CHARGE. An address delivered by a bishop, archdeacon, or other ecclesiastical person at a *visitation of the clergy under his jurisdiction. Charges are also delivered to their ordinands by bishops (and, in the Presbyterian Church, by ministers) immediately before ordination. A charge is usually more of the nature of an admonitory exhortation than a definite command, though the latter could quite properly be conveyed through a charge. See also Visitation.

CHARISMATA (Gk. χαρίσματα, plur. of χάρισμα, 'a gift of grace'). The blessings, spiritual and temporal, bestowed on every Christian for the due fulfilment of his vocation. In a narrower sense, the word is used esp. for the supernatural graces which individual Christians need to perform the specific tasks incumbent on them in promoting the spiritual advancement of their fellows. In 1 Cor. 12. 8–11 they are enumerated as comprising the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, faith, the gifts of healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, to which are added, in ver. 28, the charismata given to Apostles, prophets, teachers, and those entrusted with the government of the Church.

For the 'Charismatic Renewal Movement', see Pentecostalism.

A. Lemonnyer, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1233–43, s.v. 'Charismes'; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 19–22, s.v. 'Charisms'.

CHARITY (Lat. caritas). The greatest of the '*theological virtues'. Usually, though not consistently, it is the AV translation of ἀγάπη, the virtue of which the nature and characteristics are described by St. *Paul in 1 Cor. 13. It is directed primarily towards God; but it is also owed to ourselves and our neighbours as the objects of God's love. Its natural opposite is hatred, which may also take the negative form of indifference. See also Agape, Love.

CHARLEMAGNE (c. 742–814), 'Charles the Great', the first Emperor (from 800) of the 'Holy Roman Empire'. The son of *Pepin III, King of the Franks, and Bertrada, he was anointed with his father and Carloman, his brother, by Pope *Stephen II in 754. On Pepin's death in 768 he and Carloman divided the kingdom between them. The death of Carloman in 771 left Charlemagne sole ruler.

For the next 28 years, Charlemagne was mainly occupied with extending his kingdom in all directions. He first subdued Lombardy, at the behest of *Hadrian I. Having forced the king, Desiderius, to retire to a monastery, Charlemagne assumed the Lombard crown, and was rewarded by the Pope with the title of patricius. Next followed (772–85) a long series of arduous campaigns against the Saxons. In 778 Bavaria was conquered, and between 791 and 796 the Avar kingdom and Pannonia fell into his hands. Meanwhile dissensions among the Moslems in Spain had tempted Charlemagne over the Pyrenees. In his first expedition (778), which was a failure, Roland, the Warden of the Breton Marches, was killed; the tradition of his campaign long survived into the Middle Ages in a romantic form through La Chanson de Roland. The systematic conquest of Northern Spain began in 785; and eventually, in 801, Barcelona was captured and made the centre of the 'March of Spain'.

In addition to his conquests and wars abroad, Charlemagne brought consistency, reform, and uniformity into his government at home. His creation of a strong central administration, his employment of missi dominici (itinerant royal legates), and his standardization of laws by means of *capitularies, which he issued for both his hereditary and his newly conquered domains, reflect the vigour of his government. His encouragement of ecclesiastical reform and patronage of letters have rightly earned for his reign the title of the 'Carolingian Renaissance'. He continued the reform of the administration and manners of the Frankish clergy. He himself had real theological interests and he employed *Alcuin to write against the *Adoptianist heretics led by *Felix of Urgel. His patronage of the scholars who formed the Palace School did much to stimulate learning (see Carolingian Schools). It was by the King, acting through mixed ecclesiastico-civil councils, rather than from the Pope directly, that the restoration of the hierarchy and of Church discipline, the unity of the liturgy, the definition of doctrine, and the encouragement of education were achieved, and they, rather than his conquests, form his chief title to fame. The culmination of his reign was his coronation as first 'Holy Roman Emperor' by Pope *Leo III on Christmas Day, 800. This constituted a challenge to the E. empire, with whom relations were strained for the rest of his life.

Official docc. ed. E. Mühlbacher in M.G.H., Diplomata Karolina, i (1906), pp. 77–484. The 'Codex Carolinus' (letters from Popes Gregory II, *Zacharias, Stephen II, Paul I, Constantine II, *Stephen III, and *Hadrian I to Charles Martel, Pepin, and Charlemagne), ed. W. Grundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 469–657; the latter also ed., together with various other letters, life by *Eginhard and other primary material, by P. Jaffé, Monumenta Carolina (Berlin, 1867). Life by Eginhard also ed. O. Holder-Egger (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum, 1911), H. W. Garrod–R. B. Mowat (Oxford, 1915), and, with Fr. tr., by L. Halphen (Les Classiques d'histoire de France au moyen âge; 1923); Eng. trr. by A. J. Grant, Early Lives of Charlemagne (The King's Classics, xxii; 1905), pp. 4–56, and L. Thorpe (Harmondsworth, 1969). Other primary material listed in B.H.L., i, pp. 238–45 (Nos. 1577–1618); Suppl., p. 66 f. S. Abel–B. Simson, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches unter Karl dem Grossen (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte; 2 vols., 1866–83). Modern studies include those of T. Hodgkin ('Foreign Statesmen', London, 1897), H. W. C. Davis ('Heroes of the Nations', 1900), A. Kleinclausz (Paris, 1934, with good introd. on sources; see also other works of this author), J. Calmette (ib., 1945), and R. Winston (London, 1956). L. Halphen, Études critiques sur l'histoire de Charlemagne (1921); id., Charlemagne et l'empire carolingien (1947); K. Heldmann, Das Kaisertum Karls des Grossen (Quellen und Studien zur Verfassungsgeschichte des deutschen Reiches in Mittelalter und Neuzeit vi, Hft. 2; 1928). D. Bullough, The Age of Charlemagne (1965), with useful bibl. W. Braunfels (ed.), Karl der Grosse. Lebenswerk und Nachleben (4 vols. + Register, Düsseldorf, 1965–8). R. Folz, Études sur le culte liturgique de Charlemagne dans les églises de l'empire (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, fasc. 115; 1951); id., Le Couronnement impérial de Charlemagne (1964). Karl der Grosse. Werk und Wirkung. Exhibition Catalogue (Aachen, 1965). G. Seeliger in C. Med. H., ii (1913), pp. 595–629 and 655–84, with bibl. pp. 809 and 813. B. Gebhardt, Handbuch der deutschen Geschichte, i (ed. 8 by H. Grundmann; Stuttgart, 1954), pp. 132–44, with further bibl. Survey of recent work by D. A. Bullough, 'Europae Pater: Charlemagne and his Achievement in the light of recent scholarship' in E.H.R., lxxxv (1970), pp. 59–105. P. F. Palumbo in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 866–82, s.v. 'Carolomagno', for further bibl.; A. P. Frutaz, ib., cols. 882–6, on the liturgical reform of his reign, with bibl. For works on the Carolingian Renaissance see bibl. to Carolingian Schools.

CHARLES I (1600–49), King of Great Britain and Ireland from 1625. On his accession to the throne, Charles found a considerable party among the clergy disposed to abandon the *Calvinistic views which had been predominant in the previous century, and to welcome a theological position much nearer to traditional Catholicism. The King, who personally favoured the new movement, took arbitrary and repressive steps to silence the controversy, meanwhile promoting High Churchmen to important positions, and in 1633 giving the see of *Canterbury to W. *Laud, their leader. Laud's vigorous policy in enforcing a fixed standard of ceremonial and repressing Calvinism earned him wide unpopularity, while the King, whose administrative, financial and foreign policy had been as disastrous as it had been well-intentioned, suffered with him. The fact that *Henrietta Maria was a RC added to the difficulties, since Charles, torn between her demands for complete toleration for her co-religionists and the violent anti-popery of the mass of his subjects, unsuccessfully compromised; but of this policy the only result was popular indignation at the difference between the half-hearted enforcement of the recusancy laws against RCs and the rigour with which the Star Chamber, under Laud's direction, passed sentence on Puritans, even though such sentences were lenient in comparison with those which RCs and Puritans alike had suffered under *Elizabeth I.

Charles's Scottish policy was equally unfortunate. In Scotland the earlier agitation against episcopacy had died down, but between his coronation in 1633 at Edinburgh and the Prayer Book riot of 1637 Charles did everything to inflame it. His coronation was carried out with the fullest Anglican ceremonial; he insisted that Scotland should adopt the English or a similar Prayer Book, and conform to the Laudian usages in externals; and, worst of all, the government and policy of the Church of Scotland were to be dependent upon Canterbury or upon Scottish bishops controlled by the King and Laud. The *National Covenant of 1638, which pledged Scotland to Presbyterianism, was the result.

The Civil War, which broke out in England in 1642, was only in part caused by the ecclesiastical situation, but the defeat of Charles in 1645–6 meant the disestablishment of the C of E and the establishment of Presbyterianism in its place. The failure of Charles to negotiate successfully with his enemies in the following years must be put down in part to the evidence he had earlier given that his word was unreliable, but it was due even more to the fact that his principles refused to let him consent to a permanent sacrifice of episcopacy in order to conciliate the goodwill of the Scots and the moneyed English laity. His execution, an illegal action carried through by fanatical Army leaders, has been justly considered as a martyrdom, since in the end it was conditioned only by his resolution to defend the Church. His personal character, though marred by indecision, imprudence, and faithlessness, was, in his private life, of high moral purity and beauty, and, in his public position, of that religious principle and personal responsibility which appeared to full effect in the dignity of his last hours.

On the day of his death the Eikon Basilike*, a memoir in somewhat hagiographical terms, was published, and the dead King was acclaimed widely as a martyr. From 1662 to 1859 a special service for 30 Jan., the day of his death, was annexed to the BCP by royal mandate; it ordered an annual day of national fasting. Charles I is commemorated on 30 Jan. in the ASB. Five churches have been dedicated in his name.

C. Petrie (ed.), The Letters, Speeches and Proclamations of King Charles I (1935). S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Outbreak of the Civil War (10 vols., 1883–4), esp. vols. vi ff.; id., History of the Great Civil War, 1642–1649 (3 vols., 1886–91). Modern studies by Florence M. G. Higham (London, 1932), 'Evan John' [E. J. Simpson] (ib., 1933), and [J.] H. [P.] *Belloc (ib., 1933). G. Albion, Charles I and the Court of Rome (1935); Esmé Wingfield-Stratford, King Charles and the Conspirators (1937). C. Veronica Wedgwood, The King's Peace, 1637–1641 (1955); id., The King's War, 1641–1647 (1958); id., The Trial of King Charles I (1964). V. Staley, 'The Commemoration of King Charles the Martyr' in his Liturgical Studies (1907), No. 6, pp. 66–83; M. R. Toynbee, 'Charles I and the King's Evil' in Transactions of the Folk-Lore Society, lxi (1950), pp. 1–14.

CHARLES II (1630–85), King of Great Britain and Ireland (in exile) from 1649; restored 1660. He took the Covenant in 1650 in order to obtain Scottish aid, but abandoned it on the failure of his invasion in 1651. Thereafter he conformed to the Anglicanism dominant at the exiled court. After the Restoration political considerations, even more than personal indifference, inclined him to a policy of toleration, to which he tried to give effect in the abortive *Declarations of Indulgence of 1662 and 1672, but the exclusive Anglican sentiment of the country prevailed in parliament, as may be seen in the *Corporation Act (1661), the Act of *Uniformity (1662), the *Conventicle Act (1664) and the *Five Mile Act (1665). The Declaration of 1672 marked the climax of Charles's efforts to rewrite the Restoration Settlement in Church and state. It provoked considerable opposition, in which Abp. G. *Sheldon played a leading part. The parliamentary defeat of Indulgence and the imposition of the *Test Act (1673) resulted in the King's finally accepting the Anglican establishment. Under Lord Treasurer Danby and, later on, in the period of Whig aggression (1679–81) he upheld the authority of the episcopate. After the dissolution of the Oxford Parliament in 1681 the hierarchy under Abp. W. *Sancroft attempted a pastoral reformation in the parishes and dioceses of England with the support of the court and the Tory politicians of the Church party. On his deathbed the King made a formal profession of the RC faith, out of which his successor, *James II, sought to make religious propaganda in the next reign. See also Popish Plot.

A. Bryant (ed.), The Letters, Speeches and Declarations of King Charles II (1935). Lives by C. Airy (London, 1901) and A. Bryant (ib., 1931; revised ed., 1964). D. Ogg, England in the Reign of Charles II (2 vols., 1935). W. G. Simon, 'Comprehension in the Age of Charles II', Church History, xxxi (1962), pp. 440–48; R. [A.] Beddard, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Promotions, 1681–84: an Instrument of Tory Reaction', The Historical Journal, x (1967), pp. 11–40. M. Ashley, Charles II. The Man and the Statesman (1971).

CHARLES V (1500–58), Emperor. The eldest son of Philip of Burgundy and the grandson of *Ferdinand and *Isabella, Charles soon became the most powerful man in Europe. By 1519, when he was elected Emperor, he held, besides the county of Burgundy, the Netherlands, Spain and the Spanish American Empire, the kingdom of Naples, and had a claim to the duchy of Milan. The very extent of his power was, however, his chief source of weakness; for though in Spain and the Netherlands his centralized administration was absolute, in all his other dominions his position was weakened by enemies within and without—France, the Papacy, the Turks, and the Protestant princes. The most urgent problem that confronted him was the rise and growth of *Lutheranism. The Diet of *Worms (1521) banned M. *Luther, but for many years Charles's other difficulties only allowed him to pursue an alternating policy of concession and repression. After 1544 he managed at last to break up the *Schmalkaldic League. The Protestants, however, soon reasserted their strength, drove the Emperor out of Germany, and at the Diet of *Augsburg (1555) forced upon him the principle of '*cuius regio, eius religio'. To avoid the anomaly of persecuting Protestants in one part of his dominions and tolerating them in another, Charles abdicated in 1556, and died in retirement at the monastery of Yuste in Estremadura.

Among more substantial works on Charles V are those of W. Robertson–W. H. Prescott (2 vols., London, 1857); E. Armstrong (2 vols., London, 1902), with bibl.; and W. L. McElwee (London, 1936). Also H. Baumgarten (3 vols., Stuttgart, 1885–92); K. Brandi (2 vols., Munich, 1937–41; Eng. tr. of vol. i, 1939), J. Babelon (Paris, 1947), R. Tyler (London, 1956), and C. Terlinden (Brussels [1965]). W. Friedensburg, Kaiser Karl V und Papst Paul III, 1534–1549 (1932). P. Rassow–F. Schalk (edd.), Karl V. Der Kaiser und seine Zeit. Kölner Colloquium 26.–29. November 1958 (Cologne, 1960). E. D. McShane in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 503–6, with useful bibl.

CHARLES BORROMEO, St. (1538–84), Abp. of Milan. He was one of the leaders of the *Counter-Reformation. Born of noble parentage at Arona on Lake Maggiore, he was early destined for the priesthood, and received his first benefice at the age of 12. In 1552 he went to Pavia, where he studied civil and canon law under Alciati. In 1559 his uncle, the newly elected *Pius IV, summoned him to Rome and in 1560 created him cardinal and Abp. of Milan. In the third and last group of sessions of the Council of *Trent, Borromeo took a prominent part, notably in drafting the *Catechism. On his return to Milan he set about a radical reformation of his see, tightening up the morals and manners of clergy and laity, and making the work of the diocese more effective. Thus he patronized the *Jesuits, established seminaries for the education of the clergy, and founded a Confraternity of Christian Doctrine for instructing children. He took much personal interest in the sick and the poor, notably in the great plague of 1576. His reforms provoked great hostility, but his influence was felt far outside his diocese, and in particular in Switzerland. He was canonized in 1610. Feast day, 4 Nov.

Federico Borromeo (1564–1631), his cousin and successor in the see of Milan from 1595, was the founder of the Ambrosiana (q.v.; 1609). Other members of his family held high office in Church and State.

Charles Borromeo's Sermons ed. J. A. Sassi (5 vols., Milan, 1747–8). The primary authorities are the lives by A. Valiero (Verona, 1586), C. Bascapè (Ingolstadt, 1592), and J. P. Giussano (Rome, 1610; Eng. tr., with preface by H. E. *Manning, 2 vols., 1884). A. Sala, Documenti circa la vita e le gesta di San Carlo Borromeo (4 vols., 1857–62). Id., Biographia di San Carlo Borromeo (1858). Other modern studies by E. H. Thompson (London, 1858), C. Sylvain (3 vols., Lille, 1884), C. Orsenigo (ed. 2, Milan, 1911), L. Celier ('Les Saints', 1912), D. Franceschi (I grandi cardinali italiani nella vita e nella storia, iv; Bologna [1911]), A. Rivolta (Milan, 1938), M. Yeo (London, 1938; popular), and A. Deroo (Paris, 1963). G. Galbiati (ed.), Echi di San Carlo Borromeo (Pubblicazione milanese di contributi per la storia della religione e della coltura; 20 fascc., 1937–8; index in id., Scritti su S. Carlo Borromeo (1941), pp. 45–90). G. Galbiati in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 853–61, s.v. 'Carlo Borromeo'; R. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 486–534, s.v. 'Charles Borromée'; id. in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 710–12, s.v. 'Borromeo, Charles'.

On Federico Borromeo, Indice delle lettere a lui dirette conservate all'Ambrosiana (Fontes Ambrosiani, xxiv; 1960). A. Saba, Federico Borromeo e i mistici del suo tempo, con la vita e la corrispondenza inedita di Caterina da Siena (ibid., vii, 1933).

CHARLES MARTEL (c. 690–741), Frankish ruler. An illegitimate son of Pepin II, Mayor of the Palace to the Merovingian kings, he showed marked vigour and martial ardour from early years. After leading a victorious campaign against the Neustrians in 716, he became himself Mayor of the Palace and brought the Neustrians and Burgundy within the sphere of his rule. He also made himself master of Normandy and compelled Eudo, Duke of Aquitaine, to submit to him. The greatest event of his career was his victory over the *Saracens, who were invading France, at Poitiers in 732, which, even if its significance has been overestimated, was of decisive importance for the future of Christendom. In his latter years he penetrated into Germany and Frisia, compelling many of the tribes to pay allegiance to him. He protected St. *Boniface and other Anglo-Saxon missionaries, and established friendly relations with the Roman see. Many of Charles's characteristics seem to have been inherited by his grandson, *Charlemagne.

T. Breysig, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches, 714–741. Die Zeit Karl Martells (1869), with important excursus on sources, pp. 109–15. G. Waitz, 'Kleine Beiträge zur fränkischen Geschichte. Ueber den Beinamen "der Hammer"' in Forschungen zur deutschen Geschichte, iii (1863), pp. 147–9. M. Mercier–A. Seguin, Charles Martel et la bataille de Poitiers (1944). F. Lot–C. Pfister–F. L. Ganshof, Les Destinées de l'empire en occident de 395 à 768 (Histoire générale, ed. G. Glotz, Histoire du moyen-âge, i, pt. 1; 1928), pp. 294–402, passim, esp. pp. 394–402, with reff. See also lives of St. Boniface cited s.v.

CHARLES, ROBERT HENRY (1855–1931), Biblical scholar. He was educated at Queen's College, Belfast, and *Trinity College, Dublin. After some years as a parish priest in London and in research at *Oxford, he became professor of Biblical Greek at Dublin in 1898. From 1906 to 1913 he was again in Oxford. In 1913 he became Canon, and in 1919 Archdeacon, of *Westminster. In matters of Jewish eschatology and apocalyptic he was the greatest authority of his day, and produced editions of the *Book of Enoch (1893; 1912), the *Book of Jubilees (1894), The (Slavonic) Secrets of Enoch (1895), *The Apocalypse of Baruch (1896), *The Assumption of Moses (1897), *The Ascension of Isaiah (1900), and *The Testaments of the XII Patriarchs (1908). General summings-up of his researches appeared in Eschatology (1899; ed. 2, 1913) and Between the Old and New Testaments (1914), as well as in The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the OT (2 vols., 1913)—the last a comprehensive corpus in English of late Jewish writings, with introductions and notes. His latest books were Studies in the Apocalypse (1913) and editions of Revelation (2 vols., 1920) and Daniel (1929).

F. C. *Burkitt in Proceedings of the British Academy, xvii (1931), pp. 437–45. Brief Memoir by C. F. D'Arcy prefixed to Charles's Courage, Truth, Purity (posthumous, 1931), pp. xiii–xxxv. T. W. Manson in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 169 f.

CHARRON, PIERRE (1541–1603), French preacher and philosopher. He was a native of Paris, and after studying law at Orléans, Bourges, and Montpellier, became a priest and soon made a great reputation as a preacher. In 1576 he became a canon at Bordeaux, where he published Les Trois Vérités (1593), an apologetic work for the Catholic religion. The book, which included an elaborate attack on the Calvinist, P. *Du Plessis-Mornay, went through many editions. In 1594 Charron became Vicar-General at Cahors, and later Canon of Condom. In 1601 appeared his principal work, De la sagesse (3 vols.), largely inspired by G. Du Vair and M. de *Montaigne. Here he distinguished three kinds of wisdom: the evil wisdom of the world, condemned by philosophy and revelation alike; the highest wisdom, which is the theological wisdom produced by reflexion and aided by grace; and, between the two, human wisdom, the principal subject of his work. The treatise was in three books. The first dealt with the knowledge of man and his condition, which is one of weakness, misery, and presumption. The second expounded the preparation for wisdom, which consists in freedom from the passions and from the prejudices of the mind. In the third book he developed this theme in connexion with the four cardinal virtues. The treatise, which reflected pagan rather than Christian thought, opened the way for the secularization of morals, for *Deism, and for free thought.

Complete edition of Charron's Works publd. at Paris in 1635. J. B. Sabrié, De l'humanisme au rationalisme. Pierre Charron (1913); H. Busson, La Pensée religieuse française de Charron à Pascal (1933).

CHARTERHOUSE, Eng. version of Fr. maison chartreuse, a *Carthusian religious house. The most famous house of that name was established in 1371 just west of Aldersgate, London, and on the site of it a chapel, almshouse, and school were founded by Thomas Sutton in 1611. The school, which in 1872 was removed to near Godalming, in Surrey, is now among the most famous of English public schools.

CHARTER OF LOVE. See Carta Caritatis.

CHARTRES. Since the 4th cent., with intervals, the town has been the seat of a bishop. In the earlier Middle Ages it was famous for its school, of which *Fulbert, and later *Bernard, *Thierry, and *Gilbert de la Porrée were members. Its magnificent cathedral, one of the finest of French Gothic buildings, was begun in the 11th cent., but was not dedicated until 1260. Particularly celebrated are the fine glass and the rich sculpture on the portals.

L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, ii (ed. 2, 1910), pp. 422–30. J. A. Clerval, Les Écoles de Chartres au moyen-âge du Ve au XVIe siècle (Chartres, 1895). J. M. Parent, O.P., La Doctrine de la Création dans l'École de Chartres (Ottawa, 1938). E. Jeauneau, 'Note sur l'École de Chartres' in Studi medievali, 3^a^ serie, v (1964), pp. 821–65. R. W. Southern, Medieval Humanism and other Studies (Oxford, 1970), pp. 61–85. J. A. Clerval, Guide chartrain (Chartres, 1876); Y. Delaporte–E. Houvet, Les Vitraux de la cathédrale de Chartres (4 vols., Chartres, 1926); idd., La Cathédrale de Chartres (collotype plates, 17 vols., Chartres, 1919–21). O. von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral. The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (1956), pp. 183–265. G. Henderson, Chartres (Harmondsworth, 1968), with bibl. E. Griffe and B. Degenhart in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1394–6, with bibl.; Y. Delaporte in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 544–74, s.v.

CHARTREUSE, La Grande. See Grande Chartreuse, La.

CHASIDIM, also HASIDAEANS. The conservative Jews in Palestine (the name means the 'pious' or 'godly') who in the 2nd cent. B.C. endeavoured to maintain the traditional Hebrew Law, with its scribal interpretation, against the prevalent Greek influences. When the *Maccabees revolted under Mattathias in 168 against the Hellenizing party, the Chasidim at first supported him, but once religious freedom had been secured (in 162), they refused to fight for national independence. The Chasidim were probably the immediate ancestors of the party of the *Pharisees. The word was used later in other senses, e.g. as a title for Jewish mystics and as the name of a Jewish sect founded in the 18th cent.

J. Morgenstern, 'The Hasidim—Who were they?' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xxxviii (1967), pp. 59–73. See also comm. to Maccabees, cited s.v.

CHASUBLE. The outermost garment worn by bishops and priests in celebrating the *Eucharist, and rarely at other times. It is derived from the 'paenula' or 'planeta', the outdoor cloak of both sexes in the later Greco-Roman world. In shape it was originally like a tent, with a hole for the head, but gradually it was reduced in size. This took place in the W. by the cutting away of the sides, whereas in the E., where it is known as the 'phelonion', the garment was gathered up or cut away in the front. In recent years the original form has been revived in some RC churches. In the BCP of 1549 the chasuble was retained, with the cope as an alternative; in that of 1552 it was abolished; but it has been widely held that the *Ornaments Rubric of 1559, re-enacted in 1661, reimposes its use. In practice, however, it seems to have been little used, if at all, in post-Reformation times in the C of E before the ceremonial revival of the 19th cent., when decisions of the civil courts against the use of Eucharistic vestments failed to check its widespread reintroduction. The *Lutheran Church in Germany retained the chasuble for some time after the Reformation, and the Scandinavian Churches still use it.

Rohault, vii (1888), pp. 111–81, with plates dlxi–dci. Braun, L.G., pp. 149–247. On the revival of the use of the chasuble in the C of E in the 19th cent., cf. F. E. *Brightman in D.E.C.H., p. 612, s.v. 'Vestments'.

CHATEAUBRIAND, FRANÇOIS RENÉ, VICOMTE DE (1768–1848), French Romantic writer. He was a native of St.-Malo. In 1791 he crossed to America, but soon returned, and lived from 1793 to 1800 in England. In his later life he had a distinguished career as a politician, becoming a peer, ambassador, and foreign minister. He was buried at his own request on the island of Grand Bé, near St.-Malo.

His fame rests mainly on his Génie du christianisme, ou beautés de la religion chrétienne, a brilliant rhetorical defence of Catholic Christianity, which he published in 1802 on the morrow of the *Concordat. He had been converted to a living faith in Christianity by a deep emotional crisis that followed the deaths of his mother and sister (ma conviction est sortie du cœur; j'ai pleuré et j'ai cru). In the Génie he sought to lift Christianity from the discredit into which the destructive work of the 18th cent. rationalist philosophers had brought it by transferring the debate from the plane of reason to that of feeling. He argued that the study of history proved the Christian faith to have been the main fountain of art and civilization in Europe, by the recurrent stimulus it gave to the intellectual and spiritual aspirations of mankind. His other writings of religious significance include his novel Les Martyrs, ou le triomphe de la religion chrétienne (1809) and a Life of De *Rancé (1844).

Several edd. of his 'Œuvres complètes', incl. that in 11 vols. of Brussels, 1852. Correspondance générale, ed. L. Thomas (5 vols., Paris, 1912–24). There is much autobiographical material in his Mémoires d'outre-tombe (MS. completed 1846; 12 vols., 1848–50; Eng. tr., 6 vols., 1902). C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Chateaubriand et son groupe littéraire sous l'empire (1861). The innumerable modern studies include works by G. Bertrin (Paris, 1906), J. Lemaître (Paris, 1912), P. Moreau (Paris, 1927; also Paris, 1933 and 1956), H. Gillot (Strasbourg, 1934), M. Duchemin (Paris, 1938; with bibl.), and F. Sieburg (Stuttgart, 1959; Eng. tr., 1961). G. Bertrin, La Sincérité religieuse de Chateaubriand (1889); V. Giraud, Le Christianisme de Chateaubriand (2 vols., 1925–8). Popular life by Joan Evans (London, 1939), incl. select bibl. P. Moreau in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 519–21, s.v.

CHAUCER, GEOFFREY (1343/4–1400), English poet. He was the son of a London merchant. After serving as a page to Elizabeth de Burgh, countess of Ulster, he fought in France and was captured at 'Retters'. Ransomed by the King, he afterwards entered his service, and during the next thirty years was employed in various diplomatic missions. Under Richard II he was Clerk of the Works at Windsor and *Westminster.

The Canterbury Tales were apparently begun c. 1387 and remained unfinished at the time of Chaucer's death. They were first printed by W. *Caxton c. 1476–7. Since the time of J. *Foxe, who first advanced the theory that Caxton was an admirer of J. *Wycliffe, many have aimed at proving that Chaucer was an agnostic and an anti-clerical. Yet it seems probable that he was neither one nor the other. Certainly he was not conspicuously pious, but neither was he hostile to the Church. He strove to give a true and fair presentation of 14th cent. life as he saw it. With a character such as the Summoner he is merciless in his satire; for the 'Poor Parson of a Town' he has nothing but praise and respect.

Crit. edd. of his Works by W. W. Skeat (7 vols., London, 1894–7) and F. N. Robinson (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1933; ed. 2, 1957) with notes and bibl. M. M. Crow–C. C. Olson (edd.), Chaucer Life-Records (Oxford, 1966). Modern life by M. Chute (London, 1951). Studies by T. R. Lounsbury (3 vols., London, 1892), R. K. Root (ibid., 1906), G. L. Kittredge (Cambridge, Mass., 1915), J. M. Manly (New York, 1926), G. K. *Chesterton (London, 1932), J. Livingstone Lowes (ib., 1934), N. Coghill (H.U.L., 1949), J. Speirs (London, 1951), K. Malone (Baltimore, 1951), R. Preston (London, 1952), D. S. Brewer (ib., 1953), and Muriel Bowden (ib., 1965). J. M. Manly–Edith Rickert, The Text of the Canterbury Tales (8 vols., Chicago, 1940); W. F. Bryan–G. Dempster (edd.), Sources and Analogies of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Chicago, 1941; London, 1958). W. Clemen, Chaucers frühe Dichtung (1963; Eng. tr., 1963). D. W. Robertson, Jr., A Preface to Chaucer (Princeton–London, 1963). C. Muscatine, Chaucer and the French Tradition (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1957). E. Wagenknecht (ed.), Chaucer. Modern Essays in Criticism (New York, 1959). R. J. Schoeck–J. Taylor (edd.), Chaucer Criticism (2 vols., Notre Dame, Ind., 1960–61); J. A. Burrow (ed.), Geoffrey Chaucer: A Critical Anthology (Harmondsworth, 1969). G. G. Coulton, Chaucer and his England (1908). H. S. Bennett, Chaucer and the Fifteenth Century (Oxford History of English Literature, ii, 1947), esp. pp. 1–95. Eleanor P. Hammond, Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual (New York, 1908); D. D. Griffith, Bibliography of Chaucer, 1908–1953 (Seattle, Wash., 1955); W. R. Crawford, Bibliography of Chaucer, 1954–63 [1967].

CHELTENHAM LIST, The. See Mommsen Catalogue, The.

CHEMNITZ, MARTIN (1522–86), *Lutheran theologian. After lecturing for a short time in the philosophical faculty at *Wittenberg, where in 1553 he expounded the Loci Communes of P. *Melanchthon, Chemnitz left for Brunswick in 1554. Here he spent the rest of his life in a pastoral capacity, refusing the many important appointments offered him. In his Repetitio sanae doctrinae de vera praesentia (1561) he defended the Lutheran doctrine of the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist, including Luther's teaching on ubiquity, though he deprecated further elaboration as to the mode of the presence; and in his Examen concilii Tridentini (1565–73) he attacked the Council of *Trent. He was one of the main influences in consolidating Lutheran doctrine and practice in the generation following Luther's death. His Loci Theologici (published 1591), based on his lectures, ably defend a mainly Melanchthonian theology.

H. Hachfeld, Martin Chemnitz (1867); R. Mumm, Die Polemik des M. Chemnitz gegen das Konzil von Trient (1905). G. Noth, 'Peccata Contra Conscientiam' in F. Hübner (ed.), Gedenkschrift für D. Werner Elert (1955), pp. 211–19. Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 116 f. (Nos. 2850–8).

CHERUBICON (Gk χερουβικόν), also 'The Cherubic Hymn'. In the E. Church, a hymn sung during the *Greater Entrance by the choir, as the mystical representatives of the *Cherubim. In the Russian Church it is set to very elaborate music, and is considered the most striking musical item in the Liturgy.

CHERUBIM. The second of the nine orders of *angels. In the OT they appear as God's attendants, e.g. they guard His presence from profanity (Gen. 3. 24, Ezek. 28. 14, &c.), and representations of them were set up in *Solomon's *Temple at *Jerusalem, overshadowing the *ark (Ex. 25. 18–22). It is possible that Assyrian influences exercised some influence on Jewish conceptions of the cherubim. In Christian angelology they have usually been grouped with the *thrones and the *seraphim, though in the earliest times they were not included in the angelic lists (which were based on Eph. 1. 21 and Col. 1. 16).

J. Petersen, Cherubim. Kurze Zusammenstellung der wichtigsten Ansichten und Erklärungen seit Luther (1898). P. Dhorme, O.P.–L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'Les Chérubins' in R. Bibl., xxxv (1926), pp. 328–58 and 481–95. M. Kmoskó, 'Kerub und Kurib' in Biblische Zeitschrift, xi (1913), pp. 225–234. W. F. Albright, 'What were the Cherubim?' in Biblical Archaeologist, i (1938), pp. 1–3; M. Haran, 'The Ark and the Cherubim: Their Symbolic Significance in Biblical Ritual' in Israel Exploration Journal, ix (1959), pp. 30–38, 89–94, with further refl. J. Trinquet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 161–86, s.v. 'Kerub, Kerubim'. On their representation in art, K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, i (1928), p. 245 f. E. Kirschbaum, S.J., 'L'angelo rosso e l'angelo turchino' in Riv.A.C., xvii (1940), pp. 209–48.

CHESTER. The city was perhaps the seat of the bishops of the kingdom of Mercia; but in the Middle Ages it ceased to be a bishopric, except between 1075 and c. 1100, when the present church of St. John Baptist served as the cathedral. The see was refounded in 1541 by *Henry VIII, who made the church of the dissolved abbey of St. *Werburgh the cathedral, under a new dedication to Christ and the BVM, and Chester has remained a bishopric ever since. In 1542 the diocese was transferred from the province of *Canterbury to that of *York; it was greatly reduced in size during the 19th cent.

R. C. Christie (ed.), Annales Cestrienses; or, Chronicle of the Abbey of S. Werburg, at Chester (The Record Society for the Publication of Original Documents relating to Lancashire and Cheshire, xiv; 1886). T. Hughes–T. C. Hughes (edd.), The Registers of Chester Cathedral, 1687–1812 (Parish Record Society, 1904). J. Tait (ed.), The Chartulary or Register of the Abbey of St. Werburgh, Chester (Chetham Society, lxxix and lxxxii; 1920–23). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (ed. 1819), pp. 370–401. R. V. H. Burne, Chester Cathedral from its Founding by Henry VIII to the Accession of Queen Victoria (1958); id., The Monks of Chester. The History of St. Werburgh's Abbey (1962). C. Hiatt, The Cathedral Church of Chester (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1897). A History of Chester Cathedral: with biographical notices of the Bishops and Deans. By a member of the Chester Archaeological Society [1852]. F. Sanders in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 108 f., s.v.; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.E.G.H., xii (1953), cols. 641–5, s.v.

CHESTER BEATTY PAPYRI. A group of papyrus codices, most of which were acquired in 1931 by A. Chester Beatty (d. 1968); they may have formed part of the same library as the *Bodmer papyri, in which case they are likely to have been found in Panopolis (Akhmîm) rather than in the Fayûm. Though they are all imperfect, several are of substantial size. They comprise (1) 50 leaves (of an original 66) of Genesis, 4th cent.; (2) 27 leaves (out of 84) of Genesis, 3rd cent.; (3) 50 leaves (out of 108) of Numbers and Deuteronomy, early 2nd cent.; (4) 1½ leaves of Ecclesiasticus, 4th cent.; (5) portions of 33 leaves (out of 104) of Isaiah, 3rd cent.; (6) two small fragments of Jeremiah, 2nd cent.; (7) 50 leaves (out of 118) of Ezekiel, Daniel, and Esther, 3rd cent.; (8) portions of 30 leaves (out of 220) of the Gospels and Acts, early 3rd cent.; (9) 86 leaves (out of 99) of the Pauline epistles, early 3rd cent.; (10) 10 leaves (out of 32) of Revelation, 3rd cent.; (11) 8 leaves containing the last eleven chapters of the apocryphal Bk. of *Enoch, and 6 containing part of a treatise on Christ's Passion, by *Melito, Bp. of Sardis, 4th cent. Of the papyri never in Chester Beatty's possession, most of the Ezekiel is at Princeton University, and 30 leaves of St. Paul, with small fragments of other MSS., at Michigan University. The age of these papyri makes them very valuable evidence for the text of the Greek Bible, since they are a century or more older than the earliest vellum MSS.

Ed. of text by F. G. Kenyon, 8 fascc. + parallel series of plates, London–Dublin, 1933–58. On item (9) above ('P46'), also H. A. Sanders, A Third-Century Papyrus Codex of the Epistles of St. Paul (University of Michigan Studies, Hum. Series, No. 38, 1935); on item (7) above ('967'), A. C. Johnson, H. S. Gehman, and E. S. Kase, The John H. Scheide Biblical Papyri: Ezekiel (Princeton University Studies in Papyrology, 1938); on item (11), C. Bonner and H. C. Youtie, The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek (Studies and Documents, viii; 1937). The large and scattered literature, mainly in periodicals, is summarized by E. Vogt and A. Calderini in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1113–15, s.v. 'Beatty, Chester, Papyri'.

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH (1874–1936), poet and essayist. After beginning a course of training in art in 1891, he abandoned it for journalism. His defence of orthodoxy and conventionality in an individual and unconventional style soon established his literary reputation. Among those of his early works which were directly or indirectly concerned with religious topics, the best known are Heretics (1905) and Orthodoxy (1908). His poems include the hymn 'O God of earth and altar'. In his novels there is less of religious interest, though his appreciation of the RC clergy appears in the 'Father Brown' stories. In 1922 he left the C of E for the RC Church; but the change of allegiance had little effect on his style or outlook. His Autobiography (1936) gives an illuminating picture of literary-religious circles from c. 1895 to his death.

Maisie Ward, Gilbert Keith Chesterton (1944); id., Return to Chesterton (1952). C. Hollis, The Mind of Chesterton (1970). J. Sullivan, G. K. Chesterton. A Bibliography (1958). Maisie Ward in D.N.B., 1931–1940, pp. 171–5.

CHEVETOGNE. The *Benedictine community now at Chevetogne in Belgium was founded in 1925 at Amay-sur-Meuse by L. *Beauduin in response to Pope *Pius XI's request that Benedictines should pray for Christian unity (Equidem verba, 21 March 1924). It moved to Chevetogne in 1939. The monks seek to establish closer relations between RC and other churches, esp. Orthodox communities; they aim at corporate reconciliation rather than individual conversions or *Uniat status. The community is divided into two groups, the Latin and the Eastern, the one following the Western rite, the other the Eastern (Greek and Slavonic). Since 1926 it has published Irénikon.

L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Dom Lambert Beauduin (Tournai, 1964), esp. pp. 125–45; G. [W. S.] Curtis, C.R., Paul Couturier and Unity in Christ (1964), pp. 44–51. N. Egender in N.C.E., iii (1967), p. 556, s.v.

CHEYNE, THOMAS KELLY (1841–1915), OT scholar and critic. He was the grandson of T. H. *Horne. Educated at Worcester College, Oxford, he was successively vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall (1864), Fellow of Balliol (1868), rector of Tendring, Essex (1880), and Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Scripture at Oxford (1885–1908). In 1884 he became a member of the OT Company engaged on the *Revised Version. Studies at Göttingen under H. G. A. *Ewald in 1862 having led him to a critical view of the OT, he upheld as early as 1871 the now general theory of Pentateuchal sources. His mind, however, went through many phases. His pastoral work at Tendring lent his writings an evangelical and homiletic colour for some years. Later he became highly, and finally recklessly, unconventional in his Biblical criticism and ideas. Among his chief writings are Prophecies of Isaiah (1880–1), Job and Solomon (1887), Book of Psalms (1888), The Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter (1891), Founders of OT Criticism (1893), Introduction to the Book of Isaiah (1895), and Jewish Religious Life after the Exile (1898). The chief production of his last period, the Encyclopaedia Biblica (4 vols., 1899–1903), which he edited in conjunction with J. Sutherland Black, reflects the combination of daring and originality which marked his later work.

Much autobiographical matter is to be found in the prefaces to many of his books. R. H. *Charles in Proceedings of the British Academy (1915–16), pp. 545–51. A. S. *Peake in D.N.B., 1912–21, p. 119 f.

CHICAGO–LAMBETH ARTICLES. See Lambeth Quadrilateral.

CHICHELE, HENRY (?1362–1443), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated under the patronage of *William of Wykeham at Winchester and Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1396. His abilities as an administrator and diplomat soon attracted the attention of both the King and the Pope, and he became Bp. of *St. Davids in 1408 and Abp. of Canterbury in 1414. In 1409 he was one of the English delegates to the Council of *Pisa. When Henry V left England for the French wars in 1414, Chichele was among those appointed to assist the Duke of Bedford in administering the kingdom. He was severely reprimanded by *Martin V for failing to secure the repeal of the Statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire, and had to suffer the humiliation of seeing his legatine powers suspended and the Bp. of *Winchester and the Abp. of *York created cardinals and given precedence over him. The traditional view that he encouraged the war with France to divert attention from abuses in the Church is without contemporary support. He was not a great man, but did his best to carry out the duties of his office in the face of great difficulties. His care for learning is attested by his foundation of the college of All Souls at Oxford (1438).

The Register of Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury 1414–1443, ed. by E. F. Jacob–H. C. Johnson (*Canterbury and York Society, xlii, xlv, xlvi, and xlvii, 1937–47; also published separately, 4 vols., 1938–47). A. Duck, Vita Henrici Chichele (Oxford, 1617; Eng. tr., 1699). E. F. Jacob, Archbishop Henry Chichele (1967). B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 410–12.

CHICHESTER. The name is held to be derived from the Saxon, Cissa (O.Eng. Cissaceaster, i.e. 'Cissa's camp'), younger son of Aella, who is said to have repaired c. 490 the Roman city of Regnum, which previously existed on the site. The see, which was founded at Selsey by St. *Wilfrid during his exile from *York, was transferred to Chichester in accordance with a decree of the Council of London of 1075. Its bishops have included St. *Richard (1245–54), L. *Andrewes (1605–9), R. *Montagu (1628–38), B. *Duppa (1638–41), John Lake, the non-juror (1685–9), and G. K. A. *Bell (1929–58). The present diocese is conterminous with E. and W. Sussex. The cathedral was built in the 12th–13th cents. A Roman inscription, the 'Pudens Stone', which is preserved outside the Town Hall, records the gift of land for a (pagan) temple by a Pudens, son of Pudentinus, whom some have attempted to identify with the Pudens of 2 Tim. 4. 21.

Three surviving medieval episcopal registers, with other primary material, incl. muniments of the Dean and Chapter, are described in Historical Manuscripts Commission. Report of Manuscripts in Various Collections, i (1901), pp. 177–204. H. Mayr-Harting (ed.), The Acta of the Bishops of Chichester, 1057–1207 (Canterbury and York Society, Part 130; 1964). C. Deedes (ed.), The Episcopal Register of Robert Rede, O.P., Lord Bishop of Chichester, 1397–1415 (Sussex Record Society, viii and xi; 1908 and 1911); id. (ed.), 'Extracts from the Episcopal Register of Richard Praty, S.T.P., Lord Bishop of Chichester, 1438–1445' in Sussex Record Society, iv (1905), pp. 83–236. The episcopal registers from 1478 are continuous. F. G. Bennett–R. H. Codrington–C. Deedes (edd.), Statutes and Constitutions of the Cathedral Church of Chichester (Chichester, 1904); W. D. Peckham (ed.), The Acts of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Chichester, 1472–1544 (The White Book) (Sussex Record Society, lii; 1952); id. (ed.), The Acts of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Chichester, 1542–1642 (ib., lviii; 1959 [1960]); id. (ed.), The Chartulary of the High Church of Chichester (ib., xlvi; 1944). A. S. Duncan-Jones (ed.), The Chichester Customary (modern observances; *Alcuin Club Collections, xxxvi; 1948). T. G. Willis, Records of Chichester (1928), pp. 149–220. H. Corlette, The Cathedral Church of Chichester (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1911); A. S. Duncan-Jones, The Story of Chichester Cathedral [1933]. J. Warrillow in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 665–74, s.v., with bibl.

CHILDERMAS. An old English name for (1) the Feast of the *Holy Innocents (28 Dec.); (2) the day of the week throughout the year on which that feast fell, widely held to be a day of ill omen.

CHILDREN, Song of the Three. See Song of the Three Children.

CHILDREN'S CRUSADE (1212). A march of children who gathered from France and W. Germany after the diversion of the Fourth *Crusade (1202–4) with the intention of 'recapturing *Jerusalem'. It is difficult to disentangle history and legend from the surviving records, but it seems clear that few of the parties of children ever got as far as embarking from the S. of France and Italy, and that such as did either perished or were sold into captivity.

The event is mentioned by most of the chroniclers of the period, esp. those who deal with the Crusades (q.v.). G. Z. Gray, The Children's Crusade. An Episode of the Thirteenth Century (New York, 1870). C. de Janssens, Étienne de Cloyes et les croisades d'enfants au XIIIe siècle (1890). R. Röhricht, 'Der Kinderkreuzzug, 1212' in H.Z., xxxvi (1876), pp. 1–8; D. C. Munro, 'The Children's Crusade' in American Historical Review, xix (1914), pp. 516–24; P. Alphandéry, 'Les Croisades d'enfants' in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, lxxiii (1916), pp. 259–82; J. E. Hansbery, 'The Children's Crusade' in Catholic Historical Review, xxiv (1939), pp. 30–38. Z. P. Zacour in K. M. Setton (ed.), A History of the Crusades, ii (Princeton, 1962), pp. 325–42, with further reff. See also other works on the Crusades.

CHILE, Christianity in. The Spanish invasion of Chile, which began in 1535, was followed about the end of the 16th cent. by great missionary activity on the part of the *Franciscan and *Jesuit orders, though the complete conversion of the country was not achieved till some 150 years later. In 1810–28 political separation from Spain was secured, but the RC Church continued to be 'protected' and state-subsidized, though other religions were tolerated. The considerable immigration into Chile over many years brought to the country a large non-RC minority, which has consisted chiefly of *Anglicans, *Presbyterians, and German *Lutherans. Education is provided by both state and sectarian schools.

C. S. Cotapos, Historia eclesiástica de Chile (Santiago, 1925), with bibl. La provincia eclesiástica chilena. Erección de sus obispados y división en parroquias (Freiburg i.Br., 1895). R. Poblete, La Iglesia en Chile. Estructuras eclesiásticas (Estudios Socio-Religiosos Latino-Americanos, vi; Fribourg, Switzerland–Bogotá–Madrid, 1962). F. Enrich, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en Chile (2 vols. only [down to 1822], Barcelona, 1891). R. Lagos, O.F.M., Historia de las misiones del colegio de Chillán (Barcelona, 1908). P. Gazulla, Los primeros mercedarios en Chile, 1536–1600 (Santiago, 1918). J. T. Medina, La inquisición en Chile (vol. i only; Santiago, 1890). Latourette, iii (1940), p. 152 f.; v (1943), pp. 82 f., 95, 119; vii (1945), p. 170. K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 331–4; v (1963), pp. 211–14, with further reff. J. A. de Ramón Folch in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 583–7.

CHILIASM (Gk. χίλιοι, 'a thousand'). Another name for *Millenarianism, the theory that Christ will return to earth and reign here for a thousand years before the final consummation of all things. The belief is based on an interpretation of Rev. 20. 1–5.

CHILLINGWORTH, WILLIAM (1602–44), Anglican divine. A scholar (1618) and fellow (1628) of Trinity College, Oxford, he first attracted attention when he engaged a Jesuit, 'John *Fisher', in controversy. As a result of this incident, Chillingworth was converted to the RC Church, and went to *Douai in 1630. In the following year, however, he returned to England, and in 1634 again declared himself a Protestant. His best known work was his Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation (1638), written as his contribution to a controversy raging between a Jesuit, Knott, and the Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, on the subject of whether Protestants could be saved. On the plea that 'the Bible only is the religion of Protestants', he defended the rights of reason and free inquiry in doctrinal matters, and denied that any Church has the gift of infallibility. He affirmed that he belonged to the C of E, because he considered her doctrine sufficiently pure to ensure salvation, and that adequate grounds were wanting to warrant disturbing the 16th cent. settlement. During the Civil War he was a chaplain in the Royalist army, and was captured in 1643. His death in captivity at *Chichester was said to have been hastened by the efforts of the other side to convert him.

The collected edd. of Chillingworth's Works are numbered acc. to the edd. of The Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation, the first to bear the title The Works of William Chillingworth being 'ed. 7', London, 1719. Life by T. Birch, prefixed to ed. 10, London, 1742, pp. ii–viii. P. Des Maizeaux, An Historical and Critical Account of the Life and Writings of Wm. Chillingworth (1725; ed. J. Nichols, 1863). R. R. Orr, Reason and Authority. The Thought of William Chillingworth (Oxford, 1967). There is also a very brief study by J. D. Hyman (Cambridge, Mass., 1931). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., x (1887), pp. 252–7.

CHIMERE. A silk or satin gown without sleeves, worn by Anglican bishops and by doctors of divinity. It perhaps derives from the tabard, a medieval upper garment. It is frequently worn at liturgical functions, but also constitutes part of episcopal full dress on important civil occasions, and of the full academic dress of those entitled to wear it. It is incorrect to wear a chimere under a vestment or cope.

CHINA, Christianity in. Legend has it that St. *Thomas the Apostle preached in China as well as in India, but there is no historical evidence of this. The tablet found at *Sigan-Fu, dated A.D. 781, shows that Nestorian missionaries reached China in the 7th cent. Nestorian Christianity survived till the 14th cent. The first Western mission was that of John of Monte Corvino (c. 1294). At first successful, it was brought to an end by the advent of the Ming dynasty in 1368. The celebrated mission of the *Jesuits began in 1582 with the arrival of Michele Ruggieri and Matteo *Ricci. By their skill in mathematics and astronomy, which won them the favour of influential scholars and officials, and their policy of retaining traditional Chinese ceremonies and religious terms, the Jesuits were able to establish themselves and build up a Chinese Christian community. *Franciscan, *Dominican and other RC missionaries came in the 17th cent. Hostility to the Jesuits' method of *accommodation gave rise to the prolonged and damaging Rites Controversy, issuing in their condemnation by *Clement XI and other 18th cent. Popes. The assertion of papal authority in China antagonized the Emperor. This and other causes led to persecutions and to imperial decrees banning Christianity. Though not entirely stamped out, it fell into decay.

The modern missionary movement of the 19th cent., RC and Protestant, was faced by the isolationist policy of the Manchu dynasty, which sought to keep the country closed to foreigners. Robert *Morrison, the first Protestant missionary, who arrived in 1807 at Canton, where the East India Company had a precarious footing, owed his continuance there to his employment as translator by the Company. In his free time he translated the Bible and wrote a dictionary and other works. But the main development of modern missions came after the period 1839–65, during which the Western powers by military action and forced treaties secured for themselves rights of residence and to some extent jurisdiction in China. This did indeed open the country to Christian missions, but the fact that they came in the wake of such action gave them an association with foreign power which was to prove a heavy liability. Once it had become possible for missionaries not only to reside at 'treaty ports' but to penetrate into the interior also, missions of all the principal denominations of Europe and America spread to every province, founding churches, schools, and hospitals. The largest single organization was the undenominational *China Inland Mission (1865). By 1895 Protestant Chinese Christians numbered over 40,000, Roman Catholics over 580,000. From time to time there were violent outbursts of anti-foreign feeling, the worst being the Boxer rising in 1900, in which thousands of Chinese Christians and many missionaries were killed.

Revolutions and wars have dominated the history of China in the 20th cent. from the overthrow of the old imperial regime in 1911 to the coming of the Communists to power in 1949, a period which included the Japanese invasion and occupation of a large part of the country, 1937–45. In spite of the turmoil Christian work went on. The period up to 1939 was notable for the development of higher education and of church organization, and for the emergence and increasing importance of Chinese leaders, such as Cheng Ching Yi and Timothy Tinfang Lew among the Protestants. In the RC Church six Chinese bishops were consecrated in 1926. The influence of Christianity seemed to be on the increase until the advent of the Communist regime.

Thereafter Christian institutions were taken over by the State, many churches were closed, and Christians became subject to pressure and indoctrination to make them conform to the requirements of a Communist State. Those considered hostile to the regime were persecuted. There was no general expulsion of missionaries, though some were ill-treated and imprisoned; but their activities were much restricted and they were denounced as agents of Western imperialism. When it became clear that their presence could only embarrass and even endanger local Christians, it was judged best that they should withdraw. By the end of 1952 very few remained. It was the policy of the new rulers to sever all links between the Chinese Church and the West, and to bring it under control. For this purpose they encouraged the organization among the Chinese Christians of the 'Three-Self Patriotic Movement'. (Three-Self refers to the ideal of a self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating Church.) During the Cultural Revolution (1966) religion was virtually outlawed, largely by means of ridicule. All religion, not only Christianity, was driven underground. Some Church buildings were used for other purposes, but many were merely closed and left basically undamaged. By the end of the 1970s churches were reopening, leaders emerging, and meetings between them taking place; most were determined to restore an indigenous Church. RCs are divided between those who acknowledge allegiance to the Vatican and those who wish to be an autonomous body.

K. S. Latourette, A History of Christian Missions in China (1929), with full bibl., pp. 847–99; id., Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, v (New York, 1962; London, 1963), pp. 371–411. M. Huc, Le Christianisme en Chine, en Tartarie et au Thibet (4 vols., bound in 2, 1857–8; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1857–8); A. Launay, Histoire des missions de Chine (3 vols., 1903–8). P. M. D'Elia, S.J., The Catholic Missions in China (Shanghai, 1934); [E.] C. Cary-Elwes, China and the Cross. Studies in Missionary History (1957). J. de Moidrey, S.J., La Hiérarchie catholique en Chine, en Corée et au Japon (Variétés sinologiques, xxxviii; Shanghai, 1914), esp. pp. 1–158; L. Pfister, S.J., Notices biographiques et bibliographiques sur les Jésuites de l'ancienne mission de Chine, 1552–1773 (ib., lix and lx; 1932–1934). F. Bontinck, C.I.C.M., La Lutte autour de la liturgie chinoise aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Publications de l'Université Lovanianum de Léopoldville, 1962). H. R. Williamson, British Baptists in China, 1845–1952 (1957). J. Richter, Allgemeine evangelische Missionsgeschichte, iv, Das Werden der christlichen Kirche in China (1928). F. P. Jones, The Church in Communist China (New York [1962]). Id. (ed.), Documents of the Three-Self Movement (privately printed, ib., 1963). Latourette, vi, pp. 253–363, and vii, pp. 238–78, with bibl. S. Neill, Colonialism and Christian Missions (1966), pp. 116–69. J. Krahl in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 591–602, s.v., with bibl.

CHINA INLAND MISSION (C.I.M.). An interdenominational and international mission to the interior of *China founded by J. H. *Taylor in 1865. Its work has from the first been primarily evangelical, though it has a certain number of schools and dispensaries under its care. The Bible, to the inspiration of which in its entirety members of the Mission are committed, is the basis of the work, but individuals are encouraged to remain loyal to the tenets of the particular religious body to which they belong, and there is grouping by denominations in the mission field. Since 1951, when many missionaries had to leave China, the sphere of work has been extended into other parts of East and South East Asia. In 1965 the Mission was renamed the 'Overseas Missionary Fellowship'.

M. Broomhall, The Jubilee Story of the China Inland Mission [1915]. P. Thompson, D. E. Hoste. . . . Hudson Taylor's Successor as General Director of the China Inland Mission, 1900–1935 [c. 1947]. See also bibliography to Taylor, Hudson, esp. studies by H. and G. Taylor.

CHOIR (architectural). A term generally used to describe the part of a church containing the seats of the clergy. In the Roman *basilicas these seats at first were set in a semi-circle round the *apse and behind the altar. Later they were placed in a railed-off space within the nave, or body of the church, and at its eastern end. Later still, in various parts of Christendom, *chancels replaced apses; they were much larger, and rectangular in shape, and the choir was included within the chancel, at its W. end. The term 'ritual choir' is sometimes used for the seats of the clergy when these do not occupy the (architectural) choir of the church.

CHOIR (musical). A body of singers assisting at Divine Service. As early as the 4th cent. such bodies existed, made up of clerks in *minor orders and of boys, and, by the time of St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604), the *Schola Cantorum seems to have been fully established. In the Middle Ages the choirs of cathedrals and monasteries were almost the only places where music of any kind was taught, and there, until a conventional notation came in c. 1100, instruction was given orally. About the 15th cent. harmonized music began to supplement the liturgical plainchant of the Church, and lay singers to augment church choirs. In all sections of W. Christendom this change reached its fullest development c. the 18th cent., when church music was at its most elaborate and florid stage, and the singers often skilled professionals. It also became customary in this period to set the singers in a gallery at the west end. The *Oxford Movement in the C of E and the *Liturgical Movement among RCs have tended to restore the choir to the *chancel, though the 1964 RC legislation laid down that it should be placed where it could best assist the people to sing their parts. This ruling confirmed the various efforts that have been made in the 20th cent. to give the congregation fuller scope for partaking in the music of the services, and, except where there are expert professional choirs, to discourage the use of music in which the congregation cannot share. The traditional dress of male singers is the *surplice, worn over the *cassock, though ordinary lay clothes are sometimes worn.

CHOIR SISTERS. Nuns who are under obligation to attend all choir *offices, as contrasted with lay sisters, who, though living under rule, attend only certain services. The distinction is most marked in the *Carthusian Order, where the choir sisters receive solemn consecration as virgins by a rite similar to that used in ordinations to the diaconate. See also Lay Brother, Lay Sister.

CHOREPISCOPUS (Gk. χωρεπίσκοπος; also ἐπίσκοπος τῶν ἀγρῶν). In the early Church, a bishop of a country district in full episcopal orders. The powers which he could exercise were severely restricted (cf. Conc. *Ancyr. can. 13; Conc. *Antioch. can. 10). He could ordain only to the lower ranks of the clergy and was wholly subject to the authority of his diocesan. Such chorepiscopi were very numerous in the 4th cent., esp. in Asia Minor. At the Council of *Nicaea 15 signed in their own right. But the appointment of further chorepiscopi was forbidden by the Council of *Laodicea (can. 57), which ordered that their place be taken by 'periodeutai', i.e. visiting priests (cf. Conc. *Sard. can. 6, which forbids the appointment of bishops to tiny places so that the name of bishop shall not be cheapened). At the Council of *Chalcedon (451) they signed only as representatives of their diocesans. In the E. their functions were progressively restricted to those of a modern *archdeacon, and by the 13th cent. they had disappeared. As an honorary title the word survives to the present day in the Orthodox and *Uniat Patriarchates of Antioch.

In the W. they are first mentioned in 439 at the Council of Riez. They were numerous in missionary districts in Germany in the 8th cent., but became unpopular in the 9th, when they sought to extend their authority, and finally disappeared in the 12th cent. Their administrative authority passed to the archdeacon; their liturgical functions were continued by mitred abbots.

D. *Petavius, 'De Chorepiscopis', append. to Haer., lxix, in his ed. of *Epiphanius, Opera (1622, ii, pp. 276–82; PG, xlii, 1045–54). H. Bergère, Étude historique sur les chorévêques (thesis, Paris: 1905); C. J. *Hefele–H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., Histoire des conciles, ii (pt. 2; 1908), pp. 1197–1237 ('La Législation conciliaire relative aux chorévêques'); T. Gottlob, Der abendländische Chorepiskopat (Kanonistische Studien und Texte, i; 1928). J. Parisot, O.S.B., 'Les Chorévêques' in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, vi (1901), pp. 157–71 and 419–43. H. Leclercq in D.A.C.L., iii² (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 1423–52, s.v. 'Chorévêques', with good bibl.; J. Leclef, O.S.B., in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 686–95, s.v. 'Chorévêque'; E. Kirsten in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 1105–14, s.v. 'Chorbischof'.

CHRISM (Gk. χρῖσμα, from χρίω, 'anoint'). A mixture of olive oil and balsam, used in the ritual of the Greek and Latin Churches. The use of special oils for liturgical functions such as the consecration of priests and kings was familiar in the OT. The practice was taken over by the early Church, and its use in *Baptism and *Confirmation is attested by several early Fathers, e.g. *Tertullian, St. *Ambrose, and *Theodoret. St. *Cyril of Jerusalem refers to it as 'the mystic chrism' (τὸ μυστικὸν χρῖσμα), and the Council of *Laodicea as 'holy chrism'. To St. Augustine Confirmation is the 'Sacrament of the Chrism', to which a special power is attributed, conferred by the Holy Ghost, while the Apostolic Constitutions name it 'the strength of confessors' and St. *Gregory the Great the 'chrism of salvation'. The strength-giving richness of the oil and the fragrance of the balsam, representing the fullness of sacramental grace and the gifts of the Holy Ghost as well as the sweetness of Christian virtue, made it a favourite subject of allegorical interpretation to *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite and later writers. The early Schoolmen held that the chrism was a purely ecclesiastical institution, but St. *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus both teach that its liturgical use, though not mentioned in the NT, goes back to Christ Himself. The Council of *Trent followed this view, claiming for it the support of early authorities such as Pope *Fabian (d. 250). The texts adduced, however, have since been recognized as apocryphal.

Of the two ingredients required for the Chrism oil is the older element. In the E. Church a variety of perfumes is used in addition to balsam. From the early Middle Ages chrism is distinguished from other holy oils, e.g. that used for the unction of the sick, to which balsam is not added. Only bishops have the right to consecrate the chrism, as is already stated by the Second Council of *Carthage (390; can. 3), an injunction repeated by several later Councils. In the E. Churches it became the privilege of the *Patriarchs only. By the end of the 5th cent. the rite of its consecration had developed into a very impressive ceremony. Acc. to the present Latin usage, which dates in its essentials from the 8th cent., it is consecrated by the bishop, assisted by representative priests and deacons (when available), on *Maundy Thursday. Before 1955 the consecration took place during the Mass of the day, after the Communion, but the Ordinal of *Pius XII provided a special Mass of the Chrism to be celebrated in Cathedral Churches in the morning.

Chrism is used in the three Sacraments that confer a *character, viz. at Baptism, Confirmation, and Holy Orders, as well as at the consecration of churches and altars.

P. Hofmeister, O.S.B., Die heiligen Öle in der morgen- und abendländischen Kirche (Das östliche Christentum, N.F. Hftt. 6–7; Würzburg, 1948). A. Chavasse, 'La Bénédiction du chrême en Gaule avant l'adoption intégrale de la liturgie romaine' in Revue du Moyen-Age Latin, i (1945), pp. 109–28. J. Rogues, 'La Préface consécratoire du Chrême' in Maison-Dieu, xlix (1957), pp. 35–49. L. L. Mitchell, Baptismal Anointing (*Alcuin Club Collections, xlviii; 1966). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), pp. 308–17. P. Morrison in C.E., ii (1908), p. 696 f., s.v.; P. Bernard in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2395–2414, s.v. 'Chrême (saint)'; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2777–91, s.v. 'Huile'.

CHRISMATORY. A small vessel, in use since the Middle Ages, for keeping the three kinds of holy oils, viz. oil of the catechumens, oil of the sick, and *chrism, from which last the name is derived. Of the vessels used for these oils one set, preserving the supply for the year, is kept in the sacristy of the cathedral. Another set containing oil for parochial use is kept in a locked cupboard in the chancel of the parish church.

CHRISOM. See Chrysom.

CHRIST (Gk. χριστός, lit. the 'Anointed One'). The word is the Gk. translation of the Heb. '*Messiah' (q.v. for the development of the conception among the Jews and in the early Church). Orig. a title, it very soon came to be used by the followers of the risen Jesus as a proper name for their Lord (e.g. Gal. 1. 6, Heb. 9. 11), so much so that they themselves came to be known as '*Christians' (q.v.) before long. In early Christian theology, the name was at first employed to emphasize the Lord's position as the fulfilment of the Old Israel, e.g. in St. *Paul's contrast between *Adam and Christ as the 'Old' and the 'New Man'; but here again it soon lost its OT associations and was used purely as a proper name. See also Jesus Christ; and for the growth of the doctrine of the Person of Christ see Christology.

Editors and G. F. Moore (cf. p. 346 n.) in F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake, The Beginnings of Christianity, I, i (1920), pp. 346–68; E. de W. Burton, Galatians (I.C.C., 1921), pp. 392–9. S. V. McCasland, 'Christ Jesus' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxv (1946), pp. 377–83. W. Bauer, Griechisch-deutsches Wörterbuch zu den Schriften des Neuen Testaments und der übrigen urchristlichen Literatur (ed. 4, 1952), cols. 1609–11; G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), p. 1531 f., s.v. Χριστός. A. Romeo in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 918–21.

CHRIST, Disciples of. See Disciples of Christ.

CHRIST THE KING, Feast of. The Feast observed in the RC Church in celebration of the all-embracing authority of Christ which shall lead mankind to seek the 'peace of Christ' in the 'Kingdom of Christ'. It was instituted by *Pius XI in the encyclical Quas primas of 11 Dec. 1925 at the close of the *Jubilee Year, when the last Sunday in October was allotted for its observance. From 1970 it has been kept on the last Sunday before the beginning of Advent. It is also kept unofficially in some Anglican churches.

Text of Quas primas, in A.A.S., xvii (1925), pp. 593–610.

CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD. One of the largest colleges in the University of Oxford, it was founded in 1525 on the site of the monastery of St. *Frideswide by T. *Wolsey as 'Cardinal College', and, seven years later, refounded as 'King *Henry the Eighth's College'. In 1545 the latter was dissolved and in 1546 reconstituted in substantially its present form as Christ Church ('Aedes Christi') by Henry VIII. At the same time the new episcopal see was moved from Oseney Abbey to the church of St. Frideswide, which thus became both a cathedral and a college chapel, and the whole establishment was placed under a Dean and eight Canons. The number of canonries is now seven, of which four are attached to professorships in the faculty of theology. In 1867 the tutors of the college were admitted to membership of the Governing Body.

H. L. Thompson, Christ Church (1900); S. A. Warner, Oxford Cathedral (1924); E. W. Watson, The Cathedral Church of Christ in Oxford (1935); W. G. Hiscock, A Christ Church Miscellany (privately pr., Oxford, 1946). A. Hassall (ed.), Christ Church, Oxford. An Anthology in Prose and Verse (1911), with useful introd. E. G. W. Bill–J. F. A. Mason, Christ Church and Reform, 1850–1867 (Oxford, 1970).

CHRISTADELPHIANS, a Christian sect. They were originally called 'Thomasites' after John Thomas (1805–71), who founded them in America in 1848. The name 'Christadelphians' ('Christ's brethren') was Thomas's substitute for 'Christian', which term he rejected, teaching that the beliefs and religious development which it connoted constituted an apostasy. He claimed to return to the beliefs and practice of the earliest disciples. Christadelphian doctrines include the acceptance of the Bible as inspired and infallible, and the interpretation of Hebrew prophecy and, e.g., the Book of Revelation in terms of current and future events. The doctrine of the Trinity is rejected. The core of the Gospel is belief in the return of Jesus Christ in power and great glory to set up a visible world-wide theocracy beginning at Jerusalem, and assurance of this is held to be necessary to salvation. Christadelphians also hold no form of Baptism to be valid except immersion, that the wicked will be annihilated, and that the unconverted, the ignorant, and infants will not be raised from the dead. They have no ministers or clergy. The sect publishes no statistics as to its membership.

R. Roberts, Dr. Thomas. His Life and Work (1884). B. R. Wilson, Sects and Society. A Sociological Study of Three Religious Groups in Britain (1961), pp. 219–314, with bibl. pp. 382–5. F. J. Powicke in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), pp. 569–71, s.v.

CHRISTIAN. The name was orig. applied to followers of Christ by outsiders, being first used, acc. to Acts 11. 26, at *Antioch c. A.D. 40–44. In the NT it occurs in only two other places, in Acts 26. 28, where it is used by King Agrippa speaking to St. *Paul, and in 1 Pet. 4. 16, where its use by enemies or persecutors is envisaged. Acc. to *Tacitus (Annals, xv. 44) it was already current among the populace at Rome at the time of the *Neronian persecution (A.D. 64) and it was always the official Roman designation of members of the Church; thus during times of persecution it was often the confession or denial of this name which was crucial, e.g. in the cases reported by *Pliny (q.v.). The form of the word, parallel to, e.g., 'Herodians' (Mk. 12. 13, &c.) and 'Caesarians' (supporters or clients of Caesar), shows that 'Christ' was taken as a proper name, in ignorance of its significance as the title of the Messiah, and has also been thought to indicate that Christianity was considered as a quasi-political movement. Owing to its pagan origin the word was long avoided by Christian writers, except in reference to conflict with paganism. Thus in 1 Pet. 4. 16 the readers are bidden not to be ashamed of suffering on the charge of being a 'Christian', and St. *Ignatius of Antioch writing of his approaching martyrdom says, 'Let me not merely be called "Christian" but be found one' (Ign., Rom., iii. 2). By pagans the name 'Christus' was often confused with 'chrestus' (χρηστός, good, kind) and hence the form 'Chrestiani' was used. The *Apologists (e.g. *Tertullian, Apol., iii and v) retorted that this, though a misunderstanding, was a true indication of the character of Christianity and that the name 'Christian' stood for nothing worthy of punishment. As the name for which the martyrs suffered (cf. Lk. 21. 12) and as containing the name of Christ, the term easily came to fill the obvious need for a proper name by which the Church could designate itself as distinct from Jews and pagans (and later from Muslims, etc.), rather than the earlier terms 'brethren' (Acts 1. 16), 'disciples' (Acts 11. 26), 'believers' (Acts 2. 44), and others found in the NT.

In modern times the name Christian has usually been claimed by every form of belief stemming from historic Christianity, and has tended, in nominally Christian countries, to lose any credal significance and imply only that which is ethically praiseworthy (e.g. 'a Christian action') or socially customary ('Christian name'). It was disclaimed, as too narrow, by some *Unitarians in the 19th cent., though claimed by the main Unitarian tradition. On the other hand, it has been occasionally adopted in a particular sense by sects which claim to practise mere 'New Testament Christianity' and reject denominational labels (e.g. *Bible Christians).

R. A. *Lipsius, Ueber den Ursprung und den ältesten Gebrauch des Christennamens (Jena, 1873). J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, Pt. II, S. Ignatius and S. Polycarp, i (1885), pp. 400–4. E. Peterson, 'Christianus' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, i (Studi e Testi, cxxi; 1946), pp. 356–72; E. J. Bickerman, 'The Name of Christians' in H.T.R., xlii (1949), pp. 109–124; H. B. Mattingly, 'The Origin of the Name Christiani' in J.T.S., N.S., ix (1958), pp. 26–37; C. Spicq, O.P., 'Ce que signifie le titre de chrétien' in Studia Theologica, xv (1961), pp. 68–78, with further refs. S. C. Gayford in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 384–6, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 1464–78, s.v. 'Chrétien', with bibl.; H. Karpp in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 1114–38, s.v. 'Christennamen', also with bibl.

CHRISTIAN LIBRARY, The. The collection of fifty spiritual books which J. *Wesley selected and reissued in handy form to meet the devotional and intellectual needs of his followers. It was published in 1749–55.

CHRISTIAN MAJESTY, His Most (Lat. Rex Christianissimus). A title belonging to the Kings of France, and from 1464 invariably used by the Popes in addressing them.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE. The tenets of a religious body concerned chiefly with the propagation of healing by means of prayer alone. It was founded by Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy (1821–1910), a native of New Hampshire and of *Calvinistic origin. Having been subject from her youth to various ailments, she believed she was healed by a mesmerist, P. P. Quimby, recommended to her by her second husband. After Quimby's death (1866) she began to develop her own system of spiritual healing, built on the principle that mind is the only reality and matter an illusion. She maintained that Christ had healed by His spiritual influence, and this art she claimed to have rediscovered by revelation of the Scriptures. In her famous Science and Health (1875), which had an immense success and went through many editions, she stated her principles and her healing methods. Suffering and death are the effects of false thinking, which consists in a mistaken belief in the existence of matter. Health, therefore, is to be restored not by medical treatment but by opposing right thinking to the illusions of the patient. After her third marriage, in 1877, to Mr. Eddy, an experienced business man, her system began to flourish. In 1879 the first 'Church of Christ Scientist' was opened in Boston, Mass., and in 1881 the 'Metaphysical College' followed. From that time Christian Science spread esp. in the English-speaking countries, and also in Germany. The other writings of Mrs. Eddy include Unity of Good and Unreality of Evil (1887) and Retrospection and Introspection (1891).

Since the death of the foundress the organization has been in the hands of a board of directors, who hold their office for life and appoint their successors. Their leading publication, the Christian Science Monitor, a well-informed newspaper, is one of their principal assets. The Christian Science services are very simple: those on Sunday consist chiefly of readings from the Bible and the works of Mary Baker Eddy and singing of hymns; the mid-week meetings include accounts of cures by members of the congregation. The principles of Christian Science are not admitted by the Christian Churches and sects. Its teaching on the unreality of matter, sin, and suffering conflicts with the Biblical doctrines of the Creation, Fall, and Redemption. While its claim to cure disease by spiritual means is justified in certain cases, the universal applicability of its methods is not admitted outside the body of Christian Scientists.

M. C. Sturge, The Truth and Error of Christian Science (1903). G. Milmine, The Life of Mary Baker G. Eddy and the History of Christian Science (1909). L. P. Powell, Mary Baker Eddy (New York, 1930). N. Beasley, The Cross and the Crown. The History of Christian Science (Boston, 1952; London, 1953); id., The Continuing Spirit (Boston–Toronto, 1956; London, 1957). C. S. Braden, Christian Science Today (Dallas, 1958; London, 1959). R. Peel, Christian Science. Its Encounter with American Culture (New York, 1958); id., Mary Baker Eddy. The Years of Discovery (ib., 1966). B. R. Wilson, Sects and Society. A Sociological Study of Three Religious Groups in Britain (1961), pp. 121–215, with bibl., pp. 376–82. S. Paget, The Faith and Works of Christian Science (1909), is a criticism of the system from the medical point of view. H. A. L. Fisher, Our New Religion (1933), criticizes both the life and character of the foundress and her work and gives much detailed information.

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM. A movement for social reform initiated in the 19th cent. by members of the C of E. It arose as a reaction against the hostility of the 18th cent. Established Church towards the discussion of social questions and was directed esp. against the *Utilitarian and laissez-faire doctrines of J. Bentham, J. and J. S. Mill, and their school. The system aimed at a combined reform of individuals and of society by the application of Christian principles in all social relationships, and came into prominence by the issue of a manifesto to the workmen of England on the morrow of the failure of the Chartist Movement in 1848. Its best-known leaders were J. M. F. *Ludlow, F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, and Thomas Hughes. Their short-lived periodical, Politics for the People, though very moderate in its descriptions of the social injustices of the time, roused much opposition and had soon to be abandoned for lack of support. After the failure of the paper the group of friends, which soon found a wider circle of sympathizers, began to organize evening classes, which gradually developed into their 'Working Men's College', a centre established in Great Ormond Street in 1854. They also engaged in practical relief work and, in 1850, backed by a 'Society of Promoters', opened co-operative workshops for tailoring, building, iron-founding, and other crafts. In the same year they began to publish their Tracts on Christian Socialism, which, like Politics for the People, met with much hostility. The eventual failure of the movement may be attributed not only to the indifference of the official C of E but also to the unresponsiveness of the workers themselves and to the absorption of public interest by the Crimean War. Its work, however, marked the beginning of the modern social movement in the C of E and had much influence in the formation of the trade unions, in early co-operative legislation, and in working-class education.

A. V. Woodworth, Christian Socialism in England (1903). C. E. Raven, Christian Socialism, 1848–1854 (1920). G. C. Binyon, The Christian Socialist Movement in England (1931). M. B. Reckitt, Faith and Society. A Study of the Structure, Outlook and Opportunity of the Christian Social Movement in Great Britain and America (1932). Id., Maurice to Temple. A Century of Social Movement in the Church of England (Scott Holland Memorial Lectures, 1946; 1947). J. F. C. Harrison, A History of the Working Men's College 1854–1954 (1954). A. R. Vidler, F. D. Maurice and Company (1966). P. d'A. Jones, The Christian Socialist Revival 1877–1914. Religion, Class, and Social Conscience in Late-Victorian England (Princeton, 1968).

CHRISTIAN YEAR, The. The collection of poems for the Sundays and holy days of the year, by J. *Keble, published in 1827. It was very popular throughout the 19th cent., and several well-known hymns have been taken from it (e.g. E.H. Nos. 216, 370).

The phrase 'the Christian Year' is also used of the liturgical *Year, i.e. the year conceived as starting at *Advent Sunday.

CHRISTINA (1626–89), Queen of Sweden. The only surviving child of *Gustavus Adolphus, she succeeded to the Swedish throne in 1632 before she was six. Until 1644 the government was in the hands of a council of regency. Christina, who was given a boy's education, received instruction in politics (from Axel Oxenstierna), ancient and modern languages, and philosophy (from Johannes Matthiae, Bp. of Strängnäs). After assuming the direction of affairs on her 18th birthday (8 Dec. 1644), she made it her first aim to end the *Thirty Years' War and was partly responsible for the Treaty of *Westphalia (1648). At home she promoted education, increasing and improving the schools and colleges founded by Gustavus and bringing into effect the first school ordinance for the whole kingdom (1649). She also sought to encourage learning by the patronage of foreign as well as Swedish scholars, artists, and scientists, among them R. *Descartes, H. *Grotius, G. J. *Voss, S. *Pufendorf, Olaf Rudbeck (discoverer of the lymphatic vessels), and J. A. *Comenius, who helped her with her school reforms.

Religious interest in the RC faith, combined with dislike of the monotony of rule and her Council's repeated requests that she should marry, made her suggest abdication as early as 1651. On 6 June 1654, largely through disagreements with her foreign policy (proposed alliances with Spain) and misgivings at her extravagance, the Council accepted her resignation. In Nov. 1655 she was received into the RC Church at Innsbruck by L. *Holste and settled in Rome with her home first at the Palazzo Farnese and from 1668 at the Palazzo Riario. Her allegiance to her new faith, although absolute, was never blind. She made repeated attempts to lessen the penalties imposed by the *Inquisition, and in a letter to the Chevalier de Terlon on the Revocation of the Edict of *Nantes, dated 3 Feb. 1686, she criticized the use of force ('military men are strange apostles'). At Rome she became the centre of a group of intellectuals, later known as the 'Arcadia Academy', who aimed at purifying poetry.

After her abdication she twice attempted (1660; 1667) to resume the Swedish crown, intrigued with J. *Mazarin to become ruler of the Spanish kingdom of Naples, and, on the abdication of John Casimir of Vasa (1668), sought the crown of Poland; but her efforts to regain political power were unsuccessful. As she advanced in years she became increasingly eccentric. She died at Rome, leaving Cardinal Azzolino her chief heir. There is a monument to her memory in *St. Peter's.

Christina left, in French highly praised by Descartes, some fragmentary writings of her own (autobiography; reflexions on Alexander the Great and Julius Caesar; some detached aphorisms). Her intellectual gifts were celebrated in verse by Andrew Marvell and J. *Milton, and she endeavoured, through Whitelock, to persuade Milton to visit her court. She made a collection of MSS., consisting of works on theology, Church history, philosophy, civil law, and medicine, which are deservedly famous and have been incorporated in the *Vatican Library ('Reginenses').

J. Arckenholtz, Mémoires concernant Christine, reine de Suède (4 vols., Amsterdam, 1751–60), incl. some of her works and letters, with her autobiography in vol. iii, pp. 1–69; Eng. tr. of some of her Works (London, 1753), with account of her Life, Character, and Writings by the translator, pp. iii–xx. Numerous modern studies include those by F. W. Bain (London, '1890' [1889]), I. A. Taylor (ib., 1909), C. Weibull (Stockholm, 1931; ed. 2, 1934; revised Eng. tr., 1966), J. Castelnau (Paris, 1944), S. Stolpe (2 vols., Stockholm, 1960–1961; Eng. tr. of abridged German version, 1966; and other works of this author), Georgina Masson (London, 1968), and the studies and documents ed. M. von Platen (Analecta Reginensia, i; Stockholm, 1966). C. N. D. de Bildt, Christine de Suède et le cardinal Azzolino. Lettres inédites, 1666–1668, avec une introduction et des notes (1899); id., Christine de Suède et le Conclave de Clément X, 1669–1670 (1906). G. Claretta, La regina Cristina di Svezia in Italia, 1655–1689 (1892). C. Weibull, Drottning Christina och Monaldesco (1936). G. B. *Pitra–H. Stevenson, Codices Manuscripti Graeci Reginae Suecorum et Pii PP. II (Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codices Manuscripti Recensiti iubente Leone XIII; Rome, 1888). A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., Codices Reginenses Latini. Codices 1–500 (all publd., Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codices Manu Scripti Recensiti, 2 vols., Vatican, 1937–45). Les Manuscrits de la reine de Suède au Vatican. Réédition du catalogue de Montfaucon et cotes actuelles (S.T., ccxxxviii; 1964). Christina, Queen of Sweden—a personality of European civilisation. Exhibition arranged in collaboration with The Royal Library, the Royal Collections . . . and the National Record Office, Stockholm, Sweden (Stockholm, 1966), with preface by C. Nordenfalk.

CHRISTKATHOLIKEN. The official name of the *Old Catholics of Switzerland. The 'Christkatholische Kirche der Schweiz' was formally founded at a synod at Olten in 1875.

CHRISTMAS. Though speculation as to the time of year of Christ's Birth dates from the early 3rd cent., *Clement of Alexandria, e.g., suggesting 20 May, the celebration of the anniversary does not appear to have been general till the later 4th cent. The earliest mention of the observance on 25 Dec. is in the *Philocalian Calendar, representing Roman practice of the year 336 (25 Dec.: natus Christus in Betleem Judeae). This date was prob. chosen to oppose the feast of the Natalis Solis Invicti by the celebration of the birth of the 'Sun of Righteousness', and its observance in the W. seems to have spread from Rome. In the E. the closely related Feast of the *Epiphany (6 Jan.), which commemorated also the Baptism of Christ, was at first the more important; but in the later 4th cent. it was connected with the Nativity, esp. in Syria, and by the middle of the 5th cent. most of the E. had adopted 25 Dec., though the Church of *Jerusalem held to 6 Jan. until 549. In the *Armenian Church 6 Jan. is still observed as Christmas Day.

The controversies of the 4th to 6th cents. on the Incarnation and the Person of Christ doubtless contributed to the growth in importance of the feast.

The day is celebrated in the W. rite by three Masses, of the night (normally said at midnight), of the dawn, and of the day, which have been held to symbolize the threefold birth of Christ, eternally in the bosom of the Father, from the womb of the Virgin Mary, and mystically in the soul of the faithful. The BCP provides a Proper *Preface.

The popular observance of the feast has always been marked by the joy and merry-making formerly characteristic of the Roman Saturnalia and the other pagan festivals it replaced. It developed considerably in England in the 19th cent. through the importation of German customs by the Prince Consort (e.g. Christmas trees) and the influence of Charles Dickens.

L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 247–54 (Eng. tr. of ed. 3, 1903, pp. 257–65). H. Usener, Das Weihnachtsfest (1889; ed. 2 by H. *Lietzmann, 1911); B. Botte, O.S.B., Les Origines de la Noël et de l'Épiphanie (1932). O. Cullmann, Weihnachten in der alten Kirche (Basel, 1947; Fr. tr., 1949; Eng. tr. in id., The Early Church (1956), pp. 17–36). J. Lemarié, O.S.B., La Manifestation du Seigneur. La liturgie de Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Lex Orandi, xxiii; 1957), esp. pp. 23–229. H. Frank, O.S.B., 'Zur Geschichte von Weihnachten und Epiphanie' in J.L.W., xii ('1932'; publd. 1934), pp. 145–155; xiii ('1933'; 1935), pp. 1–38; J. Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Aux origines du cycle de Noël' in E.L., lx (1946), pp. 7–26; F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, vi (1950), pp. 23–30 ('Natalis Solis Invicti und das christliche Weihnachtsfest'); H. Frank, O.S.B., 'Frühgeschichte und Ursprung des römischen Weihnachtsfestes im Lichte neuerer Forschung' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, ii (1952), pp. 1–24; H. Engberding, O.S.B., 'Der 25. Dezember als Tag der Feier der Geburt des Herrn', ib., pp. 25–43. J. Gaillard, 'Noël: memoria ou mystère?' in Maison-Dieu, lix (1959), pp. 37–59. R. Berger, 'Ostern und Weihnachten. Zum Grundgefüge des Kirchenjahres' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, viii (1963), pp. 1–20. J. Mossay, Les Fêtes de Noël et d'Épiphanie d'après les sources littéraires cappadociennes du IVe siècle (Textes et Études Liturgiques, iii; 1965). C. A. Miles, Christmas in Ritual and Tradition, Christian and Pagan (1912). K. Onasch, Die Weihnachtsfest im orthodoxen Kirchenjahr (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur Konfessionskunde der Orthodoxie, ii; 1958). G. Rietschel in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 47–54, s.v. 'Weihnachten', with full bibl. to date; C. Martindale, S.J., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 724–8; K. *Lake in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), pp. 601–8; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 905–58 (esp. 910–34), s.v. 'Nativité de Jésus'; C. Smith in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 655–60, with useful bibl. See also bibl. to Epiphany.

CHRISTOCENTRIC. (1) A word originally used of systems of theology which maintain that God has never revealed Himself to man except in the Incarnate Christ. Christocentric theology bases itself on a literal interpretation of Mt. 11. 27, to the exclusion of the passages in Scripture which seem to refer to or imply a revelation in nature, and thus precludes the possibility of *natural theology altogether. Among its modern advocates are A. *Ritschl, W. *Herrmann, and K. *Barth.

(2) More generally, of any set of religious beliefs which is focused primarily on the Person of Christ.

CHRISTOLOGY. The study of the Person of Christ, and in particular of the union in Him of the Divine and human natures. The NT presents the facts about His Person rather than any attempted explanations of them, but the Gospels indicate that the historical Christ claimed to be both God and Man, and from the Acts and Epistles it is clear that the earliest Christians regarded Him as such. The task of later Christological speculation was to work out and express in precise terms the theological truth therein implied. St. *Paul and the earliest writers were more concerned to insist on the reality of both the Godhead and the manhood (cf. 1 Cor. 15. 1 ff. with Col. 1. 15–20) than to attempt to interrelate them. It was only when one-sided distortions of the truth had come into being, such as the *Ebionite view which conceived of Christ as the Jewish (human) Messiah, to the neglect of His divinity, and the *Gnostic view that the Incarnation was purely an appearance of God, without real assumption of humanity, that the *Apologists of the 2nd cent. were at pains to begin elaborating the philosophical implications of the Incarnation. In their writings they developed the *Logos doctrine put forth in St. *John (1. 1–18), contending that the Word, Who is the eternal expression of God, appeared on earth in history as Jesus Christ, so that the Incarnation is, at least from one point of view, the expression in time of an eternal relationship which exists within the Godhead. St. *Irenaeus of Lyons worked this conception out, and added the idea of *Recapitulation, that Christ not only expresses God in time, but sums up humanity in Himself.

In the next period the great difference between the orthodox, if sometimes incomplete, expressions of faith and those of the heresiarchs lay in the fact that the orthodox kept within the terms of these data, while their opponents went outside them, either by failing to maintain the unity and distinctness of the Person of the Son, or the reality either of His divinity or His humanity. *Arius (256–336), contending for the unity of the Godhead, denied that the Son is truly God; and, striving to uphold the unity of Christ's historical experience, denied that there are two natures in Christ, asserting instead that the nature of the Son took the place of the human soul in the historical Christ. The Creed which was adopted by the Council of *Nicaea in 325 replied to these views by the phrases, 'Being of one substance with the Father' (ὁμοούσιος τῷ πατρί) and 'became man' (ἐνανθρωπήσας). *Apollinarius (d. c. 390), while like Arius he attempted to uphold a single nature in Christ, was esp. concerned to maintain the Godhead of Christ, and so asserted that the Divine nature took the place of His human spirit, or in other words that His humanity consisted in the purely animal elements present in human nature. On the other hand, *Theodore of Mopsuestia (d. 428) and his pupil *Nestorius (d. after 439), as good *Antiochenes, were so concerned to preserve the reality of Christ's purely human experience that they separated the divinity and humanity in Him almost to the point of making Him into two Persons. The Council of *Ephesus in 431 condemned this view, asserting that He who was born of Mary is God. Then *Eutyches (d. after 454) maintained that, though in Christ there were two natures 'before the Incarnation', there was only one 'after the Incarnation', thereby developing the view of *Origen that the union of human and Divine took place in a pre-existent state, but adding to this questionable view the theologically unsatisfactory theory of the coalescence of the two natures into one. This and the earlier heresies the Council of *Chalcedon (451) excluded by holding 'one . . . Christ . . . in two natures, without confusion, without change, without division, without separation'. In spite of this definition, the next two centuries saw the wide prevalence of *Monophysitism, as well as of *Monothelitism, teaching which was condemned in the 2nd and 3rd Councils of *Constantinople (553 and 680 respectively). In this period *Leontius of Byzantium (d. c. 543) insisted on the Enhypostasia* as expressing the union of two natures in one person, without either dividing the personality or destroying the distinct characteristics of the other.

At the Reformation *Lutheranism tended to emphasize the unity of Christ's Person, and to argue that His assumption of humanity meant simply that He abstained, except on rare occasions, from the use of Divine attributes, a view which might, if logically pressed, have led back to Apollinarianism; the *Reformed theologians, on the other hand, stressed the difference between the Divine and the human, though a return to *Nestorianism was largely prevented by the acceptance of various *Kenotic theories which eventually grew up. Among other modern theories are that of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (1768–1834), acc. to which the Divinity of Christ lies in the consciousness of a unique relation to God, and that of the *Ritschlian school to the effect that the statement that the historical Person, Jesus Christ, is Divine is a value-judgement rather than a judgement of fact. There was also the view of W. *Sanday (1843–1920) that the characteristics of Deity were present in the subconscious mind of Christ in His Incarnate life, and only appeared to the conscious mind by the normal processes of the development of human consciousness. See also Incarnation; Hypostasis; and Hypostatic Union.

Among the more important modern works in English are R. I. *Wilberforce, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1848); Lux Mundi*, ed. C. *Gore (1889); C. Gore, The Incarnation of the Son of God (Bampton Lectures, 1891); id., Dissertations (1895); R. L. *Ottley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (2 vols., 1896); A. J. Mason, The Conditions of Our Lord's Life on Earth (1896); F. *Weston, The One Christ (1907); W. Sanday, Christologies, Ancient and Modern (1910); H. R. Mackintosh, The Person of Jesus Christ (1912); F. *Loofs, What is the Truth about Jesus Christ? (1913); H. M. Relton, A Study in Christology (1917); C. Gore, Belief in Christ (1922); W. *Temple, Christus Veritas (1924); S. Cave, The Doctrine of the Person of Christ (1925); Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation, ed. A. E. J. Rawlinson (1928); L. Hodgson, And Was Made Man (1928); L. S. Thornton, C.R., The Incarnate Lord (1928); H. *Rashdall, God and Man (1930); E. *Brunner, The Mediator (Eng. tr., 1934); J. K. Mozley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1936); J. M. Creed, The Divinity of Jesus Christ (1938); R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (1940); E. L. Mascall, Christ, the Christian and the Church (1946); D. M. Baillie, God was in Christ (1948). A. Grillmeier, S.J., 'Die theologische und sprachliche Vorbereitung der christologischen Formel von Chalkedon' in id.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 5–202; revised Eng. tr. as Christ in Christian Tradition (1965). O. Cullmann, Die Christologie des Neuen Testaments (Tübingen, 1957; ed. 2, 1958; Eng. tr., 1959; ed. 2, 1963). R. A. Norris, Manhood and Christ. A Study in the Christology of Theodore of Mopsuestia (Oxford, 1963). W. Pannenberg, Grundzüge der Christologie (Gütersloh, 1964; Eng. tr., 1968). R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology (1965); J. McIntyre, The Shape of Christology (1966). J. Knox, The Humanity and Divinity of Christ. A Study of Pattern in Christology (Cambridge, 1967). J. Meyendorff, Christ in Eastern Christian Thought after Chalcedon (Washington, D.C., 1969). E. Schillebeeck, O.P., Jezus, het verhaal van een levende (1974; Eng. tr., 1979); id., Gerechtigheid en liefde: Genade en bevrijding (1977; Eng. tr., 1980; both controversial). See also works cited s.vv. Creeds and Son of Man.

CHRISTOPHER, St. (Gk. Χριστοφόρος, 'one who bore Christ'), one of the 14 *Auxiliary saints. Acc. to tradition, he suffered martyrdom in Asia Minor during the 3rd cent. Many legends have gathered round his name. One represents him as a powerful giant who earned his living by carrying travellers across a river, and on one occasion numbered among his passengers a small child who caused him to bow beneath his burden, since the child was none other than the Christ and His weight that of the whole world. It was a common medieval custom to place a large mural painting of the saint opposite the south door of the church, in the belief that the sight of it would safeguard the passer-by from accident that day. St. Christopher is the patron of wayfarers; recently he has been adopted esp. by motorists. His feast day, 25 July, was dropped from the Roman Calendar of 1969, but may be observed locally.

Various Gk. and Lat. texts of legend in AA.SS., Jul. VI (1729), pp. 125–49, in Anal. Boll., i (1882), pp. 121–48, and x (1891), pp. 393–405, and in H. Usener (ed.), Acta S. Marinae et S. Christophori (Bonn, 1886), pp. 54–76. K. Richter, Der deutsche S. Christoph. Eine historisch-kritische Untersuchung (1896). F. Mainguet, Saint Christophe. Sa vie et son culte (1891). H. F. [C.] Rosenfeld, Der hl. Christophorus. Seine Verehrung und seine Legende (Acta Academiae Aboensis, Humaniora, x, No. 3; 1937). E. K. Stahl, Die Legende vom heil. Riesen Christophorus in der Graphik des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts (1920); H. C. Whaite, St. Christopher in English Mediaeval Wallpainting (University College (London) Monographs on English Mediaeval Art, i; 1929). C. Johnson, St. Christopher. The Patron Saint of Travellers (1932; enlarged 1938); A. Masseron, Saint Christophe, patron des automobilistes (1933). Aemiliana Lohr, O.S.B., 'Der heilige Christophorus und die Wandlungen im christlichen Heiligenkult' in A. Mayer–J. Quasten–B. Neunheuser, O.S.B. (edd.), Vom Christlichen Mysterium. Gesammelte Arbeiten zum Gedächtnis von Odo Casel O.S.B. (Düsseldorf, 1951), pp. 227–59; W. Loeschcke, 'Sanctus Christophorus Canineus' in Edwin Redslob zum 70. Geburtstag. Eine Festgabe [1955], pp. 33–82. B. Kötting–F. Grass in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 1167 f., s.v. 'Christophorus', with bibl.

CHRISTOPHERSON, JOHN (d. 1558), Bp. of *Chichester. He was one of the original Fellows of Trinity College by the charter of 1546, and among the first to introduce Greek studies to Cambridge. As an opponent of the Reformation he retired abroad during *Edward VI's reign, but his college continued to support him. When on Mary's accession William Bill, a pronounced Protestant, was ejected from the Mastership of Trinity, Christopherson was put in to replace him; and he became chaplain and confessor to the Queen. In 1554 he was appointed Dean of Norwich and in 1557 Bp. of Chichester. For preaching a violent sermon on 27 Nov. 1558 after *Elizabeth's accession, against the Reformation, he was imprisoned and died shortly afterwards. He was a learned and enthusiastic Patristic scholar who rendered into Latin the writings of *Philo (Philonis Judaei Scriptoris eloquentissimi libri iv, Antwerp, 1553) as well as the Church Histories of *Eusebius, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Evagrius, and *Theodoret (published posthumously, Louvain, 1570). He also collected a considerable number of MSS., which he bequeathed to Trinity College.

T. Cooper in D.N.B., x (1887), pp. 293–5, s.v., with reff.

CHRISTOPHORIA (Gk.), 'the carrying of Christ'. In the *Ambrosian rite, the title of a Feast observed on 7 Jan., the day following the *Epiphany, and commemorating the Return from Egypt (Mt. 2. 21).

CHRODEGANG, St. (d. 766), Bp. of Metz from 742. He was one of the chief ecclesiastical reformers of his time. A relative of King *Pepin, he became private secretary, chancellor, and chief minister to *Charles Martel, offices which he retained after he became Bp. of Metz. In 748 he founded the abbey of *Gorze, near Metz, and continued to take a keen part in furthering monasticism throughout his diocese. He also caused the canons of his cathedral to live a community life, drawing up for them the 'rule' which bears his name (c. 755). The picture given by this rule is that of a community consisting essentially of clerics, monastic in their common life and in the performance of the Divine Office, but unmonastic in their close connexion with diocesan officials such as the bishop and archdeacon, and, above all, in their licence to hold private property. He also introduced the Roman chant and liturgy into the diocese of Metz. Feast day, 6 Mar.

'Rule' repr. from L. *d'Achéry in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxix, 1057–96; crit. ed. from Leyden Cod. Voss. Lat. 94 by W. Schmitz (Hanover, 1889); text, based on ed. of Schmitz, with introd. and notes, in J. B. Pelt, Études sur la cathédrale de Metz. La liturgie (1937), pp. 5–28. Early Eng. tr., together with Lat. text, ed. A. S. Napier in E.E.T.S., Original Series, cl (1916), pp. 1–101, with introd., pp. vii–x. A. Werminghoff, 'Die Recensionen der Regula Chrodegangi' in N.A., xxvii (1902), pp. 646–51. Life ascribed to John, Abbot of Gortz (historically valueless), ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, x (1852), pp. 552–72. Of more importance is relevant section of *Paul the Deacon's Liber de Episcopis Mettensibus, ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, ii (1829), p. 267 f. M. Buchner, 'Die "Vita Chrodegangi" – eine kirchenpolitische Tendenzschrift aus der Mitte des 9. Jahrhunderts, zugleich eine Untersuchung zur Entwicklung der Primatial- und Vikariatsidee' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abt., xvi (1927), pp. 1–36, with reff. to earlier studies. É. Morhain, 'Origine et histoire de la "Regula Canonicorum" de Saint Chrodegang' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, i (Lateranum, N.S., xiv; 1948), pp. 173–85. R. Folz and others, Saint Chrodegang. Communications présentées au colloque tenu à Metz à l'occasion du douzième centenaire de sa mort (Metz, 1967). T. de Morembert in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 781–4, s.v., with bibl.

CHROMATIUS, St. (d. 407), Bp. of *Aquileia, N. Italy. He succeeded Valerian in the see c. 388. A learned scholar, he conducted an active correspondence with several illustrious contemporaries, among them St. *Ambrose, St. *Jerome, and *Rufinus. In the *Origenistic dispute he sought to mediate between the two last named. He was a strong supporter of St. John *Chrysostom, on whose behalf he interceded, without success, with the Emp. Honorius. Eighteen of his Homilies on Mt. [3. 15–17; 5. 1–6. 24], including a separate treatise on the Eight Beatitudes, have long been known, but eight more have recently been identified. In addition J. Lemarié has discovered numerous sermons which he ascribes to him. Feast day, 2 Dec.

His Works are repr., mainly from the text ed. P. Braida, Udine, 1816, in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 247–436. Modern ed. by A. Hoste in C.C., Series Latina, ix (1957), pp. 371–447; also, incl. those recently ascribed to Chromatius, ed. R. Étaix–J. Lemarié, O.S.B. (ib., ixA; 2 vols., 1974–77). R. Étaix, '"Tractatus in Matheum", partiellement inédits, pouvant être attribués à Chromace d'Aquilée' in R. Bén., lxx (1960), pp. 469–503. Sermons ed. by J. Lemarié, with Fr. tr. by H. Tardif (S.C., cliv and clxiv; 1969–71).

CHRONICLES, Books of. These OT Books record the history of Israel and Judah from the Creation to the return from Exile under Cyrus (536 B.C.). In the Heb. Canon they are a single Book; the division into two goes back to the *Septuagint, where they are called Παραλειπομένων α′β′, i.e. 'that which is left over', sc. from Sam. and Kgs. The term 'Chronicles' was introduced by St. *Jerome, whence it made its way into the English and German versions. The work, which originally formed one continuous whole with the Books of *Ezra and *Nehemiah, is divided into four parts. 1 Chron. 1–9 are genealogies from *Adam to the death of Saul; 10–29 describe the reign of *David; 2 Chron. 1–9 the reign of *Solomon; and 10–36 give a history of the kings of Judah.

Throughout the Books the interest concentrates on the religious aspects of the history, esp. the *Temple and its worship, to which is assigned a very large place. Thus the story of David is much concerned with his preparations for the building of the Temple, and the reign of Solomon with long descriptions of the Temple itself, its structure, liturgy, and personnel. With the same religious interest in view the less edifying episodes in the lives of David and Solomon are omitted, and the whole subsequent history of the kings of Judah is seen as a series of rewards and punishments acc. to their attitude to religion. The obvious aim of the work is to inculcate respect for the Law and to stress the advantages of its observance.

The sources used in Chron. are the canonical books, esp. Gen., Ex., Num., Josh., and Sam. and Kgs., but also extra-canonical material, among which the author names a 'History of the Kings of Israel and Judah' and a 'Midrash of the Kings of Israel and Judah'. Acc. to the list of high priests the book seems to have been written in the latter half of the 4th cent. B.C., a date which would agree with the fact that it is continued in Ezra and Nehemiah. On its historical value opinions are divided. The older critics, such as W. M. L. *de Wette and J. *Wellhausen, refused it all credibility, whereas recent scholars are more moderate, conceding that it used reliable information at least for the later period. Acc. to conservative exegetes, it contains valuable material even for the earlier centuries, though all are agreed that the picture it presents of Jewish history is manipulated in the interest of religious edification.

Commentaries by W. E. Barnes (Camb. Bib. AV, 1889), I. Benzinger (K.H.A.T., xx; 1901), R. Kittel (H.K.A.T., Abt. I, Bd. vi, Theil 1; 1902), E. L. Curtis–A. A. Madsen (I.C.C., 1910), N. Schlögel (Vienna, 1911), W. A. L. Elmslie (Camb. Bib. RV, 1916), J. W. Rothstein–J. Hänel (2 vols., K.A.T., xviii; 1927), K. Galling (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xii; on Chron., Ez., Neh., 1954, pp. 7–185), W. Rudolph (H.A.T., Reihe I, Bd. xxi; 1955), and F. Michaeli (Commentaire de l'Ancien Testament, xvi; on Chron., Ez., Neh.; Neuchâtel, 1967, pp. 9–12, 24–250). A. C. Welch, The Work of the Chronicler. Its Purpose and Date (Schweich Lectures, 1938; 1939). G. von *Rad, Das Geschichtsbild des chronistischen Werkes (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, lix, Folge 4, iii; 1930). A. Noordtzij, De Boeken der Kronieken (2 vols., 1937–8). W. F. Albright, 'The Date and Personality of the Chronicler' in Journal of Biblical Literature, xl (1921), pp. 104–24. A. Bea, S.J., 'Neue Arbeiten zum Problem der biblischen Chronikbücher' in Biblica, xxii (1941), pp. 46–58. R. North, S.J., 'Theology of the Chronicler' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxii (1963), pp. 369–81. Eissfeldt, pp. 529–40, 769, with bibl. A. M. Brunet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1220–61, s.v. 'Paralipomènes', with bibl.

CHRONICON EDESSENUM (Edessene Chronicle). A Syriac Chronicle extending from 133 B.C. to A.D. 540, the date of its compilation, but with very few entries before the 3rd cent. A.D. Its principal interest lies in the history of *Edessa, but it sometimes supplies important incidental information on general history both E. and W. It appears to have been the work of an Edessene cleric of the orthodox school, but with some *Nestorian sympathies. L. Hallier argued that its principal sources were some early documents from *Antioch, a lost history of the Persians, and the Edessene city archives. It exists only in a single

MS. (Cod. Vat. syr. 163), derived from the Convent of Our Lady in the Nitrian desert.

Syr. text first publd. in J. S. *Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, i (1719), pp. 387–417. Crit. edd. by L. Hallier, with Germ. tr. and comm., in T.U., ix, 1 (1892), and by I. Guidi, with Lat. tr., in C.S.C.O., 1903. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 99 f.

CHRONICON PASCHALE. A Byzantine chronicle compiled in the first half of the 7th cent., so named from its having been based on the Easter reckoning. It contained a chronological outline of events from the creation of Adam to the 20th year of the Emp. *Heraclius (629); but not all of it has survived. The author used inter alia the Easter Tables of *Alexandria, the 'Fasti Consulares', Sextus *Julius Africanus, and the 'Chronicon' of *Eusebius of Caesarea, and for the last 27 years he has the value of a contemporary historian. The principal MS. is the *Vatican cod. gr. 1941 (10th cent.).

The document is sometimes known as the 'Chronicon Alexandrinum'; it owes the name 'Paschal Chronicle' to its first editor, C. D. *Du Cange. Best ed. by L. Dindorf in C.S.H. Byz. (2 vols., 1832); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xcii, 9–1160. G. *Mercati, 'A Study of the Paschal Chronicle' in J.T.S., vii (1906), pp. 397–412; repr. in S.T., lxxvii (1937), pp. 462–79. E. *Schwartz in P.W., iii (1899), cols. 2460–77, s.v.

CHRONOGRAPHER OF A.D. 354, The. The name given by T. *Mommsen to the unknown compiler of an almanac drawn up for the use of Christians at *Rome in the 4th cent. The document, devoid of literary pretensions, remains an invaluable source for the study of early ecclesiastical history. All the extant MSS. are fragments, but by piecing their witness together practically the whole document can be reconstructed. Acc. to Mommsen, these are all dependent on a now lost 'Codex Luxemburgensis'. The compilation contained inter alia these items: (1) a calendar of Roman holidays; (2) a list of the consuls (from A.U.C. 245 to A.D. 354); (3) an Easter Table (from A.D. 312 to 354, with an extension to A.D. 410); (4) a list of the city prefects at Rome from A.D. 254 to 354; (5) 'Depositio episcoporum', a list of the dates of death of the Bishops of Rome from A.D. 255 to 352; (6) a sort of primitive Roman *Martyrology; (7) a list of the Roman Bishops from St. *Peter down to Pope *Liberius (see Liberian Catalogue); (8) a chronicle based on that of St. *Hippolytus, combined with (9) a chronicle of Roman secular history from early times down to the death of the Emp. Licinius (325); (10) an account of the 14 regions of the city of Rome.

Text pr., with extended comm., in T. Mommsen, 'Uber den Chronographen vom Jahre 354' in Abh. (Sächs.), i (1850), pp. 547–693; and again in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, ix (pt. 1; 1892), pp. 13–196. C. Nordenfalk, Der Kalender vom Jahre 354 und die lateinische Buchmalerei des iv. Jahrhunderts (Göteborg, 1936); H. Stern, Le Calendrier de 354. Étude sur son texte et sur ses illustrations (Institut français d'Archéologie de Beyrout. Bibliothèque Archéologique et Historique, lv; 1953). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 558–60. O. Seeck in P.W., iii (1899), cols. 2477–81; A. Ferrua, S.J., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1007–9, s.v. 'Cronografo dell'a. 354'. See also bibl. to Liberian Catalogue.

CHRONOLOGY, Biblical. (1) Old Testament. It is very difficult to date accurately the events which are narrated in the OT owing to (a) the absence in the ancient world of any widely recognized chronological era, and (b) the few allusions in the OT to events outside Israel known to us from extraneous sources. The Hebrew records are themselves sometimes inadequate, e.g. while the duration of the sojourn in Egypt is given (Gen. 15. 13, Ex. 12. 40–41), the names of the Pharaohs are not recorded. Among the important chronological data supplied in the OT are the interval between the *Exodus and the building of Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs. 6. 1); the duration of the wandering in the wilderness (Num. 14. 33); and the lengths of the reigns of the Kings of Israel and Judah in the Books of the Kings. But the figures supplied are not always consistent even in the Hebrew text, and there are frequent divergences in the *Septuagint. However, from the 9th cent. B.C. onwards the dates of the events narrated can be roughly discovered by comparing them with the more detailed and accurate Assyrian and Persian chronologies.

(2) New Testament. The range here is shorter and the problem simpler, but even so there are many difficulties. Complications are caused by the different methods by which the years of monarchs were reckoned and by the intricacies of the Jewish calendar. Acc. to Mt. 2. 1, Jesus was born 'in the days of *Herod the King' (d. c. 4 B.C.), but acc. to Lk. 2. 2 during 'the first enrolment made when Quirinius was governor of Syria' (probably A.D. 6–9). Jesus was baptized in 'the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius *Caesar' (Lk. 3. 1), i.e. in A.D. 29 or 28, while acc. to Jn. 2. 13–20 the first *Passover after His Baptism was the forty-sixth year of the building of Herod's Temple (A.D. 27). Jesus would thus be about 30 years old when He began to teach (Lk. 3. 23). The length of Christ's ministry is in the Synoptic Gospels a year, whilst the Fourth Gospel supposes at least a two-years' ministry, and there are difficulties concerning the date of the Crucifixion. However, all are agreed that Jesus 'suffered under Pontius *Pilate', who was procurator of *Judaea from A.D. 26 to 36. With regard to the chronology of the Apostolic Age, the date of St. *Paul's conversion, on which so much depends, is uncertain, in spite of the data which he supplies in Gal. 1. 18, and 2; the earliest date would be just after the Crucifixion. The concluding part of St. Paul's life is also obscure, as his death is not recorded. Nevertheless these uncertainties are of no great theological or religious moment, and if the NT dates could be determined with precision, it would hardly affect the main outlines of our picture of the course of early Christianity.

Among the first attempts to put Biblical chronology on a sound basis was J. *Ussher, Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti (2 parts, 1650–9); its dates gained wide currency through their frequent printing in the margins of the A.V. Modern attempts to deal with the problems of Biblical chronology as a whole by E. Ruffini, Chronologia Veteris et Novi Testamenti in Aeram Nostram Collata (Rome, 1924); J. Finegan, Handbook of Biblical Chronology (Princeton, 1964).

On the chronology of the OT, W. *Bousset, 'Das chronologische System der biblischen Geschichtsbücher' in Z.A.T.W., xx (1900), pp. 136–47; O. Fischer, 'Chronologische Studien zum Alten Testament', ib., xxxiv (1914), pp. 45–53; A. T. Richardson, Bible Chronology (1930); E. R. Thiele, The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings. A Reconstruction of the Chronology of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah (Chicago, 1951; Exeter, 1966); D. N. Freedman, 'The Chronology of Israel and the Near East. Section A. Old Testament Chronology' in G. E. Wright (ed.), The Bible and the Ancient Near East. Essays in honor of William Foxwell Albright (1961), pp. 203–14, with notes, pp. 225–8; A. Jepsen–R. Hanhart, Untersuchungen zur israelitisch-jüdischen Chronologie (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., lxxxviii; 1964). S. A. *Cook in C. Anc. H., i (1923), pp. 156–66. K. Marti in E.Bi., i (1899), cols. 773–99, s.v. 'Chronology, Old Testament'; L. Curtis in H.D.B., i (1900), pp. 397–403, s.v. 'Chronology in the Old Testament'; S. R. *Driver in E.B. (ed. 11), iii (1910), pp. 865–872, s.v. 'Bible, Old Testament Chronology'; L. Pirot–V. Coucke in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1244–79, s.v. See also bibl. to individual books.

On the NT, the classic discussion is that of C. H. *Turner in H.D.B., i (1900), pp. 403–25, s.v. 'Chronology in the New Testament'. U. Holzmeister, S.J., Chronologia Vitae Christi (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici, 1936); G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Public Ministry of Jesus (1940); id., The Chronology of the Life of Paul (1968). J. Lebreton, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 970–5, s.v. 'Jésus-Christ. Chronologie de la vie de Jésus', and F. Prat, ib., i (1928), cols. 1299–1304, s.v. See also lives of Christ and bibl. to Acts and Epp. of St. Paul. For general discussions on chronology, see bibl. to Calendar.

CHRYSIPPUS (c. 405–79), 'of Jerusalem', ecclesiastical writer. A native of Cappadocia, he accompanied his two brothers, Cosmas and Gabriel, to Jerusalem c. 428 and became a monk at the laura of St. *Euthymius. He was ordained priest c. 455 and later succeeded Cosmas as guardian of the Holy Cross at the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre ('staurophylax'). His few surviving writings include panegyrics of (1) the BVM, (2) St. Theodore Tiro, (3) St. *Michael the Archangel, and (4) St. *John Baptist.

Interest in Chrysippus is comparatively recent. The chief evidences for his life are the reff. in *Cyril of Scythopolis' 'Life of St. Euthymius'. For text of the four panegyrics mentioned above see: for (1), ed. M. Jugie, A.A., in P.O., xix (1926), pp. 336–43 (a repr., with corrections, of ed. F. *Ducaeus, 1624); for (2), ed. A. Sigalas (Byzantinisches Archiv, vii, 1921); for (3), ed. id. in Ἐπετηρὶς Ἑταιρείας Βυζαντινῶν Σπουδῶν, iii (Athens, 1926), pp. 85–93; for (4), ed. id. (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, xx; 1937). S. Vailhé, A.A., 'Chrysippe Prêtre de Jérusalem' in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, x (1905), pp. 96–9. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 240. M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., iv (1950), col. 881, s.v. 'Crisippo di Gerusalemme'; A. Sigalas in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 1193.

CHRYSOGONUS, St. Though his cultus at *Rome dates from the 5th cent. at latest, very little is known of him. Acc. to legend, he was arrested in Rome during *Diocletian's persecution and subsequently slain at Aquileia. From the 6th cent. onwards he was supposed to have been the spiritual director of St. *Anastasia of Rome, with whom he is held to have corresponded on the behaviour of Christians towards their pagan husbands and wives. His name is included in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day in the E., 22 Dec.; in the W., formerly 24 Nov., but now suppressed.

Chief source of the legend is the 'Passio S. Anastasiae', ed. H. *Delehaye, S.J., Étude sur le Légendier romain (Subsidia Hagiographica; xxiii, 1936), pp. 221–49; cf. also pp. 151–63. On the theory that Chrysogonus was orig. the owner of a church in Rome (titulus Chrysogoni), the name being later misunderstood as a dedication, cf. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 108–13. M. Mesnard, La Basilique de saint Chrysogone à Rome (Studi di Antichità Cristiana; ix, 1935); R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, vol. i, fasc. 3 (Rome, 1940), pp. 144–64; B. M. A. Ghetti, O.F.M., 'Nuove considerazioni sulla chiesa inferiore di S. Crisogono' in Riv.A.C., xxii (1946), pp. 235–49. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv, 1938), pp. 128–30, with further bibl. reff.

CHRYSOLOGUS, St. PETER (c. 400–50), Bp. of *Ravenna. He preached his first sermon as bishop in the presence of the Empress *Galla Placidia, and thenceforward received her continuous support for his ambitious building projects. A large collection of sermons attributed to him survives, but almost all his other writings are lost. In a letter to *Eutyches (449) he viewed his case with favour, though in a striking passage he asserted the necessity for adherence in matters of faith to the Roman see. The materials for his life are contained mainly in the 'Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis' of Abbot *Agnellus (9th cent.). He was apparently named 'Chrysologus' (Gk. 'golden-worded') to make him a W. counterpart of '*Chrysostom' ('golden-mouthed'). In 1729 he was declared a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day, 30 July (formerly 4 Dec.).

Ed. princeps of his Sermons by Agapitus Vincentirus, Bologna, 1534. Later edd., Bologna, 1643, and Venice, 1750; latter repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lii, 9–680; further sermons, with notes on authenticity of those previously pr., by A. Hamman, O.F.M., ib., Supplementum, iii (Paris, 1963), cols. 153–83. Sermons also ed. A. Olivar, O.S.B. (C.C., Series Latina, xxiv, etc., 1975 ff.). Id., Los sermones de San Pedro Crisólogo (Scripta et Documenta, xiii; Montserrat, 1962), incl. some texts. Eng. tr. of Selected Sermons and Letter to Eutyches, with introd. by G. E. Ganss, S.J. (Fathers of the Church, xvii; 1953, pp. 3–287). Monographs by H. Dapper (Cologne, 1867), F. von Stablewski (Posen, 1871), F. J. Peters (Cologne, [1918]), and G. Böhmer (Paderborn, 1919). J. H. Baxter, 'The Homilies of St. Peter Chrysologus' in J.T.S., xxii (1920–1), pp. 250–8; C. Jenkins, 'Aspects of the theology of St. Peter Chrysologus' in C.Q.R., ciii (1927), pp. 233–59. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 606–10; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 458. Dekkers, Nos. 227–37. H. Koch in P.W., xix (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1361–72, s.v. 'Petrus (122) Chrysologus'. G. Lucchesi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1433–5, s.v. 'Pietro Crisologo'.

CHRYSOM. The 'chrism-robe' put on a child at baptism, as a symbol of the cleansing of its sin. Originally it may have been a cloth put over the head, to prevent the *chrism from being rubbed off. If the child died within a month of its baptism, the chrysom was used as a shroud; hence the expression 'chrysom child'. The use of the 'whyte vesture, commonly called the Chrysome' was ordered in the BCP of 1549. It was to be put on before the unction, not after it as in the pre-Reformation English rites, and returned to the priest at the mother's *churching. In the C of E its use disappeared in 1552 and has not been officially revived, except in the S. African alternative rite. It survives in the RC Church.

CHRYSOSTOM, St. JOHN (c. 347–407), Bp. of *Constantinople and '*Doctor of the Church'. He was educated for the law under the great pagan orator Libanius at *Antioch, where he studied theology under *Diodore of Tarsus, the leader of the *Antiochene School. He early felt a call to the monastic life. As the care of his widowed mother Anthusa prevented the immediate fulfilment of this desire, he lived for some time under rule at home, and later became a hermit (c. 373–c. 381), following the *Pachomian Rule with austerities which undermined his health. He was made deacon in 381, and served at Antioch under the bishop Flavian, who ordained him priest in 386, and appointed him to devote special attention to the work of preaching (a task in which his ability gained him the name of Chrysostom, 'golden-mouthed'). During the years 386–98, when his great powers of oratory were directed esp. to the instruction and moral reformation of the nominally Christian city of Antioch, he delivered his series of 'Homilies' on Gen., Mt., Jn., Rom., Gal., Cor., Eph., Tim., and Tit., which establish his title as the greatest of Christian expositors. These works combine a great facility for seeing the spiritual meaning of the author with an equal ability for immediate practical application. He was opposed, however, to the *allegorical exegesis of the Scriptures, and insisted that they must be interpreted literally. Against his wish, Chrysostom was made Patr. of Constantinople in 398, and immediately set about the work of reforming the city, where the corruption of court, clergy, and people alike had been encouraged by the complaisance and self-indulgence of his predecessor, St. *Nectarius.

His combination of honesty, asceticism, and tactlessness, when joined with the hatred of *Theophilus, the unworthy Patr. of *Alexandria, his disappointed rival, and of the Empress Eudoxia, who with some reason took all attempts at moral reform as a censure of herself, was sufficient to work his ruin. At the Synod of the *Oak (403), carefully packed by Theophilus, Chrysostom was condemned on 29 charges, the most serious being those of *Origenism (quite unjustified) and improper remarks about the Empress. Chrysostom, removed from his see, was shortly afterwards recalled by the court; but very soon his plain speaking brought the displeasure of the Empress on him again, and his enemies saw their opportunity, and secured his banishment on a charge of unlawfully reassuming the duties of a see from which he had been canonically deposed (404). Even the support of the people of Constantinople, of the Pope (*Innocent I), and of the entire W. Church, failed to save him. He was exiled at first to near Antioch, and when it became clear that in spite of his enfeebled health he would not die there soon enough, he was moved to Pontus, and finally deliberately killed by enforced travelling on foot in severe weather. His chief claim to remembrance, apart from his personal holiness, rests on his preaching, his exegesis, and his liturgical reforms. (See foll. art.) His early work, 'On the Priesthood', is a finely conceived description of the responsibilities of the Christian minister. Feast day in W., 13 Sept. (formerly 27 Jan., also observed in parts of the Anglican Communion); in E., 13 Nov.

A very large number of Chrysostom's sermons has come down to us. It was his practice often to preach several sermons on a single theme, among the most celebrated of his series being those 'On the Statues' (Mar. and Apr., 387), addressed to the turbulent populace of Antioch who had revolted against the Imperial taxes. His great repute as a preacher caused many sermons to be falsely ascribed to him in succeeding generations; the spuria of the printed edd. hence offer the student a fruitful field of research. Besides homilies and expositions of Scripture, Chrysostom wrote treatises, esp. on practical subjects; a collection of letters also survives.

Collected edd. of his works by F. *Ducaeus, S.J. (12 vols., Paris, 1609–33), H. *Savile (8 vols., Eton, 1612, without Lat. tr.; with important prefaces and notes by I. *Casaubon and others, and generally, except for the portions ed. by F. *Field, still the best ed. of the text), and B. de *Montfaucon, O.S.B. (13 vols., Paris, 1718–38). This last was repr. (the most convenient ed.), with revisions by G. R. L. von Sinner (13 vols., Paris, 'apud fratres Gaume', 1834–40); and, with suppls., in J. P. Migne, PG, xlvii–lxiv. Valuable edd. by F. Field of Homm. on Matt. (3 vols., Cambridge, 1839) and of Interpr. Omnium Epp. Paulinarum (7 vols., Oxford, 1845–62). Other separate edd. include the De Sacerdotio ed. J. A. *Bengel (Stuttgart, 1725) and J. A. Nairn (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1906). Contra subintroductas ed. J. Dumortier (Nouvelle Collection des Textes et Documents, 1955); Ad Theodorum lapsum ed. id. (S.C., cxvii; 1966); Ad eos qui scandalizati ed. Anne-Marie Malingrey (as Sur la providence de Dieu, ib., lxxix; 1961); a letter to Olympias (Quod nemo laeditur) ed. id. (ib., ciii; 1964); De Virginitate ed. H. Musurillo, S.J. (ib., cxxv; 1966); Ad viduam iuniorem and De non iterando conjugio ed. B. Grillet–G. H. Ettlinger, S.J. (ib., cxxxviii; 1968). Eight previously unedited baptismal sermons ed. from an Athos manuscript (Stavronikita 6) by A. Wenger, A.A. (ib., I; 1957). Selection of passages ed., with admirable notes, by J. F. D'Alton (London, 1940). Eng. tr. of sets of Homilies in L.F., 16 vols., 1839–52, and N.P.N.C.F., First Series, ix–xiv, 1888–93. Fr. trr., with Gk. text from J. P. Migne, of the Epistolae ad Olympiadem by A. M. Malingrey (S.C., xiii; 1947), and of the De Incomprensibili by R. Flacelière, with introd. by F. Cavallera, S.J.–J. Daniélou, S.J. (S.C., xxviii; 1951).

Life (pr. in edd. of Chrysostom) by *Palladius, entitled 'Dialogus de Vita S. Joannis Chrysostomi' (crit. ed. P. R. Coleman-Norton, Cambridge, 1928). Further biog. material in *Socrates, H.E., vi. 2–23, vii. 25–45, *Sozomen, H.E., viii. 2–28, and *Theodoret, H.E., v. 27–36. Modern studies by G. Hermant (Paris, 1664), J. A. W. *Neander (3 vols., Berlin, 1821–2; Eng. tr. of vol. i, 1838, all publd.), A. Puech (Paris, 1891), id. ('Les Saints', 1900; Eng. tr., 1902), D. Attwater (Milwaukee, 1939; London, 1959), A. Moulard (Paris, 1941), P. Chrysostomus Baur, O.S.B. (2 vols., Munich, 1929–1930; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1959–60; fundamental). Of primary importance, esp. for chronology, L. S. de *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles, ix (1706), pp. 1–405 and 547–626. F. H. *Chase, Chrysostom. A Study in the History of Biblical Interpretation (1887). A. Naegle, Die Eucharistielehre des heiligen Johannes Chrysostomus (1900). L. Meyer, Saint Jean Chrysostome, maître de perfection chrétienne (1933). S. Verosta, Johannes Chrysostomus, Staatsphilosoph und Geschichtstheologe (Graz, etc., 1960). B. H. Vandenberghe, Saint Jean Chrysostome et la parole de Dieu (1961). J. Korbacher, Ausserhalb der Kirche kein Heil? Eine dogmengeschichtliche Untersuchung über Kirche und Kirchenzugehörigkeit bei Johannes Chrysostomus (Münchener Theologische Studien. II. Systematische Abteilung, xxvii; 1963). P. Stockmeier, Theologie und Kult des Kreuzes bei Johannes Chrysostomus (Trierer Theologische Studien, xviii; 1966). T. M. Finn, The Liturgy of Baptism in the Baptismal Instructions of St. John Chrysostom (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, xv; 1967). J. A. de Aldama, S.J., Repertorium pseudochrysostomicum (Documents, Études et Répertoires publiés par l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, x; 1965).

M. Geerard, Clavis Patrum Graecorum, ii (Turnhout, 1974), pp. 491–672. E. Venables in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 518–35; E. Preuschen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 101–11; G. Bardy in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 660–90, s.v. 'Jean Chrysostome'; P. W. Harkins in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 1041–4, s.v. 'John Chrysostom, St.'

CHRYSOSTOM, Liturgy of St. The Liturgy now in general use in the Orthodox E. Church except on the few days in the year for which the Liturgy of St. *Basil is prescribed. In its present form it is very much later than the time of St. *Chrysostom, whose name it bears, and the grounds for connecting it with him at all are insecure. It probably owed its great influence to being the liturgy of the Imperial capital, and after the older liturgies of St. *James (*Jerusalem and *Antioch) and St. *Mark (*Alexandria) had been considerably assimilated to it, finally superseded them in the 13th cent. It is used in several different languages in the Orthodox Churches of the E.

Gk. text in F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, i (1896), pp. 309–44 (based on MS. Barb., iii. 55) and 353–99 (modern text). Eng. tr. in The Orthodox Liturgy (ed. Patrick [J.] Thompson, S.P.C.K., 1939). Oldest Lat. version ed. A. Strittmatter, O.S.B., in Ephemerides Liturgicae, lv (1941), pp. 2–73, and Traditio, i (New York, 1943), pp. 79–137. Syr. vers. ed. H. W. Codrington (Rome, 1940). C. Kucharek, The Byzantine–Slav Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom. Its Origin and Evolution (Allendale, N.J. [1971]). G. Wagner, Der Ursprung der Chrysostomusliturgie (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xlix; 1973).

CHRYSOSTOM, The Prayer of St. The familiar prayer in the BCP was drawn by T. *Cranmer from the Liturgy of St. *Chrysostom (q.v., ed. F. E. *Brightman, p. 367). In the original Book (1549) it is found only in the *Litany, where it owes its presence to the fact that in 'Chrysostom' (on which Cranmer was largely dependent for the English Litany) its place was near the Deacon's Litany. It was first included among the concluding prayers at Mattins and Evensong in 1662. Its authorship is unknown.

J. Dowden, The Workmanship of the Prayer Book (1899), pp. 227–9.

CHURCH. (1) Terminology. The Eng. 'church', Germ. Kirche, Dutch kerk, etc., come ultimately from the Gk. κυριακόν, '[thing] belonging to the Lord', which was applied orig. to a church building. The Lat. ecclesia and its derivatives (Fr. église, Ital. chiesa, etc., including Welsh eglwys), although used of the building, come from the Gk. ἐκκλησία, which in secular Greek meant an assembly, primarily of citizens in a self-governing city (e.g. that of *Ephesus, Acts 19. 39). In the *Septuagint ἐκκλησία was used of the 'assembly' or 'congregation' of the Israelites (Heb. קָהָל) and esp. of those 'within the covenant' as opposed to 'the stranger in your midst' (Deut. 23. 3, Neh. 13. 1). In Acts 7. 38 the word is used with this OT ref.

In the Gospels, the word ἐκκλησία occurs only twice on the Lord's lips, at Mt. 16. 18 (the words to St. *Peter, 'upon this rock [petra] I will build my Church'), and at 18. 17 (when a brother will not heed private remonstrance, the matter is to be told to 'the Church'). In Acts the word is first found, in its Christian sense, in 5. 11, where 'the whole church' is to be identified with 'the church in Jerusalem' at 8. 1. (The best MSS. do not attest the word at 2. 47, where it is found in the AV.) It is uncertain whether the Jerusalem Christians applied the equivalent Aramaic word to themselves at this date; but it is clear from St. *Paul's Epp. that among Greek-speaking Christians ἐκκλησία was the regular word from an early date, both for a local Christian community (e.g. 'the churches of Galatia', 'the church of the Thessalonians', Gal. 1. 2, 1 Thess. 1. 1) and for the whole Christian community (e.g. 1 Cor. 12. 28).

(2) New Testament. The claim of the primitive Church to be an organic society rests on the belief that it was the inheritor of the promises made to Israel. Such is implied in the Lord's teaching about the *Kingdom, in the choosing of the Apostles as the nucleus of its ministry, and in the institution of the Sacramental rites. F. *Kattenbusch argues that the conception comes from the vision of the saints of the Most High in Dan. 7. St. Paul conceives of the Church as Christ's Body (Col. 1. 24; cf. 1 Cor. 12. 27), as His Bride (2 Cor. 11. 2, cf. Eph. 5. 32), and as His Temple (1 Cor. 3. 16, 2 Cor. 6. 16, Eph. 2. 20–22). The NT also points to the priestly character of the Church (1 Pet. 2. 9). It is the clear teaching of the NT as a whole that the Church was established by Christ as the New Israel and endowed by Him with the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, and is not merely a voluntary association of individual disciples.

(3) Catholicism and the Church. This conception of the Church was elaborated as time went on. Increasing stress was laid on the Divine constitution and corporate nature of the Church. Its essence was epitomized in the four traditional '*notes of the Church', viz. unity, holiness, catholicity, and apostolicity. It was held that there could be only one such body founded by Christ; as being of Divine origin it must be holy; as being by Divine intention world-wide, and having in fact spread over most of the known world before it was challenged by particular and local movements, it was in purpose catholic; and as teaching the Apostles' doctrine and historically descended from them it was apostolic. Thus conceived, the Church is essentially a visible body. Its membership (at least as far as the living are concerned), its orders of ministers, and its unity are all constituted by participation in visible sacraments, viz. those of *Baptism and *Confirmation, of *Holy Orders and of *Holy Communion, respectively. In contrast with this visible Church 'Militant here in earth', there exists the invisible Church of the faithful departed, divided into the Church Expectant (undergoing purification in *purgatory) and the Church Triumphant (already enjoying the *beatific vision in heaven). Separation from the Church Militant is the sin of *schism, and rejection of its apostolic doctrine *heresy.

In early times the doctrine of the visible Unity of the Church was accepted on all sides. The schismatic bodies which arose (*Melitians, *Donatists, *Monophysites) all considered themselves the whole Church. But a theology of the Church gradually developed, which gave precision to the status of those in schism. Against rigorist movements such as Donatism, St. *Augustine maintained that the sacraments were everywhere to be regarded as acts of the Church. Their validity was independent of the personal qualities of the minister, provided he had the necessary sacramental status and, later theologians added, intended to do what the Church had always intended. In this way the sacraments of bodies of Christians in heresy or schism could in certain instances be validated through the historical relation of these bodies to the Catholic Church.

After the schism between the E. and the W., the RC and Eastern Orthodox Churches each maintained that the other was in schism, and that itself was the historic manifestation of the visible Church. In 1965 the mutual excommunications were withdrawn. Anglicans and others who do not accept the exclusive claim of any Church often maintain that all parts of the Church Militant, including Rome, are now to some extent in schism.

(4) Protestantism and the Church. The *Reformation led to a reformulation of the idea of the Church. It sought to proclaim its inner being in terms of the Word of God rather than in sacramental relationships. Two doctrines of the Church received wide acceptance: (a) the more conservative, that the Church is a visible body and in the Divine intention one throughout the world, but that in view of corruptions and errors which have arisen it is justified within a particular nation in reforming itself, even if this involves a breach of visible unity; (b) the more radical, that the true Church is in essence an invisible body, since the essential fact by which a man is saved and made a member of the Church is the inward fact of faith. Thus constituted, the Church is a body whose actual membership is known only to God. Most supporters of this view of the Church held that it was desirable that it should possess an outward and visible organization, membership of which should correspond as closely as possible to the true invisible Church, though identity was impossible. In the view of some the visible organization of the Church should as far as possible be one throughout Christendom, or at least throughout reformed Christendom. In each nation or area of civil government this visible unity was to be secured by an 'established religion', determined by decree of the ruler, and on this basis the national Churches on the *Lutheran or *Calvinist model were organized. But another group of theologians held that unity of organization between Christian congregations in different places was unnecessary. The *Independents maintained that the only essential outward unity was that of each local congregation and that national Churches were undesirable.

(5) Contemporary Revival. In modern times renewed interest has been taken in the theology of the Church by Catholics and Protestants alike. The revived understanding of the Bible, the actuality of eschatology, the growth of the *Ecumenical Movement and the desire for reunion, the reaction from individualism in politics, organic doctrines in philosophy, and the increased sense of history have all played their part. The Church as such is being recognized in a new sense as a fundamental fact in the Christian Revelation. As the New Israel she inherits the promises of the OT dispensation. With this renewed sense of the Church has gone hand in hand a recognition of the Church's transcendence over and separateness from the world. Among its practical results have been the *Liturgical Movement (q.v.), a renewed recognition of the place of the Gospel and the Sacraments in the Christian life, and a more constructive and less polemical approach to differences which have traditionally divided Protestant and Catholic theology. The rediscovery of the Church is reflected in K. *Barth's change in title from Die christliche Dogmatik to Die kirchliche Dogmatik. In the RC Church some aspects of this new teaching found official expression in the encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi (29 June 1943) and were further developed in the Second *Vatican Council's Constitution on the Church, Lumen Gentium (21 Nov. 1964).

K. *Adam, Das Wesen des Katholicismus (1928; Eng. tr., 1929); W. J. Phythian Adams, The Fulness of Israel (1938); B. C. Butler, O.S.B., The Idea of the Church (1962); D. *Bonhoeffer, Sanctorum Communio (Berlin, 1930; Eng. tr., 1963); E. *Brunner, Das Missverständnis der Kirche (Zürich, 1951; Eng. tr., 1952); L. Cerfaux, La Théologie de l'Église suivant Saint Paul (ed. 2, Unam Sanctam, x; 1948; enlarged ed., ib., liv; 1965; Eng. tr., 1959); Y. M. J. Congar, O.P., Chrétiens désunis. Principes d'un œcuménisme catholique (Unam Sanctam, i, 1937; Eng. tr., Divided Christendom, 1939); id., Esquisses du mystère de l'Église (1941); id., L'Ecclesiologie du haut moyen-âge. De Saint Grégoire le Grand à la désunion entre Byzance et Rome (1968); F. W. Dillistone, The Structure of the Divine Society (1951); R. Newton Flew, Jesus and His Church. A Study of the Idea of the Ecclesia in the New Testament (1938); G. Gloege, Reich Gottes und Kirche im Neuen Testament (1929); H. F. Hamilton, The People of God (2 vols., 1912); A. *Harnack, The Constitution and Law of the Church (Eng. tr., 1910); A. C. *Headlam, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., The Form of the Church (1944); F. J. A. *Hort, The Christian Ecclesia (1897); D. Jenkins, The Nature of Catholicity (1942); G. Johnston, The Doctrine of the Church in the New Testament (1943); C. Journet, L'Église du Verbe incarné (Bibliothèque de la Revue Thomiste, 2 vols., 1943–55; Eng. tr. of vol. i [only], 1955); F. *Kattenbusch, 'Der Quellort der Kirchenidee' in Festgabe für A. von Harnack (1921), pp. 142–172; J. Knox, The Church and the Reality of Christ (1963); H. Küng, Strukturen der Kirche (Freiburg, 1962; Eng. tr., Camden, N.J., 1964; London, 1965); id., Die Kirche (ib., 1967; ed. 2, 1968; Eng. tr., 1967); T. A. *Lacey, The One Body and the One Spirit (1925); H. de Lubac, S.J., Catholicisme. Les Aspects sociaux du dogme (1937); E. L. Mascall, Christ, the Christian and the Church (1946); F. D. *Maurice, The Kingdom of Christ (1838); E. Mersch, S.J., Le Corps mystique du Christ. Études de théologie historique (Museum Lessianum, 2 vols., 1933); id., La Théologie du Corps mystique (2 vols., 1944); R. C. *Moberly, Ministerial Priesthood (1897); W. *Palmer, Treatise on the Christian Church (2 vols., 1838); A. M. *Ramsey, The Gospel and the Catholic Church (1936; ed. 2, 1956); K. L. Schmidt, Die Kirche des Urchristentums (1932); id., art. 'Ecclesia' in T.W.B., iii (1938), 502–39, sep. Eng. tr., 1949); R. Schnackenburg, Die Kirche im Neuen Testament (Freiburg, 1961; Eng. tr., 1965); D. *Stone, The Christian Church (1905); id., The Notes of the Church (1910); H. B. *Swete, The Holy Catholic Church (1915); L. S. Thornton, C.R., The Common Life in the Body of Christ (1943; ed. 4, 1963); C. H. *Turner, Catholic and Apostolic (ed. H. N. Bate, 1931); G. Wingren, Evangeliet och Kyrkan (Lund, 1960; Eng. tr., 1964).

CHURCH, RICHARD WILLIAM (1815–90), Dean of *St. Paul's. He was born at Lisbon and spent his earlier years in Florence. In 1833 he was sent to Wadham College, Oxford, because the college at that time, under B. P. Symons, had a reputation for Evangelicalism. He came under the influence of C. *Marriott of Oriel, who enlisted him in his band of translators of the Fathers, and introduced him to J. H. *Newman, E. B. *Pusey, and J. *Keble. In 1838 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel, where he remained until 1852, when he became Rector of Whatley in Somerset. As Junior Proctor he shared with H. P. Guillemard of Trinity in the dramatic vetoing of the condemnation of Tract 90 in the university convocation (1845). He was one of the prime movers in establishing the Guardian, which from the first (1846) espoused High Church principles. After nearly twenty years at Whatley, Church was appointed in 1871 to the Deanery of St. Paul's, where he remained until his death. In The Gifts of Civilization (1870, incorporating earlier work) he developed his beliefs about the relation of the Church to the world; he illustrated the same theme in his lives of *St. Anselm (1870), Spenser (1879), and Bacon* (1884). His book The Oxford Movement, Twelve Years, 1833–1845 (posthumously published in 1891) is a masterpiece, as a judicious and balanced interpretation of the history of the movement.

Life and Letters of Dean Church, edited by his daughter, Mary C. Church (1894). D. C. Lathbury, Dean Church (1905); B. A. Smith, Dean Church. The Anglican Response to Newman (1965). H. C. Beeching in D.N.B. Suppl., ii (1901), pp. 6–9.

CHURCH ARMY. A voluntary Anglican organization of lay workers, founded in 1882 in the slums of Westminster, on the model of the *Salvation Army, for evangelistic purposes, by Wilson *Carlile. Since 1889 its activities have included social and moral welfare work among the poor in great cities and more recently in new housing areas and on caravan sites, as well as missions in prisons. It supports the Scouting and Guiding movements, runs youth centres and clubs and canteens for men in the forces, and offers guidance to unmarried parents. It also provides residential care for the elderly, the inadequate, drug addicts, discharged prisoners, men and women on probation, and unsupported mothers. In the First and Second World Wars it did magnificent work organizing canteens, recreation huts and hostels for the troops and other facilities for homeless civilians and the relatives of men on active service.

Kathleen [J.] Heasman, Army of the Church (1968). J. C. V. Durell, Whizzbangs and Woodbines (1918); D. H. Barber, The Church Army in World War II (1946). See also bibl. s.v. Carlile, W.

CHURCH ASSEMBLY. This body, officially the 'National Assembly of the Church of England', was established by the *Convocations in 1919 'to deliberate on all matters concerning the Church of England and to make provision in respect thereof'. In 1970, as a result of the *Synodical Government Measure of 1969, it was superseded by the General Synod. It was composed of a House of Bishops, comprising all the members of the two Upper Houses of Convocation; a House of Clergy, consisting of all the members of the two Lower Houses of Convocation; and a House of Laity, elected every five years by the representative electors of the Diocesan Conferences. The Assembly's most important function was to prepare ecclesiastical measures for transmission to Parliament under powers given by the *Enabling Act of 1919. Parliament could either accept or reject (but not amend) such measures; if accepted they received the royal assent and became law. Measures passed by the Assembly and Parliament included the Parochial Church Councils Measure (1921), the Clergy Pensions Measure (1926), the Cathedrals Measure (1931), and the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure (1963). Although the Revised Prayer Book was twice accepted by the Assembly (1927, 1928), it was in each case subsequently rejected by Parliament. The Assembly exercised great influence, through the Central Board of Finance, on the financial affairs of the C of E.

The Reports of the Proceedings were publd. conjointly by the Church Information Board and the *S.P.C.K. The Church Assembly and the Church. A Book of Essays (1930). K. A. Thompson, Bureaucracy and Church Reform (Oxford, 1970), pp. 179–211. The Church Assembly News. The Official Publication of the Church Assembly (London, 1924–69, monthly). Much contemporary information is contained in The Official Year Book of the National Assembly of the Church of England [from 1963 The Church of England Year Book] (annually).

CHURCH ASSOCIATION, The. A society formed in 1865 during the ritual controversies by several leading Evangelical Churchmen to maintain the Protestant ideals of faith and worship in the C of E. Previously active in litigation (cf. *Church Discipline Act, *Ritual Commission), it came ultimately to rely rather on publicity. In 1950 it became (with the National Church League) the Church Society.

CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY, The. Founded in 1818 and incorporated in 1828, the Society has taken an important and continuous part in furthering the construction and repair of Anglican churches in England and Wales.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS for England. The body formed by the fusion of the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners and *Queen Anne's Bounty in 1948 to manage the estates and revenues of the C of E. It consists of the archbishops and bishops of England, three lay 'Church Estates Commissioners', twenty-five persons appointed formerly by the *Church Assembly and now by the General *Synod (five deans, ten other clerks in holy orders, and ten laymen), four laymen appointed by the Crown, four persons appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury, certain officers of state (see the corresponding list of former 'Ecclesiastical Commissioners'), and representatives of the cities of London and York and the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The Board of Governors is formed of not more than 30 of the Commissioners, and day-to-day business is carried on by a small Estates and Finance Committee, which includes the three Church Estates Commissioners. In addition to their main responsibilities (trusteeship, financial administration, etc.), the Commissioners have certain wider administrative duties such as reorganizing the legal structure of parishes and rural deaneries from time to time, and recommending to the General Synod for submission to Parliament the scale of statutory fees to be chargeable for marriages, funerals, and other rites.

The Church Commissioners Measure, 1947, as finally approved by the Assembly, 21 June 1946, is printed for the Church Assembly, C.A. 794A (1946). P. B. Wilbraham, The First Five Years. The Story of the Church Commissioners, 1948–53 (1953).

CHURCH CONGRESSES. A series of unofficial gatherings of Anglican Churchmen which were held between 1861 and 1938 (annually down to 1913, and less regularly thereafter). The first meeting (1861) was at Cambridge. Owing to other means of contact between different centres of Church life in the provinces, e.g. the erection of the *National Assembly in 1920, the usefulness of the Congresses declined after the War of 1914–18.

Official reports of the Proceedings of the first fifty-nine congresses were issued in uniform vols., 1862–1925; thereafter in the name of the editor.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE ACT (1840). This Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) empowered the bishop, in cases of an alleged non-criminal offence by a cleric (e.g. irregularities in doctrine or ritual, also *simony), either to issue a Commission of Inquiry which should institute a preliminary investigation and decide whether or not there was a prima facie case or, alternatively, himself to transmit the case by Letters of Request to the provincial Court of Appeal. Conviction might be followed by suspension or deprivation. The Act was repealed by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure of 1963.

For details of procedure under the Act see R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2, 1895), ii, 1013–25.

CHURCH HISTORICAL SOCIETY. A society founded in 1894 (under the presidency of Mandell *Creighton, Bp. of London) for the diffusion of historical knowledge esp. in so far as it affected the authority and claims of the C of E. It has issued through the *S.P.C.K. a long series of writings, for the most part of small dimensions, but marked by a high standard of scholarship. More recently it has published larger works on ecclesiastical history. In its early years its publications owed much to the stimulating editorship of W. E. Collins (1867–1911), later (from 1904) Bp. of Gibraltar.

CHURCH HOUSE, WESTMINSTER. The building in which the *Convocation of Canterbury and the General *Synod of the C of E generally sit and the headquarters of many Anglican organizations. It replaced a set of buildings erected between 1891 and 1902 on a site fronting on Dean's Yard, *Westminster. It was designed by Sir Herbert Baker, and completed and opened in 1940.

CHURCH HYMNARY, The. The authorized hymnal of the Church of *Scotland and several other English-speaking Presbyterian Churches. It was first issued in 1898; a revised edition followed in 1927 and came to supersede the original. It contained over 700 hymns, with certain doxologies and canticles arranged for singing. In 1963 a further complete revision was put in hand in Scotland under a committee containing also English, Welsh and Irish representatives; the resulting book, published in 1973, is intended to supersede the Hymnary of 1927.

J. *Moffatt and M. Patrick, Handbook to the Church Hymnary (1935).

CHURCH HYMNS. A hymn-book formerly much used in the C of E, but since c. 1910 almost entirely supplanted by other hymnals. Preliminary editions (Hymns, 1852; Psalms and Hymns, 1855) had been published by the *S.P.C.K., who were responsible for the publication of the standard edition of 1870 (when the name 'Church Hymns' was first used) and also for the entire revision of 1903. Its standpoint was that of 'official *Anglicanism', in contrast to the *Anglo-Catholicism of '*Hymns Ancient and Modern' and the *Evangelicalism of the 'Hymnal Companion'.

CHURCH MEETING. The regular (usually monthly) assembly of all the members of a *Congregational or *Baptist Church for the purposes of Church administration, the admission of members and the election of officers, and the exercise of discipline in that particular congregation. 'The covenanted people of God' meeting in such a local unit have complete autonomy.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. See C.M.S.

CHURCH MISSIONS TO JEWS. Officially known as the 'London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews', this organization was founded as an Anglican society in 1809 and now works in three continents. In 1962 its title was changed to the 'Church's Ministry among the Jews'.

W. T. Gidney, The History of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, from 1809 to 1908 (1908).

CHURCH OF ENGLAND, The. It is impossible to say at what date Christianity was first planted in Great Britain, but the presence of British bishops at the Council of *Arles in 314 is evidence of the existence of an organized Church. With the coming of the Anglo-Saxon invaders, British Christianity and Christians were driven before them into the western parts of Britain and the new faith suffered a temporary eclipse. The conversion of the Teutonic pagan conquerors was effected from two sources: by the labours of *Celtic missionaries from the monasteries of Ireland and Scotland and by the mission headed by St. *Augustine sent from Rome (597). To this mission the British Christians would at first pay neither obedience nor submission. The Christianization of the Heptarchy progressed slowly, and with many set-backs, for the varying fortunes of the various kingdoms involved those of the Christian bishops. Before the several local kingdoms gave place to a loosely united national kingdom the Church had first to settle down to the task of administrative unification of its scattered dioceses. Before this in turn could be attempted, the differences between the Celtic and Roman missions had to be composed. Springing from a fundamental difference of temper, the Celtic monastic tradition lacked the administrative organization of the Roman Church, and the deep divergences between the two found expression in many minor points, such as the date of Easter. At a synod held at *Whitby in 664 the conflict was at length resolved in favour of the Roman customs, and the way thereby opened for the organization of the whole Church in England under one head.

*Theodore of Tarsus, sent from Rome as Abp. of *Canterbury, undertook this vital work of unification by subdivision of dioceses, summoning of ecclesiastical councils, legislative decrees, and encouragement of learning. He was the first of a long line of statesmen-archbishops of the English Church. His work was mainly that of organizing the higher administration of the Church, for the factor of the proprietary church, an institution bequeathed in England, as elsewhere throughout W. Europe, by Teutonic paganism, presented a stubborn and enduring obstacle to the assertion of episcopal control over the secular parish priests. Anglo-Saxon Christianity enjoyed a transient golden age following the vigorous primacy of Theodore, producing both scholars such as *Bede, the author of one of the greatest historical narratives of all ages, and missionaries such as *Boniface of Crediton. England largely through its monasteries both shared in and contributed to the renaissance of the age of *Charlemagne.

Darkness, however, supervened again upon this period of light. The plundering raids of the Northmen fell with especial devastation upon religious houses, and the standard of clerical life and learning declined under these severe blows. The reign of *Alfred provided a temporary barrier against the Danes, and saw the beginnings of a revival of religion and learning, but the confusion of the times was detrimental to the highest developments of both. Under Edgar, Abp. *Dunstan, in addition to his work as a statesman, laboured to reform the monasteries and cathedral chapters by fighting against the evils of clerical marriage and simony in accordance with contemporary European movements. The isolation of England from the main life of the Continent, both in political and ecclesiastical affairs, could not be maintained; and the question whether these islands would pass into the orbit of a NW. Scandinavian empire or become joined to the main states of W. Europe was finally settled by the Norman Conquest under William I. The last of the old English kings, *Edward the Confessor, had assisted the introduction of Norman culture. He also refounded and rebuilt the famous abbey-church of St. Peter at *Westminster.

With the Norman domination, the English Church entered into the main stream of European religion at a time when the Hildebrandine reforming movement, associated with the pontificate of *Gregory VII, was powerfully affecting the life of the Church. *Lanfranc, the new Norman Abp. of Canterbury, assisted by a body of foreign bishops and abbots, led the way to a revival of religious life in England. The Norman age saw the removal of episcopal sees from remote villages to cities and the creation of the dioceses of *Ely and *Carlisle, the beginning of that tremendous outburst of building of which the cathedrals constitute the finest monuments, the restoration of learning and education, and the reorganization of ecclesiastical administration, including the assertion of the supremacy of Canterbury over York. Most important of all, the royal separation of the ecclesiastical and civil courts opened the way for the entrance of the Roman canon law, itself the chief agent of Papal control throughout the W. Church. The English Church henceforth could not escape the ubiquitous influence of the Popes. Under kings less scrupulous than William I, relations between Church and State were not harmonious. The *investiture conflict was itself but a symbol of the attempt of the spiritual power to free itself from the control of the temporal, which in the lower orders of the clergy was typified by the proprietary church and in the episcopate by the contest between Papacy and kings over questions of electing bishops. *Anselm maintained this struggle on its highest plane of principle in his differences with Henry I, whilst Thomas *Becket's dramatic conflict with Henry II, ending in victory through his martyrdom, was evidence of the personal passions inextricably interlocked with the assertion of principle. Henry II believed himself to be maintaining the ancient customs of the English crown, as asserted by Henry I, but Becket was representative of the augmented prestige of the Papacy consequent on the Hildebrandine Movement and the development of Canon Law. Behind this foreground of struggle the English Church was influenced by the several monastic revivals of Europe, an Englishman, Stephen Harding, being the author of the nucleus of the Carta Caritatis, the rule of the *Cistercian Order.

The 13th cent. was in many ways the culmination of the Middle Ages. In England, after the combined victory of Church and barons over King *John symbolized in the 'Great Charter', promising freedom to the Church from royal absolutism, the long reign of Henry III afforded wide opportunities for the Papacy and the Church. Under Henry, himself a king of deep piety and the second refounder of Westminster Abbey, the Papacy came to exercise a marked influence in episcopal appointments, esp. to the see of Canterbury, and sent representatives to England to seek financial aid for the Papal struggle against *Frederick II. During his reign, moreover, the *Friars came to England, university life was fostered, the constitutions of Otto and Ottobonus developed ecclesiastical law, and amongst the Henrician episcopate was numbered one of the most famous of all English prelates, *Grossteste of Lincoln, distinguished alike as scholar, pastor, and administrator. *Innocent III had died before Henry's accession, but the influence of his ecclesiastical reforms, esp. as reflected in the decrees of the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215, were felt in the English Church during his rule. There followed a period of consolidation of royal power under Edward I and, after the brief misrule of his son, under Edward III, whose reign saw the development of parliamentary institutions in England and the successful struggle of the lower clergy to avoid inclusion of their proctors in the lower parliamentary house.

With the accentuation of national selfconsciousness on the one hand, and the Papal scandals of the *Babylonish captivity and *Great Schism on the other, the exactions and policy of the Roman see became the subject of increasing criticism in England. During the Hundred Years' War with France alien priories were suppressed, and their revenues diverted to the crown, whilst the statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire attempted to curtail in the royal interest the Papal practice of diverting the revenues of English benefices to the support of foreign ecclesiastics and the payment of Papal creditors. The failure of the Conciliar Movement, however, demonstrated the impossibility of a constitutional Papacy, and national kings found their interests better served by concordats with the Papacy through which a financial division of the spoils of the Church and a sharing of ecclesiastical appointments were effected. The chief results of the policy of concordats were to strengthen the hold of the monarchy on the Church in England and to extinguish any corporate sentiment of loyalty towards the Papacy on the part of the episcopate.

When, in the 16th cent., the Tudor sovereigns deemed it expedient to measure their strength against the Papacy, they found many elements in the nation ready to lend their support. Criticism of ecclesiastical wealth, accompanied amongst the lower classes by sporadic heresy, had been prominent since the time of J. *Wycliffe. Merchants cast hungry glances upon the riches of monastic property. Civil lawyers bore the canonists a deep grudge, and many citizens of all ranks resented Papal exactions. More intangible but undeniable were the evidences of religious dissatisfaction, represented amongst the learned by the Renaissance revolt against Scholasticism and its devotion to the study of Hebrew and Greek of which *Erasmus and J. *Colet were typical in England, and expressed amongst the unlettered by vague strivings after a more personal and spiritual religion and by revulsion against the multiplication of *chantries and requiems. The occasion of the Tudor Reformation was the famous 'divorce' of *Henry VIII; but its causes lay deeper. T. *Wolsey had removed the last lingering affection amongst the episcopate for Papal supremacy, whilst pointing the way to a royal supremacy. Under Henry VIII the *Convocations acknowledged the King to be Supreme Head on earth of the Church of England, and a series of laws severed the financial, judicial, and administrative bonds between Rome and England. Despite the influx of *Lutheran books and ideas and the inclusion of men of reforming opinions amongst the episcopate, Henry VIII refused to allow any doctrinal changes. His order for the setting-up of the *Great Bible in all churches was an event of which the full influence and importance were not realized until later. Apart from the overthrow of Papal supremacy and the bringing of Convocation under the control of the crown, the main events of this reign were negative, such as the dissolution of the monasteries and the destruction of shrines. Under *Edward VI, Abp. T. *Cranmer produced the First and Second Books of *Common Prayer in 1549 and 1552, an English *Ordinal, and a statement of doctrine, the *Forty-Two Articles. This advance towards Protestantism was followed by a reaction under *Mary which restored the Papal supremacy and undid much of the work of her father. Upon the accession of *Elizabeth I the Papal obedience was again repudiated, the Crown assumed the title of 'Supreme Governor', the Second Edwardine Prayer Book with some changes became the service book of the Church of England, the Articles of Religion were reduced to *Thirty-Nine, and the episcopate under the prudent and scholarly leadership of Abp. M. *Parker attempted to achieve national unity and uniformity in religion.

Two bodies of critics opposed the Elizabethan settlement. In 1570 the Papal bull of excommunication ('*Regnans in excelsis') created a stubborn enclave of Popish recusants within the nation. On the other side a considerable volume of *Puritan opinion regarded the Prayer Book, Articles, and episcopacy as only a half-way house to a fuller and better reformation. The majority of divines of this standpoint remained within the Church, striving for changes from within, and controversy ranged over a wide ground from the wearing of the surplice to the reform of the Prayer Book and the supplanting of episcopacy by *presbyterianism. In J. *Jewel and R. *Hooker the C of E found apologists against both Rome and Geneva, who argued for its position in the *Via Media, appealing to Scripture, the Fathers, and human reason. Ecclesiastical controversy, however, drove the episcopate into close dependence upon the crown, working through the Court of *High Commission for the enforcement of uniformity. Under *James I the Convocations, by royal licence and assent, published the *Canons of 1604; but under both him and his son, *Charles I, Puritan opposition was sharpened, and as a result of the ascendancy of Abp. W. *Laud and his endeavours to secure a higher standard of common order in the Church, episcopacy and Anglicanism became a subject of conflict in the Civil Wars. The victory of parliament led first to a presbyterian reform, and then, owing to the influence of the Army, to *Independency. During the Commonwealth and Protectorate the use of the BCP was prohibited, and benefices were held by episcopalian, presbyterian, and independent ministers indifferently. With the restoration of *Charles II, the C of E returned to its position as the established Church. The failure of an attempt at comprehension at the *Savoy Conference was followed by a revision of the Prayer Book, its enforcement by a new Act of *Uniformity in 1662, and by persecuting measures against dissenters. The attempts of Charles II and *James II to use the royal prerogative of indulgence to secure toleration for dissenters and Papists failed, and James II's open attack on the C of E was largely responsible for his downfall. The Protestant succession in the persons of William of Orange and later the House of Hanover delivered the Church from the dreaded danger of Popery.

After a century of fierce controversy against both Papist and Puritan, the C of E settled down from 1689 to an epoch of quiescence. A limited religious toleration pacified the dissenters; the Convocation, having lost its power of voting clerical taxation, sank into torpor; theological disputes became unpopular; and the alliance of Church and State became a mutually defensive pact against all subversive forces. The *Methodist revival was the parent both of a new Christian body and of the Anglican *Evangelical revival. *Latitudinarianism continued to dominate the intellectual atmosphere of the Georgian age, until the thoroughgoing reforms of the third decade of the 19th cent. aroused the protest of J. *Keble and effected a second administrative reformation of the Church. From this last there sprang new bishoprics and parishes, and a series of financial and administrative reforms, followed by the revival of Convocation. From Keble's protest proceeded the *Oxford Movement, which laid a new emphasis upon the catholic and apostolic character of the established Church, and upon the order of episcopacy. The Tractarian leaders, esp. J. H. *Newman and E. B. *Pusey, became the storm-centres of much controversy, and this initial period of strife culminated in the secession to Rome of Newman (1845), and at a later date of H. E. *Manning (1851).

When this revival of Church life became involved in ceremonial novelties, with consequent litigation, a generation of acute disputation set in. From another standpoint new problems of Biblical interpretation and of the relation of theology to secular science produced controversies of another kind, which centred in the publication of such composite volumes as Essays and Reviews* and Lux Mundi*. Behind the dismal series of so-called ritualistic lawsuits, the Church was attempting to adjust its beliefs to a revolutionary background of human knowledge. Relations between Church and State were strained, and the 20th cent. opened with much continuation of controversy. These disputes tended to obscure the often growing and deepening activities of the Church in education and pastoral ministration. At the close of World War I in 1919 a readjustment of the relations of Church and State was effected by the passing of the Church of England National Assembly (Powers) Act. By this measure the three houses of the Assembly, of bishops, clergy, and laity, were given powers to prepare legislation on ecclesiastical matters for the consideration of parliament. The modification worked well until, in 1927 and 1928, the House of Commons twice rejected a project for the revision of the Prayer Book, and created a deadlock in the relations between the *Church Assembly and parliament. The Church of England (Worship and Doctrine) Measure of 1974 eventually gave the Church power to order its own services. Between the wars, perhaps the most significant theological event was the publication of the Report of the Archbishops' Commission on '*Doctrine in the Church of England'. Among the major problems before the C of E since World War II have been pastoral reorganization, the limits of doctrinal latitude, the supply of ordinands and the need for improved standards of clerical education, the evolution of a constitutional episcopate, the revision of *canon law, the relations between Church and State, and the lengthy but finally abortive discussions on reunion with the Methodist Church (see Anglican-Methodist Conversations). Revision of the government of the Church was achieved by the *Synodical Government Measure of 1969, which came into force the following year. See also Anglican Communion and Anglicanism.

The principal authority for the early history of Christianity in England is Bede, H.E. Important collection of docc. for the period to the end of the 12th cent. ed. A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, vols. i, ii (pt. 1), and iii (1869–73); see also earlier collections there cited. The period 1206–1313 is covered by F. M. Powicke–C. R. Cheney (edd.), Councils & Synods with other documents relating to the English Church (vol. ii, 2 vols., Oxford, 1964). General collection of docc. in Gee–Hardy. G. G. Perry, The Student's English Church History (3 vols., 1878–87; still useful); H. O. Wakeman, An Introduction to the History of the Church of England from the Earliest Times to the Present Day (1896; ed. 8 revised by S. L. Ollard, 1914). W. R. W. Stephens–W. Hunt (edd.), A History of the English Church (8 vols. in 9, 1899–1910). W. H. *Hutton, A Short History of the Church in Great Britain (1900). M. W. Patterson, A History of the Church of England (1909). E. W. Watson, The Church of England (H.U.L., 1914; ed. 2 with additional ch. by A. [T. P.] Williams, 1944). J. R. H. Moorman, A History of the Church in England (1953; ed. 2, 1967), with bibl. F. Makower, Die Verfassung der Kirche von England (1894; Eng. tr., 1895). S. C. Carpenter, The Church in England, 597–1688 (1954). H. M. Gwatkin, Church and State in England to the Death of Queen Anne (1917). H. Williams, Christianity in Early Britain (1912). [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1940; ed. 2, 1963): id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., 1948–59). Z. N. Brooke, The English Church and the Papacy from the Conquest to the Reign of John (1931). J. R. H. Moorman, Church Life in England in the Thirteenth Century (1945). K. L. Wood-Legh, Studies in Church Life in England under Edward III (1934). H. M. Smith, Pre-Reformation England (1938); id., Henry VIII and the Reformation (1948). F. M. Powicke, The Reformation in England (1941). T. M. Parker, The English Reformation to 1558 (H.U.L., 1950). G. Constant, La Réforme en Angleterre ([to 1553] 2 vols., 1930–1939; Eng. tr., 1934 ff.); P. Hughes, The Reformation in England (3 vols., 1950–4). A. G. Dickens, The English Reformation (1964). R. E. Head, Royal Supremacy and the Trials of Bishops 1558–1725 (C.H.S., 1962). [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the End of the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956). W. A. Shaw, A History of the English Church during the Civil Wars and under the Commonwealth, 1640–1660 (2 vols., 1900). R. G. Usher, The Reconstruction of the English Church (2 vols., 1910). R. S. Bosher, The Making of the Restoration Settlement. The Influence of the Laudians 1649–1662 (1951). I. M. Green, The Re-Establishment of the Church of England, 1660–1663 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1978). J. W. Legg, English Church Life from the Restoration to the Tractarian Movement (1914). G. F. Nuttall–[W.] O. Chadwick (edd.), From Uniformity to Unity, 1662–1962 (1962). N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker. Aspects of English Church History 1660–1768 (Ford Lectures for 1958; Cambridge, 1959). Id., Church and State in England in the XVIIIth Century (Birkbeck Lectures for 1931–3; 1934). S. C. Carpenter, Eighteenth Century Church and People (1959); id., Church and People, 1789–1889 (1933). O. J. Brose, Church and Parliament. The Reshaping of the Church of England 1828–1860 (1959). E. R. Wickham, Church and People in an Industrial City (1957). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church (2 vols., 1966–70). R. Lloyd, The Church of England in the Twentieth Century (2 vols., 1946–50; revised as The Church of England 1900–1965; 1966). K. A. Thompson, Bureaucracy and Church Reform. The Organizational Response of the Church of England to Social Change 1800–1965 (Oxford, 1970). R. P. Flindall (ed.), The Church of England 1815–1945. A Documentary History (1972). D.E.C.H. For works on the Pre-Conquest period, see s.v. Anglo-Saxon Church; for the 15th cent., see also bibl. to Lollardy and Wycliffe, J.; for the period of the Reformation, see bibl. to Cranmer, T., Cromwell, T., Edward VI, Elizabeth I, Henry VIII, and Wolsey; from the beginning of the 19th cent. among the most important sources are the biographies of leading churchmen such as F. *Temple, R. T. *Davidson, C. G. *Lang, W. *Temple, A. P. *Stanley, E. B. *Pusey, D. *Stone and G. K. A. *Bell, etc.; for this period see also bibl. to Oxford Movement. On the whole subject see also entry Anglicanism, and bibl.

CHURCH PASTORAL AID SOCIETY. See C.P.A.S.

CHURCH SISTERS. In the Church of Scotland, women specially set apart to assist in parochial work, generally in busy industrial areas, in connexion with the Women's Home Mission. They are appointed by *kirk-sessions and are under the oversight of an Assembly Committee and the minister of the parish in which they labour. They have now been merged in an order of *Deaconesses.

CHURCH SOCIETY. See Church Association.

CHURCH TIMES, The. A weekly religious newspaper, founded to propagate *Anglo-Catholic principles. Its first issue appeared on 7 Feb. 1863. From the outset it was edited with marked ability, and is now the most widely read English Church newspaper.

Much historical information in Church Times, vol. cxlvi, no. 5,217; 8 February 1963 ['Centenary Number', 56 pp.].

CHURCH UNION, The. An Anglican association which exists 'to uphold the doctrine and discipline of the Church; to extend the knowledge of Catholic Faith and practice at home and beyond the seas; and so to bring everyone to worship the Lord as Saviour and King'. It was formed in 1934 under the presidency of the second Lord *Halifax by the amalgamation of the *English Church Union and the *Anglo-Catholic Congress.

CHURCH UNITY OCTAVE. The *octave of prayer observed annually from 18 Jan. (formerly Feast of St. Peter's Chair at Rome) to 25 Jan. (Conversion of St. Paul) by a group of Anglican High Churchmen and others for the visible reunion of the Church, with Rome as the central see of Christendom. It was first kept in 1908. See also Couturier, P. I.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST. See Disciples of Christ.

CHURCHING OF WOMEN, The. The form of thanksgiving which Christian women make after childbirth. The custom, which is based on the Jewish rite of *Purification (Lev. 12. 6), is mentioned in a letter of St. *Augustine of Canterbury to St. *Gregory the Great. The oldest extant forms of service, however, are medieval. The 1662 BCP office is essentially the same as that of the *Sarum rite except that psalms 116 and 127 replace 121 and 128. It is intended to precede Holy Communion. The wearing of a white veil by the woman was anciently customary and enforced by law in *James I's reign. The woman makes a thank-offering at this service.

The ASB provides new services of 'Thanksgiving for the Birth of a Child' and 'Thanksgiving after Adoption'. Both are intended to involve the whole family and include the giving of one of the Gospels to the parents. Other modern Anglican liturgies make similar provisions for a service distinct from *Baptism.

The RC office used to be closely similar to that of the BCP. It has now been replaced by a blessing before the altar at the end of the baptismal service.

E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, I, cap. ix, art. v, ordo 11. S. Cheetham in D.C.A., i (1875), p. 390 f., s.v., with primary refft. C. L. Feltoe in P.B.D. (1925), p. 203 f., s.v. A. J. Schulte in C.E., iii (1908), p. 761, s.v.

CHURCHMEN'S UNION. See Modern Churchmen's Union.

CHURCHWARDENS. The election of Churchwardens in the C of E is governed by the Churchwardens (Appointment and Resignation) Measure of 1964 (slightly modified by the *Synodical Government Measure of 1969). This preserves the arrangement of can. 89 of 1604, whereby two Churchwardens are to be chosen by the incumbent and the parishioners, or, if they fail to agree, one is to be appointed by the incumbent, the other by the people. The election takes place annually, not later in the year than 30 April, and the persons elected are admitted to their office by the *ordinary. The duties of Churchwardens are defined in the 1969 canons (can. E 1) as being 'foremost in representing the laity and in co-operating with the incumbent', encouraging the parishioners 'in the practice of true religion', promoting unity, and maintaining order and decency in the church and churchyard. They are also responsible for the movable property in the church. In the past they had also the duty of presenting offenders against ecclesiastical law, a function which they fulfilled until the 19th cent. Until the establishment of *Parochial Church Councils in 1921 they were the sole official representatives of the laity in each parish.

C. Drew, Early Parochial Organisation in England. The Origins of the Office of Churchwarden (St. Antony's Hall publications, vii; 1954). R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, ii (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 1463–91. H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 158–77. The 1964 Measure is pr. in W. Dale, The Law of the Parish Church (ed. 4, 1967), pp. 162–9; see also pp. 28–34.

CHURCHYARD. Properly the ground in which a church stands, though the word is often used as though equivalent to '*cemetery' (which it may or may not be). In the past such enclosures were often used as public meeting-places for the conduct of trials, markets, and other secular business.

CIBORIUM (Gk. κιβώριον). (1) A chalice-shaped vessel, with a lid, used to contain the Sacramental Bread of the Eucharist. It apparently came into general use early in the Middle Ages. (2) The term is also sometimes applied to the canopy ('ciborium magnum') resting on four pillars over the altar of Christian *basilicas and other churches, now more usually termed in the W. the '*baldacchino'.

(1) Braun, A.G., pp. 280–347, with plates 51–9.
(2) Braun, C.A., ii, pp. 185–261, with plates 152–8. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 1588–1612, s.v.

CIMABUE (c. 1240 – c. 1302), usual name of 'Cenni di Pepo', Florentine painter. Little is known of his life. G. Vasari, the 16th-cent. historian of Italian art, makes him the teacher of Giotto and almost the father of the Italian Renaissance; and his fame is attested by *Dante's mention of him in the 'Divina Commedia' (Purg. xi. 94–6). Among the pictures that have been attributed to him, none of which can claim documentary evidence, are the 'Madonna and Child' in the Louvre, the 'Madonna and Child with Angels' in the National Gallery in London, and the paintings in the church of St. *Francis at *Assisi, esp. a monumental 'Virgin with Child' between four angels, a large figure of St. Francis, and an impressive 'Crucifixion'. His mosaics in the cathedral of Pisa, the finest of them being the 'Christ in glory', were executed during the last years of his life. The famous 'Madonna' of the chapel of the Rucellai in S. Maria Novella at Florence, which tradition has ascribed to him, has in recent times been assigned to the Sienese painter Duccio di Buoninsegna (c. 1255 – 1319) and dated at 1285.

A. Nicholson, Cimabue. A Critical Study (Princeton Monographs in Art and Archaeology, xvi; 1932), incl. reff. to other works. R. Salvini, Cimabue (Rome, 1946).

CINCTURE. See Girdle.

CIRCUMCELLIONS. Fanatical bands of predatory peasants who flourished in the north of Africa, esp. Numidia, in the 4th cent. They were so named by their Catholic opponents, from their encircling attacks on their dwellings (circum cellas), but they preferred themselves to be known as 'Agonistici', i.e. 'soldiers (of Christ)'. Though they were originally concerned only with the remedy of (probably genuine) social grievances, they became linked with the *Donatists; and as such they used great violence in behalf of the Donatist cause, taking as their battle-cry the words 'laudes Deo' ('praises be to God'). The civil government tried to subdue them by force and persuasion in turn, but they survived into the 5th cent. E. *Gibbon compared them with the *Camisards of Languedoc of the early 18th cent.

The chief Patristic reff. include *Optatus, De Schismate Donatistarum, iii. 4, and St. *Augustine, Contra Gaudentium, I. xxviii. 32, and Enarratio in Ps. cxxxii. 3, 6. Further Patristic reff. in W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church. A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (1952), esp. pp. 172–8; id., 'The cellae of the African Circumcellions' in J.T.S., N.S., iii (1952), pp. 87–89 [argues that cellae=shrines]. H. J. Diesner, Kirche und Staat im spätrömischen Reich (1963), esp. chaps. 1, 4, 5, with full bibl. E. Tengström, Donatisten und Katholiken. Soziale, wirtschaftliche und politische Aspekte einer nordafrikanischen Kirchenspaltung (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, xviii; 1964), pp. 24–78. W. H. C. Frend, 'Circumcellions and Monks' in J.T.S., N.S., xx (1969), pp. 542–9.

CIRCUMCISION. Though circumcision had long been in use as a religious rite among the Jews, for whom it was part of the Law of *Moses (e.g. Gen. 17. 12, Ex. 12. 48), it was abandoned at a very early date by nearly the whole Christian Church. The conference at *Jerusalem c. A.D. 50 (cf. Acts 15 and Gal. 1 and 2) determined that it should cease to be obligatory on Gentiles; and St. Paul frequently insisted that even for those who continued to practise it, it was valueless unless accompanied by inward conversion. From a remote date, however, the rite has been in use in the Church of *Ethiopia, where it is performed between the third and eighth day after birth, i.e. before the child is baptized. In St. Paul's Epistles (e.g. Rom. 3. 30, Eph. 2. 11), 'the circumcision' (ἡ περιτομή) is often used substantivally of the Jewish people.

The Jewish Rite of Circumcision, with prayers and laws appertaining thereto. Translated into English, with an introductory essay by A. Asher (1873). R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, i (1958), pp. 78–82; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 46–48. Articles by L. H. Gray ('Introductory'), L. Spence ('American'), G. Foucart ('Egyptian'), D. S. Margoliouth ('Muslim'), and G. A. Barton ('Semitic') in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), pp. 659–80. R. Meyer in T.W.B., vi (1959), cols. 72–83, s.v. περιτέμνω, with further reff.

CIRCUMCISION, Feast of the. The feast traditionally kept on 1 Jan., the eighth day after *Christmas, in commemoration of Christ's circumcision (cf. Lk. 2. 21: 'when eight days were accomplished'). The observance goes back to the middle of the 6th cent. It then spread, at first esp. in Spain and Gaul, but it did not become established at *Rome till the 11th cent. Its relatively late introduction into the Christian calendar has been connected with the unwillingness of the Church to introduce a festival on New Year's Day, which had been kept with great riot and licence by the pagans. Indeed, many early Missals provided a second Mass for use on that day against idolatrous practices (ad prohibendum ab idolis). In the *Armenian Church, the feast is observed on 13 Jan. In modern times there has been a tendency in the RC Church to observe 1 Jan. as the Octave of Christmas (as it was officially styled in 1960); in the 1969 Roman Calendar it is called the 'Solemnity of Holy Mary, the Mother of God' (Solemnitas S. Dei Genetricis Mariae).

F. Bünger, Geschichte der Neujahrsfeier in der Kirche (1910). F. *Cabrol, Les Origines liturgiques (1906), Appendice C, 'Le Premier des Calendes de Janvier et la Messe contre les Idoles'; pp. 203–10. M. Righetti, Manuale di Storia Liturgica, ii (Milan, 1955), pp. 73–77, with reff. F. Cabrol in D.A.C.L., iii, pt. 2 (1914), cols. 1717–28, s.v., incl. further bibl.

CIRCUMINCESSION. Also Circuminsession. In Christian theology the technical term for the interpenetration of the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity. The corresponding Gk. word, περιχώρησις (lit. 'a proceeding around'), used by St. *John of Damascus in this connexion, was rendered into Latin 'circumincessio' by Burgundio of Pisa (d. 1194); and this later became changed into 'circuminsessio' through similarity of sound.

A. Deneffe, S.J., 'Perichoresis, circumincessio, circuminsessio. Eine terminologische Untersuchung' in Z.K.T., xlvii (1923), pp. 497–532; [G.] L. Prestige, 'Περιχωρέω and περιχώρησις in the Fathers' in J.T.S., xxix (1928), pp. 242–52; G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (1968), p. 1077, s.v. περιχωρέω.

CISTERCIAN ORDER. The order of White Monks, so called from the mother house at *Cîteaux, which was founded in 1098 by St. *Robert of Molesme and several other brethren who sought to establish a form of *Benedictinism stricter and more primitive than any then existing. After some precarious years Cîteaux rose rapidly to celebrity through its connexion with its most famous son, St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, who became a novice there in 1112. In the following decades the order spread very rapidly to almost every part of W. Europe. Before the end of the 12th cent. 530 Cistercian abbeys were established and 150 more in the next hundred years. The first foundation in England was at Waverley, Surrey (1128–9), soon followed by *Rievaulx (c. 1131).

The Cistercian life was to be one of secluded communal intercession and adoration. Houses were to be erected only in remote situations, while its churches were to be plain in character and their ornaments and vestments were not made from precious materials. Strict rules on diet and silence were laid down and manual labour given its primitive prominent position. The Cistercians thus became important agricultural pioneers, playing a notable part in English sheep farming, the care of their estates being for long undertaken by lay brethren who lived under somewhat less severe rules.

The '*Charter of Love', approved in 1119 by Pope *Callistus II during the abbacy of St. *Stephen Harding, laid down the constitution of the order. Each house regulated its own affairs in accordance with the ordinances of the annual General Chapters at Cîteaux, at which it was represented, but was 'visited' annually by the abbot of its founding abbey. The General Chapter saw to the maintenance of discipline, due observance of old customs, and the establishment of necessary new ones. Cistercian observances powerfully influenced those of other medieval orders, notably certain congregations of *regular canons, and after 1215 their scheme of periodic general chapters and visitations was made obligatory for other monastic orders. From the 13th cent., however, the fame of the order waned.

The 17th cent. brought the loss of central control from Cîteaux over foreign houses, with the formation of national congregations in Spain and elsewhere. The same period also saw the rapid spread of a movement for reform which came to be known as the Strict Observance, based on a literal observance of the rule and a jettisoning of the various deviations and relaxations which had become customary (the Common Observance). By the end of the 17th cent. about a third of the Cistercian houses in France were following the Strict Observance, though it never spread seriously elsewhere. The Revolution practically obliterated the Common Observance in France, but it survived in the then Austro-Hungarian lands, largely by undertaking, at first reluctantly, pastoral and educational duties. Recent events in E. Europe have caused considerable migration overseas, and the Common Observance is now strong in the U.S.A., as well as having congregations in Holland, Italy, Austria, and elsewhere. Under an Abbot-General in Rome they follow a variety of rules, ranging from the earlier French pattern in the few houses re-established in France to the university activity of the house in Texas. In 1950 they numbered some 1,700 throughout the world.

After the Revolution the monks of *La Trappe were the first to return to France; they carried on work in Switzerland, Poland, and England, and established a supremacy among the followers of the Strict Observance, who became popularly known as *Trappists (q.v.). When Cîteaux, the mother house, was restored to the order in 1898 it adopted the Strict Observance and its Abbot, who resides in Rome, is the General of the Cistercians of the Strict Observance. There is no longer even a theoretical alliance between the followers of the Strict Observance (or Trappists) and those of the Common Observance.

J. M. Canivez, Ord. Cist. Ref. (ed.), Statuta Capitulorum Generalium Ordinis Cisterciensis (8 vols., Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, fascc. ix–xivB; 1933–41). P. Guignard (ed.), Les Monuments primitifs de la règle cistercienne, publiés d'après les manuscrits de l'abbaye de Cîteaux (1878). B. Tissier, Ord. Cist. (ed.), Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, id est Operum Abbatum et Monachorum Ordinis Cisterciensis qui saeculo S. Bernardi aut paulo post eius obitum floruerunt (8 vols., bound in 3, Bonnefontaine and Paris, 1660–1669). P. Le Nain, Ord. Cist., Essai de l'histoire de l'ordre de Cîteaux (9 vols., 1695–7). J. B. Mahn, L'Ordre cistercien et son gouvernement, des origines au milieu du XIIIe siècle, 1098–1265 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxvi; 1945). L. J. Lekai, S.O.Cist., The White Monks. A History of the Cistercian Order (Okauchee, Wis., 1953); id., The Rise of the Cistercian Strict Observance in Seventeenth Century France (Washington, D.C., 1968); id., The Cistercians. Ideals and Reality (Kent, Ohio, 1977). A Concise History of the Cistercian Order . . . with its Revival in England. By a Cistercian Monk (1852). J. S. Fletcher, The Cistercians in Yorkshire (1919); F. A. Mullin, A History of the Work of the Cistercians in Yorkshire (1131–1300) (Diss., Washington, D.C., 1932); J. F. O'Sullivan, Cistercian Settlements in Wales and Monmouthshire, 1140–1540 (Fordham University Studies, History Series, ii; New York, 1947). B. D. Hill, English Cistercian Monasteries and their Patrons in the Twelfth Century (1968). A. A. King, Cîteaux and her Elder Daughters (1954), pp. 1–105. L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Spiritualité de Cîteaux (1955; Eng. tr., 1958). The Cistercienser-Chronik ed. by the Cistercians of Mehrerau (ib., 1889 ff.); Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis (Rome, 1945 ff.); Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum (Rome–Westmalle, 1934 ff.). Heimbucher, i (1933), pp. 330–62, and ii (1934), p. 655 f., with bibl. J. M. Canivez, Ord. Cist. Ref., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 874–997, s.v. 'Cîteaux (Ordre)', with full bibl.; L. J. Lekai, S.O.Cist., in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 885–9, s.v.

CITATION. A summons to appear before a court of justice, and esp. an ecclesiastical court. In the days when the probate of wills was a matter for these courts, citation was the normal method of opening proceedings. Any person may still be cited, e.g.

even a *lay rector not himself a member of the C of E, for offences against ecclesiastical law.

CÎTEAUX (Lat. Cistercium). The mother house of the *Cistercian Order (q.v.) in Burgundy, some 16 miles S. of Dijon. The house and property, lost by the order in 1791, were restored to it in 1898. The abbot, who retains his headship of the order, resides in *Rome, and governs his community through an auxiliary.

J. Marlier (ed.), Chartes et documents concernant l'abbaye de Cîteaux, 1098–1182 (Bibliotheca Cisterciensis, i; Rome, 1961). L. M. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 787–90, with extensive bibl. J. M. Canivez, Ord. Cist. Ref., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 852–74, s.v., with bibl.

CITIES OF REFUGE, The (Heb. עָרֵי מִקְלָט). In the Mosaic Law the six walled cities, three on each side of *Jordan, which were to be set aside as a protection for those who had committed accidental homicide (Deut. 4. 41–3, 19. 1–13, and Josh. 20). The existence of such places was made necessary by the primitive law which required blood vengeance from the next of kin (goel). In the earlier legislation of Exod. 21. 13 f. (the 'Book of the Covenant'), apparently any altar offered such asylum. Acc. to Deut. 19. 1 f., three were to be appointed when the Hebrews were established W. of Jordan and three more when the whole land was conquered (Deut. 19. 8 f.). In Josh. 20, where the selection of the cities is attributed to *Joshua (not, as in Deut. 4. 41–3, to *Moses), their names are Kedesh, Shechem, Hebron, Bezer, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan. Asylum involved trial; and if the verdict was murder, the refuge was withdrawn.

CIVIL CONSTITUTION OF THE CLERGY, The. The legislative measures voted during the French Revolution by the 'Constituante' on 12 July 1790, and sanctioned by Louis XVI, which imposed on the Church of France a schismatic organization. Inspired by an exaggerated *Gallicanism, they were designed to realize the independence of the French Church from the Papacy except in strictly doctrinal matters, and to follow up the preliminary measures of the abolition of tithes (1789) and the withdrawal of the civil sanction of religious vows (1790). This 'Constitution Civile du Clergé' abolished the old dioceses and conformed the ecclesiastical districts to the départements of the civil administration. Of the hierarchy only the curés, vicaires, and bishops were retained, but the powers of these last were considerably diminished, being made dependent on an 'episcopal council'. The Pope, though still recognized as the head of the new Church, with whom it was desired to remain in communion, was deprived of all actual power, including the right of the canonical confirmation of bishops, which was transferred to the metropolitans. The salaries of the clergy of all grades were to be regulated by the State, as whose officials they were henceforth to be regarded. Other administrative reforms were introduced.

This Constitution, which was signed by Louis XVI against his will, was immediately opposed by the entire French episcopate, who attacked its provisions as schismatic, on the ground that it separated France from her legitimate bishops and from the Pope, and as heretical, because it denied the doctrines of the Papal primacy of jurisdiction, the hierarchical superiority of bishops over priests, and the right of the Church to govern herself. The legitimate bishops continued to ignore the new laws and to administer their old dioceses. On 24 Nov. 1790 the Constitutional Oath was imposed on the entire clergy under pain of punishment. It was taken by only four of the 130 diocesan bishops and a small percentage of the lower clergy, the others, called the 'réfractaires', being immediately deprived of their offices. The Civil Constitution was formally condemned by Pius VI in the Brief 'Caritas' of 13 Apr. 1791, in which the oath was denounced as sacrilegious, the 'Constitution' pronounced heretical, sacrilegious, and schismatic in several of its articles, and all ordinations made under it declared sacrilegious and null. See also Constitutional Church.*

Text in Archives parlementaires de 1787 à 1860. Recueil complet des débats législatifs et politiques des chambres françaises imprimé par ordre du Sénat et de la Chambre des Députés sous la direction de . . . J. Mavidal . . .–E. Laurent, Série Ie, xvii (1884), pp. 55–60. The Brief 'Caritas' is pr. in A. Barlèri–R. Segreti, I.C. (edd.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio . . . Clementis XIII. Clementis XIV. Pii VI. Pii VII. Leonis XII. et Pii VIII., ix (Rome, 1845), pp. 11–19. Eng. tr. of the main clauses of the Constitution, the decree requiring the Clerical Oath, and the Brief 'Caritas' in J. H. Stewart, A Documentary Survey of the French Revolution (New York [1951]), pp. 169–189, and of the Constitution, with comm., in S. Z. Ehler–J. B. Morrall (edd.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 236–49. C. Constantin in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1537–1605; L. Carret in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 429–53 both s.v. 'Constitution civile du clergé', with bibl. See also bibl. to Constitutional Church.

CIVILTÀ CATTOLICA. A periodical published twice monthly by the Italian *Jesuits. At the time of the *Vatican Council (1869–70), it actively attacked *liberalism and supported Papal Infallibility.

CLAIRVAUX (Lat. Clara Vallis). The fourth house of the *Cistercian Order, founded in 1115 by St. *Bernard of Clairvaux. It rapidly rose to fame, and in 1143 Alfonso I of Portugal made his kingdom a vassal to it, undertaking to pay a yearly tribute. After a period of decadence, the strictness of the Cistercian Rule was re-established at Clairvaux by Abbot Denis Largentier in 1615. The community was broken up, and the house and property taken over by the state, in 1790, during the French Revolution.

A. A. King, Cîteaux and her Elder Daughters (1954), pp. 207–328. A. [E.] Prévost, 'Recueil des chartes et bulles de Clairvaux' in Revue Mabillon, xiv (1924), pp. 140–56, 233–42, xv (1925), pp. 145–67, 258–71, 308–17, xvi (1926), pp. 49–62, 166–9, 237–48, 369–84, xvii (1927), pp. 62–71, 286–90, 421–8, xviii (1928), pp. 66–76, 158–76, 240–56, 324–37, and xix (1929), pp. 161–72. J. Waquet (ed.), Recueil des chartes de l'abbaye de Clairvaux (Troyes, 1950 ff.). J. Laurent–F. Claudon, Abbayes et prieurés de l'Ancienne France, xii, 3e partie (Archives de la France Monastique, xlv; 1941), pp. 308–44, with full refr. J. J. Vernier (ed.), 'Inventaire du trésor de la sacristie de l'abbaye de Clairvaux de 1640' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, lxiii (1902), pp. 599–677. H. M. d'Arbois de Jubainville–M. L. Pigeotte, Études sur l'état intérieur des abbayes cisterciennes et principalement de Clairvaux au XIIe et au XIIIe siècles (1858). P. Pietresson de Saint-Aubin (ed.), 'Le Livre des sépultures des abbés de Clairvaux (1114–1647)' in Revue Mabillon, xix (1929), pp. 303–23. J. M. Canivez, Ord. Cist. Ref., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1050–61, s.v., with bibl.

CLANDESTINITY. The celebration of marriages without the cognizance of proper authority. The abuse became widespread in the later Middle Ages and in the 16th cent. Protestants and Catholics alike were anxious for reform. In his Von Ehe- sachen (1530) M. *Luther strongly opposed unions contracted without parental knowledge or approval, regarding such marriages (to which he esp. applied the term 'clandestine') as null and void; and he was closely followed by P. *Melanchthon, J. *Brenz, J. *Calvin, and T. *Beza. The RC canonists, though less concerned with parental consent (in which they saw a frequent danger to the liberty of the children), were at least as eager for publicity. But to insist on it as a sine qua non seemed to imply that the Church possessed the power of altering the matter of a sacrament. After long discussions it was laid down in Session XXIV of the Council of *Trent that though clandestine marriages were true and proper marriages (vera et rata matrimonia), provided that they had not been rendered void by the Church, in future all such marriages in places where the ruling of the decree obtained would be held to be null. Henceforward all marriages were to be in facie ecclesiae, i.e. before the parish priest. This ruling was embodied in the decree Tametsi*, repeated with minor modifications in Ne Temere*, and incorporated in the 1918 Codex* (can. 1094).

In the C of E publicity is secured by the publication of banns, the issue of a licence, or a certificate issued by a superintendent registrar, and by the requirement of proper witnesses to the ceremony. Marriages without banns were formally condemned in the 11th Canon of the Synod of *Westminster (1200). Can. 62 of the English *Canons of 1604 also ordered that the marriage shall take place 'in time of Divine service'. In 1754, civil legislation was introduced to prevent clandestine marriages by Lord *Hardwicke's Act (q.v.), while since the Marriage Act of 1823 (4 Geo. IV, c. 76, s. 28) the law has required as a minimum of publicity two or more credible witnesses, besides the minister. In the C of E clandestinity is commonly held not to void a marriage, though the 1604 canons provided for the punishment of ministers celebrating such marriages.

CLAPHAM SECT. An informal group of wealthy Anglican *Evangelicals, so named by Sydney Smith (1764–1840), because the majority of its members lived near Clapham and worshipped in its parish church. Among the most outstanding were J. *Venn, Rector of Clapham from 1792 to 1813, Charles Grant (1746–1832), Z. *Macaulay (q.v.), Lord Teignmouth (1751–1834), James Stephen (1758–1832), Henry Thornton (1760–1815), Granville Sharp (1735–1813) and W. *Wilberforce (q.v.). Although at bottom conservative in their attitude to the social order, they shared a keen sense of moral responsibility and the belief that religion must be manifested in good works. Among the most important schemes in which they engaged were the struggle for the abolition of the *slave-trade, the extension of missionary enterprise, esp. in *India, the foundation of the *British and Foreign Bible Society and the establishment of a model colony in Sierra Leone. They also promoted such schemes for the improvement of moral standards at home as the Proclamation Society (founded 1789), the Society for Bettering the Conditions and Increasing the Comforts of the Poor (1794) and the extension of *Sunday Schools. Towards the end of her life H. *More (q.v.) was closely connected with the group. Mainly through the personal position of its members, many of whom were interrelated by marriage, the group was able to exercise on parliament and public opinion an influence out of all proportion to its numbers.

J. Stephen, Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography, ii (1849), pp. 287–382 ('The Clapham Sect'). E. M. Howse, Saints in Politics. The 'Clapham Sect' and the Growth of Freedom (1953).

CLAPTON SECT. A rather loosely defined group of Anglican High Churchmen at the beginning of the 19th cent., so called because the home of Joshua Watson (1771–1855), the most prominent, was at Clapton (with allusion also to the then much talked of *Clapham Sect of Low Churchmen). They were also known as the 'Hackney Phalanx', Joshua Watson's brother, John James Watson (1767–1839), having been Rector of Hackney for some forty years.

E. Churton (ed.), Memoir of Joshua Watson (2 vols., 1861), passim. Y. Brilioth, The Anglican Revival. Studies in the Oxford Movement (1925), p. 25 f.

CLARE, St. (1194–1253), foundress of the '*Poor Clares'. About 1212, moved by the teaching of St. *Francis of *Assisi, she gave up all her possessions and joined him at the *Portiuncula. He placed her at first in a *Benedictine house, but very soon, when other women wished to live on Franciscan lines, he set up a separate community, with St. Clare as abbess (1215), and she occupied this position for the rest of her life. Many daughter houses were founded in Europe during the 13th cent., including 47 in Spain. The austerity of the rule went far beyond any that women had previously undertaken, and, although many of the daughter houses obtained dispensations from the original ban upon communal property, the community of 'San Damiano' at Assisi, with those of Perugia and Florence, obtained at St. Clare's wish the 'privilegium paupertatis' from *Gregory IX, which enabled them to maintain their original state of entire poverty. She was canonized by Alexander IV in 1255. Feast day, 11 (formerly 12) Aug.

Contemporary life, attributed to *Thomas of Celano, pr. in AA.SS., Aug. II (1735), pp. 754–67; also ed. from MS. 338 of the Bibl. Comunale of Assisi by F. Pennacchi (Assisi, 1910). Eng. tr. by P. Robinson, O.F.M. (London, 1910), with Eng. tr. of her rule in appendix, pp. 99–123. B. Bughetti, O.F.M. (ed.), 'Legenda Versificata S. Clarae Assisiensis, Saec. XIII' in A.F.H., v (1912), pp. 237–60 and 459–81; 14th cent. metrical life ed. L. Oliger, O.F.M., ib., xii (1919), pp. 110–31. Life, written in 1494, by Ugolino Verino (1442–1505), ed., with introd. and notes, W. Seton (Chelsea, 1921). Z. Lazzeri, O.F.M., 'Il processo di canonizzazione di S. Chiara d'Assisi' in A.F.H., xiii (1920), pp. 403–507. E. Gilliat-Smith, Saint Clare of Assisi. Her Life and Legislation (1914). P. Robinson, O.F.M., 'St. Clare' in A. G. Little (ed.), Franciscan Essays (1913), No. iii, pp. 31–49. Maria Fassbinder, 'Untersuchungen über die Quellen zum Leben der hl. Klara von Assisi' in Franziskanische Studien, xxiii (1936), pp. 296–335. L. Spätling, O.F.M., 'Die geistige Gestalt der hl. Klara von Assisi', ib., xxxv (1953), pp. 145–73; L. Hardick, O.F.M., 'Zur Chronologie im Leben der hl. Klara', ib., pp. 174–210, with other artt. on the rule and order, pp. 211–383. A. Fortini, 'Nuove notizie intorno a S. Chiara di Assisi' in A.F.H., xlvi (1953), pp. 3–43. Santa Chiara d'Assisi. Studi e cronaca del VII centenario 1253–1953 (Assisi [1954]), esp. pp. 37–310, with docc., pp. 519–42. Other studies by L. Moisson (Paris, c. 1913), M. Beaufreton ('Les Saints', 1916), C. Mauclair (Paris, 1925), N. de Robeck (Milwaukee, 1951), and Fausta Casolini (Assisi, 1953). P. *Sabatier, 'Le Privilège de la pauvreté' in Revue d'histoire franciscaine, i (1924), pp. 1–54. F. Casolini in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1401–9, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs, vi. Sainte Claire et les Clarisses. 1. Sainte Claire', with further bibl. See also bibl. to Poor Clares.

CLARENDON, The Constitutions of. Sixteen enactments, put forward by Henry II of England as a statement of English custom under his grandfather Henry I, to regulate the relations between ecclesiastical and lay jurisdiction and other matters. They were presented at the Council of Clarendon (1164) for the assent of St. Thomas *Becket, Archbishop of *Canterbury, who accepted the document but refused the irrevocable act of affixing his seal. Among the most important clauses were those which prohibited appeals to Rome without the king's consent (viii) and asserted the royal jurisdiction over criminous clerks (iii). Pope *Alexander III condemned these and eight other clauses, and a long dispute followed, until after Becket's murder Henry promised (1172) not to impede appeals to Rome (these came in practice to be heard in England by papal judges-delegate), and to abandon 'customs' brought in against the churches of his land in his own time—if any. However, though Henry suffered a defeat over criminous clerks (see Benefit of Clergy), he maintained other important customs, notably the right of lay courts to try actions concerning *advowsons, the control of bishoprics and royal abbeys during vacancies, and the 'election' of bishops in the King's Chapel.

Text in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Select Charters (ed. 9 by H. W. C. Davis, 1913), pp. 163–7, with introd., pp. 161–3. Eng. tr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 68–73 (No. xxiii) and, with notes, in D. C. Douglas–G. W. Greenaway (edd.), English Historical Documents 1042–1189 (1953), pp. 718–22. See also bibl. cited under Becket, St. Thomas.

CLARKE, SAMUEL (1675–1729), divine. A native of *Norwich, he was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he came under I. *Newton's influence. His ability attracted the notice of J. Moore, Bp. of Norwich, who in 1698 appointed him his chaplain. In 1704 and 1705 he delivered two sets of Boyle Lectures in defence of rational theology against the empiricism of J. *Locke. They were later published (1705–6), with the joint title (from 1716) of A Discourse concerning the Being and Attributes of God, the Obligations of Natural Religion, and the Truth and Certainty of the Christian Revelation. Though a critic of the *Deists, Clarke did not conceal his sympathy with some aspects of their teaching. In A Letter to Mr. Dodwell (1706) he defended against H. *Dodwell the natural immortality and incorporeality of the soul. In 1706 he was appointed Rector of St. Benet's, Paul's Wharf, and in 1709 Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly. In 1712 he aroused the indignation, esp. of High Churchmen, by his Scripture-Doctrine of the Trinity, which had marked *Unitarian leanings. He was attacked by R. *Nelson and D. *Waterland; and the Lower House of Convocation sought his condemnation. The Upper House, however, imposed no formal retractation, when Clarke promised to write no further on the subject. In the next years he entered into a correspondence with G. W. *Leibniz on space and time (publd. 1717), defending the Newtonian doctrines, and also on the nature of free-will. On Newton's death (1727) he declined an invitation to succeed him as Master of the Mint. His other writings include Three Practical Essays, viz. on Baptism, Confirmation, Repentance (1699), a critique of J. *Toland's Amyntor (1699), Paraphrases on the Gospels of Mt. (1701), Mk. and Lk. (1702), and some collections of Sermons.

Collected ed. of his Works (4 vols., London, 1738), with life by B. *Hoadly repr. in vol. i, pp. i–xiv (previously prefixed to ed. of Clarke's Sermons by John Clarke, 10 vols., 1730–1, vol. i, pp. i–l). Modern ed. of Leibniz–Clarke correspondence by H. G. Alexander (Manchester, 1956). The principal authority is the life by his friend, W. *Whiston (London, 1730; a brief memoir by T. Emlyn is appended to ed. 3, 1748). R. Zimmermann, 'Samuel Clarke's Leben und Lehre. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Rationalismus in England' in Denkschriften der k. Akademie der Wissenschaften. Phil.-hist. Cl., xix (Vienna, 1870), pp. 249–336; J. E. Le Rossignol, The Ethical Philosophy of Samuel Clarke (Diss., Leipzig, 1892). L. Stephen in D.N.B., x (1887), pp. 443–6.

CLARKSON, THOMAS (1760–1846), anti-slave-trade agitator. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, he decided to devote his life to the repression of the slave trade, on which he had just written a prize essay. He was ordained deacon but hardly ever exercised his ministry. With some leading *Quakers and with W. *Wilberforce he formed in 1787 a group which pressed in the House of Commons for the abolition of the slave trade. Their vigorous efforts were rewarded by the Act of 1807 ending the traffic, and the emancipation of the slaves in 1833. Clarkson spent some time in France soon after the outbreak of the Revolution, urging here also the abolition of the slave trade with other abuses, and after the Peace of Vienna in 1815 propagated his views at the various European congresses. His books include A Portraiture of Quakerism (1806); History of the Rise, Progress, and Accomplishment of the Abolition of the African Slave Trade by the British Parliament (2 vols., 1808); Memoirs of the Private and Public Life of William Penn (2 vols., 1813); and Researches, Antediluvian, Patriarchal and Historical, concerning the Way in which Men first acquired their Knowledge of God and Religion (1836).

Clarkson's Correspondence with Henry Christophe, King of Haiti, ed. E. L. Griggs–C. H. Prator (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1952). E. L. Griggs, Thomas Clarkson. The Friend of Slaves (1936), incl. complete bibl. G. F. R. Barker in D.N.B., x (1887), pp. 454–6. See also bibl. to Slavery.

CLASS MEETING. A meeting, usually held weekly, of small sections of each congregation of *Methodists, under a class leader appointed by the pastor, at which contributions to the Church funds are paid, and inquiry is made into the conduct and spiritual progress of individual members. This institution, peculiar to Methodism, dates from 1742.

CLAUDEL, PAUL LOUIS CHARLES (1868–1955), French Catholic author and diplomat. He was born at Villeneuve-sur-Fin (Aisne) and, at the age of 18, was converted from worldliness to Christian fervour. He entered the diplomatic service in 1892, and after a distinguished career, which led him to the U.S.A., the Far East, and many cities of Central Europe, became ambassador at Tokyo in 1921. His claim to fame rests chiefly on his plays, which revivified the French theatre; their central theme was the consecration of the world to God in Christ. The most beautiful of his plays is the famous L'Annonce faite à Marie (1912), a canticle on the religious meaning of voluntary suffering and expiation lived by the leprous woman Violaine, who thus becomes a mediatrix of grace to others. In Le Soulier de satin (1929) he resumed the same theme of the sacrificial life with a man as the central figure. His poems, remarkable for their fascinating rhythm as well as for their deep religious insight, have appeared in several collections, among them Cinq Grandes Odes (1910), Deux Poèmes d'été (ed. 2, 1914), Feuilles des saints (1925), and Un Poète regarde la croix (1938). Though not always easy to understand, their profound symbolism, powerful Biblical imagery, and stirring realization of the Cross as the centre of the world, rank them with the finest Christian poetry of his time.

Jacques Rivière et Paul Claudel. Correspondance, 1907–1914, ed. I. Rivière (1926), with introd., pp. i–xxi (Eng. tr. as 'Letters to a Doubter', 1929); Paul Claudel et André Gide. Correspondance, 1899–1926, ed. R. Mallet (1949; Eng. tr., 1952). J. Rivière, Études (1911), No. 3: 'Paul Claudel, poète chrétien', pp. 61–129. F. Lefèvre, Les Sources de Paul Claudel (1927); J. Madaule, Le Génie de Paul Claudel (1933); id., Le Drame de Paul Claudel (1936); P. Rywalski, O.F.M. Cap., Claudel et la Bible. La Bible dans l'œuvre littéraire de Paul Claudel (1948); J. Chiari, The Poetic Drama of Paul Claudel (1954); W. Fowlie, Paul Claudel (London, 1958); E. Roberto, Visions de Claudel (Marseille, 1958). R. Griffiths (ed.), Claudel: A Reappraisal (1968). Paul Claudel 1868–1955. Bibliothèque Nationale Exhibition Catalogue, with preface by P. H. Simon (1968).

CLAUDIANUS MAMERTUS (c. 425–c. 474), Christian philosopher and younger brother of St. *Mamertus, Abp. of Vienne. Born in the vicinity of Lyons, after practising as a rhetorician he became a monk, probably at Lyons, and was later ordained a presbyter by his brother. He was also a close friend of *Sidonius Apollinaris. His principal work was a treatise 'De Statu Animae' (3 Books, 467–72). In this Claudianus defended the *Neoplatonist doctrine (accepted by St. *Augustine) that the soul was immaterial (against *Faustus of Riez, who, following an earlier W. tradition (*Tertullian, *Hilary), held that the soul as a created substance was of a corporeal and extended character). He also wrote a letter to the rhetorician Sapaudus in which he bemoaned the level of the arts in his age.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL, liii, 697–786. Crit. ed. by A. Engelbrecht in C.S.E.L., xi (1885). Id., 'Untersuchungen über die Sprache des Claudianus Mamertus' in Sb. (Wien), cx (1886), pp. 423–542. Study by R. de la Broise (Paris, thesis, 1890). P. Courcelle, Les Lettres grecques en occident (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, clix; 1943), pp. 223–35 (on Claudianus' relation to *Porphyry). J. Madoz, S.J., Liciniano de Cartagena y sus cartas (Facultades de Teología y de Filosofía del Colegio Máximo de Oña. Estudios Onienses, Ser. 1, iv; 1948), pp. 28–55. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 591–4. W. Schmid in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 169–79, s.v.

CLAUDIUS (d. c. 830–40), Bp. of Turin. He was of Spanish birth, and became master of the royal schools of Aquitaine before his promotion to the see of Turin c. 817. He made a series of attacks on image-worship, relics, the adoration of the Cross, and indeed every visible symbol of Christ's life, as well as on *pilgrimages and the intercession of saints. He had scant regard for the authority of the Roman see, and his views, which were regarded as heretical by many, were refuted at the request of *Louis the Pious by Dungal and Jonas of Orléans. He was also famous for his Biblical commentaries, which displayed an unusually wide knowledge of the works of St. *Augustine and contain extensive quotations from them. A number of works formerly attributed to other authors have been ascribed to him by Dom Paulino Bellet. Some of the older historians of the *Waldenses (J. Leger, A. Muston) claimed him as their founder.

Most of his writings are still in MS.; those publd. are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, civ, 615–928. Crit. ed. of 'Epp.' by E. Duemmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, iv (1895), pp. 586–613. Id., 'Über Leben und Lehre des Bischofs Claudius von Turin' in Sb. (Berl.) (1895), pp. 427–43. P. Bellet, O.S.B., 'Claudio de Turín, autor de los comentarios "In genesim et regum" del Pseudo Euquerio' in Estudios Biblicos, ix (1950), pp. 209–23; id., 'Oració de Claudi de Torí en el comentari a Hebreus del Pseudo Attó de Vercelli' in Colligere Fragmenta. Festschrift Alban Dold, ed. B. Fischer, O.S.B.–V. Fiala, O.S.B. (Texte und Arbeiten, I. Abteilung, ii; 1952), pp. 140–43; id., 'El Liber de Imaginibus Sanctorum bajo el nombre de Agobardo de Lyon obra de Claudio de Turín' in Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, xxvi (1953), pp. 151–94. E. J. Martin, A History of the Iconoclastic Controversy (C.H.S. [1930]), esp. pp. 262–6. Manitius, i, pp. 390–6 (with account of MS. material). F. Vernet in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 12–19, s.v.; P. Bellet in N.C.E., iii (1967), p. 922 f.

CLAUDIUS APOLLINARIUS. See Apollinarius, Claudius.

CLAUSURA ('closure' or, more usually, 'enclosure'). (1) The practice of separating a part of a religious house to the exclusion of those of the opposite sex to the community; and (2) the portion so enclosed. The clausura is found in all religious orders, in both E. and W., and dates from the earliest monastic rules. Permission, general or particular, is needed for religious to go outside the clausura, or for outsiders to come in, while in some cases even lay persons of the same sex as the community are held to violate the clausura by entrance. In some communities, certain parts of the house or church are neutral ground, which both the community and outsiders may enter without leave. The enclosure is more strict in women's orders than men's, and most strict of all in the enclosed orders of *nuns, though the rigidity of this last type of enclosure was somewhat relaxed in the RC Church in 1969.

CLAYTON, JOHN (1709–73), one of the first '*Methodists'. Educated at Manchester Grammar School and Brasenose College, Oxford, he was a member of the '*Holy Club', founded by the *Wesleys. After ordination in 1732, he was put in charge of the Sacred Trinity Chapel, Salford, where J. Wesley and G. *Whitefield often preached for him. In 1740 he became a chaplain, and in 1760 a Fellow, of the Manchester Collegiate Church. Throughout his life he was a supporter of the Jacobites, giving great offence by his political views to the Whigs of the district. For many years he also conducted an academy at Salford.

Memoir by L. Tyerman, 'The Rev. John Clayton, M.A., the Jacobite Churchman', in The Oxford Methodists (1873), pp. 24–56. C. W. Sutton in D.N.B., xi (1887), p. 13 f.

CLEMENS NON PAPA. Jacques Clement (c. 1500–c. 1556), a Dutch composer of Church music, who was facetiously so called to pretend to distinguish him from the contemporary Pope, *Clement VII. He was a forerunner of G. P. da *Palestrina.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, St. See after Pope Clement XIV.

CLEMENT OF ROME, St. (fl. c. 96), Bp. of *Rome. He was probably the third bishop after St. *Peter, though he was often held in primitive times to have been his immediate successor. He may have belonged, e.g. as an ex-slave, to the family of T. Flavius Clemens, cousin of the Emp. *Domitian, which there is reason to associate with Christianity, and it is just possible that he is the Clement referred to in Phil. 4. 3 (written from Rome?). Besides the spurious '*Clementine Literature' (q.v.), two 'Epp. to the Corinthians' have been ascribed to him. The former Epistle ('I Clement') is genuine, and is his real title to fame. It was written c. 96 in the name of the Roman Church to deal with fierce strife in the Church at Corinth, where certain presbyters had been deposed. Clement issued a call to repentance, insisting that God required due order in all things and that the deposed presbyters must be reinstated and legitimate superiors obeyed. The Apostles 'appointed bishops and deacons' in every place, and it was they who gave directions how the ministry should perpetuate itself. Clement calls the higher class of ministers indifferently 'bishops' (ἐπίσκοποι) and 'presbyters' (or elders, πρεσβύτεροι). He refers to 'offering the gifts' (sc. of the *Eucharist) as one of their functions, and to some or all of them as 'rulers' of the Church. Here and elsewhere he affords valuable evidence of the state of the ministry in his time, on the history of the Roman Church and (it has been held) the martyrdoms of Sts. Peter and Paul. The epistle, which was highly regarded, was being read in church at Corinth along with the Scriptures c. 170.

The so-called 'Second Epistle of Clement' is really a homily, assigned on stylistic grounds to a separate author. The earliest surviving Christian sermon, it sets out in general terms the character of the Christian life and the duty of repentance. It probably belongs to Corinth (so F. X. Funk, G. Krüger), though some scholars have assigned it to Rome (A. *Harnack, who attributed it to Pope *Soter) or Alexandria (J. R. *Harris, J. V. Bartlet, B. H. *Streeter).

In later tradition St. Clement became the subject of a variety of legends. In the 'Clementine Literature' he figures as the intermediary through whom the Apostles transmit their teaching to the Church. Quite another tradition, preserved in some apocryphal acta (not earlier than the 4th cent.), describes how he was banished to the Crimea in the reign of Trajan and forced to work in the mines. It is said that his missionary labours in those parts met with remarkable success and that he was bound to an anchor and thrown into the Black Sea. The legend adds that his tomb, which was built by angels, was shown once a year to the inhabitants by the miraculous ebbing of the tide. Feast day in the W., 23 Nov.; in the E., 24 or 25 Nov.

Fullest collection of material, Patristic and modern, in J. B. *Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers. Part I (rev. ed., 2 vols., 1890). The two 'Epp.' survive in two MSS., the [Biblical] *Codex Alexandrinus (B. Mus.; text imperfect) and the Cod. Hierosol. of A.D. 1056 (of *Didache fame) discovered by P. *Bryennios. They were first printed by P. *Young ('Junius'), Oxford, 1633 (whence incorporated by J. B. *Cotelier in his Patres Apostolici, 1672); crit. ed. by J. B. Lightfoot, op. cit. Text also in J. P. Migne, PG, i and ii (incl. Clementines). Separate edd. of Gk. text by R. Knopf (T.U., xx, 1; 1899) and C. T. Schaefen (Florilegium Patristicum 44; 1941). Ancient Lat. tr. of I Clem. ed. G. *Morin, O.S.B., Maredsous, 1894; ancient Syr. tr. ed. R. L. Bensly–R. H. *Kennett, London, 1899; Copt. frgmts. ed. F. Rösch, Strassburg, 1910; Eng. tr. of 'Epp.' in J. B. Lightfoot, op. cit.; also of I Clem., with useful notes, W. K. Lowther Clarke, S.P.C.K., 1937. W. *Wrede, Untersuchungen zum ersten Klemensbrief (1891); T. Schermann, Griechische Zauberpapyri und das Gemeinde- und Dankgebet im I. Klemensbriefe (T.U., xxxiv, 2b; 1909); F. Gerke, Die Stellung des I. Clemensbriefes innerhalb der Entwicklung der altchristlichen Gemeindeverfassung und des Kirchenrechts (ib., xlvii, 1; 1931); L. Sanders, Le Hellénisme de St. Clément de Rome et le paulinisme (Louvain, 1943). C. Eggenberger, Die Quellen der politischen Ethik des 1. Klemensbriefes (Zürich, 1951); A. W. Ziegler, Neue Studien zum ersten Klemensbrief (1958); O. Andrén, Rättfärdighet och Frid. En Studie i det första Clemensbrevet (Uppsala, 1960; with Eng. summary); O. Knoch, Eigenart und Bedeutung der Eschatologie im theologischen Aufriss des ersten Clemensbriefes. Eine auslegungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Theophaneia, xvii; 1964). K. Beyschlag, Clemens Romanus und der Frühkatholizismus. Untersuchungen zu I Clemens 1–7 (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xxxv; Tübingen, 1966). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 116–31; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 45–47. J. *Chapman, O.S.B., in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 12–17; A. Stuiber in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 188–97, s.v. See also bibl. to Apostolic Fathers.

CLEMENT V (1264–1314), Pope from 1305. Bertrand de Got, a member of an influential French family, after studying at Toulouse, Orléans, and *Bologna, was appointed Bp. of Comminges in 1295 and Abp. of Bordeaux in 1299. Elected Pope in 1305 as successor to Benedict XI, he was crowned at Lyons in the presence of Philip the Fair, whose powerful influence made Clement's policy henceforward largely subservient to French interests. By fixing his residence at *Avignon in 1309 and thus inaugurating the seventy years' 'Captivity', Clement further increased his dependence on Philip, and the King insisted on a formal condemnation of Clement's predecessor, *Boniface VIII, on charges of heresy and immorality. The process, however, though actually begun in 1310, was, with Philip's assent, abandoned in 1311 when the King substituted a plan for the abolition of the *Templars, whose property he coveted. The order was suppressed at the Council of *Vienne (1311) and, though the Knights *Hospitallers received from the Pope the title to its property, the French King contrived to lay his hands on most of its possessions. As a vassal of Edward I, Clement was also brought into English affairs. In 1306 he was persuaded to suspend Robert of *Winchelsea, Abp. of *Canterbury, who was accused by the King of treason for his support of Boniface VIII, but in 1308, under Edward II, Robert was reinstalled at the request of the King. In 1306 he excommunicated Robert Bruce of Scotland for his part in the murder of the Red Comyn, and soon after deposed two bishops who had been actively in favour of the Scots rebellion. Despite his political difficulties and the discredit he brought on the Papacy by his taxation and sale of offices, Clement V did much to further scholarship, esp. the study of medicine and oriental languages, and founded the universities of Orléans (1306) and Perugia (1308). He also added to Medieval Canon Law by the so-called '*Clementines' (q.v.).

Bulls ed. by the monks of *Monte Cassino, Regestum Clementis Papae V ex Vaticanis Archetypis . . . nunc primum editum cura et studio Monachorum Ordinis S. Benedicti (9 vols., bound in 7, with appendix, Rome, 1885–92); Acta ed. F. M. Delorme, O.F.M., and A. L. Tàutu (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis. Fontes, Series III, vol. vii, tom. 1; Vatican, 1955). R. Fawtier–Yvonne Lanhers, Tables des registres de Clément V publiés par les Bénédictins (Bibliothèques des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3e Série, 1948–57). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat (4 vols., 1916–27) esp. vol. i, pp. 1–106 and 551–66. E. Berchon, 'L'Histoire du Pape Clément V (1305–1314)' in Actes de l'Académie Nationale des Sciences, Belles-Lettres et Arts de Bordeaux, lv (1893), pp. 493–535, and lvi (1894), pp. 5–171. C. Wenck, Clement V und Heinrich VII (1882); G. Lizerand, Clément V et Philippe IV le Bel (thesis, Paris, 1910). H. G. Richardson, 'Clement V and the See of Canterbury' in E.H.R., lvi (1941), pp. 96–103;

C. Perrat, 'Un Diplomate gascon au XIVe siècle, Raymond de Piis, nonce de Clément V en Orient' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xliv (1927), pp. 35–90. R. Gaignard, 'Le Gouvernement pontifical au travail. L'exemple des dernières années du règne de Clément V. 1er août 1311 – 20 avril 1314' in Annales du Midi, lxxii (1960), pp. 169–214, with reff. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912; Eng. tr., 1963), Book I, ch. 1, and passim. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 58–63. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 61–9, s.v.; G. Mollat in D.H.G.E., xii (1952), cols. 1115–29, s.v., with full bibl.

CLEMENT VI (1291–1352), Pope from 1342. Pierre Roger entered the *Benedictine monastery of La Chaise-Dieu at the age of 10, and later studied and taught at *Paris. He made a rapid career, becoming Abbot of Fécamp in 1326, Bp. of Arras in 1328, Abp. of Sens in 1329, and Abp. of Rouen in 1330. He was created cardinal by *Benedict XII in 1338. On 7 May 1342 he was elected Pope at *Avignon. He was a devoted adherent of Philip of Valois, and his French sympathies prevented him from restoring peace between England and France except for the short-lived truce of Malestroit in 1343. He carried on the struggle of his predecessors against Louis of Bavaria, to whom he opposed Charles IV (Charles of Moravia) as anti-King, but Louis's death in 1347 resolved the difficulties. Shortly afterwards the Pope received the submission of *William of Occam and the schismatical *Franciscans, who had lost their strongest protector in the Emperor. In 1347 Clement censured Cola di *Rienzo, whom he had first favoured, for encroaching on the temporal power of the Papacy. Despite the danger of Italy's slipping more and more from his control, he established himself firmly at Avignon, the sovereignty of which he bought from Joanna of Naples in 1348. He also appointed a large number of French cardinals. He sought to meet the costs of his enterprises against the Turks as well as those of his own luxurious living by reserving to himself an increasing number of appointments to bishoprics and benefices, a measure which caused great hostility, esp. in England. In 1351 Edward III issued the First Statute of *Provisors, by which the King reserved to himself the right of presentation in all Papal appointments to benefices.

Though strongly inclined to nepotism and prodigality, Clement VI was a benefactor of the poor, whom he generously and courageously assisted, esp. during the epidemic of the Black Death at Avignon in 1348–9. He was a good theologian, and his jubilee bull of 1350 is a valuable document for the doctrine of *Indulgences. He defended the *Mendicant orders against the secular prelates, and was a protector of the Jews, whose position in the Papal States was better than elsewhere in Europe.

E. Déprez and others (edd.), Clément VI (1342–1352). Lettres closes, patentes et curiales se rapportant à la France (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3e Série, 3 vols., 1901–59); E. Déprez–G. Mollat (edd.), Clément VI (1342–1352). Lettres closes, patentes et curiales intéressant les pays autres que la France (ib., 1960–61); U. Berlière, O.S.B. (ed.), Lettres de Clément VI, 1342–1352 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, vi, etc.; 1924 ff.); id. (ed.), Suppliques de Clément VI, 1342–1352 (ib., i; 1906); E. Griffe (ed.), Lettres patentes des évêques de France, recueillies dans les registres du Pape Clément VI, 1342–1352, i, Province de Bourges (Acta Episcoporum Galliae Saeculo XIV, 1933); L. Klicman (ed.), Acta Clementis VI Pontificis Romani, 1342–1352 (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas Illustrantia, i; Prague, 1903). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. G. Mollat, esp. i (1916), pp. 241–308, with notes, ii (1927), pp. 335–433). A. Pélissier, Clément VI le Magnifique [1951]. P. Fournier, 'Pierre Roger (Clément VI)' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxvii (1938), pp. 209–38. H. Frank, 'Clemens' VI finanzpolitische Beziehungen zu Deutschland' in R.Q., xxxviii (1930), pp. 209–79. G. Mollat, 'L'Œuvre oratoire de Clément VI' in A.H.D.L.M.A., iii (1928), pp. 239–74; P. Schmitz, O.S.B., 'Les Sermons et discours de Clément VI, O.S.B.' in R. Bén., xli (1929), pp. 15–34. A. Maier, 'Der literarische Nachlass des Petrus Rogerii (Clement VI) in der Borghesiana' in R.T.A.M., xv (1948), pp. 332–56, and xvi (1949), pp. 72–98. R. J. Loenertz, O.P., 'Ambassadeurs grecs auprès du Pape Clément VI (1348)' in O.C.P., xix (1953), pp. 178–96. F. Giunta, 'Sulla politica orientale di Clemente VI' in P. Vaccari–P. F. Palumbo (edd.), Studi in storia medievale e moderna in onore di Ettore Rota (Rome, 1958), pp. 149–62. G. Mollat, 'Le Saint-Siège et la France sous le pontificat de Clément VI (1342–1352)' in R.H.E., lv (1960), pp. 5–24. J. Gay, Le Pape Clément VI et les affaires d'orient, 1342–1352 (thesis, Paris, 1904). G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912; Eng. tr., 1963), esp. Bk. 1, ch. 4. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 85–92. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 69–72, s.v.; G. Mollat in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1129–62, s.v., with full bibl.

CLEMENT VII (1478–1534), Pope from 1523. The son of Giuliano de' Medici and a cousin of *Leo X, he rapidly rose to a high position, becoming Abp. of Florence and Cardinal in 1513. In 1523 he succeeded *Hadrian VI. Though Clement was personally of blameless character, his lack of courage led his reign to be marked by shifty diplomacy and intrigue. He attempted to steer a middle path between the conflicting aims of Francis I of France and the Emp. *Charles V, siding first with the former by the League of Cognac (1526), and then, after the sack of Rome (1527) by the Imperial armies, with the latter by the treaty of Barcelona (1529). He pursued the same irresolute policy of procrastination in relation to the divorce of *Henry VIII from Catherine of Aragon. It was his failure to foster the movement for reform within the Church that encouraged the rapid spread of Protestant doctrine during his pontificate. In his ready patronage of scholars and artists, among the latter B. Cellini, *Raphael, and *Michelangelo, he was a true son of the house of Medici.

H. M. Vaughan, The Medici Popes, Leo X and Clement VII (1908), pp. 285–346; E. Rodocanachi, Histoire de Rome. Les pontificats d'Adrien VI et de Clément VII (1933), pp. 87–270, with bibl. pp. 281–4. Among the principal sources for the history of his relations with Henry VIII are the Calendars of the State Papers of the reign (see s.v. 'Henry VIII'); S. Ehses (ed.), Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII von England, 1527–1534 (1893). P. Crabitès, Clement VII and Henry VIII (1936). Pastor, ix (1910), pp. 231–67, and x (1910). H. Hemmer in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 72–6, s.v., with bibl.; R. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1175–1224, s.v., with full bibl. (inaccurate).

CLEMENT VIII (c. 1536 – 1605), Pope from 1592. The son of Silvestro Aldobrandini, a distinguished Italian lawyer, Ippolito Aldobrandini was a man of high personal character. He became a cardinal in 1585 and was elected Pope in 1592. It was his policy to secure the representation of all the conflicting influences in the *curia, and esp. to limit the dominance of Spanish influence. He supported the League against *Henry of Navarre, but this did not prevent his negotiating with Henry, so that in 1595 Henry was received into the Catholic Church. Clement was also largely responsible for the ensuing Treaty of Vervins (1598), which brought about peace between France and Spain. His hopes of converting *James I of England to RC-ism were not realized, however. In ecclesiastical matters he pursued a policy of reform. He took a keen interest in the revision of the service books, and issued new editions of the *Vulgate, the *Missal, the *Breviary, the '*Caeremoniale Episcoporum', and the *Pontifical.

P. Van Isacker, 'Notes sur l'intervention militaire de Clément VIII en France à la fin du XVIe siècle' in R.H.E., xii (1911), pp. 702–13. A. Louant, 'L'Intervention de Clément VIII dans le traité de Vervins' in Bulletin de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, xii (1932), pp. 127–86. A. O. Meyer, 'Clement VIII und Jakob I von England' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, vii (1904), pp. 268–306; J. Martin, P.S.S., 'Clément VIII et Jacques Stuart' in Revue d'Histoire Diplomatique, xxv (1911), pp. 279–307 and 359–78. Cav. L. F. Mathaus-Voltolini, 'Die Beteiligung des Papstes Clemens VIII an der Bekämpfung der Türken in den Jahren 1592–1595' in R.Q., xv (1901), pp. 303–26 and 410–23. Pastor, xxiii (1933) and xxiv (1933). J. de la Servière, S.J., in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 76–86, s.v.; R. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1249–97, s.v., with full bibl. (inaccurate).

CLEMENT XI (1649–1721), Pope from 1700. Giovanni Francesco Albani, who was a native of Urbino, was educated at the Roman College, became a doctor of both Laws, and entered on an administrative career in the Papal States. In 1687 he was appointed Secretary of Papal Briefs and in 1690 he was created cardinal. He was an ecclesiastic of austere habits who, accepting election to the Papacy with reluctance, continued to discharge faithfully his pastoral duties. He met with ill success in the political sphere. In 1701 he protested, without effect, against the assumption of the title of King of Prussia by the Elector of Brandenburg. In the War of the Spanish Succession, having previously favoured the candidature of Philip of Anjou (1683–1746), he afterwards tried to remain neutral and procure a peaceful solution, but was forced in 1701 to recognize Philip, and in 1709, when the Imperial troops had invaded the Papal States, to abandon him in favour of the Archduke Charles; consequently in the Treaty of Utrecht (1713) his rights in Sicily, Sardinia, Parma and Piacenza were ignored. In the same year he quarrelled with the Duke of Savoy about his rights of investiture in Sicily; and when he issued an interdict, all the clergy who accepted it were banished until the island was conquered by Philip V of Spain in 1718. On the declaration of war by the Turks on Venice in 1714, he tried, without success, to organize an alliance of princes against them.

During Clement's reign the long-drawn-out *Jansenist controversy continued within the French Church and Jansenism was once more condemned in the bull '*Vineam Domini Sabaoth' (16 July 1705). This was followed by the condemnation of P. *Quesnel's Abrégé de la morale de l'évangile in 1708, and, later, by the famous bull '*Unigenitus Dei Filius' (8 Sept. 1713). He also had to decide the dispute between *Dominicans and *Jesuits on the question of the Chinese rites, esp. the cult of ancestors and of Confucius, which the former condemned while the latter tolerated it. The Pope approved the decision of the *Holy Office which censured the opinion of the Jesuits, but the controversy was not finally settled until the reign of *Benedict XIV. Clement XI was a generous protector of arts and scholarship, one of the most important additions to the *Vatican Library being the MSS. collected at his instigation by J. S. *Assemani.

In 1708 he made the Feast of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM one of obligation throughout the Church.

Works, inc. Bullarium, ed. by his nephew, Card. Albani (7 vols., Rome, 1722–4), with life [by J. C. Battellus] prefixed to Bullarium (1723); later ed. (2 vols., Rome, 1729). [P. Polidori], De Vita et Rebus Gestis Clementis Undecimi (Urbino, 1727). S. Reboulet, Histoire de Clément XI Pape (2 vols., Avignon, 1752). F. Pometti, 'Studii sul pontificato di Clemente XI, 1700–1721' in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, xxi (1898), pp. 279–457; xxii (1899), pp. 109–179; xxiii (1900), pp. 239–76, 449–515. L. Nina, Le finanze pontificie sotto Clemente XI (1928). A. Aldobrandini, La guerra di successione di Spagna negli stati dell'Alta Italia dal 1702 al 1705 e la politica di Clemente XI dal carteggio di Mons (1931). L. Just, Clemens XI und der Code Léopold (1701–10) (1935). [J.] Schmidlin, 'Der Konflikt der Anima mit Clemens XI' in R.Q., xvii (1903), pp. 141–59 and 301–23. P. Feret, 'Négociation secrète entre Louis XIV et Clément XI' in R.Q.H., lxxxv (1909), pp. 108–45. Pastor, xxxiii (1941), with bibl. J. de la Servière, S.J., in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 98–111, s.v., with bibl.; R. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1326–61, s.v., with full bibl.

CLEMENT XIII (1693–1769), Pope from 1758. Carlo della Torre Rezzonico was a native of Venice, studied with the *Jesuits at *Bologna, and became a doctor of law at Padua. Having been appointed Auditor of the *Rota for *Venice in 1725, he was made cardinal in 1737 and in 1743 Bp. of Padua, where he endeared himself to his people by his lavish almsgiving. Soon after his election to the Papacy the storm gathered against the Society of Jesus, which came to be the chief preoccupation of his pontificate. It began in *Portugal, where the all-powerful minister, Sebastian Carvalho, afterwards Marquis de Pombal, first imprisoned and then expelled all members of the Society under pretext of their having conspired against the King, and all relations between the country and the Holy See were severed in 1760. In 1761 the Portuguese example was followed by *France, where the Parlement of Paris demanded drastic alterations in the constitutions of the Society, which Clement refused with the famous words: Sint ut sunt aut non sint ('Let them be as they are or not be at all'). In 1764 nearly all the French Jesuits had to go into exile, and Louis XV abolished the order by law in his kingdom. The Pope replied by the bull 'Apostolicum pascendi munus' of 9 Jan. 1765, giving warm praise to the Society and all its good works. In 1767 the Jesuits were expelled also from *Spain, and shipped to Civitavecchia, and soon after also from Naples and Parma. At last, in 1769, the three ambassadors of Spain, Naples, and France demanded the complete and irrevocable destruction of the Society, and the secularization of its members throughout the world, a step which is believed to have hastened Clement's death, which occurred a few days afterwards. The suppression of the Society by Papal authority was effected by his successor, *Clement XIV.

