The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church

Edited by

F. L. CROSS

Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, 1944–68

Second Edition edited by

F. L. CROSS

and

E. A. LIVINGSTONE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Oxford University Press, Walton Street, Oxford OX2 6DP
Oxford New York Toronto
Delhi Bombay Calcutta Madras Karachi
Kuala Lumpur Singapore Hong Kong Tokyo
Nairobi Dar es Salaam Cape Town
Melbourne Auckland Madrid and associated companies in Berlin Ibadan

Oxford is a trade mark of Oxford University Press

Published in the United States by Oxford University Press Inc., New York

ISBN 0 19 211545 6

© Oxford University Press 1958, 1974, 1983

First Published 1957
Second Edition 1974
Reprinted 1977 (with corrections)
Reprinted 1978 (with corrections)
Reprinted 1983 (with corrections and some revisions)
Reprinted 1984, 1985, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1993

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press. Within the UK, exceptions are allowed in respect of any fair dealing for the purpose of research or private study, or criticism or review, as permitted under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988, or in the case of reprographic reproduction in accordance with the terms of the licences issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside these terms and in other countries should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above.

Printed in the United States of America on acid-free paper

PREFACE

THE very success of the first edition of the Dictionary is among the reasons why it has been completely revised. From the outset more copies were sold than was expected by anyone, except perhaps the Editor, who long before its completion entertained visions of a copy in every parsonage house in the country. Less than a year after publication a reprint was needed, and at this stage the Publisher generously allowed the Editor not only to correct misprints but also to remedy various other defects, and even to insert an extra article or two. As successive reprints followed this process continued. By this means an attempt was made to keep the Dictionary up to date, and especially in the bibliographies major works were unobtrusively inserted. But there were limits to what could be done in this way, and in under five years the Publisher proposed the preparation of a new edition.

The period since the publication of the first edition of the Dictionary in 1957 has seen changes in the outward practices of the Christian Church unparalleled in any similar time-span in modern history. The Latin Canon of the Mass, virtually unchanged throughout the world for over a thousand years, has now largely been replaced by new prayers said aloud in the vernacular, while devout Roman Catholics are no longer characterized by their consumption of fish on Fridays. The most spectacular of the changes in the everyday practices of Christians may be traced on a human level to two very different factors. On the one hand there has been the impetus in the various movements towards Christian unity, into which the Roman Catholic Church has at least to some extent been drawn in recent years; on the other there was the renewal (aggiornamento) preached by Pope John XXIII within the Roman Catholic Church which has had its repercussions in practically every other Communion. The reforms commonly associated with the Second Vatican Council had their roots in the preceding period; for instance it was Pope Pius XII who began to restore the primitive pattern to the liturgy of Holy Week and who relaxed the rules governing the Eucharistic fast. Similarly, the first union of Churches on a regional basis had already taken place with the establishment of the Church of South India in 1947. But compared with the changes that have taken place in the last fifteen years, these were almost isolated events, even though in retrospect they can be seen as portents of what was to come. While it is true that these changes have in one sense concerned matters peripheral to Christianity rather than the central issues, they have touched on just those matters on which a work of this kind is probably most used. It may reasonably be hazarded that the Dictionary is more often consulted to discover the answer to small specific questions, such as the date when Conversations began between Anglicans and Methodists, or the percentage of the votes on the various proposals in Convocation, than it is expected to throw light on the nature of the doctrine of the Trinity. Recent developments, on the fringe though they may be, together with the normal advances in scholarship, meant that nothing less than a complete revision would be adequate.

Dr. Cross made plans for a second edition. It was agreed that the sheer bulk of the book precluded an increase of much more than 10 per cent. in overall length if the Dictionary was to remain in one volume; it was hoped that this would be absorbed by the new design of the page. Within these limits the Editor was to be allowed a free hand.

Dr. Cross was of course aware of the changes in outward observance, but he felt that the changes were minute in relation to the whole history and teaching of the Church and so thought the permitted increase would allow ample opportunity to remedy the defects of the first edition and bring up to date what was obsolete. He was determined that the character of the Dictionary, and the assumptions that lay behind it, should be preserved. Nevertheless he welcomed the opportunity to fill a number of gaps. The most notable weakness of which he was conscious was in the treatment of the Eastern Orthodox Church, and to help in this sphere he recruited the generous assistance of the Very Rev. Dr. K. T. Ware, Spalding Lecturer in Eastern Orthodox Studies in the University of Oxford. In every other field he drew up lists of new entries, wrote a number of articles himself, and commissioned others. He also laid down the principles on which the bibliographies and certain of the articles were to be brought up to date. It then seemed to him a reasonably straightforward task, and he applied much of his remaining energies to original work on the Stowe Missal. When ill health made this kind of research impossible, he returned to the revision of the Dictionary and, so far as his physical condition permitted, he was working on that until witnin a fortnight of his death.

Under the terms of Dr. Cross's will I was appointed his literary executor and I supposed that I could complete the book on which we had collaborated for so long. The Publisher agreed that I should finish the revision. This turned out to be a task which I should scarcely have dared to undertake if I had foreseen its magnitude. Difficulties increased as the changes envisaged by the Second Vatican Council were implemented in the Roman Catholic Church. In the Church of England also new rites multiplied as, under the Prayer Book (Alternative and Other Services) Measure, Series I and Series II were succeeded by Series III and even Series II revised, and Synodical Government brought changes of structure in the government of the Church at every level. Finally, when production was at an advanced stage, an industrial dispute delayed publication. But more particularly at the outset I was shielded from a true estimation of the problems by my own ignorance. St. Gregory the Great commented that the Scriptures provide water in which lambs may walk and elephants may swim.[1] A dictionary of this kind has to provide for a similar range of users, and I certainly had not the knowledge needed. That the work has been completed, with whatever merit it may have, is due to the kindness of those who have unstintingly given me the benefit of their learning in their respective fields. Very many scholars have answered my questions and borne with my stupidity, either for the sake of the respect that they had for Dr. Cross or for love of the subject-matter. But above all I am indebted for very much general guidance, as well as for many articles and parts of articles, to Dr. R. W. Hunt, Keeper of Western Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library and Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford (who even allowed me to take my questions to him on a bed of sickness in hospital), the Rev. Dr. H. F. D. Sparks, Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture in the University of Oxford, and, especially in the later stages of the work, to Dr. J. F. A. Mason, Student of Christ Church, and to the many colleagues whom they pressed into service on my behalf; to the Rev. J. D. Crichton, Parish Priest at Pershore, who has kept me informed of changes in Roman Catholic liturgy and other affairs of the Roman Catholic Church; and to the Rt. Rev. Mgr. L. L. McReavy of Ushaw College, who has looked after questions of Canon Law in the Roman Catholic Church. Besides the contributors listed on pp. xiv–xviii, and the multitude, too numerous to mention by name, who have answered individual questions, I am indebted for advice on various points to Mr. H. Anderson, Canon J. G. B. Ashworth, Mr. E. G. W. Bill, Sr. M. Borgia, O.S.U., the Rev. J. Brady, the Rev. K. E. Claus, Jr., Mr. R. Cowley, Canon M. E. Dahl, Miss A. C. de la Mare, the Rev. Prof. J. A. Emerton, Mr. R. E. Gurney, the Rev. Prof. W. A. Hinnebusch, O.P., Prof. A. M. Honoré, the Rt. Rev. J. W. A. Howe, Miss A. S. Kroese, Mrs. J. G. McK. Laws, the Rev. Dr. J. S. Lawton, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. T. G. McKenna, the Rev. F. J. Nash, Mr. J. S. Nicoll, The Very Rev. Dom Alexander Olivar, O.S.B., Canon B. C. Pawley, Prof. P. Russell, the Rev. M. Searle, O.F.M., Miss Beryl Smalley, Dr. Elsie Smith, Canon M. A. C. Warren, Sr. M. Immolata Wetter, I.B.M.V., and Prof. E. Wind.

[1] Moralia sive Expositio in Iob, Dedication, iv.

I have also to thank those who have helped me at various stages in the production of the book. Miss F. M. Williams, sometime reader at the Oxford University Press, and the Rev. D. R. Dendy, Vicar of Bledington, Oxford, have both read all the proofs of the entire work; the latter also took over the task of checking the Biblical references, which the Rev. J. T. Campion undertook until failing eyesight made such work impossible. To all these my debt is incalculable. I have also been assisted in settling many questions by Mr. P. H. Rousseau, now lecturer in the University of Auckland, New Zealand, and Mr. David Cook, of Hertford College, Oxford. Thanks for bibliographical assistance are due to the staffs of the British Museum, Cambridge University Library, the Library of University College of North Wales, Bangor, the Victoria and Albert Museum, and Yale University Library; to Mr. C. N. Francis, who put all the resources of Blackwell's theology department at my disposal; and above all to the staff of the Bodleian Library and other departmental libraries in Oxford, where the checking of references has imposed heavy burdens. Finally, I am indebted to Mr. G. N. S. Hunt of the Oxford University Press, who throughout the work has gone to endless trouble to save me from pitfalls innumerable.

E. A. LIVINGSTONE

15 St. Giles,
OXFORD

NOTE TO THE FOURTH IMPRESSION

Since the best part of a decade has elapsed since the first impression of the second edition went to press, inevitably the Dictionary has been overtaken by events. Two new Popes have taken office, though neither was crowned. The Church of England and the Episcopal Church in the United States of America (no longer necessarily designated Protestant) have each adopted a complete new Prayer Book, while other Provinces of the Anglican Communion have continued the revision of their rites and calendars. In the ecumenical field, on the one hand the Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission has apparently reached agreement on key issues long thought to pose insuperable obstacles to unity; on the other hand the Church of England and the main Free Churches have come to the brink of entering a Covenant recognizing the validity of each other's ministries and apparently taking episcopacy into the Free Church system. For the first time in history a Pope has visited Britain.

Within the limits of what was practicable in a reprint, I have sought to take account of these and similar developments, either by the provision of new articles or, much more often, by small changes to existing entries. The feast days and commemorations provided in the new Anglican calendars have generally been noted and account has been taken of the rites in the new Prayer Books; unions between denominations and other changes in Church organization, where known, have been recorded; and, so far as they were available, statistics have been brought up to date. In a few cases articles, or sections of articles, have been rewritten, either because circumstances or perspectives have changed radically, or to meet what seemed legitimate criticism. The scope for this kind of revision was, however, necessarily very limited, as was that for bringing the bibliographies up to date. So far as I have been aware of them, and where space permitted, I have tried to indicate recent works of major importance in languages widely read, sometimes adding the reference at the end of the bibliography, if by so doing I could avoid extensive resetting of type. I have also tried to complete references to works in course of publication.

While at this stage it has not been possible to take account of all suggestions and criticisms, I am grateful to the numerous people who have written to me about points on which they have specialized knowledge, and to those who have patiently answered the questions I put to them. I have to thank for help of various kinds not only the many who have guided me in the past and come to my aid again, but also Miss I. D. Baird, Mr. A. S. Bell, Miss G. M. Briggs, Canon H. M. Brown, Mgr. R. Brown, Canon W. R. F. Browning, Dr. C. E. Bryant, Miss A. Buchan, the Rev. F. D. G. Campbell, S.S.J.E., the Rev. G. R. Chapman, Miss G. E. Coldham, Mr. M. Conway, Canon E. T. Davies, the Rev. R. E. Davies, the Rev. Prof. G. R. Dunstan, the Rev. H. D. Dupree, Mrs E. R. Ehrhardt, Dr. R. J. W. Evans, the Rev. J. Garrow, the Rev. A. Gilmore, the Rev. R. J. Ginn, Mr. J. P. Godwin, Dr. M. D. Goulder, Mr. B. J. Grant, Metropolitan P. Gregorios, Prof. M. Harl, the Very Rev. G. A. Hay, Miss W. A. G. Herrington, the Rev. Dom P. D. Holdsworth, O.S.B., Miss B. Horley, Mr. J. E. Horsch, the Very Rev. E. Hubner, S.J., Mr. R. Ironman, Mr. N. W. James, Mr. R. C. Johnson, Mrs Ritva Jonsson, the Rev. Prof. M. Lacko, S.J., Mr. J. B. Lasek, Dr. J. Latham, S.J., Canon B. Lewis, the Rev. F. Linyard, Mr. M. H. Lowes, Mr. J. K. Martin, the Rev. D. L. Mealand, Prof. E. Molland, the Rev. A. Nadson, Mr. S. R. Nairn, Canon C. B. Naylor, Mrs M. Nixon, Dr. J. O. W. Norris, Mr. D. C. Peterson, the Rev. Dom D. D. Rees, O.S.B., Prof. T. B. W. Reid, Mr. C. R. Riches, the Rev. G. M. Roberts, the Rev. G. W. Rusling, the Rev. E. Simmons, C.R., the Rev. J. N. Steenson, Miss B. M. Swinson, the Rev. G. A. Tancred, Dr. D. M. Thompson, the Rev. B. G. Thorogood, Miss R. B. Tingley, Dr. K. Treu, the Rev. Prof. F. E. Vokes, Mr. D. S. Watson, the Rev. Prof. J. A. Weisheipl, O.P., Miss A. Wild, the Rt. Rev. K. J. Woollcombe, Mr. D. G. Wright, and the staff of the Australian Bureau of Statistics and the High Commission for the People's Republic of Bangladesh.

15 St. Giles,
OXFORD
June 1982

E.A.L.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

THE Christian Church has been so closely interwoven with the course of Western civilization that her history, life, and institutions are matters of deep concern not only to those who through Holy Baptism have been admitted to membership in the Body of Christ, but to all who take an intelligent interest in contemporary culture. The present Dictionary has been compiled in order to bring together, in a concise and handy form, as large a body of information as possible directly bearing on the Christian Church. It is addressed to the needs not merely of those whose primary vocation lies in the Christian ministry or in the professional study of theology or church history, nor even only to the general body of professing Christians who seek information about their faith and its growth, but to the educated public as a whole. For this and other reasons technicalities have been avoided, and it is hoped that throughout the entries are so written as to be immediately intelligible to the layman. If the Dictionary has any apologetic purpose, it seeks to achieve it solely through the objective presentation of fact.

The scope of the Dictionary need not be outlined here, as it will be discovered most readily from a rapid perusal of its pages. If a historical treatment predominates, the employment of this method will need no defence in the case of a faith which is so evidently rooted in history as is Christianity. The attempt has been made to give due and proportionate attention to the several parts and aspects of a vast field, covering over nineteen centuries. But history, as modern studies in its structure by Wilhelm Dilthey, Ernst Troeltsch, and a host of others have made abundantly clear, is by its nature selective, and a discipline in which the employment of objective canons, for example on a statistical basis, is an intrinsically unattainable ideal. If in the present work fuller attention has been paid to Western Christendom than to later Eastern Orthodoxy, to Christianity in Britain than to that of the Continent, to the events of the nineteenth century than to those of the tenth, this disproportion is only relative. In any case it may be presumed that the reader will welcome fuller information on matters at closer range. If, on the other hand, to some readers outside Europe it seems that insufficient attention has been given to the non-European lands where Christianity is now firmly planted, it must be recalled that the Church's connexion with Mediterranean and European countries is of far longer standing, and this fact is necessarily reflected in the subject-matter of a work in which the treatment is historical.

Perhaps some readers will look for a rather fuller treatment of Biblical matters in a Dictionary of the Christian Church than will be found here; and reasonably. The importance of the Bible throughout the history of the Church—and especially whenever she has been fully alive to her theological vocation—has always been fundamental. But it would have been impossible to give any adequate treatment of Biblical subjects in the present work without making disproportionate demands on space. There seemed the less need for doing so in view of the abundance of Biblical aids in the form of dictionaries (lexical, factual, and theological), concordances, and compendious commentaries of varying dimensions. These works are readily accessible in libraries. But as they are seldom privately possessed except by the clergy and others with a direct interest in theological studies, it was felt that some information of an elementary kind would be welcomed by a considerable body of lay people whose needs the Dictionary might be expected to serve. It is primarily for such readers that the entries on Biblical subjects are included.

A notable constituent of the Dictionary is the Bibliographies in small type at the end of the articles. To enable the reader to use these to the best advantage it may be of service to add a few details about their construction and purpose. . They were mostly compiled independently of the articles, and their form, it must be confessed, was devised as the Dictionary developed, so that complete consistency has not been achieved. They do not set out to record (as is not infrequently the case in dictionary works) the sources which the compiler happens to have found specially useful. Their purpose, rather, is to record the principal items of primary and permanent interest bearing on the subject of the entry. The reader is asked, therefore, not to be too hasty in his strictures when he finds a work listed which the best critics assure him is 'superseded'. Still less must he suppose that the inclusion of a book implies an editorial nihil obstat. It is sufficiently familiar that a bad book has sometimes had great intrinsic importance in relation to a particular subject; and since the historical student may need to discover details of such a book, they have been included. Careful attention has also been given to recording the original date of publication of all items, partly to enable the bibliographies to be used by those interested in the authors as well as the contents of the books. Unless the contrary is expressly stated, the date given is always to be taken as that of the first edition. For those who want further readily accessible material, either by way of bibliography or on the subject itself, a liberal citation of articles in the larger standard dictionaries and encyclopaedic works has been made on a selective basis. Our own experience of dictionary works is that P.R.E.[1] is to be especially commended for its thoroughness and accuracy, D.T.C. for its amplitude, and E.C. for its modernity. We have found no reason to contest what appears to be the general verdict about the limitations of D.A.C.L. But that dictionary, despite its inaccuracies, is so often the only pointer to further material on archaeological and liturgical matters that we have frequently cited it. With use, the reader will perhaps accustom himself to finding guidance from the bibliography also by its omissions. Thus, where in the case of a person no biography is recorded, it can ordinarily be assumed that none is known to the Editor.

We hope, finally, that the inclusion of this relatively extensive bibliography needs no apology. Those who pursue theological and historical studies rarely possess a large private library in these days, and are more than hitherto dependent on public libraries, often at some distance. It is believed that the Dictionary will put the student of church history in possession of a larger body of bibliographical material than any other work of similar compass. If a good deal of this information will be rarely, if ever, wanted by many users of the Dictionary, this is a common phenomenon in a reference book. The same is true of Bradshaw or Whitaker or Crockford.

In the construction of the Dictionary constant use has naturally been made of the standard sets of texts, historical collections, and histories, as well as the larger dictionaries, encyclopaedias, chronological tables, gazetteers, atlases, and other works of reference. Where any question of accuracy arose, the attempt was always made to verify details from first-hand sources. The extent to which this process could be carried had obvious limits. Where there are many hundreds of opportunities for error on every page, doubtless many inaccuracies survive. But it may be worth pointing out that in some instances considerable labour has been involved in the establishment of a single reference or date; and hence where such, as given in this Dictionary, differs from that currently found elsewhere, while it might be prudent to treat it with reserve, it would be mistaken to conclude that it was necessarily wrong.

[1] The full titles corresponding to these and the many other abbreviations used will be found in the 'List of Abbreviations', pp. xix–xxv.

It is unnecessary to recount in detail the stages by which the Dictionary has assumed its present shape. It owes its inception to Mr. G. F. J. Cumberlege of the Oxford University Press, who invited the Editor to undertake the work as long ago as 1939. Reference to the list of Contributors on pp. [xiii–xvii] will show that it is the work of many hands, among them several scholars of high distinction. Roughly half the entries, including most of those of major importance, were drafted by these Contributors working independently. The rest, together with the bibliographies, were compiled by the Editor and his immediate associates. In some cases the reader who is versed in contemporary theological literature will have little difficulty in identifying the authorship of certain articles. But in order to secure the maximum uniformity it was agreed at the outset that all contributions should be subject to such editorial modification and reconstruction as seemed desirable, and that anonymity should be preserved. In the event many of the articles in the Dictionary are the work of several hands.

A consequence of this method of composition is that revision has been continuous. The material as put at the Editor's disposal needed welding, as far as possible, into a unity. By the close interrelation of the articles much economy of space has been achieved. In this connexion the Publisher generously allowed a great deal of recasting in the proof stage. The Editor is conscious that with the expenditure of further time and labour this process could with profit have been carried further, especially, he believes, in the earlier sections of the work. But a year or so ago it seemed to the Press and the Editor alike that the time had come to eschew further revision and to start the book on its way. In a dictionary (and particularly in one on a new pattern) perfection is an unattainable ideal. If in its future editions this work is to be less imperfect, the Editor must look to the goodwill of his readers to inform him of points needing correction.

There remains the happy task of expressing my own thanks, and also, I doubt not, those of future users of the Dictionary, to the very large company of those who in innumerable ways have contributed to its making. It is possible to mention by name only a few of them.

There are, first, my immediate associates. In the earliest stages of the work I had as a collaborator in the Editorship my then colleague the Rev. T. M. Parker, cuius eruditionis fontes plurimi gustavimus exhausit nemo.[1] Though he had a decisive formative influence on the Dictionary, he was, alas, soon compelled to withdraw by pressure of other work. At this period valuable assistance was also given by the Rev. H. J. Sutters who, among other labours, compiled the original list of entries. During several of the War years, when progress was necessarily slow, Miss Hilda C. Graef, now known as the biographer of Therese Neumann and Edith Stein, drafted or revised a great number of the early entries; and it was to her, more than to anyone else, that the possession of a continuous first draft was due. In the herculean task of finally producing from a vast assemblage of material a work which had form, unity, and completeness, my principal debt is to Miss Elizabeth A. Livingstone. For over five years the Dictionary has engaged her devoted and untiring energies. No problem that arose could be allowed to rest until it had been pursued to its limits, whether by research, correspondence, or personal interviews, and in some cases by all three means; and in this connexion abundant thanks are also due to the large body of those who have generously responded to Miss Livingstone's inquiries. The drafting of the bibliographies is almost wholly due to the same collaborator. There are relatively few of the books or articles cited which Miss Livingstone has not handled, or, where this proved impossible, pursued to an unimpeachable source; and, it need hardly be said, there are a vast number of others which, though examined, have been passed by unrecorded, either through the exigencies of space or through their want of permanent interest. This task has involved the consultation of what must be almost, if not quite, a record number of books in public libraries; and it would be impossible not to mention our indebtedness to the staffs of the Bodleian Library and of the Reading Room of the British Museum, on whom the compilation of the Dictionary has imposed (in the literal sense as well as in others) many very heavy burdens. At the Bodleian Library, particular thanks are due to Mr. R. G. Chapman, M.A., Mr. R. J. Key, M.A., and Miss Angela M. Jackson.

[1] Words originally applied to F. E. Brightman, an earlier Librarian of Pusey House, by C. H. Turner.

At a comparatively early stage in the work, the Press invited Professor F. M. Powicke and the Rev. Professor S. L. Greenslade to report on and, as far as opportunity allowed, to read the proofs. Professor Powicke's valuable comments on the earlier drafts of the medieval articles preserved us from many pitfalls, while Professor Greenslade, who scrutinized the whole work, made innumerable suggestions which were of untold service. It must be insisted, however, that so many modifications have been made in the text since these two scholars concluded their task several years ago, that they must not be held in any way responsible for errors. In the later stages of the work much assistance was received with the medieval articles from Dr. R. W. Hunt, the Keeper of Western Manuscripts at the Bodleian Library, and, in the matter of the medieval bibliographies, from Dr. Daniel Callus, O.P. The Editor hopes that in consequence of this abundant assistance even specialists in medieval studies will find the work a useful reference book. In Semitic matters, where the Editor's own incompetence has made him much in need of guidance, he has also to thank Professors G. R. Driver, C. A. Simpson, and H. F. D. Sparks, and Mr. O. H. M. Lehmann for help on specific points.

A word of special thanks is due for help of another kind. With a generosity which would be unbelievable to those who do not know him, Mr. Samuel Gurney went through the whole of the galley proofs, almost line by line, assiduously checking references against standard works and producing lively comments and suggestions from his wide store of learning about all things ecclesiastical and unecclesiastical.

It need hardly be said that the production of the Dictionary has involved a great deal of typing and other secretarial work. Usually each article needed to be drafted many times before it was in the right form for the printer. In this connexion thanks are due to some of those already mentioned as well as to Miss G. I. Johns, to Mrs. M. Bridge, and to Mrs. J. Barnicoat, among others.

Finally, a word of thanks must be said to the Oxford University Press and their printers. The Editor had the good fortune to have a publisher with unique experience in Dictionaries. To learn that the construction of a dictionary is not the wholly humdrum task of Dr. Johnson's lexicographer, the reader need but turn to the fascinating Preface to the new Liddell and Scott. If the finished work is not quite the companionable and attractive book that I believe Mr. Cumberlege originally envisaged, this is because it became clear, as the work proceeded, that it was not within the present Editor's capacity to produce it. But I am grateful to him for his generous and continuous interest in the work until he retired from the Press last September, and also to all other members of the staff of Amen House who have been concerned with the Dictionary since its inception. The printers, Messrs. R. & R. Clark of Edinburgh, have earned the gratitude of the Press, the readers of the Dictionary, and myself by their patience and accuracy at every stage of the long and complicated process of production, and through them the Scottish, as well as the English, tradition of academic printing and publishing has contributed to this book.

F. L. CROSS

CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD
May 1957

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

N. J. ABERCROMBIE, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Editor of the Dublin Review

The Rev. A. W. ADAMS, D.D., Fellow and Dean of Divinity, Magdalen College, Oxford

D. J. ALLAN, M.A., sometime Professor of Greek, University of Glasgow

The Rev. G. W. ANDERSON, M.A., Hon.D.D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Studies, University of Edinburgh

Mrs. A. ELIZABETH ARMSTRONG, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Somerville College, Oxford

A. H. ARMSTRONG, M.A., sometime Gladstone Professor of Greek, University of Liverpool

The Rev. J. BACKHOUSE, B.A., sometime Vicar of Lathom

The Rev. D. S. BAILEY, D.Litt., Canon Residentiary and Precentor of Wells

The Very Rev. AELRED BAKER, O.S.B., Prior of Prinknash Abbey

The Rev. Dom ANSELM BANKS, O.S.B., B.A., St. Benet's Hall, Oxford

The Rev. M. B. BANNISTER, M.A., Vicar of King's Sutton, Banbury, Oxon.

