It is plain from this text, that our Saviour was at this time in Galilee, for that was the tetrarchy or province of Herod Antipas, who is the Herod here mentioned. Whether these Pharisees came of their own heads, or as sent by Herod, is not so plain, nor so well agreed by interpreters. If they came of their own heads, it is certain they came not out of kindness, for the whole history of the gospel lets us know, that the Pharisees had no kindness for Christ, but were his most implacable enemies, and continually consulting how to destroy him; but they either came to scare him out of Galilee, whose repute was so great, and who did them so much mischief there, or to drive him into the trap which they had laid for him in Judea. But it is most probable that they came as secretly sent by Herod, who though of himself he be reported to be of no bloody disposition, yet upon the Pharisees' continual solicitations might be persuaded to send them on this errand, choosing rather cunningly to scare him out of his province, than by violence to fall upon him. This opinion looks more probable, because, ver. 32, our Saviour sends them back with a message to Herod, Go ye, and tell that fox. Herod had gained himself no reputation amongst the Jews, by his murdering John the Baptist, whom the Jews generally valued as a prophet; and probably seeing our Saviour exceeding him in popular applause, he was not willing to augment the odium which already lay upon him for that fact; yet, to gratify the Pharisees, (many of which were in his province,) he was willing, if he could effect it cleverly, and without noise, to be quit of Christ, especially considering (as we before heard) he had an opinion that he was John the Baptist risen from the dead, or the soul of John the Baptist in another body; and possibly he could not tell what might be the effect of his ghost so haunting his province. It is certain, that either he, or the Pharisees, or both, had a mind to have him gone some where else, to which purpose this message is brought to him. Our Saviour, either discerning Herod's craft in this thing, or having observed the craft he used in the whole management of his government, that he might keep favour both with the Roman emperor and with the Jews, bids them, Go and tell that fox. I do not much value their critical observation, who observe that it is not ἀδελφεὶ ἐπεὶ, but φαύτη, that is, this fox; from whence they would observe that our Saviour might mean the Pharisees, not Herod; nor is there any need of it to excuse our Saviour from the violation of that law of God, Exod. xxii. 28, Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people; which law Paul reflected on, Acts xxiii. 5, and pleads ignorance for his calling Ananias a whited wall. For we shall observe that the prophets all along (being immediately sent from God) took a further liberty than any others, in severely reprovng kings and princes. Elijah tells Ahab it was he that troubled Israel; the prophets call the rulers of the Jews, rulers of Sodom, and princes of Gomorrah, &c. But Christ may be allowed a liberty neither lawful nor decent for other persons, not though they were prophets. But what is the message which Christ sends by these Pharisees? Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. Tell him, saith he, what I am doing; I am freeing his subjects from molestations by evil spirits, and the encumbrances of many diseases. What do I do worthy of death? I have but a little time to trouble him, for in a little time I must die, which is that which he means by being perfected: it is plain that those words to-day, and to-morrow, and the third day, must not be taken strictly, for Christ lived more than three days after this. If this will not satisfy him, tell him, saith our Saviour, that I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following. I know that, as to this thing, I am not under his command or power, I must walk, &c.; my days are not in his hands, and I know that he cannot kill me, for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem. Jerusalem is the place where I must die, not Galilee; the sanhedrim sits at Jerusalem, who alone can take cognizance of the case of false prophets, and Jerusalem is the place where the people must fill up the measure of their iniquities by spilling my blood. Upon this our Saviour breaketh out into a sad lamentation of the case of that once holy city, the praise of the whole earth.

7 Mat. 23. 37.

34 O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!

35 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 37—39. These five last verses afford us much for our instruction. 1. We may from them learn the craft of the enemies of the gospel, as well as their malice; they are lions, and will, like lions, tear and rend when they see an opportunity; but when they see it convenient, then they put on the fox's skin, doing the same thing by subtlety, which they durst not attempt to effect by cruelty. 2. Their malice is as much perspicuous; who but the children of the devil could have found in their hearts to have desired Christ to go out of their country, who did nothing there but innocently and diligently preach the gospel, deliver people from grievous diseases, and the power of Satan, who miserably possessed and tormented them? 3. When the most malicious enemies of God's people have done what they can, they shall finish their course, and work the time God hath set them. 4. When they have perfected their work, they shall be perfected. Death is but the perfecting of the saints, as it was the perfecting of Christ. 5. Men shall die, as at the time, so at the place, which God hath set. 6. God sending of his ministers faithfully to reveal his will to people, is a declaration of his willingness to gather them under the wings of his special favour and protection. 7. The perverse wills of men are those things which hinder men and women from being gathered. 8. Temporal judgments, and that of the severest nature, will first or last follow men's contempt of the offers of grace and salvation. 9. Those that do contemn the means of grace shall not see them long.—Ye shall not see me. 10. The proudest scorners and contemnors of Christ and his grace shall one day wish that one would or might come unto them in the name of the Lord, and do but now contemn what hereafter they would be glad they might enjoy.

CHAP. XIV

Christ healeth the dropsy on the sabbath, and justifieth his doing so, 1—6. He recommendeth humility, 7—11; and hospitality toward the poor, 12—14. The parable of the marriage supper, and of the guests, who making excuses were excluded, and their rooms filled by others, 15—24. He adviseth those who are willing to be his disciples to examine beforehand their resolution in case of persecutions, 25—33. The unprofitableness of salt, when it hath lost its savour, 34, 35.

AND it came to pass, as he went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath day, that they watched him.

2 And, behold, there was a certain man before him which had the dropsy.

3 And Jesus answering spake unto the Lawyers and Pharisees, saying, <sup>a</sup>Is it <sup>10</sup>lawful to heal on the sabbath day?

4 And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5 And answered them, saying, <sup>b</sup>Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day?

6 And they could not answer him again to these things.

We have before observed the freedom of our Saviour's converse; sometimes he will dine with publicans, sometimes with Pharisees, becoming all things to all men that

<sup>a</sup> Lev. 24. 31. 25. Ps. 60. 25. Is. 1. 7. Dan. 9. 27. Mic. 3.

<sup>b</sup> Ps. 116. 20. Matt. 21. 9. Mark 11. 10. John 12. 13.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

ch. 19. 28.

he might gain some. Christians certainly have the same liberty; the matter is not in whose houses we are, but what we do or say, how we behave ourselves there. In his going to a Pharisee's house, he gives us a great precedent of humanity and self-denial, for the Pharisees were his great enemies, and we shall observe no great kindness showed to him in the invitation of him. Whether this Pharisee be called one of the chief of the Pharisees because he was a member of the sanhedrim, or a ruler of a synagogue, or because he was one of the eldest and greatest repute, is not worth the inquiry. Thither Christ went to eat bread, that is, to take a meal with him. It is a phrase often used to signify dining, or supping, for they ordinarily under the notion of bread understood all manner of victuals. It was on the sabbath day. In the mean time, the evangelist tells us, they watched him, to wit, whether they might hear any thing from him, or see any thing in him, whereof they might accuse him. It happened there was a man which had the dropsy, whether casually, or brought thither on purpose by the Pharisees, the Scripture saith not; he was not there without a Divine direction, to give Christ an occasion of a miracle, and further to instruct people in the true doctrine of the sabbath. Christ upon the sabbath begins us a discourse proper for the day, asking the Pharisees if it were lawful to heal on the sabbath day. They make him no reply. Christ healeth him, then preacheth a doctrine to them, which he had twice before inculcated, in the case of a man who had a withered hand, Matt. xii. 10, and of the woman whom Satan had bound, of which we heard, chap. xiii. 11, viz. That works of mercy are lawful on the sabbath day. Then he justifieth his fact by the confession of their own practice, in lifting up beasts fallen into pits on the sabbath day. His argument is this: If it be lawful on the sabbath day to relieve a beast, it is much more lawful to relieve a man: but you do the former. The evangelist reports them put to silence, but saith nothing of their conviction. It is an easier thing to stop malicious persons' mouths than to remove their prejudices. Malice will ordinarily hold the conclusion, when the reason of the soul infected with it is not able to justify the premises.

7 ¶ And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms; saying unto them,

A parable here hath somewhat a different signification from what it more ordinarily hath in the evangelists: it usually signifies a similitude; here it signifies either a wise saying, or a dark saying, by which he intended something further than in the parable he expressed, which he expoundeth, ver. 11. We may observe from hence, that the dining of friends together on the Lord's day is not unlawful, only they ought to look to their discourses, that they be suitable to the day.

8 When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him;

9 And he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10 ¶ But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11 ¶ For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Two or three moral instructions we have in this parable. 1. That the law of Christ justifieth none in any rudeness and incivility. 2. That the disciples of Christ ought to have a regard to their reputation, to do nothing they may be ashamed of. 3. That it is according to the will of God, that honour should be given to those to whom honour belongeth; that the more honourable persons should sit in the more honourable places. Grace gives men no exterior preference; though it makes men all glorious, yet it is within. But the more spiritual instruction (for which our Saviour put forth this parable) is in ver. 11. Our Saviour had but now, in the sight of these Pharisees, cured a man of a bodily dropsy; he is now attempting a cure of the spiritual dropsy of pride in their souls. He had before denounced a woe against the Pharisees for loving the uppermost seats in the synagogues, chap. xi. 43, and told us, Matt. xxiii. 6, that they loved the uppermost rooms at feasts, and possibly he might at this feast see something of it. He therefore applieth his discourse by pressing upon them humility, and showing them the danger of pride, which though it be a vice seated in the heart, yet by such little things discovereth itself in the outward conversation. He tells them, that God is such an enemy to pride, that he ordinarily so ordereth it in the government of the world, that usually self-exalting people are by one means or other abased, and brought to shame and contempt, and those that are low in their own eyes are exalted; and if it doth not so fall out here, yet this will be what will at the last day befall them, in the day of God's righteous judgment. See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 12. We shall meet with the same again, chap. xviii. 14.

12 ¶ Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompence thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

Many things are delivered in Scripture in the form of an absolute and universal prohibition, which must not be so understood, amongst which this is one instance. None must think that our Saviour doth here absolutely or universally forbid our invitations of our brethren, or kinsmen, or rich neighbours, or friends, to dinners or suppers with us; there was nothing more ordinarily practised amongst the Jews; Christ himself was at divers meals: but Christ by this teacheth us, 1. That this is no act of charity; it is indeed a lawful act of humanity and civility, and of a good tendency sometimes to procure amity and friendship amongst neighbours and friends, but no such act of charity as they could expect a heavenly reward for. 2. That such feastings ought not to be upheld in prejudice to our duty in relieving the poor, that is, they ought not to be maintained in such excesses and immoderate degrees, as by them we shall disable ourselves from that relief of the poor, which God requireth of us, as our duty, with respect to the estate with which he hath blessed us. 3. That we may most reasonably expect a recompence from heaven for such good works as we do, for which we are not recompensed on earth. 4. That God's recompences of us, for doing our duty in obedience to his commands, are often deferred until the resurrection of the just, but then they will not fail obedient souls.

15 ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

Whether this person had any gross conceptions of the kingdom of God, as a state of external happiness, and sensible satisfactions, I cannot say (though it be the opinion of some valuable interpreters): he might mean no more than, Blessed is he that shall come to heaven, and enjoy the celestial pleasures and satisfactions there; for that blessed state is called the marriage supper of the Lamb; and Christ spake to his disciples in this dialect, when he spake of drinking wine with them in his kingdom. But this passage both lets us know the good influence of spiritual discourse, to set the tongues of others on work, and also it lets us see what good meditations may be founded almost upon any subjects, if we have any heart thereunto. This gives our Saviour an occasion to put forth the following parable.

c Prov. 25.
6, 7.

d Job 22: 29.
Ps. 15: 27.
Prov. 29: 23.
Matt. 23: 12.
ch. 16: 14.
Jam. 4: 6.
1 Pet. 5: 5.

e Neh. 8: 10, 12. Tob. 2.
2. & 4. 7.

f Rev. 19: 9.

g <sup>Mat. 22. 2.</sup> 16 <sup>8</sup> Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many :

h <sup>Prov. 9. 2, 5.</sup> 17 And <sup>h</sup> sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come ; for all things are now ready.

18 And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it : I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them : I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

22 And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.

23 And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

i <sup>Mat. 21. 43, & 22. 5.</sup> 24 For I say unto you, <sup>1</sup> That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

We met with the same parable Matt. xxii. 1—10, where we had the most of what is here, and many other considerable circumstances : see the notes on that chapter. Christ's primary intention by this parable was certainly to foretell the rejection of the Jews for their contempt of his gospel, and the reception of the Gentiles. They were those who were first bidden, that is, called and invited by the preaching of John the Baptist, Christ himself, and the apostles, to the receiving of Christ, that so they might be prepared for the marriage supper of the Lamb, mentioned Rev. xix. 9. The Gentiles, as a more rustic people, are set out under the notion of such as were in lanes, streets, and highways. It also informeth us of some great causes of men's rejection of the grace of God offered them in the ministry of the gospel : 1. Their worldly cares and businesses. 2. Their sensible enjoyments and pleasures : which did not hinder the Jews only, but one or other of which hinders the most of people still from receiving the grace of Christ tendered in the gospel. They are either not at leisure to attend to their souls, or they must enjoy things sensible and sensual in a degree in which the enjoyment of them is inconsistent with that duty which God requireth of them who would be saved. Perimus licitis, most men perish by their sinful use (or abuse rather) of things in themselves lawful. It may be observed also, that the two first sorts made a kind of mannerly excuse, saying, I pray thee have me excused ; but the last peremptorily said, I cannot come. Though secular employments be great diversions of us, and so hinderances of our minding things of highest concernment, yet sensual satisfactions and pleasures do most drown and swallow up the soul of man, and keep it from minding heaven and heavenly things. There have been a great many words spent about those words, compel them to come in, ver. 23. It appeareth to be almost the unanimous sense of the ancients, That no man ought by temporal punishments to be compelled to the profession of the true faith. Some of them have a little differed about such as, having once embraced the doctrine of the true faith, afterwards swerved from it ; though the truth of it is, they can be no more compelled than the other, for the will admits of no violence. Be the truth what it will in those points, certain it is that external compulsion hath no colour of foundation in this text. They are the ministers of the gospel that are thus spoken to, who we know by Christ's commission had no civil power committed to them. Nor do we ever read that they exercised any in order to the bringing of the Gentiles to the embracing of the faith ; nor do servants sent out to invite men to feasts (as these were) use to pull them in by head and shoulders, or to drive them in by whips and cudgels, only to use the best arguments they can to persuade them. Christ never prescribed any Spanish conversions of people. Man is presumed to be a rational creature, and taught even by nature to choose things which he sees are or may be of highest importance and concern. So that the very opening to men the riches of Divine grace, fitted to their lost and undone state, (which must also be showed them,) is a compulsion of them, or would at least be so if men by the fall were not corrupted as to their wills, so as they will not follow the dictate of their understanding. But notwithstanding the depravation and averseness of the carnal will, yet as many as the Lord will please to show mercy to, by joining the efficacious operations of his Spirit with the exterior call in the ministry of the word, shall come in. The words are ἀνάγκασον εἰσελθεῖν, make it necessary for them to come in, which no cudgels, no bodily punishments, can do, for they have their choice whether they will die or do it. It is used Matt. xiv. 22 ; Christ compelled his disciples to go into a ship, πυάγκασεν, yet it is certain he used no swords, or staves, or whips, or pecuniary mulcts to enforce them. A word of as high an import is used chap. xxiv. 29, of the two disciples compelling Christ to stay with them, παρεβιάσαντο. So Gal. ii. 14, ἀναγκάζεις, why dost thou force the Gentiles to Judaize ? yet it is certain Peter neither exercised nor called in the power of the magistrate to force the Gentiles. But when men began to spare their pains as to their tongues, to overpower and prevail upon men's hearts, then they began to compel them, by civil coercions, and to call in the civil magistrate, to the effecting of what they would have, while they themselves would do nothing ; and thus, contrary to all sense and reason, they expounded these words, compel them to come in.

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him : and he turned, and said unto them, 26 <sup>k</sup> If any man come to me, <sup>l</sup> and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, <sup>m</sup> yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.

27 And <sup>n</sup> whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.

We met with much the same Matt. x. 37, 38. The sum of the words is, That no man can be a true disciple of Christ, that giveth any friend, or any thing, a preference to Christ in the affections of his heart. Christ must be loved above all. It appeareth that the words must not be interpreted rigidly, for then they would oblige us to a thing, 1. Impossible in nature : for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, Eph. v. 29. Yet life is one of the things mentioned which we ought to hate. 2. It is morally impossible : for the law of God commands us to honour our father and mother. For the non-observance of, or teaching contrary to, which law, teaching the people to say, Corban, It is a gift by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, Christ so severely reflected on the Pharisees. Himself therefore doth not here teach others to hate their fathers or mothers, taking hatred in a strict and absolute sense : If any man hate not, signifyeth here no more than, If any man doth love his father, wife, children, brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life, more than me, he cannot be my disciple. Nor is this any sense put upon the term hate, different from what must be the sense of it in other scriptures : Gen. xxix. 31, When the Lord saw that Leah was hated, that is, less loved, as is expressed, ver. 30 ; so it must be interpreted in ver. 33. It also signified less loved, Deut. xxi. 15, 17 ; Matt. vi. 24 ; John xii. 25. We met with the substance of what is here, ver. 27, in Matt. x. 38, and Mark viii. 34. See the notes on those places.

28 For <sup>o</sup> which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it ?

29 Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, 30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

31 Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32 Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33 So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

Our Lord had in the parable of the supper showed what those things are which keep men from embracing the call of the gospel, to wit, their hearts' too much adherence to and embracing of sensible and sensual things. For the meeting of which temptation he had told them, ver. 25—27, that if they loved any thing in the world more than him, they could have no portion in him, they could not be his disciples, for (as Matthew saith) they are not worthy of him; nay, more than this, they must take up and bear their cross, and come after him. Here he directs them the best expedient in order to the performance of these duties, so hard to flesh and blood; that is, to sit down beforehand, and think what it will cost them to go through with the profession of religion. This, he tells them, ordinary prudence directeth men to, when they go about to build, or fight. As to the first, they make as good an estimate as they can of the charge. As to the latter, they consider both the charge, and the strength that they are able to produce to make opposition. So, saith he, must they do who will be his disciples: 1. Sit down and consider what it will cost them to become the Lord's building, what old foundations of nature must be digged up, what new foundation must be laid, how many stones must be laid before they can come up to a wall level to the promise wherein salvation is insured. 2. Then they must consider what oppositions they are like to meet with, from the world, the flesh, and the devil. And they must be ready to forsake all for Christ, though, it may be, they shall not be actually called out to it. Only we must remember, that in parables every branch is not to be applied. 1. We must desire no conditions of peace from our spiritual adversaries. 2. In our counting up of our strength to maintain the spiritual fight we must do as princes use to do, who use to count the forces of their allies and confederates, as well as their own: so we must not count what opposition we alone can maintain against the world, the flesh, and the devil; but what Christ (who is in covenant with us as to these fights) and we can do together. So as consideration and pre-deliberation here are not required of us upon any account to deter us from the fight, (for fight we must, or die eternally,) but to prepare us for the fight, by a firm and steady resolution, and to help us how to manage the fight, looking up to Christ for his strength and assistance in the management of it.

34 ¶ <sup>Mat. 5. 13.</sup> Salt is good: but if the salt <sup>Mark 9. 50.</sup> have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?

35 It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

See the notes on Matt. v. 13; Mark ix. 50, where we met with the most of what we have in these verses. By salt in this place our Saviour seemeth to mean a Christian life and profession. It is a good, a noble, a great thing to be a Christian: but one that is so in an outward profession may lose his savour. Though a man cannot fall away from truth, and reality of grace, yet he may fall away from his profession; he may be given up to believe lies, and embrace damnable errors; he may shake off that dread of God which he seemed to have upon him; and then what is he good for? wherewith shall he be seasoned? He is neither fit for the land nor the dunghill: as some things will spoil dunghills, so debauched professors do but make wicked men worse, by prejudicing and hardening them against the ways and truths of God. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. It is a usual epiphonema, or sentence, by which Christ often shuts up grave and weighty discourses: the sense is, You had therefore need to look about you, and to undertake the profession of my religion upon such weighty grounds and principles as will carry you through the practice of it to the end, against all the oppositions you shall meet with; for if you apostatize from your profession, you will be the worst of men, neither fit for the church nor for the world (for you will make that the worse); indeed fit for nothing but for the fire of hell.

CHAP. XV

The Pharisees murmur at Christ for receiving sinners, 1, 2. The parable of the lost sheep, 3—7; and piece of silver, 8—10; and of the prodigal son, 11—32.

THEN <sup>a Matt. 9. 10.</sup> drew near unto him all the Publicans and sinners for to hear him.

2 And the Pharisees and Scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, <sup>b Acts 11. 3. Gal. 2. 12.</sup> and eateth with them.

I have so often taken notice, that the term all in the New Testament is very often used to signify, not all the individuals of that species, or order of men, to which it is applied, but only a great and considerable number of them, that it is needless again to repeat it. None can imagine, that every individual publican and sinner in those parts, where Christ now was, came to hear Christ, but only many of them, or some of every sort. Thus publicans and harlots entered into the kingdom of God, while the children of the kingdom, and such as appeared to lie fairer for it, were cast out. The scribes, who were the interpreters of the law, and the Pharisees, who were the rigid observers of their decrees and interpretations, murmured, they were disturbed and troubled at it; thinking that because the law appointed no sacrifice for bold and presumptuous sinners, therefore there was no mercy in God for them, or those of whom they had such a notion, and that they were ipso jure excommunicated, and therefore Christ sinned in eating or drinking with them, or in any degree receiving of them; and from hence concluding he was no prophet: as if because ordinarily persons are known by their companions with whom they converse, therefore it had been a general rule; as if one might have concluded, that their doctorships were ignorant, because they conversed with them that were so, for their instruction; or could conclude, that the physician is sick, because his converse is with the sick, for their cure and healing. A man is not to be judged to be such as he converseth with necessarily, or in order to their good, which was the end of all our Saviour's converse with these sinners. Besides, were they themselves without sin? The root of their uncharitableness was their opinion of their own righteousness, from the works of the law, according to their own jejune interpretation of it. But let us hear our Saviour's reply.

3 ¶ And he spake this parable unto them, saying,

4 <sup>c Mat. 18. 12.</sup> What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep <sup>d 1 Pet. 2. 10, 24.</sup> which was lost.

7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, <sup>e ch. 5. 32.</sup> more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.

See the notes on Matt. xviii. 12, 13, where we met with the same parable, though not related with so many circumstances. The 7th verse, which is the epiparabole, showeth us the principal thing which our Saviour by this parable designeth to teach his hearers, and us also, viz. That Christ is so far from rejecting the greatest sinners, that repent, and flee unto his mercy, that, if it were possible, he should take a greater satisfaction in such an issue of Divine providence, than in all the glorified saints. No repenting sinner, let his sins be as many and as great as they can be, shall be unwelcome unto Christ, fleeing to him with a broken heart (resolved against his former courses) for pardon and mercy. But as it happeneth to them who by study and practice make great experiments, they can hardly find out what they mostly seek for, but in the way to it they will find out several other notions, which are of great use to them; so it will fall out to them who diligently study the parables of the gospel. Though some one truth be that the explication of which our Saviour doth chiefly intend; yet the parable will also afford some other profitable instructions, not unworthy of our notice and regard. The man here intended is Christ, who was the Son of man, as well as the eternal Son of God. The hundred sheep signifies the whole number of his elect, whether in heaven or on earth, whether yet called or hereafter to be called. The sheep going astray signifieth all the elect, who are by nature children of wrath as well as others, dead in trespasses and sins, Eph. ii. 1, 3. Here is mention but of one sheep so gone astray, though there be many, to let us know the love of Christ to every individual soul, that if but one of them had been to have been redeemed, he would have come down from heaven to have redeemed it. The ninety-nine left in the wilderness seem to me to be the glorified saints, they are the only just persons, who need no repentance. The countryman's going after the lost sheep till he finds it, then bringing it home upon his shoulders rejoicing, signifies the infinite love of Christ, both in leaving his Father's throne, and the society of the glorified saints and angels, to come to seek and to save that which was lost, to pay a redemption price for them; then sending his Holy Spirit and the ministers of his gospel to invite and effectually to persuade them to accept of his salvation, truly repenting of their sins; and also preserving them through his power by faith unto salvation: for it is upon his shoulders that any elect soul is brought home; it is his eye must find them, and his power that must bring them home. The countryman's rejoicing, and calling his neighbours to rejoice, &c., signifieth the satisfaction and well-pleaseness of Christ in the conversion of sinners, which is more plainly expressed ver. 7, I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. We have much the same again ver. 10, leaving out the comparative part. There also it is, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God. We will consider the expressions in both the verses together; as to which there may arise these questions: Quest. 1. What is here meant by joy in heaven? The inhabitants of heaven are, God, the blessed angels, and the glorified saints; how can they be said to rejoice, whereas rejoicing is in us the product of a passion by which we triumph in our union to some good, which we before wanted? Ans. When terms expressive of our passions are applied to perfect beings, we must understand them so, as they alone can agree to such beings, separated from those excesses which they have in beings more imperfect. Joy signifieth nothing but the full satisfaction of the will in a good obtained. Thus God is said to rejoice in his people, Isa. lxii. 5. Quest. 2. Who are these ninety-nine just persons that need no repentance? (For the number, it is but an uncertain number put for one certain.) Ans. 1. Some by such as need no repentance understand, such as think so of themselves, though indeed they do need it. Others understand it comparatively, such as if compared with others need no repentance. 2. Others by repentance understand penance; such sober persons as stand in no need of a being called to a public confession, for the satisfaction of the church offended. I had rather understand it of the glorified saints, whose society Christ left when he came to work out our redemption. For the others, it had been no great matter for Christ to have told them, that God, and the holy saints and angels, rejoice more over one repenting sinner, than over ninety-nine impenitent sinners and self-righteous persons, who continually grieve him, and whom he abhorreth. But then, Quest. 3. How can it be said, that God, and the angels and saints, more rejoice over one repenting sinner, than over ninety-nine glorified saints? Ans. It is universally agreed, that Christ speaks here of God, and of the angels, after the manner of men; of whose nature it is to express more passion upon a new object that pleaseth them, than upon others that they have been long pleased with; as a parent rejoiceth more over one child recovered from the jaws of death, than over all the rest of his children. Though nothing can be new to God, that is, which he did not see and foreknow, yet some things may be new to him in facto esse, as done and fulfilled: and though we must not imagine any mutation or alteration of the Divine Being upon any emergency amongst men; yet to express how infinitely pleased God is, in the repentance and conversion of great sinners, he is set out as receiving an augmentation of satisfaction in the effecting of it. Such expressions as these condescended to by God for our consolation, must not be so strained by us as to occasion any unbecoming thoughts of God. Quest. Some query how the angels know of the conversion of a sinner; and from hence the papists would some of them infer, that they know our hearts, because that is the seat of conversion. Ans. Both the angels and the glorified saints also may know it by God's revealing it to them.

8 ¶ Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?

9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10 Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

This parable (as appeareth by the conclusion of it) is of the same import with the other, and needs no further explication. By both these parables our blessed Lord lets the Pharisees know the end he aimed at in conversing with publicans and sinners, viz. In order to their repentance and conversion, than which nothing could be more grateful and well-pleasing to that God who desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that they should turn from their wickedness and live. Of the same import is also the following parable, which taketh up all the remaining part of this chapter.

11 ¶ And he said, A certain man had two sons:

12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

¶ Mark 12. 44.

13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him.

The scope of this excellent parable is apparently to magnify the grace of God, who is willing to receive and to treat kindly the greatest transgressors, seriously repenting, and turning unto God; but in it we are also, 1. Instructed in the original state of man, like that of a child in his father's house, happy and wanting nothing. 2. The most miserable estate of fallen men, such especially as run to great excess of riot. 3. The true way of a sinner's returning to God. 4. The readiness of our gracious Father to receive, and his wonderful kindness in the receiving and embracing, repenting and returning sinners. 5. The envy that is sometimes found in good souls to others receiving (as they think) more favour from God than they do. 6. The gentleness and meekness of God in dealing with us, notwithstanding our infirmities and misbecoming passions. God is again here represented under the notion of a man who had two sons: some that are his children by regeneration as well as creation; he having given them that believe a right to be called the sons of God, John i. 12. Others that are his sons by creation only. The latter are here represented under the notion of a younger son. This younger son is represented as dissatisfied with living in his father's house, desiring his portion, &c. All men and women by nature were equally the sons of God, being all in Adam, who was so. All men swerved from him; in Adam all sinned, all died. But some again by grace are returned to their Father's house. Others challenge a relation to God, as his creatures, but are not of their Father's house, but desire only a portion of the good things of this life. Some desire honours, some riches, all of them life and health, &c. God, like a liberal father, gives some of these good things to one, others to another; to some more than one kind of them: whatever they have of this nature is from him who maketh his sun to shine and his rain to fall upon the just and unjust. Wicked men, when they are thus furnished by God, quickly take their journey into a far country, are more alienated and estranged from God by lewd and wicked practices than they were by nature; waste their substance, the health of their bodies, their time of life, their estates, their great and honourable capacities, by giving up themselves to lewd and riotous kinds of life, to the high dishonour of Almighty God. It pleaseth God by his providence sometimes to bring these men into straits; when they are so brought, they will take any base, sordid course to relieve themselves, rather than they will think of returning to their heavenly Father; of themselves they will rather choose to serve swine. But if they be such as belong to God's election of grace, the providence of God will not leave them. Though there be little food for a soul in the husks of sensible satisfactions, yet they shall not have a bellyful of them. God will bring them off from satisfaction in any thing, and make every condition uneasy to them.

¶ Drusius, here translated a piece of silver, is the eighth part of an ounce, which cometh to seven pence halfpenny, and is equal to the Roman penny, Matt. 18. 28.

17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

Every sinner is beside himself; his reason lackeys to his lust and passion, he is governed by appetite, and that rageth in him, while his understanding is blind, and cannot discern betwixt good and evil; and when he hath in any measure discerned any thing, his will is stubborn, and chooseth the evil. Conversion is but the return of a soul to itself. The first thoughts of which conversion arise from a soul's consideration, what a poor miserable creature it is, ready to perish for ever, while never a poor soul belonging to God, no, not the meanest servant in his family, wanteth any good thing that is necessary for him. These things increase in a soul thoughts of returning to his heavenly Father, through the operation of the Holy Spirit of God; for of ourselves we are not sufficient so much as to think one good thought.

18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, 19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

20 And he arose, and came to his father. But <sup>g</sup> when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

The way of a sinner's returning to God must be by arising, going to the Father, confessing his sins with the aggravations of them, disclaiming any goodness, any righteousness in himself, humbling himself to God's footstool. I will arise (saith the prodigal) and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose, and came to his father. He arose from the sleep and bed of sin, and came unto his father. We are not here told by whose strength, or in whose assistance, he arose and came. We must remember that our Saviour is here representing a spiritual notion by an ordinary human action; now men have an innate power to natural motions, though not to spiritual actions. We are elsewhere told, that no man cometh to the Father, but by Christ, nor doth any man come unto the Son, but he whom the Father draweth. Every one as he is taught of the Father cometh unto the Son. And again, that though we be saved by faith, yet it is not of ourselves, it is the gift of God; and, it is given to us in the behalf of Christ to believe, Phil. i. 29. These are but several expressions signifying, by the tender affections and gracious reception of earthly parents of a returning prodigal son, the exceeding readiness of our heavenly Father to receive penitent sinners; he is so far from discouraging great sinners from taking up thoughts of returning unto him, that he cherisheth the embryos of such resolutions: I said, (saith the psalmist), I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin, Psal. xxxii. 5. God seeth the first good motions and stirrings of our hearts towards him, and he needs must do so, for he stirreth them up in us; there is no sacred fire upon our altar, but first cometh down from heaven. While yet the soul is far off from believing, and closing with Christ actually, and hath but some thoughts of that tendency, God looks upon it, encourageth it, meeteth it as it were half way; and indeed if he did not, our goodness would be but like a morning dew, which would quickly pass away; our first inclinations would perish like an untimely birth, before it hath seen the light.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, <sup>h</sup> and in <sup>h</sup> thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

Now the good thoughts and resolutions of the sinner ripen into action, and the first of it is an expression of his convictions and humiliation by a humble confession of his sins, with their aggravations, as committed against God, and that in the sight of God, and this God his Father, his unworthiness so much as of the name of a son to such a Father. The petitionary part of what he resolved upon, ver. 19, is not here again repeated, but to be understood. Men may by the common grace of God, denied to no man, have some good thoughts, but they die away, and come to no maturity, unless the Holy Spirit of God breathes upon them, and maintaineth and upholdeth them in the soul; but where the Lord designeth a thorough change in a soul, the Spirit of the Lord comes, and convinceth the soul of sin and of righteousness: and where he doth so, the resolution ripeneth into action, and produceth in the soul a true and hearty contrition, and confession of its sin, with humble petitions and a resignation of itself to the Lord's will, and a casting of itself upon God's free grace and mercy.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet:

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:

24 <sup>i</sup> For this my son was dead, and is <sup>i</sup> alive again; he was lost, and is found. <sup>i</sup> And they began to be merry.

We must remember that we are in a parable where a sinner is represented to us under the notion of a prodigal son; God, under the notion of an indulgent father; a repenting sinner, under the notion of a prodigal returning to his father, confessing his error, petitioning his father for mercy, acknowledging he deserveth none, but casting himself upon his father's goodness and mercy. It is observed by an eminent author, that amongst all the parables this is one of the most famous, and wherein is the most full and perfect representation of the thing intended to be represented, and an applicableness of every part of the similitude to that which it is brought to represent. This part of it

<sup>g</sup> Acta 2. 39.
<sup>h</sup> Eph. 2. 13, 17.

<sup>i</sup> ver. 32.
<sup>i</sup> Eph. 2. 1.
<sup>i</sup> & 5. 14.
<sup>i</sup> Rev. 3. 1.

representeth the grace of God to truly repenting sinners. We before heard his readiness and willingness to receive them, this part lets us see the manner how he will treat them. As in case of apostasy, the seeming righteousness and profession of men shall not be remembered, Ezek. iii. 20; xxxiii. 13; so in case of a true and hearty repentance, the sins of a soul shall not be remembered, Isa. xliii. 25. The father taketh no notice of the prodigal's leaving his house, or wasting his estate riotously, but saith, Bring forth the best robe, τὴν στολὴν τὴν πρῶτην; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf, τὸν μόσχον τὸν σιτυρτόν. I find some interpreters, who by the fatted calf are willing enough to understand Christ; yet interpreting the best robe, innocency, or inherent righteousness. Nor is it an ill interpretation, if we consider, that God, at the same time when he imputeth the merits of Christ to the soul for justification, doth also put his Spirit of holiness into the soul, by which being renewed in the inward man, this man brings forth the fruits of holiness unto righteousness, Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27. But why we should not understand both the phrases of the application of Christ's merits, and the imputation of his righteousness to the soul, I cannot tell, considering, that the church of Laodicea is counselled to buy of him white raiment, that she might be clothed, Rev. iii. 18; and that those clothed with white robes, Rev. vii. 14, are said to have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and that though the habits of grace are sometimes in holy writ compared to clothing, Be ye clothed with humility, (saith the apostle,) yet these are not ἡ στολὴ ἢ πρῶτη. I should therefore rather choose to interpret the killing of the fatted calf for the prodigal son, as representing that application of the blood of Christ, which is made to every sinner that truly repenteth, and maketh its application to God for mercy; and the best robe, as the righteousness of Christ, in that moment reckoned unto the soul (thus believing) for righteousness. Further yet, (to consider it only in the parable,) the word θύσαστε, sacrifice the fatted calf, seems to signify what a great cause of thanksgiving to God, as well as joy amongst men, the conversion of a sinner is. We that are earthly parents, or ministers of the gospel, should not receive the news, or see the visible probability of a soul's being converted, and returning unto God, without offering a sacrifice of thanksgiving unto God for doing such things for men, and without a true and hearty rejoicing in ourselves. But to return again to the meaning of the parable. Let us eat, and be merry: consider these words as the words of a heavenly Father, they signify unto us, that the eternal God, from the day that a repenting soul hath the blood of Christ applied to it, and is clothed with his righteousness, is at peace with the soul, hath a communion with it, and that it from that time hath a true right to spiritual mirth and rejoicing; for light is sown for the righteous, and joy for the upright in heart: though possibly the soul at present, through temptations, cannot apprehend it, and be not actually possessed of that joy and peace which followeth believing, yet it hath a right to it, and indeed none but that soul hath any thing to do with peace. It followeth, For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. A sinful soul is a dead soul, as the woman that liveth in pleasure is said to be dead while she liveth, by the apostle. The conversion of a sinner is as a resurrection from the dead. Nor is any soul capable of any true mirth, till it be reconciled to God through the blood of Christ.

25 Now his elder son was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard musick and dancing.

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27 And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and intreated him.

29 And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32 It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: <sup>1 ver. 24.</sup> for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found.

This last part of the parable is not so exactly applicable to that which it is brought to represent as the former parts are, but it serveth excellently to show us that envy which is found in our hearts by nature to the spiritual good and advantage of others. Two things are observable in it: 1. Man's peevishness and envy. 2. God's meekness towards us under our frowardness. By the elder son some think the Jews are represented, whose peevishness to the Gentiles, and the offer of the grace of the gospel to them, is made appear to us from many places of holy writ. Others think that by the elder son are represented hypocrites, who swelling in an opinion of themselves, and their own righteousness, have no patience to hear that any others should be preferred in the favour of God before them. Why may we not say that all are understood by it, even the best of God's people, who, if they narrowly search their own hearts, will find something of pride and envy remaining in the best of them? and as the former prompts them to judge themselves as much deserving the favour of God, even in special particular dispensations, as any others; so the latter inclineth them to repine at such dispensations of Divine grace as others receive, and they want: two corruptions which we are as much concerned to keep a watch upon, or against, as any other; speaking both a peevishness to the honour and glory of God, a dissatisfaction in his dispensations, and an offer at the controlment of his wisdom and justice, and also a great degree of uncharitableness, our eye being evil because the Lord is good. Besides that it seemeth to put in a claim of merit; and the soul that indulgeth itself in such thoughts seems to say that it hath deserved more than it doth receive; for without such a supposition, it is the most unreasonable thing imaginable, that any person should be displeased that another should have a greater share in the favour of God than he, while he himself receives more than he can lay a claim unto, and God may do with his own what he pleaseth. The meekness of God in dealing with us under our frowardness is as much remarkable. Son, (saith this father in the parable,) thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; was lost, and is found. This must be understood of God ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, as spoken after the manner of men, who show greater passions upon the receiving of a good that is new to them, and possibly surprising, than they ordinarily show upon the view of a good of which they have had longer fruition; so it confirms what was before said in ver. 7, 10. We must take heed of thinking that any thing can make a change or alteration in God, but must look upon it only as an expression of God's high satisfaction and well-pleas'dness in a sinner's conversion, and turning unto him; so as if it were possible any good should more than other affect the Divine Being, it would be this. So as this whole parable is of excellent use, not only to instruct sinners in their miserable state, till they be reconciled to God, but to deliver them from all temptations to fear that, heartily returning, they shall not be accepted.

CHAP. XVI

The parable of the unjust steward, 1—13. Christ reproveth the hypocrisy of the Pharisees, who were covetous, and derided him, 14—18. The parable of the rich man and Lazarus the beggar, 19—31.

AND he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

3 Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

4 I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, An hundred || measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred || measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.

8 And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.

Hierom of old thought this parable was very obscure; and Julian and other apostates, together with some of the heathen philosophers, took occasion from it to reproach the doctrine of Christ, as teaching and commanding acts of unrighteousness. But there will appear no such difficulty in it, nor cause of reproach to Christ and his doctrine from it, if we consider what I have before hinted, that it is no more necessary to a parable that all the actions in it supposed be just and honest, than that all the parts of it be true in matter of fact, whether past or possible to be; for a parable is not designed to inform us in a matter of fact, but to describe to us our duty, under a fictitious representation: nor doth every part of a parable point at some correspondent duty to be done by us; but the main scope for which it is brought is principally to be attended to by us, and other pieces of duty which may be hinted to us, are to be judged of and proved not from the parable, but from other texts of holy writ where they are inculcated. The main things in which our Saviour seemeth desirous by this parable to instruct us, are, 1. That we are but stewards of the good things God lends us, and must give an account to our Master of them. 2. That being no more than stewards intrusted with some of our Master's goods for a time, it is our highest prudence, while we have them in our trust, to make such a use of them as may be for our advantage when we give up our account. Thus we shall hear our Lord in the following verses expounding his own meaning. To this purpose he supposed a rich man to have a steward, and to have received some accusation against him, as if he embezzled his master's goods committed to his trust. Upon which he calleth him to account, and tells him that he should be his steward no longer. He supposeth this steward to be one who had no other means of livelihood and subsistence than what his place afforded him, a man not used to labour, and too proud to beg. At length he fixed his resolution, to send for his master's debtors, and to abate their obligations, making them debtors to his master for much less than indeed they were; by this means he probably hoped, that when he was turned off from his master he should be received by them. He supposeth his master to have heard of it, and to have commended him, not for his honesty, but for his wit in providing for the time to come. What was knavery in this steward, is honest enough in those who are the stewards of our heavenly Lord's goods, suppose riches, honours, parts, health, life, or any outward accommodation, viz. to use our Lord's goods for the best profit and advantage to ourselves, during such time as we are intrusted with them. For though an earthly lord and his steward have particular divided interests, and he that maketh use of his lord's goods for his own best advantage cannot at the same time make use of them for the best advantage of his master, yet the case is different betwixt our heavenly Lord and us. It hath pleased God so to twist the interest of his glory with our highest good, that no man can better use his Master's goods for the advantage of his glory, than he who best useth them for the highest good, profit, and advantage to himself; nor doth any man better use them for his own interest, than he who best useth them for God's glory. So as here the parable halteth, by reason of the disparity betwixt the things that are compared. And though the unjust steward could not be commended for the honesty, but only for the policy, of his action, yet we who are stewards of the gifts of God, in doing the like, that is, making use of our Master's goods for our own best profit and advantage, may act not only wisely, but also honestly; and indeed Christ in this parable blameth men for not doing so: The children of this world (saith he) are wiser in their generation than the children of light. By the children of this world, he meaneth such as this steward was, men who regard not eternity or the concerns of their immortal souls, but only regard the things of this life, what they shall eat, or drink, or put on. By the children of light, he meaneth such as live under the light of the gospel, and receive the common illumination of the gospel; though if we yet understand it more strictly, of those who are translated out of darkness into marvellous light, it is too true, they are not so wise, and politic, and industrious for heaven, as worldly men are to obtain their ends in getting the world. He saith, the men of this world are wiser in their generation, that is, in their kind, as to those things about which they exercise their wit and policy, than the children of God.

9 And I say unto you, <sup>b</sup>Make to yourselves friends of the || mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

That by mammon here is meant riches is universally agreed, but whether it originally be a Chaldaic, or Syriac, or Punic word is not so well agreed. The Chaldee paraphrast useth it, Hos. v. 11; but the Hebrew there is quite otherwise, (according to our translation,) he willingly walked after the commandment. But if the notion of those be true, that some of those nations had an idol called Mammon, whom they made the god of riches, answering the Grecian Plutus, it fairly interprets the Chaldee paraphrast. They followed the command for idolatry, for such was Jeroboam's commandment, mentioned in that text, and from thence it might be that the Syrians and Punic called riches mammon. We have the word in the New Testament four times, thrice in this chapter, once Matt. vi. 24. It is called the mammon of unrighteousness, by a Hebraism; it is as much as, the unrighteous mammon: by which we must not understand ill-gotten goods, (for God hateth robbery for a burnt-offering,) we must restore such goods, not make friends of them; but riches are so called, because of the manifold temptations to sin which arise from them, upon which account they are also called deceitful. But others think that it is so called in opposition to the true riches, mentioned ver. 11. So that the mammon of unrighteousness is the mammon of falsehood, or hurtful riches, riches of hurtfulness (ἀδικία sometimes signifies hurt or wrong, and ἀδικεῖν, ledere, nocere). Of these riches, which are no true riches, and which deceive the soul, and do hurt and mischief to a soul, exposing it to temptation, Christ commands us to make friends; either, 1. To make God our friend, not by meriting from him any thing by our disposal of them, but by obedience to his will in our distribution of them. Or, 2. To make poor Christians our friends, so as we may have their prayers. So that, when ye fail, when you die, when you fail of any more comfort from them, they may receive you into everlasting habitations; the holy Trinity, or the blessed angels, (whose work it is, as we shall hear, to carry souls into Abraham's bosom,) may receive you into heaven.

¶ The word basin in the original containeth nine gallons three quarts: See Ezek. 45. 10, 11, 14.

¶ The word here interpreted a measure in the original containeth about fourteen bushels and a pottle.

a John 12. 36. Eph. 6. 8. 1 Thess. 5. 5.

b Dan. 4. 27. Matt. 6. 19. & 19. 21. ch. 11. 41. 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19. Or, riches.

e Mat. 25. 21.
ch. 19. 27.

10 °He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

This is a usual sentence, (our Saviour made use of many such.) as to which kind of speeches it is not necessary they should be universally true, it is sufficient if they generally be so. Besides that, our Saviour plainly speaketh here according to the common opinion and judgment of men. Men ordinarily judge that he who is faithful in a little thing, of no high concern or moment, will be faithful in what is of a higher concern, or greater moment; and if they have found a person unfaithful in a small thing, they will conclude that he will be so in a greater, and not trust him: though sometimes it falls out otherwise, that one who is faithful enough in some trifling things, prove unfaithful in a greater trust, where unfaithfulness will turn more to his profit; and on the contrary, he that is unfaithful in a little thing, may prove more faithful in a greater; but none will trust to that: and that is our Saviour's design, to teach us that God will do by us as we in the like case do by our servants or neighbours.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous || mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?

This verse now opposeth the unrighteous mammon to the true riches, which would strongly incline one to think, that by the mammon of unrighteousness, before mentioned, our Saviour meant only false and deceitful riches. By the true riches I cannot think is meant the gospel, which indeed is said to be committed to trust of the ministers, but not of all Christians. I had rather interpret it of special, effectual grace, which is of all other the true riches: and so it teacheth us this great truth, That God is justified in the denial of his special grace to those who do not make a due use of his common gifts and grace; and indeed here will lie men's damnation, because they do not make a just use of that common grace which they have, and might make a better use of it than they do. If they would be faithful in that, God would not deny them the true riches.

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

Let it be questioned whether ἀλλότριον might not have been translated foreign as well as another man's, for so interpreters expound that phrase: If you have not been faithful in things that are without you, which are little, compared with things that are within us. Yet riches are indeed properly not ours, we are but the stewards of them, and part of them are other men's, and only trusted into our hands, to dispense to them according to our Master's order. Grace is our own, especially justifying and sanctifying grace; because it is given us of God solely for our own use and advantage. We use to say, That those who have been bad servants seldom prove good masters. In the trust of our riches we are but servants; God will not give out of his special saving grace to those that abuse the trust of his common gifts and grace.

d Mat. 6. 24. 13 ¶ °No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

See the notes on Matt. vi. 24.

e Mat. 23. 14.

14 And the Pharisees also, °who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him.

Concerning the Pharisees' covetousness we have often heard before; and indeed they were so from this principle, that none but the rich were happy and blessed, and that all poor people were cursed, John vii. 49; in opposition to whom some think that our Saviour, chap. vi. 20, blessed the poor. The promises relating to the Old Testament, and made to the Jews, were generally of temporal blessings, though under them spiritual mercies were also understood. As hypocrites can never endure to have their beloved lusts touched, and persons that have drank in an error have no patience to hear it contradicted; so the Pharisees had no patience to hear that doctrine, which crossed what they had taught, and struck at their darling lusts. They derided him: the word used signifieth a deriding with the highest degree of scorn and contempt.

15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which °justify yourselves before men; but °God knoweth your hearts: for °that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God.

By justifying here is to be understood either an appearing before men as just, and strict observers of the law, or a predicating of themselves as just: You (saith our Saviour) make a fine show, and great brags amongst men; but God's eye goeth deeper, he knoweth the heart, what pride, and covetousness, and hypocrisy lodge there. Men do not know your hearts, but God knoweth them. All is not gold by God's touchstone that glittereth in man's eyes. Nay, many things which are highly esteemed amongst men, as matters of great devotion and piety and merit, and which they applaud others for, are in the sight of God no better than abominations. This highly obligeth all not to make their estimate of things from the value and estimate which men put upon them; not every thing, but many things which are highly esteemed amongst men are abomination in the sight of God.

16 °The Law and the Prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

We had the sum of these words Matt. xi. 12, 13: see the notes on those verses. The connexion of these words in this place seems to be this: Do not think it strange that I preach some doctrines to you which seem new to you, though indeed they are no other than was before contained in the precepts of the Old Testament; for the law and the prophets, the preaching of them, held but till John, since whose time the gospel hath been preached, which gives you a clearer light into the will of God than you had before; and it pleaseth God to give it a great acceptance in the world, though you reject it; every man presseth, that is, many press, into it; so as God will not want a people, though you mock and deride the gospel, instead of embracing of it, as you ought to do.

17 °And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.

Neither do you scandalize me, as if I came to teach a new doctrine, contrary to the law and the prophets. I tell you the quite contrary; heaven and earth shall pass away, before one tittle of the law shall pass. Your vain interpretations of the law shall be destroyed, or amended, but the law of my Father shall remain as a certain rule of life to his people until the world shall have an end.

18 °Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

See the notes on Matt. v. 32, where this is expounded; as also in the notes on Matt. xix. 9; Mark x. 11.

19 ¶ There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20 And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, 21 And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

22 And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; It is a question of no great concern for us to be resolved

f ch. 10. 29.

g Pa. 7. 9.

h 1 Sam. 16. 7.

i Matt. 4. 17.

k Pa. 102.

26, 27. Ia.

40. s. & 51. s.

Matt. 5. 18.

1 Pet. 1. 25.

ch. 7. 29.

l Matt. 11. 12.

m 11. 13.

n ch. 7. 29.

o Pa. 102.

26, 27. Ia.

40. s. & 51. s.

Matt. 5. 18.

1 Pet. 1. 25.

ch. 7. 29.

l Matt. 11. 12.

m 11. 13.

n ch. 7. 29.

about, whether this be a history, or narrative of matter of fact, or a parable. Those that contend on either side have probable arguments for their opinion, and it may be they best judge who determine it to be neither the one nor the other, but a profitable discourse, that hath in it something of both. Our chief concern is to consider what our Lord by it designed to instruct us in. And certainly those do not judge amiss who think that this discourse hath a great reference to what went before, ver. 9, 10, where our Saviour had been exhorting his hearers to make themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, as also to the Pharisees' deriding him for his doctrine, ver. 14; our Lord by this discourse letting them know the danger of covetousness and uncharitableness, and also letting them know that what is highly esteemed among men may be abomination in the sight of God. He telleth them there was a certain rich man, who lived in great plenty and splendour; his clothing was purple and fine linen, that is, exceeding costly and splendid; his fare, or diet, was delicate and sumptuous, and that every day, from whence may easily be concluded, that if he had had a heart thereunto, he might have spared something for the poor. Nor were the objects of his charity far off. There was a certain beggar named Lazarus, poor enough, for he was full of sores, and would have been glad of the offal of the rich man's table; but the dogs were more charitable than their master; we read of nothing which the rich man gave him, but the dogs came and licked his sores. What was the end of this? The beggar died, and he was by the angels carried into the bosom of Abraham, that is, into heaven; some will have the phrase signify, one of the chiefest mansions in heaven. Abraham was the father of believers, and an hospitable person while he lived upon the earth. Lazarus is expressed to have been conveyed to him. There are many things discoursed by men of wit and learning about this Abraham's bosom, but the best centre here, that by it is meant heaven: and from hence two great points are proved: 1. That the soul is capable of an existence separated from the body, and therefore is not, as some atheists dream, a mere affection of that, and an accident, but a distinct spiritual subsistence. 2. That the souls of the good, when they depart from their bodies, immediately pass into an eternal state of blessedness.

23 And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24 And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and <sup>m</sup>cool my tongue; for I <sup>am</sup> tormented in this flame.

m Zech. 14.
12.
n Is. 66. 24.
Mark 9. 44,
&c.

Kai év τῷ ἄδῃ, And in hell. The world hath been filled with disputes about the true signification of the word ἄδης, which is here translated hell. The most probably true notion of it is, that it signifies, the state of the dead, both of the dead body, and so it often signifieth the grave, and of the departed soul. A very learned man saith, that if he mistaketh not, this is the only text in Scripture in which by it is to be understood the place of torments. The Hebrew word which is translated by this, far more often signifying the place of the blessed, whither the saints and patriarchs went when they died, than the place whither sinners went; but ver. 24 makes it appear, that here it signifies hell, properly so called, as it importeth the place of the damned. We must understand our Saviour in this whole διὰ τῆσδε to speak to us figuratively, that by things which we understand we might comprehend spiritual things. Heaven and hell are at too great a distance for souls in each to discourse one with another; neither have souls any eyes to lift up. We are by this taught, 1. That as the souls of good men, when they leave their bodies, go into a state of eternal bliss, where are Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and enjoy a felicity which we are not able to express, but is set out to us under the notion of Abraham's bosom, to let us know that it is a place of rest, and communion with saints, and the same felicity which Abraham the friend of God doth enjoy: so the souls of wicked men, when they leave their bodies, shall go into a place of torments, the greatness of which being such as we are not able to conceive, they are expressed to us under the notion of being tormented by fire. 2. That it will be a great part of the misery of damned souls, to understand those to be in a state of happiness whom they in this life have scorned, despised, and abused, and, it may be, have been instruments to hasten them to those blessed mansions. 3. That there will come a time when the proudest sinners will be glad of the help of the meanest saints, if they could obtain it. Father Abraham, (saith the rich man,) send Lazarus, that Lazarus whom when alive I suffered to lie at my gate full of sores, and would not relieve. 4. That the state of the damned will be void of the least degrees of comfort and satisfaction. The rich man desireth but a cooling of his tongue with so much water as could be brought upon the tip of Lazarus's finger. 5. That the tongue is a member, the abuse of which will in another life lie very heavy upon lost souls.

25 But Abraham said, Son, <sup>o Job 21. 12.</sup> remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst <sup>ch. 6. 24.</sup> thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26 And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

We must still remember, that all these things are spoken in a figure. The great gulf here mentioned, to be fixed between heaven and hell, is too wide for persons on opposite sides of it to be heard communicating their minds each to other. All that our Saviour designs to let us know is, that the circumstances of damned souls are such, that, if it were possible, they would beg the help and assistance of the meanest saints, whom they have in this life most scorned, despised, or abused; but as they will have no such opportunities as to crave any thing at their hands, so if they had, they could not receive the least relief from them; their state is determined, they are fixed for eternity, and there can be no change of their condition for the better. Abraham is here brought in calling this man Son, either as lineally descended from him, or being a member of that church of which he was the father. It will add to the torments of the damned, to hear and consider the former means and advantages they have been under for salvation, if they have descended from godly parents, or have been members of the church of Christ. That in thy lifetime thou receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things. The good things which the rich man received were no more the cause of his damnation, than the evil things which Lazarus met with were the cause of his salvation; but the rich man's ill use of the former, and Lazarus's good improvement of the latter, through the grace of God bestowed on him. Though it be not ordinary with God to give the same persons the upper and the nether springs, yet he sometimes doth it, of which Abraham, and Lot, and Job, and David, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Joseph of Arimathea, are some instances. But the term thy signifies the error of this rich man; he looked upon the good things of this life as his portion, those were the things which he set his heart upon, and let his heart run out to the neglecting the good things of another life. Lazarus received evil things, God gave him a mean, afflicted portion in this life; but he was found patient, and glorifying of God by a quiet and believing submission to his will under them; now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. So then it seemeth that departed souls do not sleep, as some have dreamed; if they did, they could neither have been capable of comfort or torment. And besides all this, there is a great gulf fixed, &c.; the meaning of which is no more than, 1. That the state of souls upon their separation from the bodies of men and women is determined and fixed. As the tree falls, so it lieth. 2. That there is no commerce, or intercourse, betwixt glorified and damned souls. The papists' passage from purgatory to heaven is a new-found way, or rather a new-fancied one. If purgatory be (as they pretend) a place where souls are tormented, it may be wondered how they should pass over this gulf: it seemeth Abraham did not know the way, St. Peter knew as little; this is one of his pretended vicar's new discoveries, but it is no wisdom in any souls to trust to this passage, of which Abraham knew as little as he did of our prayers passing to them, or to God for them, for there is χάσμα μέγα ἰσθηριγμένον, a great gulf established.

27 Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28 For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

Him that the rich man would not hear, when he lay at his gate full of sores, exhorting him to do good, and to distribute, to give alms of all that he had, and to make himself friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, he would now have restored to the earth again, his soul before the general resurrection reunited to his body, that he might go unto his father's house, and give them warning, that they might not come into the misery which he felt. But is there any charity in hell? Is there any there that wish well to souls upon earth? or rather, are not damned souls, like persons infected with the plague, desirous that others might be made as miserable as themselves? A grave and acute author saith, he prayeth not for them, but for himself, that he might not be the more miserable by the company of those who upon the earth were his near relations, and dear unto him. But we must remember that our Saviour here speaketh all in a figure, and that which our Saviour by these expressions designeth to instruct us in is no more than this, That although atheistical and proud and haughty souls in this life make a mock at hell, and at the wrath of God to be revealed after this life, and despise the poor servants of God, who by their doctrine, or holy life and example, would teach them better things, yet they shall find the fire of hell so hot, the wrath of God so terrible and intolerable, that if you could imagine that souls under those miseries could have the least dram of charity and good nature left in them, though they apprehend themselves past all hopes of recovery to a better state, yet they would beg that some of those faithful ministers, or godly people, whom they have rejected, despised, and abused, might be sent to every friend they have in the world, to warn them from doing as they have done, and running the hazard of those torments they feel for doing of such things. The papists, who idly go about from hence to prove a sense in departed souls of the state of their friends that are yet alive upon the earth, can derive very little comfort from that speculation out of this text; which if it could prove any thing of that nature could prove no more than that damned souls have such a sense, and might by the same argument also evince their charity. But figurative expressions must not be so closely applied. I have showed what I judge to be the true instruction from this passage.

29 Abraham saith unto him, <sup>p</sup>They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

Christ here representeth to us the genius of wicked and carnal men, that would be converted by revelations and some extraordinary signs; if they could see one risen from the dead, then they would believe the resurrection; if they could see a glorified saint, or hear or see a damned soul, then they would believe a heaven and a hell: he here brings in Abraham saying, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. God will have men believe the propositions of his word, and live up to the rule of life prescribed there, and not expect to have their curiosity satisfied by needless and extraordinary revelations. But is there then no need of the gospel to bring men to heaven? Doubtless there is, but that is included in Moses and the prophets, who all prophesied of Christ, though more darkly than he is revealed in the New Testament. Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me, John v. 46: and ver. 39, Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me: now they at that time had no Scriptures to search but those of Moses and the prophets; for the New Testament was not at that time written.

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

31 And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, <sup>q</sup>neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.

<sup>q</sup> John 12. 10, 11.

How vain is man in his imaginations! We are prone all of us to think after the rate that this rich man is here brought in speaking; that although persons be deaf to the sound of the word, yet some sensible evidence of the wrath of God would make a change in their hearts and lives. There is no such thing. There is not, possibly, in all the book of God a text that more speaks the desperate hardness of a sinner's heart than this, nor a text which looks more dreadfully upon persons sitting under the means of grace, reading and hearing the word of God, and yet find not their hearts so affected with the reading and hearing of it, as thereby to be brought to repentance, and faith, and such holiness of life as it requireth. If it were possible that such men and women should see one come out of the bottomless pit, tearing his hair, and wringing his hands, and gnashing his teeth, and bewailing his misery, and begging of them to be wise by his example, telling them for what sins he is made so miserable, and with tears and highest expressions of passion beseeching them that while they have time they would leave off those courses, acquaint themselves with God, and be at peace, that thereby good might come unto them, they would not yet believe nor repent; nor would this have any further effect upon them, than a little passion, till they could get the din out of their ears. For though sensible evidence be the highest advantage in the world to moral suasion, yet these things are under no Divine appointment to such an effect. Henceforth let us wonder no more that a drunkard sees his companion drop down dead before him, yet presently cries again, Fill the glass; that hundreds of sinners are daily hurried down to hell in their wickedness, and yet their companions take no warning. In a fight at sea or land hundreds drop, yet their companions do not fly, but are held up by their stomachs and passion, and their ears are made deaf by the noise of the drums and trumpets. So in the world hundreds of sinners drop down daily into the pit, yet the rest of their companions tumble their companions into their graves, and never consider the work of the Lord, nor consider the operation of his hands, till they also like sheep be laid in the grave, and death comes to feed upon them, and hell to devour them also. This now to those that duly consider not things, and in particular do not consider this text, seemeth strange and amazing. But it is no more to be wondered at than that hundreds read and hear the word of God, and are not by it converted and changed. It is not to be expected that any providence of God should work upon those souls any saving change, upon whom the word doth not work. That is the ordinance of God, with which the Holy Spirit joins itself, which alone can produce this change. If God works not this change thus, he will work it by nothing else; though he sometimes maketh use of such providences towards souls to whom he intendeth good, to make them observe and attend to the word better, in order to so blessed an effect.

CHAP. XVII

Christ teacheth to avoid giving occasions of offence, 1, 2; and to forgive one another, 3, 4. The power of faith, and defect of merit toward God in our best services, 5—10. Christ healeth ten lepers, 11—19; sheweth the spiritual nature of the kingdom of God, 20, 21; and instructeth his disciples concerning the coming of the Son of man, 22—37.

THEN said he unto the disciples, <sup>a</sup>It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come!

<sup>a</sup> Mat. 18. 6, 7. Mark 9. 42. 1 Cor. 11. 10.

2 It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

See the notes on Matt. xviii. 6, 7; Mark ix. 42. This term σκάνδαλα is used in the New Testament very variously; in general it signifies any thing which may be an occasion of mischief to another. Man, consisting of body and soul, may by something be made to stumble and fall, either with reference to the one, or to the other: thus, Lev. xix. 14. Thou shalt not—put a stumblingblock before the blind: מַכְשֵׁל Hebrew: so Prov. xxiv. 17. The mischief done to our souls is by sin; so as in the New Testament it often signifies any action of ours by which our brother is made to sin: which actions may be, 1. Good and necessary, and then the scandal is taken, not given. Or, 2. Wicked and abominable; hence we call some sins scandalous sins, such as give offence to others, and are examples alluring them to sin. Or, 3. Actions which in themselves are of an indifferent nature, neither commanded nor forbidden in the word. Our taking one part in these actions, rather than another, may be a scandal, that is, an offence. What our Saviour here saith is certainly true concerning all these kinds of offences: considering the complexion of the world, and the corruption which is in men's hearts, it is impossible but that offences will come. But I must confess that I incline to think, that the offences primarily intended by our Saviour here are those of the second sort; and that by them are meant persecutions of the people of God; and to the authors of which our Saviour denounceth woe. So that our Saviour by this lets the world know, the special protection under which he hath taken his people;—so as though he knew there would arise those who would hurt and destroy in his holy mountain, yet he declares that they shall not go unpunished, but they had better die the most certain death imaginable, (such must be the death of him who is thrown into the sea with a millstone about his neck,) than to that degree expose himself to the vengeance of God; a guilt of that nature that there is not much more hope for him to escape God's vengeance, than there would be of a man escaping with his life whom we should see thrown into the sea with a millstone appendant to him. I do very well know that it is also highly dangerous to tempt or solicit a child of God to sin, either by our words or actions; but I do not think it the design of our Lord in this place so much to express that as the other.

<sup>b</sup> Matt. 18. 15, 21.
<sup>c</sup> Lev. 19. 17.
<sup>d</sup> Prov. 17. 14.
<sup>e</sup> Jam. 5. 19.

3 ¶ Take heed to yourselves: <sup>a</sup> If thy brother trespass against thee, <sup>b</sup> rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him.

4 And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.

Matthew hath something of the same tendency in chap. xviii. 21, 22, mentioning it as an answer to a question which Peter propounded to our Lord; but the circumstances of both relations are so different that I cannot think them the same, but do believe these words spoken at another time. This doctrine of the forgiveness of our offending brother is pressed upon us in several places in the gospel and New Testament, and that upon the gravest arguments imaginable, Matt. vi. 15; xviii. 35; Mark xi. 26; Luke vi. 37; Eph. iv. 32; from whence we may justly conclude it a duty of very high concernment for us both to understand and to live in the practice of. It signifies the laying aside of all thoughts or desire of revenge in our own cause. The precept is not exclusive of our duty in seeing the glory of God avenged upon murderers, &c.; nor yet of our seeking a just satisfaction, in a legal way, for wrongs done to us relating to our limbs or estate, so far as the person is able to do it; much less doth it require the making such a one as hath so injured us our intimate and bosom friend. That which it requireth is the laying aside all malice, or desire of revenge, upon our neighbour in a case wherein our own name or honour is concerned; and it is fitly joined to what went before, this malice, or desire of revenge, being the root of all the mischief that men voluntarily do one to another, especially of that which they do to the innocent servants of God.

5 And the apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our faith.

Though we be not to seek a connexion of all those speeches of our Lord which are recorded by the evangelists, they sometimes heaping together many of his golden sayings, without so much as regard to the order of time when he spake them, or their dependence on each other; yet he that wisely observes the preceding discourse for charity, will easily observe an excellent connexion of this verse with the former. No duty required of men and women more grates upon flesh and blood than this of forgiving injuries, nothing that the most of people find harder to put in practice; so as indeed where there is not a root of faith, this fruit will not be found. It is faith which worketh by love. Till the soul cometh steadily and fixedly to agree to those propositions of the word where this is required, as the indispensable will of God; nay, till it comes firmly to rest upon those promises, and hope for them, which are made to this duty; finally, till it comes to have received Christ, and forgiveness from him, and considers itself bound to forgive, as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven it, Eph. iv. 32; it will hardly come up to the practice of this duty. Hence it is that unregenerate men are usually implacable, malicious, always studying revenge. Nay, so imperfect are the habits and workings of faith in believers, that they often find it very difficult to forgive. The apostles therefore very properly pray, Lord, increase our faith, after hearing this discourse. Others make the connexion thus: Lord, we have now heard thee discoursing our duty as to love, now increase our faith, discourse to us something for the increase of that. But the former seemeth to be least strained. By the way we may observe from hence, that as the beginnings, so the increase, of our faith must be from God. In things truly and spiritually good, without him we can do nothing.

6 <sup>a</sup> And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

<sup>d</sup> Matt. 17. 20. & 21. 21.
<sup>e</sup> Mark 9. 23.
& 11. 23.

Matthew hath in effect the same, chap. xvii. 20, though he saith, ye shall say unto this mountain: see the notes there. I cannot be of their mind who think that our Saviour in this, and the parallel place, speaks only of a faith that works miraculous operations; the object of which must be a Divine revelation or promise made to particular persons, that they shall be able to do things (by the power of God) out of and beyond the ordinary course of nature. I do believe that in both texts our Lord designs to show the great honour he will give to the exercise of the grace of faith, so as nothing which shall be for the honour of God, and the good of those that exercise it, and which God hath promised, shall be too hard or great an achievement for it: yet will it not thence follow, that if we had faith, that is, a full persuasion, that God would do such a thing by us, and a rest and confidence in God relating to it, we might remove mountains, or cast sycamine trees into the sea; for no such faith in us now could have a promise for the object, so as such a persuasion would be no faith, but a mere presumption. But there are other things as difficult, for which all believers have promises: Sin shall have no dominion over you. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you, &c. And there are duties to be performed by us, as hard in the view of our natural eye as removing mountains; amongst which this of forgiving injuries is not the least, especially to some natural tempers. But, saith our Saviour, do not think it impossible to do: you have said well to me, Lord, increase our faith, for if you had faith as a grain of mustard seed, either so small as a grain of mustard seed, (if true,) or so lively and working, that had such a principle of life in it as a grain of mustard seed, you might do any duty, resist any temptation, mortify any corruption; and you that have a power given you, and a promise made you, for working miracles, might say to this sycamine tree, Be removed, &c.

7 But which of you, having a servant plowing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 12. 37.

The 7th, 8th, and 9th verses are plainly a parable, a part of a discourse wherein our Lord, under an earthly similitude, instructeth us in a spiritual duty. This duty is easily learned from the epiparabole, ver. 10, and it lieth in two things: 1. That we ought to do all those things which our Lord hath commanded us. 2. That we, when we have done all, are to look for our reward, not of debt, but of grace. He illustrateth this by a similitude or parable. He supposeth a man to have a servant ploughing or feeding cattle for him. By servants we must understand such servants as they had in those countries, who were not day servants, or covenant servants, who are only obliged to work their hours, or according to their contracts with us; but such servants as were most usual amongst them, who were bought with their money, or taken in war, who were wholly at their master's command, and all their time was their master's, and they were obliged by their labour only to serve him: such servants our Lord supposeth to have been abroad in the field, ploughing, or sowing, or feeding cattle, and at night to be come in from their labour. He asks them which of them would think themselves obliged presently to set them to supper, (for meat, drink, and clothes were all such servants' wages,) or would not rather set them to work again, to make ready their master's supper, and then to wait upon him, tying up their long garments, which they used in those countries to wear, promising them that afterwards also they should eat and drink. And suppose they do that without murmuring, he asketh them again, whether they would take themselves obliged to thank them for doing the things which their master commanded? He tells them he supposeth they would not take themselves to be under any such obligation. Now what is the meaning of all this he tells them, ver. 10, So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants; for the infinitely glorious and blessed God can receive no benefit by our services; we have done that which was our duty to do. By which we are instructed, 1. That we are wholly the Lord's, all our time, strength, abilities; we are obliged to love the Lord with all our heart, and mind, and soul, and strength. 2. That our labour for the Lord must not cease till the Lord ceaseth commanding, till we have done all that the Lord by his revealed will lets us know we have to do. 3. That when we have done all we shall have merited nothing at God's hands; (1.) Because we are servants. (2.) Because we have but done our duty. 4. That the Lord may delay our reward till we have done all that he hath commanded us. 5. That when we have it, it is not a reward of thanks, but of grace. This parable is excellently added to the former discourses. Our Saviour had before pressed the doctrine of charity, he had also showed what must be the root of it, viz. true and lively faith; he here showeth us what we should propose to ourselves as our end in such acts, viz. not to merit at the hand of God, not merely in hope to receive a reward from him, but the glorifying of God by a faithful obedience to his will, owning him as our Lord, and ourselves as his servants, without any vain-glory or ostentation, and in all humility confessing ourselves servants, unprofitable servants, and such as have but done our duty, no, though we had done all that he commanded us; waiting for our reward with patience, and taking it at last as of his free grace with thankfulness; which is indeed requisite to the true and regular performance of every good work which we do, and our duty, if the infirmity of our flesh would allow us to do all whatsoever God hath commanded us; but much more when our performances are so lame and imperfect, that the greatest part of what we do amounteth not to the least part of what we leave undone.

¶ And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.

And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

Christ's nearest way from Galilee to Jerusalem was through Samaria. In a certain town ten lepers met him, for though the law forbade them any other society, yet it did not restrain them from the society of each other; probably they were got together that they might at once come to this great Physician. The leprosy was a sore disease, not so much known in our countries. We shall observe it was the disease which God made to come upon some persons, to testify his displeasure for some sin committed by them. It was threatened as the mark of God upon men for sin, Deut. xxviii. 27, — with the scab, whereof thou canst not be healed. God sent it upon Miriam, Numb. xii. 10, for her contempt of Moses. David curseth Joab's house with it, 2 Sam. iii. 29. Gehazi suffereth by it, for his lying and going after Naaman for a bribe, 2 Kings v. 27. King Uzziah, for usurping the priest's office, 2 Kings xv. 5. These ten lepers cry to Christ for mercy, mercy with respect to their afflictions.

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go shew yourselves unto the Priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

It was according to the Divine law, Lev. xiv. 2, that the leper in the day of his cleansing should be brought unto the priest, who was to judge whether he was healed, yea or no, and to offer the offering there prescribed. Christ sends them to the priests, partly that he might observe the law which his Father had given in the case, partly that he might have a testimony of this his miraculous operation. We shall observe that our Saviour cured some being at a distance from them, some by the word of his power only, though he were present in the same place, others by touching of them; he certainly chose thus to vary his circumstances, in actions of this nature, to let people know that the healing virtue was inherent in him, and that the proceeding of it from him was not tied to any ceremony used at the doing of the work, which he used or omitted according to his pleasure.

15 And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, 16 And fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

It is most probable that this leper first showed himself to the priest, according to the commandment and the direction of our Saviour, and then returned to give our Saviour thanks. Some think that this glorifying God here mentioned, and his giving thanks to Christ, signify the same thing. I doubt it, because nothing appeareth from this story sufficient to convince us that he looked upon Christ as God; nay, it doth not appear that his faith was risen so high as to believe him the Messiah, the Son of David; they speak to him only under the notion of Jesus, Master, ver. 13. It is plain they believed him at least to be a great prophet, sent from God, and clothed with a power from God. I choose rather therefore to interpret his falling down on his face at his feet, as a humble posture of reverence, which those nations did often use to compliment their superiors by, even as a posture of adoration; and that his glorifying God was a praising of him as the principal efficient cause of his healing, and his giving thanks to Christ a civil respect paid to Christ as God's instrument in the case. The evangelist addeth, and he was a Samaritan. Christ calls him a stranger, ver. 18; a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, as all the Samaritans were.

17 And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?

18 There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

These ten lepers were a representation of all mankind; not more than one of ten that receive signal mercies from the bountiful hand of Divine Providence cometh to give God any suitable homage. Thus he maketh his sun to shine and his rain to fall upon the just and upon the unjust. Men howl to God upon their beds, but glorify him

g Luke 9.
51, 52.
John 4. 4

h Lev. 13.
45.

i Lev. 13. 2.
& 14. 2.
Matt. 8. 4.
ch. 5. 14.

not when they are raised up. But this increpation of our Saviour lets us know, that this their way is their folly.

<sup>1</sup> Mat. 9. 22.
<sup>2</sup> Mark 5. 34.
<sup>3</sup> & 10. 52. ch.
<sup>4</sup> 7. 80. & 8.
<sup>5</sup> 48. & 18. 42.

19 <sup>1</sup> And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way : thy faith hath made thee whole.

It is a wonderful thing to observe what small rudiments and embryos of faith Christ encourageth and rewardeth. His faith appeareth to be no more than a persuasion that Christ did not do what things he did of this nature by any magical art, (as the Pharisee blasphemed,) but by the power of God, and that he was a man sent of God. This faith Christ honoureth, commendeth, rewardeth. Faith is to be measured from the revelation which he who believeth hath, and from the opposition which he encountereth : a little faith upon a little light, and maintained against a great opposition, is a great faith; though little in itself, yet great with respect to the circumstances of him or her that believeth.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not || with observation :

¶ Or, with outward show.

Whether the Pharisees spake this deriding him, who in his discourses had been often mentioning a kingdom of God to come, or in simple seriousness, for they generally expected the coming of a Messiah, and a secular kingdom, which he should exercise in the earth, particularly over the Jews, (having first destroyed the Gentiles,) is very hard to determine; their mean opinion of Christ inclineth some to think the former; their generally received opinion about the kingdom of the Messiah giveth some countenance to the latter. Our Saviour's answer fitteth them, whatsoever they intended by their question: The kingdom of God (saith he) cometh not μετὰ παρατηρήσεως, with observation. The word signifies a scrupulous and superstitious observation. Thus the verb from whence it cometh signifieth, Gal. iv. 10. The verb also signifies a captious observation, Mark iii. 2; Luke vi. 7; xiv. 1; xx. 20; Acts ix. 24. But that sense cannot agree to the noun used in this place. The generality of the best interpreters agree the sense here to be, with external pomp and splendour; and therefore Beza expounds the noun here by a periphrasis, ita ut observari poterit, in such a manner as it can be observed. As if he had said, Men have taken up a false notion of my kingdom, as if it were to be a secular kingdom to be set up in the world, with a great deal of noise, and pomp, and splendour, so as men may observe it and gaze upon its coming. But that which I call my kingdom is not of this nature. Our Lord expoundeth it in the next verse: The kingdom of God is within you; it is of a spiritual nature, not obvious to human senses, but exercised over the hearts of my people. Whether our Saviour speaketh this in reply to the Pharisees, or (as some think) beginning a discourse with his disciples, which he further pursueth, I cannot determine.

<sup>1</sup> ver. 23.
<sup>2</sup> in Rom. 14.
<sup>3</sup> 17.
<sup>4</sup> Or, among you.
<sup>5</sup> John 1. 26.

21 <sup>1</sup> Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, <sup>2</sup> the kingdom of God is || within you.

The latter words of this verse seem fairly to admit of a double interpretation, as you here may signify the disciples of Christ, who had received Christ as their Lord, over whom he exercised a spiritual dominion and jurisdiction, or as it may respect the whole Jewish nation, amongst whom the kingdom of God was now exercised, by the preaching of the gospel, and the power of Christ put forth in the casting out devils, and other miraculous operations. I incline to the latter, as differing from those that think these words were spoken with a peculiar respect to the disciples; I rather think them a reply to the Pharisees, as corrective of their false notion and apprehension of the Messiah, as if he were yet to come, and to set up a temporal principality; for it is said, ver. 22, And he said unto the disciples, as if he did but then specially apply his discourse to them; ἐν ἡμῖν thus signifieth, chap. vii. 16; John i. 14. You (saith our Saviour) are much mistaken as to the nature of my kingdom, and indeed of the kingdom of the Messiah, in the expectation of which you live. It is not a kingdom of the same nature with the kingdoms of the world, it cometh not with pomp and splendour, for men and women to observe;

they shall not say, Lo here he cometh! or, Lo there he goeth! the kingdom of God is now in the midst among you, though you observe it not.

22 And he said unto the disciples, <sup>1</sup> The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

<sup>1</sup> See Matt. 9. 15. John 17. 12.

Our Lord spendeth his further discourse in this chapter in a forewarning of his disciples of those great troubles which should follow his departure from them. At present the Bridegroom was with them, and they could not mourn; for many years after that he was departed from them the days of the Son of man continued, that is, gospel days, times wherein the gospel of Christ was freely preached to them. But (saith he) make use of that time, for it will not hold long; there will come a time when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and shall not see it. These evil days began when false Christs and false prophets rose up, which was most eminently a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, which happened about forty years after. Every factious person that had reputation enough to make himself the head and leader of a faction, taking his advantage of the common error of the Jews, that a Messiah, a Christ, was to come, who should exercise a temporal kingdom over the Jews, would pretend to be, and give out he was, the Messiah, to draw a faction after him. This is that which our Saviour saith in the next words.

23 <sup>1</sup> And they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them.

<sup>1</sup> Mat. 24. 23.
<sup>2</sup> Mark 13. 21.
<sup>3</sup> ch. 21. 8.

24 <sup>1</sup> For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be in his day.

<sup>1</sup> Matt. 24. 27.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 23, 27. You will (saith our Saviour) have a great many false Christs and false prophets arise, and foolish credulous people will be deceived by them, and come and tell you, Lo, yonder is the Messiah, or, Lo, he is in another place; but believe them not. So it is in Mark xiii. 21. Follow them not, saith Luke. The Son of man shall have his day, a day when he will come in a glorious manner to judge the quick and the dead; but it will come upon the world like lightning, that suddenly shineth from one part of heaven to another, so as no man can foretell it, or observe the motion of it. Some do think that by the day of the Son of man here was meant the spreading of his gospel; but certainly it is a strained sense, nor was the spreading of that a thing so sudden, but more gradually and observably accomplished.

25 <sup>1</sup> But first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

<sup>1</sup> Mark 8. 31. & 9. 31.
<sup>2</sup> & 10. 33.
<sup>3</sup> ch. 9. 22.

Before my kingdom shall appear in that glory, I must suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation. You may be seduced to think that I am going to put on a crown as a secular prince to deliver you from your enemies. Alas! I am going to a cross. I shall have a day, but this is mine enemies' day, and the power of darkness, both with reference to me and you. Look for nothing in or from this generation but to see me mocked, scourged, spit upon, buffeted, hanged upon a cross, rejected by men; these will be the issues of Divine providence as to this generation; look for better things hereafter, but look for no better from or in this generation.

26 <sup>1</sup> And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man.

<sup>1</sup> Gen. 7. Matt. 24. 37.

27 They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

28 <sup>1</sup> Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

<sup>1</sup> Gen. 19.

1 Gen. 19.
16, 24.

29 But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

2 2 Thess.
1. 7.

30 Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 37—39. Our blessed Lord in these verses doth both declare the surprisal of the Jews with that judgment which was coming upon them, and of the world with his coming in the day of judgment, (of which the destruction of Jerusalem was a type,) and also forewarneth them to take heed that they might not be surprised; he tells them, that in the days of the Son of man, (so that he speaketh of more than one day,) the day of his power in the destruction of the Jews, and in the day of judgment, the antitype to the former, it shall be as in the days of Noah and of Lot. In the days of those men, neither the men of the old world, nor the men of Sodom, would hearken either to Noah or Lot, who were preachers of righteousness to them, and gave them examples of sober and holy lives; but gave up themselves to luxury, and lived in a careless regard of any thing God was doing, until the very day that Noah went into the ark, with his family, and the flood destroyed all the rest; and till the day that Lot went out of Sodom, and fire and brimstone came down and destroyed all those who were left in Sodom. So it would be before the final ruin of the world. Till the very days came, and men felt it, the generality of men would not believe it, nor make any preparation for it. But in our Lord's propounding these two great examples to them, he also lets them know their duty and wisdom, viz. to watch, and be upon their guard, with Lot to get ready to go out of Sodom, with Noah to prepare an ark upon this admonition which he gave them. There are no such signs of approaching ruin to persons or nations, as security, and the abounding of sin and wickedness, notwithstanding the warnings which God giveth them by his messengers.

2 Mat. 24. 17.
Mark 13. 15.

31 In that day, he which shall be upon the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back.

These words seem to relate singly to the destruction of Jerusalem. We had the same Matt. xxiv. 17, 18: see the notes there. They only signify the certain ruin and destruction of the place, and are our Saviour's counsel to his disciples, not to linger, or promise themselves any longer security there, notwithstanding what any false Christs or false prophets should plainly tell them, but to make as much haste away out of it as they possibly could.

7 Gen. 19. 26.

32 Remember Lot's wife.

We have the story Gen. xix. 26. She looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt. Lot and his family leaving Sodom, she either looked back as not believing what the angel had said, or as moved with the miserable condition of the place, or as loth to leave her estate and goods; however, in disobedience to the command of God, ver. 17, Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. God turneth her into a pillar of salt. It is a dreadful caution against unbelief, disobedience, worldly-mindedness, contempt of God's threatenings, and keeping a love for the forbidden society of lewd and wicked persons.

2 Mat. 10.
39. & 16. 26.
Mark 8. 35.
John 9. 24.
John 12. 25.

33 Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it.

That is, whosoever, in disobedience to my command, shall use arts to preserve his life, shall lose it; and whosoever, at my command, shall be ready to lose it, shall preserve it, or if he loseth his breath, he shall preserve his soul. See the notes on Matt. x. 39; xvi. 25; Mark viii. 35.

1 Mat. 24.
40, 41.
1 Thess. 4.
17.

34 I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left.

35 Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

36 ¶ Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

¶ This 36th verse is wanting in most of the Greek copies.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 40, 41. These verses seem to respect the day of judgment, and that dreadful separation which shall be in that day betwixt the sheep and the goats. It is true also of Christ's day in the preaching of the gospel; but that seemeth not to be the sense of this text. They can hardly be applied to the destruction of Jerusalem; it was so universal as hardly any were there left.

37 And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord? And he said unto them, Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

b Job 39. 30.
Matt. 24. 28.

Concerning the sense of this proverbial expression, and the various application of it by interpreters, see the notes on Matt. xxiv. 28. In our evangelist (where it is σώμα, not πτερόμα, as in Matthew, the word there properly signifying a dead body, the word here a living body) it seems to be applied to Christ's glorious coming to judgment: Where I shall be, who am to be the Judge both of the quick and the dead, thither shall all the world be gathered before me, but my saints especially, who have eagles' eyes, senses exercised to discern betwixt good and evil, to discern me as their Redeemer, and the true Messiah; according to that, Psal. l. 5, 6, Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself.

CHAP. XVIII

The parable of the unjust judge and the importunate widow, 1—8. The parable of the Pharisee and publican, 9—14. Christ's tenderness to the little children that were brought unto him, 15—17. He teacheth a ruler how to attain eternal life, 18—23. He showeth how hard it is for the rich to enter into the kingdom of God, 24—27; promiseth rewards to those who have foregone ought for the gospel's sake, 28—30; foretelleth his own death and resurrection, 31—34; and giveth sight to a blind man, 35—43.

AND he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint;

a ch. 11. 5.
& 21. 26.
Rom. 12. 12.
Eph. 6. 18.
Col. 4. 2.
1 Thes. 5. 17.

This duty of praying always is inculcated to us several times in the Epistles, as may appear from those texts quoted in the margin, which we must not interpret as an obligation upon us to be always upon our knees praying; for thus our obedience to it would be inconsistent with our obedience to other precepts of God, relating both to religious duties and civil actions, neither was Christ himself always praying: but it either, first, lets us know, that there is no time in which we may not pray; as we may pray in all places, every where lifting up holy hands without doubting, (as the apostle saith, 1 Tim. ii. 8,) so we must pray at any time. Or, secondly, it is as much as, pray frequently and ordinarily; as Solomon's servants are said by the queen of Sheba to stand always, that is, ordinarily and frequently, before him, 1 Kings x. 8; and the Jews are said always to have resisted the Spirit of God, Acts vii. 51; that is, very often, for they did it not in every individual act of their lives. Or else, in every part of time; knitting the morning and evening (the general parts of our time) together by prayer. Thus the morning and evening sacrifice is called the continual burnt-offering, Exod. xxix. 42; Neh. x. 33. Or, as it is in Eph. vi. 18, in παντι καιροῖς, in every season, whenever the providence of God offers us a fair season and opportunity for prayer. Or mentally praying always, intermixing good and pious ejaculations with our most earthly and sublunary occasions. Or, having our hearts at all times ready for prayer, having the fire always on the altar, (as was required under the old law,) though the sacrifice be not always offering. And not to faint, which is the same with that, Eph. vi. 18, watching therewith all perseverance; and Col. iv. 2, Continus in prayer, and watch in the same. Not fainting either by reason of God's delay to give us the things we ask of him, or through laziness, and remission of our duty, before our life doth determine. This is now what our Saviour designeth to teach us in this parable which followeth.

† Gr. in a certain city. 2 Saying, There was † in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man :

3 And there was a widow in that city ; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

4 And he would not for a while : but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man ;

b ch. 11. 8. 5 <sup>b</sup> Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.

c Rev. 6. 10. 7 And <sup>c</sup> shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them ?

d Heb. 10. 37. 2 Pet. 3. 9. 8 I tell you <sup>d</sup> that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth ?

We have here the parable, and the interpretation thereof, both, ver. 1, in the proparabole, or the words immediately going before it, and also in an epiparabole, or some words following it, which sufficiently explain our Saviour's scope and intention in it, viz. To assure his people, that though the Lord show a great deal of patience towards wicked men, who are the enemies of his people, and doth not presently answer their cries for a deliverance of them out of their hand ; yet if they go on crying to him, he will most certainly at length deliver them. To this purpose he tells them a matter of fact, which either had happened, or might happen in the world. There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, &c. : from hence he concludeth, arguing from the lesser to the greater, and indeed there is an emphasis in every part of the comparison. 1. This was an unjust judge ; God is a righteous Judge. 2. He did this for a stranger ; God's people are his own elect. Then he assureth them, that God would avenge them speedily. We may from this discourse of our Saviour observe several things. 1. That all the wrongs and injuries which the people of God suffer in this life should make them fervent and frequent in prayer to God for redressing them. 2. That notwithstanding their prayers, God may bear with their enemies long, for so much time as they shall think a long time. 3. If God's people do not faint, but continue night and day crying to him, God will hear them, and avenge them of their adversaries. The power that impurity hath upon sinful men, may confirm us in this thing, and ought to engage us to pray without ceasing and fainting. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth ? When Christ shall come to judgment, he will find very few whose hearts have not fainted ; there will be multitudes who are fallen away, through the power that temptations have upon the frailty of human nature. By faith here seems to be understood the true and proper effects of faith, growing out of it as the fruit out of the root. This premonition of our Saviour also served for an excellent caution to his disciples, that they would watch, and take care that they might be none of that part of the stars of heaven, which by the dragon's tail should be cast down to the earth.

9 And he spake this parable unto certain <sup>e</sup> which trusted in themselves <sup>f</sup> that they were righteous, and despised others :

By the term certain, or some, he unquestionably understandeth the Pharisees and their disciples, who (as we have all along in the history of the Gospel observed) were a generation of men who were eminently guilty both of a boasting of themselves, and a scorning and despising all others.

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray ; the one a Pharisee, and the other a Publican.

Who these Pharisees, and who the Publicans, were we have had frequent occasions before to tell. The temple stood upon a hill, therefore they are said to ascend, or go up. They had in the temple set hours for prayer, as may be learned from Acts iii. 1, at which some of all sorts went up to pay that homage unto God. Our Saviour mentioneth but two, having in it no further design than by this parable to inform his disciples, how much more acceptable to God the prayers of broken, humble, contrite hearts are, though the persons possessed of them be such as have been, or at least have been reputed, great sinners, than the prayers of those who are hypocrites, and proud, and come unto God pleading their own righteousness, in order to the obtaining of his favour.

11 The Pharisee <sup>g</sup> stood and prayed <sup>h</sup> thus with himself, <sup>i</sup> God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican.

From hence we may observe that thanksgiving is a part of prayer. It is said he prayed, yet we read not of any one petition he put up. His standing while he prayed is not to be found fault with, (that was a usual posture used by persons praying,) unless the Pharisee made choice of it for ostentation, that he might be the better taken notice of ; which was too much their fault, Matt. vi. 5. Whether the term προς εαυτον, with himself, in this place, signifieth that he only prayed in his heart, or with a voice that could not be heard, or only that he prayed by himself, I doubt ; for though our Saviour, who knew men's thoughts, could easily repeat his prayer, supposing it only mental, or at least with a voice not audible, yet this seemeth not to suit the humour of a Pharisee, whose whole design was to be taken notice of, seen, and heard by others. He saith, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men, extortioners, adulterers, &c. But was this blameworthy ? may we not bless God for his restraining grace, not suffering us to run into the same excesses of riot with other men ? Doubtless it is both lawful, and our duty, provided, 1. That we speak truth when we say it. 2. That we do not come to plead this as our righteousness before God. But this Pharisee, 1. Speaks this in the pride of his heart, in the justification of himself. 2. In the scorn and contempt of his neighbour. 3. Though he were guilty of as great sins as these, though of another kind. In the mean time we observe, that he did not attribute this negative goodness, of which he had boasted, or that positive goodness, which he will tell us of by and by, to the power of his own will. He gives thanks to God for them.

12 I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

Twice in the sabbath, saith the Greek, but that is ordinary, to denominate the days of the week from the sabbath ; the meaning is, twice betwixt sabbath and sabbath. Those learned in the Jewish Rabbins tell us, that the Jews were wont to fast twice in a week, that is, the Pharisees and devouter sort of them ; once on the second, another time on the fifth day (which are those days which we call Monday and Thursday). From whence some tell us that Wednesday and Friday come to be with us fasting days or fish days. The Christians in former times, thinking it beneath them to be less in these exercises than the Jews, would have also two fasting days each week ; and those not the same with the Jews, that they might not be thought to Judaize. If that custom had any true antiquity, I doubt not but they fasted after another rate than the papists or others now do, who pretend a religion to those days. But neither was the Pharisees' practice, nor the practice of Christians, in this thing to be much admired or applauded. For fasting was always used in extraordinary cases ; and the bringing extraordinary duties into ordinary practice usually ends in a mere formality. It is a good rule, neither to make ordinary duties extraordinary or rare, nor yet extraordinary duties ordinary : the doing of the first ordinarily issueth in the loss of them, and quite leaving them off ; the latter, in a formal, lifeless performance of them. I give tithes of all that I possess. The emphasis lieth in e ch. 10. 26. & 16. 15. f (v), as being righteous.

g Pa. 135. 2. h Is. 1. 15. & 56. 2. i Rev. 3. 17.

the word all. Others paid tith of apples, and some fruits of the earth (of which alone tith was due); but the Pharisees would pay tithes of those things, as to which it was generally held that the law did not strictly require them, such as pot-herbs, eggs, milk, cheese. Our Saviour bare them this testimony, that they paid tith of mint, anise, and cummin, Matt. xxiii. 23; rue, and all manner of herbs, Luke xi. 42. This Pharisee boasteth of his exactness in two things, neither of which were required particularly by the law of God. Nor did he amiss in them, if he had not omitted the weightier things of the law, as our Saviour chargeth them to have done in both the texts before mentioned. But how came these things to make him a plea for his justification before God? will he plead his righteousness, because he did things which God did not command him, while in the mean time he omitted those things which God had commanded? Or, what did these things signify, if they were not done out of a root of love? The law is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; and how could they be performed out of love, when love was one of the things which our Saviour chargeth them to have omitted? Of the same nature are other works, such as building of churches, and hospitals, and alms-houses: the fruit is good, if the root be good; but if they be done out of ostentation, or opinion of meriting at God's hands, men's money (notwithstanding these things) will perish with them, for heaven is not to be purchased by our money.

13 And the Publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

Those who fancy the publican stood afar off from the Pharisee, because the Pharisees would suffer none but those of their sect, at least none that were under such a notoriety of disrepute as the publicans generally were, to come near them, suppose him to have been a Jew (which is not impossible): if he were a Gentile, he must stand so far off as the court of the Gentiles was from the court of Israel. This publican's humility in his address to God is described, 1. By his posture; he looked upon the earth, as one that thought himself not worthy to look toward heaven. 2. By his action; he smote upon his breast, as one full of sorrow and trouble. 3. By the matter and form of his prayer; he confesseth himself a sinner; he fleeth unto the free grace of God. Here is not a word of boasting, that he was not such or such, nor yet that he did thus or thus. He confesseth himself a sinner, a miserable sinner, and fleeth to the free grace of God; thereby instructing us how to make our applications to God, disclaiming any goodness or righteousness in ourselves, and fleeing to the alone merits of Christ, and the free grace of God in and through him.

14 I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other:

<sup>h</sup> Job 22. 29. <sup>i</sup> Matt. 23. 12. <sup>j</sup> ch. 14. 11. <sup>k</sup> Jam. 4. 6. <sup>l</sup> 1 Pet. 5. 5, 6. <sup>m</sup> for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Justified ἡ ἰκετιος, we translate, rather than the other; not that the other was at all justified by God; the other was justified by himself only, and those of his party. The publican was justified by God. It followeth, for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, &c. It is another of our Saviour's sentences, often made use of by him, Matt. xxiii. 12, and in this Gospel, chap. xiv. 11. It is applied to the ordinary practice of men, but here to God in the ways of his providence; he resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. The blessed Virgin magnifieth God on this account, chap. i. 51, 52.

<sup>i</sup> Mat. 19. 13. <sup>j</sup> Mark 10. 13. 15 And they brought unto him also infants, that he would touch them: but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them.

16 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for <sup>h</sup> of such is the kingdom of God.

<sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 14. 20. <sup>l</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 2.

17 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein.

See the notes on Matt. xix. 13—15; Mark x. 13—16; where we before met with this piece of history.

18 And a certain ruler asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? none is good, save one, that is, God.

20 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

21 And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me.

23 And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

24 And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

25 For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27 And he said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God.

We have met with this story at large, Matt. xix. 16—26; and with (if not the same) very like to it, Mark x. 17—27; see the notes on both those places. The history is of great use to us, 1. To show how far a man may go, that yet is a great way short of a truly good and spiritual state. He may know that nothing in this life will make him perfectly happy. He may desire eternal life, and salvation. He may go a great way in keeping the commandments of God, as to the letter of them. He may come to the ministers of the gospel to be further instructed. But herein he will fail, he will not come to Christ that he may have life, but fancy he should do something meritorious of it; he doth not aright understand the law, and that there is no going to heaven that way, but by the perfect observation of it, and therefore fancieth himself in a much better state than he is. 2. It instructeth us in this, that there is no coming to heaven by works, but by a full and perfect obedience to the whole revealed will of God. 3. That every hypocrite hath some lust or other, in which he cannot deny himself. This ruler's lust was his immoderate love of the world, and the things thereof. 4. That it is a mighty difficult thing for any persons, but especially such as have great possessions on earth, to get to heaven. 5. As difficult and almost impossible as it may appear to men, yet nothing is impossible with God. He can change the heart of the rich, and incline it to himself, as well as the heart of the poor. The rich man hath more impediments; but be men rich or poor, without the powerful influence of God upon the heart, without his free grace, no soul will be saved.

28 Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

1 Mark 10. 15.

m Matt. 19. 16. <sup>n</sup> Mark 10. 17.

n Ex. 20. 13. 16. 17. <sup>o</sup> Deut. 5. 16.—20. <sup>p</sup> Rom. 13. 9. <sup>q</sup> 2 Epi. 6. 2. <sup>r</sup> Col. 3. 20.

p Matt. 6. 19, 20. <sup>q</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 19.

q Prov. 11. 24. <sup>r</sup> Mat. 19. 23. <sup>s</sup> Mark 10. 23.

r Jer. 32. 17. <sup>s</sup> Zech. 8. 6. <sup>t</sup> Matt. 19. 26. <sup>u</sup> ch. 1. 37.

s Mat. 19. 27.

t Deu. 33. 9.

<sup>11</sup> Job 42. 10.

30 <sup>12</sup>Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

See the notes upon Matt. xix. 27—30, and on Mark x. 28—30. The difficulty is only to reconcile ver. 30 to God's providences. For the everlasting life promised in the world to come, that is matter of faith, and not so much as seemingly contradicted by any providence of God. But how many lose much for Christ, that in this life do not receive manifold more, or a hundredfold! Answ. It is true, if we understood it in specie. But the promise is not so to be interpreted. It is enough, if they do receive much more in valore, in value upon a true and just estimation. And this every sufferer for Christ hath, either, 1. In a joy, and peace, and assurance of God's love, which is a thousand times more. 2. Or at least in a contentment of mind with that state into which the providence of God bringeth them: this also is much more, as any will judge it a happier state never to thirst, than to have much drink to satisfy the appetite.

x Matt. 16.
21. & 17. 22.
& 20. 17.
Mark 10. 37.
y Ps. 22.
1a. 53.

31 ¶ <sup>13</sup>Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

z Matt. 27.
2. ch. 23. 1.
John 18. 28.
Acts 3. 13.

32 For <sup>14</sup>he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on:

33 And they shall scourge him, and put him to death: and the third day he shall rise again.

a Mark 9. 32.
ch. 2. 50.
& 9. 45.
John 10. 6.
& 12. 16.

34 <sup>15</sup>And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

We shall afterward, in the history of our Saviour's passion, see all these things exactly fulfilled, and our Lord here assureth his disciples, that it was but in accomplishment of all that was prophesied concerning the Messiah; nor was it any more than he had told them, chap. ix. 22, and again, ver. 44; Matt. xx. 17—19; Mark x. 32—34. Yet it is said, that they understood none of these things. The words were easy enough to be understood, but they could not reconcile them to the notion of the Messiah which they had drank in, they could not conceive how the Messiah, that should redeem Israel, should die, or be thus barbarously used by those whom he came to redeem, or save. We have great need to consider well what notions we entertain concerning the things of God. All this blindness and unbelief of the disciples was bottomed in the false notion of the Messiah which they had taken up. However, our Saviour thought fit to inculcate them, to prepare them against the offence they might take at them when the providence of God brought them forth. It is good for us to hear, though it be only for the time to come.

b Mat. 20. 23.
Mark 10. 46.

35 ¶ <sup>16</sup>And it came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way side begging:

This blind man was Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, as Mark tells us, chap. x. 46. Matthew mentions two, the other two evangelists but one, as being more famous, either upon his own or his father's account.

36 And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant.

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passed by.

38 And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him, 41 Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight.

42 And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight: <sup>17</sup>thy faith hath saved thee. e ch. 17. 18.

43 And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, <sup>18</sup>glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God. d ch. 5. 26.
Acts 4. 21.
& 11. 18.

See the notes on Matt. xx. 30—34, and on Mark x. 46—52, where this whole history is more fully opened. It is here again very remarkable, how much Christ attributeth to faith: Thy faith hath saved thee, ver. 42, which can be no otherwise understood, than of faith as the condition that was required in the person to be healed, for it is most certain that Christ by his Divine power was the efficient cause of this blind man's healing; but he exerted this Divine power upon that exercise of faith which he discerned in the blind man, whose faith seemeth to be a degree higher than that of the leper's, chap. xvii. 13, who said no more than Jesus, Master. Jesus, thou Son of David, was much more than this. It speaks the blind man's persuasion, that Christ was the Messiah; for it was an uncontrolled tradition amongst the Jews, that the Messiah was to be the Son of David. Christ rewards the least exercises of true faith, but much more the higher exercises of it. It doth not appear that this blind man was fully informed who the Messiah should be, viz. God-man, but so far as he knew he professeth, he calleth Jesus the Son of David.

CHAP. XIX

Christ visiteth Zaccheus the publican, 1—10. The parable of a nobleman who left money with his servants to trade with in his absence, 11—27. Christ rideth in triumph into Jerusalem, 28—40. He weepeth over the city, 41—44; driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple, 45, 46; teacheth daily therein: the rulers seek to destroy him, 47, 48.

AND Jesus entered and passed through Jericho.

Jericho was a very rich city, in the tribe of Benjamin, less than twenty miles distance from Jerusalem, (whither our Saviour was going,) and less than eight miles distance from Jordan: see Numb. xxii. 1. It was the first place which Joshua sent persons to spy out, before he had conducted the Israelites over Jordan, Josh. ii. 1; he took it, chap. vi., and cursed the man that should rebuild it, for he burned it, ver. 24. He prophesied, that he who should go about to rebuild it, should lay the foundation of it in his first-born, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son; which accordingly fell out in Ahab's time, to one Hiel, a Bethelite, 1 Kings xvi. 34. Through this town, or city, which now had been rebuilt many years, our Saviour passeth in his way to Jerusalem.

2 And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the Publicans, and he was rich.

We have had frequent occasions to hint, that the publicans were the gatherers of the public revenue for the Romans. Amongst them there was an order of superior and inferior officers: Zaccheus was the chief of them that were in that commission. And he was rich; which is not to be wondered at, considering his employment; and is particularly mentioned doubtless to magnify the grace of God towards him, of which we shall by and by hear more; as well as to let us know, that though it be a hard thing for a rich man to be saved, yet with God it is possible, as we heard before, as, that though publicans were most of them rapacious and exceedingly given to extortion, and the love of money commonly increaseth with the increase of men's estate, yet Christ can change the heart of such a man, and work it into a contempt of riches, and into a freedom to part with them at the command of Christ, or where they hinder the embraces of him.

3 And he sought to see Jesus who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

All this was but curiosity; he saw a great crowd passing by, and asks what was the matter. The people tell him, that it was Jesus of Nazareth, that famous Prophet, whose fame had filled Judea as well as Galilee. He hath a great curiosity to see him, and runs before to find out a convenient station; but perceiving the crowd was great, and knowing that he was too low of stature to look over all their heads so well as to satisfy himself, he climbeth up upon a sycamore tree, by the way-side in which he knew that he must pass.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to day I must abide at thy house.

I see no ground for their opinion who think that before this time Zacchæus's heart was touched with any love or affection to Christ. The evangelist seemeth to represent Zacchæus before this as a mere stranger to Christ, he sought to see who he was. But Christ's looks are healing looks, there went virtue along with them to convert Zacchæus, though a publican, and to recover Peter, who had denied his Master; but they must be such looks as carried with them a design to do good to souls. Christ looked upon thousands to whom his looks conveyed no spiritual saving grace. He that could heal by the hem of his garment touched, could change a heart by his look. How good a thing it is to be near the place where Christ is, whatever principle brings men thither! provided men come not as the Pharisees used to come, to execute their malice. Zacchæus was brought to the bodily view of Christ out of mere curiosity, but being there he receiveth a saving look from him. How many have had their hearts changed by gospel sermons, who never went to hear the preachers with any such desire or design! Christ's design may be executed in the conversion of sinners, though not ours. He is found of them that seek him not, and of those that inquire not after him. Preparatory dispositions in us are not necessary to the first grace. God can at the same time prepare and change the heart. Zacchæus is the first man we read of to whose house Christ (not asked) invited himself, and in it did more for Zacchæus than he expected. Oh the freeness and riches of Divine grace! which seeketh not a worthy object, but makes the object worthy, and therefore loveth it. What a word was this, Come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house!

6 And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

Curiosity carried Zacchæus up, but love to Christ brought him down; he therefore makes haste to come down, and he receiveth Christ joyfully, glad to entertain such a guest. When Christ cometh to any soul, he never brings any sorrow to it, nor any thing but glad tidings.

7 And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

All here must not be taken for every individual person, that is not to be presumed either of all the inhabitants of Jericho, or, much less, of all that were in Christ's company: amongst others Mary Magdalene was at this time in his company, who had no reason to murmur at that. But of what sort of people were these murmurers? The voice is the voice of Pharisees, who had often quarrelled at Christ for this, and of their disciples; for there were multitudes of the Jews that had drunk in the superstitions of that faction, and were more afraid of keeping company with sinners, than themselves being so; of having fellowship with their excommunicates in their houses, than of having fellowship with their, or greater, works of darkness. Our Saviour had before answered this cavil, he will now come to show them they were mistaken in the man; that he whom they counted a sinner, was a better man than themselves generally were.

8 And Zacchæus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold.

b ch. 3. 14.
c Ex. 22. 1.
1 Sam. 12. 3.
2 Sam. 12. 6.

See here the first effects of Christ's saving looks upon any soul. The soul presently begins to cry out with the prophet, Isa. vi. 5, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Zacchæus is now made sensible of his covetousness, and hardness of heart towards the poor, of his extortion and oppression, and resolves upon an effectual reformation. Christ never looks any soul in the face, but he looks his scandalous sinnings out of countenance. Acts of charity and justice are the first fruits of true repentance. The world, and the love of it, go out of the heart as soon as ever the true love of Christ comes into it; the soul knows that it cannot serve God and mammon. In case of wrong done to others, there can be no repentance, nor (consequently) any remission, without restitution and satisfaction, so far as we know it, and are able. I restore, saith Zacchæus. True love to Christ never giveth him bare measure. God had no where required the giving of half a man's goods to the poor, nor the restoring of fourfold, except in case of theft, of which men were judicially convicted; in case of voluntary confession, the law was but for a fifth part, over and above the principal, as to which a person was wronged, Numb. v. 7. In case an ox were stolen, the thief was to restore fivefold, and in case of a sheep stolen four were to be restored, if the person had alienated it; if it were found alive in his hand, he was to restore double, Exod. xxii. 1, 4. In other cases he was to restore but double, if it came to the sentence of the judge, ver. 9; but in case of a voluntary confession, he was only tied to a fifth part above the principal, and to bring a trespass-offering to the Lord, Lev. vi. 1—6. This was the case of Zacchæus; being touched with the sense of his sin, he voluntarily confesseth, and promiseth the highest degree of restitution. But a true love in the soul to Christ thinks nothing too much to do in the detestation of sin, or demonstration of itself in works which may be acceptable in the sight of God.

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham.

4 Rom. 4.
11, 12, 15.
Gal. 3. 7.
e ch. 13. 16.
f Mat. 18. 11.
See Mat. 10.
G. de 15. 24.

10 For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

It is the opinion of some, that by house is here to be understood Zacchæus and his whole family. Nor can it be denied, but that God, when he poureth out the oil of grace upon the head of a family, maketh some of it to run down to the skirts of his garments. God's covenant was with Abraham and his seed. There is a blessing upon whole nations, and whole families, where the heads of them receive the gospel; but this is not to be extended beyond some gospel privileges, and the liberty of the means of grace. Σωτηρία ἐγένετο (which we translate salvation is come) seemeth to signify much more than this. I had rather therefore interpret this house, the head of this house. Forso much as he also is a son of Abraham. Here again a question ariseth, in what sense these words are to be understood, whether that he were the son of Abraham, as Abraham was the father of the Jewish nation, or as he was the father of the faithful, viz. of all those who believed, or should believe, in Christ. Those who think he was a Jew, suppose that the Romans did employ some Jews in their service, to gather the public revenue, which is not improbable, being no more than is done by all conquerors: they have also to countenance them, 1. That Zacchæus is a name of Hebrew extraction. 2. That his mention of a fourfold restitution seemeth to have reference to the law of fourfold restitution, in case of a sheep stolen, and alienated, Exod. xxii. 1. 3. That the Jews did not charge our Saviour for eating with a person uncircumcised, but a person that was a scandalous sinner. These make these words to be a reason given by our Saviour why he was so kind to Zacchæus, because he also was a son of Abraham, one of the lost sheep of the house of Israel. If I could interpret σωτηρία, the means of salvation, I should incline to this sense also; but taking it to signify saving grace, which brings men to a certainty of salvation, remission of sins, and the justification of the soul of this publican, I cannot but think that by a son of Abraham in this text is meant a true believer, which he might be, and yet be a native Jew also. Though all Israel did not obtain, yet the election amongst them did obtain, Rom. xi. 7. All were not Israel who were of Israel. Neither, (saith the apostle, Rom. ix. 7.) because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children. Nor were they other than Jews to whom Christ said, John viii. 39, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham; and, ver. 44, Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. Our Saviour therefore in saying, Forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham, intendeth much more than that he was a native Jew, (if indeed he were so, for that is not certain,) viz. that he was a believer, a son of Abraham considered as the father of the faithful; a genuine son of Abraham, rejoicing with him at the sight of his day, and believing with him, so as it was imputed to him for righteousness; and salvation is already come in a sure title, though not in actual possession, to every soul that is such a one. For the Son of man (saith he) is come to seek and to save that which was lost. We had the same, Matt. xviii. 11: see the notes on that place.

11 And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he <sup>g</sup> Acts 1. 6. was nigh to Jerusalem, and because <sup>e</sup> they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

We noted before, that Jericho was but a hundred and fifty furlongs from Jerusalem, (which were not twenty miles,) and probably this discourse was upon the way when he was come nearer to it. But the principal occasion of the following parable was, his discerning of the opinion which possessed some of the company which went along with him, that the time was now at hand when the kingdom of God should appear; when Christ would put forth some eminent act of his power, in delivering them from the servitude they were in to the Romans, or in destroying the unbelieving Jews and Pharisees; or when his gospel should take a further place, and prevail in the world beyond what it yet had done. He therefore putteth forth a parable to them, wherein by a familiar similitude he lets them understand, that he was going away from them, but would come again, and then receive the kingdom: that in the mean time he would employ them, as his servants, with his goods, and when he came would take an account what use and improvement they had made of them, and then he would both reward his friends and be revenged on his enemies. The parable followeth.

<sup>h</sup> Mat. 25. 14. <sup>Mark 13. 34.</sup> 12 <sup>b</sup> He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return.

13 And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten || pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 <sup>i</sup> But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the † money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been || faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21 † For I feared thee, because thou || art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, <sup>m</sup> Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. <sup>n</sup> Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26 For I say unto you, <sup>o</sup> That unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

The parable of the talents, which we had, Matt. xxv. 14—30, is of great cognation to this parable, and the doctrine of it in many things is the very same; but the circumstances of that and this relation are so differing, as I cannot think that both Matthew and Luke relate to the same time. I know nothing that hinders, but that our Saviour might twice repeat a parable which in substance is the same. Not to insist upon the examination of the words used in the Greek, (which is a work fit only for critical writers,) for the right understanding of this parable we have three things to do: 1. To inquire what special instruction our Saviour did in this parable intend to those who heard him at that time. 2. Who the persons are, represented in it under the notion of a nobleman and servants; and what the things are, represented under the notion of going into a far country, to receive a kingdom, distributing his goods, &c. 3. What general instructions from it may be collected, which inform us as well as those to whom our Lord at that time spake. The special instructions which our Lord in this parable seemeth by it to have given his disciples were these: 1. That they were mistaken in their notions or apprehensions of the sudden coming of Christ's kingdom in power and glory. He had first a great journey to go, and they had a great deal of work to do. Instead of reigning amongst them, and exalting them, he was going away from them for a long time. 2. That there would be such a manifestation of his kingdom in glory and power, when he should exalt and liberally reward his friends, and severely punish all such as should be his enemies. In order to these instructions, he taketh up this parable, or speaketh to them in the use of this similitude. 3. As to the aptness of it: The nobleman here mentioned was Christ, who shall hereafter be a King in the exercise of power and justice, and distribute eternal rewards and punishments; but in his state of humiliation in which he was when he thus spake to them, was but like a nobleman, a Son of man, though the chiefest of ten thousand. His going into a far country, signifieth his going from earth to heaven. To receive a kingdom; a kingdom of glory, honour, and power at the right hand of the Father. His returning signifies his coming again to judge the world at the last day. His calling his servants, and delivering to them ten pounds, signifieth his giving gifts unto men, when he should ascend up on high;

<sup>i</sup> Mine, here translated a pound, is twelve ounces and an half; which according to five shillings the ounce is three pounds two shillings and sixpence.

† John 1. 11.

‡ Gr. either, and so ver.

§

<sup>g</sup> Mat. 25. 21.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 16. 10.

<sup>m</sup> 2 Sam. 1. 16. Job 15. 6. Matt. 12. 37.

<sup>n</sup> Matt. 25. 26.

<sup>o</sup> Mat. 13. 12. & 25. 23. Mark 4. 25. ch. 8. 18.

gifts of several natures, but all to be occupied, used in a spiritual trade, for the advantage of our common Lord. Not that he giveth to all alike, (which it is manifest he doth not,) for every passage in a parable is not answered in the thing which it is brought to represent or express. The citizens hating him, and sending a message after him, &c., signifies that the generality of the world are haters of Christ, and demonstrate their hatred by their refusal of his spiritual government and jurisdiction. His returning, and calling his servants to an account, signifies, that when Christ at the last day shall come to judge the world, he will have an account of every individual person, how they have used the gifts with which he hath intrusted them, whether they be longer time of life, more health than others, riches, honours, or more spiritual gifts, such as knowledge, utterance, wit, &c., or any trusty places or offices they have been in. The different account the servants brought in, signifies that men do not equally use the gifts with which the Lord blesseth them; some use them well, some ill; some bring honour and glory to God by the use of them, and that some in one degree, and some in another. Some bring him no honour or glory at all. The master's answer to them upon their accounts, lets us know that every man shall be rewarded according to his work. There will be degrees in glory, (though we cannot well open them,) as well as of punishments. The unprofitable servant's excuse for himself, signifies the great itch of proud human nature to excuse itself, and lay all the blame of its miscarriages on God, either his severity, or his not giving them enough, &c. The king's answer, ver. 22, 23, lets us know, that sinners will be found to be condemned out of their own mouths: at the last day, God will be found a righteous God, and man will be found to be the liar. What the Lord further adds, ver. 24, 26, lets us know God's liberality in rewarding his saints at last. What he saith ver. 27, concerning his enemies, assures us, that although God spareth men and women a long time, so long as while his Son is in the far country, while the heavens must contain him; yet in the day of judgment a most certain final ruin will be their portion. Hence we may easily gather what instructions are offered us in this parable. 1. That the state of Christ, when he shall come to judge the world, will be a far more glorious state than it was while he was here upon the earth. He was here in the appearance of a nobleman, but he shall then appear as a king. 2. That all the good things which we have in this life are our Lord's goods, put in trust with us to be used for his honour and glory. 3. That it must be expected that in the world there should be a great many rebels against Christ and his kingdom, a great many that shall say, We will not have this man to rule over us. 4. That some make greater improvements than others of what God intrusteth them with for his honour and glory, and some make no improvement at all of them. 5. That Christ, when he cometh to judge the world, will have a strict account how men have used his goods, their time of life, or health, their capacities, honours, riches, trusts, parts, &c. 6. That those shall have the highest reward in glory who have made the highest improvements; but those who have made improvements in any proportion shall have their reward. 7. That proud and wretched sinners will think in the day of judgment to wipe their own mouths, and lay all the blame of their miscarriages on God. 8. That this is their folly, God will condemn them from their own vain pleas. 9. That in the day of judgment unprofitable creatures will, besides the loss of those rewards which they might have received from God, have all their little satisfactions taken from them, in the enjoyments of which they dishonoured God. 10. That though proud sinners here oppose the law of God revealed to them, and will not suffer Christ to reign over them; yet his power they shall not be able to resist, they shall at the last day be slain before Christ's face, and become his footstool. He shall break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potters vessel, Psal. ii. 9; cx. 1; and who shall then deliver them out of his hand?

28 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

Jerusalem (as we before noted) stood upon a hill; those that went to it therefore ascended. This going before the company was noted by Mark, chap. x. 32; here again Luke taketh notice of it; to let us know certainly with what alacrity our Saviour managed the business of man's redemption. He knew that he was at this time to be the sufferer, and to die at Jerusalem; to show that he was freely willing, he leadeth the way.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples, 30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, The Lord hath need of him. See the notes on Matt. xxi. 1—6, and Mark xi. 1—6: we have discoursed there of Bethphage and Bethany, and whatever occurreth in this history needing any explication.

35 And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36 ¶ And as they went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38 Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: "peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

See the notes on Matt. xxi. 7—9; Mark xi. 7—10; both which evangelists (Mark most fully) describe this great triumph.

39 And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples.

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out.

How peevish were these wretched Pharisees, to envy our Saviour this little triumph, of coming into the city upon an ass's colt, with garments under him instead of a saddle, or any stately furniture and trappings, and attended by a company of poor people throwing their garments and boughs of trees in the way! yet these they would have silenced. Our Saviour's reply, If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out, seemeth to have been a proverbial speech used amongst them, to signify a thing which could not be. This day was accomplished God's decree in that particular passage of providence, concerning our Saviour, which could not be defeated.

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it,

Those who of old blotted out this sentence, as thinking that weeping was not becoming Christ's perfection, seem to have forgotten that he was perfect man, and a sharer in all the natural infirmities of human nature (if weeping upon the prospect of human miseries deseriveth no better name than an infirmity, being an indication of love and compassion). Those who think that it was idle for him to weep for that which he might easily have helped, seem to oblige God to give out of his grace, whether men do what he hath

Mat. 21. 1.
Mark 11. 1.

r 2 Kings 9.
13. Mat. 21.
7. Mark 11.7.
John 12. 14.
s Matt. 21. 8.

t Pa. 118. 26.
ch. 13. 35.
u ch. 2. 14.
Eph. 2. 14.

x Hab. 2. 11.

y John 11. 35.

commanded them, and is in their power to do, yea or no. Christ wept over Jerusalem as a man, compassionating these poor Jews, with respect to the miseries he saw coming upon them; as a minister of the gospel, pitying the people to whom he was primarily sent.

42 Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

Speeches which are the products of great passion, are usually abrupt and imperfect: If thou hadst known, that is, Oh that thou hadst known, or, I wish that thou hadst known. We are said in Scripture not to know more than we believe, are affected with, and live up to the knowledge of. They had heard enough of the things which concerned their peace, Christ had told them to them, but they attended not to them, they believed them not, and so cared not to direct their lives according to any such notions. At least in this thy day; the time in which I have been preaching the gospel to thee (for so I had rather interpret it, than of this last journey of our Saviour's to Jerusalem). This was properly the Jews' day, for the first preachers of the gospel spent all their time and pains amongst them. The things which belong unto thy peace, that is, to thy happiness, for so the term often signifies, and it referreth as well to the happiness of the outward as of their inward man. But now they are hid from thine eyes: God will not suffer his Spirit always to strive with man, because he is but flesh, not fit to be always waited on by the great Majesty of heaven. First men shut their eyes against the things that do concern their peace, then God hideth them from them. No man hath more than his day, his time of grace: how long that is none can tell: if he sleepeth out that, his case is desperate, past remedy.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall *cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, 44 And *shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and <sup>b</sup>they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; <sup>c</sup>because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

It is a plain prophecy of the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies, which came to pass within less than forty years after. The cause of that dreadful judgment is assigned, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation. God's visitations are either of wrath or mercy; of wrath, Exod. xxxii. 34; Lev. xxvi. 16; Jer. xv. 3; of mercy, Jer. xxix. 10. It is plain that our Saviour useth the term here in the latter, not the former sense; and that by God's visitation of this people here, is meant his visiting them with his prophets, by John the Baptist, and by himself. Their not knowing of it (here intended) was their not making use of it, not receiving and embracing the gospel. The contempt of the gospel is the great cause of all those miseries which come upon people in this life, or shall come upon them in that life which is to come.

45 <sup>d</sup>And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46 Saying unto them, <sup>e</sup>It is written, My house is the house of prayer: but <sup>f</sup>ye have made it a den of thieves.

We have met with this before more fully: see the notes on Matt. xxi. 12, 13; Mark xi. 15—17.

47 And he taught daily in the temple. But <sup>g</sup>the Chief Priests and the Scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him, 48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people <sup>h</sup>were very attentive to hear him.

This our Saviour's preaching daily must be understood of a very few days, for it appeareth from John xii. 1, that he came to Bethany but six days before the passover; now upon the passover day he died; but for the intermediate time, it is plain from the other evangelists that he was wont to spend the day time at Jerusalem in the temple, and at night to return to Bethany. The chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him, only they stood in a little awe of the people, who were very attentive to hear him.

CHAP. XX

Christ silenceth those who questioned his authority, 1—8. The parable of the vineyard let out to wicked husbandmen, 9—18. The chief priests and scribes seek matter against him: his reply to their insidious question concerning paying tribute to Cæsar, 19—26. He confuteth the Sadducees concerning the resurrection, 27—40. He propoundeth a difficulty concerning the character of Christ, 41—44. He warneth his disciples against the ambition and hypocrisy of the scribes, 45—47.

AND *it came to pass, that on one of <sup>a</sup>Mat. 21. 23. those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the Gospel, the Chief Priests and the Scribes came upon him with the elders,

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, <sup>b</sup>by what authority doest thou these things? or who is he that gave thee this authority? <sup>b</sup>Acts 4. 7. & 7. 27.

We have along the history of the gospel observed, that the scribes and Pharisees took all advantages imaginable against our Saviour: failing in all their acts, they now come to question his authority, which seemeth not so much to have respect to his preaching, as to his act in casting of the buyers and sellers out of the temple; for as to preaching, they seem, by the history of Scripture, to have given a great liberty, especially if any had the repute of a prophet.

3 And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and answer me:

4 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men; all the people will stone us: <sup>c</sup>for they be persuaded that John was a prophet. <sup>c</sup>Mat. 14. a. & 21. 26. ch. 7. 29.

7 And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

See the notes on Matt. xxi. 24—27; Mark xi. 29—33. The substance of our Saviour's answer is this: From whence had John his authority? he preached and baptized; who gave him his authority? They had sent much such another message to John, John i. 19—22. Was John's authority ordinary or extraordinary? It is plain that he had no authority from them, for then they would not have sent to him to know who he was. He must therefore have it from heaven. Now if they had allowed John's call extraordinary, why should not they allow Christ's to be such, to whom John gave so large a testimony, and who confirmed his extraordinary mission by miraculous operations, which we do not read that John ever did? Besides, the Pharisees saw that if they allowed John's mission to be extraordinary, and from heaven, they had obviously exposed themselves to a check for not believing what he said; they therefore refuse to make any answer, and Christ refuseth also to satisfy them.

9 Then began he to speak to the people this parable; <sup>d</sup>A certain man <sup>d</sup>Mat. 21. 33. Mark 12. 1. planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

10 And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13 Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be our's.

15 So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.

17 And he beheld them, and said, <sup>e Ps. 118. 22.</sup> <sup>Matt. 21. 42.</sup> What is this then that is written, <sup>e</sup> The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?

18 Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but <sup>f</sup> on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

<sup>f</sup> Dan. 2. 34, 35. <sup>g</sup> Mat. 21. 44. We met with this parable at large both in Matt. xxi. 33—44, and in Mark xii. 1—11. Its obvious scope is to let them know, that God in righteous judgment, for the Jews' abusing the Lord's prophets, John the Baptist, and himself, who was in a few days to be killed by them, would unchurch and destroy them, and raise up to himself a church amongst the Gentiles; and that this was no more than was prophesied of, Psal. cxviii. 22.

19 ¶ And the Chief Priests and the Scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them, <sup>g</sup> Mat. 22. 15. 20 <sup>g</sup> And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

There is nothing in these verses, but what we before met with, and is opened in the notes on Matt. xxi. 45, 46, or Mark xii. 12, 13. They let us see as in a glass the spirit and genius of wicked men filled with malice against the gospel. They are continually seeking to destroy such as have any relation to Christ, and, to effect their ends, they will judge no means unfair; and their great art is to represent them as dangerous persons to the civil government: so as if good men find the same things still, they have this to comfort them, that the disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

<sup>h</sup> Mat. 22. 14. <sup>h</sup> Mark 12. 14. 21 And they asked him, saying, <sup>h</sup> Master, we know that thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God ¶ truly:

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23 But he perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye me?

<sup>i</sup> See Matt. 18. 28. 24 Shew me a ¶ penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cæsar's.

25 And he said unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his answer, and held their peace.

This piece of history we have likewise met with, both in Matt. xxii. 16—22, and Mark xii. 14—17: see the explanation of it there.

27 ¶ <sup>i</sup> Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, <sup>i</sup> which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him, <sup>i</sup> Mat. 22. 23. <sup>i</sup> Mark 12. 18. <sup>k</sup> Acts 23. 6, 8.

28 Saying, Master, <sup>l</sup> Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. <sup>l</sup> Deut. 25. 5.

29 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

32 Last of all the woman died also.

33 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36 Neither can they die any more: for <sup>m</sup> they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, <sup>n</sup> being the children of the resurrection. <sup>m</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 42, 49, 52. <sup>n</sup> 1 John 3. 2. <sup>n</sup> Rom. 8. 23.

37 Now that the dead are raised, <sup>o</sup> even Moses shewed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for <sup>p</sup> all live unto him. <sup>p</sup> Rom. 6. 10, 11.

See the notes on Matt. xxii. 23—32, and on Mark xii. 18—27, where all the passages in this piece of history are fully opened. By equal unto the angels, in ver. 36, we must not understand in all things, but in the thing mentioned: 1. The number of the elect shall be perfect, so there shall be no need of marrying, or giving in marriage, to multiply the number of men. 2. There shall be no more marriages amongst men than amongst angels; all live unto God, ver. 38. Though Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were dead at the speaking of those words, yet they were not so in God's eye, who was determined to raise them up in the last day, and who with the same eye beholds things past, present, and to come. But see more in the notes before mentioned.

39 ¶ Then certain of the Scribes answering said, Master, thou hast well said.

40 And after that they durst not ask him any question at all.

The scribes were the Jewish doctors of the Pharisees' faction, and enemies to the Sadducees; they applaud our Saviour's answer: thus as the Herodians before, (in the case of the tribute,) so the Sadducees here, are put to silence. He will now put the scribes and Pharisees to silence.

41 And he said unto them, <sup>q</sup> How say they that Christ is David's son? <sup>q</sup> Mat. 22. 42. <sup>q</sup> Mark 12. 35.

42 And David himself saith in the book

r Ps. 110. 1. of Psalms, "The LORD said unto my Lord, Acta 2. 34. Sit thou on my right hand,

43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his son ?

The answer had been easy if the scribes and Pharisees, who (Matthew saith) were there also, had owned Christ to be the Son of God. But this they did not own, and so, as Matthew tells us, chap. xxii. 46, No man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions. Thus Christ nonplussed all his adversaries.

s Matt. 23. 1. 45 ¶ "Then in the audience of all the Mark 12. 38. people he said unto his disciples, t Matt. 23. 5. 46 'Beware of the Scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and "love u ch. 11. 43. greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

x Mat. 23. 14. 47 "Which devour widows' houses, and for a shew make long prayers: the same shall receive greater damnation.

We have met with all this before, chap. xi. 43; Matt. xxiii. 6, 7; Mark xii. 38—40. See the notes on those texts.

CHAP. XXI

Christ valueth the poor widow's two mites above all the larger offerings of the rich. 1—4; foretelleth the destruction of the temple, 5, 6; the signs and calamities that should precede and accompany it, 7—24; and what should happen at the time of the Son of man's coming, 25—33. He exhorteth to watchfulness and prayer, 34—38.

a Mark 12. AND he looked up, and saw the rich
41. men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two ¶ mites.

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto b 2 Cor. 8. 12. you, <sup>b</sup>that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:

4 For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

We met with this piece of history, Mark xii. 41—44. Mark telleth us, that Christ was sitting right over against the treasury. For other things necessary to be known to understand this piece of history, see the notes on Mark xii.

c Mat. 24. 1. 5 ¶ "And as some spake of the temple, Mark 13. 1. how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said,

6 As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which d ch. 19. 44. <sup>d</sup>there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

Matthew and Mark say, that some of his disciples spake these words to him, and received this answer, as he was going out of the temple. For the goodly stones which the disciples admired, we are told that there were some of them forty-five cubits long, five in depth, and six in breadth. The gifts here mentioned are called in the Greek, ἀναθήματα, not ἀναθήματα, nor δώρα. The latter word, δώρα, signified any gifts, money or plate, &c., which men voluntarily offered. Ἀναθήματα signified things accursed, or devoted to God, as all the goods of Ai were, Josh. vii. But this word signified such gifts or presents made to God, as might be hung up and exposed to open view. Our Lord, to take off his disciples' eyes from those gay and stately things, prophesieth the utter ruin of the temple, to that degree that one stone should not be left upon another; which how it was afterwards fulfilled within less than forty years, see the notes on Matt. xxiv. 1, 2, and on Mark xiii.

1, 2. God by that providence not only destroying the vain confidence of the Jews, who took their temple to be an asylum, or sanctuary, for them from the providence of God, or his justice rather; but also severely punishing them for their profanation of his holy place; and also lets them know that the time was come, when God would put an end to all types of the Messiah, and also to all that worship, which could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; but stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation, Heb. ix. 9, 10. See further the notes on Matt. xxiv. 1, 2, and Mark xiii. 1, 2.

7 And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?

Mark saith, Peter, James, John, and Andrew asked him privately. Matthew brings two things more within the compass of their question, viz. What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Our Saviour answereth this question from ver. 8 to ver. 32. The most of what he saith we have before met with in Matthew and Mark. It is the harder to distinguish betwixt the signs Christ giveth of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the day of judgment, because the signs of both are generally the same, and most divines think that God in the destruction of Jerusalem intended to give a specimen of the general conflagration, and ruin of the world at the last day; so as signs of the same kind with those seen before Jerusalem was destroyed, shall be seen before the great and terrible day of our Lord's coming to judge the world.

8 And he said, "Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; ¶ and the time draweth near: go ye not there-fore after them.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, and on Mark xiii. 5, 6. This happened, and was abundantly fulfilled, before the destruction of Jerusalem, and probably will receive a further fulfilling in the latter end of the world. But before the destruction of Jerusalem it was, as Josephus assureth us, fulfilled in many, particularly, 1. In one Theudas, whether the same mentioned by Gamaliel, Acts v. 36, or some other of that name, is uncertain. 2. An Egyptian sorcerer, mentioned Acts xxi. 38. 3. One Dositheus, a Samaritan. 4. Another in the time of Festus's government. 5. Simon Magus is also reckoned for one, Acts viii. 9. He boasted he was the great power of God. Others also reckon one Menander, a disciple of Simon Magus. It is certain there were many who arrogated to themselves the name of the Messiah, to countenance their heading of a faction. There have also been many since the destruction of Jerusalem, and probably will be many more before the end of the world, 2 Tim. iv. 3; 2 Pet. ii. 1; 1 John ii. 18.

9 But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by.

10 'Then said he unto them, Nation <sup>t</sup> shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, and Mark xiii. 8. Time is the best interpreter of prophecies: what shall be seen of these before the end of the world we are yet to observe, but the destruction of Jerusalem is past many hundreds of years since. What commotions were before that, we must learn out of civil historians, who tell us of divers. Josephus telleth us of an insurrection made by those of Judea against the Samaritans, Romans, and Syrians; and of the Romans against the Jews, to the destruction of twenty thousand Jews: as also of those of Scythopolis, who destroyed of the Jews thirteen thousand; of the Ascalonites, who destroyed of them two thousand five hundred; of those of Alexandria, who destroyed of them fifty thousand; of those of Damascus, who slew of them ten thousand. They

e Matt. 24. 4.
Mark 13. 5.
Eph. 5. 6.
2 Thes. 2. 3.
Or, and,
The time,
Matt. 2. 2.
& 4. 17.

t Matt. 24. 7.

tell us also of many more seditious, during the government of Felix, Festus, Albinus, Florus, &c. The text speaks further of earthquakes; the Greek word signifieth no more than concussions and shakings, but historians tell us of several earthquakes that happened (though not in Judæa) before the destruction of Jerusalem; one at Rome, in Nero's time; another in Asia, which destroyed three cities, &c. For Jamnes, we read of one in Scripture prophesied of by Agabus, Acts xi. 28. Twelve years after Christ's death, there was another in Greece; and four years after, at Rome. For the fearful sights, and great signs from heaven, Josephus tells us of a comet, which for a year together in the form of a sword pointed over the city; a light that shined in the night in the temple, and made it as bright as if it had been noon-day. He tells us also of a neat beast bringing forth a lamb in the midst of the temple; of the strange opening of the gates of the temple; of visions of chariots and armed men; of a voice heard in the temple, inviting those who were there to be gone; as also of a man (whom he names) who for seven years and five months together before the siege went about crying, Woe, woe to Jerusalem! and could with no punishments (which they thought fit to inflict) be restrained, &c. These were great signs both from heaven and earth.

g Mark 12.9.
Rev. 2. 10.

h Acts 4. 3.
R 5. 18, & 12.
4. & 16. 24.
1 Acts 25. 32.
k 1 Pet. 2. 12.

12 <sup>a</sup>But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and <sup>b</sup>into prisons, <sup>c</sup>being brought before kings and rulers <sup>d</sup>for my name's sake.

We have all this justified from holy writ, Acts iv. 3; v. 18; xii. 4; xvi. 24. What of this shall be seen before the end of the world, time must show; though the prophecies of holy writ speak enough of that also.

1 Phil. 1. 29.
2 Thes. 1. 5.

13 And <sup>e</sup>it shall turn to you for a testimony.

That is, your persecution shall turn to you for a testimony: for a testimony against your adversaries; so as they themselves shall be brought by your confession of me to own me as the true Messiah; and their cruelty, which they mask under the vizard of religion, shall be openly detected, and it shall at last appear to all the world, that the judgments of God are just, for the cruelty they have exercised upon you. And to you it shall be for a testimony; you shall have an ampler occasion of testifying, both before kings and great men, that I am the true Messiah. Your faith, patience, and constancy shall be made more manifest; you shall also testify that my kingdom is not of this world, and that my disciples care not to expect a terrene felicity. They shall also be a testimony to you, that you expect not your portion and felicity in this, but in another life.

m Mat. 10. 19.
Mark 13. 11.
ch. 12. 11.

14 <sup>n</sup>Settle <sup>o</sup>it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer:

15 For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, <sup>p</sup>which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

See the notes on Matt. x. 19, 20; Mark xiii. 11. We must not think that our Saviour by this forbids us what is naturally impossible for us to avoid, that is, the forming of those words first in our thoughts which we speak, nor yet a prudent thinking beforehand what we should speak; but an anxious thinking what we should speak, such a thinking as should argue a distrust in God to carry us through with that testimony which he calleth us forth to give. For, saith he, I will give you a mouth and wisdom. So he promised Moses, that he would be with his mouth, and teach him what to say, Exod. iv. 12, 15. And he tells Ezekiel, that he would open his mouth, chap. iii. 27. Here he promiseth the disciples a mouth and wisdom, that is, such wisdom as should guide their tongues when they should be called out to testify for him. This was made good to Stephen, Acts vi. 9, 10; the Libertines, Cyrenians, Alexandrians, those of Cilicia and Asia, were not able to resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spake. * Thus it fared with Peter and John, Acts iv. 8—13. By resist we must understand conquer, or victoriously resist. The enemies of the gospel have been always opposing and resisting the patrons and witnesses of and for the truth, but never yet made a conquest: let any indifferent reader but read, and judge the accounts we have of the conflicts betwixt the papists and the protestants in the beginning of the Reformation, or betwixt the papists and the martyrs in Queen Mary's days in this nation, and judge on whose side there was most Scripture and reason. This promise hath been fulfilling from Christ's time even to this day. It is true, the enemies have been able to kill the persons of Christ's disciples; they stoned Stephen, killed James with the sword, Acts vii. 12; they crucified Peter and Andrew, stoned Philip, banished John into Patmos, flayed Bartholomew, beheaded Matthew, and various ways destroyed many in the first and most furious times, and have slain many thousands since; but the truths which they preached prevailed.

16 <sup>q</sup>And ye shall be betrayed both by <sup>r</sup>parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and <sup>s</sup>friends; and <sup>t</sup>some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And <sup>u</sup>ye shall be hated of all <sup>v</sup>men for my name's sake.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 9, 10, and Mark xiii. 12, 13.

18 <sup>w</sup>But there shall not an hair of your head perish.

It is a proverbial speech, signifying that they should have no hurt or damage by any thing which their enemies should do against them. When at the last you come to cast up your accounts, you shall find you have lost nothing, and your enemies shall also find that they have gained nothing.

19 In your patience possess ye your souls.

Patience is either passive, seen in a quiet, free, and courageous suffering those evils which God will please in his providence to order us for our portion; or active, seen in a quiet believing, waiting for, and expectation of what God hath promised. Possess your souls, that is, yourselves; do not decline suffering for my name's sake, but live in the exercise of Christian courage and fortitude until the Lord will please to release you. In this sense James expounds this phrase, chap. i. 4, But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. Others say, possess your souls is the same with, save your souls. So it seems to be expounded by Matt. xxiv. 13, and Mark xiii. 13, But he that shall endure to the end shall be saved.

20 <sup>x</sup>And when ye shall see Jerusalem <sup>y</sup>compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them which are in Judæa flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22 For these be the days of vengeance, that <sup>z</sup>all things which are written may be fulfilled.

After our Saviour's ascension, the seditious amongst the Jews were so many, and they rebelled so often against the Romans, during the governments of Felix, Festus, Albinus, and Florus, that the Romans resolved wholly to destroy them, and to that purpose Titus Vespasian was sent with an army against them, who took the city. Our Saviour foresaw, that when that time should come there would be some vain persons full of stomach for their liberties, that would be prophesying their deliverance, and encouraging them to hold out to the last. He warneth his disciples to give no credit to them, for God would certainly deliver the city into their hands; therefore he adviseth them, as soon as they should see the city besieged, they should all shift for themselves as fast as they could, for there was no true ground to hope for any deliverance. The time of God's vengeance was come, when God would most certainly fulfil against that place whatsoever he had foretold against it.

23 <sup>aa</sup>But woe unto them that are with <sup>ab</sup>child, and to them that give suck, in those days! for there shall be great dis-treas in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations : and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, * until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

<sup>x</sup> Dan. 9.27.
† 12. 7.
Rom. 11. 25.

Josephus tells us, that in the wars which ended in the taking of Jerusalem, by the famine and the sword there perished one million one hundred thousand Jews, and ninety-seven thousand were carried into captivity. Jerusalem ever since that time hath been trodden down by the Gentiles, the Romans, Saracens, Franks, and is at this day trodden of the Turks. Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Some from this text think, that there shall be a time when the Jews shall repossess the city of Jerusalem. Whether any such thing can be from hence gathered, I doubt. Some here by the times of the Gentiles understand all that time betwixt the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world. Others, the time when the gospel should be carried over all the world. But their opinion seemeth to me most probable, who interpret it of the time of God's patience with the Gentiles. As the Jews have filled up their measure, and now the wrath of God is come upon them to the uttermost, so the Gentiles shall have their time also. The Romans have had their time, the Turks now have their time; but their glass is also running out, there will be a fulfilling of their time too, and whether then another sort of barbarians shall possess it, or the Jews or Christians shall recover it, time must interpret.

<sup>y</sup> Mat. 24.29.
Mark 13. 24.
<sup>z</sup> Pet. 3. 10,
12.

25 ¶ And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring;

26 Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth : * for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

<sup>a</sup> Mat. 24.29.

We may easily imagine, that this was eminently fulfilled in the siege of Jerusalem, that men's hearts failed them for fear; and for prodigies, we are told of enough, both by Josephus and Tacitus, l. 5 : the latter tells us, that armies were seen fighting in the air with glistering armour, and the temple seemed all as on fire with lightning; he also tells us of the voice heard, and throwing open of the doors of the temple, before mentioned; but tells us few were affected, but built hopes upon a tradition they had, That now was the time ut valesceret Oriens; which was true enough, but not in their sense. But what is spoken here certainly relates to the day of judgment, before which prodigious things will be seen, 2 Pet. iii. 10, 12; and it follows,

<sup>a</sup> Mat. 24.30.
Rev. 1. 7.
<sup>b</sup> 14. 14.

27 And then shall they see the Son of man * coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 30; Mark xiii. 26.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for <sup>b</sup> your redemption draweth nigh.

<sup>b</sup> Rom. 8.
19, 23.

Matthew seemeth to expound this, chap. xxiv. 31; so doth Mark, chap. xiii. 27. Both speak to the same sense: And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. This is certainly to be understood of the day of judgment, when the saints shall be glorified as the sons of God by adoption, and obtain the redemption of the body, Rom. viii. 23.

<sup>c</sup> Mat. 24.32.
Mark 13. 28.

29 * And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees;

30 When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

33 * Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

We had this same parable both in Matthew and Mark. See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 32—35, and Mark xiii. 28—31.

34 ¶ And * take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

35 For * as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 * Watch ye therefore, and <sup>b</sup> pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and <sup>i</sup> to stand before the Son of man.

I take the 34th verse to be a good exposition of the term watch, ver. 36. Avoid sin industriously, in a prospect of my coming to judgment: for sin is compared to sleep, Rom. xiii. 11; Eph. v. 14; and as he that watcheth doth not only wake, but setteth himself designedly to forbear sleep, in order to some end; so he who keepeth the spiritual watch must set himself designedly to avoid sin, upon a prospect of Christ's coming, and the uncertainty of it. Particularly he cautioneth his disciples against luxury and worldly-mindedness. The first he expresseth under the notions of gluttony and drunkenness, which are two eminent species of it. The latter, under the notion of the cares of this life; not necessary and provident cares, but superfluous and distracting cares. These things he presseth them to avoid, lest they should be surprised by Christ's coming, as he tells them the most of the world would be. He further exhorteth them to pray always; the sense of which precept we showed largely in our notes on chap. xviii. 1. He further presseth both these duties in those words, That ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass; those that should come to pass at or before the destruction of Jerusalem, or afterward; and to stand before the Son of man, that is, in the last judgment; for, The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous, Psal. i. 5.

37 * And in the day time he was teaching in the temple; and <sup>1</sup> at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

In these two verses our evangelist letteth us know how Christ spent those few days which he had yet to live. In the day time he was in the temple preaching; in the evening he was on the mount of Olives praying; to teach all those, who as under-shepherds derive from him, who is the true and chief Shepherd, how they should spend their time, preaching and praying. Though the scribes and Pharisees and Sadducees, and the chief of the Jews, maligned and despised him, yet many of the people paid him a due respect, and came early in the morning to hear him. In the world's reception and entertainment of Christ, that of the apostle was verified, Not many rich, not many wise, &c.; but the poor of this world hath God chosen.

CHAP. XXII

The chief priests and scribes conspire against Christ, 1, 2. Judas covenanteth to betray him, 3—6. The apostles sent to prepare the passover: Christ eateth it with them, 7—18; and instituteth his last supper, 19, 20. He covertly point- ath out the traitor, 21—23; checketh the ambitious strife of his disciples, and promiseth them a share in his kingdom, 24—30. He telleth Peter of Satan's desire to sift him; but that his faith should be supported; and yet he should thrice deny him, 31—34. He adviseth his disciples to provide necessaries and a sword, 35—38. His agony and prayer in the garden, 39—46. He is betrayed, 47—49; healeth a servant of the high priest, whose ear was cut off, 50—53; is led to the high priest's house; Peter thrice denieth him, 54—62. Christ is scornfully used, 63—65; and brought before the council, where, confessing himself to be the Son of God, he is pronounced guilty of blasphemy, 66—71.

a Mat. 26. 2. NOW *the feast of unleavened bread Mark 14. 1. drew nigh, which is called the Passover.

b Ps. 2. 2. 2 And <sup>b</sup>the Chief Priests and Scribes John 11. 47. sought how they might kill him; for they Acts 4. 27. feared the people.

See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 1—5, and on Mark xiv. 1, 2.

c Mat. 26. 14. 3 ¶ *Then entered Satan into Judas Mark 14. 10. surnamed Iscariot, being of the number John 13. 2, 27. of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and communed with the Chief Priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

d Zech. 11. 12. 5 And they were glad, and <sup>d</sup>covenanted to give him money.

6 And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them || in the absence of the multitude.

e Mat. 26. 17. 7 ¶ *Then came the day of unleavened Mark 14. 12. bread, when the Passover must be killed.

8 And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the Passover, that we may eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the Passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13 And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the Passover.

f Mat. 26. 20. 14 *And when the hour was come, he Mark 14. 17. sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 14—19, and on Mark xiv. 10—16.

g ch. 14. 15. 15 And he said unto them, || With desire Acts 10. 41. I have desired to eat this Passover
Rev. 19. 9. with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, <sup>g</sup>until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

h Mat. 26. 29. 18 For <sup>h</sup>I say unto you, I will not Mark 14. 25. drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

i Mat. 26. 26. 19 ¶ *And he took bread, and gave Mark 14. 22. thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: <sup>k</sup>this do in remembrance of me.

k 1 Cor. 11. 24. 20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, <sup>l</sup>This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.

21 ¶ <sup>m</sup>But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.

22 <sup>n</sup>And truly the Son of man goeth, <sup>o</sup>as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

23 <sup>p</sup>And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 20—30, where is opened whatsoever Luke hath that is not in the other evangelists.

24 ¶ <sup>q</sup>And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

Luke only taketh notice of this strife at the time of their being in the guest-chamber. Such a strife we read of, Matt. xviii. 1; xx. 25, 26; Mark ix. 33; and in this Gospel, chap. ix. 46; by which it is apparent, that they had been more than once arguing this point. But yet most interpreters think that it is here placed by Luke out of order and some translate tylvero in this text, there had been, not, there was; and indeed we can hardly think so uncharitably of the apostles, as to imagine of them, that immediately after their receiving, first the passover, then the Lord's supper, their thoughts should be taken up with things of this nature, much less that they should discourse of any such subjects as these; especially also considering what our Saviour had told them, that he was betrayed into the hands of sinners. Something of our Saviour's answer, pressing upon them brotherly love, and mutual serviceableness each to other, was very proper to this time, which our Saviour (though spoken before) might at this time repeat, and Luke prefatorily to it might take notice of this contest in this place.

25 *And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

26 *But ye shall not be so: <sup>r</sup>but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27 *For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but <sup>s</sup>I am among you as he that serveth.

See the notes on Matt. xx. 25—28. The sum is, our Saviour hereby teacheth all his disciples (his ministers especially) to avoid affectation of rule and dominion, as that which became heathens rather than Christians, and the kings of the Gentiles rather than the ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ. This text giveth no countenance to the levelling of all orders of men. Magistracy is an ordinance of God, and ought to be upheld. Order also in the church is to be observed, for God is the God of order; but no minister of Christ ought to affect great titles, nor to exercise a dominion or lordship. Our work is to feed the flock of God, taking the oversight of them, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock, 1 Pet. v. 2, 3. Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy, 2 Cor. i. 24. That the ministers of Christ may not have titles given them, speaking honour and reverence due to them, I do not know. But the reason is obvious why they should not affect them to be fond of them; for pride is a vain and vicious affection, and more culpable in them than others. Their works are but a ministration to the church, in putting the laws of Christ relating to it in execution, and it is their greatest honour to be humble. Nor doth this at all degrade a minister of Christ, for even Christ himself, while he was upon the earth, was not as one that sat at meat, but as one that served.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in <sup>t</sup>my temptations.

1 1 Cor. 10. 16.

m Ps. 41. 9.
Mat. 26. 21.
23. Mark 14.
16. John 13.
21, 26.
n Mat. 26. 24.
o Acta 2. 23.
& 4. 28.

p Mat. 26. 22.
John 13. 22,
25.

q Mark 8. 34.
Luke 9. 46.

r Mat. 20. 25.
Mark 10. 42.

s Mat. 20. 26.
1 Pet. 5. 3.
t ch. 9. 48.

u ch. 13. 37.

x Mat. 20. 28.
John 13. 13,
14. Phil. 2. 7.

y Heb. 4. 15.

1 Mat. 24. 47.
 ch. 12. 32.
 2 Cor. 1. 7.
 2 Tim. 2. 12.
 a Matt. 4. 11.
 ch. 14. 16.
 Rev. 19. 9.
 b Pa. 49. 14.
 Matt. 19. 28.
 1 Cor. 6. 2.
 Rev. 3. 21.

29 And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

These verses seem to contain (though in a few more words) the substance of what we met with Matt. xix. 28. There they are spoken as an answer to Peter, speaking on the behalf of himself and the rest of the apostles, who had forsaken all to follow Christ. Christ tells them there, that those which had followed him, in the regeneration when the Son of man should sit on the throne of his glory, should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. That time which our Lord there calleth the regeneration, is the time when he had been giving a new birth to the church, reforming the world by his doctrine and holy example. That time he here calleth the time of his temptations, by which he meaneth trials, afflictions, and persecutions, as the word is often taken in holy writ, Gal. iv. 14; James i. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. iii. 10. To those of the disciples (they were eleven of the twelve) he promiseth a kingdom, a state of great honour and dignity, as his Father had appointed him; and therefore they might satisfy themselves with the titles and qualities of ministers and servants while they were here, and be content to meet with troubles and temptations, as he had done, to hunger and thirst, &c.; when that time came which he had appointed, they should then eat and drink at his table, they should sit also upon thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Terms expressive of that rest and satisfaction, that glory, honour, and dignity, which the saints in God shall in heaven be possessed of.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat:

c 1 Pet. 5. 6. d Amos 9. 9.
 e John 17.
 9. 11, 15.
 f Pa. 51. 13.
 John 21. 15,
 16, 17.

32 But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

Our Lord directeth his speech to Peter, as one who (as it will by and by appear) had a greater confidence of himself than the rest expressed, and as one who he foresaw would fall more foully than the rest; though it appears, that in his speech he had a respect to them all, for the word you is in the plural number. The devil had a mind to disturb them all by his temptations (that is here called sifting). Christ hath his fan in his hand, and will sift his church, but his sifting is to purge his floor; he sifts a particular soul, to purify it from its lusts and corruptions; but Satan sifteth the soul and the church merely to give them trouble, and to keep them from rest and quiet by continual motion and agitation. This we are all concerned to take notice of, that we may both be continually prepared for the time of our siftings, and bless God who doth not satisfy Satan's desires to sift us; for he hath the same mind to winnow us now, that he had to sift Peter and the rest of the apostles. But (saith our Saviour) I have prayed that thy faith fail not. There is a total and a partial failing of faith. Peter's faith did fail in part; but the seed of God did yet abide in him, his faith did not wholly fail: so will it be with the faith of every true disciple of Christ. In hours of great temptation and trial, their faith may, as to some degrees, fail, but totally it shall not: they may be perverted, but they shall again be converted. As the apostles saith of the bodies of the saints, Rom. viii. 10, 11, And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you: may also be said of their souls. They have in them a body of death, and they may in an hour of great temptations fail, and their gracious habits may seem to die. But if the Spirit of God dwellth in the soul, he will again quicken their souls by his Spirit which dwelleth in them. And when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren; that is, when God hath recovered thee from thy fall, and made thee to see thy error, make an improvement of thy recovery out of the snare of the devil, by admonishing others to take heed of too much confidence in themselves, and encouraging them not to despair, though they also may fall into temptation; but that the grace of God shall be sufficient for them.

33 And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

1 Mat. 26. 34.
 Mark 14. 30.
 John 13. 38.

This is more largely recorded by Matthew, chap. xxvi. 33—35, and by Mark, chap. xiv. 27—30. See the notes on those places.

35 And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing.

1 Mat. 10. 9.
 ch. 9. 3. &
 10. 4.

36 Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.

37 For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, I And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end.

1 Is. 53. 12.
 Mark 15. 28.

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough.

Those who interpret ver. 35, 36, as a precept of our Saviour's imposing a duty upon his disciples, or a counsel concerning the providing arms which they might use for the protection and defence of themselves, will not only find a difficulty to reconcile their notion of it to several other precepts, and the will of God declared by the apostles' practice, who never went about by force and arms to defend themselves in the first plantation and propagation of the gospel; but also to reconcile it to the last words of our Saviour, who said, when his disciples told him they had two swords, It is enough; which he would never have said, if he had intended any such thing; for two swords was much too little to have conquered that multitude of adversaries which the disciples of Christ were to meet with. Our Saviour doth doubtless speak in a figure, and all that he intendeth amounteth but to this: Hitherto I have been with you, and you have had my special protection; though you went out without a purse or a scrip, yet you have wanted nothing; though you went without a sword, yet none did you any harm. But the time is now come, when the posture of your affairs will be much altered; your friends will be few, your enemies many, therefore you stand concerned to make as good preparation as you can do in those things that are consistent with the general precepts that I have given you. The tragedy will begin with me; for what is written of me must now be accomplished, Isa. liii. 12, He was numbered with the transgressors. I must be brought before magistrates as a common malefactor, and hanged on a cross betwixt two thieves. And the things concerning me shall shortly have an end: you will next come upon the stage, and therefore prepare what in you lieth for the performance of your part.

39 ¶ And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

1 Mat. 24. 36.
 Mark 14. 32.
 John 18. 1.
 1 ch. 21. 37.

Both Matthew and Mark say, he went to a place called Gethsemane; but that makes no difference, for whether Gethsemane significeth a village, or a garden, or a valley, all agree it was at the foot of the mount of Olives. It was a place to which our Saviour had used to go ever since he came to Jerusalem, and lay in his way to Bethany. He went thither to pray, and his disciples followed him.

40 And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

1 Mat. 6.
 13. & 25. 41.
 Mark 13. 28.
 ver. 46.

When he came to the mount of Olives, he first setteth his disciples to that work, which at this day was proper for them. Pray that ye enter not into temptation; that, if it be the will of God, you may be delivered from such an hour of trial as I am entering into; or, at least, that you may not be overcome by it. That my trials which you will presently be witnesses unto, and your own which you shall hereafter meet with, may have no power upon you to withdraw you from your work in the publication or profession of my gospel. The other two evangelists make mention of our Saviour's taking Peter, and James, and John with him, yet more privately. Luke mentioneth not that, but goeth on.

41 <sup>n Mat. 26. 36. Mark 14. 35.</sup> And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, Whether from the eight, or from Peter, James, and John also, the evangelist doth not tell us; but some are of opinion, that he took the three disciples along to join with him in prayer, from whom some account might be given of the substance of his prayer, which followeth. I rather think he was alone.

<sup>† Gr. willing to remove.</sup> 42 Saying, Father, if thou be † willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless <sup>o John 5. 30. & 6. 38.</sup> not my will, but thine, be done.

We have a larger account given us of our Saviour's prayer, both by Matthew and Mark, Matt. xxvi. 39—46, and Mark xiv. 35—42. See the notes there.

<sup>p Mat. 4. 11.</sup> 43 And there appeared <sup>p</sup> an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

<sup>q John 12. 37. Heb. 5. 7.</sup> 44 And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

We have formerly opened these verses in our notes on Matt. xxvi. 44—46, where we took them in, as being a part of the history of our Saviour's praying before his passion.

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, <sup>r ver. 40.</sup> 46 And said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

The relations which Matthew and Mark give us are both more particular than that given us by Luke, to which we refer the reader. Luke speaketh but of his praying once; Matthew saith he prayed thrice. Luke mentioneth nothing of his withdrawing with Peter, James, and John from the other eight; Matthew and Mark both mention it. Luke maketh mention of an angel's appearing to him, of the agony in which he was, and his sweating drops as it were of blood; which neither Matthew nor Mark take notice of: yet we must not think, that either any one of the evangelists, or all of them together, give a perfect account of all the words our Saviour used in these prayers, only they tell us the sum of them in different words; but see the annotations on Matt. xxvi. and Mark xiv., where we have fully considered whatsoever is said by any of the evangelists upon this argument.

<sup>s Mat. 26. 47. Mark 14. 43. John 13. 3.</sup> 47 ¶ And while he yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?

See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 47—49, and Mark xiv. 43—45.

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

<sup>t Mat. 26. 51. Mark 14. 47. John 13. 10.</sup> 50 ¶ And one of them smote the servant of the High Priest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him.

No other evangelist but John hath this passage perfect. What he hath we have opened in our notes on Matt. xxvi. 51, 52, because it tendeth to complete that part of the history there discoursed, concerning Christ's being apprehended. John relates it with more circumstances, telling us that it was Peter who drew the sword, and that his name whose ear was cut off was Malchus, and relateth some further words used by our Saviour to Peter, which we shall further consider in their places. This rash act of Peter might have cost him dear, for it made a kinsman of Malchus take such notice of him, as he was very near being accused by him, John xviii. 26. Swords are dangerous things for us to use, until God puts them into our hands. Peter ought not only to have asked his Master if he should smite with the sword, but also to have staid his hand till Christ had given him an answer.

<sup>n Mat. 26. 55. Mark 14. 46.</sup> 52 Then Jesus said unto the Chief Priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.

See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 55, and Mark xiv. 48, 49. It speaketh a great degree of rage and malice against our Saviour, that so great men, as the chief of the priests and the elders, should come out at midnight, in the company of the officers and soldiers, to apprehend Christ. From these verses it appeareth that some of them were there in the height of their zeal.

<sup>y Mat. 26. 57. Mark 14. 49.</sup> 54 ¶ Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the High Priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

<sup>z Mat. 26. 58. John 18. 16.</sup> 55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him.

57 And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

<sup>aa Mat. 26. 71. Mark 14. 69. John 18. 25.</sup> 58 And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

<sup>ab Mat. 26. 73. Mark 14. 70. John 18. 26.</sup> 59 And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilæan.

60 And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

<sup>ac Mat. 26. 75. Mark 14. 72.</sup> 61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crew, thou shalt deny me thrice.

<sup>ad Mat. 26. 74. 75. John 18. 26.</sup> 62 And Peter went out, and wept bitterly. See the whole history of Peter's denial of his Master, and of his repentance, in our notes on Matt. xxvi. 69—75, where we have opened what passages relating to it are in Mark or this evangelist.

<sup>ae Mat. 26. 57. 58. Mark 14. 65.</sup> 63 ¶ And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophecy, who is it that smote thee?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

Concerning these abuses offered to our Saviour, see the notes on Matt. xxvi. 67, 68, and Mark xiv. 65.

66 ¶ And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the Chief Priests and the Scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying,

67 Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe:

68 And if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go.

69 Hereafter shall the Son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God.

70 Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am.

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth.

Our blessed Lord before his death passed two trials or examinations. The one before the Jewish sanhedrim, whose proper province it was to try such as were accused as false prophets, or blasphemers. This was a kind of ecclesiastical court. The high priest was the chief judge in it, and we are told that they used to sit in his palace. The other was before Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea at that time; he principally took cognizance of criminal things, such especially as concerned the peace of the country, considered as a part of the Roman empire. These verses give an account only of the former. Blasphemy was the crime they charged upon him. We cannot from any one evangelist have a full account of either of them. In our notes on Matt. xxvi., from ver. 57 to 68, we have fully considered what all the evangelists say. See the notes on that place.

CHAP. XXIII

Jesus is accused before Pilate, who sendeth him to Herod, 1—7. Herod, disappointed in his expectations, mocketh him, and sendeth him back, 8—11. Herod and Pilate are made friends, 12. Pilate, willing to release Jesus, is prevailed on by the clamours of the people to release Barabbas, and give Jesus to be crucified, 13—25. Being led to the place of execution, Jesus biddeth the women who lamented him to weep rather for themselves and their children, 26—31. He is crucified between two malefactors, 32, 33; prayeth for his enemies, 34; is scoffed at, 35—38; reviled by one of the malefactors, but confessed by the other, to whom he promiseth a place in paradise, 39—43. The unusual darkness, and rending the veil of the temple, 44, 45. Christ crieth unto God, and expieth, 46. The centurion's confession of him, 47—49. Joseph of Arimathea begetteth his body and burieth it, 50—54. The women prepare spices, against the end of the sabbath, 55, 56.

AND the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ a King.

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him and said, Thou sayest it.

4 Then said Pilate to the Chief Priests and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5 And they were the more fierce, saying,

He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilæan.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

8 And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9 Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing.

10 And the Chief Priests and Scribes stood and vehemently accused him.

11 And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate.

12 ¶ And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

13 And Pilate, when he had called together the Chief Priests and the rulers and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him:

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him.

16 I will therefore chastise him, and release him.

17 (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.)

18 And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas:

19 (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

20 Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them.

21 But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.

23 And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the Chief Priests prevailed.

24 And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required.

25 And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will.

The history of our Saviour's examination and trial before Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea, is recorded by all four evangelists, nor can it be distinctly and perfectly understood without the comparing together of what they

g Mat. 27. 1.
h Acts 4. 26.
i See Acts 22.

i Mat. 26. 65.
Mark 14. 61.

k Mat. 26. 64.
Mark 14. 62.
Luk. 1. 3.
& c. 1.

l Mat. 26. 64.
Mark 14. 62.
m Matt. 26.
65. Mark 14.
65.

g ch. 3. 1.

h ch. 9. 9

i Matt. 14. 1.
Mark 6. 14.

k Lk. 53. 3.

l Acts 4. 27.

m Matt. 27.
23. Mark 15.
14. John 18.
38. & 19. 4.

n ver. 1, 2.

o ver. 4.

p Mat. 27. 26.
John 19. 1.

q Mat. 27. 15.
Mark 15. 6.
John 18. 39.

r Acts 3. 14.

a Mat. 27. 2.
Mark 15. 1.
John 18. 28.

b Acts 17. 7.

c See Matt.
17. 27. & 22.
21. Mark 12.
17.

d John 18.

e Mat. 27. 11.
1 Tim. 6. 13.

f 1 Pet. 2. 22.

s Mat. 27. 26.
Mark 15. 15.
John 18. 16.

t Or, accusat-ed, Ex. 23. 2.

all say, which we did in our notes on Matt. xxvii., from ver. 1 to 26, where our reader will find all such passages opened as occur in any of the evangelists about it, and stand in need of explication. See the notes there. The high priests, and the chief priests, and the elders had before determined our Saviour guilty of death, for blasphemy. They stoned Stephen in that case, Acts vii. 59, without carrying him before the Roman governor at all, that we read of in that history; how came it to pass that they did not so by our Saviour, but make a double work of it? 1. Some think that that was rather done in a tumult, though he was carried before the council, Acts vi. 12, than in a regular judicial way; for conquerors in those times, though they sometimes allowed the conquered nations courts of judicature, wherein they judged in ordinary matters according to their own laws, and had judges of their own nations, yet ordinarily reserved capital causes to the cognizance of governors constituted by them; and this seemeth confirmed by John xviii. 31, where when Pilate said, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law, we read that the Jews replied, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. 2. Others think that they had a power to put to death, but it was not lawful for them to put any to death upon the feast day: it was now the first day of unleavened bread. But the former seemeth more probable. 3. Or was it because they had sedition and treason to lay to his charge, which were crimes cognoscible only before the Roman governor? and possibly they were willing enough (knowing the reputation our Saviour had with the people) to lay the odium of his death upon Pilate, rather than take it upon themselves. 4. Whatever were the causes, it is most certain that it could be no otherwise, that all righteousness might be fulfilled. Not a word of what our Saviour said could pass away. He had foretold, Matt. xx. 18, 19; Mark x. 33, 34; Luke xviii. 32, 33, that he should not only be betrayed to the chief priests and scribes, and by them be condemned to death, but that he should be delivered to the Gentiles, to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him; and indeed that way of putting to death by crucifying could only be done by the Gentiles, and that death he was to die. In the history of our Saviour's examination before Pilate is observable, 1. How much more justice and equity our Saviour found from a heathen, than from the Jewish churchmen: the latter condemn him without any proof, after all attempts of subornation, and seek to destroy him right or wrong; Pilate useth all endeavours to deliver him and set him at liberty. 2. How desperate the hatred is that growth upon the account of religion in the hearts of wicked men; they prefer a person guilty of the highest immoralities and debaucheries, viz. sedition and murder, before the most innocent person that ever lived, who differed only from them in some points of religion, and those chiefly relating to traditions and ceremonies; but indeed he interpreted the will of God more strictly than their lusts would suffer them to interpret it, and lived another kind of life than they lived. Strictness and holiness of doctrine and life is that which enrageth the men of the world against the preachers and professors of the gospel. But see the notes on Matt. xxvii. more fully.

26 And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 32, and Mark xv. 21.

27 ¶ And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29 ¶ For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.

30 ¶ Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.

31 ¶ For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

What is in these verses is only found in this evangelist; but being part of what happened in the way, while our Saviour was leading to his cross, we have before opened what is here in the notes on Matt. xxvii. 32—34. They are another prophecy of the dreadful calamities which happened about forty years after this, at the destruction of Jerusalem.

32 ¶ And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place, which is called ¶ Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

Mark saith here, The scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. We met with this before, both in Matthew and Mark. See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 33, 38, and also on Mark xv. 27, 28.

34 ¶ Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

35 And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar, 37 And saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself.

38 ¶ And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 ¶ And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

40 But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

44 ¶ And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour.

45 And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst.

46 ¶ And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 35—50, and on Mark xiv. 24—37. This part also of the history of our Saviour's passion is best understood by a comparing together what all the evangelists say, which we have before done in our notes on Matthew, so as we shall only observe some few things from it as here recited. And the people stood beholding. And

1 Mat. 27. 32.
Mark 15. 21.
See John 19.
17.

1 Ps. 2. 19.
Hos. 10. 8.
Rev. 6. 16.
& 9. 6.

1 Prov. 11.
31. Jer. 23.
28. Ezek. 38.
47. & 21. 3, 4.
1 Pet. 4. 17.

1 Lu. 23. 12.
Matt. 21. 33.

1 Mat. 27. 33.
Mark 15. 22.
John 19. 17,
18.
1 Or, the place of a skull.

1 b Mat. 5. 44.
Acts 1. 60.
1 Cor. 4. 12.
c Acts 3. 17.
d Mat. 27. 35.
Mark 15. 24.
John 19. 23.

1 e Pa. 29. 17.
2 ezech. 12. 10.
1 Mat. 27. 39.
Mark 15. 29.

1 g Mat. 27. 37.
Mark 15. 26.
John 19. 19.

1 h Mat. 27. 44.
Mark 15. 32.

1 i Mat. 27. 45.
Mark 15. 33.

1 j Or, lend.

1 k Mat. 27. 51.
Mark 15. 38.

1 l Ps. 31. 6.
1 Pet. 2. 23.
17. Matt. 27.
50. Mark 15.
37. John 19.
30.

the rulers also with them derided him, ver. 35. Matthew saith, chap. xxvii. 41, the chief priests, scribes, and elders were there mocking. So saith Mark, chap. xv. 31. How doth malice and hatred for religion's sake, not only outshow men's reason, but also all their moral virtue! and make nothing accounted uncharitable, unjust, or indecent to them, into whom this devil hath once entered. To say nothing of the injustice and indecencies obvious to every eye, which these men showed upon our Saviour's examination and trial: it was now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, the day following the passover night; or, as some think, the preparation both for the weekly sabbath and for the passover, though the most judicious interpreters be of the first opinion: one of them it was, be it which it would. If atheism and irreligion had not been at the height amongst this people, had it been possible that the high priest, and the chief of the priests, and the rulers of the Jews, should have spent this day, the whole time, from break of the day till noon, in accusing or condemning Christ; and then have spent the afternoon in mocking and deriding him on the cross as he was dying, breaking all laws of humanity and decency, as well as religion? Admitting Annas and Caiaphas were not there, yet some of the chief of the priests, the scribes, and the elders were certainly there; and behaving themselves there more rudely and indecently than the common people. The people were there beholding him. These were there mocking and deriding a dying person. But as we say in philosophy, corruptio optimi est pessima; so we shall find it true, that men who are employed in sacred things, if the true fear of God be not in them, to make them the best, they are certainly the vilest and worst of men. We read of no rudenesses offered to our Saviour dying, but from the scribes, chief priests, rulers, and soldiers. These verses also afford us great proof of the immortality of the soul; or otherwise the penitent thief could not that day have been with Christ in paradise, as Christ promised, ver. 43. Nor would Christ have committed his soul into his Father's hand, if it had been to have expired with the body, and have vanished into air. For other things which concern this part of the history of our Saviour's passion, see the notes before mentioned on Matt. xxvii. 35—50.

<sup>n Mat. 27. 54.</sup>
<sup>Mark 15. 39.</sup> 47 <sup>a</sup> Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned.

<sup>o Ps. 38. 11.</sup>
<sup>Mark 27. 55.</sup>
<sup>Mark 15. 40.</sup>
<sup>See John 19. 25.</sup> 49 <sup>o</sup> And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.

For a perfect knowledge of all those things which did happen after our Saviour's nailing to the cross, till he died, and was taken down to be buried, all the evangelists must be consulted. We have made a collection of them in our notes on Matt. xxvii. 51—56, to which the reader is here referred. This passage about the centurion is taken notice of both by Matthew and Mark; only they say he said, Truly this was the Son of God. Luke saith that he said, Certainly this was a righteous man. Possibly the sense is the same, and the centurion by the Son of God did not mean the Son of God by eternal generation, but one highly favoured of God, a righteous man, and very dear to God, and highly beloved of him; for it must be by a very extraordinary revelation and impression if he had so early a faith in Christ as God blessed for ever. I think Mr. Calvin, on Matt. xxvi. 54, expounds it well, Non vulgarem esse hominem, sed divinitus excitatum statuit. The centurion determined that Christ was no ordinary person, but one stirred up by and sent of God. It is observable, that Christ had a testimony from all orders of men almost, except the scribes, and priests, and Pharisees. Pontius Pilate and Herod declared him innocent. Pilate's wife acknowledged him a righteous person. The thief on the cross testified he had done nothing amiss. Judas the traitor confesseth he had betrayed innocent blood. The centurion owneth him to be no ordinary man, but a righteous man, the Son of God. The multitude always owned him: they see they are now run down; they smite their breasts, say nothing, but depart. Only those that were to have been the teachers of others are blinded and hardened to their ruin.

50 ¶ <sup>p Mat. 27. 57.</sup>
<sup>Mark 15. 43.</sup>
<sup>John 19. 38.</sup> And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just:

51 (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;) he was of Arimathæa, a city of the Jews: <sup>q Mark 15. 43. ch. 8.</sup> who also himself waited for the kingdom of God.

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53 <sup>r Mat. 27. 59.</sup>
<sup>Mark 15. 46.</sup> And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 57—60.

54 And that day was <sup>s Mat. 27. 62.</sup> the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.

Greek, σάββατον ἐπέφωσκε, the sabbath shined. What preparation was here intended, whether to the weekly sabbath of the Jews, (that it was most certainly,) or to the passover also, which some will have to have been this year put off to that day, because of the concurrence of the weekly and the annual feast, I shall not determine, though the most judicious interpreters skilled in the Hebrew writings, think the passover this year was kept in its season, the night before. And the sabbath, that is, the seventh day, drew on. The Greek word signifies shined, the propriety of which term hath cost critics some pains to make out, for it rather began to be dark than lightsome, their sabbath beginning after the setting of the sun. Some think the word referred to the evening star, which began to shine. Others, that it referred to a lamp or candle, which they were wont to set up, they call it luminare discriminationis, the light of discrimination, which being set up in their several families, the sabbath was accounted to be begun. Others think it referred to the following day. But there need not much labour in the case, for by the same reason that it is said, the evening and the morning made the sabbath day, the sabbath might be said ἐπέφωσκεν (that is, to begin) when it began to be dark, not taking the word in a proper, but in a metaphorical sense.

55 And the women also, <sup>t ch. 8. 2.</sup> which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and <sup>u Mark 15. 47.</sup> beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned, and <sup>x Mark 16. 1.</sup> prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day <sup>y Ex. 20. 10.</sup> according to the commandment.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 61. It is Beza's observation upon these verses, That Christ, being opposed by the devil and all his instruments, being now dead, leaveth two or three poor women, as it were, in the front of the battle, intending within a very short time, without much ado, to triumph over all these terrible adversaries.

CHAP. XXIV

Christ's resurrection is declared by two angels to the women that came to the sepulchre, who report it to others, but are not believed, 1—11. Peter visiteth the sepulchre, 12. Christ appeareth to two disciples going to Emmaus, 13—35; and to the apostles, eating before them, and explaining the Scriptures concerning himself, 36—48. He promiseth them the Holy Ghost, 49, and ascendeth into heaven, 50—53.

NOW <sup>a Mat. 28. 1.</sup>
<sup>Mark 16. 1.</sup>
<sup>John 20. 1.</sup> upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, <sup>b ch. 23. 56.</sup> bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joseph were the two women that took up their seat right over against the sepulchre, to see where Christ was laid, Matt. xxvii. 61; Mark xv. 47. They had bought spices some time of that day after they knew he must die, or else they bought them immediately after his burial, as they went home, for they rested on the sabbath day. They had now got some others into their society, and came very early upon the first day of the week, (see the notes on Matt. xxviii. 1, as to the particular time,) intending to show their last act of love to their friend by embalming his body.

<sup>c</sup> Matt. 26. 2. <sup>Mark 16. 4.</sup> 2 ° And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

The stone which Joseph had rolled to the mouth of the sepulchre, when he had laid in the body, Matt. xxvii. 60, and the Jews had sealed, ver. 66, and which, as they came walking, they were so troubled about, how they should get it removed, Mark xvi. 3. How it came to be rolled away Matthew telleth us, chap. xxviii. 2.

<sup>d</sup> ver. 22. <sup>Mark 16. 5.</sup> 3 ° And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

Probably when they entered in they saw no angels, for one may reasonably suppose, that if they had they would hardly have adventured to enter in; but at their coming out, being satisfied that the body was not there, the angels made themselves visible to them; for it followeth,

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, <sup>e</sup> behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

<sup>f</sup> John 20. 12. <sup>Acts 1. 10.</sup> 5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye || the living among the dead?

<sup>g</sup> Or, him that lieth. <sup>f</sup> Matt. 16. 21. & 17. 23. <sup>Mark 8. 31. & 9. 31. ch. 9. 22.</sup> 6 He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee,

7 Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

<sup>g</sup> John 2. 22. 8 And ° they remembered his words, These two men were two angels in human shape. See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 5—7.

<sup>h</sup> Mat. 28. 8. <sup>Mark 16. 10.</sup> 9 <sup>h</sup> And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 8. 3. 10 It was Mary Magdalene, and <sup>1</sup> Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

<sup>h</sup> Mark 16. 11. ver. 25. 11 <sup>h</sup> And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

<sup>1</sup> John 20. 3. 6. 12 <sup>1</sup> Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 8—10, but more fully on John xx. 2—9, who repeateth this piece of history more largely than the rest. It is plain that scarce any of the disciples gave credit to the first relation of the women; but yet, it being near the city, Peter and John thought it worth the while to go and see. For though Peter alone be mentioned here, yet John is mentioned, John xx. 3—5, under the notion of that other disciple; and he is said to have outrun Peter, and to have come first to the sepulchre. But concerning that part of the history relating to the resurrection, we shall reserve ourselves till we come to John xx. We now pass on to a piece of history relating to the evidencing of Christ's resurrection, which is neither touched by Matthew nor by Luke. Mark toucheth it shortly, chap. xvi. 12, 13, After that he appeared in another form to two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. And they went and told it unto the residue; neither believed they them. We shall now hear Luke giving us a more full and perfect account.

13 ¶ <sup>m</sup> And, behold, two of them went <sup>n</sup> that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

Who those two were is variously guessed; that the name of the one was Cleopas, appeareth from ver. 18. Some will have the other to have been Luke, but he in the beginning of his Gospel distinguisheth himself from eyewitnesses, chap. i. 2. Some will have it to have been Nathanael; others will have it to have been Simon, from ver. 34, and 1 Cor. xv. 5. But these things are so uncertain, that all the instruction we can learn from them is the vanity and uncertainty of traditions. This Emmaus was from Jerusalem about sixty furlongs, which make seven miles and a half, according to our computation.

14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

There is nothing more ordinary, than for persons walking and riding upon roads to make the present news of the time the subject of their discourse. There had great things happened in Jerusalem, the death of our Saviour was such; and those things which attended his death were very extraordinary; and it is not at all to be wondered that a discourse of them should fill every mouth, especially every disciple's mouth.

15 And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, <sup>n</sup> Jesus himself drew near, and went with <sup>o</sup> them. <sup>n</sup> Matt. 18. 20. ver. 26.

He overtook them upon the way, and joined himself to their company. It is a good thing to be discoursing of Christ, it is the way to have his presence and company with us.

16 But ° their eyes were holden that they should not know him. <sup>o</sup> John 20. 14. & 21. 4.

God by his providence restrained their eyes, that though they saw a man, yet they could not discern who he was. We may learn from hence that the form or figure of Christ's body after his resurrection was not changed. His body had the same dimensions, the same quantity, colour, and figure, and was in itself a proper object for human eyes; for otherwise there had been no need for their eyes to be held. From hence also we may learn the influence which God hath upon all our members and senses, and how much we depend upon God for a daily power to exercise our natural faculties. Our Lord had no mind that these two disciples should at first discern who he was, that he might draw out their following discourses, and from them take occasion to prove from Scripture the certainty of his resurrection. From this text we may gather, how hard the Lutherans are put to it to maintain the real presence of the body of Christ, wherever the sacrament of the Lord's supper is administered; for this they must maintain, that although the body of Christ after his resurrection was the same that was crucified, and so obvious to sense, yet he had not only a power to make it insensible and invisible, which we grant, but that he hath also a power to multiply it, and make it in one and the same instant to be in so many places as his supper is administered in; and also that he willeth it at the same time to be imperceptible by any human senses in all those places: for it is apparent from hence, that it was not at all times imperceptible; it might at this time have been seen, had not the disciples' eyes been held, that they could not know him.

17 And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

Not that he, from whom the secrets of no hearts are hidden, did not know what they were discoursing about, but that he had a mind to hear them repeated from them, that from their repetition of them he might take the better advantage to instruct them.

18 And the one of them, <sup>p</sup> whose name was Cleopas, answering said unto him, <sup>p</sup> John 19. 25.

Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19 And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people:

The things which had lately happened in Jerusalem were so many, and so unusual, that the disciples wonder that any one coming from Jerusalem should ask, What things? they therefore ask him if he were a mere stranger in Jerusalem, coming from some other country, or from some remoter parts of Judea or Galilee? or, if he were the only man who had been unconcerned in what was the common discourse both of the town and country? Still our Saviour draws out the discourse from them, by asking them, What things? They tell him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, a Prophet mighty in deed and word; in which phrase Stephen celebrated Moses, Acts vii. 22; that is, one who did not only in an extraordinary manner reveal the will of God unto men, but also did many great and mighty works, and lived a most holy and most exemplary life and conversation, so as that he was not only highly favoured of God, but in great repute and estimation also amongst the people.

20 And how the Chief Priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done.

It is from hence evident, that as yet they neither had a true notion of Christ as God-man in one person, nor yet of the Messiah, but still remained in an opinion of a temporal deliverance to be effected for the Jews by the Messiah, when he should come. The words also showed a great weakness in the disciples' faith as to Christ; they speak as if they were quite out of breath, and their faith began to fail. We were, say they, once of the mind, and maintained some hope, that this Jesus of Nazareth had been he whom God had designed for the Messiah, and now it is the third day since these things were done. This mention of the third day is a good argument to prove that these were some old disciples of Christ, who had taken notice of his promise, or prophecy, that he should rise again the third day, chap. xviii. 33. They ought to have had patience till night, and to have considered, that though the third day were begun, yet it was not yet past.