Bulls in A. Babèri (ed.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio . . . Clementis XIII, Clementis XIV, Pii VI, Pii VII, Leonis XII. et Pii VIII., ed. C. A. Spetia, i–iii (Rome, 1835–8). J. Holzwarth, Die Verschwörung der katholischen Höfe gegen Clement den Dreizehnten (1872). P. Dudon, 'De la suppression de la Compagnie de Jésus (1758–73)' in R.Q.H., cxxxii (1938), pp. 75–107. [G. J. X.] de Lacroix de Ravignon, S.J., Clément XIII et Clément XIV (2 vols., 1854), vol. i, pp. 1–236, with documents vol. ii, pp. 1–362. A. Theiner, Orat., Geschichte des Pontificats Clemens' XIV. i (Fr. tr., 1852, pp. 23–147). Pastor, xxvi (1950), pp. 143–504, and xxvii (1950). J. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1381–1410, s.v., with full bibl.; E. D. McShane, S.J., in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 937–40 with recent bibl.

CLEMENT XIV (1705–74), Pope from 1769. Giovanni Vincenzo Antonio Ganganelli was the son of a surgeon at Sant'Arcangelo, nr. Rimini, who entered the *Franciscan Order in 1723. In 1746 he was appointed Consultor of the *Holy Office by *Benedict XIV, and in 1759 created cardinal by *Clement XIII. In 1769 he was elected Pope after a stormy conclave, the Bourbon courts having decided to recognize only a Pope determined to suppress the *Jesuits, though whether Ganganelli actually made such a promise is uncertain.

As Pope he made it his chief aim to preserve peace with the Catholic princes in order to gain their support against the growing irreligion. He therefore restored good relations with Parma and *Spain, and esp. *Portugal, by creating cardinal the brother of the Marquis de Pombal, the Portuguese prime minister. He also suspended (1773) the annual issue of the bull '*In Coena Domini', which contained the censures reserved to the Pope. But all these concessions failed to satisfy the Bourbon courts, bent on the destruction of the Society of Jesus. After hesitating and using half-measures for some time, Clement at last yielded to the pressure of France and Spain, who threatened a schism if the order were not suppressed. In the Brief '*Dominus ac Redemptor' of 21 July 1773 which decreed its suppression, he gave as the only reason for the step the hostility which the Jesuits had incurred and the controversies in which they had been implicated. Thus the order was suppressed in all Catholic states, though Catharine II of Russia and Frederic II of Prussia (the latter only until 1780) refused to promulgate the Papal Brief, so that the Society continued to exist in their realms.

The sacrifice of the Society of Jesus did not, however, procure better relations between the Papacy and the European princes. The former Papal possessions of *Avignon and Benevento were, indeed, restored to the Holy See, but in France a royal commission for the reform of the religious orders continued its activities, suppressing religious houses without Papal approval; in Portugal the secular authorities interfered with ecclesiastical affairs and with the education of the young; and in *Poland hostile tendencies made themselves felt even among the clergy, and esp. in the Order of the *Piarists. Clement XIV introduced many measures for the development of trade and industry in the Pontifical States, but with little success, owing to the opposition of the cardinals and the Roman nobility, who could not forgive the suppression of the Jesuits.

Epistolae et Brevia Selectiora, ed. A. Theiner, Orat. (Paris, 1852). A. L. de Caraccioli, La Vie du Pape Clément XIV (1775; Eng. tr., 1776). A. Theiner, Orat., Geschichte des Pontificats Clemens' XIV (2 vols., 1853; Fr. tr., 1852). A. von Reumont, Ganganelli. Papst Clement XIV. Seine Briefe und seine Zeit (1847). C. Uschener, Klemens XIV. Ein Lebens- und Charakterbild (1866). J. A. M. Crétineau-Joly, Clément XIV et les Jésuites (1847); C. F. J. Goetting, Ein verrückter Papst? Ganganelli. Eine Streit- und Zeitschrift (1886). [G. J. X.] de Lacroix de Ravignon, S.J., Clément XIII et Clément XIV (2 vols., 1854), vol. i, pp. 237–483, and vol. ii, pp. 363–492. Pastor, xxxviii ('1951' [1952]); cf. L. Cicchitto, O.F.M.Conv., in Miscellanea Francescana, xxxiv (1934), pp. 189–231. J. de la Servière, S.J., in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 124–34, s.v., with bibl.; P. Paschini in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1836–41, s.v. 'Clemente XIV', with bibl.; E. Préclin in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 1411–23, s.v., with bibl.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, St. (c. 150–c. 215), theologian. He was prob. an *Athenian by birth who, after studying Christianity and philosophy in several places, became a pupil of *Pantaenus, the head of the *Catechetical School at *Alexandria, whom he succeeded in 190. In 202 he was forced to flee by persecution. His chief works are the 'Protrepticus', or 'An Exhortation to the Greeks'; the 'Paedagogus', on Christian life and manners; and the 'Stromateis', or 'Miscellaneous Studies'. It was the age of *Gnosticism, and Clement so far agreed with the Gnostics in holding 'gnosis', religious knowledge or illumination, to be the chief element in Christian perfection. But for him the only true 'gnosis' was that which presupposed the faith of the Church, Apostolic in its foundation and possessing Divine revelation. While thoroughly loyal to this, Clement explained and supplemented it with the ideas of Greek philosophy, which he also regarded as a Divine gift to mankind. Christ, the *Logos, the second Person of the Divine Trinity, was both the source of all human reason and the interpreter of God to mankind. He became man in order to give a supreme revelation, and that through Him men might partake of immortality. In this latter the sacraments of *Baptism and the *Eucharist are instrumental. Clement saw ignorance and error as a more fundamental evil than sin, and, though he held that not all men would attain to the highest level of blessedness, he took an optimistic view of the ultimate destiny of even the most erring. His 'Quis Dives Salvetur?' is a beautiful exposition of Mk. 10. 17–31, finishing with the narrative of the young man who was baptized, lost, and re-won by St. *John the Apostle. His name occurs in the earlier *martyrologies, where it is assigned to 4 Dec., but *Clement VIII excised it on the advice of C. *Baronius on the grounds of the doubtful orthodoxy of some of Clement's writings. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 5 Dec.

The 'Protrepticus' and 'Paedagogus' survive in the 'Arethas Codex' (Par. gr. 451 of A.D. 914) and some dependent MSS., the 'Stromateis' in the Florence MS. Laur. V. 3 (saec. xi) and a copy. Edd. principes by P. Victorius (Florence, 1550) and F. Sylburg (Heidelberg, 1592); good ed. by J. *Potter, 2 vols., Oxford, 1715. J. P. Migne, PG, viii and ix. Crit. ed. by O. Stählin in G.C.S., vols. 1–3, text, 1905–9; vol. 4 (very fine index), 1934–6; ed. 3 by L. Früchtel, ib., 1960–72. Stromateis ('Miscellanies'), Bk. VII, ed. F. J. A. *Hort and J. B. Mayor, with notes, &c., London, 1903; Protrepticus and Quis Dives Salvetur?, with frgmt., ed. G. W. Butterworth, Loeb, with Eng. tr., 1919; Paedagogus repr. from ed. 2 of G.C.S., ed., with introd. by H. I. Marrou and Fr. tr. by Marguerite Harl–C. Mondésert, S.J. (S.C., lxx, cviii, clviii; 1960–70); for edd. of Excerpta ex Theodoto, see s.v. 'Theodotus'. Studies by C. E. Freppel (Paris, 1865), E. de Faye (Paris, 1898), J. Patrick (London, 1914), R. B. Tollinton (2 vols., London, 1914), G. Bardy (Paris, 1926), G. Lazzati (Milan, 1939), and C. Mondésert, S.J. (Paris, 1944). C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (ed. F. E. *Brightman, 1913), esp. pp. 72–150. C. Merk, Clemens Alexandrinus in seiner Abhängigkeit von der griechischen Philosophie (1879); J. Munck, Untersuchungen über Klemens von Alexandrien (1933). E. Molland, 'Clement of Alexandria on the Origin of Greek Philosophy' in Symbolae Osloenses, xv–xvi (1936), pp. 57–85; id., The Conception of the Gospel in the Alexandrian Theology (Oslo, 1938), pp. 5–84. T. Camelot, O.P., Foi et gnose. Introduction à l'étude de la connaissance mystique chez Clément d'Alexandrie (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, iii; 1945). F. Quatember, S.J., Die christliche Lebenshaltung des Klemens von Alexandrien nach seinem Pädagogus (Vienna, 1946). W. Völker, Der wahre Gnostiker nach Clemens Alexandrinus (T.U., lvii; 1952). E. F. Osborn, The Philosophy of Clement of Alexandria (Texts and Studies, New Series, iii; 1957). A. Méhat, Étude sur les 'Stromates' de Clément d'Alexandrie (Patristica Sorbonensia, vii; [1966]). O. Prunet, La Morale de Clément d'Alexandrie et le Nouveau Testament (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses, lxi; 1966). H. Steneker, ΠΕΙΘΟΥΣ ΔΗΜΙΟΥΡΓΙΑ. Observations sur la fonction du style dans le Protreptique de Clément d'Alexandrie (Graecitas Christianorum Primæva, iii; 1967). S. R. C. Lilla, Clement of Alexandria. A Study in Christian Platonism and Gnosticism (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 15–62; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 190–97. See also A. de la Barre in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 137–99, G. Békés in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1842–57, and M. Spanneut in N.C.E., iii (1967), p. 943 f. See also works cited under Alexandrian Theology.

CLEMENT MARY HOFBAUER, St. See Hofbauer, St. Clement Mary.

CLEMENT OF ROME, St. See before Pope Clement V.

CLEMENTINE LITERATURE The many apocryphal writings which circulated in the early Church under the name of St. *Clement of Rome include, besides the so-called 'Second Ep. of Clement' (q.v.), (1) the '*Apostolic Constitutions', (2) two 'Epp. to Virgins', (3) and (4) the 'Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', (5) 'Epitomes' of the last named, (6) the 'Apocalypse of Clement', more commonly known as the 'Apocalypse of St. *Peter' (q.v.), (7) an unpublished Arabic Apocalypse akin to the preceding, and (8) spurious letters in the *False Decretals (q.v.). The term 'Clementines' (Κλημέντια) is by convention restricted to (3), (4), and the less important (5).

(1) The CLEMENTINE HOMILIES ('Ομιλίαι) is a religious and philosophical romance, arranged as twenty discourses, which Clement is supposed to have sent from *Rome to *James of Jerusalem, the Lord's brother, and preceded by two letters from Peter and Clement, also addressed to James. They describe Clement's travels in the East when he met St. Peter and witnessed his conflict with *Simon Magus. The work contains much legendary matter, e.g. about Clement's family. Until A. R. M. Dressel published a complete text on the basis of Cod. Ottobon. 443 in 1853, they were only known in a defective Cod. Par. gr. 930.

(2) The CLEMENTINE RECOGNITIONS ('Αναγνώσεις), in ten books, closely resembles the 'Homilies' in historical setting and theological outlook. Their narrative parts go over much the same ground, with additional details of the vicissitudes of several members of Clement's family and their final reunion after their 'recognition' (hence the title) by St. Peter. The original Greek is lost; the work survives in the Lat. of *Rufinus (d. 410), who in a prefatory letter mentions that he had made various curtailments. The 'Recognitions' have been dated between 211 and 231 on the grounds that they refer to the extension of the Roman franchise throughout the Empire, which took place under Caracalla, and that the work is already quoted by *Origen in his Comm. on Genesis. They also survive in Syriac.

(3) The two Greek EPITOMES ('Επιτομαί) are evidently later. They omit most of the theological discussions of the earlier works and introduce an account of Clement's martyrdom. Two Arabic epitomes also survive.

The literary and theological problems raised by the Clementines are still warmly debated. The fact of a literary connexion between the 'Homilies' and the 'Recognitions' is undisputed, but while A. *Hilgenfeld maintained that the 'Recognitions' were earlier, most later scholars (G. Uhlhorn, C. Schmidt, O. Cullmann) have held that the 'Homilies' came first. The parallels are probably to be explained not from direct borrowing, but from common dependence on a lost document (Grundschrift). O. Cullmann assigned this Grundschrift to an early 3rd cent. Judaeo-Christian, holding that it was itself dependent on the 'Itinerary of Peter' (Περίοδοι Πέτρου) and a Jewish Apology dating from c. 135.

Theologically the Clementines have a Judaistic-Gnostic tendency. In the 'Recognitions' Christ is a Divine Aeon, who had previously been revealed in *Adam and *Moses. Jesus is the True Prophet and special emphasis is laid on the Jerusalem Church. There are also strong ascetic elements. Peter is a strict vegetarian and the use of water alone is allowed in the Eucharist. On the other hand there is a definite repudiation of celibacy (a mark of Jewish influence). The religious standpoint of the 'Homilies' is similar, though here the Judaistic element is less pronounced. *Arian influences have also been upheld by J. *Chapman, who assigned the final edition of the 'Recognitions' to a disciple of *Eunomius.

The documents were given a wholly disproportionate importance by the *Tübingen School, who, putting them very early, saw in the narratives of Simon Magus a reflection of the fierce conflict between 'Petrinism' and 'Paulinism' in pre-Catholic Christianity.

Homilies (1–19a only) first printed from Par. gr. 930 by J. B. *Cotelier in his '*Apostolic Fathers' (1672), i, pp. 546–746. A. R. M. Dressel's complete text (1853; reprinted in J. P. Migne, PG, ii, 19–468) was soon superseded by the more satisfactory edition of P. de *Lagarde (Clementina, Leipzig, 1865). The Recognitions were edited by J. *Faber Stapulensis as early as 1504. Subsequent editions by J. B. Cotelier (1672) and E. G. Gersdorf (1838; reprinted PG, i, 1158–1474). Crit. ed. of Homilies and Recognitions by B. Rehm–F. Paschke in G.C.S., xli and li (1953–65). W. Frankenberg, Die syrischen Clementinen mit griechischem Parralleltext (T.U., xlviii, Heft 3; 1937). F. Paschke, Die beiden griechischen Klementinen-Epitomen und ihre Anhänge. Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Vorarbeiten zu einer Neuausgabe der Texte (ib., xc; 1966). The literature is vast. Among the more important is A. Hilgenfeld, Die klementinischen Recognitionen und Homilien (1848); C. *Bigg, 'The Clementine Homilies' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, ii (1890), pp. 157–93; F. J. A. *Hort, Notes Introductory to the Study of the Clementine Recognitions (1901); A. C. *Headlam, 'The Clementine Literature' in J.T.S., iii (1901–2), pp. 41–58; H. Waitz, 'Die Pseudoklementinen', T.U., xxv, 4 (1904); J. Chapman, 'On the date of the Clementines', Z.N.T.W., ix (1908), pp. 21–34, 147–59; O. Cullmann, Le Problème littéraire et historique du roman pseudo-clémentin (1930); E. *Schwartz, 'Unzeitgemässe Betrachtungen zu den Clementinen', Z.N.T.W., xxxi (1932), pp. 151–99; B. Rehm, 'Zur Entstehung der pseudoclementinischen Schriften', ib., xxxvii (1938), pp. 77–184. G. Strecker, Das Judenchristentum in den Pseudoklementinen (T.U., lxx; 1958). W. Ullmann, 'The Significance of the Epistola Clementis in the Pseudo-Clementines' in J.T.S., N.S., xi (1960), pp. 295–317. For lexical purposes, W. C[hawner], Index of Noteworthy Words and Phrases found in the Clementine Homilies (1893). Further bibl. in Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 135. B. Rehm in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 197–206, s.v. 'Clemens Romanus II'.

CLEMENTINES. In canon law, the collection of *Decretals, also known as the Liber Septimus, issued by *Clement V. It contains Decretals of *Boniface VIII, Benedict XI, and Clement himself. Clement promulgated it, together with the decrees of the Council of *Vienne (1311), on 21 Mar. 1314 at Monteux, nr. Carpentras. Its authority being uncertain owing to Clement's having died before its general acceptance, it was promulgated afresh by *John XXII on 25 Oct. 1317. It was the last item officially embodied in the '*Corpus Iuris Canonici'.

G. Mollat in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 635–40, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici, IV. Les Clémentines', with reff. to lists of editions and commentators and also bibl.

CLEOPAS. One of the two disciples to whom the risen Christ appeared on the road to *Emmaus on the day of the Resurrection, and made Himself known in the 'breaking of bread' (Lk. 24. 13–35). He is sometimes identified with the Clopas of Jn. 19. 25 (RV), the husband of a certain Mary, who, on the assumption that the Gk. Κλωπᾶς is the equivalent of the Aramaic חַלְפַּי (also 'Alphaeus'), has been identified with Mary, the mother of James (cf. Mk. 3. 18, 15. 40).

CLERICAL DISABILITIES ACT, 1870 (33 & 34 Vic. c. 91). The Act which allows a cleric of the C of E after resigning his preferments to execute a Deed of Relinquishment and thereby regain such civil rights as he has lost through being a clergyman (e.g. that of sitting in the House of Commons). By a Measure of the Church Assembly of 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. V, No. 1), a cleric who has availed himself of the Act may in certain circumstances resume his former status.

CLERICAL STATE, ADMISSION TO THE. In the RC Church the rite by which candidates for Holy *Orders are admitted to the clerical state and *incardinated into a diocese. It takes place either during Mass or in the course of some other service involving 'the proclamation of God's word'. After the homily, the candidates, who have previously made their petition in writing to the diocesan bishop, are called and presented to the bishop. He examines them and prays for them. After further prayers of intercession the service concludes with two collects and the episcopal blessing. The ceremony is completely separate from the conferring of Orders; it replaced the former rite of *tonsure in 1972.

CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION ACT (28 & 29 Vic. c. 122). The Act of 1865 amending the 36th *Canon of 1604 by changing the form of declaration made by Anglican clergymen at ordination and on accepting ecclesiastical preferment. The chief points of difference are that an Oath of Allegiance to the Sovereign is alone required, and the acknowledgement of the Royal Supremacy is no longer imposed; and that a (general) '*assent' is now demanded to the *Thirty-Nine Articles, instead of the obligation to 'acknowledge all and every [Article] to be agreeable to the Word of God'. The Act also provided that every beneficed clergyman, on taking up a new cure of souls, should, on the first Sunday, or on some other day appointed by the bishop, read the Articles to his congregation and make a formal assent to them and to the BCP. In 1975 the obligation to read the Articles was removed and the form of assent made less rigid.

CLERICALISM. A term, often used in an opprobrious sense, for an excessively professional attitude of outlook, conversation, or conduct on the part of clergymen, or for the imitation of a supposedly clerical manner by lay persons. It is also used to describe undue clerical influence in secular affairs. See also Anticlericalism.

CLERICIS LAICOS. The bull issued by *Boniface VIII on 25 Feb. 1296 to protect the clergy of England and France against the exactions of the secular power. It forbade any cleric to pay ecclesiastical revenues to laymen without the authority of the Roman see, and any layman, under threat of excommunication, to receive such payments. The vehemence of its language aroused fierce opposition on the part of Philip the Fair and Edward I, and considerably weakened its effectiveness.

Complete text in A. Thomas, M. Faucon, and G. Digard (edd.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII, i (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 1907), No. 1567, p. 584 f.; Operative part of text also in C. Mirbt, No. 369, p. 208 f.; Eng. tr. in Bettenson, pp. 157–9. S. Vigor, ed. by P. Dupuy, Histoire du différend entre le Pape Boniface VIII et Philippe le Bel roy de France (1655); J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'état au temps de Philippe le Bel (S.S.L., viii; 1926), esp. pp. 63–70. T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933), esp. ch. v, pp. 129–56. L. Santifaller, 'Zur Original-Überlieferung der Bulle Papst Bonifaz' VIII. "Clericis Laicos" von 1296 Februar 25' in Studia Gratiana, xi (1967), pp. 69–90.

CLERICUS. See Leclerc, Jean.

CLERK, Parish. See Parish Clerk.

CLERK IN HOLY ORDERS. A designation, chiefly legal and formal, for a bishop, priest, or deacon in the C of E, as contrasted with such clerks as 'Lay Clerks', 'Bible Clerks', &c., who execute minor ecclesiastical functions without ordination. Before the *Reformation, the word 'clerk' without qualification was applied to those in *Minor Orders, while the orders of bishop, priest, and deacon (and also the *subdiaconate from the 13th cent.) were specified as *Major, or Holy, Orders.

CLERK OF THE CLOSET. The cleric who presides over the Royal College of Chaplains. When a vacancy occurs in the list of chaplains, he is asked by the Master of the Household to suggest possible names to the Sovereign. Among his duties are the presentation of bishops to the Sovereign when they do homage after consecration, and the examination of theological books whose authors wish to present copies to the Sovereign.

CLERKS REGULAR. A term applied to certain bodies of RC clergy, bound under religious vows, who live in community and engage esp. in active pastoral work. Such Regular Clerks originated in the 16th cent. through the efforts of various bands of clerics to perfect their pastoral work by the stimulus of ordered discipline. The first communities were largely Italian, and met with striking success at a time when the waning prestige of the Church called for such intensified effort. They included the '*Theatines' (1524), the 'Clerks Regular of the Good Jesus' founded at *Ravenna (1526), and the '*Barnabites' established at Milan in 1532. The largest and most important member of the family is that of the *Jesuits or Society of Jesus (1534). Since the close of the 16th cent. there have been no official additions to the number of orders of regular clerks, but their name has been adopted by other religious congregations. The mode of life of regular clerks has greatly influenced the constitutions of various modern bodies, monastic and non-monastic, living under rule. They may be regarded as the modern counterpart of the *regular canons (q.v.).

CLERMONT (modern Clermont-Ferrand), Collège de, also known as the Collège Louis le Grand. The celebrated *Jesuit house at *Paris, at one time the property of G. du Prat, Bp. of Clermont (1529–60). Through the energies of J. *Sirmond and others, it acquired a celebrated collection of MSS. known to scholars as the 'Claromontani'. In 1764 the College was dissolved and the MSS. dispersed.

G. Dupont-Ferrier, Du collège de Clermont au collège Louis-le-Grand (3 vols., 1921–5). H. Fouqueray, S.J., Histoire de la compagnie de Jésus en France, i (1910), pp. 363–433.

CLERMONT, The Council of (1095). Summoned by *Urban II to plan the First *Crusade, it met at Clermont on 18 Nov. 1095. It was attended by over 200 bishops. It confirmed the '*Truce of God' and made other regulations for the conduct of the crusades. It issued 32 canons and decreed, inter alia, that the pilgrimage to *Jerusalem made every other penance superfluous (can. 2); that no one below the rank of subdeacon should be appointed to bishoprics (can. 5); that no fee should be exacted for burials (can. 8); that no king or prince should grant *investiture of ecclesiastical honours (can. 16); that no flesh meat should be eaten between *Ash Wednesday and *Easter (can. 23); that holy orders should be conferred only at the proper seasons (can. 24); and that communicants should receive in both kinds separately unless necessity require otherwise (can. 28). The primacy of the see of Lyons was also confirmed.

Hardouin, vi (pt. 2, 1714), cols. 1717–42; Mansi, xx (1725), cols. 815–920. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1: 1912), pp. 396–444. G. R. Crégut, Le Concile de Clermont en 1095 et la première croisade (1895). For further bibl. on Crusades see s.v.

CLETUS, St. See Anacletus, St.

CLIFFORD, JOHN (1836–1923), *Baptist leader. As a boy he worked in a lace factory. He experienced conversion in 1850 and was baptized in the following year. In 1858 he became the minister of the Baptist Church at Praed Street, Paddington, and when the congregation, attracted by his successful pastorate, grew too large, Westbourne Park Chapel was built for him (opened, 1877). In 1888 he became president of the Baptist Union. He was keenly interested in upholding the cause of working people and also led the movement for 'passive resistance' to A. J. *Balfour's Education Act of 1902, which he believed to be injurious to Nonconformist interests. His influence did much towards bringing about the defeat of the Unionists at the polls in 1906. He held several important offices in the Baptist Church, and from 1905 to 1911 was the first president of the Baptist World Alliance. Theologically he inclined towards a more liberal position than had been traditional in his own communion. His many writings exercised great influence on his generation.

Life and Letters of Dr. John Clifford, ed. J. Marchant (1924). G. W. Byrt, John Clifford (1947). J. H. Rushbrooke in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 188–90.

CLIMACUS, St. JOHN. See John Climacus, St.

CLINICI. See under Baptism (p. 127, col. 1).

CLITHEROW, St. MARGARET (c. 1556–86), the 'martyr of *York'. The daughter of a Sheriff of York, she was converted to the Roman obedience at the age of 18, and became an ardent friend of the persecuted RCs. In 1586 she was arrested and charged at the York Assizes with harbouring priests. To save her children from being forced to witness against her, she refused to plead, and was barbarously crushed to death. She was one of the *Forty Martyrs canonized by *Paul VI in 1970; feast day, previously 2 Apr. See also Forty Martyrs of England and Wales.

Life by John Mush, her confessor (first publd. London, 1849). Later studies by Laetitia S. Oliver (London, 1886) and Mary Claridge (ibid., 1966).

CLOISTER. An enclosed space which in the Middle Ages and in modern times has normally formed the central part of a monastery or other religious building. It consists of a garth or open plot surrounded on all four sides by broad covered alleys with roofs supported on their inner sides by arcades (orig. open but later often glazed) and on their outer sides by the walls of the church or other major building. The term is also used in general for a Religious House, or the Religious Life. See also Clausura.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Medieval England (1961), esp. pp. 28–31.

CLOSE, FRANCIS (1797–1882), Dean of *Carlisle. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Cambridge, and became incumbent of Cheltenham in 1826. His sermons, modelled on those of C. *Simeon, soon won him a large following, and made him one of the best known of Evangelical preachers. By his opposition to the theatre, horse racing, and esp. 'Sabbath-breaking', he exercised great influence on the public life of Cheltenham. At first a strong Churchman, he gradually reached a position strongly hostile to *Tractarianism and saw in 'Popery', whether Anglican or Roman, one of the chief dangers of the age. From 1856 to 1881 he was Dean of Carlisle. His long series of books (largely sermons) and tracts were of great influence in their day. The Dean Close School was founded at Cheltenham as a public school for boys in his memory.

Close publd. many of his sermons, incl. Miscellaneous Sermons, preached in the Parish Church of Cheltenham (2 vols., 1829–34) and Nine Sermons Illustrative of some of the Typical Persons in the Old Testament (1838). 'Contem Ignotus' [Richard Glover], The Golden Decade of a Favoured Town. Being Biographical Sketches and Personal Recollections of the Celebrated Characters who have been connected with Cheltenham from 1843 to 1853 (1884), pp. 10–69; Memorials of Dean Close, ed. by one who knew him (Carlisle, 1885). G. Berwick, 'Close of Cheltenham: Parish Pope' in Theology, xxxix (1939), pp. 193–201 and 276–85. G. C. Boase in D.N.B., xi (1887), p. 123 f.

CLOTILDE, St. (474–545), Frankish queen. By birth a Burgundian princess, she married *Clovis, King of the Salian Franks, in 492 or 493. She at once endeavoured to convert him to Christianity, and in 496, partly as a result of a great victory over the Alemanni, he and many of his followers were baptized by St. *Remigius, Bp. of Reims. After her husband's death in 511 her life was saddened by internecine struggles between her sons and the tragic fate of her daughter, and she retired to the abbey of St. *Martin at Tours, where her reputation for piety and good works continued undimmed. In later times the events of her life were much embroidered in the interests of epic. Feast day, 3 June.

Crit. ed. of a Life, prob. 10th cent., by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, ii (1888), pp. 349–51. G. Kurth, Sainte Clotilde ('Les Saints', Paris, 1897; Eng. tr., 1898). F. Oppenheimer, Frankish Themes and Problems (1952), pp. 17–63 ('The Place and Date of Clovis' Baptism'). G. Tessier, Le Baptême de Clovis (1964), with bibl. See also bibl. to Clovis.

CLOUD OF UNKNOWING, The. An English mystical treatise of the 14th cent. The work is unascribed in the MSS., and this anonymity, which may have been of set purpose, has caused much speculation about authorship. Although the possibility of Walter *Hilton's authorship has been much discussed, the work appears to have been written before Hilton and after Richard *Rolle. F. *Underhill believed the author to have been a contemplative monk, whereas Dom M. Noetinger and Dom J. McCann favour the view that he was a secular priest. Deeply influenced by the 'negative' mysticism of *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite, the author insists on the impossibility of knowing God by human reason. The 'cloud of unknowing' which lies between God and man is pierced not by the intellect, but only by 'a sharp dart of love'; therefore contemplative prayer takes place in the affective, not in the intellectual, part of the soul, and thus necessarily contains an element of ignorance. The treatise, which develops only certain aspects of mystic prayer, is not meant for beginners in the spiritual life, as the author explains in the 'Prologue', but only for those actually called to contemplation.

Crit. ed. of text with introd. and bibl. by Phyllis Hodgson (E.E.T.S. Orig. Series, ccxviii; 1944; reprinted with corrections and new bibl., 1958, pp. 1–133). Modernized edd. of the text. from an unknown MS. by H. Collins (London, 1871), and from a 15th cent. MS. by E. Underhill (London, 1912) and J. McCann, O.S.B. (ib., 1924), the latter with comm. by A. *Baker (1575–1641), pp. 287–405; completely modernized version (anon.), with introd. by H. H. Brinton (New York and London, 1948); also by Ira Progoff (London, 1959) and C. Wolters (Harmondsworth, 1961). Fr. tr. by M. Noetinger, O.S.B. (Tours, 1925), with introd. Greta Hort, Sense and Thought (1936).

CLOVESHO, Councils of. A series of synods representing both the Church and State of all England south of the Humber. Record survives of those which were held in 742, 747, 794, 798, 803, 824, and 825. Those of 747 and 803 are the most important. The former dealt with ecclesiastical discipline and liturgy, ordering in the latter strict adherence to the Roman Rite. The latter was the occasion of the abolition of the archiepiscopal status of *Lichfield, set up in 787, and the restoration of the Mercian sees to the province of *Canterbury. The site of Clovesho is unknown.

Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 805 f., 903–11, 1113, 1123, and iv (pt. 1; 1911), p. 38 f., with reff. (but there are no sufficient reasons for identifying Clovesho with Abingdon, Berks.). J. Warrilow in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 22–26, s.v.

CLOVIS (c. 466–511), King of the Franks. The son of Childeric I, he became King of the Salian Franks in 481 and forthwith began to expand his domain. He attacked and defeated the Roman general, Syagrius, at Soissons, and incorporated into his dominions much of Roman Gaul and other territories, including those of the Ripuarian Franks and the Thuringians. The decisive event in his career was his conversion to Catholic Christianity and baptism in 496 (see Clotilde). This step gave him an excuse to attack the *Arian King of the Visigoths, Alaric II, whose forces he overthrew at the battle of Vouillé in 507; and, further, it enabled him to consolidate his dominions, since he gained the aid of the Catholic bishops and Roman officials in governing the country. In 508 the E. Emp. Anastasius I conferred on him the title of 'Proconsul'. Ruthless and cruel, Clovis was a man of consummate ability, and his rule, particularly his codification of the Salic law and his endeavours to fuse the Romans and the Teutons, laid the foundations of the modern French nation.

G. Kurth, Clovis (Tours, 1896; ed. 3, 2 vols., Brussels, 1923) M.-M. Gorce, Clovis (Paris, 1935). A. van de Vyver, 'La Victoire contre les Alamans et la conversion de Clovis' in Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, xv (1936), pp. 859–914, and xvii (1937), pp. 35–94; id., 'Clovis et la politique méditerranéenne' in Études d'histoire dédiées à la mémoire de Henri Pirenne [ed. by F. L. Ganshof, E. Sabbe, and F. Vercauteren] (1937), pp. 367–87; id., 'La Chronologie du règne de Clovis d'après la légende et d'après l'histoire' in Le Moyen-Age, liii (1947), pp. 177–96. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Long Haired Kings and other Studies in Frankish History (1962), esp. pp. 163–85. G. Tessier, Le Baptême de Clovis (1964), with bibl.; id., 'La Conversion de Clovis et la christianisation des Francs' in Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, xiv (1967), pp. 149–89. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2037–2074, s.v. 'Clovis (Baptême et sépulture de)'. For other works on the Baptism, see also bibl. to Clotilde.

CLUNY, Order of. The influential monastery of Cluny, near Mâcon in Burgundy, was founded by William the Pious, Duke of Aquitaine, in 909. The high standard of monastic observance set by Berno of Baume, its first Abbot (909–27), was adopted before Berno's death in some five or six neighbouring monasteries. The real founder of Cluny's influence, however, was Berno's successor, St. *Odo (927–42), under whose encouragement many monasteries in the S. of France, and even some of the most important Italian houses (*Monte Cassino, Santa Maria on the Aventine, *Subiaco) reformed themselves after the Cluniac model. Under Odo's gifted successors Aymardus (942–8 [perh. 964]), Majolus (948 [perh. 964]–994) and St. *Odilo (994–1048; q.v.) an ever-growing number of houses, old and new, adopted the reform. Its objects included a return to the strict *Benedictine rule, esp. as expounded by St. *Benedict of Aniane, cultivation of the personal spiritual life, stress on the choir office (which tended to grow to excessive length) and the splendour and solemnity of worship generally, with a corresponding reduction in manual labour. Great attention was also paid to sound economic organization and the independence of lay financial control. It now seems clear that in the 10th cent. the Cluniac houses were not yet welded into a system, which only developed under Odilo.

Esp. in the 11th and 12th cents. Cluny exercised decisive influence on the life of the Church. Its leading figures came from noble families who increasingly enjoyed the confidence of sovereigns and popes. Their refusal of high ecclesiastical office (leading bishoprics, cardinalates) added to the respect accorded them. Their ideals were widely admired by the secular clergy and largely inspired the reforms (repression of simony, celibacy of clergy) of *Gregory VII. The new church at Cluny, of which *Urban II consecrated the high altar in person on 25 Oct. 1095 and Innocent II the whole church (except the *narthex) in 1131–2, was then the largest church in Europe (555 ft. long).

After Odilo's death the next abbots were *Hugh (1049–1109), Pontius (1109–22), and *Peter the Venerable (1122–56). In the middle of the 12th cent., when the influence of the Order reached its height, the number of Cluniac houses was well over 1,000. Then the centralization was such that the heads of the subject-houses were ordinarily priors, not abbots. In the later Middle Ages the influence of Cluny greatly declined, but the monastery survived until 1790. The Hôtel de Cluny in Paris (since 1833 a museum) was formerly the town-house of the Abbots of Cluny.

The first English Cluniac house was St. Pancras at Lewes, founded by William de Warenne in 1077.

Others soon followed at Wenlock (c. 1081), Bermondsey (c. 1085), Castle Acre (1089), and Thetford (1104), and, in Scotland, at Paisley (1163). By the middle of the 12th cent. their number had risen to thirty-six. As alien priories they were frequently sequestered by the Crown during the French Wars. In the later Middle Ages the control from Cluny was in fact slight. At the Dissolution there were eight greater and nearly thirty lesser Cluniac houses.

Statuts, chapitres généraux et visites de l'ordre de Cluny with preface and notes by G. Charvin, O.S.B., and full ref. to other collections of source material (1965 ff.). G. de Valous, Le Monachisme clunisien des origines au XVe siècle. Vie intérieure des monastères et organisation de l'ordre (Archives de la France monastique, xxxix–xl; 1935; ed. 2, 2 vols., 1970); id., Le Temporel et la situation financière des établissements de l'ordre de Cluny du XIIe au XIVe siècle, particulièrement dans les provinces françaises (ib., xli; 1935). G. F. Duckett, Charters and Records among the Archives of the ancient Abbey of Cluni (2 vols., 1888); E. Sackur, Die Cluniacenser (2 vols., 1892–4); L. M. Smith, The Early History of the Movement of Cluny (1925). K. Hallinger, O.S.B., Gorze-Kluny. Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter (2 vols., Studia Anselmiana, xxii–xxv; 1950–1951). J. Wollasch–H. E. Mager–A. Diener, Neue Forschungen über Cluny und die Cluniacenser, ed. G. Tellenbach (Freiburg, 1959). H. E. J. Cowdrey, The Cluniacs and the Gregorian Reform (Oxford, 1970). Joan Evans, Monastic Life at Cluny, 910–1157 (1931). Noreen Hunt, Cluny under St. Hugh, 1049–1109 (1967). K. J. Conant, Cluny. Les Églises et la Maison du Chef d'Ordre (Mâcon, 1968). J. Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Pour une histoire de la vie à Cluny' in R.H.E., lvii (1962), pp. 385–408, 783–812, with bibl. ref. A Cluny. Congrès scientifique, fêtes et cérémonies liturgiques en l'honneur des saints Abbés Odon et Odilon 9–11 juillet 1949. Travaux du congrès . . . publiés par la Société des Amis de Cluny (Dijon, 1950). L. H. Champly, Histoire de l'abbaye de Cluny (Mâcon, 1866; ed. 3 by R. Champly, 1930). Heimbucher, i (ed. 3, 1933), pp. 183–8. M. D. Knowles, The Monastic Order in England (1941), esp. chs. viii, xvi. G. de Valous in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 35–174, with extensive bibl.

C.M.S. The 'Church Missionary Society', originally called the 'Society for Missions in Africa and the East', was founded in 1799 with Thomas Scott (1747–1821), the author of a Biblical commentary in 174 parts, as its first secretary. Though later in date than the *S.P.C.K. and the *S.P.G., it became the first effective organ of the C of E for missions to the heathen. It pioneered missionary work in N.W. Canada, New Zealand, the Middle East, W. and E. Africa, Persia, many parts of India and Pakistan, Ceylon, S. China and Japan, and has sponsored innumerable Bible translations. In 1969 it had c. 900 missionaries in 69 dioceses overseas, supported by an annual income of over a million pounds. The C.M.S. of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa are associated but fully autonomous bodies. From its earliest days the Society's theology has been consistently *Evangelical. See also B.C.M.S.

E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society. Its Environment, its Men and its Work (3 vols., 1899; Supplementary vol. iv, 'The History of the Church Missionary Society', 1916). The Church Missionary Society. A Manual Outlining its History, Organization and Commitments (1961). C. Hole, The Early History of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East to the end of A.D. 1814 (1896). The Jubilee Volume of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East (1849); The Centenary Volume of the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East, 1799–1899 (1902); S. M. Johnson, A History of the Church Missionary Society in Australia and Tasmania (1925); F. E. Bland, How the Church Missionary Society Came to Ireland (1935). J. Pinnington, 'Church Principles in the Early Years of the Church Missionary Society: the Problem of the "German" Missionaries' in J.T.S., N.S., xx (1969), pp. 523–32. G. Hewitt, The Problems of Success. A History of the Church Missionary Society 1910–1942 (2 vols., 1971–7). The CMS News-Letter, monthly from December 1939. There is also a Register of Missionaries from 1804 to 1904, and Annual Reports of the Society from 1801.

COADJUTOR-BISHOP. A bishop appointed to assist a diocesan bishop in his duties, often with the right of succession to the see at the next vacancy. The practice of appointing coadjutor-bishops is much followed in the RC Church, but seldom in the Anglican Communion, except in certain dioceses outside England, and in the *Protestant Episcopal Church of America, where it is a common practice.

COAT OF CHRIST, The Holy. See Holy Coat.

COCCEIUS, JOHANNES (1603–69), Johann Koch, dogmatic theologian. A German by birth, he went in 1629 to study at Franeker, Holland, where he was appointed to the chair of Hebrew in 1636, and theological professor in 1643. In 1650 he moved to *Leyden. In his works, which were grounded in considerable knowledge of Oriental languages, he sought to expound dogmatic theology on a purely Biblical basis; but although professedly a *Calvinist, he objected both to the Calvinist spirit and to Calvinist 'orthodoxy'. He interpreted the relation between God and man in terms of a personal covenant and his system thus became known as Föderaltheologie. After his death his followers were openly accused of unorthodoxy, and there seems little doubt that his teaching was a factor leading to the later growth of *pietism. His most important treatise was his Summa doctrinae de Foedere et Testamento Dei (1648).

His collected works were ed., with a brief life, by his son, J. H. Cocceius (8 vols., Amsterdam, 1673–5). G. Schrenk, Gottesreich und Bund im älteren Protestantismus, vornehmlich bei Johannes Cocceius (1923). A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus in der reformierten Kirche, i (1880), pp. 130–52. E. F. K. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 186–94, s.v.

COCHLAEUS, JOHANNES (1479–1552), RC controversialist. His real name was Dobeneck. He went to *Cologne in 1504, where he developed a distaste for *Scholasticism and a strong sympathy for the *Platonist and humanist revival of the Renaissance. In 1521 and the following years he was engaged in writing against M. *Luther, but the bitter tone of his polemic gained little favour even from his own side. In 1526 he accepted a canonry at Mainz, c. 1534 at Meissen, and in 1539 at Breslau. He attended many of the conferences of the period, at which the points of difference between Catholics and Protestants were argued, but on these occasions his services were little used. His best-known works are Historiae Hussitarum Libri XII (1549) and Commentaria de Actis et Scriptis M. Lutheri, 1517–1546 (1549). In 1525 he had made every endeavour to prevent the printing of W. *Tyndale's English New Testament at Cologne.

Lives by C. Otto (Berlin, 1874), F. Gess (Diss., Leipzig, 1886), and M. Spahn (Berlin, 1898; the most substantial work). H. Jedin, Des Johannes Cochlaeus Streitschrift de libero arbitrio hominis (1525). Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der vortridentinischen katholischen Theologie (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, ix; 1927); A. Herte, Die Lutherkommentare des Johannes Cochläus (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Hft. xxxiii; 1935); id., Das katholische Lutherbild im Bann der Lutherkommentare des Cochläus (3 vols., Münster, 1943). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 123 f. (Nos. 2998–3033). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 194–200, s.v.

CO-CONSECRATOR. A bishop who assists the chief consecrator in the laying-on of hands at the making of a bishop. There should be at least two

(cf. Conc. *Nic. [325], can. 4), though in the West the absence of an assistant is not deemed to invalidate the consecration. It is also a widely held belief among dogmatic theologians that all who lay hands are consecrators, so that, even assuming some defect in the chief consecrator, the consecration might still be valid.

CODE OF HOLINESS, The. See Holiness, Code of.

CODEX ALEXANDRINUS ('A'). The early 5th cent. MS. of the Greek Bible which Cyril *Lucar, then Patr. of *Constantinople, offered to *James I (1603–25) through the British Ambassador, Sir Thomas Roe (d. 1644). The MS. did not reach England, however, until 1627. In 1757 it passed with the rest of the Royal Library to the newly founded British Museum, which is its present home. Its earlier history is obscure, but there are grounds for supposing that it came from Mt. *Athos and that it was perhaps written in Egypt. In the Gospels the Codex follows a predominantly *Lucianic text, with a number of *Western readings. With the possible exception of Pap. 47 it probably contains the best extant text of Rev. Besides the NT, it includes the two (so-called) Epp. of *Clement.

The Codex Alexandrinus was one of the earliest of the uncial MSS. to be made available to scholars. The first ed. of Clement was ed. from it by P. *Young (Oxford, 1633). It was used by B. *Walton in the Biblia Polyglotta (6 vols., London, 1657). The OT was ed. J. E. *Grabe (2 vols., Oxford, 1707–20) and by H. H. Baber (3 vols., London, 1816–21). NT ed. A. C. Woide (London, 1786). Photographic ed. by E. M. Thompson (4 vols. London, 1878–83), with introd. in vol. i, pp. 3–12; reduced photographic ed. by F. G. Kenyon, H. J. M. Milne, and T. C. Skeat (5 vols., London, 1909–57), with introd. prefixed to first vol. of NT, pp. 5–11). F. C. *Burkitt, 'Codex "Alexandrinus" ' in J.T.S., xi (1910), pp. 603–6. H. J. M. Milne–T. C. Skeat, The Codex Sinaiticus and the Codex Alexandrinus (1938), pp. 28–35. F. H. A. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, i (ed. 4 by E. Miller, 1894), pp. 97–105; F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895), pp. 128–32; revised by A. W. Adams (1958), pp. 120 f. and 189–202. J. F. Fenlon in C.E., iv (1908), p. 80 f., s.v.

CODEX AMIATINUS. The oldest extant MS. of the Latin *Vulgate and a primary witness to the text. It was one of three Bibles written at either Wearmouth or Jarrow under Abbot Ceolfrith between c. 690 and 700. It has been calculated that the three copies required the skins of some 1,550 calves. In 716 Ceolfrith set out with the codex for Rome, intending to present it to *Gregory II, but he died at Langres on the way. From the 9th or 10th cent. the MS. was in the monastery of Monte Amiata, hence its name. After the suppression of the monastery in 1782 it was transferred to the Laurentian Library at Florence. Fragments of one of the sister Bibles were discovered in 1909 and 1937 and are now in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 37777 and 45025 respectively).

The MS. was used for the revision of the Vulgate for the Sixtine ed., publd. Rome, 1590, and its readings are noted in the Vatican ed. of 1926 ff. For the NT F. F. Fleck noted its readings in his ed. of the Vulgate NT (Leipzig, 1840), and it is the basis of the ed. of J. *Wordsworth–H. J. White, &c. (3 vols., Oxford, 1889–1954). The complete text of the NT was publd. by C. *Tischendorf (Leipzig, 1850; reissued, 1854). There is no complete ed. of the OT, but much of it is pr. in T. Heyse–C. Tischendorf (edd.), Biblia Sacra Latina (Leipzig, 1873). G. B. *de Rossi, La Bibbia offerta da Ceolfrido abbate al sepolcro di S. Pietro (1888). P. Corssen, 'Die Bibeln des Cassiodorus und der Codex Amiatinus' in Jahrbücher für Protestantische Theologie, ix (1883), pp. 619–33. J. Wordsworth, 'The Date and History of the Great Latin Bible of Monte Amiata' in The Academy, xxxi (1887), pp. 111–13; other important correspondence on the subject by W. *Sanday, F. J. A. *Hort, H. J. White, J. Wordsworth, E. M. Thompson, P. Corssen, G. F. Browne and others in this and the two foll. vols. H. J. White, 'The Codex Amiatinus and its Birthplace' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, ii (Oxford, 1890), pp. 273–309. G. Schmid, 'Zur Geschichte des Codex Amiatinus' in Th.Q., lxxxix (1907), pp. 577–84; A. Mercati, 'Per la storia del Codice Amiatino' in Biblica, iii (1922), pp. 324–8. R. L. S. Bruce-Mitford, 'The Art of the Codex Amiatinus' in Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd Series, xxxii (1969), pp. 1–25. E. A. Lowe, English Uncial (Oxford, 1960), pp. 8–13, with plates viii–x. Id., Codices Latini Antiquiores, iii (ib., 1938), p. 8 (No. 299). J. F. Fenlon in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 80–3, s.v. See also bibl. to Vulgate.

CODEX BEZAE ('D'). This (prob. 5th cent.) Graeco-Latin MS. of the Gospels (in the order Mt., Jn., Lk., Mk.) and Acts, with a small fragment of the Latin of 3 John (11–15), was presented in 1581 to the University of Cambridge by T. *Beza. In 1546 the codex was taken by the Bp. of Clermont to the Council of *Trent and it was used by H. *Stephanus for his 'editio regia' of the NT published at Paris in 1550; but its earlier history is uncertain. Its bilingual character implies that it was written in a region where both Greek and Latin were in use (hence not in Egypt, as A. C. Clark contended), and thus probably in the W. Among the places suggested are Sicily (J. H. *Ropes), Lyons, N. Africa, and Sardinia. It is the principal representative of the *Western text (q.v.).

The text was first publd. by T. Kipling (2 vols., fol., Cambridge, 1793). Crit. ed., with introd. and notes, by F. H. A. *Scrivener (Cambridge, 1864). Photographic ed. in 2 vols., Cambridge, 1899. The readings of the Codex Bezae are noted by C. *Tischendorf in his edd. of the NT (Leipzig, 1841, etc.). J. R. *Harris, A Study of the Codex Bezae (Texts and Studies, ii, No. 1; Cambridge, 1891). F. H. Chase, The Old Syriac Elements in the Text of the Codex Bezae (1893). J. R. Harris, The Annotators of the Codex Bezae (1901). K. *Lake, 'On the Italian Origin of Codex Bezae. I, Codex Bezae and Codex 1071' in J.T.S., i (1900), pp. 441–5; F. E. *Brightman, part II, 'The Marginal Use of Lections', pp. 446–54; F. C. *Burkitt, 'The Date of Codex Bezae', ib., iii (1902), pp. 501–513; H. Quentin, O.S.B., 'Le Codex Bezae à Lyon au IXe siècle? Les citations du Nouveau Testament dans le martyrologe d'Adon' in R. Bén., xxiii (1906), pp. 1–25; E. A. Loew, 'The Codex Bezae' in J.T.S., xiv (1913), pp. 385–8; G. *Mercati, 'On the Non-Greek Origin of the Codex Bezae', ib., xv (1914), pp. 448–51; E. A. Lowe, 'The Codex Bezae and Lyons', ib., xxv (1924), pp. 270–4; F. C. Burkitt, 'Codex Bezae and the "Sortes Sangallenses" ', ib., xxviii (1927), p. 58 f. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, ii (Oxford, 1935), p. 7 (No. 140). R. C. Stone, The Language of the Latin Text of Codex Bezae (Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, xxx, Nos. 2–3; 1946). J. Mizzi, 'The Vulgate Text of the Supplemental Pages of Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis' in Sacris Erudiri, xiv (1963), pp. 149–63. E. J. Epps, The Theological Tendency of Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis in Acts (Cambridge, 1966). Y. D. Yoder, Concordance to the Distinctive Greek Text of Codex Bezae (New Testament Tools and Studies, ii; 1961).

CODEX CANONUM ECCLESIAE UNIVERSAE. A collection of *canons of certain of the early Greek councils. It was so named by C. Justel (1580–1649), who edited it in 1610, on the erroneous supposition that it received from the Council of *Chalcedon (451), and subsequently from the Emp. *Justinian (d. 565), official authority throughout E. and W. It contained the canons of *Nicaea, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Laodicea, *Constantinople, *Ephesus, and *Chalcedon in a continuous sequence (207 items), with a Latin translation. With the exception of the canons of Ephesus, the whole of the 'collection' was included by *Dionysius Exiguus in his 'Codex'.

F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande pp. (1870), xxix–xli.

CODEX EPHRAEMI ('C'). A 5th cent. Greek MS. of the Bible now at *Paris (Bibl. Nationale, Gr. 9). In the 12th cent. it was converted into a *palimpsest by a covering of some of the writings of St. *Ephraem Syrus. Only portions of the original MS. have survived, and the text is not always decipherable; but every book of the NT except 2 Thess. and 2 Jn. is represented to some extent. In the Gospels the text is fundamentally *Alexandrian, but it also contains a *Western element.

Text of NT (as much as could be deciphered) ed., with introd. by C. *Tischendorf, Leipzig, 1843; of OT, ib., 1845. F. H. A. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, i (ed. 4 by E. Miller, 1894), pp. 121–4; F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895), pp. 137–9; revised by A. W. Adams (1958), p. 206 f. J. F. Fenlon in C.E., iv (1908), p. 84 f., s.v.

CODEX FULDENSIS. The Latin MS. of the NT, written in 541–6 to the order of *Victor, Bp. of Capua. The four Gospels are arranged in a harmony, in the manner and order of *Tatian's '*Diatessaron', though the text has been revised to agree with that of the *Vulgate. The MS. at one stage belonged to St. *Boniface, and since his death (754) has been at *Fulda.

Text ed. E. Ranke (Marburg and Leipzig, 1868). H. J. Vogels, Beiträge zur Geschichte des Diatessaron im Abendland (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, viii, Hft. 1; 1919), pp. 1–34. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, viii (Oxford, 1959), p. 49 (No. 1196).

CODEX IURIS CANONICI ('CIC'). The code of *canon law in force in the RC Church at the present day. By the end of the 19th cent. the material of Roman canon law had become so unwieldy that in 1904 *Pius X appointed a commission under the direction of Cardinal Gasparri to collect and redact the canon law and produce a new codex. The result of their labours, a comparatively small volume divided into five books and 2414 canons, was promulgated by *Benedict XV on 27 May 1917, and came into force at *Pentecost in the following year. A commission, set up in 1963, is engaged in revising the Code. See also Canon Law; Corpus Iuris Canonici.

Among the many commentaries, those in English include Charles Augustine [Bachofen], O.S.B., A Commentary on the New Code of Canon Law (8 vols., St. Louis and London, 1918–1922); S. Woywood, A Practical Commentary on the Code of Canon Law (2 vols., New York, [c. 1925]; ed. 2, revised, 1926). H. A. Ayrinhac, General Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law. General Norms (Can. 1–86). Ecclesiastical Persons in General (Can. 87–214) (New York, 1923; London, 1930); id., Constitution of the Church in the New Code of Canon Law (Lib. II., Can. 215–486) (New York, 1925; London, 1929); id., Legislation on the Sacraments in the New Code of Canon Law (Lib. III., Can. 726–1011, 1144–53) (New York and London, 1928); id., Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law (New York, 1919; revised ed., New York and London, 1932); id., Administrative Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law (Lib. III., Can. 1154–1551) (New York and London, 1930). J. A. Abbo–J. D. Hannan, The Sacred Canons. A Concise Presentation of the Disciplinary Norms of the Church (2 vols., St. Louis, Mo., and London, 1952). A. Vetulani–R. Naz in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 908–40, s.v., with bibl. D. Staffa in E.C., iii (1949), cols. 1911–19, s.v., with further bibl.

CODEX SINAITICUS ('ℵ'). The celebrated MS. of the Greek Bible, discovered by C. *Tischendorf in the monastery of St. Catherine on Mount *Sinai. On a visit in 1844 he found some leaves of the OT books, but it was not until a later visit in 1859 that he saw the NT and recognized its great value. After many intricate but perfectly correct negotiations, he arranged that the MS. should be acquired by the Tsar of Russia, and it thus found its way into the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. The Soviet Government sold it in 1933 for £100,000 to the Trustees of the British Museum, where it now has the press-mark 'B. Mus. Addit. MS. 43725'. The British Government guaranteed half of the sum, while the rest was raised by public subscription.

Besides the OT, the MS. contains the whole of the NT as well as the 'Ep. of *Barnabas' and part of the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas. It is written in *uncials on vellum, four columns to a page, and in quires of eight leaves. Several hands (four acc. to C. Tischendorf and K. *Lake) took part in the original writing, and the text has been revised by a number of correctors. Tischendorf's theory that one of its scribes also wrote most of the NT of *Codex Vaticanus ('B') is no longer accepted. Most scholars, however, believe that, like the Vaticanus, it was written in Egypt, though there have been modern advocates of *Caesarea in Palestine, and also of Italy. Its date is probably the later 4th cent.

The NT text of the codex is closely allied to that of the Vaticanus, together with which it is the chief witness to the '*Neutral Text'. The MS. exercised a decisive influence on the text of the '*Revised Version' of the NT of 1881.

Text ed. C. Tischendorf (4 vols., St. Petersburg, 1862); two further fragments ed. id., Appendix Codicum Celeberrimorum Sinaitici Vaticani Alexandrini (Leipzig, 1867), pp. 3–6; additional fragment ed. H. B. Bey (Leipzig, 1875). Photographic ed. by Helen and K. Lake (2 vols., Oxford, 1911–22), with introd. by K. Lake. H. J. M. Milne–T. C. Skeat, Scribes and Correctors of the Codex Sinaiticus (1938). Idd., The Codex Sinaiticus and the Codex Alexandrinus (1938), pp. 5–27; The Mount Sinai Manuscript of the Bible (publd. by the Trustees of the British Museum, 1934). B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. *Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek. Introduction (1881), pp. 210–30 and 246–71; F. H. A. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, i (ed. 4 by E. Miller, 1894), pp. 90–7; F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895), pp. 121–8; revised by A. W. Adams (1958), pp. 119 f. and 191–8. J. F. Fenlon in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 84–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Neutral Text.

CODEX VATICANUS ('B'). The 4th cent. MS. of the Greek Bible, now in the *Vatican Library (Vat. gr. 1209), where its presence is vouched for, at any rate since the 1481 catalogue, which mentions it ('Biblia in tribus columnis ex membranis in rubeo'. This is probably the same item as the Biblia ex membranis in rubeo of the 1475 catalogue). Its earlier history is unknown. In the NT all after Heb. 9. 14 has been lost. The sheets are of a fine vellum, said to be antelopes' skins, each page being composed of three columns of over forty lines. The NT is the work of two hands, one of whom, however, wrote only the first few chapters of Mt. F. J. A. *Hort thought that the MS. was probably of Roman provenance; but today scholars incline to the opinion that it was written in *Alexandria. Its NT readings, together with those of the *Codex Sinaiticus, are the chief witness to the '*Neutral Text'.

The MS. was the basis of the Sixtine ed. of the *Septuagint publd. at Rome, 1587, and its successors. The complete text was ed. A. *Mai (5 vols., Rome, 1857); also ed., under the auspices of Pope *Pius IX, by C. Vercellone–J. Cozza (6 vols., Rome, 1869–81). The NT was also ed., after Mai, by C. *Tischendorf (Leipzig, 1867, with appendix, 1869). Photographic ed. by J. Cozza-Luzi (5 vols., Rome, 1889–90); also in 4 vols., ib., 1904–7. B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek. Introduction (1881), pp. 210–46 and 250–70; F. H. A. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduc- tion to the Criticism of the New Testament, i (ed. 4 by E. Miller, 1894), pp. 105–21; F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895), pp. 132–7; revised by A. W. Adams (1958), pp. 202–6. U. Benigni in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 86–8, s.v. See also works cited under Septuagint and bibl. to Neutral Text.

CODRINGTON, CHRISTOPHER (1668–1710), soldier, poet, and colonial administrator. In 1690 he became a probationer-fellow of All Souls, Oxford, and varied his life in Oxford with military expeditions to Flanders. In 1699 he was appointed to succeed his father as Captain-General of the Leeward Islands, but he resigned his post after the failure of an expedition against Guadeloupe in 1703, and lived in retirement in Barbados until his death, studying Church history and metaphysics. In his will he left £10,000 and a large library to All Souls, and also bequeathed two estates, with part of Barbuda, to found in Barbados a college of physic and divinity, where the members were to live under vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, and do missionary work in the West Indies. The provision for the threefold vow was disregarded, but Codrington Missionary Training College was built in 1714–42. From 1955 to 1969 it was run by the *Community of the Resurrection, which trained candidates for Ordination in the College.

V. T. Harlow, Christopher Codrington 1668–1710 (1928). N. Langley, Christopher Codrington and his College (1964). A. Dobson in D.N.B., xi (1887), p. 203 f.

COELESTIS URBS JERUSALEM. Breviary hymn for the office of the dedication of a church. See Urbs Beata Hierusalem.

COEMGEN, St. See Kevin, St.

COENACULUM. See Cenaculum.

COENOBITE (Gk. κοινόβιος, 'living in a community', from κοινός, 'common', and βίος, 'life' or 'way of life'). A religious in vows who lives in a community (as opposed to a *hermit). The word is also used in a technical sense of *anchorites who occupy separate dwellings and observe a rule of silence, but live otherwise as a community of *monks in a common enclosure. This latter way of life originated in the desert and is now followed in the W. chiefly in the *Carthusian Order.

COFFIN, CHARLES (1676–1749), hymn-writer. In 1712 he became principal of the Collège Dormans-Beauvais at Paris, and in 1718 rector of the University. In 1727 he published a collection of Latin hymns, many of which were adopted in the Paris Breviary of 1736. Several are well known in their English versions, e.g. 'On Jordan's banks the Baptist's cry', 'The Advent of our God', and 'O Holy Spirit, Lord of Grace'.

The majority of Coffin's hymns were publd. in his Hymni Sacri (Paris, 1736) and in the Hymnes du nouveau bréviaire de Paris (Paris, 1736, to which he was one of the contributors; this was ed. J. H. *Newman, Oxford, 1838). Collected ed. of his works publd. in 2 vols., Paris, 1755.

COGITO ERGO SUM (Lat., 'I think, therefore I am'). The primary datum of truth accepted by R. *Descartes in his method of doubt, on the ground that, however much a man doubted, he could never think away himself as the doubting subject.

COLBERTINE BREVIARY, The. A breviary compiled for the household of J. B. Colbert, Louis XIV's finance minister, and printed between 1675 and 1680. It had close affinities with the breviary of Cardinal F. de *Quiñones. It appears to have been the work of the Abbé J. Gallois (1632–1707).

Edited from the Brit. Mus. copy (C. 35. f. 21) by T. R. Gambier-Parry, H.B.S., 1912 (2 vols.; 1912, 1913).

COLENSO, JOHN WILLIAM (1814–83), Bp. of Natal. Born at St. Austell, Cornwall, he was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1837. In 1836 he became a mathematics master at Harrow, in 1842 returned to St. John's as a tutor, and in 1846 became vicar of Forncett St. Mary, Norfolk. In 1853 he was appointed the first Bishop of the newly constituted see of Natal, where he soon became keenly interested in the native problem and provoked criticism from the orthodox by his leniency in not insisting on the divorce of the wives of polygamists on their baptism. In 1861 he issued a Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans which by its denial of eternal punishment and rejection of much traditional sacramental theology aroused a storm of protest; still greater opposition was provoked by his papers on The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined (in parts, 1862–79), challenging the traditional authorship and historical accuracy of these Books; and in 1863 he was declared deposed by his Metropolitan, Robert *Gray of Cape Town (Bp. 1847–72). Colenso, however, denied the Bp. of Cape Town's jurisdiction. He appealed to the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which delivered sentence in his favour (20 Mar. 1865), on the ground that the Letters Patent appointing him preceded those appointing Gray. Hence, although solemnly excommunicated in 1866 by Gray, who in 1869 consecrated W. K. Macrorie (1831–1905) as Bp. of Maritzburg and Natal with a jurisdiction conterminous with that of Natal, Colenso maintained his position and by a series of judicial decisions secured the cathedral and endowments of the see. Though his attitude to the native question and some of his practical activities on their behalf (which were carried on after his death by his daughter Harriette, 1847–1932) continued to alienate many, esp. in Great Britain, he retained the affection of his diocese.

On his death his followers, styled 'the Church of England in Natal', applied to the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York for the consecration of a successor. In 1891 Macrorie resigned and after protracted negotiations all parties agreed that the Abp. of Canterbury should appoint a Bishop of Natal; and in 1893 the Archbishop consecrated A. H. Baynes (1854–1942). On his failure to reconcile the Church of St. Paul's, Durban, Baynes resigned (1901), though the Vestry agreed to reunion in the following year. The schism in Natal was formally ended in 1911, when the Bp. of Natal recovered the endowments of which Colenso had been registered proprietor.

Much relevant material in the correspondence of his wife, Frances Colenso, Colenso Letters from Natal arranged with comments by W. Rees (Pietermaritzburg, 1958). Life by G. W. Cox (2 vols., London, 1888). Shorter sketch by Florence Gregg (ib., 1892). Modern study by P. Hinchliff (ib., 1964). H. L. Clarke, Constitutional Government in the Dominions beyond the Seas and other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924), pp. 325–9; C. Lewis–G. E. Edwards (edd.), Historical Records of the Church of the Province of South Africa (1934), pp. 310–56. See also bibl. to South Africa, Christianity in.

COLERIDGE, JOHN TAYLOR (1790–1876), the biographer of J. *Keble. He was a nephew of S. T. *Coleridge. In 1809 he was elected a scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and from 1812 to 1818 was a Fellow of Exeter. After leaving Oxford he became a barrister of the Middle Temple. In 1832 he was appointed Recorder of *Exeter and from 1835 to 1858 was a Justice of the King's Bench. A keen Churchman, he published in 1869 his biography of J. Keble (d. 1866), whose lifelong friend he had been.

[B. J. S.] Coleridge, The Story of a Devonshire House (1905), esp. chs. x–xix.

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR (1772–1834), poet and thinker. He was born at Ottery St. Mary, Devonshire, where his father was vicar. He was educated at Christ's Hospital and Jesus College, Cambridge, but left the university in 1793, probably on account of debts and a love affair. After a short-lived attempt to join the 15th Dragoons, he returned to Cambridge for a time but took no degree. In 1795 he married Sarah Fricker, and in the same year made the acquaintance of W. *Wordsworth. After some unsuccessful publishing ventures he thought of taking up the career of a *Unitarian minister, with which sect he had come into contact at Cambridge, but gave up the plan when Josiah and Thomas Wedgwood settled an annuity on him. In 1798 he published, in conjunction with Wordsworth, the Lyrical Ballads, his most famous contribution being 'The Ancient Mariner'. In the same year he went to Germany to study the *Kantian philosophy. The chief fruit of the journey was his brilliant translation of F. Schiller's Wallenstein (1800). During the next years he wrote his last great poems, among them the second part of 'Christabel' (1800) and the 'Ode to Dejection' (1802). From that time his poetic powers declined, possibly under the influence of his growing addiction to opium. After travelling in Malta (1804) and Italy (1805–6), he lectured in London on Shakespeare and other poets with considerable success (1810–13), and in 1813 had his tragedy 'Remorse' produced at Drury Lane. In 1816 he made a partly successful effort at conquering the opium habit, and in the same year published a volume of poems containing 'Christabel', 'Kubla Khan', and 'Pains of Sleep'. Also in 1816 appeared his Lay Sermons and in 1817 Sibylline Leaves and Biographia Literaria. On the Constitution of Church and State (1830) and the popular Aids to Reflection (1825) are among his most important religious publications. They were followed by the posthumous Confessions of an Enquiring Spirit (1840).

Coleridge's religious development partly reflects the trends of his time. After the rationalistic influences of his school-days and the Unitarian leanings of his early manhood he came under the sway of the *pantheism of J. *Boehme and B. *Spinoza, which had been revived by J. W. Goethe and other German thinkers. It was so congenial to his nature that he never seems to have really abandoned it, even in his avowedly Christian period, dating from c. 1810. He preached the need of man for a spiritual interpretation of life and the universe against a fossilized Protestant orthodoxy as well as against the materialistic and rationalist trends of his time; but his thirst for freedom in every department of life frequently led him beyond the boundaries of the Christian Revelation. His denial of any inherent opposition between the development of modern science and the essence of Christianity showed an insight rare in his time; but he refused to admit metaphysical proofs of religious truth and only conceded the pragmatical test of its beneficent influence on human life. This conviction, that Christianity is primarily ethical, led him to believe in the possibility of a unification of Christendom on a wide basis of common tenets; it earned him the title of 'Father of the Broad Church Movement'.

Complete Works, ed. W. G. T. Shedd (7 vols., New York, 1853); modern ed. by Kathleen Coburn and others (16 vols., London–New York, 1969 ff.). The best edd. of his Poetical Works are those of J. D. Campbell (London and New York, 1893) and E. H. Coleridge (grandson, 2 vols., Oxford, 1912). Various hitherto unpubld. pieces ed. H. N. Coleridge, The Literary Remains of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (4 vols., 1836–8). Letters, ed. E. H. Coleridge (2 vols., London, 1895); Collected Letters, ed. E. L. Griggs (6 vols., Oxford, 1956–70); Notebooks, ed. Kathleen Coburn (ibid., 1957 ff.). The standard biography is the life by J. D. Campbell (London, 1894). Other lives and studies by J. Gillman (vol. i only publd., London, 1838), E. K. Chambers (Oxford, 1938), L. Hanson (on his early years, London, 1938), H. House (ib., 1953), M. Carpenter (ib., 1954), J. B. Beer (ib., 1959), J. Colmer (Oxford, 1959), and M. Suther (New York, 1960). R. W. Armour–R. F. Howes (edd.), Coleridge the Talker. A Series of Contemporary Descriptions and Comments (Ithaca, New York, and London, 1940). E. Blunden–E. L. Griggs (edd.), Coleridge. Studies by Several Hands on the Hundredth Anniversary of his Death (1934). J. Livingston Lowes, The Road to Xanadu (1927). A. Snyder, Coleridge on Logic and Learning (New Haven and London, 1929). E. Winkelmann, Coleridge und die Kantische Philosophie (Palaestra, clxxxiv; 1933). T. McFarland, Coleridge and the Pantheist Tradition (Oxford, 1969). C. R. Sanders, Coleridge and the Broad Church Movement (Durham, N.C., 1942), pp. 19–88; J. D. Boulger, Coleridge as Religious Thinker (New Haven, 1961); J. R. Barth, S.J., Coleridge and Christian Doctrine (Cambridge, Mass., 1969). J. L. Haney, A Bibliography of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (Philadelphia, 1903); T. J. Wise, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (London, 1913); id., Coleridgeana. Being a Supplement to the Bibliography of Coleridge (ib., 1919); Virginia W. Kennedy, Samuel Taylor Coleridge. A Selected Bibliography (Baltimore, 1935). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 302–16.

COLET, JOHN (1466?–1519), Dean of *St. Paul's. The son of Sir Henry Colet, who had been twice Lord Mayor of London, he studied probably at Magdalen College, *Oxford, and later in Paris and Italy, where he learned Greek. He returned c. 1497 to Oxford, where he delivered a series of lectures on St. Paul's Epistles, notable for their critical spirit and their plea for a return to the discipline of the primitive Church. From this time onwards he constantly inveighed against the worldliness of the higher clergy, pluralities, and non-residence, and, though he never challenged the traditional dogmas of the Church, he was frequently suspected of heresy. His opinions were very sympathetically received by his two famous friends, D. *Erasmus (to whom he later paid an annuity) and Sir Thomas *More. From 1504 till his death he was Dean of St. Paul's. On his father's death he received a large fortune, part of which he spent, in the face of opposition, in re-founding St. Paul's School, where 153 boys, without restriction of nationality, could gain the rudiments of education, be brought up in a sound Christian way, and learn Greek as well as Latin (first High Master of the School, William Lilly).

His Opus de Sacramentis Ecclesiae was ed. as 'A Treatise on the Sacraments of the Church' (1867), his Super Opera Dionysii as 'Two Treatises on the Hierarchies of Dionysius' (1869), his Enarratio in Epistolam S. Pauli ad Romanos as 'An Exposition on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans' (1873), his Enarratio in Primam Epistolam S. Pauli ad Corinthios as 'An Exposition on St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians' (1874), his Opuscula Quaedam Theologica as 'Letters to Radulphus on the Mosaic Account of the Creation, together with other Treatises' (1876), all ed. for the first time with Eng. tr., introd., and notes by J. H. Lupton. Ed. and Eng. tr. of his marginal commentary to the first edition of M. *Ficino's Epistolae (1495), letters and certain other material by S. Jayne (Oxford, 1963). J. H. Lupton (ed. and tr.), The Lives of Jehan Vitrier . . . and John Colet . . . written . . . by Erasmus in a Letter to Justus Jonas (1883). F. Seebohm, The Oxford Reformers of 1498 (1867). J. H. Lupton, A Life of John Colet (1887); id., The Influence of Dean Colet upon the Reformation of the English Church (1893). J. A. R. Marriott, The Life of John Colet (1933); E. W. Hunt, Dean Colet and his Theology (1956); L. Miles, John Colet and the Platonic Tradition (La Salle, Ill., 1961; London, 1962). B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 462–4. S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 321–8.

COLETTINES. A branch of the *Poor Clares founded by St. Colette (1381–1447), a native of *Corbie in Picardy who was canonized in 1807 (Feast day, 6 Mar.). She established seventeen convents in her lifetime. Today the Colettine Sisters are found mainly in France.

U. d'Alençon, O.M.Cap. (ed.), 'Documents sur la Réforme de Ste. Colette en France' in A.F.H., ii (1909), pp. 447–56, 600–612; iii (1910), pp. 82–97; id. (ed.), 'Lettres inédites de Guillaume de Casal à Sainte Colette de Corbie et notes pour la biographie de cette sainte' in Études Franciscaines, xix (1908), pp. 460–81, 668–91. J. [G. A.] Goulven, Rayonnement de Sainte Colette (1952), esp. pt. 2. Heimbucher, i. 823 f. S. Roisin in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 238–46, s.v. 'Colette de Corbie', with bibl.

COLIGNY, GASPARD DE (1519–72), *Huguenot leader. A member of one of the greatest families in France, he spent much of his life at court and in the service of the French Army. He was converted to *Calvinism in 1560, and after the death of the Prince de Condé in 1569 became the recognized leader of the Huguenot cause. His influence at court over the young King, Charles IX, led France to aid the Netherlands in their revolt against the Duke of Alva. The queen mother, *Catherine de' Medici, who was a keen Catholic and also jealous of Coligny's position, tried to have him assassinated on 22 Aug. 1572; and when that had failed, provoked the Massacre of St. *Bartholomew two days later, in which he was killed.

J. Delabore, Gaspard de Coligny, amiral de France (3 vols., 1879–82); A. W. Whitehead, Gaspard de Coligny, Admiral of France (1904); C. Merki, L'Amiral de Coligny, la maison de Châtillon et la révolte protestante, 1519–1572 (1909); J. A. G. Binet-Valmer, Un Grand Français. Coligny (1927). M. Prévost in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), col. 248 f., s.v. See also works cited s.v. Bartholomew, Massacre of St.

COLLATION. The word is used in several senses, secular and ecclesiastical. Among the latter are: (1) the light meal allowed on days of fasting in addition to the one full meal (the 'comestio'). Cf. CIC, 1251; (2) the lives of the *Fathers, esp. as arranged for reading in monasteries. This usage perhaps derives from the title of John *Cassian's 'Collationes Patrum', a record of his conversations with the hermits of the Egyptian deserts; and (3) *institution to an ecclesiastical benefice when the *ordinary is himself the patron (i.e. when presentation and institution are one and the same act).

COLLECT (Lat. oratio, also collecta). The short form of prayer, constructed (with many varieties of detail) from (1) an invocation, (2) a petition, and (3) a pleading of Christ's name or an ascription of glory to God; and one of the most characteristic items in the W. liturgy. The prayers later known as *Secrets and *Post-communions are structurally indistinguishable, though the term 'collect' is normally confined to the prayer (or prayers) in the Eucharistic rite which immediately precedes the lections. The writings of Pope *Leo I show that such prayers were familiar in the middle of the 5th cent. They are fully developed in the earliest Latin *Sacramentaries (*Leonine, *Gelasian, *Gregorian). They also secured an established place in the daily offices as well as in the Eucharist. Early collects were always directed to the Father; but since the Middle Ages collects addressed to the Son have been regularly admitted to the liturgy.

The term 'collect' (collecta) was orig. a title in the *Gallican rite. It denoted, as B. *Capelle (after *Walafrid Strabo) has shown, the 'collecting' of the petitions of the several members of the congregation into a single prayer (cf. Synod of *Agde, A.D. 506, can. 30). This sense of the word is thus not connected with the use of collecta for the assembly ('collection') of the congregation for worship, as has often been supposed.

Since the Middle Ages it has been the practice on certain days other than the Greater Feasts to recite more than one collect in the Liturgy. In the Latin rite the choice and number of the additional collects followed elaborate rules: e.g. when two feasts of not widely different rank occurred on the same day, the inferior feast was normally commemorated by a second collect, while on days of relatively less importance, there were usually three collects. The Secrets and Post-communions always corresponded in number and in general content with the collects. In the revisions of the liturgy after the Second *Vatican Council, however, all commemorations have been abolished.

The collects in the BCP mostly derive from the medieval sources, esp. the *Sarum Missal and Breviary. Several, however, were T. *Cranmer's original compositions (e.g. those for Advent I and II), while the wording of many which have a Latin basis was freely modified and adapted, to give a good English rhythm. In 1662 a few further collects were provided (e.g. those for Epiphany VI, for which the earlier forms of the BCP had made no provision, and Advent III). At Mattins and Evensong two unalterable collects are provided for recitation after the collect for the day daily throughout the year.

Jungmann (1949), i, pp. 445–81; Eng. tr. (1951), pp. 359–90 (full discussion with bibl. reff.). B. Capelle, O.S.B., 'Collecta' in R. Bén., xlii (1930), pp. 197–204, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, ii (1962), pp. 192–203; O. Casel, O.S.B., 'Beiträge zu römischen Orationen' in J.L.W., xi (1931), pp. 35–45; G. G. Willis, Further Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (Alcuin Club Collections, l; 1968), pp. 91–131 ('The Variable Prayers in the Roman Mass'), esp. pp. 91–121. B. Capelle, O.S.B., in R.A.C., i (1957), cols. 243–5, s.v. 'Collecta'.

COLLECTAR (Lat. Collectarium). A medieval liturgical book containing the collects used in the Divine *offices.

COLLEGIALISM. A term applied (prob. first by J. H. Boehmer of Halle, d. 1745) to the thesis esp. associated with H. *Grotius (1583–1645) and S. *Pufendorf (1632–94) that Church and State are both purely voluntary associations (collegia) in which supreme authority rests with the body of the members, and that the civil magistrate has no other relations with the Church than those which he enjoys with every other voluntary association within his territory.

COLLEGIALITY. A word used in a theological context to signify that bishops constitute a body, of which each is a part, and not a mere collection of individuals. The term collegium was applied to bishops corporately by *Cyprian (Ep. lxviii), and the idea was prominent in writings on the *conciliar theory. The Dogmatic Constitution Lumen Gentium of the Second *Vatican Council states that the bishops form an ordo analogous to the single apostolic college of *Peter and the other apostles. This ordo includes within it the Roman Pontiff, whose primacy, as the successor of St. Peter, remains intact.

J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., Études sur la collégialité épiscopale (1964).

COLLEGIANTS. An obscure offshoot of the *Remonstrants (q.v.), founded in *Holland c. 1619, and so called because they termed their communities 'colleges'. They were also known as 'Rynsburgers' from Rynsburg, near *Leyden, where they held their early meetings. They held that the Church was an invisible society and every externally constituted Church a corruption. Apart from the belief that Christ was the Messiah and the Bible inspired Scripture, they admitted no confession of faith or organized ministry. Their theology in general was very liberal and their ethics pietistic. *Baptism was generally administered by *immersion when each year the whole sect met at Rynsburg for prayer, study and a commemoration of the Last Supper. At the end of the 17th cent. they were influenced by the views of B. *Spinoza (who resided at Rynsburg 1661–4), over whose teaching there were divisions within the sect. The sect seems to have died out towards the end of the 18th cent., when most of its adherents were absorbed in the *Arminians or the *Mennonites.

J. C. Van Slee, De Rijnsburger Collegianten (1895). R. M. *Jones, Spiritual Reformers in the 16th and 17th Centuries (1914), pp. 113–32.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH. A church which is endowed for a body of canons and/or prebendaries (the 'chapter'), but is not, like a *cathedral, a bishop's see. Instances in the C of E are *Westminster Abbey and St. George's Chapel, *Windsor.

COLLIER, JEREMY (1650–1726), English *Nonjuror. In 1685 he was made lecturer of Gray's Inn. Having written in favour of *James II, after the Revolution he was kept at Newgate for some months (1689) without trial, and in 1692 was again imprisoned on suspicion of treason. In 1696 he was outlawed for giving absolution on the scaffold to two attempted assassins of William III, but returned to London in 1697. For some years he wrote frequent attacks on the stage of his day, denouncing its immorality, and thereby provoking angry replies from W. Congreve and others. In 1713 he was consecrated as a 'bishop of the Nonjurors', and joined in their attempt at reunion with the Orthodox Church. He was also largely responsible for the production of the Nonjurors' Communion Office of 1718. This rite, which in some matters followed that of 1549, influenced the Scottish Liturgies of 1764 and 1929. His many writings include An Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain (2 vols., fol., 1708–14).

Life by T. Lathbury in his ed. of An Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain, ix (1852), pp. i–xlviii. R. Anthony, S.C., The Jeremy Collier Stage Controversy, 1698–1726 (Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 1937); K. Ressler, 'Jeremy Collier's Essays' in Seventeenth Century Studies, ed. by R. Shafer, Second Series (Princeton, 1937), pp. 179–285. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 341–7.

COLLINS, ANTHONY (1676–1729), *Deist. He was a native of Heston, Greater London, and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. He subsequently lived in London until 1715, when he settled in Essex and became deputy-lieutenant. He was greatly influenced by J. *Locke, of whom he was an intimate friend, and his works are an epitome of English freethinking. In his first important publication, an Essay Concerning the Use of Reason (1707), he opposed the traditional distinction between things that are above and those that are against human reason. In Priestcraft in Perfection (1709) he tried to prove that the clause in Art. 20 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles on the power of the Church to decree rites and ceremonies and to decide religious controversies had been inserted by fraud. His principal work, A Discourse of Freethinking (1713), contains bitter attacks on the ministers of all denominations. It argued that free inquiry was the only means of attaining to the truth and was commanded by Scripture. The book, which was designed as a defence of Deism, was attacked by many Churchmen, among them R. *Bentley, B. *Hoadly, J. *Swift, and W. *Whiston. In 1715 he published his Inquiry Concerning Human Liberty, a concise and able statement of *Determinism, which was sharply attacked by S. *Clarke. In his Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion (1724) he denied that the OT contains prophecies of Christ. As he held fulfilled prophecies to be the only valid proof of the truth of Christianity, the book was intended as an implied rejection of it. He also denied the canonicity of the NT, as well as the immateriality and immortality of the soul.

Study by J. O'Higgins, S.J. (The Hague, 1970). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xi (1887), p. 363 f. See also Deism.

COLLOQUY OF MARBURG. See Marburg Colloquy of.

COLLUTHUS (4th cent.), schismatic priest of *Alexandria. During the episcopate of St. *Alexander (312–28) he assumed the power of conferring orders, though only a presbyter. In 324 he was deposed at the Council convened at Alexandria by *Hosius to deal with the *Arian issue (though Colluthus himself does not seem to have supported Arius). Nothing is known of his subsequent history. Some scholars have found in his career support for the view that in its early days ordination in the Alexandrian Church was conferred by presbyters.

The authorities include *Athanasius, Apol. c. Arianos, 12 and 75; *Epiphanius, Haer., lxix. 2; *Theodoret, H.E., i. 8; and *Augustine, Haer., lxv. Brief art. by G. *Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 596, s.v.

COLLYRIDIANS. A 4th cent. sect, mentioned by St. *Epiphanius (Haer. 79). Acc. to him it originated in Thrace and consisted mostly of women, who offered an idolatrous cult to the BVM. They sacrificed cakes (κολλυρίς, hence the name) to her, which they afterwards consumed. The custom may have originated in connexion with the popularization of the title '*Theotokos', and been influenced by the pagan habit of offering cakes to the goddess Ceres.

Brief notice by G. Bareille in D.T.C., iii (1908), col. 369 f., s.v.

COLMAN, St. (d. 676), leader of the *Celtic party in Northumbria. A native of Ireland, he became a monk of *Iona, and later (661) succeeded St. *Finan as Bp. of *Lindisfarne. Here he supported the king, Oswy, in maintaining Celtic customs against the Romanizing party in the court, headed by Eanfleda, Oswy's Kentish queen. To settle the quarrel, Oswy summoned the Synod of *Whitby in 664, at which Colman pleaded for the retention of such customs as the Celtic time of keeping Easter and the Celtic tonsure and appealed to the authority of St. *Columba. St. *Wilfrid, however, who claimed for the Roman practices the authority of St. Peter, finally won the king over to his side. Colman then left Lindisfarne and passed the rest of his life at the monastery of Innisboffin, Co. Mayo. Feast day, 18 Feb.

The primary authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 25 f., and iv. 4; notes ad loc.,-ed. C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 188–94 and 210. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xi (1887), p. 389 f.

COLOGNE. The see was founded in or before the reign of *Constantine (d. 337), and the city occupied by the Franks at intervals from 330 onwards. In the 11th–12th cents. the Abps. of Cologne became important secular princes and later (1356) were recognized as imperial electors. The see remained politically important until 1801, when its property was secularized, though the archbishopric was restored in 1821. The present cathedral dates from the 13th–15th and the 19th cents., and contains the shrine of the *Magi. Among other famous churches of the town are St. Maria in Kapitol and St. Gereon's, both built in the 11th cent. (both badly damaged in the Second World War; since largely restored).

There is an exceptionally large literature on the subject in its many aspects—topography, archbishopric, cathedral, churches, university, and schools. Modern works on the archbishopric include R. Knipping and others (ed.), Die Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Köln im Mittelalter (Publikationen der Gesellschaft für Rheinische Geschichtskunde, xxi; 4 vols., Bonn, 1901–61); W. Neuss (ed.), Geschichte des Erzbistums Köln (1964 ff.). R. Haass–J. Hoster (edd.), Zur Geschichte und Kunst im Erzbistum Köln. Festschrift für Wilhelm Neuss (Studien zur Kölner Kirchengeschichte, v; Düsseldorf, 1960), and other vols. in this series (1952 ff.). A. Franzen in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 275–311, s.v.; R. Haass and others in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 383–94, s.v. 'Köln', with bibl.; R. Lill in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 1013–18, s.v.

COLOMBINI, Bl. GIOVANNI (c. 1300–67), founder of the *Gesuati. He belonged to an old patrician family of Siena. He was converted by reading the Life of St. *Mary of Egypt, and from that time devoted himself to the service of the poor and the sick, many of whom he received into his house. After eight years of this life he persuaded his wife to accept a separation, settled an annuity on her, distributed the rest of his property to several religious institutions, and, together with his friend Francisco Mini, led a life of evangelical poverty, prayer, and works of mercy. When his example was imitated by many young men from noble Sienese families, the authorities of the city exiled him. With 25 followers he visited several Italian towns, and by his preaching and example effected a great number of conversions. When soon afterwards an epidemic broke out in Siena, it was regarded as a punishment, and Colombini was called back. In 1367 he and his disciples were formally constituted by *Urban V into the congregation of the Gesuati, and he died shortly after. He was beatified by *Gregory XIII. Feast day, 31 July.

Letters ed. A. Bartoli (Lucca, 1856). Short life by Bl. John Tossigna (d. 1446), printed by J. D. *Mansi (ed.), Stephani Baluzii . . . Miscellanea, iv (Lucca, 1764), pp. 566–71. Life by F. Belcari (Florence, [c. 1480]), ed. R. Chiarini (Arezzo, 1904); Eng. tr. from edd. of 1541 and 1832 (London, 1874). Life by J. B. Rossi, S.J. (Rome, 1646), pr. in AA.SS., July VII (1731), pp. 354–98. Modern life by the Comtesse de Rambuteau (ed. 3, Paris, 1893). G. Pardi, 'Della vita e degli scritti di Giovanni Colombini da Siena' in Bullettino Senese di Storia Patria, ii (1895), pp. 1–50 and 202–30, with docc.; id., 'Il Beato Colombini da Siena' in Nuova Rivista Storica, xi (1927), pp. 287–336.

COLONIAL AND CONTINENTAL CHURCH SOCIETY. See C.C.C.S.

COLONIAL CLERGY ACT. The Act of 1874 (37 & 38 Vic. c. 77) which regulated the conditions under which those ordained to the Anglican ministry in the British colonies could receive preferment or officiate in public in Great Britain. The written permission of the archbishop of the English province and a Declaration of *Assent in terms similar to that provided for in the *Clerical Subscription Act of 1865 were required. It was superseded by the *Overseas and Other Clergy (Ministry and Ordination) Measure of 1967.

COLONNA FAMILY. A distinguished Roman family which has played a considerable part in Papal and European politics, esp. between the 12th and 18th cents. The Colonnas were vassals of the Pope, but their political leanings in the Middle Ages were mostly Ghibelline and pro-Imperial. They were the hereditary adversaries of the Orsini family. The Colonnas gave a number of cardinals to the Church, the first being the Benedictine monk, Giovanni Colonna (d. 1216), who was created cardinal in 1193 by Pope *Celestine III. A protector of the *Franciscan Order, he was praised for his virtues by St. *Bonaventure. His nephew, also called Giovanni (d. 1244), was made cardinal in 1212. He took part in the conquest of Damietta (1219) during the Fifth Crusade, and later assisted the Emp. *Frederick II against the Pope. His nephew Giacomo (d. 1318) was created cardinal in 1278 by Nicholas III, of the house of Orsini, who hoped by this step to reconcile the two hostile families. Together with his nephew Pietro he bitterly opposed *Boniface VIII, who in 1297 deprived both cardinals of their dignity, excommunicated the whole family, and seized their property. They were reinstated by *Clement V in 1305. The family, which continued to be given cardinalates by the Popes in the 14th cent., received fresh distinction through the election of one of its members, Oddo, to the Papacy (1417), who, as *Martin V, ended the W. schism in 1429. After continued strife with the Orsini in the latter half of the 15th cent., a reconciliation was effected in the 16th, for the perpetuation of which *Sixtus V arranged a marriage between the two houses. The most famous woman of the family was Vittoria Colonna (1490–1547); remarkable alike for her literary talents and for her gift of attracting the finest spirits of her time, among them esp. *Michelangelo. She was deeply interested in the reform of the Church, and probably at one time leant towards the Reformation, but her connexion with Card. R. *Pole kept her faithful to the Catholic Church. Among the later members of the family were Marc Antonio (d. 1584), who took part in the victory of *Lepanto (1571), and his learned namesake (d. 1597), who was appointed head of the Commission of the *Vulgate by Sixtus V and librarian of the Vatican by *Clement VIII.

P. Colonna, I Colonna dalle origini all'inizio del secolo XIX (1927); P. Paschini, I Colonna (Rome, 1955). 29 members of the family are treated by G. Mollat and others in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 328–40, s.v.

COLOPHON. The paragraph often found at the end of MSS. and early printed books giving information about authorship, title, printer, place of printing, date, and sometimes (in the case of MSS.) the scribe himself. The use of the colophon tended to decline when many of these particulars were transferred to the title page. The word used in this special sense does not seem to be earlier than 1749.

A. W. Pollard, An Essay on Colophons (Chicago, 1905), with introd. by R. Garnett.

COLOSSEUM, The. The name by which the 'Flavian Amphitheatre' at *Rome has been known since about the 8th cent. The largest arena in the world, it was completed by Titus c. 80, and has long been venerated as the scene of many martyrdoms in the early Church, though the truth of this tradition has been questioned by modern scholars, notably H. *Delehaye. Its present imperfect state is due partly to destruction by earthquakes and partly to its use as a quarry for stone until *Benedict XIV forbade its further demolition. The Cross erected in the centre of the arena in the 18th cent. was removed in 1874, but replaced in 1927. Elaborate excavations were begun in 1938.

F. Guadet, Étude sur la construction et la déposition du Colossée, amphithéâtre flavien (1878); H. Babucke, Geschichte des Kolosseums (1899). H. Delehaye, 'L'Amphithéâtre flavien et ses environs dans les textes hagiographiques' in Anal. Boll., xvi (1897), pp. 209–52. S. B. Platner, A Topographical Dictionary of Ancient Rome (ed. by T. Ashby, 1929), pp. 6–11, incl. further general reff.

COLOSSIANS, Epistle to the. St. *Paul wrote this epistle, like Phil., when he was in prison, probably at *Rome, but possibly at *Ephesus. The Church at Colossae, a city on the Lycus (Churuk Su), had been founded not by St. Paul in person, but by Epaphras (1. 7), apparently when St. Paul was working at Ephesus. The primary purpose of the epistle is to recall its readers to faith in Christ as their all-sufficient Redeemer and Lord. After a solemn statement of Christ's position in relation to God, creation, and the Church (1. 3 ff.), a warning is given against a certain 'philosophy' which was making converts at Colossae (2. 1 ff.). In the course of the epistle St. Paul refers to certain features of the Hellenistic and Judaic religion of the period, e.g. the 'rudiments' or 'elements' (τὰ στοιχεῖα) of the world, angelic mediators, lawkeeping, and asceticism, which later filled a prominent place in *Gnosticism. The epistle has important passages dealing with the Person of Christ (1. 15), the redeemed life (3. 1 ff.), and Christian morals (3. 5–4. 6). There are many close verbal parallels with the Ep. to the *Ephesians (q.v.).

Modern commentaries by J. B. *Lightfoot (London, 1875; with Philemon), T. K. Abbott (I.C.C., 1897; with Eph.), M. *Dibelius (Hb.N.T., 1911; ed. 2, 1927; with Philemon), J. Knabenbauer (in Lat., Paris, 1912), E. Lohmeyer (H. A. W. Meyer Comm., 1930; with Philemon), E. F. Scott (Moff. Comm., 1930; with Philemon and Eph.), L. B. Radford (West. Comm., 1931; with Philemon), C. Masson (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, x, 1950; with Phil.), C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge Greek Testament Comm., 1957; with Philemon), and G. Johnston (New Cent. Bib., 1967; with Eph., Phil., and Philemon). E. Percy, Die Probleme der Kolosser- und Epheserbriefe (Acta Reg. Soc. Human. Litt. Lundensis, xxxix; Lund, 1946). H. J. Gabathuler, Jesus Christus. Haupt der Kirche — Haupt der Welt. Der Christushymnus Colosser 1, 15–20 in der theologischen Forschung der letzten 130 Jahre (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xlv; 1965). On the heresies condemned in the Epistle, cf. also F. J. A. *Hort, Judaistic Christianity (1894), pp. 116–29. McNeile, pp. 158–64. J. O. F. Murray in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 454–6; P. Benoit, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 157–70, s.v. 'Paul, Colossiens (Épitre aux)', with bibl. See also bibl. to Ephesians, Epistle to the.

COLOURS, Liturgical. A sequence of colours at different seasons of the ecclesiastical year for vestments and other liturgical objects is first found in the use of the *Augustinian Canons at *Jerusalem at the beginning of the 12th cent. They are mentioned by Pope *Innocent III in his De Sacro Altaris Mysterio. But it is not until much more recent times that a standard sequence in general use in the W. Church became established. The colours prescribed by the modern Roman service books are five—white (albus), red (rubeus), green (viridis), purple (violaceus), and black (niger). White is used e.g. on *Trinity Sunday, on the Feasts of Christ (so far as they are not memorials of His Passion) and of the BVM, on *Corpus Christi, and on the feasts of virgins and confessors; red, e.g. at *Whitsun and on the feasts of apostles (except St. John) and of martyrs, and since 1970 also on *Palm Sunday and *Good Friday; green on the Sundays and *ferial days between the *Epiphany and *Lent and between Trinity Sunday and *Advent, both exclusive; purple, e.g. in Lent and Advent, and sometimes for funerals; and black in Masses and offices of the dead (also, until 1969, on Good Friday). Rose pink may be used on *Gaudete and *Laetare Sundays. In the *Sarum use, red was commonly used on the days for which the Roman books prescribe green, and in a few Anglican churches the Sarum sequence has been introduced in recent times, though the Roman sequence is that usually followed. It has recently been permitted in the RC Church to use the best vestments, of whatever colour, on more important feast days. Of the Eucharistic vestments, the *stole and *chasuble are usually of the appropriate colour, as are also the *chalice veil and *burse, and the *altar hangings. In the E. Church there are no definite rules about colours, though there is a natural tendency to use more sombre colours at penitential seasons, while white is used at all services, including funerals, from Easter to Ascensiontide.

J. W. Legg, Notes on the History of the Liturgical Colours (1882); W. St. J. Hope–E. G. C. F. Atchley, English Liturgical Colours (1918). Braun, L.G., pp. 728–60.

COLUMBA, St. (c. 521–97), abbot and missionary. He came of a noble Irish family, and after being trained in Irish monasteries by St. *Finnian and others, himself founded several churches and monasteries in his country. About 563, impelled by missionary zeal, he left his home and established himself with twelve companions on the island of *Iona. There he lived for thirty-four years evangelizing the mainland and establishing monasteries in the neighbouring islands. Although only in priest's orders, he was the chief ecclesiastical authority of the whole of this district. He succeeded in converting Brude, king of the Picts, and in 574 the new king of the Scots of Dal Riada came to Iona to receive his sacring at Columba's hands. Feast day, 9 June.

Crit. ed. of the 'Altus Prosator', the best known of the poems attributed to St. Columba, by C. Blume in A.H.M.A., li (1908), pp. 275–83: other hymns, pp. 283–8 and 325 f. For lit. on St. Columba's authorship of various other works, see Kenney, infra. The principal source for his life is the work of St. *Adamnan (q.v.); modern ed. by W. Reeves (Irish Archaeological and Celtic Society; Dublin, 1857); also ed. J. T. Fowler (Oxford, 1894), with introd.; Eng. tr. by id. (London, 1895); ed., with Eng. tr., by A. O. Anderson and Marjorie O. Anderson (ib., 1961). Two further lives, with introd., are pr. in AA.SS., Jun. II (1698), pp. 180–97 (the life by Adamnan also here, pp. 197–230). The best modern study is that of W. D. Simpson, The Historical Saint Columba (Aberdeen, 1927): but cf. P. Grosjean, S.J., in Anal. Boll., liv (1936), pp. 408–12. Other lives by J. Smith (Edinburgh, 1798), E. A. Cooke (London, 1888), Lucy Menzies (London, 1920), and T. H. Walker (Paisley, 1923). J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (Records of Civilization, New York, 1929), pp. 263–5 (on the works attributed to St. Columba) and 422–42 (on the lives, legends, and form of his name). C. Hole in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 602–5, s.v.; N. Moore in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 409–13; F. O. Brian in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 342–5, s.v. See also bibl. to Adamnan.

COLUMBANUS, St. (c. 543–615), abbot and missionary. A native of Ireland, he went by way of England to Gaul c. 590, where he set up monasteries with very strict rules at Annegray and *Luxeuil, in the wilderness of the Vosges. He aroused much opposition by his introduction of the usages of the *Celtic Church, but vigorously defended their continuance, both at *Rome and before a Gallican synod (603). His monks, after expulsion from Burgundy in 610 for their outspoken rebukes of the royal court, began missionary work at Bregenz on Lake Constance among the heathen Alemanni; but they were driven out from their new quarters in 612 by an extension of the dominions of the King of Burgundy. They then settled at *Bobbio in N. Italy, where their house later became a great centre of learning. Both the 'Monastic Rule' and the 'Penitential' have now been shown to be substantially his work. Feast day, 23 Nov. See also Luxeuil.

Crit. ed. of his Opera, by G. M. S. Walker (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, ii; Dublin, 1957), with bibl. to date; cf. A. Mundó, O.S.B., in Scriptorium, xii (1958), pp. 289–93. Penitential ed. Jean Laporte, O.S.B. (Monumenta Christiana Selecta, iv; Tournai, 1961). Life by Jonas of Susa and other material ed. B. Krusch in MGH., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iv (1902), pp. 1–156, and vii, pt. 2 (1920), pp. 822–7; also pr. in Ionae Vitae Sanctorum Columbani, Vedastis, Iohannis (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1905), pp. 1–294. Eng. tr. by D. C. Munro (Translations and Reprints from the Original Sources of European History, No. 7; Philadelphia, 1895). 'Miracula Sancti Columbani', ed. by H. Bresslau in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxx, pt. 2 (1934), pp. 993–1015. Full bibl. details of sources in J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (New York, 1929), pp. 186–205. J. J. Laux, Der hl. Kolumban, sein Leben und seine Schriften (1919); Marguerite M. Dubois, Un Pionnier de la civilisation occidentale (1950; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1961); F. Macmanus, Saint Columban (New York, 1962; London, 1963). San Colombano e la sua opera in Italia (Convegna Storico Colombaniano, Bobbio, 1–2 settembre 1951; Bobbio, 1953); A. Maestri, Il culto di San Colombano in Italia (Piacenza, 1955). L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Les Saints irlandais hors d'Irlande (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., fasc. 16, 1936), pp. 51–62. G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Le Liber S. Columbani et le MS. Ambros. C 301 Inf.' in R. Bén., xxxviii (1926), pp. 164–77. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 413–16

COLVILL, JOHN. See Covel, John.

COMBEFIS, FRANÇOIS (1605–79), *Patristic scholar. A native of Aquitaine, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1624. He published first editions of the Greek text of several of the Fathers, among them *Amphilochius of Iconium, *Methodius of Olympus, and *Andrew of Crete (all in one vol., 1644), and also an excellent edition of *Maximus the Confessor (1675). He also produced an edition (1679) of St. *Basil the Great, though this has since been superseded by the still better *Maurist edition (1721–30).

Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 678–87, incl. list of his works. R. Coulon in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 385–7, s.v.

COMBER, THOMAS (1645–99), Dean of *Durham from 1691. He was the author of A Companion to the Temple and Closet; or a Help to Publick and Private Devotion, in an Essay upon the Daily Offices of the Church (1672–6), written with the intention of reconciling Protestant dissenters to the services of the C of E. Comber strongly resisted *James II's attempts to fill Anglican benefices with RCs, and unreservedly welcomed William and Mary.

C. E. Whiting (ed.), The Autobiographies and Letters of Thomas Comber (Surtees Society, clvi–clvii, for 1941–2; 1946–1947), incl. list of MS. sources for life.

COMENIUS, JOHANNES AMOS (1592–1670), Bohemian educationist. He belonged to the *Bohemian Brethren (Moravian), and studied theology at the *Calvinist universities of Herborn and Heidelberg, where he came under the influence of *millenarianism. From 1618 to 1621 he was a Moravian minister at Fulneck, and later at Lissa in Poland where he wrote his most important educational works, Didactica Magna (published 1657) among them. From 1641 onwards he travelled in England, Sweden, and Germany, collecting material for further educational writings. He returned to Lissa in 1648 and became first senior of the Brethren; and from 1650 to 1654 he lived in Hungary, where he founded a school on his principles at Sáros-Patak. After Lissa had been destroyed by the Poles in 1656, Comenius found a refuge in Holland, where he finished his last work, the Unum Necessarium, in 1668.

His educational ideals were deeply influenced by his personal religious experience. Hoping for a Utopian Church which would unite all religions in Christian love, the 'unum necessarium', he regarded education as the surest way to its fulfilment. In numerous schools men were to be formed into images of Christ by means of the 'pansophia', i.e. an organic development of all elements of Divine wisdom. The methods he advocated were far in advance of the ordinary practice of his time. Coercion was to be avoided; the senses were to be employed wherever possible; and everything to be learnt was first to be properly understood. Not much learning, but the development of the character on Christian lines, was to be the ultimate aim. His ideas had a considerable influence in the 19th cent. In 1890 a 'Comenius Society' was founded for their further propagation.

Facsimile reissue of the 1631 ed. of his Sapientiae Primae Usus Tertium Catholicum Appelandus (Prague, 1922). Modern Eng. trr. of Didactica Magna (London, 1896; ed. 2 with additions, 1910), Labiryntˇ Swěta a Lusthauz Srdce. to Gest ('The Labyrinth of the World and the Paradise of the Heart', London, 1901), Via Lucis (London, 1938), Angelus Pacis (New York [1944]), and Didacta Analytica (Chicago, 1953). There is also an ed. in Latin, Czech, French, English, and German of the Angelus Pacis (n.p., 1927). Studies on his educational significance by S. S. Laurie (1881), W. S. Monroe (London, 1900), A. Heyberger (Travaux publiés par l'Institut d'Études Slaves, viii; Paris, 1928), M. W. Keatinge (New York–London, 1931), and J. E. Sadler (London, 1966). J. F. Young, Comenius in England (1932); J. Needham (ed.), The Teacher of Nations (1942), incl. bibl.; M. Spinka, John Amos Comenius. That Incomparable Moravian (Chicago, 1943); J. V. Klima (ed.), Jan Amos Komenský (Prague, 1947); W. Rood, Comenius and the Low Countries (Amsterdam, 1970). Comenius und die böhmischen Brüder (Selections and Introd. by F. Eckstein, Leipzig, [1922]).

COMES (Lat. Liber Comitis, Liber Comicus), a book containing the passages to be read at *Mass as *Epistles, or as *Gospels, or as both. Originally it was merely a list of the opening words of the lections, i.e. a reference book, but the name 'liber comicus' came later to be applied to books with their complete text. In this connexion the word 'comes' originally meant a book of texts to serve as a 'companion', i.e. a 'vade-mecum'.

W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, iii, The Roman Epistle-Lectionary (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxxii; 1935), esp. pp. 1–25 (text of 'Liber Comitis' from Corbie lectionary at Leningrad) and pp. 45 f., 49–61, and 73–84. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1, 1930), cols. 220–243, s.v. 'Liber Comicus'; G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., iv (1950), col. 44 f., s.v.

COMFORTABLE WORDS, The. Four passages from the NT (Mt. 11. 28, Jn. 3. 16, 1 Tim. 1. 15, 1 Jn. 2. 1 f.) recited by the celebrant at the Holy Communion in the C of E after the Absolution of the people, to confirm the pardon just given. They are based on Abp. *Hermann's 'Consultatio' (1543), where (with the exception of the first, which was added by the Anglican Reformers) they appear between the Confession and Absolution. They were prescribed first by the Order of the *Communion (1548) and subsequently in all editions of the BCP. In the ASB their use is optional.

A short 'Pastoral and Theological Commentary' by W. W. S. March (London, 1961).

COMFORTER, The. The title of the Holy Ghost found in the AV and RV of Jn. 14. 16 and 26, 15. 26, and 16. 7. The Greek word here (παράκλητος) should probably be translated 'Advocate' or 'Helper', in accord with the earlier Latin versions, which rendered it by advocatus. The *Vulgate, however, left it untranslated as paracletus. The translation consolator, which first appeared in the 7th cent., gave rise through the French to the rendering 'Comforter'.

COMGALL, St. (c. 516–c. 601), first Abbot of *Bangor (in Ireland). Born in Dalaradia in Ulster, he is said to have served in the army and afterwards studied at Clonard and Clonmacnoise. After returning to Ulster, where he retired for a time to an island in Lough Erne, he was ordained and became a zealous propagator of monasticism, his most famous foundation being Bangor on Belfast Lough (555 or 559). He seems to have made a missionary expedition to *Iona and other places in Scotland. Among his disciples was St. *Columbanus. Feast day, 10 May.

There are two Latin Lives pr. in AA.SS., Mai. II (1680), pp. 580–8; an Irish text of the first, perh. from the 10th cent., ed. with Eng. tr. by J. G. O'Keeffe in Ériu, i (Dublin and London, 1904), pp. 43–8; crit. ed. of the second by C. Plummer (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae (Oxford, 1910), vol. ii, pp. 3–21, with introd. in vol. i, p. lviii f. P. Grosjean, S.J. (ed.), 'S. Comgalli Vita Latina Accedunt Duae Narrationes Gadelicae' in Anal. Boll., lii (1934), pp. 343–56. The Rule ascribed to him in three MSS. ed. J. Strachan in Ériu, i (1904), pp. 191–208; ii (1905), p. 58 f. J. MacCaffrey in C.E., iv (1908), p. 152, s.v.

COMMA JOANNEUM. See *Johannine Comma.

COMMANDERY. Among the *Hospitallers, an estate or manor in the charge of a member of the order. In 1540 all commanderies which survived in England were seized by the Crown. The corresponding institution among the *Templars was the '*preceptory'.

COMMANDMENTS, The Ten, also called the 'Decalogue' (from Gk. δέκα, 'ten', and λόγος, 'word'), the precepts divinely revealed to *Moses on Mt. *Sinai and engraved on two tables of stone. Acc. to Ex. 32. 19, the tables were broken by Moses on coming down from the mountain because of the idolatry of the people, but later replaced by another pair (Ex. 34. 1) which were deposited in the *Ark. The text of the Commandments is preserved in the OT in two closely similar versions (Ex. 20. 1–17 and Deut. 5. 6–21). The chief differences are that whereas in Ex. the observance of the *Sabbath is motivated by a religious reason, viz. Jehovah's rest on the seventh day of Creation, in Deut. the ground is humanitarian. Also, in the prohibition of covetousness, Ex. classes a man's wife with his other domestic property, whereas Deut. treats her separately. These differences comport with the less developed social teaching of the writer of the Ex. account. As regards the origin of the Decalogue, many of the older critical scholars, e.g. F. *Delitzsch, R. Kittel, and S. R. *Driver, held it to be of the Mosaic age. J. *Wellhausen, C. H. *Cornill, R. Smend, and others argued that it legislates not for wandering nomads but for a settled agricultural community, and that its moral teaching reflects the ideals of the 8th and 7th cent. Prophets; they therefore dated it in the 7th cent. More recently there has been a reaction against this view, and there are now few serious critics who would deny the possibility that the Decalogue in its basic form may go back to Moses himself. There is another and, acc. to most OT critics, even older version of the 'Ten Words' preserved in Ex. 34. 11–28, where much more emphasis is laid on ritual prescriptions.

The Ten Commandments, as we have them today, form an organic body of religious and moral principles, based on the Hebrew monotheistic conception of God. They are clear and succinct; and, apart from the prohibition of images and the precept of observing the Sabbath, they contain only rules of life that are the common property of mankind. Hence they were never abrogated in the New Dispensation, but rather deepened and supplemented by the Lord's teaching in the *Sermon on the Mount, and summed up by Him in the double precept of love towards God and one's neighbour (Mk. 12. 29–31). Acc. to *Tertullian the Divine precepts were engraven on the hearts of men even before being written on the tables of stone, an opinion later found also in St. *Augustine and St. *Gregory the Great. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, St. *Bonaventure, and other Schoolmen, all precepts of the Old Law belong to the *Natural Law, and hence the Commandments were given only to remind men of their obligations which had been obscured by sin.

By the time of St. Augustine the Ten Commandments had gained a prominent place in the instruction of catechumens. They were esp. used to counteract the moral errors of the *Manicheans, who alleged the Decalogue to be the work of the evil principle. They came to the fore again in the development of the penitential system in the 9th cent., and from the 13th cent. have kept their central place in Christian instruction. They received an esp. prominent place in the popular systems of teaching of the *Reformers, and were fully commented on by M. *Luther in his 'Grosser' and 'Kleiner Katechismus'. There is a difference in the enumeration in the different Churches. In the C of E as well as in the Greek and the Reformed (Calvinist and Zwinglian) Churches the prohibitions relating to false worship are reckoned as two, whereas the RC Church and the Lutherans count them as one. Thus the enumeration of the subsequent Commandments differs, e.g. the fourth (Anglican, etc.) Commandment on the sanctification of the Sabbath is reckoned as the third by those following the RC method. The number ten is made up by the latter splitting up the last Commandment forbidding covetousness into two. In the 1552 BCP the recitation of the Ten Commandments was introduced into the Communion Office, where they are to be regarded as a substitute for the lessons from the OT in ancient liturgies or, more probably, for the *Kyrie Eleison of the medieval rite. The rubric requiring their recitation at every Celebration remains in the BCP, though in modern practice they are often omitted, replaced by the Kyrie Eleison or summed up in the Lord's two Great Commandments (Mt. 22. 36–40); and provision is made for either of the last alternatives in the ASB.

R. H. *Charles, The Decalogue (Warburton Lectures, 1919–1923; 1923). S. *Mowinckel, Le Décalogue (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses publiées par la Faculté de Théologie protestante de l'Université de Strasbourg, xvi; 1927), with bibl. J. J. Stamm, Die Dekalog im Lichte der neueren Forschung (Bern, 1958; ed. 2, 1962; Eng. tr., with additions, by M. E. Andrew, Studies in Biblical Theology, Second Series, 2; 1967). A. C. J. Phillips, Ancient Israel's Criminal Law. A New Approach to the Decalogue (Oxford, 1970). P. Delhaye, Le Décalogue et sa place dans la morale chrétienne (ed. 2, 1963). G. Bourgeault, S.J., Décalogue et morale chrétienne (1971). R. M. Grant, 'The Decalogue in Early Christianity' in H.T.R., xl (1947), pp. 1–17. H. H. Rowley, 'Moses and the Decalogue' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxiv (1952), pp. 81–118, with numerous reff. E. Mangenot–E. Dublanchy in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 161–76, s.v. 'Décalogue'; A. Eberharter in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 341–51, s.v. 'Décalogue'; S. M. Polan and B. Häring in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 5–8, s.v., each with bibl. See also comm. on Exodus and Deuteronomy.

COMMANDMENTS OF THE CHURCH (also Precepts of the Church). Certain moral and ecclesiastical precepts, imposed by the RC Church on all her members. They were tabulated in the Middle Ages, and later more strictly classified. Thus St. Peter *Canisius in his Summa Doctrinae Christianae (1555) mentions five and St. Robert *Bellarmine in his Doctrina Christiana (1589) lists six, though the catechism Ad Parochos, published by order of the Council of *Trent in 1566, does not speak of them. At present four Commandments of the Church, viz. to hear Mass on all Sundays and Feasts of Obligation, to observe the days of *penance (see fasting), to go to Confession once a year, and to receive Holy Communion during the *Easter season, are binding on all Catholics.

There is no formal list in the CIC. J. W. Melody in C.E., iv (1908), p. 154 f., s.v.; E. Dublanchy in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 388–93, s.v. 'Commandements de l'Église', both with bibl.

COMMEMORATION. Acc. to traditional W. liturgical custom, when two feasts fell on the same date, that of lesser rank was commonly only 'commemorated'. This was done, e.g. at Mass, by its *collect, *secret, and *post-communion being read after the corresponding prayers of the feast of greater rank which was being observed. See also Occurrence, Concurrence.

COMMENDAM (Med. Lat. commenda, a 'trust' or 'custody'). An individual was said to hold an ecclesiastical benefice in commendam when its revenues were granted to him temporarily during a vacancy. The person so provided might be a layman, in which case he would ipso facto be debarred from performing the duties. Gradually the word came to be restricted, esp. to benefices which a bishop or other dignitary held more or less permanently along with his see. The first reference to the custom is in the writings of St. *Ambrose, who mentions a Milanese church which he had 'commended'. The practice not unnaturally led to great abuses. By an Act of 1836 the holding of benefices in commendam was prohibited in England.

COMMENDATIO ANIMAE (Lat., 'Commendation of the soul'). The prayers prescribed in the *Ritual of the W. Church to be said at the bedside of a dying person. They plead that the soul may go forth in the name of God and His saints, and that its sins may be pardoned.

L. Gougaud, O.S.B., 'Étude sur les "Ordines Commendationis Animae" ' in E.L., xlix (1935), pp. 3–27.

COMMENDATION, FINAL. See Absolutions of the Dead.

COMMINATION SERVICE. The service drawn up by the compilers of the BCP for use on *Ash Wednesday (as a substitute for earlier penitential discipline) and for other days appointed by the *ordinary. It consists of an exhortation, clearly intended for use by a non-preaching clergy (during which the Curses are solemnly recited), Psalm 51, suffrages, and prayers. It first appeared in the BCP of 1549, and has, with various modifications, been included in all subsequent revisions.

COMMODIAN, Christian Latin poet. He is generally held to have flourished in Africa in the middle of the 3rd cent., but some modern scholars have put him later, e.g. H. Brewer, who believed that he wrote in the 5th cent. in S. Gaul. The earlier date is supported by his apparent references to the *Novatianist schism. One passage in his writings may imply a connexion with Gaza in Palestine. He was a convert from heathenism. Two of his poems have survived, 'Instructiones adversus Gentium Deos pro Christiana Disciplina' and 'Carmen Apologeticum adversus Judaeos et Gentes'. Although altogether wanting in literary style, his work is a landmark in the history of Latin verse, as his rhythm is based on accent alone, without attention to quantities. Theologically he was a *Chiliast and *Patripassianist, and in the *Decretum Gelasianum his works were reckoned as apocryphal.

Ed. princeps of 'Instructiones' by N. Rigaltius, Toul, 1649, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, v, 201–62; of 'Carmen Apologeticum' by J. B. *Pitra in Spicilegium Solesmense, i (1852). Crit. edd. of Works by E. Ludwig, Bibl. Teubn., Leipzig, 1877–8, by B. Dombart, C.S.E.L., xv, 1887, and J. Martin in C.C., cxxviii (1960), pp. 1–122, with bibl. H. Brewer, S.J., Kommodian von Gaza. Ein Arelatensischer Laiendichter aus der Mitte des fünften Jahrhunderts (Paderborn, 1906); id., Die Frage um das Zeitalter Kommodians (ib., 1910); J. Martin, Studien und Beiträge zur Erklärung und Zeitbestimmung Commodians (T.U., xxxix, 4, 1913). G. Boissier, 'Commodien' in Mélanges Renier (Bibl. de l'École des Hautes Études, fasc. 73, 1887), pp. 37–63. A. F. van Katrijk, Lexicon Commodianeum (Amsterdam, 1934); H. B. Vroom, De Commodiani Metro et Syntaxi Annotationes (Utrecht, 1917). P. Courcelle, 'Commodien et les invasions du Ve siècle' in Revue des Études Latines, xxiv (1946), pp. 227–46; J. Martin, 'Commodianus' in Traditio, xiii (1957), pp. 1–71. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 647–57; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 181 f. L. Krestan in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 248–52, s.v.

COMMON LIFE, Brethren of the. See Brethren of the Common Life.

COMMON OF THE SAINTS (Lat. Commune Sanctorum). In the W. Church, those parts of the *Missal and *Breviary containing the office for such saints as have not a complete individual office (a '*proper') of their own.

COMMON ORDER, The Book of. (1) The directory of worship drawn up by J. *Knox in 1556 for the English Protestant congregations in Geneva. It is also known as 'The Order of Geneva' and as 'Knox's Liturgy'. It was appointed for use in Scotland by the General Assembly in 1562; revised and enlarged in 1564; and continued in general use among the *Calvinists of Scotland until 1645, when it was replaced by the *Westminster Directory.

(2) The service-book authorized by the *General Assembly for use in the Church of *Scotland. The present book was prepared, on the instruction of the General Assembly in 1936, by the Committee on Public Worship and Aids to Devotion and issued in 1940. It draws extensively on two earlier authorized Books, viz. Prayers for Divine Service (1923; 1929) and the Book of Common Order, 1928, of the then *United Free Church. It is expressly stated that the issue of the Book does not imply a desire to supersede free prayer. Besides several alternative Orders for the Morning and Evening Services, it contains forms for the Sacraments and Ordinances of the Church (including four Orders for the Lord's Supper) and many prayers for the Christian Year (several drawn from the BCP) and other occasions.

COMMON PRAYER, The Book of. The official service book of the C of E containing the daily offices of Morning and Evening Prayer, the forms for administration of the *Sacraments and other public and private rites, the *Psalter and (since 1552) the *Ordinal. The book was compiled originally through the desire of T. *Cranmer and others to simplify and condense the Latin services of the medieval Church and to produce in English a single, convenient, and comprehensive volume as an authoritative guide for priest and people. A printed edition of the (Latin) Sarum *Breviary (1543) and the issue of the *Litany in English (1544) and of the Order of the *Communion (1548), which was an English supplement to the Latin Mass, paved the way for the complete reform.

In 1548 Cranmer discussed the draft of a new Prayer Book with a conference of scholars, and in 1549 Parliament had the 'First Prayer Book of Edward VI' printed, and by the first Act of *Uniformity enforced it as the national Use. An Ordinal was issued in 1550. In doctrine and ritual this First BCP was a compromise between the old and the new schools, and it failed to please either. The criticisms of the latter, represented by e.g. P. *Martyr and M. *Bucer, were concerned chiefly with *Vestments, Prayers for the Dead, and the Invocation of the Holy Spirit in the Prayer of Consecration. Revision in the light of these criticisms led to the issue by Parliament in 1552 of the 'Second Prayer Book of Edward VI', which added the present introductory portion to Mattins and Evening Prayer, recast the Holy Communion office, ordered the use of the surplice instead of other vestments, and omitted all reference to 'Mass' and 'Altar'. The *Black Rubric was added without the sanction of the Act of Uniformity. Before the book was in general use, Mary's Act of Repeal (1553) restored the ancient services. As the 'Elizabethan BCP' (1559) it was reissued with a few slight alterations, and, except for a few minor details, it remained unchanged for the rest of the 16th cent. The part played by Convocation in the issue of these three books is obscure; so also is the origin of the *Ornaments Rubric which was attached to Elizabeth I's book.

Puritan objections to the BCP, which had been accumulating under Elizabeth, were ventilated on the accession of *James I by the *Millenary Petition. Hence 1604 saw the *Hampton Court Conference between bishops and Puritan divines, and a further revision in which the most important change was the addition of the second part of the *Catechism. After the 16 years in which the Book was superseded by the Directory for Public *Worship (1645), the *Savoy Conference (1661) met to consider afresh Puritan grievances. On its proving abortive, Convocation took over the task of yet another revision, and the Act of Uniformity of 1662 authorized the BCP as revised (see Durham Book). The re-insertion, with modification, of the Black Rubric, omitted in Elizabeth's BCP, was the principal concession to Puritans. The most important change was the introduction of the AV of 1611 for the Epistles and Gospels.

The 1662 BCP until recently remained practically unchanged, though a Revised *Lectionary was drawn up in 1871 and another for optional use authorized in 1922, while the *Shortened Services Act (1872) allowed a more elastic interpretation of some of the rubrics.

In the face of persistent ritual controversies a Royal Commission on *Ecclesiastical Discipline was appointed on 23 Apr. 1904. Its recommendation of 21 June 1906 that 'Letters of Business' be issued to the Convocations with a view to Prayer Book revision was adopted by the Crown on 10 Nov. 1906. After nearly two decades the Convocations decided to retain the 1662 Book, and to incorporate all changes in a new book, the use of which should be wholly permissive. This was presented to the Convocations on 7 Feb. 1927.

The new Book represented a compromise. Its (Alternative) Eucharistic rite approximated more closely to the medieval service (rearrangement of the Canon, use of the Kyrie eleison and Benedictus qui venit*). *Reservation of the Sacrament (in both kinds) was permitted. Although it was passed by the Convocations and the Church Assembly, it was rejected by the House of Commons on 15 Dec. 1927, as failing to satisfy the extreme wings of the Church. An amended form, modified to meet Protestant objections, was issued in the following year, but was also rejected by the Commons. In response to this rejection the Bishops issued a unanimous statement that the Church must retain its inalienable right to order its forms of worship, and in July 1929 the Upper House of the Convocation of Canterbury resolved that bishops should be guided by the proposals of 1928. The legal basis of these actions is unclear.

The 1928 book failed to gain general acceptance, except for the services of *Baptism and *Marriage, the additional *Propers, Occasional Prayers, and the Table of Psalms. Dissatisfaction and doubts about the legal position led to a widespread adoption of the *Interim Rite among Anglo-Catholics; Evangelicals, on the other hand, tended to be uninterested in, or definitely opposed to, a revision of the 1662 book, which they valued as a doctrinal safeguard. Nearly all churchmen, however, departed to a considerable extent from the strict observance of the 1662 book, and the desire for a generally acceptable liturgy found expression in the Lambeth Round Table Conference of 1938, and in debates in the Convocation of Canterbury in 1942, both of which proved abortive. But in 1955 the Abps. of Canterbury and York appointed a Liturgical Commission to prepare a thorough revision of the Prayer Book. Although delay in the establishment of *Synodical Government made progress difficult, the passing of the Prayer Book (Alternative Services) Measure, 1965, allowed authorized experiment to begin. This led in due course to the publication of the Alternative Service Book. See Alternative Services.

Outside England, the BCP has undergone numerous revisions, beginning with the Scottish BCP of 1637, issued under the influence of W. *Laud; this was abortive at the time, but historic in its influence on later revisers. Revisions by the *Nonjurors had no legal force, but led to the first effective Scottish (Episcopalian) BCP of 1764, which in turn, through S. *Seabury, influenced the first American BCP of 1789 (revised 1892). Elsewhere the English 1662 book was used until the Church of *Ireland, freed by disestablishment from the Act of Uniformity, in 1877 produced its own BCP, a conservative revision in a Protestant direction. In the early 20th cent., parallel to the English revision of 1928, but free from parliamentary control, new editions of the BCP were issued in *Canada (1922), *U.S.A. (1928), and Scotland (1929), while a revised eucharistic rite was authorized in *South Africa (1929), and a 'Liturgy for India', issued in Bombay in 1922, was authorized in 1933 for use in *India, *Burma and Ceylon. Besides local factors, such revisions were influenced by the fruits of recent liturgical study and the work of English liturgists, esp. W. H. *Frere. In missionary areas the BCP was revised, in whole or part, in vernacular versions and also in English, to suit local needs and acc. to the prevailing churchmanship. After the 1939–45 War, although further revisions of the BCP appeared in Canada (1959) and India (1960), the method of complete revision gave place to the experimental revision of individual services. These have sometimes been followed by the issue of a single book, such as the American BCP of 1979.

The privilege of printing the BCP is confined to the Queen's Printer and the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge, to which an Order in Council from the Privy Council Office is transmitted on the occasion of any necessary change (e.g. of names in the State Prayers). The various edd. of the BCP are set out in parallel columns, with meticulous accuracy, in F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), with important introd. E. C. Ratcliffe, The Booke of Common Prayer of the Churche of England. Its Making and Revisions M.D.XLIX–M.D.CLXI (with 80 illustrations, 1949). More recent rites pr. in B. [J.] Wigan (ed.), The Liturgy in English (1962), and C.O. Buchanan (ed.), Modern Anglican Liturgies 1958–1968 (1968). Among the classic commentaries on the BCP are those of A. *Sparrow (1661), R. *Sanderson (1674), and C. *Wheatly (1710). F. Procter, A History of the Book of Common Prayer (1855; new ed. by W. H. Frere, C.R., 1901); L. Pullan, The History of the Book of Common Prayer (1900); W. K. Lowther Clarke (ed.), Liturgy and Worship. A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932). D. E. W. Harrison, The Book of Common Prayer (1946; ed. 3 as Common Prayer in the Church of England, 1969). G. J. Cuming, A History of Anglican Liturgy (1969). F. A. *Gasquet–E. *Bishop, Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer (1890); J. W. Legg, Some Principles and Services of the Prayer-Book historically considered (1899); J. Dowden, The Workmanship of the Prayer Book (1899); id., Further Studies in the Prayer Book (1908). R. C. D. Jasper, Prayer Book Revision in England 1800–1900 (1954). Stella Brook, The Language of the Book of Common Prayer (1965). M. H. Shepherd, Jr., The Oxford American Prayer Book Commentary (New York, 1950). G. Harford–M. Stevenson–J. W. Tyrer (edd.), Prayer Book Dictionary (1912; revised ed., 1925).

COMMONWEALTH AND CONTINENTAL CHURCH SOCIETY. See C.C.C.S.

COMMUNICANTES. The section of the *Canon of the Roman Mass, so named from its first word, which comes shortly before the *Words of Institution. Like the 'Hanc igitur' and 'Qui pridie', it is subject to some modification acc. to the ecclesiastical calendar, having variant forms for *Christmas, *Epiphany, *Maundy Thursday, *Easter, *Ascensiontide, and *Pentecost. It consists of a memorial of the saints, mentioning by name the BVM, St. *Joseph, the eleven Apostles and St. *Paul, eleven Roman martyrs, and one African (St. *Cyprian). In earlier times local saints were sometimes added in particular districts, but since 1570 the prayer has been recited everywhere in the same form as at Rome, though since 1969 it has been permissible to omit all but the first five names.

Jungmann (1952), ii, pp. 213–25; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 170–79. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Vatican City, 1938), passim. A. *Baumstark, 'Das Communicantes und seine Heiligen-Liste' in J.L.W., i (1921), pp. 5–33; C. Callewaert, 'S. Léon, le Communicantes et le Nobis quoque peccatoribus' in Sacris Erudiri, i (1948), pp. 123–64. H. Frank, O.S.B., 'Beobachtungen zur Geschichte des Messkanons' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, i (1950), p. 111 f.; B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Problèmes du "Communicantes" de la Messe' in Rivista Liturgica, xl (1953), pp. 187–95, repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 269–75.

COMMUNICATIO IDIOMATUM (Lat., 'interchange of the properties'; Gk. ἀντίδοσις τῶν ἰδιωμάτων). The doctrine propounded by several of the Fathers, e.g. *Cyril of Alexandria, that while the human and Divine natures in Christ were separate, the attributes of the one may be predicated of the other in view of their union in the one Person of the Saviour. The doctrine received conciliar authority by its inclusion in the '*Tome' of St. *Leo (449), but in later times it was sometimes understood in a heterodox fashion, esp. in some Lutheran circles.

COMMUNION, Frequency of. On a possible interpretation of Acts 2. 46, the apostolic community communicated daily, and from such passages as Acts 20. 7 and various 2nd cent. writers, it seems that the members of the local churches all communicated at the Sunday Eucharist. But in later times, even though attendance at the Liturgy was general, communion became very infrequent. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) (cap. 21) provided that all Christians should communicate at least once a year, and this minimum was the normal later medieval practice. In post-medieval times, nearly all religious revivals, both Catholic and Protestant, have aimed at increasing frequency of communion; the BCP in 1549 and later editions fixed the minimum at three times a year; the Restoration Church witnessed a concerted effort by the hierarchy to provide monthly communion in all cathedral churches; the *Wesleys communicated two or three times a week; the leaders of the *Oxford Movement urged frequent communion; and in 1905 Pope *Pius X strongly pressed it upon RCs (Decree of 20 Dec. 1905). The relaxation in the rules about the *Eucharistic Fast (q.v.) was directed to the same end. At present weekly communion is fairly common among the laity of the RC Church and the C of E; in religious communities and among a small proportion of the laity in both Churches daily communion is normal, but the majority of people adopt less frequent standards. In the E. Churches and among most Protestant non-episcopal bodies it was until recently unusual for communion to be made, even by the devout, more often than once a month.

P. Browe, S.J., De Frequenti Communione in Ecclesia Occidentali usque ad annum Christi 1000. Documenta Varia (Rome, 1932); id., Die häufige Kommunion im Mittelalter (1938). E. Dublanchy in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 515–52, s.v. 'Communion eucharistique (fréquente)', with bibl.; J. Dühr, S.J., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 1234–92, s.v. 'Communion fréquente'.

COMMUNION, The Order of the (1548). A form for administering Holy Communion, drawn up in English for use in conjunction with the *Sarum (Latin) Mass. It was the first step towards the English Communion Service, and it came into use at *Eastertide, 1548. Its essential parts were an exhortation, a brief address to the intending communicants, the *General Confession followed by the Absolution, the *Comfortable Words, the Prayer of *Humble Access, the Words of Administration (for both kinds), and the Blessing; and it was interpolated into the Latin Mass between the communion of the priest and that of the people. The whole of its contents found a place in the later Anglican BCPs, though the position of its several items has varied. An early copy sent to Frankfurt was translated into German by Miles *Coverdale.

The interpolation of this Order into the rest of the Eucharistic rite in the 1549 BCP bore the title 'The Supper of the Lord and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass', which in turn became 'The Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion' in 1552 and later revisions. Hence the origin of the most commonly used title for the Eucharist in the C of E.

A facsimile of the British Museum copy C. 25, f. 15 was edited for the *Henry Bradshaw Society by H. A. Wilson (1908). See also bibl. to Common Prayer, Book of.

COMMUNION ANTHEM or ANTIPHON (Lat. Communio). In the Roman Mass the short passage said or sung during the administration of the communion. It was formerly said by the priest, but is now usually recited by the reader, choir or people. If there is music, it is sung by the choir with a psalm, between the verses of which the antiphon is interpolated. It may be replaced by a hymn or other chant. The practice of singing a chant during the communion of the people is recorded in the Apostolic Constitutions* (4th cent.) and elsewhere. It came to be reduced to merely the antiphon of the Psalm and was placed after the communion until the earlier practice was restored in 1958. It would seem that Ps. 34 was commonly chosen, doubtless because of the appropriateness of verse 8.

Jungmann (1952), ii, pp. 486–96; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 391–400. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2427–2436, s.v. 'Communion (rite et antienne de la)'; M. Huglo in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 39–41, s.v. 'Communion Antiphon'.

COMMUNION IN BOTH KINDS. The custom of receiving Holy Communion under the two species of bread and wine was general until about the 12th cent. There were, however, exceptions. *Tertullian and St. *Cyprian, e.g., attest the widespread African custom of the laity taking the consecrated bread home with them for private Communion. This usage, which had probably sprung up during the persecutions, is attested in the 4th cent. for Egypt and *Alexandria by St. *Basil and for *Rome by St. *Jerome. In the E. it seems to have survived till the 8th cent. Another exception to the rule was the practice of the 3rd cent. anchorites of communicating with the reserved Eucharistic bread alone. The sick and the children seem also to have been habitually communicated under one species only, in the case of infants usually that of wine. The Mass of the *Presanctified, too, presupposed always, for priests and people alike, Communion under the species of bread only. From the 7th cent. the 'intinctio panis', i.e. the dipping of the bread into the consecrated wine, became a widespread usage. Forbidden by the Third Council of Braga (675), the custom again became popular in the 11th cent., chiefly because it prevented the spilling of the Precious Blood. It was again forbidden, e.g. by the Council of *Westminster in 1175. In the E. the 'intinctio' seems to have been unknown during the first nine centuries, but acc. to the testimony of Card. *Humbert (d. 1061), was generally practised before the 11th. By the 13th cent. the practice of communicating under the species of wine had almost universally disappeared in the W., the Synod of *Lambeth of 1281, e.g., restricting in can. 1 the consecrated wine to the celebrant. The legitimacy of this practice was denied by the *Hussites, esp. the party of the *Calixtines, who were condemned by the Council of *Constance in 1415. The chalice was conceded to them, however, by the Council of *Basle (1437), but the decision, which had never been confirmed by the Pope, was revoked in 1462. See also Intinction, Utraquism.

The subject again became a matter of acute controversy in the 16th cent. The Reformers insisted that Communion in both kinds alone had Scriptural warrant. In reply the Council of *Trent ruled that there was no Divine precept to communicate under the two species and that existing practice was justified by the doctrine of concomitance (q.v.). Hence, in the RC Church, Communion in both kinds has been restricted to the celebrating priest. During the Second *Vatican Council, however, there was evidence of a strong desire to restore the Chalice to the laity, particularly on special occasions such as marriage and religious professions, and the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy envisaged the reception of Communion in both kinds in some instances. On 7 March 1965 the Congregation of Rites listed the instances in which bishops could permit reception in both kinds and published the rite to be observed; it provided for the four alternatives of drinking from the chalice, using a tube or a spoon, or by intinction. In the E. it is the almost general practice to give Communion from a spoon containing the Eucharistic Bread, sprinkled with a few drops of Wine. The C of E and all the reformed Churches have always administered Communion in both kinds.

The Tridentine Doctrine was formulated in Session xxi (16 July 1562); cans. repr. in Mirbt, p. 320 f. Classic discussion by J. B. *Bossuet, Traité de la communion sous les deux espèces (1682). J. J. Megivern, C.M., Concomitance and Communion. A Study in Eucharistic Doctrine and Practice (Studia Friburgensia, N.S., xxxiii; Fribourg–New York, 1963). E. Dublanchy in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 552–72, s.v. 'Communion eucharistique (sous les deux espèces)'. See also bibl. to Eucharist, and works cited under Calixtines.

COMMUNION OF SAINTS (Lat. Communio Sanctorum). Part of the ninth article of the *Apostles' Creed. It has been interpreted in several senses: (1) The spiritual union existing between each Christian and Christ, and so between each and every Christian, whether in *Heaven (the 'Church *Triumphant'), in *Purgatory (the 'Church *Expectant'), or on earth (the 'Church *Militant'). J. *Pearson (On the Creed, s.v.) expounds this communion as the communion of holy persons on earth with the Holy Trinity, with the Angels, with nominal Christians (e.g. in Baptism), with other holy persons, and with the saints in Heaven. He does not mention the Church Expectant. (2) The fellowship of Christians upon earth only. (3) The sharing of holy things, i.e. the share which all Christians have in the Sacraments, esp. the *Eucharist, sanctorum here being taken as neuter. Of these, (1) is the traditional view.

H. B. *Swete, The Holy Catholic Church, The Communion of Saints (1915), pp. 147–69. J. P. Kirsch, Die Lehre von der Gemeinschaft der Heiligen im christlichen Altertum (1900; Eng. tr., 1911); G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Sanctorum Communionem' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, ix (1904), pp. 209–36; F. J. Badcock, 'Sanctorum Communio as an Article in the Creed' in J.T.S., xxi (1919–20), pp. 106–26. A. Michel, La Communion des Saints (Doctor Communis, ix, fasc. 1; Rome, 1956). J. F. Sollier in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 171–4; P. Bernard in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 429–54, s.v. 'Communion des saints, son aspect dogmatique et historique', with bibl.; R. S. Bour, ib., cols. 454–80, s.v. 'Communion des saints d'après les monuments de l'antiquité chrétienne', with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2447–2454; F. Bauducco in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 119–25.

COMMUNION PLATE. In the RC Church, a plate of silver or metal gilt held under the chin of the communicant at the reception of Holy Communion. It may be held either by the communicant himself or by a server. It use was directed by an instruction of the *Congregation of the Sacraments (26 Mar. 1929).

The term is also applied collectively to the vessels used for the celebration of the Eucharist, which are often plated with gold.

COMMUNION SUNDAY. A Sunday on which the Holy Communion is celebrated. The phrase was in common use in England until the general revival in the latter part of the 19th cent. of celebrations in the C of E at least every Sunday.

COMMUNION TABLE. The table at which the Holy Communion is celebrated. In the C of E the word is used esp. by *Low Churchmen, High Churchmen commonly preferring the word 'altar' as better expressive of the Eucharistic sacrifice, which they believe is offered upon it. Since in 'high' churches the altar (for the same doctrinal reason) is often of stone and not of wood, there is a further reason in such cases against its being described as a 'table'. In Latin theology the word mensa, however, is of widespread and ancient usage for the 'altar'.

The placing of the communion table at the E end of the church, richly covered and railed in, became almost universal in the 17th cent. This reversion to pre-Reformation practice reflected the changing emphasis within Anglican sacramental theology. In modern times there has been a tendency to bring the communion table forward and adopt a *westward position.

G. W. O. Addleshaw–F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 108–244.

COMMUNION TOKENS. Metal tokens stamped with such devices as texts, initials, chalices, and the *Good Shepherd, which were used as certificates of fitness for admission to the Communion. There is evidence of the employment of '*houselling tokens' in England in 1534. In the Church of *Scotland, where they have been most generally used, they were common from the first, and the institution has survived, their place being taken today by printed cards on which the communicants' names are written. As these cards are distributed previously by the elders and collected at the service, a check is kept on those who do not communicate. In isolated Presbyterian churches in Scotland and other parts of the Commonwealth, however, the old metal tokens are still retained.

COMMUNION UNDER BOTH KINDS. See Communion in Both Kinds.

COMMUNITY OF THE RESURRECTION. This Anglican community was founded at *Oxford in 1892 by C. *Gore, then principal of Pusey House. Its original members were, besides C. Gore, its first superior: J. O. Nash, J. Carter, M. C. Bickersteth, G. Longridge, and W. H. *Frere. In 1893 the Community moved to Radley, Oxon, and five years later to Mirfield, Yorks. From the beginning one of the chief aims of the Community was to adapt the religious life to the changed circumstances of the modern age. Most of the original members continued to combine the scholarly, educational, and evangelistic work in which they had been engaged before profession with common life; but with growing numbers the Community began to develop work of its own, notably the College of the Resurrection at Mirfield for the training of ordinands, and pastoral and educational work in S. Africa and Rhodesia.

C.R. Diamond Jubilee Book (1952). G. P. H. Pawson, C.R., Edward Keble Talbot. His Community and his Friends (1954); N. Mosley, The Life of Raymond Raynes (1961).

COMNENA, ANNA. See Anna Comnena.

COMPANY OF JESUS. See Jesuits.

COMPARATIVE RELIGION. A modern name, not (as its form would imply) for a particular kind of religion, but for the branch of study which investigates by scientific and historical methods the religions of the world in their mutual relations. Its development dates from the later 19th cent., under the influence of evolutionary ideas and the greatly increased factual knowledge of other religions through the researches of anthropologists. Its successful pursuit as a science rests on the universality of religion among primitive as well as civilized peoples and the frequent recurrence of certain patterns of religious experience and activity in widely separated ethnological and social groupings. In scope, Comparative Religion studies the conditions under which these various forms of religious behaviour manifest themselves, the processes of their growth and the part which they play in the cultures and traditions to which they belong. On the other hand, questions relating to the ultimate philosophical and theological validity of the various religions are beyond its purview, its avowed purpose being to describe and classify phenomena and their functional purposes rather than to evaluate them.

None the less, despite this theoretical exclusion of questions of validity, the discipline has raised various pressing questions for the Christian faith, notably by its recognition that much in the Christian tradition is not, as was long supposed, exclusive to it, but is held in common with other world religions. The recognition of these parallels has acutely raised the question of the 'Absoluteness' of Christianity (E. *Troeltsch). On the other hand, as Christian students of the subject have argued with great cogency, the study has emphatically brought out the distinctiveness of certain elements in the Christian religion which, judged even by purely historical criteria, indicate its pre-eminence above all other religions. Among these are its conceptions of God and of human personality and the high quality of the Christian ethic. On the practical side the study has brought Christian apologists a deeper understanding of the non-Christian religions and exercised a far-reaching influence on missionary methods.

J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough. A Study in Comparative Religion (2 vols., 1890; ed. 3, 12 vols., 1907–15); R. R. Marett, The Threshold of Religion (1909; ed. 2, 1914); E. Durkheim, Les Formes élémentaires de la vie religieuse (1912; Eng. tr., 1915); S. A. *Cook, The Study of Religions (1914); G. F. Moore, History of Religions (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1914–20); H. Pinard de la Boullaye, S.J., L'Étude comparée des religions (2 vols., 1922–5); W. Schmidt, Handbuch der vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte (Münster i.W., 1930; Eng. tr., 1931); G. van der Leeuw, Phänomenologie der Religion (Tübingen, 1933; Eng. tr., Religion in Essence and Manifestation, 1938); E. O. James, Comparative Religion (1938; revised ed., 1961); A. C. Bouquet, Comparative Religion (1941); M. Éliade, Traité d'histoire des religions (1949; Eng. tr., 1958); R. C. Zaehner, At Sundry Times. An Essay in the Comparison of Religions (1958); J. Wach, The Comparative Study of Religions, ed. J. M. Kitagawa (New York, 1958); D. W. Grundy, Religions (1958); W. A. Lessa–E. Z. Vogt (edd.), Reader in Comparative Religion (Evanston, Ill., 1958; ed. 2, New York–London, 1965); M. Eliade–J. M. Kitagawa (edd.), The History of Religions. Essays in Methodology (Chicago, 1959); H. Kraemer, World Culture and World Religions. The Coming Dialogue (1960); G. Parrinder, Comparative Religion (1962); S. G. F. Brandon, Man and his Destiny in the Great Religions (Manchester, 1962); id. (ed.), The Saviour God. Comparative Studies in the Concept of Salvation presented to Edwin Oliver James (ib., 1963); R. L. Slater, World Religions and World Community (New York–London, 1963); H. D. Lewis–R. L. Slater, World Religions. Meeting Points and Major Issues (1966); R. C. Zaehner, Concordant Discord. The Interdependence of Faiths (Gifford Lectures for 1967–9; Oxford, 1970). J. Finegan, The Archaeology of World Religions (Princeton, 1952). On the relation of Christianity to the non-Christian religions, H. Kraemer, The Christian Message in a non-Christian World (1938); E. C. Dewick, The Christian Attitude to Other Religions (Hulsean Lectures, 1949; Cambridge, 1953); S. [C.] Neill, Christian Faith and Other Faiths. The Christian Dialogue with other Religions (Moorhouse Lectures, 1960; 1961); E. O. James, Christianity and Other Religions (1968). Much valuable material in J. *Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols., and index, 1908–26), esp. art. by S. A. Cook, ib., x (1918), pp. 662–93, s.v. 'Religion'; R. C. Zaehner (ed.), The Concise Encyclopaedia of Living Faiths (1959). S. G. F. Brandon (ed.), A Dictionary of Comparative Religion (1970). Numen. International Review for the History of Religions (Leiden, 1954 ff.); History of Religions. An International Journal for Comparative Historical Studies (Chicago, 1961 ff.). See also bibl. to Animism, Anthropology, etc.

COMPETENTES (Lat., 'those qualified'). In the early Church *catechumens admitted to the final stage of preparation for *Baptism. They were also known as 'electi', or, in the E., as 'illuminated ones' (φωτιζόμενοι).

COMPLINE (Lat. Completorium). The last of the canonical day-hours (see Office) in the W. Church, said before retiring for the night. There is evidence that St. *Basil compiled an office approximating to Compline, but in the W. it received its liturgical form from St. *Benedict, who included it in his rule, prob. by formalizing prayers which were already customarily said in the evening. The corresponding service in the E. Church is known as ἀπόδειπνον (Gk., 'after supper'). The W. office consists of an evening hymn (usually the Te lucis ante terminum), psalms appropriate to the time of day (anciently Pss. 4, 31. 1–6, 91, and 134, but in the modern Roman Breviary a more varied selection is used), and the canticle '*Nunc dimittis' (added later than the time of St. Benedict and still not used in the monastic office). The details of the service, however, vary greatly in the different W. breviaries. The essential parts of it were incorporated into the *Evensong of the BCP; and a form of it was included in the 1928 revision of the BCP as a separate 'late evening service' to be used 'when 'when Evensong has been previously said'.

In the RC Church Novum Rubricarum* (1960; sect. 147) strongly recommended that Compline be recited as the final office of the day, even if for a just cause Mattins of the following day had already been anticipated. The 1971 Breviary allows that it be said before or after midnight, so long as it is recited immediately before retiring for the night.

N. Gihr, Prim und Komplet des römischen Breviers, liturgisch und aszetisch erklärt (Theologische Bibliothek, 1907). J. Pargoire, 'Prime et Complies' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, iii (1898), pp. 281–8 and 456–67. O. Klesser in L.W., i (1965), cols. 443–6, s.v.

COMPLUTENSIAN POLYGLOT. The first polyglot edition of the whole Bible, begun in 1502 at the expense of Card. F. *Ximenes, who assembled a group of scholarly editors at the university which he had founded at Alcalá (Lat. 'Complutum'), where the Bible was finely printed in six folio volumes, 1514–17. The OT has the Hebrew, Latin *Vulgate, and Greek *Septuagint (with interlinear Latin) in parallel columns; in the *Pentateuch only, the Chaldee paraphrase, printed in Hebrew characters with a Latin translation beside it, is added at the foot of the page. Vol. vi (1515) is a Hebrew and Chaldee vocabulary, with a short Hebrew grammar. The NT Greek in vol. v was the earliest ever printed (1514), but prob. it was the four-year privilege granted to the Greek Testament of D. *Erasmus (1516) that held up the circulation of the whole Complutensian Bible until c. 1522. The large Greek type, used here only in the NT and based on an early book-hand, is justly much admired.

J. P. R. Lyell, Cardinal Ximenes . . . with an account of the Complutensian Polyglot Bible (1917), pp. 24–52. Darlow-Moule, ii, pp. 2–6.

COMPOSTELA. A city in NW. Spain, properly Santiago [i.e. 'St. James'] de Compostela, traditionally supposed to be the place of burial of St. *James the Apostle. In or shortly before 1095 the ancient see of Iria was transferred to Compostela, and the city became the centre from that time onwards of the national and Christian movement against the Moslem rulers of the country. The shrine of St. James is a centre for pilgrimages from all over Spain, and from many other parts of the world.

Liber Sancti Jacobi. Codex Calixtinus, ed. W. M. Whitehill, G. Prado, O.S.B., and Jesús C. García (3 vols., Santiago de Compostela, 1944). P. David, Étude sur le Livre de Saint-Jacques attribué au Pape Calixte II (4 parts, Lisbon, 1946–9). C. G. Hartley, The Story of Santiago de Compostela ('Mediæval Towns Series', 1912); J. S. Stone, The Cult of Santiago. Traditions, Myths and Pilgrimages. A Sympathetic Study (1927), incl. sources. K. J. Conant, The Early Architectural History of the Cathedral of Santiago de Compostela (Cambridge, Mass., 1926). See also bibl. to Spain, Christianity in.

COMPRECATION. The word is used esp. of the intercession which the saints are believed to make on behalf of the rest of the Church. Some Anglican theologians (e.g. J. *Bramhall) have maintained that, though direct *invocation of the saints is an unwarranted practice, it is legitimate to request God for their prayers; and such requests for the saints' intercessions have also been called loosely comprecation.

COMPTON, HENRY (1632–1713), Bp. of London. He was educated at Queen's College, *Oxford, and in early life served in the army. After ordination in 1662, he held various preferments, was appointed Bp. of Oxford in 1674, and translated to London in 1675. A friend of Danby, he was tutor to the princesses Mary and Anne, and officiated at the marriages of both of them. His stoutly anti-Papist attitude and his friendliness towards Protestant Dissenters failed to commend him to *James II, and he was restrained by the Ecclesiastical Commission from the exercise of his spiritual functions, nominally on the ground of his refusal to suspend J. *Sharp, then Rector of St. Giles'-in-the-Fields, for his anti-Roman sermons. Having signed the invitation to William of Orange and officiated at the Coronation, he strongly supported the project for comprehension and the *Toleration Act. For some not very clearly known reason, he was twice passed over when the primacy was vacant, in favour of J. *Tillotson and T. *Tenison successively; and during the reign of *Anne he became regarded as a High Churchman, if not a Tory, since he voted for the *Occasional Conformity Bill and in favour of the resolution that the Church was in danger. In 1686 he published under the title Episcopalia a set of addresses to his clergy.

Anon. life, perh. by Nathaniel Salmon, London, c. 1715. New ed. of his Episcopalia, with brief memoir of Compton by S. W. Cornish, Oxford, 1842. E. [F.] Carpenter, The Protestant Bishop (1956). S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xi (1887), pp. 443–7.

COMTE, AUGUSTE (1798–1857), founder of French *Positivism and of the 'Religion of Humanity'. He was a native of Montpellier and educated at the École Polytechnique, *Paris, where he studied esp. science and mathematics. Having lost his religious faith he came under the influence of H. *Saint-Simon, whose disciple he was from 1816 to 1824. His Système de politique positive (1822) contains in germ most of his later ideas. His principal work was his Cours de la philosophie positive (6 vols., 1830–42). The foundation of his system is the law of the three stages—the theological, the metaphysical, and the 'positive'—which constitute the phases of development of the human race as a whole as well as of its individual members. Whereas in the theological and metaphysical stages the human mind seeks a cause or essence to explain phenomena, in the third or positive phase explanation is discovered in a law. Comte advocated the organization of mankind in one vast system in which altruism was to conquer egoism. Conceiving this to be possible only on a religious basis, he constructed a new kind of religion, with humanity, the 'great being', in the place of God. He introduced an elaborate cultus, borrowed chiefly from Catholicism, with its priests and sacraments, and even produced a 'Positivist Calendar' in which the names of scientists and scholars replaced those of the saints. His revolutionary ideas lost him his post as examiner in mathematics at the École Polytechnique, which he had held from 1837 to 1844, and from this time he was supported chiefly by the generosity of his disciples, among whom, with reservations, was J. S. Mill. In 1848 he founded the 'Positive Society' which aimed at applying the principles of Positivism to the reconstruction of society. In his chief sociological work, Système de politique positive, he attempted to apply his utilitarian ethical principles to social and political questions.

Several collections of his letters have been publd. The numerous studies include those of J. F. E. Robinet (Paris, 1860), [M. P.] E. Littré (ib., 1863), J. S. Mill (London, 1865; repr. from the Westminster Review), E. *Caird (Glasgow, 1885), L. Lévy-Bruhl (Paris, 1900; Eng. tr., 1903), H. Gouhier (3 vols., ib., 1933–41), and F. S. Marvin (London, 1936).

CONCELEBRATION. The joint celebration of the *Eucharist by a number of priests reciting the central parts of the *Canon together. This was prob. usual in the early Church, when the Bishop was normally the chief celebrant. In the W. the practice gradually gave place to separate celebrations, each priest saying the Liturgy at a different time or place, except at *Ordinations, when the newly ordained priests regularly concelebrated with the Bishop. In 1963 the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council restored the practice of concelebration in the W. Church, and it is now widespread, esp. in religious communities. In the E. concelebration by a number of priests survived, though in modern times in most E. rites the Canon is actually said by the principal celebrant only.

A. A. King, Concelebration in the Christian Church (1966). L. Beauduin, O.S.B., 'La Concélébration' in Maison-Dieu, vii (1946), pp. 7–26. A. G. Martimort, 'Le Rituel de la concélébration eucharistique' in E.L., lxxvii (1963), pp. 147–68. P. de Puniet, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2470–2488, s.v., with bibl. A. Fortescue in C.E., iv (1908), p. 190, s.v.

CONCENTUS. See Accentus.

CONCEPTION OF THE BVM, The. See Immaculate Conception of the BVM, The.

'CONCERNING THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH.' The present title of the preface to the original (1549) edition of the BCP. When the present 'Preface' was added in 1662 (immediately before the 1549 preface) it was necessary to give the original preface a new name, and it then received the above title. Its contents were based on the preface to the reformed Roman *Breviary of F. de *Quiñones, and it is probably the work of T. *Cranmer. Its object was to explain the merits of the new Book over its Latin predecessors, e.g. continuity in the reading of the Bible, simplicity of ritual, the use of the vernacular, and uniformity of rite.

CONCILIAR THEORY. The doctrine that supreme authority in the Church lies with a *General Council. The movement associated with this theory culminated in the 15th cent., but the foundations of it were laid in the early years of the 13th, when canonists found difficulty in reconciling the increasing claims of Papal authority with the theoretical possibility of a heretical Pope. Hugh of Pisa (d. 1210), for instance, in his Summa super Decreta taught that a heretical Pope could err, and sought to maintain the inerrancy of the Church by distinguishing between the local Roman Church and the Catholic Church as a whole. In the following century, with the further growth of Papal power, the movement gained increasing support and its principles were invoked in the dispute between Philip IV of France and *Boniface VIII in an attempt to depose the latter. John of Paris (d. 1306), the most important advocate of the theory at the time, in his treatise De Potestate Regia et Papali (1302) taught that the Pope was the steward of God in matters spiritual and temporal; as such he could be deposed for injustice by those who had elected him, who had themselves acted as representatives of the whole Christian people. *Marsiglio of Padua in his Defensor Pacis (1324) maintained the supremacy of the state in all matters, spiritual as well as temporal. *William of Occam, attacking the indefectibility of both Pope and General Council, sought the fulfilment of the Lord's promise of the inerrancy of the Church in the survival of truth in any part of it, however obscure.

The outbreak of the *Great Schism in 1378 raised the question of the supremacy of authority in an acute form. In 1380 *Conrad of Gelnhausen in his Epistola Concordiae advocated the summoning of a General Council, arguing that the absence of a single recognized Pope left the duty of convoking it to the *cardinals. The success of the Council of *Constance in ending the schism to some extent undermined the position of the conciliarists, though the Council in its 4th and 5th sessions had already declared that any Christian, including the Pope, was bound by the decisions of a General Council, which derived its authority directly from God. In 1418 *Martin V prepared a prohibition of appeals from the Pope to a future General Council; *Pius II, who before becoming Pope had been an exponent of the Conciliar theory, in 1460 promulgated the bull 'Execrabilis' formally forbidding such appeals. Although the De Concordantia Catholica of *Nicholas of Cusa embodied a balanced scheme for the reform of the Church, the failure of the conciliar theory to win general acceptance after the 15th cent. may be taken as one of the factors at least indirectly leading to the *Reformation, and within the RC Church to such movements as *Gallicanism. It is of interest that the Second *Vatican Council has again emphasized the corporate authority of the episcopate, though not over against the papacy. See also Collegiality.

F. Bliemetzrieder, Das Generalkonzil im grossen abendländischen Schisma (Paderborn, 1904). J. N. *Figgis, Studies of Political Thought from Gerson to Grotius 1414–1625 (Birkbeck Lectures, 1900; Cambridge, 1907; ed. 2, 1916), Lecture II. V. Martin, 'Comment s'est formée la doctrine de la supériorité du Concile sur le Pape' in Rev. S.R., xvii (1937), pp. 121–43, 261–89, 405–27. E. F. Jacob, Essays on the Conciliar Epoch (Manchester, 1943; ed. 3, 1963). B. Tierney, Foundations of the Conciliar Theory (Cambridge Studies in medieval life and thought, new series, iv, 1955). P. de Vooght, Les Pouvoirs du Concile et l'autorité du Pape au Concile de Constance (Unam Sanctam, lvi; 1965). A. J. Black, Monarchy and Community. Political Ideas in the Later Conciliar Controversy 1430–1450 (Cambridge Studies in medieval life and thought, third series, ii; 1970). See also works cited under writers mentioned in the article.

CONCLAVE (Lat. cum clave, 'with a key'). The closed apartment in which the college of *cardinals is shut up during the entire process of electing a new Pope. The custom of keeping the cardinals enclosed was adopted in 1271 to hasten a Papal election which was still not made after nearly three years, and this practice has been followed ever since. The word 'conclave' is also applied to the meeting itself, either on this particular occasion or, more loosely, of the cardinals for any purpose.

L. Lector [really Mgr. J. Guthlin], Le Conclave, origines, histoire, organisation, législation ancienne et moderne (1894); A. Ceccaroni, Il conclave. Storia, costituzioni, cerimonie (1901). E. Ruffini Avondo, 'Le origini del conclave papale' in Atti della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, xxvii (1927), pp. 409–31. The procedure for the election of a Pope is now governed by Pope *Paul VI's Apostolic Constitution 'Romano Pontifici Eligendo' of 1 Oct. 1975; this is pr. in A.A.S., lxvii (1975), pp. 609–45. Further bibl., with reff. to doc. sources, in F. Cerroti, Bibliografia di Roma medievale e moderna, i (1893), esp. pp. 544–52. A. Molien in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 1319–42, s.v.

CONCOMITANCE. The doctrine that in the Eucharist the Body and Blood of Christ are present in each of the consecrated species. It implies that the fullness of communion is to be had in either element alone, and it has been held, esp. among RCs, to justify the withdrawal of the chalice from the laity. In a more extended sense, the word is also used for the doctrine that in virtue of the *hypostatic union of God and man in Christ, the Godhead and the human soul of Christ are also present in the Eucharistic elements after their consecration. See also Communion in Both Kinds.

J. J. Megivern, C.M., Concomitance and Communion. A Study in Eucharistic Doctrine and Practice (Studia Friburgensia, N.S., xxxiii; Fribourg–New York, 1963), esp. pp. 51–257. See also works cited s.v. Eucharist.

CONCORD, The Formula (1577) and Book (1580) of. The 'Formula of Concord', the last of the classical *Lutheran formulae of faith, was drawn up in Mar. 1577, by a number of theologians, among them Jakob Andreae (1528–90), M. *Chemnitz, and Nikolaus Selnecker (1530–92). In language it is precise and emphatic, and represents the definitive statement of Lutheran orthodoxy. corresponding to the similar pronouncements on the Catholic side at the Council of *Trent. The *Melanchthonist position was excluded as much as the Romanist and the *Calvinist. The subjects dealt with were the stock topics of contemporary controversy—the sacraments, sin and salvation, and the relation between the Divine and Human natures in Christ, and between Divine foreknowledge and human freedom. In its positive definitions, the formula occupies a middle position between Trent and Geneva. Thus Christ's Real Presence in the Eucharist is asserted, but it is represented as in no way a special presence, or different from His general presence in all creation. Again, on the question of *Predestination, man's total depravity after the *Fall is explicitly stated, but its logical outcome, *Double Predestination, is denied.

After much discussion, the Formula, together with the three Creeds (*Apostles', *Nicene, and *Athanasian), the *Augsburg Confession and Apology (1530), the *Schmalkaldic Articles (1537) and M. Luther's two *Catechisms, as well as the three earlier drafts on which it was based (the 'Swabian and Saxon Formula' [1574–5], the 'Maulbronn Formula' [1575], and the '*Torgau Articles' [1576]), was published in German at Dresden in 1580 as the 'Book of Concord' (Konkordienbuch). The first authoritative Latin edition appeared in 1584. It was signed by 86 representatives of the Lutheran state-churches and some 8,000 pastors and teachers. It met, however, with much opposition, esp. outside Germany, and was rejected, e.g. in Denmark, and hence has never possessed the authority of the *Augsburg Confession (1530).

Crit. text by H. *Lietzmann and others, Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche, herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (ed. 2, Göttingen, 1952). Eng. tr. by T. G. Tappert and others (Philadelphia, 1959). E. Schlink, Theologie der lutherischen Bekenntnisschriften (1940; ed. 3, 1948; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1961]), with bibl. P. Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom (1877), i, 221–340; iii, 93–180 (text and Eng. tr. of Formula). See also works cited s.v. Lutheranism.

CONCORD OF WITTENBERG. See Wittenberg, Concord of.

CONCORDANCE. A book of reference indicating and usually quoting in part all the passages of Scripture in which a given word is found. The most famous (and still the standard) English Concordance is that compiled in 1737 by A. *Cruden (q.v.), which in its later editions is extremely detailed and complete.

A Hebrew Concordance, compiled 1437–45 by Rabbi Isaac b. Kalonymus, was publd. at Venice in 1523 and tr. into Lat. 1556; it was revised by M. de Calasio, O.F.M. (Rome, 1621). A Hebrew Concordance adapted to the English Bible was publd. by John *Taylor (2 vols., 1754–7). In 1230 a Latin Concordance to the *Vulgate was compiled by Hugo de Saint-Cher, assisted by 500 *Dominicans; this work merely gave the Biblical reff., though later three English Dominicans added the quotations. The first Concordance to the Vulgate was publd. at Strassburg c. 1474; that in common use is based on the work of F. P. Dutripon (Paris, 1838). A Concordance to the *Septuagint was compiled by C. Kircher (3 vols., Frankfurt, 1607); the standard modern work is that of E. *Hatch–H. A. Redpath (3 vols., Oxford, 1892–1906). The pioneer Concordance to the Gk. NT was that of S. Birck, publd. at Basle, 1546; in 1638 it was followed by the Ταμεῖον of Erasmus Schmidt (publd. Wittenberg), which was ed. by C. H. Bruder (Leipzig, 1842; rev., with readings of S. P. *Tregelles and B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. *Hort, Leipzig, 1888). This has now been generally replaced among English scholars by that of W. F. *Moulton–A. S. Geden (Edinburgh, 1897). The most significant work based on Cruden's Concordance was the revision of it by J. Eadie and others (Glasgow, 1840). The chief later Concordance to the English Bible is R. *Young's Analytical Concordance to the Bible (Edinburgh, 1879). A Concordance incl. reff. to the RV was publd. in 1894 (ed. J. Strong, London); a Concordance to the translation of J. *Moffatt appeared in London, 1950. More recently there have been published Concordances to the RSV in 1957, with a concise Concordance by B. M. Metzger in 1962, and a Concordance to the NEB, NT (where this differs from the AV) in 1964.

H. E. Bindseil, 'Ueber die Concordanzen' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, xliii (1870), pp. 673–720. A. Kleinhans, O.F.M., 'De Concordantiis Biblicis S. Antonio Patavino aliisque Fratribus Minoribus Saec. XIII Attributis' in Antonianum, vi (1931), pp. 273–326; id., 'De Prima Editione Catholica Concordantiarum Hebraico-Latinarum Sacrorum Bibliorum' [1621 ed.] in Biblica, v (1924), pp. 39–48. E. Mangenot in Dict. Bibl., ii (1899), cols. 892–905, s.v. 'Concordances de la Bible'; D. Macfadyen in E.B. (ed. 11) vi (1910), p. 831 f., s.v.; A. Penna, C.R.L., in E.C., iv (1950), col. 185 f., s.v. 'Concordanze bibliche', with further bibl. See also bibl. to Cruden, A.

CONCORDAT. An agreement between the civil and ecclesiastical authorities upon some matter of vital concern to both parties. See also, besides the following entry, Lateran Treaty (1929).

CONCORDAT OF 1801. The agreement concluded, on 16 July 1801, between *Pius VII and Napoleon Bonaparte, then First Consul, which led to the formal restoration of the Catholic Church in France. By its terms the French government recognized the Catholic religion as that of the great majority of French citizens. All existing bishops were to resign their sees; fresh dioceses were mapped out; and the state was given the right of nominating new bishops—a provision which enabled it to exercise control over the political complexion of the clergy. Alienated Church property was to remain in the hands of those who had acquired it, but the government agreed to ensure a fitting maintenance to the bishops and parish priests. The expected benefits of these terms to the Church were considerably reduced by Napoleon's subsequent publication of the *Organic Articles (q.v.).

Le Cte Boulay de La Meurthe (ed.), Documents sur la négociation du concordat et sur les autres rapports de la France avec le saint-siège (6 vols., 1891–1905), with Texte Définitif du Concordat in Lat. and Fr., No. 645, vol. iii, pp. 213–19; the Fr. version, lacking the preamble, also printed in Mirbt, No. 558, p. 419 f. Le Cte Boulay de La Meurthe, Histoire de la négociation du concordat de 1801 (Tours, 1920). [F. D.] Mathieu, Le Concordat de 1801. Ses origines — son histoire (1903). H. H. Walsh, The Concordat of 1801. A Study of the Problem of Nationalism in the Relations of Church and State (New York, 1933). W. M. Sloane, The French Revolution and Religious Reform (1901), pp. 245–81, with Fr. text of Concordat, pp. 309–12. A. Debidour, Histoire des rapports de l'Église et de l'État en France de 1789 à 1870 (1898), ch. 6, pp. 183–227; S. Delacroix, Le Réorganisation de l'Église de France après la Révolution (1801–1809), i (1962). C. Constantin in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 744–79, s.v.; R. Naz in D.D.C., iii (1924), cols. 1404–31, s.v. See also bibl. to Constitutional Church.

CONCORDIA REGULARIS. See Regularis Concordia.

CONCUPISCENCE. In moral theology the inordinate desire for temporal ends which has its seat in the senses. The notion of concupiscence has its Biblical foundations esp. in the teaching of St. *Paul (Eph. 2. 3, Rom. 7. 7 ff., etc.) and was developed by St. *Augustine in his struggle against *Pelagianism. Acc. to Augustine the cause of concupiscence is the *Fall of *Adam, who, having lost *Original Righteousness, transmitted to us a nature in which the desires of the flesh are no longer subordinated to reason. St. *Thomas Aquinas, elaborating the Augustinian teaching, regards it as the material (i.e. passive, because residing in the senses) element of Original Sin, the formal (active, residing in the will) element being loss of Original Righteousness. From the moral point of view it is materia exercendae virtutis, for it provides reason and will with opportunities for resisting the disordered movements of the senses. Orthodox Protestant theology, on the other hand, both in its *Lutheran and in its *Calvinist forms, regards concupiscence itself as sin and its very existence as an offence against God; and the *Jansenists held a similar view. The Council of *Trent (sess. 5) followed St. Thomas's teaching against the Reformers, and in post-Tridentine theology it is usually regarded as a consequence of Original Sin rather than as part of it.

A. Chollet in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 803–14, s.v.; R. Biot–C. Baumgartner in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 1334–73, s.v.

CONCURRENCE. The falling on consecutive days of ecclesiastical feasts or other days to be observed, so that Second *Vespers or *Evensong of the first coincides with First Vespers or Evensong of the second. In such cases, in the W. Church, the collect of the more important feast is said first, and, if it is of very high rank, that of the other is omitted. When the two feasts are of equal rank, the one which is about to begin used to take precedence of that which is ending. Since 1960, however, in the RC Church full Second Vespers of the first feast has been said and the subsequent day commemorated.

CONCURSUS DIVINUS (Lat., 'Divine concourse'). A technical theological term for the co-operation of the *grace of God with the actions of finite creatures.

Catholic theologians are in general agreement that it is of two forms, viz. (1) mediate, such as God's gift of capacities to His creatures appropriate to the performing of certain tasks, and (2) immediate, such as the direct dependence of man on God in the actual exercise of these capacities; but the exact manner in which the concursus takes place has been much disputed. *Thomists have held that immediate concursus precedes the action (praemotio physica), whereas *Molinists have maintained that the concursus and the action are simultaneous (concursus simultaneus). Among Protestant theologians, the fact of the 'Divine concourse' was allowed by *Lutherans and rejected by *Calvinists. The two facts which the several accounts of the 'Divine concourse' have been concerned to maintain are man's own responsibility for his sinful acts and the universality of God's sovereign rule.

CONDIGNITY. In the Scholastic theology of *grace, those actions which fallen man performs as a Christian in conscious reliance on the Holy Spirit are held to merit the grace of God 'by condignity' (gratia de condigno), i.e. as from a Debtor. NT support is found in the case of Cornelius, whose prayers and alms are said to have come up for a memorial before God. (Cf. Acts 10. 31, esp. *Vulgate text.)

CONDITIONAL BAPTISM. See Baptism.

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY (also known as Annihilationism). A theory acc. to which immortality is not a necessary attribute of the immaterial soul but conditional on its behaviour during its life in the body. Though this opinion had a solitary representative in the 4th cent. African Christian author *Arnobius, it was never held in Christendom until recent times, except in isolated cases of philosophical speculation, and it was formally condemned at the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1513. In the 19th cent., however, it found favour with many thinkers as a possible way of accounting for the fate of the impenitently wicked without accepting either the orthodox doctrine of eternal punishment or the *Origenistic theory of universalism. It was elaborated by Edward White, a *Congregationalist minister, in his Life in Christ (1846; expanded and wholly recast, 1875), which attempted to prove from Scripture that 'Immortality is the peculiar privilege of the regenerate', and it found some acceptance among English and American as well as Continental thinkers. It was restated in a milder form by J. *Martineau, acc. to whom the wicked are not annihilated, but lose their personal being, and this belief was admitted to be tolerable by C. *Gore. The teaching of the mortality of the soul is generally considered to be opposed to the Christian doctrine of man and to the dignity and responsibility of the human soul. Though still used in certain kinds of popular apologetics, it has nowadays but few defenders among serious Christian theologians.

H. W. Fulford in H.E.R.E., iii (1901), pp. 822–5, s.v.; G. C. Joyce, ib., i (1908), pp. 544–9, s.v. 'Annihilation'; both with bibl.

CONDREN, CHARLES DE (1588–1641), French theologian and mystic. Though destined by his father for a military career, he early gave himself to prayer and the study of the Scriptures. In 1613 he entered the *Sorbonne and in 1614 was ordained priest. After some hesitation he entered the Congregation of the *Oratory in 1617, where he was soon charged with the foundation of the houses at Nevers, Langres, and Poitiers. In 1629 he succeeded P. de *Bérulle as Superior-General. A famous director of souls, he was so modest that he refrained from publishing anything during his lifetime, and his doctrine has survived mainly through his letters, collected in 1642 as Lettres et discours, and the well-known L'Idée du sacerdoce et du sacrifice de Jésus-Christ (1677), actually written by his disciples, but containing his authentic teaching. The two focal points of his doctrine were a strong theocentrism and an intense devotion to the mysteries of the Incarnate Christ. The Sacrifice of the Mass was immediately related to the eternal Sacrifice which the risen and ascended Christ offers in heaven. Despite the fact that he himself wrote hardly anything, de Condren's influence has been considerable, esp. through his devoted disciple, J.-J. *Olier, while in Great Britain his Eucharistic teaching came to be appreciated widely, chiefly through the *Tractarians.

The best collected ed. of his works is that of L. M. Pin (2 vols., Paris; 1857–8); crit. ed. of his Letters by P. Auvray, Cong. Orat.–A. Jouffrey, Cong. Orat. (ib., 1943). The primary source for his life is the biography by D. Amelote (anon., Paris, 1643). Modern life by L. M. Pin (ib., 1855). Study in English by M. V. Woodgate (Dublin, 1949), with bibl. Bremond, iii, pp. 283–340; Pourrat, iii, pp. 521–5 and 551–67. A. Molien, Cong. Orat., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 1373–88, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to Oratorians.

CONDUCT. A name formerly in general use for any priest who was engaged to read the prayers in the chapel of a college of which he was not on the foundation. The chaplains at Eton College are still so described.

CONFESSING CHURCH (Bekennende Kirche), also known as the 'Confessional Church' (Bekenntnis-Kirche). The group of German Evangelical Christians most actively opposed to the '*German Christian' Church Movement sponsored by the Nazis between 1933 and 1945. It grew out of the 'Pastors' Emergency League' founded in Nov. 1933 under the leadership of M. *Niemöller. In 1934 the Church opposition began to set up its own canonical authorities (esp. the Councils of the Brethren, Brüderrat) at all levels in those regions where the official administration was 'German Christian'; the Synod of Barmen in May 1934 issued the *Barmen Declaration (q.v.) which laid the foundation for subsequent resistance to all attempts to make the Evangelical Churches an instrument of Nazi policy. Persecution of clergy and laity failed to prevent the opposition of the Confessing Church until the outbreak of War in 1939 brought open resistance to an end. Many of the younger confessional pastors were conscripted and fell in battle.

At the end of the War, in 1945, leaders of the Confessing Churches met a delegation of the Provisional *World Council of Churches under G. K. A. *Bell at Stuttgart and made to them a 'Declaration of Guilt'. This action opened the way to a restoration of fellowship between the German Churches and the World Council of Churches, which gave considerable assistance to the Confessing Church.

In 1948 the '*Evangelical Church in Germany' was founded from a federation of all the regional Lutheran, Reformed and United Churches in Germany. Niemöller's 'Confessing Church' continued to be an active movement, though no longer claiming to be the only Church government. Inevitably, with the restoration of order in post-war years the influence of the dynamic element declined, but it can still be discerned in the actions and utterances of German Church leaders and theologians.

In its earlier days the adherents of the movement generally called themselves the 'Confessional Church' to emphasize that their opposition to the Nazis was primarily religious (based on confessions of faith) and not political; later this name was felt to be no longer appropriate and they came to prefer 'Confessing Church', with the sense of being a Church of confessors for the faith rather than those who owed allegiance to a formal dogmatic Confession.

H. Hermelink (ed.), Kirche im Kampf. Dokumente des Widerstands und des Aufbaus in der Evangelischen Kirche Deutschlands von 1933 bis 1945 (Tübingen, 1950). K. D. Schmidt (ed.), Die Bekenntnisse und grundsätzlichen Äusserungen zur Kirchenfrage (3 vols., Göttingen, 1934–6); id. (ed.), Dokumente des Kirchenkampfes II. Die Zeit des Reichskirchenausschusses 1935–1937 (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes, xiii–xiv; 1964–5). A. Frey, Cross and Swastika (1938); A. S. Duncan-Jones, The Struggle for Religious Freedom in Germany (1938); W. Niemöller, Kampf und Zeugnis der Bekennenden Kirche (Bielefeld, 1948); id., Die Evangelische Kirche im Dritten Reich. Handbuch des Kirchenkampfes (ib., 1956). O. Diehn, Bibliographie zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes 1933/1945 (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes, i; Göttingen, 1958), and other specialized studies in the same series. V. Conzemius, 'Églises chrétiennes et totalitarisme national-socialiste' in R.H.E., lxiii (1968), pp. 437–503 and 868–948, esp. pp. 437–58, repr. as Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xlviii (1969), esp. pp. 5–26. J. S. Conway. The Nazi Persecution of the Churches, 1933–45 [1968].

CONFESSIO AUGUSTANA. See Augsburg Confession.

CONFESSIO HELVETICA. See Helvetic Confession.

CONFESSIO SCOTICA. See Scottish Confession.

CONFESSION. (1) A tomb of a *martyr ('*confessor'). The term is used also of the structure built over such a tomb, and of a crypt or shrine under the High *Altar of a church, in which relics are placed. In the Middle Ages the word was further applied to the entire church in which a martyr was buried. The confessio of St. Peter in the *Vatican is perhaps the most celebrated of all such tombs.

(2) The profession of faith made by a martyr or confessor (e.g. 1 Tim. 6. 13, 2 Cor. 9. 13), and so in general a declaration of religious belief. In this sense the word has been occasionally applied to the ancient ecumenical *creeds, but it is more generally used of the Protestant professions of faith in the 16th and 17th cents., of which the Confession of *Augsburg (1530) was the earliest. From this sense derives its use for a communion, or religious body.

(3) An acknowledgment of sin, made either in general terms by a congregation in the course of liturgical worship, or specifically by an individual penitent in public confession, or more usually in private or *auricular confession. See also Absolution and Penance.

CONFESSION, Seal of. See Seal of Confession.

CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE, The, written c. 400. Its title is to be taken in the Biblical sense of 'confessing', i.e. 'praising', 'God' rather than in its modern meaning of 'avowal', the work being St. *Augustine's thanksgiving for his conversion. Its main theme is expressed in the famous sentence 'Thou hast made us for Thyself and our heart is restless until it rests in Thee'. Its purpose is to demonstrate the work of God's grace in his soul whereby he was transformed from a vessel of wrath into a vessel of election. The autobiographical part (Books 1–9) describes his efforts at finding ultimate truth, from his youthful studies at Carthage and disappointment with *Manichaeism to his acquaintance with *Plato and his final conversion in the garden near Milan (386). Book 10 deals with the faculty of memory, 11 offers a theory of time, and Books 12 and 13 contain an allegorical exposition of the first verses of Genesis.

Modern edd. by E. B. *Pusey (Oxford, 1838; inaugurating the *Tractarian Bibliotheca Patrum), P. Knöll (C.S.E.L., xxxiii, 1896), J. Gibb–W. Montgomery (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1908), P. de Labriolle (2 vols., Paris, 1925–7), A. C. Vega, O.S.A. (Escurial, 1930), and F. Skutella (Leipzig, 1934). Eng. trr. by Sir Tobie Matthew (St.-Omer, 1620; mod. ed. by R. Huddleston, O.S.B., London, 1923), W. Watts (ib., 1631; repr. in Loeb, 2 vols., 1912), E. B. Pusey (L.F., i, 1838; revision of tr. of W. Watts), F. J. Sheed (London, 1943), and R. S. Pine-Coffin (Harmondsworth, 1961).

The intrinsic interest of the work, with the contrast in temper between the Confessions (c. 400) and the Dialogues from the time of St. Augustine's conversion (c. 386), has produced an unusually large literature, much of it of a high quality. Among the more important items are A. *Harnack, Augustins Confessionen (Giessen, 1888; Eng. tr., 1901); F. Wörter, Die Geistesentwicklung des hl. Augustins bis zu seiner Taufe (1892); H. Becker, Augustin. Studien zu seiner geistigen Entwicklung (1908); W. Thimme, Augustins geistige Entwicklung in den ersten Jahren nach seiner Bekehrung, 386–391 (Neue Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und Kirche, iii, 1908); P. Alfaric, L'Évolution intellectuelle de saint Augustin (thesis, Paris, 1918); R. L. *Ottley, Studies in the Confessions of St. Augustine (1919); C. Boyer, S.J., Christianisme et néo-platonisme dans la formation de saint Augustin (thesis, Paris, 1920); K. Holl, Augustins innere Entwicklung (Abh. (Berl.), Jg. 1922, Hft. 4; 1923), repr. in Holl's Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, iii (1928), pp. 54–116; K. Nörregaard, Augustins Bekehrung (1923); M. Zepf, Augustins Confessiones (Heidelberger Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und ihrer Geschichte, ix, 1926), W. J. Sparrow Simpson, St. Augustine's Conversion (1930); K. *Adam, Die geistige Entwicklung des heiligen Augustinus (1931); P. Henry, S.J., La Vision d'Ostie. Sa place dans la vie et l'œuvre de saint Augustin (1938); M. Verheijen, O.E.S.A., Eloquentia Pedisequa. Observations sur le style des Confessions de saint Augustin (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, x; Nijmegen, 1949); P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les Confessions de saint Augustin (1950), with valuable bibl., pp. 259–78; J. M. Le Blond, Les Conversions de saint Augustin (1950); J. O'Meara, The Young Augustine (1954); G. N. Knauer, Die Psalmenzitate in Augustins Konfessionen (1955); M. Pellegrino, Le 'Confessioni' di Sant'Agostino. Studio introduttivo (1956; Fr. tr., 1961); F. Bolgiani, La conversione di S. Agostino e l'VIII° Libro delle 'Confessioni' (Università di Torino. Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, viii, fasc. 4; 1956); P. Courcelle, Les Confessions de Saint Augustin dans la tradition littéraire: antécédents et postérité (1963); R. J. O'Connell, St. Augustine's Confessions (Cambridge, Mass., 1969). See also works cited under Augustine.

CONFESSOR. (1) In the early Church one who suffered for confessing his or her faith, but only to an extent which did not involve martyrdom. Later the term was applied loosely to markedly holy men, and ultimately to those pronounced to be such by the Pope. King *Edward (d. 1066) was declared a Confessor by *Alexander III in 1161.

(2) A priest who hears (esp. private) confessions.

CONFIRMATION. In Sacramental theology, the rite whereby the grace of the Holy Spirit is conveyed in a new or fuller way to those who have already received it in some degree or fashion at *Baptism. Though the rite goes back to very early times, there have been wide differences as to its method of administration, as well as to the theological interpretation put upon it. It has been held, at least among Catholic theologians, to imprint a *character on the recipient, so that the same person cannot be confirmed more than once.

Theologians find early instances of Confirmation in the imposition of hands by the Apostles, e.g. by St. *Peter and St. *John on the converts of Samaria (Acts 8. 14–17) and by St. *Paul on the disciples at *Ephesus (19. 1–7). Other NT passages which may refer to it are the 'laying on of hands', as distinct from the 'teaching of baptisms', in Heb. 6. 2, or again the frequent mention in the NT of the 'sealing with the Spirit' (e.g. 2 Cor. 1. 20 f., Eph. 1. 13, 4. 30), though perhaps these belong with more probability to Baptism. The difficulty of fitting the NT references into a wholly unified pattern becomes clear when we observe that whereas in many places the full imparting of the Holy Ghost is closely linked with the actual Baptism, e.g. in the Baptism of the Lord Himself (Mk. 1. 10) and of the first converts on the Day of *Pentecost (Acts 2. 38), in others the Spirit is given prior to, and seemingly independently of, Baptism (Acts 9. 17 f.).

In the sub-Apostolic age, a similar variety of practice is met with. Washing with water, anointing with oil, and the laying on of hands all came to be associated with initiation into the fullness of Christian life, and the aggregate spiritual effect which flowed from these outward observances was held to include the removal of sin, admission to the Church of the Redeemed, 'sealing' to eternal life and the imparting of the Spirit. But there was considerable variety alike of practice and interpretation. While at one place washing, anointing, and imposition of hands might be all considered different parts or aspects of a single rite, elsewhere they could be regarded as connected with two, or possibly even more, stages in the Christian's progress into the fullness of Sacramental life.

'Confirmation' (but not by this name) appears as a rite clearly separate from Baptism in *Tertullian (De Baptismo, 6; De Res. Carnis, 8; Adv. Marc., i. 14). The same clear distinction is made by St. *Cyprian (Epp., 70, 74) and by Pope *Cornelius (ap. *Eusebius, H.E., vi, xliii). By the 4th cent. Confirmation, whether conferred by anointing or laying on of hands, was generally a separate rite. The Bishop, who in primitive times was able to take a personal interest in all the candidates for Baptism, now found that the number of those seeking admission into the Church was such that he could no longer baptize all in person, and the functions of parish priest (immersion) and Bishop (anointing), originally usually closely associated, gradually became distinct. What had once often been scarcely distinguishable elements in the single Baptismal-Confirmation rite were now performed by different ministers.

The practice, however, became stereotyped in different ways in the E. and W. In the E. the primitive custom of conferring 'Confirmation' in immediate relation to Baptism was retained. This was achieved by confining the Bishop's part to the consecration of the oil used for the anointing. This was then conveyed to the parish priest, who performed the actual rite of Confirmation as occasion required. After anointing, it became the regular custom in the E. to dispense Holy Communion at once, so that the infant received all three Sacraments in a single service. Such has remained the practice in the E. down to the present day.

In the W., on the other hand, the Bishop retained his function as the regular minister of the rite (as he had been originally also of Baptism). Confirmation was therefore deferred until an opportunity arose of presenting the candidate to the Bishop in person. One result was that, owing to difficulties of communication and the manifold duties apt to claim the attention of the Bishop, Confirmation became very irregular in the Middle Ages and later. But, at least until the 16th cent., the separation was accidental and the ideal of the two rites being conferred together never lost. *Elizabeth I was brought by *Henry VIII to Baptism and Confirmation when but three days old.

The precise theological significance of the rite has been, and still is, disputed. Some regard it as an integral part of, and in its effects indistinguishable from, Baptism. Others regard it as conveying a new gift of the Spirit, esp. the grace necessary to strengthen the candidate in his conflict with evil. The latter view, elaborated in a homily wrongly ascribed to *Eusebius of Emesa (acc. to G. *Morin, the work of *Faustus of Riez), gained wide currency through its incorporation in the *Forged Decretals (where it was mistakenly ascribed to Pope 'Melchiades' [*Miltiades]), and it is still widely held in the W. In the Middle Ages Confirmation came to be accounted one of the *Seven Sacraments. St. *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., III, q. 72) and other *Dominican theologians held that it was immediately instituted by Christ; St. *Bonaventure (for whom it was 'the sacrament of warriors') believed that it was instituted by the Holy Ghost under the 'successors of the Apostles' (In Sent., IV, dist. vii, art. 1); while *Alexander of Hales expressed the curious view that it was constituted a Sacrament by the Council of Meaux of 845 (Summa, IV, q. 9). The *Tridentine theologians were remarkably reticent on the subject. In the RC Church there have been wide differences as to wherein the 'matter' of the Sacrament consists. Acc. to some (J. *Sirmond, D. *Petavius), it was the laying on of hands; acc. to others (St. Thomas, Card. *Bellarmine), anointing with chrism; acc. to still others (J. *Morinus), the two together.

Since the later Middle Ages the usual practice in the RC Church has been to confer confirmation as soon as convenient after the seventh birthday, but since 1971 it has been open to national conferences of bishops to decide on a later age. According to the 1971 rite, confirmation is normally administered during Mass. After the homily the candidates renew their Baptismal promises. The Bishop then extends his hands over them and prays that they may receive the Holy Spirit; he then traces the sign of the Cross with *chrism (oil blessed on *Maundy Thursday) on the forehead of each candidate. The Mass continues, ending with the special blessing provided. Priests may also confirm with the Bishop, provided that the chrism is given to them by the Bishop. Faculties for priests to confirm on their own with chrism blessed by the Bishop have long been given in exceptional cases; in cases of candidates in articulo mortis they were given to all parish priests in 1947 and later to other priests; and in 1971 they were widely extended, so that a parish priest normally confirms adults whom he baptizes or receives into the RC Church from another communion.

At the Reformation, the C of E continued the medieval practice; but the use of oil ceased in 1549 and the sign of the Cross in 1552. The 1552 BCP introduced the formula of administration, recited by the Bishop while laying his hand on the head of each candidate: 'Defend, O Lord, this [Thy] child with Thy heavenly grace, that he may continue Thine for ever; and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more, until he come unto Thy everlasting kingdom. Amen.' In 1662 a solemn ratification of the Baptismal vows was introduced, serving to emphasize the primitive link between the two rites. The *Alternative Service Book provides a much shorter formula for the Bishop including the name of each candidate, while the 1552 prayer is recited for all the candidates by the Bishop and people. Acc. to a rubric in the BCP (taken over from the *Sarum rite) no one is to be admitted to Communion until he is confirmed or 'ready and desirous to be confirmed'. The usual practice is for a course of instruction in Christian faith and practice to precede Confirmation, which is administered at various ages; the title of the *Catechism states that it shall be learnt of every child before he be brought to Confirmation. Hence in the C of E Confirmation provides a regular opportunity for giving young people systematic instruction in the Christian faith. The rite is also in general use, and with similar pastoral purposes, among *Lutherans and some other Protestant bodies.

In recent times Anglican theologians have much discussed the nature of the gift conveyed by Confirmation. Acc. to one group (A. T. Wirgman, D. *Stone, G. W. H. Lampe), the fullness of the Holy Spirit is imparted to the Christian at Baptism, and Confirmation is of relatively less significance. Another school (F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., A. J. Mason, A. C. A. Hall, K. E. *Kirk, L. S. Thornton, C.R.) regards the gift of the Spirit in Confirmation to be of such importance that without it Baptism is virtually incomplete. The complexity of the evidence is such as to suggest that a final solution will not be reached by an appeal to history.

For current RC legislation see CIC, cans. 780–800. Among the classical RC works are J. Morin, Cong. Orat., De Sacramento Confirmationis (part of his Opera Posthuma; Paris, 1703); 'Vitassius', Cong. Orat., Tractatus de Confirmatione (Venice, 1738); cf. also L. *Holste, De forma Sacramenti Confirmationis apud Graecos (orig. ed. in Holste's Annotationes, Rome, 1666). Anglican works include J. *Hall, Χειροθεσία, or the Apostolic Institution of Imposition of Hands (1649); H. *Hammond, De Confirmatione (1661); J. *Taylor, Χρίσις Τελειωτική, A Discourse of Confirmation (1663); cf. also R. *Baxter, Confirmation and Restauration (1658).

Among modern treatises should be mentioned F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., What is the Distinctive Grace of Confirmation? (1880); M. Heimbucher, Die heilige Firmung (Augsburg, 1889); A. J. Mason, The Relation of Confirmation to Baptism (1891; ed. 2, 1893); A. T. Wirgman, The Doctrine of Confirmation considered in Relation to Holy Baptism as a Sacramental Ordinance of the Catholic Church (1897); A. C.·A. Hall, Confirmation (Oxford Library of Practical Theology, 1900); F. Dölger, Das Sakrament der Firmung (Theologische Studien der Leo-Gesellschaft, xv; 1906); F. H. Chase, Confirmation in the Apostolic Age (1909); J. B. Umberg, S.J., Die Schriftlehre vom Sakrament der Firmung (1920); J. Coppens, L'Imposition des mains et les rites connexes dans le Nouveau Testament et l'Église ancienne (Louvain diss., Wetteren and Paris, 1925); G. *Dix, O.S.B., Confirmation or the Laying on of Hands? (Theology Occasional Papers No. 5; 1936); G. C. Richards, Baptism and Confirmation (1942); G. Dix, The Theology of Confirmation in Relation to Baptism (lecture; 1946); G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit. A Study of the Doctrine of Baptism and Confirmation in the New Testament and the Fathers (1951; ed. 2, 1967), with bibl.; L. S. Thornton, C.R., Confirmation. Its Place in the Baptismal Mystery (1954); B. Neunheuser, O.S.B., Taufe und Firmung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, iv, Heft 2; 1956; Eng. tr., 1964); K. B. Cully (ed.), Confirmation. History, Doctrine and Practice (Greenwich, Conn., 1962); J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation: Baptism in the Medieval West. A Study in the Disintegration of the Primitive Rite of Initiation (*Alcuin Club Collections, xlvii; 1965); J. P. Bouhot, La Confirmation. Sacrement de la communion ecclésiale (Lyons, 1968); A. Hamman, O.F.M., Le Baptême et la Confirmation (1969). There was also a special issue of La Maison-Dieu, No. 54 (1954), with artt. by B. Botte, O.S.B., J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., D. van den Eynde, O.F.M., T. Camelot, O.P., and others.

Comprehensive discussions in A. *Tanquerey, Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae, iii (ed. 25, 1947), pp. 383–412; Confirmation, or the Laying on of Hands, vol. i: Historical and Doctrinal; vol. ii: Practical (S.P.C.K., 1926–7). On its liturgical aspects see E. *Martène, O.S.B., De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (1699), I, i, 2; T. Thompson, The Offices of Baptism and Confirmation (Cambridge Handbooks of Liturgical Study, 1914), esp. pt. II; F. Procter–W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), esp. pp. 602–7. J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation. The Reformation Period. Some Early Reformed Rites of Baptism and Confirmation and other contemporary documents (Alcuin Club Collections, li; 1970), pp. 159–260; id., Confirmation, Then and Now (ib., lx; 1978); P. J. Jagger, Christian Initiation 1552–1969. Rites of Baptism and Confirmation since the Reformation Period (ib., lii; 1970). Various writers in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 975–1103; H. J. Lawlor–H. Thurston, S.J., in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 1–10; P. de Puniet, O.S.B.–H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2515–51; T. Camelot, O.P., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 145–50, s.v.

CONFITEOR (Lat., 'I confess'). One of the forms of confession of sins (so named from its first word) used in the RC Church, e.g. at *Mass and *Compline. In its usual form confession used to be made to God, to the BVM, to St. *Michael, St. *John the Baptist, St. *Peter, St. *Paul, and 'all the saints'; from 1969 confession has been addressed to God and those present, and prayers asked of the BVM, angels and saints. The RC forms have been widely adopted in the C of E, though not contained in the BCP, where there are a number of other forms provided for liturgical use.

CONGÉ D'ÉLIRE (Fr., 'permission to elect', sc. a bishop). Royal nomination of bishops was an ancient practice in England. Henry II felt it necessary to define the procedure in the Constitutions of *Clarendon. In 1214 King *John agreed that bishops should be elected by the dean and chapter of the cathedral, but that the royal permission to proceed to the election, the congé d'élire, was to be first secured, and the election to be confirmed by Royal Assent afterwards. This settlement, later confirmed by Edward I and again by Edward III, remained in force until the Reformation. In 1534, by the *Annates Statute (25 Hen. VIII, c. 20), the appointment of bishops was vested in the crown. When a bishopric fell vacant, a congé d'élire was granted to the dean and chapter who were required to elect the person named by the King in the accompanying 'letter missive'. Failure to elect the royal nominee rendered the dean and chapter subject to the penalties of *praemunire, and the King was then empowered to appoint to the see by letters patent. Under *Edward VI a fresh Act (1547) substituted for the congé d'élire nomination by letters patent in all cases, but this Act was repealed under *Mary. The Act of 1534 was revived by the Act of *Supremacy of 1559; it remains substantially in force, though the penalties of praemunire were abolished in 1967.

H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8, by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), p. 74 f. See also bibl. s.v. Bishop.

CONGREGATIO DE AUXILIIS. See De Auxiliis.

CONGREGATION OF THE LORD, The (also The Congregation of Christ or simply The Congregation). The title was assumed in *Mary's reign by the Scottish Reformers who supported J. *Knox. It appears to derive from the language of the *National Covenant (1557), where the word 'congregation', in the sense of a religious community, occurs eight times.

CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL FOR WORLD MISSION. The Council, formed in 1966, was the organization through which the Congregational Churches of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa discharged the responsibility for world mission which they took over from the *L.M.S. and the Commonwealth Missionary Society. Though a Congregational Council, it encouraged Churches 'to assume for themselves such form of church order as to them shall appear most agreeable to the Word of God'. It was enlarged on the formation of the *United Reformed Church in 1972. In 1977 it became fully internationalized, with 22 member Churches, and its name is now the Council for World Mission.

CONGREGATIONALISM. Congregationalism is that form of Church polity which rests on the independence and autonomy of each local church. It professes to represent the principle of democracy in Church government, a polity which is held to follow from its fundamental belief in Christ as the sole head of His Church. All the members of the Church, being Christians, are 'priests unto God'. Where two or three such meet in Christ's name He is in their midst guiding their thoughts and inspiring their actions, and each such community, duly constituted with its officers, is regarded as an outcrop and representative of the Church Universal. It is held that the system is primitive in that it represents the earliest form of Church order. It requires a very high standard of Christian devotion to maintain it, though it is admitted that in practice it has fallen sometimes sadly below that ideal.

Modern Congregationalism begins with the Reformation. M. *Luther himself taught the priesthood of all believers, though he never carried the doctrine to what Congregationalists consider to be its logical conclusion. As early as 1550 there is evidence of bodies of men and women meeting together to preach the pure Word of God and administer the Sacraments as separatists from the national Church. When it became apparent that *Elizabeth I did not intend any drastic reformation of the Church, the number of these companies greatly increased. When, therefore, R. *Browne, in 1582, wrote A Book which sheweth the Life and Manners of all true Christians and A Treatise of Reformation without tarrying for any and of the Wickedness of those Preachers which will not reform till the Magistrate command or compel them, the little books found a public prepared to receive them. Browne maintained that 'the Kingdom of God was not to be begun by whole parishes, but rather of the worthiest, were they never so few', and, in insisting that these 'gathered Churches', bound under God by covenant, should be independent of the state and have the right to govern themselves, he laid down the lines of essential Congregationalism. He was followed by the martyrs H. *Barrow, J. *Greenwood, and J. *Penry. In 1589 the two former wrote A true Description out of the Word of God of the visible Church which set forth a doctrine of the Church practically identical with that of Browne.

From this time onwards we have evidence that Brownists (as they were then called) became numerous all over the country. Separatism was merging into Congregationalism and Churches were formed in *Norwich, London, and elsewhere. But persecution soon did its work, and the movement was driven underground, but only to break out again in Amsterdam and *Leyden, and ultimately, through emigration, in America. There Congregationalism played a great part in shaping both the religion and the politics of the new country. But in England also the leaven continued to work and the Independents, as they were then called, became leaders in the struggle against *Charles I and W. *Laud, and ultimately formed the backbone of O. *Cromwell's army. At the *Westminster Assembly in 1643, the Five Dissenting Brethren stoutly defended the Congregationalist cause and the *Savoy Declaration (q.v.) of 1658 laid down their polity afresh in the light of experience gained in Holland and America.

The Act of *Uniformity (1662) made Nonconformists of Independents and Presbyterians alike, but the *Toleration Act (1689) restored to them at least the right to exist. Attempts at fusion between these two types of Church were not successful mainly because of theological differences. Independents, in spite of their Calvinism, were the broader in outlook and the more evangelical in tone. They grew in numbers and influence, and being excluded from the ancient universities, set up Dissenting Academies of their own which did fine educational work, and they were ultimately largely responsible for founding London University. As R. W. *Dale pointed out in 1891, 'Congregationalists for many generations were accustomed to assert the claims of the intellect in religion far more earnestly than other evangelical Churches'. At the same time they were evangelistic in practice, as witness their founding of the London Missionary Society (*L.M.S.).

The independency of these Churches did not involve them in complete isolation. From the first they recognized the bond of a common faith and order, and the stronger among them used to help the weaker. In time they came to form County Associations of Churches for mutual intercourse and support. In 1832 these Associations combined in the Congregational Union of England and Wales. The basis of this Union was a full recognition of the distinctive principle of Congregationalism, namely, 'the scriptural right of every separate church to maintain perfect independence in the government and administration of its own particular affairs'. The Union had therefore no legislative authority, but served to advise, encourage, and help the Churches and to express their common mind. The Union early issued a Declaration of Faith and Order which represented the moderate Calvinism popular in the Churches of the time. In 1966 the Assembly of the Union agreed that the Churches of the Union should covenant together in the Congregational Church in England and Wales, in which the local autonomy of the Church is practised alongside a mutual concern and care. In 1972 the greater part of the Congregational Church in England and Wales united with the *Presbyterian Church of England to form the United Reformed Church. A sizeable body of Continuing Congregational Churches remain outside the union.

R. W. Dale, Manual of Congregational Principles (1884). J. Waddington, Congregational History (5 vols., 1869–80). H. M. Dexter, The Congregationalism of the Last Three Hundred Years as seen in its Literature [1880]. R. W. Dale (ed. A. W. W. Dale), History of English Congregationalism (1907), with bibl. W. B. Selbie, Congregationalism ('The Faiths'; 1927). A. Peel, These Hundred Years. A History of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, 1831–1931 (1931); id., The Congregational Two Hundred, 1530–1948 (1948). Id. (ed.), Essays Congregational and Catholic. Issued in Commemoration of the Centenary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales (1931). Daniel [T.] Jenkins, Congregationalism. A Re-Statement (1954). G. F. Nuttall, Visible Saints. The Congregational Way 1640–1660 (Oxford, 1957). E. Routley, The Story of Congregationalism (1961). R. T. Jones, Congregationalism in England 1662–1962 (1962). H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960). W. Walker, A History of the Congregational Churches in the United States (New York, 1894); G. G. Atkins–F. L. Fagley, History of American Congregationalism (Boston–Chicago, 1942). Transactions of the Congregational Historical Society (London, 1901 ff.).

CONGREGATIONS, Religious. Religious societies with simple vows, in contradistinction to those with solemn vows (see Vows) or orders in the strict sense. The congregations in the RC Church are a modern development, among the first being the *English Ladies (approved in 1703) and the *Passionists (approved in 1741). They are dependent either directly on the Holy See or on a bishop. In the former case they receive a special approbation which, since 1908, has been given by the *Roman Congregation of Religious. Even the congregations under Papal government, however, are not exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, except in a few cases, e.g. the Passionists and the *Redemptorists, and in no case may congregations be introduced into a diocese without permission from the *ordinary. The organization of a congregation is the same as that of an order. The individual houses are governed by superiors responsible to a *Provincial. All the provinces are under the authority of the Superior-General, who is elected by the *General Chapter. Those congregations not regulated by the Roman Congregation of Religious, i.e. under episcopal authority only, must be authorized by the Pope before they can be established in a particular diocese. They are not under their own superior but under the bishop, with whom rests all authority.

The term 'congregation' is also applied to groups of monastic houses which have arisen since the close of the Middle Ages, to facilitate discipline and reform. Such groups may be united under an *Abbot President, an Abbot General or an Arch-

Abbot. The individual monasteries, however, retain their independence. Examples in the *Benedictine Order are the *Cassinese Congregation, named after the central house at *Monte Cassino, as well as the various national Congregations, e.g. the English and the Belgian.

Modern RC legislation in CIC, cans. 488, n. 2; 492, n. 1; 604. M. Félix, Congrégations religieuses. Étude historique et juridique (1908 ff.; 4 vols. to 1929). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 341–551. J. Creusen, S.J., in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 181–94, s.v., with bibl. See also bibll. to separate congregations.

CONGREGATIONS, ROMAN. See Roman Congregations.

CONGRUISM. The doctrine that God confers *grace for the performance of good works ('gratia de congruo') in accordance with such human circumstances as He foresees will be most favourable to its use. The doctrine is an attempt to reconcile the dependence of human moral action upon Divine grace with the freedom of the human will. It was strongly advocated c. 1580 by certain *Jesuits, esp. the *Molinists, and imposed upon all schools of the Society of Jesus in 1613 by *Aquaviva, then General of the Order. The 13th of the Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles denies that works done before justification 'as the School-authors say, deserve grace of congruity'.

The classical expositions of Congruism are to be found in the writings of F. *Suarez, S.J. (d. 1617), and of St. Robert *Bellarmine (d. 1621). For Aquaviva's decree ('De Observanda Ratione Studiorum, deque Doctrina S. Thomae Sequenda'), issued 14 Dec. 1613, see Praepositorum Generalium Selectae Epistolae et Documenta ad Superiores (Besançon, 1877), pp. 54–60. H. Quilliet in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1120–38, s.v.; F. Courtney, S.J., in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 95–99, s.v.

CONNOLLY, RICHARD HUGH (1873–1948), *Patristic scholar. Born at Carcoar, N.S.W., he was educated at *Downside and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He made his solemn profession at Downside Abbey in 1896, was ordained priest in 1899, and became Head of Benet House, Cambridge (1904–16), where he was closely associated with some outstanding Patristic scholars in the university (J. A. *Robinson, F. C. *Burkitt, J. F. Bethune-Baker). His main work lay in the field of early Syrian Christianity. He co-operated with J. F. Bethune-Baker in introducing *Nestorius's 'Bazaar of Heracleides' to the notice of European scholars (1908), edited the Liturgical Homilies of Narsai (1909; important appendix by E. *Bishop), established the Hippolytan authorship of the '*Apostolic Tradition' (The So-called Egyptian Church Order, 1916), edited (in English) the Didascalia Apostolorum* (1929), and made out a strong case for the Ambrosian authorship of the De Sacramentis (1942). He also contributed frequent papers to the Journal of Theological Studies, among them some important articles on the *Didache.

CONRAD OF GELNHAUSEN (c. 1320–90), theologian. In 1359 he became a canon of Mainz and later (c. 1380) Provost of Worms. One of the earliest advocates of the *Conciliar Movement, he urged that the circumstances of the *Great Schism provided a sufficient reason for summoning a *General Council without Papal convocation. His view, which largely derived from *Marsiglio of Padua and *William of Ockham, was expounded in his principal work, the Epistola Concordiae (1380).

His 'Epistola Concordiae' ed. F. P. Bliemetzrieder, Literarische Polemik zu Beginn des grossen abendländischen Schismas (Publikationen des österreichischen historischen Instituts in Rom, i; 1910), pp. 111–40. L. Schmitz, 'Ein Brief Konrads von Gelnhausen aus dem Jahre 1379' in R.Q., ix (1895), pp. 185–9, with text. A. Kneer, Die Entstehung der Konziliaren Theorie. Zur Geschichte des Schismas und der kirchenpolitischen Schriftsteller Konrad von Gelnhausen (gest. 1390) und Heinrich von Langenstein (gest. 1397) (R.Q. Supp., i; 1893). K. Wenck, 'Konrad von Gelnhausen und die Quellen der Konziliaren Theorie' in H.Z., lxxxvi (1896), pp. 6–61. D. E. Culley, Konrad von Gelnhausen. Sein Leben, seine Werke und seine Quellen (Leipzig diss.; Halle, 1913). F. P. Bliemetzrieder, Das Generalkonzil im grossen abendländischen Schisma (1904), passim. For further bibl. see A. Posch in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 463 f., s.v. 'Konrad von Gelnhausen'.

CONRAD OF MARBURG (c. 1180–1233), Papal *Inquisitor. He was prob. a native of Marburg and his title 'Magister' shows that he studied at one of the universities, perhaps *Paris or *Bologna. A man of strong force of character and much learning and severely ascetic, in 1213 he appeared as an ardent preacher of the *Crusade of *Innocent III. Soon afterwards he was charged with various reforming missions in Germany, including the visitation of certain convents. These tasks won him the confidence of the Landgrave Ludwig IV of Thuringia, who entrusted him with important ecclesiastical appointments in his dominions. In 1225 he became the spiritual director and confessor of St. *Elizabeth (q.v.), Ludwig's wife, whom he treated, esp. in her later years, with excessive severity; and after her death (19 Nov. 1231) he was appointed as one of the witnesses in the cause of her canonization. Meanwhile he proved himself a zealous opponent of heresies (*Cathari, *Waldenses) and on 11 Oct. 1231 *Gregory IX (1227–41) nominated him the first Papal Inquisitor in Germany, with absolute authority over heretics. He exercised his authority ruthlessly, often condemning persons on insufficient evidence and handing them over for punishment to the secular arm. When he charged Henry II, Count of Sayn, with heresy (1233) he was publicly denounced at a court of bishops and princes at Mainz and murdered on his way back to Marburg on 30 July 1233.

B. Kaltner, Konrad von Marburg und die Inquisition in Deutschland (Prague, 1882); A. Hausrath, Kleine Schriften (1883), pp. 137–233 ('Der Ketzermeister Konrad von Marburg'). K. Benrath in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 747–51, s.v. 'Konrad von Marburg'.

CONSALVI, ERCOLE (1757–1824), Italian statesman. He entered the Papal service at an early age, and was thrown into prison as a declared anti-Revolutionary after the French occupation of the Papal States in 1798. On recovering his freedom he joined the new Pope, *Pius VII, and in 1800 was created a cardinal and made Secretary of State. In this office he was chiefly responsible for the negotiation of the *Concordat with Napoleon, and for fostering opposition to the *Organic Articles. Though Napoleon managed to secure his dismissal, Consalvi would not be intimidated, and became the leader of the 'black cardinals' in Paris until he was forcibly retired to *Reims. On Napoleon's abdication (1814) he was immediately reappointed as Secretary, and, after a short visit to England, represented the Pope at the Congress of Vienna (1815). Here he secured the restoration of the Papal States, the reorganization of which occupied his remaining years.

Mémoires du Cardinal Consalvi. . . . Avec une introduction et des notes par J. Crétineau-Joly (2 vols., Paris, 1864; enlarged ed. by J. E. B. Drochon [c. 1896]); M. N. Rocca di Corneliano (ed.), Memorie del cardinale Ercole Consalvi (1950). E. L. Fischer, Cardinal Consalvi. Lebens- und Charakterbild des grossen Ministers Papst Pius VII (1899); M. Petrocchi, La restaurazione, il cardinale Consalvi e la riforma del 1816 (1941). J. T. Ellis, Cardinal Consalvi and Anglo-Papal Relations, 1814–1824 (Washington, D.C., 1942). R. Wichterich, Sein Schicksal war Napoleon. Leben und Zeit des Kardinalstaatsekretars Ercole Consalvi, 1757–1824 (Heidelberg, 1951). L. von *Ranke, Historisch-Biographische Studien (1877), 'Cardinal Consalvi und seine Staatsverwaltung unter dem Pontificat Pius VII', pp. 1–180. G. Mollat in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 509–23, s.v.

CONSANGUINITY, blood-relationship. By Scripture and *canon law, consanguinity within certain degrees is a *diriment impediment to marriage; that is, it makes the marriage of the persons concerned not only unlawful but null and void. See also under Kindred and Affinity, Table of.

G. Oesterlé in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 232–48, s.v., with full bibl.

CONSCIENCE (Lat. conscientia, 'knowledge with another', 'knowledge within oneself'). The word has followed its Lat. predecessor in acquiring a moral significance, and now denotes the capacity for judging the rightness of actions, either considered generally, or actually proposed or already performed. Christians agree that it is among the higher faculties of man, to whom it is unique, and that its effectiveness is increased by experience and through *grace.

NT writers adopted the equivalent term 'syneidesis' from Hellenistic Greek philosophers, who seem to have understood it mainly as an index of moral failings or as a moral dissuasive; on this view it never gives positive encouragement: a good conscience is a quiet conscience. The NT however breaks new ground by associating the good conscience with *faith and with the *Holy Spirit.

In medieval Western thought it became usual to distinguish between the general knowledge of moral principles (termed *synteresis, after a copyist's error for syneidesis in St. *Jerome's Commentary on Ezekiel) and its application to particular cases, called conscientia in a stricter sense. The former presupposed a moral discernment left untouched by the *Fall, and opinions differed as to whether its source lay in the affections and the will, as the *Franciscans held, or in the practical reason, as St. *Thomas Aquinas and the *Dominicans taught. (Some modern writers suggest that the affections, will, and reason are all involved, as in much other mental activity.) The Reformers reacted strongly against the theory of an uncorrupted natural power to discern good and evil, and emphasized the dependence of the Christian conscience upon faith.

Some popular writing has suggested that conscience can be directly identified with the Voice of God; this view derives in part from Protestant teaching on the 'internal witness' of the Holy Spirit, and was strongly reinforced by the teaching of I. *Kant, whose Grundlegung zur Metaphysik der Sitten (1785) opened with the words 'There is nothing wholly good without qualification either in the world or without it except the good will' (see *Categorical Imperative). The *Schoolmen had held, more probably, that conscience is liable to error, while also maintaining that it should always be followed. A man should inform himself to the best of his ability on the requirements of the moral law, and then act as his conscience dictates. If this action is faulty, as judged by extrinsic theological considerations, or by its results, its imperfection is excused by *invincible ignorance: the man has done his best, even though it is not the best absolutely. What is to be done when the conscience is doubtful is one of the points at issue in the dispute about *probabilism.

More recent writers have been sharply divided on the reality and authority of conscience. English writers on ethics influenced by T. *Hobbes and D. *Hume have tended to discard the concept and speak simply of moral judgement; and even this phrase has become unfashionable among those influenced by S. Freud, who regarded feelings of guilt as an unhealthy product of faulty family relationships in early life. Others have held that the inexorable claims of conscience point man to a Being higher than himself; it was on this basis that Kant deduced the existence of God when he had rejected the *ontological, *cosmological and *teleological arguments. Conscience thus considered is the mediator between the Law of God and the will of man. But since it is liable to error and even to moral disease (as in the case of hardened criminals, or the pathologically scrupulous—see *scruples), most Christian moralists have declined to identify its utterances with the Divine Law itself. They regard it rather as a means by which fallible men can progressively learn the will of God, especially within the Christian fellowship, assisted by the grace of God given in response to *prayer.

H. *Rashdall, The Theory of Good and Evil (2 vols., 1907), esp. i, pp. 164–8, 175 f. Cf. also id., Conscience and Christ. Six Lectures on Christian Ethics (1916). K. E. *Kirk, Conscience and its Problems (1927). On medieval theories, see O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et morale aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles (4 vols., Louvain, 1942–54), esp. ii. For historical summary and Protestant viewpoint see E. Wolf in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 1550–7, s.v. 'Gewissen'. Other recent works include C. A. Pierce, Conscience in the New Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, xv; 1955); E. d'Arcy, Conscience and its Right to Freedom (1961); P. Delhaye, La Conscience morale du chrétien (1964); R. Hofmann in Sacramentum Mundi, i (1968), pp. 411–14, s.v.

CONSECRATION. The separation of a thing or person for Divine service. In Christian vocabulary, common uses of the term are: (1) Of the *Eucharist: the act whereby bread and wine become the Body and Blood of Christ. (2) Of *Bishops: the conferment by bishops of the *character which is inherent in their office upon others. (3) Of *altars and churches and of Eucharistic vessels: the solemn rite of setting apart these things exclusively for the service of God. The consecration of a church, an act normally reserved to the bishop, differs from its blessing in that it is held to be an irrevocable act, so that the building can never be secularized. See Dedication.

CONSECRATION, The Prayer of. The central prayer in the Eucharistic Rite of the BCP, corresponding to the middle of the *Canon in the Roman Mass and (to a lesser extent) of the *Anaphora in E. rites. In the 1662 form of the BCP it consists of: (1) a 'memorial' of the death of Christ; (2) a prayer that in the reception of the Sacrament the faithful may partake of the Body and Blood of Christ; (3) a recital of the narrative of institution, with a performance of the *manual acts; (4) Amen, said by the congregation.

CONSENSUS GENEVENSIS (also known as the De aeterna Dei Praedestinatione). J. *Calvin's elaborate reformulation of his teaching on *Predestination to combat that of J. H. *Bolsec. After obtaining the support of the ministers of Geneva on 18 Dec. 1551, Calvin presented it to the City Council of Geneva on 1 Jan. 1552. Its uncompromising reassertion of Calvin's teaching put an end to the hopes of reunion of the Calvinists with *Lutheranism.

The text, besides being pr. among Calvin's works, is pr. in H. A. Niemeyer (ed.), Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 218–310; part is repr. in Kidd, pp. 643–5 (No. 314). Eng. tr., with introd., by J. K. S. Reid (London, 1961). See also bibl. to Calvinism.

CONSENSUS TIGURINUS (Lat., 'the Zürich Agreement'). The formula of faith agreed upon in May 1549 by J. *Calvin and G. *Farel, representing the Protestants of French Switzerland, and H. *Bullinger (H. *Zwingli's successor in the town of Zürich), representing those of German Switzerland. Its 26 arts. were primarily concerned to set forth a doctrine of the Eucharist which conformed with *Calvinist principles and was free from the objections which, in the eyes of the Zwinglians, attached to *Consubstantiation.

The text, besides being pr. among Calvin's works, is pr. in H. A. Niemeyer (ed.), Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 191–217; the principal clauses are repr. in Kidd, pp. 652–6 (No. 319). B. Christ in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 732–4, s.v. 'Züricher Konsens'. See also bibl. to Calvinism.

CONSERVATIVE EVANGELICALISM. See under Fundamentalism.

CONSIGNATORIUM (also known as the Chrismarium or Locus Chrismatis). The room or building sometimes adjoining the *baptistery in which the bishop on *Holy Saturday or the Vigil of *Pentecost (the two days on which baptism was solemnly conferred in the early Church) used to confirm the newly baptized by 'signing' them with the *chrism. Some fine examples of such 'consignatoria' have been discovered in N. Africa.

F. J. Dölger, 'Die Firmung in den Denkmälern des christlichen Altertums' in R.Q., xix (1905), pp. 1–41, esp. pp. 26–41, with reff. F. Sühling in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 303–6, s.v., with bibl. reff.

CONSISTORY (Lat. consistorium). Orig. the ante-chamber of the Imperial palace at Rome where the Emperor administered justice from a seat on a tribunal with others standing around him (consistentes). The word is now used of certain ecclesiastical courts.

In the C of E the Consistory Court is the Bishop's court for the administration of ecclesiastical law within his own diocese, except in the diocese of Canterbury where it is known as 'the Commissary Court'. The judge is styled the '*Chancellor' (in Canterbury, the Commissary-General). Except when the Bishop in his patent appointing the Chancellor reserves to himself the power to try certain cases, the Chancellor is the sole judge and may even try cases to which the Bishop is a party. Appeal normally lies to the Provincial Court and thence, since 1963, to the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, except for those cases where the jurisdiction of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is preserved. These Courts lost much of their former importance when their jurisdiction in matrimonial and testamentary matters was removed by the Court of Probate Act (1857) and the Matrimonial Causes Act (1857).

In the RC Church the Consistory is the assembly of *cardinals convoked by and meeting in the presence of the Pope (quia simul praesente Papa consistunt cardinales). Such consistories are of three kinds, 'public', 'semi-public', and 'private'. At the first the Pope receives foreign sovereigns and ambassadors, confers the '*red hat' on new cardinals, and carries forward to a new stage the process of *canonization. Semi-public consistories, attended by bishops residing within a hundred miles of Rome, and certain other Italian prelates, as well as by the cardinals, also have an important function in canonization. The last, at which none but the Pope and cardinals are present, is the ordinary court in which the more important business of the Papacy is transacted.

In many *Presbyterian Churches (Switzerland, Holland, U.S.A.), the Consistory Court is the name given to the court corresponding to the *Kirk-session (q.v.) in *Scotland.

On the C of E Consistory Court, R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), vol. i, p. 197 f., vol. ii, pp. 926 f., 999, 1038; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 64, 143 f., 156, 174, 288. See also bibl. to Chancellor (Diocesan).

On the RC Consistory, A. Boudinhon in E.B. (ed. 11), vi (1910), p. 978 f., s.v.; H. Papi, S.J., in C.E., iv (1908), p. 285 f., s.v.; J. Raffalli in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 354–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Curia.

CONSTANCE, Council of (1414–17). The Council was convoked in 1414 by *John XXIII at the instigation of the Emp. Sigismund. Its purpose was to end the *Great Schism and also to reform the Church and combat heresy.

In 1414 there were three Popes: Gregory XII, in the line of *Urban VI; *Benedict XIII, the successor of *Clement VI of Avignon; and John XXIII, who was in the line inaugurated at the Council of *Pisa. At Constance, since John had summoned the Council, only his obedience was represented, but it far outnumbered that of his rivals. This fact, together with the presence of a large number of Italian bishops, gave him a feeling of security, which was soon shaken by the general movement to secure ecclesiastical peace by the removal of all three Popes in favour of a fourth. When, in order to neutralize the Italian preponderance, the Council decided to vote by Nations (Italian, German, French and English), and when accusations were being circulated against his personal behaviour, John became frightened and offered to resign if his rivals would do the same. He then left Constance in disguise on 20 March 1415. The Council was thrown into confusion, but was rallied by Sigismund. Besides summoning John to return, in order to give itself judicial standing in the absence of its papal convenor, in its fifth session (15 April 1415) the Council enacted the decree 'Haec Sancta', declaring that 'this Council holds its power direct from Christ; everyone, no matter his rank or office, even if it be papal, is bound to obey it in whatever pertains to faith, to the extirpation of the above-mentioned schism, as well as to the reform of the Church in its head and in its members'. John was brought back, condemned for scandalous conduct (but not for heresy) and deposed on 29 May.

Gregory XII abdicated on 4 July, but only after his representative, Cardinal Dominici, had convoked the Council anew. (Gregory did not recognize the earlier convocation, and the Council acquiesced in this action.) His cardinals then joined the assembly. Gregory himself was nominated permanent legate at Ancona and died on 18 Oct. 1417.

Benedict XIII with the King of Aragon met Sigismund at Perpignan on 18 Sept. 1416, but they failed to reach an agreement. Sigismund then signed a pact with the Spanish kings and their allies at Narbonne, whereby the assembly (not the Council) at Constance would invite the Spaniards to a council in Constance, and in the course of the next year various Spanish and Portuguese delegates arrived. Meantime Sigismund tried to restore peace between England and France, but because of his alliance with the English the French left the English–German combination at the Council and voted with the Italians and Spanish.

On 27 Jan. 1417 Sigismund returned to the Council, determined to effect ecclesiastical reform before electing a new Pope. There were serious divisions on the question, the Italians demanding an election first. On 26 July 1417 Benedict was deposed. A compromise on the reform–election issue was accepted whereby such reform decrees as had so far been agreed upon should be promulgated, and the Pope elected by a conclave of all the cardinals, with six additional members from each Nation, the successful candidate to need two-thirds of the votes of the cardinals and of each separate Nation. After a conclave of three days, Oddo *Colonna, a cardinal deacon, was elected on 11 Nov. 1417 and took the name of *Martin V.

Apart from the healing of the schism, reform of the Church had been demanded from the beginning. There were, however, numerous obstacles, esp. the diversity of interests of the different Nations and the desire of the various bodies, including the Universities, to preserve their own advantages. Apart from a decree demanding the restoration of ecclesiastical property illegitimately occupied during the schism (23 Sept. 1415), the first five reforming decrees were promulgated on 9 Oct. 1417. The first of these, 'Frequens', enacted that there should be a General Council after 5, 7 and then every 10, years, each one announced by the preceding one. The other four decrees concerned regulations for schisms, translation of bishops and the prohibition of spolia. A list of 18 points needing reform (avisamenta) was drawn up (30 Oct. 1417). After the election of Martin V a commission endeavoured to devise decrees on the lines of these avisamenta, but no unanimity was achieved. Then each Nation and the Pope proposed decrees, which resulted in seven enactments concerned mainly with exemptions and taxes. Many of the aspirations of the individual Nations were settled by *concordats, a term which seems to have been used here for the first time.

The Council also dealt with contemporary heresies, esp. those of J. *Wycliffe and J. *Hus. It condemned over 200 propositions of the former, and ordered his body to be removed from consecrated ground. The latter, who had taught doctrines similar to those of Wycliffe, came to Constance under safe-conduct from the Emperor. After violating the Papal prohibition to preach and say Mass, he was imprisoned. Refusing to recant, he was condemned as a heretic on 6 July 1415 and handed over to the secular authorities to be burned at the stake. In the next year *Jerome of Prague, his follower and friend, suffered the same fate. The affairs of the French Franciscan, John Parvus, and the Dominican, John Falkenberg, who had taught the legality of tyrannicide, were also treated at the Council, but not finally decided.

The Council of Constance is usually reckoned as the Sixteenth General Council, but opinions differ as to whether its oecumenicity dates from its beginning, Gregory's reconvocation or Martin's election. Consequently some hold the decree 'Haec Sancta' to be oecumenical, others not. Among the former, some hold it to be of permanent validity, others as conciliar but intended only as a temporary expedient to meet a transient situation. The Council's importance lay in its ending of the schism and in its crystallizing and diffusing of ideas about authority in general and especially about authority in the Church which were to have far-reaching effects.

Hardouin, viii, cols. 209–944; Mansi, xxvii (1784), cols. 519–1240, and xxviii (1785), cols. 1–958. Crit. ed. of the Acta Concilii Constantiensis by H. Finke (4 vols., Münster, 1896–1928). Eng. tr. of contemporary sources for the Council by Louis R. Loomis, The Council of Constance, ed. and annotated by J. H. Mundy–K. M. Woody (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, lxiii; 1961), with full introd. H. von der Hardt, Magnum Oecumenicum Constantiense Concilium (6 vols., Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1697–1700; indices, &c., 1742). U. Richental (d. 1436–7), Das Konzil zu Konstanz (reprod. in facsimile and ed. with comm. by O. Feger, 2 vols., Constance, 1964), with text, ii, pp. 149–278. J. Lenfant, Histoire du concile de Constance (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1714; enlarged ed., 2 vols., 1727); L. Tosti, Storia del concilio di Costanza (2 vols. bound in one, Naples, 1853); H. Finke, Forschungen und Quellen zur Geschichte des Konstanzer Konzils (1889). J. H. Wylie, The Council of Constance to the Death of Hus (Ford Lectures for 1900; 1900). Hefele–Leclercq, vii (pt. 1; 1916), pp. 71–584. H. Hollnsteiner, 'Studien zur Geschäftsordnung am Konstanzer Konzil. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Parlamentarismus und der Demokratie' in Abhandlungen aus dem Gebiete der mittleren und neueren Geschichte und ihrer Hilfswissenschaften. Eine Festgabe zum siebzigsten Geburtstag . . . Heinrich Finke (1925), pp. 240–56; id., 'Das Konstanzer Konzil in der Geschichte der christlichen Kirche' in Mitteilungen des österreichischen Instituts für Geschichtsforschung, Ergänzungsband, xi (1929) pp. 395–420. E. F. Jacob, Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (Publications of the University of Manchester, cclxxxiii; Historical Series, lxxx, 1943; ed. 3. 1963). A. Franzen–W. Müller (edd.), Das Konzil von Konstanz. Beiträge zu seiner Geschichte und Theologie. Festschrift unter dem Protektorat seiner Exzellenz des Hochwürdigsten Herrn Erzbischofs Dr. Hermann Schäufele (1964). J. Gill, S.J., Constance et Bâle-Florence (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, ix; 1965), esp. pp. 41–115. P. de Vooght, Les Pouvoirs du Concile et l'autorité du Pape au Concile de Constance. Le décret Haec Sancta Synodus du 6 avril 1415 (Unam Sanctam, lvi; 1965). H. Jedin, Bischöfliches Konzil oder Kirchenparlament? Ein Beitrag zur Ekklesiologie der Konzilien von Konstanz und Basel (Vorträge der Aeneas Silvius Stiftung an der Universität Basel, ii; 1963). E. Delaruelle–E. R. Labande–P. Ourliac in Fliche–Martin, xiv (1962), pp. 167–215, with extensive bibl. p. 167 f. A. Baudrillart in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1200–24, s.v.; L. Cristiani in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 390–424. B. Tierney in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 219–23, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to D'Ailly, Pierre; Gerson, Jean le Charlier; Hus, John, and Wycliffe, John.

CONSTANCE MISSAL, The. See Missale Speciale.

CONSTANTINE THE GREAT (d. 337), Roman emperor. The date of his birth is unknown; it has been variously placed between 274 and 288. The son of the Emp. Constantius Chlorus and St. *Helena, he was sent in 292 to the court of *Diocletian, the senior emperor, under whose influence he learned the new Byzantine ideas of absolute sovereignty, which were rapidly replacing the Roman conception of the principate. In 306, on the death of Constantius, he was proclaimed Emperor at *York, and became senior ruler of the empire in 312, after defeating his rival Maxentius at the Milvian Bridge. At that battle Constantine adopted the Labarum standard, as the champion of Christianity, and shortly afterwards toleration and Imperial favour were given to the Christian faith, though whether there was ever a formal and comprehensive proclamation, such as the supposed Edict of *Milan, is a matter of disagreement among historians.

Since Constantine's policy was to unite the Christian Church to the secular State by the closest possible ties, it was natural that even before he formally professed Christianity himself he should be concerned with the internal affairs of the Church. In 313 the *Donatist schismatics in Africa appealed to him to settle their controversy with the Church of that province, and at their request he referred the matter first to a commission of bishops, then to a synod of Gaul and Italy (*Arles, 314), and finally in 316 heard the case himself. In each trial the verdict went against the Donatists, who thereupon attacked not only their ecclesiastical opponents but also the State, encouraging rioting and brigandage. Constantine was therefore constrained to reinforce his verdict with repressive measures.

A similar appeal from the contending parties led Constantine to summon the Council of *Nicaea (325) to settle the *Arian dispute about the Person of Christ. The Emperor himself presided, though unbaptized, a circumstance which foreshadows the Byzantine theory of the emperors as supreme rulers of Church and State alike. The victory of orthodoxy which the creed of the council symbolized did not prevent Constantine from banishing prominent orthodox leaders in later years (e.g. St. *Athanasius in 336) at the instance of their enemies. Constantine's ecclesiastical advisers included men of various beliefs, esp. *Hosius, Bp. of Cordova, *Eusebius, Bp. of Caesarea, and *Lactantius.

The breach with the old traditions of Rome was complete when, after the victory at Chrysopolis (324) which had made him sole emperor, Constantine fixed his capital at Byzantium (rebuilt and inaugurated as 'Constantinople' in 330). Throughout his reign he did his best to conciliate both pagans and Christians, and it is difficult to say when he first decided to embrace Christianity. He was not baptized until just before his death, but deferment of baptism was common in those days, and his policy and legislation, though not free from grave blemishes, show a strongly Christian tendency from the first. He humanized the criminal law and the law of debt, mitigated the conditions of slavery, made grants to support poor children, thus discouraging the exposure of unwanted babies, freed celibates and unmarried persons from special taxation, legislated against incontinence, and exempted Christian clergy from the burden of the decurionate. In 321 he ordered that *Sunday should become a public holiday. He liberally endowed Christian church building, esp. at the Holy Places in Palestine.

If the centralization of the empire at Constantinople led to an increasing Imperial control of the E. Church, it had also the consequence, perhaps unforeseen, of making the bishops of Rome more prominent than any other figure, lay or ecclesiastical, in the W.; and it is from the 4th cent. that the Papacy begins to assume its secular importance and the position which it held in the Middle Ages.

Legend has added much to history. A tradition going back to the 5th cent. asserts that he was baptized at the *Lateran by Pope *Sylvester, and his connexions with the Pope are further embellished in the *Donation of Constantine (q.v.). In the E. Church he has been named the 'Thirteenth Apostle' and is venerated as a saint. Feast day in the E., 21 May (with St. *Helena).