Miss RUTH BARBOUR, M.A., sometime Assistant in the Department of Western Manuscripts, Bodleian Library, Oxford

The Rev. J. W. B. BARNS, M.A., D.Phil., Professor of Egyptology, Oxford

The Rev. C. K. BARRETT, D.D., Professor of Divinity, University of Durham

The Rev. P. L. S. BARRETT, B.A., Curate at Pershore

†The Rev. J. V. BARTLET, D.D., sometime Professor of Church History, Mansfield College, Oxford

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. J. M. T. BARTON, D.D., sometime Consultor, Pontifical Biblical Commission, and Canon of Westminster Cathedral

R. A. BEDDARD, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford

A. F. L. BEESTON, M.A., D.Phil., Laudian Professor of Arabic, Oxford

S. BERTELLI, Professor of Modern History, University of Perugia

L. BIELER, D.Phil., Professor of Palaeography and Late Latin, University College, Dublin

T. J. BINYON, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford

The Rev. HUGH BISHOP, C.R., M.A., Superior of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield

Miss E. BLACKBURN, Wakefield

The Rev. ANDREW BLAIR, C.R., M.A., Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield

T. S. R. BOASE, M.A., Hon.D.C.L., sometime President of Magdalen College, Oxford

G. I. BONNER, M.A., Reader in Church History, University of Durham

The Rev. J. W. BOWKER, M.A., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

The Rev. H. S. BOX, B.D., PhD., Vicar of St. Barnabas, Bexhill

The Rev. H. R. T. BRANDRETH, O.G.S., Vicar of St. Saviour's, Highbury, and St. Dunstan's, Fleet Street, London

D. BRASS, B.A., Ph.D., Senior Lecturer in Spanish and Portuguese, University of Bristol

S. P. BROCK, M.A., D.Phil., Lecturer in Hebrew, University of Cambridge

P. R. L. BROWN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

J. H. BRUMFITT, M.A., D.Phil., Professor of French Language and Literature, University of St. Andrews

J. A. BURROW, M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford

†The Rev. DANIEL CALLUS, O.P., M.A., D.Phil., sometime of Blackfriars, Oxford

The Rev. J. T. CAMPION, M.A., sometime Chaplain of the Blue Nile Province

The Rev. A. C. CANNER, M.A., Vicar of Tintagel, Cornwall

The Rev. R. E. CANT, M.A., Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of York

The Rev. E. F. CARPENTER, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Archdeacon of Westminster

The Rt. Rev. H. J. CARPENTER, Hon.D.D., sometime Lord Bishop of Oxford

R. J. A. I. CATTO, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford

The Very Rev. H. CHADWICK, D.D., Dean of Christ Church, Oxford

C. R. CHENEY, D.Litt., Professor of Medieval History and Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

W. H. CLENNELL, M.A., Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford

The Rev. E. COLLEDGE, O.S.A., M.A., The Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto

D. COOK, B.A., Hertford College, Oxford

Mrs. JOYCE COOMBS, Mothers' Union Central Council, London

M. P. COSTELOE, B.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Spanish and Portuguese, University of Bristol

The Rev. F. COURTNEY, S.J., D.D., sometime Librarian and Lecturer, Heythrop College, London

The Rev. H. E. J. COWDREY, M.A., Fellow of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford

The Rev. C. STUART CRAIG, B.A., sometime General Secretary of the Congregational Council for World Mission

The Rev. W. J. CRATCHLEY, Ph.D., D.D., Vicar of St. Mark's, Swindon, and Honorary Canon of Bristol

The Rev. J. D. CRICHTON, Parish Priest at Pershore and sometime Editor of Life and Worship

The Rev. G. CROFT, S.J., M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Psychology, Heythrop College, London

A. C. CROMBIE, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

†The Rev. F. L. Cross, D.D., sometime Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. J. Crozier, Parish Priest at Abingdon, Berks.

The Rev. G. Henton Davies, B.Litt., M.A., Hon. D.D., sometime Principal of Regent's Park College, Oxford

N. Davis, M.A., Merton Professor of English Language and Literature, Oxford

The Rev. V. A. Demant, M.A., D.Litt., sometime Regius Professor of Moral and Pastoral Theology and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. D. R. Dendy, M.A., B.D., Vicar of Bledington, Oxford

Miss Sirapie Der Nersessian, Litt.D., sometime Professor of Byzantine Art and Archaeology, Dumbarton Oaks, Washington

A. G. Dickens, M.A., D.Litt., Director of the Institute of Historical Research, University of London

The Rev. J. C. Dickinson, M.A., B.Litt., Senior Lecturer in Theology, University of Birmingham

Sir Godfrey R. Driver, M.A., Hon.D.D., sometime Professor of Semitic Philology, Oxford

The Rev. A. O. Dyson, M.A., B.D., D.Phil., Principal of Ripon Hall, Oxford

A. B. Emden, M.A., Hon.D.Litt., sometime Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford

The Rev. G. H. Ettlinger, S.J., D.Phil., Professor of Greek Patrology, Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome

The Rev. H. H. Farmer, M.A., Hon.D.D., sometime Norris-Hulse Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge

The Rev. C. B. Firth, M.A., Asia Secretary of the Conference of Missionary Societies of Great Britain and Ireland, London

I. Fisher, M.A., Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, Edinburgh

The Rev. B. FitzGibbon, S.J., M.A., sometime Lecturer in History, Campion Hall, Oxford

The Rev. J. A. Fitzmyer, S.J., Professor of New Testament, Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C.

J. D. Fleeman, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford

I. Ll. Foster, M.A., Jesus Professor of Celtic, Oxford

†Mrs. Ruth Fraenkel, Ph.D., Oxford

The Rev. J. E. Francis, B.D., Principal of Overdale College, Birmingham

†The Rev. R. S. Franks, M.A., D.Litt., sometime Principal of Western College, Bristol

The Rev. R. H. Fuller, M.A., Professor at the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The Rev. C. Gallagher, S.J., M.A., D.C.L., Lecturer in Theology, Heythrop College, London

Dame Helen L. Gardner, M.A., D.Litt., Merton Professor of English Literature, Oxford

Sir Frederick Gibberd, R.A., F.R.I.B.A., London

Miss Margaret T. Gibson, M.A., D.Phil., Lecturer in Medieval History, University of Liverpool

The Rev. J. Gill, S.J., B.A., Ph.D., sometime Rector of the Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome

The Rev. N. Goodall, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Assistant General Secretary of the World Council of Churches

The Rev. E. L. H. Gordon, M.A., Rector of Great Chart, Ashford, Kent

Miss Pamela O. E. Gradon, M.A., Fellow of St. Hugh's College, Oxford

†Miss Hilda C. Graef, sometime Senior Assistant on the Patristic Greek Lexicon

The Rev. J. W. Grant, M.A., D.Phil., Hon.D.D., Professor of Church History, Victoria University, Toronto

The Rev. K. Grayston, M.A., Professor of Theology, University of Bristol

The Rev. V. H. H. Green, D.D., Fellow and Chaplain of Lincoln College, Oxford

The Rev. S. L. Greenslade, D.D., sometime Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

R. M. Griffiths, M.A., Ph.D., Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford

Miss E. M. Grinling, M.A., Principal Lecturer in Religious Education, Darlington College of Education

W. J. Grisbrooke, M.A., B.D., Lecturer at the Queen's College, Birmingham, and Recognized Lecturer in the Faculty of Theology, University of Birmingham

†Samuel Gurney, M.A., Trinity College, Oxford

The Rev. R. J. Hammer, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Lecturer at the Queen's College, Birmingham, and Recognized Lecturer in the Faculty of Theology, University of Birmingham

The Rt. Rev. R. P. C. Hanson, D.D., Professor of Theology, University of Manchester

C. G. Hardie, M.A., sometime Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford

†The Very Rev. F. P. Harton, B.D., sometime Dean of Wells

The Rev. A. E. Harvey, M.A., Warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury

J. R. L. Highfield, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford

The Rev. D. I. Hill, M.A., Master of Eastbridge Hospital, Canterbury

J. E. C. Hill, M.A., D.Litt., Master of Balliol College, Oxford

The Rev. P. B. Hinchliff, D.D., Fellow and Chaplain of Balliol College, Oxford

The Rev. J. P. Hodges, M.A., sometime Rector of Streatham

The Rev. R. T. Holtby, M.A., B.D., Secretary of the Church of England Schools Council, London, and sometime Canon of Carlisle

The Rev. A. F. Hood, C.B.E., M.A., sometime Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's Cathedral, London

The Rev. Dom Anselm Hughes, O.S.B., M.A., Nashdom Abbey, Bucks.

G. N. S. Hunt, M.A., Wadham College, Oxford

R. W. Hunt, M.A., D.Phil., Keeper of Western Manuscripts, Bodleian Library, and Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford

R. L. Hunter, B.Sc., T.D., Edinburgh

†The Rev. E. O. JAMES, D.Litt., sometime Professor of the History and Philosophy of Religion, University of London

Mrs. H. T. JENKINS, M.A., B.Litt., sometime Assistant Editor, Victoria County History of Oxfordshire

The Rev. S. A. C. JOHN, M.A., Vicar of Barlow, Sheffield

The Rev. P. F. JOHNSON, M.A., Tutor, St. Stephen's House, Oxford

The Rev. J. N. D. KELLY, D.D., Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford

The Very Rev. E. W. KEMP, D.D., Dean of Worcester

†Sir FREDERIC KENYON, K.C.B., sometime Director and Principal Librarian, British Museum, London

Dame KATHLEEN M. KENYON, M.A., D.Litt., sometime Principal of St. Hugh's College, Oxford

The Rev. G. D. KILPATRICK, D.D., Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis of Holy Scripture, Oxford

The Rev. H. P. KINGDON, M.A., sometime Vicar of Chewton Mendip

The Rev. GEORGE KNIGHT, M.A., Chaplain, R.N.

The Rev. H. KNIGHT, B.D., D.Phil., sometime Assistant Master, Gordonstoun School

The Rev. M. D. KNOWLES, M.A., Litt.D., sometime Professor of Medieval History and Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge

The Rev. R. BUICK KNOX, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Professor of Church History, Westminster College, Cambridge

A. J. KRAILSHEIMER, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. G. W. H. LAMPE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge

J. LANKFORD, M.S., Ph.D., Professor of United States Social History, University of Missouri, Columbia

†The Rev. A. C. LAWSON, D.D., sometime Vicar of St. Michael's, Shrewsbury

Miss KATHLEEN M. LEA, M.A., sometime Fellow of Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford

The Rev. Dom JEAN LECLERCQ, O.S.B., S.T.D., Clervaux Abbey, Luxembourg

O. H. M. LEHMANN, B.Litt., M.A., Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati

K. J. LEYSER, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford

Miss ELIZABETH A. LIVINGSTONE, M.A., St. Anne's College, Oxford

The Rev. Preb. D. McL. LYNCH, Chief Secretary of the Church Army

The Rev. J. MACDONALD, M.A., B.Litt., Lecturer, St. David's College, Lampeter

D. M. MACKINNON, M.A., Norris-Hulse Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

Miss MAY MCKISACK, M.A., sometime Professor of History, Westfield College, London

The Rev. J. MACQUARRIE, D.Litt., Hon.D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. L. L. MCREAVY, J.C.D., M.A., Ushaw College, Durham

†The Rev. W. W. S. MARCH, M.A., B.D., sometime Canon Residentiary of Chichester

The Rev. J. MARSH, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford

The Rev. P. M. MARTIN, M.A., Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of Wells

The Rev. E. L. MASCALL, D.D., sometime Professor of Historical Theology in the University of London

J. F. A. MASON, M.A., D.Phil., Student of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. A. GERVASE MATHEW, O.P., M.A., Blackfriars, Oxford

R. A. MAY, M.A., Leonard Stein Lecturer in Medieval Hebrew, Oxford

The Rev. R. L. P. MILBURN, M.A., Master of the Temple, London

E. H. MILLIGAN, B.A., Librarian of the Religious Society of Friends, London

The Rev. L. MINHINNICK, M.A., Vicar of St. John's, Lytham

The Rev. Dom AUGUSTINE MORRIS, O.S.B., Abbot of Nashdom Abbey, Bucks.

The Rev. C. MORRIS, M.A., Professor of Medieval History, University of Southampton

The Rt. Rev. R. C. MORTIMER, D.D., sometime Lord Bishop of Exeter

†The Rev. C. B. MOSS, D.D., sometime Vice-Principal, St. Boniface College, Warminster

The Rt. Rev. S. C. NEILL, M.A., Hon.D.D., sometime Professor of Philosophy and Religious Studies, University of Nairobi

The Rev. R. W. NICHOLLS, B.A., A.K.C., Vicar of Barnham, Bognor Regis

The Rev. D. NICHOLSON, M.A., Honorary Canon of Edinburgh and sometime Vicar of St. Mary the Virgin, Pimlico

The Rev. D. E. NINEHAM, M.A., B.D., Hon.D.D., Warden of Keble College, Oxford

The Rev. K. W. NOAKES, M.A., D.Phil., Librarian of Pusey House, Oxford

J. L. NORTH, M.A., Lecturer in Religious Studies, Darlington College of Education

D. OBOLENSKY, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Russian and Balkan History, Oxford

The Rev. J. B. O'CONNELL, M.A., B.D., Honorary Canon of the Diocese of Menevia, Wales

H. S. OFFLER, M.A., Professor of Medieval History in the University of Durham

The Rev. T. M. PARKER, D.D., sometime Fellow of University College, Oxford

The Rev. E. A. PAYNE, C.H., D.D., sometime General Secretary, Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland

†The Rev. A. F. SCOTT PEARSON, D.Litt., Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Symbolics, Presbyterian College, Belfast

R. PETERS, Oxford

Mlle SIMONE PÉTREMENT, Docteur ès lettres, Conservateur honoraire à la Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris

The Rev. R. W. PFAFF, M.A., D.Phil., Professor of History, University of North Carolina

The Rev. R. PILKINGTON, D.C.L., Canon of Westminster Cathedral

The Rev. W. N. PITTENGER, S.T.D., sometime Professor of Christian Apologetics, General Theological Seminary, New York

Miss V. POHLE, Liverpool

D. S. PORTER, M.A., Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford

D. C. POTTS, M.A., D.Phil., Fellow of Keble College, Oxford

†Sir MAURICE POWICKE, M.A., D.Litt., sometime Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford

†The Rev. G. L. PRESTIGE, D.D., sometime Canon and Treasurer of St. Paul's Cathedral, London

The Rev. A. A. H. RADICE, M.A., Rector of Hepworth, Norfolk

†The Rev. E. C. RATCLIFF, M.A., sometime Regius Professor of Divinity, Cambridge

R. REECE, B.Sc., D.Phil., Institute of Archaeology, University of London

Miss MARJORIE E. REEVES, M.A., D.Litt., sometime Fellow of St. Anne's College, Oxford

The Rev. B. J. ROBERTS, D.D., Professor of Hebrew and Semitics, University College of North Wales, Bangor

C. H. ROBERTS, C.B.E., M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford

†The Rev. C. F. ROGERS, M.A., sometime Professor of Pastoral Theology, King's College, London

D. M. ROGERS, M.A., D.Phil., Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford

Mrs. M. I. ROGERS, London

P. H. ROUSSEAU, B.A., D.Phil., Lecturer at Auckland University, New Zealand

The Rev. E. G. RUPP, D.D., Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Cambridge

Miss JOY RUSSELL-SMITH, M.A., B.D., Lecturer in English, Birkbeck College, London

Dame FRIDESWIDE SANDEMAN, O.S.B., B.A., Stanbrook Abbey, Worcs.

The Rt. Rev. J. R. SATTERTHWAITE, B.A., Lord Bishop of Gibraltar

†The Rev. H. P. SAUNDERS, M.A., sometime Principal of Ely Theological College and Canon of Ely

The Rt. Rev. J. L. SCHUSTER, M.A., Lord Bishop of St. John's, Kaffraria

A. B. SCOTT, D.Phil., Reader in Classics, Queen's University, Belfast

†The Rev. W. B. SELBIE, D.D., sometime Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford

The Rev. E. N. C. SERGEANT, M.A., Chaplain of Millfield School, Street, Somerset

†I. P. SHELDON WILLIAMS, D.Litt., sometime Visiting Lecturer, University College, Dublin

G. T. SHEPHERD, M.A., Professor of Mediaeval English Language and Literature, University of Birmingham

A. N. SHERWIN-WHITE, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and sometime Sarum Lecturer

J. S. G. SIMMONS, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

†The Very Rev. C. A. SIMPSON, D.D., sometime Dean of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. C. D. SMITH, M.A., Vicar of St. Mary Magdalene, Oxford

The Rev. A. SMITHSON, M.A., Chaplain of Reading University

R. W. SOUTHERN, M.A., Hon.D.Litt., President of St. John's College, Oxford

The Rev. H. F. D. SPARKS, D.D., Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, Oxford

Miss CLARE E. STANCLIFFE, B.A., Fellow of Newnham College, Cambridge

The Rev. G. C. STEAD, M.A., Ely Professor of Divinity and Fellow of King's College, Cambridge

†S. M. STERN, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

C. E. STEVENS, B.Litt., M.A., sometime Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford

†The Rev. Dom ANSELM STOELIN, O.Carth., Parkminster

†The Rev. D. STONE, D.D., sometime Principal of Pusey House and Honorary Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. G. M. STYLER, M.A., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

The Rev. H. J. SUTTERS, M.A., Vicar of Highbridge, Somerset

†The Very Rev. N. SYKES, D.D., sometime Dean of Winchester

The Rev. S. W. SYKES, M.A., Fellow and Dean of St. John's College, Cambridge

†The Rev. H. EDWARD SYMONDS, C.R., D.D., sometime of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield

The Rev. J. P. THORNTON-DUESBERY, M.A., Canon Theologian of Liverpool Cathedral and sometime Master of St. Peter's Hall, Oxford

Miss JOCELYN M. C. TOYNBEE, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Laurence Professor of Classical Archaeology, Cambridge

The Rev. G. C. TRIFFITT, B.A., S.S.J.E., Superior General of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, Oxford

R. W. TRUMAN, M.A., D.Phil., Student of Christ Church, Oxford

C. A. TRYPANIS, M.A., D.Phil., sometime Bywater and Sotheby Professor of Byzantine and Modern Greek Language and Literature, Oxford

The Rev. H. E. W. TURNER, D.D., Lightfoot Professor of Divinity and Canon of Durham

K. C. TURPIN, B.Litt., M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Oxford

W. G. URRY, M.A., Ph.D., Reader in Palaeography, Oxford

The Rev. A. R. VIDLER, D.D., sometime Fellow and Dean of King's College, Cambridge

The Rev. F. E. VOKES, M.A., B.D., Professor of Divinity, Trinity College, Dublin

The Rev. G. S. WAKEFIELD, M.A., B.Litt., Chairman of the Manchester and Stockport District of the Methodist Church

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

J. M. WALLACE-HADRILL, M.A., D.Litt., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford

J. J. WALTERS, M.A., Hertford College, Oxford

P. A. WARD JONES, B.A., Superintendent of the Music Section, Bodleian Library, Oxford

The Very Rev. K. T. WARE, M.A., D.Phil., Spalding Lecturer in Eastern Orthodox Studies, Oxford

S. WATSON, O.B.E., M.A., D.Mus., sometime Organist of Christ Church, Oxford, and Choragus to the University

The Rev. P. A. WELSBY, M.A., Ph.D., Canon Residentiary of Rochester

The Rev. H. K. WHITE, M.A., Vicar of St. Mary Aldermary, London

The Rev. W. A. WHITEHOUSE, B.Litt., M.A., Hon. D.D., Professor of Theology, University of Kent

The Rev. D. E. H. WHITELEY, M.A., Fellow and Chaplain of Jesus College, Oxford

†The Rev. W. T. WHITLEY, M.A., LL.D., sometime Principal of Melbourne Baptist College, Victoria, Australia

The Rev. L. R. WICKHAM, M.A., Lecturer in Theology, University of Southampton

The Rev. B. J. WIGAN, M.A., Honorary Canon of Rochester

The Rev. M. F. WILES, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Rev. G. G. WILLIS, D.D., sometime Editor of the Chronicle of the Convocation of Canterbury

B. R. WILSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

The Ven. C. WITTON-DAVIES, M.A., Archdeacon of Oxford

†H. G. WOOD, D.D., sometime Professor of Theology, University of Birmingham

The Very Rev. R. SELBY WRIGHT, D.D., Minister of the Canongate, Edinburgh, and sometime Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland

The Rev. P. H. WYLD, M.A., United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, London

The Rev. E. J. YARNOLD, S.J., M.A., sometime Master of Campion Hall, Oxford

Additional contributors to the fourth impression

R. T. DAVIES, M.A., Reader in English Literature, University of Liverpool

The Rev. J. O. MILLS, O.P., M.A., Ordo Fratrum Praedicatorum, Curia Generalitia, Rome

The Rev. G. I. F. THOMSON, M.A., Chaplain of All Souls College, Oxford

ABBREVIATIONS

(A) The most common abbreviations, used throughout the book

ASB	*Alternative Service Book (1980).
AV	Authorized Version [i.e. King James Version, 1611].
BCP	Book of Common Prayer.
BVM	Blessed Virgin Mary.
C of E	Church of England.
CIC	Codex Iuris Canonici (1918).
EVV	English versions.
NEB	New English Bible (NT, 1961; OT and Apocrypha, 1970).
NT	New Testament.
OT	Old Testament.
RC	Roman Catholic.
RSV	Revised Standard Version (NT, 1946; OT, 1952; Apocrypha, 1957).
RV	[English] Revised Version (NT, 1881; OT, 1885; Apocrypha, 1895).

An asterisk (*) preceding a word indicates a relevant article in the Dictionary under that (or a closely similar) heading.

It is recommended that the present edition of this Dictionary should be quoted as O.D.C.C. (ed. 2).

(B) Further abbreviations, mainly bibliographical

[The editions mentioned are those cited in the Dictionary]

A.A.S.	Acta Apostolicae Sedis* (Rome, 1909 ff.).
AA.SS.	Acta Sanctorum* (Antwerp, 1643 ff.).
Abh. (Bayr.)	Abhandlungen der philosophisch-philologischen (und historischen) Classe der (königlich) bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (Munich, 1835 ff.).
Abh. (Berl.)	Abhandlungen der (königlichen) preussischen [from 1947 deutschen] Akademie der Wissenschaften (Berlin, 1815–1907; philosoph.-hist. Kl., ib., 1908–49).
Abh. (Gött.)	Abhandlungen der (königlichen) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philolog.-hist. Kl., N.F. (Berlin, 1897 ff.).
Abh. (Sächs.)	Abhandlungen der philologisch-historischen Classe der (königlich) sächsischen Gesellschaft (Akademie) der Wissenschaften (Leipzig, 1850 ff.).
A.C.O.	Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum, ed. E. *Schwartz (Strassburg, 1914 ff.).
A.C.W.	Ancient Christian Writers. The Works of the Fathers in Translation, ed. J. Quasten and others (Westminster, Maryland–London, 1946 ff.).
A.F.H.	Archivum Franciscanum Historicum (Quaracchi, 1908 ff.).
A.H.D.L.M.A.	Archives d'histoire doctrinale et littéraire du moyen âge (Paris, 1926 ff.).
A.H.M.A.	Analecta Hymnica Medii Aevi, ed. G. M. Dreves, S.J., and C. Blume, S.J. (55 vols., Leipzig, 1886–1922).
Altaner–Stuiber (1966)	B. *Altaner, Patrologie. Leben, Schriften und Lehre der Kirchenväter (ed. 6 revised by A. Stuiber, 1966).
A.M.	Hymns Ancient and Modern* (London, Standard Edition, 1916).
Anal. Boll.	Analecta Bollandiana (Paris and Brussels, 1882 ff.).
A.N.C.L.	Ante-Nicene Christian Library (Edinburgh, 1864 ff.).
A.S.S.	Acta Sanctae Sedis (41 vols., Rome, 1865–1908).
Bardenhewer, i	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, i (ed. 2, 1913).
Bardenhewer, ii	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, ii (ed. 2, 1914).
Bardenhewer, iii	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, iii (ed. 1, 1912).
Bardenhewer, iv	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, iv (1924).
Bardenhewer, v	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, v (1932).
Ber. (Sächs.)	Berichte über die Verhandlungen der (königlich) sächsischen Gesellschaft (Akademie) der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig. Philologisch-historische Classe (Leipzig, 1849 ff.).
Bettenson	H. Bettenson (ed.), Documents of the Christian Church (World's Classics, London, 1943). [Also publd., with different pagination, in Galaxy Edition, New York, 1947.]
Bettenson (ed. 2, 1963)	H. Bettenson (ed.), Documents of the Christian Church (ed. 2, 1963).
B.G.P.M.	Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des Mittelalters. Texte und Untersuchungen, begründet von C. Baeumker (Münster i.W., 1891 ff.; from 1930 Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie und Theologie des Mittelalters; N.F., 1970 ff.; Supplementbände, 1913 ff.).

B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957)	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca, ed. 3, by F. Halkin, S.J. (3 vols., Brussels, 1957).
B.H.L.	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Latina Antiquae et Mediae Aetatis, ediderunt Socii Bollandiani (Subsidia Hagiographica, vi; 2 vols., Brussels, 1898–1901; + Supplement, ib., xii; 1911).
B.H.O.	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Orientalis, ediderunt Socii Bollandiani (Subsidia Hagiographica, x; Brussels, 1910).
Black's N.T. Comm.	Black's New Testament Commentaries, ed. H. Chadwick (London, 1957 ff.).
Braun, A.G.	J. Braun, S.J., Das christliche Altargerät (1932).
Braun, C.A.	J. Braun, S.J., Der christliche Altar (2 vols., 1924).
Braun, L.G.	J. Braun, S.J., Die liturgische Gewandung im Occident und Orient nach Ursprung und Entwicklung, Verwendung und Symbolik (1907).
Braun, L.P.	J. Braun, S.J., Die liturgischen Paramente in Gegenwart und Vergangenheit (ed. 2, 1924).
Bremond	H. *Bremond, Histoire littéraire du sentiment religieux en France depuis la fin des guerres de religion jusqu'à nos jours (11 vols., 1916–33, + index, 1936).
Brightman, L.E.W.	F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, vol. i. Eastern (1896; all publd.).
B.R.U.C.	A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Cambridge to 1500 (Cambridge, 1963).
B.R.U.O.	A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford to A.D. 1500 (3 vols., Oxford, 1957–9).
B.Z.	Byzantinische Zeitschrift (Leipzig, 1892 ff.).
Camb. Bib.	The Cambridge Bible for Schools (1878–1936; R.V., 1903–30).
C. Anc. H.	The Cambridge Ancient History, ed. J. B. Bury, S. A. Cook, F. E. Adcock, M. P. Charlesworth, and N. H. Baynes (12 vols., 1923–39).
C. Anc. H. (rev. ed.)	The Cambridge Ancient History (revised edition of vols. i–ii; originally issued in fascicles, 1961 ff.).
C.B.E.L.	The Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature, ed. F. W. Bateson (4 vols., Cambridge, 1940, + supplement, 1957).
C.C.	Corpus Christianorum (Turnhout, 1953 ff.).
C.E.	Catholic Encyclopedia (15 vols. + Index, New York, 1907–14).
Cent. Bib.	The Century Bible, ed. W. F. Adeney (34 vols., Edinburgh, 1901–22).
C.G.T.	The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools (and Colleges) [ed. J. J. S. Perowne and others] (20 vols., Cambridge, 1881–1933).
C.H.S.	*Church Historical Society.
Clar. Bib.	The Clarendon Bible (Oxford, 1922 ff.).
C. Med. H.	Cambridge Medieval History, planned by J. B. Bury, ed. H. M. Gwatkin, J. P. Whitney and others (8 vols., 1911–36, and vol. of maps, 1936; vol. iv revised under the editorship of J. M. Hussey, 2 parts, 1966–7).
C.M.H.	Cambridge Modern History, planned by Lord *Acton, ed. A. W. Ward, G. W. Prothero, and S. Leathes (12 vols., 1902–10, + index, 1911, and atlas, 1912).
C.Q.R.	Church Quarterly Review (169 vols., London, 1875–1968).
C.R.S.	*Catholic Record Society (London, 1905 ff.).
C.S.C.O.	Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium (Paris, &c., 1903 ff.).
C.S.E.L.	Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum (Vienna, 1866 ff.).
C.S.H. Byz.	Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae (49 vols., Bonn, 1828–78).
D.A.C.	Dictionary of the Apostolic Church, ed. J. *Hastings (2 vols., 1915–18).
D.A.C.L.	Dictionnaire d'Archéologie Chrétienne et de Liturgie, ed. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B. (15 vols., 1907–53).
Darlow-Moule	T. H. Darlow–H. F. Moule, Historical Catalogue of the Printed Editions of Holy Scripture in the Library of the British and Foreign Bible Society (2 vols. bound in 4, 1903–11).
Darlow-Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968)	A. S. Herbert, Historical Catalogue of Printed Editions of the English Bible 1525–1961. Revised and Expanded from the Edition of T. H. Darlow and H. F. Moule, 1903 (1968).
D.C.A.	Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, ed. W. Smith and S. Cheetham (2 vols., 1875–80).
D.C.B.	Dictionary of Christian Biography, ed. W. Smith and H. Wace (4 vols., 1877–87).
D.C.G.	Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels, ed. J. *Hastings (2 vols., 1906–8).
D.D.C.	Dictionnaire de Droit Canonique, ed. R. Naz (7 vols., 1935–65)
D.E.C.H.	Dictionary of English Church History, ed. S. L. Ollard and G. Crosse (1912).
D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948)	Dictionary of English Church History, ed. 3 by S. L. Ollard, G. Crosse, and M. F. Bond (1948).
Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961)	E. Dekkers, O.S.B.–A. Gaar (edd.), Clavis Patrum Latinorum qua in novum Corpus Christianorum edendum Optimas quasque Scriptorum Recensiones . . . recludit (Sacris Erudiri, iii; ed. 2, Sint Pietersabdij, Steenbrugge, 1961).