22 Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;

23 And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24 And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

It is plain from the relation of these two disciples, that they had whatsoever might conduce to a moral suasion. They had the revelation of the word, from the mouth of Christ himself. They had evidences from the women, from the apparition of angels, from some among themselves, that his body was not there. The angels said he was risen. Why do they hesitate then? why do they not believe? Is the fault in the perverseness of their wills? had they no mind to believe, that the thing they had hoped, longed, waited for, was true? Certainly there was nothing they more desired. Let the patrons of the power of man's will to believe, or perform any actions spiritually good, tell us (if they can) what could hinder these disciples' actual believing the resurrection of Christ, but the impotency of their wills, God not yet pleasing to influence and assist their wills actually to believe what they had the greatest propensions and inclinations imaginable to have believed.

25 Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken:

26 Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?

27 And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself.

By our Saviour's form of reprehending his disciples, we may both learn, 1. That it is not every saying, Thou fool, but a saying of it from a root of hatred, malice, and anger, which our Saviour makes to be a breach of the sixth commandment, Matt. v. 21, 22. Our Saviour's reprehension of them was out of a principle of love, and a root of good will to them. 2. That the best of us are very slow of heart to believe what cometh to us upon the mere credit of a Divine revelation. It is also observable from what we have, ver. 27, that Moses and the prophets are not to be rejected by Christians; they also have much concerning Christ; out of them Christ instructeth these two disciples in the things concerning himself.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further.

29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

I do not understand how some conclude from hence the lawfulness of dissembling, or telling a lie, in some cases, because the evangelist saith our Saviour made as though he would have gone further, and did not; for without doubt our Saviour had gone further if the disciples had not been urgent with him to have staid: nor did he stay long there, as we shall hear by and by.

30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight.

Some would have this bread to be sacramental bread, as if our Lord at this time celebrated his supper; and some of the papists are mightily zealous for that interpretation, thinking that they have in it a mighty argument to justify their lame administration of it in one kind (for here is no mention of the cup at all); but they do not consider, that this text will prove (if it be taken with relation to the supper) more than they would have it; as, 1. That priests may consecrate without wine, which themselves will not grant, though they say that, both elements being consecrated, the people sufficiently partake if they share but in one. 2. It will also prove that a priest may consecrate without using those substantial words, This is my body. But it is a most improbable thing, that our Saviour coming just out of his journey should fall upon his administration of this ordinance. The text is certainly to be meant of bodily bread, which our Saviour never took without a previous blessing of it, Matt. xiv. 19. How their eyes were opened the evangelist tells us. Some think they knew him by his form of blessing. It is a wonder then they did not know him before by his style in three or four hours' discourse by the way. Others think they knew him by taking upon him the office of the master of the feast, to bless the table, and to carve to the guests. But all this is vain. He withdrew the veil from their eyes, which alone hindered their discerning him before, for the object was visible, only the medium of their sight was indisposed. And he vanished out of their sight. Our Saviour had now obtained his end, viz. to satisfy them that he was indeed risen; now he disappeareth, for that he had a power to make his body imperceptible to the disciples' senses is out of doubt.

q Matt. 21.
11, ch. 7. 16.
John 3. 2. &
4. 19. & 6. 14.
Acts 2. 22.
r Acts 7. 22.

* ch. 23. 1.
Acts 13. 27,
28.

t ch. 1. 68.
& 2. 38.
Acts 1. 6.

u Mat. 28. 8.
Mark 16. 10.
ver. 9, 10.
John 20. 18.

x ver. 12.

y ver. 46.
Acts 17. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 11.
r ver. 45.
a Gen. 3. 15.
& 22. 18. &
28. 4 & 49. 10.
Num. 21. 9.
Deut. 18. 15.
b Pa. 16. 9.
10. & 22. 9.
132. 11.
Is. 7. 14. &
9. 6. & 40. 10.
11. & 50. 6. &
58. Jer. 23.
6. & 33. 14.
15. Ezek. 34.

23. & 37. 25. Dan. 9. 24. Mic. 7. 20. Mal. 3. 1. & 4. 2. See on John 1. 45.

c See Gen. 32.
28. & 42. 7.
Mark 6. 48.

d Gen. 19. 3.
Acts 16. 15.

e Mat. 14. 19.

f Or, ceased to be seen of them. See
ch. 4. 30.
John 8. 55.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?

There was a mighty difference, no doubt, betwixt Christ's preaching and his ministers': he preached as one who had authority, not as the scribes, not as ordinary ministers, but with more majesty and power; but as to the saving efficacy of his words, that depended upon his will; where he pleased to put forth such efficacious grace, there his words became effectual; where he did not, they were not so: Christ preached in the hearing of hundreds, who yet continued unbelievers, and perished in their unbelief. There is a great deal of difference also between one minister's preaching and another's; some kind of preaching of itself makes men's hearts to freeze, others make them to burn; but where preaching makes our heart to burn within us, Christ throws in the coal, which the best preacher doth but blow up: only the Spirit of God is pleased to work (as Erasmus saith) secundum quod nactus est organon, according to the instrument it worketh by, and to concur with rational and spiritual means in order to rational and spiritual ends. But wherever any soul is baptized with fire at hearing a sermon, it is also baptized with the Holy Ghost. Christ will not always cure blind eyes with clay and spittle, though he did it once. These were disciples before the fire was kindled in their hearts; Christ's preaching did but blow it up. We ought so to speak in our preaching, so to open and apply the Scriptures, as our discourses may have a rational tendency to make the hearts of our hearers to burn within them, not so as to make them dead, and sleepy, and cold, or lukewarm; and then to know that it must be Christ's work to inflame them, when we have said all that we can say.

33 And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, 34 Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, <sup>11 Cor. 15. 5.</sup> and 'hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

The 34th verse, compared with 1 Cor. xv. 5, makes some great authors think, that Simon was one of the two, and that Cleopas (who was the other) spake this. They make no stay at Emmaus, but come presently to Jerusalem, and acquaint the disciples, that for certain Christ was risen, and that he had appeared to them in the way, and was known of them at their breaking of bread.

<sup>9 Mark 16. 14. John 20. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 5.</sup> 36 ¶ And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

Of this appearance of Christ Mark speaks, chap. xvi. 14, and John, chap. xx. 19, 20. The salutation which he useth to them was common amongst the Jews, and answereth our God save you, or God be with you. It was an appreciation of all blessing and happiness, which they comprehended under the name of peace.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen <sup>h Mark 6. 49.</sup> a spirit.

Spirits sometimes (by God's permission or direction) assumed human shapes. They seeing a human shape, and not able on the sudden to conceive how a human body should come into the midst among them, without any more noise or notice taken of it, were affrighted, as we usually are at the sight of apprehended apparitions. From hence we may conclude, that either the world, and the best men in it, have been in all ages deceived, and a few atheists have been wiser than them all, or there are such beings as spirits.

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: 'handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

<sup>i John 20. 20, 27.</sup>

40 And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet.

If either the papists or the Lutherans could show us Christ's hands or feet, while they impose upon us to believe that Christ's body is really present at or in the Lord's supper, they would not so fright us, nor make so many thoughts arise in us, as they do, about their apprehensions of the nature of a body. But while the papists allow us to handle and to taste the bread, and we find no such things, and the Lutherans suffer our eyes to be open, and we can see no such things, we cannot but conclude, that the body of Christ which they talk of must certainly be a spirit, which (according to our Saviour's notion) is a substance which hath neither flesh nor bones, as we see the body they would have us to believe hath not; that is to say, that the body they talk of is no body. Our Saviour here proveth that it was his true body, which appeared to them, because, 1. It had integral parts, hands and feet. 2. Because it might be seen. 3. It might be handled. 4. It had flesh and bones, which a spirit hath not. Then he shows them his hands and feet. So then our Saviour did not think that the judgment of our senses was to be rejected, concerning the nature of bodies, and his body in particular, and that in its state of exaltation, when it was raised from the dead: Do any of them say that Christ's body here came through the door, or it could not have been here? How shall that be proved? We can easily tell them how his body might be in the midst of them, though it were not discerned while he was there; even as the eyes of the two disciples were held, ver. 16, that they could not discern Christ, so the eyes of the disciples might be held now, till he was in the midst amongst them.

41 And while they yet believed not <sup>for joy, and wondered, he said unto</sup> them, 'Have ye here any meat? <sup>k Gen. 45. 26. 1 John 21. 6.</sup>

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb.

43 <sup>m</sup> And he took it, and did eat be- <sup>m Acts 10. 41.</sup> fore them.

Believed not for joy; yet if they had not now believed, they doubtless would not have rejoiced, but their faith was the cause of their joy; yet the excess of their joy was the hinderance of their faith; so dangerous are the excessive motions of our affections. Christ here gives them another evidence of the truth of his body, he did eat before them, though very ordinary country diet, a piece of broiled fish, and of a honey-comb; such a meal as we read of that he had at the lake of Tiberias, John xxi. 9. He did not eat to uphold, but only to testify, his life. Thus when he had raised the daughter of Jairus, chap. viii. 55, he bid them give her something to eat; and for this end Lazarus sat at meat with the rest, John xii. 2; and Peter proves the resurrection of Christ from their eating and drinking with him, Acts x. 41. Let not profane wits seek knots in bulrushes, inquiring what became of this meat? &c. Let them first tell us what became of the meat the angels did eat with Abraham, Gen. xviii. 8, and learn to believe, that it was easy with the power of God to annihilate again that meat, which was not necessary for the sustentation of the body of Christ, now freed from all the cravings of natural appetite, though he did eat it to satisfy them, that he was truly risen from the dead.

44 And he said unto them, <sup>These are</sup> the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me. <sup>n Matt. 16. 21. & 17. 22. & 20. 18. Mark 8. 31. ch. 9. 22. & 18. 31. ver. 6.</sup>

The Jews ordinarily divided the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the holy writings, which they called the Hagiographa. The Book of Psalms was one of the last sort, and one of the most noted amongst them. So as by these three terms our Saviour understands all the Scriptures of the Old Testament. He tells them, that he had before his death, while he conversed with them, told them that all things (which were very many) which were found in any of these books concerning him must be fulfilled: he had told them so, chap. xviii. 31; Matt. xvi. 21; xvii. 22; xx. 18; Mark ix. 31; x. 31.

o Acts 16. 14. 45 Then °opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures,

He did not open their understanding without the Scriptures, he sends them thither; and he knew the Scriptures would not sufficiently give them a knowledge of him, and the things of God, without the influence and illumination of his Spirit: they are truly taught of God, who are taught by his Spirit to understand the Scriptures. Christ gives a great honour to the Scriptures. The devil cheats those souls whom he persuades to cast away the Scriptures in expectation of a teaching by the Spirit. The Spirit teacheth by, not without, not contrary to, the Holy Scriptures.

p ver. 26. Pa. 22. 16. 50. 6. & 53. 2. &c. Acts 17. 3. 46 And said unto them, ¶ Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day :

All the Divine predictions are certain and infallible. The Jews did maliciously and freely prosecute our Saviour to death, and God did certainly foresee how their wills would be determined, and the event was accomplished accordingly.

q Dan. 9. 24. Acts 13. 38. 46. 1 John 2. 12. r Gen. 12. 3. Pa. 22. 27. Is. 48. 6, 22. Jer. 31. 34. Hos. 2. 23. Mic. 4. 2. Mal. 1. 11. s John 15. 27. Acts 1. 8, 22, & 2. 32. & 3. 15. 47 And that repentance and °remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

48 And °ye are witnesses of these things.

The few words in ver. 47 are comprehensive of the great duty of the apostles: 1. To preach repentance and remission of sins. 2. In Christ's name. 3. To all nations. 4. Beginning at Jerusalem. They were to preach repentance, that is, a turning from sinful courses into a course of life consonant to the will of God; and remission of sins, that is, upon repentance; this they were to preach in his name, which may refer either to their preaching; then our Saviour lets them know that they were to be his ministers, and to preach by his authority, to be ambassadors for Christ, 2 Cor. v. 20, stewards of his mysteries. Or else it may refer to repentance and remission of sins, which are to be preached in his name, for the sake of merits and satisfaction. They were to preach this among all nations. This was prophesied of plentifully, Psal. ii. 8; Isa. xlix. 6; Dan. vii. 14; Hos. ii. 23; Joel ii. 32. This was a piece of Divine revelation which Christ had till this time concealed in a great measure; when he sent out the twelve, Matt. x. 5, he commanded them not to go to the Gentiles. Beginning at Jerusalem, that is, amongst the Jews. He was prophesied of under the notion of a King, to be set upon the Lord's holy hill of Zion, Psal. ii. 6. So Psal. cx. 2; Isa. ii. 3; xxviii. 16; lx. 1. In pursuance of this, we shall find the apostles preaching only in Judea, till they had judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life, then they turned to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 38, 46.

t Is. 44. 3. Joel 2. 28. John 14. 16, 26. & 15. 26. & 16. 7. Acts 1. 4. & 2. 1, &c. 49 ¶ And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.

It is questioned by none, but by the promise of the Father our Lord meaneth the promise of the Spirit, as it came down in the days of Pentecost. This effusion of the Spirit was promised under the Old Testament, Isa. xlv. 3; Jer. xxxi. 33; Ezek. xxxvi. 27; most eminently, Joel ii. 28, the apostle himself interpreting this prophecy, Acts ii. 16—18. See also Acts i. 8, where the fulfilling of this promise of the Father, as it is called ver. 4, is put before—and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria; and is also expounded by, But ye shall receive power, after the Holy Ghost is come upon you. Our Lord also had said, I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever,

John xiv. 16. In this text he saith, that he will send him; so also John xv. 26; xvi. 7; thereby confirming his disciples in this, that he was equal with the Father, and that the Holy Ghost was sent by the Father and him, yet sent by the Father upon the prayer of the Son, and in his name, John xiv. 16, 26. This Holy Spirit is also called, power from on high; the power of the Highest, Luke i. 35. But here the gifts of the Holy Ghost may be understood, as also in Acts i. 8, where it is said this power should be received after that the Holy Ghost should come upon them: until this time should come, which was in the days of Pentecost, Acts ii. 1, the disciples were bound to stay at Jerusalem, which accordingly they did. And we may from hence conclude, that these words of our Saviour were spoken to his disciples after his appearance to them in Galilee, (of which Luke saith nothing,) which was the place where (as most think) he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, 1 Cor. xv. 6.

50 ¶ And he led them out °as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.

51 ¶ And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

This must be understood to have happened forty days after our Saviour's resurrection, for so Luke himself tells us, Acts i. 3. And he led them out as far as Bethany; not the village Bethany, but that part of the mount of Olives which belonged to Bethany. Our Saviour had been often there praying; from thence he now ascendeth into heaven. And he lifted up his hands and blessed them: some think that by blessing here is meant praying, and the lifting up of his hands was accommodated to that religious action. Others think that blessing here signifieth a more authoritative act; and that his lifting up of his hands was a stretching out of his hands, as a sign of that effectual blessing of them. While he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven; that is, he moved upward as if he had been carried, for it is certain that our Saviour ascended by his own power. Luke saith, Acts i. 9, He was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. As Elijah went up to heaven in a whirlwind, 2 Kings ii. 11, so Christ went up in a cloud; but with this difference, Christ ascended by his own power, Elijah could not without the help of an angel.

52 ¶ And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy :

53 And were continually °in the temple, praising and blessing God. Amen.

We never before read of any act of adoration which the disciples performed to Christ. Their faith was now come to the highest pitch. They did no longer look upon him only as one sent of God, a great Prophet, nor only as the Son of David, the promised Messiah; in the mean time not rightly taking the notion of the Messiah, but looking upon him as one who should be a temporal saviour, and deliverer of his people; they now believe him to be the eternal Son of God, being so manifested by his resurrection from the dead, and ascension into heaven before their eyes. According to his commandment, they return to Jerusalem, full of joy: and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. Amen. It is said, Acts i. 13, 14, that being returned they went into an upper room, and continued in prayer and supplication. Some think that this upper room was appendant to the temple. But continually here may reasonably be interpreted often, or ordinarily, or at temple hours of prayer; as the morning and evening sacrifice are called the continual burnt-offering, Exod. xxix. 42; Numb. xxviii. 3. Their work was to praise and bless God. It is not said for what, but easily understood: as for other mercies, so more especially for his sending the Messiah for our redemption, and the confirmation and perfecting their faith in him.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO

S. JOHN

THE ARGUMENT

THE penman of this Gospel is generally taken to have been John the son of Zebedee, Matt. x. 2, not either John the Baptist, or John surnamed Mark, Acts xv. 37. He was a person mightily honoured by Christ's personal favours, and therefore often called the beloved disciple; you may read of these favours in these scriptures following, Matt. xvii. 1; Luke ix. 28; xxii. 8; John xiii. 23; xix. 26, 27; xx. 2; Acts iii. 3; iv. 13; Gal. ii. 9. Thus far the Scripture guideth us. He is thought to have gone to and continued in Asia till the third of the ten persecutions in the time of Trajan. He was by Domitian banished into Patmos, where he wrote the Revelation.

The time when he wrote this Gospel is uncertain; some think about the latter part of his life: he died the last of all the apostles, judged about a hundred years after the birth of Christ. It is said that the heresies of Ebion and Cerinthus, who denied Christ's Divinity, and of the Nicolaitanes, who held many absurd things about his person, gave occasion to the writing of this Gospel; himself mentioneth the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, Rev. ii. 6; and Ebion and Cerinthus are thought to be those antichrists which he in his Epistles reflecteth upon.

Two things are observed of him: 1. That he insists more on the proof of Christ's Divinity, than any of the evangelists; producing his miracles most evidently to prove it. 2. That he mentions very little reported by the other evangelists: to which I think may be added, that he delivereth the history of the gospel after Christ's resurrection more fully than any of them; he gives us also a more distinct account of the four passovers happening after Christ's baptism; the necessity of faith in Christ, and regeneration; the doctrine of our mystical union with Christ; the sending of the Holy Spirit, and end of his mission, and the advantage that the apostles and others should receive from it. His Gospel is most particularly remarkable for the sublimeness and mysteriousness of the matter, and sweetness of the phrase.

CHAP. I

The Divinity of Christ, 1—5. The mission of John, and end of Christ's coming, 6—13. The incarnation of the Word, 14. Christ's superior dignity witnessed by John, and evinced by his gracious dispensation, 15—18. John's record of himself to the messengers of the Jews, 19—28. His public testimony to the person of Christ, 29—34. Two of his disciples, hearing it, follow Jesus: Simon is brought to Christ, and surnamed Cephas, 35—42. Philip is called, who bringeth Nathanael to Jesus, 43—51.

IN the beginning <sup>a</sup> was the Word, and the Word was <sup>b</sup> with God, <sup>c</sup> and the Word was God.

<sup>a</sup> Prov. 8. Col. 1. 17. 1 John 1. 1. Rev. 1. 2. & 18. 13.

<sup>b</sup> Prov. 8. 30. ch. 17. 5. 1 John 1. 2. c Phil. 2. 6. 1 John 5. 7.

In the beginning; in that beginning which Moses mentioneth, Gen. i. 1, the beginning of all things, when the foundations of the world were laid, Prov. viii. 27, 28; the beginning of time; for before that was no measure of time, all was eternity. Was the Word, that is, the eternal Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, of whom more is spoken afterward. Nor is Christ in this text alone called the Word, but 1 John i. 1, the Word of life; so Rev. xix. 13: and there are some who think he is so called, Luke i. 2, comparing that text with 2 Pet. i. 16, as also Psal. xxxiii. 6. Nor is it an improper term by which to express the Son of God; for it both expresseth something of his ineffable generation, as the word is begotten in our thoughts, and is the express image of them; and also his office in the revelation of his Father's will unto the sons of men, and revealing his Father to us, Matt. xi. 27: and there are some (if they be not too curious in their notion) who think by that phrase of David, 2 Sam. vii. 21, For thy word's sake, (expounded for thy servant's sake, 1 Chron. xvii. 19, which is the title of Christ, Isa. xlii. 1,) that Christ is meant. Besides, it is observed, that this term was more acceptable both to the Jews and the heathens, than the term of Christ, or the Son of God, would have been; for there was nothing more abhorred by the Jews than the latter; and the heathen writers made (as is noted by divers) a great use of this term, to express the name and the power of God. Nor is any thing more ordinary with the Chaldee paraphrast than this expression: Isa. xlv. 12, I have made the earth; Chald. I in my word have made the earth. So chap. xlviii. 13,

Mine hand hath laid the foundation of the earth; Chald.

By my word I have laid the foundations of the earth: this is taken from Moses's describing the creation by God's word of command, Let there be light, and there was light; the manner of expressing it by the word command, is significative that all things were made by his eternal Word; for would any Jew deny, that God by his word created the world? The evangelist therefore calleth Christ, to whom he was about to attribute the creation, ver. 3, the Word; not the word of God (so the Scriptures are called); to distinguish Christ in this notion from the revelation of the Divine will to the prophets, he is only called the Word, though he was the Son of God. Nor is it said, that in the beginning was the Word created, (as is said of the heavens and the earth, Gen. i. 1,) but was the Word: this proveth the eternal existence of the Second Person in the Trinity; for what was in the beginning did not then begin to be: the term the Word, without the addition of God, speaketh him a subsistence; and it being said, that in the beginning he was, speaks his eternal existence; for what had a being in the beginning of time must needs be eternal, nothing being when time began but what was eternal. To this purpose are those texts, Psal. xc. 2; Prov. viii. 22—31; John xvii. 5: and Eph. i. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 13, which two texts compared show, In the beginning, here used, to be the same with before the foundation of the world: so 2 Tim. i. 9. The Word was with God: lest any should say, Where was this Word before the foundations of the earth were laid? the evangelist saith, with God, which agreeth with Prov. viii. 27, 30. This both distinguisheth Christ from all creatures, (none of which were with God in the beginning,) and also showeth the vanity of Sabellius, and those we call quakers, who will not allow Christ to be a distinct subsistence, or person, from his Father: it also denoteth the Son's co-existence and his equality with his Father; and yet his filial relation; for God is not said to have been with the Word, but the Word was with God, which also speaks a perfect unity and consent betwixt them. And the Word was God: lest any should say, What but God can be eternal, or be said to have been and had an existence in the beginning of the world? the evangelist addeth, that the Word was God: that is, the person or subsistence spoken of and intended by him was the Divine Being, which is but one; though in it there be three distinct subsistences, all make but one and the same Divine Being. The first thing spoken here of Christ attributes to him eternity; the second speaks his relation to the Father; this speaks the oneness and sameness of his essence with that of the Father. The term God, which in the foregoing words is to be taken personally for God the Father, is here to be taken essentially, as it signifieth the Divine Being.

d Gen. i. 1. 2 <sup>a</sup> The same was in the beginning with God.

These words of the evangelist are a further confirmation and explication of what the evangelist had said before; asserting the eternity of the Son, and his relation to the Father, and oneness of essence with the Father. Whether the evangelist, forewarned by the Spirit of God, did add this repetition to fore-arm Christians against those errors which did afterward trouble the church, I cannot say; but certain it is, that these words do effectually confute the Eunomians, who distinguished betwixt the Word which in the beginning was with God, and that Word by which all things were made; and the Arians, who make the Father to have existed before the Son; as also the Anomians, who would make the Father and the Son diverse both in nature and will. Some others make this verse a transition to the 4th, and the sense to be, This same was not manifest to the world from the beginning of the world, but was with God until he came to be manifested in the flesh: thus, 1 John i. 2, it is said, he was with the Father, and was manifested unto us. He was manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

e Ps. 33. 6. Col. i. 16. 3 <sup>a</sup> All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

All things were made by him: the Divine nature and eternal existence of the Lord Christ, is evident from his efficiency in the creation of the world: what the evangelist here calleth all things, the apostle to the Hebrews, chap. i. 2, calleth the worlds; and St. Paul, Col. i. 16, calleth, all things that are in heaven and earth, visible and invisible; Moses calls, the heaven and the earth, Gen. i. 1. These were all made by the Word; not as an instrumental cause, but as a principal efficient cause; for though it be true, that the preposition δὲ is sometimes used to signify an instrumental cause; yet it is as true, that it is often used to signify the principal efficient cause; as John vi. 57; Acts iii. 16; Rom. v. 5; xi. 36; Eph. iv. 6, and in many other texts: it here only denoteth the order of the working of the holy Trinity. Without him was not any thing made that was made; nothing that was made, neither the heavens nor the earth, neither things visible nor invisible, were made without him. There is nothing more ordinary in holy writ, than after the laying down a universal proposition, (where no synecdoche is used,) to add also a universal negative for the confirmation of it: so Rom. iii. 12, There is none that doeth good; then is added, no, not one; Lam. ii. 2, and in many other texts. The term without him, doth not exclude the efficiency either of the First or Third Person in the Trinity, in the creation of all things; the Father created the world by the Son, his Word; and the creation of the world is attributed to the Spirit, Gen. i. 1; Job xxxiii. 4; Psal. xxxiii. 6.

ch. 5. 26. 1 John 5. 11. 4 <sup>a</sup> In him was life; and <sup>b</sup> the life was the light of men.

In him was life; in this Word was life corporal, spiritual, eternal; it was in him as in the fountain. Some understand this of corporal life, both in the first being and preservation of it; it is certain that this is in Christ, for he upholdeth all things by the word of his power, Heb. i. 3; Acts xvii. 28; and thus it is another demonstration of the Deity of Christ. Others think that here is rather a transition from creation to redemption; you hath he quickened, Eph. ii. 1. Others understand it of eternal life, because our evangelist most generally taketh the term life, as a benefit flowing from Christ, in this sense, as chap. iii. 16, and iv. 14, and in a multitude of other texts. I know no reason why we should not understand it of all life; all life being in Christ, as God equal with the Father; and spiritual and eternal life flowing also from him in a more peculiar consideration, as Mediator. And the life was the light of men: but though as God he distributes life according to their degree to all his creatures, yet he is the peculiar light of men, enlightening their minds with light of which vegetative and sensitive creatures are not capable; so as by light is not here to be understood the emanations of any lucid bodies, as that of the sun or stars, for other creatures as well as men are capable of that; nor is it to be understood of the light of reason, though that be the candle of the Lord in the soul; but that light by which we discern the things of God; in which sense the apostle saith, Eph. v. 8, Ye were darkness, but now ye are light in the Lord. And therefore he saith of men, exclusively to angels, who though lightsome, noble creatures, yet had not their nature assumed by Christ, Heb. ii. 16. Besides that it is said in the next verse, that this light shineth in darkness, that is, amongst many men who yet had reasonable souls, but the darkness comprehended it not. That cannot be, that men did not comprehend reason, but even rational men comprehended not this light of supernatural revelation. So John is said to have come to testify of that light; who did not come to testify of Christ, as the author of reason. Nor is there any text of Scripture in which the term light signifieth reason.

5 <sup>a</sup> And <sup>b</sup> the light shineth in darkness; <sup>c</sup> h ch. 3. 19. and the darkness comprehended it not.

The light shineth in darkness: he had said before, that life was in Christ, in him as in the fountain; and the life in him was the light of men, giving light to men. Now this light which was in him had its emanations (as light in the sun); and the darkness, that is, men of dark minds, (the abstract being put for the concrete,) comprehended (that is, received) it not. This was true concerning the Jews in former times, upon whom Christ the true Light had shined in many types and prophecies; it was also true concerning the Jews of that present age, to whom, through the favour of him who had undertaken the redemption of man, the means of grace were continued; through the blindness of their minds and hardness of their hearts, they wilfully rejected those means of illumination which God granted to them.

6 ¶ <sup>a</sup> There was a man sent from God, <sup>b</sup> A. D. 26. whose name was John. <sup>c</sup> Mal. 3. 1. <sup>d</sup> Mat. 3. 1. <sup>e</sup> Luke 3. 2. <sup>f</sup> ver. 33.

There was a man sent from God; not the Christ, not an angel, but a man; yet one, than whom (as our Saviour saith) there had not risen a greater amongst those that were born of women. He did not come of his own head, but was sent; for it was he of whom it was written, Mal. iii. 1, Behold, I will send my messenger before thy face, &c., Luke vii. 27. He was not sent of men, but from God, foretold by the angel, as to his existence, name, work, and success, Luke i. 13—17. Whose name was John; his name was John, named by the angel, Luke i. 13, before he was born; by his father and mother, Luke i. 60, 63, when he was born. John signifieth grace; and doubtless the Baptist obtained that name, because he was to be the first and a famous preacher of the grace of the gospel which came to the world through Jesus Christ.

7 <sup>a</sup> The same came for a witness, to <sup>b</sup> k Acts 13. 4. bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

The same came for a witness: John was called a messenger to denote his authority; a witness, to denote his work, which is the work of every true minister of the gospel. John was the first witness, and witnessed a thing wholly unknown (before him) to the generality of the world; for though the shepherds, and Simeon, and Anna, had given some testimony to Christ, when he was born, and brought into the temple to be offered to the Lord, yet that was thirty years since, and generally forgot; neither could they bear a testimony to him as an actual minister of the gospel. The apostles were to be witnesses to Christ, Acts i. 8; witnesses of his resurrection, Acts i. 22; iv. 33; v. 32; x. 41; xiii. 31. All the prophets bare witness to him, that whosoever believeth in his name should be saved, Acts x. 43. So did John also; and John further pointed to him passing by, and witnessed that it was he of whom the prophets spake. So that the apostles, and so following ministers, were and are greater witnesses than John the Baptist. The prophets witnessed that he should come, John Baptist witnessed that he was come; the apostles witnessed that he was not only come, but had died, and was again risen from the dead. To bear witness of the Light; for John's office was to give a testimony to Christ the true Light, mentioned before; so called, because he maketh manifest, Eph. v. 13. He revealeth his Father, Matt. xi. 27. He is the brightness of his Father's glory, Heb. i. 3, who is light, 1 John i. 5, and the world is by him enlightened. It was prophesied of his times, Isa. xi. 9, that the earth should be full of the knowledge of the Lord. That all men through him might believe; the end of John's testimony was, that multitudes of all sorts might believe by him, or by it, as an instrumental cause of their faith. If we read it by him, it is most proper to understand the pronoun of John the Baptist; for we are not said to believe by Christ, but in him, in his name, &c.

8 He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

He was not that Light: John the Baptist was a light, as all saints are light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8; nay, in a peculiar sense our Saviour beareth him witness, that he was a burning and shining light; but he was not that Light before mentioned, ver. 5, that shineth in darkness; and again ver. 9, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. John borrowed his light from that original Light; that Light was God, he was but a man sent from God. The men of the world are ordinarily in extremes, either wholly rejecting God's ministers and witnesses, or else adoring them; as the world is concerned to take heed of the former, so the ministers of Christ are also highly concerned not to admit the latter. See Luke vii. 33; Acts xiv. 13, 14; but both John here, and Paul there, were very cautious not to rob their Master of the honour due unto him alone. But was sent to bear witness of that Light: John, as was said before, came only to bear witness of that Light, that he was come, and shined forth, and was the true Light, as it followeth.

9 That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

That was the true Light: true is sometimes opposed to what is false, Eph. iv. 25; sometimes to what is typical and figurative, John i. 17; sometimes to what is not original, and of itself: in opposition to all these Christ is the true Light; he who alone deserved the name of light, having light in himself, and from himself, 1 John ii. 8, and shining more gloriously than the prophets or apostles. Which lighteth every man that cometh into the world; he lighteth not the Jews only, (as the prophets of old,) but both the Jews and Gentiles. Some understand this of the light of reason; but besides that reason is no where in holy writ called light, neither did this illumination agree to Christ as Mediator. It is rather therefore to be understood of the light of gospel revelation, which Christ caused to be made to all the world, Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15. Those who interpret it of the more internal illumination by the Holy Spirit of God, by which Christ is not revealed to us only, but in us, say, that Christ hath done what lay in him (as a Minister of the gospel) so to enlighten all that came into the world; and that Christ is said to enlighten every man, because none is enlightened but by him, and that some of all sorts are by him enlightened; in one of which two latter senses the terms all and every man must be interpreted in a multitude of texts in the Gospel. The words in the Greek are so, as they may either be translated as we read them, or thus, who coming into the world, enlightened every man: a more universal spiritual light, or means to come to the knowledge of God, overspreading the world after Christ's coming, than before. So John xii. 46, I am come a light into the world. And it is by some observed, that the phrase cometh into the world, doth not barely signify a being born, but being sent into the world by the Father, being sanctified, as in John x. 36; xvii. 18.

10 He was in the world, and <sup>m</sup> the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

He was in the world; he was in the place called the world, and amongst the men of the world; for so the term world is often taken, chap. xvi. 28; 2 Pet. iii. 6. Christ, before he came in the flesh, was in it; filling both the heavens and the earth, and sustaining it by the word of his power, and manifesting his will to it, more immediately to Moses and to the prophets, and more mediately by Moses and by the prophets. And the world was made by him; and the heavens and the earth, all things visible and invisible, (as was said before,) were made by him. And the world knew him not; and the men of the world took no notice of him, did not acknowledge him, believe in him, nor were subject to him; so the word knew often signifies, (according to the Hebrew idiom,) John x. 14, 15, 27; not a bare comprehension of an object in the understanding, but suitable affections: so Matt. vii. 23; 1 John iii. 1. This is not to be understood of all individual persons in the world; for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and David, and many particular persons, did in this sense know him; but the generality of the world did not. The heathens did not, (who are sometimes called the world, distinctively from the Jews, 1 John ii. 2; 1 Cor. i. 21,) and most of the Jews did not, though some did.

11 <sup>n</sup> He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

He came unto his own; Christ came into the world, which being made by him, was in the most proper sense his own; or, to the Israelites, which were as his own house, land, and possession, Psal. lxxxv. 1; John xvi. 32. The Greek word is in the plural number, and used in the places before mentioned, as also Acts xxi. 6; sometimes signifying men's proper country, sometimes their proper house. But it is a further question, what coming is here spoken of: though it be generally (or by many at least) interpreted of Christ's coming by his incarnation, yet that seemeth not to be the sense; partly, because that coming is spoken of, ver. 14; and partly, because in that sense the Jews did receive him; nor was it in their power to hinder his manifestation in the flesh. The coming therefore here mentioned seemeth to be intended of his coming by his prophets, John the Baptist, and his own personal preaching of the gospel. And his own received him not; whom in this way of coming they did not receive, believing neither the testimony given by his prophets, nor by the Baptist, nor by himself, John v. 43.

12 But <sup>o</sup> as many as received him, to them gave he <sup>o</sup> power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

But as many as received him; though the generality of those amongst whom Christ came received him not in the manner before expressed, yet some did own him, believed in him, and submitted to him; and to as many as thus received him, not into their houses only, but into their hearts, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; he gave a power, or a right, or privilege, not that they might if they would be, but to be actually, to become, or be, the sons of God by adoption; for believers are already the sons of God, Gal. iii. 26, though it doth not yet appear what they shall be in the adoption, mentioned Rom. viii. 23, which the apostle calls the redemption of our body, viz. in the resurrection; hence the children of God are called the children of the resurrection, Luke xx. 36. To them that believe on his name; this is the privilege of all that believe in the name of Christ; by which term he opens the former term of receiving: to receive Christ, and to believe in his name, are the same thing. To believe in his name, is either to believe in him, Acts iii. 16, or in the revelation of himself in the promises of the gospel. The proposition of God's word is the object of faith or assent; but the person of the Mediator is the object of that faith which receiveth Christ; and those alone have a right to be the sons of God, and to the privileges peculiar to sons, who believe in Christ as revealed in the promises of the word of God, and there exhibited to men.

13 <sup>p</sup> Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

Which were born, not of blood; not of the blood of men and women; or, not of the blood of Abraham (which was the boast of the Jews, We have Abraham to our Father). Nor of the will of the flesh; nor from the lusts of the flesh. Nor of the will of man; nor from a power in man's will, or men's free act in adopting other men's children. To be born, signifieth to receive our principle of life: those who are the children of God have not the principle of their life,

1 ver. 4.
1s. 49. 6.

1 John 2. 8.

n Luke 19.
14. Acta 3.
26. & 13. 46.

o Is. 56. 5.
Rom. 8. 15.
Gal. 3. 26.
2 Pet. 1. 4.
1 John 3. 1.
Or, the right, or, privilege.

p ch. 3. 5.
Jam. 1. 18.
1 Pet. 1. 23.

as they are such, from the motions of nature, nor from the will of men. But of God: whatever be the sense of the former words, these words plainly affirm God to be the principal efficient, and procreant cause, of all those who are the sons of God; for faith, by which we are the children of God, Gal. iii. 26, is the work of God, John vi. 29, his gift, Phil. i. 29; and men are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of that which is incorruptible, 1 Pet. i. 23: they are sanctified and cleansed with the washing of water by the word, Eph. v. 26; the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, Tit. iii. 5.

14 ¶ And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

The Word was made flesh; the Son of God, called the Word, for the reasons before specified, was made truly man, as flesh often signifieth in holy writ, Gen. vi. 12; Psal. lxxv. 2; Isa. xl. 5, 6; not a vile, despicable, mortal man. The evangelist rather saith he was made flesh, than he was made man, more plainly to distinguish the two natures in Christ; to assert the truth of his human nature; to let us know that Christ assumed human nature in common, not the particular nature of any; to commend the love of God, and to let us see, that his plaster was proportioned to our sore, it reached all flesh. The evangelist saith not he was changed into flesh; but, by assuming, he was made flesh. And dwelt amongst us: and he tabernacled amongst us; amongst us men, or amongst men that were his disciples: the word signifieth properly, he made no long stay. And we beheld his glory; and we beheld the signs and effects of his glory; many of which were seen, both at the time of his transfiguration, and at his passion, resurrection, and ascension; the glory of his grace, holiness, truth, miraculous operations, &c. The glory as of the only begotten of the Father; which glory was the glory of the only begotten of the Father; for the particle as here doth not signify likeness, but truth, Neh. vii. 2; Job xxiv. 14. Full of grace and truth, as he was God manifested in the flesh. Grace signifieth love and good will, out of which it was that he delivered us from the curse and rigour of the law (to which grace is opposed). He was also full of truth, both as truth is opposed to falsehood, and to the shadows and figures of the law; and Christ was full of truth as he was the antitype to all the ceremonies, and all the promises had and have their completion and reality in him: see chap. xiv. 17; Rom. xv. 8; 2 Cor. i. 20. Truth also may signify the sincerity and integrity of Christ's life, as he was without guile.

15 ¶ John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for he was before me.

John bare witness of him, and cried, saying: John was not he, but only a witness to him; and he continueth to bear witness (the verb is in the present tense); nor did he give an obscure or cold testimony, but an open, and plain, and fervent testimony, according to the prophecies, his testimony was the voice of one crying in the wilderness. This was he of whom I spake; he first testified that Christ was he of whom he had before spoken; possibly when he was preaching in the wilderness, and Christ came to him to be baptized of him, Matt. iii. 11, 14. He that cometh after me is preferred before me; he that cometh after me, in order of time, or in the ministerial office and employment, or, as if he were my disciple, John viii. 12, is become, or is made, before me. For he was before me, both in the eternal destination, and in respect of his Divine nature; as also in dignity and eminency, considered as a prophet, i. e. one that revealeth my Father's will. This John said before, though not in terms, yet in effect, when he said, Matt. iii. 11, He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, &c. So Mark i. 7; Luke iii. 16. This is the first thing which is here mentioned, as John's testimony concerning Christ, respecting the excellency of his person.

16 And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

And of his fulness have all we received; of that plenty of grace which Christ hath, (who hath not the Spirit given him by measure, chap. iii. 34, as other saints have, Acts ii. 4, 6, 8,) we who by nature are void of grace, whether taken for the favour of God, or gracious habits, have received, as the skirts of Aaron's garment received the oil which was plentifully poured out on Aaron's head. And grace for grace: nor have we received drops, but grace upon grace; not only knowledge and instruction, but the love and favour of God, and spiritual habits, in proportion to the favour and grace which Christ hath (allowing for our short capacities); we have received grace freely and plentifully, all from Christ, and for his sake; which lets us see how much the grace-receiving soul is bound to acknowledge and adore Christ, and may be confirmed in the receiving of further grace, and the hopes of eternal life; and it may mind all (according to that of the apostle, 2 Cor. vi. 1.) to take heed that they receive not the grace of God in vain.

17 For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

For the law was given by Moses; the law, moral and ceremonial, came not by Moses, but was given by Moses as God's minister and servant; that law by which no man can be justified, Rom. iii. 28. In this was Moses's honour, of whom you glory, chap. v. 45. God indeed made an eminent use of him, as his minister, by whom he revealed his will to you; both in matters of his worship, according to that dispensation; and in matters which concern you in your whole conversation; but yet there is an eminent difference betwixt him and Jesus Christ. The law is no where called grace, neither doth it discover any thing but duty and wrath; it showeth no remission, in case that duty be not done, nor affordeth strength for the doing of it. But grace and truth came by Jesus Christ; all that is from Christ; all the favour of God for the remission and pardon of sin, and for strength and assistance to the performance of duty, is (not given from God by Christ, as the law by Moses, but) from Christ as the fountain of grace; and not grace only, but truth, whether taken for solid and real mercy, or with respect to the law; the fulfilling of all the types and prophecies in it was by and in Christ.

18 No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

No man hath seen God at any time; no man hath at any time seen the essence of God with his eyes, John iv. 24; nor with the eyes of his mind understood the whole counsel and will of God, Matt. xi. 27; Rom. xi. 34. Moses indeed saw the image and representation of God, and had a more familiar converse with God than others; upon which account he is said to have talked with God face to face; Numb. xii. 7, 8. God saith he would speak unto him mouth to mouth, even apparently; but he tells us how in the same verse, and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold; and God, who had spoken to the same sense, Exod. xxxiii. 11, saith, ver. 20, Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me, and live. Now to whom he did not discover his face, he certainly did not discover all his secret counsels. The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father; but he who is the only begotten and beloved Son, hath such an intimate communion with him in his nature, and such a free communication of all his counsels, as it may be said, he is continually in his bosom. He hath declared him; hath declared him, not only as a prophet declareth the mind and will of God, but as the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy-work, Psal. xix. 1; being the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person, Heb. i. 3. So as the Father can only be seen in the Son; nor is so full a revelation of the Father's will to be expected from any, as from the Son.

19 ¶ And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent Priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?

John's former testimony was more private to the com-

q Mat. 1. 16,
20. Luke 1.
31, 35. & 2. 7.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
r Rom. 1. 3.
Gal. 4. 4.
s Heb. 2. 11, 14, 16, 17.
t Isa. 40. 5. Matt. 17. 2. ch. 2. 11. & 11. 40. 2 Pet. 1. 17. u Col. 1. 19. & 2. 3, 9.

a Ex. 20. 1,
& c. Deut. 4.
44. & 5. 1.
& 33. 4.
b Rom. 9. 24.
& 5. 21. & 6. 14. c ch. 8. 32. & 14. 6.

d Ex. 33. 20.
Deut. 4. 12.
Matt. 11. 27.
Luke 10. 22.
ch. 6. 46.
1 Tim. 1. 17.
& 6. 16.

1 John 4. 12, 20. e ver. 14. ch. 3. 16, 18. 1 John 4. 9.

A. D. 30.
f ch. 6. 33.

mon people; this testimony was given to a public authority. The Jews (most probably the rulers of the Jews, who made up their sanhedrim, or great court, answering a parliament with us, for the cognizance of false prophets belonged to them) sent priests and Levites, which were Pharisees, ver. 24, of the strictest sect of the Jews as to rites and ceremonies; these came from Jerusalem, where the sanhedrim constantly sat, and the chief priests were, (if the message were not from the sanhedrim itself,) to ask John Baptist who he was; that is, by what authority he preached and baptized? what kind of prophet he was? for they could not but know his name and family, he descending from a priest amongst them: and this appeareth to be their sense from what followeth.

<sup>g Luke 3. 15.</sup> <sup>ch. 3. 28.</sup> <sup>Acts 13. 25.</sup> 20 And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

And he confessed; he being asked openly and plainly, professed, and denied not; and did not dissemble nor halt in his speech. These negatives are in Scripture often added to affirmatives, to exclude all exceptions, Job v. 17; Psal. xl. 10—12. But confessed: he did not tell them once so, but again and again, because many were musing about it, Luke iii. 15. I am not the Christ; I am not that great Messiah which God hath promised you, and in the expectation of whom you live, Luke ii. 26, 38; xix. 11; John iv. 25. The diligence we shall constantly observe in the servants of God in holy writ, to avoid the arrogating of that honour to themselves which is due only to God and Christ; and this, together with John's steadiness and plainness, doth very well become all professors, but the ministers of the gospel especially.

<sup>h Mal. 4. 5.</sup> <sup>Matt. 17. 10.</sup> <sup>i Deut. 18. 15, 18.</sup> <sup>l Or,</sup> <sup>a prophet.</sup> 21 And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No.

John was at Bethabara when these messengers came to him, ver. 28. They asked him if he were Elias. The Jews had not only an expectation of the Messiah, but of Elias to come as a messenger before him, according to the prophecy, Mal. iv. 5; as appeareth, Matt. xvii. 10; Mark ix. 11; of which they had a gross conception here, that Elias should come out of heaven personally, or at least that his soul should come into another body, according to the Pythagorean opinion. Now the meaning of the prophecy was, that one should come like Elias; and this was fulfilled in John, Luke i. 17, as our Saviour tells us, Matt. xvii. 12; Mark ix. 13; but they asked the question according to that notion they had of Elias. To which John answereth, that he was not; neither that Elias that ascended in a fiery chariot to heaven; nor any body informed with Elias's soul: and thus the words of our Saviour, Matt. xvii. 12; Mark ix. 12, are easily reconciled to this text. They go on, and ask him if he were that prophet, or a prophet. Some think that they meant the Prophet promised, Deut. xviii. 18; but that was no other than Christ himself, which he had before denied himself to be; nor doth it appear from any text of Scripture that the Jews had any expectation of any other particular prophet; but it is plain from Luke ix. 8, that they had a notion that it was possible one of the old prophets might rise again from the dead, for so they guessed there concerning Christ. But others think that the article in the Greek here is not emphatical, and they only asked him if he were a prophet; for the Jews had a general notion, that the spirit of prophecy had left them ever since the times of Zechariah and Malachi; which they hoped was returned in John the Baptist, and about this they question him if he were a prophet. To which he answereth, No; neither that Prophet promised, Deut. xviii. 18, nor yet any of the old prophets risen from the dead; nor yet one like the prophets of the Old Testament, who only prophesied of a Christ to come; but, as Christ calls him, Matt. xi. 9, more than a prophet, one who showed and declared to them a Christ already come; for the law and the prophets prophesied but until John; the law in its types foreshowing, the prophets in their sermons foretelling, a Messiah to come; John did more. His father indeed, Luke i. 76, called him the prophet of the Highest; but there prophet is to be understood not in a strict, but in a large sense, as the term prophecy is taken, Rom. xii. 6.

And the term prophet often signifieth one that revealeth the will of God to men; in which large sense John was a prophet, and yet more than a prophet in the stricter notion of the term; and in that sense no prophet, that is, no mere prophet: so, Numb. xi. 19, Moses tells the people they should not eat flesh one, or two, or five, or ten, or twenty days, because they should eat it a whole month together.

22 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

Hitherto John had given them only a negative answer, and told them who he was not; he was neither Christ, nor the Elias, nor that prophet they expected; neither any of the old prophets risen from the dead; nor any prophet at all in a strict sense (as were the prophets of the Old Testament): they press him to a direct, plain, positive answer, that they might give an answer to those that sent them, who did not send them to inquire what he was not, but what he was. And there were various talks and discourses of the people about him, which they were not willing to take up and run away with; but they desired to have it from himself.

<sup>k Matt. 3. 1.</sup> <sup>l Mark 1. 2.</sup> <sup>m Luke 3. 4.</sup> <sup>n Is. 40. 3.</sup> 23 He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias.

We had the same, Matt. iii. 3; Mark i. 3: see the notes there. Chemnitius thinks, that John chose rather to preach and fulfil his ministry in the wilderness, than in the temple; to make an illustrious difference betwixt himself, who was but the Lord's messenger, and whose office was but to prepare the Lord's way, and his Lord himself, of whom it was prophesied, Mal. iii. 1, The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his holy temple; upon which account Haggai prophesied, chap. ii. 9, that the glory of that latter house (built by Ezra, and Zerubbabel, and Nehemiah) should be greater than of the former.

24 And they which were sent were of the Pharisees.

Who these Pharisees were hath been before explained in our notes on Matt. iii. 7. They were of the strictest sect of the Jewish religion, Acts xxvi. 5. The greatest part of their councils was made up of those of this sect, as may be learned from Acts xxiii. They were the men most zealous for and tenacious of the Jewish rites; and would allow nothing to be added to the Jewish worship to what they had received concerning it, either from the law of God, or the traditions of the elders.

25 And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

The Pharisees themselves would allow the Messiah, or Elias, or a prophet, to make any additions to or alterations in the worship of God, but none else: hence it is they ask, by what authority he baptized, if he were none of these? From whence we may learn, that although they might have some umbrage of that baptismal washing which was under the gospel, to commence into a sacrament, or federal sign, in the washing of their proselytes, or of Jewish children when they were circumcised; yet John's action was looked upon as new, who baptized adult Jews: now the care of the sanhedrim was to keep the worship of God uncorrupt, and the Pharisees amongst them had a particular zeal in the case, especially so far as the traditions of the elders were concerned.

<sup>o Matt. 3. 11.</sup> <sup>p Mal. 3. 1.</sup> 26 John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not;

This was no strict answer to their question, which was not, how, but why he baptized? But proper replies are often called answers in Scripture, though not apposite to the question. I baptize with water; I baptize you with mere water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; but there hath stood one amongst you, ἕστηκεν, or (by a usual putting of one tense for another) there standeth one; Christ had been there with the crowd, Luke iii. 15, 21, and possibly was amongst them still when John spake these words; whom you know not, not so much as ore tenus, by face.

27 ° He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

John the Baptist had before told them, He that cometh after me is preferred before me, ver. 15: see the notes there. He now repeateth those words; and it is observable, that the three other evangelists all put this passage before the history of Christ's coming to him to be baptized. So as it is probable that these messengers came to John as he was baptizing; and either immediately before or after Christ's baptism, Christ being yet in the crowd, he repeateth to his hearers what he had a little before said of him, that he was to be preferred before him. Whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose; he here enlargeth upon it with a proverbial speech, which the other evangelists have, with a very little variation: Matthew saith, Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; that is, to perform unto him the very meanest service or office. We have such forms of speech in use at this day amongst us; when we would express the great pre-eminence of some one above another, we say of that other, He is not worthy to tie his shoes; or, to carry his shoes after him. There is a vast difference between Christ and the most excellent of his ministers; which as to baptism lieth here, the ministerial baptism is but with water; Christ baptizeth with the Holy Ghost and with fire, Matt. iii. 11, or, with the Holy Ghost, as Mark i. 8.

28 These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

The evangelist had before told us what was done, these words tell us where. Some ancient writers will have the place to have been Bethany; but they seem not to have so well considered John xi. 18, where Bethany is said to have been but fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, and consequently on this side Jordan; whereas the evangelist saith, that this place was περὰν, beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Reuben, in the country of Peræa, where John at this time was baptizing, and probably had been so for some time.

29 ¶ The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

The next day; the most think, the day following that day when the messengers from Jerusalem had been examining the Baptist. Heinsius thinks it was the same day, and saith, the Hellenists usually so interpret ἐν ἑραύριον, for μετὰ ταῦτα, after these things; but the former sense is more generally embraced. John seeth Jesus coming to him, out of the wilderness, as some think, where he had been tempted by the devil; but then it must follow, that he was not amongst the crowd, ver. 26, standing in the midst of them, when the messengers were there; and it should appear by ver. 32 and 33, that this which is here recorded happened after Christ's baptism by John (of which this evangelist saith nothing): it seemeth rather to be understood of another coming of Christ to John after he had been baptized, when John, seeing him, pointed as it were with his finger to him, (for the term Behold seemeth to be here used demonstratively,) showing them the person whom he would have them cast their eye upon; whom he calls, the Lamb of God, not only to denote his excellency, as we read of the night of the Lord, Exod. xii. 42, and the bread of God, Lev. xxi. 21; which indeed Christ was, being without blemish, 1 Pet. i. 19; but with reference to the lambs used in the Jewish sacrifices, not only at the passover, Exod. xii. 5, but in the daily sacrifice, Exod. xxix. 38; Lev. i. 10, or the burnt-offering; and in the peace-offering, Lev. iii. 7, and in the sin-offering, Lev. iv. 32. He calls Christ the Lamb of God, probably, because divers of the priests were there to hear, and (as appears, ver. 39) it was nigh the time of their daily sacrifice; that so he might remind them that Christ was the truth and Anti-type to all their sacrifices. Which taketh away the sin of the world; ὁ ἁλων, the word signifies both to take up, and to take away: which taketh away the sin of the world, as God, to whom it belongs q Ex. 12. 2.

1a. 63. 7.
ver. 36.
Acta 8. 32.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
Rev. 5. 6. &c.
r 1a. 53. 11.
1 Cor. 15. 3.
Gal. 1. 4. Heb. 1. 2. & 2. 17. & 9. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 24. & 3. 18. 1 John 2. 2. & 3. 5. & 4. 10.
Rev. 1. 5. 1 Cor. bearth.

to forgive sin; and this he did by taking it upon himself, (so it is translated, Matt. xvi. 24.) expiating it, which expiation is followed by a plenary remission, and taking it away, both the punishment of it, and the root, and body, and power of it; redeeming them as from the grave and hell, due to man for sin; so from a vain conversation, 1 Pet. i. 18; and not doing this for the Jews only, but for the Gentiles also, 1 John ii. 2, for many in the world, being he without whom there is no remission, Acts iv. 12. Nor doth his gracious act cease at any time, it is a work he is always doing, and which none but he can do: ministers may persuade, priests of old offered lambs and other beasts in sacrifice; but he alone taketh away sin. So that, as what he said to the messengers of the sanhedrim gave all the honour of any valuable effect of baptism to Christ; so, what he saith here gives him all the honour of any good effect of preaching, or any good effect of our ministry; it is he alone, who (when we have said or done what we can) taketh away the sin of the world.

30 * This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

And (saith he) this is he of whom I said, (as ver. 15.) He cometh after me in order of time and ministry, but is more excellent than I am. See the notes on ver. 15.

31 And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

This verse is best expounded by ver. 33, where the same words are repeated, I knew him not; and it is added, but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, &c. Let any should think that Christ and John had compacted together to give one another credit, or that there was some near relation betwixt John and Christ, John saith, I knew him not; for Christ had spent his time at home, Luke ii. 51, John had lived in desert places; the providence of God so ordering it, that John should not know Christ so much as by face, until that time came when Christ was to be made manifest to Israel. But that God might make his Son manifest unto Israel, when God by an extraordinary mission sent John to baptize with water, he gave him this token, That he upon whom he should see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, as ver. 33, that was the Messiah, the Lamb of God, that should take away the sin of the world; he who should baptize with the Holy Ghost. And therefore (saith John) am I come baptizing with water. I did not run without sending, nor introduce a new rite or sacrament without commission; but being thus sent of God, and that I might give Christ an opportunity of coming to me, that I might see the Spirit descending and remaining upon him. From whence we learn, that none but Christ can institute a sacrament. John baptized not, till he was sent to baptize with water.

32 * And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

Saith John, According to the revelation which I had, when I received my extraordinary mission to baptize, so it fell out to me, I did see, when he was baptized, the heaven opening, and a representation of the Spirit of God (for no man can see God and live) descending. The form of the representation was like that of a dove. And it was not a mere transient sight, but it did for some time abide upon that person, in that sensible representation; by that token I knew that he was the Son of God.

33 And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

And I knew him not; I was a stranger to him; I knew him in a sense, when I leaped in my mother's womb, upon his mother's coming to see my mother, Luke i. 41; but that (as impressions made upon infants use to do) wore off. I had some impression upon me at that time when he came t Mat. 3. 1.

Matt. 3. 6.
Luke 1. 17.
75. 27. & 3.
3, 4.

u Mat. 3. 16.
Mark 1. 10.
Luke 3. 22.
ch. 5. 32.

x Mat. 3. 11.
Acta 1. 5. &
2. 4. & 10. 44.
& 19. 6.

towards me to be baptized, which made me say to him, (as Matt. iii. 14.) I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? But yet I was not certain, though I knew he was in the crowd of people, that he was the person designed, and whose work it should be to baptize with the Holy Ghost, until the same God that had given me that sign fulfilled it to me.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

But when I saw that, I could not but believe, and also bear an open testimony to the world, that this man was not mere man, but the eternal Son of that God, who sent me to baptize with water; reserving still to himself the Divine power of blessing that holy sacrament, and conferring the Holy Ghost in regenerating habits, working like fire, in purging away the dross of souls, and like water, washing away the filth of sin, Matt. iii. 11; John iii. 5.

35 ¶ Again the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples;

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, <sup>y ver. 29.</sup> Behold the Lamb of God!

The next day after that the messengers who came from Jerusalem had been with John, John stood, and two of his disciples; whether he was preaching or no it is not said; but John standing with them, saw Christ walking, whence, or whither, is not said; but as a good man is always taking opportunity to commend Christ to others, so John upon this occasion took advantage further to make Christ known to those two men, (who they were, we shall hear in the following verses,) and repeats the words he had said before, Behold the Lamb of God! (See the notes on ver. 27.) Thus good and faithful ministers will continually be inviting their disciples to Christ, taking them off from further consideration of themselves, and, as ministers, to show them the way to Christ.

37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

God blessed the verbal testimony that John had given so far, that they stood in no need of any miracle to confirm it, but upon their hearing John speak, they followed Jesus: as yet, not as his apostles; for their call to that office was afterward (as we shall hear); nor yet, so as no more to depart from him: but there was created in them a further desire of knowledge of him and acquaintance with him.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where ¶ dwellest thou?

<sup>¶ Or, Adept.</sup> Christ, as he walked, turning him, and seeing two men following him, inquireth of their end, what they sought; to teach us, in all our religious motions and actions, to do the like; for the end will contribute much to specify the action, and to make it good or bad. They gave him that honourable title which was then in fashion, by and under which they were wont to speak to those upon whom they relied for instruction, whose doctrine they desired to know, and with whom they desired to converse, and to learn of him. They asked him where he abode, or where he lodged.

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was <sup>¶ That was two hours before night.</sup> ¶ about the tenth hour.

Our Lord discerning the end of their following him to be sincere and good, invites them to come and see where his lodging was; for he elsewhere telleth us, that he had not a house wherein to hide his head. They came and saw his lodgings; where, or of what nature they were, we are not told, but we never read that he during his whole pilgrimage amongst us had any stately or splendid lodgings. The text saith that these two disciples abode with him that day; whether only the two or three remaining hours of the same day, (for it was now about four of the clock afternoon, which answers the tenth hour according to the Jewish account,) or another whole day, being the sabbath day, (as some think,) we are not told, nor can conclude; certain it is, they abode with him the remaining part of that day, from four of the clock till night.

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, ¶ Matt. 4. 18. Simon Peter's brother.

Concerning the call of this Andrew to the apostleship, see Matt. iv. 18, 19, and Mark i. 16, 17. That was at another time, and in another manner: Christ here only invited them to come and see where he lodged.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, ¶ the Christ. <sup>¶ Or, the anointed.</sup>

It should seem that both the disciples (after their converse with Christ at the place where he lodged) went together to look for Peter, Andrew's brother. Andrew first found him, and tells him (with great joy) that he and that other disciple had found the Messias, prophesied of by Daniel, and in the expectation of whom the disciples and the Jews lived. The term Messiah in Hebrew is the same with Christ in Greek, and both signify the same with Anointed in English. The article in this place is emphatical, not merely prepositive, as in other places, but signifying, that Anointed; for other kings, and priests, and prophets were also anointed, and God's people are called anointed; but he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, having the Spirit not given him by measure.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: ¶ thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, ¶ A stone. <sup>¶ Or, Peter.</sup>

Andrew having found his brother Simon, conducts him to Jesus. Andrew, and Simon, and Philip were citizens of Bethsaida, ver. 44, which was a city of Galilee; how near to the place where John baptized, or Christ lodged, we cannot say. Probably Simon was one of John's disciples, and came to attend his ministry; so as the disciples only sought him in the crowd, and came with him to Christ. When Christ beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon; he knew him, and called him by name, and told him his father's name, Jonas, and giveth him a new name, Cephas, which by interpretation doth not signify a head, (as the popish disputant at Berne urged, to prove him the head of the church, as if it had been a Greek word, and came from κεφαλή; or, as he pretended, ridiculously enough, from an old Greek word, κεφας,) but a stone (as this text tells us); by which name we find him called, 1 Cor. i. 12; iii. 22; ix. 5; xv. 5; Gal. ii. 9: in other places Peter, which signifieth a stone also, or a rock. Cephas is a Syriac word, Peter a Greek word: Christ gave him the name. Both Cephas and Peter are by interpretation, a stone. Beza thinks that our Saviour did not here give him that name, but foretell that he should be so called. Casaubon thinks that the name was here given to him, and with it a new spirit; that whereas before he was (according to his father's name Jonas, which signifies a dove) fearful and timorous, from this time forward he was as a rock, steady, firm, and full of courage and constancy: but it is a greater question how this text is to be reconciled with Matt. iv. 18—20, where Andrew and Peter are both said to be espied by Christ, walking by the sea of Galilee; and Luke v. 10, where Simon is reported to be called after they had taken a great draught of fish; and with Mark iii. 13, and Luke vi. 13, where all the apostles are named as called at one and the same time. Doubtless the calls were different. This in John seems rather to be a prophecy than a call. Those texts, Matt. iv. 18—20, and Luke v. 10, seem to be their calls to a discipleship. The other texts, Mark iii. 13; Luke vi. 13, respect their election to the apostleship, and the mission of them.

43 ¶ The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

All this while Christ seemeth to have been in Judea, which was the most famous province. The day after Peter had thus been with him, he had a mind to go into Galilee; out of that he designed to choose his disciples; and that being the country where he had been educated, he designed in a more special manner to honour it with the first fruit of his public ministry. There he findeth Philip (the name signifieth, a lover of horses). He calleth him to be his disciple.

<sup>b ch. 12. 21.</sup> 44 Now <sup>b</sup> Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

This Philip was a citizen of Bethsaida (the word signifies in the Hebrew, The house of fruits, or of huntsmen). Andrew and Peter (mentioned before) both of them lived there. It was one of those cities where Christ did most of his mighty works, Matt. xi. 20.

45 Philip findeth <sup>c</sup> Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom <sup>d</sup> Moses in the law, and the <sup>e</sup> prophets, did write, Jesus <sup>f</sup> of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

Philip having himself discovered Christ, is not willing to eat his morsels alone, but desires to communicate his discovery to others; he finds (whether casually, or upon search, is not said) one Nathanael, he was of Cana in Galilee, chap. xxi. 2. (The name is a Hebrew name, signifying, The gift of God; some think it the same with Nathanael, 1 Chron. xv. 24.) Having found him, he tells him with great joy, that they had found him of whom Moses had wrote in the law, the Shiloh, mentioned Gen. xlix. 10, the Prophet, mentioned Deut. xviii. 15, the Branch of the Lord, mentioned Isa. iv. 2, the Messiah, mentioned by Daniel, Dan. ix. 25, 26, and all the other prophets, him whom they usually called Jesus of Nazareth. (there he was conceived, there he was bred, Luke ii. 4, 51, though he was born in Bethlehem of Judah, ver. 4.) and who was commonly thought to be the son of Joseph. If Philip did only cum vulgo loqui, speak as was commonly said, though himself knew and believed other things, he is not to be blamed; but the most think Philip discovered here his own weakness, both in thinking Christ the son of Joseph, and to have been born at Nazareth. It is certain that the apostles themselves at first, yea, and till Christ's resurrection from the dead, had a very imperfect notion of Christ as the true Messiah. Grace may consist with great weakness as to knowledge.

<sup>g ch. 7. 41, 42, 52.</sup> 46 And Nathanael said unto him, <sup>h</sup> Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

The words of Philip begat a prejudice in Nathanael, as to what he said. It was prophesied, Micah v. 2, that the Messiah should come out of Bethlehem. So, chap. vii. 41, 42, some of the people said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was? Nazareth was not only a poor little place, (for so Bethlehem also was,) but a place which the Scripture never mentioned as the place from whence the Messiah should arise; a place that God had not honoured with the production of a prophet. By any good thing seems to be meant, the Messiah, or any prophet, or (more generally) any thing which is noble and excellent, and of any remark. So prone are we to think that the kingdom of God comes with observation, that we know not how to fancy how great things should be done by little means, and great persons should arise out of little, contemptible places. Whereas God chooseth the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things to confound the mighty; and base things of the world, to confound the wise, 1 Cor. i. 25—28. Philip saith unto him, Come and see; Philip, not knowing how to answer Nathanael's objection, and to remove his prejudice, wisheth him himself to go, and make up a judgment. Wise men ought to do this, and not to take up prejudices from reports and common vogue.

<sup>h Pa. 22. 2, & 73. 1, ch. 8. 30, Rom. 2. 28, 29, & 8. 6.</sup> 47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and saith of him, Behold <sup>i</sup> an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!

They are not all Israel, which are of Israel, Rom. ix. 6. For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, Rom. ii. 28, 29. Christ seeing Nathanael (though he was prejudiced by Philip's mistake, or the common mistake of his nation) coming to see him, and seeing not only his body and bodily motion, but his heart also, and the motions of that, saith of him, Behold one who is not only born an Israelite, but is a true Israelite, like his father Jacob, a plain man, Gen. xxv. 27; in whom is no guile; in whom there is no deceit, no doubleness of heart. Such ought Christians to be, no crafty, deceitful, double-minded men, but men of great sincerity and plainness of heart, laying aside all malice, and all guile, 1 Pet. ii. 1, like little children, Matt. xviii. 3.

48 Nathanael saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee.

Nathanael wondereth how Christ should know him, having not been of his familiar acquaintance. Christ tells him he saw him under the fig tree, before ever Philip called him. That was a very hot country, wherein people sought shadowy places; hence we read of sitting under their own vines and fig-trees, Micah iv. 4; Zech. iii. 10; and it is likely that those being two luxuriant plants, that had large leaves, and ran out in long boughs, in hot weather they might under the covert of these plants not only sit as in an arbour to converse one with another, but also perform religious duties. Whether Christ saw him there eating and drinking, or conversing with friends, or reading, or praying, the Scripture saith not, and it is but vainly guessed; it is enough that by his telling this to him, he let him know that he saw him, though he was not in his view, and so was omnipresent and omniscient. Christ seeth us, where we are, and what we do, when we see not him; and he seeth our hearts, whether they be single or double, plain, or false and deceitful; which as in many cases it affordeth us much comfort, so it admonisheth us to be at all times in the fear of the Lord.

49 Nathanael answered and saith unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art <sup>j</sup> the King of Israel.

The term Rabbi, which Nathanael here giveth to Christ, is of the same significancy with Rabban, and Rabboni, John xx. 16, Rabban, Rabbi, Rabbi, all which signify Master, and my Master; a name which in that age they usually gave their teachers, as a title of honour, Matt. xxiii. 7, 8, titles that began about the time of our Saviour; for Buxtorf tells us, purer antiquity gave no such titles to their teachers or prophets, thinking it not possible to give those persons (extraordinarily sent of God) titles answerable to their dignity. They say, Hillel, about our Saviour's time, was the first who was so called; Rabban was counted the highest, Rabbi the next, Rabbi the least. Rabban, they say, lasted about two hundred years, given to seven after Hillel. Nathanael calls him also the Son of God, as Peter and the other disciples did, Matt. xiv. 33, and Peter, Matt. xvi. 16. But it appeareth, by many following passages, that they had but a faint persuasion of this, till he was declared so with power, by his resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. He acknowledgeth Christ also the King of Israel, that is, the true Messiah. This was the title of the Messiah, Matt. xxi. 5; xxvii. 11.

50 Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these.

Christ encourageth the beginnings of faith in the souls of his people, and magnifies Nathanael's faith from the revelation which he had, which was but imperfect; for Christ had said no more, than that he had seen him under the fig tree before Philip called him. He tells him that he should see greater things than these. To him that hath, shall be given. What those greater things are, which our Lord here meaneth, he telleth him, in part at least, ver. 51.

51 And he saith unto him, Verily, verily,

1 Gen. 28. 12. I say unto you, 'Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man.

These things he ushers in with a Verily, verily, and declareth them spoken not to Nathanael alone, but unto you; viz. all you that are my disciples indeed, who are (like Nathanael) true Israelites, in whom there is no guile. For the terms, Amen, Amen, (by us translated, Verily, verily,) some of the ancients accounted them an oath; but the most learned modern writers have seen no reason to agree with them. Surely (see a large discourse about these particles in our learned Fuller, his Miscellan. l. 1. cap. 2, to which nothing need be added) if Amen is never used in the Old Testament but as a term of prayer or wishing, in the New Testament it is used to assert or affirm a thing, or as a particle of wishing and prayer. The word in the Hebrew properly signifies, truth, Isa. lxxv. 16; whence Christ (the truth) is called the Amen, Rev. iii. 14. As the prophets were wont to begin their discourses with The word of the Lord, and Thus saith the Lord, to assert the truth of what they were about to say; so Christ, to show that himself was God, and spake from himself, beginneth with Amen; and Amen, Amen, sometimes: it is observed that John constantly doubles the particle, and saith Amen, Amen, that is, Verily, verily; either (as interpreters say) for further confirmation of the thing, or to get the greater attention, or to assert as well the truth of the speaker as of the thing spoken. Now the thing spoken followeth as a thing promised, not to Nathanael only, but to all believers, that they should see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. Some think that hereby is meant the spiritual, metaphorical opening of heaven to believers by Christ. But it seems more properly to signify such an opening of the heavens as we read of, Matt. iii. 16. Some understand it of the appearances of angels to Christ at his passion, and resurrection, and ascension; but it seems rather to refer to the day of judgment, when ten thousands of angels shall wait upon Christ, as the Judge of the quick and the dead, and minister unto him; which ministration, they say, is expressed by the terms of ascending and descending, with reference (doubtless) to Jacob's vision, Gen. xxviii. 12: Jacob saw it sleeping, Nathanael and other believers shall see it with open eyes. Others interpret it more generally, viz. You shall see as many miracles as if you saw the heavens opened, and the angels ascending and descending. Others think it referreth to some further appearances of the angels to Christ in their ministration to him than the Scripture records. Christ doth not say, You shall see angels ascending and descending upon me, but upon the Son of man; by which our learned Lightfoot saith, he did not only declare himself to be truly man, but the Second Adam, in whom what was lost in the first was to be restored. It is observed, that only Ezekiel in the Old Testament, and Christ in the New Testament, are thus called; and that Christ was never thus called but by himself. Ezekiel was doubtless so called to distinguish him from those spiritual beings with which he often conversed: Christ, to distinguish his human nature from his Divine nature, both which (in him) made up one person. Christ's calling himself so was but a further indication of his making himself of no reputation, while he was in the form of a servant. Others think, that the Son of man in the gospel, used by Christ, signifies no more than I, and me; (it being usual in the Hebrew dialect for persons to speak of themselves in the third person;) so, upon the Son of man, is, upon me, who am truly man. Chemnitz thinks, that as the term Messiah (by which the people commonly called Christ) was taken out of Daniel; so this term, by Christ applied to the same person, is taken out thence too, Dan. vii. 13, where it is said, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, &c.; and that Christ did ordinarily so call himself, to correspond with the prophecy of Daniel, to assert himself truly man, and to declare himself his Father's servant, according to the prophecy, Isa. xlii. 1.

CHAP. II

Christ turneth water into wine in Cana of Galilee, 1—11. He goeth to Capernaum, 12; thence to Jerusalem, where he driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple, 13—17. He giveth his own death and resurrection for a sign, 18—22. Many believe in him because of his miracles, but he would not trust himself unto them, 23—25.

AND the third day there was a marriage in <sup>a</sup> Cana of Galilee; and the mother of <sup>b</sup> Jesus was there: <sup>c</sup> See Josh. 19. 28.

Whether it was the third day after that our Saviour had left the province of Judea, or the third day after Philip came to him, or after Peter or Nathanael came to him, is hardly worth the disputing; if it be to be interpreted with relation to ver. 43 of the former chapter, (which speaks of the day following,) it must be the third day after Simon came to Christ, there happened to be a marriage in Cana of Galilee. Some reckon three cities of this name; one in the lot of Manasseh, another in the lot of Ephraim, another in the lot of Asher. This Cana is concluded by most interpreters to be the same mentioned, Josh. xix. 28, which was in the tribe of Asher, which was in Galilee: some others say, it was another Cana, near to Capernaum. At this wedding feast was the virgin Mary, our Lord's mother; and it is probable that the persons for whose marriage the feast was solemnized were some of the virgin's kindred or near relations. Some think, from the virgin's taking notice of the want of wine, that it was a family where she had either a constant charge, or the charge for that day.

2 And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage.

Whether only the five disciples mentioned in the former chapter, or some others also, the Scripture doth not say. Christ and his disciples being at this marriage feast, both lets us know that feasting at such a time is proper, and that the most severe religious persons may lawfully be present at such meetings; only they are obliged to keep to rules of frugality, modesty, and sobriety, to a breach of which possibly such meetings may give more temptations.

3 And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine.

The word ὑπέλαβον may as well be translated, coming short, or behind, as wanting; and so some think it to be understood; but Mary tells Jesus, they had no wine: they either had none, or she discerned it came short; they had not enough. It lets us know the frugality of him who made the feast. But whether Mary told her Son of it in expectation that he should supply it by a miracle, or that he should entertain the company with some pious discourse while the want should be supplied, is not so easy to determine: that which seems to oppose the first (and most generally received) opinion, is, that this was the first miracle he wrought, which we have upon record; nor had our Saviour by any words given her hope to see any miraculous operations from him; for though some say he had, from the last verse of the former chapter, yet the words can hardly be strained to such a sense, nor doth it appear that Mary was in Judea to hear them. But yet it seems probable she had some such expectation, both from our Saviour's answer, ver. 4, and from her saying to the servants, ver. 5, Whatever he say unto you, do it; and though Christ had as yet done no public miracle, yet what the virgin might have seen of him in thirty years' time, while he lived at home with her, we cannot tell.

4 Jesus saith unto her, <sup>b</sup> Woman, <sup>c</sup> what have I to do with thee? <sup>d</sup> mine hour is not yet come. <sup>e</sup> ch. 12. 28.
<sup>f</sup> See 2 Sam. 12. 10. & 18. 22.
<sup>g</sup> ch. 7. 6.

That it was ordinary with the Jews, speaking to women, to call them by the name of their sex, is plain from Matt. xv. 28; Luke xiii. 12; xxii. 57; John iv. 21. But that, speaking to their relations, they were wont to own their relation in their compellation, sometimes is also evident, from 1 Kings ii. 20, Ask on, my mother. So as our Saviour's here calling the blessed virgin, Woman, not mother, is agreed by most to signify to her, that in this thing he did not own her as his mother, and so clothed with an authority to command him. And indeed so much the next words (what have I to do with thee?) signify, which is a form of speech that both signifies some displeasure for her unseasonable interrupting him, and also that she had no right nor authority upon him in this thing. See the use of the same phrase, Judg. xi. 12; 2 Sam. xvi. 10; Ezra iv. 3; Matt. viii. 29; xxvii. 19. None was more obedient and respective to his parents than our Saviour, Luke ii. 51, therein fulfilling the will of God, Jer. xxxv. 13, 14; but in the business of his calling he regarded them not, Matt. xii. 48; Luke ii. 49; and hath hereby taught us our duty, to prefer our obedience to our heavenly Father before our obedience to any earthly relation, Matt. x. 37; Luke xiv. 26. He hath also hereby taught us, that the blessed virgin is not to be preferred before her Son (as the papists do). Besides this, our Lord giveth another reason for his not present hearkening to his mother, mine hour is not yet come; either, because the time was not yet come to work miracles publicly; or to show her, that she was not to prescribe the time to him when he should work miraculously; thereby also showing us, that for things in this life we are to submit our desires to the Divine will, and to wait God's leisure; yet by this expression he also gives her some hopes that he would in his own time supply this want.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

She plainly by these words declareth her confidence that Christ (notwithstanding the repulse he gave her) would supply this want; and therefore taking no notice of Christ's reprehension of her, she orders the servants to be absolutely obedient to him, doing, without disputing, whatsoever he bid them; and indeed such is the obedience which we all owe to God and Jesus Christ.

6 And there were set there six water-pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

The Jews were wont in their dining-rooms to have water-pots standing; whether one for every guest (upon which account some think here were six) doth not appear. For the contents of these vessels, it is uncertain; the reason is, because the Jewish measures, both for things dry and liquid, are much unknown to us, most countries varying in their measures. According to our measures, these vessels should contain three hogsheads, or near it; but it is not probable that so great vessels of stone should stand in a room: the end of their standing there was for the people to wash in, before they did eat, Matt. xv. 2; Mark vii. 3, and to wash their vessels in, ver. 4. We are certain of the number of the vessels, but not of the contents of them. Some say, they held so much water as, being turned into wine, was enough for one hundred and fifty persons; but we can make no certain judgment of it.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

Either the water was defiled by some persons washing in it, or else the vessels were not full. Our Lord commands them to be filled (the water-pots, not wine vessels) with water, pure water; he commands them all to be filled by the servants, who could attest the miracle, that there was nothing in the vessels but pure water. Here was no new creature to be produced; he doth not therefore command the production of wine out of nothing; but only the transformation of a creature already existent into a creature of another kind. The servants dispute not his command, nor ask any reason of his command, but yield that ready and absolute obedience which we all of us owe to Divine precepts. They fill them, and so full that they could hold no more.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

The Jews had one who was to order the affairs of their feast, and who is upon that account called the master, or governor, of it; to whom our Saviour directs, that some of this newly-made wine should be carried; either that they might not suspect it was by some art provided by him, or because he was of the best judgment in those affairs. The servants yield the same ready obedience to his commands which they had before yielded.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

Our Saviour's action, by which he turned the water into wine, being not obvious to the senses of any; but only the secret motion of his will, willing the thing to be; is not recorded, only the effect and the consequents of it are. The papists would from hence argue, that the bread in the sacrament may be called bread, though it be transubstantiated, as the water here is called water, though it were turned into wine; but it must be observed, that it is not here called water, without the addition of that was made wine: we have no such addition in the gospel, where the sacramental bread is called bread; it is not said, the bread which now is turned into the flesh of Christ; nor doth the Scripture any where (as here) attest any such transubstantiation. The governor of the feast had a cup of wine presented to him, but knew not whence it came; only the servants, who by Christ's command first filled the vessels, and drew out this cupful, they knew.

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

The governor calls the bridegroom, (at whose cost the provision for the feast was to be provided,) and mindeth him, that he seemed to have done contrary to the common practice of such as made feasts; for they used to bring forth their best wine first, when men's palates were quickest, and least adulterated; and worse after that they had drank well; so the word μεθυσθῶσι signifies, as appears by the Septuagint's translation of the Hebrew word so signifying, Gen. xliii. 34; Hag. i. 6; not only men's distemp'ring themselves with wine, which it also sometimes signifieth; and this speaketh our translation of it, 1 Cor. xi. 21, are drunken, something hard, the word not necessarily nor always so signifying; and they must be very uncharitable to the primitive church of Corinth, who can think that it would permit persons actually drunken to come to the Lord's table. But the custom, it seems, was, if they had any wine worse than another, to bring it out to their guests after that the edge of their palates was a little blunted with the taste of better. Now this bridegroom, as the governor of the feast (who knew nothing of the miracle) thought, had kept his briskest and most generous wine to the last; thereby giving a great approbation of the miracle, not only owning it to be true wine, but much better than they had before at the feast.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples believed on him.

The sense is not, that this was the first miracle which Christ wrought in Cana of Galilee; but this was the first miracle which Christ wrought after he was entered upon the public ministry, and it was wrought in that Cana which is within the confines of Galilee, either in the lot of Zebulun or Asher: yet there are some who would not have it the first miracle which Christ wrought, but the first which he wrought in that place; but there is no reason for such an interpretation; for then there had been no reason for the following words, for Christ did not manifest his glory there only; though some object those wonderful or miraculous things happening at our Saviour's birth, of which we read, Matt. ii. 9; Luke ii. 9. Yet as some distinguish betwixt mira and miracula, so others give a more plain and satisfactory answer, telling us those were miraculous operations more proper to the Father and the Spirit, thereby attesting the Deity of Christ, than to Christ considered as God-man. This was the first of those miraculous operations which were wrought by Christ Jesus as God-man, by which he manifested his glory, the glory men-mentioned chap. i. 14, as of the only begotten of the Father; his Divine majesty and power. And his disciples, who before believed on him, John i. 41, 45, now more firmly believed on him, John xiv. 1, as Mediator. In Scripture that is often said to be, which doth not commence, but increase from that time and occasion.

12 ¶ After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.

Capernaum was a city lifted up to heaven, for mercies of all sorts, which Christ foretold, Matt. xi. 23, should be brought down to hell, for their contempt of his doctrine and miracles. It was in the tribe of Naphtali, whose lot was contiguous to Zebulun, and lay on the north-east of it; a place where Christ afterwards preached much, and wrought many miracles, Matt. viii. 13, 14; ix. 18; Mark ii. 1; v. 22; a place brought so low in Hierom's time, that it scarce consisted of seven poor cottages of fishermen. Thither at this time went Christ, and his mother, and his brethren, (by which term the Scripture often expresseth any near kinsmen,) and his disciples; whether only the five mentioned in the former chapter, or others also, is not said. But they did not at that time stay long there, probably because the passover time (when they were to be at Jerusalem) was so nigh, as would not admit any long stay before they began their journey; and it is likely that the company mentioned here to be with Christ at Capernaum, did also design to go along with him to the passover, of which we next read.

13 ¶ And the Jews' Passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem, Concerning the Jewish passover we have once and again spoken in our notes on the other evangelists. The institution of it was Exod. xii. It was to be solemnized yearly in the place which the Lord should choose, according to the law, Deut. xvi. 6. Christ, though he was not naturally subject to the law, yet to fulfil all righteousness, and to redeem his people from the curse of the law, Gal. iv. 5, kept the passover yearly, taking also advantage from the conflux of the people to Jerusalem at that time, to make himself and his doctrine more known. None of the other evangelists make mention of more than one passover betwixt the time of Christ's baptism and death: John plainly mentions three, one here, another in chap. vi. 4, the last, chap. xviii. 39; and some think that he mentioneth another, though more obscurely, chap. v. 1. Our Lord was at them all.

14 ¶ And found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting:

Matt. xxi. 12; Luke xix. 45, is a piece of history so like this, that some have questioned whether it mentioneth not the same individual matter of fact; but it is apparent that it doth not, 1. Because St. John mentioneth it as done three years before it, at the first passover; all the other evangelists mention what they report as done at the fourth passover. 2. The circumstances of the narrative make it appear. (1.) John mentions only the ejection of the sellers; all the others mention the ejection both of the buyers and sellers. (2.) Here, he only saith they had made his Father's house a place of merchandise; the others say, that whereas it was written, it should be called a house of prayer, they had made it a den of thieves. (3.) Here he only bids them that sold doves take their goods away; the others say he overturned the seats of them that sold doves: so as our Saviour plainly appeareth to have done this twice, at his first passover and at the last. For the more full explication of the parts of this history, see our notes on Matt. xxi. 12; Mark xi. 15; Luke xix. 45. The reason of their bringing oxen, and sheep, and doves into the temple, was to supply those that came afar off, and could not bring their sacrifices with them, with such sacrifices as the law required in several cases. The money-changers were there, to change the people's money into half-shekels, every one being obliged to offer his half-shekel, Exod. xxx. 13. Our Saviour did not condemn this course of accommodating of people; but blameth the covetousness of the priests, who for their private lucre had made the temple their marketplace, whereas there was room enough elsewhere.

15 And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables;

It concerns not us to inquire where our Saviour had the small cords, of which he made his whip; there were doubtless cords enough at hand, taken off from beasts brought thither, though he was himself in no Franciscan habit, as the papists idly dream. But herein was the mighty power of God seen, that Christ, a single, private, obscure person, should without any more noise or opposition drive out the multitude of these hucksters, and overturn their tables. Nor I think (after the consideration of this circumstance) need we inquire by what authority he did this? It was prophesied of him, Mal. iii. 1, that he should come to his temple; and, ver. 3, should sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver. Christ here, according to that prophecy, cometh to his temple, and begins to purge it.

16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.

At this his first coming, he gives them that sold doves a liberty to take their goods away; but at the last coming, Matt. xxi. 12, it is said, he overturned their seats. Those that think this precedent sufficient to vindicate private persons' tumultuous pulling down images, seem not to consider, that Christ was no private person, (though so esteemed,) and did what he did as Lord of his house. Those who urge it as inferring magistrates' and superiors' duty in this case, urge it well; for it may well be from hence concluded, that it is the will of Christ, that places set apart for public worship, should neither wickedly be made dens of thieves, nor yet indecently made places for men to buy and sell in; though we can ascribe no such holiness to any place as to the temple, which had not only a particular dedication, but was built by God's order, his acceptance of it declared, and had peculiar promises annexed to it; besides its prefiguration of Christ (of which we shall speak more afterward); yet even nature itself teacheth, that there is a decent reverence and respect due to such places. This action of Christ's also, before he had published the doctrine of the gospel, instructs us, that those who have authority are not always to refrain from removing instruments of superstition and idolatry, or gross and indecent corruptions, until people be first by the preaching of the true doctrine persuaded willingly to part with them. But if this were to make God's house a place of merchandise for men, there to sell oxen, and sheep, and doves, and keep shops for changing money; what do papists make such houses, by their showing their relics and images to people, thereby to get money for their priests, and for selling pardons, indulgences, &c.? Never were God's houses to that degree made places of merchandise, and dens of thieves, if every one that cheateth for his profit be (as he is) a thief.

17 And his disciples remembered that it was written, The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.

The disciples, as well as the rest of the people there present, could not but be astonished at this so strange a thing, to see a single person, and he in no repute but as a private person, to make a whip, and with authority drive the buyers and sellers out of the temple, and nobody to oppose him; but they remembered the words of David, Psal. lxxix. 9. Some think that John here reports what they did after Christ's resurrection; and indeed, whoso considereth the following part of the gospel history, would think that it were so; for they did not seem so early to have had a persuasion of Christ's Divine nature, nor that he was the Messiah; or if they at this time remembered it, and apprehended that Christ was the Son of David, the impression seems to have worn off. It is a greater question whether Psal. lxxix. (from whence this quotation is) is to be understood of Christ, properly and literally, or merely as the Antitype to David, of whom that Psalm is literally to be understood? Some of the Lutherans think that Psalm primarily concerned Christ. Mr. Calvin and others think it only concerned Christ as David's Antitype. The former, for their opinion, take notice of the frequent quotation of it in the New Testament, Matt. xxvii. 48; John xix. 28; Acts i. 20; Rom. xv. 3. The other urge that there are some things in that Psalm which cannot agree to Christ. The matter is not much. Zeal is nothing but a warmth of love and anger. It is good to be zealous, yea, swallowed up with zeal, in a good cause; but men must take heed of the Pharisaical zeal, not according to knowledge. Christ was zealous, but the cause was good.

18 ¶ Then answered the Jews and said unto him, "What sign shewest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?"

Which of the Jews, whether some of the magistrates, or the priests, (who were more specially concerned for their profit,) or the common people, or all together, is not said. They undertake not to justify their fact, nor could they deny it, but they ask him what sign he could show them to justify his Divine authority. For this seemeth to have been their principle, that let corruptions and abuses in a church be never so great, yet they were not to be reformed, but either by the ordinary authority of the magistrate, or by an extraordinary authority from God. Such an extraordinary authority they would acknowledge in prophets; but they expected that those who pretended to such an extraordinary Divine mission, should be able to confirm that mission by some miraculous operations, as Moses did, Exod. iv. 30. They had had no prophets now for four hundred years amongst them; the Jews required therefore a sign, 1 Cor. i. 22. The papists were at the same point with the first reformers; but they mistook, for they brought no new doctrine, but still cried, To the law and to the testimony; and where the true doctrine and sacraments are upheld, there is a true church, which hath power to call and send out preachers.

19 Jesus answered and said unto them, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up."

Our Saviour refuseth to give them any sign, but that of his resurrection the third day from the dead. This was the sign to which he afterwards referreth the Pharisees, Matt. xii. 39; Luke xi. 29. Our Saviour's words must not be understood as commanding or licensing them to destroy him, but as foretelling what they would do. It is in Scripture very ordinary to use the imperative mood for the future tense of the indicative; see Gen. xlii. 18; Deut. xxxii. 50; Isa. viii. 9, 10; liv. 1; John xiii. 27. Destroy, is as much as, I know you will destroy, or, If you do destroy this temple, I will build it up in three days. The resurrection of Christ from the dead is ordinarily in Scripture attributed to the Father; but here Christ saith he would do it; and the Spirit, by whom he is said to have been quickened, equally proceedeth both from the Father and the Son. Nor is this the only text where it is attributed to Christ; see chap. xx. 17, 18. It was the work of the Trinity, out of itself, and so the work of all the three Persons. These words were three years after this made a great charge against Christ, Matt. xxvi. 61; but they reported them thus, This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days. He said only, this temple, meaning his body.

20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?

The Jews understood his words of that material temple in which they at this time were, which the best interpreters think was the temple built by Ezra and Zerubbabel; but how to make it out that it was forty-six years building, they are not well agreed. Some say, Cyrus reigned thirty, Cambyses eight, Darius six; these added together make forty-four. Others say that the Magi reigned two years more. Some reckon to Cyrus thirty-one, to his son Cambyses nine, Darius six. Others say that the years wherein the building was hindered during Artaxerxes's time, Ezra iv. 21, added to the two years of Darius, ver. 24, in whose sixth year it was finished, are reckoned together. The Jews thought it strange that our Saviour should undertake in three days to rear a building which had cost their forefathers so many years.

21 But he spake <sup>p</sup> of the temple of his body.

But, alas, our Saviour spake not of their material temple, but of the temple of his body; which yet was proper speaking: for if the apostle calleth our bodies the temple of God, as he doth, 1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 16; it much more may be said so of the body of Christ: for as God dwelt in the temple, and there revealed his will, and would be there worshipped; how properly must the notion of the temple agree to Christ, in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, Col. ii. 9, who revealeth his Father's nature and will to men, Matt. xi. 27. and in whom all must worship him? So as the temple at Jerusalem was every way a most illustrious type of Christ, and Christ might well, speaking concerning his body, say, Destroy this temple; and thus Christ (would these blind Jews have seen it) drew off the Jews from glorying in their temple, Jer. vii. 4; and from the temple, which was but a type, (as the tabernacle was before, Acts vii. 44; Heb. ix. 23, 24,) to himself, prefigured by those houses, Heb. ix. 11. Nor doth he think fit at this time to speak more plainly; for as he knew that the perverse Jews, in seeing would not see, nor bear any such doctrine; so he also knew, that his better disciples were as yet weak in faith; and none putteth new wine into old bottles.

22 When therefore he was risen from the dead, <sup>q</sup> his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

Even Christ's own disciples at the first rather admired than perfectly understood their Lord. It is said of Christ, Luke xxiv. 45, a little before his ascension into heaven, Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scripture. The disciples did not distinctly understand many things till after Christ's resurrection from the dead, when they saw the things accomplished, and when Christ further opened their eyes; which was also further done when the Holy Ghost came upon them in the days of Pentecost. Thus we hear for the time to come; and the seed which lieth a long time under the clods, at last springeth up through the influence of heaven upon it. And they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said; the disciples then more clearly and more firmly believed the Scriptures, and were able to make a clearer application and interpretation of them. By the Scripture here, are meant the Scriptures of the Old Testament; to which is added, and the word which Jesus had said. Christ's words gave them a clearer insight into the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and the harmony of the writings of the Old Testament with Christ's words under the New Testament, confirmed the disciples' faith in both.

23 ¶ Now when he was in Jerusalem at the Passover, in the feast day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did.

To believe in Christ's name, and to believe in Christ himself, are one and the same thing; as it is the same to call upon God, and to call upon the name of God: so Acts iii. 16. The meaning is, that they believed the things which were published concerning his person and office: yet the periphrasis, Believed in his name, is not vain; but declareth a mutual relation betwixt God and the word, by the preaching of which he maketh himself known to the world. True faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. I think it is to no purpose disputed here by some, whether the faith here mentioned was true faith, yea or no. It appeareth by what followeth, that it was not true justifying faith; but it was true in its kind. To make up true justifying, saving faith, which the apostle calls the faith of God's elect, three things are required: 1. A knowledge of the proposition of the word revealing Christ: this is acquired by reading, hearing, meditation, &c. 2. The second is assent, which is the act of the understanding, agreeing in the truth of the word revealed, when such an assent is given to a proposition, if merely upon the Divine revelation of it: this is faith, a true faith in its kind. 3. Upon this now (in those who savingly believe) the will closeth with Christ as an adequate object; for it receiveth him, accepteth him, relies on him as its Saviour, and moveth by the affections to love, desire, hope, rejoice in him; and commandeth the outward man into an obedience to his law. Now it is very possible, that, through a common influence of the Holy Spirit of God, men upon the hearing of the word, especially having the advantage of seeing miraculous operations confirming the word, may give a true assent to the proposition of the word, as a proposition of truth, and yet may never receive Christ as their Saviour, close with him, trust in him, desire, love, or obey him; this was the case of these persons, many at least of them. They believed, seeing the miracles which Christ did: they wanted a due knowledge of Christ founded in the word; neither had they any certain, steady, fixed assent, founded in the discerning the truth of the proposition; their assent was sudden, founded only upon the miracles they saw wrought; so as though they might have some confidence in him, as a famous person, and some great prince, from whom they might expect some earthly good, yet this was all, which was far enough from true saving faith.

24 But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men, Christ did not take all these seeming believers into his bosom, nor call them after him, nor maintain any familiar fellowship and communion with them; but made haste again into Galilee, till his time was come, knowing that in so public a place of danger they were not to be trusted; for being God blessed for ever, he had knowledge of the hearts of all men.

25 And needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man.

And needed not any information concerning the principles and humours of all men; for he perfectly knew men, not only from their more external acts and behaviours, (as we know them,) but he knew what was in them, searching the hearts, and trying the reins, which is the property of God alone, 1 Kings viii. 39; Psal. xxxiii. 15. Here what we formerly observed is again observable, that oftentimes in holy writ, for the further confirmation of a proposition, to a universal affirmative is added a contrary negative. Here ariseth a question, agitated betwixt the Lutherans and the Calvinists, Whether Christ as man knew all things, and what is in the heart of man. They affirm it, because of the personal union of the Divine and human natures in Christ. We say, that although there be such a personal union, yet the properties of each nature remain distinct; upon which account Christ denieth that he, as the Son of man, knew the day and hour of the end of the world. Besides, by the same reason that omniscience be- longeth to the human nature of Christ, omnipotence, infiniteness, and omnipresence, also must; which last indeed they affirm, seeing that without it they were not able to defend their doctrine of consubstantiation, or the presence of the body and blood of Christ, wherever the sacrament of his supper is administered; but this being a matter polemical, we shall not here discourse it. Those who would be satisfied as to what is said on either side, may find enough in Gerard, Hunnius, and Farnovius, on the Lutherans' side; and in Zanchius and others on the Calvinists' side, Zanchius de Natura and Attributis Dei, lib. 3. cap. 2. qu. 16.

CHAP. III

Christ, in a conference with Nicodemus, teacheth him the necessity of regeneration, 1—13; the efficacy of faith in his death, 14, 15; God's great love to mankind in sending his Son for their salvation, 16, 17; and the condemnation for unbelief, 18—21. Jesus baptizeth in Judea, 22, as doth John in Enon, 23, 24. John's doctrine concerning Christ, 25—36.

THERE was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

The particle there being put in only to fit our idiom to the Greek, where is nothing but the verb, signifies nothing to prove that what we read in this chapter was done at Jerusalem. It is a dispute amongst some interpreters, whether he was there or no. It should seem by chap. vii. 50, that Nicodemus's chief residence was there. He was one of the Pharisees, who were a sect (as we have showed before) which had their name either from a Hebrew word, which signifieth to explain, (because they were expounders of the law,) or from another word, which signifieth to divide, because they were separate from others: the opinions have both learned patrons. This man's name in Greek signifies, The victory of the people. He was either the head of a family among the Jews, or a ruler of the synagogue, or one of the sanhedrim: it seemeth most probable he is here called a ruler upon the last account, if we consider chap. vii. 50.

2 *The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.

He came by night to Christ, not, as some (too charitably) possibly may think, that he might have the freer and less interrupted communion and discourse with him; but either through fear, or possibly shame, being a master in Israel, to be looked upon as a scholar going to learn of another. He saluteth him by the name they usually gave to their teachers, (as we showed, chap. i. 49,) and saith, we know, by which he hinteth to us, that not only he, but others of the Pharisees also, knew that he was a teacher sent from God in a more extraordinary manner; and he giveth the reason of this their knowledge, because of those miraculous operations which he had wrought. God hath his number among all orders and sorts of men; and those that are his shall come unto Christ. There was a weakness in the faith and love of this Nicodemus; (his station amongst the Jews was a great temptation to him;) but yet there was a truth of both in him, which further discovered itself, chap. vii. 50, and more upon Christ's death, chap. xix. 39. But here ariseth a greater question, viz. How Nicodemus could conclude that Christ was a teacher sent from God, by his miracles. Answer. It is to be observed, that he doth not say, in the general, that no man does signs or wonders of any kind, unless the power and favour of God be with him. But he speaks particularly and eminently of those things which Jesus did; they were so great in their nature, so real and solid in their proof, so Divine in the manner of performing them by the empire of his will; so holy in their end, to confirm a doctrine most becoming the wisdom and other glorious attributes of God, and that were the verification of the prophecies concerning the Messiah, whose coming it was foretold should be with miraculous healing benefits; that there was the greatest assurance, that none without the omnipotent hand of God could do them; for it is clear by the light of reason and Scripture, that God will not assist by his almighty power the ministers of Satan, to induce those who sincerely search for truth to believe a lie. The magicians indeed performed divers wonders in Egypt, but they were outdone by Moses, to convince the spectators that he was sent from a power infinitely superior to that of evil spirits. Real miracles, that are contrary to the order and exceed the power of nature, can only be produced by creating power, and are wrought to give credit to those who are sent from God. And when God permits false miracles to be done by seducers, that would thereby obtain authority and credit amongst men, the deception is not invincible; for it is foretold expressly to give us warning, that the man of sin shall come with lying wonders, by the working of Satan, 2 Thess. ii. 9; and the heavenly doctrine of the gospel has been confirmed by real miracles, incomparably greater than all the strange things done to give credit to doctrines opposite to it.

3 Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

We observed before, that the term answered doth not always in the New Testament signify a reply to a question before propounded; but sometimes no more than a reply, or the beginning of another speech: whether it doth so here or no, some question. Some think Christ here gives a

1 Sam. 16. 7.
1 Chr. 28. 9.
Matt. 9. 4.
Mark 2. 8.
ch. 5. 64. *
16. 30.
Acts 1. 24. Rev. 2. 23.

a ch. 7. 50.
& 19. 39.

b ch. 9. 16. 33.
Acts 2. 22.
c Acts 10. 38.

d ch. 1. 13.
Gal. 3. 15.
Tit. 3. 5.
Jam. 1. 18.
1 Pet. 1. 23.
1 John 3. 9.
1 Cr. from above.

strict answer to a question which Nicodemus had propounded to him, about the way to enter into the kingdom of God; which question the evangelist sets not down, but leaves to the reader to gather from the answer. Others think that our Saviour knew what he would say, and answered the thoughts of his heart. Others, that he only began a discourse to him about what was highly necessary for him, that was a master in Israel, to understand and know. He begins his discourse with Verily, verily, the import of which we considered, chap. i. 51. The word translated again, is ἀνωθεν, which often signifieth from above; so it signifieth, ver. 31; Jam. i. 17; iii. 15—17. It also signifieth again: Gal. iv. 9, How turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements? That it must be so translated here, and ver. 7, appeareth from Nicodemus's answer in the next verse. But the expression of the second or new birth by this word, which also signifies from above, may possibly reach us, that the new birth must be wrought in the soul from above by the power of God, which is what was said before, chap. i. 12, 13, the necessity of which our Saviour presseth from the impossibility otherwise of his seeing the kingdom of God; by which some understand the kingdom of his glory (as the phrase is used, Luke xviii. 24, 25); others understand it of the manifestation of Christ under the gospel state, or the vigour, power, and effect of the gospel, and the grace thereof. By seeing of it, is meant enjoying, and being made partakers of it, as the term is used, Psal. xvi. 10; John xvi. 10; Rev. xviii. 7. The Jews promised their whole nation a place in the kingdom of the Messiah, as they were born of Abraham, Matt. iii. 9; and the Pharisees promised themselves much from their observation of the law, &c. Christ lets them know neither of these would do, but unless they were wholly changed in their hearts and principles (for so much being born again signifieth; not some partial change as to some things, and in some parts) they could never have any true share, either in the kingdom of grace in this life, or in the kingdom of glory in that life which is to come. It is usual by the civil laws of countries, that none enters into the possession of an earthly kingdom but by the right of birth; and for the obtaining the kingdom of heaven, there must be a new birth, a heavenly renovation of the whole man, soul, body, and spirit, to give him a title, by the wise and unchangeable constitution of God in the gospel, and to qualify him for the enjoyment of it.

4 Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

By the answer of Nicodemus, it should seem that he was an old man; which is also probable, because he was one of the rulers: he puts the case as to himself; I am, saith he, an old man, how should I be born? Can a man enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? How true is that of the apostle, 1 Cor. ii. 14, The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God! What a gross conception doth Nicodemus (though doubtless a learned as well as a great man) discover of regeneration, as if it could not be without a man's mother travailing in birth with him a second time! Nicodemus's question discovers a great deal of ignorance and weakness, but yet a great deal of simplicity and plainness in him; that he did not come, as the Pharisees generally were wont to come to Christ, to catch him by captious questions, but brought discendi pietatem, a pious desire to learn from him, and to be instructed by him. The Pharisees had been used to study the traditions of the elders, and spent their time about unprofitable niceties, as to the meaning of the law: so were not at all versed in the great things which concerned the kingdom of God. The like instance hath been in later ages, the popish divines spending their time generally about nice school questions, showing themselves much ignorant of spiritual things, and the great mysteries of the kingdom of God.

5 Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, *Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

To excite his spirit and attention, our Saviour again expresses the authority of his person, I say; and twice repeats the solemn asseveration, Verily, verily, to show the infallible certainty and importance of what he propounds, that it is a truth worthy of his most serious consideration, and to be embraced with a steadfast belief. After this preface, he declares, if any one be not born of water and the Spirit, to rectify the carnal conceit of Nicodemus about regeneration. In the 3rd verse our Saviour compared the spiritual birth with the natural, and with respect to that a renewed man is born a second time. But in this verse he expresses the cause and quality of the new birth, that distinguishes it from the natural birth, and resolves the vain, carnal objection of Nicodemus. He speaks not of the terrestrial, animal birth, but of the celestial and Divine; that is suitable to that principle from whence it proceeds, the Holy Spirit of God. There is a great difference among interpreters about the meaning of being born of water. The Romanists, and rigid Lutherans, understand the water in a proper sense, for the element of baptism, and from hence infer the absolute necessity of baptism for salvation; but the exposition and conclusion are both evidently contrary to the truth. Indeed the new birth is signified, represented, and sealed by baptism, it is the soul and substance of that sacred ceremony; and if our Saviour had only said, that whoever is born of water and the Spirit shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, it might have been congruously understood of baptism; because it is an undoubted truth, that all who are truly regenerated in baptism shall be saved. But our Saviour says, He that is not born of water and the Spirit cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven: the exclusion of the unsanctified is peremptory and universal. And our Saviour shows a manifest difference between an affirmative and negative proposition; when having declared, that whoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and coming to the negative, he only adds, but he that believeth not shall be damned, Mark xvi. 16. The reason why he does not say, Whoever is not baptized shall be condemned, is evident; for without faith it is impossible to be saved; but without baptism, even as the Romanists themselves grant, many have been saved. For if we consider the time when our Saviour spake these words, they acknowledge that believers were not then obliged to receive the baptism of Christ for salvation; for our Saviour had this conference with him some years before his death; and they hold, that before the death of Christ baptism was not necessary, neither by virtue of Divine command, nor as a means to obtain salvation; therefore the believers that lived then might enter into heaven without baptism. They also declare, that martyrdom supplies the want of baptism; and that persons instructed in the doctrine of the gospel, and sincerely believing it, if prevented by death without being baptized, their faith and earnest desire is sufficient to qualify them for partaking of the heavenly kingdom. But if by water here be meant the elementary water of baptism, the words of our Saviour are directly contrary to what they assert; for neither the blood of martyrs, nor the desire and vow of receiving baptism, are the water of baptism, which they pretend is properly and literally named by our Saviour. And certainly, if, as the apostle Peter instructs us, it is not the cleansing of the flesh in the water of baptism that saveth, 1 Pet. iii. 21, it is not the mere want of it, without contempt and wilful neglect, that condemneth. By water then we are to understand the grace of the Holy Spirit in purifying the soul, which is fitly represented by the efficacy of water. And this purifying, refreshing virtue of the Spirit is promised in the prophecies that concern the times of the Messiah, under the mystical expression of water. Thus it is twofold by Isaiah, I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground, Isa. xlv. 3. And this is immediately explained, I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed; and the Divine birth follows, they shall spring up as among the grass. In the same manner the effects of the Holy Spirit are expressed by Ezekiel: I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; and presently after, I will put my Spirit within you, Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 27. Our Saviour instructing a Pharisee, to whom the prophetic writings were known, expressly uses these two words, and in the same order as they are all set down there, first water, and then the Spirit, that the latter might interpret the former; for water and the Spirit, by a usual figure when two words are employed to signify the same thing, signify spiritual water, that is, his Divine grace in renewing the soul; as when

c. Mark 16.
16.

Acta 2. 38.

the apostle says, in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, to signify the powerful Spirit. Thus John the Baptist foretold of Christ, that he should baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire, that is, with the Spirit, that has the force and efficacy of fire to refine us from our dross and corruptions. Thus our Saviour plainly instructs Nicodemus of the absolute necessity of an inward spiritual change and renovation, thereby showing the inefficacy of all the legal washings and sprinklings, that could not purify and make white one soul, which were of high valuation among the Jews. Entering into the kingdom of God, is of the same import and sense with the seeing the kingdom of God, in the 3rd verse: that is, without regeneration no man can truly be joined with the society of the church of God, nor partake of the celestial privileges and benefits belonging to it, here and hereafter.

6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

That which is born of the flesh: that which is born of natural flesh; for flesh sometimes signifies the man. So the prophet saith, All flesh is grass, Isa. xl. 6. So Gen. vi. 12, All flesh, that is, all men, had corrupted their way. Or, that which is born of corruption, from vitiated and corrupted nature; so flesh is oft taken in Scripture, Rom. viii. 4, 5, 8, &c. Is flesh; that is, it bringeth forth effects proportionable to the cause; a man purely natural brings forth natural operations. Man, as man, moveth, and eateth, and drinketh, and sleeth. Corrupted man brings forth vicious and corrupt fruit, which often are called the works of the flesh, Gal. v. 19. Flesh here signifieth the whole man, whether considered abstractly from the adventitious corruption of his nature, or as fallen in Adam, vitiated and debauched through lust. And that which is born of the Spirit is spirit: but that man or woman who is regenerated by the Spirit of grace is spiritual; he is after the Spirit, Rom. viii. 5; he is one spirit with God, 1 Cor. vi. 17; he is made partaker of the Divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4; he doth not commit sin, 1 John iii. 9. Nothing in operation exceedeth the virtue of that cause which influenceth it; so as no man from a mere natural principle can perform a truly spiritual operation; and from hence it is absolutely necessary that man must be born of the Spirit, that he may be qualified for the kingdom of heaven.

7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

There is a twofold admiration, that which is joined with infidelity, and that which is the effect of faith. Our Saviour forbids Nicodemus to marvel at the doctrine of regeneration, as strange and incredible, upon an imaginary impossibility supposed by him of the thing itself. But he that believes will judge that supernatural work of the Spirit, whereby a sinful man is made a partaker of the Divine nature, worthy of the highest admiration. And what our Saviour had said in the general before, that a man must be born again, he now particularly applies to Nicodemus, with those of his order, Ye must be born again. For Nicodemus would easily consent that the pagans, and possibly the vulgar Jews, had need of regeneration, to partake of the kingdom of God; but that the doctors of the law, (of which number himself was,) esteemed the lights of the world, should be under the same necessity, was astonishing to him. Therefore our Saviour, to undeceive and humble him, saith, Ye must be born again, for that all are defiled with the corruption that is universal to mankind.

8 <sup>1</sup>The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

The word which is translated wind, being the same which both here and ordinarily in Scripture is translated spirit, hath given interpreters a great liberty to abound in their several senses. Some thinking that it should be translated, The spirit, that is, the spirit of a man, breatheth where it listeth; and that our Saviour's sense was, Nicodemus, thou needest not to wonder that thou canst not with thy senses perceive the spiritual new birth, for thou canst not understand the natural birth. Others think it should be translated,

The Spirit, that is, the Spirit of God, bloweth where it listeth; but that seemeth not probable, because of these words, so is every one that is born of the Spirit; which will hardly be sense if we understand the first part of the verse concerning the same Spirit; and our Saviour saith, ver. 12, If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not: they seem therefore best to understand it, who interpret it of a terrene spirit, particularly the wind, which is of a spiritual nature: and thus, by their translation, it is apparent that our interpreters understood it. So as, though our Saviour speaketh of the motions of the blessed Spirit, yet he speaketh of them by way of comparison, comparing them to the motion of the wind, of which he said, that it bloweth where it listeth; not that it is its own mover, and under no government of the First Cause; for the Psalmist tells us, Psal. cxlviii. 8, that the stormy winds fulfil God's word; nor is any such thing competent to any creature; but the original of its motion is to us imperceptible. But canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: we can speak something philosophically to the cause of it, and can tell whither it bloweth, from the east, west, north, or south; but we cannot tell the particular place, where or from whence it riseth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit: so every one, who is regenerated from the working of the Holy Spirit of God, is changed and renewed, so as we can give ourselves or others no account of it in all points, as to the inward operation, though in the effects it be discernible.

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, <sup>ch. 6. 52, 50.</sup> How can these things be?

Nicodemus had before spoken as if he thought it a thing impossible, understanding our Saviour of a carnal generation, which he knew could not be repeated: perceiving that he spake of a spiritual birth, he is now posed at the mystery of it; it being a thing the doctrine of which he had not been acquainted with. His carnal stupidity hindered his understanding the first lesson of Christianity, though explained by the Sun of righteousness; and his pride hindered him from confessing his ignorance; he rather judges the doctrine to be absurd and impossible. The like darkness is in every unrenewed mind; regeneration being like that new name, which none understand but those that have it.

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?

Our Saviour doth not so much wonder at as upbraid the ignorance of Nicodemus, and all of his sect, who went for masters, or teachers, and that in Israel; who had the law and the prophets, and yet were ignorant of those things which were necessary to be known to every ordinary person's salvation. Will any say, But where was there any thing spoken in the books of the law and the prophets about regeneration, or a being born again? Ans. What other things could be meant by the circumcision of the heart, commanded by Moses, Deut. x. 16, promised in Deut. xxx. 6; by the new heart, and the new spirit, promised Ezek. xxxvi. 26; by the clean heart prayed for by David, Psal. li. 10? A teacher in Israel should from hence have understood the necessity of a new and of a clean heart; but the whole sect of the Pharisees were so taken up with the trifles of the rites and traditions, and the works of the law, that as to these spiritual things, of nearer and much higher concernment to people's souls, they knew and spake little of them.

11 <sup>h</sup> Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and <sup>1</sup>ye receive not our witness.

Christ speaketh only of himself, though he speaketh in the plural number, for in the next verse he saith only, If I have told you earthly things; he lets Nicodemus know that he spake nothing but he was certain of. This he expresseth by two words, know and have seen, which are terms expressive of the greatest certainty of a thing imaginable; for the terms express a certainty of the mind, arising both from the rational deduction and sensible demonstration: and herein our Saviour lets his ministers know what is their duty to teach unto people, viz. what they know and have seen. Those that think that the doctrine of the gospel would have no certainty but for the authority of the church, stand highly concerned to reflect upon this text.

Ye receive not our witness; ye ought to believe what I tell you upon the authority of my revelation; but such is the hardness of your heart, such your stubbornness and unbelief, that you receive not my testimony.

12 If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

If I have spoken to you plain things, and in a plain style, humbling my phrase to your apprehensions, and illustrating sublime, spiritual mysteries, which in their own nature are more remote from your apprehensions, by plain and obvious similitudes and parables, and speaking thus, you understand and believe not; what would you do if I should discourse to you sublime and spiritual things, without these advantages for your understandings?

13 And <sup>k</sup>no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, <sup>l</sup>even the Son of man which is in heaven.

No man hath so ascended up to heaven, as to know the secret will and counsels of God, for of such an ascending it must be meant; otherwise, Elijah ascended up to heaven before our Saviour ascended. Thus the phrase is supposed to be used, Prov. xxx. 4. None but Christ (who as to his Divine nature came down from heaven) hath ever so ascended thither; even the Son of man, who was in heaven; we translate it is, but the participle ὢν is of the preterimperfect tense, as well as the present tense: or, who is in heaven, by virtue of the personal union of the two natures in the Redeemer; as we read, Acts xx. 28, the church, which he hath purchased with his own blood. By reason of the personal union of the two natures in Christ, though the properties of each nature remain distinct, yet the properties of each nature are sometimes attributed to the whole person. The Lutherans have another notion, ascribing an omnipresence even to the human nature of Christ, because of its personal union with the Divine nature; and so affirm that Christ's human nature, while it was on earth, was also substantially in heaven; as, on the other side, they are as stiff in maintaining that, although Christ's human nature be now in heaven, yet it is also on earth, really and essentially present wherever the sacrament of the Lord's supper is administered; but this is to ascribe a body unto Christ which is indeed no body, according to any notion we have of a body.

14 <sup>i</sup>And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, <sup>m</sup>even so <sup>n</sup>must the Son of man be lifted up:

The history of the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness we have, Numb. xxi. 8, 9. The people being stung with fiery serpents, as a righteous judgment of God for their sins, as a merciful remedy God commanded Moses, ver. 8, Make thee a fiery serpent, (that is, the image or representation of one of those fiery serpents,) and put it upon a pole; and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live. This brazen serpent in the wilderness was a lively type of Jesus Christ. Our Saviour having before spoken of the new birth as necessary to those who shall be saved, here comes to show it in the causes, and instanceth first in the meritorious, then in the instrumental, cause. The meritorious cause was his death; he saith, As the serpent was lifted up in the wilderness, so he, who was the Son of man, must be lifted up; that is, die upon the cross: the phrase is used twice more in this Gospel, chap. viii. 28; xii. 32, 34, in allusion, doubtless, to this type. Yet Mr. Calvin thinks the lifted up here more properly interpreted of the doctrine of the gospel, and by the preaching of it; and others apply it to Christ's ascension into heaven. And this he tells Nicodemus must be, for the fulfilling the Scripture, and the counsels of his Father.

15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but <sup>o</sup>have eternal life.

Here our Lord openeth the instrumental cause of justification and salvation, that is, believing εἰς αὐτόν, in him. It is one thing to believe in him as a teacher, another thing to believe in him as a Saviour. The object of the first is a proposition; we believe a person when we assent and give credit to what he saith, because he saith it. The object of the latter is the person and merits of the Mediator. As the looking up to the brazen serpent healed the person, not by any physical operation, but from the goodness of God, as it was an act of obedience to the Divine institution for that end; so neither doth faith in the Mediator justify and obtain pardon for any soul from any meritorious virtue in that act, but from God's gracious ordination, that so it shall be; he hath so ordained, that whosoever shall rest upon Christ, and receive him by faith as his Mediator and Saviour, should not perish, but live for ever. There are other things besides faith necessary to salvation, such are repentance, love, and new obedience; nor is faith only mentioned because they are ingredients into it, but because faith is the root of all those, and that from which they must necessarily flow; for it is as impossible that any should truly hope, and trust in, and rest upon Christ for that life which he hath only promised to those that obey him, as it is impossible that any should indeed trust in and rest upon a man who hath promised a reward upon a condition for that reward, without any care to fulfil that condition. But by this and other places, where faith alone in Christ is mentioned as necessary to salvation, Nicodemus was taught, that no obedience to the works of the law without this faith in the Mediator would bring the soul to eternal life and salvation.

16 ¶ For God so loved the world, <sup>o</sup>that he gave his only begotten Son, <sup>p</sup>that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God the Father, who is the Lord of all, debtor to none, sufficient to himself, so loved the world, that is, Gentiles as well as Jews. There is a great contest about the signification of the term, betwixt those who contend for or against the point of universal redemption; but certain it is, that from this term no more can be solidly concluded, than from the terms all and every, which in multitudes of places are taken in a restrained sense for many, or all of such a nation or kind. As this term sometimes signifies all persons, so, in 1 John ii. 21, the Gentiles in opposition to the Jews. Nor, admitting that the world should signify here every living soul in the place called the world, will any thing follow from it. It is proper enough to say, A man loved such a family to such a degree that he gave his estate to it, though he never intended such a thing to every child or branch of it. So as what is truth in that so vexed a question cannot be determined from any of these universal terms; which must, when all is said that can be said, be expounded by what follows them, and by their reconcilableness to other doctrines of faith. God so loved the world that he gave his Son to die for a sacrifice for their sins, to die in their stead, and give a satisfaction for them to his justice. And this Son was not any of his sons by adoption, but his only begotten Son; not so called (as Socinians would have it) because of his singular generation of the virgin without help of man, but from his eternal generation, in whom the Gentiles should trust, Psal. ii. 12, which none ought to do, but in God alone, Deut. vi. 13; Jer. xvii. 5. That whosoever, &c.: the term all is spoken to above; these words restrain the universal term world, and all, to let us know that Christ only died for some in the world, viz. such as should believe in him. Some judge, not improbably, that Christ useth the term world in this verse in the same sense as in 1 John ii. 2. Our evangelist useth to take down the pride of the Jews, who dreamed that the Messiah came only for the benefit of the seed of Abraham, not for the nations of the world, he only came to destroy them; which notion also very well fitteth what we have in the next verse.

17 ¶ For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

The word we translate condemn, κρίνω, signifies to judge, as well as to condemn. The Jews were mistaken in their proud conceit, that Christ came to judge and destroy all those that were not of their nation; thus, chap. xii. 47, he saith, he came not to judge, but to save the world. Nor is this contrary to what he saith, chap. ix. 39, For judgment I am come into this world; for that is ex accidenti, from the corruption of men, shutting their eyes against the light, and hardening their hearts against the offers and tenders of Di k Prov. 30. 4.

ch. 6. 33, 39,
51, 62. &
16. 29.
Acta 2. 24.
1 Cor. 15. 47.
Eph. 4. 9, 10.

i Num. 21. 9.
m ch. 8. 28
& 12. 32.

n ver. 36.
ch. 6. 47.

p Luke 9. 56.
ch. 5. 45. &
8. 15. & 12.
47.
1 John 4. 14.

vine grace. Christ will come in his second coming to condemn the world of unbelievers; but the tendency of his coming was not for condemnation, but to offer the grace of the gospel, and eternal life and salvation, to men in the world.

q ch. 5. 24.
& 6. 40, 47.
& 20. 31.

18 ¶ He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

Whoso firmly and steadily assenting to the propositions of the gospel, revealing Jesus Christ as the only and all-sufficient Saviour, commits the care of his soul unto him, trusting and hoping in him alone for eternal salvation, which no man can indeed do without doing what in him lieth to fulfil the condition upon which Christ hath promised life and salvation, that is, keeping the commandments of God, is exempted from condemnation by the law of grace. But he that believes not the doctrine of Christ, and does not upon the terms of the gospel receive him for his Saviour, is already condemned for his obstinate infidelity, which is the certain cause of damnation: as we say of one mortally wounded, that he is a dead man, though he breathes for a while; and we speak in the same manner of a malefactor, convicted and attainted of a capital crime, though the sentence be not executed; because their death is inevitable. The not believing in the only Son of God, who is able to save to the utmost all that regularly trust in him, is such a contempt of the merciful, all-sufficient, and sole means of salvation, that it is absolutely necessary, and most just, that all those who refuse to be saved by him, should perish by themselves. From this scripture arise two questions: the first concerning the heathens, who never heard of Christ. The second concerning infants, who die before they come to years of knowledge. As to the former, the apostle hath determined, Rom. ii. 12, As many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law. There is the same reason for those who sin without the gospel; they shall not perish for not believing on him of whom they have not heard, Rom. x. 14, but for not obeying such revelation of the Divine will as they had. The case of infants is excluded from this text (speaking only of adult persons). It is certain, that so many of them as belong to the election of grace shall be saved, and that by virtue of the blood of Christ; but which way God brings them to heaven is a secret to us. Some from this text have concluded, that unbelief is the only damning sin; which is no further true, than that no sin will damn that soul which shall truly believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

r ch. 1. 4, 9.
10, 11. & 8.
12.

19 And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

This is the reason, the evidence and great cause of condemnation, that light is come into the world. Christ is the Light, foretold by the prophet, Isa. ix. 2; xlii. 6; xlix. 6. He is styled, in the beginning of this Gospel, the true Light, chap. i. 4; that is, he hath in perfection all the excellent qualities of light; the power to enlighten the minds of men in the knowledge of saving truth, to warm the affections with the love of it, to revive the disconsolate, and to make the heavenly seed of the word to flourish and fructify in their lives. This Light is come into the world; that signifies not only his incarnation, but his revealing the merciful counsel of God for our salvation, which the clearest spirits could never have discovered; he has opened the way that leads to eternal life. But men loved darkness rather than light; they preferred, chose, and adhered to their ignorance and errors, before the light of life, the saving knowledge of the gospel. Their ignorance is affected and voluntary, and no colour of excuse can be alleged for it; nay, it is very culpable and guilty, by neglecting to receive instruction from the Son of God. Because their deeds were evil; the vices and lusts of men are the works of darkness, the fruits of their ignorance and errors; and they are so pleasant to the carnal corrupt nature, that to enjoy them securely, they obstinately reject the light of the gospel; this aggravates their sin and sentence.

20 For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd.

Job 24. 13.
Eph. 5. 13.
Or, discovered.

He that makes a trade of sin, and doth evil presumptuously, loving and delighting in it, doth not love the light, nor, if he can avoid it, will come near it; for the light is that which makes things visible, and discovereth them. As it is of the nature of natural light to show things to others as they are; and therefore thieves, and adulterers, and drunkards, care not for the light, but choose the darkness for their deeds of darkness, and come as little abroad in the light as they can when they do them: so it is of the nature of Christ and his gospel to discover men's errors, both as to the obtaining of justification and eternal salvation, and the errors also of men's lives; and therefore men and women possessed of errors in their judgments, or delighting in a filthy conversation, hate Christ and his gospel; because that a discovering the right ways of God discovereth the crookedness of their ways, opposite to the truths and ways of God.

21 But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.

Truth here is put for true things. He who purposeth, designeth, and acteth nothing but what is just, and holy, and good, and what is consonant to the will of God; he is not afraid to bring his notions and actions to the test of the Divine rule, published by him who is the true Light. For he desires that what he doth may be made manifest, both to himself and others, that they are wrought in, with, or according to, by, or through God (for the particle in, here used, is used in all these senses, 1 Cor. vii. 39; Rev. xiv. 13). Those works are said to be wrought in, with, by, or through God, which tend to the honour and glory of God as their end, and flow from him as their cause, which are done with his strength and assistance, and for his honour and glory.

22 ¶ After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judæa; and there he tarried with them, and baptized.

1 ch. 4. 2.

Soon after our Saviour had had the forementioned conference with Nicodemus, which it is believed he had at Jerusalem, not (as some think) in Galilee, for then Nicodemus would hardly have come to him by night, he came into the land of Judæa. He had before been in the province of Judæa, and in the metropolis, or great city, of Judæa, which was Jerusalem; but now he goeth into the country of Judæa. Judah and Jerusalem are often mentioned distinctly. The chief city of a country is oft distinguished from the country, though within the same province and tribe; see Josh. viii. 1, the king of Ai, his city, and his land; and in particular as to Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xi. 14; xx. 17; xxxvi. 23; Ezra ii. 1; Luke v. 17; vi. 17. Christ and his disciples went into the country part of Judæa, and there he tarried with them, and baptized, by his disciples, for himself personally baptized none; but as in our common speech, so in the language of Scripture, there is nothing more ordinary than for persons to be said themselves to do what they do by others, 1 Sam. xxvi. 11, 12; 2 Kings xxii. 16; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 24; Acts vii. 52.

23 ¶ And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.

1 Sam. 8.4.

2 Matt. 3. 5.

Ænon is here said to be near Salim: it was the name of a city, as some think; others say, river or brook near that city: neither the river nor the city are elsewhere mentioned in Scripture; but topographers place it on the eastern part of the lot of Manasseh, not far from Bethshan or Scythopolis. There John was baptizing; because this Ænon was a brook or river that had much water, which in Judæa was rare. There is no water more holy than other. John baptized in Jordan, and in Bethabara, and in Ænon. The ordinance sanctified the water, but did not require consecrated water for the due administration of it. It is from this apparent that both Christ and John baptized by dipping the body in the water, else they need not have sought places where had been a great plenty of water; yet it is probable that they did not constantly dip, from what we read of the apostles baptizing in houses, Acts ix. 17, 18; x. 47, 48. The people came to John and were baptized, that is, great numbers of them did so.

24 For John was not yet cast into prison.

For John was yet in the exercise of his public ministry, not cast into prison, as he was soon after.

25 ¶ Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying.

The Jews had so many purifyings, some legal, instituted by God, ordained by Moses as God's minister; some traditional, brought in by the Pharisees, as their washings before meat, Matt. xv.; Mark vii.; that it seemeth a hard thing to determine what the question was betwixt John's disciples and the Jews, about what purifying; and the boldest determiners in this case are no better than guessers. Some would have baptism to be meant here by purifying. It would much conduce to the resolution of the question if we knew what these Jews were with whom John's disciples argued. If they were of the Pharisees, it is probable the question was about John's baptism, considering the frequent washings and purifyings that they had in use amongst them. If they were other Jews, the question might be about the virtue and efficacy of the ceremonial washings, ordained by the law of God, whether they were mere types, and now to cease? whether in themselves they conducted any thing to the washing and cleansing of a soul? If these Jews were (as some think, but I know not how it can be proved) disciples of Christ, the question might be about John's and Christ's baptism. This notion seemeth to be favoured by what went before; where the evangelist had been speaking of baptism, as administered by Christ's disciples, and by John; as also from what followeth, viz. John's disciples coming to him and complaining, that Christ by his disciples baptized more than their master. But there seemeth to be this great prejudice against the notion of those learned men that have embraced that notion, viz. That the question is said to have risen betwixt John's disciples and the Jews; now we want an instance in Scripture, where the disciples of John are put in opposition to the disciples of Christ, and under notion of the Jews; the term Jews generally signifying that part of the people who adhered to the Judaical rites and religion; especially where (as here) it is used in opposition either to the disciples of John or of Christ. It is most probable therefore the question was, either about the washings ordained by the law of Moses, or about the traditional washings observed by the Pharisees.

26 And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him.

The disciples of John coming unto him, give him the usual title, under which in that age they were wont to speak to those whom they owned as their teachers, which was Rabbi. Their business was to complain, that Christ, whom they do not think fit to name, nor to give him any title, but mention him as one much inferior to their master, one that came to him to Bethabara, and to whom he there gave testimony, chap. i. 7, 34, as if Christ had from him derived all his credit and reputation. Their master did not go to Christ, but he came to their master; he was not baptized of Christ, but Christ was baptized of him; he did not give testimony to their master, but their master gave testimony to him: now, say they, he baptizeth by his disciples, and multitudes, many of all sorts of people, (for the universal particle all men can here signify no more,) come to him. Love is jealous; they were afraid that their master's reputation would by this means flag and be diminished. Such a passage we find, Numb. xi. 28. And thus John, our Saviour's disciple, was jealous for Christ his Master, Luke ix. 49. They all sinned, as appears by the answer given by Moses to Joshua, Numb. xi. 29, and Christ's answer to John, Luke ix. 50, and by the following reply of John to these disciples, envying for his sake.

27 John answered and said, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

The ministry, and the success of the ministry, must both be given a man from heaven: doth he baptize? it is a sign he is sent of God. Do all men come to him? that also is from God. An excellent corrective of ambition, envy, and jealousy: no man hath in the church of God authority, but he to whom it is given from heaven; no authority over his Son.

28 Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him.

I appeal to you that are my disciples, Did not I always plainly tell you that I was not the Christ? It belongeth unto Christ alone, who is the Head of the church, to send out such as shall labour in it, and to restrain those that labour in it; would you have me silence or suspend him? I told you, that I was but one of his ministers, sent before him to prepare his way, John i. 20, 23.

29 He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled.

Christ, whose the church is by a right of redemption, and by its having given up itself to him, 2 Cor. viii. 5, he is the Bridegroom of it, Matt. xxii. 2; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 23, 25, 29; as his Father was the Husband of the Jewish church; it belongeth to him to give laws to it, and to order matters and affairs in it. I am but as one who is the friend of the bridegroom, one of the children of the bride-chamber, Matt. ix. 15, and have by my preaching prepared the people of the Jews for him; and instead of being troubled to hear that he is come, I rejoice greatly to hear his voice. So far am I from repining to hear that multitudes go to him, that my joy is fulfilled; that is, I have no greater satisfaction than to hear it.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

He must increase, in honour, and dignity, and reputation in the world; he is the rising sun, (to give you notice of which I was but as the morning star,) he must shine every day more and more. But I must decrease; God hath indeed used me as a prophet, yea, more than a prophet, not to foretell Christ alone, but to point him to you. I have had my time, and finished my course, and God hath given me a reputation proportioned to the work he gave me to do, and to the time in which I was to work; but I must every day decay, and grow less and less, as Christ increaseth and groweth more and more.

31 He that cometh from above is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all.

He that cometh from heaven, (for it appeareth by the latter part of the verse, that is the sense of from above), as Christ did, not only in respect of his Divine nature, but being (as to his whole person) clothed with majesty and authority from above, infinitely excelleth any one who is a mere creature: he that is of an earthly original, speaketh of the earth. Such as is a man's original, such is his nature, such is his discourse. Though I be sent of God, as chap. xvi. 27, and my baptism be from heaven, (so our Saviour himself testified, Matt. xxi. 25), yet my original is of the earth, and my relations and expressions are suitable to a mere man: but he that is from heaven excels all, as in the dignity of his person, so in the sublimity of his knowledge.

32 And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony.

Another great difference which the Baptist teacheth his disciples to put betwixt his testimony and Christ's, is, that he, and so all other ministers of the gospel, testify by revelation; Christ testified not by revelation, but from his

a 1 Cor. 4.
Heb. 5. 4.
Jam. 1. 17.
1 Or, take unto himself.

b ch. 1. 20, 27.
c Mat. 21. 1.
Mark 11. 2.
Luke 1. 17.

d Mat. 22. 2.
2 Cor. 11. 2.
Eph. 5. 25,
27.
Rev. 21. 9.
e Cant. 5. 1.

f ver. 13.
ch. 8. 23.
g Mat. 28. 18.
ch. 1. 15, 27.
Rom. 9. 5.
h 1 Cor. 15.
47.
i ch. 8. 33.

1 Cor. 15. 47. Eph. 1. 21. Phil. 2. 9.

k ver. 11.
ch. 8. 26.
& 15. 15.

1 ch. 1. 7,
15, 27, 34.

own personal knowledge, what himself hath seen and heard from his Father. See ver. 11, where our Saviour had spoken to Nicodemus much the same. So John i. 18; viii. 26; xv. 15. By these two terms is signified the most certain and infallible knowledge of those things which he testified, which made them worthy of all acceptation: but yet very few received his testimony, so as to believe in it: see John i. 11, and ver. 11 of this chapter.

33 He that hath received his testimony

<sup>1 Rom. 3. 4.</sup> <sup>1 John 5. 10.</sup> hath set to his seal that God is true.

He who hath so believed the testimony of Christ, as to accept him, and to believe in him as his Saviour, hath, by that his believing, set to his seal that God, in all his promises of the Messiah under the Old Testament, is true; that a word hath not failed of whatsoever God hath there spoken of that nature. According to this is that I John v. 10, He that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. This saying doth notably commend faith, and defame unbelief. Faith in Christ as the only true Mediator and Saviour, giveth testimony to the truth of God, and sealeth it. Unbelief defameth God, and doth in effect say that God is a liar.

<sup>m ch. 7. 18.</sup> <sup>n ch. 1. 16.</sup> 34 <sup>m</sup> For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit <sup>n</sup> by measure unto him.

He whom God hath sent out of heaven, out of his bosom, not merely authorizing him as a minister, as the prophets and as John were sent, speaketh nothing but the words of God. The prophets and the apostles were sent of God in a sense, but not as Christ was sent; they sometimes spake the words of God, when the Spirit of God came upon them; but they sometimes spake their own words, as Nathan did to David, when he encouraged his thoughts to build a house to the Lord; and Paul, when he said, To the rest speak I, not the Lord; but whatsoever Christ spake was the words of God: for God did not give out the Spirit to him sparingly, (as out of a measure,) as he doth to his ministers or saints, who have but their proportion of revelations and graces, as was requisite for their offices to which they were called, and the several periods of time that were gradually illuminated. But in him the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily; he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows; he had the spring of all in himself, not the streams only.

<sup>o Matt. 11.</sup> <sup>27. & 28. 18.</sup> <sup>1 Luke 10. 22.</sup> <sup>ch. 5. 20. 22.</sup> <sup>& 13. 3. & 17. 2. Heb. 2. 8.</sup> 35 <sup>o</sup> The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.

The eternal Father loved the world, ver. 16, but he loved the Son with a more singular and peculiar love; so that all things were by the Father delivered to him, Matt. xi. 27, all power in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18; to give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him, John xvii. 2; the keys of hell and of death, Rev. i. 18. So as every man hath reason to receive and embrace Christ and his testimony, and to believe in him.

<sup>p Hab. 2. 4.</sup> <sup>ch. 1. 12.</sup> <sup>& 6. 47.</sup> <sup>ver. 15. 16.</sup> <sup>Rom. 1. 17.</sup> <sup>1 John 5. 10.</sup> 36 <sup>p</sup> He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

He that, hearing the proposition of the gospel, so agreeth to it, as with his heart he receiveth him as his Saviour, and trusteth and hopeth in him, hath everlasting life; that is, a certain and just title to it, nay, in the first-fruits; being actually delivered from condemnation, Rom. viii. 1, to which, without faith, he is exposed: he already liveth a spiritual life, Gal. ii. 20; and having Christ in him, hath the hope of glory, into the possession of which he shall most certainly come. But he that receiveth not the gospel published by him who is the Son of God, and doth not embrace him as his Saviour, and yield obedience to him, shall not be saved. The word here translated believeth not, is ἀπειθῶν, which often significth, one that is not obedient. But this is the command of God, That men should believe on his Son, I John iii. 23. The commandment doth not only respect love, but faith in the first place; for faith worketh by love; so as there is an ἀπειθεῖα, a disobedience in the understanding, as well as in the conversation; and he that so believeth not, as to obey, shall never come into heaven, which felicity is here expressed by seeing life; as not seeing death is not dying, so not seeing life is dying. And as he was by nature a child of wrath, Eph. ii. 3, subject and exposed to the wrath of God, so that wrath abideth on him: being justified by faith, he hath peace with God, Rom. v. 1.

CHAP. IV

Christ talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himself unto her, 1—26. His disciples marvel; the woman calleth the men of her city to see him, 27—30. Christ showeth his own zeal to do God's work, and the blessedness of his disciples, who were to reap the fruit of his labours, 31—38. Many Samaritans believe on him, 39—42. He goeth into Galilee, and healeth a nobleman's son who lay sick at Capernaum, 43—54.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and <sup>a ch. 2. 22.</sup> <sup>26.</sup> baptized more disciples than John, Our Saviour knew as God, from that omniscience which is inseparable from the Divine nature, or as man, by the relation of others, that the Pharisees, (who had the greatest stroke in the sanhedrim,) and the government of the church of the Jews, had received an information concerning him, that he had, by his doctrine which he preached, and confirmed by miraculous operations, made and (by his disciples) baptized more disciples than John, thereby initiating them into a new church.

2 (Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,)

For he himself did not personally baptize any, but left it to his disciples, himself attending to the greater work of preaching the gospel, by which men and women were made fit for the ordinance of baptism.

3 He left Judæa, and departed again into Galilee.

He left the province of Judea, which was near to Jerusalem, where the Pharisees had their chief residence and greatest power; and went the second time into Galilee, whither he went once before, chap. i. 43, where he found Philip and Nathanael. Galilee was a province under the jurisdiction of Herod, Luke iii. 1. This motion of our Saviour's into Galilee, is reported by Matthew, chap. iv. 12, and also by Mark, chap. i. 14, and Luke, chap. iv. 14. The two former give another reason of his motion, viz. his hearing that John was cast into prison; of which, and the cause of it, see Matt. xiv. 3—6; so as after that he publicly preached no more, which might possibly augment the number of Christ's disciples; John's disciples following him. Both these causes probably concurred, to cause this motion. John, who by preaching and baptizing had laid the foundation of a gospel church in Galilee, was imprisoned; and our Saviour knew that, the number of his disciples increasing upon John's confinement, an information had been carried against him to the Pharisees; this made him, knowing that his time was not yet come, withdraw himself out of the province of Judea into that of Galilee, as well to supply the want there (John being in prison) as to provide for his own security.

4 And he must needs go through Samaria.

Josephus tells us that Samaria is seated between Judea and Galilee, and beginneth at a town called Ginea: see Luke ix. 51, 52; xvii. 11. There were two passages from Judea into Galilee; the one was through the midst of Samaria, Luke ix. 51; the other through the eastern parts, by the royal valley, by Jordan, in which it is said that Sichem was. By Samaria must not be understood the city of Samaria, built by Omri, but the whole country so called, and possessed by the Assyrians, with a mixture of Jews amongst them. Some think that the evangelist addeth this, to excuse our Saviour for going amongst the Gentiles.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground <sup>b</sup> that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

<sup>b Gen. 33.</sup>
<sup>19. & 48. 22.</sup>
<sup>Joab. 24. 32.</sup>

The most valuable interpreters agree, that this Sychar is the city called Shechem; it was originally a parcel of a field bought by Jacob of Hamor, the father of Shechem, Gen. xxxiii. 19. Jeroboam built the city there, called Shechem, 1 Kings xii. 25. It was in the lot of Mount Ephraim. Joseph's bones were there buried, Josh. xxiv. 32. Jacob gave it to his son Joseph, as a parcel above his brethren, Gen. xlviii. 22; a parcel of ground near unto which was this city called Sychar, anciently Shechem.

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour.

It was called Jacob's, either because he digged it, (as we read of Abraham's digging a well, Gen. xxi. 30, and Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 18,) or because he and his family used it, as ver 12. Our Lord used no horse or chariot ordinarily in his travels, but went on foot; we never read of him in a coach or chariot, but once upon the back of a beast (that was when he rode into Jerusalem upon an ass); he ordinarily travelled on foot; and the evangelist taketh notice of his weariness, to let us know that he was truly man, and subjected to weariness, and other human infirmities. And he rested himself upon the sides of the well, and it was about noon-time; for that was, according to their computation, the sixth hour. The 8th verse tells us his disciples were gone to the city to buy meat, so as he was alone.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink.

It is uncertain whether this woman was a citizen of Samaria, which city is said to be at two miles distance from this place, or one of that country, which went by that name (for Samaria was the name of that region, as well as of a city). She came not out of any design to meet with Christ there, but came to draw water; they having not pumps and wells so common as we have, were forced to travel for water for their necessary uses. Thus it often happeneth that we meet with Divine mercy when we think not of it. God is found of those who seek him not, nor inquire after him, Isa. lxxv. 1; which lets us see how all our motions and actions are at the Divine disposal and government. Rachel went not to the well to meet with the tidings of a husband, but to water her father's flock; but yet there she met with Jacob, Gen. xxix. 9; as it had happened to Rebekah before, Gen. xxiv. 15. This woman (as appeareth by what followeth) was no better than a harlot; to her Christ (fleeing from the Pharisees, the great doctors of the Jews) bringeth the glad tidings of the gospel, and she receives them. So admirable are the dispensations of Divine Providence. He prevents this woman, saying unto her, Give me to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

This is added, lest any should say, How came our Saviour in this discourse with the woman of Samaria? They were travelling upon the road, and came near to Sichem. Our Lord's disciples were gone to the city to buy some food for them; in the mean time, our Saviour coming to the well, called Jacob's well, sets him down, and this Samaritan woman cometh to that well to draw water; our Saviour, being thirsty, asks of her some water to drink; this giveth occasion to the following discourse.

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

There was a great estrangement of the Jews from the Samaritans, the Samaritans having a peculiar temple built upon Mount Gerizim, in opposition to that at Jerusalem. It is said that the Jews did buy of and sell to the Samaritans, but were restrained by an order of the sanhedrim from using any familiarity with them, or borrowing or receiving any thing as a gift from them; which was the cause of this reply of the woman of Samaria, knowing our Saviour, either by his habit or by his dialect, to be a Jew: this is thought to be the sense of συγγειοῦται in this text, though it hath a larger significancy, extending to all kinds of commerce.

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee <sup>d</sup>living water.

<sup>d</sup> Jo. 12. 3.
<sup>e</sup> 44. 3.
Jer. 2. 13.
Zech. 13. 1.
& 14. 8.

Many by the gift of God here understand Christ, whom God gave to the world, chap. iii. 16; and who is the greatest gift that God ever gave to the world; so as the latter words, who it is, &c., expound the former. Thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee, either a true knowledge of the doctrine or the grace tendered in the gospel; or the Holy Spirit, called water, because it washeth and cleanseth the soul; and living water, because it is always running and flowing.

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

What our Saviour spake metaphorically, comparing his grace, or his Spirit, or the doctrine of his gospel, to living water, this poor woman understandeth literally; and knowing that the well was very deep, (some say forty cubits,) and seeing him, as a traveller, not provided with any thing to draw with, or into, she asks him whence he had that living water? a question much like that of Nicodemus, chap. iii. 4. So ignorant are persons of spiritual things, till they are enlightened by the Holy Spirit of God.

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

She asks him if he judged himself wiser than Jacob, whom she calleth their father? It is often observed, that the Samaritans would ordinarily claim kindred with the Jews when the Jews were in prosperity; but in their adversity constantly disowned any relation to them. There were some Jews, (Ephraimites especially,) mixed with a far greater number of Assyrians, which made up this body of people called the Samaritans. Now, saith the woman, Jacob, who was the father of Joseph, from whom we claim, was a wise man, and he could find no better water hereabouts for himself and family than that of this well; art thou wiser than he?

13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again:

Our Saviour in his reply justifieth the excellency of that living water, which he had before declared to be in his power to give, and his readiness to have given to this woman, if she had asked it of him, from the perishing virtue of the water of this well, and the continuing virtue of his grace, which he compared to this living water: no man so assuaged his thirst by drinking of the water of Jacob's well, but he was subject to thirst again.

14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 6. 35.
<sup>56</sup>.

But he who receiveth the Holy Spirit, and the grace thereof, though he will be daily saying, Give, give, and be continually desiring further supplies of grace, yet he shall never wholly want, never want any good thing that shall be necessary for him; the seed of God shall abide in him, and this water shall be in him a spring of water, supplying him until he come to heaven. But this text was excellently expounded by our Saviour, chap. vii. 38, 39, He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive. From which it is plain, that our Saviour here by the living water he speaketh of understood the Holy Spirit.

15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

<sup>g</sup> See ch. 6.
<sup>54</sup> & 17. 3.
Rom. 6. 23.
1 John 5. 20.

I am not of their mind, who think that this woman understood our Saviour speaking about spiritual water, only she had a mind to talk; and indeed it is hard to conceive how a woman of her education, and way of life, should understand any such thing; but it is plain that she did not understand him in what he was discoursing about, but doth, as it were, deride him, believing that he had no such thing to bestow. She taketh no notice of the water which our Saviour had spoken of, springing up to eternal life; but regarding only the present life, and her ease in that, desires favour of Christ only to supply her wants in this life, and that she might live more at ease: so true is that of the apostle, Rom. viii. 5, They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

Not that Christ did not know, what she afterward confessed, that she lived in whoredom, and had no legitimate husband; but he said this probably to check her petulance, and mocking at what he spake about the living water, and to bring her to a sense of her sin, that she might be more fit to receive the glad tidings of a Saviour, which he was about to publish to her; and this seems rather to be our Saviour's design in bidding her go call her husband, than (as some of the ancients thought) that he might better instruct her, or avoid any scandal to himself, by a longer private discourse with a woman alone, who was of no better reputation.

17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

I have no husband; that is, none who is my lawful husband; she denieth not that she had one whom she used and lived with as a husband, but that she had any legal husband, to whom she clave, and to no other: still she goeth on, thinking to deceive Christ, and to put tricks upon him. Christ tells her, she in this did speak truth; he knew she had no legal husband.

18 For thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly.

He tells her, that she had had five husbands; whether successively, the former being dead, and she marrying another, or five from whom she had been divorced for adultery, is not agreed; the best modern interpreters judge, that she had had five men to whom she had been in marriage, but so behaved herself toward them, that either for her adultery, or some other froward behaviour towards them, they had given her a bill of divorce; and though she now used and lived with one as her husband, yet in this she said truly, because, her former husbands yet living, he was not her husband. This seemeth more properly the sense, than that after five legal husbands' death, she lived in whoredom with a sixth person. By this discovery, our Saviour both bringeth her to the sense of her sin, and also to an acknowledgment of him as the Messiah.

<sup>h Luke 7. 16.</sup>
<sup>& 24. 19.</sup>
<sup>ch. 6. 14. a</sup>
<sup>7. 40.</sup> 19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, <sup>h I</sup> I perceive that thou art a prophet.

Whose office is to reveal the will of God, and to whom God revealeth secret things; one to whom the Lord maketh known himself in a vision, and speaketh in a dream, Numb. xii. 6. The woman's reply seemeth to signify both. Her acknowledgment of Christ as a prophet, upon his telling her secret things, justifieth her looking upon him as one to whom God revealed things not known ordinarily to men; and this report of her meaning appeareth by what she said, ver. 29, to her fellow-citizens, Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did; but the following verse, in which she entereth into a discourse with our Saviour about the controversy betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans about worship, lets us know that she looked upon him as a prophet in the more ordinary sense, as prophet signifies one influenced by God to reveal his mind and will unto men; and indeed there was no prophet in the former sense, but was also in the latter; though there were many prophets in the latter sense, sent of God, and enabled to reveal the will of God unto men, who were not influenced so far as to foretell things to come. The difference betwixt a hypocrite and one truly brought to a sense of sin, is very conspicuous in the example of this woman; she doth not deny her sin, as Cain, Gehazi, and Ananias and Sapphira; neither doth she discover any anger upon the discovery of it, as the scribes and Pharisees, the wicked princes of Israel and Judah, and Herod did; neither doth she go about to excuse or mitigate her sin; but she applieth herself to Christ as a prophet, to teach her what to do. The example also of this woman informs us what use we ought to make of prophets, to guide us into the right way, and faithfully to acquaint us with the will of God.

20 Our fathers worshipped in <sup>1</sup> this mountain; and ye say, that in <sup>1</sup> Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.

<sup>1</sup> Judg. 9. 7.
<sup>1</sup> Deut. 12.
<sup>5. 11.</sup>
<sup>1</sup> Kings 9. 3.
<sup>2</sup> Chro. 7. 12.

Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; the mount Gerizim, which was an exceeding high mountain, and near unto Sichem. Jacob made an altar thereabouts, which he called El-elohe-Israel, Gen. xxxiii. 20. Some say that it was upon that mountain that Abraham should have offered up Isaac, Gen. xxii., but that had another name. Certain it is, that from that mountain Moses pronounced the blessings, Deut. xxvii. 12. But it is very probable that the woman had respect to none of these, but to the common usage of the Samaritans, to worship in a temple built upon this mountain, in opposition to that at Jerusalem: the story of which will be very proper here to relate, for the full understanding of this text. Sanballat was governor of Samaria, constituted by Darius; of this Sanballat we read in Nehemiah, who tells us that one of the sons of Joiada, the son of Eliashib the high priest, was son-in-law to this Sanballat the Horonite; therefore I chased him from me, Neh. xiii. 28. This son-in-law's name (as Josephus tells us) was Manasses. He was driven out of Jerusalem upon the account of the covenant made, Ezra x. 3, that those who had married strange wives would turn them away. The sacred story here leaving us, we must supply it out of Josephus, who (Antiq. l. 11. cap. 8.) tells us, that he being thus driven from the sacrifice, applied himself to Sanballat, and would have put his wife away, who was Sanballat's daughter; but Sanballat promised him, that if he would keep his daughter as his wife, he would not only continue him in the priesthood, but make him a high priest, and build him a temple like that at Jerusalem, upon Mount Gerizim, with the leave of Darius; upon this Manasses staid with Sanballat, and there also resorted many to him whom Nehemiah had turned out of the priesthood at Jerusalem for marrying strange wives. Sanballat was very near losing his opportunity through the favour of Darius, by the conquest of Darius by Alexander the Great. But it was regained by his brother Jaddus's stubbornness, who was high priest in Jerusalem, and refused to own the new conqueror; which advantage Sanballat took, and offered Alexander the surrender of all places in his trust to him; and being by that means ingratiated with Alexander the Great, he thereby obtained leave of him to build a temple in Mount Gerizim, where his son-in-law Manasses should be the high priest, promising Alexander that by this means the force of the Jews would be broken, so as there would be no danger of their conspiring. Accordingly he presently built this temple, and soon after died, leaving his son-in-law Manasses, brother to Jaddus the high priest in Jerusalem, high priest in this new temple, which afterwards proved an asylum or sanctuary for any who were accused amongst the Jews at Jerusalem. Thus these two temples stood for about two hundred and twenty years; then Hircanus, a high priest of the Jews at Jerusalem, destroyed it; but still they looked upon the ground as holy, and came thither to perform their devotions. With reference to this superstitious practice, the woman of Samaria saith, Our fathers worshipped (that is, have used time out of mind to worship) in this mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship; and the Jews hold, that none might worship God by sacrifice any where but at Jerusalem, according to the law, Deut. xii. 14, 26.

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, <sup>1</sup> when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

<sup>1</sup> Mat. 1. 11
<sup>1</sup> Tim. 2. 8

Woman, thou ownest me as a prophet, whose office it is to reveal the will of God unto men; it is therefore thy duty to give credit to what I shall reveal to thee about the true and right way of worshipping God. The time is coming, yea, at hand, when you shall neither in this Mount Gerizim,

(where your fathers have long worshipped God superstitiously without any direction from him,) nor yet at Jerusalem, (which is the place which the Lord made choice of for his worship,) worship my Father, or your Father. God is putting an end to both these places, and to all that worship which I shall not institute under the gospel.

<sup>m 2 Kings 17, 29.</sup> <sup>n Isa. 2, 3.</sup> <sup>o Luke 24, 47.</sup> <sup>p Rom. 9, 4, 5.</sup> 22 Ye worship <sup>m</sup>ye know not what : we know what we worship: for <sup>n</sup>salvation is of the Jews.

You have no certain rule for your worship, but only do things which your fathers did, without any revelation of the Divine will, by which you may be assured that what you do is acceptable to God. We know that God hath revealed his will, that his people should worship him at Jerusalem by such rites and performances as he himself hath instituted in his word, so as we are certain that what we do is acceptable to God : for unto the Jews (of old) were committed the oracles of God, the ordinary means of salvation ; Out of Zion went forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, Isa. ii. 3.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in <sup>o</sup>spirit <sup>p</sup>and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

<sup>o Phil. 3, 3.</sup> <sup>p ch. 1, 17.</sup> Under the gospel, and the kingdom of the Messiah, which is yet further coming, and is already began in the world, the true worshippers of God shall not worship him, as you Samaritans, who worship you know not what, without any rule or prescript of the word ; nor yet as the hypocritical Jews, who rest upon their sacrifices and ritual performances, as if they should purge away their sins, Psal. l. 8 ; Isa. i. 11 ; lxvi. 3 ; Micah vi. 7 ; no, nor yet as the more sincere Jews, who indeed do truly and with their hearts worship God ; but, while the first tabernacle was yet standing, which was a figure for the time then present, by sacrifices that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience,—by meats and drinks, and divers ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation, Heb. ix. 8—10. That time of reformation is now come, when the true worshippers of God shall offer up to him a more spiritual worship, not that carnal worship ; and a more true, and real, and solid worship : for God my Father seeketh such to worship him, as shall not worship him with a mere bodily labour and homage, but with their hearts and spirits ; nor with those ceremonial performances now in use by God's prescript at Jerusalem, but without them ; I being come, whom all those services did but prefigure and point unto.

<sup>q 2 Cor. 3, 17.</sup> 24 <sup>q</sup>God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

God is not a corporeal being, made up of blood, and flesh, and bones, having senses as bodies have, to be pleased with sensible things ; but he is a spiritual Being, the Father of spirits, and requireth a spiritual service proportioned to his being ; and therefore those that pay a religious homage to him, must do it with their spirits, and according to the rule that he hath prescribed, in truth and reality. This is now the will of God ; and though he required of his people under the law a more ritual, figurative service, yet that is now to cease ; and therefore the woman of Samaria need not trouble herself which was the truest worship, that at Mount Gerizim, or at Mount Zion, for both of them were very suddenly to determine, and a new and more substantial spiritual worship was to succeed, to the learning of the way and method of which she was more to attend, and not to spend her thoughts about these things which were of no significancy, and tended only to minister questions of no use.

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called <sup>r ver. 29, 39.</sup> Christ : when he is come, <sup>r</sup>he will tell us all things.

The woman by this reply, though a woman of Samaria, sheweth herself to be a Jew, for she was one of them who lived in an expectation of one whom the Jews called the Messiah, prophesied of by Daniel under this notion, Dan.

ix. 25, 26, and by the psalmist, Psal. ii. 2 ; which term Messiah signifieth Christ (that is, anointed) in the Greek. She had a further notion, that this Messiah should be a great Prophet, Deut. xviii. 15 ; yea, she appears to have had a further notion of the Messiah, viz. that when he came he should reveal to them the whole will of God as to the salvation of man, and the worship of God : this lets us know, that she was none of the Assyrian part of the inhabitants of Samaria. If any ask, how she, being a Samaritan, should know any thing of the Messiah, the Samaritans receiving only the five books of Moses ? it is easily answered, That even the five books of Moses make mention of the Messiah, under the notion of the seed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15, the seed of Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, Shiloh, Gen. xlix. 10, the Prophet like to Moses, Deut. xviii. 15. And for the name Messiah, she might easily learn it from other Jews, that the Person called Shiloh, and the Prophet, was called by Daniel the Messiah.

26 Jesus saith unto her, <sup>s ch. 9, 37.</sup> <sup>t Matt. 26, 63.</sup> <sup>u Mark 14, 61, 62.</sup> <sup>s</sup>I that speak unto thee am he.

The same Messiah, of whom thou declarest thyself to have some expectation, and from whom thou expectest to hear all things necessary to salvation. Some here inquire, why our Saviour maketh to this woman such a plain discovery of himself, whenas we find in the Gospel so cautious, and so often charging his disciples not to make him known. Some think our Saviour thus gratified the honesty and simplicity which he discerned in this woman, not coming to catch him, but to be instructed from him ; but possibly, if we wistfully consider those texts wherein he charged his disciples not to make him known, we shall find that the thing which he cautioned them against, was their publishing of him as the Son of God, which our Saviour desired should be concealed, till he should be so declared with power by his resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4 ; that his enemies, by a charge of blasphemy against him, might not cut him off before his hour was come. Now we shall observe that the Jews, though they expected a Messiah, yet had no such notion of him.

27 ¶ And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

The disciples, as we heard before, were gone into the city Sichem to buy food, and were kept there by the providence of God till our Saviour had finished this discourse with the woman of Samaria, but came after the discourse was done. They marvelled, possibly at his talking with a woman in the road, (a thing forbidden by their traditions,) especially a woman of Samaria, with whom the Jews had no commerce. But yet they had so much reverence and respect for their Master, that they inquired not curiously into the matter or reason of his discourse.

28 The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men,

She had no sooner tasted of the living water spoken of by Christ, but she left her water-pot : thus Peter tells our Saviour, that they had left all and followed him. She goeth into the city Sichem (no doubt) or Sychar, mentioned ver. 5 ; and doth not herself enter into a long discourse with the citizens, only inviteth the citizens to come and see Christ, that they might judge from the hearing of their own ears, and the sight of their own eyes.

29 Come, see a man, <sup>t ver. 25.</sup> <sup>t</sup>which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?

She invites them to him under the notion of a man, who had told her all things that she ever did. Christ doubtless had told her, and spoken to her, much more than John hath left us upon sacred record ; yet not all things she ever did, but all things (as often) signifies many things, and those such things as she might know that he who could tell those things could have told her all things, if they had been so proper for him to have repeated to her as those things which he did tell her. This induced her to believe that he was the Messiah ; she offereth it to their opinion and judgment.

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

Sitting still at the well, they (many of them at least) did not condemn the news as the relation of a woman, but went (possibly but out of curiosity) to see and to hear this man.

31 ¶ In the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

While the woman was fetching her citizens to come and see and hear Christ, his disciples, knowing that he must be weary and hungry with his journey, and having brought him some food out of the city, where they had been to fetch it, put him upon refreshing himself with the food they had brought.

32 But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

But our blessed Lord was more intent upon gospelizing the Samaritans, than satisfying his hunger: what this meat was, he opens himself, ver. 34.

33 Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

His disciples, being yet carnal, did not understand him, but thought that he had spoken of bodily nourishment. See the like instances, Matt. xvi. 7; chap. xi. 13. They were wondering how he came by meat, and who should bring it him: so hard are we to conceive of spiritual things, till God openeth our eyes.

34 Jesus saith unto them, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.

Our Lord, without any reproof of them for their dulness in understanding, and having compassion on their infirmity and ignorance, tells them what he meant by his former words; telling them, that the doing of his Father's will, and the finishing of his work, was that which he more hungered after, and took more delight in, than in eating and drinking: this is what he sought, chap. v. 30, that which he came down from heaven for, chap. vi. 38. As the law of God was sweeter to David than the honey or the honeycomb, so the publishing of the gospel was to Jesus Christ, the calling sinners to repentance, and publishing the glad tidings of the Messiah; that was his work, which he tells his Father he had finished, chap. xvii. 4. Hereby teaching ministers, and people also, to prefer spiritual things before temporal; and the ministers of the gospel especially, to prefer the publishing of the gospel (which is their work) to any other employment whatsoever.

35 Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; †for they are white already to harvest.

There was in those countries but four months' space betwixt seed-time and harvest; yet they fed themselves (as soon as they had sown) with the expectation of it. My harvest, saith our Saviour, is the gaining of souls for my Father: look yonder what a troop of the citizens of Sichern are coming to me, upon my revelation of myself to the woman of Samaria; I have but just sown my seed, and the fields are white to this spiritual harvest, Matt. ix. 37. In the judgment of the best interpreters, our Saviour in this verse useth a comparison, and passeth from his similitude used in the former part of the verse, fetched from a worldly harvest, to discourse of that spiritual harvest, which he by and by reaped of the citizens of Sichern coming to him; it is of that he saith, that the fields were already white, by which (as will appear from the following verses) he quickeneth his disciples to put in their sickles. Some critical authors, understanding both the former and latter part of the text of a worldly harvest, have used their wits to determine how the fields should be white to harvest four months before it came; but the most and best interpreters interpret the latter part of a spiritual harvest, and that will be also justified by what followeth.

36 †And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.

You that are the Lord's instruments, to reap what the prophets of old, and John Baptist lately, have sown, shall not lose your labour, you shall receive wages; and your wages shall not be small, it shall be no less than eternal life: They that turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars for ever and ever, Dan. xii. 3. Thus the prophets, and John the Baptist, who sowed the seed of the gospel, and you that succeed them, and reap the fruit of what they did sow, shall have the same reward in glory, and rejoice together. The ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed, as Amos speaks, chap. ix. 13. This text is of great use to those godly ministers who faithfully sow the seed of the word, but do not in their life-time see any great effects of it; it may be it comes up when they are in their graves. The reward of a faithful preacher doth not depend upon his success in his labours, but upon his faithful discharge of his work; though one soweth and another reapeth, yet both he that soweth and he that reapeth shall rejoice together.

37 And herein is that saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth.

It was a proverbial expression, most commonly used with reference to those who unjustly invaded the rights and possessions of other men; but as applicable unto those who, by the disposing providence of God, rightly inherit the fruit of other men's labours, as the Jews inherited the land of Canaan; A land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not, Josh. xxiv. 13. This saying (saith our Saviour) is fulfilled in you.

38 I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours.

I have sent you to reap that which you did not first labour for; the prophets, and John the Baptist, and myself, have sown the seed, and by their doctrine prepared for the Lord a people; you enter upon their labours, gathering them into a gospel church.

39 ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him †for the saying †ver. 22. of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

That city was Sichern, or Sychar, but it was within the province of Samaria, from whence it is that they had the name of Samaritans as well as Sichemites. Many of them, upon the testimony of the woman, that he had told her such secret passages of her life, as he could not have told her if he had not been able, if he had pleased, as well to have told her all things, believed on him; that is, they owned him as a prophet, and agreed to what the woman said in that particular, and were by it excited to come to see and further discourse with Christ. This justifieth what our Saviour said, that there was there a people prepared for the Lord, the fields were white unto the harvest; that they were thus far wrought upon by the discourse of a woman, and she one not of the highest reputation, and only telling them that he had told her all things she had done. Small means have great effects when God's time of working is come.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

The Sichemites being come to Christ, had some discourse with him, as appeareth from ver. 41, 42. What the subject matter of their discourse was we are not told; we may know that it was spiritual, and something proper to excite faith in them, for believing was the effect of it. They desire that he would abide with them: thus their faith wrought by love. Our Saviour, that he might not discourage the beginning of their faith, did stay with them two days: for although, when he sent out his disciples, he commanded them not to go into the way of the Samaritans, yet himself was not obliged by that law, and did sometimes, by preaching to heathens, and converting of them, give an earnest of the calling of the Gentiles, whose fuller calling was reserved to after-times; yet, probably, the reason why he would not stay longer with them than two days, was because the time was not yet come for the fuller calling of the Gentiles, and he was not willing by a longer abode with them to give offence to the Jews, betwixt whom and the Samariu Job 23. 12.

ch. 5. 38.
* 17. 4.
* 19. 30.

x Mat. 9. 37.
Luke 10. 2.

y Dan. 12. 3.

tans was a rooted hatred upon the account of their differing religion.

41 And many more believed because of his own word;

Believing seemeth here to be taken in a different sense from what it was taken in ver. 39, from what followeth, ver. 42. There it seemeth only to signify a lower degree of assent, that he was a prophet, upon the woman's saying that he had told her all she had done; here it signifieth a giving credit to him as the Christ, the Saviour of the world, of which they were convinced by what they heard from himself. Thus that of the apostle, Rom. x. 17, is justified, that faith cometh by hearing; and the influence of Christ upon the souls of believers is also justified. We read of no miracles our Saviour wrought here; they believed not because of any signs they saw, but because of his word; wherein also they further showed themselves the first-fruit of the Gentiles, the generality of which were afterward converted to the faith of the gospel, after that miracles were ceased, by hearing the gospel preached.

42 And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for <sup>a ch. 17. 8.</sup> <sup>1 John 4. 14.</sup> we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

Several things may be the occasion of faith, which are neither the principal efficient causes, nor the proper instrumental cause of it. The principal efficient cause of the faith of these Samaritans was, undoubtedly, the finger of God upon their souls, enlightening their minds with the saving knowledge of the gospel, and bowing their wills to the obedience of it. The proper instrumental cause was their hearing the words of Christ; but the occasion of this was what the woman had told them: so as, though they in a sense believed because of what she had said, because that occasioned their coming out to see and hear Christ; yet the proper instrumental cause was their hearing Christ, God upon their hearing him working in their hearts an ability and a willingness to receive and to close with Christ. Thus the church gives us the first occasion of receiving the Scriptures, and believing them to be the word of God: we, having them put into our hands by the church, read them, and find such impresses and stamps of Divinity in them, that we conclude, from our reason very probably, that they are more than human writings; but never firmly and fixedly receive them as such, until persuaded of it by the Holy Spirit. These Samaritans do not only own Christ as a prophet, nor do they only suspect that he must be the Messias, but they profess to know that he was the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

43 ¶ Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee.

Christ (as we heard before, ver. 3) was upon his journey into Galilee, only he stopped two days at Sichem to gratify the desires of the Samaritans of that city; which two days being now spent, he keepeth on in his journey. But here ariseth a question, viz. Whether he first went to Nazareth, or to Cana? For the opinion of those who think he first went to Nazareth, is quoted Matt. iv. 12. Besides, it is said that Nazareth was in his road to Cana, and, Luke iv. 24, he is said to have uttered these words there. Chemnitius thinks he went first to Cana, according to what John relateth in the following verses. And, Luke iv. 16, he is said to have gone out of Galilee to Nazareth: and besides, the next mentioned miracle is (ver. 54) said to have been Christ's second miracle, which it could not have been had he first gone to Nazareth, for, Luke iv. 23, those of Nazareth mention some miracles which he had wrought at Capernaum.

<sup>b Mat. 13. 57.</sup> <sup>Mark 4. 4.</sup> <sup>Luke 4. 24.</sup> 44 For <sup>b</sup>Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.

Christ spake those words more than once, Matt. xiii. 57; Mark vi. 4; Luke iv. 24. But the question is, what force of reason this hath why he went into Galilee, whereas Nazareth, which was in Galilee, was his own country; for though he was born in Bethlehem, yet he was educated at Nazareth; upon which account, Luke iv. 23, it is called his own country? The best resolution of this difficulty is, that by Galilee here is to be understood, the country part of Galilee, exclusive to Nazareth; and this is not given as a reason why our Saviour went into Galilee, but why he did not go to Nazareth, but into the country part of Galilee, because Nazareth was his own country, and a prophet is not without honour, except in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galilæans received him, <sup>c ch. 2. 23.</sup> <sup>d 3. 2.</sup> having seen all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: <sup>d Deut. 16. 16.</sup> for they also went unto the feast.

When he came not to Nazareth, but to some parts of Galilee, the Galilæans entertained him hospitably; and this they did because of those miracles they had seen wrought by him at the passover feast, where Christ was, chap. ii. For these Galilæans, though they lived at a great distance from Jerusalem, yet were observant of the law which commanded all the males of the Jews to be present at that solemnity. The Samaritans saw no miracle, but believed Christ upon his word. The Galilæans also received Christ, but their seeing of his miracles at the feast is given as the cause of their receiving him; their faith was not so noble as that of the Samaritans. Blessed (saith our Saviour) are they who have not seen, and yet have believed.

46 So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, <sup>e ch. 2. 1, 11.</sup> where he made the water wine. And there was a certain <sup>f Or, courtier, or, ruler.</sup> nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum.

Our Saviour, coming into Galilee, made choice of Cana, the place where, being at a marriage feast, he turned water into wine, chap. ii., first to fix in: the reason is not expressed, and therefore vainly guessed at by interpreters. There he worketh a second miracle, not upon the person of any one of Cana, but upon the son of one who was at Capernaum, which was a city in the tribe of Naphtali, upon the shore of the famous river Jordan. This person is described to be one that was βασιλικός, a nobleman; whether of the blood of Herod, that was tetrarch of Galilee, or some courtier or principal servant of his, it is not said.

47 When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

Christ had been in Galilee before, and in this town, and wrought a miracle, and if this courtier were a disciple of John, (as some think, but it is hard to prove,) it is probable he had been at the passover, and seen the miracles he wrought there, or at least might have heard of them from some who were there. Though it was a good way from Capernaum thither, yet his love to his son carried him, and humbled him to beseech Christ that he would come down and heal his son; by which he showed a great weakness of faith, as if he thought that Christ could not put forth his healing virtue at a distance, but his personal presence was necessary; as Naaman the Syrian thought that Elisha must come down and lay his hand upon him. His son, it seems, was in human appearance dying.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, <sup>f 1 Cor. 1. 22.</sup> Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.

It may seem strange to such as do not well weigh all circumstances, that our Saviour, who at other times went without asking, showed himself so hard to be entreated by this courtier, and answereth him so roughly; but we must not take ourselves to be able to give a certain account of all Christ's actions, and different dealings with persons, whose hearts he well enough knew. Thus much is certain, that our Saviour always preferred that faith which was given to his bare word, before that which waited for a miracle confirmative of that word, John xx. 29. Our Saviour saw that this courtier came to him purely upon a natural account, for the recovery of his dying son, without a desire to be instructed in his heavenly doctrine; therefore (as it may be presumed) he checks this courtier; and not him alone, but the generality of the Jews, who were only struck with admiration of his works, and drawn from curiosity, or some temporal benefit, to follow him, without a due regard of his person, or the heavenly, saving truths preached by him.

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

The courtier, though probably of spirit enough to have shown some discontent at our Saviour's no kinder answer to him before, yet was so intent upon his son's life, that he takes no notice of it, but reneweth his request, still discovering the weakness of his faith, as thinking that Christ's personal presence was necessary to the life of his son.

50 Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way; thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

Our Saviour would neither discourage the weak faith of this nobleman, nor yet encourage his weakness: he healeth his son for the encouragement of his faith; he doth it by his word, without going down to him, that he might not gratify his weakness, thinking his personal presence was necessary; he bids him go, for his son was recovered (that is here meant by liveth). Upon this his faith groweth, and he who before only believed Christ to be a prophet, probably upon others' hearsay, now believeth his word, that is, was persuaded that his son was indeed recovered.

51 And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

The servants that met him to bring the acceptable news of his son's recovery, knew nothing of the passages that had been betwixt Christ and their master, but merely came to tell their master what they knew would be acceptable to him.

52 Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

He inquireth the precise time; they tell him it was about the seventh hour. The miracle appeared in the suddenness of the recovery, and also that it was without the application of means, at least any that could have produced so sudden an effect.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed, and his whole house.

The circumstance of the time when his son recovered agreeing with the very hour when Christ had said unto him, Thy son liveth, was a mighty confirmation to him, that he was beholden to Christ for his cure, and consequently that Christ was no ordinary man, more than a prophet, even the Son of God. This works upon his faith to a higher degree: he first believed the report of him, then he gave credit to the word that he spake, now he believeth savingly, and not he alone, but his whole family became Christians. Such instances we have concerning Lydia, Acts xvi. 14, 15, the jailer, ver. 34, and Crispus, Acts xviii. 8.

54 This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judæa into Galilee.

His turning water into wine (chap. ii.) was the first, this was the second, and so in order of time before any of those miracles which he wrought in Galilee, of which we read, Matt. iv. 23.

CHAP. V

Christ cureth an impotent man at the pool of Bethesda on the sabbath day, 1—9. The Jews cavil, and persecute him for it, 10—16. He justifieth himself by the example of God his Father, 17, 18; and asserteth the power and judgment committed unto him by the Father, 19—30. He appealeth to the testimony of John, 31—35; of the Father, 36—38; and of the Scriptures, 39, 40. He showeth that his humility caused their rejection of him, 41—44; but that in disbelieving him they disbelieved Moses also, 45—47.

A. D. 31
a Lev. 24. 2
Deut. 16. 1
ch. 2. 13. AFTER *this there was a feast of the Jews; and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

Though there are some that think the feast mentioned here was that of Pentecost, and others that it was the feast of tabernacles, yet the most and best interpreters judge it was the feast of the passover that is here mentioned; and that this was the second passover which happened after our Saviour had entered upon his public ministry. We read of the first, chap. ii. 13; and from that verse of that chapter to this chapter the evangelist (as they think) hath been relating so much of our Saviour's actions, until the second passover, as it was the will of God we should have upon public authentic record, and had not been recorded by the other evangelists, who give a further account of his actions done this year, Matt. iv., viii., ix.; Mark i., ii.; Luke iv., v. In the time of our Saviour's public ministry (which was three years and a half) there were four passovers. The other evangelists take notice but of one of them, and that the last. John is thought to have mentioned all the four; the first, chap. ii. 13, the second in this place, the third, chap. vi. 4, the fourth, chap. xiii. 1. Another reason they give why the feast of the passover should be here intended is, because from about that time to the harvest were four months, according to what our Saviour had said, chap. iv. 35. Jesus went up to the passover, to Jerusalem, to show his obedience to his Father's law, Deut. xvi. 16.

2 Now there is at Jerusalem <sup>b Neh. 3. 1
a 12. 30
c Or, gate.</sup> by the sheep market a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches.

We read in Scripture of the sheep gate in Jerusalem, Neh. iii. 1. There was also a market for sheep and other cattle, Deut. xiv. 26. Some therefore add market, others add gate, to the word in the Greek signifying sheep. Near to this gate or market there was a pool, κολυμβήθρα: some translate it, a fish-pool; others, (more properly,) a place to wash or to swim in (the word deriveth from a verb that signifies, to swim). They say there were two such pools within the compass of the mount on which the temple stood; the one eastward, called the upper pool, 2 Kings xviii. 17; the other westward, near to the sheep gate. The one was called Bethesda; the other, the pool of Siloah, by the king's garden, Neh. iii. 15, mentioned also by our evangelist, chap. ix. 7. They say the waters of these pools were supplied from a fountain called Siloam, which was not always full of water, but the water bubbled up in it at certain times with a great noise, coming (as was thought) through hollow places of the earth, and quarries of hard stones. These waters of Siloah are mentioned, Isa. viii. 6, and said to go softly; from which place these waters are concluded a type of the kingdom of David and of Christ. This being admitted, it is not to be wondered that they had that healing virtue given unto them (as some judge) just about the coming of Christ; for it should appear by chap. ix. 7, that the pool of Siloam, as well as that of Bethesda, had so; for in former times it is thought to have been of use chiefly to wash garments in, and sacrifices when they were slain. Some will have them to have derived their healing virtue from thence; but that is vain, their healing virtue was doubtless derived from the Lord that healeth us. This pool in the Hebrew was called Bethesda, which some interpret, The house of pouring out, because, as some fancy, the blood of the sacrifices was there poured out; (but that is a great mistake, for that was to be poured out at the altar;) or because rain water (as some think) was poured into it; or (which is more probable) because waters were poured into it out of the conduit mentioned 2 Kings xx. 20. But others interpret it, The house of grace, mercy, &c., because of God's great goodness showed the people, in giving this healing virtue to these waters. The five porches belonging to this pool seem to have been five apartments for impotent men to walk in, or rest themselves in, when they came to wash themselves in the pool.

3 In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

In these apartments (called here porches) there were a great number of sick persons, some labouring under one infirmity, some under another, some blind, some lame, waiting for the time the water should be troubled.

4 For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water: whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

This water had not always in it this healing virtue, but only when it was troubled, and this was at a certain season, how often the Scripture hath not determined; some will have it to be only at their great feasts, of the passover, and Pentecost, &c., but the Scripture saith no such thing. None must think that the angel appeared in any visible shape, but the rolling or troubling of the waters was a certain sign, that that was the time when alone they were medicinal; nor were many healed at one time, but only one person, that could first get into this water, he was healed, let his disease be what it would. The waters not being constantly medicinal, but, first, at a certain time, when they were troubled; and then, secondly, not for all, but only to him who could first get in; and, thirdly, for any disease, of what sort or kind soever his disease was; sufficiently confuteth the opinion of those who fancy that the waters derived this healing virtue from the entrails of the beasts offered in sacrifice being washed there; for besides that this is denied by some, who say those entrails were washed in a room on purpose for that use within the temple; if they had derived their healing virtue from thence in a natural, rational way, they would have exerted their virtue upon more than him who first stepped in, and not at the time only when they were troubled, nor would their virtue have extended to all kinds of diseases. Of whatever use this pool therefore was before, certain it is at this time God made use of the water in it to heal, and so as men might see that it healed not by any natural, but a miraculous operation. The Scriptures of the Old Testament make no mention of it. And it is observed by those who are versed in the Jewish Rabbins, that neither do they make the least mention of it. Which makes it very probable, that they had this virtue, not from the time of the building of the sheep gate by Shallum, Neh. iii. 15; nor from the time when the Asmonean family was extinct; or the rebuilding or further building and adorning the temple by Herod; but a little before the birth of Christ, as a figure of him being now coming, who, Zech. xiii. 1, was a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and from whom is both our cleansing and our healing, as these waters, which before had a cleansing, and now received also a healing virtue.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

What this man's name was, or what his circumstances in the world, or what his particular disease, we are not told; nor is it said that he had lain there thirty-eight years, but that he had so long laboured under his weakness: which, whether it was the palsy or no, is uncertain: probably it was a disease hardly curable by human art and ordinary means; for it cannot be thought but in that time he had used all rational means, which he finding of no value as to his case, he came and lay at this fountain, waiting for a cure in this way of miraculous operation.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

Christ, as God, knew the particular time when this infirmity seized him, which was eight years or upward before our Saviour's birth, and about the time when the temple was re-edified, or rather enlarged and further adorned, by Herod. As man, he pitieth his case; he asketh him if he was willing to be made whole. Not that he doubted of his willingness; for what sick man was ever unwilling to be healed? besides that, he knew that the poor man lay there for that very purpose; but that he might make him declare his miserable, helpless state and condition, and draw out his faith and hope in himself; and from his answer take an occasion to heal him, and make the spectators more attentive to his miracle.

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

What his particular impotency was the Scripture doth not tell us. Some have (not improbably) judged it the palsy, which depriveth the person of motion, by the stoppage of the animal spirits, so that without help he cannot move from one place to another, which it is manifest this poor man could not; for he complaineth for want of help, that he could not get into the pool.

8 Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

Our Lord will let this poor man know, that the waters and the angel derived their power from him; and that he with a word could do as much for him, as the waters troubled by the angel could effect: he therefore bids him arise, and take up his bed and walk, that others might see and be assured that he was perfectly cured.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the sabbath.

The man's strength returneth immediately; he is able immediately to arise, take up his bed, and to walk. All this was done on the sabbath day; on which day it was unlawful to carry any burdens, Jer. xvii. 21, 24; and by the Jewish canons it was punishable by death, or scourging. But our Saviour had a mind to let the Jews know that he was Lord of the sabbath, and what had been unlawful without his special command, became lawful by it. Neither was this against the sense of the law, though against the letter of it; the law only prohibited civil labour, and carrying burdens for their own profit, and in the way of their trade; it forbade the doing of nothing which was to be done as a public testimony of the goodness and mercy of God showed to persons: and by this our Saviour opens a way for his correction of their erroneous opinions about the true sanctification of the sabbath. We shall observe, that our Saviour used the like phrase to him that had the palsy, Matt. ix. 6; and to the centurion's daughter, Mark v. 41, Damsel, arise; and to Lazarus, chap. xi. 43, Lazarus, come forth; which our Saviour did for the testification of the miracle to all that should see them. It is further observed by Heinsius, that our Saviour did many miracles on the sabbath day, because that day was the usual time when the Jews were wont to consult the prophets for help, as may be learned from 2 Kings iv. 23.

10 ¶ The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath day: 'it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

That is, according to the letter of the law: they understood not that Christ was the Lord of the sabbath; their cavil argued their want both of faith in Christ, and charity also toward their neighbour.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

He makes them as good an answer as could well be imagined; the sum of which was, he believed that he that had thus healed him was a prophet, and so did what he did by a Divine authority, which it was lawful for him to obey, contrary to their traditions: though who this particular person was, or what his name was, were things as yet not known to him, (as we shall by and by read,) yet he seemeth sensible that he was healed by a power more than human.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

The impotent man that was healed seemed to oppose the authority of God (by virtue of which he believed himself healed) to the authority of man, which made it unlawful for him on the sabbath day to take up his bed and walk. The Jews, taking no notice of Christ's being God, or so much as a prophet sent from God, do not ask, Who was he? but, What man is that which said, &c.? opposing the command of God to the command of man. It is as much as if they had said, The law of God hath commanded that no burdens should be carried on the sabbath day; now, what is that man that dare teach thee or any one to do what is contrary to the law of God?

13 And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed himself away, || a multitude being in that place.

c. Matt. 9. 6.
Mark 2. 11.
Luke 5. 24.

d. ch. 9. 14.

e. Ex. 20. 10.
Neh. 13. 19.
Jer. 17. 21.
&c. Mat. 12.
2. Mark 2.
24. & 3. 4.
Luke 6. 2. & 13. 14.

f. Or, from the multitude that was.

Christ came as a stranger to the pool, and only wrought this miracle, so as the impotent man that was healed had no time to inquire who he was: and there being there a crowd of people, Christ had through the people conveyed himself away; so as the man could not find him, to show them the man who had so said unto him.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: 'sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

Jesus findeth him in the temple; walking in the outward court of the temple, or some part of it, where people ordinarily walked. He chargeth him to sin no more, lest a worse thing betideth him; hereby letting him and us know that sin is the usual cause of diseases, and a holy walking the best preservative of health; and that God hath further revelations of his wrath against sin and sinners, than what do or can befall them in this life.

15 The man departed, and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

It were very uncharitable to judge that this poor man went to the Jewish magistrates to inform against Christ, who had been so kind to him; and much more probable that he went in the simplicity of his heart, desirous both to publish what Christ had done to his honour, and also to do good to others, who might also stand in need of his help.

16 And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath day.

But the Jews made another use of it, seeking from hence an advantage against him, because he had violated the sabbath, which they often made a capital crime.

17 ¶ But Jesus answered them, 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

We read of no objection they made to Christ, as to what he had done, only that they persecuted him, which they might do without speaking to him: but it should seem by what we read in this verse, that some of the Jews had objected to him his violation of the sabbath (as they thought); yet, as we before noted, answered (in the dialect of the gospel) doth often signify no more than the beginning of a discourse upon some proper occasion offered. Our Saviour defendeth himself from the example of his Father, in the remembrance of whose resting from his work of creation on the seventh day from the beginning of the creation, the Jews kept their sabbath; who, though he rested from his work of creation, yet hitherto worketh, as well on the sabbath day as any other day, by his preservation of created beings: so (saith he) I, who am the Son of this Father, also work; upholding all things by the word of my power, Heb. i. 3. So that works of Divine Providence are lawful on the sabbath day; such was this. I work no other way than my Father still worketh, though he rested on the seventh day from the creation.

18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, 'making himself equal with God.

This yet enraged the Jews more: they had before against him a charge of breaking the sabbath, or, at least, teaching another to break it (in their opinion); but now he had (as they judged) spoken blasphemy, calling God Father; not in the sense the Jews so called him, and all good Christians are licensed to call him; but πατέρα ἰδίου, his proper Father, or his own Father; by which (as they truly said) he made himself equal with God. Nor did he by that alone make himself equal with God, but he ascribed also to himself a co-operation with God, in works proper to God alone: nor did he think this any robbery, Phil. ii. 6. This was their charge; we shall now hear how our Saviour defendeth himself against it.

19 Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, 'The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

Consider Christ as God, so he can do nothing but what the Father doth, that is, nothing that respected created beings: for it is a known rule, That the works of the Trinity out of itself are not divided; whatsoever one person doth, the others do; though, to denote the order of the Trinity's working, some works are most ordinarily ascribed to the Father, such are the works of creation and providence; some to the Son, as redemption; some to the Holy Spirit, as sanctification; yet they are not so ascribed to any Person, but that other Scriptures justify the co-operation of all three Persons. Consider the Son as the Messiah; so also it is true, that the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do. Nor is this any diminution to the glory of Christ, nor doth it speak any impotency in him, from whence the Arians and Socinians would conclude his inferiority to his Father; but rather his perfection, that he did only what pleased the Father: so that phrase, what he seeth the Father do, is to be interpreted; and that term, can do nothing, signifies no more than, he doth or will do nothing. See such a usage of the phrase, Gen. xix. 22; Luke xvi. 2; John xii. 39. From this he leaveth them easily to conclude, that what he had done, in curing this impotent man upon the sabbath day, was the Father's work, though by him; for whatsoever the Father doth, or willeth, the same doth the Son likewise. From hence will appear an easy solution to the difficulty arising upon the first view of the words, viz. How these words can prove Christ equal with the Father, when they rather prove the contrary, because he can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do? Some seek a solution in the words can do nothing; he that cannot do those things which God cannot do, is equal with God. Some seek it in the word seeth; which they say signifieth here an identity of nature and will. Some seek the solution in the word do, which they say signifieth to will and consent to. The best solution is to be taken from those words, of himself; the Son hath done many things which he did not see the Father do, but he did them not of himself. Our Saviour's meaning is plainly this: The Son neither willeth nor can do any thing, but what the Father willeth and doth in him; therefore he is one in essence with the Father, and equal to him. For what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise: the Son doth those things which the Father doth; and, as the Messiah, he doth those things which the Father willeth to be done.

20 For 'the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth: and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.

For the Father loveth the Son; both as his Son by eternal generation, Matt. iii. 17, and also as the Messiah sent by him into the world, to finish the work the Father had given him to do: and look, as a father will make his son acquainted with all that he doth; and not only so, but communicates all his power and skill to his son, so far as he can: so the Father communicateth all his power to the Son, working all things in him, and by him; and he will in and by him work greater things than this, healing this poor man; he will by him raise the dead, &c. That ye may marvel: Christ knew that they would not believe, and all the effect that his miracles had upon the generality of the Jews, was but causing in them a stupefaction, amazement, and admiration, as chap. xi. 47; whereas it was their duty, not only to marvel, but to have believed also, without which their admiration did but cause that they had no cloak for their sin.

21 For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

He seemeth not to speak of what God will do in the general resurrection, but of those whom the Lord raised up from the dead in the Old Testament, by Elijah and Elisha. The giving of and restoring unto life, are things proper unto God, Deut. xxxii. 39; 1 Sam. ii. 6. So the Son quickeneth whom he will: God hath given unto me a power to raise from the dead whom I will; as he did raise up

1 Matt. 12. 44.
ch. 8. 11.

g ch. 9. 4.
2 14. 10.

i ch. 10. 30.
33. Phil. 2. 6.

1 ver. 30. ch.
2. 28. 2. 6. 4.
2 12. 49.
2 14. 10.

1 Matt. 3. 17.
ch. 3. 35.
2 1 Pet. 1. 17.

m Luke 7.
14. 28. 34.
ch. 11. 25, 43.

Jairus's daughter, Matt. ix. 25, and the widow's son, Luke vii. 14, and Lazarus, John xi. 43. This was one of those greater works, of which our Saviour spake in the former verse.

22 For the Father judgeth no man, but <sup>n Matt. 11. 27. & 28. 18. ver. 27. ch. 3. 26. & 17. 2. Acts 17. 31. 1 Pet. 4. 5.</sup> hath committed all judgment unto the Son :

Alone he judgeth no man, he judgeth no man but by the Son, no man without the Son; but committed all judgment in the administration of the mediatory kingdom in the church to his Son, and by his Son will judge the world at the last day.

23 That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father.

He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent him.

That his Son might be honoured by all men, Psal. ii. 11, 12; Phil. ii. 10, with the same honour which is given to the Father; for the Son is sent by the Father, not as one inferior to him, as a servant is sent by his master, but as an equal is sent by his friend, John iv. 34; vi. 38; vii. 28. And look, as a great prince, when he sendeth his ambassador, expecteth that those to whom he is sent should give him honour, and the same honour as to himself; so doth the Father: so that he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath sent him. It is a text which reflecteth dreadfully upon such as honour not Christ, especially the Jews and Socinians, who professedly do not honour him with the same honour with which they yet pretend to honour the Father, and are concluded by this text not in truth to honour the Father.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

He that so heareth my words, that they are not a mere sound in his ears, nor affect his heart with some mere sudden and vanishing passion, but so that he gives an assent to them upon my authority; and that firmly and steadily believeth him that sent me, (the particle on seemeth not well put in by our translators; in the Greek it is τῷ πατρὶ ἁποστέλλοντι με, giveth credit to the words of my Father that sent me,) believing that I am his only begotten Son, whom he hath sent into the world, and receiving me as such, hearing me, according to the command of the voice from heaven, Matt. xvii. 5; he hath a certain title to everlasting life, and hath received the first-fruits of that harvest, Rom. viii. 23, the incorruptible seed of the word, 1 Pet. i. 23; and already sitteth in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Eph. ii. 6, and hath the kingdom of God within him, Luke xvii. 21, and shall not come into that judgment which shall issue in eternal condemnation; but is passed out of a state of spiritual death into a state of spiritual life; and shall be at last eternally saved, and pass into the actual fruition and enjoyment of life eternal.

25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: some understand this concerning the special resurrection of such bodies as Christ raised while he was upon the earth from death to life, of which number was Lazarus and the daughter of Jairus, &c. Others understand it of the general resurrection, spoken of ver. 28, 29. That which favoureth this sense is, because here is no mention of believing, but only hearing a voice. But the most and best interpreters rather understand these words of those who are dead in trespasses and sins, and the quickening and life mentioned Eph. ii. 1, which is called the first resurrection, Rev. xx. 5, because of what was said immediately before, that such a one is passed from death to life; and what was said before, He that heareth my word, agreeth with what is said here, of hearing the voice of Christ; and what followeth seemeth better to agree with this sense. And ver. 28, 29 speak plainly of the second and general resurrection of the body.

They that hear shall live; those who so hear the voice or Christ in the gospel, as to give a firm and steady assent to it, and, upon the credit of it, shall receive Christ as their Mediator and Saviour, shall live eternally; they do have the life of grace, and shall live the life of glory.

26 For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself;

How the eternal Father hath life in himself, is obvious to every capacity; for he is the First Mover, and therefore must have his life in and from himself, and not from any other; and he is the First Cause, and therefore that life which floweth from him to all created beings, must first be in him, as in its fountain. But in what sense it is said, that he hath given to the Son to have life in himself, whether as God, by his eternal generation, or as the Messiah and Mediator betwixt God and man, and so the fountain of spiritual life to believers, is more questioned. Those who understand it as to the Divine nature, say, that this phrase, hath life in himself, is expressive of the name Jehovah; and that Christ is proved to be the true Jehovah by what is here said, that he hath life in himself. But they distinguish betwixt having life from or by himself, and having life in himself; the text saith, it is given to Christ to have life in himself. But there are other interpreters, who seem better to understand it of Christ as Mediator, to whom it is given to have life in himself, to communicate to his creatures; and think it is well interpreted by chap. i. 4, In him was life, and the life was the light of men.

27 And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man.

To execute judgment also; to have the power of life and death, the keys of both; to rule and govern the world, and to judge it at the last day. Because he is the Son of man: Acts xvii. 31, He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, &c. So Phil. ii. 8, Being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, &c. Some think that the sense is, because he was that Son of man, who was the Seed of the woman, promised Gen. iii. 15; the Son of man prophesied of by Daniel, chap. vii. 13, 14. And that the term, Son of man, here, signifieth his office as Mediator.

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

Do not marvel at this power which I tell you the Father hath given me, to execute in the world justice and judgment; to raise some particular persons from a natural death, and whom he pleaseth from the spiritual death of sin: for the hour is coming, when all those who are in the graves, shall, by an archangel, Matt. xxiv. 31; 1 Thess. iv. 16, hear my voice, commanding them to arise; and they shall obey my command.

29 And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

And come forth; not all to be made partakers of eternal life and glory; there shall be a resurrection unto life, which only they shall obtain who have done good, walking in the commandments of God; not because they have done good, as if their goodness had merited any such thing, for eternal life is the gift of God, Rom. vi. 23. But others, who have wrought iniquity, and died without repentance and faith in me, shall arise, that the justice of God may by me, the Judge of the quick and the dead, be executed upon them unto eternal condemnation. This Daniel, chap. xii. 2, calleth shame, and everlasting contempt. Our Saviour, Matt. xxv. 46, calls it everlasting punishment.

30 I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.

e 1 John 2. 22.

p ch. 3. 16, 17. & 6. 40, 47. & 8. 51. & 20. 31.

q 1 John 3. 14.

r ver. 28. Eph. 2. 1. 5. & 2. 14. Col. 2. 13.

s ver. 22. Acts 10. 42. & 17. 31. Dan. 7. 13. 14.

u Is. 26. 19. 1 Thess. 4. 16. 1 Cor. 15. 52. 2 Dan. 12. 2. Matt. 25. 32. 33. 46.

y ver. 19. z Mat. 20. 28. ch. 6. 34. & 8. 38.

I can of mine own self do nothing; neither considered as God, nor as Mediator. As God, the Father and Christ were one, and what one Person in the Holy Trinity doth, all do; so that he did nothing in that capacity separately from his Father. As Mediator, he did nothing of himself; he finished the work which his Father gave him to do. As I hear, I judge; and my judgment is just; as the Father revealed his will to him, for the administration of his mediatory kingdom in the world, so he judged; and therefore his judgment must necessarily be just and true. Because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me; for his will was not a will proper to himself, so as it was not also common to his Father, but diverse from the will of his Father; but as his essence, so his will, was the same with his Father; and he being by the Father sent into the world to do his will, accordingly did nothing as Mediator but what was his Father's will as well as his own, in nothing diverse from his Father's.

<sup>a</sup> See ch. 8.
<sup>14</sup> Rev. 3.
<sup>16</sup>

31 <sup>a</sup>If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true.

This seemeth to contradict what he saith, chap. viii. 14, Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: but our Saviour here speaketh according to the common opinion of the Jews, or indeed of men, who are ready to suspect any one's testimony who testifieth of himself. He tells them, he could grant them this, though his record of himself was true, yet he could allow them their common received opinion and saying, chap. viii. 13, that the testimony of one testifying of himself is suspicious; for it is certain that a man may testify truth of himself, only such a testimony is suspicious: he tells them, he did not only testify of himself, his reputation did not stand upon his own single word.

<sup>b</sup> Mat. 3. 17.
<sup>c</sup> 17. 5. ch.
<sup>8</sup> 18. 1 John
<sup>5</sup> 6, 7, 9.

32 ¶ <sup>b</sup>There is another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true.

The Father by a voice from heaven testified of Christ, that he was his well-beloved Son, in whom he was well pleased, Matt. iii. 17. Some understand it of John the Baptist, of whom he speaketh, ver. 33. But he naming John in the next verse, it seems most proper to understand this of the Father testifying of Christ, both at his baptism, and also at his transfiguration; and to interpret the next verse, as speaking of another testimony distinct from that of John. And (saith our Saviour) I know, that is, I am fully assured, that his testimony of me is true; for God is that God who cannot lie, but is truth itself. So that I do not barely testify of myself; for my Father, whom you all own to be a God of truth, and who cannot lie, and whom I know to be such, he testifieth of me, and none can contradict his testimony.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 1. 15.
<sup>15</sup>, <sup>27</sup>, <sup>32</sup>.

33 Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth.

Ye sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to John, chap. i. 29; he was a man of reputation among you, for all the people judged him a prophet; and he had an interest in Herod's court: he bare witness (he doth not say to me, but) to the truth.

34 But I receive not testimony from man: but these things I say, that ye might be saved.

I receive not testimony from man, that is, not for my own sake; for otherwise he did receive testimony from man, chap. xv. 27; Acts i. 8. That must be truth, to which any one can give a true testimony. John by his testimony added nothing to me. I was what I am before John testified concerning me. I only spake of John's testimony for your sake, that you might believe, and be saved.

<sup>d</sup> 2 Pet. 1. 19.
<sup>e</sup> See Matt.
<sup>13</sup>, <sup>20</sup>, & <sup>21</sup>.
<sup>26</sup> Mark 6.
<sup>26</sup>

35 He was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

I do not speak this to lessen John in any of your thoughts; he was a famous light, burning in the knowledge and love of the truth; shining both in his doctrine, in publishing the truth, and also in holiness of life and conversation. He was not that light, John i. 8, but he was a light, not τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν, but λυχνος, Matt. v. 14; Luke viii. 16. And you for a small time pretended a great affection for John, and came with great zeal to hear him, Matt. iii. 5; xxi. 26; Mark i. 5, hoping that he was the Messiah, or at least Elias, or that prophet in him revived again. But when they saw that John did only bear record to Christ, they grew cold in their affection, not liking either his doctrine, or the strictness of his life, or the tidings that he brought; looking for a far more splendid and glorious Messiah than Christ appeared to them to be.

36 ¶ But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

But I have greater witness than that of John; not that that of my Father, mentioned ver. 31, 32, but than that of John, last mentioned; nor doth he say a truer, but a greater witness. The works which the Father hath given me to finish; the works which his Father sent him to do, his fulfilling of the law, his publication of the gospel, the miracles which he wrought, were all of them works which his Father had given him to finish. Christ often appealeth to the works which he had done, as sufficiently testifying of him, chap. x. 25, 37, 38; xiv. 10, 11; xv. 24. And it is plain, that the people looked upon them as a great testimony, chap. iii. 2; ix. 32, 33. The Jews avoided the force of this testimony impudently, some of them saying that he did them by the help of the devil, Matt. xii. 24; others pretending (more lately) that the Messiah was to work no miracles; but that is expressly contrary to what we have, chap. vii. 31, and is doubtless a device of later years. But it is a greater question, how the miracles of Christ bear witness of him; and whether they were only a probable, or a certain and infallible, testimony of his Deity. Those that think them an infallible testimony, say, 1. That he did works which none else did, John xv. 24, 2. That he did them by his own power; There went virtue out of him, and healed them all, Luke vi. 19. 3. That they were done in confirmation of the doctrine to that purpose which he preached, which God would not have confirmed by miracles, had not he been sent of God to work such things. Those that think they were not a certain and infallible testimony, say, 1. That the prophets and apostles also wrought miracles. 2. That our Saviour tells his apostles, they should do greater works than he had done. 3. That the doing of them from his own power, was a thing could not be known to others; so could be no testimony to them. But our Saviour did not only himself raise the dead, cast out devils, and work other miracles; but he gave others also a power to do it; which argued an original power in himself, and is more than we read of any prophets or apostles; who, though they wrought such miraculous operations, yet having not that power originally in and from themselves, could not communicate it to others.

37 And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape.

Hath borne witness of me; not only in my baptism, and at my transfiguration, by an audible voice from heaven, but by the voice of his prophets, by whom he spoke to your fathers. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape; you have no knowledge of him, nor any acquaintance with him. It is expounded, ver. 38, Ye have not his word abiding in you: for though indeed God appeared to the Jews in no shape or similitude; yet they (that is, their forefathers) had heard his voice, Deut. iv. 12, speaking out of the midst of the fire, ver. 33. God, being an incorporeal Being, hath no such organs of speech as we have, by which we declare our minds unto others; but God had formed an audible voice, by which he revealed his will unto the Jews; so as it could only be said of the Jews of that generation and their forefathers, from the time of giving the law, that they had not heard his voice; for, Exod. xx. 19, they then desired that Moses might speak to them, and that God would speak no more immediately. Accordingly, he did by the prophets speak to them; but they would not believe them, no, not when he spake to them by his Son, who knew his will, Heb. i. 1, 3.

38 And ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not.

<sup>f</sup> 1 John 5. 8.
<sup>g</sup> ch. 2. 2.
<sup>10</sup>, <sup>25</sup>.
<sup>2</sup> & <sup>15</sup>, <sup>24</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> Matt. 3.
<sup>17</sup>, & <sup>17</sup>, <sup>6</sup>.
<sup>ch.</sup> 6. 27.
<sup>2</sup> & <sup>5</sup>, <sup>7</sup>.
<sup>1</sup> Deut. 4. 12.
<sup>ch.</sup> 1. 18.
<sup>1</sup> Tim. 1. 17.
<sup>1</sup> John 6. 12.

Though they had heard the word of the Lord, their forefathers by the prophets, and in that generation by John the Baptist, (the messenger sent before Christ's face,) and now by Christ himself, whom the Father had sent; yet the word of the Lord had no place in their hearts, chap. viii. 37; it was unto them as a tale told; they received the sound of it, but it was not graven in their hearts. And this appeared, because as of themselves they had no intimacy of communion with God to know his mind; so, when the Son was sent out of the bosom of the Father to reveal God unto them, yet they would not receive him, so as to give any steady, fixed assent to what he revealed, and to yield him any just and true obedience.

39 ¶ Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me.

Search the Scriptures; the words may be read either imperatively (as our translation readeth them) or indicatively, You do search the Scriptures; that is, of the Old Testament, for the books of the New Testament were not at that time written; but as they had the books of the Old Testament, so they made use of them: Moses was read in the synagogues every sabbath day; and they (the Pharisees especially) were very well versed both in the law and the prophets. For in them ye think ye have eternal life; they did agree that the way of salvation and everlasting life was revealed unto them in the Holy Scriptures; nay, they did judge, that eternal life was to be obtained by their observation of the law. They are they which testify of me: they (saith our Saviour) are my principal testimony; he doth not only say, they testify, but they are they which testify. No writings but those testify of me; I principally appeal to them to give you an account of me.

40 And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

You will not own, embrace, and receive me as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world, though that be the only means by which you can obtain that eternal life which you pretend to be seeking after, and rightly think that the Scripture alone can show you the way to. These two verses teach us, 1. That the Holy Scriptures are the only writings which show us the way to life eternal. 2. That not only the Scriptures of the New, but also of the Old Testament, are of use in order thereunto, though the Old Testament Scriptures show us it more darkly, and those of the New Testament show it to us more clearly. 3. That both the one and the other point us to Christ, and to the receiving and embracing of him, as our Saviour, if we would have life. 4. That it is not sufficient for us to search the Scriptures, to be versed in and acquainted with them, unless we, in obedience to them, come to Christ.

41 I receive not honour from men.

I depend not upon the single testimony of men; or, I seek not, nor hunt after, the honour of men, nor regard what they think or say of me.

42 But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

You pretend a great deal of religion, and to do many things out of love to God, and a zeal for the glory of God; but though you can cheat others, yet you cannot deceive me: I, that search the heart, and try the reins, and am a witness to your actions, know that, whatsoever you pretend, the true love of God dwelleth not in you; and that is the reason why you do not receive me.

43 I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

I am come clothed with an authority from my Father, sent by him for this very purpose, to reveal his will to men for their salvation; I speak, I do nothing but by the authority of my Father which sent me; nor do I aim at my own glory, but the glory of him that sent me: yet you give no credit to my words, nor embrace me, as him whom God hath sent for the Saviour of man. If another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive; through the corruption of your hearts, and the just judgment of God, giving you up to strong delusions to believe lies, 2 Thes. ii. 11. If any seducers come, without any authority from God, never sent of him, nor speaking his words, nor seeking his glory, or your good, you will readily enough receive them.

44 How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?

It is evident that by receiving honour from one another, is here to be understood the seeking and pursuing of honour and applause from men, without regard to the praise of God: so also chap. xii. 43. For otherwise it is lawful for parents to receive honour from children, masters from servants, princes and other magistrates from people. But for men to be ambitious of honour and applause from men, in neglect of the honour and praise of God, this is highly sinful; and it cannot be expected that any such persons should so far deny themselves, and renounce their own works of righteousness, as to accept of Christ and his righteousness, and rely upon him alone for life and salvation. It is said, John xii. 42, that among the chief rulers many believed; yet it is added, ver. 43, For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God. But those words, ver. 43, seem rather to refer to the Pharisees, mentioned in the latter part of ver. 42, where a reason is given why, though many great rulers believed, yet they did not confess Christ, because of the Pharisees. Or if those words, ver. 43, be to be applied to those of whom it is said, they believed, ver. 42, we must distinguish concerning believing, which in chap. xii. 42 signifieth no more than an assent given to him as a great prophet, upon the miracles they saw wrought by him; in this place, a true and lively faith, receiving Christ as our Mediator and Saviour.

45 Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust.

There will be no need of my accusing you, you will need no other accuser than that Moses for whom you have so great a reverence, and for whose sake you contemn me. Chap. ix. 28, 29, they said, We are Moses's disciples. We know that God spake unto Moses: as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is. This Moses (saith our Saviour) will accuse you unto the Father.

46 For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me.

Had you given a hearty credit and understanding assent to Moses, that is, to the writings of Moses, for so the term is oft taken, Luke xvi. 31; xxiv. 27, you would have received me: as all the law of Moses pointed to and prefigured me, so he in particular wrote of me, Gen. iii. 15; Deut. xviii. 15.

47 But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?

But if you believe not his writings, who so plainly wrote of me, and whose writings you own, and have so great a veneration for, how can I expect that you should believe the words of one whom you so vilify and contemn? For though my words be in themselves of greater authority, yet I have not so much credit with you as Moses had. But how doth our Saviour affirm, ver. 45, that they trusted in Moses, and deny here that they did believe him? Answer. Some say, they believed with an implicit faith, presuming upon the merits of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; but not with an explicit faith. Others say, they believed in the general, that whatsoever he wrote was true; but they did not believe them in the true sense of them. Tarnovius thinks, that they trusted in Moses, that they might be saved by their own works done in obedience to his law; but they did not believe him, because they rejected him of whom Moses wrote, and to whom the law of Moses was but a schoolmaster. They refused him who was the Head of the corner, Psal. cxviii. 22; Matt. xxi. 42.

CHAP. VI

Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes, 1—14. He withdraweth himself from the people, who would have made him a king, and walketh on the sea, 15—21. The multitude flocking to him, he reproveth their carnal views, and requirerth their faith in him whom God hath sent, 22—29. They ask a sign like that of the manna in the wilderness; he declareth himself to be the bread of life from heaven, and that none can live but by eating his flesh and drinking his blood, 30—59. Many of his disciples taking offence thereat, he showeth his meaning to be spiritual, 60—65. Many leaving him, Peter in the name of the twelve professeth steadfast faith in him: Jesus pronounceth one of them to be a devil, 66—71.

A. D. 32.

a Mat. 14. 16.
Mark 6. 50.
Luke 9. 10,
12.

AFTER *these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.

Some good time (some think near a year) after the passages in the former chapter Christ went over the lake of Galilee (for the Jews called all great collections of waters seas); it is also called the lake of Tiberias, and the lake of Gennesaret, Luke v. 1. These waters received their name from the whole province whose coast they washed, so they were called the sea of Galilee; or the particular shore or cities they washed, so they are sometimes called the sea of Tiberias, sometimes the lake of Gennesaret. It appeareth by Mark vi. 31, that he went upon the apostles coming to give him an account of what they had done and taught.

2 And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased.

Our Saviour (as appeareth by Mark vi. 31) only spake to his apostles to withdraw into a desert place, and to rest a while; but, ver. 33, though our Saviour went by ship, yet the people ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him. That which induced them was their knowledge of the miracles which he had wrought.

3 And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

b Lev. 23. 5,
7. Deut. 16.
1. ch. 2. 13.
& 5. 1.

4 <sup>b</sup> And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

That is, the third passover after our Saviour had entered upon his public ministry; by which we may observe, that John omitted many things spoken and done by our Saviour in the year immediately following the second passover, for he giveth us no further account than what we have in the former chapter, and in this. The other evangelists give us a more full account of them. The place whither our Saviour went seemeth to have been toward the end of the lake, so as the people could go on foot, and turn at the point of the lake, and be there before the ship could cross the water.

c Mat. 14. 14.
Mark 6. 35.
Luke 9. 12.

5 ¶ When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

This is apparently the same history which we have met with in all the former three evangelists, Matt. xiv. 15—21; Mark vi. 35—44; Luke ix. 10—17. See the differing circumstances considered in our annotations on those chapters. The other evangelists observe, that Christ had first been preaching to them, until it was near night; and then bring in the disciples first moving him (because they had eaten nothing) to send them away to provide themselves food. This evangelist begins with some words Christ should speak to Philip.

6 And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do.

Now this he said to try what Philip would say, for he was himself resolved what to do.

d See Numb.
11. 21, 22.

7 Philip answered him, <sup>d</sup>Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

This discourse between our Saviour and Philip is reported by none of the other evangelists, and probably was after that which they report of the other disciples' motion to Christ to dismiss the people, because it was now towards evening. The number (as we shall find afterward) was five thousand, besides women and children; amongst whom five hundred pennyworth of bread was very little to be divided.

8 One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, 9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: <sup>e</sup>but <sup>f</sup>what are they among so many? <sup>g</sup>King 4. 43.

10 And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

12 When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

The story is the same, in all substantial parts, with the relations of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, in the before-mentioned places. See the annotations on those chapters.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This <sup>h</sup>is of a truth <sup>i</sup>that prophet that should come into the world. <sup>j</sup>Gen. 49. 10. Deut. 18. 15, 16. Matt. 11. 3. ch. 1. 21. & 4. 19, 25. & 7. 40.

When they had seen the miracle of Christ's multiplying five loaves and two fishes, to the feeding of five thousand persons, besides women and children; a miracle of that nature, that never any such was wrought either by Moses or any prophet, and to the working of which a creating power was necessary; this brought them to a strong persuasion that this was the Messiah; for he is signified by that phrase, that prophet that should come into the world, as appeareth from Luke vii. 19.

15 ¶ When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone.

This motion of Christ into a mountain alone, after he had sent away the multitude, (thus miraculously fed,) and after that his disciples had taken ship again, is mentioned by two other of the evangelists; by Matthew, chap. xiv. 23; by Mark, chap. vi. 45, 46. But this occasion of it is expressed by neither of them; who both say, that he went thither to pray. And indeed John (who rarely mentioneth any thing set down by the others) is judged to have recorded this history, as for the excellent discourse of our Saviour's following this miracle; so for some particular circumstances in and about the miracle, not mentioned by the other evangelists; of which, as the discourse he had with Philip was one, so this about their going about to make him a king was another. The Jews were a people exceedingly jealous of and zealous for their liberties, the Galileans especially, amongst whom our Saviour was at that time; so as they never wanted any thing but a leader for a sedition or rebellion. The Scriptures mention two, Acts v. 36, 37, under the conduct of one Theudas, and Judas of Galilee. Ecclesiastical history mentioneth more. Their error as to the Messiah (whom they dreamed of as a temporal prince) gave them a colour for these insurrections, whenever they could get any to take upon him that pretence. These men seeing these great miracles wrought by Christ, particularly that of the loaves multiplied to feed five thousand, thought Christ had been such a Messiah as they expected; not understanding that the kingdom of the true Messiah was not to be of this world, chap. xviii. 36, but within men here, and more evident in the day of judgment, Matt. xxv. 34. But our Saviour, who never came into the world to disturb the civil order and government in it, constantly avoided the giving the least occasion for such a suspicion: when he therefore knew, either by his insight into the hearts of men, or by hearing their discourses, that they had such seditious thoughts, he withdrew himself into a mountain. How he withdrew himself, so as they did not follow him, no, not his disciples, is a matter which hath exercised the thoughts of many. The papists say, that he had a power, by virtue of the personal union of the Divine and human nature in his person, to make his body invisible, and so passed from them, not discerned by them. The Lutherans are not so confident in this, yet seem to incline it might be thus. Indeed both of them are concerned to maintain the possibility of such a thing; for without such a possibility, neither can the papists maintain their doctrine of transubstantiation, where they hold, that the bread in the sacrament of the Lord's supper is turned into the very body of Christ, and the wine into his blood (though no such thing be obvious to our senses); nor the Lutherans their doctrine of consubstantiation, who hold, that the very body and blood of Christ is really present in, with, or under the elements, though the elements be not changed into it. But the Greek words are no more than ἀνεχώρησεν πάλιν, which signify no more than that he again changed his place, which he might easily do through a multitude in a disorder, without their notice of him; and if his disciples did see him, it is not probable that they, knowing his aversion to any seditious practices, as also his custom to withdraw to places of privacy for devotion, would take any notice at all of him.

<sup>g</sup> Mat. 14. 22. <sup>h</sup> Mark 6. 47. 16 And when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

This piece of history is related much more fully by the other evangelists, Matt. xiv. 23—33; Mark vi. 46—52. See the notes upon those two chapters.

17 And entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

18 And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship: and they were afraid.

20 But he saith unto them, It is I; be not afraid.

21 Then they willingly received him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22 ¶ The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

By the sea is here meant the sea of Galilee, or lake of Tiberias, or of Gennesaret. There our Saviour and his disciples had left the multitude; the disciples having taken a boat, and passing over on the other side, and Christ having followed them, the multitude, probably having gone in the night to rest themselves at their several houses, came again in the morning, expecting to have found Christ, and have seen more miracles; being disappointed, understanding that both Christ and his disciples were gone over,

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks:)

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

They also took shipping, made use of some other boats that were come over the water, and went over to seek Jesus; not out of any love to his person or doctrine, (as we shall anon hear,) but out of a curiosity to see some further miracles wrought by him. Our Lord disappoints them, but preacheth a most admirable sermon to them.

25 And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi, when camest thou hither?

26 Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

They asked him, When camest thou hither? A curious and impertinent question, to which he doth not think fit to give an apposite answer, but at first letteth them know, that he knew their hearts, and what designs they had in following him; which was not to see the miraculous effects of the Divine power, the credentials of his commission from heaven, and to receive him as the true Messiah, and believe his doctrine; but they came upon so low an account as to be fed by him.

27 ¶ Labour not for the meat which <sup>Or, Work not.</sup> perisheth, but <sup>h ver. 54.</sup> for that meat which <sup>ch. 4. 14.</sup> endureth unto everlasting life, which the <sup>1 Mat. 3. 17.</sup> Son of man shall give unto you: <sup>ch. 17. 5.</sup> for him <sup>Mark 1. 11.</sup> hath God the Father sealed. <sup>ch. 9. 7. Luke 2. 22. ch. 9. 35. ch. 1. 33. &</sup>

<sup>s. 37. & 9. 18. Acta 2. 22. 2 Pet. 1. 17.</sup> By the bread which perisheth, is not strictly to be understood bread, but whatsoever is necessary or accommodating to us in this life; all things of this nature are perishing, and perish with the using; nor is all labour as to them forbidden us; for we are to the contrary commanded, In the sweat of our face to eat our bread; and the apostle commandeth, that those that will not labour should not eat; and, Prov. xxxi. 27, the good woman is commended for not eating the bread of idleness: but excessive labour for these things is forbidden. So also is a first and greater labour for and seeking after them, than after that meat which endureth to everlasting life; under which notion also unquestionably cometh whatsoever is necessary by God's revealed will, that we may have in us the hopes of glory here, and may enter into the actual possession of that glory hereafter. Such as are, first, the knowledge of the gospel; then the believing of it, and the acceptance of that Saviour, and way of salvation, which God hath revealed in it for lost sinners; and that holiness of life which God hath made necessary to it. All which (saith he) I, who am the Son of man, (a name he ordinarily giveth to himself,) will give unto you freely. Not that you are to do nothing; no, labour for it; though it be a gift, yet it is a gift upon labour, for all your labour will not procure it; there will be a great deal of free grace seen when you have given all diligence. And Christ must give it; for the Father, in whose hand this life is, hath (as men by their seals use to confirm the commissions they give out to any persons to do any thing for them, and in their name) confirmed Christ as his commissioner, to give out this eternal life to whomsoever he pleaseth.

28 Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?

They easily understood that our Saviour did not speak of any worldly food, by his opposing the labour he mentioneth, and persuadeth for, to a labour for the world; but still they did not understand what labour he spake of, but dreamed of the works of the law; knowing of no other work which God commanded, but which was prescribed in the law; and they (probably) being some, or many of them, strict observers, especially of the law contained in ordinances, and probably many of them of the moral law also, according to the sense of it given by their teachers; in which sense the young man, Matt. xix. 20, being bid by our Saviour to keep the law, and naming most of the precepts of the second table, told him, All these things have I kept from my youth: what lack I yet? They wondered what works our Saviour meant; what labour, when he said, Labour for that bread, or that meat which endureth to everlasting life; thinking that those who kept the law (in the sense before expressed) had no more to do.

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, <sup>1</sup> This is the work of God, that ye believe <sup>ch. 1. John 3.</sup> on him whom he hath sent.

Our Lord calleth them to a work they never thought of, the owning and acknowledgment of him to be the true Messiah; the embracing and receiving him as such, and trusting him with all the concerns of their souls; which was necessary, notwithstanding all their acts of obedience to the law, though most certainly productive also of that obedience, and inseparable from it. This our Saviour calleth the work of God, in answer to what they had said about working the works of God. Yet this will not prove that we are justified by works, because we are justified by faith; for here is no discourse concerning the causation of faith in the justification of a soul, but only concerning what is the will of God, as to all those that shall be saved.

1 Matt. 12.
38. & 16. 1.
Mark 8. 11.
1 Cor. 1. 22.

30 They said therefore unto him, 'What sign shewest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?'

They thought it reasonable, that he who brought forth a new doctrine into the world (such as faith in him was, they having never heard any such thing from their doctors the Pharisees) should confirm his mission by some miraculous operation. But this was a strange stupidity, considering the sign he had so lately showed them, of feeding five thousand with five loaves and two fishes. So it was manifest they sought for a sign, not to promote or confirm their faith, but merely to feed their curiosity; and what our Saviour said, Matt. xii. 39, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, was truly applicable to them; and those words, believe thee, eminently confirm it; for the aforesaid miracle speaking in him a creative power, and being such as was never wrought by any creature, they were obliged to believe him, without any further sign. God ought to be believed upon his bare word.

31 "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

Here they magnify Moses; he did not bring them a law only, but confirmed it by signs from heaven to be the will of God, by obtaining for them bread to be rained from heaven to satisfy their hunger, Exod. xvi. 15; Numb. xi. 7; which is also confirmed by the psalmist, Psal. lxxviii. 25. This Moses did for the whole congregation of Israel forty years together. From hence they would seem to conclude, that they had more ground to believe Moses than Christ, who, though he had indeed lately fed five thousand with five loaves, yet had done no such thing. Not considering that Moses, in what he did, was but an instrument to obtain of God by prayer such a miracle, for supporting his people in the wilderness; and that what he had done, was done by a creating power inherent in himself, by which he multiplied that little proportion of bread which they had, to make it sufficient to feed such a quantity as five thousand, besides women and children; to which effect it bare no proportion.

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

You are mistaken in your opinion of that manna, which indeed was bread from heaven, spiritual meat, (as the apostle calleth it, 1 Cor. x. 3,) but it was not given you by any power or virtue in or from Moses. Moses said otherwise; when it was first rained down, he told them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat, Exod. xvi. 15. It was the Lord, not Moses, that gave you that bread. Nor was that true spiritual bread; it was only spiritual (as the apostle calleth it) because it was typical, and prefigurative of me. My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven; it was he that gave your fathers manna, not Moses; and it is he who giveth you me, who am the true bread, of which that bread was but typical, a shadow, and a figure.

33 For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

Moses gave you spiritual, heavenly bread; but that was only spiritual as it was typical and prefigured me; heavenly, as it came from the lower heavens, was rained down from thence, not made upon the earth by the art of man; and was therefore called the bread of angels; but I am the true bread of God, signified by that type, who came not down from the lower, but from the highest heavens; and who do not only maintain and uphold life in men, (as that did,) but give life to men; and that not a mere natural life, but a spiritual and eternal life; and that not to the Jews only, for whose use alone manna was, but to the world.

34 "Then said they unto him, Lord, <sup>o See ch. 4. 10.</sup> evermore give us this bread.

Most interpreters agree that they spake this seriously, that is, that they were willing enough to have such bread (if any such were to be had); but yet not conceiving aright the nature and excellency of the bread our Saviour mentioned; and this occasioned his clear explication of it in the following verse.

35 And Jesus said unto them, "I am <sup>p ver. 48. 58.</sup> the bread of life: 'he that cometh to me <sup>q ch. 4. 14. & 7. 37.</sup> shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

I am the bread of life; the bread that giveth spiritual and eternal life, and the bread that upholdeth and maintaineth spiritual life; the Messiah, whom God hath sent into the world, to quicken those that are dead in trespasses and sins, Eph. ii. 1; and to give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given me. But those that have this life, must come unto me; which he interprets in the next phrase by believing in him. Thus he taketh them off all gross and carnal conceptions of eating and drinking in a carnal manner; and minds them to think of getting and maintaining another kind of life than they dreamed of. By believing in him, we have formerly showed is to be understood a receiving of him as the Mediator and Saviour of men, and closing with him, and committing their souls in all their spiritual concerns unto him; and he that doth so (saith he) shall never hunger nor thirst; that is, shall never want any thing necessary for him for life and eternal happiness. And for things of this life, he shall have food convenient for him; he shall be fed, Psal. xxxvii. 3. See such a promise, Isa. xlix. 10.

36 "But I said unto you, That ye also <sup>r ver. 26. 54.</sup> have seen me, and believe not.

You have seen me in the flesh, you have heard my doctrine, you have seen the miracles which I have wrought, confirming that doctrine, and me to be the true Messiah; for I have done amongst you those works which never any man did: but you are of the generation of those of whom it was prophesied, That in seeing you should not see, nor yet perceive; for though you have seen me with your bodily eyes, and could not but conclude by what works I have done that I am the true Messiah; yet you do not own and acknowledge me as such, nor will by faith close with me, and come unto me for life and happiness.

37 "All that the Father giveth me shall <sup>a ver. 45. 1 Mat. 24. 24. ch. 10. 28, 29. 2 Tim. 2. 19. 1 John 2. 19.</sup> come to me; and 'him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.

Here ariseth a great question amongst interpreters of various persuasions, what giving of the Father is here meant; whether an eternal designation of persons to eternal life, in order to the obtaining of which the persons so predestinated are given to Christ, as he who was to be the Messiah, Saviour, and Redeemer of the world; or the infusing the habits of special, saving grace, by which persons are enabled actually to believe. If the former, the words do not only infer an infallible connexion betwixt faith and eternal life and salvation; but also betwixt the decree of election and the collation of special grace, by which men are enabled to believe, and, believing, are saved. That which seemeth to favour the latter opinion is, that the verb is in the present tense; it is not, all that the Father hath given, but all that the Father giveth; which would incline us to think, that though in other texts the Father's giving of souls to Christ may signify his eternal election, yet in this text it rather signifieth the donation or giving the habits of special grace. But there are very learned and pious interpreters of another mind, who think by the Father's giving, is meant the Father's choosing souls in him, Eph. i. 4. Certain it is, that there are some chosen to life, and the certain means by which that life is to be obtained, Eph. i. 4, 5. And as certain it is, that persons so chosen in him, shall neither miss of that life, nor yet of that effectual means by which it shall be obtained. Whether that eternal election, or donation, be here intended or no, is not so momentous to determine. For the Jesuits' argument, that if we understand it of such an eternal gift, our Saviour rather excuseth than accuseth them for their unbelief, by telling them they could not believe, because they were not given unto him; it holdeth as strong against special grace as against particular election; so as if that were true, it could be interpreted in neither of those senses: but by their leaves it doth not at all excuse them, unless they did what in them lay to come to Christ: but this question belongs rather to polemical writers than interpreters. Certain it is, that it is such a giving here mentioned, as shall be followed by a coming to Christ; that is, believing in him, and by a true faith receiving of him. And those that do so, our Lord saith, he will in no wise cast out. Out of heaven, say some; others understand it of perseverance; but certainly the phrase denoteth no more than the freeness and readiness of Christ to receive every one who truly believeth in him, and to preserve him to eternal life and salvation. Who they are that are given to Christ, and that will or shall believe in him, is a secret that is known unto God alone: but this may be known to all, that Christ will not throw off any soul that is willing to receive him as its Saviour, and that no such soul shall perish for ever.

38 For I came down from heaven, <sup>u</sup>not to do mine own will, <sup>v</sup>but the will <sup>w</sup>of him that sent me.

Our Lord confirmeth what he had before said concerning his gracious reception of believers, and preserving them by his grace in their state of grace, so that they shall not be cast out with reprobates in the day of judgment, from this, that he came not to execute any particular will of his own, but what was also the will of his Father, who sent him into the world.

39 And this is the Father's will which <sup>y</sup>hath sent me, <sup>z</sup>that of all which he hath <sup>a</sup>given me I should lose nothing, but <sup>b</sup>should raise it up again at the last day.

For this he revealeth to be his Father's will, that of all his Father had given him, he should lose none; where by the Father's giving must be meant, either his eternal act (having chosen some to eternal life) in giving them to his Son, for the work of their redemption; or, which is but the effect and product of that, the working, preserving, and upholding in them those habits and exercises of grace, by which that eternal life is to be obtained. Our Lord declareth it to be the will of his Father, that he should not suffer any of these to miscarry; but though their bodies die and turn into dust, yet Christ at the last day should come to raise the dead, and, in particular, raise them up: not that they only shall rise, (for how then shall all appear before the judgment-seat of God, to receive according to what they have done in the flesh?) but they are those alone who shall receive any benefit by the resurrection; and therefore they are called the children of the resurrection; and the resurrection is sometimes spoken of in Scripture as if it were to be peculiar to them, Phil. iii. 11. By this the certainty of the resurrection is established; it being asserted as the effect of the will of God, which none hath resisted at any time.

40 And this is the will of him that <sup>c</sup>sent me, <sup>d</sup>that every one which seeth the <sup>e</sup>Son, and believeth on him, may have <sup>f</sup>everlasting life: and I will raise him up <sup>g</sup>at the last day.

Our Lord having asserted the will of God, as to the final issue and happiness of believers, goes on to assert the means by which, in this life using, they must obtain this life: those are, seeing the Son, and believing in him; seeing him, not with the eyes of their bodies, or seeing his miraculous operations, both which these Capernaïtes did, and yet did not believe, (as he told them, ver. 36.) but a seeing them with the eye of their minds, discerning him as the Messiah, and Saviour of the world; so seeing him, as to believe on him. As to these, he confirmeth it again to be the will of his Father, that they should live eternally, and that they should be raised again at the last day; and that by him, whom God had ordained to be the Judge both of the quick and the dead, Acts x. 42, which agreeth with what he had before said, chap. v. 28.

41 The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

The Jews were exceedingly prone to this sin of murmuring, which is a complaining either through indignation, or impatience of what men hear spoken, or see done: the thing which offended, seemeth not to be his calling himself the true bread, and the bread of life; but because he said, that he came down from heaven.

42 And they said, <sup>h</sup>Is not this Jesus, <sup>i</sup>the son of Joseph, whose father and <sup>j</sup>mother we know? how is it then that he <sup>k</sup>saith, I came down from heaven?

For Capernaum, where our Saviour now was, was not far from Nazareth, where he had been educated, and lived near thirty years with Joseph his reputed father. Understanding therefore nothing of our Saviour's miraculous conception by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost in the womb of the virgin, they were much offended at his discourse of his coming down from heaven.

43 Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

By this our Saviour gives them another proof of his Divine nature, viz. in his knowing of their hearts and thoughts; for though they were inwardly angry, and in a rage, yet we read not of any words spoken by them; but our Saviour needed not their words to tell him what was in the secret of their hearts. Our Saviour bids them not murmur at this, for he had much more than this to tell them, as followeth.

44 <sup>l</sup>No man can come to me, except <sup>m</sup>the Father which hath sent me draw him: <sup>n</sup>and I will raise him up at the last day.

That by drawing here is not to be understood any co-action, or force upon the will, is a thing on all hands out of question; but whether by it be only to be understood a rational drawing by arguments, (used in the ministry of the gospel,) or a further powerful influence upon the soul, inclining it to be willing and obedient, that is the question. The patrons of a power in man's will to do what is spiritually good and necessary in order to eternal life and salvation, understand it of the former only (of which the compelling, mentioned Luke xiv. 23, is to be understood, for the ministers of the gospel have no other power to compel); but in regard the drawing here mentioned is the act not of the servants, but of the Master; not of the ministers, but of the Father; it is more reasonably concluded that it here signifies a Divine power put forth upon the soul of man, by which it is made obedient to the heavenly call, and willing to close with the offer of Christ in the gospel; for though no such thing can necessarily be concluded from the word draw, yet it is easily concluded from the nature of the motion, in coming to Christ, which is the soul's motion to a sublime, spiritual object, to which no soul hath any power of itself; such is the darkness of the human mind, the obstinacy of the will, the depravation of the affections, unless it be illuminated and drawn by the Spirit of God. No soul is able of itself to discern spiritual things, so as to see that goodness and excellency that is in them, much less to move towards the participation of them.

45 <sup>o</sup>It is written in the prophets, And <sup>p</sup>they shall be all taught of God. <sup>q</sup>Every <sup>r</sup>man therefore that hath heard, and hath <sup>s</sup>learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

It is written in the prophets; either in Isa. liv. 13, or in the book of the prophets; for though the words be to be found only in Isaiah, yet words of the same import are also to be found in Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joel, and Micah. All they whom the Lord hath chosen shall be taught of God. Therefore (saith he) said I to you, Every man that hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me. Our Saviour proveth the doctrine which he had delivered to them, from the prophets, not because their authority was greater than his, or in any degree equal with his; but because the prophets

u Mat. 26. 39.
v ch. 8. 30.
w ch. 4. 34.

y ch. 10. 28.
z ch. 17. 12.
a & 15. 9.

c ver. 27, 47.
d ch. 3. 16.
e & 4. 14.

h Mat. 13. 56.
i Mark 6. 3.
j Luke 4. 22.

l Cant. 1. 4.
m ver. 65.

o Is. 54. 13.
p Jer. 31. 34.
q Mic. 4. 2.
r Heb. 8. 10.
s & 10. 16.
d ver. 37.

and their writings were in greater authority and reputation with them.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 1. 18. <sup>h</sup> & 37. <sup>i</sup> Mat. 11. 27. <sup>j</sup> Luke 10. 22. <sup>k</sup> ch. 1. 18. & 7. <sup>l</sup> 28. & 8. 19.

46 <sup>a</sup>Not that any man hath seen the Father, <sup>b</sup>save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father.

None must dream that the Father should visibly appear in the world to teach men; for the essence of God is invisible, none hath seen it at any time, saving he alone who is the only begotten Son of the Father; he hath seen the essence of the Father, he knoweth his will, and most secret counsels.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 3. 16. <sup>h</sup> 16. 36. <sup>i</sup> ver. 40.

47 Verily, verily, I say unto you, <sup>a</sup>He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.

<sup>h</sup> ver. 33, 35.

48 <sup>a</sup>I am that bread of life.

See the notes on chap. iii. 18, and 36, and in this chapter, ver. 35.

<sup>i</sup> ver. 31.

49 <sup>a</sup>Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

Your fathers by nature, or in respect of unbelief, did eat manna in the wilderness, and they are naturally dead; (manna would not always preserve their natural life;) and those of them who were unbelievers, are also dead eternally; their eating of manna, which was a type of me, without believing in me, would not save them.

<sup>k</sup> ver. 51, 58.

50 <sup>a</sup>This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

But I am that bread of life, who came out of the highest heavens, from the bosom of my Father; that bread, which if a man eateth thereof, he shall never die eternally. Eating Christ in this text signifieth no more than believing in him, so often before mentioned under the notion of coming to him, believing in him, &c. And believing is fitly expressed by this notion of eating; because as eating is the application of meat to our stomachs, for the sustentance of our bodily life; so believing is the application of Christ to the soul, for the beginning and increase of spiritual life, and at last obtaining life eternal.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 2. 13.

51 I am the living bread <sup>a</sup>which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and <sup>b</sup>the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.

I am the living bread which came down from heaven: see the notes on ver. 33, and 35. Our Saviour's so often inculcating this, and what follows, lets us see both how necessary this is to be known, and also how difficult the work of believing is. Those words, he shall live for ever, expound those that went before in the 50th verse, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. His saying that the bread which he giveth is his flesh, expounds what he said before, viz. how he is the bread of life, viz. by giving his flesh, that is, his life, for the life of the world, that many might be saved; hereby showing us, that the object of our faith is a Christ crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 7. 43. <sup>o</sup> 9. 18. <sup>p</sup> 10. 19. <sup>q</sup> ch. 3. 9.

52 The Jews therefore <sup>a</sup>strove among themselves, saying, <sup>b</sup>How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

They will still understand spiritual things in a carnal sense; yet it is hard to conceive how they could imagine that Christ spake of giving them his flesh to eat, as men eat the flesh of oxen or sheep; but which way soever they did understand it indeed, their captious temper inclined them to conceal any other sense they had of it, and to represent what our Saviour said as exceedingly absurd.

<sup>r</sup> Matt. 28. <sup>s</sup> 26.

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except <sup>a</sup>ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

The short and true sense of these words is, that without a true believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, as he who died for our sins, no man hath any thing in him of true spiritual life, nor shall ever come to eternal life. Here are two questions arise from this verse and what follows. 1. Whether the flesh of Christ, that is, his human nature, giveth life, or all our life floweth from the Divine nature? That is a question betwixt the Lutherans and the Calvinists; the former affirming, that there is a quickening virtue in the human nature of Christ by virtue of its personal union with the Divine nature. It is a curious question, serving to no great edification; those who have a mind to be satisfied in it, and to read what is said on either side, may read Tarnovius on this text, and Zanchy, in his book De Incarnatione, p. 540. 2. The other is a question betwixt the papists and us, Whether this and the following verses spake any thing about the eating of the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ in the sacrament. All protestants deny it, both Lutherans and Calvinists. The papists most absurdly affirm it, to maintain their most absurd doctrine of transubstantiation. The vanity of their assertion, as to this text, appears, 1. Because it was a year and upwards after this before the sacrament of the Lord's supper was instituted; and it is very absurd to think that our Saviour should speak of an institution not in being, his doctrine about it being what it was impossible people should understand. Nor, 2. Is the proposition true, of sacramental eating; for many may have never sacramentally eaten the flesh and drank the blood of Christ, and yet be spiritually alive, and be saved eternally. Besides that mere sacramental eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ will not give life; but the eating here spoken of giveth life, eternal life, ver. 56, 58. 3. Besides, it is plain from ver. 29, that the eating here spoken of is believing; but it is plain, that eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ in the sacrament is not believing. By all which, it is apparent, that our Saviour saith nothing in this text of a sacramental eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ.

54 <sup>a</sup>Whoso eateth my flesh, and drink- <sup>q</sup> ver. 27, 40. <sup>r</sup> ch. 4. 14.

eth my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.

Hath eternal life; he hath it in a sure and just right title, and he shall have it in a certain actual possession; and in order to it, he shall have a joyful resurrection unto it at the last day. This is no more than what our Saviour had often said, particularly chap. iii. 18, 36, admitting what was before said, that by eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ, is to be meant believing in him; only here is a clearer discovery than was there, of the true object of that faith which justifieth, viz. a Christ crucified, for that is signified by the flesh and blood mentioned.

55 For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

I, as a Christ crucified, not merely considered as to my Divine nature, but as to both natures united in one person, and particularly with respect to my death and suffering, am indeed the food of souls; not a typical food, as manna was, but a true and real food, which nourisheth them to eternal life, and the most excellent food for them. In which sense Christ is called the true light, chap. i. 9, and the true vine, chap. xv. 1.

56 He that eateth my flesh, and drink- <sup>t</sup> John 3. <sup>u</sup> 24. & 4. 15.

eth my blood, <sup>a</sup>dwelleth in me, and I in him.

He that acknowledgeth and receiveth me, though he seeth me as a man, consisting of flesh and blood, and that particularly applieth himself to me as dying for the sins of the world, and committeth his soul in all its concerns for life and salvation to me, is united to me, and I to him: he is united to me by faith and love, Eph. iii. 17; 1 John iii. 23, 24; iv. 16; and I am united to him by a mutual love, chap. xiv. 23, and by my Holy Spirit. As our bread and meat, which we are nourished by, doth not dwell in us, and nourish, unless we eat it; so neither doth Christ do good to any soul, unless such a soul as by faith receiveth him, and believeth in him. What is said in this verse maketh it evident that these verses cannot be understood of any sacramental eating, for it is not true that Christ dwelleth in every soul, or that every soul dwelleth and abideth in Christ, who doth sacramentally eat the flesh and drink the blood of Christ. All unions are either natural or political unions. The strictest natural union is that of the head and members, the vine and the branches. The strictest political union is that of the husband and wife, Gen. ii. 24. The union betwixt Christ and a believing soul is set out by all these, chap. xv. 1; Eph. v. 30, 31; Col. i. 18. For the nature of this union, see divines who have wrote on this argument.

57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.

God is often in holy writ called the living God, not only because he hath life in himself, but because he is the fountain of life to all his creatures. Christ here declareth his Father to be the living Father upon the latter account, as he is the author and fountain of all life. And I live by the Father, saith he. Some translate it for the Father; as indeed the preposition διὰ, joined with an accusative case, (as it is here,) doth most ordinarily signify; but not always, either in profane authors, or in the dialect of Scripture, as Mark ii. 4; xii. 24; chap. iv. 41, 42. It seemeth here (as in those texts) to denote not so much the final as the efficient cause; and so better translated by, than for the Father: for Christ in this text seems to be giving his hearers an account how he came to be living bread; and to be in a capacity of giving life to the world. Saith he, I live by the Father, who by an eternal generation hath communicated to me all that life which is in him; and hath also communicated to me a quickening power, as I am Mediator, and sent by the Father into the world, to give life unto the world. Now look, as I have life in myself from him who is the fountain of life, so, according to the Father's ordination, he that eateth me, that is, by a true faith receiveth and closeth with me, as Mediator, he shall live by me both spiritually and eternally.

<sup>a ver. 49, 50, 51.</sup> 58 *This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

There is no more said in this verse than ver. 49—51: see the notes on those verses. From this whole discourse it is as evident as the light, that the justification of the soul dependeth upon believing; and the spiritual life of the soul floweth not from love or obedience to the works of the law, but from faith in Jesus Christ: though it be true, that true faith cannot be without works, and no man without obedience in sincerity (though not in perfection) to the will of God, shall ever obtain eternal life and salvation; but this obedience is not faith, nor doth it enter into the justification of the soul, but is the certain and necessary product of that faith which justifieth, which cannot be justified as true and saving without obedience. In all this discourse here is no mention of love, or obedience, as that to which the promises of life everlasting and a joyful resurrection are so often made; but only of eating Christ; eating his flesh and drinking his blood; eating him as the bread which came down from heaven, &c.; which are phrases no way expressive of obedience to the works of the law, but of believing, ver. 47—49. The other texts of Scripture make it plain enough, that there can be no believing without obeying, nor any eternal life and salvation obtained without both.

59 These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

Though the state of the Jewish church at this time was corrupt enough, both as to matters of doctrine, worship, and discipline; yet it being constituted by his Father, he did not decline their assemblies either in the temple at Jerusalem, or in the places of the public worship, which were called synagogues, and were both in their cities and villages; for he had a liberty to teach in them, as appeareth both from this and many other texts; which he accordingly used, and usually spent the sabbath, or a great part of it, in those places and assemblies: yet by his presence he no way owned or declared his approbation of their corruptions, but frequently and freely reproved them; only because of those superstitious impertinencies (there being at this time no idolatry practised amongst them) he would not disown what was of God his Father among them. The same practice we shall observe amongst the apostles, till the Jews declared themselves hardened, drove them out from their synagogues, and spake evil of the way of the gospel before the multitude, Acts xix. 9. Then indeed, and not before, Paul separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. This also is further to be observed in the practice of our Saviour, that although he went to the temple and the synagogues, and there joined with the Jewish worship instituted by his Father, and reproved (as he had occasion) the corruptions they had introduced and superadded; yet he did not forbear himself teaching the gospel in other places besides the temple and the synagogues. The evangelist also noteth, that the synagogue where he taught these things was in Capernaum, a city of Galilee, which in this was exalted to heaven, that it had not only the gospel preached in it, but by Christ himself; but for the contempt of the gospel is since brought down to hell, as much debased as it was before exalted, being long since reduced to a poor inconsiderable place, and at this day under the tyranny of the Mahometan prince.

60 *Many therefore of his disciples, <sup>t ver. 66. Matt. 11. a.</sup> when they had heard this, said, This is an hard saying; who can hear it?

His disciples; his followers, not those that were his disciples indeed, but in name; for many followed him that did not believe in him; and many (in a sense) believed, to whom he did not commit himself, chap. ii. 23, 24. Now, many of these disciples, having heard these sayings, and being no way able to comprehend so great mysteries, nor having their eyes opened by the Spirit of illumination, said within themselves, These are sayings hard, or impossible, to be understood; who is able to hear or to understand them? or who is able to bear them?

61 When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you?

Christ, though clothed with our flesh, yet being also the eternal Son of God, knew by virtue of his Divine nature, personally united to the human nature, what was in the heart of man; hence is this phrase, knew in himself; which is opposed to a knowledge from the hearing of his own ears, as man heareth, whether more immediately from the sound of their words, (for we read of nothing they spake audibly,) or from the relation of others, as what they had heard: he knew in himself their thoughts by his Divine prerogative and property of searching the hearts, and trying the reins, and discerning the thoughts of men afar off. Knowing their thoughts, he saith, Doth this give you occasion of stumbling?

62 *What and if ye shall see the Son <sup>u ch. 3. 13. Mark 16. 19. Acts 1. 2. Eph. 4. 8.</sup> of man ascend up where he was before?

Our Saviour by these words may seem rather to increase than to abate their offence. That which stumbled them was, his calling himself the bread of life; his affirming that he came down from heaven; that he gave life to the world; that the way to obtain this life was eating his flesh and drinking his blood. How doth what he now tells them any way tend to satisfy them? He now speaks of ascending up to heaven, and asserteth that he was there before. Ans. The former assertions were no way to be justified but upon this foundation, that though he appeared now in the form and shape of a man, and was indeed the Son of man, yet he was also God, the eternal Son of God: he therefore here plainly asserts, that he was in heaven before he appeared as the Son of man upon the earth; and descending from thence, did assume the form of a servant; and for a further proof of this, he referreth them to what they were to see or hear (to know) within some few months after this discourse, (for this was after his third passover, which was to be the last year of his life,) viz. that he should ascend up to heaven; which it is very probable that some of them did see with their bodily eyes; for he was in Galilee when he ascended, and Capernaum was a city of that province; and when he ascended, the men of Galilee stood gazing up to heaven after him, as appears from Acts i. 11, and had a revelation, that they should see him so come again, and descend from heaven, as they had seen him go up.

63 *It is the spirit that quickeneth; <sup>x2 Cor. 3. 6.</sup> the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.

As it is not the bread or flesh that a man eateth for the sustenance of his animal or natural life, that doth the main work, but the soul of a man within him, which putteth forth its virtues and powers in causing the digestion, concoction, and alteration of it, without which it nourisheth not the body; so the flesh of Christ eaten carnally can be of no profit for the nourishment of the soul: nor can the flesh of Christ considered alone, or by any virtue in it, profit; it only profiteth by virtue of the Divine nature, which being personally united to the human nature, addeth all the virtue and merit to the sufferings and actions of the human nature; so as the human nature of Christ hath all its quickening virtue from the Divine nature. It is not therefore the carnal eating of my flesh that I intended, that is a very gross conception of yours; nor can any such thing as that do you good: but the words that I speak to you, they are spiritual, and such by the belief of which you may obtain a spiritual and eternal life; for by believing those words, and obeying them, you shall come to believe in me, which is that eating my flesh and drinking my blood which I intended, not any corporeal or carnal eating.

<sup>y ver. 26.</sup> 64 But <sup>there</sup> are some of you that believe not. For <sup>Jesus</sup> knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him.

I may say what I will to you; the Spirit quickeneth, but it doth not quicken all; it only quickeneth whomsoever it pleaseth. You understand not these things, but have most gross conceptions of sublime spiritual things; the reason is, because you believe not: though some of them, questionless, did truly believe, yet the most did not; for we read, ver. 66, that many of them went back, and walked no more with him. And though faith be an inward, secret act of the soul, yet Christ knew, and from the beginning, who were believers, and who were not; nay, he had a particular knowledge of that disciple who was to betray him.

<sup>a ver. 44, 45.</sup> 65 And he said, Therefore <sup>said</sup> I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

He said this, ver. 44: see the notes on that verse.

<sup>b ver. 60.</sup> 66 ¶ <sup>From that time</sup> many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

His disciples at large, so called because they followed him, partly to hear what he would say, partly to see his miracles, followed him no more. Many professors and seeming disciples of Christ may draw back and fall from their profession, though none that truly receive Christ shall fall away, but be by the power of God preserved through faith unto salvation.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

It is probable that some stayed besides the twelve, for it is said only that many of his disciples turned back. Nor was our Saviour (who knew the hearts of all) ignorant what they would do; but he had a mind both to try them by this question, and also to convince them that there was a false brother amongst them, whose wickedness (though it lay hid from them) would in a short time discover itself.

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast <sup>the words of eternal life.</sup>

<sup>c Acts 5. 20.</sup> Peter, who is observed in the whole history of the gospel to have discovered the hottest and quickest spirit, and to have been first in answering questions propounded to the twelve, as Matt. xvi. 16, &c., replies, Lord, to whom shall we go? &c., thereby teaching us under temptations to apostacy, first, to consider what we shall get by it, as the following words teach us, that an abiding with Christ in a steady adherence to the truths of his gospel, is the best choice that we can make.

<sup>d Mat. 16. 16. Mark 9. 23. Luke 9. 20. ch. 1. 49. & 11. 27.</sup> 69 <sup>And we believe and are sure that</sup> thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God.

We believe (saith Peter) and are sure, both from what we have heard from thee, and from the miracles which we have seen wrought by thee, that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God. The very words by which St. Matthew (chap. xvi. 16) expresseth that noble confession of his, which our Saviour calleth the rock, upon which he would build his church. But notwithstanding this acknowledgment, which speaks the seeds of this faith now sown in the heart of Peter, and the hearts of the rest; yet whoso considereth the passages of the other evangelists after this, will see reason to believe, that their persuasion as to this was but faint, till Christ by his resurrection declared himself the Son of God with power.

70 Jesus answered them, <sup>Have not I</sup> chosen you twelve, and one of you is a <sup>devil?</sup>

Chosen, not to eternal life, but to the great office of an apostle. I chose but twelve amongst you, Matt. x., and of those twelve one is διάβολος, an accuser, or informer; a name by which the devil (who is the grand accuser of the brethren) is ordinarily expressed in holy writ.

71 He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve.

This he spake of Judas Iscariot, (so called, as most think, from the name of the city where he lived,) and to distinguish him from the other Judas, the brother of James, who wrote the Epistle that goeth by his name, and is a part of holy writ: for he being one of the twelve, chosen and sent out with the rest to preach the gospel, and empowered by miraculous operations to confirm the truth of it; yet it was he that was to betray Christ, as we largely read in all the evangelists' relation of the passion: to teach us, that no office to which God calleth us, no gifts (except those of special grace) with which God blesseth any man, can secure him of an eternal happy state; nothing can do that but a true saving faith in Jesus Christ, with the obedience of a holy life becoming the gospel of Christ.

CHAP. VII

Jesus, exhorted by his unbelieving kinsmen to show himself at Jerusalem at the feast of tabernacles, refuseth, but afterwards goeth up in secret, 1—10. The Jews seek him, and differ in their sentiments of him, 11—13. He teacheth in the temple, 14—29. Some are ready to lay hands on him, others believe; the rulers send officers to apprehend him, 30—32. Christ foretelleth his departure to the Father, and promiseth the Holy Spirit to believers, 33—39. Divers opinions concerning him, 40—44. The officers, struck with his discourse, return without him, and are rebuked by the Pharisees, who chide with Nicodemus for taking his part, 45—53.

AFTER these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry,

<sup>a ch. 5. 16, 18.</sup> <sup>because the Jews sought to kill him.</sup>

After the third passover, which happened after our Saviour had entered upon his public ministry, of which we read, chap. v. 1, and all those things which we read of, chap. v. and vi., done by our Saviour, both at the feast at Jerusalem, chap. v. and after he went into Galilee, chap. vi. 1, and had made that excellent discourse, of which we had a large account, chap. vi.; Jesus continued still to converse in Galilee, where he was; for he would not go into Judea, nor converse there, because the Jews, for the causes mentioned chap. v. 18, sought to kill him. They had two things (as appeareth from thence) against him: 1. His violation of the sabbath (as they thought) by healing him that lay at the pool of Bethesda. 2. His making himself equal with the Father.

2 <sup>Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles</sup> <sup>b Lev. 23. 34.</sup> was at hand.

The feast of tabernacles was a feast which God ordained the Jews to keep the fifteenth day of the seventh month, (which some make to answer our September, others our October,) Lev. xxiii. 34, 39, after they had gathered in the fruits of the land. It was to be kept seven days, the first and last of which days were to be kept as sabbaths; they were all the seven days to dwell in tents, or booths, in remembrance of the forty years they so dwelt in the wilderness, passing from Egypt to Canaan, as we read there, ver. 43. Now this festival was near at hand; so as we must understand the things following to have happened about the September or October before Christ's suffering, which was at the next passover; that is, the March or April following, as we count the months.

<sup>c</sup> Mat. 12. 46. <sup>d</sup> Mark 3. 31. <sup>e</sup> Acts 1. 14. 3 ° His brethren therefore said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judæa, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest.

His brethren; his friends and kindred; see the notes on Matt. xii. 47, 48; either such as did believe in him, or such as did not believe; for, ver. 5, all of them did not believe in him; would have him leave Galilee, which was the far more obscure and ignoble part of the country, and go into Judea, which was the more noble and famous province; that those who in that province followed him, might also see the miracles which he wrought.

4 For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou do these things, shew thyself to the world.

The things which thou doest, thou doest out of a desire by them to be made known, and to spread thy own fame and glory: for this, Galilee is not a proper place, because it is an obscure part in the country. The phrase which we translate to be known, is in the Greek ἐν ὄψει εἶναι. The usage of it here seemeth to be something different from the use of it in other places of holy writ. It sometimes signifies confidence and security; and we translate it boldness, Acts xiii. 46; xxvi. 26; xxviii. 31; Phil. i. 20; Heb. iii. 6; x. 19. But this cannot be the sense of this text; for it were no sense to read it, seeketh to be known boldly, confidently, or securely. Sometimes we translate it openly, as in this text, and chap. xi. 54; Col. ii. 15. It sometimes signifieth a freedom of speech, Acts ii. 29; iv. 13; 2 Cor. vii. 4. Sometimes it signifieth clearness and plainness of speech, chap. x. 24; xi. 14. Sometimes it signifieth a speaking in public meetings, as in Mark viii. 32; chap. xviii. 20. Dr. Hammond notes, that it also sometimes signifies to speak with authority, Acts iv. 29, 31; Eph. vi. 19. Certainly the word in its primary signification signifieth a freedom and boldness of speech; which freedom and boldness is necessary to him that speaketh openly, and in public meetings; and is advantaged by the authority which any man hath to speak: hence in a secondary sense it may signify both to speak with authority, and also to speak in public assemblies; and this last I take to be here signified. It is (as our Saviour's friends tell him) both against reason, and the ordinary course of the world, for men desirous of opportunities to speak boldly and freely in public assemblies, to keep themselves in obscure places, where are no such public assemblies. They therefore advise him, that if indeed he wrought these miraculous operations, and were able to produce such effects, he would not bury up himself and his reputation in such a hole as Galilee, but show himself to the more noted and famous part of the world, which was, as to that part of the world, Jerusalem, and at the feast now, where multitudes of the people would be to celebrate the feast of tabernacles.

<sup>d</sup> Mark 3. 21. 5 For <sup>d</sup>neither did his brethren believe in him.

Not all his own friends and kindred; he came not only among his own countrymen, but among his own relations, and they received him not; or if they had some opinion of him, and some little hopes concerning him, yet they did not believe as they ought to have believed. Certainly there cannot be a greater proof and demonstration that faith is not of ourselves, nor a thing in our own power, no, not with all the external aids of gospel doctrine and arguments, than is in this text. We cannot imagine but our Lord's brethren were willing enough to have believed in Christ as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world; the very honour of their family would have so far inclined them. It is impossible that they, or any others, should have had greater external means, aids, and assistances for their faith, than Christ's preaching amongst them, and confirming his doctrine by miraculous operations before them; if now they had a power in their own wills, to have looked upon Christ as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world, and accordingly to have received and embraced him, what was the matter they believed not, or as yet at least they believed not in him?

6 Then Jesus said unto them, <sup>e</sup>My <sup>f</sup>time is not yet come: but your time is <sup>g</sup>always ready.

My time is not yet come; the time of my death, say some; of my manifestation to the world, say others: but questionless our Saviour intends no more than his time for going up to this feast, for we shall read that he did go up afterward; but, saith he, as yet I cannot go up. Your time is always ready; you may go when you please: and this he further openeth, saying,

7 'The world cannot hate you; but me <sup>f</sup>it hateth, <sup>g</sup>because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

By the world, our Saviour plainly understandeth the men of the world; men not regenerated, renewed, and sanctified. These men, saith he, cannot as yet hate you. There was a time afterward when this part of the world hated all the disciples of Christ, as Christ foretold, chap. xv. 18; but that was after the doctrine of the gospel was more preached, and made known to the world by the preaching of the apostles: and therefore Christ saith (in that place) that it hated him before it hated them. Christ first published the doctrine of the gospel, and so became the first object of the world's hatred on that account. These his brethren were not concerned (that we read of) at this time in the publication of it, nor had any occasion to make themselves known and odious to the world upon that account; therefore he saith, The world (the wicked Jews, here so called) could not be reasonably imagined to have any spite or malignity to them. But, saith he, me it hateth: that is apparent from what we met with chap. v. 18. But this was not for any fault in Christ, but only for his preaching the doctrine of the gospel, and free reproving them for the evil of their works, the corruption of their doctrine, and the errors of their life and conversation.

8 Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast; <sup>h</sup>for my time is <sup>i</sup>not yet full come.

Go ye up unto this feast; let not my forbearance to go up hinder your going up according to the law. I go not up yet unto this feast; I have some particular reasons why as yet I will not go to be there at the beginning of it. For my time is not yet full come; I know my time to go, when it will be most safe and proper for me. I shall be there some time during the feast, but my time is not yet come; I shall not be there at the beginning of it. It appeareth that he came not into the temple till about the middle of it, ver. 14, which was three or four days after it was began, for it held seven days, Lev. xxiii. 34. Or his time was not come, because he designed to go very privately without any notice taken of his coming; which must have been, if he had at that time gone up with his kindred and acquaintance.

9 When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

He let them take their journey to Jerusalem to the feast without him, and himself still abode in Galilee.

10 ¶ But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

He went up to show his obedience to his Father's commands, Exod. xxiii. 17. The feast of tabernacles was the same with the feast of ingathering in the end of the year, when they had gathered their labours out of the field, mentioned Exod. xxiii. 16; and that was one of those three times (as appears from that chapter) when all the males in Israel were to appear before the Lord, ver. 17. Christ being born under the law, showeth a punctual obedience to it; and therefore, in obedience to it, he would go up: but his wisdom dwelt with prudence; and therefore he did not go up openly, not in any crowd of company, so as a public notice could be taken of him; but secretly, to teach us that we are not so strictly tied up to ritual precepts, which concern only rites and circumstances of worship, that we may not abate them sometimes for the performance of moral duties. It was a moral duty incumbent upon our Saviour to preserve himself, with what wisdom and prudence he could, from the rage of his enemies, till his time should fully come to yield up himself to their rage; which was the reason why he, who went up now singly, without any company, when he went up to the last passover, where he was to suffer, went up with all imaginable boldness and alacrity, leading the way, to their amazement, Mark x. 32.

1 ch. 11. 54. 11 Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

Our Saviour's constant going up to the Jewish feasts, made the rulers of the Jews, who sought to slay him at the feast of the passover, chap. v. 18, (which was but six months before this,) because he had violated the sabbath, (as they interpreted his healing the impotent man on that day, and bidding him take up his bed and walk,) and because he had made himself equal with God his Father; seek him the first days of the feast, speaking of him with great contempt and slight.

12 And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people.

Our Saviour's constant attendance at these public festivals, did not only create an expectation of his being there amongst his enemies, who therefore sought him there, that they might destroy him; but amongst the generality of the people, who had very different opinions about him. Some having heard his doctrine, and hearing nothing from him but what was good and spiritual, tending to show them the way of holiness, and the true path-way to eternal life and happiness, concluded that he was a good man; others said he was a mere impostor, one that deceived and cheated the more ignorant common people.

13 Howbeit no man spake openly of him for fear of the Jews.

Though many, both of the Galileans, among whom he had conversed, and of the common people of Judea, had a very good opinion of Christ, yet the rulers of the Jews were in such a rage against him, that his friends durst not freely discourse their thoughts concerning him.

14 ¶ Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught.

About the third or fourth day of the feast (which continued seven days) our Lord, being (as was said before) come up privately and by stealth, as it were, to Jerusalem, first appears in the temple preaching. What our Saviour at this time discoursed about the evangelist doth not tell us; but doubtless it was the things of the kingdom of God, which were the usual themes or arguments of his discourse, as we may also understand by the latter part of it. Our Lord probably deferred his preaching to the middle of the feast, partly, because the Pharisees' heat in hunting after him was now a little over; and that there might be a fuller concourse of people to hear him.

15 And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?

Having never sat as a constant disciple at the feet of any of the Jewish doctors, nor been educated in their schools of the prophets, they wonder how he should come by such knowledge of the law of God, as he discovered in his discourses; wherein he made it appear, that he did not only know the letter of the law, but the more mysterious sense of it, the great mysteries of the kingdom of God.

16 Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

My doctrine is not mine, considering me as the Son of man; not taught, or to be taught, me by men; not learned out of books, or by the precepts of men; not invented by me; but it is mine as it is the doctrine of the Father that sent me, and I and my Father both are one, and agree in one, 1 John v. 7, 8; and being so, there was no such need that Christ should be learned, in their sense, viz. at the feet of their doctors, and in their schools. But enthusiasts vainly argue from hence, that there is no need of human learning for him who is to be a preacher of the gospel; for Christ was not mere man, but one in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily. No such thing will follow from the prophesying of Amos, who was a herdman, or the apostles, who were fishermen; much less from the preaching of Christ. We must distinguish betwixt an extraordinary and an ordinary calling. And though it be truth, that the ministers of the gospel preach doctrine which is not theirs, but his that sent them; yet it doth not follow, that they must come by the knowledge of this doctrine in the same manner that Christ did, who was in the bosom of the Father, and knew his will, and came from him to communicate it to the world; nor yet in the same manner that the prophets and the apostles came to the knowledge of it, as by Christ's vocal instruction. So also by the influence of the Holy Spirit upon them in the days of Pentecost, which abode upon them.

17 If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

Here our Saviour seemeth to obviate an objection which the Jews would make, viz. How they should know that the doctrine which he preached was the doctrine of God? He indeed said so, but how should they have any evidence of it? How could he make it appear to them to be of God? If any man (saith our Saviour) will do his will, &c.; that is, If any man hath a heart truly disposed to know and embrace whatsoever shall be revealed to him to be the will of God, how contrary soever it be to the interest of his own lusts, and ready to do it in all things, and live according to the prescript and revelation of it, having a serious purpose of heart to obey God in every thing; if he seeketh for truth seriously, and in the fear of the Lord, laying aside all wrath, malice, hatred, and any corrupt passions or affections; God will reveal the truth to him, so as he shall know the doctrine that is of God; and that I do not speak of or from myself, but by authority from my Father. Now, from hence indeed followeth, that corrupt affections, passions, and prejudices, and an ill life, may prejudice, yea, and will prejudice, men from receiving of the free grace of God, spiritual illuminations, and the gift of faith; so as men that give way to such prejudices, or nourish such passions, or live such lives, shall be left of God to their native blindness, and to strong delusions, and not discern the truth in the light that openly shineth in their faces. But from hence it will not follow, that a moral life, and a study of and seeking after truth, are the cause of faith, or effective of it, with the working of our own will.

18 He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.

Here our Saviour giveth them another note, by which they might know that his doctrine was of God, because he spake not of himself, nor sought his own glory in what he delivered. No man doth an action of and from himself, but he maketh himself the end of his action; for to what purpose should a man devise and broach new notions, but for some selfish advantage, that he may get some profit, or some honour and applause from men? But if a man acts as servant to another, and seeketh only the honour and applause of another, he is true, and cannot be presumed to have spoken of and from himself, but of and from him whose honour and glory he seeketh to advance; and in reason ought to be judged sincere and faithful in the execution of the trust committed to him, and to be without fraud and deceit, having no unrighteousness in him; there being no just cause to be presumed which should move him to speak any thing that is false. Hence also may be learned a good rule or direction, which divines ordinarily make use of to help us to judge of the truth of doctrines. Those doctrines which most tend to the advancing the honour and glory of God, and least to the advancement of the creature, those are most likely to be of God. And this also much tendeth to confirm the reputation of holy writ, and the penmen of it; for it is manifest that the penmen of it sought not their own glory in their writings, but the honour and glory of God, taking all shame to themselves.

r Ex. 24. 8.
Deut. 33. 4.
John 1. 17.
Acts 7. 38.
Mat. 12. 14.
Mark 3. 6.
ch. 5. 18. & 10. 31, 39. & 11. 53.

19 'Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? 'Why go ye about to kill me?

Moses was God's instrument in delivering his law to the people, Exod. xxiv. 3; Deut. xxxiii. 4; a law which none of them exactly kept, but daily broke. Why do you (saith our Saviour) make it such a capital crime (suppose you were not in an error, but I had in this one point of the sabbath violated the law) in me to break the law, that you for it would have my blood? how cometh it to be a more heinous offence in me to break the law in one thing, than it is in you, who violate it in so many things? Or, do not you think it a capital crime maliciously to go about to destroy an innocent person? Is not that a greater breach, think you, of the sixth commandment, than what I have done is of the fourth? supposing that had been any breach of the law at all, which indeed it was not.

t ch. 8. 46.
52. & 10. 20.

20 The people answered and said, 'Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

The Jews had an opinion, that whosoever was beside himself, and talked distractedly, was influenced with an evil spirit; so as, Thou hast a devil, is no more than, Thou art mad; unless we will take the phrase as a mere term of reproach, such as we ordinarily hear at this day from some men in their passions, when they hear any speak what is false, and hath no congruity with truth, according to their apprehensions, saying, The devil is in you: the former is the milder interpretation, though in that was sin enough, considering who it is that spake. Who goeth about to kill thee? it is very probable that the common people (to whom our Saviour was now speaking) knew nothing of the design of their rulers, mentioned chap. v. 18, so spake this innocently, (though in their passion,) having no such design in their hearts; but they ought not so peremptorily to have denied what our Saviour positively affirmed, who knew the designs and counsels of all men's hearts, though they knew them not.

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

By the one miracle it is plain, by what followeth, that he meaneth healing the man who lay at the pool of Bethesda; at this, he saith, they marvelled, by which is to be understood offended, for so it is expounded by χολάστε, ver. 23; and to this sense is our Saviour's subsequent discourse.

u Lev. 12. 3.

22 'Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, x Gen. 17. 10. 'but of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath day circumsise a man.

The particle therefore, or, for this, διὰ τούτο, maketh in this verse a great difficulty, what the meaning of it should be. The most probable account of it is, that it belongeth to the former verse, which should end thus, and ye all marvel for this. This indeed maketh all plain; otherwise it is very hard to give an account what force it can have, if we consider it as a note of a cause. Moses gave you circumcision, that is, a law about circumcision; yet that law had not its rise from Moses: the law was given to your father Abraham, Gen. xvii. 10, long before Moses's time. In obedience to that law, you circumsise a male child, or a proselyte, that is, a man grown, on the sabbath day.

23 If a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision, || that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath day?

The strength of this whole argument seemeth to be this: If a ritual law (such was that for observation of the sabbath, given in Mount Sinai, Exod. xx.) may give place to another ritual law which is ancients, (such was that of circumcision, given to Abraham long before,) much more ought it to give place to a law of nature written in every man's heart, viz. that it is our duty to help those that are in great degrees of misery and affliction; which is what I paid obedience to in curing the impotent man that lay at the pool of Bethesda. Do you yield this in your daily practice, that a man may be circumcised, yea, and ought to be circumcised, on the eighth day, though it happeneth to be the sabbath day; and not to do it were a violation of the law of Moses about circumcision, which was a law given you by Moses, though, before him, to Abraham also? What reason then have you to be angry with me, who on the sabbath day have only healed a man, and made him every whit whole? that is, (as some think,) I have not only cured him as to his body, but as to his soul; but that hardly seemeth probable; for if it were so, the Jews could have no evidence of the spiritual cure. Others therefore think that the term διον άνθρωπον, signifieth no more than perfectly, or completely whole, as to his body.

24 'Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

Do not judge persons, and condemn me for what I have done, merely out of your hatred, prejudice, and malice against me. Or, do not judge according to the first appearance of this fact. It looketh to you as a violation of the sabbath; it is not indeed so, but the performance of a duty greater than that of sanctifying the sabbath is. Judge righteously, and do not condemn in me what you yourselves do in other causes, because of your hatred to and prejudice against me; nor condemn an action which is in itself a righteous action, and not deserving condemnation.

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he, whom they seek to kill?

Those who here speak are said to be of Jerusalem, (probably citizens,) who knew more of the designs and counsels of the chief priests and elders, than those who said before, ver. 20, Thou hast a devil: who seeketh to kill thee?

26 But, lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. 'Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

The first search being over, it is probable that the rulers had not heard that Christ was come up to the feast; this made the people think that they had some knowledge that he was the Messias, otherwise they would have taken some course to have restrained his so free and open discoursing; but we shall in the latter part of this chapter find that they were mistaken; for as soon as they heard where he was, and what he was doing, they used all means they could to apprehend him.

27 'Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

We know this man whence he is; we know he is of Nazareth, and that Joseph is his reputed father. They also knew whence the Messias was to come, that he was to be of the family of David, of the tribe of Judah, of the town of Bethlehem: the chief priests and scribes answered Herod to that purpose, without the least hesitation, Matt. ii. 5, 6, but they had no revelation to guide them to know of what particular family he should be: thus this verse is easily reconciled to ver. 42. Others think that they spake of the second manifestation of Christ. They had a tradition, which was bottomed on holy writ, That he was to come out of Bethlehem: but then they had another tradition, that he should be taken away from thence, and hidden for some years, and then again appear as a person unknown whence he came. Which opinion, say some, was bottomed on the revelations of the Old Testament concerning a double regeneration of Christ, Isa. liii. 8, Who shall declare his generation? and Micah v. 2; the one of which is to be understood of his eternal generation, which none can declare; the other, as to the generation of his human nature. But the Jews not understanding that the Messias was to be God-man, understood both of his human nature; which made them fancy, that though he was to be born at Bethlehem, according to Micah v. 2, yet he was to be carried away for some years some where; so as when he came to appear to the world, none should know whence he came, but he should appear as a man dropped down from heaven. Now Christ having been offered in the temple at his mother's purification, went back again with his parents, Luke ii. 39, came to Nazareth, and ordinarily went up to Jerusalem; there he was found disputing with the doctors, ver.

b Deu. 1. 14.
17. Prov. 24.
23. ch. 8. 13.
Jam. 2. 1.

b Mat. 12. 55.
Mark 6. 3.
Luke 4. 22.

1 Or, without breaking the law of Moses.
y ch. 5. 8, 9.
1c.

46; and at last we find him resting with his parents at Nazareth, and being subject to them; after which we read no more of him, till he came to John to be baptized: so as the Jews had known and observed the whole course of Christ's life.

28 Then cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, "Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not."

Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am; you might have known me by the doctrine which I have taught, and the miracles which I have wrought among you; and you had known me, if you had not shut your eyes against the light, which shone in your face: or, you say and think that you know me. Others think that it is an irony, or as a question, Do you know me so well? If you did, you would know that I came not of myself, but was sent by my Father; and he that sent me is truth itself: but you know not the Father, and therefore cannot know me as indeed I am.

29 But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me.

I know him, so as no man else knoweth him, Matt. xi. 27; I know his essence, his will, his counsels, his laws; for I am from him by an eternal generation, his only begotten Son; and I am sent by him, as the Mediator and Saviour of the world, to declare and to execute his will and pleasure, as to man's salvation.

30 Then they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come.

By this time the news was come to the sanhedrim, the great court of the Jews, to whom belonged the cognizance of church affairs, false prophets, blasphemy, violation of the sabbath, &c.: they took counsel, and used endeavours to apprehend him; and it may be, some of the ruder sort of people that were his enemies used some such endeavours, but not with any effect; for by the mighty providence of God, who had set the time when Christ should suffer, till that hour was come, mentioned also chap. viii. 20; xii. 23, there was such a restraint upon the rage of the rabble, yea, (as we shall hereafter hear,) upon the spirits of the officers, who were sent from the sanhedrim to apprehend him, that they had no power to lay hold upon him. Men shall do us no hurt, till God's time comes. A sparrow falls not to the ground without the will of our Father.

31 And many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?

And many of the people believed on him; not as the true Messiah; for the next words let us know, they did not believe him to be the Christ, but looked for him to come; but they gave credit to him as a great prophet sent from God; and doubted whether the miracles which he wrought were not as many and as great as ever the Messiah would do when he came. For though John reports but a few miracles wrought by Christ, yet they were such as required a Divine power to produce; such as turning the water into wine, multiplying the loaves, raising Lazarus from the dead, &c. And John tells us, chap. xx. 30; xxi. 25, that he did many more works than he hath recorded in this book; and many more are recorded by the other three evangelists. From hence may be observed the falsehood of the later Jews, who deny that the Messiah is to work any miracles; for it is apparent from hence, that they had in our Saviour's time a general expectation that great miracles should be done by the Messiah; and their expectation was truly founded upon Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, as appeareth by Matt. xi. 5.

32 ¶ The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning him; and the Pharisees and the Chief Priests sent officers to take him.

Murmured here is taken in a different sense from what it was before, and signifieth as much as whispered, or talked privately among themselves. The chief priests, who were afraid that their honour would abate amongst the people; and the Pharisees, who were afraid the credit of their traditions would be lost, if they suffered him to go on; and being more especially troubled for the miracles which he daily wrought, as chap. xi. 47; they send messengers from their great court (kept at Jerusalem) to apprehend him.

33 Then said Jesus unto them, "Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me."

Whether Christ spake these words to the officers sent to apprehend him, or to the people in the temple, is not much material to be known: he by them plainly declareth, that all their endeavours against him were vain and foolish; for he should yet live with them six months, (this was in September or October, he died at the next passover, which was about six months after this,) and then he should go and willingly lay down his life for the sins of the world, rise again from the dead, and ascend unto his Father who sent him into the world.

34 Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

Some think the meaning is, Ye shall seek me to execute your malice upon me, but to no purpose, for you shall not find me. Or, You shall seek me to destroy me in my church, and to root out my name; but to no purpose. But the most probable sense is this: You wicked Jews, that now contemn the means of grace by me offered to you, shall one day be in distress and calamity enough; and when you are so, then you will wish I were again amongst you; but I shall be ascended to my Father, and as deaf to your prayers as above the reach of your malice. There is much the same thing said in Matt. xxiii. 39. That he here speaketh of his ascension is plain from chap. xiii. 33. He speaketh of heaven as a place where he was at that time, for so he was as to his Divine nature. It is ὁράω, whither I go, which makes some think it should not here be εἶμι, but εἶμι, vado. But others reject it, because it is a poetical word, hardly used in the New Testament.

35 Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go, that we shall not find him? will he go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?

The Jews, not at all believing the Divine nature of Christ, notwithstanding all that Christ had said, and all the miracles he had wrought, are at a mighty loss to conclude what our Saviour spake of, and whither he would go; they thought he could go no where in the land of Jewry, but they should hear of him, and be able to come where he was; they conclude therefore that he would go into some pagan country. In the Greek it is, Will he go into the dispersion of the Grecians? There were two most famous dispersions, of which we read in history. The first was of the Jews, of which we read in sacred history, in the captivities of Assyria, whither the ten tribes were carried, 2 Kings xvii. 6; and Babylon, whither the two tribes were carried, 2 Kings xxiv. 14. And that of the Grecians by the Macedonians; when also many of the Jews were dispersed by Alexander the Great, and his successors. Peter directeth his Epistle to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 1 Pet. i. 1. And James directs his Epistle to the twelve tribes scattered abroad. They fancy that our Saviour would go into some of these places, and preach; by which means the Gentiles would be taught the mysteries of the Jewish religion, which was what above all things they were impatient of hearing; and yet had reason from the prophecies of the Old Testament to fear, viz. their own rejection, and the receiving in of the Gentiles, which afterward came to pass, Rom. xi. 15.

36 What manner of saying is this that he said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

This saying stuck in their stomachs, and they knew not what sense to put upon it; owning nothing of the Divine nature of Christ.

o Lev. 23. 36.

37 ° In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, ¶ If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink.

p 16. 55. 1.
ch. 6. 35.
Rev. 22. 17.

Our Saviour thinketh not fit to take any notice of their guess, whither he would go, nor replieth any thing to it. The feast of tabernacles was to hold seven days, Lev. xxiii. 34, in which they were to offer up burnt offerings, ver. 36. The eighth day was to be kept as a sabbath; there was in it to be a holy convocation, no servile labour was to be done. Christ on that day discoursed again to the people, crying aloud, and publicly, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink; that is, If any man stand in need of any spiritual good, righteousness, strength, comfort, &c., it is to be found in me; let him come to me, by faith acknowledging, receiving, and embracing me, as the Mediator and Saviour of the world, and he shall have from me whatsoever spiritual influence of grace he stand in need of. Those who remember what our Saviour told the woman of Samaria, chap. iv. 10, 14, where he compared himself to living water, will easily understand this the sense of these words. The condition on our parts is expressed under the notion of thirsting; which we know is the natural appetite, craving some liquid thing to refresh the man under his drought; and it is expressive of an exceeding great passion, and so made use of both in the Old Testament and the New to signify a soul's passionate desire of spiritual things, Isa. lv. 1; Matt. v. 6.

q Deut. 18. 15.

38 ° He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, ¶ out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.

r Prov. 18. 4.
16. 12, 3. 4, 4.
3. ch. 4. 14.

We have had frequent occasion to open the term of believing on Christ. It may be doubted, whether those words, as the Scripture hath said, be to be referred to the first or latter part of the text. If to the former, they are words expressive of that faith to which the following promise is made, which is not any assent, or slightly credit given to the word; but such a faith as the Scripture hath spoken of, as that faith which is justifying and saving. Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; the general sense of the promises, that his soul shall abound with all saving and comfortable influences of saving grace. The belly signifieth the heart, that part of man which is called the heart being in the belly. So Job xv. 35; Psal. xl. 8. The flowing of rivers of water, signifieth the plenty of spiritual influences with which believers shall be supplied; whether joy, knowledge, spiritual gifts, or graces. If any ask, where the Scripture speaketh this? I answer, in all those promises we meet with in the Old Testament, about pouring out the Spirit.

s 16. 44. 3.
Joel 2. 28.
ch. 16. 7.
Acts 2. 17,
33, 38.

39 (° But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)

t ch. 12. 16.
& 16. 7.

For the evangelist tells us, that this referred to the Spirit, which believers were to receive after that Christ should be ascended into heaven. Those scriptures, Isa. xlix. 10; lviii. 11; Zech. xiv. 8, seem, among others, to be referred to in this promise of our Saviour.

40 ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is "the Prophet.

u Deut. 18.
15, 16. ch. 1.
21. & 6. 14.

The Prophet mentioned Deut. xviii. 15. Some think that the Jews expected an eminent prophet, besides Elias, to come before the Messiah; and John i. 21 would incline us to think so. But others say, it cannot be proved from their writers, that they had any expectations of any but Elias and the Messiah. But the words may be read as well, this is a prophet, as this is the prophet; and I think that is the true sense of them. A prophet had now for more than four hundred years been a great rarity amongst them, they having had none but John the Baptist who had such a repute.

41 Others said, "This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?"

x ch. 4. 42.
& 6. 69.
y ver. 62.
ch. 1. 42.

The people were divided in their opinions about Christ. Some of them were very well inclined to believe that he was the promised Messiah; but they stumbled at the country where alone they took notice of him. For though he came not out of Galilee, but was born in Bethlehem, Luke ii. 4, according to the prophecy of him, Micah v. 2, suitable to which was their tradition, Matt. ii. 5; yet they had seen nothing of this, though possibly they had heard some relation of it, it being two and thirty years since his birth: but he was ordinarily called Jesus of Nazareth, and of Galilee, there he had lived and been educated; so as they knew no better, probably, than that he came out of Galilee, which was contrary to the prophecy, Micah v. 2.

42 ° Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, "where David was?"

z Pa. 132. 11.
Jer. 23. 5.
Mic. 5. 2.
Matt. 2. 6.
Luke 2. 4.
a 1 Sam. 16.
1. 4.

The Scriptures of the Old Testament had both described the family from whence the Messiah was to arise, viz. the family of David, Psal. cxxxii. 11, and the town, which was Bethlehem, Micah v. 2; which was David's father's town, where he lived also, till God called him out to the kingdom, 1 Sam. xvii. 15; xx. 6.

43 So ° there was a division among the people because of him.

b ver. 12.
ch. 9. 16.
& 10. 19.

A division as to their opinions about him, as was before expressed.

44 And ° some of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

c ver. 30.

There were some that had an ill opinion of Christ, and put on the officers that came for the purpose to apprehend him; but there was none so hardy as to do it.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the Chief Priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

Probably the officers, Christ being amongst a multitude of the people that had a high opinion of him, durst not adventure to apprehend him. Some of them, as appeareth from what follows, were astonished at his doctrine; all of them agreed to return to their masters without him; at which they are angry, and ask them how it came to pass that they did not execute their commands, in bringing Christ before them as a malefactor, to answer what they should lay to his charge.

46 The officers answered, "Never man spake like this man.

d Matt. 7. 29.

With so much authority, evidence of truth, &c. Yet they did not cordially believe in Christ; being under the power of carnal and worldly affection, which only supernatural special grace could subdue. These were some of those, in whom the prophecy of Christ, Isa. xi. 4, was to be fulfilled—He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. The word of the Lord doth often restrain, astonish, and amaze those on whom it hath no powerful effect to eternal life and salvation. So it was with these poor officers.

47 Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

You, who have us not only for your masters, whose commands you ought not to dispute, but to execute; but for your teachers also, from whom you might have learned better doctrine; are you seduced? For so wicked men count all who embrace not their notions, and follow not their ways.

48 ° Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?

e ch. 12. 42.
Acts 6. 7.
1 Cor. 1. 20,
28. & 2. 5.

You ought to be ruled by us, and guided by us, who are your rulers, and your teachers: so early did the doctrine of implicit faith and obedience creep into the world; which is indeed to suppose an infallibility in teachers and rulers; to whom indeed we owe all imaginable reverence, but we must live by our own faith. And though the Jews were bound to do according to the sentence that the priests and Levites in Jerusalem should show them, Deut. xvii. 10, 11; yet it must be the sentence of the law, and it was in civil matters, as appeareth by ver. 8, controversies between blood and blood, plea and plea, stroke and stroke.

49 But this people who knoweth not the law are cursed.

Out of the great pride of their hearts they vilify the people, as not learned in the law, and so were cursed, contemptible, and not to be regarded, as to their judgment and sentiments.

f ch. 3. 2. 50 Nicodemus saith unto them, (he + Gr. to him. that came † to Jesus by night, being one of them,)

Of Nicodemus we read, and of his coming by night to Jesus, chap. iii. 1, 2. He now, being one of this great court, stands up to speak for Christ, yet faintly, or at least very prudently and warily. He saith no more for him than he ought to have spoken for the greatest malefactor, viz.

g Deut. 1. 51 "Doth our law judge any man, 17. & 17. 9. before it hear him, and know what he
do. & 12. 14. doeth ?

That no law of God or nature condemneth any man before they had heard him speak, or had what he did deposed by witnesses before them, that they might know what he did.

52 They answered and said unto him,
Art thou also of Galilee? Search, and look: for <sup>a</sup> out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

h Is. 9. 1, 2. Art thou also of Galilee; not that they thought Nicodemus was a Galilean; they knew him well enough; but they take up this as a term of reproach against him, for that he would offer to speak one word (though never so just) on the behalf of one against whom they had such a perfect hatred. Search (say they) the Scriptures, and look if ever there came a prophet out of Galilee. Suppose this had been truth; yet, 1. What did this concern our Saviour? who was not born in Galilee, but in Judea, in Bethlehém, the city of David, Luke ii. 4. 2. Could not God when he pleased influence one of Galilee with the Spirit of prophecy? But, 3. Neither was it true; for Nahum and Jonah were both Galileans, 2 Kings xiv. 25, compared with Josh. xix. 13, (for the tribe of Zebulun had their lot in Galilee,) Isa. ix. 1.

53 And every man went unto his own house. As little as Nicodemus said for Christ, it put a stop to their further proceedings against Christ at present. Some think that the party of the Sadducees in the council, who valued not the Pharisees' rites and traditions, took part with Nicodemus; so as by the overruling hand of God Christ at this time escaped their wicked counsels against him. So much is certain; but what parties in the council concurred in it, is uncertain.

CHAP. VIII

Christ letteth go uncondemned the woman taken in adultery, 1—11. He declareth himself to be the light of the world, and justifieth his doctrine against the Pharisees, 12—30. He promiseth freedom through knowledge of the truth to those Jews who believed on him, 31, 32; confuteth their vain boast of being Abraham's seed, and the children of God, 33—47; answereth their reviling by showing his authority and dignity, 48—58; and by miracle rescoueth himself from their attempts to stone him, 59.

JESUS went unto the mount of Olives.

A mountain within less than two miles of Jerusalem, whither our Saviour, when he was at Jerusalem, was wont often to withdraw, for privacy and devotion, Matt. xxiv. 3; xxvi. 30; Luke xxi. 37; xxii. 39.

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them.

So at our Lord's last passover Luke notes, chap. xxi. 38, that all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, to hear him. Our Saviour's early going into the temple to teach, and the people's diligence in coming so early to him to hear, ought to check our slothfulness in sacred business. Multitudes of people came to him; for so the universal particle all must be expounded in a multitude of Scriptures. He, after the manner of the Jewish teachers, sat down, and taught them. Of this custom of theirs, for their doctors, while they taught, to sit down, we have had occasion to speak before.

3 And the Scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst,

There were (as they say) three sorts of scribes amongst the Jews. The first were secretaries to princes and great men; so Sheva was scribe to David, 2 Sam. xx. 25. A second sort were such as we call scriveners, or public notaries, who made instruments for people, and were employed in their more private bargains and contracts. Neither of these seem to have been of authority enough to have done this act; and besides, the Pharisees being joined with them makes it evident, that these scribes were those who expounded the law in the temple and in the synagogues, and are therefore called lawyers. They are often joined with the Pharisees in our Saviour's discourses, Matt. xxiii. 13—15, &c. And we find them often joining with them in their discourses and actions, tending to entrap our Saviour: such was their design at this time.

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

They bring to our Saviour a woman taken in the act of adultery, and set her before him.

5 "Now Moses in the law commanded <sup>a Lev. 20. 10. Deut. 22. 22.</sup> us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou ?

Moses in the law, Lev. xx. 10, commanded that such malefactors should be put to death; but we read of no law commanding this kind of death. And their rule was, that when the law had set no kind of death for an offence, there the mildest kind of death was to be their punishment, which they counted strangling to be. But they ordinarily entitled Moses to their traditional additions to the law; and death being commanded by the law, as the punishment of such offenders, they took themselves to be at liberty to determine the kind of death, as prudence and reason of state ruled them; so as, probably, they, seeing that that sin grew very frequent amongst them, appointed stoning to be the kind of death such malefactors should be put to. The manner of which we are told was this: The guilty person was to be carried up to some high place, and thrown down from thence headlong by such as witnessed against him; then they threw stones at him till they had killed him, if not killed by the fall; or covered him, if he were dead. This they tell our Saviour Moses commanded, because he had commanded in the general, that such a person should die, and their sanhedrim had determined this particular death to such malefactors. But they would know what our Saviour said to this.

6 This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

Their design was from his answer to take some colourable pretence to accuse, and either to discredit him with the people, or to expose him to the displeasure of the superior powers. If he had directed to send her to be punished by the Roman governors, who administered justice in capital causes, the people would be fired with indignation; for they looked upon them as invaders of the rights of government that belonged to the Israelites. If he had advised them to put her to death by their own power, they would have accused him of sedition, as an enemy of the Roman authority. If he had dismissed her as not worthy of death, they would have accused him to the sanhedrim, as an infringer of the law of Moses, as a favourer of dissoluteness, an enemy to civil society, and worthy of universal hatred. This malicious design, so craftily concerted, our Saviour easily discovered and defeated; whereas they thought it would require his most attentive consideration to extricate himself from the snare. He seemed not at all to attend to what they said, but, stooping down, wrote on the ground : what he wrote, or how he could write upon the floor of the temple, (which was of stone,) are very idle questions; the first not possible to be resolved, the second impertinent; for it is not said, that he made any impression upon the ground, though it be said, he wrote upon it. It appeareth plainly to have been but a divertive action, by which our Saviour signified that he gave no ear to them.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, <sup>b</sup> Deut. 17. 7. <sup>b</sup> He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

They will not let our Saviour alone, but importune him for an answer. He saith, He that is without sin, let him first cast a stone at her. The law of God was, Deut. xvii. 7, that in the execution of malefactors, The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death. In reason those who are zealous for the punishment of others, should neither be guilty of the same, nor of greater crimes, themselves. By this saying of our Saviour, we must not understand it the will of God, that those who are magistrates, and employed in executing the Lord's vengeance on malefactors, should themselves be free from all guilt, for then no justice should be done. The vengeance is God's, not theirs; it is the law of God which they execute. He only by this minds them of that compassion which ought to be found in persons prosecuting others justly, that they may execute judgment with compassion and tenderness, and such moderation as the law will allow them, considering that they are not free from guilt, but as obnoxious to the justice of God for other sins, as those poor creatures whom God hath suffered to fall into sins punishable by human judges.

8 And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground.

When our Saviour had said this, he returneth to his former posture and action, (it being not a thing wherein he was concerned, who was not sent into the world to be a secular judge,) as not at all regarding them.

<sup>c</sup> Rom. 2. 22. 9 And they which heard it, <sup>c</sup> being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

This was an age of very great corruption as to men's lives and manners, as well as to doctrine, and corruption of worship; and as other enormities of life were very common and ordinary amongst them, so it is very probable were adulteries, and that their rulers and teachers were not without great guilt. Now, see the power of conscience, when set on work by God; these accusers' consciences were to them as a thousand witnesses; they were reproved and convicted by them, and not able to stand under the reflections of them, or to say any thing in answer to what our Saviour had said: they went away one after another; and possibly it is particularly noted that they began at the eldest, because the consciences of the eldest of them charged them more deeply for more and greater sins. Jesus was left not wholly alone, for the next words tell us, that the woman was still left standing in the midst; and no doubt but his apostles were there, for they constantly attended him; and no doubt divers others were also there: but the meaning is, that he was by this means quit of the scribes' and Pharisees' company, who were gone out of shame, being thus convicted by their own consciences, which told them, that whatsoever this woman was, they were no fit accusers.

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

The close of the former verse told us, that though the scribes and Pharisees were gone, yet the woman was left in the midst, expecting Christ's sentence. Christ knew well enough that the scribes and Pharisees, this poor woman's accusers, were gone; but yet he acteth warily, and calls for her accusers, and asks if no man had condemned her? thereby intimating, that the law against adultery was a just law; and if the crime were proved against her, she deserved to die; but she must first be convicted, and condemned. He asks her, If she were condemned? for then he had nothing to say.

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, <sup>d</sup> Neither do I condemn thee: go, and <sup>d</sup> sin no more.

She tells him, None had. He replieth, Neither did he. He did not acquit her, for he was not to make void the law of God; nor did he condemn her: he was neither a witness in the case, nor yet a secular judge, to whom such judgments did belong; he was only to speak to her, as the Mediator and Saviour of man. Go, I discharge thee, as being coram non iudice, before one who in my present capacity am no judge to hear this cause, and to give sentence in it. Sin no more; whatever becometh of thee as to man's judgment, thou hast reason to fear the greater judgment of God, if thou goest on in a course of sin. Nor doth he say, Commit adultery no more; but, sin no more. No partial repentance or sorrow for any particular sin will suffice a penitent that hopes for any mercy from God; but a leaving off all sin, of what kind soever it be.

12 ¶ Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, <sup>e</sup> I am the light of the world: <sup>e</sup> he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

I am the light of the world; this is what John the Baptist had said of Christ before, chap. i. 4, 5, and what Christ saith of himself afterward, chap. ix. 5. It was prophesied of him, that he should be a light to the Gentiles, and God's salvation to the ends of the earth, Isa. xlvi. 6. And old Simeon saith of him, Luke ii. 32, that he was to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel. Light is a thing glorious in itself, and communicative of itself unto others to guide them. So as Christ is most aptly compared to light, and spoken of under that notion; as for his own innate glory, so for the communicativeness of himself to creatures; which latter appeareth to be chiefly here intended: for he saith, that he who followed him, believing his doctrine, and obeying his precepts, living according to his direction and his example, should not be at a loss how to guide himself, nor remain in the darkness of sin, ignorance, and spiritual death; but should have that light which bringeth life along with it, and is sufficient to guide a man in all the works of a spiritual life, and at last bring him to life eternal.

13 The Pharisees therefore said unto him, <sup>f</sup> Thou bearest record of thyself; <sup>f</sup> thy record is not true.

It was a known rule of law, that none ought to be believed upon a testimony given to himself: this is that they object to our Saviour, that though he spake great things of himself, yet he was not to be believed in his own cause.

14 Jesus answered and said unto them, Though I bear record of myself, <sup>g</sup> yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but <sup>g</sup> ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

There is a seeming difficulty to reconcile the words of our Saviour, chap. v. 31, If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true, and his assertion here, Though I bear record of myself, my record is true: but the resolution of it is clear by considering that he speaks in the former chapter of his own single testimony with respect to them, as not of sufficient validity to authorize his Divine vocation, according to the rule of their law, that required a double testimony for confirmation of things; but here he speaks of the verity of it in itself. For I know whence I came, and whither I go; that is, I know from whom I have received my commission, (though secret to the world,) even from the Father: and yet, after the accomplishing of my embassy for his honour, I shall return to heaven, and be glorified with the glory I had with him before the world was, chap. xvii. 5. The reason alleged implieth being the Son of God; and his Father's entire approbation of his office, and fidelity in the discharge of it; and the concurrent testimony of the Father with him : therefore his record was authentic and true. But they did not believe his mission from heaven, nor that he was to ascend thither, and accordingly disvalued his testimony.

<sup>1 ch. 7. 24.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 15 'Ye judge after the flesh ; <sup>1</sup> I judge no man.

According to my outward appearance to you, so you judge of me ; or, according to your own passions, and corrupt affections. I judge no man in that manner ; or, I judge no man alone, as it followeth in the next verse.

<sup>1 ver. 29.</sup> <sup>ch. 16. 32.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 16 And yet if I judge, my judgment is true : for <sup>1</sup> I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me.

My testimony is not to be looked upon as a single testimony for myself ; though I do judge, yet my judgment is true ; for no act of mine is a single act : I and my Father are one ; and what I do, my Father also doth, that sent me into the world as his ambassador. So as if the judgment of God be true, which you all own, grant, and acknowledge ; then my judgment is true, because it is not mine only, but the judgment also of that God, whom you own, acknowledge, and worship, and who sent me into the world.

<sup>m Deut. 17.</sup> <sup>5. & 16. 15.</sup> <sup>Matt. 19. 16.</sup> <sup>2 Cor. 13. 1.</sup> <sup>Heb. 10. 28.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 17 <sup>1</sup> It is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true.

It is written, Deut. xvii. 6 ; xix. 15. God so ordered it by his Divine law, that every thing should be established by the testimony of two witnesses.

<sup>n ch. 4. 37.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 18 I am one that bear witness of myself, and <sup>2</sup> the Father that sent me bear-eth witness of me.

I (saith our Saviour) have two witnesses ; I am one, I bear witness of myself ; my Father is another, for he beareth witness of me. Our Saviour's argumentation seemeth weak, unless we look upon him as exempt from the condition of ordinary men, and no mere man, by reason of the personal union of the Divine and human nature in his person. Nor must our Saviour be understood here to distinguish himself from his Father, in respect of his Divine being, for so he and his Father are one ; but in respect of his office, as he was sent, and his Father was he who sent him. And indeed in the whole he seemeth to accommodate himself to the people's apprehensions of him.

<sup>o ver. 55.</sup> <sup>ch. 16. 3.</sup> <sup>p ch. 14. 7.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 19 Then said they unto him, Where is thy Father ? Jesus answered, <sup>o</sup> Ye neither know me, nor my Father : <sup>p</sup> if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.

Thou talkest much of thy Father, where is he ? We know no father which thou hast but the carpenter, Joseph ; we do not look upon him as so credible a witness in the case, as to take his testimony in such a matter as this is. Christ tells them, that the reason why they did not know the Father, was because they did not know and acknowledge, receive and believe him ; for if they had received and believed him, they would not then have been at such a loss to have known where his Father was, or who he was. The eternal Father is not to be known but in, and by, and through the Son.

<sup>q Mark 12.</sup> <sup>41.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 20 These words spake Jesus in <sup>1</sup> the treasury, as he taught in the temple : and <sup>1</sup> no man laid hands on him ; for <sup>1</sup> his hour was not yet come.

The treasury was a public place in the temple ; concerning which, see the notes on Matt. xxvii. 6 ; Mark xii. 41, 43 ; Luke xxi. 1. Christ taught sometimes in one part of the temple, sometimes in another : but that no man should lay hold on him, considering the search made for him in the beginning of the feast, and their sending messengers to take him, as we read chap. vii. 32, and the affront he had given to the scribes and Pharisees, of which we read in the beginning of this chapter, was very miraculous ; nor can any account be given of it besides what is here given, viz. that his hour was not yet come ; which was the reason we heard given before in the same case, chap. vii. 30. Men shall be able to do nothing against Christ, or any that belong unto him, till the time cometh that God hath set in his wise and eternal thoughts.

<sup>t ch. 7. 36.</sup> <sup>& 13. 32.</sup> <sup>u ver. 34.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 21 Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and <sup>1</sup> ye shall seek me, and <sup>1</sup> shall die in your sins : whither I go, ye cannot come.

The greatest part of what is said here, was said by our Saviour before, chap. vii. 34 ; (see the explication of it there ;) only here, instead of ye shall not find me, is, ye shall die in your sins ; a phrase we shall find in Ezek. iii. 18, 19, which doubtless signifieth, in the guilt of your sins, not removed from you ; and is a threatening of eternal death, as well as temporal in the destruction of Jerusalem : and those who do so, cannot come into heaven, where Christ is.

<sup>1</sup> 22 Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself ? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.

Before they guessed that he would go to the dispersed amongst the Gentiles, chap. vii. 35. Now they fancy that he would kill himself ; or else speak this in mockery.

<sup>x ch. 3. 31.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 23 And he said unto them, <sup>x</sup> Ye are from beneath ; I am from above : <sup>y</sup> ye are of this world ; I am not of this world.

Ye are not only of an earthly extraction, creatures of the earth, not descended from heaven, as I am ; but also of earthly spirits and principles ; you savour nothing that is sublime and spiritual, and therefore you do not understand me. I tell you, I am not of this world ; my original is not from it, nor am I to determine my being in it. I shall die, but I shall rise again from the dead, and ascend into heaven, where you cannot come. Still our Saviour asserts his Divine nature ; and the stress of all, he saith, lieth there ; their unbelief of which was the cause of all their disputings and errors. He had given them the greatest evidence of it imaginable in the works which he had done in their sight, which were not only above the power of nature, but such as God had never authorized, or enabled any creature to do ; yet they, being destitute of supernatural grace, did not believe in him. And they were inexcusable, because that grace was denied them for their wilful corruption and wickedness, which they might have avoided by the use of that common grace which was not denied them.

<sup>s ver. 21.</sup> <sup>1</sup> 24 <sup>1</sup> I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins : <sup>a</sup> for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.

In the Greek it is only, if ye believe not that I am. Some refer this to Christ's Divine nature ; (I am, is the name of God, Exod. iii. 14 ;) but others rather think that Christ here speaketh of himself as the Messiah and Mediator, and so the object of people's faith ; and he out of whom there is no salvation : the latter indeed includeth the former ; for cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, Jer. xvii. 5. The text plainly holds forth an impossibility of salvation for those who, under the revelations of the gospel, receive not and believe not in Christ as Mediator.

<sup>1</sup> 25 Then said they unto him, Who art thou ? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.

What good Christian will not learn to contemn the slights and reproaches of sinful men, when he readeth of a company of miscreants thus using their Lord and Master, saying to him, Who art thou ? It is no wonder if the world, which knew him not, doth not know us. The latter part of the verse, as it lies in the Greek, is exceedingly difficult ; word for word it is, The beginning, because also I speak unto you. Some think that our Saviour calleth himself The beginning. Others think the noun is in this place put for an adverb ; of which we have many instances in Scripture, though none as to this noun. But I shall leave those who desire satisfaction as to what is said by critics about this verse, to what Mr. Pool hath collected in his Synopsis Criticorum, and only consider it as our interpreters understood it ; in which form it seemeth to be a mere slighting of them, as much as if he had said, I have often enough, even from the beginning, told you who I am ; I can say no more to you upon that head than I have said. I am the same, and no other, than I at first told you I was.

26 I have many things to say and to judge of you: but <sup>b</sup>he that sent me is true; and <sup>c</sup>I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him.

Judging is not put here for judicial condemnation; but for reproving and accusing, which is one part of judging. You accuse and reprove me; I have many things of which I could also accuse and convince you; but let me say what I will, you will not believe me. But you will not escape the judgment of my Father, who is true, he will judge you. I speak unto men nothing but what it is his will that I should declare to them.

27 They understood not that he spake to them of the Father.

The Jews (as we are told) used to call God The Father, in a way of eminency: they understood that he spake to them of his Father; but they would not understand when he spake to them of his Father, or the Father, he meant God the Father of all; their minds were blinded, that they could not see, and their hearts hardened, that they could not understand.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have <sup>d</sup>lifted up the Son of man, <sup>e</sup>then shall ye know that I am he, and <sup>f</sup>that I do nothing of myself; but <sup>g</sup>as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

It is your unhappiness, that while I am alive, and preaching the gospel to you, inviting you to repentance, and faith in me, as the true Messiah, you will not believe me to be indeed what I am; but you shall lift me up upon the cross, (for that is meant by lifting up, as chap. iii. 14; xii. 32,) and when that time cometh, you shall know that I am the light of the world, as ver. 12; for after that, the gospel began to be preached to all nations: or, that I am the true Messiah, he whom the Father hath sent into the world. Some of you shall then know it by those signs and wonders that shall attend my death and resurrection, and to your shame and confusion: others of you shall know it to your eternal joy and salvation; believing on me then, whom you will not now acknowledge; and that what I have done, I have only done by commission from my Father, not of myself; and that what I have taught, I have had in commission from my Father to teach.

29 And <sup>h</sup>he that sent me is with me: <sup>i</sup>the Father hath not left me alone; <sup>k</sup>for I do always those things that please him.

I have the presence of God with me, as I am Mediator; the Father hath not sent me into the world to do his will, and left me alone without his presence; for I do his will; I drive no separate design from my Father, but always do those things which please him. From whence all faithful ministers and Christians may learn how to conclude of God's presence with them, which they can no longer promise to themselves, than they speak and do those things that please him.

30 As he spake these words, <sup>l</sup>many believed on him.

Believing on him is not here to be understood strictly of saving faith; but rather, of some preparations toward it: they began to believe that he was the true Messiah, and to have more honourable thoughts than they had of him: that this was all, will appear from what we find in the following verses; and believing often signifieth no more in the New Testament than a light assent given to some propositions of the gospel relating to Christ.

31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, <sup>m</sup>then are my disciples indeed;

Believed on him, in the sense before expressed. Our Saviour well enough saw their hearts, and in what manner they believed, and what sort of disciples they were, viz. only nominal: they have the name of disciples who come after Christ to hear him; but they are his disciples indeed, who make his doctrine the rule of their lives. He therefore tells them, That not a mere saying to him Lord, Lord, and yielding some light assent to some propositions of truth in the gospel, would make them his disciples in truth and reality, without an abiding and continuance in the words which he taught them.

32 And ye shall know the truth, and <sup>n</sup>the truth shall make you free.

And ye shall know the truth; that is, you shall more fully and clearly know the truth; by which may be either understood Christ, who styleth himself, The way, the truth, and the life; or those propositions of truth which Christ hath revealed. There must be some knowledge of truth in a soul before it can believe; for how shall they believe (saith the apostle) in him of whom they have not heard? but a fuller and clearer knowledge of the truth is got by degrees, by those who studiously seek after it, and walk close with God. And the truth shall make you free: it appears by ver. 36, that by the truth he means himself; there he saith, If the Son make you free: and indeed, though the knowledge of the proposition of truth gives men some liberty from the bondage of ignorance and some lusts, yet it is only the saving knowledge of Christ which brings men into a perfect liberty from the law, the rigour, curse, and terror of it, and from the dominion of sin and corruption.

33 ¶ They answered him, <sup>o</sup>We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, <sup>p</sup>Ye shall be made free?

How carnally doth a carnal heart understand spiritual mysteries! Thus Nicodemus, hearing of being born again, grossly dreamed of entering into his mother's womb, and being born again. The woman of Samaria, hearing of living water, dreamed of water that should so satisfy her thirst, as that she should never come again to the well to draw. The Jews here hearing of being made free, dream of a freedom from human bondage and slavery. To what our Saviour had said, that if they knew the truth, the truth should make them free; they reply, We are Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any. Admitting that they were Abraham's seed, that is, Jews, were not the Jews in bondage, first to Pharaoh, king of Egypt; then to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon? they were now in bondage to the Romans. They must either understand it of their own persons, though they were tributaries they were no slaves; or else concerning their right, they had a right to liberty though they were under an extrinsic servitude to their conquerors. This made them angry, that Christ should speak of their being made free; for those that are free are not in a capacity to be made free. The Jews were a people very tenacious of their liberty, and gloried much in the right they had to it.

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, <sup>q</sup>Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

Our Saviour here correcteth their mistake, letting them know, that he was not speaking about any corporal, but spiritual servitude; not of the freedom of men's bodies from the power of enemies, but of the freedom of men's souls from the slavery and dominion of lusts and corruptions. He that doth sin (saith he) is the servant of sin. The committing or doing of sin here intended, is not to be understood of single acts of sin, for in that sense who lives and sinneth not? (the righteous man sinning seven times in a day;) so as all men would be concluded the servants of sin; but of living indulgently and habitually in a course of sin, and in the practice of gross sins; in which sense workers of iniquity is to be taken, Matt. vii. 23; and this very phrase, 1 John iii. 4. And indeed, the very heathen could see, that there was no such slavery as a servitude to lusts and passions: men are the servants of corruption. 2 Pet. ii. 19; under the dominion of sin, Rom. vi. 20.

35 And <sup>r</sup>the servant abideth not in the house for ever: <sup>s</sup>but the Son abideth ever.

The servant of sin abideth not in the church (which is the house of God) for ever. Look as it is with slaves, and servants; they are no fixed members of families; they may be turned out, they may be sold over to others; they abide in families according as in them they behave themselves: so you, who, as you are Abraham's seed, as you boast and glory, are now servants in the church of God; yet if you continue to be servants of sin, you shall not for ever abide in God's house; if you be not cast out of the church militant, you shall certainly be cast out of the church triumphant; that is, you shall never come there. But the Son; some think he speaks of himself, who was the eternal Son of God, he abideth ever; but I rather think he speaks of him that is a son by adoption, John i. 12; Rom. viii. 15, 16. So as this text showeth us the remarkable difference betwixt a nominal professor, and one who is a true believer: the one is but as a servant in God's house, to whom belongeth no inheritance; though while he is in the family, he enjoyeth some common privileges which a mere stranger hath no right to: the other is a son, and hath a right to the inheritance, and so shall never be cast out of the family, but abideth in it for ever.

q Rom. 8. 2. 36 <sup>q</sup> If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

If that term the Son in this verse be the same with the Son mentioned in the former verse, they must both be understood of Christ: for it is most certain, that here the Son can signify no more than Christ, to whom alone it belongeth to make souls free from the slavery of the law, sin, death, hell, &c. Now, saith our Saviour, this is the true freedom. Alas! what is the freedom you boast of and glory in? It is not the freedom of your inward man, if you were in the fullest actual possession of it; many a one in that sense free, hath a base, servile, slavish mind, and is a servant to corruption and lusts. It is only the freedom which I give unto souls, that is a true and perfect liberty, and is alone worthy the name of it.

37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but <sup>r</sup> ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you.

According to the flesh you are descended from Abraham, that I know; but of what advantage is or can this be to you, while in the mean time you are implacable enemies to me, and seek to murder me, who am not only an innocent person; but am the Lord of life, and came to save the world? And the root of this is your unbelief: did you receive and believe the word that I have spoken to you, you would do otherwise; but although the sound of my word pierceth your ears, and then you receive a little of it, yet it passeth not into your hearts, it hath no place within you; you do not believe it, you are not affected with it, it doth not dwell in you as it ought to do, so that you are not turned into the likeness and obedience of it. Men may be professors and members of the church of God, in whom yet the word of God hath no rooting, and findeth no true place; so as that their condition may be sad enough.

38 <sup>s</sup> I speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father.

My Father is God; I declare unto you his mind and will; no uncertain things, but what I have seen with him, that is, what I certainly know to be his will. You declare by your actions who is your father; and as I do my Father's will, and what he teacheth me to do, so you do the works which the devil, who is your father, ver. 44, prompteth you to do.

39 They answered and said unto him, <sup>t</sup> Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, <sup>u</sup> If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

Abraham is our Father; this was their continual boast, as may be learned from Matt. iii. 9; glorying in their birth privilege, Abraham being the father of the whole Jewish nation; and in their church privilege, Abraham being the head of the Jewish church, and he to whom the promises were made. But Christ taketh them off this glorying, by reminding them, that the blood of Abraham running in their veins would be of little significancy to them, so long as they did not walk in Abraham's steps. Men are truly to be accounted the children of those, not from whom they are naturally descended, but whose steps they walk in, and whom they imitate in their conversations.

40 <sup>x</sup> But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, <sup>y</sup> which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham.

You declare by your actions that you are very far from the spirit and temper of Abraham: I am one who, being sent of God, whom you own as your Father, have faithfully revealed the will of God to you, and have never told you any thing but the truth; and this is all my crime, for which you seek to murder me: this was none of your father Abraham's practice; so as though you have something of Abraham's blood, yet you have nothing of Abraham's spirit in you.

41 Ye do the deeds of your father.

Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication; <sup>z</sup> we have one Father, <sup>aa</sup> even God.

Ye do the deeds of your father; you imitate him who is indeed your father; by whom our Saviour (as we shall hear more afterwards) meaneth the devil. This they fume at, and tell him they were not born of fornication, which is, in our English dialect, as much as, We are no bastards; but it hath another sense in this place, as appeareth by the next words. We have one Father, even God; that is, we own and worship one God, who is our Father; which makes very good interpreters think, that their meaning in those words, We are not born of fornication, is, We are no idolaters; idolatry in holy writ being very ordinarily compared to whoredom and fornication.

42 Jesus said unto them, <sup>a</sup> If God were your Father, ye would love me: <sup>b</sup> for I proceeded forth and came from God; <sup>c</sup> neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

This agreeth with what we have 1 John v. 1, Every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him. But here our Saviour rather seemeth to speak of his proceeding forth and coming from God, as sent into the world to fulfil the will of God as to the redemption of man, than of his proceeding from his Father by eternal generation. It is true, that he who loves the father will also love the child, so far forth as he resembleth his father, and acteth like unto him; and it is as true, that he who loveth him that sends a messenger will also love the messenger, executing the commission of him that sent him.

43 <sup>d</sup> Why do ye not understand my speech? <sup>e</sup> even because ye cannot hear my word.

It is manifest all along this discourse, that Christ spake riddles to the Jews, and that they understood not the import and sense of his discourse: Now (saith our Saviour) the reason is, because ye cannot hear, that is, believe, my word: they could and did hear it with their ears; they heard the sound of it, but they could not discern the spiritual sense and meaning of it: it was not given to them to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, Matt. xiii. 11. And the reason was, because they suffered themselves to be blinded by prejudice, and by their own lusts and corrupt affections, till God gave them up to a judicial blindness, that hearing they heard, and did not understand; and seeing they saw, and did not perceive.

44 <sup>f</sup> Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do.

He was a murderer from the beginning, and <sup>g</sup> abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

Our Saviour now plainly tells them what he meant by their father, mentioned ver. 38; viz. the devil, whose children though they were not by natural tradition, yet they were by imitation, wilfully doing the things which the devil would have them do. He instanceth in two of these lusts: 1. Murder. He saith, The devil from the beginning of the world had a mind and design against the sons of men; and he ever since (as the apostle tells us, 1 Pet. v. 9) hath gone about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. And in this they were his true children, using all arts imaginable to destroy him whom God had sent into the world for man's salvation. In another thing also they were the true and genuine children of the devil; the devil had q Rom. 8. 2.

Gal. 5. 1.

r ch. 7. 19.
ver. 40.

s ch. 3. 32.
& 5. 19, 30.
& 14. 10, 24.

t Matt. 3. 9.
ver. 33.
u Rom. 2.
28. & 9. 7.
Gal. 3. 7, 29.

x ver. 37.

y ver. 26.

z Is. 63. 18.
& 64. 8.
Mal. 1. 6.

a 1 John 5. 1.

b ch. 16. 27.
& 17. 8, 25.

c ch. 5. 42.
& 7. 28, 29.

d ch. 7. 17.

e Mat. 13. 38.
1 John 3. 8.

f Jude 8.

no truth in him, nor did he abide in the truth. God indeed created the angels (who afterward fell) in a state of rectitude, without unrighteousness; but they did not keep their first station. So, neither did they love the truth, nor abide in it, but were wholly false and liars, and could not abide the truth.

45 And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

Such is your hatred to the truth, that you hate me for no other reason but because I reveal my Father's will (which is the truth) to you; than which nothing can evidence a greater hatred to truth, nor conformity and likeness to the devil. There cannot be a greater evidence of any one's hatred of the truth, than the hatred of those who tell them the truth, and for this very reason, because they do so.

46 Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

If any of you can prove that I have spoken to you any thing that is false, and not consonant to the will of my Father, do it; but which of you is able to charge me with any such thing? If there be no such thing, but I have told you what is the very truth, and the will of my Father, as to what you are to believe and do, why do you not believe me? For every reasonable soul is a debtor to truth.

47 <sup>g ch. 10, 26, 27, 1 John 4, 6.</sup> He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.

He that is of God; to be of God, here, is opposed to a being not of God, and so may be understood to comprehend election, as well as regeneration. Hearth God's words; he heareth, acknowledgeth, believeth, and patiently submitteth to the will of God revealed in his word. The reason why you, though with your ears ye hear the word of God, yet do not in heart receive, and embrace, and believe it, nor can submit to it, is because ye are not of God, not chosen of him, not savingly enlightened and regenerated by him. So as this text affords us an excellent note, by which we may know whether we be regenerated, and of God, yea or no. That is, our believing and yielding obedience to the will of God revealed in his word. By this saying of our Saviour, he seemeth to acquiesce in the will of God, concerning these refractory and unbelieving Jews, notwithstanding all the pains he had taken with them to enlighten and bring them to the saving knowledge of the truth. It pleased not his Father to open their eyes that they might see, or their hearts that they might understand. This ought in like manner to satisfy all the true and faithful ministers of the gospel, when they see they have laboured in vain, and spent their strength for nothing, and in vain. When they have done all they can, they will find this of our Saviour true, That the work must be God's, and not theirs; and no more hearts will be changed, than theirs who are of God.

48 Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?

<sup>h ch. 7, 20, & 10, 20, ver. 52.</sup> A Samaritan signified to the Jews as much as an impostor, or seducer; for the Jews looked upon the Samaritans as a detestable sort of men, who had corrupted the worship of God with their horrible superstitions in Mount Gerizim. And hast a devil; that is, art mad: see the notes on chap. vii. 20.

49 Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me.

I have not a devil; that is, I am not possessed with an evil spirit, as you blaspheme; or, (as others think,) I am not mad, I speak the words of truth and soberness, (for it is said, that the Jews held an opinion, That all who were distracted were influenced by an evil spirit, and had a devil). It is true in both senses, Christ had no devil. He did nothing that he did, but for the honour of his Father; this was but a term of scandal and reproach they cast upon Christ. In the mean time it must be observed, with how much meekness the Lamb of God received these most unworthy reproaches cast upon him; that we may learn to behave ourselves in like manner under such temptations.

<sup>i ch. 5, 41, & 7, 18.</sup> 50 And I seek not mine own glory: there is one that seeketh and judgeth.

Christ very often remindeth them of this, that in what he spake and did, he sought not his own honour and reputation; which both obviated an objection they might make against him, and also convinced them of his truth and sincerity in what he did. But, saith he, though I seek not my own honour, yet there is one who cometh himself in my honour and glory; and you must expect that he should judge and condemn you for all your hard speeches which you have spoken against me.

51 Verily, verily, I say unto you, <sup>k ch. 5, 24, & 11, 26.</sup> If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death.

To see death, in this text, signifieth to die, but in an apparently differing sense from what it is taken in Luke ii. 26, where it is to be understood of a natural death; of which it cannot be understood here, for the holiest men shall die: The body is dead (that is, in dying) because of sin; or, shall die because of sin, Rom. viii. 10. It must therefore be understood of death eternal; and in that sense the proposition is certainly true, That a holy man that keepeth the sayings of Christ shall not see death, that is, shall have eternal life; which is no more than what we have often before met with, viz. the promise of life eternal to faith and holiness.

52 Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a devil. <sup>l 2 eech. 1, 8, Heb. 11, 13.</sup> Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

Thou hast a devil: this is the third time we have met with this blasphemous imputation from these wretched men, chap. vii. 20, in this chapter, ver. 48, and here. What we have here, may strongly incline us to believe, that by the phrase they did not intend that he was possessed with the devil; for they here declare themselves confirmed in what they said, from his speaking that which was contrary to sense and demonstration. Abraham was dead, (though the father of the faithful,) and the prophets were dead; and therefore to speak of any mortal man's not seeing death, was contrary to every day's experience, and to the experience of the holiest men who ever lived. To them therefore who understood him speaking of a natural dissolution of the soul and body, this looked like the language of one beside himself; which probably was all they meant, when they said he had a devil, unless they used it as a term of reproach and passion; of all which none can give any just account.

53 Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself?

If thou canst so effect it, that those who keep thy sayings shall not die, thou canst also make thyself immortal: neither Abraham nor the prophets could save themselves from death, they are all dead: what art thou? what dost thou make thyself? And by the way, this was another charge upon our Saviour, the Jews having no patience with any that should prefer himself before their father Abraham or Moses.

54 Jesus answered, <sup>m ch. 5, 31, n ch. 5, 41, & 16, 14, & 17, 1, Acta 3, 13.</sup> If I honour myself, my honour is nothing: it is my Father that honoureth me; of whom ye say, that he is your God:

If I honour myself, my honour is nothing; this is much the same with what our Saviour said, chap. v. 31, which he seemed to contradict, ver. 14; (see the notes on both those places); the meaning is, If I seek mine own honour and glory; or, If I arrogate to myself what indeed doth not belong to me; or, If I alone honour myself, which (by the next words) seemeth to be the true sense of the phrase here. My Father is he who honoureth me, by witnessing from heaven that I am his beloved Son; by sending me into the world to accomplish his work; by many signs and wonders: and you say, that this my Father is your God. If therefore you will not give credit to me and my testimony, yet you ought to give credit to him, whom you own as your God.

55 Yet ye have not known him; but <sup>o ch. 7, 28, 29.</sup>

I know him : and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you : but I know him, and keep his saying.

Knowing here signifies more than a notional knowledge, or comprehending in our understanding so much of God as may by natural powers be comprehended ; it signifies affections, and a conversation suitable to such a knowledge. But I (saith our Saviour) fully and perfectly know him, both as to his essence, counsels, and will, and am fully obedient to him.

<sup>p</sup> Luke 10. 56 Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day : <sup>q</sup> and he saw it, and was glad.

You glory much in this, that you have Abraham to your father. This father of yours foresaw my coming into the world, and my dying upon the cross. He saw it by the eye of faith, in the promise which was made to him, That in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. He saw it in the type of Isaac's being offered, then receiving him in a figure, Heb. xi. 19. He saw it in the light of Divine revelation. He saw my coming in the flesh ; my dying upon the cross for sinners ; the publication of my gospel to the whole world, by which means all the nations of the earth became blessed in his seed. And he was glad, with the joy of faith, which gives the soul a union with an absent object by faith made certain to it, Heb. xi. 1.

57 Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham ?

Christ was at this time but three and thirty years old, and upward : they dream of Abraham's seeing him, and his seeing Abraham, with bodily eyes, of which Christ said nothing ; that indeed had been a thing impossible, for Abraham was dead many hundred years before Christ appeared in the flesh to the world : neither doth our Saviour say, that he had seen Abraham, or that Abraham had seen him ; but that he had seen his day, his coming in the flesh, his death, which Abraham had seen, not with bodily eyes, but with the eye of faith.

58 Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.

Some will have the meaning to be, that Christ was before Abraham's time constituted Mediator ; as he is said to be the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, Rev. xiii. 8 : so 1 Pet. i. 20. But thus it might have been said of any of the elect, that they were chosen before Abraham was. It is therefore undoubtedly to be understood of Christ's eternal existence, as to his Divine nature ; and this will appear, as from other arguments, so from the whole scope of our Saviour's former discourse in this chapter, which was to assert his Divine nature and equality with the Father.

59 Then took they up stones to cast at him : but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by.

Then took they up stones to cast at him ; as they also did, chap. x. 31. It is vain to inquire where they had stones in the temple ; they might be repairing some part of it, or some parts of it paved with stones might be loose, &c. ; it is enough that we are assured that some they found. He did not go through the midst of them that were in this uproar, but first thrust himself into the more innocent crowd, then passed through the midst of them. Some make a question here, how he could pass through the midst of them ? whether he made his body invisible ? (so the Lutherans think ; ) or whether he struck his enemies with blindness, or thickened the air before their eyes ? But what needs that dispute ? admit some few of the rabble to be in a rage, the greatest part innocent, it is no hard thing for us to conceive how a person, discerning the disorder, may thrust himself into the more innocent crowd, and pass by, escaping the rage of his enemies.

CHAP. IX

A man that was born blind receiveth sight, 1—7. He relateth to his neighbours the means of his cure, 8—12. He is brought to the Pharisees, who examine strictly into the fact, and are offended with his acknowledgment of the Divine mission of the author, 13—33. They excommunicate him, 34. He is received of Jesus, and confesseth him, 35—38. Christ taxeth the Pharisees with spiritual blindness, 39—41.

AND as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

The evangelist doth not tell us where our Saviour was passing by, but the word seemeth to import a passing by the highway-side, when he saw this poor man, who was born blind ; which is particularly noted, because such blindness is judged incurable as to the art of man.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind ?

The disciples' question supposed two things for truth : 1. That all bodily punishments and afflictions come upon men for sin. 2. That as some come upon them for personal sins, so others come upon them for the sins of their parents. The latter is unquestionably true : so is the former, but not universally : as there are afflictions which are punishments of sin, so there are some that are trials.

3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents : but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

Our Saviour must not be understood here, as either asserting the blind man or his parents free from sin, and a degree of sin deserving such a punishment ; but as speaking to his disciples' question strictly, and answering, that this affliction came not upon him, either for any personal sin of his own, (for he could not be guilty of any actual sin before he was born,) nor yet for any sin that his parents had committed : but that the works of God might be made glorious in him ; both his work of power in afflicting, and his work of mercy in healing him.

4 I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day : the night cometh, when no man can work.

The Father, who sent Christ into the world, gave him work to do : his general work was, to glorify God upon the earth, John xvii. 4, as by working out the redemption of man, so by revealing his will to the sons of men, and working miracles for the glorifying the name of God. Saith Christ, I have a set time to work in ; that is, that which he here calleth day, the time wherein Christ was to live upon the earth. The night cometh, when no man can work ; I am not to be here always, there will come a time when I must be absent from the earth, then none of this work can be done. A good argument to persuade every Christian to work while the time of his life lasteth, for the night of death will come, when no man can any longer work out his salvation ; but as the tree falleth, so it must lie, Eccles. ix. 10.

5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.

Those words, As long as I am in the world, let us know what our Saviour meant by the day, mentioned ver. 4, viz. the time he should be in the world. Saith he, So long as I am in the world, it is a part of my work to show light to the world. Christ indeed, though he hath left the world, is yet the light of the world ; but he was the light of the world, that part of the world especially where he was, in a more eminent sense, so long as the world enjoyed his bodily presence in it.

6 When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

Several mysterious allegories are found out by men of luxuriant fancies, with reference to the manner of our Saviour's curing this blind man ; as if our Saviour had made choice of clay, to show, that as he at first made man of the dust of the earth, so he could again cure him with dust ; and that his spittle denoted the efficacy of Christ's humanity,

<sup>c</sup> Mark 7. 33. & 8. 23.
<sup>f</sup> Or, spread the clay upon the eyes of the blind man.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 4. 34. & 5. 19. 36. & 11. 9. & 12. 35. & 17. 4.

<sup>d</sup> ch. 1. 5. 9. & 3. 19. & 8. 12. & 12. 35. & 17. 4.

<sup>r</sup> Ex. 3. 14.
<sup>s</sup> ch. 43. 13.
<sup>t</sup> ch. 17. 5. 24.
<sup>u</sup> Col. 1. 17.
<sup>v</sup> Rev. 1. 8.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 10. 31.
<sup>b</sup> 39. & 11. 8.

<sup>t</sup> Luke 4. 30.

being now personally united to the Divine nature. Others think, he made use of spittle, because the Jews had a great opinion of the medicinal virtue of spittle; and, they say, forbade the medicinal use of it on the sabbath day, on which day this miracle was wrought. But all these things are great uncertainties, for which we want any guidance from holy writ. It is most probable, that our Saviour made use of the spittle in working this miracle because he had no water at hand, for water was a very scarce thing in those hot countries. That which we are chiefly to attend in this great miraculous operation is, Christ's demonstration of his Divine nature, for the confirmation of the truth of which he doubtless wrought this great work, as well as to show his charity to this poor creature. To this purpose, 1. He maketh choice, not of a blind man only, but one who was born so, and so incurable according to all judgment of human art. 2. He maketh use of no means that had any appearance of a natural virtue in it; nay, which was more likely to put out the eyes of one that saw, than to give sight to one that was blind.

<sup>f</sup> Neh. 3. 15. 7 And said unto him, Go, wash 'in the pool of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent.) <sup>g</sup> He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

<sup>g</sup> See 2 Kin. 5. 14. He doth not only anoint his eyes, but sendeth him also to wash in the pool of Siloam. We read of this pool, Neh. iii. 15; and we are told, that it was a fountain which sprang out from Mount Zion. It should seem, that there was a brook of that name, which supplied part of the city with water, Isa. viii. 6. Some think they have also found a mystery in this name, because it signifieth sent; and think that it hath an allusion to Shiloh, which was the Messias, mentioned Gen. xlix. 10. The name is plainly an old name, as appears from the place I noted out of Nehemiah; probably given to it anciently, in acknowledgment of the mercy of God given them, in sending them such a brook, or rivulet, from those mountains, so commodious for that great city: or, because (as some think) the water did not run always, but at certain times, as it were sent of God. We read of nothing medicinal in this water, only, as a probation of the blind man's faith and obedience, it pleased our Lord to send the blind man to wash himself there; as of old Naaman the Syrian was sent to wash in Jordan. He went, and the evangelist, to let us see that true faith joined with sincere obedience never faileth the expectation of them that exercise it, lets us know that he returned seeing.

8 ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?

The evangelist now reports the consequents of this miracle. He, being cured, returneth to his friends: those who lived about that place, had taken notice of his ordinary sitting there, and begging; now, seeing him perfectly recovered, they ask one another, if this were not the blind beggar that used to sit there.

9 Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he.

Some conclude it was he, others doubted, but did think he was like him: he puts it out of doubt, and saith that he was the man.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

According as is the nature of most men upon the sight of any new and strange accident, they are curious to know how it came to pass, who did it, and where he was. The blind man tells them, that he was cured.

<sup>h</sup> ver. 6, 7. 11 He answered and said, <sup>h</sup> A man that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

By one that was called Jesus; probably he had heard some of the people mention him by that name; and he describeth to them the manner how he did it.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

They would know where he was; this he knows not.

13 ¶ They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

Whether the neighbours, or his near relations, is not said. Nor is the place mentioned where this convention of Pharisees was, whether in the temple, or in some synagogue, or in the great court which they called the sanhedrim; nor is it material for us to inquire into.

14 And it was the sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

It was observed before, that Christ made choice of the sabbath day, as the day wherein he did many of his mighty works. It was on the sabbath day that he cured the impotent man who lay at the pool of Bethesda, chap. v. 10; and upon the sabbath day that he cured him who had the withered hand, Matt. xii. 10; and now again upon the sabbath day that he cured him who was born blind. Possibly he chose that day, because that was a day wherein he ordinarily preached that heavenly doctrine, which he confirmed by these miraculous works; or, perhaps, that he might take occasion from thence to instruct the Jews, if they would have received instruction, in the true doctrine of the sabbath, that they might not superstitiously think that it was not lawful to do acts of mercy on the sabbath day: certain it is, that himself maketh that improvement of it, Matt. xii. Or to show them, that he was the Lord of the sabbath; and that, as his Father by his works of providence wrought on the sabbath day, so did he, being equal with his Father: by which argument he before defended himself for the cure of the impotent man on the sabbath day, John v. 17.

15 Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

The Pharisees asked him how he had received his sight; they had before heard it from others, but they now desire to hear it from himself; not (as appears) out of any good design, that they might be convinced of the truth of the thing, or that he who had wrought this miracle was the Son of God; but that they might have something to object against Christ, and to quarrel with him for, upon their traditions, with reference to the observation of the sabbath; of which we are told this was one, That it was unlawful for any to anoint their eyes with spittle on the sabbath day; they having a conceit that it was a medicinal application. The blind man is not ashamed to own the goodness of God to him to the Pharisees, but relateth the same story which he before had related to the people.

16 Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day. Others said, <sup>i</sup> How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And <sup>k</sup> there was a division among them.

<sup>i</sup> ver. 33. <sup>k</sup> ch. 3. 2. <sup>l</sup> ch. 7. 12, 43. & 10. 19. They are so far from owning Christ as God, the eternal Son of God, and equal with his Father, that they will not allow him to have any relation to God, as one sent of him. It is true, the sanctification of the sabbath is so great a piece of religion, (the whole of which is sometimes expressed by it, Isa. lvi. 4, 6,) that whoso maketh no conscience of it, may reasonably be concluded to have little or nothing of God in him: but we must rightly understand what the will of God is as to that sanctification, and not think that it lieth in a performance of some ritual services, while in the mean time we neglect moral duties. Christ had kept the sabbath, though not in that superstitious sense they thought it was to be observed, keeping to all their traditions about it. Others of the Pharisees had a something better opinion of Christ by reason of the miracles he had wrought; concluding, that if he had been so bad a man, as some of their brethren would have him taken to be. God would not have assisted him to the doing of such miraculous works as he had done. Thus the wise God made a division amongst the counsels of Christ's enemies, his work being not yet finished, nor the time come when he was to die for the redemption of man.

17 They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, 'He is a prophet.

1 ch. 4. 19.
6. & 14.

What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? What opinion hast thou of this man, who hath opened thine eyes? To make the question perfect, interpreters think, there ought to be this supplement, on the sabbath day. What dost thou think of such a man as this, who would make clay, and apply it to thy cure upon the sabbath day? How can such a fact be defended? The blind man answered, He is a prophet. It was taken for granted by the Jews, according to their traditions, that at the command of a prophet it was lawful to violate the sabbath; which indeed is no more than, that God hath not, in giving us a law, bound up himself, but he may dispense with his own law. Their prophets had an extraordinary mission from God, and immediately revealed the will of God; so as they looked upon what they said as spoken by God himself. The blind man declareth, that he believed that Christ was a prophet; and being so, his words and actions had an extraordinary warrant, and therefore were not to be judged by ordinary rules.

18 But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

That is, the rulers of the Jews did not, or the multitude or rabble of the Jews did not; for we before heard that many of the common Jews did: they had seen him for a long time sit begging; (begging being allowed in that their corrupt and miserable state, they being tributary to the Romans; though in their settled, prosperous state, there was such a liberal provision made for their poor, that there was no beggar in Israel;) besides, they had it from his own mouth, ver. 9: but the rulers had no mind to believe it; and many others of the Jews (possibly) had been no eye-witnesses of his begging, but had only heard the relation from others: the rulers therefore send for the parents of the blind man.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

The parents of this man that was blind, in their answer show a great deal of discretion and prudence. Three things the Pharisees ask: 1. Whether this was their son? 2. Whether (as they said) he was indeed born blind? 3. How he came now to see? The manner of the propounding their question, who ye say, lets us know what answer they would have had, and that they did not send for the parents of this blind man out of a desire to know the naked truth of the thing, but hoping to fright them into a speaking doubtfully (at least) whether it was their son, yea or no; or whether he was stark blind when he was born, yea or no. But, alas! the providence of God ordering his condition to be so poor, that he was glad to beg for his livelihood, made this design vain, would his parents have gratified the Pharisees by any shuffling and indirect answer.

20 His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself.

But besides this, the parents of this man proved honest and stouter than, it may be, the Pharisees did expect. They affirm, that they knew that he was their son, and that he was born blind. But for the third question, How he now saw? they avoid an answer to that, being possibly no eye-witnesses of Christ when he wrought the miracle. For this they refer them to their son, who was no babe, but a man grown, one of age, able to speak for himself; of whom they might inquire, and he was best able, as to this thing, to give them satisfaction.

m ch. 7. 13.
& 13. 42.
& 18. 34.
Act 5. 13.

22 These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue.

a ver. 24.
ch. 16. 2.

The reason why his parents answered so very warily, and avoided saying any thing to the Pharisees' third question, which probably they could not do of their particular personal knowledge, was, that they were afraid of the rulers of the Jews. Solomon saith, The fear of man bringeth a snare, Prov. xxix. 25; it is often a temptation to men to deny the truth, or, at least, not to own and confess it when God calls to them for a public owning and confession of it: but nothing of that nature appeareth in this case; for it doth not appear that his parents were present when Christ wrought this great miracle; which if they were not, they were not obliged to tell the Pharisees what themselves had only received by rumour and hearsay: so that their answer seems but a prudential answer, to avoid an eminent danger. For they were not ignorant of a decree made by the Jewish sanhedrim, That if any did publicly say, or declare, that Jesus was Christ, he should be excommunicated; for that is meant by being put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, He is of age; ask him.

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

o Josh. 7. 19.
1 Sam. 6. 5.
p ver. 16.

They were not able to obtain their design from the parents of this poor man; now they again call him, and advise him to give glory to God. Thus far they spake well, if they had been hearty and serious in what they said; for the man indeed had great reason to give God the glory, by whose power alone, exerted by his Son Christ Jesus, he had received his sight: but moral actions are made good or bad by their ends; and if we consider the end of these wretched men in this action of theirs, wherein they persuaded the poor man to his duty, the words will appear to have been spoken from hearts minding nothing less than the glory of God, and out of a design to vilify and depreciate his Son; whereas God hath set up his rest in his Son, and cannot be glorified but with, in, and through him; whom in the next words they maliciously defame, not only speaking of him contemptuously, calling him this man, but affirming him ἀμαρτωλός, not a sinner only, but a notorious, scandalous sinner, as that word imports.

25 He answered and said, Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

This poor man being of no higher quality than a beggar, can be presumed to have had no great education; yet his answer is as good as could be expected from one of the greatest breeding, both for security to himself, and his stout asserting what was truth. As to their charge upon our Saviour of his being a great sinner, he avoideth it, telling them, as to that he knew nothing, nor was it his concern to inquire; but this he knew, that he had wrought a great work on him, for whereas he had been blind from his mother's womb, he now had his sight by his means: so as all their frowns could not tempt him to deny the miracle wrought upon him, nor yet to speak the least in abatement of it.

26 Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

They cannot frown him into a denial of the miracle wrought; he stood stoutly to affirm, that he was born blind, and that he was cured by Christ: now they put him to tell the story over again, either hoping they should entrap him, contradicting himself in his story; or, at least, find something, upon his repeating the story, for them to take advantage from, to persuade the people that it was but a cheat, and indeed there was no such miracle wrought upon him.

27 He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?

It is wonderful to see how the boldness and confidence of the poor man increased; God giving him that wisdom and courage which they were not able to resist. He refuseth to repeat the story to them, telling them he had once already told it them, but they would not give credit to him; and to what purpose was it for him to say it over again, unless they were inclined to be his disciples? Some think the form of speech implieth a hearty wishing and desiring that they would be so: but others think he speaks ironically, as if he had said, I know my repeating again the story will not induce you to be his disciples, you are resolved against that, and therefore why do you put me upon a needless trouble? And this seemeth to have been his sense by what followeth in the Pharisees' reply, full of indignation.

28 Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples.

If this were all their reviling, for them to tell this poor man that he was Christ's disciple, it was a very tolerable imputation, and what the blind man had reason to glory in: their guilt in reviling is to be judged not so much from what they spake, for there was nothing of greater honour, as from what heart and spirit they spake it. A disciple signifies, one that followeth another, and learneth of him. To be a disciple of Christ indeed, was the greatest thing that any could glory in; yet the imputation of it to this blind man is here called a reviling: whence we may observe, that the guilt of reviling is to be judged not so much from the words which a man speaketh, as from the frame of his spirit, and design of that in the speaking of them. If a man speaketh that of another which is good and true, yet if he doth it out of a design to expose him, to do him mischief, and make him odious unto others, God doth account this reviling, because it proceedeth from the hatred of our brother in our heart, and a design to do him harm. Again, though indeed it was no reproach to be called Christ's disciple, yet they affixed this term upon this poor man out of a design to reproach him, and to expose him to the hatred of others. We are in the government of our tongues not only obliged to take heed what we say, but with what heart, and out of what design we speak it. A malicious design turns terms of the greatest honour into terms of reviling. Besides, they here oppose Christ and Moses: whereas, Moses was but the type, Christ the antitype; Moses prophesied of Christ, Christ was that Prophet which God had promised to raise up like unto him; Moses but the school-master, who led them unto Christ.

29 We know that God spake unto Moses: as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

Concerning Moses indeed they speak honourably, and say, they knew God spake to him; yet did they know it no otherwise than by tradition, and the revelation of the will of God in the law and the prophets. For Christ, they call him τῦρον, this fellow; and say, they know not whence he was; that is, they know of no Divine authority that he had. They were blinded through malice and prejudice. Indeed they did know whence he was as to his human nature, for they often made that the cause of their stumbling at him; that he was of Galilee, that his father was a carpenter, and his mother called Mary: but they knew of no Divine mission or authority that he had: this they might have known also, for he did those things which no man ever did, nor could be effected by any thing less than a Divine power; but their eyes were blinded, and their hearts were judicially hardened; they studied to shut out the light by which they should have seen, and would not know whence he was.

30 The man answered and said unto them, Why herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

The opening of the eyes of the blind without the application of means rationally probable for the producing such an effect, nay, by the application of means which to all human reason seemed of a quite contrary tendency; and this cure wrought upon one who was not blind by some accidental cause, but by some defect in nature, who had been so from his mother's womb, was so manifest an effect of the Divine power, as this poor man was astonished at it, that they should not understand that it was done by such a power, either immediately or mediately; especially considering the prophecy concerning the Messias, Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, to which Christ referreth John and his disciples for an evidence of it, Matt. xi. 5.

31 Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.

This poor man proveth that Christ was from heaven, because he had opened his eyes; not as yet apprehending that Christ did it by putting out an immediate Divine power for his healing; but as a great prophet, obtaining such a power from God for the confirmation of the things which he delivered. Now (saith he) we know that God heareth not sinners. But the question is, what truth there is in this axiom, or proposition. Doth not God hear sinners? Then he can hear none; for who liveth, and sinneth not against God? How did he hear Ahab, and others who were notorious sinners? Answer. 1. By sinners here must be understood notorious and presumptuous sinners, that live and go on in courses of sin with hardened hearts: the word here used signifieth bold, presumptuous sinners; not such as sin merely through ignorance, weakness, or human infirmity. 2. God is under no covenant obligation to hear sinners; they can challenge no such favour upon the account of any promise: but God, out of the abounding of his goodness, may hear them, as he heard Ahab and others; he may hear them as his creatures crying in their misery, though he hears them not as children, or upon the account of any covenant. 3. As to the sense of this maxim in this place, it seemeth to be particular and special; and the words seem to be restrained to that particular degree of favour here spoken of; God useth not to honour notorious and flagitious sinners, by giving them a power to work miracles, by which they should confirm any thing which they say. This poor man bringeth this as an argument, why Christ should not be such a notorious sinner as they spake him, because it was not God's way to honour such persons with his presence and assistance to the doing of those things which none could do but by a Divine power committed to him. Two things this man assumeth, or taketh for granted: 1. That no man can work miracles, without a power obtained of God by prayer, as we saw it was in the case of Elisha, 2 Kings iv. 33. 2. That what Christ did, he did as a man. The first is true, the second was false. He was not yet convinced of Christ's Divine nature, nor looked upon him higher than as a prophet, one sent of God, to reveal the will of God, and to work great works in the world by prayer; as to which he affirms, that if he were such a sinner as they clamoured, God would not hear him. So as the question, How far God may hear sinners, in giving them any thing they ask of him, seemeth not at all proper to this place; though it be enough clear from other scriptures, such as Psal. lxxi. 18, and Isa. i. 5, that none that live in a course of sin can expect that God should hear or give answer to their prayers; and though God may give to such sinners such things as they ask him for, which are of a mere external concern, yet it is not with respect to any promise which he hath made to them, but out of the abounding of his own goodness. But if a man feareth God, and worketh righteousness, him the Lord heareth, accepteth, and answereth. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. Psal. xxv. 14; Prov. iii. 32.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

He proveth Christ to be sent from God, (though it appears by ver. 33 that he looked as yet upon him in no higher notion than a man,) from the nature of the miracle that was wrought; which was not the recovery of a blind man's sight only, but giving sight to one who was born blind. Now, saith this poor man, this is such a work as was never done by Moses, or by any of the prophets who have been since the creation of the world. Some who have been blind from some accidental cause, and something which hath befallen them, flms and cataracts, &c., have been cured; and possibly God by his almighty power may have given sight to one born blind; but we never heard of any such thing done by Moses, whom we magnify; nor by the prophets, for whom we have the greatest veneration.

Job 27. 9. &
35. 12. Ps.
18. 41. & 34.
15. & 66. 18.
Prov. 1. 26.
& 15. 29. &
28. 9. Is. 1.
15. Jer. 11.
13.

11. & 14. 12. Ezek. 6. 18. Mic. 3. 4. Zech. 7. 13.

q ch. 8. 14.

r ch. 3. 10.

t ver. 16.

33 'If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

If therefore this man (for still he apprehended him no more) had not some special authority from God, and there were not some special presence of God with him, he could do nothing that is of this nature. It is a work beyond the power of man, and beyond that power that we read God did ever trust any man with.

34 They answered and said unto him,

u ver. 2. "Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us? And they || cast him

|| Or, excommunicated
Aim, ver. 22. out.

The Pharisees seeing that they could by no arts bring this poor blind man to their lure, either to deny, or speak any thing in abatement of, the miracle which Christ had wrought upon him; nor yet to agree with them, that Christ was a great sinner; fall at last to a downright railing; they tell him, he was altogether born in sins. So were all of them. David had taught them, that there was none righteous, no not one; and confessed concerning himself, Psal. li. 5, that he was conceived in iniquity, and that in sin his mother had brought him forth. They had learned from Job, that none can bring a clean thing out of that which is unclean; nothing can be clean that is born of a woman, Job xiv. 4. Their meaning therefore in this phrase must be something more; and possibly the adjective ἅλος, which signifieth whole, (we translate it as if it were ἅλας, altogether.) doth import thus much. They do not only tell this man that he was born in sin, but that he was whole or altogether born in sin, that is, under the guilt of sin: nor do they mean only the common corruption and contagion of human nature, derived from the loss of God's image in man upon the fall of Adam, but some notorious sin. If any say, How could they think that he was guilty of any such thing before he was born? Ans. It was the opinion of Pythagoras, one of the heathen philosophers, that when men and women died their souls went into other bodies that were then born, and in those bodies often suffered punishment for those enormous acts which they had been guilty of in former bodies. It is apparent that the Jews were some of them tainted with this notion, from Herod's saying, Matt. xiv. 2; Mark vi. 14, when, after the beheading of John the Baptist, he heard what great works Christ did, that John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works did show forth themselves in him; by which the best interpreters think, that Herod meant no more than that John the Baptist's soul was gone into another body, according to their notion borrowed from the heathens; for it had been easy for Herod by search to have found whether John the Baptist's body was risen from the dead. So it is thought that the Pharisees here saying, Thou wast altogether born in sins, meant that his soul was a sordid, filthy soul, which in another body had committed vile and abominable things; and for those sins God set a mark upon him, even in his birth, and he was born blind. Or perhaps this phrase signified no more than a term of reviling; of which no great account can be given, as passionate men in the madness of their passions oft throw out words of reproach, of which neither themselves nor others can give any just and reasonable account. And dost thou teach us? Thou that art such a marked villain from thy mother's womb, or that art such an ignorant idiot, dost thou think thyself fit to instruct us about true and false prophets, who are of God, and who are not? Surely we are to be thy teachers, and not thou ours. And they cast him out: some think that casting out here signifieth no more than a turning him out of the place where they were; as the word signifieth, Acts vii. 58; xiii. 50. Others think it is here to be understood of a judicial excommunication, or casting him out of communion with the Jewish church; which latter seemeth more probable, because of the notice of it brought to our Saviour, and the notice which he took of this poor man, upon this occasion. If it had been only a turning him out of the place where they were met, it is not probable that it would have made such a noise.

35 Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on *the Son of God?

x Matt. 14.
23, & 16. 16.
Mark i. 1.
ch. 10. 30.
1 John 5. 13.

Jesus heard that they had cast him out, as was said in the former verse, probably by excommunication. When he had found him, (whether casually, or upon an industrious search for him, the Scripture doth not say,) he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? art thou one who art ready truly and seriously to embrace the Messiah and Saviour of the world, who must not be only the Son of man, but also the Son of God? Art thou willing to accept, receive, and close with him, and to give up thyself to his obedience?

36 He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

It is as much as if he had said, Lord! how should I believe on him, of whom I have not heard? (So the disciples answered Paul, asking them whether they had received the Holy Ghost, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost, Acts xix. 2.) But saith he, Lord, I am ready to believe on him, may I but know who he is. Our Lord had prepared this poor man's heart for the receiving of him; there wanted now nothing but the due revelation of the Messiah unto him. This our Saviour giveth him.

37 And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and 'it is he that y<sup>e</sup>ch. 4. 26. talketh with thee.

This is as much as, I am he. Thou hast not only seen him with the eyes of thy body, but thou hast had experience of his Divine virtue and power, in giving thee sight who wert born blind: thus seeing also signifieth, chap. xiv. 9. It is very observable here, that miracles do not work faith, but confirm it. The blind man had experienced here a miracle wrought upon himself, but yet he is an unbeliever, until the Lord cometh to give him the revelation of his word: faith cometh by hearing: but together with this word we must also conceive a mighty power to have flowed from Christ, inwardly enlightening him, and enabling him to discern the truth of what he told him, and making him yet further willing to receive him, and close with him.

38 And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

Now is the work of faith with power wrought in his soul: he saith, Lord, I do acknowledge and receive thee as the Son of God; I am fully persuaded that thou art more than what thou art in thy external form and appearance, more than a mere man, and I give up myself to thee, to be ruled and guided by thee. And as a testimony of this, he performed some act of external adoration to him. The word signifies prostration; he kneeled down to him, or he fell upon his face before him: we are not able to determine what particular act or posture of adoration he used; but there is nothing plainer, than that it is to be understood of such a Divine adoration and homage as is due unto God alone, for it was such as testified his faith in him as the Son of God, whom he had professed that he believed him to be, in the words immediately preceding: although therefore the word in the Greek be a word used sometimes to signify that civil respect which men show to their superiors, yet it cannot be so interpreted in this place, considering what went before.

39 ¶ And Jesus said, *For judgment <sup>ch. 5. 27, 27.</sup> I am come into this world, <sup>See ch. 3. 17.</sup> *that they <sup>ch. 12. 47.</sup> which see not might see; and that they <sup>1st Mat. 12. 13.</sup> which see might be made blind.

There is a great variety in interpreters' notions about the judgment here mentioned. Some think that by it is meant the Divine counsel and decree: I am come into the world, to execute the just will, and counsel, and pleasure of my Father: and the event of it is this, that some who saw not, see; and some who see, in a sense are made blind. Others understand it of condemnation; I am come to execute the judgment of condemnation: but thus it is hardly reconcilable to John iii. 17, where it is said, that God sent not His Son to condemn the world. The best notion of it is theirs who interpret it of the spiritual government of the world, committed to Christ, and managed by him with perfect rectitude and equity. One eminent part of this was his publishing the gospel, the law of faith. The event of which is, that many spiritually blind, and utterly unable to see the way that leads to eternal life, might (as this person that was born blind is now clear-sighted) be enlightened with the saving knowledge of the truth; and many that think they see, should by their obstinate infidelity be more blind than they were from their birth. Not that I cast any such ill influence upon them; but this happeneth through their own sore eyes. I am the light of the world; and as it is of the nature of light to make other things visible to men; and it hath its effect, and doth so, where men's eyes are not ill affected with humours and the like; so the light of my gospel, by which I shine in the world, makes the way of salvation by me, ordained by my Father, Acts iii. 18, evident and clear to many souls who are in darkness and the shadow of death: but it so happeneth, through the prejudices that others are prepossessed with against me, and the doctrine of my gospel by which I shine in the world, so full of ignorance, malice, and hatred against me and the doctrine which I bring; that through their own perverseness, and the righteous judgment of God, at last giving men over to their own delusions, they are made more blind. In this sense this scripture agreeth with what was prophesied by Isaiah, chap. viii. 14, And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and the words of Simeon in Luke ii. 34, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; as also with that of Paul, Rom. ix. 33.

40 And some of the Pharisees which <sup>b</sup> Rom. 2. 19. were with him heard these words, <sup>b</sup> and said unto him, Are we blind also?

The Pharisees attended our Saviour almost in all places where he went, to catch something from him whereof they might accuse him: they could not but understand, that the import of our Saviour's last words was, that this poor blind man, now not only receiving bodily sight, (though born blind,) but a spiritual illumination, by which he discerned that Christ was the Son of God, the true Messiah and Saviour of the world, was an instance of those mentioned, who, not seeing before, upon Christ's coming saw; and that themselves and their masters were an instance of those whom he intended by such as saw, and by his coming were made blind; for our Saviour had often called them blind, and so represented them to the people to whom he preached, Matt. xv. 14; Luke vi. 39. They therefore grew very angry, being very proud, and not patient to be thought or called blind, looking upon themselves as the greatest lights of the Jewish church.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 15. 22. 24. 41 Jesus said unto them, <sup>c</sup> If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.

If ye were blind; if your ignorance were simple, and not affected, and you were sensible that your blindness were not incurable, and your sin might be pardoned. This appeareth to be the sense from the opposition of it, now ye say, We see, in the latter part of the verse. They were indeed blind, as to any true and saving sight of Christ, and of the true way of salvation by believing in him; seeing (as they apprehended) a way of salvation without Christ, by the works of the law, and wilfully shutting their eyes against the glorious light of the gospel shining on them. Ye should have no sin; you should not have so much sin, so much guilt upon your souls, as you now have: though your ignorance had been sin, yet it had not been so great a sin as a wilful shutting your eyes against the light. But now ye say, We see; now that you have an opinion that you see, and boast in your knowledge of the law, as if you were the only men that saw; and upon this presumption reject the doctrine of salvation; therefore your sin remaineth, by it you not only conclude yourselves under the guilt of sin, but your sin remaineth upon you, not pardoned to you: which teacheth us, that without a true and saving sight of sin, and such a one as carryeth the soul out of itself to Christ for pardon and remedy, there is no hope of pardon and forgiveness from all the mercy that is in God.

CHAP. X

Christ declareth himself to be the Door, and the good Shepherd, 1—18. Divers opinions concerning him, 19—21.

He proveth to the Jews by his works that he is the Christ, and asserteth his unity with the Father, 22—30. The Jews go about to stone him: he justifieth his doctrine, 31—38; and escaping from them, goeth beyond Jordan, where many believe on him, 39—42.

VERILY, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

In this famous parable, which reacheth to ver. 30, our Saviour seemeth to drive two great designs: 1. To prove himself the true Shepherd. 2. To prove the Pharisees and teachers of those times thieves and robbers.

It should seem, that the sheepfolds in those countries were houses, which had doors by which the entry was into them: there is no doubt but by the sheepfold is meant here the church of God, in which the people of God are gathered together in one. By the door he apparently meaneth himself, as he himself speaketh, ver. 9. Or rather, more generally, that way which God hath appointed for any that are to take charge of his church to enter. He is both the Shepherd (the true Shepherd) and the Door: the Shepherd, as the care, conduct, and government of the church belongeth to him, and is upon his shoulders: the Door, as he is he whom the Father hath ordained to be the chief Shepherd, from whom all who pretend to any right to teach or govern in the church must derive both their authority and abilities. Now saith our Saviour, Whosoever they be, that thrust themselves into the care, conduct, and government of the church, without any call or warrant from my Father or me, who am the true Door, through which whosoever entereth into the church must enter; and the chief Shepherd, from whom he must derive, or be a thief and a robber; his very entrance makes it appear, that his end is not to feed the flock, but to feed himself; and that he drives only private designs of advantage to himself.

2 But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep.

As it is amongst men, the true shepherd goes into the sheepfold by the door; so it is in the church of God. He that taketh not the honour of governing the church to himself, but being called of God, as Aaron was, he is the shepherd of the sheep. This very argument the apostle useth to prove Christ to be the true High Priest, Heb. v. 4, 5, because he glorified not himself to be made a High Priest, but was made one by him who said unto him, Psal. cx. 4, (quoted there also, ver. 6.) Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. God (whose the church is, called his heritage, his peculiar people, &c.) was the Door, by which Christ, the chief Shepherd, entered into the flock; he made him the Head of the church. Eph. v. 23. For this he is said to be sent; and often makes himself known to us under the notion of him whom the Father hath sent. And the under-shepherds must also derive from Christ: as the Father's will in sending Christ was his door, so the will of Christ in sending others is their door; that is, their only true way of entering upon the charge of the flock of Christ. As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you, John xx. 21. There is a double sending; the one is extraordinary, of which mission Christ speaketh to his apostles in that place; thus the apostles and first ministers of the gospel were sent; Christ breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost, chap. xx. 22: and there was yet a fuller sending of these first shepherds, in the days of Pentecost, Acts ii. 17. And there is a more ordinary sending, as to which God revealed his will, 2 Tim. ii. 2, The things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others. Thus the apostles, Acts xiv. 23, did themselves ordain elders in every church. And Paul for this purpose left Titus in Crete, to set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, Tit. i. 5. Whosoever entereth into any place in the church, for the feeding and governing of it, that way which God hath directed in his word, he entereth in by the door, he is the true shepherd. Concerning Christ's title, and his way of entrance, and the first preachers of the gospel, immediately sent by Christ, and declared to be sent by the effusion of the Spirit in the days of Pentecost, there can be no question made by any who believeth the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. This text declares, that whosoever cometh into the church with right, and as a true shepherd to it, must come in at the door, by a call from God, (as Christ was sent,) or from Christ; either by an extraordinary mission, or in such a method and order as Christ hath in his word directed, either from his own mouth, or by the mouths of his apostles, whom he, ascending up into heaven, left in the first charge of his church. This is that which every one ought in the first place to look after. We shall observe in God's whole course with his church, that in the corruption of the state of the church, when it was eminently deviated from the rule he had set, he sent some by an extraordinary mission. Such were the prophets, whose writings make up a part of Scripture. Such were the apostles, and first ministers of the gospel. Such, we say, were our first reformers in Germany, and other parts: nor is it any prejudice to it, that they were able to work no miracles; we read of no miracles wrought by the prophets of old, unless by two or three of them. Their faithful declaring the will of God, and calling men back to the plain law of God in a time when the generality were obviously departed from it; together with their spirit of courage and boldness in their work, was evidence enough that God had sent them. But this text only declareth this general truth, That every true shepherd coming into the church, must come in the right way, by the door. So the great Shepherd of the sheep did, being sent by his Father, whose the church is, to take care of it: so must all inferior shepherds do, by him whom God the Father hath made the door; according to whose directions all the affairs of the church must be ordered.

3 To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

By the porter is understood God; or more particularly, (to show the order of the Holy Trinity in working.) the Holy Spirit, who openeth the hearts of men to receive and embrace Jesus Christ, who is the chief Shepherd; and the sheep are able to distinguish his voice from the voice of thieves and robbers. Probably they had in those countries particular words and phrases, which, their shepherds having used them to, the sheep understood, and moved according to the direction of them. Some think they had also names for their sheep, (as we have for our dogs and horses,) which they understood. Otherwise, it only signifieth that particular knowledge which Christ hath of all those that are truly his: as the former phrase signified, that judgment of discerning spirits and doctrines, which was in an eminent degree in the first ministers of the gospel, and is yet in a measure in believers; by which, though they cannot perfectly and infallibly judge concerning truth, and the will of God, in all things, yet they can in a great measure do it; and are not ordinarily led aside into pernicious and damnable errors, to the ruin of their souls. And, saith our Saviour, the true shepherd leadeth the sheep out; that is, into their pastures and true feeding-places. This is eminently true concerning Christ the chief Shepherd: when he came into the world, God opened to him the door of his church; so as though he was rejected by many, (the builders and rulers of the Jewish church in particular,) yet he was by many received; multitudes followed him; many truly believed on him, and truly heard his voice; he had a particular knowledge of them who truly were his sheep; he knew Nathanael while he was yet under the fig tree; he led them out into their true pastures, preaching the gospel of the kingdom to them, and showing them the way of life and salvation. It is in its measure true of every inferior shepherd, that truly deriveth from Christ; God giveth unto such favour in the eyes of his people. The true sheep of Christ hear them, receive and embrace the truth delivered by them. They take a particular charge of them, and they lead them to Christ, and to the embracing of his gospel; as by the holy and true doctrine which they preach to them, so by their holy lives and conversations before them.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

In our country at this day, shepherds generally follow their sheep, which go before them. In other countries, as France, &c., it is otherwise at this day; the shepherds go before their flocks, and their flocks follow them, upon some sounds they make. In Palestine (which was the Jews' country) it should seem that the shepherds sometimes went before their sheep, and sometimes followed them. David followed his father's sheep, 2 Sam. vii. 8; Psal. lxxviii. 71. On the other side, God is spoken of, Psal. lxxx. 1, under the notion of the Shepherd of Israel, who leadeth Joseph like a flock. And the psalmist, Psal. xxiii. 1, speaking of God as his Shepherd, saith, ver. 2, he leadeth me beside the still waters. Christ here speaketh of himself under the notion of a shepherd that went before his sheep, and whom the sheep followed; and thereby lets us know the duty of all faithful pastors in the church, so to live, that their flocks may follow them with safety; which cannot be, unless they follow Christ, 1 Cor. xi. 1. For, saith our Saviour, those that are my true sheep, they know my voice; thereby signifying that power of discerning betwixt truth and damnable errors, which the Lord gives unto all true believers, 1 John ii. 27.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

This he further enlargeth upon, telling them, that his sheep would not follow those that did not lead them into his truth, and in his ways, for they understood not such voices. Here ariseth a question, Whether the elect of God, or such as, being truly called, and believe in Christ, are the sheep of Christ in the most strict and proper sense, may not be seduced into errors, and led away by strangers? Answer. First, We must distinguish betwixt single persons and the generality of believers. As in a flock the generality keep together, following the voice of the true shepherd, though some particular sheep may wander; so the generality of believers will be found keeping close to the truth and doctrine of Christ, though amongst them some particular persons may be seduced, and be led away by seducers. Secondly, We must distinguish betwixt errors and damnable errors; a pertinacious adherence to which will divide the soul from Christ, and end in the ruin of souls. Christ's sheep may follow strangers, dissembling the spiritual voice of the true Shepherd, a little way, but they will not follow them into such errors as will plunge their souls in eternal ruin and destruction. Thirdly, They may hear even this voice of strangers speaking to them perverse and damnable things; but it will be but for a short time; God will reduce and bring them back again; they shall never perish, ver. 28.

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

Our Saviour was wont to instruct them in the mysteries of the kingdom of God by parables, that is, similitudes taken from reasonable actions of men, which might be, and were, proper to express spiritual things by. Wherefore he used this method in teaching, we are told, Matt. xiii. 10—13. They well enough understood the words in which those parables were delivered; but the inward sense, the spiritual mysteries shadowed out in those similitudes, these they understood not; neither the common sort of his disciples understood them, nor did the better sort of his disciples understand them without a further explication of them. Our Lord therefore, in the following verses, comes to give them a large explication of the parable.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.

Our Saviour had before been speaking of the door in another notion; there he spake of the door of the shepherd; here, of the door of the sheep: there, of the door, that is, the true and regular way of entrance into the care, conduct, and government of the church; here, of the true way of entrance, not into the church militant only, but into the church triumphant. It may be also understood of the door, or way of entrance and admission, into the church visible here upon the earth. Circumcision, baptism, external profession, are the doors into the visible church; but none, unless by Christ, that is, by a true and lively faith wrought by the Spirit of Christ in the soul, can be a true member of Christ's invisible church here upon the earth, much less a member of his glorious church in heaven.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

This must not be understood of the prophets, but of such only as came before Christ, not being sent by him: all those that taught people another way of life and salvation, than by believing in the Messiah, who was to be revealed for the salvation of the world; all such did but seek themselves, not the good of the people's souls; and destroyed souls instead of profiting or doing them any good. But those that were mine by an eternal election, or by my special grace bestowed upon them, did not embrace them.

9 <sup>a ch. 14. 6. Eph. 2. 18.</sup> I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

Our Saviour here lets us know, that he meant by the door, in the former verse, the door of salvation; the way by which every man must enter into life that findeth life; not the door only by which every true pastor must enter into the church, but by which every soul that shall be saved must enter into heaven; which is the doctrine which he before taught, John iii. 16, 18, 36. And he, who so believeth in me, shall be so guided, and governed, and taught, that he shall be secure, and want nothing for the management of his whole conversation in the world. Under the notion of pasture here, are signified all good things that the soul can stand in need of: it is much the same promise with that chap. vi. 35, He that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst; and with that Psal. lxxxiv. 11; as also with the 23rd Psalm; to which Psalm our Saviour is thought in this parable to have a special reference.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

Look as it is with the true shepherd, that owneth the sheep, and whose the flock is; he cometh regularly into the care and conduct of it; he cometh into the sheepfold, to take care of the life and welfare of his sheep: but a thief and a robber, that climbeth into the window, and so gets into the sheepfold, he comes not there out of any good-will to the sheep, but merely, by destroying the sheep, to provide for himself. So it is with them that, without any call or derivation of authority from me, thrust themselves into the care and conduct of the church of God; they do it with no good design to the souls of people, not out of any care or respect unto their good, but merely that they may serve themselves in the ruin of my people's souls. But that is not my end in coming into the world: I am not come to destroy them, but to save them; I am come, that they might have a spiritual life, and at last eternal life; that they might live the life of grace here, and not fail of the life of glory hereafter; and not only that they may barely live, but that their life may abound, through the upholding, strengthenings, quickenings, and comfortings of my holy and gracious Spirit; that my beloved may not only drink, but drink abundantly; not only live, but live abundantly furnished with all the affluences and accommodations of a spiritual life.

11 <sup>b 16. 40. 11. Ezek. 34. 12. 21. & 37. 24. Heb. 13. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 25. & 5. 4.</sup> I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

That good Shepherd prophesied of, Isa. xl. 11. I cannot agree with those who think that Christ here speaketh not of himself as the good Shepherd, with reference to his office, as he was the Messiah, but only in opposition to the hirelings after-mentioned. I can allow that he thus calleth himself, both in the one respect and the other; but I cannot allow the latter sense exclusively to the former; for what followeth is peculiar to the Messiah, of whom it was prophesied, Dan. ix. 26, that he should be cut off, but not for himself: and though it be true, that the true shepherd will hazard his life for his sheep, as David did, when he encountered the lion and the bear, 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35; yet it cannot be said to be the duty of the best shepherd to lay down his life for the sheep, for the life of a man is much more valuable than the life of any beast. Our Saviour therefore, doubtless, in this place showeth wherein he was the most excellent Shepherd, far excelling the best shepherds in the world, because he was come, not only to expose, hazard, and adventure his life, but actually, willingly, and freely to lay it down.

12 But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and <sup>c Zech. 11. 16, 17.</sup> leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

Those that deal in sheep, either keep them themselves, or by their near relations, as Jacob's sons, and David, and Laban's daughters did; or else they hired persons to keep them for them. There is a great deal of difference betwixt the care of an owner, and the care of a hired servant in any thing; the owner taketh a more natural, diligent care, because the whole profit of the sheep, thriving and doing well, returneth unto himself. The hired servant may be careful in his measure and degree; but no such servant will take the care that an owner will take, nor run the hazards that he will run, because he knoweth that, let the flock thrive never so well, he shall have no more than the wages he is hired for: therefore what our Saviour saith is true concerning the generality of such hired servants, they will take some care of the flocks of sheep in their trust so long as there appeareth no danger, but if any danger appeareth, they leave the sheep, and flee, and the wolf cometh, and scattereth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

The reason why he that is a mere hired servant, and hath no property in the sheep, fleeth, is, because he is a hireling, and doth what he doth merely for his wages; and when a danger ariseth, which his wages will not balance, he will never encounter it; he hath no property in the sheep, nor any love to them, nor care for them.

14 I am the good shepherd, and <sup>d 2 Tim. 2. 15.</sup> know my sheep, and am known of mine.

I am no hireling; the sheep are mine own; I have a true love and affection for them, which obligeth me to a just and true care of them; I know them by name, (as was said before,) by a particular distinct knowledge; or I love them, and have tender bowels for them. And as I know them, so I am mutually known, and owned, and acknowledged by them; they have heard my voice, and discerned betwixt my voice and the voice of such as are strangers, refusing to follow them, but following me, going before them. Thus our Saviour in the same parable giveth us both notes to know a true and good shepherd, and particularly to know that himself was the true, good, and most excellent Shepherd; and also notes by which we might know who they are that are the true sheep of Christ.

15 <sup>e Mat. 11. 27. f ch. 13. 13.</sup> As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep.

By these words our Saviour openeth how he knew his sheep, and should be again known of them, even as the Father knoweth him, and he knows his Father: this mutual knowledge between the Father and Christ was joined with perfect love and delight. Thus our Saviour knoweth those that are his sheep, not only fully and distinctly, so as to call them all by their names; but so as to love them, delight in them; so as to be ready to lay down his life for their good, and eternal salvation. Christ, to show not only the sincerity, but the degrees, of his love to his people, doth often compare it to the love wherewith his Father loved him, chap. xv. 9; xvii. 23, 26. So that if we can believe that God the Father loved Christ his only begotten Son, we may also believe that both the Father and Christ love those that are truly the sheep of Christ. The love that Christ hath to his people is as true and as certain as the Father's love to Christ, or Christ's love to his Father; and this could be showed by no higher act than that of laying down his life, chap. xv. 13. Now, saith he, I lay down, that is, I am ready to lay down, or I shall shortly lay down, my life for the sheep: whether sheep can signify all and every person born into the world, is their concern more strictly to inquire, who are so tenacious of that point, That Christ died equally for all and every man : as also, whether upon that principle that absurdity must not follow, That Christ loved those who shall yet perish eternally, with such a love as the Father loved him, and he loved the Father.

g. Lk. 56. 8.

16 And <sup>o</sup> other sheep I have, which are not of this fold : them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice ; <sup>h</sup> and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

h. Ezek. 37.
22. Eph. 2.
14. 1 Pet. 2.
25.

And other sheep I have which are not of this fold ; our Saviour meaneth the Gentiles, who belonged not to the Jewish state and church, so were not under the same laws and government ; for, 1 John. ii. 2, he was not only a propitiation for the sins of the Jews, but for the sins of the whole world : he calleth those sheep, because the Lord knew who were his from eternity ; and they were sheep in the counsels of God, and they were suddenly to be made his sheep by calling, the gospel being soon to be preached to all nations. Them also (saith he) I must bring in ; it is so written in God's book, the promises and prophecies to that purpose must be fulfilled. They shall not only hear the voice and sound of my gospel, though going out of Zion, yet not terminated in Zion ; but they shall embrace, receive, and believe that joyful sound. And there shall be one fold, and one shepherd ; and there shall be but one church ; as I am one Shepherd, so there shall be one flock of sheep ; one body, one Spirit, one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, as there is one God and Father of all, as the apostle speaketh, Eph. iv. 4—6.

1. Lk. 23. 7, 8.
12. Heb. 2. 6.

17 Therefore doth my Father love me, <sup>h</sup> because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

Christ here asserteth two things. 1. That he was about to lay down his life, and should now very shortly lay it down ; but yet so as he should take it again ; that is, rise again from the dead ; death should not have dominion over him : by which he comforteth his disciples concerning his death, declaring, (1.) That he was a freewill-offering, as he further openeth it in the next verse. (2.) That he should not perish in the grave, but rise again from the dead. 2. That therefore the Father loved him ; for, (1.) By this means he declared himself with power to be the Son of God, and the Father could not but love his Son. And, (2.) By this means also he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, Phil. ii. 8. So as that the Father had many reasons to love the Son ; and amongst others, this obedience of his to death, even the accursed death upon the cross, to fulfil his Father's will, for the redemption and salvation of the sons of men, was not the least : and by this also he commendeth his Father's love to those that are his sheep, in that his Father loveth him with the more exceeding love, for laying down his life, to purchase their redemption and salvation.

1. ch. 2. 19.
1. eh. 6. 38.
* 16. 16.
Acta 2. 24.
32.

18 No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I <sup>h</sup> have power to take it again. <sup>h</sup> This commandment have I received of my Father.

No man taketh it from me by force, without my willing it and consenting to it ; the Jews and Pilate will take it from me, but not without my free and voluntary surrender of it : and this is that which we read, Acts iv. 27, 28, For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done. By which he asserteth his Divine power, and so comforteth his disciples against the disturbances they were like to have from the sight of his passion, at this time not many months off. And this, saith he, is the will of my Father, that which my Father hath given me commission to do, and for which he hath sent me into the world : and thus he declareth his death to be a fulfilling of his Father's purpose, and an act of obedience to his Father's will ; and, indeed, in his obedience in the thing lay much of the virtue of his death.

19 ¶ <sup>h</sup> There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings. <sup>m</sup> ch. 7. 43.
<sup>n</sup> 9. 18.

Christ by his words often caused a division amongst the Jews, so as they could not agree in their sentiments and censures about him ; which was either caused through the mixture amongst them of such as truly believed with those who believed not ; or else from the mixture of a more considering part amongst them with others who were more brutish, irrational, and full of passion. We met with much the same, chap. vii. 43, and again, chap. ix. 16. It is one method of God's providence for the deliverance of his servants from unreasonable men, to cause divisions among them, so as they cannot agree among themselves.

20 And many of them said, <sup>n</sup> He hath a devil, and is mad ; why hear ye him ? <sup>n</sup> ch. 7. 20.
<sup>o</sup> 8. 48, 52.

Some of the people said, He hath a devil, and is mad ; for (as was said before) this was the opinion of the Jews concerning all that were mad and distracted, that it was by the influence of the devil, and they were infested with an evil spirit.

21 Others said, These are not the words of him that hath a devil. <sup>o</sup> Can a devil <sup>o</sup> open the eyes of the blind ? <sup>o</sup> Ex. 4. 11.
<sup>p</sup> 7. 34. 9. 8.
<sup>q</sup> 14. 8.
<sup>r</sup> ch. 5. 6.
<sup>s</sup> 7. 32, 33.

But others, that were less passionate and brutish in their expressions, and more thinking and considerate in passing their judgments, said, These are not the words (so we translate it ; the word in the Greek is συναρα, which signifies things, and matters, as well as words ; and by what follows, one would think that were the more proper translation of it here) of him that hath a devil. They instance in no words, but in a matter of fact ; asking if a devil could open the eyes of the blind ? that is, of one that was born blind ; for they certainly speak with reference to that miracle which he had so lately wrought upon such a person.

22 ¶ And it was at Jerusalem the <sup>q</sup> feast of the dedication, and it was winter. <sup>A. D. 33.</sup>
<sup>20.</sup> <sup>Macc. 4.</sup>

This verse affords two questions, which have not a little troubled interpreters. 1. What feast of dedication this was ? 2. Whether dedications of places to the worship of God be warrantable or no, in that manner as they are dedicated amongst the papists at this day ?

As to the first of these, that which we have about it in Scripture is this : Exod. xl. 1—15, we have God's command and direction for the hallowing, or dedication, of the sanctuary, or the tabernacle, which was the first house we read of in Scripture set apart for the public worship of God. We have a particular account of Moses's punctual obedience to that command, Lev. viii. When the temple was built by Solomon, we read of Solomon's dedication of it ; but nothing of ceremony used at it, only a multitude of sacrifices offered, (which was God's ordinary worship in the Jewish church,) and a feast kept fourteen days : we read of no law that he made for the annual keeping of it, no obligation upon all the males in Israel to be present at it. As concerning the other solemn feasts which God appointed, Lev. xxiii., Solomon's feast of dedication in this differed from them, that it held double the time, for seven or eight days was the longest time that any of those feasts were kept. This temple was destroyed by the Chaldeans and Babylonians, and rebuilt by Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, as we read in the books known by those names. In analogy to the practice of Solomon, when they had finished the building of the temple, there was another feast of dedication kept ; of which we read, Ezra vi. 16—18 ; but we read of nothing done in that dedication but the offering of one hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs, and twelve he-goats ; and setting the priests and Levites in order for the service of God. This temple was defaced by Antiochus, but not wholly ruined ; and was repaired and purified by Judas Maccabeus, of which we read, 2 Macc. ii. 23 ; x. 6—8 ; 1 Macc. iv. 52, 58 ; which books of Maccabees, though they be no canonical Scripture, yet are as good a piece of ecclesiastical history as any : and Josephus also giveth us an account of it, Antiq. l. 12. cap. 11. We do not read of any thing they did, saving offering sacrifices, and setting things in order, according to the law of Moses, and feasting ; Josephus tells us they used all lawful pleasures. We do not read, that either God appointed an annual feast of dedication for the sanctuary; nor Solomon, nor Ezra, for either of the temples; but we read twice in the book of Maccabees, and Josephus (writing the Jewish history) tells us, that Judas Maccabeus made it a law, That the feast should be kept yearly for eight days, in memory of that mercy which God had showed them. This was without doubt the feast of dedication here mentioned: for this feast began upon the twenty-fifth day of the month Chisleu, which answereth our months of November and December, and took in part of each; so it agreeth with the text, which saith that it was winter; whereas Solomon's dedication was in autumn; Ezra's in the spring. Some make a question, Whether Judas Maccabeus did well in appointing this annual feast, neither Solomon nor Ezra having, that we read of, before done any such thing: and that our Saviour was not at this feast in any honour to the feast, but only to take advantage of the multitude of people that met, to preach the gospel. For my own part, as I will not defend, so I durst not condemn him: I see no more that he did in this, than was done, Esth. ix. 27, 28, as to the days of Purim. Magistrates certainly have a power to appoint public days, yea, annual days of thanksgivings, for mercies never to be forgotten. Indeed they cannot make a day holy, so as it shall be a sin against God to labour in it, or to use any pleasures (as in the case of the sabbath); but they may command the public worship of God to be performed on particular days, and men ought to attend it when with conveniency they can; only they ought to take care that such days be not spent in luxury and profaneness, and that they be for signal providences, and not so multiplied, and frequently renewing, as that the service of them degenerate into mere matter of form. Whether Christ went up in order to the feast, or because of the great concourse of people he knew would be there at that time, cannot be determined.

For the second question, it is not so much a question, whether it be lawful in a solemn and decent manner to consecrate a house to the public worship of God, by such acts of worship as God hath appointed under the gospel, such as prayer and praise, reading, preaching, and hearing the word; as whether it may be done by such rites and ceremonies as the papists do it with, for the which there is no institution. For the former, though it may be some will not agree it necessary; yet, certainly, no sober person can deny, but if a place be made for people ordinarily to meet in to worship God, there they may as well meet at the first to praise God for his mercy, and to beg his presence when they shall there meet together to worship God, and to hear his word, as they may meet there afterwards for prayer, praise, preaching, or hearing. But this satisfieth not the papists. They first do it by many superstitious ceremonies. Secondly, they plead for the holiness of the place when so consecrated. As for the ceremonies of their consecrations, or dedications, Bellarmine reckoneth up eight.

1. The painting twelve crosses in the several parts of the house to be consecrated, and lighting up twelve lamps, one at every cross; to signify the twelve apostles, who carried the banner of the cross throughout the world.

2. The bishop's knocking at the door with a pastoral staff, commanding the devil to give place, and invoking of God, the angels, and saints, to grant their presence in that place; which they make to signify the opening of people's hearts by the preaching of the gospel.

3. The scattering of ashes upon the floor of the place, upon which the bishop writes the letters of the Latin and Greek alphabet, in the figure of a cross.

4. The sprinkling the place with holy water, and lighting up wax candles.

5. The anointing of the crosses before mentioned, and painted on the walls.

6. The sprinkling of the place with a mixture of water, wine, salt, and ashes.

7. The anointing of the temple and the altar.

8. The keeping of a festival upon it. And for all these they have devised several significancies, too vain and fanciful to repeat.

For none of which we know the least warrant in holy writ; nor can we conceive how any consecration can imprint any character of holiness upon a place, or make prayers offered up in or toward it more acceptable; though we know it did so as to the temple, both because it was an eminent type of Christ, and also because of the particular promises made to it, 1 Kings ix.; which were not applicable to the synagogues, which were the Jews' ordinary meeting places for public worship; but only to the temple, upon the account before mentioned. Though we say that all places for that use ought to be used with all imaginable decency, and we ought during the public worship of God to carry ourselves in them with all reverence, because of the angels, and because of the special presence of God, promised to the assemblies of his people in his name, and for his public worship.

23 And Jesus walked in the temple <sup>in</sup> Solomon's porch. r Acts 3. 11. & 5. 12.

Of this Solomon's porch we read, 1 Kings vi. 3, that Solomon built the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits long, and ten cubits broad. This was the place where they walked in winter. Though this was destroyed when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians; yet it seemeth that there was one built that was like it, and kept that name. It should seem that it was a place better defended from the weather, than those other parts of the temple where in summer-time they used to walk.

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou  $\parallel$  make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly.

Or, hold us in suspense.

Our Saviour was at this time within three months of his crucifying: he had often before told them that he was the Light of the world, the true Shepherd; he had preached doctrine to them, from whence they might easily have concluded what he was; he had wrought works among them which none could do but by a Divine power; but he had been very wary of telling them in plain terms that he was the Messiah, the Christ; when at any time he had so declared himself to his disciples, or they had owned him as such, he still laid a charge upon them to tell no man of it, Matt. xvi. 20, &c. They therefore come to him, demanding a plain resolution in the case, as some of their minds were in some suspense about it. It was but a captious question; for had he denied it, besides that it had been the denial of a truth which he came to bear a testimony unto, they had had a great advantage to have lessened his reputation amongst those who had believed on him as such. Had he affirmed it, he had brought himself in danger of the Roman governor; for the Jews indeed expected a Messiah, a Christ, but to be a temporal prince, to deliver them from their enemies; and for him to have declared himself such a Christ as they expected, had been fatal to him. He therefore answers with his usual prudence and wariness to this question.

25 Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not: 'the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me.

a ver. 36. ch. 3. 2. & 5. 36.

I have in effect told it you more than once; I have told you that I am sent of the Father, &c., I have said enough for you to conclude it; but you will not understand, you will not receive it, you will not believe what I say. What need you any further witness of it, than those works which I do by Divine power; by virtue of my oneness with my Father, and of that power and authority which he hath committed to me, that by them I might confirm the doctrine which I have taught you?

26 But 'ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you.

1 ch. 8. 47. 1 John 4. 6.

As many as were ordained to eternal life believed, Acts xiii. 48. Here our Saviour giveth this as one reason of the Jews' unbelief, that they were not of his sheep. Were they not Israelites? Yes, but all are not Israel that are descended of Israel. It seems a very hard interpretation that some would put upon these words, Ye believe not, because you are not teachable, and fit to be made my sheep; the words are οὐ γὰρ ἐτεῖς ἐκ τῶν προβάτων τῶν ἐμῶν. Nor can such interpretation be paralleled from any other scripture. That by sheep, here, cannot be meant members of the church, is plain; for they were of the church of Israel, whom the Lord led as a flock, as the psalmist speaks, Psal lxxx. 1. That believers, and such as are truly called and sanctified, are not meant, is as plain; for then the sense would be, You believe not because you believe not; besides, our Saviour had before said, he had other sheep that were not of that fold, (by which he meant the Gentiles,) such for whom he prayed, chap. xvii. 20, being such as should believe on him. By sheep therefore he meaneth, certainly, such as were ordained to life, as Acts xiii. 48. Nor will it therefore follow, that God's not ordaining of them to life, was the near and immediate cause of their not believing; but their own stubborn and perverse wills in not repenting, that they might believe; as our Saviour tells them, Matt. xxi. 32: that is, not turning from their gross and sinful ways, which they might have done by virtue of that common grace of God which was afforded them in the gospel, by the preaching of John the Baptist, and of Christ himself.

u ver. 4, 14. 27 *My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:

This is the same which he said ver. 4: see the notes there.

28 And I give unto them eternal life; and *they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

I do give them, and I will give them, eternal life; as soon as they shall come to hear, and believe my voice, and to follow me, they shall have a sure right and title to it; and when my Father by his providence shall remove them out of the world, and in the great day, they shall be taken up into the actual possession of it. For they shall never perish, but though they may fall, they shall rise again by repentance. They are in my hand, and my hand shall preserve them, none shall ever pluck them out of it; they shall be preserved through faith, by the power of God, to eternal life and salvation.

y ch. 14. 28. z ch. 17. 11, 12. & 18. 9. 29 *My Father, *which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

All that are my sheep became so by my Father's donation and gift, so as my Father is equally with myself concerned in the preservation of them to that happy end, to which he hath ordained and designed them. Those that would pluck them out of my hand, and deprive them of that eternal life which I will give them, must be too strong, not for me alone, but for my Father also; which none is, for who can be too strong for omnipotence?

a ch. 17. 11, 22. 30 *I and my Father are one.

My Father and I are one, not only in counsel and will, (as John xvii. 11, 22, and believers are said to be of one heart, Acts iv. 32,) but in nature, power, and essence; for it is plain that our Saviour here ascribeth the preservation of his sheep, not to the will, but to the power of his Father: None is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. And it is plain by what follows, that the Jews thus understood our Saviour. Some eminent protestant interpreters expound this of a oneness in consent and will, doing the same things, and driving the same design, both agreeing to preserve the sheep unto eternal life; but (with all respect unto them) I think the context implieth more, though this be not excluded.

b ch. 8. 52. 31 Then <sup>b</sup>the Jews took up stones again to stone him.

Tumultuously, as we read they did once before, chap. viii. 59. From whence we may learn with what design they came to Christ, ver. 24, plainly to tell them whether he were the Christ. By the law of God the false prophet was to be stoned; but he was first to be judicially tried and judged. This was but a tumultuous action of an enraged multitude.

32 Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?

The word translated good is of a very large signification; signifying excellent, useful, profitable, beauteous, &c., whatsoever in common speech cometh under the notion of good. I (saith our Saviour) never did harm to any of you, but I have been the instrument of a great deal of good to you. I have given sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, healed many that were sick of grievous diseases, cast out many devils out of those which were infested with or possessed by them. Do any of these deserve any such usage at your hands? What maketh you in such a rage against me?

33 The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, *makest thyself God.

The Jews answered him. These are not the things we are incensed against thee for; we grant that thou hast done many good works amongst us; these we gratefully acknowledge. But this is that which we are not able to bear, that whereas thou art but a mere man, by thy discourses thou makest thyself equal with God, and so art guilty of blasphemy; which is committed as well by arrogating to ourselves what is proper to God, as by imputing to God the natural or moral imperfections of the creature; and the blasphemers deserveth to be stoned, according to the law of God. By this it is manifest, that the Jews understood our Saviour, affirming that he and his Father were one, as asserting himself one in essence with his Father, not in will only.

34 Jesus answered them, <sup>d</sup>Is it not <sup>d</sup>Ps. 82. a. written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?

This was written, Psal. lxxxii. 6. The whole Scripture of the Old Testament, being wrote by holy men, inspired of God, and directive of men's conversation before men, and towards God, is sometimes called the law, Psal. xix. 7. It was spoken concerning magistrates, and the governors of God's people, who, being God's deputies and vicegerents, intrusted to execute the judgments and vengeance of God, are dignified with the name of gods.

35 If he called them gods, *unto whom <sup>e</sup>Rom. 12. 1. the word of God came, and the Scripture cannot be broken;

If God dignified those men (and many of them were also vile and sinful men) with the title of gods, because they had a commission to govern people according to the law of God; and none must contradict what God hath said in his word; there can be no falsehood in the revelation of any part of the Divine will.

36 Say ye of him, *whom the Father hath sanctified, and *sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; <sup>h</sup>because I said, I am <sup>i</sup>the Son of God?

Suppose I were no more than a mere man, yet being sanctified, that is, set apart of God for the special work of man's redemption, and sent of God into the world with commission both to reveal and to do his will, yet dare you say that I blaspheme, because I said, I am the Son of God? In the place (viz. Psal. lxxxii. 6) where God said of magistrates, Ye are gods, he also added, all of you are children of the Most High; you have therefore no reason to rage at me, though I did say I was the Son of God; being one whom the Father hath in his eternal counsels set apart for this great and special work, and actually by his providence sent into the world for the finishing and despatching of it. But we must take heed that we do not understand our Saviour here, as if he in another sense assumed to him the title of the Son of God; it was enough for him at present to assert, that the title well enough belonged to him, if he indeed had been no more than the Son of man, as they said.

37 *If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.

Our Saviour doth often appeal to his works to testify concerning his Divine mission and power; these works he here calleth the works of his Father; by which he doth not only mean works that are pleasing and acceptable to God, as acts of obedience to the will of God performed by men may be called, and are, chap. vi. 28, 29; nor (as I conceive) only those works which he did by commission and authority from his Father, which, chap. xvii. 4, he calleth the work which his Father had given him to do; but those works which none but God could do; such were the multiplication of the loaves, chap. vi., the curing of him who was born blind, chap. ix., &c. If (saith our Saviour) I do not do those works which no mere man ever did, give me no credit; but if I do those works which can be done by no human art or power, you have reason to believe me.

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me, <sup>1 ch. 8. 36. & 14. 10, 11. m ch. 14. 10, 11. & 17. 21.</sup> believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, <sup>2</sup> that the Father is in me, and I in him.

If I do such works as can be done by no less than a Divine power, being beyond the power and ability of all creatures; then, though you will not give credit to any bare affirmations of myself, because I say I am the Son of God, yet believe the things for the testimony that my works give unto it. Proper effects give testimony to the proper cause; he who doth those things which none but God can do, must needs be God, or empowered by God to do them. This is the way for you to know, be persuaded, and believe, that the Father is in me by his mighty, Divine, working power: chap. xiv. 10, The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works; and I work in and together with him. This phrase, The Father is in me, and I in him, teacheth us three things concerning Christ: 1. His oneness in nature and essence with the Father. 2. His personal distinction from his Father: here are two mentioned, the Father, and me: none can properly be said to be in himself. 3. The most perfect and intimate indwelling of one of the Persons in the Holy Trinity in the other.

39 <sup>n ch. 7. 30. 44. & 8. 59.</sup> Therefore they sought again to take him: but he escaped out of their hand,

Therefore they sought again to take him; because he said, that the Father was in him, and he in the Father; by which they well enough understood, that he asserted a union with the Father. They did not again go about to stone him, as they did before; he had sufficiently stopped their mouths as to their imputation of blasphemy; but they seek to apprehend him, with a design (no doubt) to carry him before the sanhedrim, their great court, which had cognizance of those things. But as he had once and again before, so he now again escapeth out of their hands; whether by darkening the air before their eyes, or (as some would have it) making his body invisible, by his Divine power, or what other way, the Scripture tells us not, and it is great rashness to determine.

40 And went away again beyond Jordan into the place <sup>o ch. 1. 28.</sup> where John at first baptized; and there he abode.

Christ's time was not yet come when he should be betrayed and crucified; it was yet three months and more to it; he saw the Jews at Jerusalem were in such a rage and fury, that there was no staying in that place: he goes beyond Jordan to Bethabara, where he found John at first baptizing, John i. 28, before he baptized in Ænon near Salim, chap. iii. 23. See the notes on John i. 28. Possibly he chose that place as being a place where John had been preparing a way for him, by turning men's hearts in some measure for receiving the gospel, and pointing out Christ to his disciples, as the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. And there he abode: how long he abode there we cannot tell; probably till he took his last journey from Galilee to Jerusalem; of which the other evangelists speak, Matt. xx. 17; Mark x. 32; Luke xviii. 31. What he did in Galilee during these three months John reports not, only saith, 41 And many resorted unto him, and <sup>p ch. 3. 30.</sup> said, John did no miracle: <sup>q</sup> but all things that John spake of this man were true.

God so ordered it in the wisdom of his providence, that though Elijah and Elisha under the law wrought miracles, by which they confirmed their Divine mission; yet John, coming immediately before Christ, as his messenger and forerunner, wrought none; that so the glory of Christ in working miracles when he came might be more clear and evident. This made the people, that came to Christ while he was in Galilee, say thus amongst themselves, We paid a great veneration to John the Baptist, yet he never did those things which Christ hath done: and whatsoever John told us of this person hath proved true; he hath done, and doth, greater things than ever John did, and is in the judgment of sense to be preferred before him; should we not now believe in him? John told us he was the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world; and told us much more concerning him, which our eyes see is true.

42 <sup>r ch. 8. 30. 11. 43.</sup> And many believed on him there. Some believed on him as such whom John Baptist had spoken him to be; others possibly believed on him in the sense mentioned chap. ii. 23; not to the saving of their souls, but as one sent of God, a great Prophet, no ordinary man. The rage of men shall not hinder the progress of the gospel.

CHAP. XI

The sickness and death of Lazarus: Jesus raiseth him to life after he had been dead four days: many Jews believe, 1—46. The Pharisees hold a council against Christ: Caiaphas prophesieth: Jesus retireth from places of public resort, 47—54. At the approach of the passover the Jews inquire about him: the rulers give orders to apprehend him, 55—57.

NOW a certain man was sick, named Lazarus, of Bethany, the town of <sup>a Luke 10. 36, 38.</sup> Mary and her sister Martha.

Bethany (as appears by ver. 18) was nigh unto Jerusalem, not wholly at two miles distance from it: but our Saviour was not at this time in Judea, for, ver. 7, he saith to his disciples, Let us go into Judea again. He was at this time in Galilee, or in Perea; and we shall find, ver. 17, that Lazarus had been in his grave four days before our Saviour got thither: so as we must allow at least six or seven days betwixt the time when Christ heard of Lazarus's sickness, and the time when he came to Bethany. This Bethany is here only described to us as the place where Martha and Mary lived, or at least where they were born. Some think that Bethany was only a part of the Mount Olivet; but others, more probably, think that it was some little town or city, standing within that part of the Mount Olivet; for it is here called a town, and, Luke x. 38, 39, the place where these two sisters lived is called a village.

2. <sup>b Matt. 26. 7. Mark 14. 3. ch. 12. 3.</sup> It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

We read of a woman, Luke vii. 37, 38, that came behind our Saviour while he was at dinner, in the house of Simon the Pharisee, brought an alabaster box of ointment, stood at his feet behind him weeping, washing his feet with her tears, and wiping them with her hair; but it appears by the story, she had been before a notorious sinner. We read of another woman, Matt. xxvi. 6, 7; Mark xiv. 3, that poured a box of ointment on our Saviour's head as he was at dinner in the house of Simon the leper: but we, in those two evangelists, read nothing of her washing his feet with her tears, or wiping them with her hair; but in the next chapter of this Gospel, ver. 3, we have a story which (whether it be the same with the other or no, I cannot tell) is that doubtless to which this verse referreth: the names and circumstances much agree. There were other Maries, (for Mary was a very ordinary name among them,) but this was that Mary which is mentioned chap. xii. 3, that anointed the Lord with ointment, &c. It was her brother who was sick.

3 Therefore his sisters sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

Christ (as was said before) seems to have been very familiar at the house of these two sisters, and often to have made them his hostesses; and it should appear by this verse that in those visits he had showed particular kindnesses to this their brother Lazarus, who was now sick; this makes them style their brother, he whom thou lovest. They plead no merits either of their own or his, but only plead with him for his own goodness and love. Nor do they express in particular what they desired for their brother, though it is easily understood by their representation of his state and condition.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said, This <sup>c ch. 9. 3. ver. 44.</sup> sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

God hath not sent this sickness upon Lazarus to determine his being upon the earth; or such a separation of the soul of Lazarus from his body, as there shall be no reunion of it before the general resurrection (which is our ordinary notion of death); God hath not sent this sickness for that purpose, but that he might be glorified by his Son raising him from the dead. God is glorified when his Son is glorified; and Christ is glorified when his Divine power is manifested, so as men acknowledge him to be what indeed he is.

5 Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.

He doubtless loved them with a special, distinguishing love, as persons chosen in him to eternal life before the foundation of the world, given unto him by an eternal donation, called by him with an effectual calling, to own and receive him as their Saviour; but this text seemeth to speak of him as loving this family with a human love, which inclineth man to a complacency in an object beloved: he had a kindness for the whole family; they had showed him kindness in his state of humiliation, and he loved those that so loved him, Prov. viii. 17.

6 When he had heard therefore that d ch. 10. 40. he was sick, <sup>d</sup> he abode two days still in the same place where he was.

Though he loved him and his sisters with a tender love, yet he did not presently go to them, to comfort Mary and Martha in their sorrow; nor yet to cure Lazarus, and prevent his death; but stayed still two days in the place where he was. He loved Mary, and Martha, and Lazarus, but he more loved the honour and glory of his Father, which was to be manifested in his raising of Lazarus from the dead. We must not judge of Christ's love to us by his mere external dispensations of providence; nor judge that he doth not love us because he doth not presently come in to our help, at our times, and in such ways and methods as we would think reasonable.

7 Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let us go into Judæa again.

This lets us know, that Christ was not in Judea when he received the tidings of Lazarus's sickness, but in Peræa, or Galilee; but he presently upon it takes up thoughts of returning again into that province, and indeed he was now preparing for his last journey thither: however, the sickness of Lazarus, and his raising from the dead, was one occasion of his so soon going up; from which his disciples would have discouraged him, as followeth.

8 His disciples say unto him, e ch. 10. 31. Master, the Jews of late sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither again?

See chap. x. 31. There were not three months elapsed since the Jews had so sought to have stoned him, and there was no reason for him to think that their fury was in any whit abated. We read in the other evangelists of other words they used (Peter especially, Matt. xvi. 22,) to dissuade our Saviour from this journey to Jerusalem. They were afraid for their Master, and they were afraid also for themselves.

9 Jesus answered, Are there not twelve ch. 9. 4. hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world.

Look as in the day there are twelve hours, in which the sun shineth, and by giving its light directs men in their courses; so as they know how to guide their feet, and do not stumble, because they have the light of the sun, which God hath ordained, to direct men that walk up and down in the world.

10 But <sup>e</sup> if a man walk in the night, g ch. 12. 35. he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

And there is a night also, wherein if men walk they will be very prone to stumble, because they are in darkness, and have no light to guide their feet. So there is a set time for all the issues of men; a time for their peace and liberty, and a time for their troubles and sufferings. God rules and governs the world. While men are in their callings and places, faithfully discharging their trust, and finishing the work which God hath given them to do, and their time is not come for their glorifying of God by suffering, they shall not stumble, nor be given up to the rage of their eagerest enemies; they are in their callings and places, and God will be light unto them: but when their working time is over, and the time of their night is come, then they will stumble; because then God withdraweth his light from them; they are not then under such a special protection of God, who hath done his work by and with them. This is as much as he had said before, chap. viii. 20, No man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come; the twelve hours of his day were not all spent. This duty digested, is of infinite use to quiet the spirits of God's people in the worst of times; every man hath his twelve hours, his day and set time, to honour God upon the stage of the world: he shall not stumble, he shall not miscarry, while those hours are spent; he shall not die, he shall not be disabled for duty, so long as God hath taught for him to do. But every man hath his night too, when he must not expect to converse in the world without stumbling.

11 These things said he: and after h So Deut. 31. 16; Dan. 12. 2; Matt. 9. 24; Acts 7. 61; 1 Cor. 15. 18, 51. that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus <sup>h</sup> sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.

There is such an analogy betwixt death and sleep, that there is nothing more ordinary than to express death by sleep in Scripture, Deut. xxxi. 16; 2 Sam. vii. 12; 1 Kings i. 21; 2 Kings xx. 21; Job vii. 21; xiv. 12; Dan. xii. 2, and in a multitude of other texts, both in the Old Testament and in the New; so as it was evident our Saviour meant he was dead, which he knew as he was God, though as yet he had received no relation of it from the friends of the deceased. But I go (saith our Saviour) to raise him up again from the dead, which he calls awaking him; pursuing the former metaphor, where he had compared death to a sleep.

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

Sleeping moderately is a good sign, we know, in most diseases; this makes the disciples say, that if Lazarus slept he should do well.

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

But that the disciples should not understand our Saviour not speaking of ordinary sleep, but of death, is wonderful, considering that there is nothing more ordinary in holy writ than to read of death expressed under this notion; but possibly by our Saviour's making such haste to him, they conceived that he was not dead, but only in an ordinary sleep, upon the abatement of his disease.

14 Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

You will mistake me; my meaning was, not that Lazarus was fallen to rest upon the abatement of his distemper, but his soul is parted from his body.

15 And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe; nevertheless let us go unto him.

Had I been upon the place, my kindness to his sisters, and pity, would have prevailed far with me to have prevented his death; but it is better, for your sakes at least, and I am glad I was not there. For by this means I shall have an advantage, by putting forth my Divine power in raising him from the dead, to confirm your faith in me as the Son of God, and the true Messias; therefore, though he be dead, let us go unto him.

16 Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellowdisciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him.

Thomas and Didymus were names of the same signification, only Thomas was the Hebrew, and Didymus the Greek name. This is that Thomas who to the last showed a greater difficulty in believing than many others of the disciples did, chap. xx. 25. His words here signified great rashness and unbelief: Let us also go, that we may die with him; with Christ (say some). Seeing that our Lord will not be persuaded from going into Judea, where his life will be in apparent danger, for they will put him to death, let us also go and die with him. But it is more probable that Thomas meant with Lazarus, who, as our Saviour told them but now, was dead; and in that sense it was not only an expression of great passion, but great unbelief also. We ought not to be so affected with the death of our friends, as to wish or desire ourselves out of the world, where God hath set us in stations which we ought to keep, until God be pleased to remove us. Besides, Thomas ought to have believed our Saviour, who had told them, that though Lazarus slept the sleep of death, yet he went to awake him; which could have no other sense, than to raise him out of that sleep of death, of which he had spoken. Ah! to what errors do our passions betray us!

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

Christ came to Bethany where Lazarus died; he found he had lain in the grave four days; so as probably Christ came not to Bethany till four days or more after the death of Lazarus, or near upon. But possibly it is better judged by others, that Christ was not yet come into Bethany, but only to the place where he met Martha; because it is said after this, ver. 30, that Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him; which it is probable was at Lazarus's sepulchre, out of the town, but near it, as all the Jewish burying-places were; where he heard from the relation of Martha how long Lazarus had been buried. Our Saviour could have come sooner had he pleased, for though Bethabara was on the other side of Jordan, (so out of the confines of Judea,) yet, if we may give any credit to those who have laboured in the study of places, it was not above four miles off Jerusalem, so as it could not be six miles from Bethany, which our Saviour could have travelled in a less time than four or five days. Some think Lazarus died the same day news came to Christ of his sickness; after which we read, ver. 6, that he stirred not of two days; after which it was, ver. 7, that he took up thoughts of going into Judea. After this, possibly, he lingered one or two days; ver. 14, he tells them Lazarus was dead. Our Saviour was willing to protract the time, that the miracle might be more conspicuous and remarkable.

|| That is, about two miles.

18 Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, || about fifteen furlongs off:

That, as we count, wants of two miles half a quarter.

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

Not to pray with them for the soul of their brother departed. That departed souls are in a capacity to be advantaged by the prayers of their friends, or any such thing, are corruptions of latter times; but they had a civil usage of mourning for their friends, the time for which was anciently thirty days. They mourned for Jacob forty days, Gen. l. 3; for Aaron thirty days, Numb. xx. 29; so for Moses, Deut. xxxiv. 8. It is probable the days were fewer for persons of an inferior quality, but they had some days for all; during which days their neighbours and friends came to visit them, and relieve them in their sorrow, with such arguments as they had.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

It should seem by the story, Luke x. 41, that Martha had the care of the house-keeping upon her, (Mary was more retired,) so that the news of Christ's coming might come to her first. She in great joy ran out to meet him; how far she went we are not told, but it appeareth from ver. 30 that she went out of the town.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

Mary saith the same, ver. 32. They were both in an error, for Lazarus's death was appointed and determined by an eternal counsel; and he was both sick and died for a wise end, that God might be glorified, and his Son glorified in raising him from the dead; as we were before told, ver. 4. But it lets us see the vanity of our natures, who in the loss of our friends are ready to think, if such or such means had been used, we had not lost our friends; never considering our days are appointed, and we cannot pass the number of them. If any rational, probable means for continuing their lives be omitted, that also is not without the counsel of God, who having determined the issue, conceal-eth diseases, or the true and proper means for their cure, from physicians, or such as are about the sick persons. Nor did Martha and Mary fail in this only, but in that they made the Lord's presence necessary to the preserving of the life of their brother, who, had he pleased, could, though absent, have kept him from death.

22 But I know, that even now, <sup>1 ch. 9. 31.</sup> whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

She showed some unbelief in her former words, but here again she showeth her faith, but not without some weakness mixed with her faith; for by these words she seemeth not to be satisfied, that the fulness of the Godhead dwelt in Christ, and that he was equal with the Father, and able by his own power to raise the dead; her faith extendeth no further than a belief, that he was in so much favour with God, that if he would please to intercede with God, he would restore her brother to life: this she meaneth; though the raising of persons from the dead was a thing so rare and unusual, that she dareth not to mention that particular thing, though uppermost in her thoughts.

23 Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

Christ takes no notice of Martha's failings before mentioned, (he can have compassion upon his people's infirmities,) but applieth himself to the relief of her under her affliction. He doth not tell her that her brother should be raised to life presently, nor that he would do it; but only saith he shall rise again: to let us know, that a belief of the general resurrection is enough, and ought to be improved by us, to curb our immoderate mourning and passions for those of our friends who are dead in the Lord.

24 Martha saith unto him, <sup>h Luke 14. 14. ch. 6. 29.</sup> I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

From hence we learn, that the general resurrection of the dead is no novel doctrine. Job believed it, Job xix. 26, 27. Daniel published it, chap. xii. 2. The Pharisees owned it, though the Sadducees denied it; and possibly the Pharisees had but a confused notion of it. Martha here makes it an article of her faith.

25 Jesus said unto her, I am <sup>1 ch. 5. 21. & 6. 39. 40. 44</sup> the resurrection, and the life: <sup>2 ch. 1. 4. & 6. 35. 8. 4. & 6. Col. 3. 4. 1 John 1. 1, 2. & 5. 11.</sup> he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

<sup>n ch. 3. 36. 1 John 5. 10. &c.</sup> Martha by her speech seemed not to have a true notion of Christ; she believed that there should be a general resurrection from the dead in the last day, by the mighty power of God, but she did not truly understand what influence Christ had upon this resurrection, that the raising of the dead should be the peculiar work of Christ, not without the Father, but as he was ordained by the Father to be the Judge of the quick and of the dead. Christ doth therefore here further instruct her, and tell her, he was the resurrection; where (as is usual in Scripture) the effect is put for the cause: I am the resurrection, is no more than, I am, and shall be, the principal cause of the resurrection: the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, chap. v. 28. He also adds, and the life; that is, the cause of life; both that life which the dead shall in the resurrection recover, and also that eternal life which shall follow. And whosoever looketh upon me in that notion, and committeth himself unto me, though he doth die, yet he shall rise again, and live eternally; and this power being in me, I am not tied to the last day, but have a power when I please to raise the dead. Our Saviour indeed hath more in his answer than respected the present case; but there was nothing more usual with him, than in his discourses to raise up the hearts of his people to higher things, as he doth in this place raise Martha beyond the thoughts of a resurrection of her brother's body to a natural life, to the thoughts of a spiritual and eternal life.

26 And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?

He had before proved himself to be the resurrection, now he proveth himself to be the life. He saith, he that liveth, that liveth a natural life, if he be one who receiveth and embraceth me as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world, and committeth himself and all the concerns of his soul to me, shall never die. Though his body shall die because of sin, yet his spirit shall live because of righteousness; and God shall in the great day quicken again his mortal body, through the Holy Spirit which dwelleth in him, and is united to him, Rom. viii. 10, 11. He asketh Martha if she believed this. We shall observe, that our Saviour, not here only, but Matt. ix. 22, 28, before he wrought his miraculous operations, required people's faith as a prerequisite. And, Matt. xiii. 58, he could not do many mighty works in his own country, because of their unbelief. And, Matt. xvii. 20, he tells his disciples, that the reason why they could not cure the man possessed with the devil, was because of their unbelief: so great an honour hath God given to the exercise of faith.

27 She saith unto him, Yea, Lord: <sup>o Mat. 16. 16. ch. 4. 42. & 6. 14, 69.</sup> I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.

This is the nearest to the confession of Peter, Matt. xvi. 16, which our Saviour calleth, the rock upon which he would build his church, of any that we have in Scripture; yea, and more full than that, for those words, which should come into the world, are not in Peter's confession. The sum of this is, Martha doth here profess a full assent to our Saviour as the Messias, the Son of God; he who was prefigured, prophesied of, promised, as he who should come into the world.

28 And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

Mary was left at home, while Martha went out of the town to meet Christ. It seemeth by this verse, Christ had asked for her, though that be not mentioned before. Martha goeth secretly to her, and tells her that the Master was come. (It was a name they usually called their most famous teachers by.)

29 As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

Mary's love and readiness to attend upon Christ, appeareth by a former story concerning her and her sister Martha, recorded Luke x. 38—40. But the present sorrow she was in for her dead brother, together with the hopes she conceived of having him restored to life by Christ's coming, added wings to her motion; therefore the evangelist saith, she arose quickly, and came to him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

<sup>p ver. 19.</sup> 31 The Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

<sup>q ver. 21.</sup> 32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

Coming, she falls down at his feet, which was a posture (as we have heard before) very usual in those countries, by which they testified both their civil respects to princes and great persons, and also which they used in the worship of God, Matt. ii. 11. Whether Mary did it upon the one account or the other, dependeth upon what we cannot know; viz. whether she at this time was fully persuaded of his Divine nature; of which the best of the disciples, till Christ's resurrection, had but a faint and uncertain persuasion. The words which she useth to him are the same which Martha used, ver. 21: see the notes there.

33 When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and † was troubled,

<sup>† Gr. he troubled himself.</sup>

The apostle speaks of Christ, Heb. iv. 15, as an High priest that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and one that can have compassion, Heb. v. 2. Martha's and Mary's passion for their dead brother was their infirmity; Christ is touched with the feeling of it: he, to show himself truly man, groaned in himself; it being natural to us to be affected with the afflictions of others, and to weep with those who weep. But here ariseth a question, whether Christ was troubled from a natural necessity, as we sometimes cannot forbear weeping to see others weep bitterly, or out of choice? Some of the ancients think it was out of choice. Mr. Calvin and others think that it was out of a natural necessity; not that he could not govern his passions (as we sometimes cannot) by reason, but that he could not, as man, forbear his passion. I shall translate what Mr. Calvin speaks, most judiciously, in the case, determining neither way, but leaving it to the reader's judgment. "But how," saith he, "do gnawing and trouble of spirit agree to that Person who was the Son of God? Because to some it looketh very absurd to say, that Christ, as one of us, is subject to human passions; they think Christ no otherwise at any time either grieved or rejoiced, than as he, so often as he thought fit, voluntarily assumed to himself those passions by a secret dispensation. Augustine thought that Christ in this sense is said to have groaned, and to have been troubled; whereas other men's passions transport them, and exercise a tyranny over them, to the disturbance of their minds: he therefore thinks the meaning is, that Christ, being otherwise sedate, and free from passions, sometimes voluntarily took these passions. But in my judgment, it is a much plainer and simpler sense of this scripture, if we say, that the Son of God, taking upon him our nature, did also freely with it put on our affections (which are our natural infirmities); so as he in nothing differed from us, but in this, that he had no sin. Nothing by this is derogated from the glory of Christ; for he voluntarily submitted to take our nature upon him, by which he became like to us in our human affections. And we must not think, that after he had voluntarily submitted to take our perfect nature upon him, that he was free from the passions and affections of it: in this he proved himself to be our Brother, that we might know that he is a Mediator for us, who can easily pardon our infirmities, and is ready to help us as to those infirmities, which he hath experienced in his own person. If any one object, That seeing our passions are sinful, it doth not agree to the nature of him who was the Son of God to share with us in them; I answer, There is a great deal of difference (as to these passions) betwixt us and Christ; for our affections are therefore faulty, because they are intemperate, and inordinate, and keep no bounds; but in Christ, though they be, yet they are composed, and moderate, and in obedience to God. The passions of men are faulty upon two accounts: 1. As they are turbulent, and not governed by the rule of moderation. 2. As they often rise without any due ground or foundation, or are not directed to a right end. They are in us a disease, because we neither grieve nor rejoice in measure, and to that degree alone which God permits and allows; many rather give the reins to their passions. And such is the vanity of our minds, that we are grieved and troubled for little or no causes, being too much addicted and cleaving to the world. There was no such thing in Christ, no passion in him ever exceeded its just bounds, or was exercised but upon a just and reasonable cause. To make this yet clearer, we must distinguish betwixt man in his creation, and the degenerate nature of man, as it is corrupted through sin. When God at first created man, he created him with natural affections, but such as were under the command of reason: that our passions are now inordinate, and rebellious, is accidental to our nature. Christ indeed took our affections upon him, but without that disorder which fell into them by the fall, which causeth us that we cannot obey them and God. He was greatly troubled, but not so as by his trouble to become disobedient to his Father. In short, if we compare our affections with his, there will appear as great a difference, as betwixt pure water and that which is dirty and filthy. And the single example of Christ is enough to make us reject the stoical apathy (or want of passion); for from whom, if not from him, should we fetch the highest rule of perfection? Let us therefore rather study to correct and tame that disorder in which our passions are entangled, and follow Christ as our guide, that we may bring them into order. Thus Paul, 1 Thess. iv. 13, doth not require of us a stony stupidity, but commands us to govern our grief, that we may not mourn as men without hope. For Christ therefore took our affections upon him, that we by his grace may be enabled to subdue whatsoever is vicious in them."

34 And said, Where have ye laid him?

They said unto him, Lord, come and see.

r Luke 19.

41.

35 Jesus wept.

Weeping is not of itself a sinful, but a natural passion, which (as was said before) doth very well agree with Christ, having voluntarily taken upon him our nature, and natural infirmities.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

Love showeth itself, as in a complacency in the object beloved, while we enjoy it; so in a grief for it when we are deprived of it: the Jews therefore rightly concluded Christ's kindness to Lazarus, from his human affection expressed at his death.

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, * which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

Some only concluded Christ's love to the deceased from his affection showed at his grave; but others made a worse conclusion, in derogation to Christ's reputation, from the miracle he had wrought, chap. ix., in restoring him that was born blind; for their speech soundeth in this sense, If he had indeed cured one that was born blind, certainly he could as well have kept this man, to whom (dead) he expresseth so great affection, clear from death. A learned interpreter therefore calleth this, a devilish sarcasm; they go about to weaken the reputation of our Saviour, from the miracle which he had wrought, apparently showing his Divine power, because he did not keep his friend from dying. It is much like the scoff with which they afterward scoffed him, while he hung upon the cross, Matt. xxvii. 42, He saved others; himself he cannot save. Or the words may have been spoken, if not with an irony, yet with admiration, that having cured the blind man, a stranger to him, he did not heal his sick friend; or as if they were uncertain whether his power of working miracles were not limited to some times, that he could not perform all things when he pleased. But how weak must this their argument be, which could stand upon no other foundation than this, That if Christ were the Son of God, he would at all times, and in all cases, have put forth his Divine power. As if God acted necessarily, not freely, governing his actions by his own wisdom, as he saw most conducing to the wise ends of his glory.

38 Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.

Groaning in himself, as before, ver. 33, so showing himself yet further to be truly man, and not without human affections. He cometh to the place where Lazarus's dead body was laid, which, the evangelist telleth us, was a cave, or a hollow place in the earth, or some rock. And they were wont to roll some great stones to the mouth of those graves, as we see in the burial of our Saviour, Matt. xxvii. 66.

39 Jesus said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

Our Lord commandeth the removal of the stone, which was at the mouth of the sepulchre, that the miracle might be evident; for Lazarus to have come forth, the door of the cave being shut, and a great stone making it fast, would have looked more like an apparition than a resurrection. It is very probable that Martha thought that our Saviour commanded the removal of the stone, not in order to a commanding him to life again, but out of a curiosity to view his dead body; and therefore she objecteth the putrefaction of his body, from which the soul was now departed four days, as that which our Saviour would not be able to endure the savour of.

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God? t ver. 4, 22.

Christ now beginneth to open to Martha and Mary, and the rest, his resolution to raise Lazarus from the dead by and by. Christ saith that to us in his word, which he saith by a just consequence, though he doth not speak it in so many words: we do not read in this history, that Christ had spoken this in so many words and syllables, but he had spoken it in effect; he had told her, ver. 25, that he was the resurrection and the life, that he had power to raise dead bodies from a natural death to life; and that for those who believed in him, though they were dead, they should live. This could not be without a great manifestation of the glory of God: the power of God is his glory. God hath spoken once, (saith the psalmist,) yea, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God, Psal. lxii. 11. Thou shouldest see God by me manifesting the glory of his Almighty power; God glorifying himself, and glorifying his Son. Believing brings us in experiences of God; whereas unbelief, as it were, limiteth God, and tieth up his hands.

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

The servants, or friends, about the grave, removeth the stone from the mouth of the cave, within which the dead corpse of Lazarus lay. Christ, before his thanksgiving to his Father, is said to have lifted up his eyes; a posture often used in men's addresses to God, Psal. cxxi. 1, and cxxiii. 1, as an indication of their belief that heaven is God's throne: though he filleth heaven and earth, yet heaven is his court, where he most gloriously showeth himself, the earth but his footstool. We read here of nothing that Christ had said before, yet he giveth thanks here to his Father that he had heard him. The meaning is, Thou hast willed, or pleased to grant, those things which I desired. It is very hard to determine, whether Christ had used some audible words before this, upon this occasion, in prayer to his Father, which the evangelist could not or did not set down; or whether he only groaned in his spirit, as was said before, by those groans not only expressing his sorrow for Lazarus's death, or rather sympathy with the afflictions of Mary and Martha, but also his desires to his Father, that he might be again restored to life; and his second groaning, ver. 38, was of that nature: which groanings in the saints God understandeth, knowing the mind of the Spirit, making intercession for the saints according to the will of God (as the apostle teacheth us, Rom. viii. 27); much more did the Father, who was one in nature, essence, and will with the Son, understand them in him. Nothing in these cases can be determined, much less can any conclude from hence, that there is no need of our using any words in our prayers; for although there be no simple, absolute necessity that we should use them in order to God's knowledge of what we need, and would have; for he that searcheth the heart, knows what we need, and what we desire, Matt. vi. 8; yet there is a necessity for our words, in order to our obeying God's command, Hos. xiv. 2; Luke xi. 2. There is a great deal of difference betwixt God's hearing of Christ, and hearing us: Christ and his Father have one essence, one nature, and will.

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but * because of the people which u ch. 12, 30. stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me.

I know that thou always willest those things which I will; and I will nothing but what thou willest, and hast sent me to do in the world; so as in these things it is impossible but that thou shouldest always be ready to grant what I ask of thee; nay, there is no need of my asking. I only give thee thanks for the people's sake, who here stand by; who believe thee to be the true God, and to have an Almighty power; but will not as yet believe that I am thy Son, by thee sent into the world, and that I do the works which I do in thee and from thee. We read of many miracles wrought by Christ without any prayer first put up to his Father, Matt. viii. 3; ix. 6; Mark v. 41; ix. 25; Luke vii. 14, using only an authoritative word; nor need he have used any here, but only for the further conviction of the people that he was sent of God, that God whom they owned as their God: he prayeth and giveth thanks to God before them all.

43 And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

When he had groaned in his spirit, and audibly given thanks to his Father for hearing of him, and testified that he did this, not because he ever had any doubt of his Father's willing what he willed, but that the people might take notice of his favour and power with God, and that he was sent of him; he cried with a loud voice; not whispering, nor, like wizards, peeping and muttering, Isa. viii. 19, but speaking aloud, so as all might hear, and understand, that what was done was done by his powerful word. He calls him by his name, he bids him come forth; they were not the words that raised Lazarus, but the mighty, quickening power of Christ, which attended these words.

44 And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

The fashion of their dressing up the dead differeth, according to the fashion of several countries; among the Jews, we understand by this text, they tied a napkin about their head, and some clothes about their hands and feet. They wound the whole body in linen clothes with spices, chap. xix. 40; this was (as is there said) their manner to bury. So, Acts v. 6, the young men are said to have wound Ananias, and carried him out, and buried him. And this is that which certainly is meant here by these words, bound hand and foot: and here is a second miracle, that one so wrapped and bound up should be able to move and come forth. Christ bids, Loose him, and let him go, to evidence him truly recovered to life again, and that the miracle was perfectly wrought. About this miracle there are two curious questions started: 1. Whether the raising of Lazarus to life was done by the mere Divine power of Christ, or by the person of Christ; so as the human nature, being personally united to the Divine nature, had also a share in it; the Divine nature communicating its property of quickening the dead to the human nature? That it was the person of Christ that raised Lazarus, and he who did it was truly man and truly God, is out of doubt. But that there was any such communication of the properties of the Divine nature to the human nature, that it also had a share in this effect, is justly denied, and doubted by many great divines: but it is a question tending to no great profit for us to know. 2. Where Lazarus's soul was these four days wherein it was separated from the body? The Scripture hath not told us this, and it speaks too great curiosity to inquire too strictly. Though we are taught from the parable of Dives and Lazarus, that the souls of departed saints do ordinarily and immediately pass into heaven, or Abraham's bosom; yet what should hinder, but that in these cases, where it appears to have been the Divine will that the souls of persons departed should again be returned into their bodies in a short time, they might by a Divine power be kept under the custody of angels, until the time of such restoration of them.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

That is, which came to visit Martha and Mary in their mourning; and, coming to Mary, did go along with her to the sepulchre to meet Christ, and there meeting him, saw all the passages relating to this miracle, truly believed on him as the true Messiah, chap. xii. 11, 18. Or it may be, it is to be understood more largely of such a faith as is but preparatory to true and saving faith; for there was a double use of miracles. 1. To prepare men for faith, disposing them to give an ear to him, to whom God hath given so great a power; so as after the sight of them they were more fitted to hear, and inclinable to believe. 2. To confirm faith in those that believed, so as they believed the more firmly, seeing the doctrine they heard confirmed by such miraculous operations.

46 But some of them went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

These Jews had the same means for believing the others had; they had heard the same words from Christ, they had seen the same miracle wrought by Christ. Whence is it that any of the other Jews believed? These, instead of believing, run to the Pharisees to accuse him. Can any account be given of this, unless from the freedom of Divine grace, showing mercy where God will show mercy? Though possibly the former wickedness of these Jews was the cause of God's not giving that grace to them which he gave to others.

47 ¶ Then gathered the Chief Priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we? for this man doeth many miracles.

The chief priests and Pharisees were a great part of that great council amongst the Jews, which went under the name of the sanhedrim; and this (probably) was the council they gathered; for, ver. 49, we read, that Caiaphas, the high priest, the standing president of that court, was amongst them. The miracles wrought by Christ were the things that disturbed them, and they reflect upon themselves for conniving so long at him: what they should have improved (viz. the miracles which he wrought) to have begot or increased faith in them, they mention and misimprove to their destruction.

48 If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

They are afraid, that if they should any longer suffer Christ to go on working miracles, he would have a great many followers, who upon the credit of his miracles would own him as the Messiah, and the effect and consequence of this would be, they should by the Romans (to whom they were already in subjection) be utterly deprived of that little liberty they indulged them. They say, the Romans would come (that is, with an army) and destroy their temple, which they call their place, their most famous place, where they met to worship God, and in which, as a token of God's presence amongst them, they so much gloried; yea, and their nation; that is, miserably destroy their nation, and bring it to utter ruin. Whether they really thought so or no, or only spake this as an argument to hasten the death of Christ, is not much material for us to know. There was this colour for it, the Jews were a people very prone upon all occasions to rebel, and rise up in the defence of their liberties, whenever they could get any head, to give them any countenance and conduct. They also lived in a general expectation of the Messiah, when the sceptre should be departed from Judah, (as it now was,) and when Daniel's seventy weeks, mentioned chap. ix. 24, should be determined, which were now fulfilled; so as there was about this time a general expectation of the Messiah; of whom also it is apparent they had a false notion, and generally expected under the notion of the Messiah, not the Son of God taking human nature, and to die for their redemption, and then rise again from the dead, and ascend into heaven; but a temporal prince, who, conquering all their enemies, should deliver them from all captivities and servitudes, and restore them to their ancient liberties. This their expectation was known well enough to the Roman governors, (as appeareth by Herod's question to the wise men in Matt. ii. 4,) and they were very jealous of the Jews on this account, which caused Herod's bloody act in killing the children in and about Bethlehem. So as the rulers of the Jews (according to the notion they had of the Messiah) might reasonably think, that if Jesus were taken to be the Messiah, and he went on confirming the opinion of himself by these mi-

y ch. 2. 23.
 & 10. 42. &
 12. 11, 18.

a Pa. 2. 2.
 Matt. 28. 3.
 Mark 14. 1.
 Luke 22. 2.
 a ch. 12. 19.
 Acts 4. 16.

racles, so as people generally ran after him, the Romans would reasonably suppose they had a design to rebel, and therefore would come upon them, destroy their temple, and utterly ruin their nation. But how will they avoid this? That which they agreed upon we shall meet with ver. 53, they took counsel to put him to death. How they were led on to that fatal counsel we shall hear.

<sup>h</sup> Luke 3. 2. <sup>i</sup> John 2. 2. <sup>c</sup> ch. 18. 14. <sup>a</sup> cts. 4. 6. 49 And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the High Priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

The high priest by the Divine law was to be but one, and he the eldest son of Aaron's house; nor was he to be for a year, but for his life, as appeareth by a multitude of texts in the books of Moses: but all things were now out of order in the Jewish church; they were under the power of the Romans; all places, especially that of the high priest, were bought and sold amongst them: some say they had two high priests, others say but one, only he had an assistant, called by that name, that had a partnership in the honour. After Herod's time there was no regard to the family of Aaron, or the Asmoneans, but the Romans made what high priest they pleased; so as Josephus tells us, that the Jews, who had but thirteen high priests from Aaron's to Solomon's time, which was six hundred and twelve years; nor more than eighteen in four hundred and sixty years after, to the captivity of Babylon; nor more than fifteen from thence to the time of Antiochus, which was four hundred and fourteen years; had twenty-eight betwixt the time that Herod began to reign and Jerusalem was destroyed; of which this Caiaphas was one, and certainly the chief, (if there were two at this time,) and consequently the president of their great court, whom all attended to, and his words went a great way with the rest. He chargeth the rest of the council with folly, as not considering what was fit to be done.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 18. 14. 50 Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

Never was any thing spoken more diabolically: he regards not what was their duty, nor what was lawful for them to do; whether they might upon any pretence shed innocent blood, much more the blood of one whose life was spent in nothing but a going up and down in doing good; only, like a wretched politician, who was concerned for nothing but the people's safety, he saith not, it is lawful, but, it is expedient for us that one man, be he never so good, never so innocent and just, should die for the people, that is, to save the whole nation from destruction.

51 And this spake he not of himself: but being High Priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

So far as this was a prophecy, he spake not of himself: take the words of Caiaphas in the sense that he spake them, they were such as might well enough come out of such a wretched mouth, speaking out of the abundance of a vile and wretched heart; Melius periret unus quam unitas, That it was better that one man should die, let him be never so good, just, and innocent, than that for his sake mischief should come upon a nation. This was now suitable enough to the religion of such a high priest. But that in this (the words being capable of a double sense) Caiaphas should deliver a great truth, That this year one should die for the people; that is, The Messiah should be cut off, but not for himself; as we read, Dan. ix. 26; this was no more from himself, than the words which Balaam's ass spake were from itself. The Spirit of prophecy sometimes fell upon wicked men; God revealed to Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar (both of whom were pagans) the things which he intended to do. There was a time also when Saul (though a man rejected of God) did also prophesy; and the worst of the princes of Judah had a use of the Urim and Thummim. So also here, Caiaphas, though a vile and wicked man, was here influenced by God to prophesy, and speak an oracle. Nor are those words, being high priest that year, superfluously put in; for it being consistent with the holiness of God, sometimes to make use of the tongues of the worst of men to declare his will, it seems agreeable to the wisdom of God in doing it, to make use of principal men, they being persons whose words are most likely to be regarded, and so make impression upon people. The papists would from hence infer the infallibility of the pope, because he is the high priest: but they ought to prove, 1. That the office of the pope hath any foundation in the word of God. 2. That this was a gift given to particular priests, and at particular times; for the Jewish high priests were fallible enough ordinarily; witness Aaron's making the golden calf, and Urijah the altar after the pattern of Damascus, 2 Kings xvi. 10, 11. The words, being high priest, are not given as a reason why Caiaphas prophesied, though they are a good reason why God was pleased to choose his tongue, and overrule it beyond his own thoughts and intentions, to serve his design in this revelation. He did not prophesy intentionally, as designing such a thing, only materially: the matter of his words were indeed a Divine revelation, though his intention and scope was fit for none but a base, carnal politician. God made him a prophet in what he said, though he meant not so.

52 And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

Not for that nation only; not for the Jews only. The words used in Caiaphas's speech were λαός and ἔθνος, words not significant of the Jews only, but of other people also: for Christ was to gather into one body all the elect of God, (who are here called the children of God, because they were to be so after their being begotten by the immortal seed of the word, and born again of water and the Spirit,) those that at present were scattered abroad over the face of the whole earth: Christ was to gather together in one all things in heaven and earth, Eph. i. 10. The evangelist extendeth the sense of Caiaphas's prophecy to Gentiles as well as Jews, according to the extent of the death of Christ, declared 1 John ii. 2.

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death.

They had taken such counsel before; but now they were more intent than before, having found a juster pretence, viz. to prevent a sedition and rebellion; and learned of their high priest, that it was more convenient that one should die, than that a whole nation should be destroyed. The high priest had satisfied their consciences; now they make all the haste they can to put their malicious designs in execution.

54 Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; for he being the true paschal Lamb, was to be slain at that feast, and put an end to that type, and would therefore reserve himself for that time, which was now at hand. A city called Ephraim: what this Ephren or Ephraim was, interpreters vainly busy themselves in inquiring; it was some obscure city, and near the wilderness; some think it was in the lot of Benjamin, others think it was in the lot of Ephraim, and obtained its name from the tribe in whose lot it was. The Scripture no where mentioneth it; and it cannot be expected, but that in so many changes of government as had befallen the Jews, the names of places should be so altered, that we should be at loss for many of them: wherever it was, it is said that Christ and his disciples continued there in some privacy.

55 ¶ And the Jews' Passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the Passover, to purify themselves.

Christ's last passover, which was the fourth after he had entered upon his public ministry, was nigh. He doth not say all, but many went up to purify themselves. There was no general legal purification required before men did eat the passover; but there were several legal uncleannesses, and purifications necessary to cleanse men from them; now those who had any special purification to pass, went before others, that they might have time to do what the law required of them.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 11. 7.

56 <sup>i</sup> Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?

I find good interpreters expounding this verse of the friends of Christ, who having used to meet Christ at these feasts, and see some miracles wrought by him, did out of a good design seek for him, and inquire of each other whether they knew if he intended to be at the feast: yet it may also be understood of his enemies, though it seemeth something too early, being six or seven days before.

57 Now both the Chief Priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should shew it, that they might take him.

For their great court had issued out orders for the discovery and apprehending of our Saviour, if they could any way learn where he was. This was in pursuance of that wicked counsel of which we read before, ver. 53: there they decreed; now they cannot rest until they bring their bloody devices to pass, for which we shall soon find God giving them an opportunity.

CHAP. XII

Mary anointeth the feet of Jesus: Judas murmureth at the cost, 1—8. The people flock to see Lazarus: the chief priests consult to kill him, 9—11. Jesus rideth into Jerusalem in triumph, 12—19. Certain Greeks desired to see him, 20—22. He showeth the benefit of his death to believers; prayeth to his Father; is answered by a voice from heaven; signifieth the manner of his death; and exhorteth to make good use of the present light, 23—36. The generality of the Jews believe not, 37—41; yet many chief rulers believe, but dare not confess him, 42, 43. He urgeth faith in his Divine mission, 44—50.

THEN Jesus six days before the Passover came to Bethany, <sup>a</sup> where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 11. 1, 43.

From the country near to the wilderness, where Jesus continued with his disciples, chap. xi. 54, he came to Bethany, within less than two miles of Jerusalem, upon the sabbath day, or possibly the night before, six days before the passover: it was the place where (as we read in the former chapter) Lazarus died, and was by Christ raised from the dead.

<sup>b</sup> Matt. 26. 6. Mark 14. 3.

2 <sup>b</sup> There they made him a supper; and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

That this supper was made in Bethany is no question; but at whose house there it is questioned. Some think that it was at the house of Simon the leper. We read indeed of a supper made for our Saviour at his house, both Matt. xxvi. 6, 7. and Mark xiv. 3, and that Simon is said to have been of Bethany: only the supper here mentioned is said to have been six days before the passover, and that mentioned by Matthew and Mark seems to have been but two days before, Matt. xxvi. 2; Mark xiv. 1. That which is probably said to solve that difficulty is, the circumstances of the supper, and history about it, seem the very same, both in Matthew, Mark, and John; but it seems in Matthew and Mark to be a little put out of order; they do not say that this supper was two days before the passover, (that indeed had been a contradiction to what John doth here relate,) but both Matthew and Mark first tell us, that Christ told his disciples that the passover was to be within two days, and of the counsel taken by the chief priests and elders against Christ, and then relateth the story of this supper: John first gives us an account of this supper, which was six days before the passover; so John seems to have related it in its proper time and order.

3 Then took <sup>c</sup> Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

<sup>c</sup> Luke 10. 26, 28. ch. 11. 2.

4 Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him, 5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and <sup>d</sup> had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

<sup>d</sup> ch. 13. 29.

7 Then said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

8 For <sup>e</sup> the poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always.

<sup>e</sup> Mat. 26. 11. Mark 14. 7.

Both Matthew and Mark relate this story with some different circumstances: see the notes upon those two places, where all the differing circumstances are considered and explained, and the parts of this history are more largely explained.

9 Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, <sup>f</sup> whom he had raised from the dead.

<sup>f</sup> ch. 11. 43, 44.

Bethany was so near to Jerusalem, that many of the Jews came thither, as well to see Lazarus, raised from the dead, as to see Christ: nor was this without the special providence of God, that the name of Christ might be made more famous just before his suffering.

10 ¶ <sup>g</sup> But the Chief Priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

<sup>g</sup> Luke 16. 31.

Never was there a more unreasonable madness and rage, to justify the apostle's calling of the enemies of the gospel unreasonable men, 2 Thess. iii. 2. Suppose that Christ had broken the sabbath, or had spoken blasphemy, yet what had Lazarus done?

11 <sup>h</sup> Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 11. 45. ver. 18.

Being raised from death to life, he possibly spake of it to the honour and glory of God; for this they consult to put him to death also; and their only reason was, because that many of the Jews believed on Jesus for his sake.

12 ¶ <sup>i</sup> On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem,

<sup>i</sup> Matt. 21. 6. Mark 11. 6. Luke 19. 25, 26, &c.

13 Took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, <sup>k</sup> Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

<sup>k</sup> Ps. 118. 25, 26.

14 <sup>l</sup> And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written,

<sup>l</sup> Matt. 21. 7.

15 <sup>m</sup> Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

<sup>m</sup> Zech. 9. 9.

This whole history is much more largely reported by the other evangelists, Matt. xxi. 1—16; Mark xi. 1—10; Luke xix. 29—40: see the notes on all those places.

16 These things <sup>n</sup> understood not his disciples at the first: <sup>o</sup> but when Jesus was glorified, <sup>p</sup> then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him.

<sup>n</sup> Luke 18. 34.

<sup>o</sup> ch. 7. 39.

<sup>p</sup> ch. 14. 20.

The evangelist, amongst others, confesseth his own ignorance also. The disciples saw the thing done, Christ riding into the city upon the foal of an ass, the people strewing of boughs, and throwing their clothes in the way; but to what purpose these things were done, or what fulfilling of prophecies was in this thing, that they understood not, so long as Christ was alive : their eyes were upon the Messiah as a temporal prince, that should come in great state and majesty, so as they were wholly blinded from seeing any thing of the truth and faithfulness of God fulfilled in this little triumph of their Lord's. But after that Christ had died, and was risen again from the dead, and ascended up to heaven, so declaring himself with power to be the Son of God ; then they began to remember these things, so as to confirm their faith in him as the true Messiah, whom God had sent into the world. The word of the Lord which we hear, and the works of God which we see, though oft-times they do not profit us, nor are improved by us at the present, yet afterward become of use and profit to us : it is therefore good to hear, and see, and observe God's words and works, and to lay them up in our hearts, as it is said Mary pondered the sayings of the angel ; expecting fruit afterwards of what at present we see no fruit and effect.

17 The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

18 For this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, 'Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing ? behold, the world is gone after him.

These three verses let us know the external cause of the people's coming to see Christ, which was the fame of the miracle wrought by our Saviour on Lazarus ; this increased the number of those who came to see his entrance into Jerusalem ; but the unseen cause was, doubtless, the influence of God upon their hearts, directing them to it, for the further glorifying of his Son before his passion. But this enraged the Pharisees, to see that their decree that those who owned Christ should be turned out of the synagogue should have no better effect : but the multitude rather more owned him, and ran after him. Here again we find the term world signifying many, though those many made up but a very small part of the world.

20 ¶ And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast :

It is not easy to be determined what these Greeks were ; whether Jews, who, being scattered in the Grecian country upon the conquests which the Grecians had made upon the Jews under Alexander the Great, and those who succeeded him, still remained in those countries, but kept so much of the religion of their country, as to come up to the passover ; or Gentiles, which are ordinarily called Greeks in contradiction to the Jews, Acts xiv. 1 ; xvi. 1 ; xviii. 17 ; Rom. i. 16 ; 1 Cor. i. 23, 24 ; Gal. iii. 28. But it is most probable that they were Gentiles ; for though some say that the Jews would never have suffered the Gentiles to have come into the temple to worship, yet the contrary is plain from the instance of the eunuch, Acts viii. 27 ; who was a heathen, and came to Jerusalem to worship. And, Acts xvii. 4, we read of a great multitude of devout Greeks ; in the Greek the word is σεβοῦντων, worshipping Greeks. And it is plain that from the beginning there was a liberty for strangers, not of Israel, but such as came out of a far country, for the Lord's name's sake ; and Solomon prayeth at the dedication of the temple, that the Lord would hear them, 1 Kings viii. 41—43 ; and there was belonging to the temple a court of the Gentiles for that purpose ; it is called the court without the temple, Rev. xi. 2. What worship they there performed is a greater question : some think they only prayed ; others think they offered sacrifices in that court, from 2 Macc. ii. 35 ; but certain it is, that there were divers of the Gentiles devoutly disposed, that, hearing of the Jewish temple, and the solemn worship performed there at their solemn feasts, came, some as spectators at those great conventions, others with a true design to worship the God of the Jews.

21 The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

If these Grecians (as is probable) were Syrophenicians, their country was so near to Bethsaida of Galilee, which was Philip's town, that it is probable they might have some knowledge of him, and that might bring them to him to be spokesman ; but it should seem they came only to satisfy their curiosity, for they ask for no more than that they might see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew : and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

The news of their coming, and their errand, is brought to Christ by Philip and Andrew, who possibly might stumble at it, because they were Gentiles, and Christ had forbidden them to go into the way of the Gentiles ; they therefore first acquaint him with the desire of those Greeks, before they bring them to Christ.

23 ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, 'The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified.

Christ replies, that the time was now come when he (who was the Son of God) should be glorified ; that is, by the Gentiles receiving of the gospel, according to the many prophecies of it in the Old Testament ; but he goeth on telling them that he must first die.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone : but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

Look as you see in your ordinary husbandry, the grains of wheat are first buried in the earth, and lose their form, before they spring and shoot up again, and bring forth fruit ; so it must be with me ; I must be first lifted up, before I shall draw men after me ; I must first be crucified, before my gospel shall be preached to all nations, and the fulness of the Gentiles shall come : but if I have once died, and risen again from the dead, then you shall see this abundant fruit.

25 He that loveth his life shall lose it ; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

We had much the same in the other evangelists, Matt. x. 39 ; Luke xiv. 26. Some think that our Saviour repeateth it here, to show, that as Christ first suffered, and then entered into his glory ; so his disciples must also lay the foundation of their glory in their sufferings, and through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God, Acts xiv. 22. Or what if we should say, that our blessed Lord doth here prophesy what sufferings would attend the first preaching of the gospel, and encourage his disciples to what he knew they must meet with and undergo, by letting them know that the ready way to lose their share in life eternal, was to be so fond of this life, and the comforts of it, as not to be ready to lay them down for him ; but if any person hated, that is, less loved his life, and all that in this world is dear to him, than Christ and his service, he should, if not be preserved from enemies' rage, yet most certainly be recompensed with eternal life ?

26 If any man serve me, let him follow me ; and where I am, there shall also my servant be : if any man serve me, him will my Father honour.

If any man serve me, let him follow me : this is much the same with that, Matt. xvi. 24, unless following here be more restrained to suffering, let him follow me to my cross ; for otherwise it seemeth the same with serving ; we must be ready not only to do, but also to die for Christ, to follow him to the cross, if he calleth us to it. And if any man so serveth me, he shall be in heaven where I am ; if we suffer with him, we shall also be glorified together, Rom. viii. 17. For my Father, with whom I am one in nature and essence, will honour those that are my servants ; so great a thing it is to be a servant to the Son of God. The

Acts 17. 4.
1 Kings 8. 41, 42.
Acts 8. 27.

ch. 1. 44

ch. 13. 32.
& 17. 1.

1 Cor. 15. 36.

Matt. 10. 38 & 16. 25.
Mark 8. 35.
Luke 9. 34 & 17. 33.

ch. 14. 3.
& 17. 24.
1 Thes. 4. 17.

Father will honour those that are so, and especially those who are so in suffering, with eternal life and felicity.

b Matt. 28. 27 <sup>b</sup> Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.

Now is my soul troubled; by soul is not here to be understood only the sensitive part of the soul, but his whole human soul. So chap. xiii. 21, He was troubled in spirit. Our inward troubles arise from our passions; and there are passions of grief and fear, which give us most of our inward trouble; fear respecteth some evil at a distance from us; grief is caused by evil fallen upon us, or so near that we seem to be already in the power of it. The word here used is ταρακταί, which signifieth no mean, but a great and more than ordinary, degree of trouble. Christ was greatly troubled, though not so as we sometimes are, when our trouble leadeth us to despair: Christ was capable of no sinful trouble. Hence two questions arise: 1. For what the soul of Christ was troubled? 2. How such a degree of trouble could agree to the Lord Jesus Christ? He tells us, Matt. xxvi. 38, that he was exceedingly sorrowful, so as sorrow was one part of his trouble; and we may learn from what he afterward saith in this verse, Father, save me from this hour, that fear made up the other part of it. He was grieved, and he was afraid; some say it was at the apprehension of that miserable death he was to die; others say, at the sense of the Divine wrath which he was to undergo, death being not yet overcome, and his conflict with his Father's wrath for the sins of men being yet to be endured. Though Christ at this time was in the most perfect obedience to his Father's will, offering up a most acceptable and well-pleasing sacrifice unto God; yet he, sustaining our persons, had a conflict to endure even with his Father's wrath upon that account, though not upon his own personal account; for so he was at this time doing that which was most acceptable and well-pleasing in his sight. As to the second question, nothing could more agree to Christ than this, both with respect to his human nature, which had the same natural (though not sinful) infirmities which other men have; and with respect to his design and end, to help and relieve his people under their troubles of spirit; and, as the apostle saith, Heb. ii. 15, to deliver them who through fear of death are all their lifetime subject to bondage. So as this trouble of spirit agreed to him both as man and as Mediator. But there must be a vast difference observed betwixt this trouble of spirit in Christ, and that which is in us. Our troubles are upon reflections for our own sin, and the wrath of God due to us therefore; his trouble was for the wrath of God due to us for our sins. Our troubles are because we have personally grieved God; his was because those given to him (not he himself) had offended God. We are afraid of our eternal condemnation; he was only afraid by a natural fear of death, which naturally riseth higher according to the kind of death we die. Our troubles have mixtures of despair, distrust, sinful horrors; there was no such thing in his trouble. Our troubles in their natural tendencies are killing and destroying; only by accident, and the wise ordering of Divine providence, prove advantageous, by leading us to him, as the only remedy for troubled souls: his trouble was, in the very nature of it, not only pure and clean, but also sanative and healing. But that he was truly troubled, and that in his whole soul, and that such a trouble did very well agree, as to the human nature he had assumed, so to his office as our Mediator and Saviour, and the foundation of a great deal of peace, quiet, and satisfaction to us, is out of question. The chastisement of our peace in this particular lay upon him; and they were some of those stripes of his, by which we are healed. And (saith he) what shall I say? It is the natural language of a spirit troubled. Father, save me from this hour; this hour of my passion; it is the same with that in our Saviour's last prayer, Let this cup pass from me; and must be understood with the same qualifications there expressed, if it be thy will, if it be possible, &c. By his blessed example he hath taught us, under the distresses of our spirits, whither to flee, what to do. For my love (saith David to his enemies, Psal. cix. 4) they are mine adversaries: but I give myself unto prayer; I give up myself to prayer. God hath bidden us, Psal. l. 15, call upon him in the day of trouble; and St. James saith, chap. v. 13, Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Herein Christ hath himself set us an example, that we should follow his steps. But how doth our Saviour pray to be saved from that hour, when for this cause he came into the world? Here was in Christ a conflict between the flesh and the Spirit; not like ours, which is betwixt corrupt flesh and the Spirit, but betwixt his natural flesh, and the natural affections of it, and his spirit; that was fully conformed to the will of God, and gets a present conquest. But for this cause (saith he) came I to this hour: he checks himself, correcteth the language of his natural flesh, acquiesceth, rejoiceth in the will of God. I was not (saith he) forced, I came of my own good-will to this hour; and I came on purpose to die for my people.

28 Father, glorify thy name. <sup>a</sup> Then <sup>d</sup> Mat. 2. 17. came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

Father, glorify thy name; that is, make thy name glorious, make it to be known and famous over all the earth. a general petition, but such a one as all our particular requests must be reduced to, if they be according to the will of God. It is as much as, Father, do thine own will: for God is then glorified when his will is done. But it here signifies more: Not my will, but thy will be done. My flesh indeed saith, Save me from this hour; but, Father, do thy own will, let that be done concerning me which will most tend to make thy name renowned. Such a prayer never goes without an answer. Then came there a voice from heaven, &c.; the Lord caused a voice as from heaven to be heard. I have glorified it; I have by thee caused my glory to be published and proclaimed in the world, by thy preaching, by thy miracles; and I will perfect that which I have begun, I will glorify it again; thou shalt further glorify me by thy death, by thy resurrection from the dead, by the preaching of the gospel, and carrying it to the ends of the earth.

29 The people therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered: others said, An angel spake to him.

The people said that it thundered; nor, it may be, were they mistaken, saving only in this, that they thought it was nothing else but thunder (being possibly at such a distance, as they could not distinctly hear the voice); for it was God's way, when he spake unto his people by a voice, to have that voice, for the greater declaration of the Divine majesty, attended with thunderings and lightnings: thus it was at the giving of the law upon Mount Sinai; thus we read in John's visions, Rev. iv. 5; viii. 5, of lightnings, and thunderings, and voices, which proceeded from God's throne. Others said, An angel spake to him: it was the general opinion of the Jews, that God always, when by voice he revealed his mind to his people, made use of an angel to do it by; hence, probably, as those who were at such a distance that they heard no voice, thought it was nothing but thunder; so those who are so nigh as, besides the thunder, to hear a voice, said, It was an angel that spake with him.

30 Jesus answered and said, <sup>e</sup> This <sup>e</sup> ch. 11. 42. voice came not because of me, but for your sakes.

This voice came not to instruct me, I very well knew, before it came, that my Father had glorified his own name, and would do it again; it came not principally nor solely for me, but chiefly to confirm you in this great truth, that I am the Son of God, and he whom he hath sent into the world, by and in whom he designeth to glorify his own great name.

31 Now is the judgment of this world: now shall 'the prince of this world be cast out.

The terms judgment and world are taken so variously in the New Testament, and particularly in this very Gospel, that they have given interpreters a great liberty to vary in their senses of this passage. It seemeth reasonable to agree, that our Saviour doth expound in this verse what the voice from heaven uttered; that the Father had already glorified

<sup>f</sup> Mat. 12. 28.
Luke 10. 15.
ch. 14. 30.
<sup>g</sup> 16. 11.

Acto 26. 18.

2 Cor. 4. 4. Eph. 2. 2. & 6. 12.

his name, and would yet further glorify it. How? Now (saith he) is the judgment of this world; that is, (say some,) the condemnation of the wicked men in it: and certain it is, that the term world doth sometimes so signify, chap. xv. 19; xvii. 6, 9; 1 Cor. vi. 2; xi. 32. But this sense seemeth not to agree with chap. iii. 17, where Christ tells us, that this his first coming was not to condemn the world. Others do therefore here by judgment better understand, the dispensation of Divine providence, by which a great change or catastrophe was to be made in the world by the reformation of it; the beginning of the time of the restitution of all things, Acts iii. 21. But it seems best to be understood of the deliverance and vindication of mankind from the power of the devil, who had a long time held mankind in an unjust possession. The devil had got a dominion over mankind by the fall of Adam, and had exceedingly tyrannized over them, keeping the far greatest part of the world in slavery by idolatry, and keeping many others, who were no open idolaters, yet captives to his will. Now, saith our Saviour, the time is come when this shall be altered; Satan shall be bound up; I will deliver a great part of the world from the yoke of idolatry; another part of them from the power and dominion of sin. The devil, who is not by any right the prince of this world, but boasteth himself to be so, Matt. iv. 9, and acteth in it like a prince, powerfully working in the children of disobedience, Eph. ii. 2, and as the god of this world blinding men's eyes, 2 Cor. iv. 4, taking the world as his house, and keeping it as a strong man, Matt. xii. 29, shall be cast out of my redeemed ones; so as though he will still be going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, and molesting the best of men by his temptations, yet he shall not prevail over them, God will bruise him under their feet; he that had the power of death shall (as to his dominion) be destroyed, and those who are in bondage through the fear of it, shall be delivered, Heb. ii. 14, 15; the tempted shall be succoured, ver. 18, and God with the temptation shall give a blessed issue. And the devil's kingdom kept up by idolatry, shall also in a great measure be destroyed in the world; many nations now under that slavery shall embrace the gospel, and throw away their idols.

32 And I, *if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw <sup>h</sup>all men unto me.

33 <sup>i</sup>This he said, signifying what death he should die.

However this term of lifting up Christ is taken in some other scriptures, it is by the evangelist himself in this text expounded concerning his death, so as there is no room for any other interpretation of it in this text. The word that is used, is hardly to be found in any place (except where in Scripture it relateth to Christ) signifying to die, or put to death; but is very proper, both to express the kind of his death, which was a lifting up upon the cross, from the earth into the air; and to let us know that his death was a lifting up of his name: as it was the lowest degree of his humiliation, so it was nearest to his exaltation. It was his highest act of obedience to the will of his Father, that for which his Father highly exalted him, giving him a name which is above every name, Phil. ii. 9; and also that which made his name famous over all the world, by the preaching of the gospel; for as the apostles, so all the ministers of the gospel since their times, preach a Christ crucified. Saith our Saviour, If, or although, I be put to death by the hands of the Jews, lifted up upon the cross betwixt heaven and earth, yet this shall not hinder my Father's glorifying of himself in and by me; for instead of obscuring or hindering my Father's glory, by this I shall further promote it. For by the preaching of my cross, and publication of my gospel to all nations, and by the efficacious concurrence of my Holy Spirit, together with the preaching of the gospel, I shall draw (though not all, and every man, yet) multitudes of men and women after me, so as they shall embrace and believe in me, having died and risen up again from the dead, and being by my apostles, and other ministers of the gospel, held forth as the object of people's faith, to be by them laid hold upon in order to their eternal life and salvation. He used the term of lifting up, (saith the evangelist,) to signify the particular death he should die, by being crucified; in which death the bodies of the crucified abode not upon the earth, as when they were at any time stoned, or strangled, or beheaded, &c., but were lifted up from the earth to be nailed to the cross, and hung in the air until they died.

34 The people answered him, *We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, The Son of man must be lifted up? who is this Son of man?

Here again the law is taken in a larger sense than in some places, where it is only significant of the books of Moses, in opposition to the prophets and other holy writings, as we had it before, chap. x. 34; for the places of Scripture which the people seem to refer to, seem to be Psal. cx. 4. where Christ is called a priest for ever; or else Dan. vii. 14, where the kingdom of the Messiah is said to be an everlasting dominion, which should not pass away, a kingdom that should not be destroyed: so also, Dan. ii. 44; Micah iv. 7. These old prophecies of the Messiah the people could not reconcile to what our Saviour here told them of his death; and the reason was, their not understanding the true notion of the Messiah, and of his kingdom, which they fancied not to be a spiritual and eternal kingdom, but a temporal kingdom here on earth. This made them ask, how, (that is, with what consistency to those prophecies,) if he indeed were the Messiah, he should die; for that they understood by the term lifted up, which maketh it very plain, that it was a phrase they used to express that kind of death by. They ask who he meant by the Son of man.

35 Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while <sup>1</sup>is the light with you. <sup>m</sup>Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for <sup>n</sup>he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth.

Our Saviour thinketh not fit further to open himself as to that point concerning the Messiah, and his Divine nature; into a direct assertion of which he must have entered, had he given a direct answer to their questions; otherwise what they had objected might easily have been answered by our Saviour, by distinguishing betwixt the two natures in his own person: according to his Divine nature he was not to die, though he died according to his human nature; and after his suffering and resurrection, his whole person, in which both the Divine and human nature were united, were to endure for ever: but he thinks not fit to discourse this point, but returns to what John had told them, chap. i. 9, and what he himself had said, chap. ix. 5, that he was the light of the world, though possibly by light he here understandeth those beams of gospel doctrine which issued out from him as the fountain of light. Yet a little while, I, who am the great Light, and the true Light of the world, am with you: or, Yet a little while, the gospel, which is light, and directs you in the way to heaven, is with you, for within a few years (under forty) after this, their city was destroyed, and their nation ruined; and before that time the apostles were turned away from the generality of that nation to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46; xix. 9. He in the next verse expoundeth himself as to what he meant by walking, viz. believing: Make use of the light, both to guide your understandings and judgments, and also to direct your feet: for look on men in the world, while they have the guidance of the light of the sun, they know how to order their steps, and to direct their feet; but if once it be dark, they know not how to direct their feet in their way, but err, and stumble, and fall. So it will be with you, when I shall be gone, who am the great Light of the world while I am in the world (as he spake chap. ix. 5); and not only I gone, but the gospel, which is that light which I shall leave behind me, be gone, by my apostles turning to the Gentiles, through your perverse refusal of the salvation of it, as Acts xiii. 46; xix. 9: when you shall be utterly ruined, (as it will be at the destruction of your city,) then you will walk in darkness, having no means of salvation left you.

36 While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be <sup>n</sup>the children of light. These things spake Jesus, and departed, and <sup>p</sup>did hide himself from them.

g ch. 14.
h Rom. 5. 18.
i Heb. 2. 9.
ch. 18. 32.

1 ch. 1. 9. & 8.
12. 8. & 9.
ver. 46.
m Jer. 13. 6.
Eph. 5. 8.
n ch. 11. 10.
1 John 2. 11.

o Luke 16. 8.
Eph. 5. 8.
1 Thess. 5. 5.
1 John 2. 9.
10. 11.
p ch. 8. 68.
& 11. 54.

He either expounds what he meant before, by his calling to them to walk in the light, viz. believing in him who is the true and great Light of the world; or else he declares faith in him to be their duty, as well as obedience to him, which is a point our Saviour had often before pressed. While I am amongst you, and when I shall be gone from you and the light of the gospel yet stayeth behind amongst you, embrace me, and receive me as your Saviour, and yield all obedience to the prescriptions of my gospel, that ye may be the children of light: this the apostle expounds and enlargeth upon, Eph. v. 8—11. After Christ had spoken these things in Jerusalem, he departed to Bethany, where he obscured himself from his enemies.

37 ¶ But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him:

The miracles of Christ did not work faith in any, yet they had a tendency both to prepare souls for an assent to the proposition of the gospel, and also for receiving Christ as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world, as they evidenced a Divine power in him by which he wrought those mighty works; but yet they had not this effect upon the generality of the Jews.

38 That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, q. la. 53. 1.
Rom. 10. 16.
 ¶ Lord, who hath believed our report?
 and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

So as that which Esaias prophesied, Isa. liii. 1, appeared to be fulfilled in them; for the term iva, which we translate that, doth not in Scripture always denote the final cause, with respect to the counsel and intention of God, but oftentimes the event. So chap. v. 20; Rom. v. 20; 2 Cor. i. 17. The arm of the Lord may either signify the gospel, which is called the power of God to salvation, Rom. i. 16; 1 Cor. i. 18; or else the Messiah, who is thought to be mentioned under this notion by Esaias, chap. li. 5; lii. 10; lix. 16; lxiii. 12, because the Father worketh by him, as a man worketh by his arm, chap. i. 3, 14.

39 Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again,

Some will have, they could not believe, to be the same with, they did not; as, Mark vi. 5, it is said Christ could not do mighty works at Nazareth; or the same with, they would not, as Gen. xix. 22; but this seemeth a hard interpretation of ὅτι ἠδύναστο. It is most certain, that in all there is a natural impotency and disability to believe; but this text seemeth to speak of a further degree of impossibility than that, occasioned through their wilful obstinacy, and God's judicial hardening of them. Because Esaias said, is no more than, for Esaias said; the particle doth not denote the cause influencing them, but the effect of the prophecy: God's word (saith the evangelist) must be made good, and Esaias had prophesied of what now came to pass.

r. la. 9. 9, 10.
Matt. 13. 14.
 40 He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them.

We have this text (than which there is not one more terrible in the whole book of God) no less than six times quoted in the New Testament, and in all places quoted and given as a reason for the Jews' unbelief in the Lord Jesus Christ, Matt. xiii. 14, 15; Mark iv. 12; Luke viii. 10; Acts xxviii. 26, 27; Rom. xi. 8. It is not quoted alike in all places, but for substance the same. The original from whence these quotations are, is Isa. vi. 9, 10. By comparing the texts we shall find several authors, instruments, or causes of these dreadful effects. In the original, the prophet Esaias is made the instrumental cause: Go, (saith God,) and make the heart of this people fat, &c. Matthew, and Luke, in Acts xxviii. 27, mention themselves as the cause. Matthew saith, For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed. And in the Acts it is, For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed. All the other texts speak of it as God's act. The thing is easily thus reconciled: God sent to the Jews his prophets, and gave them the means of salvation; it is true, without the inward efficacy of his Spirit they could not savingly believe, but they did not do what was in their power to have done, nay, they did do what was in their power to have avoided, they slighted and contemned the Lord's prophets, and killed them, and stoned such as were sent unto them. Thus they first shut their own eyes, and hardened their own hearts; and as their forefathers had done in their generation, so the Jews in our Saviour Christ's time did also in their generation, shutting their eyes against the revelation of the gospel by Christ himself. They thus behaving themselves, God judiciously gave them up to their own lusts, permitting their hearts to harden, and suffering them to close their own eyes, so as they could not repent, believe, or return, and be saved; not that God infused any malice into their hearts, but withdrew his grace from them after such provocations on their parts: so that as the prophets in their age laboured with them in vain, and all the event of their ministry was but the generality of that people's growing worse and more obdurate; so all the event of Christ's ministry and miracles, which he personally wrought amongst them in his age, did accidentally but increase their sin and their judgment, and ripen them for their ruin, through their wilful abuse of those sacred means of life and salvation. The judgment itself was but one, viz. a judicial hardening of them; but it is set out by a great variety of expressions, both by the prophets, and the writers of the New Testament: in Esaias, by making their hearts fat, their ears heavy, shutting their eyes: in Matthew, making their hearts gross, their ears dull of hearing, shutting their eyes: in this text, by blinding their eyes, and hardening their hearts: in the Acts, by the same phrases as in Matthew: in Rom. xi. 8 is added, God hath given them the spirit of slumber. All the phrases are expressive of the same dreadful judgment of God; yet it may be expressed in this variety of phrase, to signify the distinct, particular plagues (comprehended in this one plague) which fall upon the several powers and faculties of those souls upon whom this dreadful judgment falls; blindness in the mind, stubbornness in the will, &c., vileness in the affections, reprobacy in the mind, &c.

41 These things said Esaias, when he s. la. 6. 1.
 saw his glory, and spake of him.

The evangelist saith, that these things Esaias said, when he saw his glory, and spake of him. Esaias's sight of God's glory is described, Isa. vi. 1, I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, &c. The evangelist expounds this of Christ, which is an evident proof of the Deity of Christ, that he is Jehovah; for it was Jehovah whom the prophet there saw: and that the revelation of that dreadful wrath of God, did not only concern that particular age in which Esaias lived, but the successive generation of the Jews, whom the prophet saw by the eye of prophecy would tread in the same steps, and use Christ (the Heir) as their forefathers had used him, and the prophets of that age.

42 ¶ Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: t. ch. 7. 13.
& 9. 22.

Though the Pharisees made up a great part of the sanhedrim, yet there were divers others also mixed with them, amongst which there were many of a better temper; and it may be ἀρχόντων here may not signify members of that court, but principal men in the magistracy. We must not understand by believed, that they believed with a saving faith; what follows will evidence the contrary; but they had some convictions upon them as to the truth of what he said, and his being the true Messiah; but they durst not openly declare what themselves thought, nor publicly own and aver Christ to be what he indeed was, and they were inclinable to think he was, lest the Pharisees, who were Christ's most implacable enemies, should have put the decree they had made (of which we read, chap. ix. 22) in execution upon them.

43 For they loved the praise of men ch. 4. 44.
 more than the praise of God.

For they were not willing to part with their great places in the magistracy, which brought them respect, honour, and applause from men; they valued this more than God's honouring and praising them. How hard it is for great men to enter into the kingdom of God!

<sup>x Mark 9. 37.</sup> 44 ¶ Jesus cried and said, <sup>1 Pet. 1. 21.</sup> "He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me.

The words, at first view, seem to contain a contradiction, and denying the same act as to the same person; as if any man could believe, and yet not believe on Christ; but there is nothing less in them. By the same figurative way of speaking God tells the prophet Samuel, 1 Sam. viii. 7. the people had not rejected Samuel, (that is, not Samuel alone,) but they had rejected him. So Mark ix. 37, Whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me, (that is, not me alone,) but him that sent me. So 1 Thess. iv. 8. Or else thus, He that believeth on me, doth not believe on a mere man, as I appear at present to the world, but he also believeth on God that sent me. The Jews owned one God the Father, and acknowledged him the object of their faith, chap. xiv. 1, Ye believe in God; but they were blinded as to Christ, appearing only in the form of a man. So that our Saviour again by these words asserteth his Divine nature, his oneness and equality with his Father; so as he was also the object of their faith, as well as his Father.

<sup>7 ch. 14. 9.</sup> 45 And <sup>7</sup> he that seeth me seeth him that sent me.

No man hath seen God at any time; but he that by the eyes of his mind knows, and understands, and believeth in me, seeth him that sent me: or, he that seeth me in my works which I do, seeth also him that sent me, by whom I do these mighty works. Thus afterward, chap. xiv. 9, he saith to Philip, He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; he that hath seen me, hath not indeed seen the Divine nature and essence, but hath seen that Person who is one with the Father; the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, as the apostle speaks, Heb. i. 3.

<sup>s ver. 35, 36.</sup> 46 "I am come a light into the world, <sup>ch. 3. 19.</sup> that whosoever believeth on me should <sup>& R. 12.</sup> not abide in darkness. <sup>& 9. 5, 39.</sup>

I am come a light into the world; this is no more than what our Saviour hath often said, chap. iii. 19, and ix. 5; and it was according to the prophecy of him, Isa. xlii. 6. That whosoever believeth on me shall not abide in darkness; that he who receiveth and embraceth me, as his Priest and Prophet, though he may be in darkness naturally, Eph. v. 8, yet should not abide in a state of ignorance, and sin, and guilt, chap. iii. 36; viii. 31. Men and women, before they believe in Christ, are in darkness; but upon believing, they are translated out of their state of darkness into a state of marvellous light; they do not abide in darkness.

47 And if any man hear my words, and believe not, "I judge him not: for <sup>a ch. 5. 45.</sup> I came not to judge the world, but to save <sup>& R. 15, 26.</sup> the world. <sup>b ch. 3. 17.</sup>

I judge him not; I alone judge him not, or rather, it is not my present business to pronounce sentence of condemnation against him; I am now doing the work of a Redeemer and Saviour, not of a Judge: he is condemned already, John iii. 18, and he hath another that accuseth and condemneth him; as the Jews had Moses, chap. v. 45, so he hath my Father as his Judge, and will have my word as his accuser (as in the next verse): I shall one day condemn him; but that is not my present business, that was not my errand in coming into the world. I came to offer the world the means, and to show them the way to salvation; if they do perish, their blood will be upon their own heads: it is not my business to condemn them.

<sup>c Luke 10. 16.</sup> 48 "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: <sup>d Deu. 18. 15.</sup> "the word that I have spoken, <sup>Mark 16. 16.</sup> the same shall judge him in the last day.

These words, and receiveth not my words, expound the former: not to receive in heart, to believe, and embrace the words of Christ in the gospel, is to reject Christ. So Luke x. 16, He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me. And he that doth so, hath one that judgeth him, that is, my Father who hath sent me, and will vindicate mine honour. Nay, the word that I have spoken shall rise up in judgment against him at the last day, and prove that he hath judged himself unworthy of everlasting life.

49 For "I have not spoken of myself; <sup>e ch. 8. 32.</sup> but the Father which sent me, he gave <sup>& 14. 10.</sup> me a commandment, <sup>f Deut. 18.</sup> "what I should say, <sup>15.</sup> and what I should speak.

I do not speak what I say to you as mere man, or any thing but what is my Father's will, and mine only as one with him, and as sent by him; I have said nothing but what my Father hath willed me to reveal to the world as his will.

50 And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.

I am assured that the way to life everlasting is to obey his commandments; and that makes me speak, and deliver all that, and nothing but that, which I have in charge from my Father: as the Father said unto me, so I speak. Therefore look you to it, in rejecting me, you reject my Father, whom you own and acknowledge for your God; and in disobeying me, you disobey my Father, and him whom you own as your Father also.

CHAP. XIII

Jesus washeth his disciples' feet; and exhorteth them to follow his example of humility and charity. 1—17. He foretelleth the treachery of Judas, and pointeth him out to John by a token, 18—30. He speaketh of his glorification as near at hand, and commandeth his disciples to love one another, 31—35. He forewarneth Peter that he shall thrice deny him, 36—38.

NOW "before the feast of the Passover, <sup>a Matt. 26. 2.</sup> when Jesus knew that <sup>b ch. 12. 23.</sup> his hour was come <sup>& 17. 1, 11.</sup> that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

That this was the fourth passover after that he entered upon his public ministry is out of doubt, and the last he ever celebrated. We have taken notice of this evangelist's mention of the other three: but how long what follows was before the passover, which is here expressed by before the feast, is a great question: some will have it the day, others immediately before, as  $\pi\rho\delta$  (the very same particle) is used, Luke xi. 38, before dinner, and Luke xxii. 15, before I suffer. The resolution of it much dependeth upon another question as difficult, viz. What supper it is which is mentioned? ver. 2. Those who would be satisfied in these cases, may find a collection of what is said by most valuable interpreters in Mr. Pool's Synopsis Criticorum, upon Matt. xxvi. It is our happiness, that though some such knots occur in holy writ, yet they are about things in which our salvation is not concerned; so as without danger to our souls we may be ignorant of what is the truth about them. When Christ knew that the hour (which he had once or twice before said was not come) was now come, that he must die, rise again, and in a short time ascend to his Father; he having loved his disciples, not with a mutable, but with an unchangeable love; he resolveth upon the washing of their feet, as a demonstration of that love.

2 And supper being ended, <sup>c Luke 22. 3.</sup> "the devil <sup>ver. 27.</sup> having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him;

And supper being ended; possibly it were better translated, while they were at supper, or in supper time, Greek,  $\delta\epsilon\iota\pi\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma\ \gamma\epsilon\upsilon\omega\mu\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ , but the great question is, What supper is here intended? Our most learned Lightfoot is very confident this was not the paschal supper. The most interpreters, ancient and modern, seem to be of another mind. Or it may be rather a common supper, which they ate before the passover: for whereas some think this supper was that in the house of Simon the leper, mentioned Matt. xxvi. 6, it seemeth no way probable, no circumstance inclining us to believe any such thing; and the evangelist having told us that it was after that supper that Christ rode into Jerusalem, and again went from thence, and hid himself, chap. xii. 36, and then reporting this as a thing subsequent to it in this chapter; it seemeth very clear to me, that it could not be the supper in the house of Simon the leper. Concerning the influence of the devil upon Judas, to put it into his heart to betray his Master, see Luke xxii. 3, 4.

3 Jesus knowing <sup>d</sup> that the Father had given all things into his hands, and <sup>e</sup> that he was come from God, and went to God;

Our translating the Greek participle oidas, knowing, (which properly signifies having known,) createth a difficulty, viz. How Christ's knowledge of this, that the Father had given all things into his hand, should be assigned as a reason of, or motive to, his subsequent action of washing the feet of his disciples? The sense therefore must certainly be, though he knew; and so it doth not import a reason of his following action, but only signifieth Christ's great humiliation and condescension. Though he well enough knew, that all power was given him in heaven and earth, as in Matt. xxviii. 18; that he was his disciples' Lord, that he came from God, and was now going to God again; yet to show how much he loved his disciples, and to set them a pattern of humility, and teach them brotherly love, and that he came not in the estate wherein he yet was to be ministered unto, but to minister, Matt. xx. 28.

4 He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself.

He riseth from supper. What supper? is the question. We are told, that the Jews had two suppers upon the paschal night, which was the 14th day of the month Nisan. The first was the passover supper, which was a religious rite in obedience to the law. The second, a common supper (as on other nights); to which our Saviour added a third, which was the Lord's supper. To me it seemeth rather that their common supper was first, then the passover supper; and that Christ arose from this common supper to do this act. Augustine understood it of the common supper; so doth Beza, Heinsius, Tarnovius, and others; which seemeth to me most probable, though others understand it of the passover supper. Whatever supper the evangelist meaneth, Christ rose up from it before it was done. Calvin, Pareus, Beza, Petargus, Tossanus, and divers others amongst the protestant interpreters; Tolet, Maldonate, and Jansenius, amongst the papists; do agree a common supper this night, besides the paschal supper, and the Lord's supper; from which it is most probable that Christ, as is here said, rose up, and laid aside his garment; that is, his outward loose garment, (for such they used,) which servants were wont to gird up when they waited at table, Luke xvii. 8: Christ laid one aside, and girding up the other, takes a towel.

5 After that he poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

Poureth water into a bason; beginneth first to wash his disciples' feet, then to wipe them with the linen cloth he had taken. All this was done in the form of a servant; so they used to do, as to guests that came to dine or sup with their lords or masters.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and † Peter said unto him, Lord, † dost thou wash my feet?

Christ in the performance of this ceremony cometh to Simon Peter; whether first, or last, it is not said; and therefore the papists argue ill from hence, to prove the primacy of Peter over the rest of the apostles. Peter looks upon it with a modest, but sinful and superstitious, indignation. Samuel of old determined, that obedience to God is better than sacrifice; it is then certainly better than a compliment. Peter in this case ought not to have contradicted his Master out of a compliment to him, but to have suffered him to go on in this act of ministration. There may be a voluntary humility, and pretended reverence to Christ, which is indeed but superstition, and can be no other, if contrary to any revelation of the Divine will.

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; <sup>b</sup> but thou shalt know hereafter.

Our Lord, seeing Peter's general design good, though he mistook as to this particular act, tells him, that at present he did not understand his counsel and design in this action, but it should be more intelligible unto him afterwards; as indeed he made it by his discourse upon this his act of humiliation, ver. 13—16.

8 Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, <sup>c</sup> If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.

Peter rashly replies, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Here was a seeming reverence for his Master, but (like the Jewish zeal mentioned by Paul, Rom. x. 2) not according to knowledge. Christ tells him, that except he washed him, he had no part with him; that is, he should never be saved. But will some say, Was not this too severe, for our Saviour to threaten Peter with an exclusion from a co-inheritance with him in heaven, for modestly refusing to suffer him to wash his feet? Answer. 1. The least disobedience not repented of, is enough to exclude a soul from the kingdom of heaven. 2. But Christ seems to take an advantage here, from this ceremony of his washing their feet, to discourse to him the necessity of his washing his soul with his blood, from the filth of sin and corruption; and of this washing it undoubtedly is that Christ here speaketh, the necessity of which is very often inculcated in holy writ.

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

Peter now understandeth what washing it is which our Saviour last spake of, and wholly submitteth to the will of his Lord and Master; acknowledging himself to be wholly defiled, and to stand in need of a washing all over: Lord, saith he, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head; that is, my whole man.

10 Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and <sup>e</sup> ye are clean, but not all.

Look as it is with persons that have been washing themselves in a bath, when they are washed, yet walking abroad barefoot, or with thin sandals or coverings for their feet, will be again subject to pollute and dirty their feet, so as they will have frequent need to wash them again; but they need not soon again wash their whole bodies: so it is as to souls that are washed with my blood; washed, and sanctified, justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of God, (as the apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. vi. 11,) their state is not to be renewed; they need not be justified a second time; but they will have need to have their feet washed, in regard of their remainder of sin and lust that is in them, and will be so while they are in the world, and the temptations which every where lie in the world, as snares for their feet; they will have need of a daily washing by repentance, and fresh applications of their souls to my blood, by the repeated exercises of faith, according to their renewed and repeated acts of sin. Ye are clean; you, who are my apostles, are clean; you are washed, you are justified, I have forgiven your sins, accepted your persons. But not all; the most of you are so, but not all.

11 For <sup>b</sup> he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

By these words the evangelist expounds only what our Saviour meant in the former verse, when he had told them they were not all clean; for though the disciples did not yet know that they had a traitor amongst them, Satan had before this put the design into the heart of Judas, ver. 2; and Christ, who knew all hearts, knew what was in the heart of Judas, and he soon after (as we shall hereafter in this chapter read) revealed it; yet at this time he had not revealed it to his disciples: now he begins to discover it, telling them, that though the most of them were clean, justified and sanctified, yet all of them were not so.

12 So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he

<sup>d</sup> Gr. Ae.
<sup>e</sup> See Matt.
3. 14.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 3. 5.
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 6. 11.
<sup>1</sup> Eph. 5. 26.
<sup>Tit.</sup> 3. 5.
<sup>Heb.</sup> 10. 22.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 15. 3.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 6. 64.

said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

After that our Saviour had finished this ceremony, and washed his disciples' feet, (some question whether all or no, but I see no reason to doubt it,) he returned again to the supper, which probably now was near finished, which certainly was the common supper which the Jews had besides the passover supper, and probably before it, though some think after it. He asketh them if they knew the meaning of this which he had done unto them; lest they should not fully understand it, he openeth it to them in the following discourse.

<sup>m Matt. 23.</sup>
<sup>8, 10. Luke</sup>
<sup>6. 46. 1 Cor.</sup>
<sup>6. 5. & 12. 3.</sup>
<sup>Phil. 2. 11.</sup> 13 <sup>m</sup> Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.

The disciples in their ordinary discourses called Christ Master and Lord; nor was it a name improper for him, for he was their Master to instruct them, their Lord to rule, guide, and govern them: now, saith our Saviour, disciples ought to obey their master, servants ought to obey their lord, and disciples also ought to imitate their master.

<sup>n Luke 22.</sup>
<sup>27.</sup>
<sup>o Rom. 12.</sup>
<sup>10. Gal. 3.</sup>
<sup>1, 2. 1 Pet.</sup>
<sup>5. 5.</sup> 14 <sup>a</sup> If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; <sup>o</sup> ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

I have by this my action taught you to love, and to be ready also to serve, one another, and not to think much to serve them even in the lowest and meanest offices by which you can do them good; for we must not think that these words lay a literal obligation upon Christians to wash the feet of others; washing the feet is mentioned but as species pro genere, a single act of service, put for all other acts by which we can be serviceable unto others: so it is also used, 1 Sam. xxv. 41; 1 Tim. v. 10. Some of the ancients seem to have judged this washing of feet to have been instituted as a sacrament, (though in an improper sense,) and from hence, though Bellarmine, Maldonate, and others deny it to be a sacrament as well as we, yet probably is the practice in use amongst the papists, to wash certain persons' feet every Thursday before Easter; a theatrical ceremony, rather than any thing of solid and profitable use. Our Saviour certainly intends no more by ye ought to wash one another's feet, than, ye ought to serve one another in all offices of love, and not to think yourselves too good, or too great, to do the meanest services to those who are my disciples: and this is that as which he tells them he had set them an example that they should do as he had done, in other acts of the same kind, though not as to this specific act.

<sup>p Mat. 11. 29.</sup>
<sup>Phil. 2. 5.</sup>
<sup>1 Pet. 2. 21.</sup>
<sup>1 John 2. 6.</sup> 15 For <sup>p</sup> I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

<sup>q Mat. 10. 24.</sup>
<sup>Luke 6. 40.</sup>
<sup>ch. 15. 20.</sup> 16 <sup>a</sup> Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him.

The apostles were to take up a very high station in the gospel church, and our hearts are very prone to swell in a high opinion of ourselves, for which the nature of man taketh advantage from every thing in which we either really do excel, or can conceit that we do excel, our neighbours. Our Lord therefore, though speaking to the apostles, (some of the best of men,) yet knowing they were (like Elijah) men subject to like passions with other men, addeth this to arm them against any temptation to pride: they owned themselves as servants to Christ who was their great Lord; they had seen what he had done; he therefore applyeth a proverbial expression to them, which he also made use of in other cases, as Matt. x. 24; John xv. 20; in both which places he maketh use of it to arm them against persecutions; here, to persuade them to humility, condescension, and brotherly love.

<sup>r Jam. 1. 25.</sup> 17 <sup>r</sup> If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

He tells them, that it is not the bare comprehension of these things in their notion that would do them any good, unless they brought their knowledge into practice; for so him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, it is sin, James iv. 17. Faith without works is dead, and the knowledge of our Master's will, if we do it not, doth but expose us to many stripes.

18 ¶ I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the Scripture may be fulfilled, <sup>s Pa. 41. 9.</sup> <sup>Matt. 23. 23.</sup> <sup>ver. 21.</sup> 'He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me.

I am about to tell you what will make your ears tingle; but be of good comfort, what I shall now tell you doth not concern all of you, it concerneth but one man amongst you. I know whom I have chosen to the work of the apostleship; so some interpret it, as chap. vi. 70, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? But the generality of the best interpreters understand the choosing here, mentioned, of a choosing to eternal life, and perseverance in the way of God as a means in order to it, as Eph. i. 4; and so understood, here is a greater argument in this text to prove the Godhead of Christ, as the Author of eternal election: Though one of you be a devil, a traitor, yet I have chosen the rest of you to eternal life: and this is no more than was prophesied of me, and fulfilled in David as a type of me: the Scripture must have its accomplishment; that Scripture is now fulfilled in me.

19 ¶ Now I tell you before it come, <sup>t ch. 14. 29.</sup> <sup>& 16. 4.</sup> that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he. <sup>u Or. From henceforth.</sup>

What I now tell you should be so far from prejudicing your faith in me, that it ought rather to confirm and increase your faith in me as the true Messiah; when (the thing coming to pass) you shall understand that I know the hearts, counsels, and secret thoughts of men: and when you shall see the Scriptures have their accomplishment, and those things which were long ago prophesied concerning the Messiah have their just accomplishment, and fulfilling in me as the person intended in those ancient revelations.

20 <sup>v Matt. 10.</sup> <sup>40. & 25. 40.</sup> <sup>Luke 10. 16.</sup> <sup>w</sup> Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.

See the notes on Matt. x. 24, the words of which place are but here repeated; either to commend to them brotherly love, and offices of love, which he had before recommended to them under the notion of washing one another's feet; or else to comfort his disciples, who might think that this treacherous villany of Judas would make them odious to the whole world: No, saith our Saviour, you are my messengers, persons sent by me; I will provide for you, there shall be those who will receive you. And I declare to all the world to encourage them, that I shall take their receiving of you as kindly as if they received me, and it shall turn to the same account, and that is all one as if they had received my Father himself, for he sent me. Some think that by these words Christ aggravateth the sin of Judas, as being committed against the Father as well as against Christ; and a most treacherous failure as to the duty of an apostle, or one dignified so much as to be sent out by Christ.

21 <sup>x Mat. 26. 21.</sup> <sup>Mark 14. 18.</sup> <sup>Luke 22. 21.</sup> <sup>y ch. 12. 27.</sup> <sup>z Acts 1. 17.</sup> <sup>1 John 2. 19.</sup> <sup>aa</sup> When Jesus had thus said, <sup>aa</sup> he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that <sup>aa</sup> one of you shall betray me.

How, and in what sense, trouble of spirit could agree to Christ, was noted before, chap. xii. 27: see the notes on that text. This seemeth to have been rather a trouble of grief, that one of his apostles, one whom he had chosen, should commit so great a villany, than arising from fear of death; for his next words are a further discovery of the person that should betray him: he had said before, that he should be betrayed, and that it should be by one that used to eat bread with him; but now he cometh closer, and tells them that it should be by one of them, that is, one of the twelve; this was a closer discovery than he had as yet made.

22 Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake.

It seemeth they had no suspicion of Judas, but our Saviour telling them that it was one of them, they begin to look about one upon another, rather suspecting themselves than Judas. There may be a great deal of villany, and the greatest villany, in the hearts of professors, in whose conversation appeareth nothing that may give a just suspicion to others; and the true disciples of Christ will have so much candour and brotherly love, that they will not rashly judge and censure their brethren.

a ch. 12. 26.
 & 20. 2. &
 21. 7, 20, 24.
 23 Now *there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved.

This leaning on Jesus' bosom, and the laying on Jesus' breast, mentioned ver. 25, cannot be understood without the understanding of the usual posture the Jews used at their meals, and particularly at the paschal supper; of which we have spoken largely in our notes upon Matt. xxvi. 20: see the annotations there. Their posture seemeth to have been kneeling, and resting their bodies back upon their legs, with a leaning upon their left elbow; and this seemeth not to have been so close, but that he that so sat might use his other hand to take his meat; hence he who sat before any, sat with his back towards him, but leaning towards the bosom of the other, which is here called a leaning on (that is, towards) his bosom, and laying on his breast; for it cannot be understood of such a sitting, or leaning, as to touch the other's breast or bosom, for that would have hindered him upon whom the person so leaned from any use of his right hand to take his meat or drink. It is apparent from hence, first, that at this supper there was none but Christ and his disciples. Secondly, that they sat in this posture of leaning. These two things make it very probable, if not certain, that the supper here mentioned was either the paschal supper, or a common supper, which immediately went before, or followed after, the passover supper. For, 1. We have no record of any other supper, at which were only Christ and the twelve disciples; and, 2. If we may believe the Jewish writers, though their ordinary posture at their common meals was discumbency, that is, a kneeling on their knees, with a resting their bodies backward upon their legs; yet this posture of leaning was constantly added only upon the passover night, as a further testimony of their liberty, that they were not now servants, as in the land of Egypt. The person who sat next to our Saviour, with his back next our Saviour's bosom, was John, often in Scripture dignified with the title of the beloved disciple, and him whom Jesus loved, chap. xix. 26; xx. 2; xxi. 7, 20.

24 Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake.

Peter, knowing the particular affection that Christ had for John, maketh a sign to him, to ask of Christ which of them he meant, when he said, One of you shall betray me.

25 He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him, Lord, who is it?

John, accordingly, doth propound the question to Christ.

26 Jesus answered, He it is, to whom <sup>Or, morset.</sup> I shall give a *||*sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it; we have the same, though not mentioned as spoken in particular to John, Matt. xxvi. 23; Luke xxii. 21; though neither of them mention Christ's own dipping the sop; but Matthew saith, he dipped his hand with him in the dish; and Luke saith, his hand was with him on the table. Without question all the evangelists speak of the same time; for it is not reasonable to think that this discovery should be made, and Judas gone out, and that afterward he should return again to eat the passover. This maketh me very inclinable to think, that though the washing of the feet might be during the time of a common supper, preceding the passover, yet the supper they were now at was the passover supper: where, 1. Were none but he and the twelve disciples. 2. It is plain they were in that leaning posture, not used at common meals, but on the passover nights (as Dr. Lightfoot tells us from their writings). 3. The discourse passed at the table is the very same (though not in words, yet in sense) with that mentioned by Matthew and Luke, at the passover supper. 4. It is not reasonable to think, that after such a discovery as Christ now made of the traitor, he should come again to be pointed at and exposed. Concerning the sop, what it was, hath been some question; and a learned writer of our own (but in this point I think much too critical) hath increased the difficulty, by affirming the word here used, ψωμίων, signifies a piece of bread, or the lower part or chippings of the bread; for which he quoteth Hesychius, who indeed doth say so of ψωθιον, but not ψωμιον. The learned annotator thinks ψωθιον is a false print for ψωμιον, but it cannot be: for, 1. There are in Hesychius several words in alphabetical order, between ψωθιον and this word. 2. Though ψωμίων be not in Hesychius, yet ψωμη is, and expounded by him τα μέρη, parts; now all know that this ψωμίων, which is but a diminutive derived from ψωμος or ψωμη, can signify no more than a little part, let it be of what it will; for it is manifest out of Homer, that, joined with an adjective, it signifies a mouthful of man's flesh, which came out of the Cyclops' mouth. So as the sense of these words is, He it is to whom I shall give a little part or portion of meat, when I have dipped it. And having dipped it, he gave it to Judas the son of Simon: not the Judas who wrote the Epistle, and who is mentioned, chap. xiv. 22, but he that was the son of Simon, called from his place which he lived in, Kiroth, Iscariot: by which he did as perfectly describe the traitor as if he had named him.

27 And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.

That the devil did ever so enter into Judas as to possess him, as we read of many who were possessed, and violently acted by the devil, is more than we read any where in holy writ: the entrance into him, signifies Judas's free and willing giving up of himself to the devil's suggestions and conduct; and in this sense the devil also before this time was entered into Judas, Luke xxii. 3. But as holy men are said to be filled with the Spirit of God, who had before received the Spirit, because the Holy Spirit came after upon them with fuller and stronger impulses and motions; so though the devil had formerly been moving Judas to this vile act, and had had his consent to it, yet after he had taken this mouthful, the devil plied him with stronger motions, impulses, and suggestions: and now he had mastered his conscience, and hardened his heart, so as he was more prepared for the villany about which he had some thoughts before. He had now, with an unbelieving and unthankful heart, been eating the passover, which was a type of Christ; and had so mastered his conscience, as to come and do this, with a vile heart, reeking before with treacherous and bloody designs against his Lord and Master. See what is the effect. His heart is more vile, more treacherous, and bloody; he is twice more the servant of the devil than he was before. The sop given him by Christ was but an accidental occasion of it; as the devil took more advantage from his now hardened and further imboldened heart, and he is twice more the child of the devil than he was before. Christ, knowing this, doth not command, advise, or exhort him; but, in a detestation, bids him go and do what he was resolved to do, and which he knew would be quickly; letting him know both that he knew what was in his heart, and that he was now ready to receive the effects of his malice.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.

How innocent are honest hearts! Charity thinketh no evil; saith the apostle. Although our Saviour had plainly enough deciphered him as the traitor, by telling John that he to whom he should give the sop was he, and then by giving it to Judas; yet whether they all did not hear what our Saviour said to John, or did not think of so sudden a tragedy, they do not suspect that the hour was at hand when Judas should perfect his intended villany: though they heard our Saviour bid him get him out, and do quickly what he had to do; yet Judas being he who carried that little stock of money which Christ had, chap. xii. 6, they thought that that which our Saviour bid him do, as a work he had undertaken to do, was laying out some money, either to buy some things which were necessary for them, for the seven days of the feast of unleavened bread; either for food for them to eat, or for sacrifices for them to offer; or that it was our Saviour's mind, that he should out of this little stock distribute something to the poor: they little thought that our Saviour's words argued a giving him over to perfect the treacherous designs which he had conceived in his heart.

30 He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night.

From hence appeareth, 1. That it is impossible to prove that Judas was with our Saviour when he instituted and celebrated the supper; though if he were, it proveth nothing of a liberty for ignorant and scandalous persons to be there, (for Judas was not such a one,) nor yet of a lawfulness for ministers of the gospel, knowing any to be such, to give the Lord's supper to them. For although Christ knew Judas's heart, yet he acted not according to his omniscience, but as the first and prime minister of the gospel, setting us an example, not to judge of secret things, but of things open only. 2. It also appeareth from hence, that it is not probable that this was any other supper than the passover supper; for if it were not, the passover supper must be after this, and this same supper preceding it. Our famous Dr. Lightfoot thinks it was a supper in Bethany, at two miles distance (or near so much) from Jerusalem. But then it must follow, 1. That John speaks nothing of the paschal supper, or the Lord's supper; and, 2. It doth by no means appear probable to me, that Judas, after such a discovery of him, should come again to eat the passover with Christ and his disciples. These things, together with what I noted before, that here is no mention made of more guests than the twelve; that the posture used (especially as to leaning) was peculiar to the paschal supper; that the discourse mentioned by this evangelist as had at this supper about the discovery of the traitor, is the same in substance (though not in terms) with what Matthew and Luke report, as passed at the passover: all these things confirm me, that it is the paschal supper that John speaketh of. Whether Judas was at the Lord's supper, which we know followed the passover immediately, depends upon the sense of the particle εὐθὺς, which we translate immediately; but doth not signify necessarily such a present departure, but the action of the Lord's supper might be first over; though in reason it seemeth to me more probable, because of those words, having received the sop, he immediately went out, that it should be here interpreted strictly, and that shame and horror should not suffer him to stay so long, as till the action of the supper was over: though whether he were at the Lord's supper (as I said before) signifieth nothing at all to the questions about mixed communion, either as to the part of the minister administering, or the people communicating.

31 ¶ Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, <sup>d ch. 12. 23.</sup> <sup>e ch. 14. 13.</sup> <sup>f ch. 17. 1.</sup> <sup>g ch. 12. 22.</sup> "Now is the Son of man glorified, and <sup>1 Pet. 4. 11.</sup> God is glorified in him.

He speaketh of that which was presently to be, as if it were already done; the meaning is, Now the time cometh when the Son of man shall immediately be glorified, by finishing the work which God hath given him to do; by rising again from the dead, and declaring himself to be the Son of God with power; by ascending up into heaven, to be glorified with the same glory which he had with the Father before the world began: and God will appear to be glorified in him, by his finishing the work which God hath given him to do, manifesting his name to the sons of men; and by the many signs and wonders which God will yet further show at the time of his death and resurrection, and by the coming down of the Holy Ghost.

32 <sup>f ch. 17. 1.</sup> <sup>g ch. 12. 22.</sup> "If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

God was glorified in Christ by his death upon the cross in obedience to his Father's will; (thus Peter, chap. xxi. 19, is said by his death to glorify God;) and as he was declared to be the Son of God; and as by him the world was brought to the knowledge of God, as by his spiritual and heavenly doctrine, so by the miracles he wrought. From hence our Lord concludeth, that God should glorify Christ in himself; so as the glory of the Father and the Son are the same, they are mutually glorified each in other: if the Son be glorified, the Father is also glorified; and if the Father be glorified, the Son is also glorified; the Father and the Son are mutually glorified each in other. And the Father (saith our Saviour) in a short time will further glorify him, by taking him up into heaven, and making the whole person of the Mediator glorious in heaven.

33 Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: <sup>h ch. 7. 34.</sup> <sup>i ch. 8. 21.</sup> and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

Our Saviour's time of death being very nigh, (for it was the next day,) he beginneth to speak of it to his disciples more freely and plainly, and to let them know that he, though now dying, bare a fatherly tender affection to them: he calls them little children. Parents have a natural affection to their children; a more tender affection to their children when little, because in their tender age they are more ignorant, and unable to provide for themselves. We find this compellation used by Christ's apostles, Gal. iv. 19; 1 John ii. 1, 28. And he tells them, that he had but now a little time to be with them before his death, and not long after his resurrection; in which, too, his converse was not such with them as it hitherto had been. Whither I go, ye cannot come; he told this to the Jews in chap. vii. 34, and now he tells them the same, that they would miss him when he was gone, and should seek him; but even the disciples at present could not follow him to heaven, whither he was going. The unbelieving Jews should never follow him thither, but even those who were his disciples, who were born again, and whom he loved as little children are beloved by their parents, should not yet follow him; his work in the world was done, but they had yet a great deal of work in it to do.

34 <sup>i Lev. 19. 18.</sup> <sup>ch. 15. 12, 17.</sup> <sup>Eph. 5. 2.</sup> <sup>1 Thes. 4. 9</sup> <sup>Jam. 2. 8.</sup> <sup>1 Pet. 1. 22.</sup> <sup>1 John 2. 7, 8. & 3. 11, 23, & 4. 21.</sup> "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

The commandment of loving one another is strictly no new commandment, we find it in the law of Moses, Lev. xix. 18; often pressed in the New Testament, chap. xv. 17; Eph. v. 2; 1 John iv. 21. St. John in his First Epistle saith, it is no new commandment, chap. ii. 7; see also 2 Epist. 6. It is therefore called a new commandment, either because of the excellency of it, as new seemeth to be taken, Psal. xxxiii. 3; Isa. lxxv. 17; Matt. xxvi. 29; or because it is expounded in the gospel in a new manner, pressed more plainly and in new arguments, and urged by a new example of their Lord and Master.

35 <sup>k 1 John 2. 5. & 4. 20.</sup> "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

A disciple hath his name, either from learning from his master, or from following his master and treading in his steps: take it in either sense, loving one another is a certain note of being Christ's disciples; for as Christ continually pressed this by his precepts, so he set them his own example, by showing the greatest love to them he could show.

36 ¶ Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but <sup>l ch. 21. 18.</sup> <sup>2 Pet. 1. 14.</sup> thou shalt follow me afterwards.

Peter yet understood not his Lord and Master, and therefore asked him whither he went? Our Saviour spake of his ascension into heaven, after his suffering death upon the cross; whither he tells Peter he could not at present follow him, but afterwards should. Believers shall be ever with the Lord, but they must wait the Lord's time, and first finish the work which he hath given them to do upon the earth.

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake.

Still Peter doth not understand our Saviour, but fancieth some earthly motion from the place where he was; but it should seem by what followeth, that he thought our Saviour spake of some motion which might be very dangerous to him; and therefore he adds, according to his usual courage and mettle, expressed on all occasions, I will lay down my life for thy sake: we had such a resolution of his, Matt. xxvi. 33, 35.

38 Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice.

Mark saith, before the cock crow twice. So the other three evangelists must be expounded, who say no more than before the cock crow, not mentioning how often; but the history makes it good, that our Saviour meant twice, for it was not before the second crowing of the cock that Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

CHAP. XIV

Christ comforteth his disciples with the promise of a heavenly mansion, 1—4. He professeth himself the way, the truth, and the life, 5—7; and that he is one with the Father, 8—11. He promiseth them power to do greater works than his own, and the grant of all that they should ask in his name, 12—14. He requirerth their obedience as a proof of their love, and giveth them a promise of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, 15—26. He leaveth his peace with them, 27—31.

The three ensuing chapters contain either one or more consolatory discourses of our Saviour to his disciples, (as appeareth from the first verse of this chapter,) made, as is probable, to them in the guest chamber (at least that part of them which we have in this chapter); for we read of no motion of our Saviour's till we come to the last verse of this chapter. That which troubled them was, what he had told them in the close of the former chapter, that he was going from them. By our Saviour's discourse in this and the two following chapters, it should seem that there were three things that troubled them. 1. The sense of their loss as to his bodily presence. 2. The fear, that with the loss of that they should also lose those spiritual influences which they had received from him, and upon which their souls had lived. 3. The prospect of those storms of troubles and persecutions, which were likely to follow his departure from them; for if we wisely consider what our Saviour saith in these three following chapters, it all tends to comfort them as to troubles that might arise in their spirits, upon one or other of these accounts: the general proposition is laid down in the first verse of this chapter.

LET *not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.

Let not your heart be troubled, through grief, or fear, which are the two passions which ordinarily most disturb our minds. Our Saviour himself was troubled, but not sinfully; his trouble neither arose from unbelief, nor yet was in an undue measure; it was (as one well expresseth it) like the mere agitation of clear water, where was no mud at the bottom: but our trouble is like the stirring of water that hath a great deal of mud at the bottom, which upon the roiling, riseth up, and maketh the whole body of the water in the vessel impure, roiled and muddy. It is this sinful trouble, caused from these two passions, and rising up to an immoderate degree, and mixed with a great deal of unbelief and distrust in God, against which our Saviour here cautioneth his disciples; and the remedy he prescribes against those afflicting passions, is a believing in God, and a believing on him. The two latter passages in the verse are so penned in the Greek, that they may be read four ways; for the verb believe, twice repeated, may be read either indicatively or imperatively, or the one may be read indicatively and the other imperatively; so as they may be translated, You believe in God, you believe also in me. And so they teach us, that there is no such remedy for inward troubles, as a believing in God, and a believing in Jesus Christ; and those that do so, have no just reason for any excessive heart-troubles. Or else they may be read, Believe in God, believe in me; or else as we read them, Ye believe in God, believe also in me: or, Believe in God, ye believe in me. But the disciples' faith in Christ as Mediator, and God-man, being yet weak, and their weakness being what our Saviour hath ordinarily blamed, not magnified, or commended, the best interpreters judge the sense which our translators give to be the best sense; and judge that our Saviour doth inculcate to them his Divine nature, and again offer himself to them as the proper object of their faith. You (saith he) own it for your duty to trust in God, as your Creator, and he that provideth for you: believe also in me, as God equal with my Father; and in me, as the Messiah, your Mediator and Redeemer: so as you have one to take care of all your concerns, both those of your bodies, and those of your souls also, so as you have nothing to be immoderately and excessively, or distrustfully, troubled for; therefore let not your hearts be troubled; only, without care or distrust, commit yourselves to me.

2 In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. <sup>b</sup>I go to prepare a place for <sup>ch. 13, 33, 36.</sup> you.

Our Lord's first argument brought to comfort them, from the place whither he was going, and the end of his going thither. The place whither he was going was his Father's house, so as they needed not to be troubled for him, he was but going home; nor was God his Father only, but theirs also, as he afterwards saith, I go to my Father, and your Father. And here he tells them, that in his Father's house there was not only a mansion, that is, an abiding place for him, but for many others also. Our days on the earth (saith David, 1 Chron. xxix. 15) are as a shadow, and there is no abiding; but in heaven there are μοναί, abiding places. We shall (saith the apostle, 1 Thess. iv. 17) be ever with the Lord. And the mansions there are many; there is room enough for all believers. I would not have deceived you; if there had been no place in heaven but for me, I would have told you of it; but there are many mansions there. I go to prepare a place for you: the place was prepared of old; those who shall be saved, were of old ordained unto life. That kingdom was prepared for them before the foundation of the world; that is, in the counsels and immutable purpose of God. These mansions for believers in heaven were to be sprinkled with blood: the sprinkling of the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry, were typical of it; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these, saith the apostle, Heb. ix. 21, 23. By his resurrection from the dead, and becoming the first-fruits of those that sleep; by his ascension into heaven, as our forerunner, Heb. vi. 20; by his sitting at the right hand of God, and making intercession for us; he preparerth for us a place in heaven. And thus he comforteth his disciples, (as to the want of his bodily presence,) as from the consideration of the place whither he went, so from the end of his going thither, which was, to do those acts which were necessary in order to his disciples' inheriting those blessed mansions which were prepared for them from before the foundation of the world.

3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, <sup>c</sup>I will come again, and receive you <sup>ver. 16, 28</sup> unto myself; that <sup>Acts 1. 11.</sup> "where I am, <sup>d ch. 12. 28.</sup> there ye <sup>e 17. 24.</sup> may be also. <sup>1 Thess. 4. 17.</sup>

The particle if in this place denoteth no uncertainty of the thing whereof he had before assured them; but in this place hath either the force of although, or after that: When, or after that, I have died, ascended, and by all these acts, as also by my intercession, shall have made places in heaven fully ready for you, I will in the last day return again, as Judge of the quick and the dead, and take you up into heaven, 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; that you may be made partakers of my glory, John xvii. 22. This is called, Rom. viii. 17, a being glorified together with him; and elsewhere, a reigning with him. So as this is a third argument by which our Lord comforteth his disciples as to their trouble conceived for the want of his bodily presence with them, from the certainty of his return to them, and the end and consequent of his return : the end was to receive them to himself ; the consequent, their eternal abiding with Christ where he was.

4 And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

Christ, ver. 33 of the former chapter, had dignified his disciples with the familiar, loving title of little children. It is pleasant to consider how he continueth his discourse to them in such a dialect as a mother would speak to a little child crying after her, seeing her preparing herself to go abroad. The child cries : the mother bids it be still, she is but going to such a friend's house. It still cries : she tells it, she is but going to prepare a place for it there where it shall be much happier than it is at home. It is not yet satisfied : she tells it again, that though she goes, she will come again, and then it shall go along with her, and she will part no more from it. The child is yet impatient : she again endeavoureth to still it, telling it that it knoweth whither she goeth, and it knows the way, by which, if need be, it may come to her.

5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest ; and how can we know the way ?

Reason tells every one, that he who knoweth not the term whither a person is going, must needs be ignorant of the way. It is plain, that Thomas, and so (probably) divers others of the apostles, notwithstanding what our Saviour had so plainly told them, ver. 2, yet dreamed of some earthly motion our Saviour was making, which makes Thomas to speak thus : so dull are we, and hard to conceive of spiritual things. But will some say, Doth not Thomas here contradict his Master, who had told them, ver. 4, that they both knew whither he went, and the way also ? Answ. Some think that our Saviour meant no more than they ought to have known, both whither he went, and the way also ; active verbs in Scripture phrase, often signifying no more than duty, or ability. But possibly others answer better, They had some knowledge, but it was more confused and general ; not distinct, particular, or certain.

6 Jesus saith unto him, I am <sup>e</sup> the way, <sup>f</sup> the truth, and <sup>g</sup> the life : <sup>h</sup> no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

Christ was his own way to his Father ; By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, Heb. ix. 12. See Luke xxiv. 26 ; Phil. ii. 8. But both the former words, where the apostle spake of the way they should go, and the following words, hint to us, that Christ is here speaking of their way, not his own. As to them, he saith, I am the way ; that is, the way by which those must get to heaven who will ever come there. Christ is our way to heaven by the doctrine which he taught ; by his death, by which he purchased this heavenly inheritance for us ; by his holy life and conversation, setting us an example that we should follow his steps ; by the influence of his Spirit, guiding us to, and assisting us in, those holy actions by which we must come unto glory. He is the truth ; that is, say some, the true way to life eternal : but he is the truth as to his doctrine, the gospel being the word of truth, Eph. i. 13 ; and as truth signifies reality and accomplishment, in opposition to the prophecies and promises, all being but words till they were in him fulfilled ; in which sense we read of the true tabernacle, and the true holy places, Heb. viii. 2 ; ix. 24 : or as truth is opposed to falsehood, as truth is taken John viii. 44 ; Rom. iii. 7. And he is the life, the Author and Giver of eternal life, John xi. 25 ; 1 John v. 11 ; and the purchaser of it by his death ; he who by his doctrine showeth the way to it, and by his Holy Spirit begins it, and carrieth it on to perfection. The Jews thought the way to it was by the law of Moses ; but our Saviour teacheth his disciples out of that opinion : for if the law could have given life, Christ had died in vain, as the apostle argueth. Therefore (saith he) there is no coming to the Father but by me ; no way for you or any other, to come to heaven, but by receiving, and embracing, and believing in me.

7 If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also : and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.

If ye had known me as you ought to have known me, as I am indeed the eternal Son of God, sent by my Father into the world, you should have known my Father, with whom I am equal, and one and the same God, so as in knowing one of us, you must have known both : but you stick in my outward form and appearance, while I appear to you in the form of a man ; and you stick in your prejudices sucked in from the notion you have of the Messiah, expecting I know not what temporal prince : these things blind you as to my Divine nature, (personally united to my human nature,) that you see nothing of my Godhead, which if you had clearly known and believed, you would not have been at a loss to know the Father, the brightness of whose glory, and the express image of whose person, I am, though my glory be veiled by my human nature. And if you will yet believe what I say, from henceforth you do know the Father, and you have seen the Father so oft as you have seen me.

8 Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us.

Still Philip understandeth not our Saviour, and further discovereth a very gross conception of the Divine Being, as if it could be seen with mortal eyes ; whereas God had told Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 20, Thou canst not see my face ; for there shall no man see me, and live. It is a hard thing to determine what degrees of ignorance are consistent or inconsistent with saving grace in souls ; the resolution of which doth much depend upon those degrees of revelation and means of knowledge which men have.

9 Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip ? <sup>k</sup> he that hath seen me hath seen the Father ; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father ?

Our Saviour still insisteth upon the oneness of himself with his Father, and the personal union of the Divine and human nature in him ; for otherwise the apostles might have been with Christ a long time, and known him, and yet not have seen nor known the Father. But that supposed, none that had seen Christ, but must have seen the Father also, there being but one God.

10 Believest thou not that <sup>l</sup> I am in the Father, and the Father in me ? the words that I speak unto you <sup>m</sup> I speak not of myself : but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

I am in the Father, and the Father in me. It is the opinion of Mr. Calvin, that these words are not here spoken so much to express his Divine nature and being, (for so Christ is no more known to us than his Father,) as to express his manner of revealing it. Yet is the Divine nature of Christ fully proved from hence. Others judge, that these words do clearly signify both the distinction of persons, for nothing is in itself, and also the union of the persons in the Divine Being. He proveth his union with the Father, because he spake not those words which he spake of himself ; that is, not of himself solely ; he revealed but his Father's will, and declared his Father's mind ; and because the works which he did, he did not by his own sole power, without the concurrence of his Father's power in those operations.

11 Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me : or else believe me for the very works' sake.

Believe my words (for that is your duty) ; but yet if you will not believe my words, declaring to you my union with my Father, yet when you see me doing such works as none but God can do, believe me for their sake. It is true, that both the prophets and the apostles spake God's words, not their own, to the people, and also did many great and mighty works ; but still their doctrine led unto another, that was Christ ; and their miracles were not wrought in

<sup>e</sup> Heb. 9. 8.
<sup>f</sup> ch. 1. 17.
<sup>g</sup> 8. 32.
<sup>h</sup> ch. 1. 4.
<sup>i</sup> 11. 25.
<sup>j</sup> ch. 10. 9.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 12. 45.
<sup>l</sup> Col. 1. 15.
<sup>m</sup> Heb. 1. 3.

<sup>l</sup> ver. 20.
<sup>m</sup> ch. 10. 38. & 17. 21, 23.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 5. 19.
<sup>o</sup> 7. 16. & 8. 28. & 12. 49.

<sup>p</sup> ch. 5. 36.
& 10. 38.

their own names, but in the name of Christ. Elijah raised the Shunammite's dead child to life by prayer to God that he would do it; and the apostles bid the lame man arise and walk, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ's doctrine terminated in himself; he called men to believe in him, and he wrought miracles by his own power, and by a virtue proceeding out of and from himself, though by the power of his Father also, because he and his Father were one in essence.

o. Mat. 21. 21.
Mark 16. 17.
Luke 10. 17. 12 ° Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.

He that believeth on me; not every individual soul that believeth on me; but some of those, particularly you that are my apostles, and shall be filled with the Holy Ghost in the days of Pentecost; you shall preach the gospel, and work miracles for the confirmation of the truth of the doctrine of it. Yea, and you shall do greater works than I have done: not more or greater miracles: the truth of that may be justly questioned; for what miracle was ever done by the apostles greater than that of raising Lazarus? Much less do I think that it is to be understood of speaking with divers tongues. It is rather to be understood of their successful carrying the gospel to the Gentiles, by which the whole world, almost, was brought to the obedience of the faith of Christ. We never read that of Christ which we read of Peter, viz. his converting three thousand at one sermon. Because I go unto my Father, he afterwards expoundeth, telling us, that if he did not go away, the Comforter would not come. The pouring out of the Spirit in the days of Pentecost, was the proximate cause of those great works. Now Christ's going to the Father had an influence upon that mission of the Holy Spirit.

p. Mat. 7. 7.
& 21. 22.
Mark 11. 24.
Luke 11. 9.
ch. 15. 7, 16.
& 16. 23, 24.
Jam. 1. 5. 1 John 3. 22. & 5. 14. 13 P And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

The whatsoever, in this text, must be limited by what the will of God hath revealed in other texts, as to the matter of our prayers; viz. they must be things that are for our good; such things as we stand in need of, and as God hath given us a liberty to ask: and indeed no other things can be asked in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; for to ask in Christ's name, signifieth not only the making use of his sacred name in our prayers, (though the constant practice of the church in prayer, hath evidenced it the general opinion of divines, that this is a part of the sense,) but also in asking for his merits, and such things as shall be conformable to his will, and for his glory. Whatsoever (saith he) you shall ask of this nature, I will do. He doth not say, my Father will do, but I will do it; to testify his Divine power, and oneness in power with his Father. That the Father may be glorified in the Son: God hath set up his rest in Christ, and will be glorified in and through him; and hath therefore given him all power in heaven and earth.

14 If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

The words are doubled for the further confirmation of them, that we might not doubt when we put up our petitions to God in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, according to the will of God.

q. ver. 21, 23.
ch. 15. 10, 14.
1 John 5. 3. 15 ¶ If ye love me, keep my commandments.

Do not show your love to me in mourning, and being troubled for my going from you; but show it by your obedience to what I have commanded you. True love must not evaporate in compliment, but discover itself in a strict observance of the commandments of God.

r. ch. 15. 26.
& 16. 7.
Rom. 8. 15.
28. 16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

This verse containeth a new argument by which our Saviour relieveth his disciples under their affliction for the want of his bodily presence; that is, the mission of the Holy Spirit, another Comforter; as our translation reads it.

For this he saith that he will pray the Father; not that himself had no concern in the mission of the blessed Spirit; for himself telleth us, chap. xvi. 7, that he would send him; only for the attestation, 1. Of his human nature; 2. Of himself, as our Mediator; and, 3. Of his Father's concern, as well as his own, in sending the Holy Spirit; he here saith, I will pray the Father, and he shall send you another Comforter. That term another, signifieth the personal distinction of the Third from the First and Second Person in the blessed Trinity. And the name here given to the blessed Spirit, Παράκλητον, (which we too narrowly translate comforter;) is a term exceedingly proper to signify all the operations of the blessed Spirit in and upon the souls of his people. The same word, 1 John ii. 1, where it is applied to Christ, (as here it is to the Spirit,) is there much better translated Advocate; and it is most probable that our translators here translate it Comforter, because he is here promised to the disciples troubled, as fitted to their present distress. The verb from whence the word deriveth, signifies not to comfort only, but to exhort, and to be an advocate for another. Now it belongs to the office of an advocate to suggest to his client what may be for his advantage; which is also the office of the blessed Spirit: if he seeth his client in an error, to reprove and to convince him; which is also the work of the Spirit, John xvi. 8: if he seeth him weak and discouraged, to uphold, strengthen, and encourage him; this is also the Spirit's work, Eph. iii. 16: if he seeth him running into an error, to restrain him; if he findeth him dull and heavy, to quicken him; if he seeth him ready to be run down, to defend him; if he hath any thing to do in the court, to prepare and dram it up for him, and, as occasion serveth, to speak for him. All these things (as might be largely showed) fall within the office of an advocate, and under the comprehensive term here used. And (saith our Saviour) he shall abide with you for ever: I shall be with you but for a while, but he shall abide with you to eternity (as some observe this word is constantly used by this evangelist). So that the promise of the Spirit is not to be restrained only to the apostles and their successors in the ministry, or to be understood only of those extraordinary gifts bestowed on the apostles and first ministers of the gospel; but to be extended further, both with reference to persons and influences: and without doubt the influences of the Spirit, both as to gifts and graces, both upon ministers and more private Christians, are much more plentiful since the sending of the Holy Ghost, after Christ's ascension, in the days of Pentecost, than ever they were before: not as to particular persons; a David, a Solomon, or some particular persons, might have greater measures than any or the most have since had; but as to the generality of ministers and Christians. Doubtless, since the pouring out of the Spirit in the days of Pentecost, there have been greater measures of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit given out, and will be to the end of the world, than ever was in any age before Christ's ascension; which is no more than what was prophesied, Isa. xlv. 3; Joel ii. 28, applied to the days of Pentecost, Acts ii. 17, but not to be limited to that time or age, either for gifts or gracious habits: for as the extraordinary gifts and powers held in some degree after the apostles' age, (if we may give any credit to ecclesiastical history,) so both in those ages, and ever since, as to the generality both of ministers and Christians, (that is, such as are mentioned ver. 15, that love Christ, and keep his commandments,) there have been fuller measures of gifts, of more constant, standing use for the church, such as those of knowledge and utterance, &c., and also of inward graces, than ever before was.

17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

He here explaineth himself, and tells them, that by that other Comforter, mentioned ver. 16, he meant the Spirit; whom he here calls the Spirit of truth, either because he is a Spirit that declareth and revealeth the truth, as in 1 John v. 6, or because he teacheth us truth, 1 John ii. 27, he guideth us into all truth, John xvi. 13; or in opposition to the lying spirit of the devil, 1 Kings xxii. 22. Most probably the Holy Spirit is here called the Spirit of truth, because of the efficiency he hath as to it. It is he who hath revealed all the truth contained in the Scriptures to the world. Holy men wrote as they were inspired by him, Acts i. 16; 2 Pet. i. 21. It is he that more particularly and specially revealeth truth to the particular soul, 1 Cor. ii. 12: hence persons enlightened, are said to be made partakers of the Holy Ghost, Heb. vi. 4. He leadeth his people into truth, chap. xvi. 13; he sealeth and confirmeth truth to the soul: hence we read of the demonstration of the Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 4. This Spirit of truth, the world, that is, men of carnal hearts, that are of the world, and in whom worldly lusts predominate, 1 John ii. 16; chap. xvii. 9; this world, through natural impotency, 1 Cor. ii. 14, through wisdom, 1 Cor. i. 21, through lusts and passions, cannot receive, that is, be made partakers of; because it neither seeth him, who is not to be seen with mortal eyes, nor knoweth him affectionately and experimentally; he being not to be known by men whose hearts are carnal and full of lusts: but ye know him believingly, experimentally, affectionately, savingly; for he dwelleth in you by a mystical union, Rom. viii. 11; 1 Cor. vi. 17; and he shall abide with you, by his dwelling in you, and influences upon you.

x Mat. 28:20.

1 Cor.

orphans.

y ver. 3, 28.

18 *I will not leave you || comfortless:

† I will come to you.

Comfortless; the word in the Greek is, orphans, persons without father and mother, who for the most part are the most comfortless persons; therefore it is translated comfortless: Christ hath a care, not only of the people's salvation and life, but also of their comforts while they are here; he will not leave his people without proportionable comfort for their distresses. I will come to you; in the Greek it is, I do come to you, to denote the certainty and the suddenness of his coming; which is either to be understood of his resurrection, which was (as we know) after the absence of three days; or, which is more probable, (for after his resurrection he stayed with them but a few days,) in and by his blessed Spirit, (for the Spirit is called the Spirit of Christ,) who was to come, and to abide with them for ever. Though it may also have a reference to his coming again to judge both the quick and the dead, to receive them to himself, that (as he said before) they might always be where he was; but the two former senses are understood as more specially relating to their present distresses, upon account of his bodily absence from them.

z ch. 16. 15.

a 1 Cor. 15.

20.

19 Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but, *ye see me: *because I live, ye shall live also.

The world seeth me now only with fleshly eyes; it will be but a little while, and the men of the world shall be able to see me no more; I shall be crucified, and laid in the grave; and though I shall rise again, yet I shall not be seen of them: (we read of no appearances of him after his resurrection, but to his disciples;) but ye see me, or shall see me; so they did often after his resurrection with their bodily eyes; or it may be understood of a spiritual sight by the eye of faith, or of a sight of experience; as seeing often in Scripture signifieth enjoying. Because I live, that is, I shall live by my resurrection from the dead, and by my glorious ascension into heaven, you also shall live the life of grace here; and though your bodies must die, because of sin, yet your souls shall upon the death of your bodies live; and in the resurrection, both your souls and bodies shall live, and together be glorified with me: all this grace and mercy shall flow out to you from me as Mediator, and because I live.

b ver. 10.

ch. 10. 38. &

17. 21, 23, 26.

20 At that day ye shall know that † I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you.

Some understand our Saviour here speaking of the day of his resurrection; others interpret it of the days of Pentecost, when there should be such an effusion of the blessed Spirit: but the following words discover, that it is best interpreted of the day of judgment, and the general resurrection: for they speak of two great mysteries, which the disciples should understand in that day which is here spoken of; to wit, the personal union of Christ with his Father, and the mystical union of believers with Christ: as to both which, though the apostles and believers knew much more after Christ's resurrection, and the pouring forth of the Spirit in the days of Pentecost, than they knew before those times; yet it is a very imperfect knowledge they ever had, or yet have, of those mysterious unions; but in the resurrection we shall understand these things clearly.

21 *He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

c ver. 15, 25.
1 John 2. 5.
5. 3.

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: our Lord here doth repeat what he had before said, ver. 15, declaring that there is no infallible indication of our love to Christ, but obedience, which is here expressed under two notions. 1. Having Christ's commandments and keeping them: they must both concur to make a true indication of our love to Christ. It is possible that men may have Christ's commandments in their ears, in their notion, in their mouths, and yet not keep them; they may hear them, they may know and remember them, they may talk of them, yet they may not keep them; for keeping them denotes universal, diligent and industrious, steady and constant obedience to them; and this alone will speak our love to Christ. And if any man thus declareth his love to Christ, Christ declareth, that both he and his Father will take a pleasure and delight in him to do him good; and he shall not live only under the real benefits of his love to him, but under the sensible manifestations of it. Here is no mention of the Spirit's coming with the Father and the Son, because the Son dwelleth in us by the Spirit.

22 † Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, † Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

Jude the brother of James, Jude 1, the son of Alpheus; not Judas the son of Simon, who, from the city whence he was, was called Iscariot, and was the traitor; asks our Saviour, how it was, or wherefore it was, that he would manifest himself to them, and not to the world? This question either proceeded out of ignorance, not aright understanding of what manifestation of himself Christ here spake; or out of a pious desire that all might be made partakers of the same grace with them; or out of the apostle's modest opinion of himself and his brethren; as if he had said, Lord, what are we that thou shouldst speak of any more special manifestation of thy love to us, than to the rest of the world? or out of a deep admiration of God's unsearchable judgments in leaving some of the world, while he made choice of others to dignify with such special distinguishing favours, hiding those things from the wise and prudent which he revealed to babes.

23 Jesus answered and said unto him, *If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, † and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

e ver. 15.

f 1 John 2.

24.

Rev. 3. 20.

If any man love Christ, he will keep Christ's words; that is, he will study and endeavour to keep the commandments of Christ; for if nothing evidenced a true love to Christ but a perfect obedience to his will, none could comfort himself from his obedience, or conclude his love to Christ from it; but he that loveth Christ, will make it his business to be obedient to him in those things that he hath commanded, and are within his power. And my Father will love him; and my Father will manifest his love to him in further dispensations of his grace; for it cannot be understood of God's eternal love, nor yet of his love in justification and regeneration; for till the man or woman be justified and regenerated, he will never study and endeavour obedience to the will of God. This love of God is the cause, not the effect of our obedience; but love in this verse must be expounded by manifesting in the former verse; and this is certain, that the manifestations of Divine love to our souls depend upon our walking with God. This is also meant by God the Father and Christ's coming to those that love him, and keep his commandments; viz. a coming in the sweet influences of Divine grace, suited to the soul's various necessities: nay, our Lord promiseth, not only his and his Father's coming to, but their making an abode with such as love him, and keep his commandments. Here the abiding of the First and Second Person in the Trinity with believers; the abiding of the Third Person with them is also promised, ver. 16; which all make that presence of God with them, so often promised to them in holy writ. Thus our Saviour answereth one part of what Judas said, How is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us? Because, saith our Saviour, you love me, and keep my words: for though no love, no works of ours, foreseen or seen, be the cause of eternal love, or the first grace; yet it is so much a cause of further grace, especially in the sensible manifestations of it, that no soul must expect it that doth not love Christ, and keep his words. He also further gives them a reason, as to the second thing he asked, why he did not manifest himself to the world?

24 He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

Because they did not love him, nor keep his sayings, their sin was aggravated; because the words which he spake were not his will only, but the will of his Father who had sent him into the world, to reveal his will to the sons of men.

25 These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

That is, as to his bodily presence: For more than three years I have been fulfilling a ministry amongst you, and have spoken many things to you.

26 But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

The word is the same which was so translated before; (see the import of it, ver. 16, 17;) he is here called the Comforter, and the Spirit of truth; here, the Holy Spirit. The Father here is said to send in the name, that is, with the authority and upon the mediation, of the Lord Jesus Christ: and two pieces of the Spirit's work, besides comforting, are here expressed. He shall teach you all things; he shall more fully explain to you all things. Three of the apostles themselves had already in this chapter discovered great degrees of ignorance as to the doctrine of the Trinity, Christ's union or oneness with his Father, &c. You shall not be left (saith our Saviour) in this ignorance; for when the Holy Spirit shall come, he shall more fully and perfectly instruct you in all things, in which I have already instructed you, and which are necessary for you to know in order to your eternal happiness. And bring all things to your remembrance; whatsoever I have said unto you; and shall bring to your remembrance the things I have taught you, so as you shall more fully and clearly understand them; and though you may have forgotten them, yet they shall by the Holy Spirit be revived in your memories; so as they shall not be like water spilt on the ground, which cannot again be gathered up, but like seed sown in the earth; which, though it may at present rot, and die under the clouds, or at least not spring up, yet it shall spring up, and bring forth desired fruit. It is one great work of the Holy Spirit, to bring the revelations of holy writ to our remembrance, and withal to clear to us the sense of them, and confirm our faith in them, and chiefly quicken us to practise what is our duty: but it is to be observed, that the Spirit doth not make revelations of new notions; it only brings to our remembrance what Christ hath said, and further revealeth what was before in the word revealed, though possibly particular persons were ignorant of such revelations of the word: so things may be new, and newly revealed to us, which in themselves are not so. There are no new truths, but particular persons may have new discoveries of old truth, which they had before misapprehensions of.

27 Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

Peace be with you, or to you, was the Jewish common salutation, 1 Sam. xxv. 6; under that general name they comprehended all manner of good: with this good wish they both saluted their friends when they met them, and took their farewell of them when they left them. Christ, being now about to take his leave for a time of his disciples, wisheth them peace; nay, he doth not only wish it to them, but he leaves it to them; he giveth it them as a legacy; and that in another kind of peace, and in another manner, than was common. He therefore calls it his peace revealed in the gospel, Eph. vi. 15; purchased with his blood, Rom. v. 1; brought to the soul by his Spirit, by which we are sealed to the day of redemption. Christ's peace is either union or reconciliation with God, or the copy of it, which is a quiet of conscience, and assurance of his love; or a union with men by brotherly love, so often commended and pressed by Christ. Nor doth Christ give this peace as the men of the world give peace; who often wish peace earnestly, never considering what it is they say; often falsely, formally wishing peace, when they are about to strike those to whom they wish it under the fifth rib; and when they are most serious, wish it, but cannot give it. Christ leaves it to his disciples for a legacy, giveth it to them as a gift; if they want it, it is their own fault: therefore, as in the first verse, so here again he saith, Let not your heart be troubled; and adds, neither let it be afraid. Fear is one of those passions which most usually and potentially doth disturb the hearts and minds of men; but there was no reason it should have this ill influence on Christ's disciples, because he had left them peace for his legacy, and the gifts of God are without repentance; and, if God be for us, (saith the apostle, Rom. viii. 31,) who, or what, can be against us?

28 Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.

Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you; they had heard our Saviour saying so, ver. 3. It is of the nature of true love, to rejoice in the good of the object beloved, as much as in its own, nay, before its own. Saith our Saviour, if ye loved me, that is, as ye ought to love me, (for our Lord had before owned that they did love him, giving it as a reason why he rather revealed himself and manifested himself to them, than to the world, ver. 23,) you would not have been so unreasonably disturbed at my telling you that I shall leave you; because I not only told you that I would come again to you, but because I told you that I was going to my Father, ver. 2; from whom though I was never separated, as I am God over all blessed for ever, yet my human nature was yet never glorified with him; so that I shall be there much happier than here; being highly exalted, and having a name given me above every name, Phil. ii. 9. For my Father is greater than I: not greater in essence, (as the Arians and Socinians would have it,) he had many times before asserted the contrary; but greater, 1. Either as to the order amongst the Divine Persons; because the Father beget, the Son is begotten; the Father is he from whom the Son proceeded by eternal generation: in which sense, divers of the ancients, amongst whom Athanasius, Cyril, and Augustine, and some modern interpreters, understand it. Or, 2. As a Mediator sent from the Father, so he is greater than I. Or, 3. In respect of my present state, while I am here in the form of a servant; and in my state of humiliation: which seemeth to be the best interpretation, if we consider the words before, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for the true reason of that joy must have been, because Christ in his glorious state of exaltation would be much more happy than he had been in his state of humiliation, while he was exposed to the scoffs, reproaches, and injuries of men, the temptations of Satan, &c.

29 And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

Evils that surprise us are always the most heavy, and load our spirits. Saith our Saviour, Before these things g ver. 10.

ch. 5. 19, 20.
& 7. 15. & 8.
26. & 12. 45.

h ver. 16.
Luk. 24. 49.
ch. 15. 25.
& 16. 7.
i ch. 2. 22.
& 12. 16. &
14. 13.
j John 2.
20, 27.

k Phil. 4. 7.
Col. 3. 15.

l ver. 1.

m ver. 3. 18.

n ver. 12.
ch. 16. 16.
& 20. 17.
o See ch. 5.
18. & 10. 30.
Phil. 2. 6.

p ch. 12. 18.
& 15. 4.

come to pass, I have given you notice of them, that, when you see them come to pass, you might not be overwhelmed with sorrow and trouble, to the hinderance of your faith in me; but understanding that I have told you the truth, before the thing come to pass, you may be assured that I am not mere man, but truly God; and receive and embrace me, and rest upon me as your Saviour.

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: <sup>9</sup>for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me.

I shall not have much time hereafter to reveal my mind to you, my suffering is very near; the devil, who is the prince of this world, chap. xii. 31; (see the notes there;) xvi. 11; Eph. vi. 12; he cometh by the evil angels, or rather by vile and wicked men, as his instruments, Judas and the soldiers. He doth not say wherefore he came, but it is easily understood. And he hath nothing in me that he can justly fault, and take advantage against me, for he findeth no guilt in me to give him any advantage against me; I shall die as an innocent person, and be cut off, but not for myself, (as it was prophesied of the Messiah, Dan. ix. 26,) but (as it is there, ver. 24,) to finish transgression, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness.

31 But that the world may know that I love the Father; and <sup>1</sup>as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.

I die not for my own sin; but being found in fashion as a man, I humbled myself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, (as Phil. ii. 8,) to let the world know, that I love the Father, and am obedient to him, doing even so as he hath commanded me. Arise, let us go hence; arise from supper, (after which they were wont sometimes to lengthen out discourse,) the supper in Bethany, as some think; but to me it seems more probable (as I said before) to be the passover supper, and the Lord's supper which immediately followed that; and let us go hence, out of the guest chamber, where the passover was to be administered. So as it is most probable, that the discourses in the two next chapters were as they went along in the way to Mount Olivet. In this discourse our Saviour hath most applied himself to relieve his disciples upon their disturbance for their want of our Saviour's bodily presence.

CHAP. XV

Under the parable of a vine Christ setteth forth God's government of his church, and exhorteth his disciples to abide in his faith and doctrine, 1—11. He commandeth them to love one another, according to the great love he had showed for them, 12—17; forewarneth them of the hatred and persecution of the world, 18—25; and telleth them of the testimony which the Holy Ghost, and they also, should bear to him, 26, 27.

As our Saviour in the former chapter had chiefly spent his discourse for the relief of his disciples under their trouble for the want of his bodily presence, so he seemeth in this chiefly to bend his discourse for the comfort of them under their disturbance, for fear they should, together with the want of the comfort they had in his bodily presence, want also his spiritual influences; to prevent which, he compareth himself to a vine, then to the branches; and sheweth by that similitude the near union they had with him, and the influence he would and must have upon them, so long as they did abide with him. From the 18th verse to the end he comforts them by a variety of arguments against that black storm of persecution, which he had so often told them would arise after his departure from them, from the hatred of the world, of wicked men, both Jews and Gentiles, that were enemies to the cross of Christ; as to which he comforts them by a variety of arguments to the end of the chapter, and continueth his discourse of that nature also in the following chapter.

I AM the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.

Christ had but newly come from his last supper, wherein he had sanctified the fruit of the vine, by setting it apart as one of the elements in that holy sacrament, and told them, that he would no more drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God should come, Luke xxii. 18. This (as some suppose) gave occasion to this parable, or discourse about the vine. Others think, that in his passage from the guest chamber to the Mount Olivet he saw a vine, which gave occasion to this discourse, it being with him very ordinary to graft spiritual discourses upon sensible objects occasionally occurring; as, chap. iv., he raised a discourse of living water upon the sight of the water at Jacob's well, and the woman's discourse about it; and, chap. vi., he founded another discourse concerning the bread of life, upon the loaves that were multiplied. Whatever the occasion was, (of which we can affirm nothing certainly), certain it is, that the notion of a vine, with respect to the root and body of it, (for he calls his disciples the branches,) excellently agreeth to Christ, whether in respect of his present low condition, and mean appearance to the world, (as a vine hath less beauty than most plants,) or in respect of its exceeding fruitfulness; or as it is the basis and foundation of the branches, in which they are, and thrive, and are fruitful; which seemeth here to be chiefly intended; as all the branches are united to the vine, in it they live, bud, bear fruit. There are three principal things which our Saviour teacheth us by this similitude: 1. That we have no ability to do good but from Christ. 2. That believers have a true and real union with the Lord Jesus, which while they uphold by faith and holiness, they shall not want his influence upon them, nor his Father's care over them, in purging them, that they may bring forth much fruit. 3. That if any professing him prove unfruitful, God will take them away; they shall wither, be cast into the fire, and burned. He calls himself the true vine, to show them that their fruit was not in themselves, but must be found in him; or that their fruit could not proceed from Moses, the observance of the ritual or moral law given them by him; but it must flow from their spiritual union with him, and that influence of grace which should flow from that union. Or else true (as sometimes it doth in Scripture) may signify excellent. As he compareth himself to the true vine, by which he signifieth to us that he is the true root and support of our spiritual life and fruit; so he compareth his Father to the husbandman, to let us know, that his people are not only under his, but under his Father's care; which he afterwards more particularly openeth. He also, ver. 2, compareth believers, or members of the church, to branches in a vine.

2 <sup>a</sup>Every branch in me that beareth <sup>a</sup>Mat. 15.13. not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

And concerning his Father's care, he tells us, that as the good vine-dresser cutteth off those branches in the vine which bring forth no fruit, so his Father will take away such branches in him as bring forth no fruit. But here ariseth a question, viz. Whether, or how, any can be branches in Christ, and yet bring forth no fruit? Answer. 1. Some say, there is no need of translating the words so, which may as well be translated, Every branch not bringing forth fruit in me. Indeed no true fruit can be brought forth but in Christ; but yet much that looks like fruit, much that men may call fruit, may be brought forth without any true spiritual union with Christ. All acts of moral discipline, or any acts of formal profession in religion, may be brought forth without any true root and foundation in Christ; and God will in the end discover and cut off, those who bring forth no other fruit. But, 2. Men may be said to be branches in him, by a sacramental implantation, being baptized into him, Rom. vi. 3; and are hereby members of the visible church, and make a visible profession of adhering to him, with respect to their own good opinion and persuasions of themselves, though they be not so in respect of any true, spiritual, and real implantation. But those who in the last sense are not in him, bring forth no fruit unto perfection, and God will cut them off, either by withdrawing his restraining grace, and giving them up to strong delusions to believe lies; or to a reprobate mind, and vile lusts and affections; or by taking away their gifts; or some way or other, so as they shall never have an eternal communion with God in glory. But if any man bringeth forth true spiritual fruit in Christ, him God the Father will purge, by the sprinkling of Christ's blood yet further upon his conscience, Heb. x. 22; and by his Holy Spirit working on him like fire, to purge away his dross, and like water, to purge away his filth; and by his word, 1 Pet. i. 22, by faith, Acts xv. 9, by crosses and trials, Isa. i. 25; xxvii. 9; that he may be more fruitful in works of holiness and righteousness.

3 <sup>b</sup> Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

Now that the traitor is gone out from you, ye are all clean; not by any works which you do, much less upon the account of any legal and ceremonial rites and purifications; but through my word, your believing and obeying, Eph. v. 26; 1 Pet. i. 22. Our cleansing is in holy writ attributed sometimes to the blood of Christ, sometimes to the Spirit, sometimes to the word. By the blood of Christ we are made clean as to justification, washed; but yet we had need wash our feet, contracting soil every day in a sinful world, from which we are cleansed by the purifying virtue of the Holy Spirit, working by and together with the word, which purgeth us of our dross, and maketh us obedient to the will of God.

4 <sup>a</sup> Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

This our abiding in Christ is expounded, by an abiding in his words, ver. 7, by abiding in his love, ver. 10, an abiding in his Spirit, 1 John ii. 27, a walking as Christ walked, 1 John ii. 6, an abiding in the light, ver. 10, not sinning, 1 John iii. 6. The exhortation is, without doubt, to a holiness of life and conversation, by which our union and communion with Christ is upheld and maintained, and which is in itself an abiding in the love of Christ: nor is there a want of sufficient reason for this exhortation, though our union with Christ cannot be dissolved, nor our communion with him wholly interrupted; because, 1. It must be upheld and maintained on our part by the exercises of faith and holiness. 2. The sense of it in our souls may be eclipsed, and wholly fail, Psal. xxii. i. 3. We may fall away foully, though neither totally, (as Lutherans say,) because the seed of God abideth in the believer; nor yet finally (as papists say). We had need therefore of all exhortations and arguments imaginable, to persuade us to do what in us lieth that we may abide in him. We have a great encouragement to the use of all possible endeavours to abide in the love of God, from the promise annexed, and I in you; that is, I will abide in you; do you strive, and I will help you to perfect; do you fight, and I will help you to overcome; I will continue to you such gradual influences of grace, as shall be sufficient for you; grace where in and whereby you shall stand, Rom. v. 2. You shall be kept by the power of God through faith to salvation, 1 Pet. i. 5. But look as it is with the branch, it cannot bear fruit of itself; but if it be once separated from the influences of the stock, it dies and withers; so it will be with you, you can bring forth no fruit unless you abide in me.

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much <sup>a</sup> fruit: for <sup>b</sup> without me ye can do nothing.

I am the vine, ye are the branches; that is, I am as the vine, you are as the branches: without the continual influence of the vine upon the branches, they bring forth no fruit; but that influence continuing, no plant is more fruitful than a vine is: so without the continual influence of my Spirit of grace upon you, you will be altogether barren and unfruitful; but if you have that influence, you will not be fruitful only, but very fruitful: for without my continuing such influence, you will not only be able to do little, but you will be able to do nothing that is truly and spiritually good and acceptable in the sight of God.

6 If a man abide not in me, <sup>a</sup> he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.

Our Lord yet pursueth the metaphor of the vine, the branches, and the husbandman: Look (saith he) as it is with a vine, when the time of pruning the vine cometh, the vine-dresser cutteth off the fruitless, luxuriant branches, and throweth them by; which being done, their greenness presently abateth, and they wither, and after a time some come and gather them up, and cast them into some fire, where they are burned: so it will be with you; if you do not bring forth fruit, God will take from you his common influences, which have for a while made you to look speciously; and your profession, or your parts and gifts, will wither and decay; and in the day of judgment the angels shall gather you up, and God shall cast you into hell, Matt. xiii. 40, 41, where you shall perish as miserably, nay, infinitely more miserably, than if you were burned with fire.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, <sup>a</sup> ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

Here our Lord expounds what he meaneth by that abiding in him which he before mentioned by another phrase, and my words abide in you, my precepts and promises; so as you by faith embrace the promises, and by obedience live up to the precepts which I have given you: for without these, though the words of Christ may come unto men in the preaching of the gospel, their ears may receive the sound of them, yet the word doth not dwell and abide in the soul: but if the word abides in the souls of men and women, then they may in prayer ask of God what they will, keeping to the conditions and limitations elsewhere required in holy writ, according to God's will, 1 John v. 14, believing, Matt. xxi. 22, in the name of Christ, chap. xiv. 13, 14, for the honour and glory of God, (to which end all our actions must be directed,) and they shall be granted to them.

8 <sup>a</sup> Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; <sup>b</sup> so shall ye be my disciples.

Here are two arguments to press his disciples' abiding in him, that so they might bring forth much fruit. 1. Herein (saith our Saviour) is my Father glorified. The glorifying of God is the great end of our lives, 1 Cor. x. 31. God is glorified by men and women's bringing forth much fruit, Matt. v. 16, the fruit unto holiness, Rom. vi. 22: fruit is the product of the plant, from the natural moisture that is in it, nourished and augmented by the fatness of the earth in which it stands, and by the warmth of the sun drawn out to the producing of such effects, according to the nature of the plant. According to the different nature of plants they bring forth various fruits, Matt. vii. 16—18. Hence we read of the fruit of sin unto death, and the fruit of righteousness unto life. The first is every man's natural fruit, until he be ingrafted into Christ: being ingrafted into him, the soul having a new nature given to it, being regenerated and renewed by the Holy Ghost, it no longer bringeth forth fruit from its old principle, and according to its old nature, but from its new principle, and according to its new nature. As the cultivated earth, that is ploughed and harrowed, doth not bring forth weeds and ordinary grass, according to its nature, but bringeth forth fruit according to the seed that is cast into it, yet not without the influence of heaven, both with respect to the dew of it, and the warmth which it hath from the sun; so the soul, being regenerated, the fallow ground of it being ploughed up, and the seed of righteousness being sown in it, no more brings forth the weeds of lusts and corruptions, or only ordinary acts of human nature, but it brings forth fruits according to its new nature, and the new seed of the word now sown in it, and dwelling in it. And look, as it tendeth to the honour of the husbandman, when the ground by him ploughed and manured brings forth much fruit; so it tendeth to the honour and glory of God, when the souls renewed, manured, and influenced by him, bring forth much of the fruit of righteousness and holiness. And though men must be Christ's disciples before they bring forth any fruit, yet their bringing forth much fruit is that which alone can evidence and make them appear to be the disciples of Christ. And often in Scripture being signifieth appearing, as John viii. 31; Rom. iii. 4.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 13. 10.
& 17. 17.

Eph. 5. 26.
1 Pet. 1. 22.

c Col. 1. 22.
1 John 2. 6.

<sup>f</sup> ver. 16.
ch. 14. 13.
14. & 16. 23.

<sup>g</sup> Mat. 5. 16.
Phil. 1. 11.
h ch. 8. 31.
& 13. 35.

<sup>d</sup> Hos. 14. 8.
<sup>e</sup> Phil. 1. 11.
<sup>h</sup> & 4. 13.
<sup>i</sup> Or, received from me,
Acts 4. 12.

<sup>e</sup> Matt. 3.
10. & 7. 13.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you : continue ye in my love.

What our Saviour before called an abiding in him, and his words abiding in us, and a bearing and bringing forth much fruit, he here calleth a continuing in his love; though indeed this phrase also may be interpreted by a continuance in the favour of God and Christ, in that state of love into which God hath put the souls of those who are his true disciples: but I had rather interpret it of that love wherewith they loved Christ, than that wherewith Christ loved them. So the former words are an argument to persuade perseverance, or a continuance in those acts of holiness by which men alone can show their true love to Jesus Christ, from Christ's love to them, which he there expresseth, As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; where the particle as is only a note of comparison, but doth not denote an equality; only signifieth truth and greatness; as truly and sincerely as the Father loveth me: or, I have loved you with a great love, bearing some proportion to the love wherewith my Father loveth me. The Father's love to Christ is eternal, immutable, constant, full and perfect, wise and just, free: in all these respects Christ loveth his people as the Father loveth him: this ought to engage them again to love him, and so to walk as they may continue in that state of favour into which his goodness hath advanced them.

10 <sup>i ch. 14, 15, 21, 22.</sup> If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

Abiding in Christ's love, in this verse, may be interpreted as before; either actively, you shall continue your love to me, according to what we had, chap. xiv. 15; obedience to the commandments of Christ being the only way to show and declare the truth of our love to Christ. Or else passively, you shall keep yourselves in my favour, I will love you. Thus I abide in my Father's love; I do not show love to my Father by my words and expressions only, nor by performance of some ceremonial, ritual services, which he hath required; but by fulfilling his whole will and counsel, by yielding an obedience to him in all things. I love you as my Father loveth me; and you must abide in my love by the same ways and means that I abide in my Father's love. The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and <sup>k ch. 16, 24. & 17, 13. 1 John 1. 4.</sup> that your joy might be full.

The end of my pressing so much the duty of holiness upon you, under the notions of abiding in me, abiding in my love, in my words, bringing forth much fruit, &c. is, that I might have a continual cause to rejoice in you. Joy is nothing else but the satisfaction of the reasonable soul in its union with an object which it loved and desired. Christ, willing and desiring the perfection of his disciples, according to the rational workings of human nature, is properly said to rejoice in the satisfaction of his will; in which sense joy and rejoicing are often in Scripture attributed to God. Nor doth Christ press them to this, that he might rejoice in them, but also that their joy might be full; that joy and peace which attends and follows believing, Rom. xv. 13; called the peace of God, Col. iii. 15; a peace which passeth all understanding, Phil. iv. 7. No man maketh Christ to rejoice over him, but he thereby also procureth unspeakable joy and peace to himself; as no man grieveth his Spirit, but also purchaseth grief and sadness to himself in the latter end.

12 <sup>l ch. 12, 24. 1 Thes. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 6. 1 John 3. 11. & 4. 21.</sup> This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

This is that which our Lord called the new commandment, chap. xiii. 34: see the notes there. He had before pressed the keeping of his words, continuing and abiding in his words, keeping his commandments, &c. Here he tells them what was his commandment: not his only commandment, but that which he laid a very great stress upon; a commandment most necessary to be pressed, because so necessary to keep up and uphold his church in the world, (love being the very ligament of that society,) and because there was a greater failure in obedience to this than in some others, as may be learned from our Saviour's correction of the Pharisees' interpretation of that law, Matt. v. This he presseth to a higher degree, as he had loved them; not that it is possible that our love to our brethren can rise up in any proportion to that love wherewith Christ hath loved us; but to mind us to eye him, to press forward toward this mark. As here again doth not signify equality, but a comparison; as truly and sincerely as I have loved you, and pressing after the highest degree of love.

13 <sup>m ch. 10, 11, 15. Rom. 5. 7, 8. Eph. 5. 2. 1 John 3. 16.</sup> Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

The reason of this is, because life is the greatest earthly good to men under ordinary circumstances: Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life, Job ii. 4. Now it is impossible that a man should show a greater love to another, than by parting with the greatest good he is in possession of for his sake. Hence our Saviour proves, that he loved them with the greatest love, because he for their sake was about to part with what in the common judgment of men is the greatest good. The greatness of the love of Christ to us is from hence often commended to us in Scripture; and our mutual love to our brethren is pressed upon this argument, Eph. v. 2; 1 John iii. 16. But how did Christ lay down his life for his friends, when the Scripture tells us, that the just died for the unjust, 1 Pet. iii. 18, and that while we were enemies, we were reconciled unto God by the death of his Son, Rom. v. 10? Answe. Friends must not here be taken as a name of relation, but only as it signifieth the objects of love; persons we have set our love upon, whether they mutually love us or no; as the world was the object of that love in God, which moved him to send his only begotten Son, John iii. 16. Though they for whom Christ died were enemies by their wicked works, yet by his death they were reconciled. But possibly the first answer is best; for by Christ's death they were only meritoriously reconciled, and after this enemies to God, till they received the word of reconciliation, and believed in Christ.

14 <sup>n ch. 14, 15, 23. See Matt. 12. 50.</sup> Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

Our Lord presseth obedience to his commandments as a means, and indeed the only means, by which we can declare our love to Christ; and also useth a new argument to press their obedience, from his assuming them into the state and dignity of his friends.

15 Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; <sup>o See Gen. 18. 17. ch. 17. 26. Acts 20. 27.</sup> for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

By his saying, I call you not servants, he doth not discharge them of that duty and service which they owed to him; for in pressing them to obey his commandments, he declareth that duty they owed to him; he only sheweth that they were no ordinary servants, but taken into a state of dignity, favour, and familiarity, beyond that of servants, and that he had not treated them like servants, but like intimate, familiar friends. For look as ordinary masters in the world communicate their counsels and whole heart to their friends, especially in things which are of any concern, or may be of any advantage for them to know and understand; whereas they keep themselves at a distance from servants, and they only know so much of their minds as is by them to be done in their masters' service: so he had not only revealed to them their duty, what was to be by them done in his service, but had been more free, giving to them to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, as he told them, Matt. xiii. 11; as well telling them his Father's counsels on the behalf of them, and whatsoever he might communicate to them, as his Father's will, what he would have them to do in obedience to his commandments.

16 <sup>p ch. 6. 70. & 13. 16. 1 John 4. 10, 19. 9 Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15. Col. 1. 6. r ver. 7. ch. 14. 13.</sup> Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.

Ye have not chosen me to be your Lord, Master, Saviour, but I have chosen and ordained you; so we have it in our translation; but the Greek is, ἔθηκα, I have set you, or placed you in a station. What choosing Christ here speaks of is doubted amongst various divines. Some think that our Saviour here speaks of his choice of them to the apostleship, as Luke vi. 13; chap. vi. 70: those who thus understand it, understand by going and bringing forth fruit, the apostles' going out, preaching, and baptizing all nations, bringing forth fruit amongst the Gentiles. But others understand it of election to eternal life, and the means necessary to it; for our Saviour brings this as an argument of his greatest love: Judas was in the first sense chosen, yet not beloved with any such love: and this seemeth to be favoured by chap. xiii. 18, I speak not of you all; I know whom I have chosen: and certain it is, Augustine and others of the ancients had hence proved the freedom of election and special grace. Both senses may be united, for the eleven (to whom Christ was now speaking) were chosen in both senses; they were chosen for this end, to bring forth fruit amongst the Gentiles, turning many to righteousness, and that they might bring forth the fruit of holiness, in obedience to the gospel of Christ. Yea, not only to bring forth fruit, but that they might persevere in bringing forth fruit; and that thus doing, they might have a freedom of access to the throne of grace, and obtain whatsoever they should ask of the Father, in the name, for the merits, and through the mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ. See the notes on chap. xiv. 13, 14.

• ver. 12. 17 *These things I command you, that ye love one another.

This is but the repetition of the same precept we before had; unless we will understand it as a more special charge upon them, considered as ministers of the gospel; the mutual love of ministers being highly necessary for the good and peace of the church of God, over which God hath set them.

t 1 John 2. 1, 13. 18 *If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

In the latter part of this chapter our Lord cometh to comfort those who were his true disciples, against that third trouble, from the prospect they had of that hatred which the world would pour out and execute upon them, as soon as he should be withdrawn from them. Hatred is rooted and originated in the heart, and is properly a displeasure that the mind taketh at a person, which, fermenting and boiling in the mind, breeds an abhorrence of that person, anger, and malice, and a desire to do him mischief, and root him out; and then breaks out at the lips, by lying, slanders, calumnies, cursings, wishing of evil, &c.; and is executed by the hands, doing to such persons all the harm and mischief within the power of him that hateth: all this is to be understood under the general term hate. By the world here must be meant wicked men, in opposition to good men, who are often in Scripture called the world, because they are of the earth, earthly; they relish and savour nothing but worldly things, and pursue nothing but worldly designs. Against this our Saviour comforts them; first by telling them, that this part of the world hated him before it hated them, which must needs be so, because they hated them as his disciples, and for that very reason.

u 1 John 4. 5. x ch. 17. 14. 19 *If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Men and women may be in the world, yet not of the world. Of the world here signifies carnal men, such as are like to the men of the world in their studies, designs, counsels, affections; as of the devil, and of God, signifies, chap. viii. 44, 47. If you had affections, lusts, and dispositions like them, and drove no other designs than they drive, you might expect, that as it is of the nature of all men to love such as are like to them in manners and studies; so they would love you, take a delight in you, be kind to you, and do you all offices of love: but because you are not of such tempers, dispositions, and inclinations; but that I, having chosen you out of the world, have given you new hearts, new frames and dispositions, quite contrary to theirs; therefore the world, disliking you, and seeing that your principles are quite opposite to theirs, abhor and hate you, and will be ready to do you all that evil and mischief, which is the product of a rooted hatred and malice in the heart. This is a second argument by which our Lord comforts them. It is drawn from the cause and root of that hatred which they would meet with: it was not for their faults or sins, but because they were the objects of Christ's love, which being also shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost, produced again in them holy affections and dispositions, making them wholly unlike to men in the world.

20 Remember the word that I said unto you, *The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; *if they have kept my saying, they will keep your's also.

The word that I said unto you, chap. xiii. 16, to press you to humility, and a mutual serving of one another in love; and which I spake to you, Matt. x. 24, when I first sent you out; and I spake it then to you upon the very same account that I now speak it. You that are my servants cannot look to fare better with the world than I that am your Master; you know they have hated me, you must expect they should persecute you: if there be any of them whose hearts God shall incline to keep my sayings, they will also keep your words, which are but my sayings explained to them, and further pressed upon them.

21 But *all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.

For my name's sake here signifies no more than for my sake, as Matt. x. 22; for your preaching, owning, and professing me and my gospel. And this they would not do, if they had any true knowledge of faith in or love for him that sent me: for knowing, (as hath been often said,) in holy writ, and particularly in this Gospel, signifieth not the bare comprehension of the object by our understanding, but such a comprehension of it as is operative and efficacious to the bringing forth of all such effects as are proper to such a knowledge and comprehension. So as this text containeth two arguments more to arm them against the hatred of the world: the first, from the honourableness of the cause, for Christ's name's sake; the second, from the ignorance and blindness of the persons.

22 *If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: *but now they have no cloke for their sin.

They had not had this particular sin, of not knowing him that sent me; or they had not had such degrees of sin as they now have; or they had had more to say in excuse, or for a cover for their sin. Ignorance of the will of God will not excuse sinners wholly, but it will excuse them in part. And this last seemeth to be the sense of the words by the latter part of the verse, because it is opposed to a having no cloak nor excuse for their sin. If Christ had not come in his incarnation, in his preaching the gospel, &c., they could not have been guilty of that hatred and malice which they showed against him, which was their greatest guilt; and they would have had this to say, Lord, we knew not what Christ was, as Matt. xxv. 44: but now, saith our Saviour, they have no cloak, no colour, no pretence; I am come, I have revealed my Father's mind and will to them, yet they will not receive me; no, though I have done those works before them which no man ever did, nor could do but by a Divine power.

23 *He that hateth me hateth my Father also.

This agreeth with what we had, chap. v. 23. It is a common error of the world, that many in it would pretend to love God, while yet they are manifest haters of Christ and his gospel. Now, saith our Saviour, this is impossible; whosoever hateth him who is sent, hateth also him that sent him. God the Father and Christ are one, and no man can hate Christ, or be an enemy to Christ, but he must be an enemy to his Father: and as this is an aggravation of their sin, so it is a great argument of consolation to the disciples of Christ, that those who should be their enemies were such as were in reality God's enemies.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 3. 2. & 7. 31. & 9. 32. 24 If I had not done among them *the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.

Our Saviour often appealeth to his works, both to own his mission from God, and also to prove the Jews inexcusable in their not receiving and embracing him; for which latter purpose he mentions them here, and saith, that he had done such works as no man did, and by his own power and virtue. Christ did some works such as we do not read that ever man did; as the multiplying of the loaves, the giving sight to those that were born blind, the healing of so many desperate diseases: and for such as he did which God had also given men a power to do, he did them in a quite different manner from that in which men did them. Elisha raised the Shunammite's child to life; but it was by prayer. Peter cured the lame man, Acts iii. 6; but it was in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. We read indeed of Christ's praying at the raising of Lazarus; but his ordinary way was by his word of command, which was a quite different way than that used by those men by whom miracles had been wrought. Besides, it is manifest that the generality of the Jews did not look upon Christ as one sent from God, though many of them did: and admit that there had been nothing in the miracles wrought by Christ, more than Elijah, or Elisha, or the prophets had done; yet it had been sufficient for to have convinced them, that he acted by a Divine power, and must be sent and authorized by and from God to do what he did. Now saith our Saviour, If I had not done before their faces such works as no man could do but by a power derived from God, and some such as God never authorized men to do, their sin had been nothing to what now it is: but now they have understood that I am sent from my Father; and knowing this, yet going on in their most malicious designs against me, they both declare a hatred and malice against my Father who sent me, and me as sent by him.

25 But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, 'They hated me without a cause.

The particle that here again denoteth not the final cause, but only the consequent; and the law here signifieth not strictly the law of Moses, but the whole Scripture, in which sense we have once and again met with the term. Saith our Saviour, This is no more than was prophesied of me by the prophet David; or no more than was fulfilled in me, being first done to David as my type: which also hath the force of another argument to uphold and encourage his disciples under their sufferings, that they were but the fulfilling of prophecies, no more than was foretold in holy writ.

<sup>g</sup> Luke 24. 49. ch. 14. 17, 23. & 16. 7, 13. Acts 2. 33. <sup>h</sup> 1 John 5. 6. 26 *But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, <sup>b</sup> he shall testify of me:

Concerning the Holy Ghost as a Comforter we have spoken largely, chap. xiv. 16, 26; as also his mission from the Father and the Son, and in what sense he is called the Spirit of truth: see the notes on those verses. What proceeding from the Father is here meant, is questioned amongst divines: some understand it only of his coming out from the Father, and being poured out upon the disciples in the days of Pentecost: others understand it of the Holy Spirit's eternal proceeding. Those that interpret it of the first, urge the use of the Greek word, here used to signify God's manifestation of himself by some external sign, as they say the Septuagint useth the same word. They also urge the same use of a parallel word, chap. viii. 42; xvi. 28. But the generality of the best interpreters think it is best understood of the eternal procession of the Holy Spirit: 1. Because Christ here distinguisheth the Spirit's proceeding from the Father from his sending. 2. Having himself promised to send the Spirit, he seemeth further to describe him as proceeding from the Father. 3. The word here used is not any where used in the New Testament to signify a temporal mission. Some will say, But doth not the Spirit proceed from the Son? Ans. The Greek Church in latter ages hath denied this, and this is the principal text they rest on; but those churches that are more orthodox have constantly affirmed it: 1. Because he here saith he would send it. 2. Because he is often called the Spirit of Christ, Rom. viii. 9; Gal. iv. 6. 3. Because otherwise there were no personal relation between Christ and the Spirit. Our Saviour here having first said he would send him, here only nameth his proceeding from the Father; that they might not suspect his testimony, or think that he spake arrogantly. He shall testify of me; the Spirit, he saith, should testify of him, both by those gifts with which he was to fill the apostles, and to the hearts of God's people.

27 And <sup>b</sup> ye also shall bear witness, because <sup>b</sup> ye have been with me from the beginning.

He adds also, they should testify, &c.: the apostles, and their successors, by the preaching of the gospel; but particularly the apostles, Acts x. 39; 1 John i. 2, 3, being chosen witnesses, Acts x. 41. And they were competent witnesses, because they had been with Christ from the beginning of his public ministry. We shall find the testimony of his apostles and of the Holy Ghost both joined together, Acts v. 32.

CHAP. XVI

Christ warneth his disciples of their sufferings for his sake, 1—4. He comforteth them by a promise of the Holy Ghost, 5—15. He intimateth his death, resurrection, and ascension, telling them that their sorrow should soon be succeeded by joy, and that their prayers in his name would be accepted of the Father, 16—28. His disciples confess their faith in him; he foretelleth their desertion of him, and promiseth them peace in him amidst their tribulation in the world, 29—33.

THESE things have I spoken unto you, that ye *should not be offended.

That is, that when you see these storms of persecution arise, and fall heavily upon you, they may not give you any occasion, or be any temptation to you, to desist from your duty, and be afraid or ashamed to own me, and the profession of my gospel. Evils unthought of we are not ordinarily prepared for, so as, being surprised by them, they the more sink us. Offended here therefore may signify, either immoderate trouble and affliction, or being tempted to any apostacy, or remission of duty.

2 <sup>b</sup> They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, <sup>c</sup> that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

The term synagogue, as it is used often in Scripture to signify those places of public worship which they had in country towns and cities, is proper to the Jews; but as it signifieth an assembly of people met together in any place, it as well agreeth to other people as to them. Our Lord here, in pursuit of the argument which he hath been upon from the 18th verse of the former chapter, forewarneth his disciples, that when he should be taken from them, the Jews first should excommunicate them as heretics, or schismatics: and I know not why what our Saviour here saith may not also be extended as a prophecy of what hath since been done, and is yet doing, under the tyranny of the pope. As also the latter clause, which, though at first applicable to the Jews, who stoned Stephen upon a charge of blasphemy, in which it is apparent that they thought they did God good service, and doubtless slew many others; yet certainly it also referred to others, even as many as shall do the same thing to the end of the world.

3 And <sup>d</sup> these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me.

This is but what our Lord said as to his Father, ver. 21 of the former chapter, (see the notes on that verse,) and teacheth us, that all persecutions of good men speak in persecutors an ignorance both of God the Father and of Christ; and whoever they are that continue in such ignorance under the light of the gospel, though they be baptized, and make never so great a profession of religion, yet will be under daily temptations to turn persecutors; for ignorance is here made the cause of persecution. And it is some alleviation of trouble to God's suffering people, to consider that the persons that are the cause of their sufferings neither know God the Father, nor Jesus Christ; and it is no wonder, if they know not God, that they will not know, love, nor approve of them.

e ch. 13. 19.
& 14. 22.

4 But *these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And *these things I said not unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

f See Matt.
8. 16.

Whatsoever I have discovered to you formerly, of my going to my Father, the coming of the Holy Ghost, your sufferings from the world, I have told you of before; you will see that they will most certainly come to pass: then you will remember what I have said unto you; and I have told you them on purpose that you may remember them, and thereby know, that although I am in the form of a man, yet I also am God blessed for ever, and did know things that should afterward come to pass, and could tell you the truth about them. And having been with you, I have not from the first of your converse with me told you these things; that is, those which relate to the world's dealing with you (which he had told them, Matt. x. 16, &c., but that was after some good while's converse with them); nor yet had he spoken to them at first about his death, resurrection, and ascension, because he was with them, and to stay with them some time, during which time he bare the brunt of all; the whole hatred of the Jews was poured out upon him: and for those other things relating to his death, and ascension, and the sending of the Spirit, he, who taught his disciples as they were able to bear them, Mark iv. 33, had concealed these things till by his other doctrine he had prepared them to receive this revelation, and there was a necessity of his relieving them against his bodily absence, by the promise of that other Comforter the Holy Ghost.

g ver. 10, 16.
ch. 7. 33. &
13. 3. & 14. 28.

5 But now *I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?

Though I did not tell you this from the beginning, for many wise reasons; yet I now tell you, that I must die, but shall rise again from the dead, and go to my Father who sent me into the world to finish that work which I now have done, and so am returning from whence I came. And though indeed some of you have cursorily asked me whither I go, (as Peter, chap. xiii. 36,) yet none of you seem to understand, or so seriously as you ought to inquire, whither I go, or so much to be busied in the thoughts of that.

h ver. 22.
ch. 14. 1.

6 But because I have said these things unto you, <sup>h</sup>sorrow hath filled your heart.

But all your thoughts are taken up about yourselves, what you shall do for want of my bodily presence; and sorrow for that hath so overwhelmed your hearts, that you cannot enough deliberate with yourselves, as to consider either mine or your own advantages, from my death, resurrection, and ascension.

7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, <sup>i</sup>the Comforter will not come unto you; but <sup>k</sup>if I depart, I will send him unto you.

i ch. 7. 39.
& 14. 16; 26.
& 15. 26.
k Acts 2. 33.
Eph. 4. 8.

He doth not say it was expedient for him, though this was true; for his human nature was not till his ascension glorified, as afterward, chap. xvii. 5; but he saith it was expedient for them. The saints may desire a dissolution, but it is for their own advantage, Phil. i. 23. Christ desires it for their advantage; because the Holy Spirit could not come upon them (as in the days of Pentecost) until he by his death had made reconciliation for iniquity; and God had so ordered the counsels of eternity, that Christ should first die, rise again, and ascend into heaven, and then he would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, as one eminent fruit of Christ's meritorious death and passion, Acts ii. 32, 33; Eph. iv. 11. We are not able to give certain reasons of the counsels of God; but the reasonableness of them in this very particular may easily be concluded: that the sending of the Spirit might appear to be the fruit of Christ's death: that the Messiah's influence upon the sending of him jointly with the Father, might appear; for he was to be sent from Christ glorified, chap. vii. 39: that the Spirit might glorify Christ, as we have it, ver. 14; for (saith that verse) He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you: and that the world might better understand the mystery of the Trinity. The Father was by all owned to be in heaven. The Son ascended up to heaven in the presence of many witnesses. The Spirit descended from heaven with great majesty and glory, as may be read. Acts ii. 2, 3.

8 And when he is come, he will ||re-<sup>l Or,</sup> prove the world of sin, and of righteous-<sup>convince.</sup> ness, and of judgment:

When the Holy Spirit is come in the days of Pentecost, he, by his inward operation in men's hearts, and by his gifts bestowed upon you that are his apostles, will reprove the world. By the world here, may be meant all men and women, as it is used in some texts; neither is the operation of the Spirit here mentioned to be restrained to carnal and wicked men. The word translated reprove, l. Lets us know, that the Holy Ghost is here mentioned, not in the notion mentioned chap. xiv. 16, as a Comforter, but in the larger notion, (there mentioned,) as an Advocate; which possibly had been a better translation of it, ver. 7, than Comforter, as we translate it; for it is not the proper work of the Spirit considered as a Comforter to reprove, but it is proper enough to the notion of an Advocate to do it. The word here translated reprove doth often so signify, and is so translated, Luke iii. 19; chap. iii. 20; Eph. v. 11, 13. It signifieth real rebukes, Heb. xii. 5; Rev. iii. 19. But it also signifieth to convince, John viii. 9, 46; 1 Cor. xiv. 24; 2 Tim. iv. 2; Tit. i. 9; and in several other texts. Yet it is one thing to convince the understanding and judgment; another thing to prevail upon the will, by reason of the total corruption of our souls; so that we will not embrace what we confess is truth, nor do what we know is best; but, through the stubbornness of our will, we resist the light and conviction of our understandings. The Holy Spirit is here promised, not only (as before) to lead men into truth, by a work of illumination, but to bow the hearts and wills of some in the world, to the embracing of it, and living up to it, while others yet remain without excuse. The things of which the Spirit is promised to convince the world, are sin, righteousness, and judgment, which are further opened in the following verses.

9 <sup>l</sup>Of sin, because they believe not <sup>1 Acts 2. 22,</sup> <sup>-37.</sup> on me;

Here may arise some doubt, whether these words import that the Holy Ghost should convince the world of sin in general, or of that particular sin of not believing on the Lord Jesus Christ: the first seemeth best to agree with the 8th verse, where convincing of sin is mentioned, without the addition which we have here; and it also best agreeth with the effect of the Spirit, for the Holy Spirit doth not convince the world of one sin only. The second seemeth to be favoured by the addition of those words, because they believe not on me; which yet may be understood only as a particular great instance of sin, of which the Spirit convinceth the world. It was the great sin of that age, that, though Christ was come into the world, and had given such manifest evidence that he was sent of his Father, yet the generality of the men and women in that part of the world into which he was come, would not receive and embrace him as the true Messiah. Now, saith our Saviour, when I am gone to my Father, I will send the Spirit, and he, by his gifts given to my apostles, shall so convince a great part of the world, that they shall have nothing to say, but be wholly inexcusable in their not receiving me as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world. Others he shall, by his inward influence upon their hearts, so convince of sin in not believing on me, that they shall believe on me, and be saved.

<sup>m Acts 1. 32.</sup> <sup>n ch. 3. 14.</sup> <sup>& 5. 2.</sup> 10 <sup>m</sup> Of righteousness, <sup>n</sup> because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more ;

A second thing of which the Spirit is promised to convince the world, is righteousness, by which all interpreters agree is meant the righteousness of Christ. Only some would have it to be understood of Christ's personal righteousness, which is inherent in him ; upon which account he is called the just One, the righteous One, &c. Then the sense is this : The Jews now say I have a devil, and cast out devils by Beelzebub ; they accuse me as an impostor and seducer, call me a friend of publicans and sinners ; but when the Holy Spirit which I will send shall come, he shall convince the world that I was a just and righteous person, and not such a one as they have vilely represented me : which was fulfilled in a great measure, Acts ii., iii., when so many were converted and joined to the church. 2. But the best interpreters understand it of that righteousness of Christ which is communicated to men in justification, of which so much is spoken in holy writ, Isa. liii. 11 ; lvi. 1 ; Jer. xxiii. 6 ; Dan. ix. 24 ; and in many other texts : so as the Spirit is here promised as instructing the world in that true righteousness by which a soul can be justified ; and therein both correcting the errors of the pagan world, who thought the light of nature enough to show them the way to heaven ; and also of the Jewish world, who thought the righteousness of the law sufficient ; by showing them, that no righteousness would do it but the righteousness of Christ, reckoned unto them for righteousness, and apprehended by faith. Christ's going to his Father, did both evidence him to be a just and righteous person, however wicked men in the world had represented and traduced him, for his Father would not have received him if he had not been such a person ; and also evidence that, as was prophesied of the Messiah, Dan. ix. 24, he had finished the transgression, made an end of sin, made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in everlasting righteousness : for it could not be imagined, that he should have an access to his Father before he had finished the work which his Father had given him to do, chap. xvii. 4. And (saith our Saviour) ye see me no more ; that is, after my ascension you shall see me no more ; or after my death you shall see me no more, to have any such ordinary converse with me as hitherto you have had : for I shall not ascend to return again to you ; but to sit at the right hand of my Father, till I return again to the last judgment.

<sup>o Acts 26. 18.</sup> <sup>p Luke 10.</sup> <sup>18. ch. 12. 31.</sup> <sup>Eph. 2. 2.</sup> <sup>Col. 2. 16.</sup> <sup>Heb. 2. 14.</sup> 11 <sup>o</sup> Of judgment, because <sup>p</sup> the prince of this world is judged.

The third thing to convince the world of which the Spirit is promised, is judgment. There is a great variety amongst interpreters in their senses, what is to be understood by judgment in this text. Mr. Calvin thinks that by it is to be understood a right order of things : the devil, who is the prince of the world, had made a great disorder and confusion in the world ; Christ, having judged him, brought in a reformation, and restored things into order again. Others understand the term, of that judicial power which Christ obtained after his ascension into heaven, when the Lord said unto him, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool, Psal. cx. 1 ; Acts ii. 34, 35. Others understand it of that government which Christ exerciseth over and upon the souls of his people, once delivered out of the power of Satan by the obedience of Christ's death. Others understand it of that all power given to Christ in heaven and earth, mentioned Matt. xxviii. 18 ; Phil. ii. 9, 10. Others understand it of that perverse and corrupt judgment which the world exercised upon Christ and his apostles. Others understand it of the judgment of condemnation : the world should by the Spirit be convinced, that they lay in wickedness, and exposed to eternal condemnation, when they should see their father the devil, who arrogates to himself the title of the prince of the world, and exerciseth a tyranny over them, cast out, and overcome.

<sup>q Mark 4. 33.</sup> <sup>1 Cor. 3. 2.</sup> <sup>Heb. 5. 12.</sup> 12 I have yet many things to say unto you, <sup>q</sup> but ye cannot bear them now.

Not any new articles of doctrine or faith, for, chap. xv.

15, he had told them that he had made known unto them all things which he had heard of the Father of that nature ; but some things (probably) which concerned them with reference to their office as apostles, the constitution, state, and government of the church : but, saith he, ye cannot bear them now ; in regard of their passion, or rather of their more imperfect state.

13 Howbeit when he, <sup>r</sup> the Spirit of truth, is come, <sup>s</sup> he will guide you into all truth : for he shall not speak of himself ; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak : and he will shew you things to come.

The word which we here translate guide, ὁδηγήσει, is a word of great emphasis ; it strictly signifieth to be a guide of the way, not only to discover truth as the object of the understanding, but the bowing of the will to the obedience of it. It is said, that the Spirit should guide the apostles into all truth ; that is, all necessary truth, whatsoever Christ had revealed to them, because in their present state they were not able to bear it ; whatsoever should be fit for them to know, in order to their planting, ordering, and governing the church of God, which Christ had not, while he was with them, acquainted them with ; and people were to expect from the apostles, upon whom the Spirit should come in the days of Pentecost, and so influence them, that in those things they should not be at a loss to understand the will of God, which they should communicate unto others. And they ought to look upon what the apostles so revealed, as the mind of Christ ; for the Holy Spirit should not speak merely of himself, but as from Christ, with whom he was essentially one ; as also from the Father : whatsoever the Father and the Son willed he should communicate, that he should reveal to the apostles : and he shall reveal to you things that are to come, being in you the Spirit of prophecy. The apostles in their Epistles, and in the book of Revelation, showed not indeed all things, but many things which were and are to come to pass.

14 He shall glorify me : for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

That is, he shall make me famous in the world ; as by the extraordinary gifts which he shall dispense and give out, so particularly by showing you things to come : for he shall guide and lead you into no other truth, but that which I have revealed, or which it is my will he should make known and reveal.

15 <sup>t Mat. 11. 27.</sup> <sup>ch. 3. 35. & 13. 3. & 17. 10.</sup> All things that the Father hath are mine : therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shew it unto you.

All the Divine essence, wisdom, power, which is in the Father, are mine ; I am, in all things that concern the Deity, one and equal with the Father ; and that was the reason that I said that he should take of mine, and show it to you ; which is the same as if I had said, he shall take of my Father's, and shall show it to you ; for all that the Father hath is mine ; I and my Father are one in essence, wisdom, power, &c.

16 <sup>u ver. 10.</sup> <sup>ch. 7. 33. & 13. 33. & 14. 19.</sup> <sup>w ver. 28.</sup> <sup>ch. 13. 3.</sup> "A little while, and ye shall not see me : and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, <sup>w</sup> because I go to the Father.

I must die, and so for two or three days you shall not see me ; but after that you shall see me again, when I shall be risen from the dead : but because of the last words, because I go to the Father, which seem to give a reason of the first clause ; possibly by the little while first mentioned, our Saviour means the whole time from the speaking of those words to his ascension into heaven, for all that time was not more than six weeks ; and by the little while mentioned in the latter part of the verse, our Saviour intends the whole time from his ascension until his coming to judgment : and so the reason is proper which is added, because I go unto the Father ; for being so ascended, and sat down at the right hand of God, we are told that there he must sit, till God hath made all his enemies his footstool ; and by the apostle, that the last enemy to be destroyed is death ; and, Acts iii. 21, Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began 17 Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

Christ had used much the same expression to the Jews, chap. vii. 33, Yet a little while I am with you; he had spoken the same to his disciples, chap. xiii. 33; yet it is plain from this verse, that his disciples did not understand him. What need the best of us have of the illuminations of the blessed Spirit, rightly to conceive of and understand spiritual things! These doctrines of his death, resurrection, and ascension, and coming to judgment, our Lord had inculcated to his disciples, not only in the two texts aforementioned, but also chap. viii. 21; xii. 33, 36; xiv. 2, 4, 12, 28; and in this chapter, ver. 5, 7.

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell what he saith.

Still they do not understand what he meant. Who shall hereafter arrogate to man's reason or understanding a power to comprehend spiritual mysteries? Had not the disciples reasonable souls? will any say they had no mind to understand them? certainly none can say so. Some lay the fault of the disciples not understanding these things upon the obscurity of our Saviour's phrase, and his parabolical expression of them, others, in their ignorance of our Saviour's resurrection from the dead; others, in their not understanding the circumstance of time: but certainly it is best imputed to the disciples' inability to conceive of these things, and the prejudices of their national error concerning the temporal kingdom of the Messias. Let it lie where it will, the weakness of the disciples may be reasonably conceived not to be greater than is incident to the best of men; and if they were so dull of hearing and understanding, we may reasonably conceive that we are not free from the like impotency and infirmity.

19 Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye inquire among yourselves of that I said, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me?

In the terms of this verse there is nothing difficult, but in the matter of it there is much instructive. We learn from hence, 1. That though good men may as to some points be ignorant as to the mind and will of God, yet they will be desirous of further instruction in it. To be willingly and contentedly ignorant, is not consistent with a root of saving grace. 2. Christ knows the desires of our hearts, before they are made known to him by the words of our lips; but yet it will not follow, that we may satisfy ourselves with inward, secret desires, without making them known by our lips; for God requireth the calves of our lips, as well as the desires and groans of our inward man. 3. Christ is very ready to teach those whose hearts he seeth desirous to learn; therefore he saith, Do ye inquire among yourselves? &c. Are you inquisitive? I am ready to teach and to instruct you.

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

Our Saviour's reply is no literal answer to their question, or exposition of the term which appeared so difficult to them to understand; but yet it is a substantial answer, by which he lets them know, that he should be absent from them for some time, which time would be to them a time of mourning and sadness, as he had before told them; that when the Bridegroom should be taken from them, then they should mourn; that that time would be to the wicked part of the world a time of mirth and jollity: but their sorrow should be turned into joy when they should see him again, both upon his resurrection, and in the general resurrection. The time of this life is the worldling's hour, and for the most part the power of darkness to such as love and fear God; but as the worldling's joy shall at last be turned into sorrow, (they compass themselves about with sparks, but they shall at last lie down in sorrow, Isa. 1. 11,) so the godly man's sorrow shall be turned into joy: Christ will say to the good servant, Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord, Matt. xxv. 23.

21 * A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

Our Lord compareth the state of the church in this life, and more especially in those first and most furious times, to the state of a woman that is big with child, and in her travail; when, he saith, she hath sorrow, that is, great pain, because God, when he cursed the woman for her transgression, made this her portion, Gen. iii. 16, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and when her weeks are fulfilled, her hour is come to feel the effect of this curse, the fruit of the first woman's transgression: but no sooner is she delivered of a child, but she forgetteth all her throes and pains, for joy of a child born into the world. Such (saith our Saviour to his disciples) is your state; you are as a woman in travail; so will all those that believe in me be, to the end of the world.

22 * And ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and *your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

The whole church, Rev. xii. 1, 2, is compared to a woman with child, crying, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. During this time of your travail you must have sorrow. All those that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution, 2 Tim. iii. 12. It is appointed for all men once to die, Heb. ix. 27. It is appointed for God's people (especially under some periods of time) to be dying daily, killed all the day long, as the apostle expresseth the state of Christians in his time, Rom. viii. 36, quoting Psal. xlv. 22, which showeth the state of the church in the Old Testament to have been the same. But (saith our Saviour) it is but as the hour of the woman's travail; it will be sharp, very sharp, but it shall be short; for I will see you again, and then your heart shall rejoice; which cannot be understood of Christ's seeing them again after his resurrection; for before that time we read of few or no sufferings of the apostles or other disciples. It must therefore be understood, either of the visitation of his Spirit, filling their hearts with joy and peace, or the visitation of his providence: or rather, of Christ's coming to the last judgment, when all that have believed in Christ shall see him with joy unspeakable; and then all tears shall be wiped away from their eyes, and they shall enter into the joy of their Lord, and sigh and sorrow no more, nor shall it be in the power of all their enemies to deprive them of their joy.

23 And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. * Verily, verily, I say unto you, * Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

That the day here spoken of is that before mentioned, ver. 22, when Christ promised to see them again, and that their hearts should rejoice, is without question; but what that day is (as we before showed) is not so well agreed: some understand it of the general resurrection, when Christ shall come to judgment, when all asking for satisfaction as to any thing of which we doubt shall cease; and this seemeth at first the plainest sense: You shall then be made perfect; as you shall want nothing, so you shall ask nothing. But because of the following words, which plainly refer to the time of this life, others distinguish concerning asking, and by asking here understand, asking by way of question, for further information, not by way of prayer for supply: and indeed the Greek word enforceth that sense; for it is not aitneste, which signifieth to ask or beg, as in prayer; but epithete, which signifieth to ask for a resolution in case of doubting. Now though it be true, that in the day of judgment, when we shall see Christ as he is, and know God

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

1. 11. 27.

as we are known, we shall have no occasion to ask any questions; yet because the following words speak of an asking in prayer, which is proper to this life, it should seem that the day here mentioned is some time before the last judgment: what that should be, is the question. It is certainly best understood of the time after the effusion or pouring out of the Spirit in the days of Pentecost; of which time it was prophesied by Joel, chap. ii. 28, that God would pour out his Spirit on all flesh; their sons and their daughters should prophesy, their old men should dream dreams, and their young men should see visions, Acts ii. 17; and to which time Isaiah had a respect in his prophecy, chap. xi. 9, that the earth should be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. So as these words, ye shall ask me nothing in that day, signify the great light that should, upon the coming down of the Holy Spirit, shine in upon their souls, so that they should no longer have any such doubts as they now had; and sound much the same thing that we have, 1 John ii. 27, But the anointing (by which is meant the Holy Spirit) which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things. We must not too rigidly interpret our Saviour's words here, as if they were a promise of such a state in this life, whomeither the present or succeeding disciples of Christ should be so filled with knowledge, as they should have no further doubts, or need not to ask any thing of Christ, that is, to be resolved in any thing. Our Saviour here speaketh only comparatively, to signify the great difference there would be as to knowledge, betwixt them in their present state, and what should be after the pouring out of the Holy Spirit: they should then fully understand what Christ meant by his saying, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father: and should not need ask him questions about that, or many other things which they were now at a loss about: as Jer. xxxi. 34, where the prophet saith, They shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest. It must not be interpreted (as some have done) to signify a needlessness of ministerial teaching; so neither must this text be interpreted to signify a needlessness of an inquiry of Christ for further satisfaction; but only as signifying the vast difference in the degrees of knowledge, after the Holy Spirit should be poured forth, from what was even in the best men before that time. In the latter part of the text another word is used, it is not ἐπιθώρετε, but αἰρήσατε. Our Saviour there plainly speaketh of their asking in prayer; and the promise is, that to supply the defects of their knowledge, and the want of his personal instruction, they should obtain by prayer from the Father all that was necessary for their discharge of the prophetic office, Matt. vii. 7; chap. xv. 7; xvi. 24. See the notes on those texts.

24 Hitherto have ye asked nothing in b ch. 15. 11. my name: ask, and ye shall receive, <sup>b</sup> that your joy may be full.

All the prayers of believers under the Old Testament were accepted upon the account of the Mediator, who was typified by the temple, and the ark, where their solemn worship was performed by Divine appointment; but the explicit naming of him was not usual in their requests. Indeed the prophet Daniel enforced his requests for the Lord's sake, which may peculiarly respect the Messiah, the promised Mediator. Our Saviour, in the form of prayer dictated to his disciples, gave no direction of addressing themselves to God in his name. But now he was ready to accomplish the will of his Father, by offering himself as an expiatory sacrifice for sin, and thereby reconciling God to them; and the prevalency of his intercession depending upon his meritorious, all-sufficient sufferings, he directs and encourages them to pray with a humble confidence in his name for all the blessings they stand in need of. And it is matter of exceeding joy, that notwithstanding their unworthiness of the least favours, yet they are assured of obtaining their petitions offered up in his name; for the Father was so pleased with his voluntary obedience to the death of the cross, that no blessing is so good or great, but he most willingly bestows for his sake to all humble supplicants.

25 These things have I spoken unto you in || proverbs: but the time cometh, <sup>|| Or, parabóles.</sup> when I shall no more speak unto you in || proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly of <sup>|| Or, parabóles.</sup>
the Father.

That by proverbs is meant any dark sayings, is plain from the opposition in the text of that term plainly. Christ had spoken, though not all things, yet many things to them in dark phrases, and under many figurative expressions; but (saith he) the time cometh, when I shall show you plainly of the Father: that time is either Christ's second coming, or after the pouring out of the Spirit, which latter is most probably what our Saviour doth here intend, because of those great measures of knowledge which at and after that time were given out. He had before given to his disciples to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, far beyond others, Matt. xiii. 11; but yet it appears by chap. xiv., and many other texts, that they had a very confused and imperfect knowledge of the Trinity, and Christ's oneness with the Father, and their mutual personal relation one to another.

26 <sup>c ver. 23.</sup> At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you:

When the Spirit shall come, then you shall fully and clearly understand how to put up your prayers to the Father in my name: hitherto have you done it imperfectly, not fully understanding what you did; but when I shall have poured out my Spirit, then you shall fully understand what it is to pray in my name, and you shall accordingly do it. He doth not deny that he would ask the Father; for the Scripture elsewhere plainly expresseth it, Rom. viii. 34; Heb. vii. 25; but he only tells them, that he said not so to them; the reason of which he tells us in the next words.

27 <sup>d ch. 14. 21,
23.
e ver. 30.
ch. 3. 13.
& 17. 8.</sup> For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and <sup>e</sup> have believed that I came out from God.

I need not tell you (to beget in you a confidence that your prayers should be heard) that I will pray to the Father for you; for my Father himself hath such a love for you, that you may from thence alone conclude that he will hear you. And though my Father's love to you be an everlasting love, which hath no cause in the creature; yet as to the manifestations of my Father's love, they are further drawn forth by the love which he seeth you bear to me, and by your receiving me, who am the Messiah, and came forth from God, to perform the work of man's redemption.

28 <sup>f ch. 13. 8.</sup> I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

Though I be in the world, yet my original is not from the world; I am one with my Father, equal with him, God blessed for ever. I came forth from him, as one sent in the fulness of time, to discharge the office of the Messiah; the world, the place so called, was neither my original, nor yet is my home. I am presently leaving the world again, and going to my Father.

29 His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no
|| proverb. <sup>|| Or, parabóles.</sup>

Our Saviour having now plainly told them that he was leaving the world, put an end to their inquiries whither he was going, and satisfied them that in his former expressions of going away, not for a while to be seen, he meant no earthly motion: this they confess had no obscurity at all in it; These words are so intelligible, that there is no reason for any of us to ask thee any thing about the sense of them.

30 Now are we sure that <sup>g ch. 21. 17.</sup> thou know-est all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee: by this <sup>h ver. 27.
ch. 17. 8.</sup> we believe that thou camest forth from God.

This confirmeth us in that faith, or persuasion, which we before had, though it was in us but weak, that indeed thou art come forth from God.

31 Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

Some read the words, (not as a question,) You do now believe. It is well you believe at last, you had reason enough to have believed before this time.

32 <sup>1</sup>Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, <sup>1</sup>every man to ||his own, and shall leave me alone: and <sup>1</sup>yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

Though you profess that now you do believe, you had need look to your faith; there is yet a trying time coming upon you, when your faith will waver, and you, who have been so long my followers, will leave me to shift for myself, and every one of you shift for yourselves: this came to pass presently after, Matt. xxvi. 56. Those who think they stand, had need take heed lest they fall; those who think their faith strongest, ought to be thinking with themselves, what they shall do, how they shall be able to stand, in a day of sharp trial. Many in a calm time appear to be professors and believers, who, when affliction and persecution ariseth for the gospel's sake, will fall away, and leave Christ alone. Yet (saith our Saviour) I am not alone, because the Father is with me. No man is alone who hath the presence of God with him. Christ knew that in all his sufferings he should have the presence and assistance of his heavenly Father.

33 These things I have spoken unto you, that <sup>m</sup>in me ye might have peace. <sup>n</sup>In the world ye shall have tribulation: <sup>o</sup>but be of good cheer; <sup>p</sup>I have overcome the world.

By peace here is not so much to be understood peace with God; which yet we have from Christ, and through Christ, according to Rom. v. 1, Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; nor yet peace of conscience, which is the copy of our peace with God; as a peace of mind, a quiet, serene, calm temper, which indeed is the effect of the other, as the cause: that you might not be troubled and disturbed, neither for my sake, nor yet for your own. Though in the world ye meet with troubles, which you will certainly do, because the world hateth you, be of good cheer, (saith he,) I have overcome the world; where by world is to be understood, all temptations from it, whether from the flatteries or from the frowns and troubles of it. We are said to overcome the world, but we overcome it as soldiers, fighting under Christ, who is the Captain of our salvation, and his victory is our victory, 1 John iv. 4; v. 4, 5. Christ overcame the prince of the world, and cast him out, as we heard before; and he hath overcome sin, and we in him, in the midst of all tribulations, are more than conquerors through him that loved us, Rom. viii. 37.

This was our Saviour's last sermon which we have upon sacred record in holy writ.

CHAP. XVII

Christ prayeth to his Father to glorify him, 1—5; and to preserve his apostles in unity of faith, 6—14, and from all evil, 15, 16; and to sanctify them with the word of truth, 17—19; and for the perfect union of all believers, and their admission to a share of his glory in heaven, 20—26.

THESE words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, <sup>a</sup>the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee:

When our Lord had finished his discourses, of which we have had a large account in chap. xiv.—xvi., he goes to prayer. As he taught us when we pray to direct our petitions to the Father, so in this he setteth us an example; and before he speaketh it is said he lifted up his eyes to heaven, as his Father's mansion-house, who, though he filleth heaven and earth, yet doth in heaven most manifest his glory: and therefore, teaching us to pray, he commandeth us to say, Our Father which art in heaven; not exclusively, as if God were not on earth also; but eminently, as heaven is the place where he most gloriously manifests himself. Lifting up the eyes was a usual gesture in prayer, and but an indication of the soul's being lifted up, Psal. cxxi. 1; cxxiii. 1; yet no necessary gesture, for we shall at another time find our Saviour falling upon his face when he prayed, Matt. xxvi. 39; Mark xiv. 35. The lifting up of the soul to God, wherein the main and spiritual part of prayer lies, doth not necessarily require the lifting up of the eyes. The publican cast down his eyes upon the earth, in the sense of his unworthiness. Our Lord lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, the hour is come; that is, the hour of my passion, the time wherein thou hast determined that I should die; now make thy Son glorious, by raising me from the dead, by taking me up to heaven, or by giving me assistance from thee to do the work which I have to do, to drink this bitter cup: that so I, being risen again from the dead, and ascending up to heaven, may make thy name famous by publishing thy justice, goodness, and truth, upon the preaching of the gospel to all nations.

2 <sup>b</sup>As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many <sup>c</sup>as thou hast given him.

I see no reason for any to contend here, that by all flesh the elect only, who shall be eternally saved, are to be understood; Christ's power undoubtedly extendeth further than to the elect, though to them only for salvation; he hath a power over reprobates and unbelievers to condemn them, as well as over his elect, to bring them to eternal life and salvation. The former part of the text speaketh of the more general power and authority, by which the Father had already made Christ glorious; putting all things under his feet, and causing all knees to bow down unto him; which are other phrases by which the same things are expressed, 1 Cor. xv. 27; Phil. ii. 10. This general power our Saviour executeth according to the counsels of God, with respect to their faith or unbelief. As to those given to Christ, that he should die in their stead, and with the price of his blood purchase eternal life for them; Christ executeth his power in giving them eternal life: under which notion (as appeareth from many other scriptures) is comprehended, not the end only, which is eternal life and happiness, but all the necessary means in order to that end; from whence we are to observe, that eternal life is a free gift, that the Son gives only to such as the Father hath given him by his eternal counsels; so that all shall not be saved; for the term as many as, &c., is plainly restrictive, and limits the gift to a certain number. And to examine our right to it, we need not ascend up into heaven, to search the rolls of the eternal counsels; for all whom the Father hath given him shall come unto him, and not only receive him as their High Priest, but give up themselves to be ruled and guided by him, by the efficacious working of the Spirit of his grace. By such a receiving of Christ, and giving up of ourselves to his conduct and government, we shall know whether we be of the number of those that are given to Christ; and till we find this, we have no reason to conclude it, but to fear and suspect the contrary.

3 And <sup>d</sup>this is life eternal, that they might know thee <sup>e</sup>the only true God, and Jesus Christ, <sup>f</sup>whom thou hast sent.

Those who deny the Divine nature of Christ, think they have a mighty argument from this text, where Christ, (as they say,) speaking to his Father, calleth him the only true God. But divines answer, that the term only, or alone, is not to be applied to thee, but to the term God; and the sense this, To know thee to be that God which is the only true God: and this appeareth from 1 John v. 20, where Christ is said to be the true God, which he could not be if the Father were the only true God, considered as another from the Son. The term only, or alone, is not exclusive of the other two Persons in the Trinity, but only of idols, the gods of the heathen, which are no gods; so 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16, and many other Scriptures: so Matt. xi. 27, where it is said, that none knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any the Father, save the Son; where the negative doth not exclude the Holy Spirit. Besides, the term alone is in Scripture observed not always to exclude all others, as Mark vi. 47. Our Saviour saith, it is life k ch. 20, 10.

l Cr. his own home.
m ch. 8, 29.
n ch. 10, 11.

m Is. 9, 6.
n ch. 14, 27.
Rom. 5, 1.
Eph. 2, 14.
Col. 1, 20.
o ch. 15, 19, 20, 21.
p Tim. 3, 12.
q ch. 14, 1.
r Rom. 8, 37.
s John 4, 4 & 5, 4.

a ch. 12, 23.
& 13, 32.

b Dan. 7, 14.
Matt. 11, 27.
& 23, 19.
c ch. 3, 35, &
5, 27; 1 Cor.
15, 22, 27.
Phil. 2, 10. Heb. 2, 8. c ver. 6, 9, 24, ch. 6, 37.

d Is. 63, 11.
Jer. 9, 24.
e 1 Cor. 8, 4.
f 1 Thes. 1, 9.
g ch. 3, 34 &
5, 36, 37, &
6, 29, 57, & 7, 29, & 10, 36, & 11, 42.

eternal to know him who is the only true God, that is, it is the way to eternal life, which is an ordinary figure used in holy writ. He adds, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent; by which he lets us know, that the Father cannot be savingly known, but in and by the Son. Knowing, in this verse, signifieth not the mere comprehending of God and of Christ in men's notions; but the receiving Christ, believing in him, loving and obeying him, &c.

<sup>g ch. 15. 31.
& 14. 13.</sup> 4 <sup>h ch. 4. 34. &
6. 36. & 9. 3.</sup> I have glorified thee on the earth: <sup>i ch. 14. 31.
& 15. 10.</sup> I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

I have glorified thee on the earth; by preaching the gospel, by living up to the rule of thy law, by the miracles which I have wrought. God could not be glorified by Christ, by the addition of any thing to his essential glory; only by manifesting to the world his Father's goodness, justice, mercy, truth, wisdom, and other of his attributes. One way by which he had glorified his Father, is expressed, viz. by finishing the work which he had given him in commission. But how could Christ say this, who had not yet died for the sins of men, which was the principal piece of his work? Answer. It was so nigh, that he speaks of it as already done: so, ver. 11, he saith, I am no more in the world, because he was to be so little a time in the world. Again, he speaks of what he was fully resolved to do, as if it were already done.

<sup>k ch. 1. 1, 2.
& 10. 30. &
14. 9. Phil. 2.</sup> 5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory <sup>l Col. 1. 15, 17. Heb. 1.</sup> which I had with thee before the world <sup>m 3. 10.</sup> was.

Let the glory which, as to my Divine nature, I had with thee before the foundation of the world, be communicated also to my human nature, that my whole person may be made glorious. From hence is easily concluded, against those who deny the Godhead of Christ, that Christ was glorified with his Father before the world was, which he could not have been if he had not been eternal God. He here begs of his Father, that that glory might shine upon his person as Mediator.

<sup>n ver. 26.
P. 22. 22.
m ver. 2, 9, 11.
ch. 6. 37, 39.
& 10. 29.
& 15. 18.</sup> 6 I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word.

Here he openeth this former phrase, I have glorified thee on the earth: it was done by manifesting the Lord's name, proclaiming his goodness and mercy, publishing his will, making famous all whereby God can be made known: this Christ did both by his words and by his works. This he had done (as he saith) to all those whom the Father had given him; whom the Father had given him by an act of his eternal counsel, and by inclining their hearts to own and receive him when he came into the world. He tells his Father, that his they were, his chosen ones; and he had given them unto Christ, that he should redeem them with his blood, and take the care of their salvation: and he saith, When I came and revealed thy will unto them, they have not stubbornly and obstinately, as the generality of the Jews, shut their eyes against the light, and rebelled against thy will revealed; but they have heard, received, embraced, and obeyed thy word.

7 Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee.

They have thus far made proficiency in the doctrine which I have taught them; that though the Pharisees say, that I cast out devils by Beelzebub the prince of devils, yet they believe, and are persuaded, that the doctrine which I have taught them is from thee, and that it is by a Divine power that I have wrought those miracles which I have wrought; and so I have manifested thy name unto them, and they have received the manifestation and revelation of thy name unto them.

<sup>n ch. 8. 26.
& 12. 49.
& 14. 10.
o ver. 25. ch.
16. 27, 30.</sup> 8 For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

Our Lord here doth both justify himself, and commend those whom in this former part of his prayer he is commending to his Father. He justifieth himself, that he had not delivered any thing to them but what he had from his Father; thereby teaching all those who claim the name of his ministers what is their duty, viz. to give to their hearers no word but what God hath given them. If Christ confined his discourses to words which his Father had given him, certainly we ought to do so also. We are not to speak what we list, nor what men would have us; we are tied up to God's word. He commendeth these his disciples, that they had received them; not only the sound of them in their ears, not only the notion of them in their understandings, but they had embraced and believed them; and had, from the force and authority of them, given credit to him as the true Messias, who came out and was sent from God. Though they were not yet come up to a perfect faith in him as the eternal Son of God, yet they believed him one that came from God, and was sent of God as the promised Messias; which seemeth to have been that degree of faith which Christ most insisted upon as to his disciples, until by his resurrection from the dead he declared himself to be the Son of God with power; though all along this Gospel, his discourses, and the miracles which he wrought, had a particular tendency to prove himself one with the Father, and the eternal Son of God; and the disciples had some weak persuasion of this also.

<sup>p 1 John 5.
19.</sup> 9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine.

The world seemeth here to signify all mankind, for whom Christ in this place doth not pray; though some interpret it of reprobates, others of unbelievers. Christ afterward prayeth for the world, ver. 20; that is, for such who, though they at present were unbelievers, yet should be brought to believe by the apostles' ministry. But to teach us to distinguish in our prayer, our Saviour here distinguisheth, and prayeth for some things for his chosen ones, which he doth not pray for on the behalf of others: these he describeth to be such as his Father (whose they were) had given him, either by an eternal donation, or by working faith in them.

<sup>q ch. 16. 15.</sup> 10 And all mine are thine, and I thine are mine; and I am glorified in them.

In the Greek the adjectives are of the neuter gender, so as the sense is not, All my friends, or all my disciples, are thine also; but, All my things are thine, and all thy things are mine; which is no more than he hath before often said. Christ and his Father have all things common, neither of them have any thing that is not the other's: they are one, and they agree in one; they have the same essence, the same will, the same attributes, the same friends. And I am (saith our Saviour) glorified, or made glorious, in them, by their owning, receiving, and embracing me, and accepting me as their Saviour. So as this verse containeth two arguments more, enforcing his petition on the behalf of his elect: 1. His Father's propriety in them, as well as his. 2. Their love to him, and the glory which redounded to him from their faith and holiness.

<sup>r ch. 15. 1.
& 14. 28.</sup> 11 And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. <sup>s 1 Pet. 1. 5.
Jude 1.
t ver. 21, &c. u ch. 10. 30.</sup>

The term world in this verse signifies not the men of the world, nor any particular party of them, (as it often signifies,) but the habitable part of the earth. Our Saviour saith he is no more in the world, because he was to continue on the earth but a very small time; but (saith he) these my disciples are like to abide in the world when I have left it; they will stand in need of this help, to be armed against all the temptations they will meet with from the world. I am coming to thee, therefore I commend them to thee, beseeching thee, that thou through thy power wouldst keep those, who, in giving themselves up to me, have also given themselves up to thee; let their owning thy name (which is as a strong tower, Prov. xviii. 10) keep them from all the temptations and dangers to which they will be exposed in the world, wherein they are to live and converse; that they may be one, one body, and in one Spirit: that they may own one Lord, one faith, one baptism, &c.; that they may be one in love and affection, as we are; in some proportion to that union which is bewixt thee and me, though not in an equality. This prayer of our Saviour's doth both oblige all those who in any sincerity own Christ, to study union both in opinion and affection; and also give us ground of hopes, that there is a time coming, when there shall be greater measure of it than we have seen in those miserably divided times wherein we have lived, and do yet live.

x ch. 6. 39.
 & 10. 28.
 Heb. 2. 13.
 y ch. 18. 9.
 1 John 2. 19.
 z ch. 6. 70.
 & 13. 18.
 a 1<sup>a</sup> 109. 8.
 Acta 1. 20.

12 While I was with them in the world, * I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, * but the son of perdition; * that the Scripture might be fulfilled.

Christ speaks here of himself as one who had already died, was risen, and ascended, though none of all these things were past, because they were so suddenly to come to pass. I have, (saith our Saviour,) for all the time that I have abode in the world, and conversed with them, kept them in thy name, i. e. in the steady owning and profession of thy truth; or (if we read it, through thy name) it signifieth through thy power, and the influence of thy grace. I have not so kept all that came to hear me, but all those whom thou gavest me by the act of thy eternal counsel; or whom thou gavest me to be my apostles: and none of them is proved an apostate, but the son of perdition: none of them is lost whom thou gavest me by thy eternal gift, none of them whom thou gavest me to be my apostles, but one who, though he was my apostle, and in that sense given to me, yet was never given me by thy eternal gift, as one to be by me redeemed, and brought to eternal life and salvation; for he was a son of perdition: we have this term applied to antichrist, 2 Thess. ii. 3. As the son of death, 2 Sam. xii. 5, signifies one appointed to die, or that deserveth to die; and the child of hell, Matt. xxiii. 15, signifies one who deserveth hell; so the son of perdition may either signify one destined to perdition, or one that walketh in the high and right road to perdition, or rather both; one who being passed over in God's eternal counsels, as to such as shall be saved, hath by his own wilful apostacy brought himself to eternal perdition, or into such a guilt as I know thou wilt destroy him. And by this the Holy Scripture is fulfilled, Psal. cix. 8, for that is the portion of Scripture here intended, as is apparent from Acts i. 20, where the apostle applieth that text to Judas, who is here spoken of. Other scriptures also were thus fulfilled, as Psal. xli. 9, compared with John xiii. 18.

13 And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

He speaketh still in the present tense. These words were not fulfilled six weeks after this, for he conversed with his disciples forty days after his resurrection, Acts i. 3; but Christ was now shortly coming, therefore he saith, I come. And, saith he, while I am in the world, I speak these things; I put up this prayer, that the joy of my people may not be diminished by my going from them, but that when they can no longer (as hitherto) rejoice in my bodily presence with them, they may yet rejoice that I am ascended to my Father, that they stand commended to the care of thee, my Father, by this my last prayer.

b ver. 6.
 c ch. 15. 14.
 19. 1 John 3.
 13.
 d ch. 8. 23.
 ver. 16.

14 <sup>b</sup> I have given them thy word; <sup>c</sup> and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, <sup>d</sup> even as I am not of the world.

I take more to be understood here, by Christ's giving his word unto his disciples, than his preaching the gospel in their ears: otherwise Christ had no more given these his disciples his word, than he had given it to many thousands of others who were yet in the world, and whom the world hated not. The sense therefore is, I have not only preached thy word in their ears, but I have opened their hearts to receive and believe it, and bowed their wills to a compliance with it; so as the word dwelleth in their hearts, is ingrafted in them, and they are turned into the likeness of it. And here it is observable, that when any soul is given to Christ by his Father, Christ will most certainly, first or last, give unto that soul his word in that sense; that is, so as it shall receive, believe it, and be turned into the likeness of it. And for this the world hath hated them, for thy word hath made them to be of another spirit from carnal, loose, and worldly men; they have other affections, other inclinations, other designs and studies; they are not of the world in that respect as I am not of the world: though in other respects not so; for Christ, as to his original, was not of the world, which they were, of the earth, earthy.

15 I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but * that thou shouldst keep them from the evil.

Christ doth not pray that his Father would take up his saints out of this sinful and troublesome world into heaven, because he know that they were to be of use to him for a time in the world; but he prays that the Lord would keep them from the evil one, (so some would have it translated,) or from the evil thing; by which we must not understand what is penally and afflictively evil, but only what is sinfully evil: and by his example he hath directed us how we ought to pray; not for death, nor absolutely for a deliverance from the evils and miseries of this life; but that we may be delivered from those temptations to sin, to which a multitude of sharp trials and afflictions will expose even the best of men.

16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

This is the same thing which he had said before, ver. 14, which he again repeateth, either to fix it in their memories, that they, calling it to their minds, might direct their lives accordingly, or be thereby fortified against the hatred and malice of the world; for which purpose he told them so before, chap. xv. 19, and again in this chapter, ver. 14: see the notes on ver. 14.

17 Sanctify them through thy truth: <sup>g</sup> thy word is truth.

h 2 Sam. 7. 28. Ps. 119. 142, 151, ch. 8. 40.

It is doubted amongst interpreters, whether sanctifying in this place signifieth the consecrating, deputed, or setting the apostles apart, and preparing them for the work of the ministry in which they were to be employed, as the word signifies, Jer. i. 5; or the strengthening and confirming their habits of grace, so as they might be able to encounter the temptations they should meet with from the hatred or opposition of the world; or the perfecting of them in holiness. Mr. Calvin saith our Saviour here prayeth that God would appropriate them unto himself. And he showeth how this is done, through, or in, thy truth; that is, some say, through thy truth engraven and imprinted upon their hearts by thy Holy Spirit, which was promised to lead and to guide them into all truth, chap. xvi. 13: say others, through thy Spirit, which indeed is the Sanctifier; and we have met with twice, called, the Spirit of truth, chap. xiv. 17. Some say, Sanctify them through thy truth, is no more than, Sanctify them truly, in opposition to that legal sanctification of priests, &c., of which we read in the books of Exodus and Leviticus. Others would have it, to thy truth, that is, to the preaching of thy gospel. But our translation seems to come nearest the meaning; through thy truth, that is, through the knowledge of thy truth; as the Gentiles are said to have had their hearts purified by faith, Acts xv. 9. He opens what he meant by truth, adding, thy word is truth; that is, thy word and gospel, which I have preached to them, is truth (the abstract, as some think, for the concrete); that is, it is most true: it is not like the doctrine of false prophets, nor like the doctrine of the Pharisees, which is partly true, partly false; but it is truth itself: and though indeed it is the blood of Christ which cleanseth and purifieth the heart, yet this is applied to the conscience by the Spirit, which is the Sanctifier, in and through the word of God preached and applied to the soul.

18 As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

That is, My Father, they have not thrust themselves into their employment, they have not run without sending; for as I am thine apostle, as I was sent by thee, so I have sent them. The apostles indeed were not sent for the same end in all things that Christ was sent; who was sent to purchase salvation for men, as well as to preach the gospel: but they were sent in part for the same work for which Christ was sent, and they were sent by him who had authority to send them; and as it is but reasonable for princes to protect those whom themselves send upon their embassies, so it was but reasonable that God should defend and protect those whom his Son had sent out as his ambassadors.

19 And <sup>k</sup> for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be || sanctified through the truth.

I sanctify myself, here, is no more than, I set myself apart, as a sacrifice acceptable and well-pleasing in the sight of God: and indeed sanctifying, in the ancient notion of it under the law, did ordinarily signify the setting of persons and things apart to the special service of God; which was done legally by certain ritual performances and ceremonies, and is still done inwardly and spiritually by regeneration, and renewing of the hearts of men and women by the efficacious working of the Holy Ghost. Christ saith, that for his disciples' sake he sanctified himself, being both the Priest and the sacrifice. Christ set apart himself as a sacrifice for his people, that they might be sanctified: not only our eternal life and happiness, but all the means to it, fell within the counsel of God; hence we are said to be chosen of Christ, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love, Eph. i. 4; and within the purchase of Christ; hence the apostle saith, Eph. v. 25, 26, that he gave himself for his church, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water: and our Saviour here saith, that he set apart himself for a sacrifice for our sins, that his people might be sanctified through the truth; that is, by receiving the truth, not in their ears only, but in their hearts, in the love of it, and bringing forth the fruits of it in all holiness of life and conversation.

20 Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

Two things are evident from this verse. 1. That Christ did not pray for any reprobates, not for any that were and should die unbelievers: he prayed before for those who actually did believe; he prayeth here for them that should believe; but we never read that he prayed for any others. Now whether he laid down his life for those for whom he would not pray, lieth upon them to consider, who are so confident that he died for all and every man. 2. That by persons given to Christ, cannot be understood believers as such; for Christ here prayeth for those that were no actual believers, but should believe. 3. That faith cometh by hearing; Christ here prayeth for those that should believe through their word, that is, the apostles' preaching the gospel.

21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

Our Saviour here prayeth on the behalf of such as should believe on him, that they might be one in faith, and one in brotherly love. Whoso considereth this as a piece of Christ's prayer for believers, and that St. Paul hardly wrote one epistle to the primitive apostolical churches in which he did not press this by most potent arguments, cannot but nourish some hopes, (how improbable soever it appears at present,) that all the sincere disciples of Christ shall one day arrive at the keeping of the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and likewise look upon themselves in point of duty obliged to endeavour it. To which pitch of perfection possibly Christians might soon arrive, if superiors would, after the example of the apostle, Acts xv. 28, lay upon their inferiors no more than necessary things; and equals would learn to contend for truth in love, and to walk with their brethren so far as they have attained; and as to other things, to forbear one another in love; and wherein any of their brethren are otherwise minded, then they are to wait till God shall reveal it to them, Phil. iii. 15. But this is not all the union which Christ prayeth for;

he also prayeth that they might be one in the Father and the Son; that is, that they might believe; for faith is that grace by which we are united to, and made one with, God and Christ; though others interpret it of obedience, or such things wherein God the Father and Christ are one, &c. For although so many as are ordained to life shall believe, yet that they might believe is matter of prayer: this our Saviour prayeth for, for the further glory of God, which is that which he meaneth by the world's believing that God had sent him; there being no greater evidence that Christ is the true Messiah, than the general acceptance of the doctrine of the gospel, which he brought throughout the world; for who can imagine, that a new doctrine brought into the world by one of no greater reputation than Christ had in the world, and propagated by persons of no greater quality than the apostles were, should obtain in the greatest part of the world, if he that first introduced it had not been first sent by God into the world, and the apostles had not been extraordinarily influenced and assisted by God as to the propagation of it, after Christ was ascended into heaven?

22 And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

By glory here some understand the heavenly glory; but then they must understand the oneness mentioned in the latter part of the verse, of the union which the saints shall have with Christ and his Father in glory, in another world. Others understand the Divine nature, of which the apostle, 2 Pet. i. 4, saith, believers are made partakers: this seemeth to come nearer, for the more men and women are made partakers of that, the more they will study the unity of the Spirit. Others understand the power of working miracles, by which Christ is said to have manifested his glory, chap. ii. 11; and the effect of this power is called the glory of God, chap. xi. 40. Others understand the preaching of the gospel, in which the ministration of the Spirit is glorious, 2 Cor. iii. 8; and the faithful ministers of the gospel are called the glory of Christ, 2 Cor. viii. 23. That they may be one, even as we are one; our Saviour either again repeats his prayer, that they might be one; or else declareth that he had communicated his power, his glory to them, that they might be one, as he and his Father are one.

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

I in them; not only as my Divine nature is united to their flesh, but as I have made them partakers of my Spirit, and of the Divine nature; as I have loved them with a special and peculiar love, and am the head, they the members; I the vine, they the branches. And thou in me, the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in me bodily; I being the brightness of thy glory, the express image of thy person; thou also doing whatsoever I do, and accepting and approving of it, as chap. xiv. 10. That they may be made perfect in one; the Greek is, eis in, into one; in one body, whereof Christ is the Head; which body is the church, keeping a unity of faith; all believing the same things in matter of faith, and those things no other than what thou hast revealed, and I have revealed as from thee. This, O Father, will be a great evidence, both that thou hast sent me, when the world shall see thee bowing men's hearts to the obedience of the truth of thy gospel; and that thou hast loved them with a tender and everlasting love, as thou hast loved me.

24 Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

Here our Saviour willeth his disciples eternal life; or rather prayeth to his Father, that he would preserve his disciples unto, and at last bestow upon them, eternal life and salvation; so as the phrase, whom thou hast given me, is not to be restrained to the apostles, but to be extended to all those who, belonging to the election of grace, shall

1 ver. 11, 22,
23, ch. 10, 16.
Rom. 12, 5.
Gal. 3, 28.
11 ch. 10, 28,
& 14, 11.

k 1 Cor. 1, 2,
30, 1 Thes.
4, 7, Heb.
10, 10.
l Or, truly sanctified.

n ch. 14, 20.
1 John 1, 3.
& 3, 24.

o Col. 3, 14.

p ch. 12, 26.
& 14, 3.
1 Thes. 4, 17.
q ver. 5.

hereafter be made heirs of glory, and have everlasting life and happiness. This he expresseth under the notion of being with him where he is, as chap. xiv. 3; which is called a being ever with the Lord, 1 Thess. iv. 17; and certainly this is the highest happiness, to be where the Son of God is. That they may behold my glory, is the same thing with, that they may be made partakers of my glory: as to see death, is, in Scripture phrase, to die; and to see life, is to live; so, to behold the glory of God, is to be glorified. For, saith our Saviour, thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world, both as thy only begotten Son, and as the person in whom thou hast chosen all them, and whom thou hast set apart to be the Mediator between God and man; and therefore I know that thou wilt glorify me, and that thou wilt in this thing hear my prayers, and glorify them also, whom thou hast given to me to be redeemed by my blood.

r ch. 15. 21.
& 16. 3.
e ch. 7. 29.
& 8. 55.
& 10. 15.
t ver. 8.
ch. 16. 27.

25 O righteous Father, 'the world hath not known thee: but 'I have known thee, and 'these have known that thou hast sent me.

It is observed, that the servants of God, in holy writ, have used in their prayers to give unto God such compellations as have been suitable to the things which they have begged of God in their prayers, and proper to express their faith in God, for the hearing of such their prayers: Christ here calls his Father by the name of righteous, with relation to the argument which he here useth, which is from his disciples' knowledge of him; under which term (as very often before) is comprehended their acceptance of him, believing in him, love to him, &c. Father, saith he, thou art righteous; it is a piece of thy righteousness to render to every man according to his work, Job xxxiv. 11; Psal. lxxii. 12; Prov. xxiv. 12. The world hath not known thee; the men of the world hate thee, are ignorant of thee, rebellious against thee; but I have known thee; I have known thee, and have made thee known, and I have been obedient to thy will; and these my disciples have known me, and known, that is, received, embraced me, as one sent by thee, as the Messiah.

u ver. 6.
ch. 15. 15.

26 "And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love 'wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them.

By the name of God, is to be understood God himself, and whatsoever God hath made himself known by his word and gospel, his attributes and perfections. And after my resurrection, I will yet further declare it to them, who are yet in a great measure ignorant and imperfect in their notions of thee; that thy love wherewith thou hast loved me may be further communicated to them, and be derived to them, and abide in and upon them for ever; because I am in them (so some would have it read, though the word be καρῶ, which properly is, and I, as we translate it). The words are but a repetition of what our Lord hath often said, and illustrated, chap. xv. 9, by the parable of the vine and the branches; and teach us this lesson, that Christ must be in those souls who can pretend to any share in that love of God wherewith he hath loved Christ: Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

CHAP. XVIII.

Judas betrayeth Jesus: the officers and soldiers at Christ's word fall to the ground, 1—9. Peter cutteth off Malchus's ear, 10, 11. Jesus is led bound to Annas and Caiaphas, 12—14. Peter denieth him, 15—18. Jesus is examined by the high priest, and struck by one of the officers, 19—24. Peter denieth him the second and third time, 25—27. Jesus, brought before Pilate, and examined, confesseth his kingdom not to be of this world; Pilate, testifying his innocence, and offering to release him, the Jews prefer Barabbas, 28—40.

Having so largely discoursed the history of our Saviour's passion, in our notes upon the 26th and 27th chapters of Matthew, where (to make the history entire) we compared what the other evangelists also have about it; I shall refer the reader to the notes upon those two chapters, and be the shorter in the notes upon this and the following chapters.

WHEN Jesus had spoken these words, "he went forth with his disciples over 'the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples.

a Mat. 26. 36.
Mark 14. 32.
Luke 22. 39.
b 2 Sam. 15. 23.

Matthew hath nothing of those discourses, and prayer, which we have had in the four last chapters; no more have any of the other evangelists, who yet all mention his going into the mount of Olives, after his celebration of his last supper, Matt. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26; Luke xxii. 39. Our evangelist saith, he went over the brook Cedron into a garden. The others say nothing of a garden, but mention his coming to a place called Gethsemane. It is probable that this village was at the foot of Mount Olivet; and the garden mentioned was a garden near that village, and belonging to it (for they had not their gardens within their towns, but without): now the way to this was over the brook Cedron; of which brook we read, 2 Sam. xv. 23; David passed over it when he fled from Absalom; and 1 Kings ii. 37, where it is mentioned as Shimei's limit, which he might not pass. This brook was in the way towards the mount of Olives; which being passed, he with his disciples went into a garden belonging to the town Gethsemane.

2 And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: 'for Jesus oft-times resorted thither with his disciples.

c Luke 21. 37. & 22. 39.

We read that Christ, when he was at Jerusalem, was wont at night for privacy to retire to the mount of Olives, Luke xxi. 37; xxii. 39; and it should seem that he was wont ordinarily to go to this garden, which made Judas know the particular place where he might find him.

3 'Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the Chief Priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons.

d Mat. 26. 47.
Mark 14. 43.
Luke 22. 47.
Acts 1. 16.

The evangelist here passeth over all mentioned by the other evangelists about Judas's going to the high priests, and contracting with them, and cometh to relate his coming to apprehend him with a band of men that he had obtained from the chief priests and Pharisees for that purpose. By band we must not understand a Roman cohort, as the word signifies, but such a convenient number out of that band (probably) which at the time of the passover guarded the temple, as was sufficient to take him: they came with lanterns and torches, (though it were the time of full moon,) to make the strictest search; and with weapons, fearing where no fear was; for Judas (their leader) could have told them that he was not wont to go with any great company to the mount of Olives.

4 Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

This evangelist saith nothing of what the other evangelists mention, of the sign that Judas had given them, by which they should know him; nor of Judas's kissing of him, or our Saviour's reply to him. (John, all along his Gospel, mentioneth very little of what is recorded by the other evangelists.) It must be supposed, that after Judas had kissed our Saviour, our Saviour himself came forth, and asked him whom they looked for; hereby showing that he laid down his life, and no man took it from him: he could easily have delivered himself out of their hands, (though I think they are too charitable to Judas, who think that it was that which made Judas discover him; not that he designed his death,) he had once and again before so escaped them; but now his hour was come, he freely offers himself unto his enemies, and asketh whom they looked for.

5 They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them.

They tell him, Jesus of Nazareth. Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea, Matt. ii. 1; but his father and mother lived at Nazareth, a city of Galilee, Luke ii. 4, 39, where he lived with them, ver. 51; hence he was called Jesus of Nazareth, from the place where he lived, and most ordinarily conversed, Matt. xxi. 11; xxvii. 71; Mark i. 24; x. 47; xiv. 67; xvi. 6. Christ replieth that he was the man; and it is particularly noted, that Judas was with this armed company.

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

For a further evidence to the world that Christ was the Son of the Everlasting Father, it pleased God in all the periods of his life to show forth by him some acts of the Divine power. What had Christ said or done here to prostrate his armed adversaries? He had only asked them whom they looked for; and hearing that it was for him, told them he was the man: they are struck with a terror, and instead of apprehending him, start from him, and fall down to the ground. If there were so much majesty in and such an effect of the voice of Christ in one of the lowest acts of his humiliation, what will the voice of a glorified Christ be to sinners, when he shall return as a Judge to condemn the world! And what will the effect of that be upon his enemies! How easily might our Saviour have escaped, now that his enemies were fallen to the ground! But he suffered them to rise up again, to take him, and to carry him away, to show that he had laid down his life freely.

7 Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way:

Our Saviour's question, and their answer, are the same as before. They fell down, but they rose up again, and go on in their wicked purpose. This is the genius of all sinners; they may be under some convictions and terrors, but they get out of them, if God doth not concur by his Spirit, and sanctify them as means to make a thorough change in their hearts. Though those words, let these go their way, might be interpreted of the armed men that came with the officers, of whom there seemed no such need to carry away an unarmed man; yet the next words make it evident that they are to be understood of his disciples, being persons against whom they had no warrant. Our Lord hath a care of his disciples, that they might not suffer with him.

9 That the saying might be fulfilled, <sup>ch. 17. 12.</sup> which he spake, Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none.

But were those words of our Saviour, Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none, to be understood as to a temporary losing, or of an eternal destruction? Some of the ancients were of opinion, that they were to be understood of a losing with reference to a spiritual and eternal state; but that they were applicable also to a losing as to this life. I think that they are applicable to both, and that in this text they are primarily to be understood of a losing as to a temporal death and destruction. It was Christ's purpose, that eleven of his twelve apostles should outlive him, receive the promise of the Father in the pouring out of the Spirit, and be his instruments to carry the gospel over a great part of the world: this they could not have done had they been put to death at this time; he therefore resolved not to lose them in this sense, but to uphold and preserve their lives, for these ends to which he had designed them; and therefore he said to these officers, You have the person whom ye seek for; for these my disciples, you have nothing against them, let them go away: and by his power upon their hearts he effected it, so that they had a liberty to forsake him, and to flee and to shift for themselves.

10 'Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the High Priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

It is thought that this action of Peter's was before the apprehension of our Saviour, though after the discovery of it, as our evangelist reports it; because upon the apprehension of our Saviour, both Matthew, chap. xxvi. 56, and Mark chap. xiv. 50, agree, that the disciples fled; and it can hardly be thought that if Peter had seen his Master apprehended he would have adventured upon so daring and provocative an action; nor could Christ, had he been first bound, have stretched out his hand, to have touched his ear, and healed it. Least any should wonder how Peter came by a sword, we may read, Luke xxii. 38, that the disciples had two swords amongst them, probably brought out of Galilee for the defence of themselves and their Master against assaults from robbers in that long journey.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: <sup>g Mat. 20. 22 & 26. 39, 42.</sup> the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

The other evangelists report this part of the history with many more circumstances; particularly our Saviour's miraculous healing Malchus again; see the notes on Matt. xxvi. 51—54; Mark xiv. 47—49; Luke xxii. 50, 51. With what pretence some, both of the ancient and modern writers, think that Peter did not sin in this action, I do not understand, when our Saviour did not only (as John saith) command him to put up his sword again into its sheath, but also (as Matthew tells us, chap. xxvi. 52) told him, that all they that take the sword, that is, without commission from God, shall perish with the sword. He used that argument, according to the other evangelists. This evangelist tells us of another, The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it? that is, shall I not freely and cheerfully submit to the will of God in suffering what he willeth me to suffer? The term cup is often in Scripture used to signify people's measure and proportion of affliction and suffering, which God alloteth them; (possibly the metaphor is taken from the custom of some nations, to put some kinds of malefactors to death by giving them a cup of poison;) see the notes on Matt. xx. 22; xxvi. 39. It is a good argument to quiet our spirits roiled by any afflictive providences: they are but a cup, and the cup our Father hath given us.

12 Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him,

As is usual for officers to do with ordinary malefactors which are great criminals; they put no difference between Christ and the most villainous thieves and murderers. There are many conjectures why Christ was first led to Annas, whereas Caiaphas was the high priest that year, not Annas (as the next words tell us); but it is uncertain whether it was because his house was very near, and in the way to Caiaphas's house, or that he lived in the same house with his son-in-law; or out of an honour and respect to him, being the high priest's father, or to please the old man's peevish eyes with such a sight, or by this means to draw Annas to the trial of Christ, or because he had had a more than ordinary hand about the apprehending him, or to take direction from him what to do: we cannot give a certain account why they used this method; we are only certain they did it, and that they did not carry him before him as high priest; for the next words tell us,

13 And <sup>h See Matt. 26. 57. i Luke 9. 2</sup> led him away to Annas first; for he was father in law to Caiaphas, which <sup>And Annas was high priest that year.</sup> was the High Priest that same year. ||

That his son-in-law Caiaphas was the high priest that year; which we had also before, chap. xi. 51, where we discoursed more largely about the disorder of the Jews, in that most corrupt time, when that place was bestowed without regard to the family of Aaron, and bought and sold, or conferred at the will of their conquerors. See the notes on chap. xi. 51.

14 <sup>k ch. 11. 50.</sup> Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

Of his giving that counsel, and the wickedness of it, (though it proved an oracle beyond his intention,) we discoursed before: see the notes on chap. xi. 51. The meaning of the high priest was, that right or wrong, whether they had any just accusation against Christ or no, yet they might for expediency put him to death, because his death might prevent mutinies and seditious amongst the people.

15 ¶ <sup>l Mat. 26. 58. Mark 14. 54. Luke 22. 54.</sup> And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple: that disciple was known unto the High Priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the High Priest.

When Christ was apprehended, the other evangelists tell us, all the disciples forsook him and fled; but it should seem that Peter, who all along the gospel history hath appeared more forward, and bold, and daring than any of the rest, came back; but who that other disciple was that went in with him, and in favour of whom Peter was admitted, we are not told. It is but a conjecture of those who think that it was John, for John was a Galilean as well as Peter, and would have been as much to be questioned upon that account as Peter was. They judge more probably who think it was the master of the house where Christ had ate the passover, and celebrated his supper; or some person of note in Jerusalem, who by reason of his reputation might have more free access to the chief magistrate than one of the apostles, who were but mean persons in the account of the Jews. This disciple, whoever he was, was one that had some familiarity and acquaintance with Caiaphas, which it is no way probable that either John or any of the apostles had.

m Mat 26. 69.
Mark 14. 66.
Luke 22. 54.

16 <sup>m</sup> But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the High Priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

This further confirmeth the conjecture of those, who think that other disciple was none of the apostles, but a favourer of Christ, that lived in Jerusalem, and was of some repute either for estate or place; so as he had not only an acquaintance with the high priest, but also with his family; and could gain admittance into his palace, not only for himself, but also for his friend.

17 Then saith the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

This is Peter's first denial of his Master; betwixt which and his second denial (of which John saith nothing till he comes to ver. 26) the evangelist interposeth many things not mentioned by the other evangelists.

18 And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

Here is nothing in this verse which needeth any explication, unless any should ask how it could be cold weather at that time of the year, (about April 14,) especially in a country where it now was the time of harvest? which may easily be resolved. It was now about three of the clock in the morning, and we know that in summer (the spring especially) nights are cold; besides that in those countries that are more equinoctial, the nights are longer, and consequently colder towards the morning, as the air hath had more time to cool.

19 ¶ The High Priest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

Questions about sedition or rebellion belonged not to the judge of this court, but fell under the cognizance of the Roman governor, they being now a conquered people, and tributary to the Romans; who, though themselves heathens, granted the Jews their liberty as to religion, and courts in order thereunto; as also a liberty of courts for civil causes: the high priest therefore saith nothing to Christ about his being a King, but only inquireth of him about his doctrine. What particular questions he propounded to him we do not read; only in general he inquired about the doctrine he had preached, and the disciples he had sent out, which was one and the same cause, to see if he could bring him under the guilt of a false prophet; for that, and blasphemy, and idolatry, were three principal causes that fell under the cognizance of this court, as appeareth from Deut. xiii.

n Mat 26. 55.
Luke 4. 15.
ch. 7. 14. 36.
28. & 8. 2.

20 Jesus answered him, * I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

I spake openly to the world; to all sorts of men, my enemies as well as my friends. I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; the Jews for instruction do use to resort to the temple, which was in Jerusalem, and whither three times in the year all the males were wont to come from all parts of the country: and in the public assemblies of the Jews, and in the places where they use to meet. And in secret have I said nothing; I have said nothing in secret contrary to the doctrine which I have publicly taught; though I have preached in other places, yet it hath been the same thing which I have said in public.

21 Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

We are told by those that have written about the Jewish order in their courts of judgment, that their capital causes always began with the defensive part; and that it was lawful for any to speak for the defendants for a whole day together; (though they did not observe this in the cause of Christ;) and their method was not to put the defendants to accuse themselves, but to examine witnesses against them. Our Saviour therefore appeals to their own order, and says, Why askest thou me? It was, saith he, no secret action; I spake publicly, ask them that heard me speak; they know what doctrine I preached, and can accuse me if I delivered any false doctrine.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by *struck Jesus ¶ with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the High Priest so?

o Jer. 20. 2.
Acta 23. 2.
¶ with a rod.

This lets us see in what indecent disorder the Jewish government was at this time, that an inferior officer dared to strike a supposed criminal, standing before the judgment-seat, and defending himself by their own known rules and methods; for what had our Saviour said or done, more than making use of the liberty their own law allowed; not confessing any thing against himself, but putting them upon the proof of what they laid to his charge? Yet we read of no notice taken of this disorder.

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?

Our Saviour could easily have revenged himself upon this officer; but, to teach us our duty, he only gently reproves him, and lets him know that he did not behave himself as one ought to do in the face of a court of justice, where he had both a liberty and a present opportunity to have accused him, if he had spoken ill; and if he had spoken well, there was no reason for his striking him.

24 <sup>p</sup> Now Annas had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the High Priest.

p Mat. 26. 57.

These words are only to let us know, that these things were not done before Annas, but before Caiaphas the high priest, to whom (as to his proper judge) Annas had sent him bound, as he was at first brought to him.

25 And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. *They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

q Matt. 26.
8. 71.
Mark 14. 69.
Luke 22. 58.

26 One of the servants of the High Priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied again: and <sup>r</sup> immediately the cock crew.

r Mat. 26. 74.
Mark 14. 72.
Luke 22. 60.
ch. 13. 38.

This history of Peter's denial of his Master the second time we have before met with, Matt. xxvi. 71, 72; Mark xiv. 69, 70; Luke xxii. 58, 59, with several circumstances not mentioned by John. See the notes upon Matt. xxvi. 69, &c.

28 ¶ *Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas

s Matt. 27. 2
Mark 15. 1.
Luke 23. 1
Acta 3. 23.

|| Or, Pilate's house, Matt. 27. 27. & Acts 10. 28. & 11. 3.

phas unto || the hall of judgment: and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the Passover.

The chief priests having in their sanhedrim done with our Saviour's case, and judged him worthy of death, as we read, Matt. xxvi. 66; Mark xiv. 64; which two evangelists, with Luke, relate this history of Christ's trial before the sanhedrim, with many more circumstances than John doth; (see the notes on those texts;) they now lead him from the ecclesiastical court to the court of the civil magistrate; either kept in Pilate's house, who was the present civil governor under the Romans, or some where at least where he sat as judge, which was therefore called the hall of judgment. And it was early; how early it was we cannot tell, but probably about five or six of the clock. The Jews would not go into the judgment-hall, that they might not be defiled, for they accounted it a legal pollution and uncleanness to come into a heathen's house, or to touch any thing which a heathen had touched: now the reason is assigned why they were afraid of contracting any legal pollution, viz. that they might the passover. Object. But had they not eaten the passover the night before? that was the time prescribed by the law, to the letter of which there is no doubt but that our Saviour strictly kept himself. Answer. Some say that they had not, because the day wherein they should have eaten it this year falling the day before their sabbath, the passover was put off to be kept on the sabbath, that two great festivals might not be kept two days successively; so as, though our Saviour kept it at the time appointed by the law, yet the Jews did not. But this is denied by other very learned men, who tell us the Jews never altered their day for keeping their passover, neither for the succeeding sabbath, nor any other reason. They say therefore, that by the passover which is mentioned in this verse is to be understood the feast, mentioned Numb. xxviii. 17, which was to be kept the fifteenth day, which day was a day of great solemnity with them from the morning to the evening; all the seven days they also offered various sacrifices, which all went under the name of the passover, because they followed in the days of the paschal feast. Thus the term passover is taken, Deut. xvi. 2, Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd. According to this notion, the meaning of those words, that they might eat the passover, is, that they might proceed in their paschal solemnity, keeping the feast according to the law. Be it as it will, these hypocrites in it notoriously discovered their hypocrisy, scrupling what caused a legal uncleanness, and not at all scrupling either immediately before their eating the passover, or presently after it, in their great festival to defile themselves with the guilt of innocent blood; nay, had Christ been such a malefactor as they pretended, yet the bringing him into judgment, their prosecuting, and accusing, and condemning him, and assisting in his crucifying, were not works fit for the day before such a solemnity, or the day after it, which was so great a festival: but there is nothing more ordinary, than for persons over zealous as to rituals, to be as remiss with reference to moral duties.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man?

The Roman governor humoureth them in their superstition (the Romans having granted them the liberty of their religion): they scruple to go into the ordinary place of judgment; he goes out to them, and calls for their accusation of Christ, according to the ordinary and regular course of judgments.

30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

They had in their sanhedrim before judged him guilty of blasphemy, Matt. xxvi. 65, but this they durst not mention, lest Pilate should have rejected them, as being not concerned in questions of their law; they therefore only exclaimed against him in the general as a great malefactor, but of what kind they do not say. It should seem they would have had Pilate have added his civil authority to confirm and execute their ecclesiastical censure, without so much as hearing any thing of the cause (as at this day frequent in popish countries); but they met with a more equal judge.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

Take ye him, and judge him according to your law; I will judge no man before myself first hear and judge of his crime; you have a law amongst yourselves, and a liberty to question and judge men upon it, proceed against him according to your law. They reply, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. We are assured by such as are exercised in the Jewish writings, that the power of putting any to death was taken away from the Jews forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem. Some say it was not taken away by the Romans, but by their own court. They thought it so horrid a thing to put an Israelite to death, that wickedness of all sorts grew to such a height amongst them, through the impunity, or too light punishment, of criminals, that their courts durst not execute their just authority. And at last their great court determined against the putting any to death; nor (as they say) was any put to death by the Jews, but in some popular tumult, after their court had prejudiced the person by pronouncing him guilty of blasphemy, or some capital crime; which seemeth the case of Stephen, Acts vii.

32 "That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die." u Mat. 20. 19. ch. 12. 32. 33.

Christ had before this time told his disciples that he should die, and that by the death of the cross, as we read, Matt. xx. 19. God by his providence ordereth things accordingly, to let us know that the Scripture might be fulfilled to every tittle. Crucifying was no Jewish but a Roman death; had the Jews put him to death, they would have stoned him; but he must remove the curse from us, by being made a curse for us, being hanged on a tree, which was looked upon as an accursed death, Gal. iii. 13. The Jews therefore knowing nothing of this counsel of God, yet execute it by refusing themselves to put him to death, and putting it off to Pilate, though possibly their design was but to avoid the odium of it. Thus God maketh the wrath of men to praise him.

33 "Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?" z Mat. 27. 11.

Then Pilate entered into the judgment-hall again, the ordinary place of judicature, from whence we read before he went out, in civility to the Jews, whose superstition (as we before heard) kept them from going there during the festival. He called Jesus to him privately, and asks him, if he owned himself to be the King of the Jews? the confessing of which (for without doubt they had suggested some such thing to Pilate, and could not prove it) had brought Christ under Pilate's power, he being governor for the Romans, and so concerned to inquire upon any that pretended to any regal power over that conquered people.

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?

Our Saviour neither affirmeth nor denieth: though we are bound, whenever we speak, to speak the truth, yet we are not bound at all times to speak the whole truth. Our Saviour desireth to be satisfied from Pilate, whether he asked him as a private person for his own satisfaction, or as a judge, having received any such accusation against him? for if he asked him as a judge, he was bound to call them to the proof of what they had charged him with.

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the Chief Priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?

The sum of this is no more than that he did not devise this captious question, for he was no Jew, not concerned in nor regarding what they had in their books of the law and the prophets; but he was accused to him by those of his own nation, and he was desirous to find out the truth, and to know what he had done.

<sup>1</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 13.
<sup>2</sup> 1 Joh. 2. 44.
<sup>3</sup> 7. 14. Luke
<sup>4</sup> 12. 14. ch. 8.
<sup>5</sup> 15. & 8. 15.

36 <sup>1</sup> Jesus answered, <sup>2</sup> My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

My kingdom is not of this world; that is, I cannot deny but that I am the King of the Jews, but not in the sense they take it, not such a king as they look for in their Messiah; my kingdom is spiritual, over the hearts and minds of men, not earthly and worldly. And of this thou thyself mayst be convinced; for was there ever an earthly prince apprehended and bound for whom none of his subjects would take up arms? Here is none of my disciples takes up arms, or offereth to fight for me; which is a plain evidence, that I pretend to no kingly power in disturbance of the Roman government.

37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that <sup>1</sup> is of the truth heareth my voice.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 8. 47.
<sup>1</sup> 1 Joh. 3. 19.
<sup>2</sup> & 4. 4.

Art thou a king then? Pilate seems to have spoken this rather in derision and mockery, than out of any desire to catch him in his words. Christ neither owneth himself to be a king, nor yet denieth it, but tells Pilate that he said so; and to this end he was born, and for this cause he came into the world, to bear testimony to the truth: i. e. I cannot deny but that I have a spiritual kingdom, that is truth, and I must attest the truth; it was a part of my errand into the world; and every one who is by Divine grace disposed to believe and love the truth, will hear and obey my doctrine.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, <sup>1</sup> I find in him no fault at all.

<sup>b</sup> Mat. 27. 24.
<sup>1</sup> Luke 23. 4.
<sup>2</sup> ch. 19. 4. &

Pilate (as profane persons use to do) thought that our Saviour, speaking of truth, and a spiritual kingdom, did but cant, and therefore asking him what he meant by truth, he never stays for an answer, but goes out again to the Jews, whom he had left without the door of the judgment-hall, and tells them he found no fault in him. Whatever the quality of the kingdom was of which our Saviour spake, he judged that his pretensions to it were not prejudicial to the authority of the emperor, nor the tranquillity of the state, and would have dismissed him from their unjust prosecution.

39 <sup>1</sup> But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

<sup>c</sup> Mat. 27. 15.
<sup>1</sup> Mark 15. 6.
<sup>2</sup> Luke 23. 17.

Whence this custom came is uncertain; most probably from the Romans, who in some honour of this great festival of the Jews, and in humour of them, granted them the life of any criminal whom they desired. Pilate propounds Christ as the prisoner whom he had most mind to release, perceiving that his prosecution was of malice, rather than for any just cause.

40 <sup>1</sup> Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. <sup>2</sup> Now Barabbas was a robber.

<sup>d</sup> Acts 3. 14.
<sup>e</sup> Luke 23. 19.

But such was the malice of his adversaries, that though Barabbas was one that had committed murder in an insurrection, yet they choose him rather than Christ. See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 15—18.

CHAP. XIX

Jesus is scourged, crowned with thorns, mocked, and buffeted by the soldiers, 1—4. Pilate declareth his innocence:

the Jews charge him with assuming the title of the Son of God. 5—7. Pilate upon further examination is more desirous to release him, but, overcome with the clamours of the Jews, delivereth him to be crucified, 8—16. He is led to Golgotha, and crucified between two malefactors, 17, 18. Pilate's inscription on his cross, 19—22. The soldiers part his garments, 23, 24. He commendeth his mother to John, 25—27; receiveth vinegar to drink, and dieth, 28—30. The legs of the others are broken, and the side of Jesus pierced, 31—37. Joseph of Arimathea begetteth his body, and, assisted by Nicodemus, burieth it, 38—42.

THEN <sup>1</sup> Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged him.

<sup>a</sup> Matt. 20.
<sup>1</sup> 19. & 27. 26.
<sup>2</sup> Mark 15. 16.
<sup>3</sup> Luke 16. 33.

It was the custom of the Romans, when any one was to be crucified, first to scourge him; but (as it appears) Pilate ordered it, hoping that, though he could not prevail by any other art with them, yet by this he might; and they might possibly be satisfied with this lighter punishment; for it appeareth by ver. 4 and 12, that Pilate had a mind to release him, if he could have satisfied the Jews; though he had not courage enough to oppose the stream, and to do what himself thought was just, in despite of their opposition.

2 And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

The other evangelists also mention a reed put into his right hand. The crown, and the purple robe, and a sceptre, are all regal ensigns; they give them to Christ in derision of his pretence to a kingdom, and in the mean time themselves proclaim what he had said, that his kingdom was not of this world; for though earthly kings wear crowns, yet they use to be of gold, not of thorns; and their sceptres use to be gold, not reeds.

3 And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

They mocked him when they said, Hail, King of the Jews! but yet spake a great truth, though not in their sense. The other evangelists speak of more indignities offered him: see the notes on Mark xv. 19.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, <sup>1</sup> that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 18. 38.
<sup>1</sup> ver. 6.

Pilate appeareth convinced in his own conscience that Christ had done nothing worthy either of death or bonds, and a great while resisted that strong temptation which he was under to please the people, and to secure his own station, lest any complaint made to the Roman emperor against him should have prejudiced him.

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man!

He therefore, after Jesus had been scourged, and dressed up in this mock dress, brings him out again to the people to move their pity.

6 <sup>1</sup> When the Chief Priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

<sup>c</sup> Acts 3. 13.

Our Lord findeth more compassion from Pilate, though a heathen, than he found from those of his own nation; yea, those that pretended highest to religion amongst them: Pilate would have saved him; they cry out for his blood. Pilate leaves another testimony behind him, that what he did, at last overborne with a great temptation, he did contrary to the conviction of his own conscience, and as yet declineth the guilt of innocent blood.

7 The Jews answered him, <sup>1</sup> We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because <sup>2</sup> he made himself the Son of God.

<sup>d</sup> Lev. 24. 16.
<sup>e</sup> Mat. 26. 65.
<sup>1</sup> ch. 5. 18. &
<sup>2</sup> 10. 33.

The law they mean, is the law for putting false prophets to death, Deut. xviii. 20. By the Son of God here, they mean the eternal Son of God, in all things equal with his Father; otherwise it was a term applicable to themselves, whom God calls his son, his first-born, &c. Now for any in this sense to arrogate to himself this title who indeed was not so, was blasphemy, and that in the highest degree, and brought him under the notion of a false prophet of the deepest dye: but this was injuriously applied to Christ, who thought it no robbery to be equal with the Father, and who was so declared by God himself at his baptism and transfiguration; and who had made his Divine power appear by such works as no mere man ever did.

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

It should seem that the Romans permitted judgments to the Jews according to their own laws, which the Roman governor was to see executed; or else, seeing the rabble in such a heat and disorder, he feared some breaking out.

9 And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? 'But Jesus gave him no answer.

Our Lord, who knew the secrets of all men's hearts, very well knew, that though Pilate had for some time withstood his temptations, yet he would at last yield; he also was ready to lay down his life, as he knew was determined for him; having therefore made a reasonable defence, he thinks fit to add no more of that nature.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

Pilate seemeth something displeas'd that Christ would be no more free: men in worldly power are too prone to forget from whom they derive it.

11 Jesus answered, 'Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin.

Our Lord checketh Pilate modestly for boasting of his authority as a judge to absolve or condemn him; declaring, that all the power he had was derived from God, who in his eternal counsels had determined this thing, which must therefore come to pass: but withal lets him know, that this neither excused him, nor much less the Jews, who were to execute the Divine purposes. Pilate was to look to God's revealed will, not his secret counsels, of which he could have no knowledge; but he saith, they who had delivered him to him had the greater sin: he did act but as a judge upon their accusations; they procured the false witness, they would not be satisfied without his blood, and they sinned against much more light.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, 'If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: 'whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.

He sought all fair and plausible means to release him, being convinced in his own conscience that he was an innocent man: but the Jews double their clamours, and (according to the usual acts of sycophants) quit their charge as to religion, though that was the true and real cause of all their malice, and pursue only the charge which was proper for the cognizance of the Roman governor, of sedition or rebellion; and tacitly accuse Pilate as a traitor, and being false to his trust, if he should let our Saviour go; for no man could set up himself as a king, but he must proclaim himself a traitor to the Roman emperor.

13 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

That saying, that if he let Jesus go he was not Cæsar's friend. Pilate was a man that loved the honour that was from men more than the honour and praise which is from God; he was more afraid of losing his place than his soul, and could no longer resist the temptation he was under. He brought Jesus forth, and sat down in a place called the Pavement, because it was paved with stone, but in the Hebrew, (mixed with the Syriac,) Gabbatha, that is, a high place; for it was their manner to have their judgment-seats higher than other parts of the room where they were.

14 And 'it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

The preparation to any feast signifies the day before it, because on that day they prepared whatsoever according to the law was necessary for the solemnization. Some much doubt whether in this place the passover signifies strictly the paschal supper, which it could not do if the Jews strictly this year kept to the law; for the fourteenth day of the month Nisan at evening was the time when most certainly Christ kept it, who ate it the night before. It is therefore more probably thought, that by the passover here is meant their great festival, which was upon the fifteenth day. (See the notes on chap. xviii. 28.) John tells us it was about the sixth hour; that is, in the latter part of the interval between nine o'clock in the morning and twelve at noon: for the division of the day according to the Jews was in four parts; the first was from the rising of the sun till our nine in the morning, and was called the third hour; the other was from the third hour to the sixth, that is, twelve o'clock at noon; the third division was from their sixth hour to the ninth, that is, three o'clock with us in the afternoon; the fourth division was from the ninth hour to sun-set, that is, with us six o'clock in the evening, when the sun is in the equinox. Now, not only the time when any of these hours came was called either the third or sixth hour, but the space of three hours allotted to each division was so called, when the next division began: so the time of our Saviour's crucifixion is recorded by Mark to be the third hour; that is, the whole space from nine o'clock to twelve was not quite gone, though it was near at an end; and by the evangelist here it is said, that it was about the sixth hour, that is, near our twelve o'clock. And thus the different relations are clearly reconciled.

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The Chief Priests answered, 'We have no king but Cæsar.

The more Pilate sought to quiet them, the more they rage, contrary to all dictates of reason; when God hath determined a thing, all things shall concur to bring it about. Pilate mocks them when he saith, Shall I crucify your King? Yet so fierce was their malice against Christ, that to compel the governor to condemn him, (though there were not a people under heaven more zealous for their liberties, nor more impatient of a foreign yoke,) they cry out, We have no king but Cæsar; that is, the Roman emperor, who had conquered them.

16 'Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away.

This must be at or about twelve of the clock, for that must be signified by the sixth hour, ver. 14. Pilate condemned him, and delivered him to the executioner, who (as the manner is in such cases) led him away.

17 'And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 31—33, where whatsoever needs expounding in this verse may be found, and this text is reconciled to that, which telleth us, that one Simon, a man of Cyrene, bore his cross. Their places of execution (as usually with us) were without their cities.

18 Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 38.

19 ¶ 'And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing

f. 1a. 53. 7.
Matt. 27. 12,
14.

g. Luke 22.
33. ch. 7. 30.

h. Luke 23. 2.

i. Acts 17. 7.

m. Matt. 27.
26. 31. Mark
15. 15. Luke
23. 24.

n. Matt. 27.
31. 33. Mark
15. 21. 22.
Luke 23. 26,
33.
o. Num. 15.
36. Heb. 13.
12.

p. Mat. 27. 37.
Mark 15. 26.
Luke 23. 36.

was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 37.

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

The place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city; as all their places of execution were, within two furlongs, or thereabouts. It was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin; it was written in all three languages, that not the Jews only, but all such strangers as were come up to the feast, might understand it.

21 Then said the Chief Priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews.

The Jews thought it would be a disgrace to them, that Christ should be reported abroad as their king, therefore they desire an alteration of the writing.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

But Pilate refuseth to gratify them, and lets them know he would not be directed by them what to write, nor alter any thing of it.

23 ¶ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, ¶ woven from the top throughout.

Both Matthew, chap. xxvii. 35, and Mark, chap. xv. 24, mention this parting of Christ's garments amongst them, which must be understood of his inward garments; which some tell us might easily be done, because their garments were made up of four parts. But his outward garment, which is called his coat, was all of a piece.

24 They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, ¶ They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

This made them choose rather to cast lots for that, than to divide it, as they had done his inward garments. But there was something more in it than the soldiers knew; Christ hereby proved a true Antitype to David, who said of himself figuratively, Psal. xxii. 18, They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture; by which he meant no more, than that his enemies loaded themselves with his spoils: those words which figuratively were true of David, proved literally true as to Christ. Thus vile and wicked men are fulfilling the Scriptures when they little think of it.

25 ¶ Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of ¶ Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

These words the wife are not in the Greek, but supplied by our translators; which leaves it doubtful whether that Mary was the wife, or the mother, or the daughter of Cleophas.

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, ¶ Woman, behold thy son!

We have often heard that John was the beloved disciple, and usually expressed under the notion of him whom Jesus loved. Our Lord commendeth his mother to the care of John, whom he had ordered to take care of her, as if he had been her own son: this letteth us know that Joseph was at this time dead, otherwise it is not probable that Christ would have committed his mother to any other guardian.

27 Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her ¶ unto his own home.

He also reciprocally commendeth his mother to John, to be cared for as his own mother. From that time Mary went home, and lived with John.

28 ¶ After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, ¶ that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

David said, Psal. lxxix. 21, to signify his enemies multiplying afflictions upon him, They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink; which he spake metaphorically. Part of these words were without a figure literally fulfilled in Christ, who was the Son of David; for he crying out upon the cross that he thirsted, there being no other liquor at hand, or this being set on purpose for this end, they dip a sponge in it, and give it to him to drink; whether to stupify his sense, or to prolong his life in those torments, or barely to quench his thirst, is hard to determine. It is probable that it was such a kind of refreshment as they allowed to ordinary malefactors in his circumstances, the particulars of which usage we are not able to determine.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, ¶ It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

When Christ had tasted the vinegar, he said, It is finished; that is, I have now done and suffered all things which lay upon me in this life to do and suffer. Having said this, he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. They are terms expressive of death, and our Saviour's free surrender of his soul unto his Father.

31 The Jews therefore, ¶ because it was the preparation, ¶ that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

It was the preparation; not to the passover, (for that was celebrated the night before,) but to the weekly sabbath; and they judged according to the law, Deut. xxi. 23, that the land would be defiled if the persons executed were not buried that day, but their bodies should remain on the tree all night, especially on the sabbath, which began immediately after sun-set. And this sabbath was a more than ordinary sabbath, for it was not only the weekly sabbath, but also their second day of unleavened bread; which, and the last day, were both very solemn days, as may be seen, Lev. xxiii. This makes them come and beseech Pilate that the bodies might be taken down, and in order to it, that their legs might be broken, lest any life remaining in them they should revive and escape.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs:

They brake the two other malefactors' legs, but not Christ's, because they found him dead. It is very possible in a natural course, that of three men dying in the same manner, one may die sooner than another; but it is but rationally presumed, that the cause of our Saviour's quicker death, was not the failure of his spirits sooner, but his own voluntary surrender of his soul.

¶ Mat. 27. 35.
Mark 15. 24.
Luke 23. 34.

¶ Or, wrought.

¶ Ps. 22. 18.

¶ Mat. 27. 55.
Mark 15. 40.
Luke 23. 49.

¶ Or, Cleopas.
¶ Luke 24. 18.

¶ ch. 13. 23.
¶ 20. 2. & 21.
7. 20. 24.
x. ch. 2. 4.

¶ ch. 1. 11.
& 16. 32.

¶ Ps. 69. 21.

¶ Mat. 27. 48.

¶ ch. 17. 4.

¶ c. ver. 42.
Mark 15. 42.
d. Deu. 21. 23.

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water.

But one of the soldiers, to make sure of him, pierced his side, out of which it is said that there presently came forth blood and water. That there should come out blood is no wonder, nor yet that there should come forth water. Blood being congealed, it is ordinary to see water on the top of the vessel where it is. And besides, anatomists tell us, that in the hollow part of the breast there are watery as well as bloody humours in the membrane that encompasseth the heart, which being pierced, and the water let out, the living creature dieth necessarily. But yet in regard of the next words, He that saw it bare record, and he knoweth that he saith true, &c., most divines think, that there was some mystery in this water and blood which came out of Christ's side pierced. Some would have the two sacraments of the gospel signified by this water and blood. Christ is said to have come by water and blood, 1 John v. 6; that is, say interpreters, he brought in a true expiation of sins by his blood, and the laver of regeneration, washing the soul from its filthiness: and thus be proved the true Antitype, answering the Jewish types in sacrifices and divers washings.

35 And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

Nor was this a fable, for John saw it, and bare record, and knew it to be true; and published it, that men might believe that it was him in whom all the legal types and figures had their completion.

36 For these things were done, 'that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

Nor was there any thing of this but in fulfilling of the Scripture; for it was God's law about the passover, Exod. xii. 46; Numb. ix. 12, concerning the paschal lamb, (which was a type of Christ, chap. i. 29; 1 Cor. v. 7.) that a bone of it should not be broken. So as by this breaking no bone of Christ's body, they might have understood that he was figured out by the paschal lamb.

37 And again another Scripture saith, 'They shall look on him whom they pierced.

So also by seeing Christ's side pierced, (a thing not very usual,) they might have understood, that he was the person mentioned, Zech. xii. 10.

38 ¶ And after this Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly 'for fear of the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 57—59.

39 And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

The history of Nicodemus coming by night to our Saviour, and of their discourse together, we had chap. iii. 1—21. We again heard of him standing up for Christ in the sanhedrim, chap. vii. 50. We read no more of him till now, where he shows his love to his dead body; bringing a hundred pounds weight of myrrh and aloes, which were both of them drugs used in embalming dead bodies, as also in perfuming other things, Psal. xlv. 8.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and 'wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

That is, persons of fashion.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

As all their gardens were out of the city, so also their burial places, which usually were vaults, or caves within the earth.

42 There laid they Jesus therefore 'because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

There they immediately buried Christ, because the time strictly called the preparation (for the whole day was so called) was nigh at hand. See a fuller account of the history of our Saviour's passion, death, and burial, in the notes on Matt. xxvii., where what is said by all the evangelists is compared together, and made one complete history.

CHAP. XX

Mary Magdalene, seeing the stone taken away from the sepulchre, runneth to tell Peter and John, who go thither, and find not the body, 1—10. Mary seeth two angels sitting in the sepulchre; Jesus himself appeareth to her, 11—18. He appeareth to his disciples, 19—23. The incredulity of Thomas, 24, 25. Jesus appeareth again to the disciples, and satisfieth the doubts of Thomas; who confesseth him, 26—29. The sufficiency of what is written for a ground of salvation, 30, 31.

The evangelist St. John giving a fuller account than the other evangelists of Christ's resurrection, and his converse upon the earth forty days, until he ascended up into heaven, we have in our notes on the other evangelists been shorter, reserving ourselves for a fuller account of it till we should come to these two last chapters of this evangelist.

THE first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

Matthew saith, In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week; he also mentioneth another Mary in company with Mary Magdalene. Mark tells us that other Mary was the mother of James and Salome. Luke saith, they came, referring to the women which came with him from Galilee, chap. xxiii. 55. For the time, Luke saith it was upon the first day of the week; Mark saith it was when the sabbath was past; our evangelist saith it was when it was yet dark; so that Matthew's ὄψε δε σαββάτων, which we translate, in the end of the sabbath, must be interpreted by Mark, when the sabbath was past; and indeed Matthew plainly expounds himself, adding, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week; which must be seven or eight hours after the Jewish sabbath was ended, for that ended with the setting of the sun the night before. The other evangelists tell us, that the design of their coming was to show their last act of love, in anointing or embalming the body of Jesus; for which purpose they had bought materials the night wherein he was crucified, but rested on the sabbath day, which ending about sun-set, probably they slept some hours, and early in the morning, in the twilight, they come with their spices. Hence appears, that there is no contradiction at all betwixt the four evangelists about the time of these women's coming to the sepulchre. Matthew saith it was about the dawning of the first day of the week; Mark saith it was when the sabbath was past; Luke saith it was upon the first day of the week; so saith John: which would make one admire that so many words should have been spent by divines in untying a knot here, where there is indeed none. Though John, in his history of our Saviour's burial, saith nothing of any stone rolled to the mouth of the sepulchre; yet Matthew doth; and of the Jews' sealing of it, and setting a watch, Matt. xxvii. 64—66. Mark (chap. xvi. 3) tells us also, that these women were thoughtful as they came, who should roll the stone away; and Matthew also tells us how it came rolled away, viz. by an angel. John saith nothing but that the stone was rolled away. So then the history runs thus: Early on the first day of the week an angel, in a glorious appearance, (described by Mark,) cometh down, rolleth away the stone from the mouth of the sepulchre, and Christ ariseth: soon after, these women came with spices, and were thoughtful as they came who

e 1 John 6, 6.

f Ex. 12. 46. Numb. 9. 12. Ps. 34. 20.

g Ps. 22. 16. 17. Zech. 12. 10. Rev. 1. 7.

h Mat. 27. 57. Mark 15. 42. Luke 23. 50.

i ch. 9. 22. & 12. 42.

k ch. 3. 1, 2. & 7. 50.

a Mat. 28. 1. Mark 16. 1. Luke 24. 1.

should roll away the stone; but when they came to the sepulchre they found that, as to that, their cares were needless, for the stone was rolled away to their hands.

2 Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

Then she runneth; that is, Mary Magdalene ran into the city to tell Peter; and that seemeth to be the reason why John mentions only her going to the sepulchre: but yet Luke (chap. xxiv. 10) makes not Mary Magdalene only, but Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, the reporters of the news to the apostles; but possibly she was the forwardest and first-reporter of it. She came to the eleven, and told all these things to them, Luke xxiv. 9, but possibly her chief discourse was with Simon Peter, and John, the beloved disciple: she complains to them that her Lord was removed out of the sepulchre, whither and by whom she knew not. But how did they know that? Mark saith, they entered into the sepulchre, chap. xvi. 5. Or if that were after, as it should seem by ver. 11 of this chapter; they guessed that the body was gone when they saw the stone rolled away, and the door open.

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

Luke, chap. xxiv. 12, mentions Peter's going only, upon Mary Magdalene's report; but he must be expounded by this evangelist, who expressly saith, that Peter and John went together, and that John outran Peter, and got first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

John stooped down and looked into the sepulchre, and saw the linen clothes lying, but he would not adventure to go in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7 And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

But Peter, who all along the Gospel appears to have been the boldest spirit, goeth into the cave, and seeth all the linen clothes lying there, and the napkin that was about his head lying by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

John seeing Peter adventure in, adventureth also, and seeth the same things, and believeth that Christ was risen from the dead; or (as some think) that, as the women had said, somebody had taken him away.

9 For as yet they knew not the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

That is, they did not fully understand those scriptures of the Old Testament, Psal. ii. 2, and xvi. 10, and cx., and the types of the Old Testament, by which Christ's resurrection was foretold and prefigured.

10 Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

Peter and John, when they had been within the sepulchre, and seen that the body was not there, went home; believing verily that what the women at first told them was true, that somebody had removed the body out of the sepulchre; whither, they knew not.

11 But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

That the Mary here mentioned was Mary Magdalene appeareth from ver. 14, compared with Mark xvi. 9, which saith, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene.

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

The other evangelists differing in their accounts of this part of the history, have raised some questions here not easily to be resolved. Matthew reports thus, chap. xxviii. 2—9, And, behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him; lo, I have told you. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word. And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, &c. Mark saith, chap. xvi. 2—3, And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. Where by the rising of the sun must not be understood its rising above the horizon; but after midnight, (as the learned Casaubon hath noted,) when the sun and stars begin to ascend. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him. But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you. And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid. Luke reports this part of the history thus, chap. xxiv. 1—12, Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre. And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus. And it came to pass as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments: and as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? he is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words, and returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest. It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles. And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not. Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre, and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass. Concerning the persons that went to the sepulchre, and the time of their going, there is (as we have showed) little difficulty in reconciling the evangelists. The greatest difference seemeth to be about the angels that Mary saw; whether she saw two apparitions of angels, or but one, and one angel, or two; and concerning the time when she saw them, whether before or after that Peter and John had been in the sepulchre. Matthew saith, the stone was

b ch. 12. 22.
c 12. 23. &
21. 7, 20, 24.

c Luke 24. 12.

d ch. 19. 40.

e ch. 11. 44.

f Pa. 16. 10.
Acto 2. 25.
—31. & 13.
34, 35.

g Mark 16. 8.

rolled away, and the angel sat upon the stone; this must be without the sepulchre. Mark saith, they, entering into the sepulchre, saw (an angel in the shape of) a young man sitting, &c. Luke and John speak of two angels; but seen in the sepulchre, not without it. There is no doubt but the apparition was of two angels; one of which might be seen without first, sitting upon the stone, to let the women know that he had rolled it away: both of them within, sitting one at the head, the other at the feet, of the place where the body of Jesus lay. But the greatest question is, Whether the woman saw the angels before that Peter and John had been at the sepulchre, or after? Some think that it was before, but it is no way probable; for it can hardly be thought but that if they had seen the angel at the first, they would have told the eleven of it, or Peter and John at least; nor would Mary have told Peter and John (as ver. 2) they had taken away her Lord, &c., for the angels told them he was risen. So that although by some of the others' relation, who say nothing of Peter and John's coming to the sepulchre, it seems as if the women saw the angel before their coming to satisfy themselves, yet indeed it was after. The women first came, saw the door open, the stone rolled away, &c. In a fright they ran back, and told it the disciples. Peter and John came to see, and being satisfied, return, leaving Mary still standing at the sepulchre weeping; then she stooping down and looking into the sepulchre, both saw the angel sitting on the stone, and also the two angels within the sepulchre, who fully revealed the resurrection to her.

<sup>h Matt. 28. 9.</sup> <sup>Mark 16. 9.</sup> 14 <sup>h</sup> And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and 'knew not that it was Jesus.

<sup>l Luke 24. 16.</sup> <sup>31. ch. 21. 4.</sup> And presently Christ himself appeareth to her, though at first she did not know him.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

Either these words passed before the angels had told her that he was risen, Mark xvi. 6; Luke xxiv. 5, 6; or (which is most probable) Mary was hard to believe what the angels had told her so lately; but coming out of the sepulchre, Christ appeareth to her, whom she knew not, but thought him to have been the person that had the charge of that garden where Christ was buried, and that he for his own conveniency had removed the dead body; she therefore desires to know where he had disposed of it, having a mind to remove it to some honourable place of burial.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

Christ calleth her by name, making such a sound as he certainly knew she understood. She calleth him Rabboni, which is as much as to say, My Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.

There are in this verse two no mean difficulties: the one about the sense of the prohibition, when our Saviour forbade this woman to touch him; when after his resurrection (Matt. xxviii. 9) he suffered the women to hold him by the feet, and himself (ver. 27 of this chapter) called Thomas to thrust his hand into the hole of his side. There are many opinions about it: the best seems to be the opinion of those who think that our Saviour saw Mary too fond, and too much in the embraces of her Lord, as if she thought he had been raised up to such a converse with them as he had before his death; and this error is all which he tasks her of, not forbidding her any kind of touching him, so far as to satisfy herself that he was truly risen from the dead, but restraining any such gross conception. The other difficulty, What force of a reason there could be for her not touching him because he had not yet ascended?

is much solved by that answer to the former; reminding Mary that he was to ascend to his Father, though he had not yet ascended, and therefore not to be enjoyed by them with so much freedom and familiarity as before. But (saith he) go and tell my brethren, that is, my disciples; whom the apostle tells us he is not ashamed to call brethren, Heb. ii. 11, 12; that I ascend, that is, I shall shortly ascend, to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God: though I shall very suddenly leave them, yet I shall go but to my Father and my God, and to their Father and their God.

18 <sup>n Mat. 28. 10.</sup> <sup>Luke 24. 10.</sup> Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

This was that first appearance of our Lord after his resurrection to Mary Magdalene, after that he was risen from the dead, mentioned Mark xvi. 9, 10, which she reported to the disciples; but Mark saith, they believed her not, ver. 11. Matthew tells us of another appearance of his, chap. xxviii. 9, to the women as they went from the sepulchre, when they held him by the feet, and worshipped him. Luke tells us of a third appearance to the two disciples as they were going to Emmaus; which is also shortly touched by Mark, chap. xvi. 12, 13; but it is there said that they believed them not. John mentioneth neither of these. These were all the same day that he rose, so was also the next, which is mentioned by our evangelist in the following verses.

19 ¶ <sup>o Mark 16.</sup> <sup>14. Luke 24.</sup> <sup>36. 1 Cor. 15.</sup> Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

Luke expounds this verse, chap. xxiv. 29, where the two disciples told Christ it was towards evening, and the day was far spent; for the Jews called the afternoon evening, as well as the time after sun-set; and John tells us expressly, it was yet the first day of the week. This appearance is unquestionably the same mentioned Luke xxiv. 36. For it is said, the two disciples went immediately to Jerusalem, where they found the eleven gathered together, and discoursed of the Lord's appearance to them; and while they spake, Jesus came and stood in the midst of them, and said unto them, (as here), Peace be unto you. The disciples had shut the doors of the place where they met, for fear of the Jews. Here is a great question betwixt the Lutherans and Calvinists, how Christ came in amongst them when the doors were shut? whether he went through the doors remaining shut? which the Lutherans siffly maintain, as a strong proof of the possibility of the real presence of the body of Christ in, with, or under the elements of the Lord's supper; though we object, that this is to destroy the nature of Christ's body, and to assign him a body which indeed is no body, being not obvious to the sense, nor confined to a place; and which must pierce another body, which is contrary to the nature of a body according to our notion of bodies. The Lutherans object, 1. That here is a plain mention of the doors being shut. 2. No mention of the opening of them. 3. Nor of Christ's entrance upon opening any doors, windows, roof, or by any ordinary way, as men use to enter into houses. 4. Nor, had he so entered, would there have been any occasion for the disciples taking him for a spirit, as it is plain they did, Luke xxiv. 37. The Calvinists on the other side object, 1. That it is not said that he went through the doors. 2. That if he had gone through the doors, he would not presently have called to them to have seen him, and handled him; by which he evidenced that his body had such dimensions as our bodies have, and so could not go through a door shut. In the Lutherans' reason, the fourth is only considerable, the three first have no force, because all circumstances of actions are not recorded in holy writ. Nor is there much force in the fourth, for the doors by his miraculous power opened and shut, and he showed himself in the midst of them, and used to them the usual salutation amongst the Jews, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, he shewed unto p ch. 16. 22. them his hands and his side. 'Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

He showed unto them his hands and his side; Luke adds his feet too; those parts of his body where were the most undeniable marks of the death he had suffered upon the cross. Then to disciples, who gave little credit to what Mary Magdalene, and the other woman, and the two disciples going to Emmaus, had reported, believed; seeing the Lord, and being exceeding glad at this confirmation of their faith.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: 'as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

Peace be unto you; the repeating of this salutation speaketh it more than an ordinary compliment, or form of salutation. It signifieth his reconciliation to them, notwithstanding their error in forsaking him, and fleeing; it prepared their attention for the great things that he was now about to speak to them; it also signified, that he was about to preach the gospel of peace to all nations. As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you; I have now fulfilled my ministry, and am now going to my Father who sent me: now by the same authority that I am sent, I send you, to gather, instruct, and govern my church; I send, or I will send, you clothed with the same authority with which I am clothed, and for the same ends in part for which I was sent.

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

The apostles could not but be apprehensive how great a work their Lord had laid upon them, in sending them as his Father had sent him, to carry the gospel over the world; Who (said Paul afterward) is sufficient for these things? Our Lord therefore fortifies them with an earnest of that more plentiful effusion of the Spirit, which they afterward received in the days of Pentecost. They before this had received the Spirit as a Spirit of sanctification, and had received a power to work miracles. They did not till after this receive the gift of tongues, &c. But he here assures them of the presence of the Holy Spirit with them, in their more ordinary ministry, in instructing and governing the church. This conferring of the Spirit upon them he confirms to them by breathing, as an exterior sign or symbol. The name, Spirit, signifieth a breath; and it is said, that in the creation God breathed into Adam the breath of life. Christ breatheth into his apostles the Holy Spirit; thereby showing, that the Holy Spirit proceedeth, as from the Father, so also from him; as the breath of a man proceedeth from him. He also useth words, expounding his action in breathing, and carrying with them an authority, which being once spoken, the thing was done.

23 'Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

Whether Matt. xviii. 18 be a parallel text to this, I doubt: see the notes on that verse. Our Lord here speaks of the sins of persons, Whose soever sins ye remit, &c.; he saith there, Whosoever ye shall bind or loose. This text hath caused a great deal of contest. All remission of sins is either authoritative; so it is most true, that none can forgive sin but God; and if we had no Scripture to prove it, yet reason will tell us none can discharge the debtor but the creditor, to whom the debt is owing: or else ministerial; thus he who is not the creditor (amongst men) may remit a debt by virtue of a letter of attorney made to him, authorizing him so to do. The question therefore amongst divines is, Whether Christ in this text hath given authority to his ministers actually to discharge men of the guilt of their sins; or only to declare unto them, that if their repentance and faith be true, their sins are really forgiven them? The former is by many contended for; but it doth not seem reasonable, 1. That God should bestow men with such a piece of his prerogative. 2. That God, who knoweth the falsehood of men's hearts, and the inability in the best ministers to judge of the truth of any man's faith or repentance, as also the passions to which they are subject, should give unto any of the sons of men an absolute power under him, and in his name, to discharge any from the guilt of sin; for certain it is, that without true repentance and faith in Christ no man hath his sins forgiven; so as no minister, that knoweth not the hearts of men, can possibly speak with any certainty to any man, saying, his sins are forgiven. What knowledge the apostles might have by the Spirit of discerning, we cannot say. But certain it is, none hath any such certainty of knowledge now of the truth of any man, declaring his faith and true repentance; from whence it is to me apparent, that no man hath any further power from Christ, than to declare to them, that if indeed they truly believe and repent, their sins are really forgiven. Only the minister, being Christ's interpreter and ambassador, and better able to judge of true faith and repentance than others, (though not certainly and infallibly,) such declarations from a faithful, able minister, are of more weight and authority than from others. And this is the most I can conceive should be in this matter; and that if by those words any further power be granted to the apostles, it was by reason of that power of discerning of spirits, 1 Cor. xii. 10, which ordinary ministers since the apostles' times, or in latter ages, cannot with any modesty pretend unto.

24 ¶ But Thomas, one of the twelve, 'called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

Whether Thomas had ever, since they all forsook our Saviour in the garden and fled, returned again to a communion with the rest, or was absent through some occasion, is not said; but upon this some have started a question, Whether Thomas, being absent, received the Holy Ghost at this time as the rest did? Some think he did not, because of his unbelief. Some of the ancients think he did; for, Numb. xi. 26, 27, when God gave out the Spirit to the seventy elders, Eldad and Medad, though absent, had their share of it, ver. 27. The matter is not much.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

It is not said what disciples, whether any of the apostles, or some others, told Thomas of this appearing of the Lord unto them. But Thomas eminently declareth his unbelief, which argues him as yet too ignorant of the Deity of Christ, and having given too little heed to what Christ had told them of his rising again the third day.

26 ¶ And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

After eight days signifieth here the eighth day from the resurrection, counting the day wherein Christ rose for one; as we call those third day agues which have but one day's intermission, and those quartan agues which have but two days' intermission; so it is said, Mark viii. 31, after three days he shall rise again, that is, the third day. This appears the most probable sense of the phrase: the disciples beginning from Christ's resurrection to keep the first day of the week for the weekly sabbath, and having met on the resurrection day, met again that day seven-night, hoping (probably) for such a presence of Christ with them in their meeting as they had before experienced; nor was their expectation vain. It appears also further, from Acts xx. 7, and 1 Cor. xvi. 2, that the Christians were wont ordinarily to meet together the first day of the week for religious exercises; which from Christ's resurrection, or institution, or both, is thought to be called the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. Nor indeed do we read in all the Scripture of any congregation of Christians on the Jewish sabbath, but upon this day; though, indeed, we find that the apostles (and possibly some other Christians) did meet together with the Jews in their synagogues on their sabbath; but we have not so much as one instance after the resurrection of any congregation, where Christians only were assembled upon the Jewish sabbath. Thomas at this time

q Mat. 28. 18.
ch. 17. 18, 19.
Heb. 3. 1.
2 Tim. 2. 2.

r Matt. 10.
18. & 18. 18.

was with them. It is said again that Christ came and stood in the midst of them, the doors being shut: concerning which phrase, see the notes on ver. 19.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

We had need take heed what we speak wherever we are. Christ had not after his resurrection so ordinary and frequent a converse with his disciples as before. This is the fifth time that we read of Christ's appearing to them since his resurrection. He knew what words of unbelief Thomas had uttered, and accordingly applieth himself to him, in a wonderful condescension to his weakness; he bids him reach his finger, and his hands, and behold his hands, and thrust his hands into his side. So pitiful is our Lord, and compassionate towards the infirmities of his people.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

My Lord, to whom I wholly yield and give up my self; and my God, in whom I believe. It is observed, that this is the first time that in the Gospel the name of God is given to Christ; he was now by his resurrection declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4. So as Thomas did not show more weakness and unbelief at the first, than he showed faith at last, being the first that acknowledged Christ as God over all blessed for ever, the object of people's faith and confidence, and his Lord, to whom he freely yielded up himself as a servant, to be guided and conducted by him.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: "blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

Thou believest that I am risen from the dead upon the testimony of thy senses; thou doest well in that: thou hast seen, thou hast felt me; but it is a more noble faith to believe without any such sensible evidence. Faith is properly an assent given to a proposition upon the testimony of revelation, which if it be but human it is no more than a human faith; as we give credit to what our neighbours tell us, though we have not seen it with our own eyes, nor heard it with our ears immediately, nor had it made evident to any of our senses. If the revelation to which the assent is given be from God, we call the assent that is given to it a Divine faith; so that to give credit to a thing upon the evidence of sense, is properly not believing, otherwise than as sense confirms what we have before received by a Divine revelation. This is a sure rule, that by how much our faith stands in less need of an external evidence of sense, the stronger it is.

30 ¶ And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

This passage plainly refers to whatsoever signs we read of in any part of St. John's Gospel; and lets us know, that the evangelist could have added abundance more to the history of the miracles which Christ wrought upon the earth.

31 But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.

But he had wrote these to induce his readers to believe that Jesus Christ was the Son of God; a thing of so great concernment to them, that their eternal life depended upon it; for through his name alone eternal life is to be obtained, Acts iv. 12.

CHAP. XXI

Christ appeareth to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias, and maketh himself known by a great draught of fishes, 1—11. He eateth before them, 12—14. He thrice repeateth his charge to Peter to feed his flock; foretelleth the manner of his death; and rebuketh his curiosity concerning John, 15—23. John asserteth the truth of his testimony, and that Jesus did many acts besides, too numerous to be recorded, 24, 25.

AFTER these things Jesus shewed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed he himself.

After three several appearances of Christ to his disciples, which hitherto were all of them in Jerusalem, Christ showed himself again to them in Galilee, whither he had ordered his disciples to go, promising there to meet them, Matt. xxvi. 32; Mark xvi. 7. Here the occasion and circumstances of this his third appearance are related by St. John.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples.

All the disciples were either there in several places, or going thither, according to Christ's direction before mentioned: but either these seven were there before the rest, or else they lodged together, or near one another; so as these only are here mentioned as being together at this time, and so witnesses of this miracle which followeth.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing.

Peter and divers others were fishermen, as we have formerly heard, and had boats which they so employed. Though they were called to the work of the ministry, yet, churches not yet being gathered and constituted able to maintain them, they did not judge it unlawful to employ themselves in honest vocations, which might bring in something of a livelihood; no more did Paul afterward. The others resolve to go with Peter. They went, but that night caught nothing; the providence of God so ordering it, that Christ's Divine power might be seen in commanding fish into their nets.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus.

Probably their distance from him was the cause that they did not know him, though they had seen him once and again since his resurrection from the dead: others think, that by the providence of God their eyes were holden that they should not know him, as Luke xxiv. 16.

5 Then Jesus saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No.

He asketh them if they had any thing to eat, not because he knew not, but in order to what he intended to do, to make them more attentive to the miracle which he by and by intended to work.

6 And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

Though they had before laboured in vain, yet their Master's command encourageth them to go to work again; then they take a multitude of fishes; a presage, say some, of that great success which the apostles should have in their fishing for men.

7 Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did cast himself into the sea.

There is a great dispute amongst critical writers what this fisher's coat was; whether a loose coat, or the garment next his skin, or a fisherman's slop. It is a point not worth the disputing: it was some garment that might modestly cover him when he came to Jesus, and yet not hinder him in his swimming.

8 And the other disciples came in a little ship ; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with fishes.

The other disciples came in a little fishing-boat, dragging the net with fishes ; probably, because it was too heavy to be lifted up into the boat.

9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

As to the question whence this fish came, there are three opinions : some think that our Saviour caught it out of the sea without a net, or by his power commanded it to come to his service ; others think that the history is transposed, and this verse should in its true order come after the eleventh ; but it is most probable that Christ by his Divine power created the fish, as well as the coals and the bread.

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three : and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

In this one miracle there is a complication of miracles. 1. That having fished all night and caught nothing, they should at Christ's command throw out the net on the side of the ship next the shore, and so most unlikely to have plenty of fish, and catch so many. 2. That before their fish could be brought on shore, they should see a fish boiling on coals, and bread lying by. 3. That notwithstanding the multitude of fish, the net should not be broken.

12 Jesus saith unto them, “Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou ? knowing that it was the Lord.

It was in the morning, and may as well be translated, Come and break your fasts, as Come and dine. They now knew it was the Lord, if not by his face and voice, yet by this miracle ; therefore they durst not ask him, for fear of a sharp reproof, after he had by such a miraculous operation made himself known to them.

13 Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

Those who question whether our Saviour himself did eat, seem not to consider what is written Acts x. 41, where it is expressly said, he did eat and drink with them after he rose from the dead ; which he doubtless did, to show that he was truly risen from the dead, and his seeming body was not a phantasm, and mere apparition of a body, but the same true body which was crucified, though now more glorious, and not clothed with those infirmities which it had before his death ; from whence it only followeth, that he did not eat to satisfy his hunger, but only to confirm the truth of his resurrection. He did before this eat with some of them, Luke xxiv. 30.

14 This is now <sup>h</sup> the third time that Jesus shewed himself to his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

The third time ; that is, the third day, for upon his resurrection day he showed himself, 1. To Mary Magdalene, chap. xx. 14. 2. To the two disciples going to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 15, 31. 3. To the women going to tell his disciples, Matt. xxviii. 9. 4. In the evening to his disciples, met, chap. xx. 19. All these are by John counted for one time, because they were upon one and the same day. That day seven-night he appeared to them again, chap. xx. 26. After this at the sea of Tiberias, mentioned in this chapter.

15 ¶ So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these ? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord ; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs.

Lovest thou me more than these ? more than the rest of my disciples love me ? for so Peter had professed, when he told our Saviour, Matt. xxvi. 33, Though all men should be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended. Peter now having by his temptation learned more humility and modesty, doth not reply, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee more than these ; he only averreth the truth and sincerity, not the degree of his love. Christ replies, Feed my lambs : by which he understands his people, his church ; not the pastors of it, (as if Christ by this had made Peter the chief pastor over the rest of the apostles,) but the community. The papists from this text argue for Peter's primacy and authority over his fellow apostles, as well as over the members of the church. But Christ said not to Peter only, but to all the rest of the eleven, Matt. xxviii. 19 ; Mark xvi. 15. Go ye, preach the gospel to all nations ; and it was to the rest as well as to Peter that he said, chap. xx. 23, Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted. So as it is apparent, whether feeding only signifies instructing, or feeding by doctrine, or (as most judge) comprehends government, and signifies that universal charge which ministers have over the church, the same power which Peter had was also committed to the other disciples.

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me ? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord ; thou knowest that I love thee. <sup>1</sup> He saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

17 He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me ? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me ? And he said unto him, Lord, <sup>2</sup> thou knowest all things ; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

Divines here raise a question, why our Saviour propounds this question thrice to Peter. The most of the ancients agree, that it was because Peter had thrice denied him. Some say, it was to show his great love to his church, which he could not commit to Peter but after three inquiries if he truly loved him, who was the Lord of it. Others refer it to the three ways by which good pastors ought to feed the church ; prayer, preaching, and a holy life. Others think, that it hath reference to the three flocks that Peter was to feed ; the Jews in Judea, the Gentiles, the dispersed amongst the Gentiles.

18 <sup>1</sup> Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest : but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

19 This spake he, signifying <sup>m</sup> by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me.

The 19th verse gives us the general scope of ver. 18, viz. that it was a prediction of that particular death by which Peter should die, which was (if we may believe what the ancients have generally reported, and we can have no other proof) by crucifying ; in which kind of death the hands of the person crucified are stretched out and nailed to the cross. But which way he died we cannot certainly affirm. The evangelist assureth us, that our Saviour spake these words with reference to that kind of death by which Peter as a martyr was to glorify God ; nor is it any objection against his martyrdom, that our Saviour here saith, that he should be carried whither he would not ; for he was not better than his Lord, whose spirit was willing, and flesh weak. Whether our Saviour by this command, Follow me, intended the imitation of him, his death, or the particular kind of his death, is uncertain ; unless we will allow this text to be interpreted by chap. xiii. 36, and 2 Pet. i. 14.

20 Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple <sup>n</sup> whom Jesus loved follow-

<sup>1</sup> Acts 20. 28
<sup>2</sup> Heb. 13. 20
<sup>1</sup> Pet. 2. 25
& 5. 2, 4.

<sup>2</sup> ch. 2. 24,
25. & 16. 30.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 13. 36,
Acts 12. 3, 4.

<sup>m</sup> 2 Pet. 1.
14.

<sup>h</sup> See ch. 20.
19, 26.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 13. 23,
25. & 20. 2.

ing; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

That is, he saw John, whom we have often before heard so described.

21 Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do?

Do is not in the Greek, nor possibly is so properly added: the sense is, What shall become of this man? what shall be his fate? what shall he suffer?

22 Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry<sup>o</sup> till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.

Our Lord only checketh the curiosity of Peter, and minds him to attend things which himself was concerned in; telling him, he was not concerned what became of John, whether he should die, or abide upon the earth until Christ's second coming: it was Peter's concern, without regarding what others did, or what became of them, himself to execute his Master's command, and follow his example.

23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

But the disciples, knowing the particular kindness our Saviour had for John, upon these words, not duly attended to, concluded John should abide upon the earth to the second coming of Christ.

24 This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true.

John, who wrote this Gospel, was that disciple whom Jesus loved, who leaned on our Saviour's breast at supper, and inquired who should betray Christ; of whom Peter spake, ver. 21, and who testifieth these things, both concerning Peter, and concerning himself, and the church: the ancient church knew his testimony was true.

25 And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. Amen.

But none must imagine that all Christ's sermons, or miracles, are recorded in this book, or in any of the other Gospels; the world would have been too much filled with books, if all spoke or done by our Saviour had been written. There is so much written as it pleased God we should know, or was necessary for us to know for the true ends of such revelation; to beget and increase faith in us, and to promote and direct holiness.

THE # ACTS OF THE APOSTLES

THE ARGUMENT

This book hath been held by all Christians to be canonical, and esteemed, though amongst the hardest, yet amongst the brightest jewels that shine in the word of God. It is a history concerning the church of Christ in its infancy, and shows God's wonderful care for it, and powerful providence over it. It begins where the Gospel ends, which the same author (St. Luke) had wrote; and is of great use to prevent and confute all feigned stories concerning the lives and doctrine of the holy apostles. St. Luke having accompanied St. Paul, and having been an eye-witness, and an ear-witness, was certainly the fittest to record what that great apostle did and said; and if most of this book be taken up concerning him, it is because (speaking of the rest of the apostles, 1 Cor. xv. 10) he laboured more than they all. In this book there is an account of many sermons, preached by the apostles and apostolical men, upon the most necessary parts of our holy religion, as the death, resurrection, and ascension of our blessed Saviour; of God's mercy through him, and of the life to come, &c.; and withal, how holy men lived answerably to their profession and hope. Who, when we read these things, seem to speak unto us, and tell us, (what they say was inscribed upon the statue of some deified hero,) Sic feceritis sicut nos, eritis sicut nos; If ye shall do as we have done, and suffer as we have suffered, then ye shall be (glorious and happy) as we are.

CHAP. I

Christ, after his resurrection, having given instructions to his apostles, and commanded them to wait in Jerusalem the coming of the Holy Ghost, ascendeth into heaven in their sight, 1—9. Two angels warn them to depart, and to look for his second coming, 10, 11. They return, and give themselves unto prayer, 12—14. Peter exhorting to fill up the place of the traitor Judas, Matthias is chosen by lot to be an apostle, 15—26.

THE former treatise have I made, O

<sup>a</sup> Luke 1. 3. <sup>a</sup>Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach,

The former treatise have I made; this refers unto the Gospel wrote by this evangelist, St. Luke, who was undoubtedly the penman of this book, which bears testimony unto and confirms (if need were) that other. Theophilus; esteemed the same name with Jedidiah, signifying beloved of God, or one that loved God. Who he was is not certain; some have taken the name appellatively. It is evident by the epithet given unto him, Luke i. 3, that he was one of great authority, having the same title which Tertullus gives unto Festus, Acts xxiv. 3, and the chief captain unto Felix, Acts xxiii. 26. Although not many noble are called, 1 Cor. i. 26, yet God extends his grace unto some of all conditions. Of all that Jesus began both to do and teach; this is the sum of the Gospel, viz. a history of the life, doctrine, and death of our blessed Saviour; although every particular word or deed of our Saviour's could not be expressed, John xxi. 25, yet the evangelist was faithful in withholding nothing which was necessary for the church to know, and leaving no room for unwritten traditions.

2 <sup>b</sup>Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost <sup>c</sup>had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen:

The day in which he was taken up; that is, the day of

<sup>b</sup> Mark 16.
<sup>c</sup> Luke 9.
21. & 24. 51.
ver. 9.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
<sup>c</sup> Mat. 28. 19.
Mark 16. 15.
John 20. 21.
ch. 10. 41, 42.

his ascension. This is a translation from the former book (his Gospel) unto this, showing how far he had proceeded in setting down the doctrine of our salvation. After that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen; which words may be referred, either to the commandments he gave, or the choice he made of the apostles; both being by the Holy Ghost. The apostles had their doctrine from God, and were appointed to publish it by God; especially to publish the gospel to the whole world, Matt. xxviii. 19; and to continue at Jerusalem till the coming of the Holy Ghost, Luke xxiv. 49.

3 <sup>d</sup> To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God :

To whom, i. e. the apostles, he showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs; eating, drinking, speaking, walking with them; nay, showing them his very wounds, and permitting them to be touched; God suffering Thomas's infidelity to contribute to the strengthening of our faith. Being seen of them forty days; not continually, but upon occasion as he pleased; it was so long from his resurrection to his ascension; and the same space in which God showed himself unto Moses in Mount Sinai. So long also he was pleased to stay with them, that he might more abundantly testify the truth of his humanity, and of his resurrection. And speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; either his kingdom in heaven, the church triumphant, or his kingdom on earth, the church militant; what future bliss and happiness he was going to prepare, and what means they ought to use towards the obtaining of it.

4 <sup>e</sup> And, <sup>f</sup> being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me.

And being assembled together with them; by his order, or conversing frequently with them, as those that table together. Commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem: otherwise the apostles would have abhorred Jerusalem, as reeking afresh in the blood of our Lord. And there Christ chose to pour out his Spirit, that he might show forth his glory in the same place where he suffered ignominy: there Christ would have his apostles to abide, that they might be nigher to Mount Olivet, from whence he was to ascend; as also that both his ascension, and the coming of the Holy Ghost, might more publicly be manifest; and that that prophecy, Isa. ii. 3, might be fulfilled. The promise of the Father; of my Father, Luke xxiv. 49; that is, the Holy Spirit, promised by our Saviour in his Father's name, John xiv. 26; and may well be called the promise, without which all other promises would be of no value unto us.

5 <sup>g</sup> For John truly baptized with water; <sup>h</sup> but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.

For John truly baptized with water, Matt. iii. 11; water being of a purifying nature, plentiful, and easy to come by. But ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost; his gifts and graces, which were (as water on baptized persons) largely bestowed upon them on the day of Pentecost: 1. That the apostles and all others might be assured of the doctrine of the Gospel. 2. That they might be enabled to fulfil their ministry, and obey our Saviour's commands left with them. Not many days hence; it was but ten days after his ascension; but our Saviour would not prefix a certain day, that they might wait every day.

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again this kingdom to Israel?

When they therefore were come together; either the one hundred and twenty, mentioned ver. 15, or the five hundred, mentioned I Cor. xv. 6. That they might more readily obtain an answer, they join in the question, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? which was taken away by the Romans, and by Herod, and they expected should be restored to them by the Messiah; understanding the prophecy, Dan. vii. 27, to this purpose.

7 And he said unto them, <sup>i</sup> It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

Our Saviour blames their curiosity about such things as are not necessary to be known; and yet though our Saviour does not in his answer tell them what they desired to know, he tells them what is more expedient for them to know. The petition of wicked men, nay, of devils, (as when they crave to go into the swine,) is sometimes granted according to their will. But the prayer of the disciples of Christ is answered to their best advantage, though it does not seem to agree to the matter of their desire. It is not for you to know the times or the seasons; how long any mercy shall be deferred; when it shall be given. The Father; who is fons et origo Deitatis; to whom Christ, especially as Mediator, and in our stead, refers all things.

8 <sup>m</sup> But ye shall receive <sup>n</sup> power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and <sup>o</sup> ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; not till then, not of their own strength, but of God's grace, as appeared by Peter's denying and the others' leaving of our Saviour. And ye shall be witnesses unto me, that I am indeed the promised Messiah; and of my doctrine, life, death, resurrection, and ascension, which ye shall testify to all the world by your preaching and holy living, working miracles. Both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria; places where your testimony shall be most opposed. These words are both a command, to tell the apostles what they ought to do, and a prediction of what they should be enabled to do.

9 <sup>p</sup> And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, <sup>q</sup> he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

Mark xvi. 19; Luke xxiv. 51. As he did not actually give up his life till all was fulfilled, so he did not leave the world till all was revealed by him that was necessary for us. While they beheld; that they might be eye-witnesses, and most unexceptionable. He was taken up; not by an external help of angels, but by his own power, and the agility of his now glorious body. And a cloud received him out of their sight: this, though a true cloud, yet was a more than ordinarily glorious one, suitable to the majesty of him that used it.

10 And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel;

Christ's ascent was the more leisurely, that he might delight their eyes and mind; but especially confirm their faith the more. Behold, two men stood by them, angels in the shape of men, in white apparel; which angels ordinarily appeared in, to show they retained their native purity, as also to represent the joyfulness of the errand they were usually sent upon.

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Which also said; the two angels (in the form of men) before mentioned. Ye men of Galilee; that is, the apostles, who were of that country. Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? they are roused out of the ecstacy they were in at that glorious sight, to learn what was so much to their d Mark 16.

14. Luke 24.
36. John 20.
19, 26. & 21.
1, 14.
1 Cor. 15. a.

e Luke 24.
43, 49.
f Or, eating together with them.
f Luke 24. 49.
John 14. 16.
26, 27. & 13.
26. & 16. 7.
ch. 2. 33.

g Matt. 3.
11. ch. 11.
16. & 19. 4.
h Joel 3. 18.
ch. 2. 4.
& 11. 15.

i Matt. 24. 3.
k Is. 1. 26.
Dan. 7. 27.
Amos 9. 11.

m ch. 2. 1, 4.
n Or, the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you.
o Luke 24. 49.
p Luke 24. 49.
q John 16. 27. ver. 22. ch. 2. 32.

r Luke 24. 51.
s John 6. 62. q ver. 2.

t Mat. 28. 3.
Mark 16. 5.
Luke 24. 4.
John 20. 12.
ch. 10. 5, 30.

u ch. 2. 7. & 13. 31.
v Dan. 7. 13.
w Mark 13. 26.
Luke 21. 27.
John 14. 3.
x Thess. 1. 10. & 4. 16.
y Thess. 1. 10. Rev. 1. 7.

and our advantage. Shall so come: 1. Visibly. 2. In a cloud. 3. By his own power. 4. With the like majesty. 5. With the same soul and body.

12 <sup>u</sup> Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey.

From the mount called Olivet, which Bethany was a part of, as situate towards the bottom of it, remoter from Jerusalem. Hence Luke xxiv. 50, differs not from this place. From hence the rather our Lord ascended, that he might receive his glory nigh the place where he began his suffering, (in the garden where he endured his agony, and was betrayed,) and in the view of Jerusalem, where he had been condemned and scorned. A sabbath day's journey; about a mile or two, or such a space as, by God's appointment, was betwixt the ark and the people, Josh. iii. 4.

13 And when they were come in, they went up <sup>a</sup> into an upper room, where abode both <sup>v</sup> Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphæus, and <sup>t</sup> Simon Zelotes, and <sup>a</sup> Judas the brother of James.

And when they were come in, to the city, and to the house, they went up into an upper room; the same probably where they had kept the passover, and partook of the Lord's supper; howsoever, for its largeness capable to receive so many. Peter, as elder, and first called to the apostleship, is generally first named; and here especially his name is put first, and their names are repeated, to show, that though they fell in forsaking of Christ, they did rise again in professing of him; and that, notwithstanding their apostacy, they were continued after their recovery in their former office and dignity.

14 <sup>b</sup> These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with <sup>o</sup> the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with <sup>d</sup> his brethren.

These all continued with one accord, with great resolution, notwithstanding all opposition and contradiction they met with, in prayer and supplication, for mercies they wanted, or preventing of the evils they feared. The women; their wives, or such women especially as we read of Matt. xxvii. 55, 56. His brethren; that is, his relations and kinsmen, which frequently in Scripture are called brethren.

15 ¶ And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number <sup>e</sup> of the names together were about an hundred and twenty,)

In those days, betwixt our Saviour's ascension and Pentecost. Peter, as generally, spake for and amongst the apostles; but now especially, to express his zeal and faithfulness to our Saviour, whom he had so lately denied, he being also designed the minister of the circumcision, which place he began now to execute. The number of the names, or persons, together were about an hundred and twenty; probably Christ had converted many men, but these might be either men of name or quality, or meant of such as, ver. 21, had accompanied with Christ and his apostles, and were designed for the ministry.

16 Men and brethren, this Scripture must needs have been fulfilled, 'which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, <sup>g</sup> which was guide to them that took Jesus.

Men and brethren, an ordinary compellation; speaker and auditors were Hebrews of the Hebrews. This Scripture, viz. Psal. xli. 9, must needs have been fulfilled; yet God's foreknowledge and predication excused not Judas's sin. Which was guide to them that took Jesus; not only leading them in the way when they took our Saviour, but being director of their counsels against him. This the apostle premises to abate the offence that the horrible fall of Judas might have occasioned.

17 For <sup>h</sup> he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of <sup>i</sup> this ministry.

Numbered with us; being one of the twelve apostles. Had obtained, ἐλαξε; not as if Judas was made an apostle by lot, as Matthias afterwards; but by the providence of God, by which every lot and casual matter is governed: and to show that the dignity did not befall him, or any of the other apostles, because of their descent, (from Aaron,) or from nature, or from any desert whatsoever, but merely from God's good will and pleasure. Part of this ministry; then the apostles' office is ministerial, and they were not lords over God's heritage.

18 <sup>k</sup> Now this man purchased a field with <sup>l</sup> the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

Purchased a field; which Judas might have agreed for at that price, and yet the chief priests bought, (as Matt. xxvii. 7,) by a strange providence, leading of them to that purchase; howsoever, eventually he bought it, as throwing back to them their money which paid for it, Matt. xxvii. 5. Falling headlong, he burst asunder; it is said he hanged himself, which implying only his death by suffocation, whether he died out of horror of his fact, or laying violent hands on himself in such circumstances as may agree with this relation, it is not material to determine.

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

Their proper tongue; the Syriac language then in use after the Babylonish captivity. The field of blood; as bought with the price of Christ's blood, and sprinkled with his own blood.

20 For it is written in the book of Psalms, <sup>m</sup> Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and <sup>n</sup> his bishoprick let another take.

For it is written in the book of Psalms; viz. Psal. lxxix. 25. What there is in general spoken by David concerning his enemies, is here applied particularly to Judas, who betrayed our Saviour; whose type David was, as Doeg was of Judas. His bishoprick; his charge or office, or prefecture, as of a shepherd over his flock.

21 Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us,

There were to be twelve apostles in the Christian church, to answer unto the twelve patriarchs and twelve tribes in the Jewish church. Companied with us, in ordinary conversation, Went in and out among us; in discharge of his ministry, and gathering of disciples among us.

22 <sup>o</sup> Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that <sup>p</sup> he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection.

Beginning from the baptism of John; when Christ was baptized by him, and by that consecration began the ministry, and publishing of the gospel (which the history of his immaculate conception did preface to). A witness with us of his resurrection; all other things being consummated in that, it being the most difficult to be believed; and therefore God was pleased to attest it by so many eye-witnesses.

23 And they appointed two, Joseph called <sup>r</sup> Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias.

Joseph, or Joses, the same name called Barsabas in their common tongue, and Justus (probably for his integrity) amongst the Romans, who then ruled over them. Matthias; some think the same with Nathanael.

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, <sup>s</sup> which knowest the hearts of all x ch. 9. 37, 39, & 20. 8. y Matt. 10. 2, 3, 4.

z Luke 6. 15. a Jude 1.

b ch. 2. 1, 46.

c Luke 24. 42, 55, & 24. 10.

d Mat. 13. 55.

e Rev. 3. 4.

f Ps. 41. 9. John 13. 18.

g Luke 22. 47. John 18. 3.

h Mat. 10. 4. Luke 6. 18. 1 ver. 25. ch. 12. 28. & 20. 24. & 27. 19.

k Matt. 27. 5, 7, 8. l Mat. 26. 15. 2 Pet. 2. 15.

m Ps. 69. 25. n Ps. 109. 8. o Or. office, or, charge.

p Mark 1. 1. p ver. 9.

q John 15. 27. ver. 8. ch. 4. 33.

r ch. 15. 22.

s 1 Sam. 16. 7. 1 Chr. 28. 5. 2 Chr. 17. Jer. 11. 20. & 17. 10. ch. 15. 8. Rev. 2. 23.

men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen,

The other apostles being chosen by God immediately, it was necessary that he who was to act in the same office, should be chosen after the same manner. Knowest the hearts, which is God's prerogative only; all others may be, and often are, mistaken by outward appearances.

τ ver. 17. 25 'That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

Ministry and apostleship, κληρον, or every one's station in the world, is ordered by the providence of God, and their part or portion is assigned to them; and so the apostleship was unto the apostles. His own place; hell, or destruction, not intended by Judas, but righteously by God appointed for him: whilst he was in the world (especially after his betraying of our Saviour) he was a usurper in it; and as bad as the world was, it was too good for him. That these words should be understood of Matthias's succeeding to the apostleship of Judas as into his own place, is the less probable, because as yet he was not chosen into it.

26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

They gave forth their lots; the manner is not so certain, nor necessary to be known; but the whole disposing of the lot being from the Lord, as Prov. xvi. 33, they were thus as it were immediately chosen by God, and were consecrated by Christ himself; no apostle ordaining another, but all of them being called and ordained by Christ. He was numbered with the eleven apostles; the rest of the apostles, and the whole church, agreeing with that Divine choice which was made.

CHAP. II

The descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost: they speak divers languages, to the general amazement, but some deride them, 1—13. Peter sheweth that the inspiration spoken of by Joel was now fulfilled; that Jesus, whom they had crucified, was now risen from the dead, and ascended into heaven, according to David's predictions, and had shed forth the promise of the Holy Spirit in full proof of his being the Messiah, 14—36. A great number are converted by Peter's preaching, 37—40; who, being baptized, converse devoutly and charitably together, the apostles working many miracles, and God daily increasing the church, 41—47.

AND when *the day of Pentecost was fully come, <sup>a</sup>they were all with one accord in one place.

Pentecost; this feast was fifty days after the feast of unleavened bread, or passover, as Lev. xxiii. 16, whence it had its name, and was called the feast of weeks, Exod. xxxiv. 22, because it was to be observed seven weeks after the feast of unleavened bread, Deut. xvi. 9. It was the feast of the first-fruits of wheat harvest, Exod. xxxiv. 22; and on this day (to answer the type) the Spirit was poured out in such a plentiful manner, as the first-fruits of Christ's ascending into heaven: besides, the law was given on this day, Exod. xix. 1, 11, and it was expedient that the gospel (Christ's law) should be published on the same day: and it being on the first day of the week, it did recommend and honour the Lord's day, as our Saviour had before by his resurrection on that day. With one accord; as if they had but one mind, as sent in so many bodies. In one place; probably that mentioned chap. i. 13.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and <sup>c</sup>it filled all the house where they were sitting.

Suddenly, the apostles themselves not expecting it, there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind; to prepare them to attend the more unto what they should hear and see afterwards; also to signify the unexpected and powerful progress which the gospel should have: it may be, to cause the greater concourse to that place, it being a usual manner; and God would make this miracle more public. It filled all the house; to show that the Spirit should be bestowed on them that were met there, and on all the church throughout the world.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

Cloven tongues; to signify the variety of languages which the apostles should be enabled to speak; to qualify them to preach the gospel unto all nations, and to remove the obstacle which the confusion of tongues caused. Like as of fire; which represented, 1. The light that the apostles should impart; 2. The fervent heat and zeal which they should be endowed with; 3. The gospel's spreading in the world, and carrying all before it, prevailing over all errors; 4. The purity and holiness which they and all that preach the gospel ought to appear withal. And it sat upon each of them; remained, as far as was necessary for the founding of the Christian religion; and was not, as the gift of prophecy, bestowed only occasionally, as on Nathan, Samuel

4 And <sup>d</sup>they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began <sup>e</sup>to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

Filled with the Holy Ghost; those gifts and graces which proceeded from him; the apostles having them all in a more excellent manner than formerly, and the gift of tongues superadded. With other tongues, than what were vernacular or natural to them. As the Spirit gave them utterance; ἀποθλήγγεσαι, signifies more than barely to speak, implying they speak each language in its perfection, after an excellent, eloquent, and powerful manner, as from the Holy Ghost, whose works are perfect; non vox hominem sonat.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

Not only constant inhabitants, but such as had on occasion their lodgings there; partly out of a constant respect, which both Jews and proselytes had for that place, (for the temple and their worship's sake; it being also a place for learning and education, as appears by the colleges and synagogues mentioned, chap. vi. 9,) but especially now the concourse from all parts must needs have been very great, it being one of those times in which all the males were to appear before God: to which might be added, the great expectation they had of the Messiah made them to omit no occasion of inquiring concerning him, the prophecies concerning the time of his coming being fulfilled, and they could not be ignorant of the many and great things concerning the true Messiah. Out of every nation under heaven; whither the Jews had been dispersed in the two or three greater or other lesser dispersions. Thus in part was fulfilled what was prophesied, Isa. xliii. 5.

6 Now † when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were † confounded, because that every man † heard them speak in his own language.

Noised abroad; either the miraculous winds were heard, or the report of what had happened was spread abroad. Were confounded; either out of shame that they had slain Christ, whom God thus extraordinarily glorified; or out of admiration at so extraordinary a matter. Every man heard them speak in his own language; probably, not that the same words spoken by the apostles were diversified according to every one's understanding, for then the miracle had been wrought in their auditors, and not in the apostles; but that the apostles did speak to every one in their proper and most intelligible language: and this was the gift of tongues, which for some time after also was continued in the church.

7 And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak 'Galilæans?

<sup>a</sup> Lev. 23. 15.
<sup>b</sup> Deut. 16. 9.
<sup>c</sup> ch. 20. 16.
<sup>d</sup> ch. 1. 14.

<sup>e</sup> Gr. when this voice was made.
<sup>f</sup> Or, troubled in mind.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 1. 11.

Without literature, or good education, they being worse thought of on that account than the ordinary sort of that nation were; besides, they thought no prophet was to be expected from Galilee, John i. 46.

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

Διάλεκτος signifies commonly a different way of speaking, or pronouncing in the same language; as our southern and northern men differ in some words and pronunciation, though speaking both the English tongue. God's works being most perfect, the apostles might speak, not only the same language which all understood, but in the same idiom and propriety of speech which agreed to every one best.

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia,

Elamites; descended from Elam, Gen. x. 22, thought to be the Persians. Mesopotamia; between the two rivers, Tigris and Euphrates. Judæa; the apostles being Galileans, spake a distinct dialect from the rest of the Jews, till now enabled to speak as they did. Asia; some particular district, at that time especially so called, as 1 Pet. i. 1; otherwise the places before-named are in Asia in a larger sense.

10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Strangers of Rome, who came either to Jerusalem to worship, or for any other business. It is evident that many in or about the city of Rome had embraced the Jewish religion; and of them it may be understood. Jews: the others, mentioned ver. 9, were such as then dwelt in Judæa; these were such as lived elsewhere, only now came to worship or sojourn there. Proselytes; these were of two sorts: the one, such as came over from paganism unto the Jewish religion, and were bound only to observe the precepts of Noah, and enjoyed a liberty to buy and sell, live and converse, amongst the Jews: hence they were called proselytes of the gate. The other were called proselytes of righteousness; for these were circumcised, and took upon them the observation of the whole law of Moses, and had all the privileges belonging to the people of God.

11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

Cretes; such as belonged to the island of Crete, now called Candia. The wonderful works of God; those things which God had wonderfully wrought, especially the resurrection of our blessed Saviour from the dead, which was a most wonderful work, and the main argument whereby the world was converted, and unto which the apostles bare witness.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?

They were all amazed; so ver. 7; ἐξέτασαν, they were as in an ecstasy, (the object was too strong for the faculty,) they could not fathom the cause or reason of these wonderful things; and therefore they desire one of another to be resolved concerning them.

13 Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine.

Others; viz. the scribes and Pharisees, and also the inhabitants of Jewry and Jerusalem; who not understanding the languages of other nations, might think the apostles did but babble, and talk idly or rudely, when they spake with other tongues. New wine, or sweet wine; which done, may inebriate; and might be had at that time, though the full vintage was not yet.

14 ¶ But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judæa, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

Peter standing up; it speaks his extraordinary courage; after his stumbling and fall, he runs the faster, being recovered; and begins to verify his name which our Lord had given him, showing himself as firm and stedfast as a rock. With the eleven; the other apostles, probably, spake too in divers languages; but by reason of the shortness of St. Luke's intended narrative, and it being to the same purpose, their sermons are omitted. Men of Judæa; such as came from other parts of the country. Ye that dwell at Jerusalem; such as were constant inhabitants in that city.

15 For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day.

For these; this proves that the other apostles spake as well as Peter, and were vindicated by him. Are not drunken; he mildly and solidly confutes their calumny. The third hour of the day, which answers to our nine o'clock in the morning, and was the ordinary time for their morning sacrifice and prayer, before which time they did not eat or drink any thing; nay, it is thought on festival days it was usual with them not to eat or drink until the sixth hour, that is, noon-time, that they might be more intent upon and fit for the service of the day. How little soever (to our shame) such an argument would be of proof now, it was in their more sober times very conclusive.

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel;

God does ordinarily, before that he sends his judgments, and does his strange work, endeavour to reclaim them by mercies: not only Joel, but Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and others, prophesied before the destruction of that people and country by Nebuchadnezzar; but now, before the final and total ruin, God sent greater and more than these, and endued them with a greater measure of the Spirit, clearer and fuller light to forewarn them of and deliver them from wrath to come.

17 <sup>h Is. 44. 3.</sup> And it shall come to pass in the <sup>Ezek. 11. 19.</sup> last days, saith God, <sup>Amos 3. 2.</sup> I will pour out of <sup>Joel 2. 28, 29.</sup> my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons <sup>Zech. 12. 10.</sup> and <sup>John 7. 38.</sup> your daughters shall prophesy, and <sup>1 ch. 10. 45.</sup> your young men shall see visions, and <sup>k ch. 21. 9.</sup> your old men shall dream dreams:

In the last days; in the time of the Messiah, called the last days frequently, 2 Tim. iii. 1; Heb. i. 2; 2 Pet. iii. 3; as also called the last time, 1 Pet. i. 5; 1 John ii. 18; Jude 18; because we are now under the last and most perfect dispensation of the things of God, and no other is to be looked for until the consummation of all things. I will pour out of my Spirit; before the Spirit was given in lesser measures, and comparatively but by drops, here a little, and there a little; now more largely, even to overflow. Upon all flesh; all sorts of men, as well Gentiles as Jews, contrary unto their proud conceit, that God dwelt in none out of the land of Israel. Daughters shall prophesy; fulfilled in Anna the prophetess, Luke ii. 36, and in the four daughters of Philip, chap. xxi. 9. Visions; these were formerly either representations more inward to their mind, as Isaiah's and Jeremiah's were; or more outward, to their bodily eye, as Belshazzar's was, Dan. v. 5, and such as Peter had, chap. x. 11. Dreams; by dreams God sometimes manifested his will, as to Joseph; but this is by St. Peter accommodated to the gospel times. The prophets spake suitably to them unto whom they preached; and the apostle rightly understands by these expressions, the manifold and more clear revelation of the will of God in Christ.

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

On my servants and on my handmaidens; to show what all ought to be, that hope to receive any benefit or comfort from the promises of God, either in the law or gospel, the Old or New Testament: viz. such as seek and serve God; but to the disobedient and unbelieving there is not a comfortable word in all the book of God. Some read without the pronoun, on servants and handmaids; to show that God doth not despise men of the lowest rank and condition in the world, but that the promise of the Spirit is made unto them also.

19 <sup>m Joel 2. 32.</sup> And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke:

As St. Peter had declared the promises unto such as would be drawn by the cords of love; so here, on the other side, he useth threatenings, and declares the terrors of the Lord, if so that they will be persuaded. These wonders were such as did precede the destruction of Jerusalem, or shall foretell the destruction of the whole world.

<sup>9</sup> Mat. 24. 29. <sup>10</sup> Mark 13. 24. <sup>11</sup> Luke 21. 25. 20 <sup>a</sup>The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood; this agrees with the other words in the fore-cited prophecy, Joel ii. 31. How these amazing signs shall be fulfilled, whether literally, and by what means; or whether only that the consternation and dread upon men shall be so great, as expecting the change of the whole frame of nature, is not so material for us to know, as it is to be always prepared for it. Great and notable day; ἐπιφανῆ, manifest and illustrious day; and it may be taken in a comfortable sense, and will be a comfortable day indeed, to all that preparedly wait for it; for it is the day of the Lord, it is Christ's day, in which he will be magnified over his enemies, and in his friends, children, and servants.

21 And it shall come to pass, that <sup>12</sup> whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

That he may prepare thus a people for the Lord, the apostle shows by what means they and we may escape. Pray in faith unto him. The name is that whereby any one is known; and the Lord's name is his attributes, goodness, power, wisdom, faithfulness, &c. The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe, Prov. xviii. 10.

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you <sup>13</sup> by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know:

Jesus of Nazareth; for so Pilate had called our Saviour through contempt, in his superscription on the cross: and that they might certainly know of whom he spake, and that he was not now (as formerly) ashamed to own him, he mentions our Saviour under that name here. Approved; demonstrated, and beyond any contradiction proved, to be the Messiah: for this was that great truth St. Peter preached upon, that Christ, whom Pilate had condemned, and called Jesus of Nazareth, was indeed the Son of God, and the true Messiah. Miracles and wonders and signs; the critical difference is not so material; it was ordinary to add many words to show the greatness of the matter spoken of; indeed all sorts of wonderful works Christ did, and so many, and so great, as no variety of words can express. As ye yourselves also know; those that are not convinced are self-condemned.

23 Him, <sup>14</sup> being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God: that the apostle might take away the offence of the cross of Christ, he declares unto them that he did not suffer by chance, but by the wise and holy providence of God, who had ordered, and by his prophets foretold, what he should suffer before he did enter into glory, Luke xxiv. 26. Yet this did no way excuse those who were instrumental in his death; for notwithstanding God's determinate counsel concerning it, he tells the Jews, ye have taken, &c. The determination of God, as it does not necessitate to, so it does not excuse any from sin. Have crucified, by the Romans, who were truly ἀνομοί, without any law of God. What the Jews urged or occasioned the Romans to do, is charged justly upon them as their act.

24 <sup>15</sup> Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

Whom God hath raised up: Christ rose by his own power as God: it being, perhaps, too strong meat to be given at first to such who were under so great prejudices against our Saviour; but by consequence in the following discourse he sufficiently shows it. Loosed; the same word ῥῆσται variously pointed, signifying either a cord or pain, the metaphor of loosing agrees with it. The pains of death: though our Lord endured no more pain after he had said, It is finished, and had yielded up the ghost; yet whilst he was in the grave, being under the power of death, the pains of death are said to be loosed at his resurrection. It was not possible that he should be holden of it long, much less for ever; being such a one as David spake of.

25 For David speaketh concerning him, <sup>16</sup> I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

David speaketh concerning him, Psal. xvi. 8. I foresaw the Lord always before my face: in the psalm it is, I have set the Lord: the apostle following the reading of the Seventy, then in use and known; and to the same sense; for by faith we both see God, and place our confidence in him; David, and especially our Saviour, doing and enduring all things as in the sight of God, whom he knew to be both careful of him, and ready to help him. Thus, in all troubles, there is no such approved comfort, as the seeing or acknowledging the will of God concerning them, his power to preserve us under them, and his promises to deliver us from them. Christ, and all that are Christ's, do conflict under the eye and in the sight of God, as soldiers whilst their general looks on. On my right hand; the place of the advocate for one that is accused or endangered.

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope:

Therefore, because of God's nearness to or presence with him, did my heart rejoice; Christ's and his people's joy is solid and true, real and inward, and may bear the test, res severa est verum gaudium. My tongue; in Psal. xvi. 9, it is my glory, as the tongue is frequently called; communicating our thoughts or apprehensions by speech, being the excellency of a reasonable creature. My flesh; or my body. Shall rest; or be in the grave, as in a tabernacle, ordinarily a movable, always no durable abiding place. In hope; that is, of the resurrection, and going out of that tabernacle of the grave.

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

My soul; that is, me: the soul is put for the person, as Rom. xiii. 1, Let every soul be subject; and sometimes for a dead body, as Lev. xix. 28; Numb. v. 2, and in divers other places. ᾠτὴ that signifies a soul, is so used. In hell; the word ᾠδης is put either for the grave, or for the place of the damned. Being these words are alleged as a proof of Christ's resurrection, and that our Saviour's soul was certainly in paradise, where he promised to the penitent thief that he should be with him, it seems rather to be meant of the grave, which, according to this prophecy, could not hold our blessed Saviour's body so long as that it should corrupt in it. If David by his soul here did mean our Saviour, because he was as it were the soul of his soul, and life of his life, it shows how he did, and how we ought to value him. Thine Holy One; as being anointed, sanctified, and sent by God.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

Thou hast made known to me; God is frequently said to make those mercies known to us which he bestows upon us. The ways of life; of a true life, which is life indeed. David in these words celebrates God's delivering of him from his grievous afflictions and exile; in which he was looked upon by others, and by himself, as a dead man, yet was brought again to see the temple, and enjoy the ordinances of God, without which his life was as no life unto him. So our Saviour, after his death and passion, arose, and ascended into heaven, and lives for ever to make intercession for us. With thy countenance; that is, with thy presence, or manifestation of thy love and favour.

<sup>17</sup> ver. 32. ch. 3. 15. & 4. 10. <sup>18</sup> 10. 41. & 13. 30, 34. & 17. 31. Rom. 4. 24. & 5. 11. 1 Cor. 4. 14. & 15. 15. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Gal. 1. 1. Eph. 1. 20. Col. 2. 12. 1 The. 1. 10. Heb. 13. 20. 1 Pet. 1. 21.

<sup>13</sup> p. John 3. 2. & 14. 10, 11. ch. 10. 38. Heb. 2. 4.

<sup>14</sup> q. Mat. 26. 24. Luke 22. 22. & 24. 44. ch. 3. 18. & 4. 26. r. ch. 5. 30.

29 Men and brethren, || let me freely speak unto you <sup>u</sup>of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

Men and brethren; St. Peter bespeaks this attention and favour, intimating he was one of the same name with themselves, than which nothing could more recommend him. David was had in great veneration, and his memory very precious amongst this people, as was Abraham's, Isaac's, and Jacob's; who were the chief of their fathers. He is both dead and buried; as in 1 Kings ii. 10, and elsewhere, is recorded of him, which they firmly believed. His sepulchre, or monument, is with us; either not wholly spoiled by the barbarous enemies, who had destroyed Jerusalem; or rather repaired after the captivity, to keep up the memory of so great and good a man. But by this it appeared, that David did not speak these things concerning himself, who must needs have seen corruption, (themselves being witnesses,) for on that account they respected his tomb, as being the repository of his ashes.

30 Therefore being a prophet, <sup>x</sup>and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne;

Had sworn with an oath; not barely had sworn, which had been sufficient; but to show the excellency of the matter, and the necessity of our believing of it, as also the solemnity of the words, Psal. cxxii. 11. Of the fruit of his loins; such as should descend from him, as the virgin Mary did. According to the flesh; as to his human nature, which our Saviour did truly partake of, being in the form of a servant. He would raise up Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost in the womb of his virgin mother, as to his incarnation; and by the same power out of the grave, in his resurrection. To sit on his throne; as Luke i. 32, 33: not as a temporal king, for his kingdom is not of this world; but as David ruled over all the people of God, so does Christ, and shall do for ever.

31 He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, <sup>y</sup>that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.

He seeing this before; by a prophetic eye, unto which any thing that was revealed was as certain and manifest, as aught could be to the eye of the body. By the same prophetic Spirit, and with the same certainty, which he spake of the incarnation, he spake also of the resurrection of Christ. Of the rest, see ver. 27.

32 This Jesus hath God raised up, <sup>z</sup>whereof we all are witnesses.

This Jesus, whom ye crucified, and we preach. Whereof we all are witnesses: they had now received the power spoken of and promised chap. i. 6, and testify what they had heard, and seen, and felt, and all agree in; though they could get nothing by it, but hatred and persecution, nay, death.

33 Therefore <sup>b</sup>being by the right hand of God exalted, and <sup>c</sup>having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he <sup>d</sup>hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear.

By the right hand of God, that is, by the power of God, spoken after the manner of men, the right hand being that we commonly do any thing with. Some read at the right hand of God; and then the apostle preaches Christ's ascension too, and his being justified by God, though he had been condemned by men. Having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost: Psal. lxxviii. 18. Which ye now see, in the fiery cloven tongues; and hear, in the divers languages which are spoken.

34 For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, <sup>e</sup>'The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand,

For David is not ascended into the heavens; hence St. Peter here proves, that these words, spoken by David, were not principally to be understood concerning himself, but concerning Christ the Messiah; for David, as to his body, was in the sepulchre, which on that account was kept amongst them. The Lord said unto my Lord; the eternal Father unto his eternal Son, who was now made flesh—hence our Saviour proves his Divinity, Matt. xxii. 45. The words here referred to are Psal. cx. 1.

35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

Christ is commissioned and empowered to reign over and govern all creatures, and all their actions, till the consummation of all things, so long as the world lasts, in which he, his people, and truths, will have enemies, Eph. i. 20—22; 1 Cor. xv. 27, 28.

36 Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God <sup>f</sup>hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

This is the conclusion which the apostle infers from the premises, applying what he had said very close and home, or it would not in all likelihood have had so good an effect. Ye have crucified; ye are the men. Lord over all the creatures, beyond what the first Adam was; and Christ, King over all the people of God, to rule in them, and reign for them; for to this purpose he was the Christ, or the Anointed of God, declared by God to be so, and owned for such by all that believed in him.

37 ¶ Now when they heard <sup>g</sup>this, <sup>h</sup>they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men <sup>i</sup>and brethren, what shall we do?

They were pricked in their heart; so great and true their grief, they were concerned as if they had been run through: (the pains the mind suffer are most acute:) this was foretold, Zech. xii. 10. Men and brethren; an ordinary compellation which the apostle had given them, ver. 29. What shall we do? not, What shall we say, or believe? conversion, if real, goes further than profession, and is in heart and deed, not in speech and word only: they desire to know if there be any hope, that such sinners as they might obtain forgiveness of their sins.

38 Then Peter said unto them, <sup>h</sup>Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Repent, which includes amendment of life, Matt. iii. 8; Luke iii. 8. In the name of Jesus Christ; not excluding the name of the Father and the Holy Ghost, in whose name, as well as in the name of the Son, they were to baptize, Matt. xxviii. 19: but the name of Jesus is here mentioned, because they had not yet known (but persecuted and slain) him, whom henceforward they must profess; and that they look for pardon and salvation only through him. For the remission of sins; thus Saul, or Paul, is said to wash away his sins by baptism, chap. xxii. 16; and this apostle elsewhere says, that baptism saves us, 1 Pet. iii. 21; which he explains to be, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience, &c. The gift of the Holy Ghost: 1. His internal gifts, confirmation and strengthening in the faith. 2. External gifts, as that of speaking with tongues, which they heard. Both, or either of these, according to their conditions or stations, God would bestow upon them.

39 For the promise is unto you, and <sup>i</sup>to your children, and <sup>k</sup>to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

e Ps. 110. 1.
Matt. 22. 44.
1 Cor. 15. 25.
Eph. 1. 20.
Heb. 1. 13.

1 Or, I may.

u 1 Kings 2.
20. ch. 13. 36.

x 2 Sam. 7.
12, 13. Ps.
132. 11. Luke
1. 32, 69.
Rom. 1. 3.
2 Tim. 2. 8.

y Ps. 16. 10.
ch. 13. 36.

z ver. 24.

a ch. 1. 8.

b ch. 5. 31.
Phil. 2. 8.
Heb. 10. 12.
c John 14.
26. & 15. 26.
& 16. 7, 13.
ch. 1. 4.
d ch. 10. 45.
Eph. 4. 8.

g Zech. 12. 10.
Luke 3. 10.
ch. 9. 6. &
16. 30.

h Luke 24.
47. ch. 3. 15.

i Joel 2. 28.
ch. 3. 23.
k ch. 10. 45.
& 11. 15, 18.
& 14. 27, &
15. 3, 8, 14.
Eph. 2. 13, 17

For the promise is unto you; lest they should doubt of pardon and grace, their sin having been so great. St. Peter here gives them a ground of hope, they being the descendants from Abraham, unto whom especially this was promised, Jer. xxxi. 34. And to all that are afar off; that is, to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews, who were said to be a people near unto God, as the Gentiles were said to be afar off, Isa. lvii. 19; Eph. ii. 13. Even as many as the Lord our God shall call; vocation, whether external by the word only, or internal by the Spirit also, depends on the pleasure of God; but the same promises of pardon and acceptance upon repentance made unto the Jews, are as effectually to be trusted unto by any of the Gentiles, as by any formerly amongst the Jews.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

Many other words: the sermons of the apostles, or of our Saviour, are not all set down by the holy writers; but only so much as God saw necessary for his church to know and believe. Testify and exhort; using God's name and authority, and calling him as it were to witness. Save yourselves: no less than the salvation of our souls depends upon our forsaking wicked and profane persons in their ungodly courses. From this untoward generation; the whole world lies in wickedness; but especially the scribes and Pharisees, and other such declared enemies of Christ Jesus.

41 ¶ Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

They that gladly received his word; some still remained in their unbelief and hardness of heart; though never men spake as the apostles now spake, with divers tongues, &c. Unto them; to the church, or the hundred and twenty formerly mentioned, chap. i. 15. This was the effect of Christ's prayer for his persecutors, Luke xxiii. 34; and of the promise of the Spirit now fulfilled, whereby in the day of his power they were made willing.

42 <sup>1</sup>And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

They continued stedfastly, speaks the reality of their conversion, and that they were not only for the present affected with what they had heard and seen. These three parts of worship were frequently, if not always, in those purer times used together: though some understand by breaking of bread, their civil fellowship and community, yet breaking being a holy rite used by our Saviour, at the institution of his supper, Matt. xxvi. 26, and breaking of bread being here put in conjunction with preaching and praying, the celebration of the eucharist, if not only meant, is chiefly to be understood in this place. Prayers; all those kinds of prayers mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Tim. ii. 1, as also their frequent praying, is implied. Thus, by a united force, they laboured to pull down mercies upon themselves and others, and to do violence unto the kingdom of heaven.

43 And fear came upon every soul: and <sup>m</sup>many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

Upon every soul; that is, upon every man; not only on them that were present, and persuaded to believe on Christ, whom the apostles preached; but on such also as were informed of those miraculous things which now happened; so that by this means the apostles were had in great esteem and respect by the people.

44 And all that believed were together, and <sup>n</sup>had all things common;

All that believed were together; not that they lived together in one house or street, but that they met (and that frequently) together in the holy exercises of their religion; and that manner of some, which St. Paul speaks of, Heb. x. 25, to forsake the assembling of themselves together, was a sin not yet known in the church. And had all things common; this was only at that place, Jerusalem, and at that time, when the wants of some, and the charity of others, may well be presumed to be extraordinary; and there is no such thing as community of goods here required or practised. Christ's gospel does not destroy the law; and the eighth commandment is still in force, which it could not be, if there were no propriety, or meum and tuum, now; nay, after this, the possession which Ananias sold is adjudged by this apostle to have been Ananias's own, and so was the money too which he had received for it, chap. v. 4. And these all things which they had in common, must either be restrained to such things as every one freely laid aside for the poor; or that it speaks the extraordinary charitable disposition of those new converts, that they would rather have parted with any thing, nay, with their all, than that any of their poor brethren should have wanted.

45 And sold their possessions and goods, and <sup>o</sup>parted them to all men, as <sup>p</sup>every man had need.

Those proportions of their estate they set apart to this charitable work; whether they did arise out of the sale of house or land, called possessions, or of any chattels or movable estate, called here goods: but that they did not divest themselves of all property, appears in that we find soon after this, chap. xii. 12, Mary the mother of St. Mark to have a house; and Lydia, after she was baptized, did not renounce any propriety in her house, chap. xvi. 15, but entreated St. Paul, and those who were with him, to come into her house, &c.

46 <sup>q</sup>And they, continuing daily with one accord <sup>r</sup>in the temple, and <sup>s</sup>breaking bread <sup>t</sup>from house to house, did eat <sup>u</sup>their meat with gladness and singleness of heart,

In the temple; in the court and porches of the temple, whither the people did use to resort at the time of the morning and evening sacrifice and prayers, that by means of the great concourse at such times they might have the better opportunity to preach the gospel amongst them; casting that net where they found most fish. Breaking bread; not only celebrating the eucharist, but their love-feasts which they usually had at that time, as 1 Cor. xi. 21, 22. From house to house; now here, now there, as they could conveniently; the richer also entertaining their poorer brethren at their tables. Did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart: if the former words be understood of the Lord's supper, then these words speak the great spiritual strength, cheer, and comfort they got by it: if we understand them of the ordinary meats which they willingly bestowed one upon another, the rich were more than recompensed with inward peace and satisfaction, for what they gave unto their poor brethren.

47 Praising God, and <sup>v</sup>having favour with all the people. And <sup>w</sup>'the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved.

Praising God; acknowledging him who teacheth one to want, and another to abound. Having favour with all the people; that is, generally to be understood, amongst them that continued yet without the pale of the church; the goodness, meekness, and patience of the apostles, and the rest of the believers, did wonderfully prevail to beget a good opinion of them. The Lord added to the church; salvation is (to be sure) only from the Lord; not Peter's sermons, no, nor the miracles of fiery cloven tongues, and the rushing mighty wind, could have converted any, but Δεῖ τι ἔδωκεν, that which was signified there, viz. the powerful operation of the Spirit of God in their hearts.

CHAP. III

The lame man healed by Peter and John, 1--11. Peter declareth to the people that this cure was not wrought by any power or holiness in himself or John, but by the power of God through faith in the name of Jesus, whom they had ignorantly crucified, but whom God had raised from the dead according to the Scriptures; and exhorteth them by faith to seek remission of sins and salvation in Jesus, whose coming had been spoken of by Moses and all the prophets, 12--26.

NOW Peter and John went up together a ch. 2. 46. <sup>a</sup> into the temple at the hour of prayer, b Ps. 66. 17. <sup>b</sup> being the ninth hour.

Went up together into the temple; not to communicate with the Jews in their worship, which was now antiquated, but that they might have a larger field to sow the seed of the gospel into; and therefore it was most probably upon some sabbath or festival day, and not unlikely in the evening of that great day of Pentecost (of which in the former chapter). At the hour of prayer: that God must be worshipped, and daily prayed unto, the law of nature and positive law of God requires; but, says Maimonides, there is no obligation by virtue of any command of God, unto any number of prayers, nor to any certain prayers, nor to any definite time of prayer. Howsoever, they did usually pray thrice a day, and thought each of those three times recommended unto them by one of the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Howsoever, the time of offering up the morning and evening sacrifice was recommended or commanded by God, as a time of prayer; a sacrifice being an actual prayer, as the other is real or verbal. The ninth hour; about three o'clock in the afternoon, the time of the evening sacrifice.

c ch. 14. 8.

2 And <sup>a</sup> a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, <sup>d</sup> to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

d John 9. 8.

Lame from his mother's womb, and not by any casualty, that so the miracle might be the greater, and the power of the God of nature appear. They laid daily; by which it was manifest, that it could not be by any correspondence betwixt the apostles and the lame man upon this occasion. At the gate of the temple; where there must needs be the greater notice taken of him; none going in or out but such as might see him. Called Beautiful, for the excellency of the workmanship: it was at the entering into the second court, or the court of the Jews from that of the Gentiles. This man, out of pride, being unwilling to beg of the Gentiles, though proselyted, (whom they did contemn,) or out of policy, hoping to receive more of the Jews, whom he is nearer related to, asked alms of them that entered into the temple. Poverty is no sign of God's disfavour (our blessed Redeemer is in an especial manner called Caput pauperum); but lameness in this man, divers miseries and calamities in others, bring them to the knowledge of Christ, and salvation through him.

3 Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms.

Seeing, though lame: every one hath something that is truly valuable, and matter of praise and thanks unto God.

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us.

The eye affects the heart, and speaks the compassion he had of this poor man, whom he did not disdain thoroughly and seriously to behold: he excites the lame man's expectation, and requires his attention, that he might the more mind the manner and means of his cure, and be the better prepared to give God the glory of it.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

Gave heed, with his eyes and mind too, being intent upon the apostles; this he was commanded to do, and it succeeds beyond all hopes. Thus we receive of God daily more than we can ask or think.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: <sup>a</sup> In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

c ch. 4. 10.

Silver and gold have I none; that is, at hand, or about me; neither had he much elsewhere; the apostles abounded indeed, but in grace, not in riches. Such as I have; a power from Christ to heal. Give I thee; I apply it to thee, and will make it effectual for thee. In the name, in the power, or at the command, of Jesus Christ, and trusting unto his promised assistance, who can speak to things that are not as if they were. Jesus Christ of Nazareth; our Saviour was usually so called, and being known by that name, the apostle does not decline it, though it had been by many (without cause) given him by way of reproach.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ancle bones received strength.

He took him by the right hand; not disdaining to take hold of a poor cripple or beggar; as also being fully persuaded of Christ's presence with him for his cure. And immediately, that it might the more evidently appear that this was the work of God, who can without means, and on a sudden, bring aught to perfection, his feet and ancle bones, whence his lameness did proceed, received strength: thus God can say unto the weak, Be strong.

8 And he <sup>b</sup> leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

f 11. 35. a.

Thus was fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, chap. xxxv. 6, Then shall the lame man leap as an hart; and thus the lame man manifested that he was perfectly cured, though in an instant, walking, and leaping, and praising God, to whom alone he attributed that sudden and perfect (and therefore miraculous) cure; nay, he attributes nothing unto the means; the apostle's words he knew did little or nothing, but God is all in all unto him: and he leaped, to evidence the truth of the miracle that was wrought upon him, and that his soul rejoiced in God his Saviour.

9 <sup>c</sup> And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

g ch. 4. 16. 21.

This miracle was so publicly done, that none could deny the matter of fact; which the enemies of the gospel are forced to confess, chap. iv. 16.

10 And they knew that it was he which <sup>b</sup> sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

h Like John 9. 8.

They knew that it was he; the very same lame beggar, probably notoriously known to many. They were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him; being so much contrary to what they had seen him but a little while before, when he had begged their alms; and, as he reasoned well, John ix. 32, Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind; so it was never heard, that any strengthened thus the feet of him that was born lame.

11 And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch <sup>a</sup> that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

i John 10. 23. ch. 5. 12.

Held Peter and John, in an ecstasy of thankfulness unto them, they having been the instruments of so great a mercy from God towards him; as also out of fear, lest when they were gone he might relapse: he that found so great a change in himself, could not but be as much surprised as they that saw the change upon him. The porch that is called Solomon's; not that which was built by Solomon, for that was destroyed by the Babylonians, as the rest of the temple was, 2 Kings xxv. 9; unless some part of this porch might not be consumed by the fire, when the other parts of the temple were burned, some morsel often escaping the jaws of that devouring element, fire; or it may be it was built in the re-edification of the temple, in the same place where Solomon's porch had stood, and thence called by the former name that was so much renowned. If any wonder that a porch should hold so many thousands of people, inasmuch as five thousand of them are said to be converted, chap. iv. 4; this porch is thought not only to have been the court of the Gentiles, and that of the Jews, that is, the outward and inward court; but to have contained a great part of the court of the Gentiles, if the whole court of the Gentiles might not be so called, as being indeed but a porch, or an entrance into the court of the Jews.

12 ¶ And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

He answered, for he said, an ordinary Hebraism, though no question was put unto him; thus the evangelist tells us that our Saviour answered and said, when there was no previous question spoken of, Matt. xi. 25. Nay, Jesus answered and said unto the fig tree, Mark xi. 14; that is, he spake powerfully unto it. Ye men of Israel; an ingratiating compellation, they ever valuing themselves and others on that account. By our own power or holiness: holiness, were it never so real and great in men, cannot cause the least miracle, although it is itself, all things considered, a very great one.

13 <sup>1</sup> The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, <sup>1</sup> hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye <sup>m</sup> delivered up, and <sup>a</sup> denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob; he mentions them, because the promise of the Messiah was made to them. Hath glorified his Son Jesus; or his servant, for so he is called, Isa. liii. 11; and that he might redeem us, he took upon him the form of a servant, and was obedient to the death of the cross, and did that great work of redemption which God sent him into the world to do. Whom ye delivered up; the rulers, at whose command our blessed Saviour was apprehended, bound, and delivered unto Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 1, 2. And denied him; this is charged upon the common sort of people also, who were earnest in crying, Matt. xxvii. 25, His blood be on us, and on our children. Their sin is here ripped up, and their sore searched to the quick, that they might entertain the word of salvation with the greater attention and desire.

14 But ye denied <sup>a</sup> the Holy One <sup>p</sup> and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you;

But ye denied the Holy One; Christ the anointed, when they cried out as with one voice, We have no king but Cæsar, John xix. 15; disclaiming our Redeemer, and his being anointed over them. And desired a murderer; to wit, Barabbas, crying out, Not this man, but Barabbas, John xviii. 40; which much aggravated their impiety; when the choice was given unto them of two, so vastly different, the just Jesus, and the murderous Barabbas, they chose the latter, to their destruction and confusion unto this present day. Where will blindness of mind and hardness of heart end!

15 And killed the ¶ Prince of life, <sup>a</sup> whom God hath raised from the dead; <sup>r</sup> whereof we are witnesses.

The Prince of life; as God, he is the Author of our temporal life too, in whom we live, and move, &c., and in whose hand is our breath; but Christ, as Mediator, is the guide and way to eternal life, John xiv. 6. These are said to have killed our Saviour, though neither Herod, nor Pilate, nor probably many (if any) of them that nailed him to the cross, were present; but it was done for their sakes, and at their desires, and therefore by their means; and it is here charged upon them, as done by them.

16 <sup>a</sup> And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

His name; his power; for by it he is known, as men or things are by their several names; or the name of Christ is put for Christ himself, as the name of God is put for God commonly. Through faith in his name; calling by faith on the name of Christ, being thoroughly persuaded that he could and would heal this cripple. The faith which is by him; not only faith, as on Christ as its object, but by and from Christ as its author; faith being twice made mention of in this cure, there being required faith in Peter to heal, and in the lame man to be healed.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that <sup>t</sup> through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.

Lest the corrosive in ver. 13—15 should pierce too far, to prevent despair in his auditors the apostle useth in this verse a lenitive, calling them yet brethren, though guilty of so great a mistake in their judgment, and fault in their practice. Through ignorance ye did it; whatsoever they did against Christ, whom St. Peter preached, was out of a double error: 1. About the place of Christ's birth, supposing him to have been born at Nazareth. 2. They were ignorant of the nature of his kingdom. As did also your rulers; whose fault was the greater, as having seduced others, &c.; yet St. Peter opens a door of hope by repentance, even for them also.

18 But <sup>a</sup> those things, which God before had shewed <sup>b</sup> by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

The prophets did all speak the same things, as if they had spoken out of one mouth, as they did speak by one Spirit. God used the ignorance of some, and the malice of others, for his own holy ends: and that it was prophesied that Christ should suffer, is very plain, Isa. i. 5—7.

19 ¶ Repent ye therefore, and be <sup>y</sup> converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

Repent ye therefore, and be converted; this is the true end, use, and application, both of the preceding miracle and sermon, to persuade unto repentance and conversion. That your sins may be blotted out; alluding to the manner of writing upon tables in those times, and not much disagreeing from what is in use amongst us, who write upon paper or parchment. There is a book of remembrance, and a record of all our sins kept: The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond, Jer. xvii. 1. When sin is pardoned, it is said to be blotted out, Isa. xliv. 22; and not to be found any more, though it should be sought for, Jer. i. 20. Times of refreshing; or, times of cooling; as afflictions are called a fiery trial, so deliverance from them is a season of refreshing or cooling. Such a time of refreshing shall come in this life, commonly from many troubles; but when this life ends, a deliverance comes from all afflictions to them that truly fear and serve God. Shall come from the presence of the Lord; God's presence is the cause and ground from whence all the refreshment his people take do arise; heaven would not be heaven (a place of bliss and glory) without it: and as God is the object of our beatitude, so he is the giver of all comfort, and his Spirit is the only Comforter.

20 And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

To remove all evils and miseries from his people; when that Sun shines all clouds and mists are scattered. This refers especially to Christ's second coming, which is here promised, to encourage us to do good, and to deter us from doing evil; as also to move us to repentance, and to comfort us when penitent.

21 <sup>a</sup> Whom the heaven must receive <sup>b</sup> until the times of <sup>c</sup> restitution of all <sup>d</sup> things, <sup>e</sup> which God hath spoken by the <sup>f</sup> mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

Whom the heaven must receive; that is, contain after it hath received him, as a real place doth a true body; for such Christ's body was, which was received into heaven: and heaven is the palace and throne of this King of kings and Lord of lords, where he shall reign until he hath put all his enemies under his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25. Until the times of restitution of all things; or restoration of all things, when all things shall be restored to that condition from

k. ch. 5. 30.
1 John 7. 39.
& 12. 16. &
17. 1.
m. Mat. 27. 2.
n. Mat. 27. 20.
Mark 16. 11.
Luke 23. 16.
20, 21. John
18. 40. & 19.
15. ch. 13. 26.

o. Ps. 16. 10.
Mark 1. 24.
Luke 1. 35.
ch. 2. 27. &
4. 27.
p. 27. 52.
& 22. 14.

1. Or,
Author.
Heb. 2. 10.
& 5. 9.
1 John 6. 11.
q. ch. 2. 24.
r. ch. 2. 32.

s. Matt. 9. 22.
ch. 4. 10.
& 14. 2.

t. Luke 24.
24. John 16.
3. ch. 13. 27.
1 Cor. 2. 8.
1 Tim. 1. 13.

y. Luke 24.
22. ch. 28.
z. Ps. 22. 1a.
30. & 23.
5. &c. Dan.
9. 26. 1 Pet.
1. 10, 11.

a. ch. 1. 11.
b. Mat. 17. 11.
c. Luke 1. 70.

which sin put them: for the fall hath maimed and disordered the whole universe; and probably there is not that excellency in any of the creatures which there was at first, before man (for whom they were made) by his sin brought death to himself, and as it were a dead colour over all them; this makes the whole creation groan and travail in pain until now, Rom. viii. 22. But the end of the world will be a time of restitution of all things unto man especially, who shall be then restored unto God, and to a blessed immortality: for unless this be granted, all their preaching and prophesying was in vain, 1 Cor. xv. 14.

22 For Moses truly said unto the fathers, 1 A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

For Moses truly said unto the fathers; their ancestors in the wilderness, Deut. xviii. 15, as also in the 18th verse. St. Peter names here but one of their prophets, but a most remarkable one. Like unto me; 1. In wisdom. 2. In miracles. 3. In being a Mediator betwixt God and his people. 4. In their being both out of their brethren, i. e. of the seed of Abraham. 5. In that they were both sent from God after an extraordinary manner. Him shall ye hear in all things; if any prophet did come amongst them, and did foretell future things which came to pass, or did work a real miracle, they were bound to believe him, if he did not endeavour to draw them to worship a false god; and by consequence they were bound to have believed our Saviour, who taught them only to fear that true God, whom the law and all the prophets had spoken of.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

Every soul; that is, every one. Hear that prophet; that is, believe and obey him. Shall be destroyed from among the people; as those that disobeyed Moses were destroyed, many perishing by strange and sudden deaths: we read of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and all that belonged to them, swallowed up for this sin, Numb. xvi. The apostle demands, How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? Heb. ii. 3. For a greater than Moses is here, and God hath undertaken to require it of every one that will not hearken unto him, Deut. xviii. 19.

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.

Though there were some prophets betwixt Moses and Samuel, yet they were but such as prophesied in some particular exigences and cases; and in Samuel's days the word of the Lord was precious, or rare, 1 Sam. iii. 1; but then David, that lively type of Christ, appearing at the throne, the Messiah began to be more discovered in and by him: besides, Samuel was the first who wrote his prophecies, and erected the schools of the prophets, and therefore he is first mentioned; and the date of the prophets is here begun from him.

25 Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

Children of the prophets; the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are called prophets, Psal. cv. 15, and did prophesy, foretelling things to come, &c. The disciples of the prophets are also called their children, or sons, 2 Kings ii. 3; and so these pretended and desired to be accounted. Children of the covenant are such unto whom the covenant belongs, which God made with Abraham and his seed; hence they are called the children of the promise, Rom. ix. 8; Gal. iv. 28; and the children of the kingdom, Matt. viii. 12. And this covenant of God with Abraham was the cause, that notwithstanding all the sore and heavy calamities of that people, God did always preserve some, and there was a remnant saved. Kindreds; families, or nations. Be blessed; through Christ, who is this seed of Abraham, all mercies in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, are bestowed; grace and glory, and every good thing.

26 Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

Unto you first; the Jews and inhabitants of Jerusalem, who are the lost sheep of the house of Israel. St. Peter did not yet know that the Gentiles should be called, until he was taught it by the vision, Acts x.; and though our Saviour had told the apostles that they should be his witnesses unto the uttermost part of the earth, Acts i. 8, they understood it only of those of their own nation, scattered or dispersed abroad, 1 Pet. i. 1. Raised up his Son Jesus; which word does not only refer to the resurrection of Christ, but to his being constituted and appointed to be a Prince and a Saviour; thus it is said, a great prophet is risen up amongst us, Luke vii. 16; and, God hath raised up a horn of salvation, Luke i. 69. Howsoever, it is by virtue of Christ's being raised from the dead, and carried into his kingdom, that we are blessed. In turning away every one of you from his iniquities; this is the greatest blessing indeed; hence our Saviour hath his name imposed by God on him, Matt. i. 21, and was called Jesus, because he saves his people from their sins; and without this being saved from our sins, nothing can be a blessing to us, Isa. iii. 11; and, There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked, Isa. lvii. 21. Add to this, that if any be turned from their iniquities, it is through the blessing of God in Christ.

CHAP. IV

The rulers of the Jews, offended with the teaching of Peter and John, imprison them, 1—4. Being brought before the council, Peter boldly avoucheth the late cure to have been wrought in the name of Jesus, and that men can be saved by no other name, 5—12. The council, struck with the boldness of the two apostles, after conferring together, dismiss them with a threatening charge to speak no more in the name of Jesus, 13—22. The church betaketh itself to prayer, 23—30. The presence of the Holy Ghost is signified by the house shaking, and the apostles thereby emboldened to speak the word, 31. The unity and charity of the church, who have their possessions in common, 32—37.

AND as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them,

The captain of the temple; the commander over those soldiers who were appointed to guard the temple, and provide that no disorder might happen, by reason of the multitudes that came to worship there; and most probably was a Roman, and not of the Jewish nation, much less the chief of any of the courses of the priests, to whom this term cannot agree. The Sadducees; these were most inveterate against the gospel, whose main article is the resurrection, which they denied: and thus each man, Jews and Gentiles, agree against Christ, as was foretold, Psal. ii. 1, 2.

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead.

Being grieved; or angry to such a degree that it was a great trouble to them. The doctrine of the resurrection alone could not but vex the Sadducees, who denied it; but it did more afflict them, that the apostles preached it through Jesus; asserting, not only the resurrection of our Saviour, which the Jews gave so much money unto the soldiers to hinder the report of, Matt. xxviii. 12, 13, but also that Christ was the author of the resurrection, and the first-fruits of them that sleep; and because they inferred from Christ's resurrection that his disciples should rise from the dead also.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now evening.

Put them in hold; some think this not to have been so strait a custody as that of a prison, but that rather the apostles were delivered to some who promised that they

<sup>c</sup> Deut. 18. 15, 18, 19. <sup>d</sup> 1. 7. 37.

<sup>d</sup> ch. 2. 30. <sup>e</sup> Rom. 9. 4. <sup>f</sup> R. 15. 3. <sup>g</sup> Gal. 3. 24. <sup>h</sup> e Gen. 12. 3. <sup>i</sup> & 18. 18. & 22. 18. & 25. 4. & 28. 14. <sup>j</sup> Gal. 3. 8.

<sup>k</sup> Matt. 10. 5. & 15. 24. <sup>l</sup> Luke 24. 47. <sup>m</sup> ch. 13. 32. <sup>n</sup> 33. 44. <sup>o</sup> ver. 22. <sup>p</sup> Mat. 1. 21.

<sup>q</sup> Or, ruler. <sup>r</sup> Luke 22. 4. <sup>s</sup> ch. 5. 24.

<sup>t</sup> Mat. 22. 23. <sup>u</sup> Acts 23. 8.

should be forthcoming. The prediction of our Saviour began now to be fulfilled, Luke xxi. 12. They shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you. Howsoever, God was pleased to suffer persecution to come by degrees on his church; after the sun was down, (Christ was gone from them,) it was not presently pitch-darkness with them. God always remembers his people's condition, and his own promise, and lays no more upon them than they are able to bear.

4 Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand.

Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom. x. 17. It being the ordinary means which God hath appointed; the apostles themselves make use of it towards the conviction of this people. The number of the hearers is not intended to be set here, or in any other place; but either these five thousand were such as were converted at this sermon, or rather the number converted by St. Peter's former sermon, chap. ii. 14—40, were at this sermon made thus many; howsoever, the increase which God gave was very great.

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and Scribes,

Their rulers; the sanhedrim, or great council. Elders and scribes; the magistrates of the city, scribes, doctors, or teachers of the law, &c.; howsoever these might be distinguished, they are all as one against the doctrine of the gospel, and endeavour to put out the light as soon as it began to shine, as Herod would have killed Christ in the manger.

6 And <sup>b</sup>Annas the High Priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the High Priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

Annas the high priest, and Caiaphas; both these are said to be high priests, Luke iii. 2; whether they bare this office by turn each other year, as some think, or that the Roman power put in and out whom they pleased, and in courtesy he that was laid aside still retained the title during his life, is not very material. John, thought to be the son of Annas. Alexander, a man of great repute amongst them, as Josephus says. As many as were of the kindred of the high priest; their relation many times preferring them to a place in their great council, or sanhedrim. Were gathered together at Jerusalem; or in Jerusalem; either such as were in the city, being called together on such an extraordinary occasion; or else they sent also unto men of greatest note, that lived nigh thereunto.

7 And when they had set them in the midst, they asked, <sup>c</sup>By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?

When they had set them in the midst; the sanhedrim, or great council, did sit in a circular form; and the apostles being to answer for themselves, were placed so as they might better hear and be heard. By what power; natural, or supernatural and Divine? By what name? at whose command, or in whose authority? they inquire whether they did pretend to be prophets, or persons extraordinarily sent, &c. Though the miracle which they had wrought showed sufficiently by whose power it was done, yet of this they were willingly ignorant, and inquire only that they might find matter out of the apostles' own mouths, for which they might blame or punish them.

8 <sup>d</sup>Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

Filled with the Holy Ghost; guiding and strengthening of him in what he did speak, by which so mightily Peter differed from himself, that though formerly he was afraid of a servant, and denied our Saviour, now he is not afraid before the rulers to confess him. Rulers of the people, and elders of Israel; see ver. 5. These were especially the great council, in imitation of the seventy, which Moses appointed by God's command to help him in the burden of his government, Numb. xi. 16, 24.

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

Examined; juridically called in question; it is a forensic word. Of the good deed; though they disputed not the authority of the court, yet they assert their integrity; that it was no other than a good deed they had done, which rulers ought not to be a terror unto, Rom. xiii. 3. By what means, that is, in the words of the question which was propounded unto them, ver. 7, by what power, or by what name, he is made whole?

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, <sup>e</sup>that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, <sup>f</sup>whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel; the apostles are not dismayed, but make their boldness, spoken of ver. 13, to appear; they preach Christ to all of them, and wish they could make him known to all others. Jesus Christ of Nazareth; see chap. ii. 22. Whom God raised; i. e. God the Father: our Surety was discharged by God himself, who had laid him in the prison of the grave for our debts. This man stand here before you whole; the lame man that was made whole being present, and an ocular demonstration of the miracle wrought upon him.

11 <sup>g</sup>This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

Alluding to Psal. cxviii. 22, in which there is a prophecy of what was now fulfilled: see chap. ii. 23. You builders; so by their office they were, and ought to have been so indeed, and are here so called, that they might be minded of their duty, viz. to increase, strengthen, and beautify the building, and not to demolish, weaken, or deface it. The head of the corner; or the corner-stone: Christ is frequently so called, Matt. xxi. 42; Mark xii. 10; and that, 1. Because he sustains and upholds the whole building. 2. He is a rock or stone of offence, Rom. ix. 33; as many run upon and are hurt by a corner-stone. 3. He is most precious, 1 Pet. ii. 6, as the corner-stones are usually the largest, firmest, and best. 4. Christ is a light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as the glory of the people of Israel; and both Gentile and Jew are united in him, and saved by him, as the corner-stone is equally necessary for both sides, which are united in it, and borne up by it.

12 <sup>h</sup>Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

Neither is there salvation, for soul or body, in any other person or thing. For there is none other name; because in distress men did usually call upon their false gods by name, as, O Baal, hear us, 1 Kings xviii. 26. Under heaven; whether patriarch or prophet, priest or king; especially referring unto Moses, in whom they did trust; and therefore under the gospel especially we must lift up our hearts.

13 ¶ Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, <sup>i</sup>and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

They were unlearned; not wholly unlearned, but such as were without any polite learning, or more than ordinary education, such as every one amongst them had. Ignorant men; idiots, so the Greek word, from whence ours come, signifying such as were brought up at home, and never acted in a larger sphere than the walls of their own house; having never been magistrates, or teachers of the law, or any way public persons; and spake only their mother tongue. They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus; which these rulers might easily take notice of, many of them frequenting his company too, Matt. xxi. 23; Luke xviii. 18; John xii. 42.

<sup>b</sup> Luke 3. 2.
<sup>c</sup> John 11. 49.
<sup>d</sup> & 18. 13.

<sup>e</sup> Ex. 2. 14.
<sup>f</sup> Matt. 21. 23.
<sup>g</sup> ch. 7. 27.

<sup>d</sup> Luke 12.
11, 12.

<sup>g</sup> Ps. 118. 22.
<sup>h</sup> ch. 28. 16.

<sup>i</sup> Matt. 21. 42.

<sup>h</sup> Matt. 1. 21.
<sup>i</sup> ch. 10. 43.
<sup>j</sup> 1 Tim. 2.
5, 6.

<sup>i</sup> Mat. 11. 25.
<sup>j</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 27.

14 And beholding the man which was healed <sup>k</sup>standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

Standing; whereas, before he was either carried, or was forced to lay down. They could say nothing against it; they could not deny but that it was a good deed, and that it was miraculously done.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

To go aside out of the council; the place where the council met; for the apostles were not dismissed to go away at their liberty. They conferred among themselves; it was their joint endeavour to stifle the gospel, and would now consult about the best expedient, but they would not let the apostles hear, lest they might discover the weakness of their proofs against them, and against the truth.

16 Saying, <sup>l</sup>What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them <sup>m</sup>is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

What shall we do? at what a loss are these great men, about the manner of their proceeding with the apostles! they might seem to have the victory in their hands, and yet they are evidently overcome by three witnesses; viz. by both the apostles and the lame man, and especially by the evidence of this fact itself: though they did not boggle at being unjust, yet they were loth to seem to be so, and therefore they take counsel to hide it, or palliate it before men; more valuing their credit, than the salvation of their own or other men's souls.

17 But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

Straitly threaten them; the pletnasim here used implies a very sore and heavy threatening, as of the most grievous punishment upon the most heinous fact. That they speak henceforth to no man in this name; either, 1. By preaching; or, 2. By praying in it; or, 3. By doing miracles again by it.

18 <sup>n</sup>And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

Not to speak at all; neither privately nor publicly. Nor teach in the name of Jesus; as his apostles and ministers sent from him.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, <sup>o</sup>Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

Peter and John answered; both spake by one and the same Spirit, and agreed in one and the same answer; they are not solicitous what will best bring them off at present, but said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God, from whom nothing is hid, and who is the avenger of all wrong, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. The apostles seem to refer to a commonly received rule amongst their rabbins, which also they make use of, chap. v. 29, We ought to obey God rather than men. In the greatest matters of our most holy religion, God hath not left himself without a witness, or a thousand witnesses, in our own breasts and consciences, Amos ii. 11.

20 <sup>p</sup>For we cannot but speak the things which <sup>q</sup>we have seen and heard.

We cannot but speak; in a moral, not in a physical sense; they could not restrain speaking, because of the necessity which was laid upon them, and the woe which would have befallen them, if they had not preached the gospel, 1 Cor. ix. 16. If any man denies to bear testimony for man to a truth, he sins; how much more does he sin, who forbears to witness for God, and at the command or the sending of God!

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, <sup>r</sup>because of the people: for all men glorified God for <sup>s</sup>that which was done.

They let them go for the present; for amongst them no acquittal was so peremptory or absolute, but that they might be tried again for the same fact upon further evidence. Because of the people; it was not the sense of the evil or sin, nor the apprehensions of God's displeasure and wrath, which deterred them; but the fear or favour of the people. The corruptions that are in the world are overruled for the good of God's children in it. All men glorified God; not only such as believed, but others also, could not but confess that this was the hand of God which had made the lame to walk, and rejoice in it, and by consequence have a very great veneration for the apostles, who were the instruments of it.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed.

Therefore, 1. The harder to be cured. 2. The man was the more credible, who had so long known what it was to be without the use of his limbs, which now he enjoyed. 3. Whom they could not themselves but have often seen and heard begging. But if he had laid so many years in the porch of the temple through which our Saviour frequently entered, how came it to pass that he was not cured before? we do not read that our Saviour denied any who came for cure. There need no other answer, but that all times and seasons are in God's hands, who justly forbore to send deliverance till this very time, and now mercifully sent it; especially reserving this miracle for the confirmation of the truth of the gospel, and of the apostles themselves in the preaching of it.

23 ¶ And being let go, <sup>t</sup>they went to their own company, and reported all that the Chief Priests and elders had said unto them.

They went to their own company, the rest of the apostles and believers, who have a special propriety and delight in one another; sheep with sheep, and goats with goats: though the separation will be made at the last day, the foundation of it is laid here. And reported all; to forewarn them of what they might expect, and encourage them to hope for the like deliverance. Chief priests; to what hath been said concerning them might be added, that these, it may be, were the first or chief in the courses, which David divided the priests into, which division was observed till our Saviour's time, Luke i. 5.

24 And when they had heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, <sup>u</sup>thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is:

And when they, their own company, believers, unto whom they went, heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord; either jointly, with one heart and spirit, agreeing in the same words, or saying Amen to the same thing. And said, Lord; they begin prayer with such a reverend compellation, as suited best to the matter of their prayer and praises: whether by Lord they meant their Saviour, who was usually so called by them, or God the Father, (because the word here is not Κύριε, but Δεσποτα;) is not material; for when any person in the Trinity is invoked, the others are included; for we worship the Trinity in Unity, and the Unity in Trinity. Which made heaven and earth, &c.; the creation and government of the world, is a good consideration to confirm us under all things that befall us here.

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, <sup>x</sup>Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

Who by the mouth of thy servant David; through the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David; so it is read in many ancient copies; and shows, that what David and other holy men spake, was from the Holy Ghost, and is to be attended unto and believed as spoken by him. Servant, or son; David's relation to God is mentioned as a greater dignity than his being ruler over so great a people. Why did the

r Mat. 21. 26.
l Luke 21. 5.
m ch. 22. 3.
n ch. 5. 26.
o ch. 3. 7, 8.

l John 11. 67.

m ch. 3. 9.
n n Again,

ch. 5. 40.

o ch. 5. 29.

p ch. 1. 8.
q 2. 22.
r John 1. 1, 3.

u 2 Kings
19. 14.

x Ps. 2. 1.

heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? it shows the unreasonable fury wherewith the enemies of God persecute his people, without cause, but what themselves imagine or make, and the event falling of their end; for all things work for good to them that love God, Rom. viii. 28; and the blood of martyrs have been found to be the seed of the church. These words are quoted out of Psal. ii. 1.

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

These words do not vary in sense from what we read, Psal. ii. 2, but are the same for substance. The kings; not only such who in a strict sense we call kings, but any chief governors, as Herod and Pilate were. The rulers; the sanhedrim, or great council of the Jews. Against the Lord; God looks upon it as done against him, whatsoever is done against them that fear him; thus the Israelites are said to be gathered together against the Lord, Numb. xvi. 11, who were gathered against Moses and Aaron. And against his Christ; our Saviour was at the right hand of his Father, but they who afflict his members afflict him; he cries from heaven to Saul, Why persecutest thou me? chap. ix. 4; and had before told his disciples, He that despiseth you despiseth me, Luke x. 16.

27 For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together,

Thy holy child; it speaks Christ's dearness to God as a child, and obeying of God as a servant. Whom thou hast anointed, to be a King, Priest, and Prophet to his church. Both Herod and Pontius Pilate, &c.: a strange agreement against Christ, his truths, and people; Gentiles and Jews never combined so together before. Henceforth it is no dishonour to any, if they follow that which is good, to have great and many enemies, for so had our Saviour: nor is it any honour to any to persecute and despise such; so did Herod, Pilate, Judas, &c.

28 For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.

The apostles mind not so much second causes in what our Saviour or themselves suffered, but see and acknowledge God in all; who makes a straight line with a crooked stick; and is holy, wise, and good in overruling and permitting the greatest evils; and does deserve to have praise for all things, Eph. v. 20: see chap. ii. 23. Thy hand and thy counsel; thy power and right to dispose of all persons and things; alluding to Lev. xvi. 8: as the lot cast for the two goats (the disposing of which being from the Lord, Prov. xvi. 33) did determine which of the goats should be sacrificed, and which should escape; so it was not without a Divine disposition, that Christ was made a sin-offering for us; though this no way excuses the wicked instruments of his death and suffering.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word,

Behold their threatenings; they had acknowledged God the Maker of heaven, ver. 24, and accordingly here they desire that from heaven his dwelling-place he would behold them and their sufferings; as all things are visible to such as sit above us. With all boldness; freeness, or presence of mind, here translated boldness, which in a good cause (for Christ and his truth) is (as all good gifts) from the Father of lights, James i. 17; and our Saviour hath promised that it shall be given unto us in that hour what to say, Luke xii. 11, 12.

30 By stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.

By stretching forth thine hand; they desire nothing else to imbolden them, but God's owning them and their work.

That signs and wonders may be done: miracles were then necessary, as being the seal of their commission from God; they desire to have this patent with them, to show as often as occasion served. By the name of thy holy child Jesus; by the power and authority of Christ; for Christ alone they sought to advance and magnify, and not themselves, by all the wonders they wrought.

31 ¶ And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

The place was shaken; miraculously moved up and down, as on the waves of the sea, to evidence God's presence with them, and acceptance of them and their prayers in an extraordinary manner. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost; according to their conditions, whether apostles (for whom these prayers were especially made) or private believers. They spake the word of God with boldness: this was the grace they asked, ver. 29. God gave it them, and with it all other graces necessary for them. In their difficulties and wants, the greatest and holiest in the church of God must go to God to be supplied, and prayer is the most successful means.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common.

Were of one heart and of one soul; as if one heart and one soul had moved that multitude; to be sure there was one Spirit in them all, that is, the Spirit of God, by whose grace they agreed in all truths, and in hearty affections towards one another; insomuch, that they were as willing that what they had might be enjoyed by their necessitous brethren as by themselves. The community of goods was not commanded, but left at liberty, and was chosen as most expedient at such a time in that place; that it was not even then commanded, we may see, chap. v. 4; neither was it practised any where but at Jerusalem; and it was the rather practised there, that believers might show what credit they gave to our Saviour's prediction concerning the destruction of that place, in which they did not care to have or retain any thing. There might be something too to command this practice of the church in that season: the whole church, upon the matter, being in Jerusalem, and consisting of such as lived afar off, and were by persecution to be driven suddenly farther, had not such a means been yielded to it must have perished, without a miracle.

33 And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.

With great power; by sundry miracles which they wrought, as also by their boldness with which they spake; it being no small wonder to see and hear such illiterate men testifying the truths of the gospel amidst so many learned rabbins. The resurrection was the greatest point in controversy, which being granted, all things concerning Christ and the gospel could not be denied; and therefore here it is especially mentioned. Great grace; favour and acceptance; men could not but think well of their doctrine and ways, whom they saw so innocent and holy, meek and good; especially God's grace was manifest in their words and actions.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were sellers of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,

So far forth as might relieve the present necessities of believers; not that every one parted with all that he had, for that had taken away (at least) the use and force of the eighth commandment; for where there is no propriety there can be no theft. Now Christ came not to dissolve any law, but to fulfil it: the meaning then is, that these y Matt. 26. 3.

Luke 22. 2.
& 23. 1. 8.
z Luke 1. 35.
a Luke 4. 18.
John 10. 38.

b ch. 2. 23.
& 3. 18.

c ver. 13. 31.
ch. 9. 27.
& 13. 46. &
14. 3. & 19.
d & 20. 28.
& 28. 31.
Eph. 6. 19.

d ch. 2. 42.
& 5. 12.
e ch. 3. 6. 16.
f ver. 27.

i ch. 5. 12.
Rom. 15. 5.
6. 2 Cor. 13.
11. Phil. 1.
27. & 2. 2.
1 Pet. 3. 6.
k ch. 2. 44.

l ch. 1. 8.
m ch. 1. 22.
n ch. 2. 47.

o ch. 2. 45.

early Christians would not only part with their revenue, but, rather than their brethren should want, they would and did sell their fee-simple. See chap. ii. 44.

<sup>p ver. 37.</sup>
<sup>ch. 5. 2.</sup>
<sup>q ch. 2. 45.</sup>
<sup>& 6. 1.</sup> 35 <sup>p</sup> And laid them down at the apostles' feet: <sup>q</sup> and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

Laid them down at the apostles' feet; submitted them to the apostles' disposal: this metaphor is used, 1 Cor. xv. 27, He hath put all things under his feet. According as he had need; the poor man's want is the fittest measure for our relief.

36 And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, Joses; some read Joseph; the Hebrew names, when turned into Greek, meet with divers terminations or endings. Surnamed Barnabas; full of consolation; not only in that he gave so liberally towards the relief of the poor, parting with his possessions for them; but that he excelled in propounding inward and spiritual comfort unto poor and rich, being of a mild disposition, and fitted to handle gently such wounds as the terrors of the law had made. Though a Levite he might have land, either in right of his wife, or given to him and his ancestors; as we read was to Phinehas, Josh. xxiv. 33; otherwise the Lord was the Levites' portion in an especial manner. The Jews being dispersed all over the known world, some dwell in Cyprus, as Joses's parents; Saul's parents dwelt at Tarsus; though at this time both Saul and Joses dwell in Jerusalem.

<sup>r ver. 34, 35.</sup>
<sup>ch. 5. 1, 2.</sup> 37 <sup>r</sup> Having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

This is an instance of what was said ver. 34, 35; and Joses probably is instanced in it, either because he sold a greater quantity of land, as having large possessions, or as being one of the first that was remarkable in this kind of charity. Laid it at the apostles' feet: see ver. 35.

CHAP. V

Ananias and Sapphira, profanely tempting the Holy Ghost with a lie, at Peter's rebuke fall down dead, 1—11. The apostles work many miracles, to the great increase of the faith, 12—16. They are all imprisoned, but released by an angel, and sent to preach openly in the temple: being brought before the council, 17—28, they support their witness with great freedom, 29—32. The council are restrained from killing them by the advice of Gamaliel, but beat and dismiss them with a charge not to speak in the name of Jesus, 33—40. They rejoice in their sufferings, and cease not to preach Christ both in public and private, 41, 42.

BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

A dreadful instance of God's indignation against hypocrisy and sacrilege, which we have an infallible testimony of; which is the more remarkable, because such sins escape punishment from men, either as not known, or not disliked; yet the damnation of such as are guilty of them slumbereth not, 2 Pet. ii. 3, it being the glory of God to search out matters further than men can, or list to do. A possession; an estate, house, or farm.

<sup>a ch. 4. 37.</sup> 2 And kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, <sup>a</sup> and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

Kept back part of the price, when they had vowed the whole to God and his service, which made it a robbing of God, whatsoever pretence they might possibly have of detaining some part for their own necessities in old age, or time of sickness; arguing a great distrust in that God, whom, when they had made their vow, they pretended to give themselves and their substance unto. His wife also being privy to it; her subjection to her husband not excusing her partaking in his sin and punishment. Brought a certain part; their ambition carried them thus far, they would seem devout, charitable, &c., and their covetousness hindered them from going farther. Laid it at the apostles' feet: see chap. iv. 35.

3 <sup>b</sup> But Peter said, Ananias, why hath <sup>b Num. 30. 2.</sup> <sup>Dent. 23. 21.</sup> <sup>Eccles. 5. 4.</sup> <sup>c Luke 22. 3.</sup> <sup>d Or, to deceive, ver. 9.</sup> Satan filled thine heart || to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

But Peter said; Peter knew this deceit by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; it being most probably not otherwise likely ever to be discovered. Satan filled thine heart: as when the heart is filled with hot spirits it is daring and bold, so when Satan filled their heart these wretches venture upon desperate courses and provoking sins. To lie to the Holy Ghost; this sin is said to be lying to the Holy Ghost, 1. Because against their own consciences, and the Spirit of God too witnessing with their spirits, Rom. ix. 1. As also, 2. Because they pretended to holiness, and the service of God, when they intended only to serve their own turns; now the Spirit is in a peculiar manner the Spirit of holiness, and the author of it in us, whom they pretended to have been moved by, but falsely. And, lastly, Defrauding the poor members of Christ of their right, (for so by their vow it became,) they lied to the Holy Ghost, who constitutes and establishes the church, and accepteth these gifts as given to God, and not to men.

4 Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? a sufficient argument, that there was no command (even then) to necessitate them to part with their estates, but only what the present and eminent necessity of the church did persuade them voluntarily unto. The doubling of this expostulation makes the conviction the more forcible. In thine own power; as a steward under God, to do what thou wouldst with it according to his will; and none are, or can be, otherwise disposers of what they possess. Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? it seems hence, that it was a deliberate and propensed iniquity. Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God: in that lying unto God is so often charged, and no express mention is made of Ananias's vow, some excuse him of sacrilege, and charge him the more deeply with ambition, covetousness, lying, and hypocrisy, to the apostles, whom he intended to deceive.

5 And Ananias hearing these words <sup>d ver. 10, 11.</sup> fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great fear came on all them that heard these things.

Fell down and gave up the ghost; expired and died. Some instances of God's extraordinary judgments upon sinners were in the beginning of the Jewish church; as upon the man that gathered sticks on the sabbath day, Numb. xv. 35, and upon Nadab and Abihu, Lev. x. 1, 2; and so here in the beginning of the Christian church; to be as marks to teach us to shun such sins, and to teach us that the God with whom we have to do is greatly to be feared. And this miraculous way of punishing notorious sinners in the church, was accommodated to such a time, in which magistrates were so far from defending the church, that they themselves were the greatest enemies unto it. And great fear came on all them that heard these things: let others also hear, and fear, and do so no more.

6 And the young men arose, <sup>e John 10. 40.</sup> wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

The young men; such as were present at that time, and fittest for that employ. Wound him up; according as they were wont to do to such as they intended to prepare for sepulture. Read what was done to the body of our Saviour, Mark xv. 46.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

About the space of three hours after; this circumstance is expressed to confirm the truth of this history. Not knowing what was done; not suspecting any such thing, she was the less inquisitive; and such a consternation and dread was upon all that were there, that they durst not tell her, lest they should offend Peter; also, probably, lest they should with so sudden and sad news grieve her. Came in; into the church, or place, where they were met together.

8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

Peter answered; an ordinary Hebraism, by which one that speaketh first is said to answer, if it be tending towards any discourse especially. For so much; the certain price is not mentioned, as not being necessary to the intent of the Holy Ghost in this narrative; but be it more or less, it was the same which her husband had said the land was sold for. She said, Yea; she had agreed with her husband what to say; and one sin draws on another, till it ends in perdition.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

To tempt the Spirit of the Lord; this expression, of tempting God, or the Spirit of God, is not used amongst profane writers; and this sin is not (at least to such a degree) committed amongst pagans and heathens, and is to be dreaded by all that profess the gospel. As often as men sin against their conscience, and their consciences condemn them in what they do, so often they dare, tempt, or try, whether God be omniscient, and knows of, or holy and powerful, and will punish, their sins; which they find at last to their cost. The feet of them which have buried thy husband, are at the door; this the apostle foretells ere it came to pass, the more to confirm his authority and the truth of the gospel. Shall carry thee out, after thou art dead, to thy burial.

10 ¶ Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

The same sins meet with the same punishment; God is no respecter of persons, Jew or Gentile, male or female.

11 ¶ And great fear came upon all the Church, and upon as many as heard these things.

Thus upon the smiting of so many men in and about Beth-shemeth, 1 Sam. vi. 20, they wisely demand, Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? and upon the slaying of Uzzah, 2 Sam. vi. 9, David was afraid of the Lord. Discite justitiam metuiti. As many as heard these things, out of the pale of the church: God's judgments do restrain in a great measure wicked men.

12 ¶ And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

By the hands of the apostles; by the apostles' ministry: though they were holy and excellent men, they were but instruments; the power they acted by was God's; which also they had prayed for, and acknowledged, chap. iv. 30. Among the people; generally among the meaner sort, according to that question, Have any of the rulers believed on him? John vii. 48. Not many mighty, not many noble, are called, 1 Cor. i. 26. In Solomon's porch; a large and capacious place, where they might with greatest convenience hear and see what was done and said.

13 And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them.

Of the rest; such who were not of the common sort of people, and here seem to be distinguished from them: or, of the rest (more largely) who had not joined themselves to the church, being amazed at this judgment on these two hypocrites, durst not make a formal show of religion, unless they had a thorough persuasion in their mind concerning the truth of it, and a firm resolution in their conversation to live answerably unto it.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.)

This explains the former verse, and helps us against mistaking it, for this wonderful judgment was so far from being a hinderance to the truth of the gospel, that it is turned to the furtherance of it; for though great men, and such as were insincere, were terrified from owning Christ and his doctrine, others did more readily embrace them by reason of it.

15 Inasmuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

Into the streets; into every street generally taken, it being a common practice where they came, and not in one street only. These weak and unlikely means did more show the power to be of God, and was the greater confirmation to the truth of the gospel; and thus was fulfilled what our Saviour had promised to the apostles, and such as should believe in him, John xiv. 12, that they should do greater works than he did.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.

The variety and grievousness of these evils did but the more commend the power which was present with the apostles. They were healed every one; an evidence that these cures were not wrought by second causes, for the best medicines do not always succeed; as also, in that they were perfectly and suddenly cured who were thus miraculously cured, the God of nature restoring nature beyond what means and art could do.

17 ¶ Then the High Priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadducees,) and were filled with indignation,

Then the high priest rose up; moved at the report of these things, went out of the council to observe what was done. And all they that were with him; there were both Pharisees and Sadducees in their sanhedrim or great council, as appears Acts xxiii. 6; but the high priest and a great part were at this time Sadducees. Indignation, or zeal, which is the best when kindled (as the fire on the altar) from heaven, regularly acting for God's truth and word; and the worst when inflamed by carnal affections, and set upon wrong objects for self-ends. The pique these Sadducees had against the apostles and their doctrine, was, because they taught the resurrection, which the Sadducees denied.

18 ¶ And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

See chap. iv. 3.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said,

God useth the ministry of angels, though he might otherwise do what pleaseth him. An angel rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre. Angels ministered to Christ, Matt. iv. 11; and are all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation, Heb. i. 14; and encamp round about them that fear God, Psal. xxxiv. 7. Opened the prison doors; and shut them again, after that the apostles were gone out, as appears ver. 23.

20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life. Stand; the word implies courage and steadfastness of mind, as well as such a posture of the body. All the words;

f ver. 3.
Matt. 4. 7.

g ver. 5.

h ver. 5.
ch. 2. 43.
& 19. 17.

i ch. 2. 43. &
14. 3. & 19.
11. Rom. 15.
19. 2 Cor. 12.
12. Heb. 2. 4.
k ch. 3. 11.
& 4. 32.

l John 8. 22.
& 12. 42. &
19. 38.
m ch. 3. 47.
& 4. 21.

l Or, in every street.
n Matt. 9. 21.
& 14. 36.
ch. 18. 12.

o Mark 16.
17. 18.
John 14. 12.

p ch. 4. 1, 2.
8.

l Or, envy.

q Luke 21.
12.

r ch. 12. 7.
& 18. 26.

s John 8. 68.
& 17. 3.
l John 5. 11.

without preferring some acceptable truths before others more ungrateful, if necessary towards their salvation. Christ for a time did limit them; they might not tell any that he was Jesus the Christ, Matt. xvi. 20, nor the vision which they had seen in his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 9. Now this prohibition is taken off. Thus the sun does not shine in his full glory all at once. This life; some admit of an hypallage, and join the pronoun to the other substantive, reading in this place, these words of life; and the rather because by this life is ordinarily understood the present, temporary life, as in 1 Cor. xv. 19: but there needs not this translative sense; by this life, the angel might very well understand eternal life and salvation, for that was it which the Sadducees denied, and for the preaching of which life the apostles were imprisoned.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. <sup>t ch. 4. 5, 6.</sup> But the High Priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

When they heard that; having received a command from God, they resolved to obey him rather than man. Early in the morning; taking the first opportunity, though they could not but be sensible of the danger they ran into. The council; the sanhedrim, or great council. The senate; the judges of their inferior courts, or the chief amongst the priests or senators; either living in the city, or coming thither upon that festival occasion.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, and told,

These men, thus sent to hinder the spreading of the gospel, could not but be a means of confirming it, when they saw, and declared what they found; so easily can God make use of what is intended against his truth and people unto the advantage of either.

23 Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within.

All means imaginable were used to secure their prisoners; but when God will deliver, what can keep them? when God will work, who can hinder? Job xi. 10. It is strange, that so great evidence of the innocence of the apostles, and truth of their doctrine, should be ineffectual; but prejudice is insuperable, unless to the mighty power of the grace of God; and this blindness cannot be cured, but by God's Ephphatha.

24 Now when the High Priest and <sup>u Luke 22. 4. ch. 4. 1.</sup> the captain of the temple and the Chief Priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

The captain of the temple; the commander over the soldiers who were set to guard the temple, either to secure the treasure there, or to be in a readiness to suppress any tumult thereabouts; Pilate speaks of this, Matt. xxvii. 65. The chief priests; the heads of the families, or chief of the courses of the priests. They doubted of them; by what means these wonderful things were done; for they were loth to see and acknowledge God in them.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

So true is that in Isa. viii. 10, Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought. But, The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, Psal. xxxiii. 11.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: <sup>x Mat. 21. 26.</sup> for they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned.

Brought them without violence; they might, peradventure, think it needless or impossible to bind them against their wills, who had opened the prison, and so miraculously came out: however, another more certain reason is given of it;

they feared the people; they feared men more than God, who had done so great things amongst them.

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the High Priest asked them,

When they are about to do the greatest injuries, they pretend to right; and will not judge them, without giving them leave to answer for themselves.

28 Saying, <sup>y ch. 4. 18.</sup> Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, <sup>z ch. 2. 23, 36, & 3. 15. & 7. 52. a Matt. 23. 35, & 27. 25.</sup> and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.

Did not we straitly command you? as indeed they had, chap. iv. 18; hence they aggravated the apostles' crime, as done out of malice, and not out of ignorance. This name, and this man's blood, are odious reflections, full of contumely against our blessed Saviour, as if he had not been worthy the naming by them. To bring this man's blood upon us; they shunned not the sin of murder, but are afraid or ashamed of the imputation of it: as many scruple not to commit that wickedness which they would be loth to be thought guilty of. Blood; the punishment of his blood-shedding.

29 ¶ Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, <sup>b ch. 4. 19.</sup> We ought to obey God rather than men.

This they all agree in, and it is the common sense of all considering men; as Socrates in his apology told the Athenians, I embrace and love you, O Athenians, and yet I will obey God rather than you. This the apostles had formerly asserted, chap. iv. 19.

30 The God of our fathers raised up <sup>c ch. 2. 13, 15, & 22. 14. d ch. 10. 39. & 13. 28. Gal. 3. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 24.</sup> Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

The God of our fathers; this is the rather mentioned by the apostle, that they might not think our Saviour, or they his ministers, preached any other God unto them, but him whom they had worshipped from their forefathers. Hanged on a tree; a tree, or wood, which is rather mentioned than a cross, that the allusion to Deut. xxi. 23 might be more full, where he that is hanged on a tree is accursed; and in that Christ was made a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13.

31 Him hath God exalted with his <sup>e ch. 2. 35, 36. Phil. 2. 9. Heb. 2. 10. & 12. 2. f ch. 3. 15. g Matt. 1. 21. Luke 24. 47. ch. 3. 26. & 13. 38. Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 11.</sup> right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, <sup>h ch. 2. 10. i John 15. 26, 27.</sup> for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

Him hath God exalted with his right hand: see chap. ii. 33. A Prince; to conquer and subdue all his enemies, to defend and protect his subjects. A Saviour; to save from sin, according to his name, Jesus, Matt. i. 21; viz. from the condemnation that is due unto it, and the pollution that is acquired by it. To give repentance; repentance is the gift of God; and nothing does more avail with us to repent, than the loss of Christ, (his bitter suffering and death,) by whom the world is crucified unto us, Gal. vi. 14: and if repentance includes newness of life, (as it does,) who would not walk in that way which our blessed Lord hath recommended, and in which only we can enjoy him; that doing as he did, we may come at last to be where he is? And forgiveness of sins, which never fails to accompany true repentance, and is therefore also called repentance unto life, chap. xi. 18.

32 And we are his witnesses of these <sup>i John 15. 26, 27.</sup> things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, <sup>k ch. 2. 4. & 10. 44.</sup> whom God hath given to them that obey him.

We are his witnesses; they refuse not to bear their testimony for Christ, who witnessed a good profession for us. So is also the Holy Ghost; the Holy Ghost does witness, 1. By the apostles; through his grace and strength they bear their record. 2. By all the miracles that were wrought, for they were only done by his power. 3. By enabling any to believe these things; which belief is his work. 4. Not to say that the Holy Ghost was a witness of the things concerning Christ at his baptism, and the several attestations he gave, saying, This is my beloved Son, Matt. iii. 17. Obeys him; some read, believe in him, which is to the same purpose; for there is no true repentance where there is no faith; nor no saving faith where there is no repentance and amendment.

1 ch. 2. 37. & 7. 54. 33 ¶ When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

They were cut to the heart; they grinned with their teeth, visibly showing the rage and fury that was within them, by which they were asawn and divided asunder; malice and rage being a grievous torment to the cruel and malicious, ὁ γὰρ μέγας πόνος το μὴ ζῆν καλῶς.

m ch. 22. 3. 34 Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

A Pharisee; this sect was accounted more mild than the Sadducees. Named Gamaliel; it is thought that this man was the same at whose feet Paul sat, chap. xxii. 3: that he was the instructor to Barnabas and St. Stephen, with many other stories concerning him, are doubtful; howsoever, God made use of him, though as yet an enemy to his church and people, to plead for and protect them to his power. God can effect any thing without or against means, and suddenly to make such as were against him to be for him and his truth. Commanded to put the apostles forth; that they might consult amongst themselves what to do with them: thus chap. iv. 15.

35 And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

A wise and good caution; for he that injures another brings the worse mischief upon himself, both in the sense of having done evil, and in being exposed to the revenging hand of God, whose property vengeance is, Heb. x. 30.

36 For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

Before these days; probably under the reign of Augustus, as he whom Josephus mentions was another under the reign of Claudius. Theudas; some suppose it a contracted name of Theodorus, as Demas is thought to be of Demetrius; though others think it to be of a Hebrew original.

37 After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

Judas of Galilee; whether this was the same Judas who was called Gaulonite, from the place of his birth, a town in or near Galilee, and Galileus, from the province itself in which he was born, it is not so material to discuss, Josephus makes mention of two of this name. The taxing; setting down all their names at the command of the Roman emperor, whereby, 1. They professed themselves to be his subjects. 2. They paid him a certain rate, in token of subjection, for every head, as poll-money. 3. By this means he knew the number of his subjects, and the strength or weakness of every province. This was another tax than that mentioned Luke ii. 2, which is there called the first.

38 And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

And now I say unto you; he undertakes to advise them what they should do in the present case. Refrain from these men; have nothing to do with them, as Pilate's wife advised him concerning our Saviour, Matt. xxvii. 19. GamalieI interposes, partly out of his moderate and mild disposition; partly out of fear, lest if they slew the apostles they might incense the Romans, who were very jealous of their authority, and had taken away the power of capital punishments from the Jews. For if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought; this argument, or dilemma, which Gamaliel uses for the sparing of the apostles, is of force either way; as that question our Saviour propounds concerning the baptism of John, Matt. xxi. 25. This first part is evident, for that building must needs fall which is built upon the sand, Matt. vii. 27.

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

The other part of the dilemma. The counsel of the Lord, that shall stand, Prov. xix. 21; Isa. xlv. 10; and it must needs be so, for all power is his, in whom we live and move, chap. xvii. 28. Fight against God; they who afflict and contend with his people unjustly, though they little think so, set themselves against God, who will overcome at the last, and triumph over his and his people's enemies.

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

To him they agreed; they yielded to his reason and argument, being persuaded and convinced by it. Beaten them; this was what our Saviour had foretold them, Matt. x. 17; and thus the husbandmen took the householder's servants and beat them, Matt. xxi. 35. They had power yet left them by the Romans to punish offenders in their synagogues, but not capitally nor publicly. In this they left the good advice of Gamaliel, who had warned them not to fight against God.

41 ¶ And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

Rejoicing; it argued full persuasion of the truth, and great resolution to abide by it, that they could account so foul a disgrace for Christ's sake to be an honour. That they were counted worthy to suffer; it is a condescension and favour, when God uses any to give testimony unto his truth, although it be by their suffering: Phil. i. 29, Unto you it is given, not only to believe, but to suffer; as if to suffer for Christ were as great, if not a greater gift than to believe in him. Shame; scourging being a servile and disgraceful punishment. For his name; Christ's name, or for Christ's sake, to assert his truth, &c.: some do not read the pronoun, but the name, put absolutely for God, as was usual amongst the Jews, out of reverence to God's name, lest they should profane it.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

This is the same with what we read Acts xx. 20, publicly, and from house to house; that is, in the temple, and public places, they preached unto the Jews; and in more private places, (or houses,) where they saw it needful; unto such they conversed with. They visited their flock, and instructed, exhorted, comforted them as their condition required. See the power of the grace of God; these were the men who forsook Christ when the soldiers came to apprehend him, they durst not be seen in his company; yet now they profess his name, and abide by their profession, though they are derided and beaten for it.

CHAP. VI

The apostles, that the poor might not be neglected, recommit, 1—4, and with the church's consent ordain, seven chosen men, deacons, 5. 6. The word of God prevailed, 7. Stephen, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, confuting those with whom he disputed, is brought before the council, and by suborned evidence falsely accused of blasphemy against the law and the temple, 8—15.

n Prov. 21. 30. 1a. & 10. Matt. 15. 13.

Or, believed.

The third Year before the Account entitl'd Anno Domini.

o Luke 21. 15. 1 Cor. 1. 25. p ch. 7. 51. & 8. 5. & 23. 9.

q ch. 4. 18. Matt. 10. 17. & 23. 34. Mark 13. 9.

r Mat. 5. 12. Rom. 5. 3. 2 Cor. 12. 10. Phil. 1. 29. Heb. 10. 34. Jam. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 13. 16.

t ch. 2. 46. u ch. 4. 20. 22.

a ch. 2. 41.
b ch. 4. 6. 5.
14. & ver. 7.
c ch. 9. 29.
& 11. 20.

AND in those days, <sup>a</sup> when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the <sup>b</sup> Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected <sup>c</sup> in the daily ministration.

Grecians; these were not such as are elsewhere called Greeks, either as being of that nation, or more generally taken for all Gentiles at large; but they were (as to their authority) Jews, and descended from such of them who, in several national calamities, were forced (or chose) to leave their country, and fly to Alexandria, and divers other places; yet kept themselves unmixed with other nations, retaining the knowledge of God, and coming to worship upon the solemn feasts; only, disusing the Hebrew language, they were more acquainted with the Greek tongue, (then commonly spoken every where,) and used the Holy Scripture translated into that language, which made them the rather called Hellenists or Grecians. Their widows were neglected in the daily ministration; they were not taken, as others, into the college, or number of widows, who in that time had some care of the poor; or rather, because they were not so largely allowed, or carefully looked after; for those that sold their goods, being Hebrews, they might not be so tender over the Hellenists, whose estates laying farther off, could not so readily be sold for the relief of themselves or others.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, <sup>d</sup> It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables.

The twelve; for such was their number now again, Matthias having supplied the place of Judas; this is that blessed number, or the root of it, which God hath so much magnified. The word of God; preaching of the word, and other duties belonging to it. Serve tables; either providing for the agape and love-feasts, or distributing to the necessities whereby they might be fed, and their tables provided.

3 Wherefore, brethren, <sup>e</sup> look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

Look ye out among you seven men; as carefully and circumspectly as ye would in any cases of your own concerns. Of honest report; a good direction, that obliges to this day, in all elections of any for the service of God and his church. Full of the Holy Ghost; of the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, which were not bestowed on the apostles only. And wisdom; or prudence, and skill in the word of God, which only is able to make a man wise unto salvation, 2 Tim. iii. 15.

4 But we <sup>f</sup> will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

We will give ourselves continually; we will stick close, and with perseverance, to this work. To prayer, and to the ministry of the word; the two great employments of a minister of Jesus Christ; to pray unto God for the people, and to speak unto the people from the Lord: these, though great businesses, they durst not delegate from themselves unto others to perform for them.

5 ¶ And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, <sup>g</sup> a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and <sup>h</sup> Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and <sup>i</sup> Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

All these being Greek names, it is likely they were all Hellenists, and descended from Hebrew parents, but born in foreign countries; or amongst the Jews they might have other names, which St. Luke, writing this history, translated into Greek. A proselyte of Antioch: see chap. ii. 10.

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and

<sup>k</sup> when they had prayed, <sup>l</sup> they laid their hands on them.

When they had prayed; prayer is the salt which seasoneth and sanctifieth all things. They laid their hands on them; a rite used in the church of old, 1. In their sacrifices, Exod. xxix. 15; 2. In their blessings, Gen. xlviii. 14; 3. In their designations unto a charge or office; thus Moses on Joshua, Numb. xxvii. 18; and from thence it was more easily derived unto the gospel church; our Saviour blessing thus the children which were brought unto him, Matt. xix. 13; and thus also were ministers ordained in the primitive times, 1 Tim. v. 22.

7 And <sup>m</sup> the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company <sup>n</sup> of the Priests were obedient to the faith.

A great company of the priests; none so violent opposers of the gospel as these were (their interest in all likelihood, heightening their opposition); yet great is truth, especially the Spirit of truth, and did prevail; and though in itself the number might not be so great as to be called a great multitude, yet, considering who they were that were converted, it was very wonderful, and the few might pass for many. Were obedient to the faith; Christianity is not a bare speculation, but a practical religion; and we believe no more than we practise: Fac quod dicit et fides est, Aug.

8 And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

Full of faith and power; enabled to preach, dispute, do, and suffer all things through Christ. Did great wonders and miracles among the people; of whom he cured many; or, among the people, in that he did these wonders publicly.

9 ¶ Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

Certain of the synagogue; synagogues were as colleges in our universities, being used for instruction and learning; and were distinguished according to the persons that frequented them. Libertines; some think these were natives of a certain country in Africa, from whence they were so called; but more probably they were such as were manumitted or made free, (as the word is commonly used for such,) and in a middle condition between such as were free-born and such as were bond-slaves, and might desire to frequent with those of their own rank. Cyrenians, &c.; the Jews spake of no less than four hundred and eighty synagogues at Jerusalem; a vast number, and probably increased by them: though several places are called Cyrene, this (from whence they took their name) was in Africa in all likelihood, it being joined with that of the Alexandrians. So God pleased to sever the Hellenists, (or Jews by tradition,) for the Gentiles were not yet called, that they might all hear the gospel in the language they understood best.

10 And <sup>o</sup> they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

Not able to resist; they did oppose it, but ineffectually. The wisdom: The foolishness of God is wiser than men, 1 Cor. i. 25. What then is his wisdom, through which this holy man spake? The spirit; the Holy Ghost directing him, and putting a Divine power upon what he spake, according to the promise, Matt. x. 20.

11 ¶ Then they suborned men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God.

What these blasphemous words were, we have, ver. 14; which show, that the veil was yet over their hearts, and that they could not endure to hear, that the shadows must flee away when the sun is risen, and the types be abolished when the substance of the things typified is exhibited; for e Deut. 1. 13.

ch. 1. 21. &
16. 2.
1 Tim. 3. 7.

g ch. 11. 24.

h ch. 8. 5.
26. & 21. 8.
i Rev. 2. 6.
15.

k ch. 1. 24.
l ch. 6. 17. &
9. 17. & 13. 3.

1 Tim. 4. 14. & 5. 22. 2 Tim. 1. 6.

m ch. 12. 24.
& 19. 20.

n John 12. 42.

o Luke 21. 15. ch. 5. 39.
See Exod. 4. 12. Is. 54. 17.

p 1 Kings 21. 10. 13. Matt. 26. 59. 60.

this truth was all the blasphemy this holy martyr was guilty of.

12 And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the Scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

Being overcome by reason and arguments, they betake themselves to all the evil arts imaginable; they suborn witnesses against St. Stephen, as was done against Naboth, and (that we read of) never before; they make the people, and the number, (which is usually the worst,) on their side; then they complain of him to the priests, &c.: and lest any, or all these, should fail, they lay violent hands on him themselves. Sin goes on as a current, and never stops, unless an Almighty word be spoken unto it to go no further.

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law:

They mingled in their testimony false things with truths, as they who witnessed against our Saviour had done. St. Stephen might possibly have inculcated what our Saviour had foretold, Luke xix. 43, 44, and both have been very innocent; for neither of them spake with any abhorrence of, much less blasphemy against, the law or the temple; but in that the witnesses perverted and added to their words, they are deservedly branded as false witnesses. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, is a granted maxim in the case of witness-bearing.

14 <sup>q ch. 28. a</sup> For we have heard him say, that <sup>r Dan. 9. 25.</sup> this Jesus of Nazareth shall || destroy this || place, and shall change the || customs which Moses delivered us.

This place; that is, the temple. Jeremiah had foretold this long ago, and did escape, though very narrowly, Jer. xxvi. 12—16; Daniel had prophesied of the destruction both of the city and the sanctuary, Dan. ix. 26; and yet these were in great respect amongst them: and none could speak more plainly of the calling of the Gentiles than Malachi, chap. i. 11: and yet when the apostles came to apply these very things more home and close, they could not endure them.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

With an extraordinary lustre and radiancy, above what appears in men, whereby they might be distinguished, as Matt. xxviii. 2, 3, affecting the beholders with admiration; thus Moses's face did shine.

CHAP. VII

Stephen, called upon to answer the charge against him, relateth how God called Abraham, and gave him and his seed the land of Canaan by promise, 1—8: how Joseph was sold by his brethren, and Jacob with his family went down into Egypt, 9—16: how, when they were oppressed by the Egyptians, Moses was born, and sent to deliver Israel out of Egypt, 17—36: that this same Moses witnessed of Christ, received the law, and experienced the disobedience and idolatry of their forefathers, 37—43; who had the tabernacle of witness, till Solomon built the temple, 44—50. He reproacheth his hearers with imitating their fathers' rebellion against God, and persecution of his prophets, by having themselves murdered Christ, and transgressed the law they had received, 51—53. Stung with reproach, they stone him, looking up with faith unto God, and calling upon Jesus to receive his soul, and forgive his persecutors, 54—60.

THEN said the High Priest, Are these things so?

Then said the high priest; who was resolved to condemn any, right or wrong, that should profess Christ, as appears John ix. 22. Are these things so? that he might seem just, he gives him a kind of liberty to answer for himself; not to defend his doctrine, but to know out of his own mouth whether he preached it, or no.

<sup>a ch. 22. 1.</sup> 2 And he said, <sup>a</sup>Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran,

Brethren; to take away any prejudice they might have conceived against him, and to recommend, not his person so much as his doctrine to them, he calls them brethren; 1. As hoping in the same promises with them; 2. Observing the same law; 3. Worshipping the same God. Fathers; a word of respect; especially the elder amongst them, or his judges: thus the Roman senators were called fathers; and magistrates ought to be revered as the fathers of their country. The God of glory; who is also called, Psal. xxiv. 7, the King of glory; from whom all glory descends to angels or men. By this, and what follows, St. Stephen would show that he honoured the true God, and thought respectfully of the law, the temple, and the patriarchs, whom he was accused to contemn and disgrace. He names Abraham, because he was accounted the first father and patriarch of the Jews, and had the first clear promise that the Messiah should come of his seed. Mesopotamia is sometimes taken strictly for that country which lies betwixt the two rivers, Tigris and Euphrates, from whence it had its name; sometimes more largely, including Chaldea; and so it is taken here. Charran; a city of the Partians, in the borders of Mesopotamia, towards the land of Canaan.

3 And said unto him, <sup>b Gen. 12. 1.</sup> Get thee out of <sup>b</sup> thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall shew thee.

This command given unto Abraham we read of, Gen. xii. 1, 5, 6; and it is here the rather spoken of by St. Stephen, to prove that Abraham was in the favour of God, and did truly serve him, before he ever saw the land of Canaan, and before the ceremonial law was given by Moses, and, much more, before the temple was built; and therefore it could not be blasphemy in him to hold that God might be served without those ceremonies, and worshipped elsewhere than in Jerusalem. The land which I shall show thee; this was the glory of Abraham's faith, that it submitted absolutely to God, and enabled Abraham to go he knew not whither, Heb. xi. 8, for God did not so much as name the place he would have him go unto.

4 Then <sup>c Gen. 11. 31. & 12. 4, 5.</sup> came he out of the land of the Chaldæans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell.

Abraham had as great a love to his kindred and native country as others have; but he had a greater faith, which made him yield to God's call and command, and follow from place to place the will of God, who is said here to have removed Abraham, and does choose the inheritance and habitation for his people, Psal. xlvii. 4.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: <sup>d Gen. 12. 7. & 13. 15. & 15. 3, 18. & 17. 8. & 28. 3.</sup> yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

He gave him none inheritance in it; it is true that Abraham had a field, and the cave of Mach-pelah, Gen. xxiii. 9; but that was of no use to Abraham whilst alive, but to bury him in when dead; besides, it was not as an inheritance by God's gift, but it was purchased with his money. Not so much as to set his foot on; whereby the least parcel of ground is meant: hence St. Stephen would prove, that Abraham's happiness, and theirs too, if they rightly understood it, did not depend upon the enjoyment of that place and country. And to his seed after him; faith met with a double difficulty, not only Abraham must believe he should have all that country given him for an inheritance, in which he had not a foot of land, but he must also believe that it should be his seed's after him, whereas he had no children; but thus faith is the evidence of things not seen, Heb. xi. 1.

6 And God spake on this wise, <sup>e Gen. 15. 13, 16.</sup> That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into

<sup>f Ex. 12. 40.</sup> <sup>Gal. 3. 17.</sup> bondage, and entreat them evil <sup>four hundred years.</sup>

Should sojourn in a strange land, as men which dwell in houses that are not their own; which seem to contradict the promise mentioned in the foregoing verse; but it is only to make Abraham the more believe against hope in hope, as it is said, Rom. iv. 18: though there were never so many difficulties move, for what God hath promised faith would overcome them all. This very space of four hundred years is also mentioned, Gen. xv. 13; which is thus computed: from the birth of Isaac (the promised seed) to the birth of Jacob, sixty years; from Jacob's birth to his going into Egypt, one hundred and thirty years; from thence to their deliverance out of Egypt, two hundred and ten years; this period is accounted, Exod. xii. 40, 41, to be four hundred and thirty years; which also St. Paul reckons by, Gal. iii. 17; but then thirty years is added unto the account, being the space of time betwixt the first promise made unto Abraham of this seed, and the birth of Isaac, in whom the promise was to be fulfilled; St. Stephen here reckoning only from the birth of Isaac.

7 And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God: and after that shall they come forth, and <sup>g Ex. 3. 12.</sup> serve me in this place.

Will I judge, or punish; and so the Egyptians were punished, not by human means, but by Divine power, and with God's own immediate hand, and that in the fulness of time, the very night in which God's promise was to take effect: and therefore it is a night to be much observed, Exod. xii. 42, as showing, that the sabbath of his people, and the destruction of his enemies, slumber not, 2 Pet. ii. 3. Serve me in this place; in Mount Horeb. The reason why God delivers his people is, that they may serve him, as Luke i. 74, 75; and so long as God hath any work for them to do in this world, he will preserve and deliver them.

<sup>h Gen. 17.</sup> <sup>9, 10, 11.</sup> <sup>i Gen. 21. 2.</sup> <sup>3, 4.</sup> <sup>k Gen. 25. 24.</sup> <sup>l Gen. 29. 31.</sup> <sup>m Gen. 30. 5.</sup> <sup>n Gen. 35. 18.</sup> <sup>23.</sup> 8 And he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

He gave him, Abraham, of whom he was speaking, the covenant of circumcision; of which covenant, circumcision was the sign and seal, by which, on the part of Abraham and his seed, it was stipulated, that they should put off all carnal affections. Begat Isaac, after the promise: so that the promises were not given for Isaac's sake, but Isaac was given for the promise's sake; which made these things more fit to represent gospel grace, of which St. Stephen was preaching. The twelve patriarchs; the heads of the tribes, from whom they were denominated. Of this genealogy, see Matt. i. 1, 2, &c., and the history of it in Genesis.

<sup>m Gen. 37.</sup> <sup>4, 11, 28.</sup> <sup>16, 108, 17.</sup> <sup>n Gen. 39. 2.</sup> <sup>21, 23.</sup> 9 And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him,

Moved with envy; enraged: the holy martyr accommodates his apology so, as that they may yet have occasion to reflect on themselves; for as they had sold our Saviour unto strangers, so had their fathers sold Joseph. But God was with him, to favour and bless him; for God's presence brings all good along with it: with this he comforts himself and others, that it was not without example or precedent that God should be with such whom their persecutors could not endure.

<sup>c Gen. 41.</sup> <sup>27. & 42. 5.</sup> 10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

And delivered him out of all his afflictions; the effect of God's presence with him, which to his people is always in an especial manner, not only as he is with all other creatures, but as the soul is with the body, most effectually, so is God with them. And gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh: thus God brought Daniel into favour, Dan. i. 9, and hath all hearts in his hands.

<sup>p Gen. 41. 54.</sup> 11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

A dearth; this is mentioned, Gen. xli. 54, &c. And great affliction; as seldom any mischief comes alone, rapine and many diseases follow famine. Found no sustenance; any coarse diet, grass or herbs.

<sup>q Gen. 42. 1.</sup> 12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

The history is known, Gen. xlii. Our fathers; our progenitors, Jacob's sons, from whom we are descended.

<sup>r Gen. 45. 4.</sup> <sup>16.</sup> 13 And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

Upon their second coming into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 3, 4, 16, Joseph made himself known unto them. Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh; for the continuance of their sustenance, and fulfilling of what was foretold.

<sup>s Gen. 45. 9.</sup> <sup>t Gen. 46. 27.</sup> <sup>Deut. 10. 22.</sup> 14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

All his kindred; his affinity, and not consanguinity only, which may be the reason why, though in Gen. xlii. 26 it is said, that all the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt were threescore and six, (it being then added, they were all such as came out of his loins,) yet it is said they were seventy persons, Gen. xlii. 27, Jacob, Joseph, and Joseph's two sons (who were also of the promised seed) being added unto the number. In this account of St. Stephen, his sons' wives might be added, which make up seventy-five. There are other accounts of this difference; but it is not of any consequence as to faith and holy living, which are only necessary unto salvation: the wonderful increase to so many hundred thousands of men, besides children, spoken of, Exod. xii. 37, notwithstanding the barbarous cruelty of the Egyptians, is to be admired. Souls; the nobler and better part, by which they are numbered, and according unto which they are esteemed by God.

<sup>u Gen. 46. 5.</sup> <sup>w Gen. 48.</sup> <sup>33. Ex. 1. 6.</sup> 15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

Which St. Stephen puts them in mind of the rather, that he might insinuate, no country, nor place, nor temple, were so necessary, but that (notwithstanding they had none of them) their forefathers did live and die in the fear and favour of God, although in Egypt, out of the Promised Land, &c.

<sup>x Ex. 13. 19.</sup> <sup>Joel. 24. 32.</sup> <sup>y Gen. 23.</sup> <sup>16. & 35. 19.</sup> 16 And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

That they carried Joseph to bury him in Canaan, according to the oath he made them take, Gen. i. 25, is certain; and that this was desired to be done for him out of faith, Heb. xi. 22; but is not so certain (unless this place be so understood) that the rest of the patriarchs were so translated after their death: yet it is very likely; for, first, They had as much reason to desire it as Joseph had; they believed the same promises, and had an interest in that land as well as he. Secondly, Their posterity bore the same respect unto them that Joseph's family did to him. Thirdly, It seems alike reasonable, that none of those twelve heirs to the land of Canaan should be left in the land of bondage. This place is acknowledged to be most difficult, and the difficulties are better not to be mentioned than ill solved, which the nature of these notes (not to mention other reasons) might occasion: whosoever will consider the intended shortness of the story, with the usual idioms of the Hebrew language, from which it was deduced, may take this as a paraphrase upon the whole verse: And Jacob and our fathers died, and were removed to Sychem, and were laid in sepulchres, in that which Abraham bought for money, and in that which was bought of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem. Dr. Lightfoot, in locum.

<sup>g</sup> Gen. 15.
15. ver. 8.

17 But when <sup>a</sup>the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, <sup>b</sup>the people grew and multiplied in Egypt,

Of the promise; of the fulfilling of the promise, either of the increase of his seed, or of their deliverance out of bondage, for both were promised, Gen. xxii. 17; though at that very time there were the greatest endeavours to hinder either when God accomplished both.

18 Till another king arose, which knew not Joseph.

These words are taken from the Septuagint, Exod. i. 8.

19 The same dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, <sup>b</sup>so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

Pharaoh resolves to deal (as he thought) wisely, Exod. i. 10, and it is acknowledged that the Egyptians dealt subtilly with them, Psal. cv. 25. For they do not at once destroy them, which might have been hazardous, the Israelites being so numerous; neither could Egypt well spare at once so many inhabitants; (too great and sudden evacuations cause swoonings;) but they endeavour their ruin by degrees: 1. Wasting them by hard labours. 2. Commanding the midwives privately to kill their males. 3. Casting out, or exposing, any whom they found spared. Yet this people, attempted upon by so many secret and open means to bring them to destruction, God did preserve; and so he will his church, (which they did typify,) maugre all the endeavours the most potent malice can use against it.

<sup>c</sup> Ex. 2. 2.

20 <sup>a</sup>In which time Moses was born, and <sup>d</sup>was exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

Exceeding fair, or, fair to God; which though some understand of the inward beauty of the mind, (which is indeed the most admirable,) yet in this place there is no more to be understood by it, than the wonderful beauty of his body, which God bestowed in an extraordinary measure upon him, that it might be a means to attract the care and pity of Pharaoh's daughter, as it afterwards came to pass: besides, that which is eminent in any kind, is, by a Hebraism, said to be of God: upon this account Nineveh is called a city of God, Jonah iii. 3; and we read of Rachel's great wrestlings, or wrestlings of God, Gen. xxx. 8. Josephus says, that Moses was so beautiful, that all who passed by left the business they were about to gaze at him, Antiq. ii. 5.

<sup>e</sup> Ex. 2. 3,
-10.

21 And <sup>a</sup>when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

Was cast out; exposed and left, Exod. ii. 2, &c.; now was the time for God to take him up, as in Psal. xxvii. 10. Pharaoh's daughter, an enemy to God's Israel; yet God did make use of her to bring up and educate Moses, who was their deliverer, adopting him for her son, Exod. ii. 10, and giving him education accordingly.

22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.

Learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; the Egyptians were anciently famous for learning, especially in astronomy, and some other parts of philosophy. Mighty in words; he was eloquent. And in deeds; his deeds were equal to his words; he could do, as well as say, what became him.

<sup>f</sup> Ex. 2. 11,
12.

23 <sup>a</sup>And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

Forty years old; this age of Moses is not set down in his history, but they might have it by tradition, which is here confirmed unto us by the holy penman: these forty years Moses spent in Pharaoh's court. It came into his heart; it speaks these thoughts and resolutions to have been from God, that such a great courtier should so far debase himself; therefore this is deservedly attributed unto his faith, Heb. xi. 24, which is the gift of God, Eph. ii. 8.

24 And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

This fact of Moses some defend by the law of nature, which allows us to protect the innocent; but many things we know were done by an extraordinary warrant, which we are not to imitate; nor by our own authority to avenge ourselves or others.

25 <sup>a</sup>For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood not.

This they might have inferred, 1. From his extraordinary deliverance out of the Egyptians' hands, and out of the river, when young. 2. From his readiness to defend them: it was wonderful, that such a one as he was, and might have been, should mind them. 3. From the drawing near of the time of their deliverance, which they could not, without negligence, be wholly ignorant of. By his hand; by his means and ministry. But they understood not: stupidity is frequently charged upon this people: they then did not receive Moses, as these now would not receive Christ.

26 <sup>a</sup>And the next day he shewed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

He shewed himself; as one appointed by God to deliver them, which he had evidenced before. Would have set them at one again; with great earnestness, and as far as words could do, he compelled them. Saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; these words are not mentioned, Exod. ii. 13, but something otherwise than here; but the sense is here and there the same. Brethren, not so much being all descended from Abraham and the patriarchs; but in that they all worshipped one and the same God, which is the greatest obligation to concord and agreement that can be; and if one offence be given, or trespass committed, it obliges us as much to pass it by and pardon it: Forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy father, Gen. i. 17.

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, <sup>a</sup>Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

The injurious are most averse from peace, and one sin makes way for another. This was a causeless cavil, especially from such a one as had known what Moses had done, as an essay of his being the deliverer of God's Israel.

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou diddest the Egyptian yesterday?

He charges this great crime upon Moses, to hinder him from further reproving of him: though recrimination do not make him, or any other, more innocent; yet men ordinarily use it, as if it were some satisfaction to them that they are not wicked alone, but that others are as bad or worse: this better befits an Egyptian than an Israelite.

29 <sup>a</sup>Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

Then fled Moses; knowing that what he had done to the Egyptian would be discovered to Pharaoh, and his life in danger. The land of Madian; inhabited by the posterity of Midian, Abraham's son by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 1, 2. Moses was forty years in Egypt, forty years in Midian, with Jethro or Jether, who was called also Reuel, Exod. ii. 18, and Hobab, Numb. x. 29, and the other forty years in the wilderness, which make up the hundred and twenty years of his life, Deut. xxxiv. 7. This makes to St. Stephen's purpose, to prove that God is always with them that fear him, in what country or place soever; as he was with Abraham in Mesopotamia, and with his people in Egypt, so with Moses in Midian.

30 <sup>a</sup>And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.

Forty years; so long it pleased God to try Moses's faith, and his people's patience. Mount Sinai, in the desert of Arabia, where the law was afterwards delivered, Exod. xviii. 5; xix. 3. An angel; not a created, but the uncreated Angel; the Angel of the new covenant, as may be seen ver. 32, and by Moses putting off his shoes because the place was holy, Exod. iii. 2, 5; he is also in the 4th verse of that chapter called the Lord. God still appeared in such a manner as was most instructive to them he appeared to, and to us; as here in a flame of fire in a bush, to show that he was with his people in all their sufferings, and would so provide, that they should not be consumed by them; they might be purified, but should not be destroyed.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him,

He wondered at the sight; seeing the bush on a flame, and not consumed, contrary to the nature of devouring flames; that he might be convinced of God's presence, and made the more attentive to what God should say, and prepared to yield obedience unto it.

32 Saying, <sup>m</sup> I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

I am the God of thy fathers; that he might know from whom he had his commission, and by whom he was to be sent. The God of Abraham, &c.; mention is made of these, because God had made unto them the promise of delivering their posterity, which he was now about to do, the time being fully come. Moses trembled: all great admiration hath some fear joined with it: God's appearing, though in mercy, was ever full of terror and amazement; what will his appearing be, when he shall come in judgment to render vengeance! who then shall be able to abide?

33 <sup>n</sup> Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet: for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

Put off thy shoes; either out of reverence to the Divine presence, as Josh. v. 15, or that thereby he might show that he resigned himself wholly to God's will and disposal; as in Ruth iv. 7, the kinsman, by pulling off his shoe and giving it to Boaz, did resign all his right he might have had to Ruth and the inheritance. Holy ground, whilst God manifested his presence there.

34 <sup>o</sup> I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt.

I have seen, I have seen; seeing I have seen, I have attentively seen and considered; it is doubled to show the certainty of it: if earthly parents, especially, look after their children when weak, much more our heavenly Father. I have heard their groaning; though but sighs, and scarce framed into words. Am come down; spoken after the manner of men, according unto which God is said to come down unto any when he delivers them from their troubles, and to go from them when he leaves them in them: see Exod. iii. 7, 8, from which place, according to the reading of the Septuagint, these words are taken.

35 This Moses whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer <sup>p</sup> by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush.

A deliverer; or, a redeemer; but only as a type of Christ, in whom alone we have redemption through his blood, Eph. i. 7; as Moses by the blood of the paschal lamb brought forth and saved the people of Israel. The hands of the angel; the power of the angel; it was not Moses, but God, that wrought so great salvation.

36 <sup>q</sup> He brought them out, after that he had shewed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, and in the wilderness forty years.

After that he had showed wonders and signs: God could with the least word or motion of his will save his people; but he chooseth so to do his wonderful works, that they may be had in remembrance. In the Red sea; it is not agreed why it is so called; but this name of that sea is mentioned in profane authors. This whole verse, as divers others, refer to the history of it in Exodus, from the beginning to the 15th chapter.

37 ¶ This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; <sup>r</sup> him shall ye hear.

St. Stephen would show, that he was so far from speaking against Moses, as they falsely imagined, that he recommended none but him, whom Moses had so long before spoken of. A prophet; Christ the Messiah, and Head of the prophets: see chap. iii. 22. Him shall ye hear; or obey.

38 <sup>r</sup> This is he, that was in the Church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: <sup>s</sup> who received the lively oracles to give unto us:

In the church in the wilderness; or congregation; with the rest of the people in all their difficult journey. The angel; see ver. 30 of this chapter. The lively oracles; God's law and word is so called, as the only rule to walk by unto life, Deut. xxxii. 47: it is there said to be our life; and it is the only ordinary means of a spiritual and holy life, which it begets and preserves.

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt,

Their glory being in their fathers, St. Stephen reminds them that many of them rebelled against God and his servant Moses; as they (their posterity) now were rebellious against Christ, who came to save them, as Moses before had done; but from a greater bondage, and by more valuable means. In their hearts turned back again into Egypt; not so much towards that country, or food they had there, (garlick and onions,) as towards their idolatry and superstition; as in the following verse appears.

40 <sup>t</sup> Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

Make us gods; according to the Egyptians, who held that there were many gods, and divers degrees of gods; they therefore speak in the plural number. This Moses: though they confess the great deliverance wrought by Moses's means, yet how contemptibly do they speak of him! We wot not what is become of him: they could not but know that Moses was gone up into the mount unto God, at his command, and had not forgotten them, but had left Aaron and Hur to govern them; yet they soon forgot both God and Moses, notwithstanding the large and late experience they had of his wonders: this is left upon record against them, Psal. cvii. 13, 21.

41 <sup>u</sup> And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

They made a calf; in imitation of the Egyptians, who worshipped their god Apis in that, or the like form of an ox. The idol; the calf which they had made, which they could not be so sottish as to terminate their worship in, knowing that they themselves had made it, and it had not made them; yet they are for this charged to have committed idolatry, 1 Cor. x. 6, 7. Rejoiced; which joy they express by feasting, singing, and dancing, Exod. xxxii. 6. The works of their own hands; so this idol, and idols generally, are called, Psal. cxv. 4; cxxxv. 15; which is

<sup>s</sup> Ex. 14. 21,
<sup>t</sup> Ex. 16. 1,
<sup>u</sup> Ex. 16. 36.

<sup>u</sup> Deut. 18.
15, 18.
ch. 3. 22.

<sup>v</sup> Or,
as myself;
<sup>w</sup> Mat. 23. 5.

<sup>y</sup> Ex. 19. 3, 17.
<sup>z</sup> 1a. 63. 9.
<sup>a</sup> Gal. 3. 19.
<sup>b</sup> Heb. 2. 2.
<sup>c</sup> Ex. 21. 1.
<sup>d</sup> Deut. 3. 27,
31, & 38. 4.
<sup>e</sup> John 1. 17.
<sup>f</sup> Rom. 3. 2.

<sup>m</sup> Matt. 22.
<sup>n</sup> Heb. 11. 16.

<sup>n</sup> Ex. 3. 6.
<sup>o</sup> Josh. 5. 15.

<sup>o</sup> Ex. 3. 7.

<sup>p</sup> Ex. 14. 19.
<sup>q</sup> Num. 20. 16.

<sup>r</sup> Ex. 12. 41.
<sup>s</sup> & 23. 1.
<sup>t</sup> Ex. 7. &
8, & 9, & 10,
& 11, & 14. Ps. 106. 27.

<sup>d</sup> Deut. 9. 16.
<sup>e</sup> Ps. 106. 19.

enough to speak their emptiness and vanity ; vain man can make but vain gods.

42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven ; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness ?

Then God turned, from being as a Father to them, to be a Judge over them, to punish them ; whereas formerly he had blessed them. And gave them up ; this was indeed to deliver them to Satan ; God withholding his grace which they had abused, Rom. i. 24, 25, and giving them up, (to fall from one sin unto another,) though not positively, yet permissively. The host of heaven ; the angels are so called, Luke ii. 13 ; but it is rather here to be understood of the sun, moon, and stars, which are called so, Deut. xvii. 3 ; Isa. xl. 26. In the book of the prophets : the words here referred to are in Amos v. 25. It is said to be in the book, in the singular number, because the twelve small prophets are by the Jews mentioned but as one book. Have ye offered to me slain beasts, &c. : this positive question does vehemently deny that they had offered any sacrifices unto God whilst they were in the wilderness ; but at the same time they offered sacrifices unto idols ; for when they had corrupted God's worship, their sacrifices were as no sacrifices unto him, Isa. i. 11 ; xliii. 23.

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them : and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

Took up the tabernacle, on their shoulders, as they did the ark. Of Moloch ; the idol of the children of Ammon, which the Israelites were especially forbidden to worship, Lev. xviii. 21 ; xx. 2 ; yet they did ordinarily worship him, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3 ; Jer. vii. 31 ; and there was a high place built by Solomon for him, 1 Kings xi. 7. The tabernacle of Moloch was either a chest or press in which that idol was put, or the chapels into which the worshippers of Moloch were admitted, according to the quality of the offering which they brought. Which of the planets they intended to honour hereby, whether the sun, or Mars, or Saturn, it matters not so much ; any of these, or any other of their gods, might be called Moloch, taking the word appellatively. Remphan, in the place here cited, is called by the prophet, Chium ; which is one and the same idol in both places, the prophet calling it by its name then in use ; and St. Stephen, like unto the name the Septuagint had called it by : whether Saturn was intended by this, as some think, or Hercules, as others, it is not our present business to inquire. Figures ; images and representatives of the hosts of heaven, or of the planets. Beyond Babylon ; the prophet Amos saith, beyond Damascus, Amos v. 27 : here St. Stephen does not contradict the prophet, for they who were carried away beyond Babylon must needs be carried away beyond Damascus, as the ten captive tribes were, unto whom this was threatened.

I Or, who speak.
h Ex. 25. 40.
k 26. 30.
l Heb. 8. 5.

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

The tabernacle of witness ; called also the tabernacle of the congregation, Exod. xxxiii. 7, because about it on all solemn occasions the people assembled. Here it is called the tabernacle of witness, because God here testified or witnessed his glorious presence ; and especially because in it the ark of the covenant, the law, and the testimony were kept. According to the fashion that he had seen, Exod. xxv. 40 ; Heb. viii. 5. Moses was charged not to vary from the prescript ; God being jealous of his own appointments. Now this is the rather spoken of by St. Stephen, that he might prove that the place where God was worshipped in had varied, and therefore might also now be changed.

i Josh. 3. 14.
j Or, having received.

45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drove out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David ;

Jesus, or Joshua, it being the same name, as appears also, Heb. iv. 8, only Jesus is more according to the Greek use : Joshua was a type of Jesus, and agreed with him in his name, and in the reason of his name ; he having also saved the people, and brought them into the promised rest ; yet the difference is as great between them as betwixt the heavenly Canaan and the earthly. Before the face of our fathers ; they were not able to look upon an Israelite, whilst God was for them.

46 Who found favour before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.

Found favour before God ; as Luke i. 30. Desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob ; it was David's earnest request, that he might any ways glorify God, especially in his worship, and that he might know where the ark should rest, and where the temple was to be built, as Psalm cxxxii. declares throughout.

47 But Solomon built him an house ; a fixed and stable structure, not movable, as the tabernacle was.

48 Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands ; as saith the prophet,

This is also St. Paul's doctrine, chap. xvii. 24, which divers amongst the wiser heathens were persuaded of ; for God cannot be comprehended in any place, no, not where he is worshipped ; and therefore they did foolishly conceive that the worship of God was so tied to the temple, as if he himself had been included in it. In temples ; the primitive Christians abstained from calling the places of their assembling by the name of temples ; and were charged by their pagan enemies for having no altars, or temples, or images.

49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool : what house will ye build me ? saith the Lord : or what is the place of my rest ?

The place referred unto, is Isa. lxvi. 1. What house will ye build me, that shall be big enough for one so great as God is ? 1 Kings viii. 27.

50 Hath not my hand made all these things ? As appears in the history of the creation, Gen. i. 1. It is spoken unto our capacity after the manner of men, and implies that God is too great to stand in need of temples or offerings ; and that what worship he requires, is not for his own sake, for our righteousness cannot profit him ; but for man's sake, that he might be exercised in the duties of religion and devotion.

51 ¶ Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost : as your fathers did, so do ye.

Stiff-necked ; a metaphor taken from heifers that are unaccustomed to the yoke. Uncircumcised in heart ; such as had still depraved affections, which they ought to have put away rather than the foreskin of their flesh ; for they were commanded to circumcise their hearts, Deut. x. 16, which also God promised to do for his people, Deut. xxx. 6. And St. Paul was not the first who spake of a twofold circumcision, Rom. ii. 28, 29 ; but God looked always to the inward and spiritual part of his own ordinances, and men's observance of them. And ears ; such as were not so much as willing to hear and know their duty. Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost, speaking by his prophets and ministers, and exhorting to true and serious piety : by this St. Stephen would abate their glorying in circumcision, which they so much boasted of. As your fathers did, so do ye : thus the prophet Ezekiel, chap. xvi. 44, unto which may be here alluded, As is the mother, so is her daughter.

52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted ? and they have slain them which shewed before of the k Neh. 9. 24.

l Ps. 44. 2.
m 78. 56.
n ch. 12. 19.

o 1 Sam. 16.
p 1. 2. 5. 20.
q Ps. 68. 19.
r ch. 13. 22.
s 1 Kings 6.
t Ps. 132. 4, 5.

u 1 Sam. 6.

v 1 Chron. 17. 12.
w 2 Chron. 3. 1.

x 1 Kings 6.
y 27. 2 Chron. 2. 6. & 6. 18.
z ch. 17. 24.

aa Ps. 66. 1, 2.
ab Matt. 5. 34.
ac 35. & 23. 22.

ad q Ex. 32. 3.
ae 33. 3.
af Is. 48. 4.
ag r Lev. 26. 41.
ah Deut. 10. 16.
ai Jer. 4. 4. &
aj s. 10. & 9. 26.
ak Esek. 44. 5.

al s Chron. 36. 16.
am Mat. 21. 35.
an & 23. 34. 37.
ao i Thes. 2. 15.

1 ch. 2. 14. coming of 'the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? this is the rather said to stain all their glory from succession, and their ancestors, Matt. v. 12; xxiii. 31, 37. The Just One; our Saviour deservedly, and by way of eminence, is so called; as not only being himself just, and fulfilling all righteousness, but being The Lord our Righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6, and is of God made unto us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 30. This word is used in a forensic sense, and is the same with innocent, and opposite to guilty; whereby St. Stephen vindicates our Saviour, notwithstanding the unjust sentence passed here upon him. The betrayers, in hiring Judas, and murderers, in that they excited Pilate to condemn him, and abetted the soldiers and others in executing of him.

53 "Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.

The disposition of angels; or ministry of angels; the commandments were published from them ministerially; or the Son of God, (called an Angel, ver. 35,) accompanied with the militia of heaven, (for it is a military metaphor,) did in the midst of that glorious retinue give the law, Deut. xxxiii. 2; Psal. lxxviii. 8; Gal. iii. 13, 19. And have not kept it; they transgressed the law, though so gloriously delivered by angels; and therefore it was no wonder if they despised the gospel, that was published by so mean and contemptible ministers.

54 ¶ "When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth.

See chap. v. 33. They were cut to the heart; they were angry to madness. They gnashed on him with their teeth; gnashing of teeth is the curse of the damned, Matt. viii. 12, which men by their sins do prepare for. This corrosive was applied by a skilful hand, would they have endured the cure.

55 But he, 'being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up stedfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God,

Full of the Holy Ghost; filled with grace suitable to his present trial and suffering. The glory of God; the glorious God, or so much of the throne and glory of God as mortal eyes are capable for to see. Jesus standing on the right hand of God; being justified by God, though condemned by Pilate; and standing ready to assist and comfort all that should suffer for his sake.

56 And said, Behold, 'I see the heavens opened, and the "Son of man standing on the right hand of God.

I see the heavens opened; God not suffering any distance to hinder this refreshing sight. The Son of man; so Christ is frequently called; and St. Stephen would by this inform them, how vain they were in striving against Christ or his truth. Standing on the right hand of God, as an Advocate, Soldier, or Captain for Stephen; or as one showing the prize unto him, which he was now running for, and had need to be encouraged with the sight of. But it seems strange that St. Stephen should tell the Jews of this heavenly vision, being they did not see it, although in the same place with him; but this he might do. 1. Out of his ardent love to Christ, desiring to magnify him. 2. To invite his enemies to repentance, now heaven was opened, and Christ's arms were stretched out to receive them. 3. To hinder any from being afraid to own Christ and his truths. 4. To terrify the most obdurate amongst them, by showing them their Judge, and minding them of his avenger. 5. That he might assert himself to be an eye-witness of Christ's being risen again from the dead, which they made such difficulty to believe.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord,

They cried out; the rabble, or multitude. Stopped their ears; that they might show their great detestation of what was said, and might not contract any guilt from it. And ran upon him with one accord: this violence and fury was both against the law of God and the law of the land; and the number of zealots (there were some amongst that people eminently so called) provoked the Romans to destroy both city and temple.

58 And <sup>b</sup>cast him out of the city, <sup>c</sup>and stoned him: and <sup>d</sup>the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

Cast him out of the city; that the city might not be polluted with his blasphemy. Stoned him; this punishment was appointed for such as seduced them to the worship of false gods, Deut. xiii. 6, 10; and though all power of capital punishment was taken from them, as they themselves confess, John xviii. 31, yet what will not popular rage attempt? The witnesses; who were by the law to cast the first stones, Deut. xvii. 7, whereby the witnesses, if they had not testified true, did take upon themselves the guilt of the blood that was spilt, and freed the people, who only followed them in the execution. Laid down their clothes; their upper garments, that they might carry and cast down the heavier stones.

59 And they stoned Stephen, <sup>e</sup>calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, <sup>f</sup>receive my spirit.

Stephen called upon him whom he saw standing, and that was our Saviour. My spirit; or, my soul: thus our Saviour commended his spirit into his Father's hands, Luke xxiii. 46; and this disciple imitates his Master, and comforts himself with this, that to be sure his soul should be safe, whatever became of his body.

60 And he <sup>g</sup>kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, <sup>h</sup>Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.

He kneeled down; a posture used in most earnest prayers; and if so, he prayed at least as earnestly for his enemies as for himself, he praying for them kneeling, and for himself standing. Lay not this sin to their charge; do not weigh it, reckon or impute it, that it may not remain against them, to hinder their conversion. This our Saviour commanded, Matt. v. 44, this he practised, Luke xxiii. 34; and whosoever can thus pray for his enemies, and do good for evil, hath a great evidence that the Spirit of Christ is in him. He fell asleep; he died; his death being thus expressed, in that, 1. He died quietly, as one fallen into a sleep. 2. Because of his certain hope of the resurrection. 3. As easily to be raised again by Christ, as one that sleeps is to be awaked by us. 4. It is an ordinary Hebraism to express death by sleep; which made St. Luke use it amongst them, with whom it was frequently thus expressed.

CHAP. VIII

The disciples being dispersed by reason of a great persecution at Jerusalem, a church is planted by Philip in Samaria, 1—8. Simon the sorcerer is baptized, with many others, 9—13. Peter and John are sent thither, who by prayer and imposition of hands give the Holy Ghost, 14—17. Simon offereth money for the like power, is sharply reproved by Peter for his wickedness and hypocrisy, and admonished to repent: the apostles return to Jerusalem, having preached the word, 18—25. Philip is sent by an angel to convert and baptize an Ethiopian eunuch, 26—40.

AND <sup>a</sup>Saul was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and <sup>b</sup>they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria, except the apostles.

Consenting unto his death; well-pleased with it, (as the b 1 Kings 21. 12.

Luke 4. 29.
Heb. 13. 12. c Lev. 24. 16.
d Deut. 13. 9, 10, & 17.
e ch. 5. 1. & 22. 20.

f ch. 2. 14.
g ch. 2. 40.
h Mat. 5. 44.
i Luke 6. 28.
j 23. 34.

k Ps. 31. 5.
l Luke 23. 46.

m 1. 1.
n Matt. 3. 16.
o ch. 10. 17.
p Dan. 7. 13.

q A. D. 34.
r ch. 7. 58.
s 22. 20.

t ch. 11. 19.

word implies,) and did approve it in thought, word, and deed, Acts xxii. 4, 20; which is here noted in the beginning of the narrative concerning this great apostle, that we might consider olos ἐξ οὐ, what a great change the grace of God did make; which was by him, and is by us the more to be acknowledged and magnified. A great persecution against the church; not, as heretofore, against the apostles only; but now it was against the whole church. All scattered abroad; the multitude of believers, at least as many as could flee; which was allowed, or rather commanded, Matt. x. 23, when they were persecuted in one city, to flee unto another; especially such as were teachers amongst them (besides the apostles) were forced to remove from Jerusalem, and by this means did publish the gospel in all places whither they came; so that what was intended for the hinderance, God did overrule towards the furtherance, of the gospel; as he did afterwards, Phil. i. 12, and still does, and ever will do. Except the apostles; who were commanded to stay at Jerusalem, chap. i. 4; there they were to make their beginning, Luke xxiv. 47, and from thence to proceed unto other parts, Isa. ii. 3; and whilst God had any work for them to do at Jerusalem, they knew that God could and would defend and maintain them in the midst of their enemies, as he had done the bush in the fire, Exod. iii. 3.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

c Gen. 23. 2.
& 50. 10.
2 Sam. 3. 31.

It was an argument that they were devout (religious) indeed, that they durst, amongst such a multitude of persecutors and furious zealots, own their esteem for St. Stephen. It was piacular amongst the Jews, to touch the dead corpse of such a one as was put to death for blasphemy; and these perform such funeral rites for him, as were used for such only as were of note and eminency. Made great lamentation over him; as the Jews were wont to do at the funeral, especially of eminent persons: thus it was done at Jacob's interment, Gen. l. 10; and thus had been done more lately at Lazarus's funeral, John xi., even by our Saviour himself, ver. 35: which lamentation was the greater, because of the church's loss at such a time.

3 As for Saul, he made havock of the Church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison.

d ch. 7. 58.
& 9. 1. 13.
21. & 22. 4.
& 28. 10, 11.
1 Cor. 15. 9.
Gal. 1. 12.
Phil. 3. 6.
1 Tim. 1. 13.

He made havock of the church; Saul was a degree beyond the ordinary sort of persecutors, and was, as he does acknowledge himself, eminently injurious, 1 Tim. i. 13. Entering into every house; house after house, sparing none. Haling men and women; as by the hair of their heads. Committed them to prison; this to be sure the Jews had yet retained power from the Romans to do. All this is but as a foil, to illustrate more the riches of God's mercy towards Saul.

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word.

e Mat. 10. 23.
ch. 11. 12.

Now the partition-wall was about to be broken down, and the Gentiles to be taken into the pale of the church, God provides this strange means towards it. The disciples are forced to flee for their lives out of Jerusalem, and have an opportunity to preach Christ and the gospel wheresoever they came: thus God can make light to come out of darkness, and makes Japheth to dwell in the tents of Shem, Gen. ix. 27.

f ch. 6. 5.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

Philip; not the apostle, but the deacon of that name; for the apostles remained at Jerusalem, as ver. 1. Samaria is a name both of a city and a country, so called from the chief city, 1 Kings xvi. 24: here it is taken for that city, or at least a city in that country. Preached Christ; the doctrine of Christ, his miraculous birth, holy life and death, and glorious resurrection and ascension, together with remission of sins only by faith in his name, &c.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

Gave heed; a good preparation towards their conversion, seeing faith cometh by hearing, Rom. x. 17. Hearing and seeing the miracles which he did; these miracles were as so many evidences of the truth he spake, by which he showed God's authority for what he said.

7 For <sup>g</sup>unclean spirits, crying with <sup>h</sup>loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

g Mark 16.
17.

Unclean spirits, crying with loud voice; this is frequently mentioned, as Matt. viii. 29; Mark i. 26; iii. 11; v. 8; Luke iv. 41, to show how loth these evil spirits are to be forbid and kept from tormenting and destroying of us; and they are called unclean spirits, because they delight in sin, and instigate men unto it, which is spiritual uncleanness, and defile the soul. Taken with palsies, and other diseases and infirmities: this was promised, Mark xvi. 17, 18, that they which believe should cure in Christ's name, or by his power.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

Great joy; not only for the cures wrought upon their bodies, but much more for the word of reconciliation and salvation preached unto their souls: joy in the Holy Ghost, is one of the effects of the kingdom of God, Rom. xiv. 17. In that city; the despised Samaria rejoices, and the formerly beloved city of Jerusalem repines, at the gospel; such strange alterations does the free grace of God make.

9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city <sup>h</sup>used sorcery, and bewitched the <sup>i</sup>people of Samaria, <sup>j</sup>giving out that himself was some great one:

h ch. 13. 6.

i ch. 5. 26.

Used sorcery; magical enchantments, as a wizard. Bewitched the people; caused them, as men in an ecstasy, to be amazed at and afraid of him. Some great one; as if he had been God, or at least had some great favour with him, and had received some extraordinary power from him. Ecclesiastical histories speak much of him, and tell us that he had a statue set up in Rome for him, inscribed, To Simon the holy God.

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

From the least to the greatest; showing how general their mis-persuasion was; and no condition is exempt from the grossest mistakes, if not prevented by the grace of God. This man is the great power of God; it is said of this Simon, that he gave out himself to be that god, which any nation held to be the chiefest; and that he was the Messias of the Jews, and the God of the Gentiles.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.

They had regard; they acquiesced in what he said, and yielded obedience unto it; not only attending to his words with their ears, but with their hearts: so true is that which our Saviour says, John v. 43, If any man come in his own name, him will ye receive. These Samaritans shall rise up in judgment against most men, who do not thus regard what was said by Christ, and such as he hath sent. Bewitched them; made them as out of their wits; they were not themselves, and could not act their reason. With sorceries; such wonders as by the permission of God, and Satan's power, he did.

12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things <sup>k</sup>concerning the <sup>l</sup>kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

k ch. 1. 3.

When they believed; before they were baptized, being adult and strangers from the covenant, they must first evidence their right unto it, and profess their faith in Christ, and testify their conversation. Concerning the kingdom of God; the kingdom of grace, and the kingdom of his glory, which is one and the same, being begun here, but consummated in heaven hereafter. Both men and women; women under the gospel are as capable of this seal of the covenant as men.

13 Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the †miracles and signs which were done.

Simon himself believed; Simon believed with an historical faith, that it was indeed true, that our Saviour had done miracles, and did rise from the dead; but his faith, to be sure, was dead all the while; neither did he believe with his heart, or purpose to live according to the law of Christ, which is the life of faith. He continued with Philip; kept him constantly company, and was amongst the forwardest of the professors of Christ's faith. And wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done; thus the magicians of Egypt were brought to acknowledge the finger of God, Exod. viii. 19, although their hearts were hardened.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John:

These were sent that they might further confirm the doctrine which Philip had preached amongst the Samaritans, and by apostolical authority constitute a church in Samaria.

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, <sup>1</sup>that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

They; Peter and John. Prayed for them; in this particular they did not pray for all that believed, amongst whom there were several women, ver. 12. That they might receive the Holy Ghost; those extraordinary gifts of tongues, of prophesying, of working miracles, &c. See chap. x. 45.

16 (For <sup>as</sup> yet he was fallen upon none of them: only <sup>they</sup> were baptized in <sup>the</sup> name of the Lord Jesus.)

For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; by which it is plain that the Holy Ghost as the author of saving grace, is not here meant, for so he was fallen upon all them that did believe, for faith is the gift of God; but he was not yet bestowed upon them as the author of those extraordinary gifts mentioned chap. ii. 4. They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus: 1. They were baptized by his authority and commission, Matt. xxviii. 19. 2. By baptism they now belong unto and are united with him; they are baptized unto Jesus Christ, Rom. vi. 3.

17 Then <sup>laid</sup> they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

That this laying on of the hands of the apostles was not intended here as any rite whereby the apostles did confirm some, or ordain others, seems evident from the context. They received the Holy Ghost; the power of speaking with tongues, and working of miracles; which throughout this book is so often spoken of in this acceptance.

18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money,

The Holy Ghost; those extraordinary gifts before mentioned; for this appeared visibly and audibly, and by this indeed was signified the great change God's Spirit makes where he comes. He offered them money; this notorious hypocrite values these outward gifts; how much more valuable are the inward and spiritual gifts of God!

19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

Such an extraordinary power of working miracles he did not desire that he might glorify God, or confirm the truths of the gospel (now professed by him); but out of an insatiable desire of gain, and ambition to keep up his reputation, seeing how the apostles had done beyond what he was able to do.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because <sup>1</sup>thou hast thought that <sup>the</sup> gift of God may be purchased with money.

Thy money perish with thee; a formal execration or curse, not only on his money, but also upon Simon himself; but always to be conditional, viz. unless he repented. Thou hast thought: our hearts are to be watched over; our thoughts may be exceeding sinful, as here, which made his words or desires to be so ill taken.

21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

Neither part nor lot in this matter; no inheritance or share in such a thing as this, to wit, either in the receiving or conferring the Holy Ghost; or in that eternal life which we preach; thou hast no part in it, neither art thou fit to be a minister of it. Thy heart is not right in the sight of God: the apostle had the gift of discerning of spirits, which is mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 10; which might cause the execration in the foregoing verse, and in divers other places of Scripture, 2 Tim. iv. 14.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, <sup>if</sup> perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

The only remedy and help in his (otherwise) desperate case. This is not spoken as if it were doubtful whether true repentance should obtain pardon, but whether Simon Magus's repentance were true. Repentance is a condition under which God proposeth our pardon and forgiveness, but it is far from being the cause of it.

23 For I perceive that thou art in <sup>the</sup> gall of bitterness, and <sup>in</sup> the bond of iniquity.

The gall of bitterness; the same with gall and wormwood, Deut. xxix. 18: or gall and bitterness; signifying a very bad constitution and disposition of soul or mind, such as may be compared unto that meat which the gall of any creature hath corrupted. And for Simon Magus to be in the gall of bitterness, is yet worse than to have the gall of bitterness in him; as to be born in sin, which the Pharisees upbraided the blind man with, John xi. 34, denotes more intended thereby than that he had sin from his birth in him: thus David bewails that he was shapen in iniquity, Psal. li. 5; and thus may those expressions of St. Paul be understood, of being in the flesh, and being in the Spirit, Rom. viii. 9. This also shows (if any sensible or outward thing could show it) what a bitter and poisonous thing sin is, no gall so bitter, no poison so deadly. The bond of iniquity; either the judgment St. Peter had threatened to deter him from sin was this bond, or his sin itself might be rather so called: thus we read of the bands of wickedness, Isa. lviii. 6. One sin is twisted with another, hard to be severed or broken, and draws on judgment powerfully.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, <sup>Pray</sup> ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

Simon Magus was convinced that he was indeed such as the apostles had spoken him to be; and knowing them to be powerful with God, he desires this of them. He feigns himself to be a true penitent, being terrified with the threatening of St. Peter, ver. 20, and probably fearing the punishment of Ananias and Sapphira might befall him, which it is likely he had heard of.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the Gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

Not only in the chief city, but in the smallest villages, these great apostles spend their pains; for so it was promised unto them that they should receive power to do, chap. i. 8.

26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south

<sup>1</sup> Matt. 10. a <sup>1</sup> See 2 Kings
5. 16.
<sup>1</sup> ch. 2. 3a.
<sup>1</sup> & 10. 45.
<sup>1</sup> & 11. 17.

† Gr. signs and great miracles.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 2. 38.

m ch. 19. 2.
n Mat. 28. 19.
ch. 2. 38.
o ch. 19. 48.
& 19. 5.

p ch. 6. 6.
& 19. 6.
Heb. 6. 2.

<sup>1</sup> Dan. 4. 27.
<sup>2</sup> Tim. 2. 25.

<sup>1</sup> Heb. 12. 15.

u Gen. 20. 7.
17. Ex. 8. 8.
Num. 21. 7.
1 Kin. 13. 6.
Job 42. 8.
Jam. 5. 16.

unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.

Some speak of two Gazas, one distinguished from the other by this epithet of desert; but rather there were two ways unto one and the same Gaza, and that it was not the city but the way unto it, which is called desert; by which difference, here mentioned, the angel admonishes Philip not to go the ordinary road, but the more unusual road over the mountains, which was rarely travelled over, but was now necessary to be gone in to meet with the eunuch. God telleth our wanderings, and ordereth our steps.

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, <sup>x Zeph. 3. 10.</sup> a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and <sup>y John 12. 20.</sup> had come to Jerusalem for to worship,

A man of Ethiopia: the Ethiopians were the most despicable unto the Jews; and Homer calls them, ἰσχυροὺ ἀνδρῶν; but God would now show that there is no difference of nations with him; but in every nation, he that worketh righteousness shall be accepted, chap. x. 35. An eunuch; in great esteem in courts, especially to attend on queens, to avoid all suspicion: here that prophecy was fulfilled, Isa. lvi. 4, 5: though both in the Hebrew and (anciently) in the Greek tongue, a eunuch signified more largely, viz. any attendant in the chamber. Candace; a name common to the queens of that country; as all the kings of Egypt were called Pharaohs, and the emperors of Germany are called Cæsars. Comes to Jerusalem for to worship; being a proselyte, he had been to worship God in that solemn festival of the passover.

28 Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

He had some knowledge of the true God, whom he came to worship, and he endeavours after more: and to him that thus hath, shall be given; and they that thus seek, shall find. God will rather work a miracle, than that any that sincerely desire and faithfully endeavour to know him, or his will, should be disappointed.

29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

The Spirit said, either by the ministry of an angel, as ver. 26, or by inspiration immediately by himself. Go near; so near that you may speak with him that sits in it. Join thyself to this chariot; stick close unto it, and leave it not.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

Philip ran thither to him; hastening to obey the Divine command, and coveting to gain a soul. Heard him read the prophet Esaias, with a loud voice, it is like, to instruct some of his attendants. Understandest thou what thou readest? without understanding our reading is but the tinkling of a cymbal.

31 And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

A wonderful modesty and humility in so great a man: he takes well Philip's interposing, and questioning with him; he acknowledges his ignorance, and desires further instruction, and condescends to be taught by one so much his inferior.

32 The place of the Scripture which he read was this, <sup>z 14. 63. 7, 8.</sup> "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

God's providence is remarkable, that the eunuch should be reading this very scripture, which contains such fundamental truths, and which he had most need for to be informed of. The words referred unto are in Isa. liiii. 7. Whether read in the Hebrew tongue, which the eunuch might have learned of many Jews living in Ethiopia; or whether they were read out of the translation of the Seventy, which was then in common use, is not so necessary an inquiry; both being to the same intent and purpose. Christ was indeed as a sheep for his patience, not opening his mouth to defend his own case; but especially he was as a sheep in being a sacrifice for us, the true paschal Lamb that causeth the destroyer to pass from us; and yet he is our Shepherd too, to supply and preserve us, Psal. xxiii. 1.

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

In his humiliation; when our blessed Saviour was in his lowest condition, and the utmost degree of his examination; his soul being made a sacrifice for us, and suffering that desertion for a time we had merited for ever, and his body laid in the grave as in a prison; then his judgment, the punishment which was inflicted upon him in our stead, was taken away; for he brake the bonds of death, and opened the prison-door: this was foretold, although in somewhat differing expressions, by the prophet Isaiah, chap. liii. 7, 8. Who shall declare his generation? those that shall be brought forth by this travail of his soul are innumerable, or his own eternal generation (who could do such great things as overcame death itself for us) is inexpressible: but by generation others (more to the scope of this place) understand Christ's duration, or abiding, notwithstanding that he died; γενεά, does often signify duration; and thus it is an ordinary expression with the prophet, Isa. xxxiv. 10, 17, from generation to generation: now none can comprehend that eternal duration of Christ, who dies no more, Rom. vi. 9, and of whose kingdom there is no end, Luke i. 33. For his life is taken from the earth; Christ acquired his glory by his suffering; his very exceeding great weight of glory was indeed wrought for him by his afflictions, (as for us, 2 Cor. iv. 17,) his becoming obedient unto the death was the cause why he was so highly exalted, Phil. ii. 8, 9.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

Of whom speaketh the prophet this? the modestly inquisitive man does get understanding; this question (God so ordering it) brings in the discourse concerning our Saviour. Of himself, or of some other man? this the eunuch might well make a question, because Isaiah himself suffered much under Manasseh.

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, <sup>a Luke 24. 27. ch. 16. 23.</sup> and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

Opened his mouth; so they were said to do when they began to speak of some weighty matter. Began at the same Scripture; showing that the prophet, in that most signal prophecy, Isa. liiii., could not mean such things of himself, nor of Jeremiah, or of any other. Preached unto him Jesus; things in that prophecy are applicable unto our blessed Saviour, but to none else.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; <sup>b what b ch. 10. 47.</sup> doth hinder me to be baptized?

A certain water; this water is supposed to be a fountain in a town called Bethsora, or a river called Eleutherus, which in that road must needs be passed over; it being otherwise very dry, and water very scarce there. What doth hinder me to be baptized? although it was not expressly mentioned, Philip had informed this eunuch concerning baptism, its nature and use, which made him express such desire after it; which else he had not done.

37 And Philip said, <sup>c Matt. 28. 19. Mark 16. 16. d Mat. 16. 16. John 6. 69. & 9. 35. 38. & 11. 27. ch. 9. 20.</sup> If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, <sup>e John 4. 15. & 5. 13.</sup> "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

With all thine heart: a verbal profession is not a sufficient believing, Rom. x. 10; though we can discern no other, yet God can, and will not be mocked: Philip, in God's name, requires a faith with all the heart, and not such as Simon Magus had, who is said to believe, and be baptized, ver. 13. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; this was the only thing necessary, either then or now, if rightly understood. The eunuch was instructed concerning God out of the law, and was one of them that waited for his salvation; which here he acknowledgeth to be only found in Christ, whom he owns to be the Messiah, who made his soul an offering for sin, Isa. liii. 10, and did bear our griefs, and carried our sorrows, ver. 4, and was wounded for our transgressions, ver. 5; for all these things Philip had told him were meant of our Saviour, which he did believe were so to be understood.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

In hot countries this was usual, to baptize by dipping the body in the water; and to this the apostle alludes, when he tells the Corinthians, 1 Cor. vi. 11, that they are washed: but God will have mercy, and not sacrifice; sprinkling being as effectual as washing, and as significative also, representing the sprinkling of the blood of the paschal lamb, of which we read, Exod. xii. 3, which presignified the sprinkling the blood of Jesus, that Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world; and our hearts must by it be sprinkled from an evil conscience, Heb. x. 22. It is not the more or the less of the outward element which makes the sacraments effectual; but they are effectual only as they are God's appointments, and attended upon according to his will.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, 'the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

Philip was suddenly and extraordinarily taken away from the eunuch's sight and company, that thereby the eunuch might be the more assured of the truth of those things which had been taught by him. The rejoicing was the effect of his faith; being now justified, he had peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, Rom. v. 1.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea.

Philip was set down by the Spirit at Ashdod of the Philistines, which is called by the Septuagint Azotus: names of persons and places do in tract of time vary. This place had been famous for the idol Dagon, 1 Sam. v. 3, and for being a chief place of the Philistines, those enemies to God's church; but Christ, when he comes, can cast Satan out of his strongest holds. This Azotus is accounted thirty-four miles from Gaza.

CHAP. IX

Saul, going towards Damascus, is encompassed with a light from heaven, falleth to the earth, is called by Christ, and led blind to Damascus, 1—9. Ananias is sent to him, by whom he is restored to sight, and baptized: he straightway preacheth Christ boldly, 10—22. The Jews of Damascus seek to kill him, 23—25. He goeth to Jerusalem, and is brought to the apostles by Barnabas: preaching boldly against the Grecians, he is again in danger of his life, and is sent to Tarsus, 26—30. The church hath rest, and is multiplied, 31. Peter cureth Eneas of the palsy at Lydda, 32—35; and raiseth Tabitha to life at Joppa, 36—43.

A. D. 35. AND 'Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the High Priest,

St. Luke intending a narrative of the wonderful conversion of St. Paul, lets us know what manner of person he was before his conversion, that none might despond of the grace of God, who earnestly and heartily seek it. Breathing out threatenings and slaughter; so full of rage within, that the stream was outwardly apparent, which that inward fire had sent forth: nothing less than destruction of the church is aimed at by its enemies; whilst Saul was one of them he hunted after their precious life too. The high priest; who did usually preside in their great council, in which they took cognizance of such matters; the blood of Stephen did not quench their thirst, but increased it; they would spill more still.

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

To the synagogues; this council, though it sat at Jerusalem, had a power (whether commanding or recommending) over all the synagogues within or without Judea. Of this way; this was eminently so called, being the way of God, and the way of life, and the only right and true way: any profession, persuasion, or manner of life, is called a way frequently in Scripture, 1 Kings xv. 26; Psal. xci. 11. Men or women; it speaks their extraordinary rage, that would not spare the weaker sex, who are generally spared on that account. Bring them bound; which shows that he carried many with him, to the further aggravation of his sin. Unto Jerusalem; where they had power to judge of such things, and out of which it was impossible that a prophet should perish, Luke xiii. 33.

3 And 'as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

He was near to Damascus before this wonderful vision, that, being struck blind, he might be the sooner led thither; as also, that the miracle might be more easily and publicly known, Damascus being the chief city of Syria; and, though about six days' journey from Jerusalem, inhabited by many Jews. This was done at noon-day, the rather, that the light which Paul saw might appear to be beyond that which the sun gives; and this light was a symbol of that inward light, wherewith his mind was now to be enlightened; as also of the purity of the doctrine he was to preach, and holiness of his life which he was to lead; and most probably it was caused by the glorified body of Christ, which appeared unto him.

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, 'why persecutest thou me?

Saul fell to the earth, struck with the amazing light and terrible voice of Christ; as also with the sense of the presence of God, which he knew was thus revered by Daniel, chap. viii. 17; x. 9. Saul, Saul; the name Saul is the rather mentioned, to mind him and us of his persecuting of Christ in his members, as his name-sake had persecuted David, who was a type of Christ; and it is ingeminated, or doubled, not only to rouse and awaken Saul, but to testify his love to him, and commiseration of him. Why persecutest thou me? Christ was in heaven, beyond Saul's rage; but Christ and his church make but one body. Thus Christ says, I was hungry and thirsty, Matt. xxv. 35. And in all their afflictions he is afflicted, Isa. lxiii. 9. But me is here emphatically spoken, as if our Saviour had minded him of his great love and mercy to him, in dying and suffering for him; and why then should he persecute him?

5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: 'it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

Who art thou, Lord? Saul was in a great consternation and doubting, whether it was God, or an angel. Jesus whom thou persecutest: though he did not intend this persecution against Christ, yet our Saviour looks upon the good or evil done unto his members as done unto himself. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks: this kicking against the pricks is a proverbial speech, taken either from oxen or slaves, whom they used with goads to prick on to their work, which when they kicked against, or opposed themselves to, they did not hurt the goads or pricks, but themselves; so shall all persecutors find that their mischiefs recoil upon themselves; Christ and his members shall be e 1 Kings 18.

12. 2 Kings
2. 16. Ezek.
3. 15, 16.

b ch. 22. e. d 26. 12.
1 Cor. 15. a.

c Matt. 25.
40. &c.

d ch. 5. 29.

made more glorious by it: this metaphor is common in Scripture, Deut. xxxii. 15; 1 Sam. ii. 29. The pricks Saul had kicked against, were the sermons and miracles of St. Stephen and others.

6 And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

e Luke 3. 10.
ch. 2. 27.
& 14. 20.

Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Saul, being thoroughly humbled, and brought to resign himself wholly to God, makes this question, giving up himself as a white paper, for Christ to write what he would upon: he had thought he had done God good service, (as it is said many persecutors should think so too, John xvi. 2,) but he is now powerfully brought off from his obstinacy in that persuasion. Go into the city; Damascus, which was near at hand. Whether Christ revealed his gospel now unto him, or in the three days in which he remained blind in Damascus, ver. 9, is not so certain; but it is certain that he was Χριστο διδάκτος, taught immediately by Christ himself, as he testifies, Gal. i. 12, and in that, without any further instruction, he was baptized, ver. 17, 18; yet many things might be left for Ananias to confirm him in; and God, by this sending of him to Ananias, would honour his own ordinance, and recommend the ministry and use of means, which are the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16: and thus, though God could have instructed Cornelius by the angel which appeared unto him, chap. x. 3, yet he is commanded to send for Peter, and to hear from him what he ought to do, ver. 5, 6.

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.

f Dan. 10. 7.
See ch. 22.
& 26. 13.

Stood speechless: in chap. xxvi. 14, these men are said to be fallen to the earth as well as Saul, which they might at first be, and now rose up; or rather, by standing still here is only meant, they, being sorely amazed, remained in the place in which they were, without going forward: thus the angel forbade Lot and his family to stay or stand in the plain, Gen. xix. 17, meaning that they should hasten forward. Hearing a voice; the greater difficulty is, to reconcile these words with chap. xxii. 9, where it is expressly said, that these men did not hear the voice; but it is there added, of him that spake unto Saul; so that they might hear the voice of Saul, as it is said in this place, and wonder whom he spake unto, or what he spake about, they not hearing the voice of him that spake unto him, as in chap. xxii. 9 it is said: and it seems very likely that they should not hear the voice of Christ, for we read not that any of them were converted; and being left in their infidelity, they were in some respects the more undeniable witnesses of a great part of that miracle. But if it be understood of the voice of Christ in both places, then they might hear it, as it is said here, inarticulately, or the noise which that voice made; but not hear it articulately, or so as to understand it, as in a parallel case, John xii. 29, the people are said to hear the voice that spake unto Christ from heaven, yet they heard so confusedly, as that they thought it had only been thunder. To be sure, they who are converted, and they who are not converted, by the word of God, may hear the word; but after a very different manner; they that are converted by it only hearing it inwardly, spiritually, effectually. But seeing no man; these fellow travellers with St. Paul are said to see no man, but the expression here imports their doing their utmost for to see him that spake: thus God made a difference, Dan. x. 7, in the vision we read of there.

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

When his eyes were opened; when he opened his eyes as at other times, when he did rise to see, the glorious light had so dazzled him, that he could see nothing: thus Saul was, and all men are, before their conversion; he had the shape of a man, and of one learned in the law, when notwithstanding he is blind, and sees or knows nothing as he ought to know.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

Some have thought that in these three days Paul had that rapture into the third heavens, which he speaks of, 2 Cor. xii. 2; but that seems rather to have been afterwards; God would, however, by this humble and try him, and excite his dependence wholly upon him, and that he might value his restored sight the more. Neither did eat nor drink; that by fasting he might be more intent in prayer; for fasting does prepare for prayer, and therefore fasting and prayer are so often put together, Matt. xvii. 21; Acts xiii. 3. In those places they could fast longer without prejudice to their health, than amongst us, and, as I might add, were more willing to fast for any spiritual advantage than we are.

10 ¶ And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

Ananias; he was of good repute for zeal and holiness, as appears, chap. xxii. 12, but whether he was one of the seventy disciples which our Saviour sent out, Luke x. 1, as some will have, is not certain. He said, Behold, I am here, Lord; thereby showing his willingness to be sent on God's message, and to do as God should bid him, as Samuel to Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 5.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth,

<sup>h ch. 21. 34</sup>
<sup>& 22. 3.</sup>

Inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul: God telleth our wanderings, and knoweth our abode, and mindeth his, especially in their sorrows, which was Saul's case. For, behold, he prayeth; he spent those three days, spoken of ver. 9, in acts of great humiliation, in which he would also not taste any food; this is revealed to Ananias, that he might not fear to go unto him. A great change! Is Saul also amongst them that pray? A greater wonder than that the other Saul was formerly amongst the prophets.

12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

If this verse be the words of St. Luke, continuing the history, then they must be included in a parenthesis, the sense being entire without them; but they seem to be the words of the Lord continued to Ananias, telling him how he had provided for his welcome to Saul, contrary to his expectation.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

I have heard by many of this man; his design and commission could not but be noised abroad. Thy saints: the disciples of Christ are called saints, because, 1. They are dedicated unto the Lord in their baptism. 2. They are called unto holiness. 3. They did then live holly and exemplarily. 4. And so must all that hope for any benefit by their being disciples of Christ, &c.

14 And here he hath authority from the Chief Priests to bind all that call on thy name.

Here Ananias shows the strength of his excuse; for flesh and blood cried in him, as in Mose., Exod. iv. 13, Send by him whom thou wilt send.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel:

He is a chosen vessel: the whole world is God's fabric, and the church especially is his house: not only in the k ver. 21.

ch. 7. 59.
& 22. 16.
1 Cor. 1. 2.
2 Tim. 3. 25.

l ch. 13. 2.
& 22. 21.
& 26. 17.
Rom. 1. 1.
1 Cor. 15. 10.
Gal. 1. 15.
Eph. 3. 7, 8.
1 Tim. 2. 7.
2 Tim. 1. 11.

m Rom. 1. 5. & 11. 13. Gal. 3. 7, 8. n ch. 25. 22, 23. & 26. 1, 2, &c.

whole world, but in the visible church, there are all sorts of vessels, some for higher, others for meaner uses; Saul was to be a vessel unto honour, Rom. ix. 21, into which the treasures of God's word were to be put, 2 Cor. iv. 7, though he was but an earthen vessel: Saul was indeed chosen by God to preach the gospel, Gal. i. 15, 16, to suffer for Christ's name's sake, 1 Thess. iii. 3. To bear my name before the Gentiles: this mystery of the calling of the Gentiles began now to spread abroad, and to be made more known, which was hid in those promises, Isa. xlix. 6; Jer. i. 10.

<sup>o ch. 20. 23.</sup> <sup>& 21. 11.</sup> <sup>2 Cor. 11. 23.</sup> 16 For <sup>o</sup>I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

He shall suffer as great things as he ever did cause or inflict; the hatred of his own countrymen the Jews, and the fury of the Gentiles: see the catalogue of them, 2 Cor. xi. 23—27. And were there ever so many sufferings heaped upon one man? And yet, though all these were foretold unto him, and certainly foreknown by him, he would preach the gospel for all that: much was forgiven him, and he loved much.

<sup>p ch. 22. 12.</sup> <sup>13.</sup> <sup>q ch. 8. 17.</sup> 17 <sup>p</sup>And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and <sup>q</sup>putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and <sup>r</sup>be filled with the Holy Ghost.

<sup>r ch. 2. 4. &</sup> <sup>& 4. 31. & 8. 17.</sup> <sup>& 13. 52.</sup> Entered into the house; the house of Judas, with whom Saul lodged, as ver. 11. Putting his hands on him; concerning this, see chap. vi. 6, besides on what may be said of this imposition of hands elsewhere: the curing of St. Paul's blindness was one reason of putting his hands on him here, for so it was ordinarily done towards the sick or infirm; they laid their hands upon them to heal them, as it was promised that they should do, Mark xvi. 18. Brother Saul; Saul was become Ananias's brother, as professing the same faith, and heir of the same promise with him. Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way; Ananias mentions what had happened to Paul in the way, that Saul might be assured that he was sent from God, for none else could have told him what had happened.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

Scales, as scales of fish: it was no ordinary blindness, nor from any ordinary cause, and could not have been cured by common means.

<sup>s ch. 26. 20.</sup> 19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. <sup>s</sup>Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

St. Paul could not but be much weakened with his journey, fear, grief, fasting, and constant praying; and now he takes a prudent care of his health, that he might be further enabled for the service of God, to what place soever he should be appointed. With the disciples: Saul is no sooner changed, but he changeth his company and acquaintance; he resorts to none of the rabbies of the Jews, but to the disciples of Christ; he would love any, learn of any, that had Christ for their Master.

<sup>t ch. 8. 37.</sup> 20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, <sup>t</sup>that he is the Son of God.

He preached Christ in the synagogues; the apostles spake unto the Jews first, either that they might convert them, or at least take away all excuse from them. That he is the Son of God; which doubtless he spake largely unto, though it be not here expressed; but he had an abundance in his heart, having tasted the power of the grace of God in Christ, and out of his heart his mouth spake.

<sup>u ch. 8. 3.</sup> <sup>ver. 1. Gal. 1.</sup> <sup>13. 23.</sup> 21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said; <sup>u</sup>Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the Chief Priests?

This great change is a most unaccountable thing, and might truly cause amazement; but ex quovis ligno fit Mercurius, cum digitus Dei sit statuarius. Nothing is too hard for that God in whose hand Saul's heart was.

22 But Saul increased the more in strength, <sup>x ch. 18. 22.</sup> and confounded the Jews <sup>x</sup> which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

Increased the more in strength; true grace thrives by exercise and opposition: the word here used many take to be a metaphor from builders, who, in erecting their fabrics, fit one piece or part to another, and then bring them and join them together; thus St. Paul did, in bringing forth or quoting the promises in the Old Testament, and showing their exactly being fulfilled in the New Testament, or in the gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ; and he spake with such an evidence and demonstration of the Spirit, that he did, as it were, constrain men to be of his opinion. Proving that this is very Christ; which was the sum of the gospel.

23 ¶ And after that many days were fulfilled, <sup>y ch. 23. 12.</sup> the Jews took counsel to kill <sup>z</sup>him: <sup>z ch. 23. 3.</sup> <sup>2 Cor. 11. 22.</sup>

Many days; God would not presently expose him to conflicts, but inure him to suffer by degrees; as also it pleased God to spare him so long nigh unto that place where he had wrought so great a miracle for him, the sense of which might the more be upon himself and others also; for he continued here three years, excepting only a journey into Arabia, as may be seen, Gal. i. 17, 18.

24 <sup>2 Cor. 11.</sup> But their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

Their laying await; the Jews, who stirred up Aretas the king of Damascus against Paul, 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33: now began those things to be fulfilled, foretold ver. 16.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and <sup>a So Josh. 2.</sup> <sup>15. 1 Sam.</sup> <sup>18. 12.</sup> let him down by the wall in a basket.

As Rahab did the spies, Josh. ii. 15, and Michal did David, 1 Sam. xix. 12.

26 And <sup>b ch. 22. 17.</sup> when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

To join himself to, to be admitted to intimate fellowship and communion with, the disciples. They were all afraid of him; Paul was sufficiently known by name and face at Jerusalem, and many had felt his rage. And believed not that he was a disciple; but how could the disciples be ignorant of his conversion so long, if it was three years after, as it seems by Gal. i. 18? To answer which may be considered, 1. The great distance betwixt Jerusalem and Damascus, six days' journey. 2. The little correspondence betwixt the kings of those places, Herod and Aretas. 3. The persecution which was at Jerusalem might hinder the converts of Damascus from going thither. 4. Paul might have spent a great part of the three years in his journey amongst the Arabians, of which before.

27 <sup>c ch. 4. 36.</sup> <sup>& 13. 2.</sup> But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord, <sup>d ver. 20, 22.</sup> and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

Of Barnabas mention is made, chap. iv. 36, who is thought to have been Paul's fellow disciple under Gamaliel. Brought him to the apostles; these apostles, to whom Barnabas brought Paul, were Peter and James, as Gal. i. 18, 19, who being the apostles of the circumcision, or having Judea under their charge, were abiding at Jerusalem, whilst the other apostles probably were absent, being founding of churches elsewhere. He had seen the Lord, &c.: some take these things to have been related by Paul, others by Barnabas, who testified these things concerning Paul.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

Living amongst them, and freely conversing with them; that is, with Peter, and James, and the rest of the believers, who had now no suspicion of him.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him.

Disputed against the Grecians; Hellenists, of which chap. vi. 1, such as were born in foreign parts, but of Jewish parents; these Paul chose rather to dispute with, because these had raised the persecution against Stephen, and Paul had furthered them in it; and he was very desirous to unweave that web, and give them an antidote unto whom he had formerly given poison; being especially concerned for their souls, whom he had helped to destroy.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

Cæsarea; there were two towns of this name, one a coast town, spoken of, chap. viii. 40; the other was called Cæsarea Philippi, nigh Mount Lebanon. Tarsus, St. Paul's birth-place, where amongst his relations and acquaintance they might hope he would be safe.

31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judæa and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

Then had the churches rest; when Paul was sent away, against whom they had the greater spite, as having been as zealous a persecutor as any amongst them. And were edified: the church is frequently compared to a building, and every believer to the temple of God, 1 Cor. iii. 16, and vi. 19, which God dwells in; from whence this metaphor is taken. Walking in the fear of the Lord: walking is a progressive motion, and so is building and adding to a structure till it come to perfection; which signifies that these believers increased daily in the knowledge of God, in true piety and charity, &c. In the comfort of the Holy Ghost; the word also signifies the exhortation of the Holy Ghost; such exhortations as were given from God by the apostles: to be sure, the comforts of the Spirit are not without our obedience to the commandments of God; and it seems to be given here as the reason why the churches were edified, and did thus increase, because believers walked in the fear of the Lord; and nothing persuades more effectually to the embracing of religion, than the holy living of such as make profession of it.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

Throughout all quarters, where the disciples that were dispersed had planted churches. Saints: see ver. 13. Lydda; a little town about the west bank of the Jordan, not far from the Mediterranean Sea.

33 And there he found a certain man named Æneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.

It is supposed this Æneas was a Jew, though now living at Lydda; and that St. Luke here names him by the name the Grecians called him by, he being amongst his own countrymen called Hillel. Kept his bed eight years; to show the difficulty of the cure, and greatness of the miracle.

34 And Peter said unto him, Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: these words are not a prayer, (though they were not spoken without Peter's lifting up his heart to Christ in prayer,) but a promise to this sick man of health and recovery, declaring from whom he should receive it, that he might know whom to acknowledge and thank for it. Arise, and make thy bed: our Saviour bids the sick of the palsy to arise, and take up his bed, Mark ii. 11; and so he commands the impotent man, John v. 8. Here St. Peter bids this paralytic to make his bed; which seems more strange, being he was commanded to arise, so that now he should have no need of having his bed made; but it is easily answered, that being it was only intended to show how fully he was cured, the making of his bed did as much prove, both to himself and others, that he was recovered, as any thing else could do.

35 And all that dwelt in Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.

Lydda: see ver. 32. Saron is the name of a city, 1 Chron. v. 16, but here it is rather the name of a country, (which the masculine article usually shows,) lying between Mount Tabor and the lake of Tiberias, a very fruitful plain, 1 Chron. xxvii. 29; Cant. ii. 1. Turned to the Lord; to the owning of his truth. Error (if in fundamentals) keeps us from God.

36 ¶ Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.

Joppa, a post town: see chap. x. 5. These circumstances of places and persons are set down to evidence the certainty of the history. Tabitha, according to the Syriac dialect, then in use amongst the Jews, and Dorcas, as she was called amongst the Greeks; it being common for the same person to have two names, one Hebrew and the other Greek, as Thomas, who was called Didymus, and Cephas, who was called Peter. Full of good works; she was rich in good works, which are the best riches, last longest, and go farthest.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

They washed the dead, and anointed them, to fit them for their burying, and especially to show their hope of the resurrection; which some think St. Paul alludes unto, 1 Cor. xv. 29.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

They sent for Peter, that he might come to comfort those that were concerned in the great loss of so good a woman, and, it may be, not without some hopes of her recovery by a miracle from St. Peter; which is the likelier, because they so much hasten his coming to them, she being already dead, and they preparing for her burial.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.

It was strange that Peter should be sent for, or that he should go on such an account, viz. to raise one that was dead; but God, who had ordered this miracle for the manifestation of his truth and glory, so wrought in their hearts, that they did this out of faith; though if others should think to imitate it, it would be but presumption. Weeping; here needed no mourning women to be hired; the death of this good woman was a common loss: these coats were made by Dorcas in her lifetime, to clothe the poor and naked with.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

f ch. 6. 1. & 11. 20.
g ver. 23.
2 Cor. 11. 28.

11 Chron. 5.
16.
m ch. 11. 21.

1 Or, Doe.
Or, Roe.
n 1 Tim. 2.
10. Tit. 3. 8.

h See ch. 8. 1.

o ch. 1. 13.

1 Or, be grieved.

A. D. 38.
i ch. 8. 14.

p Mat. 9. 25.

q ch. 7. 60.

r Mark 5.

41, 42.

John 11. 43.

Peter put them all forth; Peter put them out, that he might pray the more earnestly, without distraction or interruption; thus Elisha shut the door to him when he prayed for the Shunammite's son, 2 Kings iv. 33. Kneeled down; this his kneeling is mentioned, to recommend reverence in our praying unto God. And prayed: Peter, by his betaking himself unto prayer, would show, that he could do nothing by his own power, but it must come from above; and he had every mercy as much precariously, and by prayer, as any others.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, he presented her alive.

The saints and widows; such who had sent for him, and now were gathered together to see what effects his prayers might have. Presented her alive, and in perfect health, as all were that were miraculously cured; for the Lord's works are perfect, Deut. xxxii. 4.

42 And it was known throughout all <sup>a John 11.</sup> Joppa; <sup>45. & 12. 11.</sup> and many believed in the Lord.

This cure was wrought, and all the other miracles were done, to be a means to make the gospel to be believed, which he published, and was an undeniable proof that this doctrine was from heaven; for none could do such things unless God were with him, or rather, unless God did them by him; so that this miracle wrought by St. Peter did more good to the souls of many, than to the body of this relieved woman.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried <sup>t ch. 10. 6.</sup> many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

The miracle had only prepared them to receive his doctrine, which Peter tarried some time with them to instruct them in: the miracle had prepared the ground, and now he takes this season to sow the seed of the word into it.

CHAP. X

Cornelius, a devout centurion, being commanded by an angel, sendeth for Peter, 1—8; who in the mean time is prepared by a heavenly vision, 9—16; and, receiving a command from the Spirit, goeth with the messengers to Cæsarea, 17—24. Cornelius receiveth him with great respect, and sheweth the occasion of his sending for him, 25—33. Peter preacheth Christ to him and his company, 34—43. The Holy Ghost falleth on them, whereupon they are baptized, 44—48.

A. D. 41. THERE was a certain man in Cæsarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

In Cæsarea; in Cæsarea Palestine, as it was called in contra-distinction to Cæsarea Philippi. Cornelius; a Roman by his name; which name was ordinarily to be found amongst the families of the Scipios and Syllas. A band answers either to a regiment amongst us, or to a legion amongst the Romans (this latter was far greater than the former). It was called the Italian band, as being composed of Italian soldiers, and might be used as a guard of the proconsul, who dwelt at Cæsarea, who was that Felix we read of, chap. xxiii. 24.

<sup>a ver. 22.</sup> <sup>ch. 6. 2.</sup> <sup>22. 12.</sup> <sup>li ver. 35.</sup> 2 A devout man, and one that <sup>b</sup> feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always.

A devout man; this Cornelius was a proselyte of the gate, or such as observed the seven precepts of Noah, and lived without giving any offence to the Jews. With all his house; it was a very good sign that he feared God, in that he engaged all his house to do the like, at least outwardly, which was as much as he could do: this was spoken by God in Abraham's commendation, Gen. xviii. 19. Prayed to God always; he did not neglect the seasons of prayer, especially the time of offering the morning and evening sacrifice, which by prayer they desired to partake the benefit of, by which Christ our sacrifice, and his merits, were figured unto them. Cornelius indeed prayed always, or at all times, taking time in a moral sense, for the seasons and opportunities for such a duty; (as we are commanded to give thanks always, Eph. v. 20;) but he could not pray always, or at all times, taking time in a natural sense, for then he must have neglected all other duties; however, his endeavour was to keep his heart always in a praying disposition.

3 He saw in a vision evidently about <sup>c ver. 30.</sup> <sup>ch. 11. 13.</sup> the ninth hour of the day an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

In a vision; not in a dream or rapture, but sensibly and plainly. About the ninth hour; their ninth hour was with us about three o'clock in the afternoon, being the ordinary time for the evening sacrifice; and, by consequence, their time of prayer, chap. iii. 1. And this devout man doth not seek God's face in vain; Cornelius had been faithful in a little, and God would give him much; rather than he should want further instruction, who had improved what he had already, God here sends an angel, and soon after an apostle unto him.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

He was afraid; the angel appeared in so great splendour: all admiration hath some fear with it. And said, What is it, Lord? this is equivalent to What wilt thou have me to do? and shows that Cornelius was prepared to hear the message. Thy prayers and thine alms; prayer and alms are joined together in our Saviour's discourse concerning them, Matt. vi., and in the apostle's order about them, 1 Cor. xvi. 1: alms are our sacrifices now under the gospel, Phil. iv. 18; Heb. xiii. 16. Are come up for a memorial before God; an allusion to the offering up of incense under the law; the smoke of the incense did ascend, and so David desires that his prayers might ascend to God-ward, Psal. cxli. 2: thus, under the gospel, prayers are resembled to incense, Rev. viii. 3. That prayers are said to come up for a memorial, is but the pursuance of the same metaphor; for, Lev. ii. 2, the frankincense, &c. was the memorial there commanded to be burned; and all this only to represent unto us how well-pleasing the prayers of his people are unto God through Christ, and that God keeps in remembrance all those things they thus desire of him, and in his time and measure (which are the best circumstances) bestows all upon them: but let not prayers and alms, which God here hath put together, be put asunder, and in due time we shall reap.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

Joppa, a town that was memorable for Jonah's taking ship there, when he would flee from God, and decline his message, Jonah i. 3. The angel could have declared the gospel, and instructed Cornelius; but he sends him to Peter, God being willing to honour the means of his own institution.

6 He lodgeth with one <sup>d ch. 9. 43.</sup> Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: <sup>e ch. 11. 14.</sup> he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

These particulars, when found true by Cornelius, did very much advantage him towards his believing what Peter in the name of the Lord did tell him.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

Two of his household servants; these servants doubtless Cornelius had instructed, as appears ver. 2, and God blesses him with faithful and successful service from them. A devout soldier; no condition, or temptation, too hard for the grace of God to overcome; both centurion and soldier are willing to hazard all they had, rather than not to obey God, and come to the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Waited on him continually; this soldier, for his religion's sake, and his holy life, was taken into nearer attendance on Cornelius; it is no small matter to have one near us that hath power with God.

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

Thus on Cornelius's side all things are disposed towards his receiving of the gospel; and the same providence, at the same time, disposes all things on Peter's part towards his coming to publish it: for 9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, <sup>f ch. 11. 5. &c.</sup> Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour:

These houses were flat on the tops, and therefore they were commanded to make battlements for them, Deut. xxii. 8. Peter went up upon the housetop to pray, that he might from thence view the temple, which was a type of Christ, through whom only we and our prayers can be acceptable unto God; hence, 1 Kings viii. 30, &c., there is so often mention made of praying towards the city, and towards the place which God should choose; this Daniel practised, though upon the hazard of his life, when both city and temple were ruined, Dan. vi. 10. The sixth hour with them is high noon, or mid-day, and is accounted one of the three times of prayer, (see chap. iii. 1.) and was, as the Jews say, recommended to them by Isaac; howsoever, it was the time when they might begin to prepare the evening sacrifice: none of these causes need to be assigned, for doubtless this blessed apostle did watch unto prayer, 1 Pet. iv. 7, and desirously laid hold upon all opportunities to pour out his soul unto God.

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

He became very hungry; he might be more than ordinarily hungry, to fit or suit the vision, which is hereafter mentioned. He fell into a trance: the most excellent way of God's manifesting himself unto man, is by a trance; (and they reckon seven ways, in which God makes himself known unto man;) but what this trance was is diversely expressed: it is certain, that in it the soul was, as it were, absent from the body, drawn off from the perception of earthly and sensible things, and enabled unto the perception of heavenly mysteries: in such an ecstasy was St. Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 2, and St. John, Rev. i. 10, who is therefore said to be in the Spirit.

<sup>g ch. 7. 56. Rev. 12. 11.</sup> 11 And <sup>s</sup> saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

And saw heaven; either visibly to his corporal eyes, as to St. Stephen's; or rather mentally, more suitably to the rapture mentioned in the former verse. Opened; which might signify, that heaven, that was shut to the children of men by the first Adam, was now by Christ, the Second Adam, opened to all believers. Vessel; this word is taken for any utensil commonly used about the house; and, with the sheet here spoken of, bears an analogy to a table and table-cloth amongst us. Knit at the four corners; so gathered up or knit, that the viands, ver. 12, might not fall down. And this Peter saw to come from heaven, to show that the liberty of taking Cornelius and other Gentiles into the church, did come from thence only.

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

As well unclean beasts, such as were forbidden by the law, as clean, such as by the law might be eaten.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

Of that thou seest, without any exception, whether they be clean, or (formerly) unclean creatures. The moral of which command is, that he might now converse with Jews and Gentiles indifferently, and preach unto these also the word of life.

<sup>h Lev. 11. 4. & 20. 25. Deut. 14. 3, 7. Ezek. 4. 14.</sup> 14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; <sup>h</sup> for

I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

These words may signify one and the same thing, and the latter explain the former; showing that those things are said to be common, which the law, by forbidding them, had made unclean. Others make some difference; and by things common, understand all sorts of creatures, which were forbidden to the Jews, but were commonly fed upon by all nations round about them; and by things unclean, they understand such as by accident became so, as when any of the creatures permitted for use was strangled.

15 And the voice spake unto him again <sup>i Matt. 15. 11. ver. 20. Rom. 14. 14, 17, 20. 1 Cor. 10. 25. 1 Tim. 4. 4. Tit. 1. 15.</sup> the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

Do not make in thy esteem, or practice, as common, that is, polluted. The Jews did imagine, that by unclean creatures were meant the Gentiles, as by clean creatures they would have themselves to be understood; howsoever, they opposed common unto holy; indeed a holy man is (as they called him) a singular man: it was God that cleansed Cornelius, turning him from idolatry to the worship of the true God, from darkness unto light.

16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

Whereby this great mystery of the conversion of the Gentiles, and taking them into the church, might be the more confirmed, and fixed in St. Peter's mind.

17 Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

Doubted in himself; recollecting himself; for the vision had so affected him, that it had put him into a kind of ecstasy, out of which when he came to himself, behold, the men; the two servants and the soldier which Cornelius had sent.

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

Being strangers, they address themselves to such of the house as came to the door.

19 ¶ While Peter thought on the vision, <sup>k ch. 11. 12.</sup> the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

Thought on the vision; set himself to meditate upon that he had seen and heard. The Spirit said unto him; the Holy Spirit informs him further. Thus whosoever meditates carefully upon what he hears from God's word, God will never leave him without sufficient instruction.

20 <sup>l ch. 15. 7.</sup> Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

Arise therefore; immediately put thyself upon the journey. Doubting nothing; spend no time in disputing within thyself, because that they, unto whom thou art sent, are not Jews.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

Peter being in no small consternation, and not perfectly knowing whither all this tended, makes the more exact inquiry.

22 And they said, <sup>m ver. 1, 2. &c. n ch. 22. 12.</sup> Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and <sup>n</sup> of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.

That they might speed in their message, they labour to prevent all prejudice Peter might have against Cornelius, who was a Gentile by title; telling him, 1. That he was a just man, as is said of Joseph, Matt. i. 19. 2. That he worshipped the true God the same with the Jews, and not the false gods of the Gentiles. 3. That he was reputed a pious and good man, and so it would be no disparagement to the apostles to go unto him. Was warned from God: this argument St. Peter could not deny. When God's command is evident, his people are determined and resolved.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

o ver. 45.
ch. 11. 12.

And on the morrow Peter went away with them; he delays not to obey the heavenly vision; but as Abraham took his journey the very next morning after that he had received the command, Gen. xxii. 3, so did Peter here, and bis dat qui cito dat, he doubles his obedience that obeys speedily and cheerfully. And certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him; these brethren were six in number, as chap. xi. 12; who might undertake this journey, 1. Out of respect to Peter, to accompany him. 2. Being moved at the extraordinary visions that were spoken of. But especially, 3. Disposed by the providence of God to accompany St. Peter, that they might testify the grace of God that was come unto the Gentiles, when it might be afterwards questioned.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cæsarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

Joppa was about fifteen leagues from Cæsarea, so that the next day after they set out they might easily come from Joppa thither. His kinsmen; his relations. And near friends; and such as he had the greatest love and kindness for; he thought that he could not express it better, than by giving them an opportunity to hear the word of life, and to gain instruction for their souls: and probably those here spoken of were reckoned as friends, and near friends, by Cornelius, because they were such as with him had forsaken all pagan idolatry, and were worshippers of the true and living God.

25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

As Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him; into Cornelius's house, for he hastened to meet with him. Worshipped him; Cornelius worshipped with the most humble civil worship; but he could not think him to be God, and therefore he did give him no Divine worship, he having forsaken the idolatry of the Gentiles; but might perhaps think him to have been an angel, and intended to worship him accordingly, for which he is blamed in the following verse.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man.

It is certain that Peter did think this worship Cornelius gave him to have exceeded; and here he blames him for it, telling him, he was but a man like unto him; and he needed not give any further reason of his reproof, for man must adore, but by no means may be adored; no, nor take too much honour unto himself.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

As he talked with him; they went talking together into the house, probably of the goodness of God, that they should be directed so happily unto one another; for they could not but see and acknowledge God in it.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.

God himself did erect a partition-wall betwixt his people and other nations, Jews and Gentiles; hence by God's own command the Jews might not have any familiar converse with the Gentiles, especially they might not marry with them. The Jews themselves had made this partition-wall much larger, and they held it unlawful to eat with any of the Gentiles, or to go so much as into their houses;

hence that objection made upon this occasion against St. Peter, chap. xi. 3. Unclean; no man is now unclean by any ceremonial uncleanness, because he is not circumcised, or because he is not sprinkled with the blood of bulls, Heb. ix. 13; yet sin hath defiled the whole mass of mankind, and they are equally by nature morally unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

Gainsaying, or delay. I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me? Peter did in a great measure know the business he came about, partly by the vision and its interpretation, partly by what he might have heard from them that Cornelius sent for him, unto whom Cornelius had declared the whole matter, as we find, ver. 8; yet Peter's question is but necessary, for to give Cornelius an opportunity to acquaint his friends, who were met there, with all that had passed.

30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing,

s ch. 1. 10.
1 Mark 28. 3
Mark 16. 5.
Luke 24. 4.

Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; Cornelius does not intend to declare by this how long he had fasted; but he tells him when he, being fasting, saw the vision, which was four days before, at the same time of the day. The ninth hour, which was a time of prayer, it being the time of offering the evening sacrifice: see chap. iii. 1. A man, in appearance, but an angel indeed, as in the 3rd verse. In bright clothing; why angels appeared in bright or white raiment, see chap. i. 10.

31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

u ver. 4. &c.
Dan. 10. 12.
x Heb. 6. 10.

Alms; of which see the 4th verse. In the sight of God; unto which, not only the outward gift, but the inward affection, is visible; and this is peculiarly in the sight of God, the other may be seen also by men.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

The substance of this verse is in the 5th and 6th verses before-going. Cornelius might say this to excuse his sending for Peter, being a stranger to him; as also to encourage Peter to speak in such a matter as God had appeared in.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

Immediately therefore I sent to thee; as a hungry soul delays not to send for food, as soon as he knows where to have it. Thou hast well done that thou art come; which does not only approve of St. Peter's coming, but thank him for it. Present before God; we will set ourselves to attend to thy words, as if we saw God looking upon us, whom we call to witness that we are ready to do whatsoever he shall require of us. Thus it becomes every one that would profit by the word of God, to attend upon it. Men do not behave themselves as before God, and therefore they enjoy nothing less than God in an ordinance, and are as if God had taken no notice of them.

34 ¶ Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

y Dent. 10.
17. 2 Chro.
19. 7. Job
34. 19.

Opened his mouth; an expression used (as formerly) in matters of great moment, as Matt. v. 2. God is no respecter of persons; God does not accept of one because he is a Jew, and respect another because he is a Gentile; though St. Paul, being prejudiced by his education, had been carried along with that error of the Jews; against which, notwithstanding, God had declared himself even unto them, Deut. x. 17, which is also confirmed unto us in

q John 4. 9.
& 18. 28.
ch. 11. 3.
Gal. 2. 12,
14.

r ch. 15. 5, 9.
Eph. 3. 6.

the New Testament, Rom. ii. 11; 1 Pet. i. 17: so that our being of any nation or any condition, rich or poor, honoured or despised, on the one side recommends us not unto God, and on the other side it will not hinder us from being accepted with the Lord.

35 But <sup>g</sup>in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

In every nation; even though Romans or Italians, of which nation Cornelius was, and might probably be worse thought of by the Jews, because they supposed themselves to have been hardly used by them. Feareth him, and worketh righteousness; these two particulars include the observation of both tables of the law: the fearing of God comprehends piety, that is, the true worship of the true God; and working righteousness, includes all the duties to our neighbour; and both describe a truly good and holy man, such as Cornelius was; unto whose case this is to be applied.

36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, <sup>a</sup>preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (<sup>b</sup>he is Lord of all:)

The word; the word of reconciliation betwixt God and man, not only betwixt God and the Jews, but betwixt him and the Gentiles also, he had sent unto Israel by his prophets formerly. God is said to create peace to him that is afar off, the Gentile, as well as to him that is near, the Jew, Isa. lvii. 19; and that salvation was not limited to the Jews only, Psal. lxxii. 7, 8; Isa. xlix. 6, might be known unto them by the examples of Melchizedek, Job, and Naaman, who did no ways belong unto them; but this was now more manifest: God preaching this peace betwixt himself and all nations indifferently, 1. By Christ in his own person preaching this, Matt. viii. 11, and telling them that by his death he would draw all men unto him, John xii. 32. 2. This peace is preached to be had by Christ, or only through Christ, by the angels themselves, Luke ii. 14. And, 3. By all the apostles and ministers of the gospel. Speaking to the Gentiles, St. Paul says, Ye who were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ, Eph. ii. 13; and it was their constant doctrine, that there was no name under heaven by which men could be saved, but the name of Christ, chap. iv. 12; and that it was all one whether they were Greeks or Jews, &c., but Christ is all, and in all, Col. iii. 11: so that in this doctrine there is an exact harmony betwixt the Old and New Testaments, the prophets and the apostles. He is Lord of all; Christ is Lord, not of the Jews, or one people, only; but of the Gentiles, all nations, also, as Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Rom. iii. 29.

37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judæa, and <sup>c</sup>began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

They had heard of the doctrine of the gospel by common fame and report, which could not but spread abroad; all might know that Christ and his apostles did preach, though these might be ignorant of the particular doctrines which they taught, and which Peter was now sent to instruct them in: or by the word (in a usual Hebraism) the matter of the gospel may be meant, as the life, death, and resurrection of our blessed Saviour, which they could not but have heard several reports of. After the baptism which John preached; who, as the Elijah who was promised, Mal. iv. 5, was the forerunner of the Lord.

38 How <sup>d</sup>God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; <sup>e</sup>for God was with him.

God anointed Jesus: it was usual to anoint their kings, priests, and prophets, unto all which offices Christ was anointed by his Father; hence called Christ, as in the Old Testament the Messiah. Of Nazareth: the apostle is not ashamed of this name, though given to our Saviour by way of contempt; he gloried in the cross of Christ. With the Holy Ghost and with power; Christ was endued with the Almighty Spirit of God, and with the power of it. Who went about doing good: all the miracles our blessed Saviour wrought, were works of mercy, for the benefit and relief of those upon whom he wrought them: he could have wrought miracles to destroy and ruin such as would not believe in him, which he was often provoked unto; nay, his apostles would have had him but to permit them by fire from heaven to destroy the Samaritans, Luke ix. 54, and he would not. Healing all that were oppressed of the devil: the deliverances our Saviour so often wrought upon such as were possessed of devils, was to show unto them that he was come to destroy the works of the devil, and to cast him out of the souls of men who were spiritually possessed by him; which also our Saviour did, so that it was a happy calamity for them, which brought them to Christ. For God was with him; God was with our Saviour, 1. By his might and power doing such miracles. 2. In his extraordinary love to him, Matt. iii. 17, and always hearing of him, John xi. 42. And also, 3. God was with Christ ὁμοιωδώς, in the fulness of the Godhead, Col. ii. 9.

39 And <sup>f</sup>we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; <sup>g</sup>whom they slew and hanged on a tree:

We are witnesses; the apostles, whom Christ had chosen to go in and out with him, and to be eye and ear witnesses of all that was done by him, or against him. Whom they slew: their killing of our Saviour is the rather here spoken of, to show how rightfully the Jews were now to be forsaken, and that they had no cause to complain of the calling in of the Gentiles, being themselves had in such a manner rejected Christ; but especially, that they who were here met, and we, all might consider, how much it cost our blessed Saviour to deliver us from sin and hell. He was made a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13, as Deut. xxi. 23, that the blessing of Abraham might come upon us, Gal. iii. 14.

40 Him <sup>h</sup>God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly;

Let these Gentiles be deterred from believing in Christ, and take offence at his cross, St. Peter preached unto them the resurrection, which suddenly and powerfully followed. And this he tells them was unquestionable, as appeared by all the ways that any thing can be proved by; Christ was seen, and heard, and felt after his resurrection, as the beloved disciple tells us, 1 John i. 1, and manifested his victory over death for us.

41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, <sup>i</sup>even to us, <sup>k</sup>who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

Not to all the people: Christ after his resurrection appeared not to the wicked Jews, for being to suffer no more, his enemies were not vouchsafed a sight of him; and thus he did not manifest himself unto the world, John xiv. 22. But unto witnesses; these witnesses were the apostles, who were chosen by God himself immediately; and the vacancy supplied by lot, which was at God's direction, chap. i. 24, 26. The metaphor here used is taken from the ordinary way then in use of choosing men into offices, which is here alluded to. Eat and drink with him: though in the gospel history we do not read that our Saviour drank after he rose again; yet it is sufficiently implied, being he did eat, and make a meal with his disciples, Luke xxiv. 30, 42, 43; John xxi. 12; and eating is put in Scripture for the whole refection, Matt. xv. 2, compared with Luke vii. 36.

42 And <sup>l</sup>he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify <sup>m</sup>that it is he which was ordained of God <sup>n</sup>to be the Judge of quick and dead.

Our Saviour gave this charge to his apostles before his ascension, Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; Luke xxiv. 47; and foretold that they should execute this his charge, chap. i. 8. Ordained of God to be the Judge: that God

<sup>g</sup> ch. 15. 9.
<sup>h</sup> Rom. 2. 13,
<sup>i</sup> 27. & 3. 22,
<sup>j</sup> 29. & 10. 12,
<sup>k</sup> 13. 1 Cor.
<sup>l</sup> 12. 13. Gal.
<sup>m</sup> 2. 28. Eph. 2. 13, 16. & 3. 6.

<sup>a</sup> Is. 57. 19.
<sup>b</sup> Eph. 2. 14,
<sup>c</sup> 16, 17.
<sup>d</sup> Col. 1. 20.
<sup>e</sup> Mat. 28. 18.
<sup>f</sup> Rom. 10. 12.
<sup>g</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 27. Eph. 1. 20, 22; 1 Pet. 3. 22. Rev. 17. 14. & 19. 16.

<sup>c</sup> Luke 4. 14

<sup>d</sup> Luke 4. 18.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 2. 22.
<sup>f</sup> & 4. 27.
<sup>g</sup> Heb. 1. 9.

<sup>h</sup> John 3. 2.

<sup>i</sup> John 14.
17, 22.
ch. 13. 31.

<sup>k</sup> Luke 24.
30, 43.
John 21. 13.

<sup>l</sup> Mat. 28. 19,
20. ch. 1. 8.
<sup>m</sup> John 5.
26, 27.
<sup>n</sup> ch. 17. 31.
n Rom. 14.
9, 19.

<sup>o</sup> 2 Cor. 5. 10.
<sup>p</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 1. 1 Pet. 4. 5.

hath ordained to judge the world by Jesus Christ, Scripture abundantly testifies, John v. 26, 27; 2 Tim. iv. 1; 1 Pet. iv. 5. And this is here spoken of the apostle, and was given in charge by our Saviour to be principally preached of by them all, because the resurrection of Christ, and the glory of his kingdom in this world, is clouded by the blindness and hardness of men; as also, because it is of the greatest concernment unto all, that at any time hear the word of God, to be persuaded of this, that Christ, whose gospel and word they hear, will judge them according unto it. Quick; such as shall be alive at the coming of our Lord to judgment, 1 Thess. iv. 15.

43 °To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name <sup>p</sup>whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

This our Saviour had told his apostles, which St. Peter here preaches to his auditors. It was included in the very first promise recorded by Moses, Gen. iii. 15, The seed of the woman shall break the serpent's head; and so continued through all ages of the church, to be manifest in such degrees as it pleased the wisdom of God to make it known: it is certain that all the ceremonial law concerning sacrifices did testify this very thing; for by it, it did appear, that without shedding of blood there was no remission of sin, as Heb. ix. 22; and it is manifest by the light of nature, that the blood of bulls and goats could not take away sins, as Heb. x. 4. But through Christ's name, for his sake, and by virtue of his merit, who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, Rom. iv. 25, we shall receive remission of sins, Heb. ix. 13, 14.

44 ¶ While Peter yet spake these words, <sup>q</sup>the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.

While Peter yet spake these words, that God might miraculously show his approbation of what Peter had said, and to assure Peter of the real conversion of these Gentiles, which all the Jews did make such a difficulty to believe, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word; such fiery tongues in a visible shape as had appeared unto the apostles, chap. ii. 3, whereby the inward powerful effects of the Spirit upon their hearts was signified. What wonderful effects had this short sermon! And doubtless, were practisers but as sincere, and hearers as intent, now-a-days, as then, we should find that the hand of the Lord is not shortened.

45 <sup>r</sup>And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, <sup>s</sup>because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

They of the circumcision; such as were not only themselves circumcised, but born of circumcised parents, who are thus called, Gal. ii. 12. These, not minding, or understanding, the many predictions of the calling of the Gentiles, thought that Christ was only promised unto the Jews; and were amazed to see now such an argument as might convince them to the contrary. Poured out, speaks the abundant measure in which the Holy Ghost was given unto them.

46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter,

With tongues; with variety of languages, or strange tongues, as in the day of Pentecost, chap. ii. 6. Answered; an ordinary Hebraism for speaking, though the first part of any discourse. And Peter, knowing that these miraculous fiery tongues did show that these men did partake of the same Spirit from whom the apostles had received them, he makes an inference from thence.

47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost <sup>t</sup>as well as we?

This question, as chap. viii. 36, is without question, and denies that any can forbid water, that is, in order to baptize such as these. As if the apostle had argued thus: They that have the grace signified or promised, have a right unto the seal of the promise: but these Gentiles have the grace signified or promised in baptism; they had the inward part, and therefore the outward part could not be denied unto them. He that hath the inheritance, may claim the writings, wax, and parchment that belong unto it.

48 "And he commanded them to be baptized <sup>u</sup>in the name of the Lord. Then <sup>v</sup>prayed they him to tarry certain days.

In the name of the Lord; that is, in the name of our Saviour. But this does not imply, but that they were baptized according to our Saviour's prescription, Matt. xxviii. 19: but the Jews by their baptism were become the Lord's, and had given up their names to Jesus Christ; under which title, the Lord, not only our Saviour, but the Father who anointed him, and the Spirit by whom he was anointed, is to be understood. Then prayed they; Cornelius and the rest of his friends, which he caused to be present. At their entreaty, Peter, and others that came with him, (as chap. xi. 12,) tarried there, that they might further instruct, confirm, and comfort them; (as the best have ever need to learn, and to grow in grace and knowledge;) and by this Peter showed that he looked upon himself and others as not bound to observe those precepts, (of the wise men, as they called them,) forbidding them all familiarity with the uncircumcised.

CHAP. XI

Peter, being accused for conversing with the Gentiles, maketh his defence; the church is satisfied, and glorifieth God, 1—18. The gospel having spread as far as Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch, 19—21, Barnabas is sent thither, who fetcheth Saul from Tarsus: many people are taught at Antioch, where the disciples are first called Christians, 22—26. Agabus prophesieth a dearth: the disciples send relief from Antioch to the brethren in Judea by Barnabas and Saul, 27—30.

AND the apostles and brethren that were in Judæa heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

And brethren; the rest of the believers, who had not only one God to their Father, but one church to their mother, and were born of the same Spirit, and were fed by the same milk of the word of God. The Gentiles had also received the word of God; this was a most incredible thing unto them who were of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and were not acquainted with that mystery that Abraham should have a seed of his faith, upon whom all the promises were entailed. These looked upon the Gentiles as most execrable persons, such as the apostle describes, Eph. ii. 12, that had no hope, and were without God; and therefore no less than a miracle, and that well attested, as this was, could make them change their opinion.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, <sup>a</sup>they that were of the circumcision contended with him,

They that were of the circumcision; they were such Jews as conversed with them of the church, and argued against them for taking in the Gentiles into any fellowship with them. But it may be that the believing Jews might for a time be very weak, and offended at it, until they were further satisfied by the following relation of St. Peter: till then they disputed, and brought what arguments they could against it.

3 Saying, <sup>b</sup>Thou wentest in to men <sup>c</sup>uncircumcised, <sup>d</sup>and didst eat with them.

This is the objection they make against Peter, That, contrary to the tradition of their elders, and precept of their wise men, he had familiarly conversed with the Gentiles: see chap. x. 28. This they look upon as piacular, although no conversation in order to the gaining of the Gentiles unto God was ever forbidden, but only such as might withdraw the Jews from God.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it <sup>e</sup>unto them, saying,

q ch. 4. 31.
& 8. 15, 16,
17. & 11. 15.

r ver. 23.

s ch. 11. 18.
Gal. 3. 14.

t ch. 11. 17.
† 15. 8, 9,
Rom. 10. 12.

u 1 Cor. 1.
v ch. 2. 38.
& 8. 16.

a ch. 10. 45.
Gal. 2. 12.

b ch. 10. 28.
c Gal. 2. 12.

d Luke 1. 3.

This great apostle condescends to the least and weakest amongst them, and gives an account of what he had done, and the reasons that moved him unto it, if by any means he might gain some, and confirm others.

<sup>e ch. 10. 9. &c.</sup> 5 *I was in the city of Joppa praying : and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me :

See this whole narration spoken to in the foregoing chapter. It came even to me; to show that he was especially concerned in this vision, it being for his instruction and regulation.

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

Fastened mine eyes; it speaketh his great intention of mind upon it; God so ordering of it, that it might leave the greater impression upon him.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat.

He might now use them without any distinction indifferently.

8 But I said, Not so, Lord : for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

St. Peter here avoucheth that he had lived in this ceremonial righteousness, though he thought himself far from being justified thereby. Hath at any time entered into my mouth; he abstained from all the appearances of that evil.

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

This is twice spoken to St. Peter, that it might be the more unquestionable with him and others, it seeming otherwise very strange; and, it may be, therefore twice by St. Luke recorded.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

This was done three times; for the same reason but now mentioned, that God might more abundantly manifest this mystery of the calling in of the Gentiles, which had been so long hid. All were drawn up again into heaven; all this was from heaven; unto which also it tended, namely, to bring the Gentiles thither.

11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cæsarea unto me.

So many sent, and such a journey willingly undertaken, for to gain instruction in the way of life.

<sup>f John 16. 13. ch. 10. 19. & 15. 7. g ch. 10. 23.</sup> 12 And the spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house :

These six brethren accompanied me; whom they might hear testify the same thing, that in the mouths of so many it might be established. We entered into the man's house: the man meant is Cornelius, concerning the entry into whose house, and converse with him, the doubt or controversy was that he was now speaking to.

<sup>h ch. 10. 30.</sup> 13 <sup>b</sup> And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter ;

An angel, who, by reason of his appearing a man, is, in chap. x. 30, called a man.

14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

God promises that upon his obedience to this oracle, in sending for Peter, he should tell him those things that were necessary to be known by him and his whole family unto their salvation. Whatsoever was formerly the case of such as obeyed the precepts of Noah, (as they were called,) after Christ is come, and preached unto the world, there is no other way unto salvation but through him.

15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning.

As I began to speak; whilst Peter was speaking, as chap. i. 1. The Holy Ghost fell on them, as in the day of Pentecost, chap. ii. 4, he had fallen on the apostles; either visibly, by fiery cloven tongues; or rather by extraordinarily enduing them with the gift of tongues; enabling the most illiterate amongst them to speak in any language needful for any to understand towards their salvation.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, <sup>k Matt. 3. 11. John 1. 26. 33. ch. 1. 5. & 19. 4. 1. 15. 44. 3. Joel 2. 28. & 3. 18.</sup> John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

Of the Lord; of Christ, who is every where so called. He said; but these words seem rather spoken by St. John himself, Matt. iii. 11; Mark i. 8; which makes no difference; for, first, whatsoever a disciple of Christ says in his name, it is as if it were spoken by himself: He that heareth you, heareth me. But, secondly, Though this was spoken by the Baptist, it was spoken by our Saviour also, chap. i. 5. John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost; by which the great difference is implied betwixt outward baptism (administered by whomsoever, though the Baptist himself) and the inward baptism of the Holy Ghost, which, as fire, separates powerfully the scum and dross of sin from us. With the Holy Ghost; the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit.

17 <sup>m ch. 15. 4.</sup> Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God ?

The apostle's argument is cogent: They who have the grace signified by baptism, ought to have the seal of that grace; but the Gentiles had the grace signified by baptism. Or, they who have the inward baptism, may not be denied the outward. As he that hath a right to an inheritance, cannot without injustice be denied the writings and seals thereunto belonging. To deny baptism unto any unto whom it doth belong, is to withstand God, and to keep back the token of God's love from such unto whom it is sent.

18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, <sup>n ch. 10. 47.</sup> Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

They held their peace; they were fully satisfied with the reason St. Peter had given them of his admitting the Gentiles unto baptism, and fellowship with him; wisely inferring from what Peter had said, that what he had done was of God, who was to be acknowledged in it. Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance: repentance is the gift of God, as well as faith, or any other grace, 2 Tim. ii. 25; nor can the greatest guilt affect the heart with true godly sorrow, until God hath quickened it. It is called repentance unto life, because God hath appointed that it should precede our entrance into life.

19 ¶ Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

So true hath it been from the beginning of the gospel, that sanguis martyrum est semen ecclesie. St. Stephen's death, and the persecution upon it, was a great means of disseminating the gospel. Thus all things work for good. Phenice; the country about Tyre. Cyprus; an island in the Mediterranean Sea. Antioch; the metropolis of Syria. This explains what was briefly said, chap. viii. 4, and showed what places the disciples were scattered into, and preached in. They preached to the Jews only, because they were not yet persuaded of the calling of the Gentiles; God suffering them to be enlightened by degrees.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

q ch. 6. 1. &
9. 22.

Men of Cyprus and Cyrene; they were such as were born in Cyprus and Cyrene, but had their habitation in Jerusalem, and now upon the persecution there fled unto Antioch; which by this means in time became the Jerusalem of the Gentile Christians, whither their greatest resort was. Spake unto the Grecians: here they of the dispersion taught not only such Hellenists as are spoken of, chap. vi. 1, who were born of Hebrew parents, though living out of the country of Judea; but such also amongst the Gentiles, (who are generally called Greeks since Alexander's time, who conquered all those nations round about, and brought in his own language amongst them,) who, forsaking idolatry, and worshipping the true God, were called σεβόμενοι, devout or religious persons, such as Cornelius is said to be, chap. x. 2. And thus God by degrees brought in the knowledge of himself, and his Son Jesus Christ. Preaching the Lord Jesus; which knowledge only is that which is necessary unto salvation, and that only which Saul determined to know, 1 Cor. ii. 2.

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

r Luke 1. 66.
ch. 2. 47.

The hand of the Lord; the power, assistance, and working of God, expressed by the hand, which is the organ or instrument men use in working. This hand or work of God was manifest, first, In the miracles which they wrought. Secondly, In the conversion of any by these miracles. For these alone cannot soften a heart; as appeared in Pharaoh, whose heart was hardened by them. A great number believed, and turned unto the Lord; faith and conversion are wrought by the hand of the Lord, and are his work. But in vain is faith pretended unto, when there is no change in heart and life. What God hath put together, none may put asunder.

22 ¶ Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

A. D. 42.

t ch. 9. 27.

Came unto the ears of the church; this pleonasm seems emphatical, to show with what readiness and delight the church heard the news of the conversion of so many to Christ. Of Barnabas we read, chap. iv. 36, who had given such an earnest of love to God, and true faith in Christ, for whose sake he sold what he had.

23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

u ch. 13. 43.
& 14. 22.

The grace of God; which appeared in their conversion, being made manifest by their professions, and answered by their pious lives and conversations; for all which they might cry, Grace, grace. By the grace of God, is also to be understood the increasing of the church, and adding to it such as should be saved. Was glad; this is matter of joy in heaven, Luke xv. 7, and of all such as are learning their lesson, and preparing for that blissful place. With purpose of heart; firm and fixed resolution, that come what can come, tribulation or distress, life or death, they would keep close to the profession of the truth of Christ. This purpose of heart is the same with the whole heart elsewhere; which must cleave unto the Lord; be joined, or stick close, to God's truth and ways.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

x ch. 6. 5.

y ver. 21.
ch. 5. 14.

Barnabas is here described to be beyond what the Jews called a righteous man, who would say to his neighbour, That which is yours is yours, and that which is mine is mine; meaning such as would do no wrong. But Barnabas, as the good man in their esteem, (such a one as the apostle speaks of, Rom. v. 7, for whom one would dare to die,) had actually made, and not called only, that which was his his poor neighbours', selling what he had to bestow upon them, as chap. iv. 37. Much people was added unto the Lord; his good works, accompanying his good preaching, might be a great means of the conversion of so many.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:

A. D. 43.
s ch. 9. 30.

Saul, or Paul, being Barnabas's friend and acquaintance, whom Barnabas had brought to the knowledge of the apostles, chap. ix. 27; he goes now to seek him, that they might advise and strengthen one another in the work of the Lord.

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

l Or, in the church.

A whole year they assembled themselves: frequency of meeting to partake of the ordinances of God, is the great reason why the gospel was so prevalent in this place. The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch; which will be renowned so long as the world lasts, because here the banner of Christ was first publicly set up, and men listed under him: and this by Divine authority, for the word imports no less. And that it was not a name they gave themselves, much less was it a name the enemies of Christianity gave unto the professors of it, for they called them Nazarenes, or Galileans, out of contempt. But God would have Christ's disciples to be called Christians: not only as scholars were amongst the Greeks called from their masters, (viz. Platonists, Pythagoreans, &c.,) to teach us whom we profess to learn of, and to be instructed by; but to mind us of our union; for Christians are anointed ones, 1 John ii. 27, and are made by Christ (in a spiritual sense) kings and priests unto God and his Father, Rev. i. 6.

27 ¶ And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

a ch. 2. 17.
& 13. 1.
& 15. 32.
& 21. 9.

1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11.

These here meant were enabled to foretell things to come; a gift which God did furnish some of his church with on such an extraordinary occasion, Eph. iv. 11, whereby they did beforehand signify future things for the good of the church, as here.

28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

b ch. 21. 10.

By the Spirit; by a resolution from the Spirit, as one of his gifts, and not by judicial astrology, or any other means real or pretended; for it is a prerogative of God only to foretell things to come, as Isa. xli. 22, 23. Which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar: this famous Suetonius and other heathen writers make mention of, though some place it in one year, and some in another year, of Claudius's reign. It may be there were divers famines, or one might continue divers years; but thus God, who provided for the patriarchs by means of Joseph's foreseeing of the scarcity in Egypt and elsewhere, provides for his church now also by a like prediction. God's omniscience is exerted for his church's preservation.

29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa:

c Rom. 15.
26. 1 Cor. 16.
1. 2 Cor. 9. 1.

Every man according to his ability; which is the measure whereby we must mete out unto others: we are to give alms of such things as we have, or according as we are able, Luke xi. 41. These brethren, or believers, in Judea, were very poor, by reason of the extraordinary malice and persecution of the Jews against them, and therefore recommended by St. Paul unto them of Achaia, (especially to the Corinthians,) and to the believers in Macedonia.

30 ¶ Which also they did, and sent it to

d ch. 12. 25.

A. D. 44. the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

To the elders; to the apostles; or if they (as it is probable) were gone out of Jerusalem, to the governors or chief of the churches; for the famine being to come over all Judea, it is most probable that the other churches, besides that in Jerusalem, did partake of this bounty.

CHAP. XII

King Herod persecuteth the Christians, killeth James, and imprisoneth Peter, who, upon the prayers of the church, is delivered by an angel, 1—19. Herod, in his pride assuming the glory due to God, is smitten by an angel, and dieth miserably, 20—23. After his death, the word of God prospereth, 24. Barnabas and Saul return to Antioch, 25.

NOW about that time Herod the king

<sup>1</sup> Or, began. || stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church.

There were several Herods mentioned in Scripture, being all of the family of Herod the Great, (by whose name they were called,) as Herod that killed the children in Bethlehem, called Hecolonita; another that beheaded St. John, and derided our Saviour, this Herod was surnamed Antipas: the Herod here spoken of was called Agrippa; the son, or, as others think, the nephew, of Aristobulus, and was the father of that Agrippa we read of, chap. xxv. 26, being viceroys, or king, under the Roman emperor. This Herod did not only kill some, but punished others with banishment and blows; and especially the governors of the church, knowing how much all suffer in them.

<sup>a</sup> Matt. 4. 21. <sup>b</sup> 20. 23. 2 And he killed James * the brother of John with the sword.

Who had especially the care of the church at Jerusalem: one eminent amongst the apostles, and one of the sons of thunder, (or Boanerges,) for his zealous and earnest preaching, and therefore the more hated by Herod: so that which our Saviour had foretold him came now to pass, Matt. xx. 23, that he drank of the cup our Saviour did drink of. There was another James, who wrote the Epistle known by his name, and was called James the Less; because, as some think, he was brought to the knowledge of Christ after the other, of whom we read, Mark xv. 40.

3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were <sup>b</sup> the days of unleavened bread.)

All the posterity of Herod the Great, by his example, studied chiefly to please the Roman emperors, and to gratify the Jews, whether by right or wrong. The days of unleavened bread; or the passover, which festival solemnity lasted eight days; and God overruled the hypocrisy of Herod (for he did not out of piety observe this time) for the preservation of Peter; and Herod might fear some tumult of the people, in so great a concourse, upon Peter's death, for which he did defer it: however, the perverseness of the Jews is very remarkable, who were mad with rage against Christ and his apostles, at such times in which they pretended to serve the God of love and peace.

<sup>c</sup> John 21. 18. 4 And <sup>e</sup> when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

Four quaternions of soldiers: there were sixteen soldiers appointed to keep Peter; the Romans using four soldiers at a time to keep sentry, and the Jews dividing their nights into four watches, there were enough to relieve the other, and to set a new watch as often as was required for every night; of which four at a time, two were with the prisoner, and perhaps, for the greater security, bound with the same chain, and two did always stand at the door or gate; and thus they might the rather do, out of great caution, having heard what miracles Peter did, and that he had been delivered by an angel out of prison, chap. v. 19. After Easter; that day in which the paschal lamb was eat, on which the Jews would put none to death, that they might not eclipse the joy of that day. Bring him forth to the people; to do with him what they would, leaving him to their mercy, or rather cruelty.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: <sup>1</sup> Or, instant and earnest prayer was made. but || prayer was made without ceasing of the Church unto God for him.

<sup>2</sup> Cor. 1. 11. <sup>3</sup> Thess. 5. 17. Eph. 6. 18. 1 Thess. 5. 17. Peter therefore was kept in prison, till a fit time to offer him up as a sacrifice unto the people: so basely do wicked men stoop for their ends. But prayer was made: the only help or hope poor Christians had, was from prayer (preces et lachrymæ); there are no quaternions of soldiers can keep the passage shut that is towards heaven. Without ceasing; continued, long prayers, without intermission; but also fervent and earnest prayers, ἀλοψυχῶς, with all the might of their souls; remembering the apostle now in bonds, as bound with him, Heb. xiii. 3.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

Brought him forth, to be put to death. The same night: this is a night to be remembered, as that in which God delivered his Israel out of Egypt: when both were come to the utmost extremity, and at the pit's brink, then so God does his marvellous work of deliverance, that it ought to be had in remembrance, Psal. cv. 5. Peter was sleeping: innocency hath this advantage, and a good conscience acquiesces in the providence of God; it hath God to its friend; and if he be for us, who can be against us? Bound with two chains: see ver. 4: to which may be added, that with one chain St. Peter's right hand was bound to the soldier's left; with the other chain his left hand to the other soldier's right; for so was their manner for their greater security, that they might not let the prisoner escape: thus persecutors are skilful to destroy; but no device can avail against any whom God will save.

7 And, behold, <sup>d</sup> the angel of the Lord <sup>e</sup> came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

<sup>d</sup> ch. 5. 19. The angel of the Lord, whose office it is to minister for the heirs of salvation, Heb. i. 14, and who willingly fulfil this will of the Lord. Came upon him, as Luke ii. 9, suddenly and unexpectedly. A light shined in the prison; whether this light was from the bright body the angel assumed, or from some other cause, we are not told, and therefore it is not necessary for us to know; but it was a light only to Peter, but darkness to his keepers; as the pillar of fire enlightened only the Israelites; which made them both the more strange and miraculous. The angel smote Peter (as one jogs, or gently strikes another) to awaken him; thus God was waking, though Peter slept; and by his providence watches over all his people for their preservation. His chains fell off from his hands; chains could not hold any whom God will have free; every thing loses its force when God suspends or withdraws his concurrence.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

Gird thyself; the custom being to wear long garments, they were not so fit to go about any business until they had girt their garments to them; hence Jeremiah is commanded to get a girdle about him, Jer. xiii. 1, when he was to be sent on God's errand. The sandals were little other than sole-leathers, bound or fastened with thongs. Thy garment; the uppermost vest, answerable to a cloak amongst us. God furnishes his people thus with necessities, and he will have them use them, so far as they are able to serve them, even then when he is working of miracles for their deliverances.

9 And he went out, and followed him ; and †wist not that it was true which was done by the angel ; but thought †he saw a vision.

The greatness and suddenness of the deliverance was such, as it amazed him, it seemed incredible unto him : not that he questioned God's power or goodness ; but knowing that he was to suffer for Christ's name's sake, he might the rather not look for such a deliverance, and when it came, be as one that dreams, as Psal. cxxvi. 1 : God therefore bringing his people to such extremities, that his salvation might be the more astonishing.

10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city ; ¶which opened to them of his own accord : and they went out, and passed on through one street ; and forthwith the angel departed from him.

The first and the second ward ; guard or sentinels. The iron gate that leadeth unto the city ; the outermost gate that led out of the prison into the city, not that the prison itself was out of the city. Which opened to them of his own accord : God worketh a series of miracles in their fit place and time ; he could have done them all together, and have opened his iron gate beforehand, when he conducted Peter through the first, then through the second watch ; but it is good for Peter, and us, to be convinced that we stand every moment in need of God's conduct and deliverance.

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that †the Lord hath sent his angel, and †hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

When Peter was come to himself, out of that amazement which so many wonderful things had wrought in him, that he could compose himself to reflect upon what he had heard and seen, he knew his deliverance was real and effectual. Delivered me ; from Herod, who had resolved to have killed him, as he had done James, ver. 2 ; and from the people's expectation, who had heard the report of Herod's resolution, and longed for the fulfilling of it.

12 And when he had considered the thing, †he came to the house of Mary the mother of †John, whose surname was Mark ; where many were gathered together †praying.

Peter, being delivered, meditates upon the greatness of the danger that he had been in, and the goodness of God that had delivered him, and this whilst walking in the street, and going along : no place can exclude good thoughts and holy meditations. The mother of John ; the mother is here described by the son, as the more known person ; here the parent gains reputation, and to be remembered in this Scripture, for her son's sake. Thus a wise son made a glad mother, as Prov. x. 1. Mark ; some think this was he that wrote the Gospel called by his name. Many were gathered together : in this time of persecution the Christians met secretly, and in small numbers, as they could ; these here mentioned are thought to be private Christians, because it appears by the 17th verse, that James, &c. were not there.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came || to hearken, named Rhoda.

The door of the gate ; this was the outermost door to the porch, or court before the house. A damsel came to hearken ; being in great fear of a surprisal, they ordered one to observe, and give an answer unto any that should come to the house ; which was the more heedfully done, because it was at an unseasonable time of the night ; yet these holy men broke their rest, and exposed themselves to many fears and dangers, rather than not to assemble to serve God, when they could not serve him otherwise.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.

She opened not the gate for gladness ; as one from herself, not knowing what to do for gladness. Great and sudden passions have caused strange ecstasies, and death itself sometimes ; the spirits in grief flowing too fast unto the heart to fortify it, and in joy leaving the heart as fast, to meet the object that causeth it.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, †It is his angel.

Thou art mad ; thou speakest thou knowest not what ; thinking her, out of fear, to have been decomposed in her mind. It is his angel : some have thought, that by Peter's angel no other was meant than some messenger from Peter, which they might expect from him in such a case as he was in ; now though ἀγγελος (the word here) signifies a messenger or an angel, indifferently, yet how could Rhoda then know it to have been Peter's voice ? a messenger's voice being no more like his that sent him than another man's. They did probably mean some angel that had assumed Peter's shape, and imitated his voice : and the Jews having had a constant opinion, that at least every good man hath a guardian angel which God appoints to him for a means of his preservation, might be apt to imagine that this was that angel whose charge St. Peter was, Matt. xviii. 10. Though that angel spoken of, Gen. xlviii. 16, most probably was the angel of the new covenant, and not a created angel, being Jacob blesteth in his name ; yet the opinion of tutelary angels, though not certain or needful, is to this day thought probable.

16 But Peter continued knocking : and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

Peter continued knocking ; Peter might be unwilling to have his entrance into the house deferred, 1. Out of fear of being taken again, and his life concerned upon it. 2. Out of an earnest desire to see the brethren, whom he might hope to meet with there. 3. Out of zeal to declare the mercy of God towards him ; this fire was kindled in him, and he sought vent for it.

17 But he, °beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

Beckoning ; it was usual by the motion of the hand both to desire silence and to crave audience. How the Lord had brought him out ; Peter gives God the glory, though an angel had been the means of his delivery. James ; this James was the son of Alpheus, Matt. x. 3 ; Mark iii. 18, and succeeded the other James, (the brother of John, of whom, ver. 2,) in governing the church at Jerusalem. Went into another place ; Peter could not but know he should be sought after, and therefore durst not abide in one place, lest he should ruin himself, and endanger his friends that should harbour him. Thus the great apostle, as David formerly, was hunted, as one hunteth a partridge in the mountains, 1 Sam. xxvi. 20.

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.

The soldiers, who were bound with Peter in the same chains, could not but miss him as soon as they did awake, and with admiration find the chains still holding them, though loosened from Peter. What strange imaginations they might have, is not to be expressed, though some guess at it.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And

† Or, to ask who was there.

<sup>n</sup> Gen. 48. 16.
† Matt. 18. 10.

<sup>o</sup> ch. 13. 16.
¶ 19. 32.
|| 21. 40.

he went down from Judæa to Cæsarea, and there abode.

He examined the keepers; that is, judicially; proceeding against them for the escape of St. Peter. Commanded that they should be put to death; they were sentenced to be led away, and it is most probably thought, unto the place of execution. The instruments in persecution God many times meets with in this world, and sometimes by the persecutors themselves.

1 Or, here an hostile mind, intending near.
 † Gr. that was over the king's chamber.
 † Kings v. 9, 11.
 Ezek. 27, 17.
 20 ¶ And Herod ¶ was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus † the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because † their country was nourished by the king's country.

Tyre and Sidon; these were two coast towns in Phœnicia, famous, especially the former, for their great trading; and being rich, might be insolent, or possibly might tempt Herod to a war against them, whose conquest would pay the charge of it. The king's chamberlain, or chief of his bed-chamber. Desired peace, or begged pardon; there being no war yet begun. Their country was nourished by the king's country; these cities lying upon the sea, had little land belonging to them, and of old were forced to have their provision from other places, especially from Judæa; thus Solomon gave Hiram, king of Tyre, twenty thousand measures of wheat for his household, and twenty measures of pure oil yearly, 1 Kings v. 9, 11; and long after that, they of Judah and Israel are said to have traded with their wheat in Tyre, Ezek. xxvii. 17.

21 And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them.

Upon a set day; this was (says Josephus, cap. 19. lib. 7) the second day of the sports or games, which Herod had instituted in honour of the emperor Claudius; or, it may be, such a day as Herod had appointed to determine the difference betwixt him and the Tyrians. Royal apparel; such, saith Josephus, as were made of silver, woven with extraordinary art, and did reflect strangely the beams of the sun shining upon it. Sat upon his throne; an elevated place, from whence he might the better be seen and heard.

22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

These impious flatterers destroy whom they exalt; for God will pull down his rivals.

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

An angel had delivered Peter, and here an angel destroys Herod: all that heavenly host fulfil God's will for the deliverance of his church, and the destruction of his enemies. He gave not God the glory; priding himself in the acclamation the people had made, and not attributing his eloquence and glory to God, as the giver of them; or rather, not repressing or punishing their blasphemy; whereas Peter durst not accept of undue honour from Cornelius, chap. x. 26, nor the angel from St. John, Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 9. He was eaten of worms; either breeding in his bowels, or in his flesh, after a more unusual manner; as it is recorded of Herod the Great, that he was eaten up of lice. No creature so little or contemptible, but it can execute God's judgments on whom he please.

24 ¶ But the word of God grew and multiplied.

Grew; the word of God is compared here to seed, as in our Saviour's parable, Matt. xiii. 19. Multiplied; the number of believers multiplied through the word, which was sown, as seed is scattered abroad. So true it is, that persecutors, by their pulling down of the church, do but build it up.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ¶ ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

¶ Or, charge.
 ch. 11. 30, 32.
 † ch. 12. 5.
 † 12. 10, 17.
 † ver. 12.

From Jerusalem; they returned unto Antioch, from whence they were sent, chap. xi. 26, 30, to carry the benevolence of the church of Antioch to that of Judea. Their ministry; this was the ministry or service they were appointed to do. John; of whom before, ver. 12.

CHAP. XIII

Barnabas and Saul, being set apart with fasting and prayer, are sent forth by the Holy Ghost to the work of their calling, 1—5. At Paphos, Elymas the sorcerer, opposing the Gospel, is smitten with blindness, and the deputy Sergius Paulus converted to the faith, 6—12. Paul and his company come to Antioch in Pisidia: Paul preacheth Christ, and the necessity of faith in him unto justification, 13—41. The Gentiles desire to hear the word again: many are converted, 42, 43. The envious Jews gainsay and blaspheme: the apostles profess to turn to the Gentiles, of whom many believe, 44—49. The Jews raise a persecution, and expel Paul and Barnabas, who go to Iconium, 50—52.

NOW there were *in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as † Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and † Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, ¶ which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

The church that was at Antioch; the true church, which hath a being, and whose Builder and Maker is God. Other churches (as that of the circumcision) are no churches or congregations of the faithful. Prophets and teachers; these two offices might be in the same person, as he that had the gift of prophecy, and could foretell things to come, might be a teacher to instruct the people; but yet they were frequently appertaining to several persons, one excelling in one gift, another in another. Simeon that was called Niger; this Simeon is thus distinguished from Simon Peter, and from Simon the Canaanite, this name of Niger being given him by the Romans. Lucius; this hath been thought the name of Luke, it being more after the Latin termination; and that it might be he that wrote the Gospel called by his name, and this book of the Acts. However, we meet with this name, Rom. xvi. 21; and St. Paul sends salutation unto him that was so called. Of Cyrene; born at a place so called, or brought up in the synagogue of the Cyrenians; of which, chap. vi. 9. Either this Manaen was Herod's foster-brother, or had the same tutors and instructors with him, their education being together. This Herod was Herod Antipas, who set at nought our Saviour, and killed the Baptist. And yet Manaen, as another Moses, kept his integrity in that Pharaoh's court; and, as Moses, he choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, Heb. xi. 25. Thus there was an Obadiah in Ahab's house, 1 Kings xviii. 3, and divers believe in Nero's family, Phil. iv. 22.

2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

Ministered; the word importeth the exercise of any public office, sacred or civil. But in the former verse mention being made of prophets and teachers, these words are in sense too conjoined with them; and inform us, that they were preaching to and instructing of the people, (for there is no ministry or service which God likes better than to convert and save souls,) and, that all might be more effectual, as being done with greater earnestness and intention of mind, whilst they fasted. The Holy Ghost said; by some inward instinct in those prophets before spoken of, who had warrant to declare it as from him. Separate me Barnabas and Saul; these two were to be separated: as the first-born under the law, Exod. xiii. 12, and after them, or in their stead, the Levites, Numb. iii. 12; so were Paul and Barnabas in especial manner separated for the calling in of the Gentiles, that great ministry or service which God had for them to do.

3 And when they had fasted and pray-
 † ch. 6. 6.

A. D. 45.
 † ch. 11. 27.
 † 14. 28.
 † 15. 35.
 † ch. 11. 22.
 † Rom. 16. 21.
 † Or, Herod's foster-brother.

d Num. 6. 14.
 ch. 9. 15.
 † 22. 21.
 Rom. 1. 1.
 Gal. 1. 15.
 † 2. 8.
 † Matt. 9. 28.
 ch. 14. 26.

Rom. 10. 15. Eph. 3. 7, & 1 Tim. 2. 7, 2 Tim. 1. 11. Heb. 6. 4.

ed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

When they had fasted and prayed; a good preparation to enter into any business with, whereby they acknowledged that all success must come from God. Our blessed Saviour himself would not enter upon his ministry till he had fasted forty days, Matt. iv. ver. 2, compared with ver. 17. Laid their hands on them; Barnabas and Saul being called to be apostles already, this laying on of their hands upon them signifies, first, Their being set apart to this particular employment they were now to be sent about. Secondly, The approbation of the church to that heavenly call they had. Thirdly, Their praying for God's blessing upon them, and success upon the work they went for.

4 ¶ So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to <sup>g</sup> Cyprus.

Seleucia; a sea town of Cilicia, nigh unto Antioch, and over against Cyprus, built by Seleucus, and was a town of some note, but mentioned here only as in their passage to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, <sup>h</sup> they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also <sup>i</sup> John to their minister.

Salamis; the chief city of Cyprus, now called Famagusta, situate on the east side of the island, over against Syria. They preached, here and elsewhere, in the synagogues, either because they found no other such convenient places to preach in; (these being large structures, and many resorting to them;) or rather, because though they were sent unto the Gentiles, yet it was not till after the Jews should have refused the gospel, as may be seen throughout all this book, and in the conclusion of it, chap. xxviii. 28. They had also John to their minister: as chap. xii. 25.

6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found <sup>k</sup> a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus:

Unto Paphos; this city was on the west end of Cyprus, so that going from Salamis they went through the island: this place was famous for the worshipping of Venus. A certain sorcerer; there were many magicians about this time amongst the Jews, who by their false miracles endeavoured to bring the real miracles of our Saviour into contempt. As the magicians and sorcerers of Egypt, by their enchantments, for a while did seem to do such wonders as Moses had wrought by the finger of God, Exod. vii. 11.

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

The deputy of the country; whether he was pro-consul or proprietor, it is in effect the same; for he it was that governed the island. Desired to hear the word of God; this desire was extraordinary, and wrought by God, in order to the fitting him for the further mercy of his conversion and salvation. Where such a desire is, it shall be granted: Ask, and it shall be given you, Luke xi. 9.

8 But <sup>l</sup> Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

Elymas; this is another name of him that was called Bar-jesus, which was not unusual, as Simon Bar-jona, Matt. xvi. 17. This Elymas may be taken appellatively, and signifies the magician or sorcerer; but being it was a proper name unto others we read of, it may be so here.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) <sup>m</sup> filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

It is observable, that St. Luke never before called this great apostle by the name of Paul, and henceforth never calls him by the name of Saul. Though there be no great difference in these names, Saul might be more acceptable to the Jews, amongst whom hitherto he had conversed; and Paul a more pleasing name unto the Gentiles, unto whom he was now sent, and with whom for the future he should most converse. He was called Saul as he was a Jew born, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; and Paul, as he was a denizen of Rome; the Romans having that name in good account in several of their chief families. Filled with the Holy Ghost; zeal for God's glory, and faith and power to work the ensuing miracle.

10 And said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, <sup>n</sup> thou child of the devil, <sup>o</sup> thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

Mischief; paidupia signifies a facility or readiness in doing mischief, and that such who are given to sorcery are easily drawn to commit any kind of sin whatsoever. Thou child of the devil; because he did his work who is the destroyer, in hindering what he could the salvation of Sergius Paulus and his family. To pervert the right ways of the Lord; to make the way of God crooked, which is straight; and rugged, when indeed it is smooth: that is, to lay what rubs he could to keep any from coming unto, or continuing in, the ways of God.

11 And now, behold, <sup>p</sup> the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

The hand of the Lord is put for any powerful action of God, whether in mercy or judgment: here it is put for the Divine power wherewith God strikes his enemies. God did in judgment remember mercy, inflicting this blindness only for a season, that it might be rather a medicine than a punishment.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

The gospel which Paul preached; finding in it (though a wise man) depths beyond his fathoming; and all accompanied with such a power in doing of miracles, and changing of hearts and lives, as might well amaze so prudent and considering a man.

13 Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and <sup>q</sup> John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

Perga, a city in Pamphylia; not that there were any other cities of that name; but because this region was more commonly known, it being a country in the Lesser Asia, bordering on Cilicia. The departure of John (of whom before, ver. 5, and chap. xii. 25) was blameworthy, as chap. xv. 38. Some think he shunned that labour and suffering which he saw attended the gospel; others suppose that he returned to Jerusalem out of too fond an affection for his mother, who lived there; and it may be that he, retaining a great aversion from the Gentiles, might abhor to go amongst them: however, let him that standeth take heed lest he fall.

14 ¶ But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and <sup>r</sup> went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down.

Antioch in Pisidia; so called to distinguish it from the other Antioch, mentioned in the 1st verse, which was a city in Syria, as this in Pisidia, next to, or part of, Pamphylia. Went into the synagogue on the sabbath day; either to join with the Jews in their worship, which was not then unlawful; or to get an opportunity more publicly to preach the gospel unto them: they were no sooner come thither, but they mind that great business they went about.

15 And <sup>s</sup> after the reading of the Law and the Prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

The reading of the law was commanded by Moses; and they say that Ezra commanded the reading of the prophets also in their synagogues, which was used, as we may see in the 27th verse; and so divided into several sections, that once a year they might be all read over. The rulers of the synagogue; they were such as had the oversight of this service of God in their synagogues, that it might be performed according to the prescription. Men and brethren; a usual compellation which the Jews gave one another, owning them to serve the same God, and professing a suitable respect for them. If ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on; after the reading before spoken of, there followed a sermon, or exhortation; which the apostles are desired to make, the rulers of the synagogue, as it is supposed, having had some previous knowledge of them.

16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.

Beckoning with his hand, to procure silence and attention, as chap. xii. 17. And ye that fear God; besides the native Jews, the proselytes, and such out of all nations who left the idolatry of the Gentiles, and served the only true God, met together in the worship of God; these were the σεβόμενοι, spoken of chap. xvii. 4. It shows also what they are to do that would hear the word of the Lord with profit; viz. to attend unto it in the fear of his name.

17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

The God of this people of Israel; God was the God of Israel after a peculiar manner. Chose our fathers; having chosen them before all nations, to make him known unto them, to be served and worshipped by them. And exalted the people; and God exalted them in the time of Joseph, and whilst the memory of that great preservation wrought by his means did continue, till another king arose that knew not Joseph. An high arm; the many miracles done by the power of God towards the Israelites' deliverance out of Egypt. By which the apostle would have them remember, that they owed all which they challenged from their progenitors to the grace and blessing of God only, and that God may do with his own as he please.

18 And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

ετροφόθησεν, perhaps for ετροφόφορσεν, bore, or, fed them, as a nurse bears, or, feeds her child, Deut. i. 31. 2 Mac. 7. 27. according to the LXX. and so Chrysostom.

This is recorded, Psal. xc. 10, and remembered by the apostle, Heb. iii. 8, 9, and to be admired through all ages, that God should be so patient, or a people could be so perverse. Some instead of ετροφόφορσεν, read ετροφόφωρσεν, there being but one letter difference, (and such as are usually changed into one another,) and then it speaks God's providing for this people all that while, and carrying them as in his bosom, as a nurse bears the sucking child, Num. xi. 12; Deut. i. 31; or as an eagle beareth her young ones on her wings, Deut. xxxii. 11, 12. But it seems God did not bear with their fathers, but destroyed them in the wilderness, 1 Cor. x. 5. First, God bare long with those that perished. Secondly, The succeeding generation took not that warning which did become them, but followed their fathers' steps; and whilst one generation was wearing away, and another coming, this space of forty years was spent, through the abundant compassion of God towards them, who did not consume them, as they tempted him to do, in a moment.

19 And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

These seven nations are mentioned, Josh. iii. 10. He divided their land to them by lot; the lot being disposed only as God would, Prov. xvi. 33. And it was but reasonable that God, having miraculously got this land, (for the Israelites did rather go to take possession of it than to fight for it,) and assumed a special right unto it, that he should divide it to whom he pleased, and in what proportions he thought good.

20 And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

These judges were persons deputed by God to govern and deliver that people; their commission was attested usually by some extraordinary thing done by them, and their power (as being mediately from God) was absolute. The computation of years here mentioned hath been very much controverted. That which hath the greatest probability with it, is, either, first, to have recourse to the 17th verse, and begin this era there, with God's choosing of their fathers; and ending it at the time of the decision of the land by lot, as ver. 19; for from the birth of Isaac, to this distribution of the land, are reckoned four hundred and forty-seven years; which may well be said here, about four hundred and fifty years: but then the sense is, after that such things mentioned in the 17th, 18th, and 19th verses were done; which were in the compass of four hundred and fifty years, God then gave them judges. Or, as others do refer these words to what follows, and begin the era or computation from the going of the children of Israel out of Egypt, and ending it at the expulsion of the Jebusites out of Jerusalem, which may make up this account. But then this passage of St. Paul is not intended to show how long the judges ruled, but when it was, or about what time that they ruled; as also to show what a long time it took up to gain that people a quiet possession of that promised inheritance, their sins still keeping good things from them.

21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.

Their great sin in desiring a king was, because by that desire they rejected God, who had at that very time a prophet (Samuel) by whom he governed them, 1 Sam. viii. 7; x. 19. They had been under a theocracy ever since they came out of Egypt, their laws and their governors being appointed by God; had their condition been as that of other nations, their desire had not been a provocation. These words, by the space of forty years, are to be joined with the foregoing verse, and the other foregoing words in the verse read with a parenthesis; and thus they show how long Samuel the prophet (as he is here called) exercised his prophetic office, which was the space here mentioned, partly before Saul was anointed king, and in part afterward; in which, as another Moses, he cared for, and went in and out before, the people of God, the like space of forty years. This computation of St. Paul might also agree more with the Septuagint, and be according to the then current account, which (not being of more consequence) St. Paul would not controvert at this time, having greater matters to speak of unto them.

22 And when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.

He had removed him; God had taken Saul away by death; for he would not suffer David to hasten it. After mine own heart; favoured or beloved by me, and obedient to me; my servant, as God speaks of him, Psal. lxxxix. 20. Which shall fulfil all my will; and here, that he should fulfil all God's will, to wit, in governing his people; for he hath a testimonial upon record in God's word, Psal. lxxviii. 72. He that is according to God's heart, fulfils all the will of God, and does nothing by partiality; but if it be God's will either for him to do or to suffer any thing, he is ready to set his fiat to it; as he daily prays (understandingly) that the will of the Lord may be done.

x Deut. 7. 6, 7. v Ex. 1. 1. Ps. 103. 23. 24. ch. 7. 17. 2 Ex. 6. 8. & 13. 14, 14.

a Ex. 16. 35. Num. 14. 33, 34. Ps. 93. 9. 10. ch. 7. 36. † Gr.

ετροφόφορσεν, perhaps for ετροφόφορσεν, bore, or, fed them, as a nurse bears, or, feeds her child, Deut. i. 31. 2 Mac. 7. 27. according to the LXX. and so Chrysostom.

b Deut. 7. 1. c Josh. 14. 1, 2. Ps. 78. 55.

g 1 Sam. 14. 25, 26, 26. & 16. 1. h 1 Sam. 14. 13. 2 Sam. 3. 4 & 5. 3. i Ps. 89. 20. k 1 Sam. 13. 14. ch. 7. 45.

1 La. 11. 1.
Luke 1. 32.
69. ch. 3. 29.
Rom. 1. 3.
m 2 Sam. 7.
13. 17. 132.
11. n Matt. 1. 21. Rom. 11. 26.

23 <sup>1</sup>Of this man's seed hath God according <sup>m</sup> to his promise raised unto Israel <sup>n</sup> a Saviour, Jesus :

Christ was the Son of David, and so frequently called, Matt. i. 1; Luke xviii. 38, 39, with reference unto the promise made, Isa. xi. 1, spoken of, chap. ii. 30; Rom. i. 3. Raised unto Israel a Saviour; because he lived amongst the Jews, and salvation was first offered unto them by him, as ver. 46. Jesus; our Saviour's name is added to show that he truly was according to his name, and what he was said to be, as Matt. i. 21.

o Matt. 3. 1.
Luke 3. 3.

24 <sup>o</sup>When John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

John the Baptist did not speak of Christ's coming, as the other apostles had done, as of a thing a great way off, or at a distance of time; but he spake of it as of a present matter, before his and their faces, and in their view; Behold the Lamb of God! John i. 29, 36. The baptism of repentance; so it is called, Matt. iii. 2, 8; Mark i. 4; Luke iii. 3; repentance being a due qualification for such as hope to receive the mercies of God in Christ unto life eternal.

25 And as John fulfilled his course, he said, <sup>p</sup>Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

q Matt. 3. 11.
Mark 1. 7.
Luke 3. 16.
John 1. 20, 27.

Fulfilled his course; the course of his ministry, or of his life: in respect of either, he ran as one in a race. I am not he; that is, the Messiah, which they were in such expectation of, and so inquisitive about. There cometh one after me; Christ began his life (as to the flesh) after John; and he began his ministry after him, and in that respect may be said to come after him. Whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose; a proverbial expression, whereby the meanest office is implied, which the disciples or servants could do for their masters, Matt. iii. 11. The sense of these words we have, John i. 20, 27.

26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, <sup>a</sup> to you is the word of this salvation sent.

g Matt. 10. 6.
Luke 24. 47.
ver. 46.
ch. 3. 26.

Men and brethren; he speaks to the Jews according as the manner was amongst them; to the Jews he became as a Jew. Whosoever among you feareth God; some think the devout Pisidians, or men of that country, are here meant; but rather it may insinuate the apostle's hope concerning these Jews, that they were such as feared God, which hope they ought the rather to have carefully answered. The word of this salvation: 1. Christ, who is the incarnate Word, or the Word made flesh, John i. 14; or the Gospel, which is glad tidings of salvation; as if the apostle had minded them, that it was not any business which belonged unto others alone, which he was speaking about; but of such things as pertained unto their salvation; and such a salvation (this salvation) as never greater was or ever will be published, this is certain, that we are concerned in it for ourselves, if we accept or neglect this salvation, it is for ourselves. Oh that in this respect self-interest were more prevalent with us!

r Luke 23.
34. ch. 3. 17.
1 Cor. 2. 8.
a ver. 14. 14.
ch. 15. 21.
t Luke 24.
30. 44.
ch. 26. 22.
a 28. 23.

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, <sup>r</sup>because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets <sup>t</sup>which are read every sabbath day, <sup>a</sup>they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

They; the common people, and their rulers; great council, both had a hand in our Saviour's death. But if so great a fault was capable of any alleviation, the apostle gladly mentions it, that it was done out of ignorance; they knew neither Christ the Word, nor the word (of the Gospel) concerning Christ, though, that they may be made sensible that this their ignorance was not invincible, he minds them that it was their sin, having had means whereby they might have come unto the knowledge of Christ. Fulfilled them: see chap. iv. 28; Luke xxiv. 25, 26.

28 <sup>u</sup>And though they found no cause of death in him, <sup>v</sup>yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain.

u Mat. 27. 22.
Mark 15. 13.
14. Luke 23.
21. 22. John 19.
10. ch. 3. 13, 14.

Though they found no cause of death in him; he was a Lamb without blemish; neither had he offended the rabble that was so slanderous against him, unless by such vast goodness and kindness towards them he branded them for ingratitude. Yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain, Matt. xxvii. 22. The Jews did condemn him, but they could not put him to death, the Romans, under whom they were subject, having reserved the power of life and death wholly unto themselves; and therefore they desired Pilate to confirm their sentence, and to cause it to be executed.

29 <sup>y</sup>And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, <sup>y</sup>they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre.

y Luke 24.
31. a 24. 44.
John 19. 28.
30. 32. 37.
u Mat. 27. 62.
Mark 15. 46.
Luke 23. 53.
John 19. 38.

All that was written of him; as the giving him vinegar to drink, piercing his side, &c., Psal. lxxix. 21; John xix. 28—30. From the tree: see chap. v. 30. They laid him in a sepulchre; Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, Matt. xxvii. 60; John xix. 39.

30 <sup>z</sup>But God raised him from the dead:

a Mat. 28. 6.
ch. 2. 24.
a 3. 15, 16.
28. a 30.

Lest they should be offended at our Saviour's dying so shameful and cursed a death, and to take away the scandal of the cross, he shows, that his resurrection was as glorious as his death could be ignominious, being by it declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4.

31 And <sup>b</sup>he was seen many days of them which came up with him <sup>b</sup>from Galilee to Jerusalem, <sup>c</sup>who are his witnesses unto the people.

b Matt. 28.
10. ch. 1. 3.
1 Cor. 15. 6, 6, 7.
c ch. 1. 11.
d ch. 1. 8. a
1. 32. a 3.
15. a 5. 32.

Seen many days; forty days betwixt his resurrection and ascension, chap. i. 3. Christ was seen, not only by the apostles, but of the Galilean women which came up with him unto Jerusalem, Matt. xxviii. 1, and by above five hundred at once, 1 Cor. xv. 6; so plentifully would God have this great article of our faith and object of our hope to be confirmed unto us.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that <sup>e</sup>the promise which was made unto the fathers, e Gen. 3. 15.

a 12. 3. a 22.
16. ch. 26. 4.
Rom. 4. 13.
Gal. 3. 16.

Glad tidings; or the gospel, which is nothing else but the glad tidings of our salvation from sin and hell. The promise which was made unto the fathers; this promise was frequently made and renewed to their ancestors, and typified by many deliverances, especially from Egypt and Babylon.

33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, <sup>f</sup>'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

f Ps. 2. 7.
Hab. 1. 5.
a 5. 5.

Raised up Jesus again; some refer these words to the incarnation, others to the resurrection, of our Saviour: our translators lay the stress upon the preposition, with which the verb is compounded, and by adding again, intend it to be understood of the resurrection; and there is ground for it in the context; for the resurrection of Christ is that which in the 30th verse is propounded by St. Paul as his theme or argument to preach upon. Thou art my Son; these words quoted, though they do not seem to be a proof of Christ's resurrection at the first view, yet if we weigh them well, they answer St. Paul's purpose: Thou art my Son, Psal. ii. 7, is ushered in with, I have made thee king, ver. 6, and followed with, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance; which was in an especial manner to be fulfilled after the resurrection, as our Saviour manifests, Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. This day have I begotten thee; not as if Christ at his resurrection began to be the Son of God; but then he was manifested to be so, Rom. i. 4; which before, whilst he was in a suffering condition, was not so apparent. Some of the ancients have understood these words, of the eternal generation of the Son of God; eternity being an everlasting point, and one and the same day for ever.

34 And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.

g. 12. 25. 3. Cr. ver. 34. Just things which word the LXX. both in the place of Is. 55. 3. and in many others, use for that which is in the Hebrew, merces.
The former verse was not intended so much by St. Paul for a proof of the resurrection, as it was to show how faithful God was in fulfilling that promise there spoken of; here the apostle's design is, to evince Christ's resurrection, and that it was agreeable to the prophecies which were concerning him. I will give you the sure mercies of David; these words are found, Isa. lv. 3, and the sure mercies of David there and here spoken of, are such mercies as were promised to David (David being to be taken positively). Now the mercies which were promised to David are all included or surmounted in this, that by this Son of David (our Lord and Saviour, frequently and truly so called) God would erect and establish an everlasting kingdom; which could not be done, unless Christ rose again, and obtained the victory over death and the grave. All the promises God hath made unto his church in any age concerning Christ, are sure and faithful, holy and just; the words have been variously rendered and changed; but no words can sufficiently express their stability and excellency.

35 Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

l. Ps. 16. 10. ch. 2. 31.
These words are quoted out of Psal. xvi. 10, 11: see chap. ii. 27.

36 For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption:

Cr. after he had in his own age served the will of God. ver. 22. Ps. 78. 72. i. Kings 2. 10. ch. 2. 30.
Some point these words otherwise, reading them thus; David, after he had served his generation, by the will of God fell asleep: which contains indeed a truth, viz. that God hath appointed every one's time in the world, and that the issue of life and death are his; but thus they would prove little to David's praise, for who dies otherwise but according to the determinate counsel of God? But this is remembered to David's glory, that, according to the will of God, he was a public good, and he lived and governed by the rule and square of God's word; notwithstanding which he fell asleep, and saw death, but such as did not deserve so terrible a name. Laid unto his fathers; buried amongst his ancestors; and saw corruption; and his body corrupted as theirs. Now this verse explains the former, and draws the argument home, in that it proves, that the words before mentioned could not be meant of David, but of one that he typified and represented.

37 But he, whom God raised again, saw no corruption.

God raised again; that is, on the third day, according to the gospel. Saw no corruption; was not under the power of death so long as to be preyed upon so far by it.

38 ¶ Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

l. Jer. 31. 34. Dan. 9. 24. Luke 24. 47. i. John 2. 12.
Men and brethren; the usual compellation given in these cases. This man; having spoken concerning Christ's resurrection, which only can be meant of him in his human nature, here, according unto that nature, the apostle calls him man. The forgiveness of sins; as in chap. x. 43. This forgiveness of sins is that which the apostle so much would recommend to all to seek after, and magnify Christ for, it being only through him; and he could not be overcome by death, who could deliver us from sin.

39 And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

l. 12. 25. 11. Rom. 3. 28. & 5. 3. Heb. 7. 12.

Are justified; it is a forensic word, opposed to condemned; all that believe in Christ with the heart, by his merit and mediation shall be absolved, and shall not come into condemnation: and thus this agrees with the former words, and shows us whence remission of sins is to be had. If any will take this word as signifying also to be purged from sin; yet it is evident, that the law can bring neither of these benefits unto us. The law declares what is sin, and what the curse is that is due unto sin, but not how to be delivered from them; it shows the spot, but not how to wash it off; and the sore, but not how to heal it; but, on the other side, we are bidden to glory in the Lord, (Jesus,) who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, I Cor. i. 30, 31. From all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses; to which may be added, that there were some sins which by the ceremonial law there was no sacrifice appointed for; and for such sins which a sacrifice was appointed for, it was not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take them away, Heb. x. 4; which may make us more to admire the grace of the gospel, by which we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all, Heb. x. 10.

40 Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets;

Hab. i. 5. Hab. 1. 8.
Hab. i. 5. He cautions these Jews, lest the same thing threatened by the prophet to their fathers come also upon them; for sin is as odious unto God as ever, and God is as jealous of his honour, which sin robs him of, as ever he was.

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

These words are cited from that place in Habakkuk, according to the reading of the Septuagint, St. Paul not being willing to alter the words, the Jews that were dispersed being so used to that translation, especially the sense being the same with the original Hebrew. This quotation of the apostle might also be taken from Isa. xxviii. 14, 16. Ye despisers; for which cause, in that place of Habakkuk they are commanded to consider the heathen, and are sent to school unto them they contemned so much, who had had God for their teacher, had they not despised his word. And wonder; grow pale for shame and fear. And perish; ye shall be destroyed by the Romans your enemies, as your ancestors were by their enemies. A work in your days; this work was a work of God's just revenge on them then, by the Chaldeans; but threatened to come on these (without repentance) by the Romans. Which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you; which destruction should be so great, that it was incredible to them now, though it should have been told them.

42 And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath.

Cr. in the week between, or, in the sabbath between.
When the Jews were gone out of the synagogue; or, as some read, the apostles, Paul and Barnabas, were gone out of the synagogue of the Jews. The Gentiles; proselytes; or such devout persons formerly spoken of, who had relinquished paganism, and came to be instructed in the knowledge of the true God by the Jews. The next sabbath; or in some day betwixt the sabbaths: the apostles took all advantages, if there were a festival, which was also called a sabbath, Lev. xvi. 31, and in the 23rd chapter of Leviticus, frequently; they would preach in season and out of season: howsoever, because we find the apostles did meet again with them on that day seven-night after, it is most probable that their desire was so to be understood. See ver. 44.

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, perceived

ch. 11. 22. & 14. 22.

o Th. 2. 11. persuaded them to continue in * the grace
 Heb. 12. 12. of God.
 1 Pet. 4. 12.

The congregation was broken up; the congregation was dissolved, by the offence the Jews generally had taken at the doctrine of the apostles. Religious proselytes; these proselytes were so called, from their coming over from paganism to own the true God: see chap. ii. 10. In the grace of God; this grace of God the apostles so earnestly exhorted them to continue in, was, 1. Their present state of being firmly resolved to serve God, whatsoever opposition or temptation they should meet with to the contrary, which was wrought in them by the grace of God, 2. The doctrine of justification by the grace of God, which St. Paul had preached unto them, ver. 39. Or, 3. The whole gospel, and doctrine therein contained, which is called the grace of God, Heb. xii. 15, and the true grace wherein we stand, 1 Pet. v. 12.

44 ¶ And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

The citizens generally resorted thither. To hear the word of God; some out of curiosity, some to cavil at it, though some also out of love to it; here was doubtless a mixed congregation.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.

The Jews could not endure that the Gentiles should be equalled to them, being as much concerned against the Gentiles being exalted, as against their own being depressed. Envy, as a vicious humour, made them disrelish the wholesomest and most saving truths. Contradicting and blaspheming; contradicting the doctrine of the gospel, and blaspheming the preaching of it; or going from one degree of opposition unto another, until they came to the highest enmity against both.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, <sup>a</sup> It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, <sup>b</sup> we turn to the Gentiles.

Waxed bold; being nothing affrighted with the reproaches and blasphemies they met with, which but increased their zeal, as a little water does the fire in the smith's forge. It was necessary; there was a necessity that the word of God should be first preached to the Jews, 1. Because Christ was promised to the children and heirs of their ancestors. 2. Because Christ did command it to be thus preached, Matt. x. 5, 6; Luke xxiv. 47; Acts i. 8. 3. Christ himself thus preached it, declaring that he was not sent (comparatively) but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. xv. 24. And judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life; by this their contradicting and blaspheming, they show as evidently that they are thus unworthy of everlasting life, as if a judge had determined so, or passed such a sentence upon his tribunal, or judgment-seat.

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, <sup>c</sup> I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

Because that prophecy must be fulfilled which we find, Isa. xlix. 6, the apostle infers aright, that they were commanded to publish Christ unto the Gentiles; for how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? Rom. x. 14. I have set thee to be a light; all knowledge is ignorance, and all light is darkness, without Christ.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: <sup>d</sup> and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

When the Gentiles heard this they were glad; there can be no true rest or peace in any to whom Christ is not manifested; the apostle telling us, that we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, Rom. v. 1; and the kingdom of our Lord is peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Glorified the word of the Lord; they magnified the goodness of God, which appeared in the gospel unto them. As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed; God, who ordered the end, ordereth the means, and gives them opportunities to hear the word, and by it graciously worketh faith in them whom he hath appointed to eternal life; without which faith, purging the heart, there is no hope of life eternal.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

The word of the Lord, concerning salvation to be found only by Christ, and the Gentiles to be admitted to partake of that salvation. Was published throughout all the region; like leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened, Matt. xiii. 33.

50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

The devout; σεβόμενοι, as was said of the men, such as had relinquished the idolatry of their country and ancestors, and acknowledged the true God, the Maker of heaven and earth. Honourable women; of great repute and esteem; women being accounted more earnest in what way soever they take; and to be sure Eve was first seduced, and in the transgression. The chief men of the city; in some cities there were but five, in some ten, in others twenty, in whose hands the government of the city was ordinarily put; and these the persecutors (knowing what an influence their authority must needs have) by all means labour to seduce.

51 <sup>e</sup> But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

This was according to our Saviour's command, Matt. x. 14; Mark vi. 11; Luke ix. 5, so often it is mentioned, and so considerable a matter it is for us to know, and dread the punishment appointed for such as refuse the gospel, and contemn the salvation offered by it. What this was symbolical of is not expressed. The Hebrew proverb says, The dust of an ethnic city or country doth pollute a man; and they might by this represent, that the inhabitants of such a city or place, who did not entertain the gospel, and the ministers thereof, they would repute as the vilest sinners, and they should by God be dealt with accordingly. Iconium: see chap. xiv. 1.

52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

The disciples; either Paul and Barnabas in a more especial manner, or, also such as at Perga had believed the gospel, and came with them to Antioch, were filled with joy, so as no place was left for meaner contentments: First, By reason of the pardon of their sins. Secondly, The promise made to them of everlasting life. Thirdly, The gifts of the Holy Ghost which they had, at that time, as an earnest and pledge to assure the other unto them.

CHAP. XIV

Paul and Barnabas are persecuted from Iconium by the malice of the unbelieving Jews, 1—7. At Lystra they heal an impotent man, and refuse divine honours with abhorrence, 8—18. Paul is stoned at the instigation of the Jews, but escapeth alive with Barnabas to Derbe, 19, 20. Having passed through divers places, and confirmed the churches in faith and patience, they return to Antioch, and give an account of their ministry, 21—28.

AND it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.

Iconium, a city in Lycaonia. They went both together;

p ch. 16. 6.
 1 Pet. 4. 4.
 Jude 10.

q Mat. 10. 6.
 ch. 3. 24.
 ver. 28.
 Rom. 1. 16.
 r Ex. 32. 10.
 Deut. 32. 21.
 Ia. 56. 6.
 Mat. 21. 43.
 Rom. 10. 19.
 s ch. 13. 6.
 & 28. 23.

t Ia. 42. 6.
 & 49. 6.
 Luke 2. 32.

x 2 Tim. 3. 11.

y Mat. 10. 14.
 Mark 6. 11.
 Luke 9. 5.
 ch. 18. 6.

z Mat. 5. 12.
 John 16. 22.
 ch. 2. 46.

Paul and Barnabas, as they were wont to do, showing as great constancy in performing of their duty, as their enemies did obstinacy in persecuting them for it. So spake; with such evidence and demonstration of the Spirit and of power. The Greeks: see chap. xiii. 43.

2 But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren.

The unbelieving, or disobedient, Jews, who did not believe the truths or obey the precepts of the gospel, stirred up the Gentiles; urging, persuading, and pressing of them, who of themselves (though as yet ignorant of Christ, and his word) would not have been so cruel. The brethren; the apostles themselves, and others that were converted by them, whose common father God through Christ was, and were accordingly endeared one to another.

3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, <sup>a</sup> which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

Long time therefore abode they, to strengthen the new converts against the opposition they met with in the way of Christ, willingly partaking with them in their afflictions for Christ's sake. Speaking boldly; with great courage, and humble confidence, as knowing in whom they had believed. In the Lord; first, In the Lord's cause, a business which he had sent them about. Secondly, And in the Lord's strength, who enabled them in it. The word of his grace; the gospel: first, Wherein the grace of God is manifested. Secondly, Whereby it is offered. Thirdly, Where-with, to such as receive, it is conveyed. Fourthly, And out of grace disputed and allowed to some, hidden and withdrawn from others. Granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands; God, by his miraculous confirming the doctrine of the apostles, showed that it was from him.

A. D. 46. 4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the <sup>b</sup> apostles.

Was divided; as it was about our Saviour and his doctrine, John vii. 43. The apostles; Paul and Barnabas, who were called to be apostles, 1 Cor. ix. 5. 6.

5 And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, <sup>c</sup> to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

Rulers, such as were called the chief men of the city, chap. xiii. 50. To use them despitefully; thus they that were called to the marriage of the king's son, Matt. xxii. 6, entreated the servants despitefully. And to stone them; they would have used them as such who were not worthy to live, and then have taken away their lives from them, as they did by our Saviour; first they spat upon him, and then crucified him.

d Mat. 10. 23. 6 They were ware of it, and <sup>d</sup> fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

And fled; the apostles did not flee so much to save their lives, as to husband their time best for the glory of God in other places; and this they were commanded to do, Matt. x. 23, When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another. Lystra and Derbe; these were cities further in the country of Lycaonia than Iconium was. Lycaonia; a part of the Lesser Asia, nigh unto the mountain Taurus.

7 And there they preached the Gospel.

Thus was verified what St. Paul observed, Phil. i. 12, that all those things fell out unto the furtherance of the gospel, which spread the further for the scattering of the apostles and preachers of it; and thousands had not heard of Christ, if persecution had not driven the ministers of the gospel unto them: God working good out of evil, and causing the sun, when it leaves one part, to shine upon another.

e ch. 3. 2. 8 ¶ And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

Such defects as are from nature, are incurable by art, and only to be helped immediately by the God of nature. Who never had walked; this is observed and enlarged upon, to make the miracle the more appear to be the only work of God: see chap. iii. 2.

9 The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

This Paul might know by a prophetic Spirit; and that extraordinary gift of discerning of spirits might be in this case bestowed upon him. But withal, it is not unlikely but this lame man's attention to the word, eyes, gesture, and countenance, might speak as much.

10 Said with a loud voice, <sup>f</sup> Stand up-right on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

As chap. iii. 6, 8, to shew that he was perfectly recovered of this lameness; as all miraculous cures (being the work of God) were perfect.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, <sup>g</sup> The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

In the speech of Lycaonia; which was a dialect of the Greek tongue, that language being in the Lesser Asia ordinarily spoken. The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men; the heathens (especially their poets) did frequently believe such kind of apparitions; probably at first from the appearing of angels unto the patriarchs and others, which by tradition they might have heard of.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

Jupiter; whom the heathens took for their chief God. Mercury was feigned to be the messenger of their gods, and therefore represented with wings; as also the interpreter of the gods, which caused their applying of his name to Paul.

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, <sup>h</sup> and would have done sacrifice with the people.

Before their city; the temple of Jupiter, whom they took for the patron of their city, was in the suburbs. Garlands; these were usually in the form of crowns put upon the oxen which they intended to sacrifice; and, by this sign, showed that they were dedicated to Jupiter, whom the heathen blasphemously called, The king of kings, and placed him sitting in his chair, or throne, with a crown on his head. Unto the gates; the gates or doors of the house where the apostles lodged.

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, <sup>i</sup> they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

They rent their clothes; which was a sign of their greatest detestation of, and sorrow for, such abominations. And ran in among the people, crying out; expressing their greatest zeal for the glory of God, and earnestness to hinder the idolatry of this people.

15 And saying, <sup>j</sup> Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from <sup>k</sup> these vanities unto the living God, <sup>l</sup> which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

We also are men of like passions with you; we stand in need of food and raiment, are liable to diseases and death, as well as you. Vanities; so idols are frequently called, 1 Kings xvi. 13, 26; Jer. xiv. 22, because they disappoint the hopes that are placed in them, and are empty of any good which is expected from them, and have nothing but what vain men (their makers) bestow upon them. The

<sup>a</sup> Mark 16. 20. Heb. 2. 4.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 13. 3.

<sup>c</sup> 2 Tim. 3. 11.

<sup>d</sup> Mat. 10. 23.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 3. 2.

<sup>f</sup> Matt. 9. 10. & 9. 20, 22.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 6. 10. & 28. 6.

<sup>h</sup> Dan. 2. 46.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 10. 26. m Jam. 6. 17. Rev. 12. 10. n 1 Sam. 12. 21. l Kings 16. 13. Jer. 16. 22. Amos 2. 1. Cor. 8. 4. o 1 Thess. 1. 8. p Gen. 1. 1. Ps. 33. 6. & 146. 6. Rev. 14. 7.

living God; the true God is called the living God, Deut. v. 26; Josh. iii. 10, in opposition to those false gods, who usually were only dead men, which out of love or fear were deified; as also in that he lives from himself, and gives life to every living creature. Which made heaven, &c.: by this also the true God is distinguished from false gods, as Jer. x. 11, 12; and is a good argument against all idol worship; for Divine worship is a tribute we owe and pay to him that made us, Psal. c. 3, 4. It should be considered with what a respective compellation the apostles speak unto this heathen rabble, calling them, Sirs, or masters; a term surely then not unlawful to be given to our equals or betters.

q Pa. 61. 12. 16 ¶ Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

There were two main objections which these heathen idolaters might make against the gospel, and the worship of the true God: and they are, first, from the antiquity, secondly, from the universality, of that false worship; both which the apostle here gives a critical answer unto, telling them, that the reason why so many, and for so long a time had followed idols, was from the just judgment of God upon them, as Psal. lxxxii. 12; Rom. i. 24, 28. Their own ways; ways of our choosing, and not of God's commanding, are false ways.

17 ¶ Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

These words are to prevent that cavil, Why does God yet complain? and inform them, that though God had not given them, nor their ancestors, his laws written in tables of stone, as he had given to the Jews; yet they had the law written in their hearts, which they had not obeyed, though God's manifold mercies, his works of creation and providence, had testified unto them, that he only was to be feared and worshipped. How many witnesses hath God against sinful man, when every creature and providence speaks his power, wisdom, goodness, &c., and call upon us to love and obey him? Every creature tells us that God made it, &c.

18 And with these sayings scarce restrained the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

So hard a matter it is to persuade any to leave off these sins they are accustomed unto, or to rectify such errors in religion which men are brought up in.

19 ¶ And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

Certain Jews; such as mention was made of, chap. xiii. 50. Persuaded the people; a strange and incredible fickleness; but that we know how the same multitude who cried Hosanna, did more suddenly alter their note, and cry against our Saviour, Crucify him, crucify him; so uncertain a thing is worldly honour. Stoned Paul; the malice of Satan is every way great; if he cannot destroy the souls of these blessed apostles, by making of them to accept of Divine worship, he will do his utmost to kill their bodies.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

Stood round about him; either in order to bury him, thinking him to be dead, as well as his persecutors did; or else to defend him, as much as possibly they could, from the rage of his enemies in that popular fury. Their spite was most against Paul, because he spake most, and preached unto them the way of life. He rose up; being by the power of God suddenly restored to his strength again. Derbe; a city near to Lycaonia, some say in it.

21 And when they had preached the Gospel to that city, and † had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

Had taught many; had made many disciples by teaching, and also by baptizing of them, Matt. xxviii. 19. For as by circumcision they were made Moses's disciples, so by baptism they are made Christ's disciples.

22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

It is not enough to sow the seed of the word, but it must be watered also, frequent endeavours must be used that it may be fruitful. Thus the apostles return to visit such as they had preached unto; the persecution they had endured, increasing their resolution for God, and their strength from him. Lest they should be offended at what they saw St. Paul had endured, or themselves might be called to endure, they preach unto them the doctrine of the cross, not hiding from them the miseries which in this world the profession of Christ and his truths might bring upon them. God hath indeed dealt all along thus with his people. The troubles which the Israelites met with in the wilderness, in their journey towards an earthly Canaan, did typify the calamities which God's people will meet with in this world, as they journey towards the heavenly Canaan, or Jerusalem which is above.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

Ordained; the word properly signifies a stretching out of the hand, such as was used when they gave their suffrages in the election of their magistrates, whereby was showed for whom they gave their voice; and afterwards it was commonly used for to constitute or appoint, or, as here, to ordain to any office or place; which might the rather be done by stretching out or laying on of the hands of the apostles, because by that means the Holy Ghost (or a power of working miracles) was frequently bestowed, chap. viii. 17, 18, which in those times was necessary to authorize their doctrine to the infidel world. Elders; such as might instruct and govern the church. They commended them; they commended the disciples as their jewels and chiefest treasure; as all sufferers are to commit their very souls to God, 1 Pet. iv. 19. To the Lord; to Christ, the best and faithful Keeper, that he should keep and further them in grace and goodness; to whose providence they wholly had committed themselves.

24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

Going the same way back which they had come, as appear by chap. xiii. 13, 14.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

The word; the gospel, the word of the Lord; or Christ, who is the word, and who is the sum of what the ministers of the gospel preach about. Perga; mentioned chap. xiii. 13; a city, or as some, a country, in Pamphylia, by the sea-side. But the bounds of provinces were often altered by the Romans, and some made larger, and others lesser.

26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.

Antioch; that Antioch which was in Syria, as appears chap. xiii. 1—3, to which this relates; and is a sufficient proof that they had not sought God in vain, and that there is no better preparation or provision towards any business, than faithful prayer unto God concerning it; doing our duty, and leaving the event unto his disposing.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

All that God had done with them; God being with them, and they being labourers with God, 1 Cor. iii. 9; 2 Cor.

7 ch. 11. 22.
8 13. 43.
9 Matt. 16.
10 28. 42. 16. 24.
11 Luke 23. 34.
12 Rom. 8.
13 17. 2 Tim.
14 2. 11. 12. &
15 3. 18.

ch. 17. 27.
Rom. 1. 20.
1 Lev. 26. 4.
2 Deut. 11. 14.
3 28. 12. Job
4 10. Ps. 65.
5 10. & 69. 9.
6 147. 5.
7 Jer. 14. 22.
8 Matt. 4. 45.

t ch. 13. 45.

n 2 Cor. 11.
25. 2 Tim. 3.
11.

b ch. 13. 1, 3.
c ch. 13. 40.

d ch. 15. 4.
12. & 21. 19.

e 1 Cor. 16. 9.
2 Cor. 1. 12.
Col. 4. 3.
Rev. 3. 8.

x Matt. 28.
19.
+ Gr. And made every disciple.

vi. 1. They showed how much God had honoured them in making them his instruments in the conversion of so many souls. He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles; he had given the Gentiles an opportunity of knowing and believing the gospel. The fleece alone had been wet before, and all the ground round about it dry; and now all the ground is wet, and that fleece was dry; to allude to Judg. vi. 37—40, by which this mystery was pre-figured, and can only be resolved by that of our Saviour, Matt. xi. 25, 26, Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

To confirm them, as ver. 22; and also, as our Saviour withdrew himself from the multitudes, they chose there to refresh themselves a while, out of the heat of contention and persecution.

CHAP. XV

Great dissensions arise about circumcising the Gentiles: Paul and Barnabas are sent to consult the apostles and elders at Jerusalem, 1—4. The matter is debated in a council there, 5, 6. Peter declareth his opinion, 7—11. Paul and Barnabas report the miracles they had wrought among the Gentiles, 12. James pronounceth sentence in favour of the Gentiles, requiring of them abstinence only in a few particulars, 13—21. Letters are sent with the determination by messengers to the churches, which are received with joy, 22—35. Paul and Barnabas propose to visit together the churches they had planted, but disagree, and travel different ways, 36—41.

AND <sup>a</sup> certain men which came down from Judæa taught the brethren, <sup>b</sup> and said, <sup>c</sup> Except ye be circumcised <sup>d</sup> after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

Certain men; these were such as did pretend to believe, but were false brethren; some think Cerinthus to have been of them. The brethren; the Gentiles who were converted unto the faith of Christ, or Proselytes of the gate (as they were called) who were not circumcised, and now professing the true faith. These the pharisaical professors would have excluded from any hopes of salvation, although circumcision was not commanded but unto the posterity of Abraham, Gen. xvii. 10—13, and Abraham himself was justified before he was circumcised, Rom. iv. 10. After the manner of Moses; according unto the law of Moses: for God by him did renew and establish that ordinance unto that people, although it was long before his time both commanded and practised, John vii. 22.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that <sup>d</sup> Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question.

Paul, that meek apostle, who was willing to become all things unto all men, yet he enters into a holy war with them that would introduce circumcision into the Christian church; because, 1. He would have no works of the law to be an ingredient into our salvation; but the free grace of God in Christ to be all in all. 2. That our freedom from all the ceremonial law, acquired by the death of Christ, might not be diminished. 3. That the spreading of the gospel might not be hindered, but that Christ might be accepted and honoured amongst all. Now if circumcision had been retained, it would have kept possession for all the other ceremonies to have continued, or re-entered, there being the same reason for the one as for the other, and the circumcised person was obliged by his circumcision to observe them all, Gal. v. 3, 4. They determined; the church at Antioch, where this controversy was moved. Unto the apostles; James, Peter, and John, who are thought to have been then at Jerusalem, the rest being probably gone to preach Christ in other parts.

3 And <sup>e</sup> being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenicæ and Samaria, <sup>f</sup> declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

Brought on their way by the church; the brethren or believers of Antioch, out of respect, went part of the way with them; as also thereby showing, that Paul and Barnabas did not go upon their own business or mind only, and that there was no dissension betwixt them and the church there. The conversion of the Gentiles; it is a conversion or turning indeed from error to truth, from impurity to holiness; that is, from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto the ever-living God, chap. xxvi. 18. They caused great joy unto all the brethren; nothing more rejoices a good man, than the bringing of souls unto God, and the enlarging of the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and <sup>g</sup> they declared all things that God had done with them.

They were received of the church; they were owned with respect and thankfulness, for their great work and labour in the Lord's vineyard. All things that God had done with them: see chap. xiv. 27.

5 But there <sup>h</sup> rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, <sup>i</sup> That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command <sup>j</sup> them to keep the law of Moses.

If these words be taken for St. Luke's, the penman of this book, then they declare, that in the church of Jerusalem there were some that did abet the opinion of the necessity of circumcision; but if, (as most probably we may,) we take them for the words of St. Paul, they then are part of his narrative to the church there, of what had happened at Antioch. The sect of the Pharisees; these Pharisees were a sect amongst the Jews, (so called from Pharisei, and may be Englished, separatists,) separating from converse with others, by reason of an opinion they had of their own holiness, Luke xviii. 11.

6 ¶ And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.

The apostles and elders, unto whom Paul and Barnabas were sent about the decision of this question, ver. 2, came together for to consider of this matter; they had been informed of it, and now they met to deliberate about it.

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, <sup>k</sup> Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel, and believe.

Much disputing; they argued on both sides, and considered what might be said for either opinion: some of them that met here seem at first to have been for the retaining of circumcision; for we know but in part, and from the collision of adverse parties such sparks fly out, that many a man hath lighted his candle at them. A good while ago; from the beginning of our having received our commission to preach, as Matt. xxviii. 19; or more particularly, from the time of Cornelius's conversion, chap. x. 22; xi. 12, which is thought to have been about fourteen or fifteen years before, that Peter preached Christ, by the command of God, unto the Gentiles.

8 And God, <sup>l</sup> which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, <sup>m</sup> giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

Which knoweth the hearts; God knew the desires of the Gentiles, that they did sincerely desire to please God, and to see his salvation. This great attribute David improved, 1 Chron. xxix. 17, and highly recommended his son Solo-

a. D. 51.
b Gal. 2. 12.
c John 7.
d Gal. 5. 2.
e Phil. 3. 2.
f Col. 2. 8.
g Gen. 17. 10.
h Lev. 12. 3.

A. D. 52.
d Gal. 2. 1.

i ch. 10. 20.
j 11. 12.

k 1 Chron. 29. 8. ch. 1.
l ch. 10. 44.

A. D. 52.
g ver. 12.
h ver. 14. 27.
i ver. 12.

j Or, these sp. said they, certain.
k ver. 1.

a Rom. 15.
b 1 Cor. 10.
c ch. 14. 27.

mon to consider of, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; which, if believed, would make us also to serve God with a perfect heart and a willing mind. Giving them the Holy Ghost; God himself was a witness for these Gentiles beyond all exception, when he gave them the ordinary and extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost; by which he testified, that they belonged to Christ, whose Spirit this was. Thus the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, Rev. xix. 10; and the Spirit, according to our Saviour's promise, John xv. 26, doth testify of him.

9 <sup>m Rom. 10.</sup> And put no difference between us <sup>11.</sup> and them, <sup>n ch. 10. 16.</sup> purifying their hearts by faith. <sup>26. 43.</sup>

God had now broken down the middle wall of partition betwixt Jew and Gentile, Eph. ii. 14, and distributed his graces to these also, which was signified by the rending of the veil from the top to the bottom, Matt. xxvii. 51, whereby such as were formerly without, might see and enjoy the benefit of those great things which had been hidden under those shadows and types. Purifying their hearts, from idolatry, and other impieties in which they had lived; which is the inward circumcision of the heart; and whosoever is thus cleansed, ought not to be reputed amongst the unclean. By faith; faith is the instrument, God is the efficient cause, of our justification and renovation.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, <sup>o Matt. 23.</sup> to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, <sup>4 Gal. 5. 1.</sup> which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

Why tempt ye God? why would you make a doubt of, and put it to a trial, whether God did in good earnest admit the Gentiles to his favour, and whether he remains firm and constant in such his kindness towards them? They did tempt God also, by disliking the calling of the Gentiles, and would have brought God's will, were it possible, unto theirs; not submitting their wills, as they ought, unto God's: for he that sins in any kind, does tempt God; that is, he tries God's patience, power, and righteousness. A yoke; so the law of ceremonies is called, Gal. v. 1, and was a yoke indeed, if we consider, 1. Their variety; 2. Their difficulty; 3. Their chargeableness; 4. Their inefficacy, being only shadows of good things to come, Col. ii. 17.

11 But <sup>p Rom. 3. 24.</sup> we believe that through the <sup>Eph. 2. 6.</sup> grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall <sup>Tit. 2. 11.</sup> be saved, <sup>& 3. 4, 5.</sup> even as they.

The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ; all saving grace may be well so called, it being purchased only by Christ, and bestowed upon us from the Father through Christ. Even as they; the Jews their fathers; these were saved through the grace of the Messiah which was to come; and the apostle urges this (against the imposing of the law) to the Jews, because neither their ancestors nor themselves could be justified by the law, but only by grace.

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them. <sup>q ch. 14. 27.</sup>

All the multitude; the apostles and elders themselves gave attention to what Barnabas and Paul declared, and by their silence did tacitly approve of what they had said. Miracles and wonders; the conversion of the Gentiles in itself, and not only the signs which did attend it, is truly wonderful: the saving of any one soul is a miraculous work.

13 ¶ And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me: <sup>r ch. 12. 17.</sup>

After they had held their peace; Barnabas and Paul had finished their narrative. James, who was surnamed the Just, and was the son of Alphaeus, and a kinsman to our Saviour, now being president of this council. Answered; that is, began to speak.

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. <sup>s ver. 7.</sup>

Simeon, or Simon, the name of Peter; but St. Luke, being himself a Hebrew, writes it according as they pronounced it, and not so contracted as the Greeks wrote it. A people; there were some at all times probably amongst the Gentiles who did fear God, as Job and his three friends; but they did not make a people, or such a number as is here spoken of. For his name: God takes out of the world a people for his name, that is, 1. For himself; as, Prov. xviii. 10, the name of the Lord is put for the Lord himself. 2. For to call upon his name, as also for to be called by his name. 3. For his glory and honour, and to magnify his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

The prophets; in the plural number, though only one cited: it is an ordinary enallage; but it also shows the harmony amongst the prophets, they all speaking by one Spirit; what one said is as if all had said it.

16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

After this; in the days of the Messiah. I will return: the word may be taken in both voices. If actively, it signifies God's returning unto the Gentiles, from whom he had departed. If passively, it foreshows their returning unto God, whom they had forsaken. The tabernacle; the house, expressed by a tabernacle, (as frequently in Scripture,) because that anciently they dwelt only in tabernacles; and here for the throne of David, who was a type of Christ, whose kingdom is over all. God does promise less than he does perform, for he did not only restore the tabernacle of David, in Christ, but raised it to a far greater splendour and glory in its spiritual state. And though St. James here does not exactly keep unto the words of the prophet, he speaks their sense and meaning.

17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

In the prophet it is the remnant of Edom, Amos ix. 12, which is here called the residue of men; for as Jacob, or Israel, shadowed out the church, so Edom, or Esau, (the other son of Isaac.) represented those who were rejected, Rom. ix. 13. The prophet also adds, by way of explication, all the heathen; as the apostle does here, all the Gentiles. Upon whom my name is called; who shall be mine, or appropriated unto me; also called by his name, they being called Christians from Christ, whom they believed in. Saith the Lord, who doeth all these things; the calling of the Gentiles was God's work, and therefore so far from being excepted against, that it ought to be marvellous in our eyes.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

This the apostle adds, that they might not be offended with the seeming novelty and surprise of the calling of the Gentiles, and abrogation of the ceremonies; for it was no other than what God had before determined to do, and therefore they ought to rest satisfied in the wise and holy appointments of God.

19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: <sup>u See ver. 28.</sup>

St. James here gives his opinion, confirming and approving what Peter had done in conversing with and baptizing of the Gentiles; whom he would not have afflicted or disturbed with such things as were not necessary, lest that it should hinder the conversion of the Gentiles, and the church should lose the substance for a shadow. <sup>x 1 Thes. 1. 9.</sup>

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. <sup>y Gen. 35. 2.</sup>

Deut. 12. 16, 23.

That they abstain from pollutions of idols; eating of meat that was offered to idols, (as ver. 29,) in a case of scandal, and for the present state of the church, was forbid, though afterwards in other cases indulged, 1 Cor. x. 27. Fornication is here mentioned amongst indifferent things; not that it ever was so, but because it was amongst the Gentiles reputed to be so, even by them who punished adultery severely. By these two, some think all sins against both the tables of the law to be forbidden, because by one sin against each table all the sins against any command may synecdochically be understood. From things strangled; such creatures as had not their blood let out, and therefore were not to be fed upon, by the law of God, Gen. ix. 4, given as soon as the use of flesh was allowed for food. And from blood; they were also much more to abstain from blood, when shed out of the body of any slain creature, Lev. iii. 17; Deut. xii. 23. That blood was forbidden might be to teach them meekness, and to abstain from revenge. It is certain, that such nations as feed on blood are most barbarous and cruel. It is also probable, that these being included in the precepts which they called, The precepts of Adam, or Noah, and to which all the proselytes of the gate were obliged to yield obedience, the apostle would have the observance of them to be continued upon them that came from amongst them over unto Christianity. For though all these ceremonies were dead, (with Christ,) yet they were not then deadly, and did wait a time for their more decent burial. If any wonder that the council did not treat of and write about greater matters; as of worshipping God the Father, through the Son; of denying of ourselves, and taking up the cross; he ought to consider, that the question they met upon was about other matters, and that those great things were never in question amongst such as feared God.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 13. 15.
<sup>27.</sup>

The reason why St. James would not have the ceremonies buried as soon as they were dead, was because the Jews had been so long confirmed in them, and bare such a love unto them; and he would purchase concord betwixt them and the Gentile converts; though the Gentiles should bear with some inconvenience into the bargain, as not presently using all the liberty which through Christ they had a right unto.

22 Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

<sup>c</sup> ch. 1. 23.

The apostles and elders, with the whole church; a happy concord, all agreeing as one man, by one Spirit. To send chosen men of their own company; that Paul and Barnabas might be the better credited, and that by such as had been of a contrary judgment: so hard it is to remove suspicions, and to root out pre-conceived opinions. Judas surnamed Barsabas; the brother of that Joseph mentioned chap. i. 23. Silas, called Silvanus also. Chief men among the brethren; noted for their holy living, or great knowledge, or office in the church.

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia:

The apostles and elders and brethren; the letter was wrote in the name of them all, that it might have the greater force, and better acceptance; that so strong a cord might not be broken by the false apostles. Of the Gentiles; such as out of Gentilism, or paganism, were converted unto Christ; to whom the determination of this case was of the greatest concern; their right of belonging unto Christ, and having any hopes of salvation, being questioned, unless they would be circumcised.

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your

<sup>d</sup> ver. 1.
<sup>Gal. 2. 4.</sup>
<sup>& 5. 12.</sup>
<sup>Tit. 1. 10,</sup>
<sup>11.</sup>

souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment:

Certain which went out from us; for these false apostles were such as came from Judea, ver. 1, that is, from the church there. It is Satan's great policy to divide, that he may rule; he will have at least one share where there is more than one. No such sad divisions as church divisions, when that some of ourselves preach perverse things, as chap. xx. 30. Have troubled you with words; as if in the professing of Christianity there would be no salvation unless Judaism be embraced, and circumcision admitted. No greater trouble to a considerate mind, than about the concern of salvation, when they say, Where is thy God? Saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law; these they did well put together; for by circumcision they engaged to the observance of the whole law of Moses; and by the decreeing the omission, that whole law of ceremonies is declared void, and of no effect. What truth and unity build up, discord and error pull down.

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul,

With one accord; with one mind, as if they had all but one soul, (they had but one Spirit, the Spirit of truth,) as chap. ii. 1; v. 12; their unanimity adding great strength to the decree they sent.

26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

<sup>e</sup> ch. 13. 50.
<sup>& 14. 19.</sup>
<sup>1 Cor. 15. 30.</sup>
<sup>2 Cor. 11. 23,</sup>
<sup>26.</sup>

Because that the false apostles at Antioch had vilified Paul and Barnabas, and opposed their doctrine and practice in admitting of the Gentiles by baptism into the church, the council here at Jerusalem take occasion to vindicate and to commend them, especially for their suffering so much for Christ, of which we read, chap. xiii. 50; xiv. 19: it being most reasonable to believe, that they had not done or said any thing for their own sakes, who had done and suffered so much for Christ and his truth's sake. For the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; for Christ's honour, and the truth of his gospel.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth.

† Gr. word.

They shall inform you of the truth of what is contained in this epistle, that you may be more assured it is not forged or counterfeited. Of these men, see ver. 22.

28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things;

To the Holy Ghost, and to us; that is, unto us, assisted by the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is deservedly first mentioned, that the apostles might testify that they desired to say, write, or do nothing in which they had not the Spirit of God directing of them: and they mention the Spirit, that the Antiochians, unto whom they wrote, might be assured they were not human inventions which they recommended, but that they had the authority of God for them. Unto us; as ministers, or God's stewards, who acquainted them with these things, in discharge of their duty, and that they might appear themselves to be faithful. Burden; the yoke spoken of, ver. 10. Necessary things: to be sure, several of the things here spoken of are not absolutely necessary unto salvation, or simply, and in their own nature, necessary, as to abstain from blood, &c.; but though they are not necessary always and at all times, yet in this place, and at this time, they were necessary for the peace of the church, and to avoid giving of offence to the converted Jews, and to nourish brotherly love betwixt them and the Gentiles.

29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

<sup>f</sup> ver. 20.
<sup>ch. 21. 25.</sup>
<sup>Rev. 2. 14,</sup>
<sup>20.</sup>
<sup>8 Lev. 17. 14.</sup>

Of these see more largely, ver. 20. From meats offered to idols; they were wont to carry home and feast upon part of the sacrifices they had offered unto their false gods; nay, they did not, without reproach, eat of any greater beasts, (as oxen and sheep,) but they always first offered some of them unto their idols. And it was accounted no small impiety to eat ἀβύρα ἑσπὰ, part of any beasts which they had not first offered up to some or other of their gods. From blood; for this reason they might not eat of any thing that died of itself, as Deut. xiv. 21, because the blood was not gone out of it. From fornication; mentioned here, because so commonly practised amongst the Gentiles, and yet not esteemed a sin. Hence also, 1 Thess. iv. 3, the apostle lays a very great charge against it. Fare ye well; the ordinary appreciation wherewith their letters were concluded, in which they wished health and strength to the party they wrote unto: instead of which word, some ancient copies read, φερόμενοι ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ; which is rendered, Walk in the Holy Ghost; or, the Holy Ghost carrying, or enabling of you: a wish or prayer becoming these holy men that made it. They who have found the necessity of the Spirit's assistance, desire it above all things for such as they wish well unto.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

When they were dismissed; Paul, Barnabas, Judas, and Silas; which two last were sent with the former. Gathered the multitude together; from whom they were sent, ver. 1, 2, and that this determination of the council might be more publicly known, as all things concerning our common salvation ought to be.

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the || consolation.

It could not but much rejoice the Gentile believers, that they were exempted from circumcision, and the ceremonial law. And it gladdened the believing Jews also, that the controversy was determined, and concord established amongst them. But much more might they all rejoice to understand the grace of the gospel; and that we are not justified by the deeds of the law, but by faith in Christ, Rom. v. 1. Consolation; this word also signifies exhortation, and it was matter of joy to be put upon such excellent duties as our most holy religion recommends, and to be deterred from such erroneous evils as it forbids. All that God requires of us being only to eschew evil, and do good, Isa. i. 16, 17; 1 Pet. iii. 11.

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, <sup>h</sup> exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

Prophets; not properly so called, from any gift of foretelling things to come, but as doctors and teachers in the church, Eph. iv. 11, expounding Moses and the prophets, and showing how and what they speak concerning Christ: proving out of them, that he was the Messiah, as Philip had done, chap. viii. 35. Confirmed them: see chap. xiv. 22; xviii. 23.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let <sup>l</sup> go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

A space; a competent time; some make this space to be a year. They were let go in peace; they were dismissed with earnest prayers for them; for by peace is meant all kind of good, which they desired for them, as Matt. x. 13. Unto the apostles; such of them as were at Jerusalem, who also had sent them.

34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

Though, having performed his message, he was discharged, and might have returned; yet, for the further benefit of that church, he continued at Antioch.

35 <sup>k</sup> Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

Judas only returned to Jerusalem, to acquaint the apostles with the reception their letter had met with, and what obedience was readily given to their decrees; so that when these went away the church at Antioch was not left destitute of faithful pastors. When God gives the word, great is the multitude of preachers, Psal. lxxviii. 11.

36 ¶ And some days after Paul said <sup>A. D. 53.</sup> unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren <sup>l</sup> in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

It is not enough that they had sown good seed, but they must take care lest it be plucked up, and tares sown in the stead of it, by the wicked one, Matt. xiii. 19. A husbandman's work is never at an end, neither is the labourer's in God's vineyard. See how they do; not so much looking after their bodily welfare, as how their souls fared, whether they continued in the faith, and integrity of life.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them <sup>m</sup> John, whose surname was Mark.

This John, or Mark, was sister's son to Barnabas, as Col. iv. 10.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, <sup>n</sup> who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

This deserting of Paul and Barnabas by John, is mentioned chap. xiii. 13. To the work; the work unto which the Spirit had called them, chap. xiii. 2, which was to offer life and salvation unto the Gentiles, and to gather them into the fold of Jesus Christ. This objection was very considerable, and ought to have weighed more than this John's propinquity, or nearness in blood, unto Barnabas.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

They departed asunder; as Abraham and Lot parted, Gen. xiii. 9, yet keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; loving of and praying for one another, as we may judge, being both good men. But they verified here what they had said at Lystra, chap. xiv. 15. We are men of like passions with you; yet God overruled these very divisions betwixt Paul and Barnabas for his own glory, and the enlargement of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, several places being by this means blessed with the gospel. And this reflection upon this John Mark, is thought to have made him for the future more diligent and valiant in the cause of the gospel, which occasioned that kind salutation from St. Paul unto him, Col. iv. 10. Cyprus; an island in the Mediterranean Sea.

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, <sup>o</sup> being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

The favour of God, as chap. xiv. 26, which the wisest and holiest men stand in need of in all their undertakings; as also his gracious conduct and assistance.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, <sup>p</sup> confirming the churches.

Syria and Cilicia; where there were several brethren by reason of the dispersion that was upon Stephen's death, chap. xi. 19; and unto whom also the fore-recited letter was written, chap. xv. 23. Confirming the churches; putting them in mind of the gospel of Christ, which they had heard and believed; and encouraging of them to persevere in the profession of it, and being ready to answer any objection that could be brought against it.

CHAP. XVI

Paul having circumcised Timothy, and taken him for his companion, passeth through divers countries, 1—8; and is directed by a vision to go into Macedonia, 9—13. He converteth Lydia, 14, 15; and casteth out a spirit of divination, 16—18. He and Silas are whipped and imprisoned, 19—24. The prison doors are thrown open by an earth-

<sup>l</sup> Or, exhortation.

<sup>h</sup> ch. 14. 22. & 18. 23.

<sup>l</sup> 1 Cor. 16. 11. Heb. 11. 31.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 13. 1.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 13. 4, 13, 14, 51. & 14. 1, 6, 24, 25.

<sup>m</sup> ch. 12. 12, 25 & 13. 5. Col. 4. 10. 2 Tim. 4. 11. Philem. 24.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 13. 13.

<sup>o</sup> ch. 14. 22.

<sup>p</sup> ch. 16. 6.

quake at midnight: the jailer, prevented by Paul from killing himself, is converted, 25—34. They are released by the magistrates, 35—40.

a ch. 14. 6.
b ch. 19. 22.
Rom. 16. 21.
1 Cor. 4. 17.
Phil. 2. 19.
1 Thea. 3. 2.
1 Tim. 1. 2.
2 Tim. 1. 2.
c 2 Tim. 1. 5.

THEN came he to <sup>a</sup>Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, <sup>b</sup>named Timotheus, <sup>c</sup>the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

Derbe and Lystra; of these cities see chap. xiv. 6. Timotheus; who was known unto Paul from his childhood, 2 Tim. i. 5, and accompanied him in many journeys, 2 Tim. iii. 10, 11, and is called by him, his work-fellow, Rom. xvi. 21. A certain woman, called Eunice; being one of them that had believed in Christ in Judea, and had a holy woman to her mother, named Lois. His father was a Greek: although it was not lawful for a Jew to marry a woman of another nation, yet some think that a Jewess might marry to a stranger, as Esther married to Ahasuerus. A Greek; of Gentile extraction, and therefore not circumcised; yet he is accounted to have been a proselyte.

d ch. 6. 3.

2 Which <sup>d</sup>was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

Though Timothy was well known unto Paul, yet he would not ordain him without the testimony of others concerning him, of his holy life, and knowledge in the Scripture, 2 Tim. iii. 15, which he did excel in.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and <sup>e</sup>took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

Circumcised him because of the Jews, who could not yet be persuaded that the law of circumcision was abrogated. Paul, who became all things to all men, that he might save some, circumcised Timothy that he might not offend the Jewish converts, 1 Cor. ix. 22, but would not circumcise Titus, Gal. ii. 3, lest that he should harden them, and offend the Gentiles. These indifferent things require a single eye, to the edifying of the church, and the salvation of souls. Timothy was uncircumcised, although his mother was a Jewess; for according to their Talmudists, the mother could not cause her child to be circumcised against the mind of the father.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, <sup>f</sup>that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

The decrees; the determination of the council, mentioned chap. xv. 20, 29. Ordained of the apostles and elders; by common consent, and not of one only, whosoever he were. g ch. 15. 41.

5 And <sup>g</sup>so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

Established in the faith; being rightly persuaded in the nature and use of things indifferent; and, in general, of things necessary to be believed. And increased in number daily; so that this visitation of the churches had a double benefit. First, it strengthened them that were already converted. Secondly, it added more unto their number.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia,

Phrygia and Galatia were parts of Asia Minor. They were forbidden of the Holy Ghost by some revelation, though the manner is not known, to preach the word in Asia, for that time; though afterwards Paul preached there about two years together, chap. xix. 10. Thus God (the great Householder) orders the candle to be removed from one room unto another; sends, or takes away, the light of the gospel, to whom, and as often, as he pleaseth. Our calling, as well as our election, is free; and we may say with our Saviour, Matt. xi. 26, Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight.

7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not.

Mysia; a little country near Troas. Bithynia; another province nigh unto the same place, over against Thracia, bordering upon the Black Sea. The Spirit; the Spirit of Jesus, or of God, as some copies read. Suffered them not; the journeyings of them that preached the gospel, as well as their words, were directed by God; they might not say, Do, or Go, but according to the will of God.

8 And they passing by Mysia <sup>h</sup>came down to Troas. <sup>h 2 Cor. 2. 12. 2 Tim. 4. 13.</sup>

Either the relics of the famous city of Troy, or the country thereabouts, in which the city of Antiochia was built.

9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a <sup>i</sup>man of Macedonia, <sup>i ch. 16. 9.</sup> and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

A man; an angel in the appearance and likeness (in habit and demeanour) of one of that country. Macedonia; a Grecian province in Europe, extending to the Archipelago. Help us; as to our souls, with the saving light of the gospel: God sends the ministers of the gospel to help such as would otherwise perish: with the gospel, salvation comes.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go <sup>j</sup>into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the Gospel unto them. <sup>j 2 Cor. 2. 13.</sup>

Immediately; as soon as God's will was manifested, they make no delay, not objecting against the journey. We endeavoured to go; St. Luke, the penman of this book was one of them that went, (the others were Paul, Silas, and Timotheus,) and therefore speaks in the plural number.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

Samothracia; an island so called, because the inhabitants came partly out of Thrace, and partly from Samos. This Neapolis was a city in the confines of Thrace and Macedonia.

12 And from thence to <sup>k</sup>Philippi, which <sup>k 1 Phil. 1. 1. Or, the first.</sup> is || the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

Philippi; a city so called from Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, who repaired a ruined town, and caused it to be called by his name. The chief city of that part of Macedonia; or the first city in the passage from Samothracia unto Macedonia. A colony; where many Roman citizens went to inhabit, and whose inhabitants had the freedom of the city of Rome. To the church in this city Paul wrote an Epistle.

13 And on the <sup>l</sup>sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted <sup>l 2 Cor. 2. 13.</sup> thither.

In those places where there were not enough to build a synagogue, or could not obtain leave to do it, the Jews in those countries chose more private places to meet in, which usually were near rivers, or by the sea-side, removed from the noise and observance of the multitude; and these places were called προσευχαί, from the prayers which were usually made there; and to one of these Paul and the rest went, taking that occasion to meet with them whom they might preach the word of life unto. The women are here named, as being more numerous in those oratories, or such as most willingly heard and attended unto what was spoken.

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose <sup>m</sup>heart the Lord opened, that <sup>m Luke 24. 45.</sup> she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

Lydia; so called from the country of that name, she being born at Thyatira, a city therein, and now lived with her family at Philippi. Worshipped God; being a proselyte, and one of them who had left the heathenish idolatry, and owned the one only and true God; but as yet unacquainted with the gospel of his Son our Saviour. Heart, in Scripture sense, signifies both the understanding and the will: thus, With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, Rom. x. 10. Her understanding was enlightened, her heart changed; she now loved what she before hated, and hated what before she loved. The Lord opened; this was the Lord's work; according unto what our Saviour himself had said, John vi. 44, No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him. And yet we may in a sense open our hearts, by using such means as God hath promised to succeed for that purpose, Rev. iii. 20; and especially when, in a sense of our inability and necessity, we implore the free grace of God, and engage him to work in us according unto all his good pleasure. Otherwise creating a clean heart within us, as it is called, Psal. li. 10, is beyond the power of nature. She attended: hearing is an instructive sense, and faith cometh by it, Rom. x. 17, but it must then be accompanied with attention.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

And her household; when Lydia had right to baptism, by reason of her faith in Jesus Christ, all her family, whom she could undertake to bring up in the knowledge of Christ, were admitted to that ordinance also; as all the servants, and such others as were born in his house, or bought with his money, were circumcised with Abraham, Gen. xvii. 12, 13. Now the gospel does not contract in any respect, but enlarges, the privileges of believers in all things. And if they might under the law have their children and servants admitted into a covenant with God, (which could not but rejoice religious parents and masters, who value the relation they and theirs have to God, above all earthly things,) surely under the gospel none of our families are excluded, unless they willfully exclude themselves. She constrained us; as the two disciples that were going to Emmaus constrained our Saviour, Luke xxiv. 29, with all earnest entreaties and loving violence.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying:

Went to prayer; went towards the place where their public prayers were usually made. Of divination; or, of Python, the name of Apollo, from the place where he was worshipped, (which was afterwards called Delphi,) and from whom all evil spirits, that pretended to divination, were called Pythons; as that the woman made use of to delude Saul by, 1 Sam. xxviii. 7.

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

The devil might be forced by God to confess this; or, he might do it voluntarily by God's permission: First, To draw men on to believe him in other things, being he commended the servants of God, and spake the truth in this. Secondly, That, by flattering St. Paul, he might puff him up, and occasion him to sin. But an evil spirit, (or an evil man,) when he dissembles as if he were good, is then worst of all.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

q See Mark i. 25, 24.

r Mark 16. 17.

St. Paul was grieved, either for the maid's sake, who suffered so much by her being possessed with this spirit, or, for their sakes who were seduced by him. St. Paul (as our Saviour had done, Mark i. 25) refuseth the testimony of the devil; for he being the father of lies, John viii. 44, makes every thing he says to be suspected; as it is a usual punishment of liars, that they are not believed when they speak the truth; and the devil never speaks any truth but with an intention to deceive. In the name of Jesus Christ; by the authority and power of Christ.

19 ¶ And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers,

Her masters; for she was a servant, or slave; and being very advantageous, might have many that had a share in her. Their gains; the profit could not be considerable, for they were to come with the rewards of divination in their hands, as they did to Balaam, Numb. xxii. 7. Rulers: see the next verse.

20 And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, exceedingly trouble our city,

Magistrates, the same who are called rulers; and the word here shows, that they were under the power of the sword, and ruled by the Romans; though the rulers spoken of in the former verse might be the civil magistrates of the city, and the magistrates here mentioned might be the commanders of the forces therein. They carried them, as they did our Saviour, from one to the other, the more to disgrace them, and to obtain the greater punishment for them. They mention their being Jews, because it was a most odious name unto all men, by reason of their different opinions in religion, and diversity of manners in conversation from all.

21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

There was at Philippi, as appears ver. 12, a colony of the Romans, and they were governed by their laws, by which they might make no innovation in religion without the consent of the senate, and afterwards of their emperors; which here these persecutors allege.

22 And the multitude rose up together against them: and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

The multitude; generality and unanimity alone cannot authorize opinions or practices. Rent off their clothes; Paul's and Silas's clothes, to disgrace them the more, or in order unto their being scourged; though some think that the magistrates rent their own clothes, in detestation of the pretended blasphemy which was laid to Paul's charge, as the high priest did, Mark xiv. 63.

23 And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely:

Laid many stripes upon them; partly by the lictors or executioners, and partly by the furious rabble. The jailor; this jailor's name (of whose conversion we read hereafter) was Stephanas, as may appear if you compare 1 Cor. i. 16 with what follows by St. Luke in this story. Of him also we read, 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 17.

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

Thus they dealt with Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 20, compared with Psal. cv. 18, and with Jeremiah, and with John Baptist. Sanctorum vors est, et non moleste ferenda.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

No time or place where prayer is not acceptable unto God, and prevalent with him; nay, it sounds the sweeter when on the waters of affliction a good man pours it forth

ch. 19. 25.
26.
2 Cor. 6. 5.
u Mat. 10. 18.
l Or. court.

n Gen. 19. 3.
& 33. 11.
Judg. 19. 21.
Luke 24. 29.
Heb. 13. 2.

x 1 Kings
18. 17.
ch. 17. 6.

y 2 Cor. 6.
5. & 11. 23.
25. 1 Thea.
2. 2.

unto God. Sang praises unto God, that they were counted worthy to suffer for Christ: and being all things are over-ruled for the good, and conduce to the advantage, of them that love God, Rom. viii. 28, they owe unto God thanks for all things through Jesus Christ, which is also required of them, Eph. v. 20.

<sup>a ch. 4. 31.</sup> 26 *And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately <sup>a ch. 5. 19. & 12. 7, 10.</sup> *all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

Suddenly; how soon is prayer answered, when the fulness of time is come! So nigh is God unto all that call upon him, Psal. xxxiv. 17; cxlv. 18. There was a great earthquake; an earthquake did usually precede some wonderful matter, as Matt. xxviii. 2. And although God could have delivered these his servants without an earthquake, yet, to show the more that their deliverance was his work, and it was no artifice or force of their own, he manifested his power after this manner. Every one's bands were loosed; either by the earthquake, or some secret power of an angel, or by God himself immediately, that the apostles and others might know that the souls of men should be loosed and set free by them, whose bodies for that purpose were now freed by God.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

Awaking out of his sleep, by the earthquake, which being upon an extraordinary occasion, could not fail to do all that God intended by it. Would have killed himself, for fear of suffering a more cruel death; for all jailers, who let any prisoner escape, were to suffer the same punishment that the prisoners were thought to have deserved; and self-murder was very ordinary amongst both the Romans and Grecians. But whatsoever their philosophers have said of it, it must needs have been a very great provocation against God, to show so great an aversion from God's will, disposing of them and their concerns in this world, and challenging or daring of him to do worse by them in the world to come. Men must have sad comforts, and take desperate resolutions, that come to this at once.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

The other prisoners were smitten with amazement; neither did they mind (or it might have been kept from them) that the doors were opened, and their chains loosed: but as for the apostles, the same God who wrought this deliverance for them, might inform them of the intent of it; that by this means the conversion of the jailer and his family was intended; and that their doctrine might be magnified, which had been so much vilified.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas,

He called for a light, or lights, which prisons are not usually without. Came trembling: what a sudden and great change can God make! he comes trembling to those feet which he had put into the stocks so lately. Fell down before Paul and Silas; by which he would give a civil respect unto them, it being an ordinary rite amongst the Eastern nations (as endless examples in Scripture witness) to pay their respects; and from them it spread itself into Greece: which respect Paul and Silas do not refuse, because it was barely civil, and did show the humility and brokenness of the jailer's heart. Yet Peter would not accept of the like from Cornelius, chap. x. 25, 26, because it was more than a bare civil respect which Cornelius would have given him.

<sup>b Luke 3. 10. ch. 2. 37. & 9. 6.</sup> 30 And brought them out, and said, <sup>b</sup>Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

Brought them out, into his own apartment in the prison, or to some more open and free place. Sirs; a term of respect given by the Romans and Grecians to such whom they honoured, as now the jailer did these seemingly most contemptible men. What must I do to be saved? he might have some knowledge of a future state, which he here inquires after, 1. By the very light of nature. 2. By tradition. 3. By the doctrine of the philosophers. 4. By his frequenting with Jews and proselytes. Men under fears, and in dangers, as to the things of this world, are brought to look after another world (as every one prays in a storm): but this is only when God is pleased to sanctify such fears and disasters; otherwise all the plagues of Egypt do but harden them the more, Exod. vii. 3.

31 And they said, *Believe on the <sup>c John 3. 16. & 4. 37. 1 John 5. 10.</sup> Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; this is the sum of the gospel. Christ, apprehended by faith, serves for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, as 1 Cor. i. 30. But then this precious faith must be such as works by love, as purifies the heart, chap. xv. 9, as overcometh the world, 1 John v. 4, as quenches the fiery darts of the devil, Eph. vi. 16, and is deservedly called, a most holy faith, Jude 20. Thou shalt be saved, and thy house; thou shalt by this means come to obtain that life thou dost so much desire after; and not only thyself, but (God gives more than we ask) thy children and family shall be saved; inasmuch as the covenant, where it is entered into, is not only with them, but with their children.

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

Expounding more at large that which they had briefly propounded in the foregoing verse, as concerning the natures and offices of Christ; especially his suffering for our sins, and rising again for our justification. To all that were in his house; their fellow prisoners not exempted, unto whom it was a joyful confinement, being by this means made God's freemen.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

The same hour of the night; he did not delay to show forth the fruits of his faith, and real conversion. And washed their stripes; which his stripes had made, using such means as might assuage their pain, and heal their wounds, He and all his: see on ver. 15, and 32. Of baptism administered without any delay, upon their profession of faith in Christ, we have had examples, chap. viii. 38, and x. 47, and in the 15th verse of this chapter.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, <sup>d Luke 5. 25. & 19. 4.</sup> he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

Into his house; which was close unto, or a separate part of, the prison, into which they did ascend, being before in a low dungeon. He set meat before them; Paul and Silas had been long fasting, and in any season of the night it was a mercy to them to have a table spread for them. Rejoiced; finding the effects of his faith, peace with God, and joy in the Holy Ghost; which was not a little augmented, in that he had his family admitted into the covenant of God's grace, they also believing, and being baptized.

35 And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

The serjeants; their messengers, or officers, which did carry a mace, or a rod, from whence they had their name. Saying, Let those men go; probably being terrified with the earthquake, which if it had not been general, they could not yet have heard of. Their consciences might also accuse them for having unjustly punished them for a good deed which they had done, only to gratify the rage of the multitude; as also because they had acted against the custom of the Romans, (though they did not yet know that they had the privilege of Roman citizens,) and had beaten strangers without any legal trial, or form of law.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

Told this saying to Paul; being glad that he might release them. Neither does he bid them go, as desirous to be rid of them; but, not requiring any fees, he lets them go to preach the gospel, and fulfil their ministry, with his prayers and good wishes.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

Paul said unto them, the officers who were sent to the prison with the message about their liberty. They have beaten us; the magistrates, who commanded them to be beaten, are justly charged with the beating of them, as if they had themselves done it. Openly; it was no small aggravation of their injustice, and these holy men's sufferings, that they had, for the greater spite unto them, openly scourged them. Uncondemned; for they were not tried, or permitted to speak for themselves. Being Romans; having the privilege of Roman citizens, which was sometimes given to whole communities. Now such by their laws might not be bound, much less beaten, (and least of all uncondemned,) without the consent of the Romans. Let them come themselves and fetch us out; this the apostle stands upon, not so much for his own, as for the gospel's sake, that it might not be noised abroad, that the preachers of it were wicked and vile men, and did deserve such ignominious punishment. Though they were as innocent as doves, it became them also to be as wise as serpents.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

For the Romans (under whom these magistrates were) made it by their laws to be treason thus to abuse any of their citizens. God overruled their fear of man for the deliverance of his servants.

39 And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

Two things the magistrates had to desire of them: 1. That they would excuse the wrong done unto them, which they feared lest the Romans might revenge. 2. That, to avoid further mischiefs, (as they thought,) they would leave the city. But the words here used do signify, also, that they comforted them, as well as besought, or exhorted them: both by word and deed they sought to make amends for the injury they had offered unto them; and desired them to depart for their own safety, lest the people should express their rage and madness against them.

40 And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Entered into the house of Lydia; of whom, ver. 14. They do not shun dangers, so as to neglect their duty. They comforted them, in respect of the tribulation they had endured, and were still to endure; or exhorted them to prepare for suffering, and to submit unto God in it, and to make a holy use of it.

CHAP. XVII

Paul preaching in the synagogue at Thessalonica, some believe, both Jews and Greeks, 1—4. The unbelieving Jews raise an uproar, 5—9. Paul and Silas are sent to Berea: the Berean Jews are commended for searching the Scriptures, 10—12. The Jews of Thessalonica follow and drive Paul from Berea, 13—15. At Athens Paul disputing is carried before the court of Areopagus, 16—21. He preacheth the living God, to the Athenians unknown: his general call to repentance; the resurrection of Christ; and his coming to judgment, 22—31. Some mock, others believe, 32—34.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews:

Amphipolis, a city near to Philippi; so called, because the sea came up to it on both sides. Apollonia, a city near to Thessalonica. This Thessalonica was one of the chiefest cities of Macedonia: unto the church in this place St. Paul wrote two of his Epistles. This city was built by Philip, in memory of a victory he obtained over the Thessali. Where was a synagogue of the Jews: it seems that there was no synagogue in either of the other places, but that the Jews of the other cities resorted unto the synagogue in this, all these three cities being in Macedonia. The sending away of Paul and Silas, chap. xvi. 39, to gratify the mad multitude, was a means to bring the word of salvation to those places.

2 And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures,

As his manner was; who was faithful unto him that had called him, and took all occasions to do his Master's work. Out of the Scriptures; the law and the prophets, which they owned to be of Divine authority; and from the Holy Scriptures alone, all knowledge in the things of God and of our salvation must be fetched. If any speak of these matters not according to them, it is because they have no light in them, Isa. viii. 20. What scriptures St. Paul alleged are not set down; but they were such as our Saviour had made use of, Luke xxiv. 27, for the same purpose. This was customary with Paul, to preach these things unto the Jews first, as chap. xiii. 46, till they had put the word of God from them by their incredulity.

3 Opening and alledging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

Opening the scriptures which he had quoted. The very entrance into God's word giveth light, Psal. cxix. 130. And alledging, that Christ must needs have suffered; making the truth concerning our Saviour, which he preached, so plain to the eye of their understanding, as any thing which is exposed to the view of our bodily eyes. Comparing the words of the prophets concerning Christ, with those things which were done and suffered by him, Psal. xxii. 6; Isa. liii. throughout; Matt. xvi. 21; Luke xxiv. 26, 46. That this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ; that Jesus whom Paul preached was the true and only Messiah, and that what was written of the Messiah was fulfilled in him.

4 And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

Consorted with Paul and Silas; were so affected towards them, as that they were willing to take the same part or lot with them. The word imports the nearest and most intimate friendship and union; even such as is conjugal. Devout Greeks; such of that nation as were become proselytes, who had renounced the idolatry and wicked conversation of the heathen, amongst whom they lived; and had joined themselves to the Jews; at least so far as to hear the law and the prophets read and expounded in their synagogues; and did worship but one God, and did injury unto none. Of these we frequently read in this book; as ver. 17; chap. xiii. 42, 43. Of the chief women not a few; a considerable number of these believed; yet, chap. xiii. 50, such had stirred up persecution against Paul and Barnabas.

5 ¶ But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

Believed not; or were not convinced, or persuaded by St. Paul's sermons and arguments. Moved with envy, or zeal; which, as fire in the chimney, its due place, is useful and necessary; but when scattered abroad, and out of its place, is most dangerous and destructive. Lewd fellows;

<sup>a</sup> Luke 4. 16. ch. 9. 20. & 12. 5, 14. & 14. 1. & 16. 13. & 19. 8.

<sup>b</sup> Luke 24. 26, 46. ch. 18. 24. Gal. 3. 1. 1 Cor. xxi. 22, said he, I preach.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 28. 24. <sup>d</sup> ch. 15. 32, 27, 32, 40.

<sup>e</sup> Rom. 16. 21.

such as stand in markets and public places, gazing, and having nothing to do. Of the baser sort: to what mean and base acts do not blind zeal and the rage of persecutors descend! Jason; some think this to be the Greek name which the Hellenists did use for Joshua, or Jesus. This man was one of the dispersion, who came from Judea into Syria, and from thence unto Macedonia; and is famous, so far as the word of God is preached, for being the host to Paul and Silas; and is mentioned, Rom. xvi. 21. To bring them out to the people, for to slay them. Nothing but their blood could quench the thirst of their persecutors; but having no just cause for the spilling of it, they are willing to have others to bear the odium of it.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, 'These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

Being withdrawn, to avoid the popular rage against them, they charge innovation upon them, as knowing how jealous rulers are of any alteration. Thus whatsoever mischief befell the state, or whatsoever was odious and abominable, was in the primitive times still charged upon the Christians. The enemies of God's church clothe his servants in beasts' skins, (painting and representing them in what forms they please,) that every one may hunt and worry them.

7 Whom Jason hath received: and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

Hath received; privily, and with design. Contrary to the decrees of Cæsar: the Romans, before they were brought under their emperors, (and after that,) did not suffer any to be called king without their allowance and approbation; which was also much valued by such unto whom that honour was bestowed by them. Another king, besides Cæsar, who was called the lord of the world. This is like to the charge laid against our Saviour; but most maliciously both then and now, and wholly against their own consciences; for they themselves expected the Messiah to be a king, and refused and rejected him because his kingdom was a spiritual kingdom, and not of this world, John xviii. 36, 37.

8 And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

They troubled the people; hearing something to have been done against the Roman state, under whom they were, and not knowing what it might come to, or how it might be construed. And the rulers; for fear of an insurrection and tumult.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

Had taken security; either being satisfied with their answer, or having bail for their appearance, if need were; the word only hinting their being satisfied, or contented, as Mark xv. 15.

10 ¶ And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews.

Berea; a city of Macedonia, not far from Pella and Thessalonica. Went into the synagogue of the Jews; they went still first unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel; in which Paul's invincible love, which he speaks of, Rom. ix. 2, 3, does manifestly appear. The Jews had every where endeavoured his destruction; he still requites them (what he may) in promoting their salvation.

11 These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

The Jews of Berea did excel those of Thessalonica, not so much in birth as in disposition: they were not so prejudiced and obstinate; they patiently heard Paul; they seriously thought upon what he had said, and compared it with the Scriptures. And thus God gave them the preparation of the heart; and they brought their empty vessels. No wonder then that the oil of grace ran into them, and filled them. The Jews call their learned men, the sons of nobles; and according to that expression, these Bereans, that had acted so ingeniously and wisely, were said to be more noble. Searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so: truth dares abide the test; only false wares need a dark shop to put them off in. The Scriptures only are our infallible rule; for they come from God, 2 Tim. iii. 16, who cannot lie, Titus i. 2.

12 Therefore many of them believed; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few.

God blessing his own gifts, and giving still unto them that had, and made use of them. And would we also lay aside all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save our souls, James i. 21, we should find the hand of the Lord not to be shortened, but his word as powerful, as piercing, as converting as ever.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

As the waves are stirred with the wind; a fit metaphor to represent the fickle multitude by, that, as the sea, now rolls one way, then another; or as tottering buildings, that shake with every wind.

14 ¶ And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

To go as it were to the sea; that they might give over the pursuit of him; or, at least, be disappointed if they did pursue him, being he went on foot to Athens. But Silas and Timotheus abode there still; the fury of the persecutors not being so hot against them as against Paul, who was more known or maligned than Silas or Timotheus; or these might abide there longer, having their relations in Macedonia.

15 And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

They that conducted Paul; who accompanied, and had undertaken to secure him. Athens; the Greece of Greece, or the eye of Greece; as Greece was accounted the eye of the world; and yet, with all its learning, did not attain to saving knowledge, until Paul came and preached it. Satan's malice still causes the gospel to spread.

16 ¶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.

His spirit was stirred in him; moved, and sharpened, being highly affected with divers passions: 1. With grief, for so learned, and yet blind and miserable a place. 2. With zeal, and a holy desire to instruct and inform it. 3. With anger and indignation against the idolatry and sin that abounded in it. Wholly given to idolatry; or, as the marginal reading hath, full of idols. For we read, that there were more idols in Athens than in all Greece besides; and that it was easier to find a god there (that is, an idol) than a man; their images being as numerous as their inhabitants.

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews; as ver. 2, still giving the Jews, if there were any, the priority; or, having by that means an opportunity to speak unto the proselytes of the Gentiles, who are the devout persons here meant: see chap. xiii. 43. In the market, because of the concourse thither; throwing the net of the

g Luke 23. 2.
John 10. 12.
1 Pet. 2. 15.

h ch. 9. 25.
ver. 14.

1 Ju. 34. 16.
Luke 14. 29.
John 6. 39.

1 Matt. 10. 23.

1 ch. 18. 5

A. D. 64.

m 2 Pet. 2. 8

¶ Or, full of idols.

Gospel where there were most fish; and he himself preaching, as he exhorted others to do, in season and out of season, 2 Tim. iv. 2.

18 Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this || babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

|| Or, base fellow.

Both these sects of philosophers were the most opposite to Christianity of all others: 1. The Epicureans (so called from one Epicurus) did generally deny, that the world was made, or that it is governed, by God; as also, that there were any rewards or punishments for men after death, holding nothing to be good but what was so to their senses; and if so, were indeed swine rather than men. 2. The Stoicks were so called from the place where they met at first; and held as bad opinions as the other did; and denied that their wise men were inferior to their gods, and in some respect preferred them before their gods; which their Seneca was not free from, Epist. 73. And no wonder if such men oppose the gospel what they may. What will this babbler say? they make Paul so contemptible, comparing him to such as live by the off-falls of corn, which was used to be gathered up as they fell down in measuring, and left to be fed upon by the meanest and poorest of the people. A setter forth of strange gods; they might amongst the Athenians bring in by public authority as many gods as they would, but none out of their private opinions; which was the fault charged upon Socrates. And the resurrection; so ignorantly, or maliciously, did they pervert St. Paul's words, that they accuse him for making the resurrection a god too. Probably they heard him often naming the word, and magnifying of the resurrection, as without which we were without hope.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto || Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

|| Or, Mars' Hill. It was the highest court in Athens.

The city of Athens was divided into five wards, or parts; one of which was called Areopagus, from the temple of Mars, which stood upon a hill in it: nigh unto which temple, or in some part of it, was their chiefest court kept; and here they judged of all religious affairs: here they condemned Diagoras, Protagoras, and Socrates; and hither they bring Paul, though rather to inquire of him (there being the resort of learned men) concerning his doctrine, than to condemn him for it.

20 For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

The greatest objection which these men had against the gospel was, that it was strange and new. That it is not new was apparent, it having been in the Old Testament (as the ripe fruit is in the blossom) so long ago; and their own superstitions were but so many apish imitations of God's worship. And if these things were strange unto them, they might think themselves, who had not made due inquiring after them; and had, by their not improving the light of nature, provoked God to withhold further manifestations unto them, Rom. i. 24, 28.

21 (For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

Strangers which were there; which must needs have been a considerable number, Athens being then a famous haven town and university; and these strangers might easily take this itch after news from the natives, who are noted for it by Theophrastus, Demosthenes, &c.

22 ¶ Then Paul stood in the midst of || Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious.

Mars' hill: see ver. 19. Too superstitious; sometimes this word is taken in a good sense; many then, as now, taking superstition to be religion. But it is often taken in a bad sense: thus Theophrastus says, that a truly pious man is a friend of God; ὁδὲ δεσιδαιμονὸν κολάζει Θεὸς, but the superstitious man is a flatterer of God. Now this word being then of a kind of middle signification, the apostle would seem not to bear too hard upon the Athenians, who were devout and religious, according to the measure of their knowledge, and whom he desired to win by love and gentleness.

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your || devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

|| Or, that gods that ye worship, 2 Thess. 2. 4.

Devotions; any thing unto which Divine worship and honour is given. To the unknown God: it is storied, that in a plague time, when the Athenians had wearied themselves with their supplications unto all the gods of their country, they were advised by Epaminondas (a devout man amongst them) to erect an altar unto that god who had the power over that disease, whosoever he was; which because they did not know, and would be sure not to omit in their devotions, they erected an altar unto him under the name of The unknown God. Some say, there was a more general inscription, To the gods of Asia, Europe, and Africa, to the unknown and strange gods; though the inscription the apostle mentions in the singular number, might be usual too: for the Athenians, who entertained all manner of gods, fearing lest there should be any which they had not heard of, for their greater security, as they imagined, would have an altar for such also. Now this unknown God, St. Paul says, which was worshipped by them, was the true God: for, 1. They had an apprehension that Christ was the true God, whilst that wonderful eclipse at his death was effectually considered amongst them. Hence it is said, that Dionysius cried out, Deus ignotus in carne patitur. Now the unknown God suffers in the flesh. 2. The God of the Jews, whose name the Jews took to be so ineffable that they would not undertake to speak it, and who was not wholly unknown to Plato and Pythagoras, and who is truly invisible and incomprehensible, might upon that account be thus styled amongst them.

24 ¶ God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands;

n ch. 14. 15. o Matt. 11. 25. p ch. 7. 48.

God that made the world; this seems to be directed against the Epicureans, who held, that the world was without beginning. Dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as if he could be tied to them, or circumscribed by them: yet God did in some respect dwell in his temple, where he did manifest himself more clearly than in other places; but that was a type of heaven, the throne of God.

25 Neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing 'he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

q Ps. 50. 8. r Gen. 2. 7. Num. 16. 22. Job 12. 10. & 27. 3. & 33. 4. Is. 42. 5. & 67. 16. Zech. 12. 1.

As though he needed any thing; God is not worshipped or served by holy men, because he wants their service, or any thing that can be offered unto him by them; but because it is their duty and advantage to be employed in his service and worship, Psal. 1. 10, 11. Life, and breath; the breath of life, Gen. ii. 7. And in this respect God is called the God of the spirits of all flesh, Numb. xvi. 22; as the cause of life and breath in all creatures, but especially in man; which made that charge so great against Belshazzar, Dan. v. 23, that his breath was in God's hand, and yet he had not glorified him.

26 And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation;

o Deut. 32. 8.

Hath made of one blood: 1. To teach all charity and compassion towards one another, being so nearly allied to one another. 2. As also to admire God more in that va-nety that appears in men's shapes and voices, but especially in the dispositions of their minds; whereas they all come from one stock and stem. Hath determined the times, &c.: the apostle asserts the providence of God against these Athenian philosophers, that nothing comes by chance, or a fatuous concourse of atoms; but that God is in every thing, though men know it not, or rather will not consider it, Job vii. 1; xiv. 5, 14. This doctrine was preached by Moses, who tells the people, that God is their life, and the length of their days, that they might love him, and obey his voice, and cleave unto him, Deut. xxx. 20.

t Rom. 1. 20. 27 'That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and u ch. 14. 17. find him, "though he be not far from every one of us:

That they should seek the Lord: the apostle tells these philosophers, to whom he spake, the true use of their philosophy, to improve their knowledge of natural things, to beget in them by it an admiration of the God of nature; for as from him, so for him are all things, Rom. xi. 36. If haply they might feel after him, and find him; and although God himself is incorporeal, yet the things which he made are palpable; and did they seek as they ought, they might find out a great deal of God by the creatures, in which his wisdom, power, and goodness are manifested, Rom. i. 20. Though he be not far from every one of us; God filleth all things, especially he is near in the effects of his wisdom, goodness, and faithfulness, by which he orders and disposes of all things, to the falling off of a hair from our heads.

x Col. 1. 17. 28 For 'in him we live, and move, and y Tit. 1. 12. have our being; 'as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

In him we live, &c.; he is the God that made us, that preserves us, and not we ourselves; he keeps us as in the hollow of his hand, and compasseth our paths. Our breath is in our nostrils, and when we send it forth we have none to take in again, unless God furnish us with it, as out of his own hand. As certain also of your own poets; Aratus, a Greek poet: not that St. Paul thought to derive any authority from these poets unto what he had said, but that he might shame them the more by the testimony of their allowed authors. Such quotations as these are (as the bringing in of a Greek into the temple) very rare; yet, besides this, we meet with the like, 1 Cor. xv. 33; Tit. i. 12.

z Is. 40. 18. 29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, 'we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.

We are the offspring of God; this is spoken by the apostle in a poetical expression, according unto what he had cited. We are indeed the children, and in our souls bear the image of God. But as many as have the Spirit of adoption, they partake of God's holiness, and imitate his goodness, and are more like unto him, by whom they are begotten again unto a lively hope, 1 Pet. i. 3; and at the resurrection they will appear unto all to be his children, when they shall be acknowledged his heirs, and coheirs with Jesus Christ, Rom. viii. 17. We ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver: taking man in his natural principles, consisting of soul and body, he is not made of gold and silver; much less can God be made of them. Our soul, in which we bear the image of God, cannot be expressed by any graving or painting; much less God, whose image it is. There are two things to be considered in every image: its matter, and its form or shape. The matter of an image, let it be never so precious, is much inferior to man; for it lies in the earth, (be it gold or silver,) for man to trample upon, until he dig it up, and take it out. As for the form of the image, it is that which men please to give it, and man is a kind of creator of it; howsoever, it is his workmanship, and the work is more ignoble than the workman, at least not to be adored by him. By art and man's device; according to man's will and pleasure, for the image cannot determine itself to be made as it would.

30 And 'the times of this ignorance
God winked at; but 'now commandeth all men every where to repent:

The times of this ignorance God winked at; to prevent an objection, lest any should think that they might continue in their unbelief, and fare as well as their progenitors, God is said to have overlooked them; as if he had counted them unworthy of his care and providence, and therefore he did not correct or instruct them. When any are left to go on in their sin, without God's instruction or correction, it is a sad sign that God scorns to look upon them, or to use any means to recover them. But now commandeth all men every where to repent: under the gospel we are so far from having liberty to do what we list, that we are more nearly concerned to repent and become holy, Rom. xiii. 11; Tit. ii. 11, 12; 1 Pet. i. 14, 15; and all men, every where, without exception of time or place, are under this command of repentance; and cursed indeed will he be that does not observe it.

31 Because he hath appointed a day, in the which 'he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath || given assurance unto all men, in that ' he hath raised him from the dead.

He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world: that God will judge the world his enemies have with trembling acknowledged, but when God will judge the world he hath concealed from his friends; yet the time is already set, Psal. xcvi. 13; 2 Cor. v. 10, and we ought to be daily prepared for it. In righteousness: shall not the Judge of all the world do right? By that man whom he hath ordained; our blessed Saviour, called here man, suitably to his death and resurrection, which St. Paul preached of; as also as man he is thus highly exalted for his debasing of himself for our sakes, Phil. ii. 9—11. Whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead; an undeniable proof or argument, it being so difficult a matter to believe a world to come, when we see all things remain as they did in this world; and especially to believe, that in the general judgment Christ, whom they had judged, condemned, and executed, should be Judge: God therefore did glorify him, by raising him from the dead, that they and we might not be faithless, but believe, Rom. i. 4.

32 ¶ And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.

Some mocked; the Epicureans, whom Paul had spoken against in his doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, and judgment to come. Others said, We will hear thee again of this matter; it is thought the Stoics, who did not think the resurrection to be impossible, but did acknowledge rewards and punishments in the world to come; yet, though this seem most likely, the grace of God is free and powerful, and can subdue any unto itself. We are sure that there are different soils into which the seed of the word is cast, Matt. xiii.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

Leaving what he had said to God's blessing and their consideration.

34 Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

Clave unto him, in more than ordinary friendship; they were as glued to him; great was their love to the apostle, by whom their eyes were opened, nay, by whose ministry they were raised from the dead. Dionysius the Areopagite; one of that great council mentioned ver. 19, whose conversion might have a great influence on many. Damaris; who is thought to have been an honourable woman; such are mentioned ver. 12: or she might have been specially eminent for some grace or goodness she excelled in; and therefore hath a name upon record in the word of God.

CHAP. XVIII

Paul worketh for his subsistence, and preacheth Christ at Corinth, first to the Jews, and, upon their opposing and blaspheming, to the Gentiles with more success, 1—8. He is encouraged by the Lord in a vision, and abideth there a long time, 9—11. The Jews accuse him before Gallio the deputy, who will have nothing to do with them, 12—17. Paul passeth from city to city, confirming the disciples, 18—23. Apollos, instructed more perfectly in the Christian doctrine by Aquila and Priscilla, preacheth it at Ephesus, and afterward in Achaia, with great efficacy, 24—28.

AFTER these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

The metropolis of Achaia, being a rich sea town, and situate in the very isthmus which joins Peloponnesus unto Achaia; made a Roman colony, and now flourishing with learned men. Here St. Paul gathered a famous church, unto which he wrote two of his Epistles.

2 And found a certain Jew named <sup>a</sup> Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome :) and came unto them.

Pontus; a country between Cappadocia and the Black Sea, Acts ii. 9, whither the progenitors of Aquila, in one of the dispersions, might flee from Judea to inhabit there. Claudius; the Roman emperor, who, at the beginning of his reign, gave liberty to the Jews freely to exercise their religion, but about eight years after took away that privilege from them; which Suetonius makes mention of, though very much mistaking the reason. With the Jews, it is thought that the Christians were banished too; for the pagan Romans did not care to distinguish betwixt them, they both worshipping but one God, and agreeing in opposing their idolatry.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, <sup>b</sup> and wrought: for by their occupation they were tent-makers.

Of the same craft; the most learned amongst the Jews did always learn some handicraft, and it was one of those things which they held a father was bound to do for his child, viz. to teach him some trade. And one of their rabbi's sayings is, That whosoever does not teach his child a trade, does as bad as if he did teach him to play the thief. And wrought; St. Paul wrought with his hands, not so much because as yet there was no church there that could maintain him, but, 1. Because he would not be burdensome unto them, they being probably most mean persons that believed there, as appears, 1 Cor. i. 26. Or, 2. That he might show how that he did not covet theirs. but them, and to gain nothing but souls amongst them. Yet he asserted his right, and the right of ministers, by Divine appointment, to live of the gospel, 1 Cor. ix. 6, 11, 12. Tent-makers; tents were used by soldiers, and in those hot countries by others also, being usually made of skins sewn together to keep off the violence of the weather.

4 <sup>c</sup> And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

He reasoned in the synagogue; or argued and disputed, giving his reasons out of Scripture, and answering their objections. And persuaded the Jews; not only using cogent arguments, but, as some understand the verb, such as did prevail upon them. And the Greeks; not such as were of the Jewish race, and after the dispersion used the Scripture in the Greek tongue; but such as were Gentile Greeks, Greeks by descent.

5 And <sup>d</sup> when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was <sup>e</sup> pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus || was Christ.

Were come from Macedonia; according as was ordered by him, chap. xvii. 14, 15. Pressed in the spirit; more than ordinarily affected, the Spirit of God influencing his spirit, so that he felt an anguish or pain at the heart, as 2 Cor. ii. 4; such was his grief for the contumacy of the Jews, so great was his desire that they might be saved. Jesus was Christ: 1. The Christ, or anointed, that excelled all other Christs or anointed ones, being anointed with oil above measure. 2. The Christ that was promised by the prophets.

6 And <sup>f</sup> when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, <sup>g</sup> he shook his raiment, and said unto them, <sup>h</sup> Your blood be upon your own heads; <sup>i</sup> I am clean: <sup>j</sup> from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

Blasphemed; they blasphemed Paul, miscalling of him, but especially Christ, whose dishonour grieved Paul most. He shook his raiment; his upper garment, as the manner was, Matt. xxvi. 65, that none of the dust of that place where such blasphemy was spoken might stick unto him. See chap. xiii. 51. Your blood be upon your own heads; or, You are guilty of your own deaths and damnation, 2 Sam. i. 16; Matt. xxvii. 25; Felo de se. This expression is borrowed from the witnesses laying their hands on the head of the guilty person; or the sacrificer's laying his hand on the head of the beast which was to be slain, Exod. xxix. 10; Lev. i. 4. I am clean; free from their blood, or the loss of their souls, having warned them, and shown the way of life unto them. Ezek. xxxiii. 4; he had blown the trumpet, and warned the people.

7 ¶ And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

Justus; some read Titus, some both Titus and Justus, making Justus a surname, as Acts i. 23; Col. iv. 11; after the manner of the Romans. One that worshipped God; had forsaken the polytheism of the heathen.

8 <sup>k</sup> And Crispus, the chief ruler of the <sup>l</sup> synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.

The chief ruler: there were several rulers in a synagogue, which we find frequent mention of, as Matt. ix. 18; Mark v. 22. Their office and place was, to advise and give order about the affairs of the synagogue, that all things might be performed according to their prescribed rules. Many of the Corinthians believed; amongst whom are reckoned Gaius, Sosthenes, 1 Cor. i. 1, and Epenetus, Rom. xvi. 5.

9 Then <sup>m</sup> spake the Lord to Paul in <sup>n</sup> the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace;

In the night by a vision; as chap. xvi. 9; it may be, by an angel. Speak, and hold not thy peace; it is doubled again and again, as of greatest consequence, 1. To the Corinthians, whose salvation by this means might be procured. 2. To Paul himself, whose soul, howsoever, should be delivered, he having discharged his duty, chap. xx. 26, 27. The fierceness of the enemies of God and his truth, should kindle a greater fervour in his servants for his glory. Should Satan have better servants than God? Should they dare for their master beyond what the servants of God are willing to do or suffer for him? Isa. lxiii. 1; Jer. i. 17, 18.

10 <sup>o</sup> For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

Christ, in this vision, useth two arguments to persuade Paul to continue preaching the gospel at Corinth: 1. Because he would be with him, to supply, support, and deliver him; as it is promised to Jeremiah, Jer. i. 19, and to all the faithful ministers of Christ, Matt. xxviii. 20. This promise was fulfilled to Paul, and to other of God's servants; whatsoever troubles they met with, even when they were killed, they were not hurt, Rom. viii. 36—39. The other reason why Paul was commanded to tarry was, because there were many that God would have called by his ministry; and thus

a Rom. 16. 3
1 Cor. 16. 12.
1 Tim. 2. 3.
4. 12.

b ch. 20. 34.
1 Cor. 4. 12.
1 Thea. 2. 9.
2 Thea. 3. 8.

c ch. 17. 2.

d ch. 17. 14.
18.
e Job 32. 18.
ch. 17. 3.
ver. 28.
f Or, is the Christ.

f ch. 12. 46.
1 Pet. 4. 6.
g Neh. 5. 13.
Mat. 10. 14.
ch. 13. 51.
h Lev. 20. 9.
11, 12.
i 2 Sam. 1. 16.
Ezek. 18. 13.
j 25. 4.

k Ezek. 3. 18, 19. & 33. 2 ch. 20. 26. l ch. 13. 45. & 28. 25.

m Jer. 1. 18.
19. Matt.
28. 20.

those who were not his people God calleth his people, as Hos. i. 10; ii. 23.

+ Gr. and there. 11 And he † continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

He sat there as his fixed place; which implies his continuance and constancy in the work of the ministry.

A. D. 54.
 ending.

12 ¶ And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat,

This Gallio was brother to that deservedly famous Seneca, (who was tutor to Nero,) and hath great commendations given him, as being a man of excellent disposition, beloved by all men, an enemy to all vice, and especially a hater of flattery. Deputy of Achaia; this man was proconsul, governing Achaia and all Greece absolutely, or with the power of a consul. With one accord; wicked men in their evil deeds are unanimous, for Satan knows that his kingdom would not stand if it were once divided.

13 Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.

Contrary to the law, of the Romans, who, to avoid tumults and confusions, did forbid any to set up any new worship without leave; and the Jews in these parts having here no power to punish St. Paul as they had at Jerusalem, maliciously incite the governor against him. Or by the law here may be meant the law of Moses, which they accuse Paul to have broken, and so not to be comprehended in that licence which they had to exercise their religion.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you:

To open his mouth; to make his apology, and to speak in his own defence. A matter of wrong; as murder, theft, or any such injury, which judges do usually determine of. Reason would that I should bear with you; I would endure any trouble to hear and understand it, I should think it my duty to suffer you to say as much as you would in your case.

15 But if it be a question of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

A question of words; which have been spoken about the controversies of religion. And names; as, whether Jesus was to be called Christ or the Messiah; and whether his disciples might be called Christians. And of your law; concerning circumcision, as whether none may be saved without it. I will be no judge of such matters; he acknowledges his unfitness and unwillingness to determine such things as did not belong unto him, or he did not understand.

16 And he drave them from the judgment seat.

He commanded them to be gone, having dismissed their case; and, if need were, added threatening and force.

p 1 Cor. 1. 1.

17 Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. And Gallio cared for none of those things.

All the Greeks; not the converted Greeks, though St. Austin thought they beat Sosthenes, as an enemy to Paul, (yet surely they had not so learned Christ,) but the unbelieving or Gentile Greeks, who cared for neither Paul nor Jews, but favoured Gallio, who would have them driven away. Sosthenes; some think him to have been the same with Crispus, ver. 8; others, to have succeeded him in that office; and some think that he was chief ruler of another synagogue (for in great cities there might be more than one); and others, that there might be several called chief rulers over one and the same synagogue. Gallio cared for none of those things; either slighting the Jews and all their controversies, or prudently declined intermeddling with them.

18 ¶ And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.

q Num. 6. 18.
 ch. 21. 24.
 r Rom. 15. 1.

A good while; a year and a half in all, as some think, which is mentioned ver. 11, by a prolepsis; or, besides that year and a half there spoken of. Took his leave of the brethren; ordering every thing as if he were to have taken his last farewell of them, as it fell out accordingly: howsoever, holy men live in a constant expectation of their dissolution. Priscilla and Aquila: that the wife's name is here put before the husband's, have caused various conjectures; and it is observed, that in St. Paul's Epistles, whereas there are three times only mention of them both together, viz. Rom. xvi. 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 19; 2 Tim. iv. 19, the wife's name is twice placed first, to show, that in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, Gal. iii. 28. Cenchrea; which was a town at the entering into the haven belonging to Corinth, Rom. xvi. 1. For he had a vow; to wit, St. Paul had; and therefore had shaven his head, according to the law, Numb. vi. 18. To the Jews he became as a Jew.

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there: but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

Ephesus; the metropolis of the Lesser Asia, where afterwards that famous church was, unto which St. Paul wrote an Epistle, as also St. John wrote another, Rev. ii. 1. Left them there; that is, Aquila and Priscilla at Ephesus, to confirm the believing Ephesians; whilst Paul entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews; out of an extraordinary love for his nation, although he had suffered all those indignities from them, yet he would give them precept upon precept, and line upon line.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;

They desired; that is, Aquila and Priscilla, whom Paul would not yield unto. He consented not; by God's wonderful providence, which overrules all our inclinations; Paul having greater things to do and suffer for the glory of God elsewhere.

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem: but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

q ch. 19. 21.
 & 20. 16.

This feast; the feast of the passover; which is meant where feast is put absolutely, unless some after-expression qualifies it: not that this holy man did out of conscience to the feast intend to observe it, for Christ is the end of the law to them that believe, Rom. x. 4; but because of the vast concourse from all places to Jerusalem at that time, which would give him an opportunity of making Christ known to such multitudes, and to gain their souls unto him. If God will; though he was an apostle, and had the Spirit of prophecy, and might know whether he should return or no, yet he does not absolutely promise them to return to them, but conditionally, if the Lord will; to teach us what caution we should use in all our promises and resolutions, as Jam. iv. 15, being we know not what a day may bring forth. Besides, in our owning of God's will and pleasure, we acknowledge a providence of God in all things, especially in our concerns, which we desire to refer all unto.

t 1 Cor. 4. 19.
 Heb. 6. 3.
 Jam. 4. 15.

22 And when he had landed at Cæsarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

A. D. 54.

Cæsarea; not that Cæsarea that was in Syria, but that which was in Palestine, called Cæsarea Stratonis; and which was the safest way to Jerusalem; for the way by Joppa, though shorter, was accounted more dangerous. The church; either the church of Cæsarea in his journey, or that at Jerusalem at his journey's end, which for its populousness might be called eminently, the church. Antioch; that Antioch that was in Syria.

CHAP. XIX.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

Had spent some time there; this work might take up the constant care and indefatigable pains of the apostle. Galatia; where he had converted many. Phrygia; see chap. xvi. 6. Strengthening all the disciples; though the seed be duly sown, yet it must be seasonably watered; and redit labor actus in orbem.

24 ¶ And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, came to Ephesus.

Apollos; who is thought also to be called Apelles, Rom. xvi. 10. Born at Alexandria; his parents having lived there. An eloquent man; a rational, prudent, and learned man. Though the kingdom of God is not in any excellency of speech, 1 Cor. ii. 1, 4, yet this Egyptian jewel may be used to adorn the tabernacle. Mighty in the Scriptures; in quoting, explaining, and urging of them.

25 This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John.

Instructed; catechised, or taught, viva voce. In the way of the Lord; Christ, who hath by his precepts and example taught us the way to happiness. Fervent in the spirit; very zealous to promote God's glory, and men's salvation, as Rom. xii. 11. Knowing only the baptism of John; who baptized with water, but could not baptize with the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11; that is, they had not those extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost which followed upon baptism after that Christ was ascended, and the Spirit poured out, chap. ii. 4. But John was a preacher of repentance, and of faith in Christ, pointing at the Lamb of God; and he baptized his disciples into this doctrine; which is the same with the baptism and belief of the apostles afterwards; only now they knew many things more fully than were revealed in the Baptist's time.

26 And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

If we allow Priscilla to have contributed towards the instruction of Apollos, as doubtless we may, it is certain it was only in private discourse; which being joined with a meek and humble behaviour, might be very effectual for the conversion of souls, 1 Pet. iii. 1, 2. Thus Timothy was indebted for his knowledge in the things of God to his mother and grandmother, 2 Tim. i. 5. But otherwise it is not lawful for a woman to teach, 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace:

To pass into Achaia; to Corinth, which was in Achaia. The brethren wrote; who were at Ephesus. Helped them much which had believed through grace; Apollos helped them much by his eloquence, zeal, and constancy, which all are the gifts of God; but, especially, that they believed was through grace; for faith is the gift of God, Eph. ii. 8, and it was given unto them to believe, Phil. i. 29.

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ.

Mightily; with great constancy, perseverance, and enduring of opposition. Showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ; as chap. xvii. 3. Some think that Christ ought to be the subject, and Jesus the predicate; and then the sense is, that Christ is our Jesus, or Saviour. The Messiah, that was sent from God, is the Saviour of the world.

The Holy Ghost is conferred by Paul on twelve of John's disciples, 1-7. He preacheth at Ephesus, first in the synagogue, and afterwards in a private school for two years; God confirming the word by special miracles, 8-12. Certain Jewish exorcists, attempting to cast out a devil in the name of Jesus, are sent off naked and wounded: the gospel gaineth credit, and magical books are burned, 13-20. Paul proposing to depart soon, Demetrius and the silversmiths raise an uproar against him, which is with some difficulty appeased, 21-41.

AND it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples,

The upper coasts; the north parts, in which were Pontus, Bithynia, Phrygia, and Galatia, chap. xviii. 23.

2 He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

Have ye received the Holy Ghost? the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, as prophesying, speaking with tongues, healing of the sick, &c., as appears by ver. 6, and John vii. 39; for it could not be, that they, who were instructed and baptized by John, should be ignorant of the essence or person of the Holy Ghost; for the Baptist had seen him descending upon our Saviour; as is remembered by all the evangelists which speak of his baptism, Matt. iii. 16; Mark i. 10; Luke iii. 22; besides other scriptures which testified of him; and St. John had spoken of him unto all he baptized, that our Saviour would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire, John i. 32, 33. We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost: this answer must be understood, according to the question, of those gifts now mentioned; and which by the imposition of the hands of the apostles were given, especially at the ordination of such as were sent to preach the gospel, it being necessary for the planting of the church, those miraculous gifts assuring those unto whom they preached, that their doctrine was from heaven; as also to assure the apostles themselves of the success of their ministry, and the conversion of such they preached unto, as chap. x. 44, 47. And this acceptance of these words is paralleled, 1 Sam. iii. 7, where it is said, that Samuel did not yet know the Lord; the meaning is, that he knew not that God was wont so to speak unto any; otherwise, that holy man, as young as he was, both knew God, and served him.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism.

Unto what then were ye baptized? what doctrine did you make profession of? and what religion did you seal unto at your baptism? Unto John's baptism; the doctrine that John taught, and the religion that he professed and preached. Thus the Jews are said to be baptized unto Moses, 1 Cor. x. 2, being engaged to believe the doctrine and observe the law delivered by Moses. Now the Baptist, as chap. xviii. 25, preached indeed Christ; but many things concerning him he could not preach, unless as of things to come; as his death, and resurrection: the Baptist being beheaded before our Saviour's death, and the Holy Ghost was not poured out in that extraordinary manner until after our Saviour's resurrection and ascension; which pouring out of the Spirit, these disciples at Ephesus, having been baptized by John in Judea, and afterwards returning home, might not have heard of.

4 Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

The baptism of repentance; at which the Baptist did exhort them to repentance, and they by it were obliged to

11 Gal. 1. 2
 & 4. 14
 x ch. 14. 22
 & 15. 37, 41
 7 1 Cor. 1.
 12. & 3. 5, 6.
 A. 4. 6.
 Tit. 2. 13.

1 Rom. 12.
 11.
 a ch. 19. 3

b 1 Cor. 3. 6

c ch. 9. 22.
 & 17. 3. &
 ver. 5.
 1 Cor. 12
 the Christ.

a 1 Cor. 1.
 12. & 3. 5, 6.

b 1 Mac. 3.
 37. & 6. 1.

c ch. 8. 16.
 See 1 Sam.
 3. 7.

d ch. 18. 25.

e Matt. 3. 11.
 John 1. 15.
 27, 30. ch. 1.
 6. & 11. 16.
 & 13. 24, 25.

repent; by which is manifest, that the baptism of John and of Christ (which he commanded) are one and the same. John's baptism did respect Christ, and oblige the baptized to believe in him, as also to repent; and more, it was a seal unto them of the remission of their sins, as is expressly observed, Mark i. 4: so that the baptism of John, and the baptism of the apostles afterward, had the same sign and the same thing signified in them both (the inward and outward part, the heavenly and earthly part, were the same in both); as also they had both the same end; and therefore they were both the same. Add to this, that unless the Baptist's and the apostles' baptism were the same, Christ and his members (the church) are not baptized with the same baptism. It must be acknowledged that there are some circumstances in which they differ; John's baptism respected Christ to come; that is, in the exercise of his ministry (which was not so fully exercised till after John's death); but especially, those great things (his death, resurrection, and ascension, &c.) were to come after John's time, which now are accomplished. On Christ Jesus; including the Father and the Holy Ghost, and mentioning Christ, to difference his baptisms from the several baptizings and washings then in use.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized 'in the name of the Lord Jesus.

The disciples, or those that John preached to, (for these Ephesians were not amongst those few that Paul baptized, 1 Cor. i. 14.) who when they heard what the Baptist said in the foregoing verse, they were baptized; as in the same terms it is said, chap. ii. 37, when they heard what St. Peter had said, they were pricked in their heart, &c., and were baptized. As for Paul's imposing his hands upon them that are said here to be baptized, it might very well be, that the twelve disciples, ver. 7, might have been baptized by John, and now receive the Holy Ghost in those extraordinary gifts by the laying on of the hands of St. Paul: for to what end should these disciples, who were baptized with St. John's baptism, be again baptized by Paul? It is true, they had further manifestations of the mystery of the gospel brought unto them; but if men should be baptized for every degree of knowledge or grace which they do acquire, how many baptisms had they need to have, who ought daily to grow in grace and in knowledge! It is evident, that the apostles themselves were only baptized with the baptism of John, for there were none else to baptize them. And baptism being an ordinance for our regeneration and new birth, as we can be born but once in the flesh, we can be but once also born in the Spirit; and no more may Christians be baptized twice, than the Jews could be twice circumcised.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

Laid his hands upon them; thereby ordaining and authorizing of them to preach the gospel. The Holy Ghost came on them; in those extraordinary gifts of tongues, &c., whereby they were fitted to preach the gospel unto any nation or people unto whom they should be sent. Prophesied; they prophesied, either in its proper sense, being enabled to foretell things that were to come; or in a larger and more improper sense, praising and magnifying of God, and declaring the hidden mysteries of the gospel; expounding the Scriptures, especially the prophecies concerning Christ, as 1 Cor. xiv. 1.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

Or exactly twelve; answering to the apostles, and that blessed number so often mentioned in Scripture.

8 And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

The synagogue of the Jews at Ephesus. For in the greater cities the Jews had their synagogues, in which they had their prayers, read, and expounded the law; as also a school for teaching of their theology, in which they treated of hard questions, and more difficult matters; which might occasion the apostle's frequenting that place. The kingdom of God; the gospel; which is so called, Rom. xiv. 17, because the kingdom of grace is by it set up in us here, and we are fitted by it for the kingdom of glory hereafter. But it might be also so called, because the Jews had dreamed of a political kingdom of the Messiah, and the Christians would own that Christ was, indeed a King, but that his kingdom was a spiritual kingdom.

9 But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

Divers were hardened; the sun hardeneth what it doth not soften, and causeth a stench from dunghills, as well as a sweet smell from the mountains of spices; and Christ is for the falling, as well as for the rising of many. That way; so the doctrine of the gospel is called, by reason of its excellency above other ways. By way the Hebrews understand any course or means to an end. Hence we read of the way of peace, the way of salvation, the way of the Lord. He departed from them; not frequenting any more the synagogue of the Jews, where they met only with contradiction of their doctrine, and blasphemy against their Saviour. Tyrannus; some have taken this word appellationally, as denoting some great man, or ruler, who maintained a school, or place for instruction; but it is rather a proper name of some private teacher amongst them: for the Jews had not only public schools, where their consistories did meet, but private schools, where their law was taught.

10 And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

All they; many of all sorts. Asia; Asia the Lesser, or Asia strictly so called, lying about Ephesus: the heathens came thither to worship their Diana; the Jews came thither about their affairs, either in their trades, or law-suits. The word of the Lord Jesus; the gospel, which is the word concerning the Lord Jesus; or, the word which he appointed to be preached and published.

11 And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul:

Special miracles; not common or ordinary things, or such as might happen by chance. By the hands of Paul; as chap. v. 12; by his means and ministry.

12 So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

Handkerchiefs or aprons; our habit and attire being so different from what was used so long since, it cannot but occasion some variety in rendering these words; which some think to signify two things; and some, but one and the same part of their clothes or dress: the words are both originally Latin; the former so called from its use to wipe away sweat; the other, from its being usually tied about such as wore it. The diseases departed from them; God by such small and unlikely means wrought these miracles: 1. That the power of Christ (whom Paul preached) might the more clearly appear. And, 2. That such as were absent might have a high value for Christ and the gospel, though they had never seen Paul, or heard him preach. Such extraordinary works were also wrought by God to magnify the words preached by Peter, chap. v. 15, as our Saviour had foretold and promised, John xiv. 12.

13 ¶ Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.

Vagabond Jews; who wandered up and down, making it their trade and livelihood; as jugglers amongst us. Exorcists; so called from their obtesting the evil spirits in the name of God. Of these Josephus tells strange stories,

f ch. 8. 16.

g ch. 4. 4. & 8. 17.

h ch. 2. 4. & 10. 46.

i ch. 17. 2. & 18. 4.

k ch. 1. 3. & 28. 23.

A. D. 57. 12 Tim. 1. 15. 2 Pet. 2. 2. Jude 10. m See ch. 9. 2. & 22. 4. & 24. 14. ver. 23.

n See ch. 20. 31.

o Mark 16. 20. ch. 14. 3.

p ch. 5. 15. See 2 Kings 4. 29.

A. D. 58. q Mat. 12. 27. r See Mark 9. 38. Luke 9. 49.

Antiq. lib. 8, and thinks that the way of their exorcising was derived unto them from Solomon, and that they used the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; as also of Zebaoth, and Adonai, as Origen tells us. Some think, that though there is certainly no power in the words and syllables which they pronounced, yet that the true God, being rather willing to be known and owned by those names, than that any should call on the names of the false gods, did sometimes put forth his power in casting out of devils at such times, as Matt. xii. 27. Howsoever, there being no warrant in the word of God for any such practice, and no promise to act faith in prayer upon, were the words never so serious, and the name of God and his attributes never so much (seemingly) manifested, it is a most abominable impiety. The name of the Lord Jesus; instead of, or together with, those other names formerly mentioned.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the Priests, which did so.

One of the chief of the twenty-four courses into which the priests were divided, 1 Chron. xxiv. 4, or such as (according to the corruption of those times) had been high priests, and were laid aside, or were of the high priest's family, and hoped to succeed him.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

I acknowledge that Jesus hath power to command me to go hence; and I know that Paul, as his minister, hath authority over me; but what pretensions have ye to command me now? Though the devil is a liar, and the father of lies, yet none lie to their own disadvantage, but rather to their advantage, as they take it; and Satan may therefore be believed in what he here says, because it is to his disgrace, that, will he, will he, he is under the command of God, though but signified to him by the least of his ministers or servants.

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

Leaped on them, &c.; by the power of the evil spirit, which by the permission of God did act in him, Matt. viii. 28; Mark v. 4; Luke viii. 29. Satan retains still his natural power, though he hath wholly lost his moral or spiritual power unto any good; and that his violence proceeded no further, is to be ascribed only to the bounds which God had set him, which he, being in chains, could not exceed or go beyond; not for his want of malice, but power.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

Fear fell on them all; they feared (after this example of God's not holding them guiltless that had taken his name in vain) to profane the name of Christ, and much more to blaspheme or speak against it. The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified; his authority, which the unclean spirit could not resist; and his doctrine and ministers, whose defence God had undertaken.

18 And many that believed came, and confessed, and shewed their deeds.

Many that believed came; that believed the power which God alone had over Satan, and were convinced of their sin and danger in being led captive by him. And confessed, and showed their deeds; openly declared their evil deeds. They durst keep the devil's counsel no longer, but expose and manifest it, that their sores being laid open, the balm of the gospel might more effectually be put into them. Thus with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, Rom. x. 10.

19 Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

Thus their good works justified their faith, without which it had been dead, James ii. 24, 26. Curious arts; or rather idle and vain arts, as judicial astrology, calculating nativities, and all magical arts, which the Ephesians, of all others, were most addicted to and famous for; and may be here called curious arts, because they were so called by the Ephesians, who practised them; as also because these arts are about curiosities, not necessary for us to know. Otherwise they are diabolical arts, or rather devilish cheats. Brought their books together, and burned them: these books were not sold, and the price of them brought unto the apostles, because it was looked upon as the price of a whore, which was an abomination, and might not be offered unto God, Deut. xxiii. 18. Fifty thousand pieces of silver: what this sum amounts to is not so certain, because it is not agreed what these pieces were. Some make them Roman or Grecian coin; and others understand by them shekels, which are the Jewish money, and would make this sum so much the greater. Take them for so many pence, a piece of money commonly so called, which weighed the eighth part of an ounce of silver, as Matt. xviii. 28, they make six thousand two hundred and fifty ounces of silver, or so many crowns, and so much more as silver is worth more per ounce. Such indignation have true converts against the sins they have been guilty of, that they will not retain any thing that might occasion their return unto them; were it a right eye, they would pull it out.

20 So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

The increase which the seed of the word had made was very remarkable; or it is a great instance of the power of God's word, when it makes men willing to part with their beloved and accustomed sins, and not to stand upon saving or gaining; as Isa. lv. 11.

21 ¶ After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome.

Paul purposed in the spirit; resolved with himself, or purposed in his heart, as Dan. i. 8. Yet in this his determination he had the influence and guidance of the Holy Ghost, and that in a more than ordinary manner; as we may see by the continued series of this history, how he came to all these places here mentioned. Paul travelled through these countries, and went to these cities, because he hoped for a greater harvest, where he might scatter the seed so far abroad.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

Ministered unto him; this great apostle had not any to minister unto him out of state, but out of necessity, being he could not himself attend to all the offices of the church. These were employed by Paul, not so much to procure any accommodation for himself by the way, as to further a collection for the poor brethren at Jerusalem, 2 Cor. ix. 3, 4. Erastus: there seems to have been two of this name mentioned in Scripture: the one, Rom. xvi. 23, and the other, 2 Tim. iv. 20: the latter is here spoken of. In Asia; in Ephesus, which was in Asia, where Paul now was.

23 And the same time there arose no small stir about that way.

And the same time; when all things seemed to have been quiet: so uncertain are the servants of Christ to have any quiet here. That way; the doctrine of the gospel, as chap. xviii. 25.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen;

These shrines were only, either, 1. Portraits of the temple of Diana, in which was graven, or by any other art represented, that famous structure, which was afterwards burnt by Erostratus: or, 2. They were medals in which their idol Diana was expressed according to her image, spoken of, ver. 35. And they are called here, temples, or shrines, because they did resemble and represent that shrine or temple. And these the superstitious people carried home to their houses and friends; not only to evidence what a * Luke i. 65.

& 7. 16.
ch. 2. 43.
& 5. 5, 11.

Fear fell on them all; they feared (after this example of God's not holding them guiltless that had taken his name in vain) to profane the name of Christ, and much more to blaspheme or speak against it. The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified; his authority, which the unclean spirit could not resist; and his doctrine and ministers, whose defence God had undertaken.

† Matt. 3. 6. 'confessed, and shewed their deeds.

Many that believed came; that believed the power which God alone had over Satan, and were convinced of their sin and danger in being led captive by him. And confessed, and showed their deeds; openly declared their evil deeds. They durst keep the devil's counsel no longer, but expose and manifest it, that their sores being laid open, the balm of the gospel might more effectually be put into them. Thus with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, Rom. x. 10.

19 Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

Thus their good works justified their faith, without which it had been dead, James ii. 24, 26. Curious arts; or rather idle and vain arts, as judicial astrology, calculating nativities, and all magical arts, which the Ephesians, of all

a ch. 6. 7.
& 12. 24.

A. D. 59.
x Rom. 16.
25. Gal. 2. 1.
7 ch. 20. 22.
x ch. 18. 21.
& 23. 11.
Rom. 15.
24.—25.

a ch. 13. 5.
b Rom. 16.
23. 2 Tim. 4.
20.

c 3 Cor. 1. 8.
d See ch. 8.
2.

e ch. 16. 16.
19.

pilgrimage they had performed, but to incite the more their devotions towards this idol.

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

Gain, getting or keeping a livelihood, are great temptations, and, a little pretext of piety with them, keep up the superstition and false worship that abound in the world.

26 Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that 'they be no gods, which are made with hands :

He tells them indeed what was St. Paul's doctrine ; but he conceals the reasons of his doctrine ; for there can be nothing more evident to any considering man, than that there is but one God who made all things ; as Psal. cxv. 3, 4 ; Jer. x. 10.

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought ; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth.

Not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought ; not only that we shall have no more to do, and be without work ; but that it will be a reproach unto us to have had such an employment. But also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised ; this is made an aggravation to the loss of their all, that religion should suffer too. How much more ought it to concern those who have a sure foundation for what they do profess ! All Asia ; this temple is said to have been burnt down the same day that Alexander was born, and that it was two hundred and twenty years in re-building, at the charge of all Asia. The world worshippeth ; though the Romans might worship any god (of those multitudes) which they allowed, yet they might leave their estates only to a very few amongst them ; but Diana of the Ephesians was one of those few ; as also one of those twelve whom they accounted dei or deæ majorem gentium, gods and goddesses of the highest quality, or first rank.

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

The argument from their profit wrought very much upon them, especially meeting with their prejudicate opinions, having pretended antiquity and universality to confirm them. Saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians ; to show their abhorrence of what Paul had taught ; and desiring her glory might be perpetual, whom Paul thought not worthy to be honoured at all.

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion : and having caught <sup>s</sup>Gaius and <sup>n</sup>Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

Filled with confusion ; tumults and noise ; all conditions of men, high and low, promiscuously being met in such uproars. Gaius ; one born at Derbe, but living at Thessalonica, as chap. xx. 4. Aristarchus ; of whom we read, chap. xxvii. 2 ; Col. iv. 10. The theatre ; a place or structure built for public uses ; whence, 1. Their sports or plays in any public solemnity were beheld. 2. Their speeches or orations in their common assemblies were heard. 3. Where they punished also their malefactors ; it being accommodated with several steps or seats higher than one another, and of vast extent for these purposes. Hither, according to their custom, they resort, to hear if any one would speak upon this occasion to them ; or rather, to get these Christians condemned and executed for their supposed sacrilege and blasphemy.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

Paul would have entered in unto the people ; being desirous either to appease the tumult ; or, if the worst came of it, to die for Christ's sake. The disciples suffered him not, by their entreaties ; to whom this good apostle's life, from whom they had received the faith, was more dear than their own.

31 And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

Certain of the chief of Asia ; such as had the oversight of the plays and shows in honour of their idol gods, and were usually their priests ; and were of four countries, from whence they had their names of Asiarchs, Bithynarchs, Syriarchs, and Cappadociarchs. Whosoever these were, the providence of God is to be adored, who could out of his greatest enemies raise up deliverers for his servants.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and some another : for the assembly was confused ; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

An excellent description of a popular tumult. Whether this assembly was afterwards made legal by the magistrates resorting thither, (though it was not called by their authority,) and is therefore called here, ἐκκλησία, is not so useful to inquire.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

They drew Alexander out of the multitude, where he could not be seen and heard, unto some more convenient place, from whence he might make a vindication or defence for them ; and that most likely in behalf of the Jews, who were equally obnoxious to the rage of the people for being against their idolatry, as the Christians were. This Alexander is thought to have been that Alexander of whom we read, 1 Tim. i. 20 ; 2 Tim. iv. 14 : though some think that this was another of that name. Beckoned with the hand, to procure silence ; as chap. xii. 17.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

A Jew, and by consequence an enemy to their idolatry ; and, as they might imagine at least, a friend to St. Paul. All with one voice ; unanimity makes not the cause to be good, if it were bad at first.

35 And when the townclerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is † a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter ?

Town-clerk, or secretary, who registered their acts, and intervened in all their meetings. Is a worshipper ; each country and city had their peculiar gods, which they worshipped, and took for their patrons, as Ephesus did this goddess Diana. But the word here signifies a sacrist, or one that looks to the temple to keep it clean ; especially that hath the charge of more solemn shows or sports in honour of any supposed deity : and these Ephesians took it to be their no small glory, that they were employed in such as belonged to Diana. The image which fell down from Jupiter ; though the maker's name (Canetias) is upon record, yet it having lasted whilst the temple was six or seven times repaired, at least, if not renewed, and none ever remembering when it first was brought in amongst them, the crafty priests persuaded the credulous people that it was fallen from heaven, thereby getting more honour unto it, and profit to themselves.

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly.

He did more cunningly than honestly endeavour to evade their clamour, and still their rage, by telling them (how f Pr. 115. 4.

Is. 44. 10.
—20.
Jer. 10. 3.

1 1 Tim. 1.
20. 2 Tim.
4. 14.
k ch. 12. 17.

g Rom. 16.
22. 1 Cor. 1.
14.
h ch. 20. 4.
i ch. 27. 2.
Col. 4. 10.
Phil. 24.

+ Gr. the temple keeper.

fallaciously soever,) that neither Paul, nor any other Christian or Jew, had any quarrel with their goddess or worship. For they indeed were against all images that were made with hands; but theirs was not such a one, it being fallen down from heaven. We must consider he was but a pagan; and his design was only to still the people; and populus vult decipi.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

Neither robbers of churches; for they had not entered into their temple. Nor yet blasphemers of your goddess; Paul had barely preached this truth amongst them, not upbraiding them for their idolatry; as Michael, the archangel, brought no railing accusation against the devil, when he contended with him. Jude 9.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, || the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

<sup>1</sup> Or, the four days are kept.

The law is open; which is fittest to determine all questions and controversies; for men would be partial to their own cause, and every one challenge to be in the right. Deputies; who, under the Roman emperors or consuls, had power to hear and determine of all matters. Let them implead one another; that so both parties may be heard.

39 But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a || lawful assembly.

<sup>1</sup> Or, ordinary.

Other matters; relating to the good government of the city, or maintaining the established religion, which ought not in such a confused manner to be treated of, but in an assembly called by lawful authority, which the Romans did usually call, at least, three times every month.

40 For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this course.

He wisely minds them of their danger; for being under the power of the Romans, it was no less than the loss of their liberties to abet any faction or sedition; and to make a course or meeting tumultuously together, was capital, unless it were upon the sudden invasion of an enemy, or to put out some raging fire.

41 And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

The people were persuaded quietly to depart to their homes. Thus God one way or other, sometimes by friends, and sometimes by foes, kept his church and people from being ruined; and his hand is not shortened.

CHAP. XX

Paul goeth to Macedonia, and having passed over divers countries cometh to Troas, 1—6; where, as he preached long, Eutychus falleth out of a window, and is taken up dead: Paul restoreth him to life, 7—12. He continueth his travels, 13—16. At Miletus he calleth to him the elders of the church of Ephesus, and taketh a solemn and affectionate leave of them, exhorting them to look well to their charge, and commending them to God's grace, 17—35. He prayeth with them, and departeth, 36—38.

AND after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and <sup>a</sup>departed for to go into Macedonia.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
<sup>5</sup> 1 Tim. 1.
<sup>3</sup>

Embraced them; took his farewell of them, and, as the manner of those countries was in meeting and parting with friends, he kissed them: as Luke vii. 45. and far more anciently, Gen. xxxi. 55. And this was the true ground of that kiss of peace, or the holy kiss, recommended Rom xvi. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 20; 2 Cor. xiii. 12. and elsewhere, which was only a civility then in use. Departed for to go into Macedonia; yielding to the present fury of Demetrius; not so much for his own safety, as for the good of the church, that it might not be further persecuted for his sake; and that elsewhere it might by his ministry be enlarged and built up.

2 And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,

Much exhortation; which after so great a stir and opposition against them, the disciples could not but stand in great need of, that they might not be offended at the cross of Christ: and also mingling consolations with his exhortations, as the word indifferently signifies, as the case would well bear, there being a special blessing promised unto such as are persecuted for righteousness' sake, Matt. v. 10; 1 Pet. iii. 14. Came into Greece; Attica, in which province Athens was: otherwise Macedonia was in Greece largely taken.

3 And there abode three months. And <sup>b</sup> when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 9. 23.
<sup>c</sup> 23. 12. &
<sup>25</sup> 3. 2 Cor.
11. 26.

The Jews laid wait for him; some have thought that their laying in wait might be to rob him of the collections which he carried with him for the saints at Jerusalem; but most likely it was rather to take away his life, whom they hated for his zeal and diligence in the gospel. He purposed to return; shunning their treachery and plotting against him. He would not tempt God by running into dangers, though his cause were never so good. Through Macedonia; being the same way that he had come to Corinth.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, <sup>c</sup>Aristarchus and <sup>d</sup>Secundus; and <sup>e</sup>Gaius of Derbe, and <sup>f</sup>Timotheus; and of Asia, <sup>g</sup>Tychicus and <sup>h</sup>Trophimus.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 19. 29.
<sup>d</sup> 27. 2.
<sup>e</sup> Col. 4. 10.
<sup>f</sup> ch. 19. 29.
<sup>g</sup> ch. 16. 1.
<sup>h</sup> Eph. 6. 21.
<sup>i</sup> Col. 4. 7.
<sup>j</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 12.
<sup>k</sup> Tit. 3. 12.
<sup>l</sup> g ch. 21. 29.
<sup>m</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 20.

There accompanied him into Asia; their names are set down, as being men called and known at that time in the churches, and that what they did for this holy apostle might be remembered in all ages. Sopater; who is called also Sosipater, Rom. xvi. 21. It is added in some copies, that he was the son of Pyrrhus; which in Greek is the same with Rufus in Latin. Berea; a city of Macedonia, chap. xvii. 10. Aristarchus; of whom, chap. xix. 29, as also of the others, mention hath been formerly made. Of Asia; of Ephesus, a city in Asia. Tychicus; of whom, Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 7; 2 Tim. iv. 12; and of Trophimus we read, chap. xxi. 29; 2 Tim. iv. 20. These seem to have been the apostles or messengers of the churches, spoken of 2 Cor. viii. 23; in the number of whom St. Luke is to be reckoned, but being the penman of this book, he declines mentioning of himself by name; but his praise will be for ever in the gospel, 2 Cor. viii. 18, 19.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

Us; whereby it appears, that St. Luke was one of them that accompanied St. Paul, though neither here nor elsewhere doth he express his own name. Troas; either the city of Troy, or the country thereabout so called.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after <sup>i</sup>the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them <sup>j</sup>to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

<sup>i</sup> Ex. 12. 14,
15. & 17. 15.
<sup>j</sup> ch. 16.
<sup>k</sup> 2 Cor. 2. 12.
<sup>l</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 13.

From Philippi; where they embarked, and sailed on the river first, then on the sea. After the days of unleavened bread; though St. Paul would not have the Gentile converts to be burdened with the ceremonial law, yet, that he might not offend the Jews, for a while he complied with their rites, chap. xviii. 21, they being indeed dead, but not yet deadly; and therefore he stays his journey all the time of the passover solemnity, instructing them in the mean while of the nature and use of such things.

7 And upon <sup>k</sup>the first day of the week, when the disciples came together <sup>l</sup>to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

<sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
<sup>l</sup> 2. Rev. 1. 10.
<sup>m</sup> 1 ch. 2. 42.
<sup>n</sup> 46. j Cor. 10.
<sup>o</sup> 16. & 11. 29,
<sup>p</sup> &c.

The first day of the week; this was the day which the Lord had made, it being called from his resurrection, which was on this day, the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. On this day the disciples met, and Christ honoured them with his presence, John xx. 19, 26. And when he was ascended, this day was appointed for the Christians to meet in, 1 Cor. xvi. 2; which must necessarily infer the abrogation of the Saturday, or Jewish sabbath: for it being part of the command, Six days shalt thou labour, they could not in ordinary have rested the last day of the week and the first day too, without sinning against the law of God. To break bread; to take a meal in common together, which they called agape, or the love-feast, so great a harmony and natural love was manifested in it; which was concluded with celebrating the Lord's supper; and this is chiefly, if not only, intended in this place. The love-feasts being abused, were soon laid aside; but the other must continue until the Lord come, 1 Cor. xi. 26. Continued his speech until midnight; a long sermon indeed, at least it would be now thought so; and yet we must have the same spirit, or we are not members of that catholic church.

18 And there were many lights <sup>m</sup> in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

There were many lights; there being many present; and it being in the night, because of the persecution that the Christians met with. Lest they should be reproached for doing any thing indecently, they by this means exposed themselves, and all that was done amongst them, to the common view and notice of all. In the upper chamber; where it is supposed they did ordinarily meet; as chap. i. 13.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

Preaching; discoursing and arguing; for it does not seem to have been a continued speech, by the word here used. Fell down from the third loft; this fall is thought by some to have been caused by Satan, (through God's permission,) that he might the more disturb Paul, and hinder, or put an end to, his sermon; which by the ensuing miracle God turned to a quite contrary effect.

10 And Paul went down, and <sup>n</sup> fell on him, and embracing him said, <sup>o</sup> Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

Fell on him; as Elijah on the widow of Zarephath's dead son, 1 Kings xvii. 21, and Elisha on the Shunammite's son, 2 Kings iv. 34. His life is in him; not but that he had been really dead, as ver. 9, but that upon the apostle's prayer (which is to be understood, though it is not here expressed) God had restored the young man to life; or howsoever, because St. Paul knew infallibly he should presently be restored to life, even whilst he spake.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

Had broken bread; either in the eucharist, as ver. 7, or in taking his ordinary refection and breakfast. Talked a long while, even till break of day; this was of long continuance, and speaks the patience and zeal of Christians in those times, and will rise up in judgment against a careless and negligent generation. He departed; going that part of his journey on foot, as the rest of his company did go by sea, as ver. 13.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

They rejoiced not only that the young man was restored to life, but that by this means the gospel was attested to, and many confirmed in the belief of it.

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

Assos; a city in Mysia, called also Apollonia, not far from Troas either by water or land. Minding himself to go afoot; Paul's going on foot might be the rather, that so he might have the better opportunity to scatter the seed of the gospel as he went, going through towns and villages, and conversing still with some or other, more than in sea journeys can be expected. So greedy of winning souls to Christ was this holy man, that he ordered every step, as near as he could, towards it. But St. Paul might desire to go alone thus on foot, that he might enjoy more free and full communion with God, having only God and his own soul to converse with.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

An island, as also a city in it so called, in the Ægean Sea. Some think the island is called Lesbos, in which this Mitylene is.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

Chios; a noted island betwixt Lesbos and Samos in the Ægean Sea. Samos; in Ionia; for there are several other islands of this name. Trogyllium; a promontory not far from Samos. Miletus; a sea town upon the continent or firm land of Ionia.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia: for <sup>p</sup> he hasted, if it were possible for him, <sup>q</sup> to be at Jerusalem <sup>r</sup> the day of Pentecost.

Ephesus was not so far from Miletus; but lest he should hinder his journey, he would not go thither. If it were possible for him; or, as chap. xviii. 21, if the Lord would; for his endeavour should not be wanting. To be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost; not that he placed any religion in the observing this feast, which was abrogated and done away by being fulfilled, chap. ii.; but because of the vast concourse of people at all those solemn feasts, when his opportunities to magnify Christ and his truths might be the greater.

17 ¶ And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

The governors and pastors of it; elders being here a title not respecting their age, but their place; and they might be the twelve spoken of, chap. xix. 7.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, <sup>s</sup> from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

Asia; strictly and properly so called; or that part of the Lesser Asia whose metropolis was Ephesus. After what manner I have been with you at all seasons; a singular form for a good man to use, if he must of necessity leave his charge or flock, when his conscience does not accuse him. St. Paul spake not this as boasting of what he had done, or how he had been amongst them; but setting his example before them and others, to be imitated, and calling them for to witness the truth of it.

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me <sup>t</sup> by the lying in wait of the Jews:

Serving the Lord; in his apostleship or public ministry; of which, if any ever could, he might have gloried; yet in this office he clothes himself with humility, as the most becoming garment for a minister of Jesus Christ: though so high, yet so low. We need not cry, (as one did, though ironically,) Wie, St. Paul! but lie upon all such as pretend to succeed in his dignity, and do not at all imitate him in his humility. With many tears; he shed tears of compassion over the ignorant and blind, hard and perverse. It grieved him to see how large a dominion the god of this world had, and what a little part was left for his dear Lord and Master, Christ Jesus. Temptations; afflictions and troubles, which befell him for Christ and the gospel's sake; which are so called, James i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 6.

<sup>p</sup> ch. 18. 21.
<sup>q</sup> & 19. 21.
<sup>r</sup> & 21. 4. 12.
<sup>s</sup> q. ch. 24. 17.
<sup>t</sup> ch. 2. 1.
<sup>u</sup> 1 Cor. 16. 8.

<sup>s</sup> ch. 18. 19.
<sup>t</sup> & 19. 1. 10.

<sup>t</sup> ver. 3.

<sup>n</sup> 1 Kings

<sup>o</sup> 17. 21.

<sup>p</sup> 2 Kings 4.

<sup>q</sup> Matt. 9. 24.

u ver. 27.

20 And how " I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publickly, and from house to house,

I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you; useful in order to eternal life to be known or hoped for, or to be done; shunning no labour or danger; concealing nothing out of fear or hope of advantage. Taught you publickly; in the public synagogues and schools. And from house to house; privately, as chap. ii. 46; not only speaking publicly and in general, but secretly and particularly, as every one's condition did require, exhorting some, reproving others. And indeed a good shepherd will labour to understand the state of his flock, and to supply them with what is necessary and suitable for them. Jacob says, Gen. xxxi. 39, that he bare the loss, and was fain to answer for all the sheep unto Laban. And of how much more value are the souls of men, to be sure, in God's sight, who will require an account of them!

x ch. 18. 5.

21 " Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, 'repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

Testifying to all sorts and conditions of men, for there is no difference with God, that repentance would be accepted from them by God, and that he was ready to give repentance unto them, as chap. xi. 18; and that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ was the true saving faith, there being no other name given whereby we may be saved. Upon these two depends the whole gospel, and our salvation by it.

s ch. 19. 21.

22 And now, behold, " I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there :

Bound in the spirit; as powerfully persuaded by a Divine instinct, to undertake this journey, as if I were led or drawn to it by forcible means; being bound to obey God in all things, whom I take to be my God and Guide, my Sun and Shield; and I do not desire so much to act, as to be acted by him. This St. Paul says, not as if he was drawn unto this journey against his will, but lest any should attempt to dissuade him from it, or that he should seem to have slighted the predictions of the prophets, mentioned chap. xxi. 11, 12. Nay, he might say this, as being as certain of his bonds as if he felt them already. Such things as are foretold to such as know the veracity of God, they are as present. Howsoever, he was content to be bound, to suffer, nay, to die for Christ. And as he is poor in spirit who crucifies the world, and is willing to want, if God sees good; so he is bound in spirit, who is thus willing to be bound for the name of Christ. Howsoever, these words speak his firm resolution to take this journey upon him. Not knowing the things that shall befall me there; what the event shall be, in what measure he should be bound, and how long; he left it unto God's good will and pleasure.

a ch. 21. 4.

23 Save that " the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions || abide me.

1. Those that were endued with the Spirit of prophecy, in every city, foretold his sufferings; as chap. xxi. 4. 11. 2. He did suffer more or less in every city or place he came to; so great was the malice of the Jews against him.

h ch. 21. 13.

24 But " none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, " and the ministry, " which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God.

None of these things move me; they cannot deter me from my duty. Neither count I my life dear unto myself; I am so far from fearing bonds, that I would not fear death itself. He is said to account his life precious, or dear, that spares it; as 2 Kings i. 13, 14. My course; his general course of Christianity, or the special course of his ministry; in either of which there is a race to be run, and a prize to be got, 2 Tim. iv. 7. It implies the great and constant labour that all Christians must take in their general calling, and especially ministers in their particular calling, 1 Cor. ix. 24. With joy; which ariseth from the testimony of a good conscience, which only is true joy; the other is madness, Eccles. ii. 2. The ministry; his apostleship, so called, chap. i. 25; vi. 4. The gospel of the grace of God; so the gospel is called, because bestowed upon any nation or people by God's mere grace only. And also it declares the grace of God in Christ Jesus to repenting and believing sinners.

25 And now, behold, ' I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

This is thought to have been spoken by St. Paul, as his present purpose and resolution only, as Rom. xv. 24. The kingdom of God; the gospel, by which his kingdom is set up in the minds and hearts of men.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am " pure from the blood of all men.

I take you to record; I testify and affirm unto you; and I dare appeal unto yourselves concerning it. I am pure from the blood of all men; from the guilt of destroying their souls; none of them have perished through my fault, having faithfully showed unto them the way of life, and earnestly persuaded them to walk in it. Thus, according as the Lord told Ezekiel, chap. iiii. 19, the prophet that hath warned the wicked man, hath delivered his own soul.

27 For " I have not shunned to declare unto you all " the counsel of God.

God's decree, to save all that believe in Christ; or the whole doctrine of Christianity, as it directs to a holy life; whatsoever God requires of any one in order to a blessed eternity. This is that which the Pharisees rejected, Luke vii. 30; and so do all wicked and ungodly men, who refuse to take God's counsel, or to obey his command.

28 ¶ " Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost " hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God, " which he hath purchased " with his own blood.

Take heed therefore unto yourselves; be mindful of your own salvation: for he that neglects his own, will not be careful of the salvation of another. The Holy Ghost hath made you overseers; 1. By his choosing and nominating of them, which was then by a special instinct, or immediate warrant from the Spirit, chap. i. 24; xiii. 2. Or, 2. Because they were constituted by the apostles, who were filled with the Spirit, enabling them to the choice of such persons, chap. xiv. 23. But also, 3. Whosoever is set apart to this office, according to the will of God, is made an overseer by the Holy Ghost; God owning his institutions, and concurring with them. Overseers; the same who (ver. 17) are called elders; they were certainly such as had the government and care of the church committed unto them. To feed; as a shepherd does, (for the apostle continues here the metaphor,) Jer. xxiii. 4; John xxi. 16, 17. The church of God; our Saviour is so called; for the Word was God, John i. 1. Which he hath purchased; Christ by his bloody death hath redeemed his church, and obtained power to gather it, to rule over it, to protect and preserve it, Isa. liii. 10; Phil. ii. 8—10. With his own blood; the blood of Christ, called truly the blood of God, there being in Christ two natures in one person, and a communion of the properties of each nature. If Christ had not been man, he could have had no blood to shed: had he not been God, the blood which he shed could not have been a sufficient price of redemption. Oh the depth of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge of God, who found out such a ransom; and the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of the love of Christ, who paid this ransom for us! Rom. xi. 33; Eph. iiii. 18, 19.

29 For I know this, that after my departing " shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.

f ver. 32. Rom. 15. 23.

g ch. 18. 5. 2 Cor. 7. 2.

h ver. 20. i Luke 7. 30. John 15. 15. Eph. 1. 11.

k 1 Tim. 4. 16. 1 Pet. 5. 2. 1 Cor. 12. 28. m Eph. 1. 7. 14. Col. 1. 14. Heb. 9. 12. n 1 Pet. 1. 19. Rev. 5. 9. o See Heb. 9. 16.

o Matt. 7. 15. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

My departing; either out of this country, or out of this life. Grievous wolves; so false teachers and persecutors are called, the one destroying the body, the other the soul. In this the metaphor is persisted in; the disciples of Christ being as sheep or lambs, their enemies are by our Saviour himself called wolves, Matt. vii. 15.

¶ 1 Tim. 1. 20.
1 John 2. 12.
30 Also <sup>o</sup> of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

Of your own selves shall men arise; whilst Paul yet lived, and was only departed from that place. Several seducers may be reckoned up, as Nicolas the deacon, (from whom it is thought the sect of the Nicolaitanes came, Rev. ii. 6,) Hymenæus, Alexander, Phygellus, and Hermogenes, 1 Tim. i. 20; 2 Tim. i. 15. Speaking perverse things; perverting Scripture; establishing their false doctrines by Scripture, which they wrest to their purpose. To draw away disciples; as members are forcibly plucked from their body; which speak the cruelty and violence of these heretics, and the tenderness of the church towards her members, being loth to part from them. After them; thus false teachers gain indeed disciples to themselves, but not unto the Lord.

31 Therefore watch, and remember, ¶ ch. 19. 10. that <sup>a</sup> by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

Watch; take heed yourselves, and warn others to take heed. By the space of three years; from St. Paul's first coming to Ephesus it was three years current, and now almost complete, chap. xix. 8, 10; xx. 3. With tears; a great, and no feigned ἔδαρος; as Christ wept over Jerusalem, Luke xix. 41, so St. Paul over the unbelieving Jews; it went to his heart to think that they could not be saved. See how St. Paul loved souls, and pitied souls.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and <sup>t</sup> to the word of his grace, which is able <sup>e</sup> to build you up, and to give you <sup>u</sup> an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.

I commend you to God; it being so hard a matter to escape so many snares and dangers, the apostle prays to God for them, who is able to keep them by his power, through faith, unto salvation, 1 Pet. i. 5; and it is in vain to look after any meaner defence. The word of his grace; the gospel, which leads us to the rock upon which we must build, if we would not be moved when the storm comes. Build you up; increasing the number of believers, and augmenting their graces. God is said to build, and so is his word, both concurring; the gospel builds, as a means appointed by God; and God builds, who blesses that means. Hence he is called the God of all grace, 1 Pet. v. 10. An inheritance; heaven is called an inheritance, because we have it only by adoption, and it is given only unto children, Rom. viii. 17; as also, because it is a firm and lasting possession, not for a term of years, or a certain time, but for ever and ever. Which are sanctified; for without holiness none shall see God, Heb. xii. 14.

u 1 Sam. 12. 3.
1 Cor. 9. 12.
2 Cor. 7. 2.
& 11. 9.
& 12. 17.
33 <sup>u</sup> I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

Having spoken of the heavenly inheritance, he tells them how willing he was to have his reward hereafter, and to waive receiving his wages here. In this, St. Paul imitates Moses, Numb. xvi. 15, and Samuel, 1 Sam. xii. 3, 5.

¶ ch. 18. 2.
1 Cor. 4. 12.
1 Thess. 2. 9.
2 Thess. 3. 8.
34 Yea, ye yourselves know, <sup>a</sup> that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.

St. Paul working hard (as they all knew) for a livelihood, chap. xviii. 3; 1 Cor. iv. 12; 1 Thess. ii. 9; which he gives an account of, 2 Thess. iii. 8, to have been done only that in such a juncture, they being poor, and the false teachers watching all advantages against him, he might not then be chargeable to them.

¶ Rom. 15. 1.
1 Cor. 9. 12.
2 Cor. 11. 9.
12. & 12. 13.
Eph. 4. 20.
1 Thess. 4.
11. & 5. 14. 2 Thess. 3. 8.
35 I have shewed you all things, <sup>v</sup> how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

I have showed you all things; as ver. 27. So labouring; with more than ordinary pains and constancy. To support; that they do not fall; or, being fallen, that they may rise again. The word imports the stretching out of the hand to retain any that are going away, or to hold up any that are falling. The weak; in knowledge, faith, or any other grace. The words of the Lord Jesus; Paul might have these words by the relation of others who heard them spoken by our Saviour; for all things that he said or did could not be written, John xx. 30. It is more blessed to give than to receive; not so much in that giving speaks abundance and affluence, but as it shows our charity and goodness, in which we resemble and imitate God. The substance of these words which are attributed to our Saviour, though not the terms, may be found in divers places, as Luke vi. 38; xvi. 9.

36 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he <sup>u</sup> kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

He kneeled down; a posture of great humility, becoming prayer, and frequently used on such occasions, especially in a time of great trouble and distress. Although bodily exercise alone do not profit, 1 Tim. iv. 8, yet we may, and must on occasion, in prayer bow the knee, lift up the hand and eye; 1. Because it is a reasonable thing to give our bodies in his service to God that made them. 2. By this we may show that we are not ashamed to serve and own God before men. And, 3. These outward signs do sometimes stir up our own and others' devotion.

37 And they all wept sore, and <sup>a</sup> fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him,

As they used to do their friends when they took their leave of them: see Gen. xlv. 14, 15.

38 Sorrowing most of all for the words <sup>b</sup> which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

The loss of a faithful and painful minister is a public loss, and many are concerned in it; besides, they had found great benefit by his ministry, and could not but be sensible of their missing of it. Add to this, Paul's gracious and humble conversation, and the sense of many good offices done by him, could not but have endeared him unto them. They accompanied him unto the ship; enjoying him as long and as far as they could, and expressing their last and utmost kindness unto him.

CHAP. XXI

Paul, journeying to Jerusalem, calleth at the house of Philip the evangelist, whose four daughters prophesied, 1—9. Agabus foretelling what should befall him at Jerusalem, he will not be dissuaded from going thither, 10—16. Arriving at Jerusalem, he is persuaded to purify himself in the temple 17—26; where he is set upon by the Jews of Asia, and in danger of losing his life in an uproar, but is rescued by the chief captain, and carried to the castle in chains, 27—36. He requesteth, and is permitted, to speak to the people, 37—40.

AND it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

Were gotten from them; had parted with them, as dearest friends and relations do one from the other, with much difficulty and reluctance. Coos; an island in the Mediterranean Sea, nigh unto Crete, where Hippocrates and Apelles are said to have been born. Rhodes; another island in the same sea, of great fame for the Colossus, or vast image of brass, which was there, accounted one of the wonders of the world. Patara; a haven town of Lycia, and its metropolis.

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phœnicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

Sailing over unto Phenicia; whose master and mariners intended such a voyage. Phenicia; a country in Syria, situate nigh the sea, and bordering upon Palestine, whose chief city was Tyre.

3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

Cyprus; another island in the Mediterranean. Unlade her burden; of goods and merchandise which she had taken in at Ephesus.

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: * who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

Seven days; they tarried the rather so long, that they might worship and serve the Lord on his day together. Through the Spirit; by the Spirit of prophecy they foretold his sufferings at Jerusalem, which afterward accordingly befell unto him; and they, being ignorant of his undertaking that journey at God's command, out of commiseration and pity dissuade St. Paul from going to such a place, where they foresaw that he should suffer so much: and this, it is said, they did through the Spirit, because they had that foreknowledge of all his sufferings from the Spirit; and knowing but in part, being ignorant of that special command Paul had had to go to Jerusalem, they did, according to what they knew, dissuade Paul from that journey. But, they knowing that their prophecy about St. Paul's sufferings must be fulfilled, and the Spirit by which they spake could not err or be mistaken, how came they to dissuade St. Paul from going to Jerusalem? It may be answered, that they might think this prediction of his sufferings to be only conditional, in case he went to Jerusalem; as David was told, that the men of Keilah would deliver him to Saul, 1 Sam. xxiii. 11, 12; that is, in case he had trusted himself amongst them.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and <sup>b</sup> we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

They all brought us on our way; to show their greater respect unto him, being loth to part with him so long as it was possible for them to enjoy him; so that they did not despise his temptation that was in the flesh, Gal. iv. 14; but it is truly strange what follows, that he was received by them as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. Kneeled down on the shore; this the Jews on extraordinary occasions were wont to do, whilst the temple itself were standing, viz. make every place a place of prayer in such a case, chap. xx. 36.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned <sup>c</sup> home again.

Had taken our leave one of another; as chap. xx. 1, embracing one another at their parting.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

We came to Ptolemais; so far forth as to Ptolemais, a city in Phenicia, so called from one of the Ptolemies, king of Egypt; and is thought to be the same with Accho, mentioned Judg. i. 31, which ancient name is yet retained in the Syriac translation.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cæsarea; and we entered into the house of Philip <sup>d</sup> the evangelist, * which was one of the seven; and abode with him.

Cæsarea; that which was called Cæsarea Stratonis, to distinguish it from Cæsarea Philippi, at the foot of Mount Libanus, as also from another city of that name in Cappa-docia; they having been all so called in honour of Cæsar, to flatter and perpetuate that family. The Cæsarea here spoken of was in Palestine, and is mentioned chap. x. 1; xviii. 22. The evangelist; whose office and charge it was to publish the gospel, which Timothy is exhorted to do, 2 Tim. iv. 5. This office is placed between that of an apostle and of a pastor and teacher, Eph. iv. 11, and was not so confined to a certain place or people as the latter of these were. One of the seven; of the seven deacons; of which see chap. vi. 5. Which office of a deacon Philip having well discharged, did purchase to himself this good degree, as 1 Tim. iii. 13.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, <sup>e</sup> which did prophesy.

Virgins; by their father's and their own voluntary determination, as 1 Cor. vii. 37; neither is it said whether they continued in that state. but they were so. Which did prophesy; not by expounding the prophecies or word of God, for no woman is suffered to teach publicly, 1 Cor. xiv. 34; 1 Tim. ii. 12; but rather foretelling things to come, which gift God did not debar that sex from; especially it having been promised, Joel ii. 28, and in part fulfilled before, chap. ii. 17; by which God would show the enlargement of his mercies, and plenty of his Spirit, reserved for the times of the gospel.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judæa a certain prophet, named <sup>f</sup> Agabus.

Of whom mention is made, chap. xi. 28; of whose prophecy they could not be ignorant, by reason of the great collection which, on that account, was made for the poor at Jerusalem.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, <sup>g</sup> So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

Took Paul's girdle; it was ordinary amongst the prophets to confirm, or at least to exemplify, their prophecies by outward signs and symbols, as Isa. xx. 2; Jer. xiii. 1; Ezek. xii. 5. But that of Jer. xxvii. 2, is a parallel unto this; where the prophet is commanded to make bonds and yokes, and to put them upon his neck, to foreshow the subjection of all those nations unto Nebuchadnezzar. Thus saith the Holy Ghost; none of all the sufferings fore-shown concerning St. Paul, or others of God's children and servants, but are ordered by God, who knows them altogether; and they came not out of the dust, or by casualty, or chance, so as not to have been the matter of God's foreknowledge and counsel, Eph. i. 11. The Gentiles; the Roman powers at Jerusalem, and afterwards at Rome.

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

They of that place; the converts or believers that were in Cæsarea, pitying him, and having a tender affection for him: see ver. 4. Besought him with tears, so earnest were they, as in the following verse.

13 Then Paul answered, <sup>i</sup> What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

What mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart? a strange strife, who should overcome by loving most, as in that betwixt David and Jonathan, 1 Sam. xx. 41, 42. This undaunted champion, who did not seem to feel any of his own afflictions and miseries, yet grieves for the grief and sympathy of others, and bears a double weight in his burdens; one directly and immediately from them, as lying upon himself; the other mediately, as recoiling from others (who suffered with him) unto him again. But also to die; as Christ's love for us was stronger than death, Cant. viii. 6, so must our love be to him again, or it is not of the same

<sup>a</sup> ver. 12.
<sup>ch.</sup> 20. 23.

<sup>f</sup> Joel 2. 28.
<sup>ch.</sup> 2. 17.

<sup>g</sup> ch. 11. 28.

<sup>h</sup> ver. 33.
<sup>ch.</sup> 20. 23.

<sup>b</sup> ch. 20. 36.

<sup>c</sup> John 1. 11.

<sup>i</sup> ch. 20. 24.

<sup>d</sup> Eph. 4. 11.
<sup>2</sup> Tim. 4. 5.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 6. 5. &
<sup>5.</sup> 28. 40.

nature with his, nor begotten by it. For the name of the Lord Jesus; his truth, and glory.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, <sup>k</sup>The will of the Lord be done.

We ceased; as having done their utmost, and what became them. Saying, The will of the Lord be done; they commit the event unto God: thus we pray daily, that God's will may be done, Matt. vi. 10; Luke xi. 2; and thus our Saviour, not only by his precept, but by his example, hath taught us, Matt. xxvi. 42; Luke xxii. 42; and when God's will is done, our will is done also, if the mind and spirit be in us that was in Christ, Phil. ii. 5, and otherwise we are none of his, Rom. viii. 9.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

As they do pack up that are to remove to another house or place, not intending to come thither any more again; this also did show their readiness of mind to endure and suffer all things, as loss of relations and friends, and all accommodations, for Christ.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

Either this Mnason was in their company, or rather they were brought by the disciples of Cæsarea to the house of this Mnason, who was one of them that was converted when Paul and Barnabas were at Cyprus, chap. xiii. 4; and lodgings being scarce at Jerusalem, (when all the males were to appear there in those three annual solemnities,) it was no small kindness to be provided for by him.

17 <sup>l</sup>And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

It is thought, that by brethren in this place, and ver. 7, they are meant, who, being believers, were formed into a church with its several officers, and that they are called disciples only, ver. 4, who, living dispersed, and in smaller numbers, could not constitute such a church; but surely whatsoever there is of privilege and happiness in this spiritual fraternity, that truly catholic charity that was in the apostles and other holy men, would not so confine it, as to exclude any from enjoying of it, who did not exclude themselves by greater crimes than their paucity in number, or the consequences of that, could amount unto.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto <sup>m</sup>James; and all the elders were present.

James, one of the apostles, though some think that he was a kinsman of our Saviour's, and at this time bishop of Jerusalem. Elders; as chap. xv. 6, 23, not so called for their age, but dignity or place in the church.

19 And when he had saluted them, <sup>n</sup>he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles <sup>o</sup>by his ministry.

God had so done those marvellous works, that they ought to be had in remembrance; and this was said by the apostle, that God might not lose the glory, nor the church the benefit, of any of those great things which God had wrought: otherwise, St. Paul acknowledges that he was the least of the apostles, and not meet to be called an apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 9; and all his power was ministerial, he was only an instrument in God's hand, to be acted by him, as chap. xx. 24.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all <sup>p</sup>zealous of the law:

Glorified the Lord; acknowledging all in that great work of the conversion of the Gentiles to have been from God; and that Paul that had planted, and Apollos that had watered, were nothing, 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7. Thousands of Jews; tens of thousands, as the word does usually signify; a de- finite for an indefinite number, signifying very many: and considering out of what small beginnings, and by what despicable means, and all within the space of about five and twenty years, this grain of mustard seed had spread itself; and add to this, that they were Jews, that obstinate and prejudiced generation, who are here spoken of, and they were then so many, so wonderfully many, who believed. All zealous of the law, of ceremonies, and concerning forbidden meats, &c. For the decree of the apostles, chap. xv. 29, concerning these things, did only respect such as were converted from paganism to the faith of Christ; and the Jews that were converted before the dispersion by Adrian, the Roman emperor, many years after this time, did not thoroughly understand their freedom from that law, but were under the burden of it, as appears by several ecclesiastical writers.

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.

Informed of thee; instructed or catechised concerning thee; the zealots had made it their business to instil such aspersions and odious reflections against Paul, as if their accusations had been the fundamental truths of their religion. Moses; the ceremonial law, given by his ministry. To walk, to live, to act in their course of life, after the customs of their fathers, or the rituals of Moses.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.

What is it therefore? it cannot be otherwise; or, what else remains to be done? The multitude must needs come together; all the faithful must meet; for the magistrates then being pagan, and enemies both to the church and the gospel; in matters of great moment, especially when there was any fear of a schism, the whole multitude of believers were gathered together to consult about it.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We have four men which have a vow on them;

Vows were either, first, such as men did make in gratitude for any deliverance they had received, as from sickness, storms, or any imminent dangers: or, secondly, to enable them the better to serve God on any occasion; and then they were bound to keep themselves from all those things which were forbidden to the Nazarite, as wine and strong drink, and to nourish their hair, as the Nazarites were bound to do. This vow they made for a certain time, and not perpetual: the law concerning it you may see, Numb. vi. 2—5.

24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may <sup>q</sup>shave their heads: and all <sup>r</sup>may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

Purify thyself; they advise Paul to perform all those rites required of a Nazarite, the observation of which did legally purify him. Be at charges with them; these charges were about the threefold sacrifice which were to be offered, two turtles or young pigeons, a lamb, unleavened bread, and cakes of fine flour, as Numb. vi. 10—12, 15: and the other four, spoken of ver. 23, being poor, they require Paul here to bear their charges also, that so he might appear to be the chief amongst them, and the more zealous in their law, to take away the scandal that was taken up by the Jews against him; these ceremonies being as yet not deadly, or evil, though they were dead and indifferent. Shave their heads; which was done at the end of their separation, and was the accomplishment of all; and they burned the hair which they shaved off under their sacrifices, to show, that all their legal performances were only acceptable unto God through Jesus Christ, who was sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7; Heb. x. 12. Walkest orderly, and keepest the law; livest according to the law of Moses, contrary unto what they reported of thee.

<sup>k</sup> Matt. 6.
<sup>l</sup> Gal. 1. 19.
<sup>m</sup> Gal. 2. 9.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 13. 4.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 15. 13.
<sup>o</sup> Gal. 1. 19.
<sup>p</sup> Gal. 2. 9.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 15. 4.
<sup>o</sup> Rom. 15. 18, 19.
<sup>p</sup> ch. 1. 17.
<sup>q</sup> Gal. 2. 24.

<sup>p</sup> ch. 22. 3.
<sup>q</sup> Rom. 10. 2.
<sup>r</sup> Gal. 1. 14.

<sup>q</sup> Numb. 6. 2.
<sup>r</sup> ch. 15. 18.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, <sup>r ch. 15. 20, 29.</sup> we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

These ceremonies (after their accomplishment in Christ) not being at all necessary, they were not imposed upon any that received the faith of Christ from amongst the Gentiles, or other nations; only suffered for a while unto the Jews that turned to Christ, for the hardness of their hearts, and inveterate zeal for them. Things offered to idols, &c.: of these things, see chap. xv. 29.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them <sup>a ch. 24. 18. t Num. 6.13.</sup> entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

Paul agrees to their advice, and follows it; and having set such a time for his vow as might end with the other four men's, he, with the four mentioned, signify to the priest (who was concerned to know it, because of the sacrifices that were to be offered for them,) that the time of their separation was fulfilled, which is here called the days of purification, for the reason intimated, ver. 24. Until that an offering should be offered for every one of them: intending to abide in the temple until all those rites were performed which were required of them.

27 And when the seven days were almost ended, <sup>u ch. 24. 18.</sup> the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, <sup>x ch. 26. 21.</sup> stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him,

The seven days; either, 1. After his coming to Jerusalem; or rather, 2. Of his vow; for it is thought that his vow of separation was but for seven days; or, 3. The seven days of that feast of Pentecost which he came unto. The Jews which were of Asia; who were implacably set against him wheresoever he went, as chap. xiv. 19; xvii. 5. These Jews dwelt at Ephesus and elsewhere, but were come to observe the feast at Jerusalem. Laid hands on him; by violence, and against law.

28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: <sup>y ch. 24. 5, 6.</sup> This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

Men of Israel; minding them by this compellation, of their being a peculiar people unto God, and that none might be admitted with them in his worship. A charge is laid against St Paul consisting of divers articles, but all false; for he was a most zealous lover of that people, and taught them nothing but the true use and meaning of the law: but thus they had done to our Saviour, Matt. xxvi. 61, and to St. Stephen, chap. vi. 13. Into the temple; that is, into the court of the Jews, which is so far unlawful, that they might have killed a Roman if he had come in there; and every one was warned by an inscription upon the pillars, Μη δειν αλλοφυλον εντρος τῶ ἁγίῳ παριέναι, That no stranger or foreigner might come into that holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him <sup>z ch. 20. 4.</sup> in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

For they had seen; the Jews of Asia, who could not but know Trophimus; and he following of Paul in this journey, either ignorantly or maliciously they accuse the apostle for taking him into the temple with him; which was only their surmise, and the issue of their enraged jealousy.

30 And <sup>a ch. 26. 21.</sup> all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took

Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.

And all the city was moved; there was a general course from all parts. Tantum religio poterat, no such heats as such are which are moved about religion; whilst the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, James iii. 17. Drew him out of the temple; lest by their uproar they should occasion any of the Gentiles to come in there to quell them; or, intending to kill Paul, they drew him thence, that he might not pollute that holy place with his blood: thus they strain at a gnat, being unwilling to pollute the temple; but they would swallow a camel, not sticking to shed the blood of the innocent. The doors were shut; either by the keeper of the doors, or by the soldiers of the temple.

31 And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

The chief captain; the commander-in-chief over all the soldiers there; or one that had the command over a thousand. At the three great feasts there was usually a considerable number of soldiers at Jerusalem; the confluence from all parts being then so great, and the Jews so impatient of any yoke or government, the Romans durst not trust such multitudes without some check upon them. Thus at the passover, when they took and crucified our Saviour, these soldiers were made use of, John xviii. 12.

32 <sup>b ch. 23. 27. & 24. 7.</sup> Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

A wonderful providence of God for Paul's preservation, that the chief captain should be so near, as to be able to hinder the massacring of Paul; and especially that he should be defended and preserved by one that was a stranger to him, and an enemy to his religion! They left beating of Paul, lest they should have been set upon by the soldiers, for breaking the peace, &c. The fear of man caused them to forbear what the fear of God could not.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and <sup>c ver. 11. ch. 26. 22.</sup> commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

Bound with two chains; whether as Peter was, see chap. xii. 6, or that he was bound with one upon his feet, and with the other upon his hands, it was exactly fulfilled what Agabus had prophesied concerning him, ver. 11. So does God provide, that not one word of his servants, which they speak from him, shall fail; and that St. Paul should be heard before he was condemned.

34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

Some cried one thing, some another; as is usual in popular commotions, they agreed in doing mischief, but not in the reason of it. Into the castle called Antonia, because it was built in honour of Mark Antony, on the north side of the temple.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.

When he came upon the stairs, in the ascent to the castle, he was borne of the soldiers; either because the press was so great, he being in the midst of them; or being taken up by them, to secure him from the fury of the enraged multitude.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, <sup>d Luke 23. 18. John 19. 22.</sup> Away with him.

That is, Kill him; for that was intended to take him out of their way. The same speech they used against our Saviour, Luke xxiii. 18; John xix. 15, when they desired his death.

37 And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

May I speak unto thee? a common expression in that language, whereby he craves leave, and bespeaks attention. Canst thou speak Greek? after the Grecian empire, their language became and continued to be very common in Asia and Egypt, and very well known amongst all the Romans of any education or quality.

38 *Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

That Egyptian; a famous ringleader of a rebellious crew, as some think, in the reign of Tiberius; but as others, in the thirteenth year of the emperor Claudius, and continued till under Nero's reign, and came, from these four thousand mentioned here at his first setting up, to have thirty thousand followers; pretending himself to be a prophet; of whom Josephus, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 11. Murderers, or assassins, that did wear daggers or stilettos.

39 But Paul said, 'I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

No mean city; it being the metropolis, or chief city, in Cilicia, built by Perseus, as some think; howsoever, having the privilege of the Roman freedom; as chap. xxii. 28. I beseech thee: St. Paul begs leave to speak unto the people, that he might not seem to affect popularity, or to be guilty of any insurrection or tumult. Thus he had leave also of Agrippa, before that he made that famous apology, chap. xxvi. 1.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,

Paul stood on the stairs; as he was now about to be carried into the castle Antonia, before mentioned. And beckoned with the hand; signifying that he craved their audience; as chap. xii. 17; xiii. 16. He spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue; the Hebrew tongue being understood by all of them, and most grateful unto them. Yet this was not the pure and ancient Hebrew, which had been corrupted ever since their captivity; but the Syriac tongue, which they there learned, was called Hebrew, it having at first been derived from the Hebrew, and being then in use by those who were Hebrews.

CHAP. XXII

Paul declareth at large the manner of his conversion and call to the apostleship, 1—21. At the very mentioning of the Gentiles the people exclaim furiously against him: whereupon the chief captain ordereth to examine him by scourging, 22—24; which he avoideth by pleading the privilege of a Roman citizen, 25—29. He is brought before the Jewish council, 30.

a ch. 7. 2. MEN, *brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you.

Although they were wicked men, and cruel persecutors, St. Paul giveth them their titles of respect, which by the places God had put them in, are due unto them: see on chap. vii. 2.

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,)

The Hebrew tongue; the ordinary Hebrew; that which was taken for Hebrew, and spoken by the Hebrews after their return from the captivity, though mixed with the Syriac; as chap. xxi. 40. They kept the more silence; it being more grateful unto them to hear Paul speak in their mother tongue, especially they having so great a prejudice against all other nations and languages.

3 <sup>b ch. 21. 26.
2 Cor. 11. 22.
Phil. 3. 5.</sup> I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city *at the feet of <sup>c Deu. 33. 3.
2 Kings 4.
38. Luke 10.
39.</sup> Gamaliel, and taught *according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and *was zealous toward God, *as ye all are this day.

At the feet; the apostle alludes unto the posture that the disciples of any rabbi, or teacher, in those times did use; the master sitting in some high or elevated place, did teach his scholars, who sat at his feet on the ground; and as they grew in knowledge, were advanced to sit nearer to their master: see Deut. xxxiii. 3. Abraham is thus said to be called to God's foot, Isa. xli. 2; and Mary sat at our Saviour's feet, Luke x. 39. Of Gamaliel; the same Gamaliel who made that moderating speech in the apostle's behalf, chap. v. 34. The perfect manner of the law; this perfect manner of the law is Pharisaism, in which the apostle was brought up, and before his conversion made a profession of, Phil. iii. 5. Not that the apostle reckoned upon any perfection in this profession; but because, as chap. xxvi. 5, it was the most strait sect of their religion, observing a great deal of punctuality and accurateness, making what they called a hedge about the law. Of the fathers; not observing only the law, which was given by God to their fathers by the hand of Moses; but the traditions of their fathers he was exceeding zealous in; as Gal. i. 14. Zealous toward God; or, as some copies read, zealous toward the law; both in the same sense. His zeal for the law was sincere, not out of by-ends, but out of his love to God, though it was not according to knowledge, Rom. x. 2. It was truly according unto what he knew or believed, but it was not according to true knowledge.

4 <sup>b ch. 8. 3.
& 26. 9, 10.
11. Phil. 2.
& 1 Tim. 1.
13.</sup> And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

This way; the doctrine and practice of Christianity. Unto the death; as much as in him lies, being one of the most furious persecutors, that hunted for the precious life, breathing out threatenings and slaughters with every breath, chap. ix. 1.

5 As also the High Priest doth bear me witness, and *all the estate of the elders: *from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

The estate of the elders; their sanhedrim or great council. Letters; commission or orders. The brethren; the Jews of Damascus are called brethren, because descended from the patriarchs as well as he. And still, as ver. 1, he would overcome that stubborn people with civility, heaping up coals of fire on their heads, Rom. xii. 20, that they might be melted, and then formed after a more excellent manner.

6 And 'it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

As lightning it suddenly encompassed him. But see chap. ix., from the 3rd verse; where this history is set down by St. Luke. And here little more can be taken notice of, than some small variety in the expressions.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

Saul, Saul; as men that call another earnestly repeat his name; as when the angel of the Lord called Abraham, Abraham, Gen. xxii. 11.

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

I am Jesus of Nazareth; that contemned (though not contemptible) name is owned by Christ from heaven, that they might not be ashamed when they were reproached by it on earth. Of the rest, see chap. ix. 5.

m ch. 9. 7.
Dan. 10. 7. 9 And <sup>m</sup> they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

Of this, see chap. ix. 7. This may be added to what was formerly said, that the men who travelled with Paul may be said not to have heard the voice of him that spake, because they did not understand it, or obey it; they were not converted, as Paul was, by it; the Hebrew language putting hearing for obeying, as in many scriptures; and both St. Paul, who here spake, and Luke, who penned this history, understood exactly the proprieties of that tongue.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

See chap. ix. 6. Such things as Ananias told him from Christ, were as if Christ himself had told him them; and by Ananias our Saviour satisfied St. Paul's question, What shall I do, Lord?

11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

I could not see for the glory of that light; the excellency of the object overpowering his sight. It was a strange work of God that enabled St. Stephen to see Christ, who is now so glorious, chap. vii. 55. And it will be according to God's wonderful power, when at the resurrection we shall be enabled to look upon Christ in his greatest glory. Behold the goodness and severity of God upon Paul: severity upon him in striking of him with blindness in his body; but goodness indeed to him, in enlightening, converting, and saving of his soul.

n ch. 9. 17. 12 And <sup>n</sup> one Ananias, a devout man <sup>o</sup> according to the law, <sup>o</sup> having a good report <sup>p</sup> 1 Tim. 3. 7. of all the <sup>p</sup> Jews which dwelt there,

According to the law; this is added to distinguish him from a proselyte, and to let them know that he had received the gospel, not from a convert out of Gentilism, (who though they admitted, yet they had a greater jealousy over, and less kindness for,) but from one like unto themselves in all things.

13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

Stood; that in this posture he might more conveniently put his hands upon Paul; which we read that he now did, chap. ix. 17, and was ordinarily done upon the miraculous curing of any. The same hour; or, as chap. ix. 18, immediately. The suddenness of the cures spake the power from whence they came: none but God saves and delivers after this manner.

q ch. 3. 13.
& 3. 30.
r ch. 9. 15.
22. 15.
s 1 Cor. 9.
1. & 15. 8.
t ch. 3. 14.
4. 7. 52.
u 1 Cor. 11.
23. Gal. 1.
12. 14 And he said, <sup>q</sup> The God of our fathers <sup>r</sup> hath chosen thee, that thou shouldst <sup>s</sup> know his will, and <sup>t</sup> see <sup>t</sup> that Just One, and <sup>u</sup> shouldst hear the voice of his mouth.

The God of our fathers; nothing could please the people better than to hear God so styled; for this they gloried in, above all things, that they and theirs had God to their Father, John viii. 41. And nothing could better suit St. Paul's purpose, who would not lie under that scandal of endeavouring an apostacy from the Jewish religion, (for the gospel which he preached was but the substance and perfection of the law,) or that he served or worshipped any other God than the God of Abraham. Hath chosen thee; he hath taken thee, as by the hand, and by his wonderful providence brought thee into that condition in which thou art. See that Just One; Christ is the Holy One, spotless and without blemish; God's righteous servant, Isa. liiii. 11. But this is here the rather spoken, that he might convince them of their sin in putting our Lord to death: for though he sweetened his speech to them in what he might, he would not flatter them to their destruction; like a skilful surgeon, he would not heal too fast. Now Paul saw Christ with the eye of his mind, it being enlightened to believe in him; and he saw him in his journey also with the eyes of his body. Some read, τὸ, not τὸν δίκαιον. And then Ananias tells St. Paul, that he was sent to show him that which was just and right in God's sight; which he, being blinded by his zeal for the law, could not perceive.

15 <sup>x</sup> For thou shalt be his witness unto <sup>x</sup> ch. 23. 11. all men of <sup>y</sup> what thou hast seen and <sup>y</sup> ch. 4. 20. heard. <sup>z</sup> 28. 16.

His witness; the apostles were in a more special manner Christ's witnesses; as Luke xxiv. 48; John i. 7; Acts i. 8; God giving them extraordinary gifts, not for their own sakes chiefly, but to profit others withal; as the tree bears not fruit, nor the field yields its increase, for itself. Of what thou hast seen and heard; not that St. Paul's commission extended only to the publishing this wonder at his conversion: for he was intrusted with the gospel, and had that treasure in his earthen vessel: but this miracle is expressly mentioned, because it was unto him and others a great confirmation of the truths which he believed himself, and recommended to the faith of others. And therefore in the course of his ministry he mentions this frequently; as here in this place, and before king Agrippa, chap. xxvi. 16; and 1 Cor. ix. 1; as also 1 Cor. xv. 8.

16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, <sup>z</sup> and wash away thy <sup>z</sup> ch. 2. 28. sins, <sup>a</sup> calling on the name of the Lord. <sup>a</sup> Heb. 10. 22. <sup>b</sup> Rom. 10. 13.

Wash away thy sins; as washing canseth the spots to disappear, and to be as if they had not been, Isa. i. 18; so does pardoning mercy, or remission of sins, which accompanieth baptism, as in the due receiver, Matt. iii. 11; 1 Pet. iii. 21, 22. Where true faith is, together with the profession of it by baptism, there is salvation promised, Mark xvi. 16. In the mean while it is not the water, (for that only signifies,) but it is the blood of Christ, which is thereby signified, that cleanseth us from our sins, as 1 John i. 7. Yet sacraments are not empty and deceitful signs; but God accompanieth his own ordinances with his power from on high, and makes them effectual for those great things for which he instituted and appointed them. Calling on the name of the Lord; Christ, to whom by baptism he was to be dedicated.

17 And <sup>b</sup> it came to pass, that, when <sup>b</sup> ch. 9. 28. I was come again to Jerusalem, even <sup>c</sup> 2 Cor. 12. 2. while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

This was probably about three years after his conversion, as Gal. i. 18, and was one of the visions and revelations he makes mention of, 2 Cor. xii. 1. A trance; a rapture and ecstasy, as chap. x. 10.

18 And <sup>c</sup> saw him saying unto me, <sup>c</sup> ver. 14. <sup>d</sup> Make haste, and get thee quickly out of <sup>d</sup> Mat. 10. 14. Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

Get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; this St. Paul takes notice of, that it might appear unto the Jews that he did not out of choice, or because he bare a grudge against them, decline them, and preach to the Gentiles. For they will not receive thy testimony concerning me; as if Christ had said, They who were appointed unto life, and were curable, are already cured; but the rest who are hardened, nothing remains for them but utter destruction.

19 And I said, Lord, <sup>e</sup> they know that I <sup>e</sup> ver. 4. imprisoned and <sup>f</sup> beat in every synagogue <sup>f</sup> ch. 8. 3. <sup>f</sup> Mat. 10. 17. them that believed on thee:

This was Paul's objection which he made against the will of God concerning his leaving Jerusalem, and the Jews in it; and shows how apt carnal reason is in the very best men to set up itself against the wisdom of God, and to argue for what we fancy best to be done, or left undone. The sum of his reasoning is this, That he was most likely to do more good amongst the Jews than amongst the Gentiles, whither God was sending of him, because the Jews knew how zealous he had been not only to observe the law himself, but to procure its observation by all others; and that it was no less than a miracle which changed his mind about it. He shows also by this his great love unto the Jews, whom he would have staid with, had it been at his choice, and did only remove from by God's command.

g ch. 7. 55.

20 <sup>a</sup>And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and <sup>b</sup>consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

h Luke 11. 48. ch. 8. 1. Rom. 1. 32.

Martyr is a Greek word, that signifies a witness; and is here, and since by the ecclesiastical writers, appropriated unto such as suffer death for the testimony they give to the truths of God, or doctrine of the gospel. Consenting unto his death; as chap. viii. 1. Of them that slew him; that is, of the witnesses against Stephen, as chap. vii. 58. For the witnesses did slay him not only by the testimony which they gave against him, but they were to be the first who stoned him. Slew him; or murdered him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart: 'for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

l 16. Gal. 1. 15, 16. & 2. 7, & Eph. 3. 7, & 1 Tim. 2. 7, 2 Tim. 1. 11.

God repeats his command, and by that answers all Paul's reasonings; whatsoever the event be, whether the Gentiles will hear, or whether they will forbear, he must go unto them. When the will of God is manifest we must do it, whatsoever success we are like to have. I will send thee far hence; this was verified; God sent Paul, and he went very far, as appears, chap. ix. 15; Rom. xv. 19; Gal. i. 17; ii. 8.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, 'Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that <sup>1</sup> he should live.

k ch. 21. 36.

l ch. 25. 24.

They gave him audience unto this word; they had heard all the rest of St. Paul's discourse without any gainsaying, either thinking it did not much concern them whether it were true or false, or else, being convinced of the truth of it, they were silent; but when the mercy of God unto any but themselves is mentioned, they are not able to bear with it. Though they themselves refused the offers of God's mercy, yet they could not endure that it should be tendered unto others; especially that others should be preferred before them in the tendering of it. Away with such a fellow from the earth; that is, Kill him; encouraging one another to so barbarous a murder, or exciting their rulers unto it.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air,

Cast off their clothes; they that stoned the blasphemer cast off their upper garments, that they might be the readier to do that execution, and carry the heavier stones; as chap. vii. 58. They might also cast or rend them off, in sign of grief and detestation of Paul's (supposed) blasphemy. Threw dust into the air; out of raging madness, having no stones at present in that place to throw at him; or stamping on the ground first with their feet, and taking thence the loosened earth, threw it up, to show that Paul had sinned against heaven, and provoked the God who dwells there; and that he was not worthy to tread on the earth, which, as well as they could, they took from him.

24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

The chief captain; of whom, chap. xxi. 31. The castle, or fort, called Antonia, as chap. xxi. 34. By scourging; or torturing, (being put to the question, as the French expression is, agreeable to the Greek word here used,) which went no further than by scourging; which was for this purpose used upon the blessed body of our Saviour, Matt. xxvii. 26. The chief captain took it for granted that he was some notorious malefactor whom all cried out against injuriously, accounting vox populi to be vox Dei; and because in that confusion he could not know the certainty from his accusers, he would wrest a confession out of St. Paul, whom they accused.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, <sup>m</sup>Is it lawful for you to scourge a <sup>n</sup> man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

They bound him with thongs; they who were to be scourged were bound to a post or column (amongst the Jews) of a cubit and a half high, inclining downwards upon it; and these thongs were such wherewith they bound Paul to this column or pillar; and with such also they intended to scourge him. Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned? that is, it is not lawful to scourge a Roman; much less, uncondemned; see on chap. xvi. 37. This latter, the laws of no nation that was civilized did ever allow.

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

There were several centurions under one chief captain, or chiliarch, as there are several captains under one colonel; and this centurion might be deputed to examine Paul. The reason why they presently desisted from binding Paul, and informed the commander-in-chief of what he had alleged, might be, because as it was very penal to challenge this privilege falsely, so it was treason for any to deny it to such to whom it was due.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

It is very reasonable that a good man should make use of such lawful privileges as the place in which he lives doth afford, and in his condition may be allowed. And it is part of that wisdom our Saviour does recommend, if it does not destroy the innocence of the dove, Matt. x. 16.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.

The historian relates, that the emperor Claudius sold this privilege to such foreigners as had not by any notable service merited to have it conferred upon them. At first it cost them very much to obtain it, as it did this chief captain; but afterwards it was more cheap and contemptible. I was free born; though Paul was born of Hebrew parents, yet he was born at Tarsus, to the natives of which town Augustus had given this privilege, for the assistance that the citizens afforded him in his wars with Brutus and Cassius; or, as some will have it, for favouring of Julius Cæsar, this privilege was granted unto that place by him; and they, on the other side, to continue the sense of his favour, caused their town to be called Juliopolis, or the city of Julius.

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

<sup>l</sup> Or, tortured him.

They departed from him, who had bound him, and would have scourged him. The chief captain also was afraid; the crime of breaking the privileges of the Roman citizens being accounted no less than treason, and a sin, as they called it, against the majesty of that people; as afterwards it was as great an offence against their emperors.

30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the Chief Priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

He loosed him from his bands; that he might not continue, after knowledge, in that (accounted) crime of binding a Roman citizen; as also that Paul might speak with the greater liberty and freedom in his own defence. The chief priests; the chief of the four and twenty courses amongst the priests, according to their families, or such as in place and dignity did excel in the sanhedrim.

CHAP. XXIII

Paul, pleading his integrity, is smitten at the command of the high priest, whom he reproveth of injustice, 1—5. By declaring himself a Pharisee, and questioned for the hope of the resurrection, he causeth a division in the council, 6—9. He is carried back to the castle, and encouraged by the Lord in a vision, 10, 11. A conspiracy against him is discovered to the chief captain, 12—22; who sendeth him under a guard with a letter to Felix the governor at Cæsarea, 23—35.

AND Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, <sup>a</sup> I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

Said, Men and brethren; acknowledging himself to have descended from the patriarchs as well as they; and bespeaks, as much as he could, their favour and attention. I have lived in all good conscience; not that he thought himself to have been without sin or fault, for he acknowledges and bewails his captivity to the law of sin, Rom. vii. 23, 24; but that he was not conscious to himself of any notorious impiety (as sacrilege, which they accused him of); nay, he had not suffered willingly any sin to be, much less to reign, in him. And as for his persecuting of the Christians, he did it not to flatter any with it, or upon any sinister design whatsoever, but thinking to serve God by it, 1 Tim. i. 13. Before God; in the sense of God's seeing of him, and whom St. Paul acknowledges to be the searcher and knower of the heart and conscience.

2 And the High Priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him <sup>b</sup> to smite him on the mouth.

Them that stood by him; the officers, probably. To smite him on the mouth; thus Micaiah was smote by Zedekiah the false prophet, 1 Kings xxii. 24, and Jeremiah by Pashur, Jer. xx. 2; and our blessed Lord escaped not this suffering and indignity, John xviii. 22. Now this was the rather inflicted on Paul, because of his protesting of his innocency, which did reflect upon the council, as being injurious; but it was indeed no more than what was necessary in his own just defence, and for the glory of the gospel.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and <sup>c</sup> commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

Thou whited wall; an excellent similitude to represent wicked men, especially hypocrites, by, who counterfeit God's glory and worship, whilst they intend only their own profit or grandeur. Thus our Saviour compared the scribes and Pharisees unto whited sepulchres, Matt. xxiii. 27. Whited sepulchres and walls, though they seem fair and comely, have within nothing but rottenness and useless rubbish. Now these words are not to be looked upon as a curse or imprecation upon the high priest, which does not consist with the temper of the gospel; but they are rather to be taken as a prophecy or prediction, St. Paul having on occasion had the gift of prophecy amongst the other gifts of the Holy Ghost. And accordingly it is observed, that this high priest either died, or was put out of his place, soon after. And thus Paul's imprecation upon Alexander the copper-smith, mentioned 2 Tim. iv. 14, is to be understood; as also several other curses (seemingly wished) by holy men, especially in the Psalms, as Psal. cix. 6, 7, &c., and many other places, which are by no means for our imitation; neither were they spoken so much as the wishes or prayers of such as uttered them, as their prophecies or predictions; which we know came to pass; as that now mentioned was fulfilled in the person of Judas. Contrary to the law; it was contrary to all law, Divine and human, that any should be punished before that he was heard; and especially to their own judicial law, which in matters of this nature they were yet governed by under the Romans. Now the Jews were first to hear and inquire diligently, whether the matter any were accused of were true, before they might give sentence, or inflict any punishment upon them, Deut. xvii. 4.

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's High Priest?

These partial parasites take no notice of the real injury done unto Paul by the high priest, and readily catch at the seeming calumny spoke by Paul against him.

5 Then said Paul, <sup>d</sup> I wist not, brethren, that he was the High Priest: for it is written, <sup>e</sup> Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest; Paul does not here ironically say this, because the high priest had, contrary to his place and office, caused him to be smitten; but either, 1. Because he knew now no high priest on earth, but only Christ in heaven to be our High Priest, Heb. viii. 1. Or rather, 2. Because the high priests being so often changed, (insomuch as in one year sometimes they have had three,) and they being in a confusion at this time, and not meeting or sitting in their due place and order, Paul might very well be ignorant who that was, who in such a multitude had commanded that they should smite him. Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people; the scripture here cited by St. Paul, is Exod. xxii. 28.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, <sup>f</sup> I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: <sup>g</sup> of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

I am a Pharisee; in his former profession, opinion, and conversation; and now also in the points that were controverted betwixt them: and St. Paul, with his dove-like innocency, does in this but make use of the serpentine subtlety, to preserve himself, and to gain credit unto the truths of the gospel. The son of a Pharisee; the son of Pharisees, in the plural; either for several descents his ancestors had been of that sect; or that both his father and his mother were of it. Of the hope and resurrection; or, for the hope of the resurrection; an hendyadis: although he did not agree with the Pharisees in all their opinions, yet in this he did; and the resurrection was the common subject he preached upon: and the gospel does give us the best proof and evidence of it; insomuch that Paul was taxed for preaching Jesus and the resurrection, chap. xvii. 18; and unless there be a resurrection, his preaching was vain, and his faith vain, 1 Cor. xv. 13, 14.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a division between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

Not only of the common people, or standers-by, but of the senators and judges; God by this means dividing and infatuating of them, that they could not bring about Paul's intended destruction.

8 <sup>h</sup> For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: <sup>i</sup> but the Pharisees confess both.

The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection; against this our Saviour argued, Matt. xxii. 23, &c. Neither angel; it seems strange that they should deny that there were angels, whereas they owned the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses, in which mention is made frequently of angels: but it seems that they understood those places allegorically, either for good instincts, or apparitions caused by God to manifest his mind by them unto men, wresting those places to their own destruction. Nor spirit; they denied the existence of the soul of man, as different from the crasis and temperament of his body; and therefore believed that the soul perished with the body. Nay, they were so far from believing there was any spirit, that they held, blasphemously, that God himself was corporeal. But the Pharisees confess both; the three things here mentioned, which the Sadducees denied, may be well spoken of as but two, viz. the resurrection and the existence of spirits. When men sin with much obstinacy against supernatural light, God justly withdraws from them even natural light, and they are

<sup>a</sup> ch. 16. 34.
<sup>b</sup> 1 Cor. 4. 4.
<sup>c</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 12.
<sup>d</sup> 4. 2.
<sup>e</sup> 2 Tim. 1. 3.
<sup>f</sup> Heb. 12. 18.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Kings
22. 24.
<sup>h</sup> Jer. 20. 2.
<sup>i</sup> John 18. 22.

<sup>e</sup> Lev. 19. 35.
<sup>f</sup> Deut. 22. 1.
<sup>g</sup> 2. John 7.
<sup>h</sup> 61.

<sup>d</sup> ch. 24. 17.
<sup>e</sup> Ex. 22. 28.
<sup>f</sup> Eccles. 10.
<sup>g</sup> 20. 3. Psal. 2.
<sup>h</sup> 10. Job 2.

<sup>f</sup> ch. 26. 5.
<sup>g</sup> Phil. 3. 6.
<sup>h</sup> g. ch. 24. 15.
<sup>i</sup> 21. & 26. 6.
<sup>j</sup> & 28. 20.

<sup>h</sup> Mat. 22. 23.
<sup>i</sup> Mark 12. 18.
<sup>j</sup> Luke 20. 27.

punished (as the Egyptians were) with such darkness which may be felt, Exod. x. 21.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the Scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, 'We find no evil in this man: but <sup>1</sup>if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, <sup>1</sup>let us not fight against God.

Scribe is a name denoting an office or place; and the scribes were men skilled in the law. A spirit or an angel; some take the latter to be exegetical of the former, and that by a spirit is only meant an angel; by such messengers God many times sending his messages to the children of men. Yet others by spirit understand prophetic revelation, and the Spirit of prophecy, which was expected to be shed abroad in large measures about that time; as appears, John vii. 39. Let us not fight against God: see chap. v. 39.

10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

A great dissension: fouds about pretended religion are usually among all men very sharp, because their opinions, being the issues of their own brains, are more beloved than their children, the fruit of their bodies. Commanded the soldiers to go down; from the fort or castle, unto which there was an ascent or stair, to go up and down by.

11 And <sup>m</sup>the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

The Lord stood by him; in a revelation appearing inwardly to his mind; which is the rather thought to have been so, because it is here said to have been in the night; but whether by vision or revelation, it is all one as to this purpose, and neither were unfrequent unto Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 1. Be of good cheer: so true it is what our Saviour had promised and foretold, John xvi. 33, In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace.

12 And when it was day, <sup>n</sup>certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves <sup>o</sup>under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

If they did not kill Paul before they did eat or drink any more, they wished that they might become a cherem, or anathema; as Jericho and the inhabitants thereof were, being devoted to utter ruin and destruction. Or, if they did not execute this their wicked design, they would yield themselves to be anathematized, or excommunicated, as those that had broken their pact or agreement.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

They made themselves sure (they thought) of killing Paul; there were above forty to one. The church's enemies are unanimous and resolute. As David formerly, so might now Paul say, They that are mad against me are sworn against me, Psal. cii. 8.

14 And they came to the Chief Priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

They came to the chief priests and elders, whose place and office it was to have dissuaded such an abominable murder: For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, Mal. ii. 7. And they could not but have been guilty of the blood of St. Paul, had it been shed, who by encouraging the design became accessory unto it. But they had drank blood very largely before now; viz. the blood of St. Stephen, and the blood of our Saviour; and it is no wonder that they thirst for more: such wild beasts, (rather than men,) when they have once tasted of blood, are never satisfied with it. But at what a low ebb was religion, when the chief priests themselves combine with assassins!

15 Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would enquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

Ye with the council; the chief priests are to join with the council in this desire to the chief captain; for they had no authority to command him. As though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: the plot against Paul's life was laid very deep, and not easily to be discovered; it being usual to send for prisoners to re-examine them, especially when religion and the public peace are concerned, as they pretended that here they were. Or ever he come near: the space between the castle and the place where the council met, being considerable, it gave the greater advantage to the conspirators.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

Paul's sister's son, who is thought to have been one of Paul's company: but the hatred against Paul by the Jews being so general, because of his (supposed) profaning of the temple, they were not so curious who they spake to of this confederacy and design. Or rather, there is no counsel against God: the very birds of the air, if need were, shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter, Eccles. x. 20. For he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision, Psal. ii. 4.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

The chief captain having the command of a thousand soldiers, there were ten captains under him: one of these Paul intrusts with his message to the chief captain, not making any particular request unto the chief captain, supposing him to have so much of the Roman justice in him, that when he understood his case, he would provide for his safety; which he was not mistaken in.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

The centurion took Paul's kinsman, and went with him, as he was desired, unto the chief captain, that there might be no mistake, but that he might hear all out of the young man's own mouth, and be the more affected with it. The prisoner, or, the chained; for it was customary to chain their prisoners for their greater security. And God is now remembering of Paul in his bonds.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

He took him by the hand, as a token of courtesy; these commanders showing an excellent example of humanity and pity towards their inferiors and supposed criminals. There are several reasons given of this great civility here used, as the chief captain's naturally meek temper; or his policy to satisfy for the injury he had done to Paul, in binding him, being a Roman; nay, some think that he, as well as Felix the governor, hoped for money to be given unto him, chap. xxiv. 26: but all these are but guesses. It is sure, whatever any of these causes were or were not, God is to be seen and acknowledged in it, who hath the hearts of all men in his hands, and turneth them as it pleaseth him, Prov. xxi. 1.

20 And he said, *The Jews have agreed <sup>o</sup>ver. 12. to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would enquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

The Jews; both the council, and those forty and upwards spoken of, ver. 12, 13.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

Do not thou yield unto them; this the young man desires out of his care for his uncle's (Paul's) preservation, as also touched with the horror of the fact if it should have been executed; and howsoever, by this means he delivers his own soul, having done his utmost to hinder it. Now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee; the match is laid, the hand is as it were lifted up, nothing is wanting to Paul's destruction but the chief captain's consent, which the Jews assuredly expected, it being but a small courtesy to grant them, to examine a prisoner, especially such a one as upon their complaint was committed in a case cognizable by them: but, Deus e machina, Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us, Isa. viii. 10.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me.

The chief captain shows by this his care, both for St. Paul, and for the young man too; for had it been known that he had discovered their conspiracy, they would have sought his life, and might divers ways have taken it away; and as for Paul, being disappointed in this, they would have made other attempts against him.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cæsarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

Make ready two hundred soldiers; two hundred were the usual proportion or number of men which were under the two centurions; so that they were commanded to have their companies in readiness. And horsemen threescore and ten; horsemen being usually added for defence of their foot-soldiers. Spearmen, as they are called here, were such as handled, or threw, their javelins or darts with their right hand. Some think them to have been such as our sergeants, who take men into custody; others, that they were soldiers raised out of foreign nations, and lightly armed. At the third hour of the night; partly because in those hot countries it is very troublesome to travel by day, and partly for the greater security of Paul and such as went with him.

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

What a strong guard and retinue does God by his providence get together for the safe-guarding of Paul! None of all these intended the least good unto him; but God can make use of them as effectually as if they had had the greatest good will for him.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

It is not certain whether the following words were the letter itself, or only the sum or contents of the letter.

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting.

Most excellent; a title given to persons of great eminency, as, Luke i. 3, it is given to Theophilus, unto whom also this book of the Acts is inscribed, chap. i. 1. This Felix was brother to one Pallas, who together with Narcissus (the other of the emperor Claudius's favourites) managed all public affairs, and are by the historians branded for all the mischiefs of that calamitous time. This Felix and his brother Pallas were born slaves, and manumitted by Claudius, and were such as are exalted; as often Providence will show the power it hath in pulling down and setting up whom it pleaseth.

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

He represents Paul's case fairly and indifferently, God overruling his heart and pen; but withal, he conceals his binding of him, and instead thereof magnifies his care of him, being a Roman; and probably being touched with a sense of his fault, he represents Paul's case the better.

28 And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council:

The council understanding those questions (as he thought) best, and having yet retained some power from the Romans concerning them.

29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

According to the Roman laws, or imperial constitutions. That he undervalued the great things in question concerning our blessed Saviour's death and resurrection, and the whole gospel, it is not to be wondered at; he spake and wrote as a pagan; and God overruled his very slighting of these controversies for Paul's advantage, he being by that means preserved from the rage of his enemies.

30 And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.

The Jews laid wait for the man; this reflects upon the Jews, as being seditious, and ready to attempt against the government; as also gives the governor an account why he troubled him with this prisoner, and why he sent so great a guard with him. Farewell; the usual prayer wherewith they ended their letters, as chap. xv. 29.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

Not that they came to Antipatris by night; but they began that journey by night, as ver. 23, and went as much of it as they could by night, for fear of being discovered, and attempted upon by the Jews. This Antipatris was built by Herod the Great, and so called in memory of his father Antipater; it was about seventeen leagues from Jerusalem, pleasantly situated upon the Mediterranean Sea, between Joppa and Cæsarea.

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle:

The footmen returned to the castle or fort of Antonia in Jerusalem, from whence they did set out, there being no fear of any such design upon Paul at that distance from Jerusalem, which the horsemen might not easily avoid.

33 Who, when they came to Cæsarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

Cæsarea; Cæsarea Stratonis, as it was called, to difference it from the other. They presented Paul, as being their charge, whom they had safely kept, and now delivered according to appointment.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia;

He asked of what province he was; Palestine and the countries thereabouts being divided into several heptarchies or jurisdictions, the governors were very loth to infringe the limits of one another. Of Cilicia; a country in Asia Minor, in which was Tarsus where Paul was born, and from his birth-place he is reckoned to belong to that province.

<sup>7</sup> ch. 24. 1.
<sup>10.</sup> & <sup>25.</sup> 16.

35 'I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.

I will hear thee thoroughly, the whole matter, as the proposition vid., here used, does import; and as it is commanded unto all judges, Deut. i. 16. When thine accusers are also come; for this the dictate of nature did teach the very heathen, that both parties ought to be heard before any thing were determined: Qui aliquid statuerit parte inaudita altera: That whosoever pronounced any sentence before both sides were fully heard, were the sentence never so just, yet the judge was unjust. Herod's judgment-hall; a palace where the governors were lodged, built by Herod the Great, when, in honour, or flattery, of Augustus, after he had fortified the city, he caused it to be called Cesarea.

CHAP. XXIV

Paul is accused before Felix by Tertullus in the name of the Jews, 1—9. He answereth in defence of his life and doctrine, 10—21. The hearing is deferred, 22, 23. Paul preaching freely before the governor and his wife; Felix trembleth, 24, 25. Felix hopeth for a bribe to release Paul, but in vain; and going out of his office leaveth him bound, 26, 27.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 21. 27. <sup>b</sup> And after five days <sup>b</sup> Ananias the High Priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

After five days, from the time that Paul was come to Cæsarea: the malice and fury of the persecutors was very great, they stick not at any travail and pains to do mischief; and surely we ought to be as earnest in doing good, or their zeal will condemn us. A certain orator; a lawyer to form the indictment against Paul, or to aggravate his fault, and to desire judgment upon him. Such advocates usually were the chiefest orators, as Demosthenes in Greece, and Cicero at Rome; and Tertullus seems to have been a crafts-master, whom the Jews hired to draw up an accusation against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

When he was called forth; when Paul was sent for to appear, being under the custody of the soldiers who brought him to Cæsarea. Seeing that by thee, &c.: it being one of the rules of art, which an orator seldom forgets, to endeavour to obtain the judge's favour, Tertullus commends Felix, who indeed had delivered that country from some robbers (like banditti, or moss-troopers) that did infest it; but is commended for little else amongst the historians, who brand him for extraordinary covetousness and cruelty.

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

We accept it; we commend and admire it. It is most certain, that inferiors enjoy many benefits by the means of their governors, who bear the burden for the people, watching and caring for them; and that a bad government is better than none; and therefore not only Tertullus, (who may well be thought to speak out of flattery,) but St. Paul himself, ver. 10, speaks with great respect unto Felix.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

Be not further tedious unto thee; hinder thee, or take thee away from other occasions: this is another artifice of an orator, to promise brevity, especially when he speaks to men of employment or business.

<sup>c</sup> Luke 23. 2. <sup>d</sup> For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes:

A pestilent fellow; a pest, or plague, the abstract being put for the concrete, as implying, that no word he could use could properly signify the mischievousness of that man, whom he falsely charges with sedition (not that the Jews would have disliked him for that, had it been true, but) to make St. Paul the more odious, and in danger of his life. The sect, or heresy, which in common use was then taken more favourably, for any doctrine. Of the Nazarenes; of the Christians; for they who out of Judea were called Christians, in Judea were called Nazarenes. The Jews did call our Saviour and his followers thus, it being accounted an ignominious term; and they who were born at Nazareth disgraced by it, as appears by Nathanael's question. Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? John i. 46. Yet this name is most glorious, as imposed upon our Saviour by God himself, Matt. ii. 23.

6 <sup>d</sup> Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law.

Hath gone about to profane the temple; by bringing into the temple (as they falsely suggested) uncircumcised persons: but Tertullus does not mention this, or show in what Paul had profaned the temple; for Felix himself being uncircumcised, it would have reflected upon him too much, to be accounted, by the Jews, amongst such profane ones, as were enough to defile their temple and worship. Would have judged according to our law; they had a law, it seems, whereby it was death to bring strangers into the temple; and some think, that by the Romans they had yet power allowed them to put it in execution: see chap. xxi. 28. And this was their aim all along, viz. to take away his life.

7 <sup>e</sup> But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

So they call the bringing of soldiers, to hinder them from acting violently; and as far as they dare, they accuse Lysias, whom they thought not to favour them.

8 <sup>g</sup> Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.

By examining of whom; not that the Jews would have any witnesses produced, and fairly examined; but the pronoun being singular, it refers to Paul, whom Tertullus would have examined, and put to the question, or racked, that he might confess what they would have had him guilty of: or it is as if he had said, (so impudent is impiety,) that Paul himself could not deny (if he were asked) the accusation which was brought against him.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

The high priest, and the rest of the senate that came with him, acknowledged (as the manner was) that Tertullus had spoken their sense, and what they had to say; and some think that this their assent went further, and that they offered themselves as witnesses to the truth of what he had said.

10 Then Paul; after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself:

Beckoned unto him, by some sign with his hand. Though St. Paul would not flatter Felix with notorious untruths, as Tertullus had done, yet he speaks very respectfully, and mentions his continuance in the government; the rather, because, if he had been so seditious a person as Tertullus would have represented him to have been, Felix could not but have heard of him, and of any mischief that had been done by him.

11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

That thou mayest understand, either by what thou hast

<sup>e</sup> Luke 23. 2.
<sup>f</sup> ch. 6. 13. &
<sup>g</sup> 16. 20. & 17.
<sup>h</sup> 6. & 21. 28.
<sup>i</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 12, 15.

A. D. 53.
Felix made procurator over Judæa.

<sup>j</sup> ver. 17.
<sup>k</sup> ch. 21. 26.

heard already, or by what the witnesses, when examined, will declare. There are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem; there were but twelve days since Paul's coming to Jerusalem; seven of them he had spent there, until the time of his purification was accomplished; and the other five days he had been in custody, and at Cæsarea: by which St. Paul proves how unlikely it was, that in so short a time he, being a stranger in those parts, should raise any tumults. For to worship; he being so far from designing any mischief, that he only intended to worship God.

1 ch. 25. 6.
2 28. 17.

12 <sup>1</sup>And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city:

Disputing, or discoursing. Although it seems not to have been unlawful, after the sacrifices were offered, to discourse about the meaning of any place in the law or the prophets; for thus our Saviour is said to have heard and asked questions of the doctors in the temple, Luke ii. 46; yet St. Paul would hereby show how far he was from doing aught that was unlawful, in that he had forborne to go to the utmost of what might have been lawful.

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

They could not prove either of those crimes they charged him with, viz. 1. Raising of sedition; or, 2. Profaning of the temple, which they had accused him of.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after <sup>1</sup>the way which they call heresy, so worship I the <sup>1</sup>God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in <sup>m</sup>the Law and in the Prophets:

But this I confess; he makes here a good confession, and is indeed a follower of Christ, who before Pontius Pilate is said to have witnessed a good confession, 1 Tim. vi. 13. Heresy; this word is of a middle signification, being sometimes taken in a good sense, as chap. xxvi. 5, and thus the Greeks did use it sometimes when they spake of their philosophers; though the Jews called the doctrine of Christ so in the worst acceptation of the word; which doctrine this blessed apostle is not ashamed to own. Yet he does withal truly assert, that he worshipped no other God than the God of his fathers; but worshipped him whom Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (whom they so much gloried in) had worshipped; and that he had no other religion than what was taught in the law and the prophets, from whom they themselves had received theirs.

15 And <sup>a</sup>have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, <sup>a</sup>that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

Which they themselves also allow; the wiser sort amongst them, the Pharisees, (though bad was the best,) and yet they were not for this opinion persecuted by the Sadducees. A resurrection of the dead: the resurrection of the dead is again owned as the chief matter Paul preached upon, and in which all his other doctrines and opinions did centre, it being indeed the foundation of that faith and manners, 1 Cor. xv. 13, of that belief and holy life, which St. Paul preached up. Both of the just and unjust; that both sorts, even that all such, rise again at the last day, we have assurance given, Matt. xxv. 32, 33; John v. 28, 29; which was also foretold expressly unto the Jews, Dan. xii. 2, though it hath found so many since amongst them that have denied it.

1 ch. 23. 1.

16 And <sup>p</sup>herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

And herein; or at this time, and in this business; or for this reason, to wit, because I believe the resurrection. I exercise myself; I am altogether taken up with it; this is my one thing necessary, Luke x. 42. To have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men; that I may not offend God or man in any thing; but that I may be without blame at the judgment-seat of God or man. They only are blessed and happy, whose belief concerning another world makes them endeavour after holiness in this world.

17 Now after many years <sup>1</sup>I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

1 ch. 11. 29.
20. 24. 16.
Rom. 15. 25.
2 Cor. 8. 4.
Gal. 2. 10.

After many years; it is thought fourteen years, which we find mentioned, Gal. ii. 1; and therefore the more unlikely to have any seditious practices there, where he had so little acquaintance. I came to bring alms to my nation; and he was so far from designing mischief to his nation, that his charity to them put him upon this journey. And offerings; which in his condescension to the Jews, and hoping to gain their good will, he brought according to the law; as chap. xxi. 26. For whilst Jerusalem and the temple stood, those offerings were in a sort permitted; but God, in that general destruction of both city and temple, put an end to them all.

18 <sup>1</sup>Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

1 ch. 21. 26.
27. 28. 21.

Whereupon; upon my bringing up those alms now mentioned; whilst I was employed for the good of my countrymen who now accuse me. Purified in the temple: performing all things which the law did require of Nazarites, or those who had made a vow, and in which their legal purification did consist. Neither with multitude, nor with tumult; the multitude was of their own gathering together; and the tumult, if any, was made by themselves. It is no new thing that Christians should be charged with those mischiefs which their enemies themselves did to make them odious.

19 <sup>1</sup>Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me.

1 ch. 23. 20.
24. 10.

Who ought to have been here; the Jews of Asia, who had caused all this stir, having seen Trophimus with Paul in the streets of Jerusalem, and maliciously presuming that he had brought him into the temple with him. Now these were the only proper witnesses, who might therefore be now absent, because they could testify nothing to the purpose, and when they thought seriously upon it, their consciences might accuse them for the clamour they had made against the apostle, chap. xxi. 28. As for the other Jews, they could only testify by hearsay, which is not sufficient.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council,

St. Paul is willing to allow the present Jews' testimony about such things as they could know, having themselves heard and seen them; which was what passed in the council when Paul was brought before it, chap. xxiii. 1, 9. The sense of a Deity was more quick upon men; and they might then be trusted under the security of an oath.

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, <sup>1</sup>Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

1 ch. 23. 6.
24. 10.

As if he had said, Let their object, if they can, any other fault: but if this be a fault, to hold the resurrection of the dead, I do acknowledge it, and there need no other proof concerning it: not that he held any evil to be in this opinion; but he speaks ironically, knowing that they durst not renew their quarrel about it.

22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When <sup>1</sup>Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

1 ver. 7.

Some understand by that way, 1. The custom or manner of the priests to calumniate Paul; or, 2. The religion of Moses, and how and in what it differed from the religion of Christ: either of which Felix might know, and by either of them conclude Paul to be innocent. But, 3. By that way, as frequently in this book, chap. ix. 2, and xxii. 4, is meant the Christian religion itself, which Felix, not only from Paul's apology, and Lysias's account of the whole matter, but by divers other means, (it having made so great a noise in the world,) could not be ignorant of. Some read, he deferred them till he could have a more perfect knowledge of that way, and till Lysias, the chief captain, should come down. For there being two things laid to Paul's charge; 1. His evil opinions in matters of religion; and, 2. His causing a sedition: as to the first, Felix would not determine it till he had had better information about those things which St. Paul was accused for to hold. As to the latter, it being matter of fact, which Lysias was present at, he would hear his testimony or evidence, looking upon him as one indifferent and unconcerned betwixt them.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and<sup>a</sup> that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 27. 3.
& 28. 16.

To let him have liberty; not so confined as to be kept in a dungeon, or more inward prison; but to have the liberty of the prison, yet so as with a chain about him; as appears, chap. xxvi. 29; xxviii. 20. Acquaintance; relations or disciples; for there was a church at Cæsarea, chap. x. 48; xxi. 8. When it is expedient for us, God can add the comforts of these outward enjoyments, relations and friends, unto us; and that his and our enemies shall contribute towards it.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

Felix came with his wife; having been out of town to meet and conduct his wife. Drusilla; who was daughter of Herod the Great, and sister of that Agrippa of whom mention is made in the two following chapters; a most libidinous woman, who had left her husband Aziz, and, whilst he yet lived, was married to this Felix, who was taken with her beauty. Yet Paul preached the faith in Christ, the gospel, unto such, not knowing what persons, or in what hour, God might call.

25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

These two, righteousness and temperance, the Christian religion do indispensably require; and all true worship without these, will not make up our most holy religion, or give to any the title of a religious or a holy man. But Paul chose rather to discourse of those than any other virtues, because Felix was most defective in them. He would lay his plaster where there was a sore, though it pained the patient, and he should get little thanks for his labour. Had great men but such faithful preachers, it might contribute very much to hinder them in their career of sin, and by that means help to mend the world. Temperance; or continence; the want of which is charged upon both these great persons, being taxed by historians for adultery; so that Paul preaches here as John Baptist did once to Herod, very suitably, though not gratefully. Yet in the discharge of his duty he meets with no trouble, not so much as a reproach, which probably the sense of the judgment to come might contribute to. Judgment to come; whatsoever is present, this is certainly to come: and the secret reflections that wicked men have upon it in the midst of their fullest enjoyments, mingle fears and terrors with them. Hence their surda vulnera, misgivings and inward guilt; as its contrary, the peace of God, passeth all understanding. Go thy way for this time; Felix, not liking such discourse, the subject being too quick and searching for him, put it off longer. And so men put off the consideration of their duties, and of the judgment that will pass upon every one according unto what he hath done in the flesh, till the Judge be, as it were, set, and their case called.

<sup>b</sup> Ex. 23. 8. 26 He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

This speaks the charge to be true that the historians give of Felix concerning his covetousness; for taking hold of that part of Paul's accusation, ver. 5, that he was the ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes, he supposed that, there being so many thousands of them, they would give large sums for the life and liberty of this their supposed captain. This did speak Felix (according to his birth) to be of a servile and base spirit, that for money could transgress the laws of God, and the Roman laws too.

27 But after two years Porcius Festus <sup>a. d. 62.</sup> came into Felix' room: and Felix, <sup>a. d. 62.</sup> willing to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul <sup>ch. 23. 3.</sup> bound. <sup>a. d. 62.</sup>

After two years, either from Paul's being in bonds, which history St. Luke is here setting down; or, as others, after Felix had been governor two years over Judea; for that St. Paul speaks, ver. 10, is not thought to have been true as to this place, though he had governed the neighbouring parts some years before. The Jews had accused Felix unto the emperor for his barbarous cruelty and exactions, inasmuch that had it not been for his brother Pallas (a great favourite) he had lost his life: yet he did not wholly escape punishment, but was sent bound by Festus, his successor, unto Nero. Sic transit gloria mundi; and, Man being in honour continueth not

CHAP. XXV

The Jews accuse Paul to Festus, first at Jerusalem, and afterwards at Cæsarea, 1—7. He answereth for himself, and appealeth to Cæsar; his appeal is admitted, 8—12. Festus being visited by king Agrippa openeth the matter to him, who desireth to hear Paul, 13—22. Paul is brought forth; Festus declareth he found nothing in him worthy of death, 23—27.

NOW when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cæsarea to Jerusalem.

Province; so the Romans called any country which they had conquered with their arms, and unto which they sent a governor, which at this time was Festus, being now set over Judea in Felix's room. Cæsarea had been the place of residence for the Roman governors, by reason of its strength and situation, chap. xxiii. 23.

2 <sup>a. ch. 24. 1.</sup> Then the High Priest and the chief <sup>ver. 11.</sup> of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

The chief of the Jews; the same who are called the elders, chap. xxiv. 1. Informed him against Paul; continued their accusation and prosecution of Paul. So restless is the rage and enmity, the adversaries of truth have against the professors of it.

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, <sup>b. ch. 23. 12.</sup> laying wait in the way to kill him.

Desired favour; though it seems to have been but justice, that they might be allowed to try Paul for such crimes as were within their cognizance; yet that they might the more easily obtain their desire, they beg it as a favour. Laying wait in the way to kill him; which did worse become magistrates and priests than any men, to act thus against the law of nature, and to be sure also against the law of the land, to hire ruffians to assassinate Paul.

4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

It is most probable that Festus had been informed by Felix of the Jews' malice against Paul; for Felix having been accused by the Jews unto the emperor, might be supposed to have recriminated wheresoever he had any opportunity; and in all the time of his government they were not guilty of a worse fact than their design against Paul, it being sedition, and intended murder of one who had the privilege of a Roman citizen. He himself would depart shortly thither; the governors kept their courts wheresoever they came.

5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this

c. ch. 18. 14. man, *if there be any wickedness in him.
ver. 18.

Which among you are able; fit to prosecute Paul in your behalf; as Tertullus was, whom the Jews had carried with them formerly, chap. xxiv. 1. Go down with me; because Jerusalem was in a mountainous part of the country, and much of it built upon a hill. Wickedness; the word properly signifies a foolish thing; but it is also taken for a wicked thing; all sin being folly, and grace wisdom; as they are frequently called in Scripture, though the world hath another opinion of them, many abhorring to be accounted for's, and yet care not though they appear most wicked.

6 And when he had tarried among them || more than ten days, he went down unto Cæsarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought.

More than ten days; the margin gives an account of a diverse reading, unto which might be added another, viz. eight or ten days; which reading many follow, and is according unto the usual expression of such a short space of time, which need not to be exactly set down. Thus though God hath provided so, as there is little or no variety in setting down those truths or doctrines in Scripture which concern faith and manners, or our believing and holy living; yet in circumstances which (though they pertain to complete the history or genealogies in Scripture) are not necessary to be so exactly known, God left them not so, designed to exercise us in this state, wherein we know but in part, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. Fundamental truths are not of such a depth but a lamb may wade or walk in them; but there are less material things of such a profundity, that an elephant may swim in them, and men of the highest understanding and deepest reach must cry out, ὦ βάθος.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, <sup>d</sup>and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.

When he was come; the judge sat, and the prisoner brought. The Jews which came down from Jerusalem; his accusers, which were many, and came with a full cry against him, stood round about him, or about the judgment-seat. Many and grievous complaints; what these accusations were, appears in the next verse by Paul's answer; but they could not demonstrate them, or make them evident; and if it were sufficient to accuse, no man could be innocent.

8 While he answered for himself, *Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

Paul answers unto the three crimes which he was charged with: 1. He had not offended against the law, having been always a religious observer of it: nor, 2. Against the temple, which he went into devoutly, and upon a religious account: nor, 3. Against Cæsar; having never taught any rebellion, nor said or done any thing against his government.

9 But Festus, <sup>f</sup>willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, <sup>g</sup>Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

Willing to do the Jews a pleasure; as his predecessor, Felix, before him, chap. xxiv. 27, to gain popular applause, and the good will of that nation; especially Felix having been displaced upon the complaint of the Jews against him. Answered, or spake to Paul; as chap. iii. 12. Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, &c.: Festus apparently inclines to favour the Jews, though he does not command, but ask this of Paul; he being privileged as a Roman, could not against his will be forced to acknowledge the Jews for competent judges.

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

Paul might justly suspect his judges, and the place where they would have him judged, and also his journey thither, knowing with what difficulty, and not without a great guard, he came from thence. I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat; he was now before Cæsar's tribunal, whose vicegerent Festus was; and he only ought to judge a Roman citizen. As thou very well knowest; Festus might know that Paul had done the Jews no wrong, from the relation Felix had made unto him, as also from such as were with Felix when Paul's case was heard.

11 <sup>h</sup>For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. <sup>i</sup>I appeal unto Cæsar.

If I be an offender; if I have injured the Jews, and my fault be worthy of death, such as by law deserves death, I beg no favour. No man may deliver me unto them; according to law, (which the Romans did punctually observe,) before sentence was passed. I appeal unto Cæsar: it was lawful for any that had that privilege of the Roman citizens, to appeal; neither might they be tried against their wills in any province out of Rome. Now Paul might appeal unto Cæsar, 1. To make Cæsar more favourable unto himself, and to other Christians. 2. Because he thought it more safe for himself and for the church. 3. He was in part admonished to do it by Christ himself, who had told him that he must bear witness of him at Rome, chap. xxiii. 11.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

Conferred with the council; either of the Jews, and those of the sanhedrim, that he might inform them of the law or custom of the Romans, and how that he could not but admit of St. Paul's appeal; or with his own council; it being usual with the Roman presidents to do nothing of moment without the advice of their council, or assistants. Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? or without an interrogation, Thou hast appealed unto Cæsar; which Festus was glad of, that without danger on the one hand, or ill-will on the other, he might get rid of that difficult business.

13 And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæsarea to salute Festus.

This Agrippa is called by Josephus, the younger, and was the son of Herod Agrippa, or Agrippa the Great, who in this book of the Acts is called Herod, whose death is mentioned, chap. xii. 23. But this Agrippa was brother to Drusilla and Bernice, here spoken of, and lived in incest with her, whom Juvenal in his satire speaks of:

Barbarus inceste dedit hunc Agrippa sorori.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, <sup>k</sup>There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king; either amongst common discourse, or matter of novelty, and for the strangeness of it, or for his advice about it. Howsoever, by this means the wickedness of the Jews was published, and the safety of St. Paul provided for, and God's design of publishing the gospel at Rome itself furthered.

15 <sup>l</sup>About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the Chief Priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

To wit, judgment of death upon Paul, that he might be sentenced according to the crimes they had laid against him; δικη being put for κατάδικη. Neither do they at all mind that St. Paul's case was not yet heard; they would rather have had him condemned unheard, as they had gotten our Saviour to be condemned, though the judge de-

|| Or, as some copies read, no more than eight or ten days.

d Mark 15. 3. Luke 23. 2. 10. ch. 24. 5, 13.

e ch. 6. 13. & 24. 12. & 28. 17.

f ch. 24. 27. g ver. 20.

h ver. 25. ch. 16. 14. & 23. 29. & 28. 31.

i ch. 26. 32. & 28. 19.

l ver. 2, 3.

clared that he found no fault in him, Luke xxiii. 4; which their unjust desire appears by Festus's answer.

<sup>m</sup> ver. 4, 5. 16 <sup>m</sup>To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

To condemn any man indicta causa, without sufficient cause alleged and proved, is not only against the laws of the Romans, but of the Jews, Deut. xvii. 4; nay, against the law of nature and of all nations. Yet malice had so far blinded the enemies of St. Paul, that they go about such things as a heathen reproves, and the very light of nature condemns.

<sup>n</sup> ver. 6. 17 Therefore, when they were come hither, <sup>n</sup> without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.

Festus had gratified the Jews in what lawfully he might, not detaining them at charges from their habitations: and that not only commends Festus's own justice, but Paul's innocence; for if Paul had not appeared guiltless, he would have left him to the rage of the Jews, whom he desired to gratify what he could.

18 Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed:

For Festus, knowing how Paul had been prosecuted by the Jews before Felix, and what charge they had been at, and what journeys they had made about him, he would not think less than that he was a capital offender.

<sup>o</sup> ch. 18. 15. & 23. 29. 19 <sup>o</sup> But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

Superstition; so this heathen governor profanely calls the religion and worship of God's own institution, and that in the presence of Agrippa and Bernice, who were both Jews, or, at least, brought up amongst them. To be alive; to have been raised again from the dead; acknowledging, with them, that he had been indeed dead.

<sup>i</sup> Or, I was doubtful how to enquire thereof. 20 And because || I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

Festus pretends, that he knew not by what rule those cases were to be decided, nor before what judges; whether before himself or the Jewish sanhedrim. But this is only his pretension: the true cause why he would not acquit Paul, though he knew him to be innocent, we read, ver. 9, viz. that he might do the Jews a pleasure. He asked Paul this question, Whether he would go to Jerusalem? but with a resolution to have sent him whether he would or no, had he not appealed; but then he durst not: for in certain cases none could hinder appeals, from any judge, to the people in the former times, or to their emperor in the latter times.

<sup>j</sup> Or, judgment. 21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the || hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

Augustus: the emperor who now reigned, and to whom Paul appealed, was Nero, who was called Augustus; this title being at first appropriated to Octavius, who succeeded Julius Cæsar; but out of honour unto him, or because of its signification, it became an appellative, and was given unto all the emperors successively: nay, the emperor of Germany to this day is called Semper Augustus. Cæsar: as from Octavius the emperors of Rome had the name of Augustus, so from the first emperor, Julius, they have the name of Cæsars. This word Cæsar, which was the proper name of the first emperor, is, in acknowledgment of him, made an appellative to all his successors.

<sup>p</sup> See ch. 9. 22 Then <sup>p</sup> Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

Agrippa being well acquainted with the Jewish religion, if not a Jew, could not but have heard of our Saviour, his doctrine, death, and resurrection; and yet makes this desire but out of curiosity; as Herod desired to hear John Baptist, Mark vi. 20, and to see our Saviour, Luke xxiii. 8.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth.

With great pomp; the state, attire, and retinue used in this solemnity is much undervalued by the term the Holy Ghost here gives it (φαιρασία); intimating, that all worldly glory is but in opinion and appearance merely, and that as a show it passeth away. Paul was brought forth; here is a great difference indeed between these great persons thus adorned and accompanied on the one side, and Paul, the prisoner, (δεσμιος, the chained, as he is called, chap. xxiii. 18), on the other side; yet holy Paul, with great reason, prefers his condition before theirs. He does not desire to partake with them in their ease and splendour, but with Christ in his disgrace and sufferings, Phil. iii. 10.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom <sup>q</sup> all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought <sup>r</sup> not to live any longer. <sup>q</sup> ver. 2, 3, 7. <sup>r</sup> ch. 22. 22.

Well might Paul be aghast, to be friendless in so great a multitude, and to be shown and pointed at as a monster, being made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men, as 1 Cor. iv. 9. But he found surely the benefit and efficacy of that promise, Matt. xxviii. 20, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

25 But when I found that <sup>s</sup> he had committed nothing worthy of death, <sup>t</sup> and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him. <sup>s</sup> ch. 23. 9, 29. & 26. 31. <sup>t</sup> ver. 11, 12.

The calumny of the Jews adds to the reputation of St. Paul: so many enemies, and so long in finding or making a fault that might reach his life, and yet to be disappointed! Paul and his religion are vindicated by the testimony of Lysias, the chief captain, chap. xxiii. 29, and of Felix, the governor, chap. xxiv. 25, and here by Festus, as afterwards by Agrippa too, chap. xxvi. 32. So mighty is truth and innocence, that they do prevail sooner or later.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

My lord; Nero, the present emperor, whose deputy Festus was in this province; though some of the former emperors refused this name, as savouring of too much arbitrariness, the latter did accept of it. Specially before thee; Agrippa, being brought up in the knowledge of the Jewish law, though it was not his business to judge Paul's case, yet he might instruct and inform the judge about it.

27 For it seemeth to be unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

So great a clamour, so hot a pursuit, and yet after all this the judge (who would willingly have condemned Paul, and gratified the Jews) knows not wherefore all this stir had been: but the more must he have been self-condemned, that durst not absolve or free a prisoner who was detained only by the power and multitude of his adversaries.

CHAP. XXVI

Paul, in the presence of Agrippa, declareth his life from his childhood, his wonderful conversion, and call to the apostleship, and his preaching of Christ according to the scripture doctrine, 1—23. Festus chargeth him with madness: his modest reply, and address to Agrippa, who confesseth himself almost a Christian, 24—29. The whole company pronounce him innocent, 30—32.

THEN Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself:

This stretching forth of his hand was, 1. To obtain silence of others whilst he spake; or, 2. To show his innocence, whilst he uses this modest confidence; or, 3. As other orators, when they begin to speak, move their hands. The providence of God wonderfully procures Paul a liberty to publish the gospel, and to make his case and religion known.

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

I think myself happy; Paul thought it to be his advantage to speak before Agrippa, who could not be unacquainted with the law or the prophets, by which St. Paul would have his case determined. Before thee; though Agrippa was not as judge in this place, yet his opinion and judgment could not but prevail much with Festus.

3 Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.

This is not flattery, but a plain confession of what was true; for Agrippa, by reason of his birth and breeding, could not be wholly ignorant of those things in question; 1. About the Messiah; 2. About the resurrection; 3. About the giving of the Holy Ghost. I beseech thee to hear me patiently; it being a matter that concerned religion, and the life and liberty of a man, nothing but ignorance or impiety could take him off from attending unto it.

4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews;

Paul appeals to his enemies, the Jews themselves, whether they could tax him with any enormity whilst he was of their persuasion; whereby he vindicates his holy religion from being the sink and offscouring of other religions, as some would make it; as also to intimate, that it was his religion which made him so hateful unto them, and not any ill practices done by him.

5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.

This heresy, sect, opinion, or way of the Pharisees, St. Paul rightly commends, if we consider it comparatively with the other sects of the Sadducees and Essenes: he had called this before, chap. xxii. 3, the most exact manner of the law of the fathers; for it is certain it was more learned and strict, and came nigher to the truth in many things, than the other did.

6 And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers:

I stand; the posture of such as are held for guilty. The hope of the promise; St. Paul brings in the discourse of the resurrection, which, as hath been observed, is the foundation of all religion, 1 Cor. xv. 14; chap. xxiii. 6; xxiv. 15; and now it is called the hope of the promise, because God's promise did raise them up to this hope: for God having promised to be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, gave them rather less than others in this world; neither had they any propriety in all the Promised Land, but only to a burying-place; whence they might certainly infer, that there was another life to be expected, in which God would make this his word good. Paul was also judged for the hope of the promise, taking this hope for the salvation which Christ did purchase, and Paul preach, which was also promised unto the fathers, though mostly under types and obscure representations. The sum is, Paul was judged for one of those two articles of our faith, viz. the resurrection of the body, or a life everlasting.

7 Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, 'hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

Twelve tribes; so St. Paul still reckons them, notwithstanding that ten tribes had been led captive, without returning again to this day. Yet, 1. There were many left by the king of Assyria in their own land; and though for a while they joined themselves unto the Samaritans rather than to the Jews, yet a century or two before our Saviour's time they returned to the Jewish religion and worship, at least very many of them. 2. Though the ten tribes never returned (as tribes) entirely back again, yet many of them doubtless had that love for their religion and country, as they took all opportunities of coming back. 3. At their first defection in Jeroboam's time, God touched the hearts of a great many, who rather changed their habitation than their religion. So that St. James might well dedicate his Epistle to the twelve tribes, for there were some who at the dispersion were scattered out of every tribe. Instantly serving God day and night; now these, with great intention and earnestness of desire, (as when any stretcheth himself to his utmost length to take hold of aught,) endeavoured to obtain that very salvation which God had promised, and the gospel revealed.

8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

This St. Paul seems to have spoken in regard of Festus, and many others there present, who were heathens; or to any of the Sadducees, if any such were amongst them: as for Agrippa, He believed the prophets, ver. 27, and had out of them learned and observed this promise, ver. 7. However, God did not leave himself without a witness to testify so much unto all, as should make the doctrine of the resurrection credible, whensoever it should be revealed unto them. The works of creation evidence it; for he that can give life unto that which had it not, can restore it unto that which had it: and the works of providence attest it; in every spring there is a resurrection of such plants or trees as seemed dead; nay, the bread which we daily feed on, was made of that grain, which was not quickened except it died, 1 Cor. xv. 36.

9 I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

The name of Jesus; the religion which teacheth Christ is to be worshipped, and his name to be magnified. Jesus of Nazareth; so they called our Saviour, of which see chap. xxii. 8.

10 Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the Chief Priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.

The saints; the professors of the religion of the holy Jesus, who are called to be saints, Rom. i. 7, and have him for the great example of holiness, who fulfilled all righteousness; and from him they have the Spirit of holiness; being sanctified in him, 1 Cor. i. 2; and whosoever hath not his Spirit, he is none of his, Rom. viii. 9. I gave my voice against them: Paul was not one of the council, nor, that we read of, in any office or place to judge any person; besides, the Jews are thought to have had no power of life and death; and that St. Stephen was slain rather in a popular tumult, than legally: but Paul may be said to do this, by carrying the suffrages or sentence to the Rod Jam. 1. 1. + Gr. night and day. e Luke 2. 37. 1 Tim. 5. 5. 1 Thess. 3. 10. f Phil. 3. 11.

a ch. 23. 3. & 23. 6. & 24. 15. & 24. 16. & 24. 17. & 24. 18. & 24. 19. & 24. 20. & 24. 21. & 24. 22. & 24. 23. & 24. 24. & 24. 25. & 24. 26. & 24. 27. & 24. 28. & 24. 29. & 24. 30. & 24. 31. & 24. 32. & 24. 33. & 24. 34. & 24. 35. & 24. 36. & 24. 37. & 24. 38. & 24. 39. & 24. 40. & 24. 41. & 24. 42. & 24. 43. & 24. 44. & 24. 45. & 24. 46. & 24. 47. & 24. 48. & 24. 49. & 24. 50. & 24. 51. & 24. 52. & 24. 53. & 24. 54. & 24. 55. & 24. 56. & 24. 57. & 24. 58. & 24. 59. & 24. 60. & 24. 61. & 24. 62. & 24. 63. & 24. 64. & 24. 65. & 24. 66. & 24. 67. & 24. 68. & 24. 69. & 24. 70. & 24. 71. & 24. 72. & 24. 73. & 24. 74. & 24. 75. & 24. 76. & 24. 77. & 24. 78. & 24. 79. & 24. 80. & 24. 81. & 24. 82. & 24. 83. & 24. 84. & 24. 85. & 24. 86. & 24. 87. & 24. 88. & 24. 89. & 24. 90. & 24. 91. & 24. 92. & 24. 93. & 24. 94. & 24. 95. & 24. 96. & 24. 97. & 24. 98. & 24. 99. & 24. 100.

g John 16. 2. 1 Tim. 1. 13.

h ch. 8. 2. Gal. 1. 13.

i ch. 9. 14. 31. & 22. 6.

man president, or any others, to get it executed (for so the words will bear); and howsoever, by his approving, rejoicing at, and delighting in their condemnation, (which was indeed giving his voice, as much as he could, against them,) this was verified.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 22. 19. 11 <sup>k</sup> And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

Paul confesses that he compelled them to blaspheme, either, 1. By the torments he made them to be put unto; or, 2. By his own example; for he confessed that he had been a blasphemer himself, 1 Tim. i. 13. This blasphemy was either, 1. Denying of Christ to be the Messiah; or, 2. Cursing or execrating of Christ, and acknowledging that he was justly condemned. I persecuted them even unto strange cities; drove them out of Jerusalem and Judea; and, according to what Paul then believed, he drove them from the worship of the true God, and said in effect, as David's adversaries when they expelled him from Jerusalem, Go, and serve other gods, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 9. 3. <sup>m</sup> 22. 6. 12 <sup>l</sup> Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the Chief Priests,

With procuratory letters recommending him to the Jews abroad, and deputing him as their agent.

13 At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

At mid-day; this appeared at noon-day, that it might not be suspected to be a dream or fancy. Above the brightness of the sun; our Saviour's face in the transfiguration did shine as the sun, Matt. xvii. 2, and he was yet on earth in his mortal body; how much more resplendent must it have been now, when he appeared from heaven with his glorious body! And if the righteous shall shine as the sun, Dan. xii. 3; Matt. xiii. 43; how much more does their Prince and Saviour! See concerning this history, chap. ix. 3, &c., and chap. xxii. 6, &c.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

In the Hebrew tongue; whereby it appears, that Paul spake not now before Agrippa in the Hebrew tongue, as he did before the Jews at Jerusalem, chap. xxi. 40. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks: this is a proverb borrowed from the Greeks, as some think, but used in many languages, denoting any who endeavour such things as will ruin or detriment themselves: and so do all persecutors; for they cannot harden themselves against God, his truth, or servants, and prosper, Job ix. 4. Not to speak of other pricks, there is never an attribute in God, nor ever a faculty in their own souls, but they kick against, and will be themselves at last pricked by.

15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.

The foot is trod upon on earth, and the Head cries out out from heaven, as chap. ix. 5.

16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, <sup>m</sup> to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;

Stand upon thy feet; as Daniel was bidden by the angel, Dan. x. 11, to mitigate his consternation and fear. Of those things in the which I will appear unto thee: St. Paul accordingly had many visions and revelations, chap. xviii. 9; xxiii. 11; 2 Cor. xii. 2; as he was more abundant in his sufferings for Christ, so in consolations from Christ, 2 Cor. i. 5.

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, <sup>n</sup> unto whom now I send thee,

From the people; from this people of the Jews, so in some copies it is expressed; howsoever, by the antithesis, and from the Gentiles, it is plainly to be understood: and God undertakes no less hereby, than to deliver Paul, and all his faithful servants, from all evils and enemies. But how is this performed? and where is the promise? St. Paul was sorely persecuted by the Jews, and at last put to death by the Gentiles. But so long as it would be a mercy, and a true deliverance to Paul, God wrought many such for him; and that, rather than fail, miraculously too; no chains, no iron gates could detain him. When he had finished his course, and done the work he was sent for, it would not have been a deliverance, to have been kept longer from his reward, and the prize he had ran for.

18 <sup>o</sup> To open their eyes, and <sup>p</sup> to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, <sup>q</sup> that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and <sup>r</sup> inheritance among them which are <sup>s</sup> sanctified by faith that is in me.

To open their eyes; the eyes of their minds, that they might know God, and their duty towards him. Our Saviour assures Paul, that he should do that for the souls of men which he should find effected in his own body, being made to see. Now though this be only the work of God, yet, to honour the ministry, he is pleased to attribute it unto his ministers, as being the instruments he ordinarily worketh it by; and who are hence called co-workers with God, 2 Cor. vi. 1. To turn them from darkness to light; this was signified by the glorious light which came from the body of our glorified Redeemer, which appeared unto him. The power of Satan; so are all sins, for by them Satan rules in the children of disobedience, Eph. ii. 2. That they may receive forgiveness of sins; thereby intimating, that their former sins (how grievous soever) should not hinder their salvation, who received the gospel in the love and power of it. By faith that is in me; by faith which purifieth the heart; but this may be referred, either to our being sanctified, or to our receiving of the inheritance, for both are by faith; and as without faith we are no better, and do no better, so we shall receive no better, than other men.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

I was not incredulous, I believed God, and yielded to his call, as Isa. i. 5, which cannot be counted a fault in me; and yet this is all that can be charged upon me.

20 But <sup>t</sup> shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judæa, and <sup>u</sup> then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do <sup>v</sup> works meet for repentance.

Shewed first unto them of Damascus; nigh unto which place he was first converted, taking the first opportunity to preach Christ: out of the abundance of his heart his mouth speaking. And turn to God: as sin is a turning from God, so repentance is a turning (or rather returning) unto God. Do works meet for repentance; such as became a true penitent; for as we must show our faith by our works, James ii. 18, so we must show our repentance by our works also: for to say we are grieved for sin, and we hate sin, and yet to live in it, is but to deceive ourselves, and (what in us lay) to mock God.

21 For these causes <sup>x</sup> the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

By violent hands and indirect means, as we see, chap. xxi. 31, and as they had done unto our Saviour, chap. v. 30, where the same word is used.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small

<sup>o</sup> ch. 25. 5.
<sup>p</sup> 42. 7.
<sup>q</sup> Luke 1. 79.
<sup>r</sup> John 8. 12.
<sup>s</sup> 2 Cor. 4. 4.
<sup>t</sup> Eph. 1. 18.
<sup>u</sup> 1 Thes. 5. 8.
<sup>v</sup> 2 Cor. 6. 14.
<sup>w</sup> Eph. 4. 18. & 5. 3.
<sup>x</sup> Col. 1. 13.
<sup>y</sup> 1 Pet. 3. 9.
<sup>z</sup> ch. 20. 32.

<sup>25</sup> q Luke 1. 77. r Eph. 1. 11. Col. 1. 12.

<sup>t</sup> ch. 9. 20.
<sup>u</sup> 22. 29. & 11.
<sup>v</sup> 26. & 15. &
<sup>w</sup> 14. & 16. &
<sup>x</sup> 17. & 18. &
<sup>y</sup> 19. & 20. &
<sup>z</sup> 21.

<sup>u</sup> Matt. 3. 2.

<sup>x</sup> ch. 21. 30.

<sup>y</sup> 31.

<sup>y</sup> Luke 24. 27, 44. <sup>ch.</sup> 24. 14. & 23. 22. <sup>Rom.</sup> 3. 31. <sup>s</sup> John 5. 46. and great, saying none other things than those <sup>y</sup> which the prophets and <sup>s</sup> Moses did say should come :

I continue unto this day : that Paul continued till then alive, notwithstanding all the fraud and force of his enemies, is acknowledged by him to be from God ; from whence he infers towards his justification, that what he had done was but in a becoming gratitude towards that God who had maintained him in life unto that very day. Witnessing both to small and great ; witnessing to all sorts, princes or people ; implying, that the truths of the gospel, and the things of God, concerned Agrippa as well as the meanest of his auditors ; and indeed with God there is no respect of persons, and that we are all one in Christ Jesus, Gal. iii. 28. The prophets and Moses ; Moses was himself also a prophet, but he is here made especial mention of, because of his excellency above the other prophets, (unto whom God spake face to face,) as also because he was the lawgiver to the Jews, and to whom, upon all occasions, they pretended to yield obedience.

<sup>a</sup> Luke 24. 26, 46. <sup>b</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 20. Col. 1. 18. <sup>c</sup> Rev. 1. 5. <sup>d</sup> Luke 2. 32. 23 <sup>a</sup> That Christ should suffer, and <sup>b</sup> that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and <sup>c</sup> should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

The sufferings of Christ were taught by Moses in all the commands about sacrifices, and more plainly by Isaiah in all the 53rd chapter ; inasmuch, that this was acknowledged by Tryphon, disputing with Justin Martyr, although the generality of Jews, both then and now, do stiffly deny it. The carnal Jews do not like to hear of a spiritual kingdom. The first that should rise from the dead ; Christ was the first that did rise to an immortal life ; others that were restored to life, died again ; besides, Christ is deservedly called the first, by reason of his dignity and eminency, and in that he rose as a head and fountain of life to others, even to all that live and believe in him. Show light ; all the word of God is light ; but especially the gospel, which discovers a plain and open way unto salvation. Unto the people, and to the Gentiles ; to both Jews and Gentiles, as ver. 17.

24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, <sup>a</sup> thou art beside thyself ; much learning doth make thee mad.

Thou art beside thyself ; this was the opinion of Festus concerning Paul, and such is the opinion of carnal and worldly men concerning such as are truly godly ; as the prophet who came to Jehu was counted a mad fellow, 2 Kings ix. 11, and the friends of our Saviour thought him to be beside himself, Mark iii. 21. And it cannot be otherwise ; for good men and bad men have quite different apprehensions concerning most things ; and what one calls good, the other accounts evil ; and what is wisdom to the one, is madness to the other. Much learning doth make thee mad ; much study many times increasing melancholy, which a sedentary and thoughtful life is most exposed unto. Paul is reckoned to have been skilful in the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, and Latin tongues ; to have been well read in the poets ; and certainly he was an excellent orator, as appears all along in his defence he made for his doctrine, and his life : but there was yet somewhat more than all this ; Festus might feel a more than ordinary effect from Paul's words, and not knowing of the Spirit by which he spake did attribute it to his learning, or madness, or to any thing but the true cause of it.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus ; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

St. Paul with all meekness makes his reply to the governor, and not taking notice of his sharp censuring of him, returns an answer in most respectful terms unto him ; as his blessed Master, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, 1 Pet. ii. 23. Soberness, in contradiction to madness ; modestly waiving the reflection, and denying the charge Festus had laid upon him.

26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely : for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him ; for this thing was not done in a corner.

Agrippa, being educated in Judea, could not but hear of the life and doctrine, death and resurrection, of our Saviour ; as also of the miracles done by him, and by his disciples ; for, as our Saviour says, he ever taught openly, John xviii. 20.

27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets ? I know that thou believest.

A rhetorical insinuation, that could not but much affect the king, and leave a sensible impression on his heart. St. Paul answers the question which he had propounded, and that in favour of Agrippa ; or rather blames himself for making that a question ; but his cryptical inference would then be, If you believe the prophets, why do you not believe Christ of whom they prophesied ?

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.

Some think that these words were spoken ironically, or scoffingly ; as if Agrippa had said, Thou wouldst have me in so short a space (for so εὐ δλίγω may be translated) to be brought to profess Christ : some think it unlikely that such a one as Agrippa would speak so plainly as we translate it, in such a place, before such an auditory : but the danger seems not to have been so great from these words ; and if it had been greater, who knows the power of that conviction under which Agrippa at that time was ? and Paul's rejoinder do suppose the words to be spoken in the sense we read them.

29 And Paul said, <sup>e</sup> I would to God, <sup>e</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 7. that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.

Paul, knowing how little it would avail any to be almost a Christian, wisheth their perfection in that profession, that they might not, with the Laodiceans, be neither hot nor cold, Rev. iii. 16 ; nor, with the Israelites, halt between God and Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 21. Except these bonds : some think that by bonds St. Paul means only his guard wherewith he was surrounded ; but it is certain that St. Paul was bound, in the most literal sense, with chains, as chap. xxiv. 27 ; and he wishes his auditors all the good that was in him, and to be freed from all the evils that were upon him.

30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them :

Agrippa, Festus, and the queen, together with the governor's council, although they had heard this excellent discourse from the most learned apostle, like the black-moor or leopard, they cannot change their spots, or skin, Jer. xiii. 23 : having sinned against former manifestations of God's will, this, for aught we read, became ineffectual unto them.

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, <sup>f</sup> This man doeth nothing worthy of death <sup>f</sup> ch. 23. 9. 29. & 25. 25. or of bonds.

Gone aside ; either to their houses, or to some apartment nigh to the tribunal. They acquit Paul ; for as yet Nero had not made those bloody laws, whereby the profession of Christianity was made capital.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, <sup>g</sup> if he had not appealed unto Cæsar. <sup>g</sup> ch. 25. 11.

These judges and great men do, by their opinion concerning Paul, condemn the Jews, whom they declare to have no cause for the prosecuting of him ; and so those cattiffs returned to Jerusalem, not only with their labour for their pains, but being branded by the sentence of so many eminent personages, not to say tormented with the guilt of so foul a fact in their own conscience. Such honour have all persecutors ! But, withal, these great men seem to be self-condemned, in that they own Paul's innocence, and yet dare not set him free for fear of the Jews ; for as for this excuse from his appealing to Cæsar, it bound up them indeed from condemning Paul till Cæsar had heard him; but they could not be bound by it from acquitting or freeing of him; for Paul might have withdrawn his appeal, and enjoyed his liberty, if they had pleased, at any time: but what popularity, or self-ends, put them upon, they are willing to varnish over with pretence of lawfulness and necessity.

CHAP. XXVII

Paul is conducted in a ship toward Rome, 1—8. He foretells the danger of the voyage, but is not credited, 9—11. The ship setting sail against his advice is tossed with a tempest, 12—20. Paul comforteth his fellow travellers with assurance of having their lives saved, but foretelleth a shipwreck; all which is verified by the event, 21—44.

a ch. 26. 12. AND when *it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

It was determined; upon the solemn hearing of Paul's case, it was resolved by Festus and Agrippa, with the rest that were taken by Festus to advise concerning it. Julius; thought to have been a freed-man of the family of Julius, who thence took his name. A centurion of Augustus' band; as Cornelius was a centurion of the Italian band: see chap. x. 1. This band, or regiment, was called Augustus's (or the emperor's) because (as some will) it was part of his guard.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one <sup>b</sup> Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

Adramyttium; a city in Mysia, a province in the Lesser Asia, almost over against Mitylene, of a pestilent air. Meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; the ship did belong to Adramyttium, and designed a trading voyage along the coasts of Asia. Aristarchus; this Aristarchus seems to have been a man of some note, who accompanied St. Paul (together with Luke, the holy penman of this book, and of the Gospel so called) throughout his journey, and none else that we read of. This Aristarchus was one of them that was laid hold on in the uproar at Ephesus, chap. xix. 29; and having partook of Paul's afflictions in all his travels, was at last his fellow prisoner at Rome, Col. iv. 10. Thessalonica; of this city mention is made, chap. xvii. 1.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius <sup>c</sup> courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

Sidon; a city in Phenicia, bordering upon Palestine, mentioned Matt. xi. 21, and Acts xii. 20. Julius courteously entreated Paul; as <sup>d</sup> Felix had commanded that centurion to whom he committed him, chap. xxiv. 23. And gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself; though Paul went with a soldier to guard him, as their manner was, yet it was a great favour that he might converse with his friends, and receive from them such refreshments towards his journey as he stood in need of. Now Paul indeed experienced the truth of God's word, chap. xviii. 10, that he was with him: and it is wonderful to consider the presence of God with Paul all along: which things are our examples, that we also may put our trust in God, who hath said he will not leave us nor forsake us, Heb. xiii. 5, 6.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

Launched; or put to sea. Cyprus; a noted island in the Mediterranean Sea, of which we read, chap. xi. 19; xiii. 4. Their nearest way from Sidon to Myra had been to have left Cyprus on the right hand, but by reason of the winds they were forced to go almost round about the island, leaving it on the left hand.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

The sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia; that part of the Mediterranean that borders on those provinces. Cilicia; of which see chap. vi. 9; xv. 23, 41. Pamphylia; mention is made of this province, chap. ii. 10; xiii. 13. Lycia; another province in the lesser Asia, bordering on Pamphylia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

Alexandria; a famous port town in Egypt, formerly called No, of which we read, Jer. xlvi. 25: unto this place the ship did belong, which was now in the road or haven of Myra, intending for Italy, whither they carried corn, and Persian and Indian commodities, from thence.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under || Crete, over against Salmone;

Had sailed slowly many days; the wind being contrary, or at least very bare, and, it may be, their ship much laden. Cnidus; a city or promontory over against Crete, which is now called Candia, a known island in the Mediterranean. Salmone; a sea town in Candia, or the easterly promontory there, so called.

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

The fair havens; or, the fair or good shore, that being accounted the best which is safest for ships to ride in or enter into. A place of this name remains to this day (as some tell us) in the island of Candia. Lasea; called Lasos, and more inland; yet some think that this town is not certainly known, not having been mentioned by any ancient geographer.

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, <sup>d</sup> because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

This fast was not any necessitated abstinence, but a religious fast, as the word here used does most commonly signify; and the article being put to it, it may well denote some eminent and known fast. We read, that amongst the Jews several fasts were observed; as the fast of the fourth month, of the fifth month, of the seventh, and of the tenth month, Zech. viii. 19. But that of the seventh month did far exceed them all, it being the day in which the priest was to make an atonement for the people; and they were strictly commanded to afflict their souls in it, Lev. xvi. 29; xxiii. 27. (Thus when we look up to him whom by our sins we have pierced, we must mourn, Zech. xii. 10.) Now this fast was to be observed on the tenth day of Tisri, or their seventh month (which is made up of part of September and part of October); and then this day, which might well be called the fast, fell about the beginning of October; after which time, until March, they did not usually venture on the seas, especially their ships not being so able to bear a storm as ours are, and the art of navigation being not yet in any reasonable degree found out amongst them.

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with || hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

Paul did not say this so much by reason of the time of the year, and the tempests which do usually attend it, as by a prophetic spirit: God intending to provide for Paul in this tedious and difficult journey, endues him with the gift of prophecy; which (especially when they saw it verified) could not but beget a great respect toward him, and might be a means of salvation to many that were with him. But also of our lives; so it had been, their lives had been lost as well as the ship and goods, had not God given the lives of all in the ship unto Paul, and saved them for his sake; as ver. 24.

11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

The centurion believed those whom he thought best skilled in those things (as every one in his own art); and if he had not heard of Paul's condition and extraordinary qualification, he was doubtless the more to be excused.

12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.

This Phenice was a port town in Candia, and not the country in Syria. Lieth toward the south-west and north-west; being on the south part of that island, having a bay or road like unto a half-moon or crescent, one horn or part of it (admitting entrance into it) toward the south-west, and the other toward the north-west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

The south wind being ordinarily most mild, and at that time not high, they sailed along the shore of Candia, not being afraid to be driven upon it.

14 But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.

There arose against it; Crete or Candia; so that they were in the greater danger, having a sea-shore. Called Euroclydon; this some will have to have been a whirlwind; but the word signifies only, the tempestuous east, or the north-east, which is a contrary wind unto any that would go from Crete to Italy.

15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

The ship was caught; being forced from Crete, and no longer at the command of the mariners, but in the sole power of the winds. And could not bear up into the wind; the ship could not keep her course, the winds being contrary, so that her prow or head (part whereof was called the eye of the ship, and on which its name was formerly, as now at the stern, inscribed) could not bear up according as their course did require; whence that expression, ἀρροφθαλιμῶν τῷ ἀνέμῳ, which is here used.

Sic quo non voluit, sed quo rapit impetus undæ.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

Clauda; called also Claudos, and by some Gaudos, and now Gozo, an island near unto Crete. We had much work to come by the boat; in this stress of weather they would take up the boat, lest it should have been staved or beat in pieces against the ship.

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

They used helps; not only using all instruments fit for their purpose, but all hands were employed too. Undergirding the ship, with cables, to keep the sides of the ship the closer and faster together. The quicksands: there were two quicksands especially famous in Africa, the one the greater, the other the lesser, called Syrtes, because these mountains of sand under water did seem, as it were, to draw and suck up ships, they were so soon swallowed up by them. Strake sail; by the word here used, sails and their tackle, or the top-mast, may be understood decks.

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

Casting out the merchandise or lading which was in it, that the ship, being so much lighter, might not so readily strike upon a rock, or be swallowed up of the quicksands, it drawing so much the less water.

19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

All the ship's furniture which it had either for ornament or defence, and not their ballast or lumber only; so willingly do men part with all things for their lives; which yet are but short, and, at best, mixed with care and sorrow, Job xiv. 1, 2.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

Neither sun nor stars in many days appeared; which shows the greatness of their misery, which had not the ordinary refreshments from the sight of the sun to relieve it. For that the sun does cheer, is one reason why our Saviour is called the Sun of righteousness, Mal. iv. 2. All hope that we should be saved was then taken away; there remained no hope in the eye of reason, or reckoning upon second causes, or natural events.

21 But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

After long abstinence: these did not abstain from their meals for any want; for they had sufficient provision, as appears, ver. 38; nor because the storm or tempest tossing the ship, and them in it, took away their stomach, for the sea-men, at least, were not so long troubled with that seasickness: but, 1. Their continually being employed, working for their lives. Or, 2. Their fear of perishing, and sense of a future state, might take up their thoughts so effectually, that they minded nothing else. Hence it hath been said, that whosoever cannot pray should go to sea, and there he would learn it; for in their affliction they will seek me early, saith the Lord, Hos. v. 15. Ye should have hearkened unto me; being Paul had foretold this that now befell them, as ver. 10, they were bound to have believed him; which they not doing, are now deservedly punished. Have gained this harm and loss; harm and loss, misery and calamity, is all that disobedience unto God gets at last, whatsoever it may promise us to tempt us with.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

Provided they would do as he required of them: see ver. 31. In God's promises there is a tacit condition, which from the nature of the thing is to be understood; as in that which was made to Eli, mentioned 1 Sam. ii. 30. Paul did foretell this so particularly, that when it was come to pass, he might gain the more reputation to the truth of the gospel which he preached, and more glory to that God whom he worshipped.

23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve,

A good introduction to recommend the true God, and the gospel of his Son. Paul, who knew the certainty of what he had predicted, owns himself to be now in the service of God, that not unto him, but unto God, may be given the glory.

24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

The message which God's angels bring from God unto his people, is, Fear not. Thus unto Daniel, Dan. x. 12, 19; and thus unto the holy women that attended at our Lord's sepulchre, Matt. xxviii. 5. There are all ministering spirits, Heb. i. 14. Thou must be brought before; it is a forensic word, showing that Paul must be heard and tried by Cæsar. God hath given thee all them that sail with thee; graciously bestowed all thy fellow travellers upon thee at thy request: for it is implied, that Paul had prayed for them, and begged their lives of God; as Esther had the lives of her people at the hands of King Ahasuerus, Esth. vii. 3. There is a remarkable difference between Paul and Jonah in a storm, though Jonah professes as much as Paul does in the preceding verse, Jonah i. 9; but it was little more than a profession in Jonah, but Paul was actually in the fear and service of God; and doubtless there was as great a difference in their breasts during the storm. The true fear and service of God brings with it great peace and inward satisfaction, which, when any leave, they must, at least so long, be strangers unto, for there is no peace unto the wicked, Isa. xlvi. 22.

2<sup>d</sup> Dan. 6. 18.
Rom. 1. 9.
2 Tim. 1. 3.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: <sup>h</sup> for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

Paul, having had experience of the power and faithfulness of God, and known his name, professeth to trust in him; and recommends God's veracity unto them, as worthy to be relied upon. What a great deal of good does one holy man do in a place. These hundreds of men fare the better both in soul and body for holy Paul.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

This was given by Paul as a sign unto them of the truth of what he had said, which, when it came to pass, might induce them to believe the rest; which probably it did, and saved Paul from being killed by the soldiers, ver. 42. Thus God preserves his people, and delivers Paul, and brings all his safely off at the last, but it is by tempests and storms. It may be they must suffer shipwreck of all they have in this world first. Augusta per angusta. Through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God, as St. Paul had taught others, Acts xiv. 22, he experienced to be true himself. There was no truth more experimented than this.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

In Adria; not in the Adriatic Bay, or Gulf of Venice, which divides Italy and Dalmatia, though that be also so called; but this name is sometimes extended to those parts of the Mediterranean Sea which border on Sicily, and Ionia in Greece, and must be passed over by such as go from Crete, or Candia, to Melita, or Malta.

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

Found it twenty fathoms: a fathom is the distance betwixt the end of the middle finger on the one hand, from the end of the middle finger on the other hand, when the arms are stretched out; which is ordinarily accounted about six feet in measure. Found it fifteen fathoms; coming into more shallow places they might reasonably conclude that they were near unto the land.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.

Fallen upon rocks; of which there are very many in these seas, especially about the islands. Cast four anchors; which show how great the tempest was, that they needed so many anchors. Wished for the day; that they might the better discover whereabouts they were.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship,

Had let down the boat; that they might betake themselves into it, after they had left the ship: for, ver. 17, they had taken up the boat, and secured that against this or the like occasion. As though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship; dissembling the true reason of their going into the boat to make their escape.

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

Notwithstanding the promise mentioned, ver. 24, that they should all be saved, they must use means, so far as means can be used, although the efficaciousness and truth of the promise do no ways depend upon the virtue of the means; but the means are made effectual by virtue of the promise. Yet whosoever neglects means upon any pretext of a promise, he does tempt God, but does not rightly believe in him. These; as it were pointing unto the mariners, and such as were useful in such a case.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

The centurion and soldiers, agreeing to what Paul had said, did this to take away all thoughts of escaping from the mariners, and leaving all upon what Paul had promised to them in the name of his God.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

While the day was coming on; all the night after the mariners were disappointed in their project to escape. So hard a matter it was to abate their fear of being presently destroyed; and so great influence hath the apprehension of present death, and judgment which follows it, upon the minds of men. The fourteenth day; not as if they had wholly eaten nothing all that while, (for it is commonly held, that none can fast above half so long without danger of death,) but because in all that space they had held no set meal, as they were wont to do; and what they did eat was very little, and only in extreme necessity, without any desire or taste; so great was their anguish.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for <sup>h</sup> there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

This is for your health; that they might be stronger to endure that pain and perform that labour which was necessary towards their escape; for God would have them to use all means for their deliverance. For there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you; a proverbial speech used by the Jews, as 1 Kings i. 52, signifying that they should not suffer the least detriment in their bodies, much less the loss of their lives. Thus God numbereth our hairs, and his providence extendeth over every one of them, as Matt. x. 30; Luke xxi. 18.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

Paul thanks God for their preservation hitherto: and there is no such encouragement to hope for future deliverances, as when God doth give us hearts to thank him for deliverances already enjoyed. But he thanked God also for giving them in their necessity such food to nourish and strengthen them, Matt. xiv. 19; xv. 36; Mark viii. 6, 19, and one season more to enjoy it. The acknowledging of God in all things we enjoy, doth sanctify them to us: otherwise they do defile us; for we usurp them; we holding them by no other tenor but in franc-almoine, from God: neither can they be serviceable unto us, if God withhold his blessing. Hence the Jews would not eat until Samuel had thus blessed their food, 1 Sam. ix. 13. And our Saviour himself, to give us an example, gives thanks before he would have the miraculous loaves and fishes distributed, John vi. 11.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

Believing Paul's words, promising in the name of that God whom he served, that they should all be preserved; believing, they did rejoice. Now Paul, a prisoner, a neglected and contemned person, comes to be valued and credited. Whilst they sailed with a prosperous gale, neither God, nor his poor prisoner and chained apostle, is thought upon; but in a storm or tempest they are glad to believe and follow his direction. God's stars shine in the night, and are seen in affliction.

<sup>h</sup> Luke 1. 45.
Rom. 4. 20,
21. 2 Tim. 1.
12.

1 ch. 28. 1.

<sup>h</sup> 1 Kings
1. 52.
Matt. 10. 30.
Luke 12. 7.
& 21. 18.

11 Sam. 9. 13.
Matt. 15. 36.
Mark 8. 6.
John 6. 11.
Luke 12. 7.
1 Tim. 4. 8.

m ch. 2. 41.
 & 7. 14.
 Rom. 13. 1.
 1 Pet. 3. 20.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen <sup>m</sup> souls.

That is, so many persons; as chap. ii. 41; vii. 14; Rom. xiii. 1; the soul being the noblest part, and the body following its condition, whatsoever it be: if the soul be holy, the body shall be glorious. But it is not so on the other side: the soul is not hereafter as the body is here; for Dives's body fared well, was fed and arrayed sumptuously, and yet his soul was miserably tormented, Luke xvi. 19, 24.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

Cast out the wheat, the provision they had for their sustenance. This is the third time that they lightened the ship, being willing that all their goods should perish for them, rather than with them. Or these heathens were so far persuaded by St. Paul, that they ventured their lives upon the credit of what he had foretold them; and parted with their food, and all they had to live upon, only upon his word, that they should want them in the ship no more.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

They knew not the land; in so long and violent a tempest, thinking every moment to be swallowed up, they could keep no reckoning of the ship's running or way; neither were charts or maps so usual (if they had any at all) in those times. A certain creek; a bay, or bosom of the sea, having land on each side, where they judged it most likely for them to get on shore; using still all means for their safety.

¶ Or, cut the anchors, they left them in the sea, &c.

40 And when they had || taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

Loosed the rudder bands; rudders is in the plural number put for the singular; or rather, in those times they having two rudders, (as by several passages amongst the ancients do appear,) they were both loosed, that now they might use them to direct the ship to the best advantage in making the shore, they having been tied whilst they were adrift, or at anchor. Hoised up the mainsail, which they had let down, or struck, ver. 17, and now, that they might make some use of the winds, to get nigher to the shore, they hoisted up. As God doth instruct the ploughman, Isa. xxviii. 26, so he teacheth the mariner, and every one in their calling.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, <sup>n 2</sup> they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

A place where two seas met; a shoal, sand, or isthmus, where the sea was on both sides of it. They were now in the greatest extremity; and God suffers them to fall into it before he sends them deliverance, that he might have the more glory by it.

42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape.

This speaks their great ingratitude, that they would take away Paul's life, who had preserved theirs. But Christ's apostles and ministers must not look for their reward in this life; though men cannot, or do not, recompense them, they shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just, Luke xiv. 14.

43 But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land:

The centurion, willing to save Paul; because Paul was a Roman citizen, whose death he durst not be accessory unto. It may be also, that this centurion, (if there were no more,) as the Samaritan that was cleansed, did this in thankfulness unto Paul. Should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land; that they might be helpful to others in getting on shore.

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, <sup>o</sup> that they escaped all <sup>o</sup> ver. 22. safe to land.

Some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship; still using means, though it was of God only that they had them, and that they were effectual to them. In this history is lively verified that of the psalmist, Psal. cvii. 18—20, Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he saveth them out of their distresses. He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions. And what follows but, ver. 21, Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men! God hath a tribute of praise which is due unto him from the readers of this story, that they would acknowledge that there is none else who can deliver after this manner, Dan. iii. 29; and then to be sure they will desire that this God might be their God for ever and ever, Psal. cxviii. 14.

CHAP. XXVIII

Paul and his company, after their shipwreck, are kindly entertained by the barbarians of Melita, 1, 2. A viper fastening on his hand without hurting him, the people, who at first thought ill of him, believed him a god, 3—5. He healeth the father of Publius, and other sick persons in the island, 7—10. Paul and his company depart, and arrive at Rome; where Paul is left with a guard in a house of his own, 11—16. He calleth the Jews together, and sheweth the occasion of his coming, 17—22. He preacheth Christ to them, of whom some believe, others believe not, 23—29. He continueth for two whole years to preach the gospel without interruption, 30, 31.

AND when they were escaped, then they knew that <sup>a</sup> the island was called Melita. <sup>a</sup> ch. 27. 26.

The island; this was foretold by Paul, chap. xxvii. 26; and therefore though the mariners knew not the land, ver. 39, and were not able to direct the ship, as ver. 15, yet God so ordered it, that not a word spoken by Paul did fall to the ground, but the wind and sea obey him. Melita; now called Malta, a little island between Sicily and Africa. There is another obscure island in Illyricum that was called by this name, which some have mistook for this place of Paul's shipwreck, by reason that this tempest was in the Adriatic Sea: but not only the Gulf of Venice, but the sea about Sicily, and this coast, was so called, as Strabo witnesseth. See chap. xxvii. 27.

2 And the <sup>b</sup> barbarous people shewed <sup>b</sup> Rom. 1. 14. us no little kindness: for they kindled <sup>1</sup> Cor. 14. 11. a fire, and received us every one, because <sup>Col. 3. 11.</sup> of the present rain, and because of the cold.

The barbarous people; so the Grecians and Romans called all other nations that did not receive their customs, nor speak their language, 1 Cor. xiv. 11; and to this day the African coast over against this island is called Barbary. For they kindled a fire, &c.: how far is this humanity of heathens beyond that inhumanity which some that are called Christians use towards those that are shipwrecked, and their goods that come on shore!

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

A viper; a creature so venomous, that not only its biting, but (some say) its breath, is deadly: this, upon the warmth of the fire, being benumbed with the cold, and now refreshed, began to stir itself. Fastened on his hand; as it used to do when it biteth. God by this miracle prepares this people not only to be civil and courteous unto Paul, but to believe the gospel which he preached, whosoever he went. And this wonderful work of God was (as God's seal to his ministry) to show his authority to be from him.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

Venomous; so the viper is called by that appellative word, from whence also comes theriaca, or treacle, which is made out of flesh, or trochusses, of vipers. And if men can make an antidote out of poison, much more can God bring good out of evil. This man is a murderer; it is a strange sense that men by the light of nature had of Divine vengeance, especially of God's revenging of murder. Hence they called one of their furies Tisiphone, as one that punished and revenged murder. Yet they were to blame in this case, 1. Because they confine the punishment of wicked men wholly unto this life. 2. In that they did not expect the event; they judged before they knew what would be the end of Paul afterwards. 3. They erred, in that they measured the goodness or badness of a man's state or cause by his prosperity or adversity.

5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.

As Daniel in the lion's den. God is the God of nature, and the most natural properties are restrained when he pleases, and cannot be exerted without his concurrence. Thus the promises our blessed Saviour made, Mark xvi. 18; Luke x. 19, were fulfilled according to the letter.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god.

Should have swollen; the word signifies primarily to be burnt, and then by burning or scalding to swell, which is accounted the ordinary symptom of the biting of a viper; to swell or blister, as if the part was burnt with fire. Or fallen down dead suddenly; in those places where there is much more heat, there is more venom in these vipers. And though some are said to live several days after they are bit by them, yet others die very suddenly upon their biting; as the known story of Cleopatra testifies; and condemned persons were sometimes put to death by vipers set unto their breasts. And said that he was a god; a strange extreme; so uncertain and unequal are men's minds.

7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

This Publius is thought to have been governor for the Romans in this island. Howsoever, he was a man of great account and estate, that could provide for so many as were in the ship, and receive them into his own house.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

A bloody flux; a painful and dangerous disease; the torment in the bowels frequently causing a fever. And prayed; Paul could do nothing of himself, and therefore begs of God the recovery of Publius's father. It is God only that kills and makes alive, 1 Sam. ii. 6. Laid his hands on him; this imposition of hands was commonly used in miraculous cures, as Matt. ix. 18; Mark vi. 5; and is joined with prayer, Matt. xix. 13, which it might be a symbol of. Thus Publius was well paid for what he did for Paul and his company. Relieving of the poor and distressed is frequently rewarded in this world, and not only in the world to come. And God now recommends the gospel and the ministry of Paul by this miracle also: for none could do such things as these, unless God were with him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

The fame of this cure, wrought so suddenly, perfectly, and only with the laying on of Paul's hands, could not but spread far and near; especially being done upon the governor: and men are usually very careful about their bodily health and welfare. So that their diseases were blessed occasions to bring them to the knowledge of God in Christ, whom Paul preached; and they might have perished eternally if they had not perished (or been thus near unto perishing) temporally.

10 Who also honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

They who were cured, rewarded or presented the apostle and his company very liberally. And this was the effect of that inward respect and real esteem they had for them; and was a fruit of their faith.

11 And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

These three months that St. Paul staid at Malta, he spent like a true labourer in the Lord's vineyard, planting a church that was famous for its stedfastness in the truth. Had wintered in the isle; it was their wont to lay up their ships all the winter season; as we may see, chap. xxvii. 12. And to this day the galleys seldom go out on those seas in winter. Castor and Pollux; feigned to be the sons of Jupiter, and to have the ordering of tempests, and the care of mariners, and were chosen for the patrons of that ship, by the pagan owners of it.

12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

Syracuse; the chief city of Sicily, famous for Archimedes. We tarried there three days; probably to sell some of their wares, the ship making a trading voyage.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

Rhegium; a city in the kingdom of Naples, over against Messina in Sicily; so called because that Sicily was believed to be thereabouts rent and plucked from the main land, unto which they held it to have been formerly joined, until by a tempest it became an island. Puteoli is a sea town not far from Naples.

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome.

Where we found brethren; Christians, as some think, for so they mutually called one another. But it is not so probable that any should profess Christianity so near unto Rome, and that it should be no more known or believed in Rome. Others therefore think that the apostle means Jews, whom he calls brethren (being, as himself, descended from Abraham); for so he calls the Jews he found at Rome, ver. 17; who yet called the Christians a sect, adding, that it was every where spoken against, ver. 22. Rome is known to be the chief city in Italy, and to have been the empress of the world, and famous for the church to whom St. Paul wrote his Epistle, known by its inscription unto them.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

Appii forum; a place about one and fifty miles, or seventeen leagues, from Rome; so called from Appius Claudius, who made a way from Rome thither, called from his name, The Appian Way; and had his statue there set up; which is the reason why it is called thus: for the Romans did call those places fora, were such statues were placed. (The concourse to see those statues might bring them to become markets.) The three taverns; as that was a place of resort for the buying and selling of other commodities, so this for the affording of necessary provision; a little town, hence so called, about three and thirty miles, or eleven leagues, from Rome. So that some came a greater, some a lesser way to meet with Paul, and show their respect unto him. These brethren are thought to have been converted by such as at the day of Pentecost were present when those miracles were wrought, chap. ii. 10, it being expressly said, that there were strangers from Rome. Took courage; God moving so many not to be ashamed of his bonds.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but <sup>h</sup> Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

The captain of the guard; the praefectus praetorio, being commander-in-chief over the soldiers, and unto whom the prisoners of state were usually committed. Paul was suffered to dwell by himself; God by this means giving Paul an opportunity to go abroad at his pleasure; though chained, as ver. 20, yet he might preach the gospel, and that was not bound, 2 Tim. ii. 9. And now God is with Paul, as he was with Joseph, in prison, Gen. xxxix. 21, and procures him favour.

17 And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet <sup>k</sup> was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

Paul called the chief of the Jews together; Paul does this not only out of an extraordinary love which he had for that people, but also because the apostles were commanded to go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. x. 5, 6. The whole economy of the gospel is a doing good for evil. So did our Saviour, who is the author and subject of it; and so must his messengers or ministers do, or they are not like to do any good at all; for the world will hate them, 1 John iii. 13.

18 Who, <sup>l</sup> when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

Examined me; as Festus did in the presence of king Agrippa, chap. xxv. 26, who, they were both unbelievers, yet justified Paul, acknowledging that he had not committed anything worthy of bonds, much less of death. Thus our Saviour was declared innocent by Pilate, Luke xxiii. 4, 14.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, <sup>m</sup> I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

The Jews spake against it; the Jews used all their oratory and interest against Paul, both before Felix and Festus. And had it been in Festus's power, (which after Paul's appeal it was not,) he would have sacrificed Paul to the malice of the Jews; and by that means got their favour, whom he had so incensed against them. Not that I had ought to accuse my nation of; Paul did not so much want matter, as mind, to accuse the Jews; and he declares, that whatsoever he had suffered, his intentions were not to calumniate them, but to vindicate himself.

20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that <sup>n</sup> for the hope of Israel I am bound with <sup>o</sup> this chain.

For the hope of Israel: see chap. xxiii. 6; xxiv. 21. This hope is either, 1. Of the resurrection, as in the fore-mentioned places; and chap. xxvi. 6, 7; or, 2. The Messiah; Christ is the hope of Israel, so they pretended for many ages, and him now Paul preached. I am bound with this chain; for though he had his liberty to go abroad, yet he was chained with his right hand to the soldier's left hand who went with him, and could not possibly be loosened unwittingly from him.

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judæa concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or spake any harm of thee.

The high priest, and the rest of them that had persecuted Paul, did either despond of their cause, when it should come to be impartially heard; or were supine and negligent in a matter which they pretended so highly to concern their religion; but self-ends, their present ease and reputation, were the main matters they contended for.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where <sup>p</sup> it is spoken against.

Sect, or heresy, for so they called the Christian religion, chap. xxiv. 5, 14. Every where it is spoken against; of all conditions of men, governors and people, and in all places; as, Luke ii. 34, Christ is said to be a sign that shall be spoken against.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; <sup>q</sup> to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, <sup>r</sup> both out of the Law of Moses, and out of the Prophets, from morning till evening.

His lodging; the house which he had hired, as ver. 16, and 30. He expounded and testified the kingdom of God; Paul expounded the Scriptures, and by them proved our Saviour to be the Messiah; and that the kingdom of the Messiah, which God had promised, and Moses and the prophets had foretold, was now come. Persuading them concerning Jesus; using such proofs and arguments as were cogent enough to prove what he asserted; and which al-o did thoroughly persuade or prevail with several of them. From morning till evening; thus Paul laboured more abundantly, 1 Cor. xv. 10.

24 And <sup>s</sup> some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

Thus there are different soils into which the word is cast, as appears in the parable of the sower, Matt. xiii. 19, 20, &c. Thus Paul found by experience what he says, 2 Thess. iii. 2, that all men have not faith; and the word preached doth not profit, unless it be mixed with faith in them that hear it, Heb. iv. 2.

25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers,

They agreed not among themselves; thus Christ came to send fire on the earth, Luke xii. 49: not that the gospel does this in itself; for it is the gospel of peace, Eph. vi. 15, not only betwixt God and man, but betwixt man and man; and if its precepts were observed, love, meekness, and goodness would banish all hatred, pride, and contention out of the hearts and lives of men; but this arises out of the corruption that is in man, and from the evil one that sows his tares amongst us. After that Paul had spoken one word; Paul spake this eminent and remarkable word, or sentence, that they might (if possible) be pricked in their hearts at the hearing of God's judgments denounced against them.

26 Saying, <sup>t</sup> Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive:

As their fathers did hear the many prophecies concerning the miseries and calamities which for their sins were to come upon them, as also concerning the Messiah which was to come, but did not believe them or entertain them as they ought; so these their children (through the righteous

<sup>h</sup> ch. 24. 25.
& 27. 3.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 24. 12,
13. & 25. 6.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 21. 33.

<sup>l</sup> ch. 22. 24.
& 24. 10. &
25. 8. & 26.
31.

<sup>m</sup> ch. 25. 11.

<sup>n</sup> ch. 26. 6, 7.
<sup>o</sup> ch. 26. 29.
Eph. 3. 1. &
4. 1. & 6. 20.
<sup>p</sup> 2 Tim. 1. 16.
& 2. 9.
Phil. 10.
13.

<sup>p</sup> Luke 2. 34.
ch. 5. 14.
1 Pet. 2. 12.
& 4. 14.

<sup>q</sup> Luke 24.
27. ch. 17.
3. & 19. 6.

<sup>r</sup> See on
ch. 28. 6, 22.

<sup>s</sup> ch. 14. 4.
& 17. 4.
& 18. 9.

<sup>t</sup> Is. 6. 9.
Jer. 6. 21.
Ezek. 12. 2.
Matt. 13. 14.
15. Mark 4.
12. Luke 9.
10. John 12.
40. Rom. 11. 8.

judgment of God) inherited their fathers' sins, and should be heirs also of their punishments. Thus we see, that Scriptura prophetica sapius impletur; and what was spoken and fulfilled in that generation so long before, was also in this so many hundred years after.

27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

Though God did forsake this people, (being first forsaken of them,) and withdraw his gratuitous assistance from them, yet it is all justly charged upon them, they having by their sins said unto God, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways, Job xxi. 14. Their eyes have they closed; they winked, as those that were loth to see, though they could not but see, the truths Paul preached concerning the Messiah; prejudicate opinions and self-conceit hindering them from coming unto the acknowledgment of them. I should heal them, or pardon them; for by guilt the soul is wounded.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent "unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

The salvation of God; so the gospel is called; because, 1. The finding of it out, 2. The preparing of it by sending his Son, 3. The revealing of it, and, 4. Its efficacy, is only of God. Is sent unto the Gentiles; as by our Saviour's commission, Matt. xxviii. 19, and Luke xxiv. 47, does appear. And Paul had by experience found the effects of it, as may be seen in all this book of his travels, where we may find many of the Gentiles were obedient unto the word, which the Jews gainsaid and blasphemed.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

Some accusing of Paul, others vindicating of him; some believing, as ver. 24, others not believing; our Saviour, and his gospel too, being for the rising and falling of many.

30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him,

Of what nation or quality soever they were, Paul preached salvation to them upon the gospel condition of faith and holiness; and in that imitated God and our Saviour, who refuse none that thus come unto him. And though Paul might have had greater security from trouble by the Jews if he would have desisted, yet a necessity was laid upon him, and a woe unto him if he did not preach the gospel, as 1 Cor. ix. 16, which may abundantly excuse and justify him.

31 *Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

The kingdom of God; the gospel is so called; as also Paul preached that kingdom of God which is to come at the end of the world, which falls in with the subject he was so often upon, concerning the resurrection; which if men did but believe effectually, all the other ends of preaching would be easily obtained. Those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ; Christ's precepts and miracles, his death and resurrection. No man forbidding him: God, who puts bounds to the raging sea, had stopped the Jews' malice, and bidden it go no further; and he who delivered Daniel from the lions, had delivered Paul from Nero, and would have delivered him, had not his death been more for the glory of God, and the good of Paul himself, than his life; which at last he offered in confirmation of the truths which he had preached; which he foresaw, 2 Tim. iv. 6, and, as Eusebius says, it came to pass accordingly.

This book may be called, not only πράξεις, but τίματα; not only the Acts, but the wonders, of the Apostles: though the holy penman and the apostles meekly contented themselves with that name by which at present it is called, yet what wonders are contained in it! not only such as were wrought by the apostles, but for them, to deliver, preserve, and encourage them; insomuch as the attempt to silence them, and to hinder the progress of the gospel preached by them, proved as vain as if men had endeavoured to hinder the sun from shining, or the wind from blowing.

Now unto him, who is able to work so as none can hinder, be all honour and glory, dominion and power, for ever and ever. Amen.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

R O M A N S

THE ARGUMENT

THE penman of this Epistle, viz. Paul, was so called (as some think) because he was little or low of stature. Others suppose he had this name first given him upon the converting of Sergius Paulus the deputy; of which see Acts xii., and Hierom. Com. in Ep. ad Philem. But others are of opinion, that his name was not changed at all, and that he had two names, as all those Jews had who were freemen of Rome. The text in Acts xiii. 9 doth favour this opinion; there you read of Saul, who was also called Paul. (So John was surnamed, or also called, Mark, Acts xii. 12, 25.) And because he was the apostle of the Gentiles, and his work lay mostly amongst them, he was called at last altogether by his surname, or Roman title.

As to the order of it: all are agreed, that it was not written as it is placed in our Bibles: that the Epistles to the Thessalonians, to the Corinthians, and other of his Epistles, were written before this; and the reason why it is placed before the other Epistles is, because of the dignity of the Romans, to whom it was directed; Rome being, at that time, the imperial city: or, because of the prolixity and largeness of it, this being the longest of all the Epistles: or, because of the excellency and fullness of it; so full and excellent is this Epistle, that some have called it "the marrow of divinity." Chrysostom had such an esteem of it, that he caused it to be read to him twice every week. Melancthon called it "the confession of the churches;" he is reported to have gone over it ten several times in his ordinary lectures. Mr. Perkins adviseth, in the reading of the Scriptures, to begin with the Gospel of John, and this Epistle to the Romans, as being the keys of the New Testament.

The subject-matter of it seems to be much the same with the Epistle to the Galatians. The body of this Epistle (not to speak any thing of the preface, or conclusion) is partly doctrinal, and partly practical. In the doctrinal part, the apostle handles (and that purposely, and at large) that fundamental article of a sinner's justification in the sight of God : so that this Epistle (as one saith) is the proper seat of that doctrine ; and from hence it is principally to be learned. Here we are taught the way and manner of our justification before God, that we are justified by faith, without the deeds of the law, by a righteousness which is imputed to us, and not by any righteousness inherent in us. This is proved in the first four chapters, by many irrefragable arguments, and vindicated from all objections. And then it is amplified in the seven following chapters. The amplification is first from the glorious effects and sweetest privileges of justification by faith, viz. peace with God, which no tribulation can hinder or interrupt, chap. v. 1—10. Then there is rejoicing with God, as reconciled through Jesus Christ, the Second Adam, who doth abundantly transcend the first Adam in many particulars, chap. v. 11—21. Then there is sanctification, in both the parts of it, as mortification and death to sin ; and vivification, or newness of life, chap. vi. throughout. The next is freedom from the law, as the first husband, now dead, chap. vii. throughout. And in the 8th chapter you have divers other privileges closely couched, as non-condemnation, adoption, the indwelling of the Spirit, the co-operations of all things for good, the certainty of the love of God, together with the triumph we have over all our enemies upon that account. Further, this doctrine of justification is amplified from the remote cause of it ; and that is, God's predestination or eternal counsel. This is brought in to obviate an objection against this doctrine, as not true, because the Jewish nation (God's ancient people) received it not. Thereupon the apostle shows, that justification belonged not to the whole nation of the Jews, but only to the elect amongst them ; the rest being rejected of God till the fulness of the Gentiles was come in ; and then the Jews should more generally believe and be converted. This you have at large in the 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters. The practical part of this Epistle follows, in which you have many useful exhortations, from the beginning of the 12th chapter to the 14th verse of the 15th chapter. These are either more general, or more particular, showing Christians how they should behave themselves with respect to the church of Christ, and the fellowship thereof, every one attending upon the calling and ministry wherein God hath placed him, chap. xii. ; with respect to the civil society, and the government which God had set over them in the world, yielding all subjection thereunto, chap. xiii. ; and with respect to their brethren and neighbours, exercising Christian charity towards all, avoiding censoriousness on the one hand and offences on the other, chap. xiv., xv. These duties he largely presseth, interweaving now and then many ethical and theological aphorisms, of which in their proper place.

CHAP. I

Paul, commending to the Romans his calling, greeteth them, 1—7; and professeth his concern for, and desire of coming to see them, 8—15. He sheweth that the gospel is for the justification of all mankind through faith, 16, 17. And having premised that sinners in general are obnoxious to God's wrath, he describeth at large the corruption of the Gentile world, 18—32.

PAUL, a servant of Jesus Christ, <sup>a</sup> called to be an apostle, <sup>b</sup> separated unto the Gospel of God,

<sup>a</sup> A servant of Jesus Christ, is a higher title than monarch of the world : several great emperors styled themselves Christ's vassals. He so calls himself, either in respect of his condition, which was common with him to all true Christians ; or else in respect of his office. Of old, they who were in great offices were called the servants of God : see Josh. i. 1 ; Neh. i. 6 ; Psal. cxxxii. 10. Or else in respect of his singular and miraculous conversion : by reason of which, he thought himself so obliged to Christ, that he wholly addicted or devoted himself to his service. Called to be an apostle ; appointed to that high office by the immediate call of Christ himself : see Gal. i. 1 ; Tit. i. 3. The history of this call you have in Acts ix. 15. Two things are couched in this phrase : 1. That he did not take this honour to himself, but was thereunto appointed and called of God. 2. That this apostolical dignity was not by any desert of his, but by grace only, and the free gift of him that calleth. It was formerly matter of admiration, and so it became a proverb in Israel, Is Saul also among the prophets ? And we may say, with great astonishment, Is Saul also among the apostles ? He that a little before had seen him doing what he is recorded to have done, Acts xxvi. 10, 11, would never have dreamed of any such thing. Separated ; either from his mother's womb, in the purpose of God, Gal. i. 15 ; so Jeremiah of old, Jer. i. 5. Or else it may have respect to Acts xiii. 2, where the Holy Ghost did actually order he should be separated for the work to which he had called him. The Greek word, in both places, is the same. Or else it may respect the more immediate commission he had from Christ himself, Acts ix. 15 ; xxvi. 16—18. Some think he alludes to the name of Pharisee, which is from separating : when he was a Pharisee, he was separated to the law of God ; and now, being a Christian, he was separated to the gospel of God. Unto the gospel of God ; that is, to the preaching and publishing of it. The gospel is sometimes called the gospel of God, as in this place ; and sometimes the gospel of Christ, as in the 16th verse of this chapter : it is said to be the gospel of God, because he is the author of it, it is not a human invention ; and it is said to be the gospel of Christ, because he is the matter and subject of it.

2 (<sup>c</sup> Which he had promised afore <sup>d</sup> by his prophets in the holy Scriptures,)

Which he had promised ; the meaning is not, that the history of the gospel was promised by the prophets, but that Jesus Christ, with all his benefits, (which is the direct subject of the gospel history and revelation,) was promised or foreshown by them. Afore ; this word is added to prevent the imputation of novelty : q. d. Let none object and say, the gospel is a new and modern doctrine ; for it was promised or foretold of old, by all the prophets which have been since the world began, Luke i. 70. By his prophets : by prophets we may understand, not only those which were commonly dignified with that title, but all those also whom God condescended to converse with in a familiar manner, revealing his secrets to them : that such are called prophets, see Gen. xx. 7 ; Psal. cv. 15. In the holy Scriptures ; to wit, of the Old Testament ; he hath respect to the oracles and promises therein contained, concerning Christ and his kingdom ; chiefly to Gen. iii. 15 ; xlix. 8, 10 ; Deut. xviii. 18 ; Psal. xvi. 10 ; xxii. ; xl. ; cx. 1 ; Isa. vii. 14 ; ix. 6 ; liii. ; lxiii. 1—3 ; Dan. ix. 24—26 ; Micah v. 2 ; Zech. ix. 9 ; Mal. iii. 1, &c. He hereby intimates, that there is a great harmony and consent betwixt the prophets and apostles, the doctrine of the Old Testament and the New ; see Luke xxiv. 44 ; John xii. 16 ; Acts x. 43. Our modern translators include this verse in a parenthesis ; the ancients did not.

3 Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, <sup>e</sup> which was <sup>f</sup> made of the seed of David according to the flesh ;

Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord : this phrase either respects the Holy Scriptures, mentioned immediately before in the 2nd verse ; the sum and substance of them is, concerning the Messiah, the Son of God : or else it respects the gospel, that was spoken of in the 1st verse ; the 2nd verse being only a parenthesis, as was before hinted ; then the meaning is, that the apostle Paul was separated to the gospel of God, which only or mainly concerns his Son Jesus Christ. And this seems to show the excellency of the gospel, that it doth not treat of vulgar and ordinary matters, as of the gods of the Gentiles, or the actions of Alexander, Cæsar, the Scipios, or such-like heroes ; but of the Son of God himself. Which was made ; i. e. as he afterwards expresseth it, according to the flesh, or his human nature : in regard of his Divine subsistence, he was a Acts 22. 21.

A. D. 60.
 1 Cor. 1. 1.
 Gal. 1. 1.
 1 Tim. 1. 11.
 2 Tim. 1. 11.
 b Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. Gal. 1. 15.

c See on Acts 26. 6. Tit. 1. 2. 3 ch. 3. 21. & 18. 26. Gal. 3. 8.

e Mat. 1. 6, 16. Luke 1. 32. Acts 3. 30. 2 Tim. 2. 8. f John 1. 14. Gal. 4. 4.

begotten and not made; in regard of his manhood, he was made and not begotten. When he says the Son of God was made, &c., it is undeniably implied, that he did exist before his incarnation, and was the Son of God before he was the Son of man. This place proves clearly these two truths: 1. That in the person of Jesus Christ there are two natures. 2. That there is betwixt these a communication of properties; here the Son of God is said to be made of the seed of David; and elsewhere the Son of man is said to have come down from heaven: see John iii. 13; compare John vi. 62; Acts xx. 28; 1 Cor. ii. 8. Of the seed of David; i. e. of the virgin Mary, who was of David's lineage and posterity; the promise was expressly, that the Messiah should be of the fruit of his loins, Acts ii. 30, compared with Isa. xi. 1; Jer. xxxiii. 5; Ezek. xxxiv. 24. Yea, this promise was so fully known to the Jews, that when they spake of the Messiah, they called him the Son of David: see Matt. xxi. 9; xxii. 42; Mark x. 47, 48; John vii. 42. Hence it is that the evangelists, Matthew and Luke, are so careful and industrious to prove, that the virgin Mary, and Joseph to whom she was espoused, did come of David's line and race.

+ Gr. determined.
<sup>g</sup> Acts 13. 33.
<sup>h</sup> Heb. 9. 14.

4 And † declared to be the Son of God with power, according <sup>h</sup> to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead:

Not made the Son of God, as he was said before to be made of the seed of David; but declared, or demonstrated, to be the Son of God. With power: this refers either to the word declared, and then the meaning is, he was powerfully or miraculously declared to be the Son of God; the Greek word ordinarily signifies a miracle in the New Testament: or else it refers to the last words, the Son of God; and then the sense is, he was declared to be the powerful and omnipotent Son of God, of the same power and majesty with the Father. By the spirit of holiness, some would understand the Third Person in the blessed Trinity, which is often called the Holy Spirit, and here the Spirit of holiness; but others, and they more rightly, do understand the Deity and Divine nature of Christ; this is called the Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 18; and the eternal Spirit, Heb. ix. 14; and here it is called the Spirit of holiness, or the most Holy Spirit, and that, probably, because of its effects; for thereby he sanctified his natural body, and still sanctifies his mystical body, the church. That this is the meaning is evident, by the opposition between the flesh and the Spirit: as according to the flesh, in the former verse, did signify his human nature; so according to the Spirit, in this verse, doth signify his Divine nature. See the like antithesis in 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 18. By the resurrection from the dead: because it is said, the resurrection of the dead, not from the dead, some would understand the words of Lazarus, and others, who by the power of Christ were raised from the dead; and others would understand the words of those who were raised with Christ, when he himself arose: see Matt. xxvii. 52, 53. But in Scripture the resurrection of the dead, is put for the resurrection from the dead; see 1 Cor. xv. 42; Heb. vi. 2; and hereby is meant the resurrection of Christ himself: he rose again from the dead, and thereby declared or manifested himself to be the Son of God with power: see John ii. 19, 21; v. 26; x. 18; 1 Cor. xv. 4. And though it be said in Scripture, that the Father raised him from the dead, Acts ii. 24; xiii. 30, 33; yet that doth not hinder but by his own power he raised himself; seeing the Father and he were one, and the works of the Three Persons in one and the same Essence are undivided.

<sup>1</sup> ch. 12. 3.
<sup>2</sup> 16. 15.
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 15. 10.
<sup>Gal.</sup> 1. 15.
<sup>2</sup> 9.
<sup>Eph.</sup> 3. 8.

5 By whom <sup>i</sup> we have received grace and apostleship, || for <sup>h</sup> obedience to the faith among all nations, <sup>1</sup> for his name:

† Or, to the obedience of faith. <sup>h</sup> Acts 6. 7. ch. 16. 26. <sup>1</sup> Acts 9. 15.

By whom; or of whom; by whom, as Mediator, or of whom, as Author and Giver. Grace and apostleship: some make these two distinct gifts; the one common, which is grace; the other special, which is apostleship: others think, that, by an endiadis, he means the grace of apostleship; which he so calls, because it was conferred upon him, not for any desert of his, but by the mere favour and free grace of God. It is his manner to call his apostleship by the name or style of grace: see chap. xv. 15; Gal. ii. 9; Eph. iii. 2, 8. For obedience to the faith; you have the same phrase, chap. xvi. 26, and there it is rendered for the obedience of faith. By faith here some understand the gospel or doctrine of faith; it hath this sense, Acts vi. 7; Jude 3, &c.; and then the meaning is, God, of his mere grace, hath given me this office, that I might bring the nations to believe, and work in them obedience to the doctrine of the gospel. Others understand the grace of faith; and then the meaning is, I have received this office, that I might bring the nations to believe, and so to obey the gospel. Therefore obedience is joined with faith, because by faith we obey the commands of God; and faith itself consists in obedience, and is the great command of the gospel. Among all nations; according to the general commission, Matt. xxviii. 19, and a more special commission to this apostle; see Acts ix. 15; Gal. ii. 7, 8; 1 Tim. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 11. For his name; that the nations might believe in his name; so some: others suppose these words are added to declare the end of Paul's preaching and apostleship, which was to set forth the glory and praise of Christ: see 2 Thess. i. 12.

6 Among whom are ye also called of Jesus Christ:

Among whom are ye also; the Romans are in this number, and a part of the nations to whom I have a commission, and for whom I have received the grace of apostleship. He adds this, to show his warrant for writing to them, he did it by virtue of his office; as also to humble them; for though they were Romans, and such as bore the greatest sway in the world, yet they were formerly pagans and idolaters. The called of Jesus Christ: though such were some of you, to wit, heathen idolaters; yet now you are Christians, and the called of Jesus Christ: called outwardly by his word, and inwardly by his Spirit. By effectual calling you are become his disciples and followers.

7 To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, <sup>m</sup> called to be saints: <sup>n</sup> Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

<sup>m</sup> ch. 9. 24.
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 1. 2.
<sup>1</sup> Thess. 4. 7.
<sup>n</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 3.
<sup>2</sup> Cor. 1. 2.
<sup>Gal.</sup> 1. 3.

To all that be in Rome; he doth not direct this Epistle to all that there inhabited, as to the emperor and senate, &c.; but to the church, and all the Christians there, as appears by the two following phrases. He wrote not to those only which were Romans by nation, but to all the faithful, whether Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, for they were all one and alike in Christ. They are deceived that think this Epistle, because directed to the Romans, was written in Latin. The Greek tongue was well understood in that city. Juvenal calls Rome a Greek city, because the inhabitants, as well natives as strangers, did some of them use, and most of them understand, that language. Called to be saints, or, called saints; though there might be hypocrites amongst them, yet they were denominated from the better part. The Jews of old were only accounted a holy nation or people; and the Gentiles, common or unclean; but now that difference is taken away, faith in Jesus Christ, and effectual calling, makes the Gentiles holy as well as the Jews. The name saint doth not denote a perfection in holiness, but one that is devoted and consecrated to God, who is holy in heart and life, though he hath many imperfections. Grace to you, and peace: under these two words, grace and peace, are comprehended all spiritual and temporal blessings. It is a usual salutation or benediction in the Epistles of this apostle: see 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2; Gal. i. 3; Eph. i. 2; Phil. i. 2; Col. i. 2; 2 Thess. i. 2; 1 Tim. i. 2; Tit. i. 4; Philem. 3. See the like in the Epistles of Peter, 1 Pet. i. 2; 2 Pet. i. 2. See also 2 John 3; Rev. i. 4. From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ: why is there no mention made here of the Holy Ghost? Ans. Because he is implied in his gifts: grace and peace are the fruits and gifts of the Holy Spirit. In other salutations the Holy Ghost is expressed; see 2 Cor. xiii. 14; and here, when the Father and Son are named, he is plainly implied.

<sup>o</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 4.
<sup>Phil.</sup> 1. 3.
<sup>Col.</sup> 1. 3. 4.
<sup>1</sup> Thess. 1. 2.
<sup>Phil.</sup> 4. 4.
<sup>p</sup> ch. 16. 19.
<sup>1</sup> Thess. 1. 5.

8 First, <sup>o</sup> I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that <sup>p</sup> your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

First, here, is not a word of order, for these follows no secondly, &c. ; but it serves to show, that here the Epistle begins, for all before was but a preface or inscription : q. d. In the first place. See the like, 1 Tim. ii. 1. Throughout the whole world, that is, through many parts of it; it is a figurative speech: see the like, John xiii. 19. Or else, by the whole world may be understood the Roman empire, which ruled at that time over a great part of the known world. See the like, Luke ii. 1. Besides, there was a resort to Rome from all parts of the world, and so this resort might be diffused far and near. The faith of the gospel at Rome made it more famous than all its victories and triumphs. Oh, how is Rome degenerated! We may take up the complaint concerning her which we find, Isa. i. 11, 12. The Romanists urge this place to prove Rome the mother church; but without reason: the church of Thesalonica had as high a eulogy: see 1 Thess. i. 8.

g ch. 9. 1.
2 Cor. 1. 23.
Phil. 1. 8.
1 Thess. 2. 5.
r Acts 27. 23.
2 Tim. 1. 3.
1 Or, in my spirit.
John 4. 23, 24. Phil. 3. 3. e 1 Thess. 3. 10.

9 For <sup>a</sup>God is my witness, <sup>r</sup>whom I serve || with my spirit in the Gospel of his Son, that <sup>r</sup>without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers;

God is my witness; in these words there is the force, if not the form, of an oath. See the like, 2 Cor. i. 18; xi. 31; Gal. i. 20. His great love and care of them was a hidden thing, and known only to God; to him therefore he appeals for the truth thereof. Oaths, in certain cases, are allowable under the New Testament, as well as the Old. With my spirit, i. e. sincerely, or with my whole heart: see Eph. vi. 6; 2 Tim. i. 3. Without ceasing, i. e. as often as he prayed. This was a great indication of his hearty affection to them.

t ch. 15. 23.
32. 1 Thess. 3. 10.
u Jam. 4. 15.

10 <sup>a</sup>Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey <sup>r</sup>by the will of God to come unto you.

Making request; this was one thing he requested of God, that what he had long desired and designed might happily (if it seemed good in God's sight) be at last accomplished, that he might come in person to them. This desire of Paul to see the Romans might be one cause of that appeal which he made to Rome, Acts xxv. 10, 11. By the will of God; he adds this, because, in publishing the gospel, he followed the order which God, by his Spirit, prescribed him: see Acts xvi. 7, 9, 10.

x ch. 15. 29.

11 For I long to see you, that <sup>a</sup>I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

He declares his end in desiring to see them; it was not his own profit, but their edification. By some spiritual gift, he means some one or other of those gifts of the Spirit, of which particular mention is made, 1 Cor. xii. 7—11. To the end ye may be established: q. d. I do not intend to bring any new doctrine to you, but to confirm and establish you in that which you have already heard and received. Establishing grace is that which all Christians stand in need of. See Rom. xvi. 25; 1 Thess. iii. 8, 13; 2 Thess. ii. 15—17.

12 That is, that I may be comforted together || with you by <sup>r</sup>the mutual faith both of you and me.

This is added to qualify what he had said before, lest he should seem to arrogate too much to himself; he tells them, he hoped not only to comfort them, but to be comforted by them. The meanest of Christ's members may contribute somewhat to the edifying even of an apostle. The apostle John did hope to be quickened and comforted by the graces of a woman and her children, 2 John 12. Great is the benefit of the communion of saints. By the mutual faith both of you and me; i. e. by the faith which you and I have in Jesus Christ; which he elsewhere calls the common faith, and the faith of God's elect. All true comfort springs from faith.

g ch. 15. 23.
a See Acta 16. 7.
1 Thess. 2. 16.
b Phil. 4. 17.
1 Or, in p. m.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that <sup>a</sup>oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but <sup>r</sup>was left hitherto,) that I might have some <sup>b</sup>fruit || among you also, even as among other Gentiles.

He prevents a cavil; they might say, If Paul hath such a longing desire to see us, why doth he not come to us? To this he answers, it was not for want of will or affection; for he often intended and attempted it. But was left hitherto; either by Satan, as 1 Thess. ii. 18; or by the Holy Spirit otherwise disposing of him, as Acts xvi. 6, 7; Rom. xv. 22. It is possible that he might be hindered also by his own infirmities, or by others' necessities and entreaties, Acts x. 48; xvi. 15; xxviii. 14. That I might have some fruit, i. e. of my ministry and calling, as the apostle of the uncircumcision. He hoped the gospel he should preach among them would have good success, and bring forth fruit in them, as it had done in other churches of the Gentiles. See Col. i. 6.

14 <sup>a</sup>I am debtor both to the Greeks, <sup>c</sup>1 Cor. 9. 15. and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise.

I am debtor; as being obliged by virtue of my calling, and as being intrusted by God with talents to that purpose. You are not beholden to me for this desire, as if it were an arbitrary favour, for it is my bounden duty. Both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; i. e. to all nations, which he divides into these two sorts, Greeks and Barbarians. The Jews he mentions not, because he was the doctor of the Gentiles. Both to the wise, and to the unwise; by these he understands particular persons among the Greeks and Barbarians, for there were among either of them some wise, and some unwise. The gospel is adapted to all sorts of persons, whether wise or simple.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also.

q. d. I have preached it at Antioch, at Athens, at Ephesus, at Corinth, &c.; and I am ready (if God permit) to preach it in the most splendid city of Rome likewise. So the reason is not in myself, or in my own will, why I have not come to you all this while.

16 For <sup>a</sup>I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: for <sup>r</sup>it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; <sup>r</sup>to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

Though Rome be the head of the empire, and the Romans bear the name of wise and learned persons; and though the gospel hath the show of simplicity, and is foolishness to the wise men of this world; yet I am not ashamed to own and publish this gospel of Christ. I do not shrink back, and withdraw myself, as men do from those things whereof they are ashamed. Neither indeed need I, because, how mean soever it seems to be to carnal eyes, yet it is the power of God unto salvation, &c.; not the essential power of God, but the organical power. See the like, 1 Cor. i. 18. The meaning is, it is a powerful means ordained of God for this purpose. Touching the efficacy and excellent power of the gospel for the conversion and salvation of the souls of men, see Isa. liii. 1; 1 Cor. iv. 15; 2 Cor. iv. 7; x. 4, 5; Heb. iv. 12; James i. 21. To every one that believeth; the gospel is offered unto all, but it profiteth unto salvation only those that believe; as a medicine is only effectual to those who receive or apply it. To the Jew first, and also to the Greek; the gospel was first to be published to the Jews, and then to the Gentiles, whom he here calls Greeks: see Luke xxiv. 47; Acts i. 8. This order the apostles accordingly kept and observed, Acts xiii. 46.

17 For <sup>a</sup>therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, <sup>b</sup>The just shall live by faith.

It will give light to this whole Epistle, to explain what is here meant by the righteousness of God. Some do thereby understand the whole doctrine of salvation and eternal life, which is revealed in the gospel; and they make it the same with the faith of God, chap. iii. 3, and with the truth of God, chap. iii. 7. Others, by the righteousness of God, do understand that righteousness whereby a man is justified, or stands just and righteous in the sight of God: and it is called the righteousness of God, to distinguish it from our own righteousness, chap. x. 3, and because it is appointed, approved, and accepted by him, it being d 1<sup>a</sup>. 40. 9.

10. Mark 8.
38. 2 Tim.
1. 8.
e 1 Cor. 1.
18. & 15. 2.
f Luke 2. 20.
31. 32. & 24.
47. Acta 3.
26. & 13. 26. 46. ch. 2. 9.

such as he himself can find no fault with. Further, it is called the righteousness of God, because it was performed by him, who is God as well as man, and imputed unto us: hence he is said to be made righteousness unto us, and we are said to be made the righteousness of God in him; we having his righteousness, as he had our sins, viz. by imputation. This is often called the righteousness of faith, because by faith it is apprehended and applied. And again, it is called the law of righteousness, chap. ix. 31, in opposition to that law of righteousness whereby the unbelieving Jews sought to be justified. Revealed; the law of God discovers no such way of justifying a sinner, nor is it taught by reason or philosophy: the gospel only makes a revelation of it; which occasioned the apostle's glorying in it. From faith to faith: this apostle seems to delight in such repetitions, and there is an elegance in them: see chap. vi. 19; 2 Cor. ii. 16; iii. 18. The words are variously interpreted: from the faith of the Old Testament to the faith of the New; so that no person ever was or shall be justified in any other way. Or, from a lesser faith to a greater; not noting two faiths, but one and the same faith increasing to perfection. He saith not, from faith to works, or from works to faith; but from faith to faith, i. e. only by faith. The words to be must be understood: q. d. The gospel reveals the righteousness of God to be from faith to faith. The beginning, the continuance, the accomplishment of our justification is wholly absolved by faith. The just shall live by faith: some refer these words, by faith, to the subject of this proposition, the just; and thus they render it, The just by faith shall live; and so read, the foregoing proposition is the better proved thereby. There is some difficulty to understand the fitness of this testimony to prove the conclusion in hand; for it is evident, that the prophet Habakkuk, in whom these words are found, doth speak of a temporal preservation; and what is that to eternal life? Answer. The Babylonian captivity figured out our spiritual bondage under sin and Satan; and deliverance from that calamity did shadow forth our deliverance from hell, to be procured by Christ: compare Isa. xl. 2—4, with Matt. iii. 3. Again, general sentences applied to particular cases, are not thereby restrained to those particulars, but still retain the generality of their nature: see Matt. xix. 6. Again, one and the same faith apprehends and gives us interest in all the promises of God; and as by it we live in temporal dangers, so by it we are freed from eternal destruction.

i Acts 17, 30.
Eph. 5, 6.
Col. 3, 6.

18 <sup>i</sup>For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness;

He proceeds to prove the principal proposition laid down in the foregoing verse; the causal particle for implies as much. Men must be justified by the righteousness of God, because they have no righteousness of their own to justify them, they themselves are all unrighteous. This he proves both of the Gentiles and Jews. He begins with the Gentiles, and proves it upon them, from this verse to the 17th verse of the 2nd chapter; and then he proves it upon the Jews also, from thence to the end of the 3rd chapter. The wrath of God is revealed; it is revealed in the word of God, or rather, by the judgments which he inflicteth. From heaven; i. e. from God in heaven. Plagues and judgments spring not out of the dust, proceed not originally from second causes, much less do they come by chance. Against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men: the abstract is put for the concrete; he means unrighteous and ungodly men; but he chooseth this way of speaking, because God, when he punisheth, aims at the sins of men; and would not punish their persons, but for their sins. By ungodliness, understand sins against the first table, which are mentioned ver. 21, 23: by unrighteousness, sins against the second, of which there is mention at large, from ver. 26 to the end of the chapter. Who hold the truth in unrighteousness: by truth, understand all that light which is left in man since the fall. There are in all men some common notions of God, his nature and will; some common principles also of equity and charity towards men, which nature itself teacheth, and upon which the consciences of the Gentiles did accuse or excuse them. These natural notions concerning God and their neighbour they did not obey and follow, but wickedly suppressed them. They imprisoned the truth which they acknowledged, that they might sin the more securely. The metaphor is taken from tyrants, who oppress the innocent, and imprison them: so the Gentiles did by the truth which they had by nature, they kept it in and under.

19 Because <sup>k</sup>that which may be known of God is manifest <sup>l</sup>in them; for <sup>m</sup>God hath shewed it unto them.

k Acts 14, 17.
l Or, 19
m John 1, 9.

That which may be known of God; or, that which is knowable of God, viz. by the light of nature. The apostle, by a prolepsis, prevents an objection which some might make in excuse of the Gentiles: how could they suffocate or suppress the truth, seeing they wanted the Scripture, and were without the knowledge of it? To this he answers, that they were not wholly without knowledge, for that which might be known of God was manifest in them, and revealed to them. Is manifest in them, i. e. in their heart and minds; see chap. ii. 15: or, to and among them; as appears by many of their learned writers, who have left behind them many clear discourses, and wise essays and sayings, about this matter, though they themselves did act contrary thereunto. For God hath showed it unto them; i. e. as before, by the light of nature in their consciences, or by the consideration of the creatures, as it follows in the next verse.

20 For <sup>n</sup>the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; <sup>o</sup>so that they are without excuse:

n Ps. 19, 1.
o Acts 14, 17.
o 17, 27.

o Or, that they may be.

Because it might be further objected in behalf of the Gentiles, that the notions of God imprinted in their nature are so weak, that they may be well excused; therefore the apostle adds, that the certainty of them is further confirmed by the book of the creatures, which was written before them in capital letters, so that he that runs may read. The invisible things of him: the apostle tells us afterwards himself what he means by the invisible things of God, viz. his being and his attributes, particularly his eternity and almighty power; to which we might add, his wisdom, goodness, &c. These, though invisible in themselves, yet are discernible by his works, and that ever since the creation of the world. By what they see created, they may easily collect or understand, that there is an eternal and almighty Creator; they may argue from the effects to the cause. So that they are without excuse: some render it, that they may be without excuse; but it is better rendered in our translation: the meaning is not, that God gave them that knowledge for this end and purpose, that they might be inexcusable, for they might catch even at that for an excuse; but the plain sense is this, that God hath given all men such means of knowledge as sufficeth to leave them without excuse, there can be no pretence of ignorance.

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but <sup>p</sup>became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

p 2 Kings 17, 15. Jer. 2, 5. Eph. 4, 17, 18.

Because; either this must be referred to the words immediately foregoing, and then it is a reason why the Gentiles are inexcusable, because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, &c.; or else it refers to ver. 18, and then it is a proof of their withholding the truth in unrighteousness, because, &c. They knew God; they had a natural knowledge of God, it was taught them, as before, by the light of nature, and by the book of the creatures. Though this was not sufficient to save them, yet it was sufficient to leave them without excuse. They glorified him not as God; they did not conceive of him and worship him as became his Divine excellencies and perfections; see Psal. xxix. 2. Neither were thankful; they did not own God to be the Author and Giver of all the good things they enjoyed, and return him thanks accordingly; but referred all to chance and fortune, their own prudence and providence, the influence of the stars, &c. But became vain in their imaginations, or reasonings. This hath chief respect to the conception and opinions that the heathen framed to themselves of the Divine Being. For though some denied there was a God, and others doubted thereof, yet generally it was acknowledged by them; yea, some owned a multiplicity of gods, and those either corporeal or incorporeal. Others acknowledged but one God, as Plato, Aristotle, &c.; but then they either denied his providence, as the Peripatetics, or tied him to second or inferior causes, as the Stoics. This is the vanity which the apostle here speaketh of. Note also, that idols, the frame of idle brains, are called vanities: see Deut. xxxii. 21; Jer. x. 15; Acts xiv. 15. And their foolish heart was darkened: by the heart is meant the mind, their very understandings were darkened, the natural reason in them was obscured. This was a just judgment upon them for their abuse of knowledge, and pride, of which in the next verse.

o Jer. 10. 14. 22 °Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools,

Some think, that all along this context the apostle hath reference to the Gnostics, a sort of heretics in the first age, (of which see Dr. Hammond in locum.) and that the meaning of the words is this, That they, assuming the title of Gnostics, of knowing men, and of men wiser than others, have proved more sottish than any. Others think the words refer to the heathen philosophers, who though they were learned and wise in secular and natural things, yet they became fools in spiritual and heavenly matters; though they well understood the creature, yet they erred concerning the Creator. And as fools delight in toys, neglecting things of great value; so they set up puppets and idols of their own devising, in the room of the true God; which the apostle gives us in the next verse, as a demonstration of their folly. Socrates, who was accounted one of the wisest amongst them, desired his friends, when he was about to die, to offer for him a cock to Æsculapius, which he had vowed.

p Deut. 4. 16, &c. Ps. 106. 20. Is. 40. 18, 26. Jer. 2. 11. Ezek. 8. 10. Acts 17. 20. 23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.

Changed the glory of the uncorruptible God; you have the same phrase, Psal. cvi. 20; Jer. ii. 11; and from thence it is borrowed. Into an image made like to corruptible man, &c.: the apostle proceedeth from the more worthy to the less worthy creatures, that the grossness of their idolatry might the better appear; and these four are put for all other kinds. This gross idolatry of the heathen in worshipping such images as are here spoken of, was practised by the Israelites; see Ezek. viii. 10, 11: and so it is by the Romanists to this day; nor doth it avail them to say, they do not worship images, but the true God in or before those images; for the same plea was made by the idolaters of old. Symmachus, in a learned oration, wherein he craved of the emperors Valentinian and Theodosius the restitution of the Roman gods, affirms, that they had respect only to one God; but they had divers ways to bring them to that God: they did not hold such things as they worshipped to be God, but in them they said they worshipped the true God. That worship which is intended to God by an image, is not the worship of God, but of the image. Compare Psal. cvi. 19, 20, with Exod. xxxii. 4, 5.

q Ps. 51. 12. Wisd. 12. 23. Acts 7. 42. Eph. 4. 18. 19. 2 Thess. 2. 11, 12. 1 Cor. 6. 18. 1 Thess. 4. 4. 1 Pet. 4. 3. 24 ¶Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves:

Wherefore; their impiety was the cause of what followed: this is repeated again, that it may be the better observed. The contempt of God and of religion is the cause of all wickedness. God also gave them up; this phrase is thrice used in this context, viz. ver. 24, 26, 28: it seems to be taken out of Psal. lxxxii. 12. Some think his giving them up, is only his withdrawing his grace from them, and permitting them to sin; but there seems to be more in it than a bare subtraction or permission. He did not only leave them to themselves, but, in a judicial way, he put them into the hands of Satan, and of their own lusts; as it is said, Psal. lxxxii. 27, he added iniquity to their iniquity, making the latter iniquity a punishment of the former. Between themselves; some read it, in themselves, and some read it, one among another; so the same word is rendered, Eph. iv. 32; Col. iii. 13. The apostle here speaks more generally of all kinds of pollution and uncleanness that was committed by them, whether natural or unnatural.

25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

Who changed the truth of God into a lie; i. e. the God of truth, or the true God, into an idol, which is a lie, which seems to be that which it is not: or else, by the truth of God, understand those true sentiments and notions that they had of God, and were taught them, as before, by the light of nature, and the book of the creatures; these they changed into lying imaginations and conceits. And worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator; or, besides the Creator: some understand it comparatively, they worshipped one more than the other; others exclusively, they worshipped one and not the other. They were guilty of two great errors; one was in their minds, they changed the truth of God into a lie; the other in their wills, they served the creature more than the Creator. Who is blessed for ever. Amen: when the Hebrews of old made mention of the true God, they were wont to add these words, Let him be blessed for ever.

26 For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature:

For this cause; i. e. for their idolatry and uncleanness both, for now their idolatry is aggravated by the uncleanness accompanying it. Vile affections; Gr. affections of dishonour, i. e. the most dishonourable and shameful affections; for as we are exhorted, 1 Thess. iv. 4, 5, to possess our vessels in honour, that is, to withhold our body from uncleanness; so they that give up themselves to uncleanness, dishonour themselves and their own bodies; see 1 Cor. vi. 18: if they, as this scripture tells us, that commit fornication dishonour their own bodies; then much more do they that practise the unnatural uncleanness hereafter mentioned. For even their women, &c.; i. e. γυναῖκες ἀνδρογυναι, so Clem. Alexandr. Ad præposteros et sodomiticus concubitus sese maribus prostituerunt. See Paræus: a filthy practice not to be named, Eph. v. 3.

27 And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet.

This was the sin of the Sodomites of old, for which they were destroyed, Gen. xix. 5: see Lev. xviii. 22. How meet was it that they who had forsaken the Author of nature, should be given up not to keep the order of nature; that they who had changed the glory of God into the similitude of beasts, should be left to do those things which beasts themselves abhorred! God only concurred as a just judge in punishing foregoing with following sins: see ver. 25.

28 ¶And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient;

To retain God in their knowledge; or, to have God in acknowledgment. The apostle proceeds to show the analogy betwixt their sin and their punishment. The evil he here taxed them with is much the same with that in ver. 21; though they had some knowledge of God, yet they did not acknowledge him as God, by glorifying him, and giving thanks to him; it did not seem good to them so to do. God gave them over to a reprobate mind; or, an injudicious mind, a mind void of judgment. It is just and equal, that he, who in his judgment disapproves of God, should be left either to be of a corrupt judgment, or of none at all. The word may be taken passively, for a mind disapproved of 1 Thes. 1. 9. 1 John 5. 20. 1 Is. 44. 20. Jer. 10. 14. & 13. 25. Amos 2. 4. Or, rather.

x Lev. 18. 22, 23. Eph. 5. 12. Jude 10.

¶Wisd. 14. 22, 23, &c. Or, to acknowledge. ¶A mind void of judgment. 2 Eph. 5. 4.

God; or actively, for a mind which disapproves of all good. They were not given up to this reprobate mind all at once, but by degrees. First, they were given up to their own hearts' lusts, ver. 24; then, to vile affections, ver. 26; and then, lastly, to a mind void of judgment; to such an evil habit, that they could do nothing but evil.

29 Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers,

Now follow the sins against the second table, which reigned amongst the Gentiles; amongst which unrighteousness is as the fountain, from whence the rest as streams do flow. This is the genus that comprehends all the evils hereafter enumerated. It is not to be supposed that all the following vices were found in every individual person; but the meaning is, that all were guilty of some, and some were guilty of all of them. Fornication, wickedness; in the Greek there is an elegant paronomasia, πορνεία, πορνεία. So there are two more in the following verses, φθόνη, φθόνη, ἀσύνθετοι, ἀσύνθετοι. The design of the apostle is, to set down a particular vice; therefore, instead of wickedness, some read troublesomeness, or a desire to procure trouble and molestation to another. The devil is called ὁ πονηρός, the troublesome one. Maliciousness; or, mischievousness, the better to distinguish it from envy. Malignity; or, morosity and churlishness, taking all things in the worse part. Whisperers: whisperers speak evil privily of others; backbiters, openly.

30 Backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents,

Haters of God; the original word hath a passive termination, and therefore some read it, hatred of God. But words passive are sometimes actively taken: see 2 Pet. i. 3. And the apostle here intendeth a catalogue of the Gentiles' sins, whereof this was one: see Psal. lxxxi. 15. Despiteful; or, injurious. Inventors of evil things; they were not contented with old usual evils, but they invented new; whether we refer this to evils of pain, or evils of sin, we may find examples thereof amongst the heathen. Phalaris propounded a reward to him that could devise a new torment; and Sardanapalus offered rewards to such as could find out new venereal pleasures. Disobedient to parents, either natural or political.

31 Without understanding, covenant-breakers, || without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

Without understanding; or, without conscience; σύνεσις, or συνείδησις, being much the same. Without natural affection; this evil also reigned amongst the Gentiles, who sacrificed their very children to their idols, and otherwise exposed them to ruin: see 2 Tim. iii. 3. Implacable; or, irreconcilable and vindictive.

32 Who *knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but || have pleasure in them that do them.

Knowing the judgment of God; i. e. his just law and statute, or his justice in punishing sin and sinners. This the Gentiles knew by the light of nature, and by the examples of God's justice in the world. That they which commit such things are worthy of death; the barbarians of Melita judged murder worthy of death, Acts xxviii. 4: see Acts xxiii. 29; xxvi. 31. The heathen also had some knowledge of future and everlasting punishment, as appears by their writings: and were persuaded that the sins before-mentioned, and such-like, did really deserve it. Have pleasure in them that do them; or, patronize and applaud such; see Psal. x. 3. This is set last, as worst of all; it is the highest degree of wickedness: such come nearest the devil, who take pleasure in evil because it is evil.

CHAP. II

They that condemn sin in others, and are guilty of the like themselves, cannot escape God's judgment, 1—5; which will be according to every man's deserts, without distinction of Jew or Gentile, 6—13. The Gentiles are not left without a rule of conduct, 14—16. The Jew, who boasteth of greater light, is doubly criminal in sinning against it, 17—24; nor will circumcision profit him, except he keep the law, 25—29.

THEREFORE thou art <sup>a</sup>inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: <sup>b</sup>for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things.

It is much disputed to whom the apostle directs his discourse in the beginning of this chapter. Some think that having discovered the sins of the Gentiles in the former chapter, he here useth a transition, and turneth himself to the Jews, and lays open their more secret wickedness and hypocrisy. But the particle therefore in the front of the chapter, doth seem to intimate, that this is inferred from what went before, and is a continuance of the same argument. It is of the Gentiles then that he is still discoursing, and he begins by name to deal with the Jews, ver. 17. Some think he speaks more particularly of such as were judges and magistrates amongst the Gentiles, who, though they made laws for to judge and punish others for such and such crimes, did yet commit the same themselves. Some think he intends more especially such as were philosophers, and men renowned for virtue, as Socrates, Aristides, Fabricius, Cato, Seneca, &c., which last, as is said, was well known to the apostle. These, in their speeches and writings, did censure the evil manners of others, and yet were as bad themselves. As Cato is said to have used extortion, prostituted his wife, and to have laid violent hands upon himself; and yet he was affirmed by Velleius to be homo virtuti simillimus, a most virtuous man. But the received opinion is, that the apostle in general doth tax all such as censure and find fault with others, and yet are guilty of the same things themselves. Thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: q. d. Thou art without all excuse, that dost assent and subscribe to the righteous judgment of God, that they who do such things as are mentioned in the foregoing chapter, are worthy of death, and yet doest the same thyself; if not openly, yet secretly and inwardly thou art guilty of the same or as great sins. Thou canst make no apology or pretence, why the sentence of death and condemnation, which is due to others, should not likewise pass upon thee. For wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; i. e. in that very thing, or by that very law, whereby thou censurist and condemnest others, thou pronouncest sentence against thyself; thy own mouth condemns thee in the person of another: see Matt. vii. 3; xxi. 40, 41, 45; John viii. 4, 9.

2 But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things.

We know assuredly, and it is evident, both from Scripture and reason, that God's judgment, both here and hereafter, is true and upright; see 1 Sam. xvi. 7. He judgeth righteous judgment; he judgeth of persons and things, not as they are in appearance, but as they are in reality. Against them which commit such things; this indefinite manner of speaking includeth both those that judge others, and those who, for the aforementioned sins, are subject to the censures of others.

3 And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?

When other men's facts escape not thy censure, who art but a man; what folly and madness is it to imagine, that thine own evil deeds should escape the judgment of God! See 1 John iii. 20.

4 Or despisest thou <sup>c</sup>the riches of his goodness and <sup>d</sup>forbearance and <sup>e</sup>long-

<sup>1</sup> Or, unassociable.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 2. 2.
<sup>b</sup> ch. 6. 21.
<sup>1</sup> Or, consent with them.
<sup>c</sup> Hos. 7. 3.
<sup>1</sup> Is. 50. 1E.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 1. 20.
<sup>b</sup> 2 Sam. 12. 5, 6, 7.
Matt. 7. 1, 2.
John 8. 9.

<sup>c</sup> ch. 9. 23.
Eph. 1. 7.
<sup>d</sup> 2. 4, 7.
<sup>e</sup> ch. 3. 25.
<sup>1</sup> 1 Cor. 13. 6.

1 <sup>1</sup> suffering; <sup>2</sup> not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

Here he taxeth such as thought God approved of their persons and courses, at least that he would not regard or punish their evil actions, because he had hitherto forborne them, and heaped up abundance of worldly blessings upon them, as he did upon the Romans especially, above other people. It is common for men to grow secure, and promise themselves impunity, when God forbears them, and gives them outward prosperity: see Psal. l. 21; lv. 19; Eccles. viii. 11; Hos. xii. 8. Despiseest thou? the word signifies, to think amiss; he despiseth the goodness of God, who thinks otherwise of it than he should, that it is extended to him for other ends than it is: or, to despise the goodness of God, is, to turn it into wantonness. The riches of his goodness; i. e. The abundance of his goodness: see chap. ix. 23; Eph. i. 7, 18; ii. 4, 7; iii. 8. Forbearance and long-suffering; God's long-suffering is a further degree of his forbearance: the Scripture speaks much of this attribute of God, and of his abounding therein, Exod. xxxiv. 6; Numb. xiv. 11, 18; Psal. lxxxvi. 15; Matt. xxiii. 37; Rom. ix. 22; 1 Tim. i. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 20. The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance; that is one great end of God's goodness and forbearance; see Hos. xi. 4; 2 Pet. iii. 9. God's goodness is abused when it is not used and improved to this end.

5 But after thy hardness and impenitent heart <sup>6</sup> treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;

Treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath; this passage seems to respect Deut. xxxii. 34, 35, or Job xxxvi. 13. You have a parallel place, James v. 3. The meaning is, Thou provokest more and more the wrath of God against thee; by heaping up sins, thou heapest up judgments of God upon thyself: just as men add to their treasure of wealth, so dost thou add to thy treasure of punishment. Revelation of the righteous judgment of God; this is a periphrasis of the day of judgment, or of the last day: then will God visit for those sins that here escape punishment; then the justice and equity of his proceedings shall appear, and all shall have reason to approve thereof.

6 <sup>h</sup> Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

This proves what he had said, that the judgment of God, in that day, will be according to righteousness, or most righteous judgment. Parallel places you will find, Psal. lxxii. 12; Matt. xvi. 27; 2 Cor. v. 10; Rev. xxii. 12. The papists from hence infer the merit of works; but the reward to the godly is a reward of grace, and not of debt. The word ἀποδοῦναι imports not only a just retribution, but a free gift, as in Matt. xx. 8, and elsewhere. Good works are the rule of his proceeding, not the cause of his retribution: see Luke xvii. 10.

7 To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life:

What he had laid down in general, he amplifies more particularly. Patient continuance; or perseverance in well-doing, which implies patience: see Matt. x. 22; xxiv. 13; Heb. x. 36. Immortality; or incorruption: he adds this to show, that the glory and honour he speaks of was not such as the Gentiles usually sought, who made worldly glory the scope of their actions; but it was eternal in the heavens, and such as never fades away. Eternal life; i. e. God will render eternal life to such: the word render must be supplied out of the former verse.

8 But unto them that are contentious, and <sup>1</sup> do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath,

That are contentious; or, that are of contention: so, they of the circumcision, for such as are circumcised, Acts x. 45; Gal. ii. 12. By contentious, understand such as are refractory and self-willed; that, from a spirit of contradiction, will not be persuaded; that strive and kick against the righteousness of God, from an opinion of their own righteousness, Hos. iv. 4. Do not obey the truth: see chap. i. 18, and the note there. But obey unrighteousness; that are the servants of sin, and of corruption, chap. vi. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 19. Indignation and wrath; these two differ only in degree: thereby understand the judgments of God upon the wicked, which are the effects of his anger: the cause is commonly put for the effect.

9 Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew <sup>1</sup> first, and also of the † Gentile;

Tribulation and anguish; the word render is here again understood, he shall render tribulation and anguish. Some refer the former to the punishment of sin, the latter to the punishment of loss; or the one to the unquenchable fire, the other to the never-dying worm: it seems to be a rhetorical exaggeration: see Psal. xi. 6; Mark ix. 43—48. Every soul of man; a double Hebraism: first, the soul is put for the person, as Gen. xii. 5; xiv. 21; xvii. 14; xxxvi. 6; xlvii. 26. Secondly, every soul of man, is put for the soul of every man; as before, chap. i. 18, all unrighteousness of men, is put for the unrighteousness of all men. The soul of man shall not be punished only, but chiefly. Of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; the Jew is first placed in order of punishment, because he better knew God's will, and had more helps: see Matt. xi. 22, 24; Luke xii. 47.

10 <sup>1</sup> But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the † Gentile:

Peace; what he called immortality, ver. 7, he now calls peace; which word, according to the usual acceptation of it amongst the Hebrews, is comprehensive of all good and happiness, both here and hereafter. To the Jew first, and also to the Gentile; as the ungodly and unbelieving Jews shall have the first place in punishment, so those that believe and are godly amongst them shall have the first place in reward, though yet, for the reason mentioned in the next verse, the godly and believing Gentiles shall share with them therein.

11 For <sup>m</sup> there is no respect of persons with God.

This seems to be borrowed from 2 Chron. xix. 7, and Deut. x. 17. You have the same again, Acts x. 34: see Job xxxiv. 19; Gal. ii. 6; iii. 28; Eph. vi. 9; 1 Pet. i. 17. Obj. God loved Jacob, and hated Esau, when they were yet unborn, and had done neither good nor evil. Ans. This was not properly a respecting of persons, because God did not this as a judge, but as an elector: so the apostle states it, Rom. ix. 11—13. God is gracious to whom he will be gracious, and may do what he will with his own.

12 For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law;

By the former he means the Gentiles, by the latter, the Jews; the like distribution he makes, 1 Cor. ix. 20, 21. In the law; i. e. under the law, or against it.

13 (For <sup>n</sup> not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.

This and the two following verses are included in a parenthesis, and they serve to obviate an objection against what was said, ver. 12. The Jews might plead, that they were superior to the Gentiles, and should be exempted or privileged in judgment, forasmuch as they knew and professed the law of God, which the Gentiles did not. To this he says, that to know and learn the law was not sufficient, unless in all things they yielded obedience to it, which they neither did nor could. The scope of the apostle is not simply to show how sinners are now justified in the sight of God; but to show what is requisite to justification according to the tenor of the law, and that is, to do all that is written therein, and to continue so to do. And if there be any man that can bring such perfect and constant obedience of his own performing, he shall be justified by God; but inasmuch as no man, neither natural nor regenerate,

1 <sup>1</sup> In. 30, 18.
2 <sup>2</sup> Pet. 3, 9.
15.

g <sup>g</sup> Deut. 32.
34. Jan. 5, 3.

h <sup>h</sup> Job 24, 11.
Ps. 62, 12.
Prov. 24, 12.
Jer. 17, 10.

4 <sup>4</sup> 32, 19. Matt. 16, 27. ch. 14, 12. 1 Cor. 3, 8, 2 Cor. 5, 10. Rev. 2, 23, & 20, 12, & 22, 12.

This proves what he had said, that the judgment of God, in that day, will be according to righteousness, or most righteous judgment. Parallel places you will find, Psal. lxxii. 12; Matt. xvi. 27; 2 Cor. v. 10; Rev. xxii. 12. The papists from hence infer the merit of works; but the reward to the godly is a reward of grace, and not of debt. The word ἀποδοῦναι imports not only a just retribution, but a free gift, as in Matt. xx. 8, and elsewhere. Good works are the rule of his proceeding, not the cause of his retribution: see Luke xvii. 10.

7 To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life:

What he had laid down in general, he amplifies more particularly. Patient continuance; or perseverance in well-doing, which implies patience: see Matt. x. 22; xxiv. 13; Heb. x. 36. Immortality; or incorruption: he adds this to show, that the glory and honour he speaks of was not such as the Gentiles usually sought, who made worldly glory the scope of their actions; but it was eternal in the heavens, and such as never fades away. Eternal life; i. e. God will render eternal life to such: the word render must be supplied out of the former verse.

8 But unto them that are contentious, and <sup>1</sup> do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath,

That are contentious; or, that are of contention: so, they of the circumcision, for such as are circumcised, Acts x. 45; Gal. ii. 12. By contentious, understand such as are refractory and self-willed; that, from a spirit of contradiction, will not be persuaded; that strive and kick against the righteousness of God, from an opinion of their own right-k <sup>k</sup> Amos 3, 2.

Luke 12, 47.
48. 1 <sup>1</sup> Pet. 4, 17.

† † Gr. Greek.

l <sup>l</sup> 1 <sup>1</sup> Pet. 1, 7.

† † Gr. Greek.

m <sup>m</sup> Deut. 10.
17. 2 <sup>2</sup> Chron.
19, 7. Job 34.
1 <sup>1</sup> Pet. 1, 17.

n <sup>n</sup> Mat. 7, 21.
Jan. 1, 22.
23, 25.
1 <sup>1</sup> John 3, 7.

can so fulfil the law, he must seek for justification in some other way. The text, (thus expounded, doth no way militate with chap. iii. 30, and Gal. iii. 11, which at first reading it seems to do. And it further shows, that the Jews are comprehended under the general curse, as well as the Gentiles, and are bound to have recourse to the righteousness of God by faith.

14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves :

Here he preoccupates the Gentiles' plea. They might object, that having not the law, they could not transgress, nor be culpable in judgment : see chap. iv. 15. To this he says, that though they had not the law written in tables of stone, as the Jews had, yet they had a law written in their hearts, which was a copy or counterpart of the other, and had in a manner the effects of it ; for thereby they were instructed to do well, and debarred from doing evil, which are the two properties of all laws. Do by nature ; nature is opposed to Scripture and special revelation : by the direction of the law, and light of nature, they did many things which the law of Moses commanded, and forbore many things which it forbade. Are a law unto themselves ; i. e. they have in themselves such principles of reason and rules of equity, as are to them instead of a law, prescribing what they ought to do and avoid.

15 Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, || their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts || the mean while accusing or else excusing one another ;

By the work of the law, either understand the sum of the law, which is, To love God above all, and our neighbour as ourselves ; or the office of the law, which consists in directing what to do, and what to leave undone ; or the external actions which the law prescribes. Written in their hearts ; this seems to be a covenant promise and privilege, Jer. xxxi. 33 ; how then is it predicated of the Gentiles ? Answer. Jeremiah speaks there of a special and supernatural inscription or writing in the heart by grace ; and the apostle here, of that which is common and natural. Their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another ; interchangeably, now one way, anon another. Not as though the thoughts did, at the same time, strive together about the same fact ; nor is it meant of divers men, as if good men were excused, and bad men accused, by their own thoughts ; but in the same persons there were accusing or excusing thoughts and consciences, as their actions were evil or good.

16 ° In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men <sup>p</sup> by Jesus Christ <sup>q</sup> according to my Gospel.

These words may be referred to the 12th verse, and so they express the time when Jews and Gentiles shall be judged. Though some annex them to the words immediately preceding : q. d. Now the consciences of men do testify for or against them, and their thoughts accuse or excuse them ; but in the day of judgment they will do it more especially. Shall judge the secrets of men ; so that the most secret sins shall not escape the notice and censure of the Judge : see Eccles. xii. 14 ; 1 Cor. iv. 5. My gospel ; i. e. the gospel which I preach. So, John xii. 48, our Saviour calls his word, his disciples' word. He calls it his gospel, not as the author, but as the publisher of it ; it was not his in respect of revelation, but in regard of dispensation, chap. xvi. 25 ; 1 Cor. ix. 17 ; 2 Cor. v. 18, 19 ; 2 Tim. ii. 8. As for the fiction of a Gospel written by Paul, as was by Matthew, Mark, &c., the papists themselves begin to be ashamed of it.

17 Behold, <sup>r</sup> thou art called a Jew, and <sup>s</sup> 'restest in the law, 'and makest thy boast of God,

He now comes to deal more particularly and expressly with the Jews, reciting their privileges, in which they trusted, and of which they boasted ; and shows, that notwithstanding them, they stood in as much need of the righteousness of God as the Gentiles did. Thou ; he speaks in the singular number, that every one might make the reader application of what he said. Art called a Jew ; so called from Judah ; as of old, Hebrews from Heber, and Israelites from Israel : the title was honourable in those days, and imported a confessor or worshipper of one God. Thou art so called, but art not so indeed : see ver. 28, and Rev. ii. 9. Restest in the law ; puttest thy trust in it. Makest thy boast of God ; that he is thy God, and in covenant with thee ; and that thou hast a peculiar interest in him : see John viii. 41. The phrase seems to be borrowed from Isa. xlv. 25.

18 And <sup>t</sup> knowest his will, and || <sup>u</sup> 'approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law ;

19 And <sup>v</sup> 'art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness,

Art confident ; thou dost proudly arrogate all that follows to thyself, and conceitest that thou hast all the points of the law in thy breast, and full knowledge of all the secrets thereof.

20 An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, <sup>w</sup> which hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law.

Babes ; such as have little or no knowledge. The form of knowledge ; a scheme or system of notions, a compendious model or method, which is artificially composed ; such as tutors and professors of arts and sciences, do read over again and again to their pupils and auditors.

21 <sup>x</sup> 'Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?

Teachest thou not thyself? q. d. Dost not thou thyself do what thou preessest upon others ? see Matt. xxiii. 3. Dost thou steal? the Jews were infamous of old for this sin, Psal. l. 18 ; Matt. xxiii. 14.

22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, <sup>y</sup> dost thou commit sacrilege?

Dost thou commit adultery? to this sin also the Jews were greatly addicted : see Psal. l. 18 ; Jer. v. 8. Dost thou commit sacrilege? here he varies the crime ; he does not say, Dost thou commit idolatry, but sacrilege. The Jews, after their return out of captivity, kept themselves free from idolatry ; but it seems they were guilty of a sin that was near akin to it. Here it may be questioned, what the sacrilege was that the Jews were guilty of. Some think, their covetousness is here taxed, which is a kind of idolatry. The Jews took those things which were consecrated to idols, and which, by the law of God, should have been destroyed, and turned them to their private advantage. Others think, that their sacrilege consisted in withholding from God that which they should have consecrated and offered up to him ; see 1 Sam. ii. 13 ; Mal. iii. 8, 9 ; they converted to their own use such things as were dedicated to God. Much to the same purpose is their opinion, that think it consisted in robbing God of his due. By the imperial law in the code, it is declared sacrilege to take from the emperor any thing that is his ; it ought to be much more accounted sacrilege to deal so with God. Some think their sacrilege lay in polluting the worship of God, and making his commands of no effect, through their corrupt additions and traditions.

23 Thou that <sup>z</sup> 'makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God?

Dost thou bring a reproach upon religion, and give occasion to the Gentiles to blaspheme his name ? so it follows in the next words.

|| Or, the conscience witnesseth with them. || Or, between themselves.

<sup>a</sup> Psal. 50. 16. &c. <sup>b</sup> Matt. 23. 3. &c. <sup>c</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>d</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>e</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>f</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>g</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>h</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>i</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>j</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>k</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>l</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>m</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>n</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>o</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>p</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>q</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>r</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>s</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>t</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>u</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>v</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>w</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>x</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>y</sup> Jer. 31. 33. <sup>z</sup> Jer. 31. 33.

<sup>u</sup> Dent. 4. 9. Pa. 147. 19, 20. <sup>v</sup> Or, triest the things that differ. <sup>w</sup> Phil. 1. 10. <sup>x</sup> Matt. 15. 14. & 23. 16. <sup>y</sup> Matt. 17. 19. 21. <sup>z</sup> John 9. 34, 40, 41. <sup>a</sup> ch. 4. 17. <sup>b</sup> Tim. 1. 13. & 3. 5.

<sup>a</sup> Pa. 50. 16. &c. <sup>b</sup> Matt. 23. 3. &c. <sup>c</sup> Mal. 3. 8.

<sup>c</sup> ver. 17.

24 For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written.

Through you; because of your and your forefathers' sins. As it is written: the apostle doth not tell them where it was written; he supposeth they were not ignorant of it: see Isa. lii. 5; Ezek. xxxvi. 20, 23.

25 For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

The Jews might object, If the former privileges availed not to righteousness and salvation, yet circumcision at least might stand them in some stead. In answer whereunto you have, 1. A concession; circumcision indeed is profitable. 2. A limitation; if thou keep the law; which is illustrated by a large antithesis, ver. 26, 27. 3. A distinction; circumcision is of two sorts, outward and literal, inward and spiritual; the latter stands in force, and hath acceptance with God, ver. 28, 29. If thou keep the law; if thou keep it perfectly, to which circumcision obligeth, Gal. v. 3; or if thou use thy utmost care and endeavour so to do. But if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision; i. e. if otherwise thou transgress the law, thy circumcision avails thee nothing, it gives thee no privilege above the uncircumcised. A wicked Jew is to God as an Ethiopian, Amos ix. 7. The apostle corrects the carnal confidence and hypocrisy of the Jews, who valued themselves upon the account of this outward ceremony, and thought it sufficient to be circumcised in the flesh. Some think the apostle hath respect in these words to the time of the law, whilst circumcision was an ordinary sacrament of the covenant; then indeed it was profitable and available; but now, in the times of the gospel, it is abrogated: see Gal. v. 2, 6.

26 Therefore if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