The chief primary sources are several official edicts of Constantine; some contemporary panegyrics by pagan orators; Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum; and Eusebius, Vita Constantini. A collection of the edicts and other material relating to Constantine is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, viii. The genuineness of the documents purporting to be by Constantine in the Vita Constantini has been challenged (A. Crivellucci, Della fede storica di Eusebio nella vita di Costantino (Leghorn, 1888), and others) in recent times; but their authenticity has been ably upheld in I. A. Heikel, Kritische Beiträge zu den Constantin-Schriften des Eusebius (T.U., xxxvi, Hft. 4; 1911), and I. Daniele, I documenti costantiniani della Vita Constantini di Eusebio di Cesarea (1938). H. Grégoire, 'Eusèbe n'est pas l'auteur de la "Vita Constantini" dans sa forme actuelle et Constantin n'est pas "converti" en 312', in Byzantion, xiii (1938), pp. 561–83, denied the genuineness of the whole work, but he also has had little following. J. Vogt, 'Berichte über Kreuzeserscheinungen aus dem 4. Jahrhundert n. Chr.' in Mélanges Henri Grégoire, i (Annuaire de l'Institut de Philologie et d'Histoire Orientales et Slaves, ix; Brussels, 1949), pp. 593–606. On the discovery of a papyrus containing a contemporary copy of one of the documents, see A. H. M. Jones–T. C. Skeat, 'Notes on the Genuineness of the Constantinian Documents in Eusebius's Life of Constantine' in J.E.H., v (1954), pp. 196–200. F. Winkelmann, Die Textbezeugung der Vita Constantini des Eusebius von Caesarea (T.U., lxxxiv; 1962). F. Halkin, S.J. (ed.), 'Une Nouvelle Vie de Constantin dans un Légendier de Patmos' in Anal. Boll., lxxvii (1959), pp. 63–107; with reff. to other legends; id., 'L'Empereur Constantin converti par Euphratas', ib., lxxviii (1960), pp. 5–17.

The modern study of Constantine may be said to begin with J. Burckhardt, Die Zeit Konstantins des Grossen (1853). The problem posed here as to the genuineness of Constantine's acceptance of Christianity has been the subject of a large and important literature. Among the chief items are T. Keim, Der Übertritt Constantins des Grossen zum Christenthum (1862); T. *Zahn, Constantin der Grosse und die Kirche (1876); F. J. Dölger (ed.), Konstantin der Grosse und seine Zeit. . . . Festgabe zum Konstantinsjubiläum (R.Q., Suppl. xix: 1913); E. *Schwartz, Kaiser Konstantin und die christliche Kirche (1913; ed. 2, 1936). J. Maurice, Numismatique constantinienne (3 vols., 1906–12); id., Constantin le Grand [1927]. There is a masterly survey of the questions involved in N. H. Baynes' Raleigh Lecture, 'Constantine the Great and the Christian Church' in The Proceedings of the British Academy, xv (1929), pp. 341–442. More recent literature includes A. Piganiol, L'Empereur Constantin (1932); H. Lietzmann, 'Der Glaube Konstantins des Grossen' in Sb. (Berl.), 1937, pp. 263–75. H. Berkhof, Kirche und Kaiser. Eine Untersuchung der Entstehung der byzantinischen und der theokratischen Staatsauffassung im vierten Jahrhundert (Germ. tr., Zürich, 1947; orig. Dutch, 1946). A. Alföldi, The Conversion of Constantine and Pagan Rome (1948). A. H. M. Jones, Constantine and the Conversion of Europe (1948). J. Vogt, Constantin der Grosse und sein Jahrhundert (Munich, 1949). P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Constantiniana (S.T., clxxi; 1953); H. Dörries, Das Selbstzeugnis Kaiser Konstantins (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, xxxiv; 1954); H. Kraft, Kaiser Konstantins religiöse Entwicklung (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xx; 1955); L. Voelkl, Der Kaiser Konstantin. Annalen einer Zeitenwende (1957). H. Dörries, Konstantin der Grosse (Urban-Bücher, xxix [1958]); id., Constantine and Religious Liberty, tr. by R. Bainton (D. H. Terry Lectures, 1958; New Haven, 1960). S. Calderone, Costantino e il cattolicesimo (Florence, 1962 ff.). R. MacMullen, Constantine (New York, 1969; London, 1970). There is also a useful collection of specialized papers in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, xxi (1967).

Modern summaries, with further bibl., C.Anc.H., xii. H. M. D. Parker, A History of the Roman World from A.D. 138 to 337 (1935), pp. 238–309. J. Vogt in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 306–79, s.v., with bibl.

On the cult of Constantine, see esp. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 2622–95, s.v.

CONSTANTINOPLE. In A.D. 330 *Constantine inaugurated Constantinople as his capital on the site of the Greek city of Byzantium. The town, which was later considerably enlarged, remained the capital of the E. Empire until 1453, except from 1204 to 1261 when, after capture by the *Crusaders, it was the capital of a Latin empire. From 1453 it was the Turkish capital until this was transferred to Ankara in 1923.

Byzantium had a Christian community at least from the 2nd cent., and Constantinople was a Christian city from its inauguration. The Bishop was at first subject to the see of Heraclea; but before long, as the Bishop of the 'New Rome', he took his place beside the Bps. of *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Rome. At the council in the city in 381 he was given honorary pre-eminence after the Bp. of Rome, and in 451, though the Pope objected, patriarchal powers were formally conferred upon him (can. 28). Meanwhile Alexandria had striven with Constantinople for supremacy in the E., and *Theophilus and *Cyril of Alexandria obtained respectively the depositions of *Chrysostom (in 403) and *Nestorius (in 431). Finally Rome and Constantinople were left to struggle for pre-eminence. A gradual estrangement ensued: the final breach between the Catholic W. and the Orthodox E. is usually assigned to the year 1054, but the beginning of the schism cannot in fact be exactly dated. Since the 6th cent. the Patr. (as the Bp. was now designated) of Constantinople has been recognized in the E. as the *Oecumenical Patriarch.

Since the city has come under Turkish domination, most of its many ancient churches have become mosques, including the celebrated church of *St. Sophia (more recently, converted into a museum). By the Treaty of Lausanne (1923) the Turkish Republic is bound to protect the Greek Christians in Constantinople; but the Patriarch may be chosen only from Turkish citizens.

The classic treatise is C. D. *Du Cange, Constantinopolis Christiana (Paris, fol., 1680; still useful). Modern works include A. van Millingen, Byzantine Constantinople (1899). Id., Byzantine Churches in Constantinople (1912). C. Diehl, Constantinople (Paris, 1912). G. Every, S.S.M., The Byzantine Patriarchate 451–1204 (1947; rev. ed., 1962). R. Janin, A.A., Constantinople byzantine. Développement urbain et répertoire topographique (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, iv; 1950; ed. 2, 1964). J. Ebersolt, Constantinople. Recueil d'études, d'archéologie et d'histoire (1951). G. Downey, Constantinople in the Age of Justinian (Norman, Oklahoma, 1960). P. Sherrard, Constantinople. Iconography of a Sacred City (1965). D. Talbot Rice, Constantinople: Byzantium—Istanbul (1965). M. Maclagan, The City of Constantinople (Ancient Peoples and Places, 1968). E. Pears, The Destruction of the Greek Empire and the Story of the Capture of Constantinople by the Turks (1903); S. Runciman, The Fall of Constantinople (1965). Valuable study, with full bibl., by S. Vailhé, A.A., in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1307–1519, s.v. 'Constantinople (Église de)'; more recent study by R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 626–754. G. Downey in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 231–7, s.v., with further bibl.

CONSTANTINOPLE, First Council of (381). It was convened by the Emp. *Theodosius I to unite the E. Church at the end of the lengthy *Arian controversy on the basis of the *Nicene faith. 150 orthodox and 36 heretical bishops took part, under the presidency of *Melitius, Bp. of Antioch (who died during the Council). Although neither W. bishops nor Roman legates were present, its achievement was sufficiently significant for it to come to be regarded as the Second *General Council in both E. and W. The work of the Council of *Nicaea with regard to the doctrine of Christ was ratified, and the humanity of Christ safeguarded by condemning *Apollinarianism. The so-called *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, traditionally ascribed to this Council, was probably not drawn up by it, and it is possible that the Council had no direct connexion with it. In ecclesiastical matters the Council (a) appointed *Nectarius as Bp. of Constantinople, in place of St. *Gregory of Nazianzus; (b) granted to Constantinople honorary precedence (τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς) over all Churches save Rome; and (c) misguidedly appointed as Bp. of *Antioch Flavian rather than Paulinus, who, by an agreement of the schismatic parties, should have succeeded *Melitius.

Hardouin, i, cols. 807–26; Mansi, iii (1759), cols. 521–600. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 1–48. Text of Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 84–7; crit. ed. of Lat. versions in E.O.M.I.A., II, iii (1929), cols. 401–72. Gk. text of canons with names of Bishops ed. from two Patmos MSS. by C. H. Turner in J.T.S., xv (1914), pp. 161–78. W. *Bright, Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils (ed. 2, 1892), pp. 90–128. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Nicée et Constantinople (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, i; 1963), esp. pp. 139–242. A. M. Ritter, Das Konzil von Konstantinopel und sein Symbol. Studien zur Geschichte und Theologie des II. Ökumenischen Konzils (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, xv; 1965). N. Q. King, 'The 150 Holy Fathers of the Council of Constantinople 381 A.D. Some notes on the Bishop-lists' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, i (T.U., lxiii; 1957), pp. 635–41. G. Bardy and J. R. Palanque in Fliche–Martin, iii (1936), pp. 285–92. F. A. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), p. 43 f., s.v. 'Arianismus'; J. Bois in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1227–31, s.v.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Second Council of (553). This, the Fifth General Council, was convoked by the Emp. *Justinian to decide the prolonged controversy over the *Three Chapters, and esp. whether *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret of Cyrus, and *Ibas of Edessa should be condemned as tainted with *Nestorianism, or whether, following the attitude of the Council of *Chalcedon, they should be spared. The adherents of *Monophysitism, who were anxious to shake the authority of Chalcedon, as well as the Emperor, who wished to reconcile the Monophysites, were opposed to any toleration of Theodore and his associates. After much Monophysite agitation the Emperor issued a decree (c. 551) condemning the Three Chapters. When this was accepted by Askidas, Menas, and other bishops of the Imperial party, Pope *Vigilius excommunicated them (551).

The Council was convened under the presidency of Eutychius, Patr. of *Constantinople, on 5 May 553. The 165 bishops who signed the acts were almost all Easterns. The Three Chapters were condemned and their authors anathematized. During its course Vigilius, who refused to attend for fear of violence as well as in protest against the preponderance of E. bishops present, drew up the so-called 'Constitutum', signed by himself and 16 W. bishops, in which, while condemning 60 propositions of Theodore of Mopsuestia, he refused to anathematize his person on the grounds that he had not been condemned at *Ephesus (431) or Chalcedon (451) and that it was not the custom of the Church to condemn the dead. The Council replied by erasing the Pope's name from the diptychs in the 7th session. Vigilius was for a short time exiled, but as the Emperor had nothing to gain from a rupture with the Pope he used every means to bring about a reconciliation. Vigilius finally agreed to accept the Council and annulled his former decisions in favour of the Three Chapters.

Of the 14 anathemas pronounced by the Council the first 12 are directed chiefly against Theodore of Mopsuestia, the 13th against Theodoret of Cyrus, and the 14th against Ibas. In the 11th anathema the name of *Origen occurs in a list of heretics, but there are grounds for believing this to be an interpolation. Despite the Papal acceptance the Council was not at once recognized as oecumenical in the W. *Milan and Aquileia even broke off communion with Rome, and relations were not restored with Milan until the end of the 6th, and with Aquileia until the end of the 7th, cent. The Council, unlike the four preceding General Councils, issued no canons.

Hardouin, iii, cols. 1–328; Mansi, ix (1743), cols. 157–658. H. *Noris, Dissertatio Historica de Synodo Quinta Oecumenica (1673; repr. in Noris's Opera, i, Verona, 1729, cols. 550–820). F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert und das fünfte allgemeine Konzil (1899), pp. 77–98. R. Devreesse, 'Le Cinquième Concile et l'œcuménicité byzantine' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, iii (S.T., cxxiii; 1946), pp. 1–15; C. Moeller, 'Le Cinquième Concile œcuménique et le magistère ordinaire au VIe siècle' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, xxxv (1951), pp. 413–23. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1909), pp. 1–156. L. Bréhier in Fliche–Martin, iv (1937), esp. pp. 472–87. J. Bois in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1231–59, s.v.; R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 757–60. s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to Monophysitism, Theodore of Mopsuestia, and Three Chapters.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Third Council of (680). This, the Sixth General Council, was convoked at the demand of the Emp. Constantine IV (Pogonatus) to settle the prolonged *Monothelite controversy in the E. Church. Pope *Agatho, having held a Synod at *Rome (680) in which the doctrine of the Two Wills in Christ was again affirmed, sent his delegates to the Emperor with a letter expounding this teaching. On their arrival the Emperor called a Council of the bishops of the patriarchates of *Constantinople and *Antioch. The debates of its 18 sessions, conducted chiefly by the Papal envoys, were concerned solely with the Monothelite question. Macarius, the Patr. of Antioch, was condemned as a Monothelite, and in the 13th session the principal leaders of the heresy, among whom the Council included the former Pope *Honorius, were anathematized.

The Dogmatic Decree of the Council is principally a reproduction of the profession of faith drawn up at *Chalcedon, affirming the doctrine of the Two Natures, to which is added, as a necessary consequence, the statement of the reality of the Two Wills (θελήματα) and the Two Operations (ἐνέργειαι). The Council rejected all physical unity of the two wills, but admitted the existence of a moral unity, resulting from the complete harmony between the Divine and the human will in the God-man. The same position was affirmed regarding the duality of operations. The decree concluded with a résumé of the Christological teaching of the various Councils. This Council issued no canons.

Hardouin, iii, cols. 1043–1644; Mansi, xi (1765), cols. 189–922; Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 472–538. L. Bréhier in Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 183–91. J. Bois in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1259–73; R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 760–3, s.v. See also bibl. to Monothelitism.

CONSTANTINOPOLITAN CREED. See Nicene Creed.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHURCH, The. The schismatic Church established in France during the Revolution by the *Civil Constitution of the Clergy (q.v.) of 12 July 1790. It was organized in 1791, under the protection of the National Assembly, whilst beside it the 'legitimate Church', whose priests refused to take the Constitutional Oath, continued to exist. The majority of the faithful sided with the latter, esp. when the schismatics abandoned the old discipline and priests and bishops began to marry and divorces came to be permitted. After the triumph of the Jacobins, who proclaimed the 'cult of reason', the Constitutional Church itself had to endure persecution, and many of its priests apostatized. After the fall of Robespierre (1794) a certain amount of toleration was granted, but the state now refused to pay the Constitutional priests, a measure which hit the schismatic Church particularly hard, as it could count on very little support from its laity. Its reputation, too, had suffered considerable damage by the apostasies within its ranks. When Napoleon concluded the *Concordat of 1801, *Pius VII had little difficulty in obtaining its abolition by the intervention of the secular power, the agency which had created it.

There is an extensive literature on the Catholic Church in France at the time of the Revolution. L. Sciout, Histoire de la constitution civile du clergé, 1790–1801 (4 vols., 1872–81). C. S. Phillips, The Church in France, 1789–1870 (1929), pp. 7–78, with bibl., p. 305 f. A. Debidour, Histoire des rapports de l'Église et de l'État en France de 1789 à 1870 (1898), pp. 83–223. P. de La Gorce, Histoire religieuse de la Révolution française (5 vols., 1909–23), esp. vol. i, pp. 349–506. A. Aulard, Le Christianisme et la Révolution française (1925; Eng. tr., 1927). A. Latreille, L'Église Catholique et la Révolution française (2 vols., 1946–50). A. Dansette, Histoire religieuse de la France contemporaine, i (1948), pp. 76–187. See also bibl. to Civil Constitution of the Clergy and Concordat of 1801.

CONSTITUTIONS OF CLARENDON. See Clarendon, Constitutions of.

CONSUBSTANTIAL. Of one and the same substance or being. The word is used esp. of the eternal relationship which subsists between the three Persons of the Holy Trinity. The Latin consubstantialis is the W. counterpart of the Greek ὁμοούσιος (see Homoousios), the test-word of theological orthodoxy in the *Arian controversy, and may indeed have been its immediate source.

CONSUBSTANTIATION. In the doctrine of the *Eucharist, the belief, esp. associated with the name of M. *Luther, that, after the consecration, the substances both of the Body and Blood of Christ and of the bread and wine co-exist in union with each other. Luther illustrated it by the analogy of the iron put into the fire whereby both fire and iron are united in the red-hot iron and yet each continues unchanged. The doctrine was formulated in opposition to the medieval doctrine of *transubstantiation, acc. to which the substances of the bread and wine were no longer present after consecration, but only their '*accidents' persisted.

J. H. Crehan, S.J., in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 114–17. See also works cited under Eucharist.

CONSUETUDINARY. See Customary.

CONTAKION (Gk. κοντάκιον, from κοντός, 'pole' or 'shaft'; hence a vellum roll wound round a piece of wood). In the E. Church, a hymn composed in a series of strophes and intended for liturgical use. Contakia, esp. those of St. *Romanos, enjoyed very wide popularity during the 6th–7th cent., but from the 8th cent. onwards they came to be largely replaced by a new form of liturgical hymnography, the *canon. In modern editions of the service books, usually only the first strophe of the contakion is included; this is read or sung after the sixth ode of the canon, after the *Little Entrance in the Liturgy, and at most offices.

E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949), esp. pp. 152–67; ed. 2 (1961), pp. 179–97, with reff.

CONTARINI, GASPARO (1483–1542), cardinal. He belonged to one of the foremost families of Venice. After education at the University of Padua, where he was won for the New Learning, he served as Venetian ambassador at the court of *Charles V (attending in this capacity the Diet of *Worms of 1521), in England, in Spain, and at the Papal court. He soon became famous as a theologian. In 1516 he published a treatise defending (against P. *Pomponazzi) the immortality of the soul, and c. 1530 a book against M. *Luther, Confutatio Articulorum seu Quaestionum Lutheri. His popularity at Rome led him, though only a layman, to be created a cardinal by *Paul III in 1535. In 1536 he was put on the commission which was to prepare the way for the Council (of *Trent) and in 1536–7 he issued his 'Consilium de emendanda ecclesia', proposing many radical reforms. In 1536 he became Bp. of Belluno. At the Conference of *Ratisbon (1541) he took an active part in this last attempt at reunion with the Lutherans, before the influence of the *Jesuits and of *Counter-Reformation ideals finally closed the possibility of reconciliation. It was while searching at Ratisbon for a common formula on justification that he wrote his 'Epistola de justificatione' (25 May 1541), a profession of faith in which Contarini was believed in many quarters to have compromised the Catholic doctrine.

Opera [ed. by L. Contarini, with a life by G. della Casa] (Paris, 1571). Gegenreformatorische Schriften (c. 1530–42) ed. F. Hünermann (Corpus Catholicorum, vii; 1923). F. Dittrich (ed.), Regesten und Briefe des Cardinals Gasparo Contarini, 1483–1542 (1881). Id., Gasparo Contarini, 1483–1542. Eine Monographie (1885). T. Brieger, Gasparo Contarini und das Regensburger Concordienwerk des Jahres 1541 (1870); G. Bianchini, Un magistrato-cardinale del secolo XVI (1895); W. Braun, Kardinal Gasparo Contarini oder der 'Reformkatholizismus' unserer Tage im Lichte der Geschichte (1903); H. Rückert, Die theologische Entwicklung Gasparo Contarinis (1926); H. Hackert, Die Staatsschrift Gasparo Contarinis und die politischen Verhältnisse Venedigs im sechzehnten Jahrhundert (Heidelberger Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, Hft. lxix; 1940). H. Jedin, Kardinal Contarini als Kontroverstheologe (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, ix; 1949). O. Ferrara, Gasparo Contarini et ses missions (Fr. tr. from Spanish, 1956). P. Matheson, Cardinal Contarini at Regensburg (Oxford, 1972). F. Hünermann, 'Die Rechtfertigungslehre des Kardinals Gasparo Contarini' in Th.Q., cxxi (1921), pp. 1–22. H. Jedin in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 771–84.

CONTEMPLATION. As used by modern religious writers non-discursive mental prayer, as distinguished from *meditation (q.v.). In so far as this stage of prayer is held to be reached by the normal development of the natural faculties, it is termed 'acquired contemplation' (also the 'prayer of simplicity'); but when considered as the fruit of supernatural grace, directly acting on the soul, it is known as 'infused contemplation'. Mystical writers such as St. *Teresa of Avila distinguish between several forms of mystic contemplation.

C. Baumgartner in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 1645–2193, s.v., with reff.

CONTEMPLATIVE LIFE, The. The state of life devoted primarily to prayer. Though a measure of contemplation is demanded of every Christian, whatever his state, in its usual meaning the term 'Contemplative Life' is confined to certain religious living under vows. In the Contemplative Orders much time is spent in prayer, both vocal (the performing of the Divine Office) and mental, though considerable periods are devoted to manual work. The life is normally very austere. Silence is strictly observed for the greater part of the day, and severe fasts and vigils are kept. Among the best-known Contemplative Orders are the *Carthusian monks and nuns, and the *Carmelite, *Poor Clare, *Dominican (second order), and many *Benedictine nuns.

CONTESTATIO (Lat.). In *Gallican service books, the usual name for the *Preface at the *Eucharist.

CONTINGENCY. In metaphysics, the condition of an existent which might have been other than it actually is, or alternatively what is incidental in contrast to what is necessary. St. *Thomas Aquinas defined it as the possibility of being and not being (contingens est, quod potest esse et non esse). Acc. to Christian belief, the created world is possessed of contingent being, and thereby stands in utter contrast with the necessary being of God. The argument which professes to demonstrate the necessary existence of God from the contingency of the created world is known as the '*Cosmological Argument' (q.v.).

CONTRACEPTION. See Humanae Vitae.

CONTRA-REMONSTRANTIE. The counter-declaration in which the more rigid *Calvinists stated their objections to the *Arminian '*Remonstrance' (q.v.). It was drawn up for the Conference which met at The Hague on 11 Mar. 1611. Its main points were: (1) Unconditional and absolute predestination of some souls to damnation. (2) Children as well as adults may be among the elect. (3) Election is not acc. to works or belief, but only at God's pleasure. (4) Christ died only for the elect. (5) The Holy Ghost speaks in Scripture only to the elect. (6) The elect can never lose the true belief. (7) This preservation does not lead to carelessness of life, but to positive virtue.

The text is in J. Trigland, Kerckelijcke Geschiedenissen begrypende de swaere Bekommerlijcke Geschillen in de Vereenigde Nederlanden voor-gefallen (Leyden, 1650), pp. 544–52 (the seven articles on p. 549 f.).

CONTRITION (Lat. contritio, 'a wearing away of something hard'). Contrition is a form of interior repentance, defined by the Council of *Trent as 'sorrow of heart and detestation of sin committed, with the purpose of not sinning in future' (sess. xiv, cap. 4). Moral theologians commonly hold that to be real it must have its grounds in the love of God, and hence distinguish it from *attrition (q.v.), an imperfect form of sorrow for sin, inspired by such lower motives as the fear of punishment. The classic utterance of the contrite heart in the OT is the *Miserere (Ps. 51). In the Gospels the need for contrition is taught esp. in the Parables of the Prodigal Son (Lk. 15. 11–32) and of the Pharisee and the Publican (Lk. 18. 9–14).

*Leo X replied to M. Luther's attack on the medieval notions of contrition in his bull, Exsurge, Domine (15 June 1520; list of heresies condemned repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 357–62) Nos. 1451–92). H. Dondaine, O.P., L'Attrition suffisante (Bibliothèque Thomiste, xxv; 1943). C. R. Meyer, The Thomistic Conception of Justifying Contrition (Mundelein, Ill., 1949). P. de Letter, S.J., 'Perfect Contrition and Perfect Charity' in Theological Studies, vii (1946), pp. 507–24; id., 'Two Concepts of Attrition and Contrition', ib., xi (1950), pp. 3–33. T. Ortolan in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1671–94; P. de Letter, S.J., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 278–83, s.v. See also works cited s.v. Penance.

CONVENT. The name 'convent' is derived from the Lat. conventus, a meeting or association of men for some purpose. In ecclesiastical usage it can refer either to the buildings in which a body of religious live together, or to the religious community itself. Historically it has been applied to the domicile of religious of either sex, though it tends now to be restricted to houses of nuns.

CONVENTICLE ACT (1664). The Act (16 Car. II, c. 4) which declared illegal all meetings in private houses or elsewhere of more than five persons (in addition to the household) for worship other than that prescribed by the BCP. A second Act of 1670 (22 Car. II, c. 1) mitigated the penalties laid down in 1664, but gave wider powers to those employed in suppressing conventicles. The acts were repealed by the *Toleration Act of 1689.

The Second Conventicle Act is pr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 623–632 (No. cxix).

CONVENTUAL MASS. The public Mass sung (or occasionally said) in religious communities where public choir *office is recited. This Mass is attended by the whole community. In cathedrals and collegiate churches the conventual Mass is properly known as a *capitular Mass, though the more general term 'conventual' is sometimes used.

CONVENTUALS. The branch of the *Franciscan Order which favoured the accumulation and common holding of property and followed a mitigated rule in contrast with the friars of the older tradition ('*Observantines' or 'Observants') who rejected property altogether. Their policy was approved by Pope *John XXII in 1322.

CONVERSI, a name widely used of lay brothers (q.v.) in monasteries. Their exact relation in medieval times to the other members of the community is a matter of considerable obscurity.

CONVERSION OF ST. PAUL, Feast of. The feast, kept on 25 Jan., is peculiar to the W. and of *Gallican origin, as contrasted with that of Sts. Peter and Paul (29 June), which originated in *Rome. In some early *martyrologies it is called the translatio of St. Paul, a fact which suggests that the date in the calendar was connected with the *translation of the relics of the Apostle (to his *basilica outside Rome?), though this still leaves its non-Roman origin unexplained.

CONVOCATIONS OF CANTERBURY AND YORK. The two ancient provincial assemblies of the clergy of the C of E. Traces of Church assemblies of the nation are already met with in *Bede, but their history properly begins with the ecclesiastical reorganization under Abp. *Theodore (668–90). In 733 began the separate provincial authority of *York, which henceforth remained a separate body.

Originally the assemblies consisted only of prelates, but in 1225 Stephen *Langton summoned in addition *Proctors for the cathedral and monastic chapters. In 1258 Archdeacons were also convoked with letters of proxy from their clergy. The future form of the Convocation of Canterbury was finally reached under Abp. *Peckham in 1283; it consisted of the Bishops, Abbots, Deans, and Archdeacons, together with two representatives from the clergy of each diocese and one representative from each chapter. At first the Bishops and lower clergy sat together and the whole body of clergy still constitute what is properly one assembly; but since the 15th cent. the convocations have sat as two Houses—the 'Upper' and 'Lower' Houses. The Abp. of Canterbury (or York) presides in the Upper House and in Full Synod (which consists of both Houses sitting together). At the beginning of each Convocation the Lower House is directed to elect one of its members *Prolocutor or Referendary; he presides over the Lower House when it sits separately, is responsible for communications between the Houses, and ascertains the opinion of the Lower House when a vote is taken in Full Synod. Business is normally initiated in the Upper House and sent down to the Lower House for its concurrence, which may be refused. It is possible to initiate business in the Lower House and send it for consideration by the President and Upper House either by a motion of the Lower House or by a process known as gravamen et reformandum; in this a schedule is introduced in the Lower House stating a grievance and usually proposing a remedy. If a grievance is adopted by the Lower House as an articulus cleri, it is transmitted to the Upper House as a united complaint of the inferior clergy. Since the Reformation the heads of religious houses have not sat in Convocation. From 1936 to 1970 the older Universities (Oxford, Cambridge and London) were represented in the Province of Canterbury, the electors being the clerks in Holy Orders resident or holding offices in the Universities concerned. In 1970 the representation of the Universities was broadened to include more recent foundations.

From a very early date these assemblies were the means through which the clergy taxed themselves. Edward I's attempt under the 'praemunientes clause' (1295) to summon representatives of the clergy to Parliament and thus compel the clergy to grant their taxes in this body failed, and it was not until after the Restoration that Convocation surrendered the right of making its own grants to the King (1664).

In the Middle Ages and later the legislative powers of Convocation varied considerably. The normal method of legislation was by Canons. The King was always on the look-out for any infringement of the Royal prerogative; and in 1532 *Henry VIII extorted from Convocation the '*Submission of the Clergy' (q.v.), later embodied in an Act of Parliament (1534). This Act severely limited the powers of Convocation and had a far-reaching effect on its subsequent fortunes. After the Reformation Convocation was both summoned and dissolved at the same time as Parliament, and the validity of the Canons enacted by Canterbury Convocation in 1640, after the dissolution of Parliament, has been called in question. The 1965 Convocations Act, however, laid down that from 1970 there should be quinquennial elections to Convocation, which should meet without reference to Parliamentary sessions.

With the return of the Church of England following the Stuart Restoration in 1660 care was taken to ensure the revival of the Convocations. In 1661 and 1662 a number of projects, including schemes for the reform of church courts, discipline and clerical income, were debated, but only one item of business was perfected, namely the revision of the BCP in 1662. After 1664 the Convocations ceased to be licensed for business, a seemingly unforeseen consequence of Archbishop *Sheldon's surrender of the clergy's right to tax themselves independently of the laity. The next two decades saw repeated attempts to secure a working Convocation, but without success. Its suspension was a major obstacle to the reforming zeal of the episcopate under Sheldon and *Sancroft.

After the Revolution of 1688 the Convocations entered upon a stormy period, when they were drawn into the current disputes about *Divine Right, Non-Resistance, and Passive Obedience. But while the majority of the clergy were High Churchmen and often Jacobite in sympathy, the Government secured in the early 18th cent. a Whiggish Bench of Bishops, so that the Upper House of Convocation was often in disagreement on important questions with the High Church clergy of the Lower House. This conflict was brought to an end with the *Bangorian Controversy in 1717, when, to prevent the condemnation of a sermon and book by Bp. B. *Hoadly, the Convocations were prorogued by Royal Writ. For nearly a century and a half the powers of the Crown under the Act for the Submission of the Clergy were interpreted as making it inexpedient for the Convocations to discuss any business whatever, and its meetings were purely formal. It was not until 1852, under the combined influence of the *Evangelical and *Oxford Movements, that the Convocation of Canterbury took the bold step of discussing business again. York followed the example of Canterbury in 1861.

The Houses of Convocation have always been, and still are, exclusively clerical assemblies. But since 1885 there has been associated with Convocation a 'House of Laymen' in each Province chosen by the Diocesan conferences. At the beginning of the 20th cent. the practice of joint sittings of the two Convocations was also initiated, and in 1904 a Representative Council consisting of the members of both the Convocations together with the two Houses of Laymen, sitting conjointly, was begun. This Representative Council, however, had no legal position or authority until 1920, when it was superseded by the *Church Assembly (q.v.), whose powers were defined in 'The Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act' of 1919, commonly known as the *Enabling Act. By the *Synodical Government Measure, 1969, practically all the functions of Convocation, including the power to legislate by Canon, were transferred to the General Synod, consisting of three Houses of Bishops, Clergy and Laity. Provision was made, however, for each Convocation to meet separately in its own Province, though, with a few minor exceptions, it may transact formal business only.

E. *Gibson, Synodus Anglicana, or the Constitution and Proceedings of an English Convocation, shown from the Acts and Registers thereof to be Agreeable to the Principles of an Episcopal Church (1702; ed. E. *Cardwell, 1854), with numerous primary docc.; E. Cardwell (ed.), Synodalia. A Collection of Articles of Religion, Canons, and Proceedings of Convocations in the Province of Canterbury, from the Year 1547 to the Year 1717, ii (1842). The proceedings of the Convocation of Canterbury are publd. in the Chronicle of Convocation (London, 1859 ff.); those of the Convocation of York in the York Journal of Convocation (London, 1874 ff.). A. F. Smethurst–H. R. Wilson (edd.), Acts of the Convocations of Canterbury and York (together with certain other resolutions) passed since the reform of the Convocations in 1921 (1948; enlarged ed. to end of 1970, 1971). T. Lathbury, A History of the Convocation of the Church of England [to 1742] (1842); J. W. Joyce, England's Sacred Synods. A Constitutional History of the Convocations of the Clergy, from the Earliest Records of Christianity in Britain to the date of the Promulgation of the Present Book of Common Prayer (1855). Dorothy B. Weske, Convocation of the Clergy. A Study of its Antecedents and its Rise with special emphasis upon its Growth and Activities in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries (C.H.S., 1937). E. W. Kemp, Counsel and Consent. Aspects of the Government of the Church as exemplified in the history of the English Provincial Synods (Bampton Lectures for 1960; 1961). On the early development of Convocation, E. Barker, The Dominican Order and Convocation (1913), pp. 31–76. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (1959), pp. 36–67. A. F. Smethurst, Convocation of Canterbury. What it is; what it does; how it works (1949). G. Grosse in D.E.C.H. (ed. 1948), pp. 144–50, s.v.

CONVULSIONARIES. Enthusiasts of the party of *Jansenist *Appellants against the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713), who exhibited supposedly miraculous phenomena, akin to those of epilepsy. These 'convulsions' were first observed, together with cures, prophesyings, conversions, &c., in 1731, at the tomb of the Jansenist François de Paris (1690–1727) at Saint-Médard, Paris. Instances continued to be recorded in various parts of France until the end of the 18th cent.

P. Gagnol, Le Jansénisme convulsionnaire et l'affaire de la planchette d'après les archives de la Bastille (1911). R. A. Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), esp. ch. 16, 'The Convulsionaries of Saint-Médard', pp. 372–88. B. R. Kreiser, Miracles, Convulsions, and Ecclesiastical Politics in Early Eighteenth-Century Paris (Princeton, 1978). L. Loevenbruck in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1756–62, s.v. 'Convulsionnaires', with reff.

CONYBEARE, FREDERICK CORNWALLIS (1856–1924), *Armenian scholar. He was a Fellow of University College, Oxford, from 1881 to 1887, and spent much of his life travelling in search of Armenian MSS. Among his works were a Collation with the Ancient Armenian Versions of the Greek Text of Aristotle's Categories (1892), and editions of important early documents of the Armenian Church, some of which he published in his Rituale Armenorum (1905). His discovery of an Armenian MS. in which the concluding verses of St. Mark's Gospel (16. 9–20) were assigned to the 'Presbyter *Aristion' attracted much attention. For several years he was a member of the Rationalist Press Association, and his Myth, Magic and Morals, a Study of Christian Origins (1909), written as an attack on Christianity, evoked a reply from W. *Sanday under the title A New Marcion (1909).

L. Mariès, 'Frederick Cornwallis Conybeare (1856–1924). Notice biographique et bibliographie critique' in Revue des Études Arméniennes, vi (1926), pp. 185–332. D. S. Margoliouth in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 210 f.

CONYBEARE, WILLIAM JOHN (1815–57), joint author with J. S. *Howson (q.v.) of The Life and Epistles of St. Paul. Educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge, he was from 1842 to 1848 first principal of the Liverpool Collegiate Institute, where he was joined in 1845 by his friend Howson. After resigning through poor health, he became vicar of Axminster, Devon (1848–54). The Life and Epistles of St. Paul (2 vols., 1852), perhaps the most widely studied work on St. Paul published in the 19th cent., marked the beginning of the modern understanding of St. Paul in the English-speaking world. It embodied the results of wide theological, historical, and geographical studies, but in its method of treatment kept in mind the needs and interests of the general reader. Conybeare was also a frequent contributor to the Edinburgh Review.

Unsigned art. (based on information from his son) in D.N.B., xii (1887), p. 62 f.

COOK, STANLEY ARTHUR (1873–1949), Biblical critic and Semitic historian. A native of King's Lynn, he was educated at Wyggeston School, Leicester, and at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he was afterwards Fellow and lecturer (1904–32). From 1932 to 1938 he was Regius professor of Hebrew. His extensive writings were marked by a wide knowledge, esp. of early Semitic customs and archaeology, which he interpreted with freshness and imagination, though the unconventionality of his conclusions set his work somewhat apart from the main stream of OT discussion. From 1896 to 1903 he was a member of the editorial staff of the Encyclopaedia Biblica, and from 1902 to 1932 edited the journal of the *Palestine Exploration Fund. He was also one of the editors of the Cambridge Ancient History, to which he himself contributed important chapters (in vols. i, ii, iii, and vi). His writings include The Study of Religions (1914), The Religion of Ancient Palestine in the Light of Archaeology (Schweich Lectures, 1930), The Old Testament: a Reinterpretation (1936), and The 'Truth' of the Bible (1938); and he edited W. R. *Smith's Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia (1903) and Religion of the Semites (1927) and R. H. Kennett's Old Testament Essays (1933).

Select bibl. of his works in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Essays and Studies Presented to Stanley Arthur Cook . . . in Celebration of his Seventy-fifth Birthday 12 April 1948 (Cambridge Oriental Series, No. 2, 1950), pp. 1–13. Id. in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 174 f.

COOPER, THOMAS (c. 1520–94), also 'Cowper', Bp. of *Winchester. Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, he later became a Fellow and Master of Magdalen College School, where W. Camden was among his pupils. His Protestant beliefs led him to abandon his project of ordination on *Mary's accession (1553), but he fulfilled his intention shortly after her death (1558). He was a man of great learning, and among his works were a Latin Dictionary (1548), a Chronicle ('Cooper's Chronicle', 1549, a continuation of an unpublished chronicle of Thomas Lanquet, d. 1545), and a Thesaurus Linguae Romanae et Britannicae (1565). In 1562 he wrote An Answer in Defence of the Truth against the Apology of Private Mass directed against an attack on Bp. J. *Jewel's Apology. In 1567 he became Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, in 1569 Dean of *Gloucester, in 1571 Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1584 Bp. of Winchester. In the latter capacity he wrote against the *Marprelate tracts.

Cooper's Admonition to the People of England [against Martin Marprelate] (orig. publd. 1589) was ed. by J. Petherham (London, 1847) and by E. Arber (English Scholar's Library, xv; Birmingham, 1882); his Answer in Defence of the Truth against the Apology of Private Mass was ed. W. Goode (*Parker Society, 1850), with list of Cooper's works, pp. xi–xv. C. W. Foster (ed.), Lincoln Episcopal Records in the Time of Thomas Cooper (Publications of the Lincoln Record Society, ii; 1912; repr. by the *Canterbury and York Society, ix; 1913). W. Benham in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 149–51.

COORNHEERT, DIRCK VOLCKERTSZOON (1522–90), Dutch theologian. Brought up in Spain, Portugal, and Amsterdam, he settled at Haarlem, where he practised as an engraver in copper, and also published translations of the Latin classics into Dutch. He became one of the leading supporters of William the Silent. He defended liberalism against the strongly *Calvinist doctrines then current in Holland, advocating toleration, opposing capital punishment for heretics, and criticizing the *Heidelberg Catechism. Influenced by the writings of S. Castellio, and esp. by the Theologia Germanica, he urged the necessity of interior piety and the inward dominion of the Holy Spirit. He rejected the idea of a visible Church and maintained the sufficiency of a faith inspired by the Bible and the Apostles' Creed. J. *Calvin wrote against him his Response à un certain Hollandais lequel sous Ombre de faire les Chrétiens tout spirituels, leur permet de polluer leurs Corps en toutes Idolatries (1562). The *Arminians, and also the *Pietists, owed something to his thought. A Dutch version of the NT on which he was engaged was incomplete at his death.

His Works were published at Amsterdam (3 vols., 1630). Studies by F. D. J. Moorrees (Nijmegen, 1887), Olga Rinck-Wagner (Historische Studien, cxxxviii; 1919), and B. Becker (Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatiën, Kleine Serie, xxv; 1928).

COPE. A semicircular cloak worn at liturgical functions when the *chasuble is not used. Both vestments took their origin in the Roman 'paenula' or 'pluviale', the cope gradually reaching its present form by being opened in front. It has been held that it did not become a liturgical vestment until the 9th cent. or later, but H. *Leclercq has collected a large number of examples from primitive frescoes and mosaics which suggest that it was regarded as typical of the clergy at least by the 6th cent. The term 'cappa' first appears in *Gregory of Tours (d. 594). In the Middle Ages it was widely used as a ceremonial choir habit by whole communities on feasts, while the 'cappa nigra', a cloak of thick black material serving the same purpose as the original 'pluviale', was worn in choir as a protection against the cold. The hood of the original garment survives as an ornament (often triangular) on the back of the cope.

In the BCP of 1549 the Celebrant at the Holy Communion was ordered to wear a cope or vestment (i.e. chasuble), but in 1552 the rubric was withdrawn. The use of a cope by the Celebrant at the Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches was prescribed by can. 24 of 1604. Probably its use never wholly died out in the C of E. It has been extensively revived in England since the middle of the 19th cent. Copes made for the coronation of *Charles II are still in use in *Westminster Abbey.

Braun, L.G., pp. 306–58. E. *Bishop, 'The Origins of the Cope as a Church Vestment' in Dublin Review, cxx (1897), pp. 17–37, repr. in Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. xi. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., and E. Mombert in D.A.C.L., iii, pt. 1 (1913), cols. 365–81, s.v. Chape.

COPERNICUS, NICOLAS (1473–1543), the father of modern astronomy. After studying medicine, philosophy, and mathematics at the University of Cracow, he went to Italy, reading law at *Bologna and lecturing on mathematics and astronomy at Rome. Returning to Prussia in 1505, he went first to Heilsberg, where he began to formulate the theories which were to make him famous, and then, in 1512, to Frauenburg, of which he had been a canon since 1497, where he was to remain for the rest of his life. Rejecting the generally accepted Ptolemaic system of the universe, he found the centre of the solar system not in the earth but in the sun, on the ground that it was improbable that a large body such as the sun should revolve around a small body like the earth. Despite certain defects in his system, it prepared the way for the work of J. *Kepler, G. *Galileo, and I. *Newton, and provided a valuable explanation of many scientific phenomena, such as the variation of the seasons, the precession of the equinoxes, and the stationary and retrogressive motions of the planets. A brief outline of his theory, the Commentariolus (published in 1531), received the approbation of Pope *Clement VII. The full treatise De revolutionibus orbium coelestium was not published until 1543, and the first printed copy reached him just before he died—too late, however, for him to disown a preface, written by A. *Osiander, which had been inserted warning its readers that its conclusions were to be regarded as only hypothetical. The Galileo affair led the work to be put on the *Index in 1616, and it was not removed from it till 1757.

Several edd. of the De Revolutionibus, notably Nuremberg, 1543; Basle, 1566; Thorn, 1873. Collected ed. of Works, Munich, vol. i, 1944; vol. ii, 1949. Three Copernican Treatises. Tr., with introd. and notes, by E. Rosen (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, xxx; New York, 1939). J. Czyński, Kopernik et ses travaux (1847); L. Prowe, Nicolaus Coppernicus (2 vols., Berlin, 1883–4; also many earlier works by this author). A. Armitage, Copernicus. The Founder of Modern Astronomy (1938). Many works, of varying merit, were issued, esp. in Germany, in 1943 to mark the 4th centenary of his death. Dorothy Stimson, The Gradual Acceptance of the Copernican Theory of the Universe (New York, 1917); H. Sandblad, Det Copernikanska Världssystemet i Sverige (2 vols., 1944–5); T. S. Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1957). A. C. Crombie, Augustine to Galileo (1952), pp. 308–28. H. Baranowski, Bibliografia Kopernikowska 1509–1955 (Warsaw, 1958).

COPLESTON, EDWARD (1776–1849), Bp. of *Llandaff. A fine classical scholar, he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1795 and Provost of the college in 1814. In 1826 he became Dean of *Chester, and in 1827 both Bp. of Llandaff and Dean of *St. Paul's, holding the offices in plurality. While at Oxford he was largely instrumental in instituting the system of examinations which in essence still survives, and in raising his college to its position of intellectual pre-eminence in the earlier half of the 19th cent., thus providing the setting for the *Oxford Movement. In his theological views Copleston was a '*Noetic', who, despite his scant sympathy with the Tractarians, counted himself a High Churchman. His writings, which are few, included some brilliant replies to attacks made on Oxford in the Edinburgh Review.

Copleston's Advice to a Young Reviewer with a Specimen of the Art, orig. publd. Oxford, 1807, was repr. ib., 1926; also ed. G. [S.] Gordon, Three Oxford Ironies (1927), pp. 49–73, with introd., pp. 7–17 and 37–44. John W. Ward's letters to Copleston were ed. by Copleston and publd. under the title, Letters of the Earl of Dudley to the Bishop of Llandaff (1840). Memoir by William James Copleston (London, 1851), with selections from his diary and correspondence. Further extracts from his works pr. by R. *Whately, Remains of the late Edward Copleston (1854), with introd. reminiscences, pp. 1–98. W. Tuckwell, Pre-Tractarian Oxford (1909), pp. 17–50. T. E. Kebbel in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 174–6.

COPTIC (language). 'Copt' is a European form of the Arabic 'Kibt', which is itself derived from the Gk. Αἰγύπτιοι ['Egyptians']. Coptic was the language usually spoken by the 'Copts', the native populace of Egypt, from about the 3rd to the 10th cents. A.D. After the 10th cent. the language was gradually supplanted by Arabic; but it appears to have survived in a few places down to the end of the 17th cent., and is still that of the liturgy of the *Coptic Church. In essence it was the language of ancient Egypt, into which a large number of Greek words had been incorporated, and was written in an alphabet closely akin to that of the Greeks. It occurs in four dialects, viz. *Sahidic, *Bohairic, *Fayumic, and Akhmimic. The NT was translated into all four, first into the Sahidic, the dialect used in the south of Egypt, where the need was greatest as the influence of Greek culture was least. Of the extensive remains of early Christian literature in Coptic, much the greater part consists in translations from the Greek. This applies also to the large number of Gnostic writings now known, some of which show little or no Christian influence (see Gnosticism). Among the few surviving works originally composed in Coptic are the writings of *Shenoute, some homilies and legends of the saints.

Coptic grammars by L. Stern (Leipzig, 1880), J. M. Plumley (Sahidic; London, 1948), A. Mallon, S.J. (in French; Beyrout, 1904; ed. 4 by M. Malinine, 1956, with valuable bibl., pp. 254–401), G. Steindorff (Berlin, 1894; revised ed., Chicago, 1951). W. Till, Achmimisch-koptische Grammatik (1928); id., Koptische Chrestomathie für den fayumischen Dialekt (1930); id., Koptische Dialektgrammatik (1931; ed. 2, 1961); id., Koptische Grammatik, saïdischer Dialekt (1955); M. Chaîne, Éléments de grammaire dialectale copte (1933). W. E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (1929–39); R. Kasser, Compléments au dictionnaire copte de Crum (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale. Bibliothèque d'Études Coptes, vii, Cairo, 1964); id., Dictionnaire auxiliaire, étymologique et complet de la langue copte (Geneva, 1967 ff.). W. Kammerer, A Coptic Bibliography (Ann Arbor, 1950). W. C. Till, 'Coptic and its Value' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xl (1958), pp. 229–58.

Crit. edd. of Coptic NT by G.'Horner: in Bohairic dialect, 4 vols., Oxford, 1898–1905; in Sahidic dialect, 7 vols., ib., 1911–24. Coptic OT edited very incompletely and in scattered places; cf. A. Vaschalde, 'Ce qui a été publié des versions coptes de la Bible' in R. Bibl., xxviii (1919), pp. 220–43, 513–31; xxix (1920), pp. 91–106, 241–58; xxx (1921), pp. 237–246; xxxi (1922), pp. 81–8 and 234–58; cont. in Le Muséon, xliii (1930), pp. 409–31; xlv (1932), pp. 117–58; xlvi (1933), pp. 299–313. Cf. also list of principal items in E.C., iv (1950), col. 513.

COPTIC CHURCH. *Eusebius (H.E., ii. 16) records the tradition that the Church in Egypt was founded by St. *Mark the Evangelist, and *Alexandria ranked with *Antioch and *Rome as one of the chief sees of the early Church. The Egyptian Church suffered severely in the persecution under *Diocletian, and it has ever since reckoned its era from A.D. 284, the year of his accession. In the early 4th cent. Christian *monasticism was founded in Egypt by St. *Antony and others, and the fame of the monasteries of *Nitria and *Scete spread throughout Christendom.

The theological controversies of the 5th cent. on the Nature of Christ were embittered by opposition between Alexandria and *Constantinople. After the condemnation of *Dioscorus, Patr. of Alexandria, at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) the Egyptian Church became formally *Monophysite and increasingly isolated from the rest of Christendom. The Orthodox (Melchite) body established in Alexandria received little support from the native population, but bitter disputes persisted. In Upper Egypt, however, the rapid development of monasticism is attested by the many Coptic 'Lives of the Saints' and 'Sayings of the Fathers' and abundant ruins of their buildings. In 616 the Copts passed for a time under Persian domination. In 642 they were conquered by the Arabs, whose rule in varying form has lasted to the present day. Long periods of comparative peace would be suddenly broken by persecution, e.g. under the Caliph el Hakim (996–1021), who is said to have destroyed 3,000 churches and caused large numbers to apostatize. The Copts obtained real freedom of worship only with the British occupation which followed on the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (1882).

In the course of centuries their numbers gradually declined. They are now said to total about 4 million. Their hierarchy consists of a Patriarch, some 24 bishops, and priests and deacons. Outside Egypt there are Coptic dioceses at Jerusalem, in the Sudan, and in South Africa. The *Ethiopian Church is a daughter Church of Egypt, and since 1959 has been autonomous and *autocephalous. The Coptic language is found only in the service-books, which are equipped with an Arabic text in parallel columns. The normal liturgy is that of St. *Basil. Five important fasts are observed: (1) The pre-Lenten 'Fast of *Nineveh'; (2) The Great Fast of Lent (55 days); (3) The Fast of the Nativity, before *Christmas (28 days); (4) The Fast of the Apostles, after the Ascension; and (5) The Fast of the Virgin, before the Assumption (15 days).

There is also a small *Uniat Coptic Church, dating from 1741, when Athanasius, the Coptic Bishop of Jerusalem, joined the RC Church. It is said to number c. 105,000.

J. M. Wansleben, Histoire de l'Église d'Alexandrie, ondée par S. Marc (1677). A. J. Butler, The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt (2 vols., 1884); E. L. Butcher, The Story of the Church of Egypt (2 vols., 1897). M. Roncaglia, Histoire de l'Église copte (6 vols., Dar Al-Kalima, 1966 ff.). J. Maspero (posthumous), Histoire des patriarches d'Alexandrie depuis la mort de l'empereur Anastase jusqu'à la réconciliation des Églises jacobites, 515–616 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, fasc. cexxxvii; 1923); R. Strothmann, Die koptische Kirche in der Neuzeit (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, vii; 1932). Maria Cramer, Das Christlich-Koptische Ägypten einst und heute. Eine Orientierung (Wiesbaden, 1959). S. C. Malan (ed. and tr.), Original Documents of the Coptic Church (3 pts., 1872–3); R. M. Woolley (ed. and tr.), Coptic Offices (1930); A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom, i (Rome, 1947), ch. 5, pp. 337–495, with bibl. O. H. E. Burmester, The Egyptian or Coptic Church. A Detailed Description of her Liturgical Services and the Rites and Ceremonies observed in the Administration of her Sacraments (Cairo, 1967). H. Quecke, Untersuchungen zum koptischen Stundengebet (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, iii; 1970), with texts. O. F. A. Meinardus, Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts (Cairo, 1961); Christian Egypt Ancient and Modern (ib., 1965), and other works of this author. A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), pp. 163–290; D. Attwater, The Dissident Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc., [1937]); id., The Catholic Eastern Churches (ib., [1935]), pp. 135–49, with bibl.; A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 11–145. M. Jugie, A.A., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissidentium, v (Paris, 1935), pp. 349–787 passim, esp. pp. 458–64. Id., in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2251–2306, s.v. 'Monophysite (Église Copte)', with bibl.

CORBAN ('oblation'). A Heb. word (קָרְבָּן), peculiar to *Ezekiel and the '*P' sections of the *Pentateuch, for altar offerings, either the fixed obligatory dues, or free-will votive gifts. It is probably to this latter kind of gift that Christ refers in Mk. 7. 11 when He objects to the practice of letting 'Corban' take precedence of the duty of maintaining one's parents.

K. H. Rengstorf in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 860–66, s.v. Κορβᾶν, with bibl. to date. See also comm. on Mark, Gospel of St., cited s.v.

CORBIE. This celebrated monastery, some ten miles to the east of Amiens, was founded from *Luxeuil c. 660. It possessed a very fine library from which more early MSS. have survived than from any other abbey; they played an important part in the transmission of Latin classical and patristic texts. In 1624 a selection of its books were transferred to *Saint-Germain-des-Prés. At the time of the Revolution (1794) some of these passed to the Bibliothèque Nationale; others were taken to Russia and are now at Leningrad.

P. Héliot, L'Abbaye de Corbie. Ses églises et ses bâtiments (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique, xxix; 1957). Corbie Abbaye Royale. Volume du XIII[e] Centenaire (Lille, 1963). L. Delisle, Le Cabinet des MSS. de la Bibliothèque Nationale, ii (1874), pp. 104–41, 427–40. Olga Dobiaš-Roždestvenskaia, Histoire de l'atelier graphique de Corbie de 651 à 830 reflétée dans les Corbeienses Leninopolitani (Leningrad, 1934). L. W. Jones, 'The Scriptorium at Corbie' in Speculum, xxii (1947), pp. 191–204, 375–94; B. Bischoff, 'Hadoardus and the Manuscripts of Classical Authors from Corbie' in Didascaliæ. Studies in honor of Anselm M. Albareda, ed. S. Prete (New York, 1961), pp. 39–57; Germ. text in his Mittelalterliche Studien, i (Stuttgart, 1966), pp. 49–63. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, vi (Oxford, 1953), pp. xxii–xxvi. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2, 1914), cols. 2913–58, s.v. 'Corbie (Manuscrits liturgiques de)'. H. Peltier in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 809–24, with bibl.

CORDELIERS. A name sometimes given in France to the Franciscan *Observantines from the knotted cord which they wore round the waist. The word was also assumed by a political club during the French Revolution, as the convent in which it met had once belonged to the Cordeliers.

CORINTH. In NT times Corinth was the capital of the Roman province of Achaia. It lay on the great trade route between *Rome and the E. and occupied a very important site for the propagation of the Christian Gospel on account of its political and geographical position, its cosmopolitan population, and its commercial supremacy. The Church was established here by St. *Paul c. 50, and included many prominent Jewish converts (Acts 18. 4, 8, 1 Cor. 9. 20), but it appears, both from Acts and the two Epp. of Paul to Corinth, that the Christian community consisted mainly of Gentiles, who, on the whole, belonged to the poorer classes (1 Cor. 1. 26), though they contributed generously to the collection for the saints (2 Cor. 9. 2–5). St. Paul was helped by *Silas and *Timothy and, in spite of Jewish opposition, 'he dwelt there a year and six months' (Acts 18. 11). During his stay, the proconsul *Gallio dismissed a charge against Paul of worshipping contrary to the Jewish Law, a decision which in effect amounted to permission to preach in the province. Paul left behind him a flourishing community, but the pagan antecedents of his converts seriously affected the life of the Church, as is seen in the Epp. to the *Corinthians. In fact the city was noted for its profligacy and moral laxity. In later Christian history Corinth took a relatively less notable part.

See also Clement of Rome.

Good summary by W. M. *Ramsay in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 479–83, s.v. Reports of the modern excavations carried out under the direction of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens have been published under the general editorship of H. N. Fowler, Corinth (Cambridge, Mass., 1929 ff. [24 parts to 1966]). R. Carpenter, Ancient Corinth. A Guide to the Excavations (1928; ed. 4 by O. Broneer, 1949). L. Cerfaux, L'Église des Corinthiens (1946). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2959–66, s.v.; T. Lenschau and others in P.W., Suppl., iv (1924), cols. 991–1036, s.v. 'Korinthos'; both with further bibl. reff.

CORINTHIANS, Epistles to the. These two Epistles of St. *Paul to his converts were both written from *Ephesus c. 52–5.

1 Corinthians was occasioned by news which St. Paul had received from the Church at Corinth. The subjects dealt with include party-feeling among the Corinthian Christians, and their tendency to think too highly of a certain kind of human 'wisdom' (1. 10–4. 21); his own position as an apostle (4. 1–13, and 9); the sin of fornication at Corinth and the treatment of a particular offender (5 and 6); the question of litigation between Christians (6. 1–8); and certain points on which they had consulted him in a letter, viz. marriage and celibacy in relation to the Christian gospel (7), problems regarding the relations of Christians with the surrounding paganism (8), behaviour at Christian worship (10; 11), 'spiritual gifts' such as prophecy and speaking with tongues (12), and the *resurrection of the dead (15). The sections on the Eucharist (10. 16 ff., 11. 20 ff.), on Love (agape) as the highest of spiritual gifts (13), and on the Resurrection (15), are among the most important in the NT.

In 2 Corinthians the principal topic is St. Paul's personal position in relation to the Church at Corinth. The Church, as the letter shows, had seriously failed in a matter of morality; and, as concerned himself, his status as an apostle had been challenged and his conduct attacked. In the earlier chapters he defends his conduct, setting out at length the authority and ministry of the Christian Apostle, and the proclamation of man's reconciliation with God by the atoning death of Christ (3. 4–6. 10.) He rejoices that he and the Corinthians are now at one again (7. 9 ff.). (The passage 6. 14 – 7. 1 seems to be a fragment of an earlier epistle, now lost, which has been accidentally inserted here.) Chs. 8–9 deal with the collection for the Church at *Jerusalem which St. Paul was organizing. In ch. 10, where a new beginning is made, there is a fresh treatment of St. Paul's relations with the Church of Corinth, and a severe condemnation of his opponents (ψευδαπόστολοι, 'false apostles'). The tone is quite different from that of the earlier chapters, and the reconciliation implied in 7. 9 ff. is apparently ignored. It is widely held that chs. 10–13 are part of a different epistle, sent on an earlier occasion than chs. 1–9, or else that these two groups of chapters were addressed to two different groups, or parties, within the Corinthian Church.

Ancient commentators include *Chrysostom (Gk.) and *Theodoret (Gk.), *Ambrosiaster (Lat.) and *Pelagius (Lat.). Modern commentaries on 1 Cor. by H. L. Goudge (West. Comm., 1903), H. *Lietzmann (Hb.N.T., 1907; ed. 4, with 2 Cor., by W. G. Kummel, 1949), J. *Weiss (K.E.K., 1910), A. *Robertson–A. Plummer (I.C.C., 1911), E. B. Allo (Paris, 1934), J. *Moffatt (Moffatt Comm., 1938), C. Spicq, O.P. (La Sainte Bible, xi, pt. 2, 1948, pp. 161–306), J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, vii, 1949; Eng. tr., 1962), H. D. Wendland (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, vii, 1962, with 2 Cor.), Margaret E. Thrall (Cambridge Bible Comm., 1965, with 2 Cor.), C. K. Barrett (Black's N.T. Comm., 1968), H. Conzelmann (K.E.K., 1969), and F. F. Bruce (New Cent. Bib., 1971, with 2 Cor.); on 2 Cor. by A. Plummer (I.C.C., 1915), H. Windisch (K.E.K., 1924), H. L. Goudge (West. Comm., 1927), R. H. Strachan (Moffat Comm., 1935), E. B. Allo (Paris, 1937), C. Spicq, op. cit., pp. 307–99, W. G. Kummel, op. cit., J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, viii, 1958; Eng. tr., 1967), H. D. Wendland, op. cit., M. E. Thrall, op. cit., F. F. Bruce, op. cit., and C. K. Barrett (Black's N. T. Comm., 1973). J. H. Kennedy, The Second and Third Epistles to the Corinthians (1900). K. *Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St. Paul (1911), pp. 102–252. T. W. Manson, 'St. Paul in Ephesus. The Corinthian Correspondence' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxvi (1941–2), pp. 101–20, 327–341; C. K. Barrett, 'Christianity at Corinth', ib., xlvi (1964), pp. 269–97. W. Schmithals, Die Gnosis in Korinth. Eine Untersuchung zu den Korintherbriefen (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, Neue Folge, xlviii; 1956; ed. 2, 1965). J. C. Hurd, Jr., The Origin of 1 Corinthians (1965). McNeile, pp. 132–42. A. Robertson in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 483–98; A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 170–95, s.v. 'Paul, Corinthiens (Les Épitres aux)'.

CORINTHIANS, Third Epistle to the. An apocryphal letter written in reply to an equally apocryphal letter from the Church of Corinth. The two prob. formed part of the 'Acts of *Paul' (c. 170). The Gk. originals survive only in a papyrus codex (containing inter alia the Nativity of Mary) of the 3rd cent. in the *Bodmer collection. The text also survives, as a separate entity, in the Biblical *canon of the *Armenian Church as well as in two *Vulgate Latin MSS. (one at Milan, the other at Laon) and in a Coptic version, while St. *Ephraem Syrus (c. 360) commented on it as though it were a genuine Pauline document. The author insists on the authority of the OT prophets, the resurrection of the flesh, the birth of Christ from Mary, and the creation of man, facts which show that its purpose was anti-*Gnostic.

M. Testuz (ed.), Papyrus Bodmer x–xii (Geneva, 1959), pp. 9–45 (Gk. text with Fr. tr. and introd.). Coptic text in C. Schmidt's crit. ed. of the 'Acta Pauli' (1936, q.v.). Armenian recension in Germ. tr. and two Lat. texts in P. Vetter, Der apokryphe dritte Korintherbrief (1894). Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 288–91; another tr. in K. *Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St. Paul (1911), pp. 236–40, with brief discussion. A. F. J. Klijn, 'The Apocryphal Correspondence between Paul and the Corinthians' in V.C., xvii (1963), pp. 2–23. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 601–5; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 136 f.

CORNELIUS (d. 253), Bp. of *Rome. He was elected Pope in April 251, when, owing to the *Decian persecution and the martyrdom of *Fabian, the see of Rome had been vacant for 14 months. He found himself faced with strong opposition from the *Novatianist schismatics, who objected to his relatively lenient policy towards those who had lapsed during the persecutions; but he had the support of synods at Rome and *Carthage (251–2). Several of his letters, written in a colloquial 'vulgar Latin', have survived, including a correspondence with St. *Cyprian. He died in exile, traditionally as a martyr, at Centum Cellae (Civitavecchia), and was buried at Rome in the crypt of Lucina in the 'Coemeterium Callisti', where his tomb is still to be seen with the Latin inscription 'Cornelius Martyr'. Feast day, 16 Sept.

His Epp. to Cyprian are printed inter Epp. Cypr., Nos. 49 and 50. P. *Coustant, Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, i (1721), cols. 123–206; M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, iii (ed. 2, 1846), pp. 11–89. G. Mercati, D'alcuni nuovi sussidii per la critica del testo di S. Cipriano (1899), pp. 72–86 ('Le lettere di S. Cornelio papa'). Bardenhewer, ii, p. 639 f. G. Bardy in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 891–4, s.v. 'Corneille (Saint)'.

CORNELIUS A LAPIDE (1567–1637), Cornelis Cornelissen van den Steen, Flemish Biblical exegete. He was born at Bocholt nr. Liège, and educated at the *Jesuit colleges of Maastricht and *Cologne. In 1592 he entered the Jesuit Order, and was professor of exegesis at Louvain from 1596. In 1616 he was called to Rome, where he taught the same subject and finished his celebrated commentaries, comprising all the Canonical Books except Job and the Psalms. In order of appearance they were Epistolae Divi Pauli (1614); Pentateuchus (1617); Jeremias, together with Bar. and Lam. (1621); Ezechiel (1621); Daniel (1621). Then followed Is. with a new edition of the three preceding works as Quattuor Maiores Prophetae (1622); Duodecim Minores Prophetae (1625); Actus Apostolorum, Epistolae Canonicae, Apocalypsis (1627); Ecclesiasticus (2 vols., 1633–4); Proverbia (1635). Posthumous were Ecclesiastes (1638); Cantica Canticorum (1638); Liber Sapientiae (1638); Evangelia, i (Mt. and Mk., 1639); Evangelia, ii (Lk. and Jn., 1639); Josue, Iudicum, Ruth, I–IV Regum, I–II Paralipomenon (1642); Esdras, Nehemias, Tobias, Iudith, Esther, I–II Machabaei (1645). His works have owed their enduring popularity, esp. among preachers, to their clarity, deep spirituality, and allegorical and mystical exegesis, buttressed by a wide erudition which enabled the author to draw extensively on the Fathers and on medieval theologians.

Complete edd. of his Comm. on the Bible publd. in 10 vols., Amsterdam, 1681; 11 vols., Venice, 1717; 11 vols., Cologne, etc., 1732; 11 vols., Venice, 1740; and several later edd. Eng. tr. by T. W. Mossman of his Comm. on the Gospels (5 vols., 1876–86) and by W. E. Cobb of his Comm. on 1 Cor. (1896) and on 2 Cor. and Gal. (1897). S. Pagano, O.M.I., 'Analysis Notionis Inspirationis S. Scripturae apud Cornelium a Lapide' in Revue de l'Université d'Ottawa, xv (1945), pp. 65*–85*. G. Boss, Die Rechtfertigungslehre in den Bibelkommentaren des Kornelius a Lapide (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, xx; 1962). Sommervogel, iv (1893), cols. 1511–26, ix (1900), col. 573. G. Heinrici in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 289–91, s.v. U. Holzmeister, S.J., in E.C., iv (1905), col. 569, s.v., for further bibl.

CORNILL, CARL (1854–1920), OT scholar. He was professor of OT exegesis at Königsberg (1886), Breslau (1898), and Halle (1910). In the main he was a disciple of J. *Wellhausen. He wrote several books, notably an Introduction to the Canonical Books of the OT (1891) (Eng. trans. of ed. 5, 1907) and a History of the People of Israel (1898, Eng. trans. also 1898), which through their wide circulation did much to spread Wellhausen's methods of criticism and exegesis.

K. v. Rabenau in Neue Deutsche Biographie, iii (1957), p. 367 f.

CORONATION OF OUR LADY, The. The final triumph of the Blessed Virgin in heaven, wherein she was crowned by her Divine Son. It is the subject of the fifth *Glorious Mystery of the *Rosary. It is observed in a few places as a liturgical feast (Calabria, Guatemala).

CORONATION RITE IN ENGLAND. The rite for the coronation of English kings falls into three parts: (1) the promises made by the king and his acclamation by the people; (2) the consecration and anointing of the king; (3) the vesting, coronation, and enthronement of the king (and coronation of the queen consort), followed by the homage and the king's Communion. These three divisions appear throughout the history of the rite.

In the 9th cent. (and perhaps for some time before) a rite was in use, based on that used for the coronation of the Popes. At the coronation of Edgar in 973 this was displaced by a new rite, which was probably a conscious adaptation of the rite then in use for Imperial coronations. Its success was such that it was used for many centuries both in England and in many parts of Europe. In the course of time it underwent various modifications, the most elaborate form of it being that in the Liber Regalis*, which was used in 1308 for Edward II. For the coronation of *James I in 1603 it was translated into English, the penitential psalms were omitted, and the Eucharist was conformed, with certain variations, to that in the BCP. A drastic rearrangement and curtailment was made in 1685 by Abp. W. *Sancroft to suit current ideas, and since *James II, being a RC, could not communicate, the Communion Service was omitted. For the coronation of William and Mary in 1689 the Eucharist was reinstated in its central position, and among other changes Parliament caused an oath to be added for the defence of *Protestantism. Since 1689 the only changes have been minor abbreviations.

The most useful collection of documents is L. G. Wickham Legg, English Coronation Records (1901). Much interesting material is assembled in A. Taylor, The Glory of Regality (1820). Texts of the rite in J. Wickham Legg (ed.), Three Coronation Orders (H.B.S., xix; 1900; contains the Order of William III and Mary, an Anglo-French version of the English Coronation Order, and the Consecration of the Anglo-Saxon King); Christopher Wordsworth (later Subdean of Salisbury), The Manner of the Coronation of King Charles the First (H.B.S., ii; 1892); F. Sandford, The History of the Coronation of . . . King James II . . . and Queen Mary (1687); The Coronation Service of her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. With a short historical Introduction, Explanatory Notes, and an Appendix by E. C. Ratcliff (1953).

Modern studies include R. M. Woolley, Coronation Rites (Cambridge Handbooks of Liturgical Study, 1915); E. C. Ratcliff, The English Coronation Service (1936; with text of Rite used in 1911); R. H. Murray, The King's Crowning (1936), with bibl. P. E. Schramm (Eng. tr. from Germ. by L. G. Wickham Legg, A History of the English Coronation, 1937). E. Eichmann, Königs- und Bischofsweihe in Sb. (Bayr.), 1928, Abh. 6; id., Der Kaiserkrönung im Abendland (2 vols., Würzburg, 1942). C. A. Bouman, Sacring and Crowning. The Development of the Latin Ritual for the Anointing of Kings and the Coronation of an Emperor before the Eleventh Century (Bijdragen van het Instituut voor Middeleeuwse Geschiedenis der Rijks-Universiteit te Utrechts, xxx; 1957). P. L. Ward, 'The Coronation Ceremony in Mediaeval England' in Speculum, xiv (1939), pp. 160–78, with reff. C. Dawson, Beyond Politics (1939), pp. 93–115 ('Considerations on the Coronation of an English King'). H. G. Richardson, 'The Coronation in Medieval England' in Traditio, xvi (1960), pp. 111–202.

CORPORAL (from Lat. corpus, 'body', since it holds the Body of the Lord). In W. liturgical usage, a square piece of linen on which the bread and wine are placed and consecrated in the *Eucharist. Such a cloth was used in the 4th cent., but there was no distinction between the corporal and the ordinary linen altar cloth now used under the corporal before the 9th cent. Formerly it was large enough to cover the chalice also (as it still is among the *Carthusian monks), but later a second folded corporal (now called the *pall) was introduced for this purpose. See also Antiminsion and Burse.

Braun, L.P., pp. 205–9. E. G. C. F. Atchley, 'On Certain Variations from the Rule Concerning the Material of the Altar Linen' in Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society, iv (1900), pp. 147–60, esp. pp. 156–60. N. F. Robinson, S.S.J.E., 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use', ib., vi (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 129–40. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., iv (1908), p. 386 f., s.v.

CORPORAL WORKS OF MERCY. There are traditionally seven: (1) feeding the hungry; (2) giving drink to the thirsty; (3) clothing the naked; (4) harbouring the stranger; (5) visiting the sick; (6) ministering to prisoners; (7) burying the dead. Cf. Mt. 25. 35 f. See also Spiritual Works of Mercy.

CORPORATION ACT (1661). The Act of the 'Cavalier Parliament' (13 Car. II, st. ii, c. 1) requiring all members of municipal corporations to take an oath abjuring rebellion against the king, declaring the *Solemn League and Covenant null and unlawful, and affirming that they had received the Sacrament of Communion acc. to the rites of the C of E within the year preceding their election. It was repealed in 1828.

Text repr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 594–600 (No. cxvl).

CORPUS CATHOLICORUM. The organization formed by RC states in the Holy Roman Empire, to maintain RC interests against the *Corpus Evangelicorum (q.v.). It first assembled at Ratisbon in 1524, and thenceforward existed as an informal body until its organization in 1720. Like the 'Corpus Evangelicorum' it disappeared at the dissolution of the empire in 1806.

E. A. Friedberg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), p. 291 f., s.v.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Feast of. The feast commemorating the institution and gift of the Holy *Eucharist, observed in the W. Church on the Thursday after *Trinity Sunday. The natural day in the Christian calendar for this commemoration would be *Maundy Thursday, on which the Eucharist was instituted; but the memory of the Passion on that day made a separate day for the Eucharist desirable, and the Thursday after Trinity Sunday was chosen as the first free Thursday after Eastertide. The institution of the feast was largely due to the influence of Blessed *Juliana (d. 1258), a devout nun of Liège who was led to take action in the matter c. 1230 in response to a vision. In 1264 its observance was commanded by the bull 'Transiturus' of Urban IV, and in the 14th cent. the keeping of the feast became universal in the W. The services of the day have traditionally been attributed to St. *Thomas Aquinas, but recent scholarship has thrown doubt on the authenticity of the material on which this ascription was based. In the 1970 Roman Missal the title of the feast is SS^mi Corporis et Sanguinis Christi.

See also Lauda Sion and Pange Lingua.

P. Browe, S.J., 'Die Ausbreitung des Fronleichnamsfestes' in J.L.W., viii (1928), pp. 107–44; id., Textus antiqui de Festo Corporis Christi (Münster i.W., 1934). E. Dumoutet, Corpus Domini. Aux sources de la piété eucharistique médiévale (1942). C. Lambot, O.S.B.–I. Fransen, O.S.B., L'Office de la Fête-Dieu primitive. Textes et mélodies retrouvés (Maredsous, 1946). Studia Eucharistica: DCC Anni de Condito Festo Sanctissimi Corporis Christi 1246–1946 (Antwerp, 1946). L. M. J. Delaissé, 'A la recherche des origines de l'office du Corpus Christi dans les manuscrits liturgiques' in Scriptorium, iv (1950), pp. 220–39; F. Callaey, O.F.M. Cap., 'Origine e sviluppo della festa del Corpus Christi' in Euntes Docete, x (1957), pp. 3–33. F. Oppenheim, O.S.B., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 611–13.

CORPUS EVANGELICORUM. A body of delegates from the Evangelical states in the *Holy Roman Empire whose aim was to defend the Protestant interests in the Imperial Diet. Its organization developed gradually, and did not finally crystallize until the Diet of Ratisbon (1653) after the end of the *Thirty Years War (1618–48), when 39 Protestant states were represented in the Diet. The Presidency was attached permanently to Saxony, a provision which created an awkward situation when in 1677 the Elector Friedrich August of Saxony became a Catholic. The 'Corpus Evangelicorum' continued to exist until the disappearance of the Holy Roman Empire in 1806. See also Corpus Catholicorum.

Resolutions from 1663 to 1752 ed. E. C. W. von Schauroth, Sammlung aller Conclusorum, Schreiben und and. Verhandlungen des Corpus Evangelicorum (3 vols., Regensburg, 1751–1753); continued by N. A. Herrich (ib., 1786). H. W. von Bülow, Über Geschichte und Verfassung des Corporis Evangelicorum (1795). A. Frantz, Das katholische Directorium des Corpus Evangelicorum (1880).

CORPUS IURIS CANONICI. The chief collection of *canon law in the W. Church before the promulgation of the *Codex Iuris Canonici in 1917. It was composed of: (a) the 'Decretum' of *Gratian, a collection of canons of Councils and decrees of Popes put together in the middle of the 12th cent. by Gratian, a Bolognese monk. This collection had no authority other than that of the individual canons which composed it; (b) the collection of *Decretals of *Gregory IX, composed at the command of that Pope by St. *Raymond of Peñafort, and intended as a supplement to the 'Decretum' of Gratian. It was divided into five books and promulgated between 1230 and 1234. In addition to the authority already possessed by its component parts, it received the further authority of Gregory IX; (c) the *Sext. A sixth book added to the Decretals of Gregory by *Boniface VIII; (d) the '*Clementines', a further collection compiled by *Clement V and promulgated after his death by *John XXII in 1317; (e) the '*Extravagantes' of John XXII, viz. the decrees of that Pope collected by a private person and published in 1325; (f) the 'Extravagantes Communes', the decrees of various Popes between 1261 and 1471. These several items are found in a single collection in printed editions from 1499 onwards, though the name did not come into general use till after Gregory XIII's bull 'Cum pro munere' (1 July 1580).

Best ed. by E. Friedberg (2 vols., Leipzig, 1879–81). P. Torquebiau and G. Mollat in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 610–64 s.v., incl. bibl.

CORRECTORY (Lat. Correctorium). In the Middle Ages, a book containing a set of variant readings for 'correcting' the corrupted text of the Latin *Vulgate Bible. The *Dominican and *Franciscan friars took an active part in the compilation and diffusion of such books.

CORRODY. Originally the right possessed by some benefactors of religious houses or their nominees to board and lodging within them. The term came also to be applied to pensions and other similar allowances (mostly in kind) made by the monastery to those who served its various needs or who, by the payment of a lump sum, had secured a corrody as a kind of annuity for life. Their prevalence was one of the causes of monastic impoverishment in the later Middle Ages.

On the etymology of the word see O.E.D., s.v. J. R. H. Moorman, Church Life in England in the Thirteenth Century (1945), pp. 46 and 269–71; K. L. Wood-Legh, Studies in Church Life in England under Edward III (1934), pp. 27–9; id., Perpetual Chantries in Britain (Cambridge, 1965), esp. p. 141f.

COSIN, JOHN (1594–1672), Bp. of *Durham. He was a member of a wealthy family of *Norwich and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. After holding several other benefices he was collated to a canonry at Durham in 1625 and became rector of Brancepeth in Co. Durham in 1626. He was a personal friend of W. *Laud and R. *Montague, and as such incurred the hostility of the *Puritan party. This was increased when he published, in 1627, his famous Collection of Private Devotions, a book of prayers compiled at the instigation of *Charles I for the use of Queen *Henrietta Maria's English maids of honour. In 1635 he was elected master of Peterhouse, whose chapel he decorated acc. to High Church principles, and in 1640 he was appointed Dean of *Peterborough. The Long Parliament deprived him of all his benefices on account of his 'Popish innovations', and in 1642 he also lost the mastership of Peterhouse. In the same year he went to *Paris, where he became chaplain to the C of E members of the Queen's household. He was a friend of the *Huguenots, and engaged in bitter controversy with the RCs, disinheriting his son on his reception into the RC Church. After the Restoration he returned to England and was made Bp. of Durham in 1660. He attended the *Savoy Conference in 1661, trying in vain to bring about a reconciliation between the C of E and the Presbyterians. He was a friend of elaborate ritual, and at the Convocation of 1661 suggested several reforms in that direction, some of which were taken over into the BCP of 1662. A rigid disciplinarian, he used all the legal powers at his command to make both Puritans and RCs conform to the C of E in his diocese. He was also a keen business man who sanctioned the sale of offices in his patronage, and he was one of the three bishops who advocated divorce in cases of adultery. Most of his literary works are of a controversial nature, being directed esp. against RC doctrine. He attacked *Transubstantiation in his Historia Transubstantiationis Papalis (written 1656, publd. 1675), and the inclusion of the so-called Apocrypha in the RC Canon of the Scriptures in A Scholastical History of the Canon of Holy Scripture (1657). His translation of the '*Veni Creator' was incorporated in the *Ordinal in 1662. See also Durham Book.

His works were publ. in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology (5 vols., 1843–55), with Life in vol. i, pp. xiii–xx; G. Ornsby (ed.), The Correspondence of John Cosin (Surtees Society, lii for 1868, and lv for 1870; 1869–72). Crit. ed. of A Collection of Private Devotions by P. G. Stanwood and D. O'Connor (Oxford, 1967). Modern life by P. H. Osmond (London, 1913). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 264–71.

COSMAS AND DAMIAN, Sts., the patron saints of physicians. Nothing precise as to their lives seems discoverable, though it is unnecessary to suppose that their legend has a mythological basis founded on that of the 'Dioscuri'. Acc. to later tradition, the twin brothers practised their profession without claiming reward from their patients, and were hence known as the 'silverless' (ἀνάργυροι). Both are also supposed to have suffered martyrdom. Their Passion, which exists in several forms and languages, is late and historically valueless. Their cultus was firmly established in the E. in the 5th cent., and at *Rome a church was constructed in their honour on the edge of the Forum out of a temple of Romulus, by Felix IV (526–30), with the saints depicted in mosaics. The two saints are mentioned in the *canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day, in the E., 1 July (also 1 Nov.); in the W., 26 (previously 27) Sept.

The Gk. and Lat. recensions of the Acta and Passio are listed in B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957), i, pp. 126–36, and in B.H.L., i (1898–9), p. 297 f., and Suppl. (1911), p. 83 f. Discussion and extracts in AA.SS., Sept. VII (1760), pp. 430–77. L. Deubner, Kosmas und Damian. Texte und Einleitung (1907). The oldest Greek text, discovered in 1907, ed. E. Rupprecht (Neue Deutsche Forschungen. Abteilung Klassische Philologie, i; Berlin, 1935). Evidence for growth of the cult in AA.SS., Nov. II, pt. ii (1931), p. 528 f. M.-L. David-Danel; Iconographie des saints médecins Côme et Damien (Lille, 1958), Anneliese Wittmann, Kosmas und Damian. Kultausbreitung und Volksdevotion (1967). V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 137–40. R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, i, fasc. 3 (Rome, [1946]), pp. 137–43.

COSMAS INDICOPLEUSTES (Κοσμᾶς Ἰνδικοπλεύστης, i.e. 'Cosmas, the Indian navigator'; mid. 6th cent.), geographer. He was a merchant of *Alexandria who became in later life a monk. His 'Christian Topography' (Χριστιανικὴ τοπογραφία), in 12 Books c. 547, attacks the Ptolemaic system in favour of various fantastic astronomical doctrines intended to harmonize with a literal understanding of the Bible. The chief value of the book lies in its geographical information (esp. on Ceylon) and its witness to the spread of the Christian Church at his time. His other writings, except for a few fragments on the Pss., have been lost. In exegesis Cosmas follows *Theodore of Mopsuestia; and it is possible that he was a *Nestorian.

Ed. princeps by B. *Montfaucon, O.S.B., Collectio Nova Patrum, ii (1707), pp. 113–345, from Vat. gr. 699, the oldest MS. (saec. viii–ix); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxviii, 9–476. Crit. edd. by E. O. Winstedt, Cambridge, 1909, and, with Fr. tr., by W. Wolska-Conus (S.C., cxli, clix, cxcvii; 1968–74). Eng. tr., with notes, by J. W. McCrindle (Works issued by the Hakluyt Society, xcviii; 1897). C. Stornaiolo, Le miniature della Topografia cristiana di Cosma Indicopleuste Cod. Vat. gr. 699 (Milan, 1908). W. Wolska, La Topographie chrétienne de Cosmas Indicopleustès. Théologie et Science au VIe siècle (Bibliothèque Byzantine, iii; 1962). H. Gelzer, 'Kosmas der Indienfahrer' in Jahrbücher für protestantische Theologie, ix (1883), pp. 105–41; E. Peterson, 'Die alexandrinische Liturgie bei Kosmas Indicopleustes' in E.L., xlvi (1932), pp. 66–74. M. V. Anastos, 'The Alexandrian Origin of the Christian Topography of Cosmas Indicopleustes' in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, iii (1946), pp. 73–80. Krumbacher, pp. 412–14, with bibl. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 95–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 517. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 820–49, s.v. 'Kosmas Indicopleustès'.

COSMAS MELODUS, St. (b. c. 700), also 'Cosmas of Jerusalem' and 'Cosmas of Maïuma', author of Greek liturgical hymns. He was adopted by the father of St. *John of Damascus and educated by a monk, also called Cosmas, who also wrote poetry, whence a certain confusion regarding the authenticity of some of the poetry of the younger author. About 732 he entered the *Laura of St. *Sabas nr. *Jerusalem, and in 743 became Bp. of Maïuma nr. Gaza. The most famous of his works are his '*canons' (κανόνες), odes in honour of the great Christian feasts such as the *Nativity, the *Epiphany and *Exaltation of the Cross, of which 14 were incorporated in the liturgical books of the E. Church. He also wrote ἰδιόμελα, which are smaller poems, also dealing with religious subjects. His poetry is brilliant in form and metrical design, inspired by the language of the Bible and the doctrine of the Church, though the clarity of thought and expression is frequently impaired by the artificial structure of the verse. Cosmas is also most probably the author of a Commentary on the poems of St. *Gregory of Nazianzus, first publd. by A. *Mai in Spicilegium Romanum, ii. 2 (1839), pp. 1–306. Feast Day in E., 14 Oct.

His 14 Canones are pr. in W. Christ–M. Paranikas (edd.), Anthologia Graeca Carminum Christianorum (Leipzig, 1871), pp. 161–204. His Comm. on the Carmina of St. Gregory Nazianzen repr. from A. Mai in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxviii, 339–680. Comm. on these canons by Theodore Prodromus (early 12th cent.; cf. Krumbacher, pp. 87 f., 749–60), publd. in part by H. M. Stevenson (Rome, 1885). On the canon on the Recovery of the Cross cf. H. J. W. Tillyard, 'A Canon by Saint Cosmas' in B.Z., xxviii (1928), pp. 25–37 (with ed. of music). Study by T. E. Detorakes (Thessalonica, 1979).

COSMOCRATOR (Gk. κοσμοκράτωρ, lit. 'Lord of the World'). The word, taken from pagan religious vocabulary, is used by St. *Paul (Eph. 6. 12) in the plural for the devil and his demons (cf. Jn. 12. 31, 2 Cor. 4. 4). In Hellenistic writers, it was esp. employed of the supposed rule of malignant spirits over the powers of nature, and thus came to be used as a technical term for Satan, e.g. by the *Gnostics and *Marcion. In the system of *Valentinus the Cosmocrator was contrasted with the *Demiurge.

COSMOGONY (Gk. κοσμογονία). A doctrine or myth about the origin of the universe. The word is used esp. of the speculations of the early Greek philosophers and also of the pagan mythologies.

COSMOLOGICAL ARGUMENT (from Gk. κόσμος, 'world'). The argument which defends the existence of God from the existence of the world. Under this name are combined the first four of the *Quinque Viae (q.v.) of St. *Thomas Aquinas, in contradistinction to the fifth, the *Teleological Argument, and to the *Ontological Argument (q.v.) of St. *Anselm. The Argument, which goes back to *Aristotle, is based on the principle of causality. It contends that no satisfactory explanation of the data of experience can be given without assuming the existence of a self-sufficient primary cause responsible for the world of phenomena. It was attacked by D. *Hume, who denied the principle of universal causation, and by I. *Kant, who denied that this principle, which he admitted for the world of phenomena, could be applied to a reality beyond them. Despite these attacks (which are valid only in the context of certain presuppositions) the Cosmological Argument is still held to be among the most cogent of the proofs of the existence of God.

St. Thomas, Summa Theologica, part i, qu. 2, art. 3; R. Descartes, Meditations, 3; I. Kant, The Critique of Pure Reason, 'Transcendental Dialectic', i. 3. 5.

COSMOLOGY (Gk. κόσμος, 'the world' + λόγος, 'a doctrine'). The part of metaphysics which deals with the world, considered as a totality of phenomena in time and space. It was one of the accepted divisions of philosophy among thinkers of the Aufklärung, and the word was adopted thence by I. *Kant, who denied, however, that its conclusions were capable of ultimate justification by the speculative intellect.

COTELIER, JEAN BAPTISTE (1627–86), French *Patristic scholar. In 1667 he was appointed by J. B. Colbert to assist with the cataloguing of the Greek MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris. His writings include a celebrated edition of the *Apostolic Fathers published in 1672, as well as Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta (3 vols., 1677–86).

J. B. Martin in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1922–4.

COTTA. A shortened form of the *surplice reaching to the waist or a little lower, with less ample sleeves, and a square-cut yoke at the neck. In comparatively modern times it virtually ousted the medieval shape of surplice in the RC Church. More recently, however, the surplice has been widely preferred.

Braun, L.G., pp. 136–46.

COTTONIAN LIBRARY. The large collection of MSS., state papers, and books brought together by Sir Robert (Bruce) Cotton (1571–1631). It was in the possession of his descendants until an Act of Parliament in 1700 (12 & 13 Will. III, c. 7) brought it under public control. In 1731, while housed at Ashburnham House, part of the collection was destroyed by fire. When the British Museum was founded in 1753, it was transferred to Bloomsbury, its present home. Among its many MSS. of theological and religious interest are the 'Cottonian Genesis' (Otho B. vi; a MS. of the *Septuagint text but now surviving only in fragments) and the 'Lindisfarne Gospels' (Nero D. iv). The curious shelf-marks with the names of the Roman emperors were introduced when the books were arranged under a series of Imperial busts.

A Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Cottonian Library deposited in the British Museum (1802). C. E. Wright, 'The Elizabethan Society of Antiquaries and the Formation of the Cottonian Library' in F. Wormald–C. E. Wright (edd.), The English Library before 1700 (1958), pp. 176–212. K. Sharpe, Sir Robert Cotton 1586–1631 (Oxford, 1979), esp. pp. 48–83. On Cotton's early life, see also Hope Mirrlees, A Fly in Amber (1962).

COUNCIL. A formal meeting of bishops and representatives of several churches convened for the purpose of regulating doctrine or discipline. General or *Oecumenical Councils are assemblies of the bishops of the whole Church. The decrees of such General Councils are held to possess the highest authority which the Church can give, and RCs assert that such councils must be summoned, and their decrees confirmed, by the Pope. Local or 'particular' councils represent the various units —e.g. *provinces, *patriarchates, *exarchates—of the Church, but these are now more often called by other names, e.g. 'synods'. The first council of the Church was that described in Acts 15.

Of the many edd. of the Acta of Ecclesiastical Councils, the first was that of J. Merlin (2 vols., Paris, 1524). Later important collections include those of J. *Hardouin, J. D. *Mansi, and E. *Schwartz (qq.v.). Fullest ed. of British Councils by D. *Wilkins (q.v.). C. J. *Hefele–H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., Histoire des conciles (11 vols. in 22 parts, 1907–52).

COUNCIL FOR WORLD MISSION. See Congregational Council for World Mission.

COUNSELS OF PERFECTION, The. Traditionally three, viz.: poverty, or complete renunciation of personal property; chastity, or complete abstention from sexual relations; and obedience, or complete submission of the will in all things, sin only excepted, to a superior. They form the basis of the religious life in nearly all its forms.

COUNTER-REFORMATION. The revival of the RC Church in Europe, usually considered as extending from about the middle of the 16th cent. to the period of the Thirty Years War (1618–48). Both the conception and the term itself have their dangers, since, though greatly stimulated by Protestant opposition, reform movements within the RC Church had begun almost simultaneously with the Lutheran schism, and the two reforming movements may be regarded with some justification as streams proceeding in reverse directions but from the same source. F. *Ximenes, G. *Savonarola, and M. *Luther himself, in his early career as a Catholic reformer, represent early stirrings of conscience within the Church against the abuses of the Renaissance age, but the new religious orders of the 1520s (*Capuchins, *Theatines, *Barnabites) should probably be regarded as the first organic signs of the Counter-Reformation. These orders preceded by some years St. *Ignatius Loyola's foundation of the *Jesuit Order, but soon after its confirmation by *Paul III in 1540 the latter organization became the spear-head of the movement both within Europe and as a missionary force in America and the East. The definitions of doctrine and various internal reforms accomplished in the last session of the Council of *Trent (1562–3) sealed the triumph of the Papacy both over those Catholics, like the Emp. Ferdinand I and Charles IX of France, who wished for conciliation with the Protestants, and over those French and Spanish bishops who had opposed Papal claims. The Popes of the later 16th cent., notably *Paul IV, *Pius V, and *Sixtus V, took advantage of the Pax Hispanica then reigning in Italy to improve discipline and efficiency within the *Curia and amongst the episcopate. With the *Inquisition they extended a Spanish conception of ecclesiastical discipline to Italy and elsewhere, while Spain under *Philip II, the strongest military power of the day, constituted itself the secular arm of the Counter-Reformation throughout Europe. If, however, the movement in its later stages appears increasingly a product of Spanish hegemony and national ideals, there can be no question regarding the apostolic zeal which continued to mark such leaders as St. *Francis de Sales and St. Charles Borromeo, or regarding the spiritual qualities of the Spanish mystics. The all-pervasive zeal of the Jesuits, the co-operation of the Papal nuncios, the Index Librorum Prohibitorum, the skilful manipulation of the constitutional machinery of the Holy Roman Empire, and the conversion of several important princes were but a few of the factors making for success during the late 16th and early 17th cents. Within Europe the greatest triumph of the movement was the reconquest to the Roman obedience of S. Germany and Poland. In Central Europe the position was scarcely stabilized until the Peace of *Westphalia (1648).

M. Philippson. Les Origines du catholicisme moderne. La contre-révolution religieuse au XVIe siècle (Brussels, etc., 1884); A. W. Ward, The Counter Reformation (1889); B. J. Kidd, The Counter Reformation, 1550–1600 (1933); P. Janelle, The Catholic Reformation (Milwaukee, 1949); E. McN. Burns, The Counter Reformation (1964); H. O. Evennett, The Spirit of the Counter-Reformation (Birkbeck Lectures, 1951, ed. J. Bossy; Cambridge, 1968); A. G. Dickens, The Counter Reformation (1968). L. Cristiani in Fliche-Martin, xvii (1948), and L. Willaert, S.J., ib., xviii (1960). T. M. Parker in New Cambridge Modern History, iii, ed. R. B. Wernham (1968), pp. 44–71. [W.] O. Chadwick, The Reformation (Pelican History of the Church, iii; 1964), esp. pp. 251–320. There is also much material in the histories of the Popes by L. von *Ranke and L. *Pastor. J. H. Pollen, S.J., in C.E., iv (1905), pp. 437–44, s.v., with bibl.; E. L. Lamp, in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 384–9, s.v., with more recent bibl. See further bibl. to Trent, Council of.

COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S CONNEXION. See Huntingdon, Selina, Countess of.

COURAYER, PIERRE FRANÇOIS LE (1681–1776), French theologian. He became a *canon regular of St.-Geneviève at Paris in 1697, professor of theology in 1706, and librarian of St.-Geneviève in 1711. While at Paris he corresponded with Abp. W. *Wake on the subject of the episcopal succession in the English Church. In 1721 he completed a treatise defending the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, but the censorship caused publication to be delayed till 1723, when it was issued at Nancy, France (with the name of a Brussels bookseller on the title-page), as Dissertation sur la validité des ordinations des Anglais et sur la succession des évêques de l'église anglicane, avec les preuves justificatives des faits avancés (Eng. trans. D. Williams, 1725). In 1726 Courayer issued a reply to his many (esp. *Jesuit) critics. His thesis was then formally condemned by the French bishops, and in 1728 he was excommunicated and fled to England. He received for the rest of his life generous hospitality in England, though he never joined the C of E. In his will he professed his continued adherence to the Church of Rome, though dissociating himself from some of her tenets.

Courayer later publd. a new Fr. tr. of P. *Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent (2 vols., London, 1736; new ed., Amsterdam, 3 vols., 1751). His Dissertation on the Validity of the Ordinations of the English was issued in a revised trans. at Oxford, 1844, with a memoir of the author. Relation historique et apologétique des sentimens et de la conduite du P. Le Courayer (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1729). E. Préclin, L'Union des Églises gallicane et anglicane. Une tentative au temps de Louis XV. P. F. Le Courayer (de 1681 à 1732) et Guillaume Wake (1928). G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 328–30.

COURT OF DELEGATES. See Delegates, Court of.

COURT OF ECCLESIASTICAL CAUSES RESERVED. A court in the C of E established by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure of 1963. It has original jurisdiction over offences involving matters of doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial, and suits of *Duplex Querela; it also hears appeals from the *Consistory Courts in faculty cases involving matters of doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial. It is constituted by five judges appointed by the Sovereign, of whom two must be confirmed persons who have held high judicial office, and three diocesan Bishops.

COURT OF FACULTIES. See Faculties, Court of.

COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION. See High Commission, Court of.

COURTENAY, WILLIAM (c. 1342–96), Abp. of *Canterbury. The fourth son of Hugh, Earl of Devon, and through his mother great-grandson of Edward I, he rose rapidly to high position in Church and state. In 1367 he was appointed Chancellor of Oxford and proved himself a vigorous upholder of the University's independence. In 1369 he was appointed Bp. of *Hereford, in 1375 Bp. of London, and in 1381 Abp. of Canterbury. As archbishop he was a strong opponent of J. *Wycliffe and John of Gaunt and a supporter of Papal authority, save when national interests were directly attacked. He was responsible for the calling of the Blackfriars Council of 1382, which condemned Wycliffe's doctrines.

Register of William de Courtenay, Bp. of Hereford (A.D. 1370–5), ed. by W. W. Capes (Cantilupe Society, 1913; also in *Canterbury and York Society, xv; 1914). J. H. Dahmus, The Metropolitan Visitations of William Courteney, Archbishop of Canterbury 1381–1396. Documents transcribed from the original manuscripts of Courteney's Register, with an Introduction describing the Archbishop's Investigations (University of Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, xxxi. 2; 1950). Id., William Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury 1381–1396 (University Park, Pa.–London, 1966). K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952 [1953]), pp. 70–80, 105–16 and passim. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 342–7; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 502–4.

COUSTANT, PIERRE (1654–1721), French patristic scholar. He was a native of Compiègne, where he was educated at the *Jesuit College. After entering in 1671 the *Benedictine monastery of the *Maurist congregation of Saint-Rémi at *Reims, he was sent in 1681 to the abbey of *Saint-Germain-des-Prés in *Paris to help T. Blampin with the edition of St. *Augustine. His principal achievement, however, was his edition of the works of St. *Hilary (1693). It contains an elaborate preface, defending the orthodoxy of Hilary's doctrine, followed by a detailed biography of the saint; and the various treatises have separate prefaces giving information on their occasion, aim, and time of writing, and are carefully annotated. After a three-years' term as prior at Nogent-sous-Courcy he returned to Saint-Germain, where he was entrusted with the monumental undertaking of editing a complete collection of Papal letters from St. *Clement of Rome to *Innocent III. After more than twenty years of work the first volume of the Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, covering the period from A.D. 67 to 440, appeared in 1721, with its erudite introductions and notes. The continuation of the work was prevented by his death. Coustant also wrote two treatises, Vindiciae Manuscriptorum Codicum (1706) and Vindiciae Veterum Codicum (1715), in defence of the Maurist editions of the Fathers against the *Jesuit, B. Germon, who had questioned the genuineness of several of their sources.

M. Ott in C.E., iv (1908), p. 454 f., s.v.; M. Lalmant, O.S.B., in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 729–31, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under Maurists.

COUTURIER, PAUL IRÉNÉE (1881–1953), French priest and worker for Christian unity. Educated at Lyons, he was ordained priest in 1906, and after spending three years studying science he joined the staff of the Institut des Chartreux at Lyons, where he remained until 1951. During the 1920s he came in touch with the Russian refugees in the area and learnt much of their spiritual background. In 1932, when he was staying at the priory of Amay-sur-Meuse (see Chevetogne), an introduction to the work of Cardinal *Mercier aroused his interest in the *ecumenical movement. The following year he introduced a Triduum or three-day period of prayer for Church unity at Lyons, followed in 1934 by an octave of prayer from 18 to 25 Jan. This was a development of the *Church Unity Octave founded by two Anglicans in 1908, but from the first prayer was specifically offered for the unity of all baptized Christians 'as and how Christ wills'; Orthodox and other religious bodies as well as Anglicans were included. From 1939 the octave was observed as the 'Week of Universal Prayer'. He also arranged interdenominational conferences at the monastery of *La Trappe des Dombes and at Presinge. He engaged in a vast correspondence in connection with his ecumenical work, produced and distributed innumerable tracts on prayer for unity, and was in close touch with leaders of the *World Council of Churches. In 1952 he was given the title of honorary Archimandrite by Maximus IV, the Greek *Melchite (RC) patriarch of Antioch.

A collection of his writings, ed. M. Villain, S.M., as Œcuménisme spirituel, was publd. at Tournai, 1963. A la mémoire de l'Abbé Paul Couturier (Témoignages) (Lyons, 1954), incl. essay by M. Villain, pp. 9–42, sep. tr. into Eng. (Haywards Heath, 1959). M. Villain, L'Abbé Paul Couturier (Tournai, 1957); G. [W. S.] Curtis, C.R., Paul Couturier and Unity in Christ (1964).

COVEL, JOHN (1638–1722), also 'John Colvill', master of Christ's College, Cambridge. Born at Horningsheath, Suffolk, he was educated at Bury St. Edmunds and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he delivered a Latin oration on the return of the Stuarts. Appointed chaplain to the British Embassy at *Constantinople in 1669, he there amassed material for his unpublished diaries and future publications. On his return to England (1679) he was appointed Margaret Preacher of Divinity at Cambridge, and in 1681 chaplain to the Princess of Orange at The Hague. He was master of Christ's from 1688 till his death, and vice-chancellor of Cambridge University in 1689 and 1708. His chief work on the Greek Church, Some Account of the present Greek Church, with Reflections on their present Doctrine and Discipline, particularly in the Eucharist and the rest of their seven Pretended Sacraments (1722), was published after many delays just before his death. Though not widely noticed, it was one of the few books that gave information on the Greek Church till the 19th cent. Covel's Diaries and Collections are preserved in the British Museum.

'Extracts from the Diaries of Dr. John Covel, 1670–1679', ed. J. T. Brent, Early Voyages and Travels in the Levant (Hakluyt Society, lxxxvii; 1893), pp. 101–287. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xii (1887), p. 355 f.

COVENANT. A bond entered into voluntarily by two parties by which each pledges himself to do something for the other. The idea of the covenant between the God of Israel and His people is fundamental to the religion of the OT. Some scholars hold that the original bond was simply the payment of sacrificial dues by Israel in return for the help of Jehovah in war, the symbol of the *Ark being esp. associated with His presence and covenant. The prophets press the truth that the perfect relation between God and man is based on the inward righteousness of the heart, and *Jeremiah (31. 31 ff.) looks forward to a new and ethical covenant. Christ takes this conception a step further when He shows that in His life and death is the perfect covenant between God and man, wherein men, instead of offering their own imperfect righteousness in exchange for the mercies of God, receive a supernatural gift of Divine grace whereby their righteousness may be made perfect. (The word διαθήκη is, in the NT, sometimes translated as 'covenant', sometimes as 'testament'.) This concept is fully worked out in the Ep. to the *Hebrews.

COVENANT, The. See National Covenant and Reunion.

COVENANTERS. The bodies of *Presbyterians in Scotland who in the 16th and 17th cents. bound themselves by religious and political oaths to maintain the cause of their religion. Various small covenants were signed between 1556 and 1562, leading up to the *King's Confession of 1581, which was signed by Scotsmen of all classes. In the next century, the attempt of *Charles I to introduce the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 prompted the *National Covenant of 1638, which was very widely signed, and even professed loyalty to the crown. After the outbreak of civil war, the English Parliament made an alliance with the rebel Scots in the terms of a *Solemn League and Covenant (1643; often known simply as 'the Covenant'), which carried with it the attempt to force Presbyterianism on England, but, though temporarily successful, it led in the end to divisions among the Covenanters themselves. The persecution of the Presbyterians in Scotland between 1661 and 1688 gave rise to further new Covenants. With the collapse of the Stuart regime in December 1688 the Presbyterians reasserted themselves, and successfully called for the abolition of episcopacy. In the western shires there took place a series of incidents known as the 'Rabbling'; over Christmas some two hundred episcopalian clergy were forcibly evicted from their livings. Even with the re-establishment of the Presbyterian Kirk these extreme Covenanters remained dissatisfied, and formed the *Cameronian sect, which was joined to the *Free Church in 1876.

J. K. Hewison, The Covenanters. A History of the Church in Scotland from the Reformation to the Revolution (2 vols., 1908). H. D. Fleming, The Story of the Scottish Covenants in Outline (1904); J. Dodds, The Fifty Years' Struggle of the Scottish Covenanters, 1638–88 (1860). W. L. Mathieson, Politics and Religion. A Study in Scottish History from the Reformation to the Revolution (2 vols., 1902). T. R. Barnett, The Story of the Covenant. Fifty Years of Fighting Faith (1928). J. Barr, The Scottish Covenanters (Glasgow, 1946). I. B. Cowan, 'The Covenanters' in Scottish Historical Review, xlvii (1968), pp. 35–52: id., The Scottish Covenanters, 1660–1668 (1976). See also general works on the history of Scotland.

COVENTRY, West Midlands. A Benedictine house was founded at Coventry in 1043 by Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and his wife, the famous 'Lady Godiva'. On the death of the Abbot in 1095, custody of the Abbey was granted to Bishop Limesey of *Chester, who transferred his see to Coventry; the title of *abbot was vested in the Bishop as at *Worcester and *Winchester. During the episcopate of Hugh Nonant (1188–98) the double title of Bishop of Coventry and *Lichfield was adopted. Although this title stood until 1836, when the archdeaconry of Coventry was transferred to the diocese of Worcester, it was only during the 12th century that Coventry was the place of residence of the Bishop and a genuine see town.

In 1918 the see was reconstituted with the archdeaconries of Coventry and Warwick. The collegiate church of St. Michael (originally a parish church, completed in 1433) became the cathedral, but was largely destroyed during an air raid in 1940. A new cathedral, designed by Sir Basil Spence and built at right angles to the ruins of the old cathedral, was consecrated in 1962. Essentially modern in design, it is constructed of stone; its slender pillars cause attention to be focused on the 72-foot-high tapestry of Christ in Glory behind the altar. The tapestry was designed by Graham Sutherland and woven near Aubusson in France. The rich colouring of the huge stained glass windows is visible only from the north (altar) end of the nave, since the sides of the church are built on a zig-zag pattern to allow a clear light only on the altar. Other features of the church include the star-shaped Chapel of Unity attached to the cathedral (administered by a joint council of Anglican and Free Churches), the Chapel of Industry (symbolizing the close relationship of the cathedral with the city), the bronze sculpture of St. Michael and the Devil by Jacob Epstein on the exterior of the East wall of the nave, the baptistery window designed by John Piper, and the huge glass screen at the south end of the nave, engraved with figures designed by John Hutton and allowing an uninterrupted view of the old cathedral ruins. The Charred Cross in the old ruins remains an emblem of the work of reconciliation with Germany.

For works on the diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, see s.v. Lichfield. On the Priory, J. C. Cox in V.C.H., Warwick, ii, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 52–9. On the Cathedral, B. [U.] Spence, Phoenix at Coventry. The Building of a Cathedral (1962); id.–H. Snoek, Out of the Ashes. A Progress Through Coventry Cathedral (1963). H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiii (1965), cols. 994–1001, s.v., with further bibl.

COVERDALE, MILES (1488–1568), translator of the Bible. Ordained priest in 1514, he entered the house of the *Augustinian friars at Cambridge, where, under the influence of the prior, Robert Barnes (1495–1540), he became an enthusiast for ecclesiastical reform. After preaching against confession and images, he was forced to reside abroad, and in 1535 he produced on the Continent the first complete English Bible, a translation made from the *Vulgate, M. *Luther's Bible, W. *Tyndale's Pentateuch and NT, and other sources, and probably printed at Zürich. In 1538 he made a translation of the NT based solely on the Vulgate, and in 1539 he issued with R. *Grafton the '*Great Bible'. After serving as pastor at Bergzabern, he returned to England, took part in the suppression of the W. Rebellion, and in 1551 became Bp. of *Exeter. He went into exile again in Mary's reign, returning in 1559. He assisted at M. *Parker's consecration, and for the rest of his life was a leader of the Puritan party. See also Bible (English Versions).

G. Pearson (ed.), Writings and Translations of Myles Coverdale, Bishop of Exeter (*Parker Society, 1844), with introd., pp. vii–ix; id. (ed.), Remains of Myles Coverdale (ib., 1846), with biogr. notice, pp. vii–xxiii. Memorials of Myles Coverdale (1836). H. Guppy, 'Miles Coverdale and the English Bible, 1488–1568' in the Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xix (1935), pp. 300–38. J. F. Mozley, Coverdale and his Bibles (1953). H. R. Tedder in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 364–72, s.v.

COWL. A garment with a hood (vestis caputiata) worn by monks. By St. *Benedict's time the cowl was composed of the cloak or mantle together with the hood, and this has now become the usual meaning of the word. The *Servites and the *Augustinian Canons, however, wear a cowl which is simply an unattached hood.

On the derivation and history of the word, see O.E.D., s.v. 'Cowl, sb.1'.

COWLEY FATHERS, The. A colloquial name for the priests of the Society of St. John the Evangelist (see S.S.J.E.), founded in the neighbourhood of Cowley, near Oxford.

COWPER, THOMAS. See Cooper, Thomas.

COWPER, WILLIAM (1731–1800), poet and hymn-writer. Born at Great Berkhamstead, where his father was rector, he was a pupil at Westminster School from 1741 to 1747. In 1748 he was entered at the Middle Temple and in 1754 called to the Bar. In 1759 he moved to the Inner Temple and was appointed Commissioner of Bankrupts; he was, however, more interested in literature than law. From this period his attacks of depression appear to date. Fear of an examination for a disputed appointment to the clerkship of the House of Lords in 1763 provoked a suicidal mania, prob. aggravated by a frustrated love for his cousin. His delusions began to take a religious colouring, and he was sent to a private lunatic asylum near *St. Albans. His terrors at first increased, but were gradually soothed by Dr. Nathaniel Cotton (1705–1788), who was himself something of a poet. In 1765 he moved to Huntingdon to be near his brother, eventually residing with the Rev. Morley Unwin and Mary, his wife. He accompanied the latter to Olney on the death of her husband in 1767. Having become intensely devout since his illness, he worked as a lay assistant to the *Evangelical incumbent, John *Newton, at whose request he began composing hymns. A further attack of insanity (1773–6) prevented his marriage with Mary Unwin, who encouraged him to write secular poetry. In 1786 they moved to Weston Underwood and in 1795 to East Dereham. He does not seem entirely to have recovered from an attack of insanity in 1787, and suffered a serious relapse in 1794.

Cowper contributed his finest hymns to the 'Olney Collection', published in conjunction with J. Newton in 1779. They include 'God moves in a mysterious way' (written as a period of madness approached; first publd. 1774), 'Hark, my soul! it is the Lord ' (first publd. 1768; transl. into Italian by W. E. *Gladstone), 'Oh for a closer walk with God' (first publd. in 1772), and 'Jesus, where'er Thy people meet' (first publd. in the Olney Hymns). His secular poetry, much of which has a religious bent, is marked by a love of nature and a tenderness which foreshadows the romantics. This includes The Task (1785), the famous ballad of John Gilpin (publd. 1783) and The Loss of the Royal George. He also published a translation of Homer (1791) and began to translate J. *Milton's Latin and Italian poems (posthumously publd., 1808).

Collected Works, ed. J. Newton, 10 vols., London, 1817. Later edd. include those of R. *Southey (15 vols., London, 1835–7, and 8 vols., Bohn's Standard Library, 1853–5) and of W. Hayley and T. S. Grimshawe, 8 vols., London, 1835. Cowper first issued his (collected) Poems in 2 vols., London, 1782–5; many later edd., including those of H. F. Cary (London, 1839), J. Bruce (3 vols., 1865; Aldine ed.), and H. S. Milford ('Oxford Edition', 1905; ed. 4, 1934, repr. with revisions, 1967). Life and posthumous writings ed. W. Hayley (3 vols., Chichester, 1803–4); Life and Letters, ed. id. (4 vols., ib., 1809). Correspondence also ed. T. Wright (4 vols., London, 1904); Unpublished and Uncollected Letters ed. id. (ib., 1925). Modern Lives include those of Goldwin Smith ('English Men of Letters', 1880), T. Wright of Olney (London, 1892), and H. I'A. Fausset (ib., 1928). Lord David Cecil, The Stricken Deer (1929); G. Thomas, William Cowper and the Eighteenth Century (1935); M. J. Quinlan, William Cowper. A Critical Life (Minneapolis, 1953). C. Ryskamp, William Cowper of the Inner Temple, Esq. A Study of his Life and Works to the Year 1768 (Cambridge, 1959). Bibl. by H. S. Milford in C.B.E.L., ii (1940), pp. 341–3. Further bibl. of works from 1895 to 1960 by L. Hartley (Chapel Hill, 1960). Norma [H.] Russell, A Bibliography of William Cowper to 1837 (Oxford Bibliographical Publications, New Series, xii; 1963).

COWPER TEMPLE CLAUSE. The section (No. 14) of the Education Act of 1870 dealing with the religious teaching to be given in the elementary schools constituted by the Act under public, instead of Church, control. The clause provided that in all such schools 'no religious catechism or religious formulary which is distinctive of any particular denomination shall be taught'. The clause reflects the influence of the National Education League and the *Broad Church Group, of which W. F. Cowper Temple (1811–88) was the chairman.

COX, RICHARD (c. 1500–81), Bp. of *Ely. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and held a number of ecclesiastical appointments. He sat on the commission which drew up the *King's Book (1543). On *Edward VI's accession his reforming zeal came to the front. He helped in compiling the 'Order of the *Communion' of 1548, and the Prayer Books of 1549 and 1552; and he was also on the commission appointed in 1551 for reforming the *canon law. As Chancellor of Oxford (1547–52) and first Dean of Christ Church (1547–53), he was mainly responsible for introducing *Peter Martyr and other foreign divines into the university, and his alteration of statutes, diversion of funds, and destruction of books, ornaments, and MSS. in order to eradicate Popery won him the name of 'Cancellor' of the university. On *Mary's accession he was imprisoned for a time and deprived of preferments, and then went into exile at Frankfurt, where his successful disputes with J. *Knox gave rise to the names 'Coxians' and 'Knoxians'. Under *Elizabeth I he became Bp. of Ely (1559–80), but refused to minister in the Queen's chapel on account of its crucifix and lights. He was an honest but narrow-minded ecclesiastic; he was severe on Romanists, and impatient of *Puritans.

Several of Cox's letters are printed in the Correspondence of Matthew Parker, ed. by H. Bruce for the *Parker Society (1853), pp. 151 f. and 281 f.; in The Zürich Letters, ed. by H. Robinson for the Parker Society, i (1842), pp. 26–8, 65–7, 112 f., 207 f., 220 f., 234–8, 243–5, 268 f., 279–82, 282–6, 297–300, 306–9, 314–19, 328–30; ii (1845), pp. 41 f., 192–5; and in Original Letters Relative to the English Reformation written during the Reigns of King Henry VIII, King Edward VI, and Queen Mary, chiefly from the Archives of Zürich, ed. by id. for the Parker Society, i (1846), pp. 119–24. Christina H. Garrett, The Marian Exiles (Cambridge, 1938), pp. 134–6. R. W. Dixon in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 412–14.

C.P.A.S. ('Church Pastoral Aid Society'). A society founded in 1836 to assist the home mission work of the Anglican Church by making grants of money for the stipends of curates and men and women lay workers. Its sympathies are markedly Evangelical.

CRAKANTHORPE, RICHARD (1567–1624), *Anglican divine. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he was elected Fellow in 1598. Hence he became a disciple of J. *Rainolds and a learned defender of *Puritan principles. Early in the reign of *James I he accompanied the ambassador, Lord Evers, to the court of the Emp. Rudolph II. In 1605 he was appointed rector of Black Notley, nr. Braintree, Essex, and in 1617 rector of Paglesham. He interested himself esp. in the Romanist controversy. His principal work, Defensio Ecclesiae Anglicanae (1625; posthumous), was an answer to the Sui Reditus ex Anglia Consilium of M. A. *de Dominis, in which the Abp. of Spalato had defended his recantation. It was a learned work and written in excellent Latin, but its tone was ferocious and the argument too closely dependent on de Dominis's text to allow Crakanthorpe to develop his own views. His other writings include books on metaphysics (1619) and logic (1622) and a Defence of Constantine with a Treatise of the Pope's Supremacy (1621).

Modern ed. of his Defensio Ecclesiae Anglicanae [by C. Wordsworth] in L.A.C.T. (1847). His treatise 'Of the Pope's Temporal Monarchy' is printed in J. Brogden, Catholic Safeguards Against the Errors, Corruptions and Novelties of the Church of Rome, iii (1851), pp. 44–109. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 2 f.

CRAMER, JOHN ANTONY (1793–1848), Dean of *Carlisle. Educated at Christ Church, he became Principal of New Inn Hall, Oxford, in 1831, Regius professor of modern history in 1842 (in succession to T. *Arnold), and Dean of Carlisle in 1844. Besides several classical writings he published the '*Catenae' of many of the Greek fathers on the NT (8 vols., 1838–44).

[He is to be distinguished from Johann Andreas Cramer (1723–88), who translated St. *Chrysostom's Homilies into German (1748–51).]

List of works in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 4 f.

CRANACH, LUCAS (1472–1553), 'the Elder', German painter. In his youth he was celebrated as a painter of altar-pieces and all his life of portraits. In the very early days of the *Reformation he espoused the *Lutheran cause, and was a friend and admirer of M. *Luther and the other reforming leaders, several of whom he painted. He also produced many woodcuts of religious subjects. His zeal for the new ideas is shown in a picture now at Leipzig, and dated 1518, which shows the soul of a dying man rising to meet the Trinity, in illustration of the doctrine of *justification by faith alone.

M. J. Friedlander and J. Rosenberg (edd.), Die Gemälde von Lucas Cranach (1932); J. Rosenberg (ed.), Die Zeichnungen Lucas Cranach d.Ä. (1960). H. Posse, Lucas Cranach d.Ä. (Vienna, 1942); E. Ruhmer, Cranach (Cologne, 1963; Eng. tr., 1963).

CRANMER, THOMAS (1489–1556), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Aslockton, Notts, he was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow, and was ordained in 1523. When it seemed likely that the royal divorce proceedings against Catherine of Aragon in 1529 would break down, Cranmer's suggestion to two of the King's advisers that the universities of Europe might be consulted so gratified *Henry VIII that he determined to employ Cranmer in his service. Soon after, while on an embassy to the Emp. *Charles V, Cranmer met and secretly married (1532) Margaret Osiander, the niece of Andreas *Osiander.

On his return, Cranmer was appointed in 1532 to the see of Canterbury in succession to W. *Warham. He accepted the office with the greatest reluctance, but it was soon clear that he was to be Henry's chief instrument for overthrowing the Papal supremacy in England. In 1533 he annulled Catherine's marriage with Henry and three years later pronounced a similar judgement on the King's marriage with Anne Boleyn. He also married Henry to and divorced him from Anne of Cleves. But despite this apparent subordination and subservience to the King's will, he acted not only at the behest of Henry but also in conformity with his own opinions. He was partly responsible for the '*Ten Articles' and for the dissemination of the Bible in the vernacular. On the other hand, he took relatively little part in the *dissolution of the monasteries and opposed the '*Six Articles' of 1539, under which, indeed, he had to banish his own wife (whom he had already kept in seclusion).

After Henry's death (1547), Cranmer became one of the most influential counsellors of the young *Edward VI. His ideas more and more developed in a Protestant direction. This is esp. noticeable in his attitude to the Eucharist, on which he had taken up a more or less *Zwinglian standpoint. On his initiative a number of Continental theologians, among them *Peter Martyr and M. *Bucer, were invited to England, and Cranmer continued in other ways to push forward his project for union with the reforming Churches of Europe. He was largely responsible for the abolition of the old Church ceremonies, for the destruction of images and other relics, for the BCP of 1549 (the greatest monument to his genius) and that of 1552, as well as for the '*Forty-Two Articles'. He disagreed with Northumberland, Edward's unscrupulous adviser, and with reluctance acknowledged Lady Jane Grey as Edward's successor.

On the accession of *Mary Tudor (1553), Cranmer, who had indeed been partly responsible for the tragedy of her mother's life, was accused of high treason, tried and sentenced, but the Queen spared his life. He was, however, imprisoned and finally tried for heresy. He was sentenced and degraded, but then made several recantations affirming his belief in *transubstantiation and in the Papal supremacy. These were written, as he later asserted, 'for fear of death', but it was only a temporary lapse. He renounced his recantations and died at Oxford at the stake on 21 Mar. 1556, showing great courage. Feast day in the ASB, 21 Mar.; in the American BCP (1979), 16 Oct. (with H. *Latimer and N. *Ridley).

Cranmer has been frequently accused of inconsistency, weakness, and timidity. But he was a convinced *Erastian, and he held to his Erastian-ism with great sincerity and tenacity. It was his very Erastianism which put him in a curious dilemma in Mary's reign, when the sovereign herself accepted Papal supremacy. For one reason, at any rate, his masterly English style, as expressed in the Prayer Books, in his Homilies and in the Litany, Cranmer's greatness will remain assured.

Works ed. H. Jenkyns, The Remains of Thomas Cranmer (4 vols., Oxford, 1833). Miscellaneous Writings and Letters also ed. E. Cox (*Parker Society, 1846); Writings and Disputations . . . Relative to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ed. id. (ib., 1844). Cranmer's Defence of the True and Catholic Doctrine of the Last Supper also ed. [C. H. H. Wright] (London, 1907). A MS. showing his early attempts to frame the offices of *Mattins and *Evensong was ed. J. W. Legg, Cranmer's Liturgical Projects (H.B.S., vol. 1; 1915), with introd. The principal source for his life, apart from the Calendars of the State Papers (see bibl. to Henry VIII), is the biography by J. *Strype (London, 1694). The MS. which forms the basis of the account by J. *Foxe is ed. J. G. Nicholas, Narratives of the Days of the Reformation (Camden Society [first series], lxxvii; 1859), pp. 218–33. Modern lives by H. J. Todd (2 vols., London, 1831), C. H. Collette (ib., 1887), A. J. Mason (ib., 1898), A. D. Innes (Edinburgh, 1900), A. F. Pollard (New York and London, 1904), C. H. Smyth (Cambridge, 1926), A. C. Deane (London, 1927), H. *Belloc (ib., 1931), T. Maynard (ib., 1956), and J. Ridley (Oxford, 1962). F. E. Hutchinson, Cranmer and the English Reformation (1951); G. W. Bromiley, Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop and Martyr (1956); id., Thomas Cranmer, Theologian (1956). P. Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist (1965). E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Liturgical Work of Archbishop Cranmer' in J.E.H., vii (1956), pp. 189–203. C. W. Dugmore, The Mass and the English Reformers (1958), passim. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., xiii (1888), pp. 19–31.

CRASHAW, RICHARD (c. 1613–49), English lyrical and religious poet. The son of a Puritan divine, he was educated at Charterhouse and at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of many High Church friends, esp. N. *Ferrar, whom he often visited at *Little Gidding. He was elected to a fellowship at Peterhouse in 1637, but expelled in 1644 owing to his refusal to subscribe to the *National Covenant. He then fled to France, where he was received into the RC Church. In 1646 his friend, A. Cowley, found him in great destitution at Paris and persuaded Queen *Henrietta Maria to exert her influence on his behalf. As a result he went to Italy, where he became an attendant to Card. Palotta. Owing to his denunciation of some persons of the cardinal's household he had to leave Rome for *Loreto in 1649 where he had obtained a small benefice. He died there soon afterwards. His poetry, collected in Steps to the Temple (1646) and Carmen Deo Nostro (1652), is filled with a devotion nourished on the Song of Solomon and the mysticism of St. *Teresa. His style, though often somewhat heavy and diffuse, is vivid with unusual imagery as in the famous 'Wishes to his Supposed Mistresse', and expressive of ardent religious feeling as in the fervent 'Hymn to St. Teresa', which inspired S. T. *Coleridge's 'Cristabel'. Crashaw exercised a considerable influence on other later poets such as J. *Milton and A. Pope.

L. C. Martin (ed.), The Poems English, Latin and Greek of Richard Crashaw (Oxford, 1927; ed. 2, 1957), incl. list of earlier edd.; review of ed. 1 by F. E. Hutchinson, 'Richard Crashaw, "Poet and Saint" ', in C.Q.R., cvi (1928), pp. 140–55. Studies on his poetry by R. C. Wallerstein (University of Wisconsin Studies in Language and Literature No. 7, Madison, 1935), [E.] A. Warren (Louisiana, 1939) and T. Foy (Dublin, 1933). G. W. Williams, Image and Symbol in the Sacred Poetry of Richard Crashaw (Columbia, S.C., 1963). M. Praz, The Flaming Heart (New York, 1958), pp. 204–63. F. E. Hutchinson in C.B.E.L., i, p. 456 f.

CREATION. In theology, the notion that the Universe was brought into being out of nothing by the free act of God, hence termed the Creator.

This doctrine, esp. characteristic of the Hebrew-Christian tradition, is to be contrasted with such theories as *Pantheism and emanationism on the one hand and *Dualism on the other. Since it finds a place at once for Divine Transcendence and Divine Immanence, it is closely linked with the philosophical position known as *Theism (q.v.), with its insistence on Personality in God. Its corollary is belief in the contingency of the world. And since on this view creatures owe their being to God, they partake of His goodness and hence are to be accounted 'very good' (Gen. 1. 31).

When fully elaborated the belief is clearly incompatible with the view that in constructing the universe God made use of pre-existing matter (*Plato). Certain Fathers, however, notably *Justin (Apol., i. 59) and *Clement of Alexandria (Strom., v. 14), accepted this Platonic view, finding support for it in Wisd. Sol. 11. 17. Clement, indeed, held that Plato derived his teaching from *Moses. But it was rejected in favour of the view of creation 'out of nothing', e.g. by *Theophilus of Antioch (Apol. ad Autolycum, ii. 4); and it received its death-blow in the conflict with *Gnosticism. Hence from the end of the 2nd cent. the thesis of creation ex nihilo was almost universally accepted in the Church. It was dogmatically formulated at the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215, and reaffirmed by the *Vatican Council of 1870.

Though a doctrine of Creation does not as such require that the world took its beginning in or with time, Christian theologians in general have decisively rejected the eternity of the universe. But they have commonly held that its temporal origin is capable of being established only through revelation (cf. Gen. 1). St. *Thomas Aquinas, e.g., asserted that it was incapable of rational proof, being 'credible, but not demonstrable or knowable' (credibile, non autem demonstrabile vel scibile, Cont. Gentiles, ii. 38). Similarly in the 18th cent. I. Kant, in his famous section on the 'Antinomies' in the Critique of Pure Reason, upheld the incompetence of reason to prove either the creation of the world in time or the contrary. It should, however, be added that there has been a tendency in modern Christian theology to conceive of creation as a continuous process through time rather than as having been completed by a single Divine fiat once in the remote past.

The changes in the traditional picture of creation brought about by increased scientific knowledge (astronomical, geological, palaeontological, biological) since the beginning of the 19th cent. have at times caused much religious unsettlement to orthodox Christians. But though they must radically affect our view of the order, dating, and character of the events (and hence also the degree to which the OT can be conceived as a scientific book), they hardly touch the fundamental philosophical questions which surround the notion of creation. These remain in essentials unaffected. In still more recent times it has often been suggested that the whole question is put into a new light by modern physics (relativity, etc.), on the ground that it is now possible to measure the dimensions of the Universe in both space and time. But even here the philosopher may do well to consider how far scientific observations, which presuppose certain inherited conceptions about the nature of space and time, can themselves overthrow these presuppositions, and may hence doubt whether they can have any real bearing on the metaphysical issues involved.

Classical medieval discussion by St. Thomas Aquinas, Cont. Gent., II, qq. vi–xxxviii, and Summa Theol., I, qq. xliv–xlvi. F. *Suarez, S.J., De Opere Sex Dierum (2 vols., Lyons, 1621); D. *Petavius, S.J., Theologica Dogmatica, iii (Paris, 1644), pp. 220–585 ('De Opificio Sex Dierum'). Modern RC doctrine was summarized by the Vatican Council of 1870, Sess. III, can. 1 ('De Deo Rerum Omnium Creatore'). The doctrine figures prominently in the dogmatic works of K. *Barth and E. *Brunner (qq. v.). A. D. Sertillanges, O.P., L'Idée de création et ses retentissements en philosophie (1945). L. Scheffczyk, Schöpfung und Vorsehung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, ed. M. Schmaus–A. Grillmeier, S.J., ii, fasz. 2a, 1963; Eng. tr., 1970), with bibl. A. Ehrhardt, The Beginning. A Study in the Greek Philosophical Approach to the Concept of Creation from Anaximander to St. John (Manchester, 1968). H. Pinard in D.T.C., ii (1908), cols. 2034–2201, s.v.; J. Strahan in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 226–31, s.v.; C. Boyer, S.J., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 814–25, s.v. 'Creazione, I'; P. F. Harris–E. A. Sillem in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 137–48, s.v., all with bibl. See also bibls. to Metaphysics, Theism, and comms. on Genesis.

CREATIONISM, also 'Creatianism', the doctrine that God creates de nihilo a fresh soul for each human individual at its conception or birth. It is opposed to *Traducianism (q.v.), which maintains that the soul is generated with the body, as well as to any doctrine of the soul's pre-existence (e.g., that in W. *Wordsworth's 'Intimations of Immortality'). It was vigorously upheld by St. *Jerome as alone compatible with Catholic theology, though he admitted that the W. tradition (*Tertullian, etc.) was in favour of Traducianism. It was also defended by St. *Hilary and the medieval theologians generally, who accepted *Peter Lombard's formula catholica ecclesia animas docet in corporibus infundi et infundendo creari (Sent., lib. ii, d. 18, n. 8); and St. *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., i, q. 118, a. 2) held the contrary doctrine heretical. Among Protestants, *Calvinists have tended to hold Creationism, *Lutherans Traducianism.

The word is occasionally used also for the doctrine that the world was created (as opposed, e.g., to *monism and *pantheism).

P. B. T. Bilaniuk in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 428 f., s.v., with refs.

CREDENCE. A small side table, also known as a 'credence table', usually placed conveniently in the sanctuary near the altar, to hold the bread, wine, and water to be used at the Eucharist, and other accessories of the service. The name (from Lat. credo, I believe, trust) seems to have developed from the use of the word for any side table on which meats were placed for tasting or assaying.

CREDITON. St. *Boniface (Wynfrith) was born here c. 680. In 909 it became the see of a new bishopric covering Devon and Cornwall, which was carved out of the diocese of *Sherborne. It was re-united in 1027 with the see of Cornwall (detached by King Athelstan before 931); and in 1050 (owing to exposure to pirates) Leofric, Bp. of Crediton from 1046, with the approval of *Leo IX, moved the see to *Exeter. The church of Holy Cross is a fine, mainly perpendicular, medieval building.

Since 1897 Crediton has provided the title of a *suffragan bishop.

CREDO UT INTELLIGAM (Lat., 'I believe so that I may understand'). A formula in which St. *Anselm summarized his conception of the relations between faith and knowledge (Proslogion, ch. 1). In essence it was the teaching of St. *Augustine.

CREED. A creed is a concise, formal, and authorized statement of important points of Christian doctrine, the classical instances being the *Apostles' Creed and the *Nicene Creed. Originally, candidates for baptism accepted a short formula of belief which varied in detail in different localities. By the 4th cent. these baptismal confessions had become more uniform and were everywhere tripartite in structure, following Mt. 28. 19. Finally, the Apostles' Creed in the W. and the Nicene Creed in the E. became, as they remain, the only baptismal confessions in use. The Council of *Nicaea (325) put in a credal form the profession of faith which it promulgated as a general standard of orthodoxy; and the use of creeds for this purpose rapidly spread in the 4th cent. The present practice of reciting the (Nicene) Creed at the Eucharist did not begin until the 5th cent., when it was introduced as a local custom in the E. It was not included in the Roman Mass until 1014.

Texts in A. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der alten Kirche (ed. 3, revised by G. L. Hahn, 1897). The best single handbook on the whole subject is J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950). Other textbooks by A. E. Burn (London, 1899; also three separate volumes on the several creeds by the same author, 'Oxford Church Text Books', 1906–12), E. C. S. Gibson ('Oxford Library of Practical Theology', 1908), and F. J. Badcock (London, 1930; ed. 2, 1938). P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, with a History and Critical Notes (3 vols., New York, 1877). C. P. *Caspari, Ungedruckte, unbeachtete, und wenig beachtete Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (3 vols., Christiania, 1866–75); id., Alte und neue Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (ib., 1879). C. H. *Turner, The History and Use of Creeds and Anathemas in the Early Centuries of the Church (C.H.S., 1906). C. H. *Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936). D. van den Eynde, Les Normes de l'enseignement chrétien (1933). O. Cullmann, Die ersten christlichen Glaubensbekenntnisse (1943; Eng. tr., The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1949). J. [H.] Crehan, S.J., Early Christian Baptism and the Creed. A Study in Ante-Nicene Theology (Bellarmine Series, xiii; 1950). H. Lietzmann, 'Symbolstudien, I–XIV' in Z.N.T.W., xxi (1922), pp. 1–34, xxii (1923), pp. 257–79, xxiv (1925), pp. 193–202, and xxvi (1927), pp. 75–95. See also bibls. to Apostles' Creed; Athanasian Creed; Nicene Creed.

CREED, The Apostles'. See Apostles' Creed, The.

CREED, The Nicene. See Nicene Creed, The.

CREED OF PIUS IV. The formula, often called the Professio fidei Tridentinae, published by *Pius IV in the bull 'Injunctum nobis' of 13 Nov. 1564, and until 1967 imposed on holders of all the principal ecclesiastical offices in the RC Church. The Creed contains a summary of the doctrines promulgated at the Council of *Trent, among them the Tridentine doctrines of the relation between Scripture and tradition, of original sin and justification, of the Mass and the *seven sacraments, of the saints, of *indulgences, and of the primacy of the Roman see. The form of it was slightly modified in 1877 so as to include subscription also to the decrees of the First *Vatican Council. It was replaced in 1967 by a shorter and less explicit formula.

The Creed, which is pr. in the main collections of conciliar decrees, is repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 425–7 (Nos. 1862–70). Eng. tr. in Bettenson, pp. 372–4.

CREED OF ST. ATHANASIUS. See Athanasian Creed.

CREEPING TO THE CROSS. See Veneration of the Cross.

CREIGHTON, MANDELL (1843–1901), Bp. of London. Educated at Merton College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow and Tutor, he devoted himself to historical work, delivering lectures on ecclesiastical, Italian, and Byzantine history. In 1870 he was ordained to the diaconate and in 1875 was appointed Vicar of Embleton, Cumbria, where he became friendly with the Greys of Howick and Fallodon. In 1884 he was elected to the Dixie professorship of ecclesiastical history at Cambridge and to a fellowship at Emmanuel College. During his tenure of the professorship he continued his great but uncompleted work on the History of the Papacy (5 vols., London, 1882–94), a clear, dispassionate, and erudite study, and acted as first editor of the English Historical Review on its foundation in 1886. In 1891 he succeeded W. C. Magee as Bp. of *Peterborough and six years later was translated to London. His episcopate was marked by statesmanship, scrupulous efficiency, and tact, esp. in dealing with the conflicts between *Ritualists and *Kensitites.

Mandell Creighton, his Life and Letters, by Mrs. [Louise] Creighton [his wife] (2 vols., 1904). W. G. Fallows, Mandell Creighton and the English Church (1964). [W.] O. Chadwick, Creighton on Luther (Inaugural Lecture; Cambridge, 1959). G. W. Prothero in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), pp. 82–8.

CREMATION. Disposal of the dead by reducing the body to ashes. The practice was not common in primitive times, but in the ancient civilized world it was the normal custom except in Egypt, Judaea, and China. Belief in the *resurrection of the body made cremation repugnant to the early Christians, whose use of burial is attested by the evidence of the *catacombs at *Rome. By the 5th cent. Christian influence had caused it to be abandoned throughout the Roman Empire. It was revived in the 19th cent., largely in free-thinking circles, though among some Christians it has now come into favour. The RC Church used to forbid its members to dispose of their dead in this way, mainly on account of the associations of the practice (CIC 1203, 1240). It was, however, generally permitted by an instruction of the *Holy Office issued on 5 July 1963 and a form of service is now provided for use in a crematorium. In the C of E the legitimacy of cremation is recognized by the 1969 Canons (B 38), which add that 'save for good and sufficient reason the ashes of a cremated person should be interred or deposited . . . in consecrated ground'.

E. Valton in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 2310–23, s.v. 'Crémation'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 502–8, s.v. 'Incinération'; P. Palazzini in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 838–42, s.v. 'Cremazione'; A. Closs–M. B. Walsh in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 439–41, s.v., all with bibls.

CREMER, HERMANN (1834–1903), German Protestant theologian. In 1870 he was elected to a professorship at Greifswald (an office he combined with a pastorate in the city until 1890), and held this till his death, refusing further preferment. He strongly resisted the liberalizing movement in theology, and in Die paulinische Rechtfertigungslehre (1899) reaffirmed a traditionalist interpretation of St. Paul's teaching about redemption. His best-known work is his lexicon to the NT (Eng. trans., Biblico-Theological Lexicon of NT Greek, 1878), a forerunner of G. Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament.

K. M. A. Kaehler, Wie Hermann Cremer wurde? Erinnerungen eines Genossen (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Jahrg. viii, Hft. 1; 1904); E. Cremer, Hermann Cremer. Ein Lebens- und Charakterbild (1912). W. Koepp, 'Die antithetische Paradoxtheologie des späten A. H. Cremer' in Zeitschrift für Systematische Theologie, xxiv (1955), pp. 290–341. J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxiii (1913), pp. 329–35, s.v.

CRIB, Christmas. By popular custom in the W. Church, a representation of the crib (or manger) in which Jesus was laid at His birth (Lk. 2. 7), containing a model of the Holy Child, is placed on Christmas Eve (24 Dec.) in church; it was usual for it to remain until the octave day of the *Epiphany (13 Jan.), but since the abolition of octaves the day of its removal has become less uniform. Figures of the BVM and St. *Joseph, cattle, angels and shepherds are usually included, and figures of the *Magi are added on the Epiphany (6 Jan.). St. *Francis of Assisi is thought to have made the first model of the crib at Greccio in 1223. The traditional site of Christ's birth is crowned with the Church of the Nativity at *Bethlehem, and the reputed remains of His crib are preserved at *Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome.

R. Berliner, Denkmäler und Krippenkunst (21 Lfgg., 1926–30); E. Guardascione, Il presepe (1934). Nesta de Robeck, The Christmas Crib [1938]. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2047–59, s.v. 'Ane'; ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 966–71, s.v. 'Bœuf', and iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3022–9, s.v. 'Crèche'; B. Bagatti, E. Josi, E. Lavagnino, and V. Mariani in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1970–5, s.v. 'Presepe'.

CRISIS, Theology of. Another name for the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth and his disciples, based on a triple set of associations of the Greek word κρίσις, viz.: (1) 'separation', i.e. the sharpness of the dialectical distinction between temporal history and God's Eternity; (2) 'judgement', i.e. God's sentence of condemnation on all human effort and achievement; and (3) 'catastrophe', i.e. the suddenness and finality of that Divine verdict.

CRISOM. See Chrysom.

CRISPIN and CRISPINIAN, Sts. (c. 285), martyrs. Acc. to the purely legendary account of their martyrdom, they were two Christian brothers who came of a noble Roman family. During the persecution of *Diocletian they fled to Soissons, where they set up as shoemakers, taking for their work only such money as was freely offered them, and finally were put to death. They are held to be the patrons of shoemakers, cobblers, and other leatherworkers. Another tradition connects them with Faversham in Kent. Feast day, 25 Oct.

Martyrium and other material, with full commentary, in AA.SS., Oct. XI (1864), pp. 495–540. A. *Butler (ed. by H. Thurston and D. Attwater), The Lives of the Saints, x (1936), pp. 331–3.

CRITICAL APPARATUS (Lat. Apparatus criticus). In printed editions of texts (e.g. of the Greek NT), a list of MS. readings differing from those in the accepted text. The apparatus is commonly printed at the foot of the page. The first edition of the Greek NT to contain a critical apparatus was that of Robert *Stephanus I (1550). See also Textual Criticism.

'CRITIQUE OF PURE REASON', The. The treatise in which I. *Kant set out for the first time the principles of the 'Critical Philosophy'. It was published at Riga in 1781. A much-altered 2nd edition appeared in 1787. Its difficulties and apparent contradictions are probably to be largely explained by the fact that its composition was extended over a period of ten or eleven years and that it incorporates drafts representing several stages in the development of the philosopher's beliefs.

The best Eng. tr. is that of N. K. Smith (London, 1929). The standard commentaries are those of H. Vaihinger (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1881–2) and, in English, by N. K. Smith (London, 1918). T. D. Weldon, Introduction to Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (Oxford, 1945; ed. 2, 1958); P. F. Strawson, The Bounds of Sense. An Essay on Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (1966). See also bibl. to Kant, I.

CRITOPULOS, METROPHANES. See Metrophanes Critopulos.

CROCE, BENEDETTO (1866–1952), Italian philosopher. He came under the influence of *Hegelianism while a law student at Rome and from 1886 onwards devoted himself to philosophical studies at Naples. His philosophy is a form of 'Creative Idealism' which concentrates on the forms taken by the life of the Spirit. Of these forms Croce recognizes four, viz. 'Intuition' (art), 'Concept' (science, philosophy, and history), 'Individuality' (economics), and 'Universality' (ethics). Religion he held to be a sub-form of Intuition, and Theology an illicit application of Concept, and both only transitory manifestations of the Spirit. His principal writings are the series collectively entitled Filosofia dello spirito, viz. I, Estetica come scienza dell'espressione linguistica generale (1902); II, Logica come scienza del concetto puro (1909); III, Filosofia della practica. Economica ed etica (1909); IV, Teoria e storia della storiografia (1917). Many of his writings have been translated into English.

Cinquant' anni di vita intellettuale italiana, 1896–1946, Scritti in onore di Benedetto Croce (ed. C. Antoni and R. Mattioli, 2 vols., Naples, 1950). The distinguished translators of Croce's works into Eng. include Cecilia M. Ady, D. Ainslie, E. F. Carritt, and R. G. Collingwood. Bibliography of his writings by S. Borsari, L'opera di Benedetto Croce (Naples, 1964). Studies by H. Wildon Carr (London, 1917), R. Piccoli (ib., 1922), M. Abbate (Turin, 1955), A. R. Caponigri (London, 1955), G. N. G. Orsini (Carbondale, Ill., 1961), and A. Bausola (Milan, 1965 and 1966). A. Caracciolo, L'estetica e la religione di Benedetto Croce (Arona, 1958). F. Capanna, La religione in Benedetto Croce (Bari, 1964). A. Momigliano, 'Reconsidering B. Croce (1866–1952)' [Memorial Lecture] in Durham University Journal, lix (1966), pp. 1–12, repr. in his Quarto Contributo alla Storia degli Studi Classici e del Mondo Antico (1969), pp. 95–115, with valuable discussion of literature. T. M. Knox in Chambers's Encyclopaedia (ed. 1950), iv, p. 255 f.

CROMWELL, OLIVER (1599–1658), Lord Protector. Born at Huntingdon, he entered Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, in 1616, married Elizabeth Bourchier, the daughter of a City merchant, in 1620, and was elected M.P. for Huntingdon in 1628.

The turning-point of his career was his election as M.P. for Cambridge in the Short Parliament of 1640, a position which he retained during the ensuing momentous Long Parliament. Henceforth he vehemently asserted the religious and political views of the *Puritan party which he combined with the fervent spirituality of the *Independents. Thus, when the Civil War broke out (1642), it appeared to him no less than to *Charles I as a religious struggle. He built up a magnificently trained and disciplined fighting force —the 'New Model Army'—which he used with startling effect on the battlefields of Marston Moor (1644) and Naseby (1645). In politics he exercised his influence on behalf of the Independents against the rigid intolerance of the Presbyterians. After the defeat of the Scots (who had supported the King in the Second Civil War) at Preston (1648), he foresaw that the Puritan cause could not be finally successful without the removal of the King, and accordingly he now urged the necessity for his execution. Cromwell's name stands fourth among the signatures on Charles I's death warrant.

In the ensuing few years Cromwell used his army to repress any attempts at insurrection. The Irish revolt was crushed with a ruthlessness which can be understood only in the light of contemporary fears that Ireland might be used as a base for foreign intervention on behalf of the Stuarts. Cromwell defeated the insurgent Scots on 3 Sept. 1650 at Dunbar and a year later to the day at Worcester. He had long been dissatisfied with the inefficiency and oligarchical ways of the Long Parliament, and on 20 Apr. 1653 he forcibly dismissed it.

Henceforward Cromwell, who was installed as 'Lord Protector' on 16 Dec. 1653 under the Instrument of Government, ruled England by a series of constitutional experiments—from 'Barebones' Parliament' of 140 'Saints' to the Major-Generals—none of which really proved successful. Yet his rule was firm, efficient, and tolerant. The C of E was remodelled to some extent on Puritan lines (though the ecclesiastical organization was chaotic) and a committee of *Triers set up to eject unfit clergy. Attempts were also made to improve the morals and manners of the country, to further education, to reform the law, and to instil 'true godliness'. Yet it is doubtful whether his government could ever be truly called popular, for from the first there were signs of disaffection of one kind or another. Cromwell died on 3 Sept. 1658, the anniversary of the battles of Dunbar and Worcester, and was buried in *Westminster Abbey. At the Restoration his body was disinterred and hung at Tyburn.

Cromwell's character, a combination of rugged mysticism and practical efficiency, is not easy to interpret, nor have historians past or present reached any agreement about it. Perhaps Clarendon best summarizes it in the words 'He was one of those men quos vituperare ne inimici quidem possunt nisi ut simul laudent'. He believed that he was the instrument of a Divine providence: 'I have not sought these things; truly I have been called unto them by the Lord.' His conception of government was analogous to that of a 'constable set to keep the peace of the parish'. He was not without ambition, yet his refusal of the Humble Petition and Advice (urging him to take the title of king) shows that Mrs. Hutchinson's charge that the 'poison of ambition ulcerated Cromwell's heart' had no basis in fact. At times ruthless and at others magnanimous, he was undoubtedly the genius of the Commonwealth.

Letters and Speeches, ed. T. *Carlyle (2 vols., London, 1845; revised ed. by S. C. Lomas, with introd. by C. H. Firth, 3 vols., ib., 1904); new ed. by W. C. Abbot (4 vols., Cambridge, 1937–1947). The best modern studies are those of F. Harrison ('Twelve English Statesmen', London, 1888), S. R. Gardiner (London, 1899), J. Morley (ib., 1900), C. H. Firth (ib., 1901), and G. R. S. Taylor (ib., 1928). M. [P.] Ashley, Oliver Cromwell (1937); id., The Greatness of Oliver Cromwell (1957); id., Oliver Cromwell and the Puritan Revolution (1958). [J. E.] C. Hill, God's Englishman. Oliver Cromwell and the English Revolution (1970). More popular life by J. Buchan (London, 1934). H. Kittel, Oliver Cromwell. Seine Religion und seine Sendung (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Lietzmann, ix; 1928); R. S. Paul, The Lord Protector. Religion and Politics in the Life of Oliver Cromwell (1955); H. F. L. Cocks, The Religious Life of Oliver Cromwell (1960). E. Barker, Oliver Cromwell and the English People (1937). C. H. Firth in D.N.B., xiii (1888), pp. 155–86.

CROMWELL, THOMAS (c. 1485–1540), Earl of Essex. After an adventurous and probably ill-spent early life, he returned to England from the Continent, where he had served in the French army in Italy, and took up his father's trade as a cloth-dresser. For some time he seems to have combined this with legal work. Through the latter he gained the favour of T. *Wolsey and in 1523 he entered the House of Commons. In 1524 Wolsey made use of him for the suppression of a number of small monasteries to provide the endowment of his two proposed colleges at Ipswich and Oxford. On Wolsey's disgrace (1529), he entered the King's service and became a strong advocate of Protestantism and the royal supremacy in Church and State. His rise was rapid and in 1535 he was appointed Vicar General and became the chief adviser and instrument of the King in all ecclesiastical affairs. It was he who arranged for the visitation, and finally the *dissolution, of the monasteries between 1536 and 1539, and he also acted as the chief intermediary between Henry and the Reformation Parliament, in which he sat as the M.P. for Taunton. In 1536 and 1538 he issued *Injunctions, ordering that a Bible should be provided in every church, that the clergy should perform certain definite duties, and that a register of births, marriages, and deaths should be kept. In his foreign policy he endeavoured to bring about the alliance of England with the Protestant princes of Germany, and with this in view he arranged a marriage between Henry VIII and Anne of Cleves. The king's disgust at the marriage and the fact that he now had no further use for Cromwell were the causes of his undoing; for though Cromwell had only recently been created Earl of Essex (7 Apr. 1540) and was the recipient of landed estates confiscated from the monasteries, he was arrested, sentenced for treason, and beheaded on 28 July 1540.

R. B. Merriman, Life and Letters of Thomas Cromwell (2 vols., 1902). Letters to Cromwell and others on the Suppression of the Monasteries, ed. G. H. Cook (1965). A. Galton, The Character and Times of Thomas Cromwell (1887); P. Wilding, Thomas Cromwell (1935); T. Maynard, The Crown and the Cross. A Biography of Thomas Cromwell (1950); A. G. Dickens, Thomas Cromwell and the English Reformation (1959). T. M. Parker, 'Was Thomas Cromwell a Machiavellian?' in J.E.H., i (1950), pp. 63–75; G. R. Elton, 'Thomas Cromwell's Decline and Fall' in Cambridge Historical Journal, x (1951), pp. 150–85; id., 'King or Minister? The Man behind the Henrician Reformation', History, new series, xxxix (1954), pp. 216–32; id., 'The Political Creed of Thomas Cromwell' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, vi (1956), pp. 69–92; id., England under the Tudors (1955), pp. 127–59; S. E. Lehmberg, 'Supremacy and Vicegerency: A Re-examination' in E.H.R., lxxxi (1966), pp. 225–35. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., xiii (1888), pp. 192–202. See also works cited under Henry VIII.

CROSIER. The crook-shaped staff of bishops, sometimes carried also by abbots and abbesses. Its origin has been traced by some to the rod used by Roman augurs in their divinations, by others to the ordinary walking-stick. It is first ordered as a liturgical ornament in the 7th cent. In the E. Church the crosier is surmounted by a cross between two serpents. The familiar W. form resembling a shepherd's crook is due to later symbolism. In the 19th cent. antiquaries often applied the term wrongly to the archiepiscopal cross.

K. Lind, Über den Krummstab. Eine archäologische Skizze (1863). C. Rohault de Fleury, La Messe. Études archéologiques sur ses monuments, viii (1889), pp. 75–110, with plates DCXLI–DCLIII. P. Hofmeister, O.S.B., Mitra und Stab der wirklichen Prälaten ohne bischöflichen Charakter (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, Hft. 104; 1928), passim. R. Fage, 'Les Voiles de crosses' in Mélanges offerts à M. Gustave Schlumberger, ii (1924), pp. 477–86. P. Morrisroe in C.E., iv (1906), p. 515 f., s.v.; B. Fischer in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 508 f., s.v. 'Bischofsstab', both with bibl. On the Eng. word 'Crosier', cf. O.E.D., ii (1893), p. 1191, s.v.

CROSS, Devotion to the. See Exaltation of the Cross; Invention of the Cross; Veneration of the Cross.

CROWLAND ABBEY. This monastery was founded on an island in the fens by King Ethelbald in 716 in honour of St. *Guthlac, who had lived as a hermit on the site. After a fire in 1091 it was rebuilt, and added to in the succeeding centuries. At the *Dissolution (1539), the east part of the church and the transepts were demolished, but the nave and aisles were used as a parish church until the end of the 17th cent. Then the roof and south aisle fell, and since that date the north aisle only has been so used. The Early English west front survives in a ruined state. The form 'Croyland Abbey' is also found.

Ingulfi Croylandensis Historia [ed. W. Fulman] (Rerum Anglicarum Scriptorum Veterum, i (1684), pp. 1–107); Historiae Croylandensis Continuatio (ib., pp. 451–593). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (ed. J. Caley–H. Ellis–B. Blandinel, ii, 1819), pp. 90–126. R. Gough, The History and Antiquities of Croyland Abbey in the County of Lincoln (1783). F. M. Page, The Estates of Crowland Abbey (1934). Rose Graham in V.C.H., Lincoln, ii, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 105–18. H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 1066–71, s.v.

CROWN OF THORNS. One of the instruments of Christ's Passion (Jn. 19. 2). Its supposed preservation as a relic is first mentioned in the 5th cent., and in the 6th *Cassiodorus refers to it as one of the glories of the earthly *Jerusalem. The Jerusalem relic is said to have been later moved to *Constantinople, and in the 13th cent. to have come into the possession of St. *Louis IX, King of France, who built the *Sainte-Chapelle at Paris (completed 1248) to house it. Acc. to other traditions it was broken up into smaller relics.

F. de Mély, Exuviae Sacrae Constantinopolitanae (Paris, 1904), pp. 165–440. J. E. A. Gosselin, Notice historique sur la sainte couronne d'épines de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ, et sur les autres instruments de sa passion, qui se conservent dans l'église métropolitaine de Paris (1828); C. Rohault de Fleury, Mémoire sur les instruments de la passion de N.-S. J.-C. (1870), Book ii, ch. 3, pp. 199–224. H. St. J. Hart, 'The Crown of Thorns in John 19, 2–5' in J.T.S., N.S., iii (1952), pp. 66–75.

CROZIER. See Crosier.

CRUCIFIX. A model of the cross, bearing an image of the crucified Lord. Crucifixes are widely used as objects of private and public devotion in the W. In the E. their place is taken by crosses with flat likenesses, i.e. a form of *ikon. In pre-Reformation times the crucifix was common throughout the W. Church, esp. as the central object of the rood-screen, which ran across the entrance to the *chancel of many churches. As the central ornament of the altar it began to come into general use in the 15th cent., though it had occasionally been so used earlier. This use was until recently almost universal in RC churches. Since 1969 it has sometimes been replaced by a crucifix hung above the altar or on the wall behind it, or even by a processional cross in the vicinity. In the C of E a crucifix was occasionally used on the altar after the Reformation, e.g. in Queen *Elizabeth I's private chapel, but instances are very rare until the liturgical revival in the 19th cent. Among Protestants, the sole body which habitually uses the crucifix is the *Lutheran Church.

J. Hoppenot, Le Crucifix dans l'histoire et dans l'art, dans l'âme des saints et dans notre vie (1899). L. Bréhier, Les Origines du crucifix dans l'art religieux (1904); G. Schönermark, Der Kruzifixus in der bildenden Kunst (Zur Kunstgeschichte des Auslandes, Hft. lxii; 1908); G. de Jerphanion, S.J., La Voix des monuments. Notes et études d'archéologie chrétienne (1930), No. vii, 'La Représentation de la croix et du crucifix aux origines de l'art chrétien', pp. 138–64. C. Costantini, Il crocifisso nell'arte (1911). L. H. Grondijs, L'Iconographie byzantine du Crucifié mort sur la croix (Bibliotheca Byzantina Bruxellensis, i; [1941]). E. J. Hunt, English and Welsh Crucifixes 970–1550 (1956). Braun, A.G., pp. 466–92, with plates 88–92. O. *Marucchi, F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., and H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 517–39, s.v. 'Cross and Crucifix'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3045–3131, s.v. 'Croix et crucifix'; B. Leoni, E. Zocca, K. Rathe, E. Lavagnino and G. Carandente in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 964–80, s.v. 'Croce', with bibl.

CRUCIFIXION. Infliction of death by nailing or binding to a cross. It arose in the E., and was also frequently used by the Carthaginians. By the Romans it was much used as the extreme punishment for slaves, but it might also be inflicted upon any person who could not prove Roman citizenship. It was preceded by scourging. From the reign of Galba (A.D. 68–9) the lower orders among Roman citizens might also suffer this penalty. *Constantine abolished crucifixion as a legal punishment, but isolated instances are recorded later in the 4th cent. Some of the Christian martyrs under the Roman Empire suffered in this way; and (acc. to tradition) some, as St. *Peter, were crucified head downwards or, as St. *Andrew, on an X-shaped cross.

The Crucifixion of Jesus Christ between two thieves is recorded by all four Evangelists (Mt. 27. 35–8, Mk. 15. 24–7, Lk. 23. 33, Jn. 19. 18). He was offered and tasted, but declined to drink, the potion of medicated wine provided by a group of charitable women in Jerusalem for such sufferers. The Ep. of *Barnabas, which compares the cross with the letter T, implies that the Lord's Cross was of the shape known as a 'crux commissa'. But the more general view, held e.g. by St. *Augustine (Enn. in Ps. ciii. 14) on the basis of Eph. 3. 18, was that it was a 'crux immissa', with the upright extending above the transom.

M. Hengel, 'Mors turpissima Crucis' in Rechtfertigung. Festschrift für Ernst Käsemann, ed. J. Friedrich et al. (1976), pp. 125–84; enlarged Eng. tr., Crucifixion (1977). D. Smith in D.C.G., i (1917), pp. 397–9, s.v.

CRUDEN, ALEXANDER (1701–70), compiler of the 'Biblical Concordance'. Born in Aberdeen, he was educated on rigid *Presbyterian principles, taking his degree from Marischal College, c. 1720. His subsequent life was marked by eccentricities bordering on insanity, apparently caused by disappointments in love; and he was several times put in confinement. Moving to London c. 1726, he was employed successively as a private tutor, a proof-corrector and French reader to the Earl of Derby. On dismissal from this last post, he established a bookshop in London in 1732 and was appointed bookseller to Queen Caroline in 1735. In 1736 he began to compile his Concordance (OT and NT), a task for which he was pre-eminently qualified by long study of the Scriptures, an ingrained conscientiousness, and esp. a habit of tracing words through the Bible for amusement. He completed the work in some eighteen months and presented a copy to Queen Caroline in Nov. 1737. Later editions of this work remain the standard concordance for users of the AV. In later life Cruden set himself to reform the morals of the country. Calling himself 'Alexander the Corrector', a title prob. suggested by his work for the press, he even made application to Parliament (1755) for official nomination to the office. He published two further editions of the Concordance (1761 and 1769), as well as religious pamphlets.

E. Olivier, The Eccentric Life of Alexander Cruden (1934). The earliest Life is that by A. Chalmers (8 pp.) prefixed to the 6th ed. of the Concordance (1810). W. D. Macray in D.N.B., xiii (1888), pp. 249–51.

CRUETS. Vessels of glass or precious metal in which the wine and water for the *Eucharist are brought to the altar.

Braun, C.A., pp. 414–40, with illustrations, plates 80–6.

CRUSADES. The primary use of the term is to describe the series of expeditions from W. Europe to the E. Mediterranean, beginning in 1095, designed to recover the *Holy Land from Islam and then to retain it in Christian hands, and later to counteract the expanding power of the Ottoman Empire. The word itself was slow to evolve, the expeditions often being known at first as 'pilgrimages'; terms such as crux and croiserie were introduced c. the middle of the 13th cent., doubtless derived from the cross worn on the clothing of Crusaders and pilgrims to the Holy Land.

Many forces, ideological and social, combined to produce the Crusades. The long tradition of pilgrimages to the Holy Land was strengthened at this time by the growing devotion to the Lord's historical life, and hence to the places where he had lived. The W. Church had progressively abandoned the original Christian hostility to war, and had come to a rapprochement with the military aristocracy. Crusaders were encouraged by the grant of *indulgences and by the status of *martyr in the event of death. At the same time, the prospect of acquiring land in the East, and the pressure of an expanding population, helped to persuade both the nobility and the peasantry to participate in the movement. However, the actual form and date of the First Crusade, which (in view of the divisions among the Muslims of the Near East) was launched at the best possible time, can be explained by political circumstances in the East and West at the time. The Crusades took the form of distinct and almost annual expeditions, varying greatly in size, among which the largest are numbered in a conventional order. Little that is specifically Christian can be discerned in the manner in which they were conducted, and the Crusaders on occasion behaved with extreme brutality, both towards the Jews at home and the subjected people in the East.

The history of the Crusades may be roughly divided into three periods.

(a) 1095–1204. The First Crusade was solemnly proclaimed by Pope *Urban II at the Council of *Clermont on 27 Nov. 1095, with the double object of relieving the pressure of the Seljuk Turks on the E. Empire, and of securing free access to Jerusalem for pilgrims. A series of expeditions proceeded from France and S. Italy across the Balkans and Asia Minor, under the leadership of *Adhémar, Bp. of Le Puy, Raymond of Toulouse, *Godfrey of Bouillon, Robert of Normandy, and *Bohemond and Tancred of Apulia. Antioch was captured in June 1098, and Jerusalem on 15 July 1099. Godfrey was appointed Defender of the Holy Sepulchre, but on his death his brother Baldwin succeeded him and was crowned King of Jerusalem on Christmas Day 1100. The following 20 years were occupied in extending the precarious hold of the conquerors and in establishing a series of Latin states (Antioch, Tripoli, and Jerusalem) extending along the whole coast-line of Syria and Palestine, with a fourth, *Edessa, to the east of Antioch.

In face of steady resurgence of Moslem power, the new states proved difficult to defend. The Second Crusade of 1147, provoked by the fall of Edessa (1144), was preached by St. *Bernard of Clairvaux and led by Louis VII of France and the Emp. Conrad III; it wholly failed to ease the situation in the Frankish East, and in 1187 Saladin crippled Christian manpower, captured Jerusalem and overran a great part of the Latin possessions. This disaster provoked the Third Crusade of 1189–1192, in which the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa, Richard I of England, and Philip II of France all took part. Considerable territory along the coast was recovered, but Jerusalem itself remained in the hands of Saladin. In 1202 the Fourth Crusade set out in an attempt to improve the situation, but under the influence of Boniface of Montferrat and the Venetians it was deflected from its original objective of Egypt to Constantinople, where a Latin Empire was established in 1204. Although this achieved a temporary reunion of the E. and W. Churches under the authority of *Innocent III, its long-term effect was to increase the bitterness of the division, and further to weaken the E. Empire as a defence against Moslem expansion.

(b) 1204–91. Attempts continued in the 13th cent. to defend the remaining Frankish possessions in Syria. Several expeditions went to the Holy Land, and Jerusalem was recovered by negotiation by *Frederick II and was once again in Latin hands from 1229 to 1244. The two largest Crusades (the international one of 1217–21 and the French one under *Louis IX) were directed against Egypt, but both failed after a promising beginning. The Latin states were slowly overrun, and in 1291 the last remaining possession on the mainland fell. In the meantime public opinion in the W. was turning increasingly against the idea of Crusading, and attempts were initiated, esp. by the friars, to spread the Gospel by preaching. The establishment of Mongol rule over a great part of Asia for the first time offered promising prospects for Christian missions.

(c) 1291–1464. The final loss of the Latin states extinguished the whole raison d'être of the Crusades in their original form, but the expansion of Ottoman power into E. Europe provoked a series of intermittent attempts to organize joint Christian action against them. Much the largest of these expeditions was that of 1396, which was defeated by the Turks at Nicopolis. Its defeat can perhaps be taken as a symbol of the end of the Crusading movement; but an alternative date would be 1464, when Pope *Pius II died after completely failing to secure European support for a further Crusade.

During the whole period, there were many other expeditions planned or approved by the Papacy, which at the time were not distinguished from the Crusades to the E., and for which the same spiritual benefits were promised. These were directed against non-Christians elsewhere (such as the Moslems of Spain or the pagan Slavs), against heretics (as in the Crusade against the *Albigensians), or against political opponents of the Papacy (such as the Hohenstaufen in 13th cent. Italy). In the 19th and 20th cents. the titles 'Crusade' and 'Crusader' have been employed for a variety of Christian movements, often designed for evangelism.

See also Children's Crusade, Hospitallers, Templars.

The standard collection is Recueil des historiens des croisades publié par les soins de l'Académie Royale des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. Historiens occidentaux (5 vols. bound in 6, 1844–89); Historiens grecs (2 vols., 1875–81); Documents arméniens (2 vols., 1869–1906); Historiens orientaux (5 vols. bound in 6, 1872–1906); Lois (2 vols., 1841–3). J. Michaud, Histoire des croisades (7 vols., 1817–22; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1852). B. Kugler, Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (1880); T. A. Archer–C. L. Kingsford, The Crusades ('The Story of the Nations'; 1894); W. B. Stevenson, The Crusaders in the East (1907); L. Bréhier, L'Église et l'orient au moyen-âge. Les Croisades (1907). E. Barker, The Crusades (repr. from E.B. (ed. 11), s.v.; 1923). H. Pissard, La Guerre sainte en pays chrétien. Essai sur l'origine et le développement des théories canoniques (Bibliothèque d'Histoire religieuse, x; 1912); C. Erdmann, Die Entstehung des Kreuzzugsgedankens (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, vi; 1935); M. Villey, La Croisade. Essai sur la formation d'une théorie juridique (1942). P. Alphandéry–A. Dupront, La Chrétienté et l'idée de croisade (2 vols., 1954–9). R. Grousset, Histoire des croisades (3 vols., 1934–6). S. Runciman, A History of the Crusades (3 vols., 1951–4), with full bibl. for sources and modern works; K. M. Setton (ed.), A History of the Crusades (5 vols., Philadelphia, 1955 ff.). R. Pernoud, Les Croisades (1960; Eng. tr., 1962); J. A. Brundage, The Crusades. A. Documentary Survey (Milwaukee, 1962); H. E. Mayer, Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (1965; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1972). W. B. Stevenson, C. L. Kingsford, and J. Passant in C.Med.H., v (1929), pp. 265–333, with detailed bibl., pp. 867–71. H. v. Sybel, Geschichte des ersten Kreuzzugs (1841). R. Röhricht, Geschichte des ersten Kreuzzuges (1901); A. C. Krey, The First Crusade (Princeton, &c., 1921); F. Chalandon, Histoire de la première croisade jusqu'à l'élection de Godefroi de Bouillon (1925). R. Röhricht, Geschichte des Königreichs Jerusalem, 1100–1291 (1898). J. L. La Monte, Feudal Monarchy in the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem 1100 to 1291 (Cambridge, Mass., 1932); J. Richard, Le Royaume latin de Jérusalem (1953); id., Le Comté de Tripoli sous la dynastie toulousaine (1102–1187) (Bibliothèque Archéologique et Historique, xxxix; 1945); C. Cahen, La Syrie du Nord à l'époque des croisades et la principauté franque d'Antioche (1940). A. S. Atiya, The Crusade in the Later Middle Ages (1938); id., Crusade, Commerce and Culture (Bloomington, Ind., 1962); id., The Crusade. Historiography and Bibliography (1962). R. C. Smail, Crusading Warfare (1097–1193) (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, New Series, iii; 1956). J. Michaud, Bibliothèque des croisades (4 vols., 1829). H. E. Mayer, Bibliographie zur Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (Hannover, 1960; ed. 2, 1965). H. B. Workman in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 345–51, s.v. J. Prawer, The Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem [1972], and other works of this author.

CRUSIUS, CHRISTIAN AUGUST (1715–75), German theologian. He became professor of philosophy at Leipzig in 1744, and of theology in 1750. He attacked the philosophies of G. W. *Leibniz and C. *Wolff as anti-Christian, and urged that their determinist doctrines were dangerous to morality. He also objected strongly to the view, which first became common in his time, that the books of the Bible should be studied on the same principles of criticism as other literature. His chief writings were his Entwurf der notwendigen Vernunftwahrheiten (1745) and his Hypomnemata ad theologiam propheticam (3 vols., 1764–68). He was held in high regard by I. *Kant, whose ethical doctrines he probably influenced.

A. Marquardt, Kant und Crusius (Diss., Kiel, 1885); A. Seitz, Die Willensfreiheit in der Philosophie des C. A. Crusius (1899); H. Heimsoeth, Metaphysik und Kritik bei C. A. Crusius (1926). E. Schwarz–P. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), p. 344 f., and H. Hoffmann in R.G.G. (ed. 2), i (1927), col. 1749 f.

CRUTCHED FRIARS (Fratres Cruciferi). A general name given to several religious congregations, mostly of *canons regular, whose history is very obscure; they derive their name from their custom of carrying a cross in their hands or having one sewn on the front of their habit. The oldest body of crutched friars may be that founded in the Holy Land from Crusading times, of which practically nothing is known. Another order in Italy secured papal confirmation in 1187, having been founded a little earlier; it was suppressed in 1650. A congregation of crutched brethren from Bohemia and Poland was established as a military order in 1234 at Prague. More permanent was the community founded in Flanders c. 1210 by Theodore of Celles (d. 1236), which secured papal confirmation in 1248. It had daughter houses not only in modern Belgium and Holland, but also in France, Germany, and England. Most of its houses were suppressed at the time of the French Revolution or Napoleon, but a revival took place. The order now has houses in Holland, Belgium, America, Italy and Germany, as well as a number of mission stations.

C. R. Hermans, Annales Canonicorum Regularum S. Augustini, Ordinis S. Crucis (3 vols., 's Hertogenbosch, 1858). H. van Rooijen, Theodorus van Celles (Cuyk, 1936). E. Beck, 'The Order of the Holy Cross (Crutched Friars) in England' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 3rd Series, vii (1913), pp. 191–208; H. F. Chettle, 'The Friars of the Holy Cross in England' in History, New Series, xxxiv (1949), pp. 204–20. D. M. Knowles–R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses: England and Wales (1953), pp. 204–5. Heimbucher, i, pp. 419–22, ii, p. 656 f. H. Vinken in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 1042–62, s.v. 'Croisiers'; J. W. Rausch in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 472 f., s.v. 'Crosier Fathers'.

CRYPT. A cellar or vault beneath a church, such as is often used as a chapel or a burying-place. These uses no doubt date from the earliest ages of the Church, when Christian assemblies and services sometimes took place in the *catacombs or underground burying-places in Rome, the tombs of martyrs often serving as altars, and later as centres for pilgrimages. Sometimes, as at *Rochester Cathedral, the crypt is partly above ground.

A. Grabar, Martyrium. Recherches sur le culte des reliques et l'art chrétien antique, i (1946), pp. 436–87.

CRYPTO-CALVINISM. The doctrine of the Reformer, Philip *Melanchthon (1497–1560), also known as '*Synergism' or 'Philippism'. Melanchthon had always been more moderate in his theology than M. *Luther, and after the latter's death in 1546 he advocated a policy of conciliation both towards the RC Church by accepting *Charles V's 'Interim' in matters that were indifferent, and towards the *Calvinists by softening Luther's dogmatism on the subject of the Eucharistic Presence. The strict Lutherans, led by *Flacius Illyricus, accordingly attacked him as a secret ('crypto') Calvinist. The so-called *Adiaphoristic Controversy thus begun introduced those endless disputes among the Lutherans which were to be in the next generations a major cause of their political weakness.

M. A. Landerer and G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 322–31, s.v. 'Philippisten'; K. Algermissen in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 653 f., s.v. 'Kryptocalvinismus'.

CUDWORTH, RALPH (1617–88), *Cambridge Platonist. Born at Aller in Somerset, where his father was rector, he became successively Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1639), Master of Clare Hall (to which he was appointed by the Parliamentary visitors, 1645), Regius professor of Hebrew (also 1645), and Master of Christ's College (1654). In addition he held the livings of North Cadbury from 1650, of Ashwell from 1662, and a prebendal stall at *Gloucester from 1678. Perhaps the most distinguished representative of the Cambridge Platonists, he was an opponent both of religious dogmatism and of atheism of the T. *Hobbes type. In his chief work, The True Intellectual System of the Universe (1678), a cumbrous composition which he never completed, he argued that the only real source of knowledge is the Christian religion. Religious truth was embodied in three great principles: the reality of the supreme Divine intelligence and the spiritual world which that intelligence has created, the eternal reality of moral ideas, and the reality of moral freedom and responsibility. It was in this way that Cudworth, who, as his conception of a 'Plastic Medium' indicates, was very strongly influenced by Platonic ideas, attempted to assert the necessity for a revealed religion against the atheism of his day. His ethical beliefs were worked out in his Treatise concerning Eternal and Immutable Morality (not published till 1731).

Cudworth's True Intellectual System of the Universe was tr. into Lat. by J. L. *Mosheim (2 vols., Jena, 1733); partly from this Lat. tr. the English was ed. by T. Birch, along with Cudworth's Discourse concerning the true Notion of the Lord's Supper (orig. publd. 1642) and two Sermons, as The Works of Ralph Cudworth (4 vols., Oxford, 1829), with account of his life and writings in vol. i, pp. 7–37. C. E. Lowrey, The Philosophy of Ralph Cudworth (New York, 1884); G. Aspelin, Ralph Cudworth's Interpretation of Greek Philosophy (Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift, xlix, pt. 1; 1943); J. A. Passmore, Ralph Cudworth. An Interpretation (Cambridge, 1951). Lydia Gysi, Platonism and Cartesianism in the Philosophy of Ralph Cudworth (Berne, 1962). F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926), pp. 110–29. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 271 f.

CUIUS REGIO, EIUS RELIGIO (Lat., 'In a [prince's] country, the [prince's] religion'). The formula adopted at the Religious Peace of *Augsburg (1555), by which the princes of the Empire were to be permitted to settle whether the religion of their own lands should be RC or Lutheran.

CULDEES. This name, given to certain Irish and Scottish monks in the 8th and following cents., is derived more probably from the Old Irish (céle dé) for 'companion' than from the Latin cultores Dei ('worshippers of God'). The Culdees appear to have been in origin *anchorites who gradually banded together, usually into groups of thirteen (on the analogy of Christ and His Apostles). By the 11th cent. they had become indistinguishable from secular canons, and, having become hopelessly corrupt, were gradually superseded by *Canons Regular. In a few places, as at *Armagh, they managed to survive for a time side by side with the newcomers. They should probably be regarded as the last remnant of the old Celtic Christianity before it succumbed finally to the influx of Continental Catholicism. See also Oengus, St.

W. Reeves, The Culdees of the British Isles, as they appear in History (Dublin, 1864); id., 'On the Céli-Dé, commonly called Culdees' in The Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Antiquities, xxiv (1873), pp. 119–263. J. von Pflugk-Harttung, 'Die Kuldeer' in Z.K.G., xiv (1894), pp. 169–92. An ancient Litany of the Culdees in use in the monastery of Dunkeld is printed in A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, ii (pt. 1; 1873), pp. 278–85. An Old Irish Penitential, prob. of Culdee origin, is pr., mainly in Eng. tr., by D. A. Binchy in L. Bieler (ed.), The Irish Penitentials (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, v: Dublin, 1963), pp. 258–77, with introd., pp. 47–51. J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, New York, 1929), esp. pp. 468–77. L. Gougaud, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3186–90, s.v.; C. McGrath in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 520 f., s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to Oengus, St.

CULLMANN OSCAR (1902–), NT scholar and theologian. Born at Strassburg, he studied at the universities of Strassburg and *Paris, and in 1930 he became professor in the former. In 1938 he became professor at Basle and since 1948 he has simultaneously been a professor in the Protestant faculty of the university of Paris. Cullmann's work has lain in the area of Biblical theology, and he has been specially concerned in developing a theory of Heilsgeschichte. This was expounded in Christus und die Zeit (1946; Eng. tr., Christ and Time, 1951). According to Cullmann, what is most distinctive in the NT is its view of time and history. Running through the whole course of world history there has been a relatively narrow stream of sacred history. This sacred history, the midpoint of which was Jesus Christ, provides the clue to the understanding of general history, which is seen to be linear in form and to run from creation to consummation. Cullmann has stressed the objectivity of this sacred history as against the existential interpretation favoured by R. *Bultmann. In Heil als Geschichte (1965; Eng. tr., Salvation in History, 1967) Cullmann restated his views and tried to meet some of the objections to his earlier work. Another important contribution to Biblical theology is Die Christologie des Neuen Testaments (1957; Eng. tr., 1959). His *ecumenical interests were demonstrated in his important study on the place of St. *Peter in the primitive Church, Petrus. Jünger, Apostel, Märtyrer (1952; Eng. tr., 1953). He was invited to be an observer at the Second *Vatican Council and has been active in developing relations between Protestants and RCs on the Continent of Europe.

J. Frisque, Oscar Cullmann. Une théologie de l'histoire du salut (Cahiers de l'actualité religieuse, xi; 1960), with bibl., incl. list of his works, pp. 263–76. Festschriften for Cullmann's 60th Birthday, Neotestamentica et Patristica (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, vi; 1962), repr. list of his works, brought up to date by W. Rordorf, pp. ix–xix, for his 65th birthday, Oikonomia. Heilsgeschichte als Thema der Theologie, ed. F. Christ (Hamburg, 1967), and for his 70th birthday, Neues Testament und Geschichte, ed. H. Baltensweiler–B. Reiche (Zürich–Tübingen, 1972), with bibl. for 1962–71 by H. Heck, pp. 329–44.

CUM OCCASIONE. The constitution of *Innocent X, dated 31 May 1653, condemning five propositions which embodied the dogmatic substance of *Jansenism.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, xv (Turin, 1868), p. 720 f. The condemned propositions repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 445 f. (Nos. 2001–7).

CUMBERLAND, RICHARD (1632–1718), Bp. of *Peterborough and moral philosopher. Having turned from the study of medicine and anatomy to that of theology, he became Vicar of Brampton (Northants) in 1658, and of All Hallows, Stamford, c. 1667. In 1691, though little known as an ecclesiastic, he was appointed to the see of Peterborough, which he administered faithfully, though without special distinction, for the rest of his life. His principal work, De legibus naturae disquisitio philosophica (1672), which, through being commended by S. *Pufendorf, established Cumberland's reputation abroad, was designed as a reply to T. *Hobbes. In it Cumberland maintained that the laws of nature are ethical and immutable, and that their root-principle was that of 'Universal Benevolence' (which he opposed deliberately to the 'Egoism' of Hobbes). He was the real founder of English *utilitarianism.

S. Payne, A Brief Account of the Life, Character and Writings of . . . Richard Cumberland (1720). E. Sharp, 'The Ethical System of Richard Cumberland and its Place in the History of British Ethics' in Mind, N.S., xxi (1912), pp. 371–398. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 289 f.

CUNEIFORM (Lat. cuneus, 'wedge'). The characters of wedge-shaped or arrow-headed components in which the ancient Akkadian, Persian and other inscriptions were written. It was probably invented by the Sumerians, who developed it out of what was originally a pictorial form of writing, and was widely used throughout the ancient Near East.

The name is said to have been first used by Thomas Hyde, Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford (d. 1703). For sign lists see R. Labat, Manuel d'épigraphie akkadienne. Signes, syllabaire, idéogrammes (1948). G. R. *Driver, Semitic Writing. From Pictograph to Alphabet (Schweich Lectures for 1944; 1948; ed. 2, 1954), pp. 1–77, with full bibl. reff.; D. Diringer, The Alphabet. A Key to the History of Mankind [1948], pp. 41–57, with bibl.; ed. 3 (1968), i, pp. 17–28. Good elementary account by O. R. Gurney in Chambers's Encyclopaedia, iv (ed. 1950), p. 297.

CURATE. Properly, a clergyman who has the charge ('cure') of a parish, i.e. in England a *rector, *vicar, or *perpetual curate. Such a clergyman is also known as the 'incumbent'. He is chosen by the 'patron' (the person having the right to nominate a clergyman for the parish in question), and is admitted to the cure of souls ('instituted' or 'licensed') by the bishop of the diocese. He can be removed only by resignation, exchange of cure, promotion to another benefice involving the cure of souls, or deprivation following a public conviction for some disgraceful offence.

In general speech, however, the word is now used to denote an assistant or unbeneficed clergyman, e.g. one appointed to assist the incumbent in the performance of his duties, or to take charge of a parish temporarily during a vacancy, or while the incumbent is unable to perform his duties. Assistant curates are nominated by the incumbent or the bishop, and licensed by the bishop. This licence may be revoked by the bishop after due notice.

From 1662 to 1688 the episcopalian incumbents of Scottish parishes were styled curates.

A. T. Hart, The Curate's Lot. The Story of the unbeneficed English Clergy (1970).

CUR DEUS HOMO (Lat., 'Why [did] God [become] man?'). The title of St. *Anselm's famous treatise on the *Atonement (1097–8), in which he rejected the theory that the death of Christ could be explained in terms of a ransom from the devil and interpreted it in the light of the justice and mercy of God. See Satisfaction.

Lat. text repr. from ed. of Anselm's works by F. S. Schmitt, O.S.B., ii (Edinburgh, 1946), pp. 37–133, with Fr. tr. and full introd. and notes, by R. Roques (S.C., xci; 1963). There have been various Eng. trr. See also bibl. to Anselm.

CURÉ D'ARS, The, Jean-Baptiste Marie Vianney (1786–1859). He was born at Dardilly, near Lyons, and intended for the priesthood from an early age. His education and training were interrupted by his conscription for the army, from which he deserted, and again considerably lengthened by his inability to learn Latin. After ordination at last in 1815, he was for three years assistant priest at Écully, and then appointed in Feb. 1818 parish priest at Ars. In this remote village he achieved almost world-wide fame. First from the neighbouring parishes, then from all France, finally from other countries too, came men and women, of all sorts and conditions, to seek his counsel. By 1855 the number of his visitors was computed at 20,000 a year, and during his last few years he was forced to spend 16 to 18 hours a day in the confessional. He was beatified in 1905, canonized in 1925, and in 1929 created the patron of parish priests. Feast day, 4 (formerly 9) Aug.

Sermons (4 vols., Lyons, 1883). A. Monnin, S.J., Le Curé d'Ars. Vie de M. Jean-Baptiste Vianney (2 vols., 1861; Eng. trr., 1907 and 1924); J. Vianney, Le Saint Curé d'Ars, 1786–1859 ('Les Saints', 1905; Eng. tr., 1906); F. Trochu, Le Curé d'Ars. Saint Jean-Marie-Baptiste Vianney (1786–1859) d'après toutes les pièces du procès de canonisation et de nombreux documents inédits (1925; Eng. tr., 1927); id., L'Admirable Vie du Curé d'Ars (1932; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1934–6). Other lives by J. Darche (Paris, 1865), H. *Ghéon (ib., 1928; Eng. tr., 1929), L. C. Sheppard (London, 1958), Margaret Trouncer (ib., 1959), and D. Pézeril (Paris, 1959; Eng. tr., 1961). Jacqueline Genet, L'Énigme des sermons du Curé d'Ars (1961).

CURETON, WILLIAM (1808–64), *Syriac scholar. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford, he was ordained in 1831, became a sub-librarian of the *Bodleian Library in 1834, and from 1837 to 1849 was on the staff of the British Museum. There it was Cureton's task to catalogue the Syriac MSS. brought back from the *Nitrian monasteries by H. *Tattam. Among his discoveries were the Syriac text of three of St. *Ignatius's Epistles (to *Polycarp, to the Eph. and to the Rom.; published 1845), which he argued were the only genuine ones (a position no longer held); the 'Curetonian' *Old Syriac text of the Gospels (published 1858); and the 'Festal Letters' of *Athanasius (published 1848).

His Ancient Syriac Manuscripts relative to the earliest Establishment of Christianity in Edessa and the neighbouring Countries was posthumously publ. by W. Wright (1864), with preface, pp. i–ix. S. Lane-Poole in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 325 f., s.v.

CURIA. The Papal court and its functionaries, esp. those through whom the government of the RC Church is administered. It includes the *Roman Congregations, Tribunals, and Curial Offices, and also certain permanent commissions, and acts with the delegated authority of the Pope. A general reform of its structure and functioning was introduced by Pope *Paul VI's decree 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' of 15 Aug. 1967. The term is also used in the RC Church of the court of diocesan officials (esp. legal officials) who act on behalf of an individual diocesan bishop. In medieval times the word was commonly used of any court, ecclesiastical or lay.

There is an extensive specialized literature. More general modern works include: D. Bouix, Tractatus de Curia Romana (Paris, 1880); F. M. Cappello, De Curia Romana iuxta Reformationem a Pio X sapientissime inductam (2 vols., Rome, 1911–'1912' [1913]); A. Monin, De Curia Romana, eius Historia ac Hodierna Disciplina juxta Reformationem a Pio X inductam (Louvain, 1912). N. del Re, La Curia Romana. Lineamenti storico-giuridici (1941; ed. 2, 1952): C. M. Berutti, O.P., De Curia Romana. Notulae historico-exegetico-practicae (Rome, 1952). K. Jordan, 'Die Entstehung der römischen Kurie' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxxii, Kanon. Abt., xxviii (1939), pp. 97–152, with reff. L. Pásztor, 'L'Histoire de la Curie Romaine, problème d'histoire de l'Église' in R.H.E., lxiv (1969), pp. 353–66, with bibl. p. 361 f. B. Ojetti, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 147–54, s.v. 'Roman Curia'; P. Torquebiau in D.D.C., iv (1939), cols. 971–1008, s.v. 'Curie romaine', and on the diocesan synod see id., ib., cols. 961–71, s.v. 'Curie diocésaine'; J. J. Markham in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 539 f., s.v. 'Curia, Roman', and J. P. King, ib., p. 535 f., s.v. 'Curia, Diocesan', with bibl. See also bibls. to Roman Congregations (also under the sep. headings) and Cardinal.

CURSIVE SCRIPT. The formal bookhand, properly called 'Greek minuscule', which used small, rounded ('lower-case') letters, joined together for speed of writing. Its letter-forms are first found in Egyptian documentary hands of the 7th and 8th cents. A.D. At the beginning of the 9th cent. the fully developed minuscule replaced *uncial (except in large volumes for liturgical use) as the only book-hand for copying Greek literary works. The earliest dated example is the Leningrad Gospels (MS. 219) of A.D. 835. It continued in use, with only minor modifications, until the invention of printing.

CURSOR MUNDI. An early English poem on the history of the world, probably dating from the late 13th cent. It is based on the Bible, but it incorporates much that is legendary. The first four books extend from the Creation to the successors of Solomon, the fifth deals with the early life of Jesus and the BVM, the sixth with Christ's later life and the Apostles, and the seventh with the Last Judgement. It is written in a northern dialect and seems to have been written in the neighbourhood of *Durham, but the author is unknown.

There is an edition by R. Morris in four parallel columns from different MSS. (E.E.T.S., lvii, lix, lxii, lxvi, lxviii, xcix, ci; 1874–93). J. E. Wells in C.B.E.L., i, p. 192 f.

CUSANUS, NICOLAUS. See Nicholas of Cusa.

CUSTOMARY (also known as a Consuetudinary or Liber Ordinarius). The book containing (1) the rites and ceremonies for the services, and/or (2) the rules and customs of discipline, of a particular monastery, cathedral, or religious order. In the Middle Ages, when local differences were great, they were of considerable practical use; but the greatly increased standardization of worship and discipline in more recent times, e.g. by the Congregation of *Rites (founded in 1588), led to their disappearance. The medieval customaries are of great value as source-books for the historian and the liturgiologist.

CUTHBERT, St. (d. 687), Bp. of *Lindisfarne. In 651 he became a monk at the monastery at Melrose. Somewhat later he moved with the abbot Eata to *Ripon, but returned to Melrose in 661, where he soon became prior. In 664 he again moved with his abbot to Lindisfarne, where they both adopted the Roman usages in the matter of the *tonsure and the date of *Easter. At Lindisfarne, also, Cuthbert was prior and he improved the discipline of the monastery. In 676, feeling the call to a solitary life, he withdrew to the neighbouring island of Farne, where he remained as a hermit for eight years. In 684 he was elected Bp. of Hexham, but was unwilling to accept the see. In the following year, however, when Eata had become Bp. of Hexham, Cuthbert allowed himself to be consecrated Bp. of Lindisfarne. His short episcopate of nearly two years was marked by great missionary zeal and energy. He died in 687 and was buried in the church at Lindisfarne, but the Danish invasions did not allow his body to rest in peace and it was not until more than three hundred years had passed that it reached in 999 its final tomb in the cathedral at *Durham. Feast day, 20 Mar.

B. Colgrave, Two Lives of Saint Cuthbert. A Life by an anonymous monk of Lindisfarne and Bede's Prose Life. Text, Translation and Notes (1940). W. Jaager, Bedas metrische Vita Sancti Cuthberti (Palaestra, cxcviii. Untersuchungen und Texte aus der deutschen und englischen Philologie, 1935). 'Libellus de Nativitate Sancti Cuthberti de Historiis Hybernensium exceptus et translatus' in Surtees Society, viii (1838), pp. 60–87. E. Craster, 'The Miracles of St. Cuthbert at Farne' in Anal. Boll., lxx (1952), pp. 5–19, incl. text. J. Raine, Saint Cuthbert. With an Account of the State in which his Remains were found upon the Opening of his Tomb in Durham Cathedral in the Year MDCCCXXVII (1828). Other Lives by C. Eyre (London, 1849) and Hilda Colgrave (Durham, 1947). C. F. Battiscombe (ed.), The Relics of Saint Cuthbert (1956). W. Hunt in D.N.B., xiii (1888), pp. 359–62.

CYNEWULF (early 9th cent.), Anglo-Saxon poet. His name, spelled out in runic letters, is found in the epilogues of four Anglo-Saxon poems which are therefore certainly his work. They are all religious in content. The second part of Christ, the only part by Cynewulf, celebrates the mystery of the Ascension; Juliana is the account of the martyrdom of the saint; Elene, which many scholars consider his masterpiece, tells the story of the finding of the true Cross by St. *Helena, and The Fates of the Apostles is a fragment incorporating legends about the apostles after their dispersal. The poems, which are obviously inspired by great devotion to the mysteries of the Christian faith and to the saints, have many passages of great beauty. Besides the authentic four, others have been attributed to Cynewulf, among them the beautiful Dream of the Rood, some verses of which are carved on the Ruthwell Cross, but all these assignations are conjectural. Of the author himself nothing is known; he has been identified with Cynewulf, Bp. of *Lindisfarne (d. 783), and also with Cynwulf, an otherwise unknown priest whose signature is appended to the decrees of the Council of *Clovesho (803). The first identification is chronologically impossible; the second incapable of proof.

C. W. Kennedy, The Poems of Cynewulf translated into English Prose (1910), with important introd., pp. 1–83, and bibl., pp. 335–47. Good crit. edd., with full notes, by A. S. Cook of 'The Christ' (Boston, 1900), of 'Elene', 'Phoenix', and 'Physiologus' (a poem prob. to be assigned to Cynewulf; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1919), and of the 'Dream of the Rood' (Oxford, 1905); by Rosemary Woolf of 'Juliana' (London, 1955); by P. O. E. Gradon of 'Elene' (ib., 1958); and by K. R. Brooks of 'Andreas' and 'The Fate of the Apostles' (Oxford, 1961). C. Schaar, Critical Studies in the Cynewulf Group (Lund Studies in English, xvii; 1949), with bibl. K. Sisam, 'Cynewulf and his Poetry' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xviii (1932), pp. 303–31. K. Jansen, Die Cynewulf-Forschung von ihren Anfängen bis zur Gegenwart (Bonner Beiträge zur Anglistik, xxiv; 1908). M. S. Serjeantson in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 75–8, for further bibl.

CYPRIAN, St. (d. 258), Bp. of Carthage. Thascius Caecilianus Cyprianus was a pagan rhetorician converted to Christianity c. 246. Within two years he was elected Bp. of Carthage, having by that time acquired a profound knowledge of the Scriptures and the writings of *Tertullian. A few months later the Decian persecution broke out (autumn 249), and he was forced to flee, but continued to rule his Church from exile by letter. He returned in 251. Large numbers of Christians had lapsed from their faith, and many more had secured libelli pacis. The confessors, i.e. those who had stood firm, were reconciling the lapsed on ridiculously easy terms, by virtue of the merits of the martyrs. Cyprian was strongly opposed to their practice and two councils (251, 252) decided that the lapsed should be reconciled after suitable penance and delay. In 252 there occurred an outbreak of the plague in Carthage, which was ascribed to the crimes of the Christians. In spite of their charitable works, organized by Cyprian, hatred of them, and esp. of their leader, increased. Meanwhile the schism of *Novatian, arising out of the question of the lapsed, gave rise to the Rebaptism controversy. Cyprian received the support of the African bishops in two councils (255–6) in demanding the rebaptism of schismatics, on the ground that no one outside the Church could administer her sacraments. As the Church at Rome held that both schismatics and heretics could validly administer baptism, there followed a violent correspondence between Cyprian and *Stephen, Bp. of Rome, which has also acquired significance for later controversy concerning the Papal claims. But for the moment the controversy was cut short by the persecution of the Emp. Valerian. Cyprian having been banished, an attempt was made in 258 to arrest him. For the time being he hid himself, in order that he might suffer in his own city; but on the second attempt he gave himself up, and was martyred in Carthage on 14 Sept. 258.

Cyprian's writings, mainly short treatises and letters, enjoyed great popularity from the first. He had none of the brilliance of his predecessor, Tertullian, but his sober judgement and pastoral instincts gained him his hearing. Some of his works are also of theological importance, esp. those dealing with the Church, the ministry, and the Sacraments. They include: (1) Ad Quirinum or Testimonia (c. 248), a collection of Biblical proof-texts in three Books, arranged under subjects; (2) De Habitu Virginum (c. 249), in praise of virginity; (3) De Lapsis (c. 251), dealing with the conditions for reconciling the lapsed; (4) De Catholicae Ecclesiae Unitate (251), a treatise held in special esteem, on the nature of true unity in the Church in its relation to the episcopate ('habere non potest Deum patrem qui ecclesiam non habet matrem', cap. vi). Probably Cyprian issued this work in two recensions, one of them designed for Rome; (5) De Dominica Oratione (c. 252); and (6) De Opere et Eleemosynis (c. 253), on almsgiving as a means of obtaining grace.

A like importance attaches to his correspondence, some of his letters (e.g. Ep. 63, on the Eucharist) being virtually short treatises. The corpus consists of 81 items (65 Cyprian's own and 16 replies). Here again the subjects are practical rather than dogmatic, and we gain a clear picture of his ideals as a bishop.

Though slain on 14 Sept., he is commemorated in the BCP calendar on 26 Sept. (by confusion with a converted magician of Antioch venerated on that day; see foll. entry) and in the Roman Missal on 16 Sept. (to avoid *Holy Cross Day and the former *Octave of the *Nativity of the BVM). The proposed 1927–8 revision of the BCP had another date, 13 Sept., adopted in the ASB and elsewhere.

Ed. princeps of Cyprian's works by J. Andreas (Rome, 1471). Important later edd. by D. *Erasmus (Basle, 1520), J. *Fell–J. *Pearson (Oxford, 1682), and S. *Baluze–P. *Maran (Paris, 1726). This last repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, iv (unsatisfactory). Crit. ed. by W. Hartel in C.S.E.L. (3 vols., 1868–71). Letters also ed., with Fr. tr., by L. Bayard ('Collection des Universités de France', 2 vols., 1925; ed. 2, 1961). Eng. tr. by R. E. Wallis in A.N.C.L. (2 vols., 1868–9); also Select Epistles of St. Cyprian, ed. T. A. *Lacey (S.P.C.K. [1922]). Eng. tr. of De Lapsis by M. Bévenot, S.J. (A.C.W., xxv; 1957). There survive a contemporary Life (not wholly reliable), acc. to St. *Jerome by Cyprian's deacon *Pontius, and the official description of his martyrdom ('Acta Proconsularia'). Modern Lives by C. F. Freppel (Paris, 1865), E. W. *Benson (London, 1897), and P. Monceaux ('Les Saints', Paris, 1914). Also P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, ii: Saint Cyprien et son temps (1902). E. W. Watson, 'The Style and Language of St. Cyprian' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica. Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism by members of the University of Oxford, iv (Oxford, 1896), pp. 189–317. L. Bayard, Le Latin de Saint Cyprien (Paris thesis, 1902). H. von Soden, Die Cyprianische Briefsammlung. Geschichte ihrer Entstehung und Überlieferung (T.U., xxv, Hft. 3; 1904). On the variant texts of the De Catholicae Ecclesiae Unitate, the fullest study is that of M. Bévenot, S.J., St. Cyprian's De Unitate, chap. 4, in the Light of the Manuscripts [1939]; id., The Tradition of Manuscripts. A Study in the Transmission of St. Cyprian's Treatises (Oxford, 1961), with text of De Ecclesiae Catholicae Unitate, pp. 96–123. On Cyprian's doctrines, A. d'Alès, La Théologie de S. Cyprien (1922). Cf. also H. Koch, Cyprian und der römische Primat (T.U., xxxv, 1; 1910); id. Cyprianische Untersuchungen (1926); B. Poschmann, Ecclesia Principalis. Ein kritischer Beitrag zur Frage des Primats bei Cyprian (1933). I. Schrijnen–C. Mohrmann, Studien zur Syntax der Briefe des heiligen Cyprian (2 vols., Nijmegen, 1936–7). G. S. M. Walker, The Churchmanship of St. Cyprian (Ecumenical Studies in History, ix; 1968). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 442–517; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 172–81. M. Pellegrino in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1685–91, with bibl. P. Hinchliff, Cyprian of Carthage and the Unity of the Christian Church (1974).

CYPRIAN, St. (c. 300), a converted magician of *Antioch. Acc. to an apparently worthless legend, Cyprian was a pagan magician and astrologer who, when using his arts to ensnare a Christian virgin, Justina, was converted to her faith. Cyprian eventually became a Bishop and Justina the head of a convent. In the *Diocletianic Persecution both were apprehended, brought to the Imperial residence at Nicomedia, and beheaded. Their reputed relics are in the Baptistery of St. John Lateran at *Rome. Feast day, with St. Justina, formerly 26 Sept., dropped from the calendar of the RC Church in 1969; the date, 26 Sept., was wrongly allotted to St. *Cyprian of Carthage, q.v., in the BCP.

In an early form the legend was known to St. *Gregory of Nazianzus (d. 381) and *Prudentius (d. c. 410). Gk. and Lat. text of Legend, with commentary, in AA.SS., Sept. VII (1750), pp. 195–246. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Cyprien d'Antioche et Cyprien de Cærthage' in Anal. Boll., xxxix (1921), pp. 314–32. T. *Zahn, Cyprian von Antiochien und die deutsche Faustsage (1882). R. Reitzenstein, 'Cyprian der Magier' in Nachr. (Gött.), 1917, pp. 38–79. L. Radermacher, Griechische Quellen zur Faustsage in Sb. (Wien), ccvi, Abh. 4; 1927, pp. 1–41 ('Der Zauberer Cyprianus').

CYPRIAN, St. (d. 549), Bp. of Toulon. He was the principal author of a Life of his friend St. *Caesarius of Arles. In 529 at the Council of *Orange he took an active part in combating *Semi-pelagianism. A letter to Maximus of Geneva is extant in which Cyprian shows knowledge of the '*Te Deum', and defends himself against the charge of *Theopaschitism. Feast day, 3 Oct.

His Life of St. Caesarius of Arles in AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 64–75, and in J. P. Migne, PL, lxvii, 1001–24. Crit. ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 433–501. Cyprian's Letter to Maximus ed. by W. Gundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 434–6, and with introd. by C. Wawra in Th.Q., lxxxv (1903), pp. 576–94. S. Cavallin, Literarhistorische und text-kritische Studien zur Vita S. Caesarii Arelatensis (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. 1, Bd. xxx, Nr. 7; 1934). Discussion of material for his life in AA.SS., Oct. II (1768), pp. 164–78.

CYPRUS, Christianity in. Cyprus was evangelized by Sts. *Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13). The many Cypriot saints mentioned in Byzantine Synaxaria point to the firm hold Christianity secured in the island at an early date. At the Council of *Nicaea (325), Cyprus was represented by three bishops, including St. *Spyridon, while later in the century St. *Epiphanius (d. 403) was a distinguished Bp. of Salamis. About this time definite claims to independence of the patriarchates, esp. of *Antioch, were made by the Church of Cyprus, and in spite of the adverse view of Pope *Innocent I (402–17), the Council of *Ephesus in 431 formally recognized the claims of the Cypriot bishops in its 7th Session. A subsequent decision by *Acacius, Patr. of *Constantinople, confirmed this independence when it was challenged in 488 by *Peter the Fuller, Patr. of Antioch. Since then the archbishop, or *exarch, has been held to rank immediately after the five patriarchs. Arcadius and Sergius, Abps. of Constantia (Salamis) in the 7th cent., are famous as opponents of the Emp. *Heraclius.

The Cypriots passed under Arab rule, but were set free in the 10th cent., and at this time the great monasteries of the island were built. The Crusaders were welcomed, but soon caused trouble by introducing in 1196 a Latin hierarchy, which with unrelenting cruelty took control of Church affairs, so that the history of the next four centuries contains in Church events nothing but Greco-Latin strife. But the Latin Church was completely extinguished when the Turks took the island in 1571. The Greeks were more fortunate. Though many were massacred, they were permitted eventually to reconstitute their Church in four dioceses. In 1821, at the beginning of the Greek War of Independence, all four Cypriot bishops were executed. After the establishment of British rule in 1878, the bishops and clergy occasionally found relations strained with the authorities because they tended to be nationalist leaders. In 1960 Abp. Makarios became first President of the Republic of Cyprus. The Church in Cyprus is governed by the Holy Synod of the four dioceses. There are a very few RCs, who are under the spiritual care of *Franciscan friars, and also some *Uniats.

J. Hackett, A History of the Orthodox Church of Cyprus from the Coming of the Apostles Paul and Barnabas to the Commencement of the British Occupation (A.D. 45–A.D. 1878) together with Some Account of the Latin and other Churches existing in the Island (1901). H. T. F. Duckworth, The Church of Cyprus (S.P.C.K., 1900). There is much information and extensive reff. in G. Hill, A History of Cyprus (4 vols., Cambridge, 1940–52). R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 791–820, s.v. 'Chypre', with full bibl.

CYRIL, St. (c. 315–86), Bp. of *Jerusalem from about 349. In 357 *Acacius, the extreme *Arian Bp. of *Caesarea, who claimed ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Jerusalem, had Cyril banished from his see on the ground of his opposition to Arianism, but the Council of *Seleucia recalled him in 359. Two further banishments followed. Meanwhile Cyril's beliefs on the burning question of the Godhead of Christ had been suspect in the opposite quarter, since he disliked the *Homoousios (the watchword of the Nicene faith) as being a man-made term. Accordingly the Council of *Antioch in 379 sent St. *Gregory of Nyssa to Palestine to report on the situation. He brought back word that though the life of the Jerusalem Church was morally corrupt and full of factions, its faith was sound. It has been suggested that Cyril, to prove his orthodoxy, recited the creed traditionally in use at Jerusalem (which like the *Nicene Creed contained the Homoousios) at the Council of *Constantinople in 381, and that its adoption by the Council stereotyped it in its present form.

The 24 'Catecheses', delivered c. 350 as instructions in Lent and Eastertide to the *catechumens who were baptized on *Holy Saturday, are the chief surviving work of Cyril. They give a full and very illuminating picture of the preparation for baptism then in use and much material for reconstructing the Palestinian liturgy of the 4th cent. Cyril does not mention the Words of *Institution in the Eucharist, perhaps because they were too familiar, perhaps because they were too sacred; but it is just possible that his rite did not contain them. He speaks of non-communicating attendance at the Eucharistic rite, and stresses the Real Presence. He strongly affirms the value and efficacy of Baptism with its anointing, renunciations, washing-away of sins, and laying on of hands. Feast day, 18 Mar.

Early edd. by J. Prévost (Paris, 1608) and T. Milles (London, 1703). Much improved ed. by the *Maurists, A. A. Touttée and P. *Maran (Paris, 1720), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxiii. More recent edd. by W. K. Reischl and J. Rupp, 2 vols., Munich, 1848–60, (of Procatechesis and Mystagogical Lectures only) by F. L. Cross, London, 1951, with bibl., and of the Mystagogical Lectures by A. Piédagnel, Cong. Orat., with Fr. tr. by P. Paris, P.S.S. (S.C., cxxvi; 1966). Eng. tr. by R. W. *Church in L.F., with pref. by J. H. *Newman (Oxford, 1838); rev. by E. H. Gifford in N.P.N.C.F., vii (1894), pp. 1–157. Eng. tr. of selections in W. Telfer, Cyril of Jerusalem and Nemesius of Emesa (Library of Christian Classics, iv; 1955), pp. 19–199. Important 'Dissertationes' by A. A. Touttée, op. cit. Studies by J. T. Plitt (Heidelberg, 1855), G. Delacroix (Paris, 1865), and J. Mader (Einsiedeln, 1891). J. Lebon, 'La Position de St. Cyrille de Jérusalem dans les luttes provoquées par l'arianisme' in R.H.E., xx (1924), pp. 181–210 and 357–86; B. Niederberger, Die Logoslehre des hl. Cyrillus von Jerusalem (Paderborn, 1923). The ascription of the Five Mystagogical Catecheses to St. Cyril has been challenged by W. J. Swaans, 'A propos des catéchèses mystagogiques attribuées à St. Cyrille de Jérusalem' in Le Muséon, xl (1942), pp. 6–43, who attributes them to his successor, John of Jerusalem, perhaps on insufficient grounds. J. H. Greenlee, The Gospel Text of Cyril of Jerusalem (Texts and Studies, xvii; 1955). A. Paulin, Saint Cyrille de Jérusalem Catéchète (Lex Orandi, xxix; 1959). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 312 f., with further bibl. X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 2527–2577, and M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1725–9, s.v. 'Cirillo di Gerusalemme'.

CYRIL, St. (d. 444), Patr. of *Alexandria. In 412 he succeeded his uncle Theophilus in the patriarchal see. He soon opened warfare with impartial vigour upon *Novatianism, *Neoplatonism, the Jews, and the Imperial prefect, Orestes, and if he himself bore no personal responsibility for the death of the distinguished philosopher *Hypatia, her murder was certainly the work of his supporters. The chief contest of his life, however, came c. 430. It arose out of the support given by *Nestorius, Patr. of *Constantinople, to his chaplain, Anastasius, who had preached against the application of the word *Theotokos ('God-bearer') to the BVM on the ground that she was the mother of only the humanity of Christ. The rivalry of the patriarchal sees, the antipathy of *Alexandrian to *Antiochene theological thought, and a personal love of conflict, made Cyril the obvious champion of the contested word, and he defended it in his Paschal letter for 429. He then persuaded Pope *Celestine to summon a synod at *Rome in 430 and condemn Nestorius, had the condemnation repeated in his own synod at Alexandria, and sent notice of both decrees to Nestorius with a covering letter and 12 anathemas. This letter, which epitomized Cyril's faith, was formally approved by the councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451; after Cyril's death), but at the latter council his anathemas were omitted. At the Council of Ephesus, Cyril himself assumed control and had Nestorius condemned before the Antiochene bishops had arrived. On their arrival the Antiochenes held a separate council, and Cyril in turn was pronounced deposed. The Emperor at first confirmed both depositions, though that of Cyril was quickly reversed. In 433 an agreement was reached by Cyril and the more moderate Antiochenes.

Whatever may be thought of some of the methods adopted by Cyril in his controversies, his distinction and ability as a theologian are beyond dispute. The most brilliant representative of the Alexandrian theological tradition, he put into systematic form, on the basis of the teaching of St. *Athanasius and the *Cappadocian Fathers, the classical Greek doctrines of the Trinity and of the Person of Christ. Where, in points of detail, his Christology appears to differ from that of the Council of Chalcedon, the divergence is partly, if not wholly, terminological. He appears to have used the Greek word φύσις as almost if not quite the equivalent of ὑπόστασις ('person'), and not in its later sense of 'nature'; and it was this use of language which gave a ready handle to those who later sought to claim his authority for *Monophysitism.

His writings reflect Cyril's outstanding qualities as a theologian. They are marked by precision in exposition, accuracy in thought, and skill in reasoning, though they lack elegance in style. They include a large collection of letters (among them, 29 'Paschal homilies'); many exegetical books, e.g. commentaries on Jn. and Lk. and, in his De adoratione et cultu in spiritu et veritate with its supplement, the Glaphura, on selected passages in the *Pentateuch; several treatises on dogmatic theology; an Apology against *Julian the Apostate; and a rather meagre (in view of Cyril's celebrity as a preacher) collection of sermons. Feast day in E., 9 June; in W., 27 June (formerly 9 Feb.).

The only collected ed. of Cyril's Opera is due to J. Aubert, Canon of Notre-Dame, Paris (6 vols., Paris, 1638; repr., with additions, J. P. Migne, PG, lxviii–lxxvii). Further texts ed. A. *Mai, Rome, various dates. New ed. of certain treatises, mainly commentaries, by P. E. *Pusey (7 vols., Oxford, 1868–77). Crit. text of several of Cyril's Epp. in E. *Schwartz (ed.), Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum, I. Concilium Ephesinum (Berlin, 1922 ff.); also of Deux Dialogues christologiques ['De Incarnatione Unigeniti' and 'Quod unus sit Christus'], with Fr. tr., by G. M. de Durand, O.P. (S.C., xcvii; 1964). Syr. text of his Comm. on Luke, pt. 1, ed. J. B. Chabot in C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, Ser. 4, i (1912); Lat. tr. by R. M. Tonneau (ibid., lxx; 1953). Eng. tr. of selected writings, Oxford, 1872 and 1881. Studies by J. Kopallik (Mainz, 1881) and C. Papadopoulos (Alexandria, 1933). Kyrilliana. Études variées à l'occasion du XVe centenaire de saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie (various authors, Cairo, 1947). Cyril also receives much notice in the Church Histories (Le N. *Tillemont, L. *Duchesne, B. J. *Kidd) and Histories of Dogma (L. J. Tixeront, A. *Harnack, R. L. *Ottley) of the times. A. Rehrmann, Die Christologie des hl. Cyrillus von Alexandrien systematisch dargestellt (Hildesheim, 1902); E. Weigl, Die Heilslehre des hl. Cyrill von Alexandrien (1905); A. Struckmann, Die Eucharistielehre des hl. Cyrill von Alexandrien (1910); A. Eberle, Die Mariologie des hl. Cyrillus von Alexandrien (1921); H. du Manoir de Juaye, S.J., Dogme et spiritualité chez S. Cyrille d'Alexandrie (1944). M. Richard, 'Les Traités de Cyrille d'Alexandrie contre Diodore et Théodore et les fragments dogmatiques de Diodore de Tarse' in Mélanges dédiés à la mémoire de Félix Grat, i (1946), pp. 99–116. N. Charlier, C.SS.R., 'Le Thesaurus de Trinitate de Saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie' in R.H.E., xlv (1950), pp. 25–81. J. Liébaert, La Doctrine christologique de saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie avant la Querelle nestorienne (1951). A. Kerrigan, O.F.M., St. Cyril of Alexandria, Interpreter of the Old Testament (Analecta Biblica, ii; Rome, 1952). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 23–74, and Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 283–8, both with bibl. J. Mahé in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 2476–2527, s.v.; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1715–1724, s.v. 'Cirillo d'Alessandria'; W. J. Burghardt, S.J., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 571–6, s.v.

CYRIL, St. (826–69), and METHODIUS, St. (c. 815–85), the 'Apostles of the Slavs'. They were brothers who came of a Greek, senatorial family of *Thessalonica. The younger brother, originally 'Constantine', did not assume the name of Cyril till he became a monk in 868. The several legends of their lives vary considerably and leave many uncertainties. After being ordained, they went to *Constantinople, where 'Cyril' became librarian of the church of the *Santa Sophia. In 862 the Emp. Michael III sent the two brothers as missionaries to what is now Moravia, where they taught in the vernacular. At once they took a keen interest in the language, and Cyril invented an alphabet called *Glagolitic (see also Cyrillic), and thus became the founder of Slavonic literature, adopting Slavonic also for the celebration of the Liturgy and circulating a Slavonic version of the Scriptures. A few years later they journeyed to Rome. Here Cyril died in a monastery shortly after taking his vows and was solemnly buried in the church of San Clemente. Methodius was then consecrated bishop and returned to Moravia. But though he was fortified with full Papal authority, he was opposed by the German bishops and imprisoned for over two years. Pope John VIII secured his release, but he deemed it expedient to withdraw the permission to use Slavonic as the regular liturgical language. Acc. to some sources, it was St. Cyril who brought the reputed remains of St. *Clement to Rome from the shores of the Sea of Azov. Feast day in E., 11 May; in W., now 14 Feb. (formerly 9 Mar. and later 7 July). In 1980 *John Paul II declared them 'Patrons of Europe'.

Text of the principal Slavonic lives ed., with Lat. tr., F. Grivec–F. Tomšič (Radovi Staroslavenskog Instituta, Kniaga iv; Zagreb, 1960). Gk. text of life of St. Clement, a disciple of Methodius, ascribed to *Theophylact in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxvi, 1194–1240. F. Grivec, Die heiligen Slavenapostel Cyrillus und Methodius (1928); F. Dvorník, Les Légendes de Constantin et de Méthode vues de Byzance (Byzantinoslavica, i; 1933), with bibl.; F. Grivec, Konstantin und Method. Lehrer der Slaven (Wiesbaden, 1960); P. Duthilleul, L'Évangélisation des Slaves. Cyrille et Méthode (Bibliothèque de Théologie, série IV. Histoire de la Théologie, v; 1963). Cyrillo–Methodiana. Zur Frühgeschichte des Christentums bei den Slaven 863–1963. Im Auftrage der Görres-Gesellschaft, herausgegeben von M. Hellmann et al. (Slavistische Forschungen, vi; Cologne, 1964). A. Salajka (ed.), Konstantin-Kyrill aus Thessalonike (Das östliche Christentum, Neue Folge, xxii; 1969). I. Dujčev, 'Problèmes cyrillométhodiens' in Byzantion, xxxvii (1968), pp. 21–56, with bibl. F. Dvornik, Byzantine Missions among the Slavs. SS. Constantine–Cyril and Methodius (New Brunswick, N.J., 1970). P. Devos in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 579–81, s.v.

CYRIL LUCAR. See Lucar, Cyril.

CYRIL OF SCYTHOPOLIS (6th cent.), Greek monk and hagiographer. Born at Scythopolis, the ancient Bethshan, of parents who kept a hospice for travelling monks, Cyril, while still a child, came under the influence of St. *Saba (q.v.; d. 532). In 543 he received the *tonsure and made his way to Jerusalem, where St. John the Hesychast sought to win him for his monastery. Cyril, however, at first determined to live the life of an anchorite on the banks of the *Jordan. Before long (544) he attached himself to the monastery of St. Euthymius (d. 473). The *Origenist controversies having brought this community to an end (555), Cyril entered the neighbouring monastery of St. Saba two years later. He was the author of the Lives of seven Palestinian abbots (St. Euthymius, St. Saba, St. John the Hesychast, St. Cyriacus, St. Theodosius, St. Theognius, St. Abraham). They are among the best of the Gk. hagiographical productions, being remarkable for their accurate detail. Written in popular Gk., they also have considerable philological interest.

His 'Lives' were first issued separately, by J. B. *Cotelier, B. de *Montfaucon, O.S.B., and others; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxiv, 595–734. Crit. ed. by E. *Schwartz in T.U., xlix (Hft. 2; 1939); for critique of Schwartz's datings in this work cf. E. Stein in Anal. Boll., lxii (1944), pp. 169–86. Fr. tr. by A.-J. Festugière, O.P., Les Moines d'Orient, iii, parts 1–3 (1962–3). The Georgian text of his life of St. Cyriacus ed., with Lat. tr., by G. Garitte in Muséon, lxxv (1962), pp. 339–440, with refs. to edd. and MSS. of Georgian versions of other lives. F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert (1899), pp. 1–25. T. Hermann, 'Zur Chronologie des Kyrill von Skythopolis' in Z.K.G., xlv (1926), pp. 318–39. Krumbacher, p. 185 f.; Bardenhewer, v, pp. 124–30; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 241. S. Vailhé in D.T.C., iii (1908), col. 2581 f.; I. Hausherr, S.J., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 2687–90.

CYRILLIC. The alphabet used by the Slavonic peoples of the E. Church. It is so named from its attribution to St. *Cyril, one of the two 'Apostles of the Slavs' (9th cent.), though in fact *Glagolitic and not 'Cyrillic' is the alphabet St. Cyril devised.

Cyrillic dates, however, from almost the same time. It differs from Glagolitic in being based on Greek *uncials, and not on Greek *minuscules.

CZECHOSLOVAK CHURCH, The. The origins of the so-called Czech National Church (Československá Církev) go back ultimately to an association of Catholic priests in 1890, called 'Jednota'. It aimed at the introduction of the Czech language into the Liturgy, the abolition of compulsory celibacy for the priesthood, and the participation of the laity in the government of the Church. In 1919 these demands were submitted to Rome. On their rejection the Jednota, whose main inspiration was nationalist, decided to form an independent religious body in 1920. Within a few months they had won many adherents and were recognized by the government.

The Czechoslovak Church was constituted on Presbyterian lines, though with four bishops. These were elected, but not consecrated, and there is no belief in the *Apostolic Succession. In doctrine the Church was strongly rationalistic, owing to the influence of its first patriarch, Karel Farský. The Divine Sonship of Christ and the Eucharist were interpreted on modernist lines, and the doctrines of *Original Sin, *Purgatory, and the Veneration of Saints were rejected. Scriptural exegesis rested on the principles of reason, experience, and the results of scholarship. After Farský's death (1927) the doctrines became more conservative. After the first attraction was past, numbers remained static; the Czechoslovak Church has prob. never included much more than 5 per cent of the population. In 1971 it adopted the title 'Czechoslovak Hussite Church', emphasizing its affinities with the teaching of J. *Huss.

F. M. Hník–A. Spisar–F. Kovář, The Czechoslovak Church (Prague, 1937). R. Urban, Die slavisch-nationalkirchlichen Bestrebungen in der Tschechoslowakei (Slavisch-baltische Quellen und Forschungen, ix; Leipzig, 1938); id., Die Tschechoslowakische Hussitische Kirche (Marburg, 1973). L. Nemec, The Czechoslovak Heresy and Schism. The Emergence of a National Czechoslovak Church (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, N.S. lxv, part l; 1975). G. A. Procházka, 'Die tschechoslowakische Nationalkirche' in F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, v, Lfg. 20 (1937), pp. 175–85, with bibl.

D

'D'. In *Pentateuchal criticism the source most characteristically represented by the Book of Deut. (nearly all of which is assigned to 'D'). In contrast with the precisely expressed ritual and ceremonial interests of '*P' and the more simple narrative style of '*J' and '*E', it is predominantly hortatory. From its apparent points of contact with the provisions of 'the book of the law' said to have been found in the temple in the reign of Josiah (2 Kgs. 22 f.), it is by many associated, if not identified, with that 'book' and its composition assigned to the early 7th cent. See Deuteronomy, Book of.

D'ACHÉRY, JEAN LUC (1609–85), French patristic scholar. He was professed at the *Maurist (*Benedictine) abbey at Vendôme in 1632. Sent to Paris in 1637, he became librarian of the abbey of *St. Germain-des-Prés, where he edited numerous ancient authors, whose MSS. he recovered from oblivion. Among his most important publications are an edition of *Lanfranc, B. Lanfranci . . . Opera Omnia (1648), and the 13 vols. of his Veterum aliquot Scriptorum . . . Spicilegium (1655–1677). One of the chief promoters of scholarship in his order, he became the master of many disciples, among them J. Mabillon, with whom he shared in the production of the first volume of the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti.

'Quelques pages supprimées dans le tome cinquième du Spicilège de Luc d'Achéry' are printed in the Anal. Boll., xviii (1899), pp. 43–8. Jeannine Fohlen, 'Dom Luc d'Achery (1609–1685) et les débuts de l'érudition mauriste' in Revue Mabillon, lv (1965), pp. 149–75, lvi (1966), pp. 1–30, 73–98, lvii (1967), pp. 17–41 and 56–156. U. Berlière in D.T.C., i (1903), col. 310 f., incl. reff. See also works cited under Maurists.

DAILLÉ, JEAN (1594–1670), French Reformed theologian and controversialist. He was born at Châtellerault, and after studying at Poitiers and Saumur, in 1612 became tutor in the house of P. *Duplessis-Mornay, with whose grandsons he travelled on the Continent, esp. in Italy, and in England. In 1625 he became pastor at Saumur, and from 1626 till his death he was pastor at Charenton, where the Reformed Church of *Paris held its services. Among the French Protestants he had a great reputation as an orator and theologian. In his Traité de l'employ des saints pères (1632) he rejected the authority of the Fathers, for which he was attacked not only by RC but later also by Anglican scholars such as J. *Pearson, W. *Beveridge, and W. *Cave. He followed up the controversy in La Foi fondée sur les saintes écritures (1634), where he attempted to prove that all the Christian doctrines are either explicitly stated in Scripture or at least directly deducible from it. In his celebrated De Scriptis quae sub Dionysii Areopagitae et Ignatii Antiocheni Nominibus circumferuntur (Geneva, 1666) he compiled no less than 66 objections to the genuineness of the Ignatian literature. Its confusions were exposed and its main contentions successfully refuted by J. Pearson (1672). Among his other works are De Pseudepigraphis Apostolicis (1653), Adversus Latinorum de Cultus Religiosi Objecto Traditionem (1664), and De Cultibus Religiosis Latinorum (1671).

Abbrégé de la vie de Mr Daillé [by Jean Daillé, son] printed with Les Deux Derniers Sermons de Mr Daillé (Paris, 1670). Study by E. Mettey (Strasbourg, 1863). List of his publications in E. and E. Haag, La France protestante, iii (1852), pp. 182–6; extended in ed. 2, by H. Bordier, v (1886), cols. 28–36. J. de la Servière, S.J., in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 3–5.

D'AILLY, PIERRE (1350–1420), French cardinal and theologian. He was a native of Compiègne, and in 1363 entered the College of Navarre in *Paris, then a stronghold of *Nominalism, where he became master of arts in 1368 and doctor of theology in 1381. During this period he commented on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard and wrote several scientific, philosophical, and theological treatises which show the great influence of R. *Bacon and esp. of *William of Occam. Having become canon at Noyon in 1381, he was made rector of the College of Navarre in 1384, chancellor of the university of Paris in 1389, and soon afterwards confessor and almoner to Charles VI. In 1391 he obtained the archdeaconry of Cambrai in addition to many other benefices which he held in plurality. After the death of *Clement VII he became a favourite with his successor *Benedict XIII, who appointed him Bp. of Le Puy in 1395. He never entered this diocese, and in 1397 was translated to the more important see of Cambrai. The chief concern of his life was to find a means of healing the Western Schism. With this end in view he broke with Benedict XIII in 1408 and in 1409 attended the Council of *Pisa, where he supported the newly elected third Pope, *Alexander V. In 1411 he assisted at the Council of Rome, convoked by Alexander's successor, *John XXIII, for which he outlined a programme of reforms entitled 'Capita Agendorum'. In 1412 John XXIII created him cardinal in the hope of retaining his support, and shortly afterwards he was made Papal Legate to the German Emperor Sigismund. In 1414 he took part in the Council of *Constance, where he supported the theory of the supremacy of the General Council over the Pope, without, however, entirely approving the famous 'Decrees of Constance'. In 1416 he published his 'Tractatus super Reformatione Ecclesiae', the third part of an elaborate work 'De Materia Concilii Generalis'. Its first part was published among the works of his friend and disciple J. *Gerson, the second is still in MS. Several of its suggestions for ecclesiastical reforms were later adopted by the Council of *Trent. The 'Tractatus' had a great influence esp. in England and Germany.

In his doctrinal teaching he most frequently accepted the views of Occam. He held that the existence of God was not a rationally demonstrable truth, and that sin was not as such inherently evil but sinful only because God wills it to be so. He maintained that bishops and priests received their jurisdiction directly from Christ and not mediately through the Pope, and that neither Pope nor Council was infallible. These and other of his opinions were later adopted and developed by M. *Luther and the other Reformers; and his teaching on the Church exercised a decisive influence on *Gallicanism. D'Ailly is also remarkable for his studies in astrology and geography; his Imago Mundi, in which he suggested that the Indies could be reached from the W., was known to Columbus.

Most of his sermons were printed by the *Brethren of the Common Life under the title Tractatus et Sermones (Brussels, c. 1484). Modern ed., with Fr. tr., of Imago Mundi by E. Buron (3 vols., Paris, 1930), with valuable introd. in vol. i, pp. 5–113, and bibl., pp. 113–24. Studies by L. Salembier (Lille, 1886; also other works by this author incl. important posthumously publd. synthesis of his earlier works, Tourcoing, 1932) and P. Tschackert (Gotha, 1877). M. Patronnier de Gandillac, 'De l'usage et de la valeur des arguments probables dans les questions du Cardinal Pierre d'Ailly sur le "Livre des Sentences"' in A.H.D.L.M.A., viii (1933), pp. 43–91. Agnes E. Roberts, 'Pierre d'Ailly and the Council of Constance. A Study in "Ockhamite" Theory and Practice' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fourth Series, xviii (1935), pp. 123–42. B. Meller, Studien zur Erkenntnislehre des Peter von Ailly (Freiburger theologische Studien, lxvii; 1954); M. Lieberman, 'Chronologie gersonienne. VI: Gerson ou d'Ailly' in Romania, lxxix (1958), pp. 339–75; 'VII–VIII: Gerson et d'Ailly', ib., lxxx (1959), pp. 289–336, and lxxxi (1960), pp. 44–98. F. Oakley, The Political Thought of Pierre d'Ailly (Yale Historical Publications, Miscellany, lxxxi; 1964), with bibl. L. Salembier in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 1154–65, s.v. 'Ailly, Pierre de'. See also bibl. to Constance, Council of, and Gerson, Jean le Charlier de.

DAIR BALAIZAH FRAGMENTS. See Der Balyzeh Fragments.

DALE, ROBERT WILLIAM (1829–95), *Congregationalist preacher, theologian, and educational reformer. From 1853 until his death he was pastor (co-pastor 1853–9) of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham. He came to take a leading part in municipal affairs in Birmingham, co-operating closely with Joseph Chamberlain, and in 1870 he keenly supported W. E. Forster's Education Bill. In 1891 he was president of the International Congregational Council. He stood for progressive, but in fundamentals orthodox, Evangelicalism. In The Atonement (1875), his most influential work, he strongly maintained a penal doctrine against the liberal views of such men as B. *Jowett and H. *Bushnell. But his orthodoxy here differed from that of traditional *Protestantism. He sought to put the emphasis on the ethical rather than the forensic, and in some respects his teaching on the Atonement has points of contact with that of H. *Grotius. His other writings include sets of lectures on Preaching (1877) and on Ephesians (1882).

Biography by his son, A. W. W. Dale (London, 1898). A. Gordon in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), pp. 104–6.

D'ALEMBERT, JEAN LE ROND (1717–83), French mathematician, philosopher, and *Encyclopaedist. A foundling discovered near the church of St. Jean le Rond, *Paris (hence his name), he was educated by the *Jansenists at the Mazarin College. He soon showed remarkable mathematical talents and, after short-lived attempts to train as a lawyer and a physician, resolved to devote himself wholly to mathematics. In 1741 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. In 1743 in his Traité de dynamique he developed the mechanical principle henceforward known as 'D'Alembert's Principle'. Several important other works and papers on mathematics followed. He was drawn into various religious disputes by his extensive collaboration for some years in *Diderot's Encyclopédie and his association with the 'philosophic' circle of freethinkers that produced it. D'Alembert contributed the Discours préliminaire, which dealt, along lines laid down by F. *Bacon and J. *Locke, with the rise, progress, and affinities of the several sciences, as well as many articles on literary, and esp. mathematical, subjects. His article on 'Geneva' provoked the *Calvinists to a lively controversy. Among his other writings were an attack on the *Jesuits (1765) and a collection of biographies of members of the Academy who died between 1700 and 1772.

Collected Works, 18 vols., Paris, 1805. Unpublished items ed. M. C. Henry (Paris, 1887). Eng. tr. of 'Miscellaneous Pieces' (London, 1764). Studies by J. Bertrand (Paris, 1889) and R. Grimsley (Oxford, 1963). M. Muller, Essai sur la philosophie de Jean d'Alembert (1926). Überweg, iii, pp. 429, 435 f., 700. See also bibl. to Encyclopaedists.

DALGAIRNS, BERNARD (baptismal names John Dobree) (1818–76), priest of the *Oratory. He was a supporter of the *Oxford Movement in its earliest days, but in 1845, after spending some time in retirement with J. H. *Newman at Littlemore, was, like him, received into the RC Church. After some months in France and Italy he attached himself to the Oratory in London in 1849, and wrote here some widely used devotional and theological works, including The Devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus (1853), The German Mystics of the 14th Century (1858), The Holy Communion, its Philosophy, Theology, and Practice (1861).

Good character sketch in R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1891), p. 206. T. Cooper in D.N.B., xiii (1888), p. 388 f.; S. Bowden in C.E., iv (1908), p. 604 f., s.v.

DALLÆUS, JOHANNES. See Daillé, Jean.

DALMAN, GUSTAF HERMAN (1855–1941), Biblical scholar. In 1895 he was appointed professor of the Institutum Delitzschianum (see Delitzsch, Franz) at Leipzig. From 1902 to 1917 he was director of the German Evangelical Institute for Archaeology in Palestine, and afterwards professor at Greifswald. In 1925 he went out again to Palestine as director of the Gustaf Dalman-Institut für Palästinawissenschaft. He conducted many important researches into the language, ideas and customs of 1st cent. *Judaism, and his work may be said to have established that Christ spoke ordinarily in Aramaic and not in Greek. His writings include Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch (1894); Christentum und Judentum (1898; Eng. trans., 1901); Die Worte Jesu (1898; Eng. trans., 1902); Orte und Wege Jesu (1919; Eng. trans., 1935); Jesus-Jeschua (1922; Eng. trans., 1929); Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina (1928–39).

A. Alt in Palästinajahrbuch des deutschen evangelischen Instituts für Altertumswissenschaft des heiligen Landes zu Jerusalem, Jahrg. xxxvii (1941), pp. 5–18. List of his works by K. H. Rengstorf in Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Ernst Moritz Arndt-Universität Greifswald, iv (1955), pp. 209–32.

DALMATIC. An over-tunic reaching to the knees worn in the W. Church at *High Mass by *deacons, and on certain occasions also by bishops. The Eastern bishop's 'sakkos' is almost identical. Perhaps of Dalmatian origin, it became a popular garment among the upper classes in Rome in the 2nd cent. Till the 10th cent. it was invariably white and made of linen or wool; later it was coloured and of silk. It is ornamented with two clavi or coloured strips running from front to back over the shoulders, which at one time were invariably red. The dalmatic is bestowed upon the deacon at his ordination in the Latin Rite. In England, the sovereign wears a dalmatic at his coronation. See also Tunicle.

Braun, L.G., ch. xii, 'Dalmatik und Tunicella', pp. 247–305. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 111–19, s.v. 'Dalmatique'.

DAMASCUS. The ancient capital of Syria. Mentioned as far back as the 16th cent. B.C. by the Egyptian king Thutmoses III, it is frequently referred to in the OT, owing to the conflicts and alliances between Syria, Israel, and Judah in the earlier days of the Hebrew monarchy. After its fall in 732 B.C. to the Assyrian king Tiglath Pileser III, it lost most of its importance for several centuries. In the Seleucid period it was overshadowed by the new Syrian capital of *Antioch. It was on the road from *Jerusalem to Damascus that St. Paul was converted to the Christian faith (Acts 9). A Christian community has existed here continuously from Apostolic times.

J. L. Porter, Five Years in Damascus, with travels and researches in Palmyra, Lebanon and the Hauran (2 vols., 1855). A. Kremer, Mittelsyrien und Damascus. Geschichtliche ethnografische und geografische Studien (1853); H. Sauvaire, 'Description de Damas' in Journal Asiatique, 9e Sér., iii (1894), pp. 251–318; iv (1894), pp. 242–331; v (1895), pp. 269–315; vi (1895), pp. 221–313, and vii (1896), pp. 185–285. C. Watzinger–K. Wulzinger, Damascus (2 vols., 'Die Antike Stadt' and 'Die Islamische Stadt', Wissenschaftliche Veröffentlichungen des Deutsch-Türkischen Denkmalschutz-Kommandos, Hft. iv–v; 1921–4). J. Sauvaget, Les Monuments historiques de Damas (Beyrouth, 1932). L. Jalabert in D.A.C.L., iv (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 119–45; R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 42–47, both s.v. 'Damas'.

DAMASCUS FRAGMENTS. See Dead Sea Scrolls.

DAMASUS, St. (c. 304–84), Pope from 366. Of Spanish descent, he entered the service of his predecessor, Pope *Liberius, who appointed him a deacon. On Liberius' death (24 Sept. 366), a fierce conflict broke out between the supporters of Damasus and those of his rival, Ursinus (or Ursicinus). Ursinus was elected Pope in the basilica of Julius (S. Maria in Trastevere), while Damasus was chosen by the great majority of the clergy and people of *Rome in S. Lorenzo in Lucina. In the ensuing struggle, during which the supporters of Ursinus gained possession of the Liberian Basilica (S. Maria Maggiore), acc. to Ammianus Marcellinus 137 persons (acc. to the Gesta inter Liberium et Felicem, 160) were killed. The Emp. Valentinian I intervened in support of Damasus and banished Ursinus for a time to *Cologne, though it was not until c. 381 that the troubles ceased.

Damasus was very active, by Synods and with the help of the Imperial power, in suppressing heresy (*Arianism, *Donatism, *Macedonianism, *Luciferians). From 371 he was engaged in protracted dealings with St. *Basil of Caesarea with a view to the overthrow of Arianism; and at Antioch he supported the party of *Paulinus. Damasus did much to strengthen the position of the see of Rome (Decree of Gratian, 378), made provision for the proper housing of the Papal archives and was keenly interested in the monuments of the martyrs, adorning their tombs with the series of famous marble inscriptions engraved by Filocalus. He also erected the titular church of S. Lorenzo in Damaso, and a church on the Via Ardeatina at the catacombs of Sts. Marcus and Marcellianus. At a Council prob. held at Rome in 382 he promulgated a Canon of Scriptural Books and commissioned his secretary, St. *Jerome, to revise the Biblical text (see Vulgate). In the Middle Ages he was erroneously held to be the author of the Liber Pontificalis*. See also Fides Damasi and Tome of Damasus. Feast day, 4 (formerly 11) Dec.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL, xiii, 109–424. Crit. ed. of the docs. on the Ursinian schism in C.S.E.L., xxxv ('Collectio Avellana'), pp. 48–58. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 212–15. M. Ihm (ed.), Damasi Epigrammata (Leipzig, 1895); A. Ferrua, S.J., Epigrammata Damasiana (Sussidi allo studio delle antichità cristiane, ii, 1942; 59 Epigrams are here recognized as genuine). Study by M. Rade (Freiburg i.Br., 1882). A. Salvatore, L'epigramma damasiano 'in Laudem Davidis' (Naples, 1960), with anthology of epigrams. J. Wittig, 'Papst Damasus I' in R.Q. Suppl., xiv (1902); E. [B. D.] Schäfer, Die Bedeutung der Epigramme Damasus I für die Geschichte der Heiligenverehrung (Rome, 1932). C. H. *Turner, 'Latin Lists of the Canonical Books, I: The Roman Council under Damasus, A.D. 382' in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 554–60. H. M. Shepherd, Jr., 'The Liturgical Reform of Damasus I' in P. Granfield–J. A. Jungmann (edd.), Kyriakon. Festschrift Johannes Quasten, ii (Munich, 1970), pp. 847–63. A. Ferrua in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1136–9; A. Van Roey in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 48–53, both with bibl.

DAMIAN, St. See Cosmas and Damian, Sts.

DAMIAN, St. PETER. See Peter Damian, St.

DAMIEN, Father (1840–89), leper missionary. Joseph de Veuster, the son of a small farmer, became a member of the Picpus Society (Fathers of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary) in 1859, taking the religious name 'Damien'. Sent to the Sandwich Islands in 1863, he was ordained priest at Honolulu in the following year, and later put in charge of several districts in the islands of Hawaii and Molokai, where he converted the natives and built them chapels. In 1873 he was sent at his own request to a settlement of lepers at Molokai who were without any attendance. Here he ministered single-handed to the spiritual and physical needs of 600 lepers, dressing their wounds, building them houses, and digging their graves. Even after he had caught the disease himself he continued his work, now assisted by other members of his order and Sisters of Charity, until he became helpless.

Letters ed. by his brother, Father Pamphile [A. P. de Veuster] (London, 1889), with introd. There are many lives, among them (in English) those by E. Clifford (London, 1889), Irene Caudwell (ib., 1901), May Quinlan (ib., 1909), P. Compton, (ib., 1933), C. J. Dutton (ib., 1934), and J. V. Farrow (ib., 1937).

DAMNATION. In general, 'condemnation', but esp. to eternal loss (damnum) in hell. Some theologians have distinguished the loss of the *Beatific Vision, the attainment of which constitutes the joy of heaven, from positive retributive punishment for the sins done on earth, and asserted that both are present in the sufferings of the damned; others have held that the deprivation and conscious loss of heaven and of God is itself the natural and sufficient consequence of persistence in sin. The eternity of damnation for those who finally reject the will of God appears to follow from various sayings of Christ, e.g. Mt. 25. 46.

DANCE OF DEATH, The. An allegorical subject in European art, in which the figure of Death, often represented as a skeleton, is shown meeting various characters in different states of life and leading them all in a dance to the grave. It was often painted on the walls of cloisters and graveyards in the later Middle Ages, but examples survive chiefly in engravings, e.g. the series by H. Holbein (the younger). It was called in German Totentanz and in French Danse macabre.

Modern facsimile ed. of The Dance of Death by Hans Holbein (1497–1543), with introd. and notes by J. M. Clark (London, 1947). F. Douce, The Dance of Death exhibited in Elegant Engravings on Wood (1833). Hans Holbein's Celebrated Dance of Death, illustrated by a series of photo-lithographic facsimiles from the copy of the first edition now in the British Museum, with explanatory description by H. N. H[umphreys] (1868). J. G. Kaster, Les Danses des morts (1852). G. Buchheit, Der Totentanz. Seine Entstehung und Entwicklung (1926). W. Stammler, Die Totentänze des Mittelalters (1922); id., Der Totentanz. Entstehung und Deutung (1948), with bibl. L. P. Kurtz, The Dance of Death and the Macabre Spirit in European Literature (Publications of the Institute of French Studies, Columbia University, New York, 1934). J. M. Clark, The Dance of Death in the Middle Ages and Renaissance (Glasgow, 1950), with bibl.; Hellmut Rosenfeld, Der mittelalterliche Totentanz (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, iii; 1954; ed. 2, 1968).

DANIEL, Book of. The Book falls into two main divisions:

I. A narrative section describing the experiences of Daniel and his three companions under Nebuchadnezzar (1–4) and Belshazzar (5), kings of Babylon, and Darius the Mede (6). These include their refusal to eat unclean meats (1), Daniel's successful interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (2), the miraculous release of the three companions from the fiery furnace (3), Nebuchadnezzar's madness (4), the supernatural writing on the wall ('Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin') at Belshazzar's feast (5), and Daniel's preservation in the lions' den (6).

II. A series of visions granted to Daniel in the reigns of Belshazzar (7, 8), Darius the Mede (9), and Cyrus (10–12), which reveal the future destinies of the Jewish people. Several of the passages in these later chapters bear all the characteristics of *Apocalyptic literature.

The traditional belief that the Book was written in the 6th cent. B.C. by Daniel, one of the Jewish exiles in Babylon, is now almost universally regarded as untenable. A number of historical errors make it next to impossible to believe that it dates from the period of the Exile, and a much later date is borne out also by its doctrinal standpoint, its language (even Greek words occur), and its position in the *Canon of Scripture. The consensus of modern critical opinion is that it was written between 168 and 165 B.C. On this hypothesis the purpose of the Book was to encourage the reader during the persecutions of the Jews at the hands of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175–163 B.C.). The section 2. 4–7. 28 is written in *Aramaic (not Hebrew).

There is only one passage where Daniel is directly quoted in the NT, namely, the reference to the 'abomination of desolation' in Mk. 13. 14 and parallels. But there are many points where its teaching has been taken up and developed, e.g. the use of the figure of the *Son of Man (7. 13), the conception of angels mediating between a transcendent God and man, and above all the doctrine of the *resurrection of the dead in 12. 2.

In the *Apocrypha there appear three 'books', viz. 'The Song of the Three Holy Children', 'The History of Susanna', and 'The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon', all of which are found in the Gk. text of Daniel, though not in the Hebr.; and all are clearly Gk. writings, later than the Book itself. On these, see the separate entries.

Commentaries by S. R. *Driver (Camb. Bib., AV, 1900), C. H. H. Wright (London, 1906), K. Marti (K.H.C., xviii; 1901), J. A. Montgomery (I.C.C., 1927), with bibl. pp. xv–xxvi, R. H. *Charles (Oxford, 1929), A. Bentzen (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. ix; 1937; ed. 2, 1952), E. W. Heaton ('Torch Bible' Comm., 1956), N. W. Porteus (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xxiii; 1962; Eng. tr., 1965), and O. Plöger (K.A.T., xviii; 1965). Among the older writers, upholding the conservative view, the best known is E. B. *Pusey, Daniel the Prophet. Nine Lectures (1864). H. L. Ginsberg, Studies in Daniel (New York, 1948). H. H. Rowley, 'The Unity of the Book of Daniel' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xxiii (part 1, 1952), pp. 233–73; repr. in The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays on the Old Testament (1952), pp. 235–68; revised ed. with further bibl. (Oxford, 1965), pp. 249–80. Id., Darius the Mede and the Four World Empires in the Book of Daniel (1935).

DANIEL, St. (d. 493), *Stylite. He was the most famous of the disciples of St. *Simeon Stylites, whose cowl he received. After spending his early years at Samosata and other monasteries in the E., at the age of 47 he took up his position on a pillar four miles from *Constantinople, on which he was ordained priest by St. *Gennadius and lived for thirty-three years. Generally regarded as an oracle, he only once left his pillar (c. 476), to rebuke the Emp. Basiliscus for supporting *Monophysitism. Feast day, 11 Dec.

Early Gk. life, ed. H. *Delehaye, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xxxii (1913), pp. 121–229; repr. in id. (ed.), Les Saints stylites (Brussels, 1923), pp. 1–94. Eng. tr. in Elizabeth [A. S.] Dawes–N. H. Baynes, Three Byzantine Saints (1948), pp. 1–71, with notes, pp. 72–84. On this Vita cf. N. H. Baynes in E.H.R., xl (1925), pp. 397–402. Other lives listed in B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957), p. 150 f. V. Laurent, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 73, s.v. 'Daniel (11), (Saint) le Stylite'.

DANTE ALIGHIERI (1265–1321), Italian poet and philosopher. Little is known of his early life except that he was born in Florence, lost his parents before he was 18, was betrothed at the age of 12 and married in 1293. In 1274 he first met his Beatrice (prob. Bice Portinari, the daughter of a Florentine citizen and wife of Simone dei Bardi), and he became her poet nine years later. Her death in 1290 led to a crisis, resolved by writing the Vita nuova (prob. in 1292, possibly later) in which he promised her a poem 'such as had been written for no lady before', a promise fulfilled in the Divina Commedia*. He then turned to the study of philosophy, prob. under the *Dominicans at Florence, and wrote a series of allegorical Canzoni or odes on the Lady Philosophy and literal ones on Courtesy, Nobility, Liberality and Justice. In 1294 he entered politics but, having supported the opponents of Pope *Boniface VIII, he was exiled from Florence in 1301 and travelled widely in Italy. He returned to the study of philosophy, and prob. at *Bologna wrote the incomplete De Vulgari Eloquentia in Latin and began the Convivio (Banquet), which was designed to comment freely on his earlier philosophical Canzoni. In the course of the fourth book he became aware of the significance of the Roman Empire; the appearance of the Emp. Henry VII in Italy at the same time (1310) converted Dante into an ardent supporter of the Emperor, for whom he wrote in Latin the treatise De Monarchia (1310–1311?). This work, which was condemned as heretical (*Averroist) in 1329, argued the need for a universal monarchy to achieve the temporal happiness of mankind and the independence of the Empire from the Pope and the Church, which should abandon all temporal authority and possessions and concentrate on happiness in the world to come. Dante's political prospects were shattered by the death of Henry VII in 1313, and in 1315 his native city of Florence renewed its sentence against him. He spent some years at *Verona and from c. 1316 lived at *Ravenna, where he died. The last period of his life was devoted to the completion of the Divina Commedia (q.v.), which established him as one of the few poets who belong to all times and all nations.

Best collected ed. of Opere by the Società Dantesca Italiana, ed. M. Barbi, E. G. Parodi and others (Florence, 1921; appendix, 1922; ed. 2, 1960). Good earlier ed. by G. Moore (Oxford, 1894; revised by P. Toynbee, 1924). Crit. ed. of Vita nuova by M. Barbi (Florence: Edizione Nazionale delle Opere di Dante, i; 1932); of Rime (Canzoni) by G. Contini (Turin, 1939; ed. 2, 1946); Eng. tr. and comm. by K. Foster–P. Boyde, Dante's Lyric Poetry (2 vols., Oxford, 1967); De Vulgari Eloquentia ed. A. Marigo (Florence: Nuova Edizione diretta da M. Barbi, vi; 1938; ed. 2 by P. G. Ricci: Edizione sotto auspici della Fondazione Giorgio Cini, vi; 1957); Convivio ed. G. Busnelli and G. Vandelli (Florence: Nuova Edizione diretta da M. Barbi, iv–v, 1934–7); de Monarchia ed. P. G. Ricci (Verona: Edizione Nazionale, v; 1965); Letters ed. P. Toynbee (Oxford, 1920; ed. 2, 1966); and Eclogue ed. P. H. Wicksteed and E. G. Gardner (London, 1902). A. Solerti (ed.), Le vite di Dante, Petrarca e Boccaccio (Storia Litteraria d'Italia; Milan, 1904), pp. 3–236. E. Moore, Studies in Dante (4 series, Oxford, 1896–1917); P. Toynbee, Dante Alighieri (1900; ed. 4, 1910); N. Zingarelli, Dante (Storia Litteraria d'Italia, 1903; revised ed., 2 vols., Milan, 1944); K. Vossler, Die Göttliche Komödie (4 parts, Heidelberg, 1907–10; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1929); B. *Croce, La poesia di Dante (Bari, 1921; Eng. tr., 1922); E. G. Gardner, Dante (London, 1923); B. Nardi, Saggi di filosofia dantesca (Milan, 1930; ed. 2, Florence, 1967); id., Dante e la cultura medievale (Bari, 1942); id., Nel mondo di Dante (1944); E. *Gilson, Dante et la philosophie (1939; Eng. tr., 1948); U. Cosmo, Guida a Dante (Turin, 1947; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1950); Dorothy L. Sayers, Introductory Papers on Dante (1954); U. Limentani (ed.), The Mind of Dante (Cambridge, 1965). C. [W. S.] *Williams, The Figure of Beatrice (1943). P. Toynbee, A Dictionary of Proper Names and Notable Matters in the Works of Dante (Oxford, 1898; revised by C. S. Singleton, 1968). See also bibl. to Divina Commedia.

DARBOY, GEORGES (1813–71), Abp. of *Paris. He was ordained priest in 1836, and after holding some teaching and other appointments became Bp. of Nancy in 1859 and Abp. of Paris in 1863. In his first year at Paris he consecrated the newly restored cathedral of *Notre-Dame. His *Gallican sympathies and claims to episcopal independence brought him into conflict with Rome, and before and during the First *Vatican Council he was one of the chief opponents of the definition of Papal infallibility, although he eventually subscribed to it. During the siege of Paris in 1870–1, he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the care of the destitute and helpless. When in 1871 the Commune secured control of the city, he was seized and shot in cold blood on 24 May 1871, blessing his executioners. His writings include a Life of St. Thomas *Becket (2 vols., 1858).

Œuvres pastorales de Mgr Darboy, comprenant ses mandements et ses allocutions, depuis son élévation au siège de Nancy jusqu'à sa mort (2 vols., 1876). 'Monseigneur Darboy et le saint-siège. Documents inédits' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, xii (1907), pp. 240–81; Diary kept during the Vatican Council, ed. A. Duval–Y. Congar in R.S.P.T. liv (1970), pp. 417–52. J. A. Foulon, Histoire de la vie et des œuvres de Mgr Darboy, archevêque de Paris (1889). Further Life by J. A. Guillermin (Paris, 1888). L. C. Price, Archbishop Darboy and Some French Tragedies, 1813–1871 [c. 1915]. F. Guédon in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 83–86, s.v.

DARBY, JOHN NELSON (1800–1882), *Plymouth Brother and founder of the 'Darbyites'. He was ordained to a title in Wicklow c. 1826, but resigned in 1827, and shortly after joined a sect called the 'Brethren', then newly founded by A. N. Groves, which rejected all Church order and outward forms. In 1845 a quarrel within this body caused a local schism at Plymouth, and in 1847 at Bristol; and Darby became the leader of the stricter Brethren, which were organized as a separate body ('Darbyites'). Both before and after this time Darby made many tours abroad to lecture and preach, visiting France, Switzerland, Germany, Canada, the U.S.A., the West Indies, and New Zealand between 1830 and his death. Darby wrote countless controversial, doctrinal, and devotional works. He was also a hymn-writer, and edited the hymn-book generally used by the Plymouth Brethren.

Collected Writings ed. by W. Kelly (London, 32 vols. and index [1867–83]). There is much autobiographical material in his Personal Recollections of many Prominent People whom I have Known, and of Events—especially those Relating to the History of St. Louis—during the First Half of the Present Century (St. Louis, 1880). Modern Life by W. G. Turner (London, 1926). A. Reese, The Approaching Advent of Christ. An Examination of the Teaching of J. N. Darby and his Followers [1937].

D'ARCY, MARTIN CYRIL (1888–1976), *Jesuit philosophical theologian. Educated at *Stonyhurst, Oxford, and the *Gregorian University at Rome, he entered the Jesuit Order and was ordained priest in 1921. From 1933 to 1945 he was Master of Campion Hall, Oxford, and from 1945 to 1950 Provincial of the English Province of the Jesuits. He has expounded Catholic principles and philosophy to a public with less narrowly theological interests. Among his larger works are St. Thomas Aquinas (1930); The Nature of Belief (1931), an analysis of faith which, following J. H. *Newman's Grammar of Assent, emphasizes its affective and non-logical elements; and The Mind and Heart of Love (1945), an assessment of the Christian conception of love (Agape, as contrasted with Eros and Philia), strongly influenced by D. Saurat and A. Nygren. Among his other writings are Catholicism (1927), Mirage and Truth (1935), The Pain of this World and the Providence of God (1935), and The Meeting of Love and Knowledge (1957); but much of his most characteristic writing is in essays, articles, and contributions to collected works.

DARK AGES, The. A term in current use for the period in W. Europe extending from the decay of classical culture c. the 5th cent. to the beginning of medieval culture c. the 11th cent. It was formerly in common usage to cover also the medieval period down to the *Renaissance.

DARWINISM. The form of the theory of evolution put forward by Charles Darwin (1809–1882), esp. in his works The Origin of Species (1859) and The Descent of Man (1871). He held that species of living beings evolve by natural selection, the fittest for their biological purpose in each generation alone surviving. In his later years Darwin modified his theory in some measure, and was prepared to take more account of the influence of environment upon evolution. Darwin himself became gradually more and more of an agnostic in religion.

Gertrude Himmelfarb, Darwin and the Darwinian Revolution (1959), with bibl.; M. Banton (ed.), Darwinism and the Study of Society (1961). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church, ii (1970), pp. 1–23. J. R. Moore, The Post-Darwinian Controversies. A Study of the Protestant Struggle to come to terms with Darwin in Britain and America 1870–1900 (1979).

D'AUBIGNÉ, JEAN HENRI MERLE. See Merle d'Aubigné, Jean Henri.

DAVENPORT, CHRISTOPHER (in religion Franciscus a Sancta Clara) (1598–1680), English RC theologian. After studying at *Dublin and *Oxford, he was converted to the RC faith and in 1615 went to *Douai. He entered the *Franciscan Order at Ypres in 1617, and later returned to England, where he became chaplain successively to Queens *Henrietta Maria and Catherine of Braganza. He was on good terms with many of the Anglican clergy, and in his Paraphrastica Expositio Articulorum Confessionis Anglicanae (published separately in 1634, afterwards as an appendix to his Deus, natura, gratia) he endeavoured to show that the *Thirty-Nine Articles could be interpreted in conformity with Catholic tradition.

Collected ed. of his works (corrected), Douai, 2 vols., 1665–1667. Paraphrastica Expositio Articulorum Confessionis Anglicanae was repr. from the Lat. ed. of 1646, with Eng. tr., ed. F. G. *Lee (London, 1865), with sketch of the author's life, pp. xix–xxx. J. B. Dockery, O.F.M., Christopher Davenport, Friar and Diplomat (1960). G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xiv (1888), p. 108 f.; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 109–11, s.v.

DAVENPORT, JOHN (1597–1670), *Puritan divine. Educated at Oxford, first at Merton, together with his brother Christopher (see preceding entry), and afterwards at Magdalen, he became Vicar of St. Stephen's, Coleman Street, in 1624. He incurred the hostility of W. *Laud, who nevertheless called him 'a most religious man', through a 'feoffment scheme' for the purchase of lay impropriations and his efforts to raise money for distressed ministers in the Palatinate. In 1633 he resigned his living and became co-pastor of the English church in Amsterdam. In 1637 he sailed to Boston with other well-known refugees, and in 1638 founded at Quinnipiac the colony of New Haven. In the colony, which was governed by 'The Seven Pillars of the State' (of which he was one), church membership was obligatory for electors and civil officers, until in 1665 the colony was absorbed in Connecticut. In 1662 he became involved in a controversy over Baptism, connected with the '*Half-Way Covenant'. In 1668 he was ordained a minister, and set over the first church at Boston. He was the author of many works, including A Catechism containing the chief Heads of the Christian Religion (1659) and The Power of Congregational Churches Asserted and Vindicated (1672). In 1642 there appeared The Profession of the Faith of the Reverend and Worthy Divine, Mr. John Davenport.

Letters ed. I. McB. Calder (New Haven, Conn., 1937), with short biographical sketch, pp. 1–12. J. T. Adams in Dict. Amer. Biog., v (1930), pp. 85–7.

DAVID (prob. d. c. 970 B.C.), first king of the Judaean dynasty. His reign is recounted in 1 Sam. 16–1 Kgs. 2 and in the idealized description of 1 Chron. 2 f., 10–29. He is hardly mentioned in any source outside the Bible.

David, the youngest son of Jesse, a Judaean of *Bethlehem, first appears when under Divine guidance he was anointed by *Samuel to the future kingship (1 Sam. 16. 13). Acc. to one tradition (1 Sam. 16. 14–23) he was summoned to the court of *Saul as a skilful player upon the harp and eventually appointed the king's armour-bearer. Acc. to another, he appears to have first attracted Saul's attention when as an untried youth he gained his victory over Goliath, the Philistine giant (1 Sam. 17. 12–18. 4). After having been promoted by Saul, won the affection of Jonathan, Saul's son, and married Michal, Saul's daughter, he excited the king's jealousy and came in danger of his life. He fled to Nob (1 Sam. 21. 1) and thence prob. to western Judaea. Here he gathered a band of supporters. After defeating a body of the Philistines near Keilah, south of Adullam (1 Sam. 23. 1–5), he established himself at Ziklag as a vassal of Achish, King of Gath (1 Sam. 27. 6). He was saved from taking part in a campaign against the Israelites only by the distrust of the Philistine lords (1 Sam. 29).

On the death of Saul on Mt. Gilboa (c. 1010 B.C.), David, prob. still under Philistine patronage, set himself up at Hebron as king of the Judaean tribes (2 Sam. 2. 1–4). Seven and a half years later, when Ishbosheth, Saul's son, had been murdered he was accepted also by the Israelites (2 Sam. 4 f.). As soon as he had captured *Jerusalem, he established it as his capital (2 Sam. 5), where he reigned for thirty-three years. He restored the *Ark to the city (2 Sam. 6) and also seems to have planned the building of the *Temple (carried out in the next reign). In a series of battles he broke the supremacy of the Philistines and secured ascendancy over the neighbouring tribes (2 Sam. 8). Concerning his long reign in Jerusalem relatively little information survives, however, beyond the accounts of the quarrels of his sons (Absalom, *Solomon, &c.) which embittered the last years of his life.

Our portrait of David, one of the most lifelike in the OT, is that of a ruler who both gave and inspired deep affection, not least through the magnanimity which he frequently showed to his personal enemies. If on occasion he fell into what to later ages seemed grievous sins (adultery with Bathsheba, murder of Uriah; 2 Sam. 11 f.), we should not forget the standards of his age or (more significant) the depth and simple sincerity of his repentance. Throughout his life he was a consistent defender of the prophetic Hebrew faith.

David has traditionally been regarded as the author of the *Psalms (q.v.), many of which have been associated in later times with particular incidents in his life, e.g. the *Miserere (Ps. 51) with his repentance after the Uriah incident. But the tendency of modern OT scholarship is against assigning to David more than a small fraction of the Psalter. There is little reason, however, to doubt that he composed the dirges over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1. 19–27) and Abner (2 Sam. 3. 34).

In Hebrew tradition, the name of David came to occupy a central position. He was the king whose house and dominion were to stand for ever

(2 Sam. 7. 12–16). But though his dynasty continued to reign in Judah, it lost the allegiance of the northern tribes (Israel) on the death of Solomon, and after frequent misfortunes and attacks fell to the Babylonians in 586 B.C. These calamities led the Prophets to look to the re-establishment of the full sovereignty of 'David' (i.e. of the house of David) as part of the deliverance of the nation (e.g. Amos 9. 11, Hos. 3. 5, Is. 16. 5, Jer. 30. 9, Ezek. 37. 24) to be achieved through a future prince of the house (Is. 9. 6 f.), a 'Branch' from the stock of Jesse (Is. 11. 1–10, Jer. 33. 15–22). As the hope of the *Messiah grew, the Deliverer was awaited from among the descendants of David, while David himself was conceived as a *type of the expected Messiah on the basis e.g. of such references as Ps. 110.

In the NT the Evangelists assume the Davidic descent of the Messiah (see Genealogies of Christ). It is as the 'Son of David' (e.g. Mt. 21. 9) that the Lord is welcomed to Jerusalem before His Passion. His Davidic ancestry is also stressed in Rom. 1. 3, 2 Tim. 2. 8 and Rev. 5. 5, 22. 16.

In the Fathers the idea of David as the type of Christ is a commonplace. St. *Augustine draws a parallel between David's victory over Goliath and that of the Lord over Satan; St. *Cyril of Alexandria explains that David's sling foreshadows the Cross of Christ; while in both St. Augustine and St. *Gregory the Great the victory of David in his weakness foreshadows that of the Church and the Christian martyrs. In Christian art he is regularly depicted with a crown and a harp. His role as the ancestor of Christ is graphically represented in the *Jesse windows (q.v.).

L. Desnoyers, Histoire du peuple hébreu des juges à la captivité, ii (1930), pp. 71–327, iii (1930), esp. pp. 184–8. T. H. Robinson in W. O. E. Oesterley–T. H. Robinson, A History of Israel, i (1932), pp. 200–38. Popular sketch by [A.] Duff Cooper (London, 1945). H. Steger, David Rex et Propheta. König David als vorbildliche Verkörperung des Herrschers und Dichters im Mittelalter, nach Bilddarstellungen des achten bis zwölften Jahrhunderts (1961). H. A. White in H.D.B., i (1900), pp. 560–73, s.v., with reff. to older literature; L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 287–330, s.v., with reff. See also commentaries to Sam. and Kings, cited s.vv., and histories of Israel.

DAVID, St. (d. c. 601), patron saint of *Wales. Though he is one of the most famous British saints, there is no reliable biography of him. His earliest Life, that by Bp. Rhygyfarch or Ricimas, which dates from the second half of the 11th cent., was written with a view to supporting the claims of the Welsh bishops to independence of *Canterbury. Acc. to the legend, he belonged to a noble family; after having become a priest, he lived for a time in retirement; later he became the founder of 12 monasteries; finally he settled at Mynyw or Menevia, where he established an abbey whose religious led a life of extreme asceticism modelled on that of the Egyptian monks. About 560 he is said to have attended the Synod of Brefi (the modern Llanddewi Brefi), apparently one of the few historically established facts of his life; but the story that he spoke there with such eloquence that he was chosen primate of the Cambrian Church seems to be legendary, as well as the assertion that he transferred the episcopal see from Caerleon to Menevia, now *St. Davids. He is related to have called in 569 a Council, generally styled the 'Synod of Victory', because held at a place the Latin name of which is given as 'Lucus Victoriae' (Caerleon). Other features of St. David's life, such as his pilgrimage to *Jerusalem and his consecration as archbishop by its patriarch, are mere inventions. St. David's cult seems to have been approved by Pope *Callistus II c. 1120; in 1398 Abp. *Arundel ordered his feast to be kept throughout the province of Canterbury. Feast day, 1 Mar.

St. David is mentioned in the 'Martyrology of St. *Oengus' (c. 800) and in the 'Catalogue of the Saints of Ireland' (9th–10th cent.), but without any details of his life being given. The text of Rhygyfarch's Life ed. by A. W. Wade-Evans in Y Cymmrodor, xxiv (1913), pp. 4–28. The same author published an Eng. trans. with copious notes, The Life of St. David (1923). It is also ed., with Eng. tr., by J. W. James (Cardiff, 1967). See also E. Rhys, The Life of Saint David (1927), and S. M. Harris, Saint David in the Liturgy (Cardiff, 1940). Nora K. Chadwick in id. and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 134–57.

DAVID OF AUGSBURG (c. 1200–72), German preacher and mystic. A native of Augsburg, he entered the *Franciscan Order at Regensburg, where he soon became novice-master. In 1243 he was transferred to the newly founded convent at Augsburg, where with his friend Berthold of Regensburg (d. 1272), also a great preacher, he carried on an active evangelism. His principal Latin writings, which have frequently been ascribed to St. *Bernard and to St. *Bonaventure, are 'De Compositione Hominis Exterioris', 'De Reformatione Hominis Interioris', 'De Septem Processibus Religiosorum', and two letters to novices. The authenticity of 'De Inquisitione Haereticorum' has been doubted. He also was the first author to publish spiritual treatises in German. They are closely connected with his Latin writings. Of those usually regarded as genuine 'Die sieben Staffeln des Gebetes' is a free rendering of 'Septem gradus Orationis', 'Die sieben Vorregeln der Tugend' is based on chapters in 'De Compositione', and 'Der Spiegel der Tugend' is an independent composition. His teaching was eminently practical. He inculcated perfect obedience and humility, warned against illusions, and though enlarging more on the active than the contemplative life, kept in view the mystic union of the soul and its three faculties of memory, understanding, and will with God. His works continued to be used in the later Middle Ages, especially in the Netherlands.

David's 'De Compositione Hominis Exterioris' and other Lat. works for novices ed. Quaracchi, 1899; 'De Inquisitione Haereticorum' first ed. W. Preger in Abh. (Bayr.), xiv (1879), Abteilung 2, pp. 181–235; 'Septem gradus Orationis' first ed. J. Heerinckx, O.F.M., in Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, xiv (1933), pp. 146–70; his German works in F. Pfeiffer (ed.), Deutsche Mystiker des vierzehnten Jahrhunderts, i (1845), pp. 309–405. Crit. ed. of 'Die sieben Staffeln des Gebetes' by K. Ruh (Kleine deutsche Prosadenkmäler des Mittelalters, i; 1965). Eng. tr. of various Lat. works by Dominic Devas, O.F.M., under the title Spiritual Life and Progress (2 vols., 1937), with introd. D. Stöckerl, Bruder David von Augsburg (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, iv, Hft. 4; 1914). K. Ruh, 'David von Augsburg und die Entstehung eines Franziskanischen Schrifttums in deutscher Sprache' in H. Rinn (ed.), Augusta 955–1955. Forschungen und Studien zur Kultur- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte Augsburg (Augsburg, 1955), pp. 71–82.

DAVID OF DINANT (fl. 1200), naturalist and philosopher. He prob. came from Dinant in Belgium. Nothing is known of his life except that he is given the title 'Magister', which implies study in a school, and that in a letter of Pope *Innocent III of 1206 he is called 'capellanus noster'. In 1210 a Council of the Province of Sens ordered that his writings (Quaternuli) should be brought to the Bp.

of Paris and burnt. These writings have until recently been known only from fragments quoted by others, chiefly *Albertus Magnus. In 1933 A. Birkenmajer and R. de Vaux independently identified fragments of his work, and these were edited by M. Kurdziałek in 1963. The fragments, which contain passages reproduced by Albertus Magnus, apparently come from an incomplete work in various stages of elaboration. They show considerable knowledge of the physical works of *Aristotle derived from a reading of the original text. Together with discussion of natural phenomena some startling doctrines are set forth. David taught that all distinctions in real being (ens in actu) are to be explained by a primal possible being (materia prima), which he identified with the Divine Being. All things, material, intellectual, and spiritual, have one and the same essence, viz. God. The sources for David's views have been much discussed, but G. Théry is prob. right in maintaining that the preponderant influence is Aristotle. We do not know whether David taught in Paris, but the circulation of such views there led to the condemnation of the study of the Metaphysics of Aristotle and of his works on natural philosophy in Paris. Albertus Magnus attacked David's writings mercilessly. He was concerned to show that the materialistic view of David not only found no support in Aristotle, but that Aristotle's philosophy, rightly understood, was a condemnation of David's interpretation. David's position was entirely different from that of *Amalric of Bène, who was condemned at the same time.

'Quaternulorum Fragmenta' ed. M. Kurdziałek (Studia Mediewistycne, iii; Warsaw, 1963). G. Théry, O.P., Autour du Décret de 1210: I. David de Dinant (Bibliothèque Thomiste, vi; 1925), with text of extracts from Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas, and reff. to earlier literature. A. Birkenmajer, 'Découverte de fragments manuscrits de David de Dinant' in Revue Néo-scolastique de Philosophie, xxxv (1933), pp. 220–9; R. de Vaux, O.P., 'Sur un texte retrouvé de David de Dinant' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, xxii (1933), pp. 243–5. B. Lawn, I Quesiti Salernitani (revised Italian tr., 1969), 100–4, identifying further fragments.

DAVIDSON, ANDREW BRUCE (1831–1902), Scottish OT scholar. He belonged to the *Free Church of Scotland and was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and at New College, Edinburgh. At the latter he became assistant professor of Hebrew in 1858 and professor of Hebrew and Oriental languages in 1863. He was one of the first to introduce historical methods of OT exegesis into Scotland, and though his own dogmatic orthodoxy was seldom challenged, that of several of his pupils, who carried his principles a stage further, notably W. R. *Smith, was fiercely contested. His writings include An Introductory Hebrew Grammar (1874); commentaries on Job (1884), Ezekiel (1892), and Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah (1896), in the 'Cambridge Bible'; The Theology of the Old Testament, ed. S. D. F. Salmond (1904); and a large number of articles in J. *Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible. He was also a member of the OT Revision Committee.

J. Strahan, Andrew Bruce Davidson (1917). Also biographical introduction by A. T. Innes to A. B. Davidson, The Called of God, ed. by J. A. Paterson (1902), pp. 3–58. Complete list of his works in The Expository Times, xv (1904), p. 453. S. R. *Driver in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, p. 471 f.

DAVIDSON, RANDALL THOMAS (1848–1930), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of Scottish Presbyterian parents, he was educated at Harrow (where also he was confirmed) and at Trinity College, Oxford, and then trained for holy orders by C. J. *Vaughan. He was ordained deacon in 1874 to the curacy of Dartford, Kent, where he remained until in 1878 he became resident chaplain to the Abp. of Canterbury, A. C. *Tait, whose second daughter he married. An interview with Queen *Victoria, on the occasion of Tait's death in 1882, greatly impressed her with his personality, and in 1883 he was appointed Dean of Windsor. In 1891 he became Bp. of *Rochester, in 1895 of *Winchester, and in 1903 Abp. of Canterbury. He resigned in 1928.

As the confidential adviser of Queen Victoria, and afterwards as Primate, Davidson exercised an exceptional influence upon the life of Church and nation. He endeavoured esp. to maintain the comprehensiveness of the C of E and to strengthen the Church as a spiritual and moral witness in national life. His Primacy was a period of special difficulty, requiring him to take action with regard to such varied questions as the disestablishment of the Church in *Wales, the *Kikuyu Controversy, the *Enabling Act, the *Malines Conversations, the Coal Strike (1926), and Prayer Book Revision. Though suffering from lifelong ill-health owing to an accident in boyhood, he was an indefatigable worker. He possessed the courage necessary in a leader, even if he more often preferred to exercise the caution of a chairman. His elevation to the peerage as 'Baron Davidson of Lambeth', after his resignation of the Primacy, was the recognition of one whose service to the Church was also, in a high degree, service to the nation.

G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (2 vols., 1935). Id. in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 240–8.

DAWES HICKS, GEORGE. See Hicks, George Dawes.

DAY HOURS. Traditionally the services of the *Breviary other than *Mattins (which constituted the 'night office'), viz. *Lauds, *Prime, *Terce, *Sext, *None, *Vespers, and *Compline. The office-book containing these services is known as the *Diurnal. For the arrangement of offices in the 1971 Breviary, see under Breviary.

DAY OF ATONEMENT; JUDGEMENT. See Atonement; Judgement, Day of.

DAY'S PSALTER. A popular name (which does not appear on any title page) for the metrical edition of the Psalms by Thomas *Sternhold (d. 1549) and John Hopkins (d. 1570). It applies to the early complete editions of this Psalter, which were printed by John Day (1552–84) from 1562 onwards. More commonly called the Old Version, it had been in use, in incomplete form, since 1549. Reissued by other printers, it continued to circulate widely for over a hundred years.

DEACON (Gk. διάκονος, 'servant', 'minister'; cf. διακονέω, 'I serve'), the rank in the Christian ministry next below the presbyter (priest) and bishop. The institution of the diaconate is traditionally seen in the ordination of the Seven, among them *Stephen and *Philip, by imposition of hands for the service of the poor and the distribution of alms (Acts 6. 1–6), though the word διάκονος is not found here. Where it occurs in the NT in a technical sense (Phil. 1. 1, 1 Tim. 3. 8) it is of ministers who serve under the presbyter-bishops. In the *Pastoral Epp. the deacons are a separate class of Church officers, charged chiefly with material duties.

In post-NT times deacons continued to exercise similar functions. They are mentioned in *Clement of Rome's Ep. to the Corinthians, and also several times in the Epp. of *Ignatius together with bishops and priests, always in the third place. In the Patristic age, when the office was normally held for life, their functions varied from place to place. They commonly read or chanted the *Epistle and *Gospel at the Eucharist, received the offerings of the faithful and inscribed the names of the donors in the *diptychs, assisted the priest in the distribution of Holy Communion or distributed it themselves, directed the prayers of the laity during the service, and gave the signal for penitents and catechumens to leave the church before the beginning of the *Canon. These liturgical functions were considerably curtailed when, in 595, St. *Gregory the Great transferred many of their musical duties to the *cantors.

Their original office of collecting and distributing the alms gave them considerable importance and the *archdeacon, the chief deacon of a given place, became the bishop's principal administrative officer. In Rome their influence was esp. marked through their association with the Pope; here their number was long restricted to seven, a tradition which was perpetuated in the seven *Cardinal Deacons. It gave rise, however, to abuses. Already at *Nicaea (325; can. 18) their powers were curbed and the Council of *Toledo in 633 and the *Trullan Synod in 692 had to stress their hierarchical inferiority to the priesthood. Their influence diminished considerably during the Middle Ages, and in most western episcopal Churches in modern times the diaconate has become merely a stage (in the C of E the first) in preparation for the priesthood. The E. Church, however, has always retained a permanent diaconate.

In the C of E a cleric begins his ministerial work on becoming a deacon. He is debarred from celebrating the Eucharist, from giving absolution and from pronouncing the blessing. Before entering the diaconate the candidate must provide the bishop with evidence of moral and intellectual suitability, and must have been accepted for some ecclesiastical preferment ('title'). Unless he has a *faculty, he may not enter the diaconate before he is 23 years old. He generally remains in the order for a year.

Similar rules bind the diaconate in the RC Church. For many centuries the deacon had hardly any functions beyond his ministrations at High Mass and Benediction. Only with special permission was he allowed to preach or administer Solemn Baptism, though he retained the right to chant the Gospel, to present the offerings to the celebrant, to invite the congregation to pray, and to chant the 'Ite, Missa est' at Mass; to expose the Bl. Sacrament and put it back in the Tabernacle at Benediction; and to sing the _Exultet_. Because of the short time normally spent in the diaconate and hence the fewness of deacons, the liturgical functions proper to a deacon are frequently performed by a priest. The Second *Vatican Council, however, envisaged the possibility of the restoration of a permanent diaconate, permitting bishops in certain cases to ordain older married men as deacons, though young men ordained deacons were still to be bound to celibacy. The Constitution 'On the Church' (_De Ecclesia_) defined the duties of a deacon, allowing him, when authorized, to baptize solemnly, administer Communion, assist at and bless marriages, give *Viaticum to the dying, and officiate at funerals. The characteristic vestments of the deacon are the dalmatic, and the stole worn over the left shoulder. It is disputed whether or not ordination to the diaconate conveys *'character', but it is held that the diaconate is indelible.

In many of the Protestant Churches the name is applied to the holders of an office in the ministry. In the *Lutheran Church the word 'deacon' is applied to assistant parochial ministers, even though they are in full Lutheran orders. J. *Calvin's _Institutes_ (IV. iii. 9) recognized two classes of deacons, those who administered the alms and those who cared for the poor and sick. Such remain the functions of deacons in Presbyterianism, where there is also provision for a deacons' court, directly responsible to the presbytery and concerned with the proper distribution of Church goods. Where such a court does not exist, the deacons' functions are performed by elders. In the *Baptist and *Congregational Churches more definitely spiritual functions are assigned to the deacons, who assist the pastor and also distribute the elements at the Communion.

J. N. Seidl, Der Diakonat in der katholischen Kirche (Ratisbon, 1884). O. Zöckler, Diakonen und Evangelisten (1893). H. Krimm (ed.), Das Diakonische Amt der Kirche (Stuttgart, 1953; ed. 2, 1965); id. (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte der Diakonie (2 vols., ib. [1960–64]). J. Colson, La Fonction diaconale aux origines de l'Église (Textes et Études Théologiques, 1960). K. *Rahner, S.J.–H. Vorgrimler (edd.), Diaconia in Christo. Über die Erneuerung des Diakonates (Quaestiones Disputatae, xv–xvi; 1962), with bibl. J. Viteau, 'L'Institution des diacres et des veuves' in R.H.E., xxii (1926), pp. 513–37; J. G. Davies, 'Deacons, Deaconesses and the Minor Orders in the Patristic Period' in J.E.H., xiv (1963), pp. 1–15. H. W Beyer in T.W.B., ii (1935), pp. 88–93, s.v. διάκονος. S. Cheetham in D.C.A., i (1875), pp. 526–32, s.v.; J. Forget in D.T.C., iv (1911) cols. 703–31, s.v. Diacres'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 738–46, s.v. 'Diacre'; F. Claeys-Bouuaert in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1198–1206, s.v. 'Diacre'; T. Klauser in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 888–909, s.v. 'Diakon'.

DEACONESS. In the early Church the term designated a woman officially charged with certain functions in the Church. The institution, though not the designation, apparently goes back to the Apostolic age. St. *Paul's mention of Phoebe, 'deaconess (οὖσαν διάκονον) of the Church that is at Cenchreae' (Rom. 16. 1), as well as 1 Tim. 3. 11, are usually held to refer to a special office; and *Pliny, in his letter to Trajan, speaks of two 'ancillae quae ministrae dicebantur'. The term διακόνισσα (Lat. diaconissa) did not, however, come into use until the 4th cent. Earlier documents use 'diacona', 'vidua', or 'virgo canonica', and the distinction between widows and deaconesses is rather obscure.

The office, which developed greatly in the 3rd and 4th cents., is described in the '*Didascalia' and the '*Apostolic Constitutions'. The age of entry, fixed at 60 by St. Paul and at 50 by the 'Didascalia', was reduced to 40 by the Council of *Chalcedon. The deaconess devoted herself to the care of the sick and the poor of her sex; she was present at interviews of women with bishops, priests, or deacons; instructed women catechumens, and kept order in the women's part of the church. Her most important function was the assistance at the baptism of women, at which, for reasons of propriety, many of the ceremonies could not be performed by the deacons. When, therefore, adult baptism became rare, the office of deaconess declined in importance. This process was helped by abuses which had crept in, when deaconesses arrogated to themselves ministerial functions, e.g. in the *Monophysite and *Nestorian communities, where they administered Holy Communion to women, read the Scriptures in public, &c. The Councils of Epaon (517) and of Orléans (533) abrogated the office, but it is found in other places till the 11th cent. In the E., where the prerogatives of deaconesses were more marked, including the investiture with the stole and the distribution of the chalice, the process was somewhat slower. The reception of stole and maniple by the *Carthusian nuns at their profession would seem to be a survival of the ancient office.

In the 19th cent. the office was revived in a modified form. The first Protestant community of deaconesses was that established by the German pastor, T. Fliedner, at *Kaiserswerth (q.v.) in 1836. From there it spread to other countries, notably England and the U.S.A. In the C of E, the first deaconess (Miss Elizabeth Ferard) was dedicated to her work in 1861 by A. C. *Tait, Bp. of London. Diocesan institutes on the model of Kaiserswerth were founded in many parts of the country, and rules drawn up for them in 1871. The example was followed by the *Methodists in 1888, and in the same year deaconesses were established in the Church of Scotland.

In the C of E the order of deaconess is described in the Canons of 1969 (Section D) as 'the only order of ministry' to which 'women are admitted by prayer and the laying on of hands by the bishop'. At the same time the Canons state that it does not constitute 'one of the holy orders of the Church of England'. The provisions made for the admission and licensing of deaconesses are analogous to those for *Lay Readers, with greater emphasis on formal training. Their main duties are 'to read in case of need the services of Morning and Evening Prayer and the Litany, except those portions reserved to the priest, and to lead in prayer'. Since 1971 they may also preach at the Holy Communion.

J. Pien, 'Tractatus . . . de Ecclesiae Diaconissis' in AA.SS., Sept., I (1746), pp. i–xxviii. J. Mayer (ed.), Monumenta de Viduis, Diaconissis, Virginibusque Tractantia (Florilegium Patristicum, xlii; Bonn, 1938), with reff. T. Schäfer, Die weibliche Diakonie in ihrem ganzen Umfang (3 vols., ed. 2, 1887–94). H. Seesemann–N. Bonwetsch, Das Amt der Diakonissen in der alten Kirche (1891); A. Kalsbach, Die altkirchliche Einrichtung der Diakonissen bis zu ihrem Erlöschen (Römische Quartalschrift, Supplementheft, xxii; 1926). C. H. *Turner, 'Ministries of Women in the Primitive Church. Widow, Deaconess and Virgin in the First Four Christian Centuries' in The Constructive Quarterly, vii (1919), repr. in Catholic and Apostolic, ed. H. N. Bate (1931), No. xi, pp. 316–51, esp. pp. 328–43; J. G. Davies, 'Deacons, Deaconesses and the Minor Orders in the Patristic Period' in J.E.H., xiv (1963), pp. 1–15, esp. pp. 1–6. C. Robinson, The Ministry of Deaconesses (1898). The Ministry of Women. A Report by a Committee Appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury (S.P.C.K., 1919). A. Kalsbach in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 917–28, s.v. 'Diakonisse'.

DEAD, Prayers for the. The practice of offering prayers on behalf of the dead is closely connected with the doctrine of *Purgatory (q.v.). The warrant for it is the belief that those in purgatory are still part of the Church and, as members of the Mystical Body of Christ who have not yet arrived at the *beatific vision, can be helped by the intercessions of those still alive. Explicit scriptural justification for the practice has been found in 2 Macc. 12. 40–45. There is ample evidence for its use in the inscriptions of the *Catacombs, with their constant prayers for the peace and refreshment of the souls of the departed, and the early liturgies also commonly contain commemorations of the dead. Of the early Fathers, *Tertullian, *Cyprian, and others are witnesses of the regular practice of private prayers for the dead, and in the 4th cent. one of the counts against the heretic, *Aerius, was that he denied its efficacy and legitimacy. On the other hand, the early Church never prayed for the martyrs, because they were believed to be in full possession of beatitude immediately after death, a refusal extended later to all canonized saints. Nor, it is held, can the damned, i.e. those who have died in unrepented mortal sin, be assisted by our prayers, though who they are is known to God alone. Acc. to RC Canon Law, the public offering of Mass for the excommunicate is forbidden, though private prayers and Masses for the Dead may be said for them (CIC 2262). Until the Decree on Ecumenism of the Second *Vatican Council was passed, all persons separated from the visible Communion of the RC Church were technically regarded as 'excommunicate', but since 1967 the censures of excommunication are incurred only by those who, having been baptized into the Church, knowingly and publicly abjure her faith.

At first the Protestant Reformers continued the traditional custom of praying for the dead. But before long they came to denounce it, partly on the ground that it was not expressly ordered in the Bible (2 Macc. 12. 40–45 was dismissed, since the 'Apocrypha' no longer ranked as Scripture), partly through their rejection of the doctrine of purgatory. In the C of E express prayers for the dead have been absent from the BCP since 1552 and the practice is denounced as unprofitable in the *Homily 'On Prayer' (Part iii) on the ground that it is useless to intercede for the dead, who are already either in heaven or hell. The liturgy of the *Nonjurors, however, included prayers for the dead, and since the middle of the 19th cent. the practice has been increasingly adopted in the C of E. Prayers for the dead were included in an authorized 'Form of Intercession' put out in 1900 on behalf of the forces serving in South Africa and since then in other official forms of service. In a somewhat veiled form they were inserted for optional use in the proposed revision of the BCP in 1927–8; they were widely used except among Churchmen of pronounced Evangelical beliefs. Opposition to prayers for the dead, however, led to the withdrawal of the proposed Alternative Services, Series II, Burial Service in 1968, but such prayers are found in the ASB.

The traditional Catholic teaching was reasserted at the Council of *Trent, sessions XXII (cf. can. 3) and XXV (for both, cf. Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), nos. 1743, 1753, 1820), as well as in the Decree of Union subscribed at the Council of *Florence of 1439 (ib., No. 1304). See also Purgatory.

DEAD SEA, The. The inland sea to the SE of Palestine into which the *Jordan flows. It is much the lowest lake in the world, being nearly 1,300 feet below sea-level. Acc. to Hebrew tradition, it was formed when the cities of the plain, Sodom and Gomorrah, were overthrown for their wickedness (Gen. 13. 13). There are several refs. to it in the OT e.g. Ezek. 47. 18, Zech. 14. 8), though never as the Dead Sea' by name. In the NT there is no mention of it. The designation 'Dead Sea' (θάλασσα νεκρά) is first found in Pausanias and Galen.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25; 1931), ch. xxiii, pp. 497–530, with bibl. reff. F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, i (1933), pp. 167–9. L. Gautier in E. Bi., i (1899), cols. 1042–7, s.v., with bibl.

DEAD SEA SCROLLS, The. The name popularly given to the remains of a once considerable collection of *Hebrew and *Aramaic MSS., written for the most part in an early form of the square (or 'Assyrian') script, and discovered in caves in the neighbourhood of Qumran, at the north-western end of the Dead Sea, in 1947 and the years following. No one manuscript has been preserved without damage, and of the great majority there survive only tiny fragments. Nearly all the books of the canonical OT are represented (some of them by several copies), together with many *apocryphal and pseudepigraphal books (known hitherto only from translations), and a number of other works not previously known at all. Esp. interesting in this last class are: (1) a series of OT Commentaries which interpret the Biblical text as prophecy fulfilled in events of the commentators' own times; (2) a collection of 'Psalms of Thanksgiving', very much on the lines of the Biblical Psalms and largely composed of phrases derived from them; (3) a strange work, to which the name 'The War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness' has been given, possibly apocalyptic in character; (4) a hand-book, somewhat analogous to the *Didache and called variously 'The Manual of Discipline' or 'The Sectarian Document', containing the rules governing the life of the religious community to which the compiler obviously belonged; and (5) the so-called 'Damascus Fragments' or 'Zadokite Documents', similar in character to the 'Manual', and otherwise known from a previous discovery by S. Schechter in the *Geniza of the synagogue of Cairo in 1896.

About the origin and date of the Scrolls all that can safely be said is that they once belonged to the library of the Jewish community (some would say 'sect') which was centred on a large building (or monastery) at Qumran about the beginning of the Christian era, and that in all probability most of them were written there. Excavation of the building seems to have shown that it was first occupied about 125 B.C. and continued in occupation, with a break of some thirty or forty years during the lifetime of *Herod the Great, down to the time of the First Jewish Revolt (A.D. 66–70). From this and certain other considerations deriving from the study of the Scrolls and the circumstances in which they were found, it is generally agreed that they are to be dated within the limits 20 B.C. and A.D. 70; and their finding in the caves is best explained on the hypothesis that they were hidden there for safe-keeping when the destruction of the centre seemed imminent. Many scholars have identified the community to whom the Scrolls belonged with the *Essenes.

In view of the fact that practically no other MS. material in Hebrew and Aramaic has survived from this period, the Scrolls are of great importance palaeographically. Equally important is their bearing upon our knowledge of the history of the OT text. They show clearly both that the *Massoretic text was no new creation of the Christian era, and also that the critical view that other types of text were current in the pre-Christian era is abundantly justified. Furthermore, they provide significant first-hand evidence for Jewish life and thought (albeit 'sectarian') at the time that Christianity was born. Hence they are a source of information which no student of Christian origins can afford to ignore.

M. Burrows (ed.), The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark's Monastery (2 vols., New Haven, 1950–5); D. Barthélemy, O.P.–J. T. Milik (edd.), Discoveries in the Judaean Desert (Oxford, 1955 ff.); E. L. Sukenik (ed.), Dead Sea Scrolls of the Hebrew University (Jerusalem, with comm. in Hebrew, 1954; in English, 1955); N. Avigad–Y. Yadin (edd.), A Genesis Apocryphon (ib., 1962). S. Zeitlin (ed.), The Zadokite Fragments (J.Q.R. Monograph Series, i; Philadelphia, 1952). P. Wernberg-Møller (ed. and tr.), The Manual of Discipline (Studies on the Texts of the Desert of Judah, i; Leiden, 1957); Y. Yadin (ed.), The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light with the Sons of Darkness (Jerusalem, 1956, in Hebrew; Eng. tr., 1962); C. Rabin (ed.), The Zadokite Documents (Oxford, 1954; ed. 2, 1958). G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English (1962). M. Burrows, The Dead Sea Scrolls (New York, 1955); id., More Light on the Dead Sea Scrolls (ib., 1958). J. T. Milik, Dix Ans de découvertes dans le désert de Juda (1957; Eng. tr., 1959); F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumrân and modern Biblical Studies (1958); R. de Vaux, O.P., L'Archéologie et les manuscrits de la mer Morte (Schweich Lectures, 1959; London, 1961). C. Rabin, Qumran Studies (1957); M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins (1961); G. R. Driver, The Judaean Scrolls (Oxford, 1965).

DEADLY SINS, Seven. See Seven Deadly Sins.

DE ALEATORIBUS (or Adversus Aleatores). A short homily, written in somewhat uncouth Latin, which vigorously denounces dice-players and all games of chance. Its authorship has been much disputed. At one time it was believed to be a work of *Cyprian (d. 258), but this view has now been almost universally abandoned. In 1888 A. *Harnack ascribed it to Pope *Victor I (189–99), thus making it the earliest piece of Christian Latin literature. Subsequent study has made it probable, however, that it drew upon Cyprian's writings, and that the work is thus not earlier than the middle of the 3rd cent. Harnack himself came later to believe that it was the work of a *Novatianist antipope at Rome.

Crit. ed. of text in Cyprian's Opera, ed. W. Hartel, C.S.E.L., iii (1), pp. 92–104; text also in J. P. Migne, PL, iv, 827–36. A. Harnack, Der pseudocyprianische Tractat De Aleatoribus, die älteste lateinische Schrift, ein Werk des römischen Bischofs Victor I. (saec. II) (T.U., v, Hft. 1; 1888); id., 'Zu Pseudocyprian, Adv. Aleat. 1 (p. 93, 1 f., ed. Hartel)' in T.U., xx, Hft. 3 (1900), pp. 112–16. H. Koch, 'Zur Schrift adversus aleatores' in Festgabe für K. Müller (1922), pp. 58–67. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 498 f.

DEAN (Lat. decanus, from decem, 'ten'). The title of various, originally minor, officials, e.g. a monk supervising ten novices.

(1) *Rural deans assist the *bishop in administering a subdivision of an *archdeaconry. In the 9th cent. this office replaced the archpresbyterate. The modern RC equivalent of the rural dean is technically known as a 'vicar forane' but in England is commonly described merely as a dean.

(2) The dean of a *cathedral (also formerly an archpresbyter) controls its services and, with the *chapter, supervises its fabric and property. He ranks next to the bishop, of whom in the Anglican, but not the Roman, Church he is considerably independent. In some recent foundations, however, the bishop is also dean, and decanal functions are largely discharged by a *provost under his authority. In the C of E deans are appointed by the crown.

(3) The heads of the *collegiate churches of *Westminster, *Windsor, and other *peculiars which are governed by Deans (and chapters) are independent of episcopal authority.

(4) The 'Dean of the Province of *Canterbury' is the Bp. of London ex officio. He summons the Bishops of the Southern Province to meet in *Convocation under a mandate from the Abp. of Canterbury.

(5) For *Dean of the Arches, see foll. entry.

(6) In the RC Church, the Dean of the Sacred College is one of the *Cardinal Bishops, since 1965 elected by the suburbican cardinals from among their number.

(7) The *Lutheran superintendent and *Calvinist overseer are sometimes styled dean.

The title of dean of a college or of a university faculty, very often held by a layman, should not be confused with the ecclesiastical title; but the Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, is both head of the college and dean of the cathedral.

DEAN OF THE ARCHES. The lay judge in the Court of *Arches. Formerly *Bow Church ('Sta. Maria de Arcubus'), from which he derived his title, was, with twelve other parishes, exempt from the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London, and the Dean exercised '*peculiar jurisdiction' over the thirteen parishes. The original office is now extinct, owing to the incorporation of the parishes into the see of London, but the legal functions that gradually came to be attached to it are still performed by a judge who retains the title. He has to be a barrister of at least ten years' standing, or a person who has held high judicial office, and if a layman, a communicant. See also Arches, Court of.

Irene J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration (2 vols., 1933), esp. i, pp. 436–46, and ii, pp. 186–92, with list of Deans, pp. 238–40. R. Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, i (ed. 2, 1895), p. 214.

DEARMER, PERCY (1867–1936), writer on ceremonial subjects and religious music. He was educated at Westminster and at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he was much influenced by James Adderley and C. *Gore and became one of the first members of the Christian Social Union. Ordained deacon in 1891, he set himself to popularize the adaptation of medieval English ceremonial to the Prayer Book rite, setting out his ideals in The Parson's Handbook (1899), a widely used manual, and putting them into practice as Vicar of St. Mary's, Primrose Hill, Hampstead (1901–15), where he attracted the interest of many leading artists. From 1919 to 1936 he was Professor of ecclesiastical art at *King's College, London, and in 1931 he became a Canon of Westminster. He was co-editor of the English Hymnal (1906), Songs of Praise* (1925), and the Oxford Book of Carols (1928); to these collections he contributed several hymns and translations. His many books on ecclesiastical, topographical, and other subjects include Oxford: The Cathedral and See (1897) and Wells: The Cathedral and See (1898), both in 'Bell's Cathedral Series', Highways and Byways in Normandy (1900), G. van der Goude's Dat Boexken vander Missen (*Alcuin Club, 1903), Body and Soul (1909; on spiritual healing), Everyman's History of the English Church (1909), Everyman's History of the Prayer Book (1912), The Art of Public Worship (1919), Art and Religion (1924), The Truth about Fasting (1928), and Songs of Praise Discussed (1933).

The Parson's Handbook was extensively revised and rewritten in an abbreviated form for the 13th edn. by C. E. Pocknee (1965). Life by his wife, Nan Dearmer (1940, with bibl.). F. R. Barry in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 216 f.

'DEATH OF GOD' THEOLOGY. See God (last paragraph).

DE AUXILIIS. In 1597 *Clement VIII appointed the 'Congregatio de Auxiliis' to deal with the contemporary disputes on the manner in which Divine *grace operated. Though Reformation controversies had forced the subject on the attention of RC theologians, the Council of *Trent (1546–63) had left many of the issues unsettled, and towards the end of the 16th cent. division of opinion had become very acute. A fresh stage was reached when the *Jesuit theologian, L. de *Molina, published his Concordia liberi arbitrii cum gratiae donis (1588), and the *Dominican theologian, D. *Báñez, vigorously controverted his teaching. The 'Congregatio' reported for the first time on 19 Mar. 1598, advising that the circulation of Molina's book be forbidden and 90 propositions extracted from it condemned; but the Pope declined to ratify the decision. A second attempt to secure Papal confirmation when the number of offending propositions had been reduced to 20 was equally unsuccessful. Yet a further attempt, under *Paul V, to achieve the same object failed. Finally, on 5 Sept. 1607, in an attempt to satisfy both sides, the Pope decreed that the *Dominicans could not justly be accused of *Calvinism nor the *Jesuits of *Pelagianism, and that neither side should pronounce the contrary teaching heretical.

DE BRUYS, PIERRE. See Peter de Bruys.

DECADARY CULT. The system of worship instituted during the French Revolution on the basis of a 10-day 'week' (ending with 'Décadi', the day of rest) to supplant that associated with the Christian calendar.

DECADE (Lat. decem, 'ten'). The name technically used for each of the five divisions into which each *chaplet of the Rosary is subdivided, because each contains ten *Hail Marys, together with an *Our Father and (in general practice) a *Gloria Patri. As each decade is associated with one of the fifteen *Mysteries of the Rosary, they form unities in themselves and are sometimes recited as such, without the whole chaplet being said.

DECALOGUE. See Commandments, The Ten.

DECANI [sc. sedes] (Lat.), 'the place of the dean' (decani). As the dean's stall is on the south side of the cathedral, the term 'decani' is used to indicate those who in antiphonal singing sit on the decanal side of the choir. It is now in common usage for other churches, besides cathedrals. The opposite side is known as '*Cantoris'.

DE CANTILUPE, St. THOMAS and WALTER. See Cantilupe, St. Thomas de and Walter de.

DECAPOLIS, The. A region consisting of ten allied cities E. of the *Jordan in N. Palestine. It included the towns of *Damascus, Gerasa, and Gadara, and contained a Greek-speaking population. Cf. Mt. 4. 25, Mk. 5. 20 and 7. 31.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25, 1931), ch. xxix, pp. 621–38; F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 145 f. C. H. Kraeling (ed.), Gerasa, City of the Decapolis (New Haven, 1938) [account of excavations, 1928–34]. J. van Kasteren, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., ii (1899), cols. 1333–6, s.v. 'Décapole'.

DE CAUSSADE, JEAN PIERRE. See Caussade, Jean Pierre de.

DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER'S MARRIAGE ACT (1907). The provisions of this Act (7 Edw. VII, c. 47), though enjoying full civil sanction, were in conflict with the ecclesiastical law of the C of E, which, until the *canons were amended by *Convocation in 1946, disallowed the marriage of a widower with his wife's sister or a widow with her husband's brother. A corresponding Deceased Brother's Widow's Act (11 & 12 Geo. V, c. 24) was passed in 1921. Both classes of marriage were prohibited in M. *Parker's 'Table of *Kindred and Affinity', but they do not figure in the Table embodied in the 1969 Canons. An incumbent in the C of E who has scruples is not compelled to solemnize such a marriage, but he is not entitled to repel from the altar those who are married under the provisions of the Acts as 'open and notorious evil livers'. See also Affinity.

DECIUS (d. 251), Roman Emperor from 249. C. Messius Quintus Decius was appointed by the Emp. Philip the Arabian in 248 to take command on the Danube against the Goths. By temporarily checking their invasion, he won the confidence of the troops, who proclaimed him Emperor in 249. After Philip's defeat and death near *Verona, Decius was accepted by the Senate. In the next year he undertook the first systematic persecution of the Christians, beginning with the execution of *Fabian, Bp. of *Rome, in Jan. 250. In June all citizens were required to furnish proof of having offered sacrifice to the Emperor; and, though many gave way or escaped through bribery, thousands were put to death. The defections raised in an acute form the question whether penance was possible for the *lapsed (q.v.) and led to the conflict between St. *Cyprian and the *Novatianists over their treatment. The persecution, which was probably initiated to combat the allegedly fissiparous influence of Christianity, was ended by the death of Decius in June 251, when he was trapped and killed by the Goths near Abrittus in the Dobrudja. See also Libellatici.

See St. Cyprian's works passim, and *Eusebius, H.E., iv–vii. W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965), pp. 404–13, with reff. See also works cited s.v. Libellatici.

DECLARATION AGAINST TRANSUBSTANTIATION. The Declaration imposed by the *Test Act of 1673 on all persons holding civil or military office. It ran as follows: 'I, A. B., do declare that I do believe that there is not any transubstantiation in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, or in the elements of bread and wine, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever.'

DECLARATION OF ASSENT. See Assent, Declaration of.

DECLARATIONS OF INDULGENCE, The. These were statements of government policy issued on the authority of the royal prerogative, and were the means chosen by *Charles II and *James II to give a lead to public opinion in the matter of religious *toleration. On 25 Oct. 1660 Charles II published his 'Declaration Concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs' (known as the Worcester House Declaration), in which he announced his intention of calling a conference to implement the Declaration of *Breda giving a 'liberty to tender consciences', and granting indulgence in certain matters, mainly ceremonial (the Cross in Baptism, bowing at the Holy Name, use of surplices), at least until after the projected (*Savoy) Conference (1661).

There were four Declarations of Indulgence, properly so called: (1) On 26 Dec. 1662 Charles II issued a Declaration, proclaiming his continued intention of honouring his promises at Breda and of placing before Parliament a bill allowing him to exercise more freely the power of suspending the penal laws against dissenters from the C of E. But in Feb. 1663 the Commons petitioned for the stern enforcement of the Act of *Uniformity and the bill for toleration was defeated in the Lords.

(2) On 15 Mar. 1672 Charles II issued a further Declaration, suspending the execution of the penal laws in matters ecclesiastical against all nonconformists and recusants. This was a more serious attempt at toleration, and from it may be dated the existence of organized *nonconformity. Licences were issued to dissenting ministers and meeting-places. Anglican opposition was led by G. *Sheldon, and in 1673 Parliament resolved that 'penal statutes in matters ecclesiastical cannot be suspended but by Act of Parliament.' The Declaration and the licences were withdrawn.

(3) On 4 Apr. 1687 James II issued a Declaration allowing full liberty of worship. It suspended the operation of the penal laws, allowed peaceable meetings of nonconformists provided that the Justices of the Peace were notified, ordained that the *Oaths of Supremacy should not be required of those employed in the royal service and remitted all penalties pending for ecclesiastical offences. This endangered the Anglican monopoly in Church and State.

(4) On 27 Apr. 1688 James II issued a further Declaration of Indulgence, which was followed on 4 May by an Order in Council requiring that it be read in all Anglican churches on two successive Sundays (20 and 27 May in London, 3 and 10 June elsewhere). It provoked fierce Anglican opposition which led to the arrest and trial of the *Seven Bishops. The Order in Council was almost universally disobeyed.

The text of the Worcester House Declaration is printed in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England, ii (Oxford, 1839), pp. 234–50; that of the 1662 Declaration, ib., pp. 260–69; of 1672, pp. 282–6, and those of 1687 and 1688, pp. 308–15. The Worcester House Declaration is also pr. in A. Browning, English Historical Documents 1660–1714 (1953), pp. 365–70; the Declaration of 1662, ib., pp. 371–74; that of 1672, ib., pp. 387 f.; of 1687, pp. 395–7; of 1688, p. 399 f.; and the Order in Council of 1688, ib., p. 83. The 1688 Declaration is also pr. in Gee–Hardy, No. cxxi, pp. 641–4, and in Bettenson, pp. 407–10; ed. 2 (1963), pp. 420–3. F. Bate, The Declaration of Indulgence 1672 (1908). R. E. Boyer, English Declarations of Indulgence 1687 and 1688 (The Hague–Paris, 1968).

DECLARATION OF THE FRENCH CLERGY. See Gallican Articles.

DECLARATION OF THE SOVEREIGN. Also known as the 'Royal Declaration'. The Declaration repudiating the RC faith which was imposed on William III and Mary by Parliament (1 W. & M., Sess. 2, c. 2) when they came to the throne. It has been taken by all subsequent sovereigns. In its original form it was based on the *Declaration against Transubstantiation contained in the *Test Act of 1673, but included also a repudiation of the Roman doctrines of the *Invocation of Saints and of the *Sacrifice of the Mass, and a 'long rigmarole' wherein the sovereign affirmed that he was not being dispensed by the Pope from taking the Oath in its plain meaning. The Oath survived the repeal of the Test Act in 1829; but to remove offence it was altered in 1910 to 'I, N., do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God profess, testify, and declare that I am a faithful Protestant, and that I will, according to the true intent of the enactments to secure the Protestant Succession to the throne of my realm, uphold and maintain such enactments to the best of my powers according to law'.

DECLARATORY ACTS. In the [Presyterian] Church of *Scotland, two Acts relieving ministers from their obligation to subscribe to every item of the subordinate standards of faith, esp. the *Westminster Confession. (1) The Declaratory Act of 1879, passed in its synod in the *United Presbyterian Church, dealt with certain of the harsher *Calvinist doctrines, and affirmed inter alia that the damnation of infants and heathen is not necessarily involved in election and that total depravity and fore-ordination to death must allow for human responsibility. It also upheld liberty of opinion on such matters as the six days in the Genesis account of creation, disapproved of anything in the standards supposed to over-exalt the civil magistrate and to teach intolerance, and asserted the Church's obligation to maintain *voluntaryism. (2) The Declaratory Act of the *Free Church of Scotland of 1892 followed similar lines, but refrained from reference to voluntaryism and any implied attack on a State Church as such. This latter Act was rejected by a small conservative body, chiefly Highland, which formed themselves into the 'Free Presbyterian Church'.

Texts in J. R. Fleming, A History of the Church in Scotland, 1875–1929 (1933), pp. 306–8; cf. also p. 22 f.

DECOLLATION OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST, The. The feast celebrated on 29 Aug. in commemoration of the martyrdom of St. *John the Baptist at the hands of Herod Antipas, as related in Mt. 14. 3–12 and Mk. 6. 14–30. It is already mentioned in the Martyrologium Hieronymianum and the *Gelasian Sacramentary. It has been observed in England at least since 668. In the 1969 Roman Calendar it is called 'the Passion of St. John the Baptist'.

*Augustine, Sermones, cccvii and cccviii (ed. Ben.). Reff. in the Martyrology of *Ado and elsewhere indicate that the Feast orig. commemorated the translation of the head of St. John Baptist from a monastery near Emesa known as the Spelaion to the church in the city. Cf. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2167–84, esp. 2170 f.

DE CONDREN, CHARLES. See Condren, Charles de.

DECRETALS. Papal letters, strictly those in response to a question. They have the force of law within the Pope's jurisdiction. The first decretal was that sent in 385 by Pope *Siricius to Himerius, Bp. of Tarragona. The earliest influential collection was that made by *Dionysius Exiguus (c. 520). About 850 appeared the '*False Decretals' (q.v.), containing many forged letters of popes before Siricius. After *Gratian had systematized existing *canon law in his 'Decretum' (c. 1140), authoritative collections of later decretals were published by *Gregory IX (1234), *Boniface VIII (1298), and *Clement V (1317).

H. Grisar, S.J., 'Über Sammlungen ältester Papstbriefe und deren theologische Verwerthung' in Z.K.T., xii (1888), pp. 487–532; K. Silva-Tarouca, S.J., 'Beiträge zur Überlieferungsgeschichte der Papstbriefe des iv., v., und vi. Jahrhunderts', ib., xliii (1919), pp. 467–81 and 657–92. A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, Vol. I, tom. i (Mechlin–Rome, 1928; ed. 2, 1945). C. Duggan, Twelfth-Century Decretal Collections and their Importance in English History (1963). G. Le Bras–C. Lefebvre–J. Rambaud in G. Le Bras, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, vii: L'Age classique 1140–1378. Sources et théorie du droit (1965). A. Van Hove in C.E., iv (1908), pp. 670–3, s.v.; C. Duggan in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 707–9, s.v. See also bibl. to Dionysius Exiguus and False Decretals.

DECRETALS, False. See False Decretals.

DECRETUM GELASIANUM. An early Latin document, handed down most frequently under the name of Pope *Gelasius (492–96), but in some MSS. as the work of *Damasus (366–84) or *Hormisdas (514–23), containing inter alia a Latin list of the Books of the Bible. Acc. to E. von Dobschütz, it is not a Papal work at all, but a private compilation which was composed in Italy (but not at *Rome) in the early 6th cent. The document is in five parts, dealing with: (1) Christ and the Holy Ghost; (2) the Canonical Scriptures; (3) the Roman Church and its dependent sees; (4) the Orthodox Councils and Fathers; (5) the 'Books to be Received' (works of the Fathers) and the *Apocryphal writings (Biblical and Patristic). The last item (De libris recipiendis et non recipiendis) gives the usual title to the whole work.

Text in part in J. P. Migne, PL, lix, 157–64. Crit. ed. by E. von Dobschütz in T.U., xxxviii, Hft. 4 (1912). J. *Chapman, O.S.B., 'On the Decretum Gelasianum De Libris recipiendis et non recipiendis' in R. Bén., xxx (1913), pp. 187–207 and 315–33. E. *Schwartz, 'Zum Decretum Gelasianum' in Z.N.T.W., xxix (1930), pp. 161–8. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 626 f. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 722–47, s.v. 'Gélasien (Décret)', with extensive bibl.; G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iii (1938), cols. 579–90, s.v. 'Gélase (Décret de)'.

DEDICATION, The Jewish Feast of the. The feast instituted by *Judas Maccabaeus in 165 B.C., to commemorate the purification of the Temple and its altar after their defilement by *Antiochus Epiphanes (1 Macc. 4. 59; 2 Macc. 10. 6). It was ordered to be observed on the 25th day of Chislev each year and kept for 8 days. A special feature of the feast, apart from the fact that it could be celebrated outside Jerusalem, was the lighting of lamps; hence it was sometimes called the 'Feast of the Lights'. Modern Jews observe the feast as 'Hanukkah'. The only reference to it in the NT is at Jn. 10. 22.

O. S. Rankin, Origins of the Festival of Hanukkah (1930); review by L. Finkelstein in The Jewish Quarterly Review, N.S., xxii (1931), pp. 159–73. S. Zeitlin, 'Hanukkah, its Origin and Significance' in J.Q.R., N.S., xxix (1938), pp. 1–36; J. Morgenstern, 'The Chanukkah Festival and the Calendar of Ancient Israel' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xx (1947), pp. 1–136, and xxi (1948), pp. 365–496. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 420–25, with bibl. p. 460; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 510–14, with bibl. p. 552.

DEDICATION OF CHURCHES. The earliest recorded instance of the dedication of a Christian church is that of the cathedral at Tyre in 314, described in the 'oratio panegyrica' of *Eusebius (H.E., X. 3 f.). There is a 7th cent. formulary in the *Gelasian Sacramentary consisting of prayers, blessings, and sprinklings with holy water. In the following cents. the ceremonies increased in number, and by the 13th cent. the ritual had reached in essentials the form used until modern times, as is witnessed by the '*Pontifical' of *Durandus. It contains already the six principal parts—the blessing outside, the blessing in the middle of the church, the preparation for the consecration of the altar, the actual consecration of the altar, the procession of the relics, and the blessing of the altar vessels, ornaments, etc.—followed finally by the Mass. The 1977 Ordo Dedicationis Ecclesiae et Altaris includes the hallowing of walls and altar with holy water and anointing them with *chrism, all within the Mass.

Acc. to modern W. practice, a church may be dedicated either by solemn consecration or by simple blessing. The former may normally be performed only by the bishop and is confined to churches designed for permanent ecclesiastical use; the latter, which is intended for temporary churches may be performed also by a priest. The distinction had its beginnings in the 4th–6th cents., when only churches containing relics were solemnly consecrated, as may be seen from a letter of Pope *Vigilius (c. 538; J. P. Migne, PL, lxix, 18) in which he stated that the celebration of Masses was in itself sufficient blessing for a church without relics. Later, however, solemn consecration was more widely used, irrespective of the presence of relics. The 1977 rite of blessing consists of prayers, sprinkling with holy water, and blessing of the altar, all within the Mass. Desecrated churches must be reconciled by a special rite.

The Feast of the Dedication is the annual celebration of the day of the dedication of the church, and is to be kept, strictly speaking, only by consecrated churches. It is to be distinguished, of course, from the Patronal Feast. The first recorded observance of such a feast is that of the Dedication of the Church of the *Anastasis (see Holy Sepulchre) in *Jerusalem, described by *Etheria. In 1536 the English Convocations ordered that the Feast of Dedication 'throughout this realm' should be kept on the first Sunday in October, and this practice is commonly followed in England where the date of consecration is not known, though no such feast is contained in the calendar of the BCP. The Revised Book of 1928, however, proposed the first Sunday in October, 'if the day of consecration be not known'. In the RC Church the dedication festival of the *Lateran is kept throughout the Church on 9 Nov.; the observance of those of the other three principal Roman *basilicas, those of Sts. Peter and Paul (S. Pietro in Vaticano and S. Paolo fuori le mura; 18 Nov.) and *Santa Maria Maggiore (5 Aug.), is optional.

E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, iii (1702), pp. 232–327, Lib. II, cap. xiii. R. W. Muncey, A History of the Consecration of Churches and Churchyards (1930). D. Stiefenhofer, Die Geschichte der Kirchweihe vom 1.–7. Jahrhundert (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, III. Reihe, No. 8; 1909). J. Baudot, O.S.B., La Dédicace des églises (1909). R. Dubosq, P.S.S., La Dédicace des églises ou présentation analytique des rites de leur consécration (1948). S. Benz, O.S.B., 'Zur Geschichte der römischen Kirchenweihe nach den Texten des 6. bis 7. Jahrhunderts' in H. Emonds, O.S.B. (ed.), Enkainia. Gesammelte Arbeiten zum 800jährigen Weihengedächtnis der Abteikirche Maria Laach (Düsseldorf, 1956), pp. 62–109. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du Haut Moyen Age, iv (S.S.L., xxviii; 1956), pp. 359–84 ('La Dédicace des églises à Rome et la déposition des reliques'). W. H. *Frere, Pontifical Services Illustrated from Miniatures of the XVth and XVIth Centuries (*Alcuin Club Collections, iii and iv; 1901), 'Pontifical Services not included in the Book of Common Prayer. I. The Consecration of Churches', vol. i, pp. 1–54, and vol. ii, Pll. vii and xi, Figg. 33 and 34. J. Wickham Legg (ed.), English Orders for Consecrating Churches in the Seventeenth Century, together with Forms for the Consecration of Churchyards, the First Stone of a Church, the Reconciliation of a Church and the Consecration of Altar Plate (H.B.S., xli; 1911). J. *Wordsworth, On the Rite of Consecration of Churches, especially in the Church of England . . . together with the Form of Prayer and Order of Ceremonies in use in the Diocese of Salisbury (C.H.S. Tract lii; 1899). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), pp. 589–91, and ii (1933), pp. 447–74; A. G. Martimort, L'Église en prière (ed. 3, 1965), pp. 185–9, with further reff. P. de Puniet in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 374–404, s.v. 'Dédicace des églises', with reff. J. E. Swallow in P.B.D. (1912), pp. 241–4, s.v. 'Consecration of Churches and Churchyards'. Frances Arnold-Forster, Studies in Church Dedications or England's Patron Saints (3 vols., 1899); F. Bond, Dedications and Patron Saints of English Churches (1914); K. E. *Kirk, Church Dedications of the Oxford Diocese (Oxford, 1946).

DE DOMINIS, MARCO ANTONIO (1566–1624), 'Spalatrensis', Abp. of Spalato. He entered the *Jesuit Order as a youth, became famous as a professor of mathematics at Padua and of rhetoric and logic at Brescia, left the Order in 1596, and was Abp. of Spalato and Primate of Dalmatia from 1602 to 1616. Political conflicts between Rome and *Venice, to whose territory his see belonged, and personal difficulties with his clergy led him to resign his office and go to England. On his way there he wrote a bitter pamphlet against Rome, Scogli del cristiano naufragio. He was warmly welcomed by *James I, received as a member of the C of E, and made Dean of *Windsor and Master of the Savoy in 1617. In the same year he assisted at the consecration of G. Montaigne (d. 1628) as Bp. of *Lincoln and published the first part of his main work De Republica Ecclesiastica, an attack on the monarchical government of Rome and a defence of national Churches. In 1619 he edited without authority Fr. Paul *Sarpi's (Italian) history of the Council of Trent, which he dedicated to James I. But his pride and avarice soon lost him his English friends, and fearing for his security when negotiations began for the Spanish marriage of Prince *Charles, he sought reconciliation with Rome. He left England in 1622, and now attacked the C of E as violently as formerly the Church of Rome, in Sui Reditus ex Anglia Consilium (1623; Anglican reply by R. *Crakanthorpe, 1625). After the death of Gregory XV, however, he came into conflict with the *Inquisition and was confined to the castle of Sant'Angelo at Rome as a relapsed heretic, where he died soon after.

H. Newland, The Life and Contemporaneous Church History of Antonio de Dominis (1859). A. Bacotich, 'Marc'Antonio de Dominis. Appunti biografici' in Archivio Storico per la Dalmazia, iv (1927), pp. 65–77. D. Cantimori, 'Su M. A. De Dominis' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, xlix (1958), pp. 245–58. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xv (1888), pp. 201–3, s.v. 'Dominis, M. A. de'; J. de la Servière, S.J., in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1668–75, s.v. 'Dominis (Marc-Antoine de)'.

DEDUCTION. In Logic, the process of reasoning whereby a conclusion is reached from an already known or accepted premiss. The opposite process is termed '*Induction'.

DEER, Book of. A 9th–10th cent. MS. which formerly belonged to the monastery of Deer in Buchan (Aberdeen). It contains a corrupt text of St. John's Gospel, with portions of the other Gospels, the *Apostles' Creed, a fragment of a service for the *Visitation of the Sick (with Gaelic rubrics), and a series of grants to the monastery, the last being in a later hand. The Visitation of the Sick agrees in character with the Irish Books of Dimma and Mulling, while the grants throw important light on the social structure of *Scotland at the time. The MS., which was formerly in the library of John Moore, successively Bp. of *Norwich and *Ely (d. 1714), is now in Cambridge University Library (I. i. b. 32).

Ed. by J. Stuart for the Spalding Club (Edinburgh, 1869).

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH (Lat. Fidei Defensor). A title conferred at his own request on *Henry VIII in 1521 by Pope *Leo X in recognition of his treatise Assertio Septem Sacramentorum, in which, with the assistance of J. *Fisher, he had defended the doctrine of the *seven sacraments against M. *Luther. In 1544 Parliament recognized the style as an official title of the English monarch and it has been borne since that date by all British sovereigns. It may be compared with the titles 'Christianissimus' and 'Catholicus' formerly taken by the kings of France and Spain respectively.

Text of bull conferring title in T. Rymer, Foedera, xiii (1712), pp. 756–8, with facsimile. J. M. Brown, 'Henry VIII's Book, "Assertio Septem Sacramentorum," and the Royal Title of "Defender of the Faith" ' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, viii (1880), pp. 242–61. See also studies of Henry VIII, cited s.v.

DEFENDER OF THE MATRIMONIAL TIE (Lat. Defensor Vinculi Matrimonialis). A person whose duty is to uphold the marriage tie when cases in which the validity or nullity of particular marriages is in dispute are heard in the RC ecclesiastical courts. The office was constituted by Pope *Benedict XIV in his *bull 'Dei Miseratione' (3 Nov. 1741). The chief raison d'être of such an official is to prevent annulments by collusion between the parties concerned.

R. Naz in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1069–71, s.v. 'Défenseur du lien'; T. J. McNicholas in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 717, s.v. 'Defender of the Bond', with further bibl.

DEFENESTRATION OF PRAGUE. The incident which precipitated the *Thirty Years War. On 23 May 1618 the Bohemian Protestant insurgents broke up a meeting of the Imperial Commissioners in the Hradschin Palace at Prague by throwing two of the Catholic councillors, Wilhelm von Slawata and Jaroslav von Martinitz, and their secretary out of the window.

Cecily V. Wedgwood, The Thirty Years War (1938), pp. 78–80, with refs. to sources. See also other works cited s.v. Thirty Years War.

DEFENSOR (late 7th cent.), monk of Ligugé, near Poitiers. He was the compiler of the 'Liber Scintillarum', an ascetical compilation which had a very wide circulation throughout the Middle Ages, often in a modified form, and attributed to *Bede and others. The compiler drew on the Bible and on a considerable range of *patristic writers. He marked the extracts with the names of their authors, but sometimes derived them from indirect sources.

The 'Liber Scintillarum' is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxviii, cols. 598–718; crit. ed. by H. M. Rochais, O.S.B. (C.C., Series Latina, cxvii, 1957, pp. 1–308). Id. in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 88–90, s.v., with bibl.

DE FIDE. In Catholic theology, a proposition is said to be de fide (or de fide catholica) if it has been expressly declared and defined by the Church to be true and that to contradict it would be heretical. The expression is used, e.g., by *Suarez and John de *Lugo, and constantly by modern Catholic apologists.

DE FOUCAULD, CHARLES EUGÈNE (1858–1916), French explorer and 'Hermit of the Sahara'. After an easy and dissipated life as a lieutenant of cavalry, he became seized with a passion for Africa and in 1883–4 undertook a dangerous expedition through Morocco, the results of which he published in the fundamental work, Reconnaissance au Maroc (1888). A period of spiritual unrest followed this expedition, but he was brought back to the Catholic Faith under the experienced direction of the Abbé Huvelin (1887). In 1888–9 he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and in 1890 entered the *Trappist monastery of Notre-Dame-des-Neiges. Desirous of a life of even greater solitude and austerity, he left the order in 1897, lived as a servant of the *Poor Clares at *Nazareth and *Jerusalem until 1900, and returned to France to be ordained priest in 1901. A few months later he went to Algeria, where he led a hermit's life, first in the oasis of Beni Abbès and, from 1905, in the still more remote Hoggar Mountains and at the oasis of Tamanrasset. Here, besides studying the language of the Tuaregs and composing dictionaries and translations, he made his chief occupation prayer, penance, and works of charity which won him the admiration and love of the French soldiers as well as of the Mohammedan desert tribes, though he did not obtain conversions. In 1916 he was assassinated for reasons which remain obscure, but probably in connexion with the Holy War of the Senoussi. The cause of his beatification was introduced at Rome in 1927.

Although he composed rules for communities of 'Little Brothers' and 'Little Sisters', no companions joined him during his lifetime. In 1933, however, René Voillaume and four other priests, inspired by his writings, settled at El Abiodh Sidi Cheikh, on the edge of the Sahara, and adopted a monastic way of life based on his first rule. They were scattered during the Second World War, but returned in 1945 and with other recruits established themselves in small scattered fraternities which are now to be found in most parts of the world. While maintaining a deeply contemplative element in their lives, these 'Little Brothers of Jesus' seek to conform to the economic and social milieu in which they live; they mostly earn their living, wearing ordinary clothes, and working in factories, farms, fisheries, etc., exercising their influence by sharing the life of those around them. With similar aims, the Little Sisters of the Sacred Heart were founded near Montpellier in 1933, the Little Sisters of Jesus at Touggourt in the Sahara in 1939, to be followed by the Little Brothers and Little Sisters of the Gospel in 1958 and 1965 respectively. In addition, there are associations of priests and lay people inspired by the life of de Foucauld.

Les Écrits spirituels de Charles de Foucauld, ed. by R. Bazin 1923; Eng. tr., 'Meditations of a Hermit', 1930). R. Bazin, Charles de Foucauld, explorateur du Maroc, ermite au Sahara (1921; Eng. tr., 1923). D. Hall, The Priest of the Legion (1947); T. Lloyd, Desert Call. The Story of Charles de Foucauld, Explorer of Morocco and Hermit of Sahara (1948); A. Fremantle, Desert Calling (New York, 1949); R. V. C. Bodley, The Warrior Saint (1954); M. Carrouges, Charles de Foucauld, explorateur mystique (1954; Eng. tr., 1956); id., Foucauld devant l'Afrique du Nord (1961); J. F. Six, Itinéraire spirituel de Charles de Foucauld (1958); Marion M. Preminger, The Sands of Tamanrasset (New York, 1961; London, 1963); R. Quesnel, Charles de Foucauld. Les étapes d'une recherche (1966); Elizabeth Hamilton, The Desert my Dwelling. A Study of Charles de Foucauld (1968). R. Aubert in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 1394–1402, s.v. 'Foucauld, Charles-Eugène de'.

On the Little Brothers, see R. Voillaume, Au cœur des masses: la vie religieuse des Petits Frères du Père de Foucauld (1952; Eng. adaptation as Seeds of the Desert, 1955).

DE GROOT, HUGO. See Grotius, Hugo.

DE HAERETICO COMBURENDO. The Act of 1401 (2 Hen. IV, c. 15) which was the first step taken by Parliament to suppress *Lollardy. By it persons holding heretical views were to be arrested and tried by canon law. If the diocesan pronounced sentence of heresy, they were to be handed over to the secular courts, who would 'cause [them] to be burnt that such punishment may strike fear to the minds of others'. Its provisions were not altogether new. Under earlier legislation the state could be compelled by the Church to carry out the penalty of burning prescribed by canon law, and the execution of the Lollard, William Sawtre, was hurried through before the passing of this act to maintain the principle. The act was repealed by *Henry VIII, revived by *Mary and finally repealed by *Elizabeth I.

Eng. tr. of text in Gee–Hardy, No. xlii, pp. 133–7; repr. in Bettenson, pp. 251–5. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity [1953], pp. 149–56.

DE HAURANNE, DUVERGIER. See Saint-Cyran, Abbé de.

DEIFICATION. See Apotheosis.

DEINIOL, St. (d. c. 584), Welsh saint. He was probably the founder of the monastery of *Bangor Iscoed and is alleged to have been consecrated first Bp. of Bangor by St. *Dubricius in 516; but very little is really known of him. Among the Welsh churches dedicated to him is that at Hawarden in Clwyd. St. Deiniol's Library, Hawarden, a residential library for students in the arts, was founded by W. E. *Gladstone in 1896, and of the 100,000 books, some 30,000 are from Gladstone's own collection. Feast day, 11 Sept.

Brief note with reff., by C. Hole in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 802, s.v.; T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xiv (1888), p. 18 f., s.v. 'Daniel'.

DEIR BALYZEH FRAGMENTS. See Der Balyzeh Fragments.

DEISM (from Lat. Deus, 'God'). The term, orig. interchangeable with *Theism (q.v.), i.e. belief in one Supreme Being as opposed to *Atheism and *Polytheism, is now generally restricted to the system of natural religion which was first developed in England in the late 17th and 18th cents. Among its precursors are P. *Charron, J. Bodin (c. 1530–1596), and esp. Lord *Herbert of Cherbury (q.v.), who in his De Veritate (1624) set out five truths common to all religions. J. *Locke, though himself objecting to the title of 'Deist', also profoundly influenced subsequent developments through his Reasonableness of Christianity (1695). The classic exposition of Deism is J. *Toland's Christianity not Mysterious (1696), which argues against revelation and the supernatural altogether. S. *Clarke, in his Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God (1704–6), distinguished four classes of Deists. For the first, God is only the Creator, with no further interest in the world; the second group admit a Divine Providence, but only in the material, not in the moral and spiritual, order; the third believe in certain moral attributes of God, but not in a future life; and the fourth accept all the truths of natural religion, including belief in a life to come, but reject revelation. A. *Collins's Discourse on Freethinking (1713) argued that freedom of thought was sufficient for the discovery of truth, while the authority of the Biblical records was doubtful. M. *Tindal in Christianity as Old as Creation (1730) maintained that the religion of nature is the common element of all creeds. As it developed, the negative elements in Deism received greater emphasis. Belief in Divine Providence, as well as in rewards and punishments, was gradually abandoned. The chief mark of later Deism was belief in a Creator God whose further Divine intervention in His creation was rejected as derogatory to His omnipotence and unchangeableness.

Deism, which was never widely accepted in this country, had a great influence in *France, where *Voltaire, J.-J. *Rousseau, and the *Encyclopaedists were its chief exponents. In Germany the movement became widespread during the reign of Frederick II of Prussia; Tindal's work, which was translated by J. L. Schmidt in 1741, was drawn upon by H. S. *Reimarus, whose fragments were published by G. E. *Lessing (1773–8); I. *Kant's Die Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft (1793) states the Deist position from the point of view of transcendental *Idealism.

Deism, which by its separation of the Creator from His creatures undermined all personal religion, soon found vigorous critics. Among its most influential refutations was Bp. J. *Butler's

Analogy of Religion* (1736), which argued that the difficulties in the way of accepting Revealed Religion are no more formidable than those confronting the advocate of the Natural Religion proposed by Deism.

J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers (2 vols., 1754–6); G. V. Lechler, Geschichte des englischen Deismus (2 vols., 1841); A. S. Farrar, A Critical History of Free Thought (*Bampton Lectures, 1862); L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, i (1876), chs. ii–iv, pp. 74–277, with bibl., p. 276 f. H. M. Morais, Deism in Eighteenth Century America (New York, 1934). A. Richardson, History Sacred and Profane (Bampton Lectures, 1962; 1964), pp. 273–6 ('The Deistic Controversy').

DEISSMANN, ADOLF (1866–1937), Protestant theologian. In 1897 he became professor of the NT at Heidelberg, and in 1908 at Berlin. He did distinguished pioneer work in Biblical philology, making full use of the material from the recently discovered *papyri. His many writings include two series of Bibelstudien (1895, 1897; Eng. trans. as Bible Studies, 1901), Licht vom Osten (1908; Eng. trans. as Light from the Ancient East, 1910), and The Religion of Jesus and the Faith of Paul (1923). In 1930 he edited (in conjunction with G. K. A. *Bell) Mysterium Christi, a collection of papers on Christology by British and German theologians. He also took a prominent part in the *Ecumenical Movement.

To mark his 60th birthday, there appeared a Festgabe für Adolf Deissmann (Tübingen, 1927), with a portrait.

DE LA BIGNE, MARGUERIN (c. 1546–89), French Patristic scholar. His chief work was Sacra Bibliotheca Sanctorum Patrum (8 vols. 1575; index vol., 1579), in which a vast number of Patristic works were published, some of them for the first time.

J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxi, 209–12 ('Epistola Dedicatoria').

DE LAGARDE, PAUL ANTON. See Lagarde, Paul Anton de.

DE LA TAILLE, MAURICE (1872–1933), French theologian. A native of Semblançay, he was educated at St. Mary's College, Canterbury, where he entered the *Jesuit Order in 1890. From 1905 to 1916 he taught theology at the Catholic university of Angers, and from 1916 to 1918 was military chaplain to the Canadian army. From 1919 onwards he taught dogmatic theology at the *Gregorian university at Rome. His principal work, Mysterium Fidei (1921), is an original and comprehensive study of the Mass. Divided into three books, dealing with the Sacrifice once offered by Christ Himself, with the Mass as the Sacrifice of the Church, and with the Eucharist as a Sacrament, its dominating thought is the unity of the Redeemer's sacrifice begun in the oblation of the Last Supper, consummated in the Passion, and continued in the Mass. Acc. to de la Taille there is only one real immolation, that on Calvary, to which the Supper looks forward and on which the Mass looks back. He uses a wealth of material, chiefly patristic and scholastic, to support his thesis, and to defend his doctrine against theologians who hold that there must be a real immolation in the Mass. In several minor writings occasioned by this controversy, among them The Last Supper and Calvary (1924) and The Mystery of Faith and Human Opinion (1930), the author defended himself against his critics.

J. Lebreton, S.J., 'Le Père Maurice de la Taille' in Rech. S.R., xxiv (1934), pp. 5–11; B. Leeming, S.J., 'A Master Theologian: Father Maurice de la Taille' in Month, clxiii (1934), pp. 31–40. M. Lepin, L'Idée du sacrifice de la messe d'après les théologiens depuis l'origine jusqu'à nos jours (1926), pp. 659–720. M. J. O'Connell, S.J., in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 726 f., s.v.

DELEGATES, Court of. In England the court erected in 1534 by 25 Hen. VIII, c. 19, to hear and pronounce final sentence upon appeals from the archbishops' courts, which had hitherto gone to Rome. A commission consisting usually of three puisne judges and three or four civilians was appointed for each separate case. The court was abolished in 1832 and in 1833 its place taken by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

H. C. Rothery (ed.), 'Introduction with Appendix to the Return of all Appeals in Causes of Doctrine and Discipline made to the High Court of Delegates' as Hist. App. IX to the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Constitution and Working of the Ecclesiastical Courts [Cd. 3760], pp. 253–66 of the MS. pagination. The best historical account of the court is that drawn up by W. *Stubbs for the Hist. App. I, ib., pp. 46–9 (pr. among the Parliamentary Papers, 1883, xxiv, pp. 120–3 of the MS. pagination). Further information in the Report, pp. xl–xliv (pp. 40–4 of the MS. pagination in the same vol. of the Parliamentary Papers).

DELEHAYE, HIPPOLYTE (1859–1941), *Bollandist. A native of Antwerp, he entered the *Jesuit Order in 1879. After studying philosophy at Louvain (1879–82), teaching mathematics for a time at the Collège St.-Barbe at Ghent (1882–6), and studying theology at Innsbruck (1886–7), he settled in Brussels in 1887. He was ordained priest in 1890. In 1891 he joined the Bollandists and for the rest of his life was actively engaged in hagiographical studies. In 1912 he became President of the Bollandists.

Delehaye contributed regularly to the Acta Sanctorum* [AA.SS.] from 1894 until his death. For AA.SS. Nov. II (1) (1894) he wrote the life of St. *Wolfgang (pp. 527–97); he was also joint editor and among the principal contributors to the Propylaeum ad AA.SS. Novembris (1902), of the AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), Nov. IV (1928), and Nov. II (2) (1931), and of the Propylaeum ad AA.SS. Decembris (1940); and for Nov. II (2) he prepared (with H. *Quentin) the important text and study of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. Under the influence of C. Smedt he undertook the cataloguing of scattered hagiographical MSS. (Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca, 1895). He also assisted in the preparations of the catalogues of the hagiographical MSS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (1896) and the Vatican (1899), and of the Catalogus Codicum Hagiographicorum Germaniae Belgii Angliae (1913). His books, all based on wide erudition but many of them directed to a non-specialized public, include Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905; Eng. trans., 1907), Les Légendes grecques des saints militaires (1909), Les Origines du culte des martyrs (1912), Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921; posthumous revised ed., 1966), Deux Typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (1921), Saint Jean Berchmans (1921; Eng. trans., 1921), Les Saints Stylites (1923), Sanctus (1927), and Étude sur le Légendier Romain (1936). He was also a constant contributor to the Analecta Bollandiana.

Collection of his articles originally published outside Bollandist sources to mark the 25th anniversary of his death under the title Mélanges d'Hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, xlii; 1966). 'Le R.P. Hippolyte Delehaye' in Anal. Boll., lx (1942), pp. i–lii, incl. list of works (239 items) and reff. to other notices; repr., with additions, in P. Peeters, S.J., L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (ed. 2; Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, liv, fasc. 5; 1961), pp. 103–49. Eng. tr. of memoir by Peeters in D. Attwater's tr. of Delehaye's Legends of the Saints (1962), pp. 187–244.

DE LISLE, AMBROSE LISLE MARCH PHILLIPPS (1809–78), English RC writer. Born of Anglican parents, he was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1824. In 1835 he gave 230 acres of Charnwood Forest to the *Trappist Order for the building of the monastery of Mount St. Bernard and in 1838 founded the 'Association of Universal Prayer for the Conversion of England'. Over much of his life he was active in furthering reunion between the C of E and Rome, and was on friendly terms with the leaders of the *Oxford Movement. In 1857 he joined in founding the 'Association for Promoting the Unity of Christendom' (*A.P.U.C.), which included Anglicans and Orthodox as well as RCs, withdrawing, however, when it was condemned by Rome in 1864. In 1862 he assumed the name of De Lisle (signing prior to that date Ambrose Lisle Phillipps).

E. S. Purcell, Life and Letters of Ambrose Phillipps de Lisle (2 vols., 1900). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xiv (1888), p. 321 f.

DELITZSCH, FRANZ JULIUS (1813–90), OT scholar and orientalist. A native of Leipzig, where he taught for some years, he later held professorships at Rostock (1846–50), Erlangen (1850–67), and Leipzig (1867–90). Of a pietistic *Lutheran background and Jewish descent, he esp. sought to combat anti-Semitism and foster the conversion of the Jews, editing a periodical Saat auf Hoffnung from 1863, founding a Jewish missionary college, establishing at Leipzig an 'Institutum Judaicum' (1886; later 'Institutum Delitzschianum') and translating the NT into Hebrew (publd. 1877). He published a long series of Commentaries on the OT, conservative and practical in tendency, but displaying increasing understanding of the critical view of the OT. In 1857 he issued a commentary on Heb. (Eng. trans., 2 vols., 1868–70). He also wrote extensively on Rabbinic subjects, edited in conjunction with S. Baer the Heb. text of the OT (except Ex.–Deut.; 1861–97), and published some devotional works. As a final apology he issued Der tiefe Graben zwischen alter und moderner Theologie. Ein Bekenntnis (1888).

D. W. Volck (ed.), Theologische Briefe der Professoren Delitzsch und von Hofmann (1891). O. Eissfeldt (ed.), Franz Delitzsch und Wolf Graf Baudissin. Dokumente über die Anfänge ihrer Freundschaft aus dem Erlanger Wintersemester 1866/67 (Ber. (Sächs.), cxii, Heft 2; 1966). 'Memorial Tribute' by S. I. Curtiss (Edinburgh, 1891), with bibl. K. H. Rengstorf, Die Delitzsch'sche Sache. Ein Kapitel preussischer Kirchen- und Fakultätspolitik im Vormärz (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, xix; 1967). A. Köhler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 565–70; F. Vigouroux in Dict. Bibl., ii (1899), cols. 1341 f., with complete list of Delitzsch's writings; H. *Gunkel in R.G.G. (ed. 2), i (1927), col. 1822.

DELITZSCH, FRIEDRICH (1850–1922), German Assyriologist. He was the son of F. J. *Delitzsch, and held professorships at Leipzig (1878), Breslau (1893), and Berlin (1899). He published various works on Oriental subjects, among them Prolegomena eines neuen hebr.-aram. Wörterbuchs zum AT (1886), Assyrische Grammatik (1889), Geschichte Babyloniens und Assyriens (1891), and Sumerische Grammatik (1914). His most celebrated book, however, was his Babel und Bibel (2 parts, 1902–3; Eng. trans., 1903), based on lectures delivered before the Emp. Wilhelm II, which claimed that several OT narratives were of Babylonian origin and that Judaism was essentially dependent on Babylonian culture. He reviewed the controversy aroused by this book in Babel und Bibel. Ein Rückblick und Ausblick (1904). Among his later writings, all hostile to Christian orthodoxy, were Mehr Licht (1907), Zur Weiterbildung der Religion (two lectures; 1908), and Die grosse Täuschung (2 vols., 1920–1). In conjunction with P. Haupt, he edited the Assyriologische Bibliothek (1881–1927) and Beiträge zur Assyriologie und semitischen Sprachwissenschaft (10 vols., 1889–1927).

Obituary notice by Ira M. Price in Beiträge zur Assyriologie, x, Heft 2 (1927), pp. i–xii [in English], with reff. E. G. Kraeling, The Old Testament since the Reformation (1955), pp. 149–63. H. *Gunkel in R.G.G. (ed. 2), i (1927), cols. 1822 f.

DELLA ROBBIA, Florentine family of artists. The two most celebrated are:

(1) Luca della Robbia (1399–1482). His early works were sculptures, of which the singing and dancing boys (1431–8), done in marble, for the organ gallery of the cathedral of Florence, is the most famous (now in the Museo del Duomo). His principal work in bronze is the sacristy door of the cathedral, which is divided into several panels representing the Madonna, St. John the Baptist, and other saints. From c. 1440 he began to work chiefly in glazed terracotta (majolica), a technique which he greatly improved. These reliefs show most often white figures on a pale-blue ground, framed by brilliantly coloured borders of fruits and flowers. His Madonnas of the Roses and of the Apple in the Bargello at Florence are of exquisite charm and real dignity, and the Crucifix at San Miniato, the Tabernacle at Impruneta, and other decorative works, belong to the finest specimens of Italian majolica.

(2) Andrea della Robbia (1431–1528), nephew of Luca. He continued the tradition of his uncle, whose works cannot always be distinguished from his. He did the fine series of medallions with infants for the front of the Foundling Hospital at Florence and a large number of Madonnas. Most of them are of great charm, expressing the love between Mother and Child. The best known is the Madonna adoring the Child in the National Museum at Florence.

A. Marquand, Luca della Robbia (Princeton Monographs in Art and Archaeology, iii; 1913); id., Andrea della Robbia (2 vols., ib., xi; 1922). On other members of the family, see id., Giovanni della Robbia (ib., viii; 1920); id., The Brothers of Giovanni della Robbia (ib., xiii; 1928), all with illustrations and detailed bibl. Maud Cruttwell, Luca and Andrea della Robbia and their Successors (1902). L. Planiscig, Luca della Robbia (Florence, 1948). I. B. Supino in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart, ed. U. Thieme–F. Becker, &c., xxviii (1934), pp. 413–17, s.v. 'Robbia', with full bibl.

DELUGE, The. See Flood, The.

DE LUGO, JOHN. See Lugo, John de.

DE MAISTRE, JOSEPH (1753–1821), French *Ultramontane writer. He was born at Chambéry in Savoy and educated by the *Jesuits. At first influenced by the 18th-cent. rationalists, after the Revolution of 1789 he became a reactionary, who saw in the Church the safeguard of political stability. In 1802 he was appointed Sardinian minister at St. Petersburg, where he remained until 1817, when he returned to Savoy. In his principal work, Du pape (1819), he argued that the only true basis of society lay in authority, which took the double form of spiritual authority vested in the Papacy and temporal authority committed to human kings. The religious basis of history, which was to be understood as throughout under the direction of Divine Providence, was manifested in the redemptive power of suffering and blood. His other writings include De l'Église gallicane (1821) and Soirées de St.-Pétersbourg, ou Entretiens sur le gouvernement temporel de la Providence (1821). De Maistre has been called the 'Prophet of the Past' (P. S. Ballanche, 1776–1847), but his ideas did much to further the overthrow of *Gallicanism and assist the rise of Ultramontanism (F. R. de *Lamennais, C. R. F. *Montalembert, *Vatican Council) in the later 19th cent.

Œuvres (7 vols., Brussels, 1838); Œuvres complètes (14 vols., Lyons, 1884–7), incl. his posthumous works and unpublished correspondence, with 'Notice biographique' by his son, Rudolphe de Maistre, in vol. i, pp. v–xliii, orig. publ. in the latter's ed. of his father's Lettres et opuscules inédits (2 vols., 1851), vol. i, pp. v–xxvi. Eng. tr. of selections from his works by J. Lively (London, 1965). J. Morley, Critical Miscellanies (1871), 'Joseph De Maistre', pp. 115–92. F. Vermale, Notes sur de Maistre inconnu (1921); id., Joseph de Maistre émigré (Société Savoisienne d'Histoire et d'Archéologie, lxiv; 1927); R. Johannet, Joseph de Maistre (Paris, 1932). G. Goyau, La Pensée religieuse de Joseph de Maistre (1921); E. Dermenghem, Joseph de Maistre mystique (1923). C. Latreille, Joseph de Maistre et la papauté (1906); G. Breton, 'Du pape' de Joseph de Maistre. Étude critique (1931); S. N. Rocca, Giuseppe de Maistre nei suoi scritti (Turin, 1933). C. J. Gignoux, Joseph de Maistre, prophète du passé, historien de l'avenir (1963). R. Triomphe, Joseph de Maistre. Étude sur la vie et sur la doctrine d'un matérialiste mystique (Geneva, 1968). M. Jugie, A.A., Joseph de Maistre et l'Église gréco-russe [1922]. F. Bayle, Les Idées politiques de Joseph de Maistre (1945). C. S. Phillips, The Church in France, 1789–1848 (1927), pp. 207–13, with bibl., p. 307.

DE MARCA, PIERRE. See Marca, Pierre de.

DEMETRIUS. The name of two persons in the NT. (1) A silversmith of *Ephesus, who led an unsuccessful riot against St. *Paul, on the ground that the Apostle's preaching would endanger the trade in silver images (Acts 19. 24 ff.). (2) A disciple commended by St. *John, of whom nothing else is known (3 Jn. ver. 12).

DEMETRIUS, St. (d. 231 or 232), Bp. of *Alexandria from 189. The interest in him centres in his relations to *Origen. As Bp. of Alexandria he began by supporting Origen, whom he appointed to the headship of the famous Catechetical School in his city c. 203. Later, however, when the Bps. of *Jerusalem and *Caesarea allowed him to preach in spite of his being a layman, Demetrius recalled him to Alexandria and censured his conduct. At a synod in 231 he finally banished him for having been ordained priest irregularly at Caesarea, and shortly afterwards deprived him of the priesthood. Demetrius took a leading part in the controversies with the *Gnostics of his day. He is greatly venerated in the Coptic Church. Feast day, in E., 26 Oct.; in W., 9 Oct.

*Eusebius, H.E., VI. iii, viii, xix, and xxvi. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 194 f.; L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, i (1906), pp. 341–6. Brief note, with reff., by B. F. *Westcott in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 803; V. Grumel in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 198 f., both s.v.

DEMIURGE. This, the English form of a Greek word (δημιουργός) meaning 'craftsman', was used of the Divine Being by *Plato in his account of the formation of the visible world, and so by Greek Christian writers simply of God as the Creator of all things. The *Gnostics used the word disparagingly of the inferior deity to whom they ascribed the origin of the material universe, distinguishing him from the supreme God. In its English form the word is commonly used in reference to this Gnostic doctrine.

DEMYTHOLOGIZATION (Germ. Entmythologisierung). A term employed since 1941 by R. *Bultmann (q.v.) for a method of interpreting the Scriptures in the categories of modern man by eliminating the mythological forms (e.g. belief in a three-storied universe) taken for granted by the Biblical writers. In its later stages the debate on demythologization has led among Bultmann's pupils to a renewed concern first for the historical Jesus and then for the problem of hermeneutics.

R. Bultmann, 'Neues Testament und Mythologie', incl. in his Offenbarung und Heilsgeschehen (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, Bd. vii; 1941). H. W. Bartsch and others (edd.), Kerygma und Mythos (Theologische Forschung, i–ii, v, viii–ix, xix, xxiii, xxx–xxxi, xl, xliv, etc.; 1948 ff.), with repr. of Bultmann's paper, i, pp. 15–53; Eng. tr. of selections from vol. i by R. H. Fuller (1953), with Bultmann's paper pp. 1–44, and bibl. pp. 224–8; of selections from vols. ii–v by id. (1962), with bibl. p. 357 f. I. Henderson, Myth in the New Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, vii; 1952). F. *Gogarten, Entmythologisierung und die Kirche (1953; Eng. tr., 1955); J. Macquarrie, The Scope of Demythologizing (1960). G. Bornkamm, Jesus von Nazareth (1956; ed. 3, 1959; Eng. tr., 1960); J. M. Robinson, A New Quest of the Historical Jesus (Studies in Biblical Theology, xxv; 1959). R. Bultmann, Das Verhältnis der urchristlichen Christusbotschaft zum historischen Jesus (Sb. (Heid.), Jahrgang 1960, Abhandlung 3; 1960); Eng. tr. in C. A. Braaten–R. A. Harrisville (edd. and trr.), The Historical Jesus and the Kerygmatic Christ. Essays on the New Quest of the Historical Jesus (New York–Nashville, 1964), pp. 15–42. J. M. Robinson–J. B. Cobb (edd.), The New Hermeneutic (New York, 1964); C. A. Braaten, History and Hermeneutics (Philadelphia, 1966; London, 1968).

DENIFLE, HEINRICH SEUSE (1844–1905), Church historian. Born at Imst in the Tyrol, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1861, was ordained priest in 1866, and taught philosophy and theology at Graz from 1870 to 1880. Called to Rome in 1880 as associate to the General of the Order, he became a collaborator in the projected new edition of the works of St. *Thomas Aquinas, travelling all over Europe in search of MSS. In 1883 he was appointed sub-archivist at the *Vatican. In 1885 he founded, with F. *Ehrle, the Archiv für Litteratur und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, and in 1887 he was appointed editor of the records of Paris University.

His writings include his monumental Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis, written in conjunction with A. Chatelain (Paris, 4 vols., 1889–1897); several works on the German mystics of the 14th cent., Meister *Eckhart, J. *Tauler, and H. *Suso; and an unfinished work on M. *Luther and Lutheranism. This last is a brilliant, but wholly unsympathetic, exposition of Luther's teaching and methods, based on a wide study and acute analysis of contemporary sources.

J. P. Kirsch, Le P. Henri Suso Denifle, O.P. (Louvain, 1905). A. Walz, O.P., 'Analecta denifleana' in Antonianum, xxxii (1955), pp. 124–40, 220–52, 317–58, with further reff. M. D. Knowles, 'Denifle and Ehrle' in History, liv (1969), pp. 1–12. O. Spiess, O.P., in Dict. Sp., iii (1954), cols. 238–41; A. Walz, O.P., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 221–45.

DENIS. See Dionysius.

DENISON, GEORGE ANTHONY (1805–96), Archdeacon of Taunton from 1851. Ordained deacon and priest in 1832, he was Vicar of East Brent from 1845 till his death. He was throughout his life a vigorous defender of rigid High Church principles. Between 1854 and 1858 he was unsuccessfully prosecuted in the civil courts for teaching the doctrine of the *Real Presence in the *Eucharist. From 1839 to 1870 he strongly supported the cause of Church education against the movement for universal and compulsory education in state schools, a cause which was largely lost when the *Education Act of 1870 was passed.

G. A. Denison, Notes of My Life, 1805–1878 (1878). L. E. Denison (his niece), Fifty Years at East Brent (1902). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), pp. 127–9.

DENMARK, Christianity in. After one or two unsuccessful missions to Denmark, the Christian faith gained a firm footing in the 9th cent., when the Danish chief, Harold, was baptized on a visit to Louis the Pious, the Frankish king, and on his return brought with him St. *Anskar. Under Sven I (985–1014) and Cnut the Great (1014–35) Christianity became generally accepted. In 1104 the Church in Denmark was separated from the metropolitan see of Hamburg-Bremen, to which it had been united since the time of St. Anskar, and its seven bishops placed under the primacy of the Bp. of Lund. During the later Middle Ages the bishops acquired considerable temporal power and became correspondingly unpopular.

The Reformation in Denmark took place between 1520 and 1540. The chief events were the formal proclamation of religious freedom at the Diet of Odense in 1527, the adoption of a *Lutheran creed (the Confessio Hafnica) in 1530, the expropriation of the hierarchy and the monasteries in the following years, and the visit of J. *Bugenhagen to set up a Lutheran episcopate and introduce a new liturgy in 1537. The Danish Bible appeared in 1550. Restrictions upon RCs were milder than in other Protestant countries, but in 1624 the death penalty was imposed by royal rescript upon any RC priests found performing their official duties, while the Danske Lov of 1683 ordered that converts to Romanism should lose all their property.

The country suffered greatly from the deadness and rationalism which beset esp. Lutheranism in the 18th cent. A revival of orthodox Lutheranism, in which the Libri Symbolici, or ecclesiastical creeds, were restored to honour, was largely due to N. F. S. *Grundtvig (1783–1872), whose view of Scripture and tradition inclined towards the Catholic standpoint. To him also was due the idea of the Folk High Schools (Folkehöjskoler), which have since proved a strong Christian influence. In contrast to him was S. *Kierkegaard (1813–55), who opposed both the State Church and what passed for orthodox theology. By laws of 1849 and 1852, which gave complete religious liberty to Denmark, the Evangelical Lutheran Church was officially disestablished, but continued to receive state grants, and remained entirely subordinate to the state in all matters of legislation. At present practically all Danes are nominally Lutherans, though there is a very small RC minority. The Lutheran primate, who ordains the other bishops, is the Bp. of Zealand; he resides at Copenhagen, but his cathedral church is at Roskilde. In 1934–5 the Danish Church was strongly influenced by a campaign of the *Oxford Group movement. Danish missions abroad began in 1814, and have been established in various parts of the world; their most extensive and successful work has been done in Greenland.

A. Krarup (ed.), Bullarium Danicum. Pavelige Aktstykker Vedrørende Danmark, 1198–1316 (2 halvbind, Copenhagen, 1931–2); Acta Pontificum Danica. Pavelige Aktstykker Vedrørende Danmark, 1316–1536, ed. L. Moltesen and others (7 vols., ib., 1904–43). A. Krarup–W. Norvin (edd.), Acta Processus Litium inter Regem Danorum et Archiepiscopum Lundensem (ib., 1932). M. C. Gertz (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Danorum (ib., 1908–12). L. N. Helveg, Den danske Kirkes Historie (5 vols., 1870); L. P. Fabricius, Danmarks Kirkehistorie (2 vols., 1934–5); H. Koch and others (edd.), Den Danske Kirkes Historie (8 vols., 1950–66). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, II, iii (Lfg. vii, pt. 1, Die Kirche in Dänemark; 1937), with detailed bibl. L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches. A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965). E. H. Dunkley, The Reformation in Denmark (C.H.S., 1948), with bibl. J. O. Andersen, Der Reformkatholizismus und die dänische Reformation (1954); M. Neiiendam, 1536. Den Danske Reformations Historie folkelig genfortalt (1936). J. Schnell, Die dänische Kirchenordnung von 1542 und der Einfluss von Wittenberg (1927). [A. J. Mason,] 'The Loss of the Succession in Denmark' in C.Q.R., xxxii (1891), pp. 149–87. A. T. Jörgensen, 'Die evangelisch-lutherische Volkskirche Dänemarks' in Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, xxxvi (1925), pp. 687–714. W. J. Karup, Geschichte der katholischen Kirche in Dänemark vom Beginn bis zur Gegenwart (1863). E. A. F. Jessen, Die Hauptströmungen des religiösen Lebens der Jetztzeit in Dänemark (1895).

DENNEY, JAMES (1856–1917), Scottish *Free Church theologian. Educated at Glasgow University and Glasgow Free Church College, he was made minister of East Free Church, Broughty Ferry, in 1886. From 1897 till his death he taught theology at the Glasgow Free Church College. In his later years he became actively involved in the administration of the *United Free Church, becoming in 1913 convener of its Central Fund. He also took a prominent part in the movement for reunion with the Established Church of *Scotland. As a theologian he moved doctrinally from a liberal to an evangelical position, which was that of his mature life. In his *Christology he asserted firmly the traditional doctrine of the Person of Christ. He held the Atonement to have a purely substitutionary character. His main works were The Death of Christ (1902), Jesus and the Gospel (1908), The Christian Doctrine of Reconciliation (1917), and editions of I and II Thessalonians (1892), II Corinthians (1894), and of the Greek text of Romans (1900).

Letters of Principal James Denney to W. Robertson Nicoll, 1893–1917 [1920], with 'Appreciation' by W. R. Nicoll (pp. xiii–xxvii) and 'Memoirs of a Student', by J. A. Robertson (pp. xxxi–xliii). J. *Moffatt (ed.), Letters of Principal James Denney to his Family and Friends [1922]. T. H. Walker, Principal James Denney, D.D. A Memoir and a Tribute (1918). J. R. Taylor, God Loved Like That! The Theology of James Denney (1962). A. S. *Peake in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 153 f.

DE NOAILLES, LOUIS ANTOINE (1651–1729), Abp. of *Paris. Born at the Château of Teyssière in the Auvergne, he was educated at the Collège du Plessis, Paris. In 1679 he was consecrated Bp. of Cahors, in 1680 translated to Châlons-sur-Marne, and in 1695, through the influence of Mme de Maintenon, became Abp. of Paris. He was created a Cardinal by Innocent XII in 1700, and made head of the *Sorbonne in 1710. He was a zealous and devoted pastor and an ardent reformer of clerical practice (obligation of residence in seminaries before Ordination; annual retreats; courses on moral theology). He fostered the use of the traditional French liturgical books (Breviary, Missal, Rituale, Caeremoniale), and also in other ways upheld *Gallican ideals. His commendation (1695) of P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales and his disapproval of *Probabilism made him suspect of *Jansenism, and though he condemned certain fundamental Jansenist doctrines (1698), he had to face much opposition from the *Jesuits. He opposed the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713) and formally appealed against it in Sept. 1718; and though he eventually accepted it in 1728, he signed a private recantation before his death. He became involved in most of the controversies of his age, notably with F. *Fénelon over his Maximes des Saints. His writings include his Mandement à l'occasion du miracle opéré dans la paroisse de Sainte-Marguerite, le 31 mai, jour du Saint Sacrement (1727) and a large number of pastoral instructions.

E. de Barthélemy, Le Cardinal de Noailles, évêque de Châlons, archevêque de Paris, d'après sa correspondance inédite, 1651–1728 (1886). M. Fosseyeux, 'Le Cardinal de Noailles et l'administration du diocèse de Paris (1695–1729)' in Revue Historique, cxiv (1913), pp. 261–84, and cxv (1914), pp. 34–54. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 678–81, s.v. 'Noailles', with notes on sources.

DE NOBILI, ROBERT (1577–1656), *Jesuit missionary. He was a native of Tuscany, entered the order in 1597, and was sent on the Indian mission in 1604. In his eagerness to convert esp. the Brahmins, he adopted the mode of life of the Indian penitents and avoided public intercourse with the Pariahs. When his methods aroused the opposition of his fellow-missionaries, he had to interrupt his work and justify himself before the Abp. of Goa, but he was allowed by the Holy See to continue his mode of life. He proposed the appointment of special missionaries for the different Indian castes, and the gradual removal of the prejudice against Christianity among certain members of the higher castes was largely due to his labours. He was an eminent linguist and wrote more than twenty books in Sanskrit, Tamil, and Telugu, including many hymns, two catechisms, a treatise on Christian doctrine, and a Life of the BVM in Sanskrit verse. It is estimated that his converts numbered some 100,000.

Lat. text of his Première Apologie (orig. publ. 1610), ed. with Fr. tr. and notes by P. Dahmen, S.J. (Paris, 1931). P. Dahmen, S.J., R. de Nobili. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Missionsmethode (1924), with bibl.; id., Un Jésuite brahme. Robert de Nobili ('Museum Lessianum'; 1924); M. de Crisenoy, Robert de Nobili, apôtre des Brahmes [1939]; V. Cronin, A Pearl to India. The Life of Roberto de Nobili (1959). Sommervogel, v (1894), col. 1779 f. V. Cronin in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 477–9, s.v. 'Nobili, Roberto de', with further refs.

DENYS. See Dionysius.

DEODAND (Lat. Deo dandum, 'to be given to God'). In old English law, a personal chattel or thing which had been the cause of the death of a person, and as such was forfeit to the crown to be applied to pious uses, e.g. given in alms. The law regulating deodands was formally abolished in 1846.

DEO GRATIAS (Lat., 'Thanks be to God'). A liturgical formula in constant use in the services of the W. Church. In the Roman Mass its vernacular equivalent is said by the people after each of the first two lessons and as a response to *Ite, missa est. The Rule of St. *Benedict requires its use by the doorkeeper in receiving a stranger or a beggar (cap. 66). During the *Donatist controversy in *Africa it was a mark of orthodoxy as contrasted with the 'Deo laudes' used by the schismatics. Instances are met with of 'Deogratias' as a Christian proper name.

DEONTOLOGY. A term used first by J. *Bentham in 1826 for the science of ethics or moral obligation, esp. as distinct from jurisprudence.

DEOSCULATORIUM (Lat., from deosculor, 'to kiss feelingly'). Another name for the object known as the *Pax, sometimes used in the *Mass.

DEPRECATIO GELASII (Lat., 'Intercession of Gelasius'). A Latin litany for the Church universal (pro ecclesia universali). Both the form and much of the content are of E. origin. The ascription to Pope *Gelasius (492–6) is now generally accepted. The litany appears to have been introduced by him into the Roman Mass at the place where the *Kyrie became established. The text has come down to us in collections of prayers for private use put together in France in the early 9th cent., and is printed among the works of *Alcuin.

Text in J. P. Migne, PL, ci, 560–2. Crit. text by W. Meyer in Nachr. (Gött.), 1912, pp. 87–108. W. *Bousset, 'Zur sog. Deprecatio Gelasii', ib., 1916, pp. 135–62. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Kyrie de la messe et le Pape Gélase' in Rev. Bén., xlvi (1934), pp. 126–44, also with crit. text; repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962). pp. 116–34. C. Callewaert, 'Les Étapes de l'histoire du Kyrie' in R.H.E., xxxviii (1942), pp. 20–45. Jungmann (1952), i, pp. 443–5; Eng. tr., i, pp. 336–8.

DE PROFUNDIS (Lat., 'Out of the deep'). A title of Ps. 130, from its opening words. The psalm is one of the fifteen '*Gradual Psalms', as well as one of the '*Seven Penitential Psalms'. Its appeal for help from the misery of sin, and its expression of trust in deliverance, have led to its traditional use in the W. Church, esp. in the Office for the Departed. In *Ireland it used to be regularly recited at Mass after the *Last Gospel for the victims of former religious persecution.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The De Profundis' in The Month, cxxxii (1918), pp. 358–68; repr. in Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), No. X, pp. 164–77.

DE RANCÉ, ARMAND JEAN LE BOUTHILLIER. See Rancé, Armand Jean Le Bouthillier de.

DER BALYZEH FRAGMENTS. A few incomplete pages of a Gk. papyrus codex containing liturgical prayers and a Creed (c. 6th cent.), discovered by W. Flinders Petrie and W. Crum at Der Balyzeh (Dair Balaizah), south of Assiout, in 1907. They throw important light on the history of Christian worship in Egypt, e.g. the existence (cf. the liturgies of St. *Serapion and of St. *Mark, also Egyptian) of a Eucharistic *Epiclesis before the Words of *Institution. The compilation of the prayers has been variously dated (T. Schermann and P. Drews, c. 225; F. E. *Brightman, c. 350; B. *Capelle, c. 575). The Creed has affinities with the short Creed in the *Apostolic Tradition of St. *Hippolytus. The papyrus is preserved in the *Bodleian Library (MS. Gr. Lit. d. 2–4 [P]).

Edd. of text, with Commentaries, by P. de Puniet (Report of the 19th Eucharistic Congress held at Westminster, 9–13 Sept., 1908, 1909); T. Schermann (T.U., xxxvi, 1b, 1910), and C. Wessely (P.O., xvii, 1924); all now superseded by C. H. Roberts (text)–B. Capelle (commentary) in Bibliothèque du Muséon, vol. xxiii, Louvain, 1949 (based on fresh reconstruction of the MS.). P. E. Kahle, jun. (ed.), Bala'izah. Coptic texts from Deir Bala'izah in Upper Egypt (2 vols., 1954). J. Van Haelst, 'Une Nouvelle Reconstruction du Papyrus Liturgique der Dêr-Balizeh' in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, xlv (1969), pp. 444–55.

DE' RICCI, SCIPIO. See Ricci, Scipio de'.

DE ROSSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (1822–94), archaeologist. Born in Rome, after studying philosophy at the Collegio Romano from 1838 to 1840 and jurisprudence at the Sapienza from 1840 to 1844, he was appointed a Scriptor of the Vatican Library in 1844. In 1841 he met Giuseppe Marchi, S.J. (d. 1860), who fired his interest in the Roman *catacombs, to the excavation and study of which he devoted the rest of his life. He recognized, as none of his predecessors had done, the value of a thorough knowledge of literary sources (calendars, *Patristic allusions, etc.) for the interpretation of archaeological data; he considerably widened the scope of the investigations by examining the later materials and the contents of rubble as well as the original galleries and their monuments; and he recognized the contribution to be made by geology (here being helped by his brother, Michele Stefano de Rossi, a geologist, d. 1898).

The range of his publications was immense. Among those of primary importance were Inscriptiones Christianae Urbis Romae septimo saeculo antiquiores (I, 1861; II, i, 1888), Imagines selectae Deiparae Virginis in Coemeteriis udo depictae (1863), La Roma sotterranea cristiana (3 vols., 1864–77), Sur les catacombes de Rome (1867), Mosaici cristiani e saggi dei pavimenti delle chiese di Roma anteriori al secolo XV (25 fascc., (1872–92), Inscriptiones Urbis Romae Latinae, colleg. G. Henzen et J. B. de Rossi (1876; appeared as Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, vi), and Piante iconografiche e prospettiche di Roma anteriori al secolo XVI (1879). He also edited with L. Duchesne the Martyrologium Hieronymianum for the Acta Sanctorum* (Nov. II. i, 1894). The memorandum which he prepared on the *ampullae sanguinis and circulated privately in 1862 was ed. by A. Ferrua, Sulla questione del Vaso di Sangue, in 1964. In 1863 he founded the Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, which he edited for thirty years.

There is a complete list of his works up to 1892 in the Mélanges de G. B. Rossi (Supplément aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, xii; 1892). P. M. Baumgarten (ed.), Giovanni Battista de Rossi, der Begründer der christlich-archäologischen Wissenschaft (Festschrift zum 71. Geburtstage, 1892; It. tr., 1892). O. *Marucchi, Giovanni Battista de Rossi. Cenni biografici (1903). E. Kirschbaum, S.J., 'P. Giuseppe Marchi S.J. (1795–1860) und Giovanni B. de Rossi (1822–1894)' in Gregorianum, xxi (1940), pp. 564–606. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 18–100, s.v. 'Rossi, Jean-Baptiste de', with extensive bibl.

DE SACRAMENTIS. A short liturgical treatise on the Sacraments, almost certainly the work of St. *Ambrose (d. 397). Its six addresses ('Books'), addressed to the newly baptized in Easter week, treat of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and the *Eucharist. Its special interest is that it is the earliest witness to the Roman *Canon of the Mass in substantially its present form; also, granted its Milanese provenance, it attests the influence of Roman usage in N. Italy. The author insists that it is the word of Christ which consecrates (conficit) the Eucharist; and in his canon he refers to the species as an unbloody offering (incruentam hostiam) and a figure (figura) of the Body and Blood of Christ (cf. *Serapion's ὁμοίωμα). The doubts expressed by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose (1690) as to its authorship were widely shared by subsequent scholars, some, e.g. Le N. *Tillemont and T. Schermann, ascribing it to *Maximus of Turin (c. 451–65) and a date in the 5th or 6th cent. being commonly assumed. R. H. *Connolly, following hints in F. *Probst and G. *Morin, put its Ambrosian authorship virtually beyond question.

J. P. Migne, PL, xvi, 409–62. Crit. edd. by O. Faller in Sancti Ambrosii Opera, vii (C.S.E.L., lxxiii, 1955), pp. 13–85, and by B. Botte, O.S.B. (S.C., xxv; 1950; ed. 2, 1961), with important introd. Eng. tr. by T. Thompson, London, S.P.C.K., 1919, with introd. by J. H. Srawley; new and extensively revised ed., 1950. G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Pour l'authenticité du De Sacramentis et de l'Explanatio Symboli de S. Ambroise' in J.L.W., viii (1928), pp. 86–106; R. H. Connolly, O.S.B., The De Sacramentis a Work of Ambrose. Two Papers (*Downside Abbey, 1942). K. Gamber, Die Autorschaft von de Sacramentis. Zugleich ein Beitrag zur Liturgiegeschichte der römischen Provinz Dacia mediterranea (Studia patristica et liturgica, i; Regensburg, 1967) [attributes the De Sacramentis to *Nicetas of Remesiana: a view not generally accepted]. Further bibl. in Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 383.

DESCARTES, RENÉ (1596–1650), philosopher and scientist. Educated at the *Jesuit college of La Flèche, in 1613 he went to Paris. In 1619 he decided to devote himself to philosophy, and after travelling for some years returned to Paris in 1625. Finding there no opportunity for his studies, in spite of the encouragement of Cardinal *Bérulle, he settled in Holland in 1629, and there wrote his most important works. At Queen *Christina's invitation he went in 1649 to Sweden, where he died.

The significance of Descartes as a philosopher lies chiefly in his originality of method. He based philosophical reasoning upon the principles and methods of mathematics, thereby refusing (as he believed) to make any initial metaphysical assumptions. The beginning of his philosophy was his own self-consciousness—'Cogito, ergo sum'. He next turned to the ideas of his own mind, and concluded that in experience as in mathematics whatever is clearly and distinctly conceived—that is, whatever can be conceived as part of a logical and coherent whole—is true. The first 'clear and distinct idea' which a thinking ego finds outside itself is the idea of God, and this idea is unaccountable except on the assumption that God exists; the veracity of our other ideas is guaranteed in turn by God's existence and goodness (implied in the conception of a perfect being). Descartes's arguments for God's existence were in effect three in number: an a priori argument based on the *ontological argument of *Anselm; an argument from causation—that God must be held to exist as the cause of our idea of Him; and a third, akin to the *cosmological argument in St. *Thomas Aquinas. In his reasoning about the world of experience he had difficulty in determining the relations of mind and matter. His basing of reason upon sense-experience led to the subjective idealism of J. *Locke, G. *Berkeley, and D. *Hume, and to the difficulty that if experience is our only source of information and if we have no reason to suppose that anything in objective reality corresponds with the evidence of our senses, we can know nothing.

Descartes's principal works are the Discours de la méthode (1637), Meditationes de prima philosophia (1641), Principia philosophiae (1644), and Les Passions de l'âme (1649).

The best edition is that of C. Adam and P. Tannery (12 vols., 1897–1910). His more important philosophical works have been translated into English by E. S. Haldane and G. R. T. Ross (Cambridge, 2 vols., 1911–12). Crit. ed., with Eng. tr., of his Philosophical Letters by A. Kenny (Oxford, 1970). N. [K.] Smith, Studies in the Cartesian Philosophy (1902); J. *Maritain, Trois Réformateurs, Luther–Descartes–Rousseau (1925; Eng. trans., 1928); S. V. Keeling, Descartes (London, 1934; ed. 2, 1968); N. K. Smith, New Studies in the Philosophy of Descartes (1952); L. J. Beck, The Method of Descartes (Oxford, 1952); H. Gouhier, La Pensée métaphysique de Descartes (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la Philosophie, 1962), and other works of this author; G. Rodis-Lewis, Descartes. Initiation à sa philosophie (1964); A. Kenny, Descartes. A Study of his Philosophy (New York, 1968); W. Doney (ed.), Descartes. A Collection of Critical Essays (1968). E. Gilson, Index Scholastico-cartésien (1913). G. Sebba, Bibliographia Cartesiana. A Critical Guide to the Descartes Literature 1800–1900 (The Hague, 1964). L. J. Beck in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 784–8, with further bibl.

DESCENT OF CHRIST INTO HELL, The. This belief is based on such Biblical passages as Mt. 27. 52 f., Lk. 23. 43, 1 Pet. 3. 18–20, though various opinions have been held as to their exact meaning. Some have thought that the descent into hell refers to the victory over the powers of evil, others have connected it with the Dereliction on the Cross and the full bearing by Christ of the fruits of sin in our stead. Most Christian theologians, however, believe that it refers to the visit of the Lord after His death to the realm of existence, which is neither heaven nor hell (qq.v.) in the ultimate sense, but a place or state where the souls of pre-Christian people waited for the message of the Gospel, and whither the penitent thief passed after his death on the cross (Lk. 23. 43).

The earliest known occurrences of the article in the Creeds are in 4th cent. *Arian formularies, viz. the Fourth Creed of *Sirmium of 359 and those of Nike and Constantinople of 360. Thence it found its way into the Aquileian Creed of *Rufinus (it is not found in the *Old Roman Creed), gradually spread over the W., and found a place in the *Apostles' Creed. It also occurs in the *Athanasian Creed and is the subject of Art. III of the *Thirty-Nine Articles, but is absent from the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan formula. See also Hell.

The large literature includes E. H. Plumptre, 'The Spirits in Prison'. A Sermon (1871); J. M. Usteri, 'Hinabgefahren zur Hölle' [on 1 Pet. 3. 18–22 and 4. 6] (1885); F. *Spitta, Christi Predigt an Geister [1 Petr. 3. 19 ff.] (1890); C. Clemen, 'Niedergefahren zu den Toten.' Ein Beitrag zur Würdigung des Apostolikums (1900); J. Monnier, La Descente aux Enfers. Étude de pensée religieuse d'art et de littérature (Paris thesis, 1904); J. A. MacCulloch, The Harrowing of Hell. A Comparative Study of an Early Christian Doctrine (1930); J. Kroll, Gott und Hölle. Der Mythos vom Descensuskampf (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, xx; 1932). B. Reicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism. A Study of 1 Pet. III. 19 and its Context (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, xiii; 1946). W. Bieder, Die Vorstellung von der Höllenfahrt Jesu Christi (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xix; 1949). A. Grillmeier, S.J., 'Der Gottessohn in Totenreich. Soteriologische und christologische Motivierung der Descensuslehre in der älteren christlichen Überlieferung' in Z.K.T., lxxi (1949), pp. 1–53, 184–203, with extensive reff. See also Comms. on 1 Pet. 3. 18–20 (esp. E. G. Selwyn, pp. 314–62), on the Apostles' Creed (among older works, esp. J. *Pearson), and on the Thirty-Nine Articles. Good collection of material by F. *Loofs in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 654–63, s.v. 'Descent into Hades (Christ's)'; J. Chaîne in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 395–431, s.v. 'Descente du Christ aux Enfers'. Cf. also A. E. Burn in D.C.G., i (1906), pp. 713–16, s.v. 'Hell (Descent into)', and J. H. *Bernard in D.A.C., i (1915), pp. 289–92, s.v. 'Descent into Hades'.

DETERMINISM. A name popularized esp. by J. S. Mill, for systems of philosophy which hold that the entire universe, including all human activity, is subject to a rigid law of cause and effect which leaves no room for the exercise of free will. As it tolerates no first and undetermined principle outside the universe, Determinism is essentially bound up with a doctrine of immanence. In antiquity such doctrines were upheld by Democritus, and in modern philosophy they have come to the fore esp. through the influence of such thinkers as T. *Hobbes and B. *Spinoza and the materialistic systems of the 19th cent. The chief argument urged on its behalf is that free and undetermined phenomena in the world would make the universe unintelligible and all science and philosophy impossible. This line of argument is most commonly rebutted by an appeal to the facts of the moral consciousness. The fact that in making a decision man experiences awareness of choosing freely between different possible courses of action would seem to preclude universal determinism. Indeed in a completely determined world there would be neither vice nor virtue in the accepted sense of these terms, and therefore no place for morality. Determinism with its opposition to human freedom is a feature of all materialistic systems. Its attraction for many minds is to be explained by its correspondence with the need of the intellect for unification. But the fact that it is possible intelligently to debate its claims at all would seem to be its refutation.

DE THOU, JACQUES AUGUSTE (1553–1617), historian and book-collector. Coming from a family of magistrates, De Thou ('Thuanus') held high legal office, and helped to enact the Edict of *Nantes (1598). His Latin history of contemporary France, Historiae sui temporis (5 vols., 1604–20), describes the religious wars in detail. It was placed on the *Index, though its author remained a (very *Gallican) Catholic. He built up an important library which was doubled in size by his son, JACQUES AUGUSTE DE THOU (1609–77). The MSS. from it came eventually to the Bibliothèque Royale in 1732 and 1754; the printed books were dispersed at the De Soubise sale in 1789.

For editions of his works see H. Hauser, Les Sources de l'histoire de France. XVIe siècle (1494–1610), ii (1909), p. 35, No. 775. Catalogus Bibliothecae Thuanae (Paris, 1679).

H. Harrisse, 'Les De Thou et leur célèbre Bibliothèque 1573–1680–1789' in Bulletin du Bibliophile, 1903 and 1904. Further studies by J. Collinson (London, 1807) and S. Kinser (International Archives of the History of Ideas, xviii; The Hague, 1966).

DEUSDEDIT, St. (before consecration known as Frithonas) (d. 664), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the first Anglo-Saxon to hold this position, to which he was consecrated in 655. Hardly anything is known of the events of his primacy. Feast day, 14 July.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 20, 28, and iv. 1; notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), p. 174 f. The Life by *Goscelin (extracts in AA.SS., Jul. IV (1725), pp. 48–50) adds nothing of historical value. C. Hole in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 821 f., s.v.; T. A. Archer in D.N.B., xiv (1888), p. 422, s.v., with reff.

DEUS MISEREATUR. The Psalm (67) provided in the BCP of 1552 and later editions as an optional alternative to the *Nunc Dimittis at *Evensong, except on the 12th day of the month.

DEUTEROCANONICAL BOOKS, The. An alternative name for the Books contained in the Greek (*Septuagint) version of the OT, but not in the Hebrew. They are more commonly known as the *Apocrypha.

DEUTERO-ISAIAH. The name commonly given to the unknown author of most or all of the later chapters of the Book of Is. Older OT critics, e.g. S. R. *Driver, G. A. *Smith, in the belief that Is. 40–66 was a unity, applied the term to the author of all these chapters; it is now usually restricted to the author of 40–55 (56–66 being probably of later date). Deutero-Isaiah wrote in the later years of the Babylonian Exile (549–538 B.C.). See also Isaiah and Trito-Isaiah; and, esp. for bibl., Servant Songs.

DEUTERONOMIC HISTORY, The. The name given by M. *Noth and others to the Books Deut.–2 Kgs., all of which appear to have been compiled on the same editorial principle, i.e. originally independent units of material, such as collections of laws, stories about the Judges, the so-called 'Court History' (2 Sam. 9–1 Kgs. 2), and the Elijah and Elisha 'cycles', have been assembled together and set in a framework by an editor or editors who believed that obedience to the Divine commands led to success and disobedience to disaster. The Divine commands are set out in Deut. with appropriate warnings, and in the subsequent Books Israel's history is recounted and commented on in the light of this retributive theory. The editor's purpose is thus not so much to record history as to draw out its religious lessons. As examples of his method, style and outlook may be cited the farewell speeches of Moses (Deut. 31), Joshua (Jos. 24) and Samuel (1 Sam. 12), and also the comments on the fall of Samaria (2 Kgs. 17. 7–23) and of Jerusalem (2 Kgs. 23. 26–7 and 24. 2–4).

M. Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, i (Halle/Salle, 1943), pp. 3–110. See also recent comm. to Deuteronomy cited s.v.

DEUTERONOMY, Book of. The fifth and last Book of the *Pentateuch. Its English title comes via the Lat. Deuteronomium from the Gk. Δευτερονόμιον ('repetition of the law'), a *Septuagint mis-rendering of Deut. 17. 18 where the Heb. means 'a copy of the law'. In Heb. tradition the Book is commonly referred to by its two opening words אֵלֶּה הַדְּבָרִים ('These are the words').

The Book, which contains *Moses' final utterances on the east side of the *Jordan before his death, consists essentially of seven mainly legislatory and hortatory addresses (1. 6–4. 40; 5–11; 12–28; 29. 1–30. 20; 31. 1–13; 32. 1–47; 33), as follows: (1) After a brief introduction (1. 1–5), a survey of the journey from Mount Sinai to the Promised Land with its lessons (1. 6–4. 40). (2) Exhortations to serve Jehovah as the only true God, with certain laws interspersed (4. 45–11. 32); 5. 6–21 contains the Ten *Commandments in their Deuteronomic form and 6. 4–9 the principal section of the *Shema. (3) The central core of the legislation in the Book, the so-called 'Deuteronomic Code' (12. 1–28. 68). 12–16 deal mainly with religious duties (Law of the One Sanctuary; *Tithes; Feasts of *Passover, of *Unleavened Bread, and of *Weeks, etc.); 17–20 with civil enactments (Monarchy; *Cities of Refuge; Laws of War; etc.); and 21–25 wth social and domestic regulations (aliens, usury, vows, etc.). (4) Exhortations to keep the Covenant with Jehovah, with the threat of punishment for disobedience and the promise of restoration for repentance (29 f.). (5) The appointment of Joshua as Moses' successor and the giving of the custody of the 'Book of the Law' to the *Levites (31. 1–29). (6) The 'Song of Moses', with an appendix (31. 30–32. 52). (7) The 'Blessing of Moses' (33), followed by an account of Moses' death (34).

The distinctive style and diction of Deut. mark it off from the other Pentateuchal Books. Throughout, emphasis is laid on the fact that Jehovah is the only true God, that His love for His peculiar people Israel is unbounded, and that Israel must love Him in return.

Acc. to the view traditional in the Church, the Book was written by Moses. Most modern critics, however, have sought to bring it to a much later date. The view most widely held assigns it to the 7th cent. B.C. Stress is laid on the close contact with, and apparent dependence of its theology on, the teaching of the eighth century Prophets, e.g. its emphasis on the love of God (esp. characteristic of *Hosea), its monotheism and its humane modifications of the supposedly earlier laws of the 'Book of the Covenant' (Ex. 20. 22–23. 33). On the other hand its apparent identification of 'the sons of Aaron' with 'the Levites' (two classes later distinguished) and the absence of ref. to the Day of *Atonement and the Levitical system in general, indicate a date earlier than the 'Priestly Code' (6th cent. or later). It has hence commonly been supposed that the Book of the Law found in the Temple which was the basis of Josiah's Reformation (621 B.C.; cf. 2 Kgs. 22 f.) was none other than the central section of Deuteronomy. If so, it was not improbably compiled shortly before this date, perhaps in the reign of Manasseh (698–643) or even in the early part of that of Josiah himself (640–609 B.C.). Some critics, however, have argued for a date even as early as the 10th or 11th cent.; others have favoured an exilic or post-exilic setting. The tendency of recent scholarship has been to concern itself with the tradition which the Book embodies and to emphasize that in its present form it exhibits evidence of a lengthy literary history.

Commentaries by S. R. *Driver (I.C.C., 1895), A. Bertholet (K.H.C., Abt. v; 1899), and G. von *Rad (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, viii; 1964; Eng. tr., 1966). R. H. Kennett, 'The Date of Deuteronomy' in J.T.S., vii (1906), pp. 481–500; id., Deuteronomy and the Decalogue (Cambridge, 1920). G. Hölscher, 'Komposition und Ursprung des Deuteronomiums' in Z.A.T.W., xl for 1922 (1923), pp. 161–255. A. C. Welch, The Code of Deuteronomy. A New Theory of its Origin [1924]; id., Deuteronomy. The Framework of the Code (1932). E. Robertson, 'Temple and Torah' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxvi (1942), pp. 183–205, repr. in The Old Testament Problem (Manchester, 1950), pp. 33–55. G. von Rad, Deuteronomium-Studien (1947; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, ix; 1953). E. W. Nicholson, Deuteronomy and Tradition (Oxford, 1967). R. P. Merendino, O.S.B., Das Deuteronomische Gesetz. Eine literarkritische, gattungs- und überlieferungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zu Dt 12–26 (Bonner Biblische Beiträge, xxxi; 1969). H. H. Rowley, 'The Prophet Jeremiah and the Book of Deuteronomy' in Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to Theodore H. Robinson, ed. id. (1950), pp. 157–74, repr. in From Moses to Qumran (1963), pp. 187–208.

DEUTSCHE CHRISTEN. See German-Christians.

DEUTSCHE THEOLOGIE (Germ.). The vernacular title of Theologia Germanica (q.v.).

DEUTSCHER ORDEN. See Teutonic Order.

DE VEUSTER, JOSEPH. See Damien, Father.

DEVIL (Gk. διάβολος, 'calumniator', 'accuser'). In theological terminology the chief of the fallen angels. He is mentioned very rarely in the older books of the OT. In the narrative of the *Fall (Gen. 3) the serpent, which seduces *Eve and is thus the cause of man's first sin, has traditionally been considered an embodiment of the devil, through whom, acc. to the Book of *Wisdom (2. 24), 'death entered into the world'. The evil spirit tormenting Saul (1 Sam. 18. 10) has also been regarded as a devil, as also the lying spirits that deceive the prophets of Ahab (1 Kgs. 22. 21–3). In the Book of Job, Satan acts as a tempter and tormentor, always in submission to the will of Jehovah. In 1 Chr. 21. 1 *David's decision to number Israel is attributed to Satan, and in the vision of *Zechariah he acts as the accuser of the high priest Joshua (Zech. 3. 1–2). In the pseudepigraphical Jewish literature there is a much more developed demonology with many traces of pagan influence. The Book of *Enoch interprets the narrative of Gen. 6. 1–4 about the 'sons of God' whose intercourse with women produced a race of giants, as fallen angels, and says that they were condemned to eternal punishment. Similar stories are reported in the Book of *Jubilees, the *Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and other late Jewish writings.

The NT embodies and develops the later Jewish teaching on the devil. He tempts the Lord at the beginning of His public ministry (Mk. 1. 13, Mt. 4. 1–11, Lk. 4. 1–13), presenting himself as the master of the world (Mt. 4. 8–9), and Christ shows by His teaching and example his powerlessness over those who resist him. Later Satan renews his attacks in the persons of the demoniacs, thus manifesting the enmity between his kingdom and the kingdom of God, which is also taught in several parables, e.g. that of the tares among the wheat (Mt. 13. 24–30). He has wanted the disciples, esp. St. Peter, but the Lord has prayed for him, that his faith might not fail (Lk. 22. 31–2); for the power of Satan, whom Jesus saw 'fallen as lightning from heaven' (Lk. 10. 18), is already broken. Being 'a murderer from the beginning' (Jn. 8. 44), he is the 'prince of the world' but has no power over Christ (Jn. 14. 30), for he is already judged (Jn. 16. 11), and at the Last Judgement he and all those who belong to him will depart into eternal fire (Mt. 25. 41). St. *Paul and the other Apostles follow this teaching. St. *Peter recommends sobriety and vigilance as the chief means of resisting him (1 Pet. 5. 8–9), and in St. *Jude we find a brief allusion to the fall of the angels (1. 6; cf. 2 Pet. 2. 4). A fuller account of the angels' fall is given in Rev. 12. 7–9, which chapter also contains a detailed description of the devil's persecution of the Church under the figure of the Woman clothed with the sun.

In *patristic times there was no fixed teaching on the subject. Great influence was exercised by the apocryphal literature, esp. by the Book of Enoch. The view that demons are the sons of the fallen angels and human mothers is reproduced by many early Fathers, e.g. St. *Justin Martyr, and similar opinions were held by *Tertullian and St. *Cyprian. Others, e.g. St. *Irenaeus and *Clement of Alexandria, distinguish between the serpent, the seducer of Eve, and the other fallen angels, and most of them hold that the fall of the angels was caused by their envy of man. *Origen, however, rejects the tales of the Book of Enoch about the carnal intercourse between angels and women and attributes the fall of the former not to envy but to pride. His view was accepted first in the E., e.g. by St. *Athanasius and also by St. *Basil, who affirms that the devil is a spiritual being fallen from heaven through pride, and later also in the W., though the idea of angelic marriage was not at once rejected. St. *Augustine held that the devil fell through pride, because he would not submit to God, and that his envy of man was only a later consequence of his first sin. Though refusing to explain the fall of the angels by concupiscence, he assumed that they have bodies. He rejected the opinion advanced by Origen that the devils may finally be reconciled to God (*Apocatastasis).

In the Middle Ages there was much speculation on the subject, represented esp. by the *Dominican and the *Franciscan schools. Acc. to the former, following St. *Albert the Great and St. *Thomas Aquinas, all angels were created in a state of grace, though not of beatitude. The initial sin of the devil, which fixed him in evil, was committed after the first instant of his creation had passed. It consisted in pride, manifesting itself in the desire not for equality with God, which the angelic intellect knows to be impossible, but for a natural beatitude obtained by his own powers. The fall of the other angels was caused by their consent to his sin. The Franciscans, on the other hand, following *Duns Scotus, held that the devils committed various kinds of sin before becoming obstinate in evil, that Lucifer, their chief, desired equality with God, and that his sin consisted in an immoderate love of his own excellence. From the 15th cent. Latin theologians have in general followed either the Thomist or the Scotist view. A compromise was attempted by F. *Suarez, who advanced the novel opinion that the sin of the devil consisted in the desire of being himself hypostatically united to the Word. Since the 16th cent. the traditional teaching in its main outlines has been accepted by the majority of Christians, but there has been a marked reaction against the speculative elaborations of the Middle Ages.

There have been very few doctrinal decisions on the subject. The Council of *Braga (561) defined against the *Priscillianists that the devil was created good and could not himself create; and the 4th *Lateran Council (1215) affirmed that he became evil by his own will.

L'Abbé Lecanu, Histoire de Satan, sa chute, son culte, ses manifestations, ses œuvres, etc. (1861); J. M. Cayla, Le Diable, sa grandeur et sa décadence (1864); M. Hagen, S.J., Der Teufel im Lichte der Glaubensquellen (1899). P. Carus, The History of the Devil and the Idea of Evil from the Earliest Times to the Present Day (1900). L. Coulange [pseud. for J. Turmel], The Life of the Devil (1929; Eng. tr. of work publ. under his own name, Histoire du diable, 1931). H. Colleye, Histoire du diable (1945). G. Bazin and others, Satan (Études carmélitaines, 1948), with full bibl.; Eng. tr. of part, with additional essays and introd. by C. Moeller, Satan (1951). G. *Papini, Il Diavolo (Florence, 1954; Eng. tr., 1955). E. Mangenot–T. Ortolan in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 321–409; S. Lyonnet, S.J., J. Daniélou, S.J., and others in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 141–238, both s.v. 'Démon', with bibl.

DEVIL'S ADVOCATE, The. See Promotor Fidei.

DEVOTIO MODERNA (Lat., 'Modern Devotion'). The term is applied to the revival and deepening of the spiritual life which, from the end of the 14th cent., spread from Holland to parts of Germany, France, and Italy. It originated in the circle round G. de *Groote, and found its classic expression in *Thomas à Kempis's '*Imitation of Christ'. It laid great stress on the inner life of the individual and encouraged methodical meditation, esp. on the Life and Passion of Christ. St. *Augustine, St. *Bernard and St. *Bonaventure were among its acknowledged spiritual guides. The Modern Devotion made its way among the people chiefly through free associations of secular priests and lay people, called '*Brethren of the Common Life' (q.v.), whereas among the religious the *Windesheim Canons were its principal representatives.

The lives of G. de Groote, Florentius Radwin, and their followers by Thomas à Kempis are tr. into Eng. by J. P. Arthur (London, 1905). C. Ullmann, Reformatoren vor der Reformation, ii (1842; Eng. tr. in Clark's Foreign Theological Library, New Series, viii; 1885). M. Schoengen, Die Schule von Zwolle von ihren Anfängen bis zur Einführung der Reformation, i (1898). A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance. History of the 'Devotio Moderna' (New York, 1925; repr., with additional chapters, as ed. 2, Hamden, Conn., 1965). S. Axters, O.P., Geschiedenis van de Vroomheid in de Nederlanden, iii: De Moderne Devotie 1380–1550 (Amsterdam, 1956). R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion. Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, iii; Leiden, 1968), with extensive reff. E. F. Jacob, 'Gerard Groote and the Beginnings of the "New Devotion" in the Low Countries' in J.E.H., iii (1952), pp. 49–57; repr. in his Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (ed. 3, Manchester, 1963), pp. 139–53, with additional notes, p. 249 f. P. Debongnie, C.SS.R., in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 727–747, s.v. 'Dévotion moderne'.

DEVOUT LIFE, Introduction to the. The celebrated treatise on the spiritual life by St. *Francis de Sales. It grew out of a small manual compiled by Francis for the private use of his cousin's wife, Mme de Charmoisy. Its purpose is to show the possibility of and to foster a life of Christian devotion amid worldly distractions. It was addressed in the first instance to those living in the secular atmosphere of the French royal court, but its teaching is of very general application. The first edition appeared at Lyons in 1609, but Francis frequently revised it down to 1619, the date of the definitive edition.

In addition to the numerous popular editions there is a good critical edition by C. Florisoone in the 'Collection Guillaume Budé' (1930). Convenient Eng. tr. by M. Day, Cong. Orat. ('Orchard Books', 1956).

DE WETTE, WILHELM MARTIN LEBERECHT (1780–1849), German theologian. He was born at Ulla, near Weimar, studied at Jena, and held theological chairs at Heidelberg (1809) and Berlin (1810). From 1806 he published works on Biblical criticism and from 1813 on systematic theology. His radical rationalism raised a storm of opposition and, nominally because he had supported the murderer of A. F. F. von Kotzebue, he was deprived of his professorship and had to leave Berlin (1819). After a short stay at Weimar he accepted the theological chair at Basle (1822). In his later years he became more conservative. Under the influence of J. F. Fries and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he sought to do justice to the transcendent by faith and to the finite by scientific knowledge, to emphasize the importance of religious experience, to spiritualize dogma, and to construct a theology without a metaphysical basis. But his condemnation of cold reason displeased the rationalists, and his doubts regarding Biblical miracles and his reduction of the stories of the Birth, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ to myths offended the *Pietists. His numerous writings include Kommentar über die Psalmen (1811), Lehrbuch der historisch-kritischen Einleitung in die kanonischen und apokryphischen Bücher des AT (1817), Christliche Sittenlehre (1819–23), Einleitung ins NT (1826; Eng. trans., 1858), and Das Wesen des christlichen Glaubens (1846).

Obituary oration by K. R. Hagenbach (Leipzig, 1850), with list of de Wette's writings, pp. 117–20. A. F. J. Wiegand, W. M. L. de Wette, 1780–1849 (1879). E. Stachelin, Dewettiana (Basel, 1956); R. Smend, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht de Wettes Arbeit am Alten und am Neuen Testament (ibid., 1958); P. Handschin, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht de Wette als Prediger und Schriftsteller (ibid., 1958). G. Frank–F. *Kattenbusch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 189–98, with full bibl.

D'HULST, MAURICE (1841–96), French scholar and priest. He played a prominent part in founding the Catholic University of Paris (1875), and in 1880 he became first rector of the newly constituted *Institut Catholique. Throughout his life he laboured for the higher education of the French clergy. In his first years at the Institut Catholique he was closely associated with many of those who later became *Modernists, but after the encyclical '*Providentissimus Deus' (18 Nov. 1893), he became more conservative. His Question biblique (1893) represented his earlier attitude. D'Hulst was also much esteemed as a preacher and spiritual director.

A. Baudrillart, Vie de Mgr d'Hulst (2 vols., 1912–14). [C.] Cordonnier, Monseigneur d'Hulst. Sa vie, ses luttes, son rayonnement (1952).

DIACONICON (Gk., 'appertaining to the deacon'). The area to the south of the sanctuary in a Byzantine church, so called because it is in the charge of the deacons. In it the sacred vessels are kept and cleansed, and the vestments, service books, and other necessaries of Divine service are stored. It thus corresponds with the *sacristy in the W. Through the door piercing the *iconostasis the deacon passes to and fro between the diaconicon, the sanctuary, and the nave, during the Liturgy. The corresponding area to the north of the sanctuary is termed the *Prothesis. The word is also used of the book containing the deacon's part in the Liturgy.

G. Bandmann, 'Über Pastophorien und verwandte Nebenräume im mittelalterlichen Kirchenbau' in W. Braunfels (ed.), Kunstgeschichtliche Studien für Hans Kauffmann [1957], pp. 19–58. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 733–5, s.v.

DIADOCHUS (mid-5th cent.), Bp. of Photike after 451. Hardly anything is known of his life. He was the author of 100 'Capita Gnostica' (κεφάλαια γνωστικά) on the means of attaining spiritual perfection, which enjoyed great popularity in succeeding generations and were cited by St. *Maximus the Confessor, in the Doctrina Patrum, and by *Photius. He finds the basis of all spiritual contemplation in the three *theological virtues, esp. love. Besides a homily on the Ascension, which has long been known, Diadochus is also very prob. the author of a work entitled the 'Vision', which takes the form of a dialogue with *John the Baptist. Some late MSS. also ascribe to him a series of questions and answers, called by E. des Places a catechism; this work is elsewhere attributed to *Simeon the New Theologian.

Works ed., with Fr. tr., by E. des Places, S.J. (S.C., v bis; 1955); cf. id., 'La Tradition manuscrite des "Cent Chapitres" de Diadoque de Photicé' in Revue des Études grecques, lxx (1957), pp. 376–86. Homily on the Ascension pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 1141–8; Lat. tr. of 'Capita Gnostica' ib., 1167–1212; Gk. text ib., clxii (very rare), 713–54. There is a critical edition by J. E. Weis-Liebersdorf (Leipzig, 1912). F. Dörr, Diadochus von Photike und die Messalianer. Ein Kampf zwischen wahrer und falscher Mystik im fünften Jahrhundert (1937). P. Chrestos, Διάδοχος ὁ Φωτικῆς (Thessalonica, 1952). H. Dörries, Wort und Stunde, i (1966), pp. 352–422 ('Diadochos und Symeon'). E. des Places, S.J., in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 817–34; D. Stiernon, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 374–8, with further bibl.

DIALECTICAL THEOLOGY. A title applied to the theological principles of K. *Barth (q.v.) and his school on the ground that, in distinction from the dogmatic method of ecclesiastical orthodoxy, which treats of God as a concrete Object (via dogmatica), and the negative principles of many mystics, which forbid all positive affirmations about God (via negativa), it finds the truth in a dialectic apprehension of God which transcends the 'Yes' and the 'No' of the other methods (via dialectica). Its object is to preserve the Absolute of faith from every formulation in cut-and-dried expressions.

After the publication of Barth's Römerbrief in 1918 the Dialectical Theology rapidly spread, at first esp. in Continental Protestantism. Rejecting the whole liberal tradition in modern theology, whose spirit it saw classically embodied in F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, it sought to go back to the principles of the Reformers, esp. J. *Calvin, and drew its inspiration from thinkers in revolt against the humanist ideal, notably S. *Kierkegaard, F. M. *Dostoievsky, and the *Blumhardts. Its principal exponents (with varying degrees of emphasis) include E. *Brunner, F. *Gogarten, and E. *Thurneysen (qq.v.). Before long its stress on the Divine transcendence commended it also to many theologians of other traditions. In Great Britain its influence has been greatest in the Church of *Scotland; but it has also been considerable in the C of E, esp. since E. C. *Hoskyns' translation of the Römerbrief in 1935. The rise of *Existentialism (q.v.) in the RC Church also owed much to its influence.

For bibl., see Barth, K.

DIAMPER, Synod of (1599). A diocesan Synod of the native (St. Thomas) Church of *India, held under Alexis Menezez, Abp. of Goa, at Diamper (now Udayamperūr, some twelve miles south-east of Cochin). It brought the *Malabar Uniat Church (q.v.) into being. *Nestorianism was renounced, complete submission to Rome imposed, and many much needed reforms were made. Continuity of worship and practice was preserved, including the use of the (Syriac) Liturgy of *Addai and Mari. For a long time Portuguese authority enforced the decisions of the synod, but as its influence waned the Church began to disintegrate and there were many secessions, notably in 1653.

[C. J. *Hefele–H. *Leclercq,] Histoire des conciles d'après les documents orginaux, xi: C. de Clercq, 'Conciles des Orientaux catholiques', pt. i (1949), pp. 36–67. J. Thaliath, T.O.C.D., The Synod of Diamper (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clii; 1958), with bibl. C. de Clercq in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1207–10, s.v.

DIARIO ROMANO ('The Roman Daybook'). An official annual publication giving particulars of all feasts and fasts to be observed, of the special ceremonies celebrated in particular churches, and of the days on which they are celebrated, in the diocese of Rome.

DIASPORA, Jewish. The Dispersion (διασπορά) of the Jews had its beginnings in the Assyrian and Babylonian deportations (722 and 597 B.C.). Originally confined to parts of Asia, esp. Armenia and Iran, it later spread throughout the Roman Empire to Egypt, Asia Minor, Greece, and Italy. By NT times, acc. to *Philo, there were not less than a million Jews in *Alexandria. The Jews of the Diaspora remained in close touch with their home country, paying the *Temple taxes and keeping their religion and the restrictions of the Law, though Hellenic culture penetrated into their thought, as is evident from Philo and *Josephus. The Jewish synagogues in Asia and Asia Minor were the first scenes of Christian preaching (cf. Acts). On the other hand, the missionary activities of the Jews in the Roman Empire, hampered from the first by their exclusiveness, were soon eliminated by the growing power of Christianity. Henceforth the Jews of the Dispersion became more and more cut off from the surrounding Gentile civilization, and under the influence of the Palestinian rabbis the religion of Moses developed into the Talmudic Judaism that has subsisted through the Middle Ages into modern times.

In Germany the word 'diaspora' is used of members of any religious body living as a minority among those of other beliefs, and esp. of Protestants living in Catholic parts and vice versa.

E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4, 1909), pp. 1–188. A Causse, Les Dispersés d'Israël. Les Origines de la Diaspora et son rôle dans la formation du judaïsme (1929). F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake in idd. (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity,

I. i (1920), pp. 137–68. H. *Lietzmann, Geschichte der Alten Kirche, i (1932), pp. 68–101 (Eng. tr., 1937, pp. 95–134). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 166–96. On the word, J. H. Ropes, James (I.C.C.; 1916), pp. 120–3. H. Guthe in E.Bi., i (1899), cols. 1106–17, s.v. 'Dispersion'; T. Reinach in J.E., iv (1903), pp. 559–74, s.v.; E. Schürer in H.D.B., v (extra vol., 1904), pp. 91–109, s.v.; all with bibl.

DIATESSARON. The edition of the four Gospels in a continuous narrative, compiled by *Tatian about 150–60. From an early date it circulated widely in *Syriac-speaking Churches, where it became the standard text of the Gospels down to the 5th cent., when it gave way to the four separate Gospels. Its original language may have been Syriac, Greek, or (so F. C. *Burkitt) even Latin. Its publication in the 2nd cent. is a notable witness to the authority already enjoyed by the Four Gospels.

Our knowledge of its structure and contents is derived principally from five sources: (1) The 'Commentary' on it made by St. *Ephraem Syrus in the 4th cent. This survives in its entirety only in an *Armenian version, first published by the *Mechitarist Fathers at Venice in 1836; a part of the Syriac text was discovered in the British Museum in 1957. (2) Two late MSS. of an Arabic translation of the work. (3) The Latin *Codex Fuldensis, where the order of the Diatessaron has been preserved, though the text has been assimilated to that of the *Vulgate. (4) A medieval Dutch Harmony of the Scriptures, dependent on the text of the Diatessaron, which was discovered by Dr. D. Plooij at Liège in 1923. (5) A short Greek papyrus fragment of 14 imperfect lines, containing the account of the request for the body of Christ made by *Joseph of Arimathaea. This fragment, which was found at *Dura Europos and identified at Yale in 1933, has strengthened the case for the Diatessaron's having been originally compiled in Greek.

Crit. ed. of the Armenian version of Ephraem's commentary by L. Leloir, O.S.B. (C.S.C.O., cxxxvii: Scriptores Armeniaci, i; 1953; with Latin tr., ib., cxlv: Scriptores Armeniaci, ii; 1954); Syriac text in B.M. MS. *Chester Beatty 709 ed., with Lat. tr., by id. (Chester Beatty Monographs, viii; Dublin, 1963). Fr. tr. from Syriac and Armenian text by id. (S.C., cxxi; 1966). Arab. text ed. P. A. Ciasca, Rome, 1888 (ed. 2, 1934); also by A. S. Marmardji, O.P., Beyrout, 1935. Eng. tr. of Arab. text publ. by J. H. Hill as The Earliest Life of Christ ever compiled from the Four Gospels (1894). Med. Dutch version ed. D. Plooij, C. A. Phillips, A. J. Barnouw, etc., Amsterdam, 1929 ff.; 13th–14th cent. Ital. version ed. V. Todesco, A. Vaccari, S.J., and M. Vattasso (S.T., lxxxi; 1938). C. H. Kraeling, A Greek Fragment of Tatian's Diatessaron from Dura (Studies and Documents, 3; 1935). F. C. Burkitt (ed.), Evangelion Da-Mepharreshe. The Curetonian Version of the Four Gospels, with the readings of the Sinai Palimpsest and the early Syriac Patristic Evidence, ii (1904), esp. pp. 173–212. S. Lyonnet, S.J., Les Origines de la Version arménienne et le Diatessaron (Biblica et Orientalia, xiii; Rome, 1950). L. Leloir, O.S.B., 'Le Diatessaron de Tatien' in L'Orient Syrien, i (1956), pp. 208–31, 313–34; id., L'Évangile d'Éphrem d'après les œuvres éditées. Recueil des textes (C.S.C.O., clxxx, Subsidia, xii; 1958); id., Doctrines et méthodes de S. Éphrem d'après son commentaire de l'Évangile concordant (Original syriaque et Version arménienne) (ib., ccxx; Subsidia, xviii; 1961); id., Le Témoignage d'Éphrem sur le Diatessaron (ib., ccxxvii; Subsidia, xix; 1962). W. Henss, Das Verhältnis zwischen Diatessaron, christlicher Gnosis und 'Western Text' (Beiheft zur Z.N.T.W., xxxiii; 1967). J. F. Stenning in H.D.B., extra vol. (1904), pp. 451–61; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 747–70, s.v.

DIBELIUS, MARTIN (1883–1947), NT scholar. A native of Dresden, he was educated at Neufchâtel, Leipzig, Tübingen, and Berlin. From 1910 to 1915 he was a Privatdozent at Berlin. In 1915 he succeeded J. *Weiss as Prof. of NT Exegesis and Criticism at Heidelberg, holding office until his death. He was an active supporter of the *Ecumenical Movement and a leader of the *Faith and Order Commission.

At first interested esp. in the study of Semitic languages and of comparative religion, he concentrated increasingly on the NT. Here he was a pioneer of the Formgeschichtliche* method (q.v.), the technique of which he handled with imagination but also with restraint and a due sense of its limitations. Working on the foundations of Weiss, he laid great emphasis on preaching as a medium of transmission of the Lord's words; and in general his attitude to the Gospel traditions was more conservative than that of most members of the school. His most considerable work in this field was Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (1919; ed. 2, 1933; Eng. trans., From Tradition to Gospel, 1934).

Dibelius's other publications include Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus (1909), Die Isisweihe bei Apuleius und verwandte Initiations-Riten (1917), Geschichtliche und übergeschichtliche Religion im Christentum (1925), Geschichte der urchristlichen Literatur (1926; Eng. trans., 1936), Die Botschaft von Jesus Christus (1935; Eng. trans., 1939), Gospel Criticism and Christology (1935), Jesus (Sammlung Göschen, 1939). He also contributed to the Handbuch zum Neuen Testament (ed. H. *Lietzmann) commentaries on 1 and 2 Thess. and Phil. (1911), Col., Eph., and Philem. (1911), 1 and 2 Tim. and Tit. (1913) and *Hermas (1923), and to the H. A. W. Meyer series (Kritisch-Exegetischer Kommentar über das N.T.) that on James (1921).

List of his works in 'Bibliographia Dibeliana atque Bultmanniana' in Coniectanea Neotestamentica, ed. A. Fridrichsen, viii (1944), pp. 1–22. M. Dibelius, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Apostelgeschichte (ed. H. Greeven, 1951). Further collected papers, Botschaft und Geschichte, ed. G. Bornkamm (2 vols., 1953–6).

DIBELIUS, OTTO (1880–1967), Bp. of Berlin. The cousin of M. *Dibelius, he was born in Berlin, and, after several other pastoral cures in the Lutheran Church, was appointed to the church 'Zum Heilsbronnen' in Berlin in 1915. In 1925 he became *General Superintendent of the Kurmark. Owing to his support of the *Confessing Church, he was put under restraint during much of the Nazi period. In 1945 he became Bishop of Berlin and in 1949 Presiding Bishop of the *Evangelical Church in Germany, in which capacity he vigorously upheld religious freedom in the face of Communistic atheism. In 1954 he became a President of the *World Council of Churches. His works include Das Vaterunser. Umrisse zu einer Geschichte des Gebets in der alten und mittleren Kirche (1903), Das Jahrhundert der Kirche. Geschichte, Betrachtung, Umschau und Ziele (1927), Friede auf Erden? Frage, Erwägungen, Antwort (1930) and Grenzen des Staates (1949).

His autobiography was published under the title Ein Christ ist immer im Dienst (1961; Eng. tr., New York, 1964; London, 1965).

DIDACHE (Gk. διδαχή, 'teaching'). The elements in primitive Christian apologetic of an instructional kind, as contrasted with *Kerygma or 'preaching'.

DIDACHE, The (Διδαχὴ Κυρίου διὰ τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων), a short early Christian manual on morals and Church practice. Of its 16 brief chapters, chs. 1–6 describe the 'Two Ways', the 'Way of Life' and the 'Way of Death', and are probably based on a Jewish source; they include quotations from the *Sermon on the Mount. Chs. 7–15 contain instructions on *baptism, *fasting, *prayer, the *Eucharist, and how to treat *prophets, *bishops, and *deacons. Ch. 16 is a prophecy of the *Antichrist and the Second *Advent. The treatise contains much of interest to the student of early Christian liturgy. The Lord's Prayer is given in full. Baptism is by *immersion if possible, otherwise by threefold *affusion. Fasting on Wednesdays and Fridays is ordered. Two eucharistic prayers, of an unusual and primitive kind, are given. The ecclesiastical organization described is undeveloped. In addition to bishops and deacons (the presbyterate is not separately mentioned), the travelling prophets fill a role of great importance ('they are your chief priests'), and may celebrate the Eucharist.

The author, date, and place of origin are unknown. It is, however, the earliest of the series of 'Church Orders', and forms the basis of the 7th Book of the '*Apostolical Constitutions'. Many scholars have assigned the Didache to the 1st cent., including, in recent years, J. P. Audet, O.P., who dates it c. A.D. 60; L. *Duchesne put it under Trajan (d. 117); but most Anglo-Saxon scholars (J. A. *Robinson, J. Muilenburg, R. H. *Connolly) have tended to put it later. It seems to describe the life of an isolated Christian community, probably in Syria (not Egypt). The author knew the Gospels of Mt., Lk., and probably Jn.; and there is certainly some literary connexion between the Didache and the Ep. of *Barnabas and also *Hermas, the exact nature of which (important in connexion with dating the Didache) is much disputed.

The only known MS. (written in 1056) was discovered by P. *Bryennios at the 'Jerusalem Monastery of the Holy Sepulchre' at *Constantinople in 1875 and published by him in 1883. For part of it a Latin version also exists.

The publication of the 'Didache' in 1883 evoked a vast literature. Ed., with facsimile, by J. R. *Harris (Baltimore and London, 1887). Other edd. by A. *Harnack (T.U., ii, Hfft. 1–2; 1884), P. *Schaff (New York and London, 1885), T. W. Crafer (London, 1920), H. *Lietzmann (Berlin, Kleine Texte 6; 1936), T. Klauser (Florilegium Patristicum, i; Bonn, 1940), as well as in the edd. of the *Apostolic Fathers (q.v.) by F. X. Funk (1887), J. B. *Lightfoot–J. R. Harmer (1891), K. *Lake (Loeb, 1912–13), and K. Bihlmeyer (1924). Modern ed., with crit. comm., by J. P. Audet, O.P. (Études Bibliques, 1958). Eng. trr. by C. *Bigg (1898; rev. by A. J. Maclean, 1922) and by J. B. Lightfoot and K. Lake (opp. citt.). Early Lat. tr. ed. J. Schlecht from Cod. Monac. 6264 (11th cent.) at Freiburg i.Br., 1900; cf. L. Wohleb, Die lateinische Übersetzung der Didache (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, vii, Hft. 1; 1913). Coptic frag. in B.Mus. (MS. Or. 9271), ed. G. Horner in J.T.S., xxv (1923–4), pp. 225–31; cf. C. Schmidt in Z.N.T.W., xxiv (1925), pp. 81–99. J. A. Robinson, Barnabas, Hermas and the Didache (Donnellan Lectures for 1920; 1920); J. Muilenburg, The Literary Relation of the Epistle of Barnabas and the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles (Yale Univ. Diss. of 1926; Marburg, 1929); R. H. Connolly, O.S.B., 'The Didache in Relation to the Epistle of Barnabas' in J.T.S., xxxiii (1932), pp. 237–53. F. E. Vokes, The Riddle of the Didache (1938), with bibl. E. Peterson, 'Ueber einige Probleme der Didache-Ueberlieferung' in Riv. A.C., xxvii (1951), pp. 37–60. B. C. Butler, O.S.B., 'The Literary Relations of Didache, Ch. xvi' in J.T.S., N.S., xi (1960), pp. 265–83; id., 'The "Two Ways" in the Didache', ib. xii (1961), pp. 27–38. S. Giet, L'Énigme de la Didache (posthumously publd., 1970). On the Eucharistic prayers, Jungmann, i (ed. 1958), pp. 15–17; Eng. tr., i, pp. 11–13 and lit. cited. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 90–113; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 79–82; J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 29–39, all with extensive bibl.

DIDASCALIA APOSTOLORUM, an early 'Church Order', professedly 'the Catholic Teaching of the Twelve Apostles and holy Disciples of our Redeemer' (Syriac title). Its author, prob. a physician who had been converted from Judaism, seems to have composed it in N. Syria in the earlier half of the 3rd cent. The work is addressed to readers in various states of life, esp. married persons (chs. 2–3), and deals with such subjects as the Bishop's duties, penance, liturgical worship, behaviour during persecution, widows and deaconesses, the settlement of disputes and the administration of offerings; but the arrangement is unmethodical and disorderly. It is esp. directed against Christians who regard the Jewish ceremonial law as still binding. The author is far more lenient than his W. contemporaries (*Tertullian, *Cyprian) in allowing repentant sinners back to Communion. A six-days' fast before Easter is enjoined.

The work, orig. in Gk., survives complete only in a Syriac version, with substantial portions in Latin. As it was worked over and embodied in the *Apostolic Constitutions, much of the Greek text can be reconstructed with tolerable certainty. Among the sources used are the '*Pericope Adulterae' (Jn 7. 53 – 8. 11), the *Didache, the *Ignatian Epp., St. *Justin's 'Dialogue with Trypho' and the *Sibylline Oracles (Book IV).

Syr. text ed. P. de *Lagarde, Leipzig, 1854. Lat. text, partly constructed by Funk, in F. X. Funk (ed.), Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum, i (Paderborn, 1905), pp. 2–384, with introd., pp. iii–xiv. R. H. *Connolly, O.S.B., Didascalia Apostolorum. The Syriac Version translated and accompanied by the Verona Latin Fragments (Oxford, 1929). Lat. version ed. E. Tidner (T.U., lxxv; 1963). Gk. fragments, ed. J. V. Bartlet, 'Fragments of the Didascalia Apostolorum' in J.T.S., xviii (1916–17), pp. 301–9. P. Galtier, S.J., 'La Date de la Didascalie des Apôtres' in R.H.E., xiii (1947), pp. 315–51. K. *Rahner, S.J., 'Busslehre und Busspraxis der Didascalia Apostolorum' in Z.K.T., lxxii (1950), pp. 257–81. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 147–52; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 84 f., both with bibl. G. Bardy in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 863–5, s.v.

DIDEROT, DENIS (1713–84), French *encyclopaedist. A native of Langres, he studied at *Paris, where he became a publisher's hack. In 1746 he published Pensées philosophiques, a defence of the sufficiency of natural religion. In 1749 followed his Lettres sur les aveugles which attracted wide notice by their materialistic doctrines and led to a short imprisonment. Meanwhile Diderot's intellectual powers, esp. his gifts as a conversationalist, brought him into the circle of advanced thinkers in Paris which centred in Baron P. H. D. d'Holbach (1723–89). A request from a bookseller for a translation of Ephraim Chambers's Cyclopaedia had suggested the idea of a new encyclopaedia; and J. Le R. *d'Alembert having promised his aid, he embarked on the task which was to occupy him for most of his life. The first volume appeared in 1751; but its advocacy of toleration and democracy was resented by the Church and the work formally suppressed in 1759. The Encyclopaedia continued to be issued clandestinely, however, and the main body (28 vols.) was completed by 1772. (See Encyclopaedists.) Among the articles by Diderot himself were 'Christianisme', 'Foi', 'Liberté', and 'Providence'; but, much to Diderot's chagrin, the publisher excised many of his more challenging passages. As the Encyclopaedia and his various lesser writings brought their author little financial reward, Diderot would have been in serious straits had not the Empress Catherine of Russia (whom he visited to thank her in 1773–74) bought his library and appointed him its librarian. His other writings include Le Rêve de d'Alembert (written 1769; publd. 1830), Regrets sur ma vieille robe de chambre (1772), Jacques le fataliste (1773; publd. 1796), and Éloge de Richardson (1761). Diderot had a fertile imagination and keen sensibility, but he can hardly be reckoned a considerable constructive thinker.

The best ed. of his collected works is that of J. Assézat [–M. Tourneux] (20 vols., Paris, 1875–77). J. A. Naigeon, Mémoires historiques et politiques sur la vie et les ouvrages de D. Diderot (1821). Later studies by J. Rosenkranz (2 vols., Leipzig, 1866), J. Morley (2 vols., London, 1878), L. Ducros (Paris, 1894), J. Reinach (ib., 1894), A. Collignon (ib., 1895), A. Billy (ib., 1932), D. Mornet (ib., 1941), and L. G. Crocker (East Lansing, Mich., 1954; London, 1955; ed. 2. 1966). M. Tourneux, Diderot et Catherine II (1899). A. M. Wilson, Diderot. The Testing Years, 1713–1759 (New York, 1957). Überweg, iii, pp. 430–2, with bibl., p. 698. J. Morley in E.B. (ed. 11), viii (1910), pp. 204–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Encyclopaedists.

DIDYMUS (the Gk. form of the Heb. 'Thomas', i.e. 'twin'). An alternative name in Jn. 11. 16, 20. 24, 21. 2 for the Apostle *Thomas.

DIDYMUS THE BLIND (c. 313–98), *Alexandrian theologian. He was blind from his infancy. Erudite, though not creative, he was entrusted by St. *Athanasius with the direction of the '*Catechetical School' at Alexandria, where he numbered among his pupils *Gregory of Nazianzus, *Jerome, and *Rufinus. Of his numerous writings, his works 'On the Holy Spirit', 'On the Trinity', 'Against the Manichaeans', and fragments of exegesis have long been known. An accidental discovery of a group of 6th or 7th cent. papyrus codices near Toura, south of Cairo, in 1941 (which also includes some works of *Origen) brought to light his commentaries on Job, Zechariah and Genesis, as well as commentaries on Ecclesiastes and Psalms xx–xlvi, the authenticity of which is uncertain. The tract 'Against Arius and Sabellius', preserved under the name of *Gregory of Nyssa, is probably also his work. In trinitarian theology he was a staunch *Nicene; but he was condemned as an Origenist at the Council of *Constantinople in 553. The new discoveries confirm Origen's influence on his writings.

Editio princeps of De Trinitate, by J. A. Mingarelli, Bologna, 1769; repr., with other writings of Didymus, in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxix, 131–1818 (the only collected ed.). Many exegetical fragments in a crit. ed. by K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xv; 1933), pp. 1–45. Comm. on Job ed. A. Henrichs and others (Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen, i, ii, iii; 1968 ff.); that on Zech. ed. with full introd., notes and Fr. tr., by L. Doutreleau, S.J. (S.C., lxxxiii–lxxxv; 1962); Fragments of comm. on Gen. ed. R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (S.T., cci; 1959), pp. 167–73; comm. on Eccles. ed. G. Binder–L. Liesenborghs and others (Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen, ix, xiii, xvi, xxii, xxiv, xxv; 1969–79) and on Pss. by M. Gronewald and others (ib., iv, vi, vii, viii, xii; 1968–70). J. Leipoldt, Didymus der Blinde von Alexandrien (T.U., xxix, Hft. 3; 1905); G. Bardy, Didyme l'Aveugle (1910). J. Lebon, 'Le Ps.-Basile (Adv. Eunom., iv–v) est bien Didyme d'Alexandrie' in Muséon, 1 (1937), pp. 61–83. L. Doutreleau, S.J., 'Le De Trinitate est-il l'œuvre de Didyme l'Aveugle?' in Rech. S.R., xlv (1957), pp. 514–57; L. Béranger, 'Sur deux énigmes du De Trinitate de Didyme l'Aveugle', ib., li (1963), pp. 255–267. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 104–15; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 280 f. W. *Bright in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 827–9, s.v.; M. Pellegrino in E.C., iv (1950), col. 1567 f., s.v. 'Didimo il Cieco'; A. Van Roey in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 416–27, s.v. 'Didyme l'Aveugle'.

DIES IRAE (Lat., 'Day of wrath'), the opening words, and hence the name, of the *sequence in the Mass for the Dead in the W. Church. Its author is almost certainly a 13th cent. *Franciscan, but prob. not *Thomas of Celano. It was not originally intended for liturgical use, as it is written in the 1st person sing. The first printed Missal containing it as the sequence for Requiem Masses is that of Venice, 1485. Until 1969 its use was obligatory in Masses on *All Souls' Day, on the day of decease or burial of the person for whom the Mass was offered, and on the anniversary of the death, though it could be omitted on other days. It may now also be omitted in all Masses of the Dead. Many translations into English have been made (e.g. E.H. 351), but the vigour of the concise Latin original is usually lost.

F. Ermini, Il Dies Irae e l'innologia ascetica nel secolo decimoterzo. Studi sulla litteratura latina del medio evo (1903). Raby, pp. 443–50, incl. orig. text, p. 448, and note of trr., p. 449, with bibl., p. 485. J. C. Payen, 'Le Dies Irae dans la prédication de la mort et des fins dernières au Moyen-Age' in Romania, lxxxvi (1965), pp. 48–76.

DIETRICH OF NIEHEIM (or of 'Niem') (c. 1340–1418), Papal notary and historical writer. Entering the service of the curia he became Abbreviator and Scriptor, and published two treatises on curial administration. He was appointed Bp. of Verden by Boniface IX in 1395 without, however, receiving consecration, and was deprived of the office four years later. After the election of Gregory XII he took a prominent part in the efforts to end the Great Schism. He was present at the Council of *Constance (1415), where he renounced *John XXIII and vigorously upheld the conciliar standpoint. His historical works, though one-sided, are an invaluable source for contemporary events, esp. 'Nemus Unionis' (1408) and 'De Schismate' (1410). Of his writings advocating reform the most important is 'Avisamenta edita in Concilio Constanciensi' (1414), in which he asserted the plenary powers of a General Council including its right to depose the Pope, attacked clerical abuses, and put forward schemes for ecclesiastical reform.

Crit. text of his 'Stilus Palatii Abbreviatus' (Leipzig, 1888); of his 'De Schismate', ed. G. Erler (Leipzig, 1890). H. Heimpel, 'Eine unbekannte Schrift Dietrichs v. Niem über die Berufung der Generalkonzilien (1413/1414)', in Sb. (Heid.), 1929/30, Abh. 1. G. Erler, Dietrich von Nieheim (Leipzig, 1887); W. J. M. Mulder, Dietrich von Nieheim, zijne Opvatting van het Concilie en zijne Kroniek (with text, 1907); H. Heimpel, Dietrich von Niem (Westfälische Biographien, Bd. 2; 1932); E. F. Jacob, 'Dietrich of Niem. His Place in the Conciliar Movement' in the Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, Manchester, xix (1935), pp. 388–410; repr. in Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (Manchester, 1943), pp. 24–43, with additional notes in ed. 3 (1963), pp. 241–4; K. Pivec, 'Quellenanalysen zu Dietrich von Niem' in Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, lviii (1950), pp. 386–440; id. and H. Heimpel, Neue Forschungen zu Dietrich von Niem (Nachr. (Gött.), 1951, Heft 4). See also works cited under Conciliar Theory.

DIGAMY. In the early Church, second marriages were generally looked upon with disfavour (cf. 1 Cor. 7. 39 f.). *Athenagoras went so far as to regard them as 'a specious adultery' (Legat. 33), and this view became part of the official teaching of certain heretical bodies (*Montanists, *Novatianists). Even the orthodox Council of *Neocaesarea (314) presupposed the imposition of a slight penance on digamists (can. 7). The Council of *Nicaea (325), however, in providing for the reconciliation of Novatianists, insisted (can. 8) that those who had married twice should not be excluded from Christian fellowship.

The Eastern Church has always been more severe in this matter than the W. Second marriages were often held not to be marriages at all, and even now the nuptial blessing is not given in the same form as for a first marriage. Even more suspect were third marriages, and since the 10th cent. fourth marriages have been forbidden altogether.

St. Paul's words that a bishop must be the husband of one wife (1 Tim. 3. 2: μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα) were widely held, e.g. by *Innocent I and St. *Augustine, to make digamy a disqualification for Ordination, though St. *Jerome held the contrary view (Ep. 69). In modern RC canon law (CIC, can. 984. 4) the impediment persists.

DIGGERS. See Fossors.

DIGGERS (17th cent.). A section of the *Levellers, founded in 1649 by Gerrard Winstanley. Its adherents held that Christian principles required a communistic mode of life and the cultivation of crown property and common land with the spade. Work was started in April 1649 at St. George's Hill, Oatlands, Surrey, where some 50 men began digging up waste land. Winstanley expounded his principles and schemes in several pamphlets, but the movement soon collapsed.

G. H. Sabine (ed.), The Works of Gerrard Winstanley, with appendix of docc. relating to the Digger Movement (New York, 1941); L. Hamilton (ed.), Gerrard Winstanley. Selections from his Works, with an introduction by C. Hill (London, 1944). A hitherto unknown pamphlet by Winstanley, 'England's Spirit Unfoulded', was ed. G. E. Aylmer in Past and Present, xl (1968), pp. 3–15. L. H. Berens, The Digger Movement in the Days of the Commonwealth as Revealed in the Writings of Gerrard Winstanley, the Digger (1906); D. W. Petegorsky, Left-Wing Democracy in the English Civil War. A Study of the Social Philosophy of Gerrard Winstanley (1940). P. H. Hardacre, 'Gerrard Winstanley in 1650' in Huntington Library Quarterly, xxii (1958–9), pp. 345–9.

DIKIRION, TRIKIRION (Gk. δικήριον, τρικήριον). Candles, held in candlesticks with two and three branches respectively, used by E. bishops when giving the blessing during a pontifical Liturgy. They symbolize the two Natures of Christ and the three Persons of the Trinity.

DILLMANN, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH AUGUST (1823–94), German Biblical scholar and orientalist. He studied at Tübingen under H. *Ewald and F. C. *Baur, and later worked on Ethiopic MSS. in Paris, London and Oxford, producing catalogues of the Ethiopic MSS. in the British Museum and the Bodleian Library (1847–8). In 1848 he returned to Tübingen, where in 1853 he obtained a professorship, and later he held chairs at Kiel (1854), Giessen (1864), and Berlin (1869). To him more than any other scholar is due the revival of Ethiopic studies in the 19th cent. He was also a capable OT critic. Among his works were a grammar (1857) and lexicon (1865) of Ethiopic, and editions of Ethiopic texts of the OT down to Kings, of the Apocrypha, and of some non-canonical books, while late in life he produced commentaries on the *Hexateuch (1875–86; Eng. trans. of Genesis by W. B. Stevenson, 1897) and on Isaiah (1890).

Dillmann's Handbuch der alttestamentlichen Theologie was posthumously ed. by R. Kittel (1895). There is a portrait and very brief life prefixed to vol. v of Dillmann's ed. of the Ethiopic OT (Libri Apocryphi, Berlin, 1894; no pagination). W. Baudissin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 662–9, s.v., with list of obituary notices.

DILTHEY, WILHELM (1833–1911), German philosopher of history and culture. Born at Biebrich, nr. Wiesbaden, he was professor successively at Basle (1866), Kiel (1868), Breslau (1871), and Berlin (1882, in succession to H. Lotze). He was also a leading member of the Prussian Academy and entrusted with its edition of I. *Kant (1902 ff.). In the front rank of historians of modern culture and ideas and also the virtual creator of the philosophy of history in its present form, Dilthey stressed the fundamental differences between the methods of the 'Human Sciences' (Geisteswissenschaften), employed in the study of culture, art, religion, etc., and those adapted to the Natural Sciences (Naturwissenschaften). He worked out his position in his Einleitung in die Geisteswissenschaften: Versuch einer Grundlegung für das Studium der Gesellschaft und der Geschichte (vol. i, 1883) which, like many of Dilthey's other works, was never completed. His belief that the current methods of empirical psychology failed to reach the real spiritual life of persons as studied in the Human Sciences issued in his Ideen über eine beschreibende und zergliedernde Psychologie (1894), in which he elaborated the ideal of a 'descriptive and analytic' psychology. Other important works were Das Erlebnis und die Dichtung (1905), Der Aufbau der geschichtlichen Welt in den Geisteswissenschaften (Part i, 1910) and Die Typen der Weltanschauungen (1911). Dilthey continued critical, however, of the possibility of a philosophy of history in the traditional sense, as well as of a systematic sociology, holding that the spiritual life was too complex to be comprehended in formulae. Dilthey's own studies in religion were esp. directed to it as an element in human culture. The religious Weltanschauung, unlike the philosophical, was restricted in that it did not aim at universality. His doctrines on history have exercised influence on Christian thought, esp. through E. *Troeltsch. His extended studies in hermeneutics, which, however, take the word in a very wide sense, are very relevant to the problems of Biblical exegesis.

Dilthey's works, most of which were orig. publd. in the Abh. (Berl.), were collected and ed. G. Misch et al. (Berlin, 1914 ff.). Diary and letters for 1852–70 ed. Clara Misch (Leipzig–Berlin, 1933); further collections of correspondence ed. S. von der Schulenburg (Halle, 1923) and E. Weniger (Abh. (Berl.), 1936, No. 9). Eng. tr. of various extracts, with introd., by H. P. Rickman, Meaning in History. W. Dilthey's Thought on History and Society (1961), and Selected Writings, tr. by id. (Cambridge, 1976). H. A. Hodges, Wilhelm Dilthey. An Introduction (1944); id., The Philosophy of Wilhelm Dilthey (1952), both with detailed bibl. J. Stenzel, Dilthey und die deutsche Philosophie der Gegenwart (Philosophische Vorträge, xxxiii; 1934). K. Müller-Vollmer, Towards a Phenomenological Theory of Literature. A Study of Wilhelm Dilthey's Poetik (The Hague, 1963); H. Diwald, Wilhelm Dilthey. Erkenntnistheorie und Philosophie der Geschichte (Göttingen, 1963). G. Marini, Dilthey e la comprensione del mondo umano (Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Giurisprudenza della Università di Pisa, xi; Milan, 1965). Recent studies in English by R. A. Makkreel (Princeton, 1975), M. Ermarth (Chicago–London, 1978), and H. P. Rickman (London, 1979). Überweg, iv, pp. 551–5, with bibl., p. 720.

DING-AN-SICH (Germ., 'thing-in-itself'). A philosophical term for real objects in so far as their structure and being are held to stand out of relation to any subject which apprehends them. The concept occupied a central position in the philosophy of I. *Kant (1724–1804), who denied that any knowledge of things-in-themselves was possible.

DIOCESE. In ecclesiastical use, the territorial unit of administration in the Church. It is governed by a bishop, with the assistance of the inferior clergy, and sometimes one or more other bishops, and it is usually divided into parishes, which are frequently grouped in *rural deaneries and *archdeaconries. Dioceses are commonly associated to form a *province, over which one of the diocesan bishops presides, with varying powers of intervention in the affairs of other dioceses. Traditionally the bishop is supreme in his diocese and possesses *ordinary jurisdiction.

In the early days of the Church, when Christianity was chiefly an urban religion, dioceses covered only the principal towns and cities. As the new religion spread, the limits of the various dioceses were extended and new rural dioceses were created, until now there is hardly any part of the world which is not within the jurisdiction of some diocesan bishop.

The word 'diocese' (Gk. διοίκησις) only gradually established itself in its current Christian sense. The original word for a local group of Christians was simply a 'church' (ἐκκλησία). Later, e.g. in the *Apostolic (cans. 14, 15) and *Nicene (can. 16) Canons, it was 'parish' (παροικία), and in the E. Church this word is still retained for the territory subject to a bishop, διοίκησις being used for the *patriarch's area of control. In the W., however, the word was in use in Africa in its modern sense at the end of the 4th cent., though parochia continued to be employed down to the 9th cent. and even later. The word also had a long secular history for the larger administrative units of the later Roman Empire.

The word διοίκησις, primarily 'administration', was first used in Cicero's time of a territorial area over which supervision was exercised, viz. of the three regions of Cibyra, Apamea, and Synnada added to Cilicia (Cicero, Ep. ad Fam., iii. 8. 4; xiii. 67. 1). Under *Diocletian it was adopted for the twelve new regions into which the Empire was divided for the purposes of civil government, the largest of these Dioceses being 'Oriens' (sixteen provinces) and the smallest Britain (four provinces). Its ecclesiastical use was of slow growth. As late as *Anastasius Bibliothecarius it was applied to the ecclesiastical province, as distinct from the area governed by a single bishop. On the history of the word, see C. D. *Ducange, Glossarium, s.v.; J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, ix, esp. cap. 2, sect. 2; W. *Bright, The Canons of the First Four General Councils (ed. 2, 1892), pp. 101–5. See also G. Hill, English Dioceses. A History of their Limits (1900).

DIOCLETIAN, VALERIUS DIOCLETIANUS (245–313), Roman Emperor from 284 to 305. Diocles, who was born of humble parents at Salona in Dalmatia, took up a military career, serving with distinction under Probus and Aurelian. On 17 Sept. 284, on the murder of Numerian, the army proclaimed him Emperor at Chalcedon. He was defeated in the ensuing hostilities against Carinus, Numerian's joint-Emperor; but as Carinus was promptly slain by his own officers, Diocletian (as he now chose to call himself) became undisputed master. Endowed with immense energy, great gifts of organization, and a mind dominated by logic, he made it his main purpose to stabilize and reform the Empire. To this end, he created an absolute monarchy, centring all power in himself as the semi-Divine ruler, and making his palace the domus divina and his own person sacred; and henceforth the Senate was to be permanently in a subordinate position. In 286 he associated Maximian in the government as co-Augustus, taking the Eastern Empire for himself and giving Maximian the West. In 292 he further divided the Empire by the creation of two 'Caesars', Constantius Chlorus and Galerius. Of the four areas (the 'tetrarchy'), Diocletian now ruled the East, Maximian Italy and Africa, Constantius Britain, Gaul, and Spain, and Galerius Illyricum and the Danube basin, with Nicomedia, *Milan, Trier, and Sirmium as their respective capitals. With this strong organization, the Empire was consolidated and somewhat extended. Diocletian also introduced far-reaching military, administrative, fiscal, and economic reforms, including the celebrated Edict on Maximum Prices ('De pretiis rerum venalium') of 301. On 1 May 305 he formally abdicated at Nicomedia, compelling his reluctant colleague Maximian to take a like step. He lived his last years in retirement at his large palace at Spalato (Split).

For the greater part of his reign the Christians seem to have enjoyed the tranquillity which had been theirs since the Rescript of Gallienus (260). Only the *Manichees were repressed, by an edict dated 31 March 296, as a sect lately originating in Persia. It was in 303 that the Great Persecution broke out. Diocletian seems to have been instigated to it mainly through pressure from Galerius. An edict issued at Nicomedia on 23 Feb. enjoined the demolition of churches and the burning of Christian books. Some incidents which followed (fires in the palace at Nicomedia, reports of unrest at Melitene and in Syria) led to further edicts. The next two were directed solely against the clergy. The punishment inflicted for resistance was imprisonment, torture, and, in some cases, death. A fourth edict issued early in 304 extended these penalties to the laity as well. The persecution brought a very large number of martyrs. Its severity varied in different parts of the Empire acc. to the changing fortunes of the Imperial rulers in the next decades. Its final collapse was due to *Constantine's defeat of Maxentius at the *Milvian Bridge on 28 Oct. 312 and the 'Edict of Milan' (q.v.) early in the next year.

Good discussion, with first-class bibls., in C.A.H., xii (1939), esp. chs. ix (by H. Mattingly), x, and xi (by W. Ensslin); and, for the Persecution, ch. xix (by N. H. Baynes). Two modern studies are W. Ensslin, Zur Ostpolitik des Kaisers Diokletian, Sb. (Bayr.), 1942, Hft. 1, and W. Seston, Dioclétien et la tétrarchie. I. Guerres et réformes, 284–30 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, clxii; 1946), the latter with full bibl. reff. C. Cecchelli, Studi e scoperte italiane sull'archeologia et l'arte del tardo impero (1938). G. Niemann, Der Palast Diokletians in Spalato (1910). Cf. also H. M. D. Parker, A History of the Roman World from A.D. 138 to 337 (1935), pp. 223–39 and 262–90, and A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire 284–602, i (Oxford, 1964), pp. 37–76, with reff., iii (ib., 1964), pp. 2–10. W. Ensslin in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vii (1948), cols. 2419–95, s.v. 'Valerius (142) Diocletianus'; W. Seston in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 1036–53, s.v.

For the Persecution, the chief ancient authorities are, besides the *Acta of the Martyrs (useful list in C.A.H., xii, pp. 790–3), *Eusebius, H.E., VIII and IX, and De Martyribus Palestinae, and *Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum. A. J. Mason, The Persecution of Diocletian (1876); P. Allard, La Persécution de Dioclétien et la triomphe de l'Église (2 vols., 1890; ed. 2, 1900); J. E. Belser, Zur diokletianischen Christenverfolgung (1891); K. Stade, Der Politiker Diokletian und die letzte grosse Christenverfolgung (Frankfurt a.M., Diss., 1926). G. E. M. de Ste. Croix, 'Aspects of the "Great" Persecution' in H.T.R., xlvii (1954), pp. 75–113; W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965), pp. 477–535. See also bibl. to Constantine.

DIOCLETIANIC ERA. The reckoning of time from the year of *Diocletian's accession (A.D. 284). It is also known as the Era of the Martyrs (though in fact the *persecution of the Christians did not break out till 303; see previous entry). It is still followed by the *Abyssinians and *Copts.

DIODORE (d. c. 390), Bp. of Tarsus. A native of *Antioch, Diodore studied at *Athens and then ruled a monastery near Antioch until the strength of *Arianism drew him into the city to combat it. He also opposed *Julian the Apostate. Banished to Armenia in 372, he later returned and became Bp. of Tarsus in 378. In 381 he was named by *Theodosius I one of the bishops communion with whom was a test of orthodoxy.

As a teacher, he followed the *Antiochene tradition in theology, insisting on literal and historical exegesis and, against *Apollinarius, on the complete humanity of Christ. His pupils included St. *Chrysostom and *Theodore of Mopsuestia. Only fragments of his very extensive writings (largely Biblical commentaries) survive. Many were destroyed by Arians, while others perished when the condemnation of his pupil Theodore made Diodore himself suspect of Christological heresy.

Considerable frgmts. of his 'De Fato' are preserved in *Photius, Bibl. cod. 233; cf. ib. 102 and also 18, where Photius asserts, apparently by an error, that Diodore was condemned by the Fifth General Council of 553. Frgmts. ed by B. Corderius (Antwerp, 1643–6) and by A. *Mai; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxiii, 1545–1628. Syriac fragments ed. P. [A.] de *Lagarde, Analecta Syriaca (Leipzig, 1858), pp. 91–100. Further fragments in K. Staab (ed.), Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xv; 1933), pp. 82–112, and R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (S.T., cci; 1959), pp. 155–67. M. Brière, 'Quelques Fragments syriaques de Diodore, évêque de Tarse (378–394?)' in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, xxx (1946), pp. 231–83, incl. text and Fr. tr.; R. Abramowski, 'Der theologische Nachlass des Diodor von Tarsus' in Z.N.T.W., xlii (1949), pp. 19–69, with text. Commentary on Psalms ed. J.-M. Olivier (C.C., Series Graeca, vi, etc.; 1980 ff.). A. *Harnack, Diodor von Tarsus. Vier pseudojustinische Schriften als Eigentum Diodors nachgewiesen (T.U., xxi, 4; 1901). M. Richard, 'Les Traités de Cyrille d'Alexandrie contre Diodore et Théodore et les fragments dogmatiques de Diodore de Tarse' in Mélanges dédiés à la mémoire de Félix Grat, i (1946), pp. 99–116. R. Abramowski, 'Untersuchungen zu Diodor von Tarsus' in Z.N.T.W., xxx (1931), pp. 234–62; E. Schweizer, 'Diodor von Tarsus als Exeget', ib., xl (1941), pp. 33–75. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 304–11; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 318 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 397–401, with further bibl. P. Sherwood, O.S.B., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1657–60, with good bibl.; L. Abramowski in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 496–504, s.v. 'Diodore (4) de Tarse'.

DIOGNETUS, The Epistle to. A letter written by an unknown Christian to an otherwise unknown inquirer. It probably dates from the 2nd, or perhaps the 3rd, cent. Answering three questions (ch. 1), the author explains why paganism and Judaism cannot be tolerated (2–4), describes Christians as the soul of the world (5–6), and insists that Christianity is the unique revelation of God, whose love works man's salvation (7–10). Chs. 11 f., which contain a *Logos-doctrine and a comparison of the Church to Paradise, are widely regarded as a fragment of another work. The letter survived antiquity in a single 13th–14th cent. MS. (which was destroyed at Strassburg in 1870), in which it followed certain treatises wrongly ascribed to St. *Justin Martyr. See also Quadratus.

Ed. princeps, by H. *Stephanus (Paris, 1592). The Epistle is commonly included in edd. of the *Apostolic Fathers; also repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, ii. 1167–86. Good modern edd., with introd. and notes, by H. G. Meecham (Manchester, 1949) and by H. I. Marrou (S.C., xxxiii; 1951; ed. 2, xxxiii bis, 1965). Eng. trr. by L. B. Radford (1908) and in collected trr. of Apostolic Fathers. G. N. Bonwetsch and E. *Schwartz have argued that chs. 11 f. are to be ascribed to *Hippolytus. B. Billet, O.S.B., 'Les Lacunes de l' "A Diognète". Essai de solution' in Rech. S.C., xlv (1957), pp. 409–18. P. Nautin, Lettres et écrivains chrétiens des IIe et IIIe siècles (Patristica, ii; 1961), pp. 167–75 ('La Finale de l'Écrit à Diognète et quelques autres passages'). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 316–25; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 77 f., with bibl. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 248–53. P. Godet in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1366–9, s.v.

DIONYSIUS (1) THE AREOPAGITE. His conversion by St. Paul at Athens is recorded in Acts 17. 34. Dionysius (2) of Corinth calls him the first bishop of the Church at Athens. Later, confusion was caused by the attempt to identify Dionysius (3) of Paris with him, and to assign to him the writings on mystical theology described below under (6).

DIONYSIUS (2) (c. 170), Bp. of *Corinth. He wrote several letters briefly described by Eusebius (H.E., IV. xxiii), in one of which he thanks the Roman Church for assisting Corinth and mentions that *Clement's letter was habitually read in their Church. Feast day in the E., 8 Apr.

Four frgmts. of Dionysius' Ep. to Rome are preserved in Eusebius (H.E., IV. xxiii. 10–12, and II. xxv. 8), who also records that Dionysius wrote an Ep. to the Nicomedians directed against *Marcion (IV. xxiii. 4). Frgmts. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2, 1846), pp. 175–201. W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (1934), esp. pp. 110–12 and 128–31. P. Nautin, Lettres et écrivains chrétiens des IIe et IIIe siècles (Patristica, ii; 1961), pp. 13–32 ('Denys de Corinthe et ses correspondants'). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 439–42; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 109. P. Nautin in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 261 f., s.v. 'Denys (9) de Corinthe'.

DIONYSIUS (3) St., of Paris (c. 250), also St. Denys, patron saint of France. Acc. to *Gregory of Tours (6th cent.), he was one of seven 'bishops' sent to convert Gaul and, after becoming Bp. of Paris, suffered martyrdom. In 626 his remains were translated to King Dagobert's foundation at *St.-Denis, near Paris. In the 8th cent. it was believed that he had been sent by *Clement of Rome, c. A.D. 90; and in the 9th-cent. Life by Hilduin, Abbot of St. Denis (d. 840), he was further identified with Dionysius the Areopagite (1), and consequently believed to be the author of the Pseudo-Dionysian writings (6). Feast day, 9 Oct.

He is commemorated with Sts. Rusticus and Eleutherius. Gregory of Tours, Hist. Franc., i. 31. AA.SS., Oct. IV (1780), pp. 865–987. B.H.L., i (1898–9), Nos. 2171–89. Good survey of problem in Eng., with reff. to lit. to date, by S. McK. Crosby, The Abbey of St.-Denis 475–1122, i (New Haven–London, 1942), pp. 24–40 ('The Legend of Saint Denis') and pp. 41–52 ('The Cult of Saint Denis'). R. J. Loenertz, O.P., 'La Légende parisienne de S. Denys l'Aréopagite. Sa genèse et son premier témoin' in Anal. Boll., lxix (1951), pp. 217–37. R. Bossuat, 'Traditions populaires relatives au martyre et à la sépulture de saint Denis' in Le Moyen-Age, lxii (1956), pp. 479–509. R. Aubert in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 263–5, s.v. 'Denys (12)'.

DIONYSIUS (4), The Great (d. c. 264), Bp. of *Alexandria. A pupil of *Origen, Dionysius was in turn head of the Catechetical School (from c. 233) and Bp. of Alexandria (from 247). During the *Decian persecution (250) he fled from the city, was captured, escaped, and lived in hiding. He returned (?251), but was banished during the persecution of Valerian (257). Again he returned to face civil war, famine, and plague, and died an old man c. 264. Feast day, 17 Nov.

His importance as a theologian rests on the writings evoked by the many controversies in which he was engaged. He decided to readmit the lapsed to the Church (see Cyprian) and, with Pope *Stephen, not to rebaptize heretics and schismatics, though he refused to break with the Churches which did so. Being Origen's pupil, he attacked *Sabellianism, but he was himself accused of tritheism by *Dionysius of Rome (5, below), who, however, accepted his defence. Later, *Athanasius defended, but *Basil rejected, his orthodoxy. He also opposed *Paul of Samosata. He shewed notable independence as a Biblical critic, setting out strong arguments for denying the common authorship of the Fourth Gospel and Rev.

His writings have survived mainly in extracts preserved by *Eusebius, *Athanasius, and others.

Frgmts. ed. S. de Magistris (Rome, 1796); also in J. P. Migne, PG., x, 1233–1344, 1575–1602. Crit. ed., with introd. and notes, by C. L. Feltoe, 'Cambridge Patristic Texts', 1904. Eng. tr., also by C. L. Feltoe, S.P.C.K., 1918. F. C. *Conybeare, 'Newly discovered Letters of Dionysius of Alexandria to the Popes Stephen and Xystus' in E.H.R., xxv (1910), pp. 111–14. [F.] Dittrich, Dionysius der Grosse von Alexandrien (1867). P. Nautin, Lettres et écrivains chrétiens des IIe et IIIe siècles (Patristica, ii; 1961), pp. 151–65. Marta Sordi, 'Dionigi d'Alessandria, Commodiano ed alcuni problemi della storia del III secolo' in Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Serie III, Rendiconti, xxxv (1963), pp. 123–46. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 203–27; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 210 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 101–9. B. F. *Westcott in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 850–2; A. van Roey in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 248–53, s.v. 'Denys (4) Le Grand'. W. A. Bienert, Dionysius von Alexandrien (Patristische Texte und Studien, xxi; 1978).

DIONYSIUS (5) (d. 268), Bp. of *Rome from 259. Little is known of him except his controversy on *Subordinationism with *Dionysius (4) of Alexandria. *Basil of Caesarea (Ep. 70) records that he sent help to the Church of Caesarea when it was invaded by barbarians (perh. 264). Feast day, 26 Dec.

Genuine and spurious writings in J. P. Migne, PL, v. 99–136. The chief authorities are scattered refr. in Eusebius, H.E., VII, and in *Athanasius, De Decretis, xxv and xxvi, and De Sententiis Dionysii, passim. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 664 f. B. Botte, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 247 f., s.v. 'Denys (3) (Saint)'.

DIONYSIUS (6), the Pseudo-Areopagite (c. 500), mystical theologian. The name given to the author of a corpus of theological writings to which the *Monophysites appealed at a colloquy at Constantinople in 533, attributing them to Dionysius (1) of Athens. Though at an early date Hypatius, Bp. of Ephesus (c. 520–40), rejected the attribution, it was normally accepted until, and even after, the 16th cent. Since the author draws on Proclus (411–85) and is first cited by *Severus, Patr. of Antioch (c. 513), he is believed to have written about 500, probably in Syria.

His extant writings, which combine *Neoplatonism with Christianity, are the following: (1) The 'Celestial Hierarchy' (Περὶ τῆς οὐρανίας ἱεραρχίας), which explains how the nine orders of angels mediate God to man. (2) The 'Ecclesiastical Hierarchy' (Περὶ τῆς ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἱεραρχίας), which deals with the Sacraments and the three 'ways' of spiritual life—purgation, illumination, and union. These are explained as the three means by which human nature is deified. (3) The 'Divine Names' (Περὶ θείων ὀνομάτων), which examines the being and attributes of God. (4) The 'Mystical Theology' (Περὶ μυστικῆς θεολογίας), which describes the ascent of the soul to union with God. There also survive ten letters, and Dionysius mentions other parts of an elaborate theological system, probably never achieved.

The Pseudo-Dionysian writings aim at achieving a synthesis between Christian dogma and Neoplatonist thought. Their leading idea, which has made them the charter of Christian mysticism, is the intimate union (ἕνωσις) between God and the soul, and the progressive deification (θείωσις) of man. This is to be obtained by a process of 'unknowing', in which the soul leaves behind the perceptions of the senses as well as the reasoning of the intellect. The soul will then enter an obscurity in which it will be increasingly illuminated by the 'Ray of Divine Darkness' and brought ultimately to the knowledge of the ineffable Being that transcends affirmation and negation alike. The relations between God and the world are established by a hierarchically graded series of beings, the nine choirs of angels. They are divided into three orders, to which, on the terrestrial plane, corresponds the threefold hierarchy of bishops, priests, and deacons, both, together with the Sacraments, ordained to lead man to 'deification'. There are three stages in the spiritual life by which this goal is reached: the purgative, the illuminative, and the unitive way, a division which has become the groundwork of subsequent treatises on the mystic life.

The supposed apostolic authority of these writings, added to their intrinsic value, caused the 'Pseudo-Dionysius' to exercise a profound influence on medieval theology both in the E. and in the W. In the E. Churches his works were regarded almost as a 'Summa Theologica', commented on by, among others, John of Scythopolis, St. *Maximus the Confessor, and George Pachymeres. In the W. the approval of St. *Gregory the Great and *Martin I, and esp. that of the *Lateran Council of 649 which quoted them against the *Monothelites, established the Pseudo-Dionysian writings as an uncontested doctrinal authority. They became generally known in the W. through the translation by John Scotus *Erigena, and despite their obscurity of style soon came to be one of the bases of medieval theology. They were commented on by such doctors as *Hugh of St.-Victor, Robert *Grossteste, St. *Albert the Great, St. *Thomas Aquinas, and St. *Bonaventure; and the medieval mystics, e.g. Meister *Eckhart, John *Tauler, the author of 'The *Cloud of Unknowing', and Richard *Rolle, are deeply indebted to them. A great change in the earlier estimate of them took place in the 16th cent., when not only the Reformers but a few Catholic scholars such as T. *Cajetan, J. *Sirmond, and

D. *Petavius contested their authenticity, which was warmly defended by C. *Baronius, St. Robert *Bellarmine, L. *Lessius, and others. Only the researches of modern scholars, esp. J. Stiglmayr and H. Koch, have definitely established their late 5th cent. date and the relations of the author with moderate *Monophysitism.

Crit. ed. of 'Celestial Hierarchy' by G. Heil, with notes and Fr. tr. by M. de Gandillac and introd. by R. Roques (S.C., lviii; 1958). For other works there is only that of B. Corderius, S.J. (2 vols. fol., Antwerp, 1634), which has frequently been repr., e.g. in J. P. Migne, PG, iii and iv (incl. Lat. tr. and commentaries on Dionysius). Erigena's translation is repr. from the Cologne ed. of 1556 and other sources in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxii, 1023–1194. For other Lat. versions see P. Chevalier, O.S.B. (ed.), Dionysiaca. Recueil donnant l'ensemble des traductions latines des ouvrages attribués au Denys de l'Aréopage (2 vols., Paris, 1937–50). Eng. tr. of his works by J. Parker (2 vols., London–Oxford, 1897–99); further tr. of the 'Divine Names' and 'Mystical Theology' by C. E. Rolt (Translations of Christian Literature. Series 1, Greek Texts, 1920), with introd., pp. 1–47, and bibl., pp. 47–9. Fr. tr. of his works, with introd. and bibl., by M. de Gandillac (Bibliothèque Philosophique, 1945). J. Stiglmayr, S.J., 'Der Neuplatoniker Proclus als Vorlage des sog. Dionysius Areopagita in der Lehre vom Übel' in Hist. J., xvi (1895), pp. 253–73 and 721–48. H. Koch, Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita in seinen Beziehungen zum Neoplatonismus und Mysterienwesen (Forschungen zur christlichen Litteratur- und Dogmengeschichte, i, Hft. 2–3; 1900). E. Honigmann, Pierre l'Ibérien et les écrits du Pseudo-Denys l'Aréopagite (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires, xlvii, 3; 1932). G. Théry, Études dionysiennes (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, xvi and xix; 1932–7). H. F. Dondaine, O.P., Le Corpus dionysien de l'Université de Paris au XIIIe siècle (Rome, 1953). R. Roques, L'Univers dionysien. Structure hiérarchique du monde selon le Pseudo-Denys (Théologie, xxix; 1954). W. Völker, Kontemplation und Ekstase bei Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita (Wiesbaden, 1958). I. P. Sheldon-Williams in A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), pp. 457–72, with select bibl. p. 685. A. van Daele, S.J., Indices Pseudo-Dionysiani (Louvain, 1941). Überweg, ii, pp. 119 and 126–8, with bibl., p. 667 f. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 282–99; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 501–5, with bibl. R. Roques and others in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 244–429, s.v. 'Denys (2), l'Aréopagite (Le Pseudo-)', with bibl.; R. Roques–M. Cappuyns, O.S.B.–R. Aubert in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 265–310, s.v. 'Denys (14) le Pseudo-Aréopagite'.

DIONYSIUS (7) EXIGUUS, a Scythian monk who lived in Rome c. 500–50. Acc. to *Cassiodorus, he dubbed himself 'Exiguus' out of humility. Very little is known of his life. He is famous for his contributions to ecclesiastical chronology and canon law. When called upon to construct a new Easter cycle, he abandoned the era of *Diocletian, and (wrongly) accepting 753 A.U.C. as the year of the Incarnation, introduced the system still in use. This 'Christian Era' was adopted in England at the Synod of *Whitby, 664, and later became widespread on the Continent. His corpus of canon law was the first collection to gain wide influence. In its second edition, which was its classic form, it contained the *Apostolic Canons; the canons of the Councils of *Nicaea, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Laodicaea, *Constantinople, *Chalcedon and *Sardica, and of *Carthage, 419; and forty-one Papal decretals from *Siricius (384–98) to Anastasius II (496–8). This collection was in general use in the 6th and 7th cents., and, somewhat augmented, was sent by Pope *Hadrian to *Charlemagne in 774. It was accepted by the Frankish Church at Aachen in 802. Dionysius also translated many important Greek patristic writings into Latin.

Works in J. P. Migne, P.L., lxvii, 9–520. The Dionysian Canons are printed in all early canonical collections; most accessible in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 139–316. Crit. text in E.O.M.I.A. (under each council). 'First Recension' of Canons ed. A. Strewe, Die Canonensammlung des Dionysius Exiguus in der ersten Redaktion (1931). F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts, i (1870), pp. 132–6, 422–40, 960–5. H. Wurm, Studien und Texte zur Dekretalensammlung des Dionysius Exiguus (1939). W. M. Peitz, S.J., Dionysius Exiguus-Studien, ed. H. Foerster (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxxiii; 1960); severely criticized, cf. H. Schäferdiek in Z.K.G., lxxiv (1963), pp. 353–68. C. W. Jones, 'The Victorian and Dionysiac Paschal Tablets in the West' in Speculum, ix (1934), pp. 408–21, esp. pp. 413–21. B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie, pt. ii: Dionysius Exiguus, der Begründer der christlichen Ära (Abh. (Berl.), 1938, No. 8), pp. 59–87. Good survey in Bardenhewer, v, pp. 224–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 480 and 251. J. Rambaud-Buhot in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1131–52, s.v. 'Denys le Petit'.

DIONYSIUS (8) THE CARTHUSIAN (Denys van Leeuwen, Denys Ryckel) (1402–71), theologian and mystic. He was educated at the University of *Cologne and entered the Charterhouse of Roermund in 1423. He compiled a series of very extensive commentaries on the OT and NT, edited or commented on the works of *Boethius, *Peter Lombard, *John Climacus, and those attributed to *Dionysius the Areopagite (by whom he was much influenced), and also wrote books on moral theology, ecclesiastical discipline, homilies, and a tract against the Mohammedans. His writings became very popular in the centuries succeeding his death, though Dionysius has little real claim to be considered an original writer. His mystical experiences gained for him the title of 'Doctor Ecstaticus'. In 1451 he accompanied Cardinal *Nicholas of Cusa to Germany in the cause of Church reform and to preach a crusade against the Turks.

Earliest complete ed. by D. Loer, with the aid of J. Host von Romberg (20 vols., Cologne, 1534–40). New ed. by the Carthusians, Montreuil-sur-Mer and (later) Tournai, and Parkminster, 42 vols. in 44, 1896–1935 [Vols. 1–14, Comm. on whole Bible; 15 f., on Dionysius the Areopagite; 17 f., 'Summa Fidei' and 'Dialogion'; 19–25 bis, Comm. on *Sentences + separate index; 26–8, on Boethius, *Cassian and John Climacus; 29–32, Sermons; 33–42, 'Opera Minora' + additional index vol. Vol. 1 also contains a Life by D. Loer (orig. publd. 1532) and a list by Dionysius of his 187 writings and of the writers he had studied]. Studies by H. Welters (Roermonde, 1882), A. Mougel (Montreuil-sur-Mer, 1896) and P. Albers (Utrecht, 1897). K. Krogh Tonnig, Der letzte Scholastiker (Freiburg i.Br., 1904). P. Teeuwen, Dionysius de Karthuizer en de philosophisch-theologische Stroomingen aan de Keulsche Universiteit (Brussels, 1938). M. Beer, Dionysius' des Kartäusers Lehre vom Desiderium Naturale des Menschen nach der Gottesschau (Münchener Theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, xxviii; 1963); N. Maginot, Der Actus Humanus Moralis unter dem Einfluss des Heiligen Geistes nach Dionysius Carthusianus (ib., xxxv; 1968). Useful summary in English by A. Stoelin, 'Denys the Carthusian' in Month, New Series, xxv (1961), pp. 218–30. S. Autore in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 436–48, s.v. 'Denys le Chartreux'; A. Stoelin in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 430–49, s.v. 'Denys le Chartreux'.

DIOSCORUS (d. 454), Patr. of *Alexandria. During St. *Cyril's patriarchate he became Archdeacon of Alexandria, and on his death in 444 succeeded to the see. When c. 448 *Eutyches began to attract attention by his Christological doctrines Dioscorus gave him his support, and in 449 presided over the '*Latrocinium' at Ephesus. Here he deposed *Flavian, Bp. of Constantinople. His fortunes changed with the reversal of theological policy on the death of the Emp. *Theodosius II in 450. At the Third Session of the Council of *Chalcedon in 451, when Eutychianism was condemned, he was deposed and excommunicated, and banished by the civil authorities to Gangra in Paphlagonia. A few of his letters, and a legendary panegyric of his life by the deacon Theopistus, have survived in Syriac.

Our most reliable source on Dioscorus is the 'Acta' of the Council of Chalcedon (q.v.). Syr. text of 'Life' by Theopistus, with Fr. tr., ed. F. Nau in Journal Asiatique, Sér. 10, i (1903), pp. 5–108 and 241–310. F. Haase, 'Patriarch Dioskur I von Alexandrien nach monophysitischen Quellen' in M. Sdralek (ed.), Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen, vi (1908), pp. 141–233. J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (1909), pp. 84–93 ('Les Écrits de Dioscore I d'Alexandrie'). Id., 'Autour du cas de Dioscore d'Alexandrie' in Muséon, lix (1946), pp. 515–28, incl. Syriac text, with Fr. tr., of document in defence of Diodorus. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 78 f. W. *Bright in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 854–62; N. Charlier in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 508–14, with extensive bibl.

DIPPEL, JOHANN KONRAD (1673–1734), German *Pietist and alchemist. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he was educated at Giessen university, became a private tutor, and in the controversy between Lutheran orthodoxy and Pietism at first upheld the former, but later, under G. *Arnold's influence, became himself a Pietist. He wrote many controversial works in defence of his new convictions, the best known being Orthodoxia Orthodoxorum (1697) and Papismus Protestantium Vapulans (1698). They emphasized the alleged contrast between Christianity and the Church, between ethics and dogma, and between right living and right doctrine, maintaining that the development of Christianity from *Constantine onwards was a gradual declension from the high ideals of primitive times. His opposition to Protestant orthodoxy aroused the hostility of the Lutheran ecclesiastical authorities, who forbade him to issue further theological publications. He now turned to chemistry, becoming the inventor of the Prussian Blue, and also occupied himself with alchemy. In 1704 he came to Berlin, but he had to leave it in 1707 because of his continued Pietist activities and found refuge in Holland. Here he took his medical degree at *Leyden (1711), but he was again expelled for his theological views. In 1714 he went to Altona, which at that time belonged to Denmark, but becoming embroiled with the government in 1719 he was condemned to lifelong captivity on the island of Bornholm. Having been freed and expelled from Denmark in 1726, he went to Sweden, where, through his influence, Pietism began to gain ground, so that the orthodox Lutheran clergy brought about his expulsion. He now went back to Germany, where he finally found a refuge at Berleburg. The main inspiration of his life was his belief that the Christian religion consisted not in a dogmatic creed but in the practice of charity and self-sacrifice.

His Works were edited (3 vols.) at Berleburg in 1747. Life by W. Bender (Bonn, 1882). K. L. Voss, Christianus Democritus. Das Menschenbild bei Johann Conrad Dippel (Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, Beiheft xii; 1970).

DIPTYCHS. The lists of names of living and departed Christians for whom special prayer is made in the Greek and Latin Eucharistic Liturgies. Though until recently read secretly in the W., in early times the diptychs were recited publicly, and the inclusion or exclusion of a name was held to be a sign of communion or of excommunication. The term is derived from the two-leaved folder (Gk. δίπτυχον) within which the lists were written. See also Book of Life.

A. F. Gori, Thesaurus Veterum Diptychorum Consularium et Ecclesiasticorum (3 vols., Florence, 1759; with full discussion and reproductions of 'Consular Diptychs', i.e. diptychs, usually with elaborately incised covers, which were distributed by consuls on taking office and became the artistic model for ecclesiastical diptychs). R. Delbrück, Die Consulardiptychen und verwandte Denkmäler (1929; plates 1926–9). E. *Bishop in R. H. *Connolly, The Liturgical Homilies of Narsai (Texts and Studies, viii, no. 1; 1909), pp. 97–114. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (pt. 1; 1920), cols. 1045–94, s.v. 'Diptyques (Liturgie)', and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., ib., cols. 1094–1170, s.v. 'Diptyques (Archéologie)'; O. Stegmüller in R.A.C., iii (1957), cols. 1138–49, s.v. 'Diptychon'.

DIRECTORY OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT, The (1644). An English translation of a Book of *Discipline compiled by W. *Travers in Latin c. 1586 (not, as is sometimes said, of his Full and Plain Declaration of Ecclesiastical Discipline of 1574). The Book was divided into 'Disciplina Sacra' and 'Disciplina Synodica'. The work circulated in manuscript among the Elizabethan Puritans, many of whom formally subscribed its articles. It was issued in 1644 in the interests of the projected introduction of the Presbyterian system into England.

A facsimile edition of the 1644 translation was published in 1872 (ed. P. Lorimer). F. *Paget, Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (1907), Appendices III and IV. A. F. Scott Pearson, Thomas Cartwright and Elizabethan Puritanism (1925), pp. 257–9 and passim.

DIRGE (Lat. Dirige). A traditional name for the *Office for the Dead. The office, which dates from the Middle Ages, is contained in the ancient *breviaries and in the early English *primers. The name, deriving from the former antiphon, 'Dirige Domine Deus meus in conspectu tuo viam meam' (Ps. 5. 8), was originally confined to the morning office; but it later came to include the *Vespers (the '*Placebo') sung on the evening before. It has often been set to music, one of its most famous settings being the Mattutino di Morti of David Perez of Lisbon (1752). The term has for some time been obsolete except in figurative use.

DIRIMENT IMPEDIMENT. In *canon law, a fact or circumstance relating to a person that makes him or her incapable of contracting a valid marriage. It is to be distinguished from a 'prohibitory impediment', which only renders a marriage unlawful, but not null and void. Acc. to present RC canon law, the existing diriment impediments include insufficient age, impotency, an already existing marriage, abduction, solemn religious vows, holy orders, disparity of religion, affinity, and consanguinity; but such of the impediments as are not of Divine Law may be dispensed by the ecclesiastical authorities for good reason.

J. Freisen, Geschichte des canonischen Eherechts bis zum Verfall der Glossenlitteratur (1888), esp. pp. 221–7. O. D. Watkins, Holy Marriage [1924], pp. 68–71. G. H. Joyce, S.J., Christian Marriage (1933), passim. E. Valton in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 2440–99; A. Bride in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 261–322, both s.v. 'Empêchements de mariage', passim.

DISCALCED (from Lat. discalceare, 'to make unshod'). The term is applied to certain religious orders and congregations whose members wear sandals, e.g. the Discalced *Carmelites, *Trinitarians, and *Passionists. The custom was followed by the primitive E. monks, who went barefooted, after Mt. 10. 10. It was introduced into the W. by St. *Francis of Assisi, and was followed in its most rigorous form, i.e. without any kind of footwear, by the Discalced *Franciscans, founded by St. *Peter of Alcántara. Today sandals are always worn, either with or without stockings, though in the latter case exceptions are usually made in particularly severe climates.

DISCIPLES OF CHRIST. The religious body which originated in the U.S.A. in 1811 through the work of Alexander *Campbell (q.v.) as a group within *Presbyterianism and was organized as a separate religious communion in 1827. Its members were largely influenced in doctrine and practice by the work of John *Glas, who seceded from the Church of Scotland in 1728, and Robert Sandeman (1718–71), who propagated Glas's views in New England. They have been variously known as 'Campbellites', 'Disciples of Christ', and 'Churches of Christ'. The Scriptures are the exclusive basis of faith and all credal formulae are rejected. The churches are congregationally organized, practise believers' baptism and celebrate the Lord's Supper as the chief act of worship every Sunday. They have always taken a prominent part in education and founded a number of universities in the U.S.A. and elsewhere. They have also been keenly alert to the problem of Church unity and in modern times have joined in a number of unions, e.g. in *South India. In Britain the majority of the 'Churches of Christ' joined the *United Reformed Church in 1981; most of those outside this union belong to the Fellowship of Churches of Christ (formed in 1980), with some 850 members. In the U.S.A. there are three main groups, with a total membership approaching four million.

E. Gates, The Disciples of Christ (New York, 1905); T. [W.] Philips, The Church of Christ (New York and London, 1905). W. E. Garrison, Religion Follows the Frontier. A History of the Disciples of Christ (New York, 1931); id.–A. T. De Groot, The Disciples of Christ. A History (St. Louis, 1948; revised ed., 1958). B. B. Tyler, 'A History of the Disciples of Christ' in The American Church History Series, xii (New York, 1894), pp. 1–162. W. Robinson, What the Churches of Christ Stand for. The Origin, Growth, and Message of a Nineteenth-Century Religious Movement (Birmingham, 1926), with bibl. J. Gray (ed.), Towards Christian Union. Twenty-five years of Thought and Action in Churches of Christ, 1935–1960 ([Leicester], 1960). H. L. Willett in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), p. 713 f., s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to Campbell, A.

DISCIPLINA ARCANI (Lat., 'Discipline of the Secret'). The practice ascribed to the early Church of concealing certain theological doctrines and religious usages from *catechumens and pagans. The term is said to have been coined by the Calvinist J. *Daillé (d. 1670); but in 1614 I. *Casaubon had already explained certain silences of the early Fathers on the supposition that they imitated the secrecy of the mystery religions. Daillé himself held that the practice was mainly educational, to give catechumens a greater desire and reverence for the Sacraments. A third explanation was put forward by E. *Schelstrate, who held that it was of Dominical institution and practised by the Apostles, and that its application extended not only to *Baptism and the *Eucharist, but also explained the scarcity or absence of early Christian evidences on such subjects as the *Trinity, the *Mass, the number of the *Sacraments, *Transubstantiation and the cult of the *Saints. The discussion continued through the 18th and 19th cents., RC theologians generally defending Schelstrate's theory, whereas most Protestant scholars (E. *Hatch, N. Bonwetsch, and others) followed Casaubon in tracing the practice to a pagan model.

In recent times the traditional theories have been generally abandoned. Acceptance of theological development makes them largely superfluous. It is unnecessary to assume direct borrowing from the mysteries, but early Christians were moved by similar religious feelings to a restricted acceptance of a widespread practice. It was adopted partly through the reticence necessary in an age of persecution, partly through the natural human instinct to withdraw the most intimate and sacred elements of faith from the knowledge of outsiders; and it was reflected in the custom of not admitting catechumens to the central part of the Eucharist. Allusions to it are found in *Tertullian, St. *Cyprian, and *Origen, and more definitely in 4th and 5th cent. writers, among them St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Etheria and *St. Chrysostom for the E., and St. *Ambrose, *Innocent I and St. *Augustine for the W. By the 6th cent. the practice seems to have disappeared.

I. Casaubon, De Rebus Sacris et Ecclesiasticis (London, 1614), Exercitio XVI, pars xliii, 'Mysterium' (pp. 541–67). E. A. Schelstrate, De Disciplina Arcani (Rome, 1685). P. *Batiffol, Études d'histoire et de théologie positive (1902), pp. 3–41; F. X. Funk, 'Das Alter der Arkandisziplin', repr. in his Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, iii (1907), pp. 42–57. G. Mensching, Das heilige Schweigen (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, xx, Hft. 2; 1926), pp. 125–33. N. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 51–5, s.v. 'Arkandisciplin'; P. Batiffol in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1738–58, s.v. 'Arcane'; E. Vacandard in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 1497–1513, s.v. 'Arcane'; F. Oppenheim, O.S.B., in E.C., i (1949), cols. 1793–7, s.v. 'Arcano, Disciplina dell' '; O. Perler in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 667–76, s.v. 'Arkandisziplin', all with bibl.

DISCIPLINE. The word has several religious connotations.

(1) The totality of ecclesiastical laws and customs regulating the religious and moral life of the Church. In this sense it comprises all Church activities not regulated by Divine law, such as the administration of the Sacraments, offices, feasts, devotions, etc.

(2) In a more restricted sense, a system of mortification, e.g. that involved in the religious life (monastic discipline).

(3) A scourge of knotted cords for use as an instrument of penance.

(4) As a technical term, the word is applied esp. to the *Calvinist polity, which, in contrast with that of M. *Luther, was built up on rigid principles. Its object is the good of the offender, the purity of the Church, and the glory of God. It is the duty of the consistories, formed by elders and pastors, to fix penalties for neglect of religious duties, culminating in excommunication. In grave cases, offenders were formerly handed over to the state. This practice was taken up by the *Presbyterians, who laid down their principles in the *Book of Common Order and the *First Book of Discipline (qq.v.). In the past disciplinary measures were often taken in the face of the congregation. Nowadays cases are generally dealt with by the minister. Processes against a minister are begun before his presbytery and appeal can be made to the *General Assembly.

W. Dürig, 'Disciplina. Eine Studie zum Bedeutungsumfang des Wortes in der Sprache der Liturgie und der Väter' in Sacris Erudiri, iv (1952), pp. 245–79, with reff.

DISCIPLINE, Books of. The 'First Book of Discipline' (1560), drawn up at Edinburgh at the government's request by J. *Knox and five of his fellow-Reformers as a plan for the ordering and maintenance of the new Scottish Church, was an adaptation of the Genevan 'Ordonnances' to the needs of a nation. Its nine heads were: (1) Doctrine; (2) Sacraments; (3) Abolishing of Idolatry; (4) Ministers and their Lawful Election; (5) Provision for the Ministers; (6) Rents and Patrimony of the Kirk; (7) Ecclesiastical Discipline; (8) Election of Elders, Deacons, etc.; and (9) The Policy of the Church. Knox's more ardent supporters welcomed its rigid discipline, but parts of the Book were obnoxious to the nobility, esp. the proposed system of national education, which threatened the newly possessed landlords with the loss of their revenues. Hence, civil authority being needed for its enforcement, the Book remained a dead-letter.

The so-called 'Second Book of Discipline' (1578), chiefly the work of A. *Melville, was prepared as a manifesto of the stricter Presbyterians against efforts to restore a modified episcopacy. It was endorsed by the General Assembly in 1581, though this Book also never obtained complete civil recognition.

The text of the First and Second Books of Discipline is pr. in D. *Calderwood, The History of the Kirk of Scotland (8 vols., 1842–9), ii, pp. 51–120, and iii, pp. 529–55, respectively. J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), pp. 163–76 and 198–201. First Book ed. J. K. Cameron (Edinburgh, 1972).

DISCUS (Gk. δίσκος, δισκάριον). In the E. Church, the plate on which the bread of the Eucharist is offered and consecrated, corresponding to the *paten in the W. It is commonly somewhat larger and more concave and normally stands on a central foot. It is never placed on the chalice. The *Last Supper is sometimes represented on its inner surface.

DISMAS. The traditional name of the Good Thief (Lk. 23. 39–43) crucified with Christ. The name of the other is said to have been Gestas.

The name, from the Gk. δυσμή, 'dying', is found in the 'Gospel of *Nicodemus', ch. 10; cf. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (ed. 2, 1876), pp. 192 f., 362. A. Bessières, Le Bon Larron, Saint Dismas [1937]. H. Lesêtre in Dict. Bibl., iv (1908), cols. 94–6, s.v. 'Larron'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1402–4, s.v. 'Larrons (Les Deux)'; J. Blinzler in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 419, s.v.

DISPENSATIONS. Licences granted by ecclesiastical authority to do some act otherwise canonically illegal, or for the remittance of a penalty for breaking such a rule. The practice of granting dispensations began very early. By the 5th cent. the bishops of Rome were employing the dispensing power, and a similar power was also used on occasion by other bishops, councils, and even (in minor matters) parish priests. By the later Middle Ages the dispensation had become more or less a prerogative of the Pope, and this position, with the elimination of minor abuses, was maintained by the Council of *Trent. The *canon law, by the revision of 1917 (esp. cans. 80–86), holds that a dispensation is a relaxation of the law in a special case, which may be granted by the lawgiver or by an authorized power, and that no authority below the Pope can dispense with the general laws of the Church without pontifical permission. The Second *Vatican Council, in its decree on the Office of Bishops (Christus Dominus, 1965), however, gave diocesan bishops ordinary power to dispense from general laws of the Church in particular cases, except in matters specially reserved for the Pope. These last were further defined by Pope *Paul VI in 1966.

All writers on the subject are agreed that there must be an adequate reason for the use of the dispensing power. Thus St. *Basil urges that the needs of the time and the advantages of the Church are the two main requisites for a just dispensation and this has been the consistent teaching of later canonists. The chief objects of the dispensing power are in relation to the ordination of clergy, the translation of bishops, vows, marriage, and divorce. The Church can suspend or abrogate, however, only laws of its own making, and not such as are natural (ius naturale) or Divine (ius divinum).

In England the dispensing power of the Pope was eliminated in 1534 by the legislation of *Henry VIII, but it was bestowed in a restricted form on the Abp. of Canterbury. It has been rarely used and was further limited in 1838 by the Pluralities Act.

Early treatment of the subject by *Ivo of Chartres, 'Prologue in Decretum' (PL, clxi, 47–60). Classical discussions by F. *Suarez, S.J., Tractatus de Legibus (Antwerp, 1613), pp. 449–95 (lib. vi, capp. 10–24), and P. de *Marca, De Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (Paris, 1641), pp. 512–56 (lib. iii, 13–15). W. J. Sparrow Simpson, Dispensations (1933), with bibl. A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, vol. I, tom. v: De Privilegiis, De Dispensationibus (Mechlin–Rome, 1939), pp. 293–459. M. A. Stiegler Dispensation, Dispensationswesen und Dispensationsrecht im Kirchenrecht, i (all publd., 1901). J. Brys, De Dispensatione in Iure Canonico praesertim apud Decretistas et Decretalistas usque ad Medium Saeculum Decimum Quartum (Louvain thesis, 1925). Dispensation in Practice and Theory with special reference to the Anglican Churches. Being the Report of a Commission appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1935 under the Chairmanship of E. J. Palmer (1944). D. S. Chambers, Faculty Office Registers 1534–1549. A Calendar of the first two Registers of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Faculty Office edited with introduction and index (Oxford, 1966). J. Besson in C.E., v (1909), pp. 41–6, s.v.; A. Villien in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1428–40, s.v. 'Dispenses'; R. Naz in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1284–96, s.v. 'Dispense'.

DISPERSION, The. See Diaspora.

DISRUPTION, The (1843). The great split in the Established Church of *Scotland, when the *Free Church of Scotland (at first, 'Free Protesting Church of Scotland') was formed by the secession of 474 (out of 1203) ministers on 18 May 1843. The dispute centred in the demand of the presbyteries for a voice ('veto') in matters of patronage. In 1833 legislation (the 'Veto Act') had been introduced into the *General Assembly to secure the right to object to a presentee to a benefice on reasonable grounds. After being thrown out in that year, in 1834, largely through the exertions of T. *Chalmers (q.v.), the Act passed. The consequence was a succession of conflicts in the next decade between the General Assembly and the civil court ('Court of Session'), culminating in the Disruption. At first the destinies of the Free Church were in the hands of T. Chalmers, who was elected the first moderator and organized the Church with great ability. He created a Sustentation Fund for the support of the clergy by imposing a subscription of one penny a week from every member of the Church. The schism was not finally healed until 1929.

R. Buchanan, The Ten Years' Conflict (2 vols., 1849); T. Brown, Annals of the Disruption; with Extracts from the narratives of ministers who left the Scottish Establishment in 1843 (1884). G. D. Henderson, Heritage. A Study of the Disruption (1943); H. Watt, Thomas Chalmers and the Disruption (1943). J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), pp. 334–69.

DISSENTERS. In a religious context, those who separate themselves from the communion of the Established Church. Originally the term included RCs, but it is now usually restricted to Protestant Dissenters. It is occasionally used in contradistinction to 'Nonconformists' of those who not only dissent from the national Church as at present established, but disagree with the principle of established Churches.

DISSENTERS' MARRIAGE ACT. The Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Will. IV, c. 85) which relieved Nonconformists of the necessity of marriage in an Anglican church, and allowed it to be solemnized in any registered place of religious worship. It provided that marriage could also take place in a registrar's office, or acc. to the usages of *Jews and *Quakers. By a further Act of 1898, the presence of the registrar at the chapel, required by the Act of 1836, was no longer demanded.

DISSOLUTION OF THE MONASTERIES, The. The wealth of the English monasteries, a certain moral laxity, and what many regarded as their undue stress on the contemplative aspect of the religious life, had made them in the later Middle Ages an object of criticism. Spasmodic attempts at reform had met with little success and various small suppressions had taken place. It was, however, from personal motives that *Henry VIII effected the complete abolition of the system. To replenish his treasury and to facilitate the establishment of the royal supremacy in ecclesiastical affairs, he decided first on the suppression of the smaller monasteries. A biased report (based on a hurried visitation of a fraction of the monasteries involved) declared the evil condition of the houses, and in 1536 the Act for the Dissolution of Smaller Monasteries (27 Hen. VIII, c. 28) was passed. It ordered the suppression of all religious houses having an annual value of less than £200, some 250 in all being involved. The popularity of monasticism in some rural areas, coupled with economic and other grievances, led to the popular rising known as the *Pilgrimage of Grace, which broke out in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire in Oct. 1536. It was quickly put down, however, by cajolery and force. Unscrupulous royal agents vigorously pushed on individual suppressions of the greater religious houses, and in 1539 the Act for the Dissolution of the Greater Monasteries (31 Hen. VIII, c. 13) completed the process by vesting in the Crown all monasteries that had been or should be surrendered; the last houses surrendered in the spring of 1540. The King's principal adviser throughout was his Vicar General, Thomas *Cromwell (q.v.).

Effected in a brutal and highly unscrupulous manner, the Dissolution of the Monasteries met with small resistance. Care was taken to observe the letter of the law, and the subsequent economic and social dislocation is now known to have been considerably less than used to be thought. The religious, with the exception of the friars, were pensioned, and a considerable number in due course obtained benefices as secular clergy. Nuns, debarred from ecclesiastical office and, until the reign of *Edward VI, marriage, had mostly to subsist on very meagre pensions. The incidental losses to charity, art, and learning were considerable, many precious MSS. and church furnishings perishing through destruction and decay.

Most of the spoils of the Dissolution sooner or later passed from the Crown to the Tudor nobility and gentry, but part of the proceeds went to the foundation of the six new sees of Bristol, *Chester, *Gloucester, *Oxford, *Peterborough, and *Westminster (the last soon suppressed). Where the local parishioners had their altar in the conventual church, this was spared, the old places of worship (usually the nave) continuing in use. In some dozen cases the parishioners bought the rest of the church concerned, e.g. at Christchurch, Dorset.

The Valor Ecclesiasticus* (q.v.) is an important source for the financial state of the monasteries immediately prior to the dissolution. The principal authority for the actual dissolution is the Calendar of State Papers for the reign of Henry VIII (details in bibl. to Henry VIII). T. Wright (ed.), Three Chapters of Letters Relating to the Suppression of the Monasteries (Camden Society, xxvi; 1843); selections repr. in G. H. Cook (ed.), Letters to Cromwell and others on the Suppression of the Monasteries (1965); Joyce [Alice] Youings, The Dissolution of the Monasteries (1971). F. A. *Gasquet, Henry VIII and the English Monasteries (2 vols., 1888–9); G. Baskerville, English Monks and the Suppression of the Monasteries (1937); [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., The Religious Orders in England, iii (Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 195–417; G. W. O. Woodward, The Dissolution of the Monasteries (1966). A. Savine, English Monasteries on the Eve of the Dissolution (Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, i; 1909). A. G. Dickens, 'The Edwardian Arrears in Augmentation Payments and the Problem of the Ex-Religious' in E.H.R., lv (1940), pp. 384–418, with reff.; J. C. Dickinson, 'Early Suppressions of English Houses of Austin Canons' in Medieval Studies presented to Rose Graham, ed. Veronica Ruffer–A. J. Taylor (Oxford, 1950), pp. 54–77. Id., Monastic Life in Medieval England (1961), pp. 111–42. List of monasteries dissolved in J. Gairdner, The English Church in the Sixteenth Century from the Accession of Henry VIII to the Death of Mary (1902), pp. 419–30. Information on individual houses at the time of the Dissolution in [M.] D. Knowles–R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses. England and Wales (1953).

DITTOGRAPHY (Gk. διττός, 'double', and γράφω, 'I write'). The repetition by a copyist, through carelessness, of the same letter(s) or word(s), e.g. in the text of Acts 2. 4 in the Codex Laudianus (et repleti sunt et repleti sunt omnes spiritu sancto). It is a frequent source of corruption in the transmission of MSS.

DIURNAL. The service-book containing the '*Day Hours' (horae diurnae), i.e. all the traditional canonical hours except *Mattins.

DIVES (Lat., 'rich'). A word which has become a convenient, almost a proper, name for the unnamed rich man in the parable, Lk. 16. 19–31. He was condemned not for his wealth but for his selfish enjoyment of it.

DIVINA COMMEDIA, La. The name commonly given to *Dante's sacred poem describing his vision of the three realms of the world to come, Inferno, Purgatorio, and Paradiso. Dante himself may have described the trilogy as a comedy; the epithet divine is a later addition. The poem describes a vision in which Dante travels for a week at Easter 1300 from a dark forest on this side of the world down through Hell to Satan at the centre of the Earth and up the seven terraces of the mount of Purgatory, an island in the Antipodes opposite Jerusalem, to its summit, the Earthly Paradise, where Adam and Eve were created. So far *Virgil has been his guide, but now he meets Beatrice, who conducts him through the nine planetary and stellar spheres to the Empyrean, where St. *Bernard of Clairvaux takes her place. St. Bernard presents Dante to the BVM, at whose intercession the poet is granted a glimpse of the *Beatific Vision.

The date, purpose and detailed interpretation of the poem are widely disputed. Dante may have begun writing in 1305 or possibly not until after 1310. The work was circulated in batches of Cantos before its completion and is mentioned early in 1314. The fictional date, 1300, means that many subsequent events are presented as prophecies, though some prophecies seem to remain unfulfilled. Virgil is commonly said to represent Natural Reason and Beatrice Faith, Revelation, Theology, or the Church, though it is clear that she is also the Florentine girl, jealous of the honours Dante has paid to other women. St. Bernard is not merely a symbol but a man who in contemplation has been granted a glimpse of the Beatific Vision. The poem is not just a version of scholasticism; it interprets a personal vision and a story of individual salvation in which Dante claims the rare privilege of the vision of God's Essence in this life. He accepts the authority of the Church and the office of the Pope, however severe his comments on the persons of individual Popes and other Churchmen whom he depicts in Hell. The poem has survived in a large number of MSS., been the subject of commentaries from an early date, widely translated and has exercised a deep influence, esp. on 19th cent. English literature.

Editions of Dante's collected works are listed s.v. Crit. ed. of Divina Commedia, with introd., by G. Petrocchi (Opere di Dante Alighieri, Edizione Nazionale, vii; 4 vols., 1966–7). Eng. trr. include those of H. F. Cary (3 vols., London, 1814), H. W. Longfellow (3 vols., Boston–London, 1867), [R.] L. Binyon (3 vols., London, 1933–43), Dorothy L. Sayers (Harmondsworth, 1949–62), and G. L. Bickersteth (Aberdeen, 1955), and in prose, with comm., by J. D. Sinclair (3 vols., London, 1939–46; revised ed., 1948). Commentaries by G. A. Scartazzini (Milan, 1893; ed. 4 by G. Vandelli, ib., 1903), M. Poreno (3 vols., Bologna, 1951) and N. Sapegno (3 vols., Florence, 1955–7). E. H. Wilkins–T. G. Bergin, A Concordance to the Divine Comedy of Dante Alighieri (Cambridge, Mass.–London, 1965). G. F. Cunningham, The Divine Comedy in English. A Critical Bibliography: 1782–1900 (1965); 1901–1966 (1966).

DIVINE PRAISES, The. A series of praises, beginning with the words 'Blessed be God, Blessed be His Holy Name', commonly said after *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament (usually in the vernacular) before the Host is replaced in the tabernacle. They are thought to have been compiled c. 1779 by Louis Felici, S.J., to be used in reparation for blasphemy and profanity. In 1801 they were indulgenced by *Pius VII. The original Praises have been extended by the addition of Praise to the *Immaculate Conception in 1856, the *Sacred Heart in 1897, St. *Joseph in 1921, the *Assumption of the BVM in 1950, the *Precious Blood in 1960, and the Holy Ghost in 1964.

H. T[hurston, S.J.], 'The Divine Praises' in The Month, cxxxi (1918), pp. 510–13, incl. reff. to earlier discussions.

DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS. The doctrine that a monarch in the hereditary line of succession has a divine and indefeasible right to his kingship and authority, and that for a subject to rebel against him is the worst of political crimes. Where active obedience to an evil ruler is morally impossible, it is held that passive obedience (i.e. the willing acceptance of any penalty imposed for non-compliance) is demanded. The origin of the doctrine is closely linked with the contest between the Holy Roman Emperor and the medieval papacy.

In England the doctrine was already formulated by the time of the Homily against Wilful Rebellion (1569), in which the goodness or badness of princes is affirmed to be God's reward or punishment of a nation, and rebellion always a sin against God. Under the Stuarts, a dynasty which owed its succession to the laws of inheritance, the doctrine was professed by most leading Anglican divines. As a scheme of political thought it was more than an attempt to justify a particular form of monarchy; it was a genuine attempt to relate authority and liberty to Christian morality. The doctrine, especially as elaborated by Tory divines in the late 1670s and early 1680s, offered a view of civil society which was both authoritarian and providential. Its chief apologiae were Sir Robert Filmer's Patriarcha (posthumously published, 1680) and G. *Hickes's Jovian (1683).

*James II's attack on the C of E eroded much of the support for the doctrine. Nevertheless, its abiding strength was attested at the Revolution by the *Nonjurors, who found it impossible to accept William and Mary's claim to the throne, though here there was an added objection that a change of allegiance involved breaking the oaths previously sworn to James. The vast majority of the clergy recognized William III, but in many cases they did so with difficulty. There was even an effort to salvage the doctrine by separating the considerations of regal right from those of strict hereditary succession. This led to the 'Providential' school of Divine Right, to which G. *Burnet, S. *Patrick, T. *Sherlock, E. *Stillingfleet and J. *Tillotson contributed. With the accession of *Anne, a Stuart and a loyal churchwoman, there was something of a return to the older, pre-Revolutionary form of the doctrine.

Peter Laslett (ed.), Patriarcha and other Political Works of Sir Robert Filmer (Oxford, 1949). J. N. *Figgis, The Theory of the Divine Right of Kings (Cambridge Historical Essays, ix, 1896; ed. 2, with additional essays, 1914). G. M. Straka, Anglican Reaction to the Revolution of 1688 (Madison, Wisc., 1962), esp. pp. 80–97, 107–16.

DIVINE SERVICE. A title which, like the Lat. servitium divinum from which it is derived, would seem properly to belong only to the *choir office, and hence to Mattins and Evensong, and not to be applicable, e.g., to the Holy Communion. Cf. the preface to the BCP which since 1661 has been headed '*Concerning the Service of the Church' and refers only to the choir offices. It was customary for English church notice-boards in the 19th cent. to distinguish between the times for Divine service and those for Holy Communion. The expression is, however, often used more loosely for any form of religious service.

F. E. *Brightman, 'Common Prayer', in J.T.S., x (1908–9), pp. 515–18.

DIVINE WORSHIP, Congregation for. See Rites, Congregation of Sacred.

DIVINO AFFLANTE SPIRITU. See Providentissimus Deus.

DIVINO AFFLATU (Lat., 'by God's inspiration'). The constitution of Pope *Pius X, issued on 1 Nov. 1911, which introduced important reforms into the manner of reciting the Divine office and celebrating Mass. Among many other changes, it provided for the regular recitation of the whole Psalter each week, and also laid down revised rules for the office when two or more feasts occur on the same day.

Text in A.A.S., iii (1911), pp. 633–8, with 'Rubricae in Recitatione Divini Officii et in Missarum Celebratione Servandae ad Normam Constitutionis Apostolicae "Divino Afflatu" ', pp. 639–51. E. Burton–E. Myers, The New Psalter and its Use (1912), incl. text of constitution, pp. 2–8, and Eng. tr., pp. 8–14.

DIVORCE. The word is used in two senses: (1) a vinculo, i.e. as a dissolution of the marriage bond, and (2) a mensa et thoro, i.e. legal separation. Since Western *canon law has always insisted upon the principle of indissolubility, divorce in sense (1) is not permitted by the RC Church and is contrary to the canons and formularies of the C of E. But the Popes have claimed and practised the right to dissolve unconsummated marriages for grave reasons. In the E. Church, the civil legislation begun by the Emp. *Justinian has been tolerated, if not approved, and divorce is allowed on a wide number of grounds. Civil legislation in England, by a series of Acts of Parliament culminating in the Act of 1969, has extended the grounds on which a decree of divorce may be obtained. In the second sense of the word, W. canon law permits divorce for grave causes, the chief of which is adultery. In this case the separation granted is permanent. In all other cases the right to live apart holds good only for so long as the cause remains.

For bibl. see that to Matrimony, esp. the works of G. H. Joyce, S.J., K. E. *Kirk, T. A. *Lacey–R. C. Mortimer, and O. D. Watkins. A. Villien in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1455–1478, s.v.; R. Naz in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1315–25, s.v., with bibl.

DIX, GREGORY (1901–52), Anglican *Benedictine monk and liturgical scholar. Educated at Westminster School and Merton College, Oxford, from 1924 to 1926 he was a lecturer in modern history at Keble College, Oxford. He was ordained priest in 1925, entered Nashdom Abbey, Bucks, in the following year, and took his final vows in 1940. In 1946 he was appointed Select Preacher in the university of Cambridge and proctor in *Convocation for the diocese of Oxford. In 1948 he was elected Prior of Nashdom.

Dix, who became in his later years one of the best-known figures in the C of E, owed his influence to his brilliance, unconventionality and good humour as a controversialist. These qualities largely contributed to the success of The Shape of the Liturgy (1945), his most considerable work; it did much to revive and popularize liturgical studies in the C of E. His other writings include The Treatise on the Apostolic Tradition of St. Hippolytus of Rome (Church Historical Society, vol. i [all publd.], 1937; ed. 2 by H. Chadwick, 1968), A Detection of Aumbries (notes on the history of *Reservation, 1942) and The Question of Anglican Orders. Letters to a Layman (1944), besides contributions to The Parish Communion (1937), to The Apostolic Ministry (ed. K. E. *Kirk, 1946) and to Laudate and other periodicals. Jew and Greek. A study in the primitive Church, was posthumously ed. by H. J. Carpenter (1953).

A. H. Couratin in D.N.B., 1951–1960, p. 301 f.

DOBENECK, JOHANN. See Cochlaeus, Johannes.

DOCETISM (Gk. δοκέω, 'I seem'). In the early Church, a tendency, rather than a formulated and unified doctrine, which considered the humanity and sufferings of the earthly Christ as apparent rather than real. Evidence for its existence is to be found in the NT (1 Jn. 4. 1–3; 2 Jn. 7; cf. Col. 2. 8 f.), but it reached its zenith in the next generation, esp. among the *Gnostics. In some forms it held that Christ miraculously escaped the ignominy of death, e.g. by *Judas Iscariot or *Simon of Cyrene changing places with Him just before the Crucifixion. Docetic doctrines were vigorously attacked by St. *Ignatius and all the leading anti-Gnostic writers. Among those esp. charged with Docetism was *Cerinthus. *Serapion, Bp. of Antioch (190–203), who is the first to use the name 'Docetists' (Δοκηταί), and some others wrote of them as a distinct body.

G. *Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 867–70, s.v.; A. *Fortescue in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 832–5, s.v.; G. Bareille in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1484–1501, s.v. 'Docétisme', all with patristic reff. See also bibl. to Gnosticism.

DOCTORS, Scholastic. In later medieval times, the outstanding Scholastic teachers and others were given distinguishing epithets, of which the following are among the better known:

Doctor acutus	*Gregory of Rimini
Doctor angelicus (or communis or sanctus)	St. *Thomas Aquinas
Doctor christianissimus	John *Gerson
Doctor ecstaticus	John *Ruysbroek (also of *Dionysius the Carthusian)
Doctor invincibilis (or singularis)	*William of Ockham
Doctor irrefragabilis (or doctorum)	*Alexander of Hales
Doctor mellifluus	St. *Bernard of Clairvaux
Doctor mirabilis (or admirabilis)	Roger *Bacon
Doctor profundus	Thomas *Bradwardine (also of Jacobus de Esculo)
Doctor seraphicus (or devotus)	St. *Bonaventura
Doctor solidus (or copiosus)	*Richard of Middleton
Doctor subtilis	*Duns Scotus

Doctor universalis (or venerabilis or expertus) St. *Albertus Magnus

F. *Ehrle, Die Ehrentitel der scholastischen Lehrer des Mittelalters (Sb. (Bayr.), 1919, Abhandlung 9; 1919); F. Lehmann, 'Mittelalterliche Beinamen und Ehrentitel' in Hist.J., xlix (1929), pp. 215–39. J. C. Vansteenkiste in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 935–8, s.v., with more extensive list.

DOCTORS' COMMONS. An association of ecclesiastical lawyers founded in 1511 by Richard Bodewell (or Blodwell), then *Dean of the Arches. It served as a college of advocates for those practising in the ecclesiastical courts, as also in the Admiralty Court. The judges of the Archbishops' Courts were always selected from this college. From 1565 until 1857, when the college was dissolved by the Court of Probate Act, its headquarters were in Knightrider Street, near *St. Paul's Cathedral.

The original Register is in *Lambeth Palace Library (MS. S.R. 136). [C. Coote,] Sketches of the Lives and Characters of Eminent English Civilians, with an historical introduction relative to the College of Advocates (1804); W. Senior, Doctors' Commons and the Old Court of Admiralty. A Short History of the Civilians in England (1922). G. D. Squibb, Doctors' Commons. A History of the College of Advocates and Doctors of Law (Oxford, 1977). P. W. Chandler, 'Doctors Commons' in London Topographical Record, xv (1931), pp. 4–20, with appendices, pp. 21–50; and other items in this volume.

DOCTORS OF THE CHURCH (Lat. Doctores Ecclesiae). A title regularly given since the Middle Ages to certain Christian theologians of outstanding merit and acknowledged saintliness. Originally the W. theologians, *Gregory the Great, *Ambrose, *Augustine, and *Jerome, were held to be the 'four doctors' par excellence; but in later times the list has been gradually increased to over 30.

*Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei Beatificatione, iv (Bonn, 1738), pt. 2, cap. xi, No. 8–cap. xii, No. 9, pp. 96–107. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 42–6; J. de Ghellinck, S.J., 'Les Premières Listes des "Docteurs de l'Église" en Occident' in Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétienne, ii (1912), pp. 132–4; revised as appendix III of Le Mouvement théologique du XIIe siècle (ed. 2, 1948), pp. 514–17; C. A. Kneller, S.J., 'Zum Verzeichnis der Kirchenlehrer' in Z.K.T., xl (1916), pp. 1–47. V. Pugliese–G. Löwe, C.SS.R.–G. Carandente in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1901–7, s.v. 'Dottori della chiesa', with list of doctors and bibl.; H. Rahner, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 229–31, s.v. 'Kirchenlehrer'.

'DOCTRINE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND' (1938). The Report of the Commission on Doctrine set up in 1922 by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York. The Commission consisted of Anglican theologians of moderate *Catholic, *Evangelical, and *Modernist beliefs under the chairmanship first of H. M. Burge, Bp. of *Oxford, and, after his death in 1925, of W. *Temple, then Bp. of Manchester. Its terms of reference were 'to consider the nature and grounds of Christian doctrine with a view to demonstrating the extent of existing agreement within the C of E and with a view to investigating how far it is possible to remove or diminish existing differences'.

The body of the Report, after Prolegomena on 'the Sources and Authority of Christian Doctrine', is in three parts. The first, on 'the Doctrines of God and of Redemption', contains a summary statement of some of the chief elements in the Christian doctrine of God and the world. There follow discussions in some detail of the fact of sin and of the Person and Work of Christ, esp. His Birth and Resurrection. It concludes with two brief sections on the Holy Spirit and the Trinity. In the second and largest part, which deals with the Church and Sacraments, the Ministry and the Eucharist are the chief subjects of discussion; the section on the Eucharist expounds the Biblical teaching on sacrifice and priesthood at length; the Church, Baptism, and 'those five commonly called sacraments' are more briefly treated. The third part on Eschatology was added because of the widespread confusion arising from the tendency to interpret literally the apocalyptic symbolism of the NT. The Report concluded with four unsigned appendices on the psychological aspects of sin, on finitude and original sin, on the meaning of the terms 'body' and 'blood' in Eucharistic theology, and on the relation of sacraments to grace. The approach throughout is theological and, in the main, Biblical.

On its presentation to the *Convocations, the Report met with much hostile criticism, perhaps partly through a misunderstanding of its character and purpose. It did not claim to be an authoritative epitome of the doctrine of the C of E, or even of the limits within which doctrinal variation was permissible, but simply an examination of beliefs actually held. Moreover, the Report tended to reflect the trends of Anglican theological thought at the time of the appointment of the Commission. The theological perspective had already changed before it was completed.

DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH, Congregation of the. See Holy Office.

DODD, CHARLES HAROLD (1884–1973), NT scholar and theologian. After studying at University College and Mansfield College, Oxford, and at Berlin, Dodd was ordained minister of Warwick *Congregational Church in 1912. In 1915 he was appointed Yates lecturer in NT at Mansfield College, Oxford, in 1930 Rylands professor at Manchester, and from 1935 to 1949 he was Norris-Hulse professor of divinity at Cambridge. Dodd's earlier works include The Authority of the Bible (1928), The Epistle to the Romans (*Moffatt NT Comm., 1932) and The Bible and the Greeks (1935). In The Parables of the Kingdom (1935), The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936) and History of the Gospel (1938) he put forward his much discussed conception of 'realized eschatology', viz. that the OT promises of, and Christ's authentic words on, the coming of the *Kingdom of God (q.v.) received their realization in the Incarnation and its consequences for mankind. His study on The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (1953) and The Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (Sarum Lectures 1954–5; publ. 1963) argue that the tradition underlying St. John's Gospel has greater claim to historical value than has often been thought. From 1950 Dodd was General Director and from 1966 Joint Director of the New Translation of the Bible (see Bible, English Versions, 5). He played a major part in the translation of the NT (publd. 1961).

Collections of his essays issued as New Testament Studies (Manchester, 1953) and More New Testament Studies (ib., 1968). The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology, ed. W. D. Davies–D. Daube. In Honour of C. H. Dodd (1956), with bibl. of Dodd's works, pp. xiii–xviii.

DODDRIDGE, PHILIP (1702–51), *Nonconformist divine and hymn-writer. He was the twentieth child of a prosperous London merchant of nonconformist ancestry and came under the influence of Samuel Clarke (1684–1750; not to be confused with the metaphysician of the same name, q.v.). After the death of his father he refused the offer of a university training for the C of E made by the Duke of Bedford, and against the advice of E. *Calamy sought entrance to the nonconformist ministry. He entered the liberal theological Academy in Leicestershire, directed by the Independent John Jennings (d. 1723), and in 1723 he became Minister at Kibworth, Leics. After declining several appointments, mainly because he did not want to commit himself to any particular sect, in 1729 he became Principal of Jennings' Academy, which later in the same year he moved to Northampton when he took charge of a large Independent Congregation there. In 1730 he was 'ordained a presbyter' by eight ministers, of whom five were *Presbyterians. In 1736 he was awarded a D.D. by the university of Aberdeen. At Nottingham in 1737 he followed the example of Clarke in establishing a Charity School, and in 1743 was among the founders of the County Infirmary. His scheme for the distribution of Bibles at home and abroad puts him among the pioneers of nonconformist missionary enterprise. On the breakdown of his health in 1751 he sailed to Lisbon, where he died soon after his arrival.

Doddridge laboured throughout his ministry to obliterate the old party lines and to unite the nonconformists. He was strongly opposed to the rigidity of some of the Calvinists. In 1748 he approached Abp. T. *Herring with a scheme for the interchange of pulpits of the established and dissenting clergy. He also wrote a large number of hymns, which were widely circulated in MS. during his life; they are largely modelled on those of I. *Watts. Those in common use among Anglicans as well as nonconformists include 'Hark the glad sound! the Saviour comes', 'My God, and is Thy Table spread', 'O God of Bethel, by Whose Hand' and 'Ye servants of the Lord'. His prose works include Free Thoughts on the Most Probable Means of Reviving the Dissenting Interest (anon., 1730) and On the Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul (1745), besides various sermons, Scriptural commentaries and discourses on technical subjects.

Works, incl. Memoir by [J.] Orton, in 10 vols. (1802–5) and in 5 vols. (1803–4). J. D. Humphreys (grandson, ed.), The Correspondence and Diary of Philip Doadridge (5 vols. bound in 4, 1829–31). J. Orton, Memoirs of the Life, Character and Writings of the late Reverend Philip Doddridge (1766; ed. by D. Russell, 1825). C. Stanford, Philip Doddridge (1880). Other lives by J. Stoughton (London, 1852) and D. A. Harsha (Albany, 1865). G. F. Nuttall (ed.), Philip Doddridge 1702–51. His Contribution to English Religion (1951). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xv (1888), pp. 158–64.

DODWELL, HENRY (1641–1711), 'the elder', English theologian. Educated at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became a Fellow, he resigned his fellowship in 1666 from reluctance to take holy orders. He then settled in London, where he soon acquired a great reputation for learning, and in 1688 he was appointed Camden praelector of ancient history at Oxford. He defended the *Nonjuring bishops, and in 1691 was deprived for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance. Later, he retired to Shottesbrooke, near Maidenhead, where he spent the rest of his life, and the antiquary, T. *Hearne, was for a time his pupil. In 1710 he rejoined the established Church. His voluminous writings were for the most part very learned, but their cumbrous and often eccentric judgements did little to commend them. They include an edition of St. *Francis de Sales's Introduction to the Devout Life (1673), Two Short Discourses against the Romanists (1676), De Sacerdotio Laicorum (1685; against H. *Grotius), Dissertationes in Irenaeum (1689), De nupero schismate Anglicano paraenesis (1704), Occasional Communion fundamentally destructive of the Discipline of the Primitive Catholic Church (1705), A Discourse concerning the Use of Incense in Divine Offices (1711), and many works on classical subjects.

His son, HENRY DODWELL 'the younger' (d. 1784), was a *Deist, who secured some notoriety from his Christianity not founded on Argument (1742).

F. Brokesby, The Life of Henry Dodwell, with an Account of his Works (1715). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xv (1888), pp. 179–82 (on both Dodwells).

DOGMA (Gk. δόγμα, 'opinion', from δοκεῖν). The original meaning of the word was 'that which seems good', and hence it was applied by classical authors as a technical term either to the distinctive tenets of the various philosophical schools or to the decrees of public authorities. In this second sense it is used in the *Septuagint and the NT, e.g. Dan. 2. 13, Acts 16. 4, Eph. 2. 15, &c., whereas the Patristic use developed from the first. 'Dogma', in the Christian sense as opposed to the teachings of the philosophers, soon acquired a definite theological significance. In the accepted Christian meaning the term signifies a religious truth established by Divine Revelation and defined by the Church.

DOLD, ALBAN (1882–1960), liturgical scholar. Born at Villingen in the Black Forest, he was professed at the Benedictine monastery of *Beuron in 1903. He applied himself esp. to the study of liturgical *palimpsests; he elaborated new techniques and extended a photographic process, originally invented by Fr. Raphael Kögel, O.S.B., for reading difficult texts by fluorescence. By this means he was able to read a number of early liturgical pieces, incl. a *lectionary dating from the 5th or 6th cent. Most of the texts which he recovered were published in the series Texte und Arbeiten, which he founded in 1917.

B. Fischer–V. Fiala (edd.), Colligere Fragmenta. Festschrift A. Dold zum 70. Geburtstag am 7.7.1952 (Texte und Arbeiten, Beiheft ii; 1952), with bibl. [122 items], pp. i–xx; supplement in K. Gamber, Sakramentartypen (Texte und Arbeiten, xlix/l; 1958), pp. viii–x. P. Gordan, O.S.B., 'P. Alban Dold zum Gedächtnis' in Benediktinische Monatschrift, xxxvi (1960), pp. 467–70; K. Gamber, 'Kurze Biographie und Bibliographie von Pater Alban Dold OSB' in E.L., lxxv (1961), p. 244 f.

DOLLING, ROBERT WILLIAM RADCLYFFE, 'Father Dolling' (1851–1902), *Anglo-Catholic missioner. An Irishman by birth, though not by descent, Dolling was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1878 he came to London, where he soon fell under the influence of Fr. A. H. *Stanton at St. Alban's, Holborn. His work as warden of a fellowship for postmen

(the 'St. Martin's Postmen's League') earned him the name of 'Brother Bob'. In 1885, two years after his ordination, he was put in charge of St. Agatha's, Landport, the Winchester College Mission, where for ten years he fought very successfully against the evils of slum life. The remarkable transformation that was achieved in the parish under his influence is vividly set out in his Ten Years in a Portsmouth Slum (1896). Though without any intrinsic interest in ceremonial, he refused to modify his practice where change might seem to imply concession in matters of faith, and consequently he was led in 1896, through opposition from R. T. *Davidson, then Bp. of Winchester, to resign from Landport. From 1898 till his death he was Vicar of St. Saviour's, Poplar.

Life by C. E. Osborne (London, 1903); shorter memoir by J. Clayton (ib., 1902). W. B. Owen in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, p. 512 f.

DÖLLINGER, JOHANN JOSEPH IGNAZ VON (1799–1890), Bavarian Church historian. Ordained priest in 1822, he was from 1823 to 1826 professor of Church history at Aschaffenburg and from 1826 until 1873 at Munich. At first he held strong *Ultramontane opinions, and his early writings show few signs of the independence which characterized his later work. Contact with the newer tendencies of Church history in other countries, and his friendship with such men as J. H. *Newman and Lord *Acton, gradually aroused his critical sense. Before 1840 he had developed his notion of a German Church free from state control, but in full communion with Rome, and this project he defended in the National Parliament of Frankfurt, as well as in several of his writings, notably his Reformation (3 vols., 1845–8) and Luther (1851).

In the fifties he wrote several important works on Church history, among them Hippolytus und Callistus (1853), Heidenthum und Judenthum (1857), and Christentum und Kirche (1860). He gradually came to be distrustful of Roman influence, and in 1861, in two published lectures, he attacked the temporal power of the Pope, thereby arousing hostility esp. among the *Jesuits. In 1863 he took the leading part at the Congress of Munich, where a liberal form of Catholicism was defended. The publication of the '*Syllabus' in 1864 and the calling of the *Vatican Council with the avowed intention of suppressing Liberalism further increased his disagreement with Roman policy. The *Letters of Janus (in conjunction with others; 1869) and *Letters of Quirinus (1869–70) revealed him as a formidable critic of the Council and of the doctrine of *infallibility. After refusing to submit to the Conciliar decisions, he was excommunicated in 1871 by Abp. G. v. Scherr of Munich. In his later years he largely identified himself with the *Old Catholic Churches, and worked for reunion (see Bonn Reunion Conferences). As a mark of general esteem, he was appointed in 1873 president of the Bavarian Royal Academy of Sciences in succession to J. von Liebig.

Döllinger's other writings included Die Papstfabeln des Mittelalters (1863), Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten in der römisch-katholischen Kirche seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (2 vols., 1889; with F. H. Reusch) and Briefe und Erklärungen über die vatikanischen Dekrete (1890). His publications showed that a background of dogmatic orthodoxy could produce work of no less brilliance and calibre than the destructive criticism of the *Tübingen School. His capacity for work was almost limitless and his personal life simple. He was also a great teacher.

Many of his works have been tr. into Eng. H. Schörs (ed.), Ignaz von Döllinger's Briefe an eine junge Freundin (1914). Correspondence with Acton, 1850–1890, ed. V. Conzemius (3 vols., Munich, 1963–71). J. *Friedrich, Ignaz von Döllinger. Sein Leben auf Grund seines schriftlichen Nachlasses (3 vols., 1899–1901). E. Michael, S.J., 'Döllinger. Ein Charakterbild' in Z.K.T., xv (1891), pp. 401–76, 577–666, xvi (1892), pp. 1–81, 193–230, 385–427, rev. and reissued as Ignaz von Döllinger. Eine Charakteristik (ed. 2, 1892). L. von Kobell, Ignaz von Döllinger. Erinnerungen (1891; Eng. tr., 1892). S. Lösch, Döllinger und Frankreich (1955). J. Speigl, Traditionslehre und Traditionsbeweis in der historischen Theologie Ignaz Döllingers (Beiträge zur neueren Geschichte der katholischen Theologie, v; Essen, 1964). Lord Acton, 'Doellinger's Historical Work' in E.H.R., v (1890), pp. 700–744; repr. in The History of Freedom and Other Essays, ed. J. N. Figgis–R. V. Laurence (1907), pp. 375–435. V. Conzemius, 'Aspects ecclésiologiques de l'évolution de Döllinger et du Vieux Catholicisme' in Rev. S.R., xxxiv (1960), pp. 247–79. W. Müller in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 553–63, s.v.

D.O.M., i.e. Deo Optimo Maximo (Lat., 'to God, the Best and Greatest'). Originally a pagan formula addressed to Jupiter, it came to be widely used with a Christian application over the doors of churches and on sepulchral monuments. The celebrated temple of Jupiter on the Capitol at *Rome was pre-eminently that to Jupiter 'Optimus Maximus', and this was no doubt the immediate source of the Christian application of the phrase.

DOM (abbreviation of Dominus, 'Master'). A title given to professed monks of the *Benedictine, *Cistercian, and *Carthusian orders, as well as to certain *canons regular. In the *Cassinese congregation of the Benedictines it is also given to novices. The corresponding Italian 'Don' is used in a wider sense, e.g. of Don *Bosco.

DOM. See Duomo.

DOME OF THE ROCK, The (Arab. Kubbet es-Sakhra). The Moslem shrine in *Jerusalem, built in the area of the Jewish *Temple. It dates from about the end of the 7th cent. The rock from which it takes its name is believed by *Mohammedans to be that from which Mohammed ascended to heaven, and by Jews to be that on which *Abraham prepared to sacrifice *Isaac. Both are also held to be on the site of Araunah the Jebusite's threshing-floor (2 Sam. 24. 18) and of the altar of burnt sacrifice of *Solomon's Temple. The shrine is also known as the 'Mosque of Omar', a name given to it in the belief that it was the work of the second Caliph, Omar (581–644).

R. Hartmann, Der Felsendom in Jerusalem und seine Geschichte (Zur Kunstgeschichte des Auslandes, Hft. 69; 1909). K. A. C. Creswell, The Origin and Plan of the Dome of the Rock (British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, Supplementary Papers, 2; 1924), with full refs.

DOMINE QUO VADIS? (Lat., 'Lord, whither goest thou?'). Acc. to the apocryphal Acta Petri (see Peter, Acts of), St. *Peter was persuaded by the Church towards the end of his life to flee from Rome to escape persecution. Meeting the Lord on the way, he addressed to Him the question 'Domine quo vadis?' and received the answer, 'I go to Rome to be crucified,' whereupon St. Peter turned back and gave himself up for crucifixion. Legend connects the incident with the site of the '*Quo Vadis Chapel' on the *Appian Way, half a mile from the Porta San Sebastiano.

DOMINIC, St. (1170–1221), founder of the Order of Friars Preachers. A native of Calaruega in Old Castile, Spain, probably of the ancient family of the Guzman, he began his studies at Palencia at the age of 14. During a famine in 1191 he is said to have sold all his possessions, including his books, in order to help the poor. In 1199 he became a canon of Osma, his native diocese, where Martin de Bazan, Bp. of Osma (1190–1201), had established a strict discipline among his canons, following the Rule of St. *Augustine. Dominic soon became head of this community, where he remained until, in 1203, he went with Bp. Diego on a preaching tour against the *Albigensian heretics in Languedoc. In 1206 they opened an institute for women in danger of the heresy at Prouille, within Albigensian territory, and attached to it a number of missionary friars. Two years later, after the murder of the Papal legate Peter of Castelnau, *Innocent III started a crusade against the Albigensians, and during the seven years of war that ensued, Dominic laboured to win the heretics back to the Church, often in danger of his life, but with comparatively little success. When in 1214 the castle of Casseneuil was put at his disposal by Count Simon IV of Montfort, his plan to found a special order for the conversion of the Albigensians took definite shape. Several volunteers joined him, and in 1215 these were recognized by the Bp. of Toulouse, and a few months later approved by the Pope on condition that they would follow one of the established rules. In 1216 Dominic went to Rome, where he obtained the formal sanction of *Honorius III by two bulls granting several privileges to the order. His subsequent years were spent in ceaseless journeys all over Italy, to Spain (1218), and to Paris (1219), establishing friaries and organizing the order. In 1220 he attended the first General Chapter at *Bologna. A year later he set out to preach to pagans in Hungary, but fell ill and had to return to Bologna, where he died on 6 Aug. 1221. He was canonized in 1234. Feast day, 7 Aug., formerly in the RC Church and now in the ASB, 4 Aug.; in the American BCP (1979), 8 Aug.

Though the austere Spaniard, Dominic, is a less popular figure than his contemporary, *Francis of Assisi, he was a man of heroic sanctity, ever zealous to win souls from error by the preaching of pure doctrine. His humility—he refused a bishopric three times—was as great as his courage and his capacity as ruler and organizer. He is traditionally, but wrongly, held to have instituted the devotion of the *Rosary.

F. Balme and P. Lelaidier, O.P., Cartulaire ou histoire diplomatique de St. Dominique (3 vols., 1891–1901); M. H. Laurent, O.P. (ed.), Monumenta Historica S.P.N. Dominici (Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica, xv [1933] and xvi [1935]). Useful Fr. tr. of primary docc. by M. H. Vicaire, O.P., Saint Dominique de Caleruega d'après les documents du XIIIe siècle (1955; ed. 2 as Saint Dominique. La vie apostolique, 1965, and Saint Dominique et ses frères. Évangile ou croisade?, 1967), with reff. Eng. tr. of primary material ed. F. C. Lehner, Saint Dominic: Biographical Documents (Washington, 1964). B. *Altaner, Der hl. Dominikus. Untersuchungen und Texte (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, ii; 1922); H. C. Scheeben, Der heilige Dominikus (Freiburg i.Br., 1927). P. Mandonnet, O.P., St. Dominique. L'idée, l'homme et l'œuvre (posthumous notes by M. H. Vicaire and R. Ladner, 2 vols., 1937; Eng. tr., St. Louis, 1944), incl. bibl.; M.-H. Vicaire, O.P., Histoire de saint Dominique (2 vols., 1957; Eng. tr., 1964). Bede Jarrett, O.P., Life of St. Dominic (1924). Saint Dominique en Languedoc, with introd. by M. H. Vicaire, O.P. (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, i; 1966). Id., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 592–608, s.v.

DOMINICA IN ALBIS. In the W. Church, the name formerly given to *Low Sunday as that on which those newly baptized at *Easter put aside their white robes. The expression is an abbreviation of 'Dominica in Albis deponendis' or 'depositis'. The previous Saturday was correspondingly known as 'Sabbatum in albis'. In 1969 it was designated 'Dominica in Octava Paschae seu Dom. II Paschae'.

DOMINICAL LETTER. See Sunday Letter.

DOMINICAN ORDER (Ordo Praedicatorum, O.P.). The Dominicans are also known as Friars Preachers or, in England, Black Friars (from the black mantle worn over a white habit) or, in France, Jacobins (from their first house in *Paris which was under the patronage of St. *James, i.e. St. Jacobus). They are an order specially devoted to preaching and study, and were the first religious to abandon manual labour and put intellectual work in the forefront. Under the direction of St. *Dominic the order took definite shape at two General Chapters at *Bologna in 1220 and 1221. At the saint's suggestion it was decided that the new order, like that of St. *Francis, should practise not merely individual but corporate poverty, i.e. that it should have no possessions except its actual houses and churches, and live by begging. The order spread rapidly throughout Europe and soon extended into Asia. In the 14th and 15th cents. it was agitated by constitutional and disciplinary controversies, and there was considerable relaxation of discipline. After the Black Death the abuse arose of farming out 'limites', i.e. the exclusive rights of preaching and hearing confessions, to individual friars, who kept any surplus revenue from the resulting emoluments. Such friars lived in luxury and rarely came to their convents. In 1475 Pope *Sixtus IV revoked the law of corporate poverty and allowed the order to hold property and have permanent sources of income. In contrast with the Franciscan reaction to a similar move, the change caused no troubles, as it was felt that it did not touch St. Dominic's fundamental idea.

The chief interest of the Dominicans was, and is, educational. Every friary is a centre of teaching activity, primarily for the members of the order. There is a carefully organized teaching system culminating in the 'Studia Generalia', usually located in connexion with a university. During the Middle Ages the Dominicans established houses in most university towns and supplied many of the leaders of European thought. The adaptation of *Aristotle to Christian philosophy was the work esp. of the Dominicans, chiefly of St. *Albertus Magnus and St. *Thomas Aquinas.

The Dominicans, who excelled as organizers, sent from every convent representatives (the prior and one chosen by election) to the annual provincial chapters; and the provinces in turn sent representatives to the Chapter General, the supreme legislative authority in the order which, among its other functions, chose the 'Master General'. There are grounds for believing that the representative system of the Dominican elections influenced the development in England of *Convocation and perhaps even of Parliament.

The Popes used the Dominicans esp. for such missions as the preaching of Crusades, the collecting of monetary levies, and the carrying-out of diplomatic missions. The *Inquisition was habitually staffed by members of the order—a task for which their position as 'watchdogs of orthodoxy' (Domini canes) gave them a certain suitability, but one not calculated to increase their popularity. In the great age of exploration, the Dominicans bent on missionary activity followed close upon the Portuguese and Spanish explorers in both the E. and W. hemispheres. With the rise of new orders in the *Counter-Reformation period, and esp. of the *Jesuits, often their rivals and supplanters, the Dominicans fell somewhat into the background; but they remain one of the most influential of the Religious Orders, and retain their original characteristics as the champions of learning and orthodoxy.

The Dominicans, like the Franciscans, have attached to them a Second and a Third Order. The Second Order consists of nuns who live under a rule similar to that of the friars but are strictly enclosed and purely contemplative. The majority of the Sisters of the Third Order, on the other hand, live the active life without strict enclosure. In 1852 H. *Lacordaire founded a Third Order for priests with simple vows, which was destroyed by the French anticlerical laws of 1901. Apart from these the Dominicans, like the other Mendicant Orders, have *Tertiaries (q.v.) attached to them, among whom were Sts. *Catherine of Siena, *Rose of Lima and *Grignion of Montfort.

Works of individual Dominican writers in J. Quétif–J. Échard, O.P., Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum (2 vols., 1719–21). T. M. Mamachi, O.P., and others, Annales Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1756); P. T. Masetti, S.J., Monumenta et Antiquitates Veteris Disciplinae Ordinis Praedicatorum ab anno 1216 ad 1348 (Rome, 2 vols., 1864). G. R. Galbraith, The Constitution of the Dominican Order, 1216–1360 (University of Manchester Historical Series, No. xliv; 1925). A. Walz, Compendium Historiae Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1930; ed. 2, 1947); id., Studi domenicani (1939). A. Puccetti, L'ordine domenicano (1927). W. A. Hinnebusch, O.P., The History of the Dominican Order (Staten Island, N.Y., [1966] ff.). R. F. Bennett, The Early Dominicans. Studies in Thirteenth Century Dominican History (Cambridge, 1937). Bede Jarrett, O.P., The English Dominicans (1921); W. A. Hinnebusch, The Early English Friars Preachers (Rome, 1951). W. R. Bonniwell, O.P., A History of the Dominican Liturgy (New York, 1944). Monumenta Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1897 ff.); Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum (ib., 1931 ff.). Artt. by P. Mandonnet, O.P., in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 354–70, s.v. 'Preachers, Order of', and in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 863–924, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs'; H. D. Simonin, O.C.R., and others in Dict Sp., v (1964), cols. 1422–1524, s.v. 'Frères Prêcheurs', all incl. extensive bibl. reff.; W. A. Hinnebusch, O.P., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 971–82, s.vv. 'Dominican Spirituality' and 'Dominicans'.

DOMINIS, MARCO ANTONIO DE. See De Dominis, Marco Antonio.

DOMINUS AC REDEMPTOR. The brief of *Clement XIV of 21 July 1773, which suppressed the *Jesuit Order. It was issued mainly at the instigation of Joseph Moniño, the Spanish ambassador, to whom it probably owes most of its provisions. As its execution was left mainly to the local bishops, the treatment meted out to the Jesuits varied widely in different localities.

Text in A. Barbèri–A. Spetia (edd.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, iv (Rome, 1841), pp. 607–18; the main clauses are repr. in Mirbt, pp. 404–11 (No. 546), with reff. See also works cited under Jesuits.

DOMINUS VOBISCUM. A Latin liturgical salutation, meaning 'The Lord be with you', to which the response is Et cum spiritu tuo, 'And with thy spirit'. Both formulae are probably as old as Christianity. The salutation occurs in Ruth 2. 4; the closest Scriptural approximation to the response is in 2 Tim. 4. 22. Both the salutation and the response are found in the Apostolic Tradition* of St. *Hippolytus.

It was the subject of a short treatise by St. *Peter Damian, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlv, 231–52. W. C. van Unnik, 'Dominus vobiscum: The Background of a Liturgical Formula' in A. J. B. Higgins (ed.), New Testament Essays. Studies in Memory of Thomas Walter Manson (Manchester, 1959), pp. 270–305. H. Ashworth, O.S.B., 'Et cum spiritu tuo. An Inquiry into its Origin and Meaning' in Clergy Review, li (1966), pp. 122–30. P. Milner, O.P., 'Et cum spiritu tuo' in Studies in Pastoral Liturgy, iii, ed. P. Murray, O.S.B. (Dublin, 1967), pp. 202–10. Jungmann (ed. 1958), i. 463–9; Eng. tr., i, pp. 361–6. J. A. Jungmann, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 494, s.v.

DOMITIAN, TITUS FLAVIUS (A.D. 51–96), Roman emperor. The son of Vespasian, he succeeded his brother Titus in A.D. 81. He gradually assumed to himself despotic powers and demanded that public worship should be given to him as Dominus et Deus. At the end of his reign a *persecution of the Christians and Jews broke out. Acc. to a very widespread tradition it was during this persecution that the Apostle John, in exile at *Patmos, received the revelations recorded in the Apocalypse. See also foll. entry.

The principal authorities incl. Suetonius, 'Domitianus' in De Vita Caesarum, viii (ed., with Eng. tr., by G. W. Mooney, London, 1930, pp. 156–87), Dio Cassius, Hist. Rom., lxvii (ed., with Eng. tr. by E. Cary, Loeb ed., viii, 1925, pp. 316–359), and *Eusebius, H.E., III. xiii–xx. S. Gsell, Essai sur le règne de l'empereur Domitien (1893). M. P. Charlesworth in C.A.H., xi (1936), pp. 22–45. D. McFayden, 'The Occasion of the Domitianic Persecution' in The American Journal of Theology, xxiv (1920), pp. 46–66. D. W. Riddle, 'Hebrews, First Clement, and the Persecution of Domitian' in Journal of Biblical Literature, xliii (1924), pp. 329–48. R. L. P. Milburn, 'The Persecution of Domitian' in C.Q.R., cxxxix (1945), pp. 154–64. J. Moreau, 'A propos de la persécution de Domitien' in La Nouvelle Clio, v (1953), pp. 121–9. E. Mary Smallwood, 'Domitian's Attitude toward the Jews and Judaism' in Classical Philology, li (1956), pp. 1–13. R. B. Weynand in P.W., vi (1909), cols. 2541–96, s.v. 'Flavius'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 1388–1401, s.v.; K. Gross in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 93–109, s.v.

DOMITILLA, FLAVIA (c. A.D. 100). A Roman matron of the Imperial family who became a Christian. Her grandmother and mother, who both bore the same name, were the wife and daughter of the Emp. Vespasian (reigned, 69–79). She was further connected with the Imperial family through having married Titus Flavius Clemens, a first cousin to *Domitian. Whether or not her husband was a Christian, as Suetonius and others may imply, she herself certainly was. Clemens was put to death and Flavia Domitilla banished to the island of Pandateria, probably in both cases for professing Christianity. The 'Coemeterium Domitillae', on the Via Ardeatina outside Rome, which had been her property, was used as a Christian place of burial as early as the 1st cent. See also Glabrio and Nereus and Achilleus, Sts.

J. Knudsen, 'The Lady and the Emperor. A Study of the Domitian Persecution' in Church History, xiv (1945), pp. 17–32. H. *Leclercq in D.A.C.L., iv (2) (1921), cols. 1401–42, s.vv. 'Domitille (Flavie)' and 'Domitille (Cimetière)', incl. reff.; U. Fasola in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 630–4, s.v. See also works cited in bibl. to previous entry.

DONATION OF CONSTANTINE (Constitutum or Donatio Constantini). A document which was fabricated probably in the Frankish Empire in the 8th–9th cent., to strengthen the power of the Church and in particular of the Roman see. It had great influence in the Middle Ages. In it the Emp. *Constantine purported to confer on Pope *Sylvester I (314–35) the primacy over *Antioch, *Constantinople, *Alexandria, and *Jerusalem, and dominion over all Italy, including Rome and the 'provinces, places, and civitates of the Western regions'. The Pope was also made supreme judge of the clergy, the chief of whom were to have the rank of Senators, and he was even offered the Imperial crown (which, however, he refused). The document, which was embodied in the *False Decretals and the collections of *canons, came to be treated as authoritative even by the opponents of the Papacy. It was first used to support Papal claims in a letter written in 1054 by *Leo IX to *Michael Cerularius, and consistently employed by his successors for the purpose. In the 15th cent. its genuineness was challenged and its falsity demonstrated by *Nicholas of Cusa, Bp. R. *Pecock, and L. *Valla.

Text in Mirbt (ed.), No. 228, pp. 107–12, with reff. Eng. tr., omitting capp. 3–5 (on Christian doctrine), in S. Z. Ehler–J. B. Morrall (edd.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 16–22. J. Friedrich, Die constantinische Schenkung (1889). G. Laehr, Die konstantinische Schenkung in der abendländischen Literatur des Mittelalters bis zur Mitte des 14. Jahrhunderts (Historische Studien, Hft. clxvi; 1926). D. Maffei, La Donazione di Costantino nei giuristi medievali (Milan, 1964), with bibl. S. Williams, 'The Oldest Text of the "Constitutum Constantini"' in Traditio, xx (1964), pp. 488–61, incl. text and reff. to earlier lit. H. Böhmer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 1–7, s.v. 'Konstantinische Schenkung'; W. Ullmann in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 1000 f., s.v.

DONATISM. The Donatists were a schismatic body in the African Church who became divided from the Catholics through their refusal to accept Caecilian, Bp. of Carthage (consecrated 311), on the ground that his consecrator, Felix of Aptunga, had been a traditor during the *Diocletianic Persecution. The Numidian bishops, supporting the objectors, consecrated Majorinus as a rival to Caecilian, and he was soon afterwards succeeded by Donatus, from whom the schism is named.

A commission under *Miltiades, Bp. of Rome, investigated the dispute in 313. It decided against the Donatists, who thereupon appealed unsuccessfully, first to the Synod of *Arles (314) and then to the Emperor (316). But the schism prospered, for theologically (with doubtful justification) it claimed St. Cyprian's authority, while politically it drew upon African regional feeling, since the Catholics were supported by Rome. It also relied upon Numidian jealousy of Carthage and on economic unrest. The Emperor began coercion in 316, but abandoned it in 321. When, later, the Donatist leaders associated themselves with violent bands of marauders, called circumcelliones, state repression began again (347) under Constans, but was relaxed under *Julian (361–3).

The theological attack on the Donatists was led first by St. *Optatus, and later by St. *Augustine. The efforts of their own more moderate supporters, such as the orator *Tyconius, probably did more harm than good to their cause. In 405 the state again intervened against them, and at a large conference at Carthage in 411 the Imperial commissioner pronounced finally against Donatism. The schism, though greatly weakened, persisted until the African Church was destroyed by the Arabs in the 7th–8th cent.

Theologically the Donatists were rigorists, holding that the Church of the saints must remain 'holy' (cf. Novatianism*), and that sacraments conferred by traditores were invalid. Apart from their denial that Felix of Aptunga was in fact a traditor, the Church maintained that the unworthiness of the minister did not affect the validity of sacraments, since, as Augustine insisted, their true minister was Christ. The Donatists, on the other hand, went so far as to assert that all those who communicated with traditores were infected, and that, since the Church is one and holy, the Donatists alone formed the Church. Converts to Donatism were rebaptized, a proceeding repeatedly condemned by orthodox synods.

The chief sources are Optatus, De Schismate Donatistarum (c. 368), and the anti-Donatist writings of Augustine (ed. Ben., vol. ix). Useful introd. by Y. M. J. Congar to the anti-Donatist writings in the ed. of Augustine publd. under the direction of the Études augustiniennes, Œuvres de Saint Augustin, xxviii (1963), pp. 9–133, with reff. P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, iv (1912)–vi (1922). G. G. Willis, Saint Augustine and the Donatist Controversy (1950). W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church. A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (1952). S. L. Greenslade, Schism in the Early Church (1953; ed. 2, 1964). J. P. Brisson, Autonomisme et christianisme dans l'Afrique romaine de Septime Sévère à l'invasion vandale (1958). A. H. M. Jones, 'Were ancient heresies national or social movements in disguise?' in J.T.S., N.S. x (1959), pp. 280–98. E. Tengström, Donatisten und Katholiken: soziale, wirtschaftliche und politische Aspekte einer nordafrikanischen Kirchenspaltung (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, xviii; 1964). R. Crespin, Ministère et sainteté. Pastorale du clergé et solution de la crise donatiste dans la vie et la doctrine de saint Augustin (1965).

DONNE, JOHN (1571/2–1631), *Metaphysical poet and Dean of *St. Paul's. He was a member of a RC family, his mother being the sister of the *Jesuit missionary priest Jasper Heywood, and a granddaughter of a sister of Sir Thomas *More. He entered Hart Hall, Oxford, in 1584 and possibly studied after this at Cambridge, or perhaps abroad. He entered Thavies Inn in 1591 and transferred to Lincoln's Inn in 1592. During this period he was much exercised over the problem of his religious allegiance and for a time, according to I. *Walton, 'betrothed himself to no Religion that might give him any other denomination than a Christian'. By 1598 he had certainly conformed to the Church of England. In 1596 he accompanied Essex and Raleigh to Cadiz and in 1597 to the Azores; and in 1598 became private secretary to the Lord Keeper, Sir Thomas Egerton, a post from which he was dismissed four years later owing to his secret marriage to Ann More, his master's wife's niece, in 1601. During the next years he and his growing family lived in poverty and dependence on the charity of friends. He found employment in controversial writing and in 1610 wrote the Pseudo-Martyr to persuade Catholics that they might take the Oath of Allegiance. In the next year he wrote a witty satire on the Jesuits, Ignatius his Conclave. Around this period he composed but did not publish Biathanatos, a casuistic discussion and defence of suicide. After repeated failures to find secular employment he at last complied with the wish of the King and was ordained in 1615. The reason he himself gave for delay was scruple at accepting orders as a means of making a living. In 1621 he became Dean of St. Paul's, where he preached on all great festivals. He was also a regular preacher at court and a favourite with both James and Charles. During a serious illness in 1623 he wrote his Devotions upon Emergent Occasions (1624), and the famous 'Hymn to God the Father'. He died in 1631 and was buried in St. Paul's. His monument, showing him standing in his shroud, survived the Great Fire. In American BCP (1979), feast day, 31 Mar.

Donne's secular poetry was mainly written in his youth: satires, love-elegies, and lyrics, though the date of these last is questionable. His religious poetry belongs mostly to his troubled and unhappy middle years of poverty and discouragement. After his ordination his genius found expression in preaching. His fame as a poet suffered eclipse after the Restoration but had a striking revival in this century. His vigorous, dramatic style, his capacity for introspection, and the subtle blend of argument and passion in his love poems and religious poems attracted poets in revolt against the Romantic tradition, most notably T. S. *Eliot. His sermons are masterpieces of the old formal style of preaching, packed with patristic learning and adorned with brilliant images and striking rhetorical effects, but his great strength is as a moral theologian, preaching as a sinner who has found mercy to other sinners. Although the contrast between Jack Donne, the youthful rake, and Dr. John Donne, the divine, has been overdrawn, there is no doubt that he was haunted by an intense consciousness of the gravity of sin as he was by the thought of physical death. His great theme as a love-poet was the bliss of union; his great theme as a preacher was God's mercy. Both themes are given singular force coming from one who wrote so often of a love that was 'rage' and not 'peace'; and knew in experience the meaning of working out one's salvation with fear and trembling.

'Collected Works' [Sermons, Devotions, Poems and Letters only] ed. H. Alford (6 vols., 1839). Poems, orig. publd. 1633; enlarged ed., 1635; modern edd. of his Poems by H. J. C. Grierson (2 vols., Oxford, 1912); Divine Poems, ed. Helen Gardner (ib., 1952); Elegies and Songs and Sonnets, ed. id. (ib., 1965); Satires, Epigrams and Verse Letters, ed. W. Milgate (ib., 1967). Complete Poetry and Selected Prose, ed. J. Hayward (1929). Collections of LXXX Sermons (1640), Fifty Sermons (1649), and XXVI Sermons (1660). Modern ed. of Sermons by G. R. Potter–Evelyn M. Simpson (10 vols., Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1953–62); Devotions upon Emergent Occasions, ed. J. Sparrow (Cambridge, 1923); Essays in Divinity (orig. publ. 1651), ed. Evelyn Simpson (Oxford, 1952); Ignatius his Conclave, ed. T. S. Healy, S.J. (ib., 1969). Life by I. Walton (1640; much enlarged in the final version of Lives, 1670). E. Gosse, Life and Letters of John Donne (2 vols., 1899); R. C. Bald, John Donne. A Life (Oxford, 1970). G. [L.] Keynes, A Bibliography of Dr. John Donne (Publications of the Baskerville Club, ii; 1914; ed. 3, Cambridge, 1958).

DOORKEEPER. The doorkeepers, or ostiarii, constituted the lowest of the *Minor Orders of the W. Church. Their functions, as stated in the *Pontifical, were similar to those of the modern verger; in antiquity they were particularly responsible for excluding unauthorized persons from attending the Eucharist. The order, which was probably established at Rome during the first half of the 3rd cent., is first attested in a letter of Pope *Cornelius written in 251. It is no longer recognized in the E. Churches, though doorkeepers (θυρωροί) are mentioned in the canons of *Laodicea (can. 24). In the RC Church the office was abolished in 1972.

A. Michel in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2600–2, s.v. 'Portier', with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols 1525–33, s.v. 'Portier'; A. Piolanti in E.C. ix (1952), cols. 435–7, s.v. 'Ostiariato'.

DORCHESTER, Oxon. Originally a Roman station, it was conquered by the West Saxons c. 560. In 635 St. *Oswald, King of Northumbria, and Cynegils, King of the West Saxons, concurred in establishing it as a see, with St. *Birinus as bishop. The diocese covered an area stretching from Dorset to Bucks and from Surrey to the Severn, part of which was for centuries disputed between the kingdoms of Wessex and Mercia. In later pre-Conquest times the diocese extended north to the Humber. About 1072–3, when the importance of the place had declined, Bp. Remigius, formerly a monk of Fécamp (consecrated 1067, d. 1090), transferred the see to *Lincoln. In 1140 Alexander, Bp. of Lincoln, founded an abbey of *Augustinian Canons, which was suppressed in 1536. By the 16th cent. the abbey church was the only notable feature of the village. In 1939 the Bishopric of Dorchester was re-created suffragan to *Oxford. Until 1956 it was held in conjunction with the Archdeaconry of Oxford.

J. H. Parker (ed.), The History of Dorchester, Oxfordshire, British Earthworks—Roman Camp—Bishopric, and the Architectural History of the Church (Oxford, 1882). On the Augustinian house, H. E. Salter in V.C.H., Oxford, ii, ed. W. Page (1907), pp. 87–90.

DORDRECHT, Synod of. See Dort.

DORMITION OF THE BVM, The. In the E. Church, the Feast of the Falling Asleep (dormitio) of the Blessed Virgin, corresponding to the *Assumption in the West. It is observed on 15 Aug. and accounted one of the *Twelve Great Feasts. See also Assumption of the BVM.

DORNER, ISAAK AUGUST (1809–84), German *Lutheran theologian. The son of a Lutheran pastor, he was educated at *Tübingen, where he was a pupil of F. C. *Baur. In 1838 he became professor of theology at Tübingen, in 1839 at Kiel, in 1843 at Königsberg, in 1847 at Bonn, in 1853 at Göttingen, and finally in 1862 at Berlin. In theology he sought to interpret the *Kantian and post-Kantian systems in terms of the traditional Lutheran faith. He also took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical life of his time. The best known of his many writings was his treatise on the history of the doctrine of the Person of Christ, first published in 1839 (Eng. trans. in 5 vols., 1861–6). In 1867 he issued his Geschichte der protestantischen Theologie (Eng. trans., 2 vols., 1871). He was the founder, and for many years the editor, of the Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie (1856 ff.).

His son, AUGUST DORNER (1846–1920), later became a distinguished theologian, holding professorial chairs at *Wittenberg and Königsberg.

I. A. Dorner's System der christlichen Sittenlehre was publd. posthumously by August Dorner (1885); Eng. trr. by C. M. Mead–R. T. Cunningham (1887) and of extracts by C. Welch, God and Incarnation in Mid-Nineteenth Century German Theology (New York, 1965), pp. 115–284, both with introd. Correspondence of H. L. *Martensen, Bp. of Zealand, with I. A. Dorner (2 vols., Berlin, 1888). I. Bobertag, Isaak August Dorner (Gütersloh, 1906). O. Kirn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iv (1898), pp. 802–7.

DOROTHEUS, St. (6th cent.), ascetical writer. He entered a Palestinian monastery near Gaza, where he came under the influence of Barsanuphius, the author of a work against the errors of *Origen and *Evagrius, and c. 540 founded a monastery of his own, also near Gaza, of which he became *archimandrite. For the use of its members he wrote a series of 'Instructions' (Διδασκαλίαι Ψυχωφελεῖς) on the ascetic life, though not all the 24 items in the standard edition which was made in the 9th cent. are by Dorotheus himself. In his spiritual doctrine he gives an exceptionally high place to humility, not only maintaining that it was the cement of all the other virtues but even putting it above love. His 'Instructions' are an important source for earlier ascetic writers ('fathers'), on whose doctrines he frequently drew. Eight of his Letters also survive. His writings were highly esteemed by A. J. de *Rancé, who translated them into French for use by his *Trappists.

'Instructions' ed. J. Grynaeus, Orthodoxographia, i (Basle, 1569), pp. 195–361; cf. also J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxviii, 1611–1842. Crit. ed. of Œuvres spirituelles, with Fr. tr., by L. Regnault, O.S.B., and J. de Préville, O.S.B. (S.C., xcii; 1963). Bardenhewer, v, p. 69 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 519. J. M. Szymusiak, S.J.–J. Leroy, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 1651–64, s.v. 'Dorothée (Saint)'.

DOROTHY, St., also Dorothea, Virgin and martyr, prob. in the Persecution of *Diocletian (d. 313). The earliest historical source mentioning her is the '*Hieronymian Martyrology', where her name appears together with a 'Theophilus'. Acc. to the later legendary Acta she was martyred at Caesarea in Cappadocia; on her way to martyrdom a young lawyer, Theophilus, mocked her, asking her to send him fruits from the garden to which she was going. At the place of execution she knelt to pray, when an angel appeared with a basket of apples and roses, which she sent to Theophilus. When he had tasted of the fruit he, too, became a Christian and a martyr. Her martyrdom was made the subject of one of the charming Sieben Legenden of Gottfried Keller, the Swiss novelist. Feast day, 6 Feb.

Discussion and text of 'Acta ex tribus MSS codicibus' in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 772–6. Further recensions listed in B.H.L., i (1898–9), p. 349 f., Nos. 2321–5, and Suppl. (revised ed., 1911), p. 99. A certain Christian lady (Χριστιανή) mentioned in *Eusebius, H.E., VIII. xiv. 15, acc. to *Rufinus called Dorothea, is sometimes taken to refer to her. G. Keller, Sieben Legenden (1872), pp. 123–35.

DORSAL, also Dossal. A piece of cloth, often embroidered, which is sometimes hung at the back of an altar in place of a *reredos. It is apparently a survival of the curtains which in earlier times were hung between the four columns of the *ciborium.

DORT, Synod of (1618–19). The assembly of the Dutch Reformed Church, convened at Dort (Dordrecht) by the States-General to deal with the *Arminian Controversy. Although primarily a national gathering of Dutch theologians, several foreign delegates from Switzerland, the Palatinate, England, and other states took part, the British representatives including G. Carleton (Bp. of *Llandaff), J. *Hall, J. Davenant, S. Ward (Archdeacon of Taunton), and W. Balcanquall. The Synod, which met in 154 formal sessions, sat from 13 Nov. 1618 to 9 May 1619, though the Arminians ('*Remonstrants'), led by S. *Episcopius, were not introduced till 6 Dec. 1618. John Bogerman of Leeuwarden, a strict Calvinist, was elected president. The Synod, supported by Prince Maurice of Orange, was biased against Arminianism from the start and its decisions were a foregone conclusion. Five sets of articles passed on 23 Apr. 1619 asserted: (1) unconditional election, (2) a limited atonement, (3) the total depravity of man, (4) the irresistibility of grace, and (5) the final perseverance of the saints. At a final session on 9 May 1619 the Synod drew up 93 canonical rules and confirmed the authority of the Belgic Confession and the Heidelberg Catechism*. This victory for Calvinist principles led to some 200 Arminian clergy being deprived, H. *Grotius being sentenced by the States-General to perpetual imprisonment, and J. van Oldenbarnevelt being beheaded on a false charge of high treason.

Lat. text of canons, orig. publ. 6 May 1619, printed in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 550–80, with abridged Eng. tr., pp. 581–97; introd. in vol. i (1877), pp. 512–15. M. Graf, Beyträge zur Kenntniss der Geschichte der Synode von Dordrecht (Basel, 1825). B. Glasius, Geschiedenis der Nationale Synode in 1618 en 1619 gehouden te Dordrecht (2 vols., Leyden, 1860–1). A. W. Harrison, The Beginnings of Arminianism to the Synod of Dort (1926), pp. 300–83.

DORTER. A dormitory, esp. in a monastery. It was sometimes of great length, e.g. that at *Durham (1398–1404) 194 ft. long (now a library and museum). From Norman times, and possibly earlier, it was usually on the first floor of the east range of the cloister, and thus adjacent to one of the transepts of the conventual church, to which direct access for the night office was provided by a flight of steps.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Medieval England (1961), p. 33.

DOSITHEUS (2nd cent.), Judaeo-*Gnostic heretic. He belonged to *Samaria, but very little is known of him. Acc. to *Hegesippus (*Eusebius, H.E., iv. 22), he was one of five original founders of sects in Palestine. *Origen, who mentions him several times, states (Contra Celsum, vi. 2) that he set himself up as the Messiah foretold in Deut. 18. 18 and insisted on strict observance of the Sabbath. Acc. to the *Clementine Recognitions (ii. 8), Dositheus was first a disciple, and afterwards the teacher, of *Simon Magus. His followers (Dositheans) never seem to have been more than a very small body (Origen, Contra Celsum, vi. 11, mentions 'scarcely thirty' as surviving in his day), but they survived down to the 10th cent.

Among the writings discovered at Nag Hammadi (see Gnosticism) is a short work entitled 'A Revelation by Dositheus, or the Three Pillars of Seth'; it is not known whether it claims to be the work of this Dositheus or of some unknown namesake.

A. *Hilgenfeld, Die Ketzergeschichte des Urchristentums (1884), pp. 155–61. S. Krauss, 'Dosithée et les Dosithéens' in Revue des Études juives, xlii (1901), pp. 27–42; A. Buechler, 'Les Dosithéens dans le Midrasch', ib., pp. 220–231; K. Kohler, 'Dositheus, the Samaritan Heresiarch, and his relations to Jewish and Christian Doctrines and Sects' in American Journal of Theology, xv (1911), pp. 404–35; R. McL. Wilson, 'Simon, Dositheus and the Dead Sea Scrolls' in Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, ix (1957), pp. 21–30. An edition of the Revelation of Dositheus by V. Girgis is in preparation. J. Doresse, Les Livres secrets des Gnostiques d'Égypte (1958), pp. 206–9; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 188–90. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 345–7. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 902 f.; A. *Jülicher in P.W., x (1905), col. 1608 f.

DOSITHEUS (1641–1707), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 1669. A native of the Peloponnese, prob. of humble family, on the death of his father, at the age of eight he was placed by the Abp. of *Corinth in a neighbouring monastery. He was ordained deacon three years later, and prob. educated at Athens under N. Keramevs (d. 1663). Before 1657 he entered the service of the Patr. of Jerusalem and in 1661 became Archdeacon of Jerusalem and in 1666 Abp. of *Caesarea. On the resignation of *Nectarius Pelopides (1661–69) he was appointed Patr. of Jerusalem by a synod held at *Constantinople. His best-known achievement was the Synod of Jerusalem (q.v.) held in 1672 and intended to combat the influence of Protestantism in the Greek Church; Dositheus was the principal author of its decrees and confession. His patriarchate was also marked by the inauguration of various monastic and financial reforms, and more esp. by his vigorous defence of the Greeks against the Latins, as in the dispute with the *Franciscans over their rights to the Holy Places. He tried to extend the influence of Hellenism in Russia by adroit intervention in the disputes aroused by the patriarchate of *Nikon, by joining with Callixtus II (Patr. of Constantinople 1689–93) in condemning the *Calvinistic teaching of J. Karophyllis on the *Eucharist in 1691 and by opposition to the *Uniat Churches in his writings against L. *Allatius and R. *Bellarmine. To combat western influence in theology he established a printing press at Jassy in 1680. His many theological works, characterized by wide erudition rather than original thought, include an Ἐγχειρίδιον against Calvinism (Bucharest, 1690). He edited a trilogy of three large volumes, Τόμος Καταλλαγῆς (Jassy, 1694), Τόμος Ἀγάπης (Jassy, 1698), and Τόμος Χαρᾶς (Rimnic, 1705), containing material relating to *Photius and works by *Gregory Palamas, together with more recent anti-Latin treatises. He also compiled a history of the Patriarchate of Jerusalem in twelve [really thirteen] books (ed. anonymously by P. Keramevs; posthumously published, Bucharest, 2 vols., 1715).

Dositheus published many other writings, most of them at Jassy. Chrysanthos Notaras, his nephew, inserted a Life of his uncle into Dositheus's posthumous 'History of the Jerusalem Patriarchate' (Ἱστορία περὶ τῶν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις Πατριαρχευσάντων; also, from its division into twelve books, known as the Δωδεκάβιβλος; Bucharest, 1715). A. Palmieri, O.S.A., Dositeo, patriarca greco di Gerusalemme (Florence, 1909). Id. in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1788–1800, with full bibl.; additional bibl. by V. Grumel in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 700; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., iv (1950), col. 1890 f., s.v. 'Dositeo'.

DOSTOIEVSKY, FEODOR MICHAELOVITCH (1821–81), Russian novelist. He was the son of a retired military Russian surgeon of *Orthodox or *Uniat priestly ancestry, born at Moscow, where he was educated at a private boarding-school. From 1838 to 1843 he attended the Military Engineering College at St. Petersburg, but resigned his commission after three years. In 1849 he was arrested for revolutionary activities and eight months later condemned to death. Although he was eventually reprieved, this imminence of death made a deep impression on him. During four years' forced labour in Siberia, he gained an intimate knowledge and deep affection for the ordinary Russian people. In 1854 he was transferred as a private in an infantry battalion to Semipalatinsk, where he was able to resume his writing. In 1856 he formed an unhappy marriage terminated by the death of his wife in 1863. He returned to St. Petersburg in 1859, and with his elder brother in 1861 founded the review Vremya (suppressed 1863), in which he defended Slavophil democratic ideas. Deeply in debt through gambling and general mismanagement, in 1867 he married his secretary, who later became his publisher. In 1873 he was invited by Prince Meshchersky to edit the newspaper Grazhdanin, to which he contributed his Author's Diary (published separately, 1876). Although known chiefly as a journalist in his life-time, his more enduring works were the novels in which he penetrated the deep recesses of the human mind. They include (all written in Russian) Memoirs from the Underworld (1864), Crime and Punishment (1865–66), The Idiot (1869), The Possessed (1871), and The Brothers Karamazov (1880).

The centre of Dostoievsky's religious experience, which has made him, together with S. *Kierkegaard, one of the forerunners of modern *Dialectical Theology, is the consciousness of salvation as the free gift of God to the weak and miserable and the refusal to admit any co-operation between God and man. There is no way from man to God, only one from God to man, who is united to his fellows by the common bond of sin. The result is a complete absence from religion of reason and will, and the moral effort that flows from them. The heroes and heroines of Dostoievsky's novels live entirely by their emotions, of which the foremost is boundless and irrational compassion. In the short story 'The Grand Inquisitor', incorporated in The Brothers Karamazov, the institutional Church is represented as the great tyrant and falsifier of Christ whom she would crucify again if He came back to earth. Dostoievsky's ideas have had a profound influence on the Continent, where they found a fertile soil in the distrust of reason and the worship of irrational forces which has marked much 20th cent. thought.

The standard English translation of Dostoievsky's novels is that by Constance Garnett (12 vols., 1912–20). The principal works have also been translated by D. Magarshack in Penguin Classics. There is a very extensive literature, mainly in Russian. More important studies available in English include works by E. H. Carr (London, 1931), E. J. Simmons (New York, 1940), J. A. T. Lloyd (London, 1946), K. Mochulsky (in Russian, Paris, 1947; Eng. tr., 1967), D. Magarshack (London, 1962), R. Wellek (ed.) (Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1962), E. Wasiolek (Cambridge, Mass., 1964) and A. Steinberg (London, 1966). G. Steiner, Tolstoy or Dostoevsky. An Essay in Contrast (New York, 1959; London, 1960). Jessie Coulson, Dostoevsky. A Self Portrait (1962), incl. Eng. tr. of extensive extracts of letters. There is also a brief interpretation by N. *Berdyaev (in Russian, Prague, 1923; Eng. tr. from Fr. version, 1934).

DOUAI, in Flanders. Formerly a university, it was the seat of several colleges founded for the benefit of English RC scholars in exile under *Elizabeth I, of which the most important was that established by W. *Allen in 1568. This was originally intended to ensure a learned clergy in England when the RC faith should be re-established, but it soon became a seminary for the training of mission priests to work in England. Many of its alumni suffered death either for their faith or as political conspirators, and members of the college were responsible for the production of the *Douai-Reims Bible. At the French Revolution the college was suppressed and the work transferred to England, where it was carried on at Crook Hall, near Ushaw, and at St. Edmund's Old Hall, Ware. The Benedictine Community of St. Gregory, begun at Douai in 1607, has been established in England since 1795 (at *Downside Abbey, in Somerset, since 1814).

The First and Second Diaries of the English College, Douay, ed. by the Fathers of the Congregation of the London Oratory with hist. Introd. by T. F. Knox, Cong. Orat. (Records of the English Catholics under the Penal Laws, i, 1876); E. H. Burton and T. L. Williams (ed.), The Douay Diaries, Third, Fourth and Fifth, with the Rheims Report, 1597–80 (*Catholic Record Society, x and xi; 1911); E. H. Burton, The Douay College Diaries. The Seventh Diary, 1715–1778, preceded by a Summary of Events, 1691–1715 (ib., xxviii, 1928). P. Guilday, The English Catholic Refugees on the Continent, 1558–1795, i (1914), chs. iv and ix, 'The English College at Douai', pp. 63–120 and 307–45, incl. full bibliographical notes to date. J. H. Baxter, 'The Scots College at Douai' in The Scottish Historical Review, xxiv (1927), pp. 251–7; H. Chadwick, S.J., 'The Scots College, Douai, 1580–1613' in E.H.R., lvi (1941), pp. 571–85. C. Lefebvre in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 703–32, s.v. See also bibl. s.v. Downside.

DOUAI-REIMS BIBLE. The version of the Bible in use among English-speaking RCs for more than three centuries. It was the work of members of the English College at *Douai, of whom the chief were G. *Martin (d. 1582), Thomas Worthington, Richard Bristowe, and William *Allen, all of them formerly from Oxford. It claimed to provide a version free from the heretical renderings in the earlier English Bibles. The work was begun at Douai, but owing to the migration of the college to Reims in 1578, the NT was completed in that city and published there in 1582. The OT, which did not appear till 1609, was published at Douai, whither the college had returned in the meantime. The translation, which was made not from the original languages but from the Latin *Vulgate, was painstaking and reached a high standard of consistency, but was often too literal to be suitable for use in public worship or private devotional reading. There was also a strong tendency to retain technical words (e.g. 'pasch', 'parasceve', 'azymes') without alteration, and many passages are more an anglicization than a translation of the Latin, e.g. Phil. 2. 7 (8): 'He exinanited Himself'. The dogmatic intentions of its authors found expression in the prologue and in the notes that accompany the text. Its language exercised considerable influence on the text of the *Authorized Version. Modern editions of this translation are based on the revision made by R. *Challoner in 1749–50. The Reims NT was vigorously attacked in 1589 by W. *Fulke.

J. G. Carleton, The Part of Rheims in the Making of the English Bible (1902). B. F. *Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (ed. 3 by W. A. Wright; 1905), pp. 102–6, 245–55; A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 33–7, with documents, pp. 298–313. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 190–5. H. Pope, O.P.–S. Bullough, O.P., 'The History of the Rheims–Douai Version' in B. Orchard, O.S.B., and others (edd.), A Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture (1953), pp. 34–9, with bibl. Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), pp. 95 f., 127 f. For background, see also Douai diaries and other works cited s.v. Douai, and Letters and Memorials of W. Allen s.v. Allen.

DOUBLE FEASTS. The name formerly given, in the Roman *Missal and *Breviary, to the more important feasts. They were distinguished as (ordinary) Doubles, Greater Doubles, Doubles of the Second Class, and Doubles of the First Class. The use of the term is of uncertain origin.

DOUBLE MONASTERY. A religious house for both men and women. The two sexes dwelt in separate but contiguous establishments, worshipped in distinct parts of a common church, and were ruled by a common superior. Such monasteries are first found in the E. in the last generations of the Roman Empire, whence they spread to W. Europe, where they became numerous and influential in the Dark Ages. To this type belonged the famous abbey of *Whitby, ruled in the 7th cent. by St. *Hilda. Most of them disappeared in the disorders of the 9th and 10th cents., but were revived (generally only for a short time) by certain of the smaller monastic orders of the 12th cent., including the Order of *Sempringham.

Mary Bateson, 'Origin and Early History of Double Monasteries' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, New Series, xiii (1899), pp. 137–98. U. Berlière, O.S.B., Les Monastères doubles aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires, Sér. 2, xviii; 1923).

DOUBLE PROCESSION OF THE HOLY GHOST, the doctrine of the W. Church acc. to which the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son. Support for it is found in several NT passages, notably Jn. 16. 13–15, where Christ says of the Holy Ghost 'He shall take (λήψεται) of Mine and shall shew it unto you'. It is urged that in the Inner-Trinitarian relations one Person cannot 'take' or 'receive' (λήψεται) anything from either of the others except by way of Procession. Among other texts adduced for the doctrine are Gal. 4. 6, where the Holy Ghost is called 'the Spirit of the Son', Rom. 8. 9 'the Spirit of Christ', Phil. 1. 19 'the Spirit of Jesus Christ', and the Johannine texts on the sending of the Holy Ghost by Jesus (14. 16, 15. 26, 16. 7).

Among the Greek Fathers St. *Cyril of Alexandria is usually considered one of the most important witnesses to the doctrine. He develops it in his struggle against *Nestorianism, calling the Holy Spirit the property of the Son, τὸ ἴδιον τοῦ Υἱοῦ. He also uses several times the characteristic Latin formula 'and the Son' side by side with the Greek phrase 'through the Son', the former indicating the equality of principle, the latter the order of origin. The doctrine was expressly denied, on the other hand, by *Theodore of Mopsuestia and *Theodoret. Among the Latin Fathers, St. *Jerome, St. *Ambrose, and esp. St. *Augustine are representatives of the teaching summed up in the '*Filioque' (q.v.). But the doctrine did not become a matter of controversy until the time of *Photius (864), who asserted it to be contrary to the teaching of the Fathers and even suspected the relevant passages as interpolations. At the Council of *Florence (1439), Mark of Ephesus repeated this theory; but today most theologians of the E. Church recognize that St. Augustine and other Latin Fathers taught the Double Procession, but only as a private opinion. The objection urged by E. theologians against the doctrine is that there must be a single Fount of Divinity (πηγὴ θεότητος) in the Godhead. The consideration urged by W. theologians in its support is that, as both Latins and Greeks attribute everything as common to the Father and the Son except the relation of Paternity and Filiation, the Spiration of the Holy Ghost, in which this relation is not involved, must also be common to both.

H. B. *Swete, On the History of the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit from the Apostolic Age to the Death of Charlemagne (1876). M. Jugie, A.A., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissentium, i (Paris, 1926), esp. pp. 286–311, and ii (1933), pp. 296–535. Id., De Processione Spiritus Sancti ex Fontibus Revelationis et secundum Orientales Dissidentes (Lateranum, N.S., ii, Nos. 3–4; 1936), with reff. See fuller bibl. s.v. Filioque.

DOUKHOBORS (Russ.), 'Spirit-fighters'. A Russian sect of unknown origin. It seems to have arisen among Russian peasants in the district of Kharkov c. 1740, and spread rapidly. Under Paul I (d. 1801) the Doukhobors came into conflict with the government and were banished to Siberia; under Alexander I (d. 1825) they settled in Taurida as an agricultural community run on communist lines. Owing to the intolerance of the Orthodox clergy and their own growing moral laxity, they were again banished and sent to Transcaucasia in 1841. In 1895, having come under the influence of L. *Tolstoy, they refused to serve in the army and burned their weapons. Being once more expelled they found themselves reduced to starvation, when the assistance of Tolstoy and the *Quakers enabled most of them to emigrate to Cyprus and Canada. Here they became a nuisance to the government because they refused to own land as individuals and to register births, deaths, and marriages. Those still in Russia are said to have established relations with the Communist government in 1921. The Doukhobors believe in one God manifested in the human soul as memory (Father), reason (Son), and will (Holy Ghost). Jesus Christ is not God but a man possessing Divine reason in the highest degree. The Bible and all Christian dogmas are interpreted allegorically, while the human soul is eternal and suffers *metempsychosis.

J. Elkington, The Doukhobors. Their History in Russia. Their Migration to Canada (Philadelphia, 1903); A. Maude, A Peculiar People. The Doukhobors (London, 1904). J. F. C. Wright, Slava Bohu. The Story of the Dukhobors (New York, 1940). H. B. Hawthorn (ed.), The Doukhobors of British Columbia (1955). F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, x; 1921), pp. 266–87. A. Palmieri in D.T.C., iv (1908), cols. 1802–11, incl. full bibl. (mainly Russian); A. A. Stamouli in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 865–7.

DOVE. As a Christian symbol, the dove has many meanings. (1) From the dove with the olive branch in its beak in the story of the Flood (Gen. 8. 11), it is a sign of peace and reconciliation. (2) In the primitive Church, from the ref. to His descent upon Christ at His baptism under the form of a dove (Mk. 1. 10), it was esp. a type of the Holy Ghost. This symbol is found esp. in the vaults of early churches and frequently in conjunction with pictorial representations of the other two Persons of the Trinity. (3) From the Song of Solomon, where the Bride is called a dove (e.g. 2. 14, 5. 2), the symbol has been applied either to the Church, e.g. by *Tertullian, St. *Ambrose, and St. *Augustine, or to the individual soul regenerated by baptism, e.g. by St. *Hilary of Poitiers. (4) Other meanings of the dove are to denote inspired theological knowledge in the case of many saints, e.g. St. *Gregory the Great, St. *Dominic, St. *Thomas Aquinas, and St. *Teresa; and (5) to represent certain Christian virtues, notably purity and humility.

The 'Eucharistic Dove' is a hollow receptacle in the shape of a dove to contain the Blessed Sacrament. Its use was formerly believed, apparently wrongly, to go back to Tertullian. It is attested by a Martyrology of Auxerre of c. 1000, and in the 'Consuetudines Cluniacenses' of Udalricus. Two such receptacles dating from the 12th cent. are still extant. Today their use survives only in very few churches, e.g. in the cathedral of Amiens and in the Greek college of Sant'Atanasio in Rome.

F. Sühling, Die Taube als religiöses Symbol im christlichen Altertum (Römische Quartalschrift, Suppl., xxiv; 1930), with full reff. Id., 'Taube und Orante. Ein Beitrag zum Orantenproblem' in R.Q., xxxix (1931), pp. 333–54. W. Stegel, Das Taubensymbol des Heiligen Geistes (1904). J. P. Kirsch in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2198–231, s.v. 'Colombe'. On the Eucharistic Dove, F. Raible, Der Tabernakel einst und jetzt (1908), pp. 131–52; Braun, C.A., ii, pp. 608–16, with plates, 353–5; id., A.G., pp. 319–23.

DOWNSIDE ABBEY. St. Gregory's Abbey, Downside, near Bath, is the premier house of the English *Benedictine Congregation. It traces its origin to a small settlement of English monks begun at *Douai in 1607, for which a monastery was built in 1611 with a school attached for the education of English RC boys. Expelled from Douai in the French Revolution, the monks found refuge in England, where Sir Edward Smythe put his Shropshire country seat at their disposal. In 1814 the community moved to Downside. In 1899 it was raised from the status of a priory to that of an abbey. It is today one of the centres of RC life in England, maintaining in its own buildings its large and important school. The Abbey church, consecrated in 1935, is one of the finest examples of modern Gothic in England. The monks, who carry on the Benedictine liturgical tradition, edit a quarterly periodical, The Downside Review, chiefly devoted to Church history, esp. monastic interests and philosophy. Scholars of distinction at Downside in recent times include F. A. *Gasquet, E. C[uthbert] Butler (1858–1934), J. *Chapman, R. H. *Connolly, and B. C[hristopher] Butler (1902–86).

H. N. Birt, O.S.B., Downside. The History of St. Gregory's School from its Commencement at Douay to the Present Time (1902). [R.] H. Connolly, O.S.B., Some Dates and Documents for the Early History of our House, i [all publd.] (privately pr., 1930). H. van Zeller, O.S.B., Downside By and Large (1954). Artt. in The Downside Review, xxxiii (1914). Downside Abbey. Church Guide (1905 and subsequent edd.). Life of Henry Edmund Ford, Abbot 1900–1906, by B. Hicks, O.S.B. (London [1947]). [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., 'Abbot Butler: a memoir' and 'The Works and Thought of Abbot Butler' in Downside Review, lii (1934), pp. 347–465, with a list of his works, pp. 466–72, repr. (without list of works) in The Historian and Character and other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 264–362. B. Sankey, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 767–9, s.v.

DOWSING, WILLIAM (? 1596–? 1679), Puritan iconoclast. He is remembered for his energy in carrying out the order of Parliament of 1643 for the destruction of the ornaments in churches. He was employed on this work under the Earl of Manchester in Cambridgeshire (1643–4) and in Suffolk (6 Jan.–1 Oct. 1644), and his journal testifies to the zeal and completeness of his work. At the Restoration Dowsing was left unpunished, and he died in obscurity.

The original MS. of the Suffolk Journal is lost. The Journal was first printed by R. Loder (1786) from a transcript made in 1704 when the original MS. was sold. Loder's text was reprinted in 1840 and 1844. The original MS. of the Cambridge Journal is also lost, but a transcript survives in the Baker MSS., vol. 38 (c. 1738), pp. 455–8 and 471–3, in the Cambridge University Library. It was first published by Z. Grey in 1739, apparently from a different MS. There is a modern edition by A. C. Moule (Cambridge, 1926).

DOXOLOGY. An ascription of glory (Gk. δόξα) to the Persons of the Holy Trinity. (1) The Greater Doxology is the Gloria in Excelsis.* (2) The Lesser Doxology is the Gloria Patri.* (3) Metrical forms, in some cases with special reference to a particular mystery of Christ or season of the Church, were appended to the hymns of the *Breviary, and in later times to other hymns also. Among the most familiar of these in English is the verse which begins 'Praise God from Whom all blessings flow', written by T. *Ken.

J. A. Jungmann, S.J., Die Stellung Christi im liturgischen Gebet (Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, vii–viii; 1925; ed. 2, ib., xix–xx; 1962), pp. 151–68; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 172–90, with reff. J. M. Hanssens, S.J., La Liturgie d'Hippolyte (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clv; 1959), pp. 343–70 ('Les Doxologies de la liturgie hippolytienne'). A. *Fortescue in C.E., v (1909), p. 150 f.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 1525–36; A. Stuiber in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 210–26, all s.v.

DRAGONNADES (1683–6). The persecutions, so named from their being carried out by mounted troops ('dragoons'), who were quartered on the *Huguenots under the direction of Louis XIV with a view to crushing their independence and forcing them to accept the Catholic religion. Their alleged success in inducing the great majority of the Huguenots to accept the faith was made a pretext for revoking the Edict of *Nantes on 18 Oct. 1685.

E. Lavisse, Histoire de France depuis les origines jusqu'à la Révolution, vii (pt. 1; 1905), pp. 64–6 and 72–5; A. J. Grant in C.M.H., v (1908), p. 24, with bibl. p. 766. See also works cited under Nantes, Edict of.

DRAMA, Christian. In the first centuries of the Christian era drama existed only in the form of spectacula, which necessarily incurred the deep hostility of the Church. All plays, in the remote historical origins of the dramatic art, were acts of religious worship; and even the sterilizing degeneration of Classical and post-Classical polytheism had not destroyed the superficially liturgical character of the public shows. To take part, even as a spectator, in such a performance was to make an overt act of paganism, whether or not any definitely idolatrous ceremony was involved in it. This is the chief foundation of *Tertullian's invective in his De Spectaculis (c. 200). Besides, the moral tendency of the pagan shows was wholly inconsistent with the Christian character, as two examples—the gladiatorial combats and the obscene comedies—sufficiently prove. Tertullian used this argument, but it was more thoroughly developed by *Cyprian (3rd cent.) and *Chrysostom (4th cent.). The pagans themselves acknowledged the demoralizing effect of their spectacles; the Emp. *Julian forbade pagan priests to go to the theatre (363); and *Augustine's friend, Alypius, though a heathen, abhorred all such 'deadly amusements' in his first youth (c. 370). A third cause of the antagonism of the early Church towards spectacula in general lay in the supposed opposition between that asceticism implicit in the Christian profession and the pursuit of secular pleasures.

The destruction of the Roman Empire and of the Imperial religion involved the disappearance of the traditional pagan shows, and although plays of a kind were certainly performed in various places throughout the Dark Ages, the drama ceased to present an important problem for the Christian conscience. In the 9th cent. two significant documents indicate a new development. The Saxon nun *Hrosvit wrote a number of edifying 'comedies' in imitation of Terence, and the English monk, *Ethelwold, described the 'praiseworthy custom' of celebrating the death and resurrection of Christ by a representation, with mime and dialogue, to be performed in church during or after the liturgical rites. Hrosvit was doubtless wholly ignorant of the conditions of dramatic performance, and the inventors of the earliest Resurrection 'play', using the *trope Quem quaeritis, were only developing a representational or dramatic tendency implicit in all liturgical worship, and esp. marked in the *Gallican Rite. In the later Middle Ages the composition and presentation of Latin 'comedies' became a normal exercise in scholastic establishments, and prepared the way for the Classical drama of the Renaissance, while the liturgical drama developed into the *Mystery (or Miracle) Plays (q.v.). Already in the 11th cent. a robustly comic element had found its way, in the characters of Balaam and Herod, into plays actually performed in church: the Mystère d'Adam (12th cent.) has stage directions which show that it was performed outside the church, and mark the final elimination of all liturgical spirit by a deliberately naturalistic technique of décor and production.

Side by side with the elaboration of the mysteries and morality plays, there took place a great development of purely secular drama in all parts of Christendom. The attitude of the medieval Church towards stage plays in general was not wholly consistent, and individual instances of intolerance can be found; but since most of the plays were at least ostensibly edifying, and the players organized in ostensibly pious confraternities, the traditional hostility of the early Fathers to the spectacula had no longer any direct relevance to the changed situation. Since the 16th cent. the drama has been once more released from the ecclesiastical connexion. The more puritanical of the Reformers and their followers, e.g. W. *Prynne, tended to repudiate the stage altogether, though T. *Beza wrote mystery plays for a Protestant public. But on the whole, Christian people, while exhibiting a certain mistrust of the moral effects of play-going and esp. of acting, have acquiesced in the establishment of the drama as a normal part of social life. The traditional religious plays have survived in various parts of the world (see Oberammergau), while in modern times there has been a considerable revival of expressly religious drama in England, e.g. such plays as T. S. *Eliot's Murder in the Cathedral (1935). This movement is fostered by the 'Religious Drama Society'.

G. Crosse, The Religious Drama ('The Arts of the Church', 1913). E. K. Chambers, The Mediaeval Stage (2 vols., 1903); K. Young, The Drama of the Medieval Church (2 vols., 1933), with bibl. O. B. Hardison, Jr., Christian Rite and Christian Drama in the Middle Ages. Essays in the Origin and Early History of Modern Drama (Baltimore, 1965). O. Cargill, Drama and Liturgy (New York, 1930). E. de Coussemaker, Drames liturgiques du moyen âge. Texte et musique (1861). A. W. Pollard (ed.), English Miracle Plays, Moralities and Interludes. Specimens of the Pre-Elizabethan Drama, ed. with introd., notes and glossary (1890). H. Craig, The English Religious Drama of the Middle Ages (1955). R. Southern, The Medieval Theatre in the Round. A Study of the Staging of The Castle of Perseverance and Related Matters (1957). A. [L.] Williams, The Drama of Medieval England ([East Lansing, Michigan, 1961). V. A. Kolve, The Play called Corpus Christi (1966). M. Roston, Biblical Drama in England from the Middle Ages to the Present Day (1968). E. K. Chambers, English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1945), pp. 1–65; G. Wickham, Early Stages 1300 to 1660, i. 1300 to 1575 (1959); F. P. Wilson, The English Drama 1485–1585 (Oxford, 1969), esp. pp. 1–77. M. J. Rudwin, A Historical and Bibliographical Survey of the German Religious Drama (University of Pittsburgh Studies in Language and Literature; 1924). Grace Frank, The Medieval French Drama (Oxford, 1954). R. B. Donovan, C.S.B., The Liturgical Drama in Medieval Spain (Toronto, 1958). C. J. Stratman, C.S.V., Bibliography of Medieval Drama (Berkley–Los Angeles, 1954). E. C. Dunn and others in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 1039–52, s.v. 'Drama, Medieval'. See also bibl. to Mystery Plays.

DREWS, ARTHUR (1865–1935), German anti-Christian apologist. A disciple of E. von *Hartmann (q.v.), he taught from 1896 onwards at the Technical High School at Karlsruhe. Identifying God and world in a 'concrete monism', he held that religion consisted in a man's consciousness of himself as a supra-individual being and that true religion was based solely on reason, not on history. Hence he explained Christianity as a form of *Gnosticism and challenged the historical existence of the Person of Christ. Among his writings were Das Ich als Grundprinzip der Metaphysik (1897), Die Religion als Selbst-Bewusstsein Gottes (1906), Die Christusmythe (2 vols., 1909–11), Die Petruslegende (1910), Freie Religion (1921), Die Entstehung des Christentums aus dem Gnosticismus (1924), and Die Bestreitung der Geschichtlichkeit Jesu (1926).

A. Drews also edited the collective work Der Monismus (2 vols., Jena, 1908). List of his writings in W. Ziegenfuss (ed.), Philosophen-Lexikon, i (1949), p. 256.

DREXELIUS, i.e. Jeremias Drexel [not 'Drechsel'] (1581–1638), spiritual writer. In 1598 he entered the *Jesuit Order, and for many years was professor of the humanities at Augsburg. He is remembered chiefly as the author of a long series of devotional treatises which went through numerous editions and translations and circulated equally among Protestants and Catholics. Among the most popular of them were his Heliotropium; seu conformatio humanae voluntatis cum divina (1627) and his Noe architectus arcae, in diluvio navarchus, descriptus et morali doctrina illustratus (1642).

His works are enumerated in Sommervogel, iii (1892), cols. 181–205, and ix (1900), cols. 243–5. H. Gauly, Das einfache Auge. Die Lehre des P. Jeremias Drexel S.J. über die 'recta Intentio' (Mainz, 1962). P. Bailly in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 1714–17, s.v.

DRIVER, Sir GODFREY ROLLES (1892–1975), OT scholar and Semitic philologist. The son of S. R. *Driver, he was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford. He was elected a Fellow of Magdalen College in 1919 and held the title of Professor of Semitic Philology from 1938 to 1962. He was intimately concerned with the New English Bible (see Bible, English Versions, 5), translating several Books and acting as Convener of the Old Testament Panel from 1957 and Joint Director (with C. H. *Dodd) from 1965. He was knighted in 1968.

His works include Grammar of the Colloquial Arabic of Syria and Palestine (1925), Semitic Writing (Schweich Lectures for 1944; 1948), and The Judaean Scrolls (1965), and editions, which have become standard texts, of Assyrian Laws (1935) and Babylonian Laws (1952–5), both with J. C. Miles, and Aramaic Documents of the Fifth Century B.C. (1954) and Canaanite Myths and Legends (1956).

Select bibl. of his writings in Hebrew and Semitic Studies presented to Godfrey Rolles Driver . . . in celebration of his seventieth birthday 20 August 1962, ed. D. W. Thomas–W. D. McHardy (Oxford, 1963), pp. 191–206.

DRIVER, SAMUEL ROLLES (1846–1914), OT and Hebrew scholar. Of *Quaker descent, he was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, and in 1870 elected a Fellow of New College. From 1883 until his death he was Regius professor of Hebrew and Canon of *Christ Church (in succession to E. B. *Pusey). His wide and exact knowledge of the OT, combined with sound judgement, caution and a strong Christian faith, did much to foster the spread of the critical view of the OT in Britain. His Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew (1874) established his reputation as a Semitic scholar; and his Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament (1897) remained a standard work for some fifty years. Before his death he had issued commentaries of one kind or another on about half the OT, the more notable being those on *Deuteronomy (1895), *Joel and *Amos (1897), *Daniel (1900), and *Genesis (1904). His other writings included Notes on the Hebrew Text . . . of the Books of Samuel (1890), The Parallel Psalter (1904), Modern Research as illustrating the Bible (Schweich Lectures, 1909), and Ideals of the Prophets (ed. by G. A. Cooke, 1915). He also collaborated with F. Brown and C. A. Briggs in the preparation of the Oxford Hebrew Lexicon (1891–1905) and contributed extensively to J. *Hastings's Dictionary of the Bible and other reference works.

W. *Sanday, The Life-Work of Samuel Rolles Driver. A Sermon Preached in Christ Church on March 8, 1914 (1914); G. A. Cooke, 'Driver and Wellhausen' in H.T.R., ix (1914), pp. 249–57. Bibl. of his published works in Driver's Ideals of the Prophets (ed. by G. A. C[ooke], 1915), Appendix A, pp. 213–34. G. A. Cooke in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 162 f.

DROSTE-VISCHERING, CLEMENS AUGUST VON (1773–1845), Abp. of *Cologne. A native of Münster i.W., he was the descendant of a devout Catholic family of the Westphalian nobility. In 1827 he became Auxiliary Bp. of Münster, and in 1835 he was elected Abp. of Cologne at the suggestion of the Prussian government, who hoped by this step to reconcile the Catholic nobility of Westphalia and the Rhineland as well as the clergy and laity to their policy. Soon, however, he came into conflict with the government through refusing his approbation to theological lectures and publications propagating the doctrines of G. *Hermes, which had been condemned by *Gregory XVI in 1835. The final break occurred over mixed marriages, which led to the Archbishop's imprisonment in the fortress of Minden in 1837 under pretext of treasonable activities. Gregory XVI protested; but the most powerful defence of the Archbishop was J. J. von *Görres's Athanasius (1838), which roused the support even of hitherto lukewarm Catholics. The effect of the conflict was a considerable increase in the vigour of Catholic life in Germany. Droste-Vischering was freed in 1839 and retired to Münster. After the accession of Frederick William IV, in 1841 the struggle ended in a compromise, the Archbishop retaining his dignity but leaving the government of his diocese to a coadjutor more acceptable to Prussia. His writings included Über die Religionsfreiheit der Katholiken (1817), written on the occasion of the tercentenary of M. *Luther's Ninety-Five Theses, and Über den Frieden unter der Kirche und den Staaten (1843).

H. J. Kappen, Clemens August, Erzbischof von Köln. Ein Lebensbild (1897). Short study by H. Kipper (Frankfurter Zeitgemässe Broschüren, N.F., xxvii, Hft. 2; 1907). J. Will, 'Die achtzehn Thesen des Erzbischofs Klemens August von Köln in ihrer dogmatischen Berechtigung' in Theologie und Glaube, xxi (1929), pp. 316–28. W. Müller in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 815–20, s.v. 'Droste-Vischering (1)', with extensive bibl.

DRUMMOND, HENRY (1786–1860), politician and *Irvingite leader. After some years in business he entered Parliament in 1810, and although ostensibly a Tory, voted throughout his life independently on the merits of individual measures, giving esp. support to those directed against RCs and Jews, but also taking a vigorous part in secular debates. In 1817 he went to Geneva, and there carried on a campaign against *Socinianism which split the local Protestant Church. From 1826 onwards he took a leading part in founding the Irvingite body (*Catholic Apostolic Church, q.v.), in which he held the rank of apostle, evangelist, and prophet, and which he helped greatly to finance. In 1834 he was ordained 'angel for Scotland' by the Irvingites, and continued to preach until 1856.

Short Introductory Notice by Lord Lovaine to his ed. of H. Drummond's Speeches in Parliament and Some Miscellaneous Pamphlets, i (1860), pp. iii–ix. J. A. Hamilton in D.N.B., xvi (1888), p. 28 f.

DRUMMOND, HENRY (1851–97), theological writer and revivalist. Brought up in the *Free Church of Scotland, he was educated at New College, Edinburgh, and at *Tübingen. In 1874–5 he assisted D. L. *Moody and I. D. Sankey in their mission in Ireland and England and worked with Moody on a similar undertaking in 1882. In 1883 he published his Natural Law in the Spiritual World, a work which sought to interpret the spiritual in terms of the principle of continuity evident in the natural order. In his later years Drummond conducted successful missions to several universities of Great Britain. He was also well known as a geologist and explorer in N. America and Central Africa. His other writings include Tropical Africa (1888) and The Ascent of Man (1894).

Lives by G. A. *Smith (London, 1899) and C. Lennox (ib., 1901). Anthology ed. J. W. Kennedy (New York, 1953), with biog. introd., pp. 19–62. Brief sketches by J. Y. Simpson ('Famous Scots Series', London, 1901) and A. H. Walker (London, 1913). T. Seccombe in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), p. 157 f.

DRUMMOND, JAMES (1835–1918), *Unitarian divine. Educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at Manchester New College, London, he became in 1860 assistant pastor of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester. From 1885 to 1906 he was principal of Manchester New College, first in London and later (from 1889) at Oxford. In his books he attempted to write without bias either for or against orthodoxy, and valued Unitarianism rather for its encouragement of theological freedom than for its own particular dogmatic negations. This outlook led sometimes to unexpected and unconventional conclusions. Thus he maintained that the Resurrection and the nature miracles of the Gospels were not a priori impossible, though the evidence for affirming them was insufficient, and that, though the Apostle *John was the author of the Fourth Gospel, the gospel was of only very limited historical value. Among his works were: The Jewish Messiah (1877), Philo-Judaeus (2 vols., 1888), Via, Veritas, Vita (*Hibbert Lectures for 1894; 1894), The Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel (1903), and Studies in Christian Doctrine (1908).

A Memorial Introduction by E. Drummond (daughter) and G. D. *Hicks is prefixed to his Pauline Meditations (1919), pp. vii–lxii. A. S. *Peake in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 163 f.

DRY MASS (Missa sicca). An abbreviated form of Mass which became customary esp. in the late Middle Ages. It was not properly a Mass at all, since the *Offertory, *Canon and Communion were omitted, but it was used on a variety of occasions, e.g. when the priest wished to say a second Mass on a particular day (the prescriptions against *bination prohibiting a proper Mass); on the occasion of pilgrimages, when a priest who had not broken his fast was not available; in rough sea on board ship (then called a missa nautica or missa navalis); or on hunting expeditions (missa venatoria, missa venatica). The celebration of Dry Masses was particularly widespread in France, and made its way even to Rome. It survives among the *Carthusians, who may say a Dry Mass of Our Lady in their cells after *Prime or *Terce; the practice is now optional. In the RC Church the pre-1955 Blessing of Palms on Palm Sunday, and in the C of E the *Ante-Communion service when ended with the 'Prayer for the Church Militant', may be regarded as forms of it.

J. Pinsk, 'Die Missa sicca' in J.L.W., iv (1924), pp. 90–118.

DRYDEN, JOHN (1631–1700), poet, dramatist, and critic. His first work, Heroic Stanzas (1659), which was a tribute to the memory of O. *Cromwell, was followed shortly afterwards by Astraea Redux, written to celebrate the return of *Charles II. His verse reached its maturity in his brilliant political satire Absalom and Achitophel (1681), directed against Shaftesbury. In 1682 he expressed his Anglican convictions in his Religio Laici; but, on the accession of *James II, he announced his conversion to RCism, in 1686, and wrote The Hind and the Panther (1687), in which Nonconformity and the C of E fall under his lash, while the Church of Rome is the milk-white hind. He persisted a RC after the Revolution.

The standard ed. of his Works is that of W. Scott (18 vols., London, 1808), with life as vol. i; revised ed. by G. Saintsbury (18 vols., Edinburgh, 1882–93); more recent ed. by E. N. Hooker and others (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1956 ff.). Dramatic Works also ed. M. Summers (6 vols., London, 1931–2); Letters ed. C. E. Ward (Durham, N.C., 1942) and Poetical Works ed. G. R. Noyes (Cambridge, Mass., 1950) and J. Kinsley (4 vols., Oxford, 1958). G. Saintsbury, Dryden (1881); A. Verrall, ed. M. de G. Verrall, Lectures on Dryden (1914); M. van Doren, The Poetry of John Dryden (New York, 1920; ed. 3, 1946); C. Hollis, Dryden (1933); J. M. Osborn, John Dryden. Some Biographical Facts and Problems (New York, 1940; revised ed., Gainsville, Florida, 1965); D. N. Smith, John Dryden (Clark Lectures, 1948–9; Cambridge, 1950); C. E. Ward, The Life of John Dryden (Chapel Hill, N.C.–London [1961]); B. King (ed.), Dryden's Mind and Art (Edinburgh, 1969). H. Macdonald, John Dryden. A Bibliography of Early Editions and Drydeniana (1939). L. I. Bredvold–H. Macdonald in C.B.E.L., ii (1940), pp. 262–75.

DUALISM. (1) A philosophical doctrine which holds that mind and matter are distinct, equally real, and not essentially related, as opposed to *monism, which asserts that all that exists has a single ultimate nature.

(2) A metaphysical system which holds that good and evil are the outcome or product of separate and equally ultimate first causes.

(3) The view, attributed to the *Nestorians by their enemies, but repudiated by themselves, that in the Incarnate Christ there were not merely two natures but two persons, a human and a Divine.

Simone Pêtrement, Le Dualisme chez Platon, les Gnostiques et les Manichéens (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1947), and other works of this author; U. Bianchi, Il dualismo religioso. Saggio storico ed etnologico (1958). R. Eucken and others in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 100–14, s.v.; J. Duchesne-Guillemin–H. Dörrie in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 334–50, s.v. 'Dualismus'.

DUBLIN (Dubh-linn, 'the black pool'). Settled by Norse invaders in 841, Dublin did not become a see until two centuries later. The traditional date of 1038 is unlikely, as the probable founder of the see, Sihtric Silkbeard, king of Dublin 989–1036, was driven into exile in 1036, and it is uncertain whether he returned before his death in 1042. A more likely date is 1028, or soon afterwards, when Sihtric made a pilgrimage to Rome, though this chronology assigns a very long episcopate to the first bishop, Dunan or Donatus. Dunan was consecrated by the Abp. of *Canterbury, to whom his successors swore allegiance until 1152, when the Synod of Kells made Dublin an Archbishopric. The first Abp., Patrick, was succeeded by St. Laurence O'Toole (Abp. 1162–80), who made the cathedral chapter a community of *canons regular. During his archiepiscopate the English invasion of Ireland took place, and subsequent Abps. down to the *Reformation were exclusively Englishmen nominated by the Crown. John Comyn (Abp. 1182–1212) pursued a strongly pro-English policy. He also laid the foundations of St. Patrick's Cathedral and secured privileges for his see at the expense of *Armagh. This rivalry continued throughout the Middle Ages, and was not finally settled in the RC succession until 1893.

In 1536 *Henry VIII appointed as Abp. George *Brown, who, under *Edward VI, introduced the BCP and was deposed under *Mary in 1555. Under *Elizabeth I the (Protestant) Church of *Ireland was finally established, with possession of the two cathedrals of Holy Trinity (now Christ Church) and St. Patrick's, and in 1591 *Trinity College was founded to support the settlement. The majority of the population, however, remained RC, despite spasmodic persecution during the next two centuries; during this period there were but few resident archbishops, Dublin frequently being governed by *vicars-general. John Carpenter (abp. 1770–86) reorganized the RC diocese, and normal life was resumed at the end of the 18th cent. under the Dominican Thomas Troy (Abp. 1786–1823). Under him *Maynooth College was founded, the pro-cathedral, dedicated to Our Lady, was begun in 1815, and many schools and religious houses were established. Since 1929 Dublin has been the seat of a Papal nuntius.

Notable Protestant Abps. in modern times include R. *Whately (1831), R. C. *Trench (1864), J. H. *Bernard (1915), and C. F. D'Arcy (1919; translated to Armagh in 1920), a considerable philosopher.

There is much primary material ed. J. T. Gilbert, Historical and Municipal Documents of Ireland, A.D. 1172–1320 (Rolls Series, 1870). H. Cotton, Fasti Ecclesiæ Hibernicæ. The Succession of the Prelates and Members of Cathedral Bodies in Ireland, ii (1848), pp. 1–212, v (1860), pp. 77–139. J. T. Gilbert, A History of the City of Dublin (3 vols., 1854–9); D. A. Chart, The Story of Dublin (Medieval Towns Series, 1907). A. Gwynn, S.J., 'The Origins of the See of Dublin' in Irish Ecclesiastical Record, Fifth Series, lvii (1941), pp. 40–55, 97–112. M. V. Ronan, The Reformation in Dublin 1536–1558 (1926). [P. F.] Moran, History of the Catholic Archbishops of Dublin, since the Reformation, i (Dublin, 1864). W. Butler, The Cathedral of Holy Trinity, Dublin. Christ Church (1901); W. M. Mason, The History and Antiquities of the Collegiate and Cathedral Church of St. Patrick, near Dublin, from its foundation in 1190, to the Year 1819 (Dublin, 1820). J. H. Bernard, The Cathedral Church of St. Patrick (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1903). N. Donnelly, Short History of Some Dublin Parishes (1906). C. Mooney, O.F.M., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 830–936, s.v., with bibl.; R. D. Edwards in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 1076–9, s.v., also with bibl. For ecclesiastical history see also bibl. s.v. Ireland, Christianity in.

DUBLIN REVIEW, The. This quarterly RC review owes its origin to M. J. Quin (1796–1843), an Irishman who practised at the English bar. The first issue appeared in May 1836. It has exercised from the first a great influence both within and outside the RC Church. For its success in its earliest years, N. *Wiseman and D. *O'Connell were largely responsible; and it was a quotation from St. *Augustine—securus iudicat orbis terrarum—in an article by N. Wiseman in the issue for Aug. 1839, that encouraged J. H. *Newman's first serious doubts about the Catholicity of the C. of E. From 1863 to 1878, under the editorship of W. G. *Ward, it strongly supported the cause of Papal Infallibility and attacked theological liberalism. In 1961 its name was changed to The Wiseman Review, but it reverted to its original title in 1965. In 1969 it was incorporated into The Month.

Artt. in Dublin Review, cxcviii (1936), pp. 187–321. T. Corbishley, S.J., 'Marriage of True Minds' in Month, N.S., xlii (1969), pp. 4–7.

DUBOURG, ANNE (c. 1520–59), French Protestant martyr. In 1547 he became professor of civil law in the University of Orléans, and in 1557 conseiller clerc to the Parliament of *Paris. Intercourse with French Protestants and the study of the Scriptures and early Church history convinced him of Reformation principles, and at Easter, 1559, he made his communion with the *Huguenots. He now began to defend the Protestants in the Parliament against the frequent attacks of the Catholic party, and a provocative speech in the presence of Henry II led to his arrest. After unsuccessful appeals to various prelates and statesmen, he was burnt at the stake in Paris on 23 Dec. 1559.

La Vraye Histoire contenant l'unique jugement et fausse procédure faite contre Anne Dubourg . . ., publ. Antwerp, 1561, repr. in Mémoires de Condé, i (ed. 1743), pp. 217–304. J. Viénot, Histoire de la réforme française des origines à l'édit de Nantes (1926), pp. 251 f. and 296–9. T. Schott in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 50–3, s.v., with further reff.

DUBRICIUS, St. (6th cent.), also 'Dyfrig', reputed Bp. of *Llandaff. None of the traditions about him seems to merit credence. He is said to have been a pupil of St. *Germanus of Auxerre (chronologically impossible); to have had his headquarters at Henllan near Ross and at Moccas, whence he established many other monastic settlements; and to have spent his last years as a hermit on the island of Bardsey (Ynys Enlli). He was the subject of many medieval legends, *Geoffrey of Monmouth making him Abp. of Caerleon and asserting that he crowned King Arthur. Tradition also makes him the consecrator of St. *Samson of Dol and of St. *Deiniol. Feast day, 14 Nov.

Apart from passing reference in the life of St. Samson, the sources are all late: The Liber Landavensis (Book of Llandaff; ed. J. G. Evans–J. Rhys, 'Old Welsh Texts', iv, Oxford, 1893, pp. 68–86); Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britanniae, viii. 12, ix. 4, 12, and 15 (ed. A. Griscom, New York and London, 1929, pp. 413, 432, 437, 453, and 458); late 12th cent. life by Benedict of Gloucester pr. in H. Wharton, Anglia Sacra, ii (London, 1691), pp. 654–61. Hardy, i, pp. 40–4. S. Baring-Gould–J. Fisher, The Lives of British Saints, ii (1908), pp. 359–82. G. H. Doble, Saint Dubricius ('Welsh Saints' Series, ii; Guildford and Esher, 1943); revised ed., Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (Cardiff, 1971), pp. 56–87. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xvi (1888), p. 82 f.

DUCAEUS, FRONTO (1558–1624), Fronton du Duc, *Patristic scholar. He became a *Jesuit in 1577 and was librarian at the College of Clermont at Paris from 1604. He edited many Greek Patristic writings, including those of *Chrysostom (12 vols., 1609–36), *Gregory of Nyssa (2 vols., 1615), and *Basil the Great (3 vols., 1618–38). He also issued an extended reply to *Du Plessis-Mornay's book on the Eucharist.

Sommervogel, iii (1892), cols. 233–49, and ix (1900), col. 254. P. Lejay in C.E., v (1909), p. 181, s.v. 'Duc, Fronton du'; P. Bernard in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 930–3, s.v. 'Fronton du Duc'.

DU CANGE, CHARLES DUFRESNE (1610–88), French historian and philologist. He was educated as a lawyer, but becoming dissatisfied with that profession, purchased in 1645 the position of Treasurer of France. His interest in history led him to a special study of Byzantine Greek and Low Latin, of which languages he soon became master. In 1678 he published his Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (3 vols., fol.), which remains the principal complete dictionary of Late Latin. It is a work of immense erudition based on a great variety of sources. This was followed in 1688 by a similar work on Low Greek (2 vols., fol.). Du Cange is also the author of important works on Byzantine and French history.

The Lat. 'Glossary' has frequently been edited and much expanded. An ed. in 6 vols. was issued by the *Maurists, Paris, 1733–6; standard ed. by L. Favre (10 vols., Niort, 1883–7), with 'Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Charles Dufresne Du Cange' appended to vol. ix (separate pagination; it is followed by a detailed list of his works, publd. and unpublished.). A photographic repr. of the Gk. 'Glossary' was issued at Paris, 1943. M. Esposito in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 1654–60, s.v., with detailed bibl.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., ib., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1422–52, s.v. 'Latin, i. Le Glossarium'; J. H. Baxter in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 1086 f., s.v.

DUCHESNE, LOUIS (1843–1922), French Church historian. After being ordained priest in 1867, he continued his theological studies in Rome and subsequently travelled in Greece and Asia Minor. In 1877 he was appointed professor of Church history at the Institut Catholique at Paris, a position he temporarily resigned in 1885 owing to the opposition aroused by his lectures on the history of doctrine. From 1895 to his death he was director of the French school at Rome; in 1910 he became a member of the French Academy. He was eminent esp. in the field of Christian archaeology and the history of the early Church, though his sharp critical sense and negative attitude towards traditional legends aroused opposition. His works include an edition of the Liber Pontificalis (2 vols., 1886–92), Origines du culte chrétien (1889; Eng. trans. by M. L. McClure under the title Christian Worship, 1903), Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule (3 vols., 1894–1915), L'Histoire ancienne de l'Église chrétienne (3 vols., 1906–10, put on the *Index in 1912; Eng. trans., 3 vols., 1909–1924), L'Église au sixième siècle (1925).

E. Dupont, Mgr Duchesne chez lui en Bretagne (Rennes, 1923). C d'Habloville, Grandes Figures de l'Église contemporaine (1925), pp. 1–177. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., 'Monseigneur Louis Duchesne. Son œuvre historique' in J.T.S., xxiv (1922–3), pp. 253–82. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (1925), cols. 2680–2735, s.v. 'Historiens du christianisme. xxxviii'. P. d'Espezel in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 965–84.

DU DUC, FRONTON. See Ducaeus, Fronto.

DUELLING, Christian Attitude to. Despite the protest of the Church, the recognition of the judicial duel by civil law continued till the later Middle Ages; and until the early 19th cent. in England, and much later abroad, the duel, though forbidden by law, was a recognized court of appeal in questions of 'honour' among the upper classes. By CIC, can. 2351, participants, spectators, and those in any way concerned in a duel, incur excommunication ipso facto. Duellists who die without sign of repentance are excluded from ecclesiastical burial.

V. Cathrein, S.J., in C.E., v (1909), pp. 184–7, s.v.; P. Fourneret in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1845–56, s.v. 'Duel'; P. Palazzini–R. Danieli–P. Ciprotti in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1966–70, s.v. 'Duello'; L. Falletti in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 3–40, s.v. 'Duel'; K. Mörsdorf in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), xii (1965), cols. 1426–8, s.v. 'Zweikampf', all with bibl. On the general history of the duel, J. G. Mullingen, The History of Duelling (2 vols., 1841); G. Neilson–L. H. Gray in H.E.R.E., v (1912) pp. 114–17, s.v. 'Duelling', with bibl.

DUFF, ALEXANDER (1806–78), Scottish *Presbyterian missionary. The first missionary of the Established Church of Scotland to India, he arrived at Calcutta in 1830, after twice being shipwrecked. At once he opened a school there, which later developed into a college that became a centre of W. education in India. From 1834 till 1840 he was engaged in stirring up the Church of Scotland to support his work; but shortly after his return to India in 1840 came the Schism of 1843, and Duff, joining the Free Church, lost all his mission property. He nevertheless continued his work, until in 1849 he had to return home. In 1851 (and again in 1873) he was elected chairman of the General Assembly of the Free Church. During his last stay in India (1856–64) he was largely occupied with the foundation of the University of Calcutta. In 1864 he visited S. Africa and on his return to Scotland spent much of the rest of his life working for the missionary cause.

Life by G. Smith (2 vols., London, 1879). Memorials of Alexander Duff (1890) by his son. W. Paton, Alexander Duff (1923). W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., xvi (1888), pp. 125–8, s.v.

DUFRESNE, CHARLES, SIEUR DU CANGE. See Ducange, Charles Dufresne.

DUGDALE, WILLIAM (1605–86), author of the Monasticon Anglicanum* (q.v.). He spent nearly all his life in antiquarian research. His share in the Monasticon Anglicanum began with his meeting in 1638 with Roger Dodsworth, then engaged in collecting documents illustrating the history of Yorkshire and the foundation of monasteries in the N. of England. A little later, in view of the dreaded war, he was commissioned by Sir Christopher Hatton to make exact drafts and records of monuments in the principal churches of England. During the Civil War he was employed by *Charles I in the delivery of royal warrants demanding the surrender of castles held by rebel garrisons. Besides the Monasticon, of which the first volume appeared in 1655, his writings included Antiquities of Warwickshire (1656), History of St. Paul's Cathedral (1658), and The Baronage of England (1675–6). In 1677 Dugdale was created Garter Principal King of Arms.

His Visitation of the County of Yorks was pr. in The Surtees Society, xxxvi (1859), with index by G. J. Armytage (London, 1872), and ed. J. W. Clay (3 vols., Exeter, 1894–1917); that of Lancs ed. F. R. Raines (Chetham Society, lxxxiv, lxxxv, and lxxxviii; 1872–3); that of Staffs ed. H. S. Grazebrook in The William Salt Archaeological Society, ii (pt. 2; 1881), pp. 23–65, and by G. J. Armytage-W. H. Rylands (The Publications of the Harleian Society, lxiv; 1912); that of Derby publ. London, 1879; that of Durham ed. J. Foster (London, 1887) and pr. in The Newcastle upon Tyne Record Series, v (1925), pp. 1–84; that of Cumberland and Westmorland ed. J. Foster (Carlisle, 1891); that of Northumberland ed. id. (Newcastle upon Tyne, 1891) and pr. in The Newcastle upon Tyne Record Series, iv (1924), pp. 1–102. W. Hamper (ed.), The Life, Diary and Correspondence of Sir William Dugdale (1827). Short anon. life (London, 1713); life in Heraldic Miscellanies (London [1793]), pp. 1–24; W. F. S. Dugdale, 'Sir William Dugdale' in A. Dryden (ed.), Memorials of Old Warwickshire (1908), pp. 219–30. D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 31–59. F. Maddison, Dorothy Styles and A. Wood, Sir William Dugdale 1605–1686. A List of his printed works and of his portraits with notes on his life and the manuscript sources (Warwick, 1953). L. Fox (ed.), English Historical Scholarship in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries. A record of the papers delivered at a Conference arranged by the Dugdale Society to commemorate the tercentenary of the publication of Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire (1956), esp. pp. 88–91.

DUHM, BERNHARD (1847–1928), OT scholar. He was born at Bingum in Ostfriesland and received his schooling in Aurich and his theological education at Göttingen, where he became professor extraordinarius in 1877. In 1888 he was appointed professor ordinarius at Basel, where he remained till his death. It was above all as an interpreter of the Prophets that Duhm excelled. His first book, Die Theologie der Propheten als Grundlage für die innere Entwicklungsgeschichte der israelitischen Religion dargestellt (1875), laid a sound foundation for the best of his later work. It also gave an impulse from the side of prophetic criticism to the great contemporary turning movement in *Pentateuchal criticism, which led to the establishment of the Graf–Wellhausen hypothesis. Duhm held that the completed Law was later than the 8th and 7th cent. Prophets. His reconstruction of the development of Israelite religion was a counterpart to what J. *Wellhausen was later to present in his Prolegomena. Further, Duhm sought to understand the Prophets as great religious personalities. His commentary on Isaiah (1892) exercised a far-reaching influence. Of special interest were his separation of Is. 56–66 from 40–55 (*Deutero-Isaiah) as a later composition (*Trito-Isaiah) and his view that the four *Servant Songs (42. 1–4, 49. 1–6, 50. 4–9, and 52. 13 – 53. 12) were not the work of Deutero-Isaiah. The whole commentary was marked by discerning exegesis and poetic appreciation, but also at times marred by arbitrary textual emendation. In Israels Propheten (1916; ed. 2, 1922) he presented his interpretation of the prophets again in more popular form. These three books contain his most important contributions to OT study. He also publd. commentaries on Job (1897), Psalms (1899; ed. 2, 1922) and Jeremiah (1901), and a number of short studies, mainly on aspects of OT religion.

Biographical foreword by W. Baumgarten to his ed. of Duhm's commentary on Isaiah, Das Buch Jesaja (ed. 5, 1967), pp. v–xiii. H. J. Kraus, Geschichte der historisch-kritischen Erforschung des Alten Testaments von der Reformation bis zur Gegenwart (Neukirchen, 1956), pp. 250–7; ed. 2 (1969), pp. 275–83.

DUKHOBORS. See Doukhobors.

DULIA (Latinized form of Greek δουλεία, 'service'). The reverence which, acc. to Orthodox and RC theology, may be paid to the saints, as contrasted with hyperdulia (ὑπερδουλεία), which may be paid only to the BVM, and latria (λατρεία), which is reserved for God alone. In classical as contrasted with ecclesiastical usage δουλεία is a stronger term than λατρεία.

DU MOULIN, PIERRE (1568–1658), 'Molinaeus', French Reformed theologian. The son of a Protestant preacher, Joachim du Moulin, whose family had settled at Sedan, Pierre became tutor in 1588 to the young Earl of Rutland. In 1592 he returned from England to the Continent and was appointed professor of philosophy and Greek in the University of *Leyden. From 1599 to 1620 he was minister of the Reformed Congregation at Charenton, and from 1620 till his death minister and professor at Sedan. He took a prominent part in religious controversy, upholding a mediating position which irritated Catholics and Calvinists alike; and more than 80 writings flowed from his pen. Over a long period he kept up relations with many Anglican divines, including *James I. P. *Jurieu (1637–1713) was his grandson.

His Autobiography was publd. in the Bulletin de l'Histoire du Protestantisme français, vii (1858). Eng. tr. of his Nouveauté du papisme, opposée à l'antiquité du vray christianisme by his son, Peter Du Moulin (London, 1662), with life by id. (no pagination). G. Gory, Pierre Du Moulin. Essai sur sa vie, sa controverse et sa polémique (thesis, Paris, 1888); J. Massip, Un Vieux Prédicateur huguenot. Essai sur les sermons de Pierre Du Moulin (thesis, Montauban, 1888). G. Bonet Maury in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 56–60, s.v.

DUNKARDS, DUNCKERS. See Tunkers.

DUNS SCOTUS, JOHANNES (c. 1265–1308), 'Doctor Subtilis' or 'Doctor Marianus', medieval philosopher. Little is known of his life. He was prob. born at Maxton, nr. Roxburgh, and took the *Franciscan habit, perhaps at Dumfries c. 1280. He may have studied at Cambridge before he went to *Oxford, where he worked under William of Ware. He was ordained on 17 May 1291. He then studied at *Paris. He lectured on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard successively at Cambridge (prob. 1297–1300), Oxford (prob. 1300–2 and 1303–4) and Paris (prob. 1302–3 and 1304); here he became a regent in 1305. Prob. for political reasons, he was moved to *Cologne in 1307; he died the following year.

His principal work is his commentary on the Sentences, of which three versions are extant. The first, dating from his lectures at Cambridge and Oxford, and the second from his Paris period, have survived in the form of reportationes or notes taken down by his students. The third, the ordinatio, or text which he himself prepared for his lectures, dates from his last years. His other writings include a Tractatus de Primo Principio, Quodlibeta*, and works on logic.

His teaching combines with the *Aristotelianism prevalent in his time certain elements from the older *Augustinianism. The root difference between him and St. *Thomas (d. 1274) is that in the Thomist system knowledge and reason hold the first place, whereas Duns Scotus gives the primacy to love and the will. Thus he holds that the natural law depends wholly on the will of God and not, as St. Thomas teaches, on His mind, and that it is therefore not absolutely immutable; also that the beatitude of the souls in heaven does not formally consist in the intellectual vision, but in the act of love for God. He is, however, at one with St. Thomas in asserting that revelation does not contradict reason, and has many affinities with him in his theory of knowledge and his psychology, opposing strongly the doctrine of innate ideas which he denies even in *angels. His conception of *form and *matter, on the other hand, differed considerably from the teaching of St. Thomas. Duns Scotus held that 'prime matter' (prima materia) was common to all creatures, whether heavenly spirits, souls, or bodies, but that there was a plurality of forms, so that in man, e.g., being body as well as soul, there is a spiritual and a corporeal form. The 'principle of individuation' is not inherent in matter but is a third principle (which he calls haecceitas), superimposed on matter and form. Duns Scotus has become famous not only for the subtlety of his thought but as the first great theologian to defend the *Immaculate Conception, which he based on the perfect mediatorship of Christ. He also held, in common with other Franciscan theologians, as against the Thomists, that the Incarnation would have taken place irrespectively of the Fall.

The Scotist system, which was accepted by the Franciscans as their doctrinal basis, exercised a profound influence during the Middle Ages. The word 'dunce', used by humanists and the Reformers to ridicule the subtleties of the Schools, is a curious testimony to its popularity.

Collected edd. of his works [by L. *Wadding, O.F.M., F. de Pitigianis, O.F.M., Mauricius a Portu, O.F.M., H. Cavellus, O.F.M., F. Lychetus, O.F.M., J. Poncius, O.F.M., and A. Higuaeus, O.F.M.] (12 vols, Lyons, 1639; with repr. of his Life by Wadding from the Annales) and F. Vivès (26 vols., Paris, 1891–5); crit. ed. studio et cura Commissionis Scotisticae ad fidem codicum editum, praeside C. Balić (Rome, 1950 ff.). De Primo Principio, ed. with Eng. tr. by E. Roche, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, Philosophy Series, v; New York and Louvain, 1949). N. Landry, La Philosophie de Duns Scot (Paris thesis, 1922); E. Longpré, La Philosophie du B. Duns Scot (1924; repr. from Études franciscaines); C. R. S. Harris, Duns Scotus (2 vols., Oxford, 1927, with full bibl.; erroneously ascribes certain spuria to Scotus); P. Minges, O.F.M., Ioannis Duns Scoti Doctrina Philosophica et Theologica quoad res praecipuas proposita et exposita (posthumous; 2 vols., Quaracchi, 1930); E. Bettoni, O.F.M., Duns Scoto (Brescia, 1946; Eng. tr., Washington, 1961); E. *Gilson, Jean Duns Scotus. Introduction à ses positions fondamentales (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xlii; 1952); E. Bettoni, O.F.M., Duns Scoto Filosofo (Milan, 1966). J. K. Ryan–B. M. Bonansea (edd.), John Duns Scotus, 1265–1965 (Studies in Philosophy and the History of Philosophy, iii; Washington, 1965). R. Seeberg, Die Theologie des Johannes Duns Scotus (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, v; 1900). M. *Heidegger, Die Kategorien- und Bedeutungslehre des Duns Scotus (1916). [C. Balić,] Les Commentaires de Jean Duns Scotus sur les quatre livres des sentences. Étude historique et critique (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., i; 1927). M. Fernández García, O.F.M., Lexicon Scholasticum Philosophico-Theologicum [to Scotus] (Quaracchi, 1910). O. Schäfer, O.F.M., Bibliographia de Vita Operibus et Doctrina Iohannis Duns Scoti . . . Saec. xix–xx (Rome, 1955); S. Gieben 'Bibliographia scotistica recentior (1953–1965)' in Laurentianum, vi (1965), pp. 492–522. Überweg, ii, pp. 504–17, with bibl. pp. 765–8. B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 607–10; B.R.U.C., pp. 198–201 and 674–5, with bibl. to 1961. P. Raymond, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1865–1947; C. Balić, O.F.M., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 1102–6, and in E.B. (1968 ed.), vii, p. 765 f., both s.v.

DUNSTAN, St. (c. 909–88), Abp. of *Canterbury. After being attached for some time to the court of King Athelstan, he made his profession as a monk at *Glastonbury (where he had earlier received the tonsure) and c. 940 became abbot. He was a strict ascetic who completely reformed the monastery, insisting on the full observance of the *Benedictine Rule, and under him the monastery became famous for its learning. He became a minister and treasurer under King Edred (946–55), but during the next reign had to migrate to Flanders. After his recall in 957 by Edgar, King of Mercia and Northumbria, he was made Bp. of *Worcester and London; after Edgar had also become King of Wessex in 959, Dunstan was made Abp. of Canterbury the following year. The King and the Archbishop together planned and carried out a thorough reform of Church and state. After the death of Edgar, Dunstan and his friend St. *Oswald secured the election of King *Edward the Martyr, who continued his predecessor's policy. Edward, however, ruled for only a short time, and under his successor Dunstan's influence began to decrease. The restoration of monastic life, which seems to have been virtually extinct in England by the middle of the 10th cent., was almost wholly Dunstan's work. Among the foundations which he established were those of *Peterborough (966), *Ely (970), and Thorney (972). He zealously supported the cause of learning and himself achieved fame as musician, illuminator, and metal-worker. In the political field his most important work was his support of King Edgar. Feast day, 19 May. See also Regularis Concordia.

W. *Stubbs (ed.), Memorials of Saint Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury (Rolls Series, 1874). Books belonging to St. Dunstan, possibly incl. specimens of his handwriting, reprod. with introd. by R. W. Hunt, Saint Dunstan's Classbook from Glastonbury (Umbrae Codicum Occidentalium, iv; Amsterdam, 1961). F. A. *Gasquet and E. *Bishop, The Bosworth Psalter (1908), Appendix by L. A. St. L. Toke, 'Some Notes on the Accepted Date of St. Dunstan's Birth', pp. 131–43. J. A. *Robinson, The Times of St. Dunstan (Ford Lectures, 1922; 1923), esp. No. iv, pp. 81–103. Eleanor S. Duckett, Saint Dunstan of Canterbury. A Study of Monastic Reform in the Tenth Century (1955). D. Pontifex, O.S.B., 'St. Dunstan in his First Biography' in Downside Review, li (1933), pp. 20–40 and 309–25. [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1949; ed. 2, 1963), pp. 31–56. H. Farmer, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1063–8, s.v.

DUOMO (cf. Lat. domus, 'a house'). The Italian name for a cathedral, as pre-eminently the House of God's people in the diocese.

DUPANLOUP, FÉLIX ANTOINE PHILIBERT (1802–78), Bp. of Orléans from 1849. A native of Savoy, he was educated in *Paris, and, on being ordained priest in 1825, was appointed vicaire of the Madeleine, whence he was transferred to the church of St.-Roch in 1834. He instituted the method of teaching children known as the 'Catechism of *St.-Sulpice', and became one of the foremost Catholic educationists of France. As superior of the seminary of St.-Nicolas-du-Chardonnet (1837–45) he tried his new educational methods with the greatest success. As Bp. of Orléans, Dupanloup exerted strong pressure on public policy, esp. in education, and was active in securing for the Church the right, conceded by the 'Loi Falloux' of 1850, to conduct voluntary schools. Later he was an ardent advocate of the Pope's claims against the House of Savoy. At the *Vatican Council of 1870 he strongly advised the minority, of whom he was one, to abstain from voting and to withdraw, but he loyally accepted the decision of the Council when promulgated. His published works included La Haute Éducation intellectuelle (1850), La Femme studieuse (1869) and several panegyrics and pastoral letters.

Selected Letters ed. F. Lagrange (2 vols., Paris, 1888). Standard life by id. (3 vols., ib., 1883–4; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1885); cf. [M.] U. Maynard, Monseigneur Dupanloup et M. Lagrange son historien (1884). Other lives by M. M. F. Trench (anon., London, 1890) and E. Faguet (Paris, 1914). Christianne Marcilhacy, Le Diocèse d'Orléans sous l'épiscopat de Mgr Dupanloup 1849–1878 (Histoire des mentalités [1962]), esp. part 1. S. Lösch, Döllinger und Frankreich (Munich, 1955), esp. pp. 247–342. R. Aubert, 'Monseigneur Dupanloup et le Syllabus' in R.H.E., li (1956), pp. 79–142, 471–512, 837–915, incl. original docc.; id., 'Mgr Dupanloup au début du concile du Vatican' in Miscellanea Historiae Ecclesiasticae, Congrès de Stockholm, août 1960 (Louvain, 1961), pp. 96–116. Id. in D.H.G.E., ix (1960), cols. 1070–1122, s.v., with bibl.; id. in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 1108 f., s.v. For works dealing with his relations with the Vatican Council, see also bibl. to the latter.

DUPERRON, JACQUES DAVY (1556–1618), French cardinal and statesman. He was the son of a *Calvinist minister at St.-Lô. In 1573 he came to the court of Paris, and under the influence of his studies of the Fathers and the Schoolmen as well as later RC theologians, esp. St. Robert *Bellarmine, was received into the RC Church by the *Jesuits in 1577 or 1578. He became a close friend of Henry III, and after his death (1589) supported *Henry IV, who made him Bp. of Évreux in 1591, and whose conversion he brought about in 1593. In 1595 he went to Rome, where he obtained the King's absolution from heresy. He now devoted himself esp. to religious controversy, and in 1600 defeated P. *Du Plessis-Mornay, the 'Pope of the *Huguenots', in a public dispute. He was created cardinal in 1604, and soon afterwards was sent to Rome as chargé d'affaires. He was elected Abp. of Sens in 1606, in 1607 brought about the reconciliation between the Pope and *Venice, and in the same year returned to France. From 1610 he was involved in the conflicts between *Gallicans and *Ultramontanists. In 1611 he attacked E. Richer's De Ecclesiastica et Politica Potestate, a defence of Gallican principles, and in 1611–12 also carried on a correspondence with *James I on the question of the true Church. In the famous 'Harangue' of 1615 he again upheld the Ultramontanes against the tiers état. Among his works are the Réplique à la réponse du sérénissime roy de la Grande-Bretagne (publd. 1620), in which he defended the identity of the early Church with the modern Church of Rome by quotations from the Fathers, and the Traité de l'eucharistie (publd. 1622), in which is incorporated a refutation of Du Plessis-Mornay.

Collected Works ed. by his nephew, Jacques Duperron, under the title Les Diverses Œuvres de l'illustrissime cardinal Du Perron (Paris, 1622), with life, pp. 1–36. Further biographies by [J. L.] de Burigny (Paris, 1768) and P. Ferret (ib., 1877). G. Grente, Quae Fuerit in Cardinali Davy Du Perron Vis Oratoria (Paris thesis, 1903). Le Cardinal Jacques Davy Du Perron. Mélanges publiés à l'occasion du IVe Centenaire de sa naissance par la Société d'Archéologie et d'Histoire Naturelle de la Manche, with preface by A. Dupont (St. Lô, 1956), with bibl. C. Constantin in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1953–60, s.v.; R. Snoeks in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1130–6, s.v., with extensive bibl.

DUPIN, LOUIS ELLIES (1657–1719), a theologian of *Gallican sympathies. Though he had connexions with *Port-Royal, he is hardly to be considered a *Jansenist himself. His vast Nouvelle Bibliothèque des auteurs ecclésiastiques (some 60 vols., 1686–1719) aroused much opposition, notably from J. B. *Bossuet, through its unconventional treatment of early Church history; but though his views were officially condemned, the book was not put on the *Index till 1757. His other writings include a Traité de la puissance ecclésiastique et temporelle (1707) (which, being a defence of the four *Gallican Articles, was immediately attacked), an excellent edition of the works of St. *Optatus (1700), and what is still the standard edition of the works of J. *Gerson (1706). Shortly before his death he entered into friendly relations (Feb. 1718) with Abp. W. *Wake in an unsuccessful attempt to achieve reunion between the Anglican and RC Churches.

J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xii (1935), cols. 2111–15, s.v. Pin, incl. reff.; A. Dodin in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 1825–31, s.v., with reff. See also J. H. Lupton, Archbishop Wake and the Project of Union, 1717–1720 (1896); N. Sykes, William Wake, i (Cambridge, 1957), pp. 254–95 and 302–14.

DUPLESSIS-MORNAY, PHILIPPE (1549–1623), French statesman and *Huguenot leader. He was a native of Normandy. After the death of his father (1559), his family became Protestants. He studied at *Paris, where P. *Ramus was one of his teachers, and served for a time with Condé. After escaping from the St. *Bartholomew Massacre (1572) he fled to England, and for the next ten years acted as a military leader in the Huguenot cause and as diplomatic agent to William of Orange and *Henry of Navarre. In 1578 he published at London his Traité de l'Église and in 1579 completed his Traité de la vérité de la religion chrétienne. He actively furthered the proceedings of the general synods of the French Reformed Church and cherished the ideal of the union of all Protestant Churches. In 1589 he became governor of Saumur, where he built a Protestant church and founded (1593) a Protestant university. The conversion of Henry IV (1593), whose trusted counsellor he had been, came as a great blow; but he continued to work hard for the toleration of the Huguenots and secured in 1598 the Edict of *Nantes. In 1598 he issued a treatise on the Eucharist, De l'institution, usage et doctrine du saint sacrement de l'eucharistie en l'Église ancienne, the fruit of many years' study. J. D. *Duperron charged its author with several hundred misquotations from the Fathers, and at a public disputation before Henry IV, at Fontainebleau, 4 May 1600, du Plessis-Mornay was defeated. His Mysterium Iniquitatis sive Historia Papatus (Saumur, 1611; also in French) was an attack on C. *Baronius and R. *Bellarmine. In 1621, after the renewal of persecution under Louis XIII and the occupation of Saumur by royal troops, he retired to his castle, La Forêt-sur-Sèvre, where he died.

Suite des lettres et mémoires de Messire Philippes de Mornay (4 vols.; vol. i, n. pl., vol. ii, La Forest, and vols. iii, iv, Amsterdam, 1624–52; also ed. 12 vols. bound in 7, Paris, 1824–5, with memoir by Mme de Mornay on his life, vol. i, pp. 5–503). Mme de Witt (ed.), Mémoires de Madame de Mornay. Édition . . . accompagnée de lettres inédites de Mr et de Mme Du Plessis Mornay et leurs enfants (Société de l'Histoire de France, 2 vols., 1886–7; Eng. tr. of the Mémoires [1926]). [David de Liques, and others], Histoire de la vie de Messire Philippes de Mornay (Leyden, 1647). R. Patry, Philippe du Plessis-Mornay. Un huguenot homme d'État (1933). T. Schott in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 80–92, s.v., with reff.; R. Snoeks in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1136–41, with extensive bibl.

DUPLEX. The Latin name for ecclesiastical feasts previously known as *Doubles.

DUPLEX QUERELA. In the C of E the form of action open to a cleric whom the bishop refuses to institute to a benefice to which he has been presented. Unlike the patron's corresponding action, Quare Impedit* (q.v.), it takes place in an ecclesiastical court, viz. the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved. Appeal lies to the Crown in Chancery. Where the cleric is himself the patron he may sue the bishop either under Duplex Querela or Quare Impedit but not in both actions at the same time.

DUPLICATION. An alternative term for Bination (q.v.).

DUPPA, BRIAN (1588–1662), Bp. of *Winchester. In 1629 he became Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford. A High Churchman, he was in favour with the court. On W. *Laud's recommendation he was appointed tutor to the Prince of Wales (later *Charles II) and the Duke of Gloucester, with the former of whom he retained much influence all his life. In 1638 he became Bp. of *Chichester, and in 1641 of *Salisbury. From 1645 to 1660 Duppa was one of the leaders of the persecuted Church. He remained in close touch with *Charles I till his death, and during the Commonwealth did his utmost to keep the extruded clergy together and held private ordinations as opportunity offered. From 1653 to 1660, in conjunction with Edward Hyde at the exiled Court, he was making plans to preserve the episcopal succession, though without success. As W. *Juxon's representative, he was the chief consecrator at the first consecration after the Restoration. In 1660 he was translated to Winchester.

A spiritual manual by Duppa, Holy Rules and Helps to Devotion, both in Prayer and Practice (1673), was ed. by B. Parry (1675); it was frequently repr. in the 19th cent. G. Isham (ed.), The Correspondence of Bishop Brian Duppa and Sir Justinian Isham, 1650–1660 (Northamptonshire Record Society, xvii [1955]), with memoir of Duppa, pp. xix–xxxi. N. Pocock in D.N.B., xvi (1888), p. 242 f.

DURA EUROPOS. This ancient city (the 'Pompeii of the Syrian desert') on the right bank of the Euphrates, half way between Aleppo and Baghdad, first attracted attention in 1921 through the accidental discovery of some paintings here by a British army officer. A preliminary survey was made by J. H. Breasted (1921), and the site systematically excavated by F. Cumont (1922–3) and later jointly by Yale University and the French Academy of Inscriptions (1928–37). The city, which was earlier a Seleucid fortress and then a Parthian caravan city, came into Roman hands c. A.D. 165, when it was again made a fortress. It was held until c. 256, when it was abandoned. It has yielded a rich harvest of discoveries, among them: (1) a 3rd cent. Gk. fragment of *Tatian's Diatessaron; (2) the earliest known certain Jewish synagogue, A.D. 245, with notable paintings of events from OT history; and (3) the earliest known Christian church. This was constructed from two rooms of a private house by removing the partition wall. It had a raised platform, doubtless for the altar, at the E. end, while a third room of the house was converted into the *baptistery. At first it appeared that the conversion of the building into a church dated from c. 232, but in the Final Report of the Excavations it is argued that the building itself dates from c. 232 and the conversion from the 40s of the third cent.

F. Cumont, Fouilles de Doura-Europos, 1922–1923 (Paris, 1926). P. V. C. Baur, M. I. Rostovtzeff and others, The Excavations at Dura-Europos (preliminary reports of excavations undertaken Oct. 1928–36 in annual sessions issued in 10 vols., New Haven, Conn., 1929–52; final report publd. ib., 1943 ff., incl. vol. viii, part 1: The Synagogue, by C. H. Kraeling, 1956, and part 2: The Christian Building, by id., 1967), with bibl. General survey in M. I. Rostovtzeff, Dura Europos and its Art (Oxford, 1938); Rachel Wischnitzer, The Messianic Theme in the Paintings of the Dura Synagogue (Chicago, 1948). C. Hopkins, The Discovery of Dura-Europos, ed. B. Goldman (1979). O. Eissfeldt in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 358–70, s.v., with extensive bibl.; J. A. Fischer in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 1112 f., s.v.

DURANDUS OF SAINT-POURÇAIN (c. 1275–1334), scholastic philosopher, 'Doctor Modernus', also (by later writers) 'Doctor Resolutissimus'. He became a *Dominican and taught at *Paris, where he lectured on the Sentences and in 1312 became 'magister in theologia'. In 1313 he was summoned to be Lector at the Papal Court at *Avignon. Later he became Bp. successively of Limoux (1317), Le Puy-en-Velay (1318), and Meaux (1326). He was one of the earliest exponents of what came to be called *Nominalism, which he developed in avowed opposition to the teaching of St. Thomas Aquinas. Rejecting the current doctrine on intelligible and sensible species, he held that the only real entities were individuals and that the search for a principle of individuation was meaningless. In theology he stood for a sharp contrast between faith and reason, holding, e.g., that rational argument could not disprove that the doctrine of the Trinity did not contain impossibilities. He also held that the presence of Christ in the Eucharist did not preclude the continuing existence of the bread and wine. His principal work, a 'Commentary on the Sentences', survives in three recensions: (1) before 1308, (2) 1310–13, (3) 1313–27. In deference to the criticisms of his superiors he modified certain passages in the first recension, but the second recension was no less sharply criticized. He replied in three disputations (Quodlibets) held at Avignon. By the time of the third recension, Durandus as a bishop was free from the jurisdiction of the Dominican Order. His other writings include De paupertate Christi et Apostolorum (1322), De Origine Potestatum et Jurisdictionum (1329), and a treatise on the condition of human souls after their separation from the body (1333). Eleven articles in the last-named work were censured by a Papal Commission set up by *John XXII (1333), but the censure was lifted by *Benedict XII. Durandus was highly esteemed in the later Middle Ages.

Comm. on the Sentences (third recension) publd. at Paris, 1508; several other edd. in the 16th cent.; crit. ed. of the Quaestio de Natura Cognitionis (II Sent. (A) d. 3, qu. 5) by J. Koch (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam illustrantia, vi; Münster, 1929). De Origine Potestatum et Jurisdictionum, publd. at Paris, 1506. Tractatus de Habitibus ed. J. Koch (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam illustrantia, viii; Münster, 1930). De Visione Dei quam habent Animae Sanctorum ante Iudicium Generale, pr. in part in O. Raynaldus, Annales Ecclesiastici, xv (Cologne, 1652), under the year 1333, Nos 49–57; brief extract from De Paupertate Christi et Apostolorum, ib., under the year 1322, Nos. 59–61. Quodlibeta Avenionensia tria ed. P. T. Stella (Textus et Studia in Historiam Scholasticae cura Pontificii Athenaei Salesiani, i; Zürich, 1965). J. Koch, Durandus de S. Porciano, O.P. Forschungen zum Streit um Thomas von Aquin zu Beginn des 14. Jahrhunderts, Teil 1, Literargeschichtliche Grundlegung (B.G.P.M., xxvi, Hft. 1; 1927). P. Fournier, 'Durand de Saint-Pourçain, théologien' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxvii (1938), pp. 1–38, with reff. J. Koch, 'Jakob von Metz, O.P., der Lehrer des Durandus de S. Porciano, O.P.' in A.H.D.L.M.A., iv (1929–30), pp. 169–232. J. Stufler, S.J., 'Bemerkungen und Konkurslehre des Durandus von St. Pourçain' in B.G.P.M., Suppl., iii (part 2; 1935), pp. 1080–90; M. D. Philippe, O.P., 'Les Processions divines selon Durand de Saint-Pourçain' in Revue Thomiste, xlvii (1947), pp. 244–88. Quétif-Echard, i, p. 586 f. Überweg, ii, pp. 518–24, with bibl. p. 768 f. J. A. Weisheipl, O.P., in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 1114–16, s.v.

DURANDUS OF TROARN (c. 1010–88), Abbot of Troarn in Normandy from 1059. His 'Liber de Corpore et Sanguine Domini' was one of the earliest medieval treatments of Eucharistic doctrine. In it Durandus made a vigorous attack on *Berengar of Tours, whom he regarded as holding a purely figurative doctrine of the presence of Christ in the Eucharist. Like *Paschasius Radbertus and his contemporary *Lanfranc, he upheld the conversion of the elements into the identical body and blood of Christ, but emphasized the spiritual nature of the change; and he was one of the earliest writers to speak of the presence of Christ in the Eucharist as a 'substantial' presence.

His 'Liber de Corpore et Sanguine Domini', orig. pr. by J. L. *d'Achéry in an appendix to his ed. of Lanfranc (1648), is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlix, 1375–1424. R. Heurtevent, Durandus de Troarn et les origines de l'hérésie bérengarienne ('Études de Théologie historique', v; 1912), with bibl. G. Poras in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), col. 1159 f., s.v. 'Durand (6) de Troarn', with further reff.

DURANDUS, WILLIAM (c. 1230–96), Bp. of Mende (hence known as Mimatensis) from 1285. He was one of the principal medieval canonists. A legal official of the Roman *Curia, he attended Pope *Gregory X at the second Council of *Lyons (1274), the decrees of which he drafted. Some of his writings on canon law, e.g. his Speculum judiciale, were very widely studied. His best-known work, however, is his Rationale divinorum officiorum, a compendium of liturgical knowledge with mystical interpretation. His *Pontifical was taken, for contents and arrangement, as a model, and is the direct ancestor of the modern Pontificale Romanum.

He is to be distinguished from his nephew and successor in the bishopric of Mende of the same name (d. 1330), to whom the authorship of the Pontificale is sometimes accredited.

Crit. ed. of his Pontifical by M. Andrieu, Le Pontifical romain du moyen-âge, iii (S.T., lxxxviii; 1940), with important introd. J. Berthelé–M. Valmary (edd.), 'Les Instructions et Constitutions de Guillaume Durand, le Spéculateur, d'après le manuscrit de Cessenon' in Académie des Sciences et Lettres de Montpellier. Mémoires de la Section des Lettres, 2e Série, iii (1900), pp. 1–148. Eng. trr., with notes, of the first book of his Rationale, with introd. by J. M. *Neale–B. *Webb, The Symbolism of Churches and Church Ornaments (1843), and of the third book by T. H. Passmore, The Sacred Vestments (1899). V. Le Clerc, 'Guillaume Duranti, évêque de Mende, surnommé le Spéculateur' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xx (1842), pp. 411–97, with notes of edd. of his works to date. M. R. von Heckel, 'Eine Kanzleianweisung über die schriftmässige Ausstattung der Papsturkunden aus dem 13. Jahrhundert in Durantis Speculum Iudiciale' in Festschrift für Georg Leidinger (1930), pp. 109–18, with note on the name Durandus, p. 110, note 4. L. Falletti in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1014–75, s.v. 'Guillaume Durand', with bibl.; S. Kuttner in N.C.E. iv (1967), p. 1117, s.v. 'Duranti, William, the Elder'. On William Durandus, his nephew, also Bp. of Mende, with whom he has constantly been confused since the 15th cent., see P. Viollet, 'Guillaume Durant le Jeune, évêque de Mende' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxv (1921), pp. 1–139.

DÜRER, ALBRECHT (1471–1528), German painter and engraver. A native of Nuremberg, at first he entered his father's goldsmith business, but in 1486 began the study of wood engraving under Michael Wohlgemuth. After travelling abroad, particularly to Venice, he settled down at Nuremberg. Of his religious paintings, the best known are the Baumgartner altar-piece (the 'Adoration of the Christ Child'; before 1505) and the 'Four Apostles' (1526), both at Munich, and the 'Adoration of the Magi' (1504) at Florence; of his woodcuts, the series known as the 'Great Passion', the 'Little Passion', and the 'Mass of St. Gregory' (all 1511); and of his copperplate work (which is characterized by highly wrought landscape backgrounds), 'St. Eustace with the Stag' (an early product), the 'Virgin with the Monkey' (c. 1500), and 'St. Jerome in his Study' (1514).

Dürer provided the links between Italian art and the Gothic North. His woodcuts had much influence on Italian painters and were widely used as illustrations to Bibles in various languages, esp. his scenes of the Apocalypse (1498). Although he never renounced his Catholic faith, he felt sympathetic towards the *Reformation, and after his death he was eulogized by M. *Luther. He enjoyed the friendship of the Emp. Maximilian, D. *Erasmus, and many of the chief statesmen, humanists, and reformers of his day.

The three best collections of Dürer's drawings are in the Albertina at Vienna, the Kupferstichkabinett at Berlin and the British Museum. Editions of his works of art by F. Lippmann–F. Winkler (7 vols., Berlin, 1883–1929; drawings), F. F. Leitschuh (Nuremberg, 1892; engravings), C. Dodgson (London, 1928; drawings from Albertina Coll. at Vienna), and several others. Many of his works ed. for the Dürer Society by C. Dodgson, G. Pauli, and S. M. Peartree (12 vols., 1898–1911). Letters, Diaries, etc., ed. E. Heidrich (Berlin, 1908). Monographs (innumerable) include those by M. Thausing (Leipzig, 1876; ed. 2, 1884; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1882), H. Wölfflin (Munich, 1905), E. Panofsky (Berlin, 1915), M. J. Friedländer (Leipzig, 1921), W. Waetzoldt (Vienna, 1936; Eng. tr. 1950), E. Panofsky (Princeton, 2 vols., 1943; ed. 3, 1948; with full list of Dürer's works and useful select bibl., i, pp. 287–96), F. Winkler (Berlin, 1957), B. Brion (Paris, 1960; Eng. tr., 1960), M. Levey (London, 1964) and C. White (London, 1971). Bibliography to date of publication by H. W. Singer (Strassburg, 1903; ed. 2, 1928). S. Colvin in E.B. (ed. 11), viii (1910), pp. 699–703, s.v.

DURHAM. At the end of the 10th cent. the see of *Lindisfarne was removed to Durham, and a cathedral was begun as a shrine for the relics of St. *Cuthbert. Bp. Carilef began to build the present cathedral in place of the older one in 1093, and replaced the secular clergy by a *Benedictine community, which lasted till the *dissolution in 1540. The Galilee chapel, projecting from the W. end, was built at the end of the Norman era, and the celebrated Chapel of Nine Altars, with its rose windows and elaborate carving, is Early English. The medieval bishops held immense civil jurisdiction (mainly in County Durham), ranking as Counts Palatine; this dignity, which became less important at the Reformation period, was attached to the see down to the time of W. *van Mildert, bishop from 1826 to 1836. In his episcopate the University of Durham was founded (1832). The see was comprised mainly of the counties of Durham and Northumberland until the separation of the diocese of Newcastle (covering Northumberland) in 1882. It still shares with the sees of London and *Winchester a rank inferior only to *Canterbury and *York, and superior to all others in the two provinces; and the bishop is entitled to sit in the House of Lords immediately he takes possession of his see, irrespectively of his seniority of consecration. A hall at Oxford for students from Durham, established c. 1300 by Prior Richard de Hoton and refounded in 1380 by Bp. Hatfield as 'Durham College', was re-established in 1555 as Trinity College, Oxford.

H. S. Offler (ed.), Durham Episcopal Charters, 1071–1152 (Surtees Society, clxxix; 1968). T. D. Hardy (ed.), Registrum Palatinum Dunelmense. The Register of Robert de Kellawe, Lord Palatine and Bishop of Durham 1311–1316 (4 vols., Rolls Series, 1873–8); G. W. Kitchin (ed.), Richard d'Aungerville of Bury. Fragments of his Register and other Documents (Surtees Society, cxix; 1910); R. L. Storey (ed.), The Register of Thomas Langley, Bishop of Durham 1406–1437 (ib., clxiv, clxvi, clxix, clxx, clxxvii; 1956–66); Marjorie P. Howden (ed.), The Register of Richard Fox, Lord Bishop of Durham, 1491–1501 (ib., cxlvii; 1932); Gladys Hinde (ed.), The Registers of Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of Durham 1530–59 and James Pilkington, Bishop of Durham 1561–76 (ib., clxi; 1952). J. Raine (ed.), Historiae Dunelmensis Scriptores Tres. Gaufridus de Coldingham, Robertus de Graystanes, et Willielmus de Chambre (ib., ix; 1839). Sanctuarium Dunelmense printed in The Publications of the Surtees Society, v (1837), pp. 1–90. J. Stevenson (ed.), Liber Vitae Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (ib., xiii; 1841). J. Raine (ed.), The Durham Household Book: or The Accounts of the Bursar of the Monastery of Durham from Pentecost 1530 to Pentecost 1534 (ib., xviii; 1844). Id., Depositions and other Ecclesiastical Proceedings from the Courts of Durham extending from 1311 to the Reign of Elizabeth (ib., xxi; 1845). Id., The Obituary Roll of William Ebchester and John Burnby, Priors of Durham (ib., xxxi; 1856). W. Greenwell (ed.), Bishop Hatfield's Survey. A Record of the Possessions of the See of Durham, made by order of Thomas de Hatfield, Bishop of Durham (ib., xxxii; 1856). J. T. Fowler (ed.). Extracts from the Account Rolls of the Abbey of Durham ib., xcix, c, ciii; 1898–1901). Id., The Rites of Durham. Being a Description or Brief Declaration of all the Ancient Monuments, Rites and Customs belonging or being within the Monastical Church of Durham before the Suppression. Written 1593 (ib., cvii; 1903). J. M. Falkner–A. H. Thompson (ed.), The Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Durham (ib., cxliii; 1929). F. Barlow (ed.), Durham Annals and other Documents of the Thirteenth Century (ib., clv; 1945). Id., Durham Jurisdictional Peculiars (Oxford Historical Series, British Series, 1950). G. T. Lapsley, The County Palatine of Durham (Harvard Historical Studies, viii; 1900). R. A. B. Mynors, Durham Cathedral Manuscripts to the End of the Twelfth Century (1939); W. A. Pantin, Report on the Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Durham (privately pr., 1939). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum*, i (ed. 1817), pp. 219–52. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, etc., i (1727), pp. 221–83. [H. C. Englefield], Some Account of the Cathedral Church of Durham, Illustrative of the Plans, Elevations and Sections of that Building [drawn by J. Carter] (1801). R. W. Billings, Architectural Illustrations and Description of the Cathedral Church at Durham (1843). T. S. R. Boase, English Art 1100–1216 (Oxford, 1953), pp. 1–30, with reff. J. Bilson, 'On the Recent Discoveries at the East End of the Cathedral Church of Durham' in The Archaeological Journal, liii (1896), pp. 1–18; id., 'Durham Cathedral. The Chronology of its Vaults', ib., lxxix (1922), pp. 101–60. C. R. Peers, J. Queckett, and F. H. Cheetham in V.C.H. Durham, iii, ed. W. Page (1928), pp. 93–114. W. A. Pantin in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1179–99, s.v. See also works cited s.v. Cuthbert, St.

DURHAM BOOK, The. One of the primary documents lying behind the 1662 Book of *Common Prayer. It is a folio copy of the BCP printed in 1619 with MS. annotations in the margin and between the lines. These MS. notes, by J. *Cosin (q.v.) and his chaplain, W. *Sancroft, were designed as a first draft for the revision of 1662. They appear to have been begun c. 1626/7, but for the most part they belong to the summer of 1661; and they included the proposals of the *Savoy Conference (Apr.–July 1661). The Book is preserved in the Cosin Library, Durham (formerly D. 3. 5, now in a special safe). A fair copy was made by W. Sancroft later in 1661 in another copy of the BCP (printed in 1634); this now exists in the Bodleian Library (Auct. v. 3. 16). Most of the proposals in Sancroft's 'Fair Copy' were taken over into the 'Convocation Book' and the '*Annexed Book' (q.v.) and thus found their way into the 1662 BCP.

Text, with full introd., notes, and bibl., ed. by G. J. Cuming (London, 1961).

DURIE, JOHN (1596–1680), Protestant Scottish divine. Appointed in 1628 minister to the English Company of Merchants at Elbing in Prussia, he devised plans for the reunion of the non-RC Churches, esp. the *Lutherans and *Calvinists, and between 1630, when his appointment ceased, and 1633 visited various dignitaries in England and on the Continent on behalf of his designs. In 1634 he was ordained priest in the C of E, and made a chaplain to the King, and down to 1641 he again travelled widely in the cause of religious unity. In the Civil War he was at first a royalist, and tutor at The Hague to Princess Mary of Orange, but in 1643 he took up a chaplaincy at Rotterdam, and in 1645 returned to London to take part in drawing up the *Westminster Confession and Catechisms. From 1645 to 1654 he was in England, but made another tour for negotiation from 1654 to 1657, meeting with nothing but acrimony from the Lutherans. His bases of reunion were too vague to win enthusiasm. Being out of favour at the Restoration, he left England again in 1662, and settled at Cassel, where he died.

Durie's pamphlet, A Case of Conscience: whether it be lawful to admit Jews into a Christian Commonwealth (orig. publd. c. 1650), is repr. from the ed. of 1656 in The Harleian Miscellany, vii (1811), pp. 251–5; The Reformed Librarie-Keeper (1650) was ed. by Ruth S. Grannis (Chicago, 1906), with biographical sketch, pp. 9–36. Study by J. M. Batten (Chicago, 1944), with list of his works. G. Westin, Negotiations about Church Unity, 1628–1634 (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1932, Teologi 3). J. Westby-Gibson in D.N.B., xvi (1888), pp. 261–3.

DUVERGIER DE HAURANNE. See Saint Cyran, Abbé de.

DYFRIG, St. See Dubricius, St.

DYKES, JOHN BACCHUS (1823–76), writer of hymn tunes. He was educated at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, where he was a noted amateur musician. Ordained deacon in 1847, he became a minor canon at Durham cathedral in 1849 and vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham, in 1862, where his High Church sympathies led to a long and unhappy conflict with his Bishop (Charles Baring). His melodic hymn-tunes, of which many were included in Hymns Ancient and Modern, became very popular. Among them were those to 'Jesu, Lover of my soul', 'The King of Love my Shepherd is', 'Holy, Holy, Holy!' and 'Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise'.

J. T. Fowler (ed.), Life and Letters of John Bacchus Dykes (1897).

DYOPHYSITES (Gk. δυοφυσῖται, from δύο, 'two', and φύσις, 'nature'; the form διφυσῖται is also found). A title used by the *Monophysites for the Catholics in reference to the orthodox belief that in the Person of Christ there coexist the two separate natures of God and man, and not one composite nature. In modern times it has been used by F. *Loofs as a distinguishing mark of the Christology of the *Antiochene school of theologians.

DYOTHELETES (Gk. δύο, 'two', θέλημα, 'will'). Those who, as against the *Monothelites, hold the orthodox doctrine that in the Person of Christ there are two separate wills, the one human and the other Divine.

DYSTELEOLOGY. A term introduced by E. Häckel to denote 'purposelessness of nature' (the opposite of 'teleology'). It is also used of the study of certain rudimentary organs, thought by some to be purposeless in the evolution of species.

E

'E'. The name given (since the work of J. *Wellhausen) to the Elohistic (Heb. 'elohim, 'God') source held to be embodied in the *Pentateuch. It consists largely of narrative, and together with 'J' (q.v.) comprises most of the famous stories of the Patriarchs and Exodus; it is distinguished from 'J' by its regular use of 'elohim ('God') where 'J' uses the divine name Yahweh (Jahveh or Jehovah). It is commonly thought to embody the traditions current in the Northern Kingdom of Israel and to date from a period somewhat later than 'J' (perh. 9th cent. B.C.) but, as with 'J', it is increasingly recognized that precise dating is from the nature of the source impossible.

For bibl. see Pentateuch.

EADMER (c. 1060–c. 1128), English historian and theologian. He was brought up from childhood at the monastery of Christ Church, *Canterbury. He became a member of the household of St. *Anselm and shared in his wanderings abroad in exile. In 1120 he was offered the Bishopric of St. Andrews, but he was never consecrated. His writings include a valuable Life of St. Anselm, to whom he was greatly devoted; the Lives of some of the early English saints (including *Wilfrid and *Dunstan); and a Historia Novorum in Anglia covering the period from c. 1066 to c. 1122, an important source for the history of its times. The Tractatus de conceptione S. Mariae, formerly attributed to St. Anselm, and one of the earliest systematic treatises on the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM, which it defends, is also his work.

Collected ed. of his works appended to those of St. Anselm ed. G. Gerberon, O.S.B. (Paris, 1675; sep. pagination); repr. from the Paris ed. of 1721 in J. P. Migne, PL, clix, 345–808, with reff.; life of Anselm, ib., clviii, 49–118. Eadmer's Historia Novorum in Anglia and Vita Sancti Anselmi also ed. M. Rule (R.S., 1884, with introd.); crit. ed. of the latter, with Eng. tr., by R. W. Southern (London, 1962); his life of St. Dunstan, ed. W. *Stubbs, Memorials of Saint Dunstan (R.S., 1874), pp. 162–249; his life of St. Wilfrid, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops (2 vols., R.S., 1879–86), vol. i, pp. 161–226, together with a 'Breviloquium Vitae Sancti Wilfridi', perhaps by Eadmer, pp. 227–37; his life of St. *Oswald, ed. id., ib., ii, pp. 1–59; his life of Bregwine, Abp. of Canterbury 761–4, ed. B. W. Scholz in Traditio, xxii (1966), pp. 127–48. Tractatus de Conceptione Sanctae Mariae, ed. H. Thurston, S.J.–T. Slater, S.J. (Freiburg i.Br., 1904). 'Nova Opuscula de Sanctorum Veneratione et Obsecratione', ed. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in Rev. S.R., xv (1935), pp. 184–219 and 354–79. Eng. tr. of his Historia Novorum in Anglia by G. Bosanquet (1964). R. W. Southern, Saint Anselm and his Biographer (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge, 1963), pp. 227–374. See also bibl. to Immaculate Conception.

EADMUND, St. See Edmund, St.

EARLE, JOHN (c. 1601–65), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was born at *York, educated at *Christ Church and Merton College, Oxford, and early secured literary fame by his Microcosmography, or A Piece of the World (1628), a pleasing and popular collection of character studies modelled on those of Theophrastus. He attracted royal favour by his pleasing manners and was appointed tutor to Charles, Prince of Wales. In 1643 he became Chancellor of Salisbury Cathedral, but was soon deprived by the *Puritans. He accompanied *Charles II in his exile, and at the Restoration was appointed in quick succession Dean of *Westminster (1660), Bp. of *Worcester (1662), and Bp. of Salisbury (1663). In the administration of his diocese he showed himself tolerant towards Nonconformists and a critic of the *Conventicle and *Five Mile Acts.

Modern edd. of Earle's Microcosmography by P. Bliss (London, 1811) and by A. S. West (Cambridge, 1897); also later edd. Facsimile of author's holograph MS. preserved in the *Bodleian Library, Oxford, publd. at Leeds, 1966. List of edd. in C.B.E.L., i, p. 722 f. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xvi (1888), p. 320 f.

EARTHQUAKE SYNOD, The. The Synod held at Blackfriars, London, under Abp. W. *Courtenay on 21 May 1382, during which the city was shaken by an earthquake. It condemned as heretical 24 theses from the writings of J. *Wycliffe, some of them identical with those condemned in *St. Paul's Cathedral on 19 Feb. 1377 with new articles against the begging friars, *transubstantiation, etc.

Hardouin, vi, cols. 1889–1900; Mansi, xxvi (1784), cols. 695–706. The twenty-four propositions condemned and the list of members of the Council are also pr. in W. W. Shirley (ed.), Fasciculi Zizaniorum (R.S., 1858), as appendices iv and v, pp. 493–7 and 498–500 respectively; account of synod, ib., p. 272 f. Hefele–Leclercq, vi (pt. 2; 1915), pp. 1406–16 (on synods of 1377 and 1382). See also bibl. to Wycliffe, John.

EASTER. The Feast of the Resurrection of Christ, being the greatest and oldest feast of the Christian Church. Its importance is emphasized liturgically by the long preparation of *Lent and *Passiontide, by the special ceremonies of *Holy Week, and by the following *Paschaltide, marked both in E. and W. by the frequent reiteration of *Alleluia at the *Mass and in the Divine *Office, as the expression of Easter joy. In the ancient Church the *catechumens, after watching all Saturday night, were baptized early on Easter Day and received Holy Communion. The night before Easter was celebrated by the illumination of the churches and even whole cities. In the E. Church the original night vigil has been kept unaltered, but in the W. it was put back to the afternoon in the 10th cent., and to the morning of *Holy Saturday in the 14th, so that in the RC Church the first Easter Mass came to be celebrated on Saturday. In 1951, however, it became permissible to offer the first Mass of Easter during the night of Saturday–Sunday, and in 1955 such celebration became obligatory. (For details of the service, see Paschal Vigil Service.) The BCP provides special anthems for use on Easter Day in place of the *Venite.

The derivation of the name 'Easter' is uncertain. Acc. to *Bede, it is connected with an Anglo-Saxon spring goddess 'Eostre'. At any rate it seems clear that, as in the case of Christmas (q.v.), the Christian feast of Easter has superseded an old pagan festival. The popular custom of exchanging 'Easter eggs' is of very ancient origin.

The date of the Easter feast is determined by the Paschal Full Moon, its extreme limits being 21 Mar. and 25 Apr. In the early Church, the two principal methods of computation were those of *Alexandria (owing to its astronomical resources) and *Rome. For the various disputes on the subject see Paschal Controversies.

The principal texts are set out in H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3, Freiburg, etc., 1956–7), passim. B. Fischer–J. Wagner (edd.), Paschatis Sollemnia. Studien zu Osterfeier und Osterfrömmigkeit (1959). On the early history of the feast, cf. also H. Schürmann, 'Die Anfänge christlicher Osterfeier' in Th.Q., cxxx (1951), pp. 414–25; O. *Casel, O.S.B., 'Art und Sinn der ältesten christlichen Osterfeier' in J.L.W., xiv (1938), pp. 1–78; Christine Mohrmann, 'Pascha, Passio, Transitus' in E.L., lxvi (1952), pp. 37–52; W. Huber, Passa und Ostern. Untersuchungen zur Osterfeier der alten Kirche (Beiheft zur Z.N.T.W., xxxv; 1969). On the religious and theological significance of the observance, L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Le Mystère pascal (Lex Orandi, vi; 1945; Eng. tr., 1951). F. L. Cross, 1 Peter. A Paschal Liturgy (1954). F. G. Holweck–H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., v (1909), pp. 224–30; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1521–74, s.v. 'Pâques'; J. D. Crichton in A Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 202–4, s.v. See also bibl. to Paschal Controversies.

EASTER LITANY. The principal confession of faith of the *Bohemian Brethren. It takes the form of the *Apostles' Creed with considerable expansions, mainly from Scripture, though it is conceived more as an act of worship than as a dogmatic formulary and is designed primarily for use in church on Easter morning. It dates from 1749.

The text (German and English) is printed in P. Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 799–806.

EASTERN ORTHODOX CHURCH. See Orthodox Church.

EASTWARD POSITION. The practice of the celebrant of the Eucharist standing on the west side of the altar and facing east, which was introduced at *Rome in the 8th or 9th cent. (previously the celebrant had faced west), had probably been customary in other places much earlier. The authority for its use in the C of E depends on the interpretation of three rubrics in the BCP, viz. the fourth rubric at the beginning of the service, the rubric before the absolution, and the rubric before the prayer of consecration. The first of these, which dates from 1552, legislated for the time when the altar-table was placed, at the time of a celebration of the Communion, in the body of the church or chancel. Since the traditional altar-wise position came back in the 17th cent., the rubric, although retained in the 1662 BCP, has strictly ceased to be applicable, though in 1890 Abp. E. W. *Benson pronounced the Eastward Position to be a legitimate interpretation of this rubric. The second rubric is less precise. The third rubric has been interpreted legally as permitting either position, provided the 'manual acts' are visible to the congregation. In practice, except in extreme Evangelical churches where the *north end is taken, the Eastward position had become almost universal in the C of E until the RC Church gradually again adopted a *westward position, now found also in some C of E churches.

EBEDJESUS (Abdh-isho bar Berikha) (d. 1318). The last important *Nestorian theological writer. He became Bp. of Sîgar and Bêt Arabâjê in 1284/5, and about five years later Metropolitan of Armenia. His (Syriac) writings (some of them lost, as is shown by a catalogue he drew up) included treatises on philosophy and science, a commentary on the Bible, and a work against all forms of heresy. Those which survive include his Margaritha ('the Pearl'), a theological work, his Nomocanon, a collection of ecclesiastical *canons, and his Paradisus-Eden, a series of 50 poems, as well as others which are still unpublished.

His Collection of Canons, his 'Epitome Canonum Apostolicorum', and 'Margaritha', with a Lat. tr. by [J.] A. *Assemani, are printed by A. *Mai, S.V.N.C., x (Rome, 1838), part 1, pp. 1–331. Selections of the Paradisus poems ed., with Latin tr., H. Gismondi, S.J. (Beyrouth, 1888); the first 25 ed. P. Cardahi (ib., 1899). Eng. tr. of his 'Catalogue' and 'Margaritha' in G. P. Badger, The Nestorians and their Rituals, ii (1852), pp. 361–422. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 323–5, incl. full refs. J. Dauvillier in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 91–134, s.v.

EBERLIN, JOHANN (1470–1533), Reformation controversial writer. He was born at Günzburg-on-the-Danube (Bavaria), and became a *Franciscan. He gave his support to M. *Luther almost from the outset, and in 1521 published a series of 15 pamphlets (the Bundsgenossen), with such titles as 'Of the forty days fast before Easter and others which pitifully oppress Christian folk', 'How very dangerous it is that priests have not wives', 'Against the false clergy, barefooted monks, and Franciscans'. In other early writings he sought to foster radical social changes. The extremities of the *Anabaptists and others, and the failure of the Reforming Movement in Germany to sustain the moral standards of its opening years, led him to take a more moderate line in his later writings. As a diversion he produced a German translation of Tacitus's Germania.

Ausgewählte [sämtliche] Schriften, ed. by L. Enders (3 vols., Neudrucke deutscher Litteraturwerke des xvi. und xvii. Jahrhunderts, Nos. 139–41, 170–2, and 183–8. Flugschriften aus der Reformationszeit, xi, xv, and xviii; 1896–1902). B. Riggenbach, Johann Eberlin von Günzburg und sein Reform-Programm. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des sechszehnten Jahrhunderts (1874); M. Radlkofer, Johann Eberlin von Günzburg und sein Vetter Hans Jakob Wehe von Leipheim (1887). Studies on his Bundsgenossen by J. H. Schmidt (Leipzig, 1900) and W. Lucke (Halle, 1902). Full bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 205 f., Nos. 5144–67. T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 122–5.

EBIONITES (Heb. אביונים, 'poor men'). A sect of Jewish Christians which flourished in the early cents. of the Christian era. The several scattered sources from which our knowledge of them is derived cannot easily be harmonized and related. It seems clear, however, that the sect flourished esp. on the E. of the *Jordan and that two of their principal tenets were (1) a 'reduced' doctrine of the Person of Christ, to the effect, e.g., that Jesus was the human son of Joseph and Mary and that the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove lighted on Him at His baptism, and (2) over-emphasis on the binding character of the Mosaic Law. They are said to have rejected the Pauline Epistles and to have used only one Gospel. This is described by *Irenaeus as the 'Gospel according to Matthew' and by *Eusebius as the 'Gospel called according to the Hebrews'; but see also following entry. A poor community, they appear to have adopted a severely ascetic mode of life and to have remained outside the main stream of Christian development. It is difficult to state exactly what their relation was to such sects as the *Nazarenes; A. *Harnack and F. J. A. *Hort identified the two bodies, while J. B. *Lightfoot and T. *Zahn distinguished them.

The sources are scattered. They include *Justin, Dial. c. Tryph., 47; Irenaeus, Haer., I. xxvi. 2; III. xxi. 1; V. i. 3; *Tertullian, De Praescr., 33; *Hippolytus, Haer., vii. 34 and ix. 13–17; Eusebius, Eccl. Hist., iii. 27; *Epiphanius, Haer., xxx. V. Ermoni, 'L'Ébionisme dans l'Église naissante' in R.Q.H., lxvi (1899), pp. 481–91; J. Thomas, 'Les Ébionites Baptistes' in R.H.E., xxx (1934), pp. 257–96; H. J. Schoeps, 'Ebionite Christianity' in J.T.S., N.S., iv (1953), pp. 219–24; J. A. Fitzmyer, S.J., 'The Qumran Scrolls, the Ebionites and their Literature' in Theological Studies, xvi (1955), pp. 335–72, with reff. J. Daniélou, S.J., Théologie du judéo-christianisme, i (1958), pp. 68–76; Eng. tr. (1964), pp. 55–66. J. M. Fuller in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 24–8; W. Beveridge in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 139–45, with bibl.; G. Strecker in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 487–500, s.v.; H. J. Schoeps in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1314–19, s.v., with bibl.; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 204–6, s.v.

EBIONITES, Gospel according to the. The name given by modern scholars to an *apocryphal Gospel supposed to have been used by the *Ebionites (q.v.). *Epiphanius (Haer., xxx) states that the Ebionites 'receive the Gospel according to Matthew' and 'call it the Hebrew Gospel'. He then quotes passages from the Gospel used by the Ebionites. Because of differences between the account of Christ's baptism in the fragments preserved by Epiphanius and the account attributed by St. *Jerome to the Hebrew Gospel, some scholars have held that the Epiphanian fragments come from a different apocryphal gospel from that commonly known as the 'Gospel according to the *Hebrews' (q.v.). This contention is rendered doubtful by the fact that Jerome links the Ebionites with the Nazarenes in their use of the Hebrew Gospel.

Text of the Epiphanian fragments, with notes, in A. *Hilgenfeld, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem Receptum, fasc. iv (1866), pp. 32–8. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 8–10; German tr., with notes, by P. Vielhauer in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 100–4; Eng. tr., i, pp. 153–8. A. Schmidtke, 'Zum Hebräerevangelium' in Z.N.T.W., xxxv (1936), pp. 24–44; H. Waitz, 'Neue Untersuchungen über die sogen. judenchristlichen Evangelien', ib., xxxvi (1937), pp. 60–81; M. É. Boismard, O.P., 'Évangile des Ébionites et problème synoptique' in R.Bibl., lxxiii (1966), pp. 321–52.

'ECCE HOMO' (Lat., 'Behold the Man!'). The title of the Life of Christ, published (orig. anonymously) by Sir John *Seeley in 1865. It was a typical expression of the phase in 19th-cent. liberal thought which was more interested in the 'historic' Jesus than in the 'metaphysical Christ of the Creeds'. In it Seeley presented in an easy style an attractive picture of Christ as a moral reformer. So much, however, that belonged to the traditional conception of Christ was passed over in silence that the orthodoxy of its author was widely challenged, among others by J. H. *Newman, A. P. *Stanley, and W. E. *Gladstone. The work secured an immense circulation.

There is an edition in the 'Everyman Library', with an introduction by Sir Oliver Lodge.

ECCHELLENSIS. See Abraham Ecchellensis.

ECCLESIA DOCENS (Lat., 'the teaching Church'). A term traditionally used by some Catholic writers of the clergy, who are commissioned to teach the Christian faith, as contrasted with the laity, who are called ecclesia discens, 'the learning Church'. Since the Second *Vatican Council, however, the distinction has become less rigid.

ECCLESIASTES, Book of. The main theme of the Book, traditionally ascribed to *Solomon, is the worthlessness and vanity of human life. The title 'Ecclesiastes' found in the Greek and Latin versions is an attempted rendering of the Hebrew title 'Qoheleth', which in the AV and RV is translated not quite satisfactorily as 'the Preacher', the probable meaning of the Hebrew word being 'a speaker in an assembly'. In the Hebrew Bible it was the last of the five '*Megilloth' or Rolls, and was read publicly in the Jewish Church on the Feast of *Tabernacles. It belongs to the so-called *Wisdom Literature, a fact which explains its association with the name of Solomon, who is no longer seriously held to be the author. Considerations of subject-matter and linguistic style make it clear that the book is the product of a late age in OT history, and it is known that it was one of the latest books to be admitted to the Hebrew canon. The occasional passages which are out of harmony with its general pessimism are treated by many scholars as later interpolations in the interests of orthodoxy and canonicity, although others remain satisfied with the unity of the Book. There have been attempts, both Jewish and Christian, to interpret the Book so as to bring its teaching into accord with orthodox ethical principles. No direct quotations of it occur in the NT.

Commentaries by G. Siegfried (H.K.A.T., Abt. 2, Bd. iii, Theil 2 on Eccles. and Song of Sol., 1898, pp. 1–77), G. A. Barton (I.C.C., 1908), G. C. Martin (Cent. Bib. on Prov., Eccles., and Song of Sol., 1908, pp. 211–83), A. L. Williams (Camb. Bib., RV, 1922), H. Odeberg (Uppsala, 1929; in Eng.), H. W. Hertzberg (K.A.T., xvi. 4; 1932; ed. 2, xvii. 4–5, on Eccles. and Est., 1963, pp. 19–238), K. Galling (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. xviii, on Ruth, Song of Sol., Eccles., Lam., and Est., 1940, pp. 47–90; ed. 2, 1969, pp. 73–125) and W. Zimmerli (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xvi. 1, on Prov. and Eccles., 1962; ed. 2 on Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Lam., and Est., 1967, pp. 123–253). C. H. H. Wright, The Book of Koheleth, commonly called Ecclesiastes, considered in relation to Modern Criticism (1883). A. H. McNeile, An Introduction to Ecclesiastes (1904). H. L. Ginsberg, Studies in Koheleth (Texts and Studies of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, xvii; New York, 1950); R. Gordis, Koheleth—the Man and his World (ib., xix; 1951). O. Loretz, Qohelet und die alte Orient. Untersuchungen zu Stil und theologischer Thematik des Buches Qohelet (Freiburg, etc. [1964]). M. Jastrow, The Gentle Cynic (1919). Eissfeldt, pp. 491–500, with bibl. H. Duesberg in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 40–52, s.v.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS. The body which from 1835 to 1948 managed the estates and revenues of the C of E. In 1835 two commissions were appointed to consider reforms in the allotment of Church revenues; and in the following year an Act of Parliament (6 & 7 Will. IV, c. 77) was passed, establishing a permanent body of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who were constituted a corporation with power to hold and purchase lands and to prepare schemes for the alteration and redistribution of ecclesiastical revenues. Its constitution was several times amended. In 1948 it consisted of the archbishops and bishops of England, the deans of *St. Paul's, *Westminster, and *Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, one of the principal Secretaries of State, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, and certain lay members of the C of E appointed by the crown and the Abp. of Canterbury. The joint treasurers were three lay 'Church Estates Commissioners', two of them appointed by the crown and the third by the Abp. of Canterbury. The Commission presented an annual report to Parliament. In 1948 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and *Queen Anne's Bounty united in a new body, the *Church Commissioners for England (q.v.).

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2. by W. G. F. Phillimore), ii (1895), pp. 1658–1675; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8, by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 365–72. Olive J. Brose, Church and Parliament. The Reshaping of the Church of England 1826–1860 (Stanford–London, 1959), esp. pp. 120–77. G. F. A. Best, Temporal Pillars. Queen Anne's Bounty, the Ecclesiastical Commissions, and the Church of England, 1704–1948 (1964), pp. 296–514.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS COMMISSIONS. There were two Parliamentary Commissions on the English Church courts in the 19th cent.

(1) That set up under the influence of Lord Brougham, orig. appointed on 28 Jan. 1830 and reappointed with additional members on 5 July 1830. It included Abp. W. *Howley and five Bishops. Under pressure from Brougham, it recommended (25 Jan. 1831) the replacement of the Court of *Delegates by the Privy Council as the final court of appeal in ecclesiastical matters. The full report, issued in Feb. 1832, advocated many drastic changes, incl. trial by jury in ecclesiastical cases and the abolition of the provincial courts of *York. Some of its less revolutionary recommendations were adopted later in the 19th cent.

(2) That appointed by the Prime Minister (W. E. *Gladstone) and Lord Chancellor (Selborne), at the request of the Abp. of *Canterbury (A. C. *Tait), on 16 May 1881 'to enquire into the constitution and working of the Ecclesiastical Courts as created or modified under the Reformation Statutes of the 24th and 25th years of King Henry VIII and any subsequent Acts'. Its immediate object was to find some new and better way of dealing with the ritual controversies. It consisted of 25 members, among them both Archbishops (Tait and W. Thomson), Bp. E. W. *Benson, Lord Penzance, R. *Phillimore, E. A. Freeman and W. *Stubbs. It recommended in its report (July 1883) a radical revision of the courts, the final court to consist of five lay judges appointed by the Crown, who had formally affirmed that they belonged to the C of E. Only nine of the commissioners signed the report without qualification and Convocation objected to the constitution proposed for the final court. No legislation followed. Several of the appendices to the report, esp. those of Stubbs, are of great historical value.

(1) The Special and General Reports made to his Majesty by the Commissioners appointed to Inquire into the Practice and Jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in England and Wales (Parliamentary Papers, 1831–2, xxiv [C. 199]). (2) Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Constitution and Working of the Ecclesiastical Courts (2 vols.; Parliamentary Papers, 1883, xxiv [C. 3760 and 3761]).

ECCLESIASTICAL DISCIPLINE, The Royal Commission on. The Commission, appointed in 1904, to inquire into 'breaches or neglect of the Law relating to the conduct of Divine Service in the Church of England and to the ornaments and fittings of Churches' and to devise remedies. Its members included Viscount St. Aldwyn (Michael Hicks Beach, Chairman), the Abp. of *Canterbury (R. T. *Davidson), the Bp. of *Oxford (F. *Paget), E. C. S. Gibson (appointed Bp. of *Gloucester in 1905), the Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) and the *Dean of the Arches (Sir Lewis Dibdin). Evidence was taken from 164 witnesses, mainly hostile to High Church practice, though its accuracy was not open to serious challenge. This was sent to the Bishops of the respective dioceses concerned for their comment, together with a list of questions relating chiefly to the use of vestments and the obedience paid to the *Lincoln Judgement and the *Lambeth Opinion (qq.v.). The Commissioners reported unanimously on 21 June 1906 that the law of public worship in the C of E was too narrow, and that the machinery for discipline had broken down. They recommended that practices significant of teaching repugnant to the doctrine of the C of E should be made to cease, if necessary by force of law; that Letters of Business should be issued to the *Convocations to regularize the vestments of the minister, and to provide greater elasticity in public worship; that the recommendations of the *Ecclesiastical Courts Commission of 1883 should in the main be carried out; that the *Public Worship Regulation Act should be repealed; and that dioceses should be divided, to secure greater supervision. The Letters of Business envisaged were duly issued on 10 Nov. 1906, thus initiating the long project of Prayer Book Revision (defeated in Parliament in 1927 and 1928): see Common Prayer, Book of.

The Report of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline [Cd. 3040] and the Minutes of Evidence taken before the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline [Cd. 3069 and Cd. 3070] are pr. among the Parliamentary Papers, 1906, vol. xxxiii. G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (1935), ch. xxv, pp. 454–73.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION MEASURE, 1963. A measure designed to simplify ecclesiastical law and jurisdiction in the C of E in accordance with the recommendations of the Archbishops' Commission on Ecclesiastical Courts of 1954. It superseded a large number of existing enactments, including the *Church Discipline Act, 1840, the *Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, and the Incumbents (Discipline) Measure, 1947.

By the measure, the *Consistory Court became the court of first instance against clerics for offences not involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, and retained its existing *faculty jurisdiction. Except in faculty cases, the Chancellor sits with two clerical and two lay assessors, and procedure in general follows the practice of the criminal law, that is, the Chancellor is judge in matters of law, and the assessors in matters of fact. Appeals lie from the Consistory Court to the Provincial Court. A new Court, the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, has jurisdiction of first instance in matters involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, and hears appeals from the Consistory Court in faculty cases involving these matters. A Royal Commission consisting of three Lords of Appeal and two Bishops who are members of the House of Lords hears appeals from the Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved. The appellate jurisdiction of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council ceased, except for certain faculty cases.

The offences dealt with under the Measure include those against the ecclesiastical law in matters of doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, conduct unbecoming the office and work of a clerk in holy orders and persistent neglect of duty. A complaint is first laid before a committee, and if a prima facie case is established, the accused must face trial. Where the complaint concerns doctrine, ritual or ceremonial, there is an informal hearing before the bishop, who may veto proceedings, or refer it to a Committee of the Convocation. If a prima facie case is established, the accused is tried before the Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved, whence an appeal lies to a Royal Commission. Neither of these courts is bound by a previous decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or by its own precedents if fresh evidence is adduced.

The censures that may be inflicted are deprivation, *inhibition, suspension, monition, and a new penalty of rebuke. Deposition from holy orders may follow deprivation. Deprivation also follows conviction of certain crimes and misdemeanours in the secular court. Similar proceedings are employed in the case of bishops, who are liable to the same censures.

In the first case brought under the Measure (G. F. Hutchins, Archdeacon of Cheltenham v. M. Bland, 1970, on the ground of unbecoming conduct) the sentence of deprivation by the Consistory Court was set aside by the Court of *Arches on the ground of misdirection, and this section of the Measure may prove difficult to enforce.

ECCLESIASTICAL TEXT OF THE NT. A name occasionally given to the *Byzantine text on the ground that it was the text which established itself for official use in the Greek-speaking Church.

ECCLESIASTICAL TITLES ACT (1851). The Act (14 & 15 Vict. cap. 60) passed at the time of the '*Papal Aggression' forbidding the assumption by RCs of territorial titles within the United Kingdom under penalty of a fine, and rendering void all bequests or donations made to persons under such titles. It was introduced as a countermeasure to the restitution of the RC hierarchy in 1850, but, being a dead letter from the first, was repealed by the Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. cap. 53).

ECCLESIASTICISM. A word, commonly used in a depreciatory sense, for (1) over-attention to the external details of ecclesiastical practice and administration, or (2) the point of view which is formed and guided solely by the interests of the Church as an organization.

ECCLESIASTICUS. A Book of the *Apocrypha, orig. 'the Wisdom (or 'Proverbs') of Jesus the son of Sirach', also known as 'Ben-Sira' or 'Sirach'. The name 'Ecclesiasticus' is found already in *Cyprian; it is referred by *Rufinus to the Book's pre-eminence among the *deuterocanonical writings as a 'Church Book' (liber ecclesiasticus) for the purposes of moral instruction; but this explanation is doubtful, since (1) the name is earlier than the distinction between the deuterocanonical ('Apocryphal') Books and the rest of the OT, and (2) other evidence is wanting that the Book occupied this position of pre-eminence in the Patristic period, the Apocryphal Book most quoted by the Fathers being Wisd. Sol. The origin of the name therefore remains uncertain.

Ecclus. is generally reckoned among the so-called *Wisdom writings and was written or compiled in Hebrew by Jesus (i.e. Joshua) the son of Sira of Jerusalem (prologue, cf. 50. 27). The translator's prologue ('Whereas many', AV and RV) states that the translation into Greek was made by the author's grandson in Egypt after 132 B.C. (The first prologue printed in the AV is spurious.) The historical catalogue of famous men (44–50) ends with Simon the son of Onias the High Priest, who appears to be the High Priest of this name who held office c. 225–200 B.C. (not his earlier namesake, c. 300–270 B.C.). The author also apparently knew nothing of the conflict between faithful Jews and Hellenists which dominates the literature of the *Maccabaean period (c. 170 B.C. onwards). Internal evidence thus confirms a date about two generations before 132 B.C. for the original writing. It was presumably composed wholly or mainly in Palestine, though the author was aware of the larger Hellenistic world (cf. 10. 8) and his ideal scribe is represented as travelling abroad and appearing before rulers (39. 4).

In modern times the Book was known until comparatively recently only in its Greek translation, translations derived from the Greek, and a Syriac translation based on the Hebrew original. A Hebrew text, however, was known to *Jerome and is quoted in the *Talmud. Since 1896 extensive fragments of the Hebrew have been identified among the MSS. discovered in the *geniza of an ancient synagogue in Cairo; further, much smaller fragments have been found in the area of the *Dead Sea.

Hebrew text ed., with Fr. tr. and comm., by I. Levi (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Sciences, Sciences religieuses, x; 2 vols., 1898–1901); also ed., with Germ. tr., by R. Smend (Berlin, 1906). Separate Eng. tr. of revised text by W. O. E. Oesterley (Translations of Early Documents, Series 1, Palestinian Jewish Texts (Pre-Rabbinic), ii; 1916). A. A. Di Lella, O.F.M., The Hebrew Text of Sirach. A Text-Critical and Historical Study (Studies in Classical Literature, i; 1966), with extensive bibl. to 1964. Commentaries by R. Smend (Berlin, 1906), W. O. E. Oesterley (Camb. Bib., RV, 1912), by G. H. Box–W. O. E. Oesterley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 268–517, N. Peters (E.H., xxv; 1913), and A. Eberharter (Die heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments, ed. F. Feldmann–H. Herkenne, Bd. vi, Abt. 5; 1925). J. Haspecker, S.J., Gottesfurcht bei Jesus Sirach. Ihre religiöse Struktur und ihre literarische und doktrinäre Bedeutung (Analecta Biblica, xxx; 1967). R. Smend, Griechisch-syrisch-hebräischer Index zur Weisheit des Jesus Sirach (1907). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 352–408; Eissfeldt, pp. 595–9 and 772, with further bibl. H. Duesberg, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 52–62, s.v.

ECCLESIOLOGY (Gk. ἐκκλησία, a 'church'). The science of the building and decoration of churches. The word was first used in the 19th cent., when interest in ecclesiastical buildings was much increased by such groups as the *Cambridge Camden Society. This Society published The Ecclesiologist, until it was later taken over by the Ecclesiological Society, 29 vols. in all (1841–68). The term is also used of the theology of the Church.

ECK, JOHANN (1486–1543), Johann Maier 'of Eck' (his birthplace, Egg an der Günz), hence Eckius, German theologian. From 1510 till his death he was professor of theology at Ingolstadt. He came under humanist influences, and his early writings, which included commentaries on *Aristotle and Petrus Hispanus, were almost anti-Scholastic in their theology. In 1514 he attacked the medieval prohibition of interest, defending a return on capital up to 5 per cent, and won support for his thesis at *Bologna and Vienna. Until the controversy over *indulgences broke out, he was on good terms with M. *Luther; but in the public debate at Leipzig in 1519 he opposed *Carlstadt and Luther, and was largely responsible for procuring the latter's excommunication by the bull '*Exsurge Domine' at Rome in 1520. About this time he wrote an extended defence of the Papal position in De primatu Petri adv. Ludderum libri III (Paris, 1521), besides shorter works against Luther; and for the rest of his life he took a prominent part in organizing Catholic opposition to German Protestantism. In 1530 he was the champion of the Catholic attack on the *Augsburg Confession. In 1537 he published a German-dialect version of the Bible for Catholic use.

J. Metzler, S.J. (ed.), Tres Orationes Funebres in Exequiis Ioannis Eckii habitae (Corpus Catholicorum, xvi; 1930), with full introd., list of his works and modern edd. T. Wiedemann, Dr. Johann Eck (Ratisbon, 1865). J. Greving, Johann Eck als junger Gelehrter. Eine literar- und dogmengeschichtliche Untersuchung über seinen Chrysopassus Praedestinationis aus dem Jahre 1514 (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, i; 1906); id., Johann Ecks Pfarrbuch für U. L. Frau in Ingolstadt (ib., iv and v; 1908), with text; A. Brandt, Johann Ecks Predigttätigkeit an U. L. Frau zu Ingolstadt, 1525–42 (ib., xxvii and xxviii; 1914), with text; H. Schauerte, Die Busslehre des Johannes Eck (ib., xxxviii and xxxix; 1919); E. Iserloh, Die Eucharistie in der Stellung des Johannes Eck. Ein Beitrag zur vortridentinischen Kontroverstheologie über das Messopfer (ib., lxxiii and lxxiv; 1950); K. Rischar, Johann Eck auf dem Reichstag zu Augsburg 1530 (ib., xcvii; 1968), with extensive bibl. J. P Kirsch in C.E., v (1909), pp. 271–3, s.v.; F. Zoepfl in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 86–93, s.v.; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 206–8, s.v. 'Eck, Influence of'.

ECKHART (c. 1260–1327), 'Meister Eckhart', German *Dominican mystic. Born at Hochheim in Thuringia of a noble family, he entered the Dominican convent at Erfurt as a youth, completed his studies at Paris with the degree of master in 1302, became Provincial of the Saxon province of his order in 1304, and was entrusted with the reform of the Bohemian houses in 1307. In 1311 he was sent as a teacher to *Paris. He returned to Germany c. 1313, living first at Strassburg and afterwards at *Cologne, where he became one of the most famous preachers of his time. Accused of heretical teaching, he was tried before the court of the Abp. of Cologne in 1326, but appealed to the Pope, and died during the proceedings. In 1329 *John XXII condemned 28 of his sentences as heretical or dangerous. This censure by the Church, though it did not lessen the veneration of his disciples, among whom were J. *Tauler and H. *Suso, seriously affected the circulation of his works, so that a large part was lost.

The ambiguities arising out of Eckhart's attempt to express the inexpressible and the fact that he was first rediscovered by Romantic poets and philosophers out of sympathy with, and often ignorant of, the theological tradition in which he stood, have led to many widely divergent interpretations of Eckhart's teaching. He has been acclaimed as the forerunner of M. *Luther's emphasis on faith, of I. *Kant's Critical Idealism, of G. W. F. *Hegel's *Pantheism, and of the Nazi 'Deutschreligion' (A. Rosenberg). Against these arbitrary assignments, which are agreed for the most part in regarding Eckhart unquestioningly as a pantheist, there has been a steady reaction since his works have become better known, beginning with the researches of H. *Denifle, and Eckhart is now more generally seen in his historical setting as a Dominican, and as dependent for the substance of his teaching on the Schoolmen.

Eckhart wrote in both German and Latin. His German writings, which include Sermons, Treatises, and Fragments, were ed. by F. Pfeiffer (Leipzig, 1857; repr. 1924); several partial edd. have appeared more recently. New collected ed. of Opera Latina, ed. Institutum S. Sabinae [by G. Théry, O.P., and R. Klibansky] (Leipzig, 1934 ff.); another ed. (partly under Nazi auspices) for the 'Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft', of his Germ. works by J. Quint (Stuttgart–Berlin, 1936 ff.) and of his Lat. works by K. Weiss, J. Koch, E. Benz and others (ib., 1936 ff.). Eng. tr. of Pfeiffer's ed., with some omissions and additions, by C. de B. Evans (2 vols., London, 1924–31); new translation of selected works by R. B. Blakney (New York and London, 1941) and by J. M. Clark–J. V. Skinner (London, 1958). Studies by O. Karrer (Munich, 1926), A. Dempf (Leipzig, 1934), H. Ebeling (Stuttgart, 1941), Herma Piesch (Vienna, 1946), Jeanne Ancelet-Hustache (Paris, 1956; Eng. tr., 1957), and Ingeborg Degenhardt (Studien zur Problemgeschichte der antiken und mittelalterlichen Philosophie, iii; Leiden, 1967), with extensive bibl. J. Koch, 'Kritische Studien zum Leben Meister Eckharts' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxix (1959), pp. 5–51, xxx (1960), pp. 5–52. U. M. Nix, O.P.–R. Öchslin, O.P. (edd.), Meister Eckhart der Prediger. Festschrift zum Eckhart-Gedenkjahr (1960). V. *Lossky, Théologie négative et connaissance de Dieu chez Maître Eckhart (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, xlviii; 1960, posthumously publd.). E. Winkler, Exegetische Methoden bei Meister Eckhart (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Biblischen Hermeneutik, vi; Tübingen, 1965). J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (1949), ch. ii, pp. 7–35, with bibl. pp. 110–14. Überweg, iv, pp. 553, 651–71, and 779 f. (full bibl.). S. M. Deutsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 142–54, s.v.; F. Vernet in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 2057–81, s.v.; R. L. Oechslin, O.P., in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 93–116, s.v.; F. Vandenbroucke, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1385–1403, s.v. 'Eckhart (1)'; id., in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 38–40, s.v., all with bibl.

ECLECTICISM. Any system of theology or philosophy which, rather than adhere to one school or tradition, selects such elements as seem the best in several systems, and combines them.

ECPHONESIS (Gk. ἐκφώνησις). Esp. in the E. Church, the concluding words, uttered in an audible voice, of a prayer the rest of which has been recited silently (μυστικῶς).

ECSTASY. The term has come to be applied to several preter- or supernatural states which, however, are in no way related to each other.

In the OT many cases of ecstasy are recorded, esp. among the prophets. Here ecstasy usually consists in a sudden seizure of the prophet by the Divine power which spoke through his mouth or showed him the future in visions. These ecstasies, however, were mostly isolated phenomena which were induced ad hoc for such purposes as teaching and exhortation.

Mystic ecstasy in the Christian sense is one of the normal stages of the mystic life. St. *Teresa places it between the 'Prayer of Union' and the 'Mystic Marriage'; but as ecstasies have frequently occurred in the case of children (e.g. St. *Hildegard, St. *Catherine of Siena, St. *Peter of Alcántara), this sequence, though corresponding to the normal development, is not a conditio sine qua non. The chief characteristic of the ecstatic state is the alienation of the senses, caused by the violence of the Divine action on the soul. The body, unable to bear the strain, becomes usually immovable, and sight, hearing, &c., cease to function. In contrast to the pathological 'case', the mystic remembers what has taken place during the ecstasy, which is usually an intuitive knowledge of some mystery of religion accompanied by a distinct consciousness of the Divine Presence. Moreover, whereas pathological ecstasies lead to a state of increasing enervation, mystic ecstasy, though it may produce temporary physical fatigue, increases not only the sanctity of the ecstatic but also his powers of reason and will, and frequently prepares him for more vigorous action, as is evident in the case of St. Teresa. Certain physical phenomena, such as levitation and *stigmatization, sometimes accompany the ecstasy, but they are never more than concomitants and do not belong to its essence, which consists in the union of the human will with the Divine.

M. de Goedt, J. Kirchmeyer, S.J., and others in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 2072–2171, s.v. 'Extase (B), mystique chrétienne', with extensive bibl. reff.

ECTENE (Gk. ἐκτένεια, 'earnest prayer'; cf. Acts 12. 5, προσευχὴ δὲ ἦν ἐκτενῶς γινομένη, 'prayer was made without ceasing'). In the E. Church, a prayer constructed like a *Litany for use in the Liturgy and other services. It consists of short petitions said by the *deacon to which choir or congregation respond with *Kyrie Eleison.

ECTHESIS, The (Gk. ἔκθεσις, 'a statement of faith'). The formula issued in 638 by the Emp. *Heraclius forbidding the mention of 'energies' (ἐνέργειαι), whether one or two, in the Person of Christ and asserting that the two Natures were united in a single Will (*Monothelitism, q.v.). It had been drafted earlier in the year by *Sergius, Patr. of *Constantinople, after consultation with Pope *Honorius (q.v.). It was accepted by Councils held at Constantinople in 638 and 639, but soon disowned by Heraclius as well as by Honorius' two successors in the Roman see (Severinus, 638–40; John IV, 640–2).

The text is preserved among the acts of the Lateran Council of 649, sess. 3; pr., with Lat. tr., in Hardouin, iii, cols. 791–6, and Mansi, x (1764), cols. 991–8. The condemnation in can. 18 of this council is repr. in Denz.–Bann. (ed. 28, 1952), p. 124 f. (No. 271). Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 387–99, with full reff. L. Bréhier in Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 131–134. See also bibl. to Heraclius and Monothelitism.

ECUMENICAL COUNCILS. See Oecumenical Councils.

ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT (formerly more usually Oecumenical, from Gk. οἰκουμένη, 'the whole inhabited world'). The movement in the Church towards the recovery of the unity of all believers in Christ, transcending differences of creed, ritual and polity. The aspiration for unity can be traced from NT times, and has found various expressions at different periods, but it has never been so potent as in the present century. The modern ecumenical movement may be dated from the *Edinburgh Missionary Conference of 1910, though this itself owed much to earlier movements which prepared the way. They included the *Evangelical revivals of the 18th and 19th cents. which crossed national and denominational frontiers, the great missionary expansion of the 19th cent., with its emphasis on interdenominational co-operation, the work of the Bible Societies which drew on the resources of all Churches, and the *Student Christian Movement, which was interdenominational in membership and world-wide in scope. The Edinburgh Conference of 1910 led immediately to the establishment of the International Missionary Council; its impetus was behind the creation in 1925 of the Universal Christian Conference on *Life and Work, which was concerned with the application of Christianity to social, economic and political life, and in 1927 of the first World Conference on *Faith and Order at *Lausanne, which addressed itself to the theological basis of the Church and its unity. The second meetings of these two bodies were held in 1937 at Edinburgh and *Oxford respectively, and it was agreed that they should be fused into a *World Council of Churches. A conference at Utrecht in 1938 drafted a constitution, though the formal inauguration of the World Council was delayed by the Second World War until 1948.

The initiative of the movements between 1910 and 1927 came mainly from within W. Protestantism, though it was greatly reinforced in 1920 by an Encyclical Letter from the *Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople appealing to 'all the Churches of Christ' for 'closer intercourse and mutual co-operation'. This was paralleled by the Appeal for Reunion issued by the 1920 *Lambeth Conference. By 1937 both E. Orthodoxy and the so-called 'younger Churches' of Asia and Africa were taking an important part in the movement. Until 1961, when for the first time observers accredited by the Vatican were present at an Assembly of the World Council of Churches, RC participation had been expressed only through interested individuals, though for some time before the convening of the Second *Vatican Council there had been increasing co-operation between certain RCs and the leaders of the World Council. This changed atmosphere was reflected in the visit of Abp. G. *Fisher to Pope *John XXIII in 1960. The decision of the Pope to invite observers from non-RC Churches to attend the Vatican Council was of great significance, heightened in 1964 by the Council's Decree on Ecumenism, which regarded members of other communions as 'separated brethren' rather than outside the Church. Within the new climate reflected by these events the historic severance between the E. Church and Western Catholicism began to be bridged and in 1965 Pope *Paul VI and the Oecumenical Patriarch *Athenagoras nullified the anathemas which had been in force since 1054 (see Great Schism). There are also discussions in progress on the unity and mission of the Church between the RC, *Lutheran, *Reformed and *Methodist Churches. At the same time, amongst the non-RC Churches of the West and the U.S.A. and their counterparts in Asia and Africa there have been considerable achievements in organic unity and more are in process of negotiation. A further expression of the movement may be seen in the rapid multiplication of Councils of Churches, whether on a regional scale (as in the East Asia Christian Conference, formed in 1959, and the All-Africa Conference of Churches, 1958), the national plane (e.g. the *British Council of Churches) or in towns and local communities, which normally include representatives of all denominations, incl. the RCs.

See also Reunion and World Council of Churches; also Anglican-Methodist Conversations and South India.

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity 1920–4 (1924); id., Second Series (1930); id., Third Series 1930–48 (1948); id., Fourth Series 1948–57 (1958).

Studies include G. J. Slosser, Christian Unity. Its History and Challenge in all Communions, in all Lands (1929). K. [D.] Mackenzie (ed.), Union of Christendom (2 vols., 1938); Ruth Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954; ed. 2, with revised bibl., 1967; vol. ii: The Ecumenical Advance, 1948–1968, ed. H. E. Fey, 1970); N. Goodall, The Ecumenical Movement. What it is and what it does (1961; ed. 2, 1964); J. T. McNeill, Unitive Protestantism. The Ecumenical Spirit and its Persistent Expression (1964), esp. pp. 9–129; S. [C.] Neill, The Church and Christian Union (Bampton Lectures for 1964; 1968). B. Leeming, S.J., The Churches and the Church. A Study in Ecumenism (1960; ed. 2, 1963); B. Lambert, O.P., Le Problème œcuménique (2 vols., 1962; Eng. tr., 1967). R. McA. Brown, The Ecumenical Revolution. An Interpretation of the Catholic-Protestant Dialogue (Garden City, N.Y., 1967; London, 1969). N. Goodall, Ecumenical Progress. A Decade of Change in the Ecumenical Movement 1961–71 (1972). B. Till, The Churches Search for Unity (Harmondsworth, 1972). G. K. A. Bell, Christian Unity. The Anglican Position (Olaus Petri Lectures at Upsala University, October 1946; 1948). E. Molland, Konfesjons-Kunnskap. Kristenhetens Trosbekjennelser og Kirkesamfunn (1953; Eng. tr., Christendom. The Christian Churches, their Doctrines, Constitutional Forms and Ways of Worship, 1959). Irénikon. Bulletin mensuel des moines de l'union des Églises, Prieuré d'Amay s. Meuse, also Collections (1926–8; the two series were amalgamated and six numbers a year issued 1929–39; four numbers a year 1940–52; three numbers a year 1953 ff.); The Ecumenical Review (4 numbers a year, Geneva, 1948 ff.). Oecumenica. Revue de l'Anglicanisme et des Questions œcuméniques (7 vols., each in 3 parts, 1934–9).

EDEN, The Garden of. The original home of *Adam and *Eve (Gen. 2. 8–3. 24), translated in the LXX as '*Paradise'. From it issued the four rivers Pishon, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates (ib.). The name is prob. connected with the Babylonian edinu, 'a plain' (such as would be made very fertile by irrigation), but would suggest in Heb. 'delight'. The writer of the Gen. narrative may have had in mind the well-watered country of Mesopotamia (cf. 2. 14), but the geographical ideas implied are very primitive or even mythological. Elsewhere, in Is. 51. 3, Ezek. 28. 13 and 31. 9, and Joel 2. 3, Eden is mentioned as a place of extreme fertility and magnificent trees. Older Biblical scholars frequently made attempts to identify the site, e.g. Friedrich *Delitzsch put it some 100 miles north of Baghdad.

F. Delitzsch, Wo lag das Paradies? (1881). A. Brock-Utne, Der Gottesgarten. Eine vergleichende religionsgeschichtliche Studie (Avhandlinger utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademie i Oslo, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1935, No. 2; 1936). J. Skinner, Genesis (I.C.C., 1910), pp. 62–6 ('The Site of Eden'); H. E. Ryle, Genesis (Cambridge Bible, 1914), p. 47 f. ('Note on the Rivers of Paradise'). See also other comm. cited s.vv. Genesis, Ezekiel, etc.

EDERSHEIM, ALFRED (1825–89), Biblical scholar. An Austrian of Jewish parentage and upbringing, he was converted at Pest to Christianity by a Scottish *Presbyterian, John Duncan, and accompanied him to Edinburgh. After studying theology at Edinburgh and Berlin, he entered the Presbyterian ministry in 1846, but later joined the C of É (1875), and from 1876 to 1882 was Vicar of Loders in Dorsetshire. He made an intensive study of the doctrines, practices, and conditions of *Judaism in the centuries preceding and following the beginning of the Christian era. Of his writings the most widely read was his Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah (2 vols., 1883), a work of great erudition written in an easy style, but somewhat lacking in critical judgement.

Tohu-Va-Vohu ['Without Form and Void']. A Collection of Fragmentary Thoughts and Criticisms ed. with a memoir by Ella Edersheim [daughter] (1890; memoir, pp. vii–xxxii). S. R. *Driver in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), p. 175 f.

EDESSA. The site has probably been inhabited from remote times, but the present city (now Urfa) was founded by Seleucus I in 304 B.C. After the fall of Seleucid power it was the centre of an independent kingdom from c. 132 B.C. until A.D. 214, and then a Roman colony. It was from a very early date the centre of Syriac-speaking Christianity. The church there, destroyed in 201 after a flood, is the oldest known Christian edifice. Edessa is prob. the home both of the *Old Syriac and *Peshitta versions of the NT, and possibly also of the *Diatessaron. Its fame was enhanced by its claim to possess from A.D. 394 onwards the relics of the Apostle St. *Thomas. It was the home of the *Nestorian 'Persian School' until that was closed in 489, and has always been an important centre of *Monophysitism (it remained the residence of a Syrian Orthodox metropolitan until the beginning of this century). In 641 it fell into the hands of the Arabs, but continued to be an important Christian centre for several centuries. It fell to the Byzantines in 944, and later became the capital of a small crusader principality, until its capture by Zengi in 1144. See also Abgar, Legend of and Chronicon Edessenum.

W. *Cureton (ed.), Ancient Syriac Documents relative to the Earliest Establishment of Christianity in Edessa and the Neighbouring Countries, from the Year After Our Lord's Ascension to the Beginning of the Fourth Century (1864). L. J. Tixeront, Les Origines de l'église d'Édesse et la légende d'Abgar. Étude critique suivie de deux textes orientaux inédits (1888). A. F. J. Klijn, Edessa, de Stad van de Apostel Thomas (Baarn, 1962; Germ. tr., 1965). J. B. Segal, Edessa. 'The Blessed City' (Oxford, 1970), with bibl. R. Duval, 'Histoire politique, religieuse et littéraire d'Édesse jusqu'à la première croisade' in Journal asiatique, 8e Série, xviii (1891), pp. 87–133, 201–78, 381–439, and xix (1892), pp. 5–102. A. *Baumstark, 'Vorjustinianische kirchliche Bauten in Edessa' in Oriens Christianus, iv (1904), pp. 164–83; A. Grabar, 'Le Témoignage d'une hymne syriaque sur l'architecture de la cathédrale d'Édesse au VIe siècle et sur la symbolique de l'édifice chrétien' in Cahiers archéologiques, ii (1947), pp. 41–67. E. R. Hayes, L'École d'Édesse (Paris thesis, 1930). W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (1934), pp. 6–48; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 1–43. E. Kirsten in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 552–97, s.v., with bibl.

EDICT OF MILAN. See Milan, Edict of.

EDICT OF NANTES. See Nantes, Edict of.

EDINBURGH CONFERENCE (1910), World Missionary Conference. Convened as a consultative gathering to study missionary endeavour in the light of the circumstances of the day, the Conference was significant esp. for its presentation of the ideal of world-evangelization and as a forerunner of the *Ecumenical Movement. Through the creation of the International Missionary Council and the opening of *Edinburgh House, it also led to much greater co-operation among Missionary Societies. Some 1,200 delegates, representative of many Christian bodies and some 160 Missionary Boards or Societies, took part. J. R. *Mott was chairman of the Committee and J. H. *Oldham general secretary of the Conference.

World Missionary Conference, 1910 (Report, 9 vols. [1910]). W. H. T. *Gairdner, Edinburgh 1910. An Account and Interpretation of the World Missionary Conference (1910).

EDINBURGH CONFERENCE (1937). The second World Conference on *Faith and Order, which continued the work of *Lausanne (q.v.). Its subjects were Grace, the Word of God, the Communion of Saints, the Ministry and Sacraments, and the Church's Unity in Life and Worship. The Report issued by the Conference stated the agreements as well as the differences. Grace, equated with the manifestation of God's love in the creation and redemption of man, is given in the Church through the Word and the Sacraments. Scripture is the principal rule of Christian doctrine and worship, but there was dissension as to the authority of the Church to interpret it, on the place assigned to Tradition, and on the nature, visibility, and membership of the Church. The Communion of Saints was interpreted in various ways as synonymous with the Holy Catholic Church, as the way of life of Christians in the state of grace, or, esp. by the Orthodox, as including also the angels and the Saints in heaven. There was considerable division on the number and efficacy of the Sacraments and on the ministry, the Presbyterians and other Protestants rejecting episcopacy as taught in the Orthodox Church and in the C of E. The union visualized by the Conference was largely one of co-operative action, confederation, and intercommunion, founded on essential unity in faith. The principal obstacle in the way of its achievement was the opposition between two main types of the conception of the Church as 'authoritarian' and 'personal' respectively. The Conference approved the proposal of a '*World Council of Churches' (q.v.). See also Ecumenical Movement.

The Second World Conference on Faith and Order, held at Edinburgh, August 3–18, 1937, ed. L. Hodgson (1938).

EDINBURGH HOUSE. The institution set up in London (2 Eaton Gate, S.W.1) as a result of the *Edinburgh Conference (1910, q.v.). It houses the office of the Conference of British Missionary Societies and various other ecumenical bodies.

EDMUND, St., of Abingdon (also wrongly Edmund Rich) (c. 1180–1240), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Abingdon, Oxon, of pious parents, Edmund early obtained a reputation for austerity and sanctity. Before 1222 he became Treasurer of *Salisbury Cathedral, and in 1233 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury. During his short tenure of the primacy he boldly, though ineffectually, attempted to check royal mismanagement and Papal exactions. When the legate, Cardinal Otto, whom Henry III had induced the Pope to appoint, arrived, Edmund protested against the infringement of his archiepiscopal rights; but he failed to stop the exploitation of ecclesiastical wealth and patronage, and retired to Pontigny in self-imposed exile. In his earlier years he had taught the new logic at Oxford, and his association with the University is commemorated in St. Edmund Hall, the one surviving medieval Hall in Oxford. He wrote a devotional treatise Speculum ecclesie which had a wide circulation. He was canonized by *Innocent IV in 1247. Feast day, 16 Nov.

Latin text of 'Speculum Ecclesiæ' in Bibliotheca Patrum et Veterum Auctorum Ecclesiasticorum, v (ed. 3, Paris, 1610), cols. 983–1004. Edd. of other versions listed by Lawrence (see below). The chief authorities are the Monastic Chroniclers, esp. *Matthew Paris, and several early biographies. Modern lives by W. Wallace (London, 1893), B. Ward (ib., 1903), and C. H. Lawrence (Oxford, 1960), incl. texts of early material. A. B. Emden, An Oxford Hall in Medieval Times (1927). C. H. Lawrence, 'Edmund of Abingdon' in The Month, N.S., xxix (1963), pp. 213–29. B.R.U.O., i (1957), p. 6 f., s.v. 'Abingdon, Edmund of'. T. A. Archer in D.N.B., xvi (1888), pp. 405–10; C. H. Lawrence in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 293–5, s.v.

EDMUND CAMPION, St. See Campion, St. Edmund.

EDMUND THE MARTYR, St. (c. 840–69), King of East Anglia. The son of a king of 'Saxony' (perhaps Kent), who was adopted as their king by the East Angles, Edmund had succeeded as king by 865. His equitable rule was cut short in 869 by the invasion of the Danes under Inguar and Hubba. After the defeat of his army, he was captured; but though the invaders promised him his life if he would share his kingdom with Inguar, he refused as a Christian to associate himself thus with a pagan, and was condemned to be made the target of the Danes' archery practice, and finally beheaded. The cult of the martyr started almost immediately, and his body was translated in the 10th cent. to the present Bury St. Edmunds, where the abbey rapidly became a great place of pilgrimage. Feast day, 20 Nov.

T. Arnold (ed.), Memorials of St. Edmund's Abbey, i (R.S., 1890), includes 'Passio Sancti Edmundi' of *Abbo of Fleury (pp. 3–25), 'De Infantia Sancti Edmundi' of Gaufridus de Fontibus (pp. 93–103), and other material on the miracles attributed to Edmund. Corolla Sancti Edmundi, ed. with a preface by Lord Francis Hervey (1907; with Eng. tr. of chief sources). Id. (ed.), The History of King Eadmund the Martyr and of the Early Years of his Abbey. Corpus Christi College, Oxford MS. 197 (Oxford, 1927). La Vie de Seint Edmund le Rei, an Anglo-Norman poem of the Twelfth Century by Denis Piramus also ed. by F. L. Ravenel (Philadelphia, 1906), and, with useful introd., by H. Kjellman (Göteborgs Kungl. Vetenskaps- och Vitterhets-Samhälles Handlingar, Femte Följden, Ser. A, iv. 3; 1935). Less critical modern lives by J. R. Thompson (London, 1890) and J. B. Mackinlay, O.S.B. (ib., 1893). G. Loomis, 'The Growth of the Saint Edmund Legend' in Harvard Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, xiv (1932), pp. 83–113. M. E. Porter–J. H. Baltzell, 'The Old French Lives of Saint Edmund, King of East Anglia' in Romanic Review, xlv (1954), pp. 81–88. Dorothy Whitelock, 'Fact and Fiction in the Legend of St. Edmund' in Proceedings of the Suffolk Institute of Archaeology, xxxi (for 1969; 1970), pp. 217–33; and other articles in this issue commemorating St. Edmund.

EDWARD, St. (c. 963–78), king and martyr. He was the eldest son of Edgar the Peaceful, King of England, whom, contrary to the wishes of his stepmother, Queen Elfrida, but with the support of Abp. *Dunstan, he succeeded on his death in 975. Three years later he was murdered. Acc. to the details in *William of Malmesbury, this took place near Corfe in Dorset at the instigation of Elfrida, who had him stabbed while drinking by one of her attendants. His body was buried in the church of Wareham and later (980) translated to Shaftesbury. In 1001 he was officially styled a martyr and miracles were reported at his tomb. Feast day, 18 Mar.; of his translation, 20 June.

The chief authorities are William of Malmesbury, Florence of Worcester and the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, and the Vita S. Oswaldi. See also Memorials of St. Dunstan (ed. W. *Stubbs, R.S., 1874). D. J. V. Fisher, 'The Anti-Monastic Reaction in the Reign of Edward the Martyr' in Cambridge Historical Journal, x (1950–52), pp. 254–70. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xvii (1889), p. 5 f.

EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, St. (1003–66), English king. The son of Ethelred II and Emma, the daughter of Duke Richard I of Normandy, he was sent to Normandy in 1013 and educated there in Norman ways. On the death of his half-brother, Hardicanute, in 1042, he was acclaimed King. He owed the throne largely to the support of the powerful Earl Godwin, whose daughter, Eadgyth (or Edith), he married later in 1045.

Although his reign was outwardly peaceful, internally it was marked by struggles between Earl Godwin and his Saxon supporters and the Norman advisers and barons, including Robert of Jumièges, Abp. of Canterbury, whom Edward, more a Norman than a Saxon, had brought over with him. In 1051 Earl Godwin was banished but the next year was restored through a counter-revolution. At the King's death the disputed succession, as well as the administrative disunity of the kingdom, plunged the nation into hostilities. Edward himself was mainly occupied with religious matters, and in particular with the building of the great abbey of St. Peter at *Westminster, which was consecrated late in 1065. He died on 5 Jan. 1066. His reputation for piety continued after his death and he was canonized in 1161. Feast day, 13 Oct.

H. R. Luard (ed.), Lives of Edward the Confessor (R.S., 1858), includes text of earliest (anon.) life (pp. 389–435) and other material. The anonymous life is also ed., with Eng. tr., by F. Barlow (London, 1962), incl. full reff. and notes, and appendix on the development of his cult. M. Bloch, 'La Vie de S. Édouard le Confesseur par Osbert de Clare' in Anal. Boll., xli (1923), pp. 5–131, incl. text, pp. 64–131; R. W. Southern, 'The First Life of Edward the Confessor' in E.H.R., lviii (1943), pp. 385–400; Eleanor K. Heningham, 'The Genuineness of the Vita Æduuardi Regis' in Speculum, xxi (1946), pp. 419–56; B. W. Scholz, 'The Canonization of Edward the Confessor', ib., xxxvi (1961), pp. 38–60. F. Barlow, Edward the Confessor (1970). L. E. Tanner, 'Some Representations of St. Edward the Confessor in Westminster Abbey and Elsewhere' in Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd Series, xv (1952), pp. 1–12. See also works cited s.v. Anglo-Saxon Church.

EDWARD VI (1537–53), King of England. The son of *Henry VIII and Jane Seymour, he was an ailing, precocious, and studious boy. He was provided by his father with consistently Protestant tutors, and succeeded to the throne in 1547, at a time which was critical for the C of E. Having delegated his royal authority to the Privy Council, dominated first by the Protector, *Somerset, and then by the Duke of Northumberland, he was himself of little account politically. His reign, however, is outstanding ecclesiastically for the numerous alterations in a *Calvinist direction often forced on the Church by an *Erastian civil government. It was marked by the publication (1547) of a Book of *Homilies, drawn up by T. *Cranmer; by the *Injunctions (1547) condemning pictures and all lights except the two before the Blessed Sacrament, providing a copy of the *Great Bible and of the paraphrase of D. *Erasmus in every parish church, and enforcing the reading in English of the Epistle and Gospel at High Mass; by the Acts of Parliament (1547) imposing penalties on those who spoke irreverently of the Sacrament of the Altar, and enjoining that Communion be given in both kinds, abolishing the congé d'élire and repealing the *Lollard heresy laws and the Act of *Six Articles; by the Privy Council's Proclamations (1548) enumerating ceremonies no longer to be enforced, abolishing all images, and enforcing the use of the newly drawn-up order in English for the giving of Communion in both kinds; by the recognition (1548) of clerical marriages; by the Act of *Uniformity (1549) imposing by penal legislation the use of the First BCP; by the new *Ordinal (1550); by the destruction of altars (1550), instigated by N. *Ridley, Bp. of London, and the substitution of wooden tables; by the attack on the doctrine of the Real Presence; by the Second and more Calvinist BCP (1552); the *Forty-Two Articles of Religion (1553), and the *Catechism and *Primer of 1553.

J. G. Nichols (ed.), Literary Remains of King Edward the Sixth (Roxburghe Club, 2 vols., 1857). R. H. Brodie (ed.), The Calendar of the Patent Rolls preserved in the Public Record Office. Edward VI, 1547–1553 (6 vols., 1924–9); other calendars of the papers of his reign issued by the Master of the Rolls in their respective series. W. K. Jordan (ed.), The Chronicle and Political Papers of King Edward VI (1966). P. F. Tytler, England under the Reigns of Edward VI and Mary (2 vols., 1839), vol i, and vol. ii, pp. 1–187. F. G. *Lee, King Edward the Sixth, Supreme Head (1886). C. R. Markham, King Edward VI. An Appreciation (1907). C. H. [E.] Smyth, Cranmer & the Reformation under Edward VI (Cambridge, 1926). Hester W. Chapman, The Last Tudor King. A Study of Edward VI [October 12th, 1537—July 6th, 1553] (1958). W. K. Jordan, Edward VI: The Young King. The Protectorship of the Duke of Somerset (1968); id., Edward VI: The Threshold of Power. The Dominance of the Duke of Northumberland (1970). G. Constant, La Réforme en Angleterre, ii. Introduction de la Réforme en Angleterre, Édouard VI (1547–1553) (1939; Eng. tr., 1942). A. F. Pollard, 'The Reformation under Edward VI' in C.M.H., ii (1903), pp. 474–511, with bibl. pp. 795–801. J. D. Mackie, The Earlier Tudors, 1485–1558 (Oxford History of England, vii; 1952) pp. 478–525. See also bibl. to Reformation.

EDWARDS, JONATHAN (1703–58), American *Calvinist and philosopher. From a very early age he showed an interest in philosophy, in which he was much influenced by a study of J. *Locke's Essay in 1717. In 1727, after an experience of conversion, fully described in his diary, he was ordained to the ministry of the *Congregational church at Northampton, Massachusetts, where he struggled hard to stem the drift towards *Arminianism. His labours led to a religious revival, which Edwards minutely analysed in his Faithful Narrative of the Surprising Works of God (1737). His extreme Calvinism, displayed in his wish to exclude all 'unconverted' from the Communion, led to his removal from Northampton in 1749. In the following year he embarked on missionary work at Stockbridge. It was there that he wrote his most important works—his essay on Original Sin (posthumous), his Dissertation concerning the Nature of True Virtue (also posthumous), and, most famous of all, his Inquiry into the Modern Prevailing Notions respecting that Freedom of the Will which is supposed to be essential to Moral Agency (1754). Freedom, as popularly understood, he rejected, maintaining that self-determination was 'unphilosophical, self-contradictory, and absurd', and that the essence of virtue and vice lay 'not in their cause but in their nature'. In theology he was an orthodox Calvinist of mystical inclination, and it was indubitably his desire to defend the extreme position of 'election' that inspired his metaphysical account of freedom. After his death a 'New England Party' of philosophical Calvinists carried on his teaching, but these disciples did little except expound their master. Among them was his son, JONATHAN EDWARDS 'the younger' (1745–1801), chiefly remembered for his 'New England Theory of the Atonement', which he expounded in The Necessity of the Atonement and its Consistency with Free Grace in Forgiveness (1785).

See also Great Awakening.

Works ed. by E. Williams and E. Parsons (8 vols., Leeds, 1806–11; 2 Supp. vols., Edinburgh, 1847); by S. Austin (8 vols., Worcester, Mass., 1808–9; repr. Boston, 1843); and by S. E. Dwight, incl. Memoir (10 vols., New York, 1830). A. V. G. Allen, Life and Writings of Jonathan Edwards (1889). Other lives by H. B. Parkes (New York, 1930), A. C. McGiffert ('Creative Lives', 1932) Olga E. Winslow (New York, 1940), incl. bibliographical reff. to scattered artt. on specific aspects, and P. [G. A.] Miller (New York, 1949). D. J. Elwood, The Philosophical Theology of Jonathan Edwards (New York, 1960); C. C. Cherry, The Theology of Jonathan Edwards. A Re-appraisal (Garden City, N.J., 1966); R. A. Delattre, Beauty and Sensibility in the Thought of Jonathan Edwards. An Essay in Aesthetics and Theological Ethics (1968); E. H. Davidson, Jonathan Edwards. The Narrative of a Puritan Mind (Cambridge, Mass., 1968). H. T. Johnson, The Printed Writings of Jonathan Edwards, 1703–1758. A Bibliography (Princeton University Library Publication, 1940).

EDWIN (c. 585–633), Northumbrian king. The son of Ælla, King of Deira (i.e. S. Northumbria), Edwin was banished by the King of Bernicia (N. Northumbria) who had seized his father's kingdom. After taking refuge, first in N. Wales, then in Mercia, and finally with Redwald, King of E. Anglia, he was restored to the throne through Redwald's victory over the Bernician king, Ethelfrid, in 617. He proved an able ruler, and in 625 married Ethelburga, the sister of the Kentish king, Eadbald, and daughter of King *Ethelbert, a Christian woman who was accompanied to Northumbria by her chaplain, *Paulinus. Edwin's victory over the West Saxons, which made him the most powerful monarch in England, was followed by his baptism at Paulinus' hands (627). He then appointed Paulinus Bp. of *York and set about building a stone church there, but his plans were foiled by the invasion of his kingdom by Penda, the heathen King of Mercia, and his ally, Cadwallon of N. Wales. His defeat and death at the battle of Heathfield, 12 Oct. 633, was followed by the break-up of his kingdom. He was long venerated as a saint, his festival being kept on 12 Oct.

The primary authority is *Bede, H.E., ii. 9–20. Notes to Baedae Opera Historica, ed. by C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 93–117; further reff. in index, s.v. Aeduini, p. 401 f.

EFFETA. See Ephphatha.

EFFICACIOUS GRACE. In the RC theology of *grace, grace to which free consent is given by the will so that it always produces its effect (effectum). In the controversy between the *Dominicans (D. *Báñez) and the *Jesuits (L. *Molina), the former held the efficacy of such grace to be dependent on the character of the grace itself, the latter on the fact that it is given under circumstances which God foresees to be congruous with the dispositions of the recipient. Both parties were agreed that, although the result was inevitable, the grace did not necessitate the will and destroy freedom. Both sufficient and efficacious grace are regarded as different forms of 'actual grace'.

EGBERT (d. 766), Abp. of *York. A member of the Northumbrian royal house, he was educated in a monastery, ordained deacon at *Rome, and appointed Bp. of York c. 732. In 735, on the advice of the Ven. *Bede (in a letter still surviving), he applied for the *pallium from Pope Gregory III. Owing to this increase of dignity and the harmonious relations with the king which ensued when his brother ascended the Northumbrian throne in 738, he was able to carry out many reforms. His most important work was the foundation of the cathedral school, where he himself taught theology and numbered *Alcuin among his pupils. Of the literary works connected with his name the best known is the compilation of canons known as the 'Excerptiones e dictis et canonibus SS. Patrum' (the Excerptiones Egberti) or in some MSS. as the 'De Jure Sacerdotali'; in its present form, however, this cannot be earlier than the 11th cent. The 'Dialogus Ecclesiasticae Institutionis', a treatise on various points of Church discipline, and the 'Poenitentiale' (or 'Confessionale'), which exists in Latin and the vernacular, have been much added to from later sources. The 'Pontificale', which also bears his name, is of great value as an early source for the history of the liturgy and of the English *Coronation Rite. A letter from St. *Boniface to Egbert has also survived.

The 'Excerptiones', 'Dialogus Ecclesiasticae Institutionis', and 'Poenitentiale' repr. from G. B. *Mansi, with introd., in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxix, 377–451; better text of the 'Poenitentiale', which more probably represents the genuine work of Egbert, repr. from F. W. H. Wasserschleben, Die Bussordnungen der abendländischen Kirche (1851), pp. 231–47, in A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 416–31, with important note on Egbert's works, pp. 413–416. Anglo-Saxon text of the 'Poenitentiale' ed. J. Raith (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, xiii; 1933) and R. Spindler (Leipzig, 1934). 'Pontificale' ed. W. Greenwell (Surtees Society, xxvii; 1853). The letter of Bede is pr. among his Opera Historica, ed. C. Plummer, i (Oxford, 1896), pp. 405–23, with notes, ii (1896), pp. 378–88; also in A. W. Haddan–W. Stubbs, op. cit., pp. 314–26; Eng. tr. in Dorothy Whitelock (ed.), English Historical Documents c. 500–1042 (English Historical Documents, ed. D. C. Douglas, i; 1955), pp. 735–45 (No. 170). The letter from St. Boniface is pr. in A. W. Haddan–W. Stubbs, op. cit., pp. 358–60; Eng. tr. in D. Whitelock, op. cit., p. 757 f. On the Excerptiones, P. Fournier–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, i (1931), pp. 316–20. On the Pontifical, F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 2211–20, s.v. 'Egbert (Pontifical de)', with full bibl. J. Raine in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 50–2, s.v. 'Egbert (6)'; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1476–8, s.v. 'Egbert (8)'.

EGBERT, St. (d. 729), Northumbrian hermit. He was a monk of *Lindisfarne who crossed to *Ireland in search of learning and sanctity, where during a plague he vowed that if his life were spared he would never go back to his native land. He was largely instrumental in organizing the evangelization of Germany and arranged the mission of St. *Willibrord and others. From 716 till his death he lived a life of great devotion at *Iona, where he persuaded the monks to observe the Roman method of calculating the date of Easter (see Paschal Controversy). He died on the very day that the feast was being so observed for the first time. Feast day, 24 Apr.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 4, 27; iv. 3, 26; v. 9 f., 22–4; notes in ed. by C. Plummer (2 vols., Oxford, 1896), esp. ii, pp. 258, 335–7. W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures for 1943; 1946), pp. 52 f., 271. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xvii (1889), p. 146 f., s.v., with reff.

EGEDE, HANS (1686–1758), *Lutheran missionary from Norway to Greenland, the 'Apostle of the Eskimos'. From 1707 to 1717 he ministered at Vaagen, in the Lofoten Islands. In 1717 he went to Bergen to get support for a scheme for a mission to Greenland and in 1721 he set out. After many difficulties, but much success, he returned to Copenhagen in 1736, where he founded a seminary for missionaries to Greenland. His work among the Eskimos was carried on after 1736 by his son, Paul Egede (1708–89).

H. M. Fenger, Bidrag til Hans Egedes og dem grønlandske Missions Historie 1720–60 (1879); L. T. A. Bobé, Hans Egede, Grønlands Missionær og Kolonisator (Copenhagen, 1941; Eng. tr., ib., 1952); O. G. Myklebust (ed.), Hans Egede. Studier til 200-Årsdagen for hans Død 5. November 1958 (Studies of the Egede Institute, viii; Oslo, 1958). Eve Garnett, To Greenland's Icy Mountains. The Story of Hans Egede, Explorer, Coloniser, Missionary (1968) [orig. written for children, but useful]. F. Belsheim in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 177–80, s.v., with bibl.

EGERIA. See Etheria.

EGERTON, FRANCIS HENRY (1756–1829), 8th Earl of Bridgewater and founder of the *Bridgewater Treatises. He was educated at Eton and *Christ Church, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1780. He became a Prebendary of Durham and collected other ecclesiastical preferments which he retained to the end of his life, performing his duties by proxy. In 1823 he succeeded his brother as Earl of Bridgewater. He spent the last years of his life in Paris. He was a great patron of learning and a good scholar, if eccentric. His own works, largely on family history, were mainly privately printed. Under the terms of his will he left to the President of the Royal Society £8,000, which financed the produc- of the Bridgewater Treatises, and he left to the British Museum his MSS. and £12,000, of which the interest was partly for the custodian and partly to augment his collection, which came to be known as the 'Egerton MSS.'. Money from this fund was used to purchase the '*Egerton Papyrus' (see following entry).

C. W. Sutton in D.N.B., xvii (1889), pp. 154–6.

EGERTON PAPYRUS. Two imperfect leaves and a scrap of papyrus in the British Museum (numbered 'Egerton Papyrus 2') containing passages from a Gk. writing akin to, but distinct from, the canonical Gospels. On palaeographical grounds the papyrus, which was part of a codex (not a roll), must be dated not later than c. A.D. 150, perhaps considerably earlier. It is thus (with the possible exception of the *Rylands St. John) the oldest known specimen of Christian writing. The surviving leaves contain four incomplete narratives, all relating to the period of Christ's Ministry. Their closeness to the canonical Gospels may imply that the author was acquainted with them; on the other hand, it seems likely that he had access to independent historical material derived from genuine tradition. The actual date of the 'unknown Gospel' is presumably considerably earlier than that of the codex, as there is no reason to suppose it is an autograph.

The text was first publd., with Eng. tr., by H. I. Bell–T. C. Skeat as Fragments of an Unknown Gospel and other early Christian Papyri (1935), with facsimiles. Idd., The New Gospel Fragments (more popular, with revised text, 1935). Eng. tr. also in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament ('1924' ['corrected repr.', 1953]), p. 567 f. 'Fr. Gr.' [i.e. G. *Dix, O.S.B.], 'Gospels in the Second Century' in Laudate, xiii (1935), pp. 97–109. C. H. *Dodd, 'A New Gospel' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xx (1936), pp. 56–92. G. Mayeda, Das Leben Jesu-Fragment Papyrus Egerton 2 und seine Stellung in der urchristlichen Literaturgeschichte (1946). H. I. Bell, 'The Gospel Fragments P. Egerton 2', in H.T.R., xlii (1949), pp. 53–63. J. Jeremias in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 58–60; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 94–97.

EGINHARD (c. 770–840), also 'Einhard', Frankish historian. He was educated at the school of *Fulda, and later became a member of *Charlemagne's palace school at Aachen and one of the Emperor's most trusted friends. On Charlemagne's death Einhard continued in the favour of his successor, Louis I, and was presented by him with the estates of Michelstadt and Mulinheim (Seligenstadt), where he retired c. 830 and founded a monastery to which the relics of Sts. Marcellinus and Peter were brought. He was the author of several works, of which the chief, the 'Life of Charlemagne', was one of the most remarkable biographies of the Middle Ages. It is modelled on the Vitae of *Suetonius, and thereby freed from the cramped annalistic methods of its contemporaries, and distinguished for its fresh and accurate presentation of the Emperor's character and rule. G. H. Pertz also assigns to him the authorship of the so-called 'Annales Einhardi', but this ascription is very doubtful.

Annales ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, i (1826), pp. 174–218, with introd. pp. 124–33. Translatio et Miracula Sanctorum Marcellini et Petri ed. G. Waitz, ib., xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 238–64; Eng. tr. by B. Wendell (Cambridge, Mass., 1926). Epistolae ed. K. Hampe in M.G.H., Epistolae, v (1899), pp. 105–45. For edd. and trr. of Life of Charlemagne, see bibl. to Charlemagne. F. Kurze, Einhard (1899); A. Kleinclausz, Éginhard (Annales de l'Université de Lyon, Sér. 3, fasc. 12; 1942), with full reff. F. L. Ganshof, 'Notes critiques sur Éginhard, biographe de Charlemagne' in Revue belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, iii (1924), pp. 725–58; id., 'Éginhard, biographe de Charlemagne' in Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance. Travaux et Documents, xiii (1951), pp. 217–30. J. Cahour, Petit Lexique pour l'étude de la "Vita Karoli" d'Éginhard (1928). M. Bondois, La Translation des saints Marcellin et Pierre. Étude sur Einhard et sa vie politique de 827 à 834 (Bibliothèque des Écoles des Hautes Études, clx; 1907). H. Beumann, 'Topos und Gedankengefüge bei Einhard' in Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, xxxiii (1951), pp. 337–50; id., 'Einhard und die karolingische Tradition im ottonischen Corvey' in Westfalen, xxx (1952), pp. 150–74, both repr. in his Ideengeschichtliche Studien zu Einhard und anderen Geschichtsschreibern des früheren Mittelalters (Darmstadt, 1962), pp. 1–39. W. Wattenbach–W. Levison, Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter, ii, ed. W. Levison–H. Löwe, (Weimar, 1953), pp. 266–80, with bibl.

EGYPT, Christianity in. See Coptic Church.

EGYPTIAN CHURCH ORDER, The. The early liturgical treatise which, as a result of the researches of Dom Hugh *Connolly and E. *Schwartz, is now commonly identified as the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St. *Hippolytus (q.v.). It was so described by H. Achelis (1891), when it was known to exist in *Ethiopic, *Coptic, and Arabic versions, 'merely to give it a name, which so far it lacks'.

EGYPTIANS, Gospel according to the. An apocryphal gospel, probably written in Egypt in the first half of the 2nd cent., which seems to have circulated widely since it was known to *Clement of Alexandria, *Theodotus (his *Gnostic adversary), and *Origen. Its standpoint is markedly ascetic (apparently *Encratite). Only a few quotations from it survive.

Clement Al., Strom., iii. 9 (63–6); iii. 13 (92); *Hippolytus, Ref., v. 7; *Epiphanius, Haer., lxii. 2. M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 10–12. Bardenhewer, pp. 521–4. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 109–117; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 166–78.

EGYPTIAN VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE. See Bohairic, Fayumic, Sahidic.

EHRLE, FRANZ (1845–1934), medievalist. A native of Isny in Württemberg, he was educated by the *Jesuits of Feldkirch and entered their novitiate at Gorheim in 1861. Driven from Germany by the *Kulturkampf, he lived from 1873 to 1877 at Ditton Hall, Lancs., where he was ordained priest in 1876. After travelling on the Continent for some years and examining a great number of medieval MSS., he went to Rome in 1880, where he remained till his death, except during the war years of 1915–19, which he spent at Feldkirch and later at Munich. In 1885 he started, in conjunction with H. *Denifle, the Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, and in 1890 published the first volume of his Historia Bibliothecae Romanorum Pontificum. From 1895 to 1914 he was prefect of the *Vatican Library, which he reorganized on modern lines, attaching to it a reference library and a department for the restoration of MSS. He was created cardinal in 1922. In 1924, on the occasion of his 80th birthday, he was presented with the 5 vols. of Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, containing essays by many scholars of European reputation on a large variety of subjects. His Der Sentenzenkommentar Peters von Candia (1924) was an important study in 14th cent. Scholasticism and his *I più antichi statuti della facoltà teologica dell'Università di Bologna (1932) important for its introduction. With Denifle, Ehrle was the founder of the scientific study of the history of Scholasticism.

The 'Album' appended to the Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle (S.T., xxxvii–xlii; 1924) includes 'Cenni biografici' (pp. 12–16) and list of his publications to date. A. Pelzer in R.H.E., xxxi (1935), p. 636 f., gives reff. to main obituary appreciations and other works concerning his life. M. *Grabmann, 'Heinrich Denifle O.P. und Kardinal Franz Ehrle S.J. Ein nachträgliches Gedenken zu ihrem hundertsten Geburtstag' in Philosophisches Jahrbuch, lvi (1946), pp. 9–26, esp. pp. 16–26, with bibl. p. 16. F. Pelster, S.J., 'Franz Kardinal Ehrle und seine Verdienste um die Geschichte der Scholastik' appended to his edition of Ehrle's commentary on the encyclical Aeterni Patris* (Sussidi Eruditi, vi; 1954), pp. 191–202. M. D. Knowles, 'Denifle and Ehrle' in History, liv (1969), pp. 1–12.

EICHHORN, JOHANN GOTTFRIED (1752–1827), Biblical scholar and orientalist. He studied at Göttingen (1770), and became professor of oriental languages at Jena in 1775. From 1788 he was professor of philosophy at Göttingen. He was one of the first commentators to make a scientific comparison between the Biblical books and other Semitic writings. He was also among the earliest critics to divide *Genesis between the 'Jehovist' and 'Elohist' sources, and to distinguish the priestly law in *Exodus–*Leviticus–*Numbers from the popular code in *Deuteronomy. His most important works include his Einleitung ins Alte Testament (3 vols., 1780–3); Einleitung in die apokryphischen Bücher des AT (1795); Einleitung in das NT (2 vols., 1804–12). His work, though inaccurate, was popular and did much to encourage Biblical study and criticism.

H. C. A. Eichstaedt, Oratio de Jo. Godofredo Eichhornio (Jena [1827]). E. Bertheau–C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 234–7.

EIGHTEEN BENEDICTIONS, The (Heb. Shemoneh 'Esreh, 'eighteen'; also Tephillah, 'prayer', or 'Amidah, 'standing'). A group of prayers, now 19, largely made up of Biblical phrases, which are recited on week-days at each of the three services of the Jewish synagogue. The first three, which are benedictions, and the last three, which are thanksgivings, are used also on *Sabbaths, festivals, and the Day of *Atonement, but the middle group consisting of petitions is then replaced by other prayers. Acc. to the *Talmud, they go back to 'the first wise men' or (acc. to another passage) to '120 elders, among these a number of prophets'. They were revised, apparently to preclude their use by Jewish-Christians and *Gnostics, by Simeon ha-Pakoli in the time of Gamaliel II (c. 80–120). Their contents date mainly from pre-Christian times; but apparently they were for long not written down and varied in number and wording, esp. in the middle section.

The current text is in the 'Morning Service' in S. Singer, The Authorised Daily Prayer Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire (1935), pp. 94b–94k. They are printed also, with the Talmudic text, in C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue upon the Divine Office (1944), pp. 114–25. K. G. Kuhn, Achtzehngebet und Vaterunser und der Reim (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testamentum, i; 1950).

EIKON BASILIKE, 'The Portraiture of His Sacred Majesty in His Solitudes and Sufferings'. An influential royalist work, secretly published just before the death of *Charles I in 1649, and purporting to be the King's own work. It has long been attributed to J. *Gauden, later Bp. of Exeter; he prob. created the book, using genuine materials written, and later corrected, by the King. It provoked a reply in John *Milton's Eikonoklastes (1649).

Text ed., with introd., by P. A. Knachel (New York, 1966). C. Wordsworth, Who Wrote ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ*?* (1824), and later writings by the same author; H. J. Todd, Bishop Gauden, the Author of Εἰκὼν βασιλική (1829). The fullest treatment is by F. F. Madan, A New Bibliography of the Eikon Basilike of King Charles I with a Note on the Authorship (Oxford Bibliographical Society, N.S., iii, for 1949; 1950).

EILETON (Gk. εἰλητόν; lit. 'something wrapped' or 'wound'). In the E. Church, a silk cloth spread on the altar during the Liturgy. It is the real counterpart of the W. *corporal, though the functions of the latter are now partly filled by the *antiminsion. It is interpreted as symbolizing the linen cloth wrapped around Christ's head during His entombment.

EINHARD. See Eginhard.

EINSIEDELN, *Benedictine abbey and place of pilgrimage in Switzerland. Previously the dwelling-place of the hermit, St. *Meinrad (q.v.), the abbey was founded by St. Benno, Bp. of Metz, and Eberhard in 937. Since 1350 it has been the recognized National Sanctuary of the Swiss Confederation. The present church is a fine baroque building of enormous dimensions, and in the abbey library is a large collection of valuable MSS.

'Annales Einsidlenses' ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iii (1839), pp. 137–49. Calendar of docc. by G. Morel, O.S.B., Die Regesten der Benedictiner-Abtei Einsiedeln (Regesten der Archive in der schweizerischen Eidgenossenschaft ed. T. v. Mohr, i; Chur, 1848). Profession book ed. R. Henggeler, O.S.B. (Einsiedeln, 1934). G. Meier, O.S.B., Catalogus Codicum Manuscriptorum qui in Bibliotheca Monasterii Einsidlensis O.S.B. servantur (1899). O. Ringholz, O.S.B., Geschichte des fürstlichen Benediktinerstiftes U.L.F. von Einsiedeln, seiner Wallfahrt, Propsteien, Pfarreien und übrigen Besitzungen, vol. i (no more published. Einsiedeln, 1904). Id., Die Kulturarbeit des Stiftes Einsiedeln (ib., 1913). R. Henggeler, O.S.B., Das Stift Einsiedeln und die französische Revolution. Ein Beitrag zur Einsiedler Klostergeschichte von 1730–1808 (ib., 1924). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1034–9. T. Schwegler, O.S.B., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1866–8, s.v. 'Santissima Vergine Maria di Einsiedeln'; R. Henggeler, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xv (1963). cols. 95–97, s.v., both with further bibl. See also works cited under Meinrad, St.

EKPHONESIS. See Ecphonesis.

EKTHESIS. See Ecthesis.

ELDAD AND MODAD, Book of. An apocryphal book, forged on the basis of Num. 11. 26–9. Though it no longer survives, it was quoted by *Hermas (Vis. 2. 3) and perhaps also (J. B. *Lightfoot) by *Clement of Rome (1 Clem. 23. 3 f.; cf. also '2 Clem.' 11. 2 f.).

See comm. to Numbers, cited s.v., esp. L. E. Binns (West. Comm., 1927), p. 71. J. B. Lightfoot (ed.), S. Clement of Rome. The Two Epistles to the Corinthians (1869), notes on pp. 91 f. and 205 f. J. T. Marshall in H.D.B., i (1898), p. 676, s.v.

ELDER. A Church officer in the *Presbyterian Church. Elders are of two kinds: (1) 'Teaching elders', whose function is pastoral; (2) 'Ruling elders', i.e. laymen set apart by ordination who assist the pastor in the administration and government of the Church. Biblical support for the distinction was found by J. *Calvin and others in 1 Tim. 5. 17. When the word is used without further specification, the latter class is commonly meant.

For the history of the office in the early Church, see Presbyter.

ELECTION (Gk. ἐκλογή, 'choice'). In the vocabulary of theology, an act of the Divine Will exercising itself on creatures, among which it chooses some in preference to others. In the OT the Divine election bears esp. on Israel, the 'Chosen People', and among them in particular on those who do the will of God and remain faithful in time of trial. In the NT the place of the Old Israel is taken by the members of the new Christian community. The number of the elect is small (Mt. 22. 14), but Satan cannot prevail against them and they will be gathered together 'from the uttermost part of the earth' (Mk. 13. 22 and 27) on the Last Day. In St. Paul the term 'election' usually signifies vocation acc. to the Divine predilection, e.g. in Rom. 9. 11 and 11. 5, 7, 28, and 1 Thess. 1. 4. In the teaching of the Fathers and Schoolmen the term plays an important part in connexion with *Predestination (q.v.). St. *Augustine expounds at length the belief that gratuitous predestination to eternal salvation presupposes an act of election on the part of God. Though the Fathers frequently use the terms 'election' and 'predestination' without distinction, some later theologians, e.g. St. *Thomas Aquinas, give 'election', as an act of the will, a logical priority over predestination, as an act of the intelligence, because God must first will the end, viz. salvation, for a creature, i.e. elect it, before ordaining it towards this end, i.e. predestining it. Most *Jesuit theologians, however, reject the Thomist distinction and use the terms 'election' and 'predestination' indifferently, as was done by the Fathers.

The doctrine of election filled a central place in the Institutes* of J. *Calvin, who affirmed that certain persons are elected by God wholly without relation to faith or works. This belief was everywhere held by Calvinist theologians till questioned by the school of *Arminius, for whom election was God's choice of those who believe and persevere by grace in faith and works. An even wider interpretation was given to it in the works of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, who maintained that election includes all humanity, but that, on earth, only certain men and women are, through historical circumstances, elect.

It is to be observed that, while a natural consequence of belief in election might be expected to be to weaken or destroy moral effort, history in fact does not bear out this deduction, even in the case of those holding an extreme form of the doctrine.

ELEPHANTINE PAPYRI, The. A collection of *Aramaic documents from the reigns of Xerxes, Artaxerxes I, and Darius II (485–404 B.C.), found in 1904–8 on the site of an ancient Jewish military colony which had settled at Elephantine in the far south of Upper Egypt some time before the conquest of Egypt by the Persians. The papyri throw valuable light on the organization, law, and religious beliefs and practices of the colony, and indirectly of the Jewish *Diaspora in the 5th cent. B.C. They provide evidence for the existence of a syncretistic form of Judaism which is in sharp contrast with the orthodox Judaism of *Ezra and *Nehemiah.

Plates, with Eng. tr. and notes, ed. A. H. Sayce–A. E. Cowley, Aramaic Papyri Discovered at Assuan (1906). Crit. edd. of the text by E. Sachau, Aramäische Papyrus und Ostraka aus einer jüdischen Militär-Kolonie zu Elephantine (1911, with Germ. tr. and notes), and, with Eng. tr. and full notes, by A. [E.] Cowley, Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. (1923). Separate Eng. tr. by A. [E.] Cowley, Jewish Documents of the Time of Ezra (Translations of Early Documents, Series I, Palestinian Jewish Texts (Pre-Rabbinic), 1919). Further papyri from Elephantine, purchased in 1893 by Charles Edwin Wilbour (d. 1896) which remained unknown until they were bequeathed by his daughter to the Brooklyn Museum in 1947, ed., with Eng. tr. and useful introd., by E. G. Kraeling, The Brooklyn Museum Aramaic Papyri. New Documents of the Fifth Century B.C. from the Jewish Colony at Elephantine (New Haven–London, 1953). N. Peters, Die jüdische Gemeinde von Elephantine-Syene und ihr Tempel im 5. Jahrhundert vor Christi Geburt (1910); E. Meyer, Der Papyrusfund von Elephantine (1912); A. van Hoonacker, Communauté judéo-araméenne à Éléphantine, en Égypte, aux VIe et Ve siècles av. J.-C. (SchweichL ectures for 1914; 1915). A. Vincent, La Religion des Judéo-Araméens d'Éléphantine (1937). L. Hennequin in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 972–82, s.v. 'Éléphantine, IV. Les Papyrus'.

ELEVATION, The. At the Eucharist, the lifting of the sacred elements in turn by the celebrant immediately after each species has been consecrated. Its purpose is both to symbolize their offering to the Father and to exhibit them for adoration. The practice of elevating the Host apparently originated in France early in the 13th cent., perhaps in order to rebut the teaching of certain theologians that the consecration of the bread did not take place until after the words of consecration had also been pronounced over the wine. The elevation of the chalice was added later. In the *Roman, *Ambrosian, and *Mozarabic rites there is a second elevation (the so-called 'lesser elevation') at the end of the *Canon.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Elevation' in The Tablet, cx (1907), pp. 603–5, 643–5, 684–6. E. Dumoutet, Le Désir de voir l'hostie et les origines de la dévotion au saint sacrement (1926). P. Browe, S.J., 'Die Elevation in der Messe' in Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft, ix (1929), pp. 20–66; id., Die Verehrung der Eucharistie im Mittelalter (1933), ch. 2, pp. 26–69. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., 'The Moment of Consecration and the Elevation of the Host' in Mediaeval Studies, vi (1944), pp. 121–50, with full reff.; id., 'The Date of the Parisian Decree on the Elevation of the Host', ib., viii (1946), pp. 87–96. H. B. Meyer, S.J., 'Die Elevation im deutschen Mittelalter und bei Luther' in Z.K.T., lxxxv (1963), pp. 162–217. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., v (1909), p. 380 f., s.v.

ELEVEN THOUSAND VIRGINS. See Ursula, St.

ELGAR, EDWARD (1857–1934), musician. Succeeding his father as organist of St. George's RC church, Worcester, he rose to fame as a composer of choral-orchestral music. He was professor of music at Birmingham university from 1905 to 1908, and in 1929 became Master of the King's Music. Among his chief works of a religious kind are his setting of J. H. *Newman's 'Dream of *Gerontius' (1900), and his oratorios, 'The Apostles' (1903) and 'The Kingdom' (1906).

Letters . . . and Other Writings, selected, edited and annotated by P. M. Young (1956); Letters to Nimrod. Edward Elgar to August Jaeger 1897–1908, ed. id. (1965). B. Maine, Elgar, his Life and Works (2 vols., 1933); P. M. Young, Elgar O.M. A Study of a Musician (1955). Other studies by E. Newman (London, 1906), J. F. Porte (ib., 1921 and 1933), R. J. Buckley (ib., 1935), W. H. Reed (ib., 1936 and 1939), Mrs. R. Powell (ib., 1937), T. F. Dunhill (ib., 1938), Diana M. McVeach (ib., 1955), and M. Kennedy (ib., 1968). L. B. M. Dyer, Music by British Composers. A Series of Complete Catalogues, No. 2, Sir Edward Elgar [1931].

EL GRECO (1541–1614), properly Domenico Theotocopuli, religious painter. A native of Crete, he went to Italy some time before 1570 and prob. studied under *Titian. His works from this period include two paintings of the 'Healing of the Blind' and four of the 'Purification of the Temple'. By 1577 he was in Toledo, where he seems to have spent the rest of his life. His 'Martyrdom of St. Maurice', commissioned for the Escurial, failed to please *Philip II, and El Greco thenceforward worked mainly for churches and religious houses. The works of his Spanish period are marked increasingly by a quality of mysticism as well as by personal idiosyncrasies. Formal modelling is abandoned as human forms and facial expressions are exaggerated and even distorted to produce an emotional rather than a literal likeness. In colour, too, his elongated sinuous forms are matched by the startling effects of his cold, ashen hues, often painted on to a dark background. His major works include 'The Disrobing of Christ' in the sacristy of Santo Domingo, Toledo, 'The Burial of Count Orgaz' for the church of Santo Tomé, Toledo, and the altar-pieces for the Hospital of San Juan Bautista outside Toledo. He was also responsible for the entire scheme of decoration in the Capilla Mayor of the Hospital de la Caridad, Illescas, where he probably executed the sculpture as well as the painting.

Reproductions of his works with introd. by L. Goldschreiber (Phaidon Press, London, 1938) and with introd. by L. Bronstein (New York and London, 1951, and London, 1967). M. B. Cossío, El Greco (3 vols., Madrid, 1908); A. L. Mayer, Dominico Theotocopuli El Greco (Munich, 1926). J. F. Willumsen, La Jeunesse du peintre El Greco (2 vols., 1927); J. C. Aznar, Dominico Greco (2 vols., Madrid, 1950); H. E. Wethey, El Greco and his School (2 vols., Princeton, 1962), with full reff.

ELIAS. See Elijah.

ELIAS OF CORTONA (c. 1180–1253), General of the *Franciscan Order. A native of *Assisi and one of the earliest of the companions of St. *Francis, he soon rose to prominence. In 1219 he became first Provincial of Syria, and in 1221 Vicar-General of the order. On Francis' death (1226) he was mainly instrumental in the erection of the basilica at Assisi as a burial-place for the saint. In 1232 he became the third General of the order, but his government was marked by repeated crises, as he acted in a despotic manner towards all those, and esp. the '*Spiritual Franciscans', who opposed his princely way of life. In 1239 he was deposed from his office by Pope *Gregory IX. Thenceforth he supported the Emp. *Frederick II in his anti-Papal policy, and later was excommunicated and expelled from the order. For the small body of friars who followed him, he erected a monastery at Cortona. On his deathbed he is said to have made his submission to the Pope. A man of remarkable gifts, he was possessed of a character which was a strange combination of piety and pride.

His 'Epistola Encyclica de Transitu S. Francisci . . . ad omnes Provincias Ordinis Missa', pr. in Analecta Franciscana, x (1941), pp. 525–8. I. Affò, O.F.M., Vita di Frate Elia, ministro generale de' Francescani (Parma, 1783). E. Lempp, Frère Élie de Cortone. Étude biographique (1901). P. *Sabatier, Examen de la vie de Frère Élie du Speculum Vitae, suivi de trois fragments inédits (Opuscules de Critique historique, xi; 1904). D. Sparacio, Fra Elia compagno, vicario e successore di S. Francesco Serafico (ed. 2, 1923). S. Attal, Frate Elias compagno di Francesco (1936; revised ed., Geneva, 1953). L. Mirri, 'Frate Elia da Cortona' in Miscellanea Francescana, xxxi (1931), pp. 89–95, 175–87, and 233–43. Rosalind B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government. Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 3–177. P. Robinson, O.F.M., in C.E., v (1909), pp. 382–5, and L. di Fonzo, O.F.M. Conv., in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 167–83, s.v. 'Élie (12) d'Assise', both with reff. to primary sources.

ELIGIUS, St. (c. 590–660), Fr. 'Éloi', Bp. of Noyon and patron saint of metalworkers. He was born at Chaptelat near Limoges. Through his skill in working in precious metals, he was given positions at the courts of the Frankish kings, Clothaire II (d. 629), who made him Master of the Mint at Marseilles, and his son Dagobert I (d. 639), whose chief councillor he became. Under Dagobert he was instrumental in ransoming captives, founding monasteries, and building churches. In 641 he was consecrated Bp. of Noyon (on the same day as his close friend St. *Ouen was consecrated Abp. of Rouen) and became a zealous pastor, evangelizing Flanders, esp. the territories round Antwerp, Ghent, and Courtrai. Two genuine homilies of St. Eligius survive, one attacking superstition and the other on the Last Judgement. The fourteen other homilies attributed to him are of doubtful authenticity. Feast day, 1 Dec.

'Vita Eligii Episcopi Noviomagensis', pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxvii, 481–594; crit. ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iv (1902), pp. 634–761. His letter to Pope Desiderius in J. P. Migne, op. cit., 259; also ed. by W. Arndt in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), p. 206. The Homilies attributed to him are printed in J. P. Migne, op. cit., 593–654. E. Vacandard, 'Les Homélies attribuées à saint Éloi' in R.Q.H., lxiv (1898), pp. 471–80; F. Plaine, O.S.B., 'Nouvelles Remarques sur les homélies attribuées à saint Éloi', ib., lxv (1899), pp. 235–42; E. Vacandard, 'Réponse aux remarques de Dom Plaine', ib., pp. 243–55. P. Parsy, Saint Éloi, 590–659 ('Les Saints', 1907); A. Kuyle, Sint Eloy (Utrecht, 1955). E. Vacandard in D.T.C., iv (1908), cols. 340–9, incl. further bibl.

ELIJAH (Gk. form, 'Elias') (9th cent. B.C.). Traditionally held to be the greatest Hebrew prophet. He maintained the ascendancy of the worship of Jehovah in the face of Canaanite and Phoenician cults (1 Kgs. 18) and upheld the claims of moral uprightness and social justice (1 Kgs. 21). With *Enoch he shared the glory of not seeing death but of translation into heaven (2 Kgs. 2. 1–18); and such was the impression which he made on the people that his return was held to be a necessary prelude to the deliverance and restoration of Israel (Mal. 4. 5 f.). In the NT (e.g. Mk. 9. 4) he appears as the typical representative of the OT prophets.

The main material is to be found in comm. on Kings, cited s.v. Modern works devoted to Elijah include Élie le prophète (Études Carmélitaines, 2 vols., 1956) and G. Fohrer, Elia (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xxxi; 1957; ed. 2, ib., liii; 1968). H. H. Rowley, 'Elijah on Mount Carmel' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xliii (1961), pp. 190–219.

ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS (1888–1965), poet and critic. Born in St. Louis, Missouri, he was educated at the Smith Academy, St. Louis, Harvard (1906–9 and again 1911–13), the *Sorbonne (1910–11) and Merton College, Oxford (1914–15). He married in 1915, and after his first wife's death in 1947 he married again, in 1957. He taught for a short time in Highgate Grammar School, London, and worked for Lloyds Bank; and from this period his main interests appear to have been literary. Assistant editor of The Egoist from 1917 to 1919 and a frequent contributor to The Athenæum, in 1923 he became editor of The Criterion, which he made a leading organ of literary expression until it ceased in 1939. In 1925 he joined the board of Faber, the publisher. He was appointed Clark lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge, for 1926, and Charles Norton Professor of Poetry at Harvard from 1932 to 1933. He was elected President of the Classical Association in 1943 and in 1948 invested with the Order of Merit and awarded the Nobel Prize for literature.

Brought up in the American *Unitarian tradition, Eliot passed through a period of agnosticism reflected in his earlier poetry, e.g. Prufrock (1917) and Poems 1920 (1920). The expression of his sense of the emptiness of life reached its climax in The Waste Land (1922) and is also seen in The Hollow Men (1925). Shortly afterwards he adopted an *Anglo-Catholic position apparent in Ash Wednesday (1930) and such religious verse as the play Murder in the Cathedral (1935; written for the *Canterbury Festival of 1935). In all his poetry, incl. his inquiry into the nature of time and experience in Four Quartets (1944), Eliot broke with tradition and employed a complicated poetic technique characterized by an extreme form of compression by means of allusion, the juxtaposition of contrasting ideas and the indirect communication of meaning by suggestion. His work is marked by a strong sense of tradition in thought and is esp. influenced by the works of the great mystics, such as St. *John of the Cross, by *Dante, the 17th cent. *Metaphysical Poets and the 19th cent. French symbolists. His literary criticism appears in several collections such as The Sacred Wood. Essays on Poetry and Criticism (1920), Selected Essays (1932; ed. 3, enlarged, 1951), and To Criticize the Critic (1965). His dramatic work is represented by The Family Reunion (1939), The Cocktail Party (1950), and The Elder Statesman (1959). The Idea of a Christian Society (1939) and Notes towards the Definition of Culture (1948) contain his religious and social reflections.

Complete Poems and Plays (1969). F. O. Matthiesen, The Achievement of T. S. Eliot. An Essay on the Nature of Poetry (1935; ed. 3, 1958); B. Rajan (ed.), T. S. Eliot. A Study of his Writings by Several Hands (1947); R. March and Tambimuttu (compilers), T. S. Eliot. A Symposium (1948); L. Unger (ed.), T. S. Eliot. A Selected Critique (New York–Toronto, 1948); id., T. S. Eliot. Moments and Patterns (Minneapolis–London, 1966); Helen [L.] Gardner, The Art of T. S. Eliot (1949); K. Smidt, Poetry and Belief in the Work of T. S. Eliot (Skrifter utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akedemi i Oslo, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse 1949, No. 1; revised ed. London, 1961); E. Drew, T. S. Eliot. The Design of his Poetry (1950); D. E. S. Maxwell, The Poetry of T. S. Eliot (1952); G. Williamson, A Reader's Guide to T. S. Eliot (1955; ed. 2, 1967); G. [C.] Smith, Jr., T. S. Eliot's Poetry and Plays. A Study in Sources and Meaning (Chicago, 1956); N. Braybrooke (ed.), T. S. Eliot. A Symposium for his Seventieth Birthday (1958); H. Kenner, The Invisible Poet (New York, 1959; London, 1960); H. Howarth, Notes on Some Figures Behind T. S. Eliot (1965); E. M. Browne, The Making of T. S. Eliot's Plays (Cambridge, 1969). Life by R. Sencourt, ed. D. Adamson (London 1971). D. Gallup, T. S. Eliot, A Bibliography (1952). R. Ellmann in D.N.B., 1961–1970, pp. 325–9.

ELIPANDUS (c. 718–802), Abp. of Toledo. He was the originator and chief exponent of the *Adoptianist heresy in Spain, though his capacities as a theologian were much inferior to those of his supporter, *Felix of Urgel. He seems to have been led to his theological position by opposition to a form of *Sabellianism which in the person of *Migetius he had condemned at a council at Seville in 782. Though his doctrines were proscribed as heretical in synods at Ratisbon (792), Frankfurt (794), Rome (798), and Aachen (800), the Arab domination enabled him to retain possession of his see till his death. A few of his letters survive.

The chief sources of Elipandus's doctrine are his letters, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xcvi, 859–82, and the attacks of Beatus of Liebana and Etherius of Osma, whose letter to Elipandus is pr. ib., 893–1030. J. F. Rivera, Elipando de Toledo. Nueva aportación a los estudios mozárabes (Toledo, 1940), with bibl. Id. in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 204–14, s.v.

ELISHA (Gk. form, 'Eliseus') (9th cent. B.C.), Hebrew prophet and the successor of *Elijah. Various stories of his life are told in 1 Kgs. 19–2 Kgs. 13, but he had not the individuality or strength of character of his predecessor. He appears as the head of a band of enthusiasts called the 'sons of the prophets'.

ELIZABETH, St. The mother of *John the Baptist and 'cousin' (Lk. 1. 36) of the BVM. The visit of the Blessed Virgin to her shortly before the birth of Christ is commemorated in the Feast of the *Visitation. According to a few MSS. of the NT, it was she, and not Mary, who spoke the words called the '*Magnificat'. Feast day in the W., 5 Nov.; in the E., 8 Nov.

ELIZABETH, St., of Hungary (also known as Elizabeth of Thuringia) (1207–31). She is to be distinguished from Elizabeth of Hungary, the *Dominican nun (1293–1337). The daughter of King Andrew II of Hungary, she was born at Pressburg. In 1211, with a view to a future marriage for political purposes, she was sent to Thuringia and did not again leave Germany; and in 1221 she married Ludwig IV, the Landgrave of Thuringia. From an early age she showed a desire for the ascetic life, and, esp. in the first years after her early marriage, came under the influence of the *Franciscans, who had recently arrived in Germany. On her husband's death on the *Crusade in 1227, she was driven from the court by his brother, Henry Raspe, on the pretext that her charities were exhausting the state finances, and this determined her to renounce the world completely. In 1228 she settled at Marburg, where she came under the absolute rule of *Conrad of Marburg, who had been her spiritual director since 1225. Under his orders, which seem to have been quite unsuited to Elizabeth's devout and delicate nature, she gave up her children, submitted to physical chastisement at his hands, and amid a life of great austerity, spent all her energies in visiting and caring for the sick and poor. She was canonized in 1235. The fine Gothic Elizabethskirche at Marburg was built to enshrine her relics, where they remained till removed by *Philip of Hesse in 1539. Feast day, 17 (formerly 19, and so in the American BCP, 1979) Nov.

Early lives by Theodoric of Apolda, O.P. (b. 1228), ed. by H. Canisius, Antiquae Lectiones, v (Ingolstadt, 1604), pp. 147–217; by *Caesarius of Heisterbach in a letter to Gregory XI, ed. by A. Huyskens in Annalen des historischen Vereins für den Niederrhein, lxxxvi (1908), pp. 1–59; by Conrad of Marburg, ed. by id., Quellenschriften zur Geschichte der hl. Elisabeth Landgräfin von Thüringen (1908), pp. 110–40; this last work includes a full discussion of sources. Id. (ed.), Der sog. Libellus de dictis Quattuor Ancillarum S. Elisabeth Confectus (1911). Further anonymous life ed. by D. Henniges, O.F.M., in A.F.H., ii (1909), pp. 240–68. K. Wenck, 'Quellenuntersuchungen und Texte zur Geschichte der heiligen Elisabeth: I. Über die Dicta Quatuor Ancillarum Sanctae Elisabeth' in N.A., xxxiv (1908), pp. 427–502. P. Braun, Der Beichtvater der heiligen Elisabeth und deutsche Inquisitor Konrad von Marburg (1909). Modern lives by C. R. F. *Montalembert (Paris, 1836; Eng. tr., 1904), C. A. Jones (London, [1873]), E. Horn (Paris, 1902), W. Canton (London [1913]), E. Busse-Wilson (Munich, 1931), and Jeanne Ancelet-Hustache (Paris, 1946; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1963). Further short studies by H. Mielke (Rostock, 1888), C. Boerner in N.A., xiii (1888), pp. 433–515, and a series of articles by S. Elsner, F. Boros, I. Takacs, M. Bihl, and G. Haselbeck, all O.F.M., in Franziskanische Studien, xviii (1931), pp. 205–308. W. Maurer, 'Zum Verständnis der heiligen Elisabeth von Thüringen' in Z.K.G., lxv (1953–4), pp. 16–64. F. Schmoll, Zur Ikonographie der heiligen Elisabeth im 13. bis 16. Jahrhundert (1914). Jeanne Ancelet-Hustache in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 225–8, s.v. 'Élisabeth, 10 (Sainte) de Thuringe'.

ELIZABETH I (1533–1603), Queen of England from 1558. She was the daughter of *Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn. Though apparently illegitimate through the invalidity of the King's marriage both by canon and civil law, she was placed next in succession after *Edward and *Mary by Act of Parliament. Together with Prince Edward she was given a careful education at Hatfield House. When Edward became king (1547) she was left under the care of Catherine Parr and was involved in an unpleasant affair with Catherine's fourth husband, Lord Seymour, in which she behaved with great prudence. During the reign of Mary (1553–8) she conformed outwardly to Catholicism. Though suffering imprisonment after the plot of Thomas Wyatt in 1554, she succeeded in clearing herself of suspicion and was readmitted to court at the end of the year. Until Mary's death she lived mostly in retirement at Hatfield, continuing her studies with great success under the guidance of the accomplished Roger Ascham.

On her accession one of her main difficulties was the religious question. Devoid of strong convictions, she sought to solve it acc. to political expediency. The country as a whole was still predominantly Catholic, though with a strong *Calvinistic undercurrent. Elizabeth disliked the former because it denied her legitimacy, and the latter because it abolished episcopacy, which she held to be essential for the safety of kings. She therefore distrusted both Calvinists and Catholics and aimed at a compromise between the *Lutheran political theory, with its emphasis on the prerogatives of the temporal ruler, and the episcopal organization of Catholicism, many of whose institutions, such as the celibacy of the clergy and the use of crucifixes and statues, she wished to retain. All the bishops, however, refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and declined to take part in the coronation, a ceremony which was eventually performed by the Bp. of *Carlisle, Owen Oglethorpe. But in the country changes were made slowly, much of the old ritual was retained, the doctrine of the *Real Presence was not actually denied, and, as the majority of parish priests were still Catholic, the old and the new rites were often celebrated side by side. The Second (1552) Prayer Book of Edward VI was reissued (1559) with some significant minor changes designed to remove offence to RCs. Owing to the many changes since the reign of Henry VIII Church life in general had become chaotic, but after M. *Parker's appointment as Abp. of Canterbury (1559) uniformity began gradually to be restored. Parker's policy, which both in doctrinal and liturgical questions sought to steer a middle course, resulted in the *Thirty-Nine Articles and the '*Advertisements'. Though these documents were more Calvinistic than Elizabeth would have wished, the situation could hardly have been otherwise, as the government had to rely for support more and more on the Protestant party. The climax was reached when, in 1570, *Pius V excommunicated Elizabeth and released her subjects from their allegiance. This step was followed by the restoration of Article 29 (withdrawn in 1563 at the last moment), the proscription of the Mass, and the increasing persecution of Catholics. In 1587, under the menace of the Spanish invasion, the Queen ordered the execution of her cousin, *Mary Stuart, after 19 years of imprisonment, fearing that she might become a rallying centre for her disaffected RC subjects. The defeat of the Armada (1588) removed the Spanish peril, and at the same time gave a powerful impetus to the new nationalism. It is largely through her genius that England became the foremost Protestant power in Europe to which Continental Protestantism was to look for support during the centuries to come.

The principal primary material for the reign is to be found in the Calendars of the State Papers, Domestic and Foreign. Useful collections of docc. repr. in G. W. Prothero (ed.), Select Statutes and other Constitutional Documents Illustrative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I (1894; ed. 4, 1913, pp. 1–249), and J. R. Tanner (ed.), Tudor Constitutional Documents, A.D. 1485–1603 (1922). G. B. Harrison (ed.), The Letters of Queen Elizabeth (1935, with reff. to earlier collections). Collection of documents in Claire Cross, The Royal Supremacy in the Elizabethan Church (1969). The most important modern studies are those by E. S. Beesley ('Twelve English Statesmen', London, 1892), M. *Creighton (ib., 1896), J. E. Neale (ib., 1934), J. Hurstfield ('Teach Yourself History', 1960; Pelican, 1971), and N. Williams (London, 1967). Other studies by M. Wilson (ib., 1932), E. Thane (ib., 1933), T. Maynard (ib., 1943), M. Waldman (ib., 1952), and [M.] Elizabeth [H.] Jenkins (London, 1958). F. Chamberlin, The Private Character of Queen Elizabeth (1921). J. B. Black, The Reign of Queen Elizabeth, 1558–1603 (Oxford History of England, viii; 1936; ed. 2, 1959), with bibl. A. L. Rowse, The England of Elizabeth (1950). J. E. Neale, Elizabeth I and her Parliaments 1559–1581 (1953); id., Elizabeth I and her Parliaments 1584–1601 (1957). W. P. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation. The Struggle for a Stable Settlement of Religion (Cambridge, 1968).

ELKESAITES. A Jewish Christian sect which arose c. A.D. 100 in the country E. of the *Jordan. They took their name from their sacred writing, the 'Book of Elkesai', which professed to contain the revelation given to Elkesai ('sacred power') by an angel 96 miles high. They held beliefs similar to those of the *Ebionites, insisting on a very strict observance of the rites and teaching of the Mosaic Law, rejecting sacrifices and certain Biblical books, esp. the Pauline Epistles, maintaining a *Docetic view of the Person of Christ, and placing great emphasis on the redemptive nature of Baptism. Their ethical and social teaching was ascetic in character. Almost all our knowledge of them derives from references in St. *Hippolytus' Philosophumena (ix. 13–17; x. 29) and St. *Epiphanius's Haereses (xix; xxx. 17; liii).

Fragg. of 'Book of Elkesai' collected by A. *Hilgenfeld in Novum Testamentum extra Canonem Receptum, fasc. iii (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 153–67. W. Brandt, Elchasai. Ein Religionsstifter und sein Werk (1912). H. Waitz, 'Das Buch des Elchasai, das heilige Buch der judenchristlichen Sekte der Sobiai' in Harnack-Ehrung. Beiträge zur Kirchengeschichte ihrem Lehrer Adolf Harnack zu seinem siebzigsten Geburtstage (7. Mai 1921) dargebracht (Leipzig, 1921), pp. 87–104. J. Thomas, Le Mouvement baptiste en Palestine et Syrie (Gembloux, 1935), esp. pp. 140–56. A. Heinrichs–L. Koenen, 'Mani und die Elchasaiten' in Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik, v (1970), pp. 141–60. J. Irmscher in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 529–32; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 745–50. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 95–8; G. Bareille in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 2233–9, s.v. 'Elcésaïtes'.

ELLERTON, JOHN (1826–93), English hymn-writer. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1850 and held a succession of parochial appointments. He is esp. remembered for his many hymns, both original compositions and translations, among them being 'The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended', 'Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise', and 'O Strength and Stay, upholding all creation'.

H. Housman, John Ellerton. Being a Collection of his Writings on Hymnology together with a sketch of his Life and Works (1896; life, pp. 15–181).

ELLICOTT, CHARLES JOHN (1819–1905), English divine. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow (1845), he subsequently occupied the chair of divinity at King's College, London (1858–61), and the Hulsean professorship at Cambridge (1860–1). In 1861 he became Dean of *Exeter and two years later Bp. of *Gloucester and Bristol. On the division of the see into two parts in 1897, he became Bp. of Gloucester, resigning in 1904. He sat on many commissions, being chairman of the British New Testament Revision Company 1870–81, of which he missed only 2 out of the 407 sittings. He edited a considerable number of the Pauline Epistles (Gal., 1854; others 1855–8; 1 Cor., 1887) and wrote several other theological and religious books.

His Addresses on the Revised Version of Holy Scripture (1901), forming the Charge to the Archdeaconry of Cirencester at the Visitation in Oct. 1901, were repr. in 1933. R. Bayne in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, p. 618 f.

ELMO, St. The popular name for St. Peter González (c. 1190–1246). After accompanying Ferdinand III on his expedition against the Moors, this famous *Dominican preacher devoted the rest of his life to work amongst the seafaring folk of the coasts of Spain. After his death he was canonized as the patron saint of seamen; and the electrical discharge often seen at the mast-heads and yard-arms of ships was interpreted as a sign of his protection, just as the ancients regarded it as a sign of the presence of Castor and Pollux. Feast day, 14 Apr.

There is considerable confusion between him and St. Erasmus, one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints and a martyr in the *Diocletianic persecution, who is also known as St. Ermo or St. Elmo (apparently corruptions of 'St. Erasmus'); the feast of this saint is on 2 June.

On the former, see 'Legenda b. Petri', together with account of his miracles, decree for his canonization, and other material, in H. Florez, O.S.A., España sagrada, xxiii (Madrid, 1767), pp. 245–89. 16th cent. life by Stephanus Sampayo, O.P., in AA.SS., Apr. II (1675), pp. 391–9. Gerard de Fracheto, O.P., Vitae Ordinis Praedicatorum (ed. B. M. Peichert, Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica, i; 1897, pp. 296–8).
On the latter, AA.SS., Jun. I (1695). pp. 211–19.

ELOHIM (Heb. אֱלֹהִים, lit. 'gods'). Used occasionally in the OT of heathen gods, supernatural beings, or earthly judges, but generally of the God of Israel, for whom it is a very frequent term, esp. in what is commonly reckoned the second oldest Pentateuchal source (the supposed writer of which is therefore referred to by critics as 'the Elohist'). The use of the plural form to describe the one God is frequently explained as a 'plural of majesty'.

ÉLOI, St. See Eligius, St.

ELPHEGE, St. See Alphege, St.

ELVIRA, Council of. A Spanish council held about 306, just after a period of persecution. It passed 81 canons whose interest lies in the severe disciplinary penalties enforced for apostasy and adultery. It also required continence of all the clergy under pain of deposition (can. 33). Several of the canons order lifelong excommunication without reconciliation even at death.

Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 247–58; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 1–406. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 13–26. Hefele–Leclercq, i (1; 1907), pp. 212–64. A. W. W. Dale, The Synod of Elvira and Christian Life in the Fourth Century. A Historical Essay (1882). L. *Duchesne, 'Le Concile d'Elvire et les Flamines chrétiens' in Mélanges Renier (1886), pp. 159–74; H. Koch, 'Die Zeit des Konzils von Elvira' in Z.N.T.W., xvii (1916), pp. 61–7; L. von Sybel, 'Zur Synode von Elvira' in Z.K.G., xlii (1923), pp. 243–7. E. Göller, 'Analekten zur Bussgeschichte des 4. Jahrhunderts: I. Die Synode von Elvira und das öffentliche Busswesen nach der Lehre Pacians' in R.Q., xxxvi (1928), pp. 236–61. V. C. de Clercq, C.I.C.M., Ossius of Cordova (Washington, 1953), esp. pp. 85–117. G. Bareille in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 2378–97, s.v.; J. Gaudemet in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 317–48, s.v. 'Elvire II. Le Concile d'Elvire', with extensive bibl. S. Laeuchli, Power and Sexuality. The Emergence of Canon Law at the Synod of Elvira (Philadelphia, 1972).

ELY. In 673 St. *Etheldreda (Audrey) founded a *double monastery here for monks and nuns, endowing it with the principality of the Isle. After her death in 679, her shrine became a place of pilgrimage and the importance of Ely grew. In 870 the monastery was destroyed by the Danes, but in 970 it was restored, for monks only, by King Edgar and *Ethelwold, Bp. of *Winchester, and about a hundred years later a new church, now the cathedral, was begun by Abbot Simeon (1082–93). In 1109 Henry I and Abp. *Anselm formed the see of Ely out of the large diocese of *Lincoln, and the prior and monks became the cathedral chapter. At the *Dissolution the prior became the dean, and eight canonries were founded (1541). In 1848 two of the canonries were attached to the Regius Professorships of Hebrew and Greek at Cambridge; by an Act of 1877 the latter was severed at the next vacancy in 1889 and (until 1980) joined to a new theological professorship known as the Ely Professorship of Divinity; the other chair was dissociated from the canonry in 1932. The cathedral, which contains every style of architecture from early Norman to late Perpendicular, is famous for its Galilee Porch (1198–1215) and its central octagon (1322–8), the roof of which (known as the 'Lantern') is the only Gothic dome in the world. The Grammar School was founded in 1541, and the Theological College in 1876 (opened in 1881 but closed in 1964).

Extracts from the Liber Eliensis in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i (1691), pp. 593–677; crit. ed. by E. O. Blake (Camden Society, third series, xcii; 1962). F. R. Chapman (ed.), Sacrist Rolls of Ely (2 vols., Cambridge, 1907). S. J. A. Evans (ed.), Ely Chapter Ordinances and Visitation Records, 1241–1515 (Camden Miscellany, xvii; 1940). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 457–500. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of Lincoln, Ely, Oxford and Peterborough (1730), pp. 331–401. J. Bentham, The History and Antiquities of the Conventual and Cathedral Church of Ely from the Foundation of the Monastery, A.D. 673, to the Year 1771 (Cambridge, 1771; ed. 2, 1812, with suppl. by W. Stevenson, Norwich, 1817); id., A Catalogue of the Principal Members of the Conventual and Cathedral Church of Ely (1756). D. J. Stewart, On the Architectural History of Ely Cathedral (1868). C. W. Stubbs, Historical Memorials of Ely Cathedral In Two Lectures: i, The Shrine of St. Awdrey, ii, Alan de Walsingham (1897). W. D. Sweeting, The Cathedral Church of Ely (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1901); B. E. Dorman, The Story of Ely and its Cathedral (Ely, 1945). T. D. Atkinson, An Architectural History of the Benedictine Monastery of Saint Etheldreda at Ely (Cambridge, 1932, with a vol. of plates). E. Miller, The Abbey and Bishopric of Ely. The Social History of an Ecclesiastical Estate from the tenth to the early fourteenth century (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, N.S., i; 1951). M. D. Ellis–L. F. Salzman in V.C.H., Cambridge and the Isle of Ely, ii, ed. L. F. Salzman (1948), pp. 199–210. W. Hunt in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 202–6, s.v.; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 348–66, s.v.

ELZEVIR (or ELSEVIER), 16th–17th cent. Dutch family of printers at *Leyden and Amsterdam, celebrated for the neatness and accuracy of their editions, esp. their pocket texts. In 1624 they issued their first edition of the Greek NT, which, though it was little more than a reprint of T. *Beza's text of 1565, at once won favour and was accepted for some two centuries as the *Textus Receptus.

A. C. J. Willems, Les Elzévier (1880); G. Berghman, Études (1885) and Nouvelles Études (1897) sur la bibliographie elzévirienne; H. B. Copinger, The Elzevier Press (1927); D. W. Davies, The Work of the Elzeviers, 1580–1712 (The Hague, 1954); S. L. Hartz, The Elseviers and their Contemporaries. An illustrated commentary (Amsterdam, 1955).

EMBER DAYS. Four groups each of three days, in the Church year, viz., the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after St. *Lucy (13 Dec.), *Ash Wednesday, *Whitsunday, and *Holy Cross Day (14 Sept.) respectively, which have been observed as days of fasting and abstinence in the Churches of the W. Their early history and original purpose are obscure. At first there were apparently only three groups, perhaps taken over from the pagan religious observances connected with harvest, vintage, and seed-time; in this form they traditionally date back to the time of Pope *Callistus (c. 220) and were certainly well established at Rome in the time of Pope *Leo (440–61), who preached a series of Embertide sermons. From Rome their observance spread through W. Christendom. In the RC Church they were replaced in 1969 by days of prayer for various needs. In the C of E they are associated with the ordination of the Church's ministers, and the ASB places two groups in the weeks before the Sundays nearest the feasts of St. *Peter and St. *Michael and All Angels.

M. W. Quadt, Die Liturgie der Quatembertage erklärt (1869). G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'L'Origine des Quatre Temps' in Rev. Bén., xiv (1897), pp. 337–46. L. Fischer, Die kirchlichen Quatember. Ihre Entstehung, Entwicklung und Bedeutung (Veröffentlichungen aus dem Kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, IV, 3; 1914). K. Holl, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, ii (1928), Nr. 9, 'Die Entstehung der vier Fastenzeiten in der griechischen Kirche' [1923], pp. 155–203. G. G. Willis, Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (Alcuin Club Collections, xlvi; 1964), pp. 49–98. A. Molien in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1447–55, s.v. 'Quatre-Temps'.

EMBOLISM (Gk. ἐμβολισμός, 'intercalation'). In the Roman *Mass, the name given to the prayer after the *Canon which begins 'Libera nos, quaesumus, Domine, ab omnibus malis', inserted between the Lord's Prayer and the Prayer for Peace. Its opening words take up the final words of the Lord's Prayer ('Libera nos a malo') which has just preceded it. Many E. liturgies have a similar prayer at this point. The word is also used (not in a specifically religious sense) to denote the difference of days in the calendar between the lunar year of 354 days and the solar year of 365¼ days, also known as the '*epact'.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 352–63; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 284–93, with full reff.

EMBURY, PHILIP (1728–75). The first *Methodist preacher in America. A native of Ireland, he was converted by J. *Wesley in 1752, and began to preach soon afterwards. In 1760 he emigrated to America, but did not begin to preach there till 1766. In 1768 he built the first Methodist church in America, in New York, but in 1770 he removed to Camden, where he founded a Methodist society.

H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog., vi (1931), p. 125 f., with reff.

EMERSON, RALPH WALDO (1803–82), American essayist, philosopher and poet. The son of a *Unitarian minister of Boston, Mass., he was educated at Boston Latin School and Harvard College, and trained for the Unitarian ministry at the Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass. He was 'approbated to preach' in 1826 and ministered at Boston from 1829 to 1832, when he resigned owing to his extremely unconventional views on the *Eucharist; he continued to preach until 1847. On a visit to Europe in 1833 he met T. *Carlyle, S. T. *Coleridge and W. *Wordsworth, with the first of whom he formed a close friendship. Returning to America the same year, he settled at Concord, Mass., where, with the exception of the period of a second visit to Great Britain in 1847–8, he remained for the rest of his life as a lecturer on literature and philosophy.

Emerson's philosophy was founded on a combination of rationalism and mysticism. Although he disowned the name, it appears that he fundamentally believed in 'Transcendentalism', viz. the doctrine that 'the highest revelation is that God is in every man'. It follows that man contains all that is needful in himself and that everything that happens to him has its origin within him. In his lecture on The Defects of Historical Christianity (delivered 1835) he went so far as to maintain that even redemption was to be sought within the soul. In spite, however, of the exalted position which he accorded to man philosophically, he had little liking for democracy and was only reluctantly led (by 1856) to support the cause of the abolition of slavery. At least from the 1840s he enjoyed a wide influence and popularity enhanced by the freshness and imagination of his style. From 1840 to 1844 Emerson was editor of The Dial, a Transcendentalist periodical in which some of his poetry was published. His prose works, of which the majority were based on his lectures, include Nature (1838), two series of Essays (1841, 1844), Representative Man (1850), English Traits (1856), Conduct of Life (1860), Society and Solitude (1870) and Letters and Social Aims (1876). They are mainly ethical in purpose, but are possessed of an underlying religious tone. His poetry, though attractive in its inspiration, lacks the polish of his prose.

Complete Works, ed. by E. W. Emerson (Centenary Edition, 12 vols., Boston–New York and London, c. 1903–4); Journals, ed. by E. W. Emerson and W. E. Forbes (10 vols., Boston and New York, 1909–14); also ed. W. H. Gilman and others (Cambridge, Mass., 1960 ff.); Letters, ed. by R. L. Rusk (6 vols., New York, 1939); Early Lectures, ed. S. E. Whichter and R. E. Spiller (Cambridge, Mass., 1959 ff.). F. I. Carpenter, Ralph Waldo Emerson. Representative Selections, with introduction, bibl. and notes (New York, 1934); Young Emerson Speaks, ed. by A. C. McGiffert (Boston, 1938; early sermons). J. E. Cabot, A Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson (2 vols., 1887). J. Benton, Emerson as a Poet (New York, 1883); O. W. Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson (1885); G. E. Woodberry, Ralph Waldo Emerson (New York, 1907); J. S. Harrison, The Teachers of Emerson (1910); B. Perry, Emerson Today. (Princeton, 1931); K. W. Cameron, Emerson the Essayist (2 vols., Raleigh, N.C., 1945); R. L. Rusk, The Life of Ralph Waldo Emerson (New York, 1949; London, 1957). J. Bishop, Emerson on the Soul (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1964). G. W. Cooke, A Bibliography of Ralph Waldo Emerson (New York, 1908; repr. 1968).

EMINENCE. A title of honour given to a *cardinal of the RC Church. Until a decree of *Urban VIII in 1630 confined its use to the cardinals, the Imperial electors and the Grand Master of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem (who still retains it), it had been more widely used. Before that date cardinals were entitled 'Illustrissimi' or 'Reverendissimi'.

EMMANUEL. See Immanuel.

EMMAUS. The village in which the Lord made His Resurrection appearance to two of the disciples (Lk. 24. 13–35). It was 60 furlongs from *Jerusalem (Lk. 24. 13; but acc. to a variant reading 160, perhaps an accommodation to the ancient identification of this Emmaus with that mentioned in 1 Macc. 3. 40, &c.). Among suggested sites are Kuloniyeh ('Colony') to the W., Khamasah to the SW. and Amwas, some 19 miles WNW. of Jerusalem.

L. H. Vincent, O.P., and F. M. Abel, O.P., Emmaüs. Sa basilique et son histoire (1932). P. Duvignau, Emmaüs. Le Site — le mystère (1937). A. De Guglielmo, O.F.M., 'Emmaus' in Catholic Biblical Quarterly, iii (1941), pp. 285–301. L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1049–63, s.v. 'Emmaus'.

EMMERICK, ANNA KATHARINA (1774–1824), ecstatic. She entered an *Augustinian house at Agnetenberg, Dülmen, Westph., in 1802, where she aroused the dislike of some of the laxer members by the fervour of her spiritual life. In 1812 the house was closed by order of the civil authorities, and she took refuge in a private house, where she had a serious illness. At about this time she received the *Stigmata of the Passion on her body. Her 'Meditations on the Passion' (Das bittere Leiden unseres Herrn und Heilandes Jesus Christ) were taken down by Clemens Brentano (1778–1842) and published in 1833 (Eng. tr., 1862). Other visions were collected by Brentano and publd. after his death as Leben der heil. Jungfrau Maria (1852; Eng. tr., 1954) and a further collection of Brentano's notes were ed. by K. E. Schmöger, C.SS.R., Das Leben unsers Herrn und Heilandes Jesu Christi (3 vols., 1858–60).

Recent crit. edd. of Das bittere Leiden, both based on Brentano's notes, are those of A. Michelitsch (Graz, 1935) and D. K. Bücher (Munich, 1937). W. Hümpfner, O.E.S.A., Clemens Brentanos Glaubwürdigkeit in seinen Emmerick-Aufzeichnungen (Würzburg, 1923). Biography by K. E. Schmöger (2 vols., Freiburg i.Br., 1867–70; Eng. tr., New York, 1885), and many others. Best modern life is H. J. Seller, Im Banne des Kreuzes. Lebensbild der stigmatisierten Augustinerin Anna Katharina Emmerick (Würzburg, 1940). H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Problem of Anne Catherine Emmerich' in Month, cxxxviii (1921), pp. 237–48, 344–56, 429–39, 519–30, repr. in Surprising Mystics, ed. J. H. Crehan, S.J. (1955), pp. 38–99. Full bibl. to date by W. Hümpfner in Theologie und Glaube, xvi (1924), pp. 455–82, and xlix (1959), pp. 200–23. Id. in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 622–7, s.v.

EMMONS, NATHANAEL (1745–1840), American *Congregationalist divine. He graduated at Yale in 1767, was admitted preacher in 1769, and from 1772 to 1827 was pastor at Franklin, Mass., where he also trained theological students for the Congregationalist ministry. In his sermons he developed a system of 'consistent *Calvinism', largely based on the doctrines of Samuel Hopkins (1721–1803), a disciple of Jonathan *Edwards. Though avowedly opposed to all forms of *Arminianism, *Universalism, and *Unitarianism, he was a less extreme Calvinist than Hopkins, from whom he differed in asserting that man's part in regeneration is active, not passive. He was also politically interested, being a keen patriot during the War of Independence.

Works, with a Memoir by E. A. Park, ed. by J. Ide (6 vols., Boston, 1861–3). B. W. Bacon in Dict. Amer. Biog., vi (1931), p. 150 f.

EMS, Congress of. A conference attended by representatives of the four archbishops of Mainz, Trier, *Cologne, and Salzburg, which was held at Bad Ems in Hesse-Nassau in 1786. Its object was to carry into effect the teachings of 'Justinus Febronius' (J. N. von *Hontheim), which repudiated Papal interference in all but purely spiritual matters. It issued on 25 Aug. the 'Punctation of Ems' (Emser Punktation), proposing, inter alia, that in future appeals to Rome in Germany should be restrained, the bishops should have the control of matrimonial dispensations, and Papal bulls and other official Roman decisions should not be binding until accepted by the German episcopate. The project failed to secure the support of the German bishops, who interpreted the plan as a device of the archbishops to aggrandize their own position.

L. *Pastor, The History of the Popes from the Close of the Middle Ages (Eng. tr.), xl (1953), pp. 43–65. M. Höhler (ed.), Des kurtrierischen Geistlichen Rats Heinrich Aloys Arnoldi Tagbuch über die zu Ems gehaltene Zusammenkunft der vier Erzbischöflichen . . . Deputierten, 1786 (Mainz, 1915). C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 342–50, and L. Just in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 856 f., both with bibl.

EMSER, HIERONYMUS (1478–1527), editor of earlier writers, secular essayist, and controversialist. From about 1504 he was secretary to Duke George of Saxony. He is chiefly remembered for his controversy with M. *Luther, which lasted from 1519 till his death, and was popular and scurrilous in character. He disliked Luther's 'December Bible' of 1522, and published a counter-edition in 1527, made to resemble it as much as possible, with introduction and notes added. In 1530 the *Brethren of the Common Life settled at Rostock issued it in a Low German translation. Emser's Bible went into over 100 editions in the 16th, 17th, and 18th cents.

His first writings against Luther were edited by F. Thurnhofer in the Corpus Catholicorum, iv (1921); his writings in support of the Mass ed. T. Freudenberger, ib., xxviii (1959). G. E. Waldau, Nachricht von Hieronymus Emsers Leben und Schriften (Anspach, 1783). Life by G. Kawerau (Halle, 1898). Id. in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 339–42; E. Iserloh in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), col. 445 f., s.v., with detailed reff.

ENABLING ACT, The. This Act, officially 'The Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act', 1919, removed certain legal disabilities from the C of E. Its provisions closely followed recommendations in the Report on the Relations of Church and State (1916). Its chief effect was to confer legislative powers on the *Church Assembly, notably the preparation and modelling of ecclesiastical measures and their presentation to Parliament. It also established an Ecclesiastical Committee consisting of 15 members of each of the Houses of Parliament, nominated by the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker respectively, to which its measures were to be submitted before proceeding to Parliament. It provided that while Parliament could accept or reject measures (as happened in the case of the Prayer Book Measures of 1927 and 1928), it could not amend a measure passed by the Assembly.

ENARXIS (Gk. Ἐναρξις, lit. 'beginning'). In the Byzantine liturgy, the section between the *Prothesis and the *Little Entrance. It consists of three Diaconal Litanies, each followed by a variable antiphon sung by the choir. The celebrant meanwhile silently recites the prayers known as the 'Prayers of the Antiphon' (Εὐχαὶ Ἀντιφώνου). It was prob. first introduced into the Liturgy in the 9th cent.

Text in Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 310–12.

ENCOLPION (Gk. ἐγκόλπιον), also known as the *Panagia. An oval medallion worn by bishops in the E. Church, suspended from the neck by a chain. The figure of Christ or the BVM is normally depicted upon it, and relics are sometimes placed inside it. Certain prelates have the privilege of wearing two encolpia.

ENCLOSURE. See Clausura.

ENCRATITES. A title applied to several groups of early Christians who carried their ascetic practice and doctrine to extremes which were in most cases considered heretical. They are referred to by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Hippolytus, who respectively call them ἐγκρατεῖς, ἐγκρατηταί, and ἐγκρατῖται. The name, however, seems never to have been used very precisely, but to have been applied in a general sense to many of the *Gnostic, *Ebionite and *Docetic sects. They commonly rejected the use of wine and flesh-meat, and often also of marriage. It was largely in Encratite circles that the *Apocryphal Gospels and Acts were produced.

Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., i. 28; Clement Al., Strom., vii. 17 (108. 2), etc.; Hippolytus, Philos., viii. 20; cf. also *Epiphanius, Haer., xlvi, xlvii. A certain Julius Cassian, the author of a book Περὶ Εὐνουχίας, was reckoned a leading exponent of Encratite doctrines, while St. *Jerome (Ep. 48. 2) names *Tatian as the princeps encratitarum. G. Blond, 'L'"Hérésie" encratite vers la fin du quatrième siècle' in Rech. S.R., xxxi (1944), pp. 159–210; F. Bolgiani, 'La tradizione eresiologica sull'encratismo' in Atti della Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, II. Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche et Filologiche, xci (1957), pp. 343–419. C. Bareille in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 4–14, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. s.v. Tatian.

ENCYCLICAL. A circular letter sent to all the churches of a given area. In early times the word might be used of a letter sent out by any bishop, but in modern RC usage the term is restricted to such letters as are sent out by the Pope. It has also been used from the first (1867) of the letters issued by the Anglican bishops at the end of the *Lambeth Conferences.

ENCYCLOPAEDISTS. The name given to the contributors to the Encyclopédie, published between 1751 and 1780 in 35 volumes (vols. 1–28 at Paris, the remaining 7 as a supplement at Amsterdam). It was to be a complete review of the arts and sciences of the day. The editor, D. *Diderot, and many of the contributors, were supporters of an exclusively natural religion; and though the censorship exercised by Church and state preserved impartiality in the principal articles, some of the smaller articles proved useful media for anti-Catholic and anti-aristocratic views. The influence of this group of writers, which became known as the 'philosophic' party, was among the principal disruptive intellectual elements which assisted the French Revolution.

J. Lough (ed.), The Encyclopédie of Diderot and D'Alembert. Selected Articles (1954). J. Morley, Diderot and the Encyclopaedists (2 vols., 1878); L. Ducros, Les Encyclopédistes (1900). F. Venturi, Le origini dell'Enciclopedia (1946; ed. 2, 1963); N. N. Schargo, History in the Encyclopédie (New York, 1947). D. H. Gordon–N. L. Torrey, The Censoring of Diderot's Encyclopédie and the Re-established Text (New York, 1947). P. Grosclaude, Un Audacieux Message, L'Encyclopédie (1951); J. Proust, Diderot et l'Encyclopédie (1962; ed. 2, 1967); J. Lough, Essays on the Encyclopédie of Diderot and d'Alembert (1968). R. Shackleton, The Encyclopédie and the Clerks (Lecture; Oxford, 1970). Überweg, iii, pp. 427–39, 698–700. E. S. Haldane in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 302–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Diderot, D'Alembert, etc.

ENERGUMEN (Gk. ἐνεργούμενος). In ancient Christian literature a term used of demoniacs and others possessed of abnormal mental and physical states, esp. insanity. Following the example of the Lord, the Church treated them with special pity and care. They received the ministrations of *exorcists. At the Eucharist they were normally dismissed at the end of the *Missa Catechumenorum with prayer and blessing, though if not violent they might be admitted to communion. They were debarred from ordination, even after cure.

E. *Martène, O.S.B., De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, iii (1702), cap. 9, pp. 497–530. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1, 1922), cols. 964–78, s.vv. 'Exorcisme', 'Exorciste'; K. Baus in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 862 f., s.v. 'Energumenen'.

ENGLAND, CHURCH OF. See Church of England (for history); Anglicanism (for theological outlook).

ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC, School of. See Royal School of Church Music.

ENGLISH CHURCH UNION. A society formed in 1859 as the 'Church of England Protection Society', and renamed in 1860 the 'English Church Union', when it incorporated various local Church societies. Its object was to defend, and further the spread of, High Church principles in the C of E. The Union championed many priests during the ritual prosecutions, and frustrated many attacks upon Catholic practices. In 1934 the E.C.U. was united with the *Anglo-Catholic Congress to form the '*Church Union'. In 1868 Charles Lindley Wood, afterwards Viscount *Halifax, was elected president and was for many years its dominating personality.

G. Bayfield Roberts, The History of the English Church Union, 1859–1894 (1895).

ENGLISH COLLEGE, The. The seminary at Rome for English candidates for the RC priesthood. It was founded in 1362 as a hospice for English pilgrims. In 1579 *Gregory XIII converted it into a seminary whose students had to take an oath to go to England when it should seem good to their superiors. Soon afterwards its direction was entrusted to the *Jesuits, who were in charge of it until the suppression of the Society in 1773. It then passed into the hands of Italian secular priests, under whose direction it remained till it was closed during the invasion of the French. In 1818 it was restored by *Pius VII, and since then its rectors have always been members of the English secular clergy, the most famous of them being N. P. S. *Wiseman, afterwards cardinal.

Liber Ruber Venerabilis Collegii Anglorum de Urbe, ed. by W. Kelly, assisted by O. Littledale, S. Roxburgh, and I. Vaughan. I. (1) Annales Collegii; Nomina Alumnorum (*Catholic Record Society, xxxvii and xl; 1940–3), incl. bibl., i, p. xiv, note i. Incomplete Eng. tr. by H. Foley S.J., Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, vi (1880), pp. 1–540, with other material from the College archives. The Responsa Scholarum of the English College, Rome, 1598–1685, ed. A. Kenny (Catholic Record Society, liv–lv; 1962–3). F. A. *Gasquet, A History of the Venerable English College, Rome. An Account of its Origins and Work from the Earliest Times to the Present Day (1920). The English Hospice in Rome, with preface by G. W. Tickle (The Venerabile, xxi; 1962; also other articles in this periodical). The Venerable English College, Rome. An Illustrated History produced by the Students of the College (Rome, 1967). M. E. Williams, The Venerable English College Rome. A History, 1579–1979 (1979). See also Lives of W. *Allen, R. *Parsons, and N. P. S. Wiseman.

ENGLISH HYMNAL, The. This widely used Anglican hymnal, publd. in 1906, was the result of a considered attempt by a group, mainly of Anglo-Catholic sympathies, to eradicate banalities and generally to raise the quality of English hymnody, in the matter both of words and music. The editorial committee responsible for the words included W. J. Birkbeck, P. *Dearmer, and T. A. *Lacey, while the musical editor was R. Vaughan *Williams (1872–1958). It included *Office Hymns and *Propers for the Sung Eucharist, both taken mainly from the *Sarum books. A new edition, with extensive revision of the plainchant music by J. H. Arnold, was issued in 1933. The English Hymnal Service Book, publd. in 1962, contains hymns from the English Hymnal supplemented by a number from other sources, the Psalter pointed for chanting, J. *Merbecke's setting of the Holy Communion, the versicles and responses at Mattins and Evensong, and other material which obviates the need to provide copies of the BCP.

ENGLISH LADIES (Germ. Englische Fräulein). A popular name for the 'Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary', an active body of religious founded in 1609 at St.-Omer by Mary *Ward (1585–1645) which was designed as an order for women similar to the *Jesuit Order for men. The foundation's independence of ecclesiastical authority and refusal of monastic enclosure led *Urban VIII to promulgate a bull suppressing it in 1631; but Urban himself allowed the founding of a house shortly afterwards on the Esquiline in Rome under a slightly changed rule and stricter ecclesiastical control. The rules of the order did not receive formal Papal approval, however, till 1703. In 1749 each house of the order was placed under the jurisdiction of its diocesan bishop.

M. Philip, I.B.V.M., Companions of Mary Ward (1939). J. Leitner, Geschichte der englischen Fräulein und ihre Institute seit ihrer Gründung bis auf unsere Zeit (1869). J. Grisar, S.J., Die ersten Anklagen in Rom gegen das Institut Maria Wards (1622) (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, xxii; 1959); id., Maria Wards Institut vor römischen Kongregationen (1616–1630) (ibid., xxvii; 1966). M. G. F. von Pechmann, I.B.V.M., Geschichte des Englischen Institutes Beatae Mariae Virginis in Bayern (1907). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 454–61 and 668, with bibl. p. 454. See also bibl. to Ward, Mary.

ENHYPOSTASIA (Gk. ἐν 'in', and ὑπόστασις 'person'). The doctrine advanced by *Leontius of Byzantium and St. *John of Damascus that in the Incarnate Christ the personal humanity of Christ was not lost, but included within the *hypostasis of the Godhead, and that thereby He included within Himself all the attributes of perfect humanity. It was believed to give a fuller place to the human side of Christ's work than was done by the doctrine of the 'Anhypostatic Manhood' taught by theologians under the influence of St. *Cyril of Alexandria. In modern times the doctrine has been defended by H. M. Relton (A Study in Christology, 1917). The noun ἐνυποστασία is apparently not found in the ancient writers, though the theologians mentioned make abundant use of its cognates.

A Patristic Greek Lexicon, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (Oxford, 1968), pp. 485–6, s.v. ἐνυπόστατος.

ENLIGHTENMENT, The. Though the term originated as a translation of the German Aufklärung*, it is now applied more generally to the movement of ideas which characterized much of 18th cent. Europe. In many ways it was a continuation of the scientific spirit of the previous age, esp. of the thought of R. *Descartes, J. *Locke and I. *Newton. Its adherents distrusted all authority and tradition in matters of intellectual inquiry, and believed that truth could be attained only through reason, observation and experiment. On the whole, however, they were more socially committed than their predecessors. They sought to diffuse knowledge as much as to create it and where possible to use their scientific method in the service of their humanitarian ideals of tolerance, justice and the moral and material welfare of mankind. The more scientific among them (e.g. J. Bentham and other *Utilitarians) tried to discover 'Newtonian' laws governing man and his social relationships, believing that if these could be found, man would be in a position to control his destiny. Others, such as C. L. J. de S. *Montesquieu, D. *Hume and Adam Smith (1723–90), attempted a more open-minded investigation of the nature of society. A third group (esp. French writers such as P. H. D. d'Holbach (1723–89) and J. J. *Rousseau) were more revolutionary in their programme. The movement embraced a wide spectrum of views and aims, incl. *Voltaire's defence of the victims of religious persecution, the encouragement of technology in D. *Diderot's Encyclopédie, and attempts to improve legal practice in Italy and the economy in Spain, but its adherents were united by a common belief in 'reason' and zeal for human welfare. In general, with notable exceptions such as Hume and I. *Kant, they were propagandists rather than philosophers. But their activity transformed the intellectual map of Europe.

The thinkers of the Enlightenment often came into conflict with the Church. Some, such as d'Holbach, were dogmatic atheists; others, such as Hume and Diderot, rejected religion less vehemently. The majority were prob. deists. Yet, though the movement as a whole was undoubtedly hostile to orthodox Christianity, there were many exceptions to this generalization. Even in relatively intolerant Catholic countries, such as France and Spain, it was possible for men such as A. R. J. Turgot (1727–81) and G. M. de Jovellanos (1744–1811) to reconcile their faith with 'enlightened' ideas. In Protestant lands, where 'rational theology' was developing within the Churches, there was more co-operation; and in Scotland, e.g., many of the leaders of the Enlightenment were also ministers of the Kirk.

See also Aufklärung.

There is a very extensive literature. E. Cassirer, Die Philosophie der Aufklärung (Tübingen, 1932; Eng. tr., Princeton, 1951); P. Hazard, La Crise de la conscience européenne (3 vols., 1935; Eng. tr., 1953); id., La Pensée européenne au XVIIIe siècle de Montesquieu à Lessing (3 vols., 1946; Eng. tr., 1954). P. Gay, The Party of Humanity. Studies in the French Enlightenment (New York–London, 1964); id., The Enlightenment. An Interpretation (New York–London, 1967); L. G. Crocker, An Age of Crisis. Man and World in Eighteenth Century French Thought (Baltimore, 1959); id., Nature and Culture. Ethical Thought in the French Enlightenment (ib., 1963). R. J. White, The Anti-Philosophers. A Study of the Philosophes in Eighteenth-Century France (1970). G. R. Cragg, Reason and Authority in the Eighteenth Century (Cambridge, 1964). A. Richardson, History Sacred and Profane (Bampton Lectures for 1962; 1964), pp. 41–5, 90–103. E. Hegel in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 435–9, s.v., with further bibl.

ENNODIUS, St., MAGNUS FELIX (c. 473–521) Christian rhetorician and Bp. of Pavia. Born at Arles, he was brought up probably at Pavia (possibly at Milan). After ordination as deacon c. 493 by St. Epiphanius, Bp. of Pavia, he went to Milan, where he taught rhetoric until consecrated Bp. of Pavia c. 514. In the dispute about the succession to Pope Anastasius II (d. 498), he defended *Symmachus and wrote a libellus against those who challenged the synod of 502, maintaining that the Papal office was de jure exempt from all interference from the secular power. He was twice sent by Pope *Hormisdas on missions to Anastasius, Patr. of *Constantinople, to effect a reconciliation with the E. His abundant writings suffer from a turgid style, but are valuable through the incidental light they throw on the happenings and cultural ideals of his age. They include an account of his own religious experiences ('Eucharisticon de Vita Sua'), a long panegyric on the Arian King *Theodoric (507), a Life of St. Epiphanius of Pavia, several discourses ('Dictiones'), many epitaphs and epigrams, and a considerable collection of hymns, modelled on those of St. *Ambrose. His work is probably the last serious attempt to combine a fundamentally pagan culture with the profession of the Christian creed. His epitaph survives in the church of S. Michele in Pavia. Feast day, 17 July.

His writings, edited by J. *Sirmond (Paris, 1611), are reprinted in J. P. Migne, PL, lxiii, 13–364. There are good critical editions by W. Hartel (C.S.E.L., 1882) and F. Vogel (M.G.H.. 1884, with full prolegomena). M. Fertig, Ennodius und seine Zeit (3 vols., 1855–60); S. L'Église, St. Ennodius et la suprématie pontificale au sixième siècle (1890); A. Dubois, La Latinité d'Ennodius (1903). G. Bardy, 'Saint Ennodius de Pavie' in J. R. Palanque (ed.), Le Christianisme et l'Occident barbare (1945), pp. 229–64. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 478 f., with bibl. E. M. Young in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 123f.; J. Fontaine in R.A.C., v (1962), cols. 398–421, s.v.

ENOCH, OT patriarch. The OT records nothing of Enoch except that he was the father of Methuselah and that 'he walked with God and he was not; for God took him' (Gen. 5. 24). In Jewish tradition many legends became attached to him and in the NT his translation is referred to at Heb. 11. 5. For the pseudepigraphical books ascribed to Enoch, see the foll. entry.

ENOCH, Books of. (1) 1 Enoch, or 'Ethiopic Enoch' as it is sometimes called from the fact that it survives complete only in Ethiopic, is one of the more important Jewish *pseudepigrapha. It embodies a series of revelations, of which Enoch is the professed recipient, on such matters as the origin of evil, the angels and their destinies, and the nature of *Gehenna and *Paradise. Apart from the continuous Ethiopic text, several Greek fragments have come to light (some of them extensive), a single Latin fragment, and a number of fragments in *Aramaic and Hebrew (representing the remains of ten or more separate MSS.) from Qumran.

As it is preserved in Ethiopic, the work is clearly composite. R. H. *Charles divided it as follows into five sections composed at different dates: Section 1 (chs. 1–36) incorporates portions of 'The Book of Noah' and was written before 170 B.C.; 2 (chs. 37–71) contains the 'Parables' or 'Similitudes', c. 105–64 B.C.; 3 (chs. 72–82), 'The Book of the Heavenly Luminaries', before 110 B.C.; 4 (chs. 83–90), 'The Dream Visions', c. 165–161 B.C.; and 5 (chs. 91–104), incorporating an 'Apocalypse of Weeks', contains material of various dates.

The passages on 'the Son of Man' in the 'Parables' or 'Similitudes' (chs. 37–71) have been widely held to have influenced the NT writings; and other NT titles, such as 'the Righteous One' and 'the Elect One' have been said to have appeared here first as Messianic designations. But this view has been increasingly questioned, especially since the discovery of the Qumran fragments; for although all the other sections of 1 Enoch are well represented in these fragments, chs. 37–71 are not represented at all. Nor are they represented in the Greek and Latin fragments. It can, therefore, be argued that they are a later (Christian) insertion into the Book, and that it was the NT which influenced them rather than vice versa. But about the value of the other sections of the Book for understanding the NT there can be no doubt. I En. 1. 9 is explicitly quoted as Enoch's in the Ep. of Jude (vv. 14–15); I En. 79. 56 is quoted as 'Scripture' in the Ep. of *Barnabas (xvi. 4; cf. iv. 3); and *Tertullian also regarded the Book as Scripture, although he admitted that he knew of 'some' who did not (Cult. Fem., I. iii. 1).

(2) 2 Enoch, or 'Slavonic Enoch', or 'The Book of the Secrets of Enoch' (a title based on the titles in some of the MSS.), has many points of contact with 1 Enoch, although there are no literary parallels. It survives only in Slavonic and first came to the knowledge of W. scholars in the last part of the 19th cent. Of the Slavonic text there are two recensions, of which the shorter is undoubtedly the earlier. About its origin, date, authorship, and original language, opinions have differed widely. At one extreme, R. H. Charles thought that it was written about the beginning of the Christian era, by an Alexandrian Jew, and in Greek (though certain parts of it 'were founded on Hebrew originals'); at the other extreme, it has been argued that it is a *Bogomile work, written in Bulgarian between the 12th and 15th cents. As an intermediate view may be instanced that of Vaillant, that the author was a Jewish Christian, who was concerned to produce a Christian counterpart to the Jewish 1 Enoch, and wrote in Greek, prob. in the 2nd or early 3rd cent.

(3) 3 Enoch, a Jewish work, dating from well within the Christian era, has gradually come to light, mainly in fragments, from c. 1870 onwards. The continuous Hebrew text was first published by H. Odeberg in 1928 from a *Bodleian MS. of c. A.D. 1511. Its subjects include the destinies of 'Metatron' (i.e. the Divine servant who is identified with Enoch), many descriptions of angels and their operations, and an account of *Sheol. It appears to betray traces of an anti-Christian polemic.

(1) Ethiopic text ed. A. *Dillmann (Leipzig, 1851), J. Flemming (T.U., xxii, Heft 1; 1902), R. H. Charles (Anecdota Oxoniensia. Semitic Series, part xi; 1906) and, with Eng. tr., by M. A. Knibb (2 vols., Oxford, 1978). Eng. tr. of Dillmann's text by R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1893) and of his own ed. (ib., 1912). Greek texts conveniently pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint, iii (Cambridge, 1894), pp. 789–812, and C. Bonner (ed.), The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek (Studies and Documents, viii, 1937); recently, all the available fragments have been ed. by M. Black, Apocalypsis Henochi Graece (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, iii; Leiden, 1970). R. H. Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (Oxford, 1913), pp. 163–281. N. Schmidt, 'The Original Language of the Parables of Enoch' in Old Testament and Semitic Studies in Memory of William Rainey Harper (Chicago, 1908), pp. 327–49. N. Messel, Der Menschensohn in der Bilderreden des Henoch (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxxv; 1922); H. L. Jansen, Die Henochgestalt. Eine vergleichende religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Skrifter utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1939, No. 1); E. Sjöberg, Der Menschensohn im Äthiopischen Henochbuch (Acta Reg. Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, xli; 1946); C. P. van Andel, De Structuur van de Henoch-Traditie en het Nieuwe Testament (Studia Theologica Rheno-Traiectina, ii; Utrecht, 1955, with Eng. summary). M. Black, 'The Son of Man Problem in Recent Research and Debate' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlv (1963), pp. 305–18, esp. pp. 309–14. Eissfeldt, pp. 617–22 and 774.

(2) Slavonic text, with Fr. tr., ed. A. Vaillant (Textes publiés par l'Institut d'Études slaves, iv; 1952). Eng. tr. by W. R. Morfill, with introd. by R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1896). R. H. Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 425–69. N. Schmidt, 'The Two Recensions of Slavonic Enoch' in Journal of the American Oriental Society, xli (1921), pp. 307–12. A. Rubinstein, 'Observations on the Slavonic Book of Enoch' in Journal of Jewish Studies, xiii (1962), pp. 1–21. Eissfeldt, pp. 622 f. and 774.

(3) Hebrew text ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Odeberg (Cambridge, 1928).

ENTHRONIZATION. The rite by which a newly consecrated Archbishop, Bishop or Sovereign is put into possession of his throne. It is normally performed by ceremonially leading him to it and seating him thereon; in the case of a Sovereign it forms part of the rite of *Coronation (q.v.). Since a Bishop's throne was the earliest emblem of his office, his enthronement prob. orig. signified his assumption of power to govern the Church; it would seem to have been performed in silence by the consecrating Bishop immediately after the candidate's consecration and before the celebration of the Mass. By the time of the earliest English Pontificals (10th cent.) enthronization was accompanied by the recitation of a prayer (prob. of *Gallican origin) and a blessing of the new Bishop, prob. by the consecrator. In the late 12th cent., owing to the growing custom of consecrating Bishops outside their cathedral churches, it became a separate rite, which was accompanied by prayers and performed by a third Bishop appointed by the Metropolitan. In the 13th cent. various changes in the wording of the rite gave ground to the legal interpretation of the ceremony as parallel to the *induction of a clerk, i.e. it was understood as the formal assumption (possessio) of the see; at the same time Metropolitans began to assign the task to their *Archdeacons. In the later Middle Ages the increase in the practice of translation gave the ceremony an added importance; a new and more precise formula became customary; and, as the legal aspects were emphasized, cathedral Chapters used the occasion to demand from the new Bishop, who needed access to the cathedral for the purpose, an oath of loyalty to the church and pledges to preserve its rights. Until the *Reformation the ceremony was performed at *Canterbury by the Prior and at *York by the Dean. In the C of E it is now usually undertaken by the Archdeacon of the metropolitical diocese of the province. In the RC Church enthronization is usually performed by the consecrating Bishop if the candidate is consecrated in his own cathedral church; but it is no longer of any juridical significance. The enthronement of the Pope in the Church of *St. Peter, Rome, was formerly a ceremony of considerable importance, because, until 1059, it was deemed to confer on him the power of administering the Church.

The term is also applied to the sealing up of relics in a new altar and in the E. Church to induction to a cure of souls.

E. C. Ratcliff, 'On the Rite of the Inthronization of Bishops and Archbishops' in Theology, xlv (1942), pp. 71–82.

ENTHUSIASM (Gk. ἐνθουσιασμός). The original meaning of the word, the 'being possessed by a god', was current in the 17th cent. Later it took on the sense of fancied inspiration, S. *Johnson defining it as 'a vain confidence of Divine favour or communication'; and in the 18th cent. it was widely used for extravagance in religious devotion.

R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm. A Chapter in the History of Religion (1950).

ENTRANCE, Great; Lesser. See Great Entrance; Lesser Entrance.

ENURCHUS, St. (4th cent.), Bp. of Orléans. Hardly anything is known with certainty of him. Feast day, 7 Sept. In 1604 a mention of the feast was included, probably (via the Preces Privatae* of 1564) from the Calendar of the *York Breviary, in that of the BCP, to mark Queen *Elizabeth I's birthday. The form 'Evurtius' found in modern Prayer Books is the correct one; 'Enurchus' appears to derive from a scribal error in the York Breviary (printed 1524), which reads 'Euurcius'.

A highly legendary 'Vita' by Lucifer the Subdeacon, prob. 11th cent., is pr. in the AA.SS., Sept. III (1750), pp. 52–8, with discussion by J. Stilting, S.J., pp. 44–52; revised text in Catalogus Codicum Hagiographicorum Latinorum Antiquorum Saeculo XVI qui asservantur in Bibliotheca Nationali Parisiensi, ii (1890), pp. 312–19. L. S. Le Nain de *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles, viii (ed. 2, 1713), p. 555 f. On the commemoration in Anglican calendars, see V. Staley, The Liturgical Year (1907), pp. 43–5.

EPACT (Gk. ἐπακτός, 'brought in'). (1) The excess of days in the solar year over the lunar year of twelve months. (2) The age in days of the moon on 1 Jan. of a given year. In the latter sense the Epact is used in ecclesiastical calculations of the date of Easter.

EPANOKAMELAVCHION (Gk. ἐπανωκαμηλαύχιον, ἐπικαλυμμαύχιον). The veil placed on top of the *kamelavchion and hanging down at the back, worn by monks and bishops in the E. Church. It is normally of black material, except in the case of Metropolitans of the Russian Church, who wear a veil of white.

EPAPHRODITUS. A 'brother, and fellow-worker, and fellow-soldier' of St. *Paul, mentioned only in Phil. (2. 25 and 4. 18; and perhaps also 4. 3). He carried a gift from Philippi to Paul and returned, probably bearing the Ep. to the Philippians. There is no reason to identify Epaphroditus with the Epaphras of Col. 4. 12.

EPARCHY (Gk. ἐπαρχία). In the E. Church, the name for an ecclesiastical *province. It is a subdivision of the civil diocese or 'exarchate'. The word is of frequent occurrence in the canons of E. councils, e.g. in those of *Nicaea (325) and *Chalcedon (451). Its ecclesiastical head is the 'eparch', often called the 'metropolitan', who has a veto on the election of the bishops of the dioceses in his eparchy. In the Council of Chalcedon (can. 17), however, the phrase 'eparch of the [civil] diocese' (ἔπαρχος τῆς διοικήσεως) is used to describe what is more commonly and accurately called the '*exarch' (ἔξαρχος).

EPHESIANS, Epistle to the. The Epistle opens with an exposition of God's eternal purpose to redeem Jews and Gentiles alike in Christ, and their common destiny of being built up into the Church 'upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone' (1. 3 – 2. 22). These promised glories for the Church are echoed through the whole epistle. The author then proceeds to speak of his own position as Apostle of the Gentiles (3. 1–13), and to dwell on the spiritual (3. 14–21) and moral (4. 1–6. 9) implications of conversion, with particular instructions on the duties of the married life (5. 22–33), of children and parents (6. 1–4), and of slaves and their masters (6. 5–9). There is a concluding section exhorting his readers to 'put on the whole armour of God' in their spiritual struggle (6. 10–20).

The Epistle raises many critical questions. It was apparently written when the author was in prison. Considerations of style, as compared with that of the other epistles of St. Paul, have led some modern scholars to question its genuineness, but the problems have not received any agreed solution. The original destination of the Epistle is uncertain. The words 'in Ephesus' in 1. 1 are wanting in some early MSS. (B ℵ P^{46}), a circumstance which, combined with the absence of all personal references, has led some scholars to suppose it was a circular letter addressed largely to Christians whom the author had not met (cf. 1. 15, 3. 2), and that a blank was left in the original and the appropriate place-name inserted differently in the copies sent to different churches. There are close literary parallels with Col., which are almost certainly to be explained by direct connexion between the two; and it has sometimes been held that Eph. is a working up of Col. into a more systematic doctrinal treatise, or even a complete and ordered exposition of the Gospel as preached by St. Paul, designed to provide a suitable introduction to the first collection of St. Paul's letters.

Commentaries by T. K. Abbott (I.C.C. on Eph. and Col., 1897, pp. 1–191, with introd., pp. i–xlv), C. *Gore (London, 1898), J. A. *Robinson (London, 1903), M. *Dibelius (Hb.N.T., xii, on Col., Eph., Philem., 1911; ed. 2, 1927, pp. 42–77), J. Schmid (Biblische Studien begründet von O. *Bardenhewer, xxii, Hftt. 3–4, 1928), W. *Lock (West. Comm., 1929), and H. Schlier (Düsseldorf, 1957). F. J. A. *Hort, Prolegomena to St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans and the Ephesians (1895), pp. 63–192. E. J. Goodspeed, The Meaning of Ephesians (Chicago, 1933). E. Percy, Die Probleme der Kolosser- und Epheserbriefe (Skrifter utgivna av kungl. Humanistika Ventenskapssamfundet i Lund, xxxix; 1946), pp. 179–474. C. L. Mitton, The Epistle to the Ephesians. Its Authorship, Origin and Purpose (1951). E. J. Goodspeed, The Key to Ephesians (Chicago, 1956). F. L. Cross (ed.), Studies in Ephesians (1956). J. Coutts, 'The Relationship of Ephesians and Colossians' in New Testament Studies, iv (1958), pp. 201–7; H. J. Cadbury, 'The Dilemma of Ephesians', ib., v (1959), pp. 91–102. J. C. Kirby, Ephesians, Baptism and Pentecost. An inquiry into the structure and purpose of the Epistle to the Ephesians (1968). P. Benoit, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 195–211, s.v. 'Paul (Épîtres attribuées à Saint), 3. Éphésiens (Épître aux)', with bibl.

EPHESUS. In NT times, Ephesus, one of the largest cities of the Roman world, was the capital of the Proconsular Province of Asia and, although its harbour was then silting up, was still a great port and commercial centre. Its fame was due largely to its great temple, dedicated to Artemis, or 'Diana' as the Romans called her. This, the fifth on the site, had been erected c. 330 B.C. and counted as one of the 'Seven Wonders of the World'; and Ephesus's proudest title was that of 'temple warden' (νεωκόρος), lit. 'temple-sweeper' to the goddess (Acts 19. 35).

In early Christian times Ephesus was the scene of important labours of St. Paul (see esp. Acts 18 and 19), the traditional home of the aged St. *John, and the scene of the Third General Council of the Church in A.D. 431. During St. Paul's three years' residence in the city, the great riot took place in the theatre so graphically described in Acts 19. 21–41. The belief that St. John the Apostle lived in Ephesus in his old age is widespread, though disputed. An ancient tradition makes the city the scene of his encounter with the heretic *Cerinthus, and the ruins of a large Byzantine church built by *Justinian mark his traditional burial-place. Ephesus was one of the 'Seven Churches' addressed by the Seer in the Apocalypse (Rev. 2. 1–7), the Ephesians being commended for their hatred of the works of the *Nicolaitans (2. 6). The ruins of a double church near the theatre are almost certainly those of the church in which the Council met in A.D. 431. About a mile from the theatre is a cave where the *Seven Sleepers of Ephesus are reputed to have taken refuge during the *Diocletianic persecution. See also Ephesians, Epistle to the; Polycrates, St.

J. T. Wood, Discoveries at Ephesus, including the Site and Remains of the Great Temple of Diana (1877 [1876]; popular). D. G. Hogarth, with others, Excavations at Ephesus. The Archaic Artemisia (British Museum Publication, 1908; atlas in separate vol., 1908). Forschungen in Ephesos veröffentlicht vom Österreichischen archäologischen Institute (Vienna, 1906 ff.). J. Keil, Ephesos. Ein Führer durch die Ruinenstätte und ihre Geschichte (Vienna, 1915; ed. 5, 1964). C. Picard, Éphèse et Claros. Recherches sur les sanctuaires et les cultes de l'Ionie du nord (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxxiii; 1922). F. Miltner, Ephesos. Stadt der Artemis und des Johannes (Vienna, 1958). C. Foss, Ephesus after Antiquity (Cambridge, 1979). W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches in Asia (1904), pp. 210–50. R Tonneau, O.P., 'Éphèse au temps de saint Paul' in R.Bibl., xxxviii (1929), pp. 5–34 and 321–63. [L.] Bürchner in P.W., v (1904), cols. 2773–822, s.v. 'Ephesos'; S. Vailhé, A.A., in C.E., v (1909), p. 490 f., s.v.; P. Antoine in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1076–1104, s.v.; R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 554–61, s.v. Ephèse (1)'; T. Camelot, O.P., in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 457 f., s.v.

EPHESUS, Council of (431). The third General Council, summoned by *Theodosius II in the hope of settling the *Nestorian controversy. With the support of Memnon, Bp. of Ephesus, St. *Cyril of Alexandria, who was the chief opponent of *Nestorius, opened the council on 22 June 431, without waiting for the arrival either of the Syrian bishops, headed by John of *Antioch, who formed the party most likely to take a sympathetic view of Nestorius, or of the legates of the Pope, *Celestine. Nestorius was deposed from his see of *Constantinople and excommunicated, his doctrines condemned, and the Creed of *Nicaea reaffirmed. When they had arrived, the Syrian bishops, joined by *Theodoret and a considerable group who had protested against Cyril's action, held a rival meeting at which Cyril and Memnon were excommunicated. A reconciliation between John and Cyril was finally effected in 433. The council passed eight canons, the first seven dealing with matters arising out of the doctrinal question and the eighth with the jurisdictional rights of *Cyprus. In its rejection of Nestorianism, the council gave formal approval to the title *Theotokos (q.v.).

Earlier texts of 'Acta' pr. in Hardouin, i, cols. 1271–1722; Mansi, iv (1760), cols. 567–1482, v (1761), cols. 7–1022. These are now superseded by the crit. ed. of E. *Schwartz, A.C.O. I (5 parts, 1922–30). Coptic Acts (of little historical value), ed. W. Kraatz (T.U., xxvi, Hft. 2; 1904). I. Rucker, Ephesinische Konzilsakten in armenisch-georgischer Überlieferung (Sb. (Bayr.), 1930, Hft. 3). A. d'Alès, Le Dogme d'Éphèse (1931). I. Rucker, Studien zum Concilium Ephesinum zur 1500-Jahrfeier des dritten ökumenischen Konzils (5 Hfte, privately publd., Oxenbronn über Günzburg a.D., 1930–5). P.-T. Camelot, O.P., Éphèse et Chalcédoine (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, ii; 1962), pp. 13–75 and 191–209. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 287–377. Fliche–Martin, iv (1939), pp. 163–96. A. Grillmeier, S.J., in id.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (1951), esp. pp. 159–64. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 137–63, s.v. 'Éphèse (Concile de)'; id. in E.C., v (1950), cols. 114–19, s.v. 'Efeso II, Concilio di', with reff. to series of artt. in Échos d'Orient and other bibl.; J. Liébaert in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 561–74, s.v. 'Éphèse (2), Concile de', with extensive reff.; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 217–20, s.v., with bibl.

EPHESUS, Robber Council of 449. See Latrocinium.

EPHESUS, Seven Sleepers of. See Seven Sleepers of Ephesus.

EPHOD. A Jewish ecclesiastical vestment of linen and beaten gold, most probably in the form of a waist-cloth with shoulder-straps. It is described in Ex. 28. 6-12 and 39. 2-5. It was worn apparently only by the high priest, but a similar garment entirely of linen was worn by other persons, as by Samuel when serving before the tabernacle at Shiloh (1 Sam. 2. 18), and by David when performing a prophetic dance (2 Sam. 6. 14). Originally the same word was applied to a certain kind of image (frequently in Jgs., e.g. 17. 5).

W. R. Arnold, Ephod and Ark. A Study in the Records and Religion of the Ancient Hebrews (Harvard Theological Studies, iii; 1917), esp. pp. 7–23 and 122–32. K. Budde, 'Ephod und Lade' in Z.A.T.W., xxxix (1921), pp. 1–42. J. Morgenstern, 'The Ark, the Ephod, and the "Tent of Meeting" ', section VII 'The Ephod', in Hebrew Union College Annual, xviii (1943–4), pp. 1–17. H. G. May, 'Ephod and Ariel' in American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, lvi (1939), pp. 44–69, esp. pp. 44–52. K. Elliger, 'Ephod und Choschen. Ein Beitrag zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der hohepriestlichen Ornats' in Vetus Testamentum, viii (1958), pp. 19–35. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 201–4, with bibl. p. 464 f.; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 349–52, with bibl. p. 544. G. F. Moore in E.Bi., ii (1901), cols. 1306–9.

EPHOR (Gk. ἔφορος). In the E. Church, a lay guardian or protector in whose charge monastic property was often vested from the 10th cent. onwards. The practice was much abused, as such property was apt to be diverted to secular purposes, e.g. the enrichment of the ephor himself. The word is used also of the holders of various ecclesiastical offices.

EPHPHATHA. The ceremony in the Roman Baptismal rite in which the celebrant in pronouncing the words 'Ephphatha, that is Be opened' (Mk. 7. 34) touches the ears and mouth of the candidate, praying that he may hear and preach the faith. It is found from an early date in the Baptismal service for Easter Eve at Rome and Milan.

EPHRAEM SYRUS, St. (c. 306–73), Syrian Biblical exegete and ecclesiastical writer. Acc. to Syriac sources he was the son of a pagan priest at Nisibis, his native town; but from indications in his own writings most modern scholars believe that his parents were Christians. He was ordained deacon, perhaps by St. *James of Nisibis; but it is unlikely that he accompanied him to the Council of *Nicaea (325). Syriac authors ascribe to his prayers the miraculous deliverance of Nisibis from the Persians in 338. After the cession of Nisibis to Persia in 363 Ephraem withdrew into the Roman Empire and settled at *Edessa, where most of his extant works were written. Later very unreliable legends report journeys to Egypt, where he is said to have spent eight years and confuted the *Arians, and to the Cappadocian Caesarea, where he is stated to have visited St. *Basil. He became famous for the austerity and sanctity of his life as well as for his learning.

Ephraem's voluminous exegetical, dogmatic, controversial, and ascetical writings are mostly in verse. Their inspiration is Scriptural throughout, but their style, characterized by repetitions and the accumulation of metaphors, is alien to modern taste, though it was much appreciated by his Syrian contemporaries. Among his very varied literary productions are cycles of hymns on the great feasts of the Church and on the Last Things, funeral hymns, and refutations of heretics, esp. *Marcion, *Bardesanes, and *Manes, as well as the 'sceptics', i.e. Arians and *Anomoeans. One of his favourite subjects was the Last Judgement, which he described in terrifying colours. He enjoined devotion to the saints, esp. to the BVM, whose perfect sinlessness he stated in such absolute terms that he has often been invoked as a witness to the Immaculate Conception. He wrote exclusively in Syriac, but his works were translated into Armenian and Gk. at a very early date, and via the latter into Lat. and Slavonic. His liturgical poetry had a great influence on the development of both Syriac and Greek hymnography. Feast day in the E., 28 Jan.; in the W., formerly 1 Feb.; from 1920, when he was declared a Doctor of the Church, 18 June; from 1969, 9 June (10 June in American BCP, 1979). See also Codex Ephraemi.

The standard collection of Ephraem's works by J. S. and S. E. *Assemani and P. B. Mobarek, S.J., ed. Rome, 3 vols. of Syriac texts (1737–46) and 3 vols. of Greek texts (1732–46), is very unsatisfactory. Crit. ed. of Gk. text begun by S. J. Mercati (I, fasc. i, Rome, 1915; all publd.). T. J. Lamy (ed.), S. Ephraem Syri Hymni et Sermones (4 vols., Malines, 1882–1902) contains only works not published in the Roman edition. Crit. ed., with Germ. tr., of many of his hymns, by E. Beck: those De Fide (C.S.C.O., cliv, with tr., clv; 1955), Contra Haereses (ib., clxix, with tr. clxx; 1957), De Paradiso with Contra Julianum (ib., clxxiv, with tr. clxxv; 1957), De Nativitate (ib., clxxxvi, with tr. clxxxvii; 1959), De Virginitate (ib., ccxxiii, with tr. ccxxiv; 1962), De Ieiunio (ib., ccxlvi, with tr. ccxlvii; 1964), and of his Paschahymnen (ib., ccxlviii, with tr. ccxlix; 1964); also by id. of his Carmina Nisibena (ib., ccxviii and ccxl, with tr. ccxix and ccxli; 1961–3), of his Sermones de Fide (ib., ccxii, with tr. ccxiii; 1961) and his Sermo de Domino Nostro (ib., cclxx, with tr. cclxxi; 1966); C. W. Mitchell (ed.), St. Ephrem's Prose Refutations of Mani, Marcion and Bardaisan (Text and Translation Society, 2 vols., 1912–21); commentaries on Gen. and Ex. ed. R. M. Tonneau (C.S.C.O., clii, with Lat. tr. cliii; 1955) and on the Diatessaron, with Fr. tr., by L. Leloir, O.S.B. (Chester Beatty Monographs, viii; Dublin, 1963). Commentaries on Acts and Epp. survive only in Armenian. Eng. trr. of 'Metrical Hymns and Homilies' by H. Burgess (2 vols., 1835), of 'Select Works' by J. B. Morris in L.F., 1847, and of Selections by J. Gwynn in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. II, vol. xiii, pt. 2 (1898), with useful introductory Dissertation. C. Émereau, Saint Éphrem le Syrien: son œuvre littéraire grecque (Paris thesis; 1919). On Gk. and other translations see Dict. Sp., cited below. A. Vööbus, Literary, Critical and Historical Studies in Ephrem the Syrian (Stockholm, 1958). M. P. Roncaglia, 'Essai de bibliographie sur saint Éphrem' in Parole de l'Orient, iv (1973), pp. 343–370. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 343–75; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 343–6. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 31–52. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2; Rome, 1965), pp. 56–83. É. Beck in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 788–800, s.v. 'Éphrem le Syrien' and D. Hemmerdinger-Iliadou–J. Kirchmeyer, S.J., ib., cols. 800–822, s.v. 'Éphrem (2) (Les Versions)'; R. P. Murray, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 220–3, s.v.

EPICLESIS (Gk. ἐπίκλησις). Although the term originally meant 'invocation' and subsequently 'prayer' in general, it has long been commonly used in Christian writings only for the petition for the consecration of the bread and wine in the Eucharist, and it is usually restricted to the form of this petition which asks the Father to send the Holy Spirit upon the bread and wine to make them into the Body and Blood of Christ. Its history and theological significance are highly controversial.

The Apostolic Tradition* of St. Hippolytus (prob. c. 215) contains (in its Latin form) a petition for the illapse of the Holy Spirit upon the elements, without specifying the nature of the change to be effected. A fuller and more apparently consecratory form of epiclesis occurs in the Liturgy of St. *Basil (q.v.) and is implied in the commentary on the liturgy in the Catechetical Lectures of St. *Cyril of Jerusalem (prob. c. 350); during the 4th cent. this type of epiclesis became almost universal in E. liturgies. In the Egyptian Anaphora of St. *Serapion (d. after 360), however, there is an epiclesis asking for the descent of the Logos (or Word) instead of that of the Holy Spirit. Some epicleses ask for the descent of the Holy Spirit on the people as well as on the elements, a prayer related to that for the fruits of communion with which almost all E. liturgies conclude.

In the W. an epiclesis asking for the descent of the Holy Spirit to effect the consecration appears to have been common in the ancient Hispano-Gallican rites. The Roman *Canon of the Mass contains no such explicit mention of the Holy Spirit, though some scholars have sought to detect traces of an epiclesis in the prayer (Quam oblationem) that the bread and wine may be changed into the Body and Blood of Christ which comes before the *Institution narrative, and in the Supplices, asking for the translation of the consecrated elements to the heavenly altar. The three new RC *Eucharistic prayers contain a double epiclesis, before and after the consecration, similar to that found in the Alexandrine Liturgy of St. *Mark; both prayers are explicitly for the operation of the Holy Spirit, the first that the elements may be changed and the second in connexion with the fruits of communion.

T. *Cranmer introduced a reference to the action of the Holy Spirit into the invocation before the Words of Institution in the BCP of 1549 ('With Thy Holy Spirit and Word vouchsafe to bless and sanctify these Thy gifts and creatures of Bread and Wine'). It was removed in 1552 and not reintroduced in 1662. It was restored in the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637, and was used by the *Nonjurors. In the proposed BCP of 1927–8, the Alternative Order for the Communion included an epiclesis after the Words of Institution. All the Eucharistic rites in the American BCP (1979) include an epiclesis either before or after the Words of Institution, while most of those in the ASB have either a single or a double epiclesis. There is also an epiclesis in the Book of *Common Order of the Church of Scotland, in several Free Church liturgies, incl. the 1967 English *Methodist rite, and in that of the Church of *South India.

L. A. Hoppe, Die Epiklesis der griechischen und orientalischen Liturgien und der römische Consekrationskanon (Schaffhausen, 1864). J. T. Franz, Der eucharistische Konsekrationsmoment (1875); R. Buchwald, Weidenauer Studien (1906), pp. 21–56 ('Die Epiklese in der römischen Messe'); E. *Bishop, 'The Moment of Consecration' in R. H. Connolly, O.S.B., The Liturgical Homilies of Narsai (Texts and Studies, viii, No. 1; 1909), pp. 126–63. J. Brinktrine, De Epiclesis Eucharisticae Origine (Rome, 1923). E. G. C. F. Atchley, On the Epiclesis of the Eucharistic Liturgy and in the Consecration of the Font (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxxi; 1935). M. Jugie, A.A., De Forma Eucharistiae. De Epiclesibus Eucharisticis (Rome, 1943). B. Botte, O.S.B., 'L'Épiclèse de l'Anaphore d'Hippolyte' in R.T.A.M., xiv (1947), pp. 241–51; B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'L'Anaphore de Sérapion. Essai d'exégèse' in Muséon, lix (1946), pp. 425–43, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 344–58. E. Stommel, Studien zur Epiklese der römischen Taufwasserweihe (Theophaneia, v; 1950). C. Kern, 'En marge de l'épiclèse' in Irénikon, xxiv (1951), pp. 166–94. G. S. Smit, 'Épiclèse et théologie des sacrements' in Mélanges de Science

Religieuse, xv (1958), pp. 95–136. A. Fortescue in C.E., v (1905), p. 502 f.; S. Salaville, A.A., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 194–300, s.v. 'Épiclèse eucharistique'; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1, 1922), cols. 142–84; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., v (1951), cols. 409–13; J. Laager in R.A.C., v (1962), cols. 583–99, s.v. 'Epiklesis, II. Liturgische'. J. H. McKenna, C.M., Eucharist and the Holy Spirit (Alcuin Club Collections, lvii; 1976).

EPICTETUS (c. 50 – c. 130), *Stoic philosopher. He was probably born at Hierapolis in Phrygia. A slave in the household of *Nero, he attended the lectures of the Stoic Musonius Rufus and later became a freedman. He taught in Rome till expelled by *Domitian c. 90, when he settled at Nicopolis in Epirus. Though he wrote nothing, his discourses were taken down by his disciple, Flavius Arrianus, and issued in two treatises, the longer 'Discourses of Epictetus' ('Επικτήτου Διατριβαί), of which four Books survive, and a shorter and more popular 'Encheiridion'. They reveal him as a religious thinker earnestly seeking for truth and concerned to uphold moral righteousness. His conception of God as the Father of men is more in keeping with belief in a personal and transcendent God than with the Stoic pantheism which he inherited. He stressed the kinship of God and man, the brotherhood of men, and the obligation of moral perfection, to be attained by resignation and renunciation (ἀνέχου καὶ ἀπέχου). The influence of Christian ideas on Epictetus or vice versa has often been discussed, but the resemblances hardly go beyond a striking similarity of moral temper. Only once are the Christians ('Galileans') mentioned in his writings, and then contemptuously.

Best edd. of the Discourses are those of J. Schweighäuser (5 vols., Leipzig, 1799–1800), H. Schenkl (Teubner ed., 1894; ed. 2, 1916), and J. Souilhé, with Fr. tr. (Collection des Universités de France, 2 vols., 1943–63); ed. based on Schenkl, with Eng. tr., by W. A. Oldfather (Loeb, 2 vols., 1926–8); Enchiridion, ed. J. Schweighäuser (Leipzig, 1798). Epictetus's relation to Christianity is discussed by F. W. *Farrar, Seekers after God (1868), pp. 186–256; T. *Zahn, Der Stoiker Epiktet und sein Verhältnis zum Christentum (1894); K. Kuiper, Epictetus en de christlijke Moraal (1906); A. Bonhoeffer, Epiktet und das Neue Testament (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, x; 1911); D. S. Sharp, Epictetus and the New Testament (1914). E. Riondato, Epitteto (Padua, 1965 ff.). W. A. Oldfather, Contributions toward a Bibliography of Epictetus (Urbana, Ill., 1927; supplement ed. Marian Harman, ib., 1952). H. von Arnim in P.W., vi (1909), cols. 123–31, s.v. 'Epiktetos (3)'; A. Jagu, M. Spanneut, and Julien-Eymard d'Angiers, O.F.M.Cap., in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 822–54.

EPICUREANISM. The system of philosophical ethics founded by the Greek thinker Epicurus (342–270 B.C.). Epicurus held that the senses, as the one and only source of all our ideas, provided the sole criterion of all truth. On this basis he reasserted the materialistic atomism of Democritus and denied immortality. He did not reject the existence of gods, but refused to concede their interference in human affairs. The goal of human conduct he sought in pleasure, maintaining that prudence was the chief virtue, as the surest means of attaining happiness. During and after his lifetime his doctrines proved very attractive. Among later Epicureans were Apollodorus, Zeno of Sidon, and (the most famous) the Roman Lucretius. In the NT, Epicureans are referred to in Acts 17. 18. Fragments of many of Epicurus' writings have been recovered from the charred papyri of Herculaneum.

Fragments of Epicurus ed. H. Usener (Leipzig, 1887), P. von der Mühll (Teubner ed., 1922), by C. Bailey with Eng. tr. (Oxford 1926), and G. Arrighetti (Turin, 1960). 'Ethica' ed. by W. Schmid from Pap. Herc. 1251 (Studia Herculanensia, i; 1939) and by C. Diano (Florence, 1946); Letters, also by C. Diano (ib., 1946). A. Vogliano, Epicuri et Epicureorum Scripta in Herculanensibus Papyris Servata (Berlin, 1928). See also id., I resti dell'xi libro del Περὶ φύσεως di Epicuro (Publications de la Société Fouad I de Papyrologie, Textes et Documents, iv; Cairo, 1940). C. Jensen, 'Ein neuer Brief Epikurs wiederhergestellt und erklärt' in Abh. (Gött.), 3. Folge, Nr. 5 (1933). Diogenes Laertius, Lives and Opinions of Eminent Philosophers, x (ed. with Eng. tr. by R. D. Hicks, Loeb, 1925, ii, pp. 528–677). [J.] M. Guyau, La Morale d'Épicure et ses rapports avec les doctrines contemporaines (1878). W. Wallace, Epicureanism (1880); R. D. Hicks, Stoic and Epicurean (1910), pp. 151–311; A. E. *Taylor, Epicurus (1910); C. Bailey, The Greek Atomists and Epicurus. A Study (1928); E. Bignone, L'Aristotele perduto e la formazione filosophica di Epicuro [1936]; A. J. Festugière, O.P., Épicure et ses dieux (1946; ed. 2, 1968; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1955); N. W. DeWitt, Epicurus and his Philosophy (Minneapolis, 1954); P. Merlan, Studies in Epicurus and Aristotle (Klassisch-Philologische Studien, xxii; Wiesbaden, 1960), pp. 1–72; B. Farrington, The Faith of Epicurus (1967). R. D. Hicks in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 324–30, s.v. 'Epicureans'; W. Schmid in R.A.C., v (1962), cols. 681–819, s.v. 'Epikur'.

EPIGONATION (Gk. ἐπιγονάτιον, from ἐπιγουνίς, 'thigh'). In the E. Church, a lozenge-shaped vestment, formed of cardboard covered with cloth and decorated with a cross, hanging from the right side. Its use was originally confined to bishops, but in more recent times it has also come to be worn by *archimandrites and *archpriests.

Braun, L.G., pp. 550–4.

EPIKLESIS. See Epiclesis.

EPIMANIKION (Gk. ἐπί, 'on'; Lat. manica, 'sleeve'). The epimanikia are cuffs, usually of embroidered silk, worn over the ends of the sleeves of the *sticharion by bishops, priests, and deacons in the E. Church. Their use, which dates at least from the 11th cent., was in the 12th cent. still confined to bishops, and hence they may be a development of the cuffs of the bishop's sticharion itself. They seem to have a W. counterpart in the 'manica' referred to in the description of the *Gallican Rite in the Letters attributed to St. *Germanus of Paris.

EPIPHANIUS, St. (c. 315–403), Bp. of Salamis. A native of Palestine, he became an enthusiastic supporter of the monastic movement and founded c. 335 a monastery near Eleutheropolis in Judaea. His repute for earnestness and organization was such that in 367 he was elected by the bishops of Cyprus to become their metropolitan, as Bp. of Salamis. He continued throughout his life an ardent upholder of the faith of *Nicaea, and intolerant of all suspicion of heresy. Of his writings in defence of orthodox belief, the most important was his 'Panarion', commonly known as the 'Refutation of all the Heresies', in which he described and attacked every heresy known to him from the beginning of the Church. Though, like all his works, it is badly constructed and far too receptive of statements and legends which support his position, it preserves much invaluable historical material. In his later life he took an active part in the *Apollinarian and *Melitian controversies, and after meeting St. *Jerome in Rome in 382, joined forces with him in his attack on *Origenism. A visit to *Jerusalem for the purpose in 394 led to serious friction with the bishop, John, in which Jerome also became involved. In 400 he travelled to *Constantinople on behalf of *Theophilus, Bp. of Alexandria, who had expelled the Origenist monks; but, seeing that he was being used as a tool against John *Chrysostom, he set out again for Salamis and died at sea on the way back. Besides the 'Panarion' he also wrote a doctrinal treatise, the 'Ancoratus' (Ἀγκυρωτός), in the MSS. of which the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan creed appears perhaps for the first time, and treatises 'On Measures and Weights' and 'On Gems'. His unbending rigidity, his want of judgement, and his complete inability to understand any who differed from him were reflected in his writings no less than in his life. Feast day, 12 May.

Editio princeps of Epiphanius' chief works by J. Oporinus, Basle, 1544. Much improved text ed. D. *Petavius, S.J., 2 vols., Paris, 1622; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xli-xliii. More recent text by W. Dindorf, 5 vols., Leipzig, 1859–62. Crit. text of 'Ancoratus' and 'Panarion' (or 'Haereses'), ed. K. Holl, in G.C.S., 3 vols., 1915–33. Syr. text of 'De Mensuris et Ponderibus', ed. J. E. Dean (Chicago, 1935); Georg. text of 'De Gemmis', by R. P. Blake and H. de Vis (Studies and Documents, ed. K. *Lake, ii, London, 1934). Bardenhewer, iii (1912), pp. 293–302; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 315–18; J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 384–96, all with bibl. P. Nautin in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 617–31, s.v. 'Épiphane (10), Saint de Salamine'.

EPIPHANY (Gk. ἐπιφάνεια, 'manifestation'; later τὰ Ἐπιφάνια is used of the feast). Feast of the Church on 6 Jan. It originated in the E., where it was celebrated in honour of the Lord's Baptism (sometimes also in connexion with the Nativity) from the 3rd cent. onwards. *Clement of Alexandria (d. c. 217) reports that the *Gnostic sect of the *Basilideans observed a feast in honour of Christ's Baptism around this time of year (Strom., i. 21), and from the 4th cent. there is ample evidence for the feast, which then ranked with *Easter and *Pentecost as one of the three principal festivals of the Church. One of its main features in the E. is the solemn blessing of the baptismal water.

It was introduced into the W. Church in the 4th cent. but here lost its character as a feast of the Baptism of Christ, which it has retained in the E. Church down to the present day. Instead it became associated with the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles in the person of the *Magi, as is borne out by the Homilies of St. *Leo on the 'Theophania' (an alternative name of the feast). In the Mass and Office the Magi were given the chief place, though mention is also made of the Baptism of Christ and of the miracle at *Cana. In 1955 both the Octave and Vigil of the Epiphany were abolished, but the Sunday after Epiphany was made a separate feast of the Baptism, which had figured largely in the liturgy of the Octave. In England the Sovereign makes offerings of gold, frankincense, and myrrh in the *Chapel Royal on the feast.

John, Marquess of Bute–E. A. W. Budge, The Blessing of the Waters on the Eve of the Epiphany. The Greek, Latin, Syriac, Coptic, and Russian Versions edited or translated from the Original Texts (1901). H. Usener, Das Weihnachtsfest (Religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen, i: 1889; ed. 2 by H. *Lietzmann, 1911). K. Holl, 'Der Ursprung des Epiphanienfestes' in Sb. (Berl.), 1917, pp. 402–38, repr. in Holl's Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, ii (1928), pp. 123–54. B. Botte, O.S.B., Les Origines de la Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Louvain, 1932). H. Frank, 'Zur Geschichte von Weihnachten und Epiphanie' in J.L.W., xii (1934), pp. 145–56; xiii (1935), pp. 1–39. Christine Mohrmann, Epiphania (lecture; Nijmegen–Utrecht, 1953). J. Lemarié, O.S.B., La Manifestation du Seigneur. La liturgie de Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Lex Orandi, xxiii; 1957), esp. pp. 231–441. A. J. Vermeulen, 'Le Développement sémasiologique d' Ἐπιφάνεια et la fête de l'Épiphanie' in Græcitas Christianorum Primæva, Suppl. i (1964), pp. 7–44. J. Mossay, Les Fêtes de Noël et d'Épiphanie d'après les sources littéraires cappadociennes du IVe siècle (Textes et Études Liturgiques, iii; 1965). Noël-Épiphanie. Retour du Christ. Semaine liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge (Lex Orandi, xl; 1967). F. Nikolasch, 'Zum Ursprung des Epiphaniefestes' in E.L., lxxxii (1968), pp. 393–429, with bibl. C. C. Martindale, S.J., in C.E., v (1909), pp. 504–6; E. Pax in R.A.C., v (1962), cols. 899–909, s.v. 'Épiphanie, e. Liturgie', with bibl. col. 908 f.

EPISCOPACY (Gk. ἐπίσκοπος, lit. 'overseer'), the system of Church Government by Bishops. Where it prevails it is commonly held to be the continuation of the institution of the *Apostolate by Christ. In the NT the word ἐπίσκοπος (AV, 'bishop') appears to be used of the same office as πρεσβύτερος ('presbyter'). See Bishop.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH, PROTESTANT. See Protestant Episcopal Church.

EPISCOPALIAN. Properly a member of any Church ruled by bishops (episcopi), but esp. of the *Anglican Communion as opposed to non-episcopal bodies, e.g. the Church of *Scotland.

EPISCOPI VAGANTES (Lat., 'wandering bishops'). The name given to persons who have been consecrated bishop in an irregular or clandestine manner or who, having been regularly consecrated, have been excommunicated by the Church that consecrated them and are in communion with no recognized see. A man is also included in this group when the number in communion with him is so small that his sect appears to exist solely for his own sake. W., but not E., theology is generally ready to admit that such consecrations are valid. In recent times the main streams of succession deriving from 'episcopi vagantes' are those founded by A. H. *Mathew, J. R. *Vilatte, and an Armenian, Leon Chechemian, and the principal sects founded and governed by them are the 'American Catholic Church' (Vilatte), the 'Old Roman Catholic Church' (Mathew), the 'Negro Orthodox Church' (Vilatte), and the 'Free Protestant Church of England' (Chechemian). In addition to these are smaller sects and stray bishops whose orders have been obtained by dubious means or come from doubtful sources, as well as certain *Theosophist bishops who trace their orders to Mathew.

A. J. Macdonald, Episcopi Vagantes in Church History (1945); H. R. T. Brandreth, Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (1947; revised ed., 1961); P. F. Anson, Bishops at Large (1964).

EPISCOPIUS. The assumed name of Simon Bischop (1583–1643), who systematized the typical tenets of *Arminianism. Born at Amsterdam, he studied at *Leyden (1600–6), where he came under the influence of *Arminius. In 1612 he succeeded F. *Gomar as professor of theology at Leyden. In 1619 he and twelve other *Remonstrants were condemned by the Synod of *Dort and expelled from the country. Episcopius then went to the Spanish Netherlands, where he wrote an Arminian confession of faith (published 1622). After a few years in France (1621–6), where he continued the exposition of his views, he became minister of the Arminian Church in Rotterdam and ultimately (1634) was appointed Rector and Professor of Theology in the Arminian College, Amsterdam. He emphasized the practical nature of Christianity, affirmed that the Church is based upon a minimum of speculative beliefs, remonstrated against current Calvinist dogmas of *predestination and *original sin, stressed the responsibility of man, not God, for sin, and taught a reduced view of the divinity of Christ and a *subordinationist doctrine of the Trinity.

Opera Theologica, ed. posthumously by S. Curcellaeus and P. van Limborch (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1650–65). Life by P. van Limborch (Amsterdam, 1701). F. Calder, Memoirs of Simon Episcopius (1835). A. H. Haentjens, Simon Episcopius als Apologeet van het Remonstratisme (Leyden, 1899). H. C. Rogge in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 422–4; J. Dutilleul in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 367–9.

EPISTEMOLOGY (Gk. ἐπιστήμη, 'knowledge'), also known as Theory of Knowledge. The philosophical discipline which examines the nature and validity of human cognition.

EPISTLE. In Christian worship it was long customary for two passages of Scripture to be read or sung at the Eucharist; the former came to be known as the 'Epistle', doubtless because it was normally taken from the NT Epistles, though occasionally from the OT, Acts or Rev. In early times, both in the E. and W., the Gospel was preceded by several lessons, of which the Epistle was the last. In the Roman rite, with certain exceptions, only the Epistle survived until 1969; OT readings were then restored on many days, and it is now fairly common on weekdays to have no lesson from the non-Gospel parts of the NT. Until the 8th cent. the reading of the Epistle was assigned to the *lector; it then fell to the *subdeacon and came to be regarded as his special function; in modern times the duty is often undertaken by a layman or by the celebrant himself. The Epistle was formerly read from the *ambo or *rood-screen where such existed. In early times the selection of Epistles was made to provide continuity from Sunday to Sunday; traces of this 'lectio continua' survived, and the principle has been partially restored in the RC Church. The series of Epistles in the BCP was largely taken over from the *Sarum Missal. In the C of E the ASB provides an OT lesson, Epistle and Gospel throughout the year, but allows the OT lesson or the Epistle to be omitted. The reader or chanter of the Epistle has sometimes been known as the 'Epistoler'; in the *Canons of 1603 (can. 24), the form 'Epistler' occurs. The 'Epistolary' was the medieval name for the book containing the Epistles.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 501–38; Eng. tr., i, pp. 391–421, with reff. W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, iii, The Roman Epistle-Lectionary (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxxii; 1935). G. Godu in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 245–344, s.v. 'Épîtres'. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), passim.

EPISTLE OF THE APOSTLES, The. See Testament of Our Lord in Galilee.

EPISTOLAE OBSCURORUM VIRORUM. The famous pamphlet in the dispute between J. *Reuchlin and the *Dominicans of Cologne. It appeared in two parts (1515 and 1517), the first written chiefly by Crotus Rubianus (1486–1540), the second almost entirely by Ulrich von *Hutten (1488–1523). The title is a parody of the collection of genuine letters to Reuchlin published by him in 1514 and entitled Clarorum virorum epistolae. These imaginary letters are supposed to be addressed to a real person, Ortwin Gratius, who, though a humanist, belonged to the party of the Dominicans. Written in a style parodying the most monkish Latin, they are a witty and bitter satire on the methods of later Scholasticism, on the religious practices of their age, and on many ecclesiastical institutions and doctrines. Their great popularity contributed much to discredit the old theological learning and its representatives.

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum. The Latin Text with an English Rendering, Notes and an historical Introduction by F. G. Stokes (1909); Stokes's Eng. tr. (only) was repr. under the title On the Eve of the Reformation, with a new introd. by H. Holborn (New York–London, 1964).

EPITAPHION (Gk. ἐπιτάφιον, 'belonging to burial'). In the E. Church, a richly embroidered veil, on which is represented the scene of Christ's burial. It is carried in procession at the end of Vespers on Good Friday, and again at the end of *Orthros on Holy Saturday. It stands in the centre of the Church, decorated with flowers, from Good Friday until immediately before the Orthros of the Resurrection at Easter Midnight; it is then carried into the sanctuary and placed on the altar, where it remains until the close of the season of Easter, on the eve of Ascension Day.

EPITRACHELION (Gk. ἐπιτραχήλιον; from τράχηλος, 'neck'), also Peritrachelion. The form of the stole worn by the priest in the E. Church. It is a long strip of material fastened in front and decorated with crosses and a fringe. It is to be distinguished from the *orarion, which is the liturgical garment of the deacon.

EQUIPROBABILISM. The moral system defended by St. *Alphonsus Liguori (q.v.). It sought to steer a mid-course between *Probabiliorism and *Probabilism, holding that the stricter course should be followed if the question concerns the cessation of the law, while the laxer course may be pursued if the question is whether the law ever existed.

ERA OF THE MARTYRS. See Diocletianic Era.

ERASMUS, St. See Elmo, St.

ERASMUS, DESIDERIUS (prob. 1469–1536), 'Roterodammensis' or 'Roterodamus', humanist. There is still doubt about the date of his birth, but he was probably the (illegitimate) son of Rogerius Gerardus. Christened 'Herasmus', he took in adult life the name of 'Desiderius' as a Latinized form of 'Erasmus', itself a supposed Greek equivalent of his baptismal name. He went to school first at Gouda and then to the '*Brethren of the Common Life' at Deventer, where the humanist, Alexander Hegius, was one of his masters. Despite considerable reluctance, he became an *Augustinian canon at St. Gregory's, Steyn, nr. Gouda, in 1486, and eagerly began to read the Classics and the Fathers. In 1492 he was ordained priest. Finding about this time a protector in Henry of Bergen, Bp. of Cambrai, with the agreement of his superiors he left his monastery. In 1495 he began to study at Paris, residing at first at the College of Montaigu. In 1499 he accompanied his pupil, William Blount, 4th Baron Mountjoy (d. 1534), who afterwards became his patron, to England. At Oxford he was deeply influenced by J. *Colet, who encouraged his dislike of Scholasticism and directed him to the study of the NT. Having returned to the Continent in 1500, he went to Paris and Louvain, where he refused a professorship, and instead began a profound study of Greek. After another visit to England, during which he wrote his Latin translation of the NT, he made his way to Italy. Despite his three-year sojourn (1506–9), he did not really find the hoped-for intellectual stimulus in Italy. On the accession of *Henry VIII (1509), Mountjoy induced him to return to England and Erasmus stayed for a time in T. *More's house, where he wrote his witty Μωρίας Ἐγκώμιον. Drawn to Cambridge by John *Fisher, Erasmus was the first teacher of Greek there, and also lectured in divinity, possibly succeeding Fisher in the newly created Lady Margaret professorship of theology. In 1516 he accepted an invitation to Brussels to the court of the future *Charles V, who made him a royal councillor. Having been freed from all his obligations to his monastery by a Papal brief in 1517, he resumed his wanderings, but in 1521 made his permanent abode at Basle, in the house of the famous printer, J. *Froben. In order to keep his freedom he refused many brilliant offers, including one from Francis I at Paris, another from the Archduke Ferdinand at Vienna, and a third from Henry VIII to return to England. When, in 1529, the Reformation was introduced at Basle, he fled to Freiburg im Breisgau, where he lived till 1535, continually advocating religious peace. He died at Basle, whither he had gone to supervise the printing of his edition of *Origen.

Among Erasmus's earliest works are the Adagia (1500), a collection of Greek and Latin proverbs, successively enlarged in later editions, and the Enchiridion Militis Christiani (1504), in which he shows the usefulness of scholarship for the formation of the Christian. His well-known Μωρίας Ἐγκώμιον, seu Laus Stultitiae (1509), is a bitter satire on monasticism and the corruptions of the Church and helped to prepare the way for the Reformation. In 1516 appeared his celebrated edition of the Greek NT with his own translation into classical Latin. Though based on insufficient MS. material and not without bias, it exercised a profound influence on theological studies and was several times revised during Erasmus's lifetime. In 1524 he entered the Reformation controversy by his Diatribe de Libero Arbitrio, in which he emphasized the importance of human free-will against M. *Luther. Luther replied in his De Servo Arbitrio (1525), which Erasmus answered in its turn by his Hyperaspistes (1526). Next to his Greek NT, his most important work was probably his attempt to put into print reliable texts of the Fathers, among them his favourite St. *Jerome (9 vols., 1516), St. *Cyprian (1520), *Arnobius (1522), St. *Hilary (1523), St. John *Chrysostom (various works at different dates), St. *Irenaeus (1526), St. *Ambrose (1527), St. *Augustine (1528–9), St. *Basil (1532), and a Latin version of *Origen (1536), though in a few of these Erasmus's own share probably did not go much further than writing the prefaces.

The most renowned scholar of his age, Erasmus was a man of vast if not always deep erudition, of uncommon intellectual powers, but averse to metaphysical speculation, esp. in its medieval and Scholastic forms. Though he had himself paved the way for the Reformation by his merciless satires on the doctrines and institutions of the Church, his scholarly character, which abhorred violence and sought tranquillity, prevented him from joining the Protestants, and threw him back on the tradition of the Church as the safeguard of stability. In the later years of his life he became suspect to both parties. Luther inveighed against him as a sceptic and Epicurean, and on the other side, though the Popes, esp. *Leo X, had been favourable to him, the university of Paris censured various writings of his between 1525 and 1542. After his death his writings were forbidden by *Paul IV in 1558; this prohibition was partly modified by the Council of *Trent, but reimposed in toto by *Sixtus V in 1590. Later editions of the *Index long continued to forbid certain works and to permit others only if expurgated.

The editio princeps of his Works was made by his friend and disciple, Beatus *Rhenanus (9 vols., Basle, 1540–1). The next was edited by Jean *Leclerc (10 vols., Leyden, 1703–6). A new edition of his Opera Omnia is being edited by an international committee of scholars (Amsterdam, 1969 ff.; c. 30 volumes expected). A pioneer work on his Letters by F. M. Nichols (3 vols., London, 1901–17) has been superseded by the complete collection of over 3,000 letters, edited by P. S. Allen (11 vols., Oxford, 1906–47 + index by Barbara Flower and Elisabeth Rosenbaum, 1958). Eng. tr. of his Collected Works by R. A. B. Mynors and others (Toronto, &c., 1974 ff.); an index of publd. translations into modern languages of single letters is provided by A. Gerlo–F. de Raeve, Répertoire des lettres traduites d'Érasme (Brussels, 1969). The valuable prefaces written by Erasmus for his editions of the Fathers and NT and for certain other works have been collected by R. Peters and repr. in facsimile (Menston, Yorks, 1970). His early impact on England can be studied from E. J. Devereux, English Translations of Erasmus to 1700 (Oxford Bibliographical Society, Occasional Publications, iii; Oxford, 1968).

There is a vast literature on Erasmus. Modern lives available in English include those of J. A. *Froude (London, 1894), P. Smith (New York and London, 1923), J. Huizinga (Haarlem, 1924; Eng. tr., 1924; also with translation of some letters, London, 1952), and R. H. Bainton (New York, 1969; London, 1970). Margaret M. Phillips, Erasmus and the Northern Renaissance (1949); E. E. Reynolds, Thomas More and Erasmus (1965). E. W. Kohle, Die Theologie des Erasmus (2 vols., Basle, 1966). J. C. Margolin, Quatorze Années de bibliographie érasmienne (1936–1949) (1969); id., Douze Années de bibliographie érasmienne (1950–1961) (1963), both with excellent French summaries of the works listed.

ERASTIANISM. The ascendancy of the State over the Church in ecclesiastical matters, so named from the Swiss theologian, Thomas Erastus (Germ. Lieber or Lüber; 1524–83).

Born at Baden in Switzerland, Erastus studied philosophy and medicine and was appointed professor of medicine at Heidelberg in 1558. When the extreme *Calvinists endeavoured to introduce their 'Holy Discipline' in the Palatinate, Erastus wrote against them his Explicatio Gravissimae Quaestionis, which, however, was not published until 1589 in London. In Erastus's view, the civil authorities in a state which professes but one religion have the right and the duty to exercise jurisdiction in all matters whether civil or ecclesiastical, and to punish all offences; and even such purely ecclesiastical sanctions as *excommunication are subject to their approval.

The book was translated into English under the title The Nullity of Church Censures in 1659, but its ideas had begun to take root in this country from the end of the 16th cent. Among the earliest representatives of Erastian tenets is R. *Hooker, who defends the supremacy of the secular power in his Ecclesiastical Polity (1594). Erastian ideas came to the fore in the '*Westminster Assembly' in opposition to the Independents, who attempted to make themselves completely free from the state. They were somewhat modified when applied to the modern secularized state as visualized, e.g., by T. *Hobbes. In this case the representatives of the state, though themselves professing any or no religion, assert their right to legislate on religious matters concerning the Established Church, e.g., when, in 1928, the revised Prayer Book was rejected by Parliament. In this modified sense the term is now generally understood.

J. N. *Figgis, 'Erastus and Erastianism' in J.T.S., ii (1901), pp. 66–101. A. Bonnard, Thomas Éraste, 1524–1583, et la discipline ecclésiastique (thesis, Lausanne, 1894); Ruth Wessel-Roth, Thomas Erastus. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der reformierten Kirche und zur Lehre der Staatssouveränität (Veröffentlichungen des Vereins für Kirchengeschichte in der evang. Landeskirche Badens, xv; 1954). J. N. Figgis in D.E.C.H., p. 206 f., s.v.

ERCONWALD (d. c. 693), Bp. of London. Born of a princely family, he devoted his fortune to the founding of two religious houses, over one of which, that at Barking, he placed his sister, St. *Ethelburga, and over the other at Chertsey he himself acted as abbot. In 675 he succeeded Wini as Bp. of London and proved himself a pious and able prelate. He was buried in *St. Paul's Cathedral, where his tomb soon became a centre of veneration. Feast day, 30 Apr.

The principal authority is Bede, H.E., iv. 6. W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 177 f., s.v. 'Erkenwald'.

ERIC OF AUXERRE. See Heiric of Auxerre.

ERIGENA, JOHN SCOTUS (c. 810–c. 877), philosopher. An Irishman, he went abroad and gained the patronage of Charles the Bald, by whom he was made head of the palace school at Laon. He took a notable part in two theological disputes—the controversy on *predestination centring in *Gottschalk, and that on the *Eucharist, initiated by *Paschasius Radbertus. The latter years of his life are very obscure. The later tradition that he was invited to England by King *Alfred and taught at the abbey of *Malmesbury rests on a mistaken identification with a later John made by *William of Malmesbury.

His philosophy, which was suspected of heterodoxy only at a much later date, is an attempted reconciliation of the *Neoplatonist idea of emanation with the Christian idea of creation. In his greatest work, Periphyseon or De Divisione Naturae, Erigena urged that Nature should be divided into four categories. First, Nature which is not created but creates, i.e. God; secondly, Nature which is created and which creates, i.e. the world of primordial causes or Platonic ideas; thirdly, Nature which is created and which does not create, i.e. things perceived through the senses; and lastly, Nature which neither creates nor is created, i.e. God, to whom all things must in the end return. Thus the world was held to begin and end with God. There is a strong savour of pantheism about his teaching; and the treatise was condemned at *Paris in 1210 and again by *Honorius III at Sens in 1225. In his De Praedestinatione, written against Gottschalk, he argued that in reality, i.e. for God, evil is non-existent, and in consequence sin and its punishment are corollaries, the sin bearing the punishment in itself.

A solitary luminary, Scotus was a deeply original thinker and a great scholar. He did an important work in translating the writings of *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite into Latin and bringing them to the notice of his successors. He also translated the Ambigua of St. *Maximus the Confessor and the De Hominis Opificio and De Imagine of St. *Gregory of Nyssa; and wrote a number of exegetical works.

Collected Works, ed. H. J. Floss for J. P. Migne, PL, cxxii, 125–1244. Crit. edd. of Periphyseon (De Divisione Naturae), with Eng. tr., by I. P. Sheldon-Williams and L. Bieler (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, vii, ix; Dublin, 1968–72); of his comm. on St. John by E. Jeauneau (S.C., cli; 1969); of his poetry by L. Traube in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 518–553, with appendix, pp. 554–6; two letters, ed. E. Dümmler, ib., Epistolae, vi (1925), pp. 158–62; full text of his commentary on the De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii of Martianus Capella first ed. Cora E. Lutz (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication xxxiv; Cambridge, Mass., 1939); his Expositiones super Ierarchiam Caelestem, ed. H. F. Dondaine, O.P., in A.D.L.M.A., xvii and xviii (1951), pp. 245–302, and by J. Barbet (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xxxi; 1975); his De Divina Praedestinatione, ed. G. Madec, ib., I; 1978); his translation of Gregory of Nyssa's De Imagine ed. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in R.T.A.M., xxxii (1965), pp. 205–62; his commentary on the Opuscula Sacra of *Boethius by E. K. Rand (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, i, Hft. 2; 1906); the authenticity of the ascription of this work to Erigena has been challenged by M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., 'Le plus ancien commentaire des "Opuscula sacra" et son origine' in R.T.A.M., iii (1931), pp. 237–72; H. Silvestre, 'Le Commentaire inédit de Jean Scot Érigène au mètre ix du livre III du "De Consolatione Philosophiae" de Boèce' in R.H.E., xlvii (1952), pp. 44–122. E. K. Rand, 'The Supposed Autograph of John the Scot' in University of California Publications in Classical Philology, v (1920), pp. 135–41, with plates [fasc. 8]. T. Christlieb, Leben und Lehre des Johannes Scotus Erigena (1860); J. Huber, Johannes Scotus Erigena (Munich, 1861); Alice Gardner, Studies in John the Scot (1900); H. Bett, Johannes Scotus Erigena (1925). M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., Jean Scot Érigène. Sa vie, son œuvre, sa pensée (Universitas Catholica Lovaniensis. Dissertationes . . . Ser. II, xxvi; 1933), with bibl. M. dal Pra, Scoto Eriugena ed il neoplatonismo medievale (Storia Universale della Filosofia, xxi; 1941). J. Dräseke, Johannes Scotus Erigena und dessen Gewährsmänner in seinem Werke De Divisione Naturae Libri V (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, ix, Hft. 2; 1902). P. Meyvaert, O.S.B., 'The Exegetical Treatises of Peter the Deacon and Eriugena's Latin Rendering of the Ad Thalassium of Maximus the Confessor' in Sacris Erudiri, xiv (1963), pp. 130–48; M. Cappuyns, 'Glose inédite de Jean Scot sur un passage de Maxime' in R.T.A.M., xxxi (1964), pp. 320–24, with text; id., 'Les "Bibli Vulfadi" et Jean Scot Érigène', ib., xxxiii (1966), pp. 137–9. I. P. Sheldon-Williams, 'A Bibliography of the Works of Johannes Scottus Eriugena' in J.E.H., x (1959), pp. 198–224. Überweg, ii, pp. 166–77, with bibl. p. 693 f. F. Vernet in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 401–34, s.v. 'Érigène', with bibl.; B. Nardi in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 162–6, s.v. 'Scoto Eriugena, Giovanni'.

ERNESTI, JOHANN AUGUST (1707–81), German *Lutheran theologian. For the first part of his career he was chiefly engaged in classical teaching, and brought out several famous editions of ancient authors. After holding professorships in Leipzig in non-religious subjects, he became in 1759 a theological professor there. His chief importance lies in his attempt to reconcile the theological tradition of his Church with historical criticism of the Bible, in opposition alike to uncritical rationalism and to mystical and allegorical interpretation. He insisted that the meaning of Scripture must be determined by philological and grammatical considerations and not by dogmatic presuppositions. His principal work was his Institutio interpretis Novi Testamenti (1761).

Collected works in Opuscula Oratoria, Orationes, Prolusiones et Elogia (Leipzig, 1762), Opuscula Philologica Critica

(ib., 1764; ed. 2, 1776), Opuscula Theologica (ib., 1773) and Opuscula Varii Argumenti (ib., 1794). Eulogy by A. W. Ernesti is appended to the Opusculorum Oratoriorum Novum Volumen (ib., 1791), pp. 253–72. J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, iii (1908), pp. 11–13. G. Heinrici in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 469–74.

ERRINGTON, GEORGE (1804–86), titular RC Abp. of Trebizond. A native of Yorkshire, he was educated from 1814 to 1821 at St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw. In 1821 he entered the *English College in Rome, and in 1827 was made doctor of theology and ordained priest. He was appointed vice-rector of the English College in 1832, but had to resign this post on account of a breakdown in his health. During the next eight years he travelled, mainly in France and Spain. In 1840 he returned to England with N. P. S. *Wiseman, and from 1843 to 1847 was president of St. Mary's College, Oscott. In 1848 he was sent as a missionary priest to Liverpool, and in 1849 to Salford. After the re-establishment of the RC hierarchy (1850) he was made Bp. of Plymouth in 1851, but left his diocese in 1855, when he was appointed coadjutor to Wiseman and titular Abp. of Trebizond, with the right of succession to the see of *Westminster. During the following years his relations with Wiseman became strained owing to his coolness towards the converts from the *Oxford Movement, and esp. to H. E. *Manning and his Community of the Oblates of St. Charles. In 1860 the cardinals, acting, it has been supposed under Manning's influence, advised Errington's removal. After he rejected a proposal of *Pius IX that he should resign, his connexion with Westminster was severed by the Pope in 1862. Though twice offered important sees elsewhere, Errington refused to leave England, still hoping to secure succession to Westminster after Wiseman's death. In 1869–70 he took part in the *Vatican Council, where he was one of the signatories of the Anti-Infallibility Petition. After his return from Rome in 1870 he went to Prior Park, where he spent his remaining years as tutor of the theological students of St. Paul's College.

C. Kent in D.N.B., xvii (1889), p. 398.

ERSKINE, EBENEZER (1680–1754), founder of the Scottish Secession Church. From 1703 to 1731 he was minister of Portmoak. Here he refused to take the Oath of Abjuration of the Pretender imposed by the Act of 1712, declining to do so, however, on the ground of its *Erastian form rather than through personal allegiance to the Stuart cause. In 1731 he was made minister of the third charge of Stirling, and elected moderator of the Synod of Stirling and Perth. A dispute in which he unsuccessfully maintained the rights of the laity in Church patronage led him to secede in 1733 and form an 'associate presbytery'. In 1736 he issued a 'judicial testimony' against the Established Church, and in 1740 he was formally deposed from his charge. He thereupon founded the Secession Church, which, however, as a separate body was soon itself hampered by schisms, in the course of one of which Erskine was 'deposed from the ministry' by his opponents (1748). He continued to minister at Stirling till his death.

Sermons and Discourses (4 vols., 1762). J. Ker and J. L. Watson, The Erskines (1880). Study by H. Watt in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 106–18. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xvii (1889), pp. 404–7.

ERSKINE, THOMAS (1788–1870), Scottish religious thinker. Erskine was born and lived at Linlathen, Angus. He was brought up by his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Graham of Airth Castle, a strict Episcopalian, and educated at Edinburgh university. In 1810 he was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates. On succeeding to the family estates at Linlathen in 1816 he gave up the bar and devoted himself to the study of theology, making personal contacts with religious and philosophical thinkers of diverse views in many countries. He developed very liberal opinions, finding the true meaning of Christianity mainly in its conformity with man's spiritual and ethical needs. In 1831 he warmly took up the cause of J. McLeod *Campbell after his deposition by the General Assembly for teaching the universal atonement. In England he was attracted to the teaching of F. D. *Maurice. Erskine never severed formal connexion with the Church of Scotland, though he used to read the service of the BCP. His writings included Remarks on the Internal Evidence for the Truth of Revealed Religion (1820), an Essay on Faith (1822), The Unconditional Freeness of the Gospel (1828), and The Brazen Serpent (1831). His letters were of unusual grace and distinction.

W. Hanna, Letters of Thomas Erskine of Linlathen (2 vols., 1877). H. F. Henderson, Erskine of Linlathen. Selections and Biography (1899). W. Benham in D.N.B., xvii (1889), p. 444 f.

ESCHATOLOGY (from Gk. ἔσχατος, 'last', and λόγος, 'discourse'), the doctrine of the last things. The term, which does not seem to have been used in England before the 19th cent., connotes the part of systematic theology which deals with the final destiny both of the individual soul and of mankind in general. In the OT eschatological teaching is closely bound up with the Messianic hope. It is contained mostly in the later books, esp. in *Daniel, but also in many of the prophets, e.g. *Isaiah, *Ezekiel, *Zechariah, some of the *Psalms (e.g. 49 and 73), and the latter parts of *Job. It plays a far more important part in the apocryphal books such as the Bk. of *Jubilees and the Bk. of *Enoch. In the NT it is the subject of many of the Lord's Parables, e.g. those of the Tares among the Wheat and of the Drag Net, and in Mk. 13 and Mt. 24 it is the dominant theme. St. *Paul often treats of it, esp. in 1 and 2 Thess., and it is the main subject of the vividly depicted apocalypses in the Bk. of Rev.

When the eschatological predictions were not fulfilled in the literal sense expected by the first Christians, attempts were made either to interpret the Biblical teaching along allegorical lines or to translate it into individual, as opposed to cosmic, terms (the 'Four Last Things'). Towards the end of the 19th cent. J. *Weiss again emphasized the centrality of the eschatological element in the teaching of Christ and A. *Schweitzer tried to interpret the whole of His teaching on the assumption that He expected the end of the world in the immediate future. Eschatological considerations are also a dominant factor in the teaching of K. *Barth and the school of '*Dialectical Theology', which sees the life of the individual Christian and of the Church as a series of 'decisions' invested with an eschatological character. More recently, in reaction against the excessive emphasis on futurist eschatology in Schweitzer's works, attempts have been made to show that Christ regarded the Kingdom as having already arrived with His ministry (R. *Otto and C. H. *Dodd: 'realized eschatology') or at least having been inaugurated by it (O. *Cullmann and W. G. Kümmel).

Of the innumerable studies on the subject generally may be mentioned S. D. F. Salmond, The Christian Doctrine of Immortality (1895); F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life (1912); J. Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934); F. Holmstrom, Das eschatologische Denken der Gegenwart (Germ. tr., 1936; orig. in Swedish); A. E. *Taylor, The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938); T. F. Glasson, His Appearing and His Kingdom. The Christian Hope in the Light of its History (1953); J. E. Fison, The Christian Hope (1954); J. A. T. Robinson, Jesus and His Coming. The Emergence of a Doctrine (1957); R. *Bultmann, History and Eschatology (Gifford Lectures, 1955; Edinburgh, 1957); R. Schnackenburg, Gottes Herrschaft und Reich (Freiburg, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963; ed. 2 from Germ. ed. 4 of 1965, 1968).

On the Biblical teaching, besides the works of A. Schweitzer and K. Barth (qq.v.), important studies include H. *Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit (1895); H. Gressmann, Die Ursprung der israelitisch-jüdischen Eschatologie (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, vi; 1905); H. P. Müller, Ursprünge und Strukturen alttestamentlicher Eschatologie (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., cix; 1969). R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism and in Christianity (Jowett Lectures for 1898–9; 1899; ed. 2, 1913); P. Volz, Jüdische Eschatologie von Daniel bis Akiba (1903; new ed. as Die Eschatologie der jüdischen Gemeinde im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter, 1934). W. O. E. Oesterley, The Doctrine of the Last Things, Jewish and Christian (1908). J. Weiss, Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes (1892; ed. 2, 1900). H. A. A. Kennedy, St. Paul's Conceptions of the Last Things (1904). R. Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934; Eng. tr., 1938); C. H. Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936), esp. Appendix on 'Eschatology and History', pp. 193–240. A. N. Wilder, Eschatology and Ethics in the Teaching of Jesus (New York, 1939; revised ed., 1950); W. G. Kümmel, Verheissung und Erfüllung. Untersuchungen zur eschatologischen Verkündigung Jesu (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, vi; 1945; ed. 2, 1953; Eng. tr., 1957); O. Cullmann, Christus und die Zeit (Zürich, 1946; Eng. tr., 1951); J. Marsh, The Fulness of Time (1952). N. Perrin, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus (1963); id., Rediscovering the Teaching of Jesus (1967). G. E. Ladd, Jesus and the Kingdom. The Eschatology of Biblical Realism (New York, 1964; London, 1966). A. B. *Davidson in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 734–41, s.v.; R. H. Charles in E.Bi., ii (1901), cols. 1335–92, s.v.; A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1331–1419, s.v. 'Parousie', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Parousia.

ESDRAS, Books of. 'Esdras' is the Greek and Latin form of *Ezra. In the *Septuagint there are two books of this title,—Esdras A, a Greek book based on parts of 2 Chron., Ez. and Neh., with an interpolated story not extant in Hebrew; and Esdras B, a straightforward rendering of the Hebrew Ezra-Neh. (treated as one book). In the current form of the *Vulgate these are increased to four, viz.: I and II Esdras, i.e. St. *Jerome's rendering of Ezra and Neh., treated as separate books; III Esdras, the *Old Latin version of Esdras A; and IV Esdras, another book not extant in Greek (see below). For the original Vulgate Jerome deliberately confined himself to the first two of these, rejecting the other two as uncanonical (Praef. in Esd., c. Vigil. 7); but all four books are commonly included (with some confusion in the numbering) in Latin biblical MSS. In 1546 the Council of *Trent (sess. iv) finally rejected III and IV Esdras from the RC *Canon, and in subsequent editions of the Vulgate they appear (with the Prayer of *Manasses) as an Appendix following the NT. In the *Geneva Bible (1560) and subsequent English Versions, I and II Esdras of the Vulgate are entitled 'Ezra' and 'Nehemiah', while III and IV Esdras are the '1' and '2' Esdras of the Apocrypha.

1 ESDRAS (i.e. Esdras A of the LXX, III Esdras of the Vulgate, or The Greek Ezra) is mainly composed of matter taken from the Heb. canonical books, viz.:

(a) 1–2 are taken from 2 Chron. 35 and 36, Ez. 1 and 4. 7–24, and contain nothing original.

(b) 3. 1–5. 6: a story of the competition of three young men of the bodyguard of Darius in solving the riddle 'What thing is strongest?' The victory is found to rest with neither 'wine' nor 'the king' nor 'women', but with 'truth'. This leads on to a speech by Zerubbabel (see Zechariah), in favour of monotheism as the worship of the God of Truth. Adjudged the winner, Zerubbabel receives as his prize from Darius royal assistance for the Jews in their rebuilding of the Temple.

(c) 5. 7–9. 55: a list of the returning exiles (Ez. 2) and subsequent narrative concerning Ezra, taken from Ez. 3. 1–4.5 and 5–10, Neh. 7.73–8.13.

It was formerly held that 'the Greek Ezra' was a re-editing of Esdras B found in the Septuagint, i.e. the straightforward Greek version of Ezra-Neh. (E. *Schurer), or of some other Greek translation (H. *Ewald); but it is now recognized that it was derived independently from the Heb. (H. St. J. Thackeray). From the Lat. of 4. 41 comes the often cited sentence Magna est veritas et praevalet (frequently misquoted as praevalebit), 'Great is truth and it prevails' (or 'will prevail'). The book is generally dated between c. 200 and c. 50 B.C.

2 ESDRAS (IV Esdras of the Vulgate, or The Ezra Apocalypse) is composite, viz.:

(a) 1–2: an introductory section beginning Liber Esdrae Prophetae Secundus, extant only in Latin. This is a denunciation of the sins of Israel, largely following in phraseology and content the OT prophets. Part of it (esp. 2. 10–48) is also based on the NT and Christian belief, e.g. the vision of the multitude of the redeemed and of the Son of God in 2. 42–8 (the only definitely Christian passage in the Apocrypha).

(b) 3–14: the 'Ezra-Apocalypse' proper, in which the writer, speaking in the name of Salathiel ('who am also Ezra'), relates his visions and discourses with an angel. Ch. 13 contains a vision of the Messiah described as a Man, seen rising from the depths of the sea (i.e. from somewhere inaccessible to human knowledge, 13. 51–2), who destroys a hostile multitude by the breath of his mouth (cf. 2 Thess. 2. 8) and gathers to himself a peaceable multitude (explained as the *ten tribes, 13. 39 f.).

This central section of the book (3–14) was certainly written in Hebrew (J. *Wellhausen). It is extant in Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, Armenian, Sahidic and Georgian versions as well as in Latin; a Greek version (not recovered) is quoted by *Clement of Alexandria (Strom., iii. 16) and in the Apostolic Constitutions* (viii. 7). The visions of the Eagle (chs. 11–12) and of the Man, and the story of Ezra and the canon (ch. 14), were believed by G. H. Box to be of different authorship from the rest of the 'Ezra-Apocalypse'. The Apocalypse proper is dated by most scholars after the fall of Jerusalem (A.D. 70) and reasons are advanced for placing it not later than the reign of Hadrian (117–38).

(c) 15–16. These chapters, which are no part of the Ezra-Apocalypse, were apparently written as an appendix to 2 Esdras (IV Esdras of the Vulgate) and in some MSS. are separately reckoned as 'V Esdras', but they appear never to have been separately current.

On 1 Esdras, S. A. *Cook in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 1–58. C. C. Torrey, Ezra Studies (Chicago, 1910); id., 'A Revised View of First Esdras' in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday (New York, 1945), pp. 395–410. E. Bayer, Das dritte Buch Esdras, und sein Verhältnis zu den Büchern Esra-Nehemiah (Biblische Studien, ed. O. *Bardenhewer, xvi, Hft. 1; 1911). Eissfeldt, pp. 574–6.

On 2 Esdras, Lat. text ed. R. L. Bensly, with introd. by M. R. James (Texts and Studies, iii, No. 2; Cambridge, 1895); Eng. tr., with commentary and Lat. text in appendix, by G. H. Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, Being Chapters 3–14 of the Book commonly known as 4 Ezra, or II Esdras (1912); further Eng. tr. and comm. by G. H. Box in R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 542–624. B. Violet (ed.), Die Esra-Apokalypse (IV. Esra). Erster Teil, Die Überlieferung (G.C.S., xviii; 1910); id., Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch in deutscher Gestalt (ib., xxxii; 1924), pp. 1–202 (with comm.), introd., pp. xiii–lv. Eng. tr. and comm. by W. O. E. Oesterley, II Esdras (West. Comm., 1933). Lat. text, with Fr. trr. of Syriac and Ethiopic versions, and comm. by L. Gry (2 vols. Paris, 1938). Eissfeldt, pp. 624–7, with further bibl.

See also bibl. to Ezra and Nehemiah, Books of.

ESPEN, ZEGER BERNHARD VAN. See Van Espen, Zeger Bernhard.

ESPOUSALS OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY (Desponsatio BVM). A feast of the Latin Church. Its institution in honour of St. *Joseph was advocated by P. *D'Ailly and J. *Gerson, but its existence as a feast of Mary is first attested in 1517, when *Leo X permitted its celebration to the Nuns of the Annunciation. Since then it has spread to several countries, notably Germany and Spain, but its observance has never been extended to the Universal Church. It is usually kept on 23 Jan.

ESSAYS AND REVIEWS (1860). A collection of essays by seven authors who believed in the necessity of free inquiry in religious matters. Among them were M. *Pattison's 'Tendencies of Religious Thought in England, 1688–1750', B. *Jowett's 'The Interpretation of Scripture', and F. Temple's 'The Education of the World'. The volume at first attracted little notice and the Guardian reviewed it in a temperate although hostile manner, but when Bp. S. *Wilberforce denounced its liberalism in violent terms in the Quarterly, general interest was aroused. A meeting of the bishops at Fulham, urged on by Wilberforce, condemned the book in Feb. 1861, and the archbishop issued this condemnation as an encyclical. The Lower House of *Convocation proposed a synodical condemnation, and legal action was taken against two of the essayists (H. B. Wilson and R. Williams), who were condemned to deprivation for a year, although they secured the reversal of this verdict by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. As a protest against the minimizing spirit of the volume, 11,000 clergymen declared their belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures and the eternity of punishment, and the book was at length synodically condemned in 1864.

H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, esp. iv (1897), pp. 38–62 and 68–81; S. C. Carpenter, Church and People, 1789–1889 (1933), pp. 505–12. V. F. Storr, The Development of English Theology in the Nineteenth Century 1800–1860 (1913), pp. 429–54.

ESSAYS CATHOLIC AND CRITICAL (1926). An influential volume of fifteen essays by a group of Anglo-Catholic scholars on leading themes of Christian belief, with special attention to the issues raised by recent Biblical studies and philosophy. The editor was E. G. Selwyn (1885–1959; later Dean of *Winchester), the other contributors E. O. James, A. E. *Taylor, A. E. J. Rawlinson, W. L. Knox, L. S. Thornton, E. C. *Hoskyns, J. K. Mozley, E. J. Bicknell, K. E. *Kirk, E. Milner-White, A. H. Thompson, N. P. *Williams, and W. Spens. The essayists maintained that the terms 'catholic' and 'critical' were not antithetical, but stood for two movements which in union led to a deeper understanding of historic Christianity. Typical of the book are essays seeking to reconcile religion with primitive anthropology and the fact of the *Fall with psychological theories of human nature, and to reinterpret the Person and Work of Christ in the light of contemporary criticism of the *Synoptic Gospels.

ESSENES. A Jewish ascetic sect, mentioned neither in the Bible nor the *Talmud, but referred to by *Philo, *Josephus, and the elder Pliny. The name probably means 'the pious ones'. They seem to have originated in the 2nd cent. B.C. and come to an end in the 2nd cent. A.D., and never to have passed beyond the limits of Palestine. At the beginning of the Christian era they numbered about 4,000. Their manner of life was highly organized and communistic; they imposed on candidates for membership a three-year novitiate, with oaths of obedience and secrecy; and they abstained from all but the simplest forms of earning their livelihood. Their piety was akin to that preached by orthodox *Judaism of a *Pharisaic type, though it is possible that details of their worship and teaching came from non-Jewish sources. The suggestions, occasionally made, that St. *John the Baptist and even Christ Himself had Essene connexions, are most improbable. Many scholars have identified the Essenes with the community of the Dead Sea Scrolls (q.v.).

The chief sources are Josephus, Jewish Antiquities, XIII. v. 9; XV. x. 4 f.; XVIII. i. 5; id., Jewish War, II. viii. 2–13; Philo in *Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica, viii. 11, and Pliny, Natural History, v. 17. Convenient collection of texts by A. Adam, Antike Berichte über die Essener (Kleine Texte, clxxxii; 1961). J. B. *Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon (1875), pp. 83–95 and 114–79. S. Wagner, Die Essener in der wissenschaftlichen Diskussion vom Ausgang des 18. bis zum Beginn des 20. Jahrhunderts. Eine wissenschaftsgeschichtliche Studie (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., lxxix; 1960), with bibl. D. Howlett, The Essenes and Christianity. An Interpretation of the Dead Sea Scrolls (New York, 1957). F. C. *Conybeare in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 767–72, s.v.; A. *Jülicher in E.Bi., i (1901), cols. 1396–1400, s.v.; L. Marchal in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1109–33, s.v.; B. Rigaux, O.F.M., in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1013–1035, s.v., all with bibl. to date.

ESTHER, Book of. This Book relates an episode in the reign of Xerxes I (here called 'Ahasuerus'), King of Persia from 486 to 465 B.C. It tells how Esther, a kinswoman of the Jew, Mordecai, attained a position of influence and honour as the royal consort, and used it to save her fellow-countrymen when they were in danger of extirpation by the grand-vizier, Haman. Although there may be an historical basis for the story, in its present form it seems to be a popular romance; it contains indeed very little of a directly religious purport, and it is noticeable that no mention is made in the Book of the name of God. The probable reason for its inclusion in the *canon of the OT was that it described the institution of *Purim (q.v.), a feast still kept as one of the annual commemorations of the Jewish year. Nothing is known of the author. The Greek Bible contains certain additional chapters, which appear in the English Bible in the *Apocrypha; they supply further detail not found in the Hebrew version as we have it today. There are no quotations from Esther in the NT nor, so far, have any fragments of the Book been found among the Biblical MSS. at *Qumran.

Commentaries by A. V. Streane (Camb. Bib., RV, 1907), L. B. Paton (I.C.C., 1908), H. *Gunkel (Tübingen, 1916), M. Haller (H.A.T., Reihe I, xviii, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Est., Lam., 1940), pp. 114–36, G. A. F. Knight (Torch Bib. Comm., on Est., Song of Songs, Lam., 1955, pp. 11–48), H. Ringgren (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xvi, on Song of Songs, Lam., Est., 1958, pp. 113–44), H. Bardtke (K.A.T., xvii. 4/5, on Eccles. and Est., 1963, pp. 239–408) and L. H. Brockington (New Cent. Bib., on Ezr., Neh., and Est., 1969, pp. 216–46). S. Jampel, 'Esther. Eine historisch-kritische Untersuchung' in Monatschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums, xlix (1905), pp. 405–26, 513–33; id., 'Studien zum Buche Esther', ib., 1 (1906), pp. 152–68, 289–315; id., 'Das Buch Esther in geschichtlicher Beleuchtung', ib., pp. 513–38, 641–63. B. W. Anderson, 'The Place of the Book of Esther in the Christian Bible' in Journal of Religion, xxx (1950), pp. 32–43. E. J. Bickerman, 'Notes on the Greek Book of Esther' in Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research, xx (1951), pp. 101–33. Eissfeldt, pp. 505–12 and 767, with further bibl. See also bibl. to Purim.

ESTIENNE, HENRI; ROBERT. See Stephanus.

ESTIUS (1542–1613), Latinized name of Willem Hessels van Est, exegete and hagiographer. He was a native of Gorcum in S. Holland and studied at Louvain, where one of his masters was M. *Baius. He became a doctor of theology in 1580, and professor at *Douai in 1582. In 1595 he was made chancellor of the university of Douai, the theological faculty of which at that time ranked among the foremost in Europe. His Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium (1603) was a well-documented history of the *Gorcum martyrs, to one of whom his family was related, and considered the most important piece in the process of their beatification. His principal work, the Commentarii in Omnes Divi Pauli et Catholicas Epistolas (1614–16), is valuable esp. for its careful exegesis of the literal sense and its judicious choice of *patristic material, following the *Antiochene rather than the *Alexandrian school. It was frequently reprinted down to the end of the 19th cent. Estius, who was considered a saint by his friends and pupils, took part in the controversies of his time, esp. in that on *Molinism, in which he opposed the *Jesuits. He also left extensive notes for a new edition of St. *Augustine. He was called 'Doctor Fundatissimus' by *Benedict XIV.

All Estius's publications, except the Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium, were posthumous. Collected ed. of his Biblical works, 3 vols., Venice, 1659. J. Ferrer, Pecado original y justificación en la doctrina de Guillermo Estio (Madrid, 1960). L. Salembier in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 871–8, with bibl.

ETERNAL CITY, The (Lat. Urbs Aeterna). A designation of Rome found in classical writers such as Ovid and Tibullus, as well as in official documents of the period of the Empire. As applied to Christian Rome, it emphasizes the continuous and pervasive influence of the see in the history of (esp. W.) Christendom.

ETERNAL LIFE. In Christianity, not only a life of endless duration but the fullness of life of which the believer becomes possessed here and now through participation in God's eternal being. It unites the strong sense of historical process characteristic of Hebrew thought with elements from the Greek (*Platonic) belief that man's true life lies in a timeless world in which he is freed from the impediments of material and temporal existence. The modern appreciation of its implications owes much to F. D. *Maurice, for whom eternal life was sharing in the life of God and eternal death refusal to share in that life ('Eternity has nothing to do with time or duration'), and also to F. *von Hügel, notably his book Eternal Life (1912). In the NT its conditions are esp. emphasized in St. John's Gospel.

J. Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934). F. D. Maurice, Theological Essays (1853), p. 436 f.

ETHELBERT, St. (d. 616), King of Kent. A descendant of Hengist, the legendary ancestor of the Jutish royal House of Kent, he became king c. 560 and is stated by *Bede to have extended his power to all England south of the Humber. His marriage with Bertha, daughter of Charibert, the Frankish king, marks the first introduction of Christianity into Anglo-Saxon England, since Charibert insisted that she should be free to practise her Christian faith (Bede, H.E., i. 25). Probably through Bertha's influence, he welcomed St. *Augustine and the Roman mission in 597, was himself converted in the same year, and thenceforward gave his full support to the cause of Christianity in his realm. He was thus the first Christian English king. Feast day, 24 Feb.; in modern calendars, 25 Feb.

Almost the sole authority is Bede, H.E., i. 25 f. and 32 f., and ii. 3–5; the reff. in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, s. 565 and 568, introduce chronological difficulties. The best ed. of his 'Dooms', with German tr.. by F. Liebermann, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, i (ed. Savigny-Stiftung, 1903), pp. 3–8; also ed., with Eng. tr., by F. L. Attenborough, The Laws of the Earliest English Kings (Cambridge, 1922), pp. 4–17. Lat. version pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxx, 345–54; 'Donationes ad Diversas Ecclesias', ib. 431–6. Hardy, i, part 1 (1862), pp. 214–16.

ETHELBERT, St. (d. c. 793), King of the East Angles and martyr. He is said to have been treacherously killed by Offa of Mercia or his wife, Cynethryth, to whose daughter he was to have been betrothed. He was buried at *Hereford, where the cathedral is placed under his patronage, jointly with that of the BVM. Feast day, 20 May.

An unreliable life, abridged from that in the Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliae of Richard of Cirencester (ed. by J. E. B. Mayor, R.S., i, 1863, pp. 262–94), is repr. from J. Brompton, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem (1652), cols. 748–54, in the AA.SS., Mai. V (1685), pp. 241*–246*. with certain miracles from a life by Giraldus (Cotton MS. Vitell. E. VII, destroyed 1731), p. 246* f. Summary, with other MS. lives, in Hardy, i, pt. 2 (1862), pp. 494–6. Giraldus's Life ed. M. R. James in E.H.R., xxxii (1917), pp. 214–44. Ethelbert is also mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, s. 792, and other histories of the period. W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 215 f., s.v. 'Ethelbert (3)'.

ETHELBURGA, St. (d. c. 676), Abbess of Barking. She was the sister of St. *Erconwald, Bp. of London, and the first abbess of his *double monastery at Barking in Essex. The dedication of the church at Bishopsgate is perhaps to be ascribed to her, but there were a number of other prominent women of the same name in Anglo-Saxon Christianity. Feast day, 11 Oct.

The chief authority is *Bede, H.E., iv. 6–9; notes in ed. C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 217–19. 'Acta' by J. Capgrave pr. in AA.SS., Oct. V (1786), pp. 649–52.

ETHELDREDA, St. (d. 679), founder of the *double monastery at *Ely. The daughter of Anna, a Christian king of the East Angles, she was married at an early age to the Prince of the Gyrvii, but retained her virginity. On his death, three years later, she withdrew to the Isle of Ely for a life of prayer. After five years, at the request of her relatives, she returned to the world to marry Egfrid of Northumbria, but refused to consummate this marriage also. After another twelve years she obtained Egfrid's consent to become a nun and c. 672 received the veil from St. *Wilfrid at Coldingham, where her aunt, Ebbe, was abbess. About a year later she founded the double monastery of Ely, of which she was abbess until her death. From another form of her name, 'St. Audrey', the word 'tawdry' is derived through the cheap finery exposed for sale at St. Audrey's fair. Feast day, 23 June; of her translation, 17 Oct.

The chief authority is *Bede, H.E., iv. 3, 19 f.; notes in ed. C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 234–42. Liber Eliensis (ed. E. O. Blake, Camden Society, 3rd Series, xcii; 1962, esp. pp. 1–40, passim). *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton (R.S., 1870), pp. 323 ff. Short modern life by J. L. Low (Newcastle, 1886). C. W. Stubbs, Historical Memorials of Ely Cathedral. Two Lectures (1897), Lecture I, with Notes, 'The Shrine of St. Audrey', pp. 1–94.

ETHELHARD (d. 805), Abp. of *Canterbury. (He is to be distinguished from Ethelhard, Bp. of *Winchester, d. 759.) He was prob. Abbot of 'Hlud' (? 'Lydd' or 'Louth') when, in 791, he was elected to the archbishopric, apparently as *Offa's nominee. He was not consecrated until two years later. The opposition of the Kentish people to a Mercian archbishop, which probably caused this delay, broke out openly in 796, when Eadbert Praen, a cleric and member of the royal House of Kent, headed the rebellion of the Kentish nobility and forced the Archbishop to flee. After Eadbert's capture, in 798, Ethelhard recovered his see, and now strove to restore it to its old power which it had lost when Offa had obtained archiepiscopal status for *Lichfield from *Hadrian I. This was abolished in 802 after a visit of Ethelhard to *Leo III at Rome, and the Papal decision in favour of Canterbury was acknowledged by the Council of *Clovesho in 803, which marked an important step towards national unity. Throughout his life Ethelhard enjoyed the friendship of *Alcuin, who gave him active support in his difficulties.

Documents relating to his episcopate in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 467–535. Two of Alcuin's letters to him, with other information, are given by *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, ed. by N. E. S. A. Hamilton (R.S., 1870), pp. 17–19. He is also mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, s. 791 and 799, and in most other chroniclers of the period.

ETHELWOLD, St. (c. 908–84), Bp. of *Winchester. Like St. *Dunstan, with whom he was closely associated all his life, he was one of the leaders of the reform movement in the English Church in the late 10th cent. He was first a monk at *Glastonbury, then Abbot of Abingdon, and from 963 Bp. of Winchester. Together with St. *Oswald of Worcester he effected the revival of English monasticism, which had fallen on evil days during the anarchy and confusion of the Danish invasions; he took as his model the usages of the abbey of Fleury. The Regularis Concordia was partly, perhaps mainly, his work. Feast day, 1 Aug.

Several early Vitae, incl. that of *Aelfric, pr. in the Chronicon Monasterii de Abingdon, ed. J. Stevenson, R.S., ii (1858), pp. 255–66. J. A. *Robinson, The Life and Times of St. Dunstan (1923), pp. 104–22. D. J. V. Fisher, 'The Early Biographies of St. Ethelwold' in E.H.R., lxvii (1952), pp. 381–91. E. John, 'The Beginning of the Benedictine Reform in England' in R.Bén., lxxiii (1963), pp. 73–87.

ETHERIA, Pilgrimage of. A treatise narrating the journey of a (prob.) Spanish abbess or nun to Egypt, the *Holy Land, *Edessa, Asia Minor, and *Constantinople, at the end of the 4th cent. It is the work of a pilgrim of considerable intelligence and powers of observation. In the first part, she records her identification of various places and scenes en route with the sites of Biblical events, e.g. *Moses' brook, the place where the Golden Calf was made, the city of *Melchizedek ('Sedima'). In the latter part the descriptions are mainly of liturgical matters, esp. the services at *Jerusalem and the neighbourhood. They include accounts of the daily and Sunday offices, *Epiphany (including the Night Station at *Bethlehem), *Holy Week and *Easter (including the procession with palms to the Mount of *Olives and the *Veneration of the Cross), and *Whitsuntide, in all of which Etheria had evidently taken part. It becomes clear that in her time in Egypt and at Jerusalem the Feast of the Nativity was kept on 6 Jan. She is also the earliest writer to mention the Feast of the *Purification (here 14 Feb.).

The text is preserved (apart from a few fragments also contained in a Madrid MS.) in a single 11th cent. MS. which was discovered by F. Gamurrini at Arezzo in 1884. Gamurrini held the writer to be St. Silvia, the sister of the Roman prefect, Rufinus, and hence the document came to be known as the 'Peregrinatio Silviae'. In 1903, however, Dom M. Férotin argued that she was very probably to be identified with one Etheria (perhaps 'Egeria' or 'Aiheria'), referred to by a 7th cent. abbot, and this identification is now very widely accepted. The 'Peregrinatio' is written in a curious Latin dialect, though how far this is a local form is disputed.

Edd. by J. F. Gamurrini (Rome, 1887), J. H. *Bernard (London, 1891), P. Geyer (C.S.E.L., 1898), Hélène Pétré (S.C., xxi; 1948), and A. Franceschini–R. Weber, O.S.B., in Itineraria et Alia Geographica (C.C., Series Latina, clxxv; 1965), pp. 29–103, with bibl. Eng. trr. by M. L. McClure–C. L. Feltoe (1919) and J. Wilkinson (1971). F.*Cabrol, Étude sur la Peregrinatio Silviae (1895); M. Férotin, 'Le Véritable Auteur de la Peregrinatio Silviae. La vierge espagnole Éthéria' in R.Q.H., lxxiv (1903), ii, pp. 367–397; A. Bludau Die Pilgerreise der Aetheria (1927); A. Lambert, 'Egeria' in Revue Mabillon, xxvi (1936), pp. 71–94, xxvii (1937), pp. 1–24, xxviii (1938), pp. 49–69. E. Dekkers, O.S.B., 'De datum der "Peregrinatio Egeriae" en het Feest van Ons Heer Hemelvaart' in Sacris Erudiri, i (1948), pp. 181–205; J. G. Davies, 'The Peregrinatio Egeriae and the Ascension' in V.C., viii (1954), pp. 93–100. P. Devos, S.J., 'La Date du Voyage d'Égérie' in Anal. Boll., lxxxv (1967), pp. 165–94; id., 'Égérie à Bethléem. Le 40e jour après Pâques à Jérusalem, en 383', ib., lxxxvi (1968), pp. 87–108. E. D. Hunt, 'St. Silvia of Aquitaine. The Role of a Theodosian Pilgrim in the Society of East and West' in J.T.S., N.S., xxxii (1972), pp. 351–73.

ETHICAL MOVEMENT. In 1876 an association, the 'Society for Ethical Culture', was founded in the U.S.A. by Felix Adler, to unite those who hold that morality is the fundamental element in religion. It is, in Adler's own words, 'based upon three tacit assumptions, sex purity, the principle of devoting the surplus of one's income beyond that required for one's own genuine needs to the elevation of the working classes, and, finally, continued intellectual development'. Adler originally professed the Jewish faith, but the movement quickly broke off relations with both Judaism and Christianity. A corresponding movement for Great Britain, begun in 1887 by Stanton Coit, has not met here with corresponding support, though certain prominent British philosophers (e.g. J. H. Muirhead, B. *Bosanquet, S. Alexander, and J. S. Mackenzie) expressed sympathy with it.

Ethics and Religion. A Collection of Essays by Sir John Seeley, Dr. Felix Adler, Mr. W. M. Salter, Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Prof. G. von Gizycki, Dr. Bernard Bosanquet, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Dr. Stanton Coit, and Prof. J. H. Muirhead (1900). F. Adler, The Religion of Duty (1905); id., An Ethical Philosophy of Life (1918). W. M. Salter, Ethical Religion (Boston, 1889); W. L. Sheldon, An Ethical Movement (1896). S. Coit (ed.), Ethical Democracy. Essays in Social Dynamics (1900). H. J. Bridges (ed.), Aspects of Ethical Religion. Essays in honour of Felix Adler on the Fiftieth Anniversary of his Founding of the Ethical Movement, 1876, by his colleagues (New York, 1926). G. Spiller in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 412–14, s.v., with further bibl.

ETHIOPIAN (or Abyssinian) CHURCH. Christianity was introduced into Ethiopia in the 4th cent. by St. *Frumentius and Edesius of Tyre. Acc. to the account of *Rufinus (Hist. Eccl., I. ix), the two missionaries were taken to Abyssinia as prisoners, but gained the favour of the Emperor and were set free. Frumentius went to St. *Athanasius, from whom he received episcopal consecration (c. 350), and returned to Abyssinia to convert it. At the end of the 5th cent. and the beginning of the 6th the arrival of the 'Nine Roman [i.e. Byzantine] Saints', probably from Syria, strengthened its Christian faith; it is doubtful whether these 'Saints' were *Monophysites or *Chalcedonians. After a brief period of prosperity, when a cathedral was built at Axum, the religious capital, the Abyssinian Church declined as Mohammedanism began to spread in Africa.

When c. 640 the old patriarchate of *Alexandria was transferred to Cairo, the Abyssinian Church was made entirely dependent on it and its Monophysite patriarch. Little is known of its history during the next centuries. A Jewess apparently seized power c. 920 and the Christians were persecuted; but c. 960 another Christian dynasty was established which lasted till 1268. The Church was frequently left without a metropolitan ('*Abuna'), owing to the hostility of the neighbouring Mohammedans; subjection to pagan and Jewish influences, which had for long been strong, continued; polygamy remained rife esp. among the ruling classes; and the Abunas themselves were given to greed and immorality.

When, in 1268, the old dynasty was restored, the Church entered upon another period of vitality, owing to the influence of the Abuna, Takla Hâymanôt, who combined great austerity of life with energy and ambition. After his death the abbots of the Convent of 'Mount Lebanon', erected in his honour, were made 'assistants to the throne' and enjoyed great power and prestige. At the end of the 13th cent. repeated efforts were made to restore the country to communion with Rome. Many popes, among them *Innocent IV (1254), *Urban IV (1261), *Benedict XI (1303), and *Clement V (1305), sent letters and missionaries for this purpose; but the success of the *Dominican mission which arrived at the end of the 13th cent. was short-lived, owing to the hostility of the Negus, and the religious were martyred.

In the centuries that followed, the Abyssinian Convent in *Jerusalem became a centre from which relations with the W. were fostered. In 1441–2 Abyssinian delegates took part in the Council of *Florence, where they accepted the act of union, which, however, came to nothing because they had acted without authority from the Emp. Zara Jacob. This sovereign played an important part in the history of the Church, esp. as a reformer of its cult, feasts, and chants. He supported monasteries and schools, but himself tolerated and practised polygamy. During the Mohammedan invasions (1520–51) there were renewed attempts at reunion as the price of military help given by the Portuguese. Under *Julius III *Jesuit missionaries were sent into the country; they met with some success, and conversions on a large scale were effected by the Jesuit P. Paez. When in 1614 belief in the two natures of Christ was imposed under pain of death, the Monophysite party rebelled, but it was defeated in the field in 1621 and the Emperor Susenyos renounced polygamy, abrogated the divorce laws, and became a Catholic. In 1625 a Catholic patriarch, Alphonsus Mendez, was sent from Rome, and in 1626 Catholicism was declared the official religion. It was, however, enforced by violence, the heir to the throne was opposed to it, and with Susenyos's abdication in 1632, the union came to an end and the Jesuit missionaries were banished. After their expulsion Franciscans were frequently sent by the Congregation of *Propaganda; most of them were martyred. From 1838 more sustained missionary efforts were made, esp. by the *Lazarists and (from 1846) the *Capuchins. When in 1936 the country was opened again to the W. by the Italian conquest, the Monophysite patriarch was confirmed in his office, but compelled to break with the Coptic Church in Egypt. Since 1950 the Ethiopian Church has been virtually autocephalous.

The literary language, Ge'ez, into which the Bible was translated, has also for centuries been used in public worship, though it is not popularly understood. The Abyssinians observe several Jewish practices, esp. the keeping of the Sabbath, circumcision, and the distinction between clean and unclean meats. During the last three centuries there have been violent controversies on the 'Unction of Christ', which have split it into two parties. Acc. to the one, Christ, as man, has become the natural Son of God by the unction of the Holy Ghost which has divinized His human nature so as to absorb it completely; acc. to the other, the union of the two natures does not result from the unction, but is made perfect by it. Both parties, however, profess the unity of natures.

The Abyssinian Church has two kinds of clergy: the rather ignorant priests, who administer the Sacraments, and the more learned lay clerks (dabtaras), who are entrusted with the chant of the Church offices and the teaching in the schools. The priests may be either secular, in which case they are married, or regular. The regulars belong to a monastery, but community life is little developed.

There is a small number of *Uniat Abyssinians, most of whom live in Eritrea. They are governed by a Vicar Apostolic and observe the rites and canon law of the old Church of Abyssinia.

M. Lequien, Oriens Christianus, ii (Paris, 1750), cols. 641–60. H. M. Hyatt, The Church of Abyssinia (Oriental Research Series, 1928). De L. [E.] O'Leary, The Ethiopian Church. Historical Notes on the Church of Abyssinia (1936); J. S. Trimingham, The Christian Church and Missions in Ethiopia (1950). G. Sottochiesa, La religione in Etiopia (1936). S. A. B. Mercer, The Ethiopic Liturgy (Hale Lectures for 1914–15; Milwaukee, 1915). E. Hammerschmidt, Studies in the Ethiopic Anaphoras (Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, xxv; 1961); id., Stellung und Bedeutung des Sabbats in Äthiopien (Studia Delitzschiana, vii; 1963). J. B. Coulbeaux (ed. J. Bateman), Histoire politique et religieuse d'Abyssinie (3 vols. [1929]), with extensive bibl. E. A. W. Budge, A History of Ethiopia, Nubia and Abyssinia (2 vols., 1928), passim, also with bibl. E. Ullendorf, The Ethiopians (1960; ed. 2, 1965), esp. pp. 97–115. E. Littmann, 'Geschichte der äthiopischen Litteratur' in C. Brockelmann, Geschichte der christlichen Litteraturen des Orients (1907), pp. 185–269; J. M. Harden, An Introduction to Ethiopic Christian Literature (1926). M. Chaine, La Chronologie des temps chrétiens de l'Égypte et de l'Éthiopie (1925). A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1911), pp. 293–322; D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee; revised ed., 1937), pp. 150–60; revised as The Christian Churches of the East, ii (London, 1961), pp. 193–203. J. B. Piolet in C.E., i (1907), pp. 76–9, s.v. 'Abyssinia'; I. Guidi in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 210–27, s.v. 'Abyssinie (Église d')'; M. Froidevaux, ib., cols. 227–35, s.v. 'Abyssinie (Missions au XIXe siècle)'; E. Coulbeaux in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 922–69, s.v. 'Éthiopie (Église d')'; C. Santi, O.F.M., E. Cerulli, M. Gordillo, S.J., A. Raes, S.J., U. Monneret de Villard in E.C., v (1951), cols. 684–708, s.v. 'Etiopia'; all with bibl. T. Tamrat, Church and State in Ethiopia, 1270–1527 (Oxford, 1972); D. Crummey, Priests and Politicians. Protestant and Catholic Missions in Orthodox Ethiopia, 1830–1868 (ib., 1972).

ETHIOPIC VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE. The Scriptures were translated into Ethiopic (Ge'ez), prob. from the Greek, in the 4th–5th cent. Both OT and NT exist entire, but the surviving texts are all late (oldest 13th cent.) and show strong influence of the *Coptic and medieval *Arabic versions. Some MSS. contain, in addition to the *Deuterocanonical Books, various other writings, such as *Jubilees, 1 *Enoch, the Ascension of *Isaiah, and the Rest of the Words of *Baruch. The Ep. of *Eusebius to Carpianus and the *Eusebian Canons are included in some MSS. of the NT.

There is no satisfactory complete edition, though most books of the OT have for some time been published and the NT edited entire by P. Gualterius and M. Victorius (Rome, 1548–9). More scholarly editions include texts of the Psalms by J. *Ludolf (Frankfurt, 1701); of Gen.–2 Kgs. and part of the Apocrypha (2 vols. bound in 3, Leipzig, 1853–94), of Jubilees (Göttingen, 1859), and the *Ascension of Isaiah (Leipzig, 1877), all by A. *Dillmann; and of Mal. (Halle, 1892), Lam. (ib., 1893), and Is. (Berlin, 1893), all by P. J. Bachmann. Portions of the Apocrypha, notably Enoch (1893), Jubilees (1895), and the Asc. of Is. (1900), were also edited by R. H. *Charles. An edition of the OT with the Apocrypha, ed. by F. da Bassano, appeared at Asmara in 4 vols., in '1915–18' (Eth. dating), and of the NT ('ed. 2') in '1926'. E. Ullendorff, Ethiopia and the Bible (Schweich Lectures, 1967; 1968). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 215–56. R. H. Charles in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 791–3, s.v., with reff.; L. Méchineau, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., ii (1899), cols. 2020–33, s.v. 'Éthiopienne (Version) de la Bible'.

EUCHARIST. (1) Name. The title 'Eucharist' (Gk. εὐχαριστία, 'thanksgiving') for the central act of Christian worship is to be explained either by the fact that at its institution Christ 'gave thanks' (1 Cor. 11. 24, Mt. 26. 27, &c.) or by the fact that the service is the supreme act of Christian thanksgiving. Early instances of its occurrence are in the *Didache (9. 1), in St. *Ignatius (Philad., 4, &c.), and in St. *Justin (Apol., 1. 66). Other names for the service are the 'Holy Communion', the '*Lord's Supper', and the '*Mass' (qq.v.).

(2) Origin. In the NT there are four accounts of its institution, one by St. Paul in 1 Cor. 11. 23–5, and three in the *Synoptic Gospels (Mt. 26. 26–8, Mk. 14. 22–4, Lk. 22. 17–20). It is recorded that it was celebrated by the early Christian community at *Jerusalem (Acts 2. 42, 46) and by St. *Paul on his visit to Troas (Acts 20. 7). These passages show that from a very early date the service was a regular part of Christian worship, and was held to have been instituted by Christ. There is no record of the institution in the Fourth Gospel, but its existence is suggested in Jn. 6. 32–58. Traditionally it has been held that there was preparation for it in the OT, e.g. in the presentation of bread and wine by *Melchizedek, King of Salem (Gen. 14. 18), in the offerings of fine flour and wine (e.g. Lev. 2, 23. 13), in the descriptions of the meal to which Wisdom invites in Prov. (9. 1–5) and Ecclus. (24. 19–21), in the *Passover, and in the '*Kiddush'; and it has sometimes been held that the Divine preparation for it included some pagan sacramental rites as well. The main background in the NT, however, is Jewish and not pagan.

(3) Doctrine. The development of Eucharistic doctrine was gradual. In the *Patristic period there was remarkably little in the way of controversy on the subject, but the emphases were different in different parts of the Church.

(a) That the Eucharist conveyed to the believer the Body and Blood of Christ was universally accepted from the first, and language was very commonly used which referred to the Eucharistic elements as themselves the Body and Blood. Even where the elements were spoken of as 'symbols' or 'antitypes' there was no intention of denying the reality of the Presence in the gifts. From the 4th cent., language about the transformation of the elements began to become general; but both before and after this, while some theologians wrote as if they believed in the persistence of the bread and wine after consecration, others wrote as though they held them to be no longer there. In the later part of the Patristic period, the same lines of thought are continued uncontroversially, though there is a tendency towards a division between the precursors of *Transubstantiation on the one side and those who emphasized the continued reality of the bread and wine (as well as the presence of the Body and Blood) in the consecrated elements on the other. Later, as the earlier conception of a 'symbol' as that which conveys and is what it represents gave way to the understanding of it as being other than what it represents, the description of the bread and wine as symbols dropped out or was denied. But hardly anywhere is there any attempt at precise formulation. The Fathers who made important contributions to the early development of Eucharistic doctrine include St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, St. *Chrysostom, St. *Gregory of Nyssa, St. *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theodoret,

St. *Ambrose, St. *Augustine, and St. *John of Damascus.

The first controversies on the nature of the Eucharistic Presence date from the earlier Middle Ages. In the 9th cent. *Paschasius Radbertus raised doubts as to the identity of Christ's Eucharistic Body with His Body in heaven, but won practically no support. Considerably greater stir was provoked in the 11th cent. by the teaching of *Berengar, who opposed the doctrine of the Real Presence. He retracted his opinion, however, before his death in 1088. These controversies had the effect of making some more precise definition desirable, and at the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) the Transubstantiation of the elements was affirmed. Later in the century this teaching was worked out in much detail, with the assistance of the newly recovered philosophy of *Aristotle, notably by St. *Thomas Aquinas. It was maintained that consecration effected a change in the 'substance' of the Bread and Wine, whereas the 'accidents' (i.e. the outward appearance) remained. Concurrently with this development went a great increase in Eucharistic devotion and the institution by Urban IV (1261–4) of the Feast of *Corpus Christi (1264).

At the Reformation, great controversies on the subject took place. M. *Luther defended a doctrine of *Consubstantiation, acc. to which after the consecration both the bread and wine and the Body and Blood of Christ coexisted. H. *Zwingli, on the other hand, affirmed that the Lord's Supper was primarily a memorial rite, and that there was no change in the elements whatever. It was this deep-rooted divergence of Eucharistic belief that prevented the union of the forces of the German and Swiss Reformers, despite the attempt to heal the breach at the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529). J. *Calvin and his followers held a view of the Eucharist intermediate between these two. They denied that any change in the elements took place, but maintained that the faithful received the power or virtue of the Body and Blood of Christ, a doctrine which thus became known as *Virtualism; and this or a very similar doctrine was held by some of the chief Anglican Reformers. At the Council of *Trent (sess. xiii, 11 Oct. 1551), where recent disputes had made some formulation desirable, the doctrine of Transubstantiation was reaffirmed in language more explicit than in 1215, but care was taken to avoid any formal definition of it in terms of accidents and substance, despite the general acceptance of this explanation among the leading RC theologians of the time.

Since the 16th cent. great attention has continued to be paid to Eucharistic doctrine in all parts of W. Christendom. It has been the subject of many refinements in the RC Church, e.g. in the writings of M. *Cano, F. *Suarez, J. de *Lugo, J. B. *Franzelin. Apart from Transubstantiation, which on the prima facie reading of the 28th *Article of Religion is excluded, a large variety of doctrines has been held in the C of E. The ambiguous, if not actually divergent, language of the BCP has encouraged the coexistence of these doctrines. It has been maintained that the consecrated elements are the Body and Blood of Christ, or that they possess the virtue of the Body and Blood, or that the faithful communicant receives with them the Body and Blood, or that they are merely symbols in the modern sense of the word. There has also been considerable variety of teaching in the Nonconformist Churches.

Since the Second *Vatican Council various RC theologians have explored the use of the notions of 'transignification' and 'transfinalization' as expressing the mode of the eucharistic presence. The encyclical 'Mysterium Fidei' of Pope *Paul VI in 1965, while it emphasized the doctrine of Transubstantiation which the Pope held to be in danger, explicitly asserted that 'as a result of transubstantiation the species of bread and wine undoubtedly take on a new significance and a new finality'.

(b) It was also widely held from the first that the Eucharist is in some sense a sacrifice, though here again definition was gradual. The suggestion of sacrifice is contained in much of the NT language. In Judaism bread and wine were sacrificial elements, and the words at the institution, 'covenant' (διαθήκη), 'memorial' (ἀνάμνησις), 'poured out' (ἐκχυνόμενον), all have sacrificial associations. In early post-NT times the constant repudiation of carnal sacrifice and emphasis on life and prayer at Christian worship did not hinder the Eucharist from being described as a sacrifice from the first. It was long, however, before any attempt was made to define the nature of the sacrifice, though from the 14th cent. onwards a vast literature on the subject developed. Among the Reformation theologians there arose a strong tendency either to deny the sacrifice or to explain it in an unreal sense. The Council of Trent, on the other hand, dealt fully with the doctrine of the Sacrifice of the Mass. It affirmed that the Sacrifice of the Mass was propitiatory (propitiatorium), that it availed for the living and the dead, that it did not detract from the sufficiency of the Sacrifice of *Calvary. It embodied its teaching on the sacrifice in nine canons (sess. xxii; 17 Sept. 1562).

In recent times a good deal of attention has been paid to the nature of the Eucharistic Sacrifice. Many modern writers have stressed the close relation between what takes place at the earthly altar and the perpetual Sacrifice of Christ in Heaven. In this connexion F. C. N. Hicks and others urged that the purpose of all sacrifice is life, the victim being slain not for its death as such but to liberate its blood, which is pre-eminently its life. M. *de la Taille (q.v.) elaborated the parallelism between the Oblation at the Last Supper and that on the Christian altar, holding that both were integrally related to the one immolation on Calvary. Another development (A. Vonier, O.S.B.; E. Masure) has been to interpret the Eucharistic Sacrifice in terms of Sacrament, setting out from the conviction that it is of the essence of a sacrament to be meaningful and significant. In a less theoretical direction the *Liturgical Movement assisted these developments by its emphasis on the fundamental relation of the Eucharist to the whole corporate life of the Church, on the essential function of the laity in the Church's Eucharistic life, and on the sociological significance of Eucharistic worship. The Constitution of the Second Vatican Council on the Sacred Liturgy, while primarily concerned with liturgical reform, contains much theological matter. It lays stress on the corporate nature of the Eucharist and on the active participation of the laity. It declares that 'at the Last Supper . . . our Saviour instituted the Eucharistic Sacrifice of His Body and Blood' and that 'He did this in order to perpetuate the sacrifice of the Cross throughout the centuries until He should come again and so to entrust to His beloved spouse the Church a memorial of His death and resurrection'. It does not, however, go into detail about the precise nature of the sacrifice. See also Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission.

Introductory: T. B. *Strong, The Doctrine of the Real Presence (1899); C. *Gore, The Body of Christ (1901); D. *Stone, The Holy Communion (1904); J. C. Hedley, The Holy Eucharist (1907); Report of the Anglo-Catholic Congress, 1927 (Subject: The Holy Eucharist); Y. Brilioth, Eucharistic Faith and Practice, Evangelical and Catholic (Eng. trans. by A. G. Hebert, 1930); W. K. Lowther Clarke (ed.), Liturgy and Worship (1932); G. Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy (1945); E. L. Mascall, Corpus Christi. Essays on the Church and the Eucharist (1953; ed. 2, 1965); L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Eucharistie. Théologie et spiritualité de la prière eucharistique [Tournai, 1966]. On the history of Eucharistic doctrine, P. *Batiffol, Études d'histoire et de théologie positive, Sér. 2, L'Eucharistie (1905); D. Stone. A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (2 vols., 1909). E. B. *Pusey, The Doctrine of the Real Presence as contained in the Fathers (1855); C. Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation, Diss. III: 'Transubstantiation and Nihilianism' (1895); B. J. Kidd, The Later Medieval Doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice (1898); J. [R.] Geiselmann, Die Eucharistielehre der Vorscholastik (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, xv, Hft. 1–3; 1926). C. W. Dugmore, Eucharistic Doctrine in England from Hooker to Waterland (1942); id., The Mass and the English Reformers (1958). F. Clark, S.J., Eucharistic Sacrifice and the Reformation (Oxford, 1960; ed. 2, 1967). P. Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist. An Essay in Historical Development (1965). On the theology of the Eucharist, R. I. *Wilberforce, The Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1853); J. B. Franzelin, Tractatus de SS. Eucharistiae Sacramento et Sacrificio (1868); W. *Sanday (ed.), Different Conceptions of Priesthood and Sacrifice (1900); M. de la Taille, Mysterium Fidei (1921); A. Vonier, O.S.B., A Key to the Doctrine of the Eucharist (1925); F. C. N. Hicks, The Fullness of Sacrifice (1930); E. Masure, Le Sacrifice du Chef (ed. 2, 1932; Eng. tr. The Christian Sacrifice, 1944). G. *Aulén, För eder utgiven (Stockholm, 1956; Eng. tr., Eucharist and Sacrifice, Philadelphia, 1958; Edinburgh, 1960). On special points and aspects, P. Gardner, The Origin of the Lord's Supper (1893); A. *Schweitzer, Das Abendmahl in Zusammenhang mit dem Leben Jesu und der Geschichte des Urchristenthums (1901); W. Heitmüller, Taufe und Abendmahl bei Paulus (1903); M. Goguel, L'Eucharistie des origines à Justin Martyr (1909); H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926; Eng. tr., Leiden, 1953–79); J. Betz, Die Eucharistie in der Zeit der griechischen Väter (Freiburg, 1955 ff.). F. S. Renz, Geschichte des Messopferbegriffes (1901); E. Dumoutet, Le Désir de voir l'Hostie et les origines de la dévotion au saint sacrement (1926); J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (1935; ed. 3, 1960; Eng. trr. 1955 and 1966). H. Schürmann, Eine quellenkritische Untersuchung des Lukanischen Abendmahlsberichtes Lk. 22, 7–38 (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xix, Heft 5; xx, Hefte 4–5; 1953–7). J. Bowmer, The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in Early Methodism (1951). On post-Vatican II developments, J. M. Powers, S.J., Eucharistic Theology (New York, 1967: London, 1968), with bibl.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESSES. International congresses organized by the RC Church for promoting devotion to the Blessed Sacrament. Their ancestor, a local gathering arranged through the exertions and enthusiasm of Mgr Gaston de Ségur, met at Lille in 1881. In succeeding years the Congresses have gradually developed to their present international character. That of 1908 which met in London was the first occasion on which a Papal *Legate had entered England since Cardinal R. *Pole (d. 1558).

Reports of some of the Congresses have been publd. shortly afterwards. J. Vaudon, L Œuvre des congrès eucharistiques, ses origines (1911); M. L. Paladini, Die eucharistischen Kongresse. Ursprung und Geschichte (1912). T. F. Meehan in C.E., v (1909), pp. 592–4, s.v.; B. Spini, S.S.S., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 350–2, s.v. 'Congressi eucharistici', with bibl.; J. C. Willke in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 617 f., s.v.

EUCHARISTIC FAST. By this is commonly understood complete abstinence from food and drink for a period preceding the reception of Holy Communion. Unlike other forms of fasting, it is designed less as a form of asceticism than to do honour to the Eucharistic Gifts.

Until recently, the traditional period of the fast was from the previous midnight. The practice appears to have developed gradually. The earliest express legislation on the subject is in the Council of *Hippo of 393 (can. 28), which allowed, however, an exception on *Maundy Thursday; this decree was re-enacted at Carthage in 397 (can. 29). St. *Augustine (ep. 54, ad Januarium; c. 400) advocates the fast, believing it to be of universal observance and dating back to Apostolic times. Throughout the Middle Ages its observance was virtually universal. It was also taken over by the Reformers, who tended to stress esp. its disciplinary value. Among Protestants, however, it gradually died out; in England it also seems to have almost disappeared in the 18th cent. In the 19th cent. the observance was assiduously encouraged by the *Tractarians and their followers. It led to the institution of the early morning Celebration and the discouragement of communicating at the mid-morning High Celebration, except by the (still fasting) celebrant. Another consequence was that *Evening Communions (q.v.) were originally deprecated by High Churchmen. By the end of the 19th cent. the practice had become widespread in the C of E and was a strong devotional influence. The proposed BCP of 1928 (not, however, that of 1927) contained the rubric: 'It is an ancient and laudable custom of the Church to receive this Holy Sacrament fasting. Yet for the avoidance of all scruple it is hereby declared that such preparation may be used or not used, according to every man's conscience in the sight of God.' Many Anglicans recently have followed the practice of the RC Church (see below).

Since the beginning of the 20th cent. the RC Church has shown an increasing tendency to relax and curtail the discipline. Influences in this direction have been the encouragement of more frequent Communion (see Communion, Frequency of) and the disorganization of social habits, especially during the Second World War. Special relaxations were gradually introduced for those in sickness and on active service, and for others for whom a rigid fast would have been burdensome. These dispensations were standardized in *Pius XII's Apostolic Constitution 'Christus Dominus' (16 Jan. 1953) and the accompanying instruction. His motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' of 19 March 1957 laid down that the consumption of water at any time did not break the natural fast; in future a three-hour fast from solid food and alcoholic drink and a one-hour fast from non-alcoholic liquid was to be observed before the reception of Holy Communion; the celebrating priest was to reckon the period of the fast from the beginning of Mass. On 21 Nov. 1964 *Paul VI reduced the period of the Eucharistic Fast to one hour before the reception of Holy Communion. Even this demand is mitigated by numerous concessions for cases of need, and medicine may be taken at any time.

In the E. Church a strict Eucharistic Fast is observed from the time of rising.

H. T. Kingdon, Fasting Communion (1873; ed. 2, 1875, much extended); F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., Concerning the Fast before Communion (1903); J. Wickham Legg (ed.), Papal Faculties allowing Food before Communion (C.H.S., No. 87; 1905). P. *Dearmer, The Truth about Fasting, with special Reference to Fasting Communion (1928). J. M. Frochisse, S.J., 'A propos des origines du jeûne eucharistique' in R.H.E., xxviii (1932), pp. 594–609; G. R. Dunstan, 'The Fast before Communion' in Theology, liii (1950), pp. 11–19 and 57–64. The Ap. Const. 'Christus Dominus' is pr. in A.A.S., xlv (1953), pp. 15–24, with the accompanying Instruction, ib., pp. 47–51. Both are repr., with Eng. tr. and comm., in W. Conway, The New Law on the Eucharistic Fast (Dublin, 1954). 'Sacram Communionem' is pr. in A.A.S., xlix (1957), pp. 177 f.; the 1964 regulation ib., lvii (1965), p. 186. A. Bride in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 142–81, s.v. 'Jeûne eucharistique'. A. M. Carr in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 847, s.v. 'Fast, Eucharistic'.

EUCHARISTIC PRAYERS, forms of consecratory prayer at the heart of the Eucharist. From at least the 6th cent. onwards there was in the Roman rite only one Eucharistic prayer, known as the Canon of the Mass (q.v.). In 1968, in order to provide variety and better to express the richness of the eucharistic mystery, the Congregation of Sacred *Rites provided three other forms of Eucharistic prayer, each of which may be used as an alternative to the Canon at the option of the celebrant. Of these, the first is an adaptation of the prayer of Hippolytus found in the Apostolic Tradition, with the addition of the *Sanctus and some rearrangement of the Words of *Institution, which, for pastoral reasons, are the same in all three of the new prayers. The second is a modern composition more in the tradition of the Roman Canon, but with a few elements from other sources. It has an *epiclesis of the Holy Spirit before and after the consecration, and intercessions in which there is a brief invocation of the BVM and the saints. This prayer emphasizes the doctrine that the Eucharist is the Church's offering of the sacrifice of Calvary. The third is related to an ancient prayer once current in Egypt and later adapted to form what is known as the Anaphora of St. *Basil; new intercessions have been added after the epiclesis. Further variations have subsequently been authorized.

These prayers are printed in the 1970 edition of the Missale Romanum.

EUCHARISTIC VESTMENTS. In the W. the traditional vestments of the priest celebrating Mass are the *amice, *alb, *girdle, *maniple, *stole, and *chasuble. They derive from the ordinary secular clothing of Roman citizens in the 2nd cent., the alb being a development of the tunica, the chasuble of the paenula, and the maniple of the mappula. In the E. Church the vestments are fundamentally the same but differ in shape. In the RC Church the celebration of Mass without vestments is normally forbidden. In the C of E since the *Reformation their history is complex. The BCP of 1549 ordered a 'white alb plain, with a vestment or cope', but in the Book of 1552 they were abolished. The *Ornaments Rubric in the present (1662) Book, however, at least on a prima facie interpretation, orders their use. After falling into complete disuse for over two centuries, they were restored on the authority of the Rubric in the 19th cent., being first worn at Wilmcote in Warwickshire in 1845. From that date controversy on the subject raged violently. In 1908 a sub-committee of five bishops reported to the Upper House of Convocation that their use was permitted, if not commanded, by the Ornaments Rubric; they were tolerated by the rubrics of the proposed Prayer Book of 1927–8, and permitted by the Canons of 1969. See also Cope, Vestments, and entries on individual vestments.

For bibl., see under separate vestments and also under Vestments and Ornaments Rubric.

EUCHELAION (Gk. εὐχέλαιον). In the Greek Church, the regular term for the Sacrament of Holy *Unction.

EUCHERIUS, St. (d. c. 449), Bp. of Lyons. Although married and a father, he entered the famous monastery of *Lérins and became a keen exponent of the ascetic way of life. About 434 he was elected to the see of Lyons, but of his administration we know very little. Together with *Hilary of Arles he presided over the Synod of *Orange in 441. His writings comprise two exegetical works (Formulae Spiritalis Intelligentiae and Instructiones ad Salonium), a Passio Agaunensium Martyrum (on the *Theban Legion) and two small ascetic treatises (De Laude Heremi and De Contemptu Mundi). Feast day, 16 Nov.

Editio princeps by J. W. Brassicanus, Basle, 1531. J. P. Migne, PL, l. 685–1214 (with account of earlier edd., cols. 687–98). Crit. ed. (unfinished) by K. Wotke in C.S.E.L., xxxi (1894). *Gennadius, De Viris Ill., lxiii. Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), esp. pp. 151–60. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 567–70; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 455. L. Cristiani in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1653–60, s.v., with bibl.

EUCHITES (Gk. εὐχῆται or εὐχῖται). The heretical sect also known as the *Messalians (q.v.). The Greek, like the Syriac, title means 'those who pray'.

EUCHOLOGION (Gk. εὐχολόγιον). In the E. Church, the liturgical book containing the text and rubrics of the three Eucharistic rites in current use (of St. *Chrysostom, of St. *Basil, and the Liturgy of the *Presanctified), the invariable parts of the Divine *Office, and the prayers required for the administration of the *Sacraments and *Sacramentals. It thus combines the essential parts of what in the W. is contained in the *Missal, *Pontifical, and *Ritual.

Among the earliest MSS. of the Euchologion are the 'Barberini Codex S. Marci III. 55 (77)', now Vat. gr. 366; the Cod. Porphyr., formerly of the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg; and the Cod. Sin. 957; all 8th–9th cent. The earliest printed texts come from Venice (1526, 1544, 1550, etc.). A collection of texts, with crit. discussion, in J. *Goar, O.P., Εὐχολόγιον, sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; ed. 2, Venice, 1730). P. de Meester, O.S.B., Studi sui sacramenti amministrati secondo il Rito Bizantino [1947], pp. 189–240. Id. in E.C., v (1951), col. 784–6; P. Joannou in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 1166 f., both s.v.

EUDEMONISM. The ethical theory which defines the end of right action as εὐδαιμονία, 'well-being'. The classical exponent of this system is *Aristotle. St. *Thomas Aquinas, who uses *Augustine's term beatitudo ('blessedness') for εὐδαιμονία, found a place for it in Christian moral philosophy; but in his account the 'well-being' of man is discovered in the vision of God. This Christian eudemonism has been criticized, especially by the *Quietists, on the ground that it leaves no room for the pure disinterested love of God, which should be the foundation of Christian morals. Among Anglican moral philosophers, H. *Rashdall defended a form of eudemonism.

R. A. Gauthier in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1660–74, s.v., with reff.

EUDES, St. JOHN (1601–80), French missioner. Born at Ri in Normandy and educated at the *Jesuit college at Caen, he was accepted by the Superior General of the *Oratory in 1623 and priested in 1625. After heroic service in plagues in 1627 and 1631, he spent ten years in conducting missions. In 1641 he founded the 'Order of our Lady of Charity', dedicated to the heart of Mary, to care for fallen women, which in 1644 was entrusted to the *Visitandines of Caen. In 1643 he withdrew from the Oratory and founded at Caen the 'Congregation of Jesus and Mary', dedicated to the hearts of Jesus and Mary, an association of priests whose object was to conduct seminaries. In 1657 the Caen sisters set up an independent community ('Sisters of our Lady of Charity of the Refuge'), with a fourth vow, to care for fallen women.

St. John Eudes shares with St. *Margaret Mary Alacoque the claim to have initiated devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus. He sought to give it a theological foundation and wrote several offices of the feast. He also fostered devotion to the heart of Mary, introducing in his congregation a feast in its honour in 1648, and publishing in 1670 Le Cœur admirable de la Mère de Dieu. The best known of his other writings is La Vie et le royaume de Jésus(1637). He was beatified in 1909 and canonized in 1925. Feast day, 19 Aug.

The 'Congregation of Jesus and Mary', whose members are commonly known as 'Eudists', was almost extinguished by the Revolution. It was reconstituted in 1826 and is now chiefly concerned with secondary education. In recent times it has been active in South America, the*West Indies, and esp. *Canada. In 1835 a separate congregation, the Sisters of our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd, was formed to establish reformatories.

Œuvres complètes publ. with introd. and notes, 12 vols., Paris, 1905–9; Lettres choisies et inédites ed. C. Berthelot du Chesnay, C.J.M. (Namur, 1958). The primary life by Pierre Hérambourg, C.J.M. (1661–1720) was ed. by A. Le Doré (Paris, 1869) and, more accurately, by D. Boulay, C.J.M. (ib., 1925; Eng. tr., Westminster, Maryland–Dublin, 1960). Modern lives by C. de Montzey (London, 1874), D. Boulay (4 vols., Paris, 1905–8), M. Russell, S.J. (London, 1910), H. Joly ('Les Saints', 1907; Eng. tr., 1932), E. Georges (Paris, 1925), and D. Sargent (New York, 1949). Bremond, iii (1921), pp. 583–671. C. Lebrun, C.J.M., La Spiritualité de S. Jean Eudes (1933; Eng. tr., 1934). C. Berthelot du Chesnay, Les Missions de Saint Jean Eudes (1967).

E. Georges, La Congrégation de Jésus et Marie, dite des Eudistes (1933). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 592–5. C. Berthelot du Chesnay in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1331–5, s.v. 'Eudistes', with further bibl.

EUDISTS. See previous entry.

EUDOXIUS (300–70), *Anomoean leader. A native of Cappadocia, he was appointed by the *Arians Bp. of Germanicia and took part in many of the Arian councils of the 4th cent. In 358 he secured possession of the see of *Antioch; and though soon forced to withdraw, he became Bp. of *Constantinople in 360. Of his writings only a few fragments of his treatise on the Incarnation (Λόγος περὶ σαρκώσεως) survive.

On the treatise mentioned, see C. P. *Caspari, Alte und neue Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (Christiania, 1877), pp. 176–85 ('Das christologische Bekenntniss des Eudoxius von Constantinopel'). F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 577–80; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1484–7.

EUGENIUS III (d. 1153), *Cistercian, Pope from 1145. Bernardo Pignatelli of Pisa entered the Cistercian abbey of *Clairvaux under St. *Bernard in 1135 and was subsequently made Abbot of St. Anastasio at Rome. Elected Pope in 1145, he had to flee before his consecration, owing to his refusal to recognize the sovereignty of the Roman Senate. He went to Farfa, where he was consecrated, and from there to Viterbo, and in 1147 to France, where he worked for the Second *Crusade, which he commissioned St. Bernard to preach. He held synods at *Paris (1147), Trier (1147), *Reims (1148), dealing chiefly with matters of doctrine, esp. the heresy of *Gilbert de la Porrée and the visions of St. *Hildegard, and at Cremona (1148), where he excommunicated *Arnold of Brescia, who had become the leader of the rebellious Roman Senate. In 1149 he returned to Rome but had to leave it again. In 1153 he concluded the Treaty of Constance with *Frederick I (Barbarossa), who guaranteed the rights of the Church. Early in the same year Eugenius had re-entered Rome, where he died seven months later. An ardent reformer of the morals of the clergy and of monastic observance, he had formed his life on the spiritual counsels of St. Bernard, who had written for him his famous ascetical treatise 'De Consideratione'. His cult was approved by *Pius IX in 1872. Feast day, 8 July.

592 of Eugenius' letters in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxx, 1013–1614, with reff. Jaffé, ii (ed. 2, 1888), pp. 20–89. The principal sources are the Life by Card. Boso in L.P. (Duchesne, ii, 1892, p. 386 f.) and the account of *John of Salisbury, Historia Pontificalis (ed. R. L. Poole, 1927, pp. 5–90 passim). M. Jocham, Geschichte des Lebens und der Verehrung des seligen Papstes Eugenius III (1873); H. Gleber, Papst Eugen III., 1145–1153, unter besondere Berücksichtigung seiner politischen Tätigkeit (Beiträge zur mittelalterlichen und neueren Geschichte, ed. F. Schneider, vi; 1936). G. del Guerra and others, Il Beato Eugenio III, a cura del Capitolo della Primaziale di Pisa (Pisa, 1954). E. Caspar, 'Die Kreuzzugsbullen Eugens III' in N.A., xlv (1924), pp. 285–305, with text. Mann, ix (1914), pp. 127–220. A. Clerval in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1490–2.

EUGENIUS IV (1383–1447), Pope from 1431. Gabriele Condulmaro was born of a wealthy Venetian family, and at an early age entered an *Augustinian monastery. In 1408 he was appointed Cardinal-Priest of San Clemente by his uncle, Gregory XII. He was elected Pope in 1431, one of his first acts being to dismiss the Council of *Basle (q.v.), which had met in the spring of the same year. The Council refused to dissolve, however,and reasserted the *Gallican theory of conciliar supremacy, which had been defended at *Constance. In 1433 Eugenius gave way and recognized the Council as canonical. A year later a revolt in Rome forced the Pope to flee to Florence, where he remained until 1443. Meanwhile relations with the Council, which tried to destroy Papal authority completely, grew steadily worse and ended in the election of an antipope, Felix V (Amadeus VII, Duke of Savoy), in 1439. Eugenius, however, had called a council at Ferrara (1438), and in 1439 concluded the union of the Greek and Roman Churches at Florence which, though not permanent, greatly increased his authority. In 1443 he returned to Rome. In the following year the *Crusade against the Turks in which he was deeply concerned ended with the defeat of the Christians at Varna. With France relations had become strained owing to the semi-schismatic *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438), but through the skill of his envoy, Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini (later *Pius II), the Pope secured a diplomatic success which brought the Empire over to his side (1447). See also Florence, Council of.

Eugenius was a Pope of austere piety, a vehement opponent of nepotism, but often imprudent in his policy. His residence at Florence brought him into contact with the Italian Renaissance, and he showed himself a patron of art and literature.

F. P. Abert, Papst Eugen der Vierte (1884). J. Gill, S.J., Eugenius IV. Pope of Christian Union (Westminster, Maryland, 1961; London [1962]). E. v. Ottenthal, 'Die Bullenregister Martins V und Eugens IV' in Mittheilungen des Instituts für oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung. Ergänzungsband i (1885), pp. 401–589. P. Paschino, Roma nel rinascimento (Storia di Roma, xii; 1940), pp. 120–65. T. V. Tuleja, 'Eugenius IV and the Crusade of Varna' in Catholic Historical Review, xxxv (1949), pp. 257–75; D. Caccamo, 'Eugenio IV e la Crociata di Varna' in Archivio della Società romana di Storia Patria, lxxix (1956), pp. 35–87. C. M. de Witte, 'Les Bulles pontificales et l'expansion portugaise au XVe siècle' in R.H.E., xlviii (1953), pp. 683–718, esp. pp. 697–718, incl. texts. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 281–361. E. Delaruelle–E. R. Labande–P. Ourliac in Fliche–Martin, xiv (parts 1–3; 1962), pp. 229–447, passim. P. de Vooght in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1355–9, s.v. 'Eugène IV'.

EUGIPPIUS (c. 455–535), Abbot of Lucullanum, near Naples. About 511 he wrote the Life of St. *Severinus of Noricum. He also compiled a collection of extracts from the writings of St. *Augustine which was much read in the Middle Ages.

Works pr. J. P. Migne, PL, lxii, 549–1200. Crit. ed. by P. Knoell (C.S.E.L., ix, 2 pts., 1895–6). C. C. Mierow, 'Eugippius and the Closing Years of the Province of Noricum Ripense' in Classical Philology, x (1915), pp. 166–87. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 220–4. For editions and works on the life of St. Severinus see s.v. Severinus, St.

EUHEMERISM. The theory that the ancient beliefs about the gods originated from the elaboration of traditions of actual historical persons. The name is derived from Euhemerus, a Sicilian writer (c. 315 B.C.), who developed this thesis in a book, Ἱερὰ Ἀναγραφή. Christian apologists, like *Lactantius, saw in this theory the true explanation of the origins of the Greek gods.

F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker, i ((1923), pp. 300–313 No. 63). H. F. van der Meer, Euhemerus van Messene (Amsterdam thesis, 1949); J. W. Schippers, De Ontwikkeling der Euhemeristische Godencritiek in de Christelijke Latijnse Literatuur (Utrecht thesis; Groningen, 1952), with summary in Eng. J. D. Cooke, 'Euhemerism: a mediaeval Interpretation of Classical Paganism' in Speculum ii (1927), pp. 396–410; T. S. Brown, 'Euhemerus and the Historians' in H.T.R., xxxix (1946), pp. 259–74. J. Geffcken in H.E.R.E., v (1912), p. 572 f.; K. Thraede in R.A.C., vi (1966), cols. 877–90, s.v., with bibl.

EULOGIA (Gk. εὐλογία, 'a blessing'). The word was used in early times both actively for a 'benediction' and passively for 'something blessed'. In the latter sense it was applied to the blessed bread which was distributed to *catechumens and others after the Mass was ended, for consumption either before leaving the church or at home later. See also Pain Bénit.

A. Stuiber in R.A.C., vi (1966), cols. 900–28, s.v., with bibl.

EUNAN, St. See Adamnan, St.

EUNOMIUS (d. 394), *Arian Bp. of Cyzicus in Mysia. Of Cappadocian peasant origin, he went to *Alexandria, where he became a pupil of *Aetius (q.v.) c. 356. He returned with him to Antioch, attending the Arian Synod summoned there by *Eudoxius, and was made deacon. With Eudoxius and Aetius, he was delated to the Emp. Constantius by *Basil of Ancyra on charges of conspiracy and banished to Phrygia. After the deposition of Basil in 360, however, Eudoxius was made Bp. of Constantinople and Eunomius was consecrated Bp. of Cyzicus. He accepted the see only when Eudoxius promised to restore Aetius, a promise never fulfilled. The clergy were hostile and after a successful defence of his doctrine at Constantinople, Eunomius resigned a few months later. Uncompromising support for Aetius led to an abortive arraignment for heresy by *Acacius in 361. Constantius's death and the accession of *Julian gave the party breathing-space, but under *Jovian and later Valens, the breach with Eudoxius became final. Banished and recalled under Valens, under *Theodosius Eunomius was again banished, ultimately to Dakora, where he died.

Eunomius's principal work, an Ἀπολογητικός, was composed c. 360. It was answered by St. *Basil of Caesarea, whose reply survives. Eunomius issued a rejoinder, Ὑπὲρ τῆς Ἀπολογίας Ἀπολογία, in three books, prob. in 378. St. Gregory of Nyssa's Contra Eunomium (c. 382) was a reply to this work and constituted an elaborate attack on the whole system. Eunomius also wrote two further books on the same controversy and a commentary on Romans, which, like his letters, are now lost, and another treatise Ἔκθεσις πίστεως (383), to which Gregory replied in his Refutatio Confessionis Eunomii.

Eunomius's doctrine was *Anomean. He taught a single supreme Substance whose simplicity is opposed to all, even virtual, distinction whether of properties or attributes. This Substance, which he called ἀγεννησία ('ungenerated Being'), he held to be absolutely intelligible. He denied that the generation of the Son took place within the Divine Nature, but regarded Him as a being immediately produced by the Father, from whom He received the creative power which caused Him to resemble the Father. Among the beings created by the Son the Holy Ghost held the first place. He is the Son's instrument for the sanctification of souls. He taught that piety does not consist in the invocation of holy names or in the use of rites and symbols, but in exactitude of doctrine, teaching which necessarily led to the disregard of the Sacraments and of ascetical practices. His views met with no lasting success and were soon forgotten. His chief importance for the history of theology lies in the reaction his theses provoked, esp. from the *Cappadocian Fathers, whose doctrine of God and of human knowledge of God largely took shape as a critique of Eunomius.

Eunomius's first Apology pr. in J. A. *Fabricius, Bibliotheca Graeca, viii (Hamburg, 1717), pp. 262–305, and in J. P. Migne, PG, xxx, 835–68; Basil's reply, ib., xxix, 497–774; fragments of the second Apology are preserved in Gregory's Contra Eunomium; best ed. W. Jaeger, Gregorii Nysseni Opera, i–ii (Leyden, 1960); the Ἔκθεσις πίστεως is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxvii, cols. 587–90. Ancient sources incl. *Socrates, H.E., iv. 7, *Philostorgius, x. 6, and passim, *Photius, Cod., 138, and *Jerome, De Vir. Ill., cxx. M. Albertz, Untersuchungen über die Schriften des Eunomius (Diss., 1908); id., 'Zur Geschichte der jung-arianischen Kirchengemeinschaft' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, lxxxii (1909), pp. 205–78. J. Daniélou, S.J., 'Eunome l'Arien et l'exégèse néo-platonicienne du Cratyle' in Revue des Études grecques, lxix (1956), pp. 412–32. A. Benito y Durán, 'El nominalismo arriano y la filosofía cristiana: Eunomio y San Basilio' in Augustinus, v (1960), pp. 207–26.

F. Diekamp, 'Literargeschichtliches zu der eunomianischen Kontroverse' in B.Z., xviii (1909), pp. 1–13. Bardenhewer, iii (1912), pp. 137–40, with bibl. E. Venables in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 286–90, s.v.; M. Spanneut in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1399–1405, s.v. 'Eunomius (2) de Cyzique'; L. Abramowski in R.A.C., vi (1966), cols. 936–47, s.v.

EUPHEMIA, St. (perh. 4th cent.), Virgin and Martyr. She was greatly venerated in the E., esp. as patroness of the church where the Council met at *Chalcedon in 451; but the legends are all late and unreliable. There is a church dedicated to her in *Rome which was restored by Pope *Sergius (687–701). Her name occurs in the *Ambrosian Canon of the Mass. Feast day, 16 Sept.

AA.SS., Sept. V (1755), pp. 255–86. F. Halkin, S.J. (ed.), Euphémie de Chalcédoine. Légendes byzantines, with appendix by P. Canart (Subsidia Hagiographica, xli; 1965), with reff. A. M. Schneider, 'Sankt Euphemia und das Konzil von Chalkedon' in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (1951), pp. 291–302. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), col. 745 f., s.v.

EUSEBIAN CANONS, The. The system of tables (κανόνες) devised by *Eusebius of Caesarea on the basis of the *Ammonian Sections (q.v.) to enable the reader of the Gospels to turn up the passages in the other Gospels parallel to the one before him. These tables are often prefixed or appended to the Gospels in Greek and Latin MSS., esp. down to the 13th cent., with the corresponding numbers inserted in red ink in the margins. Sometimes the table was elaborately illuminated. Eusebius himself explained the system in his epistle to Carpianus.

J. P. Migne, PG, xxii, 1275–92. E. *Nestle, 'Die eusebianische Evangelien-Synopse' in Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, xix (1908), pp. 40–51, 93–114, 219–32. See also bibliogr. to Ammonian Sections.

EUSEBIUS (c. 260 – c. 340), Bp. of *Caesarea, the 'Father of Church History'. He was a pupil of the scholar and martyr *Pamphilus, who trained him in the tradition of *Origen and imbued him with a hatred of *Sabellianism which remained with him all his life. After Pamphilus's death (309), he fled from the persecution to Tyre, and then into Egypt, where he spent some months in prison. About 315 he became Bp. of Caesarea. During the *Arian controversy he was the leader of the moderate party. At the Council of *Nicaea (325), where he seems to have been on trial for orthodoxy, he produced the baptismal creed of Caesarea as a proposed compromise. But the absence of the crucial word 'homoousios' led to its rejection in favour of the *Nicene Creed (q.v.), which Eusebius, now allowing that *Arius, whom he had hitherto upheld, was really heretical, ultimately accepted. His fear of Sabellianism remained, and he never gave *Athanasius his full support. In 331 he was offered the bishopric of Antioch, but refused it. In 335 he attended the Council of Tyre and the dedication of the Church of the Resurrection at *Jerusalem, and was afterwards summoned by *Constantine to advise on the case of Athanasius. He was active until his death.

Of Eusebius's many writings the most celebrated is his 'Ecclesiastical History', the principal source for the history of Christianity from the Apostolic Age till his own day. As with all Eusebius's writings, its literary style is poor. But it contains an immense range of material on the E. Church (he has little to say about the W.), largely in the form of long extracts taken over bodily from earlier writers. If Eusebius's interpretation of these documents was sometimes in error, this is to be explained by his want of critical judgement and not by conscious perversion of the facts. The 'History' consists of ten Books, of which the last three deal in great detail with the events of his own time. Indeed, it seems that the 'History' had originally ended before 303 with Book VII, and that the later Books were added in successive editions, the final edition with Book X being issued in A.D. 323. Besides the original Greek, it survives in Latin, *Syriac, and *Armenian versions.

Among his other historical writings are: 'The Martyrs of Palestine', an account of the *Diocletianic Persecution between 303 and 310, of which he was an eye-witness; a 'Chronicle' in two books, i.e. a summary of universal history with a table of dates; and a 'Life of Constantine', a panegyric which, though excessive in its flattery, contains invaluable historical matter. His apologetic writings include a defence of Christianity 'Against Hierocles' (a pagan governor of Bithynia), and a pair of treatises, the 'Preparation for the Gospel' and the 'Demonstration of the Gospel'. The former of these (in 15 books) shows why Christians accept the Hebrew and reject the Greek tradition, while the latter in (20 books, only partly extant) attempts to prove Christianity by the OT. The 'Preparation' contains many quotations from classical authors now lost. His other extant writings are a work on the Incarnation called 'The Theophany', two books against *Marcellus of Ancyra, a collection of OT passages foretelling the coming of Christ, commentaries on the Psalms and Isaiah (which employ the allegorical methods of Origen), a book on Problems of the Gospels, a treatise on 'Easter' (De solemnitate Paschali) in which he expounds the *Eucharistic Sacrifice, and a valuable work on Biblical topography called the Onomasticon.

His writings are repr., from various sources, in J. P. Migne, PG, xix–xxiv; crit. ed. by I. A. Heikel and others in G.C.S. (9 vols. in 11, 1902–75). Editio princeps of Eccl. Hist. by R. *Stephanus (Paris, 1544); much improved text by H. *Valesius (Paris, 1659); crit. text, with Rufinus's version, by E. *Schwartz–T. *Mommsen in the G.C.S. edition of his works (2 vols., 1903–8). Eng. trr. of Eccl. Hist. by K. *Lake–J. E. L. Oulton (2 vols., Loeb, 1926–32), H. J. Lawlor–J. E. L. Oulton (2 vols., London, 1927–8), R. J. Deferrari (Fathers of the Church, xix and xxix; 1953–5), and G. A. Williamson (Harmondsworth, 1965).

H. J. Lawlor, Eusebiana (1912); J. Stevenson, Studies in Eusebius (1929); D. S. Wallace-Hadrill, Eusebius of Caesarea (1960). M. Weis, Die Stellung des Eusebius von Caesarea im arianischen Streit (1920); H. G. Opitz, 'Euseb von Caesarea als Theolog' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiv (1935), pp. 1–19; H. Berkhof, Die Theologie des Eusebius von Caesarea (Amsterdam, 1939); R. Farina, L'Impero e l'Imperatore cristiano in Eusebio di Cesarea. La prima teologia politica del cristianesimo (Bibliotheca Theologica Salesiana, Series I: Fontes, ii; Zürich, 1966). R. M. Grant, Eusebius as Church Historian (Oxford, 1980). C. Luibhéid, Eusebius of Caesarea and the Arian Crisis (Dublin, 1981). Bardenhewer, iii (1912), pp. 240–62; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 217–24. J. B. *Lightfoot in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 308–48; E. Schwartz in P.W., vi (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 1370–1439; J. Moreau in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1437–60, s.v. 'Eusèbe (17) de Césarée de Palestine'; id. in R.A.C., vi (1966), cols. 1052–88, s.v., with bibl.; J. Stevenson in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 633–6, s.v. For works on the genuineness of his life of Constantine, see bibl. to Constantine.

EUSEBIUS, Bp. of Dorylaeum. See after Eusebius, St., Bp. of Samosata.

EUSEBIUS (d. c. 359), Bp. of Emesa (Homs) in Syria. He was a native of *Edessa, a Biblical exegete and writer on doctrinal subjects, of *Semi-Arian sympathies, and prob. a disciple of *Eusebius of Caesarea. Having declined to fill the see of *Alexandria when *Athanasius was deposed in 339, he became Bp. of Emesa shortly afterwards. Until recently, apart from a conjectural restoration to him of some 14 homilies of his Caesarean namesake, only fragments of his writings (mainly in exegetical catenae) have been known. Now a collection of 17 homilies (in Lat. tr.) in the MS. Troyes 523 (formerly belonging to *Clairvaux) has been ascribed to him with great probability by A. *Wilmart, O.S.B. Collections of Lat. sermons of Gallican provenance have long gone under the name of 'Eusebius'. These are believed to be derived from *Faustus of Riez.

Part of an encomium on Eusebius of Emesa by *George of Laodicea is preserved in *Socrates, H.E., ii. 9, and *Sozomen, H.E., iii. 6. The chief older study on Eusebius is J. C. Thilo, Über die Schriften des Eusebius von Alexandrien und des Eusebius von Emisa (Halle, 1832). New ed. of texts by E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M., in S.S.L., fasc. xxvi (i, La Collection de Troyes; Discours I–XVII), 1953; fasc. xxvii, 1957 (ii, La Collection de Sirmond; Discours XVIII–XXIX). A. Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Le Souvenir d'Eusèbe d'Émèse' in Anal. Boll., xxxviii (1920), pp. 241–84 (text, pp. 263–84). G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'La Collection gallicane dite d'Eusèbe d'Émèse et les problèmes qui s'y rattachent' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiv (1935), pp. 92–115; E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M., 'L'Authenticité des dix-sept opuscules contenus dans le MS. T.523 sous le nom d'Eusèbe d'Émèse' in R.H.E., xliii (1948), pp. 1–89; id., L'Héritage littéraire d'Eusèbe d'Émèse. Étude critique et historique (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xxiv; 1949). D. Amand de Mendieta, 'La Virginité chez Eusèbe d'Émèse et l'ascétisme familial dans la première moitié du IVe siècle' in R.H.E., l (1955), pp. 777–820. O. Perler, 'Pseudo-Ignatius und Eusebius von Emesa' in Hist. J., lxxvii (1958), pp. 73–82. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 224. For the sermons of Eusebius 'Gallicanus', see Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), p. 212f. (No. 966). They are now ed. J. Leroy–F. Glorie (C.C., Series Latina, ci, ciA and ciB; 1970–71).

EUSEBIUS (d. c. 342), Bp. of Nicomedia. He was the leader of the Arian party in the first half of the 4th cent. In early life he had been a disciple of *Lucian of Antioch, with *Arius as his fellow-pupil, and after Arius's deposition by *Alexander, the Patr. of Alexandria, c. 320, Eusebius espoused his cause. By his influence with the Imperial family, Eusebius transformed what might have remained an Egyptian dispute into an oecumenical controversy; and his ascendancy over *Constantine (d. 337), whom he baptized in his last illness, and Constantius (d. 361) enabled him to organize the forces of the State and of the Church against *Athanasius and his supporters. At the Council of *Nicaea (325), however, he signed the Creed. In 339 he secured his translation from Nicomedia to Constantinople. His followers were commonly known by his name (οἱ περὶ Εὐσέβιον).

A. Lichtenstein, Eusebius von Nikomedien. Versuch einer Darstellung seiner Persönlichkeit und seines Lebens unter besonderer Berücksicht seiner Führerschaft im arianischen Streite (1903). G. Bardy, Recherches sur Saint Lucien d'Antioche et son école (Études de Théologie Historique, 1936), pp. 296–315. J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 190–93. G. Bareille in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1539–51, s.v. 'Eusèbe (6) de Nicomédie'; M. Spanneut in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1466–71, s.v. 'Eusèbe (24) de Nicomédie'.

EUSEBIUS, St. (d. 371), Bp. of Vercelli from 340. He was born in Sardinia. A strong supporter of orthodoxy in the *Arian conflict, at the request of Pope *Liberius he accompanied St. *Lucifer of Cagliari on his embassy to Constantius in 354. After the Synod of Milan (355) he was exiled to the E., whence he did not return until the reign of *Julian (362). He lived with his clergy at Vercelli under rule and has hence been sometimes regarded by the *canons regular as one of their founders (with St. *Augustine of Hippo). Three of his letters have survived, and the ancient *Old Latin Gospel Codex in the cathedral library of Vercelli (cod. a) is ascribed, though improbably, to Eusebius's own hand. He also made a Lat. trans. of *Eusebius of Caesarea's 'Commentary on the Pss.', now lost; and various other works which have come down under the names of other authors (among them the *Athanasian Creed, so C. H. *Turner) have been attributed to him in modern times. Feast day, 16 Dec.

J. P. Migne, PL, xii, 9–972 (on the Codex, 9–948; text of Epistolae, 947–54). Crit. ed. of his three letters, of certain letters addressed to Eusebius, a treatise De Trinitate, traditionally ascribed to *Athanasius, and other material, by V. Bulhart (C.C., Series Latina, ix, 1957, pp. 1–205); the ascription of the De Trinitate to Eusebius has been widely contested. St. Ferrerius, S. Eusebii Vercellensis ejusque Successorum Vita (Turin, 1609). C. H. Turner, 'On Eusebius of Vercelli' in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 126–8. Dekkers (ed. 2), p. 24 f. (Nos. 105–11). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 366 f. V. C. De Clercq in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1477–83, s.v. 'Eusèbe (33) de Verceil', with bibl.

EUSEBIUS, St. (d. 380), Bp. of Samosata from 361. He belonged theologically to the group led by *Basil of Ancyra which was strongly opposed to *Arianism. Later he became closely associated with St. *Basil of Caesarea, from whom he was the recipient of several letters, and St. *Gregory of Nazianzus. In 374 he was exiled for his orthodoxy to Thrace, but four years later recalled by the Emp. Gratian. He was killed by an Arian woman who threw a brick at his head. Feast day in E., 22 June; in W., 21 June.

Theodoret, H.E., V. iv. 8. AA.SS., Jan. IV (1707), pp. 235–42. Syr. Life, perh. based on Gr. sources, in P. Bedjan (ed.), Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, vi (1896), pp. 335–77. H. R. Reynolds in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 369–72, s.v. 'Eusebius (77), bishop of Samosata'; F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 620–2, s.v.; M. Spanneut in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1473–5, s.v. 'Eusèbe (29) de Samosate'.

EUSEBIUS (mid-5th cent.), Bp. of Dorylaeum. He was an ardent advocate of theological orthodoxy. In 429, at that time a lawyer of *Constantinople, he made a public protest against the teaching of *Nestorius in a 'Contestatio' (Διαμαρτυρία) addressed to the clergy of Constantinople. By 448 he had become Bp. of Dorylaeum in Phrygia Salutaris, in which year he led the attack on the heresy of *Eutyches at the 'Home Synod' at Constantinople. In 449 he was deposed and exiled by the '*Latrocinium' of *Ephesus. His position changed after the reversal of theological policy at court by the accession of Marcian (450), and he took a prominent part at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where, after being reinstated in his see, he assisted in drafting its Definition of the Faith.

His Contestatio in Mansi, iv, 1007–12. Early Lat. version in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxiv, 581–3. Crit. ed. of Gk. in E. *Schwartz, A.C.O., I. i. 1 (1927), p. 101 f. G. Bareille in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1532–7, s.v., with bibl.

EUSEBIUS, St., Bp. of Vercelli. See Eusebius, St. (d. 371), above.

EUSTACE, St., also 'Eustachius', early Christian martyr. His very existence is doubtful. Acc. to 7th-cent. legends he was a Roman general under Hadrian and converted by a vision of a stag with a crucifix between its antlers, which occurred at Guadagnolo near Praeneste (Palestrina). (Details from the story were later incorporated in the legend of St. *Hubert, q.v.) He and his family are said to have been later roasted to death in a brazen bull. Some of his relics appeared in the 12th cent. in *Paris, where they were destroyed by the *Huguenots in 1567. He is one of the Fourteen so-called *Auxiliary Saints and is the patron of hunters and of the city of Madrid. Feast day in the E., 2 Nov.; in the W., formerly 20 Sept., dropped 1969.

Legends of St. Eustace and his family in AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 106–37. A. Monteverdi, La leggenda di S. Eustachio (Bergamo, 1909); id., I testi della leggenda di S. Eustachio (ib., 1910). H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'La Légende de St. Eustache' in Académie Royale de Belgique. Bulletins de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Brussels, 1919, pp. 175–210, with full bibl. reff.; repr. in Mélanges d'hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, xlii; 1966), pp. 212–39. O. Engels, 'Die hagiographischen Texte Papst Gelasius' II. in der Überlieferung der Eustachius-, Erasmus- und Hypolistuslegende' in Hist. J., lxxvi (1957), pp. 118–33, esp. pp. 119–25, with reff. A. P. Frutaz in E.C., v (1951), cols. 859–61, with bibl.

EUSTATHIUS, St., Bp. of *Antioch from c. 324 to 330. At the Council of *Nicaea (325) he was given a position of honour, and on his return to his diocese banished many of his clergy suspected of *Arianism. His uncompromising orthodoxy brought him into conflict with *Eusebius of Caesarea, whom he denounced as favouring the Arians, Eustathius in turn being charged with *Sabellianism. When feeling at the court had swung in favour of Arianism, Eusebius succeeded in securing the support of *Constantine for his deposition at a council at Antioch in 330, and Eustathius was forthwith banished to Thrace, where he remained till his death (see Melitian Schisms (2)). He was famed for his eloquence. Of his writings there survives only 'de Engastrimutho' (against *Origen), but there are several fragments of, and references to, Eustathius's other works. His Christology was characteristically '*Antiochene', and in many respects foreshadowed the later (heretical) teaching of *Nestorius. E. *Schwartz has ascribed to him the pseudo-*Athanasian 'Sermo Major de Fide'. Feast day, 16 July.

Collection of texts and fragments in J. P. Migne, PG, xvii, 609–1066. The sermon pr. in F. Cavallera, S. Eustathii Episcopi Antiochensis in Lazarum, Mariam et Martham Homilia Christologica (Paris, 1905; with useful collections of fragments), is prob. not the work of Eustathius. More recent ed. of fragments, with discussion, in M. Spanneut, Recherches sur les écrits d'Eustathe d'Antioche, avec une édition nouvelle des fragments dogmatiques et exégétiques (Mémoires et Travaux publiés par des professeurs des Facultés Catholiques de Lille, lv; 1948). Crit. ed. of 'De Engastrimutho' in E. Klostermann, Origenes, Eustathius und Gregor von Nyssa über die Hexe von Endor (Kleine Texte, lxxxiii; 1912), pp. 16–62. Crit. reconstruction of his Ep. to *Alexander of Alexandria on the subject of *Melchisedek in B. *Altaner, 'Die Schrift Περὶ τοῦ Μελχισεδέκ des Eustathios von Antiocheia' in B.Z., xl (1940), pp. 30–47. F. Scheidweiler, 'Die Fragmente des Eustathios von Antiocheia', ib., xlviii (1955), pp. 73–85. E. Schwartz, 'Der sog. Sermo Maior de Fide des Athanasius' in Sb. (Bayr.), 1925, No. 6. On his theology, R. V. Sellers, Eustathius of Antioch and his Place in the Early History of Christian Doctrine (1928). M. Spanneut, 'La Position théologique d'Eustathe d'Antioche' in J.T.S., N.S., v (1954), pp. 220–4. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 230–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 309 f. E. Peterson in E.C., v (1951), col. 862 f., s.v.; M. Spanneut in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 13–23, s.v. 'Eustathe (2) d'Antioche'.

EUSTATHIUS (c. 300–c. 377), Bp. of Sebaste in Pontus from c. 357. In his youth he was a pupil of *Arius at *Alexandria, and throughout his life vacillated in his attitude to the *Nicene cause. At the synods of *Ancyra (358) and Lampsacus (365) he defended *homoiousian doctrines. His main interests, however, esp. in his earlier years, were in the *monastic movement, in the organization of which he took a prominent part. In this connexion he seems to have greatly influenced St. *Basil the Great, with whom for a time he was on terms of close friendship, in the foundation of his rule. In his later years he became the leading spirit in Asia Minor in furthering the *Macedonian heresy.

F. *Loofs, Eustathius von Sebaste und die Chronologie der Basilius-Briefe. Eine patristische Studie (1898); J. Gribomont, O.S.B., 'Le Monachisme au IVe s. en Asie Mineure: de Gangres au Messalianisme' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, ii (T.U., lxiv; 1957), pp. 400–15; id., 'Eustathe le Philosophe et les voyages du jeune Basile de Césarée' in R.H.E., liv (1959), pp. 115–24. F. Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 627–30, s.v.; S. Salaville, A.A., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1565–71, s.v., with bibl.; J. Gribomont in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 26–33, s.v. 'Eustathe (7) de Sébaste'.

EUSTOCHIUM, St. JULIA (370–c. 419), a Roman virgin of noble descent. With her mother, St. *Paula, she came under the influence of St. *Jerome, who counselled them in an attempt to lead the life of the Egyptian hermits in the midst of Rome. A letter (Jerome, Ep. 22) which he addressed to her on the subject of virginity created such a stir that they were obliged to leave the city (385). After visiting Syria and Egypt on the way, they settled in *Bethlehem, where they built four monasteries, of which Eustochium assumed the direction on her mother's death in 404. Feast day, 28 Sept.

In addition to Ep. 22 (PL, xxii, 394–425), St. Jerome addressed to Eustochium Epp. 31 (ib., 445 f.) and 108 (ib., 878–906); a letter from Paula and Eustochium is pr. among Jerome's Epp. (No. 46; ib., 483–92); further reff. include those in Epp. 54 (ib., 550–60) and 66 (ib., 639–47). AA.SS., Sept. VII (1760), pp. 630–45. W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 392, s.v., with further reff.

EUTHALIUS. The reputed author of a collection of editorial material found in many MSS. of the Greek NT. The editor's work, which consisted of (1) an arrangement of the text in short lines as an aid to reading it aloud, (2) a system of references to quotations from other parts of the Bible, and (3) a division of the Books into chapters, with summary headings of their contents, extended over the Pauline Epp., the Acts, and the Catholic Epp. Attached to the Euthalian prologue to the Pauline Epp. is a 'Martyrium Pauli' which appears to date from either 458 (L. A. Zacagni) or 396 (F. C. *Conybeare); but the reasons for identifying the author of this item with that of the rest of the Euthalian material now seem insufficient, and J. A. *Robinson has argued that Euthalius is to be dated in the middle of the 4th cent. Virtually nothing further is known of him beyond the fact that he is described as 'a deacon'. Adequate grounds for identifying him with the author of a long confession of faith (7th cent.), ascribed to 'Euthalius, Bp. of Sulce', are wanting.

L. A. Zacagni, Collectanea Monumentorum Veteris Ecclesiae Graecae et Latinae, i (Rome, 1698), pp. 401–708, mostly reprinted in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv, 619–790. J. A. Robinson, 'Euthaliana' in Texts and Studies, III, iii (Cambridge, 1895); E. von Dobschütz, 'Euthaliusstudien' in Z.K.G., xix (1899), pp. 107–54; F. C. Conybeare, 'The Date of Euthalius' in Z.N.T.W., v (1904), pp. 39–52; G. Zuntz, 'Euthalius = Euzoius?' in V.C., vii (1953), pp. 16–22; J. W. Marchand, 'The Gothic Evidence for "Euthalian Matter"' in H.T.R., xlix (1956), pp. 159–67.

EUTHANASIA (from Gk. εὐθανασία). The word, originally meaning an easy death, has come since 1869 to denote the termination of life on humanitarian grounds, as in the case of incurable disease, or 'mercy killing'. The practice of euthanasia has been legal in Russia since 1922. In England C. K. Millard in 1932 founded the Voluntary Euthanasia Legislation Society (later known as the Euthanasia Society), but attempts to legalize euthanasia were defeated in 1936, 1950, 1969, and 1970. It is opposed on moral grounds as a breach of the Sixth Commandment, and a denial of the Christian attitude to suffering; it was officially condemned by the RC Church in 1940 (A.A.S., xxxii, p. 553 f.). Nevertheless, Catholic theologians commonly hold that extraordinary efforts to prolong life need not be made, and that drugs may be used to relieve pain even when the indirect result is to shorten life.

EUTHYMIUS, St. (377–473), monk. A native of Melitene in Lesser Armenia, where he was ordained priest, he came to *Jerusalem in 405. After living as a monk and solitary in several places near Jerusalem, he finally established c. 426 a lavra* at Khan-el-Ahmar. In the period immediately following *Chalcedon (451), he was one of the very few in Palestine who remained unwavering in his support of the Council. He exercised a formative influence upon Palestinian monasticism, and among his many disciples was St. *Sabas. Feast day, 20 Jan.

The principal authority is the life by *Cyril of Scythopolis; crit. ed. by E. *Schwartz, in T.U., xlix (pt. 2; 1939), pp. 3–85; A.-J. Festugière, O.P., Les Moines d'orient, III. i (1962). R. Génier, O.P., Vie de Saint Euthyme le Grand (1909). S. Vailhé, A.A., 'Saint Euthyme le Grand' in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, xii (1907), pp. 298–312, 337–55, xiii (1908), pp. 181–91, 225–46, xiv (1909), pp. 189–202, 256–63. D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 83–100. J. Darrouzès in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1720–2, s.v.

EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS (early 12th cent.), Byzantine theologian. He was a monk of the Περίβλεπτον convent at *Constantinople, whom the Emp. Alexis Comnenus ordered to write a work against all heresies. In this work, the Πανοπλία Δογματική, the old heresies are refuted by an array of patristic texts; the new ones, comprising the last 6 of the 28 chapters, are treated more independently. The most interesting is the section (27) on the *Bogomiles, our knowledge of whom rests almost entirely on this description. The work was supplemented later by the Θησαυρὸς Ὀρθοδοξίας of *Nicetas Akominatos (d. c. 1215). Euthymius's other important works are his extensive commentaries on the Psalms, the Four Gospels, and the Epp. of St. Paul, in which he utilizes mainly patristic sources, esp. St. *Chrysostom. His works are remarkable esp. for the account they take of the literal sense of the Bible, an achievement unusual among the later Greek exegetes.

The Gk. text of his 'Panoplia Dogmatica' was first publd. by Metrophanes Gregoras (Tergovist, 1710); of his Comm. on Pss. by A. Bongiovanni (Venice, 1763); of his Comm. on Gospels by C. F. Matthaei (3 vols. bound in 4, Leipzig, 1792); and of his Comm. on Pauline Epp. by N. Kalogeras, Abp. of Patras (2 vols., Athens, 1887). Collected ed. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxviii–cxxxi. J. Wickert, 'Die Panoplia Dogmatica des Euthymios Zigabenos' in O.C., viii (1911), pp. 278–388. M. Jugie, A.A., 'La Vie et les œuvres d'Euthyme Zigabène', É.O., xv (1912), pp. 215–25. Krumbacher, pp. 82–4. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 614–16, with bibl. refs. W. Gass–P. Meyer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 633–5; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1577–82.

EUTYCHES (c. 378–454), heresiarch. He was *archimandrite of a large monastery at *Constantinople, with great influence at court through the eunuch Chrysaphius. His keen opposition to *Nestorianism led him to be accused in 448 by *Eusebius of Dorylaeum of the opposite heresy of confounding the two natures in Christ (see Christology). Deposed by *Flavian, Abp. of Constantinople, after synodical action, he then appealed to Pope *Leo for support, and by court influence secured a re-trial and acquittal at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus in 449. Meanwhile, Leo repudiated his doctrines in his '*Tome'. A change of emperor in 450 turned the scales against him, and at the Council of *Chalcedon in 451 he was deposed and exiled. Eutyches denied that the manhood of Christ was consubstantial with ours, a view which went far towards rendering our redemption through Him impossible. He also maintained that there were 'two natures before, but only one after, the Union' in the Incarnate Christ and was thus the real founder of Monophysitism (q.v.).

E. *Schwartz, 'Der Prozess des Eutyches' in Sb. (Bayr.) Jhrg. 1929, Hft. 5 [Texts with notes and commentary]. R. Draguet, 'La Christologie d'Eutychès d'après les Actes du Synode de Flavien (448)' in Byzantion, vi (1931), pp. 441–57; B. Emmi, O.P., 'Leone ed Eutiche' in Angelicum, xxix (1952), pp. 3–42. T. Camelot, O.P., in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 229–42, and H. Bacht, ib., ii (1953), pp. 197–222 and 224–8. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 635–47, s.v.; M. Jugie in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1582–1609, s.v. 'Eutychès et eutychianisme', with full bibl.; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, ii (1967), pp. 243–6, s.v. For further bibl., see s.v. Monophysitism.

EUTYCHIANISM. See Monophysitism.

EVAGRIUS PONTICUS (346–99), spiritual writer. A native of Pontus, he was ordained deacon by St. *Gregory of Nazianzus and became a noted preacher at *Constantinople. In 382 he departed to the *Nitrian desert to cultivate his soul among the monks, where he became a friend and disciple of St. *Macarius of Egypt. Here he spent the rest of his life. From 553 onwards he was condemned several times for *Origenistic views.

Recent studies show that he occupied a central place in the history of Christian spirituality. The first monk to write extensively, he deeply influenced *Palladius, *Cassian, *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite, and *Maximus the Confessor, to all of whom he transmitted many of Origen's central ideas. His writings (largely lost or extant only in Lat. or Syr. translations) include his 'Monachos' (on the active and spiritual life of the monk), collections of Apophthegms, and a treatise 'On the Eight Evil Thoughts'. Certain works hitherto assigned to *Nilus of Ancyra (e.g. 'On Prayer') prob. belong to Evagrius. He also wrote Commentaries on Pss. and Prov. (only fragments survive).

Works (incomplete) in J. P. Migne, PG, xl, 1213–86; also ib., lxxix, 1165–1200 (De Oratione of 'Nilus'). W. Frankenberg, Evagrius Ponticus in Abh. (Gött.), N.F., 13.2, 1912, pp. 49–635 (Syr. texts, with Gk. retransl.). J. Muyldermans, Evagriana Syriaca. Textes inédits du British Museum et de la Vaticane (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xxxi; 1952), with Fr. tr.; Syr. text and Fr. tr. of Kephalaia Gnostica ed. A. Guillaumont (P.O., xxviii. I; 1958). R. Melcher, Der 8. Brief des hl. Basilius ein Werk des Evagrius Ponticus (1923). J. Muyldermans, A travers la tradition manuscrite d'Évagre le Pontique. Essai sur les manuscrits grecs conservés à la Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris (Bibliothèque du Muséon, iii; 1932), and other works of this author. S. Marsili, O.S.B., Giovanni Cassiano ed Evagrio Pontico. Dottrina sulla carità e contemplazione (Studia Anselmiana, v; 1936). I. Hausherr, 'Le Traité de l'oraison d'Évagre le Pontique' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xxxv (1959), pp. 121–46, 241–65, 361–85, xxxvi (1960), pp. 3–35, 137–87. A. Guillaumont, Les 'Képhalaia Gnostica' d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens (Patristica Sorbonensia, v; 1962). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 49–53. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 265–7, with bibl. J. Lemaître, R. Roques, M. Villier in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 1775–85, s.v. 'Contemplation'; A. and Claire Guillaumont ib., iv (1960), cols. 1731–44, s.v.; idd. in R.A.C., vi (1966), cols. 1088–1107, s.v. M. Geerard, Clavis Patrum Graecorum, ii (Turnhout, 1974), pp. 78–97.

EVAGRIUS, 'SCHOLASTICUS' (c. 536–600), Church historian. A native of Coele-Syria, he was a lawyer by profession. His 'History', which is in six books, extends from the Council of *Ephesus (431) to 594, and thus continues the Histories of *Eusebius and his successors. Though a poor theologian and a credulous gatherer of legends, he made use of several excellent sources and, like Eusebius of Caesarea, incorporated extracts from them.

'Ecclesiastica Historica' with Lat. tr., ed. by H. *Valesius and W. Reading in Historiae Ecclesiasticae, iii (Cambridge, 1720), pp. 249–473; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (2), 2415–906. Crit. ed., J. Bidez and L. Parmentier ('Byzantine Texts', London, 1898). Eng. tr., with short account of Evagrius and his writings, together with *Theodoret, in Bohn's Ecclesiastical Library (1854), pp. 251–467. C. de Boor, 'Die handschriftliche Überlieferung der Kirchengeschichte des Evagrius' in Z.K.G., v (1882), pp. 315–22. P. Peeters, S.J., 'Les Ex-Voto de Khosrau Aparwez à Sergiopolis' in Anal. Boll., lxv (1947), pp. 5–56, esp. pp. 35–40; M. J. Higgins, 'Chosroes II's Votive Offerings at Sergiopolis' in B.Z., xlviii (1955), pp. 89–102, with reff. A. J. Visser, 'Een Merkwaardig Hagiografisch Stuk bij Euagrius Scholasticus' in Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, N.S., xlv (1963), pp. 14–24. Bardenhewer, v (1932), p. 119 f., incl. further bibl. G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, i (ed. 2, Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, x; 1958), pp. 257–9, with extensive bibl. A. de Halleux in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 1495–8, s.v. [in Supplement]; M. J. Higgins in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 645, s.v.

EVANGELIARY. (1) A book containing the complete text of the Four Gospels. (2) The liturgical book containing the portions of the Four Gospels which are read as the 'Gospel' at the *Eucharist, arranged acc. to their place in the ecclesiastical calendar. When in the 10th cent. the practice of incorporating the text of the 'Gospel' into the *Sacramentaries began to become general, the Evangeliaries lost much of their importance, though in recent years they have in some places been brought back into prominence. The 1969 Ordo Missae recommended that the Gospel Book be carried in procession and placed on the lectern before the Gospel was read.

W. H. *Frere, Studies in Early Roman Liturgy, ii. The Roman Gospel Lectionary (Alcuin Club Collections, xxx; 1934).

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE. An interdenominational body, formed in London in 1846, to 'associate and concentrate the strength of an enlightened *Protestantism against the encroachments of *Popery and *Puseyism, and to promote the interests of a Scriptural Christianity'. Its dogmatic basis included belief in the inspiration and authority of the Bible, in the *Trinity, in the depravity of man, in the mediation of the Incarnate Son of God, in *justification by faith alone, in conversion and sanctification by the Holy Ghost, in the traditional *eschatology, in the Divine institution of the ministry, and in the obligation of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. It received support in varying degrees from almost the whole of the Protestant world, though the keen controversy on *slavery at its first meeting delayed the institution of a branch in the U.S.A. till 1867. Friedrich Wilhelm IV, who strongly favoured it, summoned a large meeting to Berlin in Sept. 1857; but it never gained a real hold in Germany, where its place was taken by the '*Evangelische Bund' (q.v.). Much work was done by the alliance in the 19th cent. for oppressed religious minorities in Europe. In the present century its influence greatly declined and the American branch was dissolved in 1944. In 1951, however, the American National Association of Evangelicals and the British Evangelical Alliance held a joint conference at Woudschoten in Holland. At this meeting the World Evangelical Fellowship was founded. It is composed of national interdenominational bodies of evangelical background, and has a statement of faith close to that of the Evangelical Alliance. From the first the Evangelical Alliance has observed a week early in January as an annual week of prayer.

J. A. Arnold, 'These Fifty Years. A Brief Epitome of the History of the Evangelical Alliance' in Jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance. Proceedings of the Tenth International Conference held in London June–July 1896 (1897), pp. 43–64. J. W. Ewing, Goodly Fellowship. A Centenary Tribute to the Life and Work of the World's Evangelical Alliance, 1846–1946 [1946]; J. E. Orr, The Second Evangelical Awakening in Britain (1949). Reports of the General Conferences were usually issued under the title The Religious Condition of Christendom.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, The. See following entry.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH, The. A small Protestant religious body, sometimes known as the Albright Brethren from their founder Jacob Albright (1759–1808), a native of Pennsylvania and a member of the *Lutheran Church. After an experience of conversion in 1791, Albright associated himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church and in 1796 began to preach among the Germans living in his state. Failing to win the support of his Methodist leaders, he created for his followers an independent organization. At a conference in 1809, his followers agreed to be known as the 'So-called Albright People', and from 1816 as the 'Evangelical Association'. About 1890 internal controversies led to a schism, but this was healed in 1922, and the reunited body called itself the 'Evangelical Church'. In 1946 it joined with another Church of similar background in the U.S.A., the United Brethren in Christ, to form the Evangelical United Brethren Church.

W. W. Orwig, History of the Evangelical Association, i (all publd., Cleveland, Ohio, 1858); R. Yaekel, Albright and his Co-Labourers (ib., 1883); id., History of the Evangelical Association (2 vols., ib., 1892–5). S. P. Spreng, 'History of the Evangelical Association' in The American Church History Series, xii (New York, 1894), pp. 383–439. A. Stapleton, Annals of the Evangelical Association of North America and History of the United Evangelical Church (Harrisburg, Pa., 1900); R. W. Albright, A History of the Evangelical Church (ib., 1942). R. Kücklich, Die evangelische Gemeinschaft in Europa. Ill. Festschrift zum 75-jähr. Jubiläum ihres Bestehens, 1850–1925 (1925). F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 667–72, s.v. 'Evangelische Gemeinschaft', with further bibl.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN GERMANY, The (Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland). The federation of 27 autonomous Protestant territorial Churches (Landeskirchen) of E. and W. Germany founded in 1945. A precursor of the federation may be seen in the Eisenach Conference of the governing bodies of the territorial Churches (1852–1903); in 1903 the regional Churches formed a closer link through the German Evangelical Churches Committee, in 1922 changed into the German Evangelical Church Federation, which existed until Nazi pressure in 1933 led to the establishment of the German Evangelical Church (see German Christians) and the parallel *Confessing Church. Leaders of the latter played a prominent part in the establishment of the Evangelical Church in Germany after the end of the Second World War.

Seven of the 27 member Churches were already united in the Evangelical Church of the Union, which owed its origin to the attempt of King Frederick William III of Prussia in 1817 to unite the Lutheran and Reformed Churches in his province. Within these Churches, which form the largest single unit in the Evangelical Church in Germany, there is full sacramental fellowship, but the strictly Lutheran Churches are not yet officially in full communion with them or with the other smaller Reformed bodies. In 1948 the Lutheran regional Churches formed the United Evangelical Lutheran Church of Germany within the Evangelical Church in Germany.

The Evangelical Church in Germany is governed by a Council, a Conference of Churches, and a Synod. In 1969 the eight East German Churches were compelled to form the League of Evangelical Churches in the German Democratic Republic and to sever their formal association with their sister Churches in the Federal Republic.

G. Wasse, Die Werke und Einrichtungen der evangelischen Kirche (Göttinger Rechtswissenschaftliche Studien, xi; 1954). H. Brunotte, Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland. Geschichte, Organisation und Gestalt der EKD (Gütersloh, 1964). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iv (1962), pp. 270–4. P. Zieger in E.K.L., i (1956), cols. 1193–1208; J. Beckmann–G. Wasse in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 779–85, both s.v. 'Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland'.

EVANGELICAL COUNSELS. See Counsels of Perfection.

EVANGELICALISM. (1) In a wider sense the term 'Evangelical' has been applied since the Reformation to the Protestant churches by reason of their claim to base their teaching pre-eminently on the 'Gospel'. The Church created in Prussia in 1817 by the union of *Lutheran and *Reformed was officially known as the 'Evangelical Church' (Evangelische Kirche). A more recent instance is the inclusive designation of all the Protestant Churches of Germany as the 'Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland' (see Evangelical Church in Germany*).

(2) In Germany and Switzerland, the word 'Evangelical' (evangelisch) was long in use, esp. of the Lutheran group of Protestant Churches as contrasted with the *Calvinist ('Reformed') bodies.

(3) In the C of E the term is currently applied to the school which lays special stress on personal conversion and salvation by faith in the atoning death of Christ. The group originated in the 18th cent. to bring reality into religion when a low tone pervaded English life and many clergy were negligent and worldly. It had several points of contact with the *Methodist movement, esp. in the more Calvinistic form of G. *Whitefield; but it sought to work on the basis of the parochial system and never contemplated separation from the C of E. Among its early leaders were John *Fletcher (1729–85) of Madeley in Salop, Henry *Venn (1725–95) of Huddersfield, William *Romaine (1745–95) of London, and John *Newton (1725–1807) of Olney. To a rather later date belonged Charles *Simeon (1759–1836), who made Evangelicalism a powerful force at Cambridge and indirectly later at the other universities, Henry Martyn (1781–1812), the missionary to India, and the influential *Clapham Sect (q.v.). Dislike of their religious earnestness led to much opposition, and in 1768 six students were expelled from St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, for 'too much religion'. But their piety and humanity gradually won them a large following and in the 19th cent. they took a leading part in missionary work and social reform (abolition of slavery, factory laws). The *Church Missionary Society and the *Colonial (now Commonwealth) and Continental Church Society both owed their origin to the Evangelicals. From 1827 Churchmen of Evangelical sympathies have met annually in the 'Islington Conference'.

Theologically Evangelicals have commonly upheld the verbal inspiration and sole authority of Scripture (denying that the Church has power to impose its interpretation upon the individual); belief in the near return of Christ to redeem His elect; the supreme importance of preaching, with a relative minimizing of liturgical worship; rejection of the doctrines of Baptismal regeneration and the Eucharistic sacrifice; and, in general, a strong suspicion of the RC Church and hostility to characteristic *Tractarian and *High Church doctrines. See also Liberal Evangelicalism, Anglican Evangelical Group Movement and Fundamentalism.

J. H. Overton, The Evangelical Revival in the Eighteenth Century (1886); H. C. G. *Moule, The Evangelical School in the Church of England (1901); G. R. Balleine, A History of the Evangelical Party in the Church of England (1908). L. E. Elliott-Binns, The Early Evangelicals. A Religious and Social Study (1953). C. I. Foster, An Errand of Mercy. The Evangelical United Front, 1790–1837 (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1960). Kathleen [J.] Heasman, Evangelicals in Action. An Appraisal of their social work in the Victorian era (1962). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church, i (1966), pp. 440–55. M. Erickson, The New Evangelical Theology (Westwood, N.J. 1968; London, 1969).

EVANGELICAL UNION, The. A religious denomination formed in Scotland in 1843. In 1841 James *Morison (1816–93), minister of a United Secession congregation in Kilmarnock and a close Biblical student, was suspended by his presbytery for his anti-Calvinistic views. He affirmed that Christ made atonement for all and condemned the doctrine of unconditional election. In 1843, along with three other ministers, he founded the 'Evangelical Union', which was soon joined by a number of Scottish Congregationalists. The Union was an association of independent Churches over which it exercised no jurisdiction. Its members were commonly called 'Morisonians'.

In 1897 most of the Churches in the Union joined with the Congregational Union of Scotland.

H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960), pp. 116–34, 165–82.

EVANGELISCHE BUND, Der (Germ., 'The Evangelical League'). An alliance of German Protestants founded in 1886–7 by Prof. W. *Beyschlag and others for the defence of Protestant interests against the growing power of Catholicism. It furthered its purposes by contacts with the secular press and through the issue of literature of its own, as well as by other methods. The movement, which took on a strongly nationalistic colour in the years immediately preceding the War of 1914–1918, had gained by 1914 a membership of 540,000, though its influence decreased subsequently. After 1933 a greater emphasis on the theological basis led to a better understanding of Catholic thinking. The headquarters of the Evangelische Bund in Berlin, with its library and archives, were destroyed in 1942, but in 1947 it established an institute for confessional research at Bensheim in Hessen.

H. Hüttenrauch, Der evangelische Bund. Sein Werden, Wachsen und Wirken (1911). G. Warneck, Der evangelische Bund und seine Gegner (1889); F. Nippold, Ziele und Vorgeschichte des evangelischen Bundes (1890). A. Wächtler, Der evangelische Bund nach 25 Jahren (1912). W. Beyschlag, Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des evangelischen Bundes (1926). Id. in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 549–53, s.v. 'Bund, Evangelischer'; K. Nitzschke in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 789–92, s.v.

EVANGELISCHE KIRCHE IN DEUTSCHLAND, Die. See Evangelical Church in Germany.

EVANGELIST (Gk. εὐαγγελιστής, 'a proclaimer of the εὐαγγέλιον or Gospel').

(1) In the NT the word is thrice used of a travelling missionary (Acts 21. 8; Eph. 4. 11; 2 Tim. 4. 5). Probably no special office is designated, but the evangelist ordinarily combined his duty of proclaiming the Gospel with such offices as those of *bishop or *deacon. *Philip, e.g., was both a 'deacon' and an 'evangelist' and the Apostles are also said to have 'evangelized'. In modern usage the word is applied to certain laymen in Protestant Churches who do home missionary work.

(2) In a more technical sense, the author of one of the canonical Gospels, i.e. exclusively St. *Matthew, St. *Mark, St. *Luke, and St. *John. This usage established itself in the 3rd cent. Traditionally the four evangelists are symbolized respectively by a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle, on the basis of Rev. 4. 6–10.

EVANGELISTARIUM (Gk. εὐαγγελιστάριον). In the Orthodox Church, a book of tables indicating the Gospel lections for each year in accordance with the varying date of *Easter.

EVANGELIUM VERITATIS. A treatise on the Christian life and salvation included among the Coptic texts discovered at *Nag Hammadi (see Gnosticism), which opens with the words 'The Gospel of Truth'. 'Gospel' here seems to bear the non-technical sense of 'good news', and the phrase is not given separately as a title. The work expounds the mission of Jesus as 'the Word' or 'the Name' of the Father, alludes briefly to His teaching ministry, and comments on His death on the Cross and its significance. There are numerous similarities with the New Testament, but also some unusual features, such as the attribution of evil to Error, personified as a female figure (Planē). *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer., III. xi. 9) mentions a work produced by the disciples of *Valentinus, which was composed not long before the time of writing (c. A.D. 180) and 'presumptuously' entitled 'Veritatis Evangelium' (Gospel of Truth), though quite unlike the other gospels; it has been suggested that the present work is in question, that it was written by Valentinus, and represents the less unorthodox thought of his early years (c. A.D. 140). The work certainly shows little trace of the elaborate speculations which are usually associated with the Valentinian system; some scholars, however, believe that they are presupposed, though not emphasized, in order to conciliate orthodox opinion; others that the work has no connexion with Valentinus.

Facsimile, with ed. of Coptic text and translations into Fr., Germ. and Eng., by M. Malinine, H. C. Puech and G. Quispel, Evangelium Veritatis (Zürich, 1956, with suppl. 1961). Reconstruction of Gk. text, with comm., by J. E. Ménard, L'Évangile de Vérité (1962). Eng. tr., with comm., by K. Grobel, The Gospel of Truth (1960). H. M. Schenke, Die Herkunft des sogenannten Evangelium Veritatis (Göttingen, 1959); S. Arai, Die Christologie des Evangelium Veritatis (Leiden, 1964). H. Ringgren, 'The Gospel of Truth and Valentinian Gnosticism' in Studia Theologica, xviii (1964), pp. 51–65.

EVANSON, EDWARD (1731–1805), divine. After becoming Vicar of *Tewkesbury in 1769, and of Longdon in Worcestershire in 1770, he developed views with *Unitarian affinities, advocating the removal of the *Nicene and *Athanasian creeds from the BCP. A prosecution instituted against him in 1775 before the Bp. of *Gloucester failed on a technical point, but in 1778 he resigned his living and became a schoolmaster at Mitcham. Here he held occasional services and administrations of the Lord's Supper, which he considered the only Sacrament. Besides some controversial writings against J. *Priestley, he published The Dissonance of the Four Generally Received Evangelists (Ipswich, 1792), in which he accepted only the Gospel of Luke. His book was the earliest formal attack on the traditional authorship of St. John's Gospel.

His Sermons were issued in 2 vols. in 1807, prefixed by a Life. T. Falconer replied to his book on the Gospels in his *Bampton Lectures for 1810 (publd. 1811). D.N.B., xviii (1889), p. 78 f. (unsigned).

EVANSTON, Illinois. The Second Assembly of the *World Council of Churches met at Evanston in 1954.

The Evanston Report, ed. W. A. Visser 't Hooft (1955).

EVE. The first woman, the wife of *Adam. Acc. to Gen. 3. 20 she was so named because she was the mother of all living beings; but the Hebrew word (חַוָּה) for Eve may have meant 'serpent', and her name thus been associated with the primitive myth that all life originated in a primeval serpent. Eve is tempted by the serpent to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge; she and Adam disobey, '*fall' and are driven out from *Eden; and Eve is punished with the pain of childbirth. In the NT (1 Cor. 11. 9 f., 1 Tim. 2. 13 ff.) the relationship of Adam and Eve is used by St. *Paul to support his teaching about the relative status of man and woman in Christian worship. It was a common medieval conceit that the Latin form of her name ('Eva'), spelled backwards, was the first word of the angel's address to the BVM ('Ave') and symbolized the reversal of Eve's fall through the Incarnation.

The principal discussions are to be found in comm. on Genesis, cited s.v. A. M. Dubarle, O.P., 'Les Fondements bibliques du titre marial de Nouvelle Ève' in Mélanges Jules Lebreton, i (Rech. S.R., xxxix; 1951), pp. 49–64. W. H. Bennett in H.E.R.E., v (1912), p. 607 f.; E. Mangenot in D.T.C., v (1915), cols. 1640–55, with bibl.; H. Junker in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), col. 1215 f., with bibl.

EVELYN, JOHN (1620–1706), Anglican diarist. Born at Wotton in Surrey, he was educated at Southover free school, near Lewes, and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1641 he visited Holland and in 1642 for a short period served in the King's army. From 1643 to 1645 he travelled extensively in France and Italy, making many acquaintances and recording his experiences. In 1647 he married at Paris Mary, the daughter of Sir Richard Browne (1605–83), a girl of not more than twelve years. In 1649, after the King's execution, he went abroad again. After his final return (Feb. 1652), he settled at Sayes Court, a large estate near Deptford. Here he interested himself in gardening and other rural pursuits until the *Restoration, carrying on a friendly correspondence with John *Wilkins (1614–72), then Warden of Wadham, and Robert *Boyle, with both of whom he was closely associated in the creation of the Royal Society. He also became connected with Jeremy *Taylor, whom, among other dispossessed clergy, he befriended under the Commonwealth. He enjoyed the favour of *Charles II and *James II and was on intimate terms with many leading personalities at Court and elsewhere. He held several royal appointments, nobly remaining at his post when one of these required his residence in London during the Great Plague. He played a prominent part in Church affairs, esp. in the rebuilding of *St. Paul's Cathedral, and continued to take an active interest in the Royal Society. After the Revolution he lived in comparative retirement.

Evelyn's wide interests made him a prolific writer. The Diary, if it lacks the liveliness of that of Pepys (1633–1703), is a true reflection of his character and an important document for social history. It reveals him as a man of scholarly temperament and wide culture, which he combined with a firm devotion, and a strong loyalty to the royalist cause even though he disapproved of much of the life of the Court. His best known works include Fumifugium (1661), Sculptura (1662) and Sylva (1664). Of more specifically religious interest are his Mystery of Jesuitism (1664), The Pernicious Consequences of the New Heresie of the Jesuites Against the King and the State (anon., 1666) and his translation of The Golden Book of St. John Chrysostom concerning the Education of Children (1659); and two posthumous publications, The Life of Mrs. [Margaret] Godolphin (ed. by S. *Wilberforce, 1847) and The History of Religion (ed. by R. M. Evanson, 2 vols., 1850).

Extracts from his Diary and some letters first publd. by W. Bray (2 vols., London, 1818); further extracts ed., id., 2 vols., ib., 1819 and 5 vols., ib., 1827. The complete text was ed. by E. S. de Beer (6 vols., Oxford, 1955). Modern life by A. Ponsonby (London, 1933); short study by Florence Higham (ib., 1968). W. G. Hiscock, John Evelyn and Mrs. Godolphin (1951); id., John Evelyn and his Family Circle (1955). J. Bowle, John Evelyn and his World (1981). G. [L.] Keynes, John Evelyn. A Study in Bibliophily with a Bibliography of his Writings (Cambridge, 1937; ed. 2, Oxford, 1968).

EVENING COMMUNION. There are possible references to evening celebrations of the Eucharist in the NT (e.g. 1 Cor. 11.-21), but it would appear that an early hour of the day soon became the usual time. After the *Reformation certain Protestant Churches, which held the service to be mainly commemorative, celebrated the Lord's Supper in the morning or evening indiscriminately. In the C of E the practice of evening Communion appears to date from the middle of the 19th cent. It was introduced by W. F. *Hook at Leeds in 1852 in order to meet the needs of his industrial parish. From the first it met with much opposition (notably from H. P. *Liddon) as in conflict with the traditional rule of fasting from the previous midnight, and until the middle of the present cent. it was a mark of *Low Churchmanship. In the RC Church rules about the *Eucharistic Fast were relaxed and evening Masses permitted in military establishments during the Second World War. In 1953 *Pius XII's encyclical 'Christus Dominus' permitted evening Masses generally on *Feasts of Obligation, *First Fridays, and certain other occasions. The *Maundy Thursday Mass was restored to an evening hour in 1955 and two years later in the motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' permission for an evening Mass was extended to every day when pastoral reasons demanded it. Since then celebrations of the Eucharist in the evening have become generally accepted in the RC Church in both parish churches and religious houses, and are also now found in both *High and Low Church circles in the C of E.

The practice was deprecated in many episcopal charges in the 19th cent., notably by S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of *Oxford. [H. P. Liddon], 'Evening Communion' in The Christian Remembrancer, xl (1861 for 1860), pp. 191–214; repr., with additions and notes [by W. *Bright; also anon.], as Evening Communion Contrary to the Teaching and Practice of the Church in all Ages (1872); J. Hughes-Games, Evening Communion. The Argument for the Practice Stated and the Objections against it Answered (1894). E. Dekkers, O.S.B., 'L'Église ancienne a-t-elle connu la messe du soir?' in Miscellanea Liturgica in Honorem L. Cuniberti Mohlberg, i (Bibliotheca 'Ephemerides Liturgicae', Sect. Hist., xxii; 1948), pp. 231–57 with reff. See also bibl. to Eucharistic Fast.

EVENING PRAYER. See Evensong. The term is also sometimes used of the evening Office (*Vespers) provided in the 1971 *Breviary.

EVENSONG. The name given in medieval England to the canonical hour of *Vespers. It is now in common use for the BCP service of Evening Prayer. The structure of this latter is closely related to the traditional type of Divine service. After preparatory prayers the service proper opens with the versicles and responses, 'O Lord, open thou, &c.', and the Lord's Prayer. This is followed by certain psalms varying acc. to the day of the month, a reading from the OT, the *Magnificat, a further reading from the NT, and the *Nunc Dimittis. After the recitation of the *Apostles' Creed follow the *Kyrie Eleison, the Lord's Prayer, versicles and responses, the Collect for the day, two invariable collects, 'in quires and places where they sing' the *anthem, and further prayers. In substance it is a conflation of the *Sarum services of Vespers and *Compline. The name 'Evensong', found in the 1549 BCP, was replaced by 'Evening Prayer' in 1552, but came back again (in the Table of Proper Lessons) in 1662.

The Alternative Services, Evening Prayer, Series I (1967) and II (1968) introduced minor changes. Series II (Revised) (1971) was much more radical; most of its provisions were incorporated in the ASB. Here Ps. 134, the *Phos Hilaron, or the Easter Anthems precede the Psalms of the day; the recitation of the Psalter at Mattins and Evensong may be spread over about ten weeks; and there are alternative canticles to the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. If the Eucharist is to follow, the service is drastically curtailed. There is also a Shorter Form, with one Biblical reading and one canticle, which varies according to the day of the week. The American BCP (1979) provides some flexibility, allowing one, two, or three readings.

EVURTIUS, St. (4th cent.), Bp. of Orléans. The correct form of St. *Enurchus (q.v.).

EWALD, HEINRICH GEORG AUGUST (1803–1875), OT theologian and orientalist. He was educated at the University of Göttingen, where he taught from 1827 to 1837. In 1838 he went to *Tübingen and joined in the attack on F. C. *Baur and the Tübingen School. From 1847 to 1867 he was back in Göttingen. He was the author of a long series of books. His 'Hebrew Grammar' (1827) was a landmark in the history of OT philology, but of even greater influence was his Geschichte des Volkes Israel (5 vols., 1843–55; to ed. 2 two further vols. on the Apostolic Age were added in 1858–9). In its English translation (vol. 5, 1865; the rest, 1867–86) it much influenced British scholarship. Ewald exercised a healthy restraining influence on the negative tendencies of much OT criticism in his day.

Life by T. Witton Davies (London, 1903). T. K. *Cheyne, Founders of Old Testament Criticism (1893), pp. 66–118. E. Bertheau–C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 682–7.

EXALTATION OF THE CROSS, The. The feast in honour of the Cross of Christ, observed on 14 Sept. It is also known as 'Holy Cross Day'. In the W. Church, the *Martyrology and *Offices commemorate on this day the exposition of the supposed true Cross at *Jerusalem in 629 by the Emp. *Heraclius, after his recovery of it from the Persians into whose hands it had fallen in 614. Actually this event in Jerusalem took place in the spring, and the date, 14 Sept., has become attached to it through confusion with a much earlier commemoration kept in Jerusalem on that day, viz. of the dedication in 335 of the basilica built by the Emp. *Constantine on the site of the *Holy Sepulchre. It seems likely that the '*Invention' of the Cross, formerly observed on 3 May, was commemorated on this day before the celebration of the incident of 629.

The first clear mention of the Feast in the W. is in the notice of Pope *Sergius (687–701) in the L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i, p. 374; cf. Duchesne's note, p. 378 f. There is an early ref. to the adoration of the Cross at Jerusalem in the *Pilgrimage of Etheria (ch. 48 f.); but Etheria does not record its date of observance in the calendar. Cf. A. Bludau, Die Pilgerreise der Aetheria (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, xv, Hftt. 1/2; 1927), pp. 185–90. I. de Combes, Études sur les souvenirs de la Passion. La Vraie Croix perdue et retrouvée (1902; Eng. tr., 1907). H. Thurston, S.J., 'Relics, Authentic and Spurious' [The Cross and Title] in The Month, clv (1930), pp. 420–9. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3131–9, s.v. 'Croix (Invention et exaltation de la vraie)'; A. Bugnini in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 960–3, s.v. 'Croce VII'. See also bibl. to Invention of the Cross.

EXAMINING CHAPLAINS. The duty of examining candidates for holy orders belongs properly to the *archdeacon, as the BCP Ordinal shows. But canon C 7 (1969) requires further that candidates be diligently examined by the archdeacons 'and other ministers appointed for this purpose', regarding their knowledge of Holy Scripture and the doctrine and worship of the C of E. The 1604 canon (can. 35) specified that examining chaplains should be at least three in number; should be members of the cathedral church, if possible, or at any rate of the diocese; and should assist at the laying-on of hands. These requirements no longer apply.

S. C. Gayford in P.B.D. (1912), p. 326 f., s.v. 'Examination'.

EXAPOSTILARION (Gk. ἐξαποστειλάριον, from ἐξαποστέλλω, 'dismiss'). A *troparion occurring at the end of the *canon at *Orthros in the E. Church.

EXARCH. The title of: (1) certain civil governors in the later Roman Empire, notably the Exarch of *Ravenna; (2) certain bishops lower in rank than *patriarchs but having rights over the *metropolitans of one civil diocese (though the title has sometimes been given to patriarchs and metropolitans themselves).

EXCARDINATION (Lat. cardo, 'hinge'; hence excardinare, 'to unhinge'). In W. canon law, the liberation of a cleric from his present *Ordinary with a view to fresh enlistment ('incardination') under a new superior. For details see Incardination.

EX CATHEDRA. See Cathedra.

EXCEPTIONS, The. The long list of objections made by the *Puritans at the *Savoy Conference (1661) to the existing Prayer Book (of 1604) with a view to its revision. They were directed against certain of the Book's doctrinal affirmations and ceremonial prescriptions, as well as minor matters where no question of principle was involved. The Puritans pressed for such changes as the omission of *Lent and of saints' days with their vigils, the use of the AV instead of the text of the *Great Bible (1539) for all Scriptural passages in the Book, the substitution of the word 'minister' for 'priest' and 'curate', and of 'Lord's Day' for 'Sunday'. Of a few of these 'Exceptions' account was taken in the revised Book of 1662, but for the most part they were disallowed.

Text in E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences . . . connected with . . . the Book of Common Prayer (1840), ch. vii, § S.

EXCLUSION, Right of (Lat. Ius Exclusionis or Ius Exclusivae). The right formerly claimed by the heads of certain Catholic states to name a particular candidate whom they desired to exclude from being elected Pope. The claim goes back to the 16th cent., and the last occasion on which it was exercised was by the Austrians in 1903 (against Cardinal Rampolla). The right was finally annulled by *Pius X in Commissum Nobis (20 Jan. 1904) and Vacante Sede Apostolica (25 Dec. 1904).

EXCLUSION CONTROVERSY. The crisis caused by the attempt of the Whigs, led by the first Earl of Shaftesbury, to exclude James, Duke of York (later *James II), from the succession to the throne after his brother *Charles II. Liberties, religion, and property were held to be in danger from the RC views and absolutist inclinations of the Duke. The crisis was set in motion by T. *Oates's announcement of the *Popish Plot, and the question of Exclusion dominated elections to and sessions of three successive Parliaments in 1679–81. A Bill to exclude James failed to pass beyond the Commons in 1679, and another was rejected by the Lords next year; at the Oxford Parliament of 1681 Charles II took advantage of fears of another civil war and scored a complete triumph over the Whigs, which he followed up with various successful counter-measures against them in the next two years. The controversy gave rise to much polemical writing (see J. *Dryden) and to violent anti-Catholic feeling.

J. R. Jones, The First Whigs. The Politics of the Exclusion Crisis, 1678–1683 (1961). See also bibll. to Charles II and James II.

EXCOMMUNICATION. An ecclesiastical censure imposed by competent authority which excludes those subjected to it from the communion of the faithful and imposes on them other deprivations and disabilities. It does not profess to extend to the union of the soul with God, since that union is held to depend on the immediate effect of sanctifying grace and to be unaffected by any act of the Church. Hence it is not impossible for a man to be excommunicated and yet to be and remain in a state of grace.

In earlier times excommunication could be either 'greater' or 'less'. The greater deprived a man of the right to administer or receive the Sacraments and of all intercourse, public or private, with his fellow-Christians, and of all rights and privileges in the Church of any kind whatsoever, save only the last rites. The lesser deprived him only of the right to administer or receive the Sacraments. In the RC Church the lesser excommunication now scarcely exists. But a new distinction has been introduced between those excommunicate 'vitandus' and 'toleratus'. The 'vitandus' corresponds closely to a man under the greater excommunication. He may not attend any form of public Divine worship, he loses any and every ecclesiastical office, rank, stipend, or dignity which he may possess, and the faithful are warned to have as little social intercourse with him as it is possible or convenient. No one is 'excommunicatus vitandus' unless he has offered physical violence to the Pope, or been explicitly and by name pronounced 'vitandus' by the Holy See. All other excommunicated persons are 'tolerati'. Such persons may not lawfully administer or receive the Sacraments, but though legally debarred from attending any public worship except sermons, they need not be expelled if they do attend. And though they may not legitimately exercise any ecclesiastical rights, e.g. of patronage or election, if they do, their acts are valid. If they had been 'vitandi', such acts would have been invalid. Current RC practice is outlined in the 1917 *Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 2257–67), where it is distinguished from two other forms of censure, viz. interdictum and suspensio (can. 2255).

The use of excommunication is implied in the rubrics of the BCP and was openly threatened in the canons of 1604. In the 17th cent. it was fairly commonly applied for a variety of misdemeanours, but after the *Restoration its frequent use brought it into discredit with both the laity and the spiritual authorities, and it became increasingly rare in the C of E. The 1969 Canons, however, still envisage the possibility of dying after being 'declared excommunicate for some grievous and notorious crime', and excommunication is more common in the Anglican Churches overseas, esp. in missionary dioceses. Except in the case of heathen converts, it is usually confined to 'minor excommunication'.

W. Doskocil, Der Bann in der Urkirche. Eine rechtsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Münchener theologische Studien, III. Kanonistische Abteilung, xi; 1958). P. Hofmeister, 'Die Excommunicatio regularis' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxxvii: kanonistische Abteilung, xlvi (1960), pp. 133–220. F. D. Logan, Excommunication and the Secular Arm in Medieval England (Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, Studies and Texts, xv; Toronto, 1968). É. Jombart in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 915–27, s.v.; W. Doskocil in R.A.C., vii (1969), cols. 1–22, with extensive bibl. See also commentaries to Codex Juris Canonici, cited s.v.

EXEGESIS (from Gk. ἐξηγέομαι, 'I narrate', 'explain'). The act of explaining a text, in theology usually a sacred text. The explanation may include translation, paraphrase or commentary on the meaning. Its purpose may be either to describe the author's meaning or to apply that meaning to a contemporary situation. Its rules are governed by the science of *Hermeneutics (q.v.).

On account of the obscurities of Scripture, Biblical exegesis has been practised from early times, both by Jews and Christians. In the time of Christ it was practised by *Philo, the *Qumran community and the Rabbis, according to different methods. These were also employed by the writers of the NT, who likewise presupposed the divine inspiration of the OT. In conflict with *Gnostic exegetes, Christian writers, esp. St. *Irenaeus and *Tertullian, insisted that the meaning of Scripture be elucidated in conformity with apostolic tradition. A chiefly allegorical mode of interpretation was fostered esp. in the *Alexandrian school, whose principal exponents were St. *Clement and *Origen. By contrast, the school of *Antioch, represented, among others, by St. John *Chrysostom and *Theodore of Mopsuestia, cultivated the explanation of the literal sense of the Bible. The most important exegetes among the W. Fathers were St. *Jerome and St. *Augustine, who sought to combine the two kinds of exegesis, though the former emphasized the literal, the latter the allegorical, sense. Among the later Greek Fathers the science of exegesis was represented esp. by *Hesychius of Jerusalem, St. *John of Damascus and *Euthymius Zigabenus. In the W. many of the Schoolmen were concerned with the methods of exegesis, notably *Peter Lombard, *Alexander of Hales, and St. *Thomas Aquinas. They favoured the fourfold method of literal, allegorical, moral and anagogical (or mystical) exegesis; their chief contribution was an increase in the systematization of materials and in logical order.

At the *Reformation, many Protestant theologians, esp. J. *Calvin, rejected the authority of the Church's tradition as a criterion for exegesis, substituting the interior witness of the Holy Spirit. Such teaching made possible a variety of individual interpretations, although in practice *Lutheran, *Reformed and *Anglican orthodoxy maintained the traditional exegesis of, e.g., Christological and Trinitarian passages. Since, for Protestants, the Bible became the supreme norm of doctrine, Biblical study was accorded a position of high value. It was, therefore, in Protestantism that literary and historical criticism, undermining the traditional doctrine of inspiration, was practised by English *Deists, and emerged strongly in Germany in the 18th cent. J. S. *Semler, J. J. Wetstein and J. A. *Ernesti were among the earliest Biblical critics. From the beginning of the 19th cent. much attention was given to the origin, nature and history of the individual Biblical documents and to reconstructions of Biblical history, including the life of Jesus. These investigations, esp. the work of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule, claimed freedom from the guidance of theology in presenting a descriptive explanation of the texts in their own historical context. The conclusions yielded sometimes conservative, sometimes radical, results. In England, under the influence of *Methodism in the 18th cent. and of the *Oxford Movement in the 19th, exegesis developed along mainly conservative lines. With notable exceptions among the *Modernists, RC exegesis has until fairly recent times largely ignored or reacted against critical scholarship. Although from 1902 the work of RC Biblical critics has been guided by the decisions of the *Biblical Commission, the encyclical '*Divino Afflante Spiritu' (1943) of Pope *Pius XII, with its cautious encouragement of the use of modern critical techniques and its affirmation of the freedom of scholarly research, has fostered work marked by a new openness and independence.

The prestige of descriptive Biblical exegesis created many problems for a doctrinal theology built upon the older theory of inspiration. Among 20th cent. theologians and exegetes, K. *Barth was prominent in maintaining the independence of Church Dogmatics from a merely descriptive exegesis. R. *Bultmann, by contrast, holds that Biblical criticism emphasizes the need to reinterpret the meaning of the whole Biblical message in a modern framework. His call for *demythologization has precipitated a renewed interest in hermeneutics.

F. W. *Farrar, History of Interpretation (*Bampton Lectures for 1885; 1886); W. *Sanday, Inspiration (Bampton Lectures for 1893; 1893). R. M. Grant, The Bible in the Church (New York, 1948; revised ed. as A Short History of the Interpretation of the Bible, 1965); J. D. Wood, The Interpretation of the Bible (1958); J. D. Smart, The Interpretation of Scripture (1961). R. *Simon, Histoire critique des principaux commentateurs du Nouveau Testament (Rotterdam, 1693). J. G. Rosenmüller, Historia Interpretationis Librorum Sacrorum in Ecclesia Christiana (5 parts, Heidelberg and Leipzig, 1795–1814). J. Bonsirven, S.J., Exégèse rabbinique et exégèse paulinienne (1939). Beryl Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (1941; ed. 2, 1952); C. Spicq, O.P., Esquisse d'une histoire de l'exégèse latine au Moyen Age (Bibliothèque Thomiste, xxvi; 1944); H. de Lubac, S.J., Exégèse médiévale (Théologie, xli, xlii, lix; 1959–64). W. G. Kümmel, Das Neue Testament. Geschichte der Erforschung seiner Probleme (Orbis academicus, iii, 3; 1958). S. [C.] Neill, The Interpretation of the New Testament 1861–1961 (Firth Lectures, 1962; 1964). G. Vermes and R. P. C. Hanson in The Cambridge History of the Bible, i, ed. P. R. Ackroyd–C. F. Evans (1970), pp. 199–231 and 412–53 respectively; G. W. H. Lampe, J. Leclercq, O.S.B., Beryl Smalley, S. J. P. van Dijk, O.F.M., and E. I. J. Rosenthal, ib., ii, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (1969), pp. 102–279.

EXEMPLARISM. The view of the *Atonement (sometimes also known as the 'moral' or 'subjective' theory) which holds that the value of the Death of Christ for us lies purely in the moral example which it sets us of complete love and self-surrender, thus moving our imagination and will to repentance and holiness. Those who object to this view criticize it rather as inadequate than as erroneous. One of its chief supporters in recent times was H. *Rashdall, in The Idea of Atonement (1919), but the origin of the theory lies as far back as the works of P. *Abelard (d. 1142), if not much earlier.

EXEMPTION. In an ecclesiastical sense, freedom from control by one's normal superior (usually the Bishop of the diocese) and hence in general immediate subjection either to the superior of one's religious house or order, or to the Pope. The term 'exempt' is also applied to dioceses which are not subject to a metropolitan but are directly under the Holy See. The earliest known instance of monastic exemption is that granted by Pope *Honorius I in 628 to the Abbey of *Bobbio. Such exemptions, which from the 11th cent. became common and from the 12th cent. the normal rule, were the cause of much friction between the Bishops and the religious orders in the Middle Ages. Other corporations (e.g. cathedral chapters) or private persons were also increasingly granted exemptions, and by the 16th cent. the practice had been carried to an extreme. One of the chief reforms effected by the Council of *Trent was the restoration to the Bishop of his proper ordinary jurisdiction. Most male religious, however, remain exempt in their internal regime and activities.

E. Fogliasso in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 637–46, s.v.; id., ib. cols. 646–65, s.v. 'Exemption des religieux', with bibl.

EXEQUATUR (Lat., 'he may perform'). The right, also known as the 'Regium Placet', claimed by certain governments to prevent ecclesiastical enactments of the Roman see from taking automatic effect in their territories. In the 17th and 18th cents. the *Jansenists and the *Gallicanists, e.g. Z. B. *van Espen in his De Promulgatione Legum Ecclesiasticarum (1712), were the chief supporters of these claims from the ecclesiastical standpoint. The attempts of the Papacy in recent times to restrain it, e.g. that of *Pius IX in his Syllabus of 1864, have met with varying success, and certain modern governments have continued to exercise some controlling power of this kind.

H. Papius, 'Zur Geschichte des Placets' in Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, xviii (1867), pp. 161–237. S. Luzio in C.E., v (1909), p. 707 f., s.v.; A. Bertola in E.C., v (1950), cols. 917–19, s.v., both with further bibl.

EXETER. (In Roman times, Isca Dumnoniorum.) The see owes its existence to the subdivision of the diocese of *Sherborne by Abp. Plegmund in 909, when a see for Devon and Cornwall was established at *Crediton. Before 931 King Athelstan set up a separate diocese for Cornwall at St. Germans, but on the death of Brihtwold, Bp. of St. Germans (c. 1027), the two W. dioceses were united, with Crediton still the see, until 1050 when Leofric removed it to Exeter. The boundaries of the diocese remained practically unchanged until the foundation of the diocese of *Truro in 1876. It is now almost conterminous with the county of Devon.

In 932 Aethelstan established a monastery at Exeter which was refounded by Canute in 1019. It was destroyed by William Warelwast (Bp., 1107–35), who began to erect a Norman cathedral, of which only the towers remain. The present structure was begun by Walter Bronescombe (Bp., 1258–80). Peter Quivil (Bp., 1280–91) introduced the decorated style in which most of the cathedral is built and transformed the towers into transepts. The building was dedicated by John Grandison (1328–69) and completed by Thomas Brantingham (1370–94). Under the Commonwealth it was temporarily divided by a brick wall and used as two dissenting chapels. The interior was restored under the direction of Gilbert Scott between 1870 and 1877. Notable are its *miserere seats dating from the episcopate of William Bruere (1224–44), a clock made at *Glastonbury in 1285 and brought to Exeter in 1314, the Bishop's throne installed by Walter de *Stapeldon (1308–26), and the West front (1370–1394). In the cathedral library are preserved the deed signed by St. *Edward the Confessor, Earl Godwin, and Tostig, installing Leofric as first bishop; the 10th cent. 'Exeter Book' presented by Leofric; and the Exon Domesday. Edmund Lacy (Bp., 1420–55) was honoured as a popular saint. Other famous bishops include R. *Fox (1487–92), M. *Coverdale (1551–3), J. *Hall (1627–41), H. *Phillpotts (1831–69), and F. *Temple (1869–85).

The University of Exeter received its charter in 1955.

The fullest account is to be found in the learned works of George Oliver (1781–1861), the chief of which are The History of Exeter (1821; ed. 2, 1861); Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Devon (1828; '2nd ed.', really a new work, 3 vols., 1839–42); Monasticon Diœcesis Exoniensis (1846); and Lives of the Bishops of Exeter and a History of the Cathedral (1861). Selection of Episcopal Registers, ed. by F. C. Hingeston-Randolph (9 vols., 1886–1909): that of E. Lacy (Bp. of Exeter, 1420–55), ed. G. R. Dunstan (*Canterbury and York Society, parts cxxix, cxxxii, cxxxiv, cxxxvii and cxxxix; 1963–72). Facsimile reprod. of the Exeter Book, with introductory chapters by R. W. Chambers, M. Förster, and R. Flower (Exeter–London, 1933). E. A. Freeman, Exeter (Historic Towns, 1887). E. C. Mortimer in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), pp. 220–3; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 223–52, s.v.

EXETER HALL. A building in the Strand, London, which was erected c. 1830 and used for religious and philanthropic assemblies, esp. by those of Evangelical sympathies, down to 1907. 'Exeter Hall' thus came to be used allusively as a title for a certain type of *Evangelicalism.

EXISTENTIALISM. The term, which derives from S. *Kierkegaard (d. 1855, q.v.), is usually applied to certain types of modern philosophical thinking which share a practical concern for the individual existing person and his freedom. Such thinking stands in radical opposition to objective philosophy (e.g. the thought of R. *Descartes), positivist science, and mass society. Although such thinkers as St. *Augustine and B. *Pascal have been claimed as ancestors of Existentialism, the contemporary movement goes back mainly to Kierkegaard, F. W. *Nietzsche, and E. Husserl (1859–1938): Kierkegaard with his emphasis that 'God is a subject and therefore exists only for subjectivity in inwardness' (e.g. in his Concluding Unscientific Postcript, 1846), Nietzsche with his stress on man not as a combination of mind and body, but as one who possesses a will (e.g. Der Wille zur Macht, 1901; Eng. tr. The Will to Power, 1909–10), and Husserl, whose *Phenomenology provided a systematic method of describing the universal elements in human consciousness (e.g. in his article 'Phenomenology' in E.B., ed. 14, 1927). The main body of Existentialist writings appears to derive from the discovery of Kierkegaard in Germany in the early 20th cent., esp. by theologians in opposition to Liberal Protestantism, and from the shattering of cultural values in Europe after the First World War.

Attempts have been made to divide Existentialist authors into two groups, viz. the secular—among whom are included M. *Heidegger, M. Merleau-Ponty (1908–61), and J. P. Sartre (1905–80)—and the religious, e.g. Kierkegaard, G. Marcel (1889–1973) and K. *Jaspers. But there are differences within each group and sometimes real affinities between them.

Heidegger in Sein und Zeit (1927; Eng. tr. Being and Time, 1962) explored the 'nature of Being' as philosophy's major theme. Access to this theme is gained only by considering man in his historical, temporal sense. In his later, semi-oracular writings Heidegger claimed that poetry could announce, and expose us to, Being. Sartre's principal early work, L'Être et le Néant. Essai d'ontologie phénoménologique (1943; Eng. tr., Being and Nothingness, 1957), stresses Being-for-itself, that is, human consciousness with personal, chosen values, as man faces an apparently absurd world with feelings of anguish and disgust. Sartre's ideas also found expression in plays and novels, e.g. La Nausée (1938). His later Critique de la raison dialectique, vol. i (1960), signals the eclipse of individualism in favour of Marxism.

Marcel became a RC in 1929. He abandoned idealist philosophy to embrace a Christian personalism whose keynote is hope. This position is expressed in Être et avoir (1935; Eng. tr., Being and Having, 1949). Jaspers' philosophy dealt with being-as-self rather than being-as-object. In his Philosophie (1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1969–71) he set out the limits of scientific knowledge, explored Existence as the possibility of self-determination, and in his metaphysics sought to relate Existence to an elusive Transcendence described only through ciphers or symbols.

The question of a Christian Existentialism has been a prominent element in Protestant theological debate for over 40 years. With its origins in Kantianism and modern research on M. *Luther, and stimulated by the *Dialectical Theology of the 1920s, it has been taken up by R. *Bultmann, who drew on Heidegger's analysis. Opponents have claimed that Existentialism, which is anti-metaphysical and anti-cosmological in character, reduces theology to anthropology, dissolves the historical foundations of Christianity, and treats salvation as no more than a self-generated decision in favour of authentic existence. Supporters have claimed that an Existential standpoint is implicit in the NT, that to acknowledge the salvation event as part of history only serves to confirm the radical nature of faith, locating salvation not in external events but in an encounter between the hidden God and our personal existence.

Existentialism was condemned by the encyclical '*Humani Generis' (1950), but it has continued to exercise an important influence on some RC theologians (e.g. K. *Rahner). There are signs, however, that theological Existentialism is losing some of its appeal, as theologians concern themselves with social problems and again explore metaphysical questions.

J. Wahl, Études kierkegaardiennes (1938); id., Existence humaine et transcendance (1944); P. Foulquier, L'Existentialisme (1946); E. Mounier, Introduction aux existentialismes (1947); J. Hessen, Existenzphilosophie (Essen, 1948); H. J. Blackham, Six Existentialist Thinkers ('1951' [1952]). F. H. Heinemann, Existentialism and the Modern Predicament (1953); J. Macquarrie, An Existentialist Theology. A Comparison of Heidegger and Bultmann (1955). Id., Studies in Christian Existentialism (1966). D. E. Roberts, Existentialism and Religious Belief (New York, 1957). W. Barrett, Irrational Man. A Study in Existential Philosophy (New York, 1958; London, 1961). Mary Warnock, Existentialism (Oxford, 1970).

EXODUS, Book of. The second Book of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows the Gk. and Lat. versions, the Heb. title (וְאֵלֶּה שְׁמוֹת 'And these are the names') being the first words of the text. The Book records the events attending the 'Exodus' (i.e. the release of the Israelites under *Moses from their Egyptian bondage) and Jehovah's subsequent giving of the Law on Mount *Sinai. It describes the oppression of the Israelites, who had settled in Egypt in the time of Joseph, at the hands of a new king (1); the birth and preservation of Moses from slaughter, and his Divine commission to deliver his fellow-slaves (2–4); the refusal of the Pharaoh to release the Israelites, even in the face of the 'plagues' (the waters turned to blood; frogs; swarms of flies; &c.), until the loss of his firstborn made him relent, and the institution of the *Passover (5. 1 – 12. 36); the escape of the Israelites through the miraculous parting of the *Red Sea and the destruction of their Egyptian pursuers in its returning waters (12. 37 – 18. 27); the encampment of the Israelites at Mount Sinai and Moses' ascent to the summit of the mount, where he received from Jehovah the Ten *Commandments and a large body of other legislation, moral, ceremonial, and religious (19–40).

The authorship of the Book has traditionally been ascribed to Moses, but modern Biblical scholars believe it, like the other Books of the Pentateuch, to be a composite work of a much later age, its strata prob. having been written between the 9th and the 5th cent. B.C. Perhaps the earliest item is the couplet ascribed to Miriam in 15. 21, which may well be one of the oldest fragments of the OT. Critical scholarship has been much exercised about the date of the Exodus. The extreme limits seem to be 1580 B.C. and 1215 B.C., and at present scholars favour either the first or second third of the 13th cent. B.C.

Elsewhere in the Bible, frequent and fervent references to the Exodus occur (e.g. Ps. 78. 43–53, Mic. 6. 4–5, Heb. 11. 27–29). Indeed the deliverance was throughout Jewish history regarded as the outstanding instance of God's favour to His chosen people. Christian writers from NT times have used the imagery of the Passover in ch. 12 with reference to the sacrifice of Christ on Calvary and mediately to the Christian sacrifice of the *Eucharist.

Commentaries by H. Holzinger (K.H.C., Abt. ii, 1900), B. Baentsch (H.K.A.T., Abt. I; Bd. ii, on Ex., Lev., Num., 1903, pp. 1–305), A. H. McNeile (West. Comm., 1908), S. R. *Driver (Camb. Bib., RV, 1911), J. *Weiss (Graz–Vienna, 1911), G. Beer (H.A.T., Reihe i, Abt. 3, 1939) M. Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, v; 1959; Eng. tr. 1962), G. Henton Davies (Torch Bible Comm., 1967), and J. P. Hyatt (New Cent. Bib., 1971). W. Beyerlin, Herkunft und Geschichte der ältesten Sinaitraditionen (Tübingen, 1961; Eng. tr., Oxford [1966]); G. Fohrer, Überlieferung und Geschichte des Exodus. Eine Analyse von Ex. 1–15 (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xci; 1964). J. A. Emerton, 'Commentaries on Exodus' in Theology, lxvi (1963), pp. 453–6, with further bibl.

On the Exodus, C. F. *Burney, Israel's Settlement in Canaan. The Biblical Tradition and its Historical Background (Schweich Lectures for 1917; 1918). J. W. Jack, The Date of the Exodus in the Light of External Evidence (1925). A. Lucas, The Route of the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt (1938). H. H. Rowley, From Joseph to Joshua. Biblical Tradition in the Light of Archaeology (Schweich Lectures for 1948; 1950). M. B. Rowton, 'The Problem of the Exodus' in Palestine Exploration Quarterly, lxxxv (1953), pp. 46–60. A. Mallon in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1333–42, s.v. 'Exode'; J. Daniélou, S.J., in R.A.C., vii (1969), cols. 22–44, s.v., with bibl.

EXOKAMELAVCHION. See Epanokamelavchion.

EXOMOLOGESIS (Gk. ἐξομολόγησις). Properly a full or public *Confession of sin. In the early Church the word was applied to the whole process of confession, satisfaction, and forgiveness by which a penitent sinner was reconciled to the Church.

EX OPERE OPERATO. A term in use among theologians at least since the early 13th cent. to express the essentially objective mode of operation of the sacraments, and its independence of the subjective attitudes of either the minister or the recipient. The 'opus operatum' ('act done') is contrasted with the doing of the act, whether the 'opus operans' ('act doing') or the 'opus operantis' ('act of the doer'). To say, therefore, that a sacrament confers grace 'ex opere operato' is to assert in effect that the sacrament itself is an instrument of God, and that so long as the conditions of its institution are validly fulfilled, irrespective of the qualities or merits of the persons administering or receiving it, grace is conferred. It is this property of being effective 'ex opere operato' which Catholic theologians hold to differentiate the sacraments from other channels of Divine grace. The doctrine, which does not deny that right dispositions are necessary on the part of the recipient if grace is to be really effectual, was formally approved at the Council of *Trent (sess. 7, de sacramentis in genere, can. 8).

EXONARTHEX (Gk. ἐξωνάρθηξ). The outer *narthex or porch in E. churches.

EXORCISM. The practice of expelling evil spirits by means of prayer or set formulas was common among the Jews and pagans, and was taken over by the Christian Church after the example of Christ and His Apostles (cf. Mt. 10. 1 ff., Lk. 11. 14 ff., Acts 16. 18, 19. 13 ff., &c.). Exorcism has been practised on persons possessed with an evil spirit from NT times onwards. It has always been applied to catechumens; and the BCP of 1549 preserved one such prayer in the Baptismal Office. In the Latin rite three exorcisms were long included in the Baptismal rite before the actual Baptism. The 1969 RC Order for the Baptism of Infants, however, includes only one exorcism, which may be omitted, while the 1972 Order for Adult Initiation provides exorcisms at various stages of the restored catechumate, but none in the Baptismal rite. The Baptismal exorcisms, as well as the lesser exorcisms used in the blessing of water, &c., do not presuppose a state of possession, but are prayers asking for the restraint of the powers of evil. There is contained in the '*Rituale Romanum' an elaborate rite for the exorcism of evil spirits, the use of which is restricted to priests who have episcopal permission.

J. *Martène, O.S.B., De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (3 vols., Rouen, 1700–2), vol. i, pp. 32 f., 52 f., 81, 159–61; ii, 259, 302 f., 307 f., 347, 359, 371, 390, 394, 400, 427, 431 f., 446, 451, 465, 474, 488 f.; iii, 498 and 517–20. F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872), pp. 16–62. F. J. Dölger, Der Exorzismus im altchristlichen Taufritual (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, iii, Hftt. 1–2; 1909). L. Delatte, Un Office byzantin d'exorcisme (Ms. de la Lavra du Mont Athos, Θ 20) (Académie royale de Belgique, Classe de Lettres, Mémoires, Collection in-8°, 2e Série, iii; 1957), with introd., text, and commentary. R. M. Woolley, Exorcism and the Healing of the Sick (C.H.S., 1932). J. Forget in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1762–80, s.v. 'Exorcisme'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (1922), cols. 964–78, s.v. 'Exorcisme, exorciste'. See also bibl. s.v. Exorcist.

EXORCIST. The second of the traditional *Minor Orders. The power of exorcizing evil spirits, however, was never confined to the members of a particular order (cf. preceding entry). Bishops and priests from the earliest times assumed the primary responsibility for the sick and possessed, and even laymen are known to have exercised the gift of healing. The office of 'exorcist' is first mentioned in a letter of Pope *Cornelius (d. 253). Its duties came to include the imposition of hands on '*energumens' and the exorcizing of *catechumens. In the RC Church these functions of the exorcist have long been practically extinct, and the office only a step to the priesthood. It was finally suppressed in 1972.

T. Bischofberger, Die Verwaltung des Exorcistats nach Massgabe des römischen Benediktionale (1884; rev. ed. by C. Wehrmeister, 1927). F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q., Suppl., vii; 1897), pp. 114–32 and 172–4. See also bibl. to previous entry and works cited under Minor Orders.

EXOUCONTIANS. The extreme *Arians of the 4th cent., so called from their doctrine that the Son was created out of non-being (ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων). Their leader was *Aetius. They were also known as 'Aetians' and '*Anomoeans'.

EXPECTANT. A name formerly used of a candidate for the *Presbyterian ministry in *Scotland before he had received a licence to preach the Gospel.

EXPECTANT, The Church. The body of Christians waiting between earth and heaven, in what is traditionally called *Purgatory, and thus distinguished from the Church in *heaven (*triumphant) and that still on earth (*militant).

EXPECTATION SUNDAY. A title occasionally given to the Sunday between *Ascension Day and *Whitsunday. The name is in reference to the Apostles' 'expectation' of the Descent of the Holy Spirit after Christ's Ascension (Acts 1. 4 f.).

EXPIATION. The atoning or making up for an offence committed against God or one's neighbour. Christianity claims that the only sufficient expiation of human sin is the offering made by Jesus Christ of His earthly life and death, and that of this offering the merits are infinite. Acc. to Catholic theology, its effects are applied to the soul in baptism and (for sins thereafter committed) in absolution. In virtue of its all-sufficiency the performance by Christians of good or pious works, done as penance, has value only through their being effected in union with the perfect expiation offered by Christ. See also Atonement.

EXPIATION, Day of. An alternative name for the Jewish feast usually known as the Day of *Atonement (Tisri 10).

EXPOSITION OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT. The exhibition of the consecrated Eucharistic *Host for the purpose of devotion. Such exhibition may be private (expositio privata), when, e.g., only the doors of the *tabernacle, where the Host is reserved, are opened, or public (expositio publica), when the Host is exhibited on a throne in a *monstrance. In the RC Church, since 1967 exposition may always be by either method; it takes place in accordance with the regulations of the bishop. The form of service which accompanies Exposition is similar to that of *Benediction. The devotion became current in the 14th cent., and in various forms has been in use in the RC Church ever since. In the C of E it went out of use at the *Reformation, but in modern times it has been reintroduced, often under the name of 'Devotions'.

J. B. Thiers, Traité de l'exposition du St Sacrement de l'autel (Paris, 1673). F. Raible, Das Tabernakel einst und jetzt. Eine historische und liturgische Darstellung der Andacht zur aufbewahrten Eucharistie (1908), pp. 150–316 passim. H. Thurston, S.J., 'Our Popular Devotions', No. iv, 'Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament: Part II, Exposition', in The Month, xcviii (1901), pp. 58–69; id., 'Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament', ib., xcix (1902), pp. 537–40. E. Dumoutet, Le Désir de voir l'Hostie et les origines de la dévotion au Saint Sacrement (1927), pp. 75–98. H. Thurston in C.E., v (1909), p. 713 f., s.v., with bibl.

EXSURGE, DOMINE. The bull issued by *Leo X on 15 June 1520 excommunicating M. *Luther, the 'new *Porphyry' (novus Porphyrius). It listed 41 propositions, attributed to Luther, which it condemned as 'heretical or scandalous or false or offensive to pious ears, or seductive to simple minds and standing in the way of the Catholic faith'. They dealt with such matters as *indulgences, *penance, *purgatory, sacramental *grace, and the Pope's teaching authority. Its promulgation in Germany was entrusted to J. *Eck, whose unpopular and provocative methods met with fierce opposition both at Leipzig (29 Sept.) and at *Wittenberg (3 Oct.). After an unsuccessful appeal for a *General Council on 17 Nov., Luther finally broke with the Papacy by publicly burning the bull at Wittenberg on 10 Dec. 1520.

For the text (somewhat abbreviated), see Kidd, No. 38; propositions also in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 357–62 (Nos. 1451–92). P. Kalkoff, 'Die Übersetzung der Bulle "Exsurge" ' in Z.K.G., xlv (1926), pp. 382–99, with reff. to earlier artt. by this author; H. Roos, S.J., 'Die Quellen der Bulle "Exsurge Domine" (15.6.1520)' in J. Auer–H. Volk (edd.), Theologie in Geschichte und Gegenwart Michael Schmaus zum sechzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht (Munich, 1957), pp. 909–26. See also works cited under Luther.

EXTRA-LITURGICAL SERVICES. Services for which no fixed form is provided in the authorized liturgical formularies. For the form of such functions the person conducting them is responsible, subject to the directions of the bishop and parish priest.

EXTRAVAGANTES. The term, at one time applied to certain officially recognized Papal *decretals which had 'wandered outside', i.e. were not included in, the 'Decretum' of *Gratian ('extra decretum vagantes'), is now used almost exclusively of the two concluding sections of the *Corpus Iuris Canonici, viz. the 'Extravagantes Ioannis XXII' and the 'Extravagantes Communes'. The latter is a collection of decretals of various Popes from *Boniface VIII (d. 1303) to Sixtus IV (d. 1484). Down to 1917, when the new *Codex Iuris Canonici was issued, the official authority of many items in the Extravagantes was allowed, though it belonged to them only as individual documents, and not because of any authority attaching to these two collections as a whole.

Crit. text by E. Friedberg in his ed. of Corpus Iuris Canonici, ii (1881), cols. 1201–1312; cf. also Friedberg's Prolegomena, ib., cols. lxiv–lxviii. J. W. Bickell, Über die Entstehung und den heutigen Gebrauch der beiden Extravagantensammlungen des Corpus Juris Canonici (1825). G. Le Bras–C. Lefebvre–J. Rambaud, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, vii, L'Age Classique (1965), pp. 254–6, with reff. P. Torquebiau in D.D.C. iv (1949), cols. 640–3, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici, V. Les Extravagantes'.

EXTREME UNCTION. See Unction.

EXULTET. In the W. liturgy, the 'Paschal Proclamation' (praeconium paschale) or 'Paschal Praise' (laus paschalis) sung by the deacon standing near the *Paschal Candle on *Holy Saturday, and so named from its opening word, 'exultet'. It seems that originally it was the practice for the deacon to compose his own praeconium; but the form now in use can be traced back to the 7th cent. and had completely displaced other forms by the 9th. The chant to which it is sung is one of the finest in the Latin liturgy.

In S. Italy, from the early 10th cent. to the 13th cent., it was customary to write out this *prose, with appropriate musical directions, on rolls known as 'Exultet Rolls'. The text, finely written in Beneventan script, was divided into sections interspersed with illuminated pictures disposed in the reverse way from the text, so that the pictures might be the right way up for the congregation when the section of the roll which had been read had been slipped over the back of the *ambo. About thirty such rolls are known to survive.

L. *Duchesne, Les Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 242–6; Eng. tr. of ed. 3 (1903), pp. 252–6. H. M. Bannister, 'The Vetus Itala Text of the Exultet' in J.T.S., xi (1910), pp. 43–54. A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter, i (1909), pp. 519–53, with bibl. P. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'L' "Exultet" pascal, œuvre de Saint Ambroise' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, i (Studi e Testi, cxxi, 1946), pp. 219–46, with reff.

On the Exultet Rolls, A. M. Latil, O.S.B. (ed.), Le miniature nei rotoli dell' Exultet (Monte Cassino, 1899; coloured plates); M. Avery, The Exultet Rolls of South Italy, vol. ii (plates; all publd.; Princeton, 1936). There is also a facsimile ed. of an 11th cent. Exultet Roll from Monte Cassino (of great artistic merit) in the British Museum (Add. MS. 30337), with introd. by J. P. Gilson (London, 1929). E. Bertaux, L'Art dans l'Italie méridionale de la fin de l'empire romain à la conquête de Charles d'Anjou, ii (1903), pp. 216–40, with supplement on 'Iconographie comparée des rouleaux de l'Exultet. Tableaux synoptiques' (1903).

EXUPERIUS, St. (d. after 410), Bp. of Toulouse. He was renowned for his liberality to the poor and also to monks, and for having finished the basilica of St. Saturninus at Toulouse. St. *Jerome dedicated to him his Commentary on Zech. Feast day, 28 Sept.

For the text of Pope *Innocent I's Ep. to Exuperius (Ep. vi; 20 Feb. A.D. 405), with its important list of the Canonical Books of Scripture, prescriptions on clerical celibacy, etc., see J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 495–502. AA.SS., Sept. VII (1760), pp. 623–30. G. Bareille in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2022–7.

EYCK, HUBERT and JAN VAN. See Van Eyck, Hubert and Jan.

EZEKIEL, Book of. Ezekiel was the third and last of the 'Greater' OT Prophets, the successor of *Isaiah and *Jeremiah. The Book of Ezekiel falls into four divisions: (1) Chs. 1–24. The message here is denunciation and the main theme the forthcoming destruction of *Jerusalem and the Jewish nation. These chapters contain Ezekiel's characteristic teaching on individual responsibility, that 'the soul that sinneth, it shall die' (18. 4). (2) Chs. 25–32. A series of prophecies directed against foreign nations, viz. Ammon (25. 1–7), Moab (25. 8–11), Edom (25. 12–14), Philistia (25. 15–17), Tyre and Sidon (26–28), Egypt (29–32). (3) Chs. 33–39. Prophecies relating to the redemption and reconstitution of the Jewish people. Their resurrection is described in ch. 37 under the image of tne Valley of Dry Bones. (4) Chs. 40–48. A detailed vision of the ideal theocracy and esp. the form and worship of the reconstructed *Temple.

Diverse views have been held about the origin of the Book. The traditional view is that Ezekiel's prophecies were all written in Babylon, whither he had been carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar at the first deportation in 597 B.C. Some scholars have held that only a relatively small part of the Book goes back to Ezekiel himself; others that Ezekiel was never in Babylon at all; yet others that the Book is a pseudepigraphon to be dated in the mid-third cent. B.C.: but none of these (or other) alternatives has attracted any widespread support. In many places the text is very corrupt.

The prophet wrote as one overawed with the majesty and holiness of God. His own experience, shared by his fellow-exiles, had convinced him of the universality of the rule of God, who can and must be worshipped in Babylon as in Palestine. Like Jeremiah, he stressed the responsibility of the individual soul in the sight of God, but he also had a firm belief in the corporate nature of the religious community, as is shown by his careful provisions for the future well-being of the restored state. Though there are no direct quotations from Ezekiel in the NT, the combination of priestly and prophetic religion in the Book paved the way for the later Judaism in which the Gospel was planted.

Commentaries by C. H. *Cornill (Heb. text, Germ. tr. and Comm., Leipzig, 1886), A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, 1892; revised for RV text by A. W. Streane, 1916), H. A. Redpath (West. Comm., 1907), J. Herrmann (K.A.T., xi; 1924), G. A. *Cooke (I.C.C., 1936), I. G. Matthews (An American Commentary on the Old Testament, Philadelphia, 1939), G. Fohrer–K. Galling (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. xiii; 1955), W. Eichrodt (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xxii; 2 vols., 1959–66; Eng. tr., 1970), W. Zimmerli (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, xiii; 18 parts, 1959–69), D. M. G. Stalker (Torch Bib. Comm., 1968) and J. W. Wevers (New Cent. Bib., 1969). C. C. Torrey, Pseudo-Ezekiel and the Original Prophecy (Yale Oriental Series, Researches, xviii; 1930); J. Smith, The Book of the Prophet Ezekiel. A New Interpretation (1931). G. Hölscher, Hesekiel. Der Dichter und das Buch (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxxix; 1924); V. Herntrich, Ezechielprobleme (ib., lxi; 1932). J. B. Harford, Studies in the Book of Ezekiel (1935); W. A. Irwin, The Problem of Ezekiel. An Inductive Study (Chicago, 1943). H. W. *Robinson, Two Hebrew Prophets (1948), pp. 63–125. C. G. Howie, The Date and Composition of Ezekiel (Journal of Biblical Literature Monograph Series, iv; 1950); H. H. Rowley, 'The Book of Ezekiel in Modern Study' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxvi (1954), pp. 146–90. P. Auvray, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., viii (1972), cols. 759–91, s.v. 'Prophètes', with bibl.

EZNIK (5th cent.), Bp. of Bagrevand in *Armenia. A native of Kolb and a disciple of St. *Mesrob, he was one of the most polished and learned of early Christian Armenian writers. His principal surviving work is a treatise, The Confutation of the Sects (c. 441–8), in four books, directed respectively against (1) the pagans, (2) the religion of the Persians, (3) the Greek philosophers, and (4) the *Marcionites. He also took part in translating the Armenian version of the Bible, and, acc. to native tradition, wrote some homilies which have perished.

The Confutation of the Sects has been published (in Armenian) at Smyrna (1762) and Venice (1826, 1863). Crit. ed. by L. Mariès, S.J.–C. Mercier (P.O., xxviii, fasc. 3, with literal Fr. tr. and notes fasc. 4; 1959). Earlier Fr. tr. by Le Vaillant de Florival (Paris, 1853); Germ. trr. by J. M. Schmid (Vienna, 1900) and S. Weber, Ausgewählte Schriften der armenischen Kirchenväter, i (Munich, 1927), pp. 1–180. L. Mariès, S.J., Le De Deo d'Esnik de Kolb, connu sous le nom de 'Contre les sectes' (1924). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 209–16; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 352, with bibl. V. Inglisian in R.A.C., vii (1969), cols. 118–28, s.v.

EZRA. The Jewish priest and scribe, who played a central part in the reform of *Judaism in the 5th or 4th cent. B.C. His activities are recorded in the Books of *Ezra and Nehemiah, and of 1 *Esdras. On his arrival in *Jerusalem from Persia 'in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king' (Ez. 7. 7), he set about his purposes on the basis of a royal warrant. His work marks the stage in the history of Judaism at which the distinction between the universalist and exclusivist attitudes to the Gentiles became clearly defined, and as a champion of the latter Ezra took strict measures to secure the racial purity of the Jews and the development of Judaism along the straight and narrow way laid down by *Ezekiel. After his establishment in Jerusalem, he solemnly promulgated a code of laws (Neh. 8. 1–12); one of the first responses to this act was a solemn observance of the Feast of *Tabernacles. The chronology of the period is obscure and there is apparently considerable confusion in the OT record; but there is an increasing consensus of opinion that the 'Artaxerxes the king' of Ez. 7. 7 is the second Persian monarch of that name (404–359 B.C.) and that Ezra's arrival is thus to be dated in 397 B.C. If so, he belonged to a later generation than *Nehemiah. The very existence of Ezra has been questioned by C. C. Torrey, who supposes him to be the idealized creation of the Chronicler's imagination, but this drastic critical hypothesis has received little support.

For bibl. see foll. entry.

EZRA and NEHEMIAH, Books of. These Books continue the history of the Hebrew people begun in the Books of *Chronicles, and are evidently the work of the same compiler. The narrative extends from the end of the Babylonian Exile (537 B.C.) down to the latter half of the 5th cent. B.C., the greater part of it being concerned with the work of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ez. 1–6 relates the return of the exiles from Babylon, the efforts made to rebuild the Temple at *Jerusalem and the encouragement given to the project by the prophets *Haggai and *Zechariah; 7–10 deals with Ezra's mission to Jerusalem and the reforms he introduced, notably in the matter of mixed marriages. Neh. 1–7 contains Nehemiah's plans for the restoration of Jerusalem; 8–10 record the reading and acceptance of the Law; 11 and 12 describe his arrangements for the occupation of the city; and 13 narrates a further series of Nehemiah's reforms.

It is generally supposed by modern scholars that the compiler of the books ('the Chronicler', i.e. the author also of the Books of Chronicles) wrote at a date considerably later even than the time of Nehemiah. There are a number of historical inaccuracies in the Books, e.g. in the chronological details of the Persian kings, the foundation of the *Temple, and the arrival of Ezra and Nehemiah in Jerusalem (see previous entry), most easily accounted for by the insufficient data and the preconceived ideas of a compiler of much later date. He clearly drew his matter from several sources. Large sections appear to be derived from the 'Memoirs of Ezra' and the 'Memoirs of Nehemiah'. Ez. 4. 8–6. 18 and 7. 12–26 are written in *Aramaic, not Hebrew, and may therefore have been taken from a collection of official Aramaic documents. No doubt the source from which the various catalogues of names are drawn was also a set of official lists. See also Esdras, Books of.

Commentaries by H. E. Ryle (Camb. Bib., RV, 1893), L. W. Batten (I.C.C., 1913), W. Rudolph (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. xx; 1949), K. Galling (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xii; on Chron., Ezr., and Neh., 1954, pp. 186–255), and L. H. Brockington (New Cent. Bib., on Ezr., Neh., and Esther, 1969, pp. 1–213). C. C. Torrey, The Composition and Historical Value of Ezra-Nehemiah (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., ii; 1896). Id., Ezra Studies (Chicago, 1910). H. H. Schaeder, Esra der Schreiber (1930), M. Kegel, Die Kultusreformation des Esra. Aussagen moderner Kritik über Neh. 8–10 (1921). J. S. Wright, The Date of Ezra's Coming to Jerusalem (Lecture; 1947; revised ed., 1958); J. Bright, 'The Date of Ezra's Mission to Jerusalem' in M. Haran (ed.), Yehezkel Kaufmann Jubilee Volume (Jerusalem, 1960), pp. 70–87; J. A. Emerton, 'Did Ezra go to Jerusalem in 428 B.C.?' in J.T.S., N.S., xvii (1966), pp. 1–17, with reff. U. Kellermann, Nehemia. Quellen, Überlieferung und Geschichte (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., cii; 1967).

F

FABER, FREDERICK WILLIAM (1814–1863), *Oratorian and hymn writer. Born at Calverley, a small town in West Yorkshire, he was educated at Shrewsbury and Harrow and at Balliol and University Colleges, Oxford. In 1837 he was elected to a Fellowship at the latter college. His upbringing was *Calvinist; but at Oxford he came under the influence of J. H. *Newman and collaborated in the work on the Library of the Fathers. In 1837 he was ordained deacon and in 1839 priest. In 1842 he was appointed Rector of Elton, Cambs. Two years later he published a short Life of St. Wilfrid which created a sensation from its RC sympathies. On 17 Nov. 1845 he was received into the RC Church, a few weeks after Newman. With other converts he formed a small community, the 'Brothers of the Will of God', at Birmingham; in 1847 he was ordained priest; and in 1848, with his companions, joined the Oratory of St. *Philip Neri, recently introduced into England by Newman. In 1849 Faber became the head of the London branch, at first established in King William Street, Strand, and from 1854 on its present site in the Brompton Road.

Faber was the author of many hymns and devotional books. His writings owed their popularity to their fervent spirituality and their lucid style, in which profound truths were made accessible to the simplest minds. They have been translated into many languages. Among the better known are All for Jesus (1853), Growth in Holiness (1854), The Blessed Sacrament (1855), The Creator and the Creature (1858), and Bethlehem (1860). Many of his hymns have remained favourites, e.g. 'Hark! hark, my soul', 'My God, how wonderful Thou art', and 'Sweet Saviour, bless us ere we go'.

Life and Letters, ed. J. E. Bowden (1869; new ed., 1888). F. A. Faber (brother), A Brief Sketch of the Early Life of F. W. Faber (1869). Life by R. [G.] Chapman (London, 1961). D. Gorce, Faber. Un Anglican à l'âme franciscaine (années d'avant sa conversion) 1814–1845 [1967]. T. Cooper in D.N.B., xviii (1889), pp. 108–11; L. Cognet in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 3–13, s.v. 'Faber (3), Frédéric-William', with further bibl.

FABER, JACOBUS (c. 1455–1536), also known as Lefèvre d'Étaples or Stapulensis, early French humanist. A native of Étaples, after ordination to the priesthood he devoted himself to the study of the classics at *Paris, where he made the acquaintance of some of the leading humanists. In 1492 he went to Italy and there became keenly interested in the ancient philosophers, esp. *Aristotle. In 1507 the abbot at the monastery of *St. Germain-des-Prés, who was one of his former pupils, appointed him librarian. Exchanging his secular for religious studies, he published in 1512 a Latin commentary on St. Paul's Epistles. Two critical essays on St. *Mary Magdalene (1517 and 1518) were followed by his formal condemnation by the *Sorbonne for heresy in 1521. As he showed sympathies with the Reformation, the government was also led to condemn him, and in 1525 he was forced to flee to Strassburg. Later he was taken under the protection of the Queen of Navarre. He never accepted the Reformation doctrines on grace, justification, and predestination, and his attitude to the Reformation has been compared with that of *Erasmus. His other writings include the first printed text of the (Lat.) *Ignatian Epp. (Paris, 1498) and a transl. of the NT into French (1523; from the *Vulgate), followed by the Pss. in 1525 and the OT complete in 1528.

Studies by C. H. Graf (Strassburg, 1842) and J. Barnaud (Paris, 1900). H. Dörries, 'Calvin und Lefèvre' in Z.K.G., xliv (1925), pp. 544–81. A. Renaudet, Préréforme et humanisme à Paris pendant les premières guerres d'Italie (1494–1517) (ed. 2, 1953), passim. Id., 'Un Problème historique: la pensée religieuse de J. Lefèvre d'Étaples' in Medioevo e Rinascimento. Studi in onore di Bruno Nardi, ii (Florence [1955]), pp. 621–50. E. F. Rice, Jr., 'The Humanist Idea of Christian Antiquity: Lefèvre d'Étaples and his Circle' in Studies in the Renaissance, ix (1962), pp. 126–60, incl. list of patristic texts ed. by Faber, pp. 142–7. R. M. Cameron, 'The Charges of Lutheranism brought against Jacques Lefèvre d'Étaples' in H.T.R., lxiii (1970), pp. 119–49, with reff. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 132–59, s.v. 'Lefèvre d'Étaples'.

FABER, JOHANN (1478–1541), German theologian. A native of Leutkirch in Württemberg, he studied at *Tübingen and Freiburg, and in 1530 became Bp. of Vienna. Ferdinand I employed him on several important missions, including a visit to England to engage *Henry VIII's help against the Turks. His lifelong friendship with D. *Erasmus led him at first to sympathize with P. *Melanchthon and H. *Zwingli in their desire to reform the Church; but as the underlying doctrinal cleavage manifested itself, he withdrew his support from the Reformation programme and became a zealous defender of Catholic orthodoxy, earning the title 'the hammer of the heretics'. His works consist chiefly of controversial treatises and a few collections of sermons.

Faber's Malleus in Haeresim Lutheranam was first publd. Cologne, 1524; modern ed. by A. Naegele, Corpus Catholicorum xxiii–xxvi, Münster i.W., 1941–52; 'Opuscula', ed. J. *Cochläus, Leipzig, 1537; 'Opera' (mostly sermons, letters, and diaries), ed. Cologne, 3 vols., fol., 1537–41. A. Horawitz, 'Joh. Heigerlin (genannt Faber), Bischof von Wien, bis zum Regensburger Convent' in Sb. (Wien), cvii (1884), pp. 83–220. Further study by L. Helbling (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Hftt. lxvii–lxviii; Münster i.W., 1941). F. Zoepfl in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 16–21, s.v. 'Fabri (2), Jean Heigerlein'; J. Wodka in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 329–34, s.v. 'Fabri (2), Johannes', both with bibl.

FABIAN, St. (d. 250), Bp. of Rome from 236. Little is known of his pontificate beyond the fact that when the *Decian Persecution broke out early in 250, he was the first to suffer martyrdom. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis, it was he who divided the city of Rome into seven ecclesiastical regions, each of them in charge of a deacon. His body was buried in the *catacomb of San Callisto and later moved to the church of San Sebastiano, where it was discovered in 1915. Feast day, 20 Jan.

*Cyprian, Ep. ix; L.P. (Duchesne), i (1885), p. 148 f.; P. Styger, 'Scavi a San Sebastiano' in R.Q., xxix (1915), pp 73–110 (esp. 'La scoperta del corpo di S. Fabiano', pp. 100–5); F. Grossi-Gondi, S.J., S. Fabiano, papa e martire dopo le scoperte sull'Appia (1916). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 1057–64, s.v.

FABIOLA, St. (d. 399), Roman matron. She belonged to the patrician gens Fabia. Having divorced her first husband for his vicious life, she remarried (contrary to the Church canons). After the death of her second 'husband', she did public penance before the *Lateran and entered on a life of great austerity, distributing her immense wealth to the poor and tending the sick. In 395 she went to *Bethlehem, where she stayed with St. *Paula and St. *Eustochium and put herself under the direction of St. *Jerome. The tensions created by the *Origenistic controversy, her personal distaste for the isolated convent life at Bethlehem, and finally the incursion of the Huns into Palestine, led her to return to Rome, where she continued her charitable works until her death. Feast day, 27 Dec.

To St. Fabiola St. Jerome addressed two letters: Epp. 64 (J. P. Migne, PL, xxii, 607–22) and 78 (ib., 698–724); the principal source is the letter which Jerome wrote on her death, Ep. 77 (ib., 690–98). W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 442 f., with reff. See also bibl. to Jerome.

FABRI, FELIX (1442–1520). A learned *Dominican friar of Ulm who in his Evagatorium in Terrae Sanctae, Arabiae et Egypti peregrinationem has left a vivid record of a pilgrimage to *Jerusalem in 1483.

Evagatorium, &c., ed. G. D. Hassler (Stuttgart, 1843–9); Eng. tr. by A. Stewart (Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society, vii–x; 1892–3). H. F. M. Prescott, Friar Felix at Large. A Fifteenth-century Pilgrimage to the Holy Land (New Haven, 1950); id., Once to Sinai. The Further Pilgrimage of Friar Felix Fabri (1957). P. S. Allen, The Age of Erasmus (1914), pp. 238–51. A. Duval in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 326–9, s.v. 'Fabri (1), Félix'.

FABRI, JOHANNES. See Faber, Johann.

FABRICIUS, JOHANN ALBERT (1668–1736), *Lutheran classical scholar and bibliographer. Born at Leipzig and educated there and at Quedlinburg, in 1693 he settled in Hamburg as a private librarian. From 1699 until his death he taught rhetoric and ethics and was rector of the Johanneum from 1708 to 1711.

Fabricius was an indefatigable student whose monumental bibliographical work, if lacking in scientific accuracy, laid the foundations for all subsequent histories of literature. His Bibliotheca Graeca (14 vols., 1705–28; revised and continued by G. C. Harles, 1790–1812) covered the period from Homer to the fall of *Constantinople (1453). His other compilations include the Bibliotheca Latina (1697; revised and enlarged, 3 vols., 1721–2), Bibliotheca Latina Mediae et Infimae Aetatis (5 vols., 1734–6; vol. vi, in collaboration with C. Schoettgen, 1746). He also did important work on the Apocrypha, publishing an edition of the Liber Tobiae, Judith, Oratio Manassae, Sapientia et Ecclesiasticus, gr. et lat., cum prolegomenis (1691), followed by the Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti (2 vols., 1703, enlarged with 3rd vol., 1719) and the Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti (1713). He also produced the first collected edition of the works of St. *Hippolytus (2 vols., 1716–18), which has not been superseded, and editions of Sextus Empiricus (1718), St. *Philaster of Brescia (1721) and Dio Cassius (completed by H. S. *Reimarus, 1750–1).

H. S. Reimarus (son-in-law), De Vita et Scriptis Joannis Alberti Fabricii Commentarius (Hamburg, 1737). There is also a brief introd. on Fabricius's life and works prefixed to the ed. of his Bibliotheca Latina (6 vols. bound in 3, Florence, 1858), vol. i, pp. xx–xxiv. G. Uhlhorn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 730–2, s.v.; B. Heurtebize in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2063–5, s.v.

FACULTIES, Court of. The court of the Abp. of *Canterbury which grants *faculties. Its judge, who is called the 'Master of the Faculties', is usually the same person as the Dean of *Arches. When in 1534 it was enacted that *dispensations, licences, and faculties which had previously been granted by the Pope were to be henceforth granted by the Abp. of Canterbury in the provinces both of Canterbury and of *York, the Court of Faculties took over this jurisdiction.

D. S. Chambers (ed.), Faculty Office Registers 1534–1549. A Calendar of the first two Registers of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Faculty Office (Oxford, 1966), with valuable introd. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

FACULTY. A dispensation or licence from an ecclesiastical superior permitting someone to perform an action or occupy a position which without it he could not lawfully do or hold. Thus the Preface to the *Ordinal in the BCP forbids anyone to be admitted a deacon under twenty-three years of age 'unless he have a faculty'. Under 25 Henry VIII, c. 21, the 'Court of *Faculties' (q.v.) was created to restrain persons from suing for dispensations from Rome. As in every diocese the consecrated buildings and lands and their contents are in the ultimate guardianship of the Bishop, faculties are necessary for additions or alterations to churches and churchyards. In such cases they are normally issued by the Bishop's *Chancellor or the *Archdeacon, and without the faculty the erection of, e.g., an altar, a statue, or a memorial tablet in a church is illegal. When once erected (whether with or without a faculty), a fresh faculty is needed for the removal of such objects, even temporarily. Where there is litigation over matters involving faculties, appeal lies from the *consistory court to the *Court of Ecclesiastical Causes Reserved.

In the academic world a Faculty is the organization for the teaching of a particular subject, so called because it can grant a faculty to receive or to sue for a degree. The traditional Faculties are those of Theology, Canon and Civil Law, Medicine, and Arts.

H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), esp. pp. 147–57.

FACUNDUS (6th cent.), Bp. of Hermiane in the province of Byzacena in Africa. In the *Monophysite controversy he was one of the chief supporters of the *Three Chapters. In view of the dispute he made his way to *Constantinople, and in 547–8 completed there an apology for the accused in his treatise 'Pro Defensione Trium Capitulorum', in which he upheld the orthodoxy of each of the three theologians concerned—*Ibas, *Theodore of Mopsuestia (in this case with some reserves), and *Theodoret—and argued forcibly that to condemn the Three Chapters meant to reject the Christology of *Chalcedon (451). After his return to Africa, and the anathematization of the Three Chapters at the Second Council of Constantinople (553), he and his supporters were excommunicated for a time by Pope *Vigilius. He defended himself in two further writings, both of them dating from c. 571—'Contra Mocianum Scholasticum' and 'Epistola fidei catholicae in defensione trium capitulorum'.

Works ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J., Paris, 1629; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxvii, 527–878; crit. ed. by J.-M. Clément, O.S.B., and R. Vander Plaetse (C.C., Series Latina, xcA; 1974). Study (in Russian) by A. Dobroklonskij (Moscow, 1880; discussed by A. *Harnack in T.L.Z., 1880, cols. 632–635). L. Abramowski, 'Reste von Theodorets Apologie für Diodor und Theodor bei Facundus' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, i (T.U., lxxxiii; 1957), pp. 61–69. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 320–4; M. Pellegrino in E.C., v (1950), col. 954 f., s.v. 'Facondo di Ermiana'.

FAIRBAIRN, ANDREW MARTIN (1838–1912), *Congregational theologian. Of Covenanting ancestry, Fairbairn was born at Inverkeithing in Fife and studied at Edinburgh university. He was successively minister of the Evangelical Union church at Bathgate (1860–72) and of St. Paul's Congregational church in Aberdeen (1872–7), principal of the Airedale Theological College at Bradford (1877–86), and principal of Mansfield College, Oxford (1886–1909). Through visits to Germany he came under the influence of I. A. *Dorner, F. A. G. *Tholuck, and E. W. *Hengstenberg, and warmly advocated theological liberalism. His eloquence, learning, and personal character won him a unique position among Congregational divines in his generation. His writings include Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History (1876), Catholicism, Roman and Anglican (1899), and The Philosophy of the Christian Religion (1902). He also took an active part in religious and political controversy, notably in connexion with the Education Act of 1902.

W. B. Selbie, Life of Andrew Martin Fairbairn (1914). Id. in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 179 f.

FAITH. The term is used in at least two quite distinct senses in a Christian context.

(1) It is applied objectively to the body of truth ('the Christian faith') to be found in the *Creeds, in the definitions of accredited *Councils, in the teachings of doctors and saints, and, above all, in the revelation contained in the Bible. This complex of doctrine is held to embody or else follow from the teaching of Christ Himself, and as God's supreme revelation to mankind to be wilfully rejected by man only at the peril of his salvation. Technically it is known as 'the faith believed in' (fides quae creditur).

(2) To this objective faith is opposed 'subjective' faith. Faith thus understood is the first of the three '*Theological virtues', set by St. *Paul side by side with 'hope' and 'love' (1 Cor. 13. 13). It is the human response to Divine truth, inculcated in the Gospels as the childlike and trusting acceptance of the *Kingdom and its demands, and known as 'the faith whereby belief is reached' (fides qua creditur).

Acc. to orthodox theologians, faith in this latter sense is a supernatural, not a natural, act. The Christian can make an act of faith only in virtue of God's action in his soul. The widespread modern notion that the faith of a Christian believer in, say, the truth of the Incarnation (as a doctrine which cannot be proved) is of a piece with the scientist's 'faith' in atoms and electrons reflects a conception of faith radically different from that of Christian orthodoxy. Faith, so far from being a mere readiness to go beyond the data of established fact where the evidence ceases (as does the scientist in the case just instanced), is held to be made effective by the immediate operation of the grace of God in the Christian soul, which carries with it complete conviction. It is possible only in the context of the Christian revelation.

Moreover, faith demands an act of the will, and is thus more than purely intellectual. St. *Augustine defined it as 'thinking with the giving of assent' (cum assentione cogitare). This voluntaristic moment in the act of faith accounts for the moral quality which it is held to possess and the conviction that wilful unbelief, as a misdirection of the will, merits the censure of God. To express this twofold element in the full act of faith, *Peter Lombard distinguished between (a) 'unformed faith' (fides informis), i.e. pure intellectual assent to a proposition, and (b) 'faith formed by love' (fides formata caritate), i.e. the developed faith, e.g. of St. Paul in Gal. 5. 6. It is in the light of this distinction that the apparent opposition between the teaching of St. *James and that of St. Paul about faith has been held to be capable of reconciliation.

As a supernatural act, faith is a higher faculty than reason. In the developed teaching of the Middle Ages, a distinction was drawn between those truths accessible to the human intellect by the light of natural reason, e.g. the existence of God, and those which could be appropriated only by faith, e.g. belief in the Trinity. There was difference of opinion as to whether there were any conclusions which could in a full sense be the objects of both faith and reason; in so far as any overlap was conceded, it was held by the most reputable theologians that the conclusions of reason and of faith were coincident. Only in the later and decadent Scholasticism was it maintained that one and the same proposition could be proved untrue by reason and accepted as true by faith.

At the Reformation, the part of faith in the Christian religion received a new emphasis. M. *Luther's teaching on *justification by 'faith alone' stressed the voluntaristic side of faith, in so far as faith was allowed to be a human act at all. The chief moment in it was trust (fiducia), and supremely personal trust and confidence in the atoning work of Christ. The Lutheran theologians of the next generation analysed the act of faith into its three components of knowledge (notitia), assent (assensus), and trust (fiducia), though they held that the two former were subordinate to fiducia. The Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles, while by referring favourably to Justification by Faith only (Art. XI) and denying merit to works done before justification (Art. XIII) they guard against ascribing virtue to human effort apart from divine grace, assert, nevertheless, that works which are the fruit of faith are pleasing to God (Art. XII). Here, too, faith is held to be an essentially supernatural act. It was only later, e.g. in I. *Kant, with his use of the word for the moral consciousness ('I had to remove knowledge [Wissen] to make room for faith [Glaube]'), that it was used outside a theological context.

The Second *Vatican Council both exemplified and initiated a new phase in the inter-confessional exploration of Faith. In the first place it did not conceive the 'truth' of 'the Gospel' in such exclusively propositional terms as previous theologians had done. Scriptural truth is that 'which, for the purpose of our salvation, God wished to be consigned to Holy Writ'. That is to say, the truth is Christ Himself, and what He has done for men, not a series of theological or anthropological propositions. Further, in expounding this 'truth' that is Christ and His work, the RC Church now acknowledges in a new way that Scripture and Tradition are the two sources of revelation, and is willing to distinguish between the deposit of truth itself and the mode in which this truth is communicated. There are contingent elements in doctrinal definitions, and therefore doctrines may be, and indeed must be, reformulated, as they undergo development.

Secondly, RC theologians have shown a remarkably profounder grasp of the 'Protestant' principle of Justification by Faith alone, an understanding richer in many ways than that of many Protestants. The Second Vatican Council also recognized the importance of conscience as a gift to the human person that must never be overridden, but always called to the affirmations of Faith willingly.

Classic discussion in St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, II (2), qq. 1–7. J. *Butler, *The Analogy of Religion (1736); J. H. *Newman, An Essay in Aid of a Grammar of Assent (1870). From the vast modern literature, the foll. may be mentioned: A. J. *Balfour, Foundations of Belief (1895); J. V. Bainvel, La Foi et l'acte de foi (1898; Eng. tr., St. Louis and London, 1926); W. R. *Inge, Faith (Studies in Theology, 1909); W. Spens, Belief and Practice (1915); F. H. Brabant–P. Hartill, Faith and Truth (1926); M. C. *D'Arcy, S.J., The Nature of Belief (1931; ed. 2, 1958); J. *Oman The Natural and the Supernatural (1931); Dorothy M. Emmet, Philosophy and Faith (1936); B. Mitchell (ed.), Faith and Logic. Oxford Essays in Philosophical Theology (1957); J. [D.] Hick, Faith and Knowledge (Ithaca, N.Y., 1957; ed. 2, London, 1967); id. (ed.), Faith and the Philosophers (1964). H. Pope, O.P., in C.E., v (1909), pp. 752–9, s.v.; S. Harent in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 55–514, s.v. 'Foi'; A. de Bovis, S.J., in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 529–619, s.v. 'Foi'.

FAITH, Defender of the. See Defender of the Faith.

FAITH, Promoter of the. See Promotor Fidei.

FAITH, St. (d. c. 287), virgin and martyr. Acc. to the legend which dates from the 8th or 9th cent., she suffered for the faith at Agen in Aquitaine, under Maximian Hercules and the procurator Dacian, together with St. Caprasius. Dulcidus, Bp. of Agen (5th cent.), translated her relics to a basilica which he built in honour of St. Faith and St. Caprasius, and many miracles are believed to have taken place at her shrine. Her relics were brought c. 855 to the abbey of Conques, which became a famous place of pilgrimage, visited e.g. by the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa. Her cult was very popular in the Middle Ages, and many churches were dedicated to her, among them that of Farringdon Ward Within, London. This was pulled down in 1240 to make room for the choir of *St. Paul's Cathedral, a chapel of which was then dedicated to St. Faith. This dedication survives in the 'St. Faith's Chapel' in the crypt of the present cathedral. Feast day, 6 Oct.

AA.SS., Oct. III (1770), pp. 263–329, incl. text of Acta, p. 288 f.; other versions of the Acta listed in B.H.L., i (1898–1899), pp. 441–4 (Nos. 2928–65), and Suppl. (1911), p. 123 f. The Liber Miraculorum Sancte Fidis, ed. A. Bouillet (Paris, 1897). On the 11th cent. Chanson de Sainte Foi (ed., with modern Fr. tr., by A. Thomas, Paris, 1925), see E. Hoepffner–P. Alfaric, La Chanson de Sainte Foy (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, xxxii and xxxiii; 1926). A. Bouillet–L. Servières, Sainte Foy, vierge et martyre (1900). L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, ii (ed. 2, 1910), pp. 144–6. J. Daoust in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 1358–64, s.v. 'Foy (Sainte)'.

FAITH AND ORDER. The branch of the *Ecumenical Movement of which the chief object has been to bring about the reunion of the Christian Churches, and by which the Conferences at *Lausanne in 1927 and *Edinburgh in 1937 were organized. It is now absorbed in the *World Council of Churches.

FAITHFUL, Mass of the (Lat. Missa Fidelium). The part of the *Mass which extends from the *Offertory to the end. It contains all the most essential parts of the service. It is so named because in early times the (unbaptized) *catechumens were dismissed before the Offertory and only the baptized (the 'fideles') remained to join in the Eucharistic offering.

FALDA. A white vestment worn over the cassock and reaching from the hips to the ground. Its use is confined to the Pope, who wears it only on solemn occasions.

E. Dante in E.C., v (1950), col. 962, s.v., with ill., col. 961.

FALDSTOOL (Lat. faldistorium). In the RC Church the folding stool used in the *sanctuary by bishops and other prelates when they do not occupy the throne. The absence of a back enables it to be used both for sitting on and as a *prie-dieu. Unlike the throne, it may be used not only by the bishop of the diocese but also by prelates who have no *ordinary jurisdiction in the place.

FALK, PAUL LUDWIG ADALBERT (1827–1900), German Liberal politician. In 1872 he was appointed Minister of Public Worship and Education by Bismarck with explicit instructions to defend the rights of the state against the Church in the *Kulturkampf. In this he succeeded only in two points, viz. in excluding the Church from the supervision of schools and from civil marriage. His *May-Laws, designed to put the relations between Church and state on an entirely new basis, were a failure owing to the uncompromising resistance not only of the Catholic Church but also of orthodox Protestantism to a measure destructive of all positive Christian education. Bismarck's consequent change of policy in 1879 caused Falk's resignation and also marked the end of the Kulturkampf.

Short study by H. R. Fischer (Hamm, 1901); full life by E. Foerster (Gotha, 1927). Renate Ruhenstroth-Bauer, Bismarck und Falk im Kulturkampf (Heidelberger Abhandlungen, lxx; 1944). K. Kupisch in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 862–4, s.v. 'Falk (1), Adalbert', with further refl. See also works cited under Kulturkampf.

FALL, The. The first act of disobedience of *Adam and *Eve whereby man lost his primal innocence and happiness and entered upon his actual condition of sin and toil. As described in Gen. 2 f., Eve, tempted by the serpent, ate of the forbidden fruit of the 'tree of the knowledge of good and evil' in the Garden of *Eden, and then induced Adam to follow her example. The punishment was expulsion from Paradise, the imposition of toilsome work on Adam and the pains of childbirth on Eve, and the decree of perpetual enmity between the serpent, which would 'bruise [man's] heel', and the man, who would 'bruise [the serpent's] head' (Gen. 3. 15). Acc. to traditions as old as the *Apocrypha, Eve's sin involved man in the loss of immortality (cf. Ecclus. 25. 24), and the serpent was identified with the Devil (cf. Wisd. 2. 23 f.). These conclusions are not drawn elsewhere in the OT. The story itself suggests rather that Adam and Eve were not originally possessed of immortality (though they might have obtained it; cf. Gen. 3.22 f.). What the Biblical narrative teaches positively is that sin arose by free human choice, and that all human life has been thereby radically altered for the worse, so that its actual state is very different from that purposed for it by the Creator. The doctrine of evil which it inculcates is, as against every form of dualism (which makes evil as well as good of Divine origin), pantheism (which denies the distinction between Creator and creation), or determinism (which denies human free will), that sin arose through free human agency; and this belief is integral to Christianity and Judaism alike.

Other questions, often more prominent in theological debate but really subordinate to this fundamental doctrine, concern (1) the ultimate origin of the evil manifested in Eve's and Adam's sin, (2) the historicity of the story of Gen. 2 f., and (3) the nature and extent of the consequences of the Fall for mankind. These issues are closely intertwined.

The common Christian belief down to modern times considered the Fall of Adam and Eve as an historical event. The serpent, which is represented in the Gen. narrative quite naïvely as a talking animal, was identified with the Devil or Satan, a spiritual being, who must have been created good and himself previously fallen, and hence the original Fall was inferred to be that of Satan rather than that of Adam and Eve. Adam and Eve being considered as historical persons and all subsequent humanity as their descendants, the consequences of the Fall were held to affect all mankind by inheritance, or even by a theory of 'seminal identity' by which an ancestor's act may involve all his descendants also (cf. Heb. 7. 9 f.). Acc. to the view expressed in Wisd. and Ecclus. (cf. above) and strongly endorsed by St. *Paul (Rom. 5. 12 ff., 1 Cor. 15. 22), it was Adam's sin that 'brought death into the world' because 'in Adam all sinned' and therefore became liable to death. It is noteworthy that, as St. Paul appeals to this belief as a premiss accepted by his readers, it appears to have been generally accepted in the early Church, at least among Gentile Christians, and the Fall thus to have been, from the first, part of the background against which the Christian doctrine of Redemption was expounded. Until the rise of *Pelagianism it was not a subject of controversy. The Gk. Fathers (esp. *Theodore of Mopsuestia), however, tended to minimize the evil done to man by the sin of Adam, laying more stress on the responsibility of each individual, while the Latins (esp. St. *Augustine), emphasizing the enormity of Adam's transgression and the magnitude of its consequences for mankind, developed the doctrine of *Original Sin (q.v.), which Pelagius opposed by denying the reality of any evil consequences from the Fall to subsequent mankind. *Origen (q.v.), alone among the Fathers, found the ultimate source of evil in a pre-mundane Fall or falls of equal created spirits who, by voluntarily declining to a greater or less degree from the goodness in which they were created, became respectively demons, men, or angels. For him the human fall took place in a spiritual pre-natal existence (De Princ., ii. 8 f.) and the story of Eden was to be interpreted allegorically (De Princ., iv. 3).

In modern times the whole concept of the Fall has often been rejected as inconsistent with the facts of man's development known to science, esp. with evolution. The Biblical story itself belongs to the realm of myth and is told with much anthropomorphic and metaphorical detail. Orthodox Christian apologists insist, however, that man possesses a power of moral choice not shared with the animals; that at some stage in human development this God-given power began to be misused; and that once begun, such wrong use has necessarily affected subsequent generations and given rise to the vast accumulated power of sin in the world. They would say that it was this fact which made necessary the redemption of the world by Christ. Since it was in close connexion with the doctrine of Redemption that Christian thought about the Fall developed, the Church has seen in the story of Gen. 2 f. a fundamental truth about man in his relation to God, even if the truth is held to be there conveyed in legendary form.

Belief in the fall of Adam is defined as de fide by the Council of *Trent, Sess. V, Can. 1 (A.D. 1546). F. R. Tennant, The Sources of the Doctrines of the Fall and Original Sin (1903); id., The Origin and Propagation of Sin (Hulsean Lectures, 1902). N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (Bampton Lectures for 1924, 1927). L. Ligier, Péché d'Adam et péché du monde (Théologie, xliii and xlviii; 1960–1), with extensive reff. J. [D.] Hick, Evil and the God of Love (1966). J. Denney, J. A. MacCulloch, and D. S. Margoliouth in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 701–15, s.v. See also Comm. on Gen. and bibl. to Original Sin.

FALSE DECRETALS, The. A collection of documents, attributed to St. *Isidore of Seville (d. 636), but really compiled somewhere in France (perhaps at Le Mans or Tours) c. 850. It contains: (1) letters of ante-Nicene Popes, all of them forgeries; (2) a collection of canons of councils, for the most part genuine; and (3) a large collection of letters of Popes, from *Sylvester I (d. 335) to *Gregory II (d. 731), 35 of which are spurious. They were drawn up to defend the rights of diocesan bishops against their metropolitans and, to a lesser extent, to claim early authority for Papal supremacy; and their compiler, who had access to an enormous collection of historical matter, put them together with astonishing skill and precision. Pope *Nicholas I used them in 865, apparently knowing them to be forgeries; but in the Middle Ages they were generally assumed to be historical, and both T. *More and J. *Fisher, unaware of their true character, used them to defend the Papacy. Their genuineness was virtually disproved in 1558 by the Magdeburg *Centuriators, and it is now universally rejected. The (mainly genuine) canons were one of the chief sources of the collections of canon law in the Middle Ages.

Editio princeps in J. Merlin, Concilia (Paris, 1524 ['1523']). They have been regularly repr. in subsequent edd. of the Concilia. Text also in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxx. The only crit. ed. is that of P. Hinschius, Decretales Pseudo-Isidorianae et Capitula Angilramni (Leipzig, 1863), with valuable preface. P. Fournier, 'Étude sur les "Fausses Décrétales" ' in R.H.E., vii (1906), pp. 33–51, 301–16, 543–64, 761–84, and vii (1907), pp. 19–56. P. Fournier–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, i (1931), pp. 127–233. J. Haller, Nikolaus I und Pseudoisidor (1936). B. Leeming, S.J., 'The False Decretals, Faustus of Riez and the Pseudo-Eusebius' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, ii (T.U., lxiv; 1957), pp. 122–40. E. Seckel, Die erste Zeile Pseudoisidors, die Hadriana-Rezension In nomine domini incipit praefatio libri huius und die Geschichte der Invokationen in den Rechtsquellen (posthumously ed. by H. Fuhrmann (Sb. (Berl.), Klasse für Philosophie, Geschichte, Staats-, Rechts- und Wirtschaftswissenschaften, Jahrgang 1959, No. 4; 1959), with detailed bibl. G. May, 'Die Bedeutung der pseudo-isidorischen Sammlung für die Infamie im kanonischen Recht' in Österreichisches Archiv für Kirchenrecht, xii (1961), pp. 87–113; 191–207. H. Fuhrmann, Einfluss und Verbreitung der pseudoisidorischen Fälschungen (Schriften der M.G.H., 3 vols., 1972–4). Important artt. by E. Seckel in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 265–307, s.v. 'Pseudoisidor' (with full bibl. to date), and by L. Saltet in C.E., v (1909), pp. 773–80, s.v. 'False Decretals'. Cf. also A. Villien in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 212–22, s.v. 'Décrétales (Les Fausses)'; R. Naz in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1062–4, s.v. 'Décrétales (Fausses)'; H. Fuhrmann in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 820–4, s.v., with bibl.

FAMILISTS. The members of a sect, called the 'Family of Love', founded by H. *Nicholas (q.v.). They propagated a vague philanthropism of pantheistic hue and antinomian tendencies. Though founded in *Holland, their main field of activity was in Britain. In 1580 Queen *Elizabeth I's 'Proclamation against the Sectaries of the Family of Love' ordered their books to be burned and themselves to be imprisoned, but they continued nevertheless to spread. In 1645 J. Etherington attacked them; and though under O. *Cromwell many of Nicholas's books were reprinted, the sect disappeared at the end of the 17th cent., amalgamating with the *Quakers and other bodies.

A. C. Thomas, The Family of Love, or the Familists (Haverford College Studies, xii; 1893). R. M. Jones, Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), pp. 428–48. F. A. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 750–5, s.v. 'Familisten'; G. Bareille in D.T.C., v (1913), col. 2070 f., s.v. 'Famille d'Amour'. See also bibl. to Nicholas, H.

FAN, Liturgical (Lat. flabellum, Gk. ριπίδιον or ἑξαπτέρυγον, 'six-winged', so called because the figure of a seraph appears upon it). From the 4th cent. at latest, fans were sometimes used at the Eucharist for keeping flies and other insects away from the oblations, and the practice continued in the W. down to the 14th cent. Their use survives at Pontifical Masses in the *Greek and *Armenian Rites, though their significance now is purely symbolical. As a mark of honour, until recently two fans were used whenever the Pope was carried in procession on the '*sedia gestatoria'.

Braun, A.G., pp. 624–60, with plates 140–2. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1610–25, s.v. 'Flabellum', with extensive bibl. to date.

FANAR, The. See Phanar, The.

FANON. Of uncertain derivation, the word has been applied to several accessories of religious worship, apparently common to all being the fact that they are made from an embroidered piece of stuff. Among them are the *maniple; the white linen cloth in which the congregation formerly brought their Eucharistic offerings; the strings of the *mitre; the *humeral veil of the *subdeacon; and processional *banners. In current usage the word is confined to what is now a collar-shaped liturgical garment (Ital. fanone) worn by the Pope over his *amice when celebrating a solemn pontifical Mass. This garment was formerly known as the 'orale'.

Braun, L.G., pp. 52–7.

FAREL, GUILLAUME (1489–1565), Reformer of French Switzerland. While studying at the University of Paris, he came under the influence of J. *Faber (Stapulensis), and on becoming suspect of discipleship to M. *Luther he retired in 1524 to Basle, where he disputed with the opponents of the Reformation despite an interdict from the Bishop and the University. He was soon afterwards banished from the city, possibly at the suggestion of *Erasmus, whom he had called 'a new Balaam'. In 1530 he introduced the Reformation at Neuchâtel with some iconoclastic violence, and in 1535 he and Peter *Viret led a triumphant struggle which established the Reformation at Geneva. In the following year he detained J. *Calvin, who was passing through Geneva, persuaded him to stay, and declared him called to be a preacher and teacher of theology. For the rest of his life his fortunes were largely bound up with those of Calvin, though Calvin disapproved of his marriage at the age of 69 with a young refugee widow from Rouen. He was a powerful preacher. His writings, though voluminous, were too hastily composed to be of much permanent value.

Much of his correspondence is pr. by A. L. Herminjard (ed.), Correspondance des réformateurs dans les pays de langue française (8 vols., 1866–97). Modern lives by M. Kirchhofer (2 vols., Zürich, 1831–4; Eng. tr., 1837), S. Delattre (Paris, 1931), the monumental composite vol., Guillaume Farel, 1489–1565. Biographie nouvelle écrite d'après les documents originaux par un groupe d'historiens, professeurs et pasteurs de Suisse, de France et d'Italie (by C. Schnetzler and others), ed. by the Comité Farel (Neuchâtel–Paris, 1930), and A. Stucki (St. Gallen, 1942). In Eng. there is a brief sketch by [E.] F. Bevan (London, 1880). J. J. *Herzog–R. Staehelin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), v (1898), pp. 762–7, s.v.; J. Dutilleul, S.J., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2081–90, s.v.; M. H. Vicaire, O.P., in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 531–4, s.v.

FARMERY, also 'fermery', another form of 'infirmary', esp. of a monastery. It was usually a separate building in the charge of the *infirmarian (q.v.). In it the normal monastic discipline as to food and other matters was greatly relaxed.

FARRAR, FREDERIC WILLIAM (1831–1903), Dean of *Canterbury. He was educated at *King's College, London, where he was influenced by F. D. *Maurice, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and became in turn house master at Harrow (1855), headmaster of Marlborough (1871), Canon of Westminster and Rector of St. Margaret's (1876), and Dean of Canterbury (1895). A 'Broad Church Evangelical', he had great influence on the religious feeling and culture of the Victorian middle classes, esp. through his Life of Christ (1874), which went through twelve editions in a year, and his Life and Works of St. Paul (1879). In these he expressed devout faith interpreted by wide scholarship and set out in a popular style. His Eternal Hope (1877), a collection of sermons in which he questioned the doctrine of eternal punishment for the wicked, provoked great controversy. Besides other theological works, Farrar wrote fiction. Eric; or Little by Little (1858), a school tale partly autobiographical, was long popular. It was followed by Julian Home (1859) and St. Winifred's; or The World of School (1862).

Life by Reginald Farrar, son (London, 1904), with list of his works, pp. xiii–xxii. R. Bayne in D.N.B., 1901–1911, ii (1912), pp. 9–12.

FAST. See Fasts and Fasting.

FASTIDIUS (early 5th cent.), British ecclesiastical writer. *Gennadius (De vir. ill., lvi) calls him 'Britannorum episcopus' and attributes to him two works, 'De vita christiana' and 'De viduitate servanda'. Their identity is much disputed. The 'De vita christiana' has sometimes been held to be the work of the same title preserved among the works of St. *Augustine; this is certainly *Pelagian, but there are substantial objections to the attribution to Fastidius. Other scholars have sought to identify his 'De vita christiana' with the first work in the 'Corpus Pelagianum' printed by C. P. *Caspari. If this hypothesis were correct, it would follow that Fastidius left Britain for Sicily c. 410, was converted to Pelagianism by a 'noble lady', intended to visit Rome (perhaps to meet Pelagius), and returned to Britain as Bishop c. 430. The attempts to attribute to Fastidius a work beginning 'Audi, filia', preserved among the writings of *Caesarius of Arles, and the other items in Caspari's 'Corpus Pelagianum' are even more speculative.

C. P. Caspari, Briefe, Abhandlungen und Predigten aus den zwei letzten Jahrhunderten des kirchlichen Altertums und dem Anfange des Mittelalters (Oslo, 1890), 3–167, with notes pp. 223–389; texts, mainly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Suppl. by A. Hamman, O.F.M., i (1958), cols. 1375–1505 and 1687–94. The pseudo-Augustinian 'De vita christiana' is repr. from the Benedictine ed. of Augustine in J. P. Migne, PL, xl. 1031–46; 'Audi, filia' is repr. ib., lxvii. 1094–8. All these works are repr., with Eng. tr. (except for the Ps.-Augustinian 'De vita christiana') in R. S. T. Haslehurst, The Works of Fastidius (1927; inaccurate). G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Le De vita christiana de l'évêque breton Fastidius et le livre de Pélage "ad viduam" ' in R. Bén., xv (1898), pp. 481–93; id., 'Fastidius ad Fatalem? Pages inédites du Ve siècle d'après le manuscrit CCXXI de Reichenau', ib., xlvi (1934), pp. 3–17, with refs. to earlier artt. I. Kirmer, O.S.B., Das Eigentum des Fastidius im pelagianischen Schrifttum (Diss., Würzburg, 1937), attributing 12 works to Fastidius; R. F. Evans, 'Pelagius, Fastidius, and the Pseudo-Augustinian De Vita Christiana' in J.T.S., N.S., xiii (1962), pp. 72–98, with full history of the controversy; J. Morris, 'Pelagian Literature', ib., xvi (1965), pp. 26–60. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 518–20. G. de Plinval in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), col. 676 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Pelagius.

FASTS and FASTING. Fasting, which was rigorously practised in Judaism and by the disciples of St. *John the Baptist, was recommended by Christ both by example and teaching (Lk. 4. 2, Mt. 6. 16–18 and Mk. 2. 20). It was observed by the Apostles (Acts 13. 2, 14. 23, 2 Cor. 11. 27), and in the early Church regular weekly fast days soon developed, *Wednesday and *Friday being mentioned in the *Didache. In the W. *Saturday was later substituted for Wednesday (c. 400), but again abolished in more recent times. The fast of *Lent (q.v.), which was from the beginning connected with the feast of *Easter, lasted originally only two days, but it had been extended at least in many places to forty by the 4th cent. (*Athanasius, Festal Epp.). The E. Church added three further periods of fasting, *Advent (from 15 Nov.), from the Monday after *Pentecost to Sts. *Peter and Paul, and the fortnight before the *Assumption. The W. only developed the *Vigil fasts before the great feasts and the fasts of the *Ember Days.

In early times fasting meant entire abstention from food for the whole or part of the fast day. In the E. Church it is still observed with considerable strictness: during the whole of Lent, for example, the ancient rules continue to be followed by many, no meat being eaten, nor animal products (eggs, milk, butter, cheese), and fish only on certain days. In modern RC practice fasting generally means one chief meal at midday and a small 'collation' in the morning and in the evening, and also demands abstention from fleshmeat; days of *Abstinence have been distinguished from Fast Days proper since 1781. The rules for fasting vary in different countries and leave ample freedom of application. The only two obligatory Fast Days remaining in the RC Church are *Ash Wednesday and *Good Friday. In the C of E the BCP contains a 'Table of the Vigils, Fasts and Days of Abstinence' to be observed in the year, but no specific directions are given as to their mode of observance. They were generally kept in the 16th and 17th cent., and as late as the primacy of G. *Sheldon (1663–77) dispensations were taken out for setting aside the Lenten fasts. Their observance was revived in the 19th cent. under the influence of the *Oxford movement, and the 1969 Canons (B 6.3), referring to the Days of Fasting &c., listed in the BCP, notes that 'the forty days of Lent, particularly Ash Wednesday and the Monday to Saturday before Easter, ought specially to be observed'.

As a penitential practice, fasting is designed to strengthen the spiritual life by weakening the attractions of sensible pleasures. The Lord Himself coupled it with prayer, and in the lives of the saints the two almost always go together. More or less rigorous fasts are practised in all the austerer religious orders, e.g. by the *Carthusians, *Cistercians, and *Carmelites. See also Abstinence and Eucharistic Fast.

A. Linsenmayr, Entwicklung der kirchlichen Fastendisziplin bis zum Konzil von Nicäa (1877); J. Schümmer, Die altchristliche Fastenpraxis. Mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Schriften Tertullians (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, Hft. xxvii; 1933). V. Staley, The Fasting Days Appointed to be Observed in the English Church (ed. 2, 1899). A. J. Maclean, 'Fasting and Abstinence' in W. K. L. Clarke (ed.), Liturgy and Worship (1932), pp. 245–56, with bibl. Id.–A. R. Whitman in P.B.D. (1912), p. 333 f., s.v. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2481–2501, s.v. 'Jeûnes'; P. Palazzini, G. Sirna, O.F.M., A. Galieti and E. Remotti in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1589–99, s.v. 'Digiuno'; P. M. J. Clancy in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 847–50, s.v. 'Fast and Abstinence'. See also bibl. to Abstinence, Lent, Ember Days, Vigils, and Eucharistic Fast.

FATHER (Lat. Pater). Originally the title of bishops (cf. the BCP *Ordinal, where the bishop is addressed as 'Reverend Father in God'), it was later applied esp. to confessors, called in medieval English 'ghostly fathers'. As a title of religious the term properly belongs only to *Mendicant Friars, whereas monks and *canons regular are called *Dom (Lat. Domnus or Dominus). In England, however, all RC priests, whether regular or secular, are now called 'Father', a custom introduced apparently from Ireland in the latter half of the 19th cent. and favoured by H. E. *Manning and others. It has also come into widespread currency among Anglo-Catholics. On the Continent other terms are used for the secular clergy, e.g. 'Monsieur le Curé' (or 'Monsieur le Vicaire') in French, or 'Don' in Italian. 'The Holy Father' is a popular title of the Pope.

FATHERS, Apostolic. See Apostolic Fathers.

FATHERS, White. See White Fathers.

FATHERS OF THE CHURCH. From an early date the title (πατήρ) was applied to bishops as witnesses to the Christian tradition, but from the end of the 4th cent. it was used in a more restricted sense of a more or less clearly defined group of ecclesiastical authors of the past whose authority on doctrinal matters carried special weight. St. *Basil and St. *Gregory of Nazianzus are among the first to prove the orthodoxy of their teaching by appealing to the agreement of series of patristic texts, later known by the technical term 'consensus Patrum'. In the great Christological controversies of the 5th cent. all parties claimed the authority of the Fathers for their teaching, e.g. St. *Cyril of Alexandria and the Council of *Ephesus (431) as well as *Theodoret. By the end of the 5th cent. the term had come to be applied also to teachers who were not bishops, e.g. to St. *Jerome. The so-called '*Gelasian Decree' gives a list of works of the 'Holy Fathers' which include even those of the layman *Prosper of Aquitaine. Acc. to the commonly accepted teaching, the Fathers of the Church were characterized by orthodoxy of doctrine, holiness of life, the approval of the Church, and antiquity. This last condition was variously interpreted till the 18th cent. From that time the patristic period is generally held to be closed with St. *Isidore of Seville in the W. and St. *John of Damascus in the E.

The authority of the Fathers was held by the older Catholic theologians to be infallible only when they taught a doctrine unanimously. The teaching of individual Fathers, on the other hand, though not lightly to be set aside, was admittedly liable to error. In modern usage *Tertullian, *Origen, and a few other ancient authors, though not of unimpeachable orthodoxy, are usually numbered among the Fathers of the Church. In any case, it is a popular rather than an exact title and, unlike '*Doctor of the Church', not formally conferred.

Bardenhewer, i, pp. 37–50 ('Kirchenvater, Kirchenschriftsteller und Kirchenlehrer'). É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1192–1215, s.v. 'Pères de l'Église'.

FATIMA. A small town in the middle of Portugal, famous as a place of pilgrimage to the Basilica and Shrine of Our Lady of Fatima.

On 13 May 1917 three illiterate children, between the ages of 10 and 13, saw a vision of a lady, who reappeared on five subsequent occasions. On the last she declared herself to be 'Our Lady of the Rosary', told them to recite the Rosary daily, and asked for a chapel to be built in her honour. Two of the children died in 1919, but the third, Lucia Santos (still alive in 1973), became a *Carmelite nun at Coimbra. She wrote two accounts of the visions, in 1936–7 and 1941–2, and by permission of authority she was allowed to reveal a part of the 'secret'. It is thus that we learn the 'Threefold Message of Fatima', namely the practice of Penance, the recitation of the Rosary, and Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Publication of the full 'secret', which could not be unsealed until 1960, has been postponed indefinitely. Pope *Paul VI visited Fatima in May 1967.

There is a vast literature; the more important works include L. Fischer, Fátima. Das portugiesische Lourdes (1930), and other works of this author; L. Gonzaga da Fonseca, S.J., Le meraviglie di Fatima (ed. 2, 1932; many subsequent edd.); W. T. Walsh, Our Lady of Fátima (1949). There is also a popular account by F. Ryan, O.P., Our Lady of Fatima (Dublin, 1939), and an attractive record of a pilgrimage to Fatima by C. C. Martindale, S.J., Portuguese Pilgrimage (1949), with bibl., p. 148. E. Dhanis, S.J., 'A propos de "Fatima et la critique" ' in Nouvelle Revue Théologique, lxxiv (1952), pp. 580–606.

FAULHABER, MICHAEL VON (1869–1952), German cardinal. A native of Franconia, he was ordained priest in 1892, spent the years from 1895 to 1898 in Rome, taught theology at Würzburg university from 1899 to 1903, and was appointed professor of OT theology at Strassburg in 1903. In 1910 he became Bp. of Speyer, and in 1917 Abp. of Munich; he was created cardinal in 1921. In his earlier years Faulhaber made some important contributions to *patristics, notably in his edition in Die Prophetenkatenen nach römischen Handschriften (1889), and in assigning to St. *Hesychius of Jerusalem a commentary on the Psalms formerly attributed to St. *Athanasius (1901). Later he became the leader of the right-wing German Catholics, and after the accession of A. Hitler to power (1933) was one of the most courageous and outspoken critics of the Nazis. He also published several books dealing with contemporary problems, e.g. the emancipation of women.

Episcopus. Studien über das Bischofsamt . . . zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht (1949); Festschrift Kardinal Faulhaber zum achtzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht [1949]. A. Martini, S.J., 'Il Cardinale Faulhaber e l'enciclica "Mit Brennender Sorge" ' in Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, ii (1964), pp. 303–320. G. Schwaiger, 'Kardinal Michael von Faulhaber' in Z.K.G., lxxx (1969), pp. 359–74. V. Conzemius in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 692–711, s.v.

FAUSTINUS AND JOVITA, Sts. (2nd cent.), martyrs of Brescia. Acc. to the legend, they were brothers of noble birth whose faith excited the wrath of their fellow-townsmen of Brescia. They were taken prisoner under Trajan, and then tortured and transported to Milan, Rome, and Naples, making innumerable converts on the way. Owing to their persistence Hadrian, who happened to pass through Brescia, ordered their execution. Several cities (incl. Brescia, Rome, and *Bologna) claim to possess their relics. It is very doubtful if any of the incidents in the legend is historical, and no mention of them is made by the two best-known early ecclesiastical writers of Brescia, *Philaster and *Gaudentius. Feast day, 15 Feb.

'Acta' with discussion in AA.SS., Feb. II (1658), pp. 805–821. Further discussion and texts ed. F. Savia, S.J., 'La Légende des SS. Faustin et Jovite' in Anal. Boll. xv (1896), pp. 5–72, 113–59, and 377–99. A. Rimoldi in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), col. 735 f., s.v.

FAUSTUS OF MILEVIS (late 4th cent.), *Manichaean propagandist. A native of Milevis, he won fame as a rhetorician at Rome. When Faustus visited Carthage in 383, *Augustine, himself still a Manichee, put himself under his direction; but he found Faustus a fraud, and thus the way was prepared for his acceptance of the Catholic faith. Faustus's teachings can be partly reconstructed from Augustine's Contra Faustum Manichaeum (c. 400).

For bibl., see Augustine, St.

FAUSTUS OF RIEZ, St. (c. 408–c. 490), *Semi-Pelagian teacher. Probably of British or Breton origin, he entered the monastery of *Lérins and in 433 succeeded Maximus as abbot. About 459 he became Bp. of Riez (Rhegium in Provence), but was later driven from his see for a time by the Visigothic king, Euric, on account of his opposition to Euric's Arianizing policy. Requested by Leontius, Abp. of Arles, to refute the *predestinarian doctrines of a certain Lucidus, he wrote his 'De Gratia', a book which was approved by the Council of Arles (472 or 473). Here he adopted a semi-Pelagian position, insisting even more emphatically than J. *Cassian on the necessity of human co-operation with Divine grace, and on the initial free will of men, even when in sin, for the acceptance of that grace. A considerable number of his sermons appear to have survived under the name of '*Eusebius' (of Emesa). Though his teachings were condemned at the Second Council of *Orange in 529, he is revered as a saint in the S. of France. Feast day, 28 Sept.

Opera, ed. A. G. Engelbrecht, C.S.E.L. xxi (1891). J. P. Migne, P.L., lviii, 783–870, and liii, 681–890. Suppl. ed. A. Hamman, O.F.M., iii (1963), cols. 492–709, incl. sermons attributed to Faustus. Crit. ed. of these last by J. Leroy–F. Glorie (C.C., Series Latina, ci, ciA and ciB; 1970–71). Studies by A. Engelbrecht (Vienna, 1889), A. Koch (Stuttgart 1895), F. Wörter (Münster i.W., 1900), A. G. Elg (Upsala, 1937) and G. Weigel (Philadelphia, 1938). B. Leeming, S.J., 'The False Decretals, Faustus of Riez and the Pseudo-Eusebius' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, ii (T.U., lxiv; 1957), pp. 122–40. E. Griffe, 'Les Sermons de Fauste de Riez. La "Collectio Gallicana" du Pseudo-Eusèbe' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, lxi (1960), pp. 27–38. L. A. van Buchem, O.P., L'Homélie pseudo-eusébienne de Pentecôte. L'Origine de la Confirmatio en Gaule Méridionale et l'interprétation de ce rite par Fauste de Riez (Nijmegen, 1967), incl. text. Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), pp. 211–15 (nos. 961–75a). P. Viard in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 113–18, s.v.; id. in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 731–4, s.v.

FAWKES, GUY (1570–1606). The most famous member of the *Gunpowder Plot conspiracy. Born in Yorkshire, he was brought up a Protestant, but becoming a Papist he sold his English property and joined the Spanish Army in 1593. In 1604 he was brought into the Plot by R. *Catesby and given the task of firing the gunpowder. While keeping watch on the cellar he was arrested (5 Nov. 1605), but disclosed the conspiracy only under torture. In company with his fellow-conspirators, T. Winter, A. Rokewood, and R. Keyes, he was executed on 31 Jan. 1606. See also Gunpowder Plot.

[R. Davies], The Fawkes's of York in the Sixteenth Century: including notices of the Early History of Guye Fawkes, the Gunpowder Plot Conspirator (1850), esp. pp. 27–47. D. Carswell (ed.), The Trial of Guy Fawkes and Others. The Gunpowder Plot ('Notable British Trials', 1934). H. Garnett, Portrait of Guy Fawkes. An Experiment in Biography (1962); E. N. Simons, The Devil of the Vault. A Life of Guy Fawkes (1963). See also bibl. to Gunpowder Plot.

FAYÛM GOSPEL FRAGMENT. A brief papyrus fragment, written in the 3rd cent. A.D., discovered in Egypt in 1882, which contains an imperfect account of the prediction of St. *Peter's denial, closely akin to Mk. 14. 27–30. It is prob. an extract from a lost gospel abbreviating and reworking synoptic material; it is less likely to be a fragment of some early ecclesiastical writer who was making a free quotation from the canonical gospels. It is preserved at Vienna among the Rainer Papyri.

The text was publd. by G. *Bickell in Z.K.T., ix (1885), pp. 498–504. A. *Harnack, 'Das Evangelienfragment von Fajjum' appended to A. Resch, Agrapha (T.U., v, Hft. 4; 1889), pp. 481–97. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, i (1959), p. 74; Eng. tr. (1963), p. 115 f.

FAYUMIC. A dialect of *Coptic spoken in early Christian times in Middle Egypt. The NT was translated into it, probably from *Sahidic, but only a few fragments of the version exist. It was formerly known (incorrectly) as 'Bashmuric', from a province in the Delta.

FEASTS, Ecclesiastical. These come under three chief headings: (1) Sundays. The weekly commemoration of the Resurrection, which falls on the first day of every week. Sundays have been kept by Christians from Apostolic times as days of worship, and in 321 the Emp. *Constantine proclaimed that Sunday should be a general holiday.

(2) Movable Feasts. Of these the most important are (i) *Easter, the annual commemoration of the Resurrection, and (ii) *Pentecost or Whitsunday, the 7th Sunday after Easter, the commemoration of the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Church. These commemorate events which took place at the times of the Jewish *Passover and Feast of *Weeks, and like them vary with the Paschal full moon. Certain other feasts, and also the fast of *Lent, vary with the date of Easter.

(3) Immovable Feasts. Of these the earliest were probably the anniversaries of martyrs, which were kept at Rome from the 3rd cent., and in Asia Minor as early as the 2nd. Later, other saints were commemorated either on their death-day or the day of translation of their relics, or occasionally on other days. By the 4th cent. various fixed festivals of the Lord, esp. *Christmas and the *Epiphany, became generally observed, and later various feasts of the BVM, with other feasts of the Lord, were added.

Ecclesiastical feasts are observed by a '*proper' in the *Eucharist and *Offices. The fullest calendars in present use are those of the RC and Orthodox bodies; the C of E provides a list of days to be observed, and a further list without specific instructions that they must be kept. Both together are of modest dimensions, but various Anglican provinces outside England have enlarged their calendar.

The term festum (commonly translated 'feast' in English) is one of the classifications in the current RC calendar. Festa are of less importance than solemnitates ('solemnities') and of greater significance than memoriae ('memorials'). They usually commemorate less important events in the life of the Lord or saints.

See bibl. to Year, Liturgical.

FEASTS OF OBLIGATION. In the RC Church, feast days of outstanding importance which the laity as well as the clergy are obliged to observe by hearing Mass and abstaining from *servile work. The list of such feasts varies somewhat from country to country, but everywhere all Sundays in the year are 'Days of Obligation'. In England and Wales, besides all Sundays, they are the *Epiphany (6 Jan.), *Ascension Day, *Corpus Christi, Sts. Peter and Paul (29 June), the *Assumption of the BVM (15 Aug.), *All Saints (1 Nov.), and *Christmas Day (25 Dec.). Scotland and Ireland both add the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM (8 Dec.), Scotland also the Octave of Christmas

(1 Jan.) and St. Joseph (19 Mar.), and Ireland also St. Patrick (17 Mar.), though in Ireland the Feast of Sts. Peter and Paul does not rank as a Feast of Obligation. For details see Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 1247–9: 'De diebus festis').

FEATHERS TAVERN PETITION (1772). A petition to Parliament signed at the Feathers Tavern, Strand, London, by c. 200 liberal Christians for the abolition of subscription to the *Thirty-Nine Articles, and its replacement by a simple declaration of belief in the Bible. Among its principal sponsors were Francis Blackburne, Archdeacon of Cleveland (1705–87), Theophilus *Lindsey, and John Jebb (1736–86). The petition was presented to the Commons by Sir William Meredith and debated on 6 February 1772. Largely through the influence of a speech of E. Burke it was defeated on a division by 217 votes to 71.

The text of the petition is pr. among The Works . . . of Francis Blackburne, ed. by his son, Francis Blackburne, vol. vii (1805), pp. 15–19, with various associated docc. in the same volume. The greater part of Burke's speech on the subject, which he preserved with a view to possible publication, is in his Works, ed. 1, vol. v (1812), pp. 323–36 (ed. F. H. Willis–F. W. Raffety, 6 vols., World's Classics, vol. iii (1906), pp. 291–303).

FEBRONIANISM. The movement in the RC Church in Germany in the 18th cent. against the claims of the Papacy, esp. in the temporal sphere. It may be considered from some points of view as the German counterpart of *Gallicanism. In 1742 the three Archbishop-Electors invited J. N. von *Hontheim (q.v.), suffragan Bp. of Trier, to investigate their existing grievances against Rome, and in 1763 he published his findings in De statu ecclesiae et legitima potestate Romani pontificis, under the pen-name of 'Justinus Febronius'. The book, while recognizing that the Pope was the head of the Church and the supervisor of Church administration and (subject to the Universal Church or a General Council) of faith and morals, attacked the medieval accretions of temporal power. It advocated that Church affairs should be kept as far as possible in episcopal and civil hands, and that all Papal claims based on the *False Decretals should be annulled. In 1764 it was put on the *Index, but in 1769 it received the approval of the Archbishop-Electors, who drew up a list of thirty objections against the Papal claims. The Archbishop-Electors attempted to assert their claims at Bad *Ems (q.v.) in 1786, but without success. The outbreak of the French Revolution and lack of support from other German bishops caused the movement to collapse. See also Wessenberg, I. H. von.

O. Meyer, Febronius, Weihbischof Johann Nicolaus von Hontheim und sein Widerruf (Tübingen, 1880); J. Küntziger, Fébronius et le fébronianisme (Mémoires couronnés et autres mémoires publiés par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique. Collection in-8°; xliv; 1891; présenté à la Classe des Lettres dans la séance du 6 mai, 1889). F. Lauchert in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 23–5, s.v.; A. *Fortescue in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 807–9, s.v.; T. Ortolan in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2115–24, s.v. 'Febronius'; L. Just in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 46 f., s.v., all with bibl.

FECHNER, GUSTAV THEODOR (1801–87), psychologist and spiritualistic philosopher. He spent nearly all his life at Leipzig, where he held a professorship from 1834 to 1839. He became well known as a psychologist by his law ('Fechner's Law') of the mathematical relation between the intensity of a sensation and the corresponding stimulus. In philosophy he expounded an extreme form of '*animism', contending that all existents in the universe were endowed with consciousness, and that everything was enclosed by the all-pervasive Being of God. His writings include Elemente der Psychophysik (2 vols., 1860) and Die Tagesansicht gegenüber der Nachtansicht (1879).

There is an Eng. tr. of Fechner's Das Büchlein vom Leben nach dem Tode (orig. publ. under name of Dr. Mises; 1836) by H. Wernekke (London, 1882). Selections of his Works in Eng. tr. by W. Lowrie, Religion of a Scientist (New York and London, 1946), with bibl. Life by J. F. Kuntze (nephew; Leipzig, 1892). K. Lasswitz, Gustav Theodor Fechner (1896). Überweg, iv, pp. 292–8, with further bibl., p. 708.

FELICITY, St. (2nd cent.), Roman martyr. She is one of the seven Roman martyrs named in the Depositio Martyrum of the '*Liberian Catalogue' for 10 July. Acc. to the acta (not later than 6th cent.), she was martyred with her seven sons. Acc. to F. C. *Burkitt and V. L. Kennedy, she is the Felicity referred to in the *canon of the Roman Mass. Feast day, 23 Nov. She has also been commemorated with her sons ('The Seven Brothers') on 10 July.

Acta in T. *Ruinart, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 21–3. Further sources listed in B.H.L., p. 429 f. (Nos. 2853–5), and suppl. p. 119 f. F. C. Burkitt, 'St. Felicity in the Roman Mass' in J.T.S., xxxii (1930–1), pp. 279–87; V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di antichità cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 164–8. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 1259–98, s.v. 'Félicité (Passion et cimetière de)'; R. Aubert in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 864–6, s.v., 'Félicité (3)', with bibl.

FELICITY, St. (d. 203), African martyr. She was one of the companions of St. *Perpetua (q.v.), with whom she was martyred. Feast day, 7 Mar. (formerly 6 Mar.).

For the contemporary acta, see art. Perpetua.

FELIX, St. (d. c. 648), Bp. of Dunwich. He was a native of Burgundy. After converting the East Anglian prince, Sigeberht, then in exile, to Christianity, he made his way to England where, under the direction of Honorius, Abp. of *Canterbury, he successfully preached the Gospel to the heathen in East Anglia. He fixed his episcopal see at the seaport town of Dunwich in Suffolk (now mainly submerged) and acc. to *Bede (H.E., ii. 15) ruled his diocese for seventeen years. His name survives in Felixstowe in Suffolk and Felixkirk in N. Yorks. His relics were preserved at Ramsey Abbey. Feast day, 8 Mar.

The chief authority is Bede, H.E., ii. 15; iii. 18, 20, 25. See also notes, ed. C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 106–8, 168, 174. Short account also in *William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum, ii. 74 (ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton, R.S., 1870, p. 147). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., xviii (1889), p. 291 f.

FELIX (d. 818), Bp. of Urgel in Spain. With *Elipandus, Bp. of Toledo, he was one of the leaders of the *Adoptianist heresy. He was charged as a heretic at the Council of Ratisbon (792) in the presence of *Charlemagne, but, on being vanquished in debate, solemnly recanted and a little later publicly renounced his error before *Hadrian I at Rome. Shortly afterwards, however, he became convinced of his heresy again. He professed to be unconvinced by a criticism that *Alcuin wrote of his doctrines and, on his refusal to give way, he was formally accused at the Councils of *Frankfurt (794) and Aachen (798). At the latter Alcuin apparently persuaded him that his teaching was at variance with Christian tradition, notably as expressed in St. *Cyril of Alexandria and St. *Leo, and he recanted a second time. But his orthodoxy was not considered altogether irreproachable, and he remained until his death under the supervision of the Abp. of Lyons.

Confessio repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xcvi, 881–8. The Liber de Variis Quaestionibus adversus Judaeos seu ceteros Infideles vel plerosque Haereticos, ed. A. C. Vega–A. E. Anspach (Escurial, 1940), who ascribed it to St. *Isidore of Seville, has been claimed as the work of Felix, by J. Madoz, S.J., 'Una obra de Félix de Urgel, falsamente adjudicada a San Isidoro de Sevilla' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xxiii (1949), pp. 147–68. Id. in E.C., v (1951), col. 1137.

FELL, JOHN (1625–86), Bp. of *Oxford. He was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he became a Student at the early age of 11. His loyalty to the crown caused his ejection in 1648, but he contrived with a small group of friends to maintain the C of E service in a private house, and at the Restoration he was rewarded with a canonry at Christ Church and, in Nov. 1660, with the deanery. He took the keenest interest in the spiritual and intellectual life of the college, to which he attracted an impressive array of scholars and noblemen. He regularly went to service four times daily. In 1676 he became Bp. of Oxford, retaining the deanery. His own writings include lives of H. *Hammond (1661) and R. *Allestree (1684) and a valuable critical edition (the so-called 'Oxford text') of the writings of St. *Cyprian (1682). In addition, his patronage of young divines and his labours in re-establishing the University Press did much for the strength of patristic learning in the restored C of E. As the local diocesan, a firm vice-chancellor and the head of one of the most powerful colleges, Fell largely brought about the re-imposition of Anglican orthodoxy on the University after 1660. He was resolute in opposing popery, an enemy to Nonconformity and a staunch Tory. He it was who expelled J. *Locke from his Studentship at Christ Church with the triumph of the Tory Reaction. He is the subject of the well-known epigram beginning 'I do not love thee, Dr. Fell' (a transl. by Thomas Brown, a Christ Church undergraduate, of Martial, Epigrams, 1. 32).

His father, SAMUEL FELL (1584–1649), was Dean of Christ Church from 1638 to 1647, when he was deprived by the parliamentary visitors.

S. Morison–H. Carter, John Fell, the University Press and the 'Fell' types (Oxford, 1967). H. L. Thompson, Christ Church ('University of Oxford, College Histories', 1900), pp. 82–104. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xviii (1889), pp. 293–5. See also works cited under Christ Church.

FÉNELON, FRANÇOIS DE SALIGNAC DE LA MOTHE (1651–1715), Abp. of Cambrai. He was born in Périgord, of an ancient and distinguished, but impoverished family. After studying at the seminary of *St.-Sulpice he was ordained priest c. 1675, and in 1678 he became superior of the Nouvelles Catholiques, a house of recent converts from Protestantism, for whom he wrote his Traité de l'éducation des filles (1681, publd. 1687). In Dec. 1685 he undertook a mission to the *Huguenots in Saintonge which was designed to complete the work of the *dragonnades in that area. Despite considerable success, he seems to have been glad to relinquish this task and return to Paris. In 1689 he was appointed tutor to Louis XIV's grandson, the Duke of Burgundy, for whom he wrote his famous educational novel, Télémaque (1693; publd. 1699, but not in its complete form until 1717). In this work he condemned absolutism, holding that kings and their policies are subject to moral law and that the true interests of the state cannot conflict with that law. In the autumn of 1688 Fénelon had become acquainted with Mme *Guyon; he was greatly attracted by her spiritual teaching, and esp. by her doctrine of pure love, though it is not clear how far he shared her *Quietist views. He certainly defended her for a long time and was to some extent implicated when she was censured in 1694. In 1695 he became Abp. of Cambrai and in the following year he signed the Thirty-four Articles of *Issy which condemned Quietism. In 1697, however, he published his Explication des maximes des saints, forty-five articles setting forth true and false mysticism and providing a reasoned defence of mystical spirituality. The book was promptly attacked by J. B. *Bossuet and a long and bitter controversy followed. Fénelon was banished from court in the summer of 1697 and spent the rest of his life exiled in his diocese. When 23 propositions from his book were condemned by the Holy See (Brief of 12 Mar. 1699) he submitted completely. Soon afterwards the *Jansenist controversy broke out again and he applied himself to a vigorous defence of the orthodox teaching on grace, issuing several pastorals on the subject. He also developed his religious thought in his Traité sur l'existence de Dieu (part publd. 1712; the whole not until 1731). In his diocese his charitable generosity did much to mitigate the sufferings caused by the War of the Spanish Succession. His letters of spiritual counsel were much valued and many of them were published after his death.

Œuvres complètes publ. in 10 vols., Paris, 1810, with 'Essai historique sur la personne et les écrits de Fénelon' from life by P. Querbeuf (vol. i); in 23 vols., Versailles and Paris, 1820–30, and 10 vols., Paris, 1848–52. X. Barbier de Montault (ed.), Lettres inédites de Fénelon [1863]; much of his correspondence with Mme Guyon, ed. M. Masson, Fénelon et Mme Guyon. Documents nouveaux et inédits (1907). Eng. trr. of selections of his letters by D. Stanford (London, 1957) and J. McEwen, with introd. by Thomas Merton (ib., 1964), and of his Traité de l'éducation des filles, with introd. and notes, by H. C. Barnard (Cambridge, 1966). A. M. Ramsay, Histoire de la vie de F. de Salignac de la Mothe-Fénelon (La Haye, 1723; ed. 2, Amsterdam, 1727; Eng. tr., 1723; modern Eng. tr., 1897). L. F. Bausset, Histoire de Fénelon (3 vols., 1808; Eng. tr., 1810). P. Janet, Fénelon (Les Grands Écrivains français; 1892; Eng. tr., 1914). A. Delplanque, Fénelon et la doctrine de l'amour pur, d'après sa correspondance avec ses principaux amis (1907; excerpts as Fénelon et ses amis, 1910). H. *Bremond, Apologie pour Fénelon (1910). E. Jovy, Fénelon inédit, d'après les documents de Pistoia (1917), with texts. G. Joppin, Fénelon et la mystique du pur amour (1938). J. L. May, Fénelon. A Study (1938); E. Carcassonne, Fénelon. L'Homme et l'œuvre [1946]; K. D. Little, Francis de Fénelon. Study of a Personality (New York, 1951). Jeanne L. Goré, L'Itinéraire de Fénelon: humanisme et spiritualité (Paris thesis; Grenoble, 1957). L. Cognet, Crépuscule des mystiques. Bossuet, Fénelon (1958). Popular account by M. de la Bedoyere, The Archbishop and the Lady. The Story of Fénelon and Madame Guyon (1956). Pourrat, iv (ed. 2, 1928), pp. 253–305. L. Cognet in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 151–70, s.v.; id. in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 958–87, s.v. Revue Fénelon (Paris, 1911 ff.).

FERDINAND II (1578–1637), Holy Roman Emperor. Brought up by the *Jesuits at Ingolstadt University, Ferdinand was one of the chief upholders of the *Counter-Reformation. Before he became emperor in 1619, he had already re-established Catholicism in his own domains; and on succeeding to the other Hapsburg estates he set himself to exterminate Protestantism by a rigid application of the principle '*cuius regio, eius religio'. His success, both political and religious, induced the Protestant princes to rebel; but his generals, Wallenstein and Tilly, forced the Protestant leader, Christian of Denmark, to agree to the Treaty of Lübeck (1629). Emboldened by this success, Ferdinand published the 'Edict of Restitution', ordering Protestants to restore to the Catholics all appropriated ecclesiastical property within their dominions. Once again the Protestants rebelled, and for a time under *Gustavus Adolphus they almost overthrew the Emperor. Gustavus's death in battle (1632) saved Ferdinand, and for the rest of his reign the *Thirty Years' War pursued its desultory and disastrous course.

F. C. Khevenhiller, Annales Ferdinandei (9 vols., Regensburg, 1640–6). F. Hurter, Geschichte Kaiser Ferdinands II und seiner Eltern (Schaffhausen, 11 vols., 1850–64); R. de Cesare, La fine di un regno. Napoli e Sicilia (2 vols., 1900). J. Loserth (ed.), 'Akten und Korrespondenzen zur Geschichte der Gegenreformation in Innerösterreich unter Ferdinand II' in Fontes Rerum Austriacarum. Österreichische Geschichts-Quellen. Abt. 2, Diplomataria et Acta, lviii (1906) and lx (1907). H. Sturmberger, Kaiser Ferdinand II. und das Problem des Absolutismus (Österreich Archiv; 1957).

FERDINAND V (1452–1516), 'the Catholic', King of Aragon. The son of John II of Aragon, he married in 1469 his cousin *Isabella, the heiress of Castile, and by thereby uniting the two Kingdoms when he succeeded his father in 1479, laid the foundations of modern Spain. While Isabella lived, however, she retained control of her own patrimony. Ferdinand exhibited all the marks of the Renaissance prince, among them unblushing perfidy and unwearied ambition for dominion and power. His treatment of Columbus after his initial support, and his relations with Louis XII of France, whom he boasted of having tricked twelve times, were characteristic. For his expulsion of the Moors from Granada in 1492 and his zeal for the *Inquisition he earned the title of 'the Catholic'.

W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella (3 vols., '1838' [1837], and many later edd.); R. B. Merriman, The Rise of the Spanish Empire in the Old World and the New, ii (New York, 1918); J. M. Doussinagne, La politica internacional de Fernando el Católico (1944); J. A. Maravall and others, Pensamiento político, política internacional y religiosa de Fernando el Católico (V Congreso de Historia de la Corona de Aragón. Estudios, ii; Saragossa, 1956); J. Vicens Vives, Historia crítica de la vida y reinado de Fernando II de Aragón (ib., 1962 ff.). Tarsicio de Azcona, O.F.M.Cap., in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 1027–42, s.v. 'Ferdinand (5) le Catholique', with extensive bibl.

FERETORY (Lat. feretrum, from Gk. φέρειν, 'to carry'). Another name for a *Shrine (q.v.), in which a saint's relics were deposited and venerated.

FERIA. While in classical Latin the word means 'feast day' or 'holiday', in ecclesiastical language it is applied to such days (other than Saturdays and Sundays) on which no feast falls. The history of this change of meaning is involved and somewhat obscure. Since 1969 in the RC Church, lessons have been supplied for every day in the year, but apart from those days (e.g. in *Advent) with special collects, the rest of the Mass is normally taken from that of the previous Sunday. Before 1969, on ferias with no office of their own, the Sunday Mass was resumed in toto, unless a *Votive Mass was substituted. Under present arrangements, the ferial Masses of Ash Wednesday and Holy Week take precedence over all other celebrations; on other days the 'Ritual Masses' (e.g. those for weddings and ordinations) may be substituted for the ferial Mass and, except on the weekdays of Lent and the last week of Advent (which take precedence over obligatory memorials), Votive Masses and 'Masses for Various Occasions' may also be substituted. The BCP provides that 'the Collect, Epistle and Gospel appointed for the Sunday shall serve all the week after, where it is not in this book otherwise ordered'.

'Feria' is applied to weekdays already in *Tertullian (De jejunio, 2). For some suggestions as to how the word changed its meaning, see art. by R. Sinker in D.C.A., i (1875), p. 667 f., s.v.

FERMENTUM (Lat., 'leaven'). In *Rome (5th cent.), the fragments of the Bread of the Eucharist sent on Sundays from the Papal Mass to the presbyters in the parish churches (tituli) to typify the unity of the faithful in Christ. The practice is attested by Pope *Innocent I (Ep. xxv ad Decentium, 5). In a modified form it survived on *Maundy Thursday down to the 8th cent.

There is a useful note in L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), p. 169, note 4. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du Haut Moyen Age, ii (S.S.L., xxiii; 1948), pp. 61–4; J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Fermentum. Ein Symbol kirchlicher Einheit und sein Nachleben im Mittelalter' in Colligere Fragmenta (Festschrift A. Dold, Beuron, 1952, pp. 185–90). Jungmann, ii (ed. 1958), pp. 386–8. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (1922), cols. 1371–4, with patristic reff.

FERRANDUS (Fulgentius Ferrandus), deacon of the Church of Carthage from 520 to 547. His 'Breviatio canonum' is an important epitome, systematically arranged, of canons of the early councils, Greek and African. There survive also his Life of St. *Fulgentius, and some letters.

Works ed. P. F. Chifflet, Dijon, 1649; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxvii, 877–962, and ('Vita Fulgentii') ib., lxv, 117–50. Life of Fulgentius also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd. on life and works of Ferrandus, by G. G. Lapeyre (Paris, 1929). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 316–19; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 489, both with bibl. His 'Breviatio' is discussed in F. Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, i (1870), pp. 799–802; A. Vetulani in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 1111–13, s.v. 'Breviatio Canonum Ferrandi', with bibl. M. Jourjon in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 181–3, s.v. 'Ferrand (1)'. See also bibl. to Fulgentius.

FERRAR, NICHOLAS (1592–1637), founder of *Little Gidding. A native of London, in 1605 he entered Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he was one of the most brilliant of his generation, and in 1610 was elected a Fellow. In 1613 he had to leave Cambridge on account of his health and during the next five years travelled on the Continent, chiefly in Germany, Italy, and Spain. Having returned to England in 1618 he was employed by the Virginia Company, of which he became Deputy-Treasurer in 1622. Shortly before the dissolution of the Company, in 1624, he was returned to Parliament, but the sombre political prospect as well as his religious aspirations determined him to give up the brilliant career which was opening before him. In 1625 he settled at Little Gidding, an estate 11 miles NW of Huntingdon, bought by his mother in the preceding year. There he was joined by his brother and brother-in-law with their families in order to establish a kind of community life in accordance with the principles of the C of E. In 1626 he was ordained deacon by W. *Laud, and under his direction this household of some 30 persons lived a life of prayer and work under a strict rule. Ferrar himself played a full part in the life of the community. His austerity was exemplified in a very sparing diet, little sleep, and an almost complete absence of recreation. His piety and ideals, essentially Biblical and founded on the BCP, were warmly approved by the Bp. of Lincoln, J. *Williams. In 1633 *Charles I visited Little Gidding and was greatly impressed by their life. The community incurred, however, the hostility of the Puritans, and after Ferrar's death was denounced in a pamphlet entitled The Arminian Nunnery (1641) as an attempt in introduce RC practices in the country. Most of Ferrar's manuscripts were destroyed in a Puritan raid in 1646, which also brought the community to an end. His only publications are translations of J. *Valdez' Divine Considerations and L. *Lessius' treatise On Temperance. Feast day in the ASB, 2 Dec.; in the American BCP (1979), 1 Dec.

See also Little Gidding.

A full life was compiled by his brother John Ferrar (d.1657), but was never printed. Part of this survives in a copy made by the Cambridge antiquary, T. Baker (d.1740), now in the Cambridge University Library. Another life by Francis Peck (d.1743), who used all the Ferrar papers, was also not printed. A good short life by F. Turner, Bp. of Ely (d.1700), based on the work of John Ferrar, is in the British Museum (Add. MS. 34656); it was copied by S. Jebb (d.1772), whose MS. is in Cambridge University Library. Both John Ferrar's and Peck's works were used in P. Peckard, Memoirs of the Life of Mr. Nicholas Ferrar (Cambridge, 1790); subsequently the MSS. of both disappeared. Baker's copy of John Ferrar's Life and Turner's Life were ed. by J. E. B. Mayor, Nicholas Ferrar. Two Lives (Cambridge, 1855; misleadingly describing the latter as the 'Life of Nicholas Ferrar by Doctor Jebb'). A crit. text of Baker's MS., supplemented where possible by selections from Turner and Peckard, was ed. by B. Blackstone, The Ferrar Papers (1938), pp. 3–94, with 'A Selection of Family Letters', pp. 223–312. T. T. *Carter (ed.), Nicholas Ferrar. His Household and his Friends (1892); H. P. K. Skipton, The Life and Times of Nicholas Ferrar (1907); A. L. Maycock, Nicholas Ferrar of Little Gidding (1938). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., xviii (1889), pp. 377–80. See also bibl. to Little Gidding.

FERRAR MSS. A group of NT *minuscule MSS. (Nos. 13, 69, 124, 346, 543, 1689, and some half-dozen others), the common origin of the first four of which was established in 1868 by W. H. Ferrar, Trinity College, Dublin. They are also known as 'Family 13'. They date from the 11th to the 15th cent. They were prob. written in Calabria or are descendants of a Calabrian archetype. They have affinities with the *Caesarean type of text. A peculiarity of them is the placing of the '*pericope adulterae' (Jn. 7. 53 – 8. 11) after Lk. 21. 38.

K. *Lake–S. Lake, Family 13 (The Ferrar Group). The Text according to Mark (Studies and Documents, xi; 1941); J. Geerlings, Family 13—The Ferrar Group. The Text according to Matthew (ib., xix; 1961); id., Family 13 (The Ferrar Group). The Text according to Luke (ib., xx; 1961); id., Family 13 (The Ferrar Group). The Text according to John (ib., xxi; 1962). Id., The Lectionary Text of Family 13 according to Cod. Vat. Gr. 1217 (ib., xviii; 1959).

FERRARA–FLORENCE, Council of. See Florence, Council of.

FESTIVALS, Ecclesiastical. See Feasts, Ecclesiastical.

FESTUM. See Feasts.

FÊTE-DIEU ('Feast of God'). The French title for the Feast of *Corpus Christi.

FETTER DIENSTAG (Ger., 'Fat-Tuesday'). An old German name for *Shrove-Tuesday, now Fastendienstag or Fastenabend, from the practice of consuming on that day the eggs and fat prohibited during Lent. (Fr. mardi gras.)

FETTER DONNERSTAG (Ger., 'Fat-Thursday'). The Thursday preceding *Ash Wednesday, traditionally observed, like the following Monday and (Shrove-) Tuesday, as a day of feasting. (Fr. jeudi gras.)

FEUARDENT, FRANÇOIS (1539–1610), French *patristic scholar and controversialist. A native of Coutances, he studied at Bayeux and *Paris, and after becoming a *Franciscan was ordained priest in 1561. For some years he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the cause of the Catholic League, preaching extensively in Paris and the Low Countries. The chief of his numerous writings against Calvinism is his Theomachia Calvinistica (1604), in which he claimed to refute 1,400 errors of his Calvinist adversaries. His patristic writings, the most valuable part of his work, include editions of St. *Ildefonsus of Toledo (1576), St. *Irenaeus (1576; reissued, Cologne, 1596), Michael *Psellus (1577), St. *Ephràem Syrus (1579), *Arnobius (1596), and *Lactantius (never published). He also commented on several Biblical Books and produced a new edition of the *Postils of *Nicholas of Lyra.

Édouard, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols .2262–5.

FEUERBACH, LUDWIG ANDREAS (1804–72), German philosopher. He began as a student of theology at Heidelberg. In 1824 he went to Berlin, where he came under the personal influence of G. W. F. *Hegel and decided to exchange theology for philosophy. In 1828 he began teaching at Erlangen, but for the greater part of his life held no public office. He sought to recast Hegel's teaching in a positivistic sense openly hostile to Christianity. Rejecting all belief in transcendence, he held that theology and philosophy were properly concerned only with the nature of man, who was the true ens realissimum. Christianity was but an illusion, in Hegelian language the 'dominance of subjectivity' (die Allmacht der Subjektivität). Of his many writings the most celebrated was his Wesen des Christentums (1841; Eng. trans. by George Eliot as The Essence of Christianity, 1854). He exercised a far wider influence than the intrinsic merits of his writings deserved, notably on F. *Nietzsche and R. Wagner, and esp. on K. Marx and the whole Communist school in Germany. His other writings include Grundsätze der Philosophie der Zukunft (1843), Das Wesen der Religion (1845), Theogonie (1857), and Gottheit, Freiheit und Unsterblichkeit (1866; vol. x of Sämmtliche Werke).

Collected Works in 10 vols., Leipzig, 1846–66; new ed. by W. Bolin and F. Jodl, 10 vols., Stuttgart, 1903–1911; also ed. W. Schuffenhauer and others, 16 vols., Berlin, 1967 ff. Selected Letters, ed. W. Bolin (2 vols., Leipzig, 1904) and W. Schuffenhauer (ib., 1963). K. Grün, Ludwig Feuerbach (2 vols., 1874). F. Engels, Ludwig Feuerbach und der Ausgang der klassischen deutschen Philosophie (1888; Eng. trr., Chicago, 1903, and London [1934]). S. Rawidowicz, Ludwig Feuerbachs Philosophie. Ursprung und Schicksal (1931). G. Nüdling, Ludwig Feuerbachs Religionsphilosophie. Die Auflösung der Theologie in Anthropologie (Paderborn, 1936; ed. 2, 1961). W. B. Chamberlain, Heaven wasn't his Destination. The Philosophy of Ludwig Feuerbach (1941), with bibl. K. E. Bockmühl, Leiblichkeit und Gesellschaft. Studien zur Religionskritik und Anthropologie im Frühwerk von Ludwig Feuerbach und Karl Marx (Forschungen zur systematischen Theologie und Religionsphilosophie, vii; 1961). E. Kamenka, The Philosophy of Ludwig Feuerbach (1970), with bibl. Überweg, iv, pp. 223–6, 697.

FEUILLANTS. The reformed *Cistercians of Le Feuillant (formerly Fulium) in the neighbourhood of Toulouse, founded in 1577 by Abbot J. de la Barrière (1544–1600). After expelling from his house, which had grown lax and corrupt, those who would not accept his reform, the Abbot established a new rule stricter than the original. *Gregory XIII approved his action in 1581 and in 1589 *Sixtus V established the independence of the order. In 1588 a similar order for women, the 'Feuillantines', was begun. The Feuillants spread to Italy, where they were called 'Bernardines', and both the French and Italian branches produced some distinguished men, among them Cardinal J. Bona (d. 1674). In the 17th cent. the rigours of the original rule were somewhat relaxed. The order came to an end during the Napoleonic wars. Some *martyrologies describe de la Barrière as 'Venerable', and keep his feast on 25 Apr.

C. J. Morotius, O.Cist., Cistercii Reflorescentis seu Cong. cistercio-monasticarum B. Mariae Fulensis in Gallia et reformatorum in Italia Chronologica Historia (Turin, 1690). Geneviève Crucifix-Bultingaire, Feuillants & Feuillantines (privately pr., Paris, 1961). [P. Helyot,] Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, et des congrégations séculières, v (1718), pp. 401–20; Heimbucher, i, pp. 374–6. Life of Jean de la Barrière by A. Bazy (Toulouse, 1885). E. M. Obrecht, O.C.R., in C.E., vi (1909), p. 64 f., s.v.; M. Standaert in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 274–87, s.v.; L. Ferrando in D.H.G.E., xvi (1967), cols. 1338–44, s.v., both with bibl.

FICHTE, JOHANN GOTTLIEB (1762–1814), German Idealist philosopher. He was educated at Schulpforta and at the universities of Jena and Leipzig, where he studied Protestant theology. In 1790 he became acquainted with I. *Kant's philosophical system. His 'attempt at a critique of all revelation' (Versuch einer Kritik aller Offenbarung, 1792) showed his great powers, and he was appointed professor of philosophy at Jena in 1794, but dismissed in 1799 for atheism. In 1807–8 he delivered his famous Reden an die deutsche Nation which had great influence on the development of German nationalism and the overthrow of Napoleon. From 1809 till his death he was professor at the newly founded university of Berlin.

Fichte claimed that his philosophical doctrines were implicit in those of I. Kant, which he sought to develop on the lines of 'spontaneity' and 'autonomy'. Acc. to him the objects of our knowledge are the products of the consciousness of the ego as regards both their matter and their form. This ego, however, is not the individual 'I', but the Absolute Ego, which can be known only by philosophical intuition. It develops in three phases. In the first it posits itself, in the second it posits a non-ego against itself, and in the last it posits itself as limited by the non-ego. Acc. to Fichte God is the absolute Ego, 'the living operative moral order'; but He is not to be conceived as personal. True religion consists in 'joyously doing right'. When society will have reached a condition in which morality is the norm, the existence of the Church will be unnecessary.

Fichte expounded his doctrines, which have been summed up as 'ethical pantheism', in a long series of works. Among the more important were Grundlage der gesamten Wissenschaftslehre (1794–1795), Grundlage des Naturrechts (1796), Erste and Zweite Einleitung in die Wissenschaftslehre (both 1897), System der Sittenlehre (1798), Der geschlossene Handelsstaat (1800), Die Bestimmung des Menschen (1800), Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters (1806), and Anweisung zum seligen Leben (1805), the last his chief contribution to the philosophy of religion.

Sämmtliche Werke (ed. I. H. Fichte, son), 8 vols., Berlin, 1845–6. Nachgelassene Werke, ed. id., 3 vols., Bonn, 1834–5. Crit. ed. of Werke, incl. Nachgelassene Schriften and Briefe, under the auspices of the Bayerische Akademie by R. Lauth–H. Jacob (Stuttgart, 1962 ff.). Eng. tr. of 'Popular Works', 2 vols., London, 1848–9. Lives by I. H. Fichte (2 Thle., Sulzbach, 1830–31), K. Fischer (Geschichte der neueren Philosophie, v, Heidelberg, 1869; ed. 4, vol. vi, ib., 1914), R. Adamson (Knight's Philosophical Classics, 1881), F. Medicus (Leipzig, 1914). C. C. Everett, Fichte's Science of Knowledge. A Critical Exposition (Chicago, 1884). X. Léon, La Philosophie de Fichte (1902); id., Fichte et son temps (3 vols., 1922–7). E. Lask, Fichtes Idealismus und die Geschichte (1902). G. H. Turnbull, The Educational Theory of J. G. Fichte (Liverpool, 1926; with translations). M. Wundt, Fichte-Forschungen (1929). W. Ritzel, Fichtes Religionsphilosophie (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, N.F., v [1956]). M. Buhr (ed.), Wissen und Gewissen. Beiträge zum 200. Geburtstag Johann Gottlieb Fichtes 1762–1814 (1962). A. Philonenko, La Liberté humaine dans la philosophie de Fichte (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 1966). H. M. Baumgartner–W. G. Jacobs, J. G. Fichte-Bibliographie (Stuttgart, 1968). Überweg, iv, pp. 11–35, 670–2. R. Adamson in E.B. (ed. 11), x (1910), pp. 313–16, s.v.

FICINO, MARSILIO (1433–99), Italian humanist and philosopher. Born at Figline near Florence, he was orig. intended by his father to be a physician. His early promise commended him to Cosimo de'Medici (1389–1464), who, under the influence of *Gemistus Plethon (who had come to Florence for the Council; 1439), had conceived the idea of founding a Platonic Academy; and before Ficino was twenty, Cosimo had received him into his household and appointed him its head. In 1459 Ficino became the pupil of John Argyropoulos, then lecturing on Greek literature and language at Florence, and before long had made himself a competent Greek scholar. He undertook a complete fresh translation of Plato, a task which, by leading him to consult many of the chief scholars of the day, did much to promote the study of Plato and philosophy generally. By the death of Cosimo (1464) ten of the Dialogues were finished and the whole in 1477. The translation was printed at Florence in 1483–4.

Meanwhile, Ficino's original mind, with its love of nature and its bent towards mysticism, gained him a wide influence. In 1473, after some hesitation, he sought ordination to the priesthood and became exemplary in his new duties. He continued to defend his 'Platonic philosophy', which meant for him not only the teachings of the *Neoplatonists but all the nobler elements in Greek thought. This synthesis of Christianity and Greek mysticism he expounded in De Religione Christiana (1477; dedicated to Lorenzo de' Medici, d. 1492), in immediate intention directed esp. against the critics of Christianity among the contemporary *Averroists. In 1484 he was appointed a Canon of Florence, where his expositions of the Gospels and Epistles formed the basis of his 'Commentaries'. His principal philosophical work, Theologia Platonica de Immortalitate Animorum (written in 1474), largely based on Plato's Phaedo, appeared in 1487. In his later years he translated into Latin *Plotinus, *Porphyry, and *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite. Shortly before his death he was charged with magic, on the grounds of his belief in planetary influences, but he succeeded in purging himself.

Though he lacked critical judgement and had little sense of history, his erudition, wide sympathies, and enthusiasm gave him a far-reaching influence. He was sought out by scholars from all over Europe, among them J. *Colet and J. *Reuchlin, and kept up a large correspondence. His Florentine 'Academy' did not survive him, but his version of Plato remained the standard Lat. text for the next hundred years.

Letters publd. Venice, 1495. Collected Works publd. in 2 vols., Basle, 1561, 1576, and Paris, 1641. Supplementum Ficinianum. Marsilii Ficini Florentini Philosophi Platonici Opuscula Inedita et Dispersa, ed. P. O. Kristeller (2 vols., Florence, 1937). Modern edd. of his Commentary on Plato's Symposium, with Eng. tr., by S. R. Joyce (University of Missouri Studies, xix, No. 1; Columbia, 1944) and, with Fr. tr., by R. Marcel (Les Classiques de l'humanisme. Collection publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 1956) and of his Theologia Platonica de Immortalitate Animorum by id. (2 vols., ib., 1964). L. Galeotti, 'Saggio intorno alla vita ed agli scritti di Marsilio Ficino' in Archivio storico italiano, N.S., ix (pt. 2; 1859), pp. 25–91, and x (pt. 1; 1859), pp. 3–55. W. Dress, Die Mystik des Marsilio Ficino (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xiv; 1929). [A. M.] J. Festugière, La Philosophie de l'amour de Marsile Ficin et son influence sur la littérature française au XVIe siècle (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, xxxi, 3; 1941). P. O. Kristeller, The Philosophy of Marsilio Ficino (New York, 1943), with bibl., pp. 413–17. M. Schiavone, Problemi filosofici in Marsilio Ficino (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Filosofia dell'Università di Genova, vi [1957]). E. *Gilson, 'Marsile Ficin et le Contra Gentiles' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxiv (for 1957; 1958), pp. 101–113. R. Marcel, Marsile Ficin (Paris, 1958). Überweg, iii, pp. 16 and 18–20, with bibl., p. 629. F. Vernet in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2277–91, s.v. 'Ficin, Marsile'; B. Nardi in E.C., v (1950), cols. 1239–43, s.v.

FIDEI DEFENSOR. See Defender of the Faith.

FIDEISM. A term applied to a variety of doctrines which hold in common belief in the incapacity of the intellect to attain to knowledge of divine matters and correspondingly put an excessive emphasis on faith. Though such systems have a long history, the word itself was apparently coined (for their own doctrines) by the Paris Protestant theologians, A. *Sabatier and E. Ménégoz (1838–1921), whose irrationalism derived from I. *Kant and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. Later it came to be used much more widely and for the most part in a hostile sense. Scholastic theologians regularly charged the *Modernists with 'Fideism' in their theories of knowledge.

FIDELIUM, Missa. See Faithful, Mass of the.

FIDES DAMASI (or Faith of Damasus). An important credal formula which was formerly attributed to St. *Damasus or St. *Jerome, but which, in view of its MS. tradition, its influence on other creeds, and some of its theological expressions, is now generally thought to have originated in S. Gaul towards the end of the 5th cent. It is closely related in structure to the *Athanasian Creed, consisting like it of an exposition of Trinitarian doctrine (probably including the *Filioque) followed by a carefully reasoned Christological statement. It should not be confused with the *Tome of Damasus (Tomus Damasi).

The text is conveniently pr. in A. and G. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln in der alten Kirche (ed. 3, 1897), p. 275 f., § 200; also in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 39 f. (Nos. 71–72); A. E. Burn, An Introduction to the Creeds (1899), pp. 244–8, incl. text; J. N. D. Kelly, The Athanasian Creed (Paddock Lectures, 1962–3; 1964), p. 10 f., with text p. 134 f. J. A. de Aldama, S.J., 'El Símbolo "Clemens Trinitas"' in Gregorianum, xiv (1933), pp. 485–500, esp. pp. 495–500; id., El Símbolo Toledano I (Analecta Gregoriana, vii; 1934), esp. p. 127 f.

FIDES HIERONYMI. An early form of the *Apostles' Creed, prob. late 4th cent. and perhaps the work of St. *Jerome. Attention was drawn to its existence in several MSS. (St. Mihiel 28; Oxford, Bod. 147; Cambridge, Trinity College, O. 5. 5; London, B. Mus. Royal 6. B. XIII) by Dom G. *Morin. It is one of the earliest Latin Creeds with the words 'descended into hell' ('descendit ad inferna') and 'the *communion of saints' ('sanctorum communionem').

G. Morin, 'Un Symbole inédit attribué à saint Jérôme' in R. Bén., xxi (1904), pp. 1–9.

FIELD, FREDERICK (1801–85), Biblical and patristic scholar. Educated at Christ's Hospital and Trinity College, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of his college in 1824, and from 1842 to 1863 was rector of Reepham in Norfolk. In the latter year he resigned his living and moved to *Norwich in order to devote his entire time to scholarship. In 1870 he became a member of the OT Revision Company. Field was one of the most learned and accurate patristic scholars of the 19th cent. His editions of St. *Chrysostom's 'Homilies on St. Matthew' (3 vols., 1839) and 'on St. Paul's Epistles' (1849–62) marked the first attempt at establishing a critical text since the time of H. *Savile and B. *Montfaucon. His splendid edition of Origen's Hexapla (2 vols., 1875) embodied the results of many years' research. He was also a keen student of the Greek text of the OT and NT, which he sought to understand in the light of a wide knowledge of classical literature; and many of his results in this field were contained in his Otium Norvicense (3 parts, 1864–81; part 3 republished posthumously, with additions by the author, 1897).

W. A. Greenhill in D.N.B., xviii (1889), pp. 402–4, s.v.

FIELD, JOHN (1545–88), *Puritan. Little is known of his early life, but he was described as a Bachelor of Arts of *Christ Church, Oxford, when he was ordained priest, uncanonically early, by E. *Grindal in 1566. From 1568 he worked as lecturer, curate and schoolmaster in his native London, where he was soon a leading member of an extreme Puritan group. He was debarred from preaching for eight years (1571–9), and in 1572, after the failure of a move to moderate the Act of Uniformity in the Puritan interest, he wrote the bitter and pungent 'View of Popish Abuses yet remaining in the English Church' which appeared with Thomas Wilcox's Admonition to the Parliament. Both were sentenced to one year's imprisonment for breach of the Act of Uniformity, but had set the pattern for a succession of Presbyterian manifestoes. Field was relatively inactive during Archbishop Grindal's earlier years, but his aim, especially in face of Archbishop *Whitgift's energetic campaign for conformity, was the further reform of the Church of England by the imposition of a hierarchy of Presbyterian synods and by the substitution of a more austere form of public prayer, with greater provision for preaching. As corresponding secretary of the London conference of extreme Puritan ministers he showed himself an adept propagandist and organizer; however, he failed in his attempt to impose a Presbyterian uniformity on English Puritans, and became ready to rely on 'the multitude and people' to achieve the introduction of the new discipline. Though again suspended from preaching after 1585 he was protected from worse penalties by sympathizers on the Queen's Council. He probably provided material for the *Marprelate Tracts; but as the organizing genius of extreme Elizabethan Puritanism Field had no successor.

Field's activities (esp. in connexion with elections to and proceedings in Parliament) are still shrouded in some obscurity; little of his correspondence has been printed (his letters to Anthony Gilby are in Cambridge University Library, Baker MS. 32), his works are scattered, and the 'Register' of evidences for the Puritan controversy which he compiled has not been printed in full. P. Collinson, 'John Field and Elizabethan Puritanism' in S. T. Bindoff and others (edd.), Elizabethan Government and Society. Essays presented to Sir John Neale (1961), pp. 127–62. Id., The Elizabethan Puritan Movement (1967), passim. A. Gordon in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), p. 205 f.

FIELD, RICHARD (1561–1616), Dean of *Gloucester. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and became Divinity Reader at *Winchester Cathedral in 1592, Rector of Burghclere c. 1595, chaplain in ordinary to Queen *Elizabeth I in 1598, and Prebendary of Windsor in 1604. In 1603 he took part in the *Hampton Court Conference and in 1609 he was appointed Dean of Gloucester (where, however, he rarely resided). His principal work, his treatise Of the Church (Bks. I–IV, 1606; Bk. V, 1610), was primarily conceived as an apology for the C of E against Rome, though controversy was subordinated to the exposition of principles. The notes of the true Church were (1) Antiquity, (2) Succession, (3) Unity, (4) Universality, and (5) the name 'Catholic'; and Field argued that the counterpart of the modern RC Church was to be found in early times in the *Donatists, with their claims to exclusiveness and purity. Field held that the Protestant bodies on the Continent were also part of the Church of Christ. The intimate friend of R. *Hooker, H. *Savile, and other noted scholars, Field was one of the most learned and acute theologians of his age.

There is a modern repr. of his treatise Of the Church, publd. by the Eccl. Hist. Soc., 4 vols., 1847–52. Some Short Memorials concerning the Life of . . . Richard Field . . . by his son Nathaniel Field . . . published by John Le Neve (1717). R. Hooper in D.N.B., xviii (1889), pp. 410–12.

FIFTH MONARCHY MEN. A fanatical sect of the middle of the 17th cent. whose members aimed at bringing in the 'Fifth Monarchy' (Dan. 2. 44) which should succeed the four empires of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome. During it, Christ was to reign with His saints for a thousand years (Rev. 20. 4). For a time they supported O. *Cromwell, in the belief that the Commonwealth was a preparation for the Fifth Monarchy, but when they found their theocratic hopes unlikely to be realized they turned against him. After unsuccessful risings in 1657 and 1661, the leaders were beheaded and the sect died out.

L. F. Brown, The Political Activities of the Baptists and Fifth Monarchy Men in England During the Interregnum (Washington, D.C., and London, 1912); E. Rogers, Some Account of the Life and Opinions of a Fifth-Monarchy-Man. Chiefly extracted from the Writings of John Rogers, Preacher (1867); C. H. Firth, The Life of Thomas Harrison (from Proceedings of the American Antiquarian Society, at the Semi-Annual Meeting, April 26, 1893; Worcester, Mass., 1893); P. G. Rogers, The Fifth Monarchy Men (1966); W. M. Lamont, Godly Rule. Politics and Religion 1603–60 (1969); B. S. Capp, The Fifth Monarchy Men (1972).

FIGGIS, JOHN NEVILLE (1866–1919), Anglican historian and theologian. The son of a Brighton minister of 'Lady *Huntingdon's Connexion', he was educated at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of F. W. *Maitland and M. *Creighton. After being received into the C of E he went to *Wells Theological College in 1894, and was ordained in the same year to a curacy at Kettering. In 1896 he published The Divine Right of Kings, an original attempt to exhibit the permanent religious significance of the doctrine from a study of its development. From 1896 to 1902 he was lecturer at St. Catharine's and chaplain to Pembroke College, and from 1902 to 1907 rector of Marnhull in Dorset. In the meantime he had become an ardent disciple and correspondent of Lord *Acton, some of whose writings he later edited. In 1907 appeared *From *Gerson to Grotius, a useful contribution to the history of political thought. In the same year he entered the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield. In 1908–9 he delivered the *Hulsean Lectures on The Gospel and Human Needs (1909). In 1914 appeared The Fellowship of the Mystery (Paddock Lectures, 1913), a defence of Christianity against modern unbelief, with much pungent criticism of contemporary religion. His other writings include Civilisation at the Cross Roads (1912), Churches in the Modern State (1913), Some Defects in English Religion (1917), The Political Aspects of St. Augustine's 'City of God' (1921; posthumous), and contributions to the Cambridge Modern History. Figgis's brilliance and depth of thought, clothed in an easy style, made him an unusually effective apologist. In his conception of the Christian State, he was a resolute opponent of the idea of absolute sovereignty and was among the first Christian thinkers alive to the dangers to religion and human freedom of the modern omnicompetent State.

M. G. Tucker, John Neville Figgis. A Study (1950). W. H. *Frere in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 181.

FILARET. See Philaret.

FILASTER. See Philaster.

FILIOQUE (Lat., 'And the Son'). The dogmatic formula expressing the *Double Procession of the Holy Ghost (q.v.), added by the W. Church to the Nicene-Constantinopolitan *Creed immediately after the words 'the Holy Ghost . . . who proceedeth from the Father'. It is no part of the original Creed, but is first met with as an interpolation (acc. to the usual texts) at the Third Council of *Toledo (589). In 796 its use was defended by *Paulinus of Aquileia at the Synod of Friuli and from c. 800, when the Creed began to be generally chanted at the Mass throughout the Frankish Empire, the words became widely familiar. Its introduction by Frankish monks in 807 into their monastery at *Jerusalem on the Mount of *Olives aroused strong but easily understandable opposition from the Eastern monks of St. *Sabas, and when the matter was referred to *Leo III he tried to suppress the addition to the formula while approving the doctrine. He caused the Creed in its original form to be engraved on two silver tables deposited at the tomb of St. *Peter. The 'Filioque', however, continued to be sung, and soon after 1000 had been adopted also at Rome. Since the time of *Photius, who violently denounced it, the 'Filioque' has been made the chief ground of attack by the Orthodox Church on the Church of Rome. At the Reunion Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439), the acceptance of the doctrine, though not of the addition to the Creed, was imposed on the Greeks as a condition of the short-lived union. English theologians, following the *Thirty-Nine Articles, have generally accepted the W. tradition, e.g. R. *Hooker, J. *Pearson, and E. H. *Browne, and it was vigorously upheld by E. B. *Pusey in On the Clause 'And the Son' (1876). Discussions on the formula took place between Anglicans, *Old Catholics, and the E. Church at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875, and again at St. Petersburg in 1912 in the conversations between F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., and Russian Orthodox theologians, but in both cases without positive results. See also Double Procession.

The history of the phrase is discussed in all works on the Creed, its doctrinal significance in treatises on the Holy Ghost. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950), pp. 358–67. G. B. Howard, The Schism between the Oriental and Western Churches, with special references to the addition of the Filioque to the Creed (1892). P. de Meester, O.S.B., 'Études sur la théologie orthodoxe', iv, 'Le Filioque' in R. Bén., xxiv (1907), pp. 86–103. A. E. Burn, 'Some Spanish MSS. of the Constantinopolitan Creed' in J.T.S., ix (1908), pp. 301–3. M. Jugie, A.A., 'Origine de la controverse sur l'addition du Filioque au symbole' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, xxviii (1939), pp. 369–85. Eng. tr. of V. *Lossky, 'The Procession of the Holy Spirit in the Orthodox Triadology' in Eastern Churches Quarterly, vii (1948), supplementary issue 2, pp. 31–53. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Pape Léon III et le "Filioque" ' in 1054–1954. L'Église et les églises. Études et travaux . . . offerts à Dom Lambert *Beauduin, i (Chevetogne, 1954), pp. 309–22; repr. in Travaux liturgiques, iii (1967), pp. 35–46. A. Palmieri in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 2309–43, s.v., with full bibl.; J. Gill, S.J., in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 913 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Double Procession.

FINAN, St. (d. 661). The successor of St. *Aidan as Bp. of *Lindisfarne. He was an Irishman by birth, and in his earlier life a monk of *Iona. He vigorously and consistently upheld the Celtic ecclesiastical traditions against the successors of St. *Augustine of Canterbury, who, coming from the South, strove to bring English customs into closer conformity with those of Rome. He was a keen missionary and baptized Peada, ruler of the Middle Angles, and Sigebert, King of Essex. Feast day, 9 or 17 Feb.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 17, 21 f., and 25–7; notes ad loc., ed. C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 176–8 and 188 f.

FINDING OF THE CROSS. See Invention of the Cross.

FINLAND, Christianity in. The origins of Christianity in Finland are obscure. The monastery of Valamo claims to have been founded as early as 992. It seems clear, at any rate, that Finland had received Christianity by the 12th cent. from *Sweden and *Russia; Henry, Bp. of Uppsala, an Englishman murdered c. 1160, took part in the conversion of the Finns. In 1220 an independent Church organization was established under Thomas, Bp. of Räntemäkia (also an Englishman). In the 15th cent. the Church of Finland had sufficient eminence for its divines to hold prominent positions in the world of learning, the best known being Olaus Magni, Bp. of Åbo from 1450 to 1460, who was twice rector of the *Sorbonne.

*Lutheranism was introduced into Finland in 1523 by Peter Särkilax (d. 1530); and Michael Agricola (1512–57) was later prominent in the Reform Movement. The latter gained a ready hearing through his issue of popular Finnish religious writings, while his translation of the NT (1548) virtually created the Finnish written language. Severe measures were taken for the extermination of RCism. In Karelia (E. Finland), however, the population remained Orthodox, though it suffered persecution when the land fell to Sweden in 1617. In 1809 Finland came under Russian rule, and the Orthodox Church of Finland then rapidly increased in numbers and influence. By the Acts of 1869 and 1889 RCism was tolerated for the first time since 1523, but the RCs form an inconsiderable minority. The National Church of Finland is the Lutheran body, in which episcopal succession was maintained until 1884, when it was lost through all its three sees becoming vacant simultaneously and their successors being consecrated by the (non-episcopal) Dean of Åbo. Since then it has gradually been recovered with the help of the Church of Sweden. The independence gained by Finland in 1917–18 did not materially alter the religious position in the inter-war period. In 1934 a measure of intercommunion between the Church of Finland and the C of E was established.

F. Siegmund-Schultze, Ekklesia, II, 4 (Lieferung 8, Die Kirche in Finland; 1938), with bibl.; A. Lehtonen, 'The Church of Finland' in C.Q.R., cv (1928), pp. 314–47, with bibl. G. Sentzte, Die Kirche Finnlands (Helsinki, 1963; abbreviated Eng. tr., ib., 1963). L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches. A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965). F. Collan, De Reformationis initiis Dissertatio Academica (Helsingfors [1843]). A. Malin, Der Heiligenkalendar Finnlands. Seine Zusammensetzung und Entwicklung (Suomen Kirkkohistoriallisen Seuran, xx; Helsingfors, 1925). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), pp. 188–96, iv (1962), pp. 337–42, with reff. W. A. Schmidt, 'Recent Research in Ecclesiastical History in Finland' in J.E.H., vii (1956), pp. 226–37. W. Schmidt and others in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 960–99, s.v.; J. Gallén in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 217–31, s.v., with extensive bibl. The Church of England and the Church of Finland. A Summary of the Proceedings at the Conferences held at Lambeth Palace, London, on October 5 and 6, 1933, and at Brändö, Helsingfors, on July 17 and 18, 1934 (1935). G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity, Third Series, 1930–48 (1948), Nos. 188–92, pp. 146–53.

FINNIAN, St. (c. 495 – 579). The chief patron of Ulster. A pupil of St. *Colman, he made a pilgrimage to Rome and, having brought back thence a copy of the *Vulgate NT and Pentateuch, established a famous monastery at Moville. Many legends were later attached to his name. Feast day, 10 Sept. (He is not to be confounded with St. Finnian of Clonard, d. 549 or 522; feast day, 12 Dec.)

Life by John of Tynemouth, written between 1325 and 1350, based on sources now lost, pr. in J. Capgrave, Nova Legenda Angliae (London, 1516), pp. cxlvii (reverse)–cxlix (ed. C. Horstman, Oxford, 1901, i, pp. 444–7). J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (New York, 1929), p. 390 f. (On St. Finnian of Clonard, cf. Kenney, ib., pp. 374–6; Kathleen Hughes in E.H.R., lxix (1954), pp. 352–72, and in Anal. Boll., lxxiii (1955), pp. 342–62, lxxv (1957), pp. 337–9; also T. Olden in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 39–41.)

FIORETTI, The. See Little Flowers of St. Francis, The.

FIRMAMENT (lit. 'something made solid'). In the OT (Gen. 1. 6, Ezek. 1. 26, &c.), the word commonly refers to the dome or canopy of heaven, which was supposed by the Hebrews to be a solid vault dividing the upper or celestial from the lower or terrestrial waters. It was conceived that the upper waters came down as rain through opened sluices, and that above these waters Jehovah sat enthroned (cf. Ps. 29. 9, BCP version). In the *Song of the Three Children, 33, it denotes heaven itself.

FIRMICUS MATERNUS, JULIUS (d. after 360), rhetorician. Little is known of him beyond the facts that he was prob. of Sicilian origin and converted to Christianity in adult life. While still a pagan, he wrote his Mathesis in eight books, a compendium of astrology interwoven with moral reflections. His most important work, the De errore profanarum religionum (written at Rome c. 347), is an appeal to the emperors Constantius and Constans to destroy the pagan idols by force. A treatise in three books, Consultationes Zacchaei et Apollonii, has been ascribed to him, prob. mistakenly, by Dom G. *Morin.

The Consultationes and De Errore, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 1071–1166, and xii, 971–1050. Critical edd. of Mathesis by W. Kroll, F. Skutsch and K. Ziegler (2 vols., Teub., 1898–1913), De Errore by K. Ziegler (ib., 1907, and, with Germ. tr., Munich, 1953) and G. Heuten, with commentary (Travaux de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Bruxelles, viii; 1938), and of the Consultationes by G. *Morin, O.S.B. (Florilegium Patristicum, xxxix; 1935). Studies and articles by G. Morin, O.S.B. (Hist. J., xxxvii, 1916, pp. 229–66), T. Wickström (Uppsala, 1935), B. Axelson (Lund, 1937), and A. C. Lawson (R. Bén., lvii, 1947, pp. 187–95), and on the Consultationes, by P. Courcelle (Revue de l'histoire des religions, cxlvi, 1954, pp. 174–93). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 456–60; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 360 f. K. Ziegler in R.A.C., vii (1969), cols. 946–59, s.v., with extensive bibl.

FIRMILIAN, St. (d. 268), Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia from c. 230. A great admirer of *Origen, Firmilian once summoned him to the Cappadocian Caesarea for instruction and later went himself to Origen's *Caesarea (in Palestine) to sit at his feet. He supported St. *Cyprian against Pope *Stephen I in his doctrine that baptism could be validly performed only within the confines of the Church, and that heretics on joining the Church must therefore be 'rebaptized'. His only extant writing is a letter on the subject addressed to Cyprian (Cyp., Ep. 75). In 264 he was president of the first of the synods of Antioch held to consider the case of *Paul of Samosata, and died on his way to the second. Feast day in the E., 28 Oct.

Our chief source of information about Firmilian is *Eusebius, H.E., VI. xxvii; xlvi. 3; VII. v. 1; xiv; xxviii. 1; xxx. 4 f. Opera Cypriani, ed. W. Hartel (C.S.E.L., iii (2), 1871), pp. 810–27 (the Lat. tr. is apparently the work of Cyprian himself; there are no sufficient grounds for holding it to be interpolated). B. Bossue, S.J., 'De Firmiliano . . . Commentarius Historicus' in AA.SS., Oct. XII (1867), pp. 470–510. G. A. Michell, 'Firmilian and Eucharistic Consecration' in J.T.S., N.S., v (1954), pp. 215–20. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 312–14. J. *Chapman, O.S.B., in C.E., vi (1909), p. 80 f., s.v.

FIRST FRIDAYS. The special observance of the first Friday in each month in the RC Church is based on the promise which Christ is supposed to have made to St. *Margaret Mary Alacoque (1647–90) that unusual graces and favours would be given to all who received Holy Communion on the first Friday of nine consecutive months. Those who fulfilled this obligation could rest in the assurance that they would have the grace of full repentance, that they would not die in sin or without the sacraments, and that the *Sacred Heart would be their refuge at the hour of death.

J. O'Connell, The Nine First Fridays. The 'Great Promise' of the Sacred Heart of Jesus to Saint Margaret Mary. Its Origin, Authenticity and Meaning (1934), incl. bibl.

FIRST-FRUITS. See Annates.

FISH (Gk. ἰχθύς). In Christian art and literature the fish is a symbol of Christ, also sometimes of the newly baptized and of the Eucharist. It came into use in the 2nd cent., but neither its origin nor its meaning have so far been completely elucidated. It occurs in *Tertullian's 'De Baptismo', where the writer compares the neophytes to little fishes, following the Fish, in connexion with the idea of the second birth in the waters of Baptism. This image is found also in the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas, in the Inscription of *Abercius, in *Clement of Alexandria, and in many other old Christian documents; but it is doubtful whether the symbol is exclusively Christian or influenced by Babylonian and Indian mythology. Opinions are also divided as to whether the symbol is derived from the acrostic ΙΧΘΥΣ = Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, Θεοῦ Υἱός Σωτήρ ('Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour'), or the acrostic from the symbol. The acrostic is frequently held to have originated in *Gnostic circles, since it is found in the '*Sibylline Oracles'. In the 4th and 5th cents. the fish became an emblem also of the Eucharist, and is frequently found in the paintings of the *catacombs in combination with bread and wine. In recent years, in some parishes of the C of E certain associations willing to help those in need have adopted the symbolism of a fish.

From early times fish, esp. in a dried condition, has taken the place of meat on days of fasting and abstinence. See Fast.

J. B. *Pitra, O.S.B., Spicilegium Solesmense, iii (Paris, 1855), pp. 499–543 ('ΙΧΘΥΣ, sive de Pisce Allegorico et Symbolico'); J. B. *de Rossi, ib., pp. 545–84 ('De Christianis Monumentis ΙΧΘΥΝ exhibentibus'); H. Achelis, Das Symbol des Fisches und die Fischdenkmäler der römischen Katakomben (Marburg, 1888); R. Pischel, 'Der Ursprung des christlichen Fischsymbol' in Sb. (Berl.), 1905 (1), pp. 506–32; C. R. Morey, 'The Origin of the Fish-Symbol' in Princeton Theological Review, viii (1910), pp. 93–106, 231–46, and 401–32; ix (1911), pp. 268–89; x (1912), pp. 278–98. I. Scheftelowitz, 'Das Fisch-Symbol im Judentum und Christentum' in Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, xiv (1911), pp. 1–53. F. J. Dölger, ΙΧΘΥΣ (vol. i, R.Q., Supplementheft, xvii; 1910; vols. ii-v, Münster i.W., 1922–40). V. Schultze, ΙΧΘΥΣ (Vortrag, Greifswald, 1912). R. St. J. Tyrwhitt in D.C.A., i (1880), p. 673 f., s.v., and pp. 625–8, s.v. 'Eucharist (in Christian Art)'; F. Cumont in P.W., ix (pt. 1; 1914), cols. 844–50, s.v. 'Ichthys'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1990–2086, s.v. ΙΧΘΥΣ; J. Quasten in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 943–6, s.v. 'Fish, Symbolism of'; J. Engemann in R.A.C., vii (1969), cols. 1021–97, s.v. 'Fisch, B. Christlich'.

FISHER, GEOFFREY FRANCIS (1887–1972), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Higham-on-the-Hill, Leics., he was educated at Marlborough and Exeter College, Oxford. He was successively assistant master of Marlborough (1911), Headmaster of Repton (1914), and Bp. of *Chester (1932). His translation to London in 1939 gave wider scope for his administrative ability, which he shewed in his attempt to establish some ritual conformity by the issue of Bishops' Regulations, and more markedly by his chairmanship of the *Church Assembly Committee set up to deal with pastoral reorganization required by war damage, and of the Churches' Main War Damage Committee. In 1945 he was translated to Canterbury. In 1946 he preached the influential Cambridge sermon on *reunion, a subject in which he displayed great interest during his archiepiscopate; he was chairman of the *World Council of Churches at its inauguration in 1948, and in 1960, when he travelled to meet the Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem, the Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, and Pope *John XXIII, he was the first Archbishop of Canterbury to visit the Vatican since 1397. He presided over the *Lambeth Conferences of 1948 and 1958, which owed their representative character partly to his careful preparation, especially in America, and partly to the establishment of new provinces among the emergent nations. His encouragement ensured the amalgamation of *Queen Anne's Bounty with the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners to form the *Church Commissioners for England in 1948. From 1946 onwards he devoted considerable time to what he regarded as one of his most important tasks, the revision of the Canon Law, though new *Canons were not authorized until 1969. He resigned in 1961, and was granted a life barony.

Life by W. Purcell (London, 1969). R. Lloyd, The Church of England 1900–1965 (1966), esp. pp. 463–72.

FISHER, St. JOHN (1469–1535), Bp. of *Rochester. Educated at Michaelhouse, Cambridge, he was appointed master in 1496. In 1501 he became vice-chancellor and in 1504 chancellor of the University, on whose destinies he left a permanent mark. As chaplain of the Lady *Margaret Beaufort he had her generous support for his efforts at raising the standard of the University, which also profited much by his appreciation of D. *Erasmus, whose work at Cambridge he greatly encouraged. In 1502 he was appointed the first Lady Margaret professor of divinity, and two years later Bp. of Rochester. He enjoyed a great reputation as a preacher, and was chosen to preach the funeral orations of Henry VII and, a little later, of the Lady Margaret. When in the twenties of the 16th cent. Protestant tendencies began to make themselves felt in the English universities, Fisher strongly upheld the doctrines of the *Real Presence and the Eucharistic Sacrifice (De Veritate Corporis et Sanguinis Christi in Eucharistia, 1527). Though it was included in his Latin Opera Omnia long after his death, he himself denied that he was the author of *Henry VIII's Assertio Septem Sacramentorum, as was later asserted against him, though he prob. advised in its composition, and published a Defensio Regiae Assertionis (1525). When the King began to contemplate divorce the Bp. of Rochester, who was confessor to the Queen, strongly protested, and from that time his relations with Henry VIII steadily deteriorated. In 1531 he had been able to secure the insertion into the Act acknowledging Henry as the head of the English Church of the words 'as far as the Law of God allows it', but in 1534 he was involved in the affair of Elizabeth *Barton, had his property confiscated and was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, though in view of his poor health the sentence was commuted to a fine. After his refusal to take the oath required by the Act of Succession, however, he was again arrested and confined in the Tower, where he wrote a treatise on prayer as a 'spiritual consolation to his sister Elizabeth', a nun. A personal messenger from Henry visited him in the Tower and persuaded him to declare in strict confidence, for the King's ear alone, his opinion on the royal supremacy. Because this opinion went against the King's wishes, Fisher was tried and condemned to death as a traitor. The fact that the Pope in recognition of his merits in May 1535 created him a cardinal only increased the fury of the King, who had him beheaded on 22 June 1535. Fisher was not only one of the greatest scholars of his day—he possessed one of the finest libraries in Europe—but devoted to the welfare of his diocese as much as to the learning of his university. His theological writings proved important during the Council of *Trent. He was canonized by *Pius XI in 1935. Feast day, formerly 9 July; now, with T. More, 22 June.

Opera collected by his fellow English RCs and publd. at Würzburg, 1597, various works written by him in Eng. being translated into Lat. for the purpose. Facs. reprint of the 1597 ed., Farnborough, 1967. The English Works of John Fisher, ed. J. E. B. Mayor (E.E.T.S., Extra Series, xxvii; 1876; repr. 1935 with text of additional sermon, pp. 429–76). J. Rouschausse (ed.), Erasmus and Fisher. Their Correspondence 1511–1524 (De Pétrarque à Descartes, xvi; Paris, 1968), prints 18 surviving letters, with notes and Eng. tr. Modern ed. of his Sacri Sacerdotii Defensio contra Lutherum (1525) by H. K. Schmeink (Corpus Catholicorum, ix; Münster i.W., 1925); Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett (London, 1935). The Spirituall Consolation (first publd. c. 1578) and the Treatise of Prayer in the Eng. tr. by St. A[lban] R[oe], O.S.B. (Paris, 1640), repr. in fasc. (English Recusant Literature 1558–1640, xi; Menston, Leeds, 1969). The earliest life, a composite production chiefly written between 1567 and 1576, was first ed. by T. Bailey, The Life and Death of John Fisher (1655); a more accurate ed. by F. van Ortroy, S.J., in Anal. Boll., x (1891), pp. 121–365, and xii (1893), pp. 97–281. One MS. (B.M. Harleian MS. 6382), ed. by R. Bayne (E.E.T.S., Extra Series, cxvii; 1921). Modernized ed. by P. Hughes (London, 1935). The life by T. E. Bridgett, C.SS.R. (London, 1888) is still most authoritative; good modern lives by E. E. Reynolds (ib., 1955) and M. Macklem (Ottawa, 1967). E. L. Surtz, S.J., The Works and Days of John Fisher (Cambridge, Mass., 1967) provides a magisterial survey of his thought and its influence. J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 58–63; B.R.U.C., pp. 229–30.

FISHER THE JESUIT (1569–1641), i.e. John Fisher, RC controversialist. His real name was Percy. Born in Co. Durham, he was converted to the RC faith as a young man. After studying abroad, he joined the *Jesuits in 1594 and served many years on the English mission, where he made a name for himself in private disputations and public controversy and won (among others) W. *Chillingworth and the Countess of Buckingham to the Roman faith. Among his Anglican opponents were *James I and Bps. F. *White and W. *Laud. Laud published in 1639 a lengthy Relation of his conference with Fisher, and this was several times reprinted. Fisher himself published several controversial and apologetical works.

Modern ed. of W. Laud, A Relation of the Conference between William Laud, late Archbishop of Canterbury, and Mr. Fisher the Jesuit, with introd. and notes, by C. H. Simpkinson ('The English Theological Library', 1901). H. Foley, S.J., Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, i (1877), pp. 521–42. A. F. Allison–D. M. Rogers, A Catalogue of Catholic Books in English printed abroad or secretly in England, 1558–1640 (Bognor Regis, 1956), pp. 111–13 (Nos. 603–10). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xix (1889), p. 63 f.

FISTULA. A tube, usually of gold or silver, through which the laity occasionally received communion from the chalice at the Eucharist in the Middle Ages. Its use came to be confined to solemn Papal Masses, when the Pope and his deacon received communion in this way. Since 1969 in the RC Church both celebrant and laity have been permitted to receive communion through a calamus or reed; nothing is laid down about the material from which it should be made.

Braun, A.G., pp. 247–65, and plate 48. H. J. Hotham in D.C.A., i (1875), p. 675, s.v.; W. Henry in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), col. 1583, s.v. 'Calamus', with bibl.

FITZRALPH, RICHARD (c. 1295–1360), Abp. of *Armagh. He became Chancellor of *Oxford University in 1332 and of *Lincoln Cathedral in 1334, Canon of *Lichfield in 1335, Dean of Lichfield in 1337, and Abp. of Armagh in 1347. He was a celebrated preacher, deeply imbued with scholasticism, and an eager promoter of learning among his clergy. In 1350, while on a visit to *Avignon, he presented the complaints of the secular priests against the privileges of the Mendicant Orders. He formulated his opinions in the treatise 'De Pauperie Salvatoris', in which he dealt with the question of evangelical poverty and the connexion of dominion, possession, and use with the state of grace; it later greatly influenced J. *Wycliffe. At about the same time he was engaged in a controversy with emissaries of the *Armenian Church which culminated in his learned attack on the Greek and Armenian standpoint entitled 'Summa in Quaestionibus Armenorum' (published 1511). In 1357 he was again called to Avignon in the matter of the Mendicant Orders, where he maintained that voluntary begging was against the teaching of Christ. His position was not officially condemned, and he died three years later at Avignon.

Modern ed. of his 'De Pauperie Salvatoris' appended to R. L. Poole's ed. of Wycliffe's De Dominio Divino (Wyclif Society, 1890), pp. 273–476. L. L. Hammerich, The Beginning of the Strife between Richard FitzRalph and the Mendicants, with an edition of his autobiographical Prayer and his Proposition Unusquisque (Copenhagen, 1938). G. Leff, Richard FitzRalph, Commentator on the Sentences. A Study in Theological Orthodoxy (Manchester [1963]). G. Meersseman, O.P. (ed.), 'La Défense des ordres mendicants contre Richard Fitz Ralph, par Barthélemy de Bolsenheim O.P. (1357)' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, v (1935), pp. 124–73. A. Gwynn, S.J., 'The Sermon Diary of Richard FitzRalph, Archbishop of Armagh' in Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, xliv (1937–8), Section C, pp. 1–57; id., The Austin Friars in the Time of Wyclif (1940), ch. 2, pp. 80–9, with reff. Study by Katherine Walsh (Oxford, 1981). R. L. Poole in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 194–8. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 692–4, s.v., with reff.

FIVE MILE ACT, The. One of the penal statutes (17 Car. II, c. 2) passed in 1665, as part of the so-called Clarendon Code, to secure the position of the C of E at the Restoration. It specifically dealt with those clergymen who had refused to conform to the Act of *Uniformity of 1662. It prohibited nonconformist ministers from preaching, teaching or coming within five miles of a city, or corporate town, or parish where they had previously officiated, unless they had taken the non-resistance oath, declaring that they would not 'at any time endeavour any alteration of Government either in Church or State'. The Act gave the informer legal status by empowering the Justices of the Peace to commit offenders upon the sworn testimony of a third party. Its effects were severely felt by the Dissenters, as their congregations were chiefly situated in the towns, but indirectly it contributed to the spread of Nonconformity in the countryside.

Text in Gee–Hardy, pp. 620–3 (No. cxviii); repr. in Bettenson (ed. 2, 1963), pp. 416–18.

FLABELLUM. See Fan, Liturgical.

FLACIUS, MATTHIAS (1520–75), from his birthplace also known as Illyricus, *Lutheran theologian. As he wished in his youth to become a monk, his uncle, who was a supporter of the Reformation and hoped to win him from his intention, sent him to study in Protestant parts. From Basle and *Tübingen he passed in 1541 to *Wittenberg, where he was received by P. *Melanchthon and M. *Luther, and in 1544 appointed professor of Hebrew. Here he became a convinced anti-humanist and as a strict dogmatist strongly opposed the *Augsburg Interim and the *Adiaphorists, and was forced by Melanchthon to leave Wittenberg. After some other academic appointments, he became professor of NT at Jena in 1557. Here his insistence on a view of human nature verging on *Manichaeism made him the subject of attack by V. *Strigel and others who were defending *synergistic doctrines, and in 1562 he left Jena. His subsequent attempt to found a Lutheran academy at Ratisbon failed. In the later years of his life he found himself compelled by the unpopularity of his doctrines to travel from place to place. He was a theologian of great erudition and the leading spirit among the *Centuriators of Magdeburg. His other writings include Catalogus Testium Veritatis (1556), Clavis Scripturae Sacrae (1567) and Glossa Compendiaria in NT (1570). See also Missa Illyrica.

Lives by J. B. Ritter (Frankfurt, 1725), A. D. C. Twesten (Berlin, 1844), W. Preger (Erlangen, 2 parts, 1859–61), and M. Mirković (Djela Jugoslavenske Akademije Znanosti i Umjetnosti, 1; Zagreb, 1960). J. Haussleiter, 'Matthias Flacius als Herausgeber von Luthers Koburger Briefen und Trostsprüchen (1530)' in Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, xxviii (1917), pp. 149–87; P. Polman, O.F.M., 'Flacius Illyricus, historien de l'Église' in R.H.E., xxvii (1931), pp. 27–73. L. Haikola, Gesetz und Evangelium bei Matthias Flacius Illyricus (Studia theologica Lundensia, i; 1952). J. F. Gilmont in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 311–26, s.v. See also bibl. to Centuriators of Magdeburg.

FLAGELLANTS. The bands of men who in medieval times scourged themselves in public procession, often to the accompaniment of psalms, in a penance for the sins of the world. Such organized exhibitions of penance date from the 13th cent. The anarchy and famine caused by war in North and Central Italy and the prophecies of *Joachim of Fiora combined to produce a conviction of the Divine displeasure, and in 1260 there was an outbreak of such penitential processions throughout Italy. In the next year they were condemned by ecclesiastical authority. Little more is heard of them till 1348–9, when the Black Death created a recrudescence of similar sentiments and a belief that the end of the world was near, and bands of flagellants, calling people to repentance, soon appeared all over Europe. In Germany they rapidly became an organized sect and, falling into heresy, were condemned. In Italy processions of flagellants, orthodox in belief, continued to be held at intervals through the succeeding centuries, one being seen in Rome as late as 1870. Similar practices exist today in distant RC missionary countries, e.g. the Philippine Islands, restrained and regulated to some extent by ecclesiastical authority.

For the main sources see Haupt, cited below. P. Runge (ed.), Die Lieder und Melodien der Geissler des Jahres 1349 nach der Aufzeichnung Hugo's von Reutlingen (1900); U. Berlière, O.S.B., 'Trois Traités inédits sur les flagellants de 1349' in R. Bén., xxv (1908), pp. 334–57. L. A. *Muratori, Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi, vi (Milan, 1742), pp. 446–82, Diss. lxxv, 'De Piis Laicorum Confraternitatibus earumque Origine, Flagellantibus, et Sacris Missionibus'. P. Fredericq, De Secten der Geeselaars en der Dansers in de Nederlanden Tijdens de 14de Eeuw (Mémoires de l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, liii, 1895–8; separate pagination; read 12 Oct. 1896). Il movimento dei Disciplinati nel settimo centenario dal suo inizio (Perugia–1260). Convegno internazionale: Perugia, 25–28 Settembre 1960 (Deputazione di Storia Patria per l'Umbria, Appendice al Bollettino ix; 1962). A. Hübner, Die deutschen Geisslerlieder (1931). K. Lechner, 'Die grosse Geisselfahrt des Jahres 1349' in Hist. J., v (1884), pp. 437–62. N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (1957), pp. 124–48. G. [A.] Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, ii (1967), pp. 485–93, with bibl. H. Haupt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 432–44, s.v. 'Geisselung (kirchliche) und Geisslerbruderschaften', with bibl.; L. A. St. L. Toke in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 89–92, s.v.; P. Bailly in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 392–407, s.v. 'Flagellants', sections 1–3.

FLAGS ON CHURCH TOWERS. Acc. to a ruling given in 1938 by the Earl Marshal, the proper flag to fly on a church tower in England is the red Cross of St. *George, with an escutcheon of the Arms of the See in which the church is ecclesiastically situate in the first quarter; but, where this flag cannot be obtained, custom sanctions the use of the plain St. George's Cross. No rules have been laid down as to the occasions on which the flag is to be flown, but it is usual for this to be done on important Church festivals, on special occasions of rejoicing, and sometimes on days of national observance.

FLAVIA DOMITILLA. See Domitilla, Flavia.

FLAVIAN, St. (d. 449), Patr. of *Constantinople from 446. He is remembered for the important part which he took in the *Monophysite struggle. In 448 he had excommunicated *Eutyches at a synod at Constantinople (the so-called σύνοδος ἐνδημοῦσα) for heretical teaching about the Person of Christ. In the following year Imperial pressure secured the reversal of this decision at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus, and the maltreatment that Flavian suffered here is said to have caused his death a few days later. His remains were subsequently brought solemnly to Constantinople by the Empress *Pulcheria. Feast day in the E., 16 Feb.; in the W., 18 Feb.

Flavian's libellus appellationis, written immediately after the Latrocinium and directed to Pope *Leo, was found in 1874 by G. Amelli, the librarian of the *Ambrosiana, in the Novara Capitular MS. 30 and first published by Amelli in S. Leone Magno e l'Oriente (1882). It was reissued by T. *Mommsen, N.A., xi (1886), pp. 362–4. A subsequent edition, with an important introduction, was published by T. A. *Lacey, Appellatio Flaviani. The Letters of Appeal from the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 449, addressed by Flavian and Eusebius to St. Leo of Rome (Church Historical Society, lxx; 1903). P. *Batiffol, Le Siège apostolique (1924), pp. 513–19. H. Chadwick, 'The Exile and Death of Flavian of Constantinople: A Prologue to the Council of Chalcedon' in J.T.S., N.S., vi (1955), pp. 17–34.

FLÉCHIER, ESPRIT (1632–1710), French preacher. After studying at Tarascon, he was ordained and went to *Paris (1660), where he gained royal favour for a poem on Louis XIV and was appointed tutor to the Dauphin. His greatly admired sermons soon made him famous. He was at his best in his funeral panegyrics (outstanding being that on Turenne), but his oratory, despite its formal elegance, was artificial and pretentious. In 1673 he was elected a member of the French Academy. In 1685 he became Bp. of Lavaur and in 1687 of Nîmes, where his conciliatory and tolerant disposition did much to quiet the passions aroused by the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) and also to win over many *Huguenots to Catholicism.

Œuvres complètes, ed. by G. M. Ducreux (10 vols., Nîmes, 1782) and by J. P. *Migne (2 vols., Paris, 1856). A. E. Delacroix, Histoire de Fléchier d'après les documents originaux (1865). Further lives by L. Ménard (Nîmes, 1872) and G. [F. X. M.] Grente (Paris, 1934). A[ntonin] Fabre, La Jeunesse de Fléchier (2 vols., 1882); id., De la correspondance de Fléchier avec Mme Deshoulières (1872); id., Fléchier, orateur (1872). Notice by C. A. Sainte-Beuve prefixed to M. Chéruel (ed.), Les Mémoires de Fléchier sur les Grands-Jours d'Auvergne (1856), pp. iii–xxxix. G. Grente in Dictionnaire des Lettres Françaises. Le Dix-Septième Siècle (1954), pp. 427–32.

FLEMING, RICHARD (d. 1431), Bp. of *Lincoln and founder of Lincoln College, Oxford. Educated at University College, Oxford, he became a Prebendary of *York in 1406. In 1407 he was Junior Proctor at Oxford. At this period he had *Wycliffite sympathies, which brought him into conflict with T. *Arundel, Abp. of *Canterbury, then attempting to eradicate *Lollard doctrine from the university. In 1408 he became rector of Boston, Lincs., and in 1420 Bp. of Lincoln. In 1423 Fleming represented the English nation at the Councils of Pavia and Siena, where he made an eloquent speech before *Martin V championing the Papacy. In 1424 Martin V promoted him to the see of York, but the Chapter having already elected the Bp. of *Worcester, the King's ministers refused to confirm the appointment. In 1427 Fleming founded Lincoln College, Oxford, primarily as a school for opponents of Wycliffite teaching (which he himself had long since forsworn).

Preface to Statutes of Lincoln College in Statutes of the Colleges of Oxford, i (1853), pp. 7–8. For his supposed Lollard sympathies, Snappe's Formulary and Other Records, ed. by H. E. Salter (Oxford Historical Society, lxxx; 1924), pp. 95–100 and 121–8. R. L. Poole in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 282–4. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 697–9, s.v. 'Flemyng, Richard'.

FLETCHER, JOHN WILLIAM (1729–85), Vicar of Madeley in Salop from 1760. (His original name was de la Fléchère). A Swiss by birth and education, he settled in England c. 1750 and shortly afterwards joined the *Methodist Movement in the C of E. In 1757 he was ordained deacon and priest on two successive Sundays, and in 1760 he accepted the living of Madeley as a benefice providing more work and less income than another which he had been offered and declined. From 1768 to 1771 he also exercised, so far as his parochial duties allowed, a general supervision over Lady *Huntingdon's college at Trevecca for the training of ministers. Although he took no prominent part in leading or organizing the Methodist Movement, his outstanding sanctity and the devotedness of his work among the Shropshire colliers issued from its influence. His theological works included Checks to Antinomianism (1771), which was occasioned by the disputes between the '*Arminians' and the '*Calvinists'. He also controverted the *Unitarian doctrines of J. *Priestley.

Collected works, 9 vols., London, 1800–4; 7 vols., ib., 1826; and 2 vols., Shebbear, Devon–London, 1835. L. Tyerman, Wesley's Designated Successor (1882). Other lives by J. *Wesley (1786), R. Cox (1822), F. W. Macdonald (1885), and J. Marrat (1902), all London. G. Lawton, Shropshire Saint. A Study in the Ministry and Spirituality of Fletcher of Madeley (1960). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 312–14.

FLEURY (Lat. Floriacum). The place owed its celebrity to the (real or supposed) transference hither in the 7th cent. of the remains of Sts. *Benedict and *Scholastica from *Monte Cassino after the Lombards had ravaged Italy, and the large monastery that was erected to house them. It is also known as Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire. Brought under the control of *Cluny c. 930, it became an important centre of study. Its most famous monk was *Abbo. Fleury played a considerable part in the monastic revival in England in the 10th cent. In 1790 the abbey was suppressed and most of the buildings demolished, the only part to survive being the magnificent Romanesque basilica, which became the parish church. In 1944 monks from the abbey of Pierre-qui-Vire returned to Fleury, and a new abbey has been built.

M. Prou–A. Vidier (edd.), Recueil des chartes de l'Abbaye de Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire [up to 1245] (Documents publiés par la Société historique et archéologique du Gâtinais, v–vi; 1900–37). G. Chenesseau, L'Abbaye de Fleury à Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire. Son histoire, ses institutions, ses édifices (Paris, 1931). A. Vidier, L'Historiographie à Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire et les miracles de saint Benoît (posthumously publd., 1965). E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, vi (Oxford, 1953), pp. xviii–xxi. L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2610–13, s.v. 'St-Benoît-sur-Loire', with extensive bibl. J. Laporte, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 441–76, s.v.

FLEURY, CLAUDE (1640–1723), ecclesiastical historian. Born at *Paris, he was educated by the *Jesuits at the Collège de Clermont and in 1658 called to the bar. Here his talents brought him into contact with many of the leading personalities of France, among them J. B. *Bossuet and L. *Bourdaloue, under whose influence he was led to offer himself for ordination (c. 1672). In 1672 he was appointed by Louis XIV tutor to the young Princes de Conti; in 1684 Abbot of the *Cistercian monastery of Loc-Dieu in Brittany; in 1689 tutor to the grandsons of Louis XIV; and in 1696 he was elected to the Academy. Having come under the patronage of Fénelon, he found his position endangered at court in the *Quietistic controversy over the Maximes des saints, but he was generously saved by Bossuet. In 1706 he became Prior of Notre-Dame-d'Argenteuil, near Paris. After Louis XIV's death (1715), he was chosen confessor to the young Louis XV, as one who was 'neither *Jansenist nor *Molinist nor *Ultramontane, but Catholic'.

Fleury is known to posterity chiefly through his eloquent Histoire ecclésiastique (20 vols., 1691–1720), the first large-scale history of the Church, which is deservedly held in repute for its learning and judgement. Before his death Fleury had carried it down to 1414; later it was continued to 1778 by J. C. Fabre and others. Among his other writings were Histoire du droit français (1674) and Institution au droit ecclésiastique (anon., 1677; new ed., with Fleury's name, 1687), Les Mœurs des Israélites (1681), Les Mœurs des chrétiens (1682), and Grand Catéchisme historique (1683). Several of these, incl. the Histoire ecclésiastique, were put on the *Index for their *Gallican views. In 1687 he issued a Lat. tr. of Bossuet's famous Exposition de la foi catholique.

Several collections of Fleury's sermons and treatises were issued posthumously, incl. Discours (2 vols., Paris, 1752) and Opuscules (5 vols., Nîmes, 1780). J. *Wesley incorporated extracts from Fleury's Les Mœurs des chrétiens (Brussels, 1682) with the title The Manners of the Antient Christians in his 'Christian Library' (ed. 3, 1767). Eng. tr. of portions of the Histoire ecclésiastique, by J. H. *Newman (3 vols., 1842–1844). F. Gaquère, La Vie et les œuvres de Claude Fleury, 1640–1723 (Paris, 1925). A. Dodin in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 412–19, s.v.; D. Gorce in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 479–89, s.v. 'Fleury (3) Claude'.

FLIGHT INTO EGYPT, The. The journey from *Bethlehem into Egypt of St. *Joseph, accompanied by the BVM and the infant Jesus, after the visit of the *Magi, recorded in Mt. 2. 13 f. It was undertaken in obedience to an angelic message to enable the Child to escape the hostility of *Herod the Great. After the death of Herod, the Holy Family returned to *Nazareth (Mt. 2. 23).

FLOOD, The. The 'flood of waters' which, acc. to Gen. 6. 5–9. 17, God brought upon the earth 'to destroy all flesh' (Gen. 6. 17) because of the wickedness of the whole human race, only *Noah and his family, with specimens of each species of animal life, being preserved in the *Ark to repeople the earth. In the Biblical text there appears to be a conflation of two accounts, which critics have assigned to the two Pentateuchal sources 'J' and 'P'. Parallel flood stories are found in Mesopotamian sources, e.g. in the Epic of *Gilgamesh, discovered in the library of Assurbanipal (c. 670–630 B.C.) at Nineveh, and in a history of Babylon by Berossus, a Babylonian who wrote c. 300 B.C. Excavations carried out independently at Ur and Kish in 1929 revealed evidence of extensive flooding in both places at somewhat differing dates; they indicate at least that the Tigris–Euphrates area was subject to widespread inundations, which would appear to form the historical basis of the flood tradition.

H. Peake, The Flood. New Light on an old Story (1930). J. Skinner, 'Genesis' (I.C.C.; 1910), pp. 174–81 ('The Deluge Tradition'). J. P. Lewis, A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish and Christian Literature (Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 42–120, 156–80. J. G. Frazer, Folk-lore in the Old Testament (1918), i, ch. 4 (pp. 104–361). Large collection of Flood stories in R. Andree, Die Flutsagen (1891). F. H. Woods in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 545–55, s.v. 'Deluge'. See also works cited under Ark.

FLORENCE, Council of (1438–45). It is counted by the RC Church as either the 16th or the 17th Oecumenical Council, the numbering depending on the refusal or admission of œcumenicity to the Council of *Basle (1431, q.v.). The Council was held successively in three cities, at Ferrara (1438–1439), at Florence (1439–43), and at Rome (1443–1445). Its chief object was reunion with the Greek Church, which sought support from the W. against the Turks, who were nearing *Constantinople. After the majority of the members assembled at Basle had refused to move to a place more convenient to the Greeks, Pope *Eugenius IV transferred the Council to Ferrara, where it opened on 8 Jan. 1438. Among its most distinguished members were the Greek Emperor, John VIII Palaeologus, and Joseph, Patr. of Constantinople. Its leading theologians included, on the Latin side, Card. J. *Cesarini and the *Dominican, John of Montenero; on the Greek the unionist *Bessarion, Abp. of *Nicaea and later cardinal, and the anti-unionist Mark, Metropolitan of *Ephesus. During the Council delaying tactics of the anti-unionist party led to the formation of commissions, consisting of Latins and Greeks in equal numbers, who were to discuss the principal controversial points. These were the *Double Procession of the Holy Ghost, the use of unleavened *bread for the *Eucharist, the doctrine of *Purgatory and the primacy of the Pope. The chief obstacle to an agreement was the *Filioque clause, the Greeks objecting that any addition to the Creeds, however doctrinally correct, was unlawful. When the costs of the Council became too heavy for the Pope, the Florentines offered to bear them, and on 26 Feb. 1439 the Council was consequently transferred to Florence. Having dropped the discussions on the Filioque, the commissions devoted themselves to discussing the question whether the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father alone, acc. to the Greeks, or from the Father and the Son, acc. to the Latins. During the discussions Bessarion pronounced the famous discourse, 'Oratio Dogmatica', in which he endeavoured to prove that the Double Procession is taught more or less explicitly by both Greek and Latin Fathers, and that the Greek Church has never denied that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son. This was followed by more discussions, but no agreement. Various expedients were then tried. The Latins gave the Greeks a precisely-worded statement of doctrine, which the Greeks modified, and then would not clarify the resulting ambiguities. In the prevailing atmosphere of defeat, as a last resort, on 27 May the Pope addressed the Greeks. Thereupon the unionists among the Greeks urged with renewed energy what to all Greeks was axiomatic, that saints cannot err in faith, so that, though Latin saints and Greek saints expressed their faith differently, substantially they were in agreement. The argument prevailed. By 8 June the Greeks had accepted the Latin statement of doctrine. On 10 June Patriarch Joseph died. Statements on the Eucharist and on papal primacy, which caused some difficulty, on Purgatory and on the legitimacy of the Filioque clause were presented to the Greeks and eventually accepted. These were incorporated into the Decree of Union, beginning with the words '*Laetentur Coeli', which was eventually signed on 5 July 1439 and solemnly promulgated the following day. Mark of Ephesus was the only bishop to refuse his signature.

After the departure of the Greeks the Council continued in session to deal with the schismatic Council of Basle and the union with other E. Churches. All members of the Council of Basle were declared heretics and excommunicated, and the superiority of the Pope over the Councils was affirmed in the famous bull 'Etsi non dubitemus' of 20 Apr. 1441. Union was established with the *Armenians in 1439 and with the *Copts of Egypt in 1442. In 1443 the Council was transferred to Rome. Little is known of its further activities, except that unions were effected with several other E. Churches, such as the *Syrians (1444) and certain *Chaldeans and *Maronites of Cyprus. There is no record of any official closing of the Council.

The union of the Greeks was challenged by popular sentiment in Constantinople, and many of the older bishops recanted. Mark of Ephesus throughout remained against the union, though Bessarion and other of the younger prelates continued in favour. Constantinople was captured by the Turks in 1453 and the union ceased. That with Armenia lasted until the fall of Caffa to the Turks in 1475. Exact information about the other unions is lacking.

The importance of the Council of Florence lies in its definition of doctrine and in the principle it established for Church union—unity of faith with diversity of rite—a principle followed in several subsequent unions and still valid.

Hardouin, ix, cols. 1–1080; Mansi, xxxi (1798), cols. 459–1120, and in suppl. to vol. xxxi (1801), cols. 1121–1998. Crit. ed. of relevant material in Concilium Florentinum. Documenta et Scriptores. Editum consilio et impensis Pontificii Instituti Orientalium Studiorum (Rome, 1940 ff., esp. vol. v, the Acta Graeca, ed. with Lat. tr. by J. Gill, S.J. (1953), and vol. vi, the Acta Latina, ed. G. Hofmann, S.J. (1955)). L. Petit (ed.), 'Documents relatifs au concile de Florence. I, La Question du purgatoire à Ferrare' in P.O., xv (1927), pp. 1–169 (fasc. i); II, 'Œuvres anticonciliaires de Marc d'Éphèse', ib., xvii (1933), pp. 309–524 (fasc. ii); docc. in the first of these are mostly also ed. L. Petit and G. Hofmann in Concilium Florentinum, viii, fasc. 2; 1969. Contemporary account by a Greek, hostile to the Union, Sylvester Syropulus, ed., with Fr. tr., V. Laurent (ib., ix; 1971). E. Cecconi, Studi storici sul concilio di Firenze (Naples, 1869, with docc.). G. Hofmann, S.J., Papato, conciliarismo, patriarcato, 1438–1439. Teologi e deliberazioni del Concilio di Firenze (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae edita a Facultate Historiae Ecclesiasticae in Pontificia Universitate Gregoriana, ii (pt. 1; collectionis totius N.2; 1940)). J. Gill, S.J., The Council of Florence (Cambridge, 1959); id., Personalities of the Council of Florence (Oxford, 1964). J. Décarreaux, Les Grecs au Concile de l'Union, Ferrare–Florence 1438–1439 [1970]. Hefele–Leclercq, vii (pt. 2; 1916), pp. 951–1106. G. Hofmann, S.J., in E.C., v (1951), cols. 1417–23, s.v. 'Firenze, II'; P. De Vooght, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 561–8, s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to Basle, Council of and Eugenius IV.

FLORENTIUS RADEWYNS (1350–1400). One of the earliest members of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He belonged to the group which had come under the influence of G. *Groote, and on Groote's death in 1384 became the head of the community which he had founded at Deventer in Holland. His house here was the first settled establishment of the Brethren, who seem previously not to have lived under a common roof. Under his influence the monastery at *Windesheim was founded in 1387.

The principal authority is the life by *Thomas à Kempis, pr. among the latter's works (Nuremberg, 1494, fol. xxxviii (reverse) – fol. xliv (reverse), and in all later edd.); Eng. tr. by J. P. Arthur, The Founders of the New Devotion (1905), pp. 81–162. S. Kettlewell, Thomas à Kempis and the Brothers of the Common Life, i (1882), pp. 209–62; A. Hyma, The 'Devotio Moderna' or Christian Renaissance (Grand Rapids, Michigan [1925]), esp. pp. 49–58, virtually repr. in his The Brethren of the Common Life (ib., 1950), pp. 55–63. L. Schultze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 111–14, s.v.; M. van Workum in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 427–34, s.v. 'Florent (4) Radewijns'. See also other works cited under Brethren of the Common Life; Devotio Moderna; Groote, Gerard; and Windesheim.

FLORILEGIA (Lat. flos, 'a flower', and lego, 'I gather'). Collections of selected passages from the writings of previous authors. Special interest attaches to the Greek *Patristic florilegia. Besides those composed of excerpts from commentaries on the Bible and known as *catenae, a considerable number of dogmatic florilegia compiled from the 5th cent. onwards have survived. Such collections of passages (χρήσεις) were often drawn up to establish the orthodoxy or heterodoxy of individual theologians, and many became incorporated into the Acta of the ecclesiastical councils. For the historian they are often of much value, esp. when they preserve passages from works of which the bulk has been lost. A Patristic florilegium of a non-dogmatic kind is the collection of extracts made by *Gregory of Nyssa and *Basil of Caesarea from the writings of *Origen and known as the *'Philocalia'.

Latin florilegia were no less common and are of various types. Collections of excerpts from the works of St. *Augustine and St. *Gregory the Great are especially numerous. An early example is that of *Eugippius. Collections of dogmatic extracts were already made by *Prosper of Aquitaine (d. c. 463). The 'Liber de Sententiis' of *Isidore of Seville comprises dogmatic (bk. i) and moral and ascetic extracts (bks. ii and iii). One of the most widespread ascetic florilegia is that of the *Defensor of Ligugé. Collections of dogmatic excerpts were the forerunners of the systematic collections of 'Sententiae' of *Anselm of Laon and his school.

Among the more important dogmatic florilegia are the 'Doctrina Patrum de Incarnatione Verbi' (preserved in MSS. Vat. gr. 2200, Bodl. Misc. 184, etc.; ed. F. Diekamp, Münster i.W., 1907) and the 'Anti-Chalcedonian Collection in Vat. gr. 1431' (ed. E. *Schwartz, Abh. (Bayr.), xxxii, Hft. 6, 1927; with valuable discussion of florilegia generally). M. Richard, 'Notes sur les Florilèges dogmatiques du Ve et du VIe siècle' in Actes du VIe Congrès International d'Études Byzantines, i (1950), pp. 307–18; id., 'Les Florilèges diphysites du Ve et du VIe siècle' in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg [1951]), pp. 721–48. Krumbacher, pp. 206–18. M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, i (1909), pp. 114–16 and 183–8; J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et Moyen-Age, ii (1947), pp. 289–98. H. M. Rochais–P. Delhaye–M. Richard in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 435–512, s.v. 'Florilèges spirituels'; H. M. Rochais in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 979 f., s.v.

FLOROVSKY, GEORGE (1893–1979), Russian theologian. The son of a Russian priest, he graduated in arts at Odessa University (1916), subsequently lecturing there in philosophy (1919–1920). Leaving Russia in 1920, he went first to Sofia and then to Prague, where he was made lecturer in the faculty of law (1922–6). In 1926 he became Professor of Patristics at the Orthodox Theological Institute of St. Sergius in Paris, and later Professor of Dogmatics. He was ordained priest in 1932. Moving to the U.S.A. in 1948, he became successively Professor and Dean at St. Vladimir's Russian Orthodox Seminary, New York (1948–55), Professor of Eastern Church History at Harvard Divinity School (1956–64), and Visiting Professor at Princeton University (from 1964). He wrote extensively on the Greek Fathers (mainly in Russian), urging the necessity for a 'neo-Patristic synthesis', and he published an elaborate study of Russian religious thought, The Ways of Russian Theology (in Russian, Paris, 1937; Eng. tr. in Collected Works, v–vi). He played a leading part in the *Ecumenical Movement, from 1937 serving regularly as a delegate at assemblies of the *Faith and Order movement and of the *World Council of Churches.

Collected Works [in Eng.], ed. R. S. Haugh (Belmont, Mass., 1972 ff.). G. H. Williams, 'Georges Vasilievich Florovsky: his American career (1948–1965)', in The Greek Orthodox Theological Review, xi (1965), pp. 7–107; T. E. Bird, 'Russian Scholar and Theologian' in The American Benedictine Review, xvi (1965), pp. 444–54 (with bibl. of his articles in English). Y. N. Lelouvier, Perspectives russes sur l'Église. Un théologien contemporain, Georges Florovsky (1968).

FLORUS (c. 790 – c. 860), Deacon of Lyons. Little is known of his life, but he was prob. born in the region of Lyons. He served successive Abps. of Lyons, *Agobard, Amolo, and Remigius, and was a canon of the cathedral church. His works on canon law, liturgy and theology, which he very rarely signed, were written in their service. When *Amalarius was made administrator of the see of Lyons and tried to make changes in the liturgy, Florus attacked him in a series of works, one of which, the 'Expositio Missae', continued to be read. He took part in the controversy on predestination, defending *Gottschalk and attacking Johannes Scotus *Erigena. He was deeply versed in patristic writings, and the manuscripts at Lyons contain many traces of his editorial work. His compilation of an Exposition on the Pauline Epistles, skilfully put together from the works of St. *Augustine, circulated widely under the name of *Bede.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL, cxix. 11–424. The Exposition on the Pauline Epistles is pr. among the works of Bede; the ed. in Migne is only an analysis. Crit. ed. of the 'Expositio Missae' by P. Duc, Étude sur l'Expositio Missae de Florus de Lyon (Belley, 1937). Three letters ed. E. Duemmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, v (1899), pp. 206–10, 267–74, and 340–3. Crit. ed. of his verse by id. in M.G.H., Poetae, ii (1884), pp. 509–66, and by K. Strecker, ib., iv (1923), p. 930 f. C. Charlier, O.S.B., 'Les Manuscrits personnels de Florus de Lyon et son activité littéraire' in Mélanges E. Podechard (Lyons, 1945), pp. 71–84; id., 'La Compilation augustinienne de Florus sur l'Apôtre. Sources et authenticité' in R. Bén., lvii (1947), pp. 132–67. A. Cabaniss, 'Florus of Lyons' in Classica et Mediaevalia, xix (1958), pp. 212–32. C. Charlier in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 514–26, s.v.; M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 648–84, s.v. 'Florus (6) de Lyon'.

FLUE, NIKOLAUS VON. See Nicholas of Flue.

FOGAZZARO, ANTONIO (1842–1911), Italian RC writer, poet, and philosopher. In 1906 the Vatican put his most famous novel, Il Santo (1905), on the *Index. All his writings are marked by a liberalism characteristic of his age, but his attachment to Catholicism was as sincere as his liberalism. He also strove to reconcile the theory of evolution with Church teaching. His early poetical romance, Miranda, has Wordsworthian simplicity and pathos.

Tutte le opere, ed. P. Nardi (14 vols., Milan, 1931–41); Lettere scelte, ed. T. Gallarati-Scotti (Milan, etc., 1940). Lives by S. Rumor (Milan, 1912) and T. Gallarati-Scotti (ib., 1920; Eng. tr., 1922). L. Portier, Antonio Fogazzaro (Paris thesis, 1937, with discussion of earlier works on Fogazzaro, p. ix f.; Fr. tr. of his poetry as suppl. vol., 1937). F. Montanari in E.C., v (1950), cols. 1459–62.

FOLDED CHASUBLE. A form of the *chasuble pinned up in front (planeta plicata) formerly worn in the W. Church by the *deacon and *subdeacon at *High Mass in penitential seasons. Its use at a normal High Mass was dropped in 1960, though it survived at *Ordinations until 1968. The so-called *broad stole worn by the deacon at the reading of the Gospel is in origin also a 'folded chasuble', but folded in another way.

Braun, L.G., pp. 166–9 ('Anlegungsweise der Kasel bei den Diakonen, Subdiakonen und Akolythen. Die Planeta Plicata').

FOLIOT, GILBERT (d. 1187), Bp. of London. Of a Norman family, he made his profession at *Cluny, where he rose to be Prior. Respect for his learning, eloquence, and austerity brought him reward and he became Prior of Abbeville, Abbot of *Gloucester (1139), and Bp. of *Hereford (1148). Gradually he came to play a leading part in ecclesiastical and political affairs. He supported Matilda, acted as confidential adviser to *Theobald, Abp. of *Canterbury, and in 1162 opposed the election of *Becket to the see of Canterbury as one who had persecuted the Church and destroyed her goods. When translated to the see of London in 1163, he objected to taking the customary vow of canonical obedience to Canterbury on the ground that he had already done so on becoming Bp. of Hereford. He then made the claim that London by early history and political eminence was a metropolitical city independent of Canterbury. He supported the King in his struggle with the primate, notably at Clarendon and Northampton, and acted as one of Henry's envoys to *Alexander III. On Palm Sunday 1169 Becket, then at *Clairvaux, formally excommunicated him; but on Foliot's appeal to Rome, the Pope empowered the Bp. of *Exeter (Bartholomew) and the Abp. of Rouen to absolve him (Easter 1170). On 14 June, in defiance of the rights of Canterbury, he joined with the Abp. of *York in crowning Henry's son and was forthwith excommunicated again by Becket. He crossed to Normandy to seek Henry's protection on the same day that Becket returned to England (1 Dec. 1170). Though in no way responsible, he was popularly associated with Becket's murder, and not absolved until May 1172. He continued to take a prominent part in ecclesiastical affairs until his death, e.g. in connexion with the elections of Richard of Dover and *Baldwin, He also wrote commentaries on the Lord's Prayer and the Song of Songs. Many of his letters have survived.

The Letters and Charters of Gilbert Foliot, Abbot of Gloucester (1139–48), Bishop of Hereford (1148–63) and London (1163–87). An edition projected by Z. N. Brooke, completed by [S.] A. Morey, O.S.B.–C. N. L. Brooke (Cambridge, 1967); earlier ed. of letters repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxc, 739–1068, index, 1500–6. 'Expositio in Cantica Canticorum', ed. by P. Young (London, 1638), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, ccii, 1147–1304. [S.] A. Morey, O.S.B.–C. N. L. Brooke, Gilbert Foliot and his Letters (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, New Series, xi; 1965). [M.] D. Knowles, The Episcopal Colleagues of Archbishop Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures for 1949, 1951), esp. pp. 37–49. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 358–60.

FOLKESTONE RITUAL CASE. See Ridsdale Judgement.

FONT (Lat. fons, 'spring of water'). Receptacle for baptismal water, normally made of stone, more rarely of metal. In early times, when adult baptism by immersion was the rule, it was a large basin below ground-level in which the neophyte stood while the water was poured over him. When infant baptism came to be the norm, the font, still rather large, was raised slightly above the ground so that the child could conveniently be immersed by the minister. Later still, when *affusion became the prevalent form of baptism, fonts became smaller and higher, being frequently richly ornamented, and gradually took on their present cup shape. They also came to be covered by a lid that was sometimes locked to preserve the purity of the baptismal water and to guard it from profanation. In some churches the font stands either in a separate chapel (*baptistery) or is railed off in a locked enclosure. The 1969 (RC) Ordo Baptismi lays down that the font may be in any convenient part of the church to allow the congregation to assemble for baptisms.

F. Simpson, A Series of Ancient Baptismal Fonts Chronologically Arranged (1828); [T. Combe,] Illustrations of Baptismal Fonts (1844), with an introduction by F. A. Paley. F. Bond, Fonts and Font Covers (1908), incl. bibl. C. J. Wall, Porches and Fonts (1912), pp. 175–338. E. Tyrrell-Green, Baptismal Fonts (1928). J. G. Davies, The Architectural Setting of Baptism (1962). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1, 1939), cols. 1080–1119, s.v. 'Piscine'.

FONTEVRAULT, Order of. A 'double order' of monks and nuns, living under the rule of one abbess, though in separate convents. In 1100 Bl. Robert d'Arbrissel (d. 1117) founded an abbey at Fontevrault, SE. of Saumur in France, on the basis of the *Benedictine Rule, with certain more rigorous additions, and in c. 1115 gave it a constitution with Petronilla as its first abbess. Dependent houses were soon established in many parts of France, and a few in England and Spain. In the 13th cent. the Order was very poor, but considerably prospered in the 14th, and after a period of decadence in the 15th was reformed by successive abbesses between 1475 and 1502. It disappeared in the Revolution of 1789, but was revived as an order for women only by Mme Rose in 1806, certain modifications being then made to the original Rule.

[H. Nicquet, S.J.] Histoire de l'ordre de Fontevrault (Angers, 1586; Paris, 1642). Édouard [pseudonym of A. Biron], Fontevrault et ses monuments ou histoire de cette royale abbaye depuis sa fondation jusqu'à sa suppression, 1100–1793 (2 vols., 1873–4); L. F. Bossebœuf, Fontevrault. Son histoire et ses monuments (Tours, [1890]). Histoire de l'ordre de Fontevrault, 1100–1908, by the Religious of Sainte-Marie-de-Fontevrault-de-Boulaur now located in Vera in Navarre (3 vols., Auch, 1911–15). L. A. Picard, L'Ordre de Fontevrault de 1115 à 1207 (Saumur [1933]). R. Niderst, Robert d'Arbrissel et les origines de l'ordre de Fontevrault (Rodez, 1952). E. *Bishop, 'Bishop Giffard and the Reform of Fontevrault' in Downside Review, v (1886), pp. 51–7. Heimbucher, i, pp. 327–9. J. Daoust in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 961–71, s.v., with extensive bibl.

FOOLS, Feast of. A mock religious festival which was widely celebrated in the Middle Ages on or about 1 Jan., esp. in France. It may have grown out of a 'festival of the *subdeacons', sometimes kept on 1 Jan. The feast was an occasion of much buffoonery and extravagance, often approaching the blasphemous, and several ecclesiastical reformers (e.g. R. *Grossteste, Bp. of Lincoln) made attempts to suppress it. In 1435 very severe penalties were imposed by the Council of *Basle for its observance, and it seems to have finally disappeared in the middle of the 16th cent. See also Misrule, Lord of; Boy Bishop; Asses, Feast of.

E. K. Chambers, The Medieval Stage (1903), i, pp. 274–335; G. M. Dreves, S.J., 'Zur Geschichte der Fête des Fous' in Stimmen aus Maria Laach, xlvii (1894), pp. 571–87. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., vi (1909), p. 132 f., s.v.

FOOT-PACE. See Predella.

FOOT-WASHING. See Pedilavium.

FORBES, ALEXANDER PENROSE (1817–1875), Bp. of Brechin, the 'Scottish Pusey'. Originally in the East India Company, he entered Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1840. Here he came under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, gave up his intention of returning to India and decided to be ordained. On the nomination of E. B. *Pusey, he became Vicar of St. Saviour's, Leeds, in 1847, but a few months later he was elected Bp. of Brechin, where he remained for the rest of his life and laboured hard to further Tractarian principles in Scotland. His defence of the doctrine of the Real Presence in his primary charge, delivered on 5 Aug. 1857, led to his censure in 1860 by the college of bishops. Later he became keenly interested in the cause of the *Old Catholics. His writings, mainly practical, but with a sound scholarly (esp. *Patristic) basis, included A Commentary on the Seven Penitential Psalms (1847), *A Short Explanation of the Nicene Creed (1852; ed. 2, much enlarged, 1866), a translation of Part I of Claude Arvisenet's Memoriale Vitae Sacerdotalis (1853), and An Explanation of the Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1867–8; written at Pusey's suggestion). He also published, partly in conjunction with his brother (see foll. entry), several liturgical and hagiographical texts and contributed extensively to reviews.

D. J. Mackey, Bishop Forbes: A Memoir (1888); W. Perry, A. P. Forbes (1939). A. Vian in D.N.B., xix (1889), p. 378 f.

FORBES, GEORGE HAY (1821–75), *Patristic scholar. Brother of the preceding, he was hampered throughout his life by severe paralysis of the legs. At an early age he developed keen liturgical interests, becoming a strong advocate of the Scottish Liturgy against the party in the Episcopalian Church which favoured the English BCP. His High Church beliefs, in which he was permanently confirmed by the study of J. *Johnson's Unbloody Sacrifice, brought him into relation with the *Tractarians. In 1848, despite his infirmity, he was ordained deacon by Patrick Torry, Bp. of St. Andrews (1844–52), and in the same year started an Episcopal mission at Burntisland, where he worked as a model parish priest, building a church and setting up his own printing press. In 1849 he was ordained priest. In 1850 he issued a new Prayer Book (dated 1849) which, though authorized by Torry for use in his diocese, met with great opposition, notably from Charles Wordsworth, Warden of Glenalmond, and later Torry's successor at St. Andrews. Among the many works he edited, some of them unfinished and mostly from his own press, were W. *Forbes, Considerationes Modestae (2 vols., 1850–6); certain works of St. *Gregory of Nyssa (1855–61); Ancient Liturgies of the Gallican Church (with J. M. *Neale, 2 parts, 1855–7); the *Arbuthnott Missal (with A. P. *Forbes, 1864); the Missale Drummondiense (posthumous, 1882). The edition of the *Sarum Missal, by F. H. Dickinson, publd. at Burntisland in 1861–1883, also embodied much of his work. He also issued some periodicals from his press, notably the Panoply (1858–74). All his publications reflected his meticulous accuracy, and he was described by E. *Bishop as 'facile princeps among those who have dealt with Western Liturgy in the last century'.

W. Perry, George Hay Forbes. A Romance in Scholarship (1927).

FORBES, WILLIAM (1585–1634), first Bp. of Edinburgh. A native of Aberdeen, he was educated at Marischal College in the town, where he was for a time professor of logic. After holding various offices, he was appointed by *Charles I Bp. of Edinburgh in 1634, but died two months later. He is remembered esp. for his erudite Considerationes modestae et pacificae controversiarum de Justificatione, Purgatorio, Invocatione Sanctorum, Christo Mediatore et Eucharistia, published posthumously in 1658. It shows Forbes as a strong High Churchman, keen on reconciliation with Rome and zealous for episcopacy. In his treatment of the *Eucharist he defended a doctrine of the Real Presence; and though he criticized the doctrine of *Transubstantiation, he denied that it was heretical. He also held that the Eucharist was a propitiatory sacrifice.

The Considerationes Modestae were reissued, with an Eng. trans., by G. H. *Forbes (L.A.C.T., 2 vols., 1850–6).

FORGED DECRETALS. See False Decretals.

FORM (Gk. μορφή). The concept of form played an important part in Greek philosophy. In *Aristotle it was the unchanging element in an object, considered apart from the changing manifestations of the things of sense-experience. The notion of form was transmitted to the Middle Ages by St. *Augustine. In Scholastic philosophy it was the intrinsic determining principle of things, that is, the 'nature' of things by which they are what they are.

Medieval thinkers distinguished several kinds of 'forms', the more important being: (1) 'substantial forms', which are the principles determining prime matter to a particular nature, e.g. man or horse; (2) 'accidental forms', which determine substances to some accidental mode of being, e.g. whiteness or greatness; (3) 'separated forms', which exist apart from matter, thus the angels and human souls after death. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas there can be only one substantial form for every being, whereas the Franciscan school admits several. The concept of the substantial form was used in the question of the relations between soul and body. Acc. to the Thomist teaching, approved by the Council of *Vienne in 1312 and the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1513, the rational soul is the form of the human body which gives it its human condition. The notions of form and matter were also employed in connexion with the theology of the Sacraments. The form was held to consist of the words which give significance to the sacramental use to which the matter was being put. Thus in Baptism the matter of the Sacrament was water, whereas its form consisted of the Trinitarian formula employed.

In modern philosophy the conception of form is esp. applied to the order of thought, in so far as it is held to rest on the subjective structure of the human mind. I. *Kant distinguishes between the two forms of perception (Anschauungsformen), viz. space and time, and the forms of thought (Verstandesformen) arranged in 12 'categories' of unity, plurality, totality, &c., which are valid a priori. See also foll. entry.

FORMALISM. The word is used in religious contexts in at least three senses. (1) Undue insistence on the outward observances of religion or the prescriptions of a moral code, with a corresponding neglect of the inner spirit or significance which the 'forms' were designed to safeguard.

(2) In the 17th cent. the word was used of readiness to support the religious body or party in power at the moment, i.e. for religious time-serving. This sense is now obsolete.

(3) Of theories of ethics which look for the ground of moral action in the form of the moral law alone (e.g. in the '*Categorical Imperative' of I. *Kant), without reference to any specific purposes or values which it is desired through the action to achieve or realize. An elaborate criticism of the Kantian form of this doctrine is contained in Max Scheler's Der Formalismus in der Ethik und die materiale Wertethik (1913–16).

FORMAL SIN. A sinful act which is both in itself wrong and known by the person committing it to be wrong. See also Material Sin.

FORM CRITICISM (Germ. Formgeschichte). As applied esp. to the Bible, the attempt to discover the origin and trace the history of particular passages by analysis of their structural forms. It entails three distinct processes: (1) the analysis of the material into the separate units, the form of each of which is held to have been gradually fixed in the process of transmission from mouth to mouth; (2) the recovery of the earlier history of these forms; and (3) the ascertainment of the historical setting which determined the various forms.

The method was first applied by H. *Gunkel to the narratives of Gen. (1901) and extended by H. Gressmann to the narratives about Moses (1903) and the other Books of the *Pentateuch. Gunkel's principal work, however, was on the Psalms; he concluded that Hebrew religious poetry had a long history, that its forms had taken shape in oral tradition at a comparatively early date and had become fully developed before the Exile (586 B.C.). So fruitful was the technique that it has since been widely applied to the rest of the OT.

The most notable use of Form Criticism has been upon the oral traditions behind the *Synoptic Gospels. J. *Weiss pointed the way in his article in Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart (ed. 1, 1912) and in 1919 M. *Dibelius published his analysis of the Gospels into various literary forms, assigning them to preachers, teachers, and narrators, and assuming that the earliest original form to which we can get back is the short sermon, such as we find it in Acts. A little later, R. Bultmann (1921) produced a still more detailed analysis, while M. Albertz (1921) argued that the Gospel discourses were in part modified by early 'community debates', and G. Bertram (1922) that the form of the narrative of Christ's Passion (which most Form-critics regard as much more primitive than the rest of the Gospel) was influenced by the liturgical needs and practices of the early Church. The main classes of form which emerge are: (1) Paradigms (i.e. models for preachers) or Apophthegms*. These are short stories culminating in a saying of Jesus, such as that of the Tribute Money (Mk. 12. 13–17); (2) Miracle Stories; (3) Sayings; and (4) Historical Narratives and Legends (i.e. narrative material).

In so far as the method has been applied to the remaining books of the NT, attention has tended to be concentrated on the identification of catechetical material and liturgical formulae, such as 'baptismal' phrases, and lists of virtues and vices. It is held that the isolation of these categories of material behind the NT Epistles throws light on the life of the early Church, and in particular that it may be used to explain the parallels between various Epistles without supposing their authors to have been dependent on one another.

M. Dibelius, Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (1919; ed. 3, 1959; Eng. tr., From Tradition to Gospel, 1934); R. Bultmann, Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition (1921; ed. 2, 1931; Eng. tr., 1963). B. S. Easton, The Gospel before the Gospels (New York, 1928); V. Taylor, The Formation of the Gospel Tradition (1933); R. H. *Lightfoot, History and Interpretation in the Gospels (1935); P. Carrington, The Primitive Christian Catechism. A Study in the Epistles (Cambridge, 1940); E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St. Peter (1946), pp. 363–466; H. F. Hahn, The Old Testament in Modern Research (1956), pp. 119–56; H. Riesenfeld, 'The Gospel Tradition and its Beginnings' in K. Aland, F. L. Cross and others (edd.), Studia Evangelica, i (T.U., lxiii; 1959), pp. 43–65; also publd. separately, 1957; B. Gerhardsson, Memory and Manuscript. Oral Tradition and Written Transmission in Rabbinic Judaism and Early Christianity (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsalensis, xxii; 1961). K. Koch, Was ist Formgeschichte? Neue Wege der Bibelexegese (Neukirchen, 1964; ed. 2, 1967; Eng. tr., 1969). H. Palmer, The Logic of Gospel Criticism. An account of the methods and arguments used by textual, documentary, source, and form critics of the New Testament (1968). J. Muilenburg, 'Form Criticism and Beyond' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxviii (1969), pp. 1–18. L. A. Schökel in N.C.E., v (1967), pp. 1017–23, s.v. 'Form Criticism, Biblical'.

FORMGESCHICHTE. See Form Criticism.

FORMOSUS (c. 816–96), Pope from 891. He became Cardinal-Bp. of Porto in 864, and was employed by successive Popes on several diplomatic missions. As Pope he acted constructively towards the E. Church, in 892 proposing a compromise solution to the vexed question of *Photius's ordinations. After his death the party opposed to him in Imperial politics charged him with usurpation of the Holy See, and a synod convened by Pope Stephen VI (896–7) in Jan. 897 exhumed, stripped, and mutilated his body, and declared him deposed. Succeeding Popes, however, reversed the decisions of this synod.

His Letters (8) in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxix, 837–48; crit. ed. of four letters by G. Laehr in M.G.H., Epistulae, vii (1928), pp. 366–70. Hefele–Leclercq, iv (2; 1911), pp. 708–19, with bibl. J. Duhr, 'Le Concile de Ravenne en 898. La Réhabilitation du Pape Formose' in Rech. S.R., xxii (1932), pp. 541–79; id., 'Humble Vestige d'un grand Espoir déçu. Épisode de la vie de Formose', ib., xlii (1954), pp. 361–87. Fliche–Martin, vii (1940), pp. 20–6, 113 f. F. Vernet in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 594–9, with suppl. bibl. by P. Viard in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 1093 f.; S. P. Lindemans in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 1024, s.v.

FORMULA MISSAE ET COMMUNIONIS. The reformed Communion Service, prepared for N. Hausmann, Pastor of Zwickau, which M. *Luther put out in Dec. 1523. The Latin language was kept, and as far as the Creed the traditional form of the Roman Mass was scarcely altered. The 'Mass of the *Faithful', however, underwent drastic revision. The *Offertory was made into a mere preparation of the elements, without any prayers; the Words of *Institution were included in the *Preface; then followed immediately the singing of the *Sanctus and the '*Benedictus qui venit', during which the *Elevation took place; and the rest of the *Canon was omitted altogether. During the giving of Communion, which was to be in both kinds, the *Agnus Dei was sung. The purpose of this unprecedented arrangement was to avoid any suggestion of the doctrine of the Eucharistic sacrifice. The form of service, moreover, was intended only to give general guidance to the celebrant, who was left free to modify it as he wished. It was upon this rite that Luther's 'German Mass' of 1526 and the majority of the later Lutheran liturgies were modelled.

Text ed. H. *Lietzmann in his Kleine Texte für theologische und philologische Vorlesungen und Übungen, No. 36 (Bonn, 1909). A. L. Richter, Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des sechszehnten Jahrhunderts, i (1846), pp. 1–17, incl. text, pp. 2–7. Text and further reff. in E. Sehling, Die evangelischen Kirchenordungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts, i (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 3–9. Extracts in Kidd, pp. 127–32 (No. 66). F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, i (1915), pp. xxxi f.

FORMULA OF CONCORD. See Concord, Formula of.

FORSYTH, PETER TAYLOR (1848–1921), British *Congregationalist divine. After holding pastorates in five towns, he became principal of Hackney College, Hampstead, in 1901. In early life he was a liberal in theology, largely through the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel and A. *Ritschl; but he later radically modified his attitude to liberalism through a deep sense of need of Atonement through the Cross. By the freshness of his approach to the fact of Redemption, combined with a study of all recent work on the subject, he gave a new significance to such words as 'substitution', 'penalty', and 'satisfaction'. If his many published writings did not pretend to scholarship in the narrower sense, they were full of penetrating discussions. They include The Cruciality of the Cross (1909); The Person and Place of Jesus Christ (1909), in which a form of *kenoticism is linked with a doctrine of progressive Incarnation; The Work of Christ (1910), where it is argued that, in the Atonement, God is both reconciler and reconciled; The Christian Ethic of War (1916); The Justification of God (1916); and The Soul of Prayer (1916).

Selections from his practical writings, ed. H. Escott, Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921), Director of Souls (1948), with biog. and bibl. notes, pp. xvii–xx, and 'An Appraisement', pp. 3–33. Memoir by Jessie Forsyth Andrews (daughter) prefixed to ed. 2 of his Work of Christ (1938), pp. vii–xxviii. G. O. Griffith, The Theology of P. T. Forsyth (1948); W. L. Bradley, P. T. Forsyth. The Man and his Work (1952); J. H. Rodgers, The Theology of P. T. Forsyth (1965).

FORTESCUE, ADRIAN (1874–1923), writer on liturgical and historical subjects. Educated at the Scots College at Rome (1891–4) and at Innsbruck university (1894–9), he was ordained priest in 1898. After serving several parishes and missions in England he became the RC parish priest at Letchworth in 1907, where he built a church which he made a centre of liturgical life. Apart from his pastoral work he devoted himself to writing on a variety of subjects, esp. on Liturgy and on the E. Churches. The Orthodox Eastern Church (1907), The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), and The Uniate Eastern Churches (1923) all cover a wide range of historical material. The Mass (1912) is a useful summary of modern studies in the Roman rite. The Ceremonies of the Roman Rite (1918; ed. 12, revised by J. B. O'Connell, 1962) was until recently a widely used directory of ceremonial practice.

J. G. Vance–J. W. Fortescue (distant cousin), Adrian Fortescue. A Memoir (1924), with list of main works, p. 61 f. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. ii; 1930), col. 1739, s.v. 'Liturgistes' (critical).

FORTUNATUS, VENANTIUS. See Venantius Fortunatus.

FORTY HOURS' DEVOTION (also known as the Quarant' Ore or Quarantore). A modern Catholic devotion in which the Blessed Sacrament is exposed (see Exposition) for a period of c. forty hours, and the faithful pray before it by turns throughout this time. Since 1967 the Exposition has been interrupted for the celebration of Mass unless the celebration takes place in a chapel apart from the exposition area. In its present form the devotion began in Italy in the 16th cent. The period of forty hours was probably fixed as that during which Christ's body rested in the tomb. The Codex Iuris Canonici* (can. 1275) orders the devotion to be held annually in all RC churches where the Blessed Sacrament is habitually reserved.

H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week. Chapters on Catholic Observance and Ritual (1904), pp. 114–48, incl. bibl. notes; J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Die Andacht der vierzig Stunden und das heilige Grab' in Liturgisches Jahrbuch, ii (1952), pp. 184–98.

FORTY MARTYRS OF ENGLAND AND WALES. Forty English and Welsh RCs put to death by the State between 1535 and 1680. The heightened standards of proof demanded by the RC Church for *canonization, and the consequent increase in time and money needed for gathering and presenting evidence, in 1960 led the promoters of the causes of those who had been executed between 1535 and 1680 to concentrate their attention on a select number, termed the Forty Martyrs. The faithful were encouraged to ask favours in the name of the whole group, and the Roman authorities agreed to accept proof of two resulting miracles (the number prescribed by *Canon Law) for the whole group instead of each member of it. The group is representative of all the 357 martyrs whose causes are still formally in progress, these forty being drawn from the most popular among the 199 who were beatified in 1886, 1895, or 1929; it comprises 13 secular priests (incl. Cuthbert *Mayne), 3 *Benedictines, 3 *Carthusians, 2 *Franciscans, 1 *Austin Friar, 1 *Bridgettine, 10 *Jesuits (incl. Edmund *Campion and Robert *Southwell), and 7 layfolk, of whom 3 are women (incl. Margaret *Clitherow). The Forty Martyrs were canonized by Pope *Paul VI on 25 October 1970. Feast day, 25 Oct.

A general pamphlet, Forty Martyrs, and 24 others describing the lives of all the martyrs have been publd. since 1960 by the Office of the Vice-Postulation, 114 Mount Street, London. C. Tigar, Forty Martyrs of England and Wales (Osterley, 1961). G. F. Nuttall, 'The English Martyrs 1535–1680: a statistical review' in J.E.H., xxii (1971), pp. 191–7.

FORTY MARTYRS OF SEBASTE. See Sebaste, Forty Martyrs of.

FORTY-TWO ARTICLES. The collection of Anglican doctrinal formulae which were issued in 1553. They were accompanied by a Royal Mandate, dated 19 June 1553, requiring all clergy, schoolmasters, and members of the universities on taking their degrees, to subscribe to them. They were, for the most part, drafted by T. *Cranmer, and not later than the spring of 1552. It is very doubtful, despite the assertion on their title that they had been 'agreed on by the bishops and other learned men in the Synod at London, in the year of our Lord God MDLII', whether they ever received the authority of *Convocation. Owing to the restoration of the RC faith under Mary (1553–8), they were never enforced, but they formed the basis of the later *Thirty-Nine Articles.

The text (both Latin and English) is printed in E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England (1896–7), at the end of the 'Introduction'.

FORTY-TWO LINE BIBLE. See Mazarin Bible.

FORUM (Lat., 'place of public assembly', hence 'judicial tribunal'). In *moral theology the term is applied to the exercise by the Church of her judicial power. A distinction is made between the 'internal forum', where, esp. in the Sacrament of *Penance, judgement is given on matters which relate to the spiritual good of the individual, and the 'external forum', e.g. the ecclesiastical courts, where the public good of the Church and her members is in question. The term 'forum of conscience' (forum conscientiae) is also used of the decisive authority of conscience over every individual soul.

FOSDICK, HARRY EMERSON (1878–1969), American divine. He was ordained to the *Baptist ministry in 1903. From 1904 to 1915 he was pastor at Montclair, N.J., and from 1908 also taught homiletics at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. In 1918 he was called to a *Presbyterian pulpit, but owing to *fundamentalist pressure requiring his acceptance of traditional Presbyterian standards of doctrine, he withdrew in 1925. From 1926 to 1946 he was minister of the Baptist Riverside Church, New York. In his later years his approach to dogma was more positive. He wrote many books from the evangelical liberal point of view, among them The Manhood of the Master (1913), The Meaning of Prayer (1915), The Modern Use of the Bible (1924), A Pilgrimage to Palestine (1928), Successful Christian Living (1937), Living under Tension (1941), and A Faith for Tough Times (1952).

A collection of Fosdick's Riverside Sermons, with introd. by H. P. Van Dusen (New York, 1958), was issued in honour of his 80th birthday. His autobiography, Living of These Days (New York, 1956; London, 1957).

FOSSORS (Lat. fossores or fossarii, from fodere, 'to dig'), grave-diggers. In very early Christian times they were regarded as inferior clergy, and in the latter part of the 4th and earlier part of the 5th cents. became powerful corporations, with the management of the *catacombs in their hands. They had power to sell grave-spaces, and numerous inscriptions survive in which such sales are recorded. Included in their corporations were the artists who adorned Christian tombs. Burial in the catacombs at Rome becoming impossible after the fall of the city in 410, the inscriptions of the fossores virtually cease, but a chronicle as late as the 6th cent. includes them among the clerici. They were also called lecticarii from their habit of carrying the corpse on a lectica ('bier'), as well as copiatae (probably from the Gk. κόπος, 'labour').

F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q., Supplementheft vii; 1897), pp. 57–60 and 163–5. J. Wilpert, Malereien der Katakomben Roms (1903), pp. 520–3, with reff. to plates; P. Testini, Archeologia Cristiana [1958], pp. 150–55, with reff.; id., Le catacombe e gli antichi cimiteri cristiani in Roma [Bologna, 1966], pp. 221–6. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2065–92, s.v. 'Fossoyeurs', with reff.

FOUCAULD, CHARLES DE. See De Foucauld, Charles.

'FOUNDATIONS'. A theological symposium, published in 1912. It professed to be a 'statement of Christian belief in terms of modern thought', and consisted of nine essays, with an introduction by B. H. *Streeter. The contributors, who were all Oxford men, were, in addition to Streeter, N. S. Talbot, R. Brook, A. E. J. Rawlinson, R. G. Parsons, W. *Temple, and W. H. Moberly. The book marked a definite stage in current theological debate and it exercised much immediate influence, but its optimistic liberalism and immanental standpoint proved increasingly unacceptable in succeeding decades. On its publication the book created much controversy, notably over some of Streeter's conclusions in his essay on the Historic Christ.

See the contemporary religious journals. R. A. *Knox, Absolute and Abitofhell (1921; reprinted in Essays in Satire, 1928), is a brilliant satire 'in the manner of Mr. John Dryden'. Cf. also R. A. Knox, Some Loose Stones (1913). F. A. Iremonger, William Temple (1948), ch. ix (pp. 155–66).

FOUNTAINS ABBEY. A *Cistercian abbey, three miles south-west of Ripon, which was founded from *York in 1132. The numbers of the community increased so rapidly that within twenty years they were able to found eight daughter-houses. At the Reformation the monastery was surrendered to the crown by Abbot M. Bradley, on 26 Nov. 1539. It was the richest of the Cistercian houses at the time of the *Dissolution. The extensive remains of the church and cloister buildings are without parallel; the most conspicuous structure of the ruins is the great tower, built by Abbot Huby c. 1500, a splendid example of Perpendicular work.

Main primary material in J. R. Walbran (ed.), Memorials of the Abbey of St. Mary of Fountains (Surtees Society, xlii and lxvii; 1863–78). W. H. St. John Hope, 'Fountains Abbey' in The Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, xv (1900), pp. 269–402. G. Hodges, Fountains Abbey. The Story of a Medieval Monastery (1904). L. G. D. Baker, 'The Genesis of English Cistercian Chronicles. The Foundation History of Fountains Abbey, I' in Analecta Cisterciensia, xxv (1969), pp. 14–41. J. Solloway in V.C.H. York, iii (1913), pp. 134–8. J. Lefèvre in D.H.G.E., xvii (1971), cols. 1318–27, s.v.

FOUR CAUSES, The. Acc. to *Aristotle, there are four kinds of cause, viz. 'material' (that of which a thing is made), 'formal' (what a thing is, i.e. the genus, species, &c., which distinguishes it from other things), 'efficient' (the effective or motive force which brings it into being), and 'final' (the end or purpose of its existence). St. *Thomas Aquinas, who attempted to set the Aristotelian philosophy in a Christian context, refers the second, third, and fourth causes directly to God, who is at once the origin of the separate and individual being of everything, the effective creative force, and the reason and end of the being of all that exists (Summa Th. I. 44).

FOUR CROWNED MARTYRS. See Quattro Coronati.

FOUR GALLICAN ARTICLES. See Gallican Articles.

FOURTEEN HELPERS IN NEED, The. See Auxiliary Saints, The.

FOX, GEORGE (1624–91), founder of the Society of *Friends (q.v.). He was born at Fenny Drayton in Leicestershire, where his father was a weaver, and apprenticed to a shoemaker. In 1643 he felt the call to give up all ties of family and friendship and spent the next years travelling in search of enlightenment. In 1646, after long interior struggles, he won moral victory in reliance on the *Inner Light of the living Christ. Henceforward he abandoned attendance at church and in 1647 he began to preach, teaching that truth is to be found in the inner voice of God speaking to the soul. He was frequently imprisoned, first at Nottingham in 1649, but his enthusiasm and moral earnestness soon attracted followers ('Friends of the Truth') whom he formed into a stable organization. In 1652 he made his home at Swarthmore Hall, near Ulverstone, which was the house of Thomas Fell, Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, whose widow Margaret (1614–1702) he married in 1669. In 1656 he was confined for eight months in Launceston gaol. To promote the growth of the Society of Friends he undertook frequent missionary journeys—to Ireland in 1669, to the West Indies and N. America 1671–2, and to Holland in 1677 and 1684. He was a magnetic personality of great spiritual power, selfless devotion, and patience in persecution, and of remarkable organizing abilities. He died on 13 Jan. 1691. His famous Journal was first published posthumously in 1694.

Complete ed. of Journal by Norman Penney (1911); Short Journal and Itinerary of George Fox, also by N. Penney (1925); good ed. for general readers by J. L. Nickalls (Cambridge, 1952). A collected edition of his writings (incomplete) was issued at Philadelphia, 1852. T. Hodgkin, George Fox (1896); A. N. Brayshaw, The Personality of George Fox (1919); H. J. Cadbury, George Fox's Book of Miracles (1948); H. E. Wildes, Voice of the Lord. A Biography of George Fox (Philadelphia, 1965). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 117–22.

FOXE, JOHN (1516–87), martyrologist. He went to Brasenose College, *Oxford, at an early age, and was Fellow of Magdalen from 1539 to 1545. On the accession of Queen *Mary he fled to the Continent, and stayed successively at Strassburg, Frankfurt, and Basle, where he met other Protestant refugees, notably J. *Knox and E. *Grindal. At this period he wrote a history of the Christian persecutions, first issued in Latin at Strassburg in 1554. An expanded English edition appeared in 1563 as the Acts and Monuments of matters happening in the Church, commonly known as 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs'. The book, which was approved and officially publicized by the bishops, went through four editions in Foxe's lifetime. Its chief object was to extol the heroism and endurance of the Protestant martyrs of Mary's reign. Its homely style, combined with its vivid descriptions of the sufferings imposed on the victims of Papist tyranny, gained it great popularity. As a work of history, its value is impaired by its author's credulity and bitterness. In 1559 Foxe had returned to England, and in 1560 was ordained by Grindal, Bp. of London. Though he subsequently received a prebendal stall at both *Salisbury and *Durham, he lived mainly in London. His rigidly *Calvinist views probably stood between him and higher preferment.

Earliest Life, pr. in English and Latin in vol. ii of the 1641 ed. of his Acts and Monuments (no pagination); it professes to be the work of his son. Acts and Monuments, ed. by G. Townsend (8 vols., 1843–9), contains a further life (i, pp. 1–160) and a defence of the veracity of the work (pp. 161–236). J. F. Mozley, John Foxe and his Book (1940); W. Haller, Foxe's Book of Martyrs and the Elect Nation (1963); V. N. Olsen, John Foxe and the Elizabethan Church (1973). S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 141–50.

FOXE, RICHARD (? 1448 – 1528), Bp. of *Winchester and founder of Corpus Christi College, *Oxford. He appears to have been educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. After Henry VII's accession (1485), as a reward for earlier services, he was appointed bishop successively of *Exeter (1487), *Bath and Wells (1492), *Durham (1494), and Winchester (1501), preferments intended primarily to provide him with financial means while engaged in important diplomatic work. Under *Henry VIII (1509–47) he at first retained his ascendancy, but from 1511 onwards he was gradually superseded by T. *Wolsey. Only in the later years of his life did he seriously concern himself with his episcopal duties. His sympathies for the New Learning found expression in his foundation of Corpus Christi College, at Oxford, in 1515–16.

The Register of Richard Fox while Bishop of Bath and Wells, A.D. MCCCCXCII–MCCCCXCIV, ed. by E. C. Batten (1889), incl. life (pp. 1–142); part of this Register is ed. with that of Robert Stillington by H. C. Maxwell-Lyte (Somerset Record Society, lii; 1937), pp. 174–200; The Register of Richard Fox Lord Bishop of Durham 1494–1501, ed. by M. P. Howden (Surtees Society, cxlvii; 1932). Letters of Richard Fox, 1486–1527, ed. by P. S. and H. M. Allen (1929). T. Fowler in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 150–6. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 715–9; B.R.U.C., pp. 239–41.

FRA ANGELICO, FRA BARTOLOMMEO. See Angelico (Fra), Bartolommeo (Fra).

FRACTION. The formal breaking of the bread which in all Eucharistic liturgies takes place before the Communion. It goes back to Christ's action at the original institution (Mt. 26. 26 and par.) and was a sufficiently striking element in the primitive rite to make the 'breaking of bread' (Acts 2. 42; cf. 20. 7) a regular name for the Eucharist.

The precise moment of the Fraction varies. In the Roman rite it has traditionally come immediately after the Lord's Prayer, where the rubrics required that the Host be divided into three parts and one of them dropped into the chalice (the 'commixture'). Since 1969, however, the celebrant has broken a small portion from the Host and placed it in the chalice immediately after the *Kiss of Peace; during the *Agnus Dei which follows he divides the Host into a number of portions which are used for the communion of the people. In other rites the Fraction is considerably more elaborate. Thus in the *Mozarabic Rite the Host is divided into nine portions, seven of which are then arranged in the form of a cross. A rubric in the 1662 BCP orders the breaking of the bread immediately before it is consecrated. At the time of the Fraction, the Koinonikon is sung in the Byzantine Liturgy, the Confractorium in the Ambrosian, and the Agnus Dei in the Roman rite.

'Fractio Panis' as a title is used of the early 2nd cent. fresco which perhaps depicts an early Eucharist in the Capella Greca in the *Catacomb of St. *Priscilla, uncovered by J. Wilpert in 1893.

L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 62, 79 f., 175–7, 208–12 (Eng. tr., 1903, pp. 63, 85, 184–6, 218–22). T. Schermann, 'Das "Brotbrechen" im Urchristentum' in Biblische Zeitschrift, viii (1910), pp. 33–52 and 162–83. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Rite de la fraction dans la messe romaine' in R. Bén., liii (1941), pp. 5–40; id., 'Fraction et commixtion' in La Maison Dieu, xxxv (1953), pp. 79–94; both repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (1962), pp. 287–331. A. G. Martimort, L'Église en prière (ed. 3, 1965), pp. 429–34, with further bibl. W. E. Scudamore in D.C.A., i (1875), pp. 686–9, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2103–16, s.v. 'Fractio Panis'.

On the fresco mentioned above, cf. J. Wilpert, Fractio Panis. Die älteste Darstellung des Eucharistischen Opfers in der 'Cappella Greca' (1895).

FRANCE, Christianity in. It is uncertain when Christianity first reached Roman Gaul, but in 177 there was a Christian community at Lyons, which in that year suffered persecution and the loss of its bishop, Pothinus, who had been a disciple of St. *Polycarp. This fact, in conjunction with Gallic differences from Roman usage in later times, suggests that Gallic Christianity may have come from Asia Minor. The name of *Irenaeus of Lyons (c. 130 – c. 200), apologist and theologian, was famous all over Christendom. The synod of the W. Church held at *Arles in 314 marks the importance of Christian Gaul at that time. Gaul was much troubled in turn by the heresies of *Novatianism, *Arianism, *Priscillianism, and *Semi-Pelagianism. From the end of the 4th cent. the country produced some of the most illustrious of the saints. Such were St. *Martin (d. 397), famous as a missionary and as the first organizer of Gallic monasticism, which he adapted from the Egyptian model; St. *Hilary of Poitiers (c. 315 – 367), the notable anti-Arian theologian; St. *Paulinus of Nola (353–431), a native of Bordeaux, scholar and poet; and St. *Germanus of Auxerre (c. 380 – 448), who reorganized the British Church. The christianization of the rural districts was still incomplete when the country was overrun first by the Visigoths, who were Arians, and then by the Franks, who were pagans, but whose king, *Clovis, was baptized as a Catholic Christian in 496. In the times of invasion, the bishops of Gaul were intermediaries between the old order and the new, and made the change easier for the people. The Church of Gaul was in those days individual in its usages, and looked to Milan rather than Rome for direction, and even later to Rome by way of Milan. A famous convert to Christianity in this period was *Sidonius Apollinaris (c. 430 – c. 480), the last poet and writer in the dying classical tradition.

By c. 500 Gaul had been entirely divided up into dioceses. The first missions, in the 2nd cent., had centred in Lyons, which has retained the rank of the primatial see of France. But by 250 there appear to have been seven sees in existence, while at the Synod of Arles fourteen Gallic bishops attended. From the 4th to the 7th cents. frequent councils were held in Gaul, the canons of which were embodied in the later classical collections.

Under Frankish rule the country was troubled by perpetual dynastic quarrels, and the history of the Church is obscure. Individual names stand out, like that of the historian *Gregory of Tours (d. 594), and there is evidence of missionary activity beyond the borders of the Frankish kingdoms. Liturgical developments during this period suggest gradual assimilation, though never complete, to Roman usage. In 751 the Pope gave consent to the formal assumption by the Carolingian house of the throne they had virtually occupied for generations, and *Pepin the Short (d. 768) was crowned by the Papal envoy in 752 and by the Pope himself in 754. Pepin and his son, *Charlemagne (d. 814), built up the Holy Roman Empire, and Charlemagne was crowned unexpectedly by the Pope in 800. Disliking the suggestion that his power depended on the Papacy, he crowned his son Louis himself. Charlemagne, perhaps consciously, set out to bring St. *Augustine's 'City of God' into being, and looked upon his empire as the means for doing God's Will on earth, and with this spiritual conception would allow no higher administrative authority in the Papacy. But in 843 the empire was divided into three parts, and this date may be taken as the beginning of the modern kingdom of France. It was the ecclesiastic, *Hincmar (806–82), Abp. of Reims, who was largely responsible for the settlement. By the 11th cent. there were no less than 55 virtually independent feudal provinces in the old Frankish kingdom; but among these the dukes of Francia had soon taken the lead, and, supported by the Church, Hugh Capet was in 987 enthroned to replace the ineffective Carolingians.

Under the new dynasty the influence of the Church upon the affairs of state was such as it has never attained either before or since. The German ideal of knighthood was transformed and christianized, and in France during this period is seen at its best. Several of the reforming Popes, incl. *Urban II and *Callistus II, were Frenchmen. The new religious orders, which were to reform and revive monasticism, had their beginning in the Congregation of *Cluny, founded in 910. In the 12th cent. Louis VI and VII, while avoiding the royal absolutism of Henry II of England, joined with the Church to break the power of the feudal lords, and to assure to the towns their charters of freedom. This was the age of the great writers and theologians St. *Anselm (c. 1033 – 1109), Peter *Abelard (1079–1142), and St. *Bernard of Clairvaux (1090–1153). It was largely through the great part that France played under St. Bernard's influence in the early Crusades that the Latin Westerns were always known in the Near East as Franks, and the Christians of those lands long looked to France as their protector. The alliance of Church and state reached its highest point in the reign of St. *Louis IX (reigned 1226–70). In the 13th cent. Gothic art was born in France and spread all over the W. world, while the foundation of the University of *Paris, which received its statutes in 1215, made France the centre of the rebirth of learning in the *Scholastic Movement.

Philip the Fair (reigned 1285–1314) continued the policy of reducing the power of the feudal lords, but in virtue of his theory of *Divine right of kings claimed also to override the Papal power. The election to the Papacy in 1305 of *Clement V, who was his nominee, together with the removal of the Papal court to *Avignon, within French dominion, was a significant reply to the unprecedented claims made for the Papal power by *Boniface VIII in 1301. The Hundred Years War, however, marked a rapid decline of French power, and from the Treaty of Troyes (1420) much of France was under English rule. But sudden and almost miraculous deliverance began in 1429 with the victories of St. *Joan of Arc (1412–31). In popular sentiment French nationalism again seemed almost identified with the cause of Christianity, and the custom of addressing French kings as Rex Christianissimus, which began about a hundred years earlier, became the fixed practice of the Popes from 1464. The Conciliar Movement of the 15th cent., which upheld the rights of bishops and councils against the Papacy, was strongly supported in France, but opposed by Charles VII (reigned 1422–61).

The growing power of France about 1500 was skilfully diverted from troubling the Papacy (at a time when France might easily have headed the *Reformation Movement) by the wise concessions of *Leo X in the Concordat of 1516, when he admitted the right of the King to nominate to all benefices in France, and by thus surrendering Church temporalities removed any financial interest Francis I might have had in a change of religion, even though military necessities forced him into Protestant alliances. The outstanding French Reformer, J. *Calvin, operated mainly outside France. It is remarkable, however, that the decrees of the Council of *Trent were not accepted or published in France.

*Lutheranism was the first Protestant faith to appear in France, but its supporters were few, and it was almost tolerated. *Calvinism, however, became much more widely spread, and ruthless persecution of its adherents began in 1547. In spite of this, by 1561 there were 2,000 Calvinist churches in France, and the Calvinists had already become a political faction and seemed a danger to the state. In the ensuing war both sides had help from abroad. In the adoption of the RC faith by *Henry IV in 1593 the Catholic majority secured its final triumph, but it is significant that toleration was given to their opponents by the Edict of *Nantes in 1598, a toleration which they employed to form a virtual imperium in imperio. Under Louis XIV (reigned 1643–1715) all restrictions consistent with the letter of the Edict of Nantes were reimposed, and finally in 1685 the Edict itself was revoked. See also Huguenots.

Louis XIV had absolutist conceptions of his own power, and his desire to remove the French Church from the immediate control of Rome and make it dependent upon himself took effect in his inducing the French clergy to publish the four *Gallican Articles of 1682. By this time the *Counter-Reformation had made itself felt in France, especially in the lives of such men as St. *Francis de Sales (1567–1622) and St. *Vincent de Paul (c. 1580 – 1660). The 17th cent. is also famous for the great theologians and teachers J. B. *Bossuet (1627–1704) and F. *Fénelon (1651–1715), who became involved in the bitter dispute over *Quietism, resulting in the latter's disgrace. Ever since the posthumous publication of C. *Jansen's Augustinus (1640), his supporters had formed an influential body of opinion within the Church, despite successive condemnations, and they had shown great skill in playing off the supporters of *Gallicanism against Rome. For political reasons at the end of Louis XIV's reign the Jansenists found themselves attacked by both the King and the Pope, and the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713) condemned them in great detail. This condemnation may have been partly due to *Jesuit influence, which increased throughout the 17th cent., when the Order provided successive royal confessors, established a dominant position in education, and was also very active in the mission field, both in the French colonies in America and in the Near and Far East. Other missionary societies were founded in France for work in all parts of the world.

France had a part in the moral decadence and religious unbelief of the 18th cent., and the Church had no one of equal brilliance to oppose to such men as *Voltaire and *Rousseau. Nor was French Protestantism more than a shattered remnant; the revocation of the Edict of Nantes and the suppression of the *Camisard rebellion of 1703–5 had crushed what little life remained, so that the granting of toleration to Protestants in 1787 made little difference to the nation at large.

No direct attack was made upon Christianity or the Church in the first outbreak of the Revolution of 1789, though disendowment of Church property was considered a necessary part of the suppression of feudalism, and a state grant to the Church was substituted. The *Civil Constitution of the Clergy (1790) aimed at reducing Papal control of the clergy and increasing that of the metropolitans, and at giving the civil electorate the chief voice in the appointment of bishops and parish clergy. Most of the clergy obeyed the order of *Pius VI to refuse the oath to this constitution, and they suffered a measure of repression through the period of the Revolution and the Directory; but the rest of the clergy, who were known as the 'Constitutionalists', remained secure in their benefices throughout, though not always safe from mob violence or from the attentions of the avowedly atheistic section of the Revolutionary Government. Under the Directory of 1795–9 the clergy were required to swear hatred of royalty and anarchy, but were otherwise unmolested.

The *Concordat of 1801 between Napoleon and *Pius VII replaced the Constitutionalists by the exiles and virtually restored the powers of the RC Church, though Napoleon acted on the assumption that the Concordat included the *Gallican Articles of 1682, an assumption denied by the Pope. The tyranny of Napoleon in ecclesiastical matters and his personal conduct towards Pius VII, however, were the most effective guarantee of popular reaction against *Gallicanism in France, and the temper of the country at the Bourbon restoration was ready for the growth of that *Ultramontanism which achieved at least a partial triumph at the *Vatican Council of 1870. Meanwhile the years following 1801 saw the founding of numerous fresh religious orders at home, and the intensification of missionary activity to all parts of the world. The names of '*Lourdes' and the '*Curé d'Ars' (qq.v.) are indicative of a widespread growth in personal piety.

The various political changes in France during the 19th cent. did not disturb the position of the RC Church; but meanwhile French Calvinism revived in some measure, though in 1872 there came a threefold split between orthodox, moderates, and liberals which weakened it considerably.

Towards the end of the century various acts were passed to weaken the influence of the Church, the most significant being the Education Act of 1882 which completely secularized primary education, and subsequent acts which placed restrictions on religious teaching in secondary education. Pope *Leo XIII's call to French Catholics to rally in support of the Republic in 1892 was little heeded and the Church's involvement in politics led to a sharp reaction on the part of succeeding governments. In the early years of the 20th cent. most religious orders were expelled from France, and in 1905, after a series of quarrels between the French government and the Holy See, the entire severance of Church and state took place. The state grant to the Church ceased and all recognition of the Church as an institution ceased with it. Henceforth no distinction was made between clergy and others in regard to liability for military service and no pious bequests, except to individuals, were legally valid. On the other hand, Catholics and Protestants alike had their rights of assembly as private persons guaranteed by the state.

In the same period some of the most radical thinking in ecclesiastical circles had been taking place in France. The *Modernist movement included the attempts of A. *Loisy to bring biblical exegesis into line with modern scientific discoveries, and the attempts of the philosophical modernists (e.g. M. *Blondel and L. *Laberthonnière) to bring dogma into line with modern philosophical systems and the modern mind. The first decades of the 20th cent. also witnessed the growth in importance of 'social catholicism', which was marked by concern for the fate of the poor in a capitalist society.

During the First World War the French clergy fought side by side with the laity, and in this way the estrangement of many of the French laity from the Church was much diminished. Unobtrusively the religious orders returned and the inter-war period was marked by moderation in the relations between the Church and state. At the same time French Catholic scholarship flourished under the leadership of the Thomists, J. *Maritain and E. *Gilson.

Of recent years, the French Church has remained one of the fountain-heads of the intellectual life of the Church. On the one hand there is the solid traditional thinking of many of the established religious journals, and on the other, the exciting, if at times erratic, experimentation which is represented esp. by the Dominican Order in France. While a large section of the French people remains alienated from the Church, and such attempts to deal with the situation as the institution of 'priest-workmen' have not always been an unqualified success, the position of the French Church is prob. healthier than it has been for many years. There is less active hatred of the Church than there has been in the past and more understanding and tolerance on the part of those who are not Christians, while within the Church there has been no lessening in devotion and a great increase in understanding.

A large mass of documentary material is contained in Gallia Christiana* (q.v.). Much information on the history of the Church will be found in all histories of France, e.g. E. Lavisse, Histoire de France depuis les origines jusqu'à la Révolution (9 vols., 1900–11); id., Histoire de France contemporaine, depuis la Révolution jusqu'à la paix de 1919 (10 vols., 1920–22), both with detailed bibll. [R. F. W.] Guettée, Histoire de l'Église de France (12 vols., 1847–56). R. T. Smith, The Church in France [1894]. G. Goyau, Histoire religieuse de la France (1922; new ed., with continuation by G. Hanotaux, 1942). C. Poulet, O.S.B., Histoire de l'Église de France (3 vols., 1944), with good bibl. A. Latreille, E. Delaruelle, J. R. Palanque, and R. Rémond, Histoire du catholicisme en France (3 vols., 1957–62). E. Le Blant, Inscriptions chrétiennes de la Gaule antérieures au VIIIe siècle (2 vols., 1856–65). L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne France (3 vols., 1894–1915). T. Scott Holmes, The Origin and Development of the Christian Church in Gaul during the First Six Centuries of the Christian Era (Birkbeck Lectures for 1907 and 1908; 1911). R. Génestal, Le Privilegium Fori en France du décret de Gratien à la fin du XIVe siècle (Bibliothèque des Écoles des Hautes Études. Sciences Religieuses, xxxv and xxxix; 1921–4). J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'état au temps de Philippe le Bel (S.S.L., viii; 1926). N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme d'occident (4 vols., 1896–1902). W. H. Jervis, The Gallican Church. A History of the Church of France from the Concordat of Bologna, A.D. 1516, to the Revolution (1872). [P. G. J. M.] Imbart de La Tour, Les Origines de la réforme (4 vols., 1905–35). A. A. Tilley, 'The Reformation in France' in C.M.H., ii (1903), pp. 280–304. F. Roquain, La France et Rome pendant les guerres de religion (1924). L. N. Prunel, La Renaissance catholique en France au XVIIe siècle (1921). Viscount St. Cyres 'The Gallican Church' in C.M.H., v (1908), pp. 72–91, with bibl., pp. 780–5. W. H. Jervis, The Gallican Church and the Revolution (1882). C. S. Phillips, The Church in France, 1789–1848. A Study in Revival (1929); id., The Church in France, 1848–1907 (C.H.S. publications, N.S., No. 19; 1936); W. J. Sparrow Simpson, French Catholics in the Nineteenth Century (1918). A. Debidour, Histoire des rapports de l'Église et de l'état en France de 1789 à 1870 (1898); id., L'Église catholique et l'état sous la Troisième République (2 vols., 1906–9). P. de la Gorce, Histoire religieuse de la Révolution française (5 vols., 1909–23). A. Dansette, Histoire religieuse de la France contemporaine (2 vols., 1948–51; revised ed., 1965; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1961). A. Aulard, Le Christianisme et la Révolution française (1925; Eng. tr., 1927). A. Sicard, L'Ancien Clergé de France (3 vols., 1893–1903). G. Constant, L'Église de France sous le consulat et l'empire, 1800–1814 (1928). E. Lecanuet, Cong. Orat., L'Église de France sous la Troisième République (2 vols., 1907–10). S. Mours, Un Siècle d'évangélisation en France (1815–1914) (2 vols., 1963). E. Barbier, Histoire du catholicisme libéral et du catholicisme social en France, 1870–1914 (6 vols., Bordeaux, 1924). A. R. Vidler, A Century of Social Catholicism, 1820–1920 (1964), pp. 3–78 and 112–40. É. Poulat, Intégrisme et catholicisme intégral. Un réseau secret international antimoderniste: La 'Sapinière' (1909–1921) (1969). Id., Naissance des prêtres-ouvriers (1965). W. Bosworth, Catholicism and Crisis in Modern France. French Catholic Groups at the Threshold of the Fifth Republic (Princeton, 1962). E. Mâle, L'Art religieux du 12e siècle en France (1922); id., L'Art religieux du 13e siècle en France (1898; Eng. tr., 1913); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du moyen-âge en France (1908). Joan Evans, Monastic Architecture in France, from the Renaissance to the Republic (Cambridge, 1964). R. [M.] Griffiths, The Reactionary Revolution. The Catholic Revival in French Literature 1870–1914 (1966). Bremond. G. Goyau, La France missionnaire dans les cinq parties du monde (2 vols., 1948). G. Goyau in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 167–90, s.v.; J. Fontaine and others in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 785–997, s.v.; E. Delaruelle and others in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 2–25, s.v.; J.-R. Palanque and others in D.H.G.E., xviii (1977), cols. 1–157, s.v. See also bibll. to Concordat, Constitutional Church, Gallicanism, Huguenots, Jansenism, Modernism, and Quietism.

FRANCES OF ROME, St. (1384–1440), Sta Francesca Romana, foundress of the *Oblates of St. Benedict of Tor de' Specchi. Born at Rome, she was married in 1397 to Lorenzo de' Ponziani, although she desired to enter religion. She was an exemplary wife and mother, at the same time living a life under rule with her husband's brother's wife, Vannozza. She and her family suffered much when Ladislas of Naples took Rome in 1408. In 1425 she realized her long-cherished plan of founding a society of pious women, not under strict vows, to help the poor. At first called the Oblates of Mary, they later became known as the Oblates of Tor de' Specchi from the house in which they lived. After Lorenzo's death (1436) Francesca entered the community and became Superior. During her later years she is said to have enjoyed the continuous vision of her guardian angel. She was canonized in 1608 and *Pius XI declared her a patroness of motorists. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Lat. recension of life by Giovanni Mattiotti, her confessor, pr. in AA.SS., Mar. II (1668), pp. *92–*176; It. recension (prob. the earlier) ed. M. Armellini (Rome, 1882); modern It. tr. by M. Scarpini (Florence, 1923). Life by M. M. Anguillaria (Rome, 1641) adds little; Lat. tr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. *176–*211. Account of canonization, ib., pp. *212–*216; introd., pp. *88–*92. P. T. Lugano (ed.), I processi inediti per Francesca Bussa dei Ponziani (Santa Francesca Romana), 1440–1453 (S.T., cxx; 1945), with reff. to earlier works, esp. p. xxxiv; see esp. artt. in Rivista storica benedettina. Modern lives by Georgiana Fullerton (London, 1855), J. Rabory (Paris, 1884), Ctesse de Rambuteau (ib., 1900), Berthem-Bontoux (ib., 1931), Irene Hernaman (London, 1931; slight) and C. Albergotti (Rome, 1940). E. Vaccaro in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, v (Rome [1965]), cols. 1011–21, s.v. 'Francesca Romana', with extensive bibl.

FRANCIS OF ASSISI, St. (1181/2–1226), founder of the *Franciscan Order. The son of Pietro Bernardone, a rich cloth merchant of Assisi, and his wife, Pica, Francis assisted his father in his business until he reached the age of twenty. Gallant, high spirited, and generous, he lived as a youth the life usual for one of his station. In 1202, during a border dispute between Perugia and Assisi, he was taken prisoner and held captive for some months. After his release he returned to Assisi, but, becoming dissatisfied with his worldly life during a serious illness, after much inner conflict determined to devote himself to prayer and the service of the poor. On a pilgrimage to Rome he was moved by compassion for the beggars before St. Peter's and, exchanging his clothes with one of them, spent a day himself begging for alms. This experience of being penniless deeply affected him; he discovered both the joys and the hardships of poverty; and on his return to Assisi, after being disowned by his father, devoted himself to ministering to lepers and employing his time in repairing the ruined church of S. Damiano. One morning c. 1208, while worshipping in the church of the *Portiuncula some two miles below Assisi, he heard the Lord's words read, bidding His disciples to leave all (Mt. 10. 7–19), and at once understood them as a personal call. He discarded staff and shoes, put on a long dark garment girded with a cord and set out to save souls. Before long he gathered round him a little band of like-minded followers.

Francis now drew up a simple rule of life for himself and his associates ('Regula Primitiva'), based on sayings from the Gospels, and on a visit to Rome in 1209–10 secured approval for it from *Innocent III. On his return he spent some time at Rivo Torto in the neighbourhood of Assisi, and from now on his associates, who took the name of 'friars minor' (fratres minores), rapidly increased and went on ever wider missions. In 1212 his ideals were accepted by St. *Clare (q.v.), a noble lady of Assisi, who founded a similar society for women centred at the church of S. Damiano. In 1214–15 Francis made his way through the S. of France and Spain with a view to converting the Moors, but illness prevented his reaching Africa. It was the tradition that after his return to Assisi in 1216 *Honorius III granted him the 'Portiuncula Indulgence' (q.v.). At the Chapter at Assisi at Pentecost, 1217, the Order was organized by provinces, with ministers appointed to supervise them. In 1219 he made a preaching tour with eleven companions to Eastern Europe and Egypt; he was present at the siege and capture of Damietta (Nov. 1219).

During this absence in the East, Francis's personal relation to the Order underwent a great change. Its direction passed into the hands of other friars (*Elias of Cortona; Petrus Cataneo, d. 1221) and Francis, realizing that he lacked the qualities for supervising and administering what had now become a vast enterprise, never sought to resume the leadership. In 1221 he founded his *Tertiaries, i.e. a band of those living in the world who wished to adopt his ideals as far as was compatible with a normal mode of life. A more definite and settled rule for the friars (the 'Regula Prima') was drawn up in 1221, and after further revision received formal authorization by Honorius III on 29 Nov. 1223 (the 'Regula Bullata'). In his later years Francis became a close friend of Cardinal Ugolino of Ostia, whom he first met at Florence in 1217, and this friendship served his Order well when in 1227 the Cardinal became Pope as *Gregory IX. In Sept. 1224 Francis received on Mt. Alvernia, a retreat in the Apennines which had been granted to him and his followers by the Lord of Chiusi, the gift of the *Stigmata. He died in the chapel of the Portiuncula on 3 Oct. 1226. On 16 July 1228, less than two years later, he was canonized by Gregory IX. Feast day, 4 Oct. (Commemoration of the Stigmata, 17 Sept.).

Francis's generosity, his simple and unaffected faith, his passionate devotion to God and man, his love of nature and his deep humility have made him one of the most cherished saints in modern times. The revival of interest in him among the more educated owes much to the study of P. *Sabatier, the Calvinist pastor at Strassburg, who combined original research into the early Franciscan documents with warm sympathy for and a fascinating presentation of his ideals.

See also Franciscan Order, Canticle of the Sun, and Little Flowers of St. Francis.

The authentic writings of St. Francis are all quite short. They include his Testament, a set of 28 Admonitions, 'De Reverentia Corporis Domini', 'De Religiosa Habitatione in Eremo', the 'Canticle of the Sun', a collection of six letters, 'Laudes Domini' and the prayer 'Absorbeat'. The earliest life is the 'Vita Prima' of *Thomas of Celano, commissioned by Pope Gregory IX on the canonization of Francis. In 1246 Thomas wrote a 'Vita Secunda', based on reminiscences of the companions of St. Francis, and supplemented it with a 'Tractatus de miraculis'. Next in date is the so-called 'Legenda Trium Sociorum', based on the first and second lives of Celano and other sources. In 1266 the order gave official authority to the 'Legenda Major' of St. Bonaventure, a life designed to mediate between the *Spirituals and the less austere members of the order. The General Chapter then ordered the suppression of all earlier lives. This led to the growth of oral legends, which culminated in the 'Little Flowers of St. Francis' (q.v.). The earlier material, notably the writings of Brother Leo, had not, however, entirely perished, and has been recovered in modern times. Its recovery has been attended with much controversy, largely because P. Sabatier was misled by a wrong dating in one MS. into believing that the 'Speculum Perfectionis', a collection of stories about St. Francis based on this material, was written at the Portiuncula in 1227. Its true date is 1318. In the later Middle Ages, the most important work was Bartholomew of Pisa's 'Liber de Conformitate Vitae b. Patris Francisci ad Vitam Domini Nostri Jesu Christi', presented by its author to the Chapter General of the Franciscans in 1399.

The earliest collected ed. of his works is that of L. *Wadding, O.F.M., Antwerp, 1623 (often repr.); works also ed. l'Abbé Horoy (Medii Aevi Bibliotheca Patristica, vi; Paris, 1880, cols. 1–448; incl. prologemena); works in Latin also ed. by the Franciscans at Quaracchi (Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, i; 1904; ed. 3, 1949). Eng. trr. of his works include those by 'A Religious of the Order' (London, 1882), Paschal Robinson, O.F.M. (ib., 1906), L. Sherley-Price (ib., 1959, with 'Speculum Perfectionis'), and B. Fahy, O.F.M. (ib., 1964). Celano's 'Prima Vita', though known to Wadding, was first pr. in the AA.SS., Oct. II (1768), pp. 683–723; his 'Vita Secunda' was not publd. until the 19th cent., by S. Rinaldi, Seraphici Viri s. Francisci Assisiati Vitae duae auct. B. Thoma de Celano (Rome, 1806), pp. 137–273; crit. ed. of both by Eduardus d'Alençon, O.F.M.Cap. (Rome, 1906). The 'Legenda Trium Sociorum' was first pr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 723–42; Eng. tr. by E. G. Salter (London, 1902). The two lives by Celano, the 'Legenda Major' of St. Bonaventure and other material, ed. by the Franciscans at Quaracchi, Legendae S. Francisci Assisiensis Saeculis XIII et XIV conscriptae, i (Analecta Franciscana, x; 1926–41). 'Speculum Perfectionis' ed. P. Sabatier (Collection de documents pour l'histoire religieuse et littéraire du moyen-âge, i; 1898). The writings of Brother Leo and other early material ed., with Eng. tr. and bibl., by Rosalind B. Brooke (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1970). Id., 'The Lives of St. Francis of Assisi' in T. A. Dorey (ed.), Latin Biography (1967), pp. 177–98.

Among the large number of modern lives, special importance attaches to that of P. Sabatier (Paris, 1893; Eng. tr., 1894), which inaugurated modern Franciscan studies. Others include those of K. Hase (Leipzig, 1856), Mrs. [Margaret O. W.] Oliphant (London [c. 1870]), W. J. Knox Little (London, 1897), J. Jörgensen (Copenhagen, 1907; Eng. tr., 1912), Fr. Cuthbert [Hess], O.S.F.C. (London, 1912), L. Salvatorelli (Bari, 1926; Eng. tr., 1929), O. Englebert (Paris, 1947; Eng. tr., 1950), and A. Fortini (4 vols. in 5, [Assisi, 1959]; abbreviated Eng. tr., 1980). Good popular studies by G. K. *Chesterton (London, [1923]), T. S. R. Boase (London, 1936), J. R. H. Moorman (ib., 1950) and M. de la Bedoyere (ib., 1962). Pictorial biography by L. von Matt–W. Hauser (Zürich, 1952; Eng. tr., 1956). W. Seton (ed.), St. Francis of Assisi: 1226–1926. Essays in Commemoration (London, 1926). On the sources and their literary relations W. Goetz, Die Quellen zur Geschichte des hl. Franz von Assisi (1904). J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of S. Francis of Assisi (Publications of the University of Manchester, cclxxiv, Historical Series, lxxix; 1940). E. C. Butler in E.B. (ed. 11), x (1910), pp. 937–9.

FRANCIS BORGIA, St. See Borgia, St. Francis.

FRANCIS OF PAOLA, St. (1416–1507), founder of the Order of *Minims. Born of a poor family, he spent a year with the *Franciscans as a boy in fulfilment of a vow of his parents. Here he developed a great love of austerity, and in 1431 began to lead a strictly ascetic life as a hermit in the cave of a rock near the Tyrrhenian Sea. In 1436, the date held to be that of the foundation of his order, he was joined by two companions. Before long the number of his followers increased and in 1453 a church and a house were built for them; and other foundations followed later. He became renowned for his holiness throughout Italy and beyond its frontiers, and many miraculous cures were attributed to him. His fame was such that Louis XI of France, in terror of death after an apoplectic fit, sent for him; while his son, Charles VIII, kept him near him as his spiritual director and built him two monasteries. The last three months of his life St. Francis spent preparing himself for death in his cell in complete solitude. He was canonized in 1519 and declared 'Patron of Seafarers' in 1943. His emblem is the word CARITAS in a circle of rays. Feast day, 2 Apr.

AA.SS., Apr. I (1685), pp. 103–234. The 'anonymous life' [by L. Clavense] also ed. G. M. Perrimezzi (2 vols., Rome, 1707). Modern lives by J. N. Dabert (Paris, 1875; ed. l'Abbé Pradier, Tours, 1892) and G. M. Roberti (Rome, 1915). The apostolic letter of Pope *Pius XII appointing him patron of Italian seafarers is pr. in A.S.S., xxxv (1943), p. 163 f. F. Russo, M.S.C., Bibliografia di San Francesco di Paola (Supplemento al 'Bollettino Ufficiale dell'Ordine dei Minimi', iii, No. 1; 1957). R. Fiot in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1040–51, s.v. 'François (19) de Paule', with bibl. See also bibl. to Minims.

FRANCIS OF SALES, St. (1567–1622), Bp. of Geneva from 1602, and one of the leaders of the *Counter-Reformation. Born at the castle of Sales in Savoy, he was educated at Annecy, Paris (1581–8) and Padua (1588–92), and gave up brilliant secular prospects in response to an overmastering vocation to holy orders. In 1593 he was ordained priest, and was made Provost of Geneva. In 1593 he started on a mission to win the Chablais from *Calvinism to Catholicism, and in the face of great personal sufferings and dangers, succeeded. In 1599 he was nominated Coadjutor-Bp. of Geneva, with the title of Bp. of Nicopolis, but not consecrated till he succeeded to the see in 1602. In addition to the administration of the diocese, he continued regularly to preach, to minister as confessor and director, and to organize the teaching of the Catechism. In 1603 he met St. *Jane Frances de Chantal, whose spiritual director he soon became; and in 1610, through their combined inspiration and labours, the *Visitandines were founded. His most famous writings, the *Introduction to the Devout Life (1609; q.v.) and the Treatise on the Love of God (1616), were adapted for publication from instructions given to individuals. They had a deep influence on later spiritual writing. He was beatified in 1661, canonized in 1665, and declared a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1877 and 'Patron of the Catholic Press' in 1923. Feast day, 24 (formerly 29) Jan. See also Bosco, St. John, and Salesians.

The best ed. of his works is that publ. by the Visitandines of Annecy (26 vols., Annecy, 1892–1932 + vol. xxvii, 'table analytique' by A. Denis, 1964); Eng. tr. by H. B. Mackey, O.S.B., and others, under the direction of J. C. Hedley, O.S.B. (6 vols., 1883–1908). Selected letters also tr. into Eng., with introd., by Elizabeth [C. V.] Stopp (1960). The primary contemporary authority is Charles-Auguste de Sales (nephew), De Vita et Rebus Gestis . . . Francisci Salesii (Lyons, 1634; mod. Fr. tr., 2 vols., 1857). J. P. Camus, L'Esprit du bienheureux François de Sales (6 vols., 1639–41; abridgement by P. Collot, 1727, frequently repr.; Eng. trr. of this abridgement, 1872, 1910, and New York, 1952). A. J. M. Hamon, Vie de Saint François de Sales (2 vols., 1854; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1925–9); F. Trochu, Saint François de Sales (2 vols., Paris, 1946); E. J. Lajeunie, O.P., Saint François de Sales. L'Homme, la pensée, l'action (2 vols., posthumously publd. [1966]), the last two works both with full reff. to sources. Other modern studies include those of F. Strowski (Paris, 1898), A. de Margerie ('Les Saints', 1899; Eng. tr., 1900), H. Vincent (Paris, 1923), Ella K. Sanders (London, 1928), M. de la Bedoyere (ib., 1960), É. M. Lajeunie ('Maîtres spirituels', 1962), Margaret Trouncer (London, 1963), and Ruth Murphy (Paris, 1964). Ruth Kleinman, Saint François de Sales and the Protestants (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, lii; Geneva, 1962). V. Brasier–E. Morganti–M. St. Đurica, Opere e scritti riguardanti San Francesco di Sales. Repertorio bibliografico 1623–1955 (Biblioteca del 'Salesianum', xliv; 1956). Bremond, i (1916), pp. 68–127; Eng. tr., i (1928), pp. 55–100; Pourrat, iii (1925), esp. pp. 406–81; Eng. tr., iii (1927), pp. 272–321. P. Serouet in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1057–97, s.v. 'François (25) de Sales', with extensive bibl.

FRANCIS OF VITORIA. See Vitoria, Francis of.

FRANCIS XAVIER, St. (1506–52), 'Apostle of the Indies' and 'of Japan'. He was one of the greatest of Christian missionaries, and an original member of the *Jesuits. The son of an aristocratic Spanish-Basque family, he was born in Navarre. While at the University of Paris he met St. *Ignatius Loyola, and on 15 Aug. 1534, with Ignatius and five others, took vows to follow Christ in poverty and chastity, and to evangelize the heathen. All seven were ordained priests in Venice on Midsummer Day, 1537. On 7 Apr. 1541, at the invitation of John III of Portugal, Francis left Lisbon to evangelizè the East Indies, and in May 1542 he reached Goa, which he made his headquarters. From there he went on to Travancore, Malacca, the Molucca Islands, and Ceylon. In 1549 he landed in Japan, the language of which he studied, and founded there a Church which endured through great persecutions. He returned to Goa in 1552, but left in the same year for a mission to China. On the way, at the island of Chang-Chuen-Shan (St. John's Island), he fell ill and died before he could enter the country. His body was brought to the church of the Good Jesus at Goa, where it lies magnificently enshrined. His work is remarkable for the extent of his journeys (in spite of his invariable seasickness) and the large number of his converts. The Jesuits have attributed to him more than 700,000 conversions. Wherever he preached he left organized Christian communities. His methods have sometimes been attacked, e.g. he has been criticized for not attempting to understand the oriental religions, for invoking the help of the *Inquisition, for approving the persecution of *Nestorians, and for using the government at Goa as a means of proselytizing. The well-known hymn, 'O Deus, ego amo Te' ('My God, I love Thee, not because', tr. E. *Caswall), long ascribed to Xavier, appears to be a Lat. rendering of a Spanish sonnet. He was canonized in 1622, and *Pius X named him 'Patron of Foreign Missions'. Feast day, 3 Dec.

Monumenta Xaveriana (Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, 2 vols., Madrid, 1899–1912); letters also ed. G. Schurhammer, S.J.–I. Wicki, S.J. (ib., vols. lxvii and lxviii, Rome, 1944–5). H. Tursellini, S.J., De Vita Francisci Xaverii (Rome, 1594; Eng. tr., Paris, 1632). Other lives by D. Bouhours, S.J. (Paris, 1682; Eng. tr. by J. *Dryden, 1688), H. J. Coleridge, S.J. ('Quarterly Series', 2 vols., 1872), L. J. M. Cros, S.J. (2 vols., Toulouse, 1894), A. Brou (2 vols., Paris, 1912; ed. 2, 1922), E. A. Stewart (London, 1917), with tr. of letters by D. Macdonald, E. A. Robertson (ib., 1920), J. Brodrick, S.J. (ib., 1952) and G. Schurhammer (2 vols. in 4, Freiburg, 1955–73). Various papers by Schurhammer assembled in his Gesammelte Studien, iii. Xaveriana (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.J., xxii; 1964). Id., in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1099–1107, s.v. 'François (28) de Xavier'; J. Wicki in N.C.E., iv (1967), p. 1059 f., s.v. 'Xavier, Francis, St.', both with bibl.

FRANCISCAN ORDER. The Order of Friars Minor was founded by St. *Francis of Assisi (q.v.) in 1209, when he gave his followers their first rule, now lost. This rule was recast in 1221 and brought into its final form in 1223, when *Honorius III confirmed it by bull, whence it is known as 'Regula bullata'. Its distinguishing mark is the insistence on complete poverty not only for individual friars but corporately for the whole order. The friars were to live by the work of their hands or, if need be, by begging, but were forbidden to own any property or to accept money. With the rapid spread of the order and the need for settled houses, this ideal soon proved unworkable if taken literally. Thus two schools of thought developed in the order. The one, whose members were called '*Spirituals', insisted on interpretation acc. to the letter; the other, followed by the majority, preferred a more moderate view in accordance with the requirements of the times. From 1245 onwards the discussion grew violent and endangered the unity of the order, though it temporarily abated under the conciliatory influence of St. *Bonaventure, who was General from 1257 to 1274. From 1310 to 1312 the question was debated before the Pope, and in 1317–18 decided against the stricter party by two bulls of *John XXII which permitted the order corporate ownership. Many of the Spirituals fled and became schismatics under the name of 'Fraticelli'. In 1321 the problem of poverty arose again, this time in the theoretical form as to whether Christ and the Apostles had owned property, and a heated scholastic discussion between Franciscans and *Dominicans developed. These futile disputes, together with the Black Death (1348–52) and the Great Schism (1378–1417), led to a general decline of the order in the 14th cent. Laxity also increased as their material prosperity grew. But during this period many efforts at reform were made, and a return to poverty was brought about by the so-called '*Observants', who opposed the lax *'Conventualists'. The 'Observants' gained ecclesiastical recognition when in 1415 the Council of *Constance granted their French province special provincials, and in 1443 *Eugenius IV provided them with a separate Vicar General. In 1517 they were finally separated from the Conventuals and declared the true Order of St. Francis. Early in the 16th cent. another reform, introduced by Matteo di Bassi (1495–1552), led to the establishment of the *Capuchins (q.v.), whose rule was drawn up in 1529.

During the 17th and 18th cents. reform parties sprang up again. Of these the chief were the 'Reformati', the *Recollects and the *Discalced, who lived after their own statutes, though remaining under the same General. Besides these internal differences, the political events of the 18th and 19th cents., esp. the French Revolution, the secularization of Joseph II, the revolutions in Spain (1834), Poland (1831), Italy, and the Kulturkampf in Prussia, did great harm to the order. At the end of the last century, however, it regained new vigour by the reunion of its different branches, which was confirmed by *Leo XIII in 1897.

The order, which has always cultivated popular preaching and missionary activities, has given a great number of saints to the Church, the best known being St. *Antony of Padua, popular as a miracle-worker. Though not primarily instituted as a learned order, it has produced many celebrated scholars, among them St. *Bonaventure, *Duns Scotus, and *William of Ockham. Among the popular devotions they promoted are esp. the *Angelus, the *Crib, and the *Stations of the Cross. Franciscans were among the chief defenders of the *Immaculate Conception in the Middle Ages.

To the Franciscan friars is attached their organization of Tertiaries (q.v.) living in the world. Their Second Order of contemplative nuns are the Poor Clares (q.v.), whereas their Third Order communities of women are devoted to works of charity and have no strict enclosure.

In 1224 the first Franciscans to establish themselves in England arrived under *Agnellus of Pisa and settled at once at *Canterbury, London, and *Oxford. Their piety and learning won them a ready hearing, and by the middle of the century there were some 50 friaries and over 1200 friars in England. Their early history (down to c. 1258) was vividly described by Thomas of Eccleston ('De Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam'). John *Peckham, one of their number, held the see of Canterbury from 1279 to 1292. In the 14th cent., when they no longer possessed the same moral and intellectual qualities, they became the object of J. *Wycliffe's attacks. The Observants were introduced by Henry VII and acted as confessors to *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon; but they were scattered before the *Dissolution. Since the middle of the 19th cent., many Franciscan houses have been re-established.

In the C of E a group inspired by Franciscan ideals settled near Batcombe (Cerne Abbas) in Dorset in 1921, to minister in the first place to the unemployed who tramped the roads. In 1931 they took vows and were constituted a religious community. They have grown considerably in numbers and influence and have been active in evangelistic work, esp. in the universities. A small Anglican community for women has also been started with its headquarters at Freeland, Oxon.

The most important source for the Order as a whole, apart from its official docc., is L. *Wadding, O.F.M. (q.v.), Annales Minorum (8 vols., Lyons, 1625–54; later edd. much extended); id., Scriptores Ordinis Minorum (Rome, 1650; suppl., with corrections, by J. H. Sbaralea, O.F.M., 1806). Bullarium Franciscanum (4 vols., ed. J. H. Sbaralea, O.F.M., Rome, 1759–68; 3 further vols. ed. C. Eubel, O.F.M., ib., 1898–1904, + Epitome et Supplementum by id., Quaracchi, 1908). Analecta Franciscana, sive Chronica aliaque varia Documenta ad Historiam Fratrum Minorum Spectantia, ed. by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (10 vols. to date, Quaracchi, 1885–1941). Useful collection of sources for the history of the Order in England ed. J. S. Brewer–R. Howlett, Monumenta Franciscana (2 vols., R.S., 1858–82). For details of edd. of early constitutions and other sources see A. G. Little, A Guide to Franciscan Studies (Helps for Students of History, xxiii; 1920). G. Golubovich, O.F.M., and others, Bibliotheca Bio-Bibliografica della Terra Santa e dell'Oriente Francescano: Serie Prima: Annali (5 vols., Quaracchi, 1905–27); Nuova Serie: Documenti (14 vols., ib., 1921–39; further vols. in preparation, Cairo); Serie Terza: Documenti (2 vols., Ethiopia Francescana, Quaracchi, 1928–48); Serie Quarta: Studi (Cairo, 1954 ff.). Documents on the Chinese Mission pr. in Sinica Franciscana (Rome, 1929 ff.).

H. Holzapfel, O.F.M., Handbuch der Geschichte des Franziskanerordens (1909). A. Masseron, Les Franciscains ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux', 1931; Eng. tr., 1931). A. Gemelli, O.F.M., Il francescanesimo (ed. 2, Vita e pensiero, 1932; Eng. tr., 1934). [M. Badin, in religion] Père Gratien de Paris, O.F.M.Cap., Histoire de la fondation et de l'évolution de l'ordre des Frères Mineurs au XIIIe siècle (1928). V. D. Scudder, The Franciscan Adventure. A Study in the First Hundred Years of the Order of St. Francis of Assisi (1931). F. de Sessevalle, of the Third Order, Histoire générale de l'ordre de Saint François, la première partie, le moyen-âge, 1209–1517 (2 vols., 1935–7). R. M. Huber, O.F.M., A Documented History of the Franciscan Order, 1182–1517 (Milwaukee, Wisc., and Washington, D.C., 1944). J. [R. H.] Moorman, A History of the Franciscan Order from its origins to the year 1517 (Oxford, 1968). Rosalind B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government. Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959). M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty. The Doctrine of the Absolute Poverty of Christ and the Apostles in the Franciscan Order, 1210–1323 (C.H.S., 1961). A. G. Little, Studies in English Franciscan History (Ford Lectures for 1916; Publications of the University of Manchester, cxiii, Historical Series, xxix; 1917) and other works; E. Hutton, The Franciscans in England, 1224–1538 (1926). [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., The Religious Orders in England [i] (1948), pp. 114–45, 171–93, 205–52. Father Cuthbert [Hess], O.F.M.Cap., The Friars and How They Came to England (1903; Eng. tr. of Thomas of Eccleston's 'De Adventu FF. Minorum in Angliam', with pref. essay, 'On the Spirit and Genius of the Franciscan Friars', pp. 1–128). L. Lemmens, O.F.M., Geschichte der Franziskanermissionen (Missionswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen und Texte, ed. J. Schmidlin, xii; 1929). The many collections of studies and periodicals devoted to the affairs of the Order include the publications of the British Society of Franciscan Studies (19 vols., Aberdeen, 1908–37), Études franciscaines (Paris, 1899 ff.), La Verna (Florence, 1903–14; then called Studi Francescani, ib., 1914 ff.), Archivum Franciscanum Historicum (Quaracchi, 1908 ff.), Franziskanische Studien (Münster i.W., 1914 ff.), Revue d'Histoire Franciscaine (Paris, 1924 ff.), and Franciscan Studies (New York, 1941 ff.). Heimbucher, i, pp. 656–814, with detailed bibl. M. Bihl, O.F.M.–Z. Engelhardt, O.F.M., in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 281–302, s.v. 'Friars Minor, Order of'; Édouard d'Alençon, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 809–63, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs'; M. Bihl, O.F.M., in L.Th.K., iv (1932), cols. 125–32, s.v. 'Franziskaner'; R. Pratesi, O.F.M.–L. di Fonzo, O.F.M. Conv., in E.C., v (1950), cols. 1722–38, s.v. 'Frati Minori'; S. Clasen, O.F.M., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), cols. 273–9, s.v. 'Franziskaner', with bibl.; E. Longpré, O.F.M., and others in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1268–1401, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs', all with bibll. See also bibll. to Capuchins, Observants, Recollects, and Spiritual Franciscans.

FRANCISCUS A SANCTA CLARA. See Davenport, Christopher.

FRANCK, SEBASTIAN (c. 1499–c. 1542), German humanist. After studying at Ingolstadt and Heidelberg, he was ordained priest. About 1525 he became a *Lutheran and held pastoral appointments at Nuremberg and Strassburg. Later, however, he advocated complete freedom of thought and defended a form of undogmatic Christianity for which he was persecuted by Catholics and Reformers alike. He spent his later years at Basle. His varied writings are largely of secular purpose; but in the historical compilation issued as Chronica (3 vols., 1531) he gave full expression to his liberal attitude to religious questions. His more specifically theological books include a German edition of A. Althamer's Diallage (1528; a treatise against the *Anabaptists) and an index to the Bible (1539). In 1534 he published a German translation of *Erasmus' Moriae Encomium.

Life by C. A. Hase (Leipzig, 1869). Modern study by W. E. Peuckert (Munich, 1943). A. Hegler, Geist und Schrift bei Sebastian Franck (1892); A. Reimann, Sebastian Franck als Geschichtsphilosoph (Comenius-Schriften zur Geistesgeschichte, Hft. i; 1921); M. Barbers, Toleranz bei Sebastian Franck (Untersuchungen zur allgemeinen Religionsgeschichte, N.F., iv; 1964); H. Weigelt, Sebastian Franck und die lutherische Reformation (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, clxxxvi; 1972). A. Hegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 142–50.

FRANCKE, AUGUST HERMANN (1663–1727). German *Pietist and educationist. He was born at Lübeck, and after studying philosophy and theology at Erfurt and Kiel became a lecturer at Leipzig in 1685. Under the influence of P. J. *Spener he was attracted to Pietism and held 'Collegia Philobiblica' in which the Bible was expounded on devotional lines. In 1692 he was appointed professor at the newly founded university of Halle and pastor of Glaucha, nr. Halle, where his sermons and pastoral activities soon attracted a large congregation. In 1695 he laid the foundation of his famous Institutes, later known as 'Franckesche Stiftungen', by opening a poor-school in his house. In 1696 he founded his 'Paedagogium' and his orphanage. Both grew rapidly, and during the next years other institutions such as a publishing house and a dispensary were added. His great success, chiefly due to his eminently practical sense, combined with his stress on the personal nature of Christianity, made him many enemies among the clergy of Halle; but the opposition against him diminished after a visit in 1713 from the Prussian king, Frederick William I, whose subsequent educational legislation shows the influence of Francke's work.

His writings were mainly of a devotional and practical character. There is no complete ed., though some collections of his works were made during his lifetime. The two chief lives are those by H. E. F. Guerike (Halle, 1827; Eng. tr., 1837) and G. Kramer (2 vols., Halle a.S., 1880–2); also a large number of popular lives. A. Nebe, Neue Quellen zu August Hermann Francke (1927). E. Beyreuther, August Hermann Francke 1663–1727. Zeuge des lebendigen Gottes (Marburg [1956]); id., August Hermann Francke und die Anfänge der ökumenischen Bewegung (Leipzig, 1957). E. Peschke, Studien zur Theologie August Hermann Franckes (2 vols., 1964–66). T. Förster-Halle in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 150–8, s.v.; E. Beyreuther in R.G.G. (ed. 3), ii (1958), cols. 1013–15, s.v. 'Francke (1), August Hermann'. See also bibl. to Pietism.

FRANKFURT, Councils of. Frankfurt on Main was the scene of some sixteen Imperial councils during the Carolingian epoch. The best known of them was called by *Charlemagne in 794 to condemn the *Adoptianist heresy. It was attended by bishops from all over the Frankish kingdom, from Aquitaine, Italy, and even from England. Besides repudiating Adoptianism it condemned the decree of the Second Council of *Nicaea (787) on the worship of *icons, probably through a misunderstanding of the distinction made between λατρεία and προσκύνησις.

On the Council of 794, Hardouin, iv, cols. 865–912; Mansi, xiii (1767), cols. 829–56. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 1045–60, with bibl. to date, p. 1045; Appendice vii, pp. 1240–6. H. Barion, 'Der kirchenrechtliche Charakter des Konzils von Frankfurt 794' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 1, Kan. Abt., xix (1930), pp. 139–70. B. Dolhagaray in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 712–20, s.v. 'Francfort, Concile de', with bibl. K. Baus in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 259 f., s.v. 'Frankfurt a.M. IV', with bibl.

FRANZELIN, JOHANN BAPTIST (1816–86), Austrian cardinal and theologian. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1834, and in 1857 was appointed professor of dogmatic theology at the Roman College. He took a prominent part in preparing the *Vatican Council, where he acted as one of the leading theologians. In 1876 he was raised to the cardinalate. A theologian of great learning and accuracy of mind, he wrote a long series of dogmatic works of which the chief was his De Divina Traditione et Scriptura (1870). In his treatise on the Eucharistic Sacrifice (1868) he followed J. de *Lugo in teaching that the immolation in the Sacrifice consisted in the reduction to a lower state of Christ's human nature by being clothed in the species of bread and wine. Franzelin took an active part in the controversy with Greek Orthodox and Protestant scholars on the procession of the Holy Spirit, setting forth the traditional W. doctrine in his Examen doctrinae Macarii Bulgakov (1876).

'Commentarius de Vita Eminentissimi Auctoris' prefixed to his posthumous Theses de Ecclesia Christi (1887), pp. v–xxxi. N. Walsh, S.J., John Baptist Franzelin, S.J. . . . A Sketch and a Study (Dublin, 1895). P. Bernard in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 765–7.

FRASER, ALEXANDER CAMPBELL (1819–1914), idealist philosopher. He was a pupil of Sir William Hamilton at Edinburgh, and in 1844 was ordained in the *Free Church of Scotland, which had been created by the schism in the previous year, to the charge of Cramond, nr. Edinburgh. On Hamilton's death in 1856, he succeeded to his professorship at the University and held the chair till 1891. His main philosophical interest was the study of G. *Berkeley, whose writings he twice edited for the Clarendon Press (1871, 1901). The earlier edition was accompanied by a volume of Berkeley's Life and Letters incorporating much new material, and in 1881 he contributed the volume Berkeley to Blackwood's Philosophical Classics. He also published a set of *Gifford Lectures on The Philosophy of Theism (1895–6). Though his own philosophical position was greatly influenced by the doctrines of Berkeley, Fraser did not follow him slavishly; and his success as a teacher owed more to his ability to stimulate interest in the issues of philosophy than to the inculcation of any particular conclusions. He described the course of his philosophical development in his Biographia Philosophica (1904).

J. Kellie, Alexander Campbell Fraser. A Sketch of his Life and Philosophical Position (1909). A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, 'Alexander Campbell Fraser, 1819–1914' in Mind, xxiv (1915), pp. 289–325; id. in D.N.B., 1912–1921 (1927), pp. 195–7.

FRATER, the hall of a monastery or friary used for meals or refreshment. The word is in origin related to 'refectory' (refectorium) through the Old French refraitour.

J. C. Dickinson, Monastic Life in Mediaeval England (1961), p. 34 f.

FRATICELLI. A name originally applied to all members of the *Mendicant Orders, but since the condemnation of the followers of Angelo Clareno (d. 1337) by Pope *John XXII in the bull 'Sancta Romana' (1317), esp. to the *Spiritual Franciscans (q.v.). It was also in common use for the disciples of Michael of Casena (the so-called 'Michaelites') and several other minor groups.

FREDERICK I (Barbarossa) (c. 1122–90), Holy Roman Emperor. On the death of his uncle, Conrad III, in 1152 the princes elected Frederick of Swabia King of the Romans, largely because he was on his mother's side a Guelph, as well as being a Hohenstaufen on his father's. As king and emperor he wanted to give the papacy and sacerdotium their due, provided that his own rights were honoured. The treaty of Constance, however, which he concluded with Pope *Eugenius III in 1153 and renewed with *Hadrian IV in 1155, gave less freedom of movement to him than to the curia, and after his coronation in 1155 he was unable to move south against the Normans. North of the Alps, his regime rested largely on his good understanding with his Guelph cousin, Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, whom in 1156 he also invested with the Duchy of Bavaria. His aggressive policy towards the Lombard communes sought not only to reclaim regalian rights but to administer them directly for his own profit. Similar plans further south threatened the temporal lordship of the papacy, and the growing tension between Frederick and Hadrian IV was aggravated by questions of protocol at their first meeting. When, at the papal election in 1159, two popes emerged, Frederick at the Synod of Pavia in 1160 recognized the candidate of the minority of cardinals, Victor IV, against *Alexander III. The schism, which lasted for 17 years, was mainly a conflict of interests, but it isolated Frederick and the German bishops who supported him from the clerical élite of France and the Anglo-Norman world. A military solution proved impossible. After Frederick had suffered heavy losses at Rome through malaria in 1167, the resistance of the communes revived. He was faced with the need to make concessions either to the Lombard League or to Alexander III and after his defeat at Legnano in 1176 he preferred to submit to the Pope. He was able to gain much from Alexander and his successors without forcing a final settlement of the territorial conflict in central Italy. His long absences in Italy weakened his position in Germany, where Henry the Lion rebelled and revived the old Guelph–Hohenstaufen feud. After Henry's overthrow in 1181, however, Frederick became an awe-inspiring figure, and his power was increased by the marriage in 1186 of his son and heir, Henry, to Constance, the heiress of the Norman kingdom of Sicily. His piety was conservative: he wanted to resemble *Charlemagne, whom he had had canonized by one of his anti-popes in 1165. He saw in the *Crusade the culmination of his strivings and in 1189 he set out at the head of a large host by the land route through Hungary. He was drowned in the river Saleph in Cilicia. Compared with Anglo-Norman England, Sicily and France, the Germany he ruled was behind in the new skills of government, but Frederick, no less than their rulers, stood for a new self-confidence in the rights and values of secular authority against the increasing demands of the clerical order bent on strengthening its privileges.

'Constitutiones', ed. by L. Weiland in M.G.H., Constitutiones et Acta Publica Imperatorum et Regum, i (1893), pp. 191–463. The central narrative source until 1160 is *Otto of Freising and Rahewin's Gesta Frederici, ed. G. Waitz–B. de Simson (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1912) and F. J. Schmale (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, xvii; 1965). Eng. tr. by C. C. Mierow (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, xlix; 1953). For the later period, Ottonis de Sancto Blasio Chronica, ed. A. Hofmeister (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1912). For the Crusade, see A. Chroust (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte des Kreuzzuges Kaiser Friedrichs I (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, N.S., v; 1928). W. von Giesebrecht, Geschichte der deutschen Kaiserzeit, v (2 pts., Leipzig, 1880–1888) and vi (ed. B. von Simson, ib., 1895); H. Simonsfeld, Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reiches unter Friedrich I, i: 1152–1158 (Jahrbücher der Deutschen Geschichte, 1908). Modern studies by R. Wahl (Munich, 1941; ed. 3, 1950), K. Jordan (Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, xiii; 1959), M. Pacaut ([Paris] 1967; Eng. tr., 1970), and P. Munz (London, 1969). G. Barraclough, History in a Changing World (Oxford, 1955), pp. 73–96, 'Frederick Barbarossa and the Twelfth Century'. A. L. Poole, 'Frederick Barbarossa and Germany' in C. Med. H., v (1939), ch. xii, pp. 381–412, and U. Balzani, 'Frederick Barbarossa and the Lombard League', ib., ch. xiii, pp. 413–53; bibl., pp. 878–84. H. Heimpel in Neue Deutsche Biographie, v (1961), pp. 459–78, s.v., with bibl.

FREDERICK II (1194–1250), Holy Roman Emperor and king of Sicily. His father, the Hohenstaufen Emp. Henry VI, died at Messina in 1197 and his mother Constance the following year, so that the young Frederick grew up in Palermo, the victim of intrigues and struggles which damaged not only the rights of his crown but also his personality. His guardian, Pope *Innocent III, tried to keep him and the regno (S. Italy and Sicily) under his tutelage, but he needed Frederick's help against the Guelph Emp. Otto IV, who, after Innocent had crowned him in 1209, broke his engagements to the Papacy in Italy. Frederick was thus able to regain his lost family position north of the Alps; when in 1220 the German princes and bishops were induced to elect his son Henry VII King of the Romans, the empire and the regno once more had a single ruler of the Hohenstaufen dynasty, a situation which both the Papacy and the Lombard cities had reason to fear. Already in 1215, at his coronation at Aachen, Frederick had taken the cross, but he needed time to rebuild the government of his South-Italian kingdom and postponed his departure more than once. Excommunicated by Pope *Gregory IX, he set out in 1228 and by agreement with the Sultan al-Kamil he regained Jerusalem for the Latins and crowned himself king in the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre. Here also he uttered the first of his great manifestos, exalting his majesty by presenting himself as the instrument of God in the place of David. Back in Italy he reconquered his invaded provinces and with many concessions wrested absolution and peace from the reluctant Pope by the Peace of San Germano in 1230. In Germany he crushed a rebellion of his son Henry and astonished the princes with his exotic Saracen guards and oriental spendour. Yet in 1236, at the translation of his recently canonized kinswoman, St. *Elizabeth, he wore the cowl of a *Cistercian monk. Shortly afterwards he opened his long-delayed offensive against the Lombard communes, and the inevitable and final breach with the Papacy followed. The conflict was fought relentlessly and Pope *Innocent IV, elected in 1243, after some negotiations, ceased to desire peace on any terms. Frederick's propaganda yielded nothing to the Papacy's in grandeur of style and struck a new note of warning against the curia's greed and ambition. His emperorship became increasingly messianic and eschatological, while his enemies branded him as *antichrist. The military strength of the anti-imperial cities, conspiracy and treachery in his entourage exposed the narrow base of his regime and its ruthless fiscal severity in the South, but when he died at Castel Fiorentino in 1250 the conflict was not yet clearly decided in Italy or in Germany. Frederick could charm and dazzle, but suspicion, pride and obstinacy marred his judgement. An accomplished linguist, fluent in Arabic and interested in the sciences no less than the occult, he transcended the conventions of western Christian kingship, not always to his advantage. He has been wrongly hailed as the prophet, if not the founder, of the modern state. His actions and the rhetoric of his chancery only took the ideas of sacred emperorship to their furthest limits. They remained unfulfilled, but neither the culture of his court nor the tenor of his anti-papal propaganda perished with him.

Principal official docc. pr. in J. L. A. Huillard-Bréholles (ed.), Historia Diplomatica Friderici Secundi (6 vols. in 11, Paris, 1852–61, with important introd. in prefatory vol., ib., 1859). E. Winkelmann, Kaiser Friedrich II (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 2 vols. [1218–33]; 1889–97). The standard modern work, in spite of being somewhat panegyrical, is the life by E. Kantorowicz (Berlin, 1927; suppl. vol., 1931; Eng. tr., 1931). In Eng. there is also the classic life by T. L. Kington (2 vols., London, 1862), and a modern study by T. C. van Cleve (Oxford, 1972). Other studies by K. Pfister (Munich, 1942; with bibl., pp. 391–408), R. Wahl (ib., 1948; also with bibl.), and H. M. Schäller (Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, xxxiv; 1964). A collection of papers publd. 1939–1965, ed. G. Wolf, Stupor Mundi. Zur Geschichte Friedrichs II. von Hohenstauffen (Wege der Forschung, ci; Darmstadt, 1966). N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (1957), pp. 99–123. A. L. Poole in C. Med. H., vi (1929), pp. 80–109; M. Schipa, ib., pp. 131–65, with bibl., pp. 863–74. See also bibl. to Crusades.

FREDERICK III (1463–1525), Elector of Saxony, surnamed 'the Wise'. (He is not to be confused with Frederick II (1482–1556), Elector of the Palatinate, also known as 'the Wise'.) He succeeded his father, Ernst, as Elector in 1486. In 1500 he became president of the Council of Regency (Reichsregiment). From the outset he showed himself interested in the New Learning and in the reform of the Church. In 1502 he founded the university of *Wittenberg and later invited M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon to teach there. When in 1518 Luther was cited to Rome, Frederick intervened, secured his trial on German soil, and led the Pope to choose C. von *Miltitz, a Saxon nobleman, to act as his nuncio. In 1520 he refused to put into execution the bull '*Exsurge Domine' (15 June 1520) against the Reformer, and after the Diet of *Worms (1521) had imposed the Imperial ban, he procured him a hiding-place at the *Wartburg. His natural caution and reputation for justice earned him the title of 'the Wise'. How far he himself accepted Lutheran ideas is disputed. He certainly protested against the iconoclastic tendencies of Luther's followers. See also Spalatin, Georg.

G. Spalatin's historischer Nachlass und Briefe. Aus dem Originalhandschriften hrsg. von C. G. Neudecker–L. Preller: i, Friedrichs des Weisen Leben und Zeitgeschichte (1851). M. M. Tutzschmann, Friedrich der Weise, Kurfürst von Sachsen, ein Lebensbild aus dem Zeitalter der Reformation (1848); T. Kolde, Friedrich der Weise und die Anfänge der Reformation (1881); P. Kirn, Friedrich der Weise und die Kirche [1926]. A. Koch, 'Die Kontroverse über die Stellung Friedrichs des Weisen zur Reformation' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, xxiii (1926), pp. 213–60. R. Bruck, Friedrich der Weise als Förderer der Kunst (Studien zur deutschen Kunstgeschichte, Hft. xlv; 1903). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 279–83, s.v. 'Friedrich der Weise'.

FREDERICK III (1515–76), Elector Palatine of the Rhine, surnamed 'the Pious'. Through his wife Maria (d. 1567), the daughter of Casimir of Bayreuth, whom he married in 1537, Frederick became well disposed towards the *Calvinists. In 1559 he succeeded to the Palatine Electorate. At first he suppressed his personal leanings to Calvinism and sought to foster in his dominions unity between Calvinists and *Lutherans; but, meeting with little success, he came out openly on the side of Calvinism and in 1563 caused the *Heidelberg Catechism (q.v.) to be drawn up and imposed on Catholics and Lutherans alike. To further the Calvinist cause, he sent aid in men and money both to the *Huguenots of France and the rebels in the Netherlands; and also supported Calvinism in many parts of Germany beyond his own territories. He was constantly intriguing against the Catholic Electors in the Diet to secure the abrogation of the 'ecclesiastical reservation' of 1555. His son, Louis VI (d. 1583), who succeeded him in the Electorate, abandoned Calvinism for Lutheranism.

Letters ed. A. Kluckhohn (2 vols. in 3, Brunswick, 1868–1872); id., Friedrich der Fromme, Kurfürst von der Pfalz, der Schützer der reformirten Kirche, 1559–1576 (Nördlingen, 1879). C. P. Clasen, The Palatinate in European History, 1559–1660 (Oxford, 1963; revised ed., 1966), esp. pp. 12–19. T. J. Ney in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 275–8, s.v. 'Friedrich III'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), pp. 376–8 (Nos. 32124–48).

FREE CHURCH FEDERAL COUNCIL. The Council formed in 1940 by the union of the National Free Church Council and the Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. See foll. entry.

FREE CHURCH FEDERATION. Following a congress in Manchester in 1892 a National Free Church Council was formed to which was affiliated a loose network of local councils. Membership was not grounded on any representative principle and the annual assembly dealt with a wide range of public questions as well as theological and ecclesiastical matters. Hugh Price *Hughes, a *Methodist, and John *Clifford, a *Baptist, played notable parts in the movement. In 1919, under the leadership of J. H. *Shakespeare, of the Baptist Union, the Federal Council of Evangelical Free Churches was organized. There was a declaratory statement of common faith and practice, which excluded *Unitarians, and membership was put on an officially approved representative basis. In 1940 the National Free Church Council united with the Federal Council in the *Free Church Federal Council. The resulting body provides the machinery for joint representation and action by the Free Churches, and for the possible further development of federal relationships between them.

E. K. H. Jordan, Free Church Unity. History of the Free Church Council Movement, 1896–1941 (1956).

FREE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. A small Protestant body which traces its beginnings to a dispute in 1843 between H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of *Exeter, and one of his clergy, James Shore, in charge of Bridgetown chapel-of-ease, Totnes. Shore's cause was taken up by T. E. Thoresby (d. 1883), a Minister of the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion, and eventually in 1863 the Free Church of England received definite shape in association with the latter. It accepted the *Thirty-Nine Articles and recognized the legitimacy of episcopacy, though its ministry at first was presbyterian. Later in the century it became affiliated to a similar group, which had separated in 1873 from the Protestant Episcopal (Anglican) Church in U.S.A. under G. D. Cummins, formerly Assistant Bp. of Kentucky, and known as the 'Reformed Episcopal Church'. This association enabled the English body to obtain episcopal orders. In 1927 the two bodies were legally united.

F. Vaughan [Bishop Primus], A History of the Free Church of England, otherwise called the Reformed Episcopal Church [1938]. G. H. Jones in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 629–31, with bibl., p. 632, s.v. 'Reformed Episcopal Church'.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, The. The religious body formed at the *Disruption (1843) by the separation of nearly a third of the ministers and members of the established Church of *Scotland. In 1900 it united with the *United Presbyterian Church to form the *United Free Church (q.v.).

FREE CHURCHES. See Nonconformity.

FREE FROM ROME MOVEMENT. See Los von Rom.

FREE SPIRIT, Brethren of the. See Brethren of the Free Spirit.

FREEMASONRY, Christianity and. The origins of the Freemasons go back probably to the 12th cent., when the English masons established a religious fraternity under the protection of St. *John the Baptist, to guard the secrets of their craft. In the later Middle Ages this brotherhood came to be concerned almost exclusively with the moral and religious education of its members. It was abolished by *Edward VI in 1547, but later reorganized for social and educational purposes, and in the 18th cent. became a stronghold of *Deism. Freemasonry spread from England to many other countries. In France, Italy, and the other Latin countries the Masonic Lodges were openly hostile to the Church and to religion in general, whereas in England, Germany, and the Germanic countries they professed for the most part an undoctrinal Christianity. The hostility of Latin Freemasonry to religion led to its repeated condemnation by the Church and the prohibition of membership for Catholics under pain of excommunication. The subject was dealt with by many Popes, among them Clement XII (1738), *Benedict XIV (1751), and *Pius VII (1814). *Pius IX attacked Freemasonry in several pastorals and allocutions, and esp. in the '*Syllabus' of 1864, and *Leo XIII in the encyclical 'Humanum Genus' of 20 Apr. 1884. Acc. to the CIC can. 2335 Freemasons incur excommunication ipso facto reserved to the Holy See. In Great Britain as well as in the U.S.A. Freemasonry, though undogmatic, demands belief in God from its members and is not hostile to religion as such. It is concerned chiefly with philanthropic and social activities and has the support of royalty and the nobility, many of whom it counts among its members. Members of the E. Orthodox Church are forbidden to become Freemasons under pain of excommunication.

FREER LOGION, The. The saying attributed to Christ in a remarkable passage added to the text of Mk. 16. 14 in the 5th cent. Greek Codex 'W', now in the Freer Museum at Washington. It runs: 'The limit of the years of the power of Satan is fulfilled; but other fearful things draw near even upon them for whom, because they had sinned, I was delivered unto death that they may return unto the truth and sin no more; that they may inherit the spiritual and incorruptible glory of righteousness in heaven. But go ye into all the world', &c. [as in Mk. 16. 15]. Though the passage forms no part of the original text, as the whole of Mk. 16. 9–20 is a later addition to the gospel, its language is in agreement with its context, and it may well be of the same provenance and date. It appears to have been known to St. *Jerome.

Text in H. A. Sanders, The Washington Manuscript of the Four Gospels (University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series, ix; 1912), p. 246; repr. in V. Taylor, The Gospel According to St. Mark (1952), with Eng. tr., p. 614 f. C. R. Gregory, Das Freer Logion (Versuche und Entwürfe, i; 1908).

FREEWILL OFFERINGS. In the Hebrew sacrificial system, one of the three forms of peace offering (Lev. 7. 11–16) was so named because it went beyond what legal demands required. It resembled the 'votive offering' in being made in connexion with a prayer for particular blessings, but differed in being offered whether the blessing was granted or not. The feast of harvest was customarily accompanied by such a freewill offering (Deut. 16. 10). In modern times the term has been applied to a method of Church finance whereby members of the congregation agree to pay regular contributions to a 'freewill offering fund' over and above, or in place of, the usual collections made in times of Divine service.

FRENCH PROTESTANTS. See Huguenots.

FREQUENCY OF COMMUNION. See Communion, Frequency of.

FRERE, WALTER HOWARD (1863–1938), Bp. of *Truro. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and Wells Theological College, he was ordained in 1887. He was a High Churchman, and in 1892 joined the *Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield, in which he was Superior from 1902 to 1913, and again from 1916 to 1922. In 1923 he became Bp. of Truro. He was a leading authority on liturgical matters, and, in matters of practice, an advocate of 'English' rather than 'Roman' forms of ceremonial. His writings in this field include The Use of Sarum (2 vols., 1898, 1901); A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (based on F. Procter's earlier work; 1901); and The Principles of Religious Ceremonial (1906). He was also actively interested in promoting the reunion of Christendom, esp. between the Anglican and E. Orthodox Churches; and he took part in the *Malines Conversations. In 1935 he resigned the see of Truro and ended his life at Mirfield.

J. H. Arnold–E. G. P. Wyatt (edd.), Walter Howard Frere. A Collection of his Papers on Liturgical and Historical Subjects (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxxv; 1940); R. C. D. Jasper (ed.), Walter Howard Frere. His Correspondence on Liturgical Revision and Reconstruction (ib., xxxix; 1954). Memoir ed. C. S. Phillips (London, 1947). A. H. Thompson in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 296 f.

FRIAR. The distinctive title of a brother (frater) or member of one of the Mendicant Orders founded during the Middle Ages. In England these orders were chiefly distinguished by the colours of their mantles, the four chief being the 'Grey Friars' (*Franciscans), the 'Black Friars' (*Dominicans), the 'White Friars' (*Carmelites), and the '*Austin Friars'. Among others were the 'Trinity' or 'Red Friars', and the '*Crutched' or 'Crossed Friars'.

FRIDAY (Old Engl. frigedæg, 'day of [the goddess] Frig', the wife of Odin). In the Christian Church, Friday is widely kept as a weekly commemoration of the Passion of Christ, being traditionally observed by *abstinence from meat (*Christmas Day, if it falls on a Friday, is excepted by the rubrics of the BCP, and, in the RC Church, certain other great festivals also) or by other acts of penitence or charity. The *Wednesday and Friday fasts were probably derived from the Jewish bi-weekly fast. The primitive practice was to keep a complete fast until 3 p.m., when a service took place, which in some places was the *Eucharist, and elsewhere in essentials an *Ante-Communion. Friday is the Moslem sabbath, in commemoration of the creation of *Adam on this day (Gen. 1. 24–31). See also First Fridays and Good Friday.

Early reff. to the observance of Friday in *Didache, viii. 1, and *Hermas, Simil., v. 1. For the Friday abstinence, see CIC, can. 1252; modifications in the traditional observance were permitted by the Apostolic Constitution 'Paenitemini' (17 Feb. 1966), pr. in A.A.S., lviii (1966), pp. 177–85. G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xi; 1959), pp. 168–206.

FRIDAYS, First. See First Fridays.

FRIDESWIDE, St. (d. c. 735), patron saint of the city and university of *Oxford. The little that is known of her depends on much embellished 12th cent. and later sources. Acc. to these she was the daughter of Didanus, a Mercian prince, and, after taking a vow of virginity, fled to Oxford to avoid marriage with a neighbouring prince, King Algar. Here, after taking refuge for three years in a village near by named Benton (perh. Binsey), she founded a nunnery over which she became abbess. A monastery bearing her name and occupied by secular canons is known to have existed in Oxford before the Conquest. Its occupants were succeeded by *Augustinian Canons in or before 1122. Her shrine, translated on 12 Feb. 1180 and again in 1289, became a place of pilgrimage until its spoliation in 1538. Twice a year the shrine was solemnly visited by the university and in 1434 Abp. H. *Chichele ordered her feast (19 Oct.) to be observed as that of the patroness of the university. In 1525 St. Frideswide's monastery was suppressed by T. *Wolsey as part of his plan for Cardinal College; and in 1546 the monastic church became the cathedral of the new diocese of Oxford. In 1561 the relics of St. Frideswide were mixed by J. *Calfhill with the remains of the wife of *Peter Martyr (Vermigli) which had been buried in the cathedral under *Edward VI. Her festival was abolished in 1549, but it appears in the Latin BCP of 1560 and in the Oxford University Calendar.

AA.SS., Oct. VIII (1853), pp. 533–90. F. M. Stenton, 'St. Frideswide and her Times' in Oxoniensia, i (1936), pp. 103–12; repr. in Preparatory to Anglo-Saxon England, ed. Doris M. Stenton (Oxford, 1970), pp. 224–33; E. F. Jacob, St. Frideswide the Patron Saint of Oxford (St. Frideswide Papers, i, privately pr. at Oxford, 1953). The Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Frideswide at Oxford was ed. S. R. Wigram (Oxford Historical Society, xxviii and xxxi; 1895–6).

FRIEDRICH. See also Frederick.

FRIEDRICH, JOHANNES (1836–1917), Church historian. Born at Poxdorf in Upper Franconia, he was educated at Bamberg and Munich, and taught at Munich from 1862. He soon gained a great reputation for sound historical judgement and in 1869 J. A. Hohenlohe (1823–96), Abp. of Ephesus (in partibus) and afterwards (1876) Cardinal, a leading German prelate, took him as his secretary to Rome for the *Vatican Council. He joined J. J. I. von *Döllinger (to whom he sent much of the material for *Quirinus's Letters from Rome) and others in resisting the definition of Papal Infallibility, believing it to be historically indefensible. He left Rome before the Council ended, but he refused to accept the decrees and in April 1871 he was excommunicated. The Bavarian Government offered him protection and in 1872 he was nominated professor of church history at Munich. He was at first a leading member of the *Old Catholic communion in Germany, but withdrew when it ceased to uphold clerical celibacy. His writings, which were many, include Johann Wessel (1862); Die Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands (2 vols., 1867–9); Tagebuch während des vatikanischen Concils (1871), followed by a Verteidigung (1872); a large-scale Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils (3 vols., 1877–87); Beiträge zur Geschichte des Jesuitenordens (1881); Johann Adam Möhler (1894); and Ignaz von Döllinger (3 vols., 1899–1901).

F. Hacker, 'Johannes Friedrich als Führer der altkatholischen Bewegung' in Internationale kirchliche Zeitschrift, viii (1918), pp. 252–74.

FRIENDS, Religious Society of (i.e. 'Friends of Truth'), a body of Christians, also called Quakers. The title 'Religious Society of Friends' dates from the late 18th cent.; in some parts of U.S.A. the style 'Friends' Church' has been in use since the late 19th cent.

Quakerism arose out of the religious ferment of the mid-17th cent. G. *Fox, its founder, emphasized the immediacy of Christ's teaching and held that to this consecrated buildings and ordained ministers were irrelevant. By 1655, when Quakers were mentioned in a proclamation of O. *Cromwell, they had spread throughout Great Britain and Ireland and to the continent of Europe, and in 1682 W. *Penn founded Pennsylvania on a Quaker basis. They worshipped without a set liturgy or prearrangement of any kind, and without any appointed minister, believing that God would use any one of the worshippers, man or woman, as minister. Their refusal to take oaths or pay tithes and their testimony against 'hat honour' and flattery of speech or manner to social superiors all led to persecution under the Commonwealth, intensified after the Restoration (1660). About 15,000 Friends suffered legal sentences until the *Toleration Act of 1689 ended widespread persecution; over 450 are known to have died in prison.

Towards the end of the 18th cent. Quakerism was influenced by *Quietism, and in the 19th cent. was affected by the Evangelical Movement, both in Great Britain and U.S.A. In America a split occurred in 1827–8 as a result of the teaching of Elias *Hicks (q.v.), whose emphasis on 'Christ within' seemed to set aside the authority of Scripture and the historic Christ. From 1845 onwards there were a number of later separations from orthodox Quakerism in U.S.A. by conservative groups clinging to mystical emphases and stressing the traditional custom of 'plainness of speech, behaviour and apparel'. In Britain there were three minor secessions: that following the evangelical 'Beacon controversy' of the 1830s, so named from the Beacon to the Society of Friends (1835) by Isaac Crewdson (1780–1844), which criticized Hicks's views; the conservative 'Fritchley group' of the 1860s; and the small group preoccupied with 'modern thought' whose activities resulted in the Manchester Difficulty of 1870.

Between 1667 and 1671 Fox and other Friends established a series of Meetings for Church affairs. The central unity was and still is the 'Monthly Meeting' (in Britain covering several neighbouring congregations, which may have 'Preparative Meetings'). The 'Monthly Meeting' is responsible for membership and pastoral care, and matters of discipline. County 'Quarterly Meetings' were established with a 'Yearly Meeting' in London for the whole country. By the end of the 17th cent. there were six 'Yearly Meetings' in the world, each autonomous but most exchanging annual letters and now linked through the 'Friends World Committee for Consultation' (established 1937). The London 'Yearly Meeting' in 1675 established a 'Meeting for Sufferings', primarily to deal with matters of persecution. It is now better described as a standing representative meeting entrusted with expressing Quaker concern in such spheres as race relations, social responsibility, penal reform, relief and reconciliatory work. In other 'Yearly Meetings' the titles 'Representative Meeting' or 'Permanent Boards' are more generally used for similar bodies.

The religious tenets of the Friends are set out in the classic work of R.*Barclay (q.v.), Theologiae Verae Christianae Apologia (1676). Their central doctrine is the '*Inner Light'; its possession consists chiefly in the sense of the Divine and direct working of Christ in the soul, by which man is freed from sin, united to Christ and enabled to perform good works; its visible effects are mostly of a moral character, viz. simplicity, purity, and truthfulness. From the paramount importance given to the Inner Light derives the rejection of the Sacraments, the ministry and all set forms of worship. Quakers do, however, firmly believe in a spiritual baptism and a spiritual communion. Though there is no formal ministry, the Society recognizes certain officers with specific duties, including 'elders', responsible for the holding and due conduct of meetings for worship, and 'overseers', responsible for the pastoral care of the congregation. In parts of the U.S.A., esp. in the middle and far West, the traditional Quaker worship was replaced late in the 19th cent. by a pre-arranged form of service with hymns and a sermon. In such meetings (usually termed 'Friends' Churches') there may be a paid minister or pastor. Such systematized worship is also found in the 'mission fields' of Asia, Africa, and S. America, though, partly because of their dislike of a separate ministry, Friends were late in their interest in foreign missions and established comparatively few.

The Quaker refusal of military service and oaths often brought them into conflict with the civil authority, but in most countries they do not now suffer any particular disabilities. Until the middle of the 19th cent., with other Nonconformists, they were excluded from the Universities; they sought to express their religious convictions in commerce and industry, where many became bankers. Indeed, their devotion to social and educational work (and esp. in the 20th cent. to international relief) has earned them very widespread respect. Other Quakers, besides those already mentioned, include J. *Woolman, E. *Fry, Joseph Lancaster (1778–1838), the pioneer of elementary education; J. *Rowntree and George Cadbury (1839–1922), the cocoa manufacturers; and J. R. *Harris.

Besides Barclay's Apology (see above) the old classical work on the Society of Friends is W. Sewel's History of the Rise, Increase and Progress of the People called Quakers (1717). W. C. Braithwaite, The Beginnings of Quakerism (1912; ed. 2 by H. J. Cadbury, Cambridge, 1955); id., The Second Period of Quakerism (1919; ed. 2 by H. J. Cadbury, Cambridge, 1961); A. N. Brayshaw, The Quakers (1921); E. Grubb, Quaker Thought and History (1925); R. M. Jones, The Faith and Practice of the Quakers (1927); E. Russell, The History of Quakerism (New York, 1943); H. Brinton, Friends for 300 Years. Beliefs and Practice of the Society of Friends since George Fox started the Quaker Movement (1953); Elfrida Vipont, The Story of Quakerism 1652–1952 (1954); J. Sykes, The Quakers. A new look at their place in society (1958); H. Barbour, The Quakers in Puritan England (1964); Elizabeth Isichei, Victorian Quakers (Oxford, 1970).

FRIENDS OF CATHEDRALS. See Cathedrals, Friends of.

FRIENDS OF GOD. See Gottesfreunde.

FRITH, JOHN (c. 1503–33), Protestant martyr. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. In 1525 T. *Wolsey made him a junior canon of his newly founded 'Cardinal College' (Christ Church), Oxford. In 1528 he was imprisoned for heresy, but escaped to Marburg, where he assisted W. *Tyndale with his work on the Bible. On his return in 1532 he was arrested, and after a book of his on the sacraments (written for a friend and not intended for publication) had come into the hands of T. *More, he was condemned to death for denying that *purgatory and *transubstantiation were necessary dogmas, and burned at Smithfield on 4 July 1533. While at Marburg he had published A Pistle to the Christen Reader; Antithesis wherein are compared together Christ's Acts and our Holy Father the Pope's (1529) and A Disputation of Purgatory (1531).

The Whole Works of W. Tyndall, John Frith and Doct. Barnes, ed. by J. *Foxe ('1572'), incl. short life (separately paginated). Life from J. Foxe, Acts and Monuments of the Christian Martyrs, with extracts from his collected works, pr. in [L. Richmond (ed.)] The Fathers of the English Church: or A Selection from the Writings of the Reformers and Early Protestant Divines of the Church of England, i (1807), pp. 341–474. D. Alcock, John Frith, Scholar, Reformer and Martyr ('Lives of Great Men' [1904]; pamphlet). A. C. Bickley in D.N.B., xx (1889), pp. 278–80.

FROBEN, JOHN (c. 1460–1527), 'Frobenius', printer and scholar. A native of Hammelburg, Bavaria, Froben studied at Basle and in 1491 started in the city a press whose high standards of scholarship and accuracy soon made his name famous throughout Europe. In his earlier years he worked in close association with Johannes Amerbach (1443–1513). From c. 1513 onwards *Erasmus, whose friendship Froben had had the good fortune to make, prepared or supervised a long series of editions for Froben's press, the most famous being Erasmus' editio princeps of the Greek Testament (1516). Among the Church Fathers which Erasmus edited through Froben were *Jerome (1516), *Cyprian (1520), *Hilary of Poitiers (1523), *Ambrose (1527), and *Augustine (1528). A generous patron of scholarship, he died poor. After his death his press was carried on by his son, Jerome Froben, and his son-in-law, Nicolaus Episcopius.

Various of his letters are pr. among the correspondence of Erasmus, ed. P. S. Allen (11 vols., Oxford, 1906–47; for details see index vol., 1958) and in Die Amerbachkorrespondenz, ed. A. Hartmann, vols. i–iii (Basel, 1942–7). I. Stockmeyer and B. Reber, Beiträge zur Basler Buchdruckergeschichte (1840), pp. 85–115, incl. list of books publd. by him. P. S. Allen, 'Erasmus' Relations with his Printer' in Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, xiii (1916), pp. 297–321.

FROISSART, JEAN (c. 1335–c. 1405), French chronicler. He was a native of Valenciennes, and at an early age visited the English court, whither he returned in 1361. The consort of Edward III, Philippa of Hainault, became his benefactress, at whose suggestion he went to Scotland in search of material for his chronicles. He returned to France in 1367. From 1373 to 1382 he was parish priest at Les Estinnes, nr. Thuin, and from 1383 till his death canon at Chimay. These offices, however, did not prevent him from undertaking lengthy journeys over much of Europe collecting first-hand information for his work. These famous 'Chroniques' relate in four books the history of the more considerable European countries between 1325 and 1400, most of it being based on eye-witness accounts. The work presents a remarkably lively picture of the times of the Hundred Years War, though it is unreliable in chronological and geographical details. Much of it is derived from a similar work by Jean le Bel, a canon of Liège.

Froissart also wrote poems of love and adventure in the style of his time.

Œuvres de Froissart. Chroniques ed. le Baron Kervyn de Lettenhove (28 vols., Brussels, 1867–77), with revised ed. of id., Froissart. Étude littéraire sur le XIVe siècle (2 vols. bound in one, 1857) in vol. i; Poésies ed. A. Scheler (3 vols., ib., 1870–2). Best ed. of Chroniques, publd. by the Société de l'Histoire de France, ed. S. Luce–F. Raynaud–L. Mirot (1869 ff.; 12 vols. (up to 1388) in 1931). Eng. tr. by Sir John Berners (London, 1523), ed. W. P. Ker (6 vols., 1901–3); modern tr. by T. Johnes (5 vols., London, 1805–10); abridged ed. by G. C. Macaulay (London, 1895); condensed version of Chronicles, in Eng. tr., in Everyman's Library, lvii; 1906. Eng. trr., also abridged, by J. Jolliffe (London, 1967) and G. Beretson (Penguin Classics, 1968). M. Darmesteter, Froissart (Paris, 1894; Eng. tr., 1895). F. S. Shears, Froissart, Chronicler and Poet (1930); G. G. Coulton, The Chronicler of European Chivalry (1930). B. J. Whiting, 'Froissart as a Poet' in Mediaeval Studies, vii (1946), pp. 189–216.

FRONTAL (Lat. antependium, pallium altaris). The panel of embroidered cloth, or in some cases of wood or metal, ornamented with carving or enamel, placed in front of the altar. It is most usual for the frontal to be changeable, and its colour to agree with the liturgical colour of the season or day; and a *rubric in the 1570 *Missal ordered this practice to be followed 'where possible' (quoad fieri potest; Rubr. Gen. xx). There is no ruling on the subject in the 1970 Missal. The Anglican Canons of 1603 ordered that the Lord's Table should be 'covered, in time of Divine Service, with a carpet of silk or other decent stuff, thought meet by the Ordinary of the place' (can. 82); the requirement is repeated in the 1969 Canons (F 2).

FROUDE, RICHARD HURRELL (1803–36), *Tractarian. The elder brother of James Anthony Froude, the historian, he was educated at Eton and Oriel College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow (1826) and shortly afterwards (1827) a tutor, of his college. Intimacy with his colleague, J. H. *Newman, greatly influenced both. After travels with Newman in the Mediterranean in the winter of 1832–3, he took part at the conference on Church reform at Hadleigh Rectory (July 1833), and collaborated closely with Newman and J. *Keble in the early stages of the Tractarian Movement, though symptoms of consumption caused him to spend much of his remaining years out of England. His Remains, which were edited posthumously, with a preface by Newman (part i, 2 vols., 1838; part ii, 2 vols., 1839), and which were largely extracts from his private diary, provoked a storm. His strictures on the Reformers, the more exaggerated of them written half jestingly, were thought disloyal by those who had not known Froude personally, while the records of his spiritual and ascetic practices, which even his close friends had not suspected to lie behind his handsome appearance and lively manner, and his praise of clerical celibacy and devotion to the BVM, startled his readers.

The primary source is his Remains, referred to above. J. H. Newman, Apologia pro Vita Sua, pt. iii (ed. Oxford, 1913, pp. 125–7). R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1891), ch. iii (with some recollections by Lord Blachford appended, pp. 50–56). Louise I. Guiney, Hurrell Froude. Memorials and Comments (1904). G. [C.] Faber, Oxford Apostles. A Character Study of the Oxford Movement (1933), esp. pp. 192–224 [hostile]. W. J. Baker, 'Hurrell Froude and the Reformers' in J.E.H., xxxi (1970), pp. 243–59. P. Brendon, Hurrell Froude and the Oxford Movement (1974).

FRUCTUOSUS, St. (d. 259), Bp. of Tarragona. With two deacons, Augurius and Eulogius, he was arrested in the persecution under Valerian and burnt at the stake in the amphitheatre. The acta of his passion seem certainly authentic. His martyrdom is referred to by *Prudentius (Peristephanon, hymn 6) and St. *Augustine (serm. 273). Feast day, 21 Jan.

AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 339–42. His Acta are also pr. in T. *Ruinart, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 220–3. P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, viii (S.T., lxv; 1935), 'Gli atti di S. Fruttuoso di Tarragona', pp. 127–99, incl. text, pp. 183–94. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 691.

FRUITS OF THE HOLY GHOST. These, based on Gal. 5. 22 f. (AV, RV), are 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance', to which the *Vulgate text adds 'modesty, continence, chastity', making twelve in all. That the correct number of the fruits is twelve is defended on theological grounds by St. *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. II. i, q. 70, a. 3.

A. Gardeil, O.P., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 944–9; C. A. Bernard, S.J., in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1569–75, both s.v. 'Fruits du Saint-Esprit'.

FRUMENTIUS, St. (c. 300 – c. 380), 'Apostle of the Abyssinians'. Acc. to *Rufinus (H.E., i. 9 f.), Aedesius and Frumentius were the two young companions of a Tyrian merchant, Meropius. After all three were captured on the way back from a voyage to 'India' by the Ethiopians, Meropius was executed, but the two others, who were both Christians, were taken before the King at *Axum, whom they later assisted in the government of his country. Frumentius took advantage of the opportunity to carry on mission work, and on reporting the fruits of his work at *Alexandria was consecrated bishop by St. *Athanasius c. 340. He received the title '*Abuna', i.e. 'Our Father', which was henceforward assumed by the holders of the primacy of the Abyssinian Church. Frumentius appears to have been a strong opponent of *Arianism. Feast day, by the Greeks, 30 Nov., by the Copts, 18 Dec.; in the W., 27 Oct.

Frumentius is also mentioned in the 5th-cent. Histories of *Socrates (I. 19), *Sozomen (II. 24), and *Theodoret (I. 22); cf. also Athanasius, Apol. ad Const., 31. AA.SS., Oct. XII (1867), pp. 257–70, with discussion of chronology. L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, iii (1910), pp. 576–8.

FRY, ELIZABETH (1780–1845), *Quaker prison reformer. Born at Norwich, the third daughter of John Gurney, banker, in 1800 she married Joseph Fry, a London merchant and a strict Quaker, by whom she had a large family. In 1808 she established a girls' school at Plashet, nr. East Ham. In 1811 she was admitted a 'minister' in the Society of Friends and became a noted speaker. In 1813 her interest was aroused in the appalling state of the prisons and, at the instigation of William Forster (1784–1854), she devoted herself to the welfare of female prisoners in Newgate. Here her Bible readings made a deep impression. In 1817 she formed an association to supply clothes for the destitute and began a campaign for prison reform which aimed at the separation of the sexes, classification of criminals, female supervision of women and adequate provision of secular and religious instruction; and in 1818 she gave evidence on the state of the prisons to a committee of the House of Commons. From now on she devoted herself increasingly to other classes of the helpless, took part in the formation of a 'Nightly Shelter for the Homeless' in London (1820), and instituted visiting societies in Brighton and elsewhere to deal with mendicancy. In her later years she travelled extensively in Europe, fostering prison reform. Under her influence libraries were provided in all coastguard stations in 1836, and in the naval hospitals at Plymouth and Haslar, Portsmouth. Behind all her philanthropic work there was a strong Christian impulse and she never ceased to combine it with active evangelization.

Her writings include Texts for Every Day in the Year (1831) and a report, issued jointly with her brother, J. J. Gurney, on Irish social conditions (1827). In 1846 an asylum was founded in her memory in Mare Street, Hackney, for women discharged from prison under the name of the 'Elizabeth Fry Refuge'.

Memoir, with extracts from her journal and letters, ed. by two of her daughters (2 vols., 1847; revised and enlarged ed. 1848; abridged ed. by Mrs. F. Cresswell, daughter, 1856). R. B. Johnson (ed.), Elizabeth Fry's Journeys on the Continent 1840–1841, from a Diary kept by her Niece, Elizabeth Gurney (1931). Other lives by T. Timpson (1847), S. Corder (1853), G. K. Lewis (1910), Janet P. Whitney (1937), and J. Kent (1962), all publd. at London. W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., xx (1889), pp. 294–6.

FULBERT, St. (c. 960 – 1028), Bp. of *Chartres. Born in Italy, prob. near *Rome, where he met Gerbert of Aurillac (later Pope *Sylvester II), he studied under Gerbert at *Reims and Chartres. In 990 Odo, Bp. of Chartres (968–1004), appointed him chancellor of his cathedral school. By his genius in drawing men to himself, Fulbert made the school of Chartres the most vigorous in Europe, and its distinctive tradition persisted long after his death. His range of knowledge included all the sciences studied in his day. In 1007 he became Bp. of Chartres. His extant writings comprise sermons; many poems and hymns, including the 'Chorus Novae Jerusalem' ('Ye choirs of New Jerusalem'); and letters. He was also a distinguished statesman, enjoying the confidence of the Duke of Aquitaine and the King of France, and a notable builder, though of his new cathedral only the crypt now remains. Feast day, 10 Apr.

Opera Varia ed. C. de Villiers (Paris, 1608); works repr. mainly from the 'Magna Bibliotheca Patrum' with additions and introd. notices in J. P. Migne, PL, cxli, 163–374. C. Pfister, De Fulberti Carnotensis Vita et Operibus (Paris thesis; Nancy, 1885). A. Clerval, Les Écoles de Chartres au moyen-âge (Paris thesis; Paris, 1895), pp. 30–42 and 58–142. J. A. Enders, Forschungen zur Geschichte der frühmittelalterlichen Philosophie (B.G.P.M., xvii, Hftt. 2–3; 1915), pp. 21–5. Hilda Johnstone, 'Fulbert of Chartres' in C.Q.R., cii (1926), pp. 45–67. L. C. MacKinney, Bishop Fulbert and Education at the School of Chartres (Texts and Studies in the History of Mediaeval Education, vi; Notre Dame, Indiana, 1957). Y. Delaporte, 'Fulbert de Chartres et l'École Chartraine de Chant liturgique au XIe siècle' in Études grégoriennes, ii (1957), pp. 51–81. J. M. Canal, C.M.F., 'Los sermones marianos de San Fulberto de Chartres (†1028)' in R.T.A.M., xxix (1962), pp. 33–51; id., 'Texto crítico de algunos sermones marianos de San Fulberto de Chartres o a él atribuibles', ib., xxx (1963), pp. 55–87, with 'Adición', pp. 329–33. Manitius, ii, pp. 682–94. Raby, pp. 258–63, with bibl., p. 478. A. Clerval in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 964–7; J. Geiselmann in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 443, for further bibl.; P. Viard, O.P., in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1605–11; F. Behrends in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 216 f., all s.v. Letters and Poems ed., with Eng. tr., by F. Behrends (Oxford, 1976).

FULDA. The *Benedictine abbey of Fulda in Hesse Nassau was founded in 744 by St. Sturmius, a disciple of St. *Boniface, to assist missionary work among the Saxons. Boniface's tomb made it a great pilgrimage centre, and it became a rich and powerful corporation with lands all over Germany. Under *Rabanus Maurus (abbot, 822–42), it was one of the foremost centres of Christian culture in Europe. It possessed a very fine library, of great importance for the transmission of classical and patristic texts, which disappeared during the *Thirty Years' War. In the 16th cent. the *Lutherans gained control for a time, but mainly through the work of the *Jesuits the abbey was again firmly established in Catholic hands shortly after the beginning of the 17th cent. In 1802 the abbey was finally secularized; but from 1829 Fulda has been an episcopal see.

Annales Fuldenses, 680–901, ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, i (1826), pp. 337–415. Annales Necrologi Fuldenses, 779–1065, ed. G. Waitz, ib., xiii (1881), pp. 161–218. J. F. Schannat, Historia Fuldensis (Frankfurt, 1719). P. Lehmann, Fuldaer Studien (Sb. (Bayr.), 1925, Abh. 3, and 1927, Abh. 3); id., 'Fulda und die antike Literatur' in J. Theele (ed.), Aus Fuldas Geistesleben. Festschrift zum 150jährigen Jubiläum der Landesbibliotek Fulda (Fulda, 1928), pp. 9–23; K. Christ, Die Bibliothek des Klosters Fulda im 16. Jahrhundert. Die Handschriften-Verzeichnisse (Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, Beiheft lxiv; 1933). K. Lübeck, Fuldaer Studien (Veröffentlichung des Fuldaer Geschichtsvereins, xxvii–xxix; 1949–51), and other works of this author. E. E. Stengel, Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Reichsabtei Fulda (Fulda, 1960). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2684–92, s.v. 'Fulda (Manuscrits liturgiques de)', with bibl.; J. Semmler in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 218–20, s.v., with extensive bibl.

FULGENTIUS, St. (468–533 or perhaps, as recent scholars have argued, c. 462 – 527), Bp. of Ruspe in N. Africa. He abandoned the Roman civil service for the monastic life, and suffered constant persecution from the *Arian king, Thrasamund. Soon after becoming Bp. of Ruspe c. 507 (or 502), he was banished to Sardinia with 60 other Catholic bishops, returned to Africa c. 515 (or 510) for a public debate with the Arian clergy, was banished again two years later, and finally allowed by King Hilderic to return in 523. This last date is fixed by the death of Thrasamund, and it is known that Fulgentius died at the age of 65, but the rest of the chronology of his life is disputed. It is, however, clear that he was of a scholarly disposition, that he knew some Greek, and that he was a thoroughgoing follower of St. *Augustine. He wrote many treatises, of little originality, against Arianism and *Pelagianism. A few letters survive, but of the many sermons ascribed to him, about eight are certainly authentic. His life was written by his friend *Ferrandus of Carthage. Feast day, 1 Jan.

Works ed. by the Maurist L. Mangeant (Paris, 1684) repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxv, 103–1020; crit. ed. by J. Fraipont, O.S.B. (C.C., Series Latina, xci and xciA; 1968). Life by Ferrandus ed., with Fr. tr., by G. G. Lapeyre (Paris, 1929). G. Ficker, 'Zur Würdigung der Vita Fulgentii', in Z.K.G., xxi (1900), pp. 9–42. H.-J. Diesner, Fulgentius von Ruspe als Theologe und Kirchenpolitiker (Stuttgart [1966]). J. Stiglmayr, S.J., 'Das Quicunque und Fulgentius' in Z.K.T., xlix (1924), pp. 341–57 (ascribes *Athanasian Creed to Fulgentius). Bardenhewer, v (1932), pp. 303–16. Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 489. M. Jourjon in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1612–15, s.v.

FULGENTIUS FERRANDUS. See Ferrandus.

FULKE, WILLIAM (1538–89), *Puritan theologian. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1564. He soon became involved in the *Vestiarian Controversy; indeed his zeal in persuading nearly 300 members of his college to abandon the use of the surplice in chapel led to his expulsion for a time. In 1578 he was elected Master of Pembroke Hall. He continued to take a prominent part in the Puritan cause and in 1581 disputed with the *Jesuit, E. *Campion. His many treatises in defence of extreme Protestant principles were learned and effective, though their language was often coarse and virulent. By a strange irony, it was largely his polemical attack on the *Reims version of the NT (the text of which Fulke printed side by side with that of the '*Bishops' Bible') that led to its becoming widely known in England and opened the way for its influence on the language of the AV. He was succeeded as Master of Pembroke Hall by L. *Andrewes.

Modern edd. of his Stapleton's Fortress Overthrown. A Rejoinder to Martiall's Reply. A Discovery of the Dangerous Rock of the Popish Church Commended by Sanders (1580), by R. Gibbings (*Parker Society, 1848), and of A Defence of the Sincere and True Translations of the Holy Scriptures against the Cavils of Gregory Martin (1583), by C. H. Hartshorne (ib., 1843). E. Venables in D.N.B., xx (1889), pp. 305–8.

FULLER, ANDREW (1754–1815), *Baptist divine. A native of Cambridgeshire, he was ordained pastor of the Baptist congregation at Soham in 1775, and in 1782 became minister at Kettering. While at Soham he published The Gospel worthy of all Acceptance [c. 1785], a book directed against the extreme form of *Calvinism which allowed 'nothing spiritually good to be the duty of the unregenerate'. The book greatly impressed W. *Carey, and when in 1792 the Baptist Missionary Society was founded, with Fuller as its first secretary, Carey spoke of him as 'holding the rope' while he himself 'went down into the mine'. In 1793 he published a defence of Calvinistic Baptist teaching against some *Socinian charges that free grace implies moral relaxation, and against *Deism he wrote The Gospel its own Witness (1799). He also published collections of expository and other sermons.

Complete Works, with a Memoir of his life by A. G. Fuller (son), in 23 parts (London [c. 1831–] 1846). J. Ryland, The Work of Faith, the Labour of Love, and the Patience of Hope illustrated; in the Life and Death of the Reverend Andrew Fuller (1816). Further Memoirs of his Life and Writings by J. W. Morris (London, 1815) and T. E. Fuller, grandson (London, 1863). G. Laws, Andrew Fuller. Pastor, Theologian, Ropeholder (1942). W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., xx (1889), p. 309 f.

FULLER, THOMAS (1608–61), Anglican historian. Educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, he was later Curate of St. Benet's, Cambridge (1630–3), Rector of Broadwindsor, Dorset (1634–1641), Curate of Waltham Abbey (from c. 1649; where he was summoned before O. *Cromwell's Tryers, though he managed to escape deprivation), and Rector of Cranford (1658–61). His witty and popular style won him a wide reputation. Of his historical writings, the most renowned are his Church History of Britain (1655) and his Worthies of England (posthumous, 1662), on both of which Fuller worked for a great part of his life, collecting some of his material during his campaigns with the royalist forces in the Civil War. Of a more popular kind was The Holy State and the Profane State (1642), a series of 'characters' illustrating the Christian moral ideal. He also wrote a History of the Holy War (1639), on the *Crusades, besides other works.

Full Life, with bibliography, by J. E. Bailey (1874). Collected Sermons, ed. J. E. Bailey and W. E. A. Axon (1891); Selections, ed. E. K. Broadus (1928). D. B. Lyman, The Great Tom Fuller (1935); W. Addison, Worthy Dr. Fuller (1951). S. Gibson, 'A Bibliography of the Works of Thomas Fuller, D.D.', with introd. by G. [L.] Keynes, in Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, iv (1936), pp. 63–161.

FULLO, PETRUS. See Peter the Fuller.

FUNDAMENTALISM. A movement in various Protestant bodies which began at the turn of the 19th–20th cent. and developed after the 1914–18 War, esp. in the U.S.A. Apparently in reaction against the evolutionary theories and Biblical criticism of the 19th cent., series of Bible Conferences of Conservative Protestants were held in various parts of America; that of Niagara in 1895 issued a statement of belief containing what later came to be known as the 'five points of fundamentalism', viz. the verbal inerrancy of Scripture, the divinity of Jesus Christ, the *Virgin Birth, a substitutionary theory of the *Atonement, and the physical resurrection and bodily return of Christ. The term 'fundamentalism', however, derives from a series of 12 tracts entitled The Fundamentals, of which the first appeared c. 1909. They were written by eminent evangelical leaders and widely distributed in the English-speaking world with the aid of American money. In 1919 the World's Christian Fundamentals Association was founded; it organized rallies in many American cities and during the following decade nearly all the Protestant Churches in the U.S.A. were divided into Fundamentalist and Modernist groups. The controversy attracted widespread public attention in 1925 when William Jennings Bryan (1860–1925), the American Democrat leader, assisted in the prosecution of J. T. Scopes, a school teacher of Dayton, Tennessee, who was convicted on the charge of violating the state law by teaching the doctrine of biological evolution. In a wider sense the term is applied to all profession of strict adherence to (esp. Protestant) orthodoxy in the matter of Biblical interpretation.

S. G. Cole, The History of Fundamentalism (New York, 1931). N. F. Furniss, The Fundamentalist Controversy, 1918–1931 (Yale Historical Publications, Miscellany, lix; 1954). L. Gasper, The Fundamentalist Movement (The Hague–Paris, 1963). W. G. Gatewood, Jr. (ed.), Controversy in the Twenties. Fundamentalism, Modernism, and Evolution (Nashville, Tenn., 1969), with useful bibl. [A.] G. Hebert, S.S.M., Fundamentalism and the Church of God (1957). J. I. Packer, 'Fundamentalism' and the Word of God (1958). J. Barr, Fundamentalism (1977).

FUNERAL SERVICES. See Burial Services.

G

GABBATHA. Acc. to Jn. 19. 13, the place in *Jerusalem where *Pilate sat down in judgement on Christ. The 'Hebrew' (more accurately, the *Aramaic) word is stated in the Gospel to be the equivalent of the Greek λιθόστρωτος, 'Pavement'. Modern archaeological opinion is divided as to whether the place of judgement was located in the palace built by Herod on the western hill, or in his palace-citadel, the Antonia, at the north-west corner of the Temple enclosure. In the former case, the Gabbatha from which Pilate sought to negotiate with the people (Jn. 18. 29) and where he exposed Christ (Jn. 19. 5) would be in front of the so-called Tower of David; in the latter it would be the area where a Roman pavement has been exposed beneath the Ecce Homo Convent of the Sisters of Sion.

Le Père Barnabè, d'Alsace, O.F.M., Le Prétoire de Pilate et la Forteresse Antonia (1902). L. H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1922), pp. 562–86. L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'L'Antonia et le prétoire' in R. Bibl., xlii (1933), pp. 83–113; id., 'Autour du prétoire', ib., xlvi (1937), pp. 563–70; id., 'Le Lithostrotos évangélique', ib., lix (1952), pp. 513–30; P. Benoit, O.P., 'Prétoire, Lithostroton et Gabbatha', ib., pp. 531–50. Marie Aline de Sion, La Forteresse Antonia à Jérusalem et la question du Prétoire (Paris thesis; Jerusalem, 1957).

GABIROL, SALOMON BEN. See Avicebron.

GABRIEL (Heb.), 'man of God'. One of the seven *archangels. He is mentioned in Dan. 8. 15 f. and 9. 21 f., where he assists Daniel in the understanding of his visions. In the NT he foretells the birth of St. John the Baptist to his father, Zacharias, and announces the conception of the Lord to the BVM (Lk. 1. 11 f., 1. 26). As the messenger of Divine comfort, he is accorded in Jewish theology the place of highest rank after *Michael. Feast day in the E., 26 Mar.; in the W., formerly 24 Mar. (i.e. the day before the *Annunciation); now, with Michael and *Raphael, on 29 Sept.

E. B. *Pusey, Daniel the Prophet (1864), p. 520 f. O. *Bardenhewer, Mariä Verkündigung. Ein Kommentar zu Lk. 1, 26–38 (Biblische Studien, x, Hft. 5; 1905), pp. 48–59. J. Michl in R.A.C., v (1962), cols. 239–43 s.v. 'Engel VI (Gabriel)'. See also general commentaries on St. Luke's Gospel (s.v.).

GABRIEL SEVERUS (1541–1616), theologian. A native of the Morea, Gabriel was consecrated Metropolitan of Philadelphia, now Ala-Shehr, in Asia Minor, in 1577. The see being in Turkish hands and its duties slight, Gabriel migrated to Venice to act as bishop for the Greek Christians in the Venetian Republic. There he acquired a reputation as a theologian and anti-Latin controversialist: but while opposing the RC Church, at the same time he borrowed heavily from the methods and terminology of Latin Scholasticism. His best known work is a defence of the Greek practice of venerating the eucharistic elements at the *Greater Entrance on the ground that, being dedicated for consecration, they are no longer common bread and wine, but have become 'holy' and 'honourable' by participation (μετοχικῶς), and therefore deserve a reverence only second in order to the adoration due to the consecrated Eucharist. Some of his writings were translated into Latin by R. *Simon and published by him at Paris in 1671 as Fides Ecclesiae Orientalis seu Gabrielis Metropolitae Philadelphiensis Opuscula.

M. Jugie, A.A., 'Un Théologien grec du XVIe siècle, Gabriel Sévère et les divergences entre les deux Églises' in É.O., xvi (1913), pp. 97–108, with bibl. D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, i (1909), pp. 173–5. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 977–83, s.v., also with bibl.

GAETANO DA TIENE. See Cajetan, St.

GAIRDNER, JAMES (1828–1912), English historian. In 1846 he entered the Public Record Office. His many writings include editions of the *Calendar of Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII (London, 1862–1905) and of the Paston Letters (1872–5), as well as Henry VII (1889), The English Church in the Sixteenth Century (1902), and Lollardy and the Reformation in England (4 vols., 1908–13). A diligent and accurate historian, he wrote particularly on the period of the *Reformation in England, where he believed that modern historians had commonly done less than justice to the Catholic case.

Preface by W. Hunt in his ed. of Gairdner's Lollardy and the Reformation, iv (posthumous, 1913), pp. v–xii. R. H. Brodie in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 206.

GAIRDNER, WILLIAM HENRY TEMPLE (1873–1928), Anglican missionary. Educated at Rossall and Trinity College, Oxford, he went to Cairo as a *C.M.S. missionary in 1898, was ordained priest in 1901, and worked in co-operation with his friend Douglas Thornton, whose biography he wrote (1908), until the latter's death in 1907. After prolonged study of Arabic and Islamics, he threw himself into the reorganization of the Arabic Anglican Church, with the determination to make it a living spiritual home for converted Moslems. He became the apostle of Arabic Christian scholarship and a pioneer teacher of the colloquial language, producing a Conversation Grammar of Egyptian Colloquial Arabic (1917), The Phonetics of Arabic (1925), besides hymns and versified Gospel stories in the vernacular. He also published many other works, devotional, exegetic, doctrinal, musical, and linguistic, in Arabic and in English, the Reproach of Islam (1909) being the best known.

C. E. Padwick, Temple Gairdner of Cairo (1929). M. D. Gairdner (widow; ed.), W. H. T. G. to his Friends. Some Letters and Informal Writings of Canon W. H. Temple Gairdner of Cairo, 1873–1928 [1930].

GAISFORD, THOMAS (1779–1855), Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford, from 1831. Educated at Christ Church, he became Regius professor of Greek in 1812. In 1829 he was offered the bishopric of Oxford on the death of C. *Lloyd, but refused it. His reputation rests chiefly on his contributions to the study of the Greek classics (e.g. Hephaestion, Herodotus, Stobaeus). In the field of *Patristics, he prepared critical editions of *Eusebius of Caesarea's Praeparatio (1843) and Demonstratio Evangelica (1852), as well as of the Byzantine lexicographer *Suidas (1834).

H. R. Luard in D.N.B., xx (1889), pp. 370–2, s.v. H. L. Thompson, Christ Church (1900), pp. 193–202.

GAIUS, also Caius (early 3rd cent.), Roman presbyter. Acc to. *Eusebius (H.E., II. xxv. 6; cf. VI. xx. 3), he was an orthodox Churchman (ἐκκλησιαστικὸς ἀνήρ). Under *Zephyrinus (198–217) he held a debate with a Montanist, Proclus. He accepted the thirteen Epp. of St. Paul, but rejected the Gospel and Rev. of St. John, holding them to be the work of *Cerinthus. *Photius describes him as 'Bishop of the Gentiles' (ἐθνῶν ἐπίσκοπος), but this is probably due to confusion with *Hippolytus, with whom, as we learn from a Commentary of the Jacobite, Dionysius Bar-Salibi (12th cent.), Gaius also had a controversy. His reference to the 'trophies of the apostles' (τὰ τρόπαια τῶν ἀποστόλων, Eusebius, H.E., II. xxv. 7) has been one of the key texts in the discussions about the excavations under *St. Peter's, Rome.

G. Bareille in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1309–11, s.v. 'Caius', with bibl.

GALATIANS, Epistle to the. St. *Paul wrote this letter to his Galatian converts on receiving news of a counter-mission requiring them to keep all the commands of the Jewish Law, and thereby (as he thought) imperilling the whole value of their faith in Christ.

The Epistle opens with an account of his career from his conversion onwards, intended to show (a) that he had received his commission directly from God; (b) that no human teacher had authority to change the Gospel that he, Paul, had preached; and (c) that the original *Apostles at Jerusalem, viz. *Peter, *James, and *John, had recognized the rightfulness of his mission to the Gentiles. He then emphasizes the futility of trying to live by 'law', i.e. a prescribed code of conduct, and maintains that the way in which a man is justified in the sight of God is not that of 'law' but of 'faith'. This is illustrated by the case of Abraham as the most striking example of one who was justified by belief in God's promises. As these promises to Abraham were fulfilled in Christ, all external considerations, such as whether a man is a Jew or a Greek, are transcended in the Christian Church. Those who receive them are rewarded with the gift of the Spirit, and it is the possession of the Spirit which is the condition of the Christian life and the source of its fruits, 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance' (5. 22). The epistle ends with another warning to the readers not to put their trust in Jewish observances.

The epistle, which was written with a passionate intensity of feeling, is universally recognized as genuine. Traditionally it has been held that it was addressed to Christians in the country of Galatia in the interior of Asia Minor, which had been peopled by Gauls in the 3rd cent. B.C. An objection raised against this supposition is that there is no independent evidence that St. Paul ever preached the Gospel in these parts, and hence many modern scholars, e.g. W. M. *Ramsay, K. *Lake, C. W. Emmet, have argued that 'Galatia' must be taken to mean the Roman province of Galatia, which covered a much wider area in Asia Minor; the southern part of the province included the cities of Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Derbe, and Lystra, mentioned in Acts 13 f. Among recent scholars, however, there has been a certain tendency to revert from the 'South Galatian theory' to the older, 'North Galatian' view. On either theory there are complex problems as to how to relate the events of St. Paul's life as recorded in Gal. 1 f. with those in Acts. Older scholars were almost unanimous in identifying the journey to Jerusalem in Gal. 2. 1–10 with that in Acts 15. But some Biblical students, among them J. *Calvin, but esp. exponents of the 'S. Galatian theory', have equated it with the journey in Acts 11. 29 f. and thereby explained the absence of reference to the 'decrees' of Acts 15. 20 on the assumption that the epistle was written before the Council had taken place. On this hypothesis Gal. could be dated in A.D. 50 or a little earlier, and thus be the earliest of all the NT epistles. Exponents of the N. Galatian theory tend to date it at c. A.D. 57–58 on the ground that its subject-matter has close points of contact with Romans.

Modern commentaries by J. B. *Lightfoot (Cambridge and London, 1865), W. M. Ramsay (London, 1899), H. *Lietzmann (Hb.N.T., iii, Die Briefe des Apostels Paulus, 1910, pp. 225–65; ed. 2, as separate vol. x, 1923; ed. 3, 1932), C. W. Emmet (London, 1912), M. J. *Lagrange, O.P. (Études Bibliques, 1918; ed. 4, 1942), E. de W. Burton (I.C.C., 1921), A. W. F. Blunt (Clar. Bib., 1925), G. S. Duncan (Moff. Comm., 1934), H. Schlier (H.K.N.T., Siebente Abteilung, ed. 10; 1949), P. Bonnard (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, ix, with Eph., 1953, pp. 9–132), H. N. Ridderbos, tr. into Eng. by H. Zylstra (New London Commentary, Grand Rapids, 1953; ed. 2, London, 1954), W. Neil (Camb. Bib., 1967), J. Bligh, S.J. (London, 1969), and D. Guthrie (New Cent. Bib., 1969). E. H. Askwith, The Epistle to the Galatians. An Essay on its Destination and Date (1899); D. Round, The Date of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1906). K. Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St. Paul (1911), pp. 253–323. J. H. *Ropes, The Singular Problem of the Epistle to the Galatians (Harvard Theological Studies, xiv; 1929). F. F. Bruce, 'Galatian Problems' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, li (1969), pp. 292–309, lii (1970), pp. 243–66. McNeile, pp. 143–50. F. S. Marsh in D.A.C., i (1915), pp. 430–7; A. Viard, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 211–26, s.v. 'Paul, Épitres attribuées à Saint, (4), Galates', with bibl.

GALE, THOMAS (c. 1635–1702), antiquary. After studying at Trinity College, Cambridge, he became successively Regius professor of Greek at Cambridge (1666), High Master of St. Paul's School (1672), and Dean of *York (1697). A versatile scholar of European reputation and a correspondent of J. *Mabillon, he was the editor of Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Quinque (1687) and Historiae Britannicae Scriptores (1691), the latter of which contained as its first three items the texts of *Gildas, Nennius, and Eddi. The Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores (1684), often attributed to Gale, was in fact the work of William Fulman, who collaborated with Gale in some of his other writings. These three folios, which were all published anonymously at Oxford, contained the monastic chronicles of several of the lesser houses such as Burton and Margam, and are a valuable source, not only for local history, but also for the study of the history of medieval England in general. He was also the author of several other works, including an unpublished edition of *Origen's '*Philocalia'.

J. E. B. Mayor, Cambridge in the Time of Queen Anne (1911), pp. 448–50, incl. sources and list of MSS. G. Goodwin in D.N.B., xx (1889), pp. 378–80.

GALERIUS (d. 311), Roman Emperor. An Illyrian of humble birth, he was appointed by *Diocletian in 293 to be co-regent ('Caesar') of the E. He won victories first over the Germans on the Danube (between 293 and 295) and later over the Persians. His fierce hatred of the Christians led him to persuade Diocletian to issue (303) the edicts inaugurating the eight years' persecution. On Diocletian's abdication (305), Galerius succeeded to the throne. Only under the threat of the alliance of *Constantine and Maxentius did he issue in 311 his 'Edict of Toleration'. He died shortly afterwards of a horrible disease, the details of which are described, not without considerable relish, by *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecutorum, 33).

The chief sources are Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum, 9–35, and *Eusebius, H.E., VIII. xvi f. H. M. D. Parker, A History of the Roman World from A.D. 138 to 337 (1935), pp. 229–52. H. Mattingly in C. Anc. H., xii (1939), esp. pp. 328–51. E. Stein, Geschichte des spätrömischen Reiches, i (1928), pp. 98–138. W. Ensslin in P.W., xiv (1930), cols. 2516–28, s.v. 'Maximus (Galerius)'. See also works cited under Diocletian.

GALGANI, St. GEMMA (1878–1903), Italian *stigmatic. She was born of poor parents at Camigliano in Tuscany and lived most of her life at Lucca. Ill-health frustrated her desire of becoming a *Passionist nun, though she took the three vows privately and, in addition, a vow of perfection. She enjoyed frequent ecstasies, and received the stigmata and marks of scourging intermittently between 1899 and 1901. Apart from her conviction of occasional diabolical possession, her spiritual life was normally peaceful. She was beatified in 1933 and canonized in 1940. Feast day, 11 Apr.

Lettere, ed. by the Passionists, with preface by E. Pellegrinetti (Isola del Liri, 1941); Estasi, diario, autobiografia, ed. idd., also with preface by E. Pellegrinetti (ib., 1943). The principal secondary authority is the life by her confessor, Germano di S. Stanislao (Rome, 1907; many subsequent edd.). The most important modern study is that of E. Zoffoli, C.P. (Rome, 1957); in Eng. there are lives by B. Williamson (London [1932]) and [C. C.] Amedeo della Madre del Buon Pastore, C.P. (Rome, 1933; Eng. tr., 1935). Federico dell'Addolorata, C.P., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 183–7, s.v. 'Gemma Galgani', with detailed bibl.

GALILEE (Heb. הַגָּלִיל). (1) Originally the term was applied only to part of the tribe of Naphtali, but in NT times it was given to all the district in N. Palestine extending from the Mediterranean to the *Jordan, and the word is now generally used in this sense. It constituted one of the four Roman divisions of Palestine. Its position on the main trade routes between Egypt and Syria had made it from early times a cosmopolitan province. It was the scene of almost all the Lord's earlier life and of a great part of His ministry and included such places as *Nazareth, *Capernaum, *Bethsaida, and Magdala. Many of its chief towns were situated on the 'Sea of Galilee', a lake some 680 ft. below the level of the Mediterranean through which the R. Jordan flows.

(2) In medieval cathedrals, an outer porch or chapel to which penitents are said to have been admitted on *Ash Wednesday, before being brought into church to do their *penance.

S. Klein, Beiträge zur Geographie und Geschichte Galiläas (1909); id., Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte und Geographie Galiläas (Palästina-Studien, Hft. 1; 1923). E. Huntingdon, Palestine and its Transformation (1911), ch. viii, pp. 163–79; A. Alt, 'Die Stätten des Wirkens Jesu in Galiläa territorialgeschichtlich betrachtet' in Beiträge zur biblischen Landes- und Altertumskunde, lxviii (1951), pp. 51–71; separate Eng. tr. as Where Jesus Worked (1961). G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25; 1931), pp. 413–63. S. Merrill in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 98–102, s.v.; T. K. *Cheyne in E.Bi., i (1901), cols. 1628–32, s.v., both with bibl.

GALILEE, Testament of our Lord in. See Testament of our Lord in Galilee.

GALILEI, GALILEO (1564–1642), popularly 'Galileo', Italian astronomer and mathematician. He was a native of Pisa and educated at the monastery of *Vallombrosa, near Florence, where for a time he hoped to enter the monastic life. After studying medicine and mathematics at Pisa for four years, he was forced by poverty to leave in 1585 without taking his degree. A little later he attracted attention by his invention of the hydrostatic balance and in 1589 he was appointed mathematical lecturer at Pisa. Here from the study of falling bodies he discovered the laws of dynamics. The success of his new methods, based on empirical observation in place of deduction from abstract principles, earned him the permanent hostility of the *Aristotelians; and in 1591 he withdrew to Florence. In 1592 he was given the mathematical chair at Padua, which he held for 18 years. Here his discovery of the four satellites of Jupiter (7 Jan. 1610) by the aid of his newly invented telescope revolutionized the study of astronomy and led him to indicate in the Sidereus Nuntius (1610) his belief in the *Copernican theory of the solar system; and his name became famous throughout Europe. In the autumn of 1610 he was appointed philosopher and mathematician extraordinary to the Duke of Tuscany at Florence. His Historia e dimostrazioni intorno alle macchie solari (1613), which boldly asserted the Copernican theory, brought him into conflict with the *Holy Office, which still maintained the Ptolemaic belief. In 1616 the Copernican theory was condemned at Rome and Galileo forbidden 'to hold, teach or defend' it. At the same time the Congregation of the *Index issued a decree suspending Copernicus' De Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestium (1543) 'until it was corrected' (usque corrigatur). Nevertheless, in 1632 Galileo broke silence and published the Dialogo dei due massimi sistemi del mondo, a sharp attack on Ptolemaic astronomy. The work was handed over to the *Inquisition; and in the following year Galileo was summoned to Rome, forced to recant under threat of torture, and condemned to imprisonment as 'vehemently suspected of heresy'. His famous words Eppur si muove ('None the less it does move') seem, however, to be legendary. After a few months of confinement, he was allowed to return to Florence, where he died on 15 Feb. 1642. He is buried in the church of Santa Croce.

The primary documents relating to the heresy charge are in two series, viz. the registers of the Trial and the registers of the Decrees, both belonging to the Holy Office. The former were taken to France by Napoleon in 1811 and returned to Rome in 1845 only on condition of publication. The first complete ed. was that by C. von Gebler (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1876–7). New and more accurate ed., which also includes the first crit. ed. of Decrees, by A. Favaro (Florence, 1907). Standard ed. of Galileo's Works is the 'Edizione Nationale' by id. and others (20 vols., Florence, 1890–1909). There is a vast literature, listed in A. Carli–A. Favaro, Bibliografia galileiana (1568–1895) (Rome, 1896); G. Boffito Bibliografia galileiana (1896–1940) (1943); and E. Gentili, Bibliografia galileiana fra I due centenari (1942–1964) (Milan, 1966). Works available in Eng. include J. J. Fahie, Galileo, His Life and Work (1903); F. R. Wegg Prosser, Galileo and his Judges (1889); F. S. Taylor, Galileo and the Freedom of Thought (1938); L. Geymonat, Galileo Galilei (Turin, 1957; Eng. tr., New York–London, 1964); J. Brodrick, S.J., Galileo. The Man, his Work and his Misfortunes (1964); J. J. Langford, Galileo, Science and the Church (New York, 1966), and E. McMullin (ed.), Galileo Man of Science (New York–London [1968]). Other general works include A. Favaro, Galileo e lo studio di Padova (1883); A. [A.] Koyré, Études galiléennes (3 vols., 1939); Nel quarto centenario della nascita di Galileo Galilei (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Contributi, Serie 3, Scienze Storiche, viii; 1966); O. Loretz, Galilei und der Irrtum der Inquisition (1966); and Galilée. Aspects de sa vie et de son œuvre, with preface by Suzanne Delorme (Centre International de Synthèse, 1968). E. Vacandard in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1058–94, s.v.

GALL, St. (c. 550–645), missionary. An Irishman, he was one of the twelve disciples who accompanied St. *Columbanus from (the Irish) *Bangor to Gaul and established themselves with him at *Luxeuil. He separated from Columbanus in 612, when the latter went to Italy, and remained in the part of Swabia which is now Switzerland, living mostly as a hermit. He is symbolically represented in art by a bear. Feast day, 16 Oct.

The famous Benedictine monastery at St. Gallen dates from about a hundred years later, though tradition traces it back to St. Gall's time. From the end of the 9th cent. its '*scriptorium' and collection of MSS. were for long among the most famous in Europe. The monastery seems to be unique in still housing a library which made it celebrated over a thousand years ago.

(1) SAINT. Contemporary reff. in Jonas, 'Vita S. Columbani'. The oldest Life of St. Gall ('Vita Vetustissima') dates from c. 750; surviving fragments ed. by E. Egli in N.A., xxi (1895), pp. 361–71, and B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, IV (1902), pp. 251–6. Life by Walafrid Strabo in Acta Sanctorum O.S.B., II (1669), pp. 228–68; modern ed. by B. Krusch, loc. cit., 280–337; Eng. tr. by Maud Joynt (Translations of Christian Literature, Ser. V, 1927). Fragments of metrical life by *Notker in M.G.H., Poetae Latinae, IV, ii (1923), pp. 1093–1108. On St. Gall's life see also B. Krusch, loc. cit., pp. 229–41. Barbara and H. Helbling, 'Der heilige Gallus in der Geschichte' in Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Geschichte, xii (1962), pp. 1–62. F. Blanke, Columban und Gallus. Urgeschichte des schweizerischen Christentums (Zürich, 1940). E. G. Rüsch, Das Charakterbild des Gallus im Wandel der Zeit (St. Gall, 1959), with reff.

(2) ABBEY. H. Wartmann [contd. by P. Bütler, T. Schiess, and others], Urkundenbuch der Abtei St. Gallen (6 vols., 1863–1955); G. Meyer von Knonau (ed.), 'St. Gallische Geschichtsquellen' in Mittheilungen zur vaterländischen Geschichte, xii (N.F., ii; 1870), pp. 1–150, xiii (N.F., iii; 1872), and xv (N.F., v)–xviii (N.F., viii; 1877–81). J. von Watt (ed. by E. Götzinger), Chronik der Aebte des Klosters St. Gallen (Deutsche historische Schriften, 2 vols., 1875–77). J. M. Clark, The Abbey of St. Gall as a Centre of Literature and Art (1925), with bibl. A. Merton, Die Buchmalerei in St. Gallen vom neunten bis zum elften Jahrhundert (1912); K. Löffler, 'Die Sankt Galler Schreibschule in der 2. Hälfte des 8. Jahrhunderts' in W. M. Lindsay (ed.), Palaeographia Latina, vi (St. Andrews University Publications, xxviii; 1929), pp. 5–66. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, vii (Oxford, 1956), pp. 18–44 [Nos. 893–997]. R. Sprandel, Das Kloster St. Gallen in der Verfassung des Karolingischen Reiches (Forschungen zur Oberrheinischen Landesgeschichte, vii; Freiburg i.Br., 1958).

GALLA PLACIDIA (*c.*390–450), Roman Empress. The daughter of *Theodosius I, she was carried off by Alaric the Goth, when he captured *Rome in 410, and in 414 married his successor, King Ataulf. After his murder in 415, she rejoined Honorius, her brother, and on the accession of her son, Valentinian III, in 425 she acted as regent. An important influence in the religious struggles of the time, she was an uncompromising Catholic and gave her support to Pope *Leo I in the *Eutychian controversy. She built several famous churches at *Ravenna, among them her own mausoleum, which is adorned with splendid mosaics.

V. A. Sirago, Galla Placidia e la trasformazione politica dell'Occidente (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 4e Série, xxv; 1961); S. I. Oost, Galla Placidia Augusta. A Biographical Essay (Chicago–London, 1968), with bibl. T. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, I, ii (1892), pp. 817–88. C. Ricci, Il mausoleo di Galla Placidia in Ravenna (1914). Also H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 248–75; C. Cecchelli in Enciclopedia Italiana, xvi (1932), pp. 286–8.

GALLANDI, ANDREA (1709–79), *Patristic scholar. An *Oratorian priest who lived at Venice, he is best known for his Bibliotheca veterum patrum antiquorumque scriptorum ecclesiasticorum Graecorum (14 vols., 1765–81), a collection of treatises drawn from 380 writers of the first seven cents. of the Christian era, in which special attention was paid to the less-known authors. It is still a work of great service to students of the Fathers. He also published De vetustis canonum collectionibus sylloge (1778), an important collection of writings on the history of canon law.

P. Godet in D.T.C., vi (1914), col. 1095, with bibl.

'GALLIA CHRISTIANA'. A documentary account of the bishoprics, bishops, abbeys, and abbots of France. It derives from a work under this title first published by Claude Robert in 1626. A later edition issued in 1656 was approved by the Assembly of the French Clergy, but only after a passage suspected of *Jansenism had been removed. Since the beginning of the 18th cent., when a thorough revision was undertaken by the *Maurist, Denys de Sainte-Marthe (1650–1725), the work has been continued chiefly by Benedictine scholars, among them, Félix Hodin, Étienne Brice and Jacques Taschereau. For students of the detailed history of France, it remains indispensable.

Work partly repr., with some minor changes, by P. Piolin, O.S.B. (Paris, 1870–77). A not very satisfactory revision was begun as Gallia Christiana Novissima by U. Chevalier (Montbéliard, 7 vols., 1899–1920). V. Fouqué, Du Gallia Christiana et de ses auteurs. Étude bibliographique (1857). A. Degert, 'Pour refaire la Gallia Christiana' in Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, viii (1922), pp. 281–301. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (1924), cols. 277–310.

GALLICAN ARTICLES, The Four (1682). The rights and privileges claimed by the French clergy at an assembly of 36 bishops and 34 deputies held at Paris on 19 March 1682. The demands arose from the dispute between Louis XIV and *Innocent XI over the appointment of bishops and the revenues of vacant sees. The document was drawn up by J. B. *Bossuet (q.v.).

The first denied that the Pope had dominion (puissance) over things temporal, and affirmed that kings are not subject to the authority of the Church in temporal and civil matters or to deposition by the ecclesiastical power, and that their subjects could not be dispensed by the Pope from their allegiance. The second upheld the decrees of the Council of *Constance (1414–18), and thus reaffirmed the authority of General Councils over the Pope. The third insisted that the ancient liberties of the Gallican Church were inviolable. The fourth asserted that pending the consent of the Church (i.e. until a General Council was convened), the judgement of the Pope is not irreformable. The Articles were quashed by the constitution 'Inter multiplices' of *Alexander VIII of 4 Aug.

1690, and by Louis XIV in 1693, but for over a decade they were taught in the French theological schools and made a test for admission to academic degrees and public office.

C. Gérin, Recherches historiques sur l'assemblée du clergé de 1682 (1869; ed. 2, revised, 1870), with text of articles, p. 317 f. of ed. 2. The constitution 'Inter Multiplices' is pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, XX (Naples, 1883), pp. 67–70, with reff. to earlier papal declarations. The main clause of the constitution, together with the text of the articles, is repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33; 1965), p. 478 f. (Nos. 2281–5). See also bibl. to Gallicanism.

GALLICAN CHANT. The early chant in the S. of France (i.e. mainly Provence, Aquitaine, etc., but to some extent also in such other places as *Reims and *Paris). Certain items can also be identified as having been retained in MSS. of Albi, St. Martial at Limoges, Toulouse, St. Yrieix, etc., encapsuled within the Roman or Gregorian chant which superseded it in Carolingian times. Certain chants, such as Populo meus on *Good Friday, for instance, have been long in use. Like the *Mozarabic music, with which it has some affinity, it was more florid than the Gregorian, and retained features of an Oriental type.

GALLICAN CONFESSION. The Confession de foi or Confessio Gallicana, adopted in the First National Synod of Protestants at Paris in 1559. The first draft was the work of J. *Calvin, but it was revised, chiefly by his pupil Antoine de la Roche Chandieu (1534–91), before its formal acceptance. It was written in French and contained 35 articles, and in substance was an epitome of Calvin's central doctrines. A modified form of it, with 40 articles, was ratified at the Synod of La Rochelle in 1571. The Confession has often been attached to editions of the French Bible.

P. *Schaff, Creeds of Christendom (1877), i, 490–8; iii, 356–82 (text). Eng. tr., with introd., also in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 137–58, with bibl. p. 140. J. Pannier, Les Origines de la Confession de Foi et la disciplines des Églises réformées de France (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses publiées par la faculté de théologie protestante de l'Université de Strasbourg, xxxii; 1936).

GALLICAN PSALTER. St. *Jerome's revision of the Latin Psalter made c. 392 on the basis of the *Hexaplaric Greek text of the LXX. Possibly under the influence of *Gregory of Tours, this version became very popular in Gaul (hence the name 'Gallican'), where it was adopted for use in the liturgy. Under the influence of *Alcuin it came to displace the Hebrew Psalter in almost all subsequent Biblical MSS. of the Vulgate and is the version normally found in printed editions of the Latin Bible. Its use for public recitation spread throughout the W. Church, though in Italy it did not displace the *Roman Psalter until the time of Pope *Pius V (1566–72). See also Psalters, Western.

GALLICAN RITE. This term is used with three meanings: (1) for the liturgical forms in use in Gaul before the adoption of the Roman Rite under *Charlemagne; (2) loosely, for all the non-Roman rites of the early W. Church; (3) for the 'Neo-Gallican' liturgies of the 17th and 18th cents. What follows relates only to (1).

It is not known why in early times the rites of N. Italy, Gaul, Spain and the *Celtic Church differed from that of Rome, nor are scholars agreed as to their provenance. The two problems are closely linked. Several explanations are offered. (1) The older theory was that the non-Roman rites could be traced back to Apostolic origin in *Ephesus, whence they spread to the W. via *Lyons (see Irenaeus). The insuperable objection to this theory, as L. *Duchesne pointed out, is that no rite of the second cent. could be so elaborate and so dependent upon the calendar as the Gallican rite was. (2) Others, e.g. Dom P. Cagin, have held that this 'non-Roman' type of rite represents the primitive Roman rite; but this theory assumes, without evidence, that the Roman rite was revised into its present form under Pope *Damasus (c. 384). (3) Another widely accepted view, e.g. that of Duchesne, was that the liturgies came from Milan, which at the turn of the 4th and 5th cents. was very influential. This view can no longer be maintained since R. H. Connolly's vindication of the Ambrosian authorship of the De Sacramentis, which includes the Roman Canon. (4) Perhaps the least unsatisfactory view is that it was indigenous to Gaul and that it developed with the introduction of variable prayers controlled by the Church calendar. The earliest evidence for this theory comes from Marseilles, c. 450, when the priest Musaeus is said by *Gennadius to have first chosen lections and responsories appropriate to feast days, and a little later to have composed a large and excellent volume of Masses (sacramentorum) containing in separate sections the 'proper' of 'offices and seasons'. The composition of Masses came to be a literary activity in Gaul and Spain; *Sidonius Apollinaris is known to have composed many. The extant Mass books are not earlier than the 8th cent. and are already partly 'Romanized', except for the eleven *Mone Masses of the 7th cent. The letters once believed to be by *Germanus of Paris have been shown by A. *Wilmart to be dependent in some passages on *Isidore of Seville and can no longer be used as evidence for the Gallican rite of the 6th cent.

The surviving Gallican Masses are far more prolix and oratorical than the austere forms of the Roman sacramentaries, and the structure of the services is in certain respects remarkably different. Some of the characteristics are shared by the *Mozarabic, Celtic and even *Ambrosian rites. The main differences of the Gallican rite, as we have it, are (1) THE *MASS. (a) The *Trisagion was regularly sung in Greek and Latin before the *Kyries (which were in threefold form) and before and after the *Gospel. (b) The *Benedictus Dominus followed the Kyries, and the *Benedicite was sung after the OT Lesson. (c) The *Diptychs and the *Kiss of Peace occurred before the *Canon. (d) The Canon, with the exception of the *Institution, varied with the season. (e) The Institution, in many extant Masses, was followed by a prayer post pridie, which was sometimes a form of *Epiclesis. (f) The *Fraction took place, accompanied by its own *antiphon, before the *Paternoster. (g) A Trinitarian hymn (the *Trecanum) was sung during the *Communion. (2) *BAPTISM. The most notable points of contrast with the Roman Rite are the placing of the profession of faith before the actual baptism and the addition of the rite of '*pedilavium'. (3) ORDINATION. The Gallican Rite seems to have included a public ceremony for the minor orders which has been borrowed by Rome. And in many ways the Gallican Ordination services have influenced the Roman. See Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua.

The Gallican Rite, which was already being conflated with the Roman in certain places in the reign of King *Pepin III, was formally 'abolished' by Charlemagne; but his order was not exactly carried out. The present Roman Rite still bears marks of its conflation with that of Gaul.

For the Mass the chief texts are the Bobbio Missal, the Missale Francorum, the Missale Gothicum*, the Missale Gallicanum Vetus*, and the Mone Masses. See also J. *Mabillon, O.S.B., De Liturgia Gallicana (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii. 101–448); M. Gerbert, O.S.B., Monumenta Veteris Liturgiae Alemannicae (St. Blasien, 1777); J. M. *Neale and G. H. *Forbes, The Ancient Liturgies of the Gallican Church (Burntisland, 1855); F. E. Warren, Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church (1881); L. Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (ed. 2, 1893; Eng. tr., 1903), esp. ch. vii; P. Cagin, O.S.B., 'Avant-propos à l'antiphonaire ambrosien' in Paléographie Musicale, vol. v (1896), pp. 70–97. E. Griffe, 'Aux origines de la Liturgie Gallicane' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, lii (1951), pp. 17–43; H. Ashworth, O.S.B., 'Gregorian Elements in Some Early Gallican Service Books' in Traditio, xiii (1957), pp. 431–43. W. S. Porter, The Gallican Rite (1958), with bibl. [by F. L. Cross], pp. 57–61. J. Quasten in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 258–62, s.v. 'Gallican Rites'.

GALLICANISM. The collective name for the body of doctrine which asserted the more or less complete freedom of the RC Church, esp. in France, from the ecclesiastical authority of the Papacy. During the *Great Schism, such theologians as J. *Gerson and P. *d'Ailly had ably represented a primitive form of Gallican doctrine which had been taught in the *Sorbonne almost from the time of its foundation (1257). At this period the chief question at issue was the claim of the French Church to a privileged position in relation to the Papacy, these libertés de l'Église gallicane (whence the name Gallicanism) being based upon supposed prerogatives of the French Crown (prerogatives which a sober view of history scarcely warranted). In 1516 the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438) was superseded by a *concordat in which the French king's right of nomination to bishoprics and other high ecclesiastical offices was conceded. The constitutional decisions of the Council of *Trent (1545–63) were not received in France, and such writers as P. *Pithou, Edmond Richer (1559–1631), and P. de *Marca popularized a theory of Church government which minimized in various ways the authority claimed by the Papacy over the national Churches ('royal Gallicanism') and over the individual bishops ('episcopal Gallicanism'). In 1663 the Sorbonne published a declaration, the substance of which was reaffirmed by the Assembly of the French clergy in 1682 in the formula known as the Four *Gallican Articles (q.v.). This declaration, though solemnly withdrawn by king and clergy in 1693, remained the typical Gallican manifesto. Gallican principles were preached throughout the 18th cent. by the opponents of the bull '*Unigenitus', and once more officially codified and proclaimed at the synod of *Pistoia in 1786. The *Organic Articles added to Napoleon's concordat of 1801 included Gallican provisions, and Napoleon himself favoured the Gallican party among his clergy. After the Restoration, however, the work of the *Jesuits, and of such writers as J. *de Maistre and F. *Lamennais, bore fruit in a renascence of *ultramontanism in France, so that F. *Dupanloup and A. J. A. *Gratry found little support for their Gallican positions at the time of the First *Vatican Council (1869–70). The definition of Papal *Infallibility by the Council had the effect of making the Gallican principles incompatible with the profession of *Roman Catholicism, so that henceforward Gallicanism has preserved only an historical importance, unless such small organizations as the *Old Catholics may be held to exhibit its persistence. See also Febronianism.