Denz.–Bann.	H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum, ed. 28 after that of C. Bannwart, S.J., and I. B. Umberg, S.J., by C. Rahner, S.J. (Freiburg i.Br., 1952).
Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965)	H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum, ed. 33 by A. Schönmetzer, S.J. (Freiburg i. Br., 1965).
D.H.G.E.	Dictionnaire d'Histoire et de Géographie Ecclésiastiques, ed. A. Baudrillart and others (1912 ff.).
Dict. Amer. Biog.	Dictionary of American Biography, published under the Auspices of the American Council of Learned Societies, ed. A. Johnson and others (20 vols., 1928–36, + index, 1937, and Supplement, 1944).
Dict. Bibl.	Dictionnaire de la Bible, ed. F. Vigouroux, P.S.S. (5 vols., 1895–1912).
Dict. Bibl., Suppl.	Dictionnaire de la Bible, Supplément, ed. L. Pirot (1928 ff.).
Dict. Sp.	Dictionnaire de Spiritualité, ed. M. Viller, S.J., and others (1937 ff.).
D.N.B.	Dictionary of National Biography, founded by G. Smith, ed. L. Stephen and S. Lee (63 vols., 1885–1900). [Also repr., with some corrections, in 21 vols., 1908–9.]
D.N.B., Suppl.	Dictionary of National Biography, Supplement, ed. S. Lee (3 vols., 1901). [Also repr. in 1 vol., 1909.]
D.N.B., 1901–1911	Dictionary of National Biography, Supplement January 1901–December 1911, ed. S. Lee (3 vols., 1912).
D.N.B., 1912–1921	Dictionary of National Biography, 1912–1921, ed. H. W. C. Davis and J. R. H. Weaver (1927).
D.N.B., 1922–1930	Dictionary of National Biography, 1922–1930, ed. J. R. H. Weaver (1937).
D.N.B., 1931–1940	Dictionary of National Biography, 1931–1940, ed. L. G. Wickham Legg (1949).
D.N.B., 1941–1950	Dictionary of National Biography, 1941–1950, ed. L. G. Wickham Legg and E. T. Williams (1959).
D.N.B., 1951–1960	Dictionary of National Biography, 1951–1960, ed. E. T. Williams and Helen M. Palmer (1971).
D.T.C.	Dictionnaire de Théologie Catholique, ed. A. Vacant, E. Mangenot, and É. Amann (15 vols., 1903–50).
Duchesne	[see L.P.].
E.B. (ed. 11)	Encyclopaedia Britannica, ed. 11 (28 vols. and Index, 1910–11).
E.B. (ed. 14)	Encyclopaedia Britannica, ed. 14 (23 vols. and Index, 1929).
E.B. (ed. 1968)	Encyclopaedia Britannica (23 vols. and Index; Chicago, 1968).
E.Bi.	Encyclopaedia Biblica, ed. T. K. *Cheyne and J. S. Black (4 vols., 1899–1903).
E.C.	Enciclopedia Cattolica, ed. P. Paschini and others (12 vols., 1949–54).
E.E.T.S.	Early English Text Society (London, 1864 ff.).
E.H.	Exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. J. Nickel (Münster i.W., 1911 ff.).
E.H.	English Hymnal* (London, 1906).
E.H.R.	English Historical Review (London, 1886 ff.).
Eissfeldt	O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament (Eng. tr. by P. R. Ackroyd, Oxford, 1966).
E.J.	Encyclopaedia Judaica, ed. J. Klatzkin and others (10 vols., Berlin, 1928–1934).
E.K.L.	Evangelisches Kirchenlexikon, ed. by H. Brunotte and O. Weber (4 vols., incl. Registerband, 1956–62).
E.L.	Ephemerides Liturgicae (Rome, 1887 ff.).
É.O.	Échos d'Orient (Paris, 39 vols., 1897–1942).
E.O.M.I.A.	Ecclesiae Occidentalis Monumenta Iuris Antiquissima, ed. C. H. *Turner (Oxford, 1899 ff.).
Fliche–Martin	A. Fliche–V. Martin (edd.), Histoire de l'Église depuis les origines jusqu'à nos jours (Paris, 1935 ff.).
G.C.S.	Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte (Leipzig, 1897–1941; Berlin and Leipzig, 1953; Berlin, 1954 ff.).
Gee–Hardy	H. Gee–W. J. Hardy (edd.), Documents Illustrative of English Church History (1896).
Gel. Anz. (Gött.)	Göttingische gelehrte Anzeigen unter der Aufsicht der (königl.) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften (Göttingen, 1884 ff.).
Hardouin	J. *Hardouin [Harduinus], Acta Conciliorum et Epistolae Decretales, ac Constitutiones Summorum Pontificum (12 vols., Paris, '1714–15').
Hardy	T. D. Hardy, Descriptive Catalogue of Materials Relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland to the End of the Reign of Henry VII (3 vols. bound in 4, Rolls Series, 1862–71).

H.A.T.	Handbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. O. Eissfeldt (Tübingen, 1934 ff.).
Hb.N.T.	Handbuch zum Neuen Testament, begründet von H. *Lietzmann (1908 ff.).
H.B.S.	*Henry Bradshaw Society (1891 ff.).
H.D.B.	J. *Hastings (ed.), Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., 1898–1902, with extra vol., 1904).
H.E.	Historia Ecclesiastica.
Hefele–Leclercq	C. J. *Hefele (tr. into Fr. by H. *Leclercq, O.S.B.), Histoire des conciles d'après les documents originaux (11 vols., 1907–52).
Heimbucher	M. Heimbucher, Die Orden und Kongregationen der katholischen Kirche, i (ed. 3, 1933), ii (1934).
H.E.R.E.	J. *Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols. + Index, 1908–26).
Hist. J.	Historisches Jahrbuch (Münster i.W., 1880–82; Munich, 1883–1930; Cologne, 1931–50; Munich and Freiburg i.Br., 1950 ff.).
H.K.A.T.	Handkommentar zum Alten Testament, ed. W. Nowack (18 vols., Göttingen, 1892–1933).
H.T.R.	Harvard Theological Review (New York, 1908 f.; Cambridge, Mass., 1910 ff.).
H.T.S.	Harvard Theological Studies (Cambridge, Mass., 1916 ff.).
H.U.L.	Home University Library (London, 1911 ff.).
H.Z.	Historische Zeitschrift (Munich, &c., 1859 ff.).
I.C.C.	International Critical Commentary (London, 1895 ff.).
I.L.S.	Inscriptiones Latinae Selectae, ed. H. Dessau (3 vols. in 5, Berlin, 1892–1916).
Jaffé	P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum ab Condita Ecclesia ad Annum post Christum Natum MCXCVIII, ed. 2 by G. Wattenbach (2 vols., Leipzig, 1885–8).
J.E.	Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer and others (12 vols., New York and London, 1901–6).
J.E.H.	Journal of Ecclesiastical History (London, 1950 ff.).
J.L.W.	Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (Münster i.W., 1921–41).
J.Q.R.	Jewish Quarterly Review (London, 1888–1908; Philadelphia, 1910 ff.).
J.T.S.	Journal of Theological Studies (London, 1900–5; Oxford, 1906–49; N.S., Oxford, 1950 ff.).
Jungmann (1952)	J. A. Jungmann, S.J., Missarum Sollemnia. Eine genetische Erklärung der römischen Messe (2 vols., ed. 1952).
Jungmann (ed. 1958)	J. A. Jungmann, S.J., Missarum Sollemnia. Eine genetische Erklärung der römischen Messe (ed. 4, 2 vols., 1958).
Jungmann (Eng. tr.)	J. A. Jungmann, S.J., The Mass of the Roman Rite (Eng. tr. of 1948 ed. of Missarum Sollemnia; 2 vols., New York, 1951–5).
K.A.T.	Kommentar zum Alten Testament, ed. E. Sellin (Leipzig, 1913 ff.).
K.E.H.	Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament (Leipzig, 1838 ff.).
K.E.K.	Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das Neue Testament, ed. H. A. W. *Meyer (16 vols., Göttingen, 1832–52; Eng. tr., 20 vols., 1873–95; also subsequent edd.).
K.H.A.T.	Kurzer Hand-Commentar zum Alten Testament, ed. K. Marti (21 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1897–1906).
Kidd	B. J. Kidd (ed.), Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation (1911).
Krumbacher	K. Krumbacher, Geschichte der byzantinischen Literatur von Justinian bis zum Ende des oströmischen Reiches, 527–1453 (ed. 2, 1897).
L.A.C.T.	Library of *Anglo-Catholic Theology (97 vols., Oxford, 1841–63).
Latourette	K. S. Latourette, History of the Expansion of Christianity (7 vols., New York and London, 1938–45).
Lauchert	F. Lauchert, Die Kanones der wichtigsten altkirchlichen Concilien (1896).
L.F.	*Library of the Fathers (43 vols., Oxford, 1838–74).
L.L.E.	Library of Liturgiology and Ecclesiology for English Readers, ed. V. Staley.
Loeb	Loeb Classical Library (London and Cambridge, Mass., 1912 ff.).
L.P. (Duchesne)	*Le Liber Pontificalis, ed. L. *Duchesne (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2 vols., 1886–92).
L.Th.K.	Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, ed. M. Buchberger (10 vols., 1930–8).
L.Th.K. (ed. 2)	Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, ed. 2 by J. Höfer and K. *Rahner (10 vols. and Index, 1957–67, + 3 supplementary vols., Das zweite vatikanische Konzil, 1967–8).
L.W.	L. Brinkhoff, O.F.M., and others (edd.), Liturgisch Woordenboek (2 vols., 1958–68).
McNeile	A. H. McNeile, An Introduction to the Study of the New Testament (ed. 2 by C. S. C. Williams, 1953).

Mai, N.P.B.	A. *Mai (ed.), Nova Patrum Bibliotheca (8 vols., Rome, 1844–71).
Mai, S.R.	A. *Mai (ed.), Spicilegium Romanum (10 vols., Rome, 1839–44).
Mai, S.V.N.C.	A. *Mai (ed.), Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio e Vaticanis Codicibus edita (10 vols., Rome, 1825–38).
Manitius	M. Manitius, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters (Handbuch der klassischen Altertumswissenschaft, ed. I. von Müller, ix, Abt. 2; 3 vols., 1911–31).
Mann	H. K. Mann, The Lives of the Popes in the (Early) Middle Ages (18 vols., bound in 19, 1902–32).
Mansi	J. D. *Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio (31 vols., Florence, 1759–98).
M.G.H.	Monumenta Germaniae Historica.
Mirbt	C. Mirbt, Quellen zur Geschichte des Papsttums und des römischen Katholizismus (ed. 4, 1924).
Moff. Comm.	The *Moffatt Commentaries.
N.A.	Neues Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde zur Beförderung einer Gesammtausgabe der Quellenschriften deutscher Geschichte des Mittelalters (Hanover, 1876–1922; Berlin, 1922–35).
Nachr. (Gött.)	Nachrichten von der (königlichen) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philolog.-hist. Kl. (Göttingen, 1894 ff.).
N.C.E.	New Catholic Encyclopedia (14 vols. + Index, New York, etc., 1967).
New Cent. Bib.	The Century Bible, New Edition (1966 ff.; entitled The New Century Bible, 1967 ff.).
New Clar. Bib.	New Clarendon Bible (Oxford, 1963 ff.).
N.F.	Neue Folge.
N.P.B.	[see Mai].
N.P.N.C.F.	Nicene and Post-Nicene Christian Fathers (New York, 1887–92; Oxford, 1890–1900).
N.S.	New Series.
O.C.	Oriens Christianus* (Leipzig, 1901 ff. For details see p. 1008.)
O.C.D.	The Oxford Classical Dictionary, ed. M. Cary–J. D. Denniston–J. W. Duff–A. D. Nock–H. H. Scullard (1949).
O.C.D. (ed. 2)	The Oxford Classical Dictionary, second edition, ed. N. G. L. Hammond–H. H. Scullard (1970).
O.C.P.	Orientalia Christiana Periodica (Rome, 1935 ff.).
O.E.D.	A New [Oxford] English Dictionary on Historical Principles founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society, ed. J. A. H. Murray–H. Bradley–W. A. Craigie–C. T. Onions (10 vols. + supplement, 1884–1933).
O.H.S.	Oxford Historical Society (Oxford, 1885 ff.).
Pastor	L. *Pastor, The History of the Popes from the Close of the Middle Ages, Eng. tr. (40 vols., 1891–1954).
P.B.D. (1912)	Prayer Book Dictionary, ed. G. Harford, M. Stevenson, and J. W. Tyrer (1912).
P.B.D. (1925)	Prayer Book Dictionary, ed. G. Harford, M. Stevenson, and J. W. Tyrer (ed. 1925).
PG	Patrologia Graeca, ed. J. P. *Migne (162 vols., Paris, 1857–66).
PL	Patrologia Latina, ed. J. P. *Migne (221 vols., Paris, 1844–64).
P.O.	Patrologia Orientalis, ed. R. Graffin and F. Nau (Paris, 1907 ff.).
Pourrat	P. Pourrat, P.S.S., La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1918–28).
P.R.E. (ed. 3)	Realencyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche, begründet von J. J. Herzog, ed. 3 by A. Hauck (21 vols., 1898–1908, + Register, 1909, and Ergänzungen und Nachträge, 2 vols., 1913).
P.W.	A. Pauly, Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft, ed. G. Wissowa (1893 ff.).
Quétif–Échard	J. Quétif, O.P.–J. Échard, O.P., Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum Recensiti (2 vols., Paris, 1719–21).
Raby	F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (1927).
Raby (1953)	F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (ed. 2, 1953).
R.A.C.	Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum. Sachwörterbuch zur Auseinandersetzung des Christentums mit der antiken Welt in Verbindung mit F. J. Dölger–H. Lietzmann und unter besonderer Mitwirkung von J. H. Waszink–L. Wenger herausgegeben von T. Klauser (Stuttgart, 1950 ff.).
R. Bén.	Revue Bénédictine (vols. i–v publ. under the title Le Messager des Fidèles; Lille and Bruges, 1884; Maredsous, 1885 ff.).
R. Bibl.	Revue Biblique (Paris, 1892 ff.).
Rech. S.R.	Recherches de Science Religieuse (Paris, 1910 ff.).

Rev. S.R.	Revue des Sciences Religieuses (Paris, 1921 f.; Strassburg and Paris, 1923 f.; Strassburg, 1925 ff.).
R.G.G. (ed. 2)	Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart, ed. 2 by H. *Gunkel and L. Zscharnack (5 vols., 1927–31).
R.G.G. (ed. 3)	Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart, ed. 3 by K. Galling (6 vols. + Register, 1957–65).
R.H.	Revue Historique (Paris, 1876 ff.).
R.H.E.	Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique (Louvain, 1900 ff.).
R.H.P.R.	Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses (Strassburg, 1921–4; Strassburg–Paris, 1925–49; Paris, 1950 ff.).
Riv. A.C.	Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana (Rome, 1924 ff.).
Rohault	C. Rohault de Fleury, La Messe. Études archéologiques sur ses monuments (8 vols., 1883–9).
R.Q.	Römische Quartalschrift für die christliche Alterthumskunde und für Kirchengeschichte (Rome, 1887 ff., + 28 Supplementhefte, 1893–1931).
R.Q.H.	Revue des Questions Historiques (Paris, 1866–1933; Blois, 1933; Paris, 1934; Blois, 1935 f.; Bourges, 1937–9).
R.S.	Rolls Series, 1858 ff.
R.S.P.T.	Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques (Kain–Paris, 1907–12; Paris, 1913 ff.).
R.T.A.M.	Recherches de Théologie Ancienne et Médiévale (Louvain, 1929 ff.).
Sb. (Bayr.)	Sitzungsberichte der (königlich) bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (zu München) (Munich, 1860–71; philosoph.-philolog. und hist. Cl., 1871–1930; philosoph.-hist. Abt., 1930 ff.).
Sb. (Berl.)	Sitzungsberichte der (königlichen) preussischen [from 1948 deutschen] Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin (Berlin, 1882–1921; philosoph.-hist. Kl., 1922–49).
Sb. (Heid.)	Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosoph.-hist. Kl. (Heidelberg, 1910 ff.).
Sb. (Wien)	Sitzungsberichte der (kaiserlichen) Akademie der Wissenschaften (in Wien). Hist.-philolog. or Philolog.-hist. Kl. (Vienna, 1848 ff.).
S.C.	Sources Chrétiennes (Paris, 1940 ff.).
Schneemelcher	E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen in deutscher Übersetzung, ed. 3 by W. Schneemelcher (2 vols., 1959–64; Eng. tr., 1963–5).
Schottenloher	K. Schottenloher, Bibliographie zur deutschen Geschichte im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 1517–1585 (6 vols., 1933–40).
Sommervogel	Augustin de Backer, S.J.–Aloys de Backer, S.J.–A. Carayon, S.J., Bibliothèque de la Compagnie de Jésus, ed. C. Sommervogel, S.J. (10 vols., 1890–1909).
S.P.C.K.	Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. (See p. 1298 f.)
S.P.G.	Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. (See p. 1299.)
S.R.	[see Mai].
S.S.L.	Spicilegium Sacrum Lovaniense. Études et documents (Louvain, 1922 ff.).
S.T.	Studi e Testi (Rome, 1900 ff.).
S.T.	Summa Theologica*.
Stammler	W. Stammler and others (edd.), Die Deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters. Verfasserlexikon (5 vols., 1933–55).
S.V.N.C.	[see Mai].
Teub.	Bibliotheca Scriptorum Graecorum et Romanorum Teubneriana (Leipzig, 1849 ff.).
Th.Q.	Theologische Quartalschrift (Tübingen, 1831–1928; various places, 1929 ff.).
T.L.S.	The Times Literary Supplement (London, 1902 ff.).
T.L.Z.	Theologische Literaturzeitung* (Leipzig, 1876 ff., + Bibliographisches Beiblatt, ib., 1922 ff.).
T.U.	*Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur, begründet von O. von Gebhardt und A. *Harnack (Leipzig, 1882 ff.).
Turner	[see E.O.M.I.A.].
T.W.B.	Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, ed. G. Kittel (1933 ff.).
Überweg, i	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, i (ed. 12 by K. Praechter, 1926).
Überweg, ii	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, ii (ed. 11 by B. Geyer, 1928).
Überweg, iii	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, iii (ed. 12 by M. Frischeisen-Köhler and W. Moog, 1924).
Überweg, iv	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, iv (ed. 12 by T. K. Oesterreich, 1923).
Überweg, v	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, v (ed. 12 by T. K. Oesterreich, 1928).
V.C.	Vigiliae Christianae. A Review of early Christian Life and Language (Amsterdam, 1947 ff.).

V.C.H.	Victoria County History (London, 1900 ff.).
Vulg. or Vg.	*Vulgate.
West. Comm.	Westminster Commentaries [until 1903, 'Oxford Commentaries'], ed. W. *Lock, &c. (London, 1899 ff.).
Z.A.T.W.	Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft (und die Kunde des nachbiblischen Judentums) (Giessen, 1881–1932; Berlin, 1933 ff.; + Beihefte, Giessen, 1896–1934; Berlin, 1936 ff.).
Z.K.G.	Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte (Gotha, 1877–1930; Stuttgart, 1931 ff.).
Z.K.T.	Zeitschrift für katholische Theologie (Innsbruck, 1877–1940; Vienna, 1947 ff.).
Z.N.T.W.	Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde des Urchristentums (Giessen, 1900–32; Berlin, 1933 ff.; + Beihefte, Giessen, 1923–34; Berlin, 1936 ff.).

(C) Biblical Books

OT: Gen., Exod., Lev., Num., Deut., Jos., Jgs., Ruth, 1, 2 Sam. (=1, 2 Reg., Vulg.), 1, 2 Kgs. (=3, 4 Reg., Vulg.), 1, 2 Chron. (=1, 2 Paralip., Vulg.), Ez. (=1 Esd., Vulg.), Neh. (=2 Esd., Vulg.), Est., Job, Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs (=Cant., Vulg.), Is. (=Es., Vulg.), Jer., Lam., Ezek., Dan., Hos., Joel, Am., Obad., Jon., Mic., Nah., Hab., Zeph., Hag., Zech., Mal.

Apocrypha: 1, 2 Esd. (=3, 4 Esd., Vulg.), Tob., Judith, Rest of Est., Wisd. Sol., Ecclus. (=Sirach, Vulg.), Bar., S. of III Ch., Sus., Bel, Pr. Man., 1, 2 Macc.

NT: Mt., Mk., Lk., Jn., Acts, Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Gal., Eph., Phil., Col., 1, 2 Thess., 1, 2 Tim., Tit., Philem., Heb., Jas., 1, 2 Pet., 1, 2, 3 Jn., Jude, Rev. (=Apoc., Vulg.).

FRANK LESLIE CROSS
1900–1968

To a younger generation of English-speaking theologians the name of F. L. Cross has become almost synonymous with the Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church. On the Continent of Europe it is revered in connexion with international conferences on academic aspects of theology which somehow broke through denominational barriers at a time when ecumenical dialogue between Catholics and Protestants was virtually prohibited. However his achievements are estimated, it may well be that those who did not know him personally will ask what manner of man Cross was. The answer that would be almost universally given is that he was a shy and retiring scholar, and a man of God.

Frank Leslie Cross was born exactly a year before Queen Victoria died. He was the eldest child of parents who were not young; his father retired from business when Leslie was eleven and the family then moved from Honiton to Bournemouth. As a day-boy he attended the local grammar school, which at that time specialized in science. While he was still at school he passed the London Intermediate B.Sc. examination and won the Domus Scholarship for Natural Science at Balliol College, Oxford.

After one term at Oxford Cross was involved in military service during the last months of the First World War. The letters which he sent home suggest that he was less unhappy than might be expected and looking back on his time in the Army he described the exercises as futile rather than positively frustrating. The Armistice was signed before he was sent to the Front, and in due course he returned to Balliol. He took Honours in Chemistry and Crystallography at Oxford in 1920 and in the same year completed the London B.Sc. He devoted the rest of his life to the study of theology, though the scientific habit of taking nothing verifiable on trust never left him. Since Balliol had no theologians among their Fellows, Cross was sent to Keble for tuition by D. C. Simpson and K. E. Kirk. Despite the handicap of having to learn Greek at a late stage, Cross took First Class Honours in Theology in 1922. He also collected a number of University prizes and scholarships, which in those days were sought for their financial as well as for their honorific value. He went to Germany for a year to work at Marburg and Freiburg on the material for his doctoral dissertation on Husserl, eventually taking his D.Phil. at Oxford in 1930. In 1923 he became an ordinand at Ripon Hall, of which H. D. A. Major was then Principal. He co-operated with Major in editing the papers left unpublished on Hastings Rashdall's death in 1924; these formed three volumes published in 1927–30. Cross certainly came under Major's influence, but it may well be doubted if he ever accepted the more extreme tenets of the so-called Modernism. In 1925 he was ordained to the title of Tutor and Chaplain of Ripon Hall.

In 1927, rather surprisingly, Cross received from the Governors an invitation to become one of the priest-librarians of Pusey House, a house of study founded in memory of E. B. Pusey, with 'the pursuit of personal holiness' as one of its avowed aims. He seems to have met with some suspicion in his early years on account of his continued association with the Modernist movement, but gradually, particularly under the influence of Darwell Stone, he made it clear that his theological position was basically Anglo-Catholic. His little book, Religion and the Realm of Science, published in 1930, reflects the influence upon his mind at this time of the scientific method, the moralism of Rashdall and Major, and the intense aesthetic attraction of Catholic ceremonial and sacramental religion. The centenary of the Oxford Movement in 1933 provided the occasion for a number of small works on the subject and probably led him to embark on a study of Newman, published in 1935. This contains letters of Newman which were previously unknown.

Also in 1933 Cross became an Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bradford, a post which he conscientiously filled for ten years. His correspondence makes it clear that he found the work arduous and inclined to interfere with his other interests, but it was a task which he valued for the contact it gave him with the parochial ministry. It is also worth recording that despite all his diffidence he was exercising a strong pastoral influence over the many undergraduates who sought his counsel at Pusey House, and that the strength of his spirituality impressed others who came in contact with him at this time. He was during the 1930s an ardent pacifist, and he persuaded many to share his views. In 1934 he became Custodian of the Library of Pusey House. He did much to expand as well as to catalogue the library and made known its uses among non-theologians in the University.

In 1934 he was appointed University Lecturer in the Philosophy of Religion and from 1935 to 1938 he was also Wilde Lecturer in Natural and Comparative Religion, choosing as his subject the history of the relations between religion and scientific theory. It would seem, however, that his interests were turning in other directions. In 1935 he published a collection of extracts from 17th-century Anglican divines which he edited with P. E. More under the title Anglicanism; from its continued sales it appears that this has become a standard work. The following year he produced his adaptation of Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels, also widely used. But he was already drawn to the early Fathers. On a walking tour in Majorca in December 1935 to January 1936 he records that he spent a good many evenings translating Bardenhewer. He had already lectured for a number of years on Leo and Athanasius, and in 1939 he published a students' edition of the De Incarnatione. Both from his Inaugural Lecture on Athanasius when he became Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity (1944) and from the papers he left unfinished (now in the hands of the Rev. Prof. G. C. Stead) it seems clear that he meant to produce a critical edition of the text; but his energies were diverted to other channels. On Stone's death in 1941 Cross succeeded him as Editor of the Lexicon of Patristic Greek (as it was then called). On this project he toiled much, working in the Bodleian Library on the intractable slips, persuading others to give freely of their time, and raising funds by appeal and by his own work. When he undertook to look after parishes during the University vacation he would ask for his fees to be paid to the L.P.G. In 1941 he was also concerned with the foundation of the Theological Literature Association, of which he was one of the two secretaries throughout its useful life. He also set to work, as a labour of piety, on a life of Darwell Stone, which he completed in record time. The book was published in 1943. Even if it fails to give a vivid portrait of its subject, the material it contains remains one of the sources for the history of the Church of England during the period of the Modernist crisis and the controversy over the revision of the Book of Common Prayer.

On Maundy Thursday 1939 Cross and his fellow-librarian, the Rev. T. M. Parker, were invited by the Oxford University Press to produce a semi-popular volume to be called The Oxford Companion to the Christian Religion; it was to be analogous to The Oxford Companion to Music. After a year it became clear that it would not be quickly completed, and Mr. Parker resigned. Cross continued to work at the first draft in spasms, but with the intervention of the Second World War and other troubles the completion of the book, and its metamorphosis into the first edition of this Dictionary, had to wait until he had become Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity. On the death of Dr. N. P. Williams in April 1943 this chair became vacant. At that time it was filled by an election in which all holders of Oxford degrees in Divinity were entitled to vote. When it was first suggested to Cross that he should stand he refused, but after an overnight journey he changed his mind and allowed his name to go forward. Partly because of war-time conditions, the election was not held until January 1944, when Cross was elected by a respectable majority.

The Lady Margaret Chair carries with it a canonry of Christ Church and a large mansion of over thirty rooms in the heart of the college. To this abode Cross carried his books in suitcases and devoted his afternoons to taming the garden. At first he had a housekeeper and tried to turn his lodgings into an almost monastic house of study. Later, after his mother's death, his father and sisters came to live in his house, but he still offered accommodation to many generations of undergraduates, in many cases without charge. In the Cathedral his influence was quickly felt, partly because of his regular attendance at every office and partly because he soon introduced an additional weekday celebration of the Holy Communion at an early hour which at times drew a sizeable congregation; at first he was himself the normal celebrant, but as others wished to join in he gladly took his turn in the rota.

The principal achievements of his Professorship were the publication in 1957 of the Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, as it was eventually called, and the organization of international conferences. The Dictionary was very largely his own work. Other scholars supplied him with information, and assistants helped with compiling bibliographies and first drafts, but he himself welded the material into a unity and his hand is clearly visible throughout. The book has become a standard work of reference, and at the time of his death he was working on this revised edition.

The international conferences grew out of his desire for peace and co-operation among scholars and Christians. Almost immediately after the end of the Second World War he took part in a mission to Germany to try to restore relations with German Christians, and when Patrick McLaughlin suggested to him that a gathering of scholars interested in the study of the Fathers of the Church would further relations between Christians of different denominations, he readily agreed to convene such a meeting. The First International Conference on Patristic Studies took place in 1951. In those days the academic nature of the assembly had to be stressed, and even then all members of one of the principal Roman Catholic orders were forbidden at the last moment to attend, on the ground that the gathering was 'crypto-ecumenical'. This was a severe blow. But about 200 people came, from every continent. The value of the Conference for exchange of views was so obvious that a small delegation asked Cross to arrange another; and since at a late stage he had suddenly begun to call the 1951 meeting 'The First International Conference on Patristic Studies' it was not difficult to see that a series was envisaged. The Second took place in 1955, and from then on the Proceedings have been published by the Berlin Academy in Texte und Untersuchungen. The Conferences, at four-yearly intervals, grew, until that of 1967, opened by Cardinal Pellegrino, was more than double the size of the first, and everyone took part without denominational distinction. In 1957, at the first of the parallel New Testament Congresses, which developed from earlier congresses intended to foster the exchange of ideas between the Anglican clergy and academics, Dr. [later Cardinal] Heenan, then Archbishop of Liverpool, took the chair for Dr. Ramsey, then Archbishop of York. These conferences owed their being to Cross's powers of organization and their success to his attention to every detail and to his powers of control and persuasion; he somehow contrived to keep Continental professors content with their ration of 18 minutes, while he was able to encourage the diffident and young. It is likely that the conference on Patristic studies played some part in bringing about the enormous increase in popularity of the Fathers as a field of research which is reflected in the output of the University Presses over the last twenty years; it is also likely that they played some part—though it is impossible to assess precisely what—in bringing together Christians of different allegiances and making for an atmosphere in which ecumenism has become fashionable. This search for unity certainly figured largely in his plans for his conferences and in his prayers.

Partly at least because of these labours Cross did not produce a large output of original work. He took enormous care over the supervision of his pupils and the encouragement of other scholars. He contributed to the Journal of Theological Studies a number of important articles, including those on the pre-Leonine elements in the Roman Mass in 1949, the African Canons in 1961 and the development of Western liturgical manuscripts in 1965. At the time of his death he was working on the Stowe Missal; he felt confident that he had discovered the purpose for which the original manuscript was written and he was concerned to see just how it fitted into the development of the Roman Mass. He published an interesting reconstruction of I Peter as a Paschal Homily in 1954, a view which he later doubted. Other insights on particular points he buried in unlikely places: he propounded his interpretation of Melito's Peri Pascha in a lecture which he never published and he printed his findings first in a review of someone else's edition and then in his own handbook, Early Christian Fathers (1960).

His lectures were badly attended, largely because his delivery was painful. It was equally difficult to follow his sermons, which were frequently first-rate pieces of work and read well. It is something of a surprise to find that he was chosen as Select Preacher at Cambridge on more than one occasion and that he also preached in St. Paul's Cathedral in 1939.

He was personally shy and by nature retiring. Throughout his life he disliked parties and found social contacts difficult. He was completely lacking in small-talk and on a superficial level a bad judge of character, and he frequently overestimated people's ability. On the other hand few were able to refuse his requests and he was deeply respected by the college servants who said that he was almost unique in his appreciation of what they did. When he was in charge of college and university livings he invariably visited the parishes in which an incumbent was to be appointed, and he got on well with the country people. He enjoyed walking and, up to 1960, bicycling both in England and on the Continent. He spent much time with religious communities, making it his habit during vacations to act as chaplain to communities of nuns whose own priests were on holiday or during an interregnum. These visits provided him with a peace of mind which he seldom seemed to find elsewhere.

Towards the end of his life honours came to him from many quarters. He had obtained his own Oxford D.D. in 1950; in 1959 and 1960 he received honorary degrees from Aberdeen and Bonn and was later offered others in America; in 1967 he was elected a Fellow of the British Academy. He retired from his chair in September 1968 and died on 29 December of the same year.

A

AARON. In Hebrew tradition *Moses' brother. He is first mentioned in the narrative of Moses' vision on Mt. Horeb (Ex. 4. 14), when Jehovah assigns him to Moses as his assistant. Jehovah afterwards appointed him and his descendants to be priests (Ex. 28 and 29; Num. 8 and 18), an office he kept despite his share in setting up the golden calf (Ex. 32. 1–6). The power of his priestly intercession is emphasized in the story of his staying a plague (Num. 16. 43–8), and his authority is miraculously confirmed by the budding rod (Num. 17. 1–8). Aaron's priesthood, whose chief function was the offering of acceptable sacrifice to God, gave him a unique position. He was the head of his sons and the Levites; he alone offered incense in the Holy of Holies and mediated between God and the people; and, like a king, he was anointed and crowned with diadem and tiara (Ex. 28). He is thus in Christian theology a type of Christ. This conception of Aaron as at once foreshadowing and being replaced by Him is worked out in the Ep. to the Hebrews, where the superiority of the perfect sacrifice of Calvary to the animal sacrifices of the Aaronic priesthood is established. For critical theories on the growth of the Aaronic priesthood, see modern works on the OT.

R. H. *Kennett, 'The Origin of the Aaronite Priesthood' in J.T.S., vi (1904–5), pp. 161–86. See also A. H. McNeile, ib., vii (1905–6), pp. 1–9, and R. H. Kennett, ib., pp. 620–4. F. S. North, 'Aaron's Rise in Prestige' in Z.A.T.W., lxvi (1954), pp. 191–99. H. Valentin, Aaron. Eine Studie zur vor-priesterschriftlichen Aaron-Überlieferung (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, xviii; 1978).

ABAILARD. See Abelard.

ABBA. The Aramaic word for 'Father'. It occurs three times in the NT, Mk. 14. 36, Rom. 8. 15, and Gal. 4. 6, in each case with its Greek equivalent ('Αββᾶ, ὁ Πατήρ, 'Abba, Father').

S. V. McCasland, '"Abba, Father"' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxii (1953), pp. 79–91. J. C. G. Greig, 'Abba and Amen: their Relevance to Christology' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Evangelica, v (T.U., ciii; 1968), pp. 3–13, esp. pp. 3–10, with reff. G. Kittel in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 4–6, s.v. ἀββᾶ. See also comm. to Mk., etc.

ABBÉ. A French term, originally restricted to the *abbot of a monastery, but in modern times applied to every person wearing secular ecclesiastical dress. The extension of meaning took place in the 16th cent., when the Concordat of 1516 authorized Francis I to nominate secular priests abbots 'in *commendam'. As the number of nominations far exceeded the abbacies available, many 'abbés', who often were not even in major orders, devoted themselves to other work, e.g. educational and literary pursuits, whence the term was transferred to secular clerics in general. Today such clerics are addressed as 'M. l'Abbé'.

ABBESS. The superior of certain communities of nuns following the *Benedictine rule, though the title is extended to the superiors of orders of *canonesses and (esp.) to those of the Second *Franciscan Order. The earliest known use of the title (Lat. abbatissa) is in a sepulchral inscription (514) on the site of an ancient convent near the basilica of St. Agnes extra muros at *Rome. A nun must now be forty years of age and ten years professed before she can be elected. She then receives the same episcopal benediction as an abbot, though this cannot in her case convey any power resembling that of the keys. Except in the Franciscan Order, the office is held for life and confers the right to the ring and staff. In the Middle Ages wide powers were claimed by certain abbesses, e.g. the Abbess of Conversano on election, vested in a mitre, received the homage of the local clergy, while *Innocent III had to forbid the Abbesses of Burgos and Palencia from hearing the confessions of their nuns. In England abbesses attended councils on several occasions, e.g. St. *Hilda was present at *Whitby in 664. The Council of *Trent put an end to most special prerogatives, and now Canon Law (CIC, can. 535) subordinates the abbess in certain respects to the bishop of the diocese.

A. Tamburinius, O.S.B., De Jure Abbatissarum et Monialium (Rome, 1638). Eileen Power, Medieval English Nunneries, c. 1275 to 1535 (1922), pp. 42–95. T. J. Bowe, Religious Superioresses. A historical synopsis and a commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, ccxxviii; 1946). K. H. Schäfer, Die Kanonissenstifter im deutschen Mittelalter (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, Hftt. 43–4; 1907), pp. 140–5. Pie de Langogne, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 17–22, s.v. 'Abbesses'; J. de Puniet in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 57–61, s.v. 'Abbesse'. J. Baucher, O.S.B., in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 62–71, s.v. 'Abbesses'.

ABBO, St. (c. 945 – 1004), otherwise 'Abbon', Abbot of *Fleury. He was born nr. Orleans, entered the Benedictine abbey of Fleury, and studied at *Paris, *Reims, and Fleury. From 985 to 987 he was in charge of studies at the monastery school of Ramsey, at the same time helping *Oswald, Abp. of *York, in the restoration of monasticism in England. He was elected Abbot of Fleury in 988. He supported the *Cluniac Reform and was an ardent defender of Papal authority and of the freedom of the monasteries from both episcopal and secular interference. He was killed in a revolt occasioned by the reform of the priory of La Réole in Gascony. His correspondence is a valuable source for the relations between France and the Papacy during the reign of Robert the Pious. He also issued writings on logic, mathematics and astronomy and an Epitome of the Lives of the Popes. Feast day, 13 Nov.

Works and Letters in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxix, 417–578 (incomplete). Opera inedita ed. A. van de Vyver, posthumously publd. with introd. by R. Raes (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Letteren en Wijsbegeerte, cxl, etc.; Brugge, 1966 ff.). The principal authority is the Vita by a monk Aimonus repr. from the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti* in J. P. Migne, l.c., 375–414. J. B. Pardiac, Histoire de Saint Abbon, Abbé de Fleury-sur-Loire (1872); P. Cousin, O.S.B., Abbon de Fleury-sur-Loire (Paris, 1954). H. Bradley, 'On the Text of Abbo of Fleury's Quaestiones Grammaticales' in Proceedings of the British Academy, x (1921–3), pp. 173–80; A. Van de Vyver, 'Les Œuvres inédites d'Abbon de Fleury' in R.Bén., xlvii (1935), pp. 125–69. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, i (S.S.L. vi; 1924), pp. 47–60. U. Berlière, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 49–51, s.v. 'Abbon de Fleury', with details of his works and edd. of them. A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 71–6, s.v. 'Abbon de Fleury'.

ABBOT (from Aram. and Syr. Abba, i.e. Father; Gk. ἀββάς, Lat. Abbas). In the W. Church it is the official title of the superior of a (usually large) religious house belonging either to one of the orders of the *Benedictine family (e.g. *Cistercians and *Trappists) or to certain orders of *Canons Regular (e.g. *Canons Regular of the Lateran and *Premonstratensians). Acc. to the Rule of St. *Benedict, the abbot is to be regarded as the father of his monastic family, and as such has far-reaching powers in the government of his house, the rules of which he may regulate in accordance with the needs of climate, customs of the times, &c. He is elected, normally for life, by the monks of his abbey, but in the Middle Ages lay patrons frequently exercised decisive influence over the appointment. Within three months of his election he must receive a solemn benediction (CIC, can. 625), regarded as a *sacramental, acc. to his status either from the diocesan bishop, or, if he is an 'Abbot *nullius', from any bishop, or, in the case of some privileged abbeys, from another abbot. Most abbots are 'abbates regiminis', i.e. they are entrusted with the government of their monastery and exempt from episcopal jurisdiction. The 'abbates nullius [sc. dioecesis]' have either episcopal jurisdiction in their territory, or at least special privileges in the administration of the Sacraments, e.g. they may confer *confirmation and *minor orders in their territory, whereas the 'abbates regiminis' may give the tonsure and confer minor orders only on the professed monks of their houses. The 'titular abbots' hold the title of an abbey no longer in existence, and exercise none of the functions of an abbot. The insignia of office are the same as those of a bishop, viz. *mitre, *crosier, *ring, &c. They are old privileges that gradually came into use from the beginning of the Middle Ages, as was also their assistance at Church Councils (since the 8th Council of *Toledo in 653). The ancient distinction between mitred abbots (in pre-Reformation England, peers of Parliament) and others therefore does not now exist. The superiors of certain prominent monasteries have the name of 'Archabbot', and, in addition, the presiding abbot of a *Congregation (q.v.) is often known as the 'Abbot President' or 'Abbot General'. Since 1893 the Benedictine Order has had an 'Abbot Primate' who presides over the whole order. In the RC Church the election, rights, and duties of abbots are regulated by canon law (CIC, esp. cans. 319–27). The corresponding rank in the E. Church is *Hegoumen or *Archimandrite (q.v.).

Chs. 2, 3, 46, and 64 of the 'Rule of St. Benedict' are esp. concerned with the Abbot; Comm. on the rule by P. Delatte, O.S.B. (Eng. tr. by J. McCann, O.S.B., 1921), pp. 35–60, 358–360, 441–55 and passim; see also other comm. to rule cited under Benedict, St., Rule of. A. Tamburinius, O.S.B., De Iure Abbatum (3 vols., Lyons, 1640). K. Blume, Abbatia. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der kirchlichen Rechtssprache (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, lxxxiii; 1914). B. Hegglin, O.S.B., Der Benediktinische Abt in rechtsgeschichtlicher Entwicklung und geltendem Kirchenrecht (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, v; 1961). A. de Vogüé, O.S.B., La Communauté et l'Abbé dans la Règle de Saint Benoit (Textes et études théologiques [Bruges], 1961). P. Salmon, O.S.B., L'Abbé dans la Tradition monastique. Contribution à l'histoire du caractère perpétuel des supérieurs religieux en Occident (Histoire et sociologie de l'Église, ii; Sirey, 1962). F. Chamard, O.S.B., 'Les Abbés au moyen-âge' in R.Q.H., xxxiii (1885), pp. 71–108. U. Berlière, O.S.B., Les Élections Abbatiales au Moyen Age (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Mémoires. Collection in-8°, deuxième série, xx, fasc. 3; 1927). Pie de Langogne, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 10–17, s.v. 'Abbés', with reff. and bibl.; J. de Punet in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 49–57, s.v. 'Abbé'; J. Baucher, O.S.B., in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 29–62, s.v. 'Abbés'. See also works cited s.v. Monasticism.

ABBOT OF MISRULE. See Misrule, Lord of.

ABBOT, EZRA (1819–84), Biblical scholar. A native of Maine, U.S.A., and a *Unitarian by belief, in 1856 he became assistant librarian at Harvard university and in 1872 professor of NT at the Harvard divinity school. In 1871 he was appointed one of the original members of the American NT Revision Company in charge of the *RV, where his judgement exercised great influence. Several of his textual researches were incorporated into C. R. *Gregory's Prolegomena (1890) to the 8th (last) edition of C. *Tischendorf's Greek NT. Though extreme care for detail much restricted the extent of his own publications, his work bore fruit in the writings of many others, who sought his assistance. His other writings included 'The Authorship of the Fourth Gospel. External Evidences', an able defence of the Johannine authorship, in the Unitarian Review (1880), and a very thorough discussion of the punctuation of Rom. 9. 5 in the Journal of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis for 1883. These items, as well as several other of his papers, were reprinted after his death in Critical Essays (1888).

Ezra Abbot (Cambridge, Mass., 1884), with pref. by S. J. Barrows, addresses by J. H. Thayer (pp. 28–60) and others, memorial tributes, short biogr. note (p. 7), and list of Abbot's publications (pp. 69–73). B. W. Bacon in Dict. Amer. Biog., i (1928), p. 10 f.

ABBOT, GEORGE (1562–1633), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Guildford, he was educated and later taught at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1597 he became master of University College, Oxford, and in 1600, 1603, and 1605 he was vice-chancellor. In 1600 he also became Dean of *Winchester. He displayed from an early date strong *Puritan sympathies which brought him increasingly into conflict with the rising party of High Churchmen in the university, esp. W. *Laud. In 1606 his unqualified defence of hereditary monarchy against J. *Overall gained him royal favour, and this favour was increased after a mission to Scotland (1608) in which he succeeded in persuading Scotland of the lawfulness of episcopacy and in arranging a union between the two Churches. Preferments followed rapidly. In 1609 he was made Bp. of *Lichfield and Coventry; later in the year he was translated to London; and in 1611 he became Abp. of Canterbury. As his long Archiepiscopate was marked by the decline of Puritanism among the influential classes, Abbot found himself forced to fight a losing cause. He was severe on RCs and correspondingly partial to *Calvinists. Thus he encouraged the King's endeavours to secure the dismissal of C. *Vorstius as an *Arminian from his chair at *Leyden; he arranged for the settlement of M. A. *de Dominis, the apostate Abp. of Spalato, in English benefices; he refused to allow the 'Book of *Sports' to be read in Croydon Church; and he ensured that England was represented at the Synod of *Dort (1618). The strong line he took in the Essex nullity suit (1616), however, in which he upheld justice against the King and others in high position, won him deserved respect and a temporary popularity among Anglicans of all schools. His unhappiness culminated in the curious consequences of an accident while hunting at Bramshill, Hants, in 1621. Having accidentally shot a gamekeeper, Abbot was considered by some of his fellow-bishops to have become irregular as a man of blood. When the case was tried by a commission of six bishops and four laymen, and opinion was equally divided as to the irregularity, James gave his decision in Abbot's favour. On 24 Dec. James signed on his behalf a formal dispensation and Abbot resumed his duties. In 1625 he crowned *Charles I, but, owing to various differences with the monarch, esp. on the subject of the *Divine Right of kings, he exercised little influence during his reign, and for a time he was sequestered from his jurisdiction in 1627. His writings include a widely circulated Geography, or a Brief Description of the Whole World (1599), and an Exposition on the Prophet Jonah (1600).

His elder brother, ROBERT ABBOT (1560–1617), was Bp. of *Salisbury from 1615 till his death.

Standard modern life by P. A. Welsby (London, 1962). J. Rushworth, 'The Sequestration of Archbishop Abbot from all his Ecclesiastical Offices in 1627', orig. issued in his Historical Collections (1659–1701), repr. in E. Arber, An English Garner, iv (1882). R. A. Christophers, George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury 1562–1633. A Bibliography (Charlottesville, Virginia, 1966). S. L. Lee in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 5–20, s.v.

ABBOTT, EDWIN ABBOTT (1838–1926), Anglican schoolmaster and scholar. He was educated at the City of London School and St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1863 ordained priest. Becoming headmaster of his old school in 1865, he introduced methods of teaching in classical, literary, and scientific subjects unsurpassed in their day. In 1889 he resigned to devote himself to theological study. His writings, largely addressed to a public not reached by technical books of theology, included the three romances Philochristus, the life of Christ from the standpoint of a 1st cent. disciple (1878), Onesimus (1882), and Silanus (1906); and, of a less popular kind, The Kernel and the Husk (1886) and Philomythus (1891). He also issued a long series of works on the philology and literary problems of the Gospels, among them his Johannine Vocabulary (1905) and Johannine Grammar (1906). His other writings include studies in F. *Bacon (a critical monograph, Bacon and Essex, 1877, and an Introduction to his 7th edition of Bacon's Essays, 1886), The Anglican Career of Cardinal [J. H.] Newman* (2 vols., 1892; hostile), *St. *Thomas of Canterbury. His Death and Miracles (2 vols., 1898), and, esp. in his earlier years, a large number of school textbooks.

L. R. Farnell in D.N.B., 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 1–3, s.v.

ABBREVIATOR. An official of the Roman chancery, whose principal duty was the preparation of letters and writs for the collation of Church dignities. He was so named from the extensive abbreviations employed in Papal documents. *Pius II erected the abbreviators into a college of prelates divided into three ranks (1463). In 1814 Pius VII abolished the junior ranks, and in 1908, when *Pius X reorganized the chancery, the college as a whole was suppressed and its functions transferred to a group of *Protonotaries (protonotarii apostolici participantes).

J. Ciampinus, De Abbreviatorum de Parco maiori, sive assistentium S.R.E. vicecancellario in literarum apostolicarum expeditionibus antiquo statu, illorumve in Collegium erectione, munere, dignitate, praerogativis, ac privilegiis dissertatio historica (Rome, 1691). E. Fournier in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 98–106, s.v. 'Abbréviateurs'.

ABDH-ISHO. See Ebedjesus.

À BECKET, St. THOMAS. See Becket, St. Thomas.

ABEL. Acc. to Gen. 4. 2, the second son of *Adam and *Eve, who became a shepherd, whilst his brother Cain cultivated the land. He was slain by Cain, jealous that Abel's sacrifice of the firstlings of his flock had been accepted by Jehovah, whereas his own was rejected (Gen. 4. 3 ff.). Gen. 4 contains the only mentions of him in the OT. In the NT the Lord places him at the beginning of the line of prophets who were killed ('from the blood of righteous Abel', Mt. 23. 35), and the author of Heb., who attributes the acceptance of his sacrifice to his faith (11. 4), opposes his blood to that of Christ 'that speaketh better than that of Abel' (12. 24; cf. also 1 Jn. 3. 12). The Fathers, who frequently commented on his story, regarded him as a type of Christ, the principal point of comparison being his innocent life as a shepherd, his accepted sacrifice, and his violent death. As the first of martyrs he also sometimes stands for the persecuted Christians, belonging to the city which is in heaven (St. *Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xv. i). In the Liturgy, his name is mentioned with those of *Abraham and *Melchizedek in the *Canon of the Roman Mass, and in the prayers for the dying he was until recently invoked to assist the soul. See also Abelites.

V. Aptowitzer, Kain und Abel in der Agada, den Apokryphen, der hellenistischen, christlichen und muhammedanischen Literatur (1922). J. Hennig, 'Abel's Place in the Liturgy' in Woodstock Studies, vii (1946), pp. 126–41; Y. Congar, 'Ecclesia ab Abel' in Abhandlungen über Theologie und Kirche. Festgabe für Karl Adam, ed. M. Reding (Düsseldorf, 1952), pp. 79–108. E. Palis in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), cols. 28–30, s.v.; J. Lewinsohn, I. Chanoch, and B. Heller in Encyclopaedia Judaica, i (Berlin, 1928), cols. 207–14, s.v., with bibl. See also Commentaries on Gen.

ABELARD, PETER (1079–1142), philosopher and theologian. (This, the conventional spelling, is certainly wrong. Some modern historians adopt the more accurate form Abailard.) He was born at Pallet, nr. Nantes, of Breton parents. The pupil successively of *Roscellinus, *William of Champeaux, and *Anselm of Laon, he early showed evidence of a lively, restless, and independent mind which brought him into frequent conflict with his masters. His brilliant refutation of the extreme *Realism of William of Champeaux at once established his reputation as a teacher. He went on to lecture at Paris to large audiences of enthusiastic students first in dialectics and later in theology, until his career was cut short in 1118 by the tragic issue of his love affair with Héloïse, the niece of Fulbert, Canon of Notre-Dame. After his retirement to the monastery of *St.-Denis, attacks were made upon the orthodoxy of his teaching about the Trinity, and at the Council of *Soissons (1121) he was condemned unheard and a book of his on the subject (acc. to R. Stölzle the 'Theologia Summi Boni') was burnt. His outspoken criticism of the legend of St. *Dionysius, the patron of the abbey, made it necessary for him to flee from the wrath of the monks and he now established a small oratory called the Paraclete near Troyes. In 1125 he became Abbot of St.-Gildas. He resumed his career as a teacher at Paris c. 1136, where he had among his pupils *Arnold of Brescia and *John of Salisbury. At about this time St. *Bernard of Clairvaux denounced his teaching to the bishops of France. In 1140 several propositions selected from his writings were condemned at the Council of *Sens and St. Bernard secured the confirmation of the sentence by Pope Innocent II. Abelard was eventually reconciled to St. Bernard and spent the rest of his life at Cluny, where he was well received by *Peter the Venerable. He died at the Cluniac priory of St.-Marcel, near Chalon-sur-Saône.

The range and variety of Abelard's gifts are reflected in his writings. His philosophical works include 'Scito te ipsum' (on Ethics), a 'Dialectica', and some 'Glossulae' on *Porphyry. His 'Sic et Non', a collection of apparently contradictory excerpts from the Scriptures and the Fathers on a large number of questions, exercised a decisive influence on the history of Scholastic method. Its purpose was to stimulate its readers to resolve the seeming contradictions, not (as has been popularly supposed) to discredit the principle of authority. In his treatise 'Theologia Summi Boni' (c. 1120) Abelard applied his dialectical principles to the doctrine of the Trinity, and after condemnation in 1121 defended himself in 'Theologia Christiana' (1123–4). In his Commentary on Romans he expounded his doctrine of the Atonement. His own personal history is contained in the 'Historia Calamitatum' and in his letters to Héloïse. He was also the author of several hymns, among them the well-known 'O quanta qualia' ('O what the joy and the glory must be'), written for Vespers on Saturday, which, with its characteristic combination of devotional feeling and dialectical play, hymns the joys of the endless Sabbath in heaven.

Abelard's philosophical and theological doctrines were to a great extent determined by his early interest in the problem of universals. Against the exaggerated Realism of his time, he maintained that the only existents were the individuals and that from them the elements of human language ('voces' or 'nomina') are derived by abstraction. It is wholly mistaken to consider the 'vox' or 'nomen' as a thing ('res'), since no individual thing can be predicated of a subject. The sole function of the universal is logical. To explain the fact that any name, say 'man', has reference to a common factor in various individuals, Abelard elaborated a psychological theory, largely derived from *Aristotle, acc. to which by the 'nomen' the 'natura rei' was apprehended, while what was properly individual and particular remained as a residue outside the logical process. In the result he reached a position between the extreme Realism of William of Champeaux and the crude *Nominalism of Roscellinus. In his ethics he held that sin consisted wholly in contempt for the wishes of God; and this emphasis on intention led to a practical ignoring of the distinction between good and evil acts. Unlike the 13th cent. moralists, he was free from the dominion of Aristotle's Ethics, which were unknown to him except through a few scattered references in *Boethius. This stress on intention assisted him also towards an exemplarist theory of the Atonement, acc. to which the suffering Christ was our supreme example, though little more.

His intellectual independence and dialectical methods naturally aroused the opposition of authoritarian mystics like St. Bernard, but his influence, through his lectures even more than through his writings, was enormous. His success came rather through the brilliance and freshness with which he handled particular problems than in the propagation of an elaborated system. In his application of reason to the deepest mysteries of the faith, notably the doctrine of the Trinity, he showed a daring which merited the censure of his contemporaries, though his distrust of authority where it was genuinely traditional must not be exaggerated.

There is no complete edition of Abelard's works, which have indeed only slowly come to light in modern times. Early ed. by A. Du Chesne (2 vols., Paris, 1616), repr., with additions, in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxviii; modern collections of Ouvrages inédits by V. Cousin (Paris, 1836) and Opera hactenus seorsim edita by id. (2 vols., ib., 1849–59). Opera Theologica ed. E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M. (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xi, xii, &c.; 5 vols., 1969 ff.). Crit. ed. of hymns by G. M. Dreves, S.J. (Paris, 1891; also A.H., xlviii, 1905, pp. 141–232). 'Theologia Summi Boni' first pr. by R. Stölzle (under the title 'De Unitate et Trinitate Divina', Freiburg i.Br., 1891); crit. ed. by H. Ostlender (B.G.P.M., xxxv, Hftt. 2/3; 1939). Gloss on Logic first pr. by B. Geyer (ib., xxi, Hftt. 1/4; 1919–33); supplement by M. Dal Pra (Rome, 1954). 'Dialectica' ed. L. M. de Rijk (Assen, 1956). P. Ruf-M. *Grabmann (edd.), Ein neuaufgefundenes Bruchstück der Apologia Abaelards (Sb. (Bayr., 1930), Hft. 5). Il 'Planctus' ed., with musical transcription, by G. Vecchi (Modena, 1951). 'Personal letters between Abelard and Heloise' ed. J. T. Muckle, C.S.B., in Mediaeval Studies, xv (1953), pp. 47–94; xvii (1955), pp. 240–81, and by T. P. McLaughlin, C.S.B., ib., xviii (1956), pp. 241–92. Abaelardiana inedita [Super Periermenias xii–xiv and Sententie secundum M. Petrum] ed. L. Minio-Paluello (Twelfth Century Logic, ii; Rome, 1958). Crit. edd. of Historia Calamitatum, with Fr. tr., by J. Monfrin (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1959) and of Ethics, with Eng. tr., by D. E. Luscombe (Oxford, 1971). Eng. tr. of Ethics by J. R. McCallum (Oxford, 1935) and of correspondence with Héloïse by C. K. S. Moncrieff (London, 1925). Principal modern study by J. G. Sikes (Cambridge, 1932), with bibl. E. *Gilson, Héloïse et Abélard (1938; Eng. tr. 1953; ed. 3, 1964). J. R. McCallum, Abelard's Christian Theology (1948). R. Oursel, La Dispute et la Grâce. Essai sur la Rédemption d'Abélard (Publications de l'Université de Dijon, xix; 1959); M. T. Beonio-Brocchieri Fumagalli, La Logica di Abelardo (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Storia della Filosofia dell'Università degli Studi di Milano, vi; 1964; Eng. tr. Dordrecht, 1970); A. V. Murray, Abelard and St. Bernard (Manchester, 1967); D. E. Luscombe, The School of Peter Abelard. The Influence of Abelard's Thought in the Early Scholastic Period (Cambridge, 1969). R. E. Weingart, The Logic of Divine Love: A Critical Analysis of the Soteriology of Peter Abailard (Oxford, 1970). J. Cottiaux, 'La Conception de la théologie chez Abélard' in R.H.E., xxvii (1932), pp. 247–95, 533–51, 788–828. E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M., 'Abelard's Expositio in Hexaemeron' in Antonianum, xliii (1968), pp. 163–194. A. M. Landgraf, Einführung in die Geschichte der theologischen Literatur der Frühscholastik (1948), pp. 62–73, for bibl. to date. Raby, pp. 319–26. E. Portalié in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 36–55; E. Vacandard in D.E.G.E., i (1912), cols. 71–91.

ABELITES, also Abelians and Abelonians. A small African sect which originated in the diocese of Hippo and is known only from St. *Augustine (De Haer., lxxxvii). Admitting marriage and, indeed, holding it to be obligatory, its members lived in complete continence after the alleged example of *Abel. They perpetuated their existence by each husband and wife adopting a boy and a girl. By St. Augustine's time it had ceased to exist as a sect, the few surviving Abelite families having been received back into the Church.

ABERCIUS, Inscription of. The Greek epitaph of Abercius Marcellus, Bp. of Hieropolis (not Hierapolis), in Phrygia Salutaris (d. c. 200). Discovered by W. M. *Ramsay in 1883, it had been composed and apparently set up by Abercius over his future tomb. It mentions his travels to Rome and Nisibis and, making allusive use of early Christian symbolism, gives Abercius' testimony to the currency everywhere of the Eucharist. The inscription, which was presented by the Sultan Abdul Hamid to *Leo XIII, is now in the *Lateran Museum. The attempts of certain scholars (e.g. G. Ficker, A. Dieterich) to maintain that Abercius was a pagan priest, not a Christian bishop, have now been abandoned.

The 'Life of Abercius', which exists in three recensions, is of much later date. It attributes to Abercius a 'Book of Teaching' (βίβλος διδασκαλίας) as well as a letter to the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius, and also incorporates the text of the Inscription. The original form of this 'Life' was apparently written at Hieropolis towards the end of the 4th cent. Despite J. B. *Pitra's defence, the Vita appears to be of no independent historical value. Abercius is commemorated in both E. and W. as a saint. Feast day, 22 Oct.

The Greek text with Eng. trans. is in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers (1889), II, i, pp. 492–501; also, with introd. and Lat. trans., in J. Quasten, Monumenta Eucharistica et Liturgica Vetustissima (Bonn, 1935), i, pp. 21–4. The three texts of the Life are in S. Abercii Vita, ed. T. Nissen (Teub., 1912). W. Lüdtke–T. Nissen, Die Grabschrift des Aberkios. Ihre Überlieferung und ihr Text (ib., 1910). A. Abel, 'Étude sur l'Inscription d'Abercius' in Byzantion, iii ('1926' [1928]), pp. 321–411, with full bibl. A. Ferrua, S.J., 'Nuove Osservazioni sull'Epitaffio di Abercio' in Riv.A.C., xx (1943), pp. 279–305. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 66–87, s.v.

ABGAR, Legend of. An old tradition ascribes to Abgar V (4 B.C. to A.D. 50), one of the kings of *Edessa, an exchange of letters with the Lord. The king, being ill, wrote to Christ asking Him to visit and heal him; He, though declining to come Himself, promised that, after His Ascension, He would send a disciple to cure the king and preach the Gospel to the people. In one version of the story is added a special blessing for Edessa. The legend is reported in variant forms by *Eusebius (H.E., I. xiii) and in the 'Doctrine of *Addai'. In the account of Eusebius the letter is followed by a recital of the mission of *Thaddaeus, one of the Seventy, who is sent by St. *Thomas 'who is also called Jude', heals the king and converts many inhabitants of the city. Acc. to the 'Pilgrimage of *Etheria', the letter of Christ, written in Syriac on parchment, was preserved at Edessa; there existed many copies of it to which were ascribed miraculous powers of healing and protection. Among the later additions to this very popular legend is the story that, together with the letter, Christ also sent His portrait, miraculously imprinted on canvas. The legend, which probably originated some time after the conversion of Abgar IX (179–214), was accepted as authentic in the E., but widely rejected in the W., and the letter placed among the apocryphal books by the *Gelasian Decree. It has, however, found defenders even in modern times among both Catholics and Protestants.

R. A. *Lipsius, Die edessenische Abgarsage kritisch untersucht (1880); L. J. Tixeront, Les Origines de l'Église d'Édesse et la légende d'Abgar (1888); E. von Dobschütz, 'Der Briefwechsel zwischen Abgar und Jesus' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xliii (1900), pp. 422–86. S. Runciman, 'Some Remarks on the Image of Edessa' in Cambridge Historical Journal, iii (1929–31), pp. 238–52. H. C. Youtie, 'A Gothenburg Papyrus and the Letter to Abgar' in H.T.R., xxiii (1930), pp. 299–302; id., 'Gothenburg Papyrus 21 and the Coptic Version of the Letter to Abgar', ib., xxiv (1931), pp. 61–65, with further reff. S. Giversen, 'Ad Abgarum. The Sahidic Version of the Letter to Abgar on a Wooden Tablet' in Acta Orientalia, xxiv (1959), pp. 71–82, with reff. E. Kirsten in R.A.C., iv (1959), cols. 588–93, s.v. 'Edessa'.

ABJURATION. The act of renouncing any idea, person, or thing to which one has previously adhered. Acc. to canon law it is an external retractation, made before witnesses, of errors contrary to Catholic faith and unity, such as apostasy, heresy, and schism. There are examples of it in the reconciliation of penitents during the first centuries, in the history of ecclesiastical legislation of the Middle Ages, and in the practice of the *Inquisition, which imposed abjuration on formal heretics as well as on suspects. Today the term is usually restricted to the public retractation imposed on Catholics who, having knowingly and publicly defected from the faith or communion of the Catholic Church, seek to be reconciled to her.

The Greek Church has also set forms of abjuration, esp. for *Manichaeans, *Jews, and *Mohammedans, containing short descriptions of the errors renounced. There also exist numerous formulae for RCs seeking admission to the Greek Church, renouncing esp. the *Filioque and the Council of *Florence (1439), to which has been added more recently a special anathema against Papal *Infallibility. During the last three centuries there have been many conversions from Protestantism to Orthodoxy, for which are required abjurations of the *Double Procession, and also of the denials of the *Real Presence, the priesthood, the cult of the saints and images, and various Protestant tenets.

ABJURATION, Oath of. This oath for renouncing the Stuart dynasty, to be sworn by everyone who took office, civil, military, or spiritual, was first proposed in 1690, but not made compulsory until 1701 by 13 Will. III, c. 6. It was reimposed by 1 Geo. I, c. 13 and 6 Geo. III, c. 53. In 1778 it was imposed on RCs in England as a condition of the removal of various disabilities. Among the matters to be abjured were the claims of the Pretender, the temporal power of the Pope and his right to depose, and the tenets that heretics may lawfully be put to death and that faith need not be kept with them. Its imposition was finally abolished in 1858 and its place taken by a new form of the Oath of *Allegiance.

ABLUTIONS. (1) The washing of fingers and chalice by the celebrant after the Communion in the Mass. The ceremony became part of the Eucharistic rite in the 10th or 11th cent. Its performance varied; the chalice usually received only one ablution with wine, and the fingers were rinsed either with wine or with water or, later, with both. In the RC Church the rite was regulated in the *Missal of *Pius V, which prescribed a twofold ablution of the chalice first with wine, then with wine and water, the ablution of the fingers with wine and water being connected with the latter. Since 1969 it has been permissible to use one ablution, of water only, and the ablution now may be postponed until after the end of the Mass. In the *Mozarabic and Greek rites the ablutions are performed privately after the Mass; in the other E. rites, however, immediately after the Communion and before the concluding prayers. The development of the ceremony is a consequence of the belief in the Eucharistic Presence and an expression of reverence due to Christ present under the Sacred Species.

(2) In the RC Church the rinsing of the mouth after the reception of the Bl. Sacrament with wine by the new priests in the Ordination Mass, which was customary until 1968, and a similar rinsing with water formerly common at the Communion of the Sick. The W. custom was probably connected with the medieval practice of giving the communicants a draught of unconsecrated wine immediately after Communion to cleanse the mouth. A similar custom exists in the E., where in many places the communicants receive unconsecrated wine after Communion at the Liturgy. These various ceremonies may be survivals of Communion in both kinds or (less probably) of the ancient *Agape.

On (1), W. Lockton, The Treatment of the Remains at the Eucharist (1920).
On (2), P. Browe, S.J., 'Mittelalterliche Kommunionriten' in J.L.W., xv (1941), pp. 23–66: '5. Die Ablution', pp. 48–57. Jungmann (1958), ii, pp. 510–20; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 411–19.
F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., and S. Pétridès in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 103–11, s.v.

ABORTION. The practice of abortion has been consistently condemned by Christian moralists. It is already forbidden by the Council of *Elvira (c. 306, can. 61). The practice is also treated in most modern codes of civil law as a criminal offence. Even in Soviet Russia, where its use has been permitted, this liberty has been much restricted in recent years.

With therapeutic abortion, however, there is less unanimity. In the civil law of most countries it is sanctioned under varying restrictions. In English law until recently it has been tolerated only when considered necessary to save the mother's life, but by the Abortion Act of 1967 pregnancy may legally be terminated in order to avoid injury to the 'physical or mental health' of the mother or 'any existing children of her family' and where 'there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped'. Christian opinion is divided. A large body of non-Catholic moralists approve of the civil law on the ground that the life of the mother is more important than that of the unborn child. Catholic moral theologians, on the other hand, have commonly held that therapeutic abortion as an end in itself is always unlawful and the 1967 Act exempts conscientious objectors from participation in the treatment authorized except where it is necessary 'to save the life or to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health' of the mother. An operation intended primarily for some other purpose than the destruction of the foetus, which may actually result in its death, is, however, considered permissible on the ground that, for sufficient reason, it is lawful to perform an action in itself good or indifferent from which two results, a good and a bad, may follow. The principle underlying the Catholic attitude is the belief that it is never lawful to kill the innocent directly.

Present regulations of RC Church summarized in the CIC, cans. 2350, para. 1, and 985, No. 4. Abortion. An Ethical Discussion (1965 [Report of an Anglican Committee under I. T. Ramsey]). H. Davis, S.J., Moral and Pastoral Theology, ii (1935), pp. 138–58, and iv (1935), p. 483 f. S. du Moriez, L'Avortement (1912). A. E. Crawley in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), pp. 54–7, s.v. 'Foeticide'; A. Beugnet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 2644–52, s.v. 'Avortement'; J. Delmaille in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 1536–61, s.v. 'Avortement', with bibl.; T. K. Burch, T. J. O'Donnell, R. J. Huser, and E. Quay in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 27–31, s.v.

ABRAHAM (or Abram, Gen. 11.26–17.5), Hebrew patriarch (prob. c. 1700 B.C.). His life is described in Gen. 11.26–25.18. Born at Ur in Chaldaea, he went to Haran under a Divine inspiration (Gen. 15.7) and, having received another call (Gen. 12.1), proceeded to Canaan. Famine then drove him into Egypt. On his return he saved his nephew Lot from the captivity of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and was blessed by *Melchizedek, king of Salem. Then Jehovah promised him a son by his wife Sarah and an innumerable posterity, confirming His promises by a Covenant. After the birth of his son *Isaac, Abraham's faith was put to a severe test by a command to sacrifice his son. When Abraham had shown his readiness even for this act of obedience, a ram was substituted before the sacrifice was actually offered, and Abraham was rewarded by the formal renewal of God's promises.

The Christian Church has always recognized in Abraham her spiritual ancestor on account of his faith, a conception worked out by St. Paul (Rom. 4.11, Gal. 3.7), St. James (2.21–23), and the author of Hebrews (11.8–10). The Fathers, e.g. St. *Clement of Rome and St. *Ambrose, exalted his generous obedience in leaving his homeland; and St. *Augustine loved to compare it to the following of the Word practised by the Apostles. Later spiritual writers see in it a type of the religious vocation of the individual soul. His sacrifice particularly furnished the Fathers with a model of perfect submission to the will of God even in the severest trials. It came to prefigure the death of Christ, and many writers, e.g. *Tertullian, *Origen, St. *Cyril of Alexandria, and *Theodoret, draw out all the similarities, e.g. the ram that is killed signifies the humanity, and Isaac who remains alive the Divinity of the Lord. In the *Canon of the Mass, and in the prose for the Feast of *Corpus Christi, '*Lauda Sion', the immolation of Isaac prefigures the Sacrifice of the Mass.

The term 'Abraham's bosom' is of Rabbinic origin and used by the Lord in the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16.22). Acc. to St. Augustine, it is not to be taken literally but signifies the place of repose where Abraham is. In RC terminology it is identified either with the *Limbo of the Patriarchs, a place where the saintly souls of the Old Covenant enjoyed peace while awaiting the perfect happiness of heaven, or with heaven itself.

C. L. Woolley, Abraham. Recent Discoveries and Hebrew Origins (1936). P. Dhorme, 'Abraham dans le cadre de l'histoire' in R. Bibl., xxxvii (1928), pp. 367–85 and 481–511; xl (1931), pp. 364–74 and 503–18. A. Parrot, Abraham et son Temps (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, xiv; 1962). Abraham, Père des Croyants (Cahiers Sioniens, v. ii, June 1951, with contributions by E. Tisserant, J. Daniélou, S.J., B. Botte, O.S.B., etc.). E. Mangenot in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), cols. 74–85, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 111–127, s.v.; L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., i (1928), cols. 8–28, s.v., with bibl., and H. Cazelles, ib., vii (1966), cols. 120–30, 155 f., s.v. 'Patriarches'. On the phrase 'Abraham's Bosom', see R. Meyer in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 824–6, s.v. κόλπος, with bibl.

ABRAHAM, Apocalypse of. An apocryphal writing, dating from perhaps as early as the first cent. A.D. The opening chapters (1–8) recount *Abraham's conversion from idolatry. The rest of the book (9–32) describes a series of visions seen by Abraham in the heavens, showing the nature of sin and the Fall and its issue in God's destruction of the *Temple. The book ends (32) with a promise that God will deliver His chosen. The work in all probability goes back to a lost Greek or even Hebrew or Aramaic original, but the text survives only in a late Slavonic version. The earliest MS. ('Codex Sylvester') dates from the 14th cent. In its present form the book shows clear traces of Christian influence, particularly in the later chapters, although the opening 'legendary' part of the book is based on Jewish tradition.

The Slavonic text has been publd. twice—by two Russian scholars, N. Tikhonravov (Moscow, 1863) and J. Sreznevsky (Petrograd, 1863). A facsimile edition was issued at Petrograd in 1890. G. N. Bonwetsch, Die Apocalypse Abrahams (1897; with Ger. trans.). G. H. Box, The Apocalypse of Abraham (S.P.C.K. texts, 1918; Eng. trans.).

ABRAHAM, Testament of. An apocryphal writing, describing how *Abraham, unwilling to face death, is taken to heaven by the Archangel *Michael and has a vision of the two roads leading to hell and paradise and learns how most men choose the former. After praying for the forgiveness of sinners, he is brought back to earth and finally borne by the Angel of Death to paradise. The Testament exists in two Greek recensions (apparently its original language), as well as in Rumanian, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Coptic versions. In the last three of these versions it is supplemented by 'Testaments' of Isaac and of Jacob. It was very popular in the E. Church from the 5th cent. onwards. It may have been written as early as the 2nd cent., but opinions have differed both as to its date and as to whether the author was a Jew or a Christian.

M. R. James, 'The Testament of Abraham. The Greek Text now first edited' in Cambridge Texts and Studies, ii, No. 2 (1892). Eng. trans. by G. H. Box, with an Appendix containing a translation of the Coptic Version of the Testaments of Isaac and Jacob by S. Gaselee (S.P.C.K., 1927). N. Turner, 'The "Testament of Abraham": Problems in Biblical Greek' in New Testament Studies, i (1955), pp. 219–23.

ABRAHAM ECCHELLENSIS (1600–64), *Maronite scholar. A native of Hekel or Ecchel on Mt. Lebanon, he studied at the Maronite College in Rome and afterwards taught oriental languages at the *Propaganda. From 1630 to 1642 he was at the Collège Royal in Paris. From 1642 to 1645 he was back in Rome, from 1645 to 1653 again in Paris, and finally, from 1653 till his death, in Rome. He published several important works on oriental languages, among them an edition of 84 spurious Arabic *Nicene Canons (1645) and Syriac and Arabic versions of 3 Macc. and of Ruth for the Paris *Polyglot. His other writings include a collection of documents relating to St. *Antony (1646); Chronicon Orientale (1653); Concordantia Nationum Christianarum Orientalium in Fidei Catholicae Dogmate (1655) in conjunction with L. *Allatius; De Origine Nominis Papae (1660); and some letters to J. *Morinus on the Oriental Liturgies (publd. by Morinus, 1682).

J. Lamy in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 116–18; L. Petit in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 169–71, both s.v.

ABRAHAMS, ISRAEL (1858–1925), Rabbinic scholar. Educated at University College, London, he was appointed reader in Talmudic and Rabbinic literature at Cambridge in 1902. He became prominent as a leader of 'Liberal Judaism'. In his later years he applied himself esp. to the study of Christian origins in their relation to their Rabbinic background, setting out his conclusions in two series of Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels (1917, 1924). From 1889 to 1907 he edited (with C. J. Goldsmid Montefiore, 1858–1938) the Jewish Quarterly Review.

G. A. Kohut (ed.), Jewish Studies in Memory of Israel Abrahams (New York, 1927), with select bibl. of Abrahams' works, pp. xix–xlvii; suppl. bibl. by S. Levy in Jewish Historical Society of England, Miscellanies, iii (1937), pp. 41–6. H. Loewe, Israel Abrahams (1944).

ABSOLUTE IDEALISM. The philosophical system of G. W. F. *Hegel and his followers. It is 'idealistic' in the sense that it conceives the whole of reality to be the expression of an Idea, while it is termed 'absolute' in contrast with the 'Subjective Idealism' of such thinkers as G. *Berkeley and J. G. *Fichte, who accord priority to the subjective elements in experience. In modern British philosophy the doctrine is associated esp. with the names of F. H. *Bradley and B. *Bosanquet, through whose writings it came to exercise a pervasive influence on British speculative thought, including philosophical theology, in the decades immediately preceding World War I.

For its influence on British theology see C. C. J. *Webb, A Study of Religious Thought in England from 1850 (1933).

ABSOLUTION. The formal act of a priest or bishop pronouncing the forgiveness of sins by Christ to those who are qualified by penitence to receive it. In the NT the grace of forgiveness flows from the Person of Christ, who is Mediator and Redeemer (Mk. 2. 5–11). The traditional Catholic doctrine is that this grace of forgiveness is now normally imparted on earth to repentant sinners by means of the ordained ministry, though this belief is commonly denied among Protestants. In the early Church absolution was given publicly to reconciled sinners after public penance. Private confession and absolution, which began as a devotional custom in some Celtic monasteries, became the usual method of obtaining remission of sins.

Two methods of absolution have been, and still are, in use—the indicative and the precatory. By indicative is meant the use by the absolver of such formulae as 'I absolve thee', whereas in precatory methods of absolution the priest prays formally that God will absolve an individual or a congregation. In the E., the precatory form is always used, though in the Russian Church, and possibly elsewhere, the indicative is added. The RC Church uses the indicative (preceded by the precatory, but holding this insufficient if used alone) within the Sacrament of *Penance, and the precatory for other liturgical purposes. The Anglican BCP provides the indicative form of absolution for individuals in the Office for the *Visitation of the Sick and the precatory form for use, e.g., in the Communion Office. The American BCP (1979), however, provides for the use of either the indicative or the precatory form in its rite for the Reconciliation of a Penitent. The form of absolution in Morning and Evening Prayer in the BCP is usually held to be only declaratory, i.e. the pronouncement that God forgives those who repent.

A. Villien in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 120–3. See also bibl. under Penance.

ABSOLUTION PRAYER, a prayer until recently found in the Divine Office after the Psalms and before the lessons of each *nocturn. The name has been derived from absolutio in the sense of completion, on the ground that the prayer ended a section of the office; but the prayer did not appear in its final form until the 13th cent., when absolutio was already a technical term, and further, one of the prayers was of a penitential character.

ABSOLUTIONS OF THE DEAD. The title given to the service in the RC Church formerly said after the *Requiem Mass in the presence of the body before it was taken from the church. It could also be said even though the body was not present. The title is derived from the occurrence of the word 'absolve' in two of the prayers. The service consisted of prayers for the departed soul, and the censing and aspersing of the body during the saying of the *Pater. One of the concluding prayers is found in the earliest Gregorian MSS., but the service as a whole was medieval. An account of a funeral by St. *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury (d. 690), definitely excludes it.

In 1969 it was replaced by a final commendation. After a short address and silence, the body is sprinkled with water and censed. After responses a collect is said and a chant sung as the body is carried to the church door.

ABSTINENCE. A penitential practice, consisting in abstaining from the use of certain kinds of food. It is thus commonly distinguished from *fasting (q.v.), which means the refusal of all, or all but a strictly limited quantity of, food, irrespective of its kind. It is practised among most peoples in different forms and for various reasons, e.g. among Egyptians, Indians, Greeks, Arabs. The Jewish Law contained elaborate food prohibitions (Lev. 11), which, however, were abrogated by the New Dispensation, the only apparent exceptions being blood and things strangled (Acts 15). From early Christian times, however, other kinds of abstinence were practised, esp. among the hermits. Thus St. *Antony and his followers abstained from all food save bread, salt, and water, and *Pachomius and the Egyptian monks followed a similar diet. It was carried to excess in several early heretical sects who taught dualistic doctrines, e.g. the *Manichees and various other *Gnostic bodies. In the W. more or less severe abstinence throughout the year is practised by most contemplative orders, such as *Carthusians, *Carmelites, and some *Benedictine congregations. Both in E. and W. the Friday abstinence of all Christians in commemoration of the Passion was in use from early times. It is mentioned by *Clement of Alexandria and *Tertullian as an established custom, and was extended to Saturday in the W. at about the same time. The practice was attacked by *Jovinian in the 4th cent., and later by the *Reformers, who considered it to be contrary to the Gospel.

Among RCs abstinence from flesh-meat has traditionally been observed on all Fridays in the year (except such as coincided with *Feasts of Obligation), *Wednesdays in Lent and certain other occasions such as *Vigils and Rogation Days. The Saturday and Wednesday abstinence has long been dispensed in most countries, and by the Apostolic Constitution Paenitemini of 17 Feb. 1966 the penitential days were reduced to Fridays (except when Holy Days of Obligation), *Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent, and *Good Friday. By the same decree episcopal conferences were permitted to vary the penitential days and to substitute for abstinence other forms of penance, particularly works of charity or piety. In many countries advantage has been taken of this concession. The law of abstinence was declared binding from the age of 15 to 59. In the Greek and other E. Churches the practice of abstinence (ξηροφαγία, 'dry food') is far more rigid. It extends to all Wednesdays and Fridays of the year, all days of the Major (Lent) Fast including Sundays, and several other periods, bringing up the number of days of abstinence to about 150; and not only meat, but fish, eggs, milk, cheese, oil, and wine are also forbidden. In the C of E, though there is nothing formally enjoined in the matter of abstinence as distinct from fasting, the Friday abstinence has never been completely abolished. Its wider observance in recent times has been due esp. to the *Oxford Movement. See also Fasts and Fasting.

Artt. s.v. in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 261–77 (several authors). See also bibl. to Fasting.

ABUNA (Eth. and Arab. Abu-na, 'our father'). The Patriarch of the *Abyssinian Church.

ABYSSINIAN CHURCH. See Ethiopian Church.

ACACIAN SCHISM. In the *Monophysite Controversy, a temporary schism (482–519) between *Rome and the East, which arose out of the Emp. *Zeno's *Henoticon (q.v.). It began during the Patriarchate of Acacius (471–89) at *Constantinople. Despite the attempts of Flavitas (490) and Euphemius (490–6), Acacius' successors, to heal it, it continued till the accession of Justin (518).

On Acacius, see M. Jugie, A.A., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 244–8, s.v. G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iv (1945), pp. 290–320. E. *Schwartz, Publizistische Sammlungen zum Acacianischen Schisma in Abh. (Bayr.), 1934, Heft 10.

ACACIUS OF CAESAREA (d. 366), *Arian theologian. A disciple of *Eusebius Pamphili and his successor in the see of *Caesarea (in Palestine) in 340, he was a representative of strict Arianism. Under the Emp. Constantius he was pronounced deposed by the Council of *Sardica (343) and became one of the principal representatives of the *Homoeans. He proposed a Homoean Creed at the Council of *Seleucia in 359 and drew up the acts (now lost) of the Homoean Synod of Constantinople in 360. Under *Jovian he signed the Creed of *Nicaea at Antioch in 363, but returned to Arianism under Valens. He was deposed in 365 by the Semiarian Synod of Lampsacus. Among his works were 17 vols. on Eccles. and other treatises, which now exist only in fragments. His followers ('Acacians') were for a short time (357–361) a distinct and important theological party.

The main sources are *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 98, and *Socrates, H.E., ii. 4, together with St. Jerome's letters. Part of a polemical treatise against *Marcellus of Ancyra is preserved by *Epiphanius, Haer., lxxii. 6–10. Fragments on the Ep. to the *Romans ed. by K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 53–6; further fragments ed. R. Devreesse, Les anciens commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (S.T., cci; 1959), pp. 105–22.

ACARIE, Mme (1566–1618), 'Mary of the Incarnation', foundress of the *Carmelites of the Reform in France. The daughter of a wealthy bourgeois family, Barbe Jeanne Avrillot was educated at the convent of Longchamps, nr. Mont-Valérien, where she showed signs of exceptional piety. Although anxious to enter the cloister, in 1584 she married, in obedience to her parents, Pierre Acarie, Vicomte de Villemore, to whom she became a devoted wife. A French trans. (1601) of Francisco de Ribera's Life of St. *Teresa made a deep impression on her; and, strengthened by visions in the belief that it was her vocation to introduce the Carmelites into France, she persuaded Mlle de Longueville to obtain the consent of the King and actively assisted in the establishment of the Carmel of Paris in 1603. She also assisted Mme de Sainte-Beuve in establishing the *Ursulines and encouraged P. de *Bérulle in the foundation of the *Oratory. After the death of her husband (1613) she was received as a lay sister in the Carmel at Amiens. In 1615 she was professed under the name of 'Mary of the Incarnation' and in 1616 transferred to Pontoise to reform the finances of the house.

Mme Acarie was renowned for her charity and greatly respected as a spiritual adviser. She was the subject of numerous ecstasies and the frequent recipient of visions, but, since she has left no record of her experiences, it is difficult to assess the quality of her mysticism. She was held in high repute by St. *Francis de Sales and beatified in 1791. Feast day, 18 Apr.

A. Duval, La Vie admirable de Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation (1641). J. A. B. Boucher, Vie de la Bienheureuse Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation (1800). Bruno de J[ésus] M[arie], O.C.D., La Belle Acarie, Bienheureuse Marie de l'Incarnation (1942), with bibl.; L. C. Sheppard, Barbe Acarie (1953). Bremond, ii (1916), pp. 193–262; Eng. tr., ii (1930), pp. 145–94. Further life by E. de Broglie ('Les Saints', 1903).

ACATHISTUS (Gk. ἀκάθιστος, 'not sitting', because it was sung standing), a famous liturgical hymn in honour of the BVM, sung in the Greek Church on the Saturday of the fifth week of *Lent. It consists of 24 stanzas of varying length, each beginning with one of the 24 letters of the alphabet. The beautiful text is based on the Gospel narratives of the Nativity. The authorship of the hymn is doubtful. Acc. to a widespread belief it was composed by *Sergius, the *Monothelite Patr. of *Constantinople, in thanksgiving for the deliverance of his city from the Avars and Slavs in 626. It has also been assigned to George Pisides. But acc. to a 9th cent. MS. of St. *Gall it was written by the Patr. *Germanus, who, after the defeat of the Mohammedans before the capital in 717–18, instituted a special feast in which the Acathistus was to be sung; and this statement is accepted by some modern scholars.

The Acathistus is printed in J. P. Migne, PG, xcii, 1335–1348, among the works of George Pisides. There are critical editions by J. B. *Pitra in Analecta Sacra, i (1876), and by W. Christ and M. Paranikas in Anthologia Carminum Christianorum (1871). D. Attwater, The Akathistos Hymn. Translated from the original Greek. With historical and liturgical notes (1934); E. Wellesz, The Akathistos Hymn (Mon. Musicae Byzantinae Transcripta, ix; Copenhagen, 1957). G. G. Meersseman, O.P., Der Hymnos Akathistos im Abendland (Spicilegium Friburgense, ii–iii; 1958–60).

ACCENTUS. The name given to those parts of the Mass which are sung by an officiant (celebrant, deacon, etc.). The remainder of the chant, whether sung by schola or choir, or by the congregation, is termed concentus.

ACCEPTANTS. Those who 'accepted' the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713) in the *Jansenist controversy, as contrasted with the Appellants' who appealed against it.

ACCEPTILATION. Originally a term in Roman law for verbal release from a verbal obligation, it was adopted by the *Scotist theologians for the doctrine that the sacrifice of Christ derives its value as a satisfaction from its arbitrary acceptance by God.

ACCESSION SERVICE, The. The form of prayer for use on the anniversary of the accession of the reigning sovereign, printed at the end of the BCP. Such forms have been in use in England and Wales since 1576. The Order is put out by the Sovereign in Council. Strictly it has no other authority and is not part of the BCP, though can. ii of the 1640 canons recognizes the service. No service was issued for *Charles II's reign, as 30 Jan., the date of his de jure accession, was provided for by the commemoration of King *Charles the Martyr. Various revisions have been made from time to time. The last and most comprehensive, that of 1901, is the model of the service still in use. Here provision is made (1) for special forms of Morning and Evening Prayer (with proper Psalms, Lessons, &c.); (2) for a proper Collect, Epistle, and Gospel at the Eucharist; and (3) for a separate service, opening with the *Te Deum. A fresh Order in Council is issued at the beginning of every reign, and when modifications are required through other changes in the Royal Family. Since 1936, the first revision after the disestablishment of the Church in *Wales, the use of the service has been ordered only for churches in the provinces of *Canterbury and *York.

For the forms put out in 1576 and 1578, see W. K. Clay (ed.), Liturgies and Occasional Forms of Prayer set forth in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (*Parker Soc., 1847), pp. 548–61. D. Maclean in P.B.D. (1912), p. 2.

ACCIDENT. In medieval philosophy, following *Aristotle, an entity whose essential nature it is to inhere in another entity as a subject ('ens in alio'). It is thus to be contrasted with a substance ('ens per se').

The term has played an important part in Eucharistic doctrine since the *Schoolmen evolved the theory of the 'accidentia sine subjecto' ('accidents without a subject') to elucidate the mystery of the Presence. The concept was used to explain how, after the changing of the substances of the bread and wine into those of the Body and Blood of Christ, the accidents of the former, e.g. quantity, colour, taste, &c., continued to exist and be perceptible by the senses. St. *Thomas, e.g., taught (Summa Theol. iii, q. 77) that after the consecration through miraculous Divine intervention the accident of quantity continued to exist without inhering in a substance and that in this accident the other accidents inhered in a natural manner. By the end of the 14th cent. the explanation in terms of accidents had come to be widely accepted, but J. *Wycliffe and J. *Huss, as well as M. *Luther and the *Reformers generally, rejected it. The Council of *Trent taught the continuance of the 'species' of bread and wine after consecration, but without mention of accidents. The doctrine of the 'accidentia sine subjecto', though very generally accepted among RC theologians, has in fact never been formally defined. See also Transubstantiation.

P. Mielle in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 302–4; C. Fabro in E.C., i (1949), col. 191 f., with bibl. Full discussion of accidents in Eucharistic theology by F. Jansen, S.J., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1368–1452, s.v. 'Eucharistiques (Accidents)', with bibl.

ACCIDIE (Gk. ἀκηδία, 'negligence', 'indifference'). In its general sense the word is used several times in the *Septuagint (e.g. Ps. 119. 28, Is. 61. 3), but later its meaning was modified to convey sadness, spiritual torpor, and sloth, as in *Hermas (Vis., III. xi. 3). The conception was first fully analysed by *Evagrius Ponticus, and from then on the word became a technical term of Christian asceticism. It figures as one of the deadly sins in the lists of the spiritual writers of antiquity and the Middle Ages. The classical description of it, given by *Cassian (Instit., x. 2), depicts it as a state of restlessness and inability either to work or pray. It is treated at length by St. *Thomas Aquinas (II^a II^{ae}, q. 35) and mentioned in the '*Ancren Riwle' and the writings of Richard *Rolle of Hampole. Accidie is generally regarded as affecting particularly monks and hermits, who are more liable to it than other persons owing to the outward monotony of their life. Assiduous prayer is recommended as the best remedy for it. The term received a new lease of life in England through the influence of F. *Paget, who, in his 'Introductory Essay Concerning Accidie' in The Spirit of Discipline (1891), studied it in a number of ancient and modern authors as well as in its modern manifestations.

S. Wenzel, The Sin of Sloth: Acedia in Medieval Thought and Literature (Chapel Hill, N.C., [1967]).

ACCOMMODATION. In theology, the adaptation of a text or teaching to altered circumstances.

(1) It is sometimes used to connote the giving to a text in Scripture a meaning not intended by the writer, e.g. St. *Matthew's application of 'Out of Egypt have I called my son' (Hos. 11. 1; cf. Mt. 2. 15) to Christ where 'son' meant originally the nation of Israel, or the reference formerly in the Roman Mass of Pharaoh's words 'Ite ad Joseph' ('Go to Joseph', Gen. 41. 55) to the Lord's foster-father. This usage of the word is mainly found in RC writers.

(2) 'Accommodation' (Ger. Herablassung, lit. 'condescension'; also Akkommodation) was also used by liberal German theologians of the 18th cent. to expound the mode of Divine communication through the Bible. J. S. *Semler and other exegetes maintained that beside the timeless and unchangeable element in Scripture, there were passages in which the Divine revelation was accommodated to the human understanding by being clothed in transitory forms. Such accommodation was met with esp. in the teaching of Christ. His explicit words and implicit assumptions about, e.g., the authorship of particular parts of the OT, the Messianic character of certain prophecies, or the objective reality of demon-possession, were explained, not as the necessary limitations of His human knowledge consequent on the reality of the Incarnation, but as the deliberate adjustment of His words and actions to the ideas and beliefs of contemporary Judaism. Under the influence of the rationalistic tendencies of the *Aufklärung this form of exegesis often reduced the core of eternal truth to small proportions; e.g. the NT teaching on the *Atonement was explained as merely 'accommodation' to Jewish thought-forms and therefore without validity for later ages.

(3) The word is also used in a more general sense of the teaching by Christians of part only of the truth for the sake of prudence, or of the modification of the form of Christian teaching to secure its more ready acceptance. A notable instance of accommodation in this sense was the practice of the *Jesuit missionaries in China to use the word 't'ien' for God and to allow converts to continue in practices akin to ancestor-worship. Such accommodation was forbidden in 1715 by Clement XI and again in 1742 by *Benedict XIV. The method of 'reserve' advocated by I. Williams in No. 80 of Tracts for the Times, entitled On Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge, has certain affinities with this form of 'accommodation'; but here the chief motive for adjustment was the need for reverence in speaking of sacred subjects.

ACELDAMA (RV, AKELDAMA). 'The field of blood', a piece of land in the neighbourhood of *Jerusalem, so named (1) acc. to Mt. 27. 8, because it was bought with the price of the Lord's blood; but (2) acc. to Acts 1. 18 f., because it was the scene of *Judas' tragic end.

ACOEMETAE (Gk. ἀκοίμηται, 'sleepless ones'). A celebrated body of Orthodox monks. They were founded c. 400 by Abbot Alexander (c. 350 – c. 430), who, after having established a monastery on the Euphrates, went to *Constantinople, where he established a religious house whose monks were to observe absolute poverty, do no manual work, exercise a vigorous apostolate by means of missions, and keep up perpetual psalmody in alternating choirs. These ideas, which were complete novelties in Byzantine monasticism, attracted a great number of monks from other convents. They provoked, however, such hostility from the Patr. *Nestorius and others that Alexander was driven from Constantinople and, after many difficulties, founded a monastery on these lines at Gomon in Bithynia. Under his successor it was transferred to the modern Tchiboukli, on the middle Bosphorus, where the monks were first given by the populace their name of 'Acoemetae', which they henceforth kept. The Acoemetae, many of whom were taken for other foundations, e.g. *Studios, became ardent defenders of orthodoxy against the *Monophysites, their most famous member being their abbot St. Marcellus, who signed the condemnation of *Eutyches at Constantinople in 448. In their struggle against Eutychianism, however, the monks later fell into the *Nestorian heresy, for which they were excommunicated by Pope John II in 534. There are few mentions of them after this period. At an uncertain date they transferred their monastery to Constantinople, where they are mentioned in the 12th cent. As early as the time of Marcellus they had modified the exaggerated poverty enjoined by Alexander, and later possessed one of the most famous monastic libraries in the East.

Life of St. Alexander in AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 1018–1029. [E.] Marin, Les Moines de Constantinople depuis la fondation de la ville jusqu'à la mort de Photius, 330–898 (1897), passim. J. Pargoire, A.A., 'Un Mot sur les Acémètes' in É.O., ii (1898), pp. 304–8 and 365–72. E. Marin in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 304–8; J. Pargoire, A.A., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 307–321; S. Vailhé, A.A., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 272–82, all s.v. 'Acémètes', with bibl.

ACOLYTE. The second of the two *Minor Orders of the Latin Church. The acolyte is specially delegated to the service of the altar, assisting priest and deacon, and administering the Eucharist both inside and outside Mass. Acolytes are first mentioned at *Rome in A.D. 251 and about this time were subjected to the regional *deacons, probably six to each region. In the early '*Ordines Romani' they have a multitude of duties including that of carrying the Eucharist. Gradually the *subdeacons and acolytes absorbed most of the functions of the other Minor Orders at Mass and Baptism. Some acolytes also became palace officers or secretaries to the Pope. The office of acolyte is also found in Africa in the time of St. *Cyprian but seldom elsewhere in the W. in the early centuries. It is not known as a separate order in the E. The order may be conferred on a layman without his being admitted to the clerical state.

J. *Morinus, Commentarius de Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus, ii (Paris, 1655), pp. 197 f., 236–9 and passim. F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q., Suppl. Hft. vii; 1897), pp. 48–54 and 154–61. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 348–56; F. [Philip] Oppenheim, O.S.B., in E.C. i (1949), col. 198 f.

ACOSMISM (Gk. ἀ privative, and κόσμος, the 'ordered universe'). An extreme form of *pantheism (q.v.) which asserts that the totality of individual things is nothing but a manifestation of the Absolute and has no real being. It may be contrasted with those forms of pantheism which conceive of the Absolute as in some sense ingredient into individual things. The term was used by G. W. F. *Hegel, who apparently coined the word (Encyclopädie, § 50) to describe B. *Spinoza's system.

ACQUAVIVA, CLAUDIUS. See Aquaviva, Claudius.

ACT, Human. In moral theology the term denotes the free and voluntary actions of a human being done with knowledge and attention. To such acts alone can moral praise or blame be accorded, since those which fall below this level are not full expressions of the will of man, as a being endowed with freewill. An act can be made less than human by: (1) ignorance, in so far as this is not the fault of the person acting (see Invincible Ignorance), (2) force or constraint applied by an outside agent, (3) passion, in so far as its influence is independent of the will, (4) fear, if sufficient seriously to cloud the mind, or (5) habit, in so far as it destroys advertence to what one is doing.

ACTA APOSTOLICAE SEDIS. The official gazette of the *Vatican, founded by *Pius X in the decree, 'Promulgandi Pontificias Constitutiones' (29 Sept. 1908). Publication began in Jan. 1909. About twelve issues appear each year.

ACTA SANCTORUM. The celebrated series of lives of the saints, arranged in the order of their feasts in the ecclesiastical year, which was begun by the *Bollandists, a small body of *Jesuit scholars, in the 17th cent. The plan was conceived by H. Rosweyde (d. 1629), who did not, however, see any of it completed. The first two vols. (Jan.) were published at Antwerp in 1643. By the date of the suppression of the order (1773), 50 vols. (to 7 Oct.) had been brought out. Three further vols. were edited by former Jesuits, *Premonstratensians, and others shortly afterwards, and in 1837 the work was resumed by the Society. In 1925 it reached 10 Nov., and in 1940 the introduction (or Propylaeum) to December was publd.

New ed. of the vols. from Jan. I to Oct. VI ed. by J. Carnandet, Paris, 1863–8. M. D. Knowles, 'Great Historical Enterprises, I. The Bollandists' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, v (1958), pp. 147–66; repr. in his Great Historical Enterprises (1963), pp. 1–32. See also other works cited under Bollandists.

ACTA SANCTORUM ORDINIS SANCTI BENEDICTI. The history of the saints of the *Benedictine Order, of which J. *Mabillon published the first volume in 1668. It was completed in 1701.

Vols. i–iii (pt. 1) repr. by the Benedictines of *Solesmes (Mâcon, 1935–9).

ACTION (Lat. actio). A name once applied to the whole Mass either as a single sacrificial action or possibly as a contraction of the phrase gratiarum actio, i.e. 'thanksgiving', 'Eucharist'. Later it was applied in a more restricted sense to the *Canon of the Mass as the sacrificial action par excellence. The phrase survives in the Roman Missal in the heading of the Communicantes* prayer, 'Infra actionem'.

ACTION FRANÇAISE. This French political movement was begun in 1898 by Henri Vaugeois and Maurice Pujo. Very soon it became principally associated with the brilliant writer Charles Maurras. Though a freethinker personally, he regarded Catholicism as essential to French civilization which had the duty of maintaining the classical Greco-Roman tradition. He attacked the methods of 19th-cent. democracy, as exemplified in the Third Republic, and preached a monarchist crusade. His movement attracted many followers and produced first, in 1899, a fortnightly review, and later, from 1908 onwards, a daily paper, L'Action française, of which Léon Daudet, another clever publicist, was editor. Conducted with great élan and skill, the movement included many Catholics who were willing to co-operate with Maurras in the general cause despite his unbelief. In the early years of the century the movement showed violent opposition to Le Sillon and social Catholicism; the condemnation of Le Sillon by *Pius X, who showed a certain amount of sympathy with the positions taken by the Action Française, was seen by Maurras as a triumph. Efforts made to have the movement condemned at Rome were suspended owing to its popularity and the confusion of the war of 1914–18 and its aftermath (in which the Action Française stood in many people's minds for French patriotism), but finally in 1926 the co-operation of RCs in the movement was forbidden by *Pius XI and its paper put on the *Index. Difficulty was experienced in persuading some of the French hierarchy and the older school of Catholic laity (who, despite the exhortations of *Leo XIII to 'rally to' the Republic, remained set in traditional Royalism) to accept the condemnation, but the opposition was partially overcome, and for a time the movement languished. Its influence as a political force became, however, stronger in the 1930s; and under the Vichy government of 1940–4 its ideas once more came into their own. Maurras was tried in 1945 and condemned to prison, from which he emerged in 1951. He died in the following year.

The literature is scattered. D. Gwynn, The 'Action Française' Condemnation (1928). J. *Maritain, Une Opinion sur Charles Maurras et le devoir des Catholiques (1926); id., La Primauté du spirituel (1927). P. Doncœur and others, Pourquoi Rome a parlé (1927). E. [J.] Weber, Action Française. Royalism and Reaction in Twentieth Century France (Stanford, 1962); E. R. Tannenbaum, The Action Française. Die-hard Reactionaries in Twentieth-Century France (New York–London, 1962). E. Nolte, Der Faschismus in seiner Epoche (Munich, 1963), pp. 61–190; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 29–141. R. E. Balfour, 'The Action Française Movement' in Cambridge Historical Journal, iii, No. 2 (1930), pp. 182–205. A. Dansette in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 97 f., s.v.

ACTION SERMON. Among Scottish *Presbyterians, the sermon preached before the administration of the Lord's Supper. J. *Calvin used the expression action de grâces for the thanksgiving which followed Communion, and from this use J. *Knox probably took it as a name for the whole service. The sermon has now become less important than the prayers preceding Communion, and is frequently omitted.

ACTON, JOHN. See Ayton, John.

ACTON, JOHN EMERICH EDWARD DALBERG, first Baron Acton (1834–1902), historian. Born at Naples of émigré RC parents, he was educated at *Paris, Oscott (under N. *Wiseman), and Munich, where he formed a lifelong friendship with J. J. I. von *Döllinger. He was debarred from Cambridge by the unrepealed religious tests. From his early years an ardent liberal in politics, he became Whig M.P. for Carlow in 1859, and was thus brought into relations with W. E. *Gladstone, whom he much admired. He also became actively interested in the cause of religious liberty, taking over from J. H. Newman in 1859 the editorship of the RC Rambler (from 1862, Home and Foreign Review) in defence of liberal views. His own contributions reflected his immense range of knowledge, but the threat of a Papal veto owing to its anti-Ultramontane tendencies led him to suspend it in 1864. Henceforward he endeavoured to resist the movement towards Ultramontanism in the RC Church. He strongly opposed the Syllabus Errorum (1864), and in 1869 went to Rome to organize resistance to the definition of Papal Infallibility at the *Vatican Council, working in close conjunction with Döllinger when publishing in the Allgemeine Zeitung the famous series of letters under the signature '*Quirinus'. But he never formally broke with the RC Church, and in 1874 in some letters to The Times publicly explained his position on the basis of Gladstone's pamphlet on The Vatican Decrees. In his later years Acton's main energies were devoted to encouraging the study of modern history. He helped to found (1886), and often contributed to, the English Historical Review. In 1895 Lord Rosebery appointed him regius professor of modern history at Cambridge in succession to Sir John *Seeley, where he delivered his famous inaugural lecture on the study of history (reprinted in Lectures on Modern History, ed. by J. N. *Figgis and R. V. Laurence, 1906). His last great work was to plan the Cambridge Modern History (12 vols. and index, 1901–11), for which he wrote the Introductory chapter, though most of the work was not published till after his death. His posthumously published writings include Historical Essays and Studies (1907), The History of Freedom (1907), and Lectures on the French Revolution (1910), books partly based on studies which grew out of a long-projected, but never executed, 'History of Liberty'. A further collection of his writings was published under the title Essays on Church and State (1952). The three collections of his letters—the letters to Mrs. Drew (Gladstone's daughter) (1904), and those edited respectively by F. A. *Gasquet and J. N. Figgis—give a vivid impression of his personality.

Letters of Lord Acton to Mary, daughter of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, ed. with Introd. Memoir (pp. xi–lxxvii) by H. Paul (1904); F. A. Gasquet, O.S.B., Lord Acton and his Circle [1906]; J. N. Figgis and R. V. Laurence (edd.), Selections from the Correspondence of the First Lord Acton (1917). D. Mathew, Acton (1946); id., Lord Acton and his Times (1968); G. Himmelfarb, Lord Acton. A Study in Conscience and Politics (1952). Studies by U. Noack (Frankfurt, 1935, 1936, and 1947). G. E. Fasnacht, Acton's Political Philosophy (1952); L. Kochan, Acton on History (1954); H. A. MacDougall, O.M.I., The Acton–Newman Relations (New York, 1962). Bibl. in W. A. Shaw, A Bibliography of the Historical Works of Dr. Creighton, &c. (Royal Historical Society, 1903), pp. 3–63. See also bibl. s.v. Döllinger, J.J.I. von.

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES, The. The fifth book of the NT, written by St. *Luke, the author of the Third Gospel. It traces the progress of the Christian Church from the Ascension of the Lord to St. *Paul's first visit to *Rome. The identity of authorship between the Third Gospel and Acts is not seriously disputed; and there are grounds for holding that both are the work of St. Luke, the companion of St. Paul, mentioned in Col. 4. 14, Philem. 24, and 2 Tim. 4. 11. This is definitely stated by Christian writers from the latter part of the 2nd cent. onwards, e.g. the *Muratorian Canon, St. *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Tertullian. The argument from the use of medical language in Luke–Acts to prove that the writer was a physician (cf. Col. 4. 14) has been shown by H. J. Cadbury to be insufficient, though the terminology is fully consistent with medical authorship. The accuracy of the author in many places where Acts and profane history meet on common ground has been vindicated by modern archaeological finds, notably through the researches of Sir William *Ramsay. The chief difficulties the Lucan authorship has to face come from certain alleged inconsistencies between Acts and the Pauline Epistles; but, given their different aims, these are not insuperable.

Scholars are far less unanimous on the question of date. Two different views were already held in antiquity. Acc. to the so-called *Anti-Marcionite

'Prologue of Luke' (perhaps c. 160–80), Acts was written in Achaia some time after the death of St. Paul. The more common early opinion dated the book at the end or shortly after the Apostle's first Roman captivity. *Eusebius based this view chiefly on 2 Tim. 4. 16 ff. Among modern exegetes it is followed by A. *Harnack, who considered it unlikely that Acts would have omitted any mention of St. Paul's martyrdom if it had already taken place. A third view, held by several modern scholars, favours a date between 90 and 95, on the grounds that certain parallels between Luke–Acts and the writings of *Josephus demand that the author should have either read Josephus' 'Antiquities' (93) or heard his lectures in Rome (90). This argument, however, is not altogether convincing. The majority of critics favour a date between 70 and 85, which is considered late enough to account for the supposedly idealized picture of the nascent Church. In any case a date prior to the Domitianic persecution (c. 95) seems demanded, as after this the favourable attitude of Acts towards the Roman authorities would be difficult to understand.

The sources used by the author are oral and perhaps written traditions; the apparent existence of doublets in the earlier chapters has been thought to support this latter hypothesis, and several scholars, e.g. A. Harnack, have claimed success in separating these sources. Acc. to C. C. Torrey, Acts 1. 2–15. 35 is St. Luke's translation of a single Aramaic document emanating from Jerusalem which was concerned to show the universal mission of Christianity. The so-called 'We-sections' (Acts 16. 10–17; 20. 5–15; 21. 1–18; 27. 1–28. 16, to which *Codex Bezae adds 11. 28) are now generally believed to come from the author's own travel diary, thus revealing him as an eye-witness of many of the events he relates.

The text of Acts, which has come down to us in two recensions, presents a difficult critical problem. The shorter text is represented by most of the great uncial MSS., e.g. the *Codices Sinaiticus, Vaticanus and Alexandrinus; the other, longer, text by the so-called '*Western text', esp. Codex Bezae. Several theories have been put forward to account for this divergence. Acc. to one view, represented e.g. by F. *Blass and T. *Zahn, Luke himself issued his work in two versions; acc. to another, which is much more widely held, the original text was expanded and smoothed over by some writer versed in tradition early in the 2nd cent.

The Book of Acts may be conveniently divided (after C. H. *Turner) into six parts, tracing the progress of Christianity from *Jerusalem to Rome. 1. 1–6. 7 describes the Jerusalem Church and the preaching of St. *Peter; 6. 8–9. 31 the extension of the Church throughout Palestine and the preaching of St. *Stephen; 9. 32–12. 24 the extension of the Church to *Antioch and the conversion of Cornelius; 12. 25–16. 5 St. Paul's mission to Galatia and the Council of Jerusalem; 16. 6–19. 20 the conversion of Macedonia, Greece, and Asia; and 19. 21 to the end describes the extension of the Church to Rome and Paul's journey thither as a prisoner.

The book emphasizes the Divine origin of Christianity, which is attested by the Apostles and their miracles and martyrdoms. In their discourses with the Jews they affirm that Jesus is the Messiah (2. 36, 4. 27, 9. 22, &c.), proclaimed as such by His Resurrection, of which they are the authorized witnesses (e.g. 1. 22, 3. 15), and foretold in the OT (2. 25–36, 13. 16–38). The most striking proofs of the Divine origin of the infant Church are the miraculous intervention of the Holy Ghost in her foundation (2. 1–4), the fervent charity of the first Christians (2. 44–7), the rapid propagation of Christianity, and the Divine help given to the Apostles, esp. to St. Peter and St. Paul (chs. 12 and 16). The Trinitarian dogma is already there in germ, although the Personality of the Holy Ghost is not yet fully recognized. Belief in the Divinity of Christ is implicit in the Book, e.g. in the passage on the Blood of God (20. 28), through whose grace all men, whether Jews or Gentiles, must be saved (15. 11). Sins are effaced by Baptism (2. 38), the newly baptized receive the Holy Ghost in Confirmation (8. 15–17, 19. 6), and all the faithful remain in fellowship in 'the breaking of bread' (ἡ κλάσις τοῦ ἄρτου, 2. 42; cf. 2. 46, 20. 7), the term used in Acts for the Eucharistic rite. Thus, acc. to Acts, the Church has her special rites from the beginning, by which Christianity is distinguished from Judaism. This distinction becomes noticeable esp. with the conversion of pagans (ch. 11) and through the decision of the Council of Jerusalem (ch. 15) to abrogate certain of the Mosaic observances. The infant Church seems to have been governed first only by the Apostles (2. 42, 4. 33), to whom the 'Seven' were added later (6. 1–6), as well as elders (πρεσβύτεροι, 14. 23, 15. 2, &c.) and bishops (ἐπίσκοποι, 20. 28), the latter two evidently not yet being distinguished. Thus Acts presents a fairly complete picture of the beginnings of the Church in its progress from Jerusalem to Rome, which is now generally regarded as reliable.

Modern Commentaries by T. E. Page (London, 1886); R. B. Rackham, C.R. (West. Comm., 1901); E. Preuschen (Hb. N.T., 1912); A. *Loisy (Paris, 1920); E. Jacquier (Paris, 1927); F. J. Foakes Jackson (Moff. Comm., 1931); F. F. Bruce (London, 1951); E. Haenchen (K.E.K. ed. 10, 1956; ed. 14, 1965; Eng. tr., 1971); C. S. C. Williams (Black's N.T. Comm., 1957); R. P. C. Hanson (New Clarendon Bible, 1967); and J. Munck, ed. W. F. Albright–C. S. Mann (Anchor Bible, 1967). A. Harnack, Die Apostelgeschichte (1908; Eng. tr., 1909), and other works; C. C. Torrey, The Composition and Date of Acts (Harvard Theological Studies, No. 1, 1916); F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity (5 vols., 1920–33); W. L. Knox, St. Paul and the Church of Jerusalem (1925); H. J. Cadbury, The Making of Luke–Acts (1927); A. C. Clark, The Acts of the Apostles (1933; on the text); W. L. Knox, The Acts of the Apostles (1948); M. *Dibelius, Aufsätze zur Apostelgeschichte (1951; Eng. tr., 1956); H. J. Cadbury, The Book of Acts in History (1955); E. Trocmé, Le 'Livre des Actes' et l'Histoire (1957); J. Dupont, O.S.B., Les Sources du Livre des Actes (1960; Eng. tr., 1964); id., Études sur les Actes des Apôtres (1967); J. C. O'Neill, The Theology of Acts in its Historical Setting (1961); M. Wilcox, The Semitisms of Acts (Oxford, 1965); A. [A. T.] Ehrhardt, The Acts of the Apostles (Manchester, 1969).

ACTS OF THE MARTYRS. Of the numerous separate accounts of early Christian martyrdoms of varying authenticity, the most reliable are those that follow the official shorthand reports of the trials. Very few of these, however, have survived, perhaps the most perfect specimen of this type being the 'Acta Proconsularia' of St. *Cyprian. A second category, the so-called 'Passiones', are the stories of martyrdoms written by Christian authors and based on eyewitness accounts. To this type belong the 'Martyrdoms' of St. *Ignatius, of St. *Polycarp, of the Martyrs of Lyons, the famous 'Passion of St. *Perpetua and St. Felicitas', the 'Passion of St. *Irenaeus', and others. In all these the miraculous element is much restricted, a feature which did not appeal to the popular taste. In their later versions the sober account of the original was frequently embellished with miraculous and other apocryphal or legendary material, e.g. in the cases of St. Perpetua, the *Scillitan Martyrs, and other authentic Acts. A third category belongs completely to the realm of legend, with probably no historical kernel whatever. Such are the Acts of St. *Catherine of Alexandria and those of St. *George.

*Eusebius of Caesarea was probably the first Christian author to produce a collection of Acts of Martyrs; his great work, the Συναγωγὴ τῶν Ἀρχαίων Μαρτυρίων, is unfortunately lost, but a smaller one on the Palestinian martyrs survives in Greek fragments and in a complete Syriac version. In the W. Church the Acts of the Martyrs were carefully collected and used in the Liturgy from early times, as is testified by St. *Augustine.

The most comprehensive collection is contained in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum. Another well-known set is that of T. *Ruinart, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (1689). Convenient ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, S.J. (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972). Critical studies appear in the Analecta Bollandiana and in the many writings of H. *Delehaye.

ACTS OF Sts. PAUL AND THECLA. See Paul and Thecla, Acts of Sts.

ACTS OF St. PETER, OF PILATE, OF THOMAS, &c. See Peter, Acts of; Pilate, Acts of; Thomas, Acts of, &c.

ACTUAL GRACE. See Grace.

ACTUAL SIN. A sin, whether of commission or omission, which is the outcome of a free personal act of the individual will. In Christian theology it is contrasted with *Original Sin (q.v.). See also Sin.

ACTUS PURUS (Lat., 'Pure Actuality'). The scholastic term for the absolute perfection of God. It depends upon the *Aristotelian distinction between potentiality and actuality. Potentiality, as the aptitude to change, is the mark of all created things, even Angels, because their existence is contingent upon the action of a creator. It is thus the mark of imperfection. God alone, as being free from change, and being all that He can be, is free from potentiality, and may therefore be described as pure actuality. The distinction between potentiality and actuality is the foundation of the first of the five scholastic arguments for the existence of God (see Quinque Viae).

ADALBERT OF BREMEN (c. 1000–72), German Archbishop. He was the descendant of a noble Saxon family. In 1032 he became canon at Bremen, later provost of Halberstadt Cathedral, and in 1045 Abp. of Bremen-Hamburg. He was an energetic promoter of missionary activities, esp. in the Nordic countries, Scandinavia, Iceland, Greenland, and the Orkneys, and planned to become Patriarch of the North. In 1053 *Leo IX nominated him Papal Vicar and Legate of the Nordic nations. During the minority of *Henry IV he gradually gained considerable influence over the young king, who loaded him with rich counties and abbeys. In 1066 Henry was compelled to dismiss him from his court by the jealousy of enemies, who also invaded his archbishopric and robbed him of his possessions. In 1069 he was recalled by Henry and part of his property restored. His last years were darkened by the invasion of the pagan Wends, who destroyed Hamburg in 1071–2.

O. H. May, Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Bremen, i, fasc. 1 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hannover, Oldenburg, Braunschweig, Schaumburg-Lippe und Bremen, xi; 1928), pp. 53–79. Contemporary account by Adam of Bremen (d. c. 1085) in his Gesta Hammaburgensis Ecclesiae Pontificum (ed. J. M. Lappenberg in M.G.H., Scriptores, vii, 1846, pp. 335–67). G. Meyer von Knonau, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV und Heinrich V, ii (1894), pp. 121–47. C. Grünhagen, Adalbert, Erzbischof von Hamburg und die Idee eines nordischen Patriarchats (1854). E. Aurelius, 'Adalbert, Arkebiskop af Hamburg-Bremen' in Kyrkohistorisk Årsskrift, i (1900), pp. 205–24. W. Biereye, 'Die Urkunden des Erzbischofs Adalberts von Bremen' in Zeitschrift des Vereins für Hamburgische Geschichte, xx (1915), pp. 28–99. E. N. Johnson, 'Adalbert of Hamburg-Bremen: A Politician of the Eleventh Century' in Speculum, ix (1934), pp. 147–79, with reff. to date. G. Misch, 'Studien zur Geschichte der Autobiographie III. Das Bild des Erzbischofs Adalbert in der Hamburgischen Kirchengeschichte des Domscholasters Adam von Bremen' in Nachr. (Gött.), 1956, pp. 203–80. A. Otto in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 121.

ADAM. In traditional theology, the first man. The etymology is disputed. In Genesis there are two accounts of his creation—1. 26–31, attributed to a Priestly editor (P), and 2. 5–7, attributed to the Yahwist (J); the stories of his *Fall and subsequent history (Gen. 2. 15–4. 1 and 25) are all J material. Acc. to the P account, Adam was created on the sixth day, after the animals (1. 26); was made in the image and likeness of God (1. 26 f.); commanded to multiply; and given dominion over the earth (1. 28–30). The J account, more anthropomorphic, assigns his creation to the time when the earth was still void. It describes God's breathing into Adam's nostrils the breath of life (2. 7), the creation of *Eve from Adam's rib (2. 21 f.), and Adam's work in the garden of Eden, with its Tree of Knowledge and forbidden fruit (2. 17). Ch. 3 narrates Adam's Fall (q.v.), the curse laid on him, and the expulsion from Paradise.

Traditional theology has utilized the Scriptural statements in its doctrine of man and his relation to God. As the father of the human race Adam has been held to have been endowed with great intellectual gifts, enabling him, e.g., to give names to all the animals (2. 19 f.). He was also held to possess infused knowledge (Ecclus. 17. 6 f.). The Councils of *Orange (529, can. 19) and of *Trent (sess. 5, cans. 1 and 2) defined that he was created in the state of sanctifying grace in conformity with the belief that Christ, the *Second Adam (Rom. 5. 14 and 1 Cor. 15. 45), restored mankind to the state of righteousness which had been lost by the first Adam. This state of grace has been held to consist with certain preternatural privileges, such as the absence of concupiscence and the possession of immortality and impassibility, which were bestowed on Adam in his original condition. It was through the Fall that these prerogatives were lost.

Acc. to Christian tradition, Christ delivered Adam from *Limbo. The notion of *Tatian and the *Encratites that Adam had been damned was rejected by St. *Irenaeus, who taught that Christ's victory over the old Serpent would not have been complete had He not delivered Adam from his power. Acc. to a Jewish tradition, taken up by St. *Jerome and long accepted in the W., he was buried at Hebron. This supposition gradually gave way to another, first found in *Origen and widespread esp. in the E., which placed his tomb on *Calvary, so that at the Crucifixion the Blood of the Second Adam was poured out over the head of the First. St. *Augustine (In Ps. xcv [xcvi], No. 15) found in the four letters of Adam's name allusion to the four points of the compass (Anatole, Dysis, Arctos, Mesembria) and hence a sign of his identity with fallen humanity scattered over the whole world. The E. Churches give a public cult to Adam and Eve, whose feast is kept by the Greeks on the Sunday before *Christmas.

A. Vitti, S.J., 'Christus-Adam. De Paulino hoc conceptu interpretando eiusque ab extraneis fontibus independentia vindicanda' in Biblica, vii (1926), pp. 121–45, 270–85, 384–401. J. Daniélou, S.J., Sacramentum Futuri. Études sur les Origines de la Typologie Biblique (1950), pp. 3–52; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 11–65. R. Scroggs, The Last Adam. A Study in Pauline Anthropology (Oxford, 1966). J. Jeremias in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 141–3; G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), pp. 26–9, s.v. 'Ἀδάμ. X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 368–86, with bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 509–19, s.v. 'Adam et Ève'. See also works cited s.v. Original Sin.

ADAM OF MARSH, 'Adam de Marisco' (d. c. 1258), English *Franciscan theologian. He was probably a native of Somerset, educated at *Oxford, and after being ordained priest received the living of *Wearmouth from his uncle, Richard, Bp. of *Durham. In 1232 or 1233 he entered the Franciscan Order at *Worcester and later was sent to Oxford. In 1245 he accompanied Robert *Grossteste, his lifelong friend, to the Council of *Lyons. Despite the plans of the French to give him a chair at the university of *Paris he returned to Oxford, where, from c. 1247, he was regent of the Franciscan house of studies. Apart from his work as a scholar he exercised great influence in English political and social life. Together with Grossteste and Simon de Montfort he defended the national liberties, and his advice was frequently sought by the most influential men of the country, among them Henry III and *Boniface, Abp. of *Canterbury. In 1256 both Henry and Boniface endeavoured to have him appointed to the see of *Ely, but the monks of Ely objected and obtained a Papal decision in their favour. Besides letters, he probably also wrote commentaries on Cant. and Heb. His learning, highly esteemed, e.g. by Roger *Bacon, gained him the title of 'Doctor Illustris'.

Letters ed. J. S. Brewer, Monumenta Franciscana, i (R.S., 1858), pp. 77–489, with introd., pp. lxxvi–ci. The other principal source is the mid-13th cent. Tractatus de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam of Thomas of Eccleston, O.F.M., esp. Collationes xi, xiii f., ed. A. G. Little (Collection d'Études et de Documents vii, 1909), pp. 22 f., 63 f., 88, 105 f. D. Douie, 'Adam "de Marisco", an English Franciscan' in Durham University Journal, xxxii (1940), pp. 81–97. G. Cantini, O.F.M., 'Adam de Marisco O.F.M. auctor spiritualis' in Antonianum, xxiii (1948), pp. 441–74. A. G. Little, The Grey Friars in Oxford (Oxford Historical Society, xx; 1892), pp. 134–9; id., 'The Franciscan School at Oxford in the Thirteenth Century' in A.F.H., xix (1926), pp. 803–74, esp. pp. 831–7. M. *Creighton in D.N.B., i (1855), p. 79, s.v.; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1225–6, s.v. 'Marsh, Adam'.

ADAM OF ST.-VICTOR (d. between 1177 and 1192), *sequence writer. Probably a Breton by birth ('Brito', possibly = British), he was educated at *Paris, and c. 1130 entered the abbey of St.-Victor (see Victorines). His fame rests upon the large number of sequences, including some of the earliest and finest, ascribed to him; they combine facility of treatment with liturgical austerity and doctrinal precision. Those assigned to him include Heri Mundus Exultavit (for Feast of St. *Stephen; Eng. tr. in A.M. 64); Verbi Vere Substantivi (for Feast of St. *John Evangelist); Zyma Vetus Expurgetur (for *Easter); Salve Mater Salvatoris; Plausu Chorus Laetabundo (Eng. tr. in E.H. 179 and A.M. 621) and Supernæ Matris Gaudia (Eng. tr. in E.H. 200). A number of prose works, including a dictionary of difficult Biblical words, have also been ascribed to him.

A number of sequences attributed to him were printed by J. Clichtoveus, Elucidatorium Ecclesiasticum (Paris, 1515), pp. 154–200; seventy further sequences, preserved in MS. at the Abbey of St.-Victor, were transferred at its dissolution to the Bibliothèque Nationale; full ed. by L. Gautier (2 vols., Paris, 1858–9), with introd. in vol. i, pp. xv–clxxxv; text repr., with Eng. tr., by D. S. Wrangham (3 vols., London, 1881); further ed. by E. Misset–P. Aubry (Paris, 1900), with crit. study pp. 3–166 (very critical of ascription to Adam of St.-Victor). Crit. ed. of text by C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister (edd.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (A.H.M.A., liv; 1915); see also C. Blume, S.J., Liturgische Prosen zweiter Epoche auf Festc der Heiligen (ib., lv; 1922), pp. vii–ix, with reff. H. Spanke, 'Die Kompositionskunst der Sequenzen Adams von St. Victor' in Studi Medievali, Nuova Serie, xiv (1941), pp. 1–29. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, ii (1965), pp. 106–20, with further reff. Raby, pp. 348–55, with further bibl. p. 482. P. Lejay in D.T.C., i (1903), col. 388 f., s.v.

ADAM, KARL (1876–1966), Catholic theologian. A native of Bavaria, Karl Adam was ordained to the priesthood in 1900. He spent several years in pastoral work and taught at the University of Munich before he was appointed professor first at Strasbourg in 1918 and then in 1919 at Tübingen, where he remained until 1949. At many points he anticipated the aims of the *Ecumenical Movement, combining a liberal and modern outlook with full Catholic orthodoxy, and he exercised great influence, esp. over a lay public, by his writings, of which the best known was Das Wesen des Katholizismus (1924; Eng. tr., 1929). His other books include Christus unser Bruder (1926; Eng. tr., 1931), Jesus Christ (1933; Eng. tr., 1934), Una Sancta in katholischer Sicht (1948; Eng. tr., 1954), and Der Christus des Glaubens (1954; Eng. tr., 1957).

Abhandlungen über Theologie und Kirche. Festgabe für Karl Adam ed. M. Reding (Düsseldorf, 1952), with list of his works, p. 319 f.; Vitae et Veritati. Festgabe für Karl Adam (ibid., 1956).

ADAMANTIUS (early 4th cent.), Greek anti-*Gnostic writer. He was the author of the Dialogue, 'De recta in Deum fide', prob. from internal evidence a product of Asia Minor or Syria, but nothing further is known of him. St. *Basil the Great and St. *Gregory Nazianzen wrongly identify him with *Origen. The Dialogue, in five books, is a disputation first with two disciples of *Marcion, and then with followers of *Bardesanes and *Valentinus. At the end, Eutropius, a pagan arbitrator, gives the palm of victory to Adamantius. The work was translated into Latin by *Rufinus.

Ed. princeps by J. R. Wetstein (Basle, 1674), repr. in edd. of Origen (e.g. PG, xi, 1711–1884). Rufinus' Lat. text, which survives only in a 12th-cent. MS. at Schlettstadt, formerly at Hirschau, was first publd. by C. P. *Caspari, Kirchenhistorische Anecdota (Christiania, 1883), i, pp. 1–129. Crit. ed., with Rufinus' Lat., by W. H. van de Sande Bakhuyzen (G.C.S., 1901).

ADAMITES. A small Christian sect, first mentioned by St. *Epiphanius (Haer., 52) and St. *Augustine (Haer., 31), who aimed at returning to man's primitive innocence in Paradise by the practice of nudity. They are perhaps to be identified with a group of *Carpocratians, referred to by St. *Clement of Alexandria (Strom., III. ii), who advocated community of wives and sexual promiscuity. In more recent times, small groups among the *Waldenses, Dutch *Anabaptists, and others, also calling themselves 'Adamites', have advocated similar doctrines and practices.

G. Bareille in D.T.C., i (1903), col. 391 f., s.v.

ADAMNAN, St. (c. 625–704), also 'Adomnan', Abbot of *Iona. Prob. a native of Co. Donegal, Ireland, he became a novice at the monastery of Iona, where he was elected abbot in 679. A visit to the abbey of *Wearmouth led him to accept the Roman dating of *Easter, but through the resistance of his monks he was unable to introduce it at Iona. He was more successful, however, in furthering the Roman observance in Ireland, which he visited at least three times. On the last of these visits he caused the Synod of Tara (697) to adopt a law forbidding women and children to be made prisoners of war, called after him the 'Canon of Adamnan'. He was one of the greatest scholars that Iona produced; his 'Life of St. *Columba' (prob. written 688–92), though containing much fabulous material, is of very great historical value. He also wrote an account of a visit by a bishop from Gaul, Arculf, who went on a pilgrimage to Palestine, 'De Locis Sanctis'. He was greatly venerated in Scotland and in Ireland, in the latter country under the name of St. Eunan. Feast day, 23 Sept.

Crit. edd. of 'De Locis Sanctis' by P. Geyer in C.S.E.L., xxxix, 1898, pp. 219–97, and, with Eng. tr., by D. Meehan (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, iii; 1958); and of his life of St. Columba, with Eng. tr., by A. O. Anderson and Margaret O. Anderson (London, 1961). The chief authority for his life is *Bede, H.E., v. 15 f. and 21; notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 300–4. Irish life in O. J. Bergin–R. I. Best–K. Meyer–J. G. O'Keeffe (edd.), Anecdota from Irish Manuscripts, ii (Halle and Dublin, 1908), pp. 10–20, with Eng. tr. and notes by M. Joynt in Celtic Review, v (1908), pp. 97–107. Further material noted in C. Plummer, Miscellanea Hagiographica Hibernica (Studia Hagiographica, xv: 1925), pp. 198–200 and 226. D. A. Bullough, 'Columba, Adomnan and the Achievement of Iona' in Scottish Historical Review, xliii (1964), pp. 111–30, xliv (1965), pp. 17–33. J. T. Gilbert in D.N.B., i (1885), p. 92 f., s.v.

ADAMSON, PATRICK (1537–92), Abp. of St. Andrews. Educated at Perth Grammar School and St. Andrews university, he was minister at Ceres from 1563 to 1566. He then went abroad for some years, living in France and for a time also at *Geneva, where he studied *Calvinist theology under T. *Beza. He was imprisoned for six months for describing the infant son of *Mary Queen of Scots as 'serenissimus princeps' of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland. After his return he published a catechism of his own compilation as well as a Latin version of the '*Scottish Confession' (1572). Appointed in 1576 Abp. of St. Andrews in succession to John Douglas (1571–6), he now became involved in a long controversy with the *Presbyterian party. In 1583 some sermons preached before *James VI (I) led to his winning the royal favour and becoming Ambassador at *Elizabeth I's court later in the same year. During his stay in London he used his great powers of oratory to bring discredit on the Presbyterian party. Strongly supported by the King, he returned to Scotland in May 1584, but his disfavour with the *General Assembly continued to increase, and his Declaration of the King's Majesty's Intention in the late Acts of Parliament (1585) provoked much hostility. At the synod of Fife (April 1586), James Melville, the nephew of Andrew *Melville and professor of theology at St. Andrews, made a fierce attack on his character and opinions and, though Adamson brought the matter before the King, the synod excommunicated him. Further charges were made on his character at the meeting of the General Assembly in 1587, and in the following year Adamson lost the King's favour. Adamson now sought the support of A. Melville and is credited with a Recantation of his earlier Declaration, though there are grounds for believing the recantation to be spurious. His writings include Latin renderings of the Lamentations of Jeremiah and of the Book of Revelation (both 1590).

The most reliable authority is D. *Calderwood, History of the Kirk of Scotland (1678; crit. ed. from unpubld. MSS. by T. Thomson, Wodrow Society, esp. vols. i–v, 1842–4). There is also a life by T. Wilson appended to his ed. of Adamson's De Sacro Pastoris Munere (1619; sep. pagination). A. H. Bullen in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 111–15, s.v.

ADDAI. The traditional founder of the Church at *Edessa. In Syriac tradition he was one of the 72 (al. 70) disciples of Lk. 10. 1. It seems probable that the name is philologically the same as '*Thaddaeus', with whom *Eusebius (H.E., I. xii. 3) actually identifies him. Acc. to the 'Doctrine of Addai' (q.v.) he was sent by St. *Thomas the Apostle to heal King *Abgar (q.v.). F. C. *Burkitt has identified him with *Tatian (2nd cent.), of whom no independent memory survived in the Syriac Church, holding that the tradition that Addai belonged to the 1st cent. was of later date.

His historical existence is defended by E. Sachau, Die Chronik von Arbela (1915); F. C. Burkitt in J.T.S., xxv (1923–1924), p. 130. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

ADDAI, The Doctrine of. A Syriac writing, preserved in toto only in a single Leningrad MS., which describes how King *Abgar (q.v.) was brought into contact with Christ and *Addai was sent to *Edessa to convert him. It probably dates from c. 400, but seems to depend on older sources, notably the document used in Eusebius, H.E., I. xiii. 6–8. An Armenian version also survives. Part of the Syriac text was published by W. *Cureton in his Ancient Syriac Documents (1864) and the whole by G. Phillips in The Doctrine of Addai the Apostle (1876). The historicity of the narrative, defended by many older scholars (e.g. C. *Baronius, Le N. de *Tillemont, W. *Cave, J. E. *Grabe, W. Cureton, G. Phillips), has now been generally abandoned.

There are Eng. trr. in the edd. of both Cureton and Phillips. L. J. Tixeront, Les Origines de l'Église d'Édesse et la légende d'Abgar (1888), pp. 20–159. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 591–6, and iv, p. 326; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 139.

ADDAI AND MARI, Liturgy of. The Syriac Liturgy which is still the normal rite of the *Nestorian Christians. The rite was probably composed c. 200 for the Syriac-speaking Church at *Edessa, which looked back to *Addai and his disciple, Mari, as their founders, its Greek influences apparently being much later modifications.

Though no MSS. of it go beyond the 16th cent., there is little doubt that it preserves the original structure of the rite and is thus of the highest importance for the early history of the Liturgy. The most notable point about the *Anaphora, in its original form, is its address to Christ (not to God the Father). According to E. C. Ratcliff it was characterized by the absence of any Words of Institution, but this contention has been denied by B. Botte, O.S.B.

The editio princeps of the Syriac text is in Liturgia Sanctorum Apostolorum Adaei et Maris (Urmi, 1890–2). For Eng. trans., see Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 245–305. New Eng. tr., with commentary, by B. D. Spinks (Grove Liturgical Study, xxiv; Bramcote, 1980). G. P. Badger, The Nestorians and their Rituals (1852), esp. ii, pp. 215–43; E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Original Form of the Anaphora of Addai and Mari. A Suggestion' in J.T.S., xxx (1929), pp. 23–32; G. Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy (1945), esp. pp. 177–87; B. Botte, O.S.B., 'L'Anaphore Chaldéenne des Apôtres' in O.C.P., xv (1949), pp. 259–76; W. F. Macomber, S.J., 'The Oldest Known Text of the Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari', ib., xxxii (1966), pp. 335–71.

ADELARD OF BATH (early 12th cent.), English Scholastic philosopher. Few facts about his life survive, but he is known to have studied at Tours and Laon and to have travelled widely in Europe as well as in N. Africa and Asia Minor. He translated the 'Elements' of Euclid, and in his 'Quaestiones Naturales' defended Democritus' theory of atoms as well as the Aristotelian proof of God's existence from motion. In his principal work, 'De Eodem et Diverso' (between 1105 and 1116), written in epistolary form, Adelard developed a theory of the Liberal Arts and also attempted to reconcile the *Platonic and *Aristotelian doctrines of *universals, holding that in reality the universal and the particular were identical, and distinct only in our mode of apprehending them.

Adelard's 'De Eodem et Diverso', ed. H. Willner (B.G.P.M., iv, Hft. 1; 1903); 'Quaestiones Naturales', ed. M. Müller (ib., xxxi, Hft. 2; 1934). F. J. P. Bliemetzrieder, Adelhard von Bath (Munich, 1935). C. H. Haskins, 'Adelard of Bath' in E.H.R., xxvi (1911), pp. 491–8. Id., Studies in the History of Mediaeval Science (Cambridge, Mass., 1924), pp. 20–42. U. Berlière, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), col. 522 f., with details of works, publd. and unpubld.

ADESTE FIDELES. Anonymous Christmas hymn, probably written in the 17th or 18th cent., of French or German authorship. Its most popular tune has been doubtfully ascribed to John Reading, the 17th-cent. organist of *Winchester Cathedral. It has been frequently translated, the best-known version being based on that by F. *Oakeley, 'O come, all ye faithful, joyfully triumphant'.

J. Stéphan, O.S.B., The 'Adeste Fideles', A Study on its Origin and Development (Buckfast Abbey, 1947; enlarged Fr. ed., 1949).

ADHÉMAR DE MONTEIL (d. 1098), Bp. of Le Puy. Of noble family and at one time a knight, he became Bp. of Le Puy some time between 1080 and 1087. In 1095 *Urban II summoned the Council of *Clermont from Le Puy and made Adhémar his representative on the First *Crusade (hujus itineris ac laboris ducem, vice nostra), during which Adhémar was closely associated with Raymond of Toulouse. He played an important part in the Crusaders' operations and councils and in the maintenance and restoration of morale, esp. at Antioch. He died on 1 August 1098, soon after the capture of Antioch; his death is usually regarded as a severe blow to any hopes of maintaining the unity of the Crusading leaders, and certainly decreased any likelihood of Papal control of the Franks in the East.

His career can be reconstructed from the chroniclers of the First Crusade, esp. Raymond of Aguilers, who was a Canon of Le Puy (Recueil des historiens des Croisades, Historiens occidentaux, iii (Paris, 1866), pp. 235–309); cf. also the 12th cent. Chronique de St. Pierre du Puy (ed. U. Chevalier, Cartulaire de l'Abbaye de St-Chaffre du Monastier . . . suivi de la Chronique de Saint Pierre du Puy; Collection de Cartulaires dauphinois, viii; '1884' [1879–91]). J. A. Brundage, 'Adhemar of Puy: the Bishop and his Critics' in Speculum, xxxiv (1959), pp. 201–12, with reff. to other modern lit. L. Bréhier in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 552–5, s.v. 'Adhémar (6) de Monteil'. See also works cited under Crusades.

ADHERENTS. In the Church of *Scotland, baptized persons who, although non-communicants, are intimately connected with a congregation. If parishioners and seat-holders over 21 years of age, they have the right to be placed on the electoral register. This right is controlled by the *kirk-session, to whose jurisdiction they are subject.

ADIAPHORISTS (from Gk. ἀδιάφορα, 'things indifferent'). A party in German Protestantism which held that certain rites and actions were matters of indifference. The first controversy on the subject broke out in connexion with the Leipzig Interim (1548). In this compromise between the theologians of *Wittenberg, esp. P. *Melanchthon, and the ecclesiastical and civil authorities of Saxony, the Wittenberg group declared certain Catholic practices such as *Confirmation and Extreme *Unction, the *Mass without *Transubstantiation, and the Veneration of Saints 'adiaphora', i.e. matters on which concessions might be made in the interest of peace without prejudice to Protestant doctrine. This policy was fiercely opposed by M. *Flacius Illyricus, who, in his De Veris et Falsis Adiaphoris (1549), stressed the dangers to integral *Lutheranism of these concessions. The controversy continued till after the Peace of *Augsburg (1555) and was brought to an end only by Article 10 of the Formula of *Concord (1577), which ruled that in times of persecution concessions were not to be made, but otherwise ceremonies not commanded or forbidden by Scripture might be altered acc. to the decisions of individual Churches. Similar problems were discussed by theologians in England in the 16th century.

Another controversy on 'adiaphora' broke out in the latter half of the 17th cent. between the Pietistical followers of P. J. *Spener and A. H. *Francke, who declared all worldly pleasures such as theatres and dances to be sinful in themselves, and the orthodox Lutherans who held them to be indifferent and therefore permitted. A harmonizing of the two points of view was later given by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, who, though denying the conception of matters of indifference, considered ordinary pleasures part of the whole of human life and therefore not only permissible but even demanded by duty.

F. H. R. Frank, Die Theologie der Concordienformel historisch-diplomatisch entwickelt und beleuchtet, iv (1865), pp. 1–120. A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, ii (1884), pp. 174–83. J. Gottschick in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 168–79, s.v. 'Adiaphora'; E. T. Horn in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 91–3, s.v. 'Adiaphorism'.

AD LIMINA APOSTOLORUM, i.e., lit., 'to the thresholds of the Apostles'. Pilgrimages 'ad Limina Apostolorum', sc. to the tombs of St. *Peter and St. *Paul in *Rome, usually undertaken in fulfilment of a vow, were very popular in the Middle Ages. In modern times the term is ordinarily used in a technical sense, denoting the visits which RC bishops are required to pay to Rome to venerate the tombs of the Apostles and to report on the state of their dioceses to the Pope. This custom originated in the decree of a Roman synod (743) which enjoined such visits on all bishops who had been ordained at Rome (can. 4). *Gregory VII extended this obligation to all metropolitans of the W., and from the 13th cent. it was imposed on all bishops consecrated by the Pope himself or by his special representative. *Sixtus V, by the bull 'Romanus Pontifex' of 20 Dec. 1584, required the visit from all bishops every three to ten years, acc. to the distance of their dioceses. Acc. to the revised regulation of Pius X (1909), which was taken over into the CIC (cans. 299, 341, 342), all Ordinaries and Vicars Apostolic who have jurisdiction must perform the Visitatio ad Limina Apostolorum either personally or by representative every five years if their dioceses are in Europe, and every ten years if they are beyond.

F. M. Cappello, De Visitatione Liminum (2 vols., Rome, 1912–13). J. J. Carroll, The Bishop's Quinquennial Report. A historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, cclix; 1956), with bibl. J. Cottier, 'Éléments nouveaux des normes de la visite "Ad limina" et leur valeur juridique respective, des décrétales au Concile de Trente' in Ephemerides Iuris Canonici, viii (1952), pp. 174–206.

ADMONITION TO PARLIAMENT, The (1572). A manifesto against all ecclesiastical and university dignitaries and demanding a non-episcopal constitution for the English Church. It attacked inter alia the use of wafer-bread at the Communion, then still current, reception of the Sacrament kneeling, and the admission of Papists to Communion, and demanded the restoration of excommunication. Apparently a composite document, it was issued anonymously from unknown presses, and very widely and eagerly read. The responsibility for it was very probably correctly attributed to two London *Puritan clergymen, John *Field and Thomas Wilcox, who sought to present it to Parliament; but both were committed to Newgate on 7 July 1572. When the Bishops inveighed against the Admonition, it was vigorously defended in the Second Admonition to the Parliament ascribed to T. *Cartwright. Both the Admonition and this defence of it were suppressed by a royal proclamation on 11 June 1573, and Cartwright, on the issue of a warrant for his arrest, was compelled to leave the country. The controversy was the immediate occasion of R. *Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (1594–7).

Text in Puritan Manifestoes, ed. by W. H. *Frere and C. E. Douglas (C.H.S., lxxii; 1907), pp. 5–19; Second Admonition, ib., pp. 79–133. D. J. McGinn, Admonition Controversy (Rutgers University Studies in English, v; New Brunswick, 1949).

ADO, Martyrology of. The *martyrology compiled in 858 by St. Ado (c. 800–75), then a *Benedictine monk, later Abp. of Vienne. Acc. to Ado, his basis was an ancient Roman martyrology ('Martyrologium Romanum Parvum') which he had discovered at *Ravenna, but this work, which is full of blunders, was certainly spurious and may even have been fabricated by Ado himself. The highly convenient plan and arrangement of the compilation were the pattern for later martyrologies. It directly influenced the Martyrology of *Usuard and mediately the '*Roman Martyrology', and was thus the source of most of the merits and defects of its successors.

The Martyrology of Ado was edited by H. Rosweyde in 1613 (reprinted in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxiii, 139–436), and by D. Giorgi (Rome, 1745). H. *Quentin, Les Martyrologes historiques (1908), pp. 465-681.

ADOMNAN, St. See Adamnan, St.

ADONAI (Heb. אֲדֹנָי, plur., probably 'majestatis', of אָדוֹן, 'master', 'Lord'). Divine name, frequently used in the OT. Apart from its use in the Hebrew Bible, the Jews also employed and read it as a substitute for the unutterable name of Jehovah, which, in the texts, is usually pointed with the vowel signs proper to Adonai. The *Gnostics employed it as a name for one of their aeons.

In the Christian Liturgy the term is applied esp. to the Second Person of the Trinity in the great antiphon to the Magnificat for 18 Dec., 'O Adonai' (see O-Antiphons).

G. H. *Dalman, Studien zur biblischen Theologie. Der Gottesname Adonaj und seine Geschichte (1889).

ADOPTIANISM. (1) The heresy, originating in Spain in the 8th cent., acc. to which Christ, in His humanity, is not the true, but only the adoptive, Son of God. Its chief representatives were *Elipandus, Abp. of *Toledo, and *Felix, Bp. of Urgel. The heresy probably arose out of Elipandus' fight against the error of Migetius, who rejected all distinction between the Second Person of the Trinity and the Incarnate Christ, and its development was perhaps assisted by the fact that a quasi-*Nestorian theology would be more acceptable than orthodox doctrine to the Moors, then in possession of Toledo. Elipandus upheld a distinction between the *Logos, as the true natural and eternal Son of God, and Christ, the adoptive Son, who is Son only metaphorically, because the Word 'adopted' the humanity, thereby attaching the filiation to the nature rather than to the Person of Christ. He was supported by Felix of Urgel, who recanted, however, at a synod held at Ratisbon in 792. Having repeated his abjuration before the Pope, Felix returned to his diocese, but again fell into error and was obliged to flee. The Spanish bishops sided with Elipandus and tried to prove their views from Scripture and the Fathers. After they had communicated to the Pope a letter they had sent to *Charlemagne, the latter called the Council of Frankfurt (794), where the bishops attacked the Spanish arguments in two documents. These, together with a third drawn up by *Hadrian I, were sent to Spain. A reply from Felix in favour of the heresy provoked *Alcuin's famous seven books 'Contra Felicem', and in 799 *Leo III called a synod at *Rome which anathematized Felix. In the same year, after a long dispute, he once more recanted. Elipandus, however, remained firm, and Alcuin wrote another treatise against him. The archbishop died soon afterwards and the heresy disappeared.

It was revived, however, in the 12th cent. in a modified form by *Abelard, *Gilbert de la Porrée, and others, who, through identifying the rational nature with the Person, arrived also at Adoptianist views. In later times several attempts were made, e.g. by *Duns Scotus, *Durandus, F. *Suarez, and others, to interpret in an orthodox sense the statement that Jesus as Man is the adopted Son of God, but these theories were all rejected as subversive of a sound Christology.

(2) Through the influence of A. *Harnack's Dogmengeschichte the term (usually spelt 'Adoptionism') has also been frequently applied to the heretical stream in early Greek theology which regarded Christ as a man gifted with Divine powers. This view, first represented by the *Ebionites, was later developed by the *Monarchians, e.g. *Theodotus and *Paul of Samosata. *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, and the *Antiochene School in general also tend to what may be called, in a rather loose sense, an Adoptionist Christology.

On (1), see C. W. F. Walch, Historia Adoptianorum (Göttingen, 1755); Hefele–Leclercq, III, ii (1910), pp. 1001–60. É. Amann, 'L'Adoptianisme espagnol du VIIIe siècle' in Rev. S.R., xvi (1936), pp. 281–317; id. in Fliche–Martin, vi (1937), pp. 129–52. H. Quilliet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 403–13, and M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., i (1949), cols. 327–30, both s.v.

ADORATION. In strict terminology the expression, from the Lat. adoratio, is equivalent to the Greek theological term λατρεία, designating an act of worship due to God alone. If used more loosely, however, it also covers the Greek προσκύνησις, which, in early times, was used for adoration of God as well as for veneration such as is paid to persons or objects of sacred character. In this second sense it was frequently used among E. peoples and also in the Bible, e.g. in the narrative of Joseph and his brethren (Gen. 43. 26), whereas in the first sense it is used, e.g., in the Second Commandment. The Lord inculcates that adoration (προσκύνησις) is due to God alone (Mt. 4. 10). He Himself is frequently adored (e.g. Jn. 9. 38), whereas, on the other hand, St. *Peter refuses the adoration of Cornelius (Acts 10. 25 f.). The Divine prerogative of adoration was emphasized esp. by the early Christian martyrs, who refused to 'adore' the statues of the Emperor. It was claimed for the Son and the Holy Ghost, e.g. by *Justin Martyr, *Origen, and other early Fathers, a fact which shows the equality of the Three Divine Persons, whereas it is denied to all creatures, not excepting the BVM. Until the 5th cent. Christians seem not to have distinguished between λατρεία and προσκύνησις. But the increasing veneration of images and the ensuing *Iconoclastic Controversy necessitated a stricter terminology. The Second Council of *Nicaea (787) reserved the term λατρεία to the worship of God alone, whereas προσκύνησις might be applied also to the cult of creatures. After some controversy this distinction was accepted also in the W., and from the age of Scholasticism W. theologians term adoration of God '*latria', but veneration of creatures '*dulia' (Gk. δουλεία).

The principal act of adoration in Christian worship is the offering of sacrifice, which may be offered to God alone, but it will normally be accompanied by such secondary acts as prayers of praise, prostrations, &c. The adoration paid to the Bl. Sacrament depends on the doctrine of the Real Presence, among its most striking manifestations being the practices of the *Forty Hours and of Perpetual Adoration, cultivated by many religious congregations. In the C of E a service of Eucharistic devotion, sometimes resembling the RC *Benediction service, is also frequently termed 'Adoration'.

A. Molien in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 210–22, s.v., with bibl.

ADORO TE DEVOTE. Eucharistic hymn, attributed by the MSS. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, though his authorship has been contested. It is a simple, but very personal and deeply felt, prayer to the Lord hidden under the sacramental species. Unlike St. Thomas's other Eucharistic hymns, it was not written for the Office of *Corpus Christi. Until recently it was printed in the Roman *Missal and *Breviary among the 'Orationes pro Opportunitate Sacerdotis Dicendae'. There are many English translations, the most famous of which, found in several slightly varying forms, is that by J. R. Woodford (1850), Bp. of *Ely, 'Thee we adore, O hidden Saviour'. That of G. M. *Hopkins, 'Godhead here in hiding, whom I do adore', is also widely used.

Crit. ed. of text by C. M. Dreves (ed.) Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, ii (A.H.M.A. 1; 1907), pp. 589–91. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'La Tradition littéraire et textuelle de l'"Adoro te devote"' in R.T.A.M., i (1929), pp. 21–40 and 149–76; repr. in Wilmart's Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots (1932), pp. 361–414 (ch. xii). F. J. E. Raby, 'The Date and Authorship of the Poem Adoro Te Devote' in Speculum, xx (1945), pp. 236–8.

ADRIAN I, IV, VI. See Hadrian I, IV, VI.

ADVENT (Lat. Adventus, 'coming', i.e. of Christ). The ecclesiastical season immediately before *Christmas. In W. Christendom Advent Sunday, i.e. the first day of Advent, is the Sunday nearest to St. Andrew's Day (30 Nov.). Four Sundays in Advent thus always precede Christmas Day. In the E. Advent is a much longer season, beginning in the middle of Nov. Advent Sunday is traditionally the day on which the ecclesiastical year begins. The first clear references to the season in the W. come from the latter half of the 6th cent. In the *Gelasian Sacramentary Advent Collects, Epistles, and Gospels are provided for the five Sundays preceding Christmas and for the corresponding Wednesdays and Fridays. The Wednesday and Friday *propers of the Mass remained in England until the BCP of 1549.

Advent was formerly kept as *Lent, but with less strictness. In the W. fasting is no longer formally ordered, though festivities are discouraged and the solemn character of the season is marked by the liturgical use of purple (except on the Third Sunday, '*Gaudete', q.v., when rose-coloured vestments may be used) and, in the Roman Missal, by the omission of *Gloria in Excelsis at the Sunday Masses. The season is observed as a time of preparation not only for Christmas but also for the Second Coming of Christ as Judge at the Last Day.

M. Jugie, A.A., 'La Première Fête mariale en orient et occident, l'Avent primitif' in É.O., xxvi (1923), pp. 130–52; B. Botte, O.S.B., Les Origines de la Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Louvain, 1932), pp. 263–84; J. A. Jungmann, S.J., Gewordene Liturgie (1941), pp. 232–94 ('Advent und Voradvent'); A. Chavasse, 'L'Avent romain, du VIe au VIIIe Siècle' in E.L., lxvii (1953), pp. 297–308; W. Croce, S.J., 'Die Adventsliturgie im Licht ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung' in Z.K.T., lxxvi (1954), pp. 257–96, 440–72. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 3223–30, s.v. 'Avent'; A. *Baumstark in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 112–25, s.v.; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 41–43, s.v., with bibl.

ADVENTISTS. Various Christian groups which hold in common that the Second Coming of Christ is to be expected immediately. As a denomination the Adventists date from 1831, when William Miller (1782–1849) first began to proclaim at Dresden, N.Y., U.S.A., the imminence of the Second Coming. On the basis of study of dates in the OT he came to fix the Second Coming in 1843–4. He made converts from many Christian bodies; pre-millennium conferences were held; and a paper called The Midnight Cry started. After the year had passed uneventfully, various later dates were suggested. Miller himself always maintained that the Coming was imminent, though in his later years he became less ready to pronounce dates. Differences of opinion as to the date of the Second Advent and also on the question of the immortality of the soul produced schisms. The 'Evangelical Adventists', who were the original body and retained a Catholic belief in the after-life, have died out. The chief bodies now are the 'Second Advent Christians' and the 'Seventh Day Adventists' (q.v.).

D. T. Taylor, The Reign of Christ on Earth (Boston, 1855; ed. H. L. Hastings, London, 1882). H. C. Sheldon, Studies in Recent Adventism (New York, 1915). K. Allgermissen, Die Adventisten (1928); A. Rettaroli, Protestanti avventisti (1941). See also bibl. to Seventh Day Adventists.

ADVERTISEMENTS, Book of. The book entitled Advertisements, partly for due Order in the public Administration of Common Prayers and using the Holy Sacraments, and partly for the Apparel of all Persons Ecclesiastical by virtue of the Queen's Majesty's Letters commanding the same, issued in Mar. 1566 by Abp. M. *Parker. Of 39 items in all, it ordered inter alia the use of the surplice (in place of the traditional Mass vestments) in the Eucharist and kneeling at the reception of Communion, and disallowed the *Sign of the Cross in Baptism. It has long been disputed whether this book of Advertisements is to be understood as the 'other order' in the paragraph in the Act of Uniformity of 1559 providing that the Ornaments (see Ornaments Rubric) in use in the second year of Edward VI should be retained 'until other order shall therein be taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty'. Though the 19th-cent. courts upheld that the Advertisements were covered by the Act of 1559, there are good grounds for questioning this opinion, one of the most cogent being the survival of the rubric in the BCP of 1662.

Text in Gee–Hardy, No. lxxxi (pp. 467–75).

ADVOCATUS DIABOLI (Lat., 'Devil's Advocate'). A popular term for the '*Promotor Fidei' (q.v.).

ADVOWSON. The right of appointing a clergyman to a parish or other ecclesiastical benefice. Advowsons are of two kinds: (1) 'Collative', when they are held by the *Ordinary under whose jurisdiction the benefice is, normally the bishop of the diocese; and (2) 'Presentative', when they are held by some other person ('patron'), who presents the nominee for institution. In the latter case the patron, who may be clerical or lay, an individual or a corporation, does not possess the right of putting his candidate in spiritual or even legal possession of the office. He presents him to the bishop or other ecclesiastical superior for *institution and *induction (qq.v.), and the latter may for due cause reject the nominee. The right of Advowson is historically the survival of an originally much more extensive control exercised by the feudal lord over churches on his estates, which goes back in turn to the time when the pagan priest, in Teutonic Europe the predecessor of the Christian priest, was the feudal dependant of the lord.

In most RC countries Advowson has died out, though it survives in a few places. In the C of E, where it still exists, its exercise is governed by English civil law, which since the time of the Constitutions of Clarendon (1164) has succeeded in maintaining control of this valuable right. Thus a bishop who without legal cause refuses to accept a patron's nominee can be compelled to do so by an action of Quare impedit in the civil courts. In the 14th cent. the Papal method of overriding these rights of private patronage by means of *Provisions was fought by the State in the Statute of Provisors (1351). In the C of E the right of Advowson may be held by anyone who is not a RC or an alien.

An Advowson is treated by English law as a right of property which can be transferred by gift or (until 1924) by sale. The scandals to which this fact has sometimes given rise have led to attempts to limit the right of presentation itself and the power to alienate it. In the Church of *Scotland the rights of private patronage were resisted by a large party in the Kirk and were the chief cause of the secessions which eventually produced the Free Kirk (1843).

AEGIDIUS, St. See Giles, St.

AEGIDIUS ROMANUS. See Giles of Rome.

A.E.G.M. See Anglican Evangelical Group Movement.

AELFHEAH, St. See Alphege, St.

AELFRIC (c. 955–c. 1020), 'the Grammarian', Abbot of Eynsham. Having entered the *Benedictine abbey at *Winchester under *Ethelwold, who implanted in him the ideals of St. *Dunstan's monastic reform, he became the greatest scholar and the literary leader of the English Benedictine revival. In 987 he was transferred to the newly founded abbey at Cerne Abbas in Dorset and here issued two sets of homilies in English, dealing respectively with the events of the liturgical year and with doctrinal and historical subjects. The latter series gained a revived notoriety at the time of the Reformation, as Aelfric not only used language which excluded the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM but was also held to have maintained a view of the Eucharist incompatible with *Transubstantiation. In his Eucharistic theology he was probably influenced by *Ratramnus, though his unorthodoxy was apparently much exaggerated. The use of alliterative prose, which marked these homilies, was developed in a third series on the 'Lives of the Saints', where the arrangement is commonly as verse. In 1005 he was appointed the first Abbot of Eynsham in Oxfordshire. His writings of this period include an abridgement of Ethelwold's 'De Consuetudine Monachorum', a Latin Life of Ethelwold, and an English rendering of *Bede's 'De Temporibus'. His greatest claim to fame was his provision of books with real literary merit for the rural clergy in their native language.

W. Skeat (ed.), Aelfric's Lives of the Saints (E.E.T.S., lxxvi, lxxxii, xciv, and cxiv bound in 2 vols.; 1881–90); B. Thorpe (ed.), The Homilies of the Anglo-Saxon Church, containing The Homilies of Ælfric (2 vols., 1844–6, with Eng. tr.); J. C. Pope (ed.), Homilies of Ælfric. A Supplementary collection (E.E.T.S., cclix–cclx; 1967–8). Facsimile of his first series of Catholic Homilies, in British Museum MS. Royal 7 C. XII, ed. by N. Eliason and P. [A. M.] Clemoes (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, xiii; Copenhagen, 1966). His Exameron Anglice, ed. S. J. Crawford (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, x; 1921); Colloquy, ed. G. N. Garmonsway (London, 1939); De Temporibus, ed. H. Henel (E.E.T.S., Original Series, ccxiii; 1942). C. L. White, Aelfric. A new Study of his Life and Writings (Yale Studies in English, ii; 1898); S. H. Gem, An Anglo-Saxon Abbot. Ælfric of Eynsham (1912). M. M. Dubois, Aelfric, sermonnaire, docteur et grammairien (Paris, 1942), with full bibl. P. A. M. Clemoes, 'The Chronology of Ælfric's Works' in id. (ed.), The Anglo-Saxons. Studies in some Aspects of their History and Culture presented to Bruce Dickins (1959), pp. 212–47, with reff.

AELIA CAPITOLINA. The new city which Hadrian built in c. 130 on the site of *Jerusalem (destroyed A.D. 70). It was so named after the Emperor himself (Publius Aelius Hadrianus) and Jupiter Capitolinus. Statues to both Hadrian and Jupiter were erected in the area of the Temple. Its exact limits are unknown, but it probably extended as far as the present N. wall of Jerusalem and included the northern part of the Western hill.

[L.] H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1914–1926), pp. 1–39, with map as planche i.

AELRED, St. See Ailred, St.

AENEAS OF GAZA (d. 518), Christian philosopher. He studied under Hierocles, the *Neoplatonist, at *Alexandria, and became a strong supporter of *Platonist and Neoplatonist doctrines. In his dialogue 'Theophrastus' he defended the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body, though he rejected such tenets of Platonism as conflicted with orthodox Christian doctrine, e.g. the pre-existence of the soul and the eternity of the world. 25 of his letters have also survived. With *Procopius of Gaza and *Zacharias Scholasticus, he made up the 'Gaza Triad'.

Gk. text of the 'Theophrastus' in A. *Gallandi, Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, x (1774), pp. 629–64, repr. J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv, 865–1004; crit. ed. by Maria Elisabetta Colonna (Naples, 1958). Letters ed. R. Hercher, Epistolographi Graeci (Paris, 1873), pp. 24–32; crit. ed. by Lidia M. Positano (Naples, 1950; ed. 2, 1962). Studies by G. Schalkhausser (Erlangen, 1898) and S. Sikorski (Trebnitz, [1908]).

AENEAS SILVIUS PICCOLOMINI. See Pius II.

AENGUS, St. See Oengus, St.

AEQUIPROBABILISM. See Equiprobabilism.

AER (Gk. ἀήρ). A large veil, used in the E. Church to cover the chalice and paten during the Liturgy.

AERIUS (4th cent.), presbyter of Pontus. He was at first an associate of *Eustathius (who in 355 became Bp. of Sebaste), with whose ascetic movement he was closely identified and by whom he was ordained; but later (c. 360) the two quarrelled. Acc. to St. *Epiphanius (Haer., 75), from whom our knowledge of him is mainly derived, he maintained that there was no distinction between the function and rank of bishops and priests; that the observance of *Easter was a Jewish superstition (1 Cor. 5. 7); that prescribed fasts were wrong; and that it was useless to pray and give alms for the dead. Hence his followers refused to fast even in *Holy Week, though they observed a purely voluntary fast on *Sundays. Aerius was also charged by Epiphanius with being an *Arian. His followers (Aerians) are mentioned by St. *Philaster (Haer., 72) and by St. *Augustine (De Haeresibus, 53), but appear to have died out soon after his death. Aerius has prob. received from modern controversialists (*Bellarmine; some 17th-cent. Anglicans) more attention than his importance merits.

V. Ermoni in D.H.G.E., i (1912), col. 663, and H. Bacht, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 164 f., s.v.

AETERNI PATRIS. The encyclical of *Leo XIII (4 Aug. 1879), commending to the Church the study of philosophy, and esp. of the works of St. *Thomas Aquinas. It gave the impetus to the subsequent revival of Scholastic philosophy.

Text in Acta Leonis XIII (1887), pp. 88–108; Eng. tr. in J. *Maritain, St. Thomas Aquinas (1931), pp. 189–214. B. Chocarne, S. Thomas d'Aquin et l'encyclique Aeterni Patris de S.S. le Pape Léon XIII (1884). Comm. by F. *Ehrle, S.J., orig. publd. in Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, xviii (1880), pp. 13–28, 292–317, 388–407, and 485–98, together with the text of the Encyclical, ed. by F. Pelster, S.J. (Sussidi Eruditi, vi; Rome, 1954).

AETHELBERT, AETHELBURGA, &c. See Ethelbert, Ethelburga, &c.

AETIUS (d. c. 370). A Christian sophist who carried the principles of *Arianism to their farthest limits. His enemies, by a play on his name, surnamed him ἄθεος, 'the godless one'. Originally a craftsman of *Antioch, he travelled to *Alexandria, where he became a subtle dialectician and skilled in the philosophy of *Aristