning him, or (which possibly is more probable) some Divine revelations Paul, or some believers, had received concerning this young man. That thou by them mightest war a good warfare; that thou, having heard of them, or remembering them, (though thou meetest with opposition as a minister and as a Christian, yet) mightest not be discouraged, but preach and hold the faith, against all opposers. So the apostle expoundeth himself.

19 Holding faith, and a good con- r ch. 3. a.

science; which some having put away concerning faith <sup>s</sup> have made shipwreck: s ch. 6. 9.

By faith here is meant, the doctrine of faith, and the holding of it signifies a steadiness of the mind's assent unto it, without wavering or fluctuation, much less deserting or denying it. By a good conscience is here to be understood what the Scripture elsewhere calls a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men, Acts xxiv. 16, opposed to the evil conscience, mentioned Heb. x. 22; so as a good conscience here signifies a pure conscience, which necessarily implieth a holy life; for our actions are presently copied out into our consciences, and make either blots or good copies there. Which some having put away; which some taking no care in, viz. to live holily, so keeping a good conscience; concerning faith have made shipwreck; have made shipwreck concerning faith, suffered loss as to it, falling from the truths of the gospel. Error seldom goes along with a holy life. The truths of the gospel have such an influence upon men's conversation, that ordinarily men's holiness is proportioned to their soundness in the faith, and usually the love of some lust is what betrayeth men into erroneous judgments and opinions.

20 Of whom is <sup>t</sup> Hymenæus and <sup>u</sup> Alex- t 2 Tim. 2.

ander; whom I have <sup>v</sup> delivered unto u 2 Tim. 2.

Satan, that they may learn not to <sup>w</sup> blas- w 14.

pheme. x Cor. 5. 5.

y Acts 13. 45.

Of which men who have made shipwreck of a good conscience and concerning faith, Hymenæus and Alexander are two persons. Of Hymenæus we read, 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18; he affirmed the resurrection was past, and overthrew the faith of many. Of Alexander we read, 2 Tim. iv. 14; he was a great enemy to Paul, the same person, as some judge, mentioned Acts xix. 33, then a friend to Paul, but afterwards one who did him much harm. Whom I have delivered unto Satan: we meet with the same phrase, 1 Cor. v. 5; see the notes there. Some think by it is signified a peculiar power granted the apostles, God in those primitive times confirming regular excommunications, by letting Satan loose upon persons excommunicated to torture them; but we find nothing of this in Scripture. I rather think the sense is no more than, whom I excommunicated and cast out of the church, making them of the world again. (as the world is opposed to the church, and kingdom of Christ,) which, for the greater terror, the apostle expresseth by this notion of being delivered to Satan, who is called the god of this world, &c. That they may learn not to blaspheme: not that I might ruin and undo them, but that I might amend them by this exercise of discipline, teaching them to take heed of spreading damnable and pernicious errors to the reproach of God. Or, perhaps, with their perverse opinions (which is very ordinary) they mingled reproachful speeches concerning God.

CHAP. II

Paul exhorteth to pray and give thanks for all men, for kings and magistrates especially, 1—3. God willeth the salvation of all men, 4—6. Paul's commission to teach the Gentiles, 7. He directeth how women should be attire, 8—10; permitteth them not to teach, 11—14; promiseth that they shall be saved in child-bearing on certain conditions, 15.

I || EXHORT therefore, that, first of all, <sup>r</sup> Or, desires. supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men;

Timothy (as was said before) was left at Ephesus to manage the affairs of the church there in the absence of Paul, who in this Epistle directs him as to this management. First he exhorts him to see that prayers should be made for all men. Supplications, δέησις, for supply of wants. Prayers, προσευχάς, signifieth much the same; some will have it to signify petitions for the conservation or increase of what good things we have. Intercessions, ἀντιθέσεις, prayers for others, whether for the averting of evils from them, or the collation of good things upon them. And giving of thanks; and blessings of God for good things bestowed upon ourselves or others. These Paul wills should be made ὡς πρὸς πάντων, which may be of all men, or for all men, but the next verse plainly shows that it is here rightly rendered for all men, for there were at this time no kings in the church. Paul here establisheth prayers as a piece of the public ministry in the church of God, and a primary piece; therefore he saith, he exhorts that first of all; not in respect of time so much, as, principally, intimating it a great piece of the public ministry, which he would by no means have neglected. And he would have these prayers put up for all orders and sorts of men, such only excepted of whom St. John speaks, 1 John v. 16, who had sinned that sin, for which he would not say Christians should pray.

<sup>a</sup> Εὐχα. 10. 2 <sup>a</sup> For kings, and <sup>b</sup> for all that are in authority; and we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

For kings, and for all that are in authority: the kings of the earth at that time were all heathens, and enemies to the Christian religion, so (generally) were those who were in a subordinate authority to them, yet the apostle commands that prayers should be made in the Christian congregations for them. What the matter of their petitions was to be is not expressed, but doubtless not to be limited by the next words, for that were not to have prayed for them but for themselves. Prayers for magistrates ought to be directed by their circumstances. If magistrates were idolaters and persecutors, they were to pray for their conversion, and the change of their hearts. However, they were to pray for their life and health so far forth as might be for God's glory, and for God's guidance of them in the administration of their government, and their success in their lawful counsels and undertakings, &c. The latter words, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, contain the reason why prayers should be made for governors, and the good effect of them. For it is for this end that the supreme Lord hath ordained the office and dignity of kings and governors, that, being armed with authority and power, they may perserve public order and peace, by punishing evil-doers, and protecting and encouraging those that do well. Thus, under the Old Testament, the Jews were commanded to pray for the peace of the nation or city whither they should be carried captives, in their peace they should have peace, Jer. xxix. 7.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 12. 2. 3 For this is good and acceptable in the sight <sup>d</sup> of God our Saviour;

To pray for all, as well our enemies as our friends, especially for princes, and such as are in places of magistracy and authority, is good, being according to the will and commandment of God, and acceptable to God, as all acts of obedience to his will are. The word Saviour may either be understood with reference to the Divine Being, God being our Preserver, who maketh his sun to shine and his rain to fall upon the just and unjust, Matt. v. 45, which our Saviour brings as an argument to enforce his precept of love to our enemies; or with a special reference to Christ, to whom the title of Saviour, with reference to eternal salvation, more strictly belongs, who also by his death, when we were enemies, reconciled us to God: so that such a charitable office must be acceptable to God, because in doing it we both show ourselves the children of our heavenly Father, and also the followers of Christ.

<sup>e</sup> Ezek. 18. 4 <sup>e</sup> Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

The apostle produces a clear, convincing reason, that the duty of charity in praying for all men is pleasing to God, from his love extended to all, in his willing their salvation, and their knowledge and belief of the gospel, which is the only way of salvation. From hence our Saviour's commission and command to the apostles was universal, Go and teach all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19; Preach the gospel to every creature, that is, to every man, Mark xvi. 15; he excludes no people, no person. And accordingly the apostles discharged their office to their utmost capacity, Col. i. 24. But a question arises, how it can be said that God would have all men saved, when that the most of men perish? For the resolving this difficulty, we must observe, that in the style of Scripture the will of God sometimes signifies his eternal counsel and decree; that things should be done either by his immediate efficiency, or by the intervention of means: or, secondly, his commands and invitations to men to do such things as are pleasing to him. The will of God in the first sense always infallibly obtains its effect, Psal. cxv. 3; thus he declares, My counsel shall stand, I will do all my pleasure, Isa. xlvi. 10; for otherwise there must be a change of God's will and counsel, or a defect of power, both which assertions are impious blasphemy. But those things which he commands and are pleasing to him, are often not performed without any reflection upon him, either as mutable or impotent. Thus he declares, that he wills things that are pleasing to him; as, I will not the death of a sinner, but that he should turn and live, Ezek. xxxiii. 11; and sometimes that he will not those things that are displeasing to him, as contrary to holiness, though he did not decree the hindering of them: thus he complains in Isa. lxxv. 12, Ye did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. This distinction of the Divine will being clearly set down in Scripture, answers the objection; for when it is said in the text, that God will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth; and in the same sense by St. Peter, that God will have none perish, but come to repentance, 2 Pet. iii. 9; we must understand it, not with respect to his decreetive will, but his complacential will, that is, the repentance and life of a sinner is very pleasing to his holiness and mercy. And this love of God to men has been declared in opening the way of salvation to them by the Mediator, and by all the instructions, invitations, commands, and promises of the gospel, assuring them that whoever comes to Christ upon the terms of the gospel shall in no wise be cast off; that no repenting believer shall be excluded from saving mercy.

5 <sup>f</sup> For there is one God, and <sup>g</sup> one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus;

The apostle proves the universal love of God to men by two reasons, the unity of God, and the unity of the Mediator: though there are divers societies and vast numbers of men, yet there is but one God, the Creator and Preserver of all. If there were many gods in nature, it were conceivable that the God of Christians were not the God of other men, and consequently that his good will were confined to his own portion, leaving the rest to their several deities; but since there is but one true God of the world, who has revealed himself in the gospel, it necessarily follows that he is the God of all men in the relation of Creator and Preserver. And from hence he concludes, God will have all men to be saved. He argues in the same manner that salvation by faith in Christ belongs to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, Rom. iii. 29, 30. The apostle adds, for the clearest assurance of his good will of God to save men, that there is one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. When the sin of man had provoked Divine justice, and the guilt could not be expiated without satisfaction, God appointed his Son incarnate to mediate between his offended Majesty and his rebellious subjects. And it is observable, the parallel between the unity of God and the unity of the Mediator; as there is one God of all nations, so there is one Mediator of all. The strength of the apostle's argument from the unity of the Mediator is this: If there were many mediators, according to the numbers of nations in the world, there might be a suspicion whether they were so worthy and so prevalent as to obtain the grace of God, every one for those in whose behalf they did mediate. But since there is but one, and that he is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him, it is evident that all men have the same Mediator, and that every one may be assured that God is willing he should be saved, and, for that blessed end, should by faith and repentance accept the covenant of grace. The apostle for the stronger confirmation specifies the Mediator, the man Christ Jesus, to encourage the hopes of all men, from the communion they have with him in nature, that they may partake of

<sup>f</sup> Rom. 8. 26.
<sup>g</sup> 10. 12.
Gal. 3. 20.
1 Heb. 8. 6.
& 9. 15.

his salvation, and that this great Mediator, having come from heaven and assumed the infirmity of our nature, Heb. iv. 15, will be inclined compassionately to assist them, and raise them to his heavenly kingdom.

<sup>1</sup> Mat. 20. 28. <sup>2</sup> Mark 10. 45. <sup>3</sup> Eph. 1. 7. <sup>4</sup> Tit. 2. 14. <sup>5</sup> || to be testified <sup>6</sup> in due time.

<sup>1</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 6. <sup>2</sup> 2 Thess. 1. 10. <sup>3</sup> Tim. 1. 8. | <sup>4</sup> Or, a testimony. <sup>1</sup> Rom. 8. 6. Gal. 4. 4. <sup>2</sup> Eph. 1. 8. & 3. 5. Tit. 1. 3.

Ἀντίλυτρον, the word here translated ransom, is very emphatical; it signifies the exchanging of condition with another, the laying down of one's life to save another's. This our Saviour has done for us. The Scripture discovers to us, that by nature we are the children of wrath, and guilty of many rebellious sins, and devoted to eternal death: being in this deplorable state, the Son of God, moved by his Divine love, undertook our restoring to the favour of God; and voluntarily endured the punishment due to our sins, and gave his most precious blood and life the price of our redemption, Matt. xx. 28. If it be objected, How is it consistent with Christ giving himself a ransom for all, that so many perish in their sins? the answer is clear: We must distinguish between the sufficiency of his ransom and the efficacy of it; he paid a ransom worthy to obtain the salvation of all men, and has done whatever was requisite to reconcile God, and make men capable of salvation; but only those who by a lively faith depend upon him, and obey him, are actual partakers of salvation: that is, no person but may be saved in believing; and if men perish, it is not from a defect of righteousness in the Mediator, but from the love of their lusts, and their obstinate rejecting their own mercies. And it is unjust that the glory of his Divine compassion and love should be obscured or lessened for their ungrateful neglect of it.

<sup>m</sup> Eph. 3. <sup>7, 8, 2</sup> Tim. 1. 11. <sup>n</sup> Rom. 9. 1. <sup>o</sup> Rom. 11. <sup>13, & 15, 16.</sup> Gal. 1. 16. <sup>7</sup> <sup>m</sup> Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle, (<sup>n</sup> I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not;) <sup>o</sup> a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

Wherewith I am ordained a preacher; for the publishing and making known of which testimony of the Divine goodness and truth I am set, or appointed, 2 Tim. i. 11, ἐπίστατον, a preacher, or a public officer to proclaim and make it known. And an apostle; and am immediately called by Christ, and sent out upon that employment. I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not; I call Christ to witness that I speak nothing but what I know to be true. It is a phrase which hath, if not the form, yet the force of an oath, and was necessary in this case, for it was not easy to persuade the Jews that God had sent any to reveal the way of salvation to the Gentiles. A teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity; and my special province was to teach the Gentiles, Acts ix. 15; xxvi. 17; Gal. ii. 7—9; and to instruct them in the doctrine of faith and truth: or, I was set faithfully and truly to instruct the Gentiles.

<sup>y</sup> Mat. 1. 11. <sup>John 4. 21.</sup> <sup>z</sup> Ps. 134. 2. <sup>Is. 1. 15.</sup> <sup>8</sup> I will therefore that men pray <sup>p</sup> every where, <sup>q</sup> lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.

I will therefore that men pray every where; this is one precept that I give thee in charge as to the management of the affairs of the church, that wherever men meet together to worship God, whether in houses built for that purpose, or in more common houses, or any other place, (for the time is now come when there is no special command for one place more than another, no special promise made to men's prayers in one place more than another, as there was to and concerning the temple of old, John iv. 21,) they should pray, either ministering to others in the duty of prayer, or joining with him who doth so minister. Lifting up holy hands; but let them take heed how they pray, for God heareth not sinners, John ix. 31; let them therefore lift up holy hands, not regarding iniquity in their hearts. Without wrath; and let them take heed of carrying malice, or inveterate anger, in their hearts when they go to God in prayer, for they must pray, Father, forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us; and, Matt. vi. 15, If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses. And doubting; and let them also take heed of doubting in prayer of the goodness, truth, or power of God to fulfil his wishes; but, James i. 6, 7, let them ask in faith, nothing wavering. For

let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

<sup>9</sup> In like manner also, that <sup>r</sup> women <sup>s</sup> adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with <sup>t</sup> brodered hair, or gold, or pearls, or <sup>u</sup> costly array;

The apostle's next precept to be urged by Timothy, is concerning the habits of women, especially when they come to worship God in the public assemblies; for to such assemblies the precepts in this chapter, both before and after this, chiefly relate. Concerning these he commands, that they should adorn themselves in modest apparel, observe a decency, with respect to the modesty of their sex, the purity of religion, the quality of their condition, and their age. Religion has no other interest in our habits, but to regulate them according to a modest comeliness; for they are indifferent in their nature, and neither add nor detract from the acceptance of our religious services. Shamefacedness and sobriety, or modesty; a moderation of mind showed both in the habit of the body, and the manners and behaviour, both with these inward habits, and in an outward habit that may speak souls possessed of these inward habits. Not with brodered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; not with hair plaited or curled, not adorned with ornaments of gold, or pearls, or costly array. The apostle condemneth not these ornaments where they are suited to the quality of women, and ask not too much time to put on, and in order; but where they are too excessive with respect to the purse of those that wear them, or take up more time to be spent in putting them on than is fit to be so spent, especially on a sabbath day, or where they are put on out of pride, or to make a vain show, or are of that nature and fashion as they speak an unchaste or an immodest heart, or may cause scandal to others. The apostle Peter, 1 Pet. iii. 3, hath much the same precept, where he is not speaking of women's habits, with such special reference to public assemblies, but to their ordinary conversation; but it ought to be more specially avoided when people come to worship God. They should not so habit themselves when they go to pray, as if they were going to a dancing school, as Chrysostom in his time complained of some that did.

<sup>10</sup> But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works.

They ought to look at the ornament of good works; for those are the ornaments which best become women professing godliness, whose hearts should despise the ornament of the figure of excrementitious hair, or a little yellow earth, or a stone, or the work of a pitiful silkworm.

<sup>11</sup> Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection.

That is, in the public assemblies for worship, it is the woman's part silently to learn, showing thereby a subjection to the man, who is the head of the woman.

<sup>12</sup> But <sup>v</sup> I suffer not a woman to teach, <sup>w</sup> nor to usurp authority over the man, but <sup>x</sup> to be in silence.

But I suffer not a woman to teach; not to teach in the public congregation, except she be a prophetess, endued with extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, as Mary, and Anna, and Huldah, and Deborah, and some women in the primitive church, concerning whom we read, 1 Cor. xi. 5, that they prophesied. Nor to usurp authority over the man: ordinary teaching of the woman was a usurpation of authority over the man, who is the head, which the apostle also forbade in 1 Cor. xi. 3, and here repeateth. It is probable that the speaking of some women in the church who had extraordinary revelations, emboldened others also to aim at the like, which the apostle here directs his speech against. Nevertheless women may, and it is their duty to instruct their children and families at home, especially in the absence of their husbands.

<sup>13</sup> For <sup>y</sup> Adam was first formed, then <sup>z</sup> Eve.

The man had the priority of the woman in his creation, he was not made for her, but she was made for a helpmate for him ; therefore she, being made for him, ought to usurp no authority over him.

<sup>v Gen. 3. 6.</sup> <sup>3 Cor. 11. 3.</sup> 14 And <sup>v</sup> Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.

Besides, Adam was not first deceived, nor indeed at all deceived immediately by the serpent, but only enticed, and deceived by the woman, who was the tempter's agent ; so as that she was both first in the transgression in order of time, and also principal in it, contributing to the seduction or transgression of the man ; which ought to be a consideration to keep the woman humble, in a low opinion of herself, and that lower order wherein God hath fixed her.

15 Notwithstanding she shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

Though the woman was so unhappy as to be deceived by the serpent, and to be the first in taking the forbidden fruit, and an instrument to entice her husband to do the like, which may give all of that sex a cause of humiliation, and show them the reasonableness of God's order in putting them in subjection to man, and prohibiting them to break God's order in usurping authority over the man ; yet through the gracious interposition of the Mediator, (afterward born of a woman,) she hath no reason to despair, either of a temporal salvation, from the peril and danger of child-birth, or, much less, of an eternal salvation, for she shall be saved ; she stands upon equal ground with the man as to eternal salvation, who cannot be saved without faith and holiness, and a discharge of the duties incumbent upon him, and patient enduring the crosses and trials God exerciseth him with ; and the woman also shall be saved, by faithful performance of her duty, and patiently enduring her crosses and trials, in the pains and peril of child-bearing ; notwithstanding they are the sensible marks of God's displeasure for sin, yet the sufferings of Christ has taken away the said bitterness. If they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety ; if she also liveth in the exercise of faith in Christ, and love to God, and her husband, and all saints, and in all exercises of holiness with sobriety. Some refer the pronoun they to the children, because the apostle had been before speaking of the woman in the singular number ; but there is nothing more ordinary than that change of the number, especially where collective words are used, that signify a whole species or sex ; and it is unreasonable to think the apostle should suspend the salvation of the mother upon the faith and holiness of the child, and to interpret it of the mother's endeavours towards it, seemeth hardly a sufficient interpretation of the term continue.

CHAP. III

The office of a bishop is to be esteemed a good work, 1. The qualifications requisite in a bishop, 2—7, and in deacons, 8—13. Why Paul wrote these instructions to Timothy, 14, 15. The important truths of the Christian revelation, 16.

<sup>a ch. 1. 15.</sup> <sup>b Acts 20. 28.</sup> <sup>c Eph. 4. 12.</sup> <sup>Phil. 1. 1.</sup> THIS <sup>a</sup> is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a <sup>b</sup> Bishop, he desireth a good <sup>c</sup> work.

This is a true saying ;  $\pi\alpha\theta\acute{\epsilon}\varsigma$ , a faithful saying, that which none can dispute, of which none ought to doubt. If a man desire the office of a bishop ; if a man desire any office to which belongs an oversight of the church of God. The Greek word  $\epsilon\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\omicron\upsilon\tau\eta$  signifies in the general an oversight of others ; here the following discourse restrains it to an oversight of persons and affairs in the church. The apostle by this phrase determines this employment lawful, and under due circumstances to be desired, and saith of it, that he who desireth it desireth καλὸν ἔργον, a good work, a noble employment ; it is a work, the office of the ministry in the church is and ought to be a work. The titles of gospel ministers are not mere titles of honour, and of all works or employments, the ministry is the most noble employment. We (saith the apostle) are stewards of the mysteries of God, ministers of Christ, 1 Cor. iv. 1 ; ambas- sadors for Christ, in Christ's stead, 2 Cor. v. 20 ; God's angels or messengers to churches, Rev. ii. 1. It being so good, so great, and noble an employment, it is no wonder that God hath restrained women, the weaker and more ignoble sex, from invading it, for all men are not fit for it, but only such as are hereafter described.

2 <sup>a</sup> A Bishop then must be blameless, <sup>d Tit. 1. 6.</sup> <sup>2c.</sup> the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, <sup>2c. 5. 2.</sup> of good behaviour, given to hospitality, <sup>1 Or. modest.</sup> apt to teach ; <sup>2 Tim. 2. 24.</sup>

In the following description there is the complete character of an evangelical bishop, with respect to the virtues wherewith he must be adorned, and the vices from which he must be exempt, and as to the conduct of his person, and the government of his family, and his carriage to the church, and to those that are without. A bishop, whoever hath the office of oversight in the church of God, must be blameless, such a person as none can truly blame for any notorious or conspicuous errors in his life. The husband of one wife ; none who at the same time hath more wives than one, as many of the Jews had ; but amongst the other Eastern nations ; but this was contrary to the institution of marriage. Some interpret this of successive marriage, as if it were a scandalous thing for a minister to marry a second time ; but for this they have no pretence from holy writ, or reason, or the practice and custom of nations. Many persons lose their first wives so soon after marriage, that were not second marriages lawful, all the ends of marriage must be frustrate as to them. The apostle commanding ministers to be the husbands but of one wife, doth not oblige them to marry, if God hath given them the gift of continency, but it establisheth the lawfulness of their marrying, against the doctrine of devils in this particular, which the Church of Rome teacheth. Vigilant : the word here translated vigilant signifieth also sober, but for that  $\sigma\acute{\omega}\phi\rho\nu\alpha$  is after used. He must be one that watcheth his flock, and is attentive to his work ; one that will neither be long absent from his flock, nor yet sluggish while he is with them. Sober ; one that is prudent, modest, temperate, that can govern his affections and passions. Of good behaviour ; a man of a comely, decent behaviour,  $\kappa\acute{\omicron}\sigma\mu\iota\omicron\varsigma$ , no proud, supercilious man, that despiseth others, nor a morose man, who cannot accommodate himself to others. Given to hospitality ; one that loveth strangers, that is, who is ready to express his love to strangers (especially such as for the truth have left their country) by all courteous offices. Apt to teach ; one that is able to instruct others, and who hath a facility or aptness to it, neither an ignorant nor yet a lazy man.

3 <sup>a</sup> Not given to wine, <sup>b</sup> no striker, <sup>g ver. 8.</sup> <sup>Tit. 1. 7.</sup> not greedy of filthy lucre ; but <sup>1 Or. Not</sup> patient, <sup>ready to</sup> not a brawler, <sup>quarrel</sup> not covetous ; <sup>and offer</sup>

Not given to wine ; the word signifieth a common tippler, whether he drinks to the loss of his reason or no ; a wine-bibber, that makes bibbing at a tavern his trade : no sinner at wine. No striker ; no quarreller, that cannot keep his fists off him that provoketh him. Not greedy of filthy lucre ; one that abhors all filthy and dishonest gain, any kind of way. But patient ;  $\epsilon\pi\iota\tau\epsilon\kappa\eta$ , a fair, equal man, who will not exact the rigour of what he might ; a patient, gentle, courteous man, so far from contention, that will rather part with what is his right. Not a brawler ;  $\acute{\alpha}\mu\alpha\chi\omicron\upsilon$ , one that will not fight, whether it be with his hand or tongue. Not covetous ; one that doth not love silver, that is, not with an immoderate, sinful love, so as to get it any way.

4 One that ruleth well his own house, <sup>1 Tit. 1. 6.</sup> having his children in subjection with all gravity ;

One that ruleth well his own house ; if he be one to whom God hath given a family, one who hath given an experiment of his conversation and ability to take care of a church, by the care that he hath taken of his family, and his ruling in that lesser society. Having his children in subjection with all gravity ; one that hath not let his children behave themselves rudely, and indecently, and rebelliously, but kept them in order by a grave demeanour towards them.

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?)

For if a man hath a family, and hath showed that he neither hath wit nor honesty enough to govern that little society, which hath his constant presence with it, with what reason can any one presume, that he should be fit to be trusted with the care of the church of God? which is a larger society, with all the members of which he is not so constantly present, and over whom he hath not such a coercive power, and as to whom a far greater care must be taken.

<sup>1</sup> Or, one newly come to the faith. <sup>2</sup> Tit. 1. 6. 12.

6 Not  $\parallel$  a novice, lest being lifted up with pride  $\equiv$  he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

Not a novice; not a young plant, that is, one that is newly made a member of the church of Christ; such persons are apt to swell in the opinion of their newly acquired knowledge, state, or dignity; and being so lifted up, they will be in danger of such a punishment as the devil for his pride met with, or to be guilty of some ill or indecent behaviour, which may give the devil occasion to accuse them. Others here interpret διαβόλος more appellatively, and understand by it a man that is an accuser, making the sense this,—and fall into the judgment, censure, or condemnation of men, accusing them for such behaviour.

7 Moreover he must have a good report <sup>o</sup> of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach <sup>e</sup> and the snare of the devil.

<sup>o</sup> Acts 22. 12. <sup>1</sup> Cor. 5. 12. <sup>1</sup> Thes. 4. 12. <sup>o</sup> ch. 6. 9. <sup>2</sup> Tim. 2. 24.

Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without: the apostle would have ministers men of good reputation amongst such as were without the pale of the church, for that is the meaning of that term, which are without; see 1 Cor. v. 12; 1 Thess. iv. 12: others might be admitted as members of the church, but not as rulers in it, because the glory of God was much concerned in the reputation of such persons, they were as lights set upon a hill. Lest he fall into reproach; lest men reproach such persons for their former infamous life, and so prejudice others against the doctrine they bring. And the snare of the devil; and the snare, either of some accuser, or of the devil, who hath this name from his accusing of the brethren; or lest he fall into some temptation to revenge, hatred, undue anger, or to be cowardly in the discharge of his duty, lest he should by faithfulness provoke others to reproach him for his former course of life.

8 Likewise must <sup>o</sup> the Deacons be grave, not doubletongued, <sup>e</sup> not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

Likewise must the deacons be grave: the term deacon signifies the same with one that ministereth, and is applicable to any that have any service in the church. But it is also a term peculiar to the office of those who serve tables, that is, took care of the poor, for which purpose these officers were first instituted, Acts vi. 3; and thus the term is taken, Rom. xii. 7, 8; Phil. i. 1; and so it here must be interpreted, being distinctly mentioned from the other officers, whose qualifications were before expressed, nor is it required of these officers that they should be διδασκαλικοί, apt to teach. Indeed both Stephen and Philip did preach, but the latter was an evangelist, and it was a time of persecution, when even the more private brethren went every where preaching the gospel. Of these officers he requires, that they should be persons not of light, airy tempers, but serious and composed, men of a modest, seemingly carriage. Not double-tongued; not excessive talkers, or men that regarded not what they said, but talked any thing, according to the place or company they were in or with. Not given to much wine; not too much attending taverns, and places where wine was sold or drank. Not greedy of filthy lucre; not greedy of gain, any sordid, base way.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 1. 13.

9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

Not ignorant or inconstant persons, but such as were acquainted with the mysteries of the gospel, and believed them, and held to them; and men of a holy life.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a Deacon, being found blameless.

The higher officers ought to be proved, (as well as these of a lower order,) as by examination or conference, so (which possibly is here more intended) by an observation of their lives and conversation, for some time before they were admitted into this employment. Then, being found blameless, they were to be admitted into this employment.

11 Even so must their wives be grave, <sup>1</sup> Tit. 2. 3. not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

Even so must their wives be grave: must their is not in the Greek, but supplied by our interpreters, and, as some think, ill, judging that he speaks here not of deacons' wives, but of deaconesses, of such women as had the deacon's office conferred on them, such a one was Phebe, Rom. xvi. 1; but it may be understood of either, both ought to be not light, airy, tattling persons, but composed, serious, grave people. Not slanderers; not devils, (so it is in the Greek,) that is, persons given to railing and accusing others. Sober: see the sense of that word, ver. 2. Faithful in all things; who have approved themselves every way honest, and such persons as may be trusted.

12 Let the Deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well.

See the sense of these words, ver. 2, 4, being the qualifications also of a bishop.

13 For they that have  $\parallel$  used the office of a Deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

<sup>1</sup> See Matt. 25. 21. <sup>1</sup> Or, ministered.

Purchase to themselves a good degree; a good degree of honour, so that none hath reason to decline or to despise that office. This seems rather to be the sense, than what pleaseth some better, viz. that they purchase to themselves a higher degree in the ministry of the church; for though it be very probably true, and but rational, that the primitive church did out of their deacons choose their higher officers for the church, yet neither was this done universally as to all persons chosen into those high employments, nor as to all those that used the office of a deacon well, there doubtless being many who had done so, who yet were not διδασκαλικοί, fitted with an ability sufficient to be preachers, without which fitness the primitive church would not choose any to such employment. And great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus; by the well performance also of the office of a deacon, many obtained a great liberty, or freedom of speech, παρρησιαν, as to the doctrine of the faith of Christ. For by the exercise of the deacon's office, they had much converse both with the pastors and members of the church; which converse did not only improve their knowledge in the doctrine of faith, but took off that excessive bashfulness which possesseth many till they come to be fully acquainted with the thing of which, and the persons before which, they are to speak, which we see by daily experience. Or, the apostle intends that courage that arises from a good conscience. Those that are careless and unfaithful in the discharge of their duty, guilt makes them timorous; but the good and faithful servant of God enjoys that liberty and courage which faith in the Lord Jesus gives, and without fear discharges all the parts of his office.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly:

I being now in Macedonia, or at Athens, or some parts thereabouts, have wrote to thee whom I left at Ephesus these precepts about the officers of churches, not being sure I shall, but hoping myself soon to come to Ephesus unto thee; which yet he did not, as we read, for he met Timothy at Troas, Acts xx. 5.

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself <sup>o</sup> in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

<sup>o</sup> Eph. 2. 21. <sup>22</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 20.

Or, step.

I do not know how God will dispose of me, though I hope shortly to see thee, and therefore I have written to direct thee how in the mean time thou shouldst carry thyself in the affairs of the church, which I have committed to thee, which is a matter of great moment; for the people which constitute the church of him who is not like the gods of the heathens, a dead man consecrated and made a god, nor a being without life, like their images, but one who hath life in himself and from himself, is the house of God, a people in and amongst whom he dwelleth, and amongst whom he is worshipped; and of whom he hath a great care, and for which he hath a great love, Christ having died for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, Eph. v. 26; and which (as a man doth by his house) he is daily enlarging, beautifying, and adorning with the graces of his Holy Spirit, that (as there, ver. 27) he might present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. Which church is the pillar and ground of the truth, κόλος και ἰδρυμα. We want a good English word whereby to translate the latter of the two words in the Greek, which possibly hath advantaged the great contests about the sense of this text. It comes from ἔδρα, which signifieth a star, and a thing to support, and a seat, the place (say some) in which the idol was set in the pagan temples. Thence this word ἰδρυμα is translated, the underpropper, the establisher, any firm basis upon which a thing standeth or leaneth; so that it is much of the same significancy with the former word, which we rightly translate a pillar, the two things signifying in use the same thing, that which underproppeth and holdeth up another thing, as the pillars do the building, and the basis of the image or statue doth the statue. Pillars also were of ancient use to fasten upon them any public edicts, which princes or courts would have published, and exposed to the view of all; hence the church is called, the pillar and basis, or seal, of truth, because by it the truths of God are published, supported, and defended, and in it they are only to be found as in their proper seat and place; for to it the oracles and mysteries of God are committed, and in it they are exposed to the notice and knowledge of all, as public edicts are upon pillars. But neither that saving truth, nor the faith which we give to it, is established upon the authority of the church, (as the Romanists vainly pretend,) but upon the authority of God the author of it. The church discovers and recommends the truth, but the testimony it gives is not the foundation of its credibility. The universal church (of which the church of Ephesus, over which Timothy had a charge, was a genuine part) is, in the sense before expressed, the pillar and supporter, or seat, of truth.

16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: *God was †manifest in the flesh, *justified in the Spirit, *seen of angels, *preached unto the Gentiles, *believed on in the world, *received up into glory.

<sup>1</sup> John 1. 14. <sup>2</sup> John 1. 2. <sup>3</sup> Gr. manifest. <sup>4</sup> Matt. 3. 16. <sup>5</sup> John 1. 32. <sup>6</sup> 33. & 16. 26. <sup>7</sup> & 16. 8. <sup>8</sup> Rom. 1. 4. <sup>9</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 18. <sup>10</sup> 1 John 5. 6. &c. <sup>11</sup> Matt. 28. 2. <sup>12</sup> Mark 16. 5. <sup>13</sup> Luke 2. 13. & 24. 4. <sup>14</sup> John 20. 12. <sup>15</sup> Eph. 3. 10. <sup>16</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 12. <sup>17</sup> Acts 10. 34. & 13. 46. <sup>18</sup> Gal. 2. 8. <sup>19</sup> Eph. 3. 6. & Rom. 10. 15. <sup>20</sup> Col. 1. 27. <sup>21</sup> 28. ch. 2. 7. <sup>22</sup> Col. 1. 6. 23. <sup>23</sup> c. Luke 24. 51. <sup>24</sup> Acts 1. 19. <sup>25</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 22.

And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: the various use of the particle kai in the Greek, which we translate and, maketh it doubtful what is the force of it here, whether it relates to the truth mentioned in the latter part of the former verse, or shows another reason why Timothy should have a care how he behaved himself in the house of God. If to the former, it is exegetical, and opens what he meant by truth, viz., the mystery of godliness, by which he means the gospel, which is the doctrine of godliness, being that which teacheth how aright to worship God, and walk before him; this he first calls, then proves to be, a mystery, a great mystery. The word is derived from the heathens, who had mysteries of their superstition and idolatrous religion. A mystery signifies a thing sacred and secret. The heathens also had their greater and lesser gods, and their greater and lesser mysteries. Paul calls the gospel, the doctrine of godliness, a great mystery, and says it is confessedly so, or such without controversy; then he proveth it by telling us what it is, and giving us the sum of it. It teacheth us that he who was truly God, God over all, blessed for ever, (as the apostle saith,) was manifested in the flesh; John i. 14, The Word was made flesh. How an infinite nature could be personally united to a finite nature, so as to make one person, is a mystery, and a great mystery. And this God thus manifested in the flesh was justified in the Spirit; either by his Divine nature, (which is here as some think called the Spirit,) by virtue of which he in the flesh wrought many miraculous operations, and when he was buried he rose again from the dead, by which he was justified, that is, undoubtedly proved to be the Son of God. Or, by the Holy Spirit of God, (the Third Person in the holy Trinity,) by whom he was conceived in the womb of the virgin, Luke i. 35. Seen of angels, who declared his conception, Luke i. 32, 33; sang and glorified God when he was born, Luke ii. 10, 11; ministered to him when he was tempted, Matt. iv. 11: who comforted him in his passion, declared his resurrection, Matt. xxviii., and attended his ascension, Acts i. 10. Preached unto the Gentiles: Christ's being preached to the Gentiles was also a mystery, so great, that Peter would not believe it to be the will of God, till he was confirmed in it by a vision, Acts x. This some think is spoken with some reference to the Gentile superstition, who also, (as was said before,) had their greater and lesser mysteries, and to the former would admit no strangers. Believed on in the world: that Christ should, upon the ministry of a few fishermen, and the report the world had received of what Christ did in Judea, be received and embraced by the world as their Saviour, was as great a mystery as any other, especially considering that the doctrine of Christ was as incomprehensible by human reason, as ungrateful to the propensities and inclinations of human nature. Received up into glory: the resurrection of Christ is not mentioned, because necessarily supposed to his ascension, which he mentioneth as the last thing whereby Christ was declared to be God manifested in the flesh.

CHAP. IV

Paul foretelleth and describeth a great apostacy to happen in the latter times, 1—5. He directeth Timothy what doctrines to teach, 6—11; and by what rules to regulate his conduct, so as to save both himself and his hearers, 12—16.

NOW the Spirit *speaketh expressly, <sup>a</sup> John 16. 13. <sup>b</sup> 2 Thess. 2. 3. <sup>c</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 1. &c. that <sup>d</sup> in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed <sup>e</sup> to seducing spirits, <sup>f</sup> and doctrines of devils; <sup>g</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 3. <sup>h</sup> 1 John 2. 18. <sup>i</sup> Jude 4. 16. <sup>j</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 20. <sup>k</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 1. Rev. 16. 14. <sup>l</sup> Dan. 11. 35, 37, 38. Rev. 9. 20.

It was usual with the prophets, when they declared the oracles of God, to assert in the beginning of their revelations, that the Lord hath spoken, Isa. i. 2; Jer. i. 2; Joel i. 1. The apostle in the same manner, in the beginning of his prediction of things future, declares the Spirit speaketh expressly, that is, either clearly revealed it to me, as Acts x. 19, and xiii. 2, thus expressly is opposed to obscurely; for sometimes the revelations given to the prophets were under shadows and figures in divers manners, but the Spirit discovered in a most intelligible manner what seducers should come in the church, &c. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly; either hath inwardly revealed it to my Spirit, as Acts x. 19; xiii. 2, or, (which is more probable,) because the verb is in the present tense, λέγει, it saith it in the written word, which must be in the Old Testament, for the New was not at this time written: but then the question is, where the Holy Ghost hath expressly in the Old Testament spoken of the apostacy of the latter times. Our famous Mede answers, in Dan. xii., where from ver. 30 is a plain prophecy of the Roman empire, and ver. 35—39, of antichrist, where it is said, Some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, &c.; and he speaks of a king, that shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods.—Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god, but magnify himself above all. Where that learned man thinks is an excellent description of the Roman empire, their various victories, successes, declinations, and mutations, and amongst other things, ver. 36, that they should cast off their old pagan idolatry, and after that make a defection from the Christian faith, and not regard marriage, (called there the desire of women.) nor indeed truly regard any god. This the apostle saith should be in the latter times. The last times (saith the afore-mentioned famous author) are the times of Christ's kingdom, which began in the time of the Roman empire; during which time this Epistle was written, where the apostle speaking of time yet to come, the latter times by him mentioned must needs be the latter part of the last times, which he saith began in the ruin of the Roman empire, upon which followed the revealing of antichrist, that wicked one, mentioned 2 Thess. ii. 7. Concerning these times, the Spirit said expressly, that some should in them depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits; by which some understand the devils themselves; others, false teachers, or false doctrines, which are afterwards mentioned, called doctrines of devils, by which some understand doctrines suggested by devils, or published by the cunning and art of devils. But others think that by doctrines of devils here are not to be understood doctrines so published, but doctrines concerning devils; and that the meaning is, that in the last times the pagan doctrine concerning demons should be restored. The pagan demons were an inferior sort of gods, a kind of middle beings between their highest gods and men, whose office was to be advocates and mediators between men and the highest gods, because they judged it was not lawful for men to come to the highest gods immediately; these they worshipped by images, even as the papists at this day make use of and worship angels and saints. See more fully what Mr. Mede saith upon this argument in his own book, and in Mr. Pool's Latin Synopsis upon this text; and what he saith seems very probably the sense of this text, especially considering the two doctrines mentioned ver. 3.

<sup>e</sup> Matt. 7. 15. <sup>f</sup> Eph. 4. 15. <sup>g</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 15. <sup>h</sup> Rom. 16. 18. <sup>i</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 3. <sup>j</sup> 1 Tim. 2. 15. <sup>k</sup> Rom. 14. 4. <sup>l</sup> 1 Cor. 10. 30.

2 *Speaking lies in hypocrisy; <sup>h</sup>having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

The words, as translated by us, are very difficult; for the word which we translate speaking lies, being the genitive case, will neither agree with spirits nor doctrines, in the former verse, they being both the dative: but neither is our translation agreeable to the Greek, which is thus, In or through the hypocrisy of such as speak lies, and of such as have a conscience seared with a hot iron; which doubtless is the sense; so the words explain the manner how they were seduced to apostacy, viz. through the hypocrisy or dissimulation of men that speak lies, and had consciences numbened, and mortified, as it were cauterized and seared with a hot iron. By their hypocrisy he characterizes seducers, uncertain, false men, that regarded not what they said, but made a show and appearance of piety, when indeed they had no sense of piety in them. By men whose consciences were seared with a hot iron, he means persons so far from any sense of piety, that they were hardened to any degree of iniquity: and indeed by both terms he excellently expresseth such persons as generally they are who seduce others to false doctrine, they could not do it without some show or pretence of piety, they would not do it if they had any true sense of it; and by both terms he too well expresseth those that in our days seduce men to the doctrines concerning demons, and abstaining from marriage and meats, which are those doctrines he alone instanceth in.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 28, 36, 38. <sup>h</sup> Col. 2. 21, 21. <sup>i</sup> Heb. 13. 4. <sup>j</sup> Rom. 14. 4. <sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 8. 6. <sup>l</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 29. <sup>m</sup> 2 Cor. 9. 3. <sup>n</sup> Rom. 14. 4. <sup>o</sup> 1 Cor. 10. 30.

3 *Forbidding to marry, <sup>h</sup>and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created <sup>h</sup>to be received <sup>h</sup>with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

Forbidding to marry: the Greek is, hindering to marry, but that might be by forbidding it by a law under a severe penalty. There are great disputes whom the apostle speaketh of, to find out which it is considerable, 1. That the apostle speaketh of a time that was then to come; 2. Of some who had it in their power to hinder it: which will make the prophecy hardly applicable to any but the Romish synagogue, to be sure, not so applicable; for though there were some persons before them that condemned marriages, yet as they were but a small, inconsiderable party, so they were persons that had no power to hinder marriage by any penal laws, nor any that did it in such hypocrisy under a pretence of piety, when he who runs may read that they do it to maintain the grandeur of their ecclesiastical hierarchy. How applicable therefore soever this might be to the Ebionites, and those that followed Saturninus and Marcion, and the Encratites, (which the papists contend for,) it certainly more nearly concerns the papists themselves, who more universally forbade them to their clergy, and were the first that had a power to hinder them, and fell into much later times than any of the others. And commanding to abstain from meats; to abstain from some meats; and this also they should teach in hypocrisy, i. e. under a pretence of piety. This every whit as well agrees to the Romish synagogue as the other, whose prohibitions of flesh are sufficiently known. Mr. Mede is very confident that the Holy Ghost doth here describe the popish monks, and those that gave rules to those orders. Which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving; which meats, as well as other, God hath created for the use of man, giving him a liberty to kill and eat, only we ought to receive them with thanksgiving; which confirmeth our religious custom both of begging a blessing upon our meat before we eat, and returning thanks to God when we have eaten, for which also we have our Saviour's example, Matt. xiv. 19; xv. 36. Of them which believe and know the truth: not that such as believe not and are ignorant of the truth may not eat, but they have not so good and comfortable a right to the creatures as believers, Tit. i. 15; and they know and understand their liberty to eat of those things, which others deprive themselves of by their superstitious opinions and constitutions.

4 For <sup>h</sup>every creature of God is good, <sup>h</sup>and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving;

For every creature of God is good; not only good in itself, as all was which God made, Gen. i., but lawful to be used, pure, Tit. i. 15, there is no uncleanness in it. And nothing to be refused; and therefore nothing upon that account is to be refused, as unclean and defiling. If it be received with thanksgiving; only it must be made use of in such a manner as in and by the use of it we may glorify, and express our thankfulness to, God.

5 For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

For it is sanctified: sanctified in this place signifies made pure, or lawful to be used. By the word of God; by the gospel, which declares it so, Acts x. 15; or by God's ordination, which hath so determined it. And prayer; and prayer to God for a blessing upon it.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, <sup>m</sup>nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained.

If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things; if by thy preaching publicly, and by thy more private instructions of Christians at Ephesus, thou teachest them these things. Thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ; thou shalt faithfully discharge the office of him who is a servant of Jesus Christ, not of men merely. The ministers of the gospel are in the first place ministers or servants to Christ. Secondly, ministers (that is, servants) of the church; as a nobleman's servant employed to distribute wages or meat to inferior servants, is a minister to those to whom he so distributeth food or wages, but in the first place a servant to his lord. Nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine; such a minister of the gospel ought to be one bred up in the true faith, and persevering in it. Whereunto thou hast attained; whereto thou art not a stranger, only I would have thee go on and persevere in it.

7 But <sup>n</sup>refuse profane and old wives' fables, and <sup>o</sup>exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables; all impertinent

<sup>n</sup> ch. 1. 4. <sup>o</sup> 6. 20. <sup>p</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 16. <sup>q</sup> 23. 4. 4. <sup>r</sup> Tit. 1. 14. <sup>s</sup> Heb. 5. 14.

discourses, which tend nothing to promote either faith or holiness, which he disdainfully calls old wives' fables, tales of a tub, as we say, discourses having no bottom in the word of God, are not fit for pulpits. And exercise thyself rather unto godliness; let thy constant study be things that may promote godliness, impart those things unto people, and live up to them in thy conversation.

1 Cor. 8. 8. Col. 2. 23. 1 Cor. for a little time. q ch. 6. 6. r Pa. 37. 4. & 64. 11. & 112. 2. 3. & 145. 19. Matt. 6. 33. & 19. 29. Mark 10. 30. Rom. 8. 26.

8 For<sup>b</sup> bodily exercise profiteth little: <sup>a</sup>but godliness is profitable unto all things, <sup>c</sup>having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

For bodily exercise profiteth little; bodily discipline, lying in abstaining from certain meats, keeping set fasts, watchings, lying upon the ground, going barefoot, wearing sack-cloth or haircloth, abstaining from wine or marriage, is of little advantage, the mind and soul of man is not bettered by them: the apostle doth not altogether despise these things, some of which may be useful (moderately used) to make us more fit for prayer, especially upon solemn occasions; but these are not things wherein religion is to be put, and alone they are of no avail. But godliness is profitable unto all things; but godliness, which lieth in the true worship and service of God, out of a true principle of the fear of God and faith in him; or (more generally) holiness of life in obedience to God's commandments, is of universal advantage; having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come; not from any meritoriousness in it, but from the free grace of God, which hath annexed to it not only the promises of health, peace, and prosperity, and all good things while we live here upon the earth, but also the promises of salvation and eternal happiness when this life shall be determined.

ch. 1. 15. 9 This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance.

This saying about the advantage of godliness is true, and worthy to be received of all men. See the notes on chap. i. 15, where the same words are applied to the great proposition of the gospel. That Christ came into the world to save sinners. That Christ came into the world to save sinners, and that such sinners as from ungodly will become godly, and persevere in the practice of godliness, shall be happy in this life, and saved in the life to come, are two faithful and remarkable sayings, worthy the acceptance of all reasonable creatures.

1 Cor. 4. 11, 12. u ch. 6. 17. x Pa. 36. 6. & 107. 2, 6, &c.

10 For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.

If we did not believe this as a faithful saying, that godliness is profitable for all things, and trust in God, who liveth for ever, to see to the fulfilling of it, to what purpose should we labour and suffer reproach as we do; labouring in the work of God, suffering reproach in the cause of God, and for living godly lives, worshipping God according to his will, and denying ourselves in sensual satisfactions and sensible enjoyments, that we might fulfil the law of Christ? Object. But, will some say, how then is godliness profitable for all things, how doth the faithfulness of the promises for this life annexed to godliness appear, if those that profess it must labour and suffer reproach? Solut. Labour for God is a reward to itself, our honour, not our burden, his service is perfect freedom: the promises of this life, annexed to godliness, are not promises of sensual rest and ease, but of inward peace, satisfaction, and support of other things, only with a reserve to the Divine wisdom and judgment, so far forth as our heavenly Father shall see it fit for his glory and our good; yet they are not vain, for God, who is the Saviour, that is, the Preserver, of all men, the Preserver of man and beast, as the psalmist speaketh, is in a more especial manner the Saviour of those that believe, Psal. xxxiii. 18, 19. This seemeth rather to be the sense of the text, than to understand it of eternal salvation, for so God is not the actual Saviour of all; besides that the text seemeth to speak of a work proper to the Father, rather than to the Son.

ch. 6. 2. 11 These things command and teach. All the things before mentioned, in this or the former parts of this Epistle, he willeth Timothy to make the matter of his sermons and other discourses.

12 Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

Let no man despise thy youth; so carry thyself in thy office, as not to give occasion to any to despise thee because thou art but a young man. But be thou an example of the believers: which thou wilt do if thou so livest as to be a just pattern unto Christians, imitable by them in word, in thy common and ordinary discourse, (for he speaks not of his being a pattern only to other ministers, but to believers in the generality,) not talking frothily or profanely, or idly and impertinently, but seriously and gravely, but things that are good, to the use of edifying, that it may administer grace to the hearers. In conversation; and in all thy converse with men behaving thyself justly, and comely, and gravely. In charity; performing also to all, all offices of charity and brotherly love. In spirit; in zeal, and warmth of spirit, truly inflamed with the love of Christ, and for his glory. In faith; in a steady confession and profession of the doctrine of the gospel; and in purity; in all cleanness and holiness of life and conversation. This is the way for the ministers of the gospel not to be despised: let them use what other methods they will, they will find what God said of Hophni and Phinehas will be made good, 1 Sam. ii. 30, Them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed; nor will any titles, or habits, or severities secure them from that curse, which will cleave to them.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

Till I come, and after that time too, but then I will further instruct thee. Give attendance to reading; be diligent in reading the Holy Scriptures, both for thine own instruction and for the edification of others. To exhortation; to exhort others to their duty there described, or to comfort others from arguments fetched thence. To doctrine; to instruct others in the principles of religion.

14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee; neglect neither the ability which God hath given thee for the discharge of the office of the ministry, nor the office to which God hath called thee; neither the improvement of them, nor the use, exercise, and discharge of them or it. Which was given thee by prophecy; remember that they were given thee by the revelation of the Divine will, or by the extraordinary influence of the Spirit of God; and the laying on of the hands of the presbytery was a declaration of it; God also (as usually when he calls any to any special work) calling thee to the work of the ministry then also, fitting and enabling thee for the discharge of it.

15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all.

Meditate upon these things; Μελέτα, let these things be the business of thy thoughts, and take care of them. Give thyself wholly to them; be in them, (so it is in the Greek,) let them be thy whole work, not thy work by the by, but thy chief and principal business. That thy profiting may appear to all; that so, as all men's gifts improve by study and exercise, thine also may so improve, that all men may take notice of the improvement of them.

16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

Take heed unto thyself; take heed how thou livest, and orderest thy life, that it may be exemplary. And unto the doctrine; and take heed also both that thou teachest, and what thou teachest. Continue in them; and do both these things not for a time, but constantly. For in doing this thou

1 Cor. 16. 11. Tit. 2. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 2.

b 2 Tim. 1. 6. c ch. 1. 18. d Acts 6. 6. & 9. 17. & 13. 3. & 19. 6. ch. 5. 22. e 2 Tim. 1. 6.

f Or, in all things.

g Acts 20. 28. f Ezek. 33. 2. g Ilom. 11. 14. 1 Cor. 9. 22. Jan. 5. 20.

shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee; thus thou shalt do what in thee lieth to save thine own soul, and also to save the souls of others to whom thou preachest, or among whom thou conversest.

CHAP. V

Directions to Timothy how to admonish persons of different conditions, 1, 2. Concerning widows, 3—16. Elders, if they do well, are to be doubly honoured, 17, 18; and are not to be censured without full proof, and then openly and impartially, 19—21. A caution not to ordain any one precipitately, 22. Advice respecting Timothy's health, 23. Some men's characters are more easily discerned than those of others, 24, 25.

<sup>a</sup> Lev. 19. 32. REBUKE <sup>a</sup> not an elder, but intreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren;

Rebuke not an elder: it appeareth by the next verse, that the apostle by elder here understandeth not a church officer, but an ancient man. The word translated rebuke is translated too softly; it should be, Rebuke not too roughly, as appears by the opposite phrase, and indeed the word properly signifies to beat or lash. Rebuke him not but with a decent respect to his age. But entreat him as a father; so that thy reprofs may look more like counsels and exhortations than rebukes. And the younger men as brethren; prudence also must be used as to the younger men, ministers in rebuking them should remember that they are brethren, and treat them accordingly, not too imperiously.

2 The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

The elder women as mothers; the same prudence also is to be used to matrons and aged women. The younger as sisters; yea, and to younger women too, considering our relation and equality in Christ. With all purity; only as to them, (considering their sex.) a further gravity and prudence is to be used, that we give no occasion to lust, or unclean motions.

<sup>b</sup> ver. 5, 16. 3 Honour widows <sup>b</sup> that are widows indeed.

Honour widows; give a respect to such as have lost their husbands, with a regard to that honourable estate of marriage in which they have been formerly, and do not only pay them a due respect, but afford them a maintenance, Acts vi. 1. That are widows indeed: who are widows indeed he openeth further, ver. 5; such as are not only pious, but desolate, as the Greek word for a widow implies, according to its derivation.

4 But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew <sup>c</sup> piety at home, and <sup>c</sup> to requite their parents: <sup>d</sup> for that is good and acceptable before God.

But if any widow have children or nephews: by the widows indeed, mentioned by the apostle, ver. 3, he here showeth that he meant women that not only wanted husbands, but children, or grandchildren, or any near kindred that were Christians, and in a capacity to relieve them; but if any widows had any such near relations, the apostle willeth that they should be taught to show piety at home; τὸν ἰδίον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν, word for word, to worship their own house, or to be religious or godly toward their own house; that is, to show a respect or pagan homage to their own house. For worship is nothing but a respect, honour, or homage paid to another in consideration of his or her excellency and superiority; only the use of this word, which is the Greek word generally used to express religion and godliness by, lets us know that religion and godliness is vainly pretended to any that have of this world's goods, and relieve not those from whom they are descended, (for the word ἐκγονα signifies persons descended from another, whether in the first generation or no,) if they be in want, and stand in need of their assistance. And to requite their parents: nor is this an act of charity, but justice, a just requital of our parents for their care of us, and pains with us in our education. For that is good and acceptable before God; and this is good, just, decent, and commanded by God, and acceptable in the sight of God, for the precept, Honour thy father and mother, is the first commandment with promise, Eph. vi. 2. By the way, that precept is excellently expounded by this text, both as to the act commanded, which this text teacheth is to be extended to maintenance as well as compliments; and as to the object, viz. all those as to whom we are ἐκγονα, descended from, whether immediate parents, yea or no.

5 <sup>e</sup> Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and <sup>f</sup> continueth in supplications and prayers <sup>g</sup> night and day.

Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate: the apostle here opens the term of widow indeed, ver. 3; one that is μειονομητιν one that is made alone, destitute of such as ought to help her, a husband, or children; and being so, trusteth in God; is a believer, reposing her trust and confidence in God; and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day; spendeth her time religiously in prayer and acts of devotion. Not that other persons that are poor and desolate should not be regarded and taken care for, but the church is not so concerned in them, at least as a church; the magistrate ought to take care of them, and all good Christians, being men as well as Christians, ought to consider them; but in the first place, and principally, they are to take care of such widows, such desolate persons.

6 <sup>h</sup> But she that liveth <sup>i</sup> in pleasure is dead while she liveth.

Ὡ δὲ σπαταλώσα, she that is wanton, James v. 5, she that spends her money in needless costs, as to meat, drink, or apparel, is spiritually dead, dead in sin, while she liveth a temporary voluptuous life, in vanity, and luxury, and impurity of flesh and spirit.

7 <sup>j</sup> And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless.

In the discharge of thy ministry declare these things, that all Christians, women especially, may be blameless.

8 But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own <sup>k</sup> house, <sup>l</sup> he hath denied the faith, <sup>m</sup> and is worse than an infidel.

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house: here is a manifest distinction betwixt his own, ἰδίον, and his own household, οἰκίον, they are distinguished by terms in the Greek, and as to the care which men and women ought to extend to them. By his own he means his relations, all of a man's family or stock; by his own household, he seemeth to mean those who cohabit with him. The apostle saith that he who is careless of providing for the former, (so far as he is able,) but especially for the latter, hath denied the Christian faith, that is, in the practice of it, though in words he professeth it; he liveth not up to the rule of the gospel, which directeth other things. And is worse than an infidel; and is worse than a heathen, that believeth not; because many good-natured heathens do this by the light of nature, and those who do it not, yet are more excusable, being strangers to the obligation of the revealed law of God in the case.

9 Let not a widow be <sup>n</sup> taken into the number under threescore years old, <sup>o</sup> having been the wife of one man,

Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old; what number he meaneth is very doubtful, whether he means the number of deaconesses, or the number of such as should receive alms from the church. Those who translate καταλεγεισθω here chosen seem to favour the former. They say, that in the primitive church there being a want of hospitals and public places for the reception of people deceased in their estates, &c., they chose some old widows to take care of the poorer sort of women when they were sick, and these also were themselves maintained by the church, and served the church in that charitable employment. Whether this number, or the more general number of widows relieved by the church, he meant, the caution of their age was very prudent: 1. Be-

<sup>e</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 32.
<sup>f</sup> Luke 2. 37.
<sup>g</sup> 18. 1.
<sup>g</sup> Acts 28. 7.

<sup>h</sup> Jam. 5. 5.
<sup>i</sup> Or, delicately.

<sup>j</sup> 1 ch. 1. 3. & 4. 11. & 6. 17.

<sup>k</sup> 1 Sa. 56. 7.
<sup>l</sup> Gal. 6. 10.
<sup>m</sup> Or, kindred.
<sup>l</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 5.
<sup>m</sup> Tit. 1. 16.
<sup>m</sup> Mat. 18. 17.

<sup>l</sup> Or, kindness.
<sup>c</sup> See Gen. 45. 10, 11.
<sup>d</sup> Matt. 15. 4.
<sup>e</sup> Eph. 6. 1, 2.
<sup>d</sup> ch. 2. 3.

<sup>n</sup> Or, chosen.
<sup>n</sup> Luke 2. 36.
<sup>o</sup> ch. 3. 2.

cause younger widows could work for their living, and needed not to burden the church. 2. Because under those years they probably might marry again, and so become useless to the church. 3. Because after those years there could be no great fear of scandal from their wantonness and incontinency. Having been the wife of one man: this condition seems harder to be understood; for though in former times, amongst the Jews and pagans, men were allowed more wives than one at the same time, yet no laws ever allowed the woman liberty of more husbands. 2. To understand it of women that had not been twice married, their first husbands being dead, seems hard, no law of God forbidding the second marriages of men and women successively. 3. Some therefore rather understand it of such widows as were become wives to second husbands, the first not being dead, but parted from them legally, either through their own fault, or through their voluntary desertion. This the apostle seems to forbid, to avoid reproach and scandal to the church.

10 Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

Well reported of for good works; if she be a person of repute for actions concerning others which are consonant to the will and commandment of God. If she have brought up children well, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If she have lodged strangers; if when persons that are Christians have come from other places, either driven from them, or upon their occasion, and could not amongst pagans find a convenient inn, her house have been open to them. If she have washed the saints' feet; if she have been ready to do the meanest offices for the servants of God, of which this washing of feet was one in great use in those hot countries, where they had not the benefit of shoes, either to cool, or refresh, or cleanse them. If she have relieved the afflicted; if to her ability she have relieved such as have been in any kind of distress. If she have diligently followed every good work; if though it may be she have not had ability, or opportunity, to do all the good works she would, yet she have diligently followed them, doing what she could;—let such a one be put into the catalogue of those whom the church will relieve, and honour, and employ.

11 But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry;

But the younger widows refuse: by the younger widows the apostle seems (by the last words of this verse) not to mean those that were under threescore, but the younger sort of widows, not past child-bearing; he would not have those (that is, being under no extraordinary circumstances of sickness, or lameness, or the want of their senses) be maintained at the charge of the church, because they were able to labour; nor yet to be taken into any employment relating to the church. For when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ; καταστρηλιάσασαι τῷ Χριστῷ. How the Vulgar Latin comes to translate this, wax wanton in Christ, I neither understand whether with respect to grammar or sense. Erasmus translates the verb, when they have committed whoredom; but Rev. xviii. 9 confute this sense, where we translate it, lived deliciously, (being without the preposition κατὰ.) which certainly better expresseth the sense, as also doth our translation, wax wanton; it properly signifies either the lustiness, or the headstrong temper, of beasts, that wax fat. Against Christ, is against the rule of the gospel, and their profession of Christ; or they disdain the office of serving the saints, as too mean, and laborious, and sin against Christ, in whose name, and for whose glory, and to whose members, the service was to be performed. And then they will marry, and so put themselves into an incapacity to serve the church in the place of widows.

12 Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

This sentence is not without its difficulties: here are two questions: 1. What is meant by κρίμα, which we both here and elsewhere translate damnation. 2. How they cast off their first faith. Many think the Greek word by us translated damnation, ought to have had a softer sense, it being certainly capable of it. Some think it signifies here no more than guilt, or a blot; or others, a public infamy; others, the judgment of good men against them. But it may be we cannot so well determine this without understanding what is meant by their first faith, which they are here said to have cast off: by which some understand their profession of Christianity; or others, their promise or engagement to the church, not to marry. The latter sense supposeth that all those widows that were taken into the ministry of the church before mentioned, promised that they would keep themselves unmarried, which is a most groundless supposition. I do rather think that by their first faith, he means their first or former profession of Christianity; which was a crime that did expose them not only to the judgment and censure of sober Christians, but to eternal damnation. I shall offer my own sense of this text thus: it is certain these Christians were lilies among thorns, a small handful amongst a far greater number of pagans; and it is not improbable, that some younger widows, out of a desire to marry, might marry to pagans, and be by them tempted to apostacy from the Christian profession; upon which the apostle orders, that none under sixty years of age should be henceforth taken into the ministry of the church, lest doing such a thing when they were under that character, it should be a greater scandal. This seems the more probable from ver. 15, where the apostle adds, for some are already turned aside after Satan.

13 And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not.

The apostle here gives some other reasons, why he would not have widows too young taken into the ministry of the church. And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; they being young, and having no business at home, nor any husbands to conduct and govern them, are subject to be gadding up and down; and not only idle, but tattlers also; and to be tattling idly and impertinently, and that not only of their own, but others' concerns; and busybodies, interesting themselves in the matters of other persons and families; speaking things which they ought not, and in the multitude of words, folly being never wanting, they are prone to speak things which they ought not: from whence we may observe, that nothing more becometh Christians than a gravity and composedness of behaviour and speech, a government of their tongues, and considering beforehand well what they speak.

14 I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

I will therefore that the younger women marry: I will, here, must not be interpreted into an absolute precept, (for the apostle would never have made that necessary by his precept which God had left indifferent,) but in a limited sense, viz. if they have not the gift of continency, if they cannot restrain themselves from such scandalous courses, let them marry; bear children, and not only bring forth children, but take care of their education; guide the house, and take care of the government of families within doors (which is the woman's proper province); give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully; and give no occasion to Jews or pagans (the adversaries of Christian religion) to speak of the church, or any particular members of it, reproachfully, as living beneath the rules of morality and decency.

15 For some are already turned aside after Satan.

We have scandals enough already, we had need take as good heed as we can that we have no more; some young women already are apostatized (and, possibly, for the sake or by the occasion of such marriages) to Judaism or paganism; or, it may be, to a loose and lewd course of life, not suiting the profession of Christianity.

o Acts 16. 15.
Heb. 13. 2.
1 Pet. 4. 3.
p Gen. 16. 4.
e 19. 2.
Luke 7. 39.
44. John 13.
6. 14.

q 2 Thes. 3. 11.

r 1 Cor. 7. 9.
s ch. 6. 1.
Tit. 2. 8.
t Gr. for their rearing.

16 If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the Church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

t ver. 3, 5

If any man or woman that believeth have widows; if any men or women that are Christians have any widows that are nearly related to them, if themselves be able, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; and not turn off that natural duty which they owe to their parents, or near relations, to relieve them, to the church, which hath others enough to look after, and upon which there lies only a moral and Christian obligation. That it may relieve them that are widows indeed; that so the alms of the church may go to relieve those only who are perfectly desolate, having neither husbands nor any other near relations to provide for them.

u Rom. 12. 5.
1 Cor. 9. 10.
14. Gal. 6. 6.
Phil. 2. 29.
1 Thess. 5.
12. 13. Heb.
13. 7, 17.
x Acts 28. 10.

17 Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

Who these elders are here intended hath been a great question: it is plain they are not such only as are preachers. They are such as are worthy of double honour. The learned Mr. Pool, in his Latin Synopsis, giveth us an account of the most opinions about it: 1. Some judging them some of the elder sort of the members of the church, joining with the ministers in the government of the church, but not meddling with preaching, or administering sacraments. 2. Some judging by elders here are meant such as had been ministers, but being aged were superannuated. 3. Others understanding by it the civil magistrates; which seemeth of all other opinions least probable, because at this time there were no such members of the Christian church. 4. Others think that deacons are here by that term understood, who being church officers have the name of elders given to them. 5. Others understand by elders the ordinary pastors of churches, that resided with their flocks, in opposition to apostles and evangelists: this seemeth less probable, because there were no such in the primitive church but did labour in the word and doctrine. 6. Others think that some such are meant, as were not so fit for preaching, but yet administered the sacraments, prayed with the church, and privately admonished exorbitant members; but we shall want a good proof, either from Scripture or other authority, of any such officers in the primitive church. I shall not determine which of these opinions is rightest, but leave the reader to his own judgment. Whoever are here meant by elders are declared worthy of double honour; by which is understood either abundant honour, or else (as some say) respect and reverence, and also maintenance. Especially they who labour in the word and doctrine; but especially such as take pains in preaching the gospel.

y Deut. 25. 4.
1 Cor. 9. 9.
z Lev. 19. 13.
Deut. 24. 14.
16. Matt. 10.
10. Luke 10.
7.

18 For the Scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward.

This verse maketh it evident that maintenance is part of the double honour that is due to such as labour in the word and doctrine in the first place; and not to them alone, but to any such as are employed in the rule and government of the church. The apostle had made use of Deut. xxv. 4 to the same purpose, 1 Cor. ix. 9: neither of these texts conclude the duty of elders to take maintenance, but the duty of those who are members of churches to give it them, which yet they may refuse, as Paul himself did, if either the people's or minister's circumstances call for or will allow such a thing.

† Or, under.
‡ Deut. 19.
15.

19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses.

Against an elder; whether an elder in years or in office, though the latter being the persons formerly spoken of, seem here principally intended. Receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses; that is, not to proceed to any judicial inquiry upon it, Deut. xvii. 6. This was a law concerning all elders or younger persons, especially in capital causes, but the apostle willeth this to be more specially observed as to officers in the church, whose faithful discharge of their trusts usually more exposeth them to people's querulous tongues.

20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

b Gal. 2. 11.
14. Tit. 1. 13.
c Deut. 13.
11.

Them that sin; that is, that sin publicly and scandalously, so as others have taken notice of it. Rebuke before all; rebuke not privately, by a ministerial correction, but by a public ecclesiastical correction before the whole church. That others also may fear; that the salve may answer the sore, and the plaster be as broad as the wound; and that others may be afraid to do the like. This end of the punishment agreeth with that mentioned Deut. xiii. 11.

21 I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

d ch. 6. 13.
2 Tim. 2. 14.
& 4. 1.

† Or, without prejudice.

I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things: by these things may be understood the whole of what went before, or what followeth. I judge it most proper to refer it to all the precepts foregoing in this Epistle, which evidenceth them to be things which he had received from the Lord, not what he directed without any express notice of the will of God as to them. This is evident by his grave and severe charge to Timothy to observe them, for he chargeth him to observe them as in the presence of God and Christ, and calleth the good angels to be witnesses, both of his faithfulness, in giving him this charge, and of Timothy's faithfulness or unfaithfulness, according as he should observe or neglect the things given him in charge: he calls the angels elect, unquestionably in opposition to the evil and reprobate angels. Without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality: he requires the doing of them without respect to any persons, rich or poor, friends or foes; partiality no way becoming a judge in any cause, who ought to hold the balance even, not inclining it any way, but judging things and not persons. Some of the things before mentioned may seem of too minute a consideration for the apostle to lay such a stress upon, or God to give him particular direction in; but the things are not so much to be considered as the end of the precepts, which was the upholding the true honour and reputation of the church, which is a very great thing; and supposing the things given in charge to have any tendency of that nature, they must not be judged small.

22 Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

e Acts 6. 6.
& 13. 3.
ch. 4. 14.
2 Tim. 1. 6.
f 2 John 11.

By Lay hands suddenly on no man, is certainly to be understood, Do thou suddenly set no man apart to any ecclesiastical employment. Laying on of hands was but an external ceremony used in blessing, Gen. xlviii. 14, 15, and in the conferring of power upon persons, Numb. xxvii. 18; Deut. xxxiv. 9. In the New Testament we find this rite used: in prayer upon healing the sick, Mark xvi. 18; Acts xxviii. 8; in blessing, Mark x. 16; in conferring the gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts xix. 6; in ordination, or setting persons apart to some ecclesiastical employment, chap. iv. 14; Acts vi. 6; and being so used, it is sometimes put for the whole action. This the apostle forbids Timothy to do suddenly, that is, without a first proof of the person's fitness for his work, chap. iii. 10, both with respect to his knowledge, and to his holiness of conversation. Neither be partaker of other men's sins: this participation of other men's sin ought to be taken heed of in the whole course of our conversation, but it seemeth here to be especially forbidden with reference to what was before spoken of, viz. the setting men apart for or putting them into any ecclesiastical employment; he who puts into the ministry any erroneous or ignorant persons, or any persons of a lewd conversation, makes himself guilty of all the harm they do, if he hath not first taken a due and reasonable proof of them, but hath laid hands upon them suddenly. Amongst other ways by which we interest ourselves in others' guilt, one is, by not hindering it, having power so to do. He, or they, whom it lies upon to admit, or not admit, men into the ministry, have a power to refuse them in case upon proof of them they do not find them apt to teach, or fit for the ministration they are to undertake, or such for holiness of life as God requireth: God by his word declaring what such persons ought to be, and commanding him or them first to prove such persons, and to lay hands on none suddenly, hath invested him or them with such a power, of which man cannot deprive them. Keep thyself pure: the purity here mentioned, is comprehensive of that chastity which some would have the word here signify, but it is most reasonable to understand it here with relation to what went before, viz. partaking of other men's sins; If thou canst not keep the church pure, but ignorant or erroneous persons, or sots, will get into the church, yet let them not get in through thy hands, keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.

Drink no longer water; not wholly, as many did in those countries, and Timothy probably did, not because he was not able to buy wine, but religiously, as a piece of discipline to keep under the flesh. But use a little wine; but mix some wine with the water. For thy stomach's sake; to help thy digestion. And thine often infirmities; in regard of thy weakness and frequent infirmities.

24 Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.

The sense of this verse depends upon the term κρίσιον, which we translate judgment, it being doubtful whether it is to be understood of the judgment of God, or the judgment of men in ecclesiastical judicatories. If we understand the words of the judgment of God, the sense is this: Some men's sins are punished in this life, before their persons come before God's judgment-seat; others are more private and concealed, the punishment of which follows after. But this interpretation must suppose Paul here to run into another argument, differing from what he had before spoken upon, which though it be not unusual with the apostle, yet there being no need we should say he doth so in this place, I rather incline to think, that by judgment is in this place meant the judgment of the church, as to persons fit to be trusted with any part of the ministry of it: Some men (saith the apostle) are open, lewd, scandalous persons, whose erroneousness, or sottish life, hath been manifest before they offer themselves to the church's judgment, to be put into the office of elders or deacons; concerning these thy way is plain, admit them not. Others discover not the erroneousness of their principles, nor the impetuosity of their lusts, before they have obtained what they aim at, and are got into office; for these, they must fall under thy judgment, when they do discover what they are, and turn them out again.

25 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

In like manner some men's holy life and conversation hath been so evident, that there needs little judgment concerning them; and for others, under a due government they cannot be long concealed, but by thy due management of and vigilance in thy office they will soon be discovered, by their publishing their erroneous principles, and the breaking out of their lusts into enormous acts, so as they will soon fall under thy censure. Or else thus: The good works of some whose life hath not been so exemplary, but yet such as in charity thou mayst judge them to have the root of the matter in them, (if thou be not mistaken,) cannot be long hid, so as thou shalt soon see what they are, and accordingly know how to behave thyself to them. Thus I should choose rather to interpret this text than concerning the judgment of God, who sometimes rewards good works presently, and always rewards them certainly, either in this life or that which is come.

CHAP. VI

The duty of servants, 1, 2. Those who teach not according to the apostle's doctrine are to be avoided, as corrupters of Christianity, 3-5. The gain of godliness with content, 6-8. The evil of covetousness, 9, 10. What Timothy is to flee, and what to follow and perform, 11-16. A charge to the rich not to be proud and confident in their riches, but to be beneficent and liberal, 17-19. Timothy is enjoined to adhere to the true faith, and to shun profane and vain controversies, 20, 21.

LET as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

Let as many servants as are under the yoke; under the yoke of servitude, not being manumised, or made free. Count their own masters worthy of all honour; abundant honour: let Christian servants give their masters, instead of less, double the honour which pagan servants do. That the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed; for the credit of the gospel, and for the honour of God; that none may say that religion teacheth servants any disobedience, or breaketh the bands of civil relations: but on the contrary, that it obligeth professors to a more faithful and full discharge of such duties, servants to be the best of servants, &c.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

Some Christians were servants to Jews or pagans, who both came under the gospel notion of believers; as to these the apostle had given directions in ver. 1. Others served masters and mistresses that were Christians. The apostle, not ignorant of Satan's devices, foresaw that the former would be under a temptation to neglect and despise their masters or mistresses, because they were idolaters, or of a false religion, enemies to the gospel; and the latter under a temptation not to be so diligent and serviceable as they should be, because their governors in a spiritual sense were their equals, their brethren and sisters. The apostle here declares, that the rules of the gospel neither allow the one nor the other: as to the former he had spoken; nor, saith he, let those that have masters or mistresses that are Christians despise them, by which he means, not be equally obedient or serviceable to them, because there is a spiritual equality or relation betwixt them. But rather do them service, looking upon this as a further obligation upon them. Because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit; because they are believers, such as love our common Lord, and are beloved of him, and such as all good Christians ought to love, being partakers of the gift of God, Christ Jesus, and the great benefit of redemption through his blood. These things teach and exhort; and he willeth Timothy to teach the Christians at Ephesus that this was the will of God, and accordingly to call upon them for an obedience to it.

3 If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

If any man teach otherwise; if there be any person who either more publicly or more privately shall take upon him to instruct people otherwise. And consent not to wholesome words: what he means by wholesome words his next words show; they are called wholesome because they tend to prevent the sickness of sin, or to cure the soul of its spiritual distempers. Even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; words either spoken by Christ, or from Christ, or tending to his honour and glory, or to the promoting of piety and godliness, or which are according to the rule of godliness.

a Eph. 6. 5.
Col. 3. 22.
Tit. 2. 2.
1 Pet. 2. 18.
h Is. 62. 6.
Rom. 2. 24.
Tit. 2. 5, 8.

c Col. 4. 1.

d Or, believing;
e ch. 4. 11.

e ch. 1. 3.

f ch. 1. 10.

g Tit. 1. 13.

h 4. 3.

i Tit. 1. 9.

g Tit. 1. 9.

1 Or, a fool.
h 1 Cor. 8.2
ch. 1. 7.
i Or, sick.
j ch. 1. 4.
k Tim. 2. 23.
Tit. 3. 2.

4 He is || proud, <sup>h</sup> knowing nothing, but ||doting about <sup>i</sup> questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,

He is proud; τειφόμετα, he is swelled or blown up, i. e. with pride swelling in opinion and conceit of himself, he is a fanatic. Knowing nothing solidly and truly, but doting about questions and strifes of words; is brain-sick about questions of no use, but to make a contention about words. Whereof cometh envy; when he once comes to perceive that others are wiser than he. Strife; for an ignorant person, if proud, can never yield that another knows more than he doth. Railings are commonly the revenges of ignorant sciolists, that would be thought something and are nothing; when they perceive they are outdone by others, then they rail. Evil surmisings, ὑπονοῦσαι when they can in truth say no evil of others, they will uncharitably surmise and suspect evil of them.

k 1 Cor. 11.16. ch. 1. 4.
l Or, Gallings one of another.
m Tit. 1. 11.
n Pet. 2. 3.
o Rom. 16. 17. 2 Tim. 3. 5.

5 <sup>h</sup> Perverse disputings of <sup>i</sup> men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, <sup>m</sup> supposing that gain is godliness: <sup>n</sup> from such withdraw thyself.

Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth; Παραδοξαίευσται, mutual tearings, and gallings of or interfering with one another. The word is applied to horses knocking one foot against another. The word without the preposition παρά signifies school-conflicts by disputations; the preposition added makes it to signify, in an evil sense, disputations of sophisters, not candid for the finding out of truth, but perverse and litigious merely for masteries; which he saith proceeds from men corrupted as to their understanding and judgment. Supposing that gain is godliness; all whose religion is gain of riches or reputation. From such withdraw thyself; with such men have nothing to do, avoid them in thy private converse, and cast them out of the church if their faults be public scandals, and they be contumacious.

p Ps. 37. 16.
q Prov. 15. 16.
r Heb. 8.
s Heb. 13. 5.

6 But <sup>o</sup> godliness with contentment is <sup>s</sup> great gain.

Godliness, the exercise of a true faith in Christ, conjoined with a holy life, is a good revenue of itself, having in it ἀνταρκτίας, a self-sufficiency. He doth not here suppose that godliness can be separated from a contented frame of spirit with that lot which God hath chosen for us, for that cannot be; but as being always attended with a contentation of mind, in which alone lieth true riches, for such men never want enough. A good man, Solomon saith, is satisfied from himself, Prov. xiv. 14; for which reason alone godliness is ποσειδός μέγας, a great annual revenue.

p Job 1. 21.
q Ps. 49. 17.
r Prov. 27. 24.
s Eccles. 5. 15.

7 For <sup>p</sup> we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

This agreeth with Job i. 21, and with experience, and is a potent argument against immoderate desires of having much of this world's goods, or using extravagant actions to obtain them; for when we have got all we can, we have got but a viaticum, something to serve us in our journey, which we must leave when we die, and whether to a wise man or a fool none knoweth, Eccles. ii. 19.

t Gen. 28.20.
u Heb. 13. 5.

8 And <sup>t</sup> having food and raiment let us be therewith content.

If therefore God gives us any thing more than is necessary for us, let us take it thankfully, and use it for God's glory; but if we have no more than is just necessary for us, let us not repine, or murmur, but be content, without murmuring against God, or using any undue means, out of an inordinate desire to get more.

v Prov. 15.27. & 20. 21.
w Eccl. 28. 20.
x Matt. 13. 22.
y Jam. 5. 1.
z ch. 2. 7.
aa ch. 1. 19.

9 But <sup>v</sup> they that will be rich fall into temptation <sup>w</sup> and a snare, and <sup>x</sup> into many foolish and hurtful lusts, <sup>y</sup> which drown men in destruction and perdition.

But; or, for. They that will be rich; they who, out of a covetous and immoderate desire of being rich in this world's goods, will use any arts, and do any unlawful thing, without any just regard to the law of God. Fall into temptation and a snare; fall into many temptations and snares, are exposed to impetuous inclinations and motions to that which is evil, and may and will be snares to their souls. And into many foolish and hurtful lusts; kindling in them many foolish and pernicious desires, contrary to the law of God. Which drown men in destruction and perdition; have a direct tendency to the eternal ruin of their souls, not to be prevented but by the force and powerful grace of God.

10 <sup>w</sup> For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have <sup>x</sup> erred from the faith, <sup>y</sup> and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

For the love of money is the root of all evil: money itself is not evil, but the immoderate love of it, whether discerned in an over-eager desire after it, or an excessive delight in it, is the cause of much evil, both of sin and punishment. Which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith; which money while some too greedily thirsted after, (for though the article be feminine and cannot grammatically agree with ἀγγελίου, which is neuter, yet that doth agree with it as to the sense, being understood in φιλαργυρία, with which the subjunctive article grammatically agreeth,) they have erred, or been seduced, from the faith, that is, the doctrine of the gospel, or profession of Christianity. And pierced themselves through with many sorrows; and exposed themselves to a great many sorrows, which have pierced their very souls, such as cares, troubles for the loss of their estates, &c.

11 <sup>x</sup> But thou, <sup>y</sup> O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

O man of God; that is, O thou minister of God, whose service is not the service of the world. It is a compellation borrowed from the Old Testament, where we find it often applied to such whose work was to reveal the Divine will, 2 Kings i. 9; iv. 40, 42. By giving Timothy this compellation, he mindeth him how much he was concerned to contain the world. Flee these things; flee this eager pursuit of riches. And follow after righteousness; and follow after justice, or the business of a righteous life, in thy conversation with men. Godliness; piety toward God. Faith; the exercise and life of faith. Love; love to God and thy neighbour. Patience; a quiet bearing of injuries. Meekness; a gentleness of spirit, opposed to all rash anger.

12 <sup>y</sup> Fight the good fight of faith, <sup>z</sup> lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, <sup>aa</sup> and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

The fight of faith is our encountering that opposition which we meet with from the world, the flesh, or the devil, for a strenuous defending the doctrine of faith, or making it good by a life suitable to the rule of faith. This is called a good fight, either in opposition to the bad fights of the men of the world in maintenance of their lusts, or the ludicrous fights usual in their public games, or of the intrinsic nobleness and exercise of it, or the good event or issue of it; and Timothy is bid to fight it, by a metaphor either drawn from soldiers, or such as exercise themselves in their games. Lay hold on eternal life; by eternal life is meant a right and title to it, which he calls to him to lay hold on, as is thought, by a metaphor from those that were exercised in their games, and did what they could first to lay hold of the prize proposed to conquerors. Wherunto thou art also called; to which eternal life, or rather to which good fight, thou art called, both by the internal call of God's Spirit, and by thy more external call to the ministry. And hast professed a good profession before many witnesses; and to which thou hast obliged thyself by covenant or promise, made either in thy baptism, or when thou wert set apart to thy ministry, or of which thou hast given a pledge, by thy profession and practice, in the sight of the Christians in Ephesus.

13 <sup>z</sup> I give thee charge in the sight of <sup>aa</sup>

a Drest. 28.
28. 1 Sam.
z. 6. John
5. 21.
f. Mat. 27. 11.
John 18. 37.
Rev. 1. 5. & 3. 14. Or, profession.

God, <sup>d</sup> who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, <sup>e</sup> who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good || confession;

The apostle's care of the church showeth itself in these severe charges laid upon Timothy; though one whom he knew to be a faithful minister, he chargeth him, calling God to witness that he had fulfilled his part in laying this charge upon him. The name he here giveth unto God may possibly have a particular reference to the state of the gospel at that time, the doctrine and profession of which had many enemies, and so it is made use of here to comfort and encourage Timothy. God is called he who quickeneth the dead, Rom. iv. 17; here, he who quickeneth all things. And before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; he proposeth the example of Christ to Timothy, as being the Head of those that witness a good confession.

14 That thou keep this commandment f without spot, unrebukeable, <sup>g</sup> until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ:

The charge is, that he faithfully perform all the duties belonging to him as a Christian and a minister, commissioned from God, in the whole course of his life, that he may not be liable to a just accusation for the neglect of any part of his office. This is enforced by the consideration of the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, that is, in the day of judgment, as the following words make evident. Yet the apostle seems to speak of it, as if Timothy should continue in his ministry till that appearance. But it is manifest by his cautioning the Thessalonians against that false conceit, 2 Thess. ii. 2, 3, that the apostle knew the contrary; for he assures them that that day should not come till many great things enumerated by him should be accomplished. The meaning therefore of the words until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, is the same with our Saviour's command to the angel of the church of Smyrna, Be thou faithful unto death, Rev. ii. 10: for the whole flux of time from the death of any person till the day of judgment makes no alteration in his life; and consequently, whoever is faithful unto the death is so till the appearing of Christ. And there is no motive more powerful to a zealous and faithful discharge of our duty, no excitation more rousing from the security and carelessness of the flesh, than the serious believing consideration of the glorious reward to be dispersed by our Saviour to his faithful servants in that day, and the dreadful condemnation that shall pass upon those who have been careless and negligent in the sacred ministry.

15 Which in his times he shall shew, g who is <sup>h</sup> the blessed and only Potentate, <sup>i</sup> the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

Which in his times he shall show; h Which Christ coming the second time, God in his time, his proper seasons, (so it is in the Greek.) will show. Or, Which appearing of our Lord Jesus God in his time will show; for some Greek copies read the article in the feminine termination, to distinguish the order of the Trinity's working; as the first coming of Christ is made to be from the Father's sending, so is also the second coming. Who is the blessed and only Potentate: God is said to be the only Potentate, because he only hath power in and from himself, by him kings reign; and he is called the blessed Potentate, because he is the fountain of all felicity and happiness. The King of kings, and Lord of lords; that is, the most mighty King and Lord, to whom all other princes are subjects, all other lords are vassals, Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 16. These terms seem here to be applied to the Father, though they agree also to the Son and the Spirit. They are applied to Christ, Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 16.

16 <sup>j</sup> Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; <sup>k</sup> whom no man hath seen, nor can see; <sup>l</sup> to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

Who only hath immortality; of himself; our souls and angels are immortal from the gift of God: or immortality signifies here the same with eternity, or immutability. Dwelling in the light; continually encompassed with a glory that is unspeakable, 1 John i. 5. Which no man can approach unto; to which no man can in this life come nigh. Whom no man hath seen; nor did Moses, or Stephen, or any other, ever see his glory so as to comprehend it, or in the full perfection of it. Nor can see; nor can the sons of men see him with their bodily eyes, or so as to comprehend him in his perfection, though some have with their bodily eyes seen his back parts and appearances, and with their souls have, through his grace, been enabled spiritually to behold him. To whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen: to which immortal, glorious, invisible God belongs, and let there for ever be given, honour and power.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, <sup>m</sup> nor trust in <sup>n</sup> uncertain riches, but in <sup>o</sup> the living God, <sup>p</sup> who giveth us richly all things to enjoy;

Charge them that are rich in this world: those that are rich in grace, and the good things of another life, need not this charge; but there are divers at Ephesus who have great estates in goods, or houses, or lands, and but poor in gracious habits, charge them. That they be not highminded; that their riches do not lift them up into a high conceit or opinion of themselves, which worldly riches often do. Nor trust in uncertain riches; and that they repose no confidence in them, making them their strong city, Prov. x. 15, as if they could secure them from evil, or make them happy. But in the living God; but let them repose their trust in God, who hath life in himself, giveth life unto all other things, and liveth for ever. Who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; and is he who gives us all we have, though it be bought with our penny.

18 That they do good, that <sup>q</sup> they be rich in good works, <sup>r</sup> ready to distribute, || <sup>s</sup> willing to communicate;

That they do good; that is, to others, as they have opportunity. That they be rich in good works; be plentiful in alms-deeds, or more generally in all good works of piety or charity. Ready to distribute; that they be not backward to distribute that of which God hath made them stewards, to those that want. Willing to communicate; but give freely and without grudging, according to their Master's order, as becometh those who are but stewards as to the riches which they have.

19 <sup>t</sup> Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may <sup>u</sup> lay hold on eternal life.

Riches in themselves are but for the present, but there is a use may be made of them for the time to come, if we employ them for the better enabling us to do what God hath commanded us to do, Matt. vi. 20; Luke xii. 33: those acts of obedience to the command of God for the use of our estates, though they can merit nothing, (for what proportion can there be betwixt a few shillings and eternal life?) yet will be a good bottom for us to hope for the time to come. That they may lay hold on eternal life; that God will give us an eternal happiness, not as a reward of debt, but of free grace.

20 O Timothy, <sup>v</sup> keep that which is committed to thy trust, <sup>w</sup> avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust; either the doctrine of the gospel, which ministers ought to keep pure, and without mixture, or the ministerial office; be true and faithful in the discharge of it, preaching Christ and the doctrine of Christ. Avoiding profane and vain babblings; avoid all impertinent discouragements under the notion of preaching, which in thy discharge of that work are the best of them but profane babblings. And oppositions of science falsely so called; avoid also all idle specula-f Phil. 1. 6.

g 1 Thess.
h 13. & 25.

g ch. 11. 17.
h Rev. 17.
i 14. & 19: 18.

j ch. 1. 17.
k Ex. 33. 29.
John 6. 46.
l Eph. 3. 21.
Phil. 4. 20.
John 25.
Rev. 1. 8. &
4. 11. & 7. 12.

m Job 31. 24.
n Ps. 52. 7. &
62. 10.
Mark 10. 24.
Luke 12. 21.
o Cr. the uncertainty of riches.
p Prov. 23. 5.
q 1 Thess.

q Luke 12.
r 21. ch. 5. 10.
Tit. 3. 8.
s Jan. 2. 6.
r Rom. 12.
13.

t Mat. 6. 20.
u Luke 12. 33.
& 16. 9.
v ver. 12.

v 2 Tim. 1.
w Tit. 1. 9.
Rev. 3. 3.
y ch. 1. 4. 6.
& 4. 7.
z 2 Tim. 2. 14.
16. 23. Tit.
1. 14. & 3. 9.

1. 2. ch. 3. 15. & 4. 10. p Acts 14. 17. & 17. 25.

tions, and disputations, no way serving to the end of preaching, and falsely called science.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 1. 6, 19. <sup>b</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 16. 21 Which some professing<sup>a</sup> have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

Which some professing have erred concerning the faith; which kind of science, some pretending and boasting of, studying to show themselves learned and subtle men, they have been led into errors in Christianity, apostatizing from the doctrine of faith. Grace be with thee; viz. the grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord, mentioned 2 Tim. i. 2.

¶ The first to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefest city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

T I M O T H Y

THE ARGUMENT

THIS Second Epistle to Timothy was most certainly written from Rome, when Paul was a prisoner there, chap. i. 8, and, as most judge, a very little while before his death, for he tells us, chap. iv. 7, 8, that he was ready to be offered, he had finished his course, the time of his departure was at hand. He is said to have died Anno Christi 68, and in the five and thirtieth after his conversion; so this Epistle was written about sixteen years after the writing of the former. The scope of it is much the same as of the former: to exhort and encourage him to faithfulness in his ministry, to keep steadfast in the faith, to be diligent in his work; to avoid all strifes of words, perverse disputings, &c. He also in it admonisheth him, that the latter times were like to be yet more dangerous, and therefore adviseth him to prepare for hardship and persecutions, propounding his own example to him, both as to doctrine and as to suffering.

CHAP. I.

Paul affectionately saluteth Timothy, 1, 2, assuring him of his constant prayers for him, and remembrance of that sincere faith which had been derived to Timothy from his mother and grandmother, 3—5. He exhorteth him to stir up the gift of God which was in him, 6, 7; and not to be ashamed of the testimony of the gospel, but to be ready to suffer for it, according to his example, 8—12; and to hold fast the form of sound words which he had learned, 13, 14. He putteth him in mind of the general defection of the converts in Asia, 15, and commendeth Onesiphorus for his repeated kindness toward him, 16—18.

A. D. 68. PAUL, <sup>a</sup>an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to <sup>b</sup>the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus,

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God: see the notes on 1 Tim. i. 1. According to the promise of life: it is much the same with Rom. i. 1, 2, according to the gospel, which he had promised afore by his prophets. These words either signify the end of his apostleship, to declare the gospel in which is the promise of life, or the matter of his preaching. Which is in Christ Jesus; which eternal life was promised of old, but is not to be had but in Christ Jesus, and in him is the promise fulfilled.

<sup>c</sup> 1 Tim. 1. 2. 2 <sup>c</sup>To Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 2; there he calls him his own son, testifying his relation, here his beloved son, to testify his affection to him. The salutation is the same with that 1 Tim. i. 2: see the notes there.

<sup>d</sup> Rom. 1. 6. <sup>e</sup> Eph. 1. 16. <sup>f</sup> Acts 22. 3. <sup>g</sup> 23. 1. & 24. 14. & 27. 23. <sup>h</sup> Rom. 1. 8. <sup>i</sup> Gal. 1. 14. <sup>j</sup> 1 Thess. 1. 2. & 3. 10. 3 <sup>d</sup>I thank God, <sup>e</sup>whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that <sup>f</sup>without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

Paul here by his forefathers either intends his immediate parents, or Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for he served the same God whom they served. But how did Paul from his forefathers serve God with pure conscience, who was a native Jew, and zealous in that religion, in opposition to the faith of the gospel, which alone purifieth the heart? Acts xv. 9. Solut. A pure conscience seemeth here to signify the same with Phil. iii. 6, touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. Paul was strict to the rules of that religion which he professed, though that religion was not that which universally purifieth the heart. Or else his meaning is, that he at this time served that God who was the God of his forefathers, with a pure conscience. That without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day: he either thanketh God on the behalf of Timothy for his gifts and graces, or else he blesseth God, that had put it into his heart daily to remember Timothy in his prayers, Phil. 4; by which expression he both lets us know the mutual duty of Christians to pray one for another, and also that when we find any inclinations to do our duty, we ought to acknowledge them to God, being not of ourselves sufficient to one good thought.

4 <sup>g</sup>Greatly desiring to see thee, being <sup>h</sup>mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy;

There was a great brotherly love amongst primitive Christians, so as the apostle often expresseth his desire to see such Christians as were at a distance from him, Rom. i. 11; 1 Thess. ii. 17; but he expresseth a particular reason of his desire to see Timothy, remembering the tears he shed at his parting from him and the rest, Acts xx. 37, 38; besides the desire he had by his presence to satisfy him, and give him occasion of joy, with which he also should be filled; unless he speaketh of the joy he promised himself when he saw Timothy, upon his seeing the improvement he had made both of his graces and gifts in the ministerial office.

5 When I call to remembrance <sup>h</sup>the <sup>i</sup>unfeigned faith that is in thee, which <sup>j</sup>dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

The apostle expresseth another cause of his affection to Timothy, viz. his sincere owning and adhering to the profession of the gospel; as his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice had done before him (he saith nothing of his father, for he was a Jew proselyted, or a heathen, Acts xvi. 1); and though he could not infallibly determine, yet he was verily persuaded of his sincerity also.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance <sup>a</sup> that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

Wherefore I put thee in remembrance: Paul's affection to Timothy was so far from abating his faithfulness to him, that it quickened him to admonish him to be faithful in his ministry. That thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee; and to that end, he adviseth him to put new life unto that holy fire (the word signifies the recovering of fire choked with ashes or decaying) which God had kindled in him, by daily prayer, and meditating on the things of God and use of his gifts, improving those spiritual abilities which God had given him. By the putting on of my hands; upon the prayers of Paul and the presbytery, when he was by them set apart to the work of an evangelist, for the end for which God had given them to him.

7 For <sup>b</sup> God hath not given us the spirit of fear; <sup>c</sup> but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

For God hath not given us the spirit of fear: fear in this place signifieth fearfulness, or cowardice, or poorness of spirit, in opposition to that holy fortitude which becomes ministers; this, he saith, is none of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and proceedeth not from God. But of power: by power he means Christian courage and fortitude, not declining duty because of danger threatening us in the performance, but enabling us to encounter the greatest dangers and difficulties. And of love; love to God, and to the souls of his people; love so strong as to constrain us to be willing to lay down our lives for Christ, and for his church and people. And of a sound mind; σωφροσύνη: we translate it a sound mind; others, sobriety; others, a calm and quiet mind. A sound mind, in the ordinary notion of it, for a judgment sound in the faith, is requisite to a minister of the gospel. Sobriety is the gift of the Spirit: sobriety is a very general term, and signifies the moderation and government of our passions; that which seems to be here meant is such a government, and composure of spirit, that nothing shall deter us from the discharge of our duty; and the term sound mind, opposed to a weak and sickly mind, staggering at every danger, may well enough express the apostle's sense.

8 <sup>d</sup> Be not thou therefore ashamed of <sup>e</sup> the testimony of our Lord, nor of me <sup>f</sup> his prisoner: <sup>g</sup> but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God;

Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord; either the testimony of Christ himself, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; or that testimony which thou art obliged to give, for the ministers of Christ are to be witnesses unto him, Acts i. 8. Nor of me his prisoner: by this it appears that Paul was a prisoner at Rome when he wrote this; he would not have Timothy ashamed to own him, and the doctrine he had taught, because of that circumstance. But be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel; that is, be thou content, if God calls thee to it, to take a share with me in those afflictions which I suffer for preaching and professing the gospel, or those afflictions which are inseparable from the gospel. According to the power of God; through the power of God, for it is given to us on the behalf of Christ, as to believe, so to suffer for Christ's sake, Phil. i. 29.

9 <sup>h</sup> Who hath saved us, and <sup>i</sup> called us with an holy calling, <sup>j</sup> not according to our works, but <sup>k</sup> according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus <sup>l</sup> before the world began;

Who hath saved us; that is, brought us into a state of salvation, and given us a right to it. And called us with an holy calling; and, in order to our obtaining it, hath effectually called, renewed, and sanctified us. Not according to our works; not for any merits of ours. But according to his own purpose and grace; but from his own free love purposing and decreeing eternal salvation to us, with the means adequate to it. Which was given us in Christ Jesus; to be obtained through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ. Before the world began; which purpose of his was before the foundation of the world was laid, and therefore could not be according to our works, but must be of his own grace, Eph. i. 4; Tit. iii. 5.

10 But <sup>m</sup> 'is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, <sup>n</sup> who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel:

But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ; which purpose of God in Christ Jesus was in a great measure hidden under the Old Testament, but by the coming of Christ is made evident. Who hath abolished death; by his death he hath taken away the sting and power of death, delivering us from that which is the second death. And hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel; and through the doctrine of the gospel he hath made the promises of eternal life plain and clear; which though existent under the law, yet were very obscurely revealed, so as they lay out of the sight of most men and women, but are now brought to light, so as he who runneth may read them.

11 <sup>o</sup> Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

Whereunto I am appointed a preacher; for the publication of which gracious counsel and purpose of God thus made manifest by Christ's coming, and of that life and immortality thus by the gospel brought to light, God hath appointed me as his crier; and an apostle; and sent me immediately as his messenger to make publication of it; and a teacher of the Gentiles; and hath made the instructing of the heathen my peculiar province, 1 Tim. ii. 7.

12 <sup>p</sup> For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed: <sup>q</sup> for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to <sup>r</sup> keep that which I have committed unto him <sup>s</sup> against that day.

For the which cause I also suffer these things; for the preaching and publishing of which gospel, or for the teaching of the Gentiles, I suffer these things, being accused by the Jews as a seditious person stirring up the people, and by them delivered to the Romans, and by them imprisoned. Nevertheless I am not ashamed; yet I am not ashamed of my chains. For I know whom I have believed, I have committed myself to God, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day; and I am out of doubt concerning God's ability to keep until the day of judgment my soul, or my whole concerns both for this life and another, which I have by faith committed to him. Some, by that which I have committed unto him, in this text, understand the church or body of believers; others understand the fruit and reward of his labours and suffering. Mr. Calvin would have life eternal here meant; our eternal salvation is in Christ's keeping. I rather incline to the first notion; so it agreeth with 1 Pet. iv. 19. God commits his gospel to our trust who are ministers, 1 Tim. vi. 20; we, according to the phrase of Scripture, are said to commit our souls to him, Luke xxiii. 46; Acts vii. 59. I am, saith Paul, unconcerned as to my sufferings, I have intrusted God with all my concerns in order to this life and that which is to come, and I know he is able to secure them.

13 <sup>t</sup> Hold fast <sup>u</sup> the form of <sup>v</sup> sound words, <sup>w</sup> which thou hast heard of me, <sup>x</sup> in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

By sound words which he had heard from Paul, can be k 1 Thess. 5.

19. 1 Tim.
4. 14.

l Rom. 8. 15.

m Luke 24.
49. Acts 1. 8.

n Rom. 1. 16.

o 1 Tim. 2. 6.
Rev. 1. 2.
p Eph. 3. 1.
q Phil. 1. 7.
r Col. 1. 24.
ch. 4. 4.

s 1 Tim. 1. 1.
Tit. 3. 4.
t 1 Thess. 4.
7. Heb. 3. 1.
u Rom. 3. 20.
v 2. 11.
w Tit. 3. 5.
x Rom. 8. 20.
y Rom. 16.
z Eph. 1.
4. & 3. 11. Tit. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20.

y Rom. 16.
z Eph. 1. 9.
Col. 1. 28.
Tit. 1. 2.
1 Pet. 1. 20.
a 1 Cor. 15.
54, 55.
Heb. 2. 14.

a Acts 9. 15.
Eph. 3. 7, 8.
1 Tim. 2. 7.
ch. 4. 11.

b Eph. 3. 1.
ch. 2. 2.

c 1 Pet. 4. 19.
Or, trusted.
d 1 Tim. 6.
20.
e ver. 16.
ch. 4. 6.

f ch. 3. 14.
Tit. 1. 9.
g Heb. 10. 23.
Rev. 2. 25.
h Rom. 8. 20.
i 2. 17.
j 1 Tim. 1.
10. & 3. 1. eh. 2. 2. k 1 Tim. 1. 14.

meant nothing but the doctrine of the gospel, which, as it is itself pure, and consistent with itself, not rotten, one piece of which will not hold with the other, so it tends to make souls sound as to their spiritual health: this doctrine Timothy had been instructed in by Paul; whether he had given him a written form of them or no is not much material, for this (if he did) was not that which he would have him hold fast, but to keep the idea or pattern of that doctrine in his mind, written in his heart, making his discourses conform to it. The sum of which form of sound words he declareth to be faith and love, for all that the gospel teacheth is either believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, or keeping his commandments, which is the demonstration of love, John xiv. 15: or else the sense may be this, Keep thyself sound in the principles of religion, which thou hast learned of me. Which is in Christ Jesus; but do not think this enough without exercising a faith in Christ as thy Redeemer, and living in obedience to his commandments. Many an orthodox man may go to hell, notwithstanding his orthodoxy.

11 Tim. 6. 20. 14 That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost<sup>m</sup> which dwelleth in us.

That good thing which was committed unto thee keep: this is expounded by 1 Tim. vi. 20; he means the doctrine of the gospel, or his office in the publication of it; Be faithful in thy ministerial work. By the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us; to which purpose beg the assistance and operation of the Holy Spirit, which dwelleth both in all believers, and more particularly assisteth the ministers of the gospel. We can neither keep our minds sound in the faith, as to the doctrine of it, nor our souls steady in the exercises of faith or love, without the assistance of the Holy Spirit; which yet the Lord giveth to them that ask him, and it abides in them who do not vex, quench, grieve, or resist it.

12 Acts 19. 10. 15 This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

This thou knowest: probably as to some he had a personal knowledge of their apostasy, as to others he knew it by information, which Paul confirmeth. That all they which are in Asia be turned away from me: it seemeth unreasonable to interpret all here of every individual, but many, as all oft signifyeth in holy writ. Some interpret it of all the Jewish proselytes; others, of those of Asia who accompanied Paul to Rome, and there, seeing his sufferings, apostatized; others, of many who still abode in Asia, where Timothy now was: these all, or many of them, deserted Paul, either wholly casting off the Christian profession, or withdrawing themselves from communion with Paul, when they saw him a prisoner. Of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes; of these two we have no more said in holy writ, and therefore can assert nothing of them with any certainty.

13 Matt. 6. 7. 16 The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain:

The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; whether Onesiphorus was at this time alive, or no, is very doubtful, for he only prays for his family in this text, and saluteth them only, chap. iv. 19. For he oft refreshed me; either when he was in Asia, or (which is more probable by reason of what followeth) at Rome, whither he might attend him, or follow him. And was not ashamed of my chain; and showed kindness to him when he was a prisoner; for which Paul prayeth mercy for his whole family.

17 But, when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me.

But when he was in Rome, whither he might go upon his private occasions, and, being there, he sought me out very diligently and found me; he made it his business to find out Paul, and rested not until he found him, either at his inn, or in the prison where he was put.

18 The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day:

and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

This would incline us to think that Onesiphorus was yet alive. The term mercy he here prays that he may find of the Lord, is comprehensive of all good, both corporal and spiritual, which he prays God the Father to grant to this good man, to find from the Lord Jesus Christ in that day when he shall come to judge the quick and the dead; for he had not only ministered to the apostle while he was a prisoner at Rome, but many ways at Ephesus, (where probably this Onesiphorus lived,) which Timothy, being there, well knew.

CHAP. II

Timothy is exhorted to constancy and perseverance in the discharge of his duty, as a good soldier of Christ, looking for a certain reward of his fatigues and sufferings, 1—14; to divide the word of truth rightly, and to shun profane and vain babblings, 15, 16. The dangerous error of Hymenæus and Philetus, 17, 18. The foundation of God standeth sure, 19. Of vessels honourable and dishonourable, 20, 21. Timothy is taught what to flee, and what to follow, and how the servant of Christ must behave toward all men, 22—26.

THOU therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

The sense is either, Show thyself a stout and valiant man, not being affrighted at the dangers that threaten thee in the publishing and defence of the gospel which brings the glad tidings of the grace of Jesus Christ: or, Be thou strong through the gracious influence of Christ Jesus, without which thou canst do nothing.

2 And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also.

And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses; the doctrine of the gospel which thou hast heard from me, confirmed by the testimony of many of the prophets of old, or, which thou heardest from me committed to thy trust, there being many witnesses present, when thou wert ordained, or set apart to thy office. The same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also; commit unto others that shall be set apart for the ministry; but let them be such as have an ability to communicate their knowledge to others, and such as thou shalt judge will be faithful to their trust.

3 Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

Endure hardness; in the Greek it is, suffer evils, sc. evils of affliction, expect them, and encounter and patiently endure them. As a good soldier of Jesus Christ; remembering that the life of a minister is not a life of ease and pleasure, but the life of a soldier, whose life is a life of hardship, exposed to numberless hazards and dangers.

4 No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

Having told Timothy that his life was to be the life of a soldier, in which he would be exposed to many difficulties, and dangers, and hazards, he here mindeth him of the law and custom of soldiers, who being once entered in the muster-roll, use to sequester themselves from other employments in trading, husbandry, or the like, that thereby they might be at the command of their general, or captain, to be called out upon what service he pleaseth. So he who is a minister of the gospel ought not voluntarily and of choice engage himself in secular employments, but give up himself wholly to the ministerial work, that so he might please the Lord Jesus Christ, who hath chosen him to be his soldier.

5 And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

And look as it is in the public games in use amongst you, where divers strive by wrestling, fighting, racing, where there is a crown proposed as the prize for those who are the conquerors in the game; they have not that crown set upon their heads, unless they keep to the laws of that game wherein they are exercised. So it is in the spiritual warfare, or contest; there is a far greater reward, even a crown of glory, proposed for such as overcome; but none shall have it, unless those who keep to the laws which God hath made for those who exercise themselves in that spiritual combat.

6 *|| The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits.

As the apostle had before compared the minister of the gospel to a soldier, and from thence concluded his duty not to entangle himself unnecessarily in secular employments; and to those that exercised themselves in their public games, and from thence concluded the obligation upon him to keep to the Divine rule in the management of his office, and of himself under the opposition he should meet with; so here he compares him to a husbandman, (as Christ himself had done, Matt. xiii. 1, &c.) either to mind him of his duty, first to look to save his own soul, then the souls of others, or of his advantage, it being the privilege of a husbandman, being the proprietor of the fruits, (if he will,) first to eat thereof, thereby intimating the privilege of those who turn many to righteousness, Dan. xii. 3.

7 Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

Consider what I say; weigh these things with thyself in thy own thoughts. And the Lord give thee understanding in all things; but thou wilt not effectually understand them without a Divine influence, opening thy mind to a comprehension of them, and thy heart to a reception of all these things, and all other things which it is reasonable for thee to know and understand.

8 Remember that Jesus Christ <sup>1</sup>of the seed of David <sup>m</sup>was raised from the dead <sup>n</sup>according to my Gospel:

The apostle passeth from his former discourse, wherein he had armed Timothy against the afflictions of the gospel, to a discourse about the doctrine of the gospel; and here mentioneth two principal heads of that doctrine, the incarnation of Christ, and his resurrection, which he instanceth in, as more particularly to be remembered and pressed upon Christians, in regard they were those two points of the gospel which were either at that time denied, as that of the incarnation was by the Jews, or he knew would first be opposed; and the latter that which declared Christ to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4, and upon a faith in which Christians' salvation and consolation much depended, Rom. iv. 25; viii. 34; he therefore calls to him especially to remember that Jesus Christ was of the seed of David, truly man, and the true Messiah, who was to be the seed of David, (as the Jews themselves confessed): the manhood of Christ, soon after the apostle's times, was denied by the Marcionites and Manichees, &c. And that he was raised from the dead deserved Timothy's remembrance, both because upon that depended the great evidence of Christ's Divine nature, and the salvation and consolation of believers. According to my gospel; this, he saith, was suitable to the doctrine of the gospel which he had preached to them: he calls it his gospel, because committed to his trust to publish; so Rom. ii. 16, and xvi. 25, which he expoundeth, Gal. i. 11, the gospel preached of me: he speaks in the plural number, 1 Thess. i. 5; 2 Thess. ii. 14; declaring that the gospel was no more his than others' also who were ministers of it.

9 ° Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, <sup>p</sup>even unto bonds; <sup>q</sup>but the word of God is not bound.

Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; that is, for which I suffer affliction, as if I were an evil-doer, to that degree that I am put in chains. But the word of God is not bound; but yet I preach the gospel, or the gospel is preached; though they have restrained me, they are not able to restrain that.

10 Therefore <sup>r</sup>I endure all things for the elect's sakes, <sup>s</sup>that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

Therefore I endure all things; that is, all things which I do endure, reproach, imprisonment, &c., for he had not yet resisted to blood. For the elect's sakes; as for Christ's sake, to imitate his example, and testify my love to him; so for the sake of those whom God hath chosen to eternal life, that they, seeing my patience and constancy, may be confirmed in the faith of the gospel, and by that means may obtain eternal life, salvation, with eternal glory, which is to be had in Christ.

11 <sup>t</sup>It is a faithful saying: For <sup>u</sup>if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

It is a faithful saying: see the notes on 1 Tim. i. 15, and iv. 9, where we had the same phrase. For if we be dead with him: we are said to be dead with Christ two ways: 1. By our dying to sin, as he died for sin, Rom. vi. 5. 2. By our suffering in testimony of the truth, 2 Cor. iv. 10, which is that being dead with him which is here mentioned. We shall also live with him: there is also a twofold living with him, by a rising again to a newness of life, Rom. vi. 5, and hereafter in glory, which latter is here intended.

12 <sup>v</sup>If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: <sup>w</sup>if we deny him, he also will deny us:

If we suffer, we shall also reign with him; that is, if we suffer for his name's sake, for a constant owning and adherence to his doctrine of faith, or discharge of any trust he hath reposed in us, we shall reign with him in glory. If we deny him, he also will deny us; but if we, upon prospect of danger, deny his truth, or desert the profession of him, he in the day of judgment will not own us before his Father and the holy angels, Matt. x. 33; Mark viii. 38; Rom. viii. 17.

13 <sup>x</sup>If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: <sup>y</sup>he cannot deny himself.

If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; whether we believe or believe not, or whether we be faithful to our trust or be not, yet God will show himself faithful, either to his promises made to them that believe, or to his threatenings denounced against those that believe not. He cannot deny himself; for it is impossible that he who is truth itself should be otherwise, that were for him to deny himself.

14 Of these things put them in remembrance, <sup>z</sup>charging them before the Lord <sup>a</sup>that they strive not about words to no profit, <sup>b</sup>but to the subverting of the hearers.

Of these things put them in remembrance; that is, put other teachers in remembrance of all these things which I have given thee in charge. Charging them before the Lord; charging them as in the sight of God, who most certainly observeth and taketh notice of them, and will call them to an account. That they strive not about words to no profit; that they spend not their time in their pulpits in contests about words which tend to no solid advantage of their hearers. But to the subverting of the hearers; but may tend to the subversion of them, and the destroying their steadiness in the faith, drawing them into parties and factions, the fruit of which is nothing but envy, and contentions, and different opinions in matters of faith; as to which it hath been always observed, that the affectation of new phrases hath been introductive of a novelty in opinion.

15 Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Study to show thyself approved unto God; let it be thy study, not to please men, to get their hum and applause for speaking quaintly, learnedly, or smoothly, but to approve thyself to God, who is thy Master in this work, and whom thou oughtest to serve. A workman that needeth not to be ashamed; a workman that doth his work so well, and faithfully, that he need not be ashamed, whoever looketh

h 1 Cor. 9. 10.

l Or, The husbandman, labouring first, must be partaker of the fruits.

1 Rom. i. 3, & Acts 2. 30, & 13. 23.

m 1 Cor. 15. 1, & 20.

n Rom. 2. 16.

o Acts 9. 16. ch. 1. 12.

p Eph. 3. 1. Phil. 1. 7.

q Acts 24. 31.

r Eph. 6. 19, 20. Phil. 1. 13, 14.

r Eph. 3. 12. Gal. 1. 24. s 2 Cor. 1. 6.

t 1 Tim. 1. 15. u Rom. 6. 5. v 2 Cor. 4. 10.

x Rom. 8. 17. y Mat. 10. 33. Mark 8. 38. Luke 12. 9.

z Rom. 8. 3. a 9. 6. b Numb. 23. 19.

c 1 Tim. 5. 4, & 6. 4. d Tit. 3. 9, 12.

and judgeth upon it. Rightly dividing the word of truth; ὀρθοτομεῖν, rightly cutting out; we translate it rightly dividing: it is not material whether the metaphor be drawn from the priests right cutting out their sacrifices, so as all had their shares in them; or from carpenters cutting out their timber, cutting off the sappy part, and by a right line dividing the other parts; or from cooks, or carvers, or parents rightly dividing a dish of meat among several guests or children; or from those that use to cut out ways; or from husbandmen cutting out furrows, &c. The sense is, rightly handling the word of God, and giving to all their portion. For their notion who would make the sense of it, cutting out a right way for others by thy example, because the word ὀρθοτομεῖν sometimes signifies to cut a right way, it no way agreeth to the text, for whatever the verb signifies alone, he is meanly skilled in the Greek that knows not it cannot have that sense, being joined (as here) with τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας, the word of truth.

16 But <sup>d</sup>shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness.

But shun profane and vain babblings; by these dishonourable terms the apostle defameth all impertinent discourses in discharge of the ministerial office, such as he had called fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, 1 Tim. i. 4; profane and old wives' fables, chap. iv. 7: here he calls them κενοφωνίας, empty, vain, and unprofitable discourses, which though possibly not profane in themselves, yet were profane as used in the discharge of the ministerial office, where nothing ought to be discoursed but the solid, useful truths of the gospel. For they will increase unto more ungodliness; these, he saith, will issue at last in errors and ungodliness of life.

17 And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is <sup>e</sup>Hymenæus and Philetus;

And their word will eat as doth a canker; in the Greek it is, And their word will have pasture (or place to feed upon) as a gangrene: we have ill translated the word a canker, for it signifieth a gangrene; both our English word gangrene and the Latin word are derived from the Greek. There is a great difference between a canker and a gangrene, in the causes of those two diseases, and the nature of them, and the time in which they destroy the body of a man; only they both agree in their infecting the parts contiguous, the canker eating them, the gangrene mortifying them; and for this, the words of erroneous persons are here compared to this disease, because either of them will have something to feed upon; so νοσήν signifieth, John x. 9. Most errors in matters of faith are contagious and infectious; the reason is, because ordinarily an error is broached by some, and entertained by others, in satisfaction to some lust, as favouring some evil desire and inclination of our minds, and so naturally pleaseth those who have the same evil propensities. Of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus: of Hymenæus we read before, 1 Tim. i. 20, there he is joined with Alexander; but not of Philetus, nor do we find him further mentioned in holy writ.

18 Who <sup>f</sup>concerning the truth have erred, <sup>g</sup>saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

Who concerning the truth have erred; these two he saith had already erred as to the doctrine of faith, giving heed to profane and vain babblings. Saying that the resurrection is past already; their particular error was in the business of the resurrection, which they said was past. That there shall be no resurrection is a very pleasing doctrine to men that have lived sensual lives; those whose lives have been nothing but eating and drinking, do very unwillingly think of dying, but seeing they cannot avoid that, they would gladly there should be no resurrection: so that it was no wonder if such an error as this did spread and mortify like a gangrene. Upon what pretence these men denied the resurrection, we are neither told in holy writ, nor with any certainty by any other authors. Some say, that they held that it was past in the resurrection of Christ, and those mentioned Matt. xxvii. 52. Others think they confounded the resurrection with regeneration, and glorification, which they allowed only as to the souls of believers. Others say they maintained no other resurrection than what men have in the procreation of children. Others, that they denied any resurrection but that in baptism. The resurrection of the body was denied by the Sadducees, by these in Paul's time, and afterwards by those that followed, Marcion, Basilides, Valentinus and Apelles, and others. Some in our times also have trodden in their steps, and are still treading (unless they think God will be more kind to those infinite numbers of heathens in the country of the Great Mogul than to Christians; for as to them, they tell us they cannot believe any such thing). Two sorts of men have been guilty of this: 1. The philosophers of the world, that think they must be able with their reason to span all articles of faith. 2. Men of sensual and sottish lives, who having lived like beasts, are willing to believe they shall also die like brutes. And overthrow the faith of some; those who are tainted with this error do both themselves deny the faith, divers principal articles of which depend upon it, such as the resurrection of Christ, 1 Cor. xv., and eternal life, &c., and also subvert the faith of others; for whose can persuade another that there shall be no resurrection, makes him an infidel. Such heretics therefore were never endured to keep any station in the Christian church, it being always judged reasonable, that those who were turned infidels should be turned out of the flock of Christ to their proper herd.

19 Nevertheless <sup>h</sup>the foundation of God standeth <sup>i</sup>sure, having this seal, The Lord <sup>j</sup>knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure; notwithstanding that these two men (possibly of some note in the church of Ephesus) have fallen from the faith, and have been ill instruments to subvert the faith of others, yet God hath a number in the world, who are built upon the rock Christ Jesus, Matt. vii. 25; these are founded surely, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his; sealed, and confirmed in their state by the eternal decree and counsel of God, who hath foreknown his elect, both as to their number and perseverance; but God hath from eternity known who are his, and therefore such as truly are so must be kept through faith by his power to salvation, and it is not possible that these should be totally and finally deceived. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity; and every one that nameth the name of the Lord must depart from the tents of wicked men, who have made shipwreck both of faith and a good conscience. Therefore let not the apostasy of these men be a temptation to thee to think that the church of God may or shall fail; that cannot be, there can be no more lost than the sons of perdition, such as God never knew as his, though they put on a mark of Christianity and godliness, and deceived many. Those who have God's seal upon them, and are of his foundation, shall stand and keep themselves from those damnable errors. Only, to let us know that neither the certainty of God's decree or promise doth excuse our endeavours and using means for obtaining the thing decreed or promised, the apostle puts the verb in the imperative mood, Let him depart, &c.

20 <sup>k</sup>But in a great house there are not <sup>l</sup>only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; <sup>m</sup>and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

Look as it is in a great house, there are several vessels, made of several materials, and for several ends and uses; some are made of gold, some of silver, some of wood, some of earth; some made and bought for more noble and honourable uses, others for more vile, base, and dishonourable uses: so it is in the church of God, which is large, and like a great house. In it are many members; some have obtained like precious faith with us, who are as gold tried in the fire, or like silver purified seven times, by the word of God, and his Spirit sitting as a refiner upon their hearts. But all they are not gold or silver who glitter in an outward profession; some of them have earthy, wooden d 1 Tim. 4. 7. & 8. 20. Tit. 1. 14.

l Or. gangrene. e 1 Tim. 1. 20.

f 1 Tim. 6. 21. g 1 Cor. 15. 12.

h Mat. 24. 24. Rom. 8. 35. i John 2. 19. j Or. testify. k Nah. 1. 7. l John 10. 14. m 27. See Num. 18. 5.

k 1 Tim. 3. 15. l Rom. 9. 21.

souls, savouring only sensual things, having nothing of precious faith in them, and are not yet purged from their filthiness, wanting all truth of grace, or sincerity of love. Some, whose work is to honour God, being created to good works, and whose reward will be to be honoured and glorified by him: others, who, by their apostacy from their faith and profession, and by their wicked lives, will dishonour him, and will be eternally rejected by him, as reprobate silver, and sons of perdition.

<sup>11</sup> See Ia. 52. 21 <sup>11</sup> If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and <sup>11</sup> prepared unto every good work.

If a man therefore purge himself from these; from those wicked men that subvert the faith of others, or from their wicked opinions and courses. He shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use; God will honour him; and he will by it be set apart, and made fit for Christ's use in his church. And prepared unto every good work; and made fit for every good work; which men are not, while they are either tainted with pernicious, damnable errors relating to the doctrine of faith, or the companions of those fools.

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 6. 22 Flee also youthful lusts: but <sup>11</sup> follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that <sup>11</sup> call on the Lord <sup>11</sup> out of a pure heart.

Flee also youthful lusts: by youthful lusts he means such sinful desires, propensities, and inclinations of mind as are most incident to youth, whether they be lusts of the flesh, or spiritual lusts, such as are the vices of the mind, ambition, ostentation, pride, vain-glory, contempt of others, &c. But follow righteousness; follow justice, or innocency, which wrongeth none, but rendereth to every one his due; or, the righteousness of a holy life. Faith, which teacheth a soul to receive Divine revelations steadily, without perverse disputings. Charity, which is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, 1 Cor. xiii. 4—6. Peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart; a union, not with men of corrupt minds and practices, but with all such as serve and worship God purely and sincerely.

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 1. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 3. 1. 23 But <sup>11</sup> foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

It is a precept or caution of the same nature with those, 1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; and ver. 16 of this chapter. The repetition of this precept of the apostle four times in these two short Epistles, lets us know how important a thing he judged it, that ministers of the gospel should not spend their time in their discourses to their congregations, in things that tend nothing to the building up of their hearers in faith or holiness, being either old wives' fables, like the stories in the popish legends, or the apocryphal stories of Bel and the Dragon, Tobit and his dog, and the swallows dunging in his eye, &c.; or sifting out genealogies, or vain and impertinent discourses, or idle, fruitless questions, which tend not to edifying, but to satisfy curiosity, and increase strife and ungodliness; which kind of preaching the apostle also had defamed, 1 Tim. vi. 4, as the issue of pride, and ignorance, and dotage, and here he calls such questions unlearned in the same sense, because impertinent to the end of preaching. The vanity of human nature, and their non-subjection to the will of God, appeareth much in this, that notwithstanding the unreasonableness of such preaching, and the direct opposition of it to the so often repeated precepts of the apostle, and to Titus, chap. iii. 9, and Paul's proposing of his own example to the contrary, 1 Cor. ii. 1—4; yet for many years in the times of popery the people were fed with little besides these husks; and too many yet, either out of pride, to show their parts and reading, or ignorance of the mysteries of godliness, and the true end of preaching, or dotage about unprofitable speculations and niceties, can find little better food than these husks for poor people's souls.

<sup>11</sup> Tit. 3. 2. 24 And <sup>11</sup> the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, <sup>11</sup> apt to teach, <sup>11</sup> patient,

He that is the servant of the Lord in the work of the ministry, must not μάχεσθαι, fight or strive; he must neither be a striker nor a brawler, neither fight with his hands nor his tongue. But be gentle unto all men; but show himself to all courteous, of a soft temper, meek and gentle. Apt to teach, patient: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, 3.

<sup>11</sup> Gal. 6. 1. <sup>11</sup> Tim. 6. 11. <sup>11</sup> Pet. 3. 16. <sup>11</sup> Acts 9. 22. <sup>11</sup> 1 Tim. 2. 4. ch. 5. 7. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 1. 1. 25 <sup>11</sup> In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; <sup>11</sup> if God peradventure will give them repentance <sup>11</sup> to the acknowledging of the truth;

In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; without passion better informing such as have sinned in an error, not reviling them, but gently instructing them, and labouring to convince them of their mistake; for all those who for a time may oppose the truth, are not such as never repent, nor do it out of malice or hatred, they may do it out of ignorance and weakness. If God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and God may give them a power, and a heart to repent, and to acknowledge that truth, which they at present oppose; and although this must be God's work, yet he doth it by ministers as his means and instruments, who are to use probable means in order to it; such are not railing and reviling, but meek instructions, and a kind and gentle behaviour to them. A foul-mouthed minister is seldom an instrument to cleanse another's heart.

26 And that they may <sup>11</sup> recover themselves <sup>11</sup> out of the snare of the devil, who are <sup>11</sup> taken captive by him at his will.

And that they may recover themselves; the Greek word ἀναρτίσω properly signifieth to awake out of a drunken sleep. A state of sin is a kind of drunkenness, in which men have lost the use of their reason. Out of the snare of the devil; by the snare of the devil he means his temptations, which like snares are set covertly to catch souls. Who are taken captive by him; ἐξωρημένοι signifies persons taken captive in war; in such a miserable captivity are sinners. At his will; εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα, which we translate at his will, may be as well translated to his will; and so the will of God may be meant, and the whole referred to the first sentence thus, may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil to the will of God, that is, to embrace and do the will of God; and this is the sense some make of it: but it seems more proper to refer it to the participle, taken captive, for that is next it; and so it signifieth the miserable state of sinners, who are captives at the devil's command and will, that if he saith to them, Go, they go; if he saith, Come, they come; if he saith, Do this, they do it.

CHAP. III

The apostle foretelleth the evil characters that should appear in the last days, 1—5. He describeth the enemies of the truth, 6—9; propoundeth unto Timothy his own example, 10—13; and exhorteth him to abide in the doctrine he had learned, commending unto him the manifold use of the Holy Scriptures, 14—17.

THIS know also, that <sup>11</sup> in the last days <sup>11</sup> perilous times shall come.

We met with this term, last days, 1 Tim. iv. 1, and there said that the Scripture by that term understands all the time from Christ's ascension to the end of the world. We meet with the term, Gen. xlix. 1; Isa. ii. 2; Micah iv. 1; Acts ii. 17; Heb. i. 2; James v. 3; 2 Pet. iii. 3. Of these days some are later than others, but it appears by Acts ii. 17; Heb. i. 2, that that whole period of time is so called. Perilous times shall come; in the Greek it is, difficult times, that is, times when it will be difficult for Christians to keep their lives or estates, or any happy station in the world, with a good conscience, by reason of the plenty of ill men that should live in those times, and make them so difficult.

2 For men shall be <sup>11</sup> lovers of their own selves, <sup>11</sup> covetous, <sup>11</sup> boasters, <sup>11</sup> proud,

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 3. 2, 3. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 1. 9. <sup>11</sup> Or, forbearing. <sup>11</sup> Gal. 6. 1. <sup>11</sup> Tim. 6. 11. <sup>11</sup> Pet. 3. 16. <sup>11</sup> Acts 9. 22. <sup>11</sup> 1 Tim. 2. 4. ch. 5. 7. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 1. 1.

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 6. <sup>11</sup> Acts 9. 14. <sup>11</sup> Cor. 1. 2. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 1. 5. <sup>11</sup> 4. 12.

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 1. 4. 4. 4. 7. 4. 4. ver. 16. <sup>11</sup> Tit. 3. 9.

<sup>11</sup> Tim. 4. 1. ch. 4. 3. <sup>11</sup> 2 Pet. 3. 3. <sup>11</sup> John 2. 18. Jude 18. <sup>11</sup> Phil. 2. 21. <sup>11</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 3. <sup>11</sup> Jude 16. <sup>11</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 4.

1 Tim. 1. 22. 2 Pet. 2. 12. Jude 10. Rom. 1. 30. 'blasphemers, 'disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

For men shall be lovers of their own selves; that is, the generality of men shall be persons that will neither love God nor men, in comparison with themselves; charity, which seeketh not her own, shall wax cold, men shall be wholly for themselves. Covetous; lovers of silver immoderately, so as they will get it any way, and when they have it will be as sordidly tenacious of it. Boasters; vaunting of themselves, vain-glorious, boasting of what they have not. Proud; lifted up in an opinion of themselves. Blasphemers; speaking evil of God and men. Disobedient to parents; stubborn and rebellious against those that bare them. Unthankful, both to God and men, for kindnesses received from either. Unholy; profane and impure.

3 Without natural affection, 'truce-breakers, || false accusers, 'incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

Without natural affection; having no kindness for such as nature obligeth them to love and honour. Truce-breakers; men that will be held by no bonds or leagues. Or rather, implacable; so we translate the same Greek word, Rom. 1. 31; men so full of malice that they will admit no terms or covenants of peace. False accusers; Greek, devils, venting their malice by informing against and accusing others, without any regard to truth. Incontinent; intemperate, drunkards, gluttons, unclean persons, &c. Fierce; men without any gentleness, cruel. Despisers of those that are good; men that have no kindness for any good men, haters of them.

4 'Traitors, heady, highminded, = lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

Traitors; προδοται signifies the betraying of any trust, or a falsehood to any person to whom we are obliged. It is in Scripture applied to Judas, Luke vi. 16, and to the Jews that crucified Christ, Acts vii. 52. The verb whence it derives is by authors applied to persons, places, and causes; it signifies that in the latter times there should be a general falsehood amongst men; see Matt. x. 21; falsehood towards their superiors, their relation, profession, &c. Heady; rash, inconsiderate. High-minded; blown up as bladders with an opinion of their own deserts. Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; voluptuous men, not using what God hath given them with a moderate satisfaction and delight in them, but contrary to God's commandments, and thereby showing that they have more love for the gratification of their sensitive appetite than the pleasing of God.

5 Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: 'from such turn away.

Having a form of godliness: a form here is the same with a mask, or vizer, or appearance, an accidental form, opposed to substance and reality. It signifieth that in the latter times there should be many such as owned themselves Christians, and pretended to a right way of worshipping God, to be the church, the only church of God. But denying the power thereof; but in practice, though not in words, denying all substantial godliness, which lieth not in assuming the empty name of Christians, and making a profession, but lies in truth, righteousness, love and peace, self-denial, mortifying our members; it being a thing attended with life and power, a man being no more a Christian than he acts and lives like a Christian. From such turn away; from such kind of professors as were before described, the apostle willeth Timothy to turn away, both as to having any church fellowship or communion, or any intimacy of converse with them.

6 For P of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts,

For of this sort are they which creep into houses; who do not only privily enter in at the doors of houses, but pierce into the secrets of them, making it their business to pry into all families, and lead captive silly women, and take their advantages upon women, (the weaker sex,) and not the wisest of them, but γυναικάρια, the diminutive word, is used to vilify; the little despicable women, of no judgment in sound religion, whom they by their tongues and pleasing errors make their captives. Laden with sins; nor do they deal with the most pious and honest women, but such as are laden with the guilt of much sin; led away with divers lusts; and who, being possessed of divers sinful inclinations, not only lusts of the flesh, but any other, such as pride, &c., are easily led away; lust always smoothing the way for such errors as will be principles to justify it against the reflections of conscience. Their vices, rather than sex, made them easily seduced.

7 Ever learning, and never able 'to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Women that pretend to be ever learning the truth, but cannot obtain of their lusts a leave to acknowledge the truth in their practice. The word is ἐπιγινώσκειν, which rather signifies a practical acknowledgment than a notional knowledge.

8 'Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: 'men of corrupt minds, '|| reprobate concerning the faith.

Concerning this resistance of Moses by Jannes and Jambres, the Holy Scripture saith nothing but in this text. It is said by interpreters, that they were two brethren, the chief of Pharaoh's magicians, who opposed Moses in the miracles he wrought, Exod. vii. 11, whose names might be known in Paul's time by tradition, or the public writings of the Jews. So do these also resist the truth; so will corrupt teachers under the gospel resist the truth of the gospel published by Christ's ministers. Men of corrupt minds; men whose hearts are corrupted with sordid lusts. Reprobate concerning the faith; ἀδόκιμος, of no sound judgment as to the doctrine of faith, or not approved of God, or good men, as to their sentiments about our faith.

9 But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as their's also was.

But they shall proceed no further; God will preserve those in his church that are sincere; though they may captivate a few poor, ignorant women, they shall have no great success. For their folly shall be made manifest unto all men; for God will in his providence so order it, that their folly or madness shall appear to all, and their party shall decline. The Divine Providence, that governs all things by the invincible light of truth, discovers and confounds the most specious and subtle seducers in his own time. And this prediction of the apostle was exactly fulfilled with respect to those primitive seducers. As theirs also was; as God by his providence laid open Jannes and Jambres.

10 'But || thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience,

But thou hast fully known my doctrine: our translation here seemeth a little strange, for the Greek is, Thou hast diligently followed me in doctrine, Ἐδὲ παρηκολούθηκάς με τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ; that is, Thou wert in my company, thou wert a follower of me, and so must know what doctrine I preached; what manner of life I lived; what my purpose, whole scope and design, was; what faith I taught and professed; what long-suffering I used, both towards my malicious adversaries and my weaker brethren; what charity or love I showed towards all men, whether friends or foes; what patience I showed in bearing injuries.

11 Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me 'at Antioch, 'at Iconium, 'at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but 'out of them all the Lord delivered me.

What persecutions for the preaching of the gospel I was under; what afflictions I met with at Antioch in Pisidia, Acts xiii. 14, 45, 50; at Iconium, whither he went from Pisidia; of the afflictions he met with there also, read Acts xiv. At Lystra; what persecutions I endured: the apostle went from Iconium to Lystra, Acts xiv. 6, there also he

1 Tim. 1. 22. 2 Pet. 2. 12. Jude 10. Rom. 1. 30. 1 Rom. 1. 31. 1 Cor. makebates. Tit. 2. 3. 2 Pet. 2. 3. 13 Pet. 2. 10. m Phil. 3. 19. 2 Pet. 2. 13. 2a. Jude 4, 19.

r Ex. 7. 11. s 1 Tim. 6. 5. t Rom. 1. 25. 2 Cor. 13. 5. Tit. 1. 16. 1 Cor. of no judgment.

u Ex. 7. 12. & r. 18. & 9. 11.

x Phil. 2. 22. 1 Tim. 4. 6. 1 Cor. thou hast been a diligent follower of.

y Acts 13. 45, 50. z Acts 14. 2. & a Acts 14. 19, &c. b Pa. 34. 19. c Cor. 1. 10. ch. 4. 7.

was persecuted, Acts xiv. 19. Now it seemeth that in all these motions Timothy was in Paul's company and a follower of him, so as he was a witness to all; which assureth us that though we first read of Timothy, Acts xvi. 3, when he was circumcised, yet Paul knew him before. But out of them all the Lord delivered me; yet God delivered Paul from all these, and that Timothy, being all that time in company with Paul, knew; from whence the apostle would have him take courage, exercise patience under suffering for such preaching and such living, being assured that God would deliver him also, preaching the same truth, and living the same holy life, though he met with the same troubles, persecutions, and afflictions.

<sup>c Ps. 34. 19.</sup> <sup>Acts 14. 22.</sup> <sup>Matt. 16. 24.</sup> <sup>John 17. 14.</sup> <sup>1 Cor. 15. 19.</sup> <sup>1 Thess. 3. 3.</sup> 12 Yea, and <sup>e</sup>all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

Such is the disposal of Divine Providence, such the malice of the men in the world, that though not every individual person, yet it is the usual lot of them who will keep a pure faith and a good conscience, to suffer persecution in some kind or other, either in their persons, or reputation, or estates. Men may live profanely, or may be morally honest men, and be safe enough; but if they will profess faith in Christ, or love to him in keeping his commandments, they will be exposed to troubles: the world will not endure men to live in peace, that will not live as they live, and believe as they believe.

<sup>d 2 Thess. 2.</sup> <sup>11. 1 Tim. 4.</sup> <sup>1 ch. 2. 16.</sup> 13 <sup>a</sup>But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.

Neither do thou expect that the times should mend, for men that are given up to their lusts and γόνιτες, such as go about to deceive others, will grow worse and worse, as the world groweth older, both in their endeavours to deceive, and in their malice and hatred to those that oppose them. Deceiving, and being deceived; deceiving others, and being left by the just judgment of God to deceive and ruin their own souls.

<sup>e ch. 1. 13.</sup> <sup>& c. 2.</sup> 14 But <sup>a</sup>continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;

But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned; in the doctrines relating to faith, and the precepts relating to thy life as a minister, or as a Christian. And hast been assured of; and hast assented to steadily, hitherto believing them. Knowing of whom thou hast learned them; remembering that thou hast learned them of me the apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is the same as from Christ himself.

<sup>f John 5. 39.</sup> 15 And that from a child thou hast known <sup>a</sup>the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

And that from a child; from thy infancy, by the instruction of thy mother Eunice, and thy grandmother Lois, chap. i. 5. Thou hast known the Holy Scriptures; thou hast had a notion of the writings of Moses and the prophets, the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament, for at this time no others were written. Which are able to make thee wise unto salvation; which Holy Scriptures (without the help of the writings of Plato or Pythagoras, or any other pagan philosophers) have in them a sufficiency of doctrine to make thee, or any other, wise enough to get to heaven. Through faith which is in Christ Jesus; but not without a faith in Christ Jesus, receiving him as thy and their Saviour, besides a faith assenting and agreeing to those holy writings as the revelation of the Divine will.

<sup>g 2 Pet. 1.</sup> <sup>20. 21.</sup> <sup>h Rom. 15.</sup> <sup>4.</sup> 16 <sup>a</sup>All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, <sup>b</sup>and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

*All Scripture is given by inspiration of God: Scripture signifies no more than writing; some therefore translate this text thus: All Scripture which is inspired of God; not all writings, but all the books of the Old Testament, is Σάμνεύον. This is expounded by Peter, 2 Pet. i. 21,*

*For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. And is profitable for doctrine; and it is profitable to instruct us in all propositions of truth which we need believe in order to salvation. For reproof; ἐλεγχον, to convince us either of any truth, that we may believe it without any hesitation, or of any sin, that we may be humbled for it, without any extenuation. For correction; for reproof, or correction, or reformation, to reprove us in what we are to be reprov'd, to correct us in any error, to show us the way to bring us to rights and to reform us. For instruction in righteousness; to instruct us in the true righteousness, in which we must appear before God; for in it the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, Rom. i. 17.*

17 <sup>i</sup>That the man of God may be perfect, <sup>ii</sup>thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

That the man of God may be perfect; that both ministers and all godly men may be as perfect as they can be in the state of mortality, fitted for the duties of their several callings and places. Thoroughly furnished unto all good works; and be prepared to every work which is good, acceptable and well-pleasing unto God, whether it be a work of piety, or justice and charity. The Scripture, as to all, is so full a direction, that Christians need not go down to the Philistines to whet their tools, nor be beholden to unwritten traditions, or to the writings of pagan philosophers, for directions what to do, how to worship God, or manage any part of their conversation, either as to their general calling, or as to their particular relations.

CHAP. IV

Paul giveth Timothy a solemn charge to do his duty with all care and diligence, 1—5: certifieth him of his approaching end, and of the glorious prospect he had in view, 6—8. He desireth him to hasten his coming, and to bring Mark with him, and certain other things, 9—13: warneth him to beware of Alexander, 14, 15: informeth him what had befallen him at his first apology, 16—18: and concludeth with salutations, and a benediction, 19—22.

I <sup>a</sup>CHARGE thee therefore before God, <sup>b</sup>and the Lord Jesus Christ, <sup>c</sup>who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

I charge thee therefore before God, who seeth and observeth what thou doest, and will one day call thee to account for thy discharge of thy ministry. And the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead; and before the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, whom thou hast more reason to regard, not only because he is thy Master, and thou his servant, in a special sense, but because he is to be thy Judge also, for he shall be the Judge, as of those that are dead before his coming, so of those also who shall be alive at his coming, 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 15, 17. At his appearing and his kingdom; when he shall appear the second time, and set up his kingdom of glory, delivering up his mediatory kingdom to this Father. I charge thee, as in the presence of God and this Christ, or as thou hast a regard to God and to this Christ, and fearest the angry face of this Judge, or believest his second coming, or expectest a share in his kingdom of glory: a most severe obtestation, charge, or adjuration. What is that duty which is ushered in in so solemn a manner? It followeth.

2 Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, <sup>d</sup>rebuke, <sup>e</sup>exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine.

Preach; proclaim like a herald, cry like a common cryer in the hearing of a multitude. Thus God to Isaiah, chap. lviii. 1, Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet. The word; the word of truth, chap. ii. 15, or the gospel, called the word by way of emphasis: see Matt. iv. 23; xxiv. 14; Mark i. 14; xiii. 10; xvi. 15. The word of God, not old wives' fables, endless genealogies, perverse disputings, unedifying questions, &c. This precept reflects

<sup>ii</sup> Tim. 6.

<sup>ii</sup> Or.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> perfected.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

<sup>ii</sup> ch. 2. 21.

upon unpreaching ministers, and impertinent, vain preachers. Be instant; be earnest and diligent. This reflects upon a cold and perfunctory preaching. God bid Isaiah cry aloud, lift up his voice like a trumpet. Sinners are like deaf adders. In season, out of season; that is, at all times, not on the Lord's days only, but any other time when thou hast opportunity; not in times when thou mayst do it with safety, but when the wisdom of the flesh tells thee it is out of season. This reflects upon such as preach rarely, and consult their flesh, whether they should perform it at all, or no. Reprove; ἐλεγξον, convince such as gainsay the truth. Rebuke all sinners, all that live an ill life. This reflects upon those effeminate preachers, against whom Ezekiel denounced the woe, Ezek. xiii. 18, that sew pillows to all armholes; that prophesy smooth things instead of the right things of the word. Exhort; persuade or comfort, (the word signifies both,) as thou seest occasion. With all long suffering; but do what thou doest prudently, with meekness. God needeth not thy passion, though he makes use of thy art in instruction. And doctrine; do it so as to join instruction with thy reproof. This reflects upon flattering, fawning, unfaithful preachers, and such as vent their own passion, rather than pursue their due end for instruction and reformation of souls.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 3. 1. <sup>f</sup> 1 Tim. 1. <sup>g</sup> ch. 3. 6. 3 *For the time will come when they will not endure <sup>f</sup> sound doctrine; <sup>g</sup> but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

For the time will come; this time always was, (as appears by the writings of the prophets,) but it will come more and more; as the world grows older, it will grow more mad. When they, very many that shall live in the world, yea, in the bosom of the church, will not endure sound doctrine, will not endure that preaching which hath any soundness in it, or is of any tendency, life, power, or efficacy, to recover their souls from the diseases of sin and lusts. But after their own lusts, but in favour of their own lusts, and to secure their satisfaction in them, shall they heap to themselves teachers, will be finding out teachers, not according to God's, but to their own hearts; and there will be plenty of them to be found, they shall heap them up, choosing them without any judgment, regarding nothing but whether they will not be smart upon their lusts. Having itching ears; for their ears itch, and they must have those that will scratch them. The disease of lust in their souls brings forth an itch in their ears, that they will have a mind to hear only such as will by scratching please them.

<sup>h</sup> 1 Tim. 1. <sup>i</sup> & 4. 7. <sup>j</sup> Tit. 1. 14. 4 And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and <sup>h</sup> shall be turned unto <sup>i</sup> fables.

And they shall turn away their ears from the truth; either in contempt, or scorn of it, as being delivered in too plain notions or style; or through impatience, not enduring their lusts should be touched, and the evil of their ways showed them. And shall be turned unto fables; delighting to hear fables, any idle stories, or impertinent discourses, provided they touch not their lusts. Missa non mordet, The mass will not bite, was an old saying of the popish faction.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 1. 8. <sup>l</sup> & 2. 3. <sup>m</sup> Acts 21. 8. <sup>n</sup> Eph. 4. 11. <sup>o</sup> 1 Or. suit. <sup>p</sup> Rom. 15. 19. <sup>q</sup> Col. 1. 25. & 4. 17. 5 But watch thou in all things, <sup>k</sup> endure afflictions, do the work of <sup>l</sup> an evangelist, <sup>m</sup> make full proof of thy ministry.

But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions: watching implieth, 1. A negation of sleep. 2. An industrious keeping ourselves awake for some end. Keep thyself from all sin, and from all idleness and laziness, and do this industriously, that thou mayst honour God in thy work. Do the work of an evangelist; for thy work is a great work, the work of one who is to publish the gospel; or of one who is left by me the apostle of Christ to settle the church which I have laid the foundation of, Acts xxi. 8; Eph. iv. 11. Make full proof of thy ministry; make a full proof unto others of thy faithfulness in thy ministerial office and employment.

<sup>r</sup> Phil. 2. 17. <sup>s</sup> 1 Phil. 1. 7. <sup>t</sup> See 2 Pet. 1. 14. 6 For <sup>r</sup> I am now ready to be offered, and the time of <sup>s</sup> my departure is at hand.

For I am now ready to be offered; σκίωδομαι, the word properly signifieth to be offered as a drink-offering, which was offered by being poured out. Some say that σκίωδομαι is only used to signify such offerings whereby some covenant was confirmed; so as it not only signifieth that Paul was sensible that he should die a violent death, but that his death should be an establishment and confirmation of the doctrine of the gospel which he had preached, that he should be offered upon the sacrifice and service of their faith, as he speaketh, Phil. ii. 17, where the same word is used. A learned author thinks it is there used in a little different sense, there as an accession to the sacrifice, here as a preparation to it, they being wont to prepare their sacrifice by pouring wine upon it; which possibly guided our translators to translate it here, I am ready to be offered. And the time of my departure is at hand; ἀναλύσεως we translate it departure, it properly signifieth resolution, because in death we are resolved into dust, from whence we are. If any ask how Paul knew that the time of his death was so near; Ans. He might know it by revelation from God, or from his observation of Nero's temper, malice, or behaviour toward him.

<sup>u</sup> 1 Cor. 9. <sup>v</sup> 24. 25. <sup>w</sup> Phil. 3. 14. <sup>x</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 12. <sup>y</sup> Heb. 12. 1. 7 <sup>u</sup> I have fought a good fight, I have finished <sup>v</sup> my course, I have kept the faith:

I have fought a good fight; my life hath been a military life, but I have not fought the evil fights of ambitious or quarrelsome men: my fighting hath been the good and noble fight of faith, a fight with the world, the flesh, and the devil, a contending for the faith delivered to the saints, a maintaining the lustings of the Spirit against the flesh, a warring with spiritual wickednesses in high places. I have finished my course; God appointed me a race to run, as a Christian, as an apostle and minister of Christ; I have now finished it. I have kept the faith; I have kept the doctrine of faith, upholding and maintaining it in and by my ministry; and I have lived in the exercise of the grace of faith

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me <sup>z</sup> a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me <sup>z</sup> at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

Henceforth there is laid up for me; as to what remains for me, (so the word λώριον signifies, not henceforth, as we translate it,) there is prepared, and in safe keeping for me, Col. i. 5; or, there is appointed for me; see Heb. ix. 27. A crown; another kind of crown than what the conquerors used to have in the Grecian games; a high and great reward, a glory with which my whole man shall be encompassed, as a man's head is with a crown. Of righteousness; the purchase of Christ's righteousness, and an ample reward of mine also, the giving out of which also will be the effect of God's truth and justice, 1 John i. 9. Which the Lord, the righteous judge; and Jesus Christ, who in this shall show himself a righteous judge, shall give it me of his free mercy, for all I have done hath not merited it, at that day, at the day of judgment; my soul shall have it at my dissolution, my whole man in the resurrection. And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing; nor is this crown my particular reward, but if any persons so lead their lives in this world, as that they can desire and be pleased with the thoughts and hopes of the second coming of Christ to judgment, Christ will give them also the same reward.

9 Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: To Rome, where Paul was at this time a prisoner. It appears from Phil. ii. 19, that Timothy did go to Paul at Rome, according to this desire of his, and was with him while a prisoner there.

10 For <sup>a</sup> Demas hath forsaken me, <sup>a</sup> having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.

He showeth the reason why he desired Timothy to come to him, because most of those who were with him were gone. For Demas hath forsaken me; some think this Demas is Demetrius, mentioned 3 John 12, the name being only shortened. He was at Rome with Paul some time, Col. iv. 14. Some make a question, whether Demas wholly apostatized, or only left Paul for a time, and went to Thessalonica about some secular business, afterward returning. Having loved this present world; some make the sense of this phrase no more than minding his worldly business. Others think that he, being frightened with Paul's danger, wholly left him, and went to Thessalonica, possibly his own country, however, at a great distance from the danger of Nero's court. Crescens to Galatia, a province in the Lesser Asia, whither probably Crescens went to preach the gospel. Titus unto Dalmatia; Dalmatia is in Scythia; Titus went thither (without all doubt) to preach the gospel.

<sup>z</sup> 1 Cor. 9. <sup>z</sup> 24. 25. <sup>z</sup> Phil. 3. 14. <sup>z</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 12. <sup>z</sup> Heb. 12. 1.

<sup>z</sup> 1 Cor. 9. <sup>z</sup> 25. Jam. 1. <sup>z</sup> 12. 1 Pet. 5. <sup>z</sup> 4. Rev. 2. 10. <sup>z</sup> p. ch. 1. 12.

<sup>a</sup> Col. 4. 15. <sup>a</sup> Phil. 24. <sup>a</sup> 1 John 2. 15.

11 <sup>1</sup>Only <sup>2</sup>Luke is with me. Take <sup>3</sup>Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

Only Luke is with me; of whom we also read Col. iv. 14. He was a physician, Paul's fellow labourer, Philem. 24. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; of Mark we read Acts xii. 12, and xv. 37. He was kinsman to Barnabas, Col. iv. 10. It appears by that text that he was at Rome with Paul, and his fellow labourer, Philem. 24. For he is profitable to me for the ministry; the ministry of the gospel. Paul's care was more for that, than for a ministering to himself, though he was a prisoner.

12 And <sup>1</sup>Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.

I have given order to Tychicus to come to Ephesus in thy absence.

13 The cloke that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.

Troas was a city in Asia, where we find Paul more than once, Acts xvi. 8; xx. 5; he preached Christ there, 2 Cor. ii. 12. There Paul left an upper garment with one Carpus, which probably (having no great wardrobe) he might want, being a prisoner. And the books, but especially the parchments: interpreters idly busy themselves in inquiring after what they can never find out, what these books were, or what was written in these parchments.

14 <sup>1</sup>Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: <sup>2</sup>the Lord reward him according to his works:

Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: we read of three Alexanders; one, Mark xv. 21, the son of him that bare Christ's cross; another, Acts iv. 6, akin to Annas the High Priest; a third, Acts xix. 33, probably the person here meant, for he was an Ephesian; but he at that time was a disciple of Paul's, as appears there; probably afterward he apostatized, and was excommunicated by Paul, 1 Tim. i. 20, which might possibly provoke him: what harm he did him, and where, whether at Ephesus or Rome, it is not said. The Lord reward him according to his works: how far it is lawful to pray against our enemies, (as Paul did here against Alexander,) see the notes on Psal. cix. 6, &c.; Jer. xi. 20; xii. 3, &c.

15 Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood <sup>1</sup>our words.

16 At my first answer no man stood with me, <sup>2</sup>but all men forsook me: <sup>3</sup>I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

At my first answer, at my first appearing before Nero, and the court of Rome, no man stood with me; none of the Christians stood by me, or owned me; but all men forsook me; but all, being frightened at my danger, left me alone to speak for myself. I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge; they sinned through weakness and human frailty, and the Lord, I hope, will pardon it; God grant them remission.

17 <sup>1</sup>Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; <sup>2</sup>that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered <sup>3</sup>out of the mouth of the lion.

Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me; that is, did not leave me. It is opened by the next word, and strengthened me; he gave me courage and inward ability, so as I was able to plead, and to defend my cause. That by me the preaching might be fully known; that all men that heard me might fully know by God's presence with me, seen in my courage, that my preaching was not from myself, or from men, but from God, the message of God by one to the sons of men. And that all the Gentiles might hear; and that all the heathen present in the court of Rome might hear and believe. And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion; and I was for the present delivered out of my great danger: or possibly he calls Nero (the Roman emperor at that time) a lion for his barbarous cruelties.

18 <sup>1</sup>And the Lord shall deliver me <sup>2</sup>from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: <sup>3</sup>to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work: faith riseth upon experience, 1 Sam. xvii. 37, 46; 2 Cor. i. 10. By evil work may be understood any sin into which Paul might fall through temptation; or the evil works of others, designing mischief to the apostle. He expresseth his faith in this term of various signification, to learn us how to exercise our faith in God in an evil time, viz. believing that God will either deliver us from our danger, or from sinning by reason of our danger, for we have no foundation for our faith to believe that God will at all times keep us from evils of suffering. And will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom; and that he will save us, and preserve us, if not as to a temporal life, yet to a celestial, honourable, glorious inheritance. To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen: this is a usual form of giving praise to God, desiring all honour might be given to him.

19 Salute <sup>1</sup>Prisca and Aquila, and <sup>2</sup>the household of Onesiphorus.

Salute Prisca and Aquila; by this Prisca and Aquila it is more than probable he means that Priscilla and Aquila mentioned 1 Cor. xvi. 19. And the household of Onesiphorus; it cannot be concluded from hence that Onesiphorus was now dead, but probably he was. It is the same man mentioned chap. i. 16.

20 <sup>1</sup>Erastus abode at Corinth: but <sup>2</sup>Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

Erastus abode at Corinth: of this Erastus see Rom. xvi. 23. He was the chamberlain of Corinth, so he abode there. Paul sent him into Macedonia, Acts xix. 22. But Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick; Trophimus was an Ephesian, Acts xxi. 29, one of Paul's companions, Acts xx. 4; he was left at Miletum, a city in Asia, not far from Ephesus.

21 <sup>1</sup>Do thy diligence to come before <sup>2</sup>winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

Do thy diligence to come before winter; that is, to come to Rome to me before winter, either because sailing in the winter time would be more dangerous, or because in the winter time he might have more need of his assistance. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren: we have no further account of these persons in holy writ; the first is a Greek name, the rest Latin, Claudia is a woman's name. Paul sends the respects of these persons, and all the other Christians that at that time were in Rome, to Timothy.

22 <sup>1</sup>The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy <sup>2</sup>spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit: see the like, Gal. vi. 18; Philem. 25. Grace be with you; the free grace of God, in its various emanations, suited to all your necessities, be with you. Amen.

¶ The second epistle unto Timotheus, ordained the first Bishop of the church of the Ephesians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before † Nero the second time.

1 See ch. 1. 15.
2 Col. 4. 14.
3 Philem. 24.
4 Acts 12. 25.
5 15. 37.
6 Col. 4. 10.

1 Acts 29. 4.
2 Eph. 6. 12.
3 Col. 4. 7.
4 Tit. 3. 12.

1 Acts 19. 33.
2 1 Tim. 1. 20.
3 2 Sam. 3. 39.
4 Ps. 78. 4.
5 Rev. 18. 6.

1 Or, our preachings.

1 ch. 1. 15.
2 Acts 7. 60.

1 c Matt. 10.
2 15. Acts 23.
3 11. 27. 28.
4 Acts 9. 15.
5 28. 17. 18.
6 Eph. 3. 8.

1 Ps. 22. 21.
2 2 Pet. 2. 8.

1 Rom. 11.
2 Gal. 1. 5.
3 Heb. 13. 21.

1 Acts 18. 2.
2 Rom. 16. 3.
3 2 Tim. 1. 16.

1 Acts 19. 22.
2 Rom. 16. 23.
3 Acts 20. 4.
4 21. 29.

1 Gal. 6. 19.
2 Philem. 25.

1 Gr. Caesar Nero, or, the emperor Nero.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL

TO TITUS

THE ARGUMENT

As a general of an army, who hath a large country to conquer, cannot himself stay long in a conquered city, but leaving it with a garrison, under commanders, himself still goes forward in his conquests, and by his letters directs those whom he hath left governors in his conquered places how to behave themselves; so the apostle of the Gentiles, having a large field to run over, before he could finish his course, Acts xxvi. 17, 18, could not himself stay long in places where he had brought people into a subjection to the gospel, but after a time, leaving them as a garrison to keep Christ's possession in the place, left them under the conduct of some eminent disciple and minister, to whom he afterwards wrote letters directive of such minister, to settle the church in such a place, what and how to preach, and behave himself; thus he left Timothy at Ephesus, Titus at Crete. Crete is a great island belonging to Grecia, which on the north hath the Aegean Sea, the African Sea on the south. It was anciently called Cures; the inhabitants of it were called Cretes, Acts ii. 11. We read of the island, Acts xxvii., as Paul sailed by it to Rome. It had formerly in it one hundred cities, being in length two hundred and seventy miles, in breadth fifty, in compass eight hundred and nine miles; Cortina, Cydon, Gnossus, Minois, (the country of the famous geographer Strabo,) were some of the cities famous in it. It is now called Candia. It was lately taken from the Venetians, and is now in the possession of the Turks. It was a very rich place, famous for wines, and the place where brass was first found out. When the first plantation of the gospel was made there, the Scripture doth not say: it was made by Paul, as appears by his leaving Titus there. Titus was a Greek, Gal. ii. 3; converted by Paul, as appears by chap. i. 4; afterwards made a minister, for he was Paul's partner and fellow helper, 2 Cor. viii. 23, and called his brother, 2 Cor. ii. 13, used as his messenger, 2 Cor. viii. 6. He was left by Paul in Candia, or Crete, to settle the church there, and to ordain elders in every city, chap. i. 5. He writes this Epistle to him from Nicopolis, chap. iii. 12. There were four cities of that name. The scope of it appears, to any that read it, to be, to direct him, what persons he should ordain as ministers, how to deal with false teachers, and how to behave himself, both as to preaching and living, towards all sorts of persons.

CHAP. I

The salutation, 1-4. For what end Titus was left in Crete, 5. How they should be qualified who are ordained to the ministry, 6-9. The mouths of evil teachers must be stopped, 10, 11. The bad character of the Cretians, 12-16.

A. D. 65. PAUL, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness;

Paul, a servant of God; that is, in the work of the ministry. And an apostle of Jesus Christ; who glory in this as my greatest honour and dignity, that I was one immediately sent by Jesus Christ to preach the gospel. According to the faith of God's elect; κατὰ πίστιν, according to what the elect, or chosen of God from the beginning of the world, have believed; so as it is no new doctrine which I bring: or else κατὰ here should be translated for, denoting the final cause, as some judge it signifieth, 2 Tim. i. 1, and in ver. 9 of this chapter; then the sense is, that he was sent to be an instrument to beget faith in such as God had chosen unto life, Acts xxvi. 18, for those only ordained to eternal life believe, Acts xiii. 48, and Paul was sent to be a helper of their faith. Some think the apostle by this phrase only distinguisheth himself from the ministers of the law. And the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness; to which faith men are brought by the knowledge of the truth, and it worketh by the owning, profession, and acknowledgment of the truth; not all propositions of truth, but that which is productive of a godly life, lying in the true worship of God, and a universal obedience to the Divine will.

2 || In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began;

1 Cr. For. c 2 Tim. l. l. ch. 3. v. 7. d Rom. 23. 19. 1 Tim. 2. 13. e Rom. 16. 25. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 1. 20.

In hope of eternal life; which faith also, producing the acknowledgment, profession, and obedience to the truth, according to godliness, produceth in the soul a hope, or certain expectation, of eternal salvation or happiness. Which God, that cannot lie, promised; nor doth this hope grow up as a rush without mire, or a flag without water, but is bottomed in God's declaration of his will to that purpose; and it is impossible that the God of truth should lie, or speak what he never intended to effect. Επαγγελιατρο might as well here have been translated purposed, and must be so interpreted, if we interpret the next words, before the beginning of time, unless we say it was promised to the Head of the elect, Christ, on their behalf. Before the world began; before the beginning of time, or rather, many ages since, as Rom. xvi. 25. Thus eternal life was promised, though more obscurely, Gen. xv. 1; xvii. 7; xxii. 18.

3 But hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour;

But hath in due times; in proper time, (saith the Greek,) in such time as God had eternally purposed, and as seemed good to the Divine wisdom. Manifested his word through preaching; he hath by setting up the ordinance of preaching, or publishing the gospel, by men sent by him, manifested this promise of eternal life, which lay much obscured under the veil of temporal promises under the Old Testament. Which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour; which office of preaching, or which word, was committed to me, by the will of God, or immediate command of God: as to which, see Acts xxvi. 17, 18.

4 To Titus, mine own son after the common faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

2 Tim. 1. 10. 1 Thes. 2. 1. 1 Tim. 1. 11. 1 Tim. 1. 1. 2. 3. & 4. 10. 2 Cor. 2. 13. & 7. 13. & 8. 6, 16, 23 & 12. 18. Gal. 2. 3. k: Tim. 1. 2. 1 Rom. 1. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 13. 2 Tim. 1. 2.

Mine own son after the common faith; from hence we learn that Titus was converted to Christianity by Paul. Timothy was so called, 1 Tim. i. 2. The salutation is the same with that to Timothy, 1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2, and in most of the Epistles, with small variation: see the notes there, and in the beginning of most of the Epistles.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst <sup>b</sup>set in order the things that are <sup>c</sup>wanting, and <sup>d</sup>ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee:

In Crete; in Candia, as it is now called: see the Argument to this Epistle. Set in order the things that are wanting; set to rights things which I left undone, being hastened away to other places. And ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee: in this island we are told there were a hundred cities, in how many of them the gospel had taken place we are not told. Paul left Titus in this place for this end, to regulate the churches, and constitute officers for the holy ministry, to execute the office of an evangelist; doing what the apostle should have done there could he have stayed.

6 <sup>a</sup>If any be blameless, <sup>b</sup>the husband of one wife, <sup>c</sup>having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly.

If any be blameless: the apostle now directs what kind of persons should be made elders or officers in the church. It is an elliptic speech, where must be something understood to perfect the sense. Do not make every one an elder, but if any be ἀνίγκλητος, see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 10, such a one, as though possibly he may be clamoured on by ill men, yet cannot be justly charged with or accused of any notorious crime. The husband of one wife; one that doth not take the sinful liberty, taken by the Jews and heathens, (but contrary to the rule of Christ,) to have at the same time more than one wife: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. Having faithful children; having also a religious family, children that are believers, or at least honest in a moral sense (so then ministers in those days might marry). Not accused of riot; the Greek is, under an accusation of ἀσωτίας we translate it by a general word, riot, and undoubtedly our English words, sots and sottishness, comes from this word. The word signifieth any kind of luxury, drunkenness, whoredom, prodigality. Unruly; sons of Belial, ungoverned, disorderly persons, like soldiers that will not keep their ranks, or rather, like cattle untamed, that will not endure any yoke. Object. But why must none be put into the ministry that have such children? the fathers may be good men, though the children be bad. Solut. 1. Because the honour and repute of the church is more to be regarded than the interest of any private person. 2. Because it is an ill sign that the parents of such children have not ruled their own houses well, keeping their children in all subjection and gravity under authority, and are therefore very unfit to rule the greater society of a church.

7 For a Bishop must be blameless, as <sup>a</sup>the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, <sup>b</sup>not given to wine, no striker, <sup>c</sup>not given to filthy lucre;

For a bishop must be blameless; one that hath an oversight of the church of God, ought to be one whom none can truly tax with any scandalous sin. As the steward of God; as a chief servant in God's house, intrusted to dispense his mysteries, 1 Cor. iv. 1, one that should set an example to the under-servants in the house of God. Not self-willed; not αυθαδην, one that pleaseth himself, proud, stubborn, pertinacious, confident, &c., having a high opinion of his own person, parts, judgment, or humour; for all this the word signifies. Not soon angry; θυραλον, not too quick and subject to passion; how then shall he in meekness instruct those that are without? Not given to wine: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3, where the same word is used. No striker, not given to filthy lucre: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3, where both these qualifications are mentioned, and opened.

8 <sup>a</sup>But a lover of hospitality, a lover of <sup>b</sup>good men, sober, just, holy, temperate;

But a lover of hospitality; a lover of strangers: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. A lover of good men; one that hath a kindness for good men, or who loves all good things. Sober: see the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. Just; just in his dealings betwixt man and man, giving to all their due. Holy; one that reverenceth and worshippeth God, and is heavenly and spiritual in his conversation. Temperate; one that restraineth all his evil inclinations and propensions, that hath brought his sensitive appetite under the dominion and government of his reason.

9 <sup>a</sup>Holding fast <sup>b</sup>the faithful word <sup>c</sup>as he hath been taught, that he may be able <sup>d</sup>by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

Holding fast the faithful word, as he hath been taught; no airy, uncertain man, that is of that opinion which his company is of, or his age favours, but holding steady the word of faith, as he hath learned it from me, and the rest of the apostles. That he may be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort, his work is to persuade others to the faith, and to convince the gainsayers; by sound arguments to convince those that speak contrary to it; and if he himself be ignorant of, or uncertain, as to that, how can he ever discharge this employment?

10 For <sup>a</sup>there are many unruly and vain talkers and <sup>b</sup>deceivers, <sup>c</sup>specially they of the circumcision:

For there are many unruly and vain talkers: we have had both of these words before; the first signifieth stubborn, unruly men; the second, idle, foolish, vain talkers: the apostle saith, that in that age there were many of these. And deceivers; and such who were deceivers of other men's souls, or had their own souls deceived. Specially they of the circumcision; especially (he saith) the Jews, who mixed the law with the gospel; pressed the necessary observance of their ceremonies, and taught that all the Jews should be saved: of these there were many in Crete, they at this time being scattered abroad over the face of the whole earth.

11 Whose mouths must be stopped, <sup>a</sup>who subvert whole houses, teaching <sup>b</sup>things which they ought not, <sup>c</sup>for filthy lucre's sake.

Whose mouths must be stopped; the word is active; such ministers ought to be placed in cities as shall be able and fit to stop such persons' mouths, by sound doctrine and arguments fit to convince them: or, thou oughtest to stop their mouths by silencing them; though I do not see how this was practicable in a pagan country, otherwise than by persuading Christians not to hear them. Who subvert whole houses; who, as to the foundation of faith and its building, overturn whole families of Christians. Teaching things which they ought not; infusing false doctrine into them. For filthy lucre's sake; and all for filthy gain: and all gain is so, that is got by deceiving and ruining of people's souls, as to their faith and salvation.

12 <sup>a</sup>One of themselves, <sup>b</sup>even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are <sup>c</sup>always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies.

One of themselves, even a prophet of their own; Epimenides, a Greek poet, thus spake of the people of this country, whom he calls a prophet, because he was a poet, and wrote something about such divine oracles as they had. Said, The Cretians are always liars: the Cretians were famous for lying and falsehood, so as it became a proverb. He called them evil beasts, either for their cruelty or treachery. Slow bellies; a lazy, idle people, that had much more inclination to eat and drink than they had to work in any honest labour. From all this the apostle would infer, that Titus had the more need be watchful in his place, and faithful in the discharge of his office, being amongst such a people.

13 This witness is true. <sup>a</sup>Wherefore <sup>b</sup>rebuke them sharply, that they may be <sup>c</sup>sound in the faith;

This witness is true; this testimony of Epimenides is true, what I have found by experience, and those of them

h 1 Cor. 11.

84.

l Or, left widow.

o Acts 14. 23.

2 Tim. 2. 2.

p 1 Tim. 3.

2, &c.

q 1 Tim. 3. 12.

r 1 Tim. 3.

4, 12.

s Mat. 24. 45.

1 Cor. 4. 1, 2.

t Lev. 10. 9.

1 Tim. 3. 3.

8. Eph. 5. 16.

u 1 Tim. 3.

3, & 1 Pet.

5. 2.

x 1 Tim. 3. 2.

y Or, good things.

7 2 Thess. 2.

15. 2 Tim.

1. 13.

z 1 Tim. 1.

15. & 4. 9.

aa & 6. 3.

2 Tim. 2. 2.

bb Or, in

cc teaching.

dd 1 Tim. 1. 10. & 6. 3. 2 Tim. 4. 3. ch. 2. 1.

b 1 Tim. 1. 6.

c Rom. 16.

dd Acts 15. 1.

e Matt. 23.

f 14. 2 Tim.

g 3. 6.

h 1 Tim. 6. 5.

g Acts 17. 23.

h 2 Cor. 13.

i 10. 2 Tim.

j 4. 2.

k ch. 2. 2.

that in profession have embraced the Christian faith may have some tincture of their nation's vices. Wherefore rebuke them sharply; if thou meetest with any such, reprove or convince them ἀπορώμεις, cuttingly, that is, sharply, severely; the metaphor possibly is fetched from surgeons, who cut out dead flesh to the quick. That they may be sound in the faith; that they may be sound in the doctrine of the gospel, or in their minds, not infected with any vice.

14 <sup>k</sup> Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and <sup>l</sup> commandments of men, that turn from the truth.

Not giving heed to Jewish fables: by his calling them Jewish fables, (not old wives' fables, as in the Epistle to Timothy,) he lets us know that he reflects upon those Jews that seemed to be proselyted, but yet had a tincture of their Jewish education, and spent their discourse about such fabulous traditions as the Jews had. And commandments of men; and the traditions and constitutions of the scribes and Pharisees. That turn from the truth; abhorring the gospel, and the doctrine of truth in it.

15 <sup>m</sup> Unto the pure all things are pure: but <sup>n</sup> unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

Unto the pure all things are pure: by the pure here (as appeareth by the terms opposed to it) are meant all those whose hearts are purified by faith, working by love in a holy life. To these he saith all things, that is, all the creatures of God, all meats and drinks, are pure. What God hath cleansed none ought to call common or impure, Acts x. 14; so as, notwithstanding any law of God to the contrary, any believers under the gospel may eat of any meats. But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but if men be unbelievers, and so defiled, having not their hearts purified by faith, Acts xv. 9, nothing is pure to them. But even their mind and conscience is defiled; their mind, their notion and understanding, is defiled; and their conscience, which is the practical judgment they make up about things, is defiled: if they forbear to eat, they are defiled through superstition; if they do eat, they sin by acting against the dictate of their conscience, which is the proximate rule of men's actions.

16 They profess that they know God; but <sup>o</sup> in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, <sup>p</sup> and unto every good work <sup>q</sup> reprobate.

They profess that they know God; he is speaking of the Jews, who (all of them) professed to know and to believe one living and true God. But in works they deny him; but they lived like atheists, as if there were no God in the world, Rom. ii. 17—24. Being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate; they are persons justly to be abominated of all good men, ἀπειθεῖς, unbelieving in the gospel, disobedient to the rule of the law, and awkward to, and averse from, any good work.

CHAP. II

Directions given to Titus both for his doctrine and life, 1—8. The duty of servants, 9, 10. The gospel teacheth all men to renounce wickedness, and to lead sober, righteous, and godly lives, 11—15.

BUT speak thou the things which become <sup>a</sup> sound doctrine:

That is, preach those things which agree with that doctrine which is sound, and which tendeth to make others sound in the faith, and in a holy life. Be not thou led by the example of those triflers in preaching, but let the subjects of thy discourse be what may tend to edifying; nor is there any more effectual way to stop the mouths of those fabelers. Dagon will fall down before the ark of God.

2 That the aged men be <sup>b</sup> sober, grave, temperate, <sup>c</sup> sound in faith, in charity, in patience.

That the aged men be sober: by the word πρῶβυρος seems here to be signified elders in age; he would have Timothy preach that these should be νηφάλιοι, sober, both as to body and mind: we met with the word before, 1 Tim. iii. 2, 11. Grave; of a modest, composed behaviour, not light and airy. Temperate; that is, able to govern their passions and inclinations. Sound in faith; we have met with the phrase before, chap. i. 13; see the notes; neither rotten through error, nor sick through fluctuation or scepticism. In charity, that is, love. In patience; a patient bearing of evils.

3 <sup>e</sup> The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh <sup>f</sup> holiness, not <sup>g</sup> false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

The aged women likewise; that is, do thou also teach the women that in age exceed others. That they be in behaviour as becometh holiness; ἐν καταστάσει ἁγιωσύνης; to be in their habit becoming holiness. The word is of a very large signification, it signifies state, gesture, and habit; we have well translated it by as general a word, behaviour; it signifies clothes, converse, one's whole carriage. Not false accusers; not devils. That name is given to the devil, because he is the accuser of the brethren, and he was a liar from the beginning; it is applied to any persons that charge others falsely. Not given to much wine: Greek, not serving much wine; for those that frequent the tap too much, are ordinarily enslaved to it. Teachers of good things; privately instructing others in what is good, both by their discourse and example.

4 That they may teach the young women to be <sup>h</sup> sober, <sup>i</sup> to love their husbands, to love their children,

That they may teach the young women to be sober: young women, especially conversing amongst heathens, are prone to be light and airy, and over frolicsome, following the heat of their youthful temper, and forming their converse after the manner of others; which is a behaviour, though it may suit their youth, yet if they be Christians it will not suit their profession, which calls to them for more gravity; speak to them that are aged to mind them to be sober. To love their husbands, to love their children: it being natural for young women to love their husbands and children, these precepts seem not so much to concern the things, as the manner of it, to love them as they ought to love them.

5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, <sup>j</sup> obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

To be discreet; σώφρωνας; the word signifies temperate, and imports an ability to govern all our affections and passions. Discretion is but one piece of the fruit. Chaste; the word signifieth pure as well as chaste, and chastity only as it is a species of purity. Keepers at home; housewives, not spending their time in gadding abroad, but in looking to the affairs of their own families. Obedient to their own husbands: the same is required of wives, Eph. v. 22, and is due from them to their husbands, as being their head. That the word of God be not blasphemed: as for the discharge of their duty towards God, so for the credit and reputation of the gospel, that for their carriage contrary to the rules of nature and morality, as well as of religion, the gospel may not be evil spoken of, as if from that they had learned their ill and indecent behaviour.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be <sup>k</sup> sober minded.

The word signifieth to be temperate, sober, wise, discreet, to govern their passions; an exhortation more specially necessary for young men, whose natural heat inclineth them to passion and rashness.

7 <sup>l</sup> In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine <sup>m</sup> shewing uncorruptness, gravity, <sup>n</sup> sincerity,

In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: he is an ill teacher of others who teacheth them not by his own example, as well as by his doctrine; for that physician proves ordinarily little valued in his prescriptions to k 1 Tim. 1. 6. & 4. 7.

l 2 Tim. 4. 4.
m 1 Pt. 2. 12.
n Matt. 15. 9.
o Col. 2. 22.
p Luke 11. 39, 40, 41.
q Rom. 14. 14, 20. 1 Cor. 6. 12. & 10. 23.
r 2 Tim. 4. 3, 4.
s Rom. 14. 22.

e 1 Tim. 2. 9.
f 10. & 3. 11.
g 1 Pet. 3. 3, 4.
h Or, holy women.
i Or, makethates.
j 2 Tim. 3. 3.

k Or, wise.
l 1 Tim. 5. 14.

m 1 Cor. 14. 34. Eph. 5. 22. Col. 3. 18. 1 Tim. 2. 11. 1 Pet. 3. 1, 2. n Rom. 2. 24. 1 Tim. 6. 1.

k Or, discreet.

l 1 Tim. 4. 12. 1 Pet. 5. 3.
m Eph. 6. 24.

his patients, whom they know to be in the same danger, and sick of the same disease, and yet refuseth himself to use what he prescribeth others: the patients will surely say to him, Physician, heal thyself. The apostle therefore requires of Titus that he should be himself a pattern of holiness; and those ministers who are not so, vainly persuade others to be such. People (let ministers say what they will) will believe little danger to be in those courses in which their leader himself walks. In doctrine showing uncorruptness; preaching not rotten, but sound doctrine; and doing it with authority, and gravity, and sincerity; the word is ἀσφαρσίαν, incorruptibility. It is not read in many copies, nor translated by many interpreters; and is much of the same sense with ἀδιαφθορίαν, which is the first word, by our translation interpreted uncorruptness.

8 <sup>1 Tim. 6. 3. k Heb. 5. 9. 1 Tim. 5. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 12. 15. A. 3. 16. 12 Thess. 3. 14.</sup> Sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

Sound speech, that cannot be condemned: Paul (as yet) seemeth to be directing Titus as a minister, and the rest of the ministers in Crete, how to behave themselves in the ministry, for the last word being plural, you, signifieth either the ministry, or else is put for thee; he would have Titus not only preach sound doctrine, not corrupt, and do it gravely, but also preach profitable doctrine, tending to make the souls of others sound and healthy; unless perhaps by λόγον be here meant his style and phrase, which he would have such as none could justly condemn. What was said of Cæsar's wife, that she ought not only to be chaste, but so to behave herself as not to be suspected otherwise, is applicable to ministers; their doctrine, and phrase used in their ministry, ought not only to be sound and grave, but such as none should judge or censure for other. That he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed; that the adversaries of the truth may be ashamed of their aspersing them or it. Having no evil thing to say of you; and may have no evil thing to charge them with.

9 <sup>m Eph. 6. 5. Col. 3. 22. 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 2. 18. n Eph. 5. 24. 1 Or. governing.</sup> Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again;

Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters; the apostle directeth as to servants of all sorts, whether bond or free, otherwise than that by covenant they have obliged themselves to men, he willeth they should be obedient to the commands of those who were their legal masters, neither thinking themselves free from them by their Christianity, if their masters were pagans, nor that they had a greater liberty to be saucy with them, or less obedient to them, because they were Christians, and upon that account brethren. 1 Tim. vi. 2. And to please them well in all things; that is, in civil things, wherein alone they were servants. Not answering again; not saucily replying when they were reproved, nor contradicting the commands of their masters.

10 <sup>o Matt. 5. 16. Phil. 2. 15.</sup> Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

Not purloining; Νοσφιζούμενος the word signifieth taking something away from others to our own use, and it signifies properly the taking not the whole, but a part of a thing; it is used to signify the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, who kept back part of what they sold their estate for, Acts v. 2, 3. But shewing all good fidelity; honesty, and truth, and diligence. That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; that they may not be a scandal or reproach to the gospel to which they make a profession, but may be an ornament to it in all things, as remembering that it is the doctrine of God our great Preserver, and of Jesus Christ our blessed Saviour.

11 <sup>p Rom. 5. 13. ch. 3. 4, 5. 1 Pet. 5. 12. 1 Or. that</sup> For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared. q Luke 3. 6. John 1. 9. 1 Tim. 2. 4. The gospel of our Lord Jesus, which containeth the glad tidings of salvation, is not now hidden, and obscurely delivered, as in the times of the Old Testament; but is risen up as the sun, or some bright star, directing all men their duties in their several stations, that is, all sorts of men amongst whom it cometh.

12 <sup>r Luke 1. 75. Rom. 6. 19. Eph. 1. 4. Col. 1. 22. 1 Thess. 4. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 2. 1 John 2. 16.</sup> Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

Teaching us that, denying ungodliness; all atheism or false religion, living without regard to any Divine Being, or according to our own erroneous and superstitious conceits and opinions of him. And worldly lusts; and such inclinations, and unlawful desires, and lustings after secular things, as are commonly found in men of the world. We should live soberly; we should live, with respect to ourselves, in a just government of our affections and passions. Righteously; and with respect to others, giving to every one their due. And godly; and with respect to God, piously discharging the duties and paying the homage we owe unto him. In this present world; so long as we live in this world, where we have temptations to the contrary.

13 <sup>t 1 Cor. 1. 7. Phil. 3. 20. 2 Pet. 3. 12. n Acts 24. 15. Col. 1. 5. 22. ch. 1. 2. & 3. 7. x Col. 3. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 1, 8. Heb. 9. 28. 1 Pet. 1. 7. 1 John 3. 2.</sup> Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;

Looking for that blessed hope; the object or end of our hope, the salvation of our souls. Gal. v. 5; Col. i. 5. And the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; and in order thereunto, looking for the coming of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ, to the last judgment. The same person is here meant by the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. 1. It is he whom God hath appointed to be the judge of the quick and dead. 2. Επιφάνεια, by us translated appearing, is attributed only to the Second Person in the Blessed Trinity, 2 Thess. ii. 8; 1 Tim. vi. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8. From this text the Divine nature of Christ is irrefragably concluded; he is not only called God, but μέγας Θεός, the great God, which cannot be understood of a made God.

14 <sup>y Gal. 1. 4. & 2. 20. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Tim. 2. 6. s Heb. 9. 14. a Ex. 15. 16. & 19. 5. Deut. 7. 6. & 14. 2. & 25. 18. 1 Pet. 2. 9. b Eph. 2. 10. ch. 3. 8.</sup> Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

Who gave himself for us; which great God and Saviour Jesus Christ was not only sent and given by the Father, John iii. 16, but freely gave up himself to be incarnate, and to die for us, υπὲρ ἡμῶν, in our stead to die. That he might redeem us from all iniquity; that by that price he might purchase salvation for us, delivering us both from the guilt and power of sin, who were slaves and captives to our lusts. And that he might purify unto himself λαόν περιεσίον, we translate it a peculiar people; some translate it an egregious, famous, principal people; others say it signifieth something got by our own labour and industry, and laid up for our own use; others say it signifieth something we have set our hearts and affections upon, in a special, peculiar manner. Zealous of good works; studious to do, and warmly pursuing, all such works as are acceptable to God, and profitable to ourselves and others.

15 <sup>c 2 Tim. 4. 2. d 1 Tim. 4. 12.</sup> These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

These things speak, and exhort; whatsoever I have in this Epistle said unto thee, I have therefore spoke, that thou mightest speak to the same sense to others, and persuade them to the practice of them. And rebuke with all authority; when thou hast occasion to reprove any for their errors, do not do it imperiously, but with meekness; nor yet slightly and cursorily, but showing all gravity and authority. Let no man despise thee; and do not so demean thyself, as to give any persons occasion to despise thee.

CHAP. III

Christians are admonished to be subject to civil powers, and of a peaceable and quiet demeanour, 1. 2. They are saved from their sins by God's mercy through Christ, but must maintain good works, 3—8. Genealogies and contentions about the law are to be avoided, 9; and obstinate heretics to be rejected, 10, 11. Paul appointeth Titus when and where to come to him, 12, 13; recommendeth acts of mercy to Christians, 14; and concludeth with salutations and a benediction, 15.

1 PUT them in mind <sup>a</sup>to be subject to principalities and powers, <sup>b</sup>to obey magistrates, <sup>c</sup>to be ready to every good work,

Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers: all the supreme secular powers at this time were pagans, and no friends to the Christians in their dominions, which might be a temptation to the Christians to rebel against them, or at least not to yield them so free, universal, and cheerful an obedience as they ought; therefore the apostle presseth this duty upon them, and that not here only, but Rom. xiii. 1: see 1 Pet. ii. 13. To obey magistrates: by the former term he might understand the supreme magistrates, by the latter, those inferior ranks; as the apostle Peter expresseth himself more particularly, 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14. To be ready to every good work; to be free, and prepared to every work which is acceptable to God and honourable in itself.

2 <sup>c</sup>To speak evil of no man, <sup>d</sup>to be no brawlers, <sup>e</sup>but <sup>f</sup>gentle, shewing all <sup>g</sup>meekness unto all men.

To speak evil of no man; Greek, to blaspheme no man. Blasphemy is a speaking evil, whether it be applied to God or man, though use hath so obtained, that we only in common discourse speak of blaspheming God. To be no brawlers; to be no fighters, (ἀμάχως,) neither with hands nor tongues. But gentle; to be modest, fair, equitable men. Showing all meekness unto all men; forbearing wrath and passion in their converse with all.

3 For <sup>h</sup>we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish; without any knowledge, wisdom, or spiritual understanding. Disobedient: the word signifieth as well unbelieving as disobedient, neither persuaded to assent to the truth, nor yet to live up to the rule of the gospel. Deceived by the deceitfulness of sin. Serving divers lusts and pleasures; being slaves to our sensitive appetite. Living in malice and envy; suffering wrath to rest in our bosoms, till it boiled up to a desire of revenge, and showed itself in actions of that nature, and pining at the good and prosperity of others. Hateful; deserving to be abominated by good men. And hating one another; and hating good men, or such as were our neighbours: and having been so ourselves formerly, we ought to pity such as still are so.

4 But after that <sup>h</sup>the kindness and <sup>i</sup>love of <sup>j</sup>God our Saviour toward man appeared,

Kindness; χρηστότης the word signifies one's easiness to do good to another; that native goodness that is in God, rendering him inclinable to love, and prone to do good unto the sons of men. This was in God from eternity, but appeared in his sending Christ, and then his Spirit, and in the application of Christ's redemption to particular souls.

5 <sup>k</sup>Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by <sup>l</sup>the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

Not by works of righteousness which we have done; not according to our works, 2 Tim. i. 9, whether ceremonial or moral. But according to his mercy; but from his own bowels freely yearning upon persons in misery. He saved us; he hath put us into a state of, and given us a right to, eternal salvation. By the washing of regeneration; washing us by regeneration, as in a laver, the pledge and sign of which is in baptism. And renewing of the Holy Ghost; the Holy Spirit changing and renewing our natures.

6 <sup>m</sup>Which he shed on us <sup>n</sup>abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

Which Holy Spirit, as well for the renewing of us, as for the collation of more common or extraordinary gifts, God poured out upon us abundantly, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ our Saviour.

7 <sup>o</sup>That being justified by his grace, <sup>p</sup>we should be made heirs <sup>q</sup>according to the hope of eternal life.

That being justified by his grace; that, through the free love of God, having the guilt of our sins removed, and the righteousness of Christ reckoned to us for righteousness, we should be made heirs; should, through adoption, be made children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 17. According to the hope of eternal life: some think that the words should be read thus, That we, according to hope, should be made heirs of eternal life; because otherwise, the text hath no object to relate to heirs. But what should we be heirs of, but the kingdom mentioned Matt. xxv. 34? Though it be true, we are no more than heirs according to hope, nor is any man otherwise an heir of an inheritance, as heir stands distinguished from an owner or proprietor.

8 <sup>r</sup>This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful <sup>s</sup>to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

This is a faithful saying: we had this phrase before, 1 Tim. i. 15; iii. 1; iv. 9; 2 Tim. ii. 11. It may be applied to what went before, or what follows. And these things I will that thou affirm constantly; this is the doctrine I would have thee preach, maintain, and stand to. That they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works; that those who assent to these things as true, and have cast their souls upon God and Jesus Christ for the fulfilling of them, may (considering good works are the condition annexed to the promise of this eternal life and salvation) be careful to practise all that God hath commanded them in all their relations. These things are good and profitable unto men; all these things are true in themselves, and profitable for men to know and understand.

9 But <sup>t</sup>avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; <sup>u</sup>for they are unprofitable and vain.

But avoid foolish questions; in the discharge of thy ministry meddle not with idle questions, 2 Tim. ii. 23, tending to no godly edifying. And genealogies; and sifting out genealogies, 1 Tim. i. 4. And contentions; and strifes about words, or things unprofitable; perverse disputings, and oppositions of science falsely so called, 1 Tim. vi. 4, 5, 20. And strivings about the law; particularly questions about the law, the traditions and constitutions of the elders about it. For they are unprofitable and vain; these things are to no purpose or advantage.

10 A man that is an heretic <sup>v</sup>after the first and second admonition <sup>w</sup>reject;

A man that is an heretic: two things make up a heretic according to the common acceptance of the term now: 1. an error in some matters of faith. 2. Stubbornness and contumacy in the holding and maintaining of it. Whether it so signified so early I cannot tell; it seems to refer to the former verse, supposing some that, notwithstanding all the endeavours of Titus, would be striving and contending for niceties about questions, genealogies, &c. After the first and second admonition reject: for such, saith the apostle, admonish them once and again; if they will not have done, refuse them, reject them. Whether excommunication can be certainly built upon this text, may be doubted; παραιτέωμαι signifies no more than to avoid, reject, or refuse.

11 Knowing that he that is such is subverted,

<sup>a</sup> Rom. 13. 1.
<sup>1</sup> Pet. 2. 13.
<sup>b</sup> Col. 1. 10.
<sup>2</sup> Tim. 2. 21.
Heb. 13. 21.

<sup>c</sup> Eph. 4. 31.
<sup>d</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25.
<sup>e</sup> Phil. 4. 5.
<sup>f</sup> Eph. 4. 2.
Col. 3. 12.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Cor. 6. 11.
Eph. 2. 1.
Col. 1. 21.
& 3. 7.
<sup>h</sup> 1 Pet. 4. 3.

<sup>i</sup> Or, pity.
<sup>j</sup> 1 Tim. 2. 3.

<sup>k</sup> Rom. 3. 20.
& 5. 11. & 11.
<sup>l</sup> Gal. 2. 16.
Eph. 2. 4, 8.
<sup>m</sup> 2 Tim. 1. 9.
<sup>n</sup> John 3. 3, 5.
Eph. 5. 26.
<sup>o</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 21.

<sup>m</sup> Ezek. 36.
25. Joel 2.
28. John 1.
16. Acts 2.
33. & 10. 45. Rom. 5. 5.
<sup>n</sup> Gr. richly.

<sup>o</sup> Rom. 3. 24.
Gal. 2. 16.
ch. 2. 11.
<sup>p</sup> Rom. 8. 23, 24.
p ch. 1. 2.

<sup>q</sup> 1 Tim. 1. 15.
ch. 1. 9.

<sup>r</sup> ver. 1. 14.
ch. 2. 14.

<sup>s</sup> 1 Tim. 1. 4.
<sup>t</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 23.
ch. 1. 14.

<sup>t</sup> 2 Tim. 2. 14.

<sup>u</sup> 2 Cor. 13. 2.
x Matt. 18.
17. Rom. 16.
17. 2 Thess. 3. 5.
2 John 10.

<sup>y</sup> Acts 13. 46. and sinneth, <sup>z</sup> being condemned of himself.

Is subverted; ἐξέπραται, is turned out of the true and right way and road; and sinneth, and is a transgressor, being condemned of himself, condemned of his own conscience; for he who spends his time about questions and genealogies, and strifes of words, and little questions about the law, instead of preaching Christ, is told by his own conscience that he doth not do his duty.

12 When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or <sup>z</sup> Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

Of Artemas we read in no other place, but of Tychicus often; they were both ministers, one of which Paul intended to send to take care of the church in Crete, in the absence of Titus, whom he would have come to him to Nicopolis, where he designed to take up his winter quarters; but being very loth that the flock at Crete should for a little time be without a shepherd, he limits the time of Titus's setting out towards him, till one of them should come into Crete.

<sup>a</sup> Acts 18. 24. 13 Bring Zenas the Lawyer and <sup>a</sup> Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

Of this Zenas we read no more in holy writ, but of Apollos we read both in the Acts, and 1 Cor. iii. 4, 5, 22: it seemeth they were about to go to Paul to Nicopolis. That nothing be wanting unto them; the apostle would have Titus take care that they might want no necessaries that might accommodate them in their journey.

14 And let our's also learn <sup>b</sup> to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be <sup>c</sup> not unfruitful.

And let ours also; either those of our order, ministers of the gospel, or those that are Christians. Learn to maintain good works; in the Greek it is, to excel, or to be in the front, or to show forth, or maintain, and each sense hath its patrons of note. For necessary uses; for the necessary uses of the church, or of others, or for their own necessary uses. I take their sense who would expound the phrase, maintain good works, by learning some honest trade, to be foreign to the true sense of the phrase.

15 All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Greet them that love us in the faith; that love us as we are Christians, in and for the gospel. Grace be with you all. Amen: the free love of God be thy portion, and the portion of all the Christians in Crete.

¶ It was written to Titus, ordained the first Bishop of the church of the Cretians, from Nicopolis of Macedonia.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL

TO

PHILEMON

THE ARGUMENT

THIS Epistle is different from the other Epistles, because it is written upon a particular subject, of more special concernment: that it was written by Paul it is not doubted, it hath what he calleth his token in every Epistle, 2 Thess. iii. 17. Who this Philemon was is not so easily determined. Some have judged him a Phrygian, and of Colosse: see Col. iv. 9. He appeareth to have been a minister by Paul's calling him his fellow labourer, ver. 1, his brother, ver. 7, his partner, ver. 17. It is conjectured that he was one in the conversion of whom God made use of Paul as an instrument, from ver. 19, where Paul tells him, that he would not say that he owed unto him his own self. He seems to have been a man of some estate, for he kept a servant, and refreshed the bowels of the saints, ver. 7. He had a company of Christians in his house, ver. 2. The time when Paul wrote this Epistle is not certain; it was when he was aged and a prisoner, ver. 9, from whence it is evident that it was written from Rome. Some think it was written before the Second Epistle to Timothy, because he speaks of hopes that he had of being restored to his liberty, ver. 22, and in his Epistle to Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 7, he seems to have no such hopes. He also here, ver. 24, sends him the salutation of Demas, who he saith, 2 Tim. iv. 10, had forsaken him. Others think it was written after that, when Demas was again returned to him; but it is not so clear that he ever returned. It is very probable that it was written much about the same time with the Epistle to the Colossians, for mention is made of Onesimus as a faithful brother, Col. iv. 9; there is also mention made of Marcus, Aristarchus, Epaphras, Lucas, and Demas, and Archippus, who are all named in this Epistle, and no more are here named, but Apphia. The scope of the Epistle is evident, to reconcile Onesimus to Philemon. Onesimus had been a servant to Philemon, and it should seem had wronged him by purloining some of his goods. He came to Rome, and was there converted by Paul, being a prisoner, ver. 10. The apostle would not detain him, being another man's servant, but sends him back with this recommendatory letter to his master. This recommendation was the occasion and is the matter of this Epistle; in the penning of which the apostle showeth himself as much an orator, as he had in his Epistle to the Romans, and some other of his Epistles, showed his skill at an argument; for the Epistle is penned with great art, and many topics are used to persuade Philemon again to receive him into his service; some such, as would incline one to think, that Paul knew this Philemon was something covetous, and would be a little difficult to grant his request.

The salutation, 1—3. Paul declareth his joy in hearing of the love and faith of Philemon, 4—7; earnestly entreating him to receive into his favour his once fugitive servant Onesimus, now become a faithful Christian, 8—21. He desireth him to provide a lodging for himself, who was in expectation of a speedy release, 22; and concludeth with salutations and a benediction, 23—25.

PAUL, <sup>a</sup> a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, <sup>b</sup> and fellowlabourer,

Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ; that is, for the sake of Christ, for the gospel, and for preaching of Jesus Christ. And Timothy our brother; from whence it is evident that

A. D. 64.
a Eph. 3. 1.
& 4. 1.
2 Tim. 1. 8.
ver. 9.
b Phil. 2. 25.

Timothy was come to Paul at Rome, according to his desire, 2 Tim. iv. 9, 21, before this Epistle was written, which manifesteth that Second Epistle not to have been the last he wrote. The apostle useth to join some others with himself in his salutation; Sosthenes, 1 Cor. i. 1; Timothy, 2 Cor. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1; 1 Thess. i. 1, where Silvanus also is added; from whence it appeareth that Timothy was Paul's ordinary companion, and the apostle sheweth his humility in joining the name of so young a man with his own. Fellow labourer; whence we gather that Philemon was not a Christian only, but a minister, probably one of the ministers in Colosse in Phrygia, for it appeareth that Onesimus his servant was a Colossian, Col. iv. 9.

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus <sup>d</sup>our fellowsoldier, and to <sup>e</sup>the church in thy house :

Apphia was the Roman name of a woman; and the naming of her before Archippus, a minister, makes it probable she was Philemon's wife. It appears this Archippus was a minister, from Col. iv. 17. He calleth him his fellow soldier, because he was engaged in some of those many dangers Paul encountered, but we are not told in Scripture which. And to the church in thy house; all those Christians that live in thy family: we have the like expression, Rom. xvi. 5; 1 Cor. xvi. 19; Col. iv. 15. The apostle doth not always by the term church signify a body under ecclesiastical discipline, but sometimes calleth a company of Christians ordinarily conversing together by that name. Those who think the body of the church were wont constantly to meet in Philemon's house, seem not to consider how the dangers of those times made such a thing hardly practicable.

3 <sup>f</sup>Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The common salutation: see the notes on Rom. i. 7; 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2, &c.

4 <sup>g</sup>I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, See the notes on 2 Tim. i. 3.

5 <sup>h</sup>Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

Hearing of thy love; thy love to God and to the saints, ver. 7. The apostle putteth love here before faith, contrary to the true order of those spiritual habits, for love must be the fruit of faith, which worketh by love, and to his own order in other places, 1 Tim. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 13; possibly to show us that he spake of that love which is conjoined with faith, and of that faith which showeth its truth by love. And faith; faith in Christ. Which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus; that faith which thou hast in Christ, reposing thy confidence in him for salvation, and that love which worketh in thee towards Christ. And toward all saints; and is seen in thy readiness to do good to all Christians, such especially as are saints indeed; because thy goodness extendeth not to God, thou showest it to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, like David, Psal. xvi. 2, 3.

6 That the communication of thy faith <sup>i</sup>may become effectual <sup>j</sup>by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

That the communication of thy faith: the word sometime signifieth communion, in all which there is a mutual communication betwixt those with whom the communion is. That thou mayst declare that thou hast the same common faith with us, thou communicatest the fruits of it. May become effectual; and showest that it is not a dead, inoperative faith, but the true faith of God's elect, Tit. i. 1, working by love, Gal. v. 6. and showing itself by good works, James ii. 18. By the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus; that every good thing, every good habit of grace which Jesus Christ hath wrought in thy soul, might be acknowledged by others, (the servants of Christ,) to whom thou declarest thy love and goodness.

7 For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints <sup>k</sup>are refreshed by thee, brother.

For we have great joy and consolation in thy love; thy love doth not extend only to the poor distressed saints helped and relieved by thee, but it hath its effect upon others together with myself; it is a wonderful joy and comfort to us to hear that God hath so opened and enlarged thy heart: the fruits of grace in one, are a true cause of joy and thanksgiving to all Christians, because God by them is glorified. Because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother; the saints, or the bowels of the saints, ἀναπίπνυται, are brought to a rest, as travellers after their journey, or labourers after their day's labour, when they come to sit still.

8 Wherefore, <sup>l</sup>though I might be much <sup>m</sup>bold in Christ to injoin thee that which is convenient,

Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ; in the Greek it is, Wherefore, having much παρρησία, boldness, liberty or freedom of speech, or much power and authority, or right, as Heb. x. 19, for Christ's sake, being Christ's apostle, or speaking for the sake of Christ. To injoin thee; to command thee, authoritatively. That which is convenient; τὸ ἀνήκον, things that are expedient, or convenient, fit for thee to do. My office authorizeth me in such cases.

9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, <sup>n</sup>and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

Yet for love's sake; writing to thee in a cause of love, where so good and charitable a man may have an opportunity to express his charity. Or rather, out of my love and kindness to thee, persuading me that I need not use my apostolical authority to such a brother and friend, I beseech thee. Being such an one as Paul the aged; being such a one as Paul now much in years, and not like to trouble thee long with any request. Or, Paul the elder by office, one who is thy brother in the ministry. And now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ; and now a prisoner for Christ's sake, and so cannot personally speak to thee; and I know such is thy piety, that my being a sufferer for the sake of Christ will not render my petition to thee lest acceptable, or to be regarded less.

10 I beseech thee for my son <sup>o</sup>Onesimus, <sup>p</sup>whom I have begotten in my bonds :

I beseech thee for my son Onesimus; Onesimus, lately thy servant, (the same mentioned Col. iv. 9.) but my son. Whom I have begotten in my bonds; not naturally, but spiritually, to whom I have been a spiritual father, and begotten him to Christ in my old age, and while I have been here suffering as a prisoner.

11 Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me :

Which in time past was to thee unprofitable; ἀχρηστος he useth a soft word, for it appears, ver. 18, he had wronged him, taking away some of his goods, and running away with them, without Philemon's knowledge, which made him doubly criminal. But now profitable to thee and to me; but now εὐχρηστος, profitable, one that may be profitable to thee, having learned Christ, and to me, who have used him in my service, and whose conversion will add to my crown.

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels :

Whom I have sent again; he comes not of his own head, but upon my persuasion, and upon my errand. Thou therefore receive him; I therefore beseech thee to receive him kindly, and entertain him in thy house. That is, mine own bowels; whom I love as I love my own soul; thou canst not therefore be unkind to him, but it will reflect upon me.

13 Whom I would have retained with me, <sup>q</sup>that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the Gospel :

I have such an opinion of his sincerity, that I would willingly have kept him with me, that he might, while I am a prisoner for the gospel of Christ, have done those

<sup>c</sup> Col. 4. 17.
<sup>d</sup> Phil. 2. 25.
<sup>e</sup> Rom. 16. 5.
<sup>f</sup> 1 Cor. 16. 19.

<sup>g</sup> Eph. 1. 16.
<sup>h</sup> 1 Thess. 1. 2.
<sup>i</sup> 2 Thess. 1. 3.

<sup>j</sup> Eph. 1. 15.
<sup>k</sup> Col. 1. 4.

<sup>l</sup> Phil. 1. 9.
<sup>m</sup> 11.

<sup>n</sup> 2 Cor. 1. 12.
<sup>o</sup> 2 Tim. 1. 16.
<sup>p</sup> ver. 20.

<sup>q</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
<sup>r</sup> 17. Phil. 2.
<sup>s</sup> 30.

offices for me, which thou wouldst have done hadst thou been here.

14 But without thy mind would I do <sup>q</sup> 2 Cor. 9. 7. nothing; <sup>q</sup> that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

But without thy mind would I do nothing; but he was thy servant, and I would not do it without thy knowledge and consent, that it might not be thought that thou hadst done me a kindness necessarily, but that thou mightest do it freely. That thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly: which seems to argue that St. Paul expected that he, being reconciled to Onesimus, should send him back to Paul; unless he means the benefit done to Onesimus, in not revenging the wrong he had done him, should not be of necessity, because he was out of his reach, but freely, having him first in his power.

<sup>r</sup> So Gen. 45. 5, 6. 15 For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever;

Onesimus in departing designed no such thing, but possibly God, in the wisdom of his providence, suffered him to depart from thee, and to fall into theft, that he might upon that occasion come to a quicker sense and conviction of sin, and see a need of a Saviour; that, being turned from sin unto God, and having embraced Christ our common Saviour, thou mightest receive, love, and embrace him αἰώνιον, for ever, this ever, in this life, that is, so long as you both should live.

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, <sup>s</sup> a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, <sup>t</sup> both in the flesh, and in the Lord?

Not now as a servant; not now merely as a servant. But above a servant; but as one that deserveth much more kindness than a servant. A brother beloved; being a Christian deservedly to be loved. Specially to me; especially of me, who have a spiritual relation to him, as the instrument of his conversion, and as he hath been useful in ministering to me in prison. But how much more unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord? but how much more to thee, to whom he stands not only in the relation of a brother, being converted to the Christian faith, but in the flesh, as thy kinsman, or thy servant, or one of thy family, or thy countryman, one of the same town and place!

<sup>u</sup> 2 Cor. 8. 23. 17 If thou count me therefore <sup>u</sup> a partner, receive him as myself.

If thou count me therefore a partner; κοινωνόν, one with whom thou hast communion, a partner in the same grace of the gospel, and in the same trials and afflictions of the gospel. Receive him as myself; do not only forgive him, but kindly entertain him, who is my friend, as thou wouldst do myself.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account;

If he hath any way been unfaithful, if he hath taken any thing from thee, or be in thy debt, charge that upon me, let me be accountable to thee for it.

19 I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

Thou hast it here under my hand, I take upon me to satisfy thee Onesimus's debt; yet I could tell thee, that thou owest me more than it can be, even thy own self, God having made use of me as an instrument to convert and turn thee unto God. Such persons are great debtors to their spiritual fathers, Rom. xv. 27.

20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: <sup>x</sup> refresh my bowels in <sup>x</sup> ver. 7. the Lord.

Yea, brother: the particle vai is used in swearing, affirming, persuading, entreating, the latter seemeth here most proper; as much as, of all love, brother. Let me have joy of thee in the Lord; it will rejoice my heart to see thee charitable and obedient to my monitions, let me have a spiritual joy from thy satisfying of me in what I desire. Refresh my bowels in the Lord; either Onesimus, whom he had called his bowels, ver. 12; or, my inward man.

21 Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

I have not written this without a confidence that thou in this thing wilt do what I desire of thee, but I write it out of my affection to poor Onesimus, and desire to help him, not doubting of thy readiness to do the thing.

22 But withal prepare me also a lodging: for <sup>a</sup> I trust that <sup>a</sup> through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

This would incline one to think that this Epistle was written before the Second Epistle to Timothy, for there, chap. iv. 6—8, he seems to have other apprehensions; yet it is plain Timothy was with Paul when he wrote this, which he was not when that Second Epistle was written, as appears from chap. iv. 9, 21. Here, upon a confidence that through the help of the church's prayers he should again come to them, he writeth to Philemon to prepare him a lodging.

23 There salute thee <sup>b</sup> Epaphras, my fellowprisoner in Christ Jesus;

We read of this Epaphras, Col. i. 7, where he is called Paul's fellow servant, and a faithful minister of Christ: he was with Paul at Rome, Col. iv. 12, but there is no mention of him as a prisoner; but now he was a fellow prisoner with Paul, either in the same place, or upon the same account.

24 <sup>c</sup> Marcus, <sup>d</sup> Aristarchus, <sup>e</sup> Demas, <sup>f</sup> Lucas, my fellowlabourers.

All ministers of the gospel: they are also named, Col. iv. 10, 12, 14: they were all at this time at Rome with Paul: see Acts xii. 12, 25; xv. 37, 39; xix. 29; xx. 4; xxvii. 2; 2 Tim. iv. 10.

25 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

See the notes on Gal. vi. 18: see also Rom. xvi. 24; 1 Cor. xvi. 23; Phil. iv. 23; 2 Thess. iii. 18. With your spirit is the same as with you. By the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, he means the Spirit of Christ in all its gracious emanations: we have his meaning fully, 2 Cor. xiii. 14. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen is a particle of praying and affirming, by which he declareth his earnest desire it might be so, and also his faith that it should be so. Nor doth he pray for Philemon alone, (though the Epistle chiefly concerned him,) but for all those who at Colosse had with him obtained like precious faith.

¶ Written from Rome to Philemon, by Onesimus a servant.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

H E B R E W S

THE ARGUMENT

SOME few Greek copies not having the name of the apostle Paul prefixed to this Epistle, though most of them have, hath made many doubt concerning the writer of it, as others, especially heretics, of its authority. The conjectures of those who ascribe it to Barnabas, Luke, or Clemens, &c. seem groundless; since the character the Holy Ghost gives of its penman, and his state, in chap. x. 34, and chap. xiii. 19, 23, is not agreeable to any of them. This is most certain, that the apostle Paul did write such an Epistle; that it was well known to the dispersed churches of Christ then; that it was abused by men of corrupt minds, as it is at this day, since the Spirit gives us undeniable testimony of it in 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. That this Epistle should be it, (when it is so like the rest of his writings; when it is strongly confirming the truth the apostle Peter had written to them, chap. vi. 2; x. 26, 27; when it is so expressive of his condition in bonds, chap. x. 34; xiii. 19; Col. iv. 18, of his known companion Timothy, chap. xiii. 23; Col. i. 1, of his love to, and concern for, those to whom he writes, Rom. ix. 1—3; x. 1, and of his known doctrine, that Judaism had its completion in Christianity; that the veil was rent asunder, that they might discern the temple or church to be laid open to Gentiles as well as Jews, as at Antioch, Galatia, &c., he taught them; besides, that it hath the signal by which he declareth all his Epistles are to be known, chap. xiii. 25, compare 2 Thess. iii. 17, 18, and the general consent of the church through the successive ages of it, entitling of him to it,) I say, that this Epistle should be it, seems not difficult to determine. It is conjectured that the reason why he prefixed not his name to it, as to the rest of his Epistles, was, lest the great prejudice the Jews had causelessly taken up against him, as an enemy to the Mosaical law, would prevent their reading or weighing of it as they ought. It is directed by him to the dispersed tribes of believing Israel, under the name of Hebrews, being the common one of all the posterity of Heber by Abraham, both which patriarchs were great separatists from the idolatrous world in their respective ages, and in whose families the church of God was continued; a name grateful to them, because the Lord honoured it by adding it to his title, Exod. iii. 18, and ascribed it to their progenitor, Gen. xiv. 13, of a natural descent from whom they were most fond, John viii. 33; 2 Cor. xi. 22. And the apostle Peter confirmeth these to be the persons, 1 Pet. i. 1, 2; compare 2 Pet. i. 1; iii. 15. Written this was in the Greek language, as his other Epistles, it being then the most diffusive dialect in the world, and especially the common one of these Hebrews, Acts vi. 1, as Josephus himself testifieth; though the Greek idioms themselves, and the translation of other words in the Epistle, show it abundantly. For the time of his writing it to them, most likely it was after his appearing before the emperor Nero at Rome, 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17, during his liberty, Acts xxviii. 30, upon Timothy's dismission to them, chap. xiii. 23, and before the first of the ten bloody persecutions, chap. xii. 4, about the same year wherein he despatched other of his Epistles to the churches.

The design of the apostle in this Epistle, is fully to discover to the believing Hebrews, that they had not lost by renouncing Judaism and turning Christians, since the whole economy of Moses was designed but to lead them to the Lord Jesus Christ, and to be perfected in him, he being the truth and substance of all those shadows. To confirm them in the faith of this, and to encourage them more cheerfully to undergo those cruel persecutions, in loss of goods, liberty, relations, estates, country, and life itself, which their enemies would pursue them with for it; he shows them, that it was never God's purpose to have the earthly Mosaical church-frame to continue in the world, it being weak and insufficient for priesthood, sacrifice, ordinances, ceremonies, to purge their conscience, and to bring them unto God; but to be a type of, and a guide to, a better, which he did resolve to pitch by his own Son, even that heavenly one, in which both Jew and Gentile should acquiesce, and which should continue immovable to the end of the world. In handling which, first, He instructs them in the transcendent excellency of his person and offices; in respect of his Deity, chap. i.; of his humanity exceeding angels, chap. ii.; as a Prophet exceeding Moses, chap. iii. 1, to iv. 13; as a Priest exceeding Aaron, chap. iv. 14, to v. 9; as a King and Priest exceeding Melchisedec, chap. v. 10, to vii. 28. Secondly, He instructs them in the doctrine of the heavenly church-frame pitched by him, with its appurtenances, which exceeded the earthly Mosaical one; in respect of covenant most excellent, chap. viii.; of gospel sacrifice, ordinances, and administrations, for efficacy exceeding all the Levitical ones, chap. ix. 1, to x. 18; where he proceedeth to improve and apply his former doctrine, that they might answer their high privileges by the performance of proportionable duties, becoming this great gospel Minister and his heavenly church-frame, from chap. x. 19, to xiii. 20; concluding the whole with solemn prayer to God, for his enabling of them to the performance of these duties, ver. 20, 21: adding his desire of their candid acceptance of this Epistle from him; comforting them with Timothy's despatch to them, and his own hopes of seeing them; giving them the church's usual salutations, and his own valediction, whereby he discriminateth and closeth all his Epistles.

CHAP. I

The essential dignity of the Son, by whom God hath revealed himself in these last days, 1—3. His pre-eminence above the angels in office, 4—14.

A. D. 64. GOD, who at sundry times and <sup>a</sup>in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets,

God: the apostle designing the conviction of these Hebrews by this discourse, enters on it solemnly, that if a God can awe them, the consideration of Him should gain credit to his doctrine. The God he speaks of is to be apprehended here personally, as well as essentially; God the Father, the one admirable sovereign, immutable Being, the Author of first and second revelation: order is kept here in the subsistence of the relations, as in their works. Who at sundry times; πολυμερῶς, by many parts, turns and changes of time, seasons and opportunities, and by many parcels of revelation. God's will was discovered by piecemeal, and not all at once. He vouchsafed one promise to Adam, and so gradually opened further to Enoch, Noah, Abraham, David, pointing out a Christ to come, to come of Abraham's seed in David's family : he discovered here a little, and there a little, Isa. xxviii. 13. And in divers manners ; πολυτρόπος, suitable to the manifold wisdom of God, in divers forms and manners, was his revelation to them ; sometimes by sensible representations to them waking, as by angels, fire in the bush, the pillar of fire and cloud ; terribly, as at Mount Sinai, chap. xii. 18—21. Sometimes by dreams and visions, Numb. xii. 6 ; by Urim and Thummim, by voice from the ark, by types and signs from heaven, by riddles, and dark speeches, and Levitical ceremonies ; sometimes by immediate illapses on the soul, powerfully influencing it with a Divine light. Spake ; revealed and declared infallibly his mind and will concerning the way of man's salvation, which his wisdom contrived and his will decreed. In time past ; all that time past between Adam and Christ, about 4000 years before. Unto the fathers ; the holy ancestors of these Hebrews, from Adam, down along the Old Testament church of God : the believers of old, such as are registered, chap. xi. and all like them to the times of Christ, from Gen. iii. 15, to that time. By the prophets ; all those holy men to whom and by whom God revealed his will to his church throughout the successive ages of the Old Testament day ; such as were but God's servants, chap. ii. 4, and had his will and mind by measure ; who as they preached God's will were God's mouth, as they wrote it were God's scribes ; as Abel, Enoch, &c. before the flood ; Noah before and after ; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, David, &c. ; to these did God infallibly declare it, and they did infallibly deliver it to the church by word and writing ; God was by gracious inhabitation in them, in their hearts, tongues, and hands, 2 Pet. i. 21.

a Num. 12. 6, 8

<sup>b</sup> Deut. 4. 39, Gal. 4. 4. <sup>c</sup> Eph. i. 10. <sup>e</sup> John 1. 17. <sup>d</sup> 15, 15. <sup>f</sup> ch. 2. 9. <sup>g</sup> Ps. 2. 8. <sup>h</sup> Matt. 21. 38. <sup>i</sup> 28, 18. <sup>j</sup> John 3. 35. <sup>k</sup> Rom. 8. 17. <sup>l</sup> e John 1. 3. 1 Cor. 8. 6. Col. 1. 16.

2 Hath <sup>b</sup> in these last days <sup>c</sup> spoken unto us by his Son, <sup>d</sup> whom he hath appointed heir of all things, <sup>e</sup> by whom also he made the worlds ;

Hath in these last days ; the gospel day, last, as after the days of the old world, and after the law given to Israel by Moses ; the days of the fourth kingdom of the Roman empire, in the height of which Christ came into the world, and at the end of it shall accomplish his kingdom, Dan. ii. 40, 44. The last, because the perfection of those types which went before, when Christ settled in the church that religion which must remain unalterable to the end of the world, chap. xii. 25—28 ; the best days for clearest light and greatest mercies. Spoken ; revealed his will to us once and entirely, John i. 17, 18 ; Jude 3, 4 ; discovering the excellent things of God more clearly than they were before, Eph. iii. 3—11 ; 1 Pet. i. 10—12. To us ; the believing Hebrews were so favoured beyond their fathers, to have the best revelation of God in Christ made to them, Matt. xiii. 16, 17 ; Luke x. 23, 24. By his Son ; our Lord Jesus Christ, who cometh out of the Father as a Son, John i. 14 ; xvi. 28. He is his bosom Son, nearest his heart, John i. 18 ; the complete Word of him, creating the new world as well as the old, John i. 1 ; his wisdom, who teacheth without any mistake, declaring all of God, being truth itself, and exhibiting of it, what he hath seen as well as heard, John iii. 11. Whom ; this Son, who naturally issueth from his Father by a Divine and an unutterable generation, Prov. viii. 22—31 ; xxx. 4. On him all the Father's love doth terminate, Col. i. 13. He is to be the Founder and Builder of God's family, propagating being to a holy seed for him, chap. iii. 3—6. He hath appointed ; the Father hath chosen and ordained him as God-man to heirship by an inviolable ordinance of his decree, as 1 Pet. i. 20 ; compare Eph. i. 10 ; giving him thereby right and title to all things ; appointing to him his nature, chap. ii. 16, compare chap. x. 5 ; his offices in this nature, his kingly, Psal. ii. 6, 7, his priestly, chap. iii. 1, 2, his prophetic, Acts iii. 22 ; being heir by nature, as God the Son, and heir by an irresistible ordinance, as God-man Mediator : so as he had a super-added right from the Father, which right he was able to make over to us, but his natural right he could not, Rom. viii. 17. And he was by solemn investiture put in possession of it at his ascension, when he sat down on the Father's right hand, chap. xii. 2 ; Matt. xxviii. 18 ; Eph. i. 20—22 ; Phil. ii. 9—11. Heir ; Lord Proprietor, who hath sovereign and universal power over all, being the firstborn, and receiving the right of it in the whole inheritance, Psal. lxxxix. 27 ; Rom. viii. 29 ; Col. i. 15, 18. The lot and portion is fallen to him by God's law, the heir being Lord of all, Gal. iv. 1 ; being heir of his brethren, Psal. ii. 8, and the builder and purchaser of his inheritance, Rev. v. 9—14 ; compare 1 Pet. i. 3, 4, 18, 19 ; possessing the inheritance during his Father's life, and making all his brethren heirs of it with him. Of all things ; of all things within the compass of God, all that God is, all that God hath, all that God can or will do. All dominions of God, heaven, earth, and hell, are his. He is Lord of angels, Eph. i. 21 ; Col. i. 18. and hath made them fellow servants with us, to himself, and ministering guards to us, ver. 14 ; Rev. v. 11 ; xix. 10 : of devils, to overrule them, who cannot go or come but as he permits them, Matt. viii. 31 ; Col. ii. 15 : of saints, John xvii. 13 ; Rom. viii. 29 : of wicked men, his enemies, 2 Thess. i. 8, 9 : of all creatures, Col. i. 15—17 : of all God's works, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come ; pardon, peace, righteousness, life, glory ; all blessings of all sorts, for time and for eternity. This Son-prophet hath right to, actual possession of, and free and full disposal of them. All, both in law and gospel, his, Moses himself, and all his work, to order, change, and do his pleasure with. By whom ; his Son God-man, a joint cause, a primary and principal agent with the Father, and not a mere instrument, second in working as in relation ; by this Word and Wisdom of God, who was the rule and idea of all things, all things were modelled, received their shapes, forms, and distinct beings, John i. 1—3 ; v. 19, 20 ; Col. i. 16. In the works of the Trinity, what one relation is said to do the other do, but in their order, answerable to the three principles in every action, wisdom, will, and power. He made ; created and framed, giving being where there was none, causing to subsist ; suggesting herein his ability for redemption work. He who made the world can remove it, chap. xi. 3. The worlds ; τὰς αἰώνας, scarce to be met with in any part of Scripture but this Epistle ; strictly it signifieth ages, and things measured by time ; answer it doth to the Hebrew עוֹלָמוֹת which imports both an age and the world : so ages are here well translated worlds, all creatures and things measured by them. The Scriptures acquaint us with an upper world, and the inhabitants thereof, angels and glorified saints ; the heavenly world, ver. 10, where the morning stars sang together, Job xxxviii. 7 ; compare Gen. i. 1. There is a lower earthly world, with its inhabitants, men, who live on the things in it, Psal. xxiv. 1. And there is a regenerate world, the new heavens and new earth made by Christ, and a new sabbath for them, chap. xii. 26—28 ; compare 2 Pet. iii. 13. There is Adam's world that now is, this present world, Eph. i. 21 ; and the world to come, which as it is made by, so for, the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, in which he eminently is to reign, Psal. viii. 5—8 ; of which see chap. ii. 5.

3 'Who being the brightness of his <sup>f</sup>Wisd. 7.26. <sup>g</sup> John 1. 14. <sup>h</sup> & 14. 9. <sup>i</sup> 2 Cor. 4. 4. <sup>j</sup> Col. 1. 15. <sup>k</sup> John 1. 4. <sup>l</sup> Col. 1. 17. <sup>m</sup> Rev. 4. 11. <sup>n</sup> Heb. 7. 27. <sup>o</sup> & 9. 12, 14, 16. <sup>p</sup> 1 Pe. 110. 1. <sup>q</sup> Eph. 1. 20. <sup>r</sup> ch. 8. 1. & 10. 12. & 12. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 22.

3 'Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and <sup>g</sup>upholding all things by the word of his power, <sup>h</sup>when he had by himself purged our sins, <sup>i</sup>sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high ;

Who being the brightness ; the same gospel minister, God's Son, was, as to his person, ἀνάγλασσα, a brightness shining out : which word sets forth the natural eternal generation of God the Son, discovering both the rise and flux of his being, and the beauteous and glorious excellency of it. It is the same in the sight of it with the Father's, the brightness of glory, light of light, glory of glory to perfection, streaming from his Father incessantly ; as beams issue from the sun, or the mental word is the invisible brightness of that spiritual light the intellect. Of his glory ; essential glory. Light is a faint, visible resemblance of God's essence, his manifestation of himself in glory hath been by light ; to Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 18—23 ; xxxiv. 5, 29—31 ; to Isaiah, chap. vi. 1—4 ; to Ezekiel, chap. i. 4—28, and x. ; to Daniel, chap. x. 5, 6, 8, 16—19 ; to John, Rev. i., iv., and v. And so Christ represented that of his person at his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 1—7. If created light be glorious in the sun, in angels ; how much more God's essential glory ! Purity, beauty, light, how pleasant !

but what are these to God? However the being of God be conceived, as wisdom, holiness, goodness, justice, power, the excellency of these above all created beings is this glory. No being is glory but God's; this fundamental excellency shines no where as in this Son, John i. 14. By this are Father and Son declared distinct relations, subsisting together and co-eternal. And the express image; as the beams are with the sun the same in time, yet are weaker, therefore the Holy Ghost adds, he is his very image; χαρακ-τήρ is an engraven image of the Father, every way like him; the word signifieth a sculpture, print, engraving, or seal; intimating its distinction from what impressed it, and its likeness or parity to it: so is the Son's a distinct relation, yet naturally and integrally having all that might liken him to his Father, Col. i. 15. Of his person; τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, of his subsistence. He is not the character of the Godhead, or of the Divine essence, but of the Father, the personal subsistence in the Deity. He is one and the same God with the Father, but his character as God is a Father, so that who seeth him seeth his Father, John xiv. 9; he is the visible representation of him, Col. ii. 9. And upholding; the whole work of Providence is set out by upholding; φέρων imports sustaining, feeding, preserving, governing, throwing down, raising up, comforting, and punishing, &c. All would have fallen in pieces on man's sin, had not he interposed, and stopped the world when it was reeling back into nothing, Col. i. 17; and to this instant he preserveth and ruleth all, Isa. ix. 6; John v. 22. All things; τὰ πάντα, a full, universal, comprehensive all, persons and things, angels, men, creatures good and bad, small and great, with all events, Acts xvii. 24—31. By the word of his power; not by an articulate voice, but his beck, will, or powerful command, whereby he doth whatsoever he pleaseth; his absolute, powerful, irresistible word; he acts as easily as others speak; there is no distinguishing between this word and power, they went together in the creation, Gen. i. 3, 6, 7, and do so in his providence, Psal. xxxiii. 9; cxlviii. 8. When he had by himself; when this God-man, as the great gospel High Priest, so styled, chap. ii. 17, had by himself alone, being altar and sacrifice, as well as Priest, the sole efficient of this work without any assistance. He, by his eternal Spirit, offered up a sacrifice propitiatory to God, his human nature hypostatically united to his Divine, and expiring his soul, he immediately entered with the blood of the covenant the holy of holiest in heaven, and presenting it before the eternal Judge, made full satisfaction and expiation for sins, chap. vii. 17; ix. 11, 12, 14, 24, 26; x. 10, 12, 14. Purged; by his satisfaction and merit, removing both the guilt and stain of sin; so as God, the injured Lawgiver, could be just as well as merciful in pardoning it; and justifying those who believe and plead it from the condemnation they were liable to for it, Rom. iii. 24—26; 1 John i. 7, 9; and mortifying and killing sin in them by his purchased Spirit, chap. x. 10, 12, 14, 18; compare 1 Cor. vi. 11; Eph. v. 25—27. Our sins; the sins of men, and not of angels; and the consequents of them, removing guilt, stain, and punishment, which they would fasten on us by his self-sacrifice, chap. ii. 16. Sat down; after his atoning for sinners, at the forty days' end he ascended in his human nature, immortal in body and soul, and entered the second time the holy of holiest in heaven; and then ἐκάθισεν, made himself to sit as High Priest in the most honourable and immovable state and condition. He did not stand, as the typical high priest before God's ark, but sat; and in this co-operated with his Father, and obeyed him, Psal. cx. 1; angels, and men, and creatures, all subjected to him, Eph. i. 20—22. He doth sit quietly, Acts iii. 21, and surely; there is no shaking him from his ever-interceding for his, chap. vii. 25. On the right hand; a similitude expressing the height of glory that this God-man is advanced to; alluding to the state of the greatest king on his throne in his majesty, Ezek. i. 4, 26—28; Dan. vii. 9—14; 1 Tim. i. 17. He is exalted by the royal Father as his eldest Son, invested with God-like power, majesty, and glory, as chap. viii. 1; x. 12; xii. 2; there enjoying all that happiness, blessedness, all those dignities and pleasures, Psal. xvi. 11; fulness of honour and glory, chap. ii. 7; of government, rule, and dominion, Matt. xxviii. 18; of all royal and glorious abilities and endowments for the managing all things; he enjoyeth all these as the Father himself doth, who ordereth all by him, so as no creature is capable of it, ver. 13. All the power of doing all things in all worlds is lodged in his hands. Of the Majesty on high; in the highest heaven is this possessed by him, and there is he to display his glory in ordering all, chap. vii. 26; viii. 1; Eph. iv. 10: as in the happiest, so in the highest place is he to rule for ever; our advantage is by it, Eph. ii. 6, as to best of places and states.

4 Being made so much better than the angels, as <sup>h</sup>he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

Being made so much better than the angels: this God-man, the great gospel Minister, is more excellent than angels, and so must surpass all the prophets. He became thus by being surety constituted and declared, as ordained by God's decree from eternity, in eminency above them by actual investiture on his ascension, Eph. i. 20, 21. A more excellent person he is beyond any comparison for his Divine nature, and in his human transcending the angelical, on the account of the hypostatical union: see ver. 6. Angels; these were spirits likest God, and called *Elohim*s, or gods, ver. 7; Psal. civ. 4; being most pure, glorious, powerful, and heavenly creatures, Mark viii. 38; xiii. 32; 2 Thess. i. 7; of various ranks, orders, and degrees, Eph. i. 21; Col. i. 16; used by Christ as his ministers in the delivering of his law on Mount Sinai to Israel, chap. ii. 2; Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19. The measure of his transcendency over these, for person, office, and name, is infinitely beyond expression. As he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name; this was his peculiar, hereditary lot, due to him by natural right, as the heir and first-born of God, justly acquired by him, and actually possessed of him, not as a mere title, but a name descriptive of his person, distinguishing him from, and setting him above, all others: God the Son incarnate, Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6; Lord over all creatures in heaven and in earth, and under it, Phil. ii. 9—11; not a simple messenger, but a Son, Matt. xvii. 5; John i. 18; the Redeemer, Justifier, and Saviour of his people, Luke i. 31, 32. He is a person of name famous for power, glory, and dignity above all others, Eph. i. 21; Phil. ii. 9—11. A more excellent name than they; διαφορώτερον, differing from, and setting above, all the names of angels for eminency, the archangel himself being a servant and attendant on him, 1 Thess. iv. 16. His is more differing and transcending in his kind than the name of angels is in their kind; he is above whatever they can pretend to, and so a more excellent Prophet than they. He hath in all things, as well as name, over them the pre-eminency.

5 For unto which of the angels said he at any time, 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, <sup>m</sup>I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?

The apostle here proves that Christ hath a more excellent name, and pre-eminency over angels, by Scripture texts owned by these Hebrews. He had the name of Son of God, and so had not angels; for God the Father, who hath absolute power to give and state all excellency, never said to any angel, so as to constitute him his only Son by an ordinance or word of power. Sons he may style them, as Job ii. 1; Psal. lxxxix. 6; as he doth members of his church, Gen. vi. 2, and princes and magistrates, Psal. lxxxii. 1, 6; but always in the plural number, as he doth the angels, Job xxxviii. 7, noting out their power, place, and ministry. But Son is singular to Christ, and incommunicable to any other. Thou art my Son: this is quoted out of Psal. ii. 7. Thou God-man, thou thyself, thou, and thou alone, (that this was spoken of Christ truly, and of David only as a type of him, the Spirit asserts, Acts xiii. 33,) art my own Son, my ever-being Son, my Son by nature, Rom. viii. 32. Singularity sets out his eminency above all, and his propriety by nature in him. This day have I begotten thee: at the day of his incarnation, Isa. ix. 6; Luke i. 31, 32, 35, but eminently at the day of his resurrection, was he declared and published to be his only begotten Son with power, Rom. i. 4; and at his ascension inaugurated the supreme, universal King and Priest in heaven and earth, chap. v. 5, possessed of a better name, k Eph. i. 21.

Phil. 2. 9, 10.

1 Ps. 2. 7.
Acts 13. 33.
ch. 5. 5.
m 2 Sam. 7.
14. 1 Chron.
22. 10. & 28.
15. 7. & 55, 56,
27.

place, and power than angels, Eph. i. 20, 21. What men enjoy in this kind attributed to them, is with a vast disproportion to this; born, or begotten, they are said to be, in respect of God's operation on them, infusing Divine qualities into their souls, but this Son by a generation proper to a substantial person. And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son: in another Scripture, as 2 Sam. vii. 14; 1 Chron. xvii. 13; xxii. 10, it is declared, I his natural Father, and he my natural Son; so as they are not related to any other as they are to each other. This in the type was spoken of Solomon, but fulfilled in Christ, who was universal King and Priest over his church for ever; so David understood it, Psal. cx. 1; compare lxxxix. 19, 26—29. He was the first-born Son, born a King; the Son of the universal and supreme King, the Heir and Lord of all.

1 Or, When he bringeth again.
n Rom. 8. 29. Col. 1. 18. Rev. 1. 5. o Deut. 32. 43, LXX. Ps. 97. 7. 1 Pet. 3. 22.

6 || And again, when he bringeth in <sup>the</sup> firstbegotten into the world, he saith, <sup>o</sup> And let all the angels of God worship him.

This is a further proof of the great gospel Minister being more excellent than angels, by God's command to them to worship him. And again, when he bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world: Πάτω some refer to God the Father's speech, as, Again he saith: others think it too gross a transposition, and unusual in the Scripture, and so read it as it stands in the Greek text. He again, or a second time, bringeth, &c. This hath started a query about what time it is that the Father saith this, and that he brought in the First-born into the world? Some say it was at his incarnation; others, at his coming to judgment. Considering the former proofs brought out of Psal. ii. 7, and 2 Sam. vii. 14, it seems most fairly to be at his resurrection and ascension, when the decree was proclaimed of his being the great King; and he was actually exalted far above all gods, whether angels or men: compare Psal. ii. 7, with xxvii. 1, 9, and Acts xiii. 33, to which agrees Col. i. 15, 18. Then was the demonstration of what a royal Head he was to be, and how acknowledged by all, Phil. ii. 9—11. He saith, And let all the angels of God worship him; he powerfully and effectually publisheth his command unto his angels, as recorded by his prophet in his word, Psal. xcvi. 7, where the sense of the Hebrew text is full, Bow down to him all ye Elohim, or gods; which the Septuagint renders angels, and is so quoted by Paul here; and the Spirit warrants it: so is it rendered, Deut. xxxii. 43. That translation was commonly used by the dispersed Graecising Hebrews. This title is attributed to angels, Psal. viii. 5. By their worship they do obey the Father, and own their subjection to his Son at his resurrection, Matt. xxviii. 2; Luke xxiv. 4; John xx. 12; and at his ascension, Acts i. 9, 10; Rev. v. 11, 12: so that the worshipped is more excellent than the worshippers.

+ Gr. unto. 1 Ps. 104. 4.

7 And † of the angels he saith, <sup>p</sup> Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire.

He adds another demonstration of the gospel Minister's exceeding angels, because he hath the name of God, and angels are called only God's ministers: for the Creator of angels, who best understandeth their nature and office, by his Spirit testifyeth what they are, Psal. civ. 4. Who maketh his angels spirits; he created them such as they are, spiritual, intellectual, and immortal substances, the highest in this sort and kind of creatures. Πνεύματα do not here signify winds, as if the Spirit compared angels to them for their swiftness and power, but spiritual, intellectual beings, as the Son of man is; and in this it is the attribute, and not the subject, that which is predicated or spoken of angels. And his ministers a flame of fire; they are but ministers and servants, who reveal or perform his will to those to whom God sends them; honourable officers of the great King, fulfilling his pleasure, ver. 14, executing all his commands, and going and coming at his beck, Psal. ciii. 20, 21. Though they are seraphims, bright, glorious, and excellent creatures, they are but the grand officers of state in heaven, encompassing God's throne, waiting for his commands, which they obey and fulfil as swiftly as the winds or flashes of lightning could despatch them. Though they are styled by the Spirit cherubims, Gen. iii. 24; compare Ezek. i. 5; x. 1—15; and seraphims, Isa. vi. 6; for their light, glory, and excellency; yet still are they creatures, and below the Son, because his servants.

8 But unto the Son he saith, <sup>q</sup> Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of † righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.

+ Gr. rightness, or straightness.

In the Father's apostrophe to the Son, he giveth him the name of God, and thereby is he proved to have a better one than angels, made by, and servants to, him; and as the great gospel Minister hath a kingdom, in which they are his ministers and servants: this proof is quoted out of Psal. xiv. 6, 7. It was not to Solomon or David, but to the Son God-man, spoken by the Father. The whole Psalm is written of him, and incompatible to any other is the matter of it. It represents him and his mystical marriage to the church; compare Eph. v. 23—33; Rev. xix. 7, 8; xxii. 17. Thy throne, O God: some heretics, to elude this proof of Christ's Deity, would make God the genitive case in the proposition, as, Thy throne of God, expressly contrary to the grammar, both in Hebrew and Greek: others gloss it, that ὁ Θεός is the nominative case, as, God is thy throne for ever, &c. i. e. He doth and will establish it: but this is cavilling, since it is the Father's speech to and of his Son, describing his nature in opposition to the angels before. They were created spirits, but he was God; they were ministers and servants in his kingdom, where he was King; therefore his name and person is better than theirs. God, in the singular, was a name never given to any creature, but is expressive of his Divine nature, and his relation in the Deity, being God the Son. Is for ever and ever: his office as God-man, and great gospel Minister, is a royal one. He is a great King, angels are subjects of his kingdom as well as men, which royalty is set out by the ensigns of it; as here, by a throne, which is an emblem of royal authority, dominion, and power, whence he displayeth himself in his kingdom. It is a heavenly one, of a perfect constitution and administration, and of eternal continuance. His it was by natural inheritance, as God the Son; and as man united to the Godhead, he inheriteth the privileges of that person. This natural dominion over all things remaineth for ever, Col. i. 16. A sceptre of righteousness is a sceptre of thy kingdom: another ensign of his royal dominion and kingdom is his sceptre, which is his Spirit put out in his government of the world, and in his special work of grace, guiding and conforming, through his word and ordinances, the hearts of his chosen to the will of his Father. This sceptre is subjectively right in itself, and efficiently, making all under its power to be rectified according to the right and pure mind and will of God: compare Psal. cx. 1—3.

9 Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, † hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

+ Is. 61. 1. Acts 4. 27. & 10. 38.

Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity: the administration of this King in his kingdom is suitable to his throne and sceptre, it is all goodness; for he so loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, being righteous and holy in himself, in life and death, expiating sin, and sanctifying believers. So that he acts as to both of these properly from himself, perfectly and for ever. Therefore God: it may be a reason why he so loved righteousness, being anointed, or of his unction, because he loved the one, and hated the other; therefore God the Son is the person to whom the Father speaketh this. Even thy God; God the Father, his God in respect of the human nature, Luke i. 35; formed by him, Gal. iv. 4, as Mediator between God and sinners, John xx. 17; the Head of the church, in covenant with God, his great gospel Minister. Hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness; so his Father anointed him with the Holy Ghost and with power, John iii. 34; Acts x. 38; and thereby as endowed, so exalted him above all kings and prophets who were literally anointed, and above all angels, having Divine power and authority supereminent to all communicated to him; enjoying the best and highest joy in all his transactions with the Father for us, and which may perfect joy in us, John xv. 11; xvii. 13. Above thy fellows, the coheirs of his kingdom, beyond whatever God communicated to saints or angels. He had not the Spirit by measure, John iii. 34. What others enjoy, it is from his fulness, John i. 16; Luke iv. 18—21.

† Ps. 102, 25.
&c.

10 And, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands :

And, Thou, Lord: this connective particle joins this to the former proof, that Christ had a more excellent name than angels, even that of God. That he was God, he proved out of Psal. xlv. 6, 7. He seconds it in this and the two following verses, which he quotes out of Psal. cii. 25—27. The strength of which lieth thus: He who was Jehovah, and the great Creator of the world, is God; such is Christ, the great gospel Prophet. This is evident in the prayer recorded in the Psalm made to him, compared with the Spirit's testimony, ver. 8; the very works appropriated to Jehovah there, are the acknowledged works of God the Son, as redemption, Psal. cii. 20, 21, vocation of the Gentiles, ver. 15, 18, 22. In the beginning; in the beginning of time, when that came to be the measure and limit of things, as Gen. i. 1. Before there were any such creatures as angels, he was Jehovah, John i. 1; and then manifested himself to be Jehovah. The enemies of Christ's Deity say that the name Jehovah is not in the verse of the Psalm quoted by the Spirit; yet thou, the relative used in all those verses, refers to God, the antecedent, prayed to in ver. 24, and to Jehovah, the name given him in ver. 1, 12, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, of that Psalm; all importing one and the same person. And it is well known that Κυριος, Lord, doth eminently decipher the Redeemer in the New Testament; he is not an instrument of Jehovah to create by, but the fountain of all being, Jehovah himself. Hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: by founding the earth, and the heavens being the work of his hands, is meant the whole work of creation throughout the space of six days: he was the true, full, sole, and self-causality of the earth's being, and all creatures in it, and of the heavens, and all beings which are in them; he was the great Architect and Founder of them all; they were his peculiar workmanship, possession, and dominion, 1 Cor. viii. 6: compare John i. 3; Col. i. 16. If the heavens were the works of his hands, and all in them, then he was the Creator of angels, and therefore must be, for person, name, and office, more excellent than they.

† Is. 34, 4.
& 51, 6.
Matt. 24, 35.
2 Pet. 3, 7.
10. Rev. 21, 1.

11 "They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment;

They shall perish; the heavens themselves instanced in, as containing the most excellent part of the creation, (such as the Gentile philosophy esteemed incorruptible,) are mutable, as by the various changes, not only in the airy part of it, but in the ethereal, doth appear: the glorious lights in it have their spots and rusts, as the sun itself, both increasing and diminishing upon them, and so as to their present, natural frame, are changeable, perishable, and dissolvable, Isa. li. 6; Matt. xxiv. 35. But thou remainest; but the Son Jehovah is unchangeable, hath a steadfast being, such as never loseth its state, no term is set for the ending of him. His immutability proves his Deity. Remainest is an expression of present time, denoting constant abiding. He was before, in, and after all ages immutable, Lam. v. 19. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever, chap. xiii. 8. And they all shall wax old as doth a garment: the antiquation of a garment is a metaphor borrowed, to show the corruptibility of the heavens. A garment wears and decayeth with use in tract of time, it changeth its fashion, is another thing as to its matter and form: so will the heavens, as to their form and face, decay, they are gradually coming to an end as to what they are now, 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10. That which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away, chap. viii. 13; so these heavens do.

12 And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up: περιβόλαιον is an upper garment, cloak, or coat, which a man puts on or casts off at his pleasure; when it is of no more use it is folded up and laid by: so the great gospel Minister, God the Son incarnate, shall roll up the natural heavens when useless, and lay them by. And they shall be changed; by him they shall be altered, and made more gloriously by new modelling them, changing of them into a better state, Isa. xxxiv. 4; lxxv. 17; lxxvi. 22: compare 2 Pet. iii. 10—13. But thou art the same: the identity of this Person is opposed to the changeableness of excellent creatures, and showeth him to be what he is here entitled, Jehovah, chap. xiii. 8. His assumption of the humanity to his person made no alteration in him, being still the same most excellent person as ever, Mal. iii. 1, 6; 1 Cor. xii. 5. And thy years shall not fail; as the being of God the Son is not measured nor terminated by years or time, so, in respect of his humanity, the years which were the measure of it shall never fail; for being raised from the dead, he shall die no more, but abideth for ever, John xii. 34, and ruleth, as foretold, Luke i. 33; 1 Pet. iv. 11. How transcendently excellent is He, who is immutable and eternal, for state and name above angels!

13 But to which of the angels said he at any time, "Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?"

† Ps. 110, 1.
Matt. 22, 44.
Mark 12, 38.
Luke 20, 42.
ch. 10, 12.
ver. 3.

But to which of the angels said he at any time? This introduceth the last demonstration of the gospel Minister's pre-eminency for state, office, and name, above angels. The form is thus; He that is God's fellow, and right-hand man, is more excellent, and hath a better name, than those who are only ministers to his saints. This is to be the state of Christ he proves here; for to none of the angels did Jehovah ever say this, he never gave them that honour by his word. It is an interrogatory challenge to the Hebrews to produce that text in Scripture, which doth assert, that at any time, in any place, God gave such an honorary word to angels: this was impossible for them to do. Though God the Father never said this to any angel, yet did he say this, and records it in the Scripture, to the Lord Christ. And it was a word to him constitutivum rei, fixing the very thing. This is recorded in Psal. cx. 1, where God's powerful word settled Christ in the honour, glory, and dignity of universal lordship over angels and men, so as to reign over them, 1 Cor. xv. 25; which administration he is now in the flesh solemnly managing at the right hand of his Father, ver. 3, ever since his ascension, and so is to continue. Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool; during all the time of this world, until by his power he reduce, subdue, and subjugate all to him, even every thing and person that should be adverse to his sovereign person and kingdom, all devils and men, subjugating of them to the basest condition, to be trod under his feet, as mire in the street, utterly destroying them, when he glorifieth his saints, 2 Thess. i. 7—10. The term of this word until doth not denote the end of his reign, as if after this he should not reign, but is declarative of his reign all the time before: though his enemies were many and strong, yet it is said, 1 Cor. xv. 24, 28, that then he shall deliver up the kingdom to his Father. As to his natural kingdom, which is his as God the Son, that is, equally enjoyed with the Father, and that for ever, there is no end of it; but as to his mediatory kingdom, given him by choice, and in a special manner appropriated to him as God-man for his season, this, when his work is done, and all his enemies subdued, he will resign unto the Father, that God may be all in all.

14 "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

† Gen. 19, 16.
& 22, 1.
2, 24, 1<sup>a</sup>, 94.
7, & 91, 11.
& 103, 20, 21.
Dan. 3, 28.
& 27, 23. 7 Rom.
8, 17. Tit. 3, 7. Jam. 2, 5 & 1 Pet. 3, 7.

Are they not all ministering spirits? the apostle here proves, that angels are but ministers to the great gospel Minister, and to the members of his body the church, and so must be meaner than him for state, nature, and name. This negative interrogation is a vehement assertion. The nature, dignity, and office of angels were well known to these Hebrews out of the Old Testament, and which he repeats: they were for nature spirits, intellectual, active, incorporeal, and incorruptible creatures; yet though so excellent, were still creatures; whereas Christ was an uncreated Spirit, and they were but servants to him their Lord; and though there be degrees and orders among them from the archangel to the lowest angel, they are every one of them single, and all of them together, servants to Christ, and so they own themselves to be, Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 9. Sent forth to minister for them; and so they move all at his order, and go and come at his command. Their employment directed by him; he sends them forth to deliver his errands, Acts v. 19, and xii. 7, 11, to reveal his will to them, Rev. i. 1; Psal. ciii. 21, &c. All the parts of ministry to which he appointeth them, they cheerfully, swiftly, and effectually perform. Who shall be heirs of salvation; such as God hath chosen and called to be children to himself, and joint-heirs with his only Son, as have a right to, are fitting for, and shall be at last possessed of, eternal glory; these angels are to serve and help them on for to attain it, they themselves being elect in and by Christ unto this end, 1 Tim. v. 21; 2 Tim. ii. 10. All which demonstrate him to be a more excellent person, and to have a more excellent name, than they.

CHAP. II

The obligation we are under to give more earnest heed to the gospel doctrine, 1—4. The dominion of the world to come was not granted to angels, but to the Son of man, whom it behoved to undergo a previous course of humiliation and suffering, 5—18.

THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should † let them slip.

+ Gr. runs out as leaking vessels.

In this and the three following verses the apostle applieth the doctrine of the great gospel Prophet's being more excellent for nature and person than any of the angels in respect of his Deity; and from thence inferreth the duty, that since God speaking by the prophets is to be heard by those to whom he sends them; how much more when speaking to them by his Son-prophet, who so infinitely excelleth not only all prophets, but angels too! We ought to give the more earnest heed; we believers, who know the things spoken to be good for us, whether apostles, ministers, or Christian members, by the indispensable necessity laid on us by God's precept, are obliged more abundantly, exceeding abundantly, than formerly they had; more than they gave to Moses and the legal ministry, excessively beyond that, 2 Cor. xi. 23; Eph. iii. 20; to give heed with an attentive and intent mind, so as to have hearts fastened to what was diligently considered of before, received, believed; heeding them so as to retain and practise them; so to believe, profess, be, keep, and do what he speaks from the Father to them, having souls knit and cleaving to them, James i. 22, 25. To the things which we have heard; all that mind and will of God which his Son revealeth to us fully, the whole gospel doctrine which by himself, and by his Spirit in the apostles, he had preached and written to them, Rom. x. 14—16. Lest at any time we should let them slip; an act opposite to the former giving heed, which is by them to be denied, viz. their being like leaking vessels, or having chinks open in their souls, letting by them slide out the most precious gospel of Christ, as water out of a cracked, leaky, broken vessel, or spilt on the ground. All forgetfulness of memory, all apostacy in heart or profession, is that which the Spirit forbiddeth in this metaphor, παραρρηνύμεν. Their danger as to their persons is made a motive to this duty, ver. 3, and is not therefore so immediately concerned in this, though it may be implied, for none will let the gospel of Christ slide from them who will not, as to their persons, slide from him at last.

2 For if the word <sup>a</sup>spoken by angels was stedfast, and <sup>b</sup>every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward;

This and the following verse is a rational motive used by the Spirit to enforce the foregoing duty, and shows the danger of their persons by the neglect of it. For if the word spoken by angels; for if the law of God delivered by the ministry of angels to these Hebrews' forefathers at Mount Sinai, Deut. xxxiii. 2, as ministers and servants of Christ there, Acts vii. 38, 53, compare Gal. iii. 19, and all other revelations of God's will to Moses and the prophets by angels, consisting of precepts, prohibitions, promises, and comminations, the whole body of God's laws contained in the Old Testament. The term by which law is expressed, λόγος, signifies in most of the Eastern languages a command as well as a word; and λαλεῖν, to command, as well as to speak. The force or obligation of this law or word was from God the Redeemer, whose word it was, though published and promulgated to the church by angels. Was stedfast; made firm by the solemn sanction of God, with a penalty, if any durst use it arbitrarily, or despise it; there was no violating it by commission or omission without being punished for it; God establishing it by fulfilling promises and executing judgments, chap. x. 28. Not a contumacious transgressor of it could escape his punishment; which made the law firm and valid; see Deut. xvii. 10, &c.; and this not only as the law of a Creator, but of a Redeemer, establishing of it by entering into a covenant with them by it, and they confirming it, Josh. xxiv. 22, 24. And every transgression and disobedience; every contumacious going beside the law, or casting it aside by commission of evil, or rejecting prohibitions, or disobedience to positive laws by omission of what they required. And by a metonymy is understood transgressors by either of these ways. Received a just recompence of reward; a just retribution, a righteous proportionable rendering of punishment to them for their sin; evil for evil, and death for sin, executed either immediately by God, or mediately by his instruments of government, according to the exact grains of justice, Rom. ii. 5—13. This punishment was either inflicted on, or received certainly by, the offender in his own person if capital, or in his representative sacrifice for lesser crimes, chap. x. 28; Rom. i. 32; 1 Cor. x. 5—11.

3 How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; <sup>c</sup>which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was <sup>d</sup>confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

c ch. 10. 28, 29. & 12. 25. d Matt. 4. 17. Mark 1. 14. ch. 1. 2.

e Luke 1. 2.

How shall we escape? this consequent answereth the antecedent in ver. 2, but in one part of it, that which concerns the punishment of the transgressors of the law, thus: If the word by angels, much more the word by the Son; and if sins against that were punished, much more sins against this; the Spirit including the sanction of the gospel's power in the judgment which it pronounceth upon its despisers, which it could not do if it were not established. The interrogative how, introducing the consequent, is vehemently negative; by no means, or there is no possibility of our escaping in the case proposed: compare the close of Isa. xx. 6. There is no avoiding the righteous punishment which the just God doth threaten gospel sinners with, such as is recorded in Matt. x. 15; xi. 22, 24; 2 Thess. i. 7—9; chap. x. 28, 29; none can escape it, neither I nor you, if such transgressors; external offices, or church privileges, will not excuse any one from the just punishment and retribution of God. If we neglect so great salvation; if being careless, so as to despise and make light of the gospel, or to reject it, chap. viii. 9; Matt. xxii. 5. Opposed this is to the sins of commission and omission about the law; any denial of receiving it, or of a progress into the necessary duties it requires, so to neglect them as to end in apostacy. For the gospel law of Christ revealing and promising salvation to believers, opposed here to the law given by angels, will make safe all spiritual good both for time and eternity to the sincere believers and obeyers of it. The gospel is called salvation metonymically, because the subject matter of it is salvation, Eph. i. 13, and it hath a causal power and virtue to save, Acts xiii. 26; Rom. i. 16; opposed to the law, which was the ministrations of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 9, being revealed by angels under carnal types and temporal promises, and, by reason of the veil on their hearts, became killing to them. The word by the Son is salvation, because a full and clear discovery to it. This salvation is transcendent, being not a terrene or temporary, but a heavenly, eternal salvation, delivering those who truly obey it from the worst of enemies, the sorest and most lasting punishment, and instating them in eternal happiness and blessedness in heaven. This was great for clearness of light, 2 Cor. iv. 4, and diffusive efficacy and success. Which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord; an aggravation of the neglect of this salvation from the Lord publishing it. It had its rise and beginning from the Fountain of all truth, and was first by voice and preaching made known to the Hebrews, and such Gentiles as came to hear the promulgation of it, Matt. iv. 17, at Christ's solemn entering on his ministry, above three years before his death and resurrection. And it may refer higher; for as it was most clearly, plainly, sweetly, and eminently preached by himself, beyond what was taught by the prophets in the Old Testament, or John; yet he first preached it himself in the beginning to our apostate parents in Paradise, Gen. iii. 15, and he preached it in all the prophets publishing of it since: yet this priority may be in respect of the ministry which he ordained to follow him, and not of that which went before. It was so preached by the Lord himself, the Mediator, Lord of life and death, Head of angels and all principalities and powers, the great Prophet, swaying all things by the word of his power. The law was preached by angels, the gospel by God the Son himself, chap. i. 2; and so is preferred before the law, in respect of its ministrations by the Head, not of its authority. And was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; settled it was, made firm and authentic, by himself. The Trinity bear witness to it in heaven, confirm it on earth by miracles, signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds, by Christ, John v. 36, by his apostles, 2 Cor. xii. 12, and by the gifts of the Holy Ghost in great variety distributed to his apostles and publishers of this gospel, which made their ministrations of it effectual, Acts ii. 1—3; compare 1 Cor. xii. 9—11; even to the apostles and Hebrews, and to all who believe, it is so confirmed. Nor is Paul less the writer of this Epistle for that he joins himself with them, since he did hear both the Lord and the apostles, and was confirming those of them with whom he had fellowship, and was confirmed by them, Acts ix. 17, 19; Gal. ii. 9. Christ's disciples and apostles heard this gospel from him, and did witness it by preaching, writing, and sealing it with their blood, Phil. i. 12; 2 Pet. i. 16, 17; which confirmation by their sufferings was instrumental, mediate, and subservient to the miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost enjoyed of them and wrought by them.

f Mark 16. 20.
Acts 14. 3. &
19. 11. Rom.
15. 18, 19.
1 Cor. 2. 4.
g Acts 2. 22,
43.
Or, distrib-utions. h 1 Cor. 12. 4, 7, 11. i Eph. 1. 8, 10.

4 God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and <sup>h</sup> gifts of the Holy Ghost, <sup>i</sup> according to his own will?

God also bearing them witness: here is a further aggravation of the neglect of the gospel of salvation, from God's testifying to it by the works and gifts of his Holy Spirit: such sin grievously, and will receive a proportionable punishment; for God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, co-testify with all those instruments confirming the gospel of salvation, with a testimony peculiarly fitted to it; yet in this joint-witnessing God is the highest, and αὐτὸς πῖτος, only to be believed for himself. Both with signs and wonders; by works above nature's reach, signifying God's being in and approving the gospel law, which they attend, Mark xvi. 17. More numerous and glorious were these than they which confirmed the law, Acts ii. 22, 43; iv. 30; such strange works as raised admiration in all that saw them, and are prodigious to those that hear of them, or read them, Rom. xv. 19. And with divers miracles; miraculous works, such as are compassed only by a Divine, supernatural power; and variety of these, as healing all diseases, raising the dead, ejecting devils, Mark xvi. 17, 18; works of as great mercy, as wisdom or power. And gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will; as gifts of tongues, prophecies, &c., Rom. xii. 6—8; compare 1 Cor. xii. 7—10; such as nature could not furnish any with, but the Redeemer did by his Spirit, communicating them to various persons of divers kinds and indifferent degrees. From, by, and for himself he giveth out these wonderful works; his will the only rule for time, persons, manner, and measure of their distribution, allotting all their portion, Rom. xii. 3; 1 Cor. vii. 17; xii. 4, 7, 11, 18; Eph. iv. 7.

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection <sup>a</sup> the world to come, whereof we <sup>b</sup> speak. h ch. 6. 5.

2 Pet. 3. 12.

For unto the angels: the Spirit having applied the doctrine of the great gospel Minister, exceeding the prophets of old, and having a more excellent name and office than angels, in respect of his Deity, pursues to show these Hebrews, that he is so likewise in respect of his humanity, the other nature in his person. This he proves negatively in this verse. The rational particle introducing, shows it to be a demonstration of his excelling angels, having a world to come subjected to him, which they have not; for so none of these incorporeal, intellectual, spiritual substances, so often diminished before, have; because those Hebrews were more addicted to esteem of them, and the law ministered by them, than of God the Son incarnate and his gospel. Hath he not put in subjection; this God the Father, Son, and Spirit, the Creator who formed all things, and had right of disposing all things under their proper Lord, hath not put under their ordering or government; he never decreed, foretold, or promised that it should be under their authority. The world to come, must be interpreted by that scripture, where it is asserted and proved that it was subjected to the great gospel Minister, and that is in Psal. viii. 5—8. It is a world that must consist of heaven and earth; compare ver. 3, 6, 7. It was a world not come when Paul wrote this Epistle to the Hebrews, see ver. 8. It is a world distinct from this present world, Eph. i. 21, in which God-man must eminently reign; a world between this world and a heavenly one which is to come, in respect of us, Luke xviii. 30; 1 Tim. iv. 8. A world to come, which the angels have nothing to do with, as they have with this, which is greatly under their administration; such as consists of a new heaven and a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness, 2 Pet. iii. 13; for Peter asserts, that Paul, according to the revelation given him of it, had written to these Hebrews, and eminently in this text. And unto this do the prophets give witness, Isa. lxxv. 17, 18; lxxvi. 22; and of his day of rest and sabbath in it, as chap. iv. 7, 9, 10; so Isa. lxxvi. 23. And for their restitution in this world to come do the creatures groan, Rom. viii. 19—23, that they may be therein under the happy administration of the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven. And of this the 8th Psalm doth assure us; for it is not, as some have imagined, a representation of the state of the first Adam, but of God-man, the Second Adam, and his world; for Christ applyeth it to himself, and testified it was written of him, and it is not compatible in itself to any other, Matt. xxi. 16. This world to come is a heavenly world, begun by Christ to be created when he commenced to preach the gospel covenant, which angels were not to meddle with, as they did the law, but was only to be ministered by men, Psal. viii. 2; through whose ministry of the word by the Spirit, is ingrafted into the sinful nature of the elect a new creature, whereby they are delivered from this present evil world, Gal. i. 4, and fitted for being inhabitants of this new one, 2 Cor. iv. 6; v. 17; compare Eph. iv. 22—24; which hath been preparing by Christ's casting down heathenism and Judaism by the gospel, Luke x. 18; Heb. xii. 26, and bringing them into a new world of ordinances and church privileges, fitted for them, and called by the Spirit, the kingdom of heaven, it surpassing the Sinai church state as much as heaven doth earth. And he is now proceeding to cast down papism, or Roman Christian paganism, and Mahometism, Rev. xix. 19—21, and to subdue the generality of men, both Jews and Gentiles, to himself, Zech. xiv. 9; Rom. xi. 25, 26; when this Christian heavenly frame shall be advanced to a higher degree by the descent of the new Jerusalem from God out of heaven, Rev. xxi. 1, 2; xxii. 1—5; in the which the kingdom of Christ shall be most peaceable, glorious, and prosperous. And to the rendering of it eminently so, Scripture seems to intimate, that the bodies of the martyrs of Jesus shall be raised, and their souls united to them, and so be made conformable to Christ's glorified person, Phil. iii. 21; compare Rev. xx. 4—6. These will their Lord send down into this new world, and to have the same state in it, and to perform the same offices to the saints, as the angels had and did in the world past, Mark xii. 25; there to be kings, and reign as the angelical thrones and principalities did before, Rev. v. 10; xx. 4. As priests, help on the saints' duties, and instruct them in the matters of the kingdom of God, and so answer in conformity to their Head, as he was forty days after his resurrection; during whose reign in this new world the devil shall be chained up, so as they shall not be infested, nor the nations deceived, as formerly they were by him, Rev. xx. 1—3, so as there shall be no need of good angels to oppose or restrain him. At the close of which thousand years the devil will be loosed for a little while, as ver. 3, 7, 8, and infest the world, when the great Lord and King of it shall in the greatest solemnity descend into the air with all his hosts of angels; and by the trumpet of God sounded by the archangel, the dead in Christ shall first be raised, and the living changed in the twinkling of an eye; and being openly owned and acknowledged by the Supreme Judge, shall be assessors with him; when the judgment shall proceed by the angels bringing devils and all impenitent mankind to the bar of Christ, where the vast accounts of them shall be cast up and audited, and on the charge against them they shall be found speechless and convict, so as the great Judge shall solemnly sentence them, and it be assented to and applauded by all the saints, Rev. xx. 2, 11, 12, 15, compare 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3, and be as gloriously executed by the ministering angels, Matt. xiii. 41—43. And so this great King and Lord, having thus shut up the scene of this world, shall return in triumph into the heaven of heavens, and there in the height of his glory deliver up his kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 22—28. Whereof we speak; we describe it further in the following testimony, and in this Epistle, as to some part of it.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, <sup>1</sup>What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

1 Job 7. 17.
Ps. 8. 4, &c.
& 144. 3.

But one in a certain place testified: the Spirit proves affirmatively out of one of the prophets, that with these Hebrews it might have the more weight and authority, by an elliptical speech, that this world to come was subject to the great gospel Minister: But to Jesus he put in subjection the world to come, as one testifieth. This one was the king and prophet David, a Lord and Son to whom was this Jesus; the title of the 8th Psalm ascribes it to him: he is not particularly named, because these Hebrews well knew it, yet he διεμαρτύρατο, thoroughly testified, or most expressly, giving a full confirmation of what is asserted, that Jesus is the Lord of the world to come: and this certain place was a well-known place, and very ready with those, even Psal. viii. Saying; making it known by word and writing there beyond any contradiction. What is man? the subject of David's admiration is not the first Adam, nor any mere man, but the gospel Prophet, God-man, a most eminent One, the Messiah of these Hebrews, the man Christ Jesus, 1 Tim. ii. 5; and to him only are the privileges vouchsafed agreeable, and by him only enjoyed. For Adam had now lost his dominion when this Psalm was penned, and was never so honoured as to have all things under his feet, even principalities and powers, which Christ had, ver. 8; Eph. i. 20—22; and Christ interprets it of himself, Matt. xxi. 16. The expostulation is resolvable: Man is nothing in himself, that such royalty should be assigned to him. That thou art mindful of him; that God should respect him, should remember and design such a worm as man for so great preferment, as union to the Deity and universal dominion. Or the Son of man: this is the peculiar title of the Second Adam. Adam was a man, but not the son of man, but of God by creation, Luke iii. 38; but the Spirit testifieth this of Christ, Dan. vii. 13; Lord of the sabbath, Luke vi. 5; God-man, John iii. 13; v. 27. That thou visitest him; επισκέπτεται, to be peculiarly inspected; and with a special care concerned for him, so industriously and with so great a providence to afford him suitable succour. The form of it is an expostulation with admiration: it is an amazement at the discovery of so stupendous love to man. How emptied he himself for sinners! This work of Christ is the greatest wonder and astonishment to angels.

† Or, a little while inferior to.

7 Thou madest him || a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

Thou madest him: ἠλάττωσας, so diminished, as it supposed the subject to be in a higher condition before: this no man ever was, but the man Christ Jesus: see Phil. ii. 7, 8. A little lower than the angels: βραχύ τι, may refer to his condition, and to the duration of it. He was lower a little in his nature, being a man and servant; in his condition, suffering and dying; yet this was but for a little while, being about thirty-three years in the form of a servant, and three days in the grave, Eph. iv. 9: so he was lesser than the angels, in the Psalm styled בְּרִיִּים God's sons, Psal. xcvi. 7, to whom he is here compared; though it be a truth he is lesser than God in the human nature. Thou crownedst him with glory and honour; an allusion to the crowning of kings at their inauguration; so God visibly took him up to heaven, set him down on his right hand on his throne, and conferred on him the highest royal dignity, honour, and glory, though the Hebrews disesteemed him, Eph. i. 20, 21; iv. 9, 10; Phil. ii. 9. And didst set him over the works of thy hands; his institution to his mediatory sovereignty and dominion, as the supreme Lord of all that God made in heaven and in earth, to order, rule, command, and dispose of them as he will, Psal. viii. 6: compare Phil. ii. 10, 11.

8 <sup>m</sup> Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now <sup>n</sup> we see not yet all things put under him.

m Matt. 23.
16. 14 Cor.
15. 27.
Eph. 1. 22.
ch. 1. 13.

n 1 Cor. 15.
25.

Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet; the impartial, righteous Jehovah the Father, is the relation in the Trinity, spoken of in the relative Thou, throughout these verses. He is God's King; for his personal worth and excellencies, preferred before principalities and powers, and every name; before all persons, things, and places, the world to come as well as this: all angels, as well as men; all creatures wherever, in heaven, earth, sea, or hell; are under his sovereign dominion, they all lie at his feet, to dispose of as he pleaseth; they are all set in subjection to him by the ordination of his Father: see Psal. viii. 6—8; 1 Cor. xv. 24—29; Eph. i. 20—22; Phil. ii. 9, 10; Col. ii. 10. According to the Eastern custom, as subjects lie prostrate at the feet of their sovereign, so do all creatures to him who is Lord of lords, and King of kings, as Exod. xi. 8, see the margin; Isa. xlix. 23. They bow down and worship him as their own Lord; but as being under his feet signifies the utmost subjection of them to him, and his triumph over them, it especially refers to his enemies, sin, devils, sinners, and death; as Joshua, a type of him, did, Josh. x. 23, 24; showing thereby what God would do with all the rest. Allusive to this is Isa. li. 23, especially to all the enemies of his Son, as Psal. cx. 1; 1 Cor. xv. 25, 27. As to his church, it is his body, and though distant from him as creatures, and so worshipping and honouring of him as elect angels, yet being his queen too, she loves and honour-eth him as a wife, Psal. xiv. 9, 11; Eph. i. 22, 23; v. 23, 24: she hath her subjection as well as her dignity; she is not a peer to him before marriage: but as Eastern emperors marry slaves born or captivated, because they acknowledge no king greater than they, or equal to them; so Christ takes sinners and makes them his body, his church, his queen, who though for condition are under his feet, yet he so dearly loves them, that he takes them thence, and sets them at his right hand. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him: if nothing is left unsubjected, then angels and the world to come are subjected to him; and it is evident they are so, by their ministering to him at his conception, birth, danger from Herod, temptations by the devil, at his entrance on his ministry, at his passion, at his resurrection, ascension, and since his session on his throne, obeying his commands, and performing his errands, Psal. viii. 8. But now we see not yet all things put under him; it is evident to our sense and experience, that though he hath obtained this sovereign dominion over all on his ascension, yet he hath not exerted his power in utterly subjecting and triumphing over his enemies at present, nor in reducing all his own people to subjection to him; yet this shall be gradually done in every age, and completely when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, to punish his enemies with everlasting destruction, 1 Cor. xv. 24, 26; 2 Thess. i. 7-10; Rev. xx. 11-15.

9 But we see Jesus, <sup>o</sup>who was made a little lower than the angels || for the suffering of death, <sup>p</sup>crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death <sup>q</sup>for every man.

But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels: this second application of the psalmist's words demonstrates Jesus, the gospel Prophet, to be the man or Adam intended by the Spirit there; and his humiliation and exaltation to be the matter asserted of him: see ver. 7. For the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour: the reason or end of his diminution, in respect of angels, for a little while, and of the necessity of his being man, was, that he might be crucified and die, Phil. ii. 7-11, and thereby merit for himself a crown of honour and glory. This was given him for his giving himself to be a sacrifice for sin, and by his own blood to expiate it. That he by the grace of God; the principle determining, which was God's good pleasure; he alone, out of his free love and favour to sinners, ordered this, as John iii. 16; 1 John iv. 9. Therefore the Hebrews had no reason of being offended with him as they were, 1 Cor. i. 23. Should taste death; a metaphor to express to die as a sacrifice, making satisfaction to Divine justice, and expiating sins, Isa. liii. 10. All his sufferings in body and soul, which were many and bitter, are here intended, and their completion by death, Matt. xxvi. 39, 42, intimating by his taste of this deadly cup, his sipping of it, but not having swallowed it: and it is a metaphor allusive to the Grecian customs, who put men to death by giving them a cup of poison, as the Athenians executed Socrates. For every man; to render sin remissible to all persons, and them salvable, God punishing man's sin in him, and laying on him the iniquities of us all, Isa. liii. 4-6; 1 John ii. 2; and so God became propitious and pleasurable to all; and if all are not saved by it, it is because they do not repent and believe in him, 2 Cor. v. 19-21; compare John x. 15. This was evident to and well known by these Hebrews, as if they saw it, the work, concomitants, and effects of it demonstrating it. And this now in the gospel is evident to faith: it was so certainly visible and evidently true, as not to be denied but by infidels.

10 <sup>r</sup>For it became him, <sup>s</sup>for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make <sup>t</sup>the captain of their salvation "perfect through sufferings.

For it became him: a further reason of Christ's humiliation and sufferings is added, to show the necessity of his being lower than the angels for a while; in which the Spirit prevents what these Hebrews were apt to question, why God would have Christ thus to die, &c. by adding, Therefore it became him so to do; it was agreeable to him, and had a meetness in it to his excellent perfection; by it displaying together his Divine wisdom, justice, mercy, and power. Amongst all his methods, he pitched upon this as the best, and did by it what was befitting and becoming a God to do. He likewise revealed this so becoming decree of his by the prophets to the church, and it was meet to and becoming his truth to fulfil it, Isa. liii. : Luke xxiv. 25-27. For whom are all things, and by whom are all things; for the manifestation of God the Father's glory, whose grace gave Christ to die for us, are all things which have a being; and by him are all things, as the Efficient and Creator of them, by his powerful word they are: this being likewise attributed to the gospel Prophet, God-man, John i. 3; Col. i. 16. By whom; it shows he is no more an instrument in this work than the Father, and equally efficient with him, Rom. iii. 26. In bringing many sons unto glory: ἀγαθόντα cannot agree with αὐτῷ, him, for that is the dative case, but with what follows, Ἀρχηγόν, the Leader of their salvation bringing many sons to glory: so that though the Father indeed glorify, yet it is most properly spoken of the Leader, to lead or bring his company thither; and so it is written, Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12. He showed and led them the way wherein they were to reach it, 1 Pet. iii. 18, who though for state were sinners, yet made fit by regeneration and adoption, and have their title from their Leader, John i. 12, 13. He merited by his sufferings both the relation and inheritance for them, Rom. viii. 14-18; 1 Pet. i. 2-5; and so as to bring them to that glorious state and condition, for persons and enjoyments, in the heavenly Canaan prepared for them, Matt. xxv. 34; 1 Pet. v. 10; 1 John iii. 1, 2. To make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings: so their Ἀρχηγός, a prime Leader of many, a person eminent for priority and dignity, directing and ordering all under his power, who is the prime of the creation of God, Col. i. 18, having the pre-eminency of all angels and men: he was perfected; τελειῶσαι signifieth the consecrating or accomplishing of a person for office by sacrifice; so Christ useth it, Luke xiii. 32, I shall be perfected, i. e. sacrificed and completed in my office by death: so John xix. 30. By his sufferings of all sorts accomplished in death, and by the blood of that sacrifice, was this great gospel Prophet made a perfect Mediator, and fitted for his officiating and ministering in heaven for ever, herein fulfilling his types, chap. ix. 11, 12, 14, 15, 22-24: compare Exod. xxix. He, in respect of saving his, is the author, purchaser, and perfecter of it to them: he by his sufferings and death merited salvation for them, by his word and Spirit fits them for it, by his intercession increaseth and applieth it; he vanquishes all opposers of it, and puts them finally into the actual possession of it in glory in heaven.

11 For <sup>x</sup>both he that sanctifieth and <sup>y</sup>they who are sanctified <sup>z</sup>are all of one: <sup>a</sup>for which cause <sup>b</sup>he is not ashamed to call them brethren,

For both he that sanctifieth: for shows the reason of the Son's incarnation, viz. the necessity of union in nature between the sanctifying Mediator and the sanctified sinner. The great gospel Minister was to bring many sons to glory by suffering, which he was not capable of, but by being united to one and the same nature with them to whom the penalty was due, and so he must be Head of them. This God-man is separating and consecrating of penitent believing sinners from the common mass to God, meriting by his death for them remission of their sins, and sanctifying their persons by his Spirit from their pollutions by them, 1 Cor. vi. 11; Tit. iii. 4-7; Heb. ix. 14; x. 10, 14. And they who are sanctified; penitent believing sinners, justified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, Eph. v. 25-27. Are all of one: this is an attribute of the unity of the principle of both these; such an one as is proper to man with himself, whom he sanctifieth, and not competent to angels; it must therefore be the principle of humanity. He took a human soul and body united to his person, and so became of one nature with us, (compare ver. 14.) of one human mass, alluding to the first-fruits offered at the Passover, or the loaves at Pentecost, whereby all the rest were sanctified: so Christ assumed the same human nature, that he might be the Head and leading Representative of a body of mankind, differenced from them by his being holy, and they sinful, and personally united to the Word. For which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; the unity of him and them in the human nature, is the cause why he calls them brethren, therefore they must be one: considering him in the holiness of his Deity, and them in the filthiness of sin, he might have been ashamed of such a brotherhood; but by his effectual word he adopted them into a state of childship and heirship to God with himself; and in the flesh to give them that glory, that they might be one with God, as he and the Father are one, John xvii. 22.

12 Saying, <sup>a</sup>I will declare thy name <sup>b</sup>unto my brethren, in the midst of the Church will I sing praise unto thee.

Saying; this brings in the proof, that the great gospel Minister, Christ, God-man, did call his sanctified ones brethren; and was by the same nature so related to them. The proof is in Psal. xxii. 22, where the apostle asserts, Christ spoke what was said by the prophet there; and that this Psalm concerneth him, is evident by the application of other passages in it to him, both by himself and the Spirit; and who reads it, may see him crucified afresh there. I will declare thy name unto my brethren; I, as the gospel Prophet, who have seen thee, and am of thee. John i. 18, and who only understand thy name, will teach, and make it to be known and admired, as that whereby thou art described, distinguished, and set above all other beings and relations to them; a name suitable to their state and relation unto thee and me. Thee in all thy glorious attributes, related to them as to Moses, Exod. xxxiv. 5-7, especially thy name of Father, whereby thou standest related to me and them as brethren, fulfilled, John xx. 17, My Father, and your Father; my God, and your God; when he sent this message by Mary Magdalene to his apostles and disciples, to whom he was related as a brother in his humanity, sonship and heirship, family and household, and amongst whom he is the First-begotten and elder Brother. Brethren are one, and as one; and so is he and his sanctified ones, ver. 14; Luke i. 31, 35; John xvii. 22, 23; Rom. viii. 14; so ver. 17, 29; Gal. iv. 5-7; Eph. iii. 14, 15. In the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee; in the respective parts and congregations of his mystical body, implicitly his brethren. Christ and they are from one Father divine, he by nature, they by grace; and from one human parent, Luke iii. 23, 38, and both of one flesh; he solemnly sung and praised his Father with them at his supper, in that representative church, Matt. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26.

b Ps. 18. 2.
Is. 12. 2.
c Is. 8. 18.
d John 20.
29. & 17. 6.
9, 11, 12.

13 And again, <sup>b</sup>I will put my trust in him. And again, <sup>c</sup>Behold I and the children <sup>d</sup>which God hath given me.

And again, I will put my trust in him: this is a further proof, that Christ's sanctified ones are his brethren, his exercising himself in a necessary work proper to that brotherhood only. They are all of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10; their business is to believe in God. All who do so, are brethren; Christ doth so, and so is a Brother to them; and they rely on one and the same God and Father to both: he did believe, confide, and rest on God, that he would help his humanity to go through all his works and sufferings to the perfecting of that of redemption. Some say he spake this in the person of David in Psal. xviii. 2, because the 49th verse of it is applied to Christ by the Spirit in Rom. xv. 9. But others think that Psalm is not so properly understood of Christ, and that these words are not found in the Septuagint, which the apostle frequently useth, as being most familiar with these Hebrews; but that these words of his trusting in God, and of his children, are to be found near together in Isa. viii. 17, 18, which chapter is a clear prophecy of this God-man the Redeemer, and punctually fulfilled by him on earth. This seems most rationally to be the place the apostle refers as to both these texts. And again, Behold I and the children which God hath given me: this is the third proof, which, though it be literally Isaiah's words, who complained how himself and the children of God in his days were scorned by the world for cleaving to him, yet herein was he a type of Christ, and in him was it eminently fulfilled. This word Behold intimates, it being a matter of great weight and importance, to be attended, to be considered and understood, by the church. I and the children which God hath given me; I and my brethren, children of the same heavenly Father, John xi. 52; xx. 17; 1 John iii. 1; which my Father of free grace chose and delivered on my purchase, and whom he had fitted and wrought by his Spirit, to be brought home by him unto glory, though they were the wonder and contempt of this world, John xvii. 2, 6, 8, 9, 11, 19, 22, 24.

e John 1. 14.
Rom. 8. 3.
Phil. 2. 7.
1 Cor. 15.
54, 55.
Col. 2. 15.
2 Tim. 1. 10.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he <sup>e</sup>also himself likewise took part of the same; <sup>f</sup>that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood: the Spirit having proved the children and brethren sanctified by Christ to be men, proceeds to prove, that the Sanctifier of them was of the same nature with themselves; and so confirms what he asserted, ver. 11, that they were of one: forasmuch as those were chosen, born of God, and given to him, adopted into his sonship and heirship, and by this, as well as by their humanity, derived jointly with his own from Adam, his brethren, κεκοινώνηκε, these having it in common. The word imports the reality, integrity, unity, and community they all have of the human nature; they are all truly, only, and fully men, and every individual person hath this humanity. These flesh and blood metonymically set out the whole human nature, though the body only be literally expressed by it, a body subject to many infirmities. He also himself likewise took part of the same; God the Son himself παρὰληθίως, had the next and nearest correspondent condition with theirs, even the same as to the kind of it, as like as blood is to blood, properly and truly, only freed from our sinful infirmities, as ver. 17; chap. iv. 15; this word diminisheth him not, but showeth his identity: μετέσχε, took part, he became a partner with the children, and took their nature. It is not the same word as before, κεκοινώνηκε, as the Marcionites and Manichees corrupt it, as if he had this nature only in common with them, making him only man. But being God, besides his Divine nature, &c., to it he took the human, even their true and full nature, consisting of a body and a soul, and so united them, that in him they became one person; so that hence results a double union of Christ with man. By his incarnation he is of one nature with all the human race, and so is the Head of them: and by his dying for them all the human race are made salvable, which angels are not; and those who repent and believe on him, are actually sanctified and united to him, as his elect and chosen body, and shall be saved by him. That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death: by his dying on the cross as testator of God's covenant, and not by his power as a God, (which was most glorious to himself, but most ignominious to the devil, according to the promise, Gen. iii. 15.) did he abolish, or bring to nought, and render powerless without any recovery, not by taking away the immortal life and being, but the κράτος, the strength and power to kill. For the ἐξουσία, the authority, right, and command, the keys of death, are in Christ's hand only, and he useth the strength of this execution in it, as to his enemies; when sinners become penitent believers, then his death satisfying God's justice for their sin, hath executed the power as to death, which the devil had by law against them: 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57, The sting of death is sin, that gives him power; and the strength of sin is the law, that, unless satisfied for, takes part with sin; but Christ by dying takes away the law's enmity, removes sin, as to guilt, stain, and power, and so brings to nought this power. That is, the devil: the prince himself, set here collectively for all the rest of his evil spirits, Matt. xxv. 41, who by his lies drew man into sin, and by sin stings him to death; having therefore such power to seduce to sin, he powerfully renders men obnoxious to death; and then, as executioner, having them by the law delivered into his hands, putteth forth his strength to torment and destroy them. Christ by his death doth with price and power redeem them out of his hand, and destroys all his works, takes possession of them, and brings them through death to eternal life.

15 And deliver them who <sup>g</sup>through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. g Luke 1. 74.
Rom. 8. 15.
2 Tim. 1. 7.

The effect of the former destruction of the devil is laid down in this verse, viz. the children's freedom from the fear of death, to which, being slaves to the devil, they were once in bondage. And deliver them; he, by breaking and disannulling the devil's power, doth really, fully, and justly exempt them from the concomitant evil. Who through fear of death; a painful and wasting horror, working the saddest apprehensions and tumultuous workings of soul, from its apprehended danger of death spiritual, temporal, and eternal, when the wrath of God doth not only dissolve the natural frame, but makes an everlasting separation from himself, shutting them up with the worst company, in the worst place and state that is possible for the human mind to imagine, and that for ever, Job xviii. 11, 14; xxiv. 17; Psal. lv. 4, 5; lxxiii. 19; lxxviii. 14-18. Were all their lifetime subject to bondage: when they come to the exercise of the reasonable life of man, and under convictions of sin, then these terrors arise, and never leave affrighting or tormenting them, but make them pass as many deaths as moments, as is evident in Cain and Judas; for they are enslaved, and in such a state of drudgery and vassalage to the devil, the most cruel tyrant, by their own guilt, and so are justly, invincibly, and miserably held in it. Christ by his death rescueth them from this woeful, intolerable vassalage to the devil and hell, and brings them into the glorious liberty of the children of God, Rom. viii. 21; Col. i. 12, 13.

16 For verily † he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

For verily he took not on him the nature of angels: the Spirit having asserted the deliverance of the children from their slavery to the devil, shows here the means by which it was effected, even by the gospel Prophet, being a man, and not an angel; he took their nature to himself, that by death he might deliver them: οὐ δόγῳ may signify no where, or in no wise; ἐπιλαμβάνεται is read by some, to take hold of, and so make this work denied of God the Son, that he did not take hold of the falling angels, to save or recover them: but the Spirit speaks not one word of lapsed angels in either this or the foregoing chapter, and so it cannot refer to them; and for good angels, they never departed or fell, that he should stretch out his hand to save them. And it cannot be understood otherwise than affirmatively here, which must needs have another sense, because the same act is denied and affirmed. The word therefore signifieth to assume, or to take to one, to assume or take into union. He united not to his person the angelical nature, the individual substance of an angel, so as to redeem those sinning lapsed spirits. But he took on him the seed of Abraham; but he assumed into union with his person the seed of Abraham; which seed is not to be understood here collectively, for either his carnal or believing seed; but it is the one singular, eminent Seed of Abraham, in and by whom, himself, his seed, and all nations were to be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18, compare Gal. iii. 16, the man Christ Jesus. This man, God the Son took of the virgin Mary, the offspring of Abraham, and united him to his person, and of God and this Seed united into one person, became our Lord Jesus Christ, so as he might bring the blessing of salvation to the chosen of God in all nations. The assumption of this eminent Seed into the unity of his own person, is here asserted by the Spirit, and denied concerning any angel, there being no promise ever made to them for it, Zech. xiii. 7; Luke i. 31, 35; Gal. iv. 4; 1 Tim. ii. 5. If the verb signify no such assumption in human authors, as some cavil, it is because the matter to which it is here applied was never treated on among them; and it is common with the Spirit to make words which are ordinary with men, transcendent, when he applieth them to the great mysteries of God, as Trinity, Son, adoption, &c.

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him<sup>b</sup> to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be <sup>a</sup>merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

It behoved him: the last reason why God the Son assumed and united the human nature in the seed of Abraham to his person, and was by it made like his brethren, and for a little while lower than the angels, was, that he might be capable to receive and execute the office of priesthood, by which reconciliation of sinners to God was to be effected; for he could neither be a sacrifice nor priest without it. Ἐπιείκει signifies not only its being necessary, but becoming, meet, convenient, and right, both on the account of his mediatorship, suretiship, priesthood, and of his very work, considering the two parties whose cause he was to manage. It was fit this Person should be God, that he might be just to God, and satisfy him; Adam had betrayed God's interest before, he would not therefore rely on a mere man: and man, that he might feelingly understand the state of that nature, and be a complete Saviour of it, Zech. xiii. 7. By this Person God had no unfitness nor disparagement in treating with sinners, which in a mere creature he would. For what creature could have mediated with him? Who durst undertake it, but this Son of his in their nature, whose heart he engaged to it? Jer. xxx. 21. And fittest for man, he being near in nature to us, and coming out of the midst of us, and by it communicating the benefit of his mediation to us. The intention of Christ's merits arise from his sufficiency, but the extension of them from his proper personal fitness, and so reneweth men of the same nature with him, and not angels. To be made like unto his brethren; a man having a true body and soul like them in every thing, which was necessary to make him a complete Redeemer; agreeable to them in all things necessary to their nature, qualities, conditions, and affections; like them in sorrows, griefs, pains, death. Merciful; knowing and sensible of the misery of sinners on the account of sin, pain, and loss, and so inwardly touched with them, as compassionately and effectually to relieve them. How transcendent are his bowels of mercy, pity, and compassion to them! Alas, man and angels cannot reach it! Isa. liii. 3, 4; lxiii. 9. If he should be otherwise the least moved, and desert their cause, or accuse or plead against them, what a world of them must perish for ever! He tells the Jews so much, chap. viii. 12; compare John v. 45. A Moses may miscarry in his mediatorship, and did so, Exod. xxxii. 19; but he can never, he is always merciful. And faithful; he is faithful also to penitent believers, as well as to God. They may safely trust themselves and their cause with him, and depend on him, he will never deceive them. He will satisfy God fully, and give him his due, and discharge that trust reposed on him. And to souls relying on him, he will go through his work, performing all, till they reach that for which they trusted him, Isa. xi. 5; 1 Cor. x. 13; 1 Thess. v. 23, 24. High Priest; an officer that was to order sacrifice, and all matters wherein God was concerned, according to his written law and rule. This priest must be a man; and a partnership in our conditions, both of temptations and miseries, must qualify him for it. Of this office he treats largely in chap. vii., viii., ix., and x. Amongst the officers of this kind he is the prime, chief, and head of all that ever God had, and hath in his person performed and fulfilled what all of them in theirs did but weakly shadow forth. He was actually in the flesh installed in it, of which hereafter. In things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people: the compass of his business lieth in all Divine matters, all those wherein sinners are concerned with God, chap. v. 1; satisfaction, intercession, and blessing, are his great concerns. His principal work is to bring God and sinners together; ἰλάσκεσθαι properly signifieth to make one propitious or gracious to another by sacrifice. This High Priest, by the sacrifice of himself, satisfied God's justice, removed his wrath, procured his pardon as to all sins of omission or commission, however aggravated, for penitent, believing sinners; and so makes God and them friends, and fits them for communion with him here, and for the enjoyment of him for ever, 2 Cor. v. 19, 21.

18 <sup>k</sup>For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

For in that he himself hath suffered: the reason foregoing the Spirit illustrates in this verse; he is such a merciful and faithful High Priest, by being a sufferer himself, which he could not have been feelingly, but by his being incarnate. So many, great, and afflictive sufferings never any endured but himself; he felt what sin deserved, and would fasten on sinners without his interposing; though he were sinless, what terrors from God within, what pains in his body without, did he suffer and undergo! such as are unparalleled, chap. xii. 3. Being tempted; not from any corruption or sin within him, chap. iv. 15; John xiv. 30; but from an inveterate enemy, the devil, without him, and all the instruments he used of his associated spirits and men. How early on the entrance on his office did the devil begin with him, and thought to have foiled him as he did the first Adam! and how did his children tempt him, with the which the gospel is filled in so many pages! By these he felt what temptations were, how difficult to avoid sin under them, how fearful it was to be exercised by them, chap. v. 7, how much such as miscarry under them are to be pitied; what sore evils sin brings on the committers of it; what succour, strength, stablishing, settlement his brethren need under it, Luke xxii. 43, 44; and how easily

<sup>b</sup> Phil. 2. 7.
<sup>i</sup> ch. 4. 15.
& 5. 1, 2.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 4. 15,
16, & 2.
& 7. 25.

without his assistance his tempted ones may be foiled by it. He is able to succour them that are tempted: now sensibly made fit by his own sorrows, temptations, and sufferings, he is powerfully inclined to help his; subjected he was to all of them, to make him feelingly, tenderly pitying of us. He had the mercies of God before, and as if that were not enough, the tempted nature of a man, to soften his heart to pity his brethren in their sufferings and temptations. These sufferings of his had a purchasing power and ability in them for us, he thereby buying help and succour for us as to all ours, that should be correspondent unto his; so as by his bloody death under temptation he bought off ours, either not to overtake us, or if under them, he is habitually and meritoriously thereby to succour his; most compassionately and readily giving forth all reasonable, suitable, and sufficient support under and remedy against all these temptations, which for sin, or from it, his brethren are afflicted with, and come to him for help. This is the most powerful preservative against despair, and the firmest ground of hope and comfort, that ever believing, penitent sinners could desire or have. From all which these Hebrews might have been convinced what little reason they had to be offended with his humiliation or death, who was their Messiah; and though for state and time a little lower than the angels, yet in the human nature was thereby exalted to be the Lord and Head above them all.

CHAP. III

Christ is showed to be more worthy than Moses, 1—6: we must be careful therefore not to follow the example of the obstinate and unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, 7—19.

WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of <sup>a</sup>the heavenly calling, consider <sup>b</sup>the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus;

Several uses the Holy Ghost makes, from the beginning of this chapter to the end of chap. iv., of the gospel doctrine of God the Son incarnate, set by the Father in office, to deal for sinners towards God as their great Prophet. The counsel he giveth is comprehended in the first six verses of this chapter; and as directing these Hebrews to their duty, so further explaining and confirming his office to them, by comparing of him with Moses, and setting him as above angels, so above him; and to be so valued, esteemed, and preferred by these Hebrews: seeing this great gospel Prophet was for a little while made lower than the angels in his humanity, and it was infinitely beneficial to us upon the account of what he suffered in it in our stead, and purchased by it for our good; therefore should those who are partakers of it, being related in the flesh to him as Hebrews, descending with them from Abraham, consider, but much more as Christians, believing and adopted in him to be God's children, and sanctified by his Spirit, 1 Pet. i. 1—5; 2 Pet. i. 1. Partakers of the heavenly calling; and made thus a Christian fraternity by the heavenly calling of them out of the world by the gospel; when by his Spirit he enlightened their minds, and renewed their wills, and made them obedient to it, so as for the temper of their souls they are made holy, and for their condition happy; the work of God's power and mercy eminently appearing in it: God therein preventing man, so as he influenceth him to hear him from heaven, walk worthy of heaven, and at last to rest in heaven for ever. Consider; κατανοήσατε imports not a bare single act of the mind, to think on, or understand, but a repeated one, to think again and again, expressed by that periphrasis of laying it to heart, pressing on their spirits the due effort of faith and obedience arising out of this observation, Isa. lii. 15. The Apostle; God's Messenger, his own Son sent from heaven to be incarnate, with authority to execute in his human nature his prophetic, as all his offices, and with authority to send forth his apostles to do their part, John xx. 21; which is no more than is intimated in that title, the Messenger of the covenant, Isa. xlii. 19; Mal. iii. 1; that was, to propose it to and confirm it with them. This was he by whom Moses desired God's message might be sent to them, Exod. iv. 13; and whom he foretold should bring it, Deut. xviii. 15; Acts iii. 22, 23. And High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus: the Son is the great gospel High Priest, to deal in all matters with God for them, chap. ii. 17. The offices divided among other persons in the Old Testament church were all united in his person, he doth transcend them all, being a High Priest peculiar to the called and sanctified ones of God, of which all preceding were faint resemblances and types; he, the most excellent Minister of the Christian faith and religion professed by them, being anointed unto all these offices in the flesh by the Father with the Holy Ghost, chap. i. 2; and being Jesus a Saviour, our Emmanuel, God on our side, saving his people from their sins, and re-uniting them to God, Matt. i. 21, 23; John xvii. 21—23.

2 Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house.

The Spirit enforceth the duty counselled on them from the fidelity of that grand gospel Minister in his offices; exemplified in a parallel with Moses, whom he did exceed. Who was faithful to him that appointed him; he did most exactly perform all he was intrusted with, according to the intention and end of his commission. He did most faithfully reveal God, John i. 18, and his whole saving will, to whom God sent him, John iii. 31—34; v. 34; viii. 28, 38; as his great Prophet, Acts iii. 22. He as faithfully discharged the office of his priesthood in sacrificing himself to atone God for sinners, and as faithfully intercedes for all with him unto this day, and will do so for ever, with all truth and fidelity discharging his trust, chap. vii. 24—28; ix. 11, 12, 14, 24, 26. He was faithful in fulfilling all his types, and in changing and finishing all the ceremonial constitutions, and filling them up with gospel ones, according to God's will revealed to him about it. He was true to his Father, who appointed and constituted him to these offices, and solemnly invested him in them; πισθῶσαντι here not signifying the making of a creature, but the making of an officer, the person existing before; he puts him into this special charge and office by anointing him for it, Acts ii. 36. As also Moses was faithful in all his house: Moses was the Jewish mediator, and brought them the law moral, judicial, and ceremonial from God; as he was highly esteemed by them, so God testifieth of his fidelity, Christ was not only like to him in fidelity, but, as to both the truth and degree of it, exceeding him. Moses kept to his pattern shown him in the mount, and Christ fulfilled entirely his Father's will, John v. 30; vi. 38, and is preferred to him. Moses was so in the whole church of Israel, set out by this metaphor of a house; but Christ in all God's house and family both in heaven and in earth; not the least thing that concerned the family, but Christ fulfilled; not the meanest person in it, but he careth for and saveth.

3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house.

For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses: the Spirit proves to the Hebrews, that the gospel Prophet was not only like to, but more excellent than, their greatest prophet, and who had familiarity with God beyond others, as God testifieth, Numb. xii. 6—8. This he proves by an undeniable supposition, that God is better than man; such is Christ; which he demonstrates by a work of God, his making the church and all things. If he made the church, then he is better than the whole church, and worthy of more honour than Moses, who is but a member of it. For this, man is not in the original, this gospel Prophet, who was God as well as man, the apostle and High Priest of Christians, was esteemed and accounted by God the Father, the best judge of worth, and who appointed him to his offices: he treated him more honourably than Moses, as he deserved it, having real excellency and worth in himself. He was God's Son, Moses his servant. He lay in God's bosom, saw his face, was his fellow, Zech. xiii. 7; John i. 14, 18; Moses only heard his voice, and saw his back parts, Exod. xxxiii. 19, 20, 23; xxxiv. 5—7. Moses's face only shined, but Christ's person was

<sup>a</sup> Gr. made.
<sup>b</sup> Sam. 12. 6.
<sup>c</sup> Num. 12.
7. ver. 5.

<sup>a</sup> Rom. 1. 7.
<sup>b</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 2.
Eph. 4. 1.
Phil. 3. 14.
<sup>c</sup> 2 Thess. 1.
11. 2. Tim.
1. 5. 2 Pet.
1. 10.
<sup>d</sup> Rom. 15. 8. ch. 2. 17. & 4. 14. & 5. 5. & 6. 20. & 8. 1. & 9. 11. & 10. 21.

<sup>d</sup> Zech. 6. 12.
Mat. 16. 18.

entirely glorious, Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30; 2 Cor. iii. 7: compare Matt. xvii. 2-6; 2 Pet. i. 17. Inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house; he is the cause, principal, efficient, and architect of this building, not a stone is laid in it without him. By this metaphor of house to which it relateth, is meant God's spiritual building and temple, 1 Cor. iii. 10, 16, 17; styled God's household or family, Eph. ii. 19-22: in sum, God's church, built by and on Christ, of which Moses was but one living stone or member, 1 Pet. ii. 4-8. Therefore this builder ought to be esteemed and honoured above the church, or Moses, a member of it.

<sup>e</sup> Eph. 2. 10. & 3. 9. <sup>c</sup> 1. 2. 4 For every house is builded by some man; but <sup>e</sup> he that built all things is God.

The excellency of this builder is evinced by his nature and preference beyond his building, as any man is beyond his. For every house is builded by some man; for every earthly artificial building, a material house built for habitation, though it may metaphorically and analogically be understood of a commonwealth, or political one, which is contrived, framed, and raised by some man; yet an effect cannot produce itself, nor a house raise itself; both must have a cause, both the house wherein Moses was faithful, and Christ's house. But he that built all things is God; but he who built his church in all ages, whether the Israelitish or Christian, and all things about it of which we speak, and all things else, Matt. xvi. 18; John i. 1, 3; Col. i. 20; he is God essentially; and Christ, doing God's work and building all things, is not by name only, but by nature, God. The whole world is his workmanship, but the church is the most rare, curious, and excellent piece of it. Christ is not part of the house, as Moses is, but the builder of it; he is the Creator and builder both of the church and him, and so infinitely above him.

<sup>f</sup> ver. 2. <sup>g</sup> Ex. 14. 31. <sup>h</sup> Num. 12. 7. <sup>i</sup> Deut. 3. 24. <sup>j</sup> Josh. 1. 2. & 8. 31. <sup>k</sup> Deut. 18. 15, 18, 19. 5 And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as <sup>l</sup> a servant, <sup>m</sup> for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after;

The gospel Minister doth not only excel Moses as much as a builder doth his work, but as a son doth a servant, proved in this and ver. 6. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant; your great legal prophet, in whom many of you Hebrews trust, John v. 45, did truly and fully reveal and do what God charged him, in ministering his will to his church, Exod. xl. 16-33; he did not diminish from, nor add the least to, God's charge, ἑπάγγελον, Numb. xii. 7. As a minister, Moses was as faithful as any God had; not a slave or a drudge, but a free, willing, ingenuous servant, most entirely and obsequiously addicting himself in that honourable place and office of great trust, to which God called him; a stewardly servant, a prophet and a prince, inspecting and ordering all according to God's will; in all Christ's house and family, his church, he is but a servant. For a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after: his faithfulness was evident in his bearing true witness to the church, of all God made known to him, that they might not be uncertain of the truth; even all that truth, which was more fully and clearly to be spoken by the prophets after him, and by Christ and his apostles; but which the Spirit shall speak to them further concerning Christ and his church in this Epistle, John v. 46. In which is insinuated, that Christ was the truth himself witnessed to by Moses, who was a witness of an inferior degree, though in his work faithful, and conformed unto Christ.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 1. 2. <sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 3. 16. & 6. 19. <sup>l</sup> 2 Cor. 6. 16. <sup>m</sup> Eph. 2. 21. <sup>n</sup> 2. 1 Tim. 3. 15. <sup>o</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 5. <sup>p</sup> ver. 14. <sup>q</sup> Mat. 10. 22. & 24. 13. <sup>r</sup> Rom. 8. 2. <sup>s</sup> Col. 1. 23. <sup>t</sup> ch. 6. 11. & 10. 35. 6 But Christ as <sup>u</sup> a son over his own house; <sup>v</sup> whose house are we, <sup>w</sup> if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

But Christ as a son over his own house; the anointed gospel Prophet by God the Father, chap. i. 9, who was eminently faithful and true to his trust, who is Heir and Lord of all, and therefore by the law of nature and nations is above the best servant, Gal. iv. 1. Who is the Head and Lord over his own church, which he purchased by his own blood, Acts xx. 28, and built for himself. Moses was in it but a servant, fulfilling his Master's will and pleasure, and ordering all in it agreeable to it. Whose house are we; the Hebrews' personal privilege, as well as the Prophet's excellency, persuading and obliging them to know by consideration what is represented to them, and to influence their hearts to a perseverance under his teaching and government in their Christian course, because they are parts of his house, and members of his church; a particular house, and body, and church to him, and members of the catholic one. A temple, wherein God doth inhabit and dwell by his Spirit, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17: compare Eph. ii. 21; iii. 17; 1 Tim. iii. 15. A house he will glorify and perfect with his own presence, and which he will fill with transcendently more glory than he did the literal temple, Exod. xl. 34, 35; 2 Chron. vii. 1, 2; Isa. vi. 1, 5: compare Hag. ii. 6. But how completely shall it be filled with his glory in heaven! Phil. iii. 21. How should such a glorious state influence them to a sincere perseverance in his religion! If we hold fast the confidence; a tenacious holding, as with both hands, with our utmost strength, against all insinuations and temptations of all adversaries whatsoever, which would either entice or force them from it. Παρόπιστα τῆς ἐλπίδος, is an ingenuous, bold, and confident profession of our hope before all the world, without doubting, wavering, or fearful shaking about what is the true object of it, let the persecutions or sufferings for it be what they will. And the rejoicing of the hope: hope here is a firm expectation of salvation in eternal glory by Jesus Christ. It necessarily includes in it faith, for we cannot hope for that we do not believe; and faith representing to the soul from the gospel, Christ purchasing, and the Father in him covenanting and promising to give it to us, if we truly believe in and sincerely obey him, so as we may on the surest and best grounds look out for it, and expect it, ver. 14; chap. vi. 11; Acts xxvi. 6, 7: compare Col. i. 5, 23; Tit. ii. 13; 1 Pet. i. 3. This hope keeps up the soul in a joyous and glorious condition under all threatening evil; it makes Christians glory in tribulation, Rom. v. 2, 3; xii. 12; rejoicing in want of sensible good, 2 Cor. vi. 10; compare 1 Pet. v. 10. Firm unto the end; both this confidence and glorying of hope must be retained firm to the end. Persevere they must in the exercise of them with stability and constancy, till they reach the salvation of their souls, Col. i. 23; 1 Pet. i. 5-10; which Christians are not to trust to their own power to compass, but on the continued assistance of God in the use of those means that he hath appointed thereunto, who will never be wanting to such who do so rely on him, and constantly seek it from him, 1 Cor. i. 8, 9.

<sup>m</sup> 2 Sam. 23. 2. <sup>n</sup> Acts 1. 16. <sup>o</sup> ver. 15. <sup>p</sup> Ps. 95. 7. 7 Wherefore (as <sup>q</sup> the Holy Ghost saith, <sup>r</sup> To day if ye will hear his voice,

The Spirit enforceth his counsel for those Hebrews' improvement of his doctrine about the gospel Prophet, by alleging a sad example of their fathers refusing to hear and obey him, from ver. 7-11. The allegation might be best placed in parenthesis, and the introductive illative particle Wherefore, may refer to ver. 12. Take heed, brethren. As the Holy Ghost saith; as the Spirit, the Holy One, that third relation in the Trinity, whose essence is holiness, is the author of what the psalmist doth write, and is here quoted by him, Psal. xc. 7-12. So that the example registered is true and infallible, and should suitably affect them, reading it. To-day if ye will hear his voice; every present time, wherein the great Builder and Lord of God's church speaketh to them; God would not have a hearer of his Prophet to procrastinate a day, but to be exercising all those internal acts, which this word of sense hear doth comprehend, such as reacheth the heart as well as the ear; if you will attend, intend, believe, love, and obey; a hearing better than all external sacrifices, 1 Sam. xv. 22. The angel of the covenant speaking his mind and will to them by Moses and the prophets, which was for the matter of it faith in God's covenant, made with them in and through Christ, Psal. xc. 7: compare Exod. xxxiii. 20-23.

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

Harden not your hearts: to help in the former duty the Spirit subjoins this negative counsel. That is styled hard, which will not yield to any impression: make not your heart a stone, so as not to understand, believe, or obey God's voice to it, Deut. xv. 17; 1 Sam. vi. 6; for God requires them to be fleshy tables, to write his will on, 2 Cor. iii. 3.

The hardening of this part is the hardening of the whole person, and when hardened by themselves, is provoking God's judicial hardening of them to their destruction. As in the provocation; ἐν τῷ παραπικρούσμῳ, in the bitter contention, comprehending in it both work, season, and place; called Meribah, Numb. xx. 13, 14; names of places and persons by words of the same signification, though not of the same sound. In the day of temptation in the wilderness; in the day of Massah, when Israel in the wilderness did murmur, and strive against, and vexed God, (after he had divided the sea for them,) for their want of water, Exod. xvii. 2, 7; Deut. vi. 16; xxxiii. 8; that bitter contest of unbelief after the sight of so many miracles, when they cried out, Is the Lord among us? Psal. xc. 8. It may also refer to the whole forty years' time of their murmuring and tempting him in the wilderness.

9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years.

When your fathers tempted me; in the time and place forementioned, the fathers from whom you derive your being and corruption, yet glory in them and their traditions, whose state is aggravated from your line of successive rebellion, Acts vii. 51—53. They have imbibed my Spirit by their unbelief; for upon the want of water, they questioned his power, wisdom, truth, and providence, to the denial of all, and sometimes multiplied it, Numb. xvi., &c. Proved me; a discontented quarrel with, and scrutiny of, Christ the Redeemer, that if he would not serve their lust, they would deny him, and apostatize from him, and return to Egypt; notwithstanding their having sufficient proof of him, yet they would contend with him, 1 Cor. x. 9. And saw my works forty years; all the Redeemer's miracles, which he wrought for them in Egypt and the wilderness, they saw them plainly and presently on their tempting him; miracles of mercy and of punishments, by fire, by the earth opening, by fiery serpents, by the sword, by consuming six hundred thousand of them; all which were evidences sufficient to convince any of the wickedness of mistrusting him, Deut. xxix. 2—4. This hardening of their hearts yet continued forty years, till all but two of them, Joshua and Caleb, were consumed; God by their sin was so grieved with them after such experience of his power for so long a time: see Exod. xxxii. 10; Numb. xiv. 22.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways.

Wherefore I was grieved with that generation; because they thus tempted and proved him by hardening their hearts in unbelief forty years, God the Redeemer, Isa. lxiii. 16; 1 Cor. x. 9, was grieved; which is attributed to him improperly, who is not subject to passions; but as men grown impatient with grievous and oppressive burdens, so he expresseth his dislike, disdain of them, and resolution to bear no longer, as Amos ii. 13. They split on him, as a ship on a sharp point of a rock, so as God hath loss, offence, and trouble by it; and all of them did so carry it to him, the whole age of them but Caleb and Joshua, Psal. xc. 10. And said, They do alway err in their heart; they follow deceit and lying in their doctrine and worship with all their heart, so that it is diffused through their persons, and that seat of truth is made a depth of error, to the stupifying of their hearts even to very madness; and this was their state all their time. And they have not known my ways; notwithstanding God's works were among them, and his word, yet they would not know his mind, so as to approve, love, and walk in God's ways; his law, doctrine, revealed truth, and commands were all cast behind their back, Ezek. xliii. 35.

+ Gr. If they shall enter. 11 So I swear in my wrath, †They shall not enter into my rest.)

So I swear in my wrath: such were their provocations and temptations of their Redeemer, that he determined their punishment; the certainty of which he fixed by an irreversible oath, which is the highest confirmation of vengeance when it cometh from wrath; as of his promise, when it issueth from grace. Numb. xiv. 27—36; Psal. xc. 11: compare chap. vi. 17, 18. And the spring of it here is wrath, enraged by their murmurings and unbelief. They shall not enter into my rest: the punishment is expressed in an expostulatory form, which is vehemently asserting the negative of the question; They shall never enter into my rest. If they enter in, then I am neither true nor God. The rest literal was the land of Canaan, Deut. xii. 9; in the truth of that type, heaven. It is the Redeemer who speaks this, whose rest is by way of efficiency, purchase, and donation; he gives entrance into it, and shuts out of it, Matt. vii. 21—23. This is a shutting them out of all peace, into eternal sorrow, anguish, distress, and trouble, and every other evil contrary unto this rest.

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

Here the Spirit applieth the former dreadful example of sin and judgment to the Hebrews, to forewarn them how they sinned as these did, lest they partake of the like vengeance; and so enters his caution against unbelief. Take heed, brethren: βλέπετε signifies not an act of sight, but of the mind, circumspection, watchfulness, and heed, taking exactest caution of the evil forbidden, chap. xii. 15, 25; 1 Cor. viii. 9. Brethren they were to Paul in the flesh, and more so as true believers in Christ; he cautions them particularly, one by one, lest any root of bitterness should be amongst them, chap. xii. 15. Lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief: the heart is the first, and proper, and chief subject, wherein all sin riseth, and from thence issueth into words and works, Matt. xv. 18, 19; compare James i. 14, 15. This comprehendeth the mind, will, and affections, the whole inward man: and this heart in every man is naturally and habitually evil, continually forging and framing of it, Gen. vi. 5; compare Jer. xvii. 9. Almighty grace only can change this heart; yet it works by counsel, and makes the soul willing to use the means appointed to effect it. Unbelief, though but in itself, is but a denial to assent to or rely on the will of God revealed to it, yet is the spring and fountain of all other sin, the teeming womb from whence all issueth, as uncleanness, idolatry, unrighteousness, superstition, &c. It was the hardening sin of their forefathers, they would not believe, and then did murmur and rebel. It is the root of apostasy; men breaking their covenant with God in Christ, do then desert him. Against this perfidious, impious, perverted temper doth he caution them to watch, that neither for measure, nor season they ever do admit or allow it; that there be not at all in the least degree, or at any time, such a base, malignant quality in their hearts, Rom. xi. 20, 21. In departing from the living God; turning away, standing off, and separating the heart; it implies in it a real, total, final defection; actual and formal apostasy from him whom they had owned and received; and is actual rebellion against their lawful Sovereign, by turning either Jews or heathens, and renouncing the Christian religion and its Author, who is the living God, not only formally, as opposed to dead idols, but especially of spiritual and eternal life, John v. 19—21, 25, 26: which living God is our Lord Jesus Christ, ver. 7, whose voice they were to hear, who was tempted by their unbelief in the wilderness, 1 Cor. x. 9, who gave the law to them at Sinai, chap. xii. 26. So that to apostatize from him and his religion, is to apostatize from God, and to renounce eternal life, and to subject themselves to eternal punishments, which he ever liveth to inflict on them. Unless they took heed to avoid this unbelief, it was impossible for them to persevere in Christianity, when threatened with persecutions, and the loss of peace, liberty, safety, estates, honours, relations, and life itself for it.

13 But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day: the means to avoid the former evil is, to exhort; which, as a private duty, is an earnest, frequent calling on, stirring up, or persuading, encouraging to perseverance in the Christian religion, and to put away all heart evil, especially unbelief, which traineth to apostasy; to which are subversive God's precepts, promises, threatenings suitably applied by them. And this is not only privately, but especially publicly, by the regular ministration of the word and ordinances to the whole society of Christians, as they are personally obliged to it, being members one of another, 1 Cor. xii. 25, 27. And this they are to do instantly, for no man is sure what may be on the morrow, he being but a days-man, living, and supplied, as working by the day: Sufficient to the day is the duty as well as the evil in it, Matt. vi. 11, 34. Whilst then the day of grace and repentance lasts, in which God calls and entreats, and will hear and help, the opportune time of exhorting, the very instant wherein God expecteth it, ver. 7; Psal. xcvi. 7. And every one, as thus to look to another, must begin with himself, lest any miscarry; charity, especially as to this, should begin in every Christian at home. Lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; lest themselves or others refuse the gospel tendered, or reject and apostatize from it after professing it, so as to become not only obstinate, but rebellious, by unbelief, and an habitual hardened heart; so as the sinful, natural habit of our soul, James i. 12, 15, so horribly vile in itself, that were it not masked nature would abhor it, might be drawn forth by the false colours, as the devil blinds sin with, to delude the understanding, and to catch and ensnare the malignant will, that it swallows it more and more, to the hardening of the heart; that Divine promises, threatenings, nor admonitions, can make any impression; it being unmoved under the application of all these, disregards the Christian faith, and hath its issue in a total apostacy, Jer. xvii. 9; Eph. iv. 22; 1 Tim. i. 19.

14 For we are made partakers of Christ, <sup>o ver. 6.</sup> if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end;

For we are made partakers of Christ: for shows this to be a rational motive, urging home the former counsel, unto which the following condition doth agree; for we believing Christians and brethren are made μέτοχοι, partners with the primitive Proprietor supposed in it, even Christ, who hath of his own the fulness of God, life, grace, glory, and all good; in all which fulness of his we share, by virtue of our union with him, John i. 16; Eph. i. 22, 23; Col. i. 19; ii. 9, 10; and he by his Spirit will free us from the deceitfulness of sin, and hardening by it. If we hold the beginning of our confidence; if by a spiritual tenaciousness, and firm fixing in our hearts, we hold ἀρχήν, either the principal or fundamental truth, as the word significeth in sciences; or, the entrance or beginning of our course, as used in things, so as the first step in Christianity is styled a beginning of grace. Stedfast unto the end: ἠνωτάτως, in personal relations, is, a real subsistence, as of the Son in the Trinity, chap. i. 3; in things, the basis and foundation upholding others; and this in Christianity is Christ principally, who bears up his church, Eph. ii. 20—22. And faith, the instrument whereby we receive Christ, is so called, chap. xi. 1, that which renders present and subsisting what is hoped for to the soul; so that here it imports the retaining firm that principle of truth, upon which Christians are bottomed and supported to life, that is, Christ himself, and the true doctrine of him; as also, that we must firmly stand in the first beginnings of faith, and increase in them, so as they may be firmly fixed in our hearts, and our hearts on them, so as never to be removed as long as we live. Our retaining firmly of this, makes us partners in Christ; both instrumentally helping in it, and evidentially; it being the inalienable consequence of true grace, holding us to this communion with Christ. How ought these conditions to quicken the activity of believers!

15 While it is said, <sup>p ver. 7.</sup> To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

This is another circumstance of the example of the Jews applied to them: That since now Christ is speaking to you, as he did to your forefathers then; the same voice concerneth you both, so as, not to-morrow, or when you will, but To-day, if you will believe what God speaketh to you by him, and hath recorded in his word concerning his being the Messiah, and render not yourselves deaf to God's voice, or obdurate through unbelief, as your forefathers did, when their unbelief and hardness of heart imbibited God's Spirit against them, because acting in it against their solemn vows and engagements to him, so as to apostatize from him.

16 For some, when they had heard, <sup>q Num. 14. 2, 4, 11, 24, 30. Dent. 1. 34, 35, 38.</sup> did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

For some, when they had heard, did provoke: this is a rational enforcement of the former duty pressed; it being as possible for them to provoke Christ as others, they should look to it, and not harden their hearts; for the greater some, the most of the congregation of Israel, imbibited God's Spirit by their unbelief and hardness of heart; though Christ spake to them from heaven, as never was before done, and daily by Moses they were hearing counsels by which they might live, yet provoked they him, and would not believe. Howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses: this rightly interprets the psalmist, and sets a better example of their fathers for them to follow. Let Caleb and Joshua, believers, and obedient to God, be your patterns to imitate. He aggravates the disobedience of the one, and the obedience of the other. They all had equally a clear exemption and deliverance from the place of bondage, and that by Moses, by whom God wrought such miracles as might command faith from any; yet these some, by murmuring and striving with the Redeemer, provoked him: how great is their sin! how suitable and pleasing the obedience of the others to him!

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? <sup>r Num. 14. 22, 29, &c. & 26. 53. Ps. 106. 26. 1 Cor. 10. 5. Jude 5.</sup> was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness?

By these questions the Spirit makes a more lively representation of these unbelieving provokers of God, that his reason may have the more force with them. Do ye observe with whom God was grieved? the form puts them on more exact notice for their caution: God suffers not by passion, but these redeemed out of Egypt carried it contrary to him, and crossed his will, that which usually grieveth us. Concerning the word, see ver. 10. It is used by the Septuagint, Deut. vii. 26, to express that detestation and abhorrence which Israel was to show against idols, that they should be a grief to their soul not to be endured: idols are called grievances. He was displeased and grieved with their covenant-breaking with him forty years together. These sinners, by their unbelief, murmuring, idolatry, rebellion against his officers and ordinances, and their other lusts, so imbibited his Spirit, that he by various judgments destroyed them, and turned them into the grave and hell together, 1 Cor. x. 5—11. Moses and others of God's own cannot be numbered among these sinners, for their sins were pardoned and persons accepted; and though they came short of the literal, had a much more abundant entrance administered to them into the heavenly Canaan.

18 And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? <sup>s Num. 14. 30. Dent. 1. 34, 35.</sup>

To prevent these Hebrews falling, the Spirit repeats the direful oath of God to apostates in the wilderness; the form of which was opened, ver. 11: compare Numb. xiv. 30. The matter sworn was, that they should be so far from possessing, that they should not so much as enter into the land of promise, Canaan, which was God's property, as the whole earth is; he promised it to them, could only dispossess their enemies, did give it in possession to their seed, and made it a type of heaven, and of his rest there; he swore this in his severe vindictive justice, so as his sentence was irreversible: which oath stands good against all total and final apostates from him, who have thereby forfeited any title to God's eternal rest. Them that believed not; those who were unbelieving under all God's miracles of mercies and judgments, which they saw, and so became obstinately disobedient to God's commands, and broke his covenant, chap. viii. 9; Jer. xxxi. 32, and apostatized from him, and so perished in their gainsaying.

19 So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief. <sup>t ch. 4. 6.</sup>

The execution of the matter sworn was felt by these Hebrews, which should make them and all that read it to dread both their sin and punishment, which the gospel would as justly inflict on them, if unbelievers. It is to be seen in God's written record of it, and the experienced downfall of such, that God's oath had shut the door as to their entrance there, and his judgments consumed them in the wilderness, because of their denial of resting on God's word, and the impious practices that issued from it, in their rejecting promises, rebelling against precepts, and murmuring against providence. God is no respecter of persons; if we sin so against his Son and gospel, how much sorer punishment will overtake us! chap. x. 27, 29.

CHAP. IV

The rest of Christians to be attained by faith, 1—11. The power of God's word, 12, 13. Having Jesus the Son of God for our High Priest, we must hold fast our profession, and come boldly unto the throne of grace, 14—16.

a ch. 12. 15. LET <sup>a</sup> us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it.

Let us therefore fear: the Spirit draws this counsel from the former sad event of unbelief in the progenitors of these Hebrews, who were shut out of an earthly Canaan by it, which was promised to them: hereon he adviseth them to avoid that sin which will have now as fearful a punishment, viz. the shutting them out of the heavenly Canaan, tendered and promised to believers in the gospel. Fear is that affection of the soul, by which it avoideth and shunneth what is hurtful to it, and here carrieth it in a gracious and child-like care and jealousy of slighting the Father's promise, and coming short of heaven; it is a fear issuing from faith, Phil. ii. 12. Lest, a promise being left us; lest the promise of God to men, who sware some should not enter, but promised others should, as Numb. xiv. 23, 24, 30, 31; a promise of the most excellent, glorious, and heavenly rest made to believers, Isa. xi. 10. This was graciously left or made to them by God; but καταλειπομένης here is an act of sin, lest we by sin should leave or reject God's promise of the better, as the Hebrews did of the literal, rest, by their unbelief and disobedience to God's law; and so is the proper object of fear, and therefore ought to have been read, lest the promise being left behind. Of entering into his rest; of a free entrance into heaven, and enjoying a glorious rest with God there. Any of you should seem to come short of it: he would have it the fear of all, that not one soul might be endangered by it; so as not in any measure to slight such a promise, nor as much as to seem so, flying from the very appearance of evil, 1 Thess. v. 22; ὑπερηκνῶσαι, a metaphor taken from racers, where any are outrun and left behind; noting the miserable state of such Christians who profess to run to heaven, but never do so as to obtain it, 1 Cor. ix. 24—26. Alas, he that falleth short of heaven, reacheth home to hell!

2 For unto us was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them: but † the word preached did not profit them, † not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: the reason enforcing the former counsel is, their having mutually the same means, the one as the other, and if they fear not, may be guilty of the same sin; for the Hebrews and the whole church were evangelized by the outward publishing to them, and their professed reception of, the glad tidings of salvation by God the Son incarnate, who was to lead them in the way to God's eternal rest; which if they had been truly evangelized and transformed by, they could never have been shut out of God's rest; the same gospel being preached to both their forefathers and them, though more gloriously revealed to the latter, 2 Cor. iii. 10, 11. For the gospel was preached to Abraham and to his offspring, that in his eminent Seed, the Lord Jesus Christ, all nations should be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18; compare John viii. 56. He was the Angel of the covenant that was Lord of God's hosts, and was to lead them into the literal and heavenly Canaan, Exod. xxiii. 20; Josh. v. 13—15; Isa. xi. 10. So that none entered into either of God's rests but by him alone, who so testifieth by himself, John v. 39, 46, and by his Spirit, Acts xv. 11. But the word preached did not profit them: the gospel was so preached to them, that they did or might hear it, Rom. x. 14, 15; compare Psal. xcii. 4; Isa. lii. 7; yet did it not prove effectual to many of those Hebrews, to bring them either into the literal or heavenly Canaan, but they came short of God's rest in both; they not performing what he required, he by an irreversible sentence excluded them: see chap. iii. 17, 19. Not being mixed with faith in them that heard it; συγκεκραμῖνος a metaphor taking from mixing things in the stomach, as meat and drink, without the concoction of which there can be no nourishing the body; setting forth the sin of these Hebrews, who never received nor mixed this gospel which they heard with a sincere faith in their souls, so as, being digested thereby, it might be united with it. Thus that which was the mighty power and wisdom of God to salvation to those who believed, was a word of condemnation and eternal death to unbelievers. 1 Cor. i. 18; 1 Pet. ii. 2, 3.

3 <sup>b</sup> For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, <sup>c</sup> As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world.

For we which have believed do enter into rest: a further reason setting home this counsel, was the certain benefit of our care in believing; for that the community of real Christians, partakers and exercisers of the same precious faith, as Paul himself, 2 Pet. i. 1, have the same privilege as believing Caleb and Joshua had, Numb. xiv. 24, 30, to enter into God's rest; initially having peace with God now, and his love shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost, witnessing their reconciliation, justification, renovation, adoption, so as they rejoice in hope of the glory of God, Rom. v. 1, 2, 5; and are by believing and obedience making out to the attainment of the final and complete rest of God in heaven, of which they are afraid to fall short. As he said, As I have sworn in my wrath: God himself confirms this by his oath, chap. iii. 11, 18; Psal. xc. 11. At the same time that he excludeth all unbelievers from entering in, he inclusively and by consequence sweareth that all believers do and shall enter in. If they shall enter into my rest: that rest which David there speaks of was not God's rest on the seventh day from the creation after the finishing of God's works, nor the temporal rest in the land of Canaan which the Jews had, and were past, as these Hebrews might suggest; but another rest to come, either in the world to come, chap. ii. 5, or in the heavenly rest in glory, which he takes occasion further to explain to them. Although the works were finished from the foundation of the world: καὶ τοῦ some render as a particle of exception, although, as if it intended, although God's rest is some where meant of his rest after the finishing of the works of creation, yet here God speaks of the rest of Canaan, a type of the heavenly one: others, that God swore they should not enter into his rest, although God's works were done, and the rest were ready, because of their unbelief. Others render it, and indeed he said and spake of the same heavenly rest, long before he spake of the rest of Canaan, even upon the finishing of his works from the foundation of the world: which seems most agreeable to the Spirit's design here.

4 For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, <sup>d</sup> And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise: the Spirit proves, that the rest mentioned by David, Psal. xc. 11, is not meant the seventh day's rest, because spoken three thousand years after that rest was past; but this rest of which he speaks was to come, though spoken of and known then: for Moses had spoken of it in a well-known place to them, Gen. ii. 1—3, and this when he wrote of the seventh day, which was eminently noting the sabbath, and a type of God's most excellent rest which he sware unto believers. And God did rest the seventh day from all his works: God doth not here rest as if he were weary, Isa. xl. 28, but ceased from the creation of all kind of things he purposed to make, but not from their propagation and his providence about them, Acts xvii. 25. And this he did on the seventh day, which he insti-

<sup>a</sup> Gr. the word of hearing.
<sup>b</sup> Or, because they were not excited by faith to.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 3. 14.
<sup>c</sup> Ps. 95. 11.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 3. 11.

<sup>d</sup> Gen. 2. 2.
Ex. 20. 11.
& 31. 17.

tuted a sabbath for his people, Gen. ii. 3; which resting day may type out the eternal rest of angels and men, when their work of obedience is finished: and yet was not God's rest spoken of in the Psalm, nor promised in the gospel to believers, for this was yet to come; whereas the seventh day's rest was entered into from the foundation of the world.

5 And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest.

And in this place again: kai here is not so much copulative, connecting an instance of David to the same purpose of that of Moses about the seventh day's rest from the creation; but discrete, joining an instance of another rest of God different from the seventh day's rest. Moses spake of this, but David here of a further rest; for in Psal. xc. 11, David spake not of the seventh day, but of God's last and eternal rest. If they shall enter into my rest; ei here is affirmative, as appears by comparing ver. 3 and 6, that these shall have a real and full possession in the future after David's time of this rest, and therefore different from Moses's rest so long past before. The word rest in the Hebrew is not the same in the text of Moses and David; Gen. ii. 2, 3, it is שבת in Psal. xc. 11, נחמתי this of David noting the full, eternal, comfortable rest of souls in glory, sworn by God to believers in the gospel.

6 Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief:

The Spirit having demonstrated, that God's rest sworn to believers in the gospel, and mentioned by David, could not be the seventh day's rest; proceeds to prove likewise, that it could not be the rest of Israel in the land of Canaan, since that was entered into four hundred years before he wrote by the Spirit of this better rest, since those unbelieving Israel that entered into Canaan never entered into this rest. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein; forasmuch then as a rest to come is spoken of, and that some believers must have a real and full possession of the glorious rest offered to them in the gospel, as David foretold: see ver. 9—11. And they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief; the unbelieving Israel, who had the glad tidings of this rest: preached unto them by Moses and by David, &c., yet entered not into it, though they entered into and lived in Canaan, because of their disobedience and unbelief. Then it follows Canaan's rest and this cannot be all one, and the latter only is intended by David here.

7 (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To day, after so long a time; as it is said, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David: this is a further proof, that David did not mean or intend the rest of the Jews in Canaan, in the 95th Psalm, from the determined time of it; as if the Spirit had said, Besides what I have proved, take another argument; Again I argue. God by the prophet setteth out, and severeth from all other time, a certain stated day, from which the rest spoken of is cleared, and of it testifyeth by him. Psal. xc. 7, 8. To-day, after so long a time; after four hundred years past of Israel's rest in Canaan, which was a long time, doth David say of to-day, a time present, then and further to be extended, even the gospel day, in David's time, and after it; not in Joshua's, for that was past long before. As it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts; ye ought to-day to hear, receive, and believe the gospel of God's rest, and not by unbelief to turn your hearts from the voice of God in the gospel.

8 For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

This is the improvement of the former instance, ver. 7. If Joshua, by bringing Israel into Canaan, had given rest to all believers, then God would not by David have spoken of another day and state of rest to come. Joshua was a type of Jesus bringing believers into the true rest of the heavenly Canaan, as he did Israel into a literal one, Acts vii. 45. For if Jesus had given them rest; if that of Canaan was the full and perfect rest of believers, which was given them by him. Then would he not afterward have spoken of another day; then God himself would not have spoken by David of a better and heavenly rest promised believers in the gospel; of which spiritual and eternal one, both God's seventh-day sabbath, and the rest of Canaan, were but fainter shadows and types. The exposition is vehemently denying it.

9 There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.

Here the Spirit concludes from his former proofs, that there is a more excellent rest revealed to faith in the gospel, which is remaining, future, and to come, and will surely and most certainly do so; though it be behind, yet it will be enjoyed. A sabbatism, which is a state and season of a most glorious rest, (see ver. 10,) shall be enjoyed by sincere believers, the true Israel of God, of whom he is the Proprietor, and who are for their eternal state so excellently holy, and of so Divine a nature, that he is not ashamed to be called their God. They have an entrance here into the initials of this sabbatism in internal peace, and the glorious liberty of the children of God; and by it are secured of their full possession of it in the eternal inheritance of the saints in light, Col. i. 12, 13; 1 Pet. i. 3—5; Rev. xiv. 13.

10 For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.)

This proveth the foregoing consequence of a rest remaining, from the nature of a true rest, which is a resting from all labours, which the Israelites did not in Canaan, therefore it is yet to come. For every true believer who hath full possession of God's rest, where God is satisfying of them in bliss, they rest in his loves, of which the sabbath and Canaan were but types. He also hath ceased from his own works; such true Christians have ceased and rested from all their sinful works and labours, as works of callings, miseries, anxieties, and sufferings of any kind, resting from them perfectly and perpetually, having finished all his work of evangelical obedience through them. As God did from his; they have rested not in a parity of rest, or work in kind, but as God from his own in likeness of order, his work going before rest, and of rest fitted for believers by him conformable to his own. Some refer these words and the relative he to our Lord Jesus Christ, as Head of his body, the church of true believers; and that the parallel runs between God the Father and him in the works of the old and new creation, which works were good and complete in their different kinds, in their cessation from them, and their rest in their respective sabbaths, both days being founded thereon; and that believers shall be conformable to their Head, treading in his steps in doing and suffering, and then in rest.

11 Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.

Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest: this is the use of the former doctrine, that since many through unbelief fall short of God's rest, therefore let us labour: σπουδασιως imports study of mind, earnestness of affection, diligence of endeavour, with all the powers of soul and body to intend this work: so is it used, 2 Pet. i. 10. This is the most necessary, excellent, and important one to us in this world, our single great business in it; and therefore, as students, our minds must be bent on it, and our wills fixed and resolved about it, and the operations of all the executive powers of our persons put forth to the utmost degree, so as all the duties necessary thereunto, as attendance on all ordinances, and the constant exercise of faith and obedience, must be fitting us for, and bringing us into, the full possession of the eternally blessed and glorious rest of God, 2 Pet. i. 5—11. Lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief; that not any particular person may fall into sin and the consequences of it. The particle ev may be read, into, and then it implies, lest any of you prove rebels and apostates. Or it is read, by, or after, and then it is a fall to destruction and hell, with all the miseries that those feel who are shut out of God's rest, as their unbelieving

c ch. 3. 13.
Or,
the Gospel was first preached.

f Pe. 95. 7.
ch. 3. 7.

That is,
Joshua.

Or, keeping of a sabbath.

g ch. 3. 12,
18, 19.
Or, disobedience.

forefathers were. God spared neither apostate men nor angels, and will not spare others if they sin as those did. Our judgments may be rather sorer, being warned by their example, 1 Cor. x. 11; compare Heb. x. 26, 27, 29. They were contumacious and disobeyed the gospel of God's rest, therefore he destroyed them in the wilderness, and thrust them down to hell for ever: avoid you their sin, as you would labour to avoid their punishment.

12 For the word of God is <sup>h</sup> quick, and powerful, and <sup>i</sup> sharper than any <sup>k</sup> two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is <sup>l</sup> a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

For the word of God: the efficacy of the word of God is a further enforcement of their studious labour to enter into God's rest, for that calleth us thereunto; even the law and doctrine of the gospel brought by the incarnate Word from heaven, preached by him to the world, dictated and inspired into the holy penmen both of the Old and New Testament by the Holy Ghost, and written by them at his call and order, 2 Pet. i. 19—21; representing all those precepts and prohibitions, promises and threatenings, by which God will judge to whom this gospel hath been preached in that man whom he hath appointed: compare chap. ii. 1, 2, and ver. 1, 2 of this. And this word was written by David, Psal. xcv., even a word of exhortation, promise, and threatening, as opened before, and shows the perfection of this gospel law in its administration by Christ. Is quick; this word, like the incarnate Word, is ζῶν. not only a living word, but a quickening word, making dead sinners living Christians; souls dead in sins and trespasses, alive to God. This word, the breath of God, conveyeth spirit and life to them, 2 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. i. 23: so David experienced it, preserving the life it breathed into him, Psal. cxix. 50; and the members of the church, 1 Cor. iv. 15; compare 2 Cor. iii. 6, 17, 18; and as a rule it guideth and directeth them through Christ unto eternal life, John vi. 68. And powerful; ἐνεργής: it is an active word, powerful in its effects, the very ministration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8, most efficacious and energetical for convincing, converting, comforting; and for condemning, killing: it acts like the power of God; so Rom. i. 16, 18. And sharper than any two-edged sword; τριῶν ἰσχυρῶν significeth a cutting sharpness, as becometh several uses, as searching, letting out corruption, or for killing; all which agree to this Divine word; sharper than any sword with two moutls. The Hebrews style the edge the mouth, that which bites, tear-eth, or woundeth; as Rev. i. 16, and ii. 12. The word for spiritual execution upon souls is more sharp, and above every other sword; there is none so piercing for cutting the heart, or killing sin in it. So is it used, Eph. vi. 17; compare Acts ii. 37; vii. 54. It is Christ's weapon of offence and defence for his people, and it cuts without resistance; with it he is defending his truth, and smiting his enemies, Isa. xi. 4; compare Rev. xix. 13, 15, 21. Piercing even to the dividing asunder; δικνύμενος, piercing, or going through what is smitten with it; which way soever it is turned it forceth its way through all opposition, to a dividing into parts, and separating the most nearly united and closely joined things, laying open the very entrails, the most inward in a man; where the metaphors taken from the closest parts of the person are applied to the soul. Of soul: ψυχή may denote not so much the natural life and the faculties of that, but that which is styled the rational soul as unregenerate: see 1 Cor. ii. 14. Such an animal, carnal soul as is purely human, 1 Cor. iii. 3, which wants both a principle, light, and faculty to discern the things of God, as no natural eye can see a spirit, Rom. viii. 5—8. And spirit; πνεύματος, the soul of man regenerate and spiritualized, called spirit, 1 Thess. v. 23. The soul enlightened, renewed, and governed by the Holy Ghost; not altered as to its substance, but as to its qualities; whose understanding, will, and affections are spiritualized, manifested in its actions, agreeable to the spiritual will of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10, 12, 14, 15. These are both of them under the piercing power of the word, and the Spirit can reach them by it as he pleaseth. And of the joints and marrow: ἄρμων are not the members, but the nerves, membranes, muscles, whereby the members or limbs are joined one to another, so as not without incision to be discovered; and the marrow within the bones, there must be a breaking or perforating them to reach it. By which metaphors are set out the hardest, compactest, and most intimate parts of a sinner, the most secret hidden ones, which no natural reason can reach; yet the word of God pierceth them, to discover either the evil or good of them, and to inflict wrath, or communicate comfort, according to their conditions. And is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: the word of God is a most nice, exact, and critical judge, discerning the gravity and rectitude of them; it discovers and distinguisheth them as they are, or not, agreeable to itself, the fundamental truth; and is capable, as a judge, to charge or discharge, as its author will, by it, Rom. ii. 12, 15, 16; compare 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. It discovers the most inward, close, secret, and constant motions, both speculative and practical, of the soul of man inseparably united to the heart; and one with another, whether they are opinions, conceptions, resolutions, or decrees, so subtle and so secret, as who can know them, but he who made the heart? Gen. vi. 5; Jer. xvii. 9.

13 Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: καί is not only copulative, but rational, showing the ground of the former efficacy of the gospel word, because its Author seeth and knoweth all persons and things, and filleth it with this power and force. For every creature which God the Son created, angel, or man, or any other, from the greatest to the least, from the leviathan to a mite, and all parts of every creature, especially of every creature to whom the gospel is preached, Mark xvi. 15; not any one is ἀφανής, without light, invisible, unapparent, obscure, or possible to be covered, or hid, or concealed from his view or face: where the relative ἀντὶ agrees with Θεῷ, God in Christ, and not with λογός, or the word, ver. 12, as the following relative evinceth. To this God-man no spirit nor thought can be hid; it shall not be so from the efficacious power of his word; much less shall infidelity or hypocrisy be hid from it, or his most piercing eye. But all things are naked and opened; but all things in general and particular, not any one excepted, are bare, naked, unclothed, the covering is removed, all secrets are open and manifest to view, God the Son seeth within and without, all is unveiled to him, and laid open as by dissection, τετραχλημύνα: a metaphor taken from the sacrificed beasts, which being skinned, were cut open from the neck, and so divided by the chine to the rump, or by the throat downward embowelled by the priests, so as every part within may be clearly seen whether clean or unclean. The truth of which is, that every thing in the world, even the most secret and inward thoughts of the heart of a sinner, which is a great deep, is opened and laid forth to every scruple unto God in Christ; every secret unbelief, apostatizing principle, or hypocrisy, he discerneth clearly and fully, Jer. xvii. 9, 10: he that made the eye, must see best. Unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do; his eyes who pierceth beyond the vulture's, into things and places that no eye can discern, the souls of men, Job xxviii. 7, 10; Psal. xciv. 9; Prov. xx. 12. All this is asserted concerning the person of whom Paul writes, Christ, God-man, the great gospel Minister, whose word is so powerfully piercing: of him and his word is all this speech and discourse; he it is who is the all-knowing and impartial Judge, and makes his gospel word of counsel, promise, and threatenings to cut so deeply, and search the secrets of the hearts of all.

14 Seeing then that we have a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

The excellency of the great gospel Minister beyond all others in respect of his priestly office, especially beyond Aaron and the Levitical priesthood, is shown by the Holy Ghost from this verse to chap. v. 11. It is introduced as the Spirit's counsel to these Hebrews, from the premises, for their using of this High Priest, in order to their reach-

h Is. 49. 2.
Jer. 23. 29.
2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.
1 Pet. 1. 23.
i Prov. 5. 4.
k Eph. 6. 17.
Rev. 1. 16.
l 2. 16.
11 Cor. 14.
24, 25.

m Ps. 33. 13,
14, & 90. 6.
& 139. 11, 12.
n Joh. 26. 6.
A 34. 21.
Prov. 15. 11.

o ch. 3. 1.
p ch. 7. 26.
& 9. 12, 24.
q ch. 10. 23.

ing home to the rest of God, to whom and whose profession they ought to adhere, since he is so fit and so willing to give them an entrance into it: compare chap. ii. 17, 18; iii. 1, 6. Seeing then that we have a great High Priest; being therefore by the Spirit through faith not only interested by a common relation in him, but by a real union to, and communion with him, as here described, a High Priest (chap. ii. 11, and iii. 1) so great as none was, or can equal him: all the high priests on earth but imperfect types of him; above Aaron and all others; the grand presider over all God's worship, who had work peculiar to himself above all; the supreme and universal Priest in heaven and earth, whose title the Roman antichrist usurpeth, to him only due, Pontifex optimus maximus; yet officiating always for us. That is passed into the heavens; he hath fulfilled his type, entering into the holy of holiest in heaven, taking possession of God's rest, and purchasing an entrance for us into it, and this after the removal of the curse, satisfaction of the Divine justice for our sins, victory over all enemies that would oppose his or our entrance by him, as sin, wrath, death, and the devil, and keeping possession of this rest for us, chap. ix. 23, 24, 28. Jesus the Son of God; Jesus the Saviour of his people from all their sins, their Emmanuel, Matt. i. 20, 21, 23, who being God the Son by eternal generation, was incarnate by taking to himself and uniting a true body and a reasonable soul, being conceived miraculously by the virgin Mary from the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost: in which nature, inseparably united to his person, he fulfilled all righteousness, and died a sacrifice for our sins, and rose in our nature, and ascended and entered into the holy of holiest in heaven, and made atonement, and laid open the way to believers to enter God's rest there. Let us hold fast our profession; the entire religion of which Jesus is the author, as opposite to that of the Jews in its principles and practical part of it, chap. iii. 1, is powerfully, strongly, and perseveringly to be held by his without relaxation; in which if we follow him, cleave to him, and by him labour to enter, we shall not come short of God's rest, chap. vii. 24, 25: where the Head is, there shall the body be also, John xv. 2, 3; xvii. 24.

15 For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities: this duty of perseverance in the Christian religion, is enforced by the consideration of the sympathy of this High Priest, with the states of all who will enter into God's rest by him. He is worthy that we should hold it fast, being without impotency. It is impossible he should be pitiless to penitent sinners, though he be glorious, there being nothing in himself, or out of himself, indisposing him to it. Συμπάθησας imports such a sympathy or fellow feeling, as makes him like affected as if he were in the same case with them. He cannot but be compassionate, since inwardly affected and moved with the sufferings of his, Acts ix. 5; compare Isa. lxiii. 9. As God, he is infinitely merciful; as man, inwardly feeling them, even all the miseries they were liable to, but sinful ones. He wants no bowels, but he hath, as a fellow feeling, so a fellow grieving, and fellow caring for the redress of them, even all such as are fit for his pity; and works on affections, a sense of guilt, fears, doubts, tremblings, weak-workings to God, the concomitant infirmities of sinful souls; all the weaknesses of grace in us, all troubles, distresses, anguish in the flesh, the fruits of sin. He knows these sensibly as man, which as God singly he could not. These sinful weaknesses of soul inclining to sin, and disabling from resisting temptations, by which the subtle, powerful enemy of our soul prevaileth over us to the accumulating of sin and guilt daily, and so need this sympathy of his to us-ward: see chap. v. 2; 1 Cor. ii. 3; 2 Cor. xi. 23—31; xii. 5, 9, 10. But was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin; but περιπασάμενον, was pierced and tried by all sorts of sufferings, being outwardly tempted by the devil to sin; inwardly he could not, being perfectly holy, John xiv. 30; but was outwardly with violence assaulted by him, Matt. iv. 1—11: and tried by men beyond any man, and tempted to the same sins whereby Adam fell, and others miscarry every day. He felt the curse of sin, the wrath of God, agonies in his soul, violent pains in his body, sorrows to the death from the cradle to the cross: and in every matter of grief and suffering in soul, in body, from the world, from Satan, from God, in all kinds of temptations spiritual and temporal; experiencing the evils of this life, hunger, thirst, weariness, grief, Isa. liii. 3—10, even such as we are liable to, all of them really and truly like ours, and more powerfully than ours; they were for similitude like, but for degree exceeding them; ours, for exquisiteness of sense, but a shadow of his. Yet under all these temptations he was sinless, as the Holy One of God; never did temptation prevail over him, he overcame all. Nothing was out of place or order by his sufferings in him: all his affections and passions under these, regular, showing his innocence under variety of sufferings, and eminency of compassions. Sin hardens bowels, but he is compassionate without any mixture with or hinderance by corruption; and his intercession is the more effectual with God for us. What Christian under his conduct would not follow his great example, so to resist and conquer by him?

16 Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace: since our High Priest hath a sense of our infirmities, hath experienced our trials, and no sin is in him to shut up his bowels of compassion, therefore haste we to him, as those who desire to reach favours from our Sovereign, as our poor, guilty, needy souls want them. It is a soul-mouthing by faith and love, breathed forth in strong cries to his God and Father and ours, constantly approaching God in every duty by him: compare chap. x. 19—22; and that with open face, boldness, and assurance, without any shame or dismay, coming in the name and with the person of our great High Priest, who takes our duties and persons, and presents them, perfumed with the incense of his merits, to him. Away now with all unbelief, doubtings, or fears in our approach to him; admission to him, and hearing by him, is now certain unto the believer, Rom. v. 1, 2; Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12; 1 John iii. 21, 22; v. 14, 15. For his throne, now the Father is propitiated by him, is from a throne of strict justice made a throne of grace, of which the propitiatory seat over the ark of the covenant in the holy of holiest, both in the tabernacle and temple, was a type. All the terror and dread of it is now done away by Christ. Thunderings, and lightnings, and voices, and the sound of a trumpet are now ceased; the still voice of pardon, peace, purging and saving sinners, proceeds from it; grace, in reference to believers, sits in all its glory, and majesty, and power only, Rev. v. 1, 6, 13; compare chap. viii. 1; xii. 2; Eph. i. 20. Christ now takes us by the hand, brings us thither, and pleads by his own blood for us, so as we may approach to it with greatest confidence. That we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need; that we may actually partake of the fruits of Christ's purchase and intercession from the Father of mercy; pity suitable to our misery, pardon for our guilty souls, and relief for us under all our afflictions, Isa. lxiii. 7—9, and all grace necessary for us at all times for a seasonable help, but especially in times of greatest need. It is most opportune, when most helpful: when infirmities, afflictions, temptations, and the snares of sin, beset us with grievous persecutions, then may we by prayer, through our High Priest, have recourse to this throne of grace for our suitable and sufficient supply, without which there is no holding fast our profession, or possibility of entrance into God's rest.

CHAP. V

Concerning the office of high priests taken from among men, 1—4; wherewith Christ's priesthood is compared, and its privileges set forth, 5—10. A further account of which is deferred, and for what reason, 11—14.

FOR every High Priest taken from among men <sup>a</sup> is ordained for men <sup>b</sup> in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins:

<sup>a</sup> Eph. 2. 18.
<sup>b</sup> 3. 12.
ch. 10. 19,
21, 22.

<sup>c</sup> He. 53. 3.
ch. 2. 18.
<sup>d</sup> Luke 22.
28.

<sup>e</sup> 2 Cor. 5. 21.
ch. 7. 26.
<sup>f</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 22.
1 John 3. 5.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 8. 3.
<sup>b</sup> ch. 2. 17.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 4. 3, 4.
<sup>d</sup> & 9. 11, & 10.
11. & 11. 4.

For every high priest taken from among men: for is a rational particle, enforcing the truth of what was asserted concerning the gospel High Priest before, that he was the most sensible and tender-hearted of all other, beyond what all his types were, even Aaron himself: how did it therefore behove those Hebrews to cleave to him and his religion, as to desert the Levitical priesthood which he had perfected in himself; he being more excellent for rise, qualities, office, call, than his preceding types, and the permanent truth of them all! For every one of that order in God's institution, and according to his law, ought to be selected out of the numbers of men for whom he was to minister, and therefore to be a man. He was not to be an angel, nor to minister for them; and being separated from men, is to be put into another and higher rank and order, Exod. xxviii. 1, than he was in before: no person was to usurp it, but to be designed to it according to the Divine law settled in that behalf. This was accomplished in Christ's person, and he hath not since selected out of men any such order of priests properly so called in the Christian church. His officers being so far from being high priests, that they are not so much as in the enumeration of their titles styled ιερείς, priests; and as far is it from truth, that there are now as priests, so altars, sacrifices, temples in the Christian church properly so called; since it is expressly against the New Testament, and if so spoken of by the fathers, it must be understood figuratively and metaphorically, or else it is untrue. Is ordained for men in things pertaining to God; καθίσταται, the designed person, is constituted and set over others for their good, to seek either temporal or spiritual good, as the office is: compare chap. viii. 3. By this ordination is power conveyed to this officer, and an obligation laid on him by a charge to exert it about things wherein men are concerned with God: he is a religious officer. Τὰ is imperfect, as chap. ii. 7, for ἐν τοῖς, in things, or κατὰ τὰ, about things. A sinner can undertake to manage nothing towards God immediately, or by himself, but with a mediating priest, who must know God's mind and perform it; and it was infinite mercy for God to institute such a help to sinners. The common sense of mankind about it since the fall doth evince it; no nation being without a religion, a temple, a place of worship, or a priest. That he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; who may bring home to God, the supreme Lord and King of all, gifts, which were those free-will offerings, as of things inanimate, the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, &c., or of sacrifices, such whereby they were to atone and propitiate God for their sins, they being guilty, and he just; those were necessary to satisfy his justice, remove his wrath, and procure his blessing. What those sacrifices were which would please him, God only could reveal, as who should offer them both for himself and others: and this he did reveal to Adam, Noah, and Abraham, and to Moses fully in his law given him about them on the mount, and of which he hath written in his last four books.

2<sup>d</sup> Who || can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that<sup>e</sup> he himself also is compassed with infirmity.

Who can have compassion on the ignorant: the melting quality of the typical high priest is eminently to be fulfilled in the gospel one; each is to have an aptness, disposition, and a sufficiency of it, by the institution of God, for his ministrations, for manner as well as for matter, chap. ii. 18; iv. 15. Μετριοπαθεῖν, strictly, is to bear, suffer, or be affected in measure, or suffer moderately, with the failings of others, in such a degree as is necessary to incline, as far as he is able, to succour, help, and comfort those who are in misery. It notes sympathy, chap. ii. 18; Rom. xii. 15; and a suffering with them, yet so regulated by the Divine rule, as not to extend it unto unfit subjects, nor in an undue measure, lest it unfits him for ministering for them. But the great High Priest excelleth in this, and is not bound to our measures, but sinlessly overabounds in it, to such as sin for want of knowledge of their duty, unwittingly, and without any forecast, for which the law provided a sacrifice, Lev. iv. 2; Numb. xv. 24—29. And on them that are out of the way; πλανωμένους: a metaphor borrowed from travellers gone out of their way; by which are understood such sinners as are misled by infirmity or violence of temptation, and so offend God by their opinions or practices; for the expiation of such were those sacrifices appointed, Lev. v. 6, 7; but then they were such as were sensible of their sins, confessed them, and begged for pardon, of whom the High Priest was to be compassionate; but not of presumptuous and capital sinners, who were unfit subjects of God's mercy or man's: there being no sacrifices provided for such, but they were to die without mercy, Numb. xv. 30, 31; compare Exod. xxii. 14. God's altar itself is no protection to them, 1 Kings ii. 28, 31. Such sins of infirmity which the Levitical high priest was liable to himself, was he to be compassionate of. For that he himself also is compassed with infirmity; for that he was beset with infirmity, sin, ignorance, error, and disobedience; infirm in respect of duty and sacrifice, which was by reason of its weakness to be repeated yearly, chap. x. 1, 11; and of the same infirm nature, liable to the griefs and miseries of his brethren both in soul and body. All these did surround and lie about him; he was sin and weakness all over, and therefore should be the more feeling of his brethren's states, and more careful and ready to sacrifice and intercede for himself and them. But our great High Priest hath all the sense of these, but no sin, chap. iv. 15.

3 And<sup>f</sup> by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins.

This connexion demonstrates the infirmity of the legal high priest: for this their infirmity, sins of ignorance and error. And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people; he was obliged to his work by the express law of God, Lev. i. It is a rule for what the priests ought to do, and so is the whole book, to which they are to be punctually obedient, even to sacrifice for particular sinners in the church, as they were guilty and brought their sacrifice, Lev. iv., and for the whole church of Israel on the atonement day, Lev. xvi. 15—34. So also for himself, to offer for sins; he had also his proper sacrifice for his own sins commonly, Lev. iv. 3, extraordinarily on the day of atonement annually, Lev. xvi. 6—14. It is not necessary to a priest to be a sinner, but it is to be merciful. Adam offered prayers and praises to his Creator for himself and Eve in innocency; but since the fall our Lord Jesus Christ is the only High Priest without sin, and yet most merciful, as well as most sensible of the sins and miseries of penitent believing sinners. He offers up the sacrifice to God truly propitiatory, as his types did the typical ones, and procured the pardon which God promised to give upon his so sacrificing to him.

4<sup>g</sup> And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as<sup>h</sup> was Aaron.

This connecteth the last thing describing the typical Levitical priesthood, their call to it. And no man taketh this honour unto himself; not any person whatsoever hath or can lawfully take to himself the honourable office of a high priest, so as to be the author or end of it. Many have usurped this office, and others have distributed it contrary to God's law, whose priesthood, offerings, and ministry are no true ones, especially where men are self-ordinating, corruptly managing of it, as Eli's sons and Jeroboam's priests, or self-benefiting by it, 1 Sam. ii. 13, &c.; Micah iii. 11. This was so honourable an office as it was united to the principedom in Melchisedec and Jethro. But he that is called of God, as was Aaron; he that is according to God's law, (the Author of this priesthood, its work and success,) qualified in himself, separated from others, and actually honoured by God with it, he ought to take this office and execute his work in it to God's glory, depending on him for his blessing. Aaron is the particular instance of the Divine call to this office. God separated his tribe, family, and person for his service in the room of the first-born: God qualified him for it, entailed the high priesthood to his seed and offspring with the subordinate priesthood. He solemnly consecrated him by Moses, confirmed him in his work by fire from heaven at his first sacrifice, and vindicates his own call of him to it by the blossoming rod, and destroying the rivals with him for it, Exod. xxviii. 29, 30; Numb. xvi. 35; xvii. 5.

5<sup>i</sup> So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest; but he that <sup>d</sup> ch. 2. 18. & 4. 15. <sup>e</sup> Or, can reasonably bear with. <sup>e</sup> ch. 7. 28.

<sup>f</sup> Lev. 4. 3. & 9. 7. & 16. 6. 15. & 17. ch. 7. 27. & 9. 7.

<sup>g</sup> 2 Chron. 26. 16. <sup>h</sup> John 3. 27. <sup>h</sup> Ex. 28. 1. <sup>h</sup> Num. 16. 5. <sup>h</sup> 40. 1 Chron. 23. 13.

<sup>i</sup> John 8. 54.

k Ps. 2. 7. said unto him, <sup>a</sup>Thou art my Son, to day
ch. 1. 5. have I begotten thee.

The Spirit now draws the parallel, and shows, that whatsoever is requisite in God's high priest, is transcendently fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ, the infirmities of his types, which were accidental to the office, excepted. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest: he begins the parallel in his call to it: God-man, the great gospel High Priest, anointed to this office in the flesh with the Holy Ghost, was not tainted with ambition, neither did usurp this honour and dignity, John viii. 54, though there never was person qualified for it, or deserved it, like him. He never did intrude himself upon the office, or take the sacerdotal power to him, whatever others have done, and usurped it. But he that said unto him; but God the Father bespeaketh him, and calleth him to this high office, as he did Aaron: he chose him, separated, sent, and anointed him for it. No less person than the eternal Jehovah could constitute and invest him in what was so high for dignity, so glorious for power; he did by speaking commission him for it, and did publish and testify the constitution, glorifying him in it, as is testified, Psal. ii. 7. Thou art my Son: Thou, is not David, but Christ, as is interpreted, chap. i. 5; Acts xiii. 33. Art my only begotten Son, my natural Son, John i. 14, 18; the first-born of God, Psal. lxxxix. 27; compare Rom. viii. 29; Col. i. 18. As his Son, the Father could appoint him to what calling he pleased. By his primogeniture he had right to the priesthood and kinship; and to these doth the Father call him, as who would not be denied by him. To-day have I begotten thee; from eternity he had a right and title to this office, but his solemn investiture in it was on the resurrection day, then was he begotten to it; not only dedicated, as Hannah did Samuel to the priesthood, but solemnly, after his consecration by his own blood to it, chap. ix. 10—12, 23, 24, compare Rom. i. 4, was he by the Father proclaimed to be the Son-mediator, King, Priest, and Prophet, and made to enter the holy of holiest in heaven, and to sit down there on his Father's right hand, invested with glory and power for the execution of his offices, and this of his priesthood in special, which he is daily fulfilling with him by his intercession: see chap. vii. 25, 28; ix. 24; compare Psal. ii. 8.

6 As he saith also in another place,

<sup>1</sup>Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

As he saith also in another place, Thou art a Priest for ever: the Spirit proves his call and investiture into this office, its confirmation to him for ever, by another testimony of the Father about it, penned by David, Psal. cx. 4, and ratified to be so by the Lord himself, Matt. xxii. 41—45; that he as man was David's Son: as God-man, David's Lord, and the grand officer to atone God by his sacrifice for sinners, and to intercede for them. By this word of God to him was he invested with the most glorious priesthood, and settled in that which he must execute for ever, chap. vii. 24, having no successor in it. After the order of Melchisedec; which order was a singular and most excellent one, such as Aaron's did but imperfectly shadow to us. It was a royal priesthood God installed him in, such as was Melchisedec's, largely described, chap. vii. This was by God the Father revealed to David, and prophesied by him to the church, but actually fulfilled as to proclamation and inauguration at his ascension into the holy of holiest in heaven, where he actually in the flesh doth officiate and minister in it.

7 Who in the days of his flesh, when he had <sup>m</sup> offered up prayers and supplications <sup>n</sup> with strong crying and tears unto him <sup>o</sup> that was able to save him from death, and was heard <sup>p</sup> in that he feared;

Here Christ is paralleled in his nature, work, and compassions, to his types, and is set above them. Who in the days of his flesh: he was taken out of men, as his type was, ver. 1. He was made flesh, and dwelt among us in the human nature, John i. 14. He had his days numbered, and his time set for his being and ministry beneath, doing and suffering the will of God here in a state of humiliation, frailty, and mortality; which infirmities attending his flesh, are now put off for ever, chap. ii. 14. When he had offered up prayers and supplications: he performed his service and offering to God, as his types, for the men for whom he was ordained, such as he delighted in; his prayers represented his inward desires to God for what he needed, and was necessary in our behalf to be obtained, a sacrifice fit to be offered by him, chap. xiii. 15; compare 1 Pet. ii. 5. Ἰκετηρίας, a word but this once used in the New Testament; its root signifieth an olive branch, which petitioners carried in their hands; an emblem of the vehement desire of such supplicants of a peaceful answer or return to their prayers. These of Christ were the most fervent supplications, flowing from a deeply afflicted soul in a prostrate body, when he was preparing for the offering up his soul a sacrifice for sin, when he was in the garden, Luke xxii. 40, 46, in his agony, and when actually offering it on the cross, Matt. xxvii. 46. These were the prayers of God-m-n, the gospel High Priest. With strong crying and tears, put up by him unto God the Father, who is essentially good and powerful, willing and able to hear and answer his supplications, the fountain of all mercy, blessing, and help, who could deliver him from, and save him in, the greatest dangers, so as none of those which encompassed him should hurt him, no, not death; for he was delivered from the evils which were far more dreadful to him than death itself, and which were to exercise him both before and at the hour of death. Those deadly temptations which he underwent in his agony and on the cross, and from which he chargeth the disciples to pray, that both he and they might be kept, Matt. xxvi. 37, 38. Those deadly stings in his soul, ver. 41; Mark xiv. 38; Luke xxii. 40, 46; such conflicts as his Father supported him under, carried him through, and gave him the victory over all that curse and power that might do him or his mystical body hurt. It was this death of deaths that did terrify him. As for the other, he cheerfully underwent it, resigned his spirit to his Father, trusted his body in his treasury, and was so far from being swallowed up by it, that he was gloriously risen from it. Unto him that was able to save him from death; evident in his agony, in the mighty groans that his soul poured out then when he prayed more earnestly, Luke xxii. 44; that which made him sweat through his flesh congealed clots of blood, squeezed by his agony out of his body, which made him weep and cry loudly; his voice as well as his soul was stretched out in prayer: the like was exercised by him in his conflict on the cross, Matt. xxvii. 46. How bitter was his passion to him! How fervent, importunate, and loud his prayers! How did it break through the cloud wherewith God covered his face then! Psal. xxii. represents in prophecy what was now fulfilled, Mark xv. 34, 37; Luke xxiii. 46: It was in making satisfaction to the justice of God for us that these were exercised, to show his inward compassions to us, and to secure sustentation for us in our sufferings by temptations, chap. ii. 17, 18; iv. 15, 16. And was heard in that he feared; the efficacy of these mighty prayers and supplications is evident by their reaching God's ear, and procuring his help for him. He was helped, delivered, saved; so the Septuagint use this word in the Old Testament, putting hearing for helping and saving, as in Psal. lv. 16—18; 2 Chron. xviii. 31: ἀπὸ τῆς ἐδραβείας, this is the right acceptation strictly read; for as a thing is truly apprehended, it stirreth up fear. This word hath in Scripture use two senses: 1. From the thing feared, by a metonymy, fear being put for that which works it, which was not here death simply, for that he suffered, but what he was more afraid of than death, viz. from the fear of being by his temptations hurried into diffidence of his Father, impatience in his agony, or despair at the eclipse in his death, which the devil designed. As to this his Father did hear, answer, and help him; in his agony sent his angel to strengthen him, Luke xxii. 43; and which he perfected for him at the end of his passion, when he breathed out his soul triumphantly into his Father's hands, Matt. xxvii. 46, 50; Mark xv. 37, 39; John xix. 28—30. Or, 2. From the fear, that godly fear and care in him not to displease God in any thing he did or suffered; this was a proper cause of his acceptance, and his prayer being heard, and his deliverance, which is becoming the Mediator. This is

m Matt. 26.
39, 42, 44
Mark 14.
36, 39
John 17. 1.
n Ps. 22. 1.
Matt. 27. 46.
50. Mark 15.
34, 37.
o Matt. 26.
53. Mark 14. 36. p Or, for his piety. p Matt. 26. 37. Mark 14. 33. Luke 22. 43.
John 12. 27.

a truth, and may be admitted; but it seemeth especially to refer to the former by his prevalency, against which by prayer he defeated the devil, was made feelingly sensible of his temptations, showed himself compassed with infirmities, though not with sinful ones, and as our High Priest was rendered pitiful and compassionate to us under our temptations, so as to intercede for us above, as he did pray for himself on earth, and to procure for us succour under and deliverance from them.

8 <sup>q ch. 3. 6.</sup> <sup>r Phil. 2. 8.</sup> Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

He fulfilled his type in the end; for though he were God the Son incarnate, in a nearer and more excellent relation to the Father than any angel, or any high priest among men his types, being all servants to his Father and him; God's Son by eternal generation as to his Deity, by conception from the Holy Ghost by the virgin as to his humanity, who for his worth might have been exempted from such burdens; yet did God teach him (not as if he wanted it at any time) by what he imposed and commanded him, and he learnt by what he did agree and covenant to perform, active obedience to God's will, fulfilling all righteousness, being for his person, and doing for his work to a tittle what God required from him; but especially passive obedience, by his experience knowing what it meant, freely subjecting himself to his state of humiliation, Phil. ii. 6—8, enduring all the indignities and sufferings for sinners from his birth to his death, even the most vile and cursed. This the Father enjoined and commanded him, and he did obey it: read Isa. liii. He who offered prayers for himself, as a high priest offered himself a sacrifice for us, as ours. By this did he finish his Father's will entirely, experimentally, feelingly, knowing how difficult patience under the cross is, and how to pity us under all our sufferings.

9 <sup>h ch. 2. 10.</sup> <sup>i 11. 40.</sup> And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

And being made perfect: as to the powerful execution of his office, this God-man exceeds his types; for having consummated all the work to which he was designed, by his doing, suffering, dying, rising, and ascending into heaven in the human nature, he perfected the work of redemption, and consecrated himself to his office. He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him: by this was he constituted, made, and declared by his Father to be, not an instrument, as all his types were, but the cause efficient, meritorious, and exemplar of salvation; by his sacrifice satisfying God's justice, meriting and effecting reconciliation and justification for sinners; and on his ascension sends forth the Holy Ghost, to qualify them for the reception of his benefits, by working in them what he requires; and on their application to him, he, as their High Priest, pleads the merit of his blood, and intercedes for their justification and salvation, which is the freeing them from all evil, criminal and penal, sin, and whatever it subjecteth them to in this world, or that which is to come; and instating them into all the heavenly privileges promised in the covenant of grace, righteousness, holiness, heirship to, and life and glory with, God, and to be safe in the possession of them all, not for time only, but for eternity. This efficient cause produceth this only to the duly qualified subject: mankind is rendered salvable by the obedience and sacrifice of this High Priest; but it is only to penitent believing sinners that he doth communicate this, and for whom he effects it; those who will entirely submit themselves to Christ as a Lord and King, and be loyal to him and obey him, as well as to a Priest or a Saviour, continuing his faithful subjects to the end, John iii. 16, 18, 36; compare Matt. x. 22.

10 <sup>t ver. 6.</sup> <sup>u ch. 6. 20.</sup> Called of God an High Priest after the order of Melchisedec.

His constitution by God the Father in his office, maketh it so effectual; he was solemnly proclaimed and declared to be what God had constituted him. God nameth or calleth things as they are, and as he hath made them; and this was done openly, and with the most illustrious solemnity, at his ascension into heaven, when God set him down on his right hand in the presence of all the surrounding angels, who did all submit to him as their Head and King, and acknowledge him as the great royal High Priest of God, as was foretold, Psal. cx. 1, 2; which words of the psalmist the Spirit further explaineth in chap. vii., where he proves this gospel High Priest to be of a more excellent order than Aaron's, even like that of Melchisedec, which it exceedeth, and which must last for ever.

11 <sup>u John 16.</sup> <sup>v 12.</sup> <sup>w 2 Pet. 2.</sup> <sup>x Mat. 13.</sup> <sup>y 15.</sup> Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing.

The Spirit here digresseth from discoursing further of the priesthood of Christ, that he may fit these Hebrews to apprehend and improve it when he shall return to it, chap. vii. He beginneth with a reproof, which takes up the remainder of the chapter, and enters on it artificially from the doctrine delivered of Christ's priesthood, insinuating the difficulty of its reception by them. Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered: ov, of whom, some would make to refer to Melchisedec, but by what followeth in this and chap. vii., it can be spoken of none but of Christ the truth of that type, who was made a High Priest after that order. And of him the apostle was filled by the Spirit with the matter, as Elihu speaks, Job xxxii. 18. Much he had to say of this mystery, which was most excellent and weighty, and which a few words could not express; for it was δυσσημειωτος, not unutterable in itself, or difficult for him to open and interpret, but for them to understand. Seeing ye are dull of hearing; because the ears of their mind were not created nor proportioned to it: they were babes and children in understanding; the difficulty was in themselves, not in the word or mystery; their intellective faculty was slow to discern, perceive, and judge of this doctrine, and their hearts were averse to it, being so conceited concerning the Levitical priesthood: such were the apostles at the first, John xvi. 12.

12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat.

For when for the time ye ought to be teachers: the conviction of this fault in their understanding and will, is by the Spirit demonstrated; for their dulness proceeded from their neglect of God's means of knowledge, and so was inexcusable; they had time and means enough of improving in the knowledge of this gospel doctrine of Christ's priesthood, and to have gained in them the abilities of teachers of their families, fellow Christians, and neighbours, both from the law of Moses, and the other Scriptures, and by the teaching of Christ and his apostles. Ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles; yet such was their negligence and idleness, that their knowledge was diminished and lost, and they fallen off to the old Mosaic economy of priesthood, ceremonies and services, so as they had need again to be taught and instructed by others which are the στοιχεία of God's oracles in the Scriptures, such things as are the first in order, and first to be taught and learnt, the very fundamental principles of Christianity, without the knowledge of which none can be saved, and on which all others do depend. They are so styled by a metaphor, signifying such a state of this in the Scripture, as the elements have in natural bodies which they compound; or, like elements of speech, which must be first attained before there can be either an understanding, speaking, or writing of a language; they are the foundation upon which a system of the Christian religion is raised; see chap. vi. 1: which principles lie dispersed in the New Testament, and are summed up in those ancient creeds which are agreeable to our Saviour's words. Of the oracles of God: λογίων τῷ Θεῷ, such oracles or revelations of God's mind about the way of our salvation, which he hath made to us by his Son our High Priest, and which he brought from heaven with him, and taught himself, as chap. i. 1, 2; and hath by the inspiration of his Spirit of persons chosen on purpose by him, penned them eminently in the Scriptures of the New Testament, not excluding those of the Old Testament, which are unveiled, opened, and made glorious in them, Rom. iii. 2. And are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat: these Hebrews had so greatly forgotten these first principles, that they were become mere babes and infants in knowledge, they needed the first and weakest spiritual food, metaphorically styled milk; the most plain and easy truths of the gospel, such as they may understand, and give light to others; not the beggarly elements of Judaism, as they are styled, Gal. iv. 3, 9, and Col. ii. 8, 20, which would keep them ignorant babes in the word of righteousness, and unfit them for the understanding and digesting the stronger food of the higher and more excellent doctrines of the gospel concerning Christ's priesthood. Such a babe was Nicodemus, though a master in Israel, John iii. 10, 12.

<sup>+ Gr. hath no experience.</sup>
 13 For every one that useth milk † is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is "a babe.

The Spirit proves these Hebrews such infants by describing the state of them, and of their contrary, and tacitly applying it to them under a metaphor or allegory started by him before. For every one that useth milk; for, saith he, every one of you who take in nothing but the elements and weakest kind of doctrines, and can bear no other, have not digested the first principles of the oracles of God. Is unskilful in the word of righteousness; are ἀπειρος, not truly knowing, not proving nor experiencing, never exercised or practised in, the word of righteousness, the gospel doctrine, which is in itself an eternal certain truth, the revelation of the righteousness of God to faith, Rom. i. 16, 17, and the instrumental conveyer of it to faith; a perfect rule of righteousness, making Christians conform exactly to the mind and will of God, and so reaching the state of strong and perfect ones, Col. i. 25—29. For he is a babe; he is but a new-born Christian, a child in Christ's school, one that cannot be experienced in the perfections of God's word, because he is weak in knowledge, ignorant and unconstant like an infant, 1 Cor. xiv. 20; compare Eph. iv. 14.

<sup>Or, perfect.</sup>
 14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are || of full age, even those who by reason || of use have their senses exercised <sup>b</sup> to discern both good and evil.

But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age; but those great, deep, and high mysteries of the gospel concerning Christ's natures, their hypostatical union, his offices, his actual fulfilling all his types in the Old Testament both personal and mystical, with the prophecies of his gospel church state, and his mediatory kingdom, &c., these are the strong meat and food of grown Christians, who have reached some maturity in the knowledge of these gospel mysteries, and are of a full age in understanding, 1 Cor. ii. 6; xiv. 20; Phil. iii. 15; reaching on to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ in knowledge and grace, Eph. iv. 13. Even those who by reason of use; even those who διὰ τῆν ἔξιν, by a gracious habit of wisdom and knowledge infused and perfected by long study, practice, and exercise of themselves in the word of righteousness, by which they are able to apprehend and improve the highest doctrines of the mystery of Christ. Have their senses: τὰ αἰσθητήρια are, strictly, organs or instruments of sense, as the eye, the tongue, and the hand, by a metonymy, expressing seeing, tasting, and feeling; and so is by analogy applied to the inward senses and faculties of the soul, whereby they discern and relish gospel doctrines. Exercised: γυμνασμένοι strictly notes such an exercise as wrestlers use for a victory with all their might and strength, being trained up to it by long exercise. The spiritual organs or faculties of Christians are well instructed, practised, made apt and ready, as the external ones are, for their proper work. To discern both good and evil: πρὸς διάκρισιν, for the discerning and differentiating things, so as the mind discerns what doctrine is true and what is false by the word of righteousness, and the will chooseth what is good and refuseth what is evil, the affections love good and hate evil. As the senses external can by exercise discern what food is gustful, pleasing, and wholesome for the person, and what is nauseous and unwholesome; so the grown Christian is improved by the exercise of his spiritual senses, that can by his enlightened mind discern higher gospel doctrines, and by his renewed will relish the sublimer mysteries of Christ as they are revealed to him. Such the Christian Hebrews ought to have been, so able proficient in the school of Christ.

CHAP. VI

The higher doctrines of Christianity are proposed to be treated of, 1—3. The guilt and danger of apostacy, 4—9. Charitable deeds will not be forgotten of God, 10. An exhortation diligently to imitate the faith and patience of those who inherit the promises, 11, 12. The promise of God to Abraham a sure ground of hope, 13—20.

THEREFORE <sup>a</sup> leaving || the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance <sup>b</sup> from dead works, and of faith toward God,

The Spirit having reproved these Hebrews for their fault, doth now counsel and direct them to amend it. Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ; seeing ye have lost so much time already, and made so little progress in learning Christ, let us not therefore stay any longer in the principles of it, but proceed to some higher degree: pursuant to which he layeth down the principles of Christian doctrine in which these Hebrews had been initiated, and the doctrine of perfection which they were to pursue. Leaving is an omitting or letting go, as to any sticking or standing in, so as to make no further progress, but to gain higher degrees of knowledge in the doctrine of the gospel, which enters novices into Christ, having attained the beginning, the matter or work of entrance into the Christian religion, now not to stick at this first and imperfect inchoation in this doctrine. Let us go on unto perfection; a regular motion must succeed, according to the great Mover, incessantly, for our attaining the perfection of the doctrine of Christ. This perfection notes height of knowledge, faith, utmost repentance and spiritual change, greatest strength of understanding, and the fullest operation, according to the doctrine of Christ, in doing and forbearing, the fullest perseverance of the mind in the knowledge of it, and of the will in cleaving to it. Not laying again the foundation: that which would hinder this was reiterating foundation work, which the apostle laid with them by initiating of them into the first principles of Christianity, the knowledge and faith of which they professed to receive, 1 Cor. iii. 11; Eph. ii. 20, and were therefore obliged to proceed in the building both of persons and truths on it; and lest they had forgot, or others were ignorant, what those fundamental principles and doctrines of the gospel were, he layeth down six heads of them in this and ver. 2, which was the common method of teaching either the children of Christians or infidels, that they might be Christians, at least professedly, or upon their lapse to restore them. Of repentance from dead works: the first Christian principle or doctrine to be learnt, was that of repentance, which is the fundamental change of a sinner's mind, and, in that, of himself; it carrieth in it knowledge, conviction of sin by God's law, bitter sorrow for it, and full conversion of the soul to God from it, as it is described, 2 Cor. vii. 9—11; as from all sinful works flowing from it while lapsed from God; dead in sins, which would have eaten out and destroyed their souls for ever, Rom. vi. 23; Eph. ii. 1, 2. It supposeth the knowledge of other truths preceding it, as their creation in God's image, their apostacy from it, the misery consequent, &c. These Hebrews were to proceed and advance daily in the exercise of this grace. And of faith towards God: the second Christian principle or doctrine is of faith on God, comprehending the habit and acts of that Divine grace, of evidence, subsistence, assent, and affiance, chap. xi. 1, all the effects of it; and this exercised on God in his essence, relations, especially in his gracious contrivance and execution of the work of redemption for sinners; as giving reconciliation, righteousness, holiness, adoption, and eternal salvation, through Christ, fulfilling all righteousness by his death, as a sacrifice satisfying his justice, and meriting, as purchasing, all these blessings for believers, and effectually from heaven is dispensing them to them.

<sup>a</sup> Phil. 3. 12, 13, 14.
<sup>b</sup> ch. 5. 12.
<sup>c</sup> Or, the word of the beginning of Christ, v. ch. 9. 14.

c Acts 19.
4, 5.
d Acts 6, 14,
15, 16, 17, &
19, 6.
e Acts 17.
31, 32.
f Acts 24, 25.
Rom. 2, 15.

2 °Of the doctrine of baptisms, <sup>d</sup> and of laying on of hands, <sup>e</sup> and of resurrection of the dead, <sup>f</sup> and of eternal judgment.

Of the doctrine of baptisms: the third fundamental doctrine in which these Hebrews were initiated was, the doctrine of baptisms; containing in it the doctrine which baptism teacheth, as that of the covenant of grace, of which it is a sign and seal, and of their entering into it who partake of it, which, as to its duties and privileges, is sealed and confirmed: and the doctrine in which baptisms are taught, as that of Christ by water and by the Spirit, Matt. iii. 6; John iii. 5; and containing in it the doctrine of the seals of God's testament, distinct from the other doctrines of faith; by the use of which, such who had solemnly professed their repentance, and faith and obedience to the gospel, were sealed and confirmed. Baptisms, in the plural, raiseth the doubt, whether it immediately concern the initial seal of the covenant, which some say is so styled as a Hebraism, the plural number being put for the singular; or, from the numerous partakers of it at set times, which were called days of baptisms, or from divers administrators, and the baptisms of believers and their seed, and that so they were many. Others would make these to be Jewish baptisms, frequently used by these Hebrews, as elements to teach faith and repentance, and leading them to the further knowledge of Christ. And the more they suspect this, because these baptisms are used but four times in the New Testament, and always signifying Jewish ones, as chap. ix. 10, and Mark vii. 4, 8. And of laying on of hands: the fourth fundamental doctrine, or principle, was, the imposition of hands, which by Christ and his apostles were used either for healing diseases, Mark vi. 5; Luke iv. 40; Acts xxviii. 8, or communication of blessing, Matt. xix. 13, 15, or for the communication of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, to such who were separated for Christ's service in his church, Acts vi. 6; viii. 17; xiii. 3; xix. 5, 6; and so take in all the saving fruits of the Holy Ghost, by which they are renewed, increased, strengthened, and built up into everlasting life. Others would make this a primitive rite of confirming the baptized grown up, on the confession of their faith, and renewing their covenant with God, which was made for and with them in their infancy, and so was a preparatory admission of them to communicate with the church in the Lord's supper. If other places of Scripture did concur with it, it would be more clear and satisfactory. Some look on them, as baptisms before, to be Jewish rites, which should here lead them to Christ; but, on their neglect of him, became beggarly elements, and such as they are called from here unto higher attainments in Christ. And of resurrection of the dead: the fifth fundamental principle and doctrine of Christianity, in which they were initiated, is, the doctrine of resurrection from the dead. This, as to the propriety and fulness of it, is at the last day; yet the entrance into this is begun in a new life effected by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, John v. 25—29; Rom. vi. 3—13. From this entrance are they called to make out to the full resurrection of the just, as the apostle did himself, Phil. iii. 10—12. This article of the gospel doctrine all Christians were to be founded in, and especially these Hebrews, because it was denied by the Sadducees among them, Matt. xxii. 23; Acts xxiii. 6—8, derided by the Athenian philosophers, Acts xvii. 18, 31, 32, and perverted by heretics, 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18; and is therefore particularly asserted, as described by this apostle, 1 Cor. xv. And of eternal judgment; the sixth fundamental doctrine and principle of Christianity, into which they were to be initiated, was that of the general judgment, finally determining the believers of it to their rewards, the deniers of it to their eternal punishment, because the one hath observed, the other violated, the covenant of grace. These Hebrews had begun to reach this truth, by being reconciled to their Judge, and therefore are to proceed to perfect their work to the Lord's glorious appearance, chap. ix. 27, 28; Acts xvii. 31; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10, 15; Jude 6, 14, 15; Rev. xx. 11—15.

g Acts 18, 21.
Cor. 4, 19.

3 And this will we do, <sup>g</sup> if God permit.

This connects the prime cause promoting this progress, and by whom alone it can be effected, as well as his resolution of finishing his discourse of the ministry of Christ's priesthood. And this will we do; we will really, certainly, and constantly, leave our entrance into these Christian, fundamental principles, and proceed unto perfection in them; all of us real Christians will do this. Others make it a purpose of the apostle to handle those doctrines at another season, and that he will now proceed to instruct them in the higher mysteries of Christ and the gospel, and so finish his designed discourse about them. If God permit; whether it refers to their proceeding from the knowledge of the Christian principles to the perfection of knowledge, or of growth in Christian graces, or of the apostle's proceeding to open to them the higher mysteries of the gospel, it is not a kind of passive letting things to be done, or giving leave only; God is not subject to so weak a condition: but it is all act, noting God's assistance as well as permission; for all persons and things are in his power, who worketh to will and to do, Phil. ii. 13. But as to a progress in Christianity and reaching the perfect man, &c., Eph. iv. 13, if he, the Lord of all knowledge and grace, hath delight in us, and will work this grace in us, then we shall do this, even go on unto perfection, chap. xii. 2; Hos. xiv. 5; Mal. iv. 9; 1 Cor. iii. 6.

4 For <sup>h</sup> it is impossible for those <sup>i</sup> who were once enlightened, and have tasted of <sup>j</sup> the heavenly gift, and <sup>k</sup> were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, h Matt. 12.

31, 32.
i 10, 26.
2 Pet. 2, 20.
21, 1 John 5.
16.
j 1 ch. 10, 32.
k John 4, 10.

The foregoing counsel the Spirit enforce on these Hebrews, from the danger of apostacy, to which the neglect of it doth dispose them, and the terrifying consequents of it, from ver. 4—8. We must go on to perfection, unless we will draw back to perdition; so that he bespeaks them, You have been sluggish and dull, and going backward already; lest you grow worse, stir up yourselves; if you neglect it you are in danger of utter falling away: for it is impossible, not in respect of God's absolute and almighty power, but in respect of any created power in others or themselves, justly, and by right, it is impossible, because contrary to God's declared will and resolution in his church, by which his power is limited, so as he will never do it, nor suffer it to be done; in this he will not, cannot deny himself, ver. 11; chap. xi. 6; compare Matt. vii. 18; xix. 24, 26; 2 Tim. ii. 13. For those who were once enlightened: φωτισθέντας, several interpreters render the baptized, who were illuminated with the beams of Divine light; others, the penitent, such who had been initiated into repentance, as ver. 1, and think the term once may be limited to baptisms, whereas it refers to all the other particulars. These are such who are instructed in the principles of the Christian religion, and brought out of the darkness and ignorance of Judaism and heathenism, so that they were other persons for the knowledge of gospel truths than before: they see with a new light spiritual things, and have the mind raised up to such objects as they knew not before; but they have no new eyes or understandings given them, and so are but as devils like angels of light, whereas the light of a real Christian is the light of life, John viii. 12: see 2 Tim. i. 10; 2 Pet. i. 19. Such some Hebrews professed themselves to be, Rom. ii. 17—19; and as Balaam was, Numb. xxiv. 2, 3. And have tasted of the heavenly gift; an act of sense in the body, put metaphorically for an act of the mind. Tasting in the soul, is an apprehension and reception by it, and but merely such, and no more; a taste, and not a digestion, of Christ and his benefits as revealed to them in the gospel, John iv. 39, 40, followed with the superficial relishes of their joy and peace on their temporary believing in them, as it was with the stony ground, Matt. xiii. 20. A sinner enlightened so as to see Christ and the glorious promises made to believers in him, it being agreeable to his natural principles, and being not much humbled, runs away with them with joy, having good desires and affections, but a stony heart still: such was Herod, Mark vi. 20. And were made partakers of the Holy Ghost; not by an inhabitation of his person in them, but by his operations in them, whereby he is trying how far a natural man may be raised, and not have his nature changed: as is evident in Socrates, who died for owning the unity of the Deity; and as the scribe near the kingdom of heaven, Mark xii. 34. He is proving by his gifts to them how much supernatural good, and workings towards salvation, they are capable of, without the putting forth of the exceeding greatness of his power to make them new creatures, as Gen. vi. 3; compare 1 Cor. i. 21; 1 Pet. iii. 18—20. These did partake of from the Holy Ghost, the light of nature, of the law, of the gospel, with some spiritual power accompanying all these; which as they are trials of lapsed nature, so are lessening many punishments by keeping men off from many sins, as 2 Pet. ii. 20. These professors had escaped the gross and outward pollutions and defilements that many were drenched with in their lives, but have lusts abiding unmortified, from whence these would arise in them still; but here is no pure heart or divine nature wrought in them, and the lusting principle is unmortified still; this God accepts according to its kind: compare Mark x. 21, 22.

& 6, 32. Eph. 2, 8. 1 Gal. 3, 2, 5, ch. 2, 4.

5 And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,

And have tasted the good word of God; so as to relish comfort and sweetness in the doctrine and promises of the gospel through self-flattery; for these hearing of pardon of sin, and crediting it, are filled with joy by it; as a condemned malefactor, hearing of a general pardon, believeth himself to be one of the pardoned, and rejoiceth in it: see Matt. xiii. 20, 21; Luke viii. 13. So did many of the Jews rejoice in John's doctrine, John v. 35. And the powers of the world to come; thus some of them were affected with the powerful doctrines of the gospel, concerning the final judgment, as their natural conscience was wrought on by the Spirit in the word, that they feel it as it were begun in them, the sparks of the wrath of God having set their consciences in a light flame for their sins, as in a Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. As on the other hand, being acquainted by the Spirit in the word, of Christ's being a Redeemer, to save them from the wrath to come, and to instate them into happiness, beyond what is attainable on earth; self-love doth externally close with the revelation and apply it to itself, as Balaam did, Numb. xxiii. 10. All these five instances are the workings of the Holy Spirit on corrupt nature for its improvement, and in their falling from these supernatural operations, they do sin in tanto against the Holy Ghost.

6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

If they shall fall away; a falling away, or apostatizing, in proportion like Adam, such a παράπτωμα as his was, Rom. v. 15—17, whereby they are totally unchristianed, as he was turned into a sinner; perfidiously revolting from all those supernatural workings of the Holy Ghost, whereby their natural spirit was elevated, but not changed, unto their old swinish and canine temper of spirit and course of life that they led before they professed themselves Christians, as 2 Pet. ii. 18—22. They freely forsake their professed Christian state, and make shipwreck of all, Jude 4, 10, 16, 18, 19. Whether πάλιν, again, ought to be referred to falling away, so as to denominate the apostate no Christian, as he was at first, before his profession, or to renewing following, it makes no difficulty, for it is a real truth in both parts; only interpreters generally refer it to the latter, as do ours, and so we shall consider it. To renew them again unto repentance; they cannot renew and bring themselves to the same state they enjoyed, and from which they fell; nor can the Christian ministry do it by their exhortations or counsels, thunders or comforts; the offended, wronged Spirit withdraws, and will not assist or elevate theirs to act above nature again, Gen. vi. 33; Isa. lxiii. 10; but leaves them justly to themselves, so as he will neither by himself, nor by others, suffer it to be done, having limited his power by his will in it. They shall neither have a new principle infused into them, nor their minds or hearts changed by him to repentance, because they have undervalued his lower operations and motions on their souls, revealing Christ to them through the gospel, and have by their sinful negligence not improved them to seek from him the better and higher ones which he mentions, ver. 9, 10, and were to be effected by the exceeding greatness of his power. Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh: that which renders this renovation of them impossible, is their ill treatment, by their apostacy, of their Redeemer, who was to bring them as children to glory, which they by the gospel knew, and by profession owned him ascended and sat down on the right hand of God, and who had, by the operation of his Spirit, elevated their natural principles so to discern him, and to confess him: by this their apostacy they look on him as an impostor and deceiver, as 2 Pet. ii. 1; Jude 4, and deny him to be a Saviour to them, rejecting his sacrifice, and would, as much as in them lieth, dethrone him, and, if he were within their reach, would crucify him again, and tread him under their feet, as chap. x. 29, and actually do it to him in his members; as the apostate Julian did in former ages, and the papists do at this day. And put him to an open shame; παράδειγματιζοντας, making him a public shameful example, as the Jews did by the most cruel and ignominious death, with all their reproachful carriages to him then, which he despised, chap. xii. 2, and in which his are to imitate him, chap. xiii. 13: so do these apostates verbally and practically blaspheme and disgrace him; in their esteem vilifying him, and by their apostacy put him to an open and public ignominy, and make him a spectacle of the vilest reproach, as if they could find no good in him, and therefore renounced him; and this to the condemning and destroying of themselves, since they cannot repent, Christ having not purchased it for, nor God promised it to, any such: so as by the law of his kingdom their sin is irremissible, the blood of Christ, that could only remove it, being profaned and trampled on by it, and so their final destruction unavoidable.

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God:

For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it: for is narrative here, and not rational, introducing a parabolical illustration of the states and ends of truly regenerate Christians, and unregenerate apostates; as if he said, You have heard the good of true perfect Christians, and the evil of apostates, you need not to be offended at it, or wonder, for it is with them even as with the earth, which is the good ground in Christ's parable, Matt. xiii. 8; Luke viii. 8, and which he interpreteth to be a good and an honest heart, Luke viii. 15, renewed in a sinner by the Holy Ghost, naturally of the same mould with all others, Ezek. xi. 19; xxxvi. 26, 27. As the earth drinks up the showers moistening and fructifying it, Psal. lxxv. 9, 10; so this good and honest heart receiveth the spiritual dews and rain descending from heaven on it in the word and ordinances, as Deut. xxxii. 2. And bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed; it bringeth forth all sorts of fruit for those who dress it, according to God's institution, Gen. i. 11, 12; ii. 5, 6. So these good souls bring forth fruit which God relisheth and delighteth in as suitable to his husbandry, Matt. xiii. 23; compare 2 Pet. i. 5—8; 2 Cor. ix. 10; Gal. v. 22, 23; and such as the great manner of souls expects from them, 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7, 9. Receiveth blessing from God; this good ground is made fruitful by God's blessing, and the more fruitful it is the more blessing it receiveth, Gen. xxvii. 27. This fruitfulness is not the meritorious cause of this blessing, for that issueth from grace; but it qualifyeth these good hearts for it, i. e. the continuance to such souls of the means of grace, and their increase in spiritual comforts, till they reach the perfection of blessing from God in eternal life, ver. 9.

8 But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

But that which beareth thorns and briers: δέ, but, introduced the state and end of a sinful apostate, that ill earth, showered upon as well as the good; the unregenerate soul, that had gospel dews and spiritual rain by the word and ordinances dropped down on it from heaven; yet bringeth forth, or out of it, not herbs or fruits fit for its owner or dresser, but briers, thorns, and thistles: so apostates, under all enlightenings and tasting of these supernatural dews of the Spirit, bring forth from a stony, unregenerate soul, nothing but corruptions and evils, their rooted lusts thrust out and sprung together with their common gifts, Luke viii. 7, 13, 14; the words and deeds of whom are pernicious, dishonouring God and hurting men, as unbelief, hypocrisy, apostasy, described, 2 Pet. ii. 1—3, 12, 14, 18—22; Jude 4, 8, 10, 12, 16, 19. Is rejected; ἀδόκιμος it is refuse land, neglected by the owner, he takes no care of it; such are these apostates, of a reprobate mind, approving evil, rejecting good, and are so rejected of God, who withdraws his spiritual dews and ordinances, and the concurrence of his Spirit with them, as unworthy of them, and useless as to any good fruit to be produced there. And is nigh unto cursing; such are looked upon as the mountains of Gilboa, accursed, 2 Sam. i. 21; and to be dealt with by the owner as the fruitless fig tree by Christ, Matt. xxi. 19; Mark xi. 21. So these apostates are under the curse, 2 Pet. ii. 14; delivered up judicially by Christ to blindness of mind, and hardness of heart, and even to Satan himself, as the unbelieving Jews were, John xii. 40, and those apostates, 1 Tim. i. 19, 20. Whose end is to be burned; the end of briars and thorns is the fire, they are to be burnt up by it; and this will be the final issue with apostates, to be destroyed by a Christ whom they have rejected, with eternal fire, chap. x. 27; xii. 29; Matt. iii. 12; xxv. 41; 2 Thess. i. 7—9.

9 But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak.

For preventing of the application of this discourse unto themselves, the apostle subjoins his judgment concerning these Hebrews in this verse, and his reason for it in the next. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you; although we have spoken of the attainments, states, and ends of apostates, we reflect not on you by it; but, or notwithstanding, we are persuaded; which word imports not a simple conjecture, for he had the gift of discerning of spirits, and the Holy Ghost, who indites it, did very well know them, so as he was confident of their good state and condition in Christianity, and the Spirit testified so of them by the Epistles of the other apostles directed to them; they were well assured of this, and certain, not only because they were such whom he dearly loved, as if it were only a good or charitable opinion in him, but because of their relation to him as true Christians, and members of the one body of Christ; and so they were very dear to him, whatever they might fear, because of what he wrote before of apostates, for they had better things in them than enlightenings, &c., which he said were in apostates before, ver. 4, 5, even the saving work of the Spirit on their souls, not by giving them light only, or raising their affections, but by giving them a new eye of understanding, as well as new light, and with it a renewed heart; Christ having by the exceeding greatness of his power made them new creatures, as well as professing Christians; their minds, wills, and affections being all changed, and made truly spiritual by the Spirit of Christ; and which they manifest by the exercise of real graces, and that their light state, and end is better, more excellent, and of another kind, than that of apostates, evinced ver. 10. And things that accompany salvation; such things as have salvation in them, even the spiritual mind, which hath eternal life in the root of it, Rom. viii. 6, 10, 11, 16, 17. That Divine nature, which the apostle saith was in the same persons, 1 Pet. i. 1—5; 2 Pet. i. 1—4; which shows the state of their spirits to be a state of grace, which had salvation in it, secured by promises to it, so as they are inseparable, and their union not to be dissolved.

10 For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.

For introducing the reason of the apostle's former persuasion concerning them, which was the real graces of faith and love to God wrought in their hearts, and shown in their work, which was better than all enlightenings. God is not unrighteous; the affirmative is implied, God is just, and faithful, and true, in performing what he promiseth, as well as not unrighteous: the certain truth is asserted in this emphatical negative; compare 2 Thess. i. 6, 7, with 1 John i. 9: should he not perform he would be unjust. To forget your work: God always remembers all things, because his knowledge is perfect; and he will take notice of grace in these Hebrews manifested by their works, so as to recompense and reward them for it, by perfecting his gracious work in them; which having promised, the apostle is confident of the good estate of them through grace, Phil. i. 6. He will never forget the work of your faith in his name, your courageous profession of the gospel, Gal. v. 6; Col. i. 4; 1 Thess. i. 3: a grace of God in them which made their souls delight in him, such as was purely Divine, beginning and ending in God, carried out in the labour and exercise of it to his glory, showing it in all the supplies they give his in his name, to Christians as they are his, Mark ix. 41. And labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister: their labour of love was evidenced by what they had done, and were doing, for Christ, in their using all effectual means for supplying, comforting, preserving, and delivering his members, giving their goods to them, and their lives for them, 1 John iii. 10—18. So the apostle asserts these did, chap. x. 32—34. So did Aquila and Priscilla love Paul, Rom. xvi. 3, 4. And this they did show to such as were God's children, and bore his name, the present suffering Christians, who endured rifling, plundering, banishing, imprisonment, and death for their faith in Christ's name: those brethren who, being loved in and for God, do evidence to these Hebrews that they are passed from death to life, 1 John iii. 14.

11 And we desire that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end:

And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence: having thus commended them, to show he did not flatter them in it, he discovereth what was wanting in them, and introduceth it with the particle But, we desire you; ἐπιθυμῶμεν properly signifieth the inward affection and strong desire of heart that the apostle had of their further profit. The Spirit lusted in him for this, Gal. v. 17, which was not only convenient for them, but necessary for their perfection. And this desire of his was not for all promiscuously, but that each single person who was a lover of God and his saints, should use all means diligently, as they had in degree done before, to have this perfected to the end of their life, 2 Pet. i. 5—10. It is an earnest agitation and hastening of spirit within, and a demonstrative discovery of the same without to the utmost, Rom. ii. 7. To the full assurance of hope unto the end; their souls with full sails constantly making out after this most certain and full assurance of faith, to the excluding of every doubtful thought of the truth of God and his promises, and of hope, shutting out all wavering, unsettledness, or impatience in waiting for the accomplishment of the good, which is secured by the merit and intercession of Christ, the purpose, promise, and oath of God to them, chap. x. 22, 23; compare Rom. iv. 21; Col. i. 24. Hope here is not synonymous with faith, yet its certain concomitant; and is a vehement desire and longing after, with a patient expectation of, what is possible and sure to be enjoyed, because God hath promised and sworn it; though it be at never so great a distance, yet to be communicated by him to his in his best time, chap. xi. 1; compare Rom. iv. 13; Tit. i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 3, 13, 21. This Christian diligence must continue to the end of their own days, and the perfection of their grace in glory, until they come unto the entire possession of what they believed, hoped for, and were fully assured of, Rom. vi. 22; 1 Pet. i. 9, 13.

12 That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

That ye be not slothful: if you will be diligent, away with sloth: you are inclined to it, chap. v. 11, and though you be quick in affection, yet slow in understanding the mysteries of God; and though you have laboured, yet not with that intense labour to which he precesseth them, even to an utter abolition of all the degrees of sloth. But

q Prov. 16.
31. Matt. 10.
42. & 25. 40.
John 13. 20.
Rom. 3. 4.
2 Thess. 1.
6, 7.
1 Thess. 1.
3.
1 Rom. 15.
25. 2 Cor. 3. 4. & 9. 1. 12. 2 Tim. 1. 18.

ych. 13. 36.

followers of them; μιμηται, strictly, imitators, in diligence and pains-taking, of the believers who have performed this duty before you. Who through faith and patience inherit the promises : in their graces imitate them, as in faith, by which they rested on, as credited, God's promises revealed to them of things invisible, excellent, and distant, and which by no creature power but only God's could be attained, chap. xi. 1, 9, 10, 16; xliii. 7. In patience, because the things promised are future, and at a great distance from them, waiting for them, suffering many evils from many, passing through fire and water. Isa. xliii. 2, and staying God's leisure to obtain them, chap. x. 36; xii. 1; Rom. xv. 4, 5; James i. 3. Those they were to imitate, were heirs of blessed promises, ver. 14, of spiritual blessings in Christ, the blessed Seed, in whom themselves and all nations were to be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18. It may be queried, How did Abraham inherit the promises, when he did not receive them, as is testified, chap. xi. 13? This is certain as to the promises of spiritual saving, and universal concernment to them, as of justification, sanctification, adoption, and salvation by Jesus Christ; these they received, as is evident, chap. xi. 10, 14, 16; Rom. iv. 8—26: such promises as were of special consideration and reserved to a set time, as the possession of Canaan, and Christ's incarnation, John viii. 56. These they did not receive, though they saw them sure to their seed by faith, but for salvation, and glory, and heaven, carried in the covenant of grace, they did personally enjoy; of the others they were heirs as given by God to them.

13 For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, <sup>a</sup>he sware by himself,

For when God made promise to Abraham : for is a confirmation by instance, that faith and patience had made some to inherit the promises, as Abraham, and what was influencing of him in the exercising them; viz. God's promise and oath. God Almighty, who was as able to perform as to make a promise, Gen. xvii. 1, having made a promise to Abraham the father of believers, that he would communicate some temporal and spiritual good, which by it he gave him a right to, and bound himself to perform, which summarily was Christ the Redeemer to be of his seed, and Isaac his immediate seed to be a type of him; this promise at the offering up of his son Isaac God confirms to him by oath. Because he could swear by no greater : an oath is to be made by the greatest, who is able to make good all, and to judge after his will; by nothing under or beneath God must there be any swearing. He sware by himself, as the best and greatest, Jehovah himself confirming that which was evident and certain by that which was most so : a strange condescension of God the Son, the Angel of the covenant, to a creature, to lift up his hand to eternity, and to lay it on the altar of his infinite and unchangeable being, to pawn and pledge his Deity, that he might give the highest assurance; and is willing that it shall be forfeited and lost, if Abraham fall short of what he hath promised to him : see the oath, Gen. xxii. 15—18; an oath confirming the covenant of grace to all believers as firmly as to Abraham.

14 Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

Here is laid down the form and matter of God's oath: the form, in Gen. xxii. 16, is implied in the particle in in this text well rendered surely, chap. iii. 11. The other defective expressions are forms of swearing, as if, except, unless; but here it is positive, surely, or verily, which Christ frequently useth; it is a vehement assertion of what he saith. The whole matter of God's oath is not repeated, but the substance and comprehensive part of it, which made for the apostle's purpose here. By blessing, in the Hebrew manner of expressing, is carried the abundance and certainty of all that temporal and spiritual good, which he would convey unto him in and through the blessed and promised Seed, our Lord Jesus Christ, with the multiplicity, abundance, and certainty of the seed natural, and believing, to whom he should be related as a Father through Christ, as is evident, Gen. xxii. 16—18; and all this so uttered, as if God could not express how much he loved him.

15 And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.

And so, after he had patiently endured : Abraham's carriage was suitable to this sworn promise, his soul did patiently wait for it full thirty years, enduring and suffering many temptations about it; yet he overcame all, and continued firm in the covenant to the end; his faith extended his soul in a patient expectation of its accomplishment, without doubting or murmuring, knowing God would fulfil it in the best time : he was a long-breathed believer, John viii. 56; Rom. iv. 20, 21; James i. 2, 3. He obtained the promise ; he did not fall short of any piece of the promise, but fully possessed it at last, both in Isaac, the type of the blessed Seed, and the Messiah himself, as to all the spiritual and eternal good promised in him and by him in the heavenly Canaan, Matt. xxii. 32.

16 For men verily swear by the greater : and <sup>a</sup>an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

For men verily swear by the greater : for here is only narrative, introducing the amplification of the argument drawn from God's promise and oath, for the quickening those and all believers to make out after the full assurance of hope, the promise and oath of God concerning them as well as Abraham. That since men's oaths procure credit, and put an end to doubts, strife, and contradiction amongst them; much more should God's oath put an end to doubts and gainsayings of creatures, and make them to give faith to him : men are not inventors and authors of this ordinance of swearing, but subject to God's precept requiring this from them, and in this special part of God's worship instituted by him, they ought to swear justly and according to his will; and swear they must by God only, who knows the intentions and secrets of the heart, and who is absolutely greater than all; the omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotent, and sovereign Lord of all persons, who knows false swearers, and inflicts on them not only temporal but eternal punishments. The swearing by any other, God rebukes, Deut. vi. 13; Jer. iv. 2. And an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife : and in this special part of God's worship, God is called in as a co-witness of the truth of what is sworn, and as a judge and avenger of it, if it be otherwise : and so the oath becomes a confirmation of faith and confidence of men one in another, and of love accompanying the same; so that if strife, doubt, suspicion, or jealousy arise among them about either words or deeds, which are not known to those who doubt, and cannot be cleared by sense or reason, or any other way but by a testimony of some person who knows them, which being insufficient of itself, he calls in God by an oath as co-witness, with whom it is supposed he would not break his interest, nor invoke him against himself, by declaring what is false : on this all strife and contradiction is to be decided among men, and to cease, and so the controversy to be determined.

17 Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto <sup>b</sup>the heirs of promise <sup>c</sup>the immutability of his counsel, <sup>d</sup>confirmed it by an oath :

The apostle having stated the nature of an oath in the antecedent, subjoins and applies it in a consequent, in which he shows that God sware to this end, that his own counsel might appear to be immutable, and the consolation of believers greater. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show ; Ev ως, in which matter or case, viz. God's act of promise and oath to Abraham, it was not limited to his person, but to all his believing seed, Rom. iv. 23, 24. Out of his own mere grace and free-will, his goodness and affection to them, without any consideration in them moving him; but his free, unexpected, as undeserved mercy, did first reveal, then promise, then swear. What more could he do? How liberal and abundant is his love in these overflowing discoveries of it! so to reveal and make known his gracious thoughts, making them manifest, perspicuous, and glorious, when none was privy to them, nor could reveal them, but himself. Unto the heirs of promise ; the seed of Abraham's faith, all true believers, whom God had made children and heirs by promise, as Isaac, Gal. iii. 22, 26, 29; iv. 26—28; joint-heirs with Christ,

<sup>a</sup> Gen. 22.
16, 17.
<sup>b</sup> Ps. 105. 9.
<sup>c</sup> Luke 1. 73.

<sup>b</sup> h. 11. 9.
<sup>c</sup> Rom. 11.
<sup>d</sup> s.
<sup>e</sup> Gr. interpreted himself by an oath.

Rom. viii. 17. These alone did God intend to secure, and make certain of their salvation. The immutability of his counsel: God's unchangeableness in his will and decree, as in himself, excludes all hesitation, alteration, or transposition of what it was from eternity; God did never, will never, change one iota or tittle of his eternal will and decree of saving, perfecting, and gathering into one penitent believers, by the promised Seed Jesus Christ; which he did reveal to the world, and without which manifestation a believer could have no comfort, and without its immutability, not any lasting and permanent comfort. Confirmed it by an oath: ἐπεσβεσεν is proper for a mediator, one who cometh in between two parties as a surety; and so is justly applicable to God the Son, who interposeth betwixt God the Father promising, and believers to whom the promise is made as heirs, as a Surety engaging to see his Father's promise made good to his seed; and therefore confirms it to them with an oath, that they might know the promise was immutable, and should be punctually fulfilled; by which means he removes all doubts, fears, and jealousies about it from them. If they will believe men who swear, how much more ought they to do so, and rest satisfied, with the oath of the Mediator!

18 That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us:

d ch. 12. 1.

That by two immutable things: another end of the Mediator's oath is here added, God's oath and a promise spoken to before, which are firm and steadfast to eternity; heaven and earth may pass away, but they cannot. In which it was impossible for God to lie, i. e. to cease to be himself, for essential truth to become a lie is impossible, it is utterly inconsistent with his nature. He is incapable to deceive, or speak against his mind, Numb. xxiii. 19; 1 Sam. xv. 29; Psal. lxxxix. 35; Tit. i. 2; and it is as impossible for him to violate his promise or oath. We might have a strong consolation; such as will vanquish all doubts, fears, jealousies, sorrows, distractions, putting the heart into a quiet, peaceful, settled frame, and establishing it in it, whatsoever temptations, trials, or persecutions it may meet with from without or within to perplex it. Who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: but it is the heart of a persevering believer, not of common professors, which is so strongly settled and comforted by them; such who flee to take hold of them: having cleared their right to them, and possessing their souls of them by faith, so to hold fast, as who would no more leave, than Joab would the horns of the altar, being a far greater security than it, or any city of refuge whatsoever; retreating to, and keeping in, this strong hold, nothing can interrupt their comfort, or hurt them, Job xiii. 15, 16; Prov. xviii. 10. The hope set before them is that eternal, good, and blessed state which is reserved in heaven for believers, the object of their hope set out to their view and prosecution as a prize in the promise, 1 Pet. i. 3, 4; by a metonymy of the effect for the cause, hope and good hoped for are joined together for our pursuit.

19 Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil;

e 1 Pet. 10. 15. ch. 9. 7.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast: which, taketh in both the good hoped for, and the grace and act itself of hope exercised about it; which grace is by a metaphor set out to be to the soul what an anchor is to ships in a tempest, when tossed with gusts, and storms, and billows of thoughts rolling one upon another to the oversetting of it; this hope stayeth, strengthens, setteth it, even the hope and certainty of eternal rest and happiness secured to them by the promise and oath of God. This hope is safe and firm efficiently, and makes the soul, in the midst of all the threatening temptations from a tempestuous world, safe, because fastened on God's promise; and firm, because strengthened by God's oath, which will hold out all tempests. And which entereth into that within the veil: this hope, like an anchor, is firmly placed, hath wrought itself into the best holdfast, even the innermost part of the veil. The veil was that in the tabernacle and temple which separated the holy place from the holy of holiest. This typical veil was rent at the death of Christ, and the holy of holiest in heaven, the truth of that type, was then laid open unto all believers, whether Jews or Gentiles: compare chap. ix. 24; x. 19—21. Here it is that the anchor of the Christian's hope is fastened; this sure harbour, where no tempest can reach or loosen it, but into which their souls, after all their tossings in the tempestuous ocean of this world, by the hurricanes of temptations, which made them quiver again, shall be over, will enter with a full gale, and enjoy that rest and blessedness for ever, which they had by God's promise and oath, on which they relied, secured to them: see Col. i. 5; 1 Pet. i. 3—9.

20 'Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an High Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

f ch. 4. 14. & e. 1. & 9. 24. g ch. 3. 1. & 5. 6. 10. & 7. 17.

Whither the forerunner is for us entered: this heaven is actually possessed for us already by a harbinger, who came at his Father's word to fit and prepare us for it, and then again returned in our nature, and as our Head and Representative he hath entered, made the way open, and paved the coast for us thither, and made it plain and safe; and having taken real and full possession, is making ready our mansions; and when he hath completed his work in us, will come and take and carry us thither, and put us into the full possession of it in our persons, chap. ix. 24; John xiv. 2—4. Even Jesus, made an High Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: he describeth the forerunner to be God the Son incarnate, the Saviour of believers, he that will keep them safe for it, and set them safe in it. Their Jesus, who as to his office is the great gospel High Priest, had fulfilled his type, and put an end to it by his entering within the veil into the holy of holiest in heaven, being constituted by his Father a royal High Priest, superior to all other orders and persons, a High Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, mentioned before, chap. v. 10, where the Spirit begun a digression, and having here ended it, repeats the description of it again, as the thing to be immediately handled and pursued, as he doth in the next chapter.

CHAP. VII

Christ, a Priest after the order of Melchisedec, is proved to be of a more excellent order than that of Aaron, from the character of Melchisedec, and his confessed superiority to Abraham and Levi, 1—10; from the imperfection of the Levitical priesthood, which induced the necessity of a change to one more perfect, 11—19; from the confirmation of Christ's priesthood by an oath, 20—22; from the unchangeableness, 23—25, and spotless innocence, of the person, 26—28.

FOR this Melchisedec, king of Salem, Priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; a Gen. 14. 16, &c.

The Spirit now proceedeth to prove, that the gospel High Priest is of a far more excellent order than that of Aaron's, by his being of the order of Melchisedec, of whom they had read, and whom they had in great esteem, and after whose order they were assured, by the prophet David, another Priest was to rise up in the church, rendering Aaron's priesthood useless, and continuing the only means of reconciling sinners, and bringing them to eternal life, to whom they must cleave. He initiates it with a description of the state of Melchisedec's order, from ver. 1—10; and then proceeds to apply it to Christ, from ver. 11—28. Having asserted, chap. vi. 20, that Jesus was made from eternity a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec, and declared to be so by his entrance within the veil in heaven at his ascension, he reasoneth it out by showing what this Melchisedec was. The person pointed at by this name, is mentioned only once by Moses, and that in Gen. xiv. 18—20. It is certain he was a man who lived by bread and wine, as well as Abraham, and received tithes from him becoming a man. His place of residence was Salem, afterwards called Jerusalem, in the land of Canaan, Josh. x. 1. The Jews conceived him to be Shem, the second son of Noah, which this scripture denieth, for his genealogy is well known in it. That he descended from Ham, third son of Noah, because an inhabitant in Canaan, and that his name, Melchisedec, was the common name of the princes of that country, whose metropolis was first called Tselec, then Salem, then Jerusalem, because the king of it in Josua's time was named Adoni-zedec, which is synonymous with this, is all conjectural. This is certain, he was king of Salem, endowed with royal power, such as the other kings in Canaan had. The capital seat in his kingdom was Salem, the name likely of both his city and territory; not that Salem of the Schemites, Gen. xxxiii. 18, afterwards called Shechem, demolished and sown with salt by Abimelech, Judg. ix. 34. 45; in John the Baptist's time raised again, and called Salem, John iii. 23. But Salem mentioned Psal. lxxvi. 2, more known by its famous appellation, Jerusalem. This shows him to be a man, as doth his next title. Priest of the most high God: his authority in matters of religion, as a prime minister about holy things between God and men, and therefore a man, as chap. v. 1, set up by the most high God for himself, and consecrated in his order of priesthood by him, which should most illustriously set out that of his own Son. He managed all as a priest betwix his own people and the great God, ruling of them in all matters civil, and teaching and ordering them in all sacred things. Who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings: he went from Jerusalem with necessary refreshings to meet Abraham, the friend of God, the father of believers, a prince and a priest himself, and of whose posterity was to come the Messiah, now returning from his victory over Chedorlaomer and his confederate kings, with the rescue of his nephew, and all his, to his tents at Mamre. As he was passing near Salem, Melchisedec meets him, and entertains him, Gen. xiv. 13—20. And blessed him: it was an act of his sacerdotal office, such as God enjoined on such officers afterwards in Numb. vi. 23—27, and not a common wish and desire only. The matter of blessing is laid down, Gen. xiv. 19. It was in God's name, by his commission, effectually denounced on Abraham by virtue of his office and God's institution; the height of God and all the good in heaven and in earth within God's possession is conveyed to him, Gen. xv. 1.

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace;

To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; by which tithing to him, Abraham owns him to be God's priest. As he had received blessing from God by him, so he returns to God, through him, his acknowledgments; he divided, shared, and gave out his part to him, even the tenth part of all the spoils, ver. 4. This is the first scripture, Gen. xiv. 20, that gives us any account of paying the tenths of goods to God in his priests; which custom afterwards obtained among most nations, to give the tenths of the spoils after victory to God. And this Abraham did, as due to the office by Divine institution, having received a blessing from it. First being by interpretation King of righteousness: the mystery of his name, title, and descent, the Holy Ghost now opens to them. His name is a compound of מלך or מלכי which signifieth a king or governor, or my king, and צדק righteousness. A supreme governor, not only formally righteous in his own disposition, but efficiently by just and excellent laws making his subjects righteous; a king working righteousness in a Canaan, and in such a time of universal degeneracy from it. This God ordered for some special use, viz. to type out his own Son, God-man, the great gospel minister, to be the King of righteousness, who purchased it for, imputeth it to, and infuseth it into, sinners; who is so fully the Lord our righteousness, that we are made the righteousness of God in him, Isa. xxxii. 1; Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16; Zech. ix. 9; 2 Cor. v. 21. And after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace: the mystery of his title of office, King of Salem. The due order of this is observable; he is first King of righteousness, and after that he is King of Salem, that is, of peace; the fruit of whose righteous government was peace. He kept this among his people, and round about him, while others were wasting and destroying their kingdoms by lusts and wars. This is eminently true of Christ The Prince of Peace, Isa. ix. 6, 7, who gave some signal of his government, and begun his priesthood, in the same Salem, or Jerusalem, where Melchisedec reigned, Matt. xxi. 5, 9, 10. He is eminently the royal purchaser, maker, and distributor of peace, reconciling all things to God, angels and men in heaven and in earth, and all persons, Jews and Gentiles, and the creation itself to recovered man, Col. i. 20, 21; compare Eph. ii. 13—17. The Prince and price of our peace, setting peace within souls, giving it to them without, peace spiritual, temporal, and eternal: his kingdom aboundeth in it, Psal. lxxii. 1, 3, 7; Isa. liv. 10, 13; John xiv. 27; James iii. 18.

3 Without father, without mother, † without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.

In this verse is a mystical description of the eternity of Christ's person and priesthood, set out by the Spirit in the silence and omission of things that concerned Melchisedec and his glory; so that what here is represented to be typically and in shadow, that was Christ really and substantially; for he gives no account of his father, mother, genealogy, birth, or death; the Spirit either not revealing it to him, or ordering him to leave it out, that he might appear the more lively and perfect type of Christ, being represented in all things different from all the men that ever were, or shall be: such a priest therefore as he was, was Christ to be; not deriving his priesthood from any by birth, nor leaving it to any after him. As Melchisedec was without father, that was a priest before him, or is recorded, from whom he should derive, as the Levitical priesthood had; so Christ, as to his humanity, was without any human father, conceived only by the power of the Holy Ghost. Without mother: as to any Scripture records of it, or to any title of the priesthood by her, as those of Aaron's family had: so Christ, as to his Deity, was without a mother, being the eternal Son of the Father only, and without any title in his humanity to the priesthood from the virgin, she being of David's family, and not of Aaron's. Without descent; there is no line of him described in the Scripture, mentioning from whence he descended, or by what genealogy he came to the priesthood, as the Aaronites did clear their right, Neh. vii. 61. As to Christ, who shall declare his generation, or produce the lineal roll by which he claimeth the priesthood? Isa. liii. 8; compare ver. 12, 15. Having neither beginning of days, nor end of life: there is no record of his birth or death, though he had a father or mother, as there is of Adam's beginning and end, who had neither: so Christ, as to his priesthood, had no predecessor, nor shall have any successor, ver. 16, 24, 28. As a sacrifice and the Lamb of God, he had his time of entrance into the world, and of his leaving it; yet, as God's Priest, he had neither beginning nor end of days. Pure eternity is its rise, and its end shall not be till God be all in all. But made like unto the Son of God; ἀφωμοιωμένος he was in these things the shadow, picture, and resemblance of what Christ should be in his royal priesthood; in these singular prerogatives a visible type of God-man; he was the sign likening, and Christ was the truth and substance of it. Abideth a priest continually: these words are the key to all the description before. God made many other persons eminent types of his Son, but Melchisedec was the only type of the eternity of his royal priesthood; for which the Holy Ghost singled him out, dropped him down, as it were, from above, and then took him up again, without any further account of him in the Scripture, that he might convey this mystery to us. That which hath no beginning nor end of it recorded, is as abiding for ever; which this type had not, and so fully sets out the truth designed to be conveyed by it.

4 Now consider how great this man was, † unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

Now consider how great this man was: the Spirit compares with, and prefers, Melchisedec before Abraham, as he was God's high priest; he introduces it with pressing these Hebrews to exercise an act of judgment under the metaphor of seeing, denoting it to be such a serious and intent act, as calls for the utmost exercise of the discerning faculty; a carelessness in it, or an oversight, might make the proposal to be to no purpose. The greatness of this high priest is what he sets in their view, and that indefinitely. How great is this officer! intimating him to be somewhat excessive to other great ones: and how much greater then must be Christ, if his type be so great! beyond not only Abraham, Levi, and his posterity, but this great Melchisedec, as to his sacerdotal power and dignity. Unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils: this greatness is evinced by Abraham's (the patriarch, chief of all the fathers of Israel, whom the Hebrews esteemed above all others, John viii. 53. and God owns as his friend, and sets all believers under his fatherhood) giving, as a due to Melchisedec, being the greater person in office, the tenth of all the spoils, that which was due to God, and paid to him as God's high priest: ἀκροβυλιών notes either the first or choicest of the heaps of grains, especially the first-fruits dedicated to God; but here signifieth that part of the spoils which, according to the custom of war in most nations, after the victory, were offered to God as his part, whether they did consist of persons or things: the tenth part of these were given by him to Melchisedec, as the greatest priest of God in the world, and superior to himself.

o Num. 18.
21, 26.

5 And verily <sup>c</sup>they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:

This is a proof by instance out of the Levitical law, that he who receiveth is greater than he who giveth. And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood: the seed of Levi the son of Jacob, son of Isaac, son of Abraham, Numb. i. 48—50; iii. 1—5, and not all of them neither, but the sons of Levi descending from Aaron, were separated and consecrated in the priesthood by God's precept, and vindicated from those who would usurp it, Numb. xvi, xvii., and confirmed in it by miracle. Have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law: God himself gave them a law from heaven to tithe by, and a charge to observe this law, as to all parts of tithes, such as were due to all Levites, Numb. xviii. 24, to the high priest only as God's substitute, Numb. xviii. 8—19, 25—29; to the Levites, widows, and poor together, Deut. xiv. 22—29. These the same law obliged all the Israelites to pay to these Levites as a homage due from them to God, and so delivered to his substitutes superior unto them, as his priests and ministers, and due to them by his own constitution, being the first-fruits of his own blessing. That is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: yet these Israelites who were to pay those tithes to these as superior to them in office, were their own brethren by nature, of the same rank, coming out of the same loins of Abraham, but subjected to these priests, who, by God's ordinance, were set above them in their office; and their receiving tithes was an inseparable property of that superiority.

1 Or, pedigree.

6 But he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of Abraham, <sup>d</sup>and blessed <sup>e</sup>him that had the promises.

d Gen. 14. 19.
e Rom. 4. 13.
Gal. 3. 16.

The proof is here applied, showing Melchisedec to be greater, not than the Levitical priest only, but than Abraham himself. But he whose descent is not counted from them; he drew not his genealogy from any priests before him, but is greater than those priests, who by genealogy and succession were made such, and set above their brethren by God himself: he being independent, having no progenitor, priest, or successor, is greater than whom he decimateth. Received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises; he decimated Abraham, the father of the Levitical priests, and by the Most High's order blessed him, by assuring him of his peace with God, grace continually from him, and multiplying temporal and spiritual blessings to him, according as God promised, Gen. xv. 1, &c. And this he did to him, though Abraham was a patriarch, and privileged with promises above any other; yet though God were made over to him in all his fulness, the blessing given him of fatherhood to a numerous nation, even the visible church of God among Israel, as to all believing Gentiles, who had Canaan literally promised to his posterity, and even this Salem, among the rest, of which Melchisedec was king, and the heavenly Canaan to himself; and above all, the promised Messiah to descend from him, in whom himself and all nations were to be blessed; he, so great in promises, is tithed and blessed by a greater Melchisedec.

7 And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better.

This principle is commonly acknowledged, it is a most apparent truth, you Hebrews cannot deny it; it is your common judgment, that a priest blessing, as God's officer, is greater than those blessed by him. He that is in a lower state in God's church, is blessed by one set above him in office by God himself, better and greater than he for his place and dignity in office. He must have the pre-eminency for his blessing, which he authoritatively, powerfully, and effectually conveyeth from God to those he blesseth, representing therein God communicating by him the good he wanteth in his benediction.

8 And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, <sup>f</sup>of whom it <sup>g</sup>is witnessed that he liveth.

f ch. 5. 6.
g 6. 20.

His greatness as to his priesthood above the Levitical, is proved from its immortality. Immortal is greater and better than mortal; such is his order of priesthood. This argument he brings in to heighten the former, and so connects it to it. And here men that die receive tithes: the particle ὄντε, here, if referred to time, notes during Moses's economy, while the Levitical law lasted; if it refer to place, it notes Jerusalem in the land of Canaan, where the temple was: in that habitation of the Israelitish church the Levitical priests were not only as to their nature and persons withering and decaying, ceasing to be on earth, though they had the honour to decimate their brethren, but as to their order and office, mortal, they were no better than the tithed and blessed by them, in prospect of death. Aaron himself, the first of the order, died, and so did all his successors, as well as Israel. But there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth: but how much better is Melchisedec and his order! ἐκεῖ, there, may refer either to the place where his business was transacted with Abraham, near Salem; or to the place of Scripture record concerning him, either Gen. xiv. 18—20, where there is no account of his death, or in Psal. cx. 4. By the prophet David is the testimony borne, that his order is for ever; that Melchisedec, as to his order and office of priesthood, now liveth and subsisteth in the Son of God incarnate, and continueth for ever. It is suggested by a great light in the church, as if Melchisedec was translated as Enoch was, and so continued a priest to the very moment of his translation; and that neither his person nor priesthood died, but liveth for ever: but in this the Scripture is silent. Another refers it immediately to Christ, reading it thus: Here, i. e. in this world, they receive tithes, or are priests; but there, i. e. within the innermost of the veil, whither the forerunner is for us entered, Jesus; supplying this out of chap. vi. 19, 20. Here, is to be understood, not who receiveth tithes, but who is, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth. He saith this sense is to be found in so many words in ver. 23—25, where those who receive tithes, and die, are no other men than those many priests who were not suffered to continue by reason of death, ver. 23. Nor can he, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth, be any other than Jesus, who, ver. 24, is the man that continueth for ever; and, ver. 25, is ever-living.

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham.

And as I may so say: the Spirit now sets this priesthood above the Levitical by instance, which instance being not so proper or direct, his form of introducing it is considerable, as ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, as to say the word, which is a Greek elegance of speech, when that is uttered which is remarkable, and yet hard to be understood; and it is not only conclusive to what was spoken before, I will speak a word more, and then end the discourse, but interpretative of what he was about to say concerning Levi, born a hundred and sixty-two years after this transaction; As I may so say, or, in some sense it may be said. Levi also; Levi, not so much taken personally as collectively, for the tribe that sprung of him, who were priests or ministers to Israel, which Levi personally was not. He was the third son of Jacob, and his seed God separated for, and consecrated to, his service, settling the priesthood in Aaron's family, which was a branch of that tribe, and making all the rest servants to them. Who received tithes, paid tithes in Abraham; these did receive these tenths by God's law from their brethren, and these paid tenths by or in Abraham, and so showed them to be inferior in office to Melchisedec, who received this homage from them as due to God, and to him as his high priest. This was not properly, but figuratively; true parents and children being accounted here as one person before they exist, as well as after; Levi, not actually existing then, but virtually in his parent. Christ was in his loins virtually too, as to his humanity, but not to descend of him by natural propagation, but by miracle; and in him as an antitype to this Melchisedec, and one to be set above him, in whom Melchisedec himself was to be blessed, and therefore could not pay tenths to him in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchisedec met him.

For, introduceth the proof, that Levi tithed in Abraham, being virtually in him, as his productive cause; so near is the unity and identity of descending children; and as truly were the posterity of Adam in him when he ate, sinned, and fell, Rom. v. 12. To remove all question of the truth of it, the time is annexed to it, when Melchisedec met Abraham, and blessed him, then did Levi pay tenths in him; so as Melchisedec was greater than the Levitical priest: Christ, typified by him, being greater than himself, must be greater than them also.

11 <sup>g Gal. 2. 21.</sup> <sup>ver. 14, 19.</sup> <sup>ch. 8. 7.</sup> If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another Priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood: now the Spirit infers from the doctrine of Melchisedec's priesthood, the dignity and perpetuity of Christ's, typified by it: so that it is not Aaron's priesthood, but Christ's, which the Hebrews were to use for their salvation after Aaron's was expired. For perfection was not to be had by Aaron's priesthood or law, but by a better, of another order, even Christ and his law. The form of these words are interrogative, implying a vehement denial of what is queried in them. A perfecting of persons to life eternal by expiation, justification, renovation, &c.; see chap. ix. 9; x. 1; freeing sinners from the guilt, stain, filth, and consequences of their sins by an expiatory, satisfactory sacrifice to God, and fitting of them for an eternal enjoying him; a self-efficiency to these things without Christ, is, as to the Aaronical priesthood, vehemently denied; as to this, that is defective. For under it the people received the law; for with the priesthood, about the time of its institution by God, the Israelitish church, God's covenanted people, received the law; by which, as well as by its priesthood, there is no expiation, remission, nor eternal life to be obtained, Gal. iii. 17—19; compare Mal. ii. 4—8. This law and priesthood being types of far better to succeed them, they were but leading to them, which in the fulness of time were to be revealed, and which should perfect what they could not, Gal. iii. 23, 24; iv. 3—5. What further need was there, &c.? it was needful, since the Levitical priesthood and law could not perfect sinners, that another should take place which could perfect them. David therefore, who lived above four hundred years after their institution, and feeling their imperfection, did by the Spirit foresee and tell of a royal priesthood and law to take place after this, that should perfect sinners, which could not be done by any called after Aaron's imperfect order. This was the Lord Christ the Messiah, who must be after the order of Melchisedec, Psal. cx. 4, and who by his priesthood and law should abundantly effect it; which was far more excellent for both, than any of the Levitical family can pretend to.

12 For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

For the priesthood being changed: for refers to the expiration of the Aaronical order, to which these Hebrews now were not bound, for that a better priesthood and law were to fill up their room in the church. The Levitical priesthood was changed and abolished to make way for this; God designing that to continue for a time, and then to expire, when the truth perfecting it should take place. There is made of necessity a change also of the law; the mutation of the priesthood indispensably requireth the change of the law, i. e. the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace, and the bringing in with another priesthood a better hope, Gal. iii. 17—27; compare ver. 18, 19 of this chapter; even the covenant of grace in the gospel dispensation of it. This was made necessary by the decree of God, who determined, that both priesthood and law should expire together, and accordingly hath fulfilled it. For when Christ, the gospel High Priest, had in his person and work perfected all of it in heaven, he roots out that order of priesthood, abolisheth the law, scatters the people which would cleave to it; demolisheth the temple and city to which he confined the administration, so as all designs and endeavours of Jews, or of apostate Christians, to repair, or to restore it, have been ineffectual to this day.

13 For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe: that this priesthood was so altered, he proves by Christ's being of another tribe than Levi. This is a paraphrase, describing the priest after Melchisedec's order. Of whom was this said in Psal. cx. 4, but of Christ, God-man, the royal High Priest of God? Matt. xxi. 42. He, as to his human nature, descended of the tribe of Judah, and not of Levi; and so the Aaronical priesthood was ended by him, chap. ii. 14; Gen. xlix. 10. Of which no man gave attendance at the altar; of which tribe none was a priest, whose work was to attend the altar, and offer sacrifice; if any of another tribe pretended to, or would usurp it, God either smote them, as Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 18, or destroyed them, as those rebels, Numb. xvi. 1—3, 28—35; neither was the priesthood hereby made tribal, or continued in any such tribe as in Levi, but confined to our Lord only, not because he descended of Judah, but extraordinarily selected of God out of it to discharge it.

14 For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; the proof of this change of the tribe, and of what tribe he was, was undeniably evident to these Hebrews from their own genealogies, and the Roman census and enrolment of him; the providence of God ordering this, that it might be universally known that he was David's seed, as well as Abraham's, and as called by his name, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24, 25. Our Lord was God-man, Lord-mediator, Psal. cx. 1, 4; Matt. xxii. 42, 46. He was, as to his humanity, born of the tribe of Judah, as his genealogy by his mother doth evince, Luke iii. 33, and the concomitant evidence of the Roman rolls, in which his name was registered and kept in their archives above an age after his ascension. Of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood: no man of which tribe was so designed by God, or so revealed to have the royal priesthood, but himself; none of them having any right to it, as they could prove out of Moses's writing; and the rule of priesthood is to be found there, and no where else: so that a negative argument taken from Scripture in matters of religion is valid, though never so much puffed at in this age.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another Priest,

And it is yet far more evident: the change and abolition of the Levitical priesthood, and law, that the perfecting of Christ might succeed, is not only clearly represented to the understanding of all, that they assent to it, but it is far more evident from the eternity of this priesthood's constitution, as is proved, ver. 16. For that; ei, if, is a particle vehemently asserting, as in form of swearing, and not doubting, and therefore rendered for that. After the similitude of Melchisedec; like and parallel in order to him, and in all the properties foretold, which make him a most excellent priest; a priesthood far above that of Aaron, upon the account of the law and covenant to which it is related, which was not only the law of nature, serving God as Creator, but the law of grace, as he was Redeemer in Christ, who with the patriarchs worshipped God by, as believed in, a Christ to come. There ariseth another priest; not only of another tribe than Aaron, but of a different order from his; is constituted, manifested, and beginneth the exercise of his office with the abolition of Aaron's.

16 Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment; the gospel High Priest, the Lord Jesus Christ, was not constituted nor consecrated after that order and rule of God which did bind the Aaronical priesthood, and regulate it as to their consecrations and ministrations, obliging them by annexed temporal promises and comminations, which could not reach an immortal soul. The Mosaical rites and ceremonies were bodily, fleshly, only external. He was not made a priest by legal purifying with water, nor anointed with oil, nor sprinkled with blood, nor clothed with priestly garments, as Aaron and his order was, Exod. xxxix.; xl. 13—15, 31, 32; nor initiated with sacrifices of bulls, goats, &c. He was not to minister in a tabernacle or temple, as they did, which was carnal, and reached only the flesh, could not expiate sins, nor procure spiritual and eternal blessings, chap. ix. 1—12, 19—26. But after the power of an endless life; but was constituted and consecrated by God according to his powerful law. He was anointed with the Holy Ghost and power, Acts x. 38, which mighty influence enabled him to execute his office effectually for saving sinners; and by it he receiveth life peculiar to his priesthood, opposed to the dead letter of the commandment, by which, and under which, souls perished by multitudes. But this High Priest hath by this law life in himself, and the best of life to give out to those who wait on his ministry, John v. 21, 24—26, and such life as is indissoluble, opposite to carnal and bodily, which corrupts and perisheth; but the powerful life of this priest is not to be destroyed, neither in himself, nor his people. He by his death and life makes eternal expiation, and procurerth eternal blessings for them: see ver. 25, and chap. ix. 11, 12, 28.

17 For he testifieth, <sup>1</sup>Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

For he testifieth: this is proved by infallible testimony in Psal. cx. 4, God the Father himself solemnly declared him to be so before the angels in heaven, and revealed it to men on earth by the prophet David. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: that as Melchisedec had no end of days recorded, so this is repeated again to prove, that the Priest after his similitude, i. e. after his order, (the words being here synonymous,) must continue for ever. Christ was not a temporary Priest by a carnal law, but was made a Priest for ever, with everlasting power endowed to save all his people: see ver. 24, 25, 28, and Matt. i. 21.

18 For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before: the Spirit having proved the disannulling of the Aaronical priesthood for its imperfection, proceeds to prove the abolishing of the law or covenant annexed to it, like it for weakness and unprofitableness; ἀβίτητος is a displacing, deposing, or laying it aside as to its binding force, so as there is no obligation from it on any as to obedience or penalty; and this is so disannulled of the Law-maker, God himself, by setting up the gospel by his Son-priest, which is most certainly true. For the weakness and unprofitableness thereof; for the Mosaical covenant and law wanted strength to bring about what the Jews sought by it, and wanted good fruit to them who made their boast of it; both which weakness and unprofitableness arose from the Hebrews' abuse of it, expecting expiation and sanctification by it, without minding the promise which preceded it four hundred and thirty years, to which it should have led them, and by its neglect proved so fatal to them. For they would be justified and saved by an external obedience to this law, without any regard to Christ and his sacrifice, by whom alone it could be attained, Gal. iii. 17—27. It was strong and profitable to the end for which God made it, to lead to Christ; but weak and unprofitable to justify or sanctify them without him, which was the end they used it for, or rather abused it.

19 For the law made nothing perfect, <sup>1</sup>but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.

For the law made nothing perfect: the proof of this weakness and unprofitableness of the law is its imperfection; it had no supernatural moral power to justify or sanctify any person, or to bring him to perfection; neither did it perfect any person of itself, so as to reconcile him to God, or bring him to salvation, whatever was expected by it, chap. ix. 9; x. 1, 2. But the bringing in of a better hope did: δὲ, but, shows the opposition of hope to the law; though the law could not perfect any, yet the better hope, the gospel, promulgated to and received by them, could perfect them. Ἐπιπροσώγῳ, superinduction, i. e. it was brought in, and put in force, after the legal covenant expired; and brought in to abolish that, so as by it it was repealed and abrogated. The gospel law is styled a better hope, because it is conveying better promises, chap. viii. 6, which gives firm and certain hope of sinners' perfection by it, viz. their enjoyment of justification, sanctification, and eternal life. This hope wrought by the Holy Ghost in their hearts, enableth them to obey the gospel, and seals the promises to them. By the which we draw nigh unto God; and by this they have free access to God, as chap. iv. 14, 16; compare chap. x. 19—22; Rom. v. 1, 2; not only to worship him, but to receive the blessings of the covenant from him, without fear of displeasing him, or being consumed by him, as under the law, but in the greatest confidence of pleasing him in Jesus Christ, of having communion with him, and of being blessed in the enjoyment of him for ever: see chap. xii. 18—22, and compare ver. 22—25 with them.

20 And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made Priest:

This is a further proof of the excellency of Christ's priesthood above Aaron's, taken from his constitution in it by oath. He who is made a priest by oath, is a better and a greater priest than any made so without it; but so is Christ. καθ' ὅσον is a comparative, answered ver. 22, insinuating by how much the cause constituting or confirming an office of priesthood is more excellent, by so much the effect and office must excel, receiving greater power for some more excellent end. This ὀρκωμοσία is as much as a double oath, ἀπὸ τοῦ ὀμνῆναι ὀρκόν. By the swearing of an oath by God the Father was the gospel High Priest constituted an eternal one after Melchisedec's order; and it addeh so much the more strength and glory to the sanction. This is testified by David, Psal. cx. 4. The Levitical priests were made by a Divine designation, and with external rites were consecrated; but Christ was constituted a Priest by oath, as our translators well supply it out of the following verse.

21 (For those Priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord swear and will not repent, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec:)

For those priests were made without an oath; those priests of Aaron's order were selected, instituted, consecrated, without any oath mentioned by Moses, who did all exactly as the Lord commanded him, Exod. xl. 16. God gave only command for it, and made their priesthood but a temporary and passing honour and office, which he might

<sup>1</sup> Ps. 110. 4.
ch. 5. 6, 10.
& 6. 20.

<sup>1</sup> Rom. 8. 2.
Gal. 4. 2.

<sup>1</sup> Acts 13. 39.
Rom. 3. 20.
21, 28, & 3.
Gal. 2. 16.
ch. 9. 5.
<sup>1</sup> Or, but it was the bringing in, Gal. 3. 24. m. ch. 6. 16. & 8. 6. n. Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. ch. 4. 16. & 10. 19.

<sup>1</sup> Or, without appearing of an oath.
o Ps. 110. 4.

alter when he would. But this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord swear and will not repent: but he, or Jesus, was made a Priest after Melchisedec's order, by an oath of God his Father, speaking to him, as is recorded by David, Psal. cx. 4. The Lord Jehovah the Father, swore unto his Son the Lord Messiah, lifting his hand, and saying, I live for ever, Deut. xxxii. 40, when he ascended and sat down on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens, solemnly by this oath ratifying and confirming him in this office; and that he would not repent, i. e. change, or alter, or retract what he swore to him, there being no need of any other, he so effectually performing the work of it, that all that God bestows upon his by him, are gifts not to be repented of, even eternal life and salvation. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: that which the oath ratified was, that Christ should be God's only and eternal Priest, who was to have no sharer with him in the priesthood, and no end of it; taking away from himself by oath any power to make Christ no priest, or take away his office at will and pleasure, as he did Aaron's; hereby honouring his Son, and highly gratifying sinners by giving them such a royal High Priest, who should effectually manage all their concerns with him for ever.

p ch. 8. 6. & 9. 15. & 12. 24.
22 By so much <sup>p</sup> was Jesus made a surety of a better testament.

This brings in the consequent on ver. 20. As much excellency as was in God's oath constituting, so much there must be in the office constituted. The Aaronical priesthood, by God's constitution, was excellent; but Christ's is much more so, being by God's oath made personal and everlasting, relating to the best covenant; so as the Hebrews had the greatest reason to renounce Aaron's, and to cleave to Christ's for salvation. He being God-man, is a Surety, one that bindeth himself for another, to see something paid or performed, to give security for another; and is proper to him as a Priest, Job xvii. 3; Psal. cxix. 122; Prov. vi. 1. In the Mosaical economy the priests were typical sureties, or undertakers for the people; so Aaron, as a surety, was sent by Moses to stand between the living and the dead, when God was cutting off those sinners, Numb. xvi. 46, 48. The Spirit interprets this Surety to be a Mediator, chap. viii. 6, which is the general comprehensive name of all his offices: as he gives all from God to us in and by his promises, he is the Testator fulfilling them, chap. ix. 15, 16; as he gives satisfaction to God for us, and returns our duty performed with the incense of his merits, he is our Surety; which merit of his resulted from his perfect obedience to the whole law and will of God, and from the full satisfaction he made to God by his death for our sins, Rom. v. 19; 2 Cor. v. 21; Gal. iii. 13. A better testament; the gospel covenant, described chap. viii. 10—12, and referreth to what the Lord foretold of it, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, which is better than the Mosaical for perspicuity, freedom, fullness, spirituality, and the Spirit promised in it for its ratification by the death of Christ, and its perpetuity: see chap. viii. 8, 9, 11.

23 And they truly were many Priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death:

And they truly were many priests: this further demonstrates the excellency of Christ's priesthood above the Aaronical for its singularity and self-sufficiency: whereas theirs was, for the multiplicity of it, weak, vanishing, and mortal, like themselves. They had multitude of priests together under the high priest, to manage the service, and above seventy high priests, beside their sagans, such as were to officiate for them if at any time they were legally disabled from the institution of the Aaronical order, to the destruction of the temple, and were made according to the law successively. Because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; death cut them off one after another; they were all mortal, and could not abide, neither in their priesthood or life, Exod. xxviii. 43. Death transmitted that priesthood from one unto another, till the priesthood itself, by the succession of a better, was abolished, and did expire; so frail, passing, and imperfect were both their persons and office.

¶ Or, which passeth not from one to another.
24 But this man, because he continueth ever, hath  $\parallel$  an unchangeable priesthood.

But this man, because he continueth ever; this Priest, Jesus, ver. 22, is opposed to the Aaronical multitude; this excellent one, 1 Tim. ii. 5, after his resurrection abideth immortal. He is eternal and permanent for person and office: see ver. 25; Rom. vi. 9. They are vanished, but he continues for ever, Rev. i. 17, 18. Hath an unchangeable priesthood; ἀπαράβατον, a priesthood that cannot pass from him to any other, as Aaron's did to his successors: no person is to be a sharer in it, nor a successor to it: it is reciprocal with himself; his individual person terminateth it for ever; he hath no vicars nor successors of his priesthood, whatever the pope pretends to in it.

25 Wherefore he is able also to save them  $\parallel$  to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth ¶ to make intercession for them.

Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost: this inference proves his eminency in office above Aaron's order by the efficacy of it; for he is possessor of a supernatural Divine power, which is able to save to perfection, to the full, to all ends, from sin, in its guilt, stain, and power; from its consequents, the curse, and wrath, and eternal death. What neither ourselves nor others could do for us, he is only able, and as willing as able, to set us in a safe, happy, blessed, and glorious state for ever, Rom. v. 9—11, 17. That come unto God by him; all such who will come to God by him as their High Priest, and no other, praying for remission of sins for his sake and merit, by faith in his blood, renouncing self, expecting the mercy of God to flow in him to them, subjecting themselves entirely to him, and depending on him to present them unto God their end, without spot or blemish, or any such thing, and to make them blessed in the enjoyment of him for ever. This is his work, John vi. 35—40; 1 Pet. iii. 18. Seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them; since he always exists and lives a High Priest for the good of those who wait on him, having life in himself, and quickening them; compare Rom. viii. 6; and, as their Advocate, 1 John ii. 1, 2, answereth all charges against them, suing for those penitent believers, and pleading for all promised them by the Father in him. He sitting at God's right hand must ever be in his presence: and appears as the general Representative of his, and useth all his interest with the supreme Lawgiver, Judge, and Governor, for them, (see chap. ix. 24.) as it was foretold he should, Isa. liii. 12, even for them who cannot plead their own cause through guiltiness or weakness; he will manage it for all of them who believe in him, and apply themselves to God by him, atoning him for their sins by his sacrifice, perfuming their duties and person by the incense of his merits, and presenting them to God, answering in heaven his type on earth. Exod. xxx. 1—10: compare Rev. viii. 3, 4; Rom. viii. 31—36.

26 For such an High Priest became us, ¶ who is holy, harmless, undefiled, ¶ separate from sinners, ¶ and made higher than the heavens;

The last excellency of the gospel High Priest, preferring him to Aaron's order, is the qualification of his person, by which he is described in himself, distinguished from and set above all others, and is that which remained out of David's proof to be cleared, who this person was, who was different from Melchisedec, though after his order, to take place after Aaron's was expired, who was immortal, and constituted an everlasting Priest by God's oath. For such an High Priest became us, who is holy: this was God-man, the Messiah, and gospel High Priest, who was convenient, congruous, suitable, useful, and necessary, for us guilty, filthy, miserable sinners, in respect of ourselves hopeless and helpless, and cannot approach God without consumption; and, unless we have a person who can manage our cause with God, are lost for ever. To such he is agreeable and necessary, who only can help and save us. This the titles given him evince, showing all the perfections of a priest, of which others were dark shadows and types; as he was not only externally and relatively by office, but internally and morally holy. His essence as God was holiness; as man his nature was entirely agreeable to God's will; he was that holy thing, Luke i. 35; not having holiness engraven on a mitre, as Aaron, Exod. xxxix. 30, 31,

¶ Or, evermore.
 ¶ Rom. 8. 34.
 ¶ 1 Tim. 2. 5.
 ¶ ch. 9. 24.
 ¶ 1 John 2. 1.

¶ ch. 4. 15.
 ¶ Eph. 1. 20.
 ¶ 4. 10.
 ¶ ch. 8. 1.

but in his person; holy in his conception, birth, life, and death. The devil could find nothing but holiness in him, John xiv. 30. Pure in his soul, in his body, transcendently beyond his type, Lev. xxi. 17—23; not a creature, angel or man, so holy as he. the most like to God of any, John i. 14. Harmless; ἀκακος, void of all natural evil in his spirit and flesh, no lust, no disposition to evil, not injurious to any, having no guile, an Israelite indeed beyond a Nathanael, of the most simple, pure, and innocent nature; he was good, and all his work was good, Acts x. 38. Un-defiled; ἀμικτός, without any spot, not soiled or stained without or within; the angels and heavens are not so clean in God's sight, as this Priest of his; he was never tainted with the appearance of sin: if his church be so pure, what must himself be! Eph. v. 27. Separate from sinners; free from all vicious habit, quality, act, or stain, by what was in sinners, or by his converse with them; as separate from guilt or stain, as if he had never been with them; conjoined with God in being and fulness of righteousness, making sinners righteous, but contracting nothing from them. And made higher than the heavens; by the constitution of God, after his sacrifice, mentioned ver. 27, he ascended far above all heavens, Eph. iv. 10, and is settled on God's throne at his right hand, having all principalities, powers, might and dominion, and every name, subjected to him, and all things put under his feet, Eph. i. 21, 22. Never priest can reach where he is; this is his supereminent excellency, chap. iv. 14; viii. 1: ix. 11. How able, mighty, and successful is he for managing all for his clients there! His work now is intercession.

27 Who needeth not daily, as those High Priests, to offer up sacrifice, 'first for his own sins, "and then for the people's: for 'this he did once, when he offered up himself.

In this verse the Spirit shows the ground of his intercession-work in heaven, and why he doth not sacrifice as a High Priest there; therein setting his far above the Aaronical priesthood. Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice; he had no necessity, being so holy as he was, to multiply sacrifices. First for his own sins, and then for the people's; for himself, being sinless, and having no infirmity to atone for, as the Aaronical priesthood had, who annually on the day of atonement did offer sacrifice for themselves, being sinners, and needing pardon as well as the people, Lev. ix. 7. And he had no need annually on a day to offer for the people's sins, as Aaron and his successors had, and did continue to do, till his sacrifice took place and abolished them; he having once offered a sacrifice for the sins of the people, which outweighed all their multiplied sacrifices. For this he did once, when he offered up himself; and this he did once when he himself died a sacrifice for sins, when he offered up the human nature by the eternal Spirit without spot, a propitiatory sacrifice to God, when his body hung on the cross, and his soul ascended and entered into the throne of God in the holy of holiest in heaven, with the blood of the testament, and atoned him for all his people. How transcendent was this sacrifice to all the Aaronical ones, whereby sinners were reconciled unto God for ever! chap. ix. 11, 12, 14, 24—26. On this offering was he exalted by God far above all heavens, confirmed by oath in his office, and his intercession became so powerful and effectual to save all his people from their sins, and the consequents of them.

28 For the law maketh 'men High Priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, 'who is † consecrated for evermore.

This is the reason why the Aaronical priests had need to sacrifice for themselves, and the gospel High Priest had not, and is finally describing him who is so. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; for the law which God gave to Moses, the ceremonial law, constituteth, sets up, and puts into this Aaronical order and office of priesthood, such as are not only liable to bodily infirmities, but to moral ones, sins. Aaron and all his sons had their spiritual sinful infirmities, chap. v. 2, for which they were to offer their propitiatory sacrifices to God, as well as for those of the people; they were sinful, dying men, ver. 26. But the word of the oath, which was since the law; but God the Father's promise to his Son, ratified with an oath, that he should be the great High Priest perfecting of souls for God, as David testifieth, Psal. cx. 4, to be revealed to him; and this four hundred years after the law was given which constituted the Aaronical priesthood. The word revealed God's promise to him, the oath made it irreversible; yet this promise was not actually performed to him till his ascension in the human nature higher than the heavens, Psal. cx. 1. Maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore; God the Son incarnate, the man Christ God's fellow, the glorious only begotten and bosom Son of the Father, Zech. xiii. 7; John i. 14, 18; 1 Tim. ii. 5, is made by this ratified word the only single everlasting High Priest, who is not only completely and perfectly holy, as opposed to the infirmities of the Aaronical priests, but ever able and fit for his work, as successful in it. Who would not therefore leave that abolished priesthood, and cleave to this which must abide for ever?

CHAP. VIII

Christ, our great High Priest in the heavens, hath a more excellent ministry than the priests on earth, 1—5; as he is also the Mediator of a better covenant than that which was given to Moses, 6—13.

NOW of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, 'who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens;

The Spirit having cleared the doctrine of the priesthood of the great gospel Minister, now proceeds to show how he executed that office; and that therein as he far excelled, so he was to be valued and used before, the Aaronical priests. Ho introduceth it with a reflection on his foregoing discourse. Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum; the sum then of the things spoken, is κεφάλαιον some read, the head, i. e. the scope in a discourse driven at; others, the chief of all the excellencies of the priesthood hitherto held forth; as if it were palmarium argumentum, the highest and choicest of all that hitherto had been spoken; and it is proportionably true, as will be seen in what followeth: but it must necessarily join the foregoing and following discourse together, and so it notes a sum, contract, or epitome; a breviate of the heads formerly discoursed on and largely, chap. vii.; and so shows the dependence of the matter remaining to be handled on what went before, when many things are summed up in a few words; as Christ's priesthood, largely opened before from Psal. cx. 4, is, as to the substance of it, briefly handled in this verse. We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; we Paul, and believing Hebrews, opposed to the infidel Jews, have not only a right to, and interest in, but actual possession of, Christ, God-man, as our High Priest, while their infidel brethren had only a sinful man: He who hath eminent power above, and though crucified by men, yet thereby became victorious over sin, death, and hell, and the lord of them the devil, led principalities and powers in triumph, when he passed through their kingdom in the air, Col. ii. 15, entered into the heaven of heavens, and there sat him down and settled himself, as was his right, on the right hand of God, as he sat on his throne, invested with all power and dignity, as God's royal Priest, near to him, and the great manager of all our concerns with him; while the sinful priest at Jerusalem stood trembling before the shadow of this heavenly temple on earth, chap. i. 3.

2 A minister || of 'the sanctuary, and of 'the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

A minister; this is spoken of the High Priest sat down on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens, and relates to that work of his whereby he was constituted λειτουργός, which, according to Suidas, is compounded of two words, παρα τὸ λήϊον ἢ λήϊον ἔργον, public work; so as it might be rendered administrator, and notes any † Lev. 9. 7.

& 16. 6, 11.
ch. 5. 3.
& 9. 7.
u Lev. 16. 15.
x Rom. 6. 10.
ch. 9. 12, 28.
& 10. 12.

† Eph. 1. 20.
Col. 3. 1.
ch. 1. 3. & 10.
12. & 12. 2.

† ch. 5. 1, 2.

† ch. 2. 10.
& 5. 9.
† Gr. perfect.

|| Or, of holy things.
h ch. 9. 8.
12. 24.
c ch. 9. 11.

public officer from the highest to the lowest. The Spirit of God in the New Testament hath applied it to the highest and subordinate ministry; in this verse to Christ himself in his exalted state, and so notes a ruler, as he was now God's published, settled King. The Lord Administrator of all things in his kingdom, agreeably to what he foretold, Psal. ii. 6, 7; cx. 1; compare Acts xiii. 33. And here properly it notes him in all his offices, his royal, sacerdotal, and prophetic ministry in the heavens and earth, administering and governing all things in them. Of the sanctuary: the things about which his administration is concerned are τῶν ἁγίων, of holies. Some refer this to persons, as noting saints, of whom he is the Ruler and Governor, Rev. xv. 3; others, to things, graces and endowments bestowed by him upon his: but most properly here, in the neuter gender, it notes the place, the sanctuary in heaven, the holy of holiest, where he is administering and governing all, though it may be applied to all of these. For heaven is the place, the sanctuary, wherein sainted the persons for whom, and all holy endowments the matter about which, he administers, do descend. But the holy house, or sanctuary, is the proper import of it; and so, though expressed in the plural number, to all the holy parts of its types, the temple and tabernacle. And of the true tabernacle: some, because of the connexion of this to the former word, sanctuary, would have it import the same thing, even heaven; but the Spirit distinguisheth these from each other, chap. ix. 1, 2. Some would understand it of the body of Christ, but here not so properly and agreeably to what the Spirit is speaking of. But by tabernacle, here, is meant Christ mystical, the true temple, church, and habitation of God on earth. For as Christ was the body and truth by all the shadows and types of the tabernacle, Col. ii. 17, so not all one way. Some of the types were single, and terminated on his person, as priesthood, sacrifice, altar, shew-bread, incense, ark of the covenant, &c. Other types were aggregate, and compounded of many things, as tent, sanctuary, and tabernacle here; parallel to this, there must be a truth in Christ complex, that is, Christ the church, so framed and pitched a house by God, that he may dwell in it. The apostle so interprets it, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; 2 Cor. vi. 16; compare Eph. ii. 20, 21; 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5. Christ in person is 'its foundation; saints are the several living materials, of which the house and tabernacle is made; their dispositions, graces, and endowments, the ornaments of it; the laws, rules, orders, ordinances, are the cement, the cords and stakes that join them together; and the glory of God fills it, as it did the tabernacle and temple, Hag. ii. 7, 9; Rev. xxi. 23. It is styled, the true tabernacle of God, because of it the literal tabernacle was but an imperfect shadow and type; in this God dwells truly and personally, therefore to be entered into by the Hebrews; the old one, the type, being abolished and vanished by the appearance of this the truth. For now was that word fulfilled, Jer. iii. 16; the days were come that men should mention no more the ark of the covenant of the Lord; so no more the tabernacle of the witness; but the truth of God in Christ should be acknowledged by them. The reason of this interpretation is evident. A tabernacle is God's habitation; the Christian church is such, it answers in all parts, and bears its proportion to the complex type, and cannot fully be matched by any other things: it is congruous to Christ's session in glory; for thence he doth, as the honourable and glorious Administrator of God's church, order and manage all on it according to his will, having settled in his true tabernacle a ministry, Eph. iv. 8—13, covenant, as below, ver. 6—13, service, ver. 3, 5, and privileges, far exceeding its type: all which this grand officer, as the only royal High Priest and Head of his church, Prophet of his people, orders by his Spirit, the only Vicar he useth in it. Of this true tabernacle, church, or house of God, the sovereign, independent, omnipotent, infinitely wise and holy, the eternal Lord, was the author; and such is his work as no other can question it, can add to or alter it, can reach it, so proportioned is it to its Framer. Which the Lord pitched; ἔπηξεν he framed and prepared every piece that constituteth this tabernacle himself, as the materials of the first were wrought by his pattern and order. He compacted and joined all the parts of it together, to make it his tabernacle; and especially reared, pitched, and firmly constituted this his own habitation.

This he doth for ever so pitch, as hell and earth, with all their arts and force, can never remove it. Matt. xvi. 16, 18. It is his rest for ever, here he will dwell, for he hath desired it, and will make it glorious, chap. xii. 26—28; Psal. cxxxii. 14; Isa. xi. 10; Rev. xxi. And not man; this is denied because man is weak, sinful, and mortal, no such hands intermeddle with the work of God's tabernacle, for his work would be like him, weak, faulty, and perishing, which could not long survive its author.

3 For <sup>d</sup> every High Priest is ordained <sup>d</sup> ch. 5. 1. to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore <sup>e</sup> it is of necessity that this man have <sup>e</sup> Eph. 5. 2. somewhat also to offer. <sup>ch. 9. 14.</sup>

For every High Priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: in Christ's administration for his in heaven, as he is a King, so he is a High Priest; and as such must have service and ministration suitable to himself there, as the Aaronical high priests had on earth; every of which was constituted to stand and minister at God's altar, and were to offer sacrifices and gifts, as cleared before, chap. v. 1. Wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer; seeing these earthly priests had such service, it would follow thence, if he were earthly and of their order, he should need such too. Ἀναγκαῖον having no verb expressly joined to it, is variously supplied: some, by it is; but those who would make the tabernacle his body, do not allow it, that being offered before this, and therefore add, it was, or hath been: but it is best supplied potentially, it would be necessary for this High Priest, if he were so low as those priests, to have something of the like nature or kind of gifts and sacrifices, that he might offer as they did. Now such he needed not, as being utterly inconsistent with his priesthood, as is proved after.

4 For if he were on earth, he should not be a Priest, seeing that || there are || Or, they are Priests. Priests that offer gifts according to the law:

For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest: this gives the reason why the Levitical gifts and offerings were inconsistent with Christ's priesthood: for if he were earthly for person or office, or was existing on earth, or in an earthly sanctuary or tabernacle proper to the law, he could not by Divine ordination be an offering priest, being not of Aaron's family, nor of the tribe of Levi, nor such a priest as he was made by God's oath after Melchisedec's order, if he were for temper, office, or place of ministry earthly. Seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: this earthly office, state, and work, was by the law settled on Aaron's family, and none could legally offer sacrifices or gifts in God's earthly tabernacle or temple, but his sons alone. Christ, as he was not of that tribe, so he never was either in the court of the priests, or in the holy place in the temple, neither did minister in them as a priest at all; this was proper and peculiar only to his types.

5 Who serve unto the example and 'shadow of heavenly things, as Moses <sup>f</sup> Col. 2. 17. was admonished of God when he was <sup>ch. 9. 23.</sup> about to make the tabernacle: <sup>& 10. 1.</sup> for, See, <sup>g</sup> Ex. 25. 40. saith he, <sup>& 26. 30.</sup> that thou make all things <sup>& 27. 4.</sup> according to the pattern shewed to thee <sup>Num. 8. 4.</sup> in <sup>Acta 7. 44.</sup> the mount.

Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things; these Aaronical priests and their service in the literal tabernacle, were only subservient, as the model in the mind, to represent the truth, as the platform of a tabernacle serves toward the making and pitching of it. Ὑποδείγματι is an obscure and underhand resemblance, the first draught, that which is the rough part of what is to be represented, chap. xi. 23, such as the shadow is to the natural body, a dark resemblance of it: such were these of Christ's person, ministry, and those heavenly things performed by him; they were leading them to, and instructing them in, Christ and his work, though the veil on their mind and hearts hindered them from discerning it. So true is that, John i. 17. Moses's law was the shadow, Christ the truth of all; compare chap. ix. 6, 23; x. 11. And it is not unlikely, that both the literal tabernacle and temple economy are but grosser and obscurer discoveries of that form and manner of the manifestation of God in glory, and the most excellently regulated service and ministry in the economy there. As Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; κεχηματίσαν Moses was in the mount, from God's own mouth, (the best of oracles,) charged and admonished about, and infallibly guided in, his duty, Exod. xxv., confirmed by the Spirit in Acts vii. 41: when he had his commission for the work, resolved to enter on and perfect it according to God's charge, then was this oracle given out about the earthly tabernacle, priesthood, and service. For, See, saith he; look you to it, observe this, take heed and beware, saith he, who is Jehovah, the Sovereign Lord of him and Israel, a Being of power to enjoy, and command, and to require any neglect, Exod. xxv. That thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount; thou shalt make, frame, and work, by enjoining Israel what they are to make, and perfect what thou art to do, all those things of the vessels, parts, and structure of the tabernacle for officers and service, for conjoining, rearing, and pitching of it, Exod. xxv. to xl.; all after the type, copy, pattern, exemplar, showed thee by me, and seen and viewed by thee, when thou wert with me in the top of the Mount Sinai forty days and forty nights. This tabernacle was framed by its type, and was to be an ordinance resembling, figuring, and typifying a spiritual tabernacle and ministry of Christ that was to succeed and fulfil it, being different in the whole kind from this type; it being spiritual and heavenly, this a gross, material, earthly fabric. Moses was most exact in framing all as God commanded, after his own pattern; he did not add, diminish, nor alter any thing in it, Exod. xl.

6 But now <sup>h</sup> hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better || covenant, which was established upon better promises.

But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry: but is here adversative, setting this High Priest over against and above the Aaronical, on the account both of his ministry and covenant, of which theirs were but types and shadows. The Lord Christ hath now really and fully obtained, and doth possess as the gospel High Priest, a public ministration, which, as to its glorious effects, transcendently excels the Levitical, chap. ix. 11, 12, 14; x. 12, 14, 18. By how much also he is the mediator; by how much he is Mediator of a better covenant, by so much he hath a more excellent ministry, so that this is a proof of the former. Μειότερος is a middler, one that interposeth, not only between persons at distance, but at enmity: his parleying between God and sinners could profit little, God being so highly injured by and offended with them; and therefore he mediates here as a Surety, as chap. vii. 22, and so undertakes for sinners to satisfy God, wronged by them, by sacrificing himself for them, and so secure the performance of his covenant mercy to them. By which sacrifice he purchasesh and merits the Holy Spirit, to enable man to perform the conditions which God requireth from him; to repent, and believe, and obey the Redeemer, and wholly to rely upon his sacrifice for God's favour; as by his intercession he secures to them all the blessings of God's covenant for time and eternity, as proved, chap. ix. Of a better covenant; the gospel covenant, which was a solemn agreement between an offended God and sinners; wherein he binds himself to give forth pardon and life to them upon certain conditions; and they bind themselves to perform, in order to the obtaining these. Which covenant was brought about by the intercession of Christ the Mediator between them, who became a Surety for the performance of it, and solemnly ratified and confirmed it by the sacrifice of himself; as other covenants were by the blood of federal sacrifices, of which we have frequent mention in the Scripture; called better than the Mosaical covenant, not for the matter of it, but for the manner of exhibition, chap. vii. 22, being comparatively a greater good than that which was less, Gal. iii. 17. Which was established upon better promises; which gospel covenant was νενομοθετήται, as the Mosaical one, confirmed, ratified, and established by the blood of the sacrifice according to the law, chap. ix. 18—21. This was its sanction, it was by it settled unchangeable, attended with and founded on the best promises, such as were more spiritual, clear, extensive, and universal, than those in the Mosaical covenant were.

7 <sup>i</sup> For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.

This proves the gospel covenant better than the Mosaical, for if it had not, there would have been no second. For if that first covenant had been faultless: that first covenant, of which Moses was the mediator, as to the administration of it, (as to the matter of it, it was the same from Adam throughout all ages,) was faulty; not because God made it, though it was a less perfect good than what succeeded it; it was able to save those who would rightly use it, and come unto Christ by it, Gal. iii. 24; but accidentally, by reason of the priests' faults, and people's sinfulness, it became wholly ineffectual to them for saving them; therefore the blame and fault of it is charged on them, ver. 8. Then should no place have been sought for the second: the question here is vehemently assertive; if that covenant in its Mosaical administration had reached effectually its end, brought all that were under it to Christ, to be saved by him, no place nor room was there, that then being so perfect, for another to succeed it, God would have rested there; but his excellent wisdom and counsel determined to put in being the second, and to set it in the place of the first, that was faulty, and which was to be abrogated by it, Gal. iii. 21.

8 For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah:

This is the proof of the faultiness of the Mosaical covenant, from the right cause of it, those who did abuse it. For finding fault with them: the Lord, by the prophet Jeremiah, being distasted and offended, accuseth, and with complaints and aggravations chargeth the houses of Israel and Judah, both priests and people, for frustrating God's covenant with them by their unbelief, mistaking God's mind in it, and using it to justify them, and not bring them unto Christ, who justifieth the ungodly. That the covenant was not faulty in itself, but only accidentally, is evident; for it was given to change hearts, though its spiritual efficacy was not so fully revealed, Deut. x. 16; xxx. 6; for Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, were saved by the right use of it. It did not bind them by works to obtain justification, for it was delivered with blood, which taught them it was to be had only by faith in Christ's blood. But when they would not be led to Christ by it, they were faulty, and not the covenant, and so they perished in their gainsaying. The administration of this covenant by men being so defective, he finds fault with them, and resolves on the change of the administration. Behold, the days come: Behold, imports attention to and observation of the rare, excellent, and important thing proposed in the word to the eye and mind of those for whom it was written, and to whom it is sent: so is this here, in Jer. xxxi. 31; the days of the Messiah's coming in the flesh, when a woman shall compass a man, as Jer. xxxi. 22; the known times of grace, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. A time to come when the prophet wrote it, past when the apostle quotes it here; so ordered by God to teach those there the imperfection of that covenant administration, so as they might make out to Christ by it, and not rest in it, as he had revealed him to them in the prophecy; and to strengthen believers in their faith in Christ when come, and to convince and leave inexcusable such Jews as would not believe in him, and further to confirm his priesthood. Saith the Lord: this is not an invention of the prophet, but a revelation of the Supreme Lord to him. It is his certain, true, and infallible speech, illuminating his mind by it, and directing him in his words and writings for to convey it to those to whom he sent him; so that the word is firm, and worthy of all acceptance; and the more of the Hebrews, because sent by Jeremiah, a Levitical priest, to them. I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: I will make perfect and complete. In the prophet it is יכתיב I will strike or cut, because in covenant-making the sacrifices were cut asunder; and thence is it transferred figuratively, to signify covenant-making. A covenant, for form and manner of administration, second, later, better, stronger, and more excellent than the Mosaic; such as should be effectual to God's saving ends in the ministry of Christ, with the whole seed of Jacob, the visible church of God, when the prophet wrote this, divided into two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, and that of Israel removed afar off by the Assyrian, and seemingly lost, but by this covenant to be made one people again, and to be saved by Christ, David their King, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii. 21—28.

<sup>h</sup> 2 Cor. 3. 6, 8, 9. ch. 7. 22.
<sup>i</sup> Or, Testament.

<sup>k</sup> Jer. 31. 31, 32, 33, 34.

9 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

The Spirit proceedeth to show the form of the covenant denied. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers; not the same covenant for habit or form, nor any like unto the same for the manner of its administration, as was made by the Lord with the Hebrews their progenitors, when they were strangers in Egypt, and under great bondage there. In the day when I took them by the hand; the day that I laid my hand on them, and took hold of theirs, even the last day of the four hundred and thirty years foretold to Abraham Gen. xv. 13, 16; compare Exod. xii. 40, 41; as a father takes hold of his child to pluck it out of danger. It is a metaphor setting out God's special act of providence, in their miraculous deliverance out of Egypt, keeping them in his hand, while he was smiting their enemies; setting them at liberty, and then striking covenant with them, and binding them by it to be his obedient people, as such redemption mercy did deserve. At which time the covenant was unlike the promise or gospel one for external habit and form only, as carried on by a ceremonial law and priesthood, over which Christ's was to have the pre-eminence for power and efficacy of administration. Because they continued not in my covenant; these unbelieving Hebrews, under that administration of the covenant, continued not faithful to it, as by their own word and consent they bound themselves to it, but apostatized from God and his truth, Deut. v. 27. The word used by the prophet נִשְׁכַּח signifieth the breaking and making void the covenant. The administration of it did not hold them in close to God, but they frustrated all God's ordinances, turned idolaters, forsook the Lord, and worshipped the gods of the nations round about. And I regarded them not; אֵינִי אֶחָדָה, I took no care of them, I did neither esteem nor regard them, but cast them off from being my people for their lewd, treacherous covenant-breaking with me; they would not return unto me, and I rejected them from being my people, or a people as they were before. Who knows where the nine tribes and the half are? and in what a dispersed, shattered condition are the remaining Jews to this day! The apostle in this follows the Septuagint, who read the effect of their sin, their rejection, for what was their sin itself, which by the prophet is expressed נִשְׁכַּח אֲנִי לְיְהוָה should I be a Lord or Husband to them; which is an aggravation of their sin from God's dominion over them or marriage-relation to them; yet did they break his marriage-covenant with them according to their lewd and whorish heart: see Ezek. xvi., xxiii. But in this quotation by the apostle, and translation of the Septuagint, it is a metonymy of the effect for the cause, to reject, cast off, or neglect them for their treachery to him in their marriage-covenant, which was the true cause of it. The verb itself נִשְׁכַּח may signify to neglect or despise; and so Kimchi reads it, Jer. iii. 1, and is so rendered in this place by other rabbies, and so it signifieth in other languages. Saith the Lord: this is God's irrevocable word, used four times by the prophet, Jer. xxxi. 31—34, and three times repeated by the apostle here, as proper only to the Lord; none can speak so truly, certainly, infallibly, as he.

1ch. 10. 16.

10 For <sup>1</sup>this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will † put my laws into their mind, and write them || in their hearts: and <sup>m</sup>I will be to them a <sup>m</sup> God, and they shall be to me a people: n Zech. 8. 8.

+ Gr. gicc.

† Or. wp.

For this is the covenant that I will make: for, showeth it should not be such a covenant-form as was given on Mount Sinai, it being wholly different, and that denied before, being carnal and ceremonious, full of types and shadows, and through their sin ineffectual to them. This is the firm administration of the covenant which I will strike. To which three words answer is in this scripture, I will perfect, make, and dispose; which last is the root from whence the notion of a covenant in the Greek is derived, διαθηκομαι. With the house of Israel: Israel is the comprehensive name of all the twelve tribes, as ver. 8; compare Exod. xvi. 31; xl. 38; and is so used by the Lord himself, Matt. x. 6, and by Peter, Acts ii. 36. After those days; in the prophet it is, after those days of their delivery from Babylon, Jer. xxxi. 1, 8, 11, 16, 21, but especially when those days of the first administration of the covenant are accomplished, when the fulness of time for the Messiah's revelation is come, Gal. iv. 4. To this God again puts his seal, he saith it. I will put my laws into their mind; the great God, the Redeemer himself, the infinitely wise, and good, and powerful Spirit, who only can reach the soul, will make impressions, and write clear characters of Divine truth on it, 2 Cor. iii. 3. None can alter, new-mould, frame, and temper a spirit, but him, who hath a true original right of all the good he promiseth, which he will freely, graciously dispense from himself, John iv. 10, 14. All the doctrines of the gospel, which include in them the moral law, as now managed by Christ, all the will of God concerning our salvation, promises, and commands; and these in their spirit and power, which God not only ratified in, but conveyed to the world by, Jesus Christ, and especially into the mind. Διάνοιαν renders the Hebrew בְּרִיָּה the inward parts, in the prophet's text. The mind or understanding being the innermost part of the soul, is capable of receiving impresses of Divine truth, and its characters are by it made legible to the soul; which as promised here, is so prayed for by the apostle, Eph. i. 17, 18. And write them in their hearts: ἐπιγράψω is a metaphor setting out a real, actual, powerful work of the Spirit of Christ, which leaveth the express characters of all God's saving mind and will upon the heart or soul as plain as writing upon paper, or engraving upon stones; such an operation of the Spirit of Christ on the souls of them, as whereby is conveyed into them a new light, life, power, so that they are made by it partakers of a Divine nature; and though they are not other faculties, yet they are quite other things than they were for qualities and operations, so as they are enabled to know, observe, and keep his laws, which are set up in authority and dominion in their souls, ruling and ordering all there, Ezek. xi. 19, 20; xxxvi. 26, 27; 2 Cor. iii. 3, 8, 9, 10, 18. And I will be to them a God: as in the former word was the promise of conversion, regeneration, and renovation, so joined with it is the promise of adoption. In which God engageth in Christ to be to penitent believers, Rom. ix. 6, 8, a God, i. e. the cause and author of all good, Gen. xv. 7; xvii. 1, 7; what he is, hath, or can do for them of good, is all theirs, and himself terminating all the knowledge, faith, and worship of them. He will exercise all his wisdom, power, and goodness to deliver them from all evil, and to make them eternally happy and blessed in himself. And they shall be to me a people; and to him this true Israel shall be a true, spiritual, eternal, adopted seed and people, partakers of all that he hath promised to them or they can desire of him; so as their name is better than the name of sons or daughters, an everlasting one, not to be cut off, Isa. lvi. 5. They, as his people, attend on, witness to, and contend for, him and his glory, are always at his beck, being purchased, made, and covenant-ed so for his use and service, that they are not their own, but wholly at his disposal, Jer. xxiii. 7; xxxii. 20; Ezek. xi. 20; xxxvii. 23, 27; Zech. viii. 8; 2 Cor. vi. 16.

11 And <sup>n</sup>they shall not teach every n Isa. 54. 13. man his neighbour, and every man his John 6. 45. brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all 1 John 2. 27. shall know me, from the least to the greatest.

And they shall not teach: the subject implied in the plural verb, and by a partitive participle expressed, they, and every man, is in Jeremiah's text  $\omega\sigma\alpha$  a man, even every truly covenanted one who hath the knowledge of the Lord. And they shall teach no more, in Jer. xxxi. 34. A double negative supplieth it in this verse,  $\epsilon\ \mu\eta$  denying that weak and fruitless kind of teaching which was under the Mosaical covenant administration, whereby souls were not savingly edified in the knowledge of God, there was imperfection both in their knowledge and teaching, which should not be under the gospel. Every man his neighbour; such as are nearer to each other in society or commerce, a fellow citizen; or are near by relation, by nature or alliance, by consanguinity or affinity, one near at hand, ignorant of the Lord; and that needs instruction, one capable and possible to be taught. Saying, Know the Lord: this intimates the manner of teaching denied, a formal, customary way of teaching, saying; it was proverbial with them; and so was the matter of it, Know the Lord; as they used to say. The temple of the Lord, Jer. vii. 4. The burden of the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 34. The day of the Lord, Amos v. 18: or otherwise, not to teach them to know the Lord notionally only, without any influence on their heart, without believing, loving, fearing, or obeying him, 1 John ii. 3, 4; or to teach them to know the Lord, as redeeming and delivering of them out of Egypt, or out of the land of the north, that is, bringing them back from their captivity in Babylon, as they were taught, Exod. xx. 2; Jer. xxiii. 7, 8; but as delivering them from sin, the curse, wrath, and hell. Or, they shall not teach one another so darkly, slenderly, and imperfectly in the meaning of types, shadows, and ceremonies, that they might know the Lord in truth, and worship him according to his mind; or to take so much pains to instruct them concerning the Lord and his worship, as they took with the Gentiles when they proselyted them. For all shall know me, from the least to the greatest; for under the gospel administration all the covenanted ones, the infant in the church and the aged, Isa. lxxv. 20, all ages in Christ, children, fathers, and young men, as 1 John ii. 12—14, young and old, shall have his laws put into their minds, and written on their hearts, the true saving knowledge of him in Christ in the fulness of it, as Isa. xi. 9: they shall so perfectly know him, as not to depart from him; he shall be theirs and they his by an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; by the plentiful effusion of his Spirit in all the gifts and graces of it through his gospel institutions on them; they shall be so enlightened in gospel truths, that they shall know their duties, and perform them, as if they were immediately enlightened from above, rather than by the common methods of teaching by his word; that they shall not need so much cautioning, threatening, correcting as they did under the law; but shall entirely cleave to him, without a disposition to revolt.

12 For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness: this for states the cause of all the former acts promised in the gospel covenant, as regenerating, illuminating, adopting, and God's gracious removing all sins that might hinder the communication of these and all other good to his covenanted ones; God, in and by the administration of this covenant, ratified by his blood, propitiating him, will of his free mercy pardon, blot out, and take away, chap. ii. 17, and thereby free them from the guilt, power, and punishment of their original and actual unrighteousness; implying his reconciliation to, and free acceptance of, their persons in Jesus Christ, on whose account it is he dealeth so graciously with them in all things, Isa. lv. 7—9; 1 John iv. 9. And their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more; all the breaches of God's law by commissions or omissions, whatever they may be for number or for aggravation, he will always through Christ save his covenanted ones from them all, Matt. i. 21; Rom. iii. 21—26. All of these shall not only be for the present blotted out, but his mercy will be so great and certain through Christ, that he will neither punish them for them, nor charge them to them; he will abundantly pardon, and for ever take them away, so as if they be sought for they shall not be found, chap. x. 3, 14; Isa. xliiii. 25; Micah vii. 18 19. And when he forgets their sins, he will have their persons in everlasting remembrance, Psal. cxii. 6.

13 In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old: the inference from what was before said, ver. 8. (in the Lord's saying this by the prophet Jeremiah, that he would make a new covenant, for form and manner of administration later and better, even the last and best he will make, and in which he will have penitent, believing sinners to acquiesce,) is this, That the Mosaical one, though first in respect of the gospel, hath lost its power, strength, and vigour, its binding force; and so, by God's instituting another, is abrogated, as useless, needless, and imperfect. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away; this Mosaical one, thus grown old, weak, and decrepit, and by the institution of the new gospel covenant abrogated, may continue for a while, but in no force; and so gradually moulder and decay by little and little, till it at last vanish and totally cease. It was near to it upon finishing of the ministry of the gospel High Priest on earth, when by his death he fulfilled the truth of this typical one, and so virtually nullified it; and, as to its binding force, vanished, when the gospel was published throughout the world, Rom. x. 16—18; compare 2 Cor. v. 17; as is owned by the apostolical synod, Acts xv. It was high time for these Hebrews to cease from that vanishing Mosaical one, and effectually to close with the gospel priesthood and covenant, which must remain and continue for ever; see Dan. ix. 24, 26, 27; which if they did not, must end in the total destruction of them, their temple and city, which came to pass not many years after the apostle wrote this Epistle

CHAP. IX.

The service and sacrifices of the first tabernacle were far less perfect and efficacious to purge the conscience than the blood of Christ, 1—14. The necessity of Christ's death for the confirmation of the new covenant, 15—22; and of better sacrifices than those legal ones to purify the heavenly things, 23, 24. Christ was offered once for all, 25—28.

THEN verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary.

The Holy Spirit, from ver. 1 of this chapter, to ver. 18 of chap. x., is illustrating his two last arguments taken from the tabernacle and covenant administrations, about which both the Aaronical priests and the gospel High Priest did minister; in both which Christ hath beyond all comparison the pre-eminence, which the Spirit proves by an argument drawn a comparatio, of the tabernacle and service of the Aaronical priests, and the tabernacle and work of Christ. He beginneth with a proposition of the adjuncts of the first covenant from ver. 1—10. The three particles introducing it,  $\mu\epsilon\nu$ ,  $\epsilon\nu$ , and  $καί$ , agree, the one in connecting, the other demonstrating, and the last in asserting, that which followeth to depend on what went before, as, And then truly the first. The first covenant:  $\acute{\eta}\ \pi\rho\acute{\omega}\tau\eta$  is an ellipsis, nothing is in the Greek text joined with it, though some Greek copies add  $\sigmaκην\acute{\eta}$ , the first tabernacle; but this is to make the same thing a property of itself, and it is absurd to read, the first tabernacle had a tabernacle; it is therefore better supplied from that which first relates to in ver. 7, 13 of chap. viii., viz. the Mosaical covenant administration, which had or possessed, as its proper adjuncts, even those three distinct ones following. Had also ordinances;  $\delta\iota\kappa\alpha\iota\acute{\omega}\mu\alpha\tau\alpha$ , we read ordinances; others, ceremonies or rites. It is derived from a passive verb, and may signify, a righteous sentence or ordinance of God, or a righteous event that answers that law or decree, as Rom. viii. 4. In the plural it notes juris, the laws of God, but especially here the ceremonial laws, those just constitutions for ministry which God gave by Moses to the Aaronical priesthood. Of divine service;  $\lambda\alpha\tau\rho\upsilon\sigma\iota\alpha\varsigma$ , which our translators make of the genitive case singular; but this is repugnant to the next words

o Rom. 11.
27.
ch. 10. 17.

1 Or.
ceremonies.
a Ex. 25. 8.

connected to it, which should strictly be of the same case; it is therefore best rendered in the accusative case plural, and by apposition to ordinances, and so is read services or worship, which because it refers to God, our translators have added to it the word Divine. How various this worship was in the ministry of the high priest and ordinary priests, the apostle sheweth afterward, and therefore most properly to be rendered services. And a worldly sanctuary: τὸ ἀγίον was the sanctuary where these services were performed, called the holy, from its relation to God and his service. It consisted of two tabernacles, as is described, ver. 2, 3. It is styled κοσμικόν, being externally decent, beautiful, and glorious, as is evident by its description, Exod. xxvi. Made it was after God's own model, a mystical structure, and a type of a better; yet though that were so pleasing to the eye of the world, its materials were, like it, frail, brittle, and passing away, as things made with hands make way for better, ver. 24.

2<sup>b</sup> For there was a tabernacle made; the first, <sup>c</sup> wherein was <sup>d</sup> the candlestick, and <sup>e</sup> the table, and the shewbread; which is called || the sanctuary.

For there was a tabernacle made: the Spirit descends to a particular account of the three former adjuncts to the covenant, beginning with the last, the sanctuary; which being glorious, he advanceth the glory of Christ from the place of his ministry above it. For is demonstrative of what was asserted ver. 1, the first visible habitation that God had amongst men, 2 Sam. vii. 6, as a token of his gracious presence with them. This tabernacle consisted of three parts, of the court where stood the brazen altar of burnt offerings, the brazen laver for the priests to wash the sacrifices in, and to purify themselves when they came and offered them upon the altar, Exod. xxvii. 1, &c.; xxx. 17—21; xxxviii. 1—20; xl. 28—33. This court the Holy Ghost here leaves out. Separated from this court by a veil was the first tent or tabernacle, called the sanctuary, or holy place, where the priest did the daily service, which is called the first, Exod. xxvi. 36; xl. 22—29. Inward of this, and separated by a veil, was the holy of holiest, where the ark was, and where the high priest only entered once a year, Exod. xxv. 10, 22; xl. 20, 21. This tabernacle was according to God's pattern and command, prepared, finished, and reared up by Moses, Exod. xl. The first; the sanctuary, or holy place, separated by one veil from the holy of holiest, and from the court by another, had in it the following sacred utensils. The candlestick; for matter and form answering God's pattern, as Exod. xxv. 31, 40; xxxvii. 17, 25; xl. 24, 25. It was of pure gold, and of six branches artificially wrought, by which was typified that Spirit of light which Christ giveth to the true tabernacle, his body mystical, the church wherein God dwelleth, not unusually set out by lamps, Rev. iv. 5. And by reason of that light is the church set out by the emblem of candlesticks, Rev. i. 4, 12, 13, 20. The table; for matter, of plates of pure gold covering the shittim wood, and a crowning verge of gold round it, Exod. xxv. 23—20; xxxvii. 10—16; xl. 22, 23. Most excellent for its spiritual use, setting out Christ in all his excellencies, well stored and furnished for his; which the Jews by their unbelief and profaneness made contemptible, Mal. i. 7. The shewbread was twelve cakes made and set on the table, new every sabbath day in the morning, and when taken away were to be eaten by the priests only, Exod. xxv. 30; xl. 23; Lev. xxiv. 5—9. However, on David's necessity God dispensed with that law, and allowed him to eat of it, Mark ii. 26. This was an emblem of God's provision for the twelve tribes, the type of his church; and the bestowing on them the bread of life from heaven, the all-sufficient food for them, John vi. 32—58; compare Col. ii. 16, 17. Which is called the sanctuary; which first tabernacle was called the holy place or sanctuary, being relatively so, as God's tent, and no otherwise, so is it styled by the Spirit, Exod. xxvi. 33.

3<sup>f</sup> And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all;

And after the second veil: this distinguisheth the second tabernacle from the first; for, passing through it to the end of it, there hung up a curious veil made of blue, purple, scarlet, and fine twined linen, with figures of cherubims, Exod. xxvi. 31, 32; xxxvi. 35, 36; xl. 21. The mystery of which is interpreted after, ver. 8: see chap. vi. 19. A veil noteth distance and obscurity; or, covering, opposite to that which is open and free. The tabernacle which is called the holiest of all: behind this veil was the second tabernacle, called the holy of holiest, Exod. xxvi. 33, by God himself, which did really, though typically, hold out the place of God's special appearance for propitiation and gracious answers of peace to the desires of his people in the Lord Jesus; applied afterwards to heaven itself, the holiest of all, where the High Priest is entered for us, and sits at the right hand of his Father, making intercession for us, chap. vi. 19, 20; vii. 25; ix. 24; x. 19.

4 Which had the golden censer, and <sup>g</sup> the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein <sup>h</sup> was the golden pot that had manna, and <sup>i</sup> Aaron's rod that budded, and <sup>k</sup> the tables of the covenant;

Which had the golden censer; in the holy of holiest was reserved the golden censer, on which the high priest put the incense when annually he entered there, (see Lev. xvi. 12, 13,) that the cloud of it might cover the mercy-seat, and so was kept for that service in it: see Joseph. Antiq. lib. 3. 7. Many would refer this to the golden altar of incense that stood before the veil in the holy place, Exod. xxx. 6—8; and so they read it, having the golden altar of incense before it for its service, and not within it; signifying the Godhead, by which Christ maketh his intercession, sanctifying and perfuming his own, and all offerings made in his name. And the ark of the covenant; it was a coffer or chest of shittim wood, plated all over with gold, Exod. xxv. 10—22; xxxvii. 1, 6; xl. 20, 21. This chest had for its cover a mercy-seat, listed or verged with a crown of gold round it; and is called the ark of the covenant, because the tables of testimony were laid up in it, Exod. xxv. 16; xl. 20; those two stone tables wrought by Moses, and carried up into the mount, (after he had on the idolatry of Israel broken those of God's own making, and on which God had written the ten laws, the terms of his covenant with them,) on which God wrote afresh his laws, and renewed his covenant with them, Exod. xxxiv. 1, 2, 28, 29; compare chap. xxxi. 18. This ark was a type of Christ interposing between God and us, who had broken the covenant of his laws. Wherein was the golden pot that had manna; ἐν ᾗ, wherein, refers not to the ark mentioned just before, for in it was nothing put but the two tables of the covenant; but the tabernacle, called the holy of holiest, in which was reserved the golden censer, pot of manna, provided by God's charge before the giving of the law, and laid up afterwards in that archive by God's order, Exod. xvi. 32—34. This manna was the bread God fed Israel in his church with forty years in the wilderness, and is called angels' food, Psal. lxxviii. 25; a type of Christ the true bread, that God gave from heaven to his church, John vi. 31—58. And Aaron's rod that budded; which was by God's order put before the testimony in the holy of holiest, and not into the ark, for it was to be in view there as a token of the true priesthood, the type of Christ's, against all after-murmurers and usurpers: see Numb. xvii. 1—11. And the tables of the covenant; and as these, the urn of manna and rod of Aaron, were in the holy of holiest; so especially the two tables of the covenant were there too, but laid up in the ark which was in that place: see 1 Kings xvii. 9; 2 Chron. v. 10. Others think the preposition ἐν is to be read, by which, or about, near which ark, as it is used of Christ's sitting ἐν δεξιᾷ, chap. i. 3; and so notes, as to the pot of manna and Aaron's rod, an apposition of them to or by the ark, when the tables of the covenant were undeniably put into it.

5 And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercyseat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; on the cover of the ark at each end was a cherub of beaten gold; these and the cover of the ark were all of

<sup>b</sup> Ex. 26. 1.
<sup>c</sup> Ex. 26. 35.
<sup>d</sup> Ex. 25. 31.
<sup>e</sup> Ex. 25. 23.
<sup>f</sup> Lev. 24. 6.
<sup>g</sup> Ex. 26. 35.
<sup>h</sup> Ex. 25. 16.
<sup>i</sup> Num. 17. 10.
<sup>k</sup> Ex. 25. 16, 21, & 34. 29.
<sup>l</sup> 40. 20.
<sup>m</sup> Deu. 10. 2, 5.

1 Kings 8. 9, 21. 2 Chron. 5. 10.

<sup>f</sup> Ex. 26. 31, 33, & 40. 3.
<sup>g</sup> 21. ch. 6. 19.

1 Ex. 25. 18, 22. 1. v. 16.
2. 1 Kings 8. 6, 7.

one piece, they had their feet on the ledge of the cover, or its crown, at each end; their faces looked towards each other, and their wings touched each other in the extreme part of them, and so on the cover formed the mercy-seat; see Exod. xxv. 17—22; and xxxvii. 6—9; xl. 20. Their form is described by Ezekiel, chap. i. and x. They were glorious for matter and service, God in his glory manifesting himself over them, gave propitious answers unto Moses about his church, Exod. xxv. 22; Lev. xvi. 2. These cherubims typified the ministry of angels to our Lord Jesus, especially in his great work of rendering God propitious to his church, and saving it, chap. i. 14. Standing on the two ends of the ark's cover, they showed Christ to be the basis of their own standing, when others fell: they spread out their wings, to show their readiness for serving him in all; with their faces opposite to each other, and looking down on the mercy-seat and ark, typifying what the apostle saith of them, 1 Pet. i. 10—12, desirous to pry into the mystery of this great Propitiator, the Surety and Mediator of God's testament, and on his propitiation and its effects, which is admirable and astonishing, not to sinners only, but to angels, Eph. iii. 10. Of which we cannot now speak particularly; the apostle apologizeth for his but mentioning these mysterious things now, that it was not to eclipse the glory of that administration, but because the matters were well known to them already, only in this they were defective, that they reached not after Christ, the truth and substance of all these types; and therefore he proceeds from the places, to treat of the services to be performed by the Aaraonical priesthood in them.

6 Now when these things were thus ordained, <sup>m</sup> the Priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God.

<sup>m</sup> Num. 28.
<sup>3.</sup> Dan. 8. 11.

The Spirit now proceeds to the second adjunct of the Mosaical administration, having stated the places of them, even the Aaraonical priests' services in them. Now when these things were thus ordained; when the tabernacles were made and reared, and the utensils rightly disposed in them, and all things set in God's own order, now the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; into the holy place or sanctuary within the first veil, described, ver. 2. Not only the high priest, but all the common priests, consecrated by God's order to their work; every one in his daily course, constantly performing, and completely acting, all the services enjoined on them by God to be done there, as to put on the shew-bread, and to eat what they took off, Exod. xxv. 30; Lev. xxiv. 5—9; to keep the lights in the candlestick, supplying it with oil, and clearing the lights, Exod. xxv. 37, 38; xxvii. 20, 21; xxx. 7, 8; Numb. viii. 2, 3; to burn incense on the golden altar before the ark: the priests took a censer, and filled it with fire from the altar of burnt sacrifice, and then came to the altar of incense before the veil, and there put the incense on the fire in the censer; during the evaporating of which, the people in the court were pouring out their prayers for pardon, each person by himself; see Exod. xxx. 1—9, 34—36; xl. 26, 27; Luke i. 9, 10; even all the ordinances of worship commanded by God, did the priests perform in it. All which services in the holy place do but typify the true services in the gospel church, of all made priests by the blood of Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9; Rev. i. 5, 6; v. 9, 10; offering prayers and praises to God continually in the name of Christ, perfumed with the incense of his merits, Mal. i. 11; compare Rev. viii. 3; obtaining thereby the light of his grace through his Spirit, and the bread of life, till they are perfected by their great High Priest, and carried into the holy of holiest, there to be praising and enjoying God in him for ever, as he hath prayed for them, and promised to them, John xiv. 2, 3; xvii. 20, 21.

7 But into the second went the High Priest alone <sup>n</sup> once every year, not without blood, <sup>o</sup> which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people:

<sup>n</sup> Ex. 30. 10.
<sup>Lev.</sup> 16. 2.
<sup>11, 12, 13, 34.</sup>
<sup>ver.</sup> 25.
<sup>o</sup> ch. 5. 3.
<sup>8</sup> & 7. 27.

This verse contains the special anniversary of the high priest alone in the inward tabernacle, the holy of holiest, of which you have the law, Exod. xxx. 14; Lev. xvi. 2, &c. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year; into this place the high priest was to enter once a year only, and every year to repeat it, as Exod. xxx. 10, upon the atonement day, being the tenth day of the month Tisri, the seventh month in their ecclesiastical year, and the first of their civil; that day was he to enter several times into that place, first for himself, Lev. xvi. 11—14, and then for the people, ver. 15, 16, &c., carrying in the blood first within the veil, and then coming out again, and carrying in the incense on the golden censer: none of the other priests were to enter into the holy place while he was ministering, but him alone, as Lev. xvi. 17. Not without blood: when he first entered into the holiest of all, it was with the blood of a young bull, of a ram, Lev. xvi. 3, 14, with the blood of the he-goat, ver. 15, 27. After he had offered the incense on his golden censer, ver. 4, he must sprinkle the blood upon the mercy-seat and before it, by which expiatory blood there was made an atonement, ver. 12—14. Which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people; first, for his sinful self and family, Lev. xvi. 11, and then for the ignorances, incogitancies, errors, and all sorts of sins committed by the people, ver. 16; chap. vii. 27; all of them being committed with some error of the understanding. Which type, in all its parts, was perfectly fulfilled in Christ, the gospel High Priest, as is shown in the following verses; whereby not only his office, but his services, are transcendently set above, and preferred to, all the Aaraonical ones.

8 <sup>p</sup> The Holy Ghost this signifying, <sup>q</sup> the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing:

The Holy Ghost this signifying; God the Spirit himself, the third relation in the Deity, the author of all the Mosaical institutions, who commanded all these ritual, ceremonial services in this tabernacle to be performed, who revealed all this to Moses, and who inspired him with it, Lev. xvi. 1, 2, the most infallible interpreter of his own institutions, declared by these signals and types, and demonstrated by the frame of ordinances, then given to the church, in these expressions, Exod. xxx. 10; Lev. xvi. 2, 12—15, 17: the veil ever covering the holy of holiest, but only on the day of expiation, when it was drawn aside, and that laid open. That the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest; the true and very means to God's presence in heaven itself, which is only by Christ the great High Priest, through whose blood we can come to the throne of his grace there boldly, chap. x. 19—22, and by the perfect work of his Spirit on us, can enter with him into the holy of holiest in heaven; this was not so plainly, clearly, fully, universally known as afterwards by the shedding of Christ's blood, and the revelation of it in the gospel to all the world. Christ was revealed to the Hebrews, and all these ceremonial ordinances did hold him out, and by him only the saints under that covenant administration got to heaven; yet the manifestation of it was obscure in comparison of what it is since. While as the first tabernacle was yet standing; while the Mosaical covenant administration was to continue, till the coming of Christ in the flesh, and perfecting the work by his death, for the space of near one thousand five hundred years, was the true, right, and proper way for entering into heaven, darkly, and obscurely, and typically revealed unto the church; when by the death of Christ the veil of the holy of holiest was rent asunder, heaven laid open to be seen, and entered into by all penitent believing sinners through Christ, every day in their duties, and then in their persons, Matt. xxvii. 51.

9 Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, <sup>r</sup> that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience;

Which was a figure for the time then present: the tabernacle in all its parts, and the whole economy of it, was παραβολή, which signifieth the translation of a word or thing from its own natural signification to signify another, which thing so signified by it is commonly more excellent than itself, as the substance exceeds the shadow; equivalent it is to those terms of types, examples, figures of things to come: such are the tabernacle and its services, representations of things spiritual and Divine, and very imperfect shadows of them, serving only for that infant state of the church; and when its nonage was to expire by the coming of the truths themselves, then were they to expire too. The only time when the tabernacle administration was present, and no longer. In which were offered both gifts and sacrifices; in which tabernacle were performed services to the great God, whose tent it was, suitable to his person, and agreeable to his will, even gifts and sacrifices, as before described, chap. v. 1; viii. 3. That could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; they were all impotent as to the restoring of a sinner to God's favour by themselves; they could not reconcile him to God, preserve communion with him, nor bring them to happiness in him, chap. x. 3, 4; no perfect justifying, sanctifying could be had by any of them, though never so often repeated. They might do all to the letter which God required, absolving the worshipper as to the external part, but not at all according to the conscience; or they could not take the guilt of sin from the conscience as to themselves, but it would cry guilty still; neither could they remove the power of it, for it was under bondage to it still; neither could they take away the fears and terrors of it, but left it shaking under them and unquiet still, being abused by them as a veil to keep them from Christ the true Priest and sacrifice, when as types and shadows they should have led these worshippers to him.

<sup>r</sup> Gal. 3. 21.
<sup>ch.</sup> 7. 18, 19.
<sup>2</sup> 10. 1, 11.

10 Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation.

Having shown the typicalness, weakness of the Mosaical covenant administration, in respect of the tabernacles, services, and ordinances, he closeth his description of them in this verse, by showing their carnality and mortality. As they were external things, they could reach no further than the flesh only, as appears by particular instances, and therefore could not quiet the conscience, considered without Christ, nor justify, sanctify, or save the sinner. For meat and drink offerings, and meats clean and unclean, and drinks prohibited by God, in which the Jews placed much of their religion, separate from what they signified, commended no man unto God, 1 Cor. viii. 8. Which stood only in meats and drinks: as to meats, see Lev. xi.; Deut. xiv. 3—21. As to drinks, forbidden the priests, Lev. x. 9, and the Nazarites, Numb. vi. 2, 3; the jealousy water, Numb. v. 24, and the paschal cup, Psal. cxvi. 13, and cup of thank-offerings; see Lev. i. and ii. And divers washings, which were many for the priests in their services, and for others in performing theirs by them; some by sprinkling with blood. Exod. xxix. 20, 21, with water, Numb. viii. 7; xix. 9—19; some by washing at the brazen laver, as the priests, Exod. xxix. 4; xxx. 17—21; so the sprinkling of healed lepers, Lev. xiv. 4—9, and the purification of the unclean. All these were of God's own instituting, but still reach no further than the flesh or body of the sinner: see ver. 13. And carnal ordinances: other carnal rites and ceremonies, such as could not reach the conscience, as they used them, yet were to be used by them in obedience to God's will, and to discriminate them from others, which were various in the ceremonial law. Imposed on them; ἐπιτίθειν, imposed, may agree with δῶρα, ver. 9, gifts imposed; or may have the whole sentence for its substantive, as, being matters imposed or settled in meats and drinks. All these things were not the inventions of Moses, but God's own institutions, enjoined by his own authority on the Jewish church, to lead them by a regular use of them to life by Christ, but by their own corruptions were made burdens to them. The Divine precept obliged them to an observation of them, and to the serving God in, by, and through them. Until the time; as they were outward, bodily, and carnal things, so they were mortal; as to their being and continuance enjoined by God, they were μέχρι καιροῦ until is a term settled and limited, and not indefinite, and its limit is a singular time, even that point of time wherein Christ, having finished the work of redemption, ascended and sat down on the right hand of God, and powerfully thence breathed forth the Spirit of infallibility on his apostles, for guiding them in laying the foundation of his church, by preaching the gospel throughout the world, and perfecting of it, and no other. This the Jews and others expected from the Messiah, John iv. 25, in his time. All the New Testament perfecting was by them, and therefore they give a charge against the least alteration of the gospel, truth, and law, which they left as a rule for ordering of Christ's church to his last coming: see Matt. xxviii. 20. Of reformation; διορθώσεως, of putting things to rights by the law, rule, and ordinance of Christ, the work of this special point of time. He, the great church reformer, thoroughly righteth things to God-ward, by removing and taking away what was faulty, not in itself, but by man's abuse of it, even all the Mosaical economy and church-frame, which carried men about to God, by opening and making that to be seen with open face, which was well veiled, and so mistaken, even the mystery of Christ hid from ages, by manifesting and establishing that which was the truth itself, instead of the shadows that did but represent it; even that true church-frame intended first by God, and now fully revealed and settled by his Son as a standing rule and pattern to all for ever; which unmovable kingdom of his is described further, chap. xii. 22—28.

11 But Christ being come *an High Priest of good things to come, *by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;

But; the Spirit, by this adversative But, opposeth and applieth the truth to the type, and brings in view the anti-type, the office, tabernacle, sacrifice, and ministrations of Christ, which vastly exceedeth the Mosaical one. Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come; the High Priest preferred is no less person than God the Son manifested in the flesh, and anointed to his office with the Holy Ghost and power, Acts x. 38. In the fulness of time, before the antiquating and removing the former order, was he exhibited and consecrated the true High Priest, of which all the other were but types, and bringing with him all those good things which were figured and promised under that economy, all pardon, reconciliation, righteousness, holiness, adoption, and glorious salvation, which were under that dispensation to come, being present and exhibited with, as effected by, this High Priest at his first coming, but to be completed and perfected at his second, which is intimated, ver. 26, 28. By a greater and more perfect tabernacle; the anti-type of the Mosaical sanctuary and tabernacle, where there was the holy place, and the holy of holiest, correspondent to, and figured out by, these, was the more glorious sanctuary of this High Priest; he passeth through the tabernacle of his church on earth, of which he is the minister, as hath been cleared, ver. 10, and chap. viii. 2, and so enters into the heaven of heavens, the holiest of all, ver. 24, where God sits on his throne of grace. Tabernacle here cannot signify the body of Christ, for that is the sacrifice that answereth to the legal ones offered in the court, and without the gate, chap. xiii. 11—13, and with the blood of which he enters the holy of holiest as the high priest did, and he doth not pass through his flesh there, but carrieth it with him. The word ἐσθίωσεν, John i. 14, may not only refer to the Godhead's tabernacling in flesh, but that God the Son incarnate tabernacled in his church; those with whom Christ dwelt while on earth, for his human nature dwelt or had a tabernacle in this world as well as his Deity; and this is such a tabernacle where he in his whole person and his church may meet and communicate together. This tabernacle is greater than the Mosaical for quantity, as it refers to earth the place, even the whole world, where his church is dispersed, beyond all comparison larger than its type, which was a little limited and confined place; and more perfect than that, which was only made of boards, gold, silver, brass, silk, linen, skins, &c. This being a spiritual temple and tent, in which God will inhabit and dwell for ever, 1 Cor. iii. 9, 16, 17; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 12, 20—22; 1 Pet. ii. 5; it is far more glorious than that tabernacle, Hag. ii. 7—9. Not made with hands; what is hand-wrought, or made by men, is at the best mouldering and decaying; but this was wrought by the Spirit of God himself, most excellent for the quality, permanency of the materials, and work, Eph. ii. 22. Man had neither power

• Lev. 11. 2.
Col. 2. 16.
† Num. 19.
‡ 1. 7.
§ Eph. 2. 15.
¶ Col. 2. 31.
ch. 7. 16.
|| Or, rites,
or, ceremonies.

x ch. 3. 1.
y ch. 10. 1.
z ch. 8. 2.

nor skill to form, polish, frame, or pitch this, chap. viii. 2. Creation-work is God's work, as to the old and new creation. Hands may frame and pitch the other, and pluck it up; but he that worketh, frameth, raiseth, createth this, is God, 2 Cor. v. 5; Eph. ii. 20.

12 Neither <sup>a</sup> by the blood of goats and calves, but <sup>b</sup> by his own blood he entered in <sup>c</sup> once into the holy place, <sup>d</sup> having obtained eternal redemption for us.

From his office and sanctuary he proceeds to clear up his service. Neither by the blood of goats and calves; it was not about weak, typical, vanishing sacrifices, the blood of goats or young bulls, that he was concerned, as the Aaronical priests were, Lev. xvi. 14, 15, opened before, ver. 7; and this annually on the expiatory day, Lev. xvi. 29, 34; which could not satisfy injured justice, nor expiate sin, nor purge nor quiet the conscience of the offender, chap. x. 1-5. But by his own blood; but with his own pure, precious, and unspotted blood, 1 Pet. i. 19. Not a drop or few drops must go for it; then what dropped from his body in his agony, from his head pierced by thorns, from his back when whipped, from his hands and feet when nailed on the cross, might have done; but it must be his own life-blood, the blood of the Second Adam dying by it for the first, Rom. v. 8-20; Phil. ii. 6, 8. And as it is the blood of Adam, that it may have value enough and worth, it must be the blood of him who is God too, with his own blood, Acts xx. 28. This price surmounts all treasures, John vi. 51; x. 11, 15. He entered in once into the holy place; with this blood of the covenant he entered, immediately upon the breathing out of his soul on the cross, (the veil of the temple being rent asunder, and room made for the great High Priest to fulfil his type,) into the holy of holiest in heaven, where never angel came, nor any but himself, till his now piercing through, rending the veil, and laying it open, chap. x. 19; compare Isa. lvii. 15; and came with it to God's throne of justice there, and made the everlasting atonement for sin, and so turned it into a throne of grace, fulfilling his type, and as the high priest did before the sacrifice was burnt or consumed, Lev. xvi. For the expiation of sin was not deferred by Christ to his ascension, forty-five days after his death, but was immediately on his giving up the Ghost by him performed; and in this he fulfilled all righteousness, Matt. iii. 15. This is the once that he entered heaven for expiation, satisfying the injured justice of God by sin, fulfilled the law, and then publicly appeared at God's throne, to show all was complete, Luke xxiii. 43, 45, 46; John xix. 30. This once he did that which the high priest did annually typify, but could never accomplish for so many hundred years together, ver. 26, 28; chap. x. 10, 12, 14. By which it is evident that one. and once. refers to the shedding of his blood as a sacrifice, and presenting of it to the Father, as completing propitiation work at that once for ever. Having obtained eternal redemption for us; when he with the incense of his merit and prayer to the just and merciful Judge, even God his Father, sued for, found, obtained, and fully received eternal redemption for sinners; i. e. deliverance of their guilty persons from eternal death, full remission of all their sins, Rom. iii. 25, 26, full reconciliation to God, 2 Cor. v. 18, 19, 21, with an instating them into all spiritual good. This work is styled eternal, because its virtue is of perpetual continuance, which freeth the duly qualified subjects (Col. i. 21, 23) from the guilt and punishment of all sins for ever.

13 For if <sup>e</sup> the blood of bulls and of goats, and <sup>f</sup> the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh:

This service of Christ in his sanctuary exceeds the Aaronical, not only for reconciling souls to God, but purifying of them, as cleared in this and the 14th verse. For if the blood of bulls and of goats: the blood is the same as spoken of ver. 12. Bulls, here put for calves, are but to distinguish the sex; and it is to be noted, where our translators read oxen, as to sacrifices in the Old Testament, as particularly Numb. vii. 37, they mean bulls, for no oxen were by the law to be offered to God at all as sacrifices; see Lev. xxii. 17-23; because they could not be true types of the true sacrifice, which was to perfect them. This blood was sprinkled on the mercy-seat and before it, and on the altar, Lev. xvi. 14, 19, &c., expiating sins, and taking away the guilt and legal punishment. And the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean: the rite of preparing it, read in Numb. xix. 1-10. A red heifer was by the people given to the priest; he was to bring her without the camp, and order her to be slain, and then take the blood with his finger, and sprinkle it towards the tabernacle seven times; after which she was to be wholly burnt in his sight, with cedar wood, hyssop, and scarlet, the ashes of which were reserved; when they used them, they took them in a vessel, and put running water to them, and then sprinkled them with a bunch of hyssop on persons legally unclean, ver. 18-20, and so they purified them from their ceremonial filth and pollution; but none of these could purify an unclean soul, that was left unholy and unclean still. Sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; these sprinklings did sanctify those who were legally unclean, and did procure a legal purity and acceptance of them in the service of the sanctuary, from which else they were excluded; by this they were looked on as externally holy with the congregation, their flesh and outward man being made pure by it for their external worship.

14 How much more <sup>g</sup> shall the blood of Christ, <sup>h</sup> who through the eternal Spirit <sup>i</sup> offered himself without spot to God, <sup>j</sup> purge your conscience from <sup>k</sup> dead works to serve the living God?

How much more shall the blood of Christ? the question supposeth an unexpressible difference between Christ's purifying and the legal sacrifices. The blood with which he pierced within the veil to the throne in the highest heavens, on which sat the just God, the proper, precious, powerful blood of God the Son incarnate. Who through the eternal Spirit; who in his immortal soul obeying all God's will in suffering, did, through his own eternal God-head, to which both body and soul were united, and which sanctified the body offered, as the altar the sacrifice, Matt. xxiii. 19, which is called the spirit of holiness, Rom. i. 4, and gave value and virtue to the sacrifice, offer up his body a sacrifice for sin, when he died on the cross. Not sheep, bulls, goats, turtles, pigeons, &c., not man, nor the life of angels, were his sacrifice; but himself, pure, holy, and unpolluted, an innocent, harmless person, 2 Cor. v. 21. How much beyond his types for innocency and purity! Lev. xxii. 20, 21; Numb. xix. 2. Offered himself without spot to God: the offended, injured Creator and Judge of sinners, who constituted him to this whole work; and was by this most perfect sacrifice propitiated; his justice was satisfied, his law obeyed, and himself set fully free to pardon and forgive sinners without injustice; and to be just, as well as gracious and merciful, in doing of it, Rom. iii. 25, 26; and they might be put in possession of his favour, presence, and person again, as their own God, 1 Pet. iii. 18. Purge your conscience; though the sacrifice be over, the virtue and excellent causality of it doth abide, purging now as ever, not only justifying and absolving of a penitent believing sinner, but purifying and sanctifying the soul, procuring the Holy Spirit to renew it, and take away inherent corruption and infuse holiness into it, Eph. iv. 24, and making willing in the beauties of it, Psal. cx. 3; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Tit. iii. 5, 6; making body, soul, and spirit one frame of holiness to God, 1 Thess. v. 23. So as the most quick, lively, and sensible part of the immortal soul, conscious of sin, is freed from the guilt, filth, and fears of sin that did cleave to it; this thus purged, no consciousness of guilt remains, nor fear of punishment, but it is filled, from the interest it hath in this blood, and the work on it of this Spirit, full of joy and peace and righteousness by believing, Rom. v. 1, 2, 5, 11. From dead works; all operations of sin, which come from spiritually dead souls, and work eternal death, Eph. ii. 1, of which they are as insensible as dead men; all sorts of sin which do taint, pollute, and defile the soul, much more contagious, pestilent, and polluting the soul, than any of those things forbidden to be touched by Moses's law could the flesh, Numb. xix. 18: they are as offensive to God, and more, than carcasses are to us, and pestilential things, though themselves keeping souls from any communion with him. To serve the living God;

a ch. 10. 4.
b Acts 20. 28.
c Eph. 1. 7.
d Col. 1. 14.
e 1 Pet. 1. 19.
f Rev. 1. 5.
g & 5. 9.
h c Zech. 3. 9.
i ver. 26, 28. ch. 10. 10. d Dan. 9. 24.

g 1 Pet. 1. 19.
i John 1. 7.
Rev. 1. 5.
h Rom. 1. 4.
1 Pet. 3. 18.
i Eph. 2. 5.
Tit. 2. 14.
ch. 7. 27.
k ch. 7. 27.
l ch. 7. 27.

e Lev. 16.
f Num. 19.
g 2. 17, &c.

as under the law there was no coming to the congregation of the tabernacle without legal purifying, Numb. xix. 13, 20; so by this purifying correspondent to the type, souls are quickened, have boldness and confidence God-ward in point of duty, present themselves living sacrifices, Rom. xiii. 1, aim at him through their whole life; that he delights to keep up communion with them proportioned to himself. till he fit them for their complete serving and enjoying of him in the holy of holiest in heaven.

15 <sup>n</sup> And for this cause <sup>o</sup> he is the mediator of the new testament, <sup>p</sup> that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, <sup>q</sup> they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament: as Christ's priesthood and service, his sacrifice and purifying, so the testamental covenant, and his administration of it, did incomparably exceed all those of Aaron's; so that for what was spoken, ver. 14, even the effects of his sacrifice, the justification and sanctification of sinners, is he the great gospel High Priest, the mediating person between God and sinners, confirming and making effectual by his death God's testamental covenant to them, which is for the administration of it the very best and last, in which God bequeatheth pardon, reconciliation, righteousness, holiness, adoption, and heirship to an eternal inheritance to penitent, believing sinners. That by means of death; the death of Christ himself, God-man, the most excellent sacrifice, without which there could be no remission, ver. 22, nor the testament of God about it put in force; for which cause he was the Mediator of it, that they should value him so much the more for his death, fulfilling therein all his types, and reach that which was unattainable by these, both for their fathers and themselves. For the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament; for the satisfying the justice of God for the wrong their sins had done it, paying that price without which they could not be expiated, by which they were remissible, and to the duty qualified, actually forgiven, even the sins of those who were under the Mosaical administration of the covenant. Aaron, Samuel, David, and the saints, believers in that time, had their transgressions pardoned by virtue of the death of Christ to come, shadowed by those sacrifices typifying him and his death in their own times. What the death of beasts or birds could do for them, his did, delivering them from the guilt and punishment of their transgressions, under which otherwise they must have perished for ever: this Peter publisheth, Acts xv. 11. This virtue of Christ's death is not mentioned exclusive of New Testament sins being remitted by it; but if it did expiate those old ones, reaching so much backward, even to Aaron, it will much more expiate those under the New Testament to penitent, believing, praying sinners for it, as those Old Testament transgressors were. They which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance: such as on God's call repent and believe on the Lord Jesus, that Angel of the covenant then revealed to them, and enter into covenant with him, Exod. xxiii. 20—23; compare 1 Cor. x. 3, 4, 9; John v. 45—47; such as by it have sins expiated, consciences purged, so as to have a title to and fitness by the work of the Spirit for the heavenly Canaan, Rom. iv. 16, 24, 25; may be put into the possession of that eternal inheritance made over to them by promise, and which the Spirit gave them an earnest of here, chap. xii. 10, 14, 16; compare Eph. i. 13, 14; 1 Pet. i. 3, 4. All this is confirmed to these by Christ's death.

16 For where a testament is, there must also of necessity || be the death of the testator.

For where a testament is: for gives the reason of the Mediator's death, even the putting the called into the possession of the bequeathed inheritance, demonstrated by a common, natural law in all nations of the testament's effect on the testator's death; a testament being a disposition by will nuncupative, or written, of either goods or lands. which are the person's own, to be the right and possession of others after his death, whom he nominateth in it: such in proportion is the new covenant, where God gives freely all spiritual good things with a heavenly inheritance, as legacies to all his called ones in Christ, by this last and best will and testament of his, written in his Scripture instrument, witnessed by the prophets and apostles, sealed by the two sacraments, especially the Lord's supper, Luke xxii. 20. There must also of necessity be the death of the testator; he who maketh a testament by the law of nature, as of nations, must die before the legatees have any profit by the will; the son and heir inherit not but on the father's death; then is the testament firm and valid, the time being come for the heir's inheriting, and for the will's execution, it being now unalterable; the necessity of which is cleared, ver. 17.

17 For <sup>r</sup> a testament is of force after <sup>s</sup> Gal. 3. 15. men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

For a testament is of force after men are dead: the testator being by death disseised of his goods and lands, the right takes place of the legatees, and the time of their challenging it; such a sacred tie there is upon the surviving, that none can of right add to it, alter, or disannul it. Otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth; it is of no force while the maker of it liveth, because they have need of the things bequeathed; they can alter and change it, and by the will itself it is declared none shall have any right to the things bequeathed in it till the testator be dead. The consequent of all this is, that the Testator of the new testament must put it in force by death; and his death is of greater force to confirm his testament than that of men, because his will can never be violated, it being a Divine constitution, but the human testament may. Christ, God-man, after death, as Testator, and puts the testament in force; and by breaking the bonds of death, doth gloriously effect that the legatees perform the conditions required in the will, to fit them for receiving their legacies; and then faithfully distributeth them to them by his grand executor the Holy Spirit, who applieth the virtue of it to the legatees under the Old Testament, as well as these under the New; he being the Testator, as well as the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world.

18 <sup>t</sup> Whereupon neither the first <sup>u</sup> Ex. 24. 6. <sup>v</sup> ment was || dedicated without blood. <sup>w</sup> purified.

Forasmuch as all testaments are put in force by the death of the testator, and all covenants are most strongly confirmed by death and blood in God's own judgment, thence it is that the Mosaical covenant was confirmed by them. Dedicated; ἱερακαιοῦσα, strictly taken, signifieth made new, or renewed. It is not used in the New Testament but in this place, and chap. x. 20: the Syriac translate it here confirmed, or ratified. In the Old Testament the Septuagint use it to express the Hebrew דָּבַר Dent. xx. 5. In which law, for a man who had built a house, and was called out to the wars, to return and dedicate it, was to take possession of it, and secure it from the claim of another. Here it is properly used to make sure, firm, and inviolable; and that by blood, typical of Christ's, which is the highest and most solemn ratification. So were the covenants before ratified, but especially under the law, and the Mosaical covenant itself, as appears by instance, Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17, 18; xxxi. 44, 54; compare Exod. xxiv. 5, 7, 8.

19 For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, <sup>x</sup> he took the blood of calves and <sup>y</sup> Ex. 24. 5. <sup>z</sup> goats, <sup>aa</sup> with water, and || scarlet wool, <sup>ab</sup> 6, 8. Lev. <sup>ac</sup> 16, 14, 15, 14. <sup>ad</sup> u Lev. 11. <sup>ae</sup> 4, 6, 7, 49, <sup>af</sup> 51, 52. <sup>ag</sup> and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, <sup>ah</sup> || Or, purple. <sup>ai</sup> and all the people,

For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law: that the Old Testament was ratified by blood the Spirit proveth by instance, Moses as mediator having spoken every command, promise, and article of the covenant to all Israel, who came out of Egypt, according to God's charge, reading all to them out of the book, wherein by God's order he had written it; and the people declaring their assent and consent unto this covenant, as Exod. xxiv. 3, 4, 7, as God covenanted and bound himself to his part of it. He took the blood of calves, &c.: the Mediator then n 1 Tim. 2. 5.

o ch. 7. 22.
p Rom. 3.
q ch. 3. 1.
r Gal. 3. 15.
s Gal. 3. 15.
t Ex. 24. 6.
u Ex. 24. 6.
v Ex. 24. 6.
w Ex. 24. 6.
x Ex. 24. 5.
y Ex. 24. 5.
z Ex. 24. 5.
aa Ex. 24. 5.
ab Ex. 24. 5.
ac Ex. 24. 5.
ad Ex. 24. 5.
ae Ex. 24. 5.
af Ex. 24. 5.
ag Ex. 24. 5.
ah Ex. 24. 5.
ai Ex. 24. 5.

i Or, be brought in.

took, according to the common rite in such ratifying acts, a sprinkling bush made of scarlet wool, cedar wood, and hyssop, Lev. xiv. 4, 6; Numb. xix. 6, 18; to which David alludeth, Psal. li. 7; and with this bunch sprinkles the blood and water (which he had received into basons from the sacrifices, killed by the first-born, for burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and there mixed, Exod. xxiv. 5, 6; Lev. ix. 3, 4; xiv. 51) on the altar, book of the covenant, and all Israel, Exod. xxiv. 6—8, confirming and ratifying the covenant on God's part and theirs, as the words annexed, ver. 20, and Exod. xxiv. 8, affirm, Behold the blood by which this covenant is made firm and inviolable. All this is but a shadow and type of the ratification of the new covenant with sinners by the death of Christ; he is the Mediator that brings God's testamental covenant to them; he dieth and puts it in force; by his blood ratifieth it on God's part and theirs, by his Spirit applying it to them, and sprinkling it on them; he brings home the testamental blessings to them, chap. x. 22; xi. 28; xii. 24; Isa. lii. 15; Ezek. xxxvi. 25; 1 Pet. i. 2.

<sup>† Ex. 24. 8.</sup>
<sup>Mat. 26. 28.</sup> 20 Saying, *This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

Moses, after his sprinkling the altar, book of the covenant, and all Israel, taught them the meaning of it; saying, This that is the blood wherewith I have sprinkled you, is a sign or a seal of the testament, the blood by which it is ratified and confirmed. The blood typified and represented by it, was that of Christ the Testator, by which all the new testament is ratified to all penitent, believing sinners that look to it, without which it could never have been made good. The blood of Christ is the immovable foundation of this testament, Exod. xxiv. 8; compare 1 Cor. xi. 25; even the testamental covenant which Jehovah had made with them, and which he enjoined them by such a rite as this to ratify and confirm.

<sup>† Ex. 29. 12,</sup>
<sup>30. Lev. 8.</sup>
<sup>15, 19, & 16.</sup>
<sup>14, 15, 16,</sup>
<sup>18, 10.</sup> 21 Moreover †he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry.

Moses did not only sprinkle the book of the covenant with blood, but the tabernacle itself, yearly, on the atonement day, as is charged, Lev. xvi. 14, 16, 17. For as the altar and persons were to be atoned for, so was the tabernacle itself, ver. 18, 20. First they were sprinkled, and then anointed, Lev. viii. 10, 11, as the gospel tabernacle was in the truth of it, 1 Cor. vi. 11. All the garments and vessels of that priesthood were thus to be purified, typifying how unclean all the persons ministering with them, and atoned for in and by them, were; and how polluting all things, and polluted by them, till they were purified by the blood of Christ.

<sup>† Lev. 17. 11.</sup> 22 And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and †without shedding of blood is no remission.

And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; all such things as are capable of purifying, and which were not to be so by the water of separation, or by fire, as Lev. xvi. 28; Numb. xxxi. 23, were ceremonially purged by blood. And without shedding of blood is no remission; and without the death of some living creature as a sacrifice, and the blood of it not only shed, but sprinkled, there could be neither legal pardon of guilt, nor purging of ceremonial filth. By this God signified to Israel, that without the blood of Christ his Son, and the Testator of his testament, shed as a sacrifice, to purchase and procure both remission and the Spirit, there could be neither pardon of the guilt of sin, and removal of the punishment, nor purging the filth, or renewing the nature of the sinner, his blood being the inestimable price purchasing both for them.

<sup>a ch. 8. 5.</sup> 23 It was therefore necessary that *the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these.

It was therefore necessary: this conclusion the Spirit draweth from the antecedent, ver. 18, proved in the following verses, therefore is it here rehearsed. The illative particle therefore, is but to sum up the use of blood about the first tabernacle, and that Testament dispensation. It is positively necessary by the will of God, expressively enjoining them, to point out better, and that there might be an agreement of the type with the truth. That the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these: the tabernacles in all their parts, the book of the covenant, vessels, services, &c., being types, signs, examples, shadows of things in heaven, must be ceremonially purged and separated from common use to Divine, by those external, ritual sprinklings and lustrations, especially with beasts' blood, mystically representing better blood and purifications of persons and things than these. But the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these; but things more excellent and glorious than earthly ones, the gospel tabernacle in its parts, testament, and services, about which Christ ministereth, which are heavenly for their descent, agreeableness with, and tendency to it; they are spiritual and incorruptible, ver. 11, 12; chap. viii. 2; xii. 22; Gal. iv. 26; Rev. xxi.; are to be dedicated, set apart, put in force, and sanctified to God by the one sacrifice of Christ, of more value, worth, and virtue than all the legal sacrifices together. It is expressed plurally, to answer the opposite term, and to set out its excellency, being far above all others; the blood of it being that of God by personal union, and which is only efficacious for eternal good, and available with him; so ought it to be esteemed as it was in truth, and not quarrelled with by these Hebrews.

24 For <sup>b ch. 6. 20.</sup> Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of <sup>c ch. 8. 2.</sup> the true; but into heaven itself, now <sup>d Rom. 8. 34.</sup> to appear in the presence of God for us: <sup>ch. 7. 25.</sup>
<sup>1 John 2. 1.</sup>

For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands: for shows this to be a rational proof of the transcendency of Christ's death and sacrifice; and this he demonstrates from the place of his ministry, far exceeding that of his type. The gospel High Priest did not, like Aaron, enter with his blood into the holy of holiest of an earthly tabernacle, frail and movable, and appear before the mercy-seat on the ark there, ver. 9. Which are the figures of the true; all these were but like and correspondent figures and resemblances of the true, holy, and glorious place of God's residence. But into heaven itself; but he, as our High Priest, did enter with his atoning blood, after the sacrificing of himself on the cross, into the heaven of heavens, and approached the throne of justice, and propitiated it, making it a mercy-seat and true throne of grace unto penitent, believing sinners; and then perfected the work of propitiation and redemption: afterwards at his triumphant ascension, he entered in his whole person immortal, and laid open a way for our entering there. Now to appear in the presence of God for us; where he now appears as our advocating Mediator, pleading his merit for the remission of our sins, and rendering of God's face smiling on and favouring his clients, which was terrifying and affrighting to guilty Adam before: see chap. vii. 25; x. 19; Rom. viii. 34; 1 John ii. 1, 2; Rev. v. 6. Here he represents our persons to God's face, fitting in the mean while us beneath for our seeing him face to face, and being blessed in the enjoyment of that prospect for ever.

25 Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as <sup>e ver. 7.</sup> the High Priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others;

The excellency of Christ's sacrifice beyond the Aaraonical is argued here from its singularity; it needs no repetition, as their multiplied sacrifices did. Nor; oððè, introducing it, is but inferring this excellency of Christ's sacrifice, by denying in it that weakness which was annexed to the legal ones; there was no need that he should die yearly, to fulfil the type of the often yearly sacrifices of the legal high priest, who entered with the blood of bulls and goats, strange blood to him, and not his own, into the holy of holiest in the tabernacle, and entered so every year once, to show the virtue of his sacrifice to be only signal, typical, and passing, to make room for a better, that single, individual one of Christ, in respect of sacrifice and oblation.

26 For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world : but now 'once' in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

f ver. 12.
ch. 7. 27.
& 10. 10.
1 Pet. 3. 18.
1 Cor. 10.
11. Gal. 4. 4.
Eph. 1. 10.

For then must he often have suffered; ἐπει the consequent is drawn ab impossibili; if he had often offered himself, he must have often suffered, but he could not suffer often. For where there was offering, there must be a sacrifice, and so suffering. Now that Christ should do so in his own person, was impossible and absurd, for God to have put his Son on suffering so cruel a death so often. Since the foundation of the world; from the fall of Adam at the beginning of the world, ever since sin needed a sacrifice: but his once suffering as a sacrifice for it was of eternal virtue in God's purpose, answering and satisfying God's justice; one death of the Second Adam for the sin and penalty of the first, in the efficacy and virtue of his death, which was everlasting. The often and annual sacrificing of the Aaronical priests, and entering of the holy of holiest with the blood of beasts, was to show the Jews their weakness, and to instruct them in, and lead them to, this one sacrifice once to be offered, of eternal avail, as is subjoined. But now: but Christ the gospel High Priest was not only God-man, manifested to be so, and exhibited as such an officer by his work, but was manifested to be such by promise, and in types and figures from Adam's fall; but now showed it clearly in his suffering work, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Once in the end of the world; the days of Christ's ministry on earth under the fourth monarchy, called the last time, 1 John ii. 18, the ends of the world, 1 Cor. x. 11, the fulness of the time, Gal. iv. 4, God's set and best time for his appearance; and it was but once that he appeared in these days, performing this work. Hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself; then he sacrificed himself, offered up his blood to God within the veil, taking away by his own blood, which God required, the guilt, stain, and power of all sin, justifying believers from any condemnation by it, by what he did and suffered in their stead for their good, who fly from it for refuge to him, Isa. liii.; Dan. ix. 24; Rom. vii. 24, 25; 1 John iii. 5.

h Gen. 3. 19.
Eccles. 3. 20.
12 Cor. 5. 10.
Rev. 20. 12,
13.

27<sup>h</sup> And as it is appointed unto men once to die, 'but after this the judgment :

And as it is appointed unto men once to die: the proof of the necessity of Christ's suffering death but once, is introduced in this verse by the conjunction And. It was according to God's decreed and published statute of men's but once dying; for God the Supreme Lord, Governor, and Judge of them, set, constituted, and appointed by an unalterable and irrevocable decree, as Lawgiver, and sentence, as Judge, to all of the sinful human race, the corrupt seed of apostate Adam, their grand representative, whom God threatened with this penalty upon his sinning and transgressing his law, Gen. ii. 17; which sentence was denounced upon him, Gen. iii. 19; compare Rom. v. 12, 14; vi. 23. This sentence was but once to be undergone by himself and all his sinful offspring, and by their Surety, and no more; so that the Second Adam needed but once to die by this statute. No man can keep himself from this, it being the general rule of God's proceeding with all persons. The Supreme Legislator may make what exceptions and provisos to his law he pleaseth. Those that were translated by him, did suffer a change proportionable to death, as Enoch, chap. xi. 5; Gen. v. 24, and Elijah, 2 Kings ii. 11, 12; and those that shall be changed at Christ's coming must undergo the like, as 1 Cor. xv. 51—54; 1 Thess. iv. 17. Those that were raised from death by Christ, Peter and Paul, &c., God might glorify his name by reiterating it; but whether they did die again, is not certain. This is to be the general settled law and rule of God. But after this the judgment: in order, after souls by death are separated from their bodies, they come to judgment: and thus every particular one is handed over by death to the bar of God, the great Judge, and so is despatched by his sentence to its particular state and place with its respective people, Rom. xiv. 12. At the great and general assize, the day of judgment, shall the general and universal one take place, Acts xvii. 31, when all sinners in their entire persons, bodies and souls united, shall be adjudged to their final, unalterable, and eternal state, Rom. xiv. 10; 2 Cor. v. 10; Jude 6; Rev. xx. 11—15.

28 So <sup>h</sup>Christ was once <sup>l</sup>offered to bear the sins <sup>m</sup>of many; and unto them that <sup>n</sup>look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

k Rom. 8. 10.
1 Pet. 3. 18.
11 Pet. 2. 24
1 John 3. 5.
m Matt. 26.
n Rom. 5.
15.
n Tit. 2. 13.
2 Pet. 5. 12.

So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many: οὐτως καὶ is an illative connexion between the antecedent, ver. 27, and this consequent; As it was appointed to men once to die, so it was appointed to Christ once to offer himself. God's statute determineth both of these; Christ the High Priest, opposed to men, ver. 27, having died once as a sacrifice for sins, and offered his blood to God to expiate them, bearing their punishment which God laid on him, Isa. liii. 6; and so took away sins, guilt, filth, power and condemnation from many, whom the Father gave to him, and he undertook for, in it, Matt. xx. 28; xxvi. 28; John x. 15, 16. And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin; and to his believing, penitent expectants, such as long for his coming, Phil. iii. 20; Tit. ii. 13, stretching out their heads, as the mother of Sisera, Judg. v. 28, with a holy impatience of seeing him, such as by faith and prayer are hastening it, Rom. viii. 23; 2 Cor. v. 1—10; 1 Pet. i. 3—9, shall he once more visibly appear to them and the world, Acts i. 11; Rev. i. 7, gloriously, without need to suffer or die again for them, having at his departure after his first coming, carried all their sins into the land of forgetfulness. Unto salvation; and to their persons will he bring entire and complete salvation, raising and uniting bodies and souls together, Phil. iii. 21; and then take them as assistants to himself in the judgment-work on men and angels in the air; and having despatched that work, return with them to the holy of holiest in heaven, there to be completely blessed, in praising, serving, glorifying, and enjoying God in Christ, and the blessedness that attends that state, for ever and ever, as 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3; 1 Thess. iv. 17.

CHAP. X

The sacrifices of the law, being often repeated, could not take away sins, 1—4. The abolition of them, and substitution of Christ's body in their stead, foretold by the psalmist, 5—9: by the offering of which body once for all we obtain perfect remission, 10—18. An exhortation to steadfastness in the faith, and to love and good works, 19—25. The danger of a wilful relapse after having received the knowledge of the truth, 26—31; and of forfeiting the reward of a good beginning for want of perseverance, 32—39.

FOR the law having <sup>a</sup>a shadow <sup>b</sup>of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, <sup>c</sup>can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto <sup>d</sup>perfect.

a Col. 2. 17.
ch. 8. 5.
b 9. 23.
c ch. 9. 11.
d ver. 14.

For: this for is connecting this to the foregoing discourse, and is a further improvement of the argument laid down, chap. ix., proving the necessity and excellency of the one sacrifice offered by Christ for sinners unto God, from the weakness of all the legal ones. For if all the multitude of them were not able to take away sins, and Christ's one offering is mighty to abolish them, and to perfect all who use it, then not these legal ones, but his is necessary to be valued by the Hebrews, and preferred to that end; the demonstration of which takes up from ver. 1—18 of this chapter. The law; the whole Mosaical economy given from God to Israel by him in the wilderness of Sinai; priesthood, covenant, sacrifices, and services, which that did contain. Having a shadow of good things to come: see chap. viii. 5. A shadow is lower than an image, and of another kind from the reality or substance; a dark, obscure represensation of what was to fulfil them, viz. of Christ, with all his ministry and privileges attending his covenant, both for time and eternity; this the Mosaical law-real comprehended, but all in shadow-work. And not the very image of the things; they are not the very essence and substance themselves of those things, the pattern, or real sampler, but a shadowy representation; they lead their users to Christ and his matters, which they represented, but were not the substantial good things themselves. So image is read, 1 Cor. xv. 49, we have borne the image of the earthy Adam, that is, his nature. Can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect: the legal sacrifices are not only impotent in respect of their constitution, but of their very nature, being only shadows, so as they cannot render a soul complete, either in respect of justification or sanctification; they could not free any either from the guilt or punishment of sin at present, much less eternally; with all the renovation of them either on the day of atonement yearly, or those daily offered by them, though they should continue to be offered for ever, yet could they not perfect either the priests ministering, or those for whom they ministered, who were externally humbling themselves on the expiation day; they being designed only to point the people to this better sacrifice of Christ, which was to perfect them, that work being so noble, and above the power of shadows to perform.

2 For then || would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins.

For then would they not have ceased to be offered? for proves the weakness of that shadowy service under the law, because it never ceased, which it would if it had perfected its users; and having reached its end, and done that work, have ceased; for these sacrifices would not of right have been repeated, neither needed they, if they could have justified and sanctified souls for ever. Because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins: for then this effect would have followed, the worshippers who were to be atoned for or expiated by these sacrifices, if they had perfected them, i. e. pardoned, justified, and acquitted them from guilt of sin and punishment, there would have nothing remained to have troubled, vexed, or tormented their souls, they being no further accused or condemned by their conscience about sin, God having justified and sanctified them, chap. ix. 14, 26, 28; compare Rom. v. 1, 2, 11.

3<sup>c</sup> But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

If the legal sacrifices could have perfected their offerers, there would have been no remembrance of sins; but there is a remembrance of sins yearly, therefore they are weak and cannot perfect. These shadowy sacrifices yearly reiterated, still left sins in their guilt and killing power, loading and grinding the conscience by accusation and condemnation for them, as well as setting them in the light of God's countenance. For in the expiation day Aaron was to remember and to confess over the head of the scape-goat, laying his hands on it, all the church's sins of the past year and life, notwithstanding former expiatory sacrifices offered for them, Lev. xvi. 22. For as soon as that was done, their expiating virtue vanished, and so they renewed sacrifices without any spiritual profit by them, the guilt of past and present sins remaining still: whereas Christians now renewing sin, do renew their faith and repentance, but not their sacrifice for it; the virtue of which, in a full and final absolution, applied to them by the Spirit, makes them to have, upon their final accounts, no conscience of sin for ever.

4 For 'it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.

For gives a reason of the precedent proof, that the legal sacrifices did keep sins in remembrance; for they were of such matter as could not have any causal power to take them away. It is not possible: this is equivalent to a universal negative, the impossibility being absolute as to the things themselves in their very nature; they being corporeal, can have no influence upon a spiritual evil in the soul, Micah vi. 6, 7; and by God's constitution they were to lead them to better things, God being not pleased with flesh and blood, Psal. i. 13; Isa. i. 11. That the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins; the blood of these were only carried into the holy of holiest on the atonement day, yearly, Lev. xvi., to which this is chiefly applied; nor could the blood of all the other sacrifices by expiation pardon their offerers, nor by sanctification cleanse them, nor by removing the sense of them comfort the soul; they could neither pacify God, nor the sinner's conscience, having no virtue or power to satisfy God's justice, or merit his grace, only it had by his constitution a power to typify that blood which could do both.

5 Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body || hast thou prepared me:

Wherefore, Διό, introduceth the proof of the invalidity of legal sacrifices, and the efficacy of the one sacrifice of Christ, from Divine testimony about both of them. He saith; God the Son, who existed before his incarnation, bespeaketh God the Father, when he was coming into this world, to become a part of it, by uniting a holy human nature to the Divine, as David voucheth by the Spirit of God, Psal. xl. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not: the bloody atoning sacrifices of bulls and goats, the peace-offerings, and thank-offerings, Lev. vii. 16, and offerings of every sort without blood, required by the law of Moses, God did neither desire, require, nor delight in, as in themselves propitiatory; for he never intended them to take away sins, or perfect the worshippers: see 1 Sam. xv. 22; Isa. i. 11—15; Jer. vi. 20; Amos v. 21, 22. But a body hast thou prepared me: but, the Hebrew text reads, the ears hast thou bored for me. The apostle makes use here of the Greek paraphrase, a body hast thou fitted me; as giving in proper terms the sense of the former figurative expression, discovering thereby Christ's entire willingness to become God's servant for ever, Exod. xxi. 6; and that he might be so, which he could not as God the Son, simply, the Father by his Spirit did articulate him, and formed him joint by joint a body; that is, furnished him with a human nature, so as that he might perform that piece of service which God required, offering up himself a bloody sacrifice for sin, to which he was obedient, Phil. ii. 8. Thus were his ears bored, which could not be if he had not been clothed with a body.

6 In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

Two other sorts of sacrifices are added to the former, as whole burnt-offerings, which were all devoured by fire on God's altar, and no part of them came to the priests, Lev. i. 3, 9, 10, 13, 14, 17; and peace-offerings, which were not totally consumed, but part of them was the priests' portion, Exod. xxix. 27, 28. These four sorts of sacrifices comprehend all the Aaraonical offerings for expiation. God did not require or desire any of these for themselves, or for the perfecting of sinners; he did not as to such an end approve them, or take any pleasure in them.

7 Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God.

Then said I, Lo, I come: when the Father declared the sacrifices of beasts and birds would not please him, nor be accepted for expiating sins, then I said, I appeared in person, and declared, Lo, I come with a fit and proper sacrifice; I approach myself with my human nature, fully resolved to offer that to thee as a propitiatory sacrifice, John xii. 27; compare Psal. xl. 7. In the volume of the book it is written of me: κεφαλις, the head; our translators keep to the Hebrew, כִּסְיָא בְּרִיבְיָא the volume of the book, Psal. xl. 7. Books, with the Hebrews, were rolls of parchment stitched at the top, and so rolled up. In this book was Christ every where written and spoken of, as he testified himself before his death, John v. 39, after his resurrection, Luke xxiv. 44—46. The Septuagint render it, the head, as being in the top and beginning of the whole roll, to wit, in the books

<sup>1</sup> Or, they would have ceased to be offered, because, &c.

<sup>c</sup> Lev. 16. 21. ch. 9. 7.

<sup>f</sup> Mic. 6. 6, 7. ch. 9. 13. ver. 11.

<sup>g</sup> Ps. 40. 6, &c. & 50. 8, &c. Is. 1. 11. Jer. 6. 20. Amos 5. 21, 22.

<sup>1</sup> Or, thou hast fitted me.

of Moses; compare Luke xxiv. 27. And in the entrance of them the Spirit testifieth of his Deity, and of his union to the humanity, being to be conceived and born of a virgin, and offering himself a sacrifice to expiate sin, and reconcile sinners, Gen. iii. 15; compare John v. 46, 47. To do thy will, O God; to obey his Father's command, of dying an expiatory sacrifice for sinners. It was his Father's will that he should so offer himself for satisfying his justice, making way for his mercy, and so redeeming and recovering lost souls. This will of God was in his heart, he delighted to obey it, Psal. xl. 8; and his own natural will that would regret it, he would deny, and would not use his Divine power to deliver himself from it, Matt. xxvi. 39, 46; John xviii. 11.

8 Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law;

In this verse the apostle repeats the whole testimony, produced out of the Psalm, only with a specification in a parenthesis, which are offered by the law, viz. such sacrifices, against which the apostle argueth, which could not purge away sin, nor procure righteousness, nor make no more conscience of sins. He observes from the Psalm, that the will of God was plainly signified by his Spirit to David under the law, about the nature, state, and design of his institution of sacrifices, that they were typical, of, and leading to, a better sacrifice than themselves; and that for their own sake only they were no way acceptable to God, and so rejected by him.

9 Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.

In this verse the apostle collects the psalmist's assertion of God the Father's accepting his sacrifice, the offering whereof was so exactly agreeable to his will, when he was displeased with the legal ones; and this revealed to David when he was punctually using them according to the law. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second: God therefore abolished all the legal sacrifices, which he commanded to be used as types of the better sacrifice he had provided, because of their insufficiency and weakness as to expiate sin, or pacify conscience, that he might establish that sacrifice of the body of Christ for abolishing sin, and bringing in everlasting righteousness, which was effectual, and an actual obedience agreeable to his will and command, Phil. ii. 7, 8. This being thus proved, he concludes from it,

10 <sup>h</sup> By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

By the which will; that spoken of Psal. xl. 8, that will and command of God given to Christ, God-man, that he should once offer up his body a sacrifice for sin, which he willingly and heartily obeyed, Phil. ii. 8. We are sanctified: sanctified is to be taken largely, for a communication to us of all the benefits of redemption, as pardon, reconciliation, absolution from punishment, renovation of God's image, and such a discharge of sin at last, as never to be guilty of it more, perfection of grace in glory. Through the offering; the voluntarily and heartily yielding it up, and presenting the blood of it to the Father within the veil in heaven to atone him, according to his own command and will, without which it would not have been accepted by him, Luke xxiii. 46; compare John xx. 15, 17, 18; xix. 28, 30. Of the body of Jesus Christ once for all: it was that part of Christ's person that was to die a sacrifice, and the blood of it that was to be shed for purchasing the remission of sins, as appears in the memorial of it, Luke xxii. 19, 20; the very body of God-man, Acts xx. 28. The once offering of which was eternally available to take away sin from sinners, and perfect them to glory. So that God's end being once reached in it, it is of perpetual virtue to apply its fruits to believing penitents, and needs not any repetition.

11 And every Priest standeth <sup>k</sup> daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, <sup>l</sup> which can never take away sins:

Having proved, that not the yearly repeated legal sacrifices could perfect a sinner, but only the sacrifice of Christ, the Spirit proceeds to prove, that the daily legal sacrifices can do as little for this work as the annual; and therefore these Hebrews ought to desert all these, and depend only upon Christ's, ver. 11—18. And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices: every priest in Aaron's family in his course daily ministering, stood at the altar, and performed the service appointed him by God, offering often the same bloody sacrifices to God, of bulls, goats, sheep, fowl, many times in one day, and for many days together, chap. vii. 27. Which can never take away sins; these were not available either to the priests offering, or those who brought them to be offered, for the spiritual and eternal expiation of their sins, as to their guilt, stain, power, or punishment, not any, nor all of these, none could do it at any time: see ver. 4.

12 <sup>m</sup> But this man, after he had offered <sup>n</sup> one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God;

But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins: opposed to the legal priests is this Priest, God-man, an almighty Minister, having once offered, and no more, one sacrifice of his body for the sins of others, (he had none of his own, as every other priest had,) that they might be pardoned and remembered no more, it being of eternal virtue and efficacy. For ever must be joined to the sacrifice to complete the opposition, ver. 11. The legal one could never take away sins, but his one sacrifice could take them away for ever. Sat down on the right hand of God; he ceased from sacrificing any more, and ascended up to heaven, and there he sat himself down (having abolished sin, and finished his work as a servant for ever) in the highest place of dominion and power at God's right hand, while the Aaronites stood trembling and waiting at God's footstool; and thence he powerfully and efficaciously commands the blotting out of sins, applieth his merits, and dispenseth to his servants the covenant mercies which he purchased by his own blood for them, chap. i. 3; ii. 9; viii. 2.

13 From henceforth expecting <sup>o</sup> till his enemies be made his footstool.

That which remaineth he expecteth, even the fulfilling of his Father's promise to him, Psal. cx. 1, patiently waiting, earnestly looking, for what is most certain, and wherein he cannot be disappointed; for in respect of himself, his enemies cannot infest him more, being entirely vanquished already; but in respect of his administration, he waits till all that oppose his royal priesthood, as the devil and his angels, sin, the curse, death, and the world, with which he conflicts as a Priest to destroy them with his own blood, as his members do by it, Rev. xii. 11. Having given them their death's wound by his own death, he sits down, and waits in the successive ages of his church, until upon his elect it be made good, putting all under his own and church's feet, so to overcome and trample on them, as men on their footstools: see chap. ii. 8; 1 Cor. xv. 26.

14 For by one offering <sup>o</sup> he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

For by one offering: for here gives the reason of the precedent effect, and it is opposed to the reason of the legal offerings' defect; their sacrifices multiplied could not perfect sinners, but this one doth it fully. He hath perfected for ever: Christ, God-man, the gospel High Priest, by the one offering of himself a sacrifice for sin to God his Father, and once performed by him, hath secured perfection of justification, sanctification, and blessedness, perpetually to be continued, whereby the persons interested in it are qualified and consecrated to be priests to God and his Father. (as the Aaronical priests were by the sacrifice of the ram of consecration, Exod. xxix. 22, 24,) to serve in their proportion here, but especially after the completion of it by their resurrection, they shall perfectly serve him before his throne in the holy of holiest for ever, 1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6. Them that are sanctified; the renewed souls by the Holy Ghost, such whose consciences he hath sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, and by it freed them from the guilt of sin and its punishment, and whose natures he regenerates and sanctifieth, freeing them from their evil habits, and

<sup>m</sup> ch. 1. 3.
<sup>n</sup> Col. 3. 1.

<sup>o</sup> Ps. 110. 1.
<sup>p</sup> Acts 2. 35.
<sup>q</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 25.
<sup>r</sup> ch. 1. 13.

<sup>h</sup> John 17. 19.
<sup>i</sup> ch. 13. 12.
<sup>j</sup> ch. 9. 12.

<sup>k</sup> Num. 28. 3.
<sup>l</sup> ch. 7. 27.

<sup>m</sup> ver. 4.

making them inherently holiness unto the Lord, Psal. cx. 3; 1 Cor. vi. 11.

15 Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

The assumption cleared before, the apostle now proceedeth to prove out of the Old Testament, viz. that God's purpose was, by Christ's one sacrifice to take away all sins for ever; therefore there was no need of the repetition of the legal sacrifices. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: the authority avouched, is the testimony of the Holy Spirit of truth, that cannot deceive nor be deceived in what it witnesseth, but confirms the truth beyond all just ground of doubting, by his amanuensis the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 31, 33, 34; where the person that the prophet styleth Jehovah, is by the apostle declared to be the Holy Ghost; and by it is proved to be the eternal God. He testifieth to us, the church of God, in the prophet's time, and to us all called to be members of it to this day. For after that he had said before: this contains the preface of the Spirit's testimony, that which he spake before, the covenant, which is his evidence; and this preface is laid down, Jer. xxxi. 31. Here they are all the apostle's words.

16 <sup>p Jer. 31, 33, 34</sup> This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them;

God promiseth his true Israel his entering with them into a new testamental covenant; after the days that the covenant administration at Sinai was expired, then the Lord saith, Jer. xxxi. 33, that he will renew minds and hearts by his Spirit, and conform them to his will, that they shall be living, walking exemplars of his law; of both which see chap. viii. 10. This work of sanctification of souls is properly inferred here, to prove that such as enjoy it are perfected by Christ, because the promise of holiness is joined with that of perfect righteousness. Formerly it was urged from the text to another purpose, to prove God's will of changing the Aaronical administration of the covenant, because this was better. Here it is urged to prove the perfect effect of the sacrifice of Christ once offered to God, without which these promises of the covenant of justifying and sanctifying sinners had neither been made nor effected.

17 <sup>+ Some copies have, Then he said, And their.</sup> And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

God covenanteth to give not only sanctification, but justification to his believing Israel, so as their sins shall be remitted, and God will solemnly absolve them from the punishment they merit; see chap. viii. 12; promised, Jer. xxxi. 34. In which proof, though there be no express mention of the sacrifice of Christ, yet is it implied, for it is urged by the Spirit to that purpose; and in other scriptures, speaking of the same thing here promised, it is expressed, as hath been shown, chap. viii. 6, (compare Isa. liii..) that the death of Christ confirms this covenant, of which he is Mediator, and secures remission of sin for ever to the duly-qualified subject for it.

18 Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

The Spirit having cleared his assumption before, now concludes; Whereas perfect forgiveness of sins is from God's grace, by the one sacrifice of his Son once offered, acquired and effected for penitent believers for ever, as the promise voucheth, Jer. xxxi. 34, For he will in no wise remember their sins, but will forgive them for ever; therefore there needs no repetition of that sacrifice again, or of any other for sin. But the Hebrews had the highest reason now to desert the legal sacrifices, and to rest upon and to cleave to his alone, any being, use, or consistency of such, after the effect of Christ's one sacrifice, being vain; for all being completed in his, it is but just theirs should cease from them.

19 Having therefore, brethren, <sup>g Rom. 5. 2</sup> boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus,

At this verse the Spirit applieth and maketh use of the doctrine of the great gospel High Priest, and his one all-sufficient sacrifice, and continueth it through part of the 13th chapter. The transition to it is made by the participle οὖν, therefore, which refers to the whole of his doctrinal discourse before of the excellency of the gospel High Priest, for his person, as to both his natures, being God-man, and his sacrifice, with its effects. Seeing these things are so, therefore, brethren; see chap. iii. 1, 12; inviting them with this endearing term of relation, to receive what his brotherly love imparted to them for their salvation. Boldness to enter into the holiest; freedom granted us of God for this motion, and confidence and freeness of Spirit in ourselves to move, so as not only to look into the holy of holiest, but of spiritual and real access for supplication and conversation, while we are personally upon earth; and others are denied such an entrance and approach to him on his throne of grace there, while they have their petitions received, Eph. iii. 12, and thence their persons blessed, chap. iv. 16. By the blood of Jesus: and this only vouchsafed them by the blood of Jesus, which atoned him, who sits on the throne, for us, and made it accessible to us. How much greater is this gospel privilege than that under the law! Aaron alone, and not the Israelites, could enter into the holy of holiest, and that but once a year, and then with the blood of beasts sacrificed for himself and them; whereas every penitent believing sinner can now by faith in Christ's blood and prayer, enter into the holiest of all in heaven, and there converse with God every day, while sin hath made him inaccessible to others.

20 <sup>h John 10. 9 & 14. 6</sup> By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

<sup>ch. 9. 6</sup> <sup>i Or, new made</sup> <sup>l ch. 9. 3.</sup> By a new and living way; which way is figuratively setting out the means of entering into the holiest in heaven by the blood of Christ. By way is understood that by which approach to God in heaven is made, and wherein we must have our access to him, even Christ himself, John xiv. 6: οὐρανου, a way newly made manifest by Christ's sacrifice newly slain and offered, rending the veil that hid heaven from them, so as they could not so clearly discern the throne of grace then, as now; and the way is not only new, but ζωων, a quickening way, giving life and ability for motion and refreshment to those who walk in it, John xiv. 6, such as is everlasting, and is opened, not as the legal way, only to the high priest, but to all true Israelites to enter into it, and that not once a year, but continually. This is the way of life permanent and safe, Isa. xxxv. 8—10. Which he hath consecrated for us; this way Christ himself hath newly made, finished and opened unto them that they might walk therein, and reach home to God; nothing could obstruct or hinder them in it, he having perfected it unto this end. Through the veil, that is to say, his flesh: the inner veil, that separated the holiest of all from the holy place, was a type of the flesh of Christ, veiling his Deity; through the breaking and rending of which by death, he opens the way to the throne of grace in the holy of holiest in heaven, and so made God accessible to believers there, chap. ix. 12; compare Matt. xxvii. 51.

21 <sup>n ch. 4. 14</sup> And having an High Priest over the house of God;

<sup>x 1 Tim. 3. 15.</sup> Christians have not only a liberty of coming, but a way wherein, and a help whereby, to reach home to God; which help is a surpassing Priest to all others, the great and eminent one for real worth and dignity, Christ himself, God-man, exalted to the right hand of the Majesty on high, after he had fulfilled his work here; where he was invested with all authority and power, and set over the church of the living God, consisting both of Hebrew and Gentile Israelites, chap. iii. 6; Acts xx. 28; whose sacrifices of praise and prayer offered up to God, he presenteth, perfumed with the incense of his own merits, before the throne, representing their persons, pleading their cause, and continually interceding for their good, making all they are and perform acceptable to his Father by his own blood, chap. viii. 2.

22 <sup>y ch. 4. 16</sup> Let us draw near with a true heart <sup>z Eph. 3. 12</sup> in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, <sup>aa Jan. 1. 6</sup> and our bodies washed with pure water. <sup>ab John 3. 21</sup> <sup>ac ch. 9. 14</sup> <sup>ad Ezek. 36</sup> <sup>ae 2 Cor. 7. 1</sup>

Let us draw near; this contains the duty grounded on, and encouraged to, by the former privileges, viz. the spiritual motion of his church, using Christ for their coming home to God, in prayer, and all parts of worship and conversation: see chap. iv. 16; vii. 25. With a true heart; with sincerity and integrity of heart, both as it is the subject of actions, and exercising them as such in all acts of worship and service unto God, when the mind and heart is fixed to perform all strictly, according to God's will, for matter and manner, so as to reach him glory, and to obtain from him a blessing, Psal. xxxvii. 31. In full assurance of faith; believing in, an being fully assured and confident of, Christ's merits and God's promise, which is true, faithful, and immutable, to all who perform the duty required by it, chap. vi. 11; Col. ii. 2; James i. 5—7. Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience; having the soul in all its rational faculties, the inward man, the prime efficient of all actions, and here under bond to the law of God, purged and cleansed; alluding to the Aaronical rite of purifying by sprinkling of blood, as souls are to be now by the blood of Christ when they are justified, Rom. iii. 23—26, that God may admit them into his presence, hear them when they worship him, ver. 19, 20; so as they may be free from an accusing or condemning conscience, on the account of the guilt of sin gnawing them, and making them obnoxious to punishment; as also of the stain and pollution of sin, making them unfit for any communion with God, chap. ix. 14. And our bodies washed with pure water; the body (as the priests were under the law washed before their service) is the outward man, which is, as well as the soul, to be sanctified by the Holy Spirit, and cleansed from all filthiness of flesh: these corrupt members of the old man must be put off, and mortified by the Spirit of God, before they can be fit to approach to worship him, Ezek. xxxvi. 25; 1 Cor. vi. 11, 19, 20; 2 Cor. vii. 1; 1 John iii. 3.

23 <sup>c ch. 4. 14.
d 1 Cor. 1. 9.
& 10. 13.
1 Thes. 5. 24.
2 Thes. 3. 3.
ch. 11. 11.</sup> Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;)

Let us hold fast; this duty is inferred from the doctrine of the gospel High Priest, and the perfect work he wrought in taking away sin, and bringing in everlasting righteousness: let us therefore persevere in the faith and hope of him, really, actually, steadfastly, retaining it with all our might and power; whatsoever insinuations may be used to entice us, or violence by persecutions to force us, from it, retaining it still in mind, will, affection, and operation. The profession of our faith; an outward exhibition to the world both in word and deed, as we have it sincerely in our hearts, solemnly owning it in the ordinances of God in his church, of the hope we have in Christ our High Priest, and of all that he hath purchased for us, and promised to perform in us and to us, chap. iii. 1, 6; iv. 14; vi. 11; Rom. x. 9, 10; 1 Pet. i. 3, 21. Without wavering; ἀκλιών, without any declining from it, either to the right or left, from the first and due state of it; not warping or wavering from the revelation of God about it, when others weakly made a defection from it, chap. vi. 6, 9. And good reason for this unbiassed retention of it, while others declined. For he is faithful that promised; for God, who covenanted with them what he will be to and do for them, is only primitively, eminently, and reciprocally faithful and unchangeable for his person and purpose; all is sure on God's side, Numb. xxiii. 19, and his power is irresistible. He hath promised to reward those who persevere and continue to the end true to the Redeemer, and to give them grace and assistance that they may so continue, so as they need not fear the power of their enemies, nor their own weakness, for he will enable them to perform the duty, endure the afflictions for it, and then to reach the blessing, 1 Cor. x. 13; 1 Thess. v. 23, 24; 2 Thess. iii. 3.

24 And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works:

Having urged from the gospel doctrine of our High Priest our duty to God, the Spirit proceeds to show what influence it should have on Christians for performing their duty one to another, in their inspection and observation of the whole body of Christ, consisting of Jew and Gentile, who have equally shared in Christ's sacrifice, and are interested in and related to his person; and by the apprehensive and judicial faculty so to discern the spiritual state and condition of each other, and the whole, as every particular member of it may be capable to animadvert, exhort, reprove, counsel, or comfort, and act suitably and seasonably in the discharge of their mutual duty, chap. iii. 13; Rom. xiv. 19; xv. 7, 14; Col. iii. 16; 1 Thess. v. 11, 15. To provoke unto love; εἰς παροξυσμὸν it is a word borrowed from physicians, who use it to set out the violent incursion of a fever, when the fit is so strong as to make the body tremble and bed shake with the horror and rigour of it. In this place it is used to set out the vehemency of affection to which the sacrifice of Christ obligeth Christians, as those who had their whole persons acted by love to each other, with all vehemency, to the highest and fullest pitch of it; as who should exceed in benevolence, beneficence, and complacency in each other, such as is conscientious, pure, and extensive to the very end, chap. xiii. 1; Rom. xii. 9, 20; 1 Thess. iv. 9; 1 Pet. i. 22; and manifesting itself in good works to them, especially merciful ones, pitying, counselling, succouring, supplying, and comforting them, James ii. 13, 15, 16; 1 John iii. 14, 16—18; and this freely, cheerfully, and constantly, Eph. ii. 10; iv. 32; 1 Tim. vi. 18.

25 <sup>e Acts 2. 42.
Jude 19.</sup> Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: <sup>f Rom. 12.
11.
g Phil. 4. 8.
1 Pet. 3. 9.
11, 14.</sup> and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.

Helps to the performance of both the former duties, to God and fellow Christians, with their respective motives, are laid down in the following part of the chapter. The first is couched in this verse; neither slighting in thought, nor vilifying in word, nor separating, nor leaving by dissociation. Not forsaking; ἐγκαταλείποντες imports such a desertion, as leaves destitute in deep trouble or distress, when they should be helping. The assembling of ourselves together; ἐπισυναγωγὴν strictly notes an addition to this synagogue of the Jews; an accession of new members to the former church assembly, even the Gentiles, becoming Abraham's seed by their conversion to, and confession of, the faith of Christ. This some of the Jews, from the self-conceit of their being the only people of God, disdained, and continued in a separation from them, and all communion with them. This the Spirit reproves, and adviseth not to leave the assembly thus augmented, lest in doing it they forsook God and Christ, as well as ordinances of worship and duties attending such church meetings, and promoting their salvation. As the manner of some is; such desertion of those assemblies in the worshipping and serving of God, was the common custom among some of these Hebrews; a usual, frequent mode of them to do it; some idolizing their own nation; others, their own selves, thinking them holier than others, Gal. ii. 12—14; others, that valued honours, riches, and ease more than Christ or their souls; some for fear of persecution, as foretold, Luke viii. 13, 14, fulfilled, Gal. vi. 12. But exhorting one another; παρακαλύετε supposeth assembling, in opposition to the former desertion, and the duty of the assembled; and signifieth, counselling, reproving, encouraging, and comforting one another, so as they might persevere in performing the duties for which they assembled, according to Christ's mind and will; so as to strengthen each other's hearts and hands in the faith, and in the other duties instanced in before. And so much the more, as ye see the day approaching; they have so much the more reason to do it, and intend the work, as they did not conjecture, but certainly know, that the day of their own death, and particular account to be given of themselves to God; the day of God's executing his judgments on Jerusalem, as Christ foretold, Matt. xxiv. 1—28, prophesied by Daniel before, chap. ix. 26, 27, when the temple should be burnt, the city destroyed, and the people dispersed through the world; or, the day of the general judgment, testified by the gospel to the world, Acts xvii. 31: all these were every day nearer to them than other, and they believed them to approach; therefore ought they to be more exercised in denying evil and doing good, not forsaking church communion, but keeping close to Christ and his assemblies, that they might better stand together in that day.

h Num. 15.
24, ch. 6, 4.
12 Pet. 2.
20, 21.

26 For <sup>h</sup>if we sin wilfully <sup>i</sup>after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

If we sin wilfully: the severe exaction which God will take upon such as apostatize from him, is further enforcing the former duty, and is introduced by the particle for, to that end; if we by a free and spontaneous desertion of Christ, and his ordinances, without a coercion by threats and persecutions; and this after we had professedly in our judgments, wills, and affections, with faith and reverence, acknowledged a love and subjection to the true gospel doctrine of the way of bringing sinners to God by Christ our great High Priest, John viii. 31; xiv. 6, which was made known to them by Christ and his apostles, and confirmed by miracles and the gifts of the Holy Ghost, so as to profess a full conviction of this truth, so as to assent and consent to it. After that we have received the knowledge of the truth; after all this, to renounce the profession of it, and to forsake the assemblies where it is held forth; this is the spontaneous and wilful sinning: see chap. vi. 6. There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins: this is unpardonable by the just constitution of God in the gospel, because no sacrifice can atone God for them, without which they cannot be pardoned; and the sacrifice of Christ, which only could do it, they renounce and desert; and so this, nor any other they can bring, can procure pardon for them, so that their sins remain in guilt and power on them, and between them and God's wrath are they like irrecoverably to be ground to perdition.

<sup>k</sup> Ezek. 36. 5.
<sup>l</sup> Zeph. 1. 18.
<sup>m</sup> & 3.
<sup>n</sup> 2 Thess. 1. 8.
<sup>o</sup> ch. 12. 29.

27 But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and <sup>k</sup>fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.

But a certain fearful looking for of judgment: But, is introducing the terrible evil asserted to be expected when sacrifice cannot help such sinners, especial and certain, terrible and dreadful (such as fills the soul with fears and horrors) expectation of judgment by their awakened consciences, not knowing how soon it may come; as a malefactor under sentence, in daily expectation of execution, how doth he suffer it over and over! so will this worm gnaw them: to which is synonymous, Mark ix. 44. How must the execution of the sentence of the just Judge terrify them! And fiery indignation; when it must be by burning, or heat of fire; wrath of fire proceeding from an injured and wronged God, Ezek. xxxvi. 5; xxxviii. 19; Zeph. i. 18; iii. 8. As in execution of just vengeance, which like fire devours and eateth them up, not putting an end to their being by consumption, but perpetual piercing, searching, torturing, and this for eternity. Which shall devour the adversaries; these underhand adversaries, ὕποβρυχίου, who are the most bitter enemies of Christ and his church, because secret ones, and seem to be by profession otherwise, Matt. xxv. 41; Mark ix. 43, 44; 2 Thess. i. 8, 9.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 2. 2.
<sup>2</sup> in Deut. 17.
<sup>3</sup> 2. 6. & 19. 15.
<sup>4</sup> Matt. 18. 16.
<sup>5</sup> John 8. 17.
<sup>6</sup> 2 Cor. 13. 1.

28 <sup>1</sup>He that despised Moses' law died without mercy <sup>2</sup>under two or three witnesses:

The punishment threatened on such sinners is illustrated by an instance proper to the Hebrews; For if the lesser sin against Moses's law was punished by death, the greater sin against the gospel of Christ shall be more punished. He that despised Moses's law; any person, whoever he were, none excepted, contemning, rejecting, nullifying, or making to have no place or force, (suitable to forsaking, before prohibited,) the law of God, given by the mediation of Moses, so as to have no power on the conscience by apostasy from it, and to do it openly, proudly, and presumptuously, in the face of the church. Numb. xv. 30, 31. Died without mercy under two or three witnesses; was to be sentenced to death without any compassion or mercy, and indispensably executed without any pity, by stoning of the offender by two or three witnesses, which did evidence the fact, and convict him of it, according to the law, as Deut. xiii. 6—11; xvii. 2—7.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 2. 3.
<sup>o</sup> & 12. 23.

29 <sup>o</sup>Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and <sup>o</sup>hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, <sup>p</sup>and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

<sup>o</sup> 1 Cor. 11.
29, ch. 13.
20.

<sup>p</sup> Matt. 12.
31, 32.
Eph. 4. 30.

Of how much sorer punishment: the expostulation aggravates both the sin and the punishment in the consequent on the former assertion; a punishment heavier, bitterer, sorer, more grievous, and unexpressibly greater, than death. Suppose ye; you yourselves being judges, to whom I appeal about it; what can you suppose, think, or determine of it? Shall he be thought worthy; doth he fully deserve, and is liable to, by the judgment of man, but much more by the righteous and inexorable judgment of God? Who hath trodden under foot the Son of God; who sinneth at a higher rate than a Jew against Moses's law, being an apostate from the gospel, a revolter from and a rebel against it, discovering it by as much as in him lieth, tearing from his throne God the Son incarnate, and treading him under his feet, wickedly undervaluing and horribly vilifying him, treating him with the greatest contempt that can be expressed by such an action, as if he were the vilest malefactor. A person so much greater and more excellent than Moses, to be so used; so as, if he were here on earth, he would tread him (who is higher than the heavens, and had done and suffered so much for him) as the dust and dirt under his feet; and this by a contemptuous forsaking his church assemblies, wherein he was set out in all his excellencies. And hath counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing; accounting and so deserting the blood of Christ, (which ratified the everlasting covenant of grace, by whose virtue it was made unalterable, firm, and effectual in all the promises of it of pardon, righteousness, holiness, grace, and glory, unto penitent believing sinners,) as either the common blood of men, or the blood of a malefactor, to have not so much excellency in it as the blood of bulls, or goats, or rams, or birds, under the law; as not sanctifying souls, but polluted. Wherewith he was sanctified; ἐν ᾧ ἡγιασθήν, in or by which he was sanctified, is by most interpreters referred to the apostate, as aggravating his sin, to despise that blood by which he thought he was so, and boasted of it, and was so reputed by the church upon his baptism and profession of his faith, and, as a member of the church, had a visible relation to it, partaking of those ordinances wherein its fruits were conveyed, and enjoying the external privileges purchased by it. Others refer it unto Christ himself, the blood whereby he was consecrated to God as a holy sacrifice, John xvii. 19. All this was discovered by his forsaking the church assembly, wherein this was declared to be the only way and means to justification of life and salvation. And hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace; injuring, wronging, despising, greatly grieving, not a creature, but God the Spirit, the quickening Spirit of dead sinners, who fits them for union to God, and in order to it, uniteth him to Christ and his God, animateth it; who graciously communicated to these apostates the knowledge natural and supernatural which they had and abused, chap. vi. 5, by the desertion of the assemblies, where he manifested his gifts and graces. They reject him with them, and treat his gifts and motions as if they were the delusions and impostures of an evil spirit; and this wilfully done out of malice to Christ, and abhorrence of his church and religion. A sin like the devil's, for them to forsake God loving, Christ redeeming, his blood justifying, his Spirit renewing, and so wilfully refuse to be saved, and expose themselves to the severest punishment God can inflict on such sinners, and they do deserve.

30 For we know him that hath said, <sup>q</sup>Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, <sup>r</sup>The Lord shall judge his people.

<sup>q</sup> Deut. 32.
35. Rom. 12.
19.
<sup>r</sup> Deut. 32.
36. Ps. 50. 4.
& 135. 14.

For we know him that hath said: For brings in the proof of the soreness of God's punishment to be inflicted on apostates, from God's own testimony about it; which we, who are conversant with the Scriptures, are well acquainted with; we know what God hath spoken, and by whom he hath spoken it, John ix. 29. Their knowledge of it was clear and certain, it being spoken to them by Moses, and written for them, Deut. xxxii. 35, 36. Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense; to me is vengeance and recompence; which are the words of the Hebrew text. To me, the sovereign Being, the supreme and universal Lawgiver and Judge, doth belong the universal right and power of vindictive justice. It is his propriety, as he will avenge all injuries against his people, he will much more avenge the sins and injuries against his Son; and will actually return to evil-doers, as a recompence for their sins, the evil of punishment. He is not only just and powerful, but actually manifesting both in his retribution on them, Deut. xxxii. 41, 43; Psal. xciv. 1; Rom. xii. 19; 2 Thess. i. 8. Saith the Lord; Jehovah saith it, who is faithful and true, powerful, and constant to his threatenings, as well as his promises. This he saith to, and threatens apostate Jeshurun with, who revolted from God, and served idols, Deut. xxxii. 15—17. And again, The Lord shall judge his people: a further testimony is urged from God's vindication of his people, when he hath punished apostates, taken from Deut. xxxii. 6, and Psal. cxxxv. 14. The sovereign Being of righteousness, the same Jehovah as before, will rule, justify, save, deliver, and vindicate his covenant people from the contempt and vilifying of his Son and them, by punishing severely such who, by their apostacy from him and them, are guilty of it. He will certainly take vengeance on them, and thereby clear the innocency, truth, and goodness of his, who are trampled on by them.

1 Luke 12. 5. 31 It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

The punishment of these apostates is further aggravated from the inflicter of it, the knowledge of which should make them tremble; the thoughts of it might affect them, as the hand-writing on the wall did Belshazzar, Dan. v. 6. It should strike horror into their heart, trembling into their persons, Deut. xxviii. 65, 66, by apostacy from him as a Father, to be subjected to him as a Judge, and as obnoxious to his severest judgment. Him in whose hand is power inexpressible, 1 Chron. xxix. 12, to avenge himself on his enemies, Psal. xc. 11, who have renounced him as their God, and provoked him to fury by it. A God that will not repent of vengeance, and who liveth ever to inflict it; who lifts up his hand to heaven, and saith, I live for ever, Deut. xxxii. 39, 40; to punish with everlasting burning, and a devouring fire, such traitors to himself. So is he described, Isa. xxxiii. 14; Matt. x. 28. His vengeance on these apostates is like himself, everlasting.

2 Gal. 3. 4. 32 But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

But call to remembrance the former days: But is not so much adversative as copulative, adding another direction for their persevering in Christianity, even the revolving in their minds, and bringing again to thought, what was past, carrying in it both the act and the end of it. It is a practical remembrance which bettereth them, while recollecting their own days, and the time that was past. In which, after ye were illuminated; in which they were convinced of the truth of the gospel, and received it in the love of it, and externally professed it, by being baptized into Christ, and by it made members of his church, chap. vi. 4, and testified the truth of their being Christ's. Ye endured a great fight of afflictions; by their sufferings for him with patience and divine fortitude, willingly, cheerfully, valiantly: Ye have borne, and overcome by bearing, preserving your integrity, so as your faith was immovable, and strengthened you to endure the many and most violent assaults of the devil and his instruments, both within and without the church; who thought to force them from the faith, by the many evils which they inflicted. If they were patient in the enduring these at the first, how much more now, after so long a continuance in it! Rom. viii. 18; 2 Cor. i. 6—8; 2 Tim. i. 8; 1 Pet. v. 9.

1 Cor. 4. 9. 33 Partly, whilst ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

Partly, whilst ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; their sufferings personal in this famous instance, ἑαυτοὶ ὄψεσθε. They were so publicly exposed as on a stage or theatre, so as multitudes might sport themselves with them, 1 Cor. iv. 9; as many were exposed to be devoured by beasts in their public shows, 1 Cor. xv. 32. Or, to destroy them, exposed in their public courts of justice, and there taunted and reviled, as Christ foretold them, Matt. x. 17, 18. They were suffering reproaches and afflictions publicly both in word and deed. What nick-names imposed on them, what crimes imputed to them which they abhorred, what buffeting, scourging, tormenting, shackling, imprisoning, banishing, were they not exercised with, as their fellow Christians are to this day? And partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used; their sufferings by participation, in presence and sympathy with their fellow Christians. This is another kind of it; they were consorts and sharers of all those members of Christ, who were so abused by the devil and his instruments, and they bore their burdens with them, were inwardly grieved for them, publicly owned and comforted them, supplied and supported them as they could, as ver. 34; 2 Cor. xi. 25, 26.

34 For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

For ye had compassion of me in my bonds; for ye sympathized in my bonds, &c., is a proof of both kinds of their sufferings forementioned. As to their suffering with others, he instanceth in himself, as a witness of it; for when he was in bonds for preaching the gospel, both at Jerusalem, Acts xxi. 33, 37; xxii. 24, 25, at Cesarea, Acts xxiii. xxiv., at Rome, Acts xxviii., they forewarned him of his danger, bore his burden with him, supplied, relieved him, and endeavoured, what in them lay, his release. And took joyfully the spoiling of your goods; and in their own sufferings, by being rifled for the gospel; their goods, estates, and means of subsistence, were either by fines, confiscations, or violence, ravished from them; their enemies, like so many harpies, preying on them, 1 Thess. ii. 14. So as these Christian Hebrews at this time had their respective properties, and all was not levelled among them. Though they were so impoverished to make them comply with the Gentile superstition and idolatry, yet they cheerfully bore it, esteeming it their honour and privilege thus to suffer for Christ, and herein obeyed him, as Matt. v. 11, 12, and as the apostles did before them, in Acts v. 41. Knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance; they were fully assured of this by faith in God's promise, and by God's work on their own hearts, qualifying and fitting them for it, Rom. viii. 15—17. That they have by promise given them as theirs, as fitted for them, a spiritual substance, an estate beyond what this world could afford them; riches, honours, and pleasures, better for their quality than all terrene ones; spiritual ones, proper for their souls, 1 Pet. i. 3, 4. The sum of which is God in Christ, their exceeding great reward, Gen. xv. 1, and all he can be to or do for them. He is their portion and their inheritance, the most excellent in itself, and the most enduring, out of the reach of men or devils, who can neither take it from them, nor them from it, it is safe enough in the heavens, Matt. vi. 19, 20; xix. 28, 29; Psal. xvi. 5; 2 Cor. v. 1; 2 Thess. i. 4, 5.

35 Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward.

Cast not away therefore your confidence: this introduceth the last direction for helping on their perseverance in Christianity. Μὴ ἀποβέβαλλετε denieth all degrees of apostacy, from secret undervaluing to an utter renouncing, not to slight, despise, or reject; they had endured already so much as might steel and fortify them against what remained, and implieth the bold, resolute, and courageous retention, Eph. vi. 10, 16, of the boldness of their confession of the Christian faith. It is an ingenuous, free, bold, and daring profession of it, which no brow-beating nor violence can dash out of countenance, the fruit of a mighty, invincible faith, and hope of eternal life. This makes them persevere courageously in their religion, notwithstanding a Phil. 1. 7.

2 Tim. 1. 16.
b Matt. 5. 12.
Acts 5. 41.
Jam. 1. 2.
c Or, that ye have in yourselves, or, for yourselves.

c Matt. 6. 20. & 19. 21. Luke 12. 33. 1 Tim. 6. 19.

2 Gal. 3. 4.
2 John 8.
11 ch. 6. 4.
x Phil. 1. 29.
30. Col. 2. 1.

d Mat. 5. 12.
& 10. 32.

a Phil. 1. 7.
& 14.
1 Thess. 2.
14.

their being laden with reproaches and sufferings for it, as Christ himself gave them a pattern, Mark viii. 31, 32; Acts iv. 13, 29, 31. Which hath great recompence of reward: what greater encouragement can there be to the retaining this confidence, than the great remuneration secured in the New Testament to them: God himself, in all his fulness, to be their exceeding great reward, seen and enjoyed by them; and which for quality and quantity is inexpressible, Gen. xv. 1; Matt. v. 12; x. 32.

<sup>e</sup> Luke 21. 12. Gal. 6. 9. ch. 12. 1. f Col. 3. 24. ch. 9. 15. 1 Pet. 1. 9. 36 For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.

For ye have need of patience: for shows this to be an enforcement of the former direction: Cast not away your confidence, for you have need of grace, which that must maintain in order to carry back your reward. It is therefore absolutely necessary, as well as useful to you, for the bearing of your burdens, persevering in all duty, and waiting for your reward, notwithstanding your reproaches, afflictions, and fiery trials, that you preserve your confidence in maintaining this patience, chap. vi. 12; Rom. ii. 7; James i. 4. That, after ye have done the will of God; that having believed God's promises, obeyed his precepts, endured his trials, and persevered in all, according to the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God; and so exercised our patience, and evidenced our confidence, and finished our work; ye might receive the promise; you may carry back, as your full prize, after your race. It is a necessary and true reparation from God, after his will is done, 1 Pet. i. 9; v. 4; the reward promised metonymically expressed by the promise, chap. v. 15; ix. 15; all that life and glorious inheritance in the reality and fulness of it, called a crowm of glory that fadeth not away, 1 Tim. iv. 8; 2 Tim. i. 1.

<sup>g</sup> Luke 18. 8. <sup>h</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 12. <sup>i</sup> Hab. 2. 3, 4. 37 For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

The reason of their retaining their confidence to the end, is the shortness of his coming, who will reward them for it, proved out of God's promise written to and for the church, by Habakkuk, chap. ii. 3. A truth sufficiently known to these Hebrews, as brought them by their own prophet; and though spoken for the comfort of the captives in Babylon then, yet it is extended to the suffering church in all ages, and so to these Hebrews, and to us also, upon whom the ends of the world are come, 1 Cor. x. 11. And though the prophet speaks it of a vision of grace, in promise to be despatched, yet the Septuagint refers it to a person; and in this the apostle follows them, because the promise cannot be made good without the coming of its Author to fulfil it. For yet a little while; in which promise there is the celerity or speed of it; as little, little as it may be, as is fit for Christ and them. How little is this time! a very short moment, as he speaks himself, Rev. xxii. 7, 12, 20. And he that shall come will come; he that hath promised to come and save you, and reckon with your persecutors, he will certainly come, he and his promise together, will despatch and put an end to the suffering of his, and put on their crowns. Metonymically, his coming is his saving, full refreshing, and rewarding his believing and patient sufferers. And will not tarry; he will not spin out time to delay deliverance, beyond the set point; he will not come behind the last moment, the hour fixed and appointed, which is pitched in infinite wisdom and goodness, for the best comfort of Christ's suffering members, Isa. xlvi. 13.

<sup>j</sup> Rom. 1. 17. <sup>k</sup> Gal. 3. 11. 38 Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

These are, as the former, the words of the Prophet Habakkuk, chap. ii. 4, enforcing the former duty pressed from the gain of perseverance, and the loss by withdrawing, when Christ shall come. They are used by this apostle Paul to several purposes, as to prove, that righteousness is only obtained by faith from God, and not by man's own works, Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; that whoever is righteous by faith, shall live for ever, by holding that righteousness in faith, as here. Now the just shall live by faith; the justified, according to the terms of the new covenant, who hath obtained the righteousness of God in Christ by believing, and is renewed and sanctified by the Spirit, shall really, spiritually, happily, eternally live; and no end shall be to that life of his, till it be perfected by Christ in glory. And this he shall live by a real and spiritual assent to the gospel, and reliance on God's promises in it, especially by an affiance to Christ, God-man, as the Lord their Righteousness, by which we have him ours, and so we live. This faith increased, continued in, and held fast amidst all reproaches, sufferings, and persecutions; by this only is the life, due to righteousness, made sure to sinners, drawing from Christ daily, and making real and present the fulness of it promised to and hoped for by it, Mark xiii. 13; John vi. 47; Gal. ii. 20; Col. iii. 4. But if any man draw back: see Hab. ii. 4, where πῖπυ translated here ὑποσπληται, is variously rendered, as, elated like a bubble, lifted up; making pride and unbelief to be the sins threatened there; and the proper sense of the word here used, is, for fear, or sloth, to withdraw, or leave their understanding: so that the meaning in both amounts to this, If any, out of the pride of their heart, will not depend on Christ's righteousness, as the Jews would not, or, out of fear and sluggishness, will not hold out, but withdraw themselves, in time of persecution, from their faith and confidence in Christ, professed; shrinking through fear, or losing it through sloth, or forsaking it by treachery, either gradually or totally, confiding in themselves, and so despising God; reject him, and draw away from him. My soul shall have no pleasure in him; God himself will be so far from taking any pleasure or delight in such a soul, or vouchsafe it any joy or life, that his very soul abhors it, is highly displeased with its sin, and abominates its person. In his displeasure is misery, death, and eternal perdition: see Deut. xxxii. 15, 18—21.

39 But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

The conclusion is a hopeful assertion of their condition, or a sweet intimation of what they ought to be, even like himself; and so the apostle removes all jealousy of his reflecting on them, as chap. vi. 9. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; the adversative, but, is an exception of them to whom he writes from the apostate state, and so joins himself with them, hoping they were such de facto as he was, and as they ought to be de jure; and so intimates their duty, and that of all Christians: We are not sons of defection, persons withdrawing and backsliding from Christ, his gospel, or duties; apostates from the truth, whose end is destruction, an utter separation from all good, life, and glory, and full subjection of body and soul to eternal torments in hell, by the righteous sentence of God, Matt. x. 28; who are sons of defection, are sons of perdition, John xvii. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 3. But of them that believe to the saving of the soul; sons of faith, true and sincere believers, cleaving to Christ and his body, rooted in his faith, and persevering in it to the end, Eph. iii. 17; Col. ii. 7: which faith acquiring, purchasing, or obtaining, according to the gospel covenant, the soul for salvation, and glory for the soul, John iii. 15, 16, 36; v. 40; 2 Thess. ii. 14. Faith realizing, applying, and keeping fast the price which Christ himself paid to God for the purchasing of these for them on their souls.

CHAP. XI

The nature of faith, and its acceptableness with God, set forth in the examples of many excellent persons of old time.

Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

Now faith: the Holy Spirit proceeds in this chapter to strengthen the counsel he had given these Hebrews to continue stedfast in the faith of Christ, to the end that they may receive their reward, the salvation of their souls, chap. x. 39; 1 Pet. i. 9; and so beginneth with a description of that faith, and proves it to be effectual to this end, by instances out of all ages of the world before them, wherein the Old Testament believers had found it to be so. The description of it is laid down, ver. 1; the proof of it in both parts, ver. 2, 3; and the illustration of its power by examples, ver. 4—40. The particle δὲ shows this is inferred as a discovery of that faith, which is saving or purchasing the soul; which that none of these Hebrews may be mistaken in, he describeth from its effect, and not from its form and essence. Faith is here a Divine fruit of the Spirit, given and wrought by it in his elect, and is justifying and purchasing the soul to glory, John xii. 38; Rom. v. 1; 2 Cor. xii. 9; Eph. i. 19, 20; ii. 8. Is the substance of things hoped for: ἰδέσθαι, in 2 Cor. ix. 4, notes confidence of boasting; Heb. i. 3, personal subsistence; and chap. iii. 14, confidence of faith. Here it is a real, present, confident assent of the soul of a believer to the promise of God, (which is the basis or foundation of it.) by which the spiritual good things to come, and which fall not under sense, yet with a most vehement and intense desire urged for, are made to have a mental, intellectual existence and subsistence in the soul which exerciseth it, Rom. viii. 18, 26; John iii. 36. The evidence of things not seen: ἔλεγκοι is a demonstrative discovery of that which falleth not under sense, such as is scientific, and puts matters out of question to a man; and therefore is styled by logicians a demonstration: here it notes faith to be that spiritual space which by God's revelation demonstrates or makes evident all things not seen by sense, or natural reason, without it, as matters of spiritual truth, good and evil in their several kinds, both past, present, and to come, John xvii. 6, 8; Eph. i. 17, 18.

<sup>k</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21. <sup>l</sup> Acts 16. 30, 31. <sup>m</sup> 1 Thess. 5. 9. <sup>n</sup> 2 Thes. 2. 14.

<sup>o</sup> Or, ground, or confidence. <sup>p</sup> Rom. 8. 24, 25. <sup>q</sup> 1 Cor. 4. 14. & 5. 7.

b ver. 33. 2 For <sup>b</sup>by it the elders obtained a good report.

This is a proof of the first part of faith's description, that it is the substance of things hoped for; for all the fathers were testified of to have this work of faith in realizing their hopes. Πρεσβυτεροι were the fathers and ancestors of these Hebrews, run up through their genealogies to Adam, the special instances of whom follow. These received a testimony or witness, truly and fully from God himself, in some signal acceptance of them, eminent appearances and providences to them, with a Scripture record of them, that through this grace of our Lord Jesus Christ they walked with, worshipped, and pleased God, and were saved by him, even as these Christians; and all this by the same grace of faith, Acts xv. 17, which wrought kindly in them, and made the invisible things of God to subsist with them.

3 Through faith we understand that <sup>c</sup>the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

This proves the second part of faith's description, ver. 1, that it is the evidence of things not seen; for by it only we understand the creation, which no eye saw. It is the same Divine faith as described before, but as evidencing invisible truths, it communicates a marvellous light to the understanding, and leaves real impressions of it from the word of God, whereby it arriveth unto a most certain knowledge of what is above the power of natural reason to convey, and gives a divine assent to it, such as is real, clear, sure, and fruitful, different from that of the Gentiles, Rom. i. 19—23. The worlds; τὰς αἰώνας the word noteth sometimes ages, Luke xvi. 8; the garb and corrupt habit of men who live in them, Eph. ii. 2; eternity: but there, as chap. i. 2, it is a word of aggregation, signifying all kinds of creatures, with their several places, times, and periods; things celestial, terrestrial, and subterrestrial; angels, men, and all sorts of creatures, together with all the states and conditions in which they were made. Were framed by the word of God; heaven, earth, and seas, with all their hosts of creatures, the visible creation and the invisible world, were put into being and existence, placed in their proper order, disposed and fitted to their end, by the mighty word of God: Trinity in Unity the Creator, his powerful fiat, without any pain, or trouble, or assisting causes, instantly effected this miraculous, glorious work; He spake, and it was done, Gen. i. 3, 6, 9, 11, 14, &c.; Psal. xxxiii. 6, 9. So that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear; the visible world, and all visible in it, were made all of nothing; this reason could never digest. All was produced of that formless, void, dark chaos which was invisible, Gen. i. 2; which void, formless, dark mass itself, was made of no pre-existent stuff, matter or atoms, but of nothing; which differeth to the operative power of God from that of all other agents. See Gen. i. 1; Psal. lxxxix. 11, 12; cxlviii. 5, 6, &c.; Isa. xlii. 5; xlv. 12, 18.

4 By faith <sup>d</sup>Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead <sup>e</sup>yet speaketh.

The Spirit beginneth here to illustrate his description of faith, by induction of instances throughout the former ages of the church to the time of these Hebrews; and he begins with believers in the old world before the flood. Faith is the same Divine grace as described before, only here to be considered as fully receiving of God's will in Christ as to sacrificing work, and remitting such affections and operations to God in it as were agreeable thereunto. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain: Abel, the younger son of Adam, an eminent believer, whose faith orders him and his worship, the first martyr for religion in the world, Luke xi. 51, who sealed the truth of God with his blood; he, in the end of days, that is, the sabbath, Gen. iv. 3, 4, brought a bloody sacrifice of the fattest and best of the flock, and offered up to the Divine Majesty, the true and living God, his Creator and Redeemer, to atone him for his sin; having a regard to, and faith in, the great sacrifice of the Seed of the woman, for him in fulness of time to be offered up, and of which his was but a type. This sacrifice was fuller of what God required in offerings, than Cain his elder brother's, not, it may be, for external price, but internal worth. Cain offered the fruits of the ground, such as God afterwards required in the ceremonial law, but he was not sensible of the guilt and filth of sin, and of its demerits, nor desirous to remove it in the due way and order appointed, as appears by his murdering of his brother after: Abel's sacrifice was better, more excellent, because more fully agreeable to God's will for purging and pardoning sin, full of self-denial and abasement for sin, and faith in Christ's sacrifice. By which he obtained witness that he was righteous; by which sacrifice of faith he had testimony that he acknowledged himself a sinner, that had need of the blood of Christ to sprinkle him; yet he was righteous by the righteousness of faith, Rom. iii. 22, 25, 26, which is upon Abel, as all other believers, Phil. iii. 9. And this testified to his soul, by God's Spirit, that he was justified and sanctified, and so eminently righteous; and it was manifested to others, Christ himself, God-man, witnessing of it, Matt. xxiii. 35. God testifying of his gifts; God himself witnessed from heaven to the truth of his state, by accepting of his person and sacrifice, and giving a visible sign of it, so as Cain could observe it, and be displeased at the difference God made between him and his brother, Gen. iv. 4, 5, 7; likely it was by sending fire from heaven, and consuming Abel's sacrifice, as he did others afterwards, Lev. ix. 24; Judg. vi. 19, 21; 1 Kings xviii. 38; 2 Chron. vii. 1; and by it testified him to be righteous. And by it he being dead yet speaketh; by his faith, though murdered out of this world, and his place here knows him no more, and with a design that he should never speak nor be spoken of more, yet he now speaketh, i. e. liveth, Matt. xxii. 32, and testifieth to God that he is true, and the only true God to make souls happy. He, in his example, and his record in Scripture, bespeaketh all that read his story to imitate him in his faith and worshipping of God, and his patient martyrdom for God and his gospel worship through Christ. And by his blood he crieth for justice against his murderer, as Gen. iv. 10; see chap. xii. 24; and as joined with the rest of the martyrs of Jesus, implends God's righteous vengeance to be executed on their bloody persecutors, Luke xi. 51; Rev. vi. 10, 11. By reason of his faith he is spoken of throughout all generations, recorded among the excellent sons of God, and renowned in the church to this day. Such a force hath faith to eternize the persons of believers in acceptance with God through Christ, their wrongs, injuries, and blood on God's

<sup>d</sup> Gen. 4. 4.
<sup>e</sup> 1 John 3. 12.

<sup>c</sup> Gen. 4. 10.
Mat. 23. 35.
ch. 12. 24.
<sup>e</sup> Or, is yet spoken of.

<sup>c</sup> Gen. 1. 1.
Ps. 33. 6.
John 1. 3.
ch. 1. 2.
<sup>d</sup> Pet. 3. 5.

remembrance, and their names in heaven and the church below.

<sup>f</sup> Gen. 5. 22, 24. <sup>Wid.</sup> 4. 17. <sup>Eccles.</sup> 44. 16. & 49. 14. 5 By faith <sup>1</sup> Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death: by the Divine faith before described, that which reacheth home to God by Christ, Enoch, the seventh patriarch in a descent from Adam of the church's line, Gen. v. 21, an eminent prophet and Boanerges, denouncing judgment against the ungodly ones of his time, so as to awaken them to repentance, Jude 14, 15, was taken by God, Gen. v. 24. The apostle keeps to the Septuagint translation of the text. He was miraculously changed in his body from a mortal to an immortal state, and this without any separation of his soul from it. God, out of an extraordinary grace and favour to him, dispensed with the common sentence passed on the human seed in Adam, as he did many ages after this to Elijah. He died not: all the rest of the fathers of the church, Gen. v. 5, 8, 27, the longest liver of them, died, And was not found; he was not, Gen. v. 24, neither among men, nor in their sepulchres, as others were, but had changed his habitation and society. If any went to seek him, as others did Elijah, he was far out of their finding, 2 Kings ii. 17. Because God had translated him; for God had taken him to himself in heaven, the place of his residence, and in the very act changed his body into a spiritual, powerful, glorious, and incorruptible one; as all ours, who are true believers, shall be at last, 1 Cor. xv. 51; 1 Thess. iv. 15; and so made fit for the place to which he was taken, made like an angel in person, and to be with those spirits in company; now did he fully see and enjoy him whom by faith he walked with beneath. For before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God; in the time of his life, and walking with God in this sinful world, all the time of his witnessing for God in it, God witnessed by his work on his soul to himself, by his ministry and life to the world, and by the prophet Moses's record of it to all generations to come in the church once and again, Gen. v. 22, 24, that in his walking with God he pleased him. He was not only justified, graciously accepted, and beloved of him, but he did that which was pleasing to God, putting out in thought, word, and deed all the power of grace to act for God; preserving constant converse and communion with him; and had no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but reproveth them. By this he pleased God, and God testified to all the world he did so, by a miraculous translation of him from the world to himself. God cares not for, nor will take to him, such who please him not.

6 But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

The Spirit here proveth that Enoch pleased God by faith, though it was not expressly written in his text by Moses, because of the impossibility of pleasing God without faith. But without faith it is impossible to please him; but without faith upon God in Christ, whom Enoch pleased, it is absolutely impossible to do any thing acceptable to God, so as to be justified by him; for infidelity, or want of faith, makes God a liar, 1 John v. 10, Christ a vanity, John v. 40, and God's will a deceit, which peremptorily saith, there is no pleasing of him but by faith in Christ, John xiv. 6. The effect cannot exist without its cause, as is proved in the next words. For he that cometh to God: for whoever he be, every particular soul, that cometh off from sin to God, so as to be under his conduct and influence; makes out by spiritual motions of his mind, will, affections, and members, in thoughts, desires, resolutions, and operations, to enjoy God, so as to be accepted with, justified by, and blessed of him; and at present makes his access to him with liberty and boldness in prayer, or any other duty, through Christ. Must believe that he is; he must really, fully, and supernaturally receive all that which God revealeth in his word is pleasing to him, especially concerning himself; as, that he is the primitive, perfect Being, and the Cause of all; that he is three in relations and one in essence, most excellent in all his attributes, infinitely wise, powerful, just, good, and eternal, &c., the supreme Creator and Governor of, and Lawgiver to, all. And that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him; and that he will recompense all men according to their works, but will eminently and freely give himself to be the reward of his, and whatever he can be to or do for them for their good, Gen. xv. 1; but to those only, who with an intent heart and spirit pursue him by faith, love, and longing after him as their supremest good, Isa. xiv. 22; Rom. ii. 6, 12; Rev. xxii. 12.

7 By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, || moved with fear, <sup>h</sup> prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of <sup>1</sup> the righteousness which is by faith.

By faith Noah, being warned of God; by the same Divine faith Noah, the last example of it in the old world, and the father of the new world, being warned by an immediate revelation from God, Gen. vi. 13, 21, largely rehearsed by Moses: so that God's word is the ground or foundation of Divine faith in all ages of the world. Of things not seen as yet; of things not yet seen, but only by faith in God's revelation: which things were the perishing of the world by a deluge of waters above one hundred years after; and that himself and family, with some creatures, should be saved from that deluge, to repeople the world, and to replenish the air and earth; none of which things did fall under Noah's sense then. Moved with fear; εὐλαβηθεὶς imports in it a right reception of God's revelation, which made him afraid, and careful not to offend God; and a godly carriage to him who had revealed the imminent danger of the sinful world, and his own deliverance from it: see chap. v. 7. Prepared an ark to the saving of his house; hereon he obeyeth God's precept, and prepared and perfected the vessel, both for matter and form, according to God's word; so as to be ready against the time of the deluge, for the preservation of himself and family by it. Gen. vi. 14—16, 22; compare 1 Pet. iii. 20. By virtue of this ark, that water which drowned the world saved them. So that flood was a full type of the water of baptism: his ark, of Christ our ark; his family, of Christ's small family in comparison of the world; their salvation from water, of the eternal salvation of these from the deluge of fire, 2 Pet. iii. 6, 7, 11, 14. The same Divine faith in Noah and in Christians, maketh them to obey God's precept, retire to and enter God's ark, and so enjoy his salvation. By the which he condemned the world; by this faith discovered in his work about the ark, he testified against the sinful world of mankind for their unbelief and disobedience, who for one hundred and twenty years together, being by Noah's preaching and building the ark called to repentance, 2 Pet. ii. 5, and to prevent the judgment God threatened on them; and so condemned them virtually by his word and doctrine, judicially by declaring God's sentence on them: see Matt. xii. 41, 42; John xii. 48. And became heir of the righteousness which is by faith; by this faith he received the promise of righteousness, which made him an heir of it, and of that eternal life and salvation for which it fitted him, as well as to which it entitled him; and by it he sent out all the fruits of righteousness that are to the praise and glory of God, Rom. v. 1; John i. 12.

8 By faith <sup>1</sup> Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

Here begin instances of this Divine faith after the flood from Abraham to Moses's time, ver. 8—22. The first is the father of believers, so entitled by God, eminent in the exercise of this grace, of whose ancestry, and their descent from him, these Hebrews did greatly glory. He had an express discovery of the will of God unto him, that he should leave the idolatrous place where he lived, Gen. xi. 31; xii. 1—3; compare Josh. xxiv. 2; Acts vii. 2, 3; and with his family should travel to a land which God would show him, and which he would give him as an inheritance for him and his, which was the land of Canaan, as described, Gen. xiii. 14—17; xxv. 18, 19, 21. This command of God, strengthened by a promise, he obeyed, Gen. xii. 4; Acts vii. 4: through faith, really, freely, and fully resigning up himself and his to God's disposal. And he went out not knowing whither he went; he went forth with his father Terah from his country, kindred, and friends, in Ur of the Chaldees, to Charran, and there they dwelt till Terah died, Gen. xi. 31; Acts vii. 4. After which, he pursued God's orders in his motion from place to place, though he knew neither the way, nor the place in which and whither he was to move, resting himself on God's word and guidance, and relying wholly on his provision for him, and protection of him in all his ways.

<sup>g</sup> Gen. 6. 13, 22. <sup>Ecclus.</sup> 4. 17. || Or, being wary. <sup>h</sup> 1 Fet. 3. 20.

<sup>i</sup> Rom. 2. 22. & 4. 13. <sup>Phil.</sup> 3. 9.

<sup>k</sup> Gen. 12. 1, 3, 4. || Acts 7. 2.

9 By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise:

By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country; by the same Divine faith he passed from tent to tent, moving it from place to place, as God ordered; so as he rather sojourned than dwelt in any. His journal is legible in Moses's history, moving from Charran to Shechem, from thence to Beth-el, and then more southward, and thence to Egypt; see Gen. xii. : so that he sojourned in Canaan, and the adjoining countries, which God had covenanted to give for an inheritance to him and his seed, Gen. xv. 18—21; yet by faith he would stay God's time for it, but lived in it as a stranger, not having in possession one foot of ground, but what he bought for a burying-place, Gen. xxv. 9, 10; Acts vii. 5. Dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise: here he, with his son Isaac, and grandson, and their seed, coheirs with him of Canaan, built no houses, but lived in tents, which they might pitch or remove at God's pleasure, and as he called them, as who were strangers to this country, and to the inhabitants of it, with whom they were to have no spiritual society, as travelling to a better; being in this world, but neither citizens nor inhabitants of it, but as denizens of a more excellent one, Gen. xxvi. 3; xxviii. 13, 14.

10 For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

The reason of this contented pilgrimage was the excellent end of it, the place and state to which it brought him; he did really discern by the Spirit's work in him, and promise to him, his title to it, and vehemently did desire and long for, and yet patiently waited for, a better place and state than this earthly; and was daily making his approaches to it, Rom. viii. 19; 2 Cor. v. 1, 2, 8, 9. For he looked for a city which hath foundations: πόλις notes both a place made up and constituted of buildings and houses, such was the earthly Jerusalem; and a state, polity, or community. Here it must be understood spiritually, for such a place and state as is not to be shadowed out by any in this world; it being for nature, mansions, society, condition, such as no earthly can decipher, or set out. This city is heaven itself, often so styled in this Epistle, as ver. 16; chap. xii. 22; xiii. 14; Rev. iii. 12. It is not movable, as a tent fastened by stakes and cords; nor as creature-buildings, perishable. Histories tell us of the rise and fall of the best earthly cities; this city is built on the Rock of ages, as well as by him, whose immutability, almightiness, and eternity hath laid and settled its foundations, the basis and ground-work, firm and incorruptible, 1 Pet. i. 4. Whose builder and maker is God; the happy fabric, with persons and state, endures for ever, because of its Raiser and Founder. The great Architect, that cast the plot and model of it in his own mind, and the publicly-declared Operator and Raiser of it, who laid the foundations, reared the mansions, and finished the whole, is no less person than the infinitely wise, almighty, and eternal God. It all became him alone, and doth as far exceed other cities as God doth men. No human art or power was fit or capable for such a work, but only God.

11 Through faith also Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised.

Through faith also Sara herself received strength to conceive seed; by the same Divine faith in Abraham and Sarah was brought forth the child of promise. For though the instance be expressly in Sarah, yet it is inclusive of Abraham also, who was eminent for his faith in this thing, acquiring an eminent title by it, even of the Father of believers, as the apostle declareth, Rom. iv. 17—22, and therefore jointly to be considered with Sarah. She, who first through unbelief laughed at the promise, yet being reproved by Christ, the Angel of the covenant, for it, believed on the repetition of it, Gen. xviii. 9—16, and gave testimony of it by her waiting for the promised mercy. As barren as she was, yet faith made her fruitful; when it was impossible of herself to expect it for nature or years, yet received she power and strength from God, by believing, to conceive seed, that is, laying the foundation of it, conceiving in her dead womb, and bearing a son. And was delivered of a child when she was past age; she was not only naturally barren, but of ninety years of age at this time, when the most fruitful were past such work; yet was she delivered of a son, and became the mother of Isaac by faith, as he was the son of promise, Gen. xv. 4; xviii. 11; compare Rom. iv. 17—19. Because she judged him faithful who had promised; she gave glory to God by a firm and hearty closure with his promise, accounting God faithful to his word, and able to perform it, and so rested on it, and waited for him, as Abraham did, Rom. iv. 18, 20, 21. The promise which he made was, That they in their old age should have a son, Gen. xii. 2; made in general, chap. xiii. 15, 16; in particular, chap. xv. 4, 5; to both, chap. xvii. 15—17; xviii. 10, 14; xxi. 1—3, 12.

12 Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable.

Because of this faith of Abraham and Sarah, and the fruit of it in conceiving and bringing forth Isaac, was laid the foundation of a numerous seed by God's promise; from Abraham, a hundred, and Sarah, ninety years old, and barren, and both dead as to procreation, Rom. iv. 19, there were begotten a vast and unbounded seed, as the stars in the firmament, or the sand on the sea shore; and amongst them the teeming blessing, the one eminent Seed of Abraham, the Messiah, in whom all nations were to be blessed. Within four hundred years from the birth of Isaac, this seed increased to above six hundred thousand fighting men, besides women and children, and after increased to a stupendous greatness, according to the promise, Gen. xiii. 16; xv. 5; Exod. xii. 47; 1 Chron. xxi. 5, 6.

13 These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

These all died in faith; all these, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Jacob, &c., who were heirs of the same promises, and who had opportunity to return to the same country from which they came forth, as ver. 15: they did not only live according to faith, walking with, worshipping of, and waiting on God, testifying against sin, but finishing their course by dying according to faith; by faith, as the instrumental efficient of it; in faith, as the regulating cause of it; according to faith, as in the state of believing. Faith was immortal in them as their souls, making their death a covenant dissolution, Luke ii. 29, a voluntary, hopeful, blessed death, as 2 Cor. v. 8; 1 Thess. iv. 13. Not having received the promises; not receiving actually, and in sense, the things promised, which were a numerous offspring, the literal Canaan, the Messiah in the flesh, and a glorious resurrection; but departed triumphing, and in the faith of all, and that they would be made good to theirs; and this

1 Gen. 12. 8.
& 13. 3, 18.
& 18. 1, 9.
m ch. 6. 17.

n ch. 12. 22.
& 13. 14.
o ch. 3. 4.
Rev. 21. 2.
10.

+ Gr. according to faith.
u ver. 39.
x ver. 27.
John 8. 56.
y Gen. 23.
z & 47. 9.
1 Chron. 29.
15. 1<sup>a</sup>, 39. 12.
& 119. 12.

p Gen. 17.
19. & 18. 11.
14. & 21. 2.

q See Luke
1. 36.
r Rom. 4. 21.
ch. 10. 23.

s Rom. 4. 19.
t Gen. 22. 17.
Rom. 4. 15.

1 Pet. 1. 17. & 2. 11.

they discovered by the blessings they left on each other, as Isaac on Jacob, and Jacob on the patriarchs. But having seen them afar off; but faith brought all these promises into their view, though so far off; so did Abraham see by it the Messiah, John viii. 56. They all had a real, clear, and strong prospect of them, the inheritance temporal in its time to come, and the heavenly rest beyond the grave, seeing the resurrection, heaven, and glory, by faith, when they died, Gen. xlix. 18. And were persuaded of them, and embraced them; by a powerful impression of faith on their souls, of the truth, goodness, and certainty of the things promised, on their minds, with a mighty apprehension of and assent to them in their wills, to the choosing of and closing with them in their affections; cleaving to them in love, desire, and delight, as surely to be accomplished; having their souls thankfully receiving them, graciously returning to God for them, with the greatest satisfaction embracing them, as are welcome friends or relations long absent from us; hugging Christ, saluting heaven, and embracing glory in the promises by faith, when dying. And confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth; in word and deed; while they lived they published it to the world, as Abraham, Gen. xxiii. 4, and Jacob, Gen. xlvii. 9; keeping themselves free from all entanglements of this earth, as became those who are strangers, having no possession of, nor intimacy with, this earth; incorporating with no other people, but as pilgrims wandered from place to place, took up and pitched their tents when and where God would have them, unpeopled as to this world, and desiring to be peopled with the Lord, Psal. xxxix. 12; cv. 12, 13; compare 2 Cor. v. 6, 8. They were all of the same mind, loose from and above this world, and longing to remove to their own country and be with God.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 13. 14. 14 For they that say such things <sup>a</sup> declare plainly that they seek a country.

The reason of faith's effect in their dying, is the bringing in view a better life, state, and place than any earthly one. For these believers, by word and life professing themselves to be strangers and pilgrims on this earth, and seeing God's promises, and embracing them, declare and show plainly to all who see them, or converse with them, that they seek a country, and a place of rest, which they were not possessed of. For no person is a stranger or pilgrim in his own country; but these inquired the way, and walked in it, which led them to a better than any this earth afforded them; and so the apostle brings us back to that which he had declared before, ver. 10, and immediately prevents the suggestion, that this country should be their former country, and clears it to be a better.

15 And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned.

Though they were strangers in Canaan, yet they might seek an earthly country, even Ur of the Chaldees, from whence they came forth, and which was their native country, and so might be dearer to them than any other; but it was not that, but a better country, they were mindful of, which they viewed by faith; whereas the other they might have seen with their eyes. If that had been all they desired, they wanted neither means nor opportunity of returning to it, but they remained fixed in obedience to the heavenly call; and when Jacob returned to it for a wife, yet he left it again when God summoned him, as appears, Gen. xxix., xxx., xxxi. They did willingly leave it, and kept from it, and never looked back there, but looked for a better.

16 But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed <sup>a</sup> to be called their God: for <sup>b</sup> he hath prepared for them a city.

But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: having deserted this world, as strangers in it, they sought, desired, and hoped for with the greatest earnestness and fervency, a city in the country of heaven, ver. 10, in comparison with which they contemned and despised all others; a country where there is perfection of life, and fulness of glory: it excellet all others as far as heaven doth earth, 2 Tim. iv. 18; 1 Pet. i. 4. The state, society, enjoyments, and place, they longed for, were all heavenly, Phil. iii. 20, 21; nothing lower than this world would satisfy them. Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: faith having carried them thus estranged from this world to the grave, endearing to them the promises, and engaging of them for heaven only, therefore God did not disdain them, he did not think it any disrepute to him to own them his, but esteemed it an honour and reputation to him, took up his joy and delight in them: see him owning them when dead, Exod. iii. 6, 15; Matt. xxii. 31, 32; sur naming himself by them, and adopting them as his own, as Jacob did Joseph's sons, Gen. xlvi. 56; so that though they are dead as to their bodies, yet they are alive as to their souls, and are owned by God in his name and title, and are assured, as to their dust, of a resurrection; for he will do it, giving them that rest that they never had in their pilgrimage. For he hath prepared for them a city; that heavenly state and place which they sought for, ver. 10, which infinitely transcended Canaan, and the Jerusalem in it, of which they were denizens while here, Eph. ii. 19; Phil. iii. 20; the pleasant, peaceful, rich, and glorious metropolis of the living God, chap. xii. 22; xiii. 14; which shall make abundant amends for all their sorrows, sufferings, and restless wanderings on earth, where they shall enjoy pleasures, riches, honours, and rest for evermore, 1 Pet. i. 4.

17 By faith <sup>c</sup> Abraham, when he was <sup>d</sup> tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had <sup>e</sup> received the promises <sup>f</sup> offered up his <sup>g</sup> only begotten son,

By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; by the same excellent faith Abraham alone, and by himself considered, being tried by God, in a rare way, to give proof of the truth of his faith in and love to him above all, was to take his only son, his darling, and to offer him for a whole burnt offering on Mount Moriah, to himself, Gen. xxii. 2. Which command of God was not unjust, he having absolute sovereignty and dominion over all persons and their lives, having power to kill, and to make alive, Deut. xxxii. 39. This son of his he offered up as God commanded; for in his heart he had fully parted with him to God, and proceeded so far in execution, as, if God had not dispensed with it, it had been actually done, he would have killed him and burnt him to ashes on the altar, Gen. xxii. 3, 6—13. And he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son: this mighty faith enabled him to do this, though he was his only begotten son by promise, and in the church's line, concerning whom he had received so many promises, and in whom only they were to be fulfilled, as that a numerous seed should descend from him, who should inherit Canaan, and through whom Christ was to descend into the world, in whom himself and all nations were to be blessed. Yet faith silenceth reason and natural affection, assur eth him God could fulfil his promises by him though he should offer him, as he raised him from a dead body and womb at first, and gave him to him: so he obeyeth God's word, and offereth him.

18 || Of whom it was said, <sup>h</sup> That in <sup>i</sup> Isaac shall thy seed be called:

This did greaten Abraham's trial, that unto him it was promised by God himself, That in this only begotten son Isaac, the eminently blessed and blessing Seed, with all his mystical body, should be called; that is, put in being, propagated and made known as by name in Isaac, Gal. iv. 28. This God revealed to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 19, 21, and hereby was his faith put to it to reconcile contradictions, as to believe this special promise, and yet execute this special command to sacrifice Isaac, yet to believe in him his seed should be called.

19 Accounting that God <sup>j</sup> was able to <sup>k</sup> raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure.

Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead: faith put this into Abraham's thoughts in his reasonings about this trial between the temptation and God's power, and influenced him to conclude and determine under it. That since God could raise him from the dead to perform his promises, he would sacrifice him to obey God's command. This faith grew from what God had done, in

<sup>a</sup> Ex. 3. 4, 15.
<sup>b</sup> Matt. 22. 32.
<sup>c</sup> Act. 7. 32.
<sup>d</sup> Phil. 3. 20.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 13. 14.

<sup>h</sup> Or, To.
<sup>i</sup> Gen. 21. 12.
<sup>j</sup> Rom. 9. 7.

<sup>k</sup> Rom. 4. 17, 19, 21.

giving him Isaac from his own dead body, and Sarah's dead womb, Rom. iv. 17—22. God's almighty power to raise from the dead answered all the difficulties in the trial. If God command it, who can raise from the dead, this can be no murder; for he can either prevent or recover. Promises should not fail, though Isaac was sacrificed; for God would raise him up and accomplish them. As to arguments from natural affection: Shall a child be dearer to me than a God, who quickens me, and can raise him from the dead? Since God can do this, what difficulties can he not overcome? Hence is this principle so often revealed and repeated to be a sure prop to a Christian's faith throughout the gospel. From whence also he received him in a figure: his generation was a kind of resurrection from the dead, and so was his restitution to Abraham, for in Abraham's account he was dead, his hand being lifted up to kill him, when the angel stops the execution, Gen. xxii. 11, 12. From the altar he carrieth him back as a trophy and reward of the victory of his faith, in such a manner as one risen from the dead, and an eminent signal of his victory over this temptation. Abraham had a figure of the resurrection in his son, and an earnest of a far more glorious resurrection in Christ.

g Gen. 27.
27, 29

20 By faith <sup>g</sup> Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come.

Isaac is the next example instanced in of the same Divine faith, described, ver. 1; only here exercised on the special revelation of God to him concerning his seed. By this faith he did not only wish and pray blessings, but prophetically applied them to his two sons, to Jacob and Israel his seed the covenant blessings, and to Esau and the Edomites his seed the temporary blessings, God designed them, Gen. xxvii. 27, 29. Both these were things to come, and to be communicated to their seeds hundreds of years after. As the things to come that concerned Jacob, which were not seen, but hoped for from God's revelation of them, were, plenty, dominion over brethren, blessings above the power of a curse, even the spiritual and covenanted ones of Abraham and Isaac with him, Gen. xxvii. 28, 29. The things to come concerning Esau and his seed, were only earthly, temporal blessings, escape out of servitude in time, common good things at the highest, Gen. xxvii. 39, 40. By faith Isaac foresaw all these future events, foretold them, and applied their several portions to them from the mouth of God, and they were to a tittle fulfilled, 2 Sam. viii. 14, and 2 Kings viii. 20, as to the Edomites; as in the whole Old Testament unto Jacob, and to his seed literal and spiritual.

h Gen. 48.
5, 16, 20.
i Gen. 47. 31.

21 By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, <sup>h</sup> blessed both the sons of Joseph; and <sup>i</sup> worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff.

By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph: Jacob did not degenerate from his progenitors, but by the same excellent faith (being heir to the birthright and blessing, by God's appointment, and his father's confirmation, as Gen. xxviii. 1, 3, 4) doth, as a grandfather and a prophet, near expiring, weak in body, but strong in faith, bless Joseph, and each of his sons, Gen. xlviii. 15—20, preferring Ephraim the younger before Manasseh the elder, by laying his right hand on his head, and his left on the other's; and so adopts them to be his children, gives them the blessing of the covenant, as to their persons, and the inheritance of two tribes amongst his sons, as belonging to Joseph, as his birthright, Gen. xlix. 22—26. These by faith he foretold, and applied particularly to each of them from God himself through prayer. And worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff: another effect of his faith, is his worshipping God, having bequeathed his body to the burial in a firm expectation of the promised inheritance, as the history clears, Gen. xlvii. 29—31; xlviii. 21, 22. For having sent for Joseph, he raiseth up himself on the pillow at the bed's head, and for his support used his staff, leaning on the head of it, when in faith he declares his will to his son Joseph, and binds him by an oath to bury him in Machpelah in Canaan, with Abraham and Isaac, heirs of the same promise, as an earnest and handsel of the twelve tribes' possessing it; which Joseph having solemnly sworn to him, Jacob bowed himself and worshipped, lifting up his heart to God in thankfulness for his continual providence in the gradual accomplishment of his promise to the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. This he did by faith, adoring his sovereign Lord and Saviour by his humbly bowing before him. There was no need of faith to bow to Joseph, who was inferior to Jacob, and blessed by him.

22 By faith <sup>k</sup> Joseph, when he died, <sup>l</sup> made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones.

k Gen. 50.
24, 25.
Ex. 13. 9.
l Or, remembered.

By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel: Joseph, the first son of Jacob by Rachel, whom God preferred before his brethren, envied and sold by them, but advanced by him to be lord of Egypt, and a saviour to them, heir of the birthright, and of his father's grace, a patriarch and prophet like him; drawing near to the end of his pilgrimage on earth, and dying, he made mention, and brought to the mind of the Israelites his children, brethren, and nephews, and, likely, with a charge to convey it down to their posterity, as it might be remembered by them, that this he did with willingness and choice, looking for a better place and state than any in Egypt, and that his death should not obstruct the issues of providence to them for good; for God lived, and would surely visit them in their posterity, Israel living when he sent Moses to them, and would make them go up gloriously out of Egypt, and bring them into the Land of Promise, and give it to them for their inheritance. This testimony he gives them of it by faith, Gen. l. 24; and God fulfilled it one hundred and sixty years after his death, as he had sworn to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And gave commandment concerning his bones: by faith likewise he charged them about carrying his embalmed body with them and burying it in Canaan, and obliged the Israelites to it by an oath, Gen. l. 25, making it an earnest and signal to them of the promise and oath of God for their deliverance, that as he desired his bones might be buried in Canaan, being heir together with Jacob of the same promised inheritance, it might be a visible token of, and encouragement in, the appointed time, to their return. And this Israel fulfilled, Exod. xiii. 19, carrying them away with them, and afterwards burying them in Shechem, the lot of Ephraim, Josh. xxiv. 32.

23 By faith <sup>m</sup> Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's <sup>n</sup> commandment.

l Ex. 2. 2
Acts 7. 20.

m Ex. 1. 16,
22.

By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents: the parents of Moses were as eminent in this faith as their progenitors; for by it Amram and Jochebed, both of them of the tribe of Levi, Exod. vi. 20, (παρέβον here put by a metaphrase for γονεῖς, and though in the history ascribed to the mother only, yet it was by the father's direction, as Exod. ii. 2; compare Acts vii. 20.) hid Moses, born under the bloody edict of a tyrant for drowning all the Hebrew males in the Nile. He was born three years after Aaron, and sixty-five after Joseph's death. They kept him three months from the destroyers, and they adventured the penalties threatened by the edict, Exod. ii. 2, 3; faith overcoming their fears and difficulties about it, and, in all probability, ordered their fitting the ark, and disposal of it for his preservation, with the other acts attending it. Because they saw he was a proper child: the reason of faith's work was their seeing of him to be ἀεισιος, fair, beautiful, proper; and this not in himself only, but, as Stephen interprets it, ἀεισιον τῷ Θεῷ, fair to God, Acts vii. 20. Some glorious aspect was by God put upon him as a signal of some great person, and of great use in God's design to his church; some extraordinary stamp of God on his countenance, which faith could discern there, and so influence them to conceal and preserve him. And they were not afraid of the king's commandment; faith made them fearless; for they were not afraid that the king's edict should frustrate God's purpose concerning the child, or keep him from its service to the church, wherein God would employ him, and of which he had given them a signal in that lustre cast on his person; and therefore they used means to preserve him, even when they exposed him, and which had a suitable success, Exod. ii. 3—10.

n Ex. 2. 10, 11.

24 By faith <sup>n</sup> Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;

Moses himself was as eminent a believer as his parents, and a mighty instance of Divine faith. He who was so named and saved by the enemies of the church, and adopted as a son to a notorious one of them, yet being great in age and stature, full forty. Exod. iii. 11; Acts vii. 23, past the folly of childhood and rashness of youth, upon manly deliberation and a rational exercise of faith, notwithstanding he was by birth a poor Israelite, and saved from perishing by a princess, the daughter of a potent king; nourished through her indulgence by his own mother, adopted as her own son, educated by her in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, preferred, owned, and honoured as her son, and might have been in a fair way to have succeeded to the kingdom; yet, not out of any disingenuity, or base ingratitude to his eminent preserver, but out of a Divine faith, he layeth down all his titles and honours, and renounceth his relation, for the enjoyment of a better title with, and a greater good in, God; and this he manifested by word and deed in his after-transactions, ver. 25.

o Ps. 84. 10.

25 <sup>o</sup> Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season;

Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God: the same faith influenced his will, the cause of his former renunciation; for being in the present fruition of all court favours, and under the offers of all worldly delights by Egypt, and of all worldly discontents by God, faith determined his choice, made him a fellow sufferer in all the oppressions, afflictions, persecutions of his natural brethren the people of God, the most privileged society in the world for hope, as the most exercised by trials for God's sake: he knew there would be eternal rest and glory into which they would issue him, besides glorious effects they would have on his soul while he was enduring them; and that they were but passing, and would quickly have an end, Rom. viii. 18; 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. Than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: the same faith made him to reject the enticing pleasures of sin, which could not be avoided by his continuance in Pharaoh's court, either in dissembling himself to be no Israelite, professing himself to be an Egyptian, taking part with them in their cruel carriage to his brethren, living after their vicious course in all manner of voluptuousness; and the pleasures which he was to enjoy were sinful, transitory, and momentaneous, neither satisfying nor enduring, and must be attended with a sting in the end of them, even eternal anguish and torment, whereas his afflictions would end in eternal joys and pleasures, Mark ix. 43, 44, 47; Luke xvi. 25.

p ch. 12. 13.
Or, for Christ.

26 Esteeming <sup>p</sup> the reproach || of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto <sup>q</sup> the recompence of the reward.

Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: faith influenced and determined his former choice from the most excellent ground of it, the representation of these by the Divine inspired truth to him; it made him weigh and deliberate about the matters proposed, and then to judge, and positively determine about them, That the reproachful suffering of all sorts of afflictions, poverty, distresses, tortures, most ignominiously inflicted on them by their enemies for their faith in Christ, and expectation of him according to God's promise, and who was now the Angel of the covenant that protected them, as well as their ancestor Jacob, Gen. xlviii. 15, 16: these Moses chose to suffer patiently, out of faith in and love to Christ; these, with what excellent things were to follow by virtue of God's promise, he preferred as a better and richer estate, and infinitely more desirable, than all the treasures of honours and riches, which either Egypt or its king could oblige him with, the whole of them founded in the dust, disposed by flesh, fading in enjoyment, and ending in vanity. What are these treasures, compared to those laid up in store by Christ for his in heaven? For he had respect unto the recompence of the reward: these were the things Moses had in his eye, the end of Christ's reproach, and Egypt's glory; this made him turn his eye and heart away from Egypt, and intently to look on the excellent issue of his reproachful sufferings for Christ, even Christ rendering to him his unexpressibly glorious and eternal reward for it, 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. This God had promised to, Christ had purchased for, such, who were by faith bearing his reproach, and qualified for the enjoying of it, Rom. viii. 17, 18; 2 Tim. ii. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 13, 14.

27 By faith <sup>r</sup> he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as <sup>s</sup> seeing him who is invisible.

By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: by the same excellent faith, after his demand from Pharaoh of liberty for Israel to leave Egypt, and he had brought on him and his people the ten plagues God threatened them with, then he brake the bands of captivity, and took up Israel, and left Egypt subdued, wasted by plagues, and a place to be abhorred; triumphing over it, he forsakes it as a conqueror, and carrieth away the spoils of it. The wrath and rage of Pharaoh at him and his work for Israel, did not appal him; he was not afraid of his threatening to kill him, Exod. x. 28, 29; yet he defied him, even when his rage made him to pursue him and Israel with his host to destroy them. For he endured, as seeing him who is invisible; ἰκαρτίῳ, he was of a bold, undaunted spirit, so as nothing was too hard for him, either to suffer or do: magnanimity expelled his fear, so as he would stand or march according to God's order, faith presenting to his view at all times the great Angel of the covenant, God the Son, the Redeemer of him and Israel, the only Potentate, the invisible King of kings, and Lord of lords, 1 Tim. vi. 14—16; with him, and for him, against Pharaoh, leading, covering, and guarding him and Israel in all the way, and fulfilling his promise of delivering of his church from Egypt; this makes him to march undauntedly with God's host.

28 Through faith <sup>t</sup> he kept the Passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the firstborn should touch them.

Through faith he kept the Passover, and the sprinkling of blood: this Divine faith influenced him in all his work about God's ordinances, receiving the law about them from God's mouth, and obeying it. By it he made the Passover, i. e. as God's instrument, he instituted it, and put it into being, Exod. xii. 21; he celebrated and solemnly managed in each particular, and finished it, reaching the end of it according to God's law in that behalf, 1 Cor. v. 7. Here he saw Christ, and testified of him, the true paschal Lamb of God; by whom God's wrath passed over the children of Israel, when it rested upon the Egyptians, Exod. xii. 21, &c. By faith he took a bunch of hyssop, and dipped it in the blood of the paschal lamb, and struck the lintel and two side-posts of the doors with the blood, Exod. xii. 22. He used it as a signal of God's sparing Israel, and passing over their houses by his angel, ver. 23; and he saw in it the true blood of sprinkling, of Christ our Passover, which saveth souls from the destroyer, John v. 46, and brings them out of the Egypt of this world into the heavenly Canaan. Lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them: the end of both these was, that the destroying angel, who slew the first-born of the Egyptians, might not touch an Israelite, Exod. xii. 29, 30. Under all this, faith evidenced to Moses God's faithfulness in his promise, it ordered all his duty, and it realized to their hope in that time of danger, that God would save them, who were under that blood, working the assurance of it.

29 By faith <sup>u</sup> they passed through the Red sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned.

By faith they passed through the Red sea as by dry land: the same faith enabled Moses eminently, and those other believers, as Aaron, Caleb, Joshua, &c.; for all Israel believed not, 1 Cor. x. 5. yet for the faithful's sake were they kept from drowning, after Moses had, at God's command, (when the Israelites were ready to be fallen on by the Egyptians,) lifted up his rod, and stretched his hand over the Red Sea, when God immediately, by an east wind, divided it, made the waters to stand up on each side like walls of crystal, and the bottom of it to be dry; then entered Moses and Israel into the empty and dry space, and walked through it on dry ground, and not a soul of Israel miscarried, but might see astonishing power and mercy in it, Exod. xiv. 22. Which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned: in the mean time the Egyptians, with their king, pursuing Israel for their ruin, find their own; for presumptuously adventuring to pursue them through this miraculous space, guided by sense, and not by faith, and thinking to pass as safe as Israel, when they had no word for it, God troubles them by his angels in their motion, makes them drive heavily; and having brought them into his pit in the midst of the channel, the crystal walls dissolve, and the waters, returning to their fluid nature, quickly overwhelmed and swallowed up all that host, so as not one of these unbelieving, presumptuous, persecuting wretches escaped. God's great work in this, as to Israel, had a double meaning; literal, their salvation from the Egyptians; mystical, their baptismal initiation into the covenant of God by Moses: though all of them had not faith unfeigned, yet they professed faith in God; and the doctrine Moses brought from him, was accounted sufficient to attain both, 1 Cor. x. 2.

x Josh. 6. 20. 30 By faith <sup>a</sup>the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.

This Divine faith, exercised by Joshua and Israel after their entrance into the Land of Promise, (who did, on God's word and command, compass the impregnable walls of Jericho once every day for six days together, and on the seventh day seven times, sounding with trumpets of rams' horns, and at last giving a shout,) brought down these walls flat to the ground by the almighty power of God, to whom they were as nothing, Josh. vi. 20. Faith in all this, realized God's promise to them, reached forth their love to him, and obedience in all particulars required by him, glorifying God, as the great Captain of their hosts, as he revealed himself, Josh. v. 13—15; committing the work and event to him, who, by the breath of faith, doth crumble down these walls before them.

y Josh. 6. 23. 31 By faith <sup>v</sup>the harlot Rahab perished not with them || that believed not, when <sup>w</sup>she had received the spies with peace.

By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not; by the same gospel faith Rahab, who, as the Jews read the word, Josh. ii. 1, רַחַב was an hostess, and kept a house of entertainment, and so came to lodge the spies; or, as the Septuagint read it, and the Holy Ghost confirms it here, and James ii. 25, was a public harlot, who gat her livelihood by the prostitution of her body, as well as the sale of meat and drink: so notorious a sinner as she, and a Canaanite too, was preserved from the destruction that was inflicted by the Israelites on the unbelieving and disobedient inhabitants of Jericho, being, after her exclusion out of the camp, in order to a legal purifying, admitted into God's church, and honoured by him to be a mother in Israel, from whom the Messiah should descend, Josh. vi. 23, 25. When she had received the spies with peace: the full proof of her being a believer, was her entertaining of the spies sent from Joshua to Jericho, preserving them when sought for, and dismissing them, advising them what they were to do in order to their safety, Josh. ii. 3, 10, to the end. The ground of all this, was her faith in God's promise of giving Canaan to Israel, confirmed by the great works she heard God had done for them, and her own expectation of good only in the portion of God's people, to whom she desired to be united, which was afterwards accomplished. Neither doth Paul and James contradict each other concerning her faith and works, James ii. 25; for she was exempted from destruction by the same faith by which she was justified; and her faith was justified to be sound and true, by her carriage to the spies, for it was a full demonstration of her faith in God.

a Judge. 6. 11. 32 And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of <sup>a</sup>Gideon, and of <sup>b</sup>Barak, and of <sup>c</sup>Samson, and of

<sup>d</sup>Jephthae; of <sup>e</sup>David also, and <sup>f</sup>Samuel, and of the prophets:

And what shall I more say? here the Spirit puts a period to the induction by an exposition, as if he had said, Why do I speak of so many examples of faith? the Old Testament is full of them; but here is proof enough, I will say no more. For the time would fail me to tell, &c.; for time of life and writing would be sooner gone, than a full account can be given of all the notable effects of faith by all these worthies who might be named; yet he would give some general hints of persons, and of the works of faith, which he judgeth sufficient, and so nameth promiscuously, and not in order of time wherein they existed. He nameth four judges, one king, and one prophet, and extraordinary prophets in a bulk, whose histories you have; of Gideon, Judg. vi. 11, &c., Barak, Judg. iv. 5, &c., Samson, Judg. xiii.—xvi., Jephthah, Judg. xi, xii., David's history and Samuel's in the First and Second Books of Samuel, and the First of Chronicles; the excellent exploits of whose faith are, as their names, enumerated promiscuously; some of them agreeing to particular persons, others to them all.

33 Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, <sup>g</sup>obtained promises, <sup>h</sup>stopped the mouths of lions,

These, by the same gospel faith, subdued kingdoms, defeating the mighty enemies of the church; and eminently amongst them, David, who conquered Edom, Moab, Ammon, and the Syrian kingdoms, and extended his conquests to the Euphrates. This he and they did in obedience to God's call, in dependence on God's promise both of conduct and victory. All was done by God's arm at the instance of faith and prayer, Psal. xviii. 29—42; xx. 5, 9. Wrought righteousness; they were all of them eminently righteous in their persons, and in their administration of justice to others; the utmost of their abilities were laid out in it, as became righteous judges, as to all matters of God and men, Judg. vi.; 1 Sam. vii. 15, 17; xii. 2, 6. Obtained promises; a real and actual possession of all those good things which God secured to them by promise; especially as to Gideon and Barak, victory and success over the Canaanites and Midianites, Judg. iv., vi.; Samson, victory over the Philistines; David, victory over the church's enemies. All which they first obtained in the promise, and then in the execution. Faith secured all, giving a real enjoyment of all the good made theirs in the promise, and then in the event; and will give the fulness of all good in general promises made to the church and them in the end. Stopped the mouths of lions: Daniel, an eminent prophet of God, believed in him, and for his testimony to him was cast into the den of lions to be devoured, where God stops the mouths of them on his faith and prayer, and opens them to destroy their adversaries, Dan. vi. 22. By the power and strength of God, both Samson and David slew those lions which would have preyed both on them and others, Judg. xiv. 6; 1 Sam. xvii. 34—36. Faith obtained this success for them.

34 Quenched the violence of fire, <sup>i</sup>escaped the edge of the sword, <sup>j</sup>out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, <sup>k</sup>turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

Quenched the violence of fire: by the same faith others of the prophets, ver. 32, eminently acquainted with God, and partakers of his secret, who defying idolatry, and the threatenings of a tyrant, became confessors of the true God and his worship, and were adjudged to the fiery furnace, Dan. iii. 19, 23, and by faith were secured from being consumed by those flames, which in an instant destroyed those which threw them in, ver. 22—28. How did this fetch down the Son of God himself to accompany them, and to suspend the consuming power of the fire, so as it did not singe either their persons or garments, or to leave any scent of it upon them! And how did Moses's and Aaron's prayers extinguish the fire at Kibroth-hattaavah, and at Taberah! Numb. xi. 1, 3; xvi. 22—45. Escaped the edge of the sword: by faith these worthies, forementioned, ver. 32, were delivered, when others fell by the devouring a Judge. 6. 11.

b Judg. 4. 6.
c Judg. 13.
d
e f g
h i j
k

d Judg. 11.
1. & 12. 7.
e 1 Sam. 16.
f 1 Sam. 1. 20. & 12. 28.

g 2 Sam. 7.
h 11. &c.
i 11. Judg. 14.
j 5, 6. 1 Sam.
17. 34. 35.
k Dan. 6. 22.

l Dan. 3. 25.
m 1 Sam. 20.
n 1. 1 Kings
19. 3.
o 2 Kings 6. 16.
p 12 Kings 20.
q 1. Ke. Job 42.
r 10. Ps. 6. 8.
s Judg. 15.
t 9, 15.

1 Sam. 14. 13. &c. & 17. 51. 52. 2 Sam. 8. 1, &c.

sword, and all those instruments of war which were destructive to others. Their enemies fell by their swords in those many battles wherein they were engaged, fulfilling at that time God's will, and trusting on his promise. And how many of the prophets hath God delivered from the swords of those who would have killed them! Out of weakness were made strong; by faith many of those who had many natural infirmities, both of body and mind, had their tremblings and faintings of spirit, and were, in respect of their enemies, weak, few in number, short of them, as to force, power, and policy, yet by faith in God were made bold as lions, and had wonderful success against numerous and potent enemies, Judg. iv. 8; vi. 15, 16; vii. 5, 7, 10; xi. 29; xv. 11, 19; 1 Sam. vii. 9, 10, &c. Waxed valiant in fight; faith made those who were called to the war by God, mighty for that service, 2 Sam. xxii. 30—38, so as no perils could daunt them, no service was too hard for them. How victorious in the most desperate attempts, as to sense, did faith make them! Psal. xxvii. 1, 3. Turned to flight the armies of the aliens; they overthrew the camps of adversaries. Παρεμβολή notes a single castle or tower, Acts xxi. 34, or a whole camp or place where an army is pitched, chap. xiii. 11, 13; in the plural, many such tents where soldiers lie; and is metonymically read armies. Τὸ κλιπεῖν, actively taken, is to make to lie down, or to throw down, as applied to tents and camps; to put to flight, as applied to armies; all which were those of the idolatrous enemies of the church, strangers to their country, and more to their God, as the army and camp of Midian, Judg. vii. 13—23, which were overturned, routed, and destroyed by them.

35 <sup>n</sup> Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were <sup>o</sup> tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection:

Women received their dead raised to life again: through this Divine faith, both the prophets Elijah and Elisha did raise and restore, the one to the widow of Sarepta, 1 Kings xvii. 22, 23, the other to the Shunammite, 2 Kings iv. 35, 36, their sons from the dead; and these women and mothers did by faith receive them from the prophets alive again, who by faith and prayer procured this mercy from the quickening Lord, for them. In the general resurrection all shall be raised by the power of God, and the effect of faith therein is only receptive; we shall enjoy life again, and receive others from the dead also. And others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; others also, besides the prophets forementioned, ver. 32, ἐτυμpanίσθησαν, were tympanized; what manner of torturing death this was, is not so certain, whether by excoriation, and making drum-heads of their skins, or extending them on the rack, as the skin or parchment is on the drum-head, and then with clubs, or other instruments, beating them to death; of which sort of sufferers seems Eleazer to be under Antiochus Epiphanes, 2 Macc. vi. 19, 30, for his not turning heathen, when urged to it by that torture; and though his deliverance from torture and death were offered to him by his tormentors on compliance with them, and renouncing his religion, yet he refused it, as others did, 2 Macc. vii. 24, resolving to endure the utmost extremity rather than turn idolater, and disobey God. That they might obtain a better resurrection: that which influenced them to suffer, was their faith in God's promise of obtaining thereby a resurrection to an incomparable better life than they could have enjoyed on earth; for though they might have been spared from death now threatened them, which was a kind of resurrection, yet was it not to be compared with the resurrection to eternal life, glory, bliss, and pleasure, to be enjoyed by them with God in heaven. See what influenced them, 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

36 <sup>p</sup> And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover <sup>q</sup> of bonds and imprisonment:

And others had trial of cruel mockings; the same gospel faith enabled others than those mentioned before, prophets and saints, as Micajah, 1 Kings xxii. 24, Elisha, 2 Kings ii. 23; Isa. viii. 18; Amos, chap. vii. 10, readily, cheerfully, and patiently to accept and receive the experience and trials of mocking, from the insulting, cruel enemies of God and his church, both national and aliens; being exposed and made a laughing-stock by reproaches, sarcasms, and nick-names, to aggravate their afflictions; and these inflicted on them by words and external signs, trials which, to an ingenious spirit, bears harder than external torments, and which they more deeply sense and resent; yet faith makes them to receive all humbly, and carrieth them above them, as Psal. xxxi. 20; lii. 1—5; cxx. 3, 4; cxi. 3. And scourgings; they felt the scourges and whips of their enemies smart on them, such as were excessively shameful and painful, being inflicted on the vilest persons, as slaves; such as was the matter of these scourges, such their smartings, whether of thongs, cords, or wires, Jer. xx. 2; xxxvii. 15. This torment was commonly inflicted on them, not in Antiochus's time only, and those before, but commonly in Christ's and the apostles' days, 2 Cor. vi. 5; xi. 23. Yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they cheerfully and patiently submitted to the cruel treating of their persecutors, who put them in the stocks, places of little ease, dungeons, loading them with iron shackles and fetters, which the wickedness of man had invented to torment them with; stern and cruel usage by their gaolers, restraining society from them, and of comfortable relief, feeding them with the bread and water of affliction, 2 Chron. xviii. 26; Acts xvi. 24.

37 <sup>r</sup> They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: <sup>s</sup> they wandered about <sup>t</sup> in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented;

They were stoned; by the same faith were several of the prophets and believing worthies of old carried through cruel deaths, the just punishment of malefactors, but the wicked tortures of these innocent saints, some being stoned to death, as Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21, and others, Matt. xxi. 35; xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34. They were sawn asunder; as Isaiah was, which is a known tradition among the Hebrews, a punishment common among the bordering nations of them, 2 Sam. xii. 31; Amos i. 3, and exercised on these innocents, to which Christ himself alludeth, Matt. xxiv. 51. Were tempted: whether ἐπειρασθῆναι should not be ἐνυράσθησθαι, is much doubted, temptation being no manner of death; and the Spirit had instanced in it before, ver. 35. It may therefore be a slip of the transcriber, and that burning was the cruel death that should fill this place among the rest, a common punishment with them, Jer. xxix. 22; 2 Macc. vii. 5. Or, it may note a death with several trials of racks and torments gradually inflicted, with a design to tempt them by their pains to renounce their religion. Were slain with the sword; others were killed by the sword, either by beheading, or cutting in pieces, Mark vi. 16, 17; a kind of death foretold to be attending the martyrs of Jesus Christ, Rev. xx. 4. All these sorts of death were most unjustly and cruelly inflicted on them by their persecutors, and as patiently received and cheerfully undergone by them. They wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins: as faith carried these believers through variety of deaths, so it managed others comfortably under their banishments and lingering sufferings, which were in proportion as cruel as death itself; they circuted up and down to preserve themselves from their destroyers, either voluntarily returning themselves into desolate places to keep a good conscience, or were unjustly and violently banished and forced away from their own habitations, to live as vagabonds, clothed only with goatskins and sheepskins, the common apparel of the prophets, as of Elijah, 2 Kings i. 8; Zech. xiii. 4, which they wore as they came from the beasts' backs, without dressing. Being destitute, afflicted, tormented; wandering in this forlorn state, stripped of money and necessaries of life, and not supplied by others in their poverty, 1 Kings xvii. 4, grievously pressed within, pained without, and afflicted beyond what can be sensed by any but in the like states, and evilly entreated by all; many miseries attending them by their pursuers, hardship in travels, and all sorts of evils, which multiplied their griefs: through all this faith carried them comfortably, and kept God with them.

38 (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and <sup>u</sup> in dens and caves of the earth.

n 1 Kings 17. 22.
2 Kings 4. 35.
o 2 Mac. 6. 19, 28 & 7. 7, &c.
Acts 22. 25.

r 1 Kings 21. 13.
2 Chron. 24. 21. Acts 7. 58. & 14. 19.
s 2 Kings 1. 8. Matt. 3. 4.
t Zech. 13. 4.

u 1 Kings 18. 4. & 19. 9.

Of whom the world was not worthy: the Spirit intermixeth an account of what these persons were who were so treated, lest the reader or hearer of these things might be mistaken of them, judging them to be some heinous malefactors, who were thus hurried in and destroyed by the world. Would you know what manner of persons they were? Be it known to you in the judgment of God, the best judge of their persons and states, they were such as the world did not deserve they should live among them, but were unworthy of their society, and the blessings which did attend it; and were it not for their sakes, God would quickly put an end to the sinful world, and burn it up. Such were these as did more for the preservation of the world, when thus brutally treated by it, than it would or could do for itself. They wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth: yet were they wandering over the desolate parts of this earth, being forced from all society with men, to the retirements of wild beasts in deserts, and climbing up mountains and rocks from their persecutors, lodging themselves in the natural or artificial dens and caves of the earth, the only receptacles for these worthies, faith giving them the best company, God and his comforts, there: see 1 Sam. xxii. 23, 24; 1 Kings xvii. 3; xviii. 13; 1 Macc. i. 53; ii. 28—30.

x ver. 2, 13. 39 And these all, <sup>a</sup>having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

The apostle returns in this verse to the proposition laid down in the second verse, which he had been proving by all these examples, and with it shuts up the history of them. And these all; all these elders, mentioned from ver. 2 to this verse. Having obtained a good report through faith: μαρτυρηθέντες, strictly, is having been martyred, or made martyrs; specially witnessing to the death for Christ, have a testimony given them, by way of eminency, by God himself in his Scripture record, that through faith they pleased him in their glorious achievements and sufferings, and were God's faithful witnesses to the world, glorifying him in it; though reproached and ruined by the world, yet they were too good to live in it, and were fit to live with him in heaven, as ver. 2, 5, 16, 35. Received not the promise; yet these worthies, as Abraham and his believing seed, did not possess the land of Canaan, though they had the promise of it in their time, ver. 13; others did obtain the grace and good things promised for their time, ver. 33, but none of these had fulfilled to them in their day the manifestation of the Messiah in the flesh; though they saw his day and coming by faith, and did rejoice in it, yet none saw him so come as Simeon did, Luke ii. 26, 29; though, as to the eternal benefits by Christ, they did as actually receive them, as those since his perfecting the work of redemption have received them, even eternal blessedness and glory by him, Acts xv. 11.

<sup>1</sup> Or, foreseen. v ch. 7, 22. & 8. 6. & 8. 9. & 12, 23. Rev. 6, 11. 40 God having <sup>b</sup>provided <sup>c</sup>some better thing for us, that they without us should not be <sup>d</sup>made perfect.

God having provided some better thing for us: the causes of their not receiving the promise, are summed up in this verse; the efficient of it is God's providence unto believers before and after the incarnation of the Messiah. God having from eternity foreknowledge of those who would believe in God the Son incarnate, Rom. viii. 29, predestinated them to be called to the faith in him, and provided better for New Testament believers than for the Old ones, that what they had of Christ in types and veils, these should have in truth; what they had in promise, these should have in sight and possession; what they had in hope, as to his first coming, these should have it past, and as an earnest of his second coming; what they had by measure of his Spirit and grace, these should have in fulness, Luke x. 23, 24; John i. 14, 16; vii. 39; 2 Cor. iii. 8; Eph. iii. 8—11; Tit. ii. 13; 1 Pet. i. 12. That they without us should not be made perfect; the final cause of this gracious providence was, that the former and later believers might be completed together; they shall not reach that perfect state of grace and glory by a re-union of their bodies and souls until the general resurrection, when they shall not prevent us, nor we them; but as soon as the trumpet alarms the dead to rise, in the same moment, and twinkling of an eye, shall the living be changed, and all be caught up together in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall be ever with the Lord, 1 Thess. iv. 15—17. The ground of which perfection of all believers in all ages being in the last time, is from his choosing them all to be but one body of Christ, and him their Head; so as one member cannot be perfected but in the perfection of the whole, Matt. viii. 11; Eph. iv. 4. In which perfection of it, God is resolved to be all in all; not in one, or in some, but when Christ hath subdued all his enemies, and gathered all his members, then shall his body and kingdom be perfected, and God be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28.

CHAP. XII

An exhortation to patience and constancy enforced by the example of Christ, 1—4. The benefit of God's chastisements, 5—13. Exhortation to peace and holiness, 14—17. The dispensation of the law compared with the privileges of the gospel, 18—24. The danger of refusing the word from heaven, 25—29.

WHEREFORE seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, <sup>a</sup>let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and <sup>b</sup>let us run <sup>c</sup>with patience the race that is set before us, <sup>a</sup> Col. 3. 9. <sup>b</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 1. <sup>c</sup> 1 Cor. 2. 24. Phil. 3. 13, 14. <sup>d</sup> Rom. 12. 12. ch. 10. 36.

The Spirit proceeds in this chapter in his exhortation or counsel unto duties worthy of the former doctrine of Christ, and suitable to the foregoing examples, enumerated chap. xi. Wherefore seeing; he introduceth it with an illative particle, τοιοῦτον seeing all those worthies finished their course through faith, and received not the promise since made good to us, therefore is there something to be inferred. We also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses; we, I Paul, and you Hebrews, having enjoyed the better things provided by God for us, we are so much the more obliged; as also having such a multitude of witnesses of so vast worth and dignity, as all the Old Testament believers were, distilling, like a cloud, abundant influences, from their example, in doing and suffering for God, through faith, on our souls, to make us persevering in the faith to the end, as they did; and so compassing us about, as we cannot want either direction or encouragement to it, whenever we look into their histories for it. Let us lay aside every weight; like the Grecian and Roman racers, who laid aside their cumbersome garments, so as they might more easily and lightly run their race; in allusion to which, it is the concern of every Christian to lay aside, or put away, all his worldly cumbrances, which would clog him in his race, his corrupt self, the world, &c., Matt. xvi. 24; Luke xxi. 34; 1 Tim. vi. 9—11; 2 Tim. ii. 4. And the sin which doth so easily beset us: the evil weight inward is the old man, the corrupt nature, which remaineth in every Christian, styled by Paul, the body of death, Rom. vii. 24; but especially each Christian's own personal iniquity, which sticks and cleaves nearer to him than his garments, and which made David so careful about it, in Psal. xviii. 23; and that which is so compassing and clasp-ing him about, that he is so far from running, he cannot move for it, 1 Cor. ix. 27; Col. iii. 5. This they are to mortify in them. And let us run with patience the race that is set before us; how distant soever the goal is, which finisheth the race of a Christian's life, yet the way passing to it, though it be troublesome and long, and being set to us by God himself, must be patiently, strenuously, and constantly run, that they may obtain it, Psal. cxix. 32, 33; Luke xiii. 24; 1 Cor. ix. 24—27; Gal. v. 7; Phil. iii. 13, 14; 2 Tim. iv. 7. The cloud of witnesses have so run it before them for their direction and encouragement.

2 Looking unto Jesus the <sup>a</sup>author and <sup>b</sup>finisher of our faith; <sup>c</sup>who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and <sup>d</sup>is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

<sup>a</sup> Or, beginner. <sup>b</sup> Luke 24. 26. Phil. 2. 6. &c. <sup>c</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 11. <sup>d</sup> Ps. 110. 1. ch. 1. 3. 13. & R. 1. 1 Pet. 3. 22.

Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith: as if all the former witnesses were not enough, he adds a more excellent one than them all, even our Lord Jesus Christ, who is not only a pattern to them in their race and running of it, but a help, and for which end they were looking to him: the word ἀφορμῶντες is only here used in all the New Testament, and signifieth a looking off from whatever would distract us from earnestly looking on the proposed object alone; and though a word of sense, yet here noeth an act of the mind. It is borrowed from racers, the similitude of whom the apostle further improves: they fixedly eye their guides or leaders, to help them on in their course; so must a Christian in his race look off from all things else, and singly and intently look on Jesus to help him through it; ἀρχηγόν see chap. ii. 10; here it denotes Jesus to be the great institutor of, and chief leader in, the Christian race, and perfecter of them in running it. The disposition, grace, ability, and success which they have for running, it is all from him; from the beginning of the work of faith unto the end of it, to the finishing of the course, he doth infuse, assist, strengthen, and accomplish the work of it to the last, John vi. 29, 30; Phil. iv. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 7; 1 John v. 4, 5. Who for the joy that was set before him; who for that joyful and glorious state which was clearly represented and faithfully promised to him by his Father to succeed his sufferings, that he should immediately attain himself, and successively communicate to all who believe in him, Luke xxiv. 26; John xvii. 1, 5, 24; 1 Pet. i. 11. This did so cheer and strengthen him, that with unexpressible patience he cheerfully endured the cross, with all the concomitants of it, the sorrows in his soul, the torturing pains in his body, of buffetings, smitings, piercings of thorns, tearing his flesh with scourges, boring of his hands and feet with nails, with all the evils that either the malice or rage of devils or men could inflict on him; he was neither weary of his burden, nor shrinking from nor fainting under it. With what invincible meekness and passive fortitude did he undergo all that was foretold of him! Isa. liii. Despising the shame; at the same time slighting and casting out of his thoughts all the disgrace poured on him by his enemies, both in his mind and action, contemning all the blasphemies, taunts, reproaches, and shameful carriages of sinners to him, suffering without any emotion all their indignities, even in the most shameful death itself, Phil. ii. 6—8, though he were the most innocent as well as excellent person in all the world. And is set down at the right hand of the throne of God; the issue of all which was, his exaltation by God for his abasement by man; he riseth from the dead, ascendeth to heaven, sets himself down as a triumphing conqueror over sin, the prince of the powers in the air, death, and hell, at the right hand of the throne of God; and thence discovers himself in his state and glory, as the great Ruler of the world, King of kings, and Lord of lords, Phil. ii. 9, 10, (see chap. viii. 1,) and the glorious rewarder of those who serve him, and suffer for him.

f Mat. 10. 24, 25. John 15. 20. Gal. 6. 9. 3 For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

For consider him; the connexion is rational, that they ought to regard this example, for that there were greater sufferings behind than any yet they had endured, which would enforce it, as ver. 4: ἀναλογισασθε signifieth the use of a proportionable consideration, thinking on or reasoning about this example within a man's self, such as may make the considerer bear a proportion to the subject considered. That endured such contradiction of sinners against himself; this Jesus spoken of before, who most patiently submitted to, and perseveringly bore up under, such opposition and contradiction by the words and works of the most wicked and vilest men against himself, who was the most innocent and best of men, always going about doing good to them, so as their sin and his patience were without parallel: none was ever so scorned, taunted, reviled, blasphemed, spit on, and ignominiously treated like him; and never any so indignantly endured it, Rom. xv. 3. Lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds; the reason of this consideration is, lest faintness, languishing, or deficiency of soul, that is, of vigour, strength, and activity of heart in grace, should befall them; and so they should lie down and cease to run the Christian race, which the devil designed to oblige them to, as he would Christ, by the multitude and soreness of the contradictions they should suffer from sinners in it, so greatly as would not end but by broaching their life-blood, as they did Christ's, and these must expect from them.

4 Ye have not yet rested unto blood, striving against sin.

Ye have suffered much for Christ already, but there is more that he requires from you, and is yet behind, chap. x. 32—34; the condition he fixed with you as his disciples, in Luke xiv. 26, to lay down your life as well as your relations and goods for him. You may yet be called to testify to him, by suffering a violent and bloody death from his and your enemies, as other martyrs had done for him: consider him who hath suffered a worse death for you, to sweeten yours to you, that you do not faint, fail, or turn apostates from him and his truth; resisting with agonies whatsoever men or devils use to entice or force us to apostatize from Christ, since there will be neither arts nor powers wanting to it. Watch you, pray, and strive to the utmost against them, Luke xxii. 31, 32; 1 Pet. v. 9.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:

And ye have forgotten; ἐκλήθησθε, whether rendered interrogatively, have ye forgotten? or positively, ye have forgotten; either way it carrieth a check upon their forgetfulness of what was of the greatest importance for them to remember in the time of persecutions, and implieth a direction of them to their duty, that they ought to remember the counsel or command given by God to them, how to interpret these persecutions for Christ and the gospel, and how to improve them; and so introduceth a further help to their running of the race of God with patience. The exhortation; παρακλήσεως notes properly consolation, and is here a consolatory exhortation to the management of a duty which would be highly such to them, and a dehortation from an evil which would greatly prejudice them; when it is said to speak, it is a metonymy of the effect for the efficient; the Lord in the exhortation speaking this to them. Which speaketh unto you as unto children: these words were written by Solomon, from God unto his children in that time; and God speaks no less by him to these Hebrews, who were his children now, as to all others who are such, or should be such, children to him. And whereas it is spoken singularly, My son, it is to every child of God in Christ Jesus, and so collectively includeth all of them. Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord: the dehortation is written in Prov. iii. 11, that not one of these children should care little for, or set light by, denying all regardlessness, senselessness of, and incorrigibility under, such smart correction as a parent gives to a child, either by himself, or by any other to whose care it is committed; but this chastening is from the Lord, the most gracious and tender Father, who can do them no evil, and will profit and benefit them by it. As they come from their persecutors for the sake of Christ, they are injuries; but as ordered by God their Father, they are so many favours to them, preventing sin, preserving in duty, and preparing them for blessedness. Nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; nor to nauseate his rebukes, or to faint under them; neither to let our faith or hope in our Father fail, nor to sink in our love to him, his way, or truth, or religion; nor to be weary, and give over our course, because of persecutions, but continuing faithful to him to the end, ver. 14, 15; Matt. x. 22; Luke xxii. 28, 29.

6 For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth: for showeth this to be a suasive reason against fainting under God's rebukes, and enforcing the foregoing duty; since whosoever, son or daughter, every child, that God the Father choicely loveth, taketh into his bosom, tendereth as a parent doth a child, Eph. v. 1, he nurtureth, instructs, cor-h 1 Cor. 10. 17, ch. 10. 27, 33, 34.

1 Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11.

k Ps. 94. 12. & 118. 74. Prov. 3. 12. Jam. 1. 12. Rev. 3. 19.

rects by his word and rod in its respective measure, for their spiritual profit and advantage, 1 Cor. xi. 32. And scourgeth every son whom he receiveth: scourgeth noteth the highest degree of chastening, even with the sharpest and most smarting punishment, wherein God proceedeth with all and every son or child, not any excepted, whom he hath adopted and received into his bosom with complacency and delight, chap. v. 8: compare Prov. iii. 12; Matt. xvii. 5; Rev. iii. 19, where, though the words do vary, yet the sense is one and the same; God correcting, as a Father, the son in whom he delighteth.

1 Deut. 8. 5. 7 <sup>1</sup> If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons: his reason he illustrateth from the convertibility of suffering affliction and chastening from God the Father, and being his child; If ye have a child-like sense of chastening, such afflictions and sufferings from him as the Father ordereth to you, so as quietly and patiently to bear them, and by faith expecting a saving issue from them; God the Father in love chastening you, beareth, carrieth, and offereth himself to you as a father to his son, full of grace and love, Lev. xxvi. 41; Job xiii. 15; Psal. lxxxix. 30; Micah vii. 9. For what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? no son or child of God can be instanced in, who was capable of chastening, but more or less have felt it; even God's only and best beloved One, chap. v. 8, for our sakes felt it, Isa. liiii. 5. The interrogation is a vehement assertion, and so to be resolved.

8 But if ye be without chastisement, <sup>m</sup> whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

But if God chasten you not, or if he do, and ye have not grace, or do not rightly endure it, are not managing yourselves well under it, nor are profited by it, when all and every one of his children are partakers of it, then are ye a false and spurious seed, and not God's genuine offspring, bastards in his account; and indeed so the most forlorn, wretched persons of all others, left under the power and dominion of sin, hurrying them on to their utter destruction, John viii. 41. These visible church members have a bastardly disposition, hearts alienated from God and his law, and inclined to the will and works of the flesh, expressing it in their conversation, running into the excess of sin, having no chastening to restrain them, and are deserted by God for it, Isa. i. 4-6; Hos. iv. 14, 17.

9 Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto <sup>n</sup> the Father of spirits, and live?

Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us: he enforceth the duty of not despising nor fainting under the Lord's chastening, from the consideration of his being our Father, and better than any earthly one, and from his goodness in that relation, and therefore we ought to submit to it: We have had our natural parents, as we are children, and who were the subordinate cause of our being as to our bodies, chap. vii. 5, 10, and they were instructors and correctors of us, made use of the rod as well as the word for our nurture; they have whipped and chastised us, putting us to smart and pain, 2 Sam. vii. 14; Prov. xxii. 15. And we gave them reverence: εὐσεβούμεθα imports a turning of bowels and spirits within them towards their fathers, covered with shame and blushing for their faults, and afraid to look them, when offended, in the face; reverencing them chastening, and submitting to the penalty, so as to reform and turn from the faults for which they were corrected. Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits? the expostulation shows the vehemency of the argument more than a simple position. It is the highest reason, of all right we must and ought (being as much our privilege as duty) to deny ourselves, and be in in that subjection, the free and willing subordination of our spirits to God, as the rod calls for it, receiving the correction, reforming under it, and resigning our souls to him who is the Creator of them as to their natural and spiritual being, and the Sovereign, Guardian, Protector, and Disposer of them; men nor angels have any power over them, but this Father of them only, and his great work and concern is about them, Gen. ii. 7; Numb. xxvii. 16; Eccles. xii. 7; Zech. xii. 1. And live; by his chastening of our spirits, our immortal souls, John iii. 6; Rom. viii. 5, 6, he is furnishing them with more spiritual life, whereby they are enabled to live and move wholly to God, from grace to glory. He makes them live more the life of God, which God in flesh lived on earth, Gal. ii. 20; Eph. iv. 18; Phil. i. 21; 1 Pet. iv. 6; 1 John iii. 9. This chastening promotes this honourable life as an instrument and means in God's hand, and advanceth it daily, till it is perfected in eternal life, Acts xiv. 22; Rom. v. 3-5; viii. 18; 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18; James i. 12; Jude 22.

10 For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, <sup>o</sup> that we might be partakers of his holiness.

For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure: as God hath his prerogative in paternity, so he hath the transcendancy in the end of chastening his children; for our natural parents, fathers of our bodies, nurtured us by the word and rod for a little time, the days of childhood and youth, as they would and thought good, as they apprehended their power over them, arbitrarily, passionately, without reaching what is best for them by it; their own thoughts, whether good or bad, were the rule of their chastening, and such as their thoughts are, such is their end; how imperfect and defective must that be! But he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness; but God, the Father of our spirits, corrects us εἰς τὸ συμμέρονον, which strictly notes comportation, intimating, that in his chastening his children he brings in his help, puts as it were his shoulder to it, brings in his stock of grace, and so bears together with them unto their advantage and profit in spiritual life, and this during our whole lives. That which he bears home to them, and puts in them by his chastening, is his holiness; of which being made partakers, they thrive mightily as to their spiritual life, and increase in the Divine nature with all the increases of God, Eph. iii. 13, 19; Col. ii. 19.

11 Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth <sup>p</sup> the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: a further argument to persuade Christians not to despise nor faint under the Lord's chastenings, is the good issue of them, subjoined to fortify them against the suggestions of flesh and blood, as if they could not be from love, nor for good, because they are smarting and grievous; therefore the Spirit asserts the truth as to both: All these chastenings and rebukes that the Father of spirits inflicts on his children, not one excepted, are, for all the time they are so inflicted, sensed by his children to be as they are; they feel them to have no joy in them, but a great deal of grief, pain, and smart; they are not pleasing of themselves, and God would not have them to be so, but his to feel the smart of his rod, when he corrects them with it. Nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby; yet have not his children any reason to despond or faint under them; for they are not always to continue, and there accrue after them a benefit to them, that will make amends for them all the afterward following to eternity: this chastening rendereth and bringeth forth to all the corrected children, who labour to improve the smart, under God's direction and blessing, a righteous compliance with the whole will of God, and a purging out of all sin, Isa. xxvii. 9; filling the soul full of joy and peace, and securing to the chastened a confluence of all that good that will abundantly reward them for their sufferings, setting them above them, and making them blessed, Isa. xxxii. 17; Rom. v. 1-5; James i. 2-4.

12 Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees;

<sup>m</sup> Ps. 73. 1. <sup>n</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 9.

<sup>r</sup> Num. 16. 22. & 27. 10. Job 12. 10. 1 Peter 13. 7. Is. 43. 5. & 57. 16. Zech. 12. 1.

<sup>l</sup> Or, as seemed good, or, meet to them. <sup>o</sup> Lev. 11. 44. & 19. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 13, 16.

<sup>p</sup> Jam. 3. 18.

<sup>q</sup> Job 4. 3, 4. Is. 35. 3. See Eccles. 25. 23.

This introduceth the use of the doctrine of God's chastening providences, stated before. Wherefore concludes the rationality and necessity of the duty subjoined, as consequent from the truth asserted before. Lift up; ἀνορθώσατε notes the making, or setting aright, that which was out of its proper place and posture, as disordered members into their right frame and composure, that there be not any let in our Christian race, nor fainting by our course in it. The hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; by hanging down hands, and palsied knees, are metaphorically represented the hearts, spirits, and souls of these children, such as droop, despond, and are ready to faint and die away under chastening, Isa. xxxv. 3—6. The sum of the counsel is, rightly to compose our thoughts, affections, and members, under trials from notorious enemies, and unbelieving brethren, so as to perfect our Christian course in the fear and strength of God, continuing stedfast in prayer, 1 Tim. ii. 8, walking constantly in God's ways, and obeying all his commandments, Psal. cxix. 48, 100, patiently bearing all God's corrections, and bringing forth the peaceful fruit of them. This is the truth of the metaphor.

r Prov. 4. 26, 27.
 1 Or, men.
 s Gal. 6. 1.

13 *And make || straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; *but let it rather be healed.

Make straight, smooth ways, such as have all stones of stumbling and rocks of offence removed, so as themselves may be set right in comfort, and duty, and walking; lest being lame or halting in their minds between Judaism and Christianity, because of the violent persecution of them by their infidel brethren, they should be turned aside out of God's way, erring, and deviating from the truth of the gospel; but that they be restored to it, so as no sufferings upon that account, under God's hand, might make them suppress the truth, or expose them to apostacy, or to walk as stumbling-blocks to others, and wounding their own souls, Acts xv. 1; Gal. ii. 11—15; vi. 12.

t Ps. 34, 14.
 Rom. 12. 13.
 & 14. 9.
 2 Tim. 2. 22.
 u Matt. 5. 8.
 2 Cor. 7. 1.
 Eph. 5. 5.

14 *Follow peace with all men, and holiness, *without which no man shall see the Lord :

Here begins the second head of counsel in this chapter. That seeing the gospel church Officer, the great Reconciler of sinners to, and Sanctifier of them for, God, was fully revealed to them, it did no concern them to promote peace with men, and perfect holiness towards God : this is pursued to the end of the chapter. Follow peace with all men : διώκετε imports such a fierce, unwearied, unsatisfied pursuit, as persecutors make after the innocent servants of Christ, till they have their purposes on them ; and so sets out the real, earnest, violent, unwearied, constant pursuit and labour after peace, i. e. concord, unanimity, and comfortable consociation in all things, good and lawful, to all sorts of persons, in thought, word, and deed, as far as it is possible for us, Psal. xxxiv. 14; 1 Cor. x. 32; xiii. 4, 5, 7; 1 Pet. iii. 10, 11. And holiness : ἀγιασμόν is all that habit and frame of heart, which becometh souls to have towards God, enjoying all purity from spiritual uncleanness, and a conformity to the holiness peculiar to God, Eph. iv. 24. The result and quintessence of all the graces of the Spirit, is holiness, 1 Pet. i. 15, 16; 1 John iii. 2, 3 : labouring to the perfection of this within our kind, Psal. cx. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 1. Without which no man shall see the Lord : a soul destitute of holiness is in no capacity, either of faith or sight, to see the Lord ; they can have no union to, communion with, or fruition of, God in Christ, neither in grace nor glory; implying and assuring them, that with holiness they may see and enjoy him, Matt. v. 8; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; xiii. 13; Gal. v. 21; 1 John iii. 2, 3.

x 2 Cor. 6. 1.
 y Gal. 5. 4.
 1 Or,
 fall from.
 z Deut. 29.
 18. ch. 3. 12.

15 *Looking diligently *lest any man || fail of the grace of God ; *lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled ;

To further their pursuit of peace and holiness, he metaphorically propoeth a caution against what might stop them in it, which he properly specifieth and exemplifieth in Esau, ver. 15—17. Looking diligently : ἐπισκοποῦντες notes a very strict and severe inspecting themselves; its primitive,

σκοπεῖν, signifieth such a looking to a thing, as those who, in shooting, aim at the mark; and the preposition adds intention to the action, signifying a most earnest care in Christians over themselves, in them over others, and in ministers over them all. Lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any person among them should fail of grace offered in the gospel to it, and never have it, Tit. ii. 11, 12; or apostatize from the profession of it, by seduction or persecution, chap. iv. 1; x. 38; 2 Cor. vi. 1: compare Gal. i. 6; iii. 3. Lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you; a metaphor borrowed from plants, to which roots are proper, and which was used by Moses before, Deut. xxix. 18: a root bearing a poisonous herb; intending by it such persons, whose nature, words, and works, are so bitter unto God, as gall and wormwood are to men; such as apostatized from God to idols. The apostle intending hereby the hindering the springing up and growing of errors, heresies, or immoralities, as profaneness, filthiness, &c., which are apt to infect churches, and, as they spread, to molest, trouble, and disturb them, and to keep them from pursuing holiness, chap. iii. 8; Hos. xii. 14; Gal. i. 7; James iii. 14. And thereby many be defiled; lest by but one such poisonous root, a whole church of Christians may be infected and poisoned, their sin being as apt to spread and diffuse itself, as leaven, 1 Cor. v. 6, to taint the whole lump, Gal. v. 9: and how early, even in the apostles' time, for want of obeying this caution, were the primitive churches corrupted, both in doctrine and morals, by loose, filthy heretics among them!

16 *Lest there be any fornicator, or a profane person, as Esau, *who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright.

This properly interprets the root of bitterness before, by two special fruits of it. Lest there be any fornicator : uncleanness, πόρνος, is not to be taken so strictly, as only to note fornication, uncleanness committed by unmarried persons, but all sorts of pollution and filthiness, as it is used in the general decree, Acts xv. 29; such defilements as had crept in among them already, to which many were prone and inclined, whence warned of and charged against it by James, Peter, and Jude, in their Epistles. Or profane person : βέβηλος imports one who had a bitter frame of spirit against the first table, one of an impure mind to God-ward, opposite to godliness, who neglects and spurns at holy things, rolling itself in its own pleasures, riches, honours, with a despising of God, his grace, and glory, 1 Tim. i. 9; iv. 7, 20; 2 Tim. ii. 16. As Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birth-right : Esau, the best example to these Hebrews, he being Jacob's brother, who was most notoriously profane, who irreligiously undervalued and despised the blessing of the birthright, to which was entailed by God the double portion, the priesthood and dominion over the family, the blessings of the covenant, and the being a type of Christ; he basely and impiously gave it away to his younger brother, slighting it, and freely and fully making it over to him, and all for one eating, the base gratifying of his sensual appetite but once, Gen. xxv. 32, 34. Like to whom were those, Phil. iii. 18; 2 Pet. ii. 10—19; Jude 4—19. In these is his filthy, profane spirit improved.

17 For ye know how that afterward, *when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: *d for he found no || place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: as Esau's sin was, such was his penalty; for they knew, and were well acquainted with this in Moses's history of him, that after he had despised his birthright, and sold it, being at man's estate, Gen. xxvii., and was desirous to inherit that blessing, he was rejected by his father, as well as by God, and could not obtain it, being unalterably settled on Jacob by both. He found no place of repentance, as to the giving it, with God, who gave it, and would not alter it, Rom. xi. 29; nor with his father, who did not repent of giving it to Jacob, but confirmed it, Gen. xxvii. 33, 40; xxviii. 1, 3, 4. Though he sought it carefully with tears; and this, although he sought the blessing from his father with cries and tears, c Gen. 27. 34, 36, 38.

 d ch. 6. 6.

|| Or, way to change his mind.

Gen. xxvii. 34, 38. How therefore should these Hebrews, knowing all this, root out such a root springing up in themselves, or others, that they might not be guilty of such sin; lest having despised God's blessing for their own ease, honours, or profits in this world, when they may desire to seek with tears the blessing of the eternal inheritance from God, he should irreversibly reject them. See Matt. vii. 22, 23.

<sup>e Ex. 12, 12, 18, 19, & 20.</sup> <sup>18. Deut. 4.</sup> <sup>11. & 5. 22.</sup> <sup>Rom. 6. 14.</sup> <sup>& 8. 15.</sup> <sup>2 Tim. 1. 7.</sup> 18 For ye are not come unto <sup>c</sup>the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest,

For showeth, from this verse to the 24th, the apostle enforcing on these Hebrews, and with them on all Christians, the pursuit of holiness and peace, by subjoining the great helps they have for it, beyond what the Old Testament church had, they being freed from the legal dispensation, which was less helpful to it, and admitted to that of the gospel, most promoting it. The first he layeth down, ver. 18—21; and the other, ver. 22—24. They are freed from the covenant dispensation at Mount Sinai. Ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched; you have not been called, as to your body, to journey it to Sinai, or as to your faith, to close with that covenant administration, to depend on, or have any expectation from it, as delivered by Moses at Mount Sinai in Arabia; a mountain visible, tactile, sensible, on earth, signifying the covenant dispensation from this mount to be low and earthy, occasioning earthy thoughts of God and carriage to him, sticking in an earthy altar sacrifice, and carnal and sensual religion; to the law written in stones, without minding the spirituality of it, or having it in their hearts; walking wisely in this wilderness state, yet, by the charge of God, not touchable by Israel at that time, though they came near to it in the third month after their coming out of Egypt, Exod. xix. 1, 12, 13, 23. And that burned with fire; to the fire, in the which the Lord descended on the mount, Exod. xix. 18; which burnt unto the midst of heaven, Deut. iv. 11; v. 23, 24, and would consume them that broke that law which he spake to them out of it, Deut. xxxiii. 2. Nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest; to the black, thick smoke that ascended as the smoke of a furnace, Exod. xix. 18; to darkness, occasioned by the thick clouds enveloping the mount, Deut. iv. 11; v. 23; to tempest, the storm of thundering, and lightnings, and earthquake, the terrible attendants of this solemnity, Exod. xix. 16, 18; xx. 18. All these shadowing forth the fiery and terrible storms of wrath and indignation, which should pursue the breakers of this covenant to the lowest hell; giving them, in this delivery of the law, a visible type of what should be the issue of their breaking it, Exod. xix. 22, 24. These terrors of the Almighty did so fright them, that they ran from God, and set not themselves to the serious pursuit of holiness, Isa. xxxiii. 14.

19 And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard <sup>f</sup>intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more:

<sup>f Ex. 20. 19.</sup> <sup>Deut. 5. 5.</sup> <sup>26. & 18. 16.</sup> And the sound of a trumpet; which was most shrill and dreadful, it sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, giving a fearful alarm unto Israel to draw near to the Lord to hear his law to them, and covenant with them, and to see a type of their doom, if they transgressed it, in an obscure representation of the general judgment, Exod. xix. 16, 19; xx. 18; compare 1 Thess. iv. 16; 2 Thess. i. 7—9. And the voice of words: after which alarm, the Angel of the covenant uttered his voice out of the fire most majestically, distinctly, and loudly, and spake to Israel in their own language the ten words, or commandments, that they might hear and understand them, so as they sensed them to be dreadful for their sound and matter, Exod. xx. 1—20; Deut. iv. 10, 12, 13; v. 1—27. Which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; the people, being overwhelmed with the majesty and dreadfulness of that voice, deprecated any more such for matter or manner of manifestation to them, Exod. xx. 19; Deut. v. 23—26; xviii. 16. And therefore desired Moses to speak to them God's law, and that God might speak no more.

20 (For they could not endure that which was commanded, <sup>g</sup> And if so much <sup>g Ex. 19. 13.</sup> as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart:

The reason of the foregoing deprecation, and which adds to the terribleness of this covenant dispensation; for the voice surpassed their strength and capacity, that they must die if they heard it any more, so dreadful was the sound and matter of it; for the commandment and threatening was, That if any man or beast did but so much as touch the mountain, they should die for it, Exod. xix. 12, 13, 21, 23, 24. Therefore was Moses so strictly charged to look to it, and to provide against it, showing the dreadfulness of that covenant dispensation, that if men did not keep their beasts from coming near, they should be stoned or darted to death; how much more themselves, if they should transgress the law, which, though it was designed to lead them unto Christ, yet was not generally so discerned or used by them! So that if the publication of it be so terrible, how much more the punishment for breaking it! Exod. xx. 20.

21 <sup>h</sup>And so terrible was the sight, <sup>h Ex. 19. 16.</sup> that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:)

It must needs be a dreadful, fearful, horrid, and astonishing apparition, and exhibition of the great Lawgiver here, that such a person as Moses, so sanctified by him, so favoured with familiarity with him, so constituted mediator between the people and God in this work for their good and comfort, so called and ordered by God to manage it, yet should cry to God to succour him, while he did quake and tremble at it; and was comforted and strengthened by God's voice to him again, Exod. xix. 19. Christians now have no call nor access to so terrible a dispensation of the covenant, but have immunity, exemption, and freedom from it, which was not so helpful to holiness as the gospel dispensation, to which now they have actual admission, having freed them from all the terrors and curses of the Mosaical one.

22 But ye are come <sup>i</sup>unto mount Zion, <sup>i Gal. 4. 26.</sup> <sup>Rev. 3. 12.</sup> <sup>& 21. 2. 10.</sup> <sup>h Phil. 3. 20.</sup> <sup>1 Deut. 33. 2.</sup> <sup>Pa. 69. 17.</sup> <sup>Jude 14.</sup> and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, <sup>and to an innumerable company of angels,</sup>

The Spirit now adds the privilege of Christians in the better state to which they have access by the gospel dispensation, from this verse to the 24th; Ye have left those hinderances and disadvantages instanced in before, but are come to these helps for your furtherance in holiness; ye have an access to all those most excellent, though invisible, things, by faith, and by it attain them, and are incorporated into them, as they follow. But ye are come unto mount Zion: this is not literally to be understood for the mount on which the city of David was built, for that was as visible and touchable as Mount Sinai, to which it is opposed; but that mount which is higher than the highest, as high as heaven itself, ver. 25; chap. ix. 24; John iii. 13; where is the most orderly government of God for holiness, Micah i. 7; whence all good gifts and gospel blessings are conveyed to the church, of which these believers were members, Isa. viii. 18; xxviii. 16; lix. 20; Rev. xiv. 1. And unto the city of the living God; of which the living God is the Builder and Maker, and wherein he dwelleth, where nothing but life is, and whence Christ's voice giveth life to dead souls, enabling them to live a life of holiness to God, as Psal. xvi. 4, 5; xlvi. 1, 8; lxxxvii. 3; Isa. lx. 14; John v. 25. To distinguish this from any earthly city or corporation, it is said to be the heavenly Jerusalem, its original, nature, and end being all heavenly: a fruitful place, whence believers are made partakers of the most spiritual influences for holiness; where there is nothing carnal, terrible, deadly, barren, but all causal and productive of holiness issueth thence, Isa. lxii. ; lxv. 17—19; lxvi. 10; John xvii. 24; Gal. iv. 26; Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10. And to an innumerable company of angels; in which city are many excellent inhabitants with whom believers are incorporated, and to whom they have relation, as myriads of angels, who are ministering spirits under the gospel, as under the law, full of holiness, power, agility, and endowments, fit for their work and end; who, though for number are thousands and millions of them, Psal. lxxviii. 17; ciii. 20; civ. 4; Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19; Rev. v. 11, yet are all fulfilling their Lord's pleasure in every place, as ordered by him. Their ministration of the law was terrible in flaming fire, but of the gospel, most sweet and gracious, Luke ii. 13, 14. At Sinai they ministered externally and sensibly, affecting senses; but from Sion they minister spiritually, to hearts. Matt. iv. 11; Luke xxii. 43; Psal. xci. 11, resisting evil spirits ministering wickedly. Their ministry little effectual under the law; but under the gospel, saving, Acts vii. 53; Heb. i. 14; Rev. xix. 10. Their former ministration temporary and ceasing, but this everlasting, till they bring all their trust into Abraham's bosom, Luke xvi. 22. They are promoting holiness by God's sending things to us by them, and by their observing the goings and doings of Christians, whether holy or not, 1 Cor. xi. 10, and giving an account of the success of their ministry towards them, as to this end, Matt. xviii. 10. And the neglect of this means to help our pursuing holiness, will God require, Heb. ii. 2.

m Ex. 4. 22.
Jam. 1. 18.
Rev. 14. 4.
1 Luke 10.
20. Phil. 4. 3.
Rev. 13. 8.
1 Or,
enrolled.
o Gen. 18.
25. Ps. 54. 2.
p Phil. 3. 12. ch. 11. 40.

23 To the general assembly and Church of <sup>m</sup> the firstborn, <sup>n</sup> which are <sup>o</sup> written in heaven, and to God <sup>p</sup> the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men <sup>q</sup> made perfect,

To the general assembly: other inhabitants of this heavenly city and polity with whom believers are incorporated, are such, into whose communion they have admittance here below, viz. to the catholic assembly of Christ, his whole body, the fulness of him who filleth all in all; an assembly gathered out of all nations, Rev. v. 9; vii. 9, throughout the world, extended to all times and ages, especially to that part of it which is on earth, sojourning here, fitting for heaven; the other part is triumphing in it. They are not called or incorporated only into a particular national assembly, a straitened society, as the Old Testament church was; the general assembly of saints are more helpful to holiness than a lesser, Psal. xxii. 27, 28; Gal. iv. 25—27. And church of the firstborn: this general assembly is not a rout, but a church, such as are called out of the world with a holy calling, subjecting themselves to Christ as their Head, and are, as quickened, so ordered and ruled by him: it is not a weak or an infant church, but strong and perfect, come unto maturity, in respect of the great discoveries of the mysteries of God made by Christ to them, chap. v. 12, 13; vi. 1; Gal. iv. 1, 3, 4. This chosen, called, and well-ordered society, were only of such persons who were the first-born of God, and partners of Christ's sonship and primogeniture, being regenerated by him, and dignified with his birthright privileges, Rom. viii. 17, 29. They are the might and excellency of Christ; whereas the church at Sinai, for the body of them, were but typically, literally, and externally so, Exod. iv. 22; Col. i. 15, 18, and did not universally enjoy, as those do, the strength and fulness of grace from God, John i. 16; Gal. iii. 26, 29; are joint-heirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 17, and made by him kings and priests to God and his Father, 1 Pet. ii. 5; Rev. i. 6. Which are written in heaven: they were not, as the church at Sinai, of an earthly enrolment, registered here to know their families and descent, whether right Jews and priests or no, whose genealogy was preserved to that end, Ezra ii. 43, &c.; but had their register in heaven, were written in the Lamb's book of life, to be of heavenly descent, born of God, partakers of the Divine nature, and who had a right and title by faith in Christ to the heavenly inheritance, and were free denizens of it, Luke x. 20, and have all heavenly privileges derived to them, Rev. xx. 12, 19; xxi. 27. How obliging, influencing, and promoting are these privileges of every Christian's pursuit of holiness! And to God the Judge of all; they were as Christians privileged with an access, not as Israel had at Sinai, with fear, and terror, and trembling, so as to fly from the great Author, Lord, and Judge of the covenant, lest they died, as Exod. xx. 18; but with liberty and boldness of faith, in the strength of love and with firmness of hope, they come now in Sion, Isa. lix. 20; Heb. x. 19, unto God in his being and sovereignty, who ruleth all, and who giveth to all according to their works, and in a most eminent manner ruleth them; who, as he is their Judge, hath not, as at Sinai, any bars to keep them from him, Exod. xix. 12; Eph. ii. 18, nor is terrifying and consuming, as then, Deut. v. 24, 25, but justifying them; full of grace and love to all approaching him in Christ, his throne is a throne of grace to them, he comforting and encouraging them to make home to him, John v. 22; Acts x. 22; Rom. iii. 6. So as they have boldness in the day of judgment, and stand unshaken before their Judge, and are strengthened by him, Rom. viii. 1, 33, 34; 1 John iv. 17. He rewards them gloriously, 2 Tim. ii. 8, perfecting holiness in them beneath, and crowning them with glory above. What a help is this to pursue holiness! And to the spirits of just men made perfect: the perfect state to which the gospel covenant leadeth is promoting holiness, for they have an access to the same lot, and are come into the same way of being perfected in holiness, which the spirits of the righteous, separated from their bodies, enjoy in heaven; and have a right unto, and shall have the certain enjoyment of, the same privilege, which carrieth through all difficulties in the pursuit of it, expecting themselves by death to be put in possession with them of the same state, Rom. viii. 22, 23; 2 Cor. v. 1, 2, 8; compare Phil. iii. 12—14.

24 And to Jesus <sup>r</sup> the mediator of the <sup>s</sup> new <sup>t</sup> covenant, and to <sup>u</sup> the blood of <sup>v</sup> sprinkling, that speaketh better things <sup>w</sup> than that of Abel.

q ch. 8. 6.
& 15.
r Or,
testament.
s Ex. 24. 8.
ch. 10. 22.
t Pet. 2.
u Gen. 4. 10. ch. 11. 4.

And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant: the Mediator of the Sion covenant is better than the mediator at Sinai, and more able to promote the holiness required by it. Believers have not now access unto, or dependence on, a Moses, a mere man, and a servant, declaring God's will, only a sinner himself, trembling in his office, and weary of his clients, and whose ministry is vanishing, as his person dying; but unto God the Son himself incarnate, a Son-mediator, making sons, and bringing them nearer to God, satisfying the law for them, and writing it on their hearts; above all sin himself, though a sacrifice for it, who is able to save to the uttermost, for that he ever liveth to intercede for them, chap. i. 1—3; iii. 6; vii. 26; Rev. i. 13. He is the Mediator, not of a literal, dark, terrible, charging and condemning, temporary and vanishing, covenant; but of the most spiritual, lightsome, gracious, justifying, sanctifying, and everlasting testamental dispensation of God, more effectually influencing souls to holiness than the old, chap. viii. 10, 11; 2 Cor. iii. 6; v. 19. And to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel: the sacrifice ratifying the Sion covenant is unexpressibly better than all the typical sacrifices confirming that at Sinai, it eminently purchasing and securing holiness to those interested in it. The blood of the immaculate Lamb of God, sprinkled on penitent, believing sinners, which hath purchased pardon for them, and, as follows, the Spirit, to sanctify them throughout, and perfect holiness in them, chap. ix. 12; 1 Pet. i. 18; 1 John i. 7, 9; and so they are freed from access to the sprinkling of the blood of sacrificed beasts, which was only typical and weak to purge the conscience, calling sin to remembrance yearly and daily, which was now forbidden and rejected as of no worth, and which, like Abel's, crieth for revenge and condemnation, Gen. iv. 10; since their blood now offered when Christ had spilt his, was accounted of God as the blood of innocents slain, as Isa. lxvi. 3. Others render the blood of Abel, for the blood of sprinkling of the sacrifice that Abel offered unto God, Gen. iv. 4, which was sprinkled upon him; and so prefer Christ's sacrifice, not only to the Mosaic sacrifices, but to all that have been from the beginning of the world, which though accepted by God, yet not like Christ, of which they were the types. The sum of all these comparisons, is to show the greater helps, motives, and encouragements that Christians have to pursue and perfect holiness than all the Old Testament church had before them.

25 See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For <sup>x</sup> if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven:

t ch. 2. 2, 3.
& 3. 17. &
10. 29, 28.

Here the Spirit closely applieth his former arguments for their pursuit of holiness, especially that of Christ's speaking by his blood to them; by caution, ver. 25—27; by counsel, ver. 28, 29. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: he introduceth this caution with, Look ye, or take ye heed; a term expressing the things said to be great and weighty, intimating that fear, solicitude, and watchfulness about this great and important concernment of their souls, Luke xii. 15; that they see to it there be no aversion in their spirits to, no undervaluing or despising of, no dislike or apostasy from, but a hearing, believing, and obeying Jesus speaking by his blood all the gospel covenant to us; convincing them of sin and guilt that needed his blood, calling them to repentance and faith in his blood and satisfaction, declaring his intercession with God for pardon, holiness, and glory by it, and so importunes them to follow holiness, which would evidence all this to them. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth: he enforceth his caution by a rational motive of the danger of their refusal, arguing from the less to the greater; that is, their ancestors escaped not the vengeance of God when they refused to hear, believe, and obey the legal covenant, which he spake on earth from Mount Sinai, and wrote on tables of stones, and delivered to Moses on the mount, and by him communicated it to them, chap. ii. 2; x. 28, 30, 31; Deut. xxxiii. 1, 4; Acts vii. 51, 53; 1 Cor. x. 1—10. Much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven; much more and greater sinners are all such who turn aside scornfully from Jesus, and receive not his voice and the revelation of God's gospel covenant by it, who is God's only begotten Son, and brought it down from the Father's bosom in heaven, chap. i. 2; John i. 14, 16—18; iii. 13, and ratified it with his own blood on earth: and as the sin is beyond compare greater, so will the punishment be, and the certainty of its infliction both for time and eternity, Matt. xi. 24; 2 Thess. i. 7—9; Heb. x. 26—31; there remaining no more sacrifice for such sin and sinners.

u Ex. 19. 18. 26 <sup>u</sup> Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, <sup>x</sup> Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven.

Whose voice then shook the earth: the sin and punishment of gospel despisers and rejecters, is aggravated by the Person concerned in both. It is that Jesus, the great Angel of the covenant, speaking now by his blood, whose voice at the delivery of the law on Mount Sinai, and selling Israel in a church state under that covenant dispensation, Exod. xx. 1, 19; Deut. iv. 12; v. 2, 4, 22, did shake the mount, Exod. xix. 18; Psal. lxxviii. 7, 8; cxiv. 4, 7; and not only the literal Sinai, but that low, earthly condition and state of Israel coming out of Egypt, and bearing its reproach as a common people of the earth, together with other nations, Josh. v. 9. This he removed away, and brought them then into a church state with himself by covenant, which church state obtained the name or title of heaven, Matt. xxi. 43, and is by the prophet styled the old heaven, Isa. lxxv. 17, which was to be shaken and removed also. But now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven: but now the same Jesus so shaking them had promised, and had at this time in part fulfilled what he spake, Hag. ii. 6, 7, even after the prophet's little while was expired, and Christ the desire of all nations was come; that yet once more he would shake the Israelitish church state, pitched till the time of reformation; not the earthly one only, as he did at Mount Sinai, which yet Jesus literally did at his death and resurrection, Matt. xxvii. 51, 54; xxviii. 2, and the heavens also by his star, Matt. ii. 2, light to the shepherds, Luke ii. 9, his baptism, Matt. iii. 17, transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 5; his prayer, John xii. 28—30, his passion, Matt. xxvii. 51; Luke xxiii. 44, 45, effusion of the Holy Ghost, Acts ii. 2—4: but this is also a powerful, moral shaking, so as to change and remove that heavenly church frame pitched in the Jewish tabernacle; that he might pitch a tabernacle himself more heavenly and spiritual, whereof Jesus should be the Lord High Priest and Ruler, as well as Minister, chap. iii. 1, 2.

<sup>v</sup> Ps. 102. 26. <sup>w</sup> Matt. 24. 35. <sup>x</sup> 2 Pet. 3. 10. <sup>y</sup> Rev. 21. 1. 27 And this word, Yet once more, significth the removing of those things that || are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. || Or, may be shaken.

The interpretation of the former matter in this verse, is introduced by reassuring, And this, Yet once more; as if he said, I told you that God promised, Yet once more, &c.; what he meaneth by it I now declare to you: this shaking of God intends not a small alteration, but a total removal and abolition of the Israelitish heaven and earth, forementioned, an alteration of their church, religion, and administration, and a total abrogating of them, because they are hand-work, chap. ix. 24. Such as were at God's direction made by men, as tabernacle, altar, and that typical service, not reaching the spiritual design of God, and but types of far better to succeed them; and which settled, did make the others to be finished, past, and never to return again. That those things which cannot be shaken may remain: these better things are the administration of Christ's kingdom unshakeable, his church state which is heavenly, settled by his own evangelical laws and ordinances, which he hath so fixed by promise, as never to be removed till the whole church of Christ be completed with him in heaven, Hag. ii. 7; Matt. xvii. 5; xxviii. 18—20.

28 Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, || let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: || Or, let us hold fast.

Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved: in this verse the apostle follows his doctrine with counsel to several duties; such as concern the first table, and terminate on God, in this and the following verse; such as concern the second table, chap. xiii. 1, &c. In this verse he begins with the Christians' privilege, and then directs their duty. These Hebrews having received by faith the privileges, and submitted themselves unto the laws and government, of the unmoveable kingdom of Christ, that gospel church state of which God is the author, Christ the King, his spiritual under-officers ministers, penitent believing sinners the subject; the gospel laws by which the government is administered perfectly holy, just, and good; the privileges of it all grace here, and glory above; the descent of all from heaven: all which are to endure for ever unshaken, and against them the gates of hell shall not prevail, Zech. ix. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 24—28; Eph. iv. 11—16; Col. i. 13; ii. 3. Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; let us get and hold fast that gracious temper of soul, whereby they are made true, wise, believing, loving, humble, and obedient subjects to the laws of this kingdom, and manifest it by worshipping, and serving of, and walking with, God in this world, so as our persons and duties may be all well-pleasing to him in Christ, Eph. i. 6, and constantly conformable to his holy will, chap. xi. 4, 5: and out of a sense of their own lowliness, with a self-abasing heart, and a reverential carriage, as Gen. xviii. 27; Luke xviii. 13, approaching God in all his service with a holy jealousy over itself, that it do not offend him in what it is or doth, but rightly receiving law from him for all his service, and rightly returning all conformable thereunto to him again, John xii. 49, 50.

29 For our God is a consuming fire. <sup>z</sup> Ex. 24. 17. <sup>a</sup> Deut. 4. 24. <sup>b</sup> 2 Pet. 3. 10. <sup>c</sup> 2 Thess. 1. 8. ch. 10. 27.

The motive enforcing this duty is no less terrible than that given to Israel under the law, obliging their obedience to that covenant dispensation, Deut. iv. 23, 24, The Lord thy God is a consuming fire, even a jealous God. He that was so respecting the transgression of the legal, will much more be so as to this gospel covenant. God Almighty, the most gracious, and yet the most just Being, their own God by covenant obtestation; yet will be to them, if they break his covenant, and do not, through Christ, acceptably serve him with reverence and godly fear, as fire consuming them. His gospel law, in the contempt of it, will be as the fiery law at Sinai, adjudging such sinners unto fire unquenchable, chap. x. 27—31; compare Matt. iii. 12; xxv. 41; 2 Thess. i. 7—9.

CHAP. XIII

Exhortations to charity, 1; hospitality, 2; pity for the afflicted, 3; chastity, 4; contentment, 5, 6: to regard the preachers of God's word, 7, 8; to avoid strange doctrines, 9; to confess Christ, 10—14; to offer up our praises to God by him, 15; to do good and to communicate, 16; to obey spiritual rulers, 17; and to pray for the apostle, 18, 19. The Epistle endeth with a prayer and salutations, 20—25.

LET *brotherly love continue.

a Rom. 12. 10. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 2. 17. & 3. 5. & 4. 8. 2 Pet. 1. 7. 1 John 3. 11, &c. & 4. 7, 20, 21.

The apostle in this chapter pursueth his counsel to the subjects of the unmoveable kingdom of Christ, for their performing suitable duties to such a privilege, and especially such as more immediately terminate on their neighbour, and are contained in the second table of the Redeemer's laws; as the chief and fundamental one, brotherly love. Let love, a fruit of the Spirit, show forth itself and its existence in you, in pre-eminence, and in duration, by disposing always the inward man, mind, will, and affections, to seek the good, to speak all the good to and of, and to do all good to their Christian brethren, to all true Christians, eminently styled by the Spirit the brotherhood, Matt. xii. 50; xxviii. 10; John xiii. 34, 35; xx. 17; 1 Cor. xiii. 4; Eph. iv. 32; 1 Thess. iv. 9; 1 John iii. 14, 16.

2<sup>b</sup> Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.

b Mat. 23. 35. Rom. 12. 13. 1 Tim. 3. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 9. c Gen. 18. 3. & 19. 2.

The next duty suitable to Christ's kingdom, is hospitality to Christian strangers. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; be neither ignorant nor unmindful: by which charge they are bound strongly and always not to have this out of mind, though it may be out of hand; and the negative confirms the positive duty, removing hinderances, and enjoining it strictly, that they have a love and desire to the duty, bearing affection to the person of a Christian brother though a stranger, unknown and brought by Providence to them, Matt. xxiii. 39; xxv. 35; and to the work of being an host, of entertaining such Christians; ξενός signifying an host as well as a stranger or guest. It is a love to be an hospitable person that is here required, Tit. i. 8; (such was Gaius to Paul and the church, Rom. xvi. 23;) importing a kind, courteous reception of Christians into their houses, being harbourless, which Christ promiseth them, Luke xviii. 29; 1 Tim. v. 10; a free and cheerful provision for their necessary refreshing, Gen. xviii. 4—6; with a careful furtherance and assistance of them in the work of God, and helping them to persevere in the same, 3 John 6—8. For thereby some have entertained angels unawares; the advantage that accrues to such hosts of the Christian church and its members is great; for in the exercise of this duty, Abraham and Lot, being strangers, and waiting to entertain such, received angels into their tabernacle and house, Gen. xviii. 2, 3, and had sweet discoveries of God in the Messiah made to them; were delivered by them from judgment, as Lot, Gen. xix. 10, 15—17. And now the general guard of angels goeth along with the saints, and are entertained in them, who never come without a blessing, they attending them in their way, defending them against evil spirits, and offensive ones and places where they are, though their ministry be little observed or acknowledged as it ought, chap. i. 14. Not only angels, but Christ himself accompanieth his pilgrim members, and is entertained, fed, comforted, and lodged in and with them, Matt. x. 40—42; xxv. 34—36; and for this will he reward them in both worlds.

3<sup>d</sup> Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.

d Matt. 23. 36. Rom. 12. 15. 1 Cor. 12. 26. Col. 4. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 8.

Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them: a further duty of the subjects of Christ's kingdom, is sympathy with their Christian brethren, to remember to pray for, visit, and minister all necessary refreshment to those in bonds, fettered, manacled, and imprisoned for Christ's sake and the gospel; being straitened for them, and partaking of their bonds, bearing them with them, and seeking their deliverance out of them by all just means, Matt. xxv. 36; Eph. vi. 19, 20; Col. iv. 18; 2 Tim. i. 16—18. And them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body; be mindful of those suffering any evil for Christ's sake and the gospel, persecuted, oppressed, or afflicted, who have not deserved any of this from man, so as to carry it suitably to them in these conditions, chap. xi. 36—38; so feelingly, as if we were the persons in their conditions; carefully, knowing we are in bodies capable and liable to the same, and are ignorant how soon it may be our own case; conscientiously, as knowing we are members in the same body of Christ with them, and of them in particular, 1 Cor. xii. 25—27.

4 Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: *but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

e 1 Cor. 6. 9. Gal. 5. 19, 21. Eph. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5, 6. Rev. 22. 15.

Marriage is honourable in all: the next duty charged on the subjects of Christ's kingdom, is chastity; the commendation of it is a precept to it. Marriage is that state which God instituted at the beginning, after the creation of Adam and Eve, which was by his law the making of them two to become one flesh, Gen. ii. 24; confirmed by Christ, Matt. xix. 5. On this state God, the fountain of all honour, hath stamped his own name and excellence, and hath made it, by an irreversible law, a glorious and honourable state. The connexion is present, real, and necessary; God saith it, therefore it is so, and must be so; and this after God's institution in all its concomitants every where, and in all times; but especially in all persons in the kingdom of Christ, true Christians of all sorts and degrees, of what state or calling soever, qualified for and called to it, whether magistrates, ministers, or church members; God by it preventing sin, preserving holy and pure communion between the married, propagating his church, and accomplishing the number of his chosen by it, Psal. cxi. 3; Mal. ii. 15; 1 Cor. vii. 9; 1 Thess. iv. 3, 4; 1 Pet. iii. 1, 7. And the bed undefiled; a good, moral use of the marriage bed, the natural and lawful use of the wife by the husband, and of the husband by the wife, according to the law of God; which is so far from being unclean, filthy, and inconsistent with the purity of Christ, as papists, apostates from the faith, assert, 1 Tim. iv. 1—4, that it is holy, pure, and chaste in itself, and a most excellent means of preserving chastity among the subjects of Christ's kingdom, 1 Thess. iv. 4; Tit. ii. 5; 1 Pet. iii. 2; by this they are kept in their bodies from being polluted or dishonoured by fornication or adultery. Marriage is thus honourable in all husbands and wives, of what degree or order soever, whilst they are such; and must be undefiled in all, because their bodies are the members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. vi. 15, 17—20. But whoremongers and adulterers God will judge; but God hates unclean societies of all men and women, but especially of Christians; and as he will certainly judge, and inflict eternal punishment upon, all kind of unclean persons, so especially upon whoremongers and adulterers who profess themselves subjects of Christ's pure kingdom, 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 4, 7; Rev. ii. 21.

5 Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

f Matt. 6. 25. 31. Phil. 4. 11, 12. 1 Tim. 6. 6, 8. g Gen. 28. 15. Deut. 31. 6, 8. Josh. 1. 5. 1 Chr. 28. 20. Ps. 37. 25.

Contentation with our state and condition is a fifth duty charged on the subjects of Christ's kingdom, and this is expressed privatively and positively, yet both propositions without a verb, which is best supplied by an imperative. Let your conversation be without covetousness: 'Ο τρώπος strictly signifieth a turning, but here it sets out the motion or turning of a man up and down in the actions of this life, which in common speech is called conversation; not any motion of the heart, nor turn of the eye, nor action of any member, after money or riches, with a sinful, inordinate love to them, or pursuit of them; forbidden, Matt. vi. 25, 31; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10; James iv. 13; 1 John ii. 15. The studious endeavour and labour night and day, turning and winding every way, to be scraping together and hoarding up worldly wealth, and lading themselves with thick clay, Eccles. iv. 7, 8; Hab. ii. 6, 9, must not be the case or condition of any Christian, Eph. v. 3, 5; Col. iii. 5; 2 Pet. ii. 3—15. And be content with such things as ye have; but having a heart-acquiescence and satisfaction with that portion or pittance of earthly things which God at present doth allot us, whether more or less, and not with that only which we may think enough to serve our turn, Phil. iv. 11, 12; 1 Tim. vi. 8. For he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee: the reason enforcing it is, God's giving by promise a special engagement to provide for them. This God solemnly made to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 15, then to Israel, Deut. xxxi. 6, 8, then to Joshua, chap. i. 5, and to all believers as well as them; for God will not let any such see the miseries of his absence, but will vouchsafe to them his presence, with all the blessings which attend it, Psal. xli. 1, 5; Isa. xli. 10; xliii. 2; lxiii. 9.

<sup>h</sup> Ps. 27. 1. <sup>i</sup> & 56. 4, 11. <sup>j</sup> & 118. 6. 6 So that we may boldly say, <sup>h</sup> The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

So that we may boldly say; upon the account of which promise of God all the true subjects of Christ's kingdom, together with the apostle, may with an undaunted boldness of heart, above all fears and doubtings, and with a daring confidence, professing that which they believe, nor staggering, nor shrinking, nor being ashamed of their faith, but openly owning it to all the world, own that The Lord is my helper; the Lord in the infiniteness of his power, wisdom, and goodness, is a real, present, universal, and permanent help against all trouble, and for all supplies in all cases, and at all times, to every one of them. They may say as Moses, Exod. xviii. 4; as David, Psal. xxvii. 9; xl. 17; lvi. 4, 11; cxviii. 6. And I will not fear what man shall do unto me: and therefore faith expelleth fearfulness of, and introduceth fearlessness of, any created evils incident to a believer; and of which man may be an instrument inflicting, Psal. xli. 2, 3. Implying in it an unshaken settledness of mind, judgment, and thoughts on God's help, a fixed frame of heart, without tumultuous passions or perturbations, with an unmovable resolution to keep close to God and his word both in word and deed, amidst all oppositions and persecutions of men for it.

<sup>i</sup> ver. 17. <sup>j</sup> Or, the guides. 7 Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation:

Imitation of their godly ministers, is another duty that Christ's law chargeth on his subjects, both here and ver. 17. Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God; be mindful of your spiritual guides and rulers, firmly and constantly to retain their excellencies in memory, esteeming of them, and thanking God for them, which were sent to them and set over them by the Holy Ghost, who were guiding of them by Christ to God, and enjoyment of eternal life with him, which they did by preaching to them, and writing the gospel of Christ for their edification, by the inspiration of the Spirit. Some of which guides were removed by death, slain and martyred for the truth of Jesus, and ascended unto heaven, and others were alive among them; they were to remember all of them, but especially their spiritual fathers that had begotten them to God by the gospel, 1 Cor. iv. 15; 2 Cor. ii. 17; 1 Tim. v. 17; 2 Tim. iii. 14—17; 1 Pet. iv. 11; v. 2, 3. Whose faith follow; the best way of remembering such is by imitating them, to believe the doctrine which they taught and practised, and to be as stedfast in the faith as were they, and holding of it out to others, how eminent believers they were, 1 Tim. iv. 12; vi. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 22. Considering the end of their conversation; such as their doctrine was, such was their life, conformable to Christ's, 1 Cor. xi. 1. It was honest, upright, and blameless, much in heaven, 2 Cor. x. 3; Phil. iii. 20. All their turnings and motions in the world, their very life, was hid with Christ in God; all agreeable to, as ordered by, his will. And such was the issue and egress of this life, which it is their concernment to review, they having by it an outlet from the remainders of sin and misery, which did defile and oppress them, Rev. xiv. 13, and a victory over the world and all its oppositions to them, sealing the truth with their blood which they had preached and practised among them, and were more than conquerors over all by death, having an inlet into life, and peace, and eternal glory, in the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away, reserved for them in heaven, Rom. viii. 37; 2 Tim. iv. 8; 1 Pet. i. 4; iii. 4.

8 Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever.

<sup>1</sup> John 8. 58. <sup>ch.</sup> 1. 12. <sup>Rev.</sup> 1. 4.

Though this hath no term of connexion, yet it may be referred either to what precedeth or followeth it; for the apostle is not here dropping aphorisms, but pressing on the subjects of Christ's kingdom known duties. It is here interposed as a weighty reason of the duty foregoing, to remember their guides, imitate their faith, and consider the end of their conversation, for they taught, believed in, conversed with, and at last were perfected by, Jesus Christ; so that they might be saved by him as their guides were, there being no other way to blessedness, but by Jesus Christ the same, &c., John xiv. 6. Or a reason enforcing what followeth, that since Jesus Christ is the same, as in his person, so in his doctrine, faith, and conversation, which he enjoineth on his subjects, they should not be carried about with divers and strange doctrines. Jesus Christ personal is immutable in his care and love to his mystical body, and all the members of it, throughout all times and ages, he never leaves nor forsakes them; so Christ doctrinal, in his faith, law, and rule of conversation, Eph. iv. 20, 21. The pure, full, and entire religion of Christ is unchangeable, being simply, indivisibly, and constantly the same throughout all measures of time, Matt. v. 18; 2 Cor. xi. 3, 4; Gal. i. 6, 7; Eph. iv. 4, 5; 1 Pet. i. 23, 25.

9 Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.

<sup>m</sup> Eph. 4. <sup>14.</sup> & 5. 6. <sup>Col.</sup> 2. 4, 5. <sup>1</sup> John 4. 1.

<sup>n</sup> Rom. 14. <sup>17.</sup> Col. 2. <sup>16.</sup> 1 Tim. 4. 3.

Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines: the doctrine of Christ being immutable, it is but necessary to dehort his subjects from deserting it, which the apostle doth here; that they should not be wheeling or whirling about with an unstable and inconstant motion of judgment, faith, and practice, about such human doctrines which are vain rules to lead to God, such as are different in nature from Christ, one and the same rule, and those very numerous and various, strange and untrue, taught by false apostles and teachers, taken out of Gentilism and Judaism, and added to the Gospel by them, as necessary, together with Christ, to justification and salvation, Matt. xv. 9; 2 Cor. xi. 3; Eph. iv. 14; 2 Thess. ii. 10, 12; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; 2 Tim. iv. 3, 4; 2 Pet. ii. 1, 18, 19; Jude 12. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; for the goodness of heart-establishment unto God is no less than full and complete salvation of the soul, 1 Cor. xv. 58; 2 Pet. iii. 17, 18. And this is only wrought by grace, the free love of God put in Christ, for regeneration and preservation of souls unto life eternal, carried in the simple doctrine of Christ, which is always the same, 2 Thess. ii. 16, 17; 1 Pet. v. 10. Not with meats; doctrines of meats and ceremonies, which are divers, and strange from Christ's, cannot make the heart agreeable to God, but only distract and divide it from him; for whatsoever is not in and from Christ, is strange to God, and abhorred by him, Gal. v. 2; Col. ii. 18, 19, 23; 2 Tim. ii. 16; James i. 8. Which have not profited them that have been occupied therein: those who did converse in these various and strange doctrines, professing and constantly practising them, observed times, and meats, and ceremonies, have not been profited by them; for being carnal and earthly, they could not justify them as to their state God-ward, nor could they renew or sanctify their souls, nor yield any advantage to their spiritual life; and being perishing, could not profit to the attaining of eternal life, Rom. xiv. 17, 18; compare 1 Cor. vi. 13.

10 We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle.

<sup>o</sup> 1 Cor. 9. <sup>13.</sup> & 10. 18.

We have an altar: these strange doctrines are not only unprofitable, but perilous to Christians, since they disinterest all that entertain them, as to any participation of Christ; since his subjects, adhering to his simple and immutable doctrine, have a right and just claim to, and an actual use of, Christ, as their altar, in opposition to the Mosaic; and from whom they have altar sustenance for their souls, in opposition to the Jewish meats, while they attend on him; all the quickening benefits issuing from the sacrifice of his human nature on the altar of his Godhead, as reconciliation and adoption to God, justification of our persons, renovation of our nature, growth in grace, and perseverance therein, to the perfecting of it in glory, John vi. 55—57; 1 Cor. ix. 13; x. 16—18. We have altar sanctification of our persons and offerings in our access to God from him, ver. 15; Matt. xxiii. 19; Eph. v. 20; Col. iii. 17; so as all is accepted with the Father. We have altar protection and salvation, keeping us who attend on him unto the revelation of God in glory, Exod. xxi. 14; Rev. vi. 9, 11. This is altar individuation to all Christians; God had but one altar under the law, and he prohibited all others, and complained of and threatened the increase of them, Exod. xx. 24—26; xxvii. 1, 2; 2 Chron. iv. 1; Hos. viii. 11; x. 1. This one altar did type out that true one of Christ, by which only sinners can come to God, and find acceptance. Whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle; of this altar privilege all Jews or Judaizing Christians, who adhered to the Mosaic administration of the covenant in meats and ceremonies, have no lawful right or title to partake; they cannot have this honour while they cleave to them, because they thereby deny this altar, reject the Son of God, and are in it rejected by him.

11 For <sup>p</sup> the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the High Priest for sin, are burned without the camp.

The illustration of the legal and gospel altar service is added as a typical proof of the foregoing reason; for annexing it to it; that the Jews and Judaizing Christians had no right to eat of the Christian altar, for a law of their own excludes them from it, which is written, Lev. vi. 30; xvi. 27: That the bodies of those living creatures, which were yearly sacrificed as a sin-offering for priests and people, both of the bull and the he-goat, with their skins, &c., were burnt wholly without the camp; so as neither the priests nor any of the people had any part of this bull or goat allowed them to eat, having no right to it by the law of God, which otherwise ordered it. This is the literal sense, yet the use of it is analogical, leading us to higher things; as that the high priest signified Christ, God-man; the altar, his Godhead; the sanctuary, heaven itself; the sacrifice, his human nature, the true sin-offering, of which neither priest nor people serving the tabernacle ought to eat.

12 Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, <sup>a</sup>suffered without the gate.

Because that sacrifice for sin was burnt without the camp, therefore Jesus, to fulfil the type, suffered without the gate; and as they might not eat of that expiatory sacrifice, so neither of this. Jesus, therefore, to fulfil this type, suffered without the gates of Jerusalem, upon Mount Calvary, where skulls and bones of cursed creatures were scattered; as the expiatory sacrifices were burnt without the camp, when Israel was tabernacled within it; without the gates, when Israel dwelt in cities. As the high priest carried the expiatory blood into the holiest of all, on the day of atonement; so Christ with his own blood entered the holiest in heaven, and by it obtained pardon of sin, peace of conscience, and renewing by the Holy Ghost, for all people who repent, believe, and will come unto God by him. Therefore those who will still Judaize, have no right to eat of his sacrifice, no more than of the expiatory one, which was wholly burnt: so that they were not to be justified by meats and ceremonies, but by the blood of Christ alone, the truth of all the sacrifices, Rom. iii. 25; v. 9; John i. 29.

13 Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing <sup>r</sup>his reproach.

Therefore shows this to be a necessary duty, inferred from the former privilege; That since we have such an altar and sacrifice as Jesus, sanctifying us by his own blood, which he entered with to God, when he suffered without the gate; we ought and must go forth (from tabernacle service, consisting of meats and ceremonies, from Judaism, in all its parts abolished, and all erroneous doctrines, how numerous and strange soever, and all worldly things) unto Jesus, who was cursed for us, that we might be blessed, Gal. iii. 13, in faith and love; not ashamed of, but glorying in his sufferings, and following and imitating of him, patiently and boldly bearing mockings, revilings, scourgings, crucifyings, and all other persecutions, which are parts of his cross, for his sake, chap. xi. 9; Rom. vi. 5, 6; 1 Cor. i. 30; Gal. ii. 20; Phil. iii. 8—10; making him in all our example, 1 Pet. ii. 21; iv. 12—19.

14 For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.

This is an enforcement of the foregoing duty, as the particle for cleareth; That they have no reason to be discouraged from going forth from Judaism, and those erroneous doctrines, and the world, to him, though it should cost them their lives for it; for at the best this world is not a place fit for us, nor can our state in it be desirable, since it is imperfect, fleeting, and vanishing, and we must die out of it; we may well then go forth, and die with him, and for him. And we have reason to go forth and suffer with him, since it will instantly bring us to that heavenly city, which we profess that we only live to fit ourselves for, and then to enter in and possess it, chap. xi. 10, 16; xii. 22; Phil. iii. 20, 21.

15 By him therefore let us offer <sup>t</sup>the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, <sup>u</sup>the fruit of our lips <sup>v</sup>giving thanks to his name.

Therefore, introducing this duty, shows it not only to issue from the former privilege of having Christ our altar and sacrifice, therefore we should use him, and sacrifice by him; and it is inferred as anticipating an objection of these Hebrews, That if the tabernacle service ceased, then they should have no sacrifice to offer unto God. Yea, saith the apostle, let us offer, which is not hand-work, but heart-work, by a spirit of faith on this altar, the sacrifice of praise, 1 Pet. ii. 5, such as God requireth and accepts above all the sacrifices of beasts, &c., Psal. i. 23; praise for the grace-privilege and honour of being denizens of his city, and of being brought home to it by suffering, Col. i. 11, 12; and this always throughout our life, to the God that is the author and distributor of all these blessings to us. This sacrifice of praise the Spirit interprets to be the fruit of our lips, which the prophet styleth, calves of our lips, in Hos. xiv. 2. By both these must synecdochically be understood the Spirit and heart guiding the whole man in this matter, Rom. xii. 1, confessing that all it is capable of rendering is due from it to God, even all of love, praise, thanksgiving honour, for its redemption through Jesus Christ, whether continually expressed either by lip or life, as Psal. i. 23; 1 Cor. vi. 20; Eph. v. 20; Phil. iv. 6, 7; Col. iii. 17; 1 Thess. v. 17, 18.

16 But to do good and to communicate forget not: for <sup>y</sup>with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

But to do good and to communicate forget not: the last duty which Christ sufferings without the gate for his subjects obligeth them to, is liberality and beneficence to others. In which is explicitly denied any carelessness of mind, aversation of affection, or omission of the duty; in which is implicitly enjoined, inclination to, retention in memory of, and constant practice of beneficence and liberality, both as to spiritual and temporal good, vigorously and cheerfully edifying the souls and cherishing the bodies of all necessitous ones, but especially of their poor brethren of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10; 1 John iii. 17; glorifying God by obeying his law and rule about it, Matt. vi. 1—4; Eph. vi. 5—9. For with such sacrifices God is well pleased; such doing of good, and communicating to the necessities of poor saints, are part of our evangelical sacrifices, which God requireth of us, instead of the numerous legal ones; and are attending on, concomitant with, and sanctified by, the one true sacrifice of Christ; and being duly terminated on him according to his law, they are highly pleasing and acceptable to God, yea, sometimes above other sacrifices and holy things given to him; and which, as he commands, he p Ex. 29. 14.

Lev. 4. 11.
12. 21. & 6.
30. & 9. 11.
& 16. 27.
Num. 19. 3.

q John 19.
17. 18.
Acta 7. 58.

r ch. 11. 26.
1 Pet. 4. 14.

s Mic. 2. 10.
Phil. 3. 20.
ch. 11. 10.
16. & 12. 22.

t Eph. 5. 20.
1 Pet. 2. 5.
u Lev. 7. 12.
Ps. 50. 14.
23. & 68. 30.
31. & 107. 22.
& 115. 17.

x Hos. 14. 2. + Gr. confessing to.

y Rom. 12.
12. 1. 2. 5.
2 Cor. 9.
12. Phil. 4.
18. ch. 6. 10.

will at present greatly reward with temporal and spiritual blessings, and with everlasting riches and glory in heaven, Prov. xix. 17; Micah vi. 6—8; Matt. ix. 13; xxv. 34—40; 2 Cor. ix. 12.

<sup>a</sup> Phil. 2. 29.
<sup>1</sup> Thess. 5.
<sup>12</sup> 1 Tim. 5.
<sup>17</sup> ver. 7.
<sup>1</sup> Or, guide.
<sup>b</sup> Ezek. 3.
<sup>17</sup> & 33. 2.
<sup>7</sup> Acts 20.
<sup>26</sup>, 28.

17 <sup>a</sup>Obey them that || have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for <sup>b</sup>they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you.

Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: the further duty required by Christ from the subjects of his kingdom, is their due demeanour to their present pastors, and church guides, or rulers. He chargeth them to esteem and account of them, as they are, and he hath constituted them in his church, to attend on their ministry and teaching, yielding full obedience of faith to the doctrine which they delivered from Christ, and to be subject to the power and authority Christ hath given them over them for their edification, and not for destruction; and that they imitate them in their believing and holy conversation, Acts xx. 18. And this as to all of them, set over them by the Holy Ghost, whether ordinary or extraordinary, as the apostles, evangelists, elders, pastors, teachers, doing all as commissioned by Christ, and in his name exercising their power and authority, according to his express written law about it, Eph. iv. 11, 12; knowing that who receiveth or despiseth them, doleth so with Christ and God, who sent them, Matt. x. 40; Luke x. 16. For they watch for your souls, as they that must give account: good reason have they to perform this duty, because of their concern in and care for their souls. How great, by Christ's law, are the night watchings, and day cares, and tears, studies, exhortations, reproofs, comfortings, their preachings, and prayers with tears, and strong cries to God for their souls! Will you pay duty to those who watch to preserve and protect your natural life, and not unto those spiritual watchers, and God's charge given to them? Acts xx. 28—31; 2 Tim. iv. 5; Rev. iii. 2, 3. And God will exact an account of them for your souls; and they must render it at a dear rate, Ezek. iii. 17—21; xxxiii. 7, 9. It is at their peril, if they are faithless and neglect their duty, and your souls miscarry, Matt. xviii. 23; xxv. 14, 30. That they may do it with joy, and not with grief; that they may not only do their work cheerfully and comfortably among you, but that they may give up their account joyfully about you to God, when they have brought you home to him, 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20; and which will be an eternal comfort unto you, 2 Thess. i. 7, 10. If you be disobedient to them, though they will have their reward for their fidelity from their Lord, yet with what sighs, tears, groans, sorrow, and heaviness of heart, must they see their labours and your souls lost, and to charge you before God with it! 2 Cor. iii. 15, 16; xii. 21. For that is unprofitable for you: and what damage will both your disobedience to the word of God and them, and their account of it to God, bring on yourselves! Will it then quit the cost to find your punishment more intolerable than that of Sodom and Gomorrah, Matt. x. 15; xi. 22, 24, when he will give you your portion with hypocrites, Matt. xxv. 51, and punish you with everlasting destruction? 2 Thess. i. 7—9.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 15.
<sup>36</sup> Eph. 6.
<sup>19</sup> Col. 4. 3.
<sup>1</sup> Thess. 5. 25.
<sup>2</sup> Thes. 3. 1.
<sup>d</sup> Acts 23. 1.
<sup>8</sup> & 24. 16. 2 Cor. 1. 12.

18 <sup>c</sup>Pray for us: for we trust we have <sup>d</sup>a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly.

Pray for us: the closing duty becoming the subjects of the kingdom of Christ, is prayer, upon some special accounts, ver. 18, 19, that they would with their renewed souls, influenced and assisted by the Spirit of grace and supplication, pour forth their desires to God with faith, fervency, and importunity, for his vouchsafing to the apostle himself, and for their spiritual guides and rulers, that the things they need, and God hath promised to them, as to the successful course of their ministry, may be bestowed on them, which the Spirit specifeth elsewhere, 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6; Eph. vi. 18—20; Col. iv. 3, 4; 2 Thess. iii. 1, 2. For we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly: he urgeth this on them, for that he was a fit subject to be prayed for, however any might accuse or charge him for rejecting Judaism out of singularity, prejudice, or some evil design; he assures them from the Spirit of God, that he had a rightly informed conscience by God's word, and which testified his innocency and sincerity, and which did dictate and influence him to be communicating and promoting, with all and to all, the truth of the gospel; and that his own life and conversation in the world was agreeable to the gospel rule, in all godliness and honesty, Acts xxiii. 1; xxiv. 14; compare 1 Cor. iv. 4; 2 Cor. i. 12.

19 But I beseech you <sup>e</sup>the rather to <sup>f</sup>Philom. 22. do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

He is the more urging and pressing them to the exercise of this duty more fervently, instantly, and abundantly, at this time, that they might prevail with God to remove hindrances by his enemies, freeing him from his chain and restraint at Rome, and to speed his liberty for a return to them, that it might be in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel. So the church prayed for Peter, and prevailed, Acts xii. 12, and he had hopes that God would hear them for him also, Philom. 22.

20 Now <sup>g</sup>the God of peace, <sup>h</sup>that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, <sup>i</sup>that great shepherd of the sheep, <sup>j</sup>through the blood of the everlasting covenant,

As the apostle desires the church's prayers for himself, so he poureth out his for them; with the which he introduceth the conclusion of this Epistle, ver. 20, 21. Now God the Father, the God and Author of peace and reconciliation of sinners to himself, the propagator and lover of peace among all the subjects of his kingdom, the dispenser of the fullness of good, blessing, and happiness, Rom. xv. 3; Phil. iv. 9; 1 Thess. v. 23, who gloriously manifested his power by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus from the dead, Eph. i. 19, 20; Rom. i. 4, who is the great Shepherd of his sheep, exalted to this office, because he poured out his blood a sacrifice for sins, to purchase them, justify and sanctify them, a peculiar flock for himself, according to the covenant of grace that God made with them, and in him with and for sinners, who should repent and believe in him, John x. 9—30; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Phil. ii. 7, 10; Tit. ii. 14; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19, and to perfect them with himself above, 1 Pet. v. 4, by the same power wherewith he was raised, perfect you, &c. Eph. i. 19.

21 <sup>k</sup>Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, <sup>l</sup>working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; <sup>m</sup>to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Make you perfect in every good work to do his will: may this God dispose, incline, and fit you for, may he finish and perfect in you, grace to perform all the forementioned duties, and every other good work, which he enjoineth on you towards God, one another, and all men, 2 Cor. xiii. 9; Eph. iv. 12; Tit. iii. 14; 1 Pet. iv. 2; v. 10, according to his written will and law, Eph. ii. 10. Working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ: working in you by his Spirit continually, that all these good works may satisfy his expectation, be a sweet savour in his nostrils, and so pleasing in his sight, that his soul may delight in them, Phil. ii. 13; Col. i. 9, 10; that God's good-will may return unto them, and he may reward them according to their works, chap. xi. 5, 6; while all is rendered by Jesus Christ, sprinkled with his blood, and perfumed with his incense, chap. x. 19—22. As they are to have all done through Christ, so through his merit and intercession the apostle begs all this from the Father for them. To whom be glory for ever and ever; to this God the Father, in the Son, and by the Spirit, working all this good in them and for them, be really, truly, heartily, and perpetually, throughout all ages, ascribed the honour and glory due to him for the glorious manifestation of his perfections in them, Eph. iii. 21; Phil. iv. 20; 2 Pet. iii. 18; Rev. iv. 11; v. 13. The firm seal of this, from his believing heart, is his Amen, longing for the addition of God's Amen, so be it in heaven, to his on earth.

22 And I beseech you, brethren, suffer <sup>a 1 Pet. 5.12.</sup> the word of exhortation: for <sup>n</sup> I have written a letter unto you in few words.

The apostle now drawing to a close, desires them candidly to accept his Epistle; that, considering their relation to him as Christians and Hebrews, he doth affectionately entreat them, that they would fully receive, entertain, and hold fast, as well as bear with, or suffer, all the doctrine, reproof, exhortation, and consolation, even his whole discourse to them in this Epistle, which the word implies. He had so comprised, summed up, and delivered the revelation of the doctrine of Christ, testified by Moses and the prophets, in a very few words, and sent them kindly and affectionately, in the form of an epistle or letter to them, that it might not be burdensome, either for its matter or length: though how weary are most professing Christians of the shortest heavenly discourse!

<sup>o 1 Thes. 3.2.</sup> 23 Know ye that <sup>o</sup>our brother Timothy <sup>p 1 Tim. 6.12.</sup> is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you.

He acquaints them with the good news of his dismissing Timothy to them, to acquaint them how it fared with him, as he dismissed and sent Tychicus to the Colossians, Col. iv. 7, 8, Epaphroditus to the Philippians, Phil. ii. 25, 28, as he intended to have sent Timothy with them, ver. 19, 23, 24, but he stopped him to see the issue of his appearance before Nero Cæsar; which being over, he despatched him with an account of it to these Hebrews, and the rest of the churches, and signifieth his purpose, that if he quickly returns from them again, then he would visit them together with him. That the word ἀπολαύμενος noteth, or signifieth, the dismissal of a person about business, is seen, Acts xiii. 3. To which interpretation the subscription of the Epistle inclines; and the Scripture is silent of any troubles or restraint of Timothy at all, Phil. ii. 19, 20.

24 Salute all them <sup>a</sup> that have the rule <sup>a ver. 7, 17.</sup> over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you.

He sends his salutations, which were good wishes and prayers for the peace, prosperity, health, and happiness of their souls and bodies, and success in all their concerns; first unto their excellent guides and rulers, ver. 7, 17, that they may prosper and succeed in their work among the saints; and then unto the saints themselves, conveying the gospel peace, according to Christ's command, Matt. x. 12; Luke x. 5. Which saints were all those Hebrews dispersed in several places, and there convening, and maintaining church society; and to whose hand the Epistle first came, they were to receive the salutations themselves, and transmit them to others. With his own he transmits the salutations of all that part of the church of Christ which was in Italy to them. Which salutations, though commonly abused, yet are of great weight and worth where communicated and received by the churches in which the Holy Spirit abideth.

25 <sup>r</sup> Grace be with you all. Amen. <sup>r Tit. 2.15.</sup>

He closeth all with his wonted gracious valediction, wherewith he shutteth up all his Epistles, as he testifieth, 2 Thess. iii. 17, 18. He, like an apostle influenced by the Divine Spirit, admiring grace vouchsafed to himself, and heartily and fervently wishing it down upon all to whom he writeth, even all the spiritual fruits of God's grace and love in Jesus Christ, from election to salvation. And he sealeth up his desire, prayer, and declaration of this, upon them all who were the true subjects of it, with his Amen. Even so let the whole earth be filled with the glory of thy grace, O Trinity of relations in Unity of essence, from henceforth and for ever. Amen.

¶ Written to the Hebrews from Italy by Timothy.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

JAMES

THE ARGUMENT

THAT the authority of this Epistle hath been questioned by some anciently, appears plainly by Eusebius and Jerome, who speak suspiciously of it; and that it hath been denied by some more lately, is no less clear (to say nothing of Cajetan and Erasmus) in Luther, who (though in his after-writings he was more modest) at first spoke slightly of it; and some of his more early followers were of his mind. But as for the ancients, (admitting the two forementioned authors wrote their own sense, and not, as some think, and their words cited by Brochmand and others may well import, the opinion of other men,) why should not this Epistle, being unquestionably received by most of the fathers and primitive Christians before Eusebius or Jerome were born, and many councils, be more effectual to prove its being canonical, than the doubts of a few to persuade us to the contrary? What do we find in it disagreeable to the doctrine of the gospel, unbecoming the style of an apostle, or the Holy Ghost's inditing? Hath it not the same majesty, purity, spirituality, efficacy, and power on men's consciences, that other Scriptures have? To Cajetan and Erasmus we oppose the universality, not only of protestants, but of papists themselves; and to Luther all the modern Lutherans, who now generally receive it. That which drew Luther himself to reject it (to speak a little of that as being of weight) was, partly the seeming difference between James and Paul in the point of justification, which will be spoken to in the 2nd chapter; and partly his speaking nothing (though he wrote to Christians) of the death, or merits, or resurrection of Christ, &c. Whereas, indeed, though he is more sparing in handling evangelical doctrines, yet several he toucheth upon: what doth he mean but the gospel of Christ by the ingrafted word, chap. i. 21, and law of liberty, ver. 25? And who doth he understand by the judge, chap. v. 9, but Christ? and whose coming doth he speak of, ver. 7, but Christ's? And how expressly doth he mention the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ! chap. ii. 1. But the truth is, the persons for whom this Epistle seems designed, and the scope of the writer, call for such a way of writing, as here we have. He bends himself mainly against a licentious, sensual sort of professors, who boasted of the name of faith, but wanted the thing, and (being rather libertines than saints) blemished the Christian profession with unsuitable practice. These he takes upon him to correct, and evinceth their faith and religion (being barren of good works) to be vain. It was not therefore necessary he should so largely insist upon the doctrine of faith, when his chief design was to reform manners. Paul having many times to do with men of Pharisaical spirits, or such as were difficultly weaned from Judaism, and an opinion of self-righteousness, makes it his business to settle the doctrine of grace, and justification by faith; and why may not James, having to do with those who (probably, and as Austin thinks, misunderstanding Paul) abused the doctrine of grace, and turned it into an occasion of licentiousness, be allowed to tax that abuse, and insist the more fully on matters of practice, and press them to live up to their faith, and bring forth fruits answerable to that holy truth they had received? Remedies must be suited to diseases: there is as little need to urge a Solifidian to rely on grace of which he already presumes, as to persuade a Pharisee of the necessity of good works, upon which of himself he lays but too much stress.

But as the authority of this Epistle hath been questioned formerly, though with little reason, so the penman of it is still doubted of, perhaps with more. However, this question is less material; we need not be over-solicitous to know what amanuensis the Spirit of God made use of in penning it, so long as we find the impress of God upon it. It is certain that this James was not the son of Zebedee, whom Herod had beheaded (if chronology fail not) before the writing of this Epistle, Acts xii. 1. It is not certain that there were three Jameses, two of them apostles, and the third (called Oblias, and James the Just) one of the seventy disciples; the Scripture mentioning but two, one the son of Zebedee, the other of Alpheus, called the brother of the Lord, Gal. i. 19, as being of kin to his family; and said to be a pillar, Gal. ii. 9, and joined with Peter and John. And though some have thought the James there mentioned to have been the third James, called Oblias, and one of the seventy; yet it is more probable that he was indeed no other than the son of Alpheus, and one of the twelve: nor is it likely, that one of the disciples should be numbered as one of the three pillars, and therein preferred above so many apostles. This James, therefore, upon the whole, I take to be the penman of this Epistle; and his not calling himself an apostle, need not be objected against his being so, when he doth no more in omitting it than Paul doth in four of his Epistles, viz. to the Philippians, both to the Thessalonians, and that to Philemon.

Why this Epistle is called general is much questioned, and a satisfactory reason not easily given. Some think, because it is not inscribed to any particular church or person, as Paul's are. But then why are the two latter Epistles of John reckoned among the catholic or general ones, though directed to particular persons, and that to the Hebrews not counted among them, though it have no such particular inscription? Others think, that this and the six other were called catholic, upon their catholic or general reception and approbation among the churches, in opposition to the Epistles of Barnabas, Ignatius, Clemens, &c., which never were received as any part of the canon. These are the best reasons of this title I meet with; which is the more probable, let the reader judge.

The matter of this Epistle is, in a manner, wholly practical, but very various; though chiefly, either corrective of the vices and abuses which had crept into the conversations of professors; or monitory and hortatory, partly to awaken the drowsy among them out of their stupidity and security, and stir them up to the practice of their neglected duty, (to which he points them particularly, by minding them of approaching judgment,) and partly to persuade sincere and humble believers to patience under tribulations and oppressions, by propounding unto them suitable encouragements for their support and consolation in such a condition. Many excellent and useful truths are promiscuously laid down throughout the whole, which cannot easily be reduced to any certain method, but will be severally spoken to in the respective places where they occur.

CHAP. I

The apostle's address to the dispersed Jews, l. He recom- mendeth patience and joy in afflictions, 2—4, and prayer with faith, 5—8. He giveth advice to the poor and to the rich, 9—11. The reward of those that are proof under trial, 12. Our own lusts, and not God, tempt us to sin, 13—16. God is the unchangeable author of all good to his creatures, 17, 18. We must receive the word with purity and meekness, and not only hear, but do it, 19—25. The necessity of governing the tongue, 26. The essential duties of true religion, 27.

A. D. 60.
cir. 60.
a Acts 12. 17.
b Gal. i. 19. &
c 2. 5. Jude 1.
d Tit. i. 1. c Acts 26. 7. d Deut. 32. 26. John 7. 35. Acts 2. 6. & 8. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 1.

*JAMES, <sup>a</sup>a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, <sup>c</sup>to the twelve tribes <sup>d</sup>which are scattered abroad, greeting.

James, the son of Alpheus and brother of Jude, called likewise the brother of the Lord, Gal. i. 19. A servant; not only by creation, as all the creatures are, Psal. cxix. 91, or by redemption, as all believers are, but by special commission in the office of an apostle; see Gal. i. 10; Phil. i. 1; 2 Pet. i. 1; compare likewise Rom. i. 9. Of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ: the members of this clause may be taken, either jointly, and then the conjunction and hath the power only of an explication, q. d. The servant of God, even the Lord Jesus Christ, as Tit. ii. 11; and the sense must be, the servant of Jesus Christ, who is God: or, separately, (which our translation seems to favour,) to let his countrymen know, that in serving Christ he served the God of his fathers; and by the authority both of God and of Christ wrote this to them. To the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad: being one of the apostles of the circumcision, Gal. ii. 9, he writes to all his believing countrymen wherever dispersed, as they were upon several occasions, and at several times, into divers countries, Acts ii. 9—11. Greeting: a salutation usual, not only among the heathen, but the Jews, Matt. xxvi. 49; xxvii. 29; and used by the Christians, Acts xv. 23. It seems to answer to the Hebrew salutation, peace, which was comprehensive of all happiness; and so is this here to be understood.

2 My brethren, <sup>e</sup>count it all joy <sup>f</sup>when ye fall into divers temptations; e Matt. 5. 12.
Acts 5. 41.
Heb. 10. 34.
1 Pet. 4. 12.
11 1 Pet. 1. 6.

My brethren; both as being of the same nation and the same religion; so he calls them, that the kindness of his compellation might sweeten his exhortations. Count it; esteem it so by a spiritual judgment, though the flesh judge otherwise. All joy; matter of the chiefest joy, viz. spiritual. So all is taken, 1 Tim. i. 15. When ye fall into; when ye are so beset and circumvented by them, that there is no escaping them, but they come upon you, though by the direction of God's providence, yet not by your own seeking. Divers temptations; so he calls afflictions, from God's end in them, which is to try and discover what is in men, and whether they will cleave to him or not. The Jews were hated by other nations, and the Christian Jews even by their own, and therefore were exposed to divers afflictions, and of divers kinds, 1 Pet. i. 6.

3 <sup>g</sup>Knowing this, that the trying of <sup>g</sup>your faith worketh patience.

Knowing this; considering. That the trying of your faith; the reason why he called afflictions temptations, as well as why believers should count it all joy to fall into them, viz. because they are trials of their faith, and such trials as tend to approbation, as the word (different from that in the former verse) imports. Of your faith; both of the truth of the grace itself, and of your constancy in the profession of it. Worketh patience; not of itself, but as a means in the hand of God, made effectual to that end. Object. Rom. v. 3, it is said, Tribulation worketh patience, and patience, experience, or trial; whereas here it is said, that trial works patience. Ans. The words used here and Rom v. are different; here it is δοκιμιον, which signifies actively, the trying itself, and this works patience; there it is δοκιμη, which is taken passively, for the experiment following upon the trial; or, as we read it, the experience, viz. of our sincerity, as well as of God's consolation, which may well be the effect of patience wrought by and under trials. And so both are true, that tribulation, as Paul speaks, and trial, as James, work patience; and patience, not a further trial, but rather discovery, or experiment, or approbation of what we are, which appears by nothing more than by patience under sufferings.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

But let patience have her perfect work; i. e. effect: q. d. Let it have its full efficacy in you, both in making you absolutely subject to God's will, and constant to the end under all your sufferings. That ye may be perfect and entire; that you may grow perfect in this grace, as well as in others, and have the image of Christ (to whom ye are to be conformed) completed in you. Wanting nothing; either not failing, not fainting in trials, or not defective in any thing which is a needful part of Christianity.

h 1 Kings 3. 2. 11, 12. Prov. 2. 5. i Matt. 7. 7. & 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. Luke 11. 9. John 14. 13. & 15. 7. & 16. 23. k Jer. 29. 12. 1 John 5. 14, 15.

5 <sup>h</sup> If any of you lack wisdom, <sup>i</sup> let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and <sup>k</sup> it shall be given him.

If any of you lack wisdom; if, doth not imply a doubt, but supposeth something which they themselves would grant; viz. that they did lack wisdom, either in whole or in part. It is as if he had said, Since, or seeing, ye lack, &c. See the like, Mal. i. 6. Though this hold true of wisdom taken more generally, yet wisdom here is to be restrained, according to the circumstances of the text, and taken for wisdom or skill to bear afflictions so as to rejoice in them. Let him ask of God; by believing, fervent prayer. That giveth to all men; either to all sorts of men, Jew or Gentile, bond or free, &c., or to all that so ask, as appears by the next verse. Liberally; or simply, Rom. xii. 8, i. e. with an open, free, large heart, in opposition to the contracted, narrow spirits of covetous misers. Our translation renders it well liberally; and so the word is used, 2 Cor. viii. 2; ix. 13. And upbraideth not; doth not twit them with their importunity, or frequency in asking, (as men often do,) however he may upbraid them with their unthankfulness for, or abuse of, what they have received. And it shall be given him: see Matt. vii. 7, 8; John xvi. 23. The promise is here added to encourage faith in asking.

l Mark 11. 24. i Tim. 2. 5.

6 <sup>l</sup> But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

But let him ask in faith; with confidence of God's hearing, grounded on the Divine attributes and promises, Mark xi. 24; 1 John v. 14. Nothing wavering; either not disputing God's power or promise; or rather, not doubting, not staggering through unbelief, Rom. iv. 20, where the same Greek word is used: so Acts x. 20, nothing doubting; and Mark xi. 23, where it is opposed to believing. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed: this notes either the emptiness and unprofitableness of faithless prayer, when men's minds are thus at uncertainties, tossed to and fro; the confidence they sometimes seem to have, like waves, falls down and fails, and their prayers come to nothing: or, the disquiet and torment distrust works in the minds of such waverers, which are never settled till faith come and fix them, Isa. lvii. 20.

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

For let not that man; he that wavers, in opposition to him that asks in faith: all doubting doth not hinder the hearing of prayer, but that which excludes faith, Mark ix. 23, 24. Think; vainly conceit, or persuade himself. That he shall receive any thing of the Lord; even the least mercy, much less the wisdom mentioned.

m ch. 4. a.

8 <sup>m</sup> A double minded man is unstable in all his ways.

A double minded man; either, 1. A hypocrite, who is said to have a double heart, Psal. xii. 2. Or rather, 2. He that is of a doubtful mind, wavering, and fluctuating with contrary motions, sometimes of one mind, sometimes of another; sometimes hoping, sometimes desponding. Is unstable; either unconstant, without any fixedness or consistency of spirit, as ready to depart from God as to cleave to him; or unquiet, troubled, full of inward tumults. In all his ways; by a Hebraism, ways, for counsels, purposes, actions, &c.

9 Let the brother of low degree || rejoice in that he is exalted: <sup>o</sup> Or, glory.

Let the brother; i. e. the believer, (for to such he writes,) all believers, or saints, being brethren in Christ, 1 Cor. xvi. 20; 1 Thess. v. 26; 1 Tim. vi. 2. Of low degree; the Greek word signifies both lowliness of mind and lowliness of condition. (as the Hebrew word doth, to which it answers,) but here is to be understood of the latter, (as Luke i. 48,) but especially of such a low estate as a man is brought into for Christ's sake and the gospel's. Rejoice in that he is exalted; either exalted to be a brother, a member of Christ, a child of God, and heir of glory, which is the greatest preferment; or exalted to the honour of suffering for Christ: see Acts v. 41; Rom. v. 3.

10 But the rich, in that he is made low: because <sup>n</sup> as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

o Job 14. 2. P. 31. 2. & 30. 5, 6. & 102. 1. & 103. 15. Is. 40. 6. 1 Cor. 7. 31. ch. 4. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 24. 1 John 2. 17.

But the rich; viz. brother, he that is in a high, honourable, or plentiful condition in the world. In that he is made low; supply from the former verse, let him rejoice in that he is made low; not as to his outward state, (for he is supposed to be rich still,) but his inward disposition and frame of mind, God having given him a lowly heart in a high condition, and thereby prepared him for the cross, though as yet he be not under it. Because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away: the reason why the rich brother should be humble in his greatest abundance, viz. because of the uncertainty of his enjoying what at present he possesseth; he is neither secure of his life, nor his wealth; he and his enjoyments pass away, and his pomp vanisheth as easily as the flower of the grass, which fades as soon as it flourisheth.

11 For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

With a burning heat; or, the scorching east wind, which in those countries was wont to rise with the sun, Jonah iv. 8. So also shall the rich man fade away; either shall is here put for may, the future tense for the potential mood; and then the apostle doth not so much declare what always certainly shall be, as what easily may be, and frequently is, the prosperity of rich men not being always of so short continuance. Or, shall may be taken properly, as we read it; and then this is a general proposition, showing the mutable nature and short continuance of rich men and their riches, whose longest life is but short, and death, when it comes, strips them of their enjoyments: and though this frailty be common to all, yet he speaks of the rich especially, because they are so apt to bear themselves high upon their wealth, and put confidence in it, 1 Tim. vi. 17. In his ways; either in his journeyings and travels for his riches, or rather in his counsels, purposes, actions, Psal. cxlvi. 4.

12 <sup>o</sup> Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive <sup>p</sup> the crown of life, <sup>q</sup> which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

o Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11. 12. Heb. 12. 5. Rev. 3. 19. p 1 Cor. 9. 25. 2 Tim. 4. 8. ch. 2. 5. 11. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Rev. 2. 10. q Matt. 10. 22. & 19. 28. 29. ch. 2. 5.

Blessed is the man that endureth; holds out against the assaults and impressions of temptations with patience and constancy, chap. v. 11; Heb. xii. 5, 7. Temptations; afflictions, as ver. 2. For when he is tried; approved, and found upon the trial to be sound in the faith: a metaphor taken from metals tried by fire, and found pure. He shall receive the crown of life; so the heavenly glory is called, Rev. ii. 10, either because it is not to be had but in eternal life, or because of its duration and not fading away, 1 Pet. v. 4. Which the Lord hath promised: this shows on what ground it is to be expected, viz. on the account of the promise, and how sure we may be of it. To them that love him; i. e. all true believers, whose faith, and thereby title to the crown, is evidenced by love, which is the fulfilling of the law. Object. Why not promised to them that suffer for Christ, of whom he here speaks? Answer. That is implied, for none love him more, or evidence their love to him more, than they that suffer for him.

13 Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man:

Let no man say; neither with his mouth, nor so much as in his heart, blasphemously cast the blame of his sins upon God, to clear himself. When he is tempted; so stirred up to sin as to be drawn to it. I am tempted of God; either solicited by God to sin, or enforced to it. For God cannot be tempted with evil; cannot be drawn aside to any thing that is unrighteous, by any motion from within, or impression from without. Neither tempteth he any man; doth no way seduce or enforce to sin, so as to be justly chargeable as the author of it. Object. God is said to be tempted, Exod. xvii. 2, 7; Deut. vi. 16; Psal. lxxviii. 41; and to tempt, Gen. xxii. 1; Deut. viii. 2; xiii. 3. Ans. Both are to be understood of temptations of exploration, or for the discovery of something that was before hidden. Men tempt God, that they may know what he will do; God tempts men, that they (not he, for he knows it already) may know what themselves will do, which then appears, when the temptation draws it out; but neither is to be understood of the temptation here spoken of, viz. of seduction, or drawing into sin. God tempts by giving hard commands, Gen. xxii. 1; by afflicting, as in Job's case; by letting loose Satan or other wicked instruments to tempt, 1 Kings xxii. 22; by withholding his grace and deserting men, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15; by presenting occasions which corruption within improves unto sin, and by ordering and governing the evil wills of men, as that a thief should steal out of this flock rather than that, that Nebuchadnezzar should come against Jerusalem rather than Rabbah, Ezek. xxi. 21, 22. But God doth not tempt by commanding, suggesting, soliciting, or persuading to sin.

14 But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

He shows the great cause of sin; that lust hath a greater hand in it than either the devil or his instruments, who cannot make us sin without ourselves: they sometimes tempt, and do not prevail; but when lust tempts, it always prevails, either in whole or in part, it being a degree of sin to be our own tempters. Drawn away; either this notes a degree of sin, the heart's being drawn off from God; or the way whereby lust brings into sin, viz. the impetuosity and violence of its motions in us. Of his own lust; original corruption in its whole latitude, though chiefly with respect to the appetitive faculties. And enticed; either a further degree of sin, enticed by the pleasantness of the object, as represented by our own corruption; or another way of lust's working in us to sin, viz. by the delightfulness and pleasure of its motions: in the former it works by a kind of force, in this by flattery and deceit. It is either a metaphor taken from a fish enticed by a bait, and drawn after it, or rather from a harlot drawing a young man out of the right way, and alluring him with the bait of pleasure to commit folly with her.

15 Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

Then when lust hath conceived; lust (compared to a harlot) may be said to conceive, when the heart is pleased with the motion, and yields some consent to it. It bringeth forth sin; the birth of sin may be the complete consent of the will to it, or the outward act of it. And sin; actual sin, the fruit and product of original. When it is finished; sin is finished, when it is not only committed, but continued in, as the way and course of a man's life. Bringeth forth death; not only temporal, but eternal. Or we may thus take the order and progress of sin: the first indeliberate motion of lust, is the temptation or bait, which by its pleasantness enticeth, and by its vehemency draws the heart after it (as the harlot, Prov. vii. 21, with the flattering of her lips forced the young man, telling him of the pleasure he should enjoy, ver. 14, 16—18, and then he goes after her, ver. 22); the heart's lingering about and being entangled with the delightful motion of lust, is its committing folly with it; when the full consent is joined, lust hath conceived; when the outward act is performed, sin is brought forth; and when sin is finished in a settled course, it brings forth death; which, though every sin do in the merit of it, yet sin only finished doth in the event. Object. Doth not this imply lust, and its first motions, not to be sin? Ans. No: for, 1. The least motions of it are forbidden, Matt. v. 28; Rom. vii. 7. 2. It is contrary to the law and Spirit of God, Rom. vii. 23, 25; Gal. v. 16, 17. 3. It is the fountain of impurity, and therefore is itself impure, Job xiv. 4; Matt. vii. 15, 16; James iii. 11. 4. Evil thoughts defile a man, Matt. xv. 19; Acts viii. 22. Object. How is lust said here to bring forth sin, when, Rom. vii. 8, sin is said to work lust? Ans. James calls the corrupt principle itself lust, and the actings of it, sin; whereas Paul calls the same principle sin, and the actings of it lust. And so both are true, lust, as a root, brings forth the acts of sin as its fruits; and sin as a root, brings forth actual lusts, as its fruits.

16 Do not err, my beloved brethren.

Viz. in imputing your sins to God, and saying, that when you are tempted you are tempted of him.

17 Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

Every good gift; Greek, giving; and so it may be distinct from gift in the next clause; to show, that whereas men sometimes give good gifts in an evil way, and with an evil mind, God's giving, as well as gift, is always good; and therefore when we receive anything of him, we should look not only to the thing itself, but to his bounty and goodness in giving it. Or, it may be rendered as our translators do, gift, and so the word is sometimes used by profane writers themselves; and then, though it may be implied, that all good gifts, and of all kinds, of nature and of grace, are from God, yet the apostle's design in this place being to prove that God is not the author of sin, good gifts may most fairly be understood the best gifts, those of grace, (spiritual blessings, Eph. i. 3,) such being contrary to sin, and destructive of it, in one of which he instanceth, viz. regeneration, ver. 18. And every perfect gift; the highest degree of good gifts, those that perfect us most; to intimate, that all the parts and steps of spiritual life, from the first beginning of grace in regeneration to the consummation of it in glory, are of God. Is from above; i. e. from heaven, John iii. 27, 31; and heaven is put for God that dwells there, Luke xv. 21. And cometh down from the Father; the Creator, Author, or First Cause, as Heb. xii. 9; it is spoken after the manner of the Hebrews: see Gen. iv. 20, 21. Of lights; God is the author of all perfection, and so of corporeal light; but here we are to understand spiritual light, the light of knowledge, faith, holiness, as opposed to the darkness of ignorance, unbelief, sin; of which he cannot be the author. With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning: he here sets forth God as essentially and immutably good, and the Father of lights, by allusion to the sun, the fountain of corporeal light, and makes use of terms borrowed from astronomy. The sun, though it scattereth its beams every where, yet is not without its changes, parallaxes, and diversities of aspects, not only sometimes clear and sometimes eclipsed, but one while in the east, another in the south, then in the west; nor without its turnings in its annual course from tropic to tropic, (to which the Greek word here used seems to allude,) its various accesses and recesses, by reason of which it casts different shadows: but God is always the same, like himself, constant in the emanations of his goodness, without casting any dark shadow of evil, which might infer a change in him.

18 Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures.

Of his own will; out of his mere good pleasure, as the original cause, and not moved to it by any dignity or merit in us, Eph. i. 9; 2 Tim. i. 9. Begat he us; by a spiritual generation, whereby we are new-born, and are made partakers of a Divine nature, John i. 13; 1 Pet. i. 3, 23. With the word of truth; i. e. the word of the gospel, as

1 John 15. 35.
Pa. 7. 14.

1 Rom. 6. 21,
23.

1 John 3. 27.
1 Cor. 4. 7.

u Num. 23.
19. 1 Sam. 15.
29. Mal. 3. 6.
Rom. 11. 28.

x John 1. 13.
& 3. 3.
1 Cor. 4. 15.
1 Pet. 1. 23.
y Eph. 1. 12.
z Jer. 2. 3.
Rev. 14. 4.

the instrument or means whereby we are regenerated: why it is called the word of truth, see Eph. i. 13. That we should be a kind of first-fruits; i. e. most excellent creatures, being singled out and separated from the rest, and consecrated to God, as under the law the first-fruits were, Rev. xiv. 4. Of his creatures; viz. reasonable creatures; the word creature being elsewhere restrained to men: see Mark xvi. 15; Col. i. 15.

a Eccles. 5. 1.
b Prov. 10.
19. & 17. 27.
Eccles. 5. 2.
c Prov. 14.
17. & 16. 32.
Eccles. 7. 9.

19 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, <sup>a</sup>let every man be swift to hear, <sup>b</sup>slow to speak, <sup>c</sup>slow to wrath:

Let every man be swift to hear; prompt and ready to hear God speaking in the word of truth, before mentioned. Slow to speak; either silently and submissively hear the word, or speak not rashly and precipitately of the things of faith, but be well furnished yourselves with spiritual knowledge, ere you take upon you to teach others. Slow to wrath; either, be not angry at the word, or the dispensers of it, though it come close to your consciences, and discover your secret sins; the word is salt, do not quarrel if it make your sores smart, being it will keep them from festering: or, be not angrily prejudiced against those that dissent from you.

20 For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

For the wrath of man: that anger which is merely human, and generally sinful, inordinate passion and carnal zeal. Worketh not the righteousness of God; will not accomplish the ends of the word in you, viz. to work that righteousness which in the word God prescribes you. But here is withal a meiosis in the words, less being spoken than is intended; it is implied therefore, that the wrath of man hinders the operation of the word, and disposeth that unrighteousness which is forbidden by it.

21 Wherefore <sup>d</sup>lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, <sup>e</sup>which is able to save your souls.

Wherefore lay apart; not only restrain it, and keep it in; but put off, and throw it away as a filthy rag, Isa. xxx. 22: see Eph. iv. 22; Col. iii. 8; 1 Pet. ii. 1. All, of every kind. Filthiness; or, sordidness; a metaphor borrowed from the filth of the body, 1 Pet. iii. 21, and thence transferred to the soul; and it here seems to imply, not only sensuality or covetousness, but all sorts of lusts, whereby men are defiled, 2 Cor. vii. 1; 2 Pet. ii. 20. And superfluity of naughtiness; i. e. that naughtiness which is superfluous. That is said to be superfluous or redundant, which is more than should be in a thing; in which respect all sin is superfluous in the soul, as being that which should not be in it: and so this intimates that we are not only to lay apart more gross pollutions, but all the lusts of the flesh, and relics of old Adam, as being all superfluities which may well be spared, or excrements, (as some render the word, agreeably to the former metaphor,) which should be cast away. And receive; not only into your heads by knowledge, but into your hearts by faith. With meekness; with humility, modesty, and gentleness, which makes men submissive to the truth of the word, and ready to learn of God even those things which are above their natural capacity, Psal. xxv. 9; Isa. lxvi. 2; Matt. xi. 5, 27: this is opposed to wrath, which makes men unteachable. The ingrafted word; either which is ingrafted or implanted, viz. ministerially, by the preachers of the gospel, 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7; principally by the Spirit of God, who writes it in the heart, Jer. xxxi. 33. And thus it may be taken particularly for the word of the gospel, in opposition to the law, which came to men's ears from without, and admonished them of their duty, but was not written in their hearts, or ingrafted thereto from them unto obedience to it. Or, that it may be ingrafted, i. e. intimately united to, or rooted in, the heart by a vital union; or made natural to it, (as some render the word,) the heart being transformed by the power of it, and conformed to the precepts of it, 2 Cor. iii. 18; Rom. vi. 17. Which, viz. when received by faith, is able to save, instrumentally, as being the means wherein God puts forth his power in saving them, Rom. i. 16. Your souls; yourselves; the soul, as the noblest part, is by a synecdoche put for the whole person: see 1 Pet. i. 9.

22 But <sup>f</sup>be ye doers of the word, and <sup>g</sup>not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

But be ye doers of the word; the same as doers of the word, ver. 25, namely, which the word prescribes; q. d. Receive the word by faith into your hearts, and bring forth the fruit of it in your lives: see Luke xi. 28; John xiii. 17. And not hearers only; not contenting yourselves with a bare hearing the word, though it have no influence upon you. Deceiving your own selves; playing the sophisters with, or putting a fallacy upon, yourselves; particularly, persuading yourselves into a good opinion of your state, merely because of your being hearers of the word, Matt. vii. 21.

23 For <sup>h</sup>if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass:

He is like unto a man: the Greek word here used, properly signifies the sex, not the species, but is indifferently used by this apostle with the other, as ver. 12, and 20, so that by a man looking at his face in a glass, is meant any man or woman. Beholding his natural face; or, the face of his nativity, by a Hebraism, for natural face, as we translate it; i. e. his own face, that which nature gave him, or he was born with. In a glass; the word is here compared to a looking-glass: as the glass represents to us the features and complexions of our faces, whether beautiful or deformed; so the word shows us the true face of our souls, the beauty of God's image when restored to them, and the spots of sin which so greatly disfigure them.

24 For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.

The remembrance of what his face is vanisheth as soon as his eye is off the glass; he remembers not the spots he saw in his face, to wipe them off. So he that sees the blemishes of his soul in the glass of the word, and doth not remember them to do them away, looks in that glass (i. e. hears the word) in vain.

25 But <sup>i</sup>whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, <sup>k</sup>this man shall be blessed in his deed.

But whoso looketh into; viz. intently and earnestly, searching diligently into the mind of God. The word signifies a bowing down of the head to look into a thing; and is used of the disciples' looking into Christ's sepulchre, Luke xxiv. 12; John xx. 5; see 1 Pet. i. 12; and seems to be opposed to looking into a glass, which is more slight, and without such prying and inquisitiveness. The perfect law of liberty; the whole doctrine of the Scripture, or especially the gospel, called a law, Rom. iii. 27, both as it is a rule, and by reason of the power it hath over the heart; and a law of liberty, because it shows the way to the best liberty, freedom from sin, the bondage of the ceremonial law, the rigour of the moral, and from the wrath of God; and likewise the way of serving God freely and ingenuously as children; and because, being received into the heart, it is accompanied with the Spirit of adoption who works this liberty, 2 Cor. iii. 17. It is called a perfect law, not only as being entire and without any defect, but as directing us to the greatest perfection, full conformity to God, and enjoyment of him, 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17. And continueth therein; perseveres in the study, belief, and obedience of this doctrine, (Psal. i. 2,) in all conditions, and under all temptations and afflictions. This seems to be opposed to him, who, when he hath looked in a glass, goes away, ver. 24. By which are set forth slight, superficial hearers, who do not continue in Christ's word, John viii. 31. He being not a forgetful hearer; Greek, hearer of forgetfulness, by a Hebraism, for a forgetful hearer; it answers to him in the former verse, that forgetteth what manner of man he was; and implies, not only not remembering the truths we have heard, but a f Matt. 7. 21.

Luke 6. 46.
g 11. 28.
Rom. 2. 13.
1 John 3. 7.

h Luke 6. 47.
i. e. See ch. 2. 14. &c.

d Col. 3. 8.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
e Acts 13. 26.
Rom. 1. 16.
1 Cor. 15. 2.
Eph. 1. 13.
Tit. 2. 11.
Heb. 2. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 9.

h 2 Cor. 3. 18.
i ch. 2. 12.

k John 13. 17.
l Or, doing.

not practising them, as appears by the next clause. But a doer of the work; viz. which the word directs him to do: the singular number is put for the plural; he means, he that reduceth what he hears into practice, Psal. ciii. 18. This man shall be blessed in his deed; this is opposed to bare hearing, and the doer of the work is said to be blessed in or by his deed, as the evidence of his present begun blessedness, and the way to his future perfect happiness.

26 If any man among you seem to be religious, and <sup>1</sup>bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

If any man among you seem to be religious; seems to others, or rather to himself; thinks himself religious, because of his hearing and outward worship: thus the word rendered seems is often taken, 1 Cor. iii. 18; viii. 2; xiv. 37; Gal. vi. 3. Here he shows who are not doers of the work, as in the next verse, who are. And bridleth not his tongue; restrains it not from the common vices of the tongue, reviling, railing, censuring, &c. But deceiveth his own heart; either deceiveth his own heart in thinking himself religious, when indulging himself in things so contrary to religion, or deceiveth his own heart, being blinded with self-love, and lifted up with self-conceit, which is the cause of his censuring and speaking evil of others. This man's religion is vain; empty, and to no purpose, having no reality in itself, and bringing no benefit to him.

27 Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, <sup>m</sup>To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, <sup>n</sup>and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Pure religion; true, sincere, genuine, Matt. v. 8; John xv. 3. And undefiled; this seems to reflect upon the hypocritical Jews, whose religion consisted so much in external observances, and keeping themselves from ceremonial defilements, when yet they were sullied with so many moral ones, ver. 14; Matt. xxiii. 23; John xviii. 28; devoured widows' houses. They thought their religion pure and undefiled; the apostle shows here which is really so before God; in the sight of God, and according to his judgment. God and the Father; i. e. God who is the Father, and being only explicative, as Eph. i. 3; v. 20: yet this title may be given here to God with respect to what follows, and to show that such acts of charity are acceptable to him that is called the Judge of widows, and the Father of the fatherless, Psal. lxxviii. 5. To visit; this includes all other acts of charity to them, comforting, counselling, relieving them, &c. The fatherless and widows; he doth not exclude others from being the objects of our charity and compassion, but instanceth in fatherless and widows, as being usually most miserable, because destitute of those relations which might be most helpful to them; and possibly in those times persecution might increase the number of widows and orphans. In their affliction; when they had most need; lest any should think it sufficient to visit them that were rich, or in a prosperous condition. And to keep himself unspotted from the world; untainted by the evil example of men in the world, and free from the lusts of the world, moral pollutions. The apostle doth not here define religion, but only instanceth in these two things, good works and holiness of conversation, as testimonies and arguments of the truth of it.

CHAP. II

It is not agreeable to the Christian profession to regard the rich, and despise the poor, 1—9. The guilt of any one breach of the law, 10—12. The obligation to mercy, 13. Faith without works is dead, 14—19. We are justified, as Abraham and Rahab were, by works, and not by faith only, 20—26.

MY brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, <sup>a</sup>the Lord of glory, with <sup>b</sup>respect of persons.

a 1 Cor. 2. 8.
b Lev. 19. 15.
Deut. 1. 17.
& 16. 19.
Prov. 21. 23.
& 24. 21.
Matt. 22. 16. ver. 9. Jude 16.

Have not; profess not yourselves, and regard not, or esteem not in others. The faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; i. e. faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; not the author but the object of faith is meant, as Gal. ii. 20; iii. 22; Phil. iii. 9. The Lord of glory; Lord not being in the Greek, glory may be joined with faith, (admitting only a trajection in the words, so frequent in the sacred writers,) and then the words will run thus, the faith of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, i. e. the faith of his being glorified, which by a synecdoche may be put for the whole work of redemption wrought by him, which was completed by his glorification, as the last part of it; or, by a Hebraism, the faith of the glory, may be for the glorious faith. But the plainest way of reading the words is (as our translators do) by supplying the word Lord just before mentioned; Lord of glory, (Christ being elsewhere so called, 1 Cor. ii. 8.) i. e. the glorious Lord; as the Father is called the Father of glory, Eph. i. 17, i. e. the glorious Father: and then it may be an argument to second what the apostle is speaking of; Christ being the Lord of glory, a relation to him by faith puts an honour upon believers, though poor and despicable in the world; and therefore they are not to be contemned. With respect of persons; the word rendered persons signifies the face or countenance, and synecdochically the whole person; and, by consequence, all those parts or qualities we take notice of in the person. To respect a person is sometimes taken in a good sense, Gen. xix. 21; 1 Sam. xxv. 35. Mostly in an evil, when either the person is opposed to the cause, we give more or less to a man upon the account of something we see in him which is altogether foreign to his cause, Lev. xix. 15, or when we accept one with injury to or contempt of another. To have, then, the faith of Christ with respect of persons, is to esteem the professors of religion, not for their faith, or relation to Christ, but according to their worldly condition, their being great or mean, rich or poor; this the apostle taxeth in the Hebrews to whom he wrote, that whereas in the things of God all believers are equal, they respected the greater and richer sort of professors, because great or rich; so as to despise those that were poor or low. The Greek hath the word plurally, respects, which may intimate the several ways of respecting persons, in judgment or out of judgment. This doth not exclude the civil respect we owe to magistrates and superiors upon the account of their places or gifts; but only a respecting men in the things of religion upon such accounts as are extrinsic to religion; or, with prejudice to others as considerable in religion as themselves, though inferior to them in the world.

2 For if there come unto your †assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

For if there come unto your assembly; either church assemblies for worship, Heb. x. 25; and in these we find some respect of men's persons, which may here be blamed: see 1 Cor. xi. 20—22. Or their assemblies for disposing church offices, and deciding church controversies, &c.; for he speaks of such respecting men's persons as is condemned by the law, ver. 9, which was especially in judgment. A man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel; the usual ensigns of honourable or rich persons, Gen. xxxviii. 18, 25; xli. 42; Luke xv. 22; xvi. 19. And there come in also a poor man; the word signifies one very poor, even to beggarliness. In vile raiment; filthy and sordid, Zech. iii. 3, 4, the sign of extreme poverty.

3 And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here || in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

And ye have respect to him; Greek, look upon, viz. with respect and veneration, or a care and concern to please him. Sit thou here in a good place; an honourable place, either contrary to the usual orders of the churches, according to which (as some say) the elder sat in chairs, the next to them on benches; and the novices on the pavement at their feet; the apostle taxing their carnal partiality in disposing these places to the people as rich, not as Christians;

† Or, well, or, solemnly.

or it may note their disposing church offices to them that were rich, or favouring them in their causes rather than the poor. Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool; the meanest places, and belonging to the youngest disciples: both are expressions of contempt.

4 Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

Are ye not then partial in yourselves? either, are ye not judged in yourselves, convicted by your own consciences of partiality, and accepting men's persons? or, have ye not made a difference? viz. out of a corrupt affection rather than a right judgment; and then it falls in with our translation, Are ye not partial? the Greek word is used in this sense, Acts xv. 9; Jude 22. And are become judges of evil thoughts; i. e. judges that have evil thoughts, or are evil affected: q. d. You evidence the corruptness of your affections by your thus perversely judging.

5 Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world<sup>d</sup> rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom<sup>e</sup> which he hath promised to them that love him?

Hath not God chosen the poor? not that God hath chosen all the poor in the world, but his choice is chiefly of them, 1 Cor. i. 26, 28. Poor he means in the things of this world, and in the esteem of worldly men; they are opposed to those that Paul calls rich in this world, 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18. Rich: some insert the verb substantive to be between this and the former clause, and read, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world to be rich, &c. So Rom. viii. 29, predestinate to be conformed: the like defective speeches we find, John xii. 46; 2 Cor. iii. 6. And the verb understood here is expressed, Eph. i. 4, after the same word we have in this text. And yet if we read the words as they stand in our translation, they do not prove that foresight of faith is previous to election, any more than that being heirs of the kingdom is so too. In faith; either in the greatness and abundance of their faith, Matt. xv. 28; Rom. iv. 20; or rather, rich in those privileges and hopes to which by faith they have a title. And heirs of the kingdom; an instance of their being rich, in that they are to inherit a kingdom. Which he hath promised to them that love him: see chap. i. 12, where the same words occur, only that which is here a kingdom, is there a crown.

6 But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats?

But ye have despised the poor; God's poor, viz. by your respecting persons. Do not rich men? either those that were unbelieving Jews or heathen; or such as made a profession of Christianity, but were not cordial friends to it; or, both may be included. Oppress you; insolently abuse you, and unrighteously, either usurping a power over you which belongs not to them, or abusing the power they have. And draw you before the judgment-seats; especially before unbelieving judges, 1 Cor. vi. 1, 6: they would colour their oppression with a pretence of law, and therefore drew the poor saints before the judgment-seat.

7 Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

Do not they blaspheme? if the rich here spoken of were Christians, then they may be said to blaspheme Christ's name, when by their wicked carriage they caused it to be blasphemed by others, unbelievers, among whom they were, Rom. ii. 24; Tit. ii. 5, &c.; 1 Tim. vi. 1: but if rich unbelievers be here meant, the rich men of those times being generally great enemies to Christianity; he would from thence show how mean a consideration riches were, to incline the professors of religion to such partiality as he taxeth them for. That worthy name; or, good or honourable (as good place, ver. 3, for honourable) name of Christ; they blaspheme what they should adore. By the which ye are called; or, which is called upon you, either, which was called upon over you, when you were baptized into it; or rather it is a Hebrew phrase, and implies no more than (as we read it) their being called by it, as children are after their fathers, and wives after their husbands, Gen. xlviii. 16; Isa. iv. 1; for so God's people are called by his name, Deut. xxviii. 10; Eph. iii. 15.

8 If ye fulfil the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well;

If ye fulfil; or, perfect; the word signifies to accomplish perfectly, but no more is meant by it than sincerity in observing the duties of the law in an indifferent respect to one as well as another, which he seems to oppose to their partiality in the law, by respecting some and neglecting others. The royal law; either the law of God the great King, or Christ the King of saints; or rather, the royal law is the king's law, i. e. the great law which is the same to all, rich and poor, the common rule by which all are to act, as, the king's way, Numb. xxi. 22, i. e. the great plain way in which all are to travel. Here may likewise be a tacit reflection on the servile disposition of these acceptors of men's persons, evil becoming them that pretended to be governed by the royal law, which was to be observed with a more free and king-like spirit. According to the Scripture: see Matt. xxii. 39; Gal. v. 14. Ye do well; ye are not to be blamed, but commended. The apostle seems here to answer an objection they might make in their own defence; that in the respect they gave to rich men, they did but act according to the law which commands us to love our neighbour as ourselves; to this he replies partly in this verse by way of concession, or on supposition; that if the respect they gave to rich men were indeed in obedience to the law of charity, which commands us to love our neighbour as ourselves, then they did well, and he found no fault with them; but the contrary he shows in the next verse.

9 But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.

But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin; the second part of the apostle's answer, in which he sets persons in opposition to neighbour: q. d. If you, instead of loving your neighbour, which excludes no sort of men, poor no more than rich, choose and single out (as ye do) only some few (viz. rich men) to whom ye give respect, despising others, ye are so far from fulfilling the royal law, that ye sin against it. And are convinced of the law; either by the particular law against respecting persons, Lev. xix. 15, or rather, by that very law you urge; your thus partially respecting the rich to the excluding of the poor, being so contrary to the command of loving your neighbour, which excludes none. As transgressors; i. e. to be transgressors, viz. of the whole law, as follows.

10 For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

For whosoever shall keep: this is not an assertion, that any man doth keep the whole law so as to offend but in one point, but a supposition that if, or admitting, such a one were. The whole law; all the rest of the law, that one point only of the whole being excepted. And yet offend in one point; slip, or trip, or stumble at; it seems to signify the least failing in any point of the law. He is guilty of all; guilty of the breach, and obnoxious to the punishment, of all; not distributively, or separately, as if he transgressed every precept distinctly; but, 1. Conjunctively or copulatively; he is guilty of not keeping the whole law, though not of breaking each particular command; he breaks the whole law, though not the whole of the law: as he that wounds a man's arm wounds the whole man, though not the whole of the man; he that breaks one link breaks the whole chain, and he that fails in one musical note spoils the whole harmony. 2. He sins against charity, which is the sum of the law, and upon which all the commands depend; and so though he keep most of them, as to the substance, yet he keeps none of them in a right manner, because none out of love, which should be the principle out of which he observes all of them. 3. He sins against the authority of the whole law, which is the same in every command. 4. He is liable to the same punishment, though not the same degree of it, as if he had broken all the commandments, Gal. iii. 1; and his keeping most, cannot

c John 7. 48.
1 Cor. i. 26,
28.
d Luke 12.
21. 1 Tim. 6.
18. Rev. 2. 9.
e 1 Cor. 13.
c Ex. 20. 6.
1 Sam. 2. 30.
Prov. 8. 17.
Matt. 5. 3. Luke 6. 20. & 12. 32. 1 Cor. 2. 9. 2 Tim. 4. 8. ch. 1. 12.

f 1 Cor. 11.
22.
g Acts 13.
50. & 17. 6.
& 18. 12.
ch. 3. 6.

h Lev. 19. 18.
Matt. 22. 39.
Rom. 13. 8.
g Gal. 3. 12.
14. & 2. 2.

k Deut. 27.
26. Matt. 5.
18. Gal. 3. 10.

exempt him from the punishment due for the breach of that one. This he speaks either in opposition to the Pharisees among the Jews, who thought themselves righteous if they kept most of the law, though in some things they came short; or rather, against hypocrites among Christians, who would pick and choose duties, obey some commands and neglect others; whereas no obedience to God is right, but that which is impartial, and respects all the commands, Psal. cxix. 6; Matt. v. 19.

<sup>† Or, that law which said.</sup> 11 For || he that said, 'Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.

All proof of what he laid down in the former verse, by instancing in these two commands, there being the same reason of all the rest, the same sovereignty and righteousness of God appearing in them, and it being the will of God to try our obedience in one as well as another. Thou art become a transgressor of the law; viz. by contemning the authority and holiness of God, which appears in the whole law, and every command of it.

12 So speak ye, and so do, as they <sup>m ch. 1. 25.</sup> that shall be judged by <sup>m</sup> the law of liberty.

So speak ye, and so do: the apostle concluding his discourse about respecting persons, which consisted both in their words and actions, he directs them how to govern themselves in both. As they that shall be judged; viz. for both your words and actions, and that, not only in your own consciences at present, but at God's tribunal hereafter. By the law of liberty; the gospel, of the liberty of which it is one branch, that these differences among men, of Jew and Gentile, bond and free, circumcised and uncircumcised, &c., are taken away, Acts x. 28; Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11; against this law of liberty you sin if you respect persons, and then may well fear to be judged by it; as it takes away differences of persons now, so it will make none at last, but will be as impartial in its judgment as it is in its commands.

<sup>n Job 22. 6. &c. Prov. 21. 18. Matt. 6. 15. & 18. 35. & 25. 41. 42. o 1 John 4. 17, 18.</sup> 13 For <sup>n</sup> he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and <sup>o</sup> mercy || rejoiceth against judgment.

For he shall have judgment without mercy; shall be judged according to the rigour of the law, by pure justice without any mixture of mercy. That hath showed no mercy; that hath been cruel and unmerciful to his neighbour here. And mercy rejoiceth against judgment; either, 1. The mercy of God rejoiceth and glorieth over judgment, being as it were superior and victorious in relation to those that show mercy, to whom the promise of obtaining mercy is made, Matt. v. 7. Or rather, 2. The mercy of men, i. e. of those that deal mercifully with others; their mercy having the mercy and promise of God on its side, need not fear, but rather may rejoice, and as it were glory against judgment, as not being like to go against them. Object. Is not this to make some ground of glorying to be in men themselves, contrary to Psal. cxliiii. 2; Rom. iv. 2? Answer. Mercy in believers is an evidence of their interest in God's mercy, which prevails on their belief against his justice; and so its rejoicing against judgment, is not against it as overcome by itself, but by God's mercy. Thus both senses are included.

<sup>p Mat. 7. 26. ch. 1. 23.</sup> 14 <sup>p</sup> What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?

What doth it profit; viz. as to his eternal salvation? wherein are the ends of religion promoted by it? The apostle had just before declared, that they who are unmerciful to men shall find God severe to themselves, and have judgment without mercy; but hypocritical professors boasted of their faith as sufficient to secure them against that judgment, though they neglected the practice of holiness and righteousness. Hence he seems to take occasion for the following discourse, to beat down their vain boasting of an empty, unfruitful faith, and possibly, lest they should abuse or misunderstand what he had said about the law of liberty, as if that inferred a licence of sinning, and living as they pleased. Though a man say; whether boasting with his mouth to others, or flatteringly in his heart to himself. The apostle doth not say, that a man's having faith simply is unprofitable, but either that faith he pretends to without works, or his boasting he hath faith, when the contrary is evident by his not having works. He hath faith; such as he pretends to be good, and sound, and saving, but is really empty and dead, ver. 26, and unfruitful. And have not works; i. e. good works, such as are not only acts of charity, to which the papists would restrain it, but all the fruits of righteousness and holiness proceeding from faith, and appearing both in heart and life. Can faith save him? the interrogation is a vehement negation; q. d. It cannot save him, viz. such a faith as a man may have (as well as boast he hath) without works. This James calls faith only by way of concession for the present, though it be but equivocally called faith, and no more really so, than the carcass of a man is a man.

15 <sup>q See Job 31. 19, 20. Luke 3. 11.</sup> If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food,

If a brother or sister; a Christian man or woman, who are frequently thus called: see 1 Cor. vii. 12; 15. Be naked; badly clothed, or destitute of such clothing as is fit for them, Job xxii. 6; 1 Cor. iv. 11. And destitute of daily food: see Matt. vi. 11; that which is necessary for the sustaining of life a day to an end. Under these two of nakedness and hunger, he comprehends all the calamities of human life, which may be relieved by the help of others; as food and raiment contain all the ordinary supports and comforts of life, Gen. xxviii. 20; Matt. vi. 25; 1 Tim. vi. 8.

16 And <sup>r 1 John 3. 18.</sup> 'one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

Depart in peace; a usual form of salutation, wherein, under the name of peace, they wished all prosperity and happiness to them they greeted, Mark v. 34; Luke vii. 50; viii. 48. Be ye warmed; i. e. be ye clothed; the warmth here mentioned being such as is procured by clothes, Job xxxi. 20. And be ye filled, or, satisfied with food; a metaphor from the fattening of cattle with grass or hay. The same word is used, Matt. xiv. 20; Mark vi. 42; Phil. iv. 12. These two good wishes answer the two former great wants. Notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; understand, when yet ye are able to relieve them; for he speaks to the rich, or such as were in a capacity of being helpful to others. What doth it profit? either, what do your good words and charitable wishes profit them, without charitable deeds? or, what do they profit yourselves? or both may be included: as your fair speeches convey no real good to them, so they bring in no reward to you from God.

17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, <sup>† Gr. by itself.</sup> is dead, being † alone.

Even so faith; that which they boasted of, and called faith. Is dead; void of that life, in which the very essence of faith consists, and which always discovers itself in vital actings and good fruits, where it is not hindered by some forcible impediment; in allusion to a corpse, which plainly appears to have no vital principle in it, all vital operations being ceased. It resembles a man's body, and is called so, but in reality is not so, but a dead carcass. Being alone; margin, by itself, or in itself; be it what it will, it is but dead: or, as we render it, being alone, i. e. not in conjunction with works, which always it should be.

18 Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith || without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.

A man; any true believer. May say; to any such boasting hypocrite. Thou hast faith; thou pretendest to have faith, or admit thou hast faith; and an historical faith he might have, as ver. 19. And I have works: I do not boast of my faith; or, to say nothing of my faith, yet works

† Some copies read, by thy works; ka. ch. 3. 15.

I do profess to have. Show me thy faith without thy works : there are two readings of these words, but in both the sense agrees with the rest of the apostle's discourse. If we take the marginal reading, show me thy faith by thy works, the sense is, evidence the faith thou pretendest to by thy works, as the fruits of it; let thy actions vouch for thy profession. But if we take the reading in the text, without thy works, it is a kind of ironical expression; q. d. Make it appear by convincing arguments that thou hast true faith, when yet thou wastest works, the only argument of the truth of it. Understand here, but this thou canst not. And I will show thee my faith by my works; I will easily prove my faith to be true and genuine, by those good works it brings forth in me. Demonstrate the cause to me without the effect, if thou canst; but I will easily demonstrate the cause by the effect, and prove the root of faith to be in me, by my bringing forth that fruit which is proper to it. It cannot hence be inferred, that wherever such works are, as men count and call good, there must needs be faith: the apostle's meaning only is, that wherever true faith is, there good works will certainly be.

19 Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: 'the devils also believe, and tremble.

Thou believest that there is one God; thou givest thy assent to this truth, that there is one God. This may likewise imply other articles of the creed, to which the like assent may be given. Thou doest well; either this kind of faith hath its goodness, though it be not saving; or ironically, q. d. A great matter thou dost, when thou givest almost as high as the devils. The devils also believe; yield the like assent to the same truth. And tremble: the word signifies extreme fear and horror, viz. such as the thoughts of their Judge strike into them. This shows the faith the apostle speaks of in this place, not to be the faith of God's elect, which begets in believers a holy confidence in God, and frees them from slavish fears; whereas the faith here spoken of, if it have any effect upon men, it is but to fill them with horror.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

But wilt thou know? either this question is in order to teaching, as John xiii. 12; Rom. xiii. 3; and then the sense is, If thou hast a mind to know, I shall instruct thee: or, it is a teaching by way of question, as more emphatical and pressing; and then it is as if he had said, Know, O vain man. O vain man; an allusion to an empty vessel, which sounds more than one that is full. The carnal professor to whom he speaks is vain, because empty of true faith and good works, though full of noise and boasting. Object. Doth not the apostle sin against Christ's command, Matt. v. 22? Answer. 1. He speaks not of any particular man, but to all in general, of such a sort, viz. who boasted of their faith, and yet did not evidence it by their works. 2. It is not spoken in rash anger, or by way of contempt, but by way of correction and just reproof; see the like spoken by Christ himself, Matt. xxiii. 17, 19; Luke xxiv. 25; and by Paul, Gal. iii. 1; 1 Cor. xv. 36. That faith without works is dead; a defective speech, faith without works, for that faith which is without works, or faith, if it be without works. He doth not say, faith is dead without works, lest it should be thought that works were the cause of the life of faith; but faith without works is dead, as ver. 17, 26; implying, that works are the effects and signs of the life of faith.

21 Was not Abraham our father justified by works, "when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?

Was not Abraham our father; not only the father of us as Jews, (for to them he wrote,) and according to the flesh, but as believers, and according to the promise; so all believers are called Abraham's children, Rom. iv. 11; Gal. iii. 7. Justified by works; found or declared to be justified, not only before God, but in the face of the world; and his faith (by which he had been justified above thirty years before in the sight of God) now approved as a true, lively, justifying faith, by this proof he gave of it, upon God's trying him in the offering up his son, Gen. xxii. 9, 12, Now I know that thou fearest God, &c. Abraham did fear God, and believe him before, and was justified before in the sight of God; but by the working of his faith in so eminent an act of obedience, the sincerity of all his graces, and so of his faith, was manifested and made known, and so his faith itself justified, as his person was before, and he obtained this ample testimony from the mouth of God himself. So that Abraham's justification here was not the absolution of a sinner; but the solemn approbation of a believer; not a justifying him as ungodly, but commending him for his godliness. He was by his works justified as a righteous person, but not made righteous, or constituted in a justified state, by his works. The design of the apostle is not to show how sinners are justified in God's court, but only what kind of faith it is whereby they are justified, viz. such a one as purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9, and looks to Christ, not only as made righteousness, but sanctification to them, 1 Cor. i. 30; and consequently not only rests on him for justification, but stirs them up to yield obedience to him. When he had offered Isaac his son; viz. in his firm purpose and resolution, and was about to do it actually, had not God hindered him. It was no fault in Abraham that it was not actually done, and therefore it was counted to him as if it had been really done, Gen. xxii. 12; Heb. xi. 17. Upon the altar; this shows the settled purpose of Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, when he proceeded so far as to bind him, and lay him upon the altar; for that argues, that he expected and intended nothing but his death, which generally was wont to follow in sacrifices when once laid upon the altar.

22 Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

Seest thou how faith wrought with his works? he doth not say, works wrought with his faith, as he should have said, if he had intended their concurrence in justification; but faith wrought with his works, i. e. his faith was not idle, but effectual in producing good works, it being the office and business of faith to respect Christ for sanctification, as well as righteousness, Acts xxvi. 18. And by works was faith made perfect; either, 1. Faith by producing good works is itself encouraged, heightened, improved; and so not made perfect by any communication of the perfection of works to it, but by being stirred up and exercised as to the internal strength and power of it. Or rather, 2. Faith is made perfect by works declaratively, inasmuch as works evidence and manifest the perfection and strength of faith. Faith is the cause, and works are the effects; but the cause is not perfected by the effect, only its perfection is demonstrated by it, as good fruit doth not make a tree good, but show that it is so. See 2 Cor. xii. 9.

23 And the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, 'Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called 'the Friend of God.

And the Scripture was fulfilled; this illustrious instance of Abraham's obedience did so clearly evidence the sincerity of his faith, that it did most plainly appear, that he did indeed believe God, and it was counted to him for righteousness. Things are said to be fulfilled when they are most clearly manifested. As those words, Psal. ii. 7, This day have I begotten thee, are said to be fulfilled at Christ's resurrection, Acts xiii. 32, 33; not that he was then first begotten of the Father, but that he was then in a glorious manner declared to be the Son of God by the resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. So here Abraham's offering up his son being the evident discovery of his faith, it did by that appear, that the Scripture report of him was true, that he believed God, &c.: he did believe before, and his faith was imputed to him before, but it was never so fully made known, as by this so high an act of obedience. It was imputed unto him for righteousness; viz. as apprehending Christ in the promise. Faith is said to be imputed for righteousness, Rom. iv. 3-6, as being the instrument or means of applying Christ's righteousness, by which elsewhere we are said to be justified, Rom. iii. 24, 25; v. 19; 2 Cor. v. 21; Phil. iii. 9. And he was called the Friend of God; either he was the friend of God; to be called, some-u Gen. 22, 9, 12.

7 Gen. 15. 6.
Rom. 4. 3.
Gal. 3. 6.
2 Chron. 20. 7. Is. 41. 8.

times implies as much as to be, Isa. xlvi. 8; or properly, he was called, 2 Chron. xx. 7; Isa. xli. 8; and that not only on the account of God's frequent appearances to him, conversing with him, revealing secrets to him, Gen. xviii. 17, 18; John xv. 15, and entering into covenant with him; but especially his renewing the covenant with him upon the sacrificing of his son, and confirming it by oath, and thereby, as it were, admitting him into a nearer degree of friendship, Gen. xxii. 16, &c.

24 Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

Ye see then; an inference either from the instance of Abraham, or from the whole preceding discourse. How that by works; works of new obedience. A man is justified; declared to be righteous, or approved as such, and acquitted from the guilt of hypocrisy. And not by faith only; not by a mere profession of faith, or a bare assent to the truth, without the fruit of good works. Quest. How doth this general conclusion follow from the particular case of Abraham? Ans. Abraham's faith and justification, both before God and the world, are set forth as the exemplars of ours, to which the faith and justification of all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, is to be conformed, Rom. iv. 11, 12, 23, 24. Quest. Doth not James here contradict Paul's doctrine in the matter of justification, Rom. iv.? Ans. The contradiction is but seeming, not real, as will appear, if four things be considered: 1. The occasion of these apostles' writing, and their scope in it. Having to do with different sorts of persons, they had likewise different designs. As Christ speaks one way when he dealt with proud Pharisees, whom he would humble; another way, when with humble hearers, whom he would encourage. and Paul carried it one way when among weak brethren, in condescension to whose infirmities he circumcised Timothy, Acts xvi. 2, 3; and another, when he was among false brethren, and men of contention, who opposed Christian liberty, seeking to bring believers into bondage, and then would not suffer Titus to be circumcised, Gal. ii. 3—5. So in the present affair, Paul's business lay with false apostles and Judaizing Christians, such as did, in the matter of justification, either substitute a self-righteousness instead of God's grace, or set it up in conjunction with it; and therefore his scope is (especially in his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians) to show the true cause and manner of justification, and vindicate the freeness of grace in it, by the exclusion of man's works, of what kind soever; to which purpose he propounds the examples of Abraham and David, in their justification, Rom. iv. Whereas James having to do with carnal professors, and such as abused the doctrine of grace to encourage themselves in sin, and thought it sufficient that they had faith, (such as it was,) though they did not live like believers, resting in an empty profession, with the neglect of holiness: his design plainly is, to show the effects and fruits of justification, viz. holiness and good works; thereby to check the vanity and folly of them who did thus divorce faith from a holy life, (which God hath joined to it,) and fancied themselves safe in the profession of the one, without any respect to, or care of, the other, as appears in this chapter, ver. 14, 17, 26. And because they might bear themselves high in this false confidence by the example of Abraham, their father according to the flesh, and whom Paul had set forth, Rom. iv., as justified by faith, without the concurrence of works to his justification; James makes use of the same example of Abraham, as one eminent for holiness as well as faith, and who made his faith famous by the highest act of obedience that ever a saint did, to show, that faith and holiness ought not to be separated; Abraham's faith being so highly commended, especially as productive of it. To the same purpose he makes use of the instance of Rahab, who, though a young saint, and newly come to the knowledge of God, yet showed the truth of her faith by so considerable an exercise of her love and mercy to God's people, as her receiving the spies in peace was. This therefore helps not a little to reconcile the difference between these two apostles. Paul deals with those that magnified works too much, as if they were justified by them, and slighted faith and grace; and therefore, though he frequently shows the usefulness of faith and good works unto salvation, and presseth men every where to the practice of them, yet he proves that they have no interest in the justification of a sinner before God's tribunal, which he asserts to be wholly and solely of grace, and by faith. But James, in dealing with loose Christians, who magnified faith, and slighted good works, not only as having no influence on justification, but as not necessary at all to salvation; he takes upon him to maintain good works, not as necessary to justification, but as the effects, signs, and evidences of it, and such as without which their faith was vain, and themselves in an unjustified state. 2. Paul and James take faith in different senses: Paul speaks of a true, lively faith, which purifies the heart, and worketh by love, Gal. v. 6. Whereas James speaks of a profession, or presumption of faith, barren, and destitute of good fruits, such a faith as is dead, ver. 17, such as the devils may have, ver. 19, which is but historical, and consists only in a belief of God's being, not a consent to his offer, or relying on his promises. What contradiction then is there here between these two apostles, if Paul assert justification to be by faith, viz. a lively, working faith; and James deny it to be by faith, viz. an idle, inactive, barren faith, and which hath only the name, but not the nature of that grace, and is rather the image of faith than faith itself? 3. But because James not only denies justification to the faith he speaks of, but ascribes it to works in this verse; therefore it is to be considered, that justification is taken one way by him, and another by Paul. Paul takes it for the absolution and acceptance of a sinner at God's bar, by the imputation of Christ's righteousness, which is the primary and proper notion of justification. But James takes it for the manifestation and declaration of that justification; and the word is taken in the like sense in other scriptures: Luke vii. 29, the people justified God, i. e. owned and declared his righteousness by confession of their sins, and submission to John's baptism; and ver. 35, Wisdom is justified, i. e. declared to be just and right. Rom. iii. 4, justified in thy sayings, i. e. acknowledged and declared to be true in thy word. And what is Christ's being justified in the Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16, but his being declared to be the Son of God? Rom. i. 4. And that James takes justification in this sense, appears, (1.) By the history of Abraham here mentioned: he was (as hath been said) justified by faith long before his offering up his son, Gen. xv., but here is said to be justified, i. e. declared and proved to be so, by this testimony which he gave to the truth of his faith, and consequently to his justification by it; and the Lord therefore tells him, Gen. xxii. 12, Now I know that thou fearest God, &c.; q. d. By this obedience thou hast abundantly showed the sincerity of thy graces. (2.) Because if James doth not here speak of Abraham's being justified declaratively, how can it be true which he speaks, ver. 23, that the Scripture was fulfilled (in his sacrificing his son) which saith, He believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness? For if James intends justification in the proper sense, how was Abraham's being justified by works a fulfilling of the Scripture, which asserts him to be justified by faith? Here therefore again there is no contradiction between these apostles. For it is true, that Abraham was justified, i. e. accepted of God, and absolved from guilt, by faith only; and it is as true, that he was justified, i. e. manifested and declared to be a believer, and a justified person, by his works. 4. Lastly, we may distinguish of the person that is said to be justified; either he is a sinner, in the state of nature; or a believer, in a state of grace; whence ariseth the two-fold justification here mentioned. The justification of a sinner, in the remission of his sins through the imputation of Christ's righteousness, and acquitting him from the condemnation of the law, is the justification properly so called, and which Paul speaks so much of; and this is by faith only. The justification of a believer, is his absolution from condemnation by the gospel, and the charge of infidelity, or hypocrisy, and is no other than that declarative justification James speaks of, or an asserting and clearing up the truth and reality of the former justification, which is done by good works, as the signs and fruits of the faith, by which that former is obtained; and this is but improperly called justification. The former is an absolution from the general charge of sin, this from the special charge of hypocrisy, or infidelity. A sinner's great fear (when first awakened to a sense of his sin and misery) is of a holy law, and a righteous Judge ready to condemn him for the violation of that law; and so his first business is to look to Christ by faith for righteousness, and remission of sin. But when he is justified by that righteousness, men may charge him with hypocrisy or unbelief, and so may the devil and conscience too, when faith is weak, or a temptation strong; and therefore his next work is to clear himself of this imputation, and to evidence the truth and reality of his faith and justification in God's sight, which must be done by producing his obedience and good works, as the indications of his faith; and hereby he proves that he hath indeed closed with the promise of the gospel, and so is clear of the charge of not believing it, which was false; as well as (by consequence) is justified from the charge of sin against the law, which was true. To conclude, therefore, here is no opposition between Paul and James. Paul speaks of Abraham's being justified as a sinner, and properly, and so by faith only; James speaks of his being justified as a believer, improperly, and so by works; by which not his person was justified, but rather his faith declared to be justifying: nor he constituted righteous, but approved as righteous. In a word, what God hath joined must not be divided, and what he hath divided must not be joined. He hath separated faith and works in the business of justification, and therefore we must not join them in it, as Paul disputes; and he hath joined them in the lives of justified persons, and there we must not separate them, as James teaches. Paul assures us they have not a co-efficiency in justification itself; and James assures us they may, and ought to have, a co-existence in them that are justified. If the reader desire further satisfaction yet, let him consult Turretine de Concordia Pauli et Jacobi, where he may find much more to the same purpose as hath been here said.

<sup>a</sup> Josh. 2. 1.
<sup>b</sup> Heb. 11. 31.

25 Likewise also *was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

This instance of Rahab is joined to that of Abraham, either to show, that none of any condition, degree, or nation, was ever numbered among true believers, without good works; or else to prove, that faith, wherever it is sincere and genuine, is likewise operative and fruitful, not only in older disciples and stronger, such as Abraham was, but even proportionably in those that are weaker, and but newly converted to the faith, which was Rahab's case. The harlot; really and properly so, Josh. ii. 1; Heb. xi. 31; though possibly she might keep an inn, and that might occasion the spies' going to her house, not knowing her to be one of so scandalous a life; which yet the Holy Ghost takes special notice of, that by the infamousness of her former conversation, the grace of God in her conversion might be more conspicuous. Justified by works; in the same sense as Abraham was, i. e. declared to be righteous, and her sincerity approved in the face of the congregation of Israel, when, upon her hiding the spies, God gave a commandment to save her alive, though the rest of her people were to be destroyed. When she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way: her receiving them implies likewise her hiding them; both which, together with her sending them forth another way, were acts of love to the people of God, of mercy to the spies, and of great self-denial in respect of her own safety, which she hazarded by thus exposing herself to the fury of the king of Jericho and her countrymen; but all proceeded from her faith in the God of Israel, of whose great works she had heard, and whom she had now taken to be her God, and under whose wings she was now come to trust.

¶ Or, breath.

26 For as the body without the  $\parallel$ spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

The spirit: this may be understood either, according to the marginal reading, of the breath; and then the sense is, that life and breath being inseparable companions, as the want of breath argues want of life in the body, so, lively faith and works being as inseparable, want of works argues want of life in faith: or, according to the reading in the text, spirit, taking it for that substance which animates the body, and is the cause of vital functions in it, which is sometimes called spirit, Psal. xxxi. 5; Eccles. xii. 7; 1 Cor. ii. 11; and then the sense is, that as a body is without a soul, so faith is without works, i. e. both are dead. As a body without the soul hath the shape and lineaments of a man, but nothing that may discover life in it; so faith without works may be like true faith, have some resemblance of it, but hath nothing to discover the truth and life of it. So faith; not true faith, for that cannot be dead, but an empty profession of faith, which is rather called faith by way of concession, or because of some likeness it hath to it, than really is so; as a dead body, though called a body, is really but a carcass.

CHAP. III

We must not rashly take upon ourselves to reprove others, 1. The importance, difficulty, and duty, of governing the tongue. 2—12. True wisdom will show itself in meekness, peaceableness, and charity, in opposition to strife and envying, 13—18.

MY brethren, *be not many masters, <sup>a</sup> Matt. 23. 8, 14. Rom. 2. 20, 21.
<sup>b</sup> knowing that we shall receive the <sup>c</sup> 1 Pet. 5. 3.
<sup>d</sup> Luke 6. 37.
¶ Or, judgment.

greater  $\parallel$ condemnation.

Be not many masters; let not every man make himself a master of other men's faith and manners, a censor, or supercilious reprovor of their failings and infirmities, Matt. vii. 1. All reproof is not here forbidden, neither authoritative by church officers, nor charitable by private brethren; but that which is irregular, either in the ground of it, when that is false; or the manner of it, when it is masterly and imperious, or preposterous, as when we reprehend others and are no less reprehensible ourselves, Rom. ii. 21; or in the end of it, when we seek to advance our own reputation by observing or aggravating others' faults, &c. Knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation; by how much the more severe and rigid we are in judging others, the greater will be our judgment, not only from men, who will be apt to retaliate, but from God himself, Matt. vii. 1—3; Luke vi. 38; Rom. ii. 2, 3. See the like expression, Matt. xxiii. 8, 14.

2 For *in many things we offend all. <sup>e</sup> 1 Kings 8. 46. 2 Chron. 6. 36. Prov. 20. 9.
<sup>f</sup> Eccles. 7. 20.
<sup>g</sup> 1 John 1. 8.
<sup>h</sup> 1 Ph. 34. 13.
<sup>i</sup> Eccles. 14. 1.
¶ Matt. 12. 37.

¶ If any man offend not in word, *the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.

For in many things we offend all: there is no man absolutely free from sin, 1 Kings viii. 46; Job xiv. 4; Prov. xx. 9; Eccles. vii. 20; 1 John i. 8, 10; and therefore we must not be too critical in other men's actions, having so many failings ourselves, Gal. vi. 1. If any man offend not in word; know how to govern his tongue aright, speak what, and when, as he ought. The same is a perfect man; either sincere, in opposition to the hypocrisy of those that pretend so great zeal in correcting others, when they are alike or more guilty themselves: or rather, we may understand it comparatively, and with respect to others, of one that hath made good proficiency in religion, and is of greater attainments than others: see 1 Cor. ii. 6. And able also to bridle the whole body; to govern all the other parts, (eyes, ears, hands, &c.,) as to those actions which are performed by them. No member of the body being more ready to offend than the tongue, he that can rule that, may rule all else.

3 Behold, *we put bits in the horses' ¶ Pa. 32. 9.

mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

He illustrates the former proposition, that he that can rule his tongue may rule his whole body, by two similitudes: the first, of an unruly horse, which yet, as wanton as he is, being curbed in with a bit, may be easily managed; intimating, that even so, if a man's tongue be well governed, the rest of the man will be under command.

4 Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

The other similitude, in which a man is compared to a ship, the tongue to the rudder, the governing the whole body to the turning about the ship. As the rudder is but a small thing, in comparison of the much greater bulk of a ship, and yet, being itself turned, turns the whole ship (though so great, and driven of so fierce winds) which way soever the steersman pleaseth: so likewise the tongue, though little to the whole man, (which may withal be driven, and acted by storms of furious passions,) yet if it be itself under government, the rest of the man will be so too.

5 Even so <sup>s</sup> the tongue is a little member, and <sup>h</sup> boasteth great things. Behold, how great  $\parallel$  a matter a little fire kindleth!

The accommodation of the former similitudes. The tongue is a little member. i. e. one of the lesser, in comparison of the body. And boasteth great things; the Greek word signifies, according to its derivation, the lifting up of the neck (as horses, mentioned ver. 3, are wont to do in their pride) in a way of bravery and triumph; and hence it is used to express boasting and glorying, but here seems to imply something more, viz. not only the uttering big words, but doing great things, whether good and useful, as in the former similitudes, or evil, as in what follows; or its boasting how great things it can do: q. d. The tongue, though little, is of great force and efficacy, and it will tell you so itself; it not only boasts what its fellow members can do, but especially what itself can. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! another similitude, in which he sets forth the evil the tongue, as little as it is, doth, where it is not well governed, as in the former he had shown the good it may do, when kept under rule. A matter; the word signifies either any combustible stuff, or, as in the margin, wood, that being the ordinary fuel then in use. A little fire kindleth; even a spark, the smallest quantity or particle, which may do great mischief, when lighting in suitable matter.

6 And <sup>i</sup> the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that <sup>k</sup> it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the  $\dagger$  course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell.

The application of the similitude in the foregoing words. The tongue is a fire. i. e. hath the force of fire, and resembles it in the mischief it doth. A world of iniquity; a heap or aggregation of evils, (as the natural world is an aggregation of many several beings,) as we say, an ocean, or a world, of troubles, meaning, a great multitude of them. And the words may be understood, either with an ellipsis of the word matter, expressed just before, and supplied here; and the pointing a little altered, they may be thus read. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity (or an unrighteous world, viz. which lies in wickedness, 1 John v. 19) is the matter, namely, which it inflames. A wicked world is fit fuel for a wicked tongue, and soon catcheth the fire which it kindles. Or rather, as they stand plainly, without any such defect: The tongue is a world of iniquity, i. e. a heap or mass of various sorts of sins; though it be but a little piece of flesh, yet it contains a whole world of wickedness in it, or is as full of evils as the world is of bodies. It defileth the whole body; infecteth the whole man with sin, Eccles. v. 6, as being the cause of sin committed by all the members of the body; for though sin begin in the soul, yet it is executed by the body, which therefore seems here put (as ver. 2) for the man. And setteth on fire the course of nature; or, setteth on fire the wheel of geniture, or nativity, (in allusion to a wheel set on fire by a violent, rapid motion,) meaning the course of nativity, i. e. the natural course of life, as the face of nativity or geniture, chap. i. 23, for the natural face: the sense is, it inflames with various lusts, wrath, malice, wantonness, pride, &c., the whole course of man's life, so that there is no state nor age free from the evils of it. Whereas other vices either do not extend to the whole man, or are abated with age, or worn away with length of time; the vices of the tongue reach the whole man, and the whole time of his life. And it is set on fire of hell; i. e. by the devil, the father of lies and slanders, and other tongue-sins, Job i. 10; John viii. 44; Rev. xii. 10; the tongue being the fire, the devil, by the bellows of temptations, inflames it yet more, and thereby kindles the fire of all mischiefs in the world.

7 For every  $\dagger$  kind of beasts, and of <sup>† Gr. nature</sup> birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed <sup>† Gr. nature of man</sup> of  $\dagger$  mankind:

Every kind; some of every kind. Of beasts; wild beasts, such as are most fierce and untractable. And of birds; though so movable and wandering, the very vagabonds of nature. And of serpents; which are such enemies to mankind. And of things in the sea; the inhabitants, as it were, of another world, really of another element. Is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; either made gentle, or at least, brought into subjection to man by one means or other. He useth both tenses, the present and the preterperfect, to note that such things not only have been, but still are; and that not as the effects of some miraculous providence, as in the case of Daniel, chap. vi., and Paul, Acts xxviii., but as that which is usually experienced, and in man's power still to do.

8 But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, <sup>1 Pa. 140. 3</sup> full of deadly poison.

But the tongue; not only other men's tongues, but his own. Can no man tame; no man of himself, and without the assistance of Divine grace, can bring his tongue into subjection, and keep it in order; nor can any man, by the assistance of any grace promised in this life, so keep it, as that it shall never at all offend. It is an unruly evil; or, which cannot be restrained, and kept within bounds: wild beasts are kept in by grates and bars, but this by no restraint. Full of deadly poison; the wickedness of the tongue is compared to poison, in respect of the mischief it doth to others. It seems to allude to those kinds of serpents which have poison under their tongues, Psal. cxl. 3, with which they kill those they bite. The poison of the tongue is no less deadly, it murders men's reputations by the slanders it utters, their souls by the lusts and passions it stirs up in them, and many times their bodies too by the contentions and quarrels it raiseth against men.

9 Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, <sup>† Gr. Gen. 1.23. & 5. 1. & 2. 6.</sup> which are made after the similitude of God.

Therewith bless we God; pray, and speak well of God. Even the Father; of Christ, and in him of all true believers. And therewith curse we men; rail on, revile, speak evil of, as well as wish evil to. Which are made after the similitude of God; either, 1. Saints in whom God's image is anew restored; or rather, 2. Men more generally, who, though they have lost that spiritual knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, in which that image of God, after which man was created, principally consists; yet still have some relics of his image continuing in them. This is added to aggravate the sin; speaking evil of men made after God's image, is speaking evil of God obliquely, and by reflection.

10 Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

He repeats here, by way of exaggeration, what he had said ver. 9, to show how exceedingly absurd it is that two such contrary actions should proceed from the same agent. These things ought not so to be; there is a meiosis in the words; he means, things should be quite contrary. See the like expression, 1 Tim. v. 13; Tit. i. 11.

11 Doth a fountain send forth at the same  $\parallel$  place sweet water and bitter? <sup>1 Or, hole.</sup>

Ordinarily and naturally; if any such be, it is looked upon as uncouth and prodigious.

12 Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? the same tree cannot ordinarily bring forth fruit of different kinds, (on the same branch, whatever it may on different, by ingrafting,) much less contrary natures: see Matt. vii. 16—18. So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh; or, neither can a salt fountain yield fresh water; but the scope is still the same as in our reading. The apostle argues from what is impossible, or monstrous, in naturals, to what is absurd in manners: q. d. It is as absurd in religion, for the tongue of a regenerate man, which is used to bless God, to take a liberty at other times to curse man, as it would be strange in nature for the same tree, on the same branch, to bear fruits of different kinds; or the same fountain at the same place to send forth bitter water and sweet.

n Gal. s. 4. 13 <sup>a</sup> Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation <sup>o</sup> his works <sup>p</sup> with meekness of wisdom.

Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? i. e. if there be a wise man, &c. See Psal. xxv. 12, and 1 Pet. iii. 10, where what David speaks by way of interrogation, Peter explains by way of assertion. The apostle having shown the disease of the tongue, comes now to remove the cause, viz. men's opinion of their own wisdom; (they censure others, because they take themselves to be wiser than others;) and to point out the remedy, godly meekness, which is the truest wisdom. By wisdom and knowledge the same thing may be meant; or if they be taken for several things, (as sometimes there may be great knowledge where there is but little wisdom,) yet these masterly censurers he speaks of pretended to both, and were so rigid toward others because so well conceited of themselves: the sense is, You pretend to be wise and knowing, but if you would approve yourselves as such indeed, show out of a good conversation, &c. His works; let him show as the testimony of his wisdom, not his words in hard censures, but his works, viz. good ones, and those not done now and then, or on the by, but in the constant course and tenor of his life; or show his works to be good, by their being not casual, but constant, and his ordinary practice in his whole conversation. With meekness of wisdom; i. e. meek and gentle wisdom, which can hear, and answer, and teach, and admonish, and rebuke mildly and sweetly, with long-suffering, as well as doctrine, 2 Tim. iv. 2: and then it notes the quality of this wisdom, or such meekness as proceeds from wisdom, or is joined with it, there being some which is foolish, affected, carnal, viz. that which is opposed to zeal; whereas true meekness is only opposed to fierceness and rashness: and thus it notes the cause of meekness.

q Rom. 13. 14. r Rom. 2. 17. 23. 14 But if ye have <sup>a</sup> bitter envying and strife in your hearts, <sup>b</sup> glory not, and lie not against the truth.

Bitter envying; Greek, zeal, which he calls bitter, partly to distinguish it from that zeal which is good, whereas this he speaks of is evil, and though it pretends to be zeal, yet is really no other than envy; and partly because it commonly proceeds from an imbibed spirit, and tends to the embittering it more. Strife; the usual effect of bitter zeal, or envy. In your hearts; the fountain whence it proceeds; or strife in the heart implies a heart propense and inclined to strife. Glory not; glory not of your zeal, or rather of your wisdom, as if you were so well able to reprehend others, but rather be humbled; what you make the matter of your glorying, being really just cause of shame. And lie not against the truth; viz. by professing yourselves wise, or zealous, when ye are really neither.

s ch. 1. 17. Phil. 3. 19. t Or, natural, Jude 18. 15 <sup>a</sup> This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, <sup>b</sup> sensual, devilish.

This wisdom, which they pretended so much to, who so criticized on other men's actions, and inveighed against them, and which was accompanied with strife and envy. Descendeth not from above; i. e. from God the author of wisdom, from whom, though every good and perfect gift descends, chap. i. 17, and even knowledge and skill in natural things, Isa. xxviii. 26, 29; yet this wisdom, being sinful, is not from him, because it is earthly, of the earth, of no higher original than from the first Adam, who was of the earth, and earthly, 1 Cor. xv. 47; and likewise because it is employed, and fixeth men's minds, on earthly things. Sensual; this may be understood either, 1. According to the reading in the text, the word here used being so rendered, Jude 19, agreeable to 1 Thess. v. 23, where soul, from whence the word is derived, is opposed to spirit, and taken for the sensitive powers, which men have in common with brutes, in distinction from the intellectual, which go under the name of spirit, and are proper to men: mere reason, without the Divine grace, being apt to degenerate into brutishness, and easily brought to serve the ends of sensual appetite, this wisdom may well be called sensual. Or, 2. According to the margin, natural, in opposition to spiritual. The natural man (1 Cor. ii. 14, where the same word, in the Greek, is used as here) is one that lives under the conduct of his own carnal reason, not enlightened, nor regenerated by the Spirit of God; a man of soul, (as the word imports,) or that hath no better, no higher principle in him than his own soul. Accordingly, this wisdom here mentioned, is such as proceeds merely from a man's own soul, in its natural state, destitute of the light and grace of God's Spirit, and therefore may be termed natural. Devilish; because it is of the devil, or such as is in him, and makes men like him, who is a proud spirit, and envious, a liar and slanderer, John viii. 44, and who observes men's faults, not to amend them, but accuse them for them.

16 For <sup>a</sup> where envying and strife is, <sup>b</sup> there is <sup>c</sup> confusion and every evil work.

For where envying and strife is; the usual companions of this devilish wisdom. There is confusion; or, inconsistency, viz. both with man's self and others; envy makes him unquiet in himself, and troublesome to others, by causing contentions and seditions among them, and breaking their peace, as well as his own. And every evil work; all manner of wickedness is ushered in by this confusion and sedition.

17 But <sup>a</sup> the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, <sup>b</sup> without partiality, <sup>c</sup> and without hypocrisy.

But the wisdom that is from above; true wisdom, which is of God, opposed to that which descendeth not from above, ver. 15. Is first pure; either excluding mixture, and then it is opposed to hypocritical; or rather excluding filthiness, and then it is opposed to sensual, ver. 15, and implies freedom from the defilement of sin and error, it being the property of true wisdom to make men adhere both to truth and holiness. Then peaceable; disposeth men to peace, both as to the making and keeping it, in opposition to strife and contention, which is the fruit of the earthly wisdom. Peaceableness, which relates to man, is set after purity, which respects God in the first place, to intimate, that purity must have the preference to peace. Our peace with men must always be with a salvo to our respects to God and holiness. Gentle; or equal, or moderate, Phil. iv. 5; 1 Tim. iii. 3; Tit. iii. 2. It implies that gentleness (as we translate it) whereby we bear with others' infirmities, forgive injuries, interpret all things for the best, recede from our own right for peace sake; and is opposed to that austerity and rigidity in our practices and censures, which will bear with nothing in weak, dissenting, or offending brethren. Easy to be entreated; easily persuadable. True wisdom makes men yield to good admonitions, good counsel, good reason. This is opposed to implacableness, Rom. i. 31; pride, and obstinacy in evil, Prov. xii. 1; xiii. 1. Full of mercy; a grace whereby we pity others that are afflicted, or that offend, and is opposed to inhumanity and inexorableness. And good fruits; beneficence, liberality, and all other offices of humanity, which proceed from mercy. Without partiality; or, without judging, i. e. either a curious inquiring into the faults of others, to find matter for censures, which many times infers wrangling, as our margin renders it; or a discerning between person and person, upon carnal accounts, which is partiality, as it is here translated, and chap. ii. 4. And without hypocrisy; or, counterfeiting, as they do that judge others, being guilty of the same things, or as bad, themselves: or hypocrisy may be here added, to show that sincerity is the perfection of all the rest before named; purity, peace, and gentleness, &c., may be counterfeit; hypocrisy spoils all; and therefore the wisdom that is from above is sincere, and without hypocrisy.

7 Prov. 11.
12. Tit. 10.
12. Matt. 6.
9. Phil. 1. 11.
Heb. 12. 11.

18 'And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

And the fruit of righteousness; either the fruit we bring forth, which is righteousness itself, Luke iii. 8, 9; Rom. vi. 22; Phil. i. 11; or the fruit we reap, which is the reward of righteousness, viz. eternal life. Righteousness; metonymically here put for the heavenly wisdom before described, whereof it is the inseparable companion, or the effect, Job xxviii. 28. Is sown; either righteousness, as the good fruit, is wrought or exercised, Hos. x. 12, (as wickedness is said to be sown when it is acted, Job iv. 8.) or it relates to the reward, which is the fruit, of which righteousness is the seed, Psal. xcvii. 11; and then it implies, either the sureness of that reward, that it is as certain as harvest after seed-time; or the non-enjoyment of it for the present, as they that sow their seed receive not the crop till long after. In peace; either in a mild, peaceable, amicable way; or in peace is as much as with peace, viz. spiritual peace and comfort of conscience. Of them that make peace; that follow after and are studious of peace; and so the words may have a two-fold sense: either the meaning is, 1. That they that exercise righteousness must do it in a sweet and peaceable way: in particular, men may reprehend others, so they do it with moderation and gentleness, not as executioners, to torment them, but as physicians, to heal them; as, on the other side, they that are most peaceably disposed, yet must not make peace without sowing righteousness with it, which includes just reprehension, whereby righteousness is promoted. Or, 2. That they who sow righteousness in peace, i. e. join righteousness with their endeavours after peace, shall reap the reward, not only in comfort here, but in glory hereafter.

CHAP. IV

Our evil lusts and passions tend to breed quarrels among ourselves, and to set us at enmity with God, 1-6. The way to overcome them, and recover God's favour, 7-10. Against detraction and censoriousness, 11, 12. We must not presume on the future, but commit ourselves to God's providence, 13-17.

FROM whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?

Wars and fightings; either it may be understood properly of insurrections, and tumults, in which, possibly, some carnal professors might be engaged; or rather, strife and contention about outward things, wranglings among themselves, and going to law, especially before unbelieving judges, 1 Cor. vi. 1. Your lusts; Greek, pleasures, i. e. those lusts whereof pleasure is the end, which is therefore put for the lusts themselves: he means the over-eager desire of riches, worldly greatness, carnal delights, Tit. iii. 3, where lusts and pleasures go together. That war; oppose and tumultuate against reason, conscience, grace, Rom. vii. 23; 1 Pet. ii. 11. In your members; not only the members of the body, but faculties of the soul, exercised by them; all the parts of man unrenewed, Col. iii. 5, which are used as weapons of unrighteousness, Rom. vi. 13

2 Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not.

Ye lust; passionately and greedily desire. And have not; either soon lose, or rather cannot get, what ye so lust after. Ye kill; some copies have it, ye envy, and many suppose that to be the better reading, as agreeing with the context, and with chap. iii. 14; envy being the cause of strife there, and joined with emulation, or a desire of having, here. We read it according to other copies, ye kill, which, if he speaketh of wars in a proper sense, ver. 1, was, no doubt, the effect of them; and if he speak only of strife and contentions, yet they might proceed so far, that the death of some (though not intended) might be the consequent of them, and occasioned by them. Or, he may mean their murderous desires, killing men in their hearts, wishing for and gaping after their death, that they might gain by it; and this agrees with what he speaks of the frustration of their greedy desires, none being more frequently disappointed of their hopes than they that hope to be gainers by other men's deaths. And desire to have; or, emulate, i. e. ambitiously affect to have what ye see others have, grieving that they should have more than you. And cannot obtain; viz. that which ye envy others' having. Ye fight and war; you wrangle and quarrel with your neighbours for what they have, that ye may get it for yourselves. Yet ye have not; ye are still needy, though still craving; your lusts are infinite and insatiable in themselves, and no way helpful to you. Because ye ask not; viz. of God by prayer, who hath promised to give to them that ask, Matt. vii. 7, not to them that war and fight. Instead of humble seeking to God for what ye want, ye would extort it by force or fraud from one another.

3 Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts.

Ye ask; he prevents an objection; q. d. Admit you do pray for the good things you want, or, though you pray for them. Ye ask amiss; though you pray for good things, yet you do not pray well, or in a right manner, not according to God's will, 1 John v. 14, and therefore ye are not to complain of not being heard. That ye may consume it upon your lusts; you pray for the things of this life only, that you may have wherewith to please the flesh, and gratify your carnal appetites, and so an evil end spoils good means; and while you would have God serve your lusts you lose your prayers.

4 Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.

Ye adulterers and adulteresses; he means adulterers and adulteresses in a spiritual sense, i. e. worldly-minded Christians, who being, by profession, married to the Lord, yet gave up those affections to the things of the world which were due to God only. The like expression is used, Matt. xii. 39; xvi. 4. Know ye not; ye ought to know, and cannot but know. That the friendship of the world; inordinate affection to the world, addictedness or devotedness to the things or men of the world. Is enmity with God; alienates the soul from God, and God from it, 1 John ii. 15. Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world; if it be the purpose and resolution of a man's heart to get in with the world, though perhaps he cannot obtain its favour; he courts it, though it be coy to him. Is the enemy of God; exerciseth hostility against God, by adhering to an interest so contrary to him.

5 Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?

Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain? Greek, empty, or vainly, i. e. to no purpose. This question hath the force of a negation, q. d. It doth not speak in vain. Quest. What is it which the Scripture doth not speak in vain? Answ. Either those truths he had been speaking of before, particularly in the former verse, that the friendship of the world is enmity with God; or, that which follows in this verse, the spirit that dwelleth in us, &c. The spirit that dwelleth in us; either the Spirit of God, who is said to dwell in believers, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; or the spirit of men, viz. as defiled by sin, and acted by the devil, who works in men while children of disobedience; and then it is the same as corrupt nature. Lusteth to envy; either is vehemently carried out to envy, or makes us lust, and carrieth us out to it; or lusteth against envy: so the Greek preposition is often used, as Luke xx. 19; Eph. vi. 11; Heb. xii. 4. Under envy he comprehends all other fleshly lusts, but instanceth in this particularly, as having been speaking of it before, chap. iii. 14, 16; and because it hath so near a connexion with other lusts, whereof it is the cause, or concomitant, and so is a principal member of the old man.

b Job 27. 9.
& 35. 12.
Pa. 18. 41.
Prov. 1. 28.
Is. 1. 15.
Jer. 11. 11.
c Pa. 66. 18. 1 John 3. 22. & 5. 14. 1 Or, pleasures.
d Pa. 73. 27.
e 1 John 2. 15.
f 1 John 15.
g Gal. 1. 10.

g See Gen. 6.
& 8. 21.
Num. 11. 29.
Prov. 21. 10.
1 Or,
zealously.

This latter clause may either be read interrogatively or affirmatively; and then according as we take spirit, either for the Spirit of God, or the human spirit, the sense of the words may be either, 1. Doth the Spirit of God, that dwelleth in us, lust unto envy, i. e. incline and dispose us to so base an affection? The answer is understood, No, and confirmed by the next words, he giveth more grace, gives freely, liberally, and therefore doth not make us envy others any good they have. Nothing is more contrary to the Spirit of God, who abounds in his gifts to us, than to make us envy others theirs. Or, 2. We may understand it without any interrogation, taking the preposition to signify, against; and then the sense is, That good Spirit which is in us teacheth us better things than strife and envy, &c., for it lusteth against envy, i. e. makes us lust against it, carries out our hearts to hate and resist it. And this well agrees with what follows; The Spirit, &c., lusts against envy, but he gives more grace, viz. than to envy the good of others. Or, 3. If spirit here be understood of the spirit of man, corrupt nature, the sense is plain, as the words lie; man's spirit (especially by the instigation of the devil) lusts, or strongly inclines, to envy, and consequently to other wickednesses, but he (that is, God, ver. 4) gives more grace. Quest. Where is any such sentence to be found in the Scripture? Answer. No where in so many words; but which soever of these ways we take the words, we find the sense in the Scripture. Joshua's envying Eldad and Medad's prophesying, for Moses's sake, seems to be an instance of this lust, Numb. x. 29. (compared with Gen. vi. 5; viii. 21, where the general inclination of man's heart by nature is said to be evil,) and Moses's not envying them an instance of the two former.

h Job 22. 29.
Ps. 138. 6.
Prov. 3. 34.
& 29. 23.
Matt. 23. 12.
Luke 1. 52.
& 14. 11. & 18. 14. 1 Pet. 5. 4.

6 But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, <sup>h</sup> God resisteth the proud, but he giveth grace unto the humble.

But he; either the Spirit of God, if spirit in the former verse be understood of the Spirit of God; or God, if spirit be there taken for the spirit of man. Giveth more grace; either, though we, according to our natural inclination, be envious, yet God (or his Spirit) is bountiful and liberal; or God gives to those that are renewed, more grace than to be hurried on by their own old spirit, to envy, strife, and such-like lusts. Wherefore he saith; God saith, viz. in the Scripture: or it may be taken indefinitely, and impersonally, for, it is said. The particular place he refers to, is Prov. iii. 34, according to the translation of the LXX., which not only James, but other New Testament writers, frequently follow. God resisteth; it is a military term: God sets himself, as in battle, against the proud, defying, beating down, exposing to contempt, and destroying them; he is so far from giving them more gifts, that he rather spoils them, as sworn enemies, of what they have. The proud; those that by reason of the gifts God hath given them, lift themselves above others: Solomon, in the parallel place, calls them scorners; it being the usual guise of those that think over-well of themselves, to despise others, and even contemn the warnings and judgments of God himself, which may well draw him out to fight against them. But giveth grace unto the humble; not only gives favour and honour in the sight of men to those that are lowly in their own eyes, but especially furnisheth them with grace for the overcoming and mortifying their carnal desires and remaining corruptions.

7 Submit yourselves therefore to God.

1 Eph. 4. 27. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.
1 Pet. 5. 8.

Submit yourselves therefore to God; viz. voluntarily and freely, and that not only in a way of obedience to all his commands, but (which is chiefly meant here) in a way of humility, and sense of your weakness, and emptiness, and need of his grace. Therefore; both because of the danger of pride, (opposed in the former verse to humility,) he resisteth the proud; and because of the benefit that comes by humility, he giveth grace to the humble. Resist, by faith, and the rest of the spiritual armour, Eph. vi. 13, 14, &c. Or, resist, i. e. comply not with his motions and temptations. The devil; the head and leader of fleshly lusts. These likewise are military terms. Having spoken before of strife and contention, he directs here with whom we may, and with whom we may not, contend. He had commended modesty toward men, they are our equals, we must not lift ourselves above them, nor envy nor strive with them; here he adviseth to submission to God as our supreme Governor, we must not contend with him; and to open war with the devil as our great enemy, our contention must be with him. And he will flee from you; as to that particular assault in which you resist him; and though he return again, and tempt you again, yet you still resisting, he will still be overcome; ye are never conquered so long as you do not consent.

8 Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded.

h 2 Chron. 16. 2.
1 Is. 1. 16.
m 1 Pet. 1. 22.
1 John 3. 3.
n ch. 1. 8.

Draw nigh to God; by faith, which is a coming to God, Heb. vii. 25; by true repentance, which is a returning to God, Hos. xiv. 1; Mal. iii. 7; and by fervent prayer to him for the help of his grace, Psal. xxv. 1. And he will draw nigh to you; by the manifestation of his grace and favour to you, particularly giving you strength against the devil and your lusts. Cleanse your hands; reform your actions, amend your lives. Hands, the principal instruments of bodily actions, being put for the actions themselves; cleanness of hands signifies the innocency of the outward conversation, Job xxii. 30; Psal. xxiv. 4; xxvii. 6; Isa. xxxiii. 15, 16. Ye sinners; you that are openly and notoriously vicious, whose wickedness appears in your ordinary practices: so such are called, Matt. xi. 19; Mark ii. 15; Luke vii. 37; xv. 2; John ix. 31. And purify your hearts; your thoughts and inward affections, from whence the evils of your outward actions proceed, Isa. lv. 7: see 1 Pet. i. 22; 1 John iii. 3. Ye double minded; either by the former he understands the profane, and by these, hypocrites, or the same by both, viz. such as had wicked hearts, and led wicked lives; only he shows wherein true repentance consists, viz. in the reformation both of the inward and outward man.

9 Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

Be afflicted; humble yourselves for your sins, before mentioned, and in the sense of wrath approaching, if ye do not. And mourn, with inward sorrow of heart. And weep; show your inward grief by weeping, the usual expression and sign of it. Let your laughter; your carnal rejoicing in what you get by sinful courses, ver. 1, 2, lusting, warring, fighting. Be turned into mourning; exchange your carnal joy for godly sorrow. And your joy; to the same purpose as laughter, before: by it he means their pleasing themselves in the success of their unrighteousness, the gain of their rapine and violence. Into heaviness; the same as mourning, or an outward expression of it in the dejection of the countenance, which usually proceeds from shame or sorrow, (and the Greek word signifies both,) whereas joy and confidence make men lift up their heads or faces, Ezra ix. 6; Job x. 15; xi. 15; xxii. 26; Luke xxi. 28.

10 Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

p Job 22. 29.
Matt. 23. 12.
Luke 14. 11.
1 Pet. 5. 6.

Humble yourselves: the same duty pressed again, only with respect to the more internal part of it, the debasement of the heart, lest they should rest too much in the outward exercises before mentioned. They did lift up themselves through pride and emulation, and he shows them the best way to the truest exaltation, viz. humility, Matt. xxiii. 12; Prov. xv. 33; xviii. 12. In the sight of the Lord; sincerely, as in the presence of the Searcher of hearts. And he shall lift you up; as to your outward state and enjoyments, so far as God sees good for you; but, however, in grace here, and glory hereafter, Luke xiv. 11.

11 Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

Speak not evil one of another; viz. unless in the way of q Eph. 4. 31.

r 1 Pet. 2. 1.

s Matt. 7. 1.

t Luke 6. 27.

u Rom. 2. 1.

v 1 Cor. 4. 4.

an ordinance, by reproof, admonition, &c., Lev. v. 1; 1 Cor. i. 11; xi. 18; 2 Cor. xi. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 14, 15. He forbids all detraction, rigid censuring, and rash judging the hearts and lives of others, when men condemn whatever doth not suit with their notions or humours, and make their own moroseness the rule of other men's manners. Judgeth his brother; finds fault with and condemns him for those things which the law doth not condemn in him, or forbid to him, Rom. xiv. 3, 4. Judgeth the law; viz. either, 1. By his practising and approving what the law condemns, i. e. this very censoriousness and detraction; or, 2. By condemning that which the law allows; he condemns the law for allowing it, taxing it as too short and imperfect. But if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge; if thou not only judgest thy brother, and therein invadest the law's office, (whose part it is to judge him,) but judgest him for what the law doth not forbid him, and therein judgest the law itself, as insufficient, and not strict enough; thou dost cast off the law's government, disown its superiority, exempt thyself from any subjection to it, and make thyself merely a judge of it.

<sup>a</sup> Matt. 10.
<sup>28.</sup>
<sup>1</sup> Rom. 14.
<sup>4, 13.</sup>

12 There is one lawgiver, * who is able to save and to destroy: ' who art thou that judgest another ?

There is one lawgiver; one absolute, supreme, universal and spiritual Lawgiver, and who can simply and directly bind men's consciences, and make laws for their souls, Prov. viii. 15, 16; Isa. xxxiii. 22; Acts iv. 19. By this he intimates, that they did invade God's right, who took upon them a legislative power in prescribing to other men's consciences, and making their own will the rule of the others' duty. Who is able to save and to destroy, both temporally and eternally, Deut. xxxii. 39; 1 Sam. ii. 6; Isa. xliii. 13; whereas other lawgivers cannot save or destroy men's souls, nor so much as their lives, without God's concurrence. Who art thou; what a sorry creature, a man, a worm, that thou shouldst lift up thyself into God's place, and make thyself a judge of one not subject to thee! That judgest another; the servant of another Master, Rom. xiv. 4. It is a fond thing for thee to take upon thee the power of a judge, when thou hast no power of saving or destroying, rewarding or punishing.

<sup>u</sup> Prov. 27.1.
<sup>1</sup> Luke 12. 18,
<sup>&c.</sup>

13 "Go to now, ye that say, To day or to morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain :

Go to now; either this is a note of transition, or of command to inferiors, or rather of admonition to such as are stupid or rash, and tends to the awakening their attention, and stirring them up to the consideration of their duty, danger, &c. Ye that say; or rather your mouths, or in your hearts. To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city; not, let us go, but, we will go, in the indicative mood; noting the peremptoriness of their purposes, and their presuming upon future times and things, which were not in their power. And continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain: he doth not condemn merchants travelling into other countries, nor trading there, nor designing gain by their trade, nor forecasting their business; but their promising themselves the continuance of their life, the accomplishing their designs, and the success of their labours, without respect to God's providence and direction, as if their times and their works were in their own hands, not in his.

|| Or,
<sup>For it is,</sup>
<sup>x</sup> Job 7. 7.
<sup>Ps.</sup> 102. 3.
<sup>ch.</sup> 1. 10.
<sup>1</sup> Pet. 1. 24.
<sup>1</sup> John 2. 17.

14 Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? || *It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow; whether ye yourselves shall continue till then, or what else shall then be, or not be. In vain do ye boast of whole years, when ye cannot command the events of one day. For what is your life? this question implies contempt, as 1 Sam. xxv. 10; Psal. cxliv. 3, 4. It is even a vapour; like a vapour, frail, uncertain, and of short continuance; and then how vain are those counsels and purposes that are built upon no more sure a foundation than your own lives.

15 For that ye ought to say, 'If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

<sup>1</sup> Acts 18. 21.
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 4. 19.
& 16. 7.
<sup>4</sup> Heb. 6. 3.

For that ye ought to say: it is the real acknowledgment of God's providence, and the dependence of all our affairs upon him, which is here required; and this is to be done, either expressly with the mouth in such-like forms of speech as this is, so far as is needful for our glorifying God, and distinguishing ourselves from those that are profane, as hath been customary with the saints in Scripture, Acts xviii. 21; Rom. i. 10, and other places, but always inwardly, and in the heart. If the Lord will; i. e. with his providential or directive will, which as yet we do not know, and therefore we say, If the Lord will: for all our counsels and determinations must be regulated by his preceptive or directive will, which we do know; and therefore, with respect to that will, we are not to say, We will do this, or that, if God will, i. e. commands it, but we must first see that it be commanded, and then resolve to do it if God will, that is, if in his providence he shall permit us. If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that; some read the words, If the Lord will, and we shall live, we will do this, or that; and then the latter copulative and is redundant, and the sense is, that all our actions depend not only upon our living, but upon God's willing; God may permit us to live, and yet not permit us to do this or that. But if we take the words according to our reading, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that, the meaning is, that both our life and actions depend upon the will of God, nor the one, nor the other, is in our power. And so here is a double check to the vain boasts of those that were so peremptory in their resolutions, without considering the frailty of their own lives, or the dependence of their actions upon God's will, when both the one and the other are at his disposal.

16 But now ye rejoice in your boastings: * all such rejoicing is evil.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Cor. 5. 6.

But now ye rejoice, or, glory; ye please yourselves with them. In your boastings; viz. of your carnal projects, and hopes of what you intend to do, and expect to get: q. d. You vainly boast of your designs and successes, without taking notice of God's providence, under the government of which you and your affairs all are. All such rejoicing is evil; both as being contrary to the word, which assures us so often that it is vain to promise ourselves long life, or prosperity in our worldly business, without God's leave and blessing, Psal. cxvii. 1; Prov. xvi. 9, 33; and likewise as proceeding from pride and security.

17 Therefore *to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

<sup>a</sup> Luke 12.
<sup>47.</sup> John 9.
<sup>41.</sup> & 15. 22.
<sup>Rom.</sup> 1. 20,
<sup>21.</sup> 32. & 2.
<sup>17.</sup> 18, 23.

Either this may relate to all that the apostle had been before speaking of; q. d. I have admonished you of your duty, and now ye know what ye are to do, and therefore if you do it not it will be your sin: or, it may refer to what he was immediately before discoursing of, and may be spoken to prevent an objection. They might say, he taught them no more than what they knew already; and that they acknowledged God's providence in all things. To this he replies, that if they knew their duty, they ought to practise it, and so actually submit themselves and their affairs to the conduct of that providence; and their not doing it, now that they knew it, would the rather be their sin. To him it is sin; i. e. sin indeed, or (as we say) sin with a witness; a greater sin, and which hath more of the nature of sin in it, or is more highly aggravated, by being against knowledge, and so is punishable with severer vengeance, than if done out of ignorance, Luke xii. 47. See the like expression, John ix. 41; xv. 22, 24.

CHAP. V

Wicked rich men are warned of God's impending judgment, 1—6. The brethren are exhorted to patience, after the example of the prophets and of Job, 7—11; to abstain from swearing, 12; to pray in affliction and sickness, and sing psalms in prosperity, 13—15; to acknowledge mutually their faults, and to pray for one another, 16—18; and to endeavour to reclaim sinners, 19, 20.

GO <sup>a</sup>to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

Go to now: see chap. iv. 13. Ye rich men; he speaks to them not simply as rich, (for riches and grace sometimes may go together.) but as wicked, not only wallowing in wealth, but abusing it to pride, luxury, oppression, and cruelty. Against these, either as looking on them as incurable, or upon supposition of their impenitency, he denounceth God's judgments; and that whether they were unconverted Jews, vexing the believing Jews; or Gentiles, oppressing the Christian Jews; or Christians in profession and name, who yet were so vile in their practice, as to condemn and kill the just; and that they might more speciously do it, to draw them before the judgment-seats, &c. Weep and howl; to denote the extremity of the calamities coming upon them, in which they should not only weep like men, but howl like wild beasts: see Jer. iv. 8; Micah i. 8; Joel i. 10, 13. For your miseries that shall come upon you; or, are coming upon you, to signify the certainty and nearness of them. The miseries he means may be both temporal and eternal.

2 Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

Your riches are corrupted: either by riches he means the general, and by garments, gold and silver, the particulars in which their riches consisted; and then being corrupted, is to be taken generally, as comprehending the several ways whereby the several kinds of their riches were spoiled: or else, by riches he understands such things as were liable to corruption, or putrefaction, as corn, wine, oil, which were a great part of their riches. And your garments are moth-eaten; costly garments, in which rich men are wont to pride themselves; and under them may be comprehended all such clothes as may be eaten by worms or moths.

3 Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. <sup>c</sup>Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

Your gold and silver is cankered; the most precious and lasting metals; yet even they, with long disuse, canker, and go to decay. Under these, other metals in esteem among them may be understood. And the rust of them shall be a witness against you: by a prospopœia, that which properly belongs to living persons is ascribed to dead things, as Hab. ii. 11; Luke xix. 40. It is as much as if he had said, The rust shall be a certain evidence against you, and which will as effectually convict you, as any living witness could do, of your folly in putting your trust in perishing things, your greediness in hoarding them up, your unmercifulness in not supplying the wants of others, and your unreasonableness in denying the use of them to yourselves, when you had rather let them lie by and perish, than enjoy the comfort of them, or do good with them. The like expression we have, Mark vi. 11. And shall eat your flesh; the rust (the witness of your covetousness and cruelty) which now eats your money, shall hereafter devour yourselves, soul and body, (which he means by flesh.) viz. by procuring and kindling the wrath of God upon you, (compared to fire,) and likewise by galling your consciences with a vexatious remembrance of your sin and folly; and so what in the judgment is a witness against you, in hell will be a tormentor to you. As it were fire; as if you had reserved fire in your treasure, as well as treasure in your chests. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days: either this may be understood metaphorically, ye have heaped a treasure of wrath for the last days, Rom. ii. 5; or literally, ye have hoarded up your wealth against the last and fatal days, in which God is bringing those judgments upon you which will consume all.

4 Behold, <sup>d</sup>the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

Behold; this is either a note of demonstration, as John i. 29; q. d. The case is plain, and cannot be denied; or of excitation; q. d. Seriously consider it; or rather, of confirmation, to intimate, that the threatenings here denounced should certainly be made good upon them: see Jude 14. The hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields; the wages of those by whose labour and sweat ye yourselves live and are nourished. Which is of you kept back by fraud; either wholly denied them, or detained from them when due to them, contrary to the law, Lev. xix. 13; Deut. xxiv. 14, 15. Deferring payment is a sort of defrauding, as it bereaves the creditor of the benefit of improvement; and so they are taxed here with injustice, as well as covetousness, in that they lived upon other men's labours, and starved the poor to enrich themselves. Crieth; viz. to God for vengeance, as such sins are said to do, which either are so openly and boldly committed, as to dare the justice of God, or so secretly, or securely, that they are like to escape the justice of men, Gen. iv. 10; xviii. 20, 21. Among others, oppression of the poor is a loud crying sin, Exod. ii. 23; Job xxiv. 11, 12; Hab. ii. 9, 11, 12. The Lord of sabaoth; i. e. the Lord of hosts, as having all the creatures above and below, of all sorts, ranked under him as their great Commander, whose will they are ready to execute. He mentions God by this title, not only for the encouragement of the poor oppressed, whose Patron and Protector he avows himself to be, Exod. xxii. 23, 24, 27; Prov. xxiii. 11; but for terror to the powerful oppressors, who think themselves out of the reach of men's judgment.

5 <sup>f</sup>Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter.

Ye have lived in pleasure; luxuriously and deliciously, giving up yourselves to your sensual appetites, Amos vi. 4—6; Luke xvi. 19, 25. On the earth; where you place your happiness without looking higher, and from whence you fetch your delights, Phil. iii. 19. And been wanton: the same word is used 1 Tim. v. 6; it seems to imply effeminate, lascivious behaviour, as the effect of their riotous living. Ye have nourished your hearts: either by a Hebrew phrase, ye have nourished your hearts, for ye have nourished yourselves, Esth. vi. 6; Job x. 13; or, ye have cheered up and encouraged your hearts in your luxury by pampering your flesh, (Luke xii. 19.) and feeding not to the satisfaction of nature, but the inflaming of your lusts. As in a day of slaughter; either securely, and without fear of the destruction coming upon you, as sheep graze quietly, though by and by to be brought to the shambles; or rather, in a day of slaughter, i. e. in a day of solemn feasting, when many beasts were killed in sacrifice, on which they were wont to feast, Prov. vii. 14; xvii. 1. They made every day a feasting day, and that, too, lavishing out other men's dues upon their own flesh, and sparing from their labourers that they might spend upon their lusts. This he brings to aggravate their sin.

6 <sup>g</sup>Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

Ye have condemned and killed; i. e. procured by your wealth and power the passing unrighteous sentences, and thereby the destruction of the just. The just; indefinitely and collectively, the just for any just man, viz. such as were innocent and just in comparison of their persecutors. And he doth not resist you; this notes not only the patience of such in bearing injuries, but their weakness, and being destitute of human help against their adversaries' power.

7 <sup>h</sup>Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive <sup>h</sup>the early and latter rain.

Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the

Eclus. 34. 21, 22. e Deut. 24. 14

a Prov. 11. 26. Luke 6. 24. 1 Tim. 6. 9.

b Job 13. 28. Matt. 6. 20. ch. 2. 2.

f Job 21. 13. Amos 6. 1, 4. Luke 16. 19. 25. 1 Tim. 6. 6.

c Rom. 2. 6.

g ch. 2. 4.

h Or, Be long patient, or, suffer with long patience.

h Deut. 11. 14. Jer. 5. 34. Hos. 6. 3. Joel 2. 23. Zech. 10. 1.

Lord; viz. to judgment, and that either particular, to avenge the quarrels of innocent sufferers upon their tyrannical persecutors; or rather, to the general judgment, in which a full retribution is to be made both to the just and unjust, Rom. ii. 5, 6, &c. To which judgment the Scripture calls all to look, especially those that are under oppression and persecution, 2 Thess. i. 6, 7, &c. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth; which cost him hard labour, and by which he receives great benefit, the sustentation of his life. Until he receive the early and latter rain; the rain soon after the sowing, which caused the corn to spring up; and that before the harvest, which plumped it, and made it fit for reaping, Deut. xi. 14; Jer. v. 24; Hos. vi. 3; Joel ii. 23.

8 Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Be ye also patient; viz. in expectation of your harvest, and the fruit of your labours, as the husbandman is in looking for his. Stablish your hearts; let your hearts be steadfast in faith and constant in holiness, encouraging yourselves to both by the coming of the Lord. For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; as before, his coming to the general judgment, which is said to be nigh, because of the certainty of its coming, and the uncertainty of the time when it will come, and because it is continually drawing on, and the whole time of the world's duration till then is but short in comparison of the eternity following; and likewise because the particular judgment of every man is nigh at hand. See Phil. iv. 5; Heb. x. 37.

9 <sup>k ch. 4. 11.</sup> <sup>l Or, Groan,</sup> <sup>m Or, grieve</sup> <sup>n Matt. 24. 33.</sup> <sup>o Cor. 4. 5.</sup> Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door.

Grudge not; Greek. Groan not; the sense may be, either, Envy not one another, (or, as we translate it, Grudge not;) it being the nature of envy to groan at other men's good; or, Groan not by way of accusation or complaint to God against others, desiring him to avenge your quarrels, as if you were too good to suffer injuries, or God were unjust or forgetful of righting you. One against another; brother against brother, Christian against Christian: they were injured not only by rich worldlings and open oppressors, but by their fellow professors, and gave one another mutual cause of sighing and groaning. Lest ye be condemned; lest God punish you all; there being none of you but have given others cause of grief and complaint, as well as others have given you, Matt. vii. 1. Behold, the Judge standeth before the door; the Lord Jesus Christ, the Judge of you all, is at hand, (Phil. iv. 5,) in a readiness either to bring those evils upon you which you wish may fall upon others, or to give you your reward, if through patient continuance in well doing you seek for it. Rom. ii. 7. The like phrase we have, Matt. xxiv. 33; Mark xiii. 29; or it may allude to Gen. iv. 7.

10 <sup>m Matt. 5.</sup> <sup>n Heb. 11.</sup> <sup>o 35, &c.</sup> Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.

Take, my brethren, the prophets; as being most eminent among God's people, and leaders of them; he intimates that it is an honour to suffer among the best. Who have spoken in the name of the Lord; by his command and authority, and so were employed in the highest services in the church, and thereby appeared to be approved of God, and most dear to him. For an example of suffering affliction: as much as God honoured and loved them, yet they were not exempted from afflictions, but were maligned, traduced, and persecuted by men, 1 Kings xviii. 13; xix. 14; 2 Kings vi. 31; Amos vii. 10; Heb. xi.; and therefore when they suffered such hard things, it is no shame for you to suffer the like. Matt. v. 12. And of patience; as the example of their sufferings should prevent your discouragement, so the example of their patience should provoke your imitation; God having set them forth as examples of both, that if you suffer the same things, you may suffer with the same minds.

11 Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

We count them happy which endure; we ourselves count them happy that endure, and therefore should be patient, and not count ourselves miserable if we endure too. Which endure; viz. patiently and constantly, Matt. v. 10, 11. Ye have heard of the patience of Job; for which he was as eminent as for his sufferings; and though some signs of impatience be showed, yet his patience and submission to God being prevalent, and most remarkable to him, that only is taken notice of, and his failings overlooked. And have seen the end of the Lord: Job's patience is heard of, but God's end seen: seeing being a clearer way of perception than hearing, is put in this latter clause, because God's bounty and recompence was more evident than Job's patience. The end of the Lord; the good issue God gave to all Job's sufferings, in restoring him to his former state, and doubling his prosperity. That the Lord is very pitiful; full of bowels, Greek; the bowels being the seat of compassion, (in which we feel a stirring when strong affections are working in us,) are frequently put to signify the most tender and movable affections, such as mothers have toward their children, Gen. xliii. 30; 1 Kings iii. 26; Isa. lxiii. 15; Col. iii. 12: this seems to note the affection itself, or God's readiness to show mercy, Luke i. 78. And of tender mercy: this may imply acts of mercy suitable to a merciful nature, the former mercy within, and this mercy breaking out.

12 But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

Because it is a great sin to swear upon every slight occasion, and it was very usual among the Jews, and it was the more difficult to bring them off from it who were so much accustomed to it; therefore the apostle commands them, that above all things they should not swear, i. e. should take special care they did not, and watch diligently against a sin so many were addicted to, and into which they might so easily fall. Swear not; all swearing is not forbidden, any more than Matt. v. 34; (for oaths are made use of by holy men both in the Old and New Testament, Gen. xxi. 23, 24; xxiv. 3; xxvi. 28; 1 Kings xvii. 1, 2; 2 Cor. i. 23; Gal. i. 20; and the use of an oath is permitted and approved of by God himself, Psal. xv. 4; Heb. vi. 16;) but such oaths as are false, rash, vain, without just cause, or customary and frequent in ordinary discourse, 1 Kings xix. 2; Jer. v. 2; Matt. v. 37. Neither by heaven, neither by the earth; by which the Jews thought they might lawfully swear, as likewise by other creatures, so the name of God were not interposed; not considering that where it is not expressed yet it is implied, Matt. xxiii. 20. Neither by any other oath; viz. of the like kind. But let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay: either, 1. Let your speech be yea, yea, and nay, nay; i. e. by plain affirmations and negations, without the addition of any oath for confirmation, Matt. v. 37: or, 2. Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay, i. e. let your words be in truth and sincerity, your speech seconded by your actions; accustom yourselves to truth and plainness in speaking, and that will take away the occasion of swearing. See the like, 2 Cor. i. 17—19. Lest ye fall into condemnation; viz. for taking the name of God in vain, Exod. xx. 7, which is always done in an unwarrantable oath.

13 Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms.

Is any among you afflicted? either troubled or afflicted in mind, as appears by the opposite being merry, or more generally afflicted any way. Not that we need not pray at other times, but when under afflictions God calls us more especially to it, and our own necessities put us upon it. Let him pray; for support, patience, sanctification of afflictions, &c. Is any merry? let him sing psalms; express his mirth in a holy manner, by praising God with psalms or spiritual songs for mercies received from him, 1 Cor.

p Job 42. 16.
q Num. 14.
r Ps. 103.
s r Matt. 24.

s, &c.

s Eph. 5. 19.
t Col. 3. 16.

1 Phil. 4. 5.
2 Heb. 10. 25.
3 1 Pet. 4. 7.

k ch. 4. 11.
l Or, Groan,
m Or, grieve
n Matt. 24. 33.
o Cor. 4. 5.

m Matt. 5.
n Heb. 11.
o 35, &c.

p Ps. 94. 12.
q Matt. 5. 10.
r 11. & 10. 22.
s Job 1. 21.
t 22. & 2. 10.

xiv. 15; Eph. v. 19; and so keep up his spiritual mirth by a spiritual exercise, lest his cheerfulness degenerate into vanity and frothiness.

14 Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

1 Mark 6. 13. & 16. 18.

Is any sick? or infirm, though not desperately and incurably. Let him call for the elders; especially teaching elders, they being usually best furnished with gifts who labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. v. 17. It is in the plural number, either by an enallage for the singular; q. d. Let him send for some or other of the elders; or, because there were in those times usually several elders (an ecclesiastical senate) in each church. And let them pray over him; as it were setting him before God, and presenting him to him, which might be a means to stir up the greater affection and warmth in prayer; see 1 Kings xvii. 21; 2 Kings iv. 33, 34; John xi. 41; Acts xx. 10; ix. 40: or laying on their hands, as Acts xxviii. 8, which yet seems to be for the same end. Anointing him with oil; an outward rite used in those times, in miraculous healing sick persons, which might then be kept up, while the gift whereof it was the symbol continued; but the gift ceasing, it is vainly used. These cures were sometimes wrought only with a word, Acts ix. 34; xiv. 10; xvi. 18: sometimes by taking by the hand, or embracing, Acts iii. 7; xx. 10; sometimes by laying on of hands, Mark xvi. 18; Acts ix. 17; sometimes by anointing with oil, Mark vi. 13: and so this is not an institution of a sacrament, but a command, that those elders that had the gift of healing, (as many in those days had,) being called by the sick to come to them, should (the Spirit of the Lord so directing them) exercise that gift, as well as pray over them. In the name of the Lord; either, calling upon the Lord, and so joining prayer with their anointing; or, in the name, is by the authority of the Lord, from whom they had received that gift.

15 And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

u Is. 38. 24. Matt. 9. 2.

And the prayer of faith; i. e. proceeding from faith; the cure is ascribed to prayer, the moral means, and standing ordinance, not to the anointing, which was but ceremonial and temporary; and to faith in prayer, to show that this remedy was effectual only when faith (requisite to the working of miracles) was active, viz. in a certain persuasion that the sick person should be healed. Shall save the sick; restore to health, (if God see it fit, and the health of the body be good for the soul.) Mark x. 52; Luke vii. 50; xviii. 42. And the Lord shall raise him up; the elders pray, but the Lord raiseth up, being prayed to in faith. Raise him up; the same as saving before, only the word seems to respect the sick man's lying upon his bed, from which he riseth when he is healed, Mark i. 31. If he have committed sins; if he have by his sins procured his sickness; or, those sins for which particularly God visits him with sickness; sin being often the cause of sickness, Matt. ix. 2; John v. 14; 1 Cor. xi. 30, though not always, John ix. 2. They shall be forgiven him; God will take away the cause as well as the effect, heal the soul as well as the body, and prayer is the means of obtaining both.

x Gen. 20. 17. Num. 11. 2. Deut. 9. 18, 19, 20. Josh. 10. 12. 1 Sam. 12. 18. 1 Kings 13. 6. 2 Kings 4. 23. & 19. 15, 20. & 26. 2, 4, &c. 1 Pe. 10. 17. & 34. 13. & 145. 16. Prov. 15. 29. & 26. 9. John 9. 31. 1 John 3. 22.

16 Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

Confess your faults; some copies have the illative particle, therefore, in the text, but even without that here seems to be a connexion between this and the former verse: he had said, the sick man's sins should be forgiven upon the elders' praying; and here he adds, that they must be confessed. One to another; either, that ye may be reconciled to one another when offended, or rather, confess when admonished or reproved for sin, or wounded in your consciences with the sense of it: and so this is not meant of auricular confession made to a priest, but such as should be made, though especially to ministers, yet, when need is, even to godly, experienced Christians, for the easing and disburdening men's consciences, and getting the help of others' prayers. And pray one for another; both in other ordinary cases, and chiefly upon occasion of your mutual confessions, and those soul-troubles that prompted you to them. That ye may be healed; not only recover bodily health when sick, but spiritual, when weakened or wounded by sin. Healing is often applied to the soul as well as the body, Matt. xiii. 15; Luke iv. 18; Heb. xii. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 24. The effectual fervent prayer: our translators use two words (and little enough) to express the significancy of the Greek word in this place: some translate it inwrought; it seems to be a prayer wrought in the soul by the Holy Spirit, and so may imply both the efficiency of God's Spirit, (the Spirit of supplications, Zech. xii. 10,) and the vehemency of holy affections caused by him in prayer, Rom. viii. 26. Of a righteous man; one sincerely righteous, and in a gospel sense; the following instance of Elias shows that it is not to be understood of a man absolutely righteous. Availeth much; is very powerful with God for obtaining what is desired, 1 John v. 14; whereas God heareth not sinners, Prov. xv. 8, 29.

17 Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

Acts 14. 12. 1 Kings 17. 1 Or. in prayer. Luke 4. 25.

Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are; both of body and mind, natural and moral; and so, though he were righteous, yet he was not perfect; though an eminent prophet, yet but a man. And he prayed earnestly; with that effectual, fervent prayer before mentioned. It is a Hebrew phrase, and notes vehemency, as Luke xxii. 15. That it might not rain; this is not expressly mentioned in the history, but this apostle might have it by revelation, or by certain tradition well known in his age. Other passages of the like nature we meet with in the New Testament which are not in the Old: see 1 Tim. iii. 8; Heb. xii. 21; Jude 9. And it rained not on the earth; or, the land, viz. of the ten tribes, and the places bordering on them, as Sarepta, 1 Kings xvii. 9; Luke iv. 25, 26. By the space of three years and six months: so Luke iv. 25. Quest. How doth this agree with 1 Kings xviii. 1, where it is said, the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year? Answ. Most probably it was in the midst of the third year from his coming to Sarepta; and he was by the brook Cherith a year. 1 Kings xvii. 7, where the margin reads it, according to the Hebrew, at the end of days, i. e. the days of a year, as the phrase is often used, Gen. iv. 3; Judg. xvii. 10; so that his time spent in both places may well make up the three years and six months.

18 And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

1 Kings 18. 42, 45.

And he prayed again; after the destroying the prophets of Baal. Baal-worship especially gave occasion to his former prayer, which he puts up out of his zeal to God's glory, then laid low by the Israelites' idolatry, and a desire to have them by some exemplary punishment for their sin awakened to repentance. And the destruction of the idolaters, and reformation of the people, who now acknowledged the Lord to be God, might give occasion to this. And the heaven gave rain; i. e. the air or clouds, which had not been for three years before.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

Mat. 18. 15.

The truth; the truth of God revealed in the gospel as the complete rule of faith and life: see the gospel called the truth by way of eminency, chap. i. 18; Gal. ii. 5, 14; iii. 1; v. 7; Eph. i. 13; 1 Pet. i. 22. And one; any one, minister or private believer, who may be an instrument in the conversion of others; though one acts by way of authority, the other by way of charity, yet both out of duty. Convert him; viz. ministerially or instrumentally, in subordination to God. The work is his, Eph. ii. 10, but often is ascribed to the instruments acting under him, and using means appointed by him, and by which he works, Acts xxvi. 18.

20 Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way <sup>d</sup> shall save a soul from death, and <sup>e</sup> shall hide a multitude of sins.

Of his way; of his life and actions, which is contrary to the way which God hath prescribed. Shall save; men are said to save in the same way as to convert, viz. instrumentally. A soul; the soul of him that is thus converted,

1 Tim. iv. 16: soul for person, as chap. i. 21. From death: eternal death, unto which he was hastening while he continued in the error of his way, which led him toward destruction. And shall hide a multitude of sins; in the same sense as before he is said to convert and save his soul, viz. in being instrumental to bring him to faith and repentance, upon which God pardons, i. e. hides his sins, (Psal. xxxii. 1.) though not from the eye of his omniscience, yet from the eye of his vindictive justice, and so as not to bring them forth in judgment against him.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL

OF

P E T E R

THE ARGUMENT

OF the penman of this Epistle there is no doubt; and of the time of his writing it, no certainty, whether about the year of our Lord 45, or rather 65. The occasion of it may (not improbably) be thought to be the same that was of James's writing his, viz. the folly and perverseness of some in those times, and among the Jewish Christians to whom he wrote, in separating faith from holiness, and their doubting whether Peter and Paul taught the same doctrine. His scope therefore is, partly to confirm these saints in the belief of the gospel, and to testify that the doctrine of the grace of God through Jesus Christ, which they had embraced and did profess, was indeed infallibly true, chap. v. 12, being the same that had been preached by the prophets to the fathers of the Old Testament, chap. i. 10—12; fairly implying it to be the same that Paul preached, by his sending this Epistle to them that were of the circumcision, by Silvanus, a minister of the uncircumcision, and Paul's ordinary companion in the work of the gospel; as likewise he doth by that ample testimony he gives to Paul and his writings, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. And partly to exhort them to the practice of godliness, and a conversation suitable to the gospel: and that he doth, both as to the general duties incumbent on all believers, in the first chapter, from ver. 13, to chap. ii. 12; and as to the particular duties which concerned them in their several relations, subjects to magistrates, servants to masters, husbands and wives mutually to each other, ministers to people, younger people to their elders, and especially sufferers towards their oppressors and persecutors; but withal in-termining several general duties, and of concernment to all, and concluding all with prayer and salutation.

CHAP. I

The apostle's address to the strangers elect in Christ, dispersed throughout the Lesser Asia, 1, 2. He blesseth God for having raised them to the hope of a blessed immortality, 3—9. He sheweth that their salvation in Christ had been foretold by the prophets of old, 10—12; and exhorteth them to a vigilant and holy conversation, suitable to their calling and redemption by the blood of Christ, 13—21; and to mutual love, 22—25.

A. D. PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers <sup>a</sup> scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia,

To the strangers; not only metaphorically strangers, as all believers are in the world, chap. ii. 11; but properly, as being out of their own land, and so really strangers in the places here mentioned. Scattered; so James i. 1. Throughout Pontus; a country of the Lesser Asia, bordering upon the Euxine sea, and reaching as far as Colchis. Galatia; which borders upon Pontus, and lies southward of it. To the Gentile churches inhabiting here, Paul wrote his Epistle inscribed to the Galatians. Cappadocia; this likewise borders upon Pontus, and is joined with it, Acts ii. 9. Asia; that part of Asia the Less, which was especially called Asia, viz. the whole country of Ionia, which contained in it Troas, Phrygia, Lydia, Caria, &c. See Acts xvi. 6, 9; xix. 10, 31. And Bithynia; another province of the Lesser Asia, bordering upon Pontus and Galatia, and opposite to Thracia. Quest. Who were the strangers to whom this Epistle was written? Ans. Chiefly the Christian Jews scattered in these countries, as appears by chap. ii. 12, and i. 18, where he mentions the traditions of their fathers, of which the Jews were so fond, Matt. xv. 2; Gal. i. 14; but secondarily, to the converted Gentiles. As Paul, the apostle of the uncircumcision, wrote principally to the converted Gentiles, at Rome, Corinth, Ephesus, &c., but doth not exclude those Jews that were among them, who, being converted to the faith, were of the same mystical body with them; so Peter, though he firstly wrote to the converted Jews, as being an apostle of the circumcision, yet includes the Gentiles that were mingled among them, and joined in faith and worship with them.

2 <sup>b</sup> Elect <sup>c</sup> according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, <sup>d</sup> through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and <sup>e</sup> sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: <sup>f</sup> Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

By elect he means, either, 1. Singled out of the world, and separated unto God in their effectual calling, as 1 Cor. i. 1; those that are said to be called, ver. 26, are said to be chosen, ver. 27, 28; and so the word seems to be taken, James ii. 5: or, 2. Chosen to salvation, and the means of it, in God's eternal decree, Eph. i. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 13. According to the foreknowledge; either, 1. The Divine pre-ordination, or decree of election, as the word is taken, ver. 20, and then we may take elect in the first sense; men are chosen out of the world, or called in time, according as they were chosen from eternity, Rom. viii. 30: or, 2. Foreknowledge here is as much as approbation or love, Matt. vii. 25; Rom. xi. 2; and so signifies the free favour and good will of God, which is the fountain from whence the decree of election proceeds; and then we are to take elect

b Eph. 1. 4
c Rom. 8
d 2 Thess.
e Heb. 10. 22
f Rom. 1. 7
g 2 Pet. 1. 2
Jude 2.

a John 7. 35.
Acts 2. 5. 9.
10. 1am. 1. 1.

in the latter sense, and so elect according to the foreknowledge of God, is, eternally designed unto life, according to, or out of, that free grace and love God did from eternity bear to them, which was the only motive he had for his choosing them: or, (which comes to the same,) by foreknowledge we may understand election itself, as it is in God; and by election, the same, as terminated in the creature, and executed in effectual calling. Of God the Father; this doth not exclude the Son or Spirit from their interest in and concurrence to the Divine decree, but only notes the order of working among the three Persons in the affair of man's salvation; election is ascribed to the Father, reconciliation to the Son, and sanctification to the Spirit.

Through sanctification: sanctification seems to be taken in a large sense, for the whole change of our spiritual state, both as to real grace in regeneration, and relative in justification; so that God may then be said to sanctify us, when in our effectual calling he justifies us from our sins, and renews us unto obedience: so it is taken, Heb. x. 10. Of the Spirit; this is to be understood rather of the Spirit of God, the efficient of sanctification, than the spirit or soul of man, the subject of it. Unto obedience; either, 1. The obedience of Christ to God; and then the sense is, elect, or ordained to be, by the sanctification of the Spirit, made partakers of the benefits of Christ's obedience: or, 2. The obedience of believers to Christ, and that either in their believing, faith being a giving obedience to the great command of the gospel, John vi. 29, and particularly called obedience, Rom. i. 5; and then the sense runs thus, elect unto faith, which was to be wrought in you by the sanctification of the Spirit: or else in the exercise of holiness, which is the fruit of faith; and then it signifies the same as Eph. i. 4, chosen, that you might be made, by the sanctification of the Spirit, holy and unblamable, and might accordingly demean yourselves. And sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ; an allusion to the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifices under the law, Heb. ix. 13, 14, 20—22; xii. 24; it signifies the application of the blood of Christ for the purging of the conscience, (which was typified by those legal sprinklings,) especially from the guilt of sin; which sprinkling, or application of the blood of Christ to our consciences, is performed on our part by faith, on God's part by his Spirit working that faith in us (as well as enabling us unto obedience) in our effectual calling, as likewise by God's imputing Christ's righteousness to us; and so the sense of the whole is, Elect according to the foreknowledge of God, to be by the sanctification of the Spirit brought into the participation of all the benefits of Christ's redemption; the sum of which consists in the renovation of your natures unto gospel obedience, and the justification of your persons. Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied; there being several kinds of grace, chap. iv. 10, and several kinds of peace, outward and inward, he wisheth them all kinds of each; and there being several degrees and measures of both, he prays for an increase of these degrees in them, and so a multiplication of all good, both temporal and spiritual, to them.

3 <sup>g</sup> Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which <sup>h</sup> according to his † abundant mercy † hath begotten us again unto a lively hope † by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; either the conjunction and is here but an explicative particle, and so we render it, 2 Cor. i. 3, God, even the Father, &c.; or if we take it for a copulative, as Eph. i. 3, God is called the God of Jesus Christ, according to Christ's human nature, and his Father according to his Divine. Which according to his abundant mercy; this shows the fountain from whence regeneration and all other spiritual blessings flow, and excludes all merit and dignity in us, as the cause of so great benefits. Abundant mercy is the same with riches of mercy, Eph. ii. 4. Hath begotten us again; translated us out of a state of sin and misery into a state of grace and life; and so begotten again here, is the same as sanctifying in the former verse. Unto a lively hope; either a lively hope, for hope of life; or rather, a lively hope is a true and effectual hope, such as proceeds from a lively faith, and is itself productive of peace and purity, Rom. v. 2;

1 John iii. 3, in opposition to the vain hope of worldly men, which neither comes from faith nor tends to holiness. By the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead: this may be referred either, 1. To God's begetting us again, and then it implies the resurrection of Christ to be the cause of our regeneration, we being raised to a spiritual life by the power of Christ's resurrection, and our vivification being often ascribed to it, chap. iii. 21; Rom. iv. 25; vi. 4, 5: see Eph. ii. 5. Or, 2. To the lively hope to which he begets us, which depends upon, and ariseth from, the faith of Christ's resurrection, Rom. viii. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 17, 19; 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14. Christ's resurrection being the cause and pledge of ours, as the certainty of ours depends upon his, so the liveliness of our hope follows upon the faith of it. Possibly the apostle may have in these words some respect to the languishing condition of the hope of him, and the other disciples, Luke xxiv. 21, which was then ready to expire, but was again revived by their being well assured of his resurrection, ver. 33, 34.

4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, <sup>1</sup> and that fadeth not away, <sup>2</sup> reserved in heaven <sup>3</sup> for you,

To an inheritance; so eternal life is called, Eph. i. 18, and elsewhere, as being given not as wages to hirelings, but as an inheritance to children born of God, and adopted to him. Incorruptible; immortal, everlasting, which being once possessed, cannot be taken away, nor pass over to others. And undefiled; both as being pure in itself, and having nothing to offend them that enjoy it; and likewise as being incapable of any pollution or defilement, contrary to what is said of the land of Canaan, the earthly inheritance of the Israelites, Jer. ii. 7; Ezek. xxxvi. 17. And that fadeth not away; always retains its vigour and gratefulness, never causes weariness or satiety in them that possess it. It seems to be a metaphor taken from flowers, probably the amaranthus, (the very word here used,) which still keeps its freshness and verdure, without any decay or withering. Reserved; laid up, Col. i. 5; 2 Tim. iv. 8; secured for the heirs, though not yet possessed by them. In heaven; and therefore safe, and out of the reach of enemies. This is opposed to the uncertain condition of earthly possessions, such as Canaan was. For you; margin, for us, viz. whom God hath begotten again: or if we read it, as in the text, for you, the apostle may change the person in order to his exhortation.

5 <sup>a</sup> Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

Who are kept: lest it should be objected, that though the inheritance be safe in heaven, yet the heirs are in danger here upon earth, by reason of the power and stratagems of enemies, and their own imprudence and weakness; he adds, that not only their inheritance is reserved for them, but they preserved unto it, kept securely and carefully, as with a garrison, (for so the word signifies,) against all the assaults, incursions, and devices of the devil and the world. By the power of God; which power is infinite and invincible, and therefore able to keep them, John x. 28, 29; Rom. viii. 31, 38, 39; 2 Tim. i. 12. Through faith; which, resting on the power of God, overcomes all their enemies, the flesh, 1 John iii. 9, the devil, chap. v. 9; Eph. vi. 16, and the world, 1 John v. 4. It implies, that not only they themselves are kept through faith, whereby they rely on the power of their Keeper, and his promises of keeping them, but that they and their faith too are kept by the power of God. Unto salvation; viz. full and complete in glory, and not only begun and imperfect here. Ready; as being already purchased, prepared, and laid up for them; and so he intimates, that their not as yet possessing it, is not because it is not ready for them, but because the time of their being put in possession of it is not yet come. To be revealed: it was said to be reserved in heaven, ver. 4, kept safe, but close too, as a rich treasure, the greatness of it is not yet known, even to them that are the heirs of it, Col. iii. 3, 4; 1 John iii. 2; here he adds, that it is to be revealed, and made known to them, so soon as the time of its manifestation shall come. In the last time; simply and absolutely the last, viz. the day of judgment, which is called the last day, John vi. 39, 40; xi. 24; xii. 48.

g 2 Cor. 1. 3.
Eph. 1. 3.
h Tit. 3. 5.
† Gr. much.
i John 3. 3, 5.
Jann. 1. 35.
k 1 Cor. 15.
20. 1 Thes. 4.
14. ch. 3. 21.

n John 10.
28, 29. & 17.
11, 12, 15.
Jude 1.

1 ch. 5. 4.
2 Col. 1. 8.
3 2 Tim. 4. 8.
4 Or, for us.

o Matt. 5. 12.
Rom. 12. 12.
1 Cor. 4. 10.
ch. 4. 13.
2 Cor. 4.
17. ch. 5. 10.
q. Jam. 1. 2.

6 °Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now <sup>p</sup>for a season, if need be, <sup>q</sup>ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations :

Wherein ; this refers to the whole foregoing sentence ; Ye rejoice in your being kept by the power of God unto salvation. Ye greatly rejoice : the Greek word signifies something more than a bare rejoicing, and therefore is added to a word that signifies to rejoice, Matt. v. 12, and implies an outward expression of the inward gladness of the heart, by looks, words, gestures, &c. Some read the word in the imperative mood, by way of exhortation ; but the indicative, according to our translation, seems most agreeable to the context, in which, as yet, he commends the saints, to whom he writes, for the grace of God in them ; descending to his exhortation afterward, ver. 13. Though now for a season ; viz. while this life lasts, which is but a little time, 2 Cor. iv. 17. If need be ; if God see it fit, needful for your good, and conducing to his glory ; intimating, that God doth not always afflict believers, but when he sees just cause, and never doth it without cause. Ye are in heaviness : Quest. How could they be in heaviness, and yet rejoice ? Answe. Their grief and joy were about different objects ; they might be in heaviness by reason of present afflictions, and rejoice in hope of future glory ; they might grieve as men, and rejoice as saints ; sense of suffering might affect them, and yet the faith of better things coming relieve them. If their heaviness did in any degree abate their joy, yet it did not wholly hinder it ; and though their joy did overcome their heaviness, yet it did not wholly exclude it. Through manifold temptations ; he so calls afflictions, from the end and effect of them, the trial of their faith, Luke xxii. 28 ; Acts xx. 19 ; Gal. iv. 14 ; James i. 2 ; 2 Pet. ii. 9 : he calls them manifest, as being not only numerous, but various, and of divers kinds.

1 Jam. 1. 3.
2 ch. 4. 12.
4 Job 23. 10.
Ps. 65. 10.
Prov. 17. 3.
Is. 48. 10.
Zech. 13. 9.
1 Cor. 3. 13.
1 Rom. 2. 7.
10. 1 Cor. 4.
5. 2 Thess. 1. 7.—12.

7 That <sup>r</sup>the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though <sup>s</sup>it be tried with fire, <sup>t</sup>might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ :

That the trial of your faith ; i. e. your faith when tried. He compares the faith of the saints with gold, and argues from the less to the greater : q. d. If men do so far esteem their gold, that they will make the excellency and preciousness of it appear by trying it in the fire, which purgeth away the dross, and discovers the goodness of the metal ; no wonder if God will have the faith of the saints (more precious to him than gold is to men) tried by afflictions, that the excellency of it may more fully be discovered. Being much more precious than of gold ; i. e. than the trial of gold ; or gold tried, compared with faith tried. That perisheth ; is worn away, and consumed by use, as many particles of it likewise may be in the very trial of it, ver. 18 ; whereas faith is not consumed nor wasted, but increased by being used, and made more conspicuous by being tried. Might be found unto praise and honour and glory ; i. e. may be found to be, or to have turned, to praise, &c., the dignity of it being by that means evidenced. These several words show whither present trials tend, and in what they issue ; they may be reproachful and ignominious now, Heb. xii. 2, but they end in glory. We need not be critical about the difference of these three words, praise, honour, and glory, which may be synonymous expressions (by way of amplification) of the same thing, yet they are mentioned distinctly with relation to believers elsewhere ; praise, 1 Cor. iv. 5, honour, 1 Sam. ii. 30 ; John xii. 26, glory, as well as honour, Rom. ii. 10. At the appearing of Jesus Christ ; i. e. at the day of judgment, frequently so called, as ver. 13 ; chap. v. 4 ; Col. iii. 4 ; 2 Thess. i. 7. Christ's glory is at present hid and obscured, while he is instructing his elect, and training them up unto patience, and defers his judging of his enemies ; but at last it will be fully manifested in the face of the world, when he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, &c., Rev. i. 7.

u 1 John 4. 20.
x John 30.
29. 4 Cor. 6.
7. Heb. 11.

8 °Whom having not seen, ye love ; <sup>v</sup>in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory :

Whom ; which Christ. Having not seen ; with your bodily eyes. Most of these Jews lived out of their own country, and so had not seen Christ in the flesh ; and this was the commendation of their love, that they loved him whom they had not seen, though sight doth ordinarily contribute toward the stirring up of affection. Ye see him not ; neither as others have done in the days of his flesh, nor as you yourselves hereafter shall in his glory ; ye walk by faith, and not by sight, 2 Cor. v. 7. Ye rejoice, in hope of seeing and enjoying him. With joy unspeakable ; which cannot be expressed with words. See the like phrase, Rom. viii. 26 ; 2 Cor. ix. 15. And full of glory ; both in respect of the object about which this joy is conversant, the heavenly glory ; the degree, it is the highest here in the world ; the duration of it, it is most solid ; as likewise in comparison of the joy of this world, which is vain and transitory, and whereof many times men are afterward ashamed.

9 Receiving <sup>w</sup>the end of your faith, <sup>x</sup> Rom. 6. 22. even the salvation of your souls.

Receiving ; either this word is to be taken improperly, and by an enallage, the future being put for the present tense ; q. d. Being about to receive ; or rather properly, in the present tense, and then it intimates the certainty of the thing spoken of. The end of your faith ; i. e. the scope to which faith tends, or the reward of faith. The salvation ; either, 1. Salvation more generally taken, which is begun in this life, Eph. ii. 8 ; Tit. iii. 5 ; or rather, 2. Complete final salvation in the other, as ver. 5 : and then the sense is, either, ye rejoice that ye shall certainly receive the full salvation of your souls, or, ye rejoice that ye do receive that salvation, viz. in the promises of it, in those graces of the Spirit wrought in you, which begin this salvation, and are the pledges of it, and in the certain assurance of it. Of your souls ; i. e. by a usual synecdoche, the salvation of your persons.

10 °Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you :

Of which salvation ; either, 1. The more full and clear manifestation of salvation promised to be at the coming of Christ, when life and immortality should be brought to light through the gospel, 2 Tim. i. 10 ; and then this place is parallel to Luke x. 24 : or, 2. The salvation of the dispersed Jews, i. e. their public conversion by the gospel, and eternal life following upon it ; which (as well as the calling of the Gentiles) was reserved for the times and glory of the Messiah. The prophets ; viz. those under the Old Testament, out of whose writings the faith of New Testament believers is to be confirmed, John v. 39 ; Acts xvii. 11 ; and whom this apostle therefore mentions, that he might strengthen the faith of the Christian Jews, by assuring them that the doctrine he had delivered to them was no new invention, but the very truth of God revealed of old to the prophets. Have inquired and searched diligently ; the words imply their vehement desire of knowing, as well as great diligence in seeking. Who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you : what he called salvation before, he calls grace here, to intimate their salvation to be merely of grace. This grace revealed under the gospel, the prophets foretold, but in a more dark way ; the Sun of righteousness not being yet risen, the shadows were not gone, and the light was but obscure.

11 Searching what, or what manner of time <sup>y</sup>the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand <sup>z</sup>the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

Searching what? whether near or farther off, or what particular part of time. This may relate particularly to Daniel's weeks, chap. ix. What manner of time ; whether peaceable or troublesome, when the people were free or when in bondage ; what were the qualities of the time, or signs by which it might be known. Jacob foretells Christ's coming, when the sceptre was departed from Judah, Gen.

s Gen. 49. 10.
Dan. 2. 44.
Hag. 2. 7.
Zech. 8. 12.
Matt. 13. 17.
Luke 10. 24.
2 Pet. 1. 19.
20, 21.

a ch. 3. 19.
2 Pet. 1. 21.
b Ps. 27. 6.
Is. 53. 3, &c.
Dan. 9. 26.
Luke 24. 25.
26, 44, 66.
John 12. 41.
Acta 26. 22.
23.

xlix. 10; Isaiah, in a time of universal peace, chap. ii. 4; xi. 6. This diligent inquiring after the time of Christ's coming showed their earnest longing for it. The Spirit of Christ; so styled, as being of the Son, no less than of the Father, both by eternal procession and temporal mission, John xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26. This shows, that not only Christ had a being under the Old Testament before his coming in the flesh, (for if Christ were not, there could be no Spirit of Christ,) but likewise that Christ is God, because of his inspiring the prophets with the knowledge of future things, which none but God can do. When it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ; what the prophets did foretell concerning Christ, was not their own conjecture, but what the Spirit did dictate to them. And the glory that should follow; Greek, glories, in the plural number, i. e. the manifold glory which was to follow upon his many sufferings, the glory of his resurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of God, sending the Spirit, &c. Christ's suffering and glory are often joined together, Psal. xxii. 6; ex.; Isa. liii. 3, 10—12; Luke xxiv. 26; Phil. ii. 8, 9; Heb. ii. 9, 10; to show that there is the same way (and no other) for the salvation of the members, as for the glory of the Head, viz. by sufferings.

12 °Unto whom it was revealed, that °not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you with °the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; °which things the angels desire to look into.

Unto whom; unto which prophets. It was revealed; viz. by the Spirit of Christ that was in them. That not unto themselves; who lived before Christ's coming in the flesh. But unto us; not only apostles, but believers, who live since Christ came. They did minister; declare and foretell. The preaching of the word is called a ministry, Acts vi. 4; 2 Cor. iv. 1; v. 18. The things; the whole doctrine of the gospel concerning Christ's person, offices, benefits, kingdom, and the whole New Testament state. Which are now reported unto you; viz. as fulfilled, and actually exhibited now, which were only foretold by the prophets. By them that have preached the gospel unto you; the apostles, and other gospel ministers assistant to them: the sense is. The prophets under the Old Testament did, by the Spirit, foresee and foretell Christ's passion, resurrection, ascension, the effusion of the Spirit, the enlargement of the church by the calling of the Gentiles, &c.; but did not live to see their own prophecies, and God's promises, fulfilled, Heb. xi. 13, as you now do. They did spread the table that you might feed at it; they had but a taste by faith, and at a distance, of those things you feast upon in their accomplishment; yet they did not grudge to declare these things, being instructed by the Spirit, that what they spake of should not be fulfilled in their time, but in the generations to come; that so ye, by comparing what they said should come to pass with what you have now been assured is come to pass, may be confirmed and established in the belief of the truth, being the same held forth by the prophets formerly, and gospel ministers at present. With the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven: Christ promised to send the Spirit, Luke xxiv. 49; John xiv. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7; and actually sent him, Acts ii.: the apostles, not of themselves, but acted by this Spirit, have declared unto you the fulfilling of those things, which the former prophets, by the instinct and power of the same Spirit, (the Spirit of Christ, which was in them,) did foretell would in their proper season come to pass. Which things; the things before said to be reported by them that preached the gospel. The angels desire to look into: it seems to be an allusion to the cherubims that stood above the ark, with their faces toward the mercy-seat, which was a type of Christ. The word signifies a bowing down the head, and stooping to look into a thing. Luke xxiv. 12; John xx. 5; and implies a prying, or looking narrowly into it; which argues an earnest desire to know it. The angels thus look into the mysteries of the gospel, as desirous to see the accomplishment of them, admiring the manifold grace and wisdom of God in them, Eph. iii. 10, and rejoicing in the salvation of sinners, which is the end and effect of God's revealing them.

13 Wherefore °gird up the loins of your mind, °be sober, and hope † to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you † at the revelation of Jesus Christ;

Wherefore; the following exhortation may be connected, either with ver. 4, Being so glorious an inheritance is reserved in heaven for you, gird up, &c.; or with ver. 12, Seeing ye know those things, which the prophets that foretold them did not fully see, and the angels themselves desire to look into; the grace of God vouchsafed to you is so excellent and admirable, gird up, &c. Gird up the loins of your mind; i. e. let your minds be attent, prompt, ready, prepared for your spiritual work, restrained from all those thoughts, cares, affections, and lusts, which may entangle, detain, hinder them, or make them unfit for it. It is a metaphor taken from the custom of the Oriental nations, who wearing long loose garments, were wont to gird them up about their loins, that they might not hinder them in their travelling or working, 1 Kings xvii. 46; 2 Kings iv. 29; Luke xvii. 8: see on Luke xii. 35, 37. Perhaps it may have a special respect to the like rite used at the Pass-over, Exod. xii. 11, when the Israelites were just ready to enter upon their journey, and go out of Egypt. Be sober: this may relate, either, 1. To the body; and then the sense agrees with Luke xxi. 34, where the cares of this life seem to be opposed to the girding up the loins of the mind, and surfeiting and drunkenness, to sobriety here. Or rather, 2. To the soul; and then girding up the loins of the mind, may refer to the understanding, and thoughts, and sobriety, to the will and affections, and may signify that moderation which belongs to them, in opposition to their inordinate-ness, which is a sort of drunkenness. Or, it may be rendered, be watchful, as it is translated, 2 Tim. iv. 5, and with which it is joined, 1 Thess. v. 6, 8; and so it agrees well with the former clause; they that have the loins of their mind girt up, being of a vigilant, present mind, and ready for any work they are to undertake. And hope to the end; Greek, perfectly, as in the margin, i. e. sincerely, entirely, with a firm confidence; but the following words favour our translation, which signifies perseverance in hope. See Heb. iii. 6. For the grace that is to be brought unto you; final salvation, which is the gift of grace, Rom. vi. 23, and is called the grace of life, chap. iii. 7. At the revelation of Jesus Christ; called the appearing of Jesus Christ, ver. 7.

14 As obedient children, °not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts °in your ignorance;

As obedient children; Greek, children of obedience, by a usual Hebraism, for obedient children. So children of disobedience, Eph. ii. 2; Col. iii. 6. And this we may understand either absolutely, children of obedience for obedient persons; or with relation to God, obedient children of God; and then the apostle persuades them to their duty by an argument taken from their adoption; being the children of God, he would have them behave themselves obediently, as becomes them in that relation. Not fashioning yourselves; not accommodating, not conforming yourselves, not shaping or ordering your conversation. See the same word, Rom. xii. 2. According to the former lusts; the lusts you formerly indulged yourselves in: see Eph. iv. 22. In your ignorance; your ignorance of Christ and the gospel: q. d. Not fashioning yourselves according to those lusts you lived in when you were ignorant of Christ. He distinguisheth between the time of their ignorance, and of their illumination. Another age requires other manners. They formerly lived according to the dictates of their lusts, but now ought to live according to the will of Christ: see ver. 18; Acts xvii. 30; Eph. iv. 17, 18.

15 °But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

But as he which hath called you; God the Father, to whom, as the First Cause, our calling is frequently ascribed, Rom. ix. 11, 24; 1 Cor. vii. 15; Gal. i. 6, 15. It may be rendered, According to the Holy One that hath called you,

c Dan. 9. 24.
e 12, 9, 13.
c Heb. 11.
13, 39, 40.

o Acta 2. 4.

f Ex. 26. 30.
Dan. 4. 13.
e 12. 5, 6.
Eph. 3. 10.

g Luke 12. 35.
Eph. 6. 14.
h Luke 21.
34. Rom. 13.
13. 1 Thess.
5. 4, 8. ch. 4.
7. & h. b.
+ Gr. perfectly.

i Luke 17. 30. 1 Cor. 1. 7. 2 Thess. 1. 7.

k Rom. 12.
2. ch. 4. 2.
l Acts 17. 30.
1 Thess. 4. 5.

m Luke 1.
74, 75. 2 Cor.
7. 1. 1 Thes.
4. 3, 4, 7.
Heb. 12. 14.
2 Pet. 3. 11.

i. e. according to his example; you are children, and should therefore imitate your Father, Eph. v. 1. Called you; viz. effectually, to the knowledge and faith of Christ. Is holy; so God is often styled by Isaiah and other penmen of the Scripture, as the fountain and exemplar of holiness. So be ye holy in all manner of conversation; either, through the whole course, and in the several parts, of your conversation; or, in all manner of conversation, as we read it, i. e. with whomsoever ye converse, believers or infidels, friends or enemies, relations or strangers; and in whatsoever condition ye are in, peace or trouble, prosperity or adversity.

<sup>n</sup> Lev. 11. 44. <sup>a</sup> 19. 2. & <sup>20.</sup> 7. 16 Because it is written, "Be ye holy; for I am holy.

Your Father, and therefore you ought to imitate and obey me: or, I that have severed you from other people, that you should be mine, Lev. xx. 26, to which place particularly this seems to refer.

<sup>o</sup> Deut. 10. <sup>17.</sup> Acts 10. <sup>34.</sup> Rom. 2. <sup>11.</sup> <sup>p</sup> 2 Cor. 7. 1. <sup>Phil.</sup> 2. 12. <sup>Heb.</sup> 12. 28. <sup>q</sup> 2 Cor. 5. 6. <sup>Heb.</sup> 11. 13. <sup>ch.</sup> 2. 11. 17 And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear:

And if; this participle is used here, and frequently elsewhere, not as a note of doubting, but by way of assertion, and supposition of a thing known. Ye call on the Father; either this is to be meant of invocation, their calling on God in prayer; and then the sense is, If you be servants and worshippers of the Father; prayer being many times put for the whole worship of God, Isa. xliii. 22; Acts ix. 11: or, of their calling God, Father, as Matt. vi. 9; and then the sense is, If you would be counted God's children, James ii. 7. Who, without respect of persons; and so will no more excuse you that are Jews, and descended from Abraham, than those that are born of Gentile parents, Job xxv. 19; Acts x. 34; Eph. vi. 9. Judgeth; and so is not a Father only, but a Judge, and that a most righteous one. According to every man's work; i. e. works, the singular number put for the plural, as James i. 25: see Rom. ii. 6; Job xxxiv. 11. Pass the time of your sojourning here; the word signifies the temporary abode of a man in a place where he was not born, or doth not ordinarily reside; such being the condition of believers in the world, that they are sojourners, not citizens of it; they are travelling through it to their Father's house and heavenly country, Heb. xi. 9, 10, 13, 16. They are here exhorted to a suitable carriage, expressed in the next words. In fear; which is due to him as a Father and a Judge. It may imply the greatest reverence, and the deepest humility, Phil. ii. 12; 1 Cor. ii. 3; 1 Pet. iii. 2, 15.

<sup>r</sup> 1 Cor. 6. <sup>20.</sup> & 7. 23. <sup>s</sup> Ezek. 20. <sup>18.</sup> ch. 4. 3. 18 Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers;

Forasmuch as ye know; considering that ye were, &c. That ye were not redeemed with corruptible things: see Tit. ii. 14. This implies them to have been in a servile condition, and in bondage to their own errors, till they were converted to Christ. As silver and gold; the most precious things, of greatest esteem among men. From your vain, because unprofitable to, and insufficient for, righteousness and salvation, conversation, viz. in your Judaism, wherein you were so much addicted to uncommanded rites and ceremonies, as to have little respect for God's law. Received by tradition; and so not only by their example and practice, but by their doctrine and precepts, Matt. xv. 3, &c.; Mark vii. 7, &c. See likewise Gal. i. 14. From your fathers; either your ancestors, as Ezek. xx. 18, or doctors and instructors, who are sometimes called fathers, 1 Cor. iv. 15.

<sup>t</sup> Acta 20. 28. <sup>Eph.</sup> 1. 7. <sup>Heb.</sup> 9. 12. <sup>14.</sup> Rev. 5. 9. <sup>u</sup> Ex. 12. 5. <sup>Is.</sup> 53. 7. <sup>John</sup> 1. 29, 36. <sup>1</sup> Cor. 5. 7. 19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot:

Precious; because the blood not only of an innocent person, but of the Son of God, Acts xx. 28. As of a lamb; i. e. who was a Lamb. A lamb; the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, John i. 29: not only like a lamb, for his innocence and gentleness, Isa. liiii. 7, but the Antitype of the lambs which under the law were offered in the daily sacrifices, and more especially of the paschal lamb; whatever was shadowed out in that, and those other sacrifices, having its accomplishment in Christ. Without blemish; without fault, without defect, in which nothing was wanting that was requisite to its perfection; or, in which nothing could be blamed. The Greek word seems to be derived from the Hebrew Mum, so often used for a blemish; see Lev. xxiv. 19, 20. And without spot; without any other deformity. The lamb might have no defect, but yet might have some spot; and it was to be perfect, Exod. xii. 5, which implied its having neither the one nor the other. Christ was such a Lamb, perfect in holiness, and free from all sin, John viii. 29, 46; Heb. vii. 26; 1 Pet. ii. 22.

20 Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you,

Who verily was fore-ordained; by God's decree appointed to the work of redemption, and to be that Lamb that should take away the sins of the world, Eph. i. 9. Before the foundation of the world; from eternity; there being nothing before the world began but what was eternal, John xvii. 24. But was manifested; not only by his incarnation, 1 Tim. iii. 16, but by the preaching of the gospel. See the Scriptures in the margin. In these last times; last, in comparison of the times of the Old Testament; the same as the fulness of time, Gal. iv. 4. For you; that you, with other believers, might partake of salvation by him. The fruit of Christ's redemption reacheth all ages, but much more abundantly the times after his coming in the flesh. The sum of the argument is, Christ was ordained from eternity, promised to the fathers, but manifested to you: your privilege therefore being greater than theirs, Matt. xiii. 17; Heb. xi. 39, 40, you should be the more holy.

21 Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

Who by him do believe in God; both as revealing God to you, Matt. xi. 27; John i. 14; and making way for you to God, who, out of Christ, is a consuming fire, so that there is no coming to him but by Christ, John xiv. 6; Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12; Heb. vii. 25. Gave him glory; viz. in his resurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of God, &c., Phil. ii. 9—11; Heb. ii. 9, 10. That your faith and hope might be in God; that seeing Christ raised and glorified, ye might be fully confirmed in the belief of a thorough satisfaction made to Divine justice for sin, and perfect reconciliation wrought (for had not Christ fully paid the price of redemption, his Father would never have let him out of the prison of the grave, in which his justice had shut him up); from which faith ariseth a hope, which looks to the resurrection of Christ your Head, as the certain pledge and earnest of your resurrection to life and glory. Christ's resurrection and glory are the great grounds of faith, chap. iii. 21; Acts ii. 32, 33; v. 31; x. 40; Rom. iv. 24, 25; 1 Cor. xv. 14, 17.

22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

Your souls; i. e. yourselves; the whole person is implied, the soul being the principal part. In obeying the truth; in subjecting yourselves to the truth of the gospel, by faith, to which the purification of the heart is ascribed, Acts xv. 9, not only as to justification, and purging away the guilt of sin, but as to sanctification, and cleansing from the defilement of it: q. d. Seeing ye have begun to purify your hearts by faith in Christ, set forth in the gospel, and made sanctification to them that believe, 1 Cor. i. 30. Through the Spirit; by the operation of the Spirit working faith in you. Unto unfeigned love of the brethren; without hypocrisy, and which is not in word only, but in deed and in

<sup>x</sup> Rom. 3. 25. & 16. 25, 26. <sup>Eph.</sup> 3. 9, 11. <sup>Col.</sup> 1. 25. <sup>2</sup> Tim. 1. 9. <sup>10.</sup> Tit. 1. 2.

<sup>3.</sup> Rev. 13. 8. <sup>y</sup> Gal. 4. 4. <sup>Eph.</sup> 1. 10. <sup>Heb.</sup> 1. 2. & 9. 26.

<sup>1</sup> Tim. iii. 16, but by the preaching of the gospel. See the Scriptures in the margin.

In these last times; last, in comparison of the times of the Old Testament; the same as the fulness of time, Gal. iv. 4. For you; that you, with other believers, might partake of salvation by him.

The fruit of Christ's redemption reacheth all ages, but much more abundantly the times after his coming in the flesh.

The sum of the argument is, Christ was ordained from eternity, promised to the fathers, but manifested to you:

your privilege therefore being greater than theirs, Matt. xiii. 17; Heb. xi. 39, 40, you should be the more holy.

21 Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

Who by him do believe in God; both as revealing God to you, Matt. xi. 27; John i. 14; and making way for you to God, who, out of Christ, is a consuming fire, so that there is no coming to him but by Christ, John xiv. 6; Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12; Heb. vii. 25.

Gave him glory; viz. in his resurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of God, &c., Phil. ii. 9—11; Heb. ii. 9, 10.

That your faith and hope might be in God; that seeing Christ raised and glorified, ye might be fully confirmed in the belief of a thorough satisfaction made to Divine justice for sin, and perfect reconciliation wrought (for had not Christ fully paid the price of redemption, his Father would never have let him out of the prison of the grave, in which his justice had shut him up);

from which faith ariseth a hope, which looks to the resurrection of Christ your Head, as the certain pledge and earnest of your resurrection to life and glory.

Christ's resurrection and glory are the great grounds of faith, chap. iii. 21; Acts ii. 32, 33; v. 31; x. 40; Rom. iv. 24, 25; 1 Cor. xv. 14, 17.

22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

Your souls; i. e. yourselves; the whole person is implied, the soul being the principal part.

In obeying the truth; in subjecting yourselves to the truth of the gospel, by faith, to which the purification of the heart is ascribed, Acts xv. 9, not only as to justification, and purging away the guilt of sin, but as to sanctification, and cleansing from the defilement of it: q. d. Seeing ye have begun to purify your hearts by faith in Christ, set forth in the gospel, and made sanctification to them that believe, 1 Cor. i. 30.

Through the Spirit; by the operation of the Spirit working faith in you.

Unto unfeigned love of the brethren; without hypocrisy, and which is not in word only, but in deed and in truth, 1 John iii. 18. Love to the brethren in Christ, and for Christ's sake. This notes one great end of our sanctification, viz. the exercise of brotherly love, whereby our love to God is likewise manifested, when we love them upon his account. The whole clause may likewise be understood, as an exhortation to purify themselves more and more by faith, that so they might (being purged from carnal affections) be the better able, and more disposed, to love one another. Love one another with a pure heart; as the source and fountain of your love to each other, and from whence it proceeds, 1 Tim. i. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 22. Fervently; or, vehemently, and intensely, strongly. The word seems to be a metaphor taken from a bow, which the more it is bent, with the greater force it sends forth the arrow; so love, the more fervent and strong it is, the more abundantly it puts forth itself for the benefit of others.

<sup>b</sup> Acta 15. 9. <sup>c</sup> Rom. 12. 9, 10. <sup>1</sup> Thessa. 4. 9. <sup>1</sup> Tim. 1. 5. <sup>Heb.</sup> 13. 1. <sup>ch.</sup> 2. 17. & 3. 8. & 4. 8. <sup>2</sup> Pet. 1. 7. <sup>1</sup> John 3. 18. & 4. 7, 21.

23 <sup>d</sup>Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, <sup>e</sup>by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

Being born again: this may refer either, 1. To the general exhortation to holiness, ver. 14, 15, and then the argument runs thus: Ye are in your regeneration become the children of God, and therefore ought to walk holily as become his children. Or, 2. To the more particular exhortation to brotherly love, ver. 22: q. d. You are by your regeneration become spiritual brethren, and therefore ought to live like brethren. Not of corruptible seed; which is itself corrupted ere any thing can be generated out of it, or out of which nothing is begotten but what is corruptible; so that all such generations tend but to a mortal life. But of incorruptible; so the word is said to be, because containing still the same, and being immutable in itself, it changes and renews the hearts of those that by faith receive it. Or, it may be understood of its being incorruptible effectually, because it leads, or tends, to an immortal life. The word of God; the same which he called incorruptible seed, which is the instrument in regeneration, as is implied in the preposition, by, going before it. Which liveth; this and the following verb may be joined, either, 1. To God, the word of God, who liveth, &c.; or rather, 2. To the word, so our translation reads it, which word liveth, and abideth, &c.; and this agrees best with the testimony of Isaiah in the next verse. The word of God is said to be a living word, because it enliveneth the hearts of those that entertain it.

24 <sup>g</sup>For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away:

All flesh; all men as born of the flesh, and in their natural state, in opposition to regenerate men, ver. 23. All the glory of man; whatever is most excellent in man naturally, and which they are most apt to glory in. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: see James i. 10.

25 <sup>h</sup>But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. <sup>i</sup>And this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you.

But the word of the Lord endureth for ever; not only absolutely in itself, and in respect of its perpetual verity, Psal. cxix. 160; Matt. xxiv. 35; but relatively, as received by and dwelling in believers, 1 John iii. 9, who always experience the effects of it in themselves in their regeneration, receiving a solid and lasting being from it, (the new nature,) which is likewise preserved by it, in opposition to that flux and mutable being they had by their first birth. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you; this word, of which Isaiah speaks, and which he so much magnifies, is the very same word of the gospel, which is preached unto you by us apostles.

CHAP. II

The apostle exhorteth the Christian converts to lay aside all uncharitableness, 1—3. He showeth their privileges through Christ, the chief corner stone, 4—10. He beseecheth them to abstain from fleshly lusts, and by their good conversation to promote God's glory among the Gentiles, 11, 12. He enforceth obedience to magistrates, 13—17; and teacheth servants to obey their masters, and to suffer patiently for well-doing, after the example of Christ, 18—25.

WHEREFORE <sup>a</sup>laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, Having in the former chapter mentioned the new birth, ver. 23, and exhorted to brotherly love, as agreeable to it, ver. 22, he begins this chapter with a dehortation, wherein he dissuades them from those vices which are contrary to the state of regenerate men in the general, and brotherly love in particular. Laying aside; or, put off; a metaphor from an old over-worn garment, fit only to be thrown away: see Eph. iv. 22; Col. iii. 8, 9; James i. 21. All malice; malignity, when men do evil to others voluntarily and industriously, or delight in other men's harms: see Rom. i. 29; Eph. iv. 31. All guile: all fraudulence and impostures, and circumventing of others in any kind. Hypocrisies; all flattering, and counterfeiting friendship, and showing love in words and outward carriage, when the heart is otherwise affected. So Matt. xxii., Christ calls them hypocrites that flattered him, ver. 16, 18. Envy; grieving at other men's welfare. All evil speakings; all kind of detraction.

2 <sup>b</sup>As newborn babes, desire the sincere <sup>c</sup>milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

Pursuant to his discourse, chap. i. 23, where he speaks of their new birth, he here calls them new-born babes; but that not in opposition to those that are adult, or of full age, as Heb. v. 14; 1 Cor. iii. 1, but in opposition to their former corrupt and unregenerate state, in which they were destitute of all spiritual life; and so this agrees, not only to young converts, but generally to all regenerate persons. Desire; being new-born babes, act as such in earnestly desiring and longing for that spiritual nourishment, which is so needful for you, even as children, as soon as they come into the world, are lingering after the breast. The sincere milk of the word: the Greek may be rendered (and is by some) reasonable milk, viz. such as is for the soul, not for the body; that whereby the mind is nourished and strengthened; or, wordy milk, the substantive from which it is derived properly and first signifying word, or speech, and being used for the word of God, Heb. iv. 12. But this not being proper English, our translation renders it best, the milk of the word, i. e. the word which is milk. The apostle useth an adjective for a substantive, but that adjective doth not signify the quality of the subject, milk, as the other, sincere, doth, but the subject of itself. The like phrase we have, chap. iii. 7; Greek, female, or wifeish, weaker vessel, which we turn by the substantive, wife, who is said there to be the weaker vessel. So that the doctrine of the gospel is here to be understood, as Isa. lv. 1, and believers are to be nourished by the same word, as their food, by which, as the seed, they are said to be begotten, chap. i. 23. This milk of the word is said to be sincere, i. e. pure; without mixture or adulteration, not blended, or diluted, (as vintners do by their wine, to whose practice Paul alludes, when he speaks of men's corrupting the word, 2 Cor. ii. 17; iv. 2.) with human fictions or traditions. Infants love the sweetness of their mothers' milk, and desire it pure, as it is: believers should desire the word pure, as it is in itself, not mixed with any thing that may lessen its sweetness and hinder its efficacy. That ye may grow thereby; that by the word, as your spiritual nourishment, ye may grow more in spiritual life and strength, till ye come to be perfect men, Eph. iv. 13.

3 If so be ye have <sup>d</sup>tasted that the Lord is gracious.

If so be; this doth not imply a doubting, but a supposition, as was before observed, chap. i. 17. Ye have tasted; not lightly tasted by a bare ineffectual knowledge, as Heb. vi. 4; but experienced and perceived by the taste of your spiritual palate; your spiritual sense, and ability to judge of spiritual things, being restored to you, with your new birth. He refers to Psal. xxxiv. 8, and possibly to Isa. lxvi. 11. The Lord; the Lord Jesus Christ, as appears by

<sup>d</sup> John 1. 13.
<sup>e</sup> & 3. 5.
<sup>e</sup> Jam. 1. 18.
<sup>f</sup> 1 John 3. 9.

<sup>g</sup> Or, For <sup>h</sup> that.
<sup>i</sup> Ps. 102. 15.
<sup>i</sup> In. 4th. 5.
<sup>i</sup> & 51. 12.
<sup>i</sup> Jam. 1. 10.

<sup>g</sup> Ps. 102.
<sup>h</sup> 17. 26.
<sup>h</sup> 19. 40. 8.
<sup>h</sup> Luke 16. 17.
<sup>h</sup> John 1. 1.
<sup>h</sup> 14. 1 John
<sup>h</sup> 1. 1, 2.

<sup>a</sup> Eph. 4. 22,
<sup>a</sup> 26. 21.
<sup>a</sup> Col. 3. 8.
<sup>a</sup> Heb. 12. 1.
<sup>a</sup> Jam. 1. 21.
<sup>a</sup> & 5. 9. ch. 4. 2.

<sup>b</sup> Mat. 18. 2.
<sup>b</sup> Mark 10. 18.
<sup>b</sup> Rom. 6. 4.
<sup>b</sup> 1 Cor. 14. 20.
<sup>b</sup> ch. 1. 23.
<sup>b</sup> e 1 Cor. 3. 2. Heb. 5. 12, 13.

<sup>d</sup> Ps. 34. 8.
<sup>d</sup> Heb. 6. 3.

the next verse. Is gracious; good, kind, or rather, sweet: the same word is applied to wine, Luke v. 39. The sense of the whole is, If ye have by faith received the gospel as glad tidings, and worthy of all acceptation, 1 Tim. i. 15, and therein perceived and experienced the sweetness of those consolations which are in Christ Jesus, Phil. ii. 1; or, which is the same, how sweet he is, who, in the preaching of the gospel, exhibits himself to your spiritual senses, to be fed upon and tasted by you.

4 To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious,

e Ps. 118. 22.
Mat. 21. 42.
Acta 4. 11.

To whom; to which Christ. Coming; by faith: q. d. In whom believing, John vi. 35, 44, 45. The word is in the present tense, the apostle describing here not their first conversion to Christ, but their present state, that they, being in Christ, were daily coming to him in the continued exercise of their faith. As unto a living; not only having life in himself, but enlivening those that by faith adhere to him. Stone; viz. a corner-stone, as ver. 6. Being about to set forth the church as a spiritual building, he first mentions Christ as the foundation, and corner-stone. Disallowed indeed of men; rejected, not only by the unbelieving Jews and their rulers formerly, but still by the unbelieving world. But chosen of God; either chosen to be the foundation of the building, and then it is the same as fore-ordained, chap. i. 20; or chosen is the same as choice, excellent. And precious: a different expression of the same thing. Here seems to be an allusion to those stones which men count precious, and have in great esteem; and Christ's being precious in the sight of God, is set in opposition to his being disallowed of men, to intimate, that their unbelief, and rejecting Christ, doth not make him less valuable in himself, when his Father so much honours him.

5 'Ye also, as lively stones, || are built up <sup>a</sup> a spiritual house, <sup>b</sup> a holy priesthood, to offer up <sup>c</sup> spiritual sacrifices, <sup>d</sup> acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

e Eph. 2. 21,
22.
|| Or, be ye built.
g Heb. 3. 6.
h 1a. 61. 6.
i 66. 21.
ver. 9.
f Rom. 14. 2. Mal. 1. 11. Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 13. 15, 16. k Phil. 4. 18. ch. 4. 11.

As lively; viz. as being enlivened by Christ. The word here translated lively, and living in the former verse, is the same; but being there spoken of Christ, it is to be understood actively, and here being applied to believers, who receive their spiritual life from Christ, it must be taken passively. Stones; each particular believer is here called a stone, as all together a house or temple, 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 21, and in respect of their union among themselves, and with their foundation; though elsewhere, in respect of God's inhabitation, even particular believers are called his temple, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19. Are built up; viz. upon Christ the principal Corner-stone, Eph. ii. 20. This may be understood, either, 1. Imperatively. q. d. Be ye built up; and then it is an exhortation, and relates not only to their continuing in Christ. but their being further built up on him by faith, and is of the same import as ver. 2, that ye may grow: or rather, 2. Indicatively; the apostle as yet being engaged in showing the dignity and privileges of believers, and not entering upon his exhortation till ver. 11. The words being in the present tense, implies the building to be still but going on, and not yet finished. A spiritual house; in distinction from the material one, relating to those scriptures where the tabernacle or temple is called God's house, Exod. xxiii. 19; xxxiv. 26; Deut. xxiii. 18. The material house built of dead stones, was but a type of the spiritual house made up of lively stones, and built upon Christ the living Stone; and this he brings (the truth being always more excellent than the type) to heighten the privileges of the gospel church. An holy priesthood; either the abstract is put for the concrete, an holy priesthood for holy priests; or it may note the whole college or society of evangelical priests, consisting of all particular saints, to whom, in the New Testament, this title is given, but never appropriated to gospel ministers: Christ being a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, had no partner with him in his priesthood, but was himself only to offer a propitiatory sacrifice to God for sin. To offer up spiritual sacrifices; the immediate end of gospel priests, to offer, not bodily, but spiritual sacrifices; in general themselves, whom they are to consecrate to God, Rom. xii. 1; particularly prayer, thanksgivings, alms, and other duties of religion, Phil. iv. 18; Heb. xiii. 15, 16. Acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; by, and through whom alone, as the persons, so the performances, of believers (though in themselves imperfect) are pleasing to God, Christ presenting them to his Father by his intercession, and covering their defects by his own most perfect righteousness. Some refer this clause, by Jesus Christ, to the foregoing verb, to offer up; and then the words run thus, to offer up spiritual sacrifices by Jesus Christ, acceptable to God; but the former seems most proper, and includes this latter: we are therefore to offer up spiritual sacrifices to God by Christ, because they are acceptable only by him, Heb. xiii. 21, compared with 15, 16.

6 Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, 'Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.'

11. 28. 16.
Rom. 9. 33.

Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture: the Greek word being of an active form, makes great difference among expositors about these words; not to trouble the reader with variety, the plainest way of understanding them seems to be, either, 1. That God be understood here, and supplied out of the former verse. Wherefore God contains it in the Scripture: or, 2. That the word, though of an active termination, be yet taken in a passive signification, contains, for is contained; so our translators do, and this way of speaking is not unusual with other writers. Behold, I; I the Lord, not man, Psal. cxviii. 23. Lay in Sion; viz. by the preaching of the gospel, wherein Christ was declared to be the only foundation of the church, and whereby faith was wrought in the hearts of men, who were thereby actually built on Christ, as their foundation, and so the spiritual house, ver. 5, erected. Sion; either by synecdoche, Jerusalem. (whereof Sion was a part,) where by the preaching of Christ first, and the apostles after his ascension, and sending the Spirit, this foundation stone was first laid, and God's temple begun to be built, Psal. cx. 2; Isa. ii. 3; Micah iv. 2; Luke xxiv. 47. Or rather, Sion here is to be understood of the gospel church, whereof Sion was a type. A chief corner-stone; or, Head of the corner, Psal. cxviii. 22; that which both supports the building, and unites the parts; Christ being the foundation not of a part only, but of the whole church; all the parts of which, Gentile, as well as Jew, are jointly built on him, and upheld by him, Eph. ii. 20. Elect, precious: see ver. 5. And he that believeth on him shall not be confounded; shall not be disappointed of his expected salvation, and so shall have no cause to be ashamed of his hope. This is according to the LXX., the Hebrew hath it, shall not make haste, i. e. he that believes in Christ shall not through haste, or distrust, or unwillingness to wait God's time and way, seek after any other way of salvation than by Christ; and so (as before) not being disappointed, shall have no cause to be ashamed; whereas they that do not believe, but make haste, coming short of their expectation, are at last filled with confusion. See the places in the margin.

7 Unto you therefore which believe he is || precious: but unto them which <sup>10</sup> are disobedient, <sup>11</sup> the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner,

10 Or,
an honour.
11 Ps. 118. 22.
Mat. 21. 42.
Acta 4. 11.

Precious; the margin reads it, according to the Greek, an honour; either the abstract is put for the concrete, an honour, for honourable, or precious, (as the text hath it,) and then the sense is plain, that Christ, as he is precious in himself, and to his Father, so he is to them that believe. Or, honour may be put for the cause of honour, and then it is opposed to shame and confusion before mentioned, and the sense is, Ye that believe, shall be so far from being ashamed, or having your faith frustrated, that ye shall be honoured, and saved by Christ. And this agrees well with what follows in this and ver. 8. Disobedient; unbelievers, who were disobedient to the great command of the gospel concerning faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The builders; the high priests, scribes, Pharisees, and rulers of the Jews, whose duty it was to build up the church, as having not only the name, but the power then residing in them. Disal- loved; rejected him, and would not acknowledge him for the promised Messiah, and the great foundation upon which the church of God was to be built. The same is made the head of the corner: Quest. How is Christ to be made the Head of the corner to them that reject him? Ans. Either, 1. Something is here to be understood, viz. this is said, or spoken, which follows, the stone which the builders, &c.: q. d. They despised him, but God hath honoured him; they would allow him no place in the building, but God hath given him the best, made him the Head-stone of the corner. Or, 2. Christ may be said to be made to the disobedient, in spite of their rejecting and opposing him, the Head of the corner; i. e. a King and a Judge to restrain and curb them in, seeing they would not be ruled by him.

8 <sup>1</sup> And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, <sup>2</sup> even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: <sup>3</sup> whereunto also they were appointed.

*And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence; i. e. a stone at which they stumble, a rock at which they are offended; and so it implies Christ not to be the cause of their stumbling, but the object of it; of their own accord, and through the pravity of their nature, without any just occasion given by him, being offended, either because they find not that in him which they expected, viz. outward encouragements; or find that in him which they do not like, the holiness of his law, and purity of his doctrine, contrary to their corruptions and lusts, and especially his requiring of them faith in him for the justification of their persons, which was so contrary to the pride of their hearts, and which was one great reason of the Jews stumbling at him, as seeking to establish their own righteousness, and therefore not submitting to the righteousness of God, Rom. ix. 32, 33, compared with x. 3. This stumbling includes not only their falling into sin, but into destruction too, the punishment of sin, Isa. viii. 14, 15; whereof Christ can be no more than the inculpable occasion, but their own unbelief the proper cause. Which stumble at the word, being disobedient; these words may have a double reading: one according to our translation; and then the sense is, that stumble at the word of the gospel, i. e. are disobedient to it, in rejecting Christ therein offered to them: or, that stumble, being disobedient to the word; i. e. stumble at Christ preached to them in the word, and therefore will not obey it; they show that they are offended at Christ, by their not receiving his doctrine, nor accepting his offers. Whereunto also they were appointed; either this may refer, 1. To ver. 6, where Christ is said to be laid (the same word in the Greek with that which is here translated by appointed) in Sion, as a chief corner-stone, elect and precious, on whom whosoever believeth, shall not be confounded. The apostle then adds, that even these unbelievers were appointed (viz. in their external vocation, as being taken into covenant with God) to be built on Christ by faith, but they stumbled, by their unbelief, at the word of the gospel, and consequently at this stumbling-stone. And then it is a high aggravating the unbelief of the Jews, that they, being God's peculiar people, should reject that salvation which was sent to them, and to the first offer of which they were designed, Acts xiii. 26, 46, 47. Or, 2. To the words immediately going before, which stumble at the word, being disobedient; and then the sense is, (speaking concerning the reprobate Jews.) that God appointed them to this stumbling, in his decreeing not to give them faith in Christ, but to leave them to their unbelief, and to punish them justly for it: see Rom. ix. 17; 1 Thess. v. 9; Jude 4. The scope of the apostle in this whole verse seems to be, to keep weak Christians from being offended at the multitude of unbelievers, and especially at their seeing Christ rejected by the Jewish rulers and doctors; and this he doth by pointing them to the Scripture, where all this was long since foretold, and therefore not to be wondered at now, nor be any occasion of offence to them: see the like, John xvi. 1, 4.*

9 But ye are <sup>1</sup> a chosen generation, <sup>2</sup> a royal priesthood, <sup>3</sup> a holy nation, <sup>4</sup> a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the <sup>1</sup> praises of him who hath called you out of <sup>2</sup> darkness into his marvellous light:

But ye; ye believers, in opposition to those reprobates that are disobedient to the word. He shows that those dignities and privileges, which were mentioned by Moses as belonging to their forefathers, did much more belong to them; and that they had the real exhibition in Christ, of those good things whereof their fathers had but a taste, and which the rest of the Jews had lost by their unbelief. Are a chosen generation; a people chosen of God, not only out of the world, but from among the rest of your own nation, and not only to an external adoption, and outward privileges, (as the whole body of the nation was,) but to eternal salvation. A royal priesthood; or, kingdom of priests. He called them an holy priesthood, ver. 5, now he calls them a royal priesthood, to show that they were made not only spiritual priests, but spiritual kings; which privilege they had not as Jews, but as believers, who are all of them as priests in respect of God, to whom they are consecrated, and to whom they offer up spiritual sacrifices; so kings in respect both of their enemies, over whom they are victorious, and of the kingdom they are hereafter to inherit. An holy nation; Moses calls your fathers an holy people, Deut. vii. 6, in respect of their separation from the impurities of the Gentiles, their dedication to God, and the many laws God gave them, obliging them to external and ceremonial purity, whereby they were admonished of internal and real holiness; but ye are a holy nation in respect of that true and inward holiness itself, whereof that ceremonial holiness was but a signification. He seems particularly to allude to Isa. lxii. 12. A peculiar people: Exod. xix. 5, it is a peculiar treasure; so the same word is rendered, a special people, Deut. vii. 6, and, a peculiar people, Deut. xiv. 2; the word used by the LXX. implying as much; but Mal. iii. 17, where we render it jewels, the LXX. use the same word which Peter doth here, which is as much as, a people of acquisition, or which God hath acquired to himself for his peculiar possession or treasure. God had rescued the Israelites from their Egyptian bondage, and taken them to be his peculiar people above all others, and claimed a right to them, and counted them precious, as having redeemed them with a strong hand, and got possession of them at the expense of so much power, and so many miracles. This deliverance of theirs was the type of Christ's delivering the church from the tyranny of Satan, the spiritual Pharaoh, and the world, the spiritual Egypt, and a state of sin, the worst bondage; upon the account whereof, God's people are called a peculiar people, or a people thus acquired, Tit. ii. 14, and a purchased possession, Eph. i. 14, where the same word is likewise used. That ye should show forth, &c.: this notes the end of all these privileges vouchsafed them, viz. that they should glorify God in the enjoyment of them. He seems to refer to Isa. xliii. 7, 21, This people have I formed for myself, (or acquired, as the LXX. hath it,) they shall show forth my praise. Show forth; publish and declare, both in words and deeds, that others may be excited to glorify God in the like manner. The praises of him; or virtues, that wisdom, power, goodness, righteousness, truth, &c., which God hath manifested in his vouchsafements to you, and in the acknowledgment of which he may be glorified. Who hath called you; by an effectual calling, according to his purpose, Rom. viii. 28. Out of darkness; the darkness of ignorance, unbelief, sin, and misery. The time before the publication of the gospel, was a time of darkness, Matt. iv. 16; Luke i. 79. Into his marvellous light; the light of knowledge, faith, holiness, comfort: see Eph. v. 8. It is called marvellous, because men see what they never saw before, wonderful things out of God's law, Psal. cxix. 18; and because it is a marvellous thing, that they who sat in so gross darkness should be translated into so glorious a light.

10 <sup>1</sup> Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

Which in time past were not a people; either, were not a people, i. e. a formed state, or commonwealth, being dis-

11 Is. 8. 14.
1 Luke 2. 34.
Rom. 9. 32.
1 Cor. 1. 23.
p. Ex. 9. 16.
Rom. 9. 27.
1 Thes. 5. 9.
Jude 4.

1 Or, servants.
2 Acts 26.
3 Eph. 2.
4 Col. 1. 12.
1 Thess. 2. 4, 5.

x Hos. 1. 9.
11 & 2. 21.
Rom. 9. 25.

q. Deut. 10. 14.
ch. 1. 2.
r. Ex. 19. 5.
g. Rev. 1. 4.
& 5. 10.
s. John 17. 18.
1 Cor. 2. 17. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Deut. 4. 20. & 7. 6. & 14. 2. & 24. 15, 18. Acts 20. 28. Eph. 1. 14. Tit. 2. 14. | Or, a purchased people.

persed in several countries, among other people, and not worth the name of a people: or, were not the people of God, (supplying God out of the opposite clause,) since he had given them a bill of divorce, and said Lo-ammi and Lo-ruhamah to them, Hos. i. These were the Jews of the dispersion, and such as had not returned out of the Babylonish captivity, together with many of other tribes mixed with them, who, before their conversion to Christ, seemed cut off from the body of that people, had no solemn worship of God among them, and were tainted with the corruptions of the heathen, with whom they conversed. But are now the people of God; really God's people, restored to their old covenant state and church privileges, by their believing in Christ. Which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy; the mercy of being God's people, and enjoying their privileges, being justified, at peace with God, &c. Lest they might any way abuse what he had said in the former verse concerning their great dignity and privileges, so as to ascribe any thing to themselves, the apostle intimates here, that all they enjoyed was merely out of God's mercy.

11 Dearly beloved, I beseech you <sup>7</sup> as strangers and pilgrims, <sup>8</sup> abstain from fleshly lusts, <sup>9</sup> which war against the soul;

Strangers and pilgrims; not only strangers in the several countries where ye inhabit, (being out of your own land,) but strangers in the world, as all believers are, 1 Chron. xxix. 15; Psal. xxxix. 12; cxix. 19; Heb. xi. 13, 14. Abstain from fleshly lusts; not only sensual desires, but all the works of the flesh, Gal. v. 19—21, the carnal mind itself being enmity against God, Rom. viii. 7. Which war; as enemies, oppose and fight against, Rom. vii. 23; James iv. 1. Against the soul; the inner man, or regenerate part, or Spirit, which is opposed to fleshly lusts: see Gal. v. 17.

12 <sup>b</sup> Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, <sup>c</sup> whereas they speak against you as evildoers, <sup>d</sup> they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God <sup>e</sup> in the day of visitation.

Having your conversation honest; irreprehensible, fruitful, such as may gain men's love, and commend the religion you profess. Among the Gentiles; who, by reason of their differing from your religion, are the more likely to observe you. This proves this Epistle to be written to the Jews. They may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God; not only think more favourably of you, but of your religion; acknowledge the grace of God in you, and more readily subject themselves to him, (the best way of glorifying him,) it being usual with God to make way for the conversion of sinners by the holy conversation of saints. In the day of visitation; viz. a gracious visitation, when God calls them by the gospel to the knowledge of Christ, Luke i. 68, 78; vii. 16; xix. 44.

13 <sup>e</sup> Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

Every ordinance; of all kinds, whether supreme or subordinate. Ordinance of man; Greek, human creatures, which may be understood either, as Mark xvi. 15, every human creature for every man, only restraining it to the present subject whereof he treats, viz. magistrates, and the sense is, to every magistrate: or rather, (though to the same effect,) to every human ordinance; or, as we translate it, ordinance of man; the word creature being taken for an ordinance, or constitution, and creating for ordaining, or appointing: so Œcumenius will have the word to signify, Eph. ii. 15, to make of twain one new man. But this creature, or ordinance, here is to be understood of the magistrate, (as appears by the following words,) which is called human, not as if magistracy were not an ordinance of God, (for, Rom. xiii. 1, the powers that are are said to be ordained of God;) but either because it is only among men, and proper to them; or because it is of man secondarily and instrumentally, though of God primarily and originally, God making use of the ministry of men in bringing them into the magistracy; as, though church offices are God's ordinance, yet he makes use of men to put them into office. For the Lord's sake; for God's sake, who commands this obedience, and gave them the authority, and is represented by them, and honoured by that obedience which is yielded to them in all things agreeable to his will. The phrase seems to be of the same import with that of being obedient in the Lord, Eph. vi. 1. To the king; to Caesar, the then supreme magistrate, under whose jurisdiction the Jewish Christians were; and this being a general command extending to all Christians, it follows, that obedience is due from them to those chief magistrates whose subjects respectively they are. As supreme; not only above the people, but above other magistrates.

14 Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him <sup>f</sup> for the punishment <sup>g</sup> of evildoers, and <sup>h</sup> for the praise of them that do well.

Or unto governors; he seems immediately to intend the governors of provinces under the Roman emperors, such as Pilate, Felix, Festus were in Judea, Sergius Paulus in Cyprus, Acts xiii. 7; and other places; see Luke iii. 1; but so as to imply, under the name of governors, all inferior magistrates, as under the name of king he doth all supreme. As unto them that are sent by him; either, 1. By the king, or supreme magistrate, and then the next words show what should be his end in sending, or appointing officers, or subordinate rulers under him: or rather, 2. Sent by God, from whom all rulers, subordinate as well as supreme, have their authority, and which is the great motive on which they are to be obeyed; and then the following words show what is God's end in appointing them, and another reason for yielding obedience to them, viz. their being set up for the common good of the societies which they rule. For the praise of them that do well: praise is a kind of reward, and is here to be taken by a synecdoche for all sorts of rewards given to those that do well, and are obedient to the laws: see Rom. xiii. 3, 4.

15 For so is the will of God, that <sup>i</sup> with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

For so is the will of God; his command. That with well-doing; all manner of offices of humanity, whereof obedience to magistrates is a principal one. Ye may put to silence; Greek, muzzle, stop the mouths, Tit. i. 11; viz. by taking away all occasion of evil-speaking. The ignorance; either their ignorance of the state and conversation of believers, which may be the occasion of their speaking evil of them; or their ignorance of God and his ways, to which Christ imputes the fury of persecutors, John xvi. 3. They that know not God themselves, are most ready to reproach and slander those that do. Of foolish men; true wisdom consisting in the knowledge of God, they that are destitute of that knowledge, as unbelievers are, are called foolish.

16 <sup>i</sup> As free, and not <sup>j</sup> using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, but as <sup>k</sup> the servants of God.

As free; he prevents an objection; they might pretend they were a free people, as Jews, and therefore were not to obey strangers, Deut. xvii. 15; John viii. 33; and made free by Christ. He answers, That they were free indeed, but it was from sin, and not from righteousness, not from obedience to God's law, which requires subjection to magistrates, for they were still the servants of God. And not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness; not using your liberty to cover or palliate your wickedness, excusing yourselves from obedience to your superiors by a pretence of Christian liberty, when, though ye be free from sin, yet ye are not from duty. But as the servants of God; and so still bound to obey him, and your rulers in him.

17 <sup>l</sup> Honour all men. <sup>m</sup> Love the brotherhood. <sup>n</sup> Fear God. Honour the king.

Honour all men; viz. according as honour is due to them, according to their dignity, power, gifts, &c.: see Rom. xii. 10; xiii. 7; Phil. ii. 3. Love the brotherhood; though all

7 1 Chr. 29.
15. Ps. 39.
17. & 119. 19.
12. Heb. 11. 13.
ch. 1. 17.
8 Rom. 13.
14. Gal. 5. 16. a Jam. 4. 1.

b Rom. 12.
17. 2 Cor. 8.
21. Phil. 2.
15. Tit. 2. 8.
ch. 3. 16.
1 Or, sobrietas.
c Matt. 5. 16.
d Luke 19. 44.

e Mat. 22. 21.
Rom. 13. 1.
Tit. 3. 1.

h Tit. 2. 5.
ver. 1.

i Gal. 5. 13.
† Gr. hating.

k 1 Cor. 7. 22.

l Rom. 12.
10. Phil. 2. 3.
† Or, Esteem.
m Heb. 13. 1.
n Prov. 24. 21. Matt. 22. 21. Rom. 13. 7.

may challenge suitable respects, yet there is a more special affection owing to believers, chap. i. 22; Gal. vi. 10. Fear God; with a filial fear or reverence. This command is interposed, either to show what is the true spring and fountain from which all the duties we perform to men are to proceed, viz. the fear of God, because where that doth not prevail no duty to men can be rightly performed; (they love the brotherhood best, and honour the king most, that truly fear God;) or to show the due bounds of all the offices we perform to men, that nothing is to be done for them which is inconsistent with the fear of God. Honour the king; with that honour which is peculiarly due to him above all others.

18 ° Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

Servants; the word is not the same which Paul useth, Col. iii. 22, but may well comprehend the servants he speaks of, as implying not only slaves, but those that were made free, yet continued still in the family; and so signifies servants of whatsoever condition. Be subject to your masters with all fear; not only reverence of masters, and fear of offending them, is to be understood, but fear of God, as appears by the parallel place, Col. iii. 22: see Eph. vi. 5-7. Not only to the good and gentle; by good he means not gracious or holy, but, as the next word explains it, gentle, just, equal. But also to the froward; morose, crabbed, unjust, unmerciful.

19 For this is ¶ thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

For this is thank-worthy; in the Greek (as in the margin) the substantive is put for the adjective: the sense is either, this is acceptable to God, and will be graciously rewarded by him; or, this is praise-worthy, and will be your glory, as ver. 20. For conscience toward God; out of respect to God, and a desire of pleasing him.

20 For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

For what glory is it? what praise or glory do you get by it? or, what great matter do you do? This interrogation hath the force of a negation, but is to be understood comparatively; it is worthy of praise to suffer patiently, even when men suffer justly, but worthy of little in comparison of suffering patiently when unjustly. This is acceptable with God: this shows what is meant by thank-worthy, ver. 19; and the apostle adds what kind of thanks or praise he intends, viz. not that which is of man, (which many times may fail, even when men patiently suffer injuries,) but that which is of God, to which believers should especially have respect.

21 For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

For even hereunto; viz. to patient bearing of sufferings, even for well-doing. Were ye called; viz. to Christ and the fellowship of his kingdom; q. d. Your very calling and profession, as Christians, requires this of you. Also; there is an emphasis in this participle, it is as much as if he had said, Even Christ our Lord and Head hath suffered for us, and therefore we that are but his servants and members must not think to escape sufferings. For us; or, as in the margin, for you, which agrees with the beginning and end of the verse, where the second person is used; but most read it as we do, in the first person, and the sense is still the same; only the apostle from a general proposition draws a particular exhortation: Christ suffered for us, (therein he comprehends the saints to whom he writes,) and left an example for us all; do ye therefore to whom, as well as to others, he left this example, follow his steps, John xiii. 15; 1 John ii. 6. Leaving us an example, as of their graces, so especially of patience.

22 Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

i. e. There was no guile in his mouth; it is a Hebraism; to be found is the same as to be, and not to be found the same as not to be, Gen. ii. 20; Isa. xxxix. 2: see Rom. vii. 10. This signifies Christ's absolute perfection, in that he did not offend so much as with his mouth, James iii. 2. The sense is, Christ was free from all manner of sin, and yet he suffered patiently; and therefore will may ye be content to suffer too, though wrongfully; seeing, though ye may be innocent in your sufferings, yet you come so far short of Christ's perfection.

23 Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

By Christ's being reviled, we are to understand all those injurious words, reproaches, slanders, blasphemies, which his persecutors cast out against him. Reviled not again; therefore when he told the Jews they were of their father the devil, John viii. 44, that was not a reviling them, but a just accusation of them, or reproof of their devilish behaviour. When he suffered; when he was affected not only with verbal but real injuries, buffeted, spit upon, crowned with thorns, crucified. He threatened not; he was so far from avenging himself, or recompensing evil for evil, that he did not so much as threaten what he would afterward do to them. But committed himself; or his cause, as in the margin; neither is in the Greek, but either may be well supplied, and to the same purpose: the sense is, Christ did not retaliate, nor act any thing out of private revenge, but so referred himself, and the judgment of his cause, to his Father's good pleasure, as rather to desire pardon for his persecutors, than vengeance on them, Luke xxiii. 34. To him that judgeth righteously: the apostle adds this of God's judging righteously, for the comfort of servants to whom he speaks, as Eph. vi. 8, 9; Col. iii. 24; iv. 1, and for the terror of masters, that the former might learn patience, and the latter moderation.

24 Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.

Who his own self; not by offering any other sacrifice, (as the Levitical priests did,) but by that of himself. Bare our sins; or, took up, or lifted up, in allusion to the sacrifices of the Old Testament, the same word being used of them, Heb. vii. 27; James ii. 21. As the sins of the offerer were typically laid upon the sacrifice, which, being substituted in his place, was likewise slain in his stead; so Christ standing in our room, took upon him the guilt of our sins, and bare their punishment, Isa. liii. 4, &c. The Lord laid on him our iniquities, and he willingly took them up; and by bearing their curse, took away our guilt. Or, it may have respect to the cross, on which Christ being lifted up, (John iii. 14, 15; xii. 32,) took up our sins with him, and expiated their guilt by undergoing that death which was due to us for them. In his own body; this doth not exclude his soul, but is rather to be understood, by a synecdoche, of his whole human nature, and we have the sufferings of his soul mentioned, Isa. liii. 10, 12; John xii. 27; but mention is made of his body, because the sufferings of that were most visible. On the tree; on the cross. That we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; another end of Christ's death, the mortification of sin, and our being freed from the dominion of it, Rom. vi. 2, 6, and being reformed to a life of holiness. By whose stripes ye were healed; viz. of the wound made in your souls by sin: this seems to relate to the blows that servants might receive of cruel masters, against which the apostle comforts them, and to the patient bearing of which he exhorts them, because Christ by bearing stripes, (a servile punishment,) under which may be comprehended all the sufferings of his death, had healed them of much worse wounds, and spiritual diseases, the guilt of their consciences, and the defilement of their souls.

o Eph. 6. 5.
Col. 3. 22.
1 Tim. 6. 1.
Tit. 2. 9.

¶ Or, thank.
Luke 6. 32.
ver. 20.
p Mat. 5. 10.
Rom. 13. 5.
ch. 2. 14.

q ch. 3. 14.
4. 14, 15.

¶ Or, thank.

r Mat. 16. 24.
Acta 14. 22.
1 Thess. 3. 3.
2 Tim. 3. 12.
e ch. 3. 18.
Some read,
1 John 13. 15.
Phil. 2. 5. 1 John 2. 6.

u Is. 53. 9.
Luke 23. 41.
John 8. 46.

2 Cor. 5. 21. Heb. 4. 14.

x Is. 53. 7.
Matt. 27. 29.
John 8. 46.
Heb. 12. 3.
y Luke 23. 34.

¶ Or, committed his cause.

z Is. 53. 4, 5, 6, 11.
Matt. 8. 17.
Heb. 9. 28.
¶ Or, for.
a Rom. 6. 2, 11, & 7. 5.
b Is. 54. 6.

e 1a. 33. 6.
Ezek. 34. 4.
d Ezek. 34.
23. & 37. 24.
John 10. 11.
14. 16. Heb.
13. 20. ch. 5. 4.

25 For ye were as sheep going astray ; but are now returned <sup>d</sup> unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

For ye were, while ye continued in your Judaism, and had not yet received the gospel, as sheep going astray, from Christ the great Shepherd, and the church of believers his flock, and the way of righteousness in which he leads them. Ye were alienated from the life of God, bewildered and lost in the way of sin, Isa. liii. 6. But are now returned, in your conversion to the faith, to the Shepherd ; Christ the good Shepherd, Johu x., that takes care of souls, as a shepherd doth of his sheep. And Bishop of your souls ; superintendent, inspector, or, as the Hebrews phrase it, visitor, i. e. he that with care looks to, inspects, and visits the flock. This he adds for the comfort (as of all believers, so) particularly of servants, that even they, as mean as they were, and as much exposed to injuries, yet were under the care and tuition of Christ.

CHAP. III

The apostle teacheth the duty of wives and husbands, 1—7 ; exhorting all men to unity and love, and to return good for evil, 8—13 : to suffer boldly for righteousness' sake, and to give a reason of their hope with meekness and fear ; taking especial care to suffer, as Christ did, for well-doing, and not for evil-doing, 14—18. The preaching of Christ by his Spirit to the old world, 19, 20. After what manner Christian baptism saveth us, 21, 22.

1 Cor. 14. 34. Eph. 5. 21. Col. 3. 18. Tit. 2. 5. 1 Cor. 7. 16. Matt. 18. 15. 1 Cor. 9. 19.—22.

LIKewise, <sup>a</sup> ye wives, <sup>b</sup> be in subjection to your own husbands ; that, if any obey not the word, <sup>b</sup> they also may without the word <sup>c</sup> be won by the conversation of the wives ;

To your own husbands ; this he adds both to mitigate the difficulty of the duty, subjection, in that they were their own husbands to whom they were to be subject, and likewise to bound and circumscribe their obedience, that it was to be only to their own husbands, not to others ; and so while he persuades them to subjection, he cautions them against unchastity. That if any obey not the word ; the word of the gospel. He exhorts not only them that had believing husbands, but unbelieving ones, to be in subjection to them. They also may without the word : not that they could be converted to Christ without the knowledge of the word, when faith cometh by hearing, Rom. x. 17, but that they who either would not endure their wives' instructing them, or who had before rejected the word, yet, by seeing the effects and fruits of it in their wives, might be brought to have good thoughts of it, and thereby be the more prepared for the hearing of it, whereby faith might be wrought in them. Be won ; or gained, viz. to Christ and his church : the same metaphor Paul useth, 1 Cor. ix. 19—21 ; Phil. iii. 8.

d ch. 2. 12. 2 While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

Chaste conversation ; free from all manner of impurities, and any thing contrary to the marriage covenant. Coupled with fear ; such a fear or reverence of your husbands, whereby out of the fear of God, and conscience of his command, you give them all due respect, and do not willingly displease them. See Eph. v. ; subjection is required, ver. 22, and fear, ver. 33.

e 1 Tim. 2. 9. Tit. 2. 3, &c. 3 Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel ;

Let it not be ; let it not be chiefly, or not so much the adorning of the outward man as the inward ; the negative here is to be taken as a comparative, as Exod. xvi. 8 ; Luke xiv. 12. The apostle doth not absolutely condemn all kind of ornaments, or rich attire, which we find used sometimes by the godly themselves in the Scripture, Gen. xxiv. 22, 30 ; Esth. v. 1 ; compared with Psal. xiv. 9, 13, where the spiritual ornaments of Christ's spouse are set forth by terms taken from the external ornaments of Solomon's wife ; and Ezek. xvi. 12, these things are spoken of as God's gifts. But he taxeth all vanity, levity, immoderate sumptuousness or luxury in apparel, and bodily ornaments in women, (or men.) whatsoever is above their place and condition in the world, or above their estate and ability ; such as proceeds from any lust, (pride, wantonness, &c.) or tends to the provoking or cherishing any, or is accompanied with the neglecting or slighting of inward beauty and spiritual ornaments.

4 But let it be 'the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

The hidden man of the heart ; the inward man, Rom. vii. 22 ; 2 Cor. iv. 16 ; either the soul in opposition to the body, or the image of God, and graces of his Spirit in the soul, called elsewhere the new man, and opposed to natural corruption, or the old man, Eph. iv. 24 ; Col. iii. 9, 10. In that which is not corruptible : this relates to what follows, the ornament of a meek, &c., and is opposed to those external ornaments before mentioned, which are of a fading, perishing nature, whereas this is constant and durable ; and therefore women who are more apt to be overmuch pleased with external dresses, and bodily ornaments, are exhorted rather to enrich and beautify their souls with Divine graces, than their bodies with gaudy clothes. Even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit : this notes the particular grace or graces (parts of the new man) in which the spiritual beauty and adorning of women's souls consists ; and either these two words, meek and quiet, are but indifferent expressions of the same grace ; or, by meekness may be meant gentleness, easiness and sweetness of spirit, in opposition to moroseness, frowardness, pride, passion, &c. ; and by quietness, a peaceable, still, modest temper, in opposition to pragmatcalness, talkativeness, clamorousness. These two usually go in conjunction together, and the latter is the effect of the former : see 1 Tim. ii. 9—12. Which : either this refers to spirit, or to the whole sentence, the ornament of a meek, &c., but the sense is still the same. Is in the sight of God ; who can best judge, (as looking to the inner man, which is not obvious to the eyes of others,) and whose judgment is most to be valued : here God's judgment is opposed to the judgment of vain women, who think to commend themselves to others by outward bravery, and of a vain world, which esteems such things. Of great price : the excellency of grace and spiritual ornaments is set in opposition to gold and costly apparel : q. d. If women will be fine that they may appear beautiful, let them choose the best ornaments, those of the mind and heart, a meek and quiet spirit, which are precious in the sight of God himself, rather than these external ones, which serve only to draw men's eyes toward them.

5 For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands :

Holy women ; and therefore worthy of imitation. Who trusted in God ; whose only hope was in God, and therefore their care to please him. Adorned themselves ; viz. with a meek and quiet spirit, counting that the best ornament.

6 Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, <sup>e</sup> calling him lord : whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

Even as Sara ; after her name was changed from Sarai, my lady, to Sarah, simply a lady or princess, because kings were to come of her, Gen. xvii. 15, 16 : yet even then she obeyed Abraham ; and this is spoken in commendation of her obedience. Calling him lord ; not merely in compliment, but in reality, hereby acknowledging his authority and her own subjection. Whose daughters ye are ; not only according to the flesh, but spiritually, according to the promise. Ye are ; either ye are made or become, viz. by imitation of her faith and holiness, as well as ye are by kindred and succession ; or, ye are declared and known to be, as the phrase is elsewhere used, John xv. 8. As long as ye do well; follow her in good works, 1 Tim. ii. 10. And are not afraid with any amazement; or, afraid of any amazement, any thing frightful, or which might terrify you, taking amazement for the object or cause of fear, as ver. 14; Psal. liii. 5; Prov. iii. 25; and the sense may be, either, so long as ye perform your duty with a resolute mind, and keep from that which is contrary to your faith; or, as long as you subject yourselves to your husbands willingly, cheerfully, and without slavish fear of being losers by your obedience, and faring the worse for your patience and submission.

7<sup>h</sup> Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, <sup>1</sup>as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; <sup>2</sup>that your prayers be not hindered.

Dwell with them; perform all matrimonial duties to them; by a synecdoche, all the duties of that relation are contained under this one of cohabitation. According to knowledge; either, according to that knowledge of the Divine will, which by the gospel ye have obtained; or, prudently and wisely, and as becomes those that understand their duty. Giving honour unto the wife; not despising them because of their weakness, or using them as slaves, but respecting them, caring for them, (as Matt. xv. 6; 1 Tim. v. 3.) using them gently, covering their infirmities. As unto the weaker vessel; weaker than the husbands, and that both in body and mind, as women usually are. In Scripture any instrument is called a vessel, and the wife is here called so, as being not only an ornament, but a help to the husband and family, Gen. ii. 18. This he adds as a reason why the husband should give honour to the wife, viz. her being the weaker vessel; weak vessels must be gently handled; the infirmities of children bespeak their pardon when they offend; and those members of the body which we think less honourable, on them we bestow more abundant honour, 1 Cor. xii. 23. It is a part of that prudence according to which men should dwell with their wives, to have the more regard to them because of their infirmities, (in bearing with them and hiding them.) lest they should be discouraged, if they find their weakness makes them contemptible. And as being heirs together; another reason why husbands should give honour to their wives, viz. because though by nature they are weak and unequal to their husbands, yet they are equal to them in respect of their being called to the same grace and glory, there being neither male nor female in Christ, Gal. iii. 28. Of the grace of life; i. e. eternal life, which is the gift of grace; or, is to be given out of grace. That your prayers be not hindered; either, that ye be not diverted and hindered from praying; or, that the efficacy of your prayers be not hindered, viz. by those contentions and differences which are like to arise, if you do not dwell with your own wives according to knowledge, and give them the honour that belongs to them.

8 Finally, <sup>1</sup>be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, <sup>2</sup>love as brethren, <sup>3</sup>be pitiful, be courteous:

Be ye all of one mind; either, be of one mind in the things of faith, and then this implies the consent of the understanding, and the next, that of the affections; or, be united both in faith and affection: see Rom. xii. 16; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Phil. iv. 2. Having compassion one of another: mutually affected with each other's good or evil, Rom. xii. 15; Heb. x. 34; xiii. 3. This he joins with the other as the consequent of it; they that are united in faith and love are of the same body; and where one member suffers, the rest suffer, 1 Cor. xii. 26. Love as brethren; viz. in Christ: see chap. ii. 17. Be pitiful; ready to show mercy, of a merciful disposition, Eph. iv. 32; Col. iii. 12. Be courteous; kind, affable, humane, of a sweet conversation, in opposition to sourness and moroseness: the same word is used, Acts xxvii. 3.

9 Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, <sup>2</sup>that ye should inherit a blessing.

Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; not recompensing evil either in words or deeds, Prov. xxiv. 29; see on chap. ii. 3, of this Epistle; Rom. xii. 14, 17, 19, 21. But contrariwise blessing; praying for, and, as ye can, doing good to, those that do evil to you, or speak evil of you, Matt. v. 39, 44; Luke xvi. 27, 28. Knowing that ye are thereunto called; either, 1. To bless those that do evil to you, that so by patient bearing of injuries, forbearing private revenge, &c., ye might obtain a blessing. Or, 2. Ye are called hereunto, viz. to inherit a blessing. Called; in your conversion to the faith of Christ. That ye should inherit a blessing: this either shows how believers came to partake of the blessing, viz. by way of inheritance; or it implies the perpetuity of it, that, whereas they can exercise their patience in suffering injuries but a little while, their recompense shall be for ever. A blessing; either, 1. Eternal life, as the greatest blessing; or, 2. The good things of both lives, temporal, spiritual, and eternal mercies, which are all promised to the godly, 1 Tim. iv. 8, and which they have by right of inheritance, Psal. xxxvii. 11; Matt. v. 5: and this seems to agree with ver. 10—12.

10 For <sup>1</sup>he that will love life, and see good days, <sup>2</sup>let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile:

He that will love life; he that earnestly desires to lead a quiet and comfortable life here, and to enjoy eternal life hereafter. And see good days; peaceable and prosperous; as evil days are such as are grievous and calamitous, Gen. xlvii. 9. Let him refrain his tongue from evil: from evil-speaking, railing, reviling, open detraction. And his lips that they speak no guile; tell no lies of his neighbour: or, this may imply whispering, backbiting, or any way secretly and closely speaking evil of him. Under these two, all the vices of the tongue, whereby our neighbour may be wronged, are contained, and the contrary virtues commanded, under the name of blessing.

11 Let him <sup>1</sup>eschew evil, and do good; <sup>2</sup>let him seek peace, and ensue it.

Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him not only in general avoid all sin, and exercise himself in all well-doing, (as the prophet's meaning, cited in the margin, seems to be,) but particularly, let him avoid all sin against his neighbour, not recompensing evil to him, and doing him all the good he can, and overcoming evil with good; and to this the apostle accommodates the prophet's words. Let him seek peace; not only with God and his own conscience, but with his neighbours, which is here especially meant. And ensue it: either seeking and ensuing signify the same thing, viz. an earnest desire of peace, and use of all lawful means to obtain it; or, ensuing it may signify the difficulty of obtaining it; when we seek it, it may seem to fly from us, men may not let us have peace when we would have peace, Psal. cxx. 7, and therefore we must follow it, Heb. xii. 14.

12 For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is †against them that do evil.

For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; God watcheth over them, looks favourably on them, and hears their prayers: see Psal. xxxiv. 15. This he lays down as a motive to patience under injuries, and to keep us from tumultuating passions, and desires of revenge; that God sees all we suffer, hath a care of us, and is ready to hear, and in due time to help us. But the face of the Lord is against them that do evil; his anger, or indignation; face being here taken not for God's favour, (as many times it is,) but in the contrary sense, as Lev. xvii. 10; xx. 5; Psal. lxxviii. 1, 2. Men show by their countenances whether they be angry or pleased; and hence it is that God's face is sometimes taken for his favour, sometimes for his displeasure. A further argument to persuade us to patience, that God undertakes to plead our cause against our enemies, and avenge us on them; whereas if we think to secure ourselves against them by undue means, we make God an enemy to us.

h 1 Cor. 7. 2.
Eph. 5. 25.
Col. 3. 19.
11 Cor. 12.
23. 1 Thess.
4. 4.
1. See
John 42. 8.
Matt. A. 25.
24. & 18. 13.

1 Rom. 12.
10. & 12. 5.
Phil. 2. 16.
10 Rom. 12.
10. Heb. 12.
1. ch. 2. 17.
h Or, loving to the brethren. n Col. 3. 12. Eph. 4. 32.

o Prov. 17.
18. & 20. 22.
Matt. A. 38.
Rom. 12. 16.
17. 1 Cor. 4.
12. 1 Thess.
5. 15.
p Mat. 26. 24.

q Ps. 34. 13.
r Jam. 1. 26.
ch. 2. 1. 22.
Rev. 16. 5.

s Ps. 37. 27.
Isa. 1. 16. 17.
3 John 11.
t Rom. 12.
18 & 14. 19. Heb. 12. 14.

n John 9. 31.
Jam. 5. 16.

+ Gr. upon.

<sup>1</sup> Prov. 16. 7. 13 * And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

And who is he that will harm you? i. e. none or few will harm you, as being convinced and overcome by your good deeds, whereby even they are many times mollified and melted that are of themselves most wicked and hard-hearted, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16, 17. If ye be followers of that which is good; either followers of God, who doth good to the evil and unkind; but then it should be rendered, followers of him who is good, or rather, followers of those things that are good: q. d. If you be diligent in doing good to others, none will have the heart to do you hurt.

<sup>7</sup> Matt. 5. 10. 14 <sup>11, 12</sup> ch. 2. <sup>19, & 4. 14.</sup> <sup>Jam. 1. 12.</sup> <sup>13. Jer. 1. 8.</sup> <sup>John 14. 1, 27.</sup> But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and * be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;

But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake; if ye suffer unjustly, whether it be for the true profession of the gospel, or in the exercise of righteousness, being followers of that which is good, and walking in the practice of the duties before mentioned. Happy are ye; both in the spiritual benefit you gain by sufferings, viz. your edification in faith, patience, humility, &c.; the glory which redounds to God, who supports you under and carries you through them; and the reward you yourselves expect after them, Matt. v. 10, &c. And be not afraid of their terror; either be not afraid after the manner of carnal men, (as the prophet's meaning is, Isa. viii.) or rather, (the apostle accommodating the words of the prophet to his present purpose.) be not afraid of those formidable things wherewith they threaten you; or, be not afraid of themselves and their threatenings, whereby they would strike terror into you: and so here is a metonymy in the words; fear, the effect, being put for the cause; thus fear is taken, Psal. lxxiv. 1; xci. 5; Prov. i. 26. Neither be troubled; viz. inordinately, with such a fear as is contrary to faith, and hinders you from doing your duty, John xiv. 1.

15 But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and * be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and || fear:

But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; exalt him in your hearts, and give him the honour of all his glorious perfections, power, wisdom, goodness, faithfulness, &c., by believing them, and depending upon his promises for defence and assistance against all the evils your enemies may threaten you with. And be ready always; prepared to answer when duly called to it. To give an answer; or, to make an apology or defence, viz. of the faith ye profess; the word is used, Acts xxiii. 1; 1 Cor. ix. 3. To every man that asketh you; either that hath authority to examine you, and take an account of your religion; or, that asks with modesty, and a desire to be satisfied, and learn of you. A reason of the hope that is in you; i. e. faith, for which hope is frequently used in Scripture, which is built upon faith: the sense is, Whereas unbelievers, your persecutors especially, may scoff at your hope of future glory, as vain and groundless, and at yourselves, as mad or foolish, for venturing the loss of all in this world, and exposing yourselves to so many sufferings, in expectation of ye know not what uncertainties in the other; do ye therefore be always ready to defend and justify your faith against all objectors, and to show how reasonable your hope of salvation is, and on how sure a foundation it is built. With meekness and fear; either with meekness in relation to men, in opposition to passion and intemperate zeal, (your confession of the faith must be with courage, but yet with a spirit of meekness and modesty,) and fear or reverence in relation to God, which, where it prevails, overcomes the fierceness of men's spirits, and makes them speak modestly of the things of God, and give due respect to men; or, fear may be set in opposition to pride, and presumption of a man's own wisdom or strength; q. d. Make confession of your faith humbly, with fear and trembling, not in confidence of your own strength, or gifts, or abilities.

<sup>b</sup> Heb. 13. 16. <sup>c</sup> Tit. 2. 8. 16 <sup>b</sup> Having a good conscience; * that,

whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

Having a good conscience; this may be read either, 1. Indicatively, and joined (as by some it is) to the former verse; and then the sense is, If ye be always ready to answer every one that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, ye shall have a good conscience: or rather, 2. Imperatively (which our translation favours); q. d. Not only be ready to make confession of your faith, but let your life and practice be correspondent to it, in keeping yourselves pure from sin, and exercising yourselves unto godliness, from whence a good conscience proceeds; here therefore the effect is put for the cause, a good conscience for a good life, Acts xxiii. 1. That whereas they speak evil of you, &c.; the sense is, that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil-doers, your good conversation may bear witness for you, confute their calumnies, and make them ashamed, when it appears that their accusations are false, and that they have nothing to charge upon you but your being followers of Christ. Your good conversation in Christ; i. e. that good conversation which ye lead as being in Christ; viz. according to his doctrine and example, and by the influence of his Spirit.

17 For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.

If the will of God be so; viz. that ye must suffer; intimating that this is an argument for their patience and submission in their sufferings, and a ground of comfort to them, that they are led into them by the providence of God, (not by their own folly or rashness,) and have him for a witness and judge both of their cause and department.

18 For Christ also hath <sup>d</sup> once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, * being put to death <sup>f</sup> in the flesh, but <sup>e</sup> quickened by the Spirit:

For Christ also hath once suffered; in opposition to the legal sacrifices which were offered from day to day, and from year to year, Heb. vii. 27; ix. 25; and x. 12: and this shows, as the perfection of Christ's sufferings, (in that they needed not be repeated,) so our conformity to him in deliverance from ours; that as Christ underwent death (the principal part of his sufferings) not often, but once only, and then his glory followed; so likewise, if in this life we suffer for righteousness' sake, according to Christ's example, there remains no more suffering for us, but we shall be glorified with him, 2 Tim. ii. 12. For sins; i. e. for the expiation of sin. This is another argument for patience under sufferings, that Christ by his sufferings hath taken away the guilt, and freed us from the punishment, of sin; so that our sufferings, though they may be not only by way of trial, but of correction, yet are not properly penal or vindictive. The just for the unjust; and therefore well may we, who are in ourselves unrighteous, be content to suffer, especially for his cause and truth. That he might bring us to God; i. e. reconcile us to God, and procure for us access to him with freedom and boldness, Rom. v. 2; Eph. iii. 12. Being put to death in the flesh; his human nature, frequently in Scripture called flesh, as chap. iv. 8; John i. 14; and though his soul, as being immortal, did not die, yet he suffered most grievous torments in it, and his body died by the real separation of his soul from it. But quickened by the Spirit; i. e. his own Godhead, John ii. 19; x. 17, 18. The former member of this sentence speaks of the subject of his death, his flesh, which was likewise the subject of his life in his resurrection; this latter speaks of the efficient cause of his life, his own eternal Spirit.

19 By which also he went and <sup>h</sup> preached unto the spirits <sup>i</sup> in prison;

By which also; by which Spirit, mentioned in the end of the former verse, i. e. by, or in, his Divine nature, the same by which he was quickened. He; Christ. This notes the person that went and preached, as the former doth the nature in which, and so shows that what is here spoken of the person of Christ, is to be understood of him according to his Divine nature. Went; or, came, viz.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 1. 12.
<sup>i</sup> 4. 6.

<sup>1</sup> Heb. 4. 7. &
49. 9. & 61. 1.

<sup>d</sup> Rom. 5. 6.
Heb. 9. 26.
28. ch. 2. 31.
& 4. 1.

<sup>e</sup> 2 Cor. 13. 4.

<sup>f</sup> Col. 1. 21,
22.

<sup>g</sup> Rom. 1. 4.
& 8. 11.

a Pa. 119. 46.
Acts 4. 8.
Col. 4. 6.
2 Tim. 2. 25.

|| Or,
reverence.

from heaven, by an anthropopathy, by which figure God is often in Scripture said to go forth, Isa. xxvi. 21, to come down, Micah i. 3, and go down, Gen. xviii. 21; Exod. iii. 8; which two latter places are best understood of the Second Person. This therefore here notes in Christ not a change of place, but a special operation, and testification of his presence. And preached; viz. by Noah, inspired by him, that he might be a preacher of righteousness, to warn a wicked generation of approaching judgment, and exhort them to repentance. Unto the spirits; souls of men departed, which are frequently called spirits, Eccles. xii. 7; Acts vii. 59; Heb. xii. 23. In prison; i. e. in hell, so it is taken, Prov. xxvii. 20; compare with Matt. v. 25; Luke xii. 58, where prison is mentioned as a type or representation of hell; and the Syriac renders the word by Sheol, which signifies sometimes the grave and sometimes hell. See the like expression, 2 Pet. ii. 4, 5; Jude 6.

20 Which sometime were disobedient, <sup>k</sup> when once the longsuffering of God <sup>l</sup> waited in the days of Noah, while <sup>m</sup> the ark was a preparing, <sup>n</sup> wherein few, that <sup>o</sup> is, eight souls were saved by water.

Which; which spirits in prison. Quest. When were these spirits, to whom Christ preached by Noah, in prison? Ans. Then when Peter wrote this Epistle. The Greek participle of the present tense is here to be supplied, and the word thus read, preached to the spirits which are in prison, viz. now at this time; and so the time of their being in prison is opposed to the time of their being disobedient; their disobedience going before their imprisonment; q. d. They were disobedient then, they are in prison now. Sometime; viz. in the days of Noah, when they were upon earth. Were disobedient; would not believe what Noah told them in God's name, nor be brought to repentance by his preaching. When once; not always, but for a determinate time, viz. one hundred and twenty years; which term being expired, there was no hope left for them that they should be spared. The long-suffering of God; i. e. God in his patience and long-suffering. Waited; for the repentance and reformation of that rebellious generation. In the days of Noah; till the one hundred and twenty years were run out, and the ark, which was preparing for the security of him and his family, were finished. Eight souls; i. e. eight persons, Noah, and his wife, his three sons, and their wives. Were saved by water; either, 1. By water is here put for in, as Rom. iv. 11, that believe, though they be not circumcised: the same Greek preposition is used as here, and the words may be read, by, or through, or rather in uncircumcision; for uncircumcision was not the cause or means of their believing. See the like use of this particle, 2 Pet. iii. 5. Thus, saved in the water, is as much as, notwithstanding the water, or the water not hindering; so 1 Tim. ii. 15, saved in childbearing, where the same preposition is used. Or, 2. By water; the water which drowned the world, lifting up the ark and saving Noah and his household. Quest. Doth not this place countenance the papists' limbus, or the place where the souls of the Old Testament fathers were reserved (as they pretend) till Christ's coming in the flesh? Ans. No: for, 1. The spirits here mentioned were disobedient, which cannot be said of the fathers of the Old Testament, who were true believers. 2. The spirits here mentioned are not said to be delivered out of prison, but only that Christ by his Spirit preached to them, and to his preaching to them their disobedience is opposed. 3. According to the papists, Noah and his family must be in their limbus, whereas they are opposed to those disobedient spirits to whom Christ is said to preach.

21 <sup>a</sup> The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, <sup>b</sup> but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) <sup>c</sup> by the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

The like figure; Greek, the antitype. Twice this word occurs in Scripture; once Heb. ix. 24, where it signifies simply a type, or exemplar, or representation; and here, where it implies either the likeness or correspondence of one type with another in signifying the same thing: so that here may be two types, the deliverance of Noah and his household in the flood, and baptism, whereof the former was a type of the latter, yet so as both represent the salvation of the church; in that as the waters of the flood lifting up the ark, and saving Noah's family shut up in it, signified the salvation of the church; so likewise baptism signifies the salvation of those that are in the church (as in an ark) from that common destruction which involves the rest of the world: or, it signifies the truth itself, as answering the type or figure; and thus the temporal salvation of Noah, &c. from the flood, in the ark, was the type, and the eternal salvation of believers by baptism is the antitype, or truth figured by it. Our translation seems to favour the former. Whereunto; i. e. the saving eight persons by water; q. d. The salvation of believers now by baptism, answers to the deliverance of Noah then; and so this relative, whereunto, answers to the foregoing sentence, as its antecedent. Even baptism doth also now save us; viz. with an eternal salvation, in answer to the temporal deliverance of Noah by water; and that not only as it is a sign, but a seal whereby the Spirit of God confirms in the hearts of believers the faith of their justification purchased by Christ's death, and witnessed by his resurrection, Rom. iv. 25. Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh; not merely the washing of the body with water, or the external part of baptism, which can of itself have no further effect than other bodily washings have, viz. to cleanse the flesh. And so he answers an objection which might be made, How baptism can be said to save us, when so many perish who are baptized, by declaring, as follows, what it is in baptism which is so effectual. But the answer of a good conscience: the Greek word here used is several ways rendered, and so this place differently interpreted: the best translation seems to be, either, 1. The petition of a good conscience, and then it notes the effect of baptism, viz. that holy confidence and security wherewith a conscience, sprinkled with the blood of Christ, addresses itself to God in prayer, as a Father. Thus the word is taken, Matt. xv. 23; xvi. 2; Rom. x. 20. Or rather, 2. The stipulation, which by a metonymy is taken for the answer, promise, or restipulation required; and this agrees with our translation. In baptism there is a solemn covenant, or mutual agreement, between God and the party baptized, wherein God offers, applies, and seals his grace, stipulating or requiring the party's acceptance of that grace, and devoting himself to his service; and when he out of a good conscience doth engage and promise this, which is to come up to the terms of covenant, that may properly be called the answer of a good conscience. It seems to be an allusion to the manner of baptizing, where the minister asked the party to be baptized concerning his faith in Christ, and he accordingly answered him; Dost thou believe? I believe. Dost thou renounce the devil, &c.? I renounce. See Acts viii. 37. A good conscience; a conscience purified by faith from internal and spiritual defilements, (in opposition to putting away the filth of the flesh,) which only sincerely answers to what God requires in baptism. Toward God; i. e. in the presence of God, with whom conscience hath to do in baptism, and who alone is the Judge of conscience, and knows whether it be good and sincere, or not: or, toward God, is to God; and then it relates to answer, and implies the answer or engagement of conscience to be made to God. By the resurrection of Jesus Christ: either these words are to be joined to the verb save, and the rest of the verse to be read in a parenthesis, according to our translation; and then the sense is, that baptism saves us by the faith of Christ's resurrection, or by virtue derived from Christ's resurrection, under which is comprehended his death and sufferings: or they are to be joined to answer, supplying which is; and then, without a parenthesis, the text runs thus, the answer of a good conscience, which is by the resurrection of Christ; and the meaning is, that the answer of a good conscience toward God is by the resurrection of Christ, as the foundation of our believing the promise of forgiveness and free grace, inasmuch as it testifies God to be fully satisfied for sin, and Christ to have fully overcome sin, the devil, &c. For where this faith is not, there can be no good conscience, nor any sincere answering what God requires of us in baptism: if men do not believe the satisfaction of Divine justice by Christ's death, which is evidenced by his resurrection, they will not close with the offers of his grace, nor

<sup>k</sup> Tit. 3. 5.
<sup>l</sup> Rom. 10.
<sup>m</sup> 10.

<sup>n</sup> Eph. 6. 20.

<sup>o</sup> Tit. 3. 5.

<sup>p</sup> Rom. 10.

<sup>q</sup> ch. 1. 2.

engage themselves to be the Lord's. See chap. i. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 17.

22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God: see Rom. viii. 34; Heb. i. 3. This is added as another ground of faith and a good conscience. Angels and authorities and powers: see Rom. viii. 38; Eph. i. 20, 21; Col. i. 16; ii. 10. Being made subject unto him; viz. by his Father, to whom this subjecting all things to Christ is elsewhere ascribed, 1 Cor. xv. 27; Eph. i. 22; Heb. ii. 8.

CHAP. IV

The apostle exhorteth to cease from sin, in regard of Christ's having suffered for it, and of a future judgment, 1—6. From the approaching end of all things, he urgeth to sobriety, watchfulness, and prayer, 7; to charity, 8; hospitality, 9; and a right use of spiritual gifts, 10, 11. Sundry motives of comfort under persecution, 12—19.

FORASMUCH then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin;

The apostle having in the former chapter exhorted believers to patient bearing of afflictions by the example of Christ, ver. 18, proceeds in this to persuade them to improve the crosses they bore outwardly to inward mortification. Christ's death is proposed to us in Scripture as an exemplar both of external mortification in bearing reproaches, persecutions, &c., (this the apostle prosecutes in the former chapter,) and of internal, in the destroying the body of sin; this he exhorts to in this chapter, and indeed draws his argument from Christ's death, not only as the exemplary, but efficient and meritorious, cause of our mortification, and which hath a real influence upon it, in that Christ by his death did not only merit the pardon of sin, but the giving the Spirit, whereby corruption might be destroyed, and our natures renewed. Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us; viz. not only as an exemplar of patience and submission to the will of God, but for the taking away of sin, both in the guilt and power of it, and that he might be the procurer as well as pattern of our mortification. In the flesh; in his human nature, as chap. iii. 18. Arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; strengthen and fortify yourselves against all temptations, and unto the mortification of your lusts, with the consideration of these ends, and the mighty efficacy of Christ's death, he suffering in his flesh, i. e. in his human nature, that you might suffer in your flesh, i. e. in your sinful, corrupt nature; or (which comes to the same,) with the same mind which Christ had, who, in his death, aimed not only at the pardon of your sin, but the destruction of it, and the renovation of your natures: or, arm yourselves with the same mind, viz. a purpose of suffering in the flesh, i. e. of dying spiritually with Christ in the mortification of your flesh, Rom. vi. 6, 7; as Christ died, and suffered in the flesh, so reckon that you, by the virtue of his death, must die to sin, and crucify your flesh, with its affections and lusts, Gal. v. 24; or else, what the same mind is, he declares in the following clause. For; or rather, that, the Greek word here seems rather to be explicative than causal. He that hath suffered in the flesh; i. e. the old man, his corrupt flesh, (flesh being taken here in a different sense from what it was in the former part of the verse,) he that is spiritually dead with Christ, whose old man is crucified with him. Hath ceased from sin; from sinning willingly and delightfully, and yielding himself up to the power of sin; compare Rom. vi., which explains this: what Peter here calls suffering in the flesh, Paul there calls a being dead to sin, ver. 2, 11; and what Peter calls a ceasing from sin, Paul calls a living no longer in sin, ver. 2, and a being freed from it, ver. 7. And this may be the mind, or thought, with which they were to be armed, that they being dead with Christ to sin, should not live any longer in it; having their flesh crucified, should not indulge its affectious and lusts.

2 That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

In the flesh; i. e. in the body, meaning his natural life: flesh is here taken in a third sense, different from the two former: so Gal. ii. 20; Phil. i. 22. By the lusts of men, he means the corrupt desires and sinful ways of carnal men, to which they were not to conform themselves, or make them the rule of their living, Rom. xii. 2; 1 Cor. iii. 3; Col. ii. 8; Tit. i. 14. But to the will of God; the holy will of God revealed to us in his law, (which is the rule by which we are to walk,) in opposition to the lusts of men; we are to live not as men would have us, but as God commands us.

3 For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries:

For the time past of our life may suffice: the apostle doth not mean by this expression merely that they should forbear their former lusts out of a satiety and weariness, as having had their fill of them, but to stir them up to holiness by minding them of their former sinful life; q. d. Ye are concerned to run well now, when ye have for so great a part of your time run wrong. It is a figure whereby he mitigates and lenifies the sharpness of his reproof for their former sinful life: see the like, Ezek. xlv. 6; xlv. 9; Mark xiv. 41. Us; some copies read, ye, and that agrees with the following verse, where the second person is made use of: or if we read, according to our translation, us, it is a figure called anacoenosis, whereby Peter assumes to himself in common with them what yet, in his own person, he was never guilty of, as Isa. lxiv. 6, 7; Dan. ix. 5, &c.; or else it may be an analogy of the person, whereby the first is put for the second. To have wrought the will of the Gentiles; viz. those that were profane and ignorant of God and Christ, and so it is the same as the lusts of men, ver. 2. When we walked; had our conversation, as Eph. ii. 3, walking being taken for the course of man's life; and sometimes in an evil way, as 2 Pet. ii. 10; iii. 3; Jude 16, 18; and sometimes in a good, as Luke i. 6. In lasciviousness; especially outward acts, here set in distinction from lusts, which implies those inward motions from which those outward defilements proceed. Excess of wine, revellings; unseasonable and luxurious feasting, Rom. xiii. 13; Gal. v. 21. Banquetings; comptions, or meetings for drinking, Prov. xxiii. 30; Isa. v. 11, 12. And abominable idolatries: Quest. Why doth Peter charge the Jews with idolatry, who generally kept themselves from it after the Babylonish captivity? Answ. 1. Though most did, yet all might not. 2. It is a sort of idolatry to eat things sacrificed to idols, which many of the Jews, being dispersed among the idolatrous Gentiles, and being invited by them to their idol feasts, might possibly do; and, being under the temptation of poverty, might too far conform themselves to the customs of the nations among which they were. 3. Probably this idolatry might be the worship of angels, frequent among the Gentiles, particularly the Colossians, inhabiting a city of Phrygia, which was a part of Asia whers many Jews were, chap. i. 1. 4. The churches to which he wrote might be made up of Jews and Gentiles, and the apostle may, by a synecdoche, ascribe that to all in common, which yet is to be understood only of a part.

4 Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

Wherein they think it strange: Greek, are strangers, i. e. carry themselves as strangers, wondering (as at some new thing) at the change the gospel hath made in you, and your no more conforming yourselves to their wicked courses; they seem to be in another world when among you. That ye run not with them: this seems to signify the eagerness

r Ps. 110. 1.
Rom. 8. 34.
Eph. 1. 20.
Col. 3. 1.
Heb. 1. 3.
s Rom. 8. 38.
1 Cor. 15. 24.
Eph. 1. 21.

e Rom. 14. 7.
c Gal. 2. 20.
ch. 1. 14.
e John 1. 13.
Rom. 8. 11.

2 Cor. 5. 15. Jam. 1. 12.

f Ezek. 44. 4.
& 45. 1.
Acts 17. 30.
g Eph. 2. 2.
h 4. 17.
i Thess. 4. 5.
Tit. 3. 3.
ch. 1. 14.

b Rom. 6. 5.
7. Gal. 5. 24.
Col. 3. 3, 5.

h Acts 12. 45. & 16. 4.
ch. 3. 16.

and vehemency of these Gentiles in pursuing their lusts, and may perhaps have some respect to the feasts of Bacchus, to which they were wont madly to run, and there commit the abominations mentioned ver. 3. To the same excess of riot; or, profuseness, or confusion, of riot or luxury, and then it suits well with that heap of sins before mentioned, whereof this seems to be comprehensive. Speaking evil; Greek, blaspheming, or speaking evil; of you is added by the translators: this may therefore be understood not only of their speaking evil of believers, as void of humanity and enemies to civil society, but of God and the Christian religion, as a dull, morose, sour way, and which they could not embrace without renouncing all mirth and cheerfulness.

<sup>1</sup> Acts 10. 42. <sup>2</sup> 17. 31. <sup>3</sup> Rom. 14. 10. <sup>4</sup> 12. 1 Cor. 15. 51, 52. <sup>5</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 1. Jam. 5. 9.

5 Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

Who shall give account to him; of their evil speaking as well as of other sins, Jude 15; it is a metaphor taken from stewards giving account to their masters, Matt. xviii. 23; Luke xvi. 2. That is ready; not only prepared for it, but at hand to do it, James v. 9. To judge the quick and the dead; those that shall be alive at Christ's coming, and those that died before, but then shall be raised, and brought to judgment. Hereby he intimates, for their comfort, that though their enemies and ill-willers might outlive them, yet they shall not escape God's judgment.

<sup>1</sup> k. ch. 3. 19.

6 For for this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

To them that are dead; either, 1. Spiritually dead, i. e. dead in sin, viz. then when the gospel was preached to them; or, 2. Naturally dead, viz. when the apostle wrote this Epistle. The verb are not being in the Greek, the words may be understood either way, by supplying were, according to the former exposition, or are, according to the latter, which our translators favour. See the like, Ruth i. 8. That they might be judged according to men in the flesh: either, 1. That they might be judged or condemned in the flesh, i. e. that their old man and carnal conversation, according to men walking in their carnal lusts, might be destroyed and abolished; and then, to be judged in the flesh, is of the same import as to suffer in the flesh, ver. 1; to be dead to sin, Rom. vi. 2: or, 2. That they might be judged or condemned in the flesh, according to men, and so far as they could reach, not only by censures, reproaches, and evil speeches, but even death itself, as it had fallen out already to Stephen, James, &c. But live according to God in the spirit; that they might live a spiritual life in their souls according to the will of God, and an eternal life with him. To live in the spirit, to the will of God, to walk in newness of life, &c., are phrases of a like import in the language of the apostles. According to the latter exposition of the former clause, the apostle seems in the whole to remove the scandal of these Christians, being reproached and condemned by unbelievers for their strictness in religion, and nonconformity to the world, by telling them, that their condition was not singular, but so it had fared with others before them, (though now dead,) to whom the gospel was preached, with the same event as to the judgment of worldly men who censured and condemned them, and yet with the same hope of fruit and benefit, viz. that though they were condemned by men in the flesh, or as to their outward man, yet as to their souls, (meant here by spirits,) they might live a holy, spiritual life, a life to God in this world, ending in a life with him in the other.

<sup>1</sup> Mat. 24. 13. <sup>2</sup> 14. Rom. 13. <sup>3</sup> 12. Phil. 4. 5. <sup>4</sup> Feb. 10. 25. <sup>5</sup> Jam. 6. 8. <sup>6</sup> 2 Pet. 3. 9.

7 But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

<sup>1</sup> 11. 1 John 2. 18. <sup>2</sup> Matt. 26. 41. Luke 21. 34. Col. 4. 2. ch. 1. 13. & 5. a.

But the end of all things: the last judgment, which will put an end to all the evils as well as good things of this world. Is at hand: see James v. 8, 9. Be ye therefore sober; both in mind, prudent, moderate, 2 Cor. v. 13; Tit. ii. 6; and in body, temperate in meats and drinks, &c. And watch: the word signifies both sobriety, in opposition to drunkenness, 1 Thess. v. 6, 8, and watchfulness, 2 Tim.

iv. 5, and this signification agrees best with this place, the former being implied in the word sober. Unto prayer; the end for which they should be sober and vigilant, viz. that they might observe every season fit for prayer, and might still keep themselves in a praying frame.

8 And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

And above all things: see the like expression, James v. 12, and on the same occasion, Col. iii. 14. Have fervent charity; not only labour after charity diligently and carefully, but let it be fervent, intense, strong. For charity shall cover the multitude of sins; partly by preventing anger, railings, revilings, contentions, that they break not out, and partly by repressing, concealing, pardoning them when they do break out, 1 Cor. xiii. 7: see James v. 20.

9 Use hospitality one to another without grudging.

Use hospitality; Christian hospitality in entertaining strangers, those especially that are brought to need your kindness by suffering for the gospel. Without grudging; or murmuring, either at the expense you make, or the carriage of those ye entertain; q. d. Use hospitality willingly, freely, cheerfully, Rom. xii. 8; 2 Cor. ix. 7.

10 As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

As every man hath received the gift; any gift, office, faculty, or ability, whereby he may be serviceable to the good of others, all which are received of God, 1 Cor. xii. 11; Eph. iv. 7. Minister the same one to another; dispense and communicate modestly and humbly, not lifting himself up above others upon the account of his gifts, but remembering he hath received them, and is a steward to dispense them. As good stewards; and therefore faithful in distributing his Lord's goods. Of the manifold grace of God: by grace he means the same as by gift before; and so by manifold grace, the various gifts given to them of God, 1 Cor. xii. 4—6.

11 If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

If any man speak; viz. authoritatively, and by way of office, as a public teacher in the church; though this may be accommodated to private Christians in their charitable instructions of others, yet it seems especially meant of teaching officers. Let him speak as the oracles of God: this relates not only to the manner of speaking, that it be with faith in that word the preacher speaketh, and a due reverence of it, but to the matter likewise, that he preach nothing but the pure word of God, and do not obtrude upon the hearers the fancies, figments, or traditions of men, instead of the oracles of God. If any man minister: this may be understood either, 1. More particularly of the work of deacons, Acts vi., who were to serve tables, ver. 2, distribute the alms of the church, and take care of the poor; or, 2. More generally of any ministry in the church, distinct from that of teaching, (of which he spake before,) as the dispensing of sacraments, exercise of discipline, &c. Let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; i. e. not remissly and coldly, but diligently and strenuously, and with his might, as far as God enables him; this being to do it faithfully, which is especially required in a steward, 1 Cor. iv. 2. That God in all things may be glorified; in all your gifts, and the communications of them: q. d. God doth not adorn you with his gifts so as to bereave himself of his glory, but that you should give him the honour of them. Through Jesus Christ; from whom ye have received the gifts, Eph. iv. 8, and by whom you are enabled to glorify God; and by whom alone what ye do can be accepted of God. See Eph. iii. 21.

12 Beloved, think it not strange concerning

a 1 Cor. 3.
13. ch. 1. 7.

*the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you :

Think it not strange ; be not offended or troubled at persecution, as at a thing unusual or never heard of ; it implies that they should reckon upon it beforehand, that they might not be surprised with it when it comes. The same word is used, ver. 4. Concerning the fiery trial ; the heat or burning, whereby he means great afflictions, especially those that are for righteousness' sake, as appears, ver. 14, which are often compared to fire, as being alike painful and grievous to them as fire is to men's bodies ; and because men are tried by them as metals are by fire, Psal. lxxv. 10 ; Isa. xlvi. 10. Which is to try you : this he adds as the reason why they should not think strange of persecutions, viz. because they were sent by God, not for their destruction, but for the trial and exercise of their graces.

b Acts 5. 41.
Jam. 1. 2.
c Rom. 8. 17.
2 Cor. 1. 7.
& 4. 10.
Phil. 3. 10.
Col. 1. 24.
2 Tim. 2. 12.
ch. 5. 1, 10. Rev. 1. 9. d ch. 1. 5, 6.

13 <sup>b</sup>But rejoice, inasmuch as <sup>c</sup>ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings ; <sup>d</sup>that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

But rejoice ; be so far from being offended at your sufferings, as rather to reckon that there is great matter of rejoicing in them ; their being trials makes them tolerable, but your being in them partakers of Christ's sufferings makes them comfortable. Inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings ; i. e. ye suffer, 1. As Christ did, for the confession of the truth, and so ye are such kind of sufferers as Christ was. 2. As members of Christ, ye suffer those evils which are laid out for those that belong to Christ, 1 Thess. iii. 3. 3. Ye are hereby conformed to Christ your Head. 4. Ye partake of the influence of what Christ suffered, for the sanctification of your sufferings ; see Phil. iii. 10. That, when his glory shall be revealed ; viz. at his second coming, chap. i. 7 ; Col. iii. 4 ; 2 Thess. i. 7. Ye may be glad also with exceeding joy ; a joy without any the least mixture of pain or grief. The rejoicing of the saints here is mixed with pain and heaviness, but shall be pure hereafter ; they rejoice in hope now, but in enjoyment then.

e Mat. 5. 11.
2 Cor. 12. 10.
Jam. 1. 12.
ch. 2. 19, 20.
& 3. 14.
f ch. 2. 12.
& 3. 16.

14 *If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye ; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you : <sup>f</sup>on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

Happy are ye ; viz. because of the Spirit's dwelling in you, which is both the means and evidence of your happiness. The spirit of glory and of God ; i. e. the glorious Spirit of God, or that Spirit of God which is likewise a Spirit of glory, as being not only glorious in himself, but a glory to them in whom he dwells, and the cause of their future glorification. This he adds in counterbalance to the reproaches they suffered for the name of Christ ; q. d. It is a greater glory to you to have the Spirit of Christ dwelling in you, (whereof your patient bearing reproaches and persecutions is an argument) than all the calumnies and obloquies wherewith your enemies load you can be a shame to you. Resteth upon you : in allusion to Isa. xi. 2 ; dwells in you, and shall abide with you for ever, John xiv. 16, not leaving you in your sufferings. On their part he ; either Christ, or rather the Spirit. Is evil spoken of ; the reproaches your enemies cast upon you, reach that Spirit himself that dwells in you, when they revile that good confession into which the Spirit led you, deride the consolations he gives you, and speak evil of your persons, who are the temples in which he dwells. But on your part he is glorified ; viz. by your patience and constancy in your sufferings, which shows forth the power of that Spirit which resteth upon you, in that he works so mightily in you, as to enable you to bear what without the assistance of his grace were intolerable.

g ch. 2. 20.

15 But *let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, <sup>h</sup>or as a busybody in other men's matters.

h 1 Thes. 4.
11. 1 Tim.
& 13.

But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief : keep clear of those crimes which may expose you to suffering by the hand of justice, and carry yourselves so innocently, that you may never suffer from men but unjustly. Or as an evil-doer ; either this is a general term, denoting them that offend against any public law ; or, it may signify those that are guilty of any offence against the laws, though less than murder or theft. Or as a busy-body in other men's matters ; either a covetous person, that looks with an evil eye upon what others have, and is ready to catch it as he can ; or rather, one that goes beyond the bounds of his own calling, and invades the callings of others, pragmatically intruding into their business, and making himself a judge of those things which belong not to him. Some nations are said to have punished those that were busy through idleness, impertinently diligent in other men's matters, and negligent of their own. However, if this pragmaticalness did not expose the Christians to the laws of the Gentiles, yet it might make them odious, and expose them to their reproaches.

16 Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed ; <sup>i</sup>but let him glorify God on this behalf.

Yet if any man suffer as a Christian ; if his Christianity be his only crime, and the cause of his sufferings. Let him not be ashamed : see 2 Tim. ii. 12. But let him glorify God on this behalf ; i. e. on the account of his sufferings ; let him bless God for keeping him from suffering as an evil-doer, and for counting him worthy to suffer for Christ's sake, Acts v. 41, as well as for giving him patience and courage under sufferings.

17 For the time is come <sup>k</sup>that judgment must begin at the house of God : and <sup>l</sup>if it first begin at us, <sup>m</sup>what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God ?

For the time is come ; or season, viz. that which is fixed by God : the afflictions that befall God's people come in the time appointed, and so are never unseasonable. Or this may imply, that what the prophets spoke in their time, Isa. x. 12 ; Jer. xxv. 29, doth especially agree to gospel times, viz. that judgment begins at the house of God. Judgment ; viz. temporary, and for good, in opposition to the destructive judgment he implies in the latter part of the verse ; he means all those afflictions God brings upon his children for their correction, trial, instruction, mortification, 1 Cor. xi. 31, 32. Must begin at the house of God ; the church of God, and the members of it, called here his house, as 1 Tim. iii. 15 ; Heb. iii. 6, and typified by the material house or temple of God under the Old Testament. What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God ? how miserable, how dreadful will be the end of all those that would not obey the gospel ! implying, that they shall be in a much worse condition if God take them in hand. If he spare not his children, much less will he his enemies. If the one sip of the cup of God's wrath, the other shall wring out the dregs, and drink them, Psal. lxxv. 8.

18 <sup>n</sup>And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear ?

Scarcely be saved ; with much labour and difficulty, through many tribulations, Acts xiv. 22, as going in the narrow way, and entering in at the strait gate, Matt. vii. 13, 14. The ungodly and the sinner ; unbelievers and impenitent sinners of all sorts ; both words signify the same, in opposition to the righteous before mentioned. Appear ; he shall not be able to stand in God's judgment against the sentence of condemnation then to be pronounced, Psal. i. 5 : q. d. If the righteous scarcely be saved, the wicked shall certainly perish.

19 Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God <sup>o</sup>commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Let them that suffer ; viz. any manner of affliction or persecution for righteousness' sake. According to the will of God ; according to that will of God, whereby he hath ap-k Is. 10. 12.

Jer. 25. 29.
& 49. 12.
Ezek. 9. 6.
Mal. 3. 5.
l Luke 23. 31.
m Luke 10. 12, 14.

n Prov. 11.
31. Luke 23.
31.

o Ps. 31. 5.
Luke 23. 41.
2 Tim. 1. 12.

pointed them to suffer such things, chap. iii. 17; 1 Thess. iii. 3. Commit; commend into his hands, or lay up, or intrust with him as a depositum, Psal. xxxi. 5; 2 Tim. i. 12. The keeping of their souls; as the most precious things while they live, and most to be cared for when they die; that they may be kept from sin under afflictions, and from perishing in death: or rather, their souls here includes their bodies, and so committing their souls is committing their whole selves to God. In well-doing; not being deterred from well-doing by the evils they suffer, but by persevering in holiness notwithstanding their afflictions, making it appear to the last, that they do not suffer as evil-doers. As unto a faithful Creator; one who, as Creator, is able to keep what they commit to him; and being faithful to his promises, certainly will do it.

CHAP. V

The elders are exhorted to feed the flock of Christ conscientiously, looking to the chief Shepherd for a reward, 1—4. The younger are required to submit to the elder, and all to practise humility toward each other, 5, with resignation to God, 6, 7; to be sober, watchful, and stedfast in the faith, resisting the devil, 8, 9. The Epistle is concluded with a prayer and benediction, 10—14.

THE elders which are among you I exhort, who am also <sup>a</sup>an elder, and <sup>b</sup>a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also <sup>c</sup>a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:

a Philem. 9.
b Luke 24.
48. Acts i. 8.
22. & 5. 32.
2 & 10. 32.
c Rom. 8. 17.
18. Rev. 1. 9.

The elders which are among you I exhort; viz. those that were such, not so much by age as by office, as appears by his exhorting them to feed the flock, ver. 2; he means the ordinary ministers of the churches among the believing Jews. Who am also an elder: elder is a general name, comprehending under it even apostles themselves, who were elders, though every elder were not an apostle. And a witness; either, 1. In his doctrine, in which he held forth Christ's sufferings, whereof he had been an eye-witness, in which respect the apostles are often called witnesses, Luke xxiv. 48; Acts i. 8, 22; ii. 32. Or, 2. In his example, in that he in suffering so much for Christ, did give an ample testimony to the reality of Christ's sufferings, and that Christ had indeed suffered: or, both may well be comprehended. The glory that shall be revealed; viz. at Christ's last coming, chap. i. 5; iv. 13; Rom. viii. 17, 18.

2 <sup>d</sup>Feed the flock of God || which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, <sup>e</sup>not by constraint, but willingly; <sup>f</sup>not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

d John 21.
15, 16, 17.
Acts 20. 28.
|| Or, as much as in you is.
e 1 Cor. 9. 17.
f 1 Tim. 3.
3, 8. Tit. 1. 7.

Feed; teach and rule, Matt. ii. 6; John xxi. 15—17; Acts xx. 28. The flock of God; the church. Which is among you; which is with you, or committed to your charge; intimating that the flock not being their own, they were to give an account of it to him that had set them over it. Taking the oversight thereof; or, being bishops, or acting as bishops over it, i. e. superintending, inspecting, and watching over it with all care, Acts xx. 28, 29. Not by constraint; not merely because ye must: what men do out of compulsion, they do more slightly and perfunctorily, as those that would not do it if they could help it: see the like expression, 2 Cor. ix. 7. But willingly; cheerfully and freely, as Exod. xxxvi. 2; Psal. liv. 6: compare 1 Cor. ix. 17. Not for filthy lucre; not out of covetousness, or a design of making a gain of the work; it being a shameful thing for a shepherd to feed the sheep out of love to the fleece: see Tit. i. 7; 1 Tim. iii. 3, 8. But of a ready mind; out of a good affection to the welfare of the flock, in opposition to the private gain before mentioned. He doth not do his work freely, and of a ready mind, who is either driven to it by necessity, or drawn by covetousness.

3 Neither as <sup>g</sup>being lords over <sup>h</sup>God's heritage, but <sup>i</sup>being ensamples to the flock.

g Or, over-ruling.
h Ezek. 34.
4. Matt. 23.
25, 26.
i Cor. 3. 9.
2 Cor. 1. 24.

h Ps. 33. 12. & 74. 2. i Phil. 3. 17. 2 Thess. 5. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 12. Tit. 2. 7.

Neither as being lords; not exercising any such lordship or dominion over the people, as temporal lords and magistrates exercise over their subjects, Matt. xx. 25, 26, &c.; Luke xxii. 25: compare 2 Cor. i. 24. Over God's heritage; the Lord's clergy, the same as flock before; the Greek word is plural, and so it signifies the several churches or flocks which were under the charge of the several elders or pastors. The church of Israel is often called God's inheritance, which as it were fell to him by lot, (as the Greek word signifies,) and which was as dear to him as men's inheritances are to them: see Deut. iv. 20; ix. 29; xxxii. 9; Psal. xxxiii. 12; lxxiv. 2; lxxviii. 71. Accordingly now the Christian church, succeeding it, is called God's inheritance, and the word clerus is no where in the New Testament peculiarly ascribed to ministers of the gospel. This title given here to the Lord's people, implies a reason why the elders should not lord it over them, viz. because they are still the Lord's inheritance, and not their own; God having not given them a kingdom but a care, and still retaining his right to his people. But being ensamples to the flock; in holiness of life, practising before their eyes what you preach to their ears, Phil. iii. 17; 2 Thess. iii. 9; Tit. ii. 7.

4 And when <sup>k</sup>the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive <sup>l</sup>a crown of glory <sup>m</sup>that fadeth not away.

k Heb. 13. 20.
l 1 Cor. 9. 25.
2 Tim. 4. 8.
Jam. 1. 12.
m ch. 1. 4.

And when the chief Shepherd; the Lord Jesus Christ, the only Prince of pastors, called the great Shepherd of the sheep, Heb. xiii. 20, as here the chief Shepherd, not only for his supereminent dignity over all other pastors, but because of the power he hath over them, they being all subject to his authority, receiving their charge from him, and exercising their office in his name, and being accountable to him for their administrations. Shall appear: see chap. i. 7, 13; iv. 13. Ye shall receive; or, carry away, viz. from Christ, who, as the Judge, shall award it to you. A crown of glory; either, a glorious crown; or, that glory which shall be as a crown to you. It is called a crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. iv. 8; a crown of life, James i. 12. That fadeth not away; in opposition to those crowns which were given to conquerors in war, and in public games, which were made of perishable flowers or herbs: see chap. i. 4; 1 Cor. ix. 25.

5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, <sup>n</sup>all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for <sup>o</sup>God resisteth the proud, and <sup>p</sup>giveth grace to the humble.

n Rom. 12.
10. Eph. 5.
21. Phil. 2. 3.
o Jam. 4. 6.
p Is. 57. 15.
& 66. 2.

Ye younger; either he means those that were inferior to the church officers, and then he here prescribes the people their duty, as he had done the ministers; or rather, those that were younger in years, and then he passeth from the more special to the general. Submit yourselves: under subjection, he comprehends all those offices which the younger owe to the elder; as, to reverence them, take their advice, be guided by them, &c. Or, if younger be taken in the former sense, this precept falls in with that of the apostle, Heb. xiii. 17. To the elder: either elders by office, who were likewise usually elders in years, the younger sort being more rarely chosen to be officers; or rather, elder in age. Yea, all of you be subject one to another; viz. in those mutual duties which they owe to each other, as husbands to wives, parents to children, &c. Those that are superior to others, yet are not so exempt from subjection as not to owe some duty: see Phil. ii. 3. And be clothed with humility; or, wrapt up, or covered, with humility, as with a garment which is put on over other garments; q. d. Adorn yourselves with humility as with a beautiful garment or robe. The metaphor of putting on is frequent, where mention is made of any grace or virtue, Rom. xiii. 12; Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10, 12.

6 <sup>q</sup>Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

q Jam. 4. 10.

The mighty hand of God; by this he means God's omnipotence, which sometimes is called a strong hand, Exod. iii. 19, a mighty hand, chap. xxxii. 11; Deut. iii. 24, the right hand of power, Matt. xxvi. 64; by which he is able to beat down those that are proud and high, and to defend or exalt those that are humble and lowly. In due time; Greek, in season, viz. that which God sees most fit and conducing to his own glory and your real welfare.

r Ps. 27. 5
& 56. 35.
Wisd. 12. 13.
Matt. 4. 25.
Luke 12. 11, 22. Phil. 4. 6. Heb. 12. 5.

7 <sup>a</sup> Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

Casting, as a burden, ally our care upon him; your care for all sorts of things, even which concern this life, that care which will otherwise cut and divide your hearts, (as the Greek word in Matthew imports,) and be grievous and tormenting to you. For he careth for you; God concerns himself in the affairs of his servants, and in whatsoever befalls them, and takes diligent care that no good thing be wanting to them. Peal. lxxxiv. 11; Phil. iv. 6.

8 <sup>a</sup> Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

Be sober: see chap. i. 13; iv. 7: q. d. Ye have to do with a mad enemy, a raging devil; ye had need yourselves be sober; not only in meats and drinks, &c., but as to the cares of this life, and whatsoever it is that is apt to intoxicate your minds, and expose you to him. Be vigilant; spiritually watchful and circumspect, careful of your salvation, and aware of Satan's snares and temptations, Matt. xxiv. 42; xxv. 13; xxvi. 41; 1 Thess. v. 6. Because your adversary; or, that adversary of yours; he that contends with you, is plaintiff against you, Matt. v. 25; Luke xii. 58. It answers to the Hebrew word Satan, Zech. iii. 1. The devil; your accuser, he that maligns you, calumniates you, informs against you: he is so called, Matt. iv. 1; xiii. 39, and elsewhere, because of his accusing God to men, Gen. iii. 4, 5, and men to God, Job i. 7; ii. 2; Rev. xii. 10, as well as each to other, John viii. 44. As a roaring lion; i. e. strong, fierce, cruel, especially when hungry, and seeking his prey, and roaring after it. Walketh about; is diligent and restless in his attempts, either by circumventing or assaulting you: see Job i. 7. Seeking whom he may devour; not lightly hurt, but swallow up and utterly destroy, by himself or his instruments.

9 <sup>a</sup> Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

Whom resist; by not yielding to his temptations, Eph. iv. 27, and by employing your spiritual armour against him, Eph. vi. 11—13, &c.: see James iv. 7. Stedfast in the faith; either, 1. Hold your faith, persevering in it, which the devil would fain bereave you of, (as soldiers used in war to look to their shields, it being dishonourable to lose them,) and without which ye will never be able to stand out against the devil: or, 2. Stedfast or strong by faith; intimating, that faith is a Christian's greatest strength, it being by faith that he engageth the power of God and grace of Christ on his side, whereby he comes to be victorious over all his enemies, 1 John v. 4. Knowing that the same afflictions; either, 1. The devil's temptations, which here he calls afflictions, because believers are passive in them, and count them the greatest afflictions; or rather, 2. Persecutions, which though they come upon them immediately from the men of the world, yet it is by the instigation of the devil, the prince of the world, who hath a principal hand in them, and acts by men as his instruments: so that when men oppress them, they are to resist the devil, who thereby tempts them. They have a spiritual enemy to deal with even in temporal afflictions. Are accomplished in your brethren; or, fulfilled, or perfected: either, 1. Others of your brethren are filling up the measure of sufferings God hath allotted them, for the mortifying of the flesh, and conforming them to Christ their Head, as well as you are filling up yours, Col. i. 24; or, 2. He speaks of the community of their sufferings: q. d. What afflictions ye endure, others endure too, and therefore ye should not grudge to suffer, when ye have so good company in your sufferings. That are in the world; either this notes the sufferings of the saints to be universal, so as to reach them all, where-soever they are dispersed throughout the world; or, to be short, as being confined to the time only of their abode in the world.

10 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

But the God of all grace; i. e. the author and giver of all grace, from whom ye have received what you have, and expect what you want. Who hath called us unto his eternal glory; that eternal glory whereof believers at the last day shall be made partakers, which is called God's glory, because it is that which he hath promised to them, and will at last put them in possession of: see ver. 1; Rom. v. 2; and because they shall after a sort partake of the Divine glory which they behold. By Christ Jesus; for Christ's sake, as the meritorious cause of our effectual calling, and by him as the great Apostle of our profession, Heb. iii. 1. Or, by Christ Jesus may refer to glory, Christ being the cause of their glorification as well as calling. After that ye have suffered a while; this he adds for their encouragement, that whatsoever they suffered would be but short, as chap. i. 6; 2 Cor. iv. 17. Make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you; either, 1. Perfect that which is begun, Heb. xiii. 20, 21, stablish that which is right, 2 Thess. ii. 16, strengthen that which is weak, settle or found (by a firm union and conjunction unto Christ) that which is already built, Eph. iii. 17, 18; Col. i. 23: or, 2. These four words may be but different expressions whereby the apostle sets forth the same thing, viz. God's confirming and establishing those saints unto their final perseverance; and his using so much variety of expressions may imply, that it is a matter of very great difficulty to hold on our Christian course, without failing or coming short of the goal, and therefore we need singular assistance from God to enable us to it.

11 <sup>a</sup> To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

To him; to God. Be glory and dominion; see chap. iv. 11. The verb be in the text is not in the Greek, and so it may be read with a supply of a verb either of the imperative mood, and then it is a doxology, as we render it; or of the indicative, he hath glory and dominion; or, to him belongs glory and dominion, or glorious dominion or power; and then it tends to encourage these saints, in that he, whom the apostle prays to stablish and strengthen them, is of power sufficient to do it.

12 <sup>a</sup> By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

By Silvanus; either Silas, Acts xv., xvi., whom Peter therefore here calls a faithful brother to them, that they might the more readily receive him, though a minister of the uncircumcision; or else this Silvanus was some other that had preached to them, and is therefore said to be a faithful brother to them: the former is more probable. As I suppose; this doth not signify any doubt, but rather a firm persuasion, of Silvanus's faithfulness; q. d. I reckon him faithful, having hitherto found him so: or, it may relate to the briefness of the Epistle; q. d. I suppose it will seem brief to you, as being from one that loves you, and about matters that so much concern you. Exhorting; viz. to constancy in the faith, and diligence in duty. And testifying; bearing my testimony to the truth ye have received; this the apostle witnesseth, that being more fully convinced of it, they might more constantly adhere to it. See the like phrase, Neh. ix. 29, 30; xiii. 15. That this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand; the true doctrine of God, wherein he sets forth the grace of Christ: q. d. Ye are in the right way; the doctrine ye have embraced is indeed the truth of God.

13 The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

The church that is at Babylon; Babylon in Chaldaea, where it is most probable the apostle was at the writing of this Epistle; the Jews being very numerous in those parts, as having settled themselves there ever since the captivity, and Peter being an apostle of the circumcision, his work lay much thereabout. The papists would have Babylon here to be Rome, as Rev. xvii., and that Peter gives it that name rather than its own, because, being escaped out of prison at Jerusalem, Acts xii. 12, 25, he would not have it known where he was. But how comes he, that had been so bold before, to be so timorous now? Did this become the head of the church, the vicar of Christ, and prince of the apostles? And is it probable he should live twenty-five years at Rome, (as they pretend he did,) and yet not be known to be there? Wherever he was, he had Mark now with him, who is said to have died at Alexandria the eighth year of Nero, and Peter not till six years after. If Mark then did first constitute the church of Alexandria, and govern it (as they say he did) for many years, it will be hard to find him and Peter at Rome together. But if they will needs have Rome be meant by Babylon, let them enjoy their zeal, who rather than not find Peter's chair, would go to hell to seek it; and are more concerned to have Rome be the seat of Peter than the church of Christ.

14 <sup>b</sup>Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. <sup>c</sup>Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

<sup>b</sup> Rom. 16.
<sup>c</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
<sup>d</sup> 2 Cor. 13.
<sup>e</sup> 1 Thess. 5.
<sup>f</sup> Eph. 6. 23.

Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity: see Rom. xvi. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 20; 2 Cor. xiii. 12. In Christ Jesus; united to him by faith, and members of him.

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL

OF

P E T E R

THE ARGUMENT

It cannot be denied, but that some question there hath been, both about the penman and the authority of this Epistle. The former hath been questioned, because of the difference of the style of this from that of the former Epistle. But, to say nothing of a great likeness of style in both, observed by some; why might not the same person see fit on different occasions, and according to the different things he wrote about, to change his way of writing? Or why may not the Holy Ghost use his instruments in what way he please, and not only dictate to them the matter they are to write, but the expression and phrase? Why must an infinite and sovereign Agent be bound up, and confined to the parts and qualifications of the men he inspired? And if we set aside the judgment of several councils and fathers, (which yet might go far,) two great arguments may be drawn from the first chapter, to prove Peter to be the penman of this Epistle. One from the inscription of it, where we have both his names, Simon and Peter, prefixed to it. Another from ver. 16, where he affirms himself to have been present with Christ at his transfiguration; from whence we may well argue, that none having ever ascribed it to John, and James being dead before, (though if he had been alive, it cannot be imagined that he should put Peter's name to any epistle of his own writing,) and there being none but they two present with our Lord at that time besides Peter, Matt. xvii. 1, none but he could be the writer of it. And indeed, as some observe, if this Epistle be not Peter's, when his name is set to it, it is so far from being canonical, that it is not fit so much as to be reckoned among the apocryphal books, having so great a lie in the front of it. As for the authority of it, there can be no doubt of that if Peter were the writer, when nothing concurs in it repugnant to other parts of Scripture, or unbecoming the grace and style of an apostle. And though some of the ancients have questioned it, yet many more have acknowledged it; nor was it ever numbered among apocryphal writings. And its not being found in the first Syriac version, can but argue its being questioned by some, not its being rejected by all. It seems to be written to the Jews of the dispersion, as the former was, which appears by chap. iii. 1, 2, where he mentions the former written to them; and this was written not long before his death, chap. i. 14. The scope of it is, partly to call to their remembrance the truths he had preached among them, that so, when they should be destitute of the apostles' preaching to them, yet they might remember the pure doctrine they had learned of them, chap. i. 12, 15, and might thereby be fortified against the errors of false teachers, chap. ii. 1; and partly to persuade and stir them up to diligence in holiness and constancy in the faith. As in his First Epistle he had exhorted them to patience under the tyranny of persecutors, lest they should yield to them; so in this he exhorts them to perseverance in the truth of the gospel, against the deceptions of heretics, lest they should be seduced by them, chap. ii., and continue in holiness, notwithstanding the profaneness of scoffers, chap. iii.

CHAP. I

The apostle, saluting the Christians, admonisheth them of the gifts and promises of the gospel, and their tendency to promote a godly life, 1—4. He exhorteth them to add to their faith such virtues as would make it fruitful, 5—9; and thereby to make their calling and election sure, 10, 11. He is careful to remind them hereof, knowing his dissolution to be near, 12—15; and urgeth the evidence of what he had seen and heard in the holy mount in confirmation of Christ's second coming, together with the word of prophecy, which he recommendeth to their regard, 16—21.

A. D. 66. || SIMON Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained <sup>a</sup>like precious faith with us through

<sup>a</sup> Or, by whom.
Acts 15. 14.
<sup>b</sup> Rom. 1. 12.
<sup>c</sup> 2 Cor. 4. 13. Eph. 4. 5. Tit. 1. 4.

the righteousness † of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ:

† Gr. of our God and Saviour.
Tit. 2. 13.

A servant and an apostle; i. e. such a servant as is likewise an apostle. The former agrees to all gospel ministers generally, the latter is a title of a greater eminency; and so he intimates, that he wrote to them not merely as an ordinary minister, but in the authority of an apostle, an officer of the highest degree in the church. Like precious faith; not in respect of the degree or strength of it, but in respect of the object, Christ, and the benefits that come by it, justification, sanctification, adoption, &c., in which respect the faith of the weakest believer is as precious as that of the strongest. With us; either with us apostles, or with us Jewish Christians, born or inhabiting in Judea. Through the righteousness of God; the Greek preposition which we render through, may likewise be rendered with, as ver. 5; Acts vii. 38, in the church, that is, with the church; and so the sense is either, 1. Through the righteousness, i. e. truth and faithfulness, of Christ in his promises, whereof the faith of the saints was an effect: or, 2. Through the righteousness of Christ, as the meritorious cause of their faith: or, 3. With the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, and made theirs upon their believing. They had obtained like precious faith as the apostles themselves and others had, together with the righteousness of Christ, an interest in which always accompanies faith, Rom. iv. 22. And our Saviour Jesus Christ: there being but one article in the Greek, these words are to be understood conjunctly, the particle and being but an explicative, and the sense is, Through the righteousness of our God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ, who is God: see the like, ver. 11; chap. iii. 18; John xx. 28; Tit. ii. 14.

<sup>b</sup> Dan. 4. 1. <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord,

Through the knowledge of God; or acknowledgment, i. e. faith, whereby we are made partakers of all the saving graces of the Spirit; and whereby being justified, we are at peace with God, Rom. v. 1. And of Jesus our Lord; there being no saving knowledge of God, or faith in him, but by Christ.

3 According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, <sup>c</sup>through the knowledge of him <sup>d</sup>that hath called us <sup>e</sup>to glory and virtue:

According as; this may refer either, 1. To what goes before, Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, &c., according as his divine power hath given unto us, &c.; and then in these words the apostle shows what reason there was to hope, that grace and peace should be multiplied to them, and perfected in them, viz. because God hath already given them all things pertaining to life and godliness; q. d. He that hath done thus much for you, will do more, and finish his work in you. Or, 2. To what follows; and then the Greek phrase rendered according as, is not a note of similitude, but of illation, and may be rendered, since, or seeing that, and so the words are not a part of the salutation, but the beginning of the body of the Epistle, and relate to ver. 5: Seeing that his Divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain, &c., add to your faith virtue, &c.; as God hath done his part, so do you yours in the diligent performance of what he hath enabled you unto. Divine power may relate either to God, or rather to Christ, immediately going before; and then it tends to the confirming their hope of the multiplication of grace and peace to them, not only from God, but from Christ, in that they had already experienced his Divine power in giving them all things pertaining to life and godliness, i. e. whatever may be helpful to it, the Spirit, faith, repentance, &c., John vii. 39; 2 Cor. iv. 6; 2 Tim. ii. 25. Unto life; either, 1. Spiritual life, and then godliness may be added by way of explication, that life which consists in godliness, or a godly life; or, by life may be meant the inward, permanent principle of spiritual acts, and the exercise of them may be called godliness, as the perfection of that principle is called glory. Or, 2. Eternal life, to which we attain through godliness, as the way; and then likewise they are understood distinctly, life as the end, and godliness as the means; and so life in this verse is the same as peace in the former, and godliness the same as grace. To glory and virtue: according to our translation, glory may be the same as life before, and virtue the same with godliness; and then the words set forth the end of God's calling us, viz. unto glory or life hereafter, as well as virtue or godliness now. But the Greek preposition διὰ is no where (as some observe) in the New Testament found to signify to; for in Rom. vi. 4 (which some allege) it is best rendered by, glory being there put for God's power; and therefore our margin here reads it by glory and virtue; which may either be, by an hendiadis, for glorious virtue, taking virtue for power, that glorious power of God which is put forth in calling us, Eph. i. 18, 19, or his goodness and mercy which appear in the same calling, in which sense the word may be understood; see Tit. iii. 4, 5; 1 Pet. ii. 9; or, (which comes to the same,) glory being often taken for power John ii. 11, by glory and virtue may be meant God's power and goodness, or mercy.

4 <sup>e</sup>Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, <sup>f</sup>having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Whereby: this word may be rendered, in that, for that, inasmuch as, and then this is an explication of the things that pertain to life and godliness, to glory and virtue, all those things being contained in the promises; or whereby may be understood of the glory and virtue last mentioned, taking them in the latter sense explained, ver. 3; q. d. By which glorious goodness and mercy to us. Are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: by promises we may understand either the matter of the promises, the things promised, Heb. x. 36, such as redemption by Christ, reconciliation, adoption, &c., and then they are called exceeding great and precious, in comparison of all temporal and worldly things; or else the promises themselves, which are called great because of the excellency of the things contained in them, and precious in relation to us; great things being not only contained in the promises, but by them secured to us. That by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature: we are said to be partakers of the Divine nature, not by any communication of the Divine essence to us, but by God's impressing upon us, and infusing into us, those divine qualities and dispositions (knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness) which do express and resemble the perfections of God, and are called his image, Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10. And we are said to be made partakers of this Divine nature by the promises of the gospel, because they are the effectual means of our regeneration, (in which that Divine nature is communicated to us,) by reason of that quickening Spirit which accompanieth them, 2 Cor. iii. 6, works by them, and forms in us the image of that wisdom, righteousness, and holiness of God, which appear in them; or of that glory of the Lord, which when by faith we behold in the glass of gospel promises, we are changed into the same image, even as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18. Or, the Divine nature may be understood of the glory and immortality of the other life, wherein we shall be conformed to God, and whereof by the promises we are made partakers. Having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust; either by corruption here we are to understand, 1. Destruction, to which the greatest part of the world is obnoxious through lust, and then corruption must be opposed to life and peace before, and lust to virtue and godliness: or rather, 2. All the pravity or wickedness of human nature, which is here said to be, i. e. to reign and prevail, in the world, or worldly men, through lust, or habitual concupiscence, which is the spring and root from which it proceeds; and then the sense is the same as Gal. v. 24. This corruption through lust is opposed to the Divine nature before, and escaping this corruption agrees with being partakers of that Divine nature: see Eph. iv. 22—24; Col. iii. 9, 10.

5 And beside this, <sup>h</sup>giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue <sup>i</sup>knowledge;

And beside this, giving all diligence: here the apostle begins his exhortation, that since God had done so much for them, ver. 3, 4, they would likewise do their duty; and that their care and diligence in improving the grace they had received, might be added to his bounty in giving it them. Add to; or, minister unto; or it may be a metaphor taken from the ancient way of dancing, in which they joined hands one with another, thereby helping and holding up one another. Faith is here set forth as the first grace, and which (as it were) leads up, the rest following it, and attending upon it, yet all in conjunction one with another. Faith is set in the first place as the prime grace of a Christian, the foundation and root of all other, as being that without which nothing else can be pleasing to God, Heb. xi. 6. By virtue he seems to understand universal righteousness, or a complication of all those graces by which

<sup>b</sup> Dan. 4. 1.
<sup>c</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 2.
<sup>d</sup> Jude 2.

<sup>e</sup> John 17. 3.
<sup>f</sup> 1 Thess. 2. 12 & 4. 7.
<sup>g</sup> 2 Thess. 2. 14 & 2 Tim. 1. 2 & 1 Pet. 2. 9 & 2. 9.
<sup>h</sup> 1 Cor. 13.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Cor. 3. 18.
<sup>g</sup> Eph. 4. 24.
<sup>h</sup> Heb. 12. 10.
<sup>i</sup> 1 John 3. 2.
<sup>j</sup> 2 Cor. 2. 18, 20.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 3. 19.
<sup>i</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 7.

faith is wont to work; and this being more general, he proceeds from it to others that are more special. Knowledge; by this may be meant spiritual prudence, which governs and directs other virtues in their actings; and it is called knowledge, because it consists in the practical knowledge of the will of God: see 2 Cor. vi. 6; 1 Pet. iii. 7.

6 And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

Temperance; a grace which represseth, and curbs in, not only sensual lusts, but all inordinate appetites, Gal. v. 22; Tit. i. 8. Patience; that Christian fortitude whereby we bear afflictions and injuries, so as to persevere in our duty without being moved by the evils that attend us in the doing of it. Godliness; which respects our immediate duty to God, and comprehends all the duties of the first table. This is joined to patience, as being that which teacheth us, in all we suffer, to acknowledge God's providence, and promises of deliverance and recompence.

7 And to godliness brotherly kindness; and <sup>h</sup>to brotherly kindness charity.

Brotherly kindness; a love to those that are of the household of faith. This is joined to godliness, to show that it is in vain to pretend to true religion and yet be destitute of brotherly love. Charity; this is more general than the former, and relates to all men, even our enemies themselves.

8 For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For if these things be in you, and abound; if ye not only have these graces in you, but abound or grow in them, both as to the inward degree and outward exercise of them. They make you; either they make you, or declare you, not to be barren, or both; they will be both the causes and evidences of your not being barren. Barren; or, slothful, idle, unactive. Nor unfruitful; void of good works, which are frequently compared to fruits, Matt. iii. 10; vii. 17—19; Gal. v. 22. In the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; i. e. the faith of Christ. But more is implied here than expressed; q. d. They will make you be active and fruitful in the knowledge of Christ, and declare you to be so, and thereby make it appear that ye have not in vain learned Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

But he that lacketh these things; he that doth not live in the exercise of the forementioned graces. Is blind; spiritually blind, as being destitute of saving knowledge. And cannot see afar off: the Greek word is variously translated; the most probable account of it is either, 1. That it signifies to feel the way, or grope, as blind men do; and then the meaning is, He that lacketh these things is blind, and, as a blind man, gropes, not knowing which way to go; he is really destitute of the knowledge he pretends to: or, 2. To be purblind, or short-sighted, so as to see things near hand, but not afar off, as our translation hath it; and then the sense is, That such a one sees only the things of the world, but cannot look so far as heaven to discern things there, which if he did, he would walk in the way that leads thither, viz. in the practice of the duties before prescribed. And hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins: he is judged in the sight of God to forget a benefit received, that is not effectually mindful of it, in living suitably to it. And so here, he that professeth himself to have been purged from his old sins, in justification and sanctification, by the blood and Spirit of Christ, 1 Cor. vi. 11; Eph. v. 25—27, and yet still lives in sin, and in the neglect of the duty he is engaged to, practically declares his forgetfulness of the mercy he professeth to have been vouchsafed him; and accordingly may be interpreted to have forgotten it, in that he acts like one that had. Or, if this be understood of one that is really purged from his old sins, yet he may be said to forget that so far as he returns again to them, or lives not up to the ends of his purgation, Luke i. 74, 75.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall:

Give diligence; viz. in the exercise of the forementioned graces. To make your calling, your effectual calling to the faith of Christ, and election, your eternal election to grace and glory, sure, not in respect of God, whose counsel is in itself sure and stable, Rom. xi. 29; 2 Tim. ii. 19; but in respect of yourselves, who may best discern the cause by its effects, and so your election by your good works to which you were chosen, Eph. i. 4, and which prove your calling, (as being the proper genuine fruits of it, Eph. iv. 1, 2, &c.,) as that doth election, from whence it proceeds, Acts xiii. 48; Rom. viii. 30. For if ye do these things, the things prescribed, ver. 5—7, ye shall never fall; not wholly apostatize from God's ways, nor so fall through temptation into any sin, as not to recover out of it.

11 For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Abundantly; or richly: while ye minister, or add one grace to another, one good work to another, ver. 5, &c., God likewise will minister, (the same word is here used as ver. 5,) or add largely or richly, the supplies of the Spirit, in grace, and strength, and consolation, and whatsoever is needful for you in the way, whereby your faith may be increased, your joy promoted, and your perseverance secured, till ye come into the possession of the everlasting kingdom.

12 Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

I will not be negligent; i. e. I will be diligent and careful. Though ye know them: he prevents an objection; q. d. Though ye know these things already, yet being things of great moment, and you being beset with temptations, encompassed about with infirmities, and, while you are on the earth, being in a land of forgetfulness, it is necessary to put you in mind of what you know, that ye may remember to do it. See the like, Rom. xv. 14, 15; 1 John ii. 21. The present truth; the truth of the gospel now revealed to you; that which was the great subject of the apostles' preaching and writings, that Jesus Christ was the Christ; that redemption was wrought by him; that he was risen from the dead; that whosoever believeth on him, should receive remission of sins, &c.; the promise made to the fathers being now fulfilled, Acts xiii. 32, 33, and what was future under the Old Testament being present under the New.

13 Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance;

In this tabernacle; in the body; q. d. Having not long to live, I would live to the best purpose, and so as I may do the most good. He calls his body a tabernacle both in respect of its short continuance, its mean structure, and his laborious life in it. To stir you up; to awaken and rouse you up, as ye have need, the flesh being slothful; and lest ye should by security and slightness lose the benefit of what ye have learned: where knowledge is not wanting, yet additions may be useful.

14 Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me.

I must put off; a metaphor taken from garments; the soul, while in the body, is clothed with flesh, and death to the godly is but the putting off their clothes, and going to bed, Isa. lviii. 2. This my tabernacle: see 2 Cor. v. 1. Even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me: John xxi., Christ tells Peter of the kind of his death, that it should be violent, but speaks nothing there of the circumstance of the time; and therefore either this apostle had a twofold revelation of his death, the former as to the manner of it, and this latter concerning the time; or, if this here were no other but that, John xxi., it may be said, that, ver. 18, 22, Christ intimates that Peter's death should be before k Gal. 6. 10.

1 Thesa. 3.
12. & 5. 15.
1 John 4. 21.

† Gr. idē.
1 John 15. 2.
Tit. 3. 14.

m 1 John 2.
9, 11.

n Eph. 5. 26.
Heb. 9. 14.
1 John 1. 7.

o 1 John 3.
19.
p ch. 3. 17.

q Rom. 15.
14. 15. Phil.
3. 1. ch. 3. 1.
1 John 2. 21.
Jude 5.
r 1 Pet. 5. 12.
ch. 3. 17.

s 2 Cor. 5.
1, 4.
t ch. 3. 1.

u See Deu. 4.
21, 22. & 31.
14. 2 Tim.
4. 5.
x John 21.
18, 19.

John's, who should live till he came, viz. in judgment against Jerusalem to destroy it, which Peter now (observing the affairs of the Jews, and considering his Master's words, Matt. xxiv.) perceived to be nigh at hand; and thence infers, that his own death was not far off.

15 Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

These things; the doctrine before delivered concerning faith in Christ, the practice of good works, and their continuance in both. Always; this may be joined either to endeavour, and so relate to the apostle himself; he would always be diligent, and do his part, that they might have these things in remembrance: or rather, (according to our translation,) to having in remembrance, Peter being now near his end; and therefore this always may better refer to them that were to live after him, than to himself that was so soon to die. In remembrance; or, to commemorate them, viz. to the benefit and edification of the church; and this includes their having them in remembrance, but implies something more.

16 For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty.

Cunningly devised fables; human figments artificially contrived, either to please and gratify men's fancies, or to deceive and pervert their judgment: q. d. The things we have preached unto you (the sum of which is the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ) are the true sayings of God, not the fictions of men: and so he may have respect both to heathenish and Jewish fables. See 1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; 2 Tim. iv. 4; Tit. i. 14. The power; this relates to the Divine nature of Christ with its glorious effects, the efficacy of his doctrine, the miracles whereby he confirmed it, and especially his resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. And coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; this respects his human nature, his coming in the flesh, in which he manifested the power before mentioned; both together contain the sum of the whole gospel, viz. that Christ, the promised Messiah, is come in the flesh, and that he was furnished with power sufficient and ability to save sinners to the utmost. Or, Christ's coming here may be his second coming, to which the word here used is for the most part applied in the New Testament, and whereof his transfiguration, in the following verse, was a representation and a forerunner; and in the belief of which the apostle would confirm these saints against those that scoffed at it, chap. iii. 3, 4. But were eye-witnesses of his majesty: by Christ's majesty may be understood all that glory which did shine out in him during the whole time of his abode upon earth, John i. 14, but especially that more eminent manifestation of it in his transfiguration, in the next verse.

17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

Either honour and glory for glorious honour; or glory may relate to that lustre which appeared in the body of Christ at his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 2, and honour to the voice which came to him from his Father, and the honourable testimony thereby given him. From the excellent glory; either from heaven, or from the glorious God, the Father of Christ, who, by this voice, did in a special manner manifest his glorious presence. This is my beloved Son; i. e. This is the Messiah so often promised, and therefore all that was spoken of the Messiah in the law and the prophets centres in him. In whom I am well pleased: this implies not only that Christ is peculiarly the Beloved of the Father, but that all they that are adopted to God by faith in Christ, are beloved, and graciously accepted, in and through him, Matt. iii. 17; John xvii. 26; Eph. i. 6.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

We; I, and James, and John. Heard: the apostle avoucheth himself to have been an ear-witness, as well as eye-witness, of Christ's glory, hereby intimating that there was as much certainty of the gospel, even in a human way, as could possibly be obtained of any thing that is done in the world, seeing men can be humanly certain of nothing more than of what they perceive by their senses: compare 1 John i. 1, 3. The holy mount; so called, not because of any inherent holiness in it, but because of the extraordinary manifestation of God's presence there; in the same sense as the ground is called holy where God appeared to Moses and to Joshua, Exod. iii. 5; Josh. v. 15.

19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Peter having proved the certainty of the evangelical doctrine, by their testimony that had seen Christ's glory in his transfiguration, and heard the Father's testimony of him, now proves the same by the testimony of the prophets under the Old Testament, and calls the word of prophecy a more sure word, comparing it either, 1. With the voice from heaven, than which he calls the word of prophecy more firm or sure, not in respect of truth, (which was equal in both,) but in respect of the manner of its revelation; the voice from heaven being transient, and heard only by three apostles; whereas the word of prophecy was not only received by the prophets from God, but by his command committed to writing, confirmed by a succession of their fellow prophets in their several generations, and approved by Christ himself, and by him preferred before miracles themselves, Luke xvi. 29, 31. Or, 2. With the testimony of Peter and the other two apostles concerning that voice which came to Christ, than which testimony the word of prophecy is said to be more sure; not simply and in itself, but in respect of those to whom the apostle wrote; it was more firm in their minds who had received it; or, more sure as to them that were Jews, and had so fully entertained the writings of the prophets, and had them in so great veneration, being confirmed by the consent of so many ages; whereas the testimony of these apostles did not so fully appear to them to be Divine, as not being heretofore expressed in Scripture. Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed; i. e. that ye search and study it, subject your consciences to the power of it, and order your conversations according to it. A light; or, lamp, to which the word is often compared, Psal. cxix. 105; Prov. vi. 23; because, as a lamp or candle lighted dispels the darkness, and gives light to those that are in the house or room where it is; so the word gives light to all that are in God's house, as the church is called, 1 Tim. iii. 15. A dark place; or, dirty, squalid, because places that have no light are usually filthy; the dirt which is not seen is not removed. Until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts; either, 1. The last day, called the day by way of excellency, because when it once begins it will never end, and will be all light without any darkness: and then what is said of the word of prophecy is to be understood of the whole Scripture; and the sense is, that whereas the whole time of this life is but a kind of night of error and ignorance, God hath set up his candle, given us the light of the Scripture to guide us and lead us, till we come to the glorious light of the future life, in which we shall have no need of the light of the Scripture to direct us, but shall see God as he is, and face to face, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. According to this exposition, the dawning of the day, and the day-star arising, do not signify different parts of the same day, but rather the whole day, as opposed to that darkness which would totally overspread us, were it not for the light the word affords us: our minds of themselves are dark, in them the light of the word shines, and dispels the darkness by degrees, according as the Spirit gives us more understanding of it; but yet the darkness will not be wholly removed, till the day of eternal life dawn upon us, and the day-star of the perfect knowledge of God in the beatific vision arise in our hearts. Or, 2. By the day dawning, and the day-star arising, may be understood a more full,

1 Cor. 1.
17. & 2. 1.
4. 9 Cor. 4.
17. & 2.
Matt. 17.
1. 2. Mark
9. 2. John 1.
14. 1. John 1.
1. & 14.

a Matt. 9.
17. & 17. 5.
Mark 1. 11.
& 9. 7. Luke
3. 22. & 9. 35.

b See Ex. 2.
& Josh. 5. 15.
Matt. 17. 6.

e Ps. 119.
105. John 5.
26.
4 Rev. 2. 28.
& 21. 16.
See 2 Cor. 4.
4, 8.

clear, and explicit knowledge of Christ, and the mysteries of the gospel; and then this relates particularly to the prophecies of the Old Testament; and, as Paul calls the times of the Old Testament a night, Rom. xiii. 12, as being a time of darkness and shadows, in comparison of the light and knowledge of Christ under the New Testament; so Peter here compares the writings of the prophets to a candle, which gives some, but less light, and the preaching of the gospel to the dawning day, and day-star arising; and commends these Christian Jews to whom he wrote, for making use of and attending to even this lesser light, till they attained to greater degrees of illumination, and the day-star of a more full and clear knowledge of Christ, as revealed in the gospel, did arise in their hearts. This exposition is favoured by Acts xvii. 11; they there, and so the Jewish converts here, did search the Scriptures, to see if the things spoken by the apostles did agree with what was before written by the prophets; and as they there, so these here, are commended for their diligence in so doing, and intimation given them, that they must attend to the light of the Old Testament prophecies, till they were thereby led into a greater knowledge and understanding of the gospel revelation.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 12. 6. 20 Knowing this first, that <sup>e</sup>no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation.

Knowing this first; either, principally and above other things, as being most worthy to be known; or, knowing this as the first principle of faith, or the first thing to be believed. That no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation: the Greek word here used may be rendered, either, 1. As our translators do, interpretation, or explication; and then the meaning is, not that private men are not to interpret the Scripture, only refer all to the church; but that no man nor company of men, no church nor public officers, are to interpret the Scripture of their own heads, according to their own minds, so as to make their private sense be the sense of the Scripture, but to seek the understanding of it from God, who shows them the meaning of the word in the word itself, (the more obscure places being expounded by the more clear,) and by his Spirit leads believers, in their searching the Scripture, into the understanding of his mind in it: God himself being the author of the word, as ver. 21, is the best interpreter of it. Or, 2. Mission or dismissal; a metaphor taken from races, where they that ran were let loose from the stage where the race began, that they might run their course. The prophets in the Old Testament are said to run, as being God's messengers, Jer. xxiii. 21, and God is said to send them, Ezek. xiii. 6, 7. And then this doth not immediately concern the interpretation of the Scripture, but the first revelation of it, spoken of in the next verse; and the question is not, Who hath authority to interpret the Scripture now written? but, What authority the penmen had to write it? and consequently, what respect is due to it? and why believers are so carefully to take heed to it? And then the meaning is, that it is the first principle of our faith, that the Scripture is not of human invention, but Divine inspiration; that the prophets wrote not their own private sense in it, but the mind of God; and at his command, not their own pleasure.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 16. <sup>g</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 11. <sup>h</sup> Or, at any time. <sup>i</sup> 2 Sam. 23. 2. <sup>j</sup> Luke 1. 70. <sup>k</sup> Acts 1. 16. & 2. 18. 21 For 'the prophecy came not || in old time by the will of man: <sup>l</sup>but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

The prophecy; the prophetic writings, or word of prophecy, ver. 19. Came not in old time by the will of man; the prophets spake not of themselves what and when they pleased. But holy men of God; prophets, called men of God, 1 Sam. ii. 27; ix. 6; 1 Kings xvii. 18, and elsewhere. They are here called holy, not only because of their lives, wherein they were examples to others, but because they were the special instruments of the Holy Ghost, who sanctified them to the work of preaching, and penning what he dictated to them. Spake as they were moved; or, carried out, or acted, i. e. elevated above their own natural abilities. This may imply the illumination of their minds with the knowledge of Divine mysteries, the gift of infallibility, that they might not err, of prophecy, to foretell things to come, and a peculiar instinct of the Holy Ghost, whereby they were moved to preach or write.

CHAP. II

The apostle foretelleth the appearance of false teachers, the impiety of them and their followers, and the judgments that would overtake them, 1—6. The godly shall be delivered, as Lot was out of Sodom, 7—9. The wicked principles and manners of these seducers described, 10—19. The mischief of relapsing into sin, 20—22.

BUT <sup>a</sup>there were false prophets also among the people, even as <sup>b</sup>there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even <sup>c</sup>denying the Lord <sup>d</sup>that bought them, <sup>e</sup>and bring upon themselves swift destruction.

But there were false prophets also: the apostle having been exhorting them to continuance and progress in faith, admonishes them here of such as might labour to draw them from it; and having made mention of the Old Testament prophets, holy men of God, he hereby takes occasion to tell them of, and caution them against, false teachers which would be among themselves. This also in the text plainly relates to what went before: q. d. Together with those prophets which were sent by God, there were likewise false prophets, such as were not sent of him. Among the people; the people of Israel. Even as there shall be false teachers; teachers of false doctrine, Matt. vii. 15; Acts xx. 29. Among you; among you Jewish, as well as among the Gentile Christians; or, among you as Christians and God's people under the New Testament, in opposition to the people of God under the Old. Who shall privily bring in: the Greek word signifies either to bring in slyly and craftily, under specious pretences, and without being observed, Gal. ii. 4; Jude 4; or, to bring in over and above, or beside the doctrine of the gospel, which they did not renounce; or both may be implied. Damnable heresies; Greek, heresies of destruction, i. e. destructive, such as lead to destruction, viz. eternal, or damnation. Even denying; either in their words or their practices, either directly, or by consequence of their doctrines or actions; they that profess they know God, but contradict that profession in their lives, are said to deny him, Tit. i. 16. The Lord; either, 1. God the Father, so called, Luke ii. 29; Acts iv. 24, &c., and probably Rev. vi. 10; nor is there any necessity, but Jude 4, the word may be understood of God the Father. Or rather, 2. Christ. That bought them: if we understand it of God the Father, the sense is, either, 1. Denying God that bought them, or acquired them and made them his, viz. by calling them out of the darkness and gross wickedness of the world, to the knowledge of Christ and the gospel, and the fellowship of his church. In this general sense the word buying is sometimes taken, Isa. lv. 1; Rev. iii. 18. Or, 2. Denying God that bought the people of Israel (whereof these false teachers that should be among the Christian Jews were to be a part) out of Egypt, to make them his peculiar people, whereof they would boast themselves, and yet by their wicked practices deny that God that bought them; the words seem to be taken out of Deut. xxxii. 6, Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? as likewise from ver. 5 of that chapter. Peter calls them spots, ver. 13 of this chapter. But if we understand it of Christ, which seems most probable, the sense is, either, 1. That Christ bought or redeemed them, (in which sense the word is sometimes taken,) in that by his death he purchased the continuance of their lives, and the staying of their execution, and rescued them from that present destruction which, without Christ's interposition, had seized on them, as it had likewise on the whole visible creation immediately upon the apostacy of mankind. Or, 2. This is spoken not only of their pretences, that they should profess themselves redeemed by Christ, but in the style of the visible church, which should judge them to be so till they declared the contrary by their wicked actions; and it likewise holds true in a forensical or judicial style,

<sup>a</sup> Deut. 18. 1.
<sup>b</sup> Mat. 24. 11.
<sup>c</sup> Acts 20. 30.
<sup>d</sup> 1 Cor. 11. 19.
<sup>e</sup> 1 Tim. 4. 1.
<sup>f</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 13.
<sup>g</sup> 1 John 4. 1.
<sup>h</sup> Jude 18.
<sup>i</sup> Jude 4.
<sup>j</sup> 1 Cor. 8. 20.
<sup>k</sup> Gal. 3. 13.
<sup>l</sup> Eph. 1. 7.
<sup>m</sup> Heb. 10. 29.
<sup>n</sup> Phil. 3. 19.

<sup>1</sup> Pet. 1. 18. Rev. 5. 9. e Phil. 3. 19.

according to which whosoever professeth himself to be redeemed by Christ, and yet denies him in his deeds, is said to deny the Lord that bought him; it being alike as to the greatness of the crime, whether he be really redeemed, or, professing himself to be so, denies his Redeemer. And bring upon themselves swift destruction; shall hasten their own destruction, it may be temporal in this world; to be sure, eternal in the other. It may be called swift, as coming upon them unawares, and when they think least of it, as 1 Thess. v. 3.

2 And many shall follow their || pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

And many shall follow their pernicious ways; Greek, their destructions, i. e. those ways of error which are attended with destruction (the effect being put for the cause by a metonymy); and the sense is, that as these false teachers shall bring destruction upon themselves by their heresies; so others, running with them into the same errors, shall fall into the same destruction. By reason of whom; or, by whom, viz. these false teachers, or their followers, or both. The way of truth; the gospel, so called, as being the doctrine of saving truth. It is called the way, Acts ix. 2; xix. 9; xxii. 4; the way of salvation, Acts xvi. 17; the way of God, Acts xviii. 26. Shall be evil spoken of; blasphemed, whether by false teachers themselves and their followers, or by others taking occasion by them: see Rom. ii. 24; 1 Tim. vi. 1; Tit. ii. 5.

3 And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

With feigned words; deceitful speeches, which have a show of truth to hide their errors. Make merchandise of you; as of slaves or beasts: it seems to be a metaphor taken from merchants that speak great things of bad wares, the better to vend them; the sense is, with specious words, and pious pretences, they shall deceive you to make a gain of you. Whose judgment; or, condemnation. Now of a long time; being of old determined by God, and foretold in the Scripture, and so nearer than they themselves imagine. Lingereth not; i. e. goes on apace, and hastens on them. And their damnation; or, destruction. Slumbereth not: i. e. watcheth, as ready to overtake them in its time: it may be a metaphor taken from a traveller, as Prov. vi. 11; or the apostle alludes to Deut. xxxiii. 35, where the like expression is found: see ver. 1 of this chapter.

4 For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment;

For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell: elsewhere called the deep, Luke viii. 31, and the bottomless pit, Rev. ix. 1; xi. 7; xvii. 8; xx. 1, 3. This implies a change, 1. Of the state of those sinning angels, that whereas before it was the highest among the creatures, now it is the lowest. 2. Of their place, that whereas they were before the throne of God with the rest of the angels, they are now thrust down into a lower place, agreeable to their sin and misery. What place that is we find not expressed in Scripture, and therefore we are not to be over-curious in our inquiries after it; but may rest satisfied, that they are excluded from the place of their primitive happiness, and are in a place where they are afflicted with the pain both of loss and sense. And delivered them into chains of darkness: either to be bound, or held with darkness as with chains; or kept in chains under darkness, as Jude 6; where darkness may imply the misery and horror of their condition, and chains, their obduracy in their wickedness, their despair of deliverance, their expectation of future judgment, Heb. x. 27, together with the providence and power of God, watching over and holding them in that condition, till final vengeance come upon them. It is a metaphor taken from malefactors condemned, who are bound in chains, and kept in the dungeon till execution. To be reserved; so kept that they cannot escape. Unto judgment; viz. that of the last day, the time of their full torment, in which the wrath of God, which they feel in a great measure now, will come upon them to the utmost.

5 And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;

And spared not the old world: the world, for men in the world, viz. those that lived in it before the flood. But saved Noah the eighth person; viz. together with the other seven, his wife, three sons, and their wives, 1 Pet. iii. 20. Noah may be particularly named, because God had a special respect to him, and for his sake spared others. A preacher: constituted to be so by Divine authority and commission. Of righteousness: i. e. not only, 1. Of the righteousness of God, who had threatened to destroy the world for its wickedness; but, 2. Of the righteousness of Christ upon all them that should believe. It is not to be doubted but he preached the same righteousness whereof he himself was heir, and that was the righteousness of faith, Heb. xi. 7; and this he did not in words only, but in his actions; in that he built the ark for the saving himself and his household, which was a type of the salvation of believers by Christ. And, 3. Of the righteousness of sanctification, in his exhorting the men that then were to repentance and holiness, if possibly thereby they might prevent the approaching deluge. Bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; the whole multitude of wicked men then living in the world.

6 And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly;

The cities of Sodom and Gomorrha; which being the chief of the five, include Admah and Zeboim, Zoar, the fifth, being spared for Lot's sake, Gen. xiv. 18, compared with xix. 25. Condemned them with an overthrow; i. e. punished them with a total subversion, or brought that destruction upon them to which he had condemned them. Making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; of his wrath and vengeance ready to be poured out upon others that should live ungodly, to deter them from the imitation of the sins of those that had so miserably perished. The word may be rendered a type, (as it is, Heb. viii. 5, and ix. 23.) viz. of hell-fire, which is to be the punishment of wicked men at the last day: Jude 7 implies as much. As the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt was a kind of type of the deliverance of all God's people to the end of the world; so the subversion of these cities was so memorable an instance of Divine vengeance, that the Scripture frequently alludes to it, as a type or pattern, when it speaks of the general destruction of the wicked of the world.

7 And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked:

Vexed; grievously afflicted or wearied. The wicked; unjust, lawless, (understand men,) such as had no respect to law or justice, in opposition to Lot, whom he calls just and righteous.

8 (*For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds;)

Seeing and hearing: their wickedness was so open and shameless, that he not only heard the report of it, but saw them commit it, Isa. iii. 9. Vexed; Greek, tormented, i. e. extremely afflicted and troubled his own soul, provoking himself to godly sorrow at the sight and fame of their unlawful deeds. His grief was voluntary, and he active in it; the like is said of Christ, on occasion of Lazarus's death, John xi. 33, where the margin reads, he troubled himself.

9 The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished:

m Gen. 7. 1,
7. 23.
Heb. 11. 7.
1 Pet. 3. 20.
n 1 Pet. 3. 19.
o ch. 3. 6.

p Gen. 19. 24.
Deut. 29. 25.
q Jude 7.
r Num. 23.
10.

r Gen. 19.
16.

s Wisd. 19.
17.
t Ps. 119.
139, 158.
Ezek. 9. 4.

u Ps. 34. 17.
19. 1 Cor.
10. 13.

The Lord knoweth; according to the common rule, that words of knowledge in Scripture connote affections, as Psal. i. 6. God's knowing here implies not only his infinite wisdom, whereby he is never at a loss, but knows all the various ways whereby the godly may be delivered; but likewise his love and good will to them, whereby he is ready to do it, hath a heart for it: so the word is taken, Eccles. iv. 13; Amos iii. 10; the text reads, will no more be admonished, the margin, knows not, &c. How to deliver the godly; those that walk in the steps of just Lot and Noah, who was perfect in his generation. This concludes what the apostle began, ver. 4: the sum is, If God spared neither wicked angels nor wicked men, destroying the old world and Sodom, but delivered Lot and Noah, righteous persons; he still hath wisdom, power, and will to deliver other godly men, and punish other wicked men. Out of temptations; afflictions, James i. 2, 12. And to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished: the Greek word is in the present tense, which may be understood, either, 1. As put for the future, and then the sense is as in our translation, that though God many times lets the wicked alone in this world, so that they escape present punishment, yet they shall not escape future torment; they are a while spared, but never pardoned; and when free from temporal evils, are reserved for eternal vengeance. Or, 2. It may be understood as in the present tense, which agrees well with the instances of God's vengeance before mentioned, which was executed on wicked men in this world; and then the sense is, The Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of temptations when he sees fit, even in this life, and how to reserve those wicked men, whom he punisheth with temporal judgments here, to a much more severe and dreadful punishment at the day of judgment hereafter.

† Jude 4, 7, 8, 10, 16.

! Or, dominion. † Jude 6.

10 But chiefly * them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise || government. † Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities.

But chiefly them: the apostle here applies the general doctrine delivered to false teachers, whose character he gives in several particulars; the sense is, that God reserves all wicked men to the day of judgment, but those especially that second their corrupt doctrine with a wicked conversation. The verb reserve is to be repeated from the former verse. That walk after the flesh; to walk after the flesh is either, 1. To follow the conduct of the sensual appetite, like brute beasts, which are led by sense, not by reason or judgment: or, 2. More especially it implies their giving up themselves to filthy lusts, probably unnatural ones, Jude 7, going after strange flesh. In the lust of; i. e. through, or out of, implying the cause or spring from whence their actual uncleanness came, viz. their own lust. Uncleanness; or, pollution; q. d. In the lust whereby they are polluted, or in their impure lusts. And despise government; i. e. governors, or magistrates; as brotherhood for brethren, 1 Pet. ii. 17. Presumptuous; Greek, bold, or daring, viz. because they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. Self-willed; stubborn, refractory, addicted to their own ways, and therefore will not be ruled by others. Dignities; or, glories, viz. rulers and magistrates, whom God hath made glorious, or on whom he hath put the honour of being above others, and made them his own lieutenants and vicegerents upon earth.

† Jude 9.

! Some read, against the magistrates.

11 Whereas *angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation || against them before the Lord.

Angels; good angels, Jude 9. Greater; either greater than these audacious false teachers, or else greater than the forementioned dignities. In power and might; i. e. greater in their natural strength, and in their dignity. Bring not railing accusation; use not reviling, reproachful language; the same with speaking evil in the former verse. Against them; either, 1. Against dignities, ver. 10; and then the meaning is, that good angels, great and powerful as they are, yet bring not a railing accusation before the Lord against magistrates and princes, but when they have had any thing against them, yet have carried themselves with modesty, and due respect to that dignity in which God had placed such, having a regard to civil government as God's constitution, and being themselves, at God's appointment, guardians and keepers, even of wicked kingdoms, as Dan. x. and xi. Or, 2. Against themselves, as in the margin; and then the sense is, that angels do not reproach nor revile each other, nay, not the devil himself, as appears, Jude 9, which place may explain this; and therefore it did ill become these false teachers, who were so much below angels, to contemn, revile, or rail on princes and civil magistrates, who were so much above themselves, and had their authority from God.

12 But these, * as natural brute beasts, † made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption;

† Jer. 12. 2. Jude 10.

But these; the false teachers before mentioned. As natural brute beasts; beasts which are void of reason, and follow only their sensual inclination. Made to be taken and destroyed; being made for men's use, and so to be a prey to them; while they hasten after their food, they are taken in nets and snares, and being taken are destroyed. Speak evil of the things that they understand not; either the great mysteries of religion, whereof they are stupidly ignorant; or rather, dignities, before mentioned, which they, (not knowing, or not considering, them to be of God, and of so great use to men,) following the inclination of their own corrupt natures, speak against. And shall utterly perish in their own corruption; or, shall be corrupted in their own corruption, i. e. shall be utterly destroyed by their own fault and folly; penal corruption (or perdition) following upon sinful. The sum is, That as brute beasts, which have no reason, follow their brutish appetite, till it lead them into destruction, and where they sought their meat they find their death, Prov. vii. 23; so these false teachers, not being guided by reason, much less by the light of the Spirit, but merely by sway of their natural inclinations, in speaking evil of that ordinance which God hath honoured, shall bring upon themselves that destruction they have deserved.

13 † And shall receive the reward of b Phil. 3. 19. unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure † to riot in the day time. † Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while † they feast with you;

c See Rom. 13. 13. d Jude 12.

e 1 Cor. 11. 20, 21.

And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness: under this general term, all the several sins they are charged with are comprehended. As they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time; this is said to aggravate their sin, and signifies either their impudence in it, that they had cast off all shame, and practised their luxury by day-light, whereas ordinary sinners are wont to choose the night for such works of darkness, Rom. xiii. 12, 13; 1 Thess. v. 7; or their security, that they spent the day of their life in their pleasures, placing their happiness in present enjoyments, unmindful of a future reckoning and an eternal state. Spots they are and blemishes; not only altogether polluted themselves, but such as defile others, and are blemishes to the church whereof they profess themselves members. Sporting themselves with their own deceivings: some read ἀπαραις instead of ἀναραις, leaving out the pronoun, rendered their own; and understand this of the love-feasts, in which they luxuriously gorged themselves. This might well agree with Jude 12, but that the generality of Greek copies read ἀναραις, which we turn deceivings, i. e. either errors, taking the word passively; q. d. They do but make a sport of sin, and please themselves with it; and this agrees too with Jude 12, feeding themselves without fear: or cheatings, or imposing upon others, taking deceivings actively; q. d. They sport themselves while they so finely deceive you, pretending love in their feasting with you, when they do it only to gratify their appetites; or sporting themselves, and making merry, with what they have cheated you of. While they feast with you; viz. in your feasts of charity, with the specious pretence of which they covered their naughtiness.

14 Having eyes full of † adultery, and † that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: 'an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children:

† Cr. an adulteress.

Having eyes; he mentions the eyes, both because they let in the objects of lust into the heart, Job xxxi. 1; Matt. v. 28, and because the signs of lust in the heart appear especially in the eyes, Gen. xxxix. 7; Prov. vi. 25. Full of adultery; full of an adulteress, which either may be a Hebraism, the concrete being put for the abstract, as drunken for drunkenness, and thirsty for thirst, Deut. xxix. 19; or it may be a proverbial expression of the wretchedness of such men's hearts, when they still carried an adulteress in their eyes. That cannot cease from sin; never satisfied with looking upon, or still looking about for, such objects as might inflame their lusts; or still seeking with wanton looks to entice others to folly. Beguiling; either alluring them by their wantonness to embrace their false doctrines, promising them pleasures and carnal liberties, ver. 18; or enticing them to lewdness, by instilling false doctrines into them, which tend to licentiousness. Unstable souls; those that were not well grounded in the faith and doctrine of holiness, who might therefore easily be drawn aside. An heart they have exercised with covetous practices; a heart wholly intent upon getting gain, accustomed to it, and skilful in it. Practices; the word is in the plural number, to show that the seducers had several arts and ways of exercising their covetousness. Cursed children; Greek, children of the curse. It may be taken either actively, for such as were causes of a curse, brought a curse with them; or passively, for such as were worthy of a curse, or obnoxious to it; as children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3.

15 Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of <sup>g</sup>Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness;

The right way; the way of truth, ver. 2, i. e. the way of faith and holiness, which is the only right way to happiness. Are gone astray; into the by-paths of error. There is but one right way, and many wrong, in which they wander that leave the right. He seems to allude to Balaam, Numb. xxii., who left the way of God, which was, to be obedient to God, and not go beyond his word, ver. 18, and ran into the way of sin, when he went with Balak's messengers to curse God's people; and therefore his way is said to be perverse, ver. 32. Following the way of Balaam; 1. In respect of their false doctrine: for, as Balaam was disobedient to God, and against his command, went to Balak; so these men forsook the way of truth prescribed by God in his word. 2. In respect of their wicked lives: Balaam taught Balak to entice the children of Israel to commit fornication, and eat things sacrificed unto idols, Rev. ii. 14; and these taught men to commit lewdness, and indulge themselves in their sensualities. 3. Chiefly in respect of their covetousness, as follows. Of Bosor; either this is the name of his country, called Pethor, Numb. xxii. 5, and by change of two letters, P into B, and th into s, (frequent in the Syriac language,) Besor, or Bosor: or, the name of his father, called Beor, in Numbers, having two names; unless the apostle call him Bosor in allusion to Basar, flesh, as being of a fleshly mind, as the false teachers here were. Thus Beth-el was called Beth-aven, Hos. iv. 15; and Beelzebub called Beelzeboul, the god of dung, Matt. x. 25. Who loved the wages of unrighteousness; the reward which Balak offered him for an unrighteous act, viz. the cursing of God's people.

16 But was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet.

But was rebuked; not only by the angel's speaking to him, but by the ass's, as follows. The dumb ass speaking with man's voice, forbade; not in express words, that we read of, but the ass's speaking with human voice, discerning the angel before Balaam did, and going back, when he, carried out by the power of his covetousness, would needs go forward, were so prodigious things as might sufficiently convince him of his sin, in going to Balak contrary to God's command at first given; and it was no small dishonour put upon him, that he who would not hearken to God, should have an ass for his teacher. The madness; in going against God's command, and to curse those who, God had told him, were blessed. Object. Balaam had leave given him to go with Balak's messengers, Numb. xxii. 20, and refused Balak's offers, ver. 18. Answer. Balaam did not contemn the gifts offered, but had a desire after them, as appears by his inquiring of God the second time, ver. 19, though God had fully revealed his will to him before, ver. 12. 2. God bade him go that he might bless the people, ver. 12, compared with ver. 20, whereas he went not out of a respect to God's answer, but out of a covetous mind, and a desire to curse Israel, as appears by Josh. xxiv. 9, 10, and by the cursed counsel he gave, Numb. xxv. 1, compared with xxxi. 16, and Rev. ii. 14. Of the prophet: Balaam is called a prophet here, either, 1. Because he pretended to be so: thus the false prophets are sometimes called absolutely prophets, Jer. vi. 13; xxvi. 7, 8, 11. Or, 2. Because he really was a prophet, though a wicked and covetous one; for he inquired of God, and had answers from him, Numb. vi. 22; viii. 9, 10, 18, 19; and Moses says expressly, that the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, Numb. xxiii. 5, 16; and that prophecy concerning the Messiah, Numb. xxiv. 17, could not but be of God, yet it is probable that Balaam, out of covetousness, might sometimes use divination, nay, it is plain in some cases he did, Numb. xxiv. 1.

17 <sup>h</sup>These are wells without water, <sup>b</sup>clouds that are carried with a tempest; <sup>h</sup>to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.

These are wells without water: he compares seducers, 1. To wells without water; because as a well invites a traveller to it in hope of quenching his thirst, but being without water, mocks his expectation; so false teachers, making a show of true wisdom and saving knowledge, draw men to them, but being destitute of it, delude them, and make them no wiser than they were. Clouds that are carried with a tempest; 2. To clouds, &c.; because as clouds many times, promising rain and refreshment, either are scattered by the wind, or break out into a tempest: so these, when they promise to refresh their hearers' souls with the truth of God, being themselves destitute of it, do them no good, or with their pernicious errors, or corrupt manners, do them much harm. By this comparison he sets forth, (1.) Their inconsistency, that, like clouds driven with the wind, they are tossed to and fro, from one doctrine to another, Eph. iv. 14. And, (2.) Their deceitfulness, that they make a show of what they have not, as clouds do of rain, when yet they are scattered, without yielding any. The mist of darkness; i. e. the darkest darkness, called outer darkness, Matt. viii. 12; xxii. 13; xxv. 30; by which the torments of hell are sometimes set forth, as well as sometimes by fire.

18 For when <sup>i</sup>they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that <sup>k</sup>were clean escaped from them who live in error.

Great swelling words of vanity; i. e. big words, full of sound, and void of sense, at least of truth. He seems to tax the affected, vain speech of seducers, who were wont to clothe their erroneous doctrines (if not disguise the truths of God) with strange, uncouth phrases, which made a show of some rare discoveries, or deep mysteries, whereas indeed they were empty of any thing solid, or tending to edification. They allure: as with a bait; a metaphor taken from the manner of taking fish. Through the lusts of the flesh; to which they give liberty, as a bait to draw men after them. Through much wantonness; this explains the former, and shows what lusts they indulge men in, viz. wantonness and uncleanness. Those that were clean escaped; truly, or really, which seems the better reading than that in the margin: and this is said of them, 1. In respect of the profession they made of a real conversion. 2. In respect of the assent they gave to the word by which they were called. 3. In respect of the change that appeared in their outward conversation. From them who live in error: whether the error of Judaism, or heathenism, wherein they had been formerly involved, and others still were. This might be the case of some in whom yet there was no saving change

<sup>g</sup> Numb. 22.
5, 7, 21, 25.
<sup>h</sup> Jude 11.

<sup>b</sup> Jude 12, 13.

<sup>i</sup> Jude 18.

<sup>k</sup> Acts 2. 40.
ch. 1. 4.
ver. 20.
| Or, for a little, or, a while, or, a some read.

wrought; that they might be brought off from those more foul ways of sin and error in which they had walked. and yet might afterward return to the same, or as bad, Matt. xii. 43; xiii. 21.

1 Gal. 6. 13.
1 Pet. 2. 16.
2 John 8.
24. Rom. 6.
16.

19 While they promise them<sup>1</sup> liberty, they themselves are<sup>m</sup> the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

While they promise them liberty; liberty for their lusts, and so from the yoke of the Divine law. They abused the name of Christian liberty, and extended it to licentiousness. They themselves are the servants of corruption; under the power and dominion of sin. For of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage: he alludes to the law of war, according to which, he that is overcome, and taken captive by his enemy, becomes his servant. These false teachers, that talked so much of Christian liberty, yet being overcome by their own lusts, and kept under by them, were the worst of slaves.

n Mat. 12. 45.
Luke 11. 28.
Heb. 6. 4.
Ec. 4. 10.
26. 27.
o ch. 1. 4.
ver. 18.
p ch. 1. 2.

20 For<sup>n</sup> if after they<sup>o</sup> have escaped the pollutions of the world<sup>p</sup> through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

The pollutions of the world; those more gross wickednesses in which most of the world still lieth, 1 John v. 19. Through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; such a knowledge of Christ as brings with it an outward reformation of life, though it do not purify the heart. For that the apostle doth not here speak of those that were rooted in Christ by a saving and heart-purifying faith, appears by ver. 14, where he calls them unstable souls. They are again entangled therein, and overcome; return to their old sins, yield up themselves to them, and continue in them.

q Luke 12.
47. 48.
John 9. 41.
& 16. 22.

21 For<sup>q</sup> it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

It had been better for them not to have known; their sin had been less if they had not known the truth, but now they sin against knowledge, and therein their apostacy is much worse than their ignorance would have been. The way of righteousness; the way of obtaining righteousness by Christ, and of living godly in Christ, 2 Tim. iii. 12, prescribed in the gospel; the same which is called the right way, ver. 15, and the way of truth, ver. 2. The holy commandment; the same in other words. It is called holy, not only as proceeding from God, who is holy, but as teaching nothing but what is holy, and being the means God useth in making men holy, and as being opposed to the pollutions of the world before mentioned.

r Prov. 28.
11.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, 'The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.'

But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb: this is added, to prevent the scandal that might arise from their apostacy; q. d. It is not to be wondered at that they are again entangled in and overcome by their former pollutions, when there never was a thorough change wrought in their hearts. Dogs and swine (beasts unclean by the law) they still were, under the greatest appearances of reformation, and such they now show themselves to be by their vile apostacy. The dog is turned to his own vomit again: as dogs vomit up what is burdensome to them, but, still being dogs, and not having changed their natures by easing their stomachs, lick up their own vomit again; so these, under a fit of conviction, through the power of the word, disgorge those sins which burdened their consciences, but having thereby gotten some ease, and their old nature and love to their former lusts still remaining, they again return to the same sins they had for a time forsaken.

The sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire: as swine, that naturally love the dirt and mire, if sometimes they be washed from it, yet, still retaining their former disposition, return again to it; so likewise these here mentioned, however they may be washed from the pollutions of the world, and by the preaching of the gospel brought off from their former ways of sin, and brought into a profession of holiness, yet, still retaining their old nature and corrupt dispositions, they are easily prevailed over by them, and so relapse into their former abominations.

CHAP. III

The apostle declareth it to be the design of both his Epistles to remind the brethren of Christ's coming to judgment, in opposition to scoffers, 1—7. No argument can be drawn against it from the delay, which is designed to leave men room for repentance, 8, 9. He describeth the day of the Lord, and exhorteth to holiness of life in expectation of it, 10—14. He showeth that Paul had taught the like in his Epistles, 15, 16; and concludeth with advice to beware of seduction, and to grow in Christian grace and knowledge, 17, 18.

THIS second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which<sup>a</sup> I stir up<sup>a</sup> your pure minds by way of remembrance:

This second epistle: this confirms what has been said, that this Epistle was written by Peter, as well as the former. I stir up your pure minds; or, sincere minds: the sense is either, 1. I stir up your minds; and they may be pure and sincere; and then he doth not so much commend them for what they were, as direct and exhort them to what they should be, that they might receive benefit by what he wrote, there being nothing that contributes more to the fruitful entertaining of the word, than sincerity and honesty of heart, when men lay aside those things which are contrary to it, and might hinder its efficacy, 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2. Or, 2. I stir up your minds, though pure and sincere, to continuance and constancy in that pure doctrine ye have received. By way of remembrance: see chap. i. 13.

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets,<sup>b</sup> and of the commandment<sup>b</sup> of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

The words which were spoken before by the holy prophets; the word of prophecy, chap. i. 19: he joins the prophets and apostles together, as concurring in their doctrine, and so useth it as an argument to persuade them to constancy in the faith of the gospel, that what the apostles preached to them was confirmed by what the prophets under the Old Testament had taught before, Acts xxvi. 22; Eph. ii. 20. And of the commandment of us; by this he means the whole doctrine of the gospel preached by him and the other apostles: see chap. ii. 21; 1 John iii. 23. The apostles of the Lord and Saviour; who was the author of this commandment, and the principal in giving it, and from whom the apostles received it, who were but ministers and instruments in delivering it to others.

3<sup>c</sup> Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers,<sup>d</sup> walking after their own lusts,

Knowing this first; especially, as being very necessary to be known. The apostle having in the former chapter cautioned these saints against the more close enemies of the gospel, seducers and false teachers, here he foretells them of more open enemies, profane scoffers. In the last days: see 1 Cor. x. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 1. Scoffers; profane contemners of God, and deriders of his truth, Psal. i. 1; cxix. 51; Isa. xxviii. 14, 22. Walking after their own lusts; such as are natural to them; lusts of ungodliness, Jude 18.

4 And saying, 'Where is the promise of his coming?' for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

e 1 Tim. 4. 1.
2 Tim. 3. 1.
Jude 18.
d ch. 2. 1a.

f Isa. 5. 19.
Jer. 17. 18.
Ezek. 12.
22. 27.
Matt. 24. 48.
Luke 12. 48.

And saying, Where is the promise? questioning or denying the great truths of the gospel, thereby to encourage themselves in walking after their own lusts. Of his coming; viz. Christ's, mentioned ver. 2. Possibly these scoffers might drop the name of Christ by way of contempt, not vouchsafing to mention it, as the Jews did, John ix. 29; q. d. Where is the promise of his coming whom you expect? His coming, to judge the world; q. d. His promised coming doth not appear, the promise of it is not fulfilled. For since the fathers, who died in the faith of Christ's coming, and had the promise of it, fell asleep; i. e. died; the usual phrase of Scripture, which these scoffers seem to speak in derision; q. d. It is so long since the fathers fell asleep, (as you call it,) that it were more than time for them to be awakened, whereas we see the contrary. All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation; i. e. the world continues to be the same it was, and hath the same parts it had; we see nothing changed, nothing abolished, but still nature keeps its old course. Thus they argue, that because there had been no such great change, therefore there should be none; because Christ was not yet come to judgment, therefore he should not come at all; not considering the power of God, who is as able to destroy the world as to make it, nor the will of God revealed in his word concerning the end of it.

<sup>f Gen. 1. 6, 9. Pa. 33. 6. Heb. 11. 3. 1 Cor. consisting. g Pa. 24. 2. h 136. 4. Col. 1. 17.</sup> 5 For this they willingly are ignorant of, that <sup>b</sup>by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth †standing out of the water and in the water:

For this they willingly are ignorant of; they will not know what they ought to know, and, if they would search the Scripture, might know. That by the word of God; the command of God, or word of his power, as it is called, Heb. i. 3: see Gen. i. 6, 9; Psal. xxxiii. 6; cxlviii. 5. The heavens were; were created, or had a being given them, Gen. i. 6. Of old; from the beginning of the world. And the earth; the globe of the earth, which comprehends likewise the seas and rivers, as parts of the whole. Standing out of the water and in the water: according to our translation, the sense of these words may be plainly this, that the earth, standing partly out of the water, (as all the dry land doth, whose surface is higher than the water,) and partly in the water, (as those parts do which are under it,) or in the midst of the water, as being covered and encompassed by seas and rivers. But most expositors follow the marginal reading, and render the Greek word by consisting; and then the meaning may be, either, 1. That the earth consisting of water, as the matter out of which it was formed, (Moses calling the chaos which was that matter, waters, Gen. i. 2,) and by water, from which it hath its compactness and solidity, and without which it would be wholly dry, mere useless dust, unfit for the generation and production of natural things. If we understand the words thus, the argument lies against the scoffers; for the earth thus consists of and by water, yet God made use of the water for the destroying of the world; and so natural causes are not sufficient for its preservation without the power of God sustaining it in its being; and whenever he withdraws that power, in spite of all inferior causes, it must perish. Or, 2. The words may thus be read, the heavens were of old, and the earth (supply from the former clause) was out of the water, and consisting by, or in, the water; and the meaning is, that the earth did emerge, or appear out of, or above, the water, viz. when God gathered the waters together, and made the dry land appear; and doth consist by, or among, or in, the midst of the waters, as was before explained.

<sup>h Gen. 7. 11, 21, 22, 23. ch. 2. 5.</sup> 6 <sup>b</sup>Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:

Whereby; by which heavens and water, mentioned in the former verse, the fountains of the great deep being broken up, and the windows of heaven opened, Gen. vii. 11. Or, by the word of God, as the principal cause, and the water as the instrumental, which, at his command, was poured out upon the earth both from above and below. The world; the earth, with all the inhabitants of it, eight persons excepted. This the apostle allegeth against the forementioned scoffers, who said that all things continued as they were, when yet the flood had made so great a change in the face of the lower creation.

7 But <sup>i</sup>the heavens and the earth, <sup>i ver. 10.</sup> which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto <sup>k</sup>fire against <sup>k Mat. 25. 41. 2 Thess. 1. 8.</sup> the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

The heavens; the ethereal, or starry heaven, as well as aerial; for, ver. 10, 12, he distinguisheth the heavens that are to perish by fire, from the elements; and ver. 13, he opposeth a new heaven to that heaven which is to be consumed; but the new heaven is not meant merely of the aerial heaven. And why should not this be meant of the same heavens, which elsewhere in Scripture are said to perish? Job xiv. 12. Psal. cii. 26, All of them wax old, &c. By the same word; the same as ver. 5. Are kept in store; are kept safe as in a treasury, and untouched for a time, that they may be destroyed at last. Reserved unto fire; that they may be consumed by it. The destruction of the world by fire at the last day, is opposed to the destruction of it by water in the flood. Against the day of judgment; the general judgment. And perdition of ungodly men; this the apostle speaks with an emphasis, because they were ungodly against whom he here bends his discourse.

8 But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day <sup>is</sup> with the Lord as a thousand years, and <sup>1</sup>a thousand years as one day.

Be not ignorant of this one thing; i. e. be sure of it: the same word is here used as ver. 5; and so he cautions them against the ignorance of scoffers, and to prevent it, would have them certainly know this one thing, which is extant in the Scripture, which foretells Christ's coming. That one day is with the Lord; the Lord Jesus Christ, of whose coming he speaks. As a thousand years; by a synecdoche, a thousand years is put for any, even the longest revolution of time; and the sense is, that though there be great difference of time, long and short, with us, who are subject to time, and are measured by it; yet with Him who is eternal, without succession, to whom nothing is past, nothing future, but all things present, there is no difference of time, none long, none short, but a thousand years, nay, all the time that hath run out since the creation of the world, is but as a day; and we are not to judge of the Lord's delay in coming by our own sense, but by God's eternity.

9 <sup>m</sup>The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but <sup>n</sup>is longsuffering to us-ward, <sup>o</sup>not willing that any should perish, but <sup>p</sup>that all should come to repentance.

The Lord is not slack concerning his promise; i. e. doth not defer the fulfilling of it beyond the appointed time, Isa. lx. 22. As some men count slackness; either the scoffers here mentioned, who, because of Christ's not yet coming, questioned whether he would come at all, as if God had changed his purpose, or would not fulfil it: or believers themselves, who, through the weakness of their faith, and greatness of their sufferings, might grow into some degree of impatience, and think Christ slow in coming to avenge their cause, and give them their reward. So much may be gathered from Rev. vi. 10. But is long-suffering to us-ward; to us believers, or us elect. Not willing that any should perish; any that he hath ordained to life, though not yet called. But that all should come to repentance; all whom he hath elected; he would have the whole number of them filled up, and defers the day of judgment till it be so: or this may be meant not of God's secret and effectual will, but of his revealed will, whereby he calls all to repentance promiscuously that hear the gospel preached, hath made it their duty, approves of it, hath prescribed it as the way of salvation, commanded them to seek salvation in that way, and is ready to receive and save them upon their repenting: see 1 Tim. ii. 4.

10 But <sup>q</sup>the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which

<sup>q</sup> Mat. 24. 43. Luke 12. 39. 1 Thes. 5. 2. Rev. 3. 3. & 16. 15.

r Ps. 102. 24.
Is. 51. 6.
Matt. 24. 35.
Mark 13. 31.
Rom. 8. 20.
Heb. 1. 11.
Rev. 20. 11.
& 21. 1.

the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

But the day of the Lord; the day of judgment is here called the day of the Lord by way of eminence, as the great day, Jude 6, and the great day of God Almighty, Rev. xvi. 14, and the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. i. 8; v. 5; 2 Cor. i. 14; Phil. i. 6, 10. Will come as a thief in the night; as a thief comes suddenly and unexpectedly, when he thinks all in the house are most secure. In the which the heavens; viz. those that are visible, in distinction from the empyreal heaven, or place of glorified spirits. Shall pass away; either wholly, so as to cease to be; or rather, as to their present being and condition, so as to cease to be what they now are, and to give place to the new heaven, Rev. xxi. 1. The same word is used, Matt. xxiv. 35; Luke xvi. 17. With a great noise; either swiftly and violently, or with such a noise as is usually caused by such violent and speedy motions. The elements, in a natural sense, as integral parts of the universe, air, water, earth. Shall melt with fervent heat; so ver. 12, where another word is used in the Greek, which properly signifies melting, or being on fire, or burning, shall be dissolved or destroyed. So the word signifies, John ii. 19; 1 John iii. 8. The earth also; the habitable part of the world. Though the earth, as a part of the world, be included in the elements before mentioned, yet here it may be taken with respect to its inhabitants, and the things contained in it. And the works that are therein shall be burned up; not only artificial, men's works, but natural, all that variety of creatures, animate and inanimate, wherewith God hath stored this lower world for the present use of man; and so all those delectable things in which carnal men seek their happiness.

11 Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness,

s 1 Pet. 1. 15.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved; seeing the coming of the Lord will be so terrible, as to bring with it the consumption of the world, and the destruction of these things here below, upon which we are so apt to set our affections. What manner of persons ought ye to be; how prudent, accurate, diligent, zealous, and every way excellent persons! The Greek word is often used by way of admiration of some singular excellency in persons or things, Matt. viii. 27; Mark xiii. 1; Luke i. 29. In all holy conversation and godliness: the words in the Greek are both in the plural number, and may imply not only a continued course of holy walking throughout our whole time, but likewise diligence in the performance of all sorts of duties, and exercise of all those various graces wherewith the Spirit of God furnisheth believers in order thereto.

12 Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?

t 1 Cor. 1. 7.
Tit. 1. 13.
|| Or, hastening the coming.
u 1 Pe. 50. 3.
Is. 34. 4.
x Mic. 1. 4.
ver. 10.

Looking for; patiently waiting for, and expecting. And hastening unto; by fervent desire of it, and diligent preparation for it. The coming of the day of God; the day of the Lord, ver. 10.

13 Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

v Is. 65. 17.
& 66. 22.
Rev. 21. 1.
27.

Nevertheless we, according to his promise: the places cited in the margin, to which this text seems to refer, speak of a new state of the church here in the world, yet by way of allusion to the renovation of the world, which is ultimately there promised, and the perpetuity of the gospel church till then is thereby assured. Look for new heavens and a new earth; instead of the present world, which is to be consumed by fire, ver. 10, 12, or the first heaven and earth, which pass away, Rev. xxi. 1. These will be new heavens and a new earth, either as to their substance, or as to their qualities, refined and purified from all defilement, and free from all that vanity to which the creature was made subject by the sin of man, Rom. viii. 20, 21. Wherein dwelleth; i. e. perpetually abideth, and not only for a time, Rom. viii. 11; 2 Cor. vi. 16; 2 Tim. i. 14. Righteousness; either this may be understood of righteousness in the abstract, that together with the destruction of the world the kingdom of sin shall be destroyed, and God's elect, the inhabitants of the new world, shall be filled with righteousness, whereas before sin had dwelt in them: or else the abstract may be put for the concrete, and by righteousness may be meant righteous persons, who only shall be the inhabitants of the new world, the wicked being turned into hell, Rev. xxi. 27; and by this way of expressing it may be implied the perfection of the righteousness of such. Not only the new heaven is mentioned, but the new earth, because the whole world will then be the possession and kingdom of the saints, who follow Christ wherever he goes.

14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

s 1 Cor. 1. 8.
& 15. 58.
Phil. 1. 10.
1 Thess. 5.
13. & 5. 23.

Such things; Christ's coming to judgment; the destruction of this world; a new heaven and a new earth, in which dwells righteousness. Of him; Christ the Judge. In peace; at peace with God, from whence proceeds peace of conscience, and an amicable, peaceable disposition toward others; all which may here be comprehended. Without spot, and blameless: either, 1. By these words he means absolute perfection; and then he shows what we are to design and aim at in this life, though we attain it not till we come into the other: or, 2. A thorough sanctification through faith in Christ, a being got above fleshly lusts, and the pollutions of the world, and any such carriage as our hearts may reproach us for, 1 Tim. vi. 14. If it be objected, that such, having sin still in them, cannot be said to be without spot, and blameless, in the sight of God; it may be answered, that though they have sin in them, yet being, through the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, justified in the sight of God, and accepted in the Beloved, Eph. i. 6, he overlooks their infirmities, and imputes no sin to them, sees no spot in them, so as to condemn them for it. The apostle seems here to reflect on the seducers before mentioned, whom, chap. ii. 13, he had called spots and blemishes; and he persuades these saints to look to themselves, that they might be found of Christ (not such as the other were, but) without spot, and blameless; or, as it is translated, Eph. v. 27, without blemish, i. e. in a state of sanctification, as well as justification.

15 And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you;

a Rom. 2. 4
1 Pet. 3. 20.
ver. 9.

And account; reckon with yourselves, and be confidently persuaded; or take for granted. The longsuffering of our Lord; viz. in his not yet coming to judgment, and bearing with so much sin in the world without presently punishing it. Is salvation; i. e. tends or conduceth to salvation, in that hereby he gives space for repentance to the elect unconverted, and alloweth time for the building up and perfecting those that are converted, ver. 9. Even as our beloved brother Paul; not only brother in Christ, as a saint, but in office, as an apostle. According to the wisdom given unto him; that eminent and profound knowledge, in the mysteries of the gospel in which Paul did excel, 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7; Eph. iii. 3, 4. Peter makes such honourable mention of Paul, 1. That he might commend to the Jewish Christians the doctrine Paul had preached, though a minister of the uncircumcision; 2. To show that he had nothing the worse thoughts of him for being so sharply reproved by him, Gal. ii.; and, 3. That he might arm the saints against those heretics that abused Paul's writings, and wrested them to their own meaning, probably, to patronize their errors. Hath written unto you; unto you Jewish believers, viz. either, 1. In his Epistle to the Romans, chap. ii. 4. where is a passage very like this: or, 2. In his Epistle to the Hebrews, which, though it were not entitled to the Jews of the dispersion, yet was written to their nation; and in that Epistle several places there are of the same purport with this here; (see Heb. ix. 28; x. 23, 25, 36, 37;) and other Epistle of Paul to the Jews we have none: and in this he shows much of that wisdom God gave him in the mystery of the gospel; and in this likewise are many things hard to be understood.

<sup>b Rom. 8. 19.</sup> <sup>1 Cor. 16. 24.</sup> <sup>1 Thess. 4.</sup> <sup>16.</sup> 16 As also in all his epistles, <sup>b</sup> speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction.

As also in all his epistles; to make the sense complete, we must supply here from the former verse, he hath written. Speaking in them of these things; viz. concerning the second coming of Christ, and end of the world, the patience that should be exercised in waiting for it; about avoiding scoffers that deny these truths, and the other instructions contained in these two Epistles, but especially in the two latter chapters of this Second Epistle. In which are some things hard to be understood; in which Epistles, or rather, in which things contained in Paul's Epistles, for the Greek relative is of a different gender, and cannot agree with Epistles: q. d. Some of the doctrines delivered by Paul in his Epistles are hard to be understood. And so this doth not prove Paul's Epistles, much less the whole Scripture, to be obscure and dark: the style and expression may be as clear as the nature of the things will bear, and yet the things themselves so expressed may be hard to be understood, either by reason of their own obscurity, as prophecies, the excellency and sublimeness of them, as some mysterious doctrines, or the weakness of men's minds, and their incapacity of apprehending spiritual things, 1 Cor. ii. 14, compared with chap. xiii. 9, 10. Which they that are unlearned; they that are ignorant of the Scripture, unskilful in the word of righteousness, Heb. v. 13; or indocible, that will not be instructed. And unstable; such as are ill-grounded, and therefore unstedfast, and easily deceived, chap. ii. 14: see Eph. iv. 14. Wrest; pervert the Scripture, and offer violence to it, and, as it were, rack and torture it to make it confess what it never meant. To their own destruction; eternal destruction, viz. while they use the Scriptures to countenance their errors; or stumble at some things in them, which are obscure, thereby taking occasion to deny the truth of God; and so make the Scripture the instrument of their perdition, which God appointed to be the means of salvation.

17 Ye therefore, beloved, <sup>c</sup> seeing ye <sup>c Mark 13. 23, ch. 1. 12.</sup> know these things before, <sup>d</sup> beware lest <sup>d Eph. 4. 14.</sup> ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. <sup>ch. 1. 10, 11.</sup> <sup>& 2. 18.</sup>

Seeing ye know these things, which I have been now writing to you of, viz. That the Judge will certainly come; or, that heretics, deceivers, and scoffers will come; or both may be comprehended. Beware lest ye also; as well as others have been. Fall from your own steadfastness; the steadfastness of your faith. This admonition he gives them, not to discourage them with fear of apostacy, but to awaken them to that holy care which would be a means to prevent it; and so to keep them from security, and trust in themselves, not to weaken their faith, and reliance on the promise.

18 <sup>e</sup> But grow in grace, and in the <sup>e Eph. 4. 15.</sup> knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. <sup>1 Pet. 2. 2.</sup> To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen. <sup>f 2 Tim. 4. 18. Rev. 1. 8.</sup>

But grow in grace; in all those spiritual gifts ye have received from Christ, especially sanctifying. And in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; in faith, whereby ye are sanctified, and made partakers of that grace. To him be glory both now and for ever; which belongs only to God; and therefore this proves Christ to be God.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL

OF

JOHN

THE ARGUMENT

CONCERNING the penman of the First Epistle, it doth not appear there hath been any doubt, the ancients generally ascribing it to the apostle St. John. The time of his writing it is uncertain, some assigning to it an earlier, others a later date. It is thought to have been written directly to the Christian Jews, not living in Judea, but remote in Parthia, (where it appears great numbers of them resided,) being styled by a noted father, "The Epistle to the Parthians." The design of it is to confirm them in the great fundamental doctrine of Christianity, That our Lord Jesus was the Messiah, against the attempts of divers apostate or degenerate Christians, who (whether this Epistle were of the former or latter date) did in his time deny, or essentially deprave, that most important article. And not only to induce them all most stedfastly to believe it, but to impress it more deeply upon their souls, to reduce the more licentious, to raise and quicken the dead and carnal to a more strict, lively, vigorous Christianity; and (which is greatly inculcated) to excite and inflame mutual Christian love among them, as that which would more strongly fortify them against the endeavours of seducers, and render their communion more pleasant among themselves. The other two Epistles are very much of the same argument, (though the latter hath somewhat of a different and peculiar concernment,) but doubted by some whether by the same penman, upon very insufficient grounds, the matter and style, plainly enough, showing them to be this apostle's.

CHAP. I

The apostle professeth to declare what he had formerly seen and known of the Word of life, to the end that others might have fellowship with him, 1—4. The substance of his doctrine is, That to have fellowship with God, we must be holy as he is holy; and that if we confess our sins, we shall be forgiven through the blood of Christ, 5—10.

THAT <sup>a</sup> which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, <sup>b</sup> which we have looked upon, and <sup>c</sup> our hands have handled, of the Word of life;

The order of discourse requires we begin with the last thing in this verse, the Word of life. This phrase, the Word, is by this apostle (not here to inquire in what notion some,

After
A. D. 90.
a John 1. 1.
ch. 2. 13.
b John 1. 14.
2 Pet. 1. 16.
ch. 4. 14.
c Luke 24. 39.
John 20. 27.

both Jews and pagans, before took it) familiarly used, to signify the eternal Son of God: and whereas this is his usual style in speaking of this sacred Person, as in the entrance of his Gospel, (so very like that of this Epistle,) so often over in his Revelation, chap. xix. 13, and that afterwards in this Epistle itself, chap. v. 7, he so readily falls into the mention of him by this name, (as not doubting to be understood,) it is scarce to be supposed, that being so constant to himself herein, he should use the same form of speech without any such intendment in this place, where the circumstances do both allow and invite us so to understand him. Nor doth the addition to it here, the Word of life, render it the less fit to be applied to this purpose, but rather the more; as serving to denote the peculiar excellency of this Word, that he is the living and vivifying Word; whereupon he also styles him in the following verse, simply, the life, and, that eternal life, (which is fit to be noted here, viz. that these three expressions, the Word of life, the life, and that eternal life, do, by the contexture of the discourse, plainly mean the same thing, and seem in their principal intendment to be set down as so many titles of the Son of God,) designing to represent him as the original and radical life, the root of the holy, divine life, to all who partake thereof, agreeably to his own words concerning him in the Gospel, John i. 4, In him (viz. the Word) was life, and the life was the light of men (i. e. the Word was a vital, enlivening light); and chap. v. 20, of this Epistle, He (viz. the Son of God) is eternal life: and to our Lord's words of himself, I am the life, John xi. 25; xiv. 6; and that the Father had given him to have life in himself, John v. 26, and consequently, to be capable of being to others an original or fountain of life. Yet whereas by the Word, and the Word of life, is often signified the gospel, (chap. ii. 5; Phil. ii. 16; and elsewhere,) it seems not incongruous or disagreeable to this context, to understand the apostle, as designing to comprehend both the meanings together in one expression, apt enough to include them both. See Dr. Hammond in loco. Nor are they to us, so remote an import, considered in their relation to us, as not fitly to admit of being both intended at once. The Son of God being his internal Word, the Word of his mind, his Wisdom, (another appellation of him, frequent in Scripture, Prov. viii. and elsewhere,) comprehending all ideas of things to be created or done; to us, the immediate original of light and life, and by whose vivifying beams we are especially to be transformed into the Divine likeness: the gospel being his external word, the word of his mouth, the radiation of those beams themselves. As we do ourselves first conceive, and form in our minds, what we afterwards utter and express: only whereas our thought, or the word of our mind, is fluid, and soon vanishes; God's (in whom is no change) is permanent, consubstantial and coeternal with himself, The Word was with God, and the Word was God, John i. 1. Neither are these two senses of the Word of life less fitly (or with more impropriety) comprehended together under that one expression, than in common discourse: speaking of the sun in reference to ourselves, we often comprehend together in our meaning, both the body of the sun itself and its beams; as when we say it enlightens us, revives us, shines in at this window, or upon that dial, we do not intend (as reasonably we cannot) to exclude either, but mean the sun doth it by its beams. And now the notion being settled of the Word of life, (which was necessary first to be done, and which required a larger discourse,) we may the more easily perceive, how what is here said of it may, in the one sense or the other, be applied thereto. That which was from the beginning; so the living Word, in the first sense, was, viz. when all things also began; which is not said itself then to have begun, as John i. 1, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and, at the next step, the Word was God. And with what is said by this Word himself, (then taking another, but an equivalent, name, the Wisdom of God,) Prov. viii. 22—30, The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. When, &c.—Then I was by him, as one brought up with him, &c.: where from the beginning, and from everlasting, we see is all one. See of this Epistle, chap. ii. 13, 14. Which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled: these are all expressions indifferently applicable both, 1. To the person of the Son of God, primarily meant by the Word of life; for that same glorious Person who was from the beginning with the Father, viz. being now incarnate, became the object of these their very senses, to this and the other apostles, who had so frequent opportunity to hear, and see, and behold him, and even to handle him with their hands, Luke xxiv. 39; John xx. 25. And, 2. To the gospel revelation, a secondary (not unintended) notion of the Word of life, and whereof these latter expressions seem more especially meant; they denote the perfect certainty the apostles had (the rest of whom his manner of speaking seems purposely to comprehend with himself) of that truth, which, as he after speaks, they testified; it being their office and business as apostles so to do; see John xv. 27; Acts i. 21, 22; iv. 20; and it was necessary they should be able to do it with such assurance as these expressions import. Therefore having said, which we have heard, which imports a more overly notice, it is added, which we have seen, a much more certain way of knowing, as 2 Pet. i. 16, 17; and with our eyes, a more lively expression of that certainty, as Job expresses his expected sight of his Redeemer, chap. xix. 27: and to signify it was not a casual, transient glance, it is further said, which we have looked upon, ἐθεασάμεθα, i. e. studiously, and of set purpose, bent ourselves to contemplate. Unto all which it is moreover added, and our hands have handled, ἐψηλάφησαν, which though literally not otherwise applicable than to the person of our Lord incarnate, yet is a most emphatical metaphor, elegantly representing their most certain knowledge and lively sense of his excellent doctrine; as the expression is usual of a palpable truth, to signify a most evident one. So is that implied to be a truth that may be felt, that this world hath a mighty and bountiful Sustainer and Lord, Acts xvii. 27; ψηλαφήσειαν.

2 (For <sup>d</sup>the life <sup>e</sup>was manifested, and <sup>d</sup>we have seen <sup>e</sup>it, <sup>f</sup>and bear witness, <sup>g</sup>and shew unto you that eternal life, <sup>h</sup>which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;)

He interrupts the stream of his discourse by this seasonable parenthesis, while he therein gives an account how the Word of life, the life, that eternal life, (already noted to be here all one, and chiefly to mean the Son of God,) which being with the Father must be to us invisible, came to be so sensibly known to mortal men on earth; which he doth by telling us he was manifested; and that was sufficiently done, both who he was, and what he designed, in his partaking with us of flesh and blood, and being found in fashion as a man, whereby he subjected himself to the notice of our senses; and was hereupon said to have been manifested in the flesh, chap. iii. 5; 1 Tim. iii. 16; the glory of his Divinity also shining forth most conspicuously in his God-like conversation, and wonderful works, through this veil, and confirming the truth of his heavenly doctrine, which more distinctly declared both that it was the Son of God who was come down into this wretched world of ours, and what the kind design was of his descent hither. So that what here the apostle says more briefly, that he was manifested, well admits the larger account which he gives of it in his Gospel, chap. i. 14, And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. Whereupon (as he adds) he bears witness, and shows forth what he had seen so manifested, as it belonged to his apostolical office to do.

3 <sup>i</sup>That which we have seen and heard <sup>i</sup> declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly <sup>k</sup>our fellowship <sup>l</sup>is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

He now proceeds with what he intended, not only professing to testify most certainly known things, (which he further with great earnestness inculcates,) but declaring also the end of this testimony; viz. not merely that they to whom he writes might know them too, (as if the being a Christian did only stand in having some peculiar notions from other men, and that they were only to know for knowing's sake,) but that they might have fellowship, i. e. partake and communicate with them (viz. the apostles, and

d John 1. 4
& 11. 25.

e Rom. 16.

f 1 Tim.

g 16. cl.

h John 21. 24.

i Acts 2. 32.

k John 1. 1, 2.

l 2 Cor. 1.

2. ch. 2. 24.

the whole community of living Christians) in all the vital influences, holy practice, the dignities, pleasures, and consolations belonging to the Christian state; whereupon he adds, and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ: q. d. Nor are the advantages of that state, in their kind and nature, terrene, sensual, secular, but Divine and heavenly, such as are imparted to us by the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ; or, wherein we are truly said to participate, and have a communion with them. That blessed Spirit, who is the immediate author to us of all gracious communication, (whence this is also styled the communion of the Holy Ghost, 2 Cor. xiii. 14.) being in reality the Spirit of the Father and the Son.

1 John 15.
11. & 16. 24.
2 John 12.

4 And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

Not insipid, spiritless, empty, as carnal joy is, apt through the deficiency of its cause to admit of intermingled qualms; but lively and vigorous, 2 John 12, well grounded, John xvi. 24, such as is of the right kind, and will grow up into the perfect plenitude and fulness of joy, Psal. xvi. 11.

3 ch. 3. 11.

5 <sup>m</sup> This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that <sup>n</sup> God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

It being the professed scope and design of his writing, to draw men to a final participation and communion with God in his own blessedness, he reckons nothing more necessary to it, than to settle in their minds a right notion of God. Which, that it might be the more regarded, he introduces with a solemn preface; This then is the message, &c., (though the word also signifies promise, it here more fitly bears this rendering,) to notify, 1. That this which follows was not an imagination of his own concerning God, but his true representation of himself. 2. That it was given him in charge to be delivered and communicated to others; a message a man neither hath of himself, nor is to reserve to himself, we have heard it of him, and declare it to you, as (consanantly hereto) he speaks. It is the Divine pleasure it should be published to the world, and that all men should know that as from him, i. e. that he is not a Being of mere power, as some, or of mere mercy, as others, are apt to fancy of him, either whereof were a very maimed and most disagreeable notion of the Deity: power without goodness were apt to run into fury; goodness without wisdom and righteousness would as naturally turn to a supine indifferency, and neglect of distinguishing judicially between good and bad; things neither suitable to the Governor of the world, nor possible to the absolutely perfect Being. God is light; in God all true perfections and excellencies must be understood eminently to concur; and of them more could not have been comprehended under one word, (especially that belong to him considered relatively to his creatures, of which perfections it concerns us to have more distinct, formed, positive conceptions in all our applications to him,) than are here some way represented or resembled by light, viz. that he is a Being of most lively, penetrative vigour, absolute simplicity, immutability, knowledge, wisdom, sincerity, righteousness, serenity, benignity, joy, and felicity, and especially of most bright and glorious holiness and purity; and in whom is no darkness at all, nothing contrary or repugnant hereto.

o 2 Cor. 6.
14. ch. 2. 4.

6 <sup>o</sup> If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth:

Light and darkness are frequently put for holiness and wickedness, Luke xvi. 8; Rom. xiii. 12; Eph. v. 8; 1 Thess. v. 5. The sum then is, That if any pretend to friendship with God, or to have received holy and gracious influences from him, and do yet lead wicked lives, they are liars, even guilty of a practical lie, doing what makes their profession false and insincere.

p 1 Cor. 6.
11. Eph. 1. 7.
Heb. 9. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
ch. 2. 2.
Hev. 1. 5.

7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and <sup>p</sup> the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

But if we walk; which is a continued and progressive motion, i. e. do persevere and improve in holiness. In the light; being transformed into the holy image and likeness of God, and showing themselves the children of light, as he is light, and the Father of lights. We have fellowship one with another; have fellowship with him, μετ' αὐτοῦ, as one copy reads: however, we must comprehend God, and this the contexture of discourse shows. And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin; καθαρῖσει: lest our purity and holiness should be thought to have deserved such a privilege, it is cautiously added, and the blood, &c. is that which alone expiates, or makes atonement for our sins (the proper notion of cleansing here). Our former sinfulness and present imperfect holiness render it impossible God should admit us to communion with him for our own sakes, or without such an intervening sacrifice; καθάρματα usually signifying expiations. And if we further extend the notion of cleansing, so as to comprehend internal subjective purification, (which also the word may admit,) the further meaning is, that even that purifying influence, whereby we are qualified for present holy walking with God, and for final blessedness in him, we owe to the merit and procurement of the Redeemer's blood.

8 <sup>q</sup> If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, <sup>r</sup> and the truth is not in us.

Prov. 20. 9. Eccles. 7. 20. Jam. 3. 2. r ch. 2. 4.

In pursuance of which scope, he fitly adds, If we should say, i. e. either profess it as a principle, or think in our minds, or not bear in our hearts a penitential, remorseful sense, correspondent to the contrary apprehension; such as is implied in confessing, ver. 9; for saying usually signifies the habitual bent and disposition of the heart and practice, Job xxi. 14; Jer. xxii. 21. That we have no sin; viz. that we are so innocent creatures as not to need such an expiatory sacrifice as that above mentioned, and such purifying influence thereupon, but that we may be admitted to communion with God upon our own account, and for our worthiness' sake, without being beholden to the blood of Christ. We deceive ourselves, delude our own souls. And the truth; i. e. the system and frame of gospel doctrine, as 2 John 1, 2, 4. Is not in us; cannot be duly entertained, lies not evenly and agreeably with itself in our minds, or hath no place with effect in us, as John viii. 37.

9 <sup>s</sup> If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and <sup>t</sup> to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Ps. 32. 5.
Prov. 28. 13.
t ver. 7.
Ps. 51. 2.

But on the contrary, if we confess our sins, if we apply ourselves to him suitably to the condition of sinners, confessing ourselves such, with that self-abasing sense of sin which may dispose us to accept and apply his offered remedy, (upon which it is implied we will do it,) he is faithful, so true to his promise, and just, fidelity being a part of justice; or there is with him that equity and righteousness, (which sometimes signify goodness, or clemency, 1 Sam. xii. 7; Psal. cxiii. 9, and which, more strictly taken, permit him not to exact from us the satisfaction which he hath accepted in the atonement made by his Son, in his own way applied, and upon his own terms to be reckoned unto us,) that he will not fail to forgive us our sins. And to cleanse us from all unrighteousness; which may either be added as a further expression of the same thing; or may, moreover, signify his vouchsafing that purifying influence of the Spirit of Christ, (obtained also by his blood,) which shall both purge away, and prevent, the defilements that would render us incapable of his own holy communion.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

If we say that we have not sinned: see ver. 8, 9. We make him a liar; which they make him that believe not his word, chap. v. 10, expressly charging all men with sin, Rom. iii. 19, 23. And, consequently, his word, or truth, as ver. 8, which we contradict, is not in us. The sum is, That we are not to be received into God's holy society and communion under the notion of always innocent and unoffending persons, but as pardoned and purified sinners.

CHAP. II

Christ is our advocate with the Father, and a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1, 2. Rightly to know

God is to keep his commandments, 3—6; the chief of which is, to love one another, 7—11. The apostle addresseth Christians of all ages severally, 12—14, and warneth them against an inordinate love of this world, 15—17; and against deceivers, who were many, 18, 19. He showeth the means they had of knowing the truth, and of distinguishing false teachers; and pointeth out their obligation to abide in the truth which they had been taught, 20—28. He that doeth righteousness is born of God, 29.

MY little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, <sup>a</sup> we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous :

a Rom. 8. 34.
1 Tim. 2. 5.
Heb. 7. 25.
& 9. 24.

He endeavours in this to steer them a middle course, that they might neither presume to sin, nor despair if they did; and bespeaks them with a compellation, importing both authority and love; well becoming him as then an aged person, an apostle, their teacher, and who was their most affectionate spiritual father. And lets them know, the first design of what he was now writing (had hitherto written, and was further to write) was, That they might to their uttermost avoid sinning at all: but adds, if, through human frailty, they did sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; implying our need of Christ for renewed as well as first pardon; and not of his death only, but continual intercession; and represents the advantages Christ hath for success in his interposing for us, in respect both of his relation to God as his Father, (which is put indefinitely, the Father, that the consideration might not be excluded of his being our Father also,) and his righteousness, by which he could not but be acceptable to him.

2 And <sup>b</sup> he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our's only, but <sup>c</sup> also for the sins of the whole world.

b Rom. 3. 25.
2 Cor. 5. 16.
ch. 1. 7.
& 4. 10.
c John 1. 29.
& 4. 42. &
11. 51, 52. ch. 4. 14.

And he is the propitiation for our sins: the adding of these words, shows that our Lord grounds his intercession for pardon of sin unto penitent believers, upon his having made atonement for them before; and therefore that he doth not herein merely supplicate for favour, but (which is the proper business of an advocate) plead law and right; agreeably to what is said above, chap. i. 9. And not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world; nor is his undertaking herein limited to any select persons among believers, but he must be understood to be an Advocate for all, for whom he is effectually a Propitiation, i. e. for all that truly believe in him, (Rom. iii. 25,) all the world over.

3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

This faith is often in the Holy Scripture signified by the name of knowledge, Isa. liii. 11; John xvii. 3, viz. an appropriative, transformative knowledge, by which we own and accept God in Christ, as ours, (expressed also by acknowledgment, ἐπίγνωσις, Eph. i. 17; Col. ii. 2,) and are changed into his likeness, 2 Cor. iii. 18. The meaning then is, That we perceive, or discern ourselves to be sincere believers, and consequently that Christ is both our Propitiation and Advocate, when it is become habitual and easy to us to obey his commandments.

d ch. 1. 6.
& 4. 20.
e ch. 1. 8.

4 <sup>d</sup> He that saith, I know him, and <sup>e</sup> keepeth not his commandments, <sup>e</sup> is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

A liar; a false, hypocritical pretender, as chap. i. 6.

f John 14.
21, 23.
g ch. 4. 12.

5 But <sup>f</sup> whoso keepeth his word, <sup>g</sup> in him verily is the love of God perfected:

h ch. 4. 13.

<sup>h</sup> hereby know we that we are in him.

His faith worketh by love, Gal. v. 6; his love is perfected, and attains its end in obedience, whereof it is the vital principle, chap. v. 3; John xiv. 15. Such an efficacious governing knowledge of him, therefore, as, by the power of the love which it produces, subdues our souls to the obedience of him, is a certain proof to us of our union with him, chap. v. 20, and relation to him.

6 <sup>i</sup> He that saith he abideth in him <sup>i</sup> ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

i John 15. 4.
2 Mat. 11. 29
John 13. 15.
1 Pet. 2. 21.

And this proof we ought to give. For whereas our Lord Jesus Christ was not only our Lawgiver, but our pattern, and practised himself what he commanded us; if indeed we have an abiding, real union with him, we partake of his Spirit, Rom. viii. 9, which must be understood to work uniformly, and enable us to walk (in the main of our course, according to our measure of that Spirit) as he walked.

7 Brethren, <sup>i</sup> I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment <sup>m</sup> which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

12 John 5.

m ch. 3. 11.
2 John 5.

This commandment must be that which he insists on, ver. 9—11, and which in different respects he calleth both old and new, he says, in opposition to their Gnostic seducers, to intimate he was not about to entertain them with vain novelties, as they did; all whose peculiar doctrines were no other than innovations upon true Christianity: but old, viz. a part of original Christianity, as it came pure first from our Lord Christ himself; the commandment, or word, which they had, or had heard, from the beginning. This phrase, from the beginning, being here put in conjunction with some act of theirs, ye had, or have heard, as also 2 John 5, 6, shows it to intend a much later term of commencement than chap. i. 1. Though also, considering them as Jews, whom he here writes to, it might run up as high as the law given by Moses; or, even as men, to the creation, and the first impression of the law of nature (whereof this was a very noble part) upon the heart of man.

8 Again, <sup>n</sup> a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: <sup>o</sup> because the darkness is past, and <sup>p</sup> the true light now shineth.

n John 13.
34. & 15. 12.
o Rom. 13.
12. Eph. 5. 8.
1 Thes. 5. 5. 8.
p John 1. 9.
& 2. 12. &
12. 35.

Yet also he calls it a new commandment, as our Saviour did, John xiii. 34, upon the subjoined accounts. Which thing is true; i. e. evident, or verified, fulfilled, exemplified. In him; viz. in that new and high demonstration he had given of the sincerity and greatness of his own love, laying down his life for us, as John xv. 13. And in you; or, us, (as some read,) i. e. the mind of God herein is by a new and fresh light most evidently and gloriously signified in or among you, (the subject being here collective and plural, admits this varied and very usual sense of the particle in,) inasmuch as the darkness is past; i. e. the heathenish ignorance that made the world barbarous; a darkness in which the furious lusts and passions of men are wont to rage, turning this earth into another hell, Psal. lxxiv. 20, is in a great measure vanished; and also the dark umbrage of the Judaic dispensation, (some read σκία for σκορία, not darkness, but shadow,) in which the love of God to men was more obscurely represented, is past away and gone, and the true light now shineth; the love and grace of God towards sinners (the pattern and argument of our mutual love to one another) shines with true light, that is evident, in opposition to darkness, or immediately substantial, in opposition to type or shadow, as John i. 9, 14, 17: representing the gracious design of God, and his very nature, who is love, chap. iv. 8, 16, with so bright and glorious beams as ought to transform us into his likeness; and which therefore render the mutual hatred of one another the most incongruous thing to us in the world. Whereupon he adds, 9 <sup>q</sup> He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

q 1 Cor. 13. 2.
2 Pet. 1. 9.
ch. 3. 14, 15.

To be in the light, signifies to be under the transforming, governing power of it, as the phrases import of being in the flesh, and in the Spirit, Rom. viii. 9, being expounded by walking after the flesh, and after the Spirit, ver. 1. He therefore that hateth his brother, a thing so contrary to the design of the gospel, whatever he pretends, is still in darkness, under the power of the unregenerate principle of impure and malignant darkness: the gospel hath done him no good, is to him but an impotent and ineffectual light, in the midst whereof, by stiff winking, and an obstinate resistance, an exclusion of that pure and holy light, he creates to himself a dark and a hellish night.

r ch. 3. 14. 10 'He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and 'there is none † occasion of stumbling in him.

His brother, put indefinitely, must be understood universally, i. e. he that loveth not this or that fellow Christian, upon some personal or private reason, but all, upon one and the same common and truly Christian account. Abideth in the light; shows or doth demonstrate the settled, constant power, the regenerate, Divine principle bath over him. And there is none occasion of stumbling in him; Greek, no scandal; no inconsistent thing, that ought to occasion him to judge otherwise of himself, or others to think otherwise of him.

11 But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and 'walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

Hath no principle to guide or govern him, but what is common to the unregenerate world, so that his whole life is a continual error; nor doth he understand or consider the tendency of his course, being still under the power of an affected darkness, that makes his eyes, or understanding, of no more use than if he were quite blind, or had none at all. So weighty and important is the precept which he had to lay down, ver. 15, of not loving the world, &c., that he introduces it with the solemnity of a most pathetic preface, contained in these three following verses, wherein he applies himself severally to the distinct orders and ranks into which Christians were capable of being reduced, the matter being of common and equal concernment to all of them. And he speaks suitably to the condition and state of each, such things as whereby he might most effectually insinuate with them, and oblige them deeply to consider what he had to say; doubling also his application to each of them, out of the earnestness of his intention and endeavour to fasten the exhortation upon them which was to follow.

12 I write unto you, little children, because "your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

He here uses an appellation before (ver. 1) applied to all in common, being put alone; but being now set in contradistinction to others, must be understood to intend a distinct rank of Christians, viz. those more newly entered into the Christian state; and to them he suggests the free remission of their sins for his name's sake, i. e. for his own sake, as the reason why they should, out of ingenuity, and a new, recent sense of God's mercy towards them, comply with his holy pleasure in the following precept. The remission of their sins being a first and most early privilege with them, that commenced from the beginning of their sincere Christianity, and which was sealed to them in their late baptism, it is the more fitly mentioned to this first rank of Christians.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because 'ye have known him * that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

Unto fathers, because to such being much experience, and the knowledge of ancient things, he ascribeth the knowledge of him who is the Ancient of days, from the beginning, and than whom none is more ancient, and whom they should be supposed so well to know by their long-continued course in religion, as fully to understand his good and acceptable will, what would be pleasing and what displeasing to him. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one: to such as were in the flower of their strength and age in Christianity, he attributeth victory; to whom therefore it would be inglorious to slur the honour of that noble conquest they had gained over the wicked one, the god of this world, as he is elsewhere called, 2 Cor. iv. 4, by suffering themselves again to be entangled in its snares and bands. His method is, we see, to place this order of Christians last, as a middle state, which he would have us conceive afterwards to be interposed between the other two; which method we find he observes in going over them again the second time. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father: he again first begins with his little children, whom he now bespeaks by another compellation in the Greek, (before τεκνία, now παῖδια;) importing no material difference, except this latter signify more capacity of instruction; and he now also gives them another character, which implies so much, that he not only considers them as the passive subjects of a privilege, remission of sins, which they were capable of in the first moment of their being born into the Christian state, (as the word τεκνία, above, seems to intimate,) but as being able to use their understanding, and consider whose children they were, because ye have known the Father; before said also of the eldest sort of Christians; but he is there mentioned by a description more suitable to their more aged state; and therefore the knowledge ascribed to the one, and to the other, though the same in kind, must, in respect of degrees, be accommodately understood.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because 'ye are strong, and 'the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

To the former sort he only repeateth what he had said before, supposing their greater wisdom to need no more; (see L. Brugens. Not. in Bibl. Sacr. of the insertion of this clause;) only the repetition importeth his earnest desire they would again and again consider it. The other he also puts in mind of their active strength and vigour, and of the rootedness which the gospel must now be supposed to have in them, whereby they were enabled to overcome the wicked one. And by all which endowments they were all both enabled and obliged to comport the better with the following precept, and its enforcements.

15 *Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. *If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

What he here means by the forbidden object of our love, must be gathered from his own explication, ver. 16. The love itself forbidden, in reference thereto, is that excess thereof, whereby any adhere to terrene things, as their best good; wherewith, as he adds, any sincere love to God is inconsistent, as Matt. vi. 24; Luke xiv. 33: a consideration so awful and tremendous, that it is not strange the precept it enforces should have so solemn and urgent an introduction.

16 For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, <sup>b</sup> and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

Here he explains his meaning, what, under the name of the world, and the things of it, we are not to love, or under what notion we ought not to love it, viz. the world as it contains the objects and nutrient of these mentioned lusts; either more grossly sensual, called the lust of the flesh, viz. of gluttony, drunkenness, whoredom, &c. Rom. xiii. 13, 14; or that which is excited more immediately by the fancy, unto which the eye especially ministereth, the excessive appetite of much wealth, and great possessions; which the eye is therefore said to desire, and not to be satisfied with, Eccles. ii. 8—10, and iv. 8; called therefore the lust of the eyes. And again, the ambitious affectation of the pomp and glory of the world, vain applause, the unmerited and overvalued praise and observance of other men, with power over them, affected for undue ends, or only with a self-exalting design, meant by the pride of life, forbidden by our Saviour to his disciples, Matt. xx. 25, 26. 'This triple distribution some observe to have been before

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Gr. occasio.

† Rom. 12.2.

† Mat. 6. 24.

† Gal. 1. 10.

† Jam. 4. 4.

† Eccles. 5.

† 11.

used by some of the ancient learned Jews, and imitated by certain of the more refined heathens; whence, as being formerly known and understood, the apostle might be induced to make use of it. And these lusts are therefore argued to be inconsistent with the love of the Father, as not being of him, but of the world; not from the Divine Spirit, but the spirit of the world.

17 And <sup>e</sup> the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

He sets the difference in view, of living according to the common genius, will, or inclination of the world, (which is lust,) and according to the Divine will, that he who unites himself in his will and desire with the former, which vanishes, (objects and appetite altogether,) must (which is implied) perish therewith; but he that unites himself with the supreme eternal good, by a will that is guided by and conformed to the Divine will, abideth for ever, partakes a felicity coeternal with the object and rule upon which his heart was set, and which it was guided by.

18 <sup>d</sup> Little children, <sup>e</sup> it is the last time: and as ye have heard that <sup>f</sup> antichrist shall come, <sup>g</sup> even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know <sup>h</sup> that it is the last time.

The last time; the time here referred to seems to be the destruction of Jerusalem, and the finishing of the Jewish state, both civil and ecclesiastical. In the Greek, the last hour, the approaching period of Daniel's seventy weeks, as Mr. Mede understands it, in his Apostacy of the Later Times. Whereas therefore it was now a known and expected thing among Christians, that the eminent antichrist, or antichristian state, (expressly foretold, 2 Thess. ii.,) was to come, or take place; therefore the apostle says, ye. i. e. the generality of Christians, have heard so much. So he says, even now, as the forerunners of that eminent one. are there many antichrists, (foretold also by our Saviour, Matt. xxiv.,) viz. noted heretics and seducers then in being: not such falsely assuming vicarious Christs, as only pretended to do that part which the Jews expected from their Messiah, the delivering them from the Roman tyranny, and so set up to be merely civil or secular Christs, having themselves never been Christians, but such as had revolted from Christianity, and now laboured fundamentally to subvert it, denying Christ to be come in the flesh, ver. 22; 2 John 7; having been before professed Christians, as appears by the following words.

19 <sup>i</sup> They went out from us, but they were not of us; for <sup>k</sup> if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but <sup>l</sup> they went out, <sup>m</sup> that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

If they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: sincere and living Christians are so strongly held in with Christ, and the truly Christian community, by a union and bond of life, and by sense of pleasures which thereupon they find in that holy communion, with the expectation which their lively faith gives them of eternal life at last, that there is no doubt of their continuance. But they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us: others, that are Christians upon external inducements, alter, as these do, and are permitted to do so, that the difference may appear between true and counterfeit ones, 1 Cor. xi. 19.

20 <sup>n</sup> But ye have an unction <sup>o</sup> from the Holy One, and ye know all things.

21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth.

He prudently intimates his confidence concerning them, together with the pleasure he himself took (as any one would) in communicating the sentiments of holy truth to prepared, receptive minds; implying also, that any part of false doctrine doth so ill match and square with the frame of Divine truth, that judicious Christians may discern they are not of a piece.

22 <sup>p</sup> Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

Especially may the ill accord be discerned between Divine truth and a lie, when the lie is so directly levelled against the foundations upon which the whole fabric is built, as the denying Jesus to be the Christ strikes at all. And though he that doth so, seems not only an antichrist as directing his opposition but against Christ, he really as much denieth the Father, who testified of him.

23 <sup>q</sup> Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but] <sup>r</sup> he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.

To have the Father and the Son, is, by faith, love, and obedience, vitally to adhere to the one and the other. The latter part of this verse, though it be not in the ordinary Greek copies, is in some of the versions, and said to be in some Greek manuscripts also, whence it is supplied very agreeably to the apostle's scope, and usual way of writing.

24 Let that therefore abide in you, <sup>s</sup> which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, <sup>t</sup> ye also shall continue <sup>u</sup> in the Son, and in the Father.

He only exhorts them to persevere in that faith which they at first received, whereby their union with God in Christ would be preserved entire.

25 <sup>v</sup> And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life.

Which perseverance they are highly encouraged to the promise of so great a thing as eternal life at length.

26 These things have I written unto you <sup>x</sup> concerning them that seduce you.

So much he thought requisite to be said, in respect of their danger by seducers, though their safety was principally to depend upon what he next mentions.

27 But <sup>y</sup> the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing <sup>z</sup> teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in <sup>aa</sup> him.

But the anointing which ye have received: it is evident, that the ancient anointing of persons to some eminent office, was not a mere empty rite of investiture, or authorization, but also a symbol of their qualification by another Spirit then coming upon them. Whereupon our Lord Jesus was eminently the Christ, or anointed One, not only as denoting his solemn investiture with the sacred offices of King, Priest, and Prophet, which were all wont to be entered into by unction; but as signifying also his receiving the Spirit, (not by measure,) by which he was most perfectly qualified for them. And whereas he is also said to have made those that believe on him, in a far inferior sense, kings and priests to his Father; to them also he imparts of the same Spirit, Rom. viii. 9, whence they are said to be anointed too, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. And hence, as is here said, and ver. 27, they do not need, &c. Ye need not that any man teach you: not as if they had absolutely no need at all of human teaching, for the apostle supposes not himself to be now doing a vain or needless thing; but that they had less need, having the internal principles of light and life in them, they were in a great measure capable of steering their own course. They had in themselves a living, ingrafted word, enabling them to teach and commune with themselves, as Deut. xxx. 11, 12; Rom. x. 7—9. Hereupon their own reins could instruct them, Psal. xvi. 7. Or, they could instruct themselves, ἐαυτοῖς, as that may be read, Col. iii. 16, the word of Christ dwelling richly in them. Therefore they did not so need to be taught, as those that know not the first principles

e 1 Cor. 7.
31.
f Jam. 1. 10.
& 4. 14.
g 1 Pet. 1. 24.

h 1 Tim. 4. 1.
i Heb. 1. 2.
j 2 Thess. 2.
k 1. ch. 4. 3.
l Matt. 24.
m 2 John 7.
n 1 Tim. 4. 1.
o 2 Tim. 3. 1.

p John 21. 5.
q Heb. 1. 2.
r 2 Thess. 2.
s 1. ch. 4. 3.
t Matt. 24.
u 2 John 7.
v 1 Tim. 4. 1.
w 2 Tim. 3. 1.

x John 15.
y 2 John 9.
z John 14. 7.
aa 9. 10. ch. 4.
15.

ab John 17. 3.
ac ch. 1. 2.
ad & 5. 11.

ae ch. 3. 7.
af 2 John 7.

ag Jer. 31. 33.
ah 4. Heb. 8.
ai 10. 11.

aj John 14.
ak & 16. 13.
al ver. 20.

am Or, it.

an 1 Den. 13. 13. ao Ps. 41. 9.
ap Acts 20. 30.
aq k Mat. 24. 24.
ar John 6. 37.
as & 10. 29. 29.
at 2 Tim. 2. 19.
au 11 Cor. 11.
av 19.

aw m 2 Cor. 1.
ax 21. Heb. 1. 9.
ay ver. 27.
az n Mark 1. 24.
ba Acts 3. 14.

bb o John 10. 4, 5, & 14. 26, & 16. 13. ver. 27.
bc See note on ver. 27.

of the oracles of God. Teacheth you of all things; i. e. all such necessary and essential things to the life and being of Christianity, of which sort that doctrine concerning the Messiah was, which he was now speaking of; not all things simply, for that had been to attribute to them far higher knowledge than he could pretend to himself, even that which was peculiar to God only. Nor was that knowledge which they had of those necessary things to be thought the effect of an immediate inspiration, but such as by ordinary external means they had already learned, but made vital and efficacious by the special sanctifying influence and operation of the Holy Ghost; who having begotten in them a correspondent impress to those great truths which are after godliness, formed the new creature in them, which is begotten of the word of truth, had made them capable of diducation, or of distinguishing by a spiritual sense, Phil. i. 9, 10, between things that were grateful, suitable, and nutritive to the life of the new creature in them, and such things as were noxious and offensive. Whereas, in reference to things more remote from the vitals of religion and godliness, none can assure themselves of such a privilege. And as to these, they are to expect it in the way of their own sincere and diligent endeavours and prayers, as the effect of the habit of grace, maintained and kept up in life and vigour; and a reward of their sincere resignation and subjection of heart and soul to the governing power of truth, so far as it should be understood and known of them, according to that of our Saviour, John vii. 17, If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, &c. And thus they might certainly keep their station, and abide in him; unto which they are therefore exhorted.

28 And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

He condescendingly includes himself with them, that we may have confidence; intimating, for their encouragement, the common mutual joy they should have together at Christ's appearance; he, that he had not been wanting in his endeavours that they might persevere; and they, that they had persevered; which is implied in the menace of the contrary, upon the contrary supposition.

29 If ye know that he is righteous, know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.

Lest he should be thought only solicitous to preserve among them the right notions of the Christian doctrine, as if that alone would suffice them for their salvation and blessedness, (which was the conceit of the Gnostics, touching their own notions, that the entertaining of them would save men, whatsoever men they were, or howsoever they lived,) he subjoins this serious monition, If ye know, &c., intimating, that whatsoever they had of the knowledge of God would avail them nothing, if, whereas he is righteous, they were not transformed by it into his likeness, and enabled thereby to do righteousness, which alone would evidence their Divine birth, since God hath no children destitute of his image, or who resemble him not

CHAP. III

It is a mark of God's singular love toward us, that we are now called his sons, and designed for further happiness hereafter, 1, 2; and therefore we must obediently keep his commandments, 3—10, and love one another with true brotherly kindness and actual beneficence, 11—24.

BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.

So late mention having been made of that great thing, in the close of the foregoing chapter, being born of God, the holy apostle is here in a transport, in the contemplation of the glorious consequent privilege, to be called his sons; and of that admirable love, from whence the whole hath proceeded. What manner; καταμην or, how great! Called, here, (as often referring to God as the author,) signifies to be made, or to be, Matt. v. 9, 45; John i. 12; Rom. iv. 17. He confers not the name without the thing; the new, even a Divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4, in regeneration; the real advantages and dignity of the relation by adoption; and all of mere (and the greatest) kindness and good-will, Tit. iii. 5—7. Hence he intimates, it ought not to be counted grievous, that the world knoweth us not, i. e. doth not own or acknowledge us for its own, is not kind to us, yea, hates and persecutes us; knowing often (after the Hebrew phrase) signifying affection, 1 Cor. viii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 19; and accordingly, not knowing, disaffection, and the consequent effects, Matt. vii. 23. Nor should it be thought strange, because it knew him not: the Father, and the whole family, are to it an invium genus, hated alike.

2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

Our present state he affirms to be unquestionably that of sons, whatsoever hardships from the world, or severer discipline from our Father, we must for a while undergo; but for our future state, it is much above us to comprehend distinctly the glory of it; it doth not yet appear, it is yet an unrevealed thing, Rom. viii. 18; a veil is drawn before it, which is to be drawn aside at the appointed season of the manifestation of the sons of God, ver. 19. But so much we in the general know of it, (so certain are the apprehensions of faith,) that when he shall appear, or display his own glory in the appearance of his Son, who is then to come in the glory of his Father, Matt. xvi. 27; 1 Tim. vi. 14—16, we shall be like him, as it befits children to be unto their Father; i. e. his image shall then be perfected in us, which was defaced so greatly in the apostasy, is restored imperfectly in regeneration, Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10, must be daily improved in progressive sanctification: so that as God was above said to be light, Christians are to shine as lights, as the sons of God, without rebuke, representing and glorifying their Father, Matt. v. 16; Phil. ii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 9: but is then to be advanced in us to a far higher pitch than ever, in respect both of holiness and blessedness. For we shall see him as he is; i. e. so far as the limited capacity of our natures can admit; and are therefore by that likeness to be qualified for such vision: which eternal, efficacious vision doth also continue that likeness, the causal particle, for, admitting both those references: see Psal. xvii. 15.

3 And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Purifieth himself; i. e. not only is obliged hereto, but by the efficacious influence of this hope, if it be of the same kind, (that lively hope, unto which Christians are said to be begotten, 1 Pet. i. 3,) is daily more and more transformed, through a continual intention of mind towards the holy God, upon whom that hope is set, (for it is said to be hope in him, or rather upon him, ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ.) into the image of the Divine purity; knowing also, (which must be a potent inducement to very earnest endeavour this way,) that our future conformity to God in glory and blessedness hereafter, depends upon our present vigorous and effectual pursuit of conformity to him in holiness here, Matt. v. 8; Heb. xii. 14. And it is enforced by what follows.

4 Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

Which is added, to signify nothing can be more unreasonable, than the expectation of partaking with God in the glory and blessedness of the future state, if we now allow ourselves in a course of sin, or of transgressing his holy law, which is the very notion of sin; and is again further enforced from the design of our Redeemer.

5 And ye know that he was manifest-

c Isa. 56. 5.
Rom. 8. 13.
Gal. 3. 26.
1 Cor. 13. 12.
1 Cor. 13. 12.
2 Cor. 4. 17.
1 Cor. 8. 29.
1 Cor. 15. 49.
Phil. 3. 21.
2 Cor. 5. 7.

Col. 3. 4. 2 Pet. 1. 4. Job 19. 26. Ps. 16. 11. Matt. 5. 8. 1 Cor. 13. 12. 2 Cor. 5. 7.

b ch. 3. 2.
e ch. 4. 17.

d Acta 22. 14.
Or, know ye.
e ch. 3. 7, 10.

a John 1. 12.

b John 15. 18, 19. & 16. 3. & 17. 25.

b Rom. 4. 15.
ch. 5. 17.

1 ch. 1. 2.

1. 16. Heb. 1. 1. ed<sup>h</sup> to take away our sins; and<sup>i</sup> in him is no sin.

Implying how great an absurdity it were, to expect salvation and blessedness by our sinless Saviour, and yet indulge ourselves in sin, against his design, not only to expiate our sins, but make us sinless like himself.

6 Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: <sup>m</sup>whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

By sinneth, he meaneth the same thing as afterwards by committeth sin: see ver. 8, 9. Seeing and knowing intend inward union, acquaintance, and converse; such as abode in him implies: see John v. 37; 3 John 11.

7 Little children, <sup>n</sup>let no man deceive you: <sup>o</sup>he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

This caution implies the zealous endeavour of the seducers of that time, to instil their poisonous doctrine and principles of licentiousness; and his own solicitude, lest these Christians should receive them, and be mischieved by them. Whereas therefore they were wont to suggest, that a merely notional knowledge was enough to recommend men, and make them acceptable to God, though they lived never so impure lives; he inculcates, that only they that did righteousness, viz. in a continued course, living conformably to the rules of the gospel, were righteous; and that they must aim to be so, even as he is righteous; not only making the righteousness and holy life of Christ the object of their trust, but the pattern of their walking and practice.

8 <sup>p</sup>He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, <sup>q</sup>that he might destroy the works of the devil.

He that committeth sin: the apostle's notion of committing sin may be interpreted by his own phrase, 3 John 11, ὁ κακοποιῶν, a doer of evil; and by that, used in both Testaments, a worker of iniquity; which is not every one that doth any one single act of sin; as his ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, ver. 7, a doer of righteousness, and ὁ ἀγαθοποιῶν, 3 John 11, a doer of good, is not every one that doth any one righteous or good action; any more than we call him a worker or maker of any thing, (as signifying a manual occupation,) who only makes a single attempt, but him who hath acquired the habitual skill, and doth ordinarily employ himself accordingly. A worker or maker of sin, (as we may fitly render this ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἀμαρτίαν.) is an habitual or customary sinner; one that sinneth with deliberation, not by surprise, from a prevailing habit, that either continueth him in a course of actual known sin, or that withholds him from repenting sincerely, and turning to God from the sin which he hath committed; by which repentance he should not only refrain from further gross acts of sin, (which an impenitent person upon other inducements may do,) but mortify and prevail against all sinful habits and inclinations. In the same sense he useth the expression of sinning, ver. 6, 9. And such a sinner, he says, is of the devil; as if he were born of him, were his child, really conformed to him, and having his sinning nature. As our Saviour tells the Jews, having applied to them the same phrase before of committing sin, John viii. 34, that they were of their father the devil, ver. 44. As also this apostle, 3 John 11, says, He that doeth good is of God, i. e. born of God, or his child; as we find he uses the expressions of being born of God, and being of God, promiscuously, and with indifference, ver. 9, 10; chap. v. 18, 19, the latter being elliptical in reference to the former. Whereas sin was therefore originally the devil's work, he adds, (as a further engagement against it,) that the Son of God was manifested, (as ver. 5,) appeared in the flesh, showed himself in this world of ours, on purpose to destroy, or (as the word signifies) that he might dissolve the frame of all such works.

9 <sup>r</sup>Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for <sup>s</sup>his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

To be born of God, is, (in the words of a very learned annotator, Dr. Hammond,) "to have received some special influence from God, and by the help and power of that, to be raised to a pious life. Agreeably, γεννημένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, he that hath been born of God, is literally, he that hath had such a blessed change wrought in him, by the operation of God's Spirit in his heart, as to be translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of his own dear Son; transformed in the spirit of his mind, i. e. sincerely changed from all evil to all good; from an obedience to the flesh, &c., to an obedience to God. Only it is here to be noted, that the phrase is not so to be taken, as to denote only the act of this change; the first impression of this virtue on the patient, the single transient act of regeneration, or reformation; and that, as in the preter tense, now past, but rather a continued course, a permanent state: so as a regenerate man and a child of God are all one, and signify him that lives a pious and godly life, and continues to do so," &c. To the same purpose this author also speaks, note on John i. 13, and in his paraphrase on that verse: "Those which live according to the will of God, and neither the natural, nor carnal, nor bare moral principle." This change, introducing the consequent course, divers texts of Scripture explain, John iii. 3, 5, 6; 2 Cor. 17; Eph. ii. 10; iv. 24; James i. 18, &c. Now of one thus born of God, it is said, he doth not commit sin, as ver. 8, and for the reason here alleged. His seed; the principles of enlivened holy truth, as 1 Pet. i. 23; James i. 8. And he cannot sin: which is not to be understood simply, as if he could not sin at all, which were to contradict what he had said before, chap. i. 8, and supposed, chap. ii. 1; but he cannot commit sin, as ver. 8. And it is plain the apostle intends by these two expressions the same thing. He cannot sin, i. e. do an act of known, gross sin, deliberately, easily, remorselessly, maliciously, as Cain, ver. 12, out of a hatred of goodness: or, do not such acts customarily, or not so unto death, (as chap. v. 16,) but that through the advantage of inlaid principles, or the remaining seed, by dependence upon the grace, Spirit, and covenant of God in Christ, he may timously recover. Because he is born of God; i. e. inasmuch as it belongs to his temper and inclination, in respect of the holy new nature received in regeneration; to abhor from the grosser acts, much more from a course of sin; see Gen. xxxix. 9; Acts iv. 20; 2 Cor. xiii. 8; Gal. v. 17: and to his state, as he is a child of God, to have that interest in the grace of Christ, that he may implore, trust, obtain, and improve it, to his being kept from such destructive sinning. And it being evident, by his deep and thorough change, that he is born of God, and chosen to be an heir of eternal life, (as his children are heirs,) he may and ought (not in a way of presumptuous negligence, but of vigilance and humble dependence) certainly to expect being so kept. Nor is it strange so much should be affirmed, upon so unspeakably better grounds, of the Christian state, when such boasts are to be read concerning some among the pagans, that one might as soon divert the sun from its course, as turn such a one from the course of righteousness. Though we may also suppose this form of speech might be intended by the apostle to be understood by the more superficial professors of Christianity, (who might be generally apt enough to look upon themselves as born of God, and his children,) as parenetical, and more enforcingly hortatory, in pursuance of his former scope, to keep them off from the licentious courses of their seducers; q. d. It cannot be, that you, who avow yourselves born of God, should do like them. So we usually say, that cannot but be, or cannot be, which we apprehend more highly and clearly reasonable should be, or not be. Non potes avelli, &c. Such rhetoric the apostle uses with Agrippa, I know that thou believest, as if it were impossible he should not.

10 In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil:

<sup>t</sup>whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, <sup>u</sup>neither he that loveth not his brother.

Upon what was said, he reduces all men each to their r ch. 5. 18. s 1 Pet. 1. 23.

t ch. 2. 29. u ch. 4. 8.

own family and father, concluding it manifest whither they belonged; i. e. he shows, upon the grounds before expressed, who do not belong to God and his family, leaving it thence to be collected, since two fathers and families divide the world, to which they must be reckoned; i. e. they belong not to God, and consequently to that worst of fathers, who first, in the general, do not righteousness; the devil being the first sinner, they are his descendants; and who next, particularly, love not their brethren, which most expressly demonstrates a diabolical nature.

x ch. 1. 5.
& 2. 7.
f Or, commandment.
y John 13.
34. & 15. 12.
ver. 23. ch. 4. 7, 21. 2 John 5.

11 For * this is the || message that ye heard from the beginning, ' that we should love one another.

From the beginning: see chap. ii. 7, 8: q. d. They cannot be of God, therefore, that cross so fundamental a precept, so expressive of his nature and will.

z Gen. 4. 4,
& Heb. 11.
& Jude 11.

12 Not as * Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

And what again, on the other hand, (q. d.) can be more devil-like, than such a temper as Cain's was, whose hatred of his brother brake out into actual murder, upon no other account but because his brother was better than he? Which showed him to be of that wicked one, of the serpent's seed: so early was such seed sown, and so ancient the enmity between seed and seed.

a John 15.
18, 19. & 17.
14. 2 Tim.
3 12.

13 Marvel not, my brethren, if * the world hate you.

This being so devilish a quality, and the world so generally under his power, as the god of it, 2 Cor. iv. 4, it is not to be thought strange, that good men should be the marks and designed objects of the world's hatred.

b ch. 2. 10.

14 <sup>b</sup> We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. <sup>c</sup> He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

The notion of brother must not be understood so narrowly, as only to signify such as we have particular inclination to, as being of our own party and opinion, or kindred, or who have obliged us by special kindness; for to confine our love within such limits, were no argument of our having passed from death unto life, or more than is to be found with the worst of men, Matt. v. 46, 47. Nor must it be understood exclusively, of the regenerate only; but must be taken, first, more generally, in the natural sense, for all mankind, in the same latitude as neighbour in that summary of the second table, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself; originally intended not to Jews, as such, but men; and therefore excludes not our enemies, by our Saviour's interpretation, Matt. v. 43, 44. Secondly, in a more special (viz. the spiritual) sense, for such as are our brethren by regeneration, so the children with us of the same Father; i. e. whereas the blessed God himself is the primum amabile, the first object of love, all others (persons or things) ought to be loved proportionably to what prints or characters of the Divine excellency we find impressed upon them. Human nature hath resemblances in it of his spiritual, intelligent, immortal nature; regeneracy, of his holiness. And so he loves his creatures himself, severing their malignity, (where that is to be found,) that is of themselves, from what of real good there is in them, which is from him. When therefore a correspondent frame of love is impressed upon us, and inwrought into our temper, his image, who is love, is renewed in us, which, in this noble part of it, the devil had so eminently defaced in the world, possessing the souls of men with mutual animosities and enmities against one another, but especially such as should be found to have upon them any impress of the most excellent kind of goodness, i. e. of true piety and holiness. And by this renovation of his image in us, whereby we are enabled to love others for his sake, and proportionably to what characters of him are upon them, we appear to be his children, Matt. v. 45, begotten of him into a state of life, out of that death which is upon the rest of the world, Eph. ii.

1. and wherein every one still abides that thus loves not his brother.

15 <sup>d</sup> Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that * no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

That life into which the regenerate are begotten, is nothing else than the beginning or first principle of eternal life, John iv. 14, whereof they cannot but be destitute who hate their brethren; a thing so contrary to the Divine life, nature, and image, and which makes the person affected with it, in the temper and habit of his mind, a very murderer.

16 ' Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

He laid down his life for us: the intimate union between the Divine nature and the human in Christ, gives ground for the calling Christ's life as man the life of God; as, Acts xx. 28, his blood is said to be God's own blood. And this testimony of God's love to us, his laying down his life for us, ought so to transform us into his likeness, that out of the power of that Divine principle, the love of God in us, (so that implanted love is called, ver. 17, the love of God.) we should never hesitate, or make a difficulty, to lay down our lives for the Christian community, or even for the common good and welfare of men, being duly called thereto.

17 But <sup>e</sup> whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, <sup>f</sup> how dwelleth the love of God in him?

i. e. If the love of God in us should make us lay down our lives for the brethren, and we be not willing, in their necessity and our own ability, to relieve them, how plain is the case, that it is not in us!

18 My little children, <sup>g</sup> let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.

q. d. It is a vain thing to make verbal pretences of love, without any real proof of it.

19 And hereby we know <sup>h</sup> that we are of the truth, and shall <sup>i</sup> assure our hearts before him.

And hereby we know that we are of the truth; i. e. this shall demonstrate to us, that we are the children of the truth, begotten by it, James i. 18, when we resemble it, have the correspondent impress of the gospel (that great representation of the love of God) upon us. And shall assure our hearts before him; so shall our hearts be quieted, and well satisfied concerning our states God-ward.

20 <sup>j</sup> For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

If our heart, or our conscience, condemn us, viz. in plain things, (as this of loving our brother is,) and wherein the mind of God is evidently the same with our own conscience; his superiority, to whom our conscience is but an under-judge, ought much more to awe us, especially considering how much more he knows of us than we do of ourselves; as 1 Cor. iv. 4.

21 <sup>k</sup> Beloved, <sup>l</sup> if our heart condemn us not, <sup>m</sup> then have we confidence toward God.

But for their not condemning us, though the expression be merely negative, it must imply somewhat positive; for there are many whose hearts condemn them not, through ignorance of their rule, or oscitancy, self-indulgence, or neglect of themselves. But if after thorough search, with sincerity in the sight of God, our hearts do not condemn, but acquit us, as upright towards him, not willing to allow ourselves in any ill temper or practice, (such as, for instance, this of not loving, or neglecting, our brother,) then we have confidence (liberty of speech the word literally signifies, which well suits with what follows) toward God;

d Matt. 5. 21,
22. ch. 4. 20,
e Gal. 5. 21.
Rev. 21. 6.

f John 3. 16.
& 15. 13.
Rom. 5. 8.
Eph. 5. 2, 25.
ch. 4. 9, 11.

g Deut. 15. 7.
Luke 3. 11.

h ch. 4. 20.

i Ezek. 33.
31. Rom. 12.
9. Eph. 4. 15.
Jam. 2. 15.
1 Pet. 1. 22.

k John 18.
37. ch. 1. 8.
† Gr. persuade.

l 11 Cor. 4. 4.

m Job 22. 26.
n Heb. 10. 22.
ch. 2. 28.
& 4. 17.

we have nothing to hinder or lie as a bar against us in our recourse to him.

22 And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

It is supposed, where there is that accord with God, that what was last, and is next after, said implies, there will be no disposition to ask any thing disagreeable to his will, or otherwise than as he hath expressed his will about the matter of prayer. And then, whatsoever we ask, we receive, i. e. are as sure to receive it, in the kind or in equivalence, as if we had it, chap. v. 14. Because we keep his commandments; i. e. this is the cause of our certainty, being the evidence of our state God-ward, Psal. lxxi. 18, 19; not of our receiving the things prayed for, which we only owe to his free promised mercy in Christ.

23 And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

This briefly is comprehended the whole of our duty towards God in Christ, and one another, in a like summary as that, Eccles. xii. 13.

24 And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

He that keepeth his commandments, i. e. he whose whole soul is thus formed to obediential compliance with the Divine will, dwelleth in him; hath most intimate union with God in Christ; which is evident by that Spirit given to us, which hath effected both that holy frame, and that union: see John xiv. 23.

CHAP. IV

The apostle warneth to try by certain rules the spirits that pretend to come from God, 1—6. He presseth the obligation of mutual love upon Christians from the example and commandment of God, 7—21.

BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

Believe not every spirit; i. e. not every one pretending to inspiration, or a revelation; spirit, whether good or bad, being put for the person acted thereby. But try the spirits; there being a judgment of discretion or discerning, common to Christians, de jure, and which they ought to endeavour for and to use upon such occasions, Acts xvii. 11; Phil. i. 9, 10; 1 Thess. v. 21; and the attainment and exercise whereof is, in reference to the great essentials of religion, more facile and sure: as when heretofore among the Jews, any should attempt the drawing them off from the true God, as Deut. xiii. 1, 2; and so when with Christians it should be endeavoured to tempt them away from Christ, as the false prophets or teachers did, now gone out into the world.

2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

He here gives them the general rule, both affirmative and negative, which would suffice them to judge by in their present case; this being the great controversy of that time with the Jews, Whether Jesus were the Messiah? and whether the Messiah were as yet come or no? and with the Gnostics, Whether he were really come in the flesh, in true human nature? or were not, as to that appearance, a mere phantasm? And he affirms, They that confessed him so come, were of God; i. e. thus far they were in the right, this truth was of God. Of the two litigating parties, this was of God, the other not of God; this took his side, that was against him. Yea, and they that not only made this true confession, but did also truly confess him, i. e. sincerely, cordially, practically, so as accordingly to trust in him, subject and devote themselves to him, were born of God, his very children, acted and influenced herunto by his own Holy Spirit, as chap. v. 1, 5; Matt. xvi. 16, 17; 1 Cor. xii. 3.

3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

But on the contrary, concerning them who against so plain evidence denied him to be so come, the case was plain; as with the Jews, John viii. 24, and with the present heretics, who denying the true manner, could not but deny the true end of his coming; and who also lived so impure lives, as imported the most open opposition and hostility thereto, and so discovered most evidently that antichristian spirit, which it was foreknown would show itself in the world.

4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

Their being born of God, and their participation of a directive and strengthening influence from him, kept them from being overcome by the plausible notions, the alluring blandishments of the flesh and sense, the terror of persecution used towards them by these antichristian or pseudo-christian tempters; and enabled them to overcome, because the Divine Spirit in them was stronger than the others' lying, impure spirit.

5 They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

6 We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

He giveth here a further rule whereby to judge of doctrines and teachers, viz. what they severally savour of, and tend to. The doctrines and teachers whereby these Christians were assaulted and tempted, were of an earthly savour and gust, tending only to gratify worldly lusts and inclinations, and to serve secular interests and designs; and therefore men only of a worldly spirit and temper were apt to listen and give entertainment to them. On the other hand, says he, (in the name of the asserters and followers of true and pure Christianity, comprehended with himself,) We are of God; i. e. our doctrine and way proceed from God, and tend only to serve, please, and glorify him, and draw all to him; therefore such as know God, i. e. are his friends, and converse much with him, hear us; the things we propose and offer are grateful and savoury to them, (as John viii. 37, 47,) having manifestly no other aim than to promote serious godliness. And hereby may the spirit of truth and the spirit of error in matters of this nature be distinguished; the one being next of kin to purity, and holiness, and a godly life; the other, to sensuality, and a design only of gratifying the animal life.

7 Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

Beloved, let us love one another: in opposition to the malice and cruelty of these enemies to true and pure Christianity, he exhorteth to mutual love, not limited to themselves, as undoubtedly he did not intend, see note on chap. iii. 14; but that they should do their part towards all others, letting it lie upon them, if it were not reciprocated and mutual. For love is of God; this he presses as a further discrimination; nothing being more evidential of relation and alliance to God, than a duly regulated love, which is of him.

8 He that loveth not ° knoweth not God; for ° God is love.

Yea, since love is his very nature, and that God is love, those that love (upon the account and in the way above expressed) are born of him, partake from him that excellent and most delectable nature, know him by a transformative knowledge: but they that love not, they are mere strangers to him, and never had to do with him.

9 ° In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

There could be no higher demonstration of his love, John iii. 16.

10 Herein is love, ° not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son ° to be the propitiation for our sins.

In comparison of this wonderful love of his, in sending his Son to be a sacrifice for sins, our love to him is not worthy the name of love.

11 Beloved, ° if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

We discover little sense of this love of his to us, if we do not so.

12 ° No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and ° his love is perfected in us.

The essence of God is to our eyes invisible, incomprehensible to our minds; but by yielding ourselves to the power of his love, so as to be transformed by it, and habituated to the exercise of mutual love, we come to know him by the most pleasant and most apprehensible effects, experiencing his indwelling, vital, operative presence and influences, whereby he is daily perfecting this his own likeness and image in us. This is the most desirable way of knowing God, when, though we cannot behold him at a distance, we may feelingly apprehend him nigh us, and in us.

13 ° Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

The near inward union between him and us, is best to be discerned by the operations of his Spirit, which is the Spirit of all love and goodness, chap. iii. 24: Eph. v. 9.

14 And ° we have seen and do testify that ° the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

He here signifies we are not left at any uncertainties, touching that matter of fact, wherein lies this mighty argument for the exercise of mutual love among Christians, God's having sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world; for, as he again inculcates, we testify upon eye-sight, having beheld him, and conversed with him, living and dying.

15 ° Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

This discourse is most studiously and observably interwoven, of these two great things, mentioned chap. iii. 23, faith in the Messiah, and the love of one another, as being the principal antidotes against the poisonous insinuations of the apostates. Of confessing, see note on ver. 2.

16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. ° God is love; and ° he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Inasmuch as the transformative efficacy of God's love upon us depends upon our certain apprehension of it, he doubles the expression of that certainty: We have known and believed, i. e. we are assured of it, both by experimented effects, and by faith; implying, that by having this conception of God thoroughly settled in our souls, that he is love, (as was also said, ver. 8,) we shall be so thoroughly changed into his very nature and image, as to dwell in love, as in our own element, or a thing now become wholly con-natural to us. Which will indeed be (by consequence) to be so intimately united with God, that he and we may truly (though in a sense most remote from identification, or being made the same, a horrid notion! not only not inferred by what is here said, but inconsistent with it and refused by it, for things united are thereby implied to be distinct) be said to indwell one another.

17 Herein is ° our love made perfect, that ° we may have boldness in the day of judgment: ° because as he is, so are we in this world.

And by this means (viz. of our inwardness with God) doth our love grow to that perfection, that we shall have the most fearless freedom and liberty of spirit in the judgment-day; our hearts no way misgiving to appear before him as a Judge, whose very image we find upon ourselves, he having beforehand made us such even in this world, though in an infinitely inferior degree, as he is, compositions of love and goodness. Or, if the day of judgment should mean, as some conceive, of our appearance before human tribunals for his sake, such a temper of spirit must give us the same boldness in that case also.

18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth ° is not ° made perfect in love.

That he proveth from the contrary natures of fear and love. The fear which is of the baser kind, viz. that is servile, and depresses the spirit, hath no place with love, but is excluded by it, by the same degrees by which that love grows up to perfection, and shall be quite excluded by that love fully perfected: inasmuch as love is a pleasant, fear a tormenting, passion, which, as such, while it remains, shows the imperfection of love.

19 We love him, because he first loved us.

His is the fountain love, ours but the stream: his love the inducement, the pattern, and the effective cause of ours. He that is first in love, loves freely; the other therefore loves under obligation.

20 ° If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God ° whom he hath not seen?

The greater difficulty here is implied, through our present dependence upon sense, of loving the invisible God, than men that we daily see and converse familiarly with. Hence, considering the comprehensiveness of these two things, the love of God, and of our brother, that they are the roots of all that duty we owe to God and man, the fulfilling of the whole law, Matt. xxii. 37—39, he lets us see the falsehood and absurdity of their pretence to eminent piety and sanctity, who neglect the duties of the second table.

21 And ° this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

Both ought to be conjoined, being required both by the same authority.

CHAP. V

He that loveth God loveth God's children, and keepeth his commandments, 1—3. A true faith will enable us to overcome the world, 4, 5. The witnesses of our faith, 6—10. God hath given to believers eternal life through his Son, 11—13; and will hear and grant their petitions, made according to his will, 14—17. God's children are distinguished from the world by abstaining from sin, and by a right knowledge, 18—20. A caution against idolatry, 21.

WHOSOEVER ° believeth that ° Jesus is the Christ is ° born of God: ° and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him.

Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ; this is not meant of a mere professed, or of a slight and superficial,

e ch. 2. 4.
& 3. 6.
p ver. 16.

q John 3. 16.
Rom. 5. 8.
& 8. 32.
ch. 3. 16.

r ch. 5. 11.

s John 15. 16.
Rom. 5. 8.
& 8. 32.
10. Tit. 2. 4.
ch. 2. 2.

t Matt. 18.
33. John 15.
12. 13.
ch. 3. 16.

x John 1. 18.
1 Tim. 6. 16.
ver. 20.

y ch. 2. 5.
ver. 18.

a John 14. 20.
ch. 3. 24.

a John 1. 14.
ch. 1. 1, 2.
q John 3. 17.

e Rom. 10. 9.
ch. 5. 1, 5.

d ver. 8.
e ver. 12.
ch. 3. 24.

+ Gr. love
with us.
f Jam. 2. 13.
ch. 2. 28.
& 3. 19, 21.
g ch. 3. 3.

h ver. 12.

i ch. 2. 4.
& 3. 17.

k ver. 12.

l Matt. 22.
37, 39.
John 13. 34.
& 15. 12.
ch. 3. 23.

a John 1. 12.
h ch. 2. 22.
23. & 4. 2. 15.
c John 1. 13.
d John 15. 23.

but of a lively, efficacious, unitive, soul-transforming, and obediencial faith in Jesus as the Christ, which is elsewhere made the effect of the regenerating power and grace of God, John i. 12, 13. And as nothing can be more conatural to such a heaven-born faith, than the loving of him that hath begotten us to it; so nothing can be more certainly consequent and agreeable, than the loving of them too who are begotten also of the same Father, viz. with a correspondent love to the more excellent characters and image of God upon them, than are upon other men.

2 By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments.

It is not otherwise to be known that we truly love the children of God, as such; for if we do, we must love them upon God's account, in conformity to him, and obedience to his commandments; wherefore our true love to them supposes our love to him, and is to be evinced by it.

3 *For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.

For this is the love of God, i. e. this is the most lively, certain expression and effect of our love to God, our keeping his commandments, which are so little grievous, that true love can make no difficulty of doing so, Matt. xi. 30; Psal. xix. 11.

4 For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

He explains himself, viz. that to one who is born of God his commandments are not grievous, because such a one, in that divine birth, hath received a life and nature that makes him far superior to this world, exalts him above it, makes him victorious over the worldly spirit, (as chap. iv. 4.) over all worldly desires, and fears, and hopes, and joys, which are the great hinderances of our obedience to God. This is the victory; i. e. the instrument, the weapon, by which they overcome, and which virtually includes in itself this victory over the world, as effects are included in the power of their cause, is their faith, that principle which in their regeneration (as above) is implanted in them.

5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

For that faith, viz. that Jesus is the Son of God, (or the Christ, as ver. 1.) fills the soul with so great things concerning him, and the design of his coming among us, and what we are to expect thereupon, as easily turn this world into a contemptible shadow, and deprive it of all its former power over us.

6 This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

For the explaining of this obscure place we must proceed by degrees. 1. It is evident, that water and blood cannot be here meant literally. 2. It is therefore consequent, that they must be intended to signify somewhat or other by way of symbolical representation, or that they must have some mystical meaning. 3. They ought to have such a meaning assigned them, as will both be agreeable to the expressions themselves, and to the apostle's present scope and design. 4. It will be very agreeable to the expressions, to understand by water the purity of our blessed Lord, and by blood his sufferings. 5. His manifest scope and design is, to show the abundantly sufficient credibility of the witnesses and testimony we have, to assure us that Jesus was the Christ, or the Messiah, and to induce us to believe this of him, with so efficacious and transforming a faith, as should evidence our being born of God, and make us so victorious over the world, as constantly to adhere to this Jesus by trust and obedience, against all the allurements and terrors of it. 6. This being his scope, it supposeth that the mentioned coming of Jesus, as Messiah, was for some known end, unto his accomplishment whereof these two, his purity and his sufferings, were apt and certain means, as that they were to be considered under the notion of means, his being said to have come diá, by them, doth intimate. And in pursuance of this scope, he must be understood to signify, that his coming so remarkably by these two, did carry with it some very convictive proof and evidence of his being the Son of God, and the Messiah, sufficient to recommend him as the most deserving object of such a faith, and render it highly reasonable we should hereupon so trust and obey him, and entirely resign ourselves to his mercy and government. Wherefore also, 7. This his coming must here be understood in a sense accommodated hereunto, and is therefore in no reason to be taken for the very act or instant, precisely, of his entrance into this world, but to signify his whole course in it, from first to last, a continued motion and agency, correspondent to the intendment of his mission. To the clearing of which notion of his coming, some light may be gained, by considering the account which is given, 2 Thess. ii. 9, 10, of the coming of anti-christ, which is said to be after Satan, (as it were by his impulsion, and in pursuance of his ends and purposes,) with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and all deceivableness of unrighteousness; where it is manifest, coming must signify a continued course of doing business. So here, our Lord's coming must signify his continual employment for the despatch of the business about which he was sent. 8. The known business and end for which he was sent, was to reduce and bring back sinners to God. 9. How apt and necessary means these two, his purity and sufferings, were to this end, the whole frame of the gospel shows. His sacrifice of himself, in his sufferings, was necessary to our reconciliation; so he was to come and effect his work by blood: his purity was requisite to the acceptableness of his sacrifice; so it was to be done by water; without which, as was wont to be proverbially said among the Hebrews, there could be no sacrifice. 10. For the evidence his coming so remarkably by these two carried with it, for the inducing of us to believe him to be the Messiah, with such a faith, as whereby we should imitate his purity, and rely upon the value of his sufferings. We may see it in the note upon ver. 8, where the testimony of these two witnesses, the water and the blood, comes to be given in its own place and order. 11. Nor is it strange the apostle should use these mystical expressions to this purpose, if we consider what might lead him thereto: for we must remember, first, That he was a spectator of our Lord's crucifixion, and then beheld, upon the piercing of his side, the streaming forth of the water and blood; which, it appears, at that time made a very deep impression upon his mind, as his words about it in his writing his Gospel import: There came out blood and water. And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe, John xix. 34, 35. That he there lays so great a weight on it, imports that he apprehended some great mystery, if not intended, yet very apt to be signified by it. And, secondly, That he was a Jew, and (as is probable) wrote this Epistle to Jews, among whom the so frequent ablutions with water, as well as the shedding the blood of sacrifices, were most known things, and intended to typify (what they ought to have understood, and he now intimates) these very things, the purity and dying of the Messiah. Not to insist upon what he had long ere now occasion to observe in the Christian church, baptism, and the supper of our Lord, representing in effect severally the same things. Neither was this way of teaching unusual, nor these expressions less intelligible, than our Lord's calling himself (as this evangelist also records) a shepherd, a door, a vine, &c.

And it is the Spirit that beareth witness: that the Spirit is said to bear witness, see ver. 7, 8.

7 For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one.

Having mentioned the Spirit's testifying in the close of ver. 6, he returns to give us in order, in these two verses, the whole testimony of the truth of Christianity, which he reduces to two ternaries of witnesses. The matter of their testimony is the same with that of their faith who are born

e John 14.
15, 21, 23,
& 15. 11.
2 John 6.
f Mic. 6. 8.
Matt. 11. 30.

g John 16.
33. ch. 3. 9.
& 4. 4.

h 1 Cor. 15.
57. ch. 4. 15.

i John 19. 34.

k John 14.
17. & 15. 26.
& 16. 12.
l Tim. 3. 16.

l John 1. 1.
Rev. 19. 13.
m John 10.
30.

of God, that Jesus is the Son of God, and the Messiah, as may be collected from what was said before, ver. 1, 5, and what is said afterwards, ver. 9. What they believe, is no other thing than what these testify. For the first three, in heaven, that is not said to signify heaven to be the place of their testifying; for though the same thing concerning Jesus be also no doubt testified to the glorious inhabitants of that world, yet that is not the apostle's present scope, but to show what reason we have, who inhabit this world, to believe Jesus to be Christ, and the Son of God. In heaven therefore is to be referred to three, not to bear record, or witness; as if the text were read, which it may as well. There are three in heaven who bear witness; the design being to represent their immediate testifying from thence unto us, or the glorious, heavenly, majestic manner of their testifying. So the Father testified of the man Jesus by immediate voice from heaven, at his baptism and transfiguration, This is my Son. &c. The eternal Word owned its union with him, in that glory with which it so eminently clothed his humanity, and which visibly shone through it in the holy mount, whereof this apostle was a spectator, and whereto he seems to refer in his Gospel, chap. i. 14, We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, i. e. such as sufficiently testified him to be so, even the very Son of God. And the Holy Ghost testified, descending as a dove in a visible glorious appearance upon him, at his baptism also. And these three are one, viz. not only agreeing in their testimony, as ver. 8, but in unity of nature: an express testimony of the triune Deity, by whatsoever carelessness or ill design left out of some copies, but sufficiently demonstrated by many most ancient ones, to belong to the sacred text: of which L. Brug. Not. in loc., with the other critics, and at large, Dr. Hammond.

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.

And for the three that are said to bear witness on earth; there is, first, the Spirit, who, though the Holy Ghost were in the former triad, needs not here be taken for another Spirit, but may be the same, considered under another notion, and as testifying in another manner; not transiently and immediately from heaven, as there, but stately, and as acting instruments here on earth; extraordinarily, the man Christ Jesus, all his apostles and first disciples, in all the wonderful works which they did for the confirmation of the Christian doctrine; and ordinarily, the whole church of true Christians; for it animates the whole living body of Christ, and makes it, though in an imperfect measure, by a uniform course of actions, tending to God and heaven, an extant visible proof to the world of the truth of that religion which obtains in it, and of his Divine power and nature who is the Head of it. Next, the water; i. e. the continual untainted, God-like purity of our Lord Jesus, through the whole course of his terrestrial state, manifestly showed him to be the Son of God, an incarnate Deity, inhabiting our world. And lastly, the blood, his suffering of death, considered in the circumstances, was a most conspicuous, clear testimony and indication who he was; so exactly according to the predictions of the prophets, attended with wonderful amazing concomitants, ending in so glorious a resurrection. And in and with both these the Spirit, complicating his testimony, did bear witness too, as is intimated (after the former mention of them both) in the latter part of ver. 6. It testified all along, both in his clear, immaculate life, and in the bloody death in which it assisted him, which it accompanied with so marvellous effects, and out of which at length it fetched him, Rom. i. 4. And that part it took, as being the Spirit of truth, ver. 6, and, as it is there expressed, in the (more emphatical) abstract, truth itself.

9 If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

A testimony above exception, being wholly Divine, as he himself argued, John v. 36, 37; viii. 13, 14, 17, 18.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

i. e. If he truly believe, he hath the effectual impress of this testimony on his own soul; if not, he gives God the lie, as we do to any one whose testimony we believe not. See John iii. 33.

11 And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.

His testimony, that this is his Son and the Christ, imports so much, that eternal life is in him, as the source and fountain of it; so that he gives it to us in no other way than in and by him.

12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

And therefore, that we partake this life, or partake it not, as by faith we are united with him, or not united.

13 These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

That, discerning their own faith, they might be in no doubt concerning their title to eternal life, and might be thereby encouraged to persevere in the same faith.

14 And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us:

Viz. according to his will, not negatively, as it only doth not forbid our praying for, or enjoying, such and such things, but positively, i. e. according to his will signified, 1. By his commands, i. e. when the matter of our prayers is some spiritual good thing, which was before the matter of our duty; as when we pray for grace to enable us to be and to do what he requires us, as far as our present state will admit. 2. By his promises, which are more absolute and particular in reference to things of that nature, Matt. v. 6; Luke xi. 13. In reference to things of an inferior nature, of a conditional tenor; or more general, the things promised coming under the common notion of good things, not in themselves only, but for us, in present circumstances; which, whether they be or no, he reserves to himself the liberty of determining, and doth only promise them, if they be; and so we are only to pray for them; for that is praying, according to what signification he hath given us of his will, in such cases. And so we are always sure to be heard in the former case, in the very particular kind, about which his will is expressly made known beforehand.

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

In the latter, in that, or somewhat equivalent, or better; for if he determine that thing to be best for us, all circumstances considered, we shall have it; if he determine otherwise, (supposing we pray according to his will,) we desire it not: for every one intends good to himself, when he prays for any thing, not hurt. And God answers his children according to that general meaning of their prayers, not always according to the particular (which may be often a much mistaken) meaning. According whereto, supposing the thing would be really and in truth hurtful, (and God's judgment is always according to truth,) they constructively pray to be denied it; and the denial is the equivalent, nay, the better thing than what they particularly prayed for; and so they truly have their petitions: see chap. iii. 22. Nor can any be understood to pray according to God's will as the rule, if it be not to his glory as the end, as the order and connexion of petitions shows in that admirable platform prescribed by our Lord himself. And is it possible to be the sense of any one that hath a sincere heart in prayer, that God would gratify him against himself? Therefore that latitude allowed the apostles, John xiv. 13, 14; xv. 16; xvi. 23, &c., must be understood to respect

n John 8. 17,

16.

o Mat. 3. 16,

17. & 17. 6.

p Rom. 8. 16.

Gal. 4. 6.

John 3. 33. & 5. 38.

r. h. 2. 25.

s John 1. 4.

ch. 4. 9.

t John 3. 33.

& 5. 24.

u John 20.

31.

v ch. 1. 1, 2.

1 Or, concerning him.

z ch. 3. 22.

the service of the Christian interest, and is to be limited thereby, as some of the expressions show.

16 If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it.

If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death; viz. that appears not obstinate and incurable; he shall ask, i. e. with confidence, as ver. 14. But there is a sin unto death, i. e. which doth not barely deserve death, as all sin doth, nor which argues a person to be probably in a present state of death or unregeneracy, which the sinful ways may do of many that never made profession; but of such as have apostatized from a former specious profession into heresy and debauchery, and continue obstinate therein, against all methods of recovery; that are, as Jude 12, even twice dead, &c. I do not say that he shall pray for it; i. e. I do not give that encouragement to pray for such, with that hope and expectation of success, as for others; though he doth not simply forbid praying for them neither.

17 All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin not unto death.

He intimates they should be cautious of all sin, especially more deliberate, (which the word ἀδικία seems to import,) but would not have them account that every sin would make their case so hopeless, as such sin, which he called sinning unto death, would do.

18 We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not.

The great advantage is here signified of the regenerate, who, by the seed remaining in them, (as chap. iii. 9.) are furnished with a self-preserving principle, with the exercise whereof they may expect that co-operation of a gracious Divine influence by which they shall be kept, so as that wicked one, the great destroyer of souls, shall not mortally touch them, to make them sin unto death.

19 And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness.

And this he doth not exclusively assume to himself, but expresses his charitable confidence of them to whom he writes, that it was their privilege, in common with him, to be thus of God, or born of him; notwithstanding the generality of men were under the power of that before-mentioned wicked one, (as that phrase may be read,) or in the midst of all impurity and malignity.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.

It is here signified how satisfying a knowledge and certainty sincere Christians had, that Christ was indeed come, by that blessed effect they found upon themselves, viz. a clear and lively light shining, by his procurement and communication, into their minds, whereby they had other apprehensions, more vivid and powerful than ever before, of the true God, as John xvii. 3, so as thereby to be drawn into union with him, and to be in him: or, which in effect is the same thing, (so entire is the oneness between the Father and the Son,) we are in his Son Jesus Christ, who also is the true God, as John i. 1, and eternal life, as he is called, chap. i. 2.

21 Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

i. e. From those idolatrous communions with the Gentiles in their worship and festivals in their temples, which these pseudo-christians had latitude enough for, as appears by the apostle St. Paul's discourses, 1 Cor. viii. ; x. 14 (especially if any danger did urge); wherein, instead of that communion with the Father and the Son, which (chap. i. 3) he was inviting them to, they should have fellowship with devils, as that other apostle tells his Corinthians, 1 Cor. x. 20, 21. And he might also have reference to the peculiar idolatries, which this sort of men are noted to have been guilty of towards their great sect-master.

THE SECOND EPISTLE

OF

JOHN

The apostle testifieth his regard and good wishes for a certain pious matron and her children, and his joy in their good behaviour, 1—4. He exhorteth them to persevere in Christian love and belief, that they lose not their full reward, 5—9; and to have nothing to do with those seducers that bring not the true doctrine of Christ, 10, 11. He hopeth to see them shortly, and concludeth with salutations, 12, 13.

THE elder unto the elect lady and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth;

The elder; a general name of office, fitly appropriated with eminency here, he being the only apostle, probably, now surviving on earth. The elect lady; this appears to have been some noted person, whom both her singular piety, and rank in the world, made eminent, and capable of having great influence for the support of the Christian interest, which her general value with all that had known the truth, (i. e. the Christians in those parts,) shows. The opinion that a church is intended by this appellation, had it greater probability, is of no great importance, and need not here be disputed.

2 For the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever.

The indwelling of evangelical truth, which is here meant, signifies its deep radication, and powerful transforming efficacy, in the soul, so as to be productive of holiness, as John xvii. 17; than which nothing can be a greater inducement among Christians of mutual love.

3 Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

Such salutations see explained where they have formerly occurred.

4 I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy chil-

• 3 John 3. dren *walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

Some of her sons, it is probably conjectured, he had met with, upon their occasions, at Ephesus, where, it is thought, he now resided, and found them to have a good savour of religion, and to walk according to rule, which was matter of great joy to him.

f 1 John 2. 7, 8. & 3. 11. g John 13. 34. & 13. 12. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 8. 1 John 2. 23. 5 And now I beseech thee, lady, 'not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, *that we love one another.

He inculcates that great precept, of which see 1 John ii. 7, 8.

h John 14. 15, 21. & 15. 10. 1 John 2. 5. & 3. 3. i 1 John 2. 24. 6 And <sup>h</sup>this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, 'as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

From this particular command he passes to what is more general, requiring in all things a strict and unanimous adherence to the pure and primitive doctrine of the gospel, which would be the best expression of love to God, and the true centre and bond of love to one another, as 1 John v. 1, 3.

k 1 John 4. 1. 7 For <sup>k</sup>many deceivers are entered into the world, 'who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. <sup>m</sup>This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

See 1 John ii. 18, 22; iv. 3.

n Mark 13. 9. o Gal. 3. 4. Heb. 10. 32, 35. || Or, gained. 8 "Look to yourselves, *that we lose not those things which we have || wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

Some copies read, which ye have gained, but that ye receive, &c. Such changes of the person, as we here find, are neither unusual, nor, in exhortation, inelegant; but some copies read in the two latter clauses ye. He presses to constancy in the true, incorrupt Christian profession. That we receive a full reward; that the expected recompence be not lost in the whole, or in any part, as Gal. iii. 3, 4.

9 <sup>p</sup>Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

See 1 John ii. 23.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, 'neither bid him God speed:

11 For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

Such as bring any contrary doctrine, (as Gal. i. 8,) ought not to be harboured or countenanced by encouraging salutation, lest we involve ourselves in the participation of their guilt, 1 Tim. v. 22.

12 <sup>r</sup>Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink: but I trust to come unto you, and speak <sup>t</sup>face to face, *that || our joy may be full.

The latter write is not in the Greek text; but the words bear this sense, that having many things to write, I would not by paper and ink impart them to you, (the expression being elliptical,) but hope to come, &c.

13 <sup>u</sup>The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen.

They were, it is probable, with him at Ephesus, and took the occasion by him now writing, to transmit their salutations. Amen; this concluding Amen imports his sincerity in what he had written.

THE THIRD EPISTLE

OF

JOHN

The apostle, after a kind salutation to Gaius, testifieth his joy in his piety, 1—4, commending his hospitality towards the preachers of the gospel, 5—8. He censureth Diotrephes, and threateneth him for his ambitious opposition, 9, 10. The ill example of such is not to be followed, 11. He beareth testimony to the good character of Demetrius, 12. He hopeth to see Gaius shortly, and concludeth with salutations, 13, 14.

After A. D. 90. 1 THE elder unto the well beloved Gaius, <sup>a</sup>whom I love || in the truth.

2 Beloved, I || wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

This Gaius was well known by the apostle, not only to be a steadfast professor of the truly Christian, uncorrupted faith, (which is implied in his avowing his love to him in the truth, or upon the Christian account,) but to be so improved and well-grown a Christian, that he reckons he might well make the prosperous state of his soul the measure of all the other prosperity he could wish unto him.

3 For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as <sup>b</sup>thou walkest in the truth.

4 I have no greater joy than to hear that <sup>c</sup>my children walk in truth.

The truth is familiarly used to signify the pure doctrine of Christianity, which in its principal design aims at correspondent practice. That his children, i. e. such as had been converted to Christ by his ministry, (as 1 Cor. iv. 15,) of whom it appears Gaius was one, did walk in the truth; (an apt expression of such correspondent practice;) was greatest matter of joy to this holy apostle, especially when the godly lives of such, to whose conversion he had been instrumental, were so observable, as to gain them a testimony from all others that knew them, as it was in the present instance.

5 Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers;

Charity to Christians is reckoned fidelity to Christ, being shown to them upon the Christian account, which is intimated to have been done by this pious person, who so kindly treated the brethren, and strangers, i. e. even though they were strangers.

6 Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey <sup>d</sup>after a godly sort, thou shalt do well:

a 2 John 1. 1 Or, truly. b Or, pray.

b 2 John 4.

p 1 John 2. 23.

q Rom. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 5. 11. & 16. 22. Gal. 1. 8, 9. 2 Tim. 3. 5. Tit. 3. 10.

r 3 John 13.

+ Gr. mouth to mouth. s John 17. 13. 1 John 1. 4. || Or, your.

t 1 Pet. 5. 13.

c 1 Cor. 4. 15. Philen. 10.

+ Gr. worship of God.

After a godly sort; i. e. after a manner (as the Greek expression is) worthy of God, viz. as becomes them who bear the name of God, as thou dost, or are intent upon his work, as they are; which latter notion is confirmed by what follows.

7 Because that for his name's sake they went forth, <sup>d 1 Cor. 9. 12, 15.</sup> taking nothing of the Gentiles.

8 We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth.

They went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles; it thence appears these were Jews, who went out from their own country to serve the interest of the gospel, which therefore he should serve in helping them.

9 I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church.

I wrote unto the church; this was probably some church of which Gaius was. Diotrephes, one who had received or usurped some office or authority in it, to so ill a purpose, as when he had no inclination to be hospitable himself to fellow Christians, prevented others from being so; and upon pretence of the little differences of these Jewish from the Gentile Christians, excluded them their communion.

11 Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

Follow not; Μη μιμού by following here he means imitation, i. e. the deformity of evil appearing in the practice of some, and the beauty of true goodness in others, (examples being given of both sorts, ver. 9, and 12,) he exhorts to decline the former, and imitate the other; and enforces the exhortation by the weightiest arguments. He that doeth good; a doer of good, one made up of kindness and benignity (as the context draws the sense to that special kind of goodness); ἀγαθοποιῶν and ὁ κακοποιῶν, signify doing well or ill, from a fixed, prevailing habit, 1 John iii. 7, 8. Is of God; is allied to heaven, born of God, his offspring. But he that doeth evil hath not seen God; an evil-doer, on the other hand, such a one as is a composition of spite, envy, and malice, is a mere stranger to him, hath not been, or known, or had to do with him.

12 Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record; and ye know that our record is true.

Some eminent Christian, whom he could with confidence recommend as a pattern.

13 I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee:

Having much more to say, as 2 John 12, he resolved on a more immediate, grateful, and effectual way of imparting and even impressing his sense, as the term, writing, is used in a greater latitude, Prov. iii. 3, and elsewhere.

14 But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Speak face to face; σρόμα πρὸς σρόμα, viz. by oral conference, which he hoped ere long to have opportunity for. He concludes with the usual Christian salutations.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

J U D E

THE ARGUMENT

SOME question there hath been concerning the penman of this Epistle, and some have thought that Jude the apostle was not the man, whoever were; 1. Because he doth not give himself the title of apostle: but that is objected against James too, and hath been already answered. 2. Because the writer of this Epistle speaks of himself as coming after the apostles, ver. 17. But what necessity is there for his coming behind them in office and authority, because he doth in time? 3. Because he mentions the contention about the body of Moses, and the prophecy of Enoch, which are no where to be found in Scripture. But when there were divers traditions among the Jews, (whereof this about Moses's body seems to be one,) why might not the Holy Ghost assert some that were true (though before doubtful) by this apostle, and make them certain, as well as he doth by Paul the names of Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8, which were known only by tradition; and Moses's quaking and fearing at Mount Sinai, Heb. xii. 21, whereof no mention had been made in the Scripture? As for the prophecy of Enoch, it seems to have been a tradition too, (for he mentions no writing,) and then the same may be said as to the other. Yet if it were a book, and an apocryphal one too, his citing of it doth not make it to be canonical; for Jude might as well cite a passage out of an apocryphal writer, as Paul doth several out of heathen authors, Acts xvii. 28; 1 Cor. xv. 33; Tit. i. 12. And, 4. Because much of this Epistle seems to be transcribed out of 2 Pet. ii., and therefore not to be dictated by the Spirit. But to this it may be said, that though many passages in this Epistle agree with what Peter speaks, yet there is so much difference in the whole, that it is plain they are not transcribed thence. And yet why might not the Spirit dictate the same truths to several penmen, either to be published to several persons, or the same persons at different times? Most of Obadiah's prophecy is to be found in Jeremiah's; Psal. lx. is in a great part the same with cviii., and Psal. xiv. the same with liii.; and Paul by the same Spirit wrote many of the same things to the Ephesians, and to the Colossians. And what is alleged of the ancients questioning the authority of this Epistle, it is not so considerable, as it might be alleged, even out of them, for the confirmation of it. Sure we may say, the spirit of an apostle breathes in this as well as in others; the same majesty, purity, and efficacy appear in it, and whatever may evidence its Divine authority. It is written to the Christian Jews. The matter of it agrees very much with 2 Pet. ii., and the scope is mostly the same, viz. to arm them against those who, by their wicked errors and wicked manners, secretly and slyly brought in, might infect them, and seduce them into the same wickedness with themselves, whereby they might be exposed to the same judgment, which he pronounceth were like to come upon such.

After a general address, Jude exhorteth Christians to constancy in the received faith, 1—3. He foretelleth the punishment of certain false teachers crept into the church, and describeth their evil doctrine and manners, 4—19. He exhorteth true Christians to persevere in the right faith, and in the love of God, 20, 21; and to seek the reformation of others, 22—23. He concludeth with ascribing glory to God, 24, 25.

A. D. cir. 66. JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and <sup>a</sup>brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and <sup>b</sup>preserved in Jesus Christ, and <sup>c</sup>called :

Jude; called also Lebbeus, and Thaddæus, Matt. x. 3. The servant of Jesus Christ; not only in the general notion, as a believer, but in a more special, as an apostle. Priests and prophets in the Old Testament are peculiarly called God's servants, Psal. cxxxiv.; Amos iii. 7; and so are ministers in the New, 2 Tim. ii. 24. And brother of James; that James who was the son of Alphæus, Matt. x. He mentions his brother to distinguish himself from Judas Iscariot; and his brother rather than his father, because James was most famous in the church, Acts xv. Gal. ii. 9; 1 Cor. ix. 5; as likewise to show his consent with his brother in his doctrine, and to make his Epistle the more acceptable. To them that are sanctified by God the Father, viz. as the prime efficient cause of sanctification, which he works in believers by the Son, through the Spirit. And preserved in Jesus Christ: their salvation, and perseverance, and deliverance from dangers, not being in their own power; he intimates, that Christ was appointed to be their King, and Head, and Keeper, the Author and Finisher of their faith, Heb. xii. 2, and furnished with power for their protection and security, and that by him they were kept unto the salvation purchased for them, viz. by his powerful operation and gracious influence maintaining their faith and union with himself. And called, with an effectual calling, the beginning of their sanctification, before mentioned. The copulative, and, is not in the Greek; and the words may be read, sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, as being called; and so called may be understood as going before the other two; and then the sense is, to the called, sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ; or, to them who, being called, are sanctified, &c.

d 1 Pet. 1. 2. 2 Mercy unto you, and <sup>d</sup>peace, and <sup>e</sup>love, be multiplied.

Mercy unto you; which is the fountain of reconciliation, and all the grace vouchsafed you: see 1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2; Tit. i. 4. Love; either he means God's love to them, or their love to God and each other. Be multiplied; mercy in the effects of it, peace in the sense of it, and either the love of God in the manifestation of it, or their love to God and their neighbours in the degrees and exercise of it.

3 Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you <sup>f</sup>of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that <sup>g</sup>ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

When I gave all diligence to write unto you: the apostle here declares the first cause of his writing to them, viz. his own inclination and readiness, according to the duty of his place, (as an apostle,) so to do: q. d. Being of myself willing, and earnestly desirous to promote your welfare, when absent from you, by writing unto you. Of the common salvation; i. e. those things which concern the salvation of us all in common, or that salvation which is common to us all; there being but one salvation for all believers, and one way to it. It was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you; the second reason of his writing, viz. the necessity of it, in respect of the danger they were in, as follows, ver. 4. That ye should earnestly contend; by constancy in the faith, zeal for the truth, holiness of life, mutual exhortation, prayer, suffering for the gospel, &c., against those that would pervert the gospel. For the faith; the doctrine of the gospel; faith is taken for the object of faith. Which was once; either, once for all, because it was delivered by all the apostles as the only unchangeable rule of governing their lives, and obtaining salvation, to which nothing is to be added, and from which nothing is to be taken away; or it implies, that it was therefore delivered to them that they might never forsake it, and that if they do, they miss of their salvation, as being never like to have another way made known to them. Delivered unto the saints; viz. by God, not invented by men.

4 <sup>h</sup>For there are certain men crept in unawares, <sup>i</sup>who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, <sup>k</sup>turning <sup>l</sup>the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and <sup>m</sup>denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Who were before of old ordained; Greek, forewritten, i. e. of whom it was formerly written, or foretold, viz. by Christ and his apostles; or rather, it is to be understood according to our translation, before ordained, viz. in the eternal counsel of God; God's decree being compared to a book, in which things to be done are written down. This the apostle adds to prevent any offence that might be taken at the wickedness of these seducers; and therefore lets these saints know, that though such men crept in unawares to them, yet it was not without the providence of God so ordering it. To this condemnation; or, judgment; and it may be understood, either of a reprobate sense, to which they who thus perverted the gospel were given up by God, according to his preordination; or of that damnation he decreed should follow upon their wickedness, in making shipwreck of the faith themselves, and subverting others. This seems best to agree with 2 Pet. ii. 3. Turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness; abusing the doctrine of the grace of God, and benefits of Christ revealed in the gospel, especially the doctrine of Christian liberty, to the encouraging themselves and others in the vilest lusts, 2 Pet. ii. 1. And denying the only Lord God: either this may be understood of the Father distinctly from Christ, expressed in the following clause, and only is put in not to exclude either of the other Persons of the Trinity from being God, but to exclude idols and false gods; or it may be understood of Christ, as well as the words following; not only because there is but one article in the Greek relating to the whole sentence, but because it seems best to agree with the parallel place, 2 Pet. ii. 1, which is most generally understood of Christ; and because the heresies of those times, which Jude cautions these saints against, struck especially at the Godhead of Christ, which he therefore the more expressly asserts.

5 I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that <sup>n</sup>the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward <sup>o</sup>destroyed them that believed not.

Though ye once: this may be joined either with the verb following, knew, according to our translation, and the sense is, though ye knew this certainly, as the word once is taken, Psal. lxxxix. 35, or perfectly and thoroughly, or once for all; or rather, with what goes before, and the words may be read, I will yet once (viz. while I am in this tabernacle) put you in remembrance of this, though you know it; as 2 Pet. i. 12. Having saved the people; the people of Israel. Afterward destroyed them; viz. in the wilderness, by plague, fiery serpents, &c. That believed not; he sets forth the Israelites' unbelief, as the original of all their disobedience and rebellions, and the great cause of their destruction. See Heb. iii. 17—19; iv. 2.

6 And <sup>p</sup>the angels which kept not their a Luke 6. 16.

Acts 1. 13.
b John 17.
11, 12, 15.
1 Pet. 1. 6.
c Rom. 1. 7.

g Gal. 2. 4.
2 Pet. 2. 1.
h Rom. 9.
21, 22.
i 1 Pet. 2. 8.
12 Pet. 2. 19.
k Tit. 2. 11.
l Heb. 12. 15.
m Tit. 1. 16.
n 2 Pet. 2. 1.
o John 2. 22.

f Phil. 1. 27.
1 Tim. 1. 18.
g 4. 12.
2 Tim. 1. 13.
& 4. 7.

m 1 Cor. 10.
n Num. 14.
o 29, 37, & 28.
64. 1. a. 106.
28. Heb. 3.
17, 19.

p John 8. 44.

† Or, principal.
 p 2 Pet. 2. 4.
 q Rev. 20. 10.
 || first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness <sup>a</sup> unto the judgment of the great day.

Kept not their first estate; in which they were created, their original excellency, truth, holiness, purity, John viii. 44, as well as dignity. But left their own habitation; viz. a heavenly one, from whence, though they were righteously thrust out by God, 2 Pet. ii. 4, yet they may be truly said to have left it themselves, in that they voluntarily rebelled against the law of their creation, and committed that sin which they knew would certainly be punished with such a dejection. He hath reserved in everlasting chains; into which, Peter says, they were delivered.

r Gen. 19. 24.
 Deut. 29. 23.
 s 2 Pet. 2. 6.
 + Gr. other.
 7 Even as <sup>a</sup> Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after † strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

The cities about them; Admah and Zeboim, Jer. xlix. 18; Hos. xi. 8. In like manner, as Sodom and Gomorrah did, likeness of sin inferring likeness of punishment. Strange flesh; margin, other flesh; he means male flesh, which is other than what God appointed for that use they made of it; or, as we render it, strange flesh, i. e. that which is strange, improper, and unfit for such an end. It is the description of the unnatural filthiness of the Sodomites, Gen. xix. 5: see Rom. i. 26, 27. Are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire: eternal fire may be joined either, 1. With example, and the words thus placed, are set forth for an example of eternal fire, suffering vengeance; and the meaning is, that the vengeance they suffered in being destroyed by fire, is an example, or type, of eternal fire, that of hell: or, 2. With vengeance, according to our reading; and then the sense is, they are set forth for an example, (viz. to those that after should live ungodly, 1 Pet. ii. 6,) suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; the vengeance they suffer is an example to deter others from the like wickedness. This fire is called eternal, either because of the still continuing effects of it, or rather, because it was a type or representation of the fire of hell, and to those miserable Sodomites the very beginning of it, they being brought by these temporal flames into everlasting burnings.

s 2 Pet. 2. 10.
 8 <sup>a</sup> Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and † speak evil of dignities.

Likewise also; notwithstanding so many judgments of God upon others, which should have kept them from the like sins. These filthy dreamers: either this may be taken properly, and joined to the next clause, defile the flesh; and then it may note the impurity of these wretches, who dreamed of what they loved, and acted over that filthiness in their sleep, to which they were so much addicted when awake: or metaphorically, and so they are called dreamers, as having the sense of their minds overcome and laid asleep by their sensual pleasures; or being like men in a dream, deluded by their absurd, though pleasing imaginations. Defile the flesh: this notes all those lascivious practices, to which, like the Sodomites, they had given themselves over; and whereby they defiled themselves and others: the lust of uncleanness, as it is in Peter. Despise dominion; in their minds, judgments, desires, they reject, make void, and abrogate civil government, as a thing not fit to be. Dominion; not only governors, but government itself. And speak evil of dignities; either spiritual governors, or rather, civil, called dignities, because of the honourable titles given them, and gifts bestowed on them: see 2 Pet. ii. 10.

u Dan. 10.
 12.
 v Rev. 12. 1.
 x 2 Pet. 2. 11.
 y Zech. 3. 2.
 9 Yet <sup>a</sup> Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, <sup>a</sup> durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, <sup>b</sup> The Lord rebuke thee.

Michael the archangel: either this is understood of Christ the Prince of angels, who is often in Scripture called an Angel, or of a created angel; and that either, 1. One of the archangels: Dan. x. 13, Michael is called one of the chief princes, which though the word archangel be not found in the plural number in Scripture, may well imply a plurality of them; for what is one of the chief princes among the angels, but an archangel? Or, 2. A principal angel, or one that is chief among others. When contending with the devil; it may be meant either of Christ contending with the devil, as Matt. iv., in his temptation, and Zech. iii. 1, 2, and Rev. xii. 7; or rather, of Michael, a created angel. He disputed about the body of Moses: 1. If Michael the archangel be meant of Christ, then the body of Moses may be taken figuratively, for that body whereof the Mosaical ceremonies were shadows, Col. ii. 17, i. e. the truth and accomplishment of the law given by Moses; that accomplishment was to be in Christ, who is represented by Joshua, Zech. iii.: him Satan resists in the execution of his office, and by him strikes at Christ, whose type he was, and whom he afterward opposeth in the execution of his office, when he was come in the flesh. Or, 2. If we take Michael for a created angel, which agrees best with the parallel place in Peter, then the body of Moses must be taken properly, (as most take it,) and the dispute seems to be, Whether Moses's body should be so buried as to be concealed from the Israelites? Deut. xxxiv. 6, it is said God buried him, (which might be by the ministry of Michael the archangel,) and that no man knoweth of his sepulchre. The devil opposeth the angel, desiring to have the place of his burial known, that in after-times it might be a snare to that people, and a means to bring them to idolatry. And this seems very probable, if we consider what work the devil hath made in the world with the bodies of saints and martyrs, and how much idolatry he hath brought in thereby. This passage Jude, most probably, had (as was observed in the argument) from some known tradition among the Jews, the truth of which we are now sure of, because certified here concerning it. Durst not bring against him; or, could not endure, (as the Greek word is often taken among profane writers,) or find in his heart, not from fear of punishment, but by reason of the holiness of his own nature, and to give an example to us. And this sense agrees to the scope of the place, whether we understand it of Christ, or of a created angel, Heb. xii. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 23. A railing accusation: see 2 Pet. ii. 11. But said, The Lord rebuke thee; i. e. put thee to silence, restrain thy insolence, hinder thy design, &c.: hereby the angel refers the cause to God.

10 <sup>a</sup> But these speak evil of those things <sup>a</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 12 which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves.

But these speak evil of those things which they know not; the same as 2 Pet. ii. 12; unless this be more generally to be understood of all those spiritual things whereof they were ignorant. But what they know naturally; without reason or judgment. In those things they corrupt themselves; debase and degrade their natures by extreme sensualities, whereby they bring destruction upon themselves: see 2 Pet. ii. 12.

11 Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way <sup>a</sup> of Cain, and <sup>b</sup> ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished <sup>c</sup> in the gainsaying of Core.
 a Gen. 4. 5.
 b 1 John 3. 12.
 c Num. 22.
 7. 21.
 2 Pet. 2. 15.
 d Num. 16.
 1, &c.

Woe unto them! this is either a lamenting the misery that was to come upon them, or a foretelling it come, not a wishing that it might: see Matt. xi. 21; 1 Cor. ix. 16. For they have gone in the way of Cain; followed his manners, and fallen under his punishment. Their likeness to Cain, both as to their actions and the event of them, seems to be implied in this and the following clause, as well as it is plainly in the last. Cain hated his brother, and slew him; they hate their brethren, and by their pernicious doctrines and deceits, murder their souls, and probably stir up persecution against their persons. And ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward; covetousness, to which being excessively addicted, or, as the Greek implies, poured out, they did for the sake of filthy lucre corrupt the doctrine of Christ: see 2 Pet. ii. 15. And perished in the gainsaying of Core: Korah, (whom he here names alone, as being the ringleader of the rebellion, in which others joined with him, Numb.

xvi. 1,) affecting the priesthood, rose up seditiously against Moses and Aaron, and perished in the attempt. These imitate him in their rebellion against Christ himself, the state and order of whose church they seditiously disturb, as well as that of the civil state, in despising dominion, and speaking evil of dignities, and that to their own destruction.

12 <sup>d</sup> These are spots in your <sup>e</sup> feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: <sup>f</sup> clouds they are without water, <sup>g</sup> carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, <sup>h</sup> twice dead, <sup>i</sup> plucked up by the roots;

These are spots: see 2 Pet. ii. 13. In your feasts of charity; feasts used among the primitive Christians, to show their unity among themselves, and promote and maintain mutual charity, and for relief of the poor among them. Feeding themselves without fear; unreasonably cramming themselves, without respect to God or the church. Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; empty, making a show of what they have not, Prov. xxv. 14; and inconstant: see 2 Pet. ii. 17. Trees whose fruit withereth; he compares them to trees, which having leaves and blossoms, make a show of fruit, but cast it, or never bring it to maturity, or it rots instead of ripening; so these here make a show of truth and holiness, but all comes to nothing. Without fruit; without any good fruit, (which only deserves to be called fruit,) brought forth by them, either in themselves or followers, who never get any real benefit by them. Twice dead; wholly dead; dead over and over; dead by nature, and dead by that hardness of heart they have contracted, or that reprobate sense to which God hath given them up. Plucked up by the roots; and so never like to bear fruit, and fit only for the fire; it notes the incurableness of their apostacy, and their nearness to destruction.

13 <sup>j</sup> Raging waves of the sea, <sup>k</sup> foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, <sup>l</sup> to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

Raging waves of the sea; not only inconstant as water, but inquiet, turbulent, restless, that cannot cease from sin. Foaming out their own shame; that wickedness whereof they should be ashamed; like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt, Isa. lvii. 20. Wandering stars; either planets properly called, or rather meteors called running stars, inconstant in their motion, uncertain in their shining, making a little show, but presently vanishing; such was the doctrine of these, which had a show of light, but a deceitful and inconstant one. To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever; the thickest darkness, viz. that of hell; they would be counted lights, but are themselves cast into utter darkness, 2 Pet. ii. 17. As blackness of darkness shows the horror of their punishment, so its being reserved for them shows the certainty of it.

14 And Enoch also, <sup>m</sup> the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, <sup>n</sup> the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints,

And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam; either to distinguish him from Enoch the son of Cain, or to show the antiquity of the prophecy. Prophesied; he doth not say wrote, and therefore from hence it cannot be proved that there was any such book as Enoch's prophecies, received by the Jews as canonical Scripture; but rather some prophecy of his delivered to them by tradition, to which here the apostle refers, as a thing known among them; and so argues against these heretics from their own concession, as ver. 9. So here; q. d. These men own the prophecy of Enoch, that the Lord comes to judgment, &c., and they themselves are in the number of those ungodly ones, and they to whom the prophecy is to be applied. Of these; not that he did directly and expressly prophesy of them in particular; but that his prophecy of the destruction of the world for the same kind of crimes whereof they were guilty, did reach them. and so he foretold what should befall them as well as others. With ten thousand; innumerable multitudes; a definite for an indefinite. Of his saints; holy angels, Matt. xvi. 27; Dan. vii. 10; Zech. xiv. 5; 2 Thess. i. 7; Rev. v. 11. Believers likewise may be here included, as attendants upon Christ when he comes to judgment.

15 To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their <sup>o</sup> hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

To execute judgment upon all; either upon all the wicked in general, who afterwards may seem to be distinguished into different sorts, or else the Greek preposition κατά is put for πρὸς, and the word all is to be understood of all universally, good and bad; and the words may be read, to execute judgment over all, i. e. to judge all. And to convince all that are ungodly among them: if we take the words in the latter sense mentioned, then he distinguisheth those that are to be judged into good and bad, and the Lord comes to execute judgment over all, having convinced the wicked among them; but if in the former, the ungodly here may be taken for those that are more notoriously so, those that have obstinately rejected the gospel, or wickedly perverted it, or persecuted the saints, &c. Which they have ungodly committed; i. e. with an ungodly mind, willingly, delightfully, perseveringly. Their hard speeches; i. e. blasphemous, irreverent, against God, his truth and ways. Which ungodly sinners have spoken against him; he executes judgment, though upon all the wicked, yet especially upon these ungodly sinners, i. e. that are such both in their words and deeds against him, in his truths, ways, ordinances, people, &c., and therefore are the worst of sinners.

16 These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and <sup>p</sup> their mouth speaketh great swelling words, <sup>q</sup> having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

Murmurers, complainers; either these two words signify the same thing; or murmurers may be meant with relation to God's decrees, laws, providences, and his ordinations in the church or state, 1 Cor. x. 10; and complainers, with respect to their own condition, with which they were discontented. Walking after their own lusts; minding neither the law of God nor man, but making their lusts their law, and being wholly subject to them, led by them, 2 Pet. ii. 10. And their mouth speaketh great swelling words: though they were mere slaves to their own lusts, yet they would speak big, and use high and exotic strains in their language, that they might be applauded and admired: see 2 Pet. ii. 18. Having men's persons in admiration because of advantage; flattering and magnifying the greater and richer sort of men, not considering what they were, so they could gain them to their party, or get gain by them.

17 <sup>r</sup> But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

Especially Paul and Peter: see Acts xx. 29, besides the places in the margin. From this passage it appears that this Epistle was written late, and, likely, after the other apostles, except John, were dead.

18 How that they told you <sup>s</sup> there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts.

Told you; whether in their preaching or writing. Ungodly lusts; Greek, lusts of ungodliness; a Hebraism; the vilest lusts.

19 These be they <sup>t</sup> who separate themselves, <sup>u</sup> sensual, having not the Spirit.

These be they who separate themselves; viz. from the true doctrine and church of Christ, as being in love with their carnal liberties, and loth to come under the yoke of Christ's discipline. Sensual; or carnal, or animal, 1 Cor. ii. 14; such as are mere men, and have no higher principle in them than human nature, which, left to itself, and being desti-

d 2 Pet. 2.
13.
e 1 Cor. 11.
21.
f Prov. 25.
14. 2 Pet. 2.
17.

g Eph. 4. 14
h Mat. 13. 13.

i lb. 67. 20.
k Phil. 3. 19.
l 2 Pet. 2. 17.

m Gen. 5. 18.
n Deut. 33. 2.
o Dan. 7. 10.
p Zech. 14. 5.
q Mat. 23. 31.
r 2 Thes. 1. 7.
s Rev. 1. 7.

t 1 Tim. 4. 1.
u 2 Tim. 3. 1.
v Eccl. 4. 14.
w 2. 1. & 3. 3.

x 1 Sam. 2. 3.
y Ps. 31. 18.
z Eccl. 9. 4.
aa Mal. 3. 13.

ab 2 Pet. 2. 18.
ac q Prov. 28. 21. Jam. 2. 1. & 2.

ad 2 Pet. 3. 2.
ae 1 Tim. 4. 1.
af 2 Tim. 3. 1.
ag Eccl. 4. 14.
ah 2. 1. & 3. 3.

ai Eccl. 14. 7.
aj Hos. 4. 14.
ak & 9. 10.

al Heb. 10. 25. u 1 Cor. 2. 14. Jam. 3. 15.

tute of the sanctifying Spirit, is generally overpowered by sense, and inclines to fleshly lusts. Having not the Spirit; the Spirit of God, by which they should be led, and to which they so much pretend; having neither the light, nor grace, nor comfort of the Spirit.

20 But ye, beloved, * building up yourselves on your most holy faith, † praying in the Holy Ghost,

Building up yourselves; he compares them to a house, which is to be built up, whereof faith is the foundation: the same metaphor is used, 1 Cor. iv. 9; Eph. ii. 20—22; 1 Pet. ii. 5. Most holy; so he calls faith, as being the means of purifying their hearts, and working holiness in them; and in opposition to the false faith of the heretics he warns them against, which did consist with so much impurity. Faith; this may be understood either, 1. Of the grace of faith; and then that is compared to the foundation, as being the first and principal grace in a Christian, and of greatest necessity and use; and then they are here bid to build themselves up in other graces which follow upon faith, as 2 Pet. i. 5. Or, 2. Of the doctrine of faith, that on which their faith itself is founded; and then the meaning is, that they should not rest satisfied in what measure of faith they had already attained, but still be improving it, and making further progress in it, not only hold fast the truth of the gospel, the right foundation on which they had begun to be built, but get themselves, by the due study and meditation of the word, more and more confirmed in the belief of it. Praying in the Holy Ghost; i. e. by the assistance of the Spirit, who teacheth what to pray for, and how; from whom faith, fervency, and all praying graces do proceed. Rom. viii. 26, 27. The Spirit maketh intercession (prays) in us, to note the excitations of his grace; here we are said to pray in the Holy Ghost, to note the concurrence of our faculties.

21 Keep yourselves in the love of God, † looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

Keep yourselves in the love of God; i. e. in love to God, or that love whereby ye love God; this implies love to each other, as the cause doth the effect. Looking for; viz. by hope: and so in these two verses we have the three cardinal graces, faith, hope, and charity. The mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life; the merciful or gracious sentence of Christ the Judge, whereby he puts believers in possession of eternal life, Matt. xxv. 34. This reward of eternal life is promised, but being promised freely, and out of mercy, it is called mercy, 2 Tim. i. 18, the effect being put for the cause.

22 And of some have compassion, making a difference:

And of some have compassion; use them gently, mildly reproving and admonishing them, that thereby ye may gain them. Making a difference: he makes two sorts of offenders, or misled brethren, who might be restored; and that they might, they should be dealt with in different ways, and suitably to their respective conditions and circumstances; the former, who might be discouraged with roughness, should be handled with more tenderness and compassion.

23 And others * save with fear, † pulling them out of the fire; hating even † the garment spotted by the flesh.

And others; those that are further gone, not so easily reducible, and in great danger. Save; i. e. labour to save them, as instruments under God. With fear; by more severe courses, sharper reprehensions, setting before them God's judgments against obstinate sinners, 1 Cor. v. 5. Pulling them out of the fire: it is a proverbial speech, Zech. iii. 2: the sense is, that as they that are in the fire, and like to be destroyed by it, must not be gently exhorted to come out of it of themselves, but speedily and forcibly pulled out, in consideration of their eminent danger; so they that are more stubborn sinners, being in apparent danger of being destroyed by the fire of their lusts, and being as it were in the mouth of hell, must be more harshly and severely dealt with, by setting the Lord's terrors before them, 2 Cor. v. 11, and inflicting church censures on them. Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh: it is an allusion to that ceremonial law, Lev. xv. 4, 17, where he that touched a defiled garment was himself defiled. The sense is, either, 1. That where there is danger of infection from heretics and obstinate sinners, all converse with them, and any thing whereby the contagion of their doctrine or manners may reach us, is to be avoided: or, 2. That when we reprehend others, we should do it with suitable affections, and though we would save ourselves, we should hate their vices, and any thing that promotes them or savours of them.

24 † Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and * to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy,

Able to keep you from falling; from stumbling in your spiritual course, and so able to make you persevere to the end. Before the presence of his glory; or, his glorious presence, i. e. before himself, Eph. v. 27. Having exhorted these saints to perseverance in the faith, he now tells them in whose strength they must stand, and to whom they are to give the glory of it.

25 † To the only wise God our Saviour, † be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

To the only wise; only wise infinitely, and of himself. God our Saviour; either God, who is sometimes called by this title, 1 Tim. ii. 3; Tit. i. 3; iii. 4; or rather Christ. Be glory: see 1 Pet. iv. 11; v. 11. And majesty; or, magnificence, Heb. i. 3; viii. 1: it seems to signify the height and excellency of God's glory. Dominion and power; authority, and right to govern, which here is ascribed to God, as well as strength or sufficiency for it.

THE REVELATION

OF

S. JOHN THE DIVINE

THE PREFACE TO THE ANNOTATIONS UPON THE REVELATION

ALTHOUGH some particular heretics, such as Cerdon and Marcyon, have doubted the Divine authority of this mysterious piece of holy writ, and some better men in the primitive times doubted of it, the manuscript copy of it having been at first reserved in few hands, and (as some think) in the fewer because of the affairs and fate of the Roman empire revealed in it; yet, besides its general reception as such by the church in all late ages, there is in it such a harmony, both with Daniel's prophecy in the Old Testament, and with the types made use of by the holy prophets; such manifest allusions to the whole order and economy of the Jewish church; such an agreement of the doctrine contained in it with the doctrine of the Old and New Testament, concerning God and Christ, the resurrection from the dead, and the day of judgment; and of the promises and threatenings contained in it, with the promises and threatenings in other parts of holy writ; that none who hath not a vanity to question the whole canon of Scripture, can reasonably dispute the Divine authority of this part of it.

It appeareth from chap. i. 1, that John was the penman of it; and that this John was the beloved disciple, he that was the penman of one of the Gospels, hath been doubted by very few, and with very little reason, as will appear to him that will but wisely consider the terms and phrases used in it almost peculiar to this apostle, and hardly to be found in Scripture any where but in this book and the Gospel of John, such as calling Christ the Word, of which he bare record, &c. Nor is their objection of any validity, who object, that in the Gospel he ordinarily concealeth his name, which this author doth not; considering that in that he wrote a relation or history of things past, to be proved by many eye and ear-witnesses; but here a Revelation or prophecy of things to come, to which his name was necessary, that men might judge by what authority he thus wrote.

For the time of his writing it, himself tells us, chap. i. 9, that he received this Revelation from God, while he was in Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ; this was (if we may believe history, and we have nothing else to inform us) in the time of Domitian the Roman emperor, about the 94th or 95th year after the nativity of Christ; so as this book pleads a prescription of near sixteen hundred years, in which very few ever questioned its Divine authority.

For the scope of it, it is plainly told us, chap. i. 1, δειξαι τοῖς δόλοις αὐτῷ ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν τάχει, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass. The like we have repeated, chap. xxii. 6: upon which account it is called a Revelation, and a prophecy, neither of which terms agree to a narration or history, the object of which is some thing or things that are already past.

I will not undertake to give the certain and infallible sense of the several passages of this mysterious prophecy: In magnis voluisse sat est. But I have proceeded upon these few postulata:

1. That the whole of this book is no historical relation of things that were past before the year 95 or 96, or at least not long before, but of things to come; which hath made me wholly reject the notions of Grotius and Dr. Hammond, so far as they concerned the siege or destruction of Jerusalem, which was past twenty-six or twenty-seven years before John heard of this Revelation. I cannot understand how this can agree with chap. i. 1, or chap. xxii. 6.

2. That it contains a prophecy of the most remarkable things that happened either to the Roman empire, or to the church (all which was within the latitude of that in St. John's time) during the whole time of that; or which should happen after the decay of that, throughout the church, to the end of the world.

3. That this time is reasonably divided into three periods; the first determining with the Roman empire's, continuing pagan, 310 or 325 years after Christ: the second with the total ruin of antichrist; when that shall be I cannot tell: the third with Christ's coming to the last judgment. The first is by some called Regnum draconis ethnicum; the second, Vicariatus draconis antichristianus; the third, Regnum Christi, or, Status ecclesie tranquillus.

4. I see no reason to dissent from those eminent men, who think that part of the Revelation which relates to the first period, and is predictive of what happened to the church of God until the time of Constantine the Great, 310 or 325 years after Christ, beginneth with chap. iv. and endeth with chap. vii.; and that the silence in heaven for half an hour, mentioned chap. viii. 1, relateth to the rest which the church had from Constantine's time till the end of Theodosius's reign, about seventy or seventy-five years.

5. Where to fix the epocha, or beginning, of the one thousand two hundred and sixty years, or forty-two months, I cannot tell. That the mystery of iniquity begun to work in the apostles' time, is evident from 1 Thes. ii. 7; and reason will tell us, that Rome, as it now stands, or as it was in the year 1606, was not built up in a day, the great corruptions then in it came in and grew up by degrees; but I cannot tell how to count antichrist's reign, but from the time Phocas humoured the pope with the title and style of "supreme" or "universal bishop;" from which time I should rather reckon the one thousand two hundred and sixty years, than from any time before.

6. I do agree with those who think the first eleven chapters contain the sum of whatsoever is prophesied concerning the two first periods, though many things falling within them are more particularly and fully opened, chap. xii.—xix. The 12th chapter gives us a particular account of the church during the first two periods. The 13th gives us a more particular account of antichrist, both in the secular power and in his ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The 15th and 16th chapters more fully open to us what should be done under the sixth trumpet. In the 17th chapter we have a more full description of the beast with two horns, mentioned chap. xiii. 11, which signified antichrist as sitting in the temple of God. The 18th more fully describes his fall, summarily before mentioned, chap. xiv. The 19th, so far as it concerneth the praise given to God for this, relates to that great dispensation of providence.

7. I take the third state of the church (to which I cannot conceive we are yet come, which I called its serene and quiet state) to be foretold and described, chap. xx; after which shall be the battle with all the wicked of the earth, which shall end in Christ's coming to judge the world, and the general resurrection in order to it.

8. I take the last two chapters to describe a state of the church agreeing to none but the church triumphant, and have accordingly interpreted them.

If any differ from me in any of these things, it will be no wonder if he disagreeeth with me in the explication of the chapters and verses relating to them.

I dare not be positive as to the sense I have given, but shall only say it is what appeareth to me most probable. There have been found some in the tents of protestants, that have taken much pains to free the papacy from the imputation of antichrist. This I conceive was Grotius's design, in his interpretation of this book, as if it had been a history rather than a prophecy, and if a prophecy, fulfilled in less than two hundred and fifty years after it was published. As to the papacy being antichrist, I think that great person spake well, who would not be peremptory in the case, but said, it had so many of his marks, that upon a hue and cry for antichrist, he should apprehend him. I shall add, that if he were so apprehended and tried, he could never acquit himself either at the bar of Scripture or reason.

CHAP. I

The preface, 1—3. John's salutation to the seven churches of Asia, 4—6. The coming of Christ, 7; his eternal majesty, 8. John relateth his vision of the Son of man with the seven stars and the seven golden candlesticks, 9—20.

A. D. 96.
a John 2. 32.
b 2. 76.
c 2. 49.

THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which <sup>b</sup> must shortly come <sup>b</sup> ch. 4. 1. to pass; and <sup>c</sup> he sent and signified it by <sup>c</sup> ver. 2. his angel unto his servant John: <sup>c</sup> ch. 22. 16.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ; the Apocalypse, (as this book is sometimes called,) that is, the discovering or unveiling of some hidden things; so the word revelation signifieth. The Greek word is often used in the New Testament, and is ordinarily translated so. It is called The Revelation of Jesus Christ, because Christ received it from his Father, as the next words show. Which God gave unto him, as he was Mediator: by God, here, is to be understood the Father, not exclusively to the Son, as if he were not God, but to show the order of working in the Holy Trinity, John vii. 16; xiv. 10. Christ in his state of humiliation is said to learn of the Father; in his state of exaltation, to receive from the Father. To show unto his servants; to John, and by him to all saints that will be studious of things revealed. Things which must shortly come to pass; ἅ δὲ ῥησίσθαι ἐν τάχει. This phrase puts us out of doubt, that this book is not a relation or narrative of things past, but a revelation or prediction of things to come: see also chap. xxii. 6, 16. Which makes me wonder at the confidence of a learned annotator of our own, that all things here relate, either to the siege of Jerusalem, (which was past more than twenty years before this Revelation to St. John,) or to pagan Rome, which, indeed, continued two hundred and odd years after this. But his notion is contrary to the general sense of all interpreters, whether the ancient fathers or modern writers. The phrase, indeed, signifies shortly, but never what was past, nor always what shall in a few days come to pass; see Luke xviii. 8; Rom. xvi. 20; though indeed sometimes it signifies the time immediately following a command, as Acts xii. 7; xxii. 18: and considering it is God's phrase, to whom a thousand years are but as yesterday, Psal. xc. 4, and who calls the things that are not as if they were, and who manifestly calls all those years betwixt Christ's coming and the end of the world (almost one thousand seven hundred of which are past already) the last days, we may allow him to say, those things should be shortly, which soon after should begin to be effected, though not finished till Christ's second coming. Though therefore we may allow this verse the key to open the whole Apocalypse, yet we must judge the learned author hath turned it the wrong way. Christ had foretold the ruin of Jerusalem, Matt. xxiv., nor was it now the matter of a prophecy, but history. The first six seals plainly show the state of the Christian church under Rome pagan; what shall we say to all things represented under the seventh seal, &c.? And he sent and signified it by his angel; first by one angel, and then by another, or (possibly) constantly by the same. Unto his servant John: who this John was, we shall declare further, ver. 2, 4.

2<sup>d</sup> Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

Who bare record of the word of God: this phrase determines the controversy about the penman of this part of holy writ, and puts it out of doubt that it was John the apostle and evangelist; the phrase so agrees to John i. 19, 32, 34; xix. 35. The word in the Greek signifies, bare testimony to, or of, the word of God. Some understand Christ, so called, 1 John i. 2. Some would have the gospel meant by it; and if any think this the more probable sense, because, though Christ be elsewhere called the Word, yet he is not called the word of God; and it is not here in the dative, but the accusative case; I see no reason to contradict them. And of the testimony of Jesus Christ: by the testimony of Christ is to be understood the doctrine of Christ, called so, because it is a testimony concerning him; or rather, that which he testified, who is elsewhere called the true and faithful witness. And of all things that he saw: this may be understood with reference to what went before; so it agreeth with 1 John i.; or to what followeth in this Revelation, made to him in visions in a great measure.

3 'Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy: from hence is well concluded, that this is a portion of holy writ to be read publicly and privately, otherwise no blessing would have been pronounced to the readers or the hearers of it. It is also well from hence concluded, that this book is no history of things done, but a prediction of things to come to pass; for though prophecy in some scriptures signifieth more largely the revelation of the Divine will, yet here it must signify strictly. And keep those things which are written therein; that keep it in memory, and live in view of it, and as persons that believe it; they are blessed, as they will from it be comforted, concerning all the sufferings of the church, and people of God. For the time is at hand; the season for the accomplishment of these things is nigh, not past, but the time when they shall begin to happen is not very far off.

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

h Ex. 3. 14. ver. 4.
i 1 John 1. 1.
k Zech. 3. 9. & 4. 10.
ch. 3. 1. & 4. 5. & 5. 6.

John to the seven churches which are in Asia: John, the apostle and evangelist, writes either to all the churches of Asia under the notion of seven, (which is the number of perfection,) or to those seven churches mentioned ver. 11, Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, seven famous places in Asia the Less, where the gospel was planted; which being the most famous churches in that part of the world, John is commanded to deposit this prophecy in their hands, by them to be communicated unto other churches. These churches were in the most famous cities of the Lesser Asia: some think John was the apostle that preached most in Asia, and founded these churches; others, that though they were founded by Peter and Paul, yet after their death John took upon him the charge of them. It is the opinion of some learned men, that the apostle did not, in the epistles to the churches in Asia, design only to tell them of their error, and prescribe to their cure; but that in writing to them, he assigns both a prophetic instruction of us all concerning the state of the church in all periods from that time to the day of judgment, and also to reprove and counsel all present and succeeding churches; but of this we may possibly speak more afterward. Grace be unto you, and peace: grace and peace is the common apostolical salutation, as to the sense of which we have often spoken: the apostle wisheth them the free love of God, that is, grace, and the seal of it, Rom. v. 1, peace with God and their own consciences, and each with other. From him which is, and which was, and which is to come: these words are a description of God, particularly of Jesus Christ in his eternity and immutability: he was from eternity; he is now; and he shall be for ever. Or, (as some,) he was in his promises before his incarnation; he is now God manifested in the flesh; and he is to come as a Judge, to judge the quick and the dead. This was an ancient name of God, Exod. iii. 14, I am that I am.—I AM hath sent me unto you. These words interpret the name Jehovah. And from the seven Spirits which are before his throne; it is very difficult to determine what is meant by the seven Spirits here before the throne: we read of them also, chap. iii. 1; iv. 5; v. 6. Christ is described, chap. iii. 1, as having the seven Spirits of God. It is said, chap. iv. 5, that the seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, are the seven Spirits of God; and chap. v. 6, that the Lamb's seven eyes were the seven Spirits of God. This is all the light we have from Scripture. Some think they are seven angels that are here meant. We read, chap. viii. 2, of seven angels that stood before God; and in chap. xv. 16, 17, there is a like mention of seven angels; and Zech. iv. 2, 10, Zechariah had a vision of seven lamps, and seven pipes, which, ver. 10, are said to be the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth. But John saluting the churches with grace and peace from these seven Spirits, and joining them with Christ, they do not seem to be creatures, angels, that are here meant, but such a Being from whom grace and peace cometh. Others therefore understand by them, the seven workings of Divine Providence in his management of the affairs of the world, with relation to the church, of which we shall read after; but this also seems hard. The sense seems to be, and from the Holy Ghost, who, though but one spiritual Being, yet exerteth his influence many ways, and by various manifestations, called here seven Spirits, because all flow from the same Spirit. They are therefore called, chap. iv. 5, burning lamps; the Holy Ghost ded 1 Cor. 1. 6.

e 12. 17.
f Luke 11. 28. ch. 22. 7.
g Rom. 13. 11. Jam. 5. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 7. ch. 10. 22.

ascending in the appearance of fire, Acts ii., and being compared to fire, Matt. iii. 11. They are called the Lamb's seven eyes and seven horns, chap. v. 6. Christ had the Spirit without measure; and the Holy Spirit is oft called the Spirit of Christ. This seemeth the best sense; the reader may find the objections to it answered in Mr. Pool's Synopsis Criticorum upon this verse.

1 John 8. 14.
1 Tim. 6. 13.
ch. 3. 14.
m 1 Cor. 15.
20. Col. 1. 18.
2 Eph. 1. 20.
ch. 17. 14.
& 19. 16.
o John 13.
24. & 15. 9.
Gal. 2. 20.
p Heb. 9. 14.
1 John 1. 7.

5 And from Jesus Christ, <sup>1</sup>who is the faithful witness, and the <sup>m</sup>first begotten of the dead, and <sup>a</sup>the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him <sup>e</sup>that loved us, <sup>p</sup>and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness: here is an express mention of Jesus Christ, because he was the procurer of our redemption, and our Mediator, to whom the Father committed all power as to the church. He is called the faithful and true witness; 1 Tim. vi. 13, he witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate; he bare record of himself, John viii. 13, 14: see also Isa. xliii. 10; lv. 4; John xviii. 37. And the first begotten of the dead; that is, who first rose from the dead, viz. by his own power, John x. 18, and to die no more: see Acts xiii. 34; 1 Cor. xv. 20. And the prince of the kings of the earth: the King of kings, chap. xvii. 14; xix. 16; 1 Tim. vi. 15. The first name here given to Christ speaketh his prophetic office, the second his priestly office, this last his kingly office. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood: here begins a doxology, or giving glory to Christ, (such forms are frequent in the Epistles,) first, as he that washed us from our sins, both from the guilt and from the power and dominion of our sins, with his blood, paying a price, and satisfying God's justice for, and meriting our sanctification: see Heb. ix. 14; 1 John i. 7.

q 1 Pet. 2. 5,
6. ch. 5. 10.
& 20. 6.
r 1 Tim. 6.
16. Heb. 13.
21. 1 Pet. 4.
11. & 5. 11.

6 And hath <sup>a</sup>made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; <sup>t</sup>to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: kings, to rule over our own appetite, and govern ourselves by the law of his word, to fight and conquer the world, the flesh, and the devil. Kings in a spiritual sense, for our kingdom is like his from whom we derive it, not of this world; therefore he adds, unto God, to the honour and glory of God, for his service, who is the Father of Christ. Priests, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through the Beloved, 1 Pet. ii. 5; our bodies as a living sacrifice, Rom. xii. 1; part of our estates, Phil. iv. 18; the sacrifice of praise, the fruit of our lips, Heb. xiii. 15. So as all the privileges of the Jews, Exod. xix. 6, belong to us, and that in a more eminent manner. Through Christ we also are a royal priesthood, a peculiar people. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen: let all praise, and honour, and acknowledgments be paid, and all power ascribed, to him for ever.

a Dan. 7. 13.
Matt. 24. 30.
& 28. 34.
Acta 1. 11.
1 Zech. 12.
10.
John 19. 37.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and <sup>t</sup>they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

St. John being to speak of the various afflictions of the church of God, which should immediately begin, and hold on during the whole time that Rome should continue heathen, and one thousand two hundred and sixty years after, during the whole reign of the beasts, prepareth Christians for it, by calling them by the eye of faith to see (though at a great distance) Christ coming to judgment, whom he speaks of as already coming, according to the usual style of prophets, who use to speak of those things that shall shortly be done, or certainly, as if they were already done. He describes the manner of Christ's coming to judgment, and saith, he cometh with clouds, that is, in a glorious manner; in the clouds with power and great glory, Matt. xxiv. 30; in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, Matt. xxv. 31; with ten thousand of his saints, Jude 14; with a shout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, 1 Thess. iv. 16; here, with clouds, bright and glorious clouds, not obscuring him, but making his appearance more glorious and terrible. And every eye shall see him; he shall come visibly, for, Acts i. 11, he shall so come, as he was seen going up to heaven: see Isa. xl. 5. And they also which pierced him; they also which pierced him shall look on him, Zech. xii. 10; yea, not those only which pierced him with their spears, but every sinner who hath pierced him with his sins, Heb. vi. 6. From whence we may observe, that the resurrection will be general; and those in the Great Mogul's country are like to awake out of their sleep in the grave, as well as others. And all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him; all the nations of the earth, (Greek, the tribes of the earth,) shall wail, not with a mourning of repentance, the time for that will be past, but with a wailing of despair and horror. Even so, Amen: these words are either a prophetic assertion, confirming the truth of what he had said, or a pious prayer or desire, or rather both together.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, <sup>x</sup>which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

Alpha and Omega are the first and last letters in the Greek alphabet, as Aleph and Tau are in the Hebrew alphabet: the meaning of these is expounded, the beginning and the ending; he who was before all, and shall continue to exist when all creatures shall cease to be; the first and the last, as the same terms are expounded, chap. xxii. 13: so Isa. xli. 4; xliii. 13. Which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty: see ver. 4. He addeth the Almighty, to show that he was able to make his words good. Thus in this verse, omnipotency, eternity, and immutability, are all applied to God, and particularly predicated of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and <sup>y</sup>companion in tribulation, and <sup>z</sup>in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, <sup>z</sup>for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

I John, who also am your brother; the same mentioned ver. 4, the apostle of Jesus Christ, yet he disdaineth not to call those his brethren whom his Lord so called. And companion in tribulation: the pagan persecutions were now begun. Nero first began them about twenty-three years after Christ was ascended into heaven, but he died within three years' time after he had began that course. Then the Christians had some rest for twelve years, by reason of the short reigns of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, and the kindness of Flavius and Titus Vespasianus; but about eighty-two years after Christ began Domitian to reign, and to persecute the Christians about the year 90. He lived not long, for he was slain Anno 97, but in those seven years he put to death, imprisoned, and banished many. John is said to have been banished by him, Anno 91, and to have had this revelation, 94 and 95. Domitian lived but four or five years after this. After his death John is said to have come back to Ephesus, and to have died there three years after, about the year 98. But for five years John was the Christians' companion in tribulation. And in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ; either the kingdom of grace, a member of the Christian church; or the kingdom of glory, which is to be arrived at both by patient waiting and by patient suffering for Jesus Christ, or waiting for the second appearance of Christ, in order to his glorious kingdom. Was in the isle that is called Patmos: this island, geographers tell us, was an island in the Icarian or Aegean Sea, about thirty-five miles in compass, one of those fifty-three islands called the Cyclades. For the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ: he tells us how he came to be in Patmos, viz. for preaching the word of God, and those truths to which Christ had given testimony: he did not voluntarily go thither to preach the gospel, (for those isles have in them few inhabitants,) but he was banished thither by the emperor Domitian's officers. Banishment was a very ordinary punishment amongst the Romans, in case of what they would call sedition. Eusebius tells us, that one Flavia Dometilla, though she was niece to the consul, was banished upon the same account at this time.

10 <sup>b</sup> I was in the Spirit on <sup>c</sup> the Lord's day, and heard behind me <sup>d</sup> a great voice, as of a trumpet,

I was in the Spirit; not only in spiritual employment, suppose meditation and prayer, but in an ecstasy; my soul was (as it were) separated from my body, and under the more than ordinary influence and communications of the Spirit, as Acts x. 10; xi. 5; xvi. 9; xviii. 9. On the Lord's day; upon the Christian sabbath, called the Lord's day, (as the eucharist, or breaking of bread, is called the Lord's supper, 1 Cor. xi. 20,) because Christ instituted it; or, because the end of its institution was the remembrance of Christ's resurrection, (as the end of the Lord's supper was the commemoration of Christ's death,) or because it was instituted for the honour of Christ. And heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet: John in the isle of Patmos was keeping the Christian sabbath in spiritual services, meditation and prayer, and fell into a trance, wherein he had a more immediate communion with the Holy Spirit, which begun with his hearing a loud voice, as it were, behind him, as loud as the sound of a trumpet.

11 Saying, <sup>e</sup> I am Alpha and Omega, <sup>f</sup> the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; I, who speak unto thee, am the eternal, immutable God. What thou seest, write in a book; what thou shalt presently see, write in a book, not in loose papers. Whence we may observe, that this book is not only the revelation of the will of Christ, but written by his direction. And send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; not to all that lived within the jurisdiction or compass of these cities, but only to those Christians who lived in or near these places, which are all cities in the Lesser Asia. Ephesus was the most famous, where Paul preached, Acts xix. 10, &c., and stayed three years, chap. xx. 31. It was a noble city in that part of Greece which was called Ionia. Smyrna was a sea-port city in the same country. Pergamos was a city of Troas, or Phrygia. Thyatira was a city in Lydia, or Mysia. Sardis also was a city in Lydia, near the mountain Tmolus. Philadelphia was a city in Lydia, next Mysia. Laodicea was a city in Asia, near the river Lycus. In all these cities there were congregations of Christians formed into churches, to whom God here ordereth St. John to send these visions, when he had written them in a book. Our countryman, Mr. Brightman, asks, Where Rome was all this while? and how it came to pass God directed not these mysteries to be sent, and kept in their archives, especially if (as the papists say) the bishop there be Christ's successive vicar? and considering, too, how great friends Peter and John were wont to be? But the forementioned author tartly replies to his own question, That that church, it seems, could never err, and therefore needed not any corroptory or monitory epistle.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, <sup>g</sup> I saw seven golden candlesticks;

And I turned to see the voice that spake with me; that is, to see the person whose voice I heard speaking to me: or else, by seeing is meant understanding; but that he might have done without turning; he therefore turned, hoping to see the person that spake. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks: by these seven candlesticks which he saw, are meant the seven churches; so we find it infallibly expounded, ver. 20. We shall find in this book frequent allusions to the Jewish temple: here they begin. In the Jewish tabernacle there was one golden candlestick, and seven lamps, to give light against it; so Numb. viii. 2; Zech. iv. 2. John here seeth seven. God had but one church of the Jews, but many amongst the Gentiles. This notion, or comparison of churches to golden candlesticks, both sheweth us the nature and office of the churches of Christ, they do not give light of themselves, only hold lights, and it is their duty to keep in them the pure word of God, which is a light to our feet, and a godly ministry; and it also lets us know, that they ought to keep themselves pure (as beaten gold) from all corruption as to doctrine, and their members from all scandalous conversation.

13 <sup>h</sup> And in the midst of the seven candlesticks <sup>i</sup> one like unto the Son of man, <sup>j</sup> clothed with a garment down to the foot, and <sup>k</sup> girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

And in the midst of the seven candlesticks; that is, of the churches, resembled by the golden candlesticks. One like unto the Son of man: we say, no like is the same; but Christ, who was the Son of man, and who ordinarily calls himself so throughout the gospel, is undoubtedly here meant, as appeareth by ver. 17, 18, which description can agree to him alone. He is said to have come in the likeness of sinful flesh, though he came in true human flesh; and Phil. ii. 7, he was made in the likeness of men. John saw one who appeared to him as a man in the midst of seven golden candlesticks, which was Christ in the midst of his churches; placed in the midst, partly to let us know his observation of them all, and partly to let us know his being at hand to them all, to help, protect, and defend them. Clothed with a garment down to the foot; robsion the word signifieth a long garment reaching to the feet, whether of linen or woollen, or what other material, is not expressed; so as it seemeth to me hard to determine, whether it was to signify his priestly or kingly office, or neither. It is a habit of gravity. And girt about the paps with a golden girdle; nor dare I determine the significance of the golden girdle about his loins. It was a habit like that in Daniel's vision, Dan. x. 5. They were both symbols of majesty, authority, and dignity, and the appearance agreed very well to him, who was both a High Priest and a King.

14 His head and <sup>m</sup> his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and <sup>n</sup> his eyes were as a flame of fire;

His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow: whiteness signifies purity; whiteness of hair signifies old age ordinarily, which commonly is attended with more prudence, as having most experience: hence this appearance of Christ may denote both his purity and wisdom, and that he is the Ancient of days; see Dan. vii. 9, 13, 22; though there the term of Ancient of days belongs to God the Father, yet it also agreeth to Christ, who is equal with the Father, as to his Divine nature. And his eyes were as a flame of fire; such an appearance is applied to God, Ezek. i. 27; Dan. x. 6; and to Christ, Rev. xix. 12, to denote either Christ's knowledge, wisdom, and omniscience; or his grace in purifying souls, as fire doth metals; or his wrath and anger against his enemies.

15 <sup>o</sup> And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and <sup>p</sup> his voice as the sound of many waters.

And his feet like unto fine brass: there are nice disquisitions what this chalcobalanum (which we translate, fine brass) was: vid. Poli Synopsin. I understand not of what profit the determination will be to us. By the feet of Christ (probably) are signified his ways, counsels, and methods, in ordering and governing his church, which are compared to fine brass, for the beauty and glory of them, and for their firmness, strength, and steadiness. As if they burned in a furnace; they appeared like brass filled with fire, as if it were burning, and red-hot in a furnace. And his voice as the sound of many waters; loud and terrible, like the noise of the sea dashing upon a rock, or the shore.

16 <sup>q</sup> And he had in his right hand seven stars: and <sup>r</sup> out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword: <sup>s</sup> and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

And he had in his right hand seven stars: the right hand is the hand of power, Psal. xxi. 8; and of favour, Psal.

b Acts 10.10
2 Cor. 12. 2
ch. 4. 2. & 17.
s. & 21. 10.
John 20.26
Acts 20. 7.
1 Cor. 16. 2. d ch. 4. 1. & 10. 8.
e ver. 8
f ver. 17.

h ch. 2. 1.
i Ezek. 1.28
Dan. 7. 13.
& 10. 16.
ch. 14. 14.
k Dan. 10. 5
l ch. 15. 6.

m Dan. 10. 6.
ch. 2. 13.
& 18. 12.

o Ezek. 1. 7.
Dan. 10. 6.
ch. 2. 18.
p Ezek. 43.2
Dan. 10. 6.
ch. 14. 2. & 19. 6.

q ver. 20.
ch. 2. 1. &
2. 1.
r Is. 49. 2.
Eph. 4. 17.
Heb. 4. 12.
ch. 2. 12. 16.
& 19. 15. 21.
s Acts 26. 13.
ch. 10. 1.

xliv. 3; and of honour and dignity, Psal. cx. 1. The seven stars are expounded, ver. 20, to be the ministers of the gospel, his messengers to his churches, who having in all times been most exposed to the malice and rage of enemies, Christ is said to hold them in his right hand, as to signify the dignity he hath put upon them and the favour he hath showed them, so also to show his resolution to protect them, according to his promise, Matt. xxviii. 20. And out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; either his gospel and word, compared to a two-edged sword, Heb. iv. 12; or a sword of justice, which he will use till he hath perfectly overcome and vanquished his enemies. And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength; that is, was very glorious, so as the apostle was not able to behold him.

<sup>t</sup> Ezek. 1. 28. <sup>u</sup> Dan. 8. 18. <sup>4</sup> 10. 10. <sup>x</sup> 1a. 41. 4. <sup>4</sup> 44. 4. <sup>4</sup> 48. 12. ch. <sup>2</sup> 8. & <sup>22</sup> 13. ver. 11. 17 And <sup>t</sup> when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And <sup>u</sup> he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; <sup>x</sup> I am the first and the last:

I fell at his feet as dead; astonished at the majesty and glory of the appearance: see Josh. v. 14; Dan. viii. 17, 18; Matt. xvii. 6; Acts ix. 4. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; to comfort me, and let me know, that I had no reason to be afraid, he would do me no harm. I am the first and the last: see ver. 8, 11.

<sup>y</sup> Rom. 6. 9. 18 <sup>y</sup> I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, <sup>z</sup> I am alive for evermore, Amen; and <sup>a</sup> have the keys of hell and of death.

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore; the living God, who had life in myself, and gave life to the world, but assumed the human nature, and was made man, and in that nature died; but I rose again from the dead, and shall die no more, but ever live to make intercession for my people. Amen; this is a great truth. And have the keys of hell and of death; and have a power to kill, and cast into hell; or, I have the power over death, and the state of the dead, so as I can raise those that are dead to life again: I have the command of death, whether temporal or eternal; as he who hath the keys of a house can let in and shut out of it whom he pleaseth, so I bring to heaven and throw to hell whom I please.

<sup>b</sup> ver. 12, &c. 19 Write <sup>b</sup> the things which thou hast seen, <sup>c</sup> and the things which are, <sup>d</sup> and the things which shall be hereafter;

Write the things which thou hast seen; either the things which thou hast seen from the beginning of the gospel; for John, Matt. iv. 21, was a companion of Christ from the time presently following his baptism and temptations: or, the vision of me which thou hast now had; which I judge most probably the sense, not understanding why our Lord should set John to write what (though they were not yet written, yet) Christ knew should be written in another book by John himself, viz. in his Gospel, and by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, in their histories of the Gospel, and in the Acts of the Apostles; especially considering they were to be written plainly, so as he who runs may read them; and what John was to write here, was to be written enigmatically, and darkly represented in visions: and it is against reason to think the same things should be first revealed plainly, and then more darkly, and both by direction from God. And the things which are; the present affairs of the church; we have the history till Paul was carried prisoner to Rome, (which was about the 60th year after Christ,) in the Acts of the apostles; so that I conceive the farthest that John looked back was but thirty-five years; for he was in Patmos about the year 93, and is conceived to have written this book, 96. Hence the matter of the Revelation is easily concluded: 1. The things which were the present affairs of the church, Anno 96, or looking back only to 60, which things are supposed to be written by John, in chap. ii. 3. And the things which shall be hereafter; to the end of the world, under the reign of the dragon, (the pagan Roman empire,) and the reign of antichrist, or the beast, for one thousand two hundred and sixty years, and from thence until Christ shall come to judgment.

<sup>e</sup> ver. 16. 20 The mystery <sup>e</sup> of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, <sup>f</sup> and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are <sup>g</sup> the angels of the seven churches: and <sup>h</sup> the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

<sup>g</sup> Mal. 2. 7. <sup>ch. 2. 1, &c.</sup> <sup>h</sup> Zech. 4. 2. <sup>Mat. 6. 11.</sup> <sup>Phil. 2. 15.</sup>

The mystery of the seven stars, and the seven golden candlesticks: see ver. 12, 16. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; that is, they signify the angels of the seven churches. By angels he means God's messengers and ambassadors to the seven churches, called angels, both in respect of their office, being the ambassadors of Christ, 2 Cor. v. 20, and of that holiness which they should show forth in their doctrine and life. To interpret the term of angels by nature, seems not agreeable to what we shall hereafter meet with said to some of them; Christ would never have ordered John to have charged them with a loss of their first love, or to admonish them to be faithful unto death, or to repent. Whether the term angel denoteth any particular superior minister or bishop in those churches, or is to be taken collectively for all the ministers in those churches, I shall not dispute. Certain it is, ἄγγελος signifieth no more than is common to all ministers, viz. to be God's messengers, and move upon his errand. And the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches; the seven churches mentioned ver. 11: or else, seven being the number of perfection, all the churches, which are fitly represented by candlesticks, in the same sense as they are called pillars of truth in Paul's Epistle to Timothy, because they have not the light they show from themselves, only hold it forth from Christ. But it is the opinion of very learned writers upon this book, that our Lord, by these seven churches, signifies all the churches of Christ to the end of the world; and by what he saith to them, designs to show what shall be the state of the churches in all ages, and what their duty is. That by the church of Ephesus, was represented the purest state of all the Christian churches, which determined thirty years before this book was written. By the church of Smyrna, the state of all Christian churches till the year 300. By the church of Pergamos, all the Christian churches till antichrist got up into the saddle, and the Albigenes and Waldenses were so persecuted. By the church of Thyatira, the state of the churches from that time till our Reformation. By the other three, the state of all churches for one hundred and fifty years last past, and which shall be to the end of the world. See Dr. More, Mr. Mede, Cocceius, and Forbes, as learned and diligent inquirers into the sense of this book as any have been, who give many reasons for this: 1. Because no reason else can be given, why epistles should not be written to other churches as well as these. 2. He doth not call them the seven churches of Asia, but seven churches. 3. The number seven is a number used to signify perfection. 4. What is said of Christ's walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks, having the stars in his right hand, &c., agreeth to him with reference to all churches, not to these seven only. 5. His calling ministers angels, speaks this a prophecy, for that is a prophetic style. 6. The mentioning the same number of churches and ministers, as of the seals, speaks this part of the Revelation as comprehensive, with respect to time, as the other. 7. It is not probable that these epistles would have been ushered in with such a vision, if they had been merely historical and didactic, not prophetic also. 8. They argue from ver. 19, where John is bid to write not only what is, but what shall come to pass. 9. They argue from the matter of the epistles.—Let the curious reader see more of this in the authors themselves, as also in Mr. Brightman.

CHAP. II

What John was commanded to write in commendation or reproof to the angels of the churches of Ephesus, 1—7, Smyrna, 8—11, Pergamos, 12—17, Thyatira, 18—29.

Some things are to be observed of all the epistles, before we come to the particular epistles. 1. God's writing in this form, (as a man to his friend,) speaks Christ's love to the church, his spouse. 2. There were not seven books written, but one book in which these seven epistles were, out of which each church, or the church in its several periods, might learn what concerned it. 3. These epistles concerning matters of faith and manners, are written plainly, not in mysterious expressions. 4. The scope of them all is to instruct, reprove, commend, and comfort. 5. They are all directed to the ministers of the churches, as their heads, but the matter concerns the whole church. 6. It is also observed, that Christ, in the beginning of every epistle, notifieth himself by some one of those things mentioned in the vision in the former chapter. Chap. ii. 1, These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars, chap. i. 16. Ver. 8, The first and the last, which was dead and is alive, chap. i. 17, 18. Ver. 12, These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges, chap. i. 16. Ver. 18, The Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brass, chap. i. 14, 15. Chap. iii. 1. He that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars, chap. i. 4, 16. Ver. 7, He that hath the key of David, that is holy and true, that openeth, &c., chap. i. 5, 18. Ver. 14, The faithful and true witness, chap. i. 5.

<sup>e</sup> ver. 16.

<sup>f</sup> ver. 12.

UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith <sup>a</sup>he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, <sup>b</sup>who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

Ephesus was the principal city of Asia the Less, it lay in the western parts of it, upon the Ionian Sea; a city of great riches and trade, but much given to idolatry and superstition, famous for the temple of Diana. Paul was there twice; at his second coming he stayed thereabouts three years, Acts xviii. xix., xx. He was by a tumult driven thence into Macedonia, and left Timothy there, 1 Tim. i. 3. It appears from Acts xx. 17, that there were more ministers there than one; but they were all angels, and from the oneness of their business are all called an angel. These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand; that is, Christ, chap. i. 16, 20, who hath put an honour on his ministers, sheweth special favour to them, and will protect them. Who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; who hath a special eye to his church, being not an idle spectator, but present with his church, to observe how all in it walk and perform their several parts, and is at hand, either to reward or punish them.

2 <sup>c</sup>I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and <sup>d</sup>thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

I know thy works: these words being in the front of all the seven epistles, cannot be interpreted as signifying a knowledge of approbation, as Psal. i. 6, but of a comprehension in the understanding, and as signifying Christ's omniscience; though it be true, that the Lord both understood and approved of some of the works of this church particularly. And thy labour, and thy patience; their labour in propagating the knowledge of Christ and doctrine of the gospel, and their patient taking up and bearing the cross. And how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and their zeal and warmth, that they would not endure either persons erroneous in judgment, or lewd in their lives, in their communion. And thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not: in the primitive church there were some that falsely pretended an immediate call or mission from Christ, to preach what they did, but this church would not endure them. It appears from Paul's Second Epistle to Timothy, that there were then false teachers very busy in that church; possibly Ebion and Cerinthus, (who both lived in this time, and Cerinthus preached in Asia,) or their disciples, might be some of them. They tried them, possibly, by the word of God, according to the rules given in it to try the spirits. And hast found them liars; and found that they had no such immediate mission, no authority from Christ.

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.

And hast borne the contradiction of false teachers, and the persecutions of Jews and pagans; for at this time the second persecution was began by Domitian. And hast pa- tience: grace (with quietness and submission) to bear the will of God in any sort of evil. And for my name's sake hast laboured; and for me hast laboured actively in propagating the truths of my gospel, as well as passively in the furnace of trials and persecutions. And hast not fainted; and hast persevered so as thou hast neither been seduced to other doctrine by false teachers, nor lost thy integrity and holiness of conversation.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee; something to accuse thee of, and blame thee for. Because thou hast left thy first love; of late thou hast not been so warm in the propagation of my gospel, and maintaining my truth. The love of many in this church, both toward God and their brethren, probably was cooled, though not wholly extinguished.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; <sup>e</sup>or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen; that is, in what degree thy love was formerly, and compare it with what it is now. And repent; repentance in man, signifieth both the change of the heart and of the actions. And do the first works; recover thy former warmth of love, and zeal for good works. Or else I will come unto thee quickly; if thou do not, I that know thee, and walk in the midst of thee, will show myself an enemy to thee. And will remove thy candlestick out of his place; and unchurch thee, and say unto thee, Lo-ammi, You are not my people. Which threatening is long since made good; for where is now the famous church of Ephesus?

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of <sup>h</sup>the Nicolaitanes, which I <sup>i</sup>hate.

But this thou hast; thou hast yet thus much to commend thee. That thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes; thou hatest the deeds of those who teach the lawfulness of a common use of wives, and eat things offered to idols; for these, they say, were the tenets of the Nicolaitanes, so called from one Nicholas; but whether he were one of the first deacons, named Acts vi. 5, (who, they say, to avoid the imputation of jealousy, brought forth his wife, being a beautiful woman, and prostituted her,) or from some other of that name, I cannot determine. Which I also hate: God, as a lover of his own order, and of human society, hateth such doctrines and practices as are contrary to the rule of his word, and tend to the confusion of human societies.

7 <sup>j</sup>He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give <sup>k</sup>to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

He that hath an ear, let him hear; to whom God hath given an ability and power to understand what I say. It is a form of speech which Christ often used, when he would quicken up people's attention, Matt. xi. 15; xiii. 9, 43; Mark iv. 9, 23; vii. 16: we shall find it again in these two chapters six times; from which some would conclude, that in these epistles there is something mysterious, parabolical, and prophetic, it being a form of speech prefixed to many parables. What the Spirit saith; the Holy Spirit of God, from whose inspiration all Scripture is. Unto the churches; not only at Ephesus, but elsewhere in Asia, or any other part of the world. To him that overcometh; that is, a conqueror in fighting the good fight of faith, against the world, the flesh, and the devil. Will I give to eat of the tree of life; I will give him a share in my merits, and eternal life; which blessed enjoyments are set out unto us under the notion of eating, Luke xii. 37; xxii. 28, &c.; John x. 28. This is the promise that he hath promised us, 1 John ii. 25. Heaven is expressed to us under this notion, with reference to the tree of life, mentioned Gen. ii. 9, which was in the old Paradise; for it is added, which is in the midst of the paradise of God; or, which is the same, Christ himself is here

<sup>a</sup> ch. l. 16, 20.

<sup>b</sup> ch. l. 13.

<sup>c</sup> Pa. i. 6, ver. 9, 13, 19, ch. 3. 1, 8, 16.

<sup>d</sup> 1 John 4. 1.

<sup>e</sup> 2 Cor. 11. 13, 2 Pet. 2.

<sup>f</sup> 1.

<sup>g</sup> Matt. 21. 41, 43.

<sup>h</sup> ver. 15.

<sup>j</sup> Mat. 11. 15, & 13. 9, 43, ver. 11, 17, 29, ch. 3. 6, 13, 22, & 23, k ch. 22. 2, 14, 1 Gen. 2. 9.

<sup>f</sup> Gal. 6. 9, Heb. 12. 3, 5.

intended, who is the tree of life, mentioned chap. xxii. 2; and the happiness of heaven is thus expressed, 1 Thess. iv. 17, We shall be ever with the Lord. This is the sum of the epistle to the first-mentioned church, by which those that judge these epistles prophetic, understand all the primitive churches during the apostles' age, or the most of their ages, for John himself lived under the second persecution.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith <sup>m</sup> the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

Smyrna was a city in Ionia; we read not when, or by whom, the gospel was first planted and a church gathered there; nor can we tell who are meant by the angel of this church: see chap. i. 20. That it was no single person is probable, for he speaks plurally, ver. 10, the devil shall cast some of you, ἐξ ὑμῶν, into prison. These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive: for the meaning of this phrase, see annotations on chap. i. 8, 17, 18; only it is observable how Christ, speaking to this church under great tribulation and persecution, fits a name proper to comfort them; for he himself was dead, and yet now alive, and he living, those that believe in him, because he lives, shall live also, John xiv. 19; and as he was the first, so he will be the last, surviving all his enemies, and be at last a conqueror over them.

9 <sup>n</sup> I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art <sup>o</sup> rich) and I know the blasphemy of <sup>p</sup> them which say they are Jews, and are not, <sup>q</sup> but are the synagogue of Satan.

I know thy works, and tribulation: though the term know doth not necessarily signify approbation, yet, both as to the church of Ephesus and Smyrna, the particular works mentioned assure us, that God approved their patient suffering affliction for his name. And poverty; and the poor condition (as to outward things) into which they had brought themselves, for their owning and profession of the gospel of Christ, having their estates rent from them, &c. But thou art rich; but yet they were rich, both really in the love and favour of God, and also in the esteem of God, who accounteth them rich who abound in spiritual habits, and good works, the exercise of those habits. And I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not: God also knows the evil speeches of his church's enemies, whether native Jews, glorying in circumcision and the law, and that they were descended from Abraham; or false Christians, who may be here meant (called Jews by a figure; the Jews being once the only church of God). But are the synagogue of Satan; but are indeed a collection of devils, or the children of the devil, whose works they do, continually reviling true Christians, and murdering the saints, after the manner of their father, who was a murderer from the beginning.

10 <sup>r</sup> Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: <sup>s</sup> be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee <sup>t</sup> a crown of life.

Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer; thou art like to suffer yet sharper things than thou hast suffered, the persecutions are but begun; but pluck up a good courage, fear not your enemies, Matt. x. 28. Behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison; you shall be cast into prison, by Jews and pagans, who are the devil's instruments, and execute his malice against you; which should both encourage you, that your fight is with the common enemy of mankind, and teach you to pity and pray for your persecutors, who are but the devil's instruments, whose hearts he hath filled with malice against you. That ye may be tried; that your faith, love, patience, obedience, may be tried. And ye shall have tribulation ten days: interpreters are divided about these ten days, what space of time is meant by them; some think the whole time of the ten persecutions, but they lasted above two hundred years; others will have them the ten years of Trajan's persecution, from the year 99 to 109. Others observe, that in ten days are two hundred and forty hours, which make up the number of years from 85, when the second persecution began, (under which John at this time was.) to 325, when all the persecutions ceased. But to let these fancies go: it is either a certain number put for an uncertain; or, it signifies many days; as in Gen. xxxi. 42, Thou hast changed my wages ten times, that is, many times; so 2 Sam. xix. 43; Job xix. 3. Or else it signifies a little time, as in Gen. xxiv. 55; Amos v. 3; vi. 9. If we understand this epistle as only concerning the church of Smyrna at that time, it may signify a small time. If we understand it prophetically, describing the state of all churches, till the pagan persecution ceased, (which was more than two hundred and forty years,) ten days signifies a long time. Be thou faithful unto death, hold fast to thy profession of faith and holiness to the end of thy life here, and I will give thee a crown of life, and I will give thee eternal life and salvation, which shall be a great reward. It is called a crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. iv. 8.

11 <sup>u</sup> He that hath an ear, let him hear <sup>v</sup> what the Spirit saith unto the churches; <sup>w</sup> He that overcometh shall not be hurt of <sup>x</sup> the second death.

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; for the opening of these passages, see the notes on ver. 7. Shall not be hurt of the second death; we read of the second death, chap. xx. 6, 14: the meaning is, that he shall escape the eternal damnation of soul and body in the day of judgment.

Those that make these epistles prophetic say, that the church of Smyrna was a type of all the churches of Christ to the year 325. (when Constantine overcame Licinius, and gave rest and peace to the churches of Christ.) which was all a time of severe persecution under the Roman emperors, who to that time were all heathens. It is very observable, that Christ blameth nothing in this church; the church of God keeps always its purity best in the fire; but doubtless there were in this time many apostacies, and other errors, but God allows much to his people's temptations; hence, though Job showed much impatience, yet we are called to behold him as a pattern of patience.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith <sup>y</sup> he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

Pergamos was a famous city of Troas; we read of Pergamos no where else in Scripture, but of Troas we read of Paul's being there, Acts xvi. 8, 11; xx. 5, 6, and preaching Christ there, 2 Cor. ii. 12. These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges: see the notes on chap. i. 16.

13 <sup>z</sup> I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, <sup>a</sup> even where Satan's seat is: <sup>b</sup> and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipapas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

I know thy works, and where thou dwellest; God knows all his people's circumstances, where they dwell, as well as what they do, and how they behave themselves in their habitations. Even where Satan's seat is; where the devil rules by his pagan deputies and antichrist's officers. And thou holdest fast my name; the word of my truth, by which I am known, as a man by his name. And hast not denied my faith; neither by the words of thy mouth, nor by any apostacy in this profession, notwithstanding the temptations thou hast had from seducers and from persecutors, and the sight of those who have been put to death for their profession. Even in those days wherein Antipapas was my faithful martyr: it is much no ecclesiastical history makes mention of this martyr Antipapas, which argueth him to have been a person but of an obscure note in the world; but Christ seeth and taketh notice of those little ones who belong to him, though the world overlooks them. Our being able from no history to give an account of this martyr, hath inclined some to think this epistle wholly prophetic, and

m ch. 1. 8, 17, 18.

n ver. 2.

o Luke 12. 21. 1 Tim. 6. 18. Jam. 2. 5. p Rom. 2. 17, 28, 29. q 9. 8. r ch. 3. 9.

s Mat. 24. 13. t Jam. 1. 12. ch. 3. 11.

u ver. 7. ch. 13. 9.

x ch. 20. 14. # 21. 8.

y ch. 1. 16.

z ver. 9.

that Antipas signifieth not any particular person, but all those that have opposed the pope, as if it were Antipapa. But certainly there was such a martyr as Antipas belonging to the church at Smyrna at that time, who suffered for the truth, though we do not allow this church to have been typical of all the gospel churches for many years.

b Num. 24.
14. & 25. 1.
& 31. 16.
2 Pet. 2. 15.
Jude 11.
c ver. 20.
Acts 15. 29.
1 Cor. 8. 9.
10. & 10. 19.
20.
d 1 Cor. 6.
13. &c.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of <sup>b</sup>Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, <sup>c</sup>to eat things sacrificed unto idols, <sup>d</sup>and to commit fornication.

But I have a few things against thee; though I have much to commend thee for, yet I have some things to accuse thee of, and to complain of thee for. Because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam: by the doctrine of Balaam, he means the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, (as he expounds himself, ver. 15.) which was like the doctrine of Balaam. Who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel; that Balaam of whom we read, Numb. xxiv., xxv., who being sent for by Balak the king of Moab to come and curse Israel, and finding that God restrained him, and turned his tongue from cursing them to pronounce blessings to them, instructed Balak at last how to lay a stumblingblock before them, to make them to fall, viz. to set the Moabitish women to tempt them to commit uncleanness with them, and so to feast with them in their idols' temples, and eat of their meat first offered unto their idols.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine <sup>e</sup>of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes; so, saith he, thou sufferest in thy communion filthy persons, who maintain fornication lawful, and the lawfulness of eating meat offered to idols, which exactly corresponds with Balaam's doctrine or counsel given to Balak, in order to his weakening the Israelites by separating them from God. His counsel took place, to the destruction of twenty-four thousand Israelites. Which thing I hate; I am the same God still, and hate such doctrines, as much as ever I did in the time of Balak.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and 'will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

Repent; thou that art guilty of conniving at such things, change thy mind and practice, and let those who have entertained these opinions, and run into those filthy practices, change their hearts and practices; or else I will come unto thee quickly; I will quickly come against thee, and punish thee: see the notes on ver. 5. And will fight against them with the sword of my mouth; and fight against them by my word; either convincing them, or pronouncing sentence against them; or, by raising up other teachers, who shall preach my word more faithfully, and whose doctrine shall be like a sword to devour and to destroy them.

17 <sup>f</sup>He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone <sup>h</sup>a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh: see the annotations on ver. 7. Will I give to eat of the hidden manna; here is a manifest allusion to that bread from heaven, with which God fed his people in the wilderness, called angels' food, Psal. lxxviii. 25. The story of it we have, Exod. xvi. 31, 32; a pot of which God ordained to be kept in the ark, for a memorial of God's mercy, Heb. ix. 4. It was a type of Christ, who was the true bread that came down from heaven, John vi. 32, 33. It here signifies Christ himself, with all the influences of his grace, whether for strength or comfort. As a feast was wont to follow a victory; so Christ promiseth to those that fought, and overcame in the spiritual fight, to feast them with himself and the influences of his Spirit. And will give him a white stone: the use of stones anciently was so various, that it hath given a great liberty to interpreters to vary in their senses of the white stone here mentioned. They made use of them (as we since of counters) to count; they used them also in judgments, acquitting persons by white stones, on which their names were written, as they condemned others by black stones; they also used them in giving suffrages in elections, &c.; they also used them to mark happy or lucky days, and they used other stones to mark such days as they counted unlucky; and finally, they used them as rewards to those who conquered in their games. Hence interpreters vary in their opinions, whether this be a general promise of a reward, or a more particular promise of pardon and absolution; or, of the assurance of their election to life. It seems most properly to be interpreted of pardon, or the notification of pardon of sins, or more generally of a reward. By the new name, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it, the same thing seemeth to be signified, the Spirit witnessing with their spirits that they are the children of God. They say, that in those white stones (used in absolutions of persons, or in giving suffrages) the name of the person absolved or chosen was wont to be written, and none knew it but those that had it, unless they imparted it, to which custom this allusion is.

Those that make this church typical, say it typified the churches of the gospel during the times of popery, to the end of the persecutions of the Waldenses and Albigenses, when about one hundred thousand of them were destroyed by eight thousand papists; or, the time when antichrist first sat in the temple of God, as chap. xiii., and the woman fled into the wilderness, chap. xii.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, 'who hath his eyes like unto <sup>i</sup> a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

Thyatira was a city of Mysia or Lydia, not far from Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia; for Lydia, who traded in purple, and was of this city, went to Philippi to trade, as we read, Acts xvi. 12, 14. Eyes like unto a flame of fire: see chap. i. 14, 15: it signifies either angry eyes, or quick and piercing eyes. The comparing of his feet to fine brass, seemeth to signify both the purity and holiness of his ways and methods of providence, and also his firmness and steadiness in them.

19 <sup>k</sup>I know thy works, and charity, <sup>l</sup>and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

I know thy works; the works of the ministry of this church were such as Christ knew, not only with a knowledge of comprehension, but approbation also. And charity; such were his charity to Christians that were in distress. And service; his diligence in his ministration. And faith; his faith, and adherence to Christ, and the doctrine of the gospel. And thy patience; his meek bearing of his crosses and trials. And thy works; his other works, the fruit of faith and love. And the last to be more than the first; and his proficiency both in spiritual habits, and good works, the fruits of them.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman <sup>m</sup>Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants <sup>n</sup>to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee: see the notes upon ver. 4, 14. Because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel: the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, mentioned ver. 6, 15, is so plainly expressed in the latter part of the verse, viz. maintaining the lawfulness of eating things offered to idols, and of fornication; that whoever this woman was, it is plain she was one of that filthy sect. It is also plain, that she is called Jezebel with allusion to that

h ch. 3. 12.
& 12. 12.

g ver. 7, 11.

11 Kings 16.
21. & 21. 22.
2 Kings 9. 7.
m Ex. 34. 15.
Acts 15. 20.
24. 1 Cor. 10.
19. 20.
ver. 14.

wicked woman of that name who was the wife of Ahab, of whom we read, 1 Kings xvi. 31. She was an instrument to bring Ahab her husband to serve and worship Baal. It is also plain, that she was one that pretended to Divine revelations; she called herself a prophetess; and that taught in public, which no women but prophetesses might do, 1 Cor. xiv. 34; 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12: and that she taught a community of women, and the lawfulness as of fornication, so of eating things sacrificed to idols, directly contrary to the apostle's doctrine, 1 Cor. ix. 10. But what she was cannot be determined; for though we allow this church to be typical of the church in the times of popery, and the popish synagogue, which maintaineth both these things to be the antitype; yet certainly there was some famous heretical strumpet in this church, which the governors did not restrain and cast out of their communion; which is the thing Christ had against this church, and the officers in it, who ought to have restrained her extravagancies both in teaching such doctrines, (being contrary to the apostle's doctrine in the places before mentioned,) and from teaching at all, being no prophetess though she pretended to it.

21 And I gave her space <sup>n</sup> to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

I was not quick with her, but gave her a time of patience, and did not cut her off at first; but she was incorrigible, and went on in her sinful courses.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

I will cast her into a bed; another kind of bed than she hath sinned in and by, not a bed of ease and pleasure, but of pain and torment. Nor shall the seduced escape, they shall also be cast into great tribulation, pains and torments of conscience, or afflictions more corporal, either from the more immediate hand of God, or the hands of men. Except they repent of their deeds; this is to be supposed to all God's threatenings of judgments, the execution of them ordinarily may be prevented by repentance, and such is the patience of God, that he gives the vilest sinners a space to repent.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that <sup>o</sup> I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and <sup>p</sup> I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

And I will kill her children, those who are seduced by her, with death; I will destroy them; unless some special death, such as the plague, be here threatened. So shall all the churches near Thyatira know, that I am a God who do not only take notice of overt, scandalous acts, but of the secret thoughts, motions, counsels, and designs of men's hearts, Psal. vii. 10; Jer. xi. 20; xvii. 10; and that I am a just God, who will deal with all according to their works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; <sup>q</sup> I will put upon you none other burden.

But unto you I say; you that are the ministers, for they are distinguished from the rest in Thyatira. The word again is plural, which lets us know these epistles were directed to no single persons. And unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine; the rest of the members of the church in Thyatira, who have not embraced this doctrine of the Nicolaitans published by Jezebel, &c. As they speak; those seducers call their doctrine deep things, great mysteries revealed to them; as there are the deep things of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10, so these seducers would pretend their doctrines also were deep things: Christ calls them the devil's mysteries, deep things of Satan. I will put upon you none other burden; I will lay no other burden of trials and afflictions.

25 But <sup>r</sup> that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

But that which ye have already; than you already groan under. Or, no other precepts than what you have had from the apostles: the precepts of God are called burdens, Matt. xi. 30; Acts xv. 28. Hold fast till I come; hold fast your profession, your faith and holiness, till I come to judgment.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth <sup>s</sup> my works unto the end, <sup>t</sup> to him will I give power over the nations:

And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end: see the notes on ver. 7, 11, 17. Overcoming is here expounded by keeping Christ's works; that is, either the works by him commanded, or walking as he walked, and persevering therein to the end of his or their lives. To him will I give power over the nations; either to judge those who live heathenish lives; or to convert nations to the faith; or, which is most probable, he shall sit with me upon a throne in the day of judgment, Matt. xix. 28, and judge the world, 1 Cor. vi. 2.

27 <sup>u</sup> And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

And he shall rule them with a rod of iron: an iron rod either signifies a right rod, that will not be easily bent and made crooked; or a severe rod, which is most probably the sense: see Psal. ii. 9; chap. xii. 5. The words by the psalmist are applied to Christ, and to the church, Rev. xii. 5: to particular saints here, who rule the nations either in Christ their Head, or with Christ as their Chieftain, with the word of God powerfully convincing the world of sin and righteousness. As the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; and all paganism and heathen idolatries shall be broken in pieces. Or, in the day of judgment, the saints that persevere shall sit with Christ, and judge and condemn the world severely; and then they shall be broken in pieces, never again to be sodered or cemented. Even as I received of my Father; for such a power and authority my Father hath given me, and I will give it to all them.

28 And I will give him <sup>x</sup> the morning star.

Either the light of glory, the blessed vision of God, or a certain hope of eternal life; or the Holy Spirit, called so, 2 Pet. i. 19; or rather, of myself. Christ himself is not called the Sun of righteousness, Mal. iv. 2, but the Morning-star, chap. xxii. 16, because he excelleth all other stars in glory, and scattereth the darkness of ignorance and error by the light of his gospel: I will make him partaker of myself.

29 <sup>y</sup> He that hath an ear, let him hear <sup>z</sup> what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Here the same conclusion of this epistle as of all the rest, ver. 7, 11, 17: see the notes on ver. 7.

Those who make this epistle typical and prophetic, make it a type of all the churches of Christ, from about the year 1260, or the end of the persecution of the Waldenses, until the protestant religion so far obtained, that whole nations owned it, which was about 1560, by which time England and Scotland had made it the religion of those nations: it had before this prevailed in Germany, Helvetia, France, and many other places, where it was the religion of whole cities and particular jurisdictions, &c.

CHAP. III

What John was commanded to write in commendation or reproof to the angels of the churches of Sardis, 1—6, Philadelphia, 7—13, and Laodicea, 14—22.

AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he <sup>a</sup> that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; <sup>b</sup> I know thy works, <sup>c</sup> thou hast a name that thou livest, <sup>d</sup> and art dead.

The angel of the church: see the notes on chap. ii. 12.

n Rom. 2. 4. ch. 9. 20.

o 1 Sam. 16. 7. 1 Chr. 28. 9. & 29. 17. 2 Chr. 6. 30. Ps. 7. 9. Jer. 11. 20. & 17. 10. & 20. 12. John 2. 24, 25. Acts 1. 24. Rom. 8. 27. ch. 20. 12.

q Acts 15. 28.

r ch. 2. 11.

s John 6. 29. 1 John 3. 22. t Mat. 18. 28. Luke 22. 28. 30. 1 Cor. 6. 2. ch. 3. 21. & 20. 4.

u Pr. 2. 6, 9. & 49. 14. Dan. 7. 22. ch. 12. 5. & 18. 15.

x 2 Pet. 1. 19. ch. 22. 16.

y ver. 7.

a ch. 1. 4, 16. & 4. 5. & 6. 6.

b ch. 2. 2.

c Eph. 2. 1, 5. 1 Tim. 2. 8.

Write: see the notes on chap. i. 11. The seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars: see the notes on chap. i. 3, and chap. i. 20. I know thy works: this phrase here (as appears from what follows) can signify nothing but Christ's comprehension of the works of this church in his understanding, not his approbation of them. That thou hast a name that thou livest; the ministry of this church had a name, that is, were reported as famous for their faith, diligence, and holiness; but their faith, without suitable works, was dead, and they were no better than hypocrites. And art dead; spiritually dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

Be watchful, against sin, and unto thy duty, to perform it in a better manner than formerly. And strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die; improve those gifts and good habits which are left thee as yet, but are faint and ready to die, if thou dost not look after the improvement and strengthening of them. For I have not found thy works perfect before God; for I have not found thy works before God (whether they works in thy ministry, or in thy conversation) such as they ought to be; thou mightest have done me more service, and thou mightest have done what thou hast done with more uprightness and sincerity.

3 <sup>d</sup> Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and <sup>e</sup> repent. <sup>f</sup> If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard; to wit, from the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ. All true reformation, either of doctrine or manners, lies in the reduction of it to the doctrine delivered, and the rules of life given by them. And hold fast, and repent: wherein our judgment or practice is conformable to theirs, it is to be held fast; wherein it hath varied, it is to be repented of. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief; if thou shalt not keep thyself free from gross sins or errors, and give diligence to do it, I will come to thee, not as a friend to comfort and refresh thee, but as a thief to rob and destroy thee, and that suddenly. And thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee; I will surprise thee with my judgments, and thou shalt not know when my judgments shall overtake thee.

4 Thou hast <sup>g</sup> a few names even in <sup>h</sup> Sardis which have not <sup>i</sup> defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me <sup>j</sup> in white: for they are worthy.

Thou hast a few names even in Sardis, a few persons even in that polluted place, which have not defiled their garments; who have kept their integrity and innocency. There is a garment of Christ's righteousness, which, once put on, is never lost, nor can be defiled; but there are garments of holiness also: hence the apostle calls to Christians to be clothed with humility. As sin is expressed under the notion of nakedness, so holiness is expressed under the notion of a garment, Ezek. xvi. 10; 1 Pet. v. 5. Those who have not defiled their garments, are those that have kept a pure conscience. And they shall walk with me in white: the Romans used to clothe their nobles, and such as were competitors for honours, in white garments; the priests and Levites also amongst the Jews, when they ministered, were clothed in white, 2 Chron. v. 12. God and his holy angels are in Scripture set out to us as clothed in white, Dan. vii. 9; Matt. xvii. 2; xxviii. 3. Those that triumphed upon victories obtained, were clothed in white amongst the Romans. To these usages, or some of them, the allusion is, and the meaning is, they shall be to me as kings, and priests, and nobles, they shall be made partakers of my glory: for they are worthy; though they have not merited it, yet I have judged them worthy; they are worthy, though not with respect to their merit, yet with respect to my promise.

5 He that overcometh, <sup>k</sup> the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and

I will not <sup>l</sup> blot out his name out of the <sup>m</sup> book of life, but <sup>n</sup> I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; he that overcometh in the spiritual fight, shall be honoured as a triumpher. And I will not blot out his name out of the book of life; that is, I will give him everlasting life: the phrase is an allusion to men who use to keep books, and in them the names of persons to whom they will show kindness. The book of life, applied to God, signifieth his eternal predestination, or purpose to bring some to heaven; out of which book, though none can be blotted out whose name is once wrote in, yet those whose names are in this book may be under some fears and apprehensions to the contrary. Christ assures them to the contrary, that they shall certainly be saved, but lets them know that this assurance depends upon their perseverance; of which also some make this phrase a promise. But I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels; in the day of judgment I will own them, and acknowledge them as mine before my Father and all the angels, Matt. x. 32; Luke xii. 8.

6 <sup>o</sup> He that hath an ear, let him hear <sup>p</sup> what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

The common conclusion of all the epistles: see the notes on ver. 7, 11, 17, 29.

Those who make these churches typical, and the epistles prophetic of the complexion of all the churches of Christ which shall be to the end of the world, say the church of Sardis typifieth those reformed churches after the year 1560, that should cast off antichrist, but continue in a more imperfect state, contenting themselves with a bare disclaiming antichrist, but not rising up to a perfect reformation.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith <sup>q</sup> he that is holy, <sup>r</sup> he that is true, he that hath <sup>s</sup> the key of David, <sup>t</sup> he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and <sup>u</sup> shutteth, and no man openeth;

And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: see the notes on chap. i. 20; ii. 1. Of this Philadelphia we read no more in holy writ. We are told there were three cities of that name, one in Egypt, one in Syria, another in Phrygia, or in Mysia or Lydia, which is that here intended. These things saith he that is holy; that is, the Holy One, Acts iii. 14. He that is true; true to his word of promise or threatening. He that hath the key of David; that is, the key of the house of David, mentioned Isa. xxii. 22; the key of the church, which answered the temple, the house David designed for God: the use of the key is to open and shut, or make fast. He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; who admits into the kingdom of heaven whom he pleaseth, and none can hinder him, and shutteth out of heaven whom he pleaseth. The house of David typified the church, the church containeth the number of those that shall be saved; Christ is here described as he who hath the sole and absolute power of saving and condemning whom he pleaseth.

8 <sup>v</sup> I know thy works: behold, I have <sup>w</sup> set before thee <sup>x</sup> an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

I know thy works: it is very probable, that our Lord, by these ministers' works, understands the works proper to them in their function, their labour in preaching and propagating the gospel, which Christ did not only know and observe, but also approve of, and promiseth them a liberty to go on, and success in their labours, under the notion of an open door: see 1 Cor. xvi. 9; 2 Cor. ii. 12; Col. iv. 3. And no man can shut it; so as it should not be in the power of adversaries to hinder his success. For thou hast a little strength; both inward strength, and outward helps and advantages. And hast kept my word; the doctrine of faith is by thee kept pure, as also my precepts for a holy life. And hast not denied my name; and thou hast not been by

1 Ex. 22. 24.
14. 23. 28.
m Phil. 4. 3.
ch. 13. 8. &
17. 8. & 20.
12. & 21. 27.
n Mat. 10. 32.
Luke 12. 8.

o ch. 2. 7.

p Acts 3. 14.
q 1 John 5. 20. ver. 14.
ch. 1. 5. & 6.
16. & 19. 11.
r 16. 22. 22.
Luke 1. 32.
ch. 1. 18.
s Mat. 16. 19.
t Job 12. 14.

u ver. 1.

x 1 Cor. 16. 9.
2 Cor. 2. 12.

k ch. 12. 8.

any temptation prevailed upon to apostatize from the profession of the gospel.

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

Them of the synagogue of Satan; so he calleth all Jews that opposed Christianity, or all pretended but not real professors. Which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie: For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is of the flesh; but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly, &c. Rom. ii. 28, 29. By this term also he may mean all false and hypocritical professors, who would make themselves the church, the only church of God, but are far enough from it, hating, maligning, and opposing those who would keep stricter to the rule of the gospel. Behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet; I will by my providence so order it, that these men shall come and honour thee, paying a civil respect and homage to thee. And to know that I have loved thee; and to know that I have a greater kindness for thee than for them.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

Because thou hast kept the word of my patience: the doctrine of the gospel is, unquestionably, the word here called the word of the Lord's patience, because it was that word, that doctrine, which (as those times went) could not be adhered to and observed without much patience in those that adhered to it; both actively, waiting for the promises revealed in it, and passively, enduring all manner of trials and crosses. To keep this word, was to keep close not only to the matters of faith revealed in it, but to the duty imposed by it upon ministers and others in the preaching and propagating of the gospel, and all the duties of a holy life. I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world; for this faithfulness God promises to keep the ministers of this church from those persecutions which raged elsewhere, and were further, in Trajan's time, to come upon all Christians living under the Roman empire. To try them that dwell upon the earth; to try those Christians that lived within that empire, how well they would adhere to Christ, and the profession of the gospel. This I take to be a more proper sense, than theirs who would interpret this hour of temptation of the day of judgment, which is never so called.

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

Behold, I come quickly; ταχὺ, which certainly is the same with ἐν τάχει; and it might be as well concluded, that the day of judgment should come by that time Rome pagan should cease, as that all things written in this book had their accomplishment in that time, because Christ told John they should come to pass ἐν τάχει, chap. i. 1; xxii. 6. No other coming of Christ, but his coming to the last judgment, can be here meant. Hold that fast which thou hast; κράται, hold with a strong hand the doctrine of faith, which thou yet hast, pure, and thy pure worship, and discipline, and a pure conscience. That no man take thy crown; that thou mayest not lose that reward which shall be the portion of those that persevere to the end, and of those only.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him his new name.

Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God: though by the temple of God in this place some understand the church of Christ on earth, where those always were, and are, and always shall be, most famous, who have overcome temptations best, from the world, the flesh, and the devil; yet, considering that all the promises before made to those who overcome are of another life, it seems best rather to interpret this so, that God would make such a one of fame and renown in heaven, great in the kingdom of heaven, Matt. v. 19, to sit upon a throne there, Matt. xix. 28. He shall have a higher degree in glory, (for stars differ from one another in glory, 1 Cor. xv. 41.) pillars being not only for support, but ornament, and principal parts in buildings. And he shall go no more out; he shall have an eternal inheritance, of which he shall not be dispossessed. And I will write upon him the name of my God; as men use, upon pillars and monuments erected for their own use and honour, to write their names; so I will peculiarly own, and challenge such a one for myself. And the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem; and I will write upon him, This man is an inhabitant of the new Jerusalem. And I will write upon him my new name; I will glorify him with that glory of which myself was made partaker, upon my ascension after my resurrection, John xvii. 22, 24.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

This we have met with at the close of every epistle: see the notes on ver. 7.

Those who think these churches were typical, and the matter of the epistles not only didactic and corrective, but prophetic, say, this church of Philadelphia was a type of all gospel churches which were to be in the world upon the Reformation; which more perfectly cast off antichrist, and would allow no key but that of the house of David, reforming themselves strictly according to the rule of the word, not according to state policy, and prudence.

14 And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

We read of this church, Col. iv. 16. Laodicea was a city in Lydia, by the river Lycus: see chap. i. 11. These things saith the Amen: Amen, as we have oft noted, is a particle used in asserting, and in wishing, or praying; here it hath the use of a noun, and is assertive, he that is true, as it followeth. He may be conceived thus to preface his epistle, to ascertain to the ministers of this church the truth of what he blames in them; or of the threatenings or promises contained in it; to which purpose he also calls himself the faithful and true witness: see the notes on chap. i. 5. The beginning of the creation of God: those that deny the Divinity of Christ, are deceived in their thoughts that this text will afford them any defence for their error; for ἀρχή, the word here used, doth not only signify the cause, but principality, or the chief, or prince, Eph. iii. 10; Col. i. 16. Hence Christ is said to be ἀρχή, which we translate the beginning, because he was the Creator, the efficient cause of the creation, or hath a lordship over the whole creation; all power both in heaven and earth being committed to him, and all knees both in heaven and earth bowing down to him, Phil. ii. 10. Unless we had rather interpret it of the new creation, either in the world, so he was the beginning of the gospel; or in particular souls, so he is the beginning of regeneration and sanctification. But though this be a truth, and consistent enough with the Greek phrase, Gal. vi. 15, yet I see no reason why we should fly to it against the Arians, or their spurious offspring; for taking the creation, as ordinarily it signifies, the giving all creatures their first being, Christ was the efficient cause of it, and so the beginning of it, without him was nothing made; and he hath a lordship and dominion over it.

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

I know thy works; I know and observe thy behaviour, thy ministerial function. That thou art neither cold nor g 1 Kings 7.

21. Gal. 2. 9.
h ch. 2. 17.
& 14. 1. &
22. 4.

i Gal. 4. 26.
Heb. 12. 22.
ch. 21. 2. 10.
k ch. 22. 4.

l Or, in Laodicea.
m Is. 65. 16.
n ch. 1. 6. &
19. 11. & 22.
6. ver. 7.
o Col. 1. 15.

hot; thou art neither openly profane and grossly scandalous, like heathens, or such as make no profession; nor yet hast thou any true zeal or warmth, either for the faith once delivered to the saints, or in love to God, seen in keeping his commandments, having the power and efficacy of godliness, teaching thee to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, Tit. ii. 12. Thou hast a form of godliness, but deniest the life and power thereof. I would thou wert cold or hot: we must not think Christ wisheth any persons cold absolutely, but comparatively, intimating to us, that the condition of a downright atheist, or profane person, is more hopeful than that of a close, formal hypocrite: the latter is in the road to hell as well as the other, and no more pleaseth God than the other. It is better not to have known the truth, than knowing it, to live contrary to it, Luke xii. 48; 2 Pet. ii. 21. Commonly such men also are proud, and self-conceited, having something to stop the mouth of their natural conscience, harder to be convinced of their evil state, Matt. xxi. 32, 33.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

Neither cold nor hot; partly good, partly bad, having something of profession, nothing of the life and power of religion; contenting thyself that thou art not a Jew, nor a pagan; not a superstitious, idolatrous person; but a Christian, a protestant, a minister, or member of the Reformed church; yet neglecting thy duty both as a minister, and as a Christian, living in a sensual satisfaction of thy lusts. I will spue thee out of my mouth; I will cast thee off, as men vomit up lukewarm things.

q 110s. 12. 8
1 Cor. 4. 5.

17 Because thou sayest, "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

Because thou sayest, I am rich: it was said before, that one reason why the condition of a formalist is worse than that of an atheist, or more openly profane person, is, because the former is ordinarily proud and self-conceited, and hath something to stop the mouth of his natural conscience with, which the other wanteth. This is made good in the instance of this lukewarm angel; he said he was rich in a spiritual sense, in his state as a Christian, in spiritual gifts and endowments. And increased with goods; and every day increasing and growing richer. And have need of nothing; and needed nothing to make him happy and blessed. And knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; in the mean time he was as miserable as one could be. These words used, are several words signifying persons under various bodily afflictions, and applied to signify this angel's forlorn spiritual state, which, in the general, was wretched and miserable, and such as had need of mercy, wanting the true righteousness, wherein any could appear before God not naked, and wanting all true riches; and to complete his misery, he was spiritually blind, and knew not the sad circumstances he was under.

r 1s. 5s. 1.
Matt. 13. 44.
& 25. 9.

s 2 Cor. 5. 3.
ch. 7. 13.
& 16. 15.
& 19. 8.

18 I counsel thee 'to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and 'white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

Buying being the usual way amongst men to procure what they want, it is not to be wondered at, that the procuring of that spiritual blessing here mentioned is expressed under this notion; though our buying of God spiritual good things be (as the prophet expresseth it, Isa. lv. 1) without money and without price. It is not to be doubted, but that which is here propounded to be bought (that is, obtained, and procured by such ways and means as God hath directed) is Christ himself, with all his benefits, in whom there is a sufficient spiritual supply for all our spiritual wants; that which to the soul will answer whatever gold serveth the body for; and which to the soul answereth what clothing is to the body, viz. righteousness, wherein a soul may stand before God; and that which will answer what salves are to the body for the cure of its wounds, viz. consolation, and healing of all spiritual wounds and infirmities; in short, whatever thou hast need of, considered either as poor, wretched, and miserable, or as blind and naked.

19 "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

1 Job 5. 17.
Prov. 3. 11.
12. Heb. 12.
5. & 1. Jan. 1.
12.

I rebuke and chasten; ἐλέγγω καὶ παιδεύω the words may be translated, I convince and instruct, or deal with them as children; but it also signifies to chasten, and is so translated, 1 Cor. xi. 32; Heb. xii. 7; we translate it learn, 1 Tim. i. 20. By these words Christ lets this angel know, that although he had in this epistle dealt smartly with him, yet he had done it from a principle of love, as a father to a child, Heb. xii. 7. Be zealous therefore, and repent; he adviseth him therefore to quit himself of his lukewarmness, and to recover a warmth and zeal for God, repenting of his former coldness and negligence in his duty.

20 Behold, "I stand at the door, and knock: "if any man hear my voice, and open the door, 'I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

u Cant. 5. 2.
x Luke 12. 37.
y John 14. 23.

There is a double interpretation of this text, each of them claiming under very valuable interpreters; some making it a declaration of Christ's readiness to come in to souls, and to give them a spiritual fellowship and communion with himself; others interpreting it of Christ's readiness to come to the last judgment, and to take his saints into an eternal joyful fellowship and communion with himself: hence there is a different interpretation of every sentence in the text. I stand at the door; either, in my gospel dispensations, I stand at the door of sinners' hearts; or, I am ready to come to judge the world. And knock, by the inward motions and impressions of my Spirit, or my ministers more externally; or, I am about to knock, that is, I am ready to have the last trump sounded. If any man hear my voice, and open the door; that is, if any man will hearken to the counsels and exhortations of my ministers, and to the motions of my Spirit, and not resist my Holy Spirit; or, if any man hath heard my voice, and opened his heart to me. I will come in to him; I will come in by my Spirit, and all the saving influences of my grace; or, I will come to him as a Judge to acquit him. And will sup with him, and he with me; and I will have a communion with him in this life, he shall eat my flesh, and drink my blood; or, I will have an eternal fellowship and communion with him in my glory. The phrase seems rather to favour the first sense; the so frequent mention before of Christ's coming to judgment, and the reward of another life, as arguments to persuade the angels of the churches to their duty, favours the latter sense.

21 To him that overcometh 'will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

z Mat. 16. 28.
Luke 22. 30.
1 Cor. 6. 2.
2 Tim. 2. 12.
ch. 2. 26, 27.

To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne; I will give him great honour, dignity, and power; he shall judge the world in the day of judgment, 1 Cor. vi. 3, the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. xix. 28; he shall be made partaker of my glory, John xvii. 22, 24. Even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne; but they must come to my throne as I came to it. I overcame the world, sin, death, the devil, and then ascended, and sat down with my Father in his throne: so they that will sit down with me in my throne of glory, must fight the same fight, and overcome, and then be crowned, sitting with me in my throne.

22 "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

a ch. 2. 7.

We have had this in the conclusion of every epistle before: see chap. ii. 7, 11, 17, 29, and in this chapter, ver. 6, 13.

Those who make these churches typical of all Christian churches, from the time John had this Revelation, and prophetic of the complexion of the Christian churches in all ages, say, that the church of Laodicea typifieth the churches towards the end of the world till Christ cometh; but this necessitateth them to think there shall be no such pure and glorious state of the church just before the end of the world, as many believe there shall be, but that the state thereof shall grow yet worse and worse, of a Laodicean temper, so as when Christ cometh he shall hardly find faith on the earth.

For my part, I could allow the seven epistles to be typical and prophetic, but can by no means judge them to be purely prophetic; believing there were such churches when John wrote, and that their complexion is in the first place described in these epistles; though possibly, as face answers face in a glass, so succeeding churches have answered, and shall answer, the face of these churches, even to the last day.

This chapter concludes John's first vision. In the following chapters we have a representation in visions of what was to happen in the world more remarkably, with reference to the church of God, from the year 95, to the end of the world.

There are very different opinions about the epocha, or the time, when the visions began to be fulfilled. My opinion is, it began soon after John had the vision; for it is twice said, chap. i. 1; xxii. 6, that the visions were to be about things that shall come to pass, (not that were come to pass,) and that shortly; but we cannot fix the certain year, which maketh the interpretation difficult.

There are also divers opinions how far in this book the revelations go that concern the state of the church under Rome pagan, and where they begin that foretell the state of the church under antichrist. But of these we shall speak more particularly as we go along with the several chapters.

CHAP. IV

John seeth the throne of God in heaven, 1—3, encompassed with four and twenty elders, 4, 5, and four beasts full of eyes before and behind, 6, 7. The continual adoration and worship offered by the beasts and elders before him that sat on the throne, 8—11.

AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, <sup>a</sup> Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

<sup>a</sup> After this; after I had the first vision, mentioned chap. i., and had written what it was the pleasure of God I should write to the churches, in a book, perceiving the way God designed to reveal himself to me was by vision. I looked; I looked again, hoping and being desirous to see something further as to the mind of God. And, behold, a door was opened; I saw the heavens opened, as Matt. iii. 16; Acts vii. 56. In heaven; i. e., doubtless, meaneth the third heavens. Such a vision, as to this particular, John had at Christ's baptism, Matt. iii., and Stephen when he was stoned. He also heard the voice of one speaking aloud to him, like the voice he heard, chap. i. 10; which said, Come up hither, into heaven, the new Jerusalem which is above; as the old Jerusalem stood upon a hill, or rising ground, so as they who went thither are constantly said to go up, Isa. ii. 3; Acts xi. 2; Gal. i. 17, 18; ii. 1. And I will show thee things which must be hereafter; not which have been, (for to what purpose had that been?) but which shall happen hereafter both to my church and to her enemies: from which it appears, that God did not here show his prophet the destruction of Jerusalem, for that was already past, in the time of Titus Vespasian the Roman emperor, about the year 69, or 70, after the incarnation; this (as all confess) was in Domitian's time, about the 11th or 12th year of his reign, about twenty-six or twenty-seven years after that was past, which makes the notion of two late annotators very strange.

<sup>b</sup> 2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

<sup>a</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>b</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>c</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>d</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>e</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>f</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>g</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>h</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>i</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>j</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>k</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>l</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>m</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>n</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>o</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>p</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>q</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>r</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>s</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>t</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>u</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>v</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>w</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>x</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>y</sup> ch. i. 10.
<sup>z</sup> ch. i. 10.

In the spirit; in an ecstasy, as Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 2, and Peter, Acts x. 10, and Ezekiel, chap. iii. 12, and himself was both before and after this, chap. i. 10; xvii. 3; xxi. 10. A throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne: God is constantly described, in the prophetic visions, as sitting upon a throne, to denote his power and dominion, that he is the King of kings, and Lord of lords. See Dan. vii. 9, &c.

<sup>3</sup> And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

This is all but a description of the glory of God, as he appeared to John in this vision. The jasper stone is famous for its transparency, and variety of colours it offereth to the eye, and may signify the various and infinite perfections of God. The sardine stone is red, and of a bloody colour, which may signify the power, justice, and terror of God. The rainbow was the sign of God's covenant with Noah, signifying his being so far reconciled to the world, as that he would not again destroy it by water, Gen. ix. 13. The emerald is green, and pleasant to the eye. So as this vision of God represents God powerful, just, and good, and of various and infinite perfections.

<sup>4</sup> And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

Some think (and not improbably) that here is an allusion to the twenty-four courses of the priests and Levites, established by God for his service in the sanctuary and temple of old, 1 Chron. xxiv. 18; xxv. 31; and that these twenty-four elders either typified the whole church under the New Testament, the number of the tribes of Israel (which made up the church under the Old Testament) being doubled to show the increase of the church's territories under the gospel, or the heads of the church, either under the Old Testament or New, there being twelve patriarchs and twelve apostles. They are represented sitting, to denote their state of rest and ease; and clothed in white raiment, to denote their purity and holiness, or being clothed with Christ's righteousness; and having crowns of gold on their heads, to denote that state of dignity and glory to which God had advanced them.

<sup>5</sup> And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: these words denote a very glorious and terrible appearance of God, denoting his majesty, and power over his enemies. There is, possibly, an allusion to God's appearance at the giving of the law, Exod. xix. 16; only we read there but of one voice, and that of a trumpet, inarticulate. The lamps of fire before the throne, have a correspondence with the seven lamps of the tabernacle, which gave light to the whole house of God, Exod. xxvii. 20; and are here expounded to be the seven Spirits of God, that is, the Holy Spirit in his seven-fold (that is, manifold) dispensations of grace, 1 Cor. xii. 4, 5, by which he enlighteneth, quickeneth, healeth, and comforteth the several souls that are the true members of his church. See the notes on chap. i. 4.

<sup>6</sup> And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

And before the throne; the throne mentioned before, ver. 2, 3, upon which one sat, &c. A sea of glass like unto crystal; another allusion to the tabernacle or temple, in which was a sea, that is, a large vessel full of water; it was for Aaron and his sons to wash their hands, and feet, and sacrifices in, Exod. xxx. 19; 1 Kings vii. 23; it was ten cubits broad, five cubits high, and thirty cubits about.

<sup>p</sup> ver. 8.

<sup>n</sup> Ex. 38. 8.
<sup>o</sup> ch. 15. 2.
<sup>p</sup> Ezek. 1. 5.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 8. 5.
<sup>l</sup> ch. 15. 2.
<sup>m</sup> Ex. 37. 23.
<sup>n</sup> 2 Chr. 4. 20.
<sup>o</sup> Ezek. 1. 13.
<sup>p</sup> Ezek. 4. 2.
<sup>q</sup> m ch. 1. 4. & 3. 1. & 5. 6.

<sup>r</sup> ch. 3. 4, 5.
<sup>s</sup> & 6. 11. & 7. 9, 12, 14. & 15, 16.
<sup>t</sup> 1 ver. 10.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 11. 15.

Here it is said to have been of glass; this, probably, signified the blood of Christ, in which all those souls and services must be washed which are accepted of and acceptable unto God. Its being represented here as of glass, may signify the purity and spotlessness of him whose blood it was. Other guesses there are many at the significancy of this sea of glass, but this seems to me most probable, because the use of the sea in the temple is made good in Christ. John in this vision also saw four beasts, which beasts are said, 1. To be in the midst of, and round about the throne. 2. To be full of eyes before and behind. 3. They are, ver. 7, said to have resembled a lion, a calf, a man in the face, and a flying eagle; ver. 8, each of them had six wings, and they were full of eyes within, and incessantly glorified God. Quest. Whom did these beasts signify? Solut. There are various notions about them. Some judge them the four evangelists; but John himself was one of these, and yet alive. Some will have them four apostles that were mostly at Jerusalem; but I see no ground for that. Some will have them angels; others, glorified saints; but we shall afterwards find them distinguished from both these. Others will have them the whole church. But the most probable sense is, that they represented the ministers of the church, who are living creatures, whose place is betwixt God and his church, as those beasts are placed betwixt the throne and the elders; and who are but four to the twenty-four elders, being but few in comparison with the multitude of believers; and yet have eyes on all sides, being enough to see to the affairs of the whole church of Christ on the earth. In this sense I rest; only here remains a question, how these are said to be in the midst of the throne, and yet round about the throne? To which various answers are given; that which pleaseth me best is, ἐν μέσση, in the middle, is not to be strained to signify a place at equal distance from two extremes, but more largely and proverbially for near the throne, or near him who sat upon the throne. See the several notions about this phrase in Mr. Pool's Latin Synopsis.

7 <sup>q Num. 2, 2, &c. Ezek. 1. 10. & 10. 14.</sup> And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

It is observed concerning these four living creatures, (for so they were, not beasts in a strict sense, as it is opposed to flying things, for the fourth was a fowl,) 1. That they were the same mentioned in Ezekiel's vision, Ezek. i. 10; only each one there is said to have had the four faces of these creatures, here each one had a single face proper to it. 2. That these were the four creatures whose portraits were in the four ensigns of the Israelites as they were marshalled into four companies, allotting the men of three tribes to each company. Judah's standard had a lion in its colours, according to Jacob's prophecy of that tribe, Gen. xlix. 9, Ephraim had an ox, Reuben had a man, Dan an eagle. This the learned Mede proves from the Rabbins, who, though fabulous enough, yet in such a thing may be credited. It is also thought they answered the four cherubims in the temple. Quest. But what is signified by these four living creatures? Solut. Some say the four evangelists; others, four apostles, &c. But certainly they judge best who say, that by them is signified the various gifts with which God blesseth his ministers, giving to some more courage and fortitude, that they are like lions; to others more mildness and meekness, that they are like oxen or calves; to others have more wisdom and prudence, which most adorn a man; to others a more piercing insight into the mysteries of God's kingdom, rendering them like eagles.

8 And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him: the seraphims in Isaiah's vision, chap. vi. 2, had so; there their use is declared,—with twain he covered his face, with twain his feet, and with twain he did fly. If we understand all the wings here for flight, they signify the readiness of God's ministers to move every way that God will send them: if we understand them as interpreted by Isa. vi. 2, they signify their various graces, their fear, dread, and reverence of God; their humility and modesty; their agility, or readiness to obey all the commands of God. And they were full of eyes within: this denotes that large measure of knowledge, and diligence, and watchfulness, which should be in a minister of Christ. And they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty: this was the song of the seraphims, Isa. vi. 3, and shows how much it should be the care of ministers to make God known in all his attributes, his holiness especially, and his power. Which was, and is, and is to come; and his eternity and simplicity, as he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, without variableness or shadow of change.

9 And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever,

And when those beasts, the living creatures before expressed, signifying the ministers of the gospel, give glory, &c.; when they praise God who is eternal.

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

The whole church also paid an homage of reverence and adoration to the same God; acknowledging all the good done to them, or wrought in them, to proceed from God, and the glory of it to be due unto God alone. The ministers of the gospel are, by their preaching unto people their duty, an occasion, or instruments, of that homage and adoration which he hath from all his people.

11 Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

All the praises, homages, and acknowledgments of all the creatures is thy due; as thou art he who gavest the first being to all creatures, and therefore gavest it them, that they might praise, honour, serve, and obey thee.

CHAP. V

The book sealed with seven seals, which no man is worthy to open, 1—3. John weeping thereat is comforted, 4, 5. The Lamb that was slain taketh the book to open it, 6, 7. The beasts and the elders praise him that had redeemed them with his blood, 8—10. The angels join with them in ascribing glory to God and to the Lamb, 11—14.

The same vision yet proceedeth. Hitherto John had only seen a throne, with a person sitting upon it in a very glorious habit and appearance, twenty-four grave persons, and four living creatures, in the shape of a lion, a calf, a man, and an eagle, each of them with six wings, and full of eyes, about the throne; and heard the twenty-four living creatures constantly giving glory to God, and the twenty-four elders harmonizing with them, and joining likewise in the high praises of God. Now the vision proceedeth.

AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

The disputes what this book was are very idle; for it was certainly the book of which we read hereafter, that it was opened, and to which the seven seals mentioned in the following chapters were annexed, of the opening of all which we read; and this could be no other than codex fatidicus, (as Mr. Mede calls it,) the book of the counsels, decrees, and purposes of God relating to his church, as to what more remarkable things should happen to it to the end of the world; which book was in the hand of the Father. Written within, and on the back-side; very full of matter, so as it was written on all sides. Sealed with seven seals;

y ch. 1. 18 & 5. 14, & 15. 7.

z ch. 5. 8, 14

a ver. 9

b ver. 4

c ch. 5. 12

d Gen. 1. 1, Acts 17. 24, Eph. 3. 9, Col. 1. 16, ch. 10. 6.

e Ezek. 2. 9, 10, b Is. 29. 11, Dan. 12. 4.

r Is. 6. 2, a ver. 6, + Gr. They have no rest. t Is. 6. 3, u ch. 1. 8, x ch. 1. 4 hitherto concealed from the world, and to be revealed by parts, as to the bringing to pass of those things decreed in it; though all at once by God here revealed, in a degree, by visions unto John.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

There were no weak angels, but possibly this angel might, in appearance to John, look as if he were stronger than others; or rather, so judged from the great and loud voice he used. Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? not that he thought any was able, or worthy. We can only conclude from hence the impotency of men to search, and find out, and expound the deep things of God, and consequently the unlawfulness of too narrow a prying into his secret mysteries.

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

None of the angels in heaven, nor any man upon the earth, nor any of them whose bodies are under the earth and their souls in heaven, nor any infernal spirits; none was found sufficient to open the book, and to look on it. There was none who replied to the angel's question, ver. 2.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

As it is the nature of man to desire to know secret and hidden things, especially such as we apprehend of concernment to ourselves, or those whom we love, or are interested in; and to be troubled, if we know they may be known, and are at a loss for due means whereby to come to the knowledge of them.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

We must remember that John is here describing a vision, and that part of it which is but introductive to the material parts of it. He had in his vision seen a book in the right hand of God the Father, sitting upon his throne of glory; he had heard an angel proclaiming, If any were worthy, he should open the book, and loose the seals. None appeared to answer that voice; he was troubled; he thought he heard one saying to him, Be not troubled, the book shall be opened. Christ shall open the book, and loose the seals of it, who is here expressed under a double character: 1. The Lion of the tribe of Judah; he is so called, undoubtedly, with allusion to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 9, 10, wherein Judah was compared to a lion's whelp, because he should be victorious. Christ was to be born of this tribe, and was to be a great Conqueror. 2. He is called the Root of David; he was a Branch of David, as he was man, but the Root of David, as he was God; therefore David, Psal. cx. 1, called him Lord, though he was his Son. Hath prevailed with his Father to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof; for leave to open the book, and loose the seals thereof, i. e. to reveal those things that are the counsels and purposes of God relating to his church, and the affairs thereof, to the world's end. I do not think we are at all concerned to inquire who is here meant by one of the twenty-four elders. As in parables there are some things put in merely to complete the feigned history, so in the relation of visions some things of that nature are put in, which need not a particular explication. The sum is, That while John was troubled for fear he should not know what was in the book, he was told by one of those who attended the throne, that he need not be troubled, for Christ had obtained a liberty from his Father (in whose power only times and seasons for future things were) to reveal these counsels of God as to things to come.

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns

g. in. 53. 7. John 1. 29. 36. 1 Pet. 1. 19. ch. 13. 8. ver. 9, 12.

and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

h Zech. 3. 2. i ch. 4. 5.

And I beheld; hearing the mention of a Lion of the tribe of Judah, he looks about wistly to see if he could see any justifying that representation. And, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb: instead of a Lion he seeth a Lamb; Christ Jesus, called a Lamb by this apostle, John i. 29, 36, and very often in this book; a Lamb, for whiteness and innocency, 1 Pet. i. 19, for meekness and patience, Acts viii. 32, but here with reference to the paschal lamb. As it had been slain; for he appears wounded and pierced, as if he had been slain; and to show that he was equal with the Father, he appears in the midst of the throne; and in the midst of the elders, and of the four living creatures, to show his presence with his church and ministers, Matt. xxviii. 28, and his walking (as was said, chap. ii.) in the midst of his churches, which were the golden candlesticks there mentioned. Having seven horns; he appeareth now with seven horns, which are members in which the beasts' strength, power, and beauty is much seen, to denote his glory and beauty, and the power he had now received to offend and conquer all his enemies. And seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God; and with seven eyes, which were the seven Spirits of God, mentioned chap. i. 4; iv. 5; endued with the Spirit of God, (which is also called his Spirit,) not given to him by measure. Sent forth into all the earth; which spiritual gifts and perfections he exerciseth over all the earth, both with relation to his church, and to his church's enemies.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

k ch. 4. 2.

This Lamb with seven horns and seven eyes, having been slain, and having prevailed with his Father to open this book, mentioned ver. 1, of all the secrets, counsels, and purposes of God relating to his church, he came and took it of his Father, in whose right hand it was, as ver. 1.

From hence to the end of this chapter, are nothing but songs sang by the living creatures which John saw, and the twenty-four elders which he saw, and an innumerable company of angels, to the honour and glory of Jesus Christ, as the Redeemer of man, and the Head of the church, upon this taking of the book from the right hand of his Father.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints.

l ch. 4. 8, 10.

m ch. 14. 2. n Ps. 151. 2. o Ps. 141. 2. ch. 8. 3, 4.

When the Lamb that had been slain had obtained of him that sat on the throne to open the book of God's secret counsels relating to his church, mentioned ver. 1, and had taken it out of his right hand, John saw the four beasts, the four living creatures, mentioned chap. iv. 6-8, by which seemed to be represented the ministers of the gospel, or the whole church of Christ; and the four and twenty elders, that had on their heads crowns of gold, mentioned chap. iv. 4, by which, we said, were represented either the ministers of the church, or the whole church. Fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours: he alludeth to the worship of God under the Old Testament, where in the temple they were wont to praise God with instruments of music, and offering up of frankincense: see 1 Chron. xiii. 8; xv. 16; 2 Chron. v. 12; Neh. xii. 27; Psal. xxxiii. 2; cxli. 2; cl. 3. These vials of odours, he tells us, signified the prayers of the saints. The whole verse signifies the prayers and praises, even all that adoration which God, under the gospel, should have from his ministers and people, for constituting his Son the Head of his church, and making him their Prophet, Priest, and King.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast p Ps. 40. 3. q ch. 14. 3. r ch. 4. 11.

q ver. 6.

<sup>r</sup> Acts 20. 28. slain, and <sup>r</sup> hast redeemed us to God by thy blood <sup>a</sup> out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

And they sung a new song: by a new song is either to be understood an excellent song, (for new songs are usually most valued,) or (which pleaseth me best) new as to the matter of it; for the servants of God under the Old Testament could not bless God for the actual redemption of man by the blood of Christ, but only rejoice in hope, embracing the promises seen afar off by the eye of faith. Saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; they acknowledge Christ worthy to be intrusted with his church, and the revelations of the counsels of God, with relation to it, to open them. For thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us, &c.; because he had redeemed his church, scattered over all the world, from sin, death, and hell, unto God, to serve him, and to live for ever with him, and that with no less price than his own blood; Wherefore (as the apostle tells us, Phil. ii. 9) God hath exalted him.

10 <sup>t</sup> And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

The four living creatures and four and twenty elders (by which are represented the ministers and members of the church of Christ) go on in showing why they had reason to proclaim Christ worthy to be the Prophet to his church, to open the counsels of God to them, viz. because of the great love he had showed to them, not only in redeeming them with his blood from the guilt and power of sin, but in making them kings and priests; giving them the same privileges that the Jewish church had, who were called a royal priesthood, Exod. xix. 6; giving them a power (as priests) to offer up (not such bloody fleshly sacrifices as they offered, but) spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through the Beloved, 1 Pet. ii. 5: and also (as kings) to rule over their lusts and sensitive appetite; and to reign hereafter on the earth, judging the world (1 Cor. vi. 3) at the great day, with the great Judge of the quick and the dead.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels <sup>u</sup> round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was <sup>x</sup> ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

And I beheld, I still attended diligently, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders; and I heard many angels, with the living creatures and the elders; (from whence we gather, that we must not, by the living creatures, or elders, understand angels, for they are mentioned apart by themselves, neither could they say, as ver. 9, 10, that Christ had redeemed them with his blood;) these angels joined in this harmony with the church to give glory to Christ. And the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; their number was infinite, not to be numbered. See the like, Dan. vii. 10.

12 Saying with a loud voice, <sup>y</sup> Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain; the Lamb mentioned ver. 6, with seven horns and seven eyes, viz. Jesus Christ. To receive power, and riches; he is worthy of those horns he weareth, emblems of power and strength given unto him; for all power was given him in heaven and earth. And wisdom; and of those seven eyes he hath, i. e. of the spirit of wisdom, Isa. xi. 2, the riches of grace and wisdom. And strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing; and of all the homage, glory, praise, blessing, and obedience, which people can give him. I know not whether there be any thing in the observation made by some, that the number of things here mentioned, of which the Lamb is worthy, answereth the number of the seven Spirits of God, before mentioned.

13 And <sup>z</sup> every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, <sup>a</sup> Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, <sup>b</sup> be unto him <sup>b</sup> that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 <sup>c</sup> And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him <sup>d</sup> that liveth for ever and ever.

The meaning of the several phrases here used, is not to be strictly and particularly examined; the sense of them all in general is, to show the consent of all the angels and glorified saints, and of the whole church, in giving praise unto God, and particularly to the Lord Jesus Christ, (the Lamb,) for the work of man's redemption; and their particular consent, that Christ is to be worshipped as the Father; and the consent and acquiescence of the whole creation in the counsel and purpose of God, and in the work of his providence, constituting Christ as the King, Priest, and Prophet of his church. And though inanimate creatures, or sensitive creatures, cannot speak, yet they are also said to join in these praises, as the glory of God shineth in them, and they, by him, shall be freed from that vanity under which they groan, Rom. viii. 19—21, and enjoy something of the liberty of the sons of God; and shall all be subject and obedient unto Christ in their respective stations and orders, Phil. ii. 9, 10, and fulfil his will in the execution of his counsels and purposes in the government of the world, in order to the preservation of his church.

CHAP. VI

The opening of six of the seals in order, and what followed thereupon.

We are now come to the prophetic, and therefore the most difficult, part of this mysterious book; as to which I judge it reasonable, before we come to open the mysterious text, (after Mr. Pool's method in his Latin Synopsis,) to premise some things which may instruct the reader of these notes, both of the things wherein the difficulties lie, and of the fairest way to find out the sense of them. Hitherto we have met with no great difficulties; what have been, have been chiefly, 1. Concerning the seven Spirits of God. 2. Concerning the seven churches, and epistles to them; whether the churches be to be considered typically, and what was written to them be to be understood in a prophetic, as well as a didactic, or a corrective sense? But in what follows we shall find great (if not some inextricable) difficulties. To prepare a way for the explication of which,

I. I shall first take it for granted, that from this chapter to the end of the book, is revealed the most remarkable things which have happened, or shall happen, to the church of God over all the earth, from the time of this Revelation first made to John, to the end of the world.

II. Hence it followeth, that many of the things prophesied are fulfilled; but how many is hard to determine, because the time is not set when these revelations should take place; whether (as some would have it) from the beginning of Christianity, which, to me, seemeth not probable; because at this time ninety-five years were elapsed since that time, and this prophecy was concerning the things that were to be after the time of John's being in Patmos, chap. i. 1; xxii. 6; or from the beginning of the time when the Jewish church and state ceased, which was twenty-six or twenty-seven years before this; or from the time when this Revelation was, which was Anno 95, or thereabouts, in the time when Domitian was the Roman emperor, and had began his persecution of the Christians, which (as historians tell us) was but five years before he was slain, for he was slain in September, 97. And for those that are fulfilled, the things spoken are so applicable

<sup>z</sup> Phil. 2. 10. ver. 3.
<sup>a</sup> 1 Chr. 29. 11. Rom. 9. 5. & 16. 27.
<sup>b</sup> 1 Tim. 4. 16. 1 Pet. 4. 11. & 5. 11. ch. 1. 6. b ch. 6. 16. & 7. 10. c ch. 19. 4.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 4. 9, 10.

<sup>t</sup> Ex. 19. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. ch. 1. 6. & 20. 6. & 22. 5.

<sup>u</sup> ch. 4. 6.
<sup>x</sup> Pa. 66. 17. Dan. 7. 10. Heb. 12. 22.

<sup>y</sup> ch. 4. 11.

to various accidents happening in that period of time, that it is very difficult oftentimes to assert the sense of the prophecy.

III. I take it for granted also, that things happened in the same order as is here described; so as the things under the second seal came not to pass till those prophesied of under the first seal were, in a great measure, accomplished, &c.

IV. I agree with those who think, that what we have, chap. xii., xiii., xvii., xviii., are but a prophecy of other things that happened to the church at the same times spoken of, chap. vi.—x.

V. I do believe the visions of the seals, trumpets, and vials, chap. vi., viii., xv., xvi., the principal prophecies, and contain the revelation of things in order as they were to happen; and of these, that of the seals is the principal.

VI. I agree with those who think, that God, by the first six seals, intends the whole space from the time when the things written in this book began to be fulfilled, unto the time when paganism was rooted out of the Roman empire, which some make the year 310, some, 325. In which time (counting the beginning from the time when John was in Patmos, which was in Domitian's time) the emperors of Rome were Nerva, Trajan, Adrianus, Antoninus Pius, Antoninus Philosophus, Antoninus Verus, Commodus, Severus, Caracalla, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander Severus, Maximinus, Gordianus, Philipppus, Decius, Valerianus, Gallienus, Claudius, Aurelianus, Tacitus, Probus, Carus, Numerianus, Dioclesianus with Maximinianus, Constantius Chlorus with Galerius, Constantius with Galerius, Constantinus; in all, twenty-seven, in about two hundred years: they were all persecutors, and God allowed them short reigns. So as what we have revealed in and under the first six seals, happened within the short space of the three hundred or three hundred and twenty-five first years after Christ; I am apt to think, after ninety-eight or one hundred of them were elapsed. These things being premised, let us now come to consider the text.

AND <sup>a</sup> I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, <sup>b</sup> one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

John's vision continueth still: by the Lamb he means Christ, the Lamb oft mentioned chap. v.; and by one of the seals, one of the seven seals mentioned chap. v. 1, that were set upon the book which John saw in the right hand of God the Father, given to Christ, ver. 7. Christ began to discover the counsels of God relating to that first period of his church. And John heard one of the four living creatures speaking to him with a great and terrible voice, like the noise of thunder. Inviting him to come near, or to attend and see.

2 And I saw, and behold <sup>c</sup> a white horse: <sup>d</sup> and he that sat on him had a bow; <sup>e</sup> and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

Some, by this white horse, understand the gospel; others, the Roman empire. And by him that sat thereon with a bow, some understand Christ going forth with power to convert the nations; others (and in my opinion more probably) the Roman emperors, armed with power, and having the imperial crown, carrying all before them. So as that which God intended by this to reveal to St. John, was, that the Roman emperors should yet continue, and use their power against his church. Those that understand by the white horse, the gospel, or God's dispensations to his church under the first period, and by the rider, Christ, (amongst whom is our famous Mede,) think, that hereby all the time is signified from Christ's ascension, which was in the thirty-fourth year after his incarnation, till the time that all the apostles were dead, that is, the first hundred years after Christ (for so long histories tell us John lived). It was the age then current, and so may take up part of the vision of things that were to come. The history of all but forty of those years we have in the Acts, till Paul was carried prisoner to Rome. In this period ruled Augustus Cæsar, (in whose time Christ was born, Luke ii. 1,) Tiberius, Claudius, and Nero, Galba, Otho, F. Vespasianus, Titus, and Domitian, Nerva, and Trajan, ten or eleven in all. They went on conquering, and to conquer the world. But till Nero's time, about the year 66, they did not begin to persecute the Christians; nor did Vespasian and Titus much rage, nor Domitian, till he had reigned eight years: so as I leave it indifferent to the reader, whether to understand by the white horse and his rider, God's dispensations of providence to his church these first years, causing his gospel to prevail much, and conquering many to the profession of it, or the Roman empire, with those that ruled it: what is said is true of both.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, <sup>f</sup> I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

The second seal; the second of those seven seals with which the book, mentioned chap. v. 1, was sealed. The second beast; the beast like a calf, chap. iv. 7. Come and see; inviting John to attend.

4 <sup>g</sup> And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

And there went out another horse that was red; signifying blood and slaughter. And power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth; either to Christ, (as some say,) or to those that ruled the affairs of the Roman empire at that time, to disturb the peace of the church. And that they should kill one another: this was a time of much blood. And there was given unto him a great sword; and therefore a sword is given to him that rode upon the this horse. Some think that this period began with Nero, thirty-four years before the other ended (according to what was said before); others make it to begin with Trajan, and to comprehend eighty years, until the time of Commodus; in which time Trajan, and Hadrian, and the three Antoninuses successively ruled the Roman empire: the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian took up near half the time, in which time this prophecy was most eminently fulfilled; for in Trajan's time the Jews rebelling, and killing many subjects of the Roman empire, to the number of twenty-two thousand in one place, and two hundred and forty thousand in another place, themselves were as miserably handled by the Roman forces sent by Trajan and Hadrian, who slew of them (as histories tell us) five hundred and fourscore thousand: nay, the Jews themselves say, they lost double the number of those who came out of Egypt, and more than they lost by Nebuchadnezzar, or by Titus when their city was taken: on the other side the Romans lost very many. Many Christians also were put to death during this period, during which was the third and fourth persecution.

5 And when he had opened the third seal, <sup>h</sup> I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo <sup>i</sup> a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

The third beast was he who had the face of a man, who also inviteth John to come and see what came forth upon his opening the third seal. He seeth a black horse, and a rider upon him, with a pair of balances. There is a difference amongst interpreters what should be signified by this black horse; some by it understand famine, because a scarcity of victuals bringeth men to a black and swarthy colour; some understand by it justice, because the rider is said to have a pair of balances in his hand; others understand by it heresies, and great sufferings of the church by heretics and others. He that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand; either to give men their bread by weight, (as is usual in times of great scarcity,) or to measure out every one their due.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, <sup>j</sup> A measure of wheat for a penny, and <sup>k</sup> three measures of barley for a penny; and <sup>l</sup> see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

<sup>j</sup> The word chuz signifieth a measure containing one wine quart, and the twelfth part of a quart. <sup>k</sup> ch. 9. 4.

A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny: interpreters are at so great a loss here to fix the sense, that some think this phrase signifies famine and scarcity; others think it signifies great plenty. The Greek word here used, signifieth, say some, half a bushel; others say it signifieth so much bread corn as is sufficient for four loaves; others say, something more than a quart; others, so much as was allowed servants for maintenance for a day: let it be which it will, it signifies no great scarcity; for the word signifying a penny, signified but as much in our money as came to seven pence halfpenny. I think therefore Mr. Mede judgeth well, that by the black horse was signified not a time of famine and scarcity, but of plenty; and the rather, because it is added, hurt not the oil and the wine: and that the balances in the rider's hands signified not scales to give men their bread by weight, (as in a time of scarcity,) but the balance of justice; nor will the colour of the horse conclude the contrary. The whole therefore of this prophecy seemeth to foretell that this period, from the time of Commodus the Roman emperor, who ruled the empire from the year 180 to 197, and was followed by Severus, Macrinus, Caracalla, Heliogabalus, and Alexander Severus, the son of Mameas, who came to the empire Anno 222, and reigned to 237, should be a time of great plenty and civil justice. Histories tell us of no famine in that time, but large stories of the great care of two of those emperors especially, for supplying their countries with corn, and for the administering of civil justice. The things foretold by the opening of this seal, our famous Mede makes to have had their accomplishment with the determination of the reign of Alexander Severus.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

The beast mentioned chap. iv. 7, that had the face of a flying eagle, inviteth John to attend to the opening of the fourth seal, that is, the revelation of the counsels of God, as to what should happen to the church (within the Roman empire) in the fourth period, which is conceived to have begun with Maximinus, about the year 237, and to have ended with the reign of Dioclesian, 294.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

A pale horse; a horse of the colour of his rider, Death, which makes men look pale, and bringeth them into the state of the dead. (here translated hell.) whether heaven or hell, as they have lived. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth; over a great part of the earth. To kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth; to kill men all manner of ways, with the sword, famine, pestilence, and by throwing them to wild beasts. Interpreters judge that here was prophesied what should happen to the Roman empire, and the church within it, from the time when Maximinus was made emperor, which was about the year 237, to the time of Aurelianus, which was about 271. Some extend it to Dioclesian's time, which ended about 294; but Mr. Mede rather reserveth that for the fifth seal. If the former time only be taken in, there was within it the seventh, eighth, and ninth persecutions; Dioclesian began the tenth and greatest of all. Within this time this prophecy was eminently fulfilled: Maximinus destroyed all the towns in Germany, for three or four hundred miles. There was a plague lasted fifteen years together in the time of Gallus, who had the empire Anno 255. Three hundred and twenty thousand Galls were slain by Flavius Claudius. Maximinus and Gallienus were both great butchers, both to their own subjects that were heathens, and to Christians. Gallienus is said to have killed three or four thousand every day. Such wars and devastations could not be followed with famine; besides that we are confirmed in it, both by the testimony of Eusebius and Cyprian, the latter of whom lived within this period.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:

And when he had opened the fifth seal: this and the next seal's opening, is not preface with any living creature calling to John to come and see. We must consider, 1. The number of the beasts was but four, who all had had their courses. 2. Some have thought that it is, because here is no mention of any new persecution, but a consequent of the former. 3. But this vision was so plain, it needed no expositor. I saw under the altar; still he speaks in the dialect of the Old Testament, where in the temple was the altar of burnt-offering and the altar of incense; the allusion here is judged to be to the latter. The souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; from whence we may not conclude, that the souls of men and women when they die do sleep, as some dreamers have thought. These are said to be the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, &c., for preaching the word, and their profession of the gospel, bearing a testimony to Christ and his truths. Mr. Mede thinks that under this seal is comprehended the ten bloody years of Dioclesian's persecution, which of all others was most severe; paganism at that time (as dying things are wont) most struggling to keep itself alive. This tyrant is said, in the beginning of his reign, within thirty days to have slain seventeen thousand, and in Egypt alone, during his ten years, one hundred and forty-four thousand. He thinks that the souls of those which this wretch had slain throughout all his dominions, within his short period of ten years, were those principally which were showed John upon the opening of this seal.

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

And they cried with a loud voice; their blood cried, or their souls cried to God, saying, How long, O Lord, holy; and therefore thou canst not abide iniquity, and of all iniquity canst least abide innocent blood, which is the blood of thy saints, whose blood is precious in thy sight. And true; and who art true to thy word of threatenings against bloodthirsty men, and to thy promises for the deliverance of thy people. Dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? dost thou not judge our cause, and avenge us, who have committed vengeance to thee, not daring to avenge ourselves upon wicked men, who dwelling upon the earth are seen, and their practices known to and by thee, and are under thy power, so as thou canst at pleasure do it.

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

And white robes were given unto every one of them; white robes of glory; for the white robes of Christ's righteousness, and of a holy life, were by them put on before they were slain. That they should rest yet for a little season; that they should be satisfied, and acquiesce in God's dispensations. Until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were; for God had yet more faithful witnesses to be martyred, (though not in such flocks as before,) who should die for the same faith and profession. Should be fulfilled; when the number of those his martyrs should be completed, he would avenge their blood upon their enemies.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

q ch. 8. 2. &
9. 13. & 14.
18.
r ch. 20. 4.
s ch. 1. 2.
t 2 Tim. 1. 8.
ch. 12. 17. &
19. 10.

u See Zech.
1. 12.
x ch. 3. 7.
y ch. 11. 18.
& 19. 2.

s ch. 3. 4. s.
& 7. 9. 14.

a Heb. 11.
40. ch. 14.
13.

b ch. 16. 18.

c Joel 2. 10.
31. & 3. 15.
Matt. 24. 29.
Acts 2. 20.

f Or, to him.

n Ezek. 14.

o 2 Eed. 18. 5.

p Lev. 26. 22.

And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal; the sixth of those seals with which the book was sealed, mentioned chap. v. 1: this signifieth the revelation of some things which should happen in some certain period of time, but what period is the question, as to which interpreters differ. Some think, the time when Jerusalem was taken; but this was a time past twenty-six or twenty-seven years before John was in Patmos, where he had this vision about things that shall be, chap. i. 1; xxii. 6. Some think, that period of time which shall be immediately before the day of judgment; but that guess seemeth worse, for after this there was a seventh seal to be opened. Some think, the period of the church's conflict with antichrist. But Mr. Mede's judgment (followed by many other famous men) seems best, that it denotes that period when Constantine, the first Christian emperor, restored peace to the church, by overturning the whole pagan state, and making Christianity the religion of the greatest part of the world. This was about the year 311, and perfected upon his victory over Licinius, 325. In this I acquiesce. Let us now see how what is said in this and the following verses about this period will agree to that time. And, lo, there was a great earthquake: the great question is here, what is meant by this great earthquake, the darkening of the sun, the moon becoming as blood, &c. No history recording any such prodigies, hath made many (taking these things in the natural, literal sense) to say the period under the first seal signifies either the time when Jerusalem was taken, or the day of judgment; but there is a metaphorical sense of these expressions, very usual in the prophetic writings, to show great changes in states; and in this sense it is to be taken here. Thus the prophet describeth the great change God would make in Jerusalem, Isa. xxix. 6, Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire: and Jer. xv. 9, Her sun is gone down while it was yet day. And, Ezek. xxxii. 7, the change God would work in the ruin of Egypt, is thus expressed: When I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee. So Joel ii. 10, 31, and chap. iii. 15. What is an earthquake, but the shaking of the earth? And under this notion God expresseth the changes he makes in states and kingdoms, Isa. ii. 19, 21; xxiv. 18; Hag. ii. 6, 7. Thus by earthquake here is to be understood a great change in the Roman empire. And the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood: the sun signifies those that are in the highest power; the moon, those that are next to them in place and dignity.

13<sup>d</sup> And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her || untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

This is but another phrase signifying a great change: the whole verse is much the same with Isa. xxxiv. 4. Literally these things were never yet fulfilled. It is a phrase signifying the fall of great and mighty men.

14<sup>a</sup> And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

Two expressions more signifying the same thing. The first is used by the prophet, to signify the change God would make in the state of the Edomites, Isa. xxxiv. 4, as will appear by comparing what that prophet saith, with what Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Obadiah say, upon the same argument, Jer. xlix. 7—22; Ezek. xxxv. And every mountain and island were moved out of their places; all sorts of people shall be destroyed, or all the paganish religion shall be rooted out.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

A terror shall fall upon all sorts of men, high and low; and, like men affrighted, they shall seek for themselves hiding-places, where they can think themselves most secure: see Isa. ii. 19.

16<sup>b</sup> And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us: see Hos. x. 8; Luke xxiii. 30. They shall be in a great consternation, and be ready to take any course for security. From the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; from the wrath of God, and of Jesus Christ.

17<sup>i</sup> For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

For this judgment that is upon us, is the effect of his wrath for our abusing and persecuting his members; and we, with all our courage, might, and power, are not able to abide his wrath. These words import, that in this great change, as the greatest persons should be at a loss what to do, so they should perish under a conviction that the great vengeance of God was come upon them for their opposing the gospel, and provoking Christ by persecuting of his members.

There are other more particular explications of the sun, moon, stars, heavens, &c., but they all centre in this general, that here is prophesied a great and universal change of the religion of the world, which should strike a great terror into the pagan rulers, and issue in the overturning of all their altars and temples, and the ruin of the great men, relating either to their civil or ecclesiastical state; and that they at last should know that God was God, and that these judgments came upon them for their opposition to Christ. And (which addeth strength to this interpretation) Mr. Durham hath observed, that no so short period of time hath produced so many remarkable judgments, and extorted so many ingenuous confessions from enemies, that what came upon them was for their persecutions; and a catalogue of which may be found in Mr. Mede, and in Mr. Durham. Mr. Mede reckoneth Galerius, Maximinus, and Licinius. Galerius was eaten up of worms, being before he died sensible of his guilt, ceasing from his persecution, and begging the Christians' prayers. Maximinus, another Roman emperor, (or partner in the empire with the former,) being beaten by Licinius, fled to Tarsus, and there fell upon his pagan priests, who had deceived him by their lying oracles, and made a decree for the Christians' liberty; but God would not suffer so bloody a wretch to die after the ordinary death of man; he died miserably through intolerable pain, his eyes dropping out of his head. Licinius was a Christian, and joined a while with Constantine, but apostatized, was overcome in two battles, taken, and by him put to death. All these three were within the space of eighteen years. Mr. Durham to these adds the instances of Dioclesian and Maximilian, little above twenty years before, in the heat of their persecution making a stop, and through a horror of conscience laying down their imperial dignity; and Maxentius, drowned in the river Tiber; and he says Licinius, before mentioned, before he died, revenged himself upon his idolatrous priests that had persuaded him to forsake Constantine's God. The change was so great in the empire, upon Constantine the Great's coming to the throne, by the death of some great persons, turning others out of place, destroying the whole frame and practice of the pagans' religion, that it might well be expressed by earthquakes, the sun turning black, the moon as blood, the stars falling from heaven to earth, the heavens departing like a scroll, and the removal of islands and mountains, and by the consternation it would bring all the pagan great men into, &c. And this time, which was a period of about twenty-five or twenty-seven years, is thought to be understood to be the time predicted upon the opening of the sixth seal. Thus we see the dragon's reign at an end in about three hundred and eleven or three hundred and twenty-five years after Christ; the empire, as pagan, persecuting the church of Christ, and following it with ten successive persecutions, quite overturned, and a Christian emperor, Con-

h Hos. 10. 8.
Luke 23. 30.
ch. 9. 6.

i Is. 13. 6.
&c. Zeph.
1. 14, &c.
ch. 16. 14.
k Ps. 78. 7.

d ch. 8. 10.
& 9. 1.

l Or,
green figs.

e Ps. 102.
26. Is. 34. 4.
Heb. 1. 12.
13.
f Jer. 3. 23.
& 4. 24.
ch. 16. 20.

g Is. 2. 19.

stantine the Great, ruling it. But we must understand these great things were not perfected in a few months; some relics of paganism remained; for though Constantine shut up the pagan temples, yet all the idols in them were not destroyed until the time of Theodosius, who began to rule in the empire Anno 379, and reigned sixteen years. Betwixt Constantine and him were Constantius and Constans, Julian the Apostate, and Jovianus, Valentinianus, Valens, and Gratian; during some of whose reigns (Julian's especially) the Christians suffered much both from pagans and Arians, so that the Christians had not a full and perfect quiet till after the year 390.

CHAP. VII

John seeth four angels holding the four winds, 1; and another angel coming to seal the servants of God in their foreheads, 2, 3. The number of them that were sealed out of each of the tribes of Israel, 4—8. An innumerable multitude out of all other nations stand before the throne in white robes, with palms in their hands, praising God and the Lamb, 9, 10. The angels, elders, and beasts, worship and glorify God, 11, 12. One of the elders sheweth John who they are that are clad in white robes, and what is their blessedness for ever, 13—17.

AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, <sup>a</sup> Dan. 7. 2. <sup>b</sup> holding the four winds of the earth, <sup>c</sup> ch. 9. 4. <sup>d</sup> that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

The first sufferings of the church under the Roman emperors that were pagans, was foretold under the first six seals, as hath been showed; but they had yet more, if not greater, things to suffer, which are discovered to John, as we shall see when we come to the opening of the seventh and last seal in the next chapter; only it pleaseth God by a vision, in this chapter, to comfort his church: so as though this vision relateth to the sixth seal, and was before the opening of the seventh, yet it hath a relation to that, to show the care that God would take of his church under those great evils that should happen upon the opening of the seventh seal, or when the things foretold upon the opening of it should come to be accomplished. I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth; four good angels; God is called their God, ver. 3. Holding the four winds of the earth; that is, to whom God had given it in charge that they should inflict his judgments upon all the parts of the earth; for God often useth, by his prophets, the metaphor of winds, to express stormy, troublesome dispensations, as Jer. xviii. 17; xlix. 36; li. 1. That the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree: this phrase is interpreted variously, God making use of the winds, 1. In a way of judgment, to throw down buildings and trees. 2. In a way of mercy, to purify the air, and by their gentle breathings to cherish things. Some interpret this command to the angels, into a command to these angels to forbear awhile those storms of judgment which were coming, till the servants of God should be sealed. Others interpret them into a command to bring judgments, either corporal or spiritual, which they think is signified by the winds not blowing. The last seemeth to be favoured by the next verse, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea; which seemeth to me to interpret the blowing mentioned in this verse of a hurtful blowing. The earth, the sea, and the trees, seem to signify all the sublimary world, especially the church.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, By this other angel, some understand an angel by nature; some, a man, Elijah, or Constantine; others, Christ himself, called an Angel, Exod. xxiii. 20. It is not much material whether we by this angel understand Christ, or some angel which he made his instrument. He gives a command to those four angels, whom God had made the ministers or executioners of his wrath and justice in the world.

3 Saying, 'Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 4. 4. <sup>f</sup> 9. 4. <sup>g</sup> Ezek. 9. 4. <sup>h</sup> ch. 14. 1. <sup>i</sup> ch. 22. 4.

A manifest allusion to Ezek. ix. 4, and, as some think, to the usage of some eastern countries, for masters to set their names upon the forehead of their slaves, by which they were known to be theirs, as we mark our sheep or other beasts. Men as vainly dispute what this seal should be, as what the  $\tau$  meant in Ezek. ix., the mark set upon those that mourned for the abominations of Jerusalem. The place where they were to be sealed signified the end of their sealing to be not so much for confirmation, for which seals are used, as notification, to signify to others they belong to God; so as it was of the same use as the blood upon the two side-posts and the upper door-posts of the Israelites in Egypt, Exod. xii. 13.

4 'And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

<sup>j</sup> ch. 9. 16. <sup>k</sup> ch. 14. 1.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephtalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

For the understanding of these five verses several things are to be noted.

1. That the whole number is one hundred and forty-four thousand, which is the product of twelve, as the original number, (setting aside the ciphers,) for twelve times twelve make one hundred and forty-four. The number of one hundred and forty-four, chap. xxi. 17, was the measure of the wall of the new Jerusalem. Twelve, which is the root of this number one hundred and forty-four, seemeth to be God's number, and used in Scripture about one hundred and forty-four times, and almost generally in things belonging to the church; which had twelve patriarchs, twelve tribes under the Old Testament, twelve apostles (as its head) under the New Testament: and the new Jerusalem from heaven, chap. xxi. 12, is said to have twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels; ver. 14, the wall had twelve foundations; the length of it, ver. 16, twelve thousand furlongs.

2. That we must not by one hundred and forty-four thousand understand a certain, but an uncertain number, which yet was very great.

3. That by the tribes of Israel mentioned here, are to be understood the several gospel churches of the Gentiles, who are now God's Israel ingrafted into the true olive.

4. That the tribe of Dan is here left out, and Ephraim is not named, though included in Joseph. Of the tribe of Dan there were none sealed. Dan was a great ringleader to idolatry, so was Ephraim; see the 17th and 18th chapters of Judges; and at Dan it was that Jeroboam set up his calves. Levi is put in instead of Dan, and Joseph instead of Ephraim, by which means here are yet twelve tribes; which teacheth us this, That Christians, if idolaters, must not look for any special protection or favour from God in a day of evil.

5. These tribes are not set in order, according to their birthright. Juda was Leah's fourth son, Gen. xxix. 35, put first, because Christ descended from him. Reuben, her eldest son, is put next, giving place only to the Messiah's tribe. Gad, Jacob's son by Zilpah, Gen. xxx. 11, is put next. Aser, Jacob's son by Zilpah, in the fourth place, Gen. xxx. 13. Nephtalim is put next, who was Jacob's son by Bilhah, Rachel's maid, Gen. xxx. 8. Manasses is put next, who was Joseph's son. Simeon, Jacob's second son by Leah, Gen. xxix. 33, is put in the seventh place. Levi, Leah's third son, Gen. xxix. 34, in the eighth place. Issachar, Leah's fifth son, Gen. xxx. 18, is put in the ninth place. Zabulon, Leah's sixth son, is put in the tenth place, Gen. xxx. 20. Joseph is put in the eleventh place, for Ephraim his son. Benjamin, Rachel's second son, is put in the last place.

If there be any mystery in this order, differing from all other scriptures where there is a mention made of the twelve patriarchs, it is probable that Mr. Mede hath hit upon it, in regard of the good or ill deserts of these tribes, some of which are mentioned by him; all may be learned from the history of the Jews recorded in holy writ. Hence we may learn, that the summary sense of all these verses is this, That although within that period of time which is signified under the seventh seal, there should be great persecutions of the church, yet God would preserve unto himself a great number in all his churches, which should not apostatize, and who in the persecutions should not be hurt; so as his church should not fail, though the archers should shoot sore at it; for though men raged, yet it was by God's permission; and his angels overruled it, who should take notice of those numbers that he had sealed, and marked in their foreheads.

h Rom. 11. 25. i ch. 5. 9. k ch. 3. 5, 16. & 4. 6. 11. ver. 14.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, <sup>h</sup>a great multitude, which no man could number, <sup>i</sup>of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, <sup>k</sup>clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

If we inquire who these were, we are told, ver. 14, by the best Interpreter, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, &c. So that they do not seem to be the one hundred and forty-four thousand mentioned for preservation in and from the evil, ver. 4, but such as had escaped, or were not in or going into tribulation, but come out. The number of the former was determined; it is said of these, it could not be numbered. These were glorified ones, not militant; they stood before the throne, and the Lamb, clothed with white robes; clothed in the habits of such as amongst the Romans had fought, and conquered, and triumphed; and to this end they are said to have carried palms, the ensigns of victory, in their hands.

l Ps. 3. 8. 14. 43. 11. Jer. 3. 22. Hos. 13. 4. ch. 19. 1. m ch. 5. 13.

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, <sup>l</sup>Salvation to our God <sup>m</sup>which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

They acknowledge their temporal, spiritual, and eternal salvation to the gift and free mercy of God, in whom they had trusted, and to the Lord Jesus Christ, by whose merits and Spirit they had got the victory.

n ch. 4. 6.

11 <sup>n</sup>And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God,

And all the angels stood round about the throne; the good angels, who always in heaven behold the face of their and our heavenly Father. And about the elders; and about the twenty-four elders, mentioned chap. iv. 4. And the four beasts; and the living creatures, mentioned chap. iv. 6. And fell before the throne on their faces; the angels, elders, and living creatures, all fall down on their faces, in a reverential sense of the infinite distance between them and their Creator. And worshipped God; thus paying an homage to God fitted to their glorified state, in consideration of his excellency.

o ch. 5. 13, 14.

12 <sup>o</sup>Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

These words only signify the union and harmony of the angels and saints in praising God: see the notes on chap. v. 12.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in <sup>p</sup>white robes? and whence <sup>p</sup>ver. 9. came they?

Not that he did not know, but to try whether John knew, or rather to set John upon inquiring.

q ch. 6. 9. & 17. 6. r Is. 1. 18. Heb. 9. 14. 1 John 1. 7. ch. 1. 5. See Zech. 3. 3, 4, 5.

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, <sup>q</sup>These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have <sup>r</sup>washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

John confessing his own ignorance, applies himself to this elder for instruction, who tells him, These were the souls of them that came out of great sufferings and persecution; but he addeth, that they were such as were washed in the blood of Christ. Suffering will not bring us to heaven, without having our souls washed with the blood of Christ.

s Is. 4. 5, 6. ch. 21. 3.

15 <sup>s</sup>Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall <sup>s</sup>dwell among them:

These are they before the throne of God; not that they by their sufferings have merited heaven, but because it pleaseth God of his free grace so to reward them; therefore it was said, not only that they were such as came out of tribulation, but that they had washed their garments in the blood of the Lamb, whose blood had paid the price of their salvation. And serve him day and night in his temple: by the temple, some understand the church in this life, but it is foreign to the true sense of the text; for John saw only their souls before the throne, their bodies were in their graves. By the temple is meant heaven, where God dwelleth, and is worshipped more gloriously and constantly than he was in the Jewish temple, or in any part of the militant church. And he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them; as God by his gracious presence dwelt in the Jewish temple, so God by his glorious presence shall dwell amongst his glorified saints.

t Is. 49. 10. u Ps. 121. 6. ch. 21. 4.

16 <sup>t</sup>They shall hunger no more, neither <sup>u</sup>thirst any more; <sup>u</sup>neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

This is taken out of Isa. xlix. 10. They are all metaphorical expressions, all signifying the perfect state of glorified saints; they shall have no wants, nor be exposed to any afflictive providences.

x Ps. 23. 1. & 36. 6. John 10. 11, 14. y Is. 25. 8. ch. 21. 4.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne <sup>x</sup>shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: <sup>y</sup>and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne; Christ, the Lamb mentioned chap. v. 6. Shall feed them, &c.; shall take care of them, to satisfy and to protect them, and give them the best supplies, and both make them to forget their former sorrows, and prevent any further cause of sorrow and affliction to them. A perfect description of the glorious and happy state of saints in heaven. For wherein lieth the happiness of heaven, but in a freedom from all the evils that encumber us in this life, and the enjoyment of all the happiness we are capable of, and being ever with the Lord Jesus Christ, under his influence and conduct? So as I cannot agree with Mr. Mede, or any of those who think this vision and these phrases describe any happy, peaceable state of the church in this life, after the throwing down of antichrist; but do think that John was showed this great reward of martyrs, to encourage the church of God under all those evils they were to suffer under antichrist and the beast, in that period of time which is described mystically upon the opening of the seventh seal, which we now come to in the next chapter.

CHAP. VIII

The seventh seal opened, 1. Seven angels receive seven trumpets, 2. An angel presenteth the prayers of the saints with incense on the golden altar before the throne, 3-5. Four of the angels sound their trumpets, and great plagues severally follow, 6-13.

• ch. 8. 1. AND *when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

And when he; that is, the Lamb, mentioned chap. v. 7, who took the book out of the hand of him that sat upon the throne, the book of God's counsels, and had now revealed mysteriously to John what should come to pass (under all the pagan emperors) to the church of Christ, until the time of Constantine the Great, who, (as was said,) about the year 325, had settled the Christian religion, and shut up all the idols' temples, having conquered the apostate Licinius. Had opened the seventh seal; he cometh now to open the seventh seal, that is, to reveal to John what should be in the succeeding time of the church to the end of the world. There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour: but before the great evils should break out, which were to come to pass in this time, there was in the church a rest for a small time; for from the year 317, when Constantine bare the greatest away in the empire, or 325, when he had got a full victory over Licinius, the church had a great peace for a little time, till 339, when the empire being divided, and Constantius having the eastern part, and Constans the western, (both sons of Constantine,) Constantius, being an Arian, (who denied the Godhead of Christ,) began again to persecute the Christians; and after him Julian, who apostatized to paganism. But after him they had a little further respite to the year 395, when Theodosius died, and the Christians' quiet died with him. I rather choose to interpret this thus, than with those who understand the silence in heaven, of a silence in the third heavens, in allusion to the Jewish order; who, though they sung during the time of the sacrifice, and played upon instruments of music all that time, yet kept silence while the incense was offering. For (as divers have noted) it seemeth hard to judge, that in this Revelation there should be no mention of that short truce which the church had during the reign of Constantine, and for a small time after.

b Tob. 12. 15. Matt. 14. 10. Luke 1. 19. c 2 Chro. 29. 26, -28. 2 <sup>b</sup> And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; *and to them were given seven trumpets.

The seven angels which stood before God; the seven mentioned hereafter, which blew with the trumpets; for we presently read, that seven trumpets were given to them. Trumpets were used to call the people together, to proclaim festivals, and in war. The use of these trumpets we shall hereafter read, which was to proclaim the will and counsels of God, as to things to come.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should || offer it with <sup>d</sup> the prayers of all saints upon <sup>e</sup> the golden altar which was before the throne.

And another angel came; by this angel I understand Christ, as do many very valuable authors; nor, indeed, can what is said of this angel agree to any other but him, who is called an Angel, Gen. xviii. 16, and the Angel of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1. Here is a manifest allusion to the order of the Jewish worship; they had an altar of incense, Exod. xxx. 1, upon which the high priest was to burn incense every morning and evening, ver. 7, 8. Whilst the priest was burning incense, as appears, Luke i. 10, the people were without, praying. Christ is here represented as having a golden censer. The high priest's censer amongst the Jews was of brass; but he was a more excellent High Priest. And there was given unto him much incense; by which is meant the infinite merit of his death, to be offered up by himself (who is the golden altar) with the prayers of all his saints. By all this Christ is represented to us, as interceding for his saints that were to live after this time, during all troubles that were immediately to begin, and to follow on, during the reign of antichrist.

4 And 'the smoke of the incense, <sup>f Pa. 141. 2. Luke 1. 10</sup> which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand.

This only denotes the acceptableness of Christ's intercession, and God's people's prayers, through the virtue of that intercession, unto God.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it || into the earth: and <sup>g</sup> there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, <sup>h</sup> and an earthquake.

I doubt not but by fires here, is to be understood the wrath of God, often in holy writ compared to fire, poured out upon the Roman empire, or the visible church. Upon which followed great judgments, and confusions, and tumults, expressed here, or ushered in, as before, chap. vi. 1, with thunderings; which being here more generally mentioned, are by and by more particularly expressed.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

The angels are God's ministers, by which he bringeth his counsels to pass in the world: they hearing the thunderings and voices, knew the time was come when they were to begin the execution of God's judgments upon the earth; the execution of which was intrusted to them, and they are therefore set out (though they be always ready) after the manner of men, preparing themselves to execute what God had intrusted them with the execution of.

7 The first angel sounded, <sup>i Esch. 20. 22.</sup> and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast <sup>k</sup> upon the earth: and the third part <sup>l</sup> of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

The first angel sounded; the first of the seven angels to whom the seven trumpets were given, ver. 2, began to execute his commission; the consequences of which were hail and fire mingled with blood, cast upon the earth: by which some understand the primitive church's persecutions by the Jews and the heathen emperors; but these were over. Some understand God's revenge upon the Jews; but this also was taken some hundreds of years since. Some understand unseasonable weather in many parts of the world; but we read nothing like this in history. Some understand contests happening in the church; others understand heresies. But I cannot but rather agree with the reverend Mr. Mede, who expounds it of great troubles, and blood, and slaughter which should happen; and thinks that this prophecy began to be fulfilled about the death of Theodosius, Anno 395. For in this very year (saith he) Alaricus the king of the Goths brake into Macedonia, with a great army went into Thessalia, and so into Achaia, Peloponnesus, Corinth, Argos, Sparta, burning, wasting, and ruining all places; and so went on till the year 400; then fell upon the eastern empire, and committed the same outrages in Dalmatia and Hungary; then went into Stiria and Bavaria, thence into Italy and to Venice. After this, in the year 404, these barbarous nations invaded Italy, and took divers places. In the year 406 the Vandals and Alans, with many others, invaded France, Spain, and Africa: all which he proveth from the testimony of Jerome, Ep. 3. 11. This he judgeth the effect of the first angel's sounding, and to have been signified by the hail and fire mingled with blood, consonant to other scriptures. Isaiah, chap. xxviii. 2, compareth Shalmaneser to a storm of hail; and, chap. xxx. 30, he so likeneth the ruin to come upon the Assyrians. By the trees burnt up, are (saith he) the great and rich men to be understood, ordinarily in Scripture compared to trees, Isa. ii. 13; xiv. 8; Zech. xi. 2; and by the green grass, the ordinary common people. Thus he judgeth the effects of this first trumpet's sounding to have been determined in fifteen years, viz. from the year 395 to 410.

<sup>f</sup> Or, add it to the prayers. d ch. 5. 8. e Ex. 30. 1. ch. 6. 9.

<sup>g</sup> Or, upon. g ch. 16. 18. h 2 Sam. 22. 8. i Kings. 19. 11. Acts 4. 31.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 16. 2.

<sup>l</sup> 1s. 2. 12. ch. 9. 4.

m Jer. 51. 25.
Amos 7. 4.

8 And the second angel sounded, <sup>m</sup> and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: <sup>n</sup> and the third part of the sea <sup>o</sup> became blood;

n ch. 16. 3.
o Ezek. 16.
19.

There is a great variety of senses also about this mountain of fire cast into the sea. Some by it understand things happening in Judea; but this had been not to have showed John the things which should be, but which had been. Others will have the devil understood; others, the power of the Roman empire; others, some great war stirred up amongst people; others, some notable heresy or heretic; others, some famous persons in the church; but I most like Mr. Mede's notion again here, who understands by this mountain, Rome, the seat of the western empire; great cities being called mountains in Scripture phrase, Isa. xxxvii. 24; Jer. li. 25. And the third part of the sea became blood: this phrase speaks only the great effusion of blood upon the taking of Rome by its enemies.

p ch. 16. 3.

9 <sup>p</sup> And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

Phrases all signifying the miserable catastrophe that should follow the destruction of this city, by the slaughter of men, the ruin of houses and towns in Italy, &c. History (as Mr. Mede showeth) excellently agreeth with this. In the year 410, Rome was taken by Alaricus; this was followed with great devastations both in France and Spain. Honorius, to recover the empire, was glad to give the Goths a seat and government in France, and the Burgundians and Vandals a place near unto the river Rhone; and, Anno 415, to the Vandals a place in Spain; and, Anno 455, Rome was again taken by Gensericus the Vandal, who divided the whole empire into ten kingdoms: 1. That of the Britons, ruled by Vortimer. 2. The Saxons, ruled by Hengist. 3. The Franks, ruled by Childeric. 4. The Burgundians, ruled by Gundericus. 5. The Visigoths, ruled by Theodoricus II. 6. The Alans and Suevi, ruled by Riciarius. 7. The Vandals, ruled by Gensericus. 8. The Germans, ruled by Sumanus. 9. The Ostrogoths, ruled by Theodemirus. 10. The Grecians, ruled by Marcianus. This is the sum of what Mr. Mede saith, and to this tract of time, betwixt the years 410 and 455, the second trumpet seemeth to relate.

q Is. 14. 12.
ch. 8. 1.

10 And the third angel sounded, <sup>q</sup> and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, <sup>r</sup> and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;

r ch. 16. 4.

There fell a great star from heaven: stars, in their metaphorical notion, signify some eminent persons in the state, or in the church; accordingly interpreters are divided in their senses; some thinking that it is meant of a political star, some eminent civil governor, and apply it to Cæsar Augustulus, who, about the year 480, was forced to give over the empire, by Odoacer; of him Mr. Mede understands this prophecy. Others understand it of some ecclesiastical star, who apostatized, and apply it to Pelagius. I do rather incline to those who apply it to some ecclesiastical star; and Pelagius might be pointed at, as probably as any other in these times, for he was a great professor, and so burned as a lamp. And it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and did corrupt a great part of the church.

s Ruth 1. 20.

11 <sup>s</sup> And the name of the star is called Wormwood: <sup>t</sup> and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

t Ex. 15. 23.
Jer. 9. 15.
& 23. 15.

His doctrine was as bitter as wormwood; and he was the ruin of many souls. But if any do rather choose to understand it of a political star, Mr. Mede's notion bids as fair for the sense as any, because the western empire determined in Augustulus, and he reigned but a very short time; and he was a prince of many sorrows and afflictions, and many perished with him in those sorrows and afflictions which he underwent. Whether we understand it of some eminent political magistrate, (such was Augustulus,) or some eminent light in the church, (such was Pelagius,) they both fell about this time, the one from his terrene dignity, the other spiritually from the honour he had in the church; and many fell with them, either in a civil or in a spiritual sense.

12 <sup>u</sup> And the fourth angel sounded, <sup>u</sup> and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

u Is. 13. 10.
Amos 8. 9.

Interpreters (setting aside one or two, who conceit the Revelation is nothing but a repetition of things that happened in Judea before John's time) generally agree, that the period of time to which this prophecy relates, is from the year 480, when the western empire ceased. The history of the age next following, both relating to civil and ecclesiastical things, doth so fit this prophecy, that interpreters are much divided about the sense of it, whether it be to be understood of the miseries befalling the Roman empire or the church in that time; for, as great princes in the former, so great lights in the latter, are metaphorically expressed in Scripture under the notions of the sun, moon, and stars, in regard of the great influence they have upon men, as those luminaries of heaven have upon the earth. Mr. Mede understands it of political magistrates, here expressed (as in Joseph's dream) by the sun, moon, and stars: and to show us how the event fitted the prophecy, he tells us out of the best authors, that when Odoacer had routed Augustulus, and turned him out of the empire, himself ruled Rome under the title of a king sixteen years, and destroyed all their old magistracy, but after two years restored it. That Theodoricus, following him in the government of Italy, restored all their rights again, which so continued under three kings (all Goths) for near fifty years. But after the year 546, Rome was taken and burnt once and again, and a third part of it demolished by Totilas. Others understand it of Pelagius, or some famous heretic in that time. But to speak freely, the words of the prophecy, and the histories we have, rather agree to Mr. Mede's sense; for (except Pelagius, who began about the year 406) we read of none in this age to whom the words of this prophecy will agree in any good sense.

13 And I beheld, <sup>v</sup> and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, <sup>w</sup> Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

v ch. 14. 6.
w 18. 17.

This verse is but an introduction to the other three angels sounding, declaring that the times which were to follow would be much more full of miseries and woes to the inhabitants of the earth; by which I understand all those countries which lately were subject to the Roman empire. Others understand the more earthly, unsound, hypocritical part of the church. The woe is thrice repeated, either to show the greatness of the calamities, or rather correspondently to the number of the angels yet to sound.

CHAP. IX

At the sounding of the fifth angel a star falleth from heaven, to whom is given the key of the bottomless pit, 1: he opens the pit, and there come forth locusts like scorpions, who have power to hurt men for a time, 2—11. The first woe past, 12. At the sounding of the sixth angel four angels which were bound are loosed, and bring great plagues on the earth for a limited time, 13—21.

AND the fifth angel sounded, <sup>x</sup> and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of <sup>y</sup> the bottomless pit.

x Luke 10.
18. ch. 8. 10.

y Luke 8. 31.
ch. 17. 8. &
20. 1.
ver. 2. 11.

And the fifth angel sounded; the fifth of the seven angels mentioned chap. viii. 2, to whom were given seven trumpets. It denoteth the beginning of a new period of calamities and miseries to the earth, or to the church. And I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: what this star falling from heaven means, is not easy to resolve. Those who think it the devil, once a star, but fallen, forget that John is not here told a story of what was in the beginning of the world, but what should be, and that five hundred years after Christ's coming. And the same reason holds against those who think those seditious persons are meant, who did so much mischief in and about Jerusalem during the siege; this had been to have revealed to John those things which he knew were done many years before. Amongst those who think some particular eminent minister of the church, who apostatized, is meant, those seem to me to judge better, who think that Boniface the Third is meant, who, in the year 606, obtained the privilege of the pope's supremacy, than those who understand it of Arius or Pelagius, who both of them fell two hundred years before this. It seems very harsh to interpret it of Christ, or any good angel's descending from heaven, because the word πικτυκόβρα is rightly by us translated falling, and not to be interpreted so softly as descending. In all probability, therefore, the first apostacy of the bishop of Rome was here prophesied. But how to him was given the key of the bottomless pit, (by which hell is meant here, as often in Scripture,) is hard to say; unless we understand it of his instrumentality, to send many thousands to hell by that corrupt doctrine and worship, which by him then began to obtain. But his key was borrowed, (if God had not permitted him he could not have done it,) and it turned but one way; he had only a power to open it, not (as Christ) both to open and shut it.

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

And he opened the bottomless pit; he was a means of hell's breaking loose, by loosing Satan. And there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace: I had rather interpret this generally of the great influence upon the world, that the devil, being loosed, had, in filling the world with ignorance, error, and wickedness, (for which this and the following age are infamous in all histories,) and then particularly of the errors this time abounded with. And the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit; this influence of the devil darkened the sun of the gospel, and the whole church of that age, with ignorance, error, and abominable superstition in the worship of God, attended with the lewdness and debauchery of men in their lives, which usually go together.

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; from the influence which the devil thus let loose had upon the world, came forth a generation of men, that in their practices resembled locusts. Who are to be understood by these locusts, is not easy to resolve. The locusts were an insect with which God sometimes plagued the Egyptians; they are much in the Eastern countries. It was an east wind which brought them upon Egypt, Exod. x. 12, 13. God often hath punished people with them, they are therefore threatened, or mentioned as a judgment in case of disobedience, Deut. xxviii. 38, 42; 1 Kings viii. 37; Joel i. 4; ii. 25. Two things are to be remarked of them: 1. They were wont to go in infinite numbers: Prov. xxx. 27, They go forth by bands: Nah. iii. 15, Make thyself many as the locusts: without number, Psal. cv. 34. 2. The mischief they do is expressed there, ver. 35, to eat up the herbs of the land, and to devour the fruit of the ground: so they did in Egypt. We have a little specimen of them in our caterpillars in times of drought, usually caused from the wind hanging long in the east. The psalmist, Psal. cv. 34, joineth the locusts and the caterpillars together. By the following description of these locusts, and the mischief which they did, ver. 4, 7—10, it appeareth plainly that these were no natural, but metaphorical locusts, men that, for their numbers and the mischief they did in the world, did resemble locusts; but who these were is the question. I find but two opinions that have any probability: the one is of a late learned writer, who judgeth them the popish clergy, to whom, indeed, many things agree. 1. They come out of the smoke, that is, the great influence which the devil hath upon the world. 2. They are numerous. 3. Their king is Abaddon; they destroy every green herb, nipping religion, in all places, in the bud. But I cannot see how two or three things can agree to them: 1. That they do no hurt to the Lord's sealed ones, whereas their particular malice is against the purest and strictest profession. 2. That they do not kill, but only torment men, ver. 5. 3. And (which is the greatest) I cannot see how the period of time agreeth to them. For this prophecy seemeth to respect the sixth and seventh age; and though all these things agree to the Romish clergy in later ages, especially since the Jesuits grew numerous, which is not much above one hundred and twenty years since, yet these three did not so agree to the Romish clergy in the sixth and seventh age. Their Benedictine orders began but in the year 530, and their orders of Dominicans, much more mischievous, not till upwards of the year 1200; the Jesuits, after the year 1500. I therefore rather agree with the learned and judicious Mr. Mede, with whom I also find John Napier and others agreeing, that by these locusts are meant the Turks and Saracens. 1. Their time agreeth; for they first appeared formidably to the world about the year 620. 2. They were always very numerous. 3. They came the locusts' road, from Arabia, and the eastern parts. The Arabians (which the Saracens are) are called the children of the east, and said to be like grasshoppers for multitude. Two things are objected: 1. That these locusts are commanded not to hurt the Lord's sealed ones. 2. That their commission is but for five months. As to the latter, we shall speak to it when we come to that clause. As to the former, why may it not denote the liberty that in their conquests they generally give to all religions, so as they put none to death upon that account? How far other things will agree to them, I leave to be further considered in the next verses. And unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power; that is, such a power as scorpions have. We shall have a more particular account of this, ver. 10.

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

And it was commanded them; that is, these locusts; God so ordered it by his providence. That they should not hurt, &c.: this makes it appear, that these locusts were no insects so called, but typical; for natural locusts live upon green things; they were only to hurt profane men, and hypocrites. It is a sure rule, that when things are attributed to living creatures which do not agree to their natures, the terms are to be understood typically, not literally. Locusts use not to kill men; we may therefore be assured, that the locusts here intended, were men, not insects.

5 And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

Supposing the Saracens and Turks here meant by the locusts, here arise two difficulties: 1. How it can be said of them, that they had no power to kill, but only torment men. 2. How their time is set for five months, whereas they have already tormented the world more than a thousand years; and how long they shall yet continue to do so, God only knows: they are both great difficulties. Alisted tells us, That Mahomet began in the year 622, and the Saracens entered Spain 714, where they were called Moors, and kept possession of that kingdom eight hundred years, and that in the year 719, they besieged Constantinople

c Joel 2. 2, 10.

d Ex. 10. 4. Judg. 1. 12. c ver. 10.

ch. 6. 4. & 7. 2. g ch. 8. 7.

h ch. 7. 2. See Exod. 12. 23. Ezek. 9. 4.

i ch. 11. 7. ver. 10.

with a navy of three thousand ships and three hundred thousand land soldiers; that before this time they had made themselves masters of Arabia, Palestina, Syria, Persia, Egypt, Africa, and Spain; and in the year 726, carried into France an army consisting of three hundred and seventy-five thousand, where they were beaten by Charles Martell, father to King Pepin. Mr. Mede telleth us, that the Saracens grievously vexed the countries subject to the Roman emperor, but could not take either Rome or Constantinople. The latter was taken by the Turks, in the year 1457, commanded by Sultan Mahomet. This is but a hard interpretation of those words, that they should not kill them; which, it may be, hath made some other interpreters choose to interpret these locusts to signify the Roman clergy, who indeed did not kill men for religion, of many years. But both the one and the other tormented the world enough, and that like a scorpion, which pierceth a man with a venomous sting, and puts him to great pain. For the five months, we shall again meet with them, ver. 10.

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

The calamities of those days shall be so great, that men shall be weary of their lives.

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

This whole description of these locusts speaks them no insects, but to be mischievous men; they were very terrible to look upon, like horses harnessed ready to fight; so Joel ii. 4. And upon their heads were as it were crowns like gold; this signified they should be great and rich conquerors. And their faces were as the faces of men; yet these were men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

And they had hair as the hair of women; dishevelled, or hanging loose; the Arabians were wont to go so; or this may signify, that they were beautiful as well as terrible to look upon. And their teeth were as the teeth of lions; sharp and strong: see Joel i. 6.

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; armed with the best armour of defence. And the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle; like locusts, they moved very swiftly. This agreeth to the Saracens, who made such haste in their conquests, that (saith Mr. Mede) in little more than eighty years they had subdued Palestina, Syria, both the Armenias, almost all the Lesser Asia, Persia, India, Egypt, Numidia, all Barbary, Portugal, Spain; and within a few more, Sicily, Candia, Cyprus, and were come to the very gates of Rome; so as they had many crowns on their heads, and moved as with wings.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

And they had tails like unto scorpions; a kind of venomous serpents that have their stings in their tails, with which they presently kill both men and beasts. And their power was to hurt men five months; what these five months mean is very hard to say; certainly it is a certain number for an uncertain, and mentioned rather than any other time, because it is (as they say) the usual time of the life of locusts; though some observe, that five months have in them (counting as the Hebrews, thirty days to the month) one hundred and fifty days, and a day standing for a year, as in prophetic writings, it denoteth the just time the Sara-cents raged in Italy, from the year 830 to the year 980; as to which I refer my reader to search histories.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

Solomon saith, Prov. xxx. 27, The locusts have no king, yet go they forth by bands; according to which these locusts cannot be understood of insects so called; or, if they have a king, yet it is certain the devil is not their king, who is here called the angel of the bottomless pit. Abaddon; from  $\tau\alpha\theta\eta$  he hath destroyed. Apollyon; that is, a destroyer; intimating that the whole business of this barbarous enemy should be to ruin and destroy nations.

12 One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

One period of time is over, in which God hath plagued the world with a very great judgment; but there are two more to come, which will be equally, if not more, calamitous.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,

That is, from God, I heard him give a command, which voice is said to have proceeded from the golden altar. (in allusion to Exod. xxx. 3,) because there God received the prayers of his people; and this voice proceeding from that place, might signify the following judgment to come, in answer to the prayers of his servants' souls from thence crying to him for vengeance. See chap. vi. 9, 10.

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

By these four angels, or instruments of God to execute his vengeance, I find the most valuable interpreters understanding the Turks, considered as distinct from the Saracens, and succeeding of them, whose empire began in Ottoman, Anno 1296, or thereabouts. Mr. Mede saith these four angels denote so many sultanies or kingdoms, into which the Turks were dispersed, having passed the river Euphrates, which river is famous for four things: 1. It was the boundary of David and Solomon's kingdom, Deut. xi. 24; Josh. i. 4. 2. It was that river by which Babylon stood, Jer. xiii. 4—6. 3. It was the boundary of the Roman empire, beyond which it could never extend itself. 4. And it also was the seat of the Turks, who having some years before come over the Euphrates, first divided themselves into a tetrarchy; of which one in Asia, another at Aleppo, another at Damascus, a fourth at Antioch. Mr. Mede gives us a table or diagram of it, Clav. Apoc. 40. p. 102. Here they were bounded for a while, but about the year 1300 they were loosed, and began further to invade Europe; which is the severe providence of God, conceived to be here foretold as the consequent of this sixth angel's sounding. The Turks who, though come over the river Euphrates, had hitherto by the providence of God been bounded near unto it, not much contending to enlarge their territories, now joined together with the Saracens under Ottoman, and went further into Europe, and could by no means be stopped till they had got the empire of Constantinople.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

For an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year; that is, say some, for any time whatsoever God would have them move; or for that certain time which God had determined; but Mr. Mede hath here a peculiar notion; he observeth that an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, make just three hundred and ninety-six years. In a year are three hundred and sixty-five days, in a month thirty, which make three hundred and ninety-five, to which add the odd day, they make three hundred and ninety-six. The Turks began their empire under Ottoman, who began his reign Anno 1296: but their leader, Tangrolipix, upon the taking of Bagdad was inaugurated, and put on the imperial robe, Anno 1057. Constantinople was taken by them Anno 1453, between which are just three hundred and ninety-six years. In which time they slew a numberless number of men, called here the third part.

x Ps. 68. 17.
Dan. 7. 10.
7 Ezek. 38. 4.
16 And "the number of the army" of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: "and I heard the number of them.

He saith nothing of the infantry, but leaves us to conjecture how great that must be, from the number of the horse; we must not think there was precisely this number, but the meaning is, that the armies should be vastly great, as we know all the Turkish armies are. Magog's army is described from the cavalry, Ezek. xxxviii. 4, 15.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: "and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

We have no such description or representation as this in any other place of holy w. it. Some understand it of the several-coloured breastplates that the soldiers wore; some of a red and flaming colour, like fire; others blue, like the jacinth; some pale: all such as wear them look terribly. Mr. Mede hath here again a peculiar notion; thinking that the Holy Ghost doth here signify their fighting with great guns, (not known before the siege of Constantinople,) which throw out fire and smoke, &c., and so alter the air, the medium by which we see, that the opposite party in fighting appear to those that use these arms, as if they were covered with breastplates that were red, and blue, and pale. To confirm this, he tells us of Chalcondylas's report of this siege, who mentioneth great guns used at it of that vast bigness, that one of them required threescore and ten yoke of oxen and two thousand men to draw it, &c. It is at least a very ingenious conjecture, and I could not but mention it in honour to the learned author; leaving it to my reader's liberty, whether he will, with Mr. Mede, judge this literal sense of the text is best, or interpret all these phrases more generally, only of a terrible appearance of those armies.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

That is, a great part of men were killed by these numerous armies. No such devastations were ever made by any enemies that ever appeared in the world, as by the Turks have been; nor ever were there such vast great guns made, out of which came fire, and smoke, and brimstone.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: "for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

By their tails some understand their infantry or foot soldiery; others, their serpentine craft and subtlety: as the locusts, ver. 10, are compared to scorpions, whose sting was in their tails, and who were said to hurt with their tails; so the same thing is said of these armies, intimating that the Turks should be mischievous by the same arts and means as their predecessors the Saracens. These are said to have had heads in their tails, which was not said of the locusts; the reason of which interpreters judge to have arisen from the different animals by which they are represented.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues "yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship "devils, "and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues; the two-thirds of men that should be left, for we read of one-third part destroyed; and this also must be understood of men dwelling in countries subject formerly to the Roman empire on this side of the Euphrates. Yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils: this leaves this applicable to none but papists; for there are none else but them who worship demons, Greek, δαίμονια, or idols of gold and silver. By devils are meant demons, that is, persons that are dead, whom the heathens made their petty gods, and worshipped as middle beings betwixt them and the supreme gods, according to their notion; which is the same thing the papists are guilty of, with this only difference, (as Mr. Mede excellently observeth,) that the heathens made many supreme gods, and these modern idolaters own but one in that notion, but as many deastri or demons as they did, which are all those saints to whom they pay an adoration, as to those who should present their desires to God, which, as Mr. Mede sufficiently proves from writers, was the very work the pagans allotted for those whom they canonized after death. From whence came the names of Baal and Bel, &c., but from Belus, who is said to have been the first prince, whom, being dead, they made a god, and adored? Which demons God in Scripture calleth devils. Nor do any but they now worship images, the works of men's hands, made of gold, silver, brass, and wood, who are here described in the same words as by the psalmist, Psal. cxv. 4; cxxxv. 15. Notwithstanding God's great judgment executed upon the Grecian churches, yet they repented not of their idolatry and superstition; so as God hath brought them wholly under the power of those barbarous enemies; and though the Romish party seeth this, yet neither do they repent; which may give them cause to fear that God should make use of the same adversary to destroy them likewise; especially considering that neither to this day do they repent.

21 Neither repented they of their murders, "nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

Neither repented they of their murders; of their murdering the saints of God, but go on in that practice; nor of their fornication, which is publicly allowed amongst them; nor of their theft and sacrilege, and other wickedness, but are as infamous for their debaucheries as for their superstition and idolatry. How long this great judgment of the Turk shall continue upon Christians we cannot tell; it is Mr. Brightman's opinion that it shall determine in the year 1696; but of that the Scripture hath not informed us, and guessing is a vanity, where we have no sure foundation; and so many have appeared to have been mistaken in such particular determinations, that he lightly exposeth his reputation that will adventure further upon such rocks.

CHAP. X

A mighty angel appeareth with a book open in his hand, 1—4; and sweareth by him that liveth for ever, that there shall be no more time, 5—7. John is commanded to take and eat the book, and to prophesy, 8—11.

We have had in the former chapters Christ's revelation to St. John of what should happen in the Roman empire under the first six seals, that is, during their pagan state, which determined in Constantine's time, Anno 310, or 325. Under the seventh seal (that is, from chap. viii. 1) he hath revealed to him what should happen after that time to the Roman empire by the Goths and Vandals under the first four trumpets, and by the Saracens under the fifth trumpet, and the Turks under the sixth trumpet, who are yet rampant and going on in their outrages. The seventh trumpet in course should sound next, but we come not to that till chap. xi. 15. In this chapter, and to the 15th verse of the next chapter, seems an interruption of the history, that Christ might reveal to his prophet the main things that should concern his church. About the sense of this interpreters are divided, some thinking this a distinct prophecy relating to the affairs of the church, yet not in a continued story, but made up of several visions, some contemporary with the times before mentioned, some continud Lev. 17. 7.

Deut. 32. 17.
Ps. 106. 37.
1 Cor. 10. 20.
e Ps. 115. 4.
& 135. 13.
Dan. 5. 22.

ing to the time after the sixth trumpet; which prophecy, as they judge, beginneth at the 11th chapter, to which what we have in this chapter is introductive. Of this mind are our Dr. More, Mr. Mede, and other very valuable interpreters, whose reasons may be read in Mr. Pool's Latin Synopsis upon this chapter, and some of them may be noted by us as we go through this chapter. Others think it is no distinct prophecy.

AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud :

<sup>a</sup> Ezek. 1. 28. <sup>b</sup> Mat. 17. 2. <sup>c</sup> ch. 1. 16. <sup>e</sup> ch. 1. 15. <sup>d</sup> his face was as it were the sun, and <sup>e</sup> his feet as pillars of fire :

And I saw another mighty angel; the most and best interpreters understand by this angel, Christ, formerly represented to us as a Lamb, here as an Angel; none but he could call the two witnesses, chap. xi. 3, his witnesses; besides, the glorious appearance of this angel speaketh him no ordinary angel. Come down from heaven; God being about to do or speak some great thing, is oft thus set out as coming down from heaven. Clothed with a cloud; Christ is described as coming with clouds, chap. i. 7. The Lord hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness, 2 Chron. vi. 1. And a rainbow was upon his head; which was the sign of the covenant made with Noah, Gen. ix. 16, and fitted Christ's head, as he that brought peace to the world, and to his church in special. And his face was as it were the sun: see Matt. xvii. 2. And his feet as pillars of fire; signifying the steadiness and efficacy of his actions.

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: <sup>d</sup> and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

And he had in his hand a little book open; the same book with that mentioned chap. v. 1; though some by it understand the Scriptures. There it was represented to John as sealed with seven seals; here open, to let us know that all the counsels of God, however sealed as to us, are open to Christ, and that he would open to John what should come to pass in his church to the end of the world. And he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth; to let us know the dominion he had over the whole world, as well the more unquiet as quieter parts of it.

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, <sup>e</sup> seven thunders uttered their voices.

And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: this voice suited him who is the Lion of the tribe of Judah: the lion's voice is both loud and terrible. And when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices: interpreters judge these seven thunders to signify those judgments of God which should be executed in the world upon the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and precedaneous to the day of judgment, which we shall find more fully opened under the seventh trumpet by the seven vials poured out, which signify the same thing; yet some understand by these seven thunders the powerful preaching the gospel; but the other seemeth more probable.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, <sup>f</sup> Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

I was about to write; to write what he understood of the voices of these thunders. Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not; he was forbidden the publication of them, because they concerned things to be fulfilled at some distance of time, and should be afterward more fully revealed.

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth <sup>g</sup> lifted up his hand to heaven,

And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth: see ver. 2; which Angel was Christ. Lifted up his hand to heaven; as Dan. xii. 7, with which prophecy this agreeth. It is an ordinary gesture used in swearing.

6 And sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, <sup>h</sup> who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, <sup>i</sup> that there should be time no longer:

And sware by him that liveth, &c.; that is, by God; for this description can agree to no other, neither is it lawful to swear by any other: see Dan. xii. 7. That there should be time no longer; there shall be an end of the world, so some; but this John knew well enough. It is rather to be understood of the time of the fourth monarchy, the Roman empire should come to an end; or, the time of the afflictions of the church, whether by pagan or antichristian enemies, should be no more.

7 But <sup>k</sup> in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel; of whom, and his sounding, we shall read, chap. xi. 15. When he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished; from that time that he beginneth to sound shall begin the mystery of God to be finished; either the mystery mentioned chap. xi. 15, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ; or, more generally, whatsoever God hath revealed concerning the propagation of the gospel, the ruin of antichrist, and the end of the world. As he hath declared to his servants the prophets; whatsoever God hath declared by his servants the prophets about these things, (as to which see Isa. xxiv., xxvii., xxviii., lxxvii.; Dan. vii. 11, 12; Zech. xiv.; Mal. iii. 4.) it shall be fulfilled, and begin to be fulfilled when the seventh angel shall begin to blow; within which period of time most interpreters judge we are, as being begun some time since.

8 And <sup>l</sup> the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

And the voice which I heard from heaven; the voice mentioned ver. 4. Go and take the little book; the little book mentioned ver. 2. John is bid to take this book, by which some understand the Scriptures; but it is most probably the book mentioned chap. v. 1, before sealed, now open.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, <sup>m</sup> Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

Take it, and eat it up: thus Ezekiel was bidden to eat the roll; and it was in his mouth as sweet as honey, Ezek. ii. 8; iii. 3. The eating of a book signifies the due reading of it, digesting it, and meditating upon the matters in it. And it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey; it should be sweet in his mouth, as it was the revelation of the mind and will of God, (which is sweet to all pious souls; see Jer. xv. 16,) but in his belly it should be bitter, being the revelation of the Divine will, as to the bringing such terrible judgments upon an impenitent people.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; <sup>n</sup> and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, <sup>o</sup> my belly was bitter.

And I took the little book, and ate it up; according to the command, ver. 9. And it was in my mouth sweet as honey; as it was the revelation of God's will. And as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter; but when he came to think upon it, it was either so mysterious that he could not

<sup>h</sup> Neh. 9. 6. <sup>i</sup> ch. 4. 11. & 14. 7.

<sup>j</sup> Dan. 12. 7. <sup>k</sup> ch. 16. 17.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 11. 15.

<sup>l</sup> ver. 4.

<sup>m</sup> Jer. 15. 16. <sup>n</sup> Ezek. 2. 8. & 3. 1, 2, 3.

<sup>f</sup> Dan. 8. 26. & 12. 4, 9.

<sup>g</sup> Ex. 6. 8. <sup>h</sup> Dan. 12. 7.

<sup>o</sup> Ezek. 2. 10.

comprehend it, or the matter of it was so sad that it gave him great trouble.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Thou must prophesy again: these words (as many think) evince this a prophecy distinct from the former; he must prophesy again. Before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings; who shall be concerned to hear what shall now be revealed to thee concerning the rise of antichrist, his rule and tyranny, and his fall and ruin, which are things began long before, during the periods of time, when the six before-mentioned trumpets sounded, but were not there clearly revealed; which things I will reveal unto thee, that thou, and after thee the ministers of the gospel, may in their several periods reveal them in the hearing of many people, and nations, &c.; so that hereby John (as some think) was constituted a prophet to reveal the state of the church under antichrist, and his tyranny, and finally his ruin, which began at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, chap. xi. 15; but when it shall be finished, God alone must inform the world by the issues of his providence.

CHAP. XI

John is commanded to measure the temple, all but the outer court, 1, 2. The two witnesses that shall prophesy, 3, 4; their power, 5, 6; the beast shall fight against them, and kill them, 7; they shall lie unburied three days and a half, 8—10; and then rise again, and ascend into heaven, 11, 12. A great earthquake, 13. The second voice past, 14. The seventh trumpet sounded: the heavenly choir celebrate the glories of God's kingdom, 15—19.

a Ezek. 40.
3, &c.
Zeck. 2. 1.
ch. 21. 16.
b Num. 23.
16.

AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

And there was given me a reed like a rod; the next words tell us the use of this reed. It was a measuring reed, such a one as Ezekiel in his vision (Ezek. xl. 3) saw in the man's hand. There, the measuring was in order to a rebuilding; here, in order to preserving. And the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God: we cannot well understand what followeth, without understanding the structure of the temple. The Jews, for the place of their worship, had first a tabernacle, then a temple. The tabernacle was a movable house, which they took down and carried about with them in their journeyings, and pitched down when in any place they pitched their tents. We read of it, Exod. xl. We read but of one court in that, into which only the priests and Levites entered; the people were without it, pitching their tents round about it. It had in it an altar of gold for incense, Exod. xl. 5, which stood before the ark, ver. 26, 27; and an altar for burnt-offering, which stood by the door of the tabernacle, ver. 29. The temple was built by Solomon, 1 Kings vi., and afterwards rebuilt by Zerubbabel, upon their return out of captivity. That was built with two courts; an inner court, 1 Kings vi. 36, in which was the altar; and an outward court, which is called the great court, 2 Chron. iv. 9, and in Ezekiel, many times, the outward court. This is called the house, in the First Book of Kings, chap. vi. 17. It was in length forty cubits; the oracle was within it, ver. 19, where stood the ark covered with the cherubims. Into the inward court the priests and Levites only came; into the outward court came any of the Israelites. Herod, upon the additional building to the temple, added another large court, called the court of the Gentiles; but that not being of God's direction, nor in Solomon's temple, or Zerubbabel's, is not here mentioned. This temple was a type of the church under the New Testament, 1 Cor. iii. 17; 2 Cor. vi. 16, and is so to be interpreted generally in this book: for the material temple at Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans more than twenty years before this prophecy, never to be built more; not one stone was left upon another; so that

John here was bid to measure the church. And the altar, and them that worship therein; yet not the whole church, but that part of it which the inner court typified; the altar, and those that worshipped within that space where that was, which of old were only the priests and Levites; and under the New Testament signified those who were to be a holy priesthood, a spiritual house, those that should offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5, who could endure a measuring by God's reed, the word of God.

2 But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

e Ezek. 40.
17, 20.
+ Gr. out out.
d Pa. 70. 1.
e Luke 21. 24.
e Dan. 8. 10.
1 Mac. 3. 51.
f ch. 13. 5.

There is no great doubt, but the same persons are here to be understood by the court which is without the temple, (that is, without the inward court,) and the holy city; and by them, both the generality of those people who come under the name of the Christian church, who are all of them, in some sense, a holy people, 1 Cor. vii. 14, as all the Jews were; yet, for the greatest part of them, John is commanded to omit, or neglect them, as those who would not endure a measure by the reed, and of whose preservation God would take no such care, but give them up to the Gentiles, to be trodden under foot; by which many learned and good men understand God's suffering antichrist to have a power over and against them. I find some understanding by the altar, and them that worship therein, the primitive church, that for some hundreds of years after Christ kept close to the Divine rule, whom God preserved, though in the midst of the ten first persecutions: and by the outward court, the church after that time, which God suffered to fall under the power of the beast, and antichrist, that is, the papacy; which are well enough called the Gentiles, as bringing in Gentilism again into the church, and hardly differing in any thing, saving that the old heathens owned many supreme gods, and these new Gentiles but one. God showeth John here, that he would give up the outward court, or this holy city, the generality of Christians, to these Gentiles, that they should rule and domineer over them for forty and two months, the meaning of which we shall by and by show. A late pious and learned writer differs a little in his sense, as thinking that God here showeth John something further, viz. that under the sixth trumpet he would give the generality of those called Christians, that will not endure the measure of the reed, so over to antichrist, that they shall turn papists, and help to kill the Lord's witnesses; of which we shall speak, ver. 3. So as this is not a new prophecy, but a continuation of what shall happen after the sounding of the sixth, and before the sounding of the seventh trumpet: if so, I conceive that those words, shall they tread under foot forty and two months, must be understood, until the end of the forty-two months; for the forty-two months being the whole time of antichrist, or the beast, must be in a great measure spent before the sounding of the sixth angel. But it seems to be the opinion of this learned man, that a very great part of those who pretend to constitute the Reformed protestant church at this day, but are but as the outward court, not such as worship within the oracle, shall, before the sounding of the seventh trumpet, apostatize, and fall off to popery, until antichrist's one thousand two hundred and sixty days shall expire, and join with papists in the killing of the witnesses. The truth of which we must leave to the providence of God in time to discover; although whose considereth the face of things this day in Europe, (within which the greatest part of the Christian church is,) will judge there is too great a probability of what this learned man saith; but I dare determine nothing in it.

3 And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

h Or, I will give unto my two witnesses that they may prophesy.
g ch. 20. 4.
h ch. 19. 10. i ch. 12. 4.

And I will give power unto my two witnesses: there hath been a great dispute amongst godly and learned men, who these two witnesses should be: some have thought them to be Enoch and Elijah, who, though long since glorified, they have thought (with no great probability, as I suppose any indifferent person will judge) shall come again, and be killed on the earth; yet this is the general notion of the popish writers. Others would have them the two sorts of gospel churches, one of which was made up of native Gentiles, the other of Jews proselyted to the Christian faith. Others have interpreted it of the Old Testament and the New; others, of some two eminent divines; and as to them there have been various guesses: others, of the ministers whom God employed upon the Reformation: others, of a Christian magistracy and ministry. For my own part, the name of witnesses is so often applied to the first ministers of the gospel, Acts i. 22; ii. 32; iii. 15; iv. 33; v. 32; x. 41; xxii. 15; xxvii. 16; 1 Pet. v. 1; that I cannot but understand it of that faithful part of the ministry, who preach the gospel faithfully during the whole reign of antichrist. Neither do I think that the number two at all relates to their number, but to their witness-bearing; two being the number which God ordained as sufficient to establish all civil things, Deut. xvii. 6; xix. 15; Matt. xviii. 16; Heb. x. 28; unless there be a regard had to those pairs, which all along the Old Testament bare testimony for God; Moses and Aaron, Caleb and Joshua, Elijah and Elisha; and after the captivity, Zerubbabel and Joshua, and the two olive trees, mentioned Zech. iv. 11, 14, to which plainly this text hath relation, ver. 4. To which some also add Abraham and Lot, Ezra and Nehemiah, Haggai and Zechariah, Paul and Barnabas, Peter and John; and note, that when Christ first sent out his apostles, Matt. x., he sent them out two by two. And they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth: we read before, that the holy city, that is, the true church, should be trodden under foot by the Gentiles forty and two months; we read here, that the witnesses should prophesy in sackcloth a thousand two hundred and threescore days. It is apparent, that in the prophetic style a day signifies a year, Numb. xiv. 34, Forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years. So Ezek. iv. 6, I have appointed thee each day for a year. So Dan. ix. 24, the seventy weeks must signify four hundred and ninety years, (for in seventy weeks there are four hundred and ninety days,) or else the promise as to the coming of the Messiah failed. So the prophetic year contains three hundred and sixty years, and the prophetic month thirty years (for they did count thirty days to each month); so forty-two months are just one thousand two hundred and sixty days, that is, one thousand two hundred and sixty years. We shall find, chap. xii. 6, that the woman (that is, the church) was in the wilderness just this time, one thousand two hundred and sixty days; and in chap. xiii. 5, this was also the time of the beast that rose up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns: by which it appeareth, that these four things ran all parallel at the same time; the beast arising, and exercising his power; the new Gentiles trampling upon the church, the holy city; the woman's abiding in the wilderness; and the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth. If we could find out where any one of these began, we should find out the time of all the rest. Those who fix the rise of the beast in or about the year 400, must add to this 1260. Then in 1660 antichrist's reign should have determined, and also the time of the church's persecution, and the time when faithful ministers should prophesy in sackcloth: but if the rise of the beast were in the year 500, the expiration must be in 1760; if it be fixed in 600, all these things will determine in 1860; for the same number of days being assigned to all the four, it is manifest that all four began together, and shall end together, and that at the end of a thousand two hundred and sixty years after the beginning of them. For my own part, I look upon it as very hard to determine: but the difficulty lies in finding out the time when the beast first arose; for that being once found out, it is easy to conclude from Scripture, when both the popedom shall have an end, and the calamitous time for the church, especially the ministry of it, shall cease. That which God showeth John in this verse, is only, that his faithful ministers that should truly reveal his will, (which is here called prophesying,) should have a mournful time for a thousand two hundred and threescore years.

1 Pet. 22, 6.
Jer. 11, 16.
Zech. 4, 3, 11, 14.

4 These are the <sup>h</sup>two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

Here is a manifest allusion to Zechariah's vision, Zech. iv. 2, 3, 11—14, though with some little difference. He saw a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which were upon the top thereof: and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof. The angel tells him, that these two olive branches which through the two golden pipes did empty the golden oil out of themselves, were the two anointed ones, or the two sons of oil, that stood by the Lord of the whole earth. By which some understand Zerubbabel and Joshua; some, those godly magistrates and priests, which after the captivity the Jewish church should have, and prefigured a gospel ministry, who being filled with knowledge and grace, should feed the Lord's church (as pastors after his own heart) with wisdom and understanding, from the gifts and graces of God's Holy Spirit, which they should receive; which further confirmeth me, that by the two witnesses, ver. 3, we are to understand a godly magistracy and ministry, or rather the latter only, to whom prophesying most strictly agreeth, and who have a more special relation to the candlesticks here mentioned, by which churches are meant, chap. i. 20. And the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth: in Zechariah's vision was but one candlestick, how comes here a mention to be made of two: Mr. Mede confesseth himself at a loss here, unless here another candlestick be added to signify the Gentiles' conversion to Christ. Others think that it denoteth the small number of gospel churches that should be left; they were reckoned seven, chap. i. 20; here they are reduced to two. Possibly it may denote the different state of God's church. In the Old Testament God had but one church, viz. that of the Jews; but now he hath many churches, and they are all fed from faithful ministers, as olive branches pouring out their oil of grace and knowledge upon them.

5 And if any man will hurt them, <sup>1</sup>fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: <sup>m</sup>and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

And if any man will hurt them; that is, my faithful ministers, the two olive branches before mentioned, which fill the candlesticks with oil. Fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: here is a plain allusion to the stories of Moses and Elijah, calling for fire from heaven; but God showeth, that the victory of his ministers under the gospel shall not be by a miraculous fire called for down from heaven, (as Elijah hurt the captains and their bands sent to apprehend him,) but by fire out of their mouths; according to that, Jer. v. 14, Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them: see also Jer. i. 9, 10. This also is according to Zechariah's vision before mentioned, and the revelation of the will of God in it, ver. 6, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. The meaning is, that they shall be too hard for them, either by their faithful, lively, and powerful preaching, or by their fervent prayers.

6 These <sup>n</sup>have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and <sup>o</sup>have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

It is plain that here is an allusion to Elijah, who prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months, James v. 17; see the story, 1 Kings xvii. 1: and to Moses, who turned the waters into blood in Egypt; and after was an instrument to smite the land of Egypt with plagues. But what power analogous to this the ministers of the gospel have had, or have, is not easy to determine. It is certain, the apostles had a miraculous power, but they rarely used it, but in doing good to men; Ananias and Sapphira indeed were struck dead upon their word, Acts v.; and 12 Kings 1.

10, 12, Jer.
1, 10, & 5, 14.
Ezek. 43, 3.
Hos. 6, 5.
m Numb. 16.
29.

n 1 Kings
17, 1, James
5, 16, 17.
o Ex. 7, 19.

Elymas the sorcerer was struck blind by them; but this power is long since ceased. Mr. Mede understands this power of the keys of doctrine and church censures the ministers of the gospel should be intrusted with; so as they should not preach the gospel unto such as contemned their ministry; by the withholding of which means of grace, also, they would be deprived of the dew of heavenly grace. And, indeed, this seemeth more proper than to understand it of the keys of discipline; for what power of this nature have ministers over those who are without? I take a general explication to be the best. If any hurt them, God shall revenge their cause, not only by spiritual, but by temporal judgments, bringing all manner of evils upon their adversaries. They are said to have power to do it, because God will do it in the revenge of the injuries done unto them.

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

And when they shall have finished their testimony; ὅταν τελήσωσι: Mr. Mede notes, that this is ill translated by the preterperfect tense; the true English of it is, when they shall be about to finish their testimony: when they have prophesied in sackcloth the most of their twelve hundred and sixty years, they shall meet with ultimum conatum antichristi, the last struggle of the beast for life. The beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, that is, the beast mentioned chap. xiii. 1, 4, (by which the papacy is meant, whom they have plagued all the time of their prophecy, though continual sufferers from it,) shall make war against them; shall get life again, and make one push more, possibly the sharpest yet made; and shall overcome them, and kill them; and be too hard for them, and kill them. It is a great question, whether this be to be understood of taking away their natural lives, or of a civil death relating to them as witnesses, making them as if they were naturally dead. The latter of these seemeth to me much the more probable, for these reasons: 1. Supposing the godly magistracy, or ministry, or the latter alone, to be the two witnesses, it doth not seem probable that ever the papacy shall so far prevail, as to kill all such over the face of the whole church. 2. Neither is the Holy Ghost here speaking of them as men, but as witnesses. 3. Nor would either friends or enemies suffer dead bodies to be unburied three days and a half, in the street of a great city, as ver. 8, 9. 4. Neither is their resurrection, mentioned ver. 11, to be understood of a corporal resurrection. I take therefore the killing here mentioned, to be understood of a destroying them as witnesses, turning magistrates out of their places, and ministers out of their places; though it be not probable that such a malice and hatred as should cause this, should terminate without the blood of some of them; but that surely is not the thing principally here intended.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

Their bodies dead, in the sense before mentioned, shall continue so for three days and a half, of which we shall speak, ver. 11. But what is here meant, 1. By the great city? 2. By the street of the great city? Some, by the great city, would have Jerusalem understood; but that was now far from a great city, nor do the addition of those words in the latter end of the verse prove it; for Christ was not crucified in that city, but without the gates. Most judicious interpreters, by the great city here, understand Rome, which is seven or eight times (under the name of Babylon) so called in this book, chap. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xviii. 10, 16, 18, 19, 21; nor is any other city but that so called. This great city is here said, in a spiritual sense, to be Sodom and Egypt; Sodom, for whoredom and filthiness; Egypt, for oppression of the Lord's Israel. As to the second question, what is here meant by the street of the great city? Mr. Mede hath irrefragably proved, that it cannot be meant of any parish, or such place in this city, as we call a street: 1. Because our Lord was crucified neither in any street, or parish, or any other place within the walls of Jerusalem. 2. Both Jerusalem and Rome had many more than one street. 3. Because the bodies being dead, doubtless lay in the place where they were slain; but men do not use to fight in the streets of cities. 4. Nor was that a place for all people, kindred, tongues, and nations, to see them in. He therefore rightly judgeth, that the Greek word which we translate street, signifies the territories and jurisdiction of this city. See what he says to justify this in his Clavis Apocal. 40. p. 138. And this makes the last clause plain; for though our Lord was not crucified within any city, or in the street of any city, yet he was crucified in a place belonging to the jurisdiction of the Roman emperor; and it is very likely that it is in Europe that the witnesses shall be slain, which, in this sense, was all of it a street belonging to the city of Rome.

9 And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations; that is, a multitude of people of all sorts shall take notice of this suppression of these two witnesses in their bearing witness for God, and all the cruel dealings with them. Shall see their dead bodies three days and an half: there are great disputes what time these three days and an half denote: it cannot be understood of three natural, or artificial days; for (as it is noted by the most judicious interpreters) this is much too short a time for all people to see their dead bodies, to rejoice over them, and to make merry, and to send gifts one to another in testification of the satisfaction of their lusts, upon the victory got over them. I find some understand these three days and an half of the one thousand two hundred and sixty years, wherein they prophesied in sackcloth, ver. 3, which they thus make out; they first conclude, that these are prophetic days, and so signify three years and a half; then they resolve each of those years into days, and count three times three hundred and sixty days (for in those countries they say the year was counted to contain but three hundred and sixty days); to which they add one hundred and eighty, the half of three hundred and sixty, for the half day, which make up one thousand two hundred and sixty days, or forty-two months; which is the just time both of the beast's reign, and of the woman's abode in the wilderness, and of the witnesses' prophesying in sackcloth, and of the Gentiles' treading down the outward court. 1. But it seems very hard, thus first to make the three days three years in a prophetic sense, and then again to resolve those years into days, and make those days so many more years; this looks as much like oppression to the text, as the counting interest upon interest to a debtor. 2. It plainly confounds the time of the prophesying of the witnesses in sackcloth, with the time of their lying dead. Now although the time of their lying dead must be within the one thousand two hundred and sixty days, in the latter end thereof, (for it must be within the beast's forty-two months, mentioned chap. xiii. 5,) yet it seems hard to make it as long as the beast's reign. It certainly signifies a time toward the end of the beast's reign, when there shall be a more eminent and universal suppression of the faithful witnesses of Christ than ever was before: it seemeth therefore rather to be understood more generally for a short time, as much such a phrase or way of speaking is used, Hos. vi. 2, or else for a determinate time of such three years and a half as we ordinarily count. I must confess the half day being added, makes me more incline to the latter; for though it be usual with us to express a short time by, two or three days, and this seems by that text of Hosea to have been an ancient way of speaking, yet we do not use to put in half days when we so speak. I do therefore agree with those who think the time here specified is to be understood of three ordinary years and a half; and the rather, because this is the very time that Christ was under the power of the Pharisees. As three days (that is, part of them) was the time of his being under the power of death, so three years and a half was the just time of all the indignity that he suffered from his manifestation to the world, to his death: and (as we read in 1 Macc.) it was the just time of Antiochus's oppressing of the Jews, whom divines judge that Daniel, in his 11th chapter, makes a t ch. 18. 8.

 & 17. 1, 5.
 & 18. 10.
 u Heb. 13. 12.
 ch. 18. 24.

x ch. 17. 15.

y Ps. 79. 2, 3.

type of antichrist. And shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves: divines are divided whether these words be to be understood of enemies or friends. If it be to be understood of friends, the death being a civil death principally that was spoken of, it signifieth the providence of God so working for his witnesses, by the adherence of a party to them, that their adversaries the popish party should not wholly extinguish them; which hath been seen all along the story of the church: though their adversaries have been warring against them, overcome and killed them, yet they have not been able to bury them; nor shall they be able to do it at this last pinch, when they shall have a greater victory over them than ever before, and kill them to a further degree. But methinks the phrase rather signifies this an act of enemies, who, to show their further malice to them, and contempt and scorn of them, are said to be so inhuman, as not to suffer their dead bodies to be buried.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 12. 12. <sup>f</sup> & 13. 8. 10 * And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, <sup>a</sup> and shall send gifts one to another; <sup>b</sup> because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

It is plain by the repeating of the same words in the close of the verse, that by those that dwell upon the earth are meant earthly, carnal men, whether papists or atheists; men that are mad upon their lusts; for these are those in whose consciences faithful and powerful preaching breeds a torment and uneasiness, so as they always count godly ministers their enemies, (as Ahab told Elijah,) and are not able to bear their words (as the Israelites could not bear the words of Amos). Shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; these therefore shall keep holiday, when they see these their enemies conquered, and show all signs and expressions of joy. These preachers were they that hindered them from a quiet sleep in their beds of lust. Because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth; and though they fought against them only with a fire going out of their mouths, as prophets declaring the will of God to be contrary to their lewd practices, and denouncing God's wrath against those that did such things; yet their preaching made their heads ache, partly by alarming their consciences, so as they often flew in their faces; and by it they were exposed to the reproach of people, as living directly contrary to the Divine rule, and in defiance of his law: thus they torment wicked men, who therefore always did, and always will, triumph in their suppression, or in any evil that shall betide them. And as they see their suppression greater than ever before, (as it will be undoubtedly during these three years and a half,) so the triumph of lewd and wicked men will be proportionably more, though it will be but like a widow's joy, for a short time, for it will appear that their dead bodies were not put into the grave.

<sup>c</sup> ver. 9. 11 * And after three days and an half <sup>d</sup> the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

And after three days and an half; after that short time which God had determined for antichrist, (just before his time should be expired,) or after the precise time of forty-two months, or three years and a half, was expired, when the Gentiles thought they had fully prevailed, and should be no more troubled with Christ's witnesses. The Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; God, who alone can quicken the dead, reviveth them, and restoreth them again to their employment as his prophets; for it is plain this cannot be understood of a corporal resurrection: for, 1. Their death was not of that nature; nor, 2. Doth the Scripture give us any hints of any such resurrection before the coming of Christ to the last judgment. And great fear fell upon them which saw them; this strikes a great fear into all their enemies, amazed to think what God was about to do, and rightly presaging this would be their ruin.

It is a great question now, whether the time here spoken of for slaying the witnesses, and their rising again, be past, or yet to come. I must confess, the papacy had got such a victory over the faithful witnesses of Christ for some ages before the Reformation began in Germany, about the year 1517, and there was so sudden a resurrection of them in the first Reformers, brought to pass and carried on by such a stupendous series of providences, that I cannot wonder that some did think the time past: but we who have out-lived that time more than one hundred and fifty years, seeing the Turks (whom all judicious interpreters make the four angels, bound by the river Euphrates, loosed) still so rampant, and the papacy still so predominant, and daily treading down the outward court, have no reason to judge the slaying of the witnesses yet over, at least that they are yet risen, and standing upon their feet; or that the seventh angel hath yet sounded; but that we are as yet under the period of time signified by the sounding of the sixth trumpet; and to expect a further degree of this evening before it will be light over the universal church (for we must not think any particular church intended here): and this appears most probable also from what followeth before the sounding of the seventh angel, ver. 15.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. * And they ascended up to heaven <sup>e</sup> in a cloud; <sup>f</sup> and their enemies beheld them.

And they, that is, the two witnesses, so often before spoken of, heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither; heard God by a singular providence calling them again to their former work and station in his church; or (as some) to a higher and more famous place in his church than they formerly enjoyed; for by heaven the most and best interpreters understand the church, as it often signifies in this book. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them; and this was done in the face of their enemies. In this sense of this verse I find the generality of judicious interpreters agreed.

13 And the same hour <sup>h</sup> was there a great earthquake, <sup>i</sup> and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain <sup>j</sup> of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, <sup>k</sup> and gave glory to the God of heaven.

And the same hour; that is, about the same time, when the Spirit of life from God entered into the witnesses, and they were again restored. Was there a great earthquake; by earthquake doubtless is here meant a great confusion in the world, and shaking of nations by differences one with another, and wars: see the notes on chap. vi. 12. And the tenth part of the city fell; by the city is doubtless meant the great city before named, spiritually called Sodom and Egypt; elsewhere, Babylon; by which Rome is to be understood. What is meant by the tenth part of it falling, is not so well agreed; some by it understanding many kingdoms falling off from its jurisdiction; others a great part of its tribute or dominion. And in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: these words seem to intimate that the restoration of the witnesses shall not be without opposition, and that the opposition shall not be great; seven thousand is a small number to fall in such a quarrel: but the papal party shall appear to have cheated the world so with their impostures, and so to have imposed upon them, that the world shall grow sick of them, and when the time comes for God to put a final period to them, the number shall be but few that adventure for them. And the remnant were affrighted; others shall be affrighted, either from their own consciences, or from the stupendous dispensations of Divine Providence in the fall of the great city. And gave glory to the God of heaven; and give glory to God, by confessing their errors, and turning to an ingenuous and sincere acknowledgment of the truth. Instead of worshipping saints, and angels, and images, worshipping the true and living God of heaven and earth only.

14 <sup>l</sup> The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

The second woe is past; that is, here endeth the misery that is like to come upon the world in that period of time which shall follow the sounding of the sixth trumpet. And, behold, the third woe cometh quickly: the third woe signifies

<sup>e</sup> 1a. 14. 13. <sup>f</sup> ch. 12. 5. <sup>g</sup> 1a. 60. 8. <sup>h</sup> Acts 1. 9. <sup>i</sup> 2 Kings 2. 1, 5, 7.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 6. 12. <sup>i</sup> ch. 16. 19.

<sup>j</sup> Gr. names of men. <sup>k</sup> ch. 3. 4. <sup>l</sup> Josh. 7. 19. <sup>m</sup> ch. 14. 7. & 15. 4.

<sup>l</sup> 1 ch. 6. 13. <sup>m</sup> & 9. 12. & 15. 1.

those calamities which should come in that period of time prophesied of by the sounding of the seventh trumpet; this makes a late learned author think that all that which went before, viz. the Gentiles treading down the outward court, the slaying of the witnesses, and their resuscitation, must be under the sixth trumpet; which period endeth not until the church's enemies be ready to be destroyed; whose destruction is afterwards opened to us in the angels pouring out their vials.

m ch. 10. 7. 15 And <sup>m</sup>the seventh angel sounded; <sup>n</sup>and there were great voices in heaven, saying, °The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; <sup>p</sup>and he shall reign for ever and ever.

And the seventh angel sounded; the last of those angels mentioned chap. viii. 2. And there were great voices in heaven, saying; St. John in his vision heard great acclamations and shoutings for the victory which Christ and his gospel had got over the beast. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever; so that a great part of the world, casting off the papacy, that new Gentilism, together with all their abominable idolatries and superstitions, embraced the truth of the gospel. Here ariseth a great question, whether the seven vials, of which we shall find the 16th chapter treating, do belong all to the seventh trumpet, or some of them belong to the sixth trumpet, of which mention hath been before made. Great divines are on both sides as to this question. Mr. Pool, in his Latin Synopsis, hath collected together their reasons, of which I shall give a short account, leaving my reader for a fuller satisfaction to the Latin Synopsis.

Those who think that the seven vials do all relate to the seventh trumpet, and contemporize with it, in defence of their opinion say,

1. That the seven seals, and the seven trumpets, and the seven vials, are all mentioned in the same form of speech; and therefore the seven vials are not to be divided, some to one trumpet, some to another.

2. Because the seventh trumpet and the seven vials are one and the same thing, nothing being revealed under the seven vials which doth not belong to the seventh trumpet; they agree in their titles of woes, in the nature of the revelations, in their objects, both the one and the other declaring the ruin of antichrist; both of them are mentioned as the last plagues to come upon the world before the last day.

3. All the vials are of the same nature, declaring by the judgments by which God, setting up the kingdom of Christ, would ruin antichrist; they only differ in the degrees of the plagues, each one rising higher than the other.

4. The seventh trumpet cannot declare the ruin of antichrist, unless the seven vials be poured out under it, for they show the means by which he must be destroyed.

5. The seventh trumpet soundeth immediately upon the slaying of the witnesses, and contemporizeth with the whole course of their renewed liberty, and therefore the period signified by it must be before the fall of antichrist, declared by the sixth vial.

6. The seventh trumpet soundeth immediately after the expiration of the twelve hundred and sixty days; before the end of which none of the vials were poured out.

Those who think that divers of the vials were poured out, or shall be poured out, before the sounding of this seventh trumpet, say, that the beast's kingdom beginning to fall under the sixth trumpet, several of the vials, declaring the degrees of his falling, must belong to that. It appeareth by all we have in this chapter from ver. 7 to 15, that antichrist's kingdom was in a great measure weakened under the sixth trumpet, particularly from ver. 11—13. To which those who think that all the vials related to the seventh trumpet say, that they grant that there were some preparations to the final ruin of antichrist, during the period of the sixth trumpet, but the seven vials signify the further progress and perfection of his ruin, which falls under the period signified by the seventh trumpet. This being premised, I proceed with the text.

It is doubted here whether those words, are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, be to be understood as being actually so, or now beginning to be so. Those who make the sense that they now actually were so, must understand the time to be the day of judgment, or some time next to it, and consequently must think that five at least of the seven vials, mentioned chap. xvi., belonged to the sixth trumpet. Those who make the sense, are beginning to become the kingdoms of the Lord, or shall shortly be so, may make all the seven vials to belong to the seventh trumpet. By becoming the kingdoms of the Lord Christ, he means in outward profession; so as antichrist shall reign no more, but they shall be ruled by the officers of the Lord Christ, until they be taken up to reign with him in glory.

16 And <sup>q</sup>the four and twenty elders, <sup>r</sup>which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,

I take this to signify no more than the triumph of the saints and angels in heaven upon this victory of the Lord over antichrist, and the promoting of Christ's kingdom; and certainly if there be joy in heaven upon the conversion of one sinner, as we are told, Luke xv. 7, we must imagine a much greater joy upon the conversion of nations and kingdoms unto Christ.

17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, <sup>s</sup>'which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, <sup>t</sup>and hast reigned.

Which art, and wast, and art to come; it is a phrase denoting God's eternity and immutability; we met with it before, chap. iv. 8. Because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned; those celestial beings bless God for exerting his power, and recovering the kingdom of Christ out of the hands of antichrist, and setting his King upon his holy hill of Zion.

18 <sup>u</sup>'And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, <sup>v</sup>and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, <sup>w</sup>small and great; <sup>x</sup>and shouldest destroy them which <sup>y</sup>|| destroy the earth.

And the nations were angry; those who have not been of thy true Israel, but old or modern Gentiles, they have been angry long enough. And thy wrath is come; now it is time for thee to show thyself angry, and thou hast begun to do it. And the time of the dead, that they should be judged; the time is come for thee to judge the cause of thy faithful witnesses, and all those who have died in testimony to thy truth. And that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets; and for thee to reward such as have faithfully revealed thy will. And to the saints; and not only them, but all thy holy ones. And them that fear thy name, small and great; without respect to their quality in the world, be they little or great. And shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth; the time also is come, when thou hast destroyed, or wilt destroy, that antichristian brood, which so long hath plagued the earth, and destroyed thy people in it.

19 And <sup>z</sup>'the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and <sup>a</sup>'there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, <sup>b</sup>and great hail.

And the temple of God; some here, by the temple of God, understand the representation of the temple in Jerusalem; others understand the church triumphant; others, the church of Christ militant here upon earth. Was opened in heaven: accordingly, by heaven they understand either the natural heavens, or the Christian church: it seemeth to be a plain allusion to the Jewish church, whose temple was ordinarily shut up in the time of wicked and idolatrous princes, who regarded not the true worship of God; so as all the time of Saul's reign the ark abode in the private house of Obed-edom; and when Josiah came to reign, he found the temple neglected all the days of his father Amon and grandfather Manasseh, and the book of the law in the rubbish. But when good princes came to the throne, such as Hezekiah and Josiah, they opened the temple, restoring the true worship of God. So under the New Testament, during the whole reign of antichrist, where he prevails, idolatry and superstition obtain, and the true worship of God is suppressed; but his time being now expiring, God showeth John that there shall be a restoring of the true worship of God, and a liberty both to ministers and people to worship God according to his will. For though antichrist was not yet wholly destroyed, nor his party extinguished, yet he had lost his power and dominion, and God was now beginning to reckon with him for the blood of his saints; which was all to be done before all the kingdoms of the world should become the kingdoms of the Lord Christ. And there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: in the temple of old, the ark of the covenant was the great symbol of God's presence; hence God is said to have dwelt betwixt the cherubims. In the ark were the two tables of the law; so as this phrase may either note the pure, free, and ordinary expounding of the law of God, which should be upon the downfall of antichrist; or the presence of God with his church in that more pure and reformed state. But such a work of providence being not like to be effected without the ruin of antichrist, God showeth it shall be ushered in with lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and great hail; by terrible things in righteousness, as the palmist speaketh. The consequents of which were the seven vials, of which we shall read, chap. xvi., pouring out plagues upon the antichristian party, until they should be wholly rooted out and Christ alone should be exalted in his church, and rule as King upon his holy hill of Zion.

From this mysterious portion of holy writ thus opened, it appeareth that God, in these foregoing chapters, hath (though more summarily) instructed his prophet in what should come to pass to the final ruin of the Roman empire, (considered as pagan, that is, till Constantine's time,) and also of the reign of antichrist. From whence it must needs follow, that whatsoever followeth this chapter, and cannot be applied to the time of Christ's kingdom, must contemporize with something which went before, and belong to some period comprehended under the vision of the seals, or of the trumpets. The next three chapters are judged to relate wholly to things past, God therein representing to his prophet the state of his church (as some think) from the nativity of Christ; however, from his time, during the whole time that Rome continued pagan, or should continue antichristian; the following chapters showing the gradual destruction of antichrist by the seven last plagues.

CHAP. XII

A woman clothed with the sun travaileth, 1, 2. A great red dragon standeth ready to devour her child, 3, 4. She is delivered, and fleeth into the wilderness, 5, 6. Michael and his angels fight with the dragon, who is cast out of heaven with his angels, 7—9. The victory proclaimed in heaven, 10—12. The dragon, cast down to the earth, persecuteth the woman, 13—17.

<sup>1</sup> Or, sign. AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

And there appeared a great wonder in heaven: I see no reason to doubt, but that John was all this while in heaven, whither he was taken up, chap. iv. 2, where he saw in a vision a great wonder, or a most remarkable thing. A woman clothed with the sun; I find all valuable interpreters agreeing, that this woman represented the church, well enough compared to a woman; 1. As she is the spouse of Christ (though here expressed as his mother.) 2. As the woman is the weaker sex, and the church hath always been the weakest part of the world. (I look upon the interpretation of it by popish authors, with reference to the virgin Mary, as very idle; for when did she flee into the wilderness? when was she with child, and pained to be delivered?) Interpreters also are as well agreed, that by the sun, with which she is said to be clothed, is meant Christ, called the Sun of righteousness, Mal. iv. 2, and he who giveth light, Eph. v. 14; and believers (of whom the church consists) are said to have put on Christ, Rom. xiii. 14; Gal. iii. 27. And the moon under her feet: by the moon, most understand the world, by reason of its mutability and uncertainty, which the church of Christ despiseth, and hath under her feet, minding heaven and heavenly things. But Mr. Mede rather understands it of the Jewish worship, which, as to its times, was much directed by the moon; which hand-writing which was against us (the apostle tells us, Col. ii. 14) Christ took away, nailing it to his cross; so as the gospel church hath it under her feet. The apostle calls them carnal ordinances, Heb. ix. 10, and the rudiments of the world, Col. ii. 20, yea, beggarly elements, Gal. iv. 9. And upon her head a crown of twelve stars; the ministry of the gospel, preaching and building upon the true foundation, the doctrine of the prophets, and twelve apostles, which is the honour of any church.

2 And she being with child cried, <sup>a</sup>travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. <sup>a</sup> Is. 66. 7. Gal. 4. 19.

Being with child; not with Christ considered personally, who was long before brought forth by the virgin Mary, but with the truth, and gospel of Christ, or with Christ mystical. Cried; desiring to bring many children to the kingdom of Christ; or to bring forth Christ in the souls of others: of this burden and labour she desired to be delivered. The phrase is judged to signify both the primitive church's desire to propagate the gospel, and also her many sufferings for that endeavour.

3 And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, <sup>c</sup>having seven heads and ten horns, <sup>d</sup>and seven crowns upon his heads. <sup>1</sup> Or, sign. <sup>b</sup> ch. 17. 3. <sup>c</sup> ch. 17. 9. <sup>d</sup> ch. 13. 1.

And there appeared another wonder in heaven; there appeared to John, being yet in his vision, another amazing sight, which was a sign or type of something differing from what it appeared like. And behold a great red dragon: see ver. 7, 9, 17. Most judicious interpreters, by the great red dragon, understand the Roman emperors that first persecuted the Christian church, of which Claudius was the first; yet some understand it of the devil, the old serpent; but the most and best interpreters understand it of the pagan emperors, by whom the devil did this work, called a great dragon, because of the vastness of that empire; and a red dragon, for their cruelty against the Christians. Having seven heads; the Holy Ghost, chap. xvii. 9, hath expounded these seven heads, by seven mountains. The ten horns are thought to signify the ten provinces belonging to that empire, the governors of which ruled like ten kings. It is expounded by ten kings, chap. xvii. 12. Strabo tells us, that Augustus Cæsar divided the whole empire into twenty provinces; ten of which, being more quiet, he gave to the people to govern, the other ten he reserved to his own government. The seven crowns are expounded by seven kings, chap. xvii. 10, of which we shall speak more when we come so far.

4 And <sup>e</sup>his tail drew the third part <sup>f</sup>of the stars of heaven, <sup>g</sup>and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood <sup>h</sup>before the woman which was ready to be delivered, <sup>i</sup>for to devour her child as soon as it was born. <sup>e</sup> ch. 9. 10. <sup>f</sup> ch. 17. 18. <sup>g</sup> Dan. 8. 10. <sup>h</sup> ver. 2. <sup>i</sup> Ex. 1. 16.

The tail of the red dragon signifies his followers, his civil and military officers, whosoever were by him employed to execute his commands. By the stars, here, are either meant the ministers of the Christian church, or the professors of it. And did cast them to the earth; turning them out of their places and stations, making them as useless as he could. And the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born; that is, before the church that was ready to propagate itself, watching upon her increase to devour them. I take this to be a much more probable sense than theirs who understand it of Constantine; for I know not, with reference to him, who should be understood by the red dragon. Mr. Mede hath ingeniously observed, that Pharaoh was a type of this red dragon. He is resembled by a dragon, Psal. lxxiv. 13, 14; Isa. li. 9; Ezek. xxix. 3, and watched upon God's ancient church to destroy it, as the pagan emperors did upon the Christian church.

5 And she brought forth a man child,<sup>k</sup> who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

By this man-child some understand Constantine the Great; others understand Christ mystical, or many children brought forth unto God. As the Jews multiplied, do Pharaoh what he could to destroy them, so the church increased, notwithstanding all the malice and rage of her enemies. Interpreters accordingly are divided concerning the person or persons here spoken of, that should rule all nations with a rod of iron. It was prophesied of Christ, Psal. ii. 9, that he should break the nations with a rod of iron. It is applied to the servants of Christ, who overcome, and keep Christ's words to the end, chap. ii. 27. So as it is here applicable to believers, whom the church should bring forth, who shall judge the world, as the apostle tells us; and I had rather thus interpret it, than concerning Constantine the Great. And her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne: these words are something hard to be interpreted. To interpret it of Christ's being taken up into heaven, is to turn a mysterious prophecy into a plain relation, or history of things past. To interpret it concerning Constantine the Great, seemeth very hard; for how was he, more than any other Christians, caught up unto God, and to his throne? If we say, when he died; so are they: if we say the imperial throne is here understood by God's throne, it seemeth to me very hard; for although of magistrates God saith, I have said, Ye are gods, yet their thrones are never called God's throne. I had rather give this phrase a more general interpretation, viz. God took this offspring of the woman into his royal protection, so as the dragon could not devour it, it was out of his reach.

6 And<sup>l</sup> the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there<sup>m</sup> a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

And the woman fled into the wilderness: as the Israelites, when they fled from Pharaoh, went into the wilderness; and Joseph, watched upon by Herod, fled into Egypt; so the church did hide herself during the antichristian persecutions, every one shifting for themselves as well as they could. Where she hath a place prepared of God; God provided for them in some more obscure places.

7 And there was war in heaven: <sup>n</sup> Michael and his angels fought <sup>o</sup> against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

And there was war in heaven: by heaven, in this place, doubtless is meant the church of God; and supposing that the pagan emperors are to be understood by the dragon, (which is pretty generally agreed,) there can be no great doubt, but by this war in heaven, is to be understood those persecutions which the primitive church endured betwixt the years 64 and 310. Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels: the two parties were the pagan emperors, and their officers, and party, and Michael and his angels. But who is here meant by Michael and his angels? Some, by this Michael, understand a principal angel called the archangel, Jude 9, one of the chief princes, Dan. x. 13. Others, by Michael here understand Christ himself, who, they think, is understood by Michael, Dan. xii. 1. The matter is not much; it is most certain that the battle is not ours, but Christ's. It is as certain that Christ exerciseth his power by his angels, and that they have a ministrations about his church. The meaning is no more than this, that Christ and his party opposed the pagan persecutors and their party.

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

The pagans were at length routed in this battle; the Christians overcame them by the preaching of the gospel, and by their faith and patience; and paganism found no place within the same territories where the church was. This was fulfilled in the time of Constantine the Great, who altered the face of the Roman empire; and more eminently in the time of Theodosius, about the year 380.

9 And<sup>p</sup> the great dragon was cast out,<sup>q</sup> that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan,<sup>r</sup> which deceiveth the whole world:<sup>s</sup> he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

And the great dragon was cast out; the dragon mentioned ver. 3, which typified the pagan emperors. In casting them out, the devil who influenced them, was cast out, who is here called the old serpent, with reference to the form in which he seduced Eve, as well as his malignity to man. The devil, that is, the accuser of the brethren, (of which we have an instance in Job i.) and Satan, which name he hath from his opposition to Christ and all Christians. Which deceiveth the whole world; by seducing them to idolatry and superstition. He was cast out into the earth; cast down from his former state. And his angels were cast out with him; the instruments he used in persecuting the church, were put out of power. Mr. Mede understands it of the demons which the heathens worshipped as inferior gods. John, being in his trance still, thought he saw a great red dragon, (which he judged to be the devil,) and Christ, or the good angels, fighting with and overcoming him; and that he saw the devil, and those evil angels assisting him, thrown down to the earth. This prophetically and typically signified, that though the Roman emperors, being pagans, should persecute the church upwards of three hundred years, yet they should be overthrown, and paganism, with all its idolatry and superstition, should be rooted out; which occasioned a great deal of glory to God from the praises and thanksgivings of his people, expressed in the next three verses.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven,<sup>t</sup> Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down,<sup>u</sup> which accused them before our God day and night.

And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven: John undoubtedly heard this voice as in the third heaven, whither he was caught; but it is not only expressive of the joy and satisfaction which the glorious angels and glorified saints had, upon their knowledge of what was done upon the earth, but prophetic of the great joy which should be over all the church, upon Constantine's stopping the persecution, and restoring peace to the church, by casting out all pagan idolatries and superstitions. Now is come salvation; temporal salvation, and deliverance from persecutors. And strength; now God hath showed himself a strong and mighty God. And the kingdom of our God; and the King of kings, who reigneth over all the earth. And the power of his Christ; now Christ hath shown his power. For the accuser of our brethren is cast down, who accused them before our God day and night; for the devil, who incessantly accuseth the saints, is overcome. Two things are here observable: 1. That the holy angels call the saints brethren. 2. That the accusers of Christians, for their piety towards God, are of their father the devil, for his works they do. Informers show who is their father, by accusing others, by murdering the servants of God; they differ no more than as elder and younger brethren, both are children of the same father.

11 And<sup>v</sup> they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; <sup>w</sup> and they loved not their lives unto the death.

And they overcame him; Michael and his angels, mentioned ver. 7, overcame the dragon and his angels: the Christians overcame the pagans. By the blood of the Lamb: some translate diá here, propter, because of, as denoting <sup>k</sup> Ps. 2. 9.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 2. 27. &
<sup>m</sup> 13. 15.

<sup>p</sup> Luke 10.
<sup>q</sup> 18. John 12.
<sup>r</sup> 31.
<sup>s</sup> Gen. 3. 1,
<sup>t</sup> ch. 20. 2.
<sup>u</sup> ch. 20. 3.
<sup>v</sup> ch. 9. 1.

<sup>l</sup> ver. 4.

<sup>m</sup> ch. 11. 3.

<sup>t</sup> ch. 11. 15.
<sup>u</sup> & 19. 1.

<sup>u</sup> Job 1. 9.
<sup>v</sup> & 2. 5.
<sup>w</sup> Zech. 3. 1.

<sup>n</sup> Dan. 10.
<sup>o</sup> 13, 21. & 12.
<sup>p</sup> 1.

<sup>q</sup> ver. 3.
<sup>r</sup> ch. 20. 2.

<sup>x</sup> Rom. 8.
<sup>y</sup> 33, 34, 37.
<sup>z</sup> & 16. 20.

<sup>y</sup> Luke 14.
<sup>z</sup> 26.

the meritorious cause, which is true; for Christ's blood was both the meritorious and exemplary cause of their victory. But this will not agree with the usage of the term in the next words. Others therefore rather choose to translate it, by, as denoting the efficient cause, whether principal (as was the blood of the Lamb) or instrumental. And by the word of their testimony; as was their preaching, and professing the gospel. And they loved not their lives unto the death; and by their patient bearing the cross, not shunning the danger of death, that they might preach Christ, and own his truths, and live up to the holy rule of his gospel.

<sup>e</sup> Ps. 96. 11.
<sup>h</sup> Is. 49. 13.
<sup>i</sup> ch. 18. 20.
<sup>k</sup> e. ch. 8. 13.
<sup>l</sup> & 11. 10.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. <sup>a</sup>Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, <sup>b</sup>because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 10. 6.

Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them: he calls to the angels and saints again to rejoice; some think, to the church also: these tell us, that the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea, in St. John's writings, always signify the enemies of the church, earthly, carnal men. For the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath; the devil now being divested of the power he exercised against the church, will fall upon you; for though he principally hateth the saints, as most opposite to him, yet he is the common hater of mankind. Because he knoweth that he hath but a short time; and he hath but a little time to execute his malice, he shall shortly be confined to the bottomless pit. It is hard to say whether here be intended all in general, or the worsor part of the world only; for great judgments after this came upon the whole Roman empire by the Goths and Vandals, and upon the church by the Arians, and by antichrist, of whose rise we shall read in the next chapter.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted <sup>c</sup>the woman which brought forth the man child.

<sup>c</sup> ver. 5.

And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth; when the devil saw that he could not uphold his kingdom by paganism, nor further execute his malice by pagan emperors, but was wholly routed and overcome, as to that power. He persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child; to let us know that he retained his malice, though he had lost his former power, he goes on in pursuing the church of God to its ruin, only doth it in another form; heretofore in the form of a pagan, now under the pretence of a Christian; by heretics, the spawn of Arius and Photinus, (who were before this time,) and by Pelagius, Nestorius, and Eutyches, who all were betwixt the years 400 and 500, and by antichrist, the beast we shall read of, chap. xiii. 1, with seven heads and ten horns.

<sup>d</sup> Ex. 19. 4.
<sup>e</sup> 1 Macc. 2.
<sup>f</sup> 29. 30. 31.
<sup>g</sup> e. ver. 6.
<sup>h</sup> ch. 17. 3.

14 <sup>d</sup>And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, <sup>e</sup>that she might fly <sup>f</sup>into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished <sup>g</sup>for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

<sup>g</sup> Dan. 7. 25.
<sup>h</sup> & 12. 7.

And to the woman; to the sincerer part of Christians, represented by the woman, ver. 1, and by the temple, and altar, and them that worship therein, viz. in the oracle where the altar stood, chap. xi. 1. Were given two wings of a great eagle: the eagle being the ensign of the Roman empire, and Theodosius having two sons, Honorius and Arcadius, betwixt which he divided the empire, making Honorius the emperor of the west, and Arcadius of the east, leadeth some very judicious interpreters to expound this passage of the providence of God (by this division of the empire about the year 390) in some measure securing his church from the great troubles that presently ensued. For in the year 411, Alaricus king of the Goths took Rome, and continual troubles so ensued, that by the year 480 the western empire was quite extinguished, ending in Augustulus, who, because of his manifold afflictions, is supposed to be the star mentioned chap. viii. 10, 11, called

Wormwood, who fell upon the sounding of the third trumpet. That she might fly into the wilderness: by the wilderness is here undoubtedly meant some places which were like a wilderness for solitariness, where the church might have some rest. Into her place; the place said to be by God prepared for the church, ver. 6. Where she is nourished; where God hid, and protected, and provided for his people a certain time, expressed in the next words. I know not whether we need be so critical or no, or whether it be not safer to expound all the foregoing words more generally, viz. that God graciously provided for his people hiding-places against the storm now coming upon the whole Roman empire, bearing them, as it were, on eagles' wings, as he did his old Israelites when he brought them out of the land of Egypt. It is the very phrase used by God, Exod. xix. 4. For a time, and times, and half a time: it is apparent, that the same space of time is here meant that is mentioned ver. 6, and called a thousand two hundred and threescore days. Most interpreters agree, that it signifieth three years and a half, consisting each of them of three hundred and sixty prophetic days, that is, years; for although we count three hundred and sixty-five days to the year, (and there are strictly so many, besides some odd hours,) yet anciently they counted but three hundred and sixty, leaving out the five odd days, as we do now the odd hours and minutes, which in four years make up an odd day, which makes every fourth year leap year. Now three times three hundred and sixty make up a thousand and eighty, to which add one hundred and eighty for the half year, it makes just a thousand two hundred and sixty, the number of days mentioned ver. 6. If any inquire why what was expressed by one thousand two hundred and sixty days there, is thus expressed here? it is answered, To make this comport with the prophecy of Daniel, chap. vii. 25; xii. 7, where it is thus expressed.

15 And the serpent <sup>h</sup>cast out of his <sup>i</sup>mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

And the serpent; the devil, the old serpent, mentioned ver. 9, being able no longer to execute his malice as a dragon, by the civil power of the heathen emperors, tearing Christians in pieces, but discerning the church secured by the special providence of God, went to work another way. Cast out of his mouth water as a flood; corrupting the judgments of several persons, who, out of the abundance of error in their hearts, preached corrupt doctrine. Such were the followers of Arius, Nestorius, Eutyches, Pelagius, &c. The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, Prov. xviii. 4. The mouth of the wicked poureth out evil things, Prov. xv. 28. That he might cause her to be carried away of the flood; on purpose to ruin the church: and, indeed, such were the ill effects of these heresies, that he who is but meanly versed in the history of the fifth age, will see reason to adore the providence of God, that the Roman emperors, upon the sight of them, did not again turn pagans, and add their force to the malice of these pretended Christians against the sincerer part of the church.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

And the earth helped the woman: there are divers notions here of the earth; to me theirs seemeth most probable, who understand by the earth the Goths and Vandals, &c., who, Anno 410, invaded the Roman empire, and gave it continual trouble, till they had put an end to the western empire, Anno 480. By whose continual contests with the subjects of the Roman empire, the church enjoyed some quiet in the exercises of religion; and though all this while they were troubled by the broods of Arians, Pelagians, Nestorians, and Eutychemians, yet they could do them no great hurt; and the church had a liberty to condemn them by the second and third general councils; in which, it is probable, there were many too that deserved no better name than the earth. And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth; but yet they served, in a great measure, to swallow up that flood of heresies which the devil threw out of his mouth by these heretics.

1 Gen. 3. 15.
ch. 11. 7.
12. 7.
k ch. 14. 12.
1 1 Cor. 2. 1.
1 John 5. 10.
ch. 1. 2. 9. #
6. a. & 30. 4.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

And the dragon was wroth with the woman: the devil hath been defeated in two designs against the whole church; he could not wholly root it out by the ten persecutions under the Roman emperors, nor by the water thrown out of his mouth, pestilent doctrines which he influenced some to broach; but he was angry still, his rage was not extinguished. And went to make war with the remnant of her seed; he gives over his design to ruin the whole church, as not practicable, but resolves to do all the mischief he could to the remnant of her seed, to particular Christians; those especially, which kept closest to the doctrine of faith, called here the testimony of Jesus Christ, and to the rule of a holy life, which is meant by keeping the commandments of God. Hence antichrist's rage hath not been against Christians in general, as was the pagans', but only against such Christians as he hath not been able to bring over to him, in a compliance with his corruptions in doctrine, worship, and discipline.

CHAP. XIII

A beast with seven heads and ten horns riseth out of the sea, to whom the dragon giveth his power, wherewith he blasphemeth God, and vexeth the saints, 1—10. Another beast cometh up out of the earth, which supporteth the worship of the former beast, 11—17. The number of the beast, 18.

God is now coming to show his prophet that grand enemy of his church, who is emphatically called antichrist; after the determination of whose time of one thousand two hundred and sixty years, the kingdom of Christ shall begin, whether in the day of judgment, or in some period of time before that, and here upon the earth, I dare not determine.

The rise, power, and prevalency of this adversary, is described in this chapter; the opposition made to him by Christ and his followers, chap. xiv.; his fall, chap. xv.—xviii.; for which praise is given to God, chap. xix.

This enemy of the church is showed to John by the symbol or representation of two beasts; the one having the body of a leopard, the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion; the other having two horns like a lamb, but speaking like a dragon, ver. 11.

The reader must understand, that the rise of these beasts, their rage, and prevalency, was contemporaneous with some of the six trumpets, mentioned chap. viii. and ix. For, chap. ix. 15, upon the sounding of the seventh trumpet antichrist began to fall; whose gradual fall we shall find more fully described in chap. xvi., by pouring out of the vials; only (as was before said) there is from chap. xii. a more particular description of what should happen to and in the church under the first six trumpets.

The best interpreters, by these two beasts, understand the antichrist, (for in a larger sense there are more antichrists than one,) and by the antichrist they understand the pope, as armed both with a secular and ecclesiastical power; yet I durst not conclude from that notion, the civil magistracy of the Roman empire, who either helped the pope into his chair, or held him there.

The greatest loss we are at, is to determine the time when the papacy began: it could not be before the pagan empire was thrown down, that was about the year 325, nor before the silence in heaven for half an hour was over, which (if that by it the rest be meant which the church enjoyed in the time of Constantine and Theodosius) was about the year 390, or 400; but if we fix the rise of the papacy there, I know no ground for it, and it would, besides, have been determined in the year 1660, or thereabouts. I think, therefore, we must distinguish betwixt the rise and reign of antichrist. It doth not seem to me reasonable to make his reign to commence higher than the year 600, or 606, when he arrogated to himself the primacy; and that was confirmed to Boniface the Third by Phocas, in requital of Boniface's kindness to him, who had got the empire by the base murder of Mauritius his master, and of all his children, and stood in need of the pope's help to support him. From that time, I judge, the one thousand two hundred and sixty years should be counted; but Nemo repente fit pessimus, we must allow the papacy some time to come to this virile estate from his cradle. And I see no great harm of allowing the two hundred years, from the year 400 to 600, for this. So that I do think that in this chapter is shortly revealed what should happen to the church from about the year 400, or the space of forty-two months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty years, the time of the beast's reign.

AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

a Dan. 7. 2, 7.
b ch. 12. 3.
17. 3, 9, 12.
1 Or, names.
ch. 17. 3.

And I stood upon the sand of the sea: the place of John's present residence was Patmos, which was an island, chap. i. 9. He was yet in a vision, but thought he was upon the sea-shore, either in Patmos, or elsewhere. And saw a beast rise up out of the sea; that is, as I should think, unexpectedly; for who would expect to see a leopard rise from thence? Having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns: this beast is described like the dragon, chap. xii. 3, (only that is described with but seven crowns,) by which we understand the devil in the heathen emperors of Rome; and we shall find it, ver. 2, so answering Daniel's vision of the four monarchies, that I cannot but think the Roman emperors, after the time of Theodosius, are meant, several of which were Arians, as also were the Goths and Vandals, (many of them,) who from the year 402 invaded the empire, and were not beaten out till 564, little above forty years before Boniface was confirmed in his primacy. And upon his heads the name of blasphemy: the Arians denying the eternal existence of Christ as God, may well be said to have the name of blasphemy upon them, or upon their heads: but whether by these ten heads be meant the ten sorts of governors made use of in the empire, or the ten governments into which the Goths and Vandals divided the empire, is not easy to determine, nor, possibly, much material. There are other notions about this beast: some would have it to be the devil, but he is plainly distinguished, ver. 2, 4, from the dragon. Some would have it to be the Turk; but we read of the worshipping of this beast, which is what we read not done to the Turkish emperors, who also began not till above the year 1200, (though indeed the Saracens began five hundred years before,) but Rome, which never was the Turk's seat, is made the seat of this beast. Some would have it to be idolatry itself; this was Grotius's notion: see the reasons against it in Mr. Pool's Synopsis Latina. Some would have it the pagan empire of Rome; but John never saw the first rise of that. This is a beast that rose after the dragon was cast down; which must be the Roman empire under the dominion of the papacy, in which respect only it is now one beast again; for otherwise in civil respects it is divided into ten crowned horns, i. e. distinct, independent kingdoms or principalities.

2 ° And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

c Dan. 7. 4.
d Dan. 7. 5.
e Dan. 7. 4.
f ch. 12. 3.
g ch. 12. 10.
h ch. 12. 4.

Daniel, in his vision of the Chaldaic, Persian, Grecian, and Roman monarchies, by which the world was successively ruled from his time to St. John's, and many years after, had the first represented to him by a lion, for its nobleness and fierceness; the second by a bear, for its cruelty; the third, by a leopard, for the smallness of its bulk, the swiftness of its conquests, its strength, &c.; the fourth, by a beast (not named) strong, and exceedingly terrible, that had great iron teeth, that devoured, and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue under its feet. This beast is certainly here described, which had several forms: John saw it at first under the representation of a red dragon, which signified that empire, while pagan, for three hundred years after Christ; in which time the old serpent could prevail nothing against the church. Then (after a rest to the church of a few years, which ended with Theodosius about the year 380 or 400) he saw it under the form of a leopard, ruled by Arian emperors till near 600. This beast had the feet of a bear and the mouth of a lion. These emperors, with the Goths and Vandals that were Arians, were as cruel to true Christians as the pagan emperors had been. Gimer, king of the Vandals, Anno 530, and the Goths under Totilas, 540, made miserable havoc amongst the Christians. And the dragon gave him his power; these together inherited both the power of the heathen emperors, and their seat, and Rome, which was their seat, or throne, and exercised their great authority. All this was done in the form of a leopard, not so terrible as that of a dragon; for the Arians disclaimed paganism, and the worship of pagan idols. All this while the papacy was creeping up, but till the year 552, or thereabouts, the Goths and Vandals, and other barbarous nations, were not driven out of Italy. Totilas (who took Rome Anno 547) was then killed, and Thejas succeeded him, who was the last king of the Goths in Italy, who about twenty years after was beaten by Narsetes, and driven out, after the Goths and Vandals had reigned in Italy about seventy-seven years.

1 rev. 12. 14. 3 And I saw one of his heads <sup>as it</sup> was † wounded to death; and his deadly † wound was healed: and †all the world wondered after the beast.

And I saw one of his heads; that is, the leopard's head. As it were wounded to death: the seven heads of this beast are interpreted by the Spirit of God himself, to be seven kings, chap. xvii. 10, i. e. seven forms of sovereign government in the Roman state, and these successive one to another; for it is said there, Five are fallen, and one is, and the other is yet to come: so that this head must be either that then in being, or that to come; it cannot be that to come, because that does not receive its fatal blow and deadly wound till the final dissolution of the Roman (as the fourth metal) monarchy; therefore it must be that head then in being, viz. that of the pagan emperors: and the wounding of this head to death, is the conquering the pagan emperors, and the abolishing of paganism and idolatry, and putting a stop to persecution by the Christian emperors; and his deadly wound was healed; and consequently this wound was healed when idolatry (for substance the same with the heathenish, though in a new dress) and persecution was restored (gradually) by the doctrine and practice of the Romish Church.

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, 'Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?'

And they worshipped the dragon: by the dragon, here, is to be understood the devil. Which gave power unto the beast; who gave power to these emperors; not that they did so directly, but interpretatively; they worshipped idols, which ordinarily in Scripture are called devils. And they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? possibly worshipping in this latter clause is not to be understood of a Divine adoration, but a civil subjection; people, upon the driving out of these their enemies, generally gave themselves up to the obedience of their emperors and the bishops of Rome, commanding them idolatrous worship; and admired these two, as those by whom they had been delivered from those enemies who had plagued them so long.

5 And there was given unto him <sup>as a</sup> mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him <sup>to</sup> to continue <sup>to</sup> forty and two months.

And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies: by him here must be meant antichrist, (as appears by the forty-two months, his period, being the same with one thousand two hundred and sixty days,) both the secular power of the emperors of Rome at this time, and the ecclesiastical power of the bishops of Rome concurrent to make one antichrist. God permitted, and the devil influenced, this beast to speak great things, as Dan. vii. 11, which is interpreted by the term blasphemies. Blasphemies against God signifies strictly any reproachful speeches against him, whether attributing to him the creature's imperfections, or denying him the perfection proper to him, or giving to the creature what belongs to God only, which blasphemy must be in all idolatry; for adoration is due unto God alone, and when this is given to any creature, there is both blasphemy in the doctrine which teacheth the lawfulness of it, and idolatry in the practice of it. And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months: these forty-two months are (as hath been before showed) the same term of time with one thousand two hundred and sixty days, and must be the term of antichrist, which was given him to tread down the outward court in; so as the beast here spoken of must be the antichrist, who began in the civil power of the Roman empire, but was quickly metamorphosed into the ecclesiastical power of the bishop of Rome; in comparison of whose power (after he had obtained the primacy) indeed the emperor's power was very small.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, <sup>and</sup> his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

That is, antichrist opened his mouth to blaspheme God. Mr. Mede noteth well, that antichrist's time must not be counted from his beginning to persecute, but from his beginning to blaspheme, either by maintaining pernicious doctrine, or setting up idolatrous worship; for till the year 1206, when the Inquisition was set up, (the doctrine of transubstantiation having been about that time decreed by Innocent the Third, and confirmed by the council of Lateran,) the persecution was not great. It is also the observation of the same learned author, that the threefold idolatry of the Church of Rome is here described to us; their blaspheming the Lord's name, by giving Divine adoration to images; their blaspheming the human nature of Christ, (which he thinks is here to be understood by the Lord's tabernacle,) by their doctrine of transubstantiation, giving every mass-priest power to make it of a piece of bread; and their putting the glorified saints in the place of the pagan demons, by their invocation of saints. The observation is very ingenious, but whether the sense of this text I doubt; for we are now about the period when antichrist began to reign, which we suppose to be soon after the year 600. The blasphemies here mentioned, were his first-fruits: but the doctrine of transubstantiation, though it might be broached one hundred years before, yet was made no doctrine of their church of six hundred years after the first beginning of the papacy; and therefore cannot well be reckoned amongst antichrist's first blasphemies. But who-so is acquainted with the history of the church after the year 606, will find enough to justify this text, though we do not restrain their blasphemy to these three things.

7 And it was given unto him <sup>to</sup> to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: <sup>and</sup> power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

God showeth John, that after antichrist had gone on blaspheming the name, and tabernacle, and saints of God, some years, the devil should influence him also to make war against God's holy ones, and he would suffer him to overcome them; and he should have a power over all the nations of that part of the world, where God had his church. This was eminently fulfilled after the year 1200, when the doctrine of transubstantiation was established. The Inquisition was set up in Spain, 1206; the number of those murdered by it was exceeding great. But yet this was too slow a work, the pope quickly raised vast armies against the Albigenses, first under the conduct of his legate, then of Simon de Montfort. Perionius (one of their own) saith, that more than a million were slain in these wars of these poor people, merely for not complying with the Church of Rome in her apostacy. But what were these to those slain in the valleys of Piedmont, Provence, Calabria, Alsatia, Bohemia, before the year 1517, when the Reformation began in Germany? What slaughters have been since made in Germany, Hungary, Flanders, Ireland,

&c., every one knows. The latter clause was eminently verified until the year 1517, there being no nation in Europe but was subject to the pope of Rome, so as he had a power over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. The poor Albigenses thought themselves concerned in this prophecy; for when the popish general, Simon de Montford, had made a vast slaughter of them, and the archbishop of Tholouse interceded for those that survived, upon condition that they would embrace the Romish faith, they boldly refused, sending the archbishop word, that they were the overcome servants of Jesus Christ; and all died comforting themselves with the prophecy of this text.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

God here showed his prophet the general subjection that would be of all people to the papacy, except some few, whom he had chosen to eternal life and salvation, whom Christ had redeemed with his blood, and would preserve from this pollution.

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

Either, let him hear what hath been already said, and take heed that he be not one of those that worship the beast; or, let him hear what followeth concerning the ruin of antichrist and his adherents: but from the usage of this phrase in other scriptures, where it is oft made use of to stir up attention to some remarkable thing, it seemeth rather to be applied to what went before. The phrase also further lets us know, that (comparatively) the number of those who should refuse to worship the beast would be very small, as indeed it proved.

10 He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword.

Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

As it was God's manner by the prophets of old, when he had denounced judgments against his people, to comfort them by a prediction of the ruin of their enemies; so here, by this his New Testament prophet, he assureth his church, that antichrist also should have his period, and have the same measure meted to him which he had meted out to others, by leading into captivity, and killing with the sword: and indeed, there are no sins which God doth so ordinarily punish by retaliation, as sins against justice and mercy, (of which nature persecutions are the most eminent,) Isa. xxxiii. 1, 2. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints; that is, there is a time for God's people to exercise their faith and patience: patience, because they are like to wait for deliverance a long time, and to suffer many sharp things in the mean time; and faith, because their deliverance will be a thing out of sight, of which they will have no security but from the promise of God.

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

There are great disputes about this other beast, who is represented or signified by it. The popish writers say it is some eminent impostor, who shall appear in the world before the coming of antichrist. Others would have it to be magic practised by Apollonius Thyaneus, the vanity of which notion Dr. More hath sufficiently demonstrated. The generality of protestant writers agree it to be antichrist himself, the same beast which was before spoken of, only in another form. The design, and time, and power of both is the same; neither hath this other beast any other figure assigned to him; and in the end of this chapter we shall find mention but of one beast, the mark, name, and number of the beast, mentioned ver. 16—18, is but of one beast; and we shall find the power of both to be the same; only he is called another, because appearing in another form, or under another type. The former beast typified the civil power of antichrist; this, his ecclesiastical power. He is said to have come up out of the earth; either because he was of a meaner extraction than the other, or because he stole upon the world insensibly. The pope and the clergy are judged by the best interpreters to be here meant. And he had two horns like a lamb; he pretends to the power of Christ, as his vicar, and therefore is said to have horns like a lamb. And he spake as a dragon; but he should speak terribly; or his doctrines should be such as the apostle calls doctrines of devils; or his words and practice should be like those of the great red dragon.

12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

The power of the first beast was to speak great words and blasphemies, and to make war with, and overcome the saints, ver. 5, 7. This power also should be exercised by the papacy, (according to this prophecy,) and time hath witnessed the truth of it. And as, before he arrived at the height of power, he had persuaded the latter emperors to establish idolatry and superstition; so having now the power in his own hands, and being by the first beast made head of the church, he now vigorously causeth all under his power to obey the edicts, decrees, and commands of that nature, which those emperors had published; choosing rather to do this in the name of others, than from himself; that in case of the non-compliance of any, he might charge them with sedition or disobedience to the imperial laws, or dissenting from antiquity, &c. Hence he causeth them to worship the first beast rather than himself.

13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men,

And he doeth great wonders; lying wonders, such as, by God's permission, false prophets might do, Deut. xiii. 1, 2. Prophets were to be judged true or false, not from any signs or wonders which they did, but from the doctrine they taught, and would by those signs establish. So that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men; wonders as great as those which Elijah wrought.

14 And he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

The Lord showeth his prophet by what means the papacy should cheat the world, viz. by pretences of miracles, which it had a power to work, (the doctrines of the Church of Rome to this are sufficiently known,) all which are done in the sight of the beast, that is, to his honour, and to gain him a reputation. As God gave his prophets and apostles a power to work true miracles for the confirmation of their mission from him, and of the doctrines which they brought; so he permitted others to work lying wonders for the confirmation of their false doctrine. The apostle therefore describeth the coming of antichrist to be with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, 2 Thess. ii. 9, 10. Saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live: these words show the design of this last-mentioned beast, viz. to make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword. Mr. Mede's notion here seemeth best to me, that by the beast which had the wound by a sword, is to be understood the dragon, of whose wound we read, chap. vi. He was the type of the pagan emperors, whom God rooted out. Antichrist's design was to make an image of that old beast, in which it might again live; which he did by his setting up the veneration of images, and the invocation of saints; the pagan idolatry lying chiefly in their adoration of persons (who had been famous amongst them) when they were dead, making them their mediators to their supreme gods, and in the veneration of their images and statues. The

r Ex. 32. 32.
Dan. 12. 1.
Phil. 4. 3.
ch. 3. 5. &c.
20. 12. 15.
& 21. 27.
e ch. 17. 8.

u Ia. 33. 1.
r Gen. 9. 6.
Mat. 26. 52.

y ch. 14. 12.

z ch. 11. 7.

b Dent. 13.
1, 2, 3.
Matt. 24. 24.
2 Thess. 2. 9.
ch. 16. 14.
c 1 Kings 18.
38. 2 Kings 1. 10, 12.

d ch. 12. 9.
& 19. 20.
e 2 Thess.
2. 9, 10.

f 3 Kings
20. 7.

making the image of this beast, was the restoring of the same idolatry, changing only the names of princes and great soldiers, whom the pagans worshipped after their death, into the names of saints; in which image the dragon lived again: and it is sufficiently known how the Romish clergy deceiveth people into this idolatry by their stories of miracles done by such saints.

<sup>† Gr. breath.</sup> 15 And he had power to give † life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, ‡ and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

The beast, mentioned ver. 11, had power to give life unto this new-formed idolatry, conformable to that of the pagans, in which the old beast again lived: he gave life to it by his decrees and bulls, and canon laws, and by his excommunications and censures of those that would not comply with his idolatry as heretics; after which the persons so adjudged were delivered up to the secular power to be put to death.

16 And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, <sup>h</sup>† to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:

No particular character is here to be understood, but only the general imposition of the Romish faith upon all sorts of persons. His mark was nothing else but either the profession of his faith and religion, or a vowed subjection to his commands, which we know is the practice of the papacy where it obtaineth in any country.

17 And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or <sup>l</sup> the name <sup>k</sup> of the beast, <sup>h</sup> or the number of his name.

<sup>† Gr. to give them.</sup> And that no man might buy or sell: this the popish church effects by its excommunications; it was begun in the council of Lateran, anathematizing all who entertained any of the Waldenses, or traded with them; and the late learned bishop of Armagh, in his book De Successione Ecclesie, hath given us an account of such a canon of a synod in France, which in express terms forbade any commerce with heretics in buying or selling. Pareus tells us Pope Martin the Fifth hath best interpreted this prophecy, in his bull added to the council of Constance, where he prohibits Roman Catholics to suffer any heretics to have any dwellings in their countries, or to make any bargains, or use any trades, or to perform to them any civil offices. Save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name: there have been great disputes about the name and number of the beast. I must profess myself not able to distinguish betwixt the mark, name, and number of the beast; they may all signify the same thing, viz. the profession of the Romish religion. Some think the number is contained in the name, and that the name is ΑΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ, in which the number six hundred and sixty-six is contained; of which we shall speak more by and by.

18 † Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count <sup>m</sup> the number of the beast: <sup>n</sup> for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

Here is wisdom; that is, Herein is the wisdom, the unsearchable wisdom, of God seen in the trial of his church; or, (which is more probably the sense,) this is a point will exercise the wisdom of men. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; let him that is spiritually wise count the number of the beast. For it is the number of a man; it is such as may be numbered after the way men use to number. And his number is Six hundred threescore and six: what this meaneth hath exercised the wits of the greatest divines in all ages. A late learned and valuable writer thinks that 666 doth not signify a certain definite number, but an indefinite number, and that not of years, but of pernicious errors, by the broaching and upholding of which antichrist may be known. But the most interpreters think a number, and that a definite, certain number, of years is to be understood here: but they are again divided; some thinking them determining the time of the fall of this beast; others judging them to determine or define the year or time of his beginning to reign, the time from whence his period and term of forty-two months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty years, commenceth: most of those who think this number determinative of the time when he should fall, understood by it the year 1666, which raised the expectation of many good and some learned men (though we see in this thing they were deceived) upon that year. A countryman of our own, who hath written an English Dissertation about the Name, Number, and Character of the Beast, hath with much more probability judged this number definitive of the time when he began to reign under the title of "universal bishop," which was about the year 606; but there seemeth to be a want then of sixty years; to answer which objection, the aforesaid author (N. Stephens) undertaketh to make out, that the year which according to our account was 606, was according to Daniel's chronology 666; for it is the six hundred and sixty-sixth year of the Roman monarchy, which, saith he, is to be counted from the time when that empire first invaded the church, which was when Cicero and Antonius were consuls, about sixty years before Christ; for then the Romans first subdued the Jews, the ancient church of God. As to this notion, there is nothing to be proved, but that 666 must be counted from that epocha; for admitting that, the time of the beast's reign, as to the beginning of it, fell much about the year 666. I shall only say of it, that I do not judge it a contemptible notion. This makes this prophecy a prediction of the time when this beast should begin to show his power, and therefore it is called the number of his name (name in Holy Scripture often signifying dominion and power). But there is yet another notion, which is the most learned Dr. Potter's, in his book called The Interpretation of the Number Six Hundred and Sixty-six; a book justly valuable both for the great wit and learning in it, and much magnified both by Dr. More, and Mr. Mede, whose judgment of it is prefixed to it; in which he saith, It is the happiest tract that ever yet came into the world,—and though at first he read the book with much prejudice, yet when he had done it, it left him possessed with as much admiration. The foundation on which he goeth is, that this number is to be interpreted by the opposite number of 144, chap. xxi. 17, as the measure of the wall of the new Jerusalem; which is to be understood of square measure, as he proveth, chap. 6.; for the wall could not be 144 cubits high, nor 144 cubits broad; but in square measure so much, that is 12 cubits high and 12 cubits broad (for the length cannot be understood); it being impossible that a wall 144 cubits long, should encompass a city 91 furlongs about. In like manner he thinks 666 ought to be counted by the square root of that number, which is 25 $\frac{1}{2}$ . Hence he concludeth, that as 12, the square root of 144, is God's number, so 25 is the square root of antichrist's number 666; and by this enigmatical expression we are taught that antichrist should be a political body, that should as much affect the number of 25, as God seemeth to have in his church affected the number of 12. Under the Old Testament God built his church upon twelve patriarchs, it was made up of twelve tribes: Jerusalem, mentioned by Ezekiel, chap. xlvi. 31, and in this book, chap. xxi. 12, had twelve gates; ver. 21, these were twelve pearls; at the gates, ver. 12, were twelve angels; the wall, ver. 14, had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles; ver. 16, the measure of the city was twelve thousand furlongs; chap. xxii. 22, the tree of life had twelve manner of fruits: by all which it appears that 12 was the number God affected to use with reference to his church, and the square root, both of the 144 cubits, which were the measure of the wall, chap. xxi. 17, and likewise of the 144 thousands, mentioned in the next chapter as the number of Christ's retinue. On the contrary, 25 is the square root of 666, (adding the fraction,) which is the beast's number; and that learned author proves, that the pope and his clergy as much affected the number of 25 in their first forming their church, as God did the number of 12. They at first divided Rome into 25 parishes, (instead of the old 35 tribes,) over which they set 25 cardinals, (which were their first number,) who had 25 churches: they made 25 gates to the city; at last they also brought the articles of their creed to 25. This that learned author abundantly proveth, chap. 17—20, 22. He also, chap. 24—26, showeth how in a multitude of things of lesser moment they affected this number of 25. This seemeth a very probable notion. I further refer my reader to the learned author's book, where he enlargeth upon these things with great wit and learning. In this variety I shall positively determine nothing, but have shortly mentioned the senses I think most probable, as to this mysterious number 666.

CHAP. XIV

The Lamb with his company standing on Mount Zion, 1—5, an angel preacheth the gospel, 6, 7; another proclaimeth the fall of Babylon, 8; and a third, the punishment of them that worship the beast, 9—12. The blessedness of those that die in the Lord, 13. The harvest of the world, 14—16. The vintage and winepress of God's wrath, 17—20.

a ch. 5. 5. AND I looked, and, lo, <sup>a</sup>a Lamb stood on the mount Zion, and with him <sup>b</sup>an hundred forty and four thousand, <sup>c</sup>having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

God, in this part of the vision, showeth his servant John, that during the whole reign of antichrist, till the voice mentioned ver. 8, Babylon is fallen, should be heard, notwithstanding all his rage, he would preserve his church, though it would be but a small number, bearing no better proportion to the whole world than one hundred and forty-four thousand (the number of those sealed of each tribe of Israel, chap. vii.) bare to whole Israel, which were above six hundred thousand upon both their numberings, Numb. i. 26. The Lamb here signifieth Christ, chap. v. 6. Mount Zion signifieth the church of the gospel, typified by Mount Zion amongst the Jews where the temple stood. An hundred forty and four thousand is the same number that was sealed of all the tribes of Israel, chap. vii.: not that there was just so many which made up the church under antichrist's persecution; but it signifies, 1. A small number in comparison of such as should be of another stamp. 2. It is a number made up of twelve times twelve, by which is signified that they were a people that should answer the Israelites indeed of the Old Testament, that remnant of the twelve tribes whom God had chosen, who adhere to the doctrine and precepts of the twelve apostles. Having his Father's name written in their foreheads; making an open profession of being the children and servants of God: as those servants and soldiers did that had anciently the names of their masters and generals in their foreheads; it being an ancient custom for masters to brand their servants, and captains their soldiers, as we do our beasts at this day.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, <sup>d</sup>as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of <sup>e</sup>harpers harping with their harps:

As the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; a loud voice, and terrible also to the followers of antichrist. The voice of harpers harping with their harps; a musical, melodious voice, as of persons rejoicing. Mr. Mede rather thinks, that the voice as of many waters, signifies no more than a great multitude, and indeed it is so expounded, chap. xix. 6.

3 And <sup>f</sup>they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song <sup>g</sup>but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

And they sung as it were a new song before the throne: by the throne here is meant the throne of God in glory. The new song here spoken of, is probably the same with that we met with before, chap. v. 11, 12, sang by the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: called new, either for the excellency of it; or, because sung unto God after Christ was manifested in the flesh; the design of it was to declare the worthiness of Christ to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing: see chap. v. 12. Mr. Mede saith thus of it; "If God shall at any time make me fully to understand it, I will happily more largely explain it, for it is deeply settled in my mind, that the whole mystery of evangelical worship is in it contained." And quite through the Scripture generally, a new song signifies a song which praiseth God for some new benefits received from him. And before the four beasts, and the elders; the throne, beasts, and elders, described before, chap. iv. And no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth: during the reign of antichrist none could learn this new song, viz. to give glory to Jesus Christ alone, ascribing to him power, riches, wisdom, strength, honour, glory, and blessing; but a small number redeemed through the blood of Christ, from that vain conversation received by tradition from their fathers, 1 Pet. i. 18. All the other part of the world gave Christ's honour and glory to the virgin Mary, angels, and saints, &c.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; <sup>h</sup>for they are virgins. These are they <sup>i</sup>which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These <sup>j</sup>† were redeemed from among men, <sup>k</sup>being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb.

These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins; that is, that would not comply with antichristian idolatry and superstition; for idolatry is all along in holy writ compared to whoredom and fornication. Which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth; that follow the Lord Christ fully, in all things keeping close to the rules of worship and life which he hath given. These were redeemed from among men; these show themselves to be redeemed by the blood of Christ from the vain conversation of men, whether towards God, in matters of worship, or towards men. Being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb; that are consecrated to, and accepted of God, as the first-fruits were, being the only part of the world that are not profane.

5 And <sup>m</sup>in their mouth was found no guile: for <sup>n</sup>they are without fault before the throne of God.

Not that any liveth and sinneth not against God, but it is to be understood comparatively; they are without fault in comparison of the rest of the world, they have not in them the guile of hypocrisy, they are sincere. Or, possibly by guile is here understood a lie. All idolaters are liars, Rom. i. 25, and idols are called lies, Jer. xvi. 19; Amos ii. 4. Mr. Mede expoundeth this text by Zeph. iii. 13. The words may either more generally signify the holiness of these persons, in opposition to profaneness and hypocrisy; or more particularly, their freedom and purity from antichristian superstitions and idolatry.

6 And I saw another angel <sup>o</sup>fly in the midst of heaven, <sup>p</sup>having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, <sup>q</sup>and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

God having in a vision showed unto his servant John the reign and rage of antichrist, chap. xiii., and in this chapter the care he would extend toward his church for the preservation of a godly seed during his reign, he now cometh by further visions to instruct him in what should be done during antichrist's reign of forty-two months. The gospel should be preached: this I take to be the substance of this verse. This angel seems to me to represent faithful ministers' speed and diligence to preach the gospel in all parts of the world. It is called the everlasting gospel, either with reference to the time past, as much as to say, the old gospel; or to the time to come, it being that doctrine of salvation, besides which there neither is, nor ever shall be, revealed any other while the world endureth, Acts iv. 12.

7 Saying with a loud voice, <sup>r</sup>Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: <sup>s</sup>and worship him

a ch. 5. 5.
b ch. 7. 4.
c ch. 7. 3.
& 13. 16.

h 2 Cor. 11. 2.
i ch. 3. 4. &
7. 15. 17. &
17. 14.
† Gr. new song.
k ch. 5. 9.
l Jam. 1. 18.

m Ps. 32. 2.
Zeph. 3. 13.
n Eph. 5. 27.
Jude 24.

o ch. 8. 13.
p Eph. 3. 9.
Tit. 1. 2.
q ch. 13. 7.

r ch. 11. 18.
& 15. 4.
s 2 Th. 2. 6.
Ps. 33. 8. &
134. 6. & 144.
5. & Acts 14.
15. & 17. 24.

that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

These angels, or ministers of God, whether civil or ecclesiastical witnesses, cried aloud against the papal idolatry, in worshipping saints and images, admonishing all men to give Divine adoration only to the true and living God, who was the Creator of all things. The worshipping of images began soon after antichrist began to reign: we find it decreed in a synod held at London about the year 710, but it was abolished by a synod at Constantinople, 712. In 723, it was again established by a synod at Aientz. By a synod in Syria it was defended, Anno 725, and the emperor Leo Isaurus was excommunicated for opposing it; but in 730, a synod at Constantinople decreed for Leo against it. Another synod, held there Anno 755, under the emperor Constantinus Copronymus, decreed against it; but two other synods held in Bavaria, 765, 766, again decreed for it. In the year 786 the second synod of Nice established it; since which time it hath constantly obtained amongst the papists. But as from the first broaching of this idolatry it was opposed by five emperors of Constantinople, so it hath all along been declaimed against by the faithful ministers of Christ, preaching the everlasting gospel, and calling upon men to perform Divine adoration only to him who made heaven and earth.

8 And there followed another angel, saying, 'Babylon is fallen, is fallen,' that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

The apostle is shown, that other messengers of God should come forth, during the reign of antichrist, that should declare his ruin as certainly as if it were already effected. Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city: these words are taken from Isa. xxi. 9, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and all the golden images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground. So Jer. li. 8, Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed. There is no doubt but both the prophets spake of that Babylon into which the Jews were carried captive; but that Babylon was typical of another Babylon, called here the great city, and great Babylon, chap. xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 10, 21; and the mother of harlots, chap. xvii. 5. There neither is, nor ever was, any city in the world to whom these things could agree, but to Rome, rightly enough called the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth, chap. xvii. 5, both in respect of carnal filthiness there tolerated to make the bishop of Rome a revenue, and spiritual whoredom, whi h is idolatry: called also Sodom and Egypt, chap. xi. 8, the former of which was famous for beastly lusts, the latter for idolatry, and oppression of God's Israel. The ruin of old Babylon is denounced by the prophet, Isa. xxi. 9, because of her idolatry in image worship, for which the new Babylon is every whit as famous. Because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication: the word translated wrath, though it oft so signifies, yet should rather be here translated poison, as we translate it, Deut. xxxii. 33; Job xx. 16. The LXX. in those texts use the same word that is here used, Συμδος; so the sense is, with the poisonous wine of her idolatry, intimating to us the venomous condition of Romish superstitious and idolatries, to entice ignorant people to be in love with them; as harlots use with their philtres, or poisoned cups, to make men in love with them. If we better approve of our translation of the term wrath, the wine of the wrath of her fornication signifieth her fornication which brings wrath upon them that join with her in it.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, 'If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

God letteth his servant John know, that during the reign and rage of antichrist, as he would have ministers of the gospel that should preach the truth, and mind men to keep themselves from idols, worshipping God alone; and others that should assure them the papacy should go down, mystical Babylon should fall; so he would have others that should give warning to men and women of those dreadful plagues that should come upon them that entered themselves in this great city, either worshipping the devil after the pagan manner, or the imago of the beast, i. e. committing idolatry after the antichristian, popish fashion, or that should either be subject to this idolatrous head, or be a soldier to fight for it. What those judgments should be, God sheweth in ver. 10, and possibly there is not a more severe denunciation of judgment in the whole book of God.

10 The same 'shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is 'poured out without mixture into 'the cup of his indignation; and 'he shall be tormented with 'fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

Those that do yield a subjection to him, and profess his faith, shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God; that is, shall feel the severity of God's judicial dispensations, which in Scripture are expressed by the wine cup of his fury, Jer. xxv. 15; see also Job xxi. 20; Psal. lxxxv. 8; Isa. li. 17; either from the intoxicating quality of wine, or the stupefying quality of it, when mixed with myrrh, or other stupefying things. But here it is said without mixture, which signifies their sensible feeling of the effects of Divine wrath. And he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb; that is, in short, he shall go to hell at last; the exquisiteness of which torments, as to the pain of sense, is set out by fire and brimstone; brimstone being a material in which fire holds longest to torment any flesh put into it.

11 And 'the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; that is, their torments shall be everlasting, as well as most exquisite, and causing the most acute pain. And they have no rest day nor night; this is but the same thing in other words; their torments shall be such as shall give them no rest at any time. Who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name: the sense of these two verses is no more than this, That all idolaters shall fall under the vengeance of God in this life, and at last shall be thrown to hell; not only such as worship the beast, committing paganish idolatry, worshipping stocks and stones, and devils, as the term of their worship, but such as worship the image of that beast set up by antichrist, worshipping of angels and saints, or their images. From hence an easy answer may be given to that question, Whether a man can be saved in that which at this day is called the Roman Catholic religion? If they either worship the beast, or the image of the beast, they cannot: whether they do or no, let the reader judge from what hath been before said.

12 'Here is the patience of the saints: 'here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

Here is the patience of the saints: God having in the former chapter shown his servant John the reign and rage of antichrist in his time of forty-two months, and in this chapter what shall be the end of him and all his adherents, here concludeth with telling him, This is a period of time wherein the patience of his holy ones will be tried, both in waiting for their deliverance, and also in their patient enduring antichrist's oppression and tyranny. Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus; and here will be the trial of men, whether they will keep to the faith of Christ, and obedience of God's commandments, by coming out of, or keeping in, this spiritual Babylon: those that come out of her will show both; those that keep in that idolatrous communion will show neither.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, 'Blessed are the dead 'which die in the Lord 'henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, 'that y Pa. 75. 8.

Isa. 51. 17.
Jer. 25. 15.
a ch. 18. 6.
a ch. 16. 19.
b ch. 20. 10.
c ch. 18. 20.

d Is. 34. 10.
ch. 19. 3.

e ch. 13. 10.
f ch. 12. 17.

g Eccles. 4.
1, 2 ch. 20. 6.
h 1 Cor. 15. 16.
1 Thes. 4. 16.
i Or, from henceforth saith the Spirit, Yea.
12 Thes. 1. 7. Heb. 4. 9, 10. ch. 6. 11.

they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write: these words denote the excellency of the following saying; it is a voice from heaven, therefore worthy of our attention. John is commanded to write it, to be kept in memory for the comfort and encouragement of God's people, who might be discouraged at the hearing of those calamitous times which they were like to meet with during the reign of antichrist, in which many of them were like to be put to death. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: this phrase of dying in the Lord, is applicable to any persons that die united to Christ by a true and lively faith; all such die in the Lord. But if we consider the Scriptural usage of it, it seems rather to signify martyrs, such as die for the Lord; for it often in Scripture signifieth for, Rom. xvi. 2, 8, 12; 1 Pet. iv. 14, &c. If any shall be put to death for adherence to Christ, they shall be no losers; for they shall be blessed, and that not only upon the account of that glory into which they shall pass, but upon the account of that rest which their death will give them from the troubles of the calamitous times before or hereafter mentioned. From henceforth: there is some little difference amongst interpreters about the sense of this particle: certain it is, it is not to be understood of the time following this revelation exclusively, as to those who before died to Christ; for they also were blessed, they also rested from their labours, &c.; yet the particle seems to refer to the time to come. The emphasis of the particle seems to be, to obviate the doubts of those who should happen to die under antichrist's rage, because they died not by the hands of pagans and avowed enemies of the gospel, but of such as should call themselves Christians; such, saith God, die for the Lord, and are blessed, and shall be blessed. Yea, saith the Spirit; the Spirit of truth affirms it. That they may rest from their labours; they shall be at rest from the troubles of this life. And their works do follow them; and their good deeds and patient sufferings shall follow them, as witnesses for them before the Judge of the quick and the dead.

Here follow two visions, the one of a harvest, the other of a vintage; there is no great difficulty in determining, that they both signify some judicial dispensations of God, that he would bring upon the world, or some part of it, the latter of which should be greater than the former: yet Dr. More and Mr. Mede have another notion of them. But there is some doubt amongst interpreters, whether they signify God's general judgment in the last day, or some particular judgments before that day, mentioned chap. xv. and xvi., and belong to the vials which we there read of. Those who think that the last judgment is here showed to John, are led to it from the representation of the day of judgment, under the notion of a harvest, Matt. iii. 12; xiii. 39. But I rather agree with them who think that the harvest here mentioned, is a representation of some judicial dispensations of God before that time, particularly God's vengeance upon the beast, more fully expressed, chap. xvi. For, 1. The last judgment is fully described afterward, chap. xix., xx. 2. To express that, there needed not two types, the one of a harvest, the other of a vintage. 3. Here is no mention of the resurrection, which must go before the last judgment. Mr. Mede hath noted, that there are three things belonging to a harvest; (1.) Cutting down of corn. (2.) Gathering it into the barn. (3.) Threshing it. Whence, in Scripture, it signifieth either cutting and destroying, or safety and preserving, which is the end of gathering corn into the barn. We have examples of the former, Isa. xvii. 3, 5; Jer. li. 33; but of the latter we have only examples in the New Testament, Luke x. 2. It is his opinion, that the conversion of the Jews, going before the great slaughter mentioned chap. xix., is that which is here meant; but I rather agree with those who think, that by this parable is signified God's judgments upon antichrist, and that the general scope of both the parables is to declare, that God would grievously punish antichrist, first by lesser, then by greater judgments, as is more particularly expressed in the two next chapters, to which this, to me, seemeth pre-fatory. Let us now come to the text itself.

1 Ezek. 1. 26.
Dan. 7. 13.
ch. 1. 13.

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat <sup>1</sup>like unto the Son of man, <sup>1</sup>having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

The description here can agree to none but Christ, sitting, as it were, upon clouds, and coming out in his judicial dispensations of providence, to execute judgment upon his enemies, to which purpose he is said to have in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel <sup>m</sup> came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, <sup>n</sup>Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest <sup>o</sup>of the earth is <sup>p</sup>ripe.

m ch. 16. 17.

n Joel 2. 13.
Matt. 13. 29.

o Jer. 51. 33.
ch. 13. 12.
l Or, dried.

Most interpreters understand this of the prayers of God's people, from the church, soliciting the Lord Jesus Christ (say some) to gather in the Jews, or the number of his elect, the fields being now white to that harvest. (as Christ useth the metaphor of the Samaritans, John iv. 35.) or, (as others say, with whom I rather agree,) to execute vengeance on antichrist and his adherents.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

According to the afore-mentioned different notion of the harvest, there is amongst them a different interpretation of this verse; some interpreting it of God's calling in the Jews, or his elect, by the preaching of the gospel; others, of his vengeance upon antichrist and his adherents, more fully expressed, chap. xv., xvi.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

This angel some will have to be some instrument God would make use of to cut down antichrist: others would have it to be the word of God in the mouth of his ministers, which, Heb. iv. 12, is sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit; and thus they judge this angel to be the same with the rider upon the white horse, chap. xix., out of whose mouth went a sharp sword, ver. 15.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, <sup>p</sup>which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, <sup>q</sup>Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

p ch. 16. 8.

q Joel 2. 13.

From the altar; the place of sacrifices and burnt-offerings. Which had power over fire; which had commission to execute God's judgments, compared to fire, Psal. xi. 6; xxi. 9; 1. 3. And cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying: God's holy ones cry unto him who hath a power to execute vengeance. Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; put an end to the rage of antichrist, and gather those clusters which grew upon this vine of Sodom, and were as the clusters of Gomorrah. For her grapes are fully ripe; for their iniquities were come to the full, and they were now ripe for judgment. Our learned Dr. More expounds this ripeness, of a readiness for conversion, as well as for destruction, and thinks the first is here rather intended: the last words of the next verse incline me to judge otherwise.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into <sup>r</sup>the great winepress of the wrath of God.

r ch. 19. 15.

Dr. More thinks the sense of this is, that men were pressed in conscience upon the sharp conviction of Christ's powerful ministers, with sorrow for their sins, and so felt the wrath of God in them. But Mr. Mede, with whom (as to the sense of this text) I rather agree, tells us, that the treading of the vintage, in parabolical Scripture, constantly signifies a cruel, bloody, and deadly slaughter; he thinks that it is the same slaughter mentioned chap. xix. 19 —21, as to which, ver. 15, much the same metaphor is used, he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

20 And <sup>a</sup>the winepress was trodden <sup>b</sup>without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, <sup>c</sup>even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

And the winepress was trodden without the city: by the city, Dr. More thinks Babylon is here meant, and that the meaning is, that the powerful convictions of the word before mentioned, shall not reach Babylon, the Romish hierarchy and polity, as being hardened against any such thing. But Mr. Mede and others think, that the city of Jerusalem is here meant, or the Holy Land, which comprehends exactly one thousand six hundred furlongs, that is, two hundred Italian miles, or one hundred and sixty Grecian miles. But what that place shall be, where this slaughter shall be, is a great secret. And blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs: it is plain it shall be a great slaughter, by the depth of the blood mentioned, and the length of the ground which it should to that depth overflow. It is very probable, that great battle is meant, mentioned chap. xix. 20, 21, in the place called Armageddon, upon the pouring out of the sixth vial, chap. xvi. 16. In so difficult a business nothing can be positively determined.

CHAP. XV

The seven angels with the seven last plagues, 1. The song of them which overcome the beast, 2-4. The seven angels receive the seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, 5-8.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 12. 1, 2. AND <sup>b</sup>I saw another sign in heaven, <sup>c</sup>great and marvellous, <sup>d</sup>seven angels having the seven last plagues; <sup>e</sup>for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous; that is, a representation which appeared to John great and wonderful. Seven angels; ministers of God, used by him in the dispensations of his providence. Having the seven last plagues; having a commission to execute the seven last judgments of God, by which he designed to destroy antichrist. For in them is filled up the wrath of God; for by them the wrath of God was to be executed upon him to the uttermost.

2 And I saw as it were <sup>a</sup>a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, <sup>b</sup>and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, <sup>c</sup>having the harps of God.

This sea of glass (as our learned More thinks) hath either an allusion to the sea of glass like unto crystal, reflected upon by the lamps of fire burning before the throne, chap. iv. 5, 6, or to the waters of the Red Sea congealed (while the Israelites passed over) reflected upon by the pillar of fire. Others make it the church gathered out of all nations, said to be of glass, because of its splendour and glory. Others make it to signify the world, which is said to be of glass, to let us understand God seeth through it. It seemeth to me to signify heaven; for it is mentioned as the place of the glorified saints, who had overcome all temptations to idolatry, either from pagans, (which were the beast,) or from antichrist and his party, (which are called the image of the beast,) and had avoided all kind of compliance with them in profession of the religion which he would endeavour to impose upon them. Harps of God signify either the most excellent harps, or holy harps. Mr. Forbes saith well, they signify hearts tempered with joy, and love, and a grateful sense of the mercies of God towards them.

3 And they sing <sup>a</sup>the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, <sup>b</sup>Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; <sup>a</sup>just and true are thy ways, thou King of <sup>b</sup>||saints.

And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God; the song which Moses sang upon God's delivery of the Israelites from the danger of Pharaoh, which we have, Exod. xv.; not that they sang those words, but to the same sense. And the song of the Lamb; a song to the honour of Christ, to the same sense that Moses sang, and upon a much like occasion. Saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; admiring the greatness and marvellousness of what God had done in their deliverance, and giving him the glory of his Almighty power. Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints; acknowledging, that all the acts of his providence were both just, God in them giving to every one their due, and true, God by them but justifying his promises and threatenings. These words are taken out of Psal. cxiv. 17.

4 <sup>a</sup>Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for <sup>b</sup>thou only art holy: for <sup>c</sup>all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

Acknowledging, that for this God deserved to be worshipped and served by all the world, because of his holiness, much seen in the justice and truth of his ways; declaring their faith and hope, that now all nations should own and acknowledge Christ, and be subject unto him, now that his judgments upon antichrist, and his justice in all his dispensations, was made so evident to the world.

5 And after that I looked, and behold, <sup>a</sup>the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

Here is a plain allusion to the Jewish tabernacle or temple, in which was the holy place, and the holy of holies; into the latter the high priest only entered. There were kept in the ark the two tables of God's law, often called the testimonies of God. From this tabernacle of the testimony proceeded God's oracles, there God gave answers from the mercy-seat, and therefore in the Book of Kings it is called the oracle. The sense some put upon this is, That God here showed unto his prophet the liberty that should be, after the downfall of antichrist, to preach the gospel. But in this sense it must be an anticipation of what orderly should have come in after the pouring out of the vials: I had rather understand it of God's being now about to give out an answer to his people's prayers for a deliverance from the tyranny of antichrist; as the place called the oracle in the Jewish temple was opened when the high priest had been inquiring of God, to give an account of the answer he had.

6 <sup>a</sup>And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, <sup>b</sup>clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

And the seven angels; the seven ministers of God's vengeance on antichrist, to whom the vials were given. Came out of the temple; that is, out of the tabernacle of the testimony; for in Moses's tabernacle there was only this inward court for the priests, the people worshipped without. They came (as the high priest was wont) out of the oracle to bring God's answer to all his saints' prayers. Having the seven plagues: the answer was seven plagues, that is, that God had employed them to bring seven plagues successively upon the antichristian party, and all the enemies of his church, till by them they should be consumed. Clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles; these angels came in the habit of high priests, when they went in to inquire of God, or came out with an answer from God.

7 <sup>a</sup>And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, <sup>b</sup>who liveth for ever and ever.

And one of the four beasts; one of those four beasts

<sup>a</sup> Ps. 146. 17
<sup>b</sup> Hos. 14. 2
<sup>c</sup> ch. 16. 7
<sup>d</sup> || Or, nations, or angels

<sup>a</sup> Ex. 15. 14,
15, 16. Jer.
10. 7.

<sup>b</sup> Is. 66. 22.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 11. 19.
<sup>b</sup> See Num. 1.
30.

<sup>a</sup> ver. 1.

<sup>a</sup> Ex. 28. 6, A.
<sup>b</sup> Esak. 44. 17,
18. ch. 1. 13.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 4. 6.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Thess. 1.
<sup>b</sup> ch. 4. 11. &
10. 4.

<sup>a</sup> Is. 63. 3.
<sup>b</sup> Lam. 1. 15.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 11. 8.
<sup>d</sup> Heb. 13. 12.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 18. 14.

round about the throne, chap. iv. 6. Gave unto the seven angels; the seven angels mentioned ver. 6. Seven golden vials: a vial is a plain pot or glass with a wide mouth, used to drink in: these were full of the wrath of God, who lieth for ever and ever. The meaning is no more than that the seven angels, before mentioned, were commissioned from God, by one plague after another, to bring antichrist to his ruin.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

And the temple; that is, the church, as temple most ordinarily signifieth in this book. Was filled with smoke: by smoke, doubtless, is meant confusions and troubles. From the glory of God, and from his power; caused by God's glorious manifestation of his power, in bringing antichrist to ruin, who had so twisted his interest with that of the civil magistracy in several kingdoms, that there was no rooting him out, without a terrible shaking of all those parts of the earth where he set his foot. And no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled; so as no part of the church could be at rest until God had fulfilled his ruin by these plagues: nor must any quiet state of the church be expected, until this great work be effected.

CHAP. XVI

The seven angels are commanded to pour out their vials on the earth, 1. Great plagues follow thereupon, 2—14. Christ cometh suddenly as a thief: blessed are they that watch, 15—21.

God having showed unto his servant John in the vision of the first six seals, the fate of the church under the pagan emperors of Rome, chap. v., vi., and its fate under antichrist, in the vision of the six first trumpets, under the seventh seal, chap. viii., ix., and diverted him by the vision of the little book opened, chap. x., and by the contents of it, chap. xii.—xiv., and instructed him concerning the affairs of the church during all the time of the reign of the dragon, and antichrist, who was the image of the dragon, comes now to instruct him particularly how and by what means he would ruin antichrist, and restore peace to his church.

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

And I heard a great voice out of the temple; either out of the church triumphant, Christ, the Head of it, commanding the executioners of his justice to go and do their office; or out of the church militant, by their prayers soliciting God to execute vengeance upon the beast. All the beast's territories, or the several parts of his kingdom, are expressed in this chapter, under the notions of the earth, the sea, the rivers and fountains, the sun, and the seat of the beast. The first command to the executioners of God's justice, is, to pour out his wrath on the earth. By the earth, Pareus understands some parts of the earth; others, the common people; others, the Roman empire; but others, considering the earth as the firmest part of the universe, say, that by the earth is meant the popish clergy, the basis of the papacy; and I am very much inclined to judge that the most probable sense of it, not only because there is little of heaven in them, and their whole frame and model is the product of earthly policy, but because experience hath told us that the pope here received his first wound, in the diminution of their power and authority, and a contempt of them. God hath used many instruments to pour out this vial, even so many (whether princes or ministers) as he hath made use of to root out monasteries and abbeys, and to expose mass priests to scorn and contempt. Mr. Mede seemeth to be of another mind, thinking, that by earth is meant the commonalty of the people, whose defection from the pope was his first plague: but that which is to be understood by the earth, being the affected part of antichrist, I cannot agree with that learned man; for though the beast suffered by the defection of the commonalty, yet I cannot see how those that made the defection suffered at all by it.

2. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

Here is a plain allusion to the plagues which God brought upon Pharaoh king of Egypt for his oppression of his ancient Israel; God hereby showing us, that he would deal by this Romish beast for his persecutions of his gospel churches, as he dealt by Pharaoh: as he turned the Egyptian rivers into blood, so as the fish died, and the waters stunk, Exod. vii. 20, 21, and as he plagued the Egyptians with boils and blains, Exod. ix. 9; so he would plague the papacy by proportionable judgments, until, as Pharaoh with his whole party was at last drowned in the Red Sea, so all the antichristian party shall be rooted out. Here are two of the Egyptian plagues mentioned, but this vision begins with the sixth of the Egyptian plagues, viz. that of boils breaking out in blains. What is meant by this grievous sore I must profess myself not to understand, but think Dr. More speaks very probably, interpreting it of trouble and vexation, which the popish party should have upon the first prospect of their kingdom's going down; it being of the nature of sores to vex and disturb those that are affected with them, so as they are very uneasy so long as they are affected with them. And, indeed, I find many interpreters agree in this notion.

3. And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

This answered the first plague upon Pharaoh, Exod. vii. 20, All the waters that were in the rivers were turned to blood; and the fish that was in the river died. By the sea here Dr. More understands the jurisdiction and dominion of the papacy, wherein he agrees with Mr. Mede. I rather agree with those who understand the whole system of the popish religion; their rites and ceremonies, their doctrines of indulgences and purgatory, &c. God showeth his prophet, and instructeth us, that he will bring the papacy to ruin, 1. By bringing his clergy (which are the earth upon which he stands) into scorn and contempt; discovering their frauds and cheats. 2. By discovering the folly and vanity of their pompous and theatrical religion, consisting only in vain shows, and idle rites and ceremonies, without any regard to that religion which is spiritual, and pure, and undefiled before God; discovering the cheats of their confessions and absolutions, their masses, pardons, and indulgences; making them appear to be not only idle, but pernicious and damnable; so as Christians could not live in the communion of their church, but it must be damnable to those who keep in the communion of it.

4. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

Mr. Mede and Dr. More both agree in interpreting this of the Jesuits and other popish emissaries, and the laws made for the execution of them in England in the time of Queen Elizabeth, not excluding those civil powers which are the upholders and maintainers of antichrist, as the Spaniard, who also within these last hundred years hath had blood enough given him to drink, both in 1588, and in the Low Countries. It seemeth a little hard to interpret a prophecy relating to the whole church, by what is done in so small a part of it. We know in what credit these emissaries are at this day, both in the empire, and in Spain, and in France, and Venice, from whence they sometime were expelled. We have, indeed, laws against them in England, but principally relating to those of them who, being native subjects of England, have apostatized.

Ex. 40. 34.
1 Kings 8.
10. 2 Chron.
5. 14 Is. 6. 4.
2 Thess. 1.
9.

ch. 8. 7.
Ex. 9. 2.
16. 11.

ch. 13. 16.
17.
1 Ch. 13. 14.

ch. 8. 8.
Ex. 7. 17.
20.
1 Ch. 8. 9.

ch. 15. 1.
ch. 14. 10.
& 16. 7.

ch. 8. 10.
1 Ex. 7. 20.

So as I had rather think this vial is not yet poured out, or that interpreters mistake the meaning of these rivers and fountains, than agree with them in that interpretation of this prophecy. I am much disposed to believe that we are not further than the pouring out of the second vial. God, indeed, hath made the Romish clergy contemptible enough, and hath vexed and enraged them sufficiently. He hath also made their scenical religion as contemptible to, and justly abhorred by, a great part of the Christian world; but how far he hath proceeded further to the ruin of antichrist, I do not understand.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, <sup>m ch. 15. 3.</sup> "Thou art righteous, O Lord, <sup>n ch. 1. 4, 8.</sup> which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. <sup>& 4. 8. & 11. 17.</sup>

This and the two following verses do but express the honour and glory that shall be given unto God, when he shall have accomplished his great work in destroying those who feed, and uphold, and maintain the beast, partly by those instruments he shall use in that work, expressed here by the angel of the waters, partly from others. Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus; acknowledging the Lord's justice and righteousness in such destruction.

6 For <sup>o Matt. 23. 34, 35.</sup> they have shed the blood <sup>ch. 13. 15.</sup> of saints and prophets, <sup>p ch. 11. 18.</sup> and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. <sup>& 18. 21.</sup> <sup>q Is. 49. 26.</sup>

Because of their persecutions of, and cruelty towards, God's faithful ministers and people, which rendered the spilling of their blood but a condign punishment suited to their sin.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, <sup>r ch. 15. 3.</sup> Even so, <sup>s ch. 13. 10.</sup> 'Lord God Almighty, <sup>& 14. 10. & 19. 2.</sup> true and righteous are thy judgments.

Others also, either members of the church triumphant or militant, or both, shall in that day give glory to God, as a God of power, able to do such things; of righteousness, thus giving these bloody men their due; and of truth, thus fulfilling both his promises to his people and his threatenings against his enemies. But it is easier to determine who shall thus rejoice, than the time when this joy shall be. This certainly is God's work, but in fieri, now doing, but not yet done.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial <sup>t ch. 8. 12.</sup> upon the sun; <sup>u ch. 9. 17.</sup> and power was given <sup>16. & 14. 14.</sup> unto him to scorch men with fire.

Here we have no history to guide us in the government of our fancies and judgments, but their opinion seems most probable to me, who, by the sun, understand some great prince or potentate, or the whole civil power in the antichristian heaven; suppose the Spaniard, or the emperor. It seems to signify either some destruction of such civil powers, or some defection of them from the papacy, which will vex and enrage antichrist and his party, as if they were scorched with fire. This I look upon as much more probable than theirs who interpret it of the natural sun, or the word of God.

9 And men were ¶ scorched with great heat, and <sup>x ver. 11, 21.</sup> blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: <sup>y Dan. 8. 22.</sup> and they repented not <sup>z ch. 9. 20.</sup> to give him glory. <sup>& ch. 11. 13.</sup> <sup>& 14. 7.</sup>

What the damned do in hell, where the wrath of God is poured out upon men to the utmost, that reprobates do upon earth, they are scorched with great heat, the vengeance of God cometh upon them; they are mad and enraged, and speak evil of a just and righteous God, who bringeth such plagues on them; but they have no sense of their sins, nor any thoughts of turning to God, confessing their sins, and giving him glory. This will be the upshot of God's lesser judgments upon the papacy: they will be mad at them, and rage, and reproach God's justice, but prove a hardened generation, given over to ruin, that will never be sensible that these judgments come upon them for their idolatries and superstitions, and for their persecutions, and the shedding the blood of God's holy ones. Not that all adhering to that church will be so, (many, probably, will convert, and be brought to acknowledge the truth,) but there will be a great party of them, whom nothing but the wrath of God come upon them in the bottomless pit to the utmost, will ever make sensible that they have done amiss, being given up to strong delusions, to a blind mind, and a hard heart, and a reprobate judgment.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial <sup>a ch. 13. 2.</sup> upon the seat of the beast; <sup>b ch. 9. 2.</sup> and his kingdom was full of darkness; <sup>c ch. 11. 10.</sup> and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

And the fifth angel; the fifth of the seven angels mentioned ver. 1, by which, as was said, is to be understood the instruments which God will use gradually to destroy the papacy; the fifth rank of persons, whom God will employ in the execution of this his purpose, by his acts of providence. Poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; shall execute God's wrath upon the city of Rome itself, wholly destroying the papacy in their power. And his kingdom was full of darkness; upon which his whole kingdom shall be full of the darkness of misery, trouble, and affliction. (Darkness was one of the plagues of Egypt.) And they gnawed their tongues for pain; and they shall be full of calamities, like men in so much pain that they bite their own tongues for pain. When this shall be God alone knows. I think, and experience hath proved, that they were much too hasty in their speculations, that prophesied it should be in the year 1656, or 1660, or 1666. For my own part, I do not believe it will be before 1866, or betwixt that and the year 1900. The determination of it depends upon the right fixing of the epocha, or beginning of the forty-two months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty prophetic days, which I think most probably fixed upon the year 606, or (according to Mr. Stephens's notion) 666, which, according to the Julian account, is the same: see the note on chap. xiii. 18.

11 And <sup>d ver. 9, 21.</sup> blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and <sup>e ver. 2.</sup> their sores, and repented not of their deeds. <sup>f ver. 9.</sup>

This is the same that was said, ver. 9, of a former party belonging to the beast, and doth but signify, that there will be found the same vein of blindness of mind, hardness of heart, and reprobacy of sense, running through that whole party, until they be wholly ruined.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial <sup>g ch. 8. 14.</sup> upon the great river Euphrates; <sup>h See Jer. 50. 38, & 51. 30.</sup> and the water thereof was dried up, <sup>i Is. 41. 2, 25.</sup> that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

Upon the great river Euphrates; upon the Turkish empire: see the notes on chap. ix. 14. And the water thereof was dried up; their force, power, and strength shall be destroyed. That the way of the kings of the east might be prepared; that a way may be prepared for the conversion of the Jews. This I find to be the sense of the most learned and judicious interpreters of this mysterious book, amongst whom I count Mr. Mede, Dr. More, Pareus, Mr. Durham, &c. But it will be reasonable to say something further to show the probability of this sense. Euphrates was a great river that ran by Babylon, the depth of it was (as historians tell us) about two men's height. When Cyrus and Darius came to conquer Babylon, they diverted this river, Jer. li. 32, 36. Here is an allusion to that history. The Turks first took up their habitation about this great river, as was said in our notes on chap. ix. 14, where the providence of God restrained them for many years, till the sixth trumpet sounded. The Jews, who are observed to be in greatest numbers in the Eastern countries, having had a promise, Exod. xix. 6, to be a kingdom of priests, may well be called here the kings of the east. Two things hinder their embracing the Christian faith: 1. The image worship and idolatry of the papists. 2. The power of the Turks, with the success they have had against Christians. But both these being taken away, by the fall of Babylon and the ruin of the Turks, the way seems to be prepared for the Jews' receiving of the Christian faith. In a case where nothing can be certainly determined, this seemeth a very probable opinion. To which it contributes a little, that it is probable, that the sixth vial answereth the sixth trumpet; and that as they were the people first let loose by Euphrates, where they were bound, so they are the people to be destroyed under the notion of drying up the waters of Euphrates: and this seemeth to be a work of Providence brought forth after the ruin of Rome, and the total breaking of the power and dominion of the papacy. Thus we have foretold the breaking both of pope and Turk, and all their upholders; but we must not imagine them so ruined, but that parties of both should be left in the world, which combining, made up the army to fight the devil's last battle in Armageddon, of which we shall read, ver. 16.

13 And I saw three unclean <sup>h</sup>spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of <sup>l</sup>the dragon, and out of the mouth of <sup>m</sup>the false prophet.

God here showeth John, that after the power and strength both of the pope and Turks should be broken, the devil would yet make one push more; to which purpose he would influence some on the behalf of the antichristian secular power, others on the behalf of the beast with two horns, or the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of devils, <sup>o</sup>working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth <sup>p</sup>and of the whole world, to gather them to <sup>q</sup>the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

Which, from the influence of the devil, should solicit the kings of the earth to join together in a battle against the church. This is, undoubtedly, the battle in Armageddon, ver. 16.

15 Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, <sup>r</sup>lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

I come as a thief; that is, I come suddenly and unexpectedly: see Matt. xxiv. 43, 44; Luke xii. 39; 1 Thess. v. 2; Rev. iii. 3. It may be understood either of Christ's coming to the last judgment, or of his coming in his vindicative providence to be revenged on his enemies. Blessed is he that watcheth, he is a happy man that maketh it his business to keep himself from sin, in prospect of any such coming, and keepeth his garments, and that persevereth in my ways and truth; lest he walk naked, and they see his shame; for if he doth not, he will be found one of those that are not clothed with my righteousness, and his hypocrisy will appear to all men.

16 And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

Either the devil brought them together, or God by his providence ordered that they should be gathered together, into the place where God designed to destroy them and their armies, for so the word Armageddon signifieth, say some; but others make it to signify the mountain of the gospel, or the mountain of apples, or fruits; but the first etymology in this place seems best. The word doth not signify any particular place; but here is an allusion, as some think, to that Megiddo, mentioned Judg. v. 19, where Barak overcame Sisera with his great army, and where Josiah was slain, 2 Kings xxiii. 30. Of the issue of this last battle with the enemies of the church of Christ we shall read more, chap. xix.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, <sup>s</sup>It is done.

And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air: I take this to be best interpreted (as Mr. Mede doth it) by the power of the air, of which Satan is called the prince, Eph. ii. 2, that is, upon all the children of the devil, that had so long given disturbance to the church of Christ. It is done; that is, the work of God is done, his counsels for the destruction of his enemies, and the deliverance of his people, are brought forth in the issue of his providence, not fully yet brought to an issue, but accomplishing.

18 And <sup>t</sup>there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; <sup>u</sup>and there was a great earthquake, <sup>v</sup>such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

See chap. iv. 5; vi. 12; xi. 13, 19. Either declarative of the majesty and power of God. (as Exod. xix. 16, when God came forth to give his law,) the violation of which God here was coming out to punish; or of the great stirs and confusions in that part of the world where the beast's greatest interest lay. Or, the voices, thunders, and lightnings, may be understood as declarative of the former, and the great earthquake of the latter.

19 And <sup>w</sup>the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon <sup>x</sup>came in remembrance before God, <sup>y</sup>to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of her wrath.

The great city; Rome, afterwards called great Babylon in this verse. Was divided into three parts; the pagan part, the evangelical part, and the antichristian part, (saith Dr. More,) the three parties that made up the armies that fought in Armageddon: or else this is added as the effect of the great earthquake. And great Babylon came in remembrance, &c.; God now took vengeance on the papacy, and all their adherents, though he had for twelve hundred and sixty years spared them, notwithstanding their idolatries and persecutions; and behaved himself toward them as if he had forgot them.

20 And <sup>z</sup>every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

These are the effects of great earthquakes: see chap. vi. 14. Some, by islands and mountains, understand the inhabitants of both. I know not whether those reverend authors, who by this term understand their idol worship and superstition, or ecclesiastical dignities, (I suppose because the heathens, and Jews, in imitation of them, committed idolatry on mountains and high hills,) be not here too critical.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and <sup>aa</sup>men blasphemed God because of <sup>ab</sup>the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

The hail was another of the Egyptian plagues. Exod. ix. 22—25. The allusion also may be to the hailstones by which God fought against the five Canaanitish kings, Josh. x. 11. It signifies only further great judgments with which God will pursue the beast and his party, until they all be destroyed. The latter words only show the continued hardness of heart of the beast, and all his party; wherein also they answered Pharaoh and the Egyptians, (their type,) who would relent with no steadiness and certainty, until they were all ruined by the waters of the Red Sea. In all this prediction of the final ruin of the papacy, Pharaoh and the Egyptians are apparently made the type of the pope and all his party: 1. As to their sins, which were idolatry, and the oppression of God's Israel. 2. In the plagues by which they were destroyed gradually; turning waters into blood, boils and blains, darkness, hail. 3. In their impenitency, and hardness of heart; only with these two differences, by which the antitype exceeded the type in wickedness: (1.) We read of Pharaoh oft relenting, though his goodness was like a morning dew, and he returned to his former stubbornness. (2.) We read nothing of the Egyptians blaspheming God, because of their plagues, which is often said of these Egyptians.

CHAP. XVII

John's vision of the great whore, sitting upon the scarlet coloured beast, arrayed in purple and scarlet, with a golden cup in her hand, 1—4. Her name, 5. She is drunken with the blood of saints, 6. The interpretation of the mystery of the beast, and of his seven heads and ten horns, 7—17; and of the woman, 18.

a ch. 21. 9. AND there came *one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; b I will shew unto thee the judgment of c the great whore d that sitteth upon many waters :

This whole verse is but a preface to a new vision which John had; not new, as to the matter revealed in it; for it plainly revealeth matters relating to antichrist; and the matter of it temporizeth with the three last vials, about the final ruin of antichrist, who was before described under the notion of a beast, here under the notion of a great whore. A whore properly signifies one that is married, and is false to her husband's bed; and so very well suits the Church of Rome, (if they yet deserve that name,) whose faith was formerly spoken of throughout the world, Rom. i. 8, but is long since turned idolatrous (idolatry, in the prophetic style, being quite through the Scripture called whoredom). She is said to sit upon many waters, either because she exerciseth a jurisdiction over much people, or with allusion to old Babylon, (which gave her her name,) which was situated near Euphrates, a river in which there was a great collection of waters. John is called to hear the counsels of God concerning her destruction, which though more generally and shortly revealed before, yet God here designs to reveal to John more fully, particularly, and plainly.

e ch. 18. 3. 2 *With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and f the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication; with which great whore several princes of the world have committed spiritual fornication, receiving her idolatrous worship, yielding to her authority, and following her example. And the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication; and not the kings only of the earth, but the generality of the people, have been influenced with a mad heat, and with the wine of her fornication, that is, with that wine by which she enticed them to commit idolatry with her. By this wine are meant honours, riches, preferments, pleasure, the gaudery of her worship, the magnificence of the apostolic see, their pretended antiquity, unity; in short, whatsoever specious arguments papists use to entice persons into the idolatrous communion of their church.

g ch. 12. 6. 3 So he carried me away in the spirit h into the wilderness: and I saw a woman i sit j upon a scarlet coloured beast, full k of names of blasphemy, l having seven heads and m ten horns.

So he carried me away in the spirit; that is, being in an ecstasy; see chap. iv. 2; whether in the body or out of the body he could not tell, as Paul expresseth it, 2 Cor. xii. 2. Into the wilderness; a place not, or not much, inhabited, either as fittest for contemplation, or to signify that this great whore, which had driven the spouse of Christ into the wilderness, should shortly herself come into her state, according to the fate of old Babylon, Jer. l. 13. And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast; the great whore, mentioned ver. 1, upheld by the Roman emperors. Full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns; the same which is mentioned chap. xiii. 1: see the notes there. Here a great question ariseth, who this woman is, or, (which is the same, as appeareth by ver. 5,) what city is meant by Babylon, mentioned ver. 5; a question (as Mr. Pool noteth) of high concernment; for whoever this woman is, or whatsoever this Babylon signifieth, the people of God are upon pain of damnation admonished to avoid any communion with her, and to come out of her, chap. xiv. 9, 10. Mr. Pool hath diligently collected into his Latin Synopsis all opinions about it, and showed what is to be said for or against them; I will give my reader the sum of what he saith.

1. Some would have it to be the whole world of wicked men. Against this it is said, (1.) That John speaks here of a certain great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth, ver. 18: this cannot be meant of the wicked world.

(2.) The world of wicked men are those inhabitants of the earth, whom this woman made drunk with the wine of her fornication: now she that made them drunk, and those that were made drunk, cannot be the same. (3.) This woman sitteth on seven mountains, ver. 9, and so do not all the wicked of the world. (4.) We are commanded to come out of this Babylon, but we are not obliged to go out of the world.

2. Others would have this woman, or this Babylon, to be the old Chaldean Babylon. But, (1.) Where then is the mystery, mentioned ver. 5? (2.) The Babylon here mentioned, is by all agreed to be the seat of antichrist; so was that never.

3. The generality agree it to be Rome. Amongst the ancients, Tertullian, Jerome, Ambrose, Eusebius, Augustine, Eusebius: of later writers, Beda, Aquinas, Salmeron, Pererius, Bellarmine, Lapide, Ribera, (all papists,) besides a multitude of protestant writers. (1.) That city is also like old Babylon for power and greatness, for oppression and tyranny of and over God's Israel; besides, the city here mentioned is described by two characters, agreeing to none but Rome, ver. 9, dwelling upon seven hills. (2.) Reigning over the kings of the earth: for the first Rome is the only city in the world founded upon seven hills, and famed for it by its old poets, Ovid, Virgil, Horace, Propertius, &c. It is attested to be so founded by Plutarch, Pliny, Dionysius, Halicarnassæus. The names of these hills are known: Palatinus, Quirinalis, Aventinus, Celius, Viminalis, Esquilinus, Capitolinus. Both papist and protestant writers agree that here by Babylon Rome is meant; but they are divided, whether it be to be understood of Rome in its old pagan state, or in its present state, or in a state yet to come.

4. Some would have it to be Rome in its pagan state; of this mind are Grotius, and Dr. Hammond, and some others. But against this many things are said: (1.) It is manifest that God here describes Rome not as under its sixth head, viz. the pagan emperors, but as it was under its last head, the eighth king, ver. 11, as it should ascend out of the bottomless pit, ver. 8. (2.) What John saw herein mentioned as a secret about the blood of the saints, which he wondered at; now the pagan emperors' spilling the blood of saints was a thing long since done. (3.) The desolation of the Babylon here mentioned was to be final, never to be repaired, as appears by chap. xviii. 21—23; but pagan Rome was never made so desolate. (4.) If Rome pagan be here meant, then, after its fall, Rome Christian was the habitation of devils, chap. xviii. 2. (5.) Rome pagan fell upon our saints with downright blows, not with allurements, making them drunk with the wine of her fornication, as ver. 2.

5. The papists, who grant that by Babylon Rome is meant, would have it to be Rome toward the end of the world, when, they say, Rome shall apostatize from the pope to paganism again; but for this opinion there is no foundation in Scripture, nor the judgment of the ancients, and some of the papists themselves reject it as improbable and detestable.

6. The generality and best of protestant writers understand by Babylon, and by this woman, Rome, as it is at this day under the conduct of the pope, for which they give these reasons. (1.) Because it cannot be understood of Rome in either of the other notions, as hath been proved. (2.) Because antichrist is to sit in the temple of God, 2 Thess. ii. 4, as God, therefore not in any pagan city. The mystery of iniquity was working in the apostle's time, but, ver. 7, the Roman empire hindered the appearance of antichrist till the popes had wrung Rome out of their hands, and were the sole rulers there; then antichrist showed himself. (3.) Because there is nothing said of this great whore, or this Babylon, but admirably agreeth to Rome in its present state.

4 And the woman <sup>m</sup> was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, <sup>n</sup> and <sup>o</sup> decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, <sup>p</sup> having a golden cup in her hand <sup>q</sup> full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication :

And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour ;

m ch. 18. 12, 16
n Dan. 11. 38
+ Or. gilded.
o Jer. 51. 7.
ch. 18. 6.
p ch. 14. 8.

purple was the colour of kings and princes: this woman, chap. xviii. 7, said she was queen. Scarlet also was a rich and noble colour, anciently most used in a time of war. How much it is in use with the pope and his cardinals, is sufficiently known. And decked with gold and precious stones and pearls; this shows the worldly riches of the papacy. Having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication; alluring and tempting persons to idolatry, as whores use to do with their philters, or enchanted cups, allure and provoke men to sensual satisfactions.

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

And upon her forehead was a name written; as public harlots were wont to write their names, some upon the fronts of their houses, some upon their foreheads: it denotes the open guilt and impudence of this spiritual harlot. Mystery; that is, there is a mystery in what follows in her name. Babylon the great; not to be understood of the Chaldean Babylon, but of a city or polity under the gospel; as, chap. xi. 8, she was called spiritually Sodom and Egypt, so also in a spiritual or mystical sense she is called Babylon, because a city like to Babylon for idolatry and persecution of God's Israel. The mother of harlots; not a mere harlot, but one that bred up harlots, and nursed up idolatry, communicating it to others. This is the true name of Rome, instead of "holy mother church." And abominations of the earth; a place in which not only idolatry reigneth, but all abominable things committed in the world; carnal whoredom tolerated by them, and sodomy, &c.

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

And I saw the woman, the papacy, drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; filled with the blood of those holy ones, which she caused to be slain for bearing testimony to Jesus Christ. And when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration; which he would not have done had it been a pagan Rome he had seen in this vision. But that any that owned Christ, and called themselves the holy church, should kill men for bearing testimony to Christ, and adherence to his rule of faith and life, this caused in John a just wonderment.

7 And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

The angel promiseth to open this vision, it being the key of the former vision, and is the only vision expounded throughout this whole book.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

The beast that thou sawest; this beast was the Roman empire, the scarlet coloured beast which carried the whore, ver. 3. Was, and is not; was of old, in Rome's pagan state, and is not, not in that form, not now pagan; and yet is (as is said in the close of the verse) the same in another form, idolatrous and persecuting. And shall ascend out of the bottomless pit; either, out of the sea, which signifies a multitude of people; or, from hell; the word signifies both. And go into perdition; and shall certainly be destroyed. And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, &c.: but before he goes into perdition he shall so cheat the world, that the generality of the people shall wonder at the beast, (see chap. xiii. 8,) setting aside those who are chosen of God to eternal salvation; the one hundred and forty-four thousand, mentioned chap. xiv. I conceive that which hath made interpreters so divided in their notions about this beast is, because those words, and yet is, are not added in the beginning of the verse, which being understood, there appears no difficulty considerable; for it is certain the Roman empire was from before Christ, and continued pagan till the year 310; then was not pagan, but Christian, yet after some years was again as idolatrous and bloody against Christians, as the old pagan empire was; especially when swallowed up by the pope, the beast with two horns like a lamb. This is the beast with seven heads and ten horns, chap. xiii. 1.

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

And here is the mind which hath wisdom; that is, here is that which requireth a mind endued with spiritual wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth; the seven heads which he saw the beast with, signified seven mountains or hills upon which Rome is situated; they were named before: see the notes on ver. 3. They tell us now Rome is situated in Campo Martio. Resp. Whatever it now is, certain it is, that in St. John's time it was situated upon them, and they are now within the compass of Rome.

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

And there are seven kings; the seven heads do not only signify seven hills or mountains, but also seven kings, that is, (according to the best interpretation I meet with,) seven forms of government which ruled Rome; the term kings, in Scripture, signifying rulers, whether the government was in single persons, or more, as Deut. xxxiii. 5. Rome was governed, 1. By kings. 2. By consuls. 3. Tribunes. 4. Decemvirs. 5. Dictators. 6. Emperors that were pagans. 7. Emperors that were Christians. Five are fallen; five of these were fallen, extinguished before John's time, viz. the government by kings, consuls, tribunes, decemvirs, dictators. And one is; the government by pagan emperors was at that time in being. And the other is not yet come; the government by Christian emperors was not yet in being. And when he cometh, he must continue a short space; and when it came, it held but a little time before the bishops of Rome wrested the government of Italy out of their hands. This to me seemeth the most probable interpretation of this difficult text.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth; this made the eighth succession of governments in the Roman empire. And is of the seven; this was of the seventh head; for although this was the eighth government in order as we have counted them, yet one of these, viz. the seventh, (which was that of true Christian emperors,) must not be counted as one of the seven heads, which were all idolatrous: so though this was the eighth government, yet he was one of the seven heads, i. e. idolatrous governments. And goeth into perdition; and to be destroyed as they were.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings; possibly by ten kings here are not meant monarchs, but governments. Which have received no kingdom as yet; which were not in being in John's time, nor in many years after. But receive power as kings one hour with the beast; but should, during some time of the beast's reign, have power with the papacy, employing their power with his to establish his idolatry. But who these ten monarchs are, or what these ten governments are, I must confess myself at a loss to determine. It is plain they should be, 1. Such as should be contemporaneous with the reign of the beast. 2. Such as employed their power in conjunction with his. 3. Such as should afterwards be instruments to ruin the papacy,

q 2 Thes. 2. 7.
r ch. 11. 5.
& 14. 6. &
16. 19. & 18.
2. 10. 21.
s ch. 18. 9.
& 19. 2.
t Or, fornications.

t ch. 18. 24.
u ch. 13. 15.
& 16. 6.
x ch. 6. 9, 10.
& 12. 11.

y ch. 11. 7.
& 13. 1.
z ch. 13. 10.
ver. 11.
a ch. 13. 3.
b ch. 13. 8.

c ver. 8.

f Dan. 7. 20.
Zech. 1. 18, 19, 21.
ch. 13. 1.

ver. 16, 17. The beast's reign being twelve hundred and sixty years, there hath been, and will be, such a variety of princes and governments, as it is very hard to determine who they shall be. But their being contemporaneous with the beast, makes me think it cannot be understood either of any that were in the world before the year 606, when the beast's reign began (though the mystery of iniquity was working, and the image of the beast was making, long before); as also that the ten barbarous nations that disturbed Italy from the year 410 till near 600 could not be meant, being all before antichrist came to any reign; nor did they ever show any great love or hatred to the pope; sometimes serving, sometimes opposing him, as suited their respective civil interests. I am very inclinable to think the prophecy to concern some kings nearer the end of antichrist's reign, who though for a while they served the papacy, yet shall at last be instruments to ruin him; but who they are shall do this, or when it shall be, I cannot determine.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

They shall all be papists, and for a while shall employ all their power and strength to uphold the popish religion.

g ch. 16. 14. & 19. 19. 14 <sup>a</sup>These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: <sup>b</sup>for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: <sup>c</sup>and they that are with him <sup>d</sup>are called, and chosen, and faithful.

These shall make war with the Lamb; these ten kings shall a while oppose themselves to the gospel, taking part with antichrist. And the Lamb shall overcome them; Christ shall overcome them by the power of his gospel, or some of them that way; others, that will not be converted, shall be confounded, some way or other brought to ruin. For he is Lord of lords and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful; for he hath a power above others, and knows how to fit instruments for his purpose; so as those whom he shall make use of in this work, shall be chosen persons, and faithful in discharge of the trust committed to them.

k Is. 8. 7. ver. 1. 15 And he saith unto me, <sup>a</sup>The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, <sup>b</sup>are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

John saw the great whore sitting upon seven mountains, ver. 9, and upon many waters, ver. 1; these signified her dominion and jurisdiction over many people.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, <sup>m</sup>these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate <sup>n</sup>and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and <sup>o</sup>burn her with fire.

And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast: see ver. 3, 12. These shall hate the whore, &c.; the ten kings shall apostatize from the papacy, and be great instruments of God to ruin it. When we see some other kingdoms, now in vassalage to the pope, do as much as hath been done in England, and Scotland, and Sweden, and some other places, we may possibly understand this prophecy better than we yet do.

p 2 Thea. 11. 17 <sup>p</sup>For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, <sup>q</sup>until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will; that is, what he hath determined shall be done; not that he commandeth men to do, or approveth their doing of; his permissive will. And to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast; for God puts malice against himself and his Son into the hearts of none, which is the cause of any persons' assisting the beast. Until the words of God shall be fulfilled; nor shall they do this any longer than till the forty-two months be expired, which he by his word hath declared he hath allowed to these mongrel Gentiles, to tread down the outward court: but till that time be expired, these kingdoms will agree to give their power to the beast, whom about the expiration of that time they shall hate, and help to destroy.

18 And the woman which thou sawest <sup>r</sup>is that great city, <sup>s</sup>which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

And the woman which thou sawest: see ver. 3. Is that great city; that is, signifieth that great city, Babylon the great: see ver. 5. Which reigneth over the kings of the earth, commanding and punishing them as she pleaseth. To what person or power that either now is, or ever was, upon the earth, is this applicable, but to the pope, who makes emperors hold his stirrup, sends his edicts to princes to execute, excommunicates them, and interdicts their subjects, and arms them against them if they refuse? So that if the pope sits upon seven hills, or Rome be built upon them; if the papacy hath allured the inhabitants of the earth to idolatry; if in her idolatries she be the image of the old pagan idolaters; if to her many princes have given their power and strength; if she reigneth over the kings of the earth; and these things be applicable to no other person or government; there is no more doubt, whether the pope be antichrist, and Rome mystical Babylon, which shall certainly be destroyed for her idolatries and shedding the blood of God's holy ones, than there is of what we have chap. i. 1, 2. that this book contains The Revelation of Jesus Christ, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; which he sent and signified by his angel unto his servant John; who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

CHAP. XVIII

A mighty angel declareth the fall of Babylon, 1—3. God's people commanded to depart out of her, 4—7. Her judgment, 8. The kings of the earth, 9, 10, and the merchants, 11—16, and mariners, lament over her, 17—19. The saints are excited to rejoice over her, 20. A millstone cast into the sea denoteth her irrecoverable fall, 21—24.

AND <sup>a</sup>after these things I saw another <sup>a</sup>angel come down from heaven, having great power; <sup>b</sup>and the earth was lightened with his glory.

It is a matter of no great moment, whether by this angel we understand Christ, or a created angel; the description agreeth to Christ, and may agree to a created angel. Having great power; to whom God had given power and authority to declare the ruin of Babylon. And the earth was lightened with his glory; and he had communicated to him a great glory, suited to his splendour and greatness whose messenger he was.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, <sup>c</sup>Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and <sup>d</sup>is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and <sup>e</sup>a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen: whoever was meant by the angel whom John saw, ver. 1, his business was to give warning to the whole world, (therefore he crieth with a strong voice,) that Rome, the great city, the mother of spiritual harlots, should fall. This angel was a prophet, and the messenger of him who calls the things that are not as if they were; and therefore he speaks in a Divine, prophetic style: the prophets (ordinarily) speaking of things to come as past, or present, to denote the certain futurity of them, and doubling their words to assure us of it; for this, is fallen, is expounded by shall be thrown down, ver. 21. We read of this angel, chap. xiv. 8; but it is ordinary with prophets to repeat the same things, and it is done as to the Chaldean Babylon, the type to this antitype, both Isaiah and Jeremiah declared in more than one sermon its certain approaching ruin. These words are taken from Isa. xxi. 9, where the word fallen is doubled, as here. They are found also, Jer. li. 8. God here explaineth what he had said before, chap. xiv. 8. And is become the habitation of devils, &c.: the words

m Jer. 50. 41, 42. ch. 16. 12. n Ezek. 16. 37, 44. ch. 18. 16. o ch. 18. 8.

p 2 Thea. 11.

q ch. 10. 7.

r ch. 16. 19. s ch. 12. 4.

a ch. 17. 1.

b Ezek. 43. 2.

e Is. 13. 19. & 21. 9. Jer. 51. 8. ch. 14. 2. d Is. 13. 21. & 21. 8. & 34. 14. Jer. 50. 39. & 51. 37. e Is. 14. 23. & 34. 11. Mark 5. 7, 3.

are such as might signify a sinful fall, or apostacy; and what is here, is true of it in that sense; idols in Scripture being ordinarily called devils: but they seem rather to be understood of a penal fall, for such is that spoken of Isa. xxi. 9, after which it should become a habitation of devils, and a cage of unclean birds. See the like spoken of literal Babylon, Isa. xiii. 19—21; wild beasts and hateful birds usually frequenting desolate places.

f ch. 14. 8.
& 17. 2.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

g ver. 11, 15.
h. 47. 15.

|| Or, power.

For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication; that is, her fornications which have brought this wrath upon her. And the kings of the earth have committed, &c.; she hath not only herself committed idolatry, but allured others to it, teaching them to break the commandments of God, and hath influenced princes to establish, and propagate, and to uphold, and maintain it; and all sorts of men have been bewitched by her, growing rich by her abundance, and being drenched in her luxury.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

h Is. 48. 20.
& 62. 11.
Jer. 50. 8.
& 51. 6, 45.
2 Cor. 6. 17.

And I heard another voice from heaven, saying: a command from God. Come out of her, my people: they are the words of God by his prophet, Jer. i. 8; li. 6, calling to his people, that the years of their captivity being now expired, and they having a liberty to go back to Jerusalem, they would not linger longer in Babylon, nor partake of her sins; for God was about to destroy that place; and if they were found in it, they would be in danger of being destroyed with it, especially if they were found partakers of its sins. But they are also a general warning to all to take heed of any fellowship with idolaters; and so the apostle applieth part of these words, 2 Cor. vi. 17. Here they are applied to mystical Babylon, which is Rome antichristian. God calls to all that either love him, or their own souls, to forsake the communion of it; for while they continue in it, they must partake of its sins, worshipping the beast, by paying, at his command, a Divine homage to saints and angels, to the virgin Mary, to images and statues, nay, to a piece of baker's bread; and doing so, they will be involved in her plagues. This text looks terribly upon those who apostatize to that idolatry; and instead of coming out, (in obedience to the command of God,) being come out, go in again, and that not by compulsion, but out of choice, and voluntarily.

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

i Gen. 18.
20, 21.
Jer. 51. 9.
Joah. 1. 2.
k ch. 16. 18.

For her sins have reached unto heaven; that is, the cry of her sins; according to what is said of Sodom, (one of the types of antichrist,) Gen. xviii. 20, 21. And God hath remembered her iniquities; the time is come when God will punish her for her idolatry and persecution, and all the abominable things done and committed by her.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

l Pa. 137. 8.
Jer. 50. 15,
29, & 51. 24,
49, 2 Tim. 4.
14. ch. 13. 10.
m ch. 14. 10.
n ch. 16. 18.

This verse soundeth in mine ears, as if God had reserved the ruin of the papacy to be effected by some protestant hands, some of those whom they had persecuted; if not some of their persons, yet some of the same faith.

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

o Ezek. 28.
2, 4, 6.

p Is. 47. 7, 8.
Zeph. 2. 15.

How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: this speaketh thus much; That whenever God's time cometh for the ruin of the papacy, the condition of all that party shall appear as miserable as it appears now splendid and happy. For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow; and one great reason of this so great affliction, will be the pride, presumption, and security of that faction, much after the rate of old Babylon, Isa. xviii. 8. Old Babylon thought itself impregnable; and new mystical Babylon thinks herself infallible and impregnable too; the only church, (if we will believe her,) against whom the gates of hell shall not prevail.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

q Is. 47. 9.
ver. 10.

r ch. 17. 16.
s Jer. 50. 74.
ch. 11. 17.

Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; as was threatened to old Babylon, Isa. xlvii. 9. In one day; that is, in a short time. Death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; all manner of judgments, till she be fully consumed. For strong is the Lord God who judgeth her; for she hath to do with a strong Lord: she thinks she hath secured herself from man, by interesting kings and princes in her quarrel; but it is the Lord that judgeth her, and she will find him strong enough to accomplish his word upon her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

t Ezek. 26.
16, 17. ch. 17.
2. ver. 2.

u Jer. 50. 48.
v ver. 19.
ch. 15. 3.

Not all of them, for some of them shall help to burn her, chap. xvii. 16; but such as God had left to their hardness of heart, that they still live in her fellowship and communion: or, if others also, it must proceed from their humanity, not being able to see so splendid a city, as that of Rome, ruined, and so many ruined as will perish by her fall, without the moving of their bowels by some pity and commiseration.

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

y Is. 21. 8.
ch. 14. 8.
z ver. 17, 18.

As well as they loved her, they will not come nigh her in the time of her torments; the fire will be too hot for them, they will only stand aloof off, and pity her, that so great and brave a city should be so suddenly ruined; such a gay and splendid church, so politely founded and put together, should be in a sudden so broken to pieces.

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more;

a Ezek. 27.
27, 28.
ver. 2.

As the merchants, Ezek. xxvii. 27, lamented for Tyre, that they could barter and truck no more there, because all the trade thereof was destroyed; so those ecclesiastical merchants, that were wont to trade with Rome for indulgences, and pardons, and dispensations, and faculties, for cardinals' caps, and bishoprics, and prebendaries, and other church preferments, shall lament when the papacy falls, that there will be no more such merchandise to be bought or sold there.

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble,

b ch. 17. 4.

|| Or, sweet.

13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.

|| Or, bodies.
c Ezek. 27.
13.

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

Here is a large enumeration of several sorts of wares, such as were most precious, gold, silver, precious stones; such as were most useful for ornament, fine linen, purple, silk, scarlet; most gratifying the exterior senses, thyne wood, odours, ointments, &c.; most necessary, beasts, sheep, horses, chariots; all which, as is prophesied, shall depart from Rome: that is, whatsoever she had, which allured men into her idolatrous communion; all their idols and images, cardinals' caps, priests' copes, all their preferments and dignities, whatsoever served the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, or the pride of life; whatsoever their own carnal and ambitious minds, or the carnal and ambitious minds of others that courted this whore, thirsted after, which brought them to seek her communion; they should all perish, and she be despoiled of them. It is very remarkable, that here is one piece of merchandise to be had no where but at Rome, viz. the souls of men; which lets us know they are no earthly merchants that are here understood. As souls are to be sold a thousand ways, so they are to be bought; by paying for pardons, indulgences, dispensations, so the silly chapmen think they buy their own souls; by purchasing of cardinals' caps, bishoprics, great livings, all manner of ecclesiastical dignities and preferments, so they really buy the souls of others; but when the papacy shall be wholly destroyed, none of these things shall any more be found.

15 <sup>d ver. 9, 11.</sup> The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing.

Not knowing how to help her, and fearing lest the buyers and sellers should be punished both alike; yet bewailing themselves that their trading is destroyed, and they are like to buy such pennyworths no more.

16 And saying, Alas, alas that great city, <sup>e ch. 17. 4.</sup> that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

Alas, alas that great city! the Church of Rome, that was so gay, and splendid, and rich, and glorious.

17 <sup>f ver. 10.</sup> For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And <sup>g la. 23. 14. Ezek. 27. 29.</sup> every ship-master, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off,

In one hour; that is, suddenly. The term denotes rather the surprisal of this judgment, than the short space of time within which it should be effected.

18 <sup>h Ezek. 27. 30. 31. ver. 9. 1 ch. 13. 4.</sup> And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

19 <sup>k Josh. 7. 6. 1 Sam. 4. 12. Job 2. 12. Ezek. 27. 30.</sup> And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! <sup>l ver. 5.</sup> for in one hour is she made desolate.

We all know ship-masters and sailors are persons that live by carrying merchants' goods; and therefore, properly, the terms signify all such persons (of what rank and order soever) who get their livings by serving this mystical Babylon, whether silversmiths that make shrines for Diana, or clerks, or notaries, or any officers in that church, employed in gathering its revenues of annats and first-fruits, selling of offices, gathering of Peter-pence, drawing of pardons and indulgences, or dispensations, or such as in that synagogue hold any offices of profit. All who will be highly concerned in the ruin of the papacy, as that by the upholding of which they live, by reason of the great riches thus coming in, the whole rabble of their ecclesiastical hierarchy, with all their petty officers, seem to be here meant.

20 <sup>m la. 44. 23. & 49. 13. Jer. 51. 48. n Luke 11. 49. 50. ch. 19. 2.</sup> Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for <sup>o Jer. 51. 49.</sup> God hath avenged you on her.

Rejoice over her, thou heaven; that is, over her ruin, which is not a more proper object for the sorrow and mourning of all her adherents and dependants, than of the joy of all spiritual, heavenly persons, which are the true church, who oppose this antichristian synagogue. And ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her: you also that were apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, and such as have been exercised as prophets in revealing to men God's mind and will, do you rejoice, for God hath revenged you upon her, for your doctrine corrupted by her, your rules of worship violated, and some of your blood that hath been spilt, and for all the indignities you have suffered from her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, <sup>o Jer. 51. 64.</sup> Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and <sup>p ch. 12. 6. & 16. 20.</sup> shall be found no more at all.

And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea; for a sign or symbol of the irreparable ruin of Rome, signified by that great millstone which had ground to powder so many of God's holy ones. By this sign God shows his prophet, 1. That Rome shall be ruined. 2. That it shall be done with violence. 3. That it shall be a total, utter ruin, from whence it shall never recover.

22 <sup>q Is. 24. 8. Jer. 7. 34. & 16. 9. & 25. 10. Ezek. 26. 13.</sup> And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 <sup>r Jer. 25. 10. s Jer. 7. 34. & 16. 9. & 25. 10. & 33. 11.</sup> And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; <sup>t la. 23. 8.</sup> and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for <sup>u 2 Kings 9. 22. Nah. 3. 4. ch. 17. 5, 6.</sup> thy merchants were the great men of the earth; <sup>v Jer. 25. 10.</sup> for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

And the voice of harpers, &c., shall be heard no more at all in thee; all these seem to me but the expression of an utter ruin and desolation, by various phrases and expressions; they should have no more occasion of mirth, nor any more business done in their city. If any will understand these expressions, of their organs, and other musical instruments used in worship, and of spiritual craftsmen, I shall not contradict it; but I think it more proper to understand the words more largely. For thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived: though thou hast had a trade with great men, and by thy enchanted cups of the wine of thy fornication hast intoxicated many in all nations, yet thou shalt use that trade no more; the nations shall be deceived no more by thee; here shall be an end of thee. And one thing that brings thee to thy ruin, shall be thy seducing others to idolatry, so as they have seemed to reasonable men to be bewitched by thee.

24 <sup>x ch. 17. 6.</sup> And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

<sup>y Jer. 51. 49.</sup> In the rubbish of Rome, when destroyed, will be found the blood of all those holy servants of God, whether ministers of the gospel, or professors of it, who ever since the year 606, when the pope came first to his power, have been put to death for the testimony of Christ, and a faithful adherence to the purity of doctrine by him delivered, the purity of worship by him prescribed and directed, or the purity of discipline by his direction set up. As it is storied, that upon the dissolution of abbeyes, and monasteries, and nunneries here in England, there were found in holes of walls, and ponds, the skulls and bones of many infants, the supposed bastards of those fathers: so, though men cannot or will not see it now, yet when the papacy shall have its period, men shall understand, that no prophet nor righteous man hath violently been put to death for the truth out of Rome, that is, out of the jurisdiction and influence of Rome; but though it may be they have been no professed papists that have been the cause or instruments of their death, yet they have done it as influenced from that bloody city; and the principles have been perfectly popish and antichristian which madly hurried them on to such cruelties. It was one of Luthers reasons why he would have none put to death for heresy, (as they call it,) because he would have this particular character reserved for that antichristian synagogue.—But ah, Lord Jesus! when shall these things be? or who shall live when the wise providence of God shall effect them, to join with the whole church, both triumphant and militant, in the song which we have prophesied of upon this occasion in the next chapter. It is not for us to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power, Acts i. 7.

CHAP. XIX

God is praised in heaven for judging the great whore, and avenging the blood of his saints, 1—5. The triumph because of the marriage of the Lamb, 6—9. The angel who showed John these things, refuseth to be worshipped, 10. The vision of the Word of God sitting upon a white horse, and followed by his armies, 11—16. The fowls called to feast on the flesh of those that took part with the beast, 17—19. The beast and false prophet cast into the lake of fire and brimstone; and the rest slain, 20, 21.

a ch. 11. 15. AND after these things *I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; <sup>b</sup> Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

b ch. 4. 11
e 7. 10, 12
e 12. 10.

And after these things; after the pouring out of the fifth vial upon the seat of the beast, chap. xvi. 10; for chap. xvii. and xviii., as we have formerly hinted, is but a parenthesis to the history. God, in this chapter, more fully describes the effects of the pouring out that vial. I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying: it may be understood either of the third heavens, or the heaven upon earth, the church of God; for the church triumphant and militant both will concur in praising God for the ruin of antichrist's power. Alleluia is a Hebrew word, and signifies, Praise ye the Lord. Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God: all these are but terms of honour and praise given unto God, acknowledging that the church's salvation is from him, the effect of his power; and that to him, upon that account, all honour and glory imaginable is due, as having shown himself his people's God.

2 For *true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and <sup>a</sup>hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

c ch. 15. 2
e 16. 7.

For true and righteous are his judgments: the Lord's judgments, in holy writ, sometimes signify his precepts, sometimes his dispensations of providence, either more generally, or more specially; in which last sense it signifies (as here) his punishment of sinners: these are just and righteous, and therefore called judgments. For he hath judged the great whore, for he hath punished the papacy, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, which corrupted a great part of the earth with its idolatry. And hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand; and by these judicial dispensations God hath also taken vengeance on them for the blood of his saints shed by them. It is remarkable, that all along in this book idolatry and persecution are made the beast's provoking sins.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And <sup>a</sup>her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

e 12. 24. 10
ch. 12. 11.
e 15. 9, 12.

As the church proceeded in her praises, so God proceeded in his judgments upon the great whore, until she was ruined past recovery:

4 And <sup>a</sup>the four and twenty elders and

f ch. 4. 4, 6,
10. & 5. 12.

the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, <sup>a</sup>Amen; Alleluia.

g 1 Chron. 16.
36. Neh. 6.
13. & 4. 5.
ch. 5. 14.

See the notes on chap. iv. All the heavenly choir praise God upon this account, desiring that the Lord would fulfil what he had begun.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, <sup>b</sup>Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, <sup>c</sup>both small and great.

h Ps. 134. 1.
e 135. 1.
i ch. 11. 16.
e 20. 12.

And a voice came out of the throne, from Christ, declaring it the will of God, that all holy ones should praise him upon this account.

6 *And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for <sup>a</sup>the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

k Ezek. 1.
24. & 43. 2.
ch. 14. 2.

l ch. 11. 15,
17. & 12. 10.
e 21. 22.

By this multitude most understand the church. Some understand the Jews as well as the Gentiles, supposing that they shall be before this time converted and added to the church. Others think their conversion is the marriage spoken of in the next verse. The saints do not rejoice in the ruin of their adversaries, but in the glory of God advanced by it, and as his kingdom is by it promoted.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for <sup>a</sup>the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

m Matt. 22.
2. & 25. 10.
n Cor. 11. 2.
Eph. 5. 32.
ch. 21. 2, 9.

*A late reverend author tells us, That as there is a threefold resurrection mentioned in Scripture; 1. A rising to a newness of life, Eph. v. 14; 2. The conversion of the Jews, called life from the dead, Rom. xi. 15; 3. In the end of the world: so there is a threefold marriage of the Lamb; 1. To particular souls, when by faith they are united to Christ; 2. To his church completed, when the Jews shall be called; 3. When all his elect shall be made one with him in glory, after the general resurrection. He seemeth to understand it of all these. Probably the conversion of the Jews stayeth for the fall of the papacy, whose worship and persecution are great scandals to them. Probably also, upon the fall of it, many will be converted besides the Jews, and the general resurrection will not be far off. The learned Dr. More seems to restrain it to the Jews' conversion; I had rather understand it more generally.*

8 And <sup>a</sup>to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and <sup>b</sup>white: *for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

n Ps. 45. 15.
14. Ezek. 16.
10. ch. 3. 18.

o Or, bright.
e Ps. 132. 9.

And to her was granted; that is, to the Lamb's wife, whether Jews or Gentiles, or both. That she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; that she should be clothed with the righteousness of Christ, reckoned to her for righteousness. This is the righteousness of the saints; called the righteousness of God, Rom. i. 17; a righteousness through the faith of Christ, Phil. iii. 9: called righteousness, in the Greek, because there are many saints to be clothed with it; and because it is imputed both for justification and sanctification, not to excuse us from holiness, but to make up our defects.

9 And he saith unto me, Write, <sup>a</sup>Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, <sup>b</sup>These are the true sayings of God.

p Matt. 22.
2. 3. Luke
14. 15, 16.

q ch. 21. 8.
e 22. 6.

And he saith unto me, Write; write it, as a business of moment, of which a record is fit to be kept. Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb; that is, (say those who understand by the marriage of the Lamb the Jews' conversion), who live in this happy period of time when the Jews shall be converted, and with the Gentiles make one gospel church. But this seems to me not sufficient. The marriage is one thing, the supper another, and (ordinarily) consequential to the marriage itself.

The kingdom of glory seems to me rather intended, and those are called to it, who are made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. These are the true sayings of God; that is, these are the undoubted truths of God, and therefore to be called into question by none.

r ch. 22. 8.

s Acts 10. 25.
& 14. 14.
ch. 22. 2.

t John 5.
10. ch. 12.
17.

10 And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, "See thou do it not: I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

And I fell at his feet to worship him: prostration, or falling at the feet of superiors, to pay them an homage in consideration of their superiority, was ordinarily used in those Eastern countries, Gen. xlv. 14; 1 Sam. xxv. 24; 2 Kings iv. 37; Esth. viii. 3. To worship him, therefore, here must be understood of prayer or praise, which are pieces of Divine adoration, which it is not probable this great apostle would have offered, had he not mistaken him, and thought him an uncreated angel. And he said unto me, See thou do it not; but the angel doth not only refuse it, but with some indignation; "Opa μη, Have a care you do it not. From whence we may observe, what a fig-leaf they have made to cover the papists' idolatry, in worshipping the bread in the eucharist, who (to show us their great skill in divinity) think they may be excused from idolatry in it, because they think the bread is turned into the body of Christ; idolatry is not to be excused by think so's. I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: the angel gives him a reason why there was no adoration due to him, because he was his equal in office, though not in nature; he was both his and all their brethren's fellow servant, who by preaching the gospel give a testimony to Christ. Well, therefore, chap. ii. and iii., may the ministers of churches be called angels. Worship God; there is no prayer, no praise, due but to the Creator. For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy: there are divers senses given of the last phrase; but of all given, there are two which seem to me most probable: either, 1. The spirit of this prophecy, by which I have revealed these things to thee, is not mine, it is the testimony of Jesus; he therefore is to be adored, not I. Or, 2. Thy preaching the gospel, which is thy testimony to Christ, is as much from the Spirit of God, as my spirit of prophecy: we are therefore equals, and I am not to be worshipped more than thou art. We have the same, chap. xxii. 8, 9, to let us know that even good men may twice run into the same error; and to let us know, that by the mouth of these two witnesses this truth ought to have been established, so that papists should not after this have paid any Divine adoration to angels, much less to saints; and if invocation be no Divine adoration, nothing is. This deserveth the consideration of them, who think it so easy to excuse the popish religion from idolatry.

u ch. 16. 5.

x ch. 6. 2.

y ch. 3. 14.

z La. 11. 4.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

The remaining part of this chapter is conceived more fully to open what shall come to pass under the sixth and seventh vials, mentioned chap. xvi. 12, 17, more especially the battle in Armageddon, mentioned there, ver. 16. There mention was made only of the armies' being gathered together; here it is more fully described. At the beginning of the gospel, (saith a late learned annotator,) John saw only a door opened, chap. iv. 1. At the resurrection of the witnesses, he saw the temple opened, chap. xi. 19. Here, after the ruin of Babylon, he seeth heaven opened. And behold a white horse: John saw such a horse, chap. vi. 2. Dr. More observes, that the horse with his rider signifies rule; and the white colour, prosperity and success. It appears that the rider was Christ, because he is called Faithful and True, which agrees with chap. i. 5; and by the names in the following verses, 13 and 16, given to him.

a ch. 1. 14.

b 2. 18.

c ch. 6. 2.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns;

and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself.

c ch. 2. 17.
ver. 16.

His eyes were as a flame of fire: see chap. i. 14; ii. 18. This denoted either his piercing knowledge, or his infinite wisdom and understanding. And on his head were many crowns; and there needs must be so; for, ver. 16, he is said to be the King of kings, and Lord of lords. And he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself; this denoted the incomprehensibility of his Divine essence and perfections.

13 And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God.

d La. 63. 2, 3.

e John 1. 1.
1 John 6. 7.

And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; either to denote that he was he who redeemed us by his blood; or rather, to signify that he was now coming forth to shed the blood of his enemies, both in vindication of his own honour and glory, or of his people; in which notion it also agrees with Isaiah's vision of him, chap. lxiii. 1—3: ver. 3, Their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. And his name is called The Word of God: see the notes on John i. 1. He is also called the Word, chap. i. 2, a name given him hardly by any except this apostle.

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

f ch. 14. 20.

g Matt. 28.
3. ch. 4. 4.
& 7. 5.

And the armies which were in heaven followed him; the glorious angels, 2 Thess. i. 7, and ten thousands of his saints, Jude 14, who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. Upon white horses; to prophesy success and victory. Clothed in fine linen, white and clean; to denote their glory, purity, and holiness.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

h La. 11. 4.

i Thess. 2. 8.

ch. 1. 16.

ver. 31.

j Pa. 2. 9.

ch. 2. 27. &

12. 5.

k La. 63. 3.

ch. 16. 19, 20.

And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword: I can easily agree that this two-edged sword is the word of Christ coming out of his mouth, but not the gospel, (the time was past for that, it was the time of the sacrifice in Bozrah,) but his word of command, calling out his people to take vengeance upon the remainder of his enemies. The sword was both the sword of the Lord, commanding it to be drawn, and the sword of his people, whose hands were to wield it. That with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: with this he now smites the remainder of his enemies, and breaks them to pieces. And he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God: his enemies were the grapes, that now were put into the winepress of God's watchful providence; Christ trod them there: see Isa. lxiii. 3.

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

l ver. 13.

m Dan. 2. 47.

1 Tim. 6. 15.

ch. 17. 14.

The same name as in chap. xvii. 14; 1 Tim. vi. 15; see the notes on those two texts; denoting the sovereign power and authority which he had. This he always had, but he now comes forth openly to manifest it; therefore this name is said to be written on his vesture and on his thigh, that all might take notice of it.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;

n ver. 31.

o Ezek. 39.

17.

The best conjecture I can find at the sense of these words, is, that they signify the preachers' of the gospel bold and clear foretelling the ruin of antichrist. There are divers kinds of fowls; amongst others, some that feed on flesh. These are those fowls here mentioned, such as feed upon dead carcasses. They are invited to the supper of the great God; called so, because it is made and prepared by the power of him who is the great God, or because it is a sacrifice to the justice of God: see 1 Sam. xvii. 46; Isa. xviii. 6; Jer. xii. 9; Ezek. xxxix. 17. God's justice upon his enemies is called a sacrifice, Isa. xxxiv. 6; Jer. xlvi. 10; Ezek. xxxix. 17. Idolaters were wont upon their sacrificing to have a feast; God hath also a feast upon this his sacrifice, but it is for the fowls and beasts, that feed on dead carcases.

f. Ezek. 39.
13, 23.

18 <sup>p</sup> That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

In the former verse God invited all the ravenous fowls to a supper, he here showeth their cheer. The meaning is no more than this, that in the great battle of Armageddon, which was for the destruction of all the remainder of the enemies of the church, whether papists, or atheists, or Turks; men of all sorts and orders should be slain, and their dead bodies made meat for the fowls of heaven, that feed on dead flesh.

g. ch. 16. 19.
& 17. 13, 14.

19 <sup>a</sup> And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

The beast, whether by it be understood the dragon, or the beast with seven heads and ten horns, or the beast with two horns, or all of them, shall before this time be all destroyed, that is, as to their power and dominion; but there will be relics left, both of pagans, and Turks, and papists, of whom it is probable that this is to be understood; viz. that after God, upon the pouring out of the fifth vial, shall have deprived the papacy of their dominion; and by the pouring out of the sixth vial, shall have deprived the Turk of his dominion; that yet such pagans, Turks, and papists, as shall be left, shall be gathered together, and make one or more great armies, with whom the Jews and Gentiles (now united in one church) shall fight under the conduct of Christ, as the Captain-general of his church, by whom they shall be overcome; and that this shall be the great battle in Armageddon, mentioned chap. xvi. 16.

r. ch. 16. 13,
14.

20 <sup>a</sup> And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived

a. ch. 13. 12, 15.
t. ch. 20. 10.
See Dan. 7.
11.
u. ch. 14. 10.
& 21. 8.

them that had received the mark of the beast, and <sup>a</sup> them that worshipped his image. <sup>a</sup> These both were cast alive into a lake of fire <sup>b</sup> burning with brimstone.

The issue of this great battle will be the total ruin of all the enemies of the church, their bodies being made meat for the fowls of the heaven, their souls cast into the bottomless pit of hell. The secular part of antichrist is here meant by the beast; the ecclesiastical antichrist, by the false prophet, that had cheated credulous princes and credulous people, with his pretended miracles, into an idolatry, that was but the image of the old idolatry of the heathens, in worshipping demons, and the images of such as were in great estimation amongst them while they were alive.

These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone; both these, the laic and secular popish party, and all their church party, that should be left to this day, shall all now be destroyed. In a matter of fact, not likely to appear in the world yet of two hundred years or more, and thus darkly foretold, who can be positive and particular? But this seemeth the sense of it, upon the former hypotheses: That the beast with the seven heads and ten horns, mentioned chap. xiii. 1, and the beast with two horns, also there mentioned, ver. 11, are antichrist, beginning with those Roman emperors that favoured the idolatry introduced by the bishops of Rome, and ending in the universal bishop, or popes of Rome, and their clergy, who quickly wormed out the emperor's power, and for one thousand two hundred and sixty years reigned, setting up idolatry and superstition, and corrupting the doctrine of faith, and for the latter six hundred years of time, persecuting the true church of Christ more notoriously. After which God will begin to reckon with him, gradually pouring out five vials upon him. I am very inclinable to think, that we in this age are yet under the pouring out of the second of these vials, seeing little yet effected towards the ruin of the papacy, more than the exposing of their idolatries and cheats to several princes and states, and to the generality of thinking people; nor hath the providence of God proceeded far in that as yet. The three other vials are yet to be poured out upon the papacy, besides that upon Euphrates, and then this last upon all the enemies of the church together: and who shall live when God shall do these things?

21 And the remnant <sup>a</sup> were slain with <sup>x</sup> the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: <sup>y</sup> and all the fowls <sup>z</sup> were filled with their <sup>7</sup> flesh. <sup>7</sup> ver. 17, 18.
<sup>8</sup> ch. 17. 16.

In all armies there are common soldiers as well as officers. What the issue of this battle shall be, as to the leaders in it, the former verse told us: this tells us how it shall fare with those under the command of them. It seems they shall not be excused because they followed their leaders, and did only what they bade them; Christ commands that they also should be slain. And all the fowls were filled with their flesh; and this bloody day (whenever it comes) will be a day of great slaughter, for the dead bodies will be enough to sup and fill all the fowls of heaven.

CHAP. XX

Satan bound for a thousand years, 1—3. The first resurrection, 4—6. Satan again let loose gathereth Gog and Magog to battle, who are devoured with fire, 7—9. The devil cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, 10. The general resurrection, and last judgment, 11—15.

We are now come to the darkest part of the whole revelation. What is meant by the thousand years, and the first and second resurrection, and by Gog and Magog, chap. xx., or the new heavens and new earth, and the Jerusalem coming down from heaven, discoursed on, chap. xxi., xxii., is very hard to say, and possibly much more cannot with any probability be conjectured as to them than hath been already said. I shall only tell my reader that, leaving him to judge what is most probable, and leaving it to the Divine Providence to give us a certain and infallible exposition of what is contained in these last three chapters.

AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, <sup>a</sup> having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. <sup>a</sup> ch. 1. 18.
& 9. 1.

The description of this angel can agree to none but Christ, or one that exerciseth a power by delegation from him: for, chap. i. 18, it is he who hath the power of hell and death; and it is he who alone is stronger than the devil, which must be supposed to him that binds him, or we must think the devil much tamer than he is.

2 And he laid hold on <sup>b</sup> the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, <sup>c</sup> and bound him a thousand years. <sup>b</sup> ch. 12. 9.
<sup>c</sup> See 2 Pet. 2.
4. Jude 6.

There can be no question who is meant by the dragon here, and the old serpent, for the Holy Ghost interpreteth it, the devil, the enemy of mankind. And bound him: by binding also is meant the restraint of the devil in the exercise of his natural power, or the power God had before allowed him to exercise for the trial of his saints' faith and patience. The devil is restrained in the restraint of his instruments. It is expounded, ver. 3, that he should deceive the nations no more. A thousand years: whether these thousand years signify that certain space of time, or a long time, I cannot say; only it is probable, that if it signifies an uncertain, indefinite time, it is much longer time than any other period of time spoken of, (which have all hitherto been expressed by days, or months, or a lesser number of years,) by far. But what the complexion of the world shall be during this long time, or when the epochs or beginning of these thousand years shall be, are both of them very hard questions. It was the opinion of the old Chiliasats or Millenaries, that six thousand years of the world should pass, then antichrist with all wicked men should be destroyed; that in the next thousand years Christ should appear, and be upon the earth, ruling it with his saints; after which there would be another time of sharp persecution, according to what is said, ver. 7, to which Christ should put a period by coming to the last judgment. It is plain that (if most men be not mistaken, that have counted the years from the beginning of the world) these men were mistaken; for more than six thousand years are passed, yet there is no such thing come to pass. Divers very good and learned men (leaving out the age of the world when these thousand years should begin) have judged, that after the great battle in Armageddon, (which, as was said before, shall be after the ruin both of Turk and pope,) the church of Christ shall for a thousand years enjoy great quiet under the conduct of Christ, (as some think,) who in these thousand years shall personally be upon the earth; or of such a godly magistracy in all places of the church, as shall do and execute what Christ would have done and executed. After which the enemies of the church (mentioned here, ver. 8, under the notions of Gog and Magog) shall rally again, but be destroyed by Christ appearing to the last judgment. This opinion hath had, and hath, many learned and grave patrons. I shall only say this, that I do not understand what these thousand years mean, if they do not denote a serene and calm time for the church of God, of long continuance, before the day of judgment. Whether Christ shall be here personally, or none but saints shall be in places of power, or the power of Christ only shall be seen in so ruling and governing all magistrates, that they shall not, as before, impose superstition and idolatry, and kill or ruin men for not complying with them; but the servants of God, that worship him in spirit and truth, shall under magistrates live quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; I cannot determine; but do in my own thoughts most incline to the last, that the thousand years only denote a large space of time, (as yet at a great distance,) when the church of God shall freely enjoy their liberty, without such temptations to idolatry, superstition, or other wickedness, as they have yet all along had, either from Jews, pagans, or antichrist's party.

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

And cast him into the bottomless pit; that is, into hell, his proper place: he shall no longer, or at least not till these thousand years be expired, exercise his power, as prince of the power of the air, Eph. ii. 2, or compassing the earth, and walking up and down in it, as Job i. 7. And shut him up, and set a seal upon him; he shall be restrained as much as one shut up in prison, whose doors are sealed up. That he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; that till this time of God's counsel for the quiet of his church be run out, he shall not deceive people by his old arts. And after that he must be loosed a little season; and after that he shall have a liberty again (as ver. 7) for a little time.

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

This is a very difficult text. Thrones are places of dignity and judicature; they seem here to signify only places of dignity. And they sat upon them; those mentioned afterward in this text sat upon them. And judgment was given unto them; that is, a power of judgment, 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3, to be executed afterward. The persons sitting upon these thrones are described to be, 1. Such as had kept themselves from idolatry, or any compliance with antichrist, either in the form of the beast, or of the image of the beast. 2. And for that non-compliance had suffered death, and for witnessing to the truths of Christ contained in his word. These are described as living with Christ in honour and dignity, all that space of the church's rest and tranquillity before expressed. Our learned Dr. More interprets the thrones and judgment, concerning those thrones or places of judicature, upon which the dragon's officers sat to condemn the saints of God, from whence issued the putting to death of many of the saints of God, and thinks that in this vision there is a recourse to the second thunder. Now these saints are said to live and reign with Christ a thousand years; that is, say some, in heaven, in a blessed state of glory, while the militant church upon the earth enjoyed great rest and quiet on earth. Others have thought that these should be raised from the dead, and live with Christ on earth these thousand years. Which notion (if true) will solve a great phenomenon, and render it not improbable, that the number of the saints on earth will, during these thousand years, be enough to rule the world, and overbalance the number of all the wicked of the earth. Those who think thus, judge there will be two resurrections; the first, of martyrs, which shall antedate the general resurrection a thousand years; but the Scripture no where else mentions more than one resurrection. For my own part, I shall freely confess that I do not understand this and the two next verses, nor shall I be positive as to any sense of them: for the spiritual resurrection, as to the martyrs, it was long since past, or else they had died in their sins. But of this see more in the next verse.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

By the rest of the dead, some understand all except martyrs; others, only that party who adhered to antichrist. Those who by the rest understand all the dead, both good and bad, (the martyrs alone excepted,) judge that there will be two resurrections: the first more particular, of those that have suffered death for Christ; the second general, of all the rest of the dead. I must confess I find a difficulty to allow this; it is too great a point to found upon a single text, in a portion of holy writ so clouded with metaphors as this, and I know no suffragan text. Those who understand by the rest of the dead, only the wicked, understand by this living again, a politic life, that is, recovered not their former power, continued as dead men, able to do no mischief, till the thousand years of the church's peace and tranquillity were expired. May this sense of living, and living again, be allowed, it will deliver us from almost all our difficulties about the sense of these verses; for then, by living, in the foregoing verse, is signified a political living, not a resurrection from a natural death. But then ariseth a question, If these beheaded saints did not rise from their natural death, how could they be restored to places of dignity with Christ in the church? To which they answer, That those formerly suffering for the name of Christ, and all the saints upon the earth, are to be considered as one church; and so those formerly beheaded, lived and reigned with Christ in their successors in the same faith; that is, those alive at that time, being restored to their peace, and liberty, and reputation in the world, the martyrs, who were members of the same body, are also said to live. This appears to me the most probable sense: for that the glorified saints should leave heaven (as to their souls) to be again clothed with flesh, and in it to live a thousand years, and be concerned in the following troubles the church should meet with after these thousand years, seems to me to be utterly improbable, and to lay a foundation for so many difficult questions, as will pose the wisest man to answer to reasonable satisfaction. But yet there remains a difficulty, how this restoring God's holy ones to a better state can be called the first resurrection. That it may be called a resurrection is plain, as the conversion of the Jews, and restoring them to their former state as the church of God is called life from the dead, Rom. xi. 15; and the restoration of the witnesses, chap. xi. 11, is called so; though neither the one nor the other were naturally dead. Nor is it unusual in Scriptural and prophetic writings, to speak of people recovered to their former and better state,

f Dan. 7. 9,
22, 27.
Matt. 19. 28.
Luke 22. 30.
g 1 Cor. 6.
2, 3.
h ch. 6. 9.

i ch. 13. 12.
k ch. 13. 15,
16.

l Rom. 8. 17.
2 Tim. 2. 12.
ch. 5. 10.

as being risen from the dead. It may be called the first, with reference to that far more excellent state which they shall be put in after the last judgment, when they shall live and reign with Christ in a more happy and glorious manner. If this may not be allowed as the sense of these two verses, I must confess this such a δυσνόητος, or difficulty of Scripture, as I do not understand. I shall proceed with the following verses upon this hypothesis, that this is the sense, though I dare not be positive in it.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

That is, they only are holy ones that shall be thus restored to share in the church's happiness, and such as shall not perish eternally; but they shall be as priests to God and Christ, glorifying him with the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, and shall enjoy a quiet and honourable station with Christ upon the earth for a long time.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

When the long time expressed under the notion of a thousand years shall be expired, God shall take off his restraint from the devil, so as he shall influence the wicked of the earth once more to make opposition to his church.

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth; that is, the devil, being got from under the restraint of Divine Providence, shall fall upon his old work, going about to deceive men over all the world, either tempting them to idolatry, or heresy, or lewdness of life, or (which seemeth most probable) stirring them up to one attempt more to ruin the church. These people are called Gog and Magog, about the meaning of which there are various opinions. We read of Magog, Gen. x. 2; he was one of the sons of Japheth; see also 1 Chron. i. 5; he inhabited that country called Syria, and from thence, his posterity being multiplied, (as some think) transplanted some colonies into America. We read of Gog no where in Scripture but in Ezekiel, chap. xxxviii., xxxix., where both Gog and Magog are mentioned as the great enemies of God's ancient Israel. Gog there, chap. xxxviii. 2, is named as the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. There are disputes who are meant by Gog and Magog in those two chapters. The Jewish rabbies apply the terms to some nations whom the Messiah (expected by them) shall encounter and overcome; but if we consider that prophecy as made in Babylon, and to comfort the people in that captivity, we can hardly think the enemies there intended were to appear at such a distance of time as more than two thousand years, for so many, and more, are elapsed already since Ezekiel's prophecy. The best interpreters therefore rather think, that Antiochus, and the race of Seleucus, (a king of Syria, who in those quarters of the world succeeded Alexander, of whom we read in the book of Maccabees.) is there intended, whose ruin is there foretold, as being a great enemy to the Jews after their return from Babylon; yet some think, that in both these chapters Ezekiel prophesied of the same Gog and Magog here intended, which should be the last enemies of the church. The papists, who (according to their interest) contend for antichrist as yet to come, make Gog and Magog here to signify some king or kings that shall join with antichrist when he appeareth. Others think that Gog and Magog, in this place, signifies more generally, a collusive, or mixed company of all wicked men, a very great multitude, who shall come from all parts, only typified by the Gog and Magog in Ezekiel, as being like them, 1. For number; 2. In their design to ruin the church, upon its restoration to a more quiet, peaceable state; 3. And who shall be ruined like them, by the more than ordinary providence of God; for the Gog and Magog mentioned in Ezekiel, are described in three texts of that prophecy as coming from the north, but these are described as coming from the four quarters of the world: this seemeth a much more probable opinion than theirs, who will have them some particular nations, whether Americans, Turks, or Indians. The number of whom is as the sand of the sea: these enemies shall make a vast number, therefore compared to the sand of the sea; and in this they hold a proportion also with the Gog and Magog mentioned in Ezekiel, who were a great company, chap. xxxviii. 4, many people, ver. 6, covering the land, ver. 9.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

And they went up on the breadth of the earth; that is, in all parts of it where the church of Christ was. And compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; the church of God (typified by old Jerusalem, which was God's beloved city) they encompassed in a military order and manner, designing to destroy it, or make it subject to their lusts. And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them: thus Ezekiel prophesied of the issue of the Gog and Magog by him mentioned, Ezek. xxxviii. 18—22: ver. 22, And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. The meaning is, that God would destroy them with a quick and terrible destruction, such as is that destruction of persons and places which is by fire.

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

After this shall be the end of the world, when the devil shall be restrained to hell, the place of torments, where he shall have all heathens, and all the rabble of antichrist, who shall be there tormented constantly and for ever and ever.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

God now giveth his prophet a vision of the last day, the day of judgment. He seeth a throne, a place of judicature; said to be great, to denote its gloriousness; white, to signify Christ's purity and holiness in his judging the world. And he saw Christ sitting upon it, and all old things passing away. Peter thus describes this flying away of the earth and heavens; The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up, 2 Pet. iii. 10. All these things shall be dissolved, ver. 11.

12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

The former verses gave us an account of Christ, the great Judge of the quick and the dead in the last day; the Lord Jesus Christ sat upon a throne of glory, about to execute his last holy and righteous judgment. Now he describes the persons to be judged, viz. all, both small and great. And the books were opened: to show the justice and righteousness according to which this Judge would proceed, books are said to be opened. What books? The book of God's law; the book of God's omniscience; the book of men's consciences. In the former is contained what all men should have done; the two latter will discover what they have thought, spake, or done in the flesh. And an-

m ch. 2. 11.
n 21. 6.
o 1s. 61. 6.
p 1 Pet. 2. 2.
q ch. 1. 6. &
r 5. 10.
s ver. 4.

p ver. 2.

q ver. 3, 10.

r Ezek. 38.
s ch. 39. 1.
t ch. 14. 14.

t 1s. 8. s.
Ezek. 38. 9.
16.

u ver. 8.

x ch. 10. 20.
y ch. 14. 10.

a 2 Pet. 3. 7.
10. 11.
b ch. 21. 1.
c Dan. 2. 35.

d ch. 19. 5.
e Dan. 7. 10.
f Ps. 69. 26.
Dan. 12. 1.
g Phil. 4. 3.
h ch. 5. 5. & 13.
i & 21. 27.
j Jer. 17. 10.
k & 32. 19.
l Mat. 10. 27.
m Rom. 2. 6.
n ch. 2. 23.
o & 22. 14.
p ver. 13.

other book was opened, which is the book of life; the book of life, mentioned chap. iii. 5, by which is to be understood the book of God's election, wherein are the names of all those who, being from eternity chosen to life, were redeemed with the blood of Christ, and afterwards effectually called, justified, and sanctified. And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works; according to these books shall the last judgment be, Rom. ii. 16, with respect had unto every one's work.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

By hell is meant all places where the dead are; who-soever shall be at that day in the state of the dead; the bodies of men, whether buried in the earth or sea; and the souls of men, whether they be in the place of torments or happiness, shall all be re-united to their bodies, that they may both in soul and body receive their final doom of eternal happiness, or eternal misery, accordingly as they have lived in the world; and those who shall be alive at that day, who shall be changed, (as the apostle speaks, 1 Cor. xv. 51.) are to be counted dead in the sense of this text, their change being instead of death to them. It is not said they shall be judged for their works, (though that as to the wicked is true,) but according to their works; which is true as to the elect, who though their names be written in the book of life, yet must work righteousness; and they shall have judgment of absolution, not according to the perfection, but the sincerity, of their works, done in obedience to the will of God.

14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

And death and hell were cast into lake of fire; there shall be no more natural death, nor any more separate state of souls, (so ἄδης signifies,) they shall all be swallowed up in the issue of the last judgment, where some shall go into life, some into eternal condemnation. Dr. More expoundeth it of the whole region of mortality being set on fire at the last thunder. This, as to the wicked of the earth, is the second death, mentioned chap. ii. 11.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

The book of life: see note on ver. 12.

CHAP. XXI

A new heaven and a new earth, 1. The new Jerusalem, 2. The blessedness of God's people, 3—7: the judgment of the wicked, 8. A description of the heavenly Jerusalem, 9—27.

This chapter begins with the vision of the new heaven and the new earth, by which all understand a new state of the church, but are divided in their opinions, whether what is spoken be to be understood of the church militant upon the earth, or of the church triumphant in heaven. Those who understand it of the church militant here upon earth, are divided in their opinions as to that period of the church which is here spoken of; some understanding it of the thousand years after the time of Constantine, for which I see no reason (nor, I believe, will any that wisely consider the state of the church in that time); others understanding it of the thousand years mentioned chap. xx., in which (as was said) the church should enjoy great quiet and peace. I must confess I choose much rather to agree with them who judge it signifieth the church triumphant, being overcome with the reasons given by those reverend authors, a summary of which may be found in Mr. Pool's Latin Synopsis. 1. That interpretation carrieth on the history in order; whereas, according to the other, we must say the history, chap. xx. 1—5, was interrupted by the battle with Gog and Magog, and the account of the day of judgment, ver. 7—15. 2. In reason, as the close of the former chapter gave us an account of the issue of the day of judgment, as to wicked men, so this should give us some account how it should fare with the saints. 3. We shall find some things in the new Jerusalem here described, which will agree to no state of the church upon earth: see ver. 22, 23.

AND I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

A new heaven and a new earth; a new and glorious state of things relating to the church. For the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea; for now there was an end to the world, and all the troubles that the people of God had met with in it, as well as the material earth, heaven, and sea, were passed away. This new heaven was prophesied of old by Isaiah, and more lately by Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 13.

2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

The holy city, new Jerusalem; that is, the whole chorus or number of the elect of God, answering God's chosen people in Jerusalem. Coming down from God out of heaven; not locally coming down, but who had their original from heaven, and were all persons of heavenly minds. Prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; in their best robes of glory, such as brides use to wear, when on their wedding-day they adorn themselves for their bridegrooms.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

What is said here, is applicable to the church of God in this life, yea, to every true believer, whose body is said to be the temple of the Lord, and in whom the Lord dwells, according to the phrase of the Holy Ghost in many places of the New Testament; of whom it is also true, that God is with them, and will be their God; but more especially applicable to the church triumphant, as dwelling signifies a constancy of abode, and more full manifestation of a person. The state of the saints in glory is thus described by a being ever with the Lord, 1 Thess. iv. 17.

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

Scarce any of the passages in this verse, taken in the plain, literal sense, are applicable to any state of the church in this life: for though in the thousand years, mentioned chap. xx., the state of the church (as it is presumed) will be very happy comparatively to what it ever was before, and free from its enemies' molestations and persecutions; yet I think none hath asserted that in that time no members of it shall die, or be sick, or have any sorrow or pain. There must be a great allowance of figures, if we will apply this to any state of the militant church; but all will be literally true as to the church in heaven.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

And he that sat upon the throne, that is, Christ, said, Behold, I make all things new; behold, I will put a new face upon all things; the state of my people shall not for ever be a troubled and afflicted state. And he said unto me, Write: because the vision is to be for an appointed time, and what I now tell thee will not be accomplished of many years, and yet the knowledge and prospect of it, and meditations upon it, are of highest importance to keep up the spirits of my people under all their sufferings, during

f ch. 6. 8.
1 Cor. the grave.
g ver. 12.

h 1 Cor. 15.
26, 54, 55.
i ver. 6.
ch. 21. 8.

a Is. 65. 17.
& 66. 22.
2 Pet. 3. 13.
b ch. 20. 11.

c 1 Cor. 52. 1.
Gal. 4. 26.
Heb. 11. 10.
& 12. 22, &
13. 14. ch. 3.
12. ver. 10.
d Is. 54. 5.
& 61. 10. 2 Cor. 11. 2.

e Jer. 22. 11.
12.
Ezek. 43. 7.
2 Cor. 6. 16.
ch. 7. 15.

f Is. 25. 8.
ch. 7. 17.
g 1 Cor. 15.
26, 54.
ch. 20. 14.
h Is. 33. 10.
& 61. 3. &
65. 19.

i ch. 4. 2. 3.
& 6. 1. & 23.
11.
h Is. 43. 19.
2 Cor. 5. 17.
1 ch. 19. 9.

that time of the dragon (the Romish heathen emperors) not yet run out, and the twelve hundred and sixty years of antichrist, &c., therefore write it, that all my people in all ages may know it, believe it, and suffer patiently in the hopes of it. For these words are true and faithful; for what I tell thee is what comes from the true and faithful Witness, and shall have a certain being in its time.

m ch. 16. 17. 6 And he said unto me, <sup>m</sup>It is done. n ch. 1. 8. & 22. 13. o I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. o I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. & 23. 1. John 4. 10. 14. & 7. 37. ch. 22. 17.

And he said unto me, It is done; the world is at an end, and all my threatenings against my enemies, and promises to my people, are now fulfilled, in the eternal damnation of the one, and deliverance and salvation of the other. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end: I first made the world, and I have put a period to it. I first gave out those promises and threatenings, and I have now fulfilled them. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely; and my people who have thirsted after my righteousness and salvation, now have it freely, and shall drink, and drink abundantly.

|| Or, these things; p Zech. 6. 8. Heb. 8. 10. 7 He that overcometh shall inherit || all things; and p I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

He that overcometh, shall inherit all things: God revealed this to John almost sixteen hundred years since; and how long it shall be before this glorious time shall come, God alone knows: the most of this time hath been, and will be, a time of fighting with the world, the flesh, and the devil; but whoever he be that shall fight this good fight, and come out of it a conqueror, shall inherit all the joys and happiness of heaven. I will be his God, and he shall be my son: I will be to him all in all; I will be his God to love and glorify him, and he shall be with me as my son, to live with me for ever and ever.

q 1 Cor. 6. 9. 10 Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21. Eph. 5. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 9. Heb. 12. 14. ch. 22. 15. r ch. 20. 14. 15. 8 <sup>q</sup>But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in <sup>r</sup>the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

All those who are without the church invisible, whether profane persons, (such are murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, liars,) or idolaters, or unbelievers and hypocrites, shall all be cast to hell. The fearful, who, through fear of losing their reputation, estates, honours, or lives, deny me, or shall not dare to own me. And unbelieving; such as will not agree to the proposition of my gospel, or will not come to me that they might have life. The abominable; sodomites, and such as live in beastly lusts. Murderers; such as, without any warrant from God, take away men's lives wilfully. Whoremongers; such as defile their neighbours' wives. Sorcerers; such as exercise witchcraft, consult the devil, and trade with familiar spirits. Idolaters; whether they commit the idolatry of Ahab, giving Divine adoration to the creatures, as the term of their worship; or the idolatry of Jeroboam, worshipping the true God by images. And all liars; and all such as are liars with their tongues, speaking what they know to be false; or liars in practice, that is, hypocrites, seeming to be what they are not. Shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death: all these, and all such like, shall be eternally damned.

s ch. 15. 1, 6, 7. 9 And there came unto me one of <sup>s</sup>the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee <sup>t</sup>the bride, the Lamb's wife. t ch. 19. 7. ver. 2.

One of the seven angels; one of those mentioned chap. xv. 6. I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife; I will show thee the whole church, (invisible heretofore,) the glorious state of the church triumphant, under the representation of a great city.

u ch. 1. 10. & 17. 10 And he carried me away <sup>u</sup>in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me <sup>x</sup>that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, x Ezek. 48. ver. 2.

And he carried me away in the spirit; in a trance or ecstasy, as before. To a great and high mountain; from whence men use to have the best prospect of cities, or other places. And showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God; there he caused me to see the whole triumphant church, answering as the antitype to Jerusalem, but more holy; being not of the earth, earthly, but from heaven, heavenly, founded, built up, and adorned by God.

11 <sup>y</sup>Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; y ch. 22. 5. ver. 23.

Having the glory of God; a most excellent glory, received from God. And her light, that is, (as some interpret it,) that which gave her light, (as the sun is called the light of the earth,) or her enlightener, was like unto a stone most precious, was Christ himself, who is a stone most precious: ver. 23, The Lamb is the light thereof. Like a jasper stone: see chap. iv. 3. God is there compared to a jasper stone; here, to a jasper stone, clear as crystal. They say of the jasper stone, that it is very glorious to the eye, precious and pure; so it is very fit to resemble in part a pure and glorious God.

12 And had a wall great and high, and had <sup>z</sup>twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: z Ezek. 48. 31, —34.

And had a wall, that is, this city, by which is meant the church of God, had a wall great and high. Walls are for the protection and defence of a place; the higher and greater they are, the greater defence and protection they give. By this God is meant, who is often called his people's Rock and Defence. And had twelve gates: the use of the gates of a city, are to let persons in and out. The church is said to have twelve gates, because of the free liberty of access to the church while it was militant, and to signify that the church in heaven will be made up of persons come into it from all parts; or for the greater state and glory of it. Some think, because of the twelve apostles, who were the first ministers of the gospel who admitted men into this church. And at the gates twelve angels; denoting the guard of angels about the church; unless by angels ministers be to be understood, proportioned to the several parts of the church. And names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel; because as, of old, only the twelve tribes of God's chosen people Israel made up the church in that period; so only God's elect and peculiar people, typified by that Israel, come in at the gates of this church. It is very observable, how God affects the number of twelve in the affairs of his church.

13 <sup>a</sup>On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. a Ezek. 48. 31, —34.

To signify it was made up of persons from all parts of the world. This agreeth with Ezekiel's vision, chap. xlviii. 31—34. The triumphant church will be a collection of believers, who from all nations have come into it.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and <sup>b</sup>in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. b Matt. 16. 18 Gal. 2. 9. Eph. 2. 20.

And the wall of the city had twelve foundations; the ancient church of God was founded in twelve patriarchs, and twelve tribes; the gospel church in twelve apostles; Christ is the only foundation of both, 1 Cor. iii. 11, but he is the foundation upon which the church is built. The twelve apostles are called the foundations per quos, or per quos, by which the gospel church had its beginning. And in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb; as workmen sometimes set their names upon foundation-stones, by which it is made known who were they that builded the wall.

c Ezek. 40. 3.
Zech. 2. 1.
ch. 11. 1.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

This seemeth to signify the transcendency of the state of the church now, to what it was before; it was then measured by a man, chap. xi., now by an angel; then by an ordinary reed, now by a golden reed.

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

The church militant, measured by the reed of the word, is unequal in its parts; some parts of it are purer than others; but in the new Jerusalem all parts shall be equal in perfection and purity, as all the sides of a thing foursquare are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

This could not be the measure of the compass, (it was for that much too little,) nor of the height or breadth, (for either of them it was much too great,) from whence Dr. Potter concluded, it must be the square measure; so as the height and breadth of it was twelve cubits, for twelve times twelve make one hundred and forty-four. According to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel; as men use to measure, and as this angel measured, who appeared as a man in this action.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; strong and impregnable, not subject to impressions from enemies, as it is said of the jasper, that no hammer will break it. And the city was pure gold; all that make up this city are perfect and noble. Like unto clear glass; pure, without spots.

d Is. 54. 11.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

And the foundations of the wall of the city, by which, we noted before, are to be understood the apostles, who, building upon the one foundation, Christ Jesus, by their holy doctrine laid the beginnings of the gospel churches, the first stones, (upon the Rock Christ,) which were afterwards multiplied, others being builded upon them, till the whole church was perfected.

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysopterus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

I cannot tell what to make of these precious stones, with which they are said to be garnished, unless it be their spiritual gifts and habits of grace; the various manifestations of the Holy Spirit given to the apostles to profit the church withal, with which they adorned the doctrine of the gospel, and won upon the pagan world, making themselves admirable in the eyes of men and women. Nor were it hard to descant upon these several sorts of stones, and to show of what graces they may be types: the jasper, of steadiness and constancy; the sapphire, of heavenly-mindedness (it being a stone of the colour of the heavens); the chalcedony, of zeal; the emerald, of vigour and liveliness; the sardonyx, (a stone of various colours,) of various gifts and graces; the sardius, of courage and fortitude, and a readiness to shed their blood for Christ; the chrysolite, of love, or wisdom, and knowledge; the beryl, of a quickness of sight and understanding; the topaz, of searching out Divine mysteries; the chrysopterus, of gravity and severity; the jacinth, of spiritual joy, calmness, and serenity of mind; the amethyst, of sobriety and temperance. But it seems to me too great curiosity to philosophize so far upon the nature of these stones; take them together, they probably signify all the gifts and graces of the blessed apostles, by which the religion of the gospel was first commended, and made to appear lovely to the world.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

I am not willing to descant further in particulars, conjecturing (for it is no more) what each metaphorical term signifies in this unusual description of a city. I do think the scope of the whole is no more, than to let us know that the mansions of heaven will be most glorious places, giving the souls of those to whom God shall give to enter into them, an infinite satisfaction, beyond what the most rich and glorious things in the world can give our outward senses.

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

And I saw no temple therein: I cannot take temple so strictly here, as those who understand all this but as a description of the blessed state of the militant church, during the thousand years; but understand it of all such worship and ordinances as we serve God in, and by, in this life. For the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it; the immediate fruition of God shall there supply all, God shall be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28. Ordinances are but perspectives, of use in this life to see God at a distance; means, whereby we know in part: there we shall see God face to face, and know him as we are known. The saints there shall want nothing, and therefore shall not need a house of prayer; they shall know perfectly, and therefore will not need any to teach them; they shall always see Christ, and so will need no sacraments whereby to remember him.

23 And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

The sun and the moon are the two great luminaries of the world, which God hath made, the one to rule the day, the other to rule the night; in heaven there will be no need of any of these. Light, in Scripture, (in its metaphorical notion,) signifies knowledge or comfort; there will in heaven be no need of any created beings, to help us to either of these; God and Christ shall there fill the souls of his saints with knowledge and joy not to be expressed.

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory, and honour into it.

And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; all that go to heaven shall be thus happy. And the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it; and such kings of the earth as shall come into heaven, shall see all their honour and glory swallowed up in the glory and honour of that place and state; and confess that all their crowns are infinitely short of this blessed and glorious crown, all their thrones nothing to these thrones.

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: the reason of shutting a city's gates, is either to shut out enemies, or to keep in such as are within: there will be no need of shutting these gates on either of these accounts; there will be no enemies to fear, and those that are within this city will have no need nor desire to go out. For there shall be no night there: we do not ordinarily shut our city gates by day, but there shall be nothing but day, no night in a natural or metaphorical sense.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

Whatsoever is excellent or desirable in the world, shall be supplied to the souls of those that are in heaven, by good of another make, but which shall be equally (nay, infinitely more) satisfactory to the soul.

<sup>m</sup> 27 And <sup>m</sup> there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's <sup>a</sup> book of life.

And there shall in no wise enter into it: in the Greek there are two negative particles, which though in the Latin they make an affirmative, yet in the Greek make a stronger negative, which we translate in no wise, or by no means. Any thing that defileth: this strongly denying particle is brought to make the bar excluding all unclean persons from heaven evident. And alas! how often had this need be denied, to make men and women, mad of their lusts, believe it! The word translated, that defileth, signifieth, what is common; nothing, no person that hath not by a holy life separated himself from the world, and all sin and wickedness, and dedicated himself to God. Neither whatsoever worketh abomination; no profane or lewd person. Or maketh a lie; nor any false or lying hypocrites, nor any idolaters, for idols are lies. But they which are written in the Lamb's book of life; none but those whose names are written in the book of life, predetermined to salvation, and redeemed with the blood of Christ. Some are not pleased with this sense; but what other thing can be meant? This is, at least, the sixth time we have met with this phrase in this book, chap. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xvii. 8; xx. 12, 15. It is also mentioned, Phil. iv. 3. And what else can be meant in Moses's prayer, Exod. xxxii. 32? It is twice (chap. xiii. 8; xvii. 8) said, that names were written in it from the foundation of the world. God hath a particular, certain, infallible knowledge who are his, and had it from eternity; and whence he should know it, without willing of it, is very hard to conceive. It is called the Lamb's book, to let us know, that the act of redemption by Christ bears proportion to the counsels of election.

CHAP. XXII

The river and tree of life, 1, 2. The glorious state of the servants of God, 3-7. John is forbidden by the angel to worship him, 8, 9; and commanded to seal up the prophecy, 10, 11. Christ's coming and eternity, 12, 13. The blessedness of them that do God's commandments, 14-17. Nothing must be added to or taken from this prophecy, 18-20. The concluding benediction, 21.

<sup>b</sup> <sup>c</sup> <sup>d</sup> <sup>e</sup> <sup>f</sup> <sup>g</sup> <sup>h</sup> <sup>i</sup> <sup>j</sup> <sup>k</sup> <sup>l</sup> <sup>m</sup> <sup>n</sup> <sup>o</sup> <sup>p</sup> <sup>q</sup> <sup>r</sup> <sup>s</sup> <sup>t</sup> <sup>u</sup> <sup>v</sup> <sup>w</sup> <sup>x</sup> <sup>y</sup> <sup>z</sup> <sup>aa</sup> <sup>ab</sup> <sup>ac</sup> <sup>ad</sup> <sup>ae</sup> <sup>af</sup> <sup>ag</sup> <sup>ah</sup> <sup>ai</sup> <sup>aj</sup> <sup>ak</sup> <sup>al</sup> <sup>am</sup> <sup>an</sup> <sup>ao</sup> <sup>ap</sup> <sup>aq</sup> <sup>ar</sup> <sup>as</sup> <sup>at</sup> <sup>au</sup> <sup>av</sup> <sup>aw</sup> <sup>ax</sup> <sup>ay</sup> <sup>az</sup> <sup>ba</sup> <sup>bb</sup> <sup>bc</sup> <sup>bd</sup> <sup>be</sup> <sup>bf</sup> <sup>bg</sup> <sup>bh</sup> <sup>bi</sup> <sup>bj</sup> <sup>bk</sup> <sup>bl</sup> <sup>bm</sup> <sup>bn</sup> <sup>bo</sup> <sup>bp</sup> <sup>bq</sup> <sup>br</sup> <sup>bs</sup> <sup>bt</sup> <sup>bu</sup> <sup>bv</sup> <sup>bw</sup> <sup>bx</sup> <sup>by</sup> <sup>bz</sup> <sup>ca</sup> <sup>cb</sup> <sup>cc</sup> <sup>cd</sup> <sup>ce</sup> <sup>cf</sup> <sup>cg</sup> <sup>ch</sup> <sup>ci</sup> <sup>cj</sup> <sup>ck</sup> <sup>cl</sup> <sup>cm</sup> <sup>cn</sup> <sup>co</sup> <sup>cp</sup> <sup>cq</sup> <sup>cr</sup> <sup>cs</sup> <sup>ct</sup> <sup>cu</sup> <sup>cv</sup> <sup>cw</sup> <sup>cx</sup> <sup>cy</sup> <sup>cz</sup> <sup>da</sup> <sup>db</sup> <sup>dc</sup> <sup>dd</sup> <sup>de</sup> <sup>df</sup> <sup>dg</sup> <sup>dh</sup> <sup>di</sup> <sup>dj</sup> <sup>dk</sup> <sup>dl</sup> <sup>dm</sup> <sup>dn</sup> <sup>do</sup> <sup>dp</sup> <sup>dq</sup> <sup>dr</sup> <sup>ds</sup> <sup>dt</sup> <sup>du</sup> <sup>dv</sup> <sup>dw</sup> <sup>dx</sup> <sup>dy</sup> <sup>dz</sup> <sup>ea</sup> <sup>eb</sup> <sup>ec</sup> <sup>ed</sup> <sup>ee</sup> <sup>ef</sup> <sup>eg</sup> <sup>eh</sup> <sup>ei</sup> <sup>ej</sup> <sup>ek</sup> <sup>el</sup> <sup>em</sup> <sup>en</sup> <sup>eo</sup> <sup>ep</sup> <sup>eq</sup> <sup>er</sup> <sup>es</sup> <sup>et</sup> <sup>eu</sup> <sup>ev</sup> <sup>ew</sup> <sup>ex</sup> <sup>ey</sup> <sup>ez</sup> <sup>fa</sup> <sup>fb</sup> <sup>fc</sup> <sup>fd</sup> <sup>fe</sup> <sup>ff</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>fl</sup> <sup>fm</sup> <sup>fn</sup> <sup>fo</sup> <sup>fp</sup> <sup>fq</sup> <sup>fr</sup> <sup>fs</sup> <sup>ft</sup> <sup>fu</sup> <sup>fv</sup> <sup>fw</sup> <sup>fx</sup> <sup>fy</sup> <sup>fz</sup> <sup>ga</sup> <sup>gb</sup> <sup>gc</sup> <sup>gd</sup> <sup>ge</sup> <sup>gf</sup> <sup>gg</sup> <sup>gh</sup> <sup>gi</sup> <sup>gj</sup> <sup>gk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> will of God; and of them which keep the sayings of this book; yea, and a brother to all the servants of God. Thou mistakest the object of thine adoration, I am a created being, and can accept no such homage.

<sup>a</sup> Dan. 8. 26.
<sup>b</sup> 12. 4. 9.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 10. 4.
<sup>d</sup> ch. 1. 3.

10 <sup>a</sup> And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: 'for the time is at hand.

And he saith unto me; this he is Christ, as appeareth from ver. 12. 13. Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; let these things be open to be promulgated, and published to the whole church. For the time is at hand; for it will not be long before they shall begin to be fulfilled.

<sup>u</sup> Ezek. 3. 27.
<sup>v</sup> Dan. 12. 10.
<sup>w</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 13.

11 <sup>a</sup> He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: it may be the keeping of this book open, and the publication of it, will displease wicked and filthy men; but let them be displeased, the truths of God must not be concealed. And he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still: it will, on the other side, confirm the servants of God in their faith, patience, and holiness, and all the fruits of righteousness.

<sup>x</sup> ver. 7.
<sup>y</sup> 12. 40. 10.
<sup>z</sup> 12. 11.
<sup>aa</sup> Rom. 2. 6.
<sup>ab</sup> & 14. 12.
<sup>ac</sup> ch. 20. 12.

12 <sup>a</sup> And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, 'to give every man according as his work shall be,

I come quickly, to the last judgment, as before, ver. 7. And my reward is with me; I bring with me a power and authority to recompense every man according to what he hath done, chap. xx. 13; Dan. xii. 2; Matt. xxv. 34, 35, &c.; Rom. ii. 6.

<sup>a</sup> 12. 41. 4.
<sup>b</sup> & 44. 5. & 6.
<sup>c</sup> 46. 12.
<sup>d</sup> ch. 1. 8, 11.
<sup>e</sup> & 21. 6.

13 <sup>a</sup> I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

See the notes on chap. i. 8; xxi. 6.

<sup>b</sup> Dan. 12. 12.
<sup>c</sup> 1 John 3. 24.
<sup>d</sup> ver. 2.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 2. 7.
<sup>f</sup> ch. 21. 27.

14 <sup>a</sup> Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right <sup>b</sup> to the tree of life, <sup>c</sup> and may enter in through the gates into the city.

Blessed are they that do his commandments; that believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, (for that is the great commandment of the gospel,) and live in conformity to the law of God. That they may have right to the tree of life; to Christ, called before, the tree of life, ver. 2, by virtue of the promise, chap. ii. 7, for no works of ours will give us a right of purchase to it. And may enter in through the gates into the city; that they may enter into heaven; the joys and pleasures of which have been described under the metaphor of a great and glorious city.

<sup>e</sup> 1 Cor. 6.
<sup>f</sup> 9. 10. Gal.
<sup>g</sup> 5. 19, 20, 21.
<sup>h</sup> Col. 3. 6.
<sup>i</sup> ch. 9. 20, 21.
<sup>j</sup> & 21. 8.
<sup>k</sup> Phil. 3. 2.

15 For <sup>a</sup> without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

Without heaven, that is, in hell, shall be all dogs that bark at, and bite, and devour the church of God, all profane persons, idolaters, and hypocrites: see chap. xxi. 8, 27; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; and the notes there.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 1. 1.

16 <sup>a</sup> I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. <sup>b</sup> I am the root and the offspring of David, and <sup>c</sup> the bright and morning star.

I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches: in these words Christ owneth the Revelation as his; the angel did but testify, John did but hear and write it. I am the root and the offspring of David; David's Lord, and yet his Son: his Root, as I am God, and gave a being to his family, as to all the families of the earth; and yet his Son, a Branch out of the root of Jesse. And the bright and morning star; who, as the morning-star first brings or prognosticates light to the world, so have myself first published my gospel, or this Revelation, to give light to my people, concerning the fate of my people to the last day.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 21. 2, 9.

17 And the Spirit and <sup>b</sup> the bride say, <sup>c</sup> Come. And let him that heareth say, <sup>d</sup> Come. <sup>e</sup> And let him that is athirst come. <sup>f</sup> And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

<sup>1</sup> 1e. 55. 1.
<sup>2</sup> John 7. 37.
<sup>3</sup> ch. 21. 6.

And the Spirit; the spirit in the hearts of believers, or rather, the Holy Spirit. And the bride say, Come; because the bride, that is, the church, is also mentioned, to desire the second coming of Christ to judgment. And let him that heareth say, Come; and every one that heareth of and believeth these things, should also desire the same thing. And let him that is athirst come; and in order to that, every one that wanteth, and is sensible of his want of righteousness, or any habit of grace, is also invited unto Christ, under the notion of the water of life, to take him freely, as Isa. lv. 1.

<sup>m</sup> Deut. 4. 2.
<sup>n</sup> 12. 32.
<sup>o</sup> Prov. 30. 4.

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, <sup>a</sup> If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:

I Christ, or I John, testify to every one to whose hands or ears the words of this book shall come, That if any man shall invent new prophecies contrary to the prophecies contained in this book, God shall severely punish him, by adding to him the plagues threatened against sinners in this book.

<sup>p</sup> Ex. 32. 33.
<sup>q</sup> Ps. 69. 28.
<sup>r</sup> ch. 3. 5.
<sup>s</sup> & 13. 8.
<sup>t</sup> Or, from the tree of life.
<sup>u</sup> ch. 21. 2.

19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, <sup>a</sup> God shall take away his part <sup>b</sup> out of the book of life, and out of <sup>c</sup> the holy city, and <sup>d</sup> from the things which are written in this book.

Divines generally do further extend the sense of these two verses, considering this as the last portion of holy writ, not only placed last in our Bibles, but revealed and written last. They conceive these verses the seal of all canonical Scripture, and that God here denounces a curse to those who shall pretend any new revelations of his will, other than what are to be found in the books of the Old and New Testament; as also against all those who shall deny, corrupt, or deprave any part of them. God, as to such persons, saith, they shall not have any such part or portion in heaven, as they would pretend a right to, or seemed to have.

<sup>p</sup> ver. 12.
<sup>q</sup> John 21. 25.
<sup>r</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 8.

20 He which testifieth these things saith, <sup>a</sup> Surely I come quickly; <sup>b</sup> Amen. <sup>c</sup> Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; that is, Christ, who publisheth these things by his angel, or by his servant John, saith he is quickly coming to judgment. Amen; John replies, Lord, let it be so. Even so, come, Lord Jesus; this expounds Amen used here as a particle of wishing and desiring, though it may be interpreted as an assertive particle, and joined to the former part of the sentence.

<sup>s</sup> Rom. 16. 20, 24.
<sup>t</sup> 2 Thes. 3. 18.

21 <sup>a</sup> The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ <sup>b</sup> be with you all. Amen.

This is a salutation used by the apostles in all their Epistles, containing a desire of the fulness and increase of all grace, very proper here upon the prospect which John in this Revelation had, of the long and great trials the church would meet with before the glorious appearance of our blessed Lord and Saviour.

To God, the Author of this, and all the other books of holy writ, be honour and glory.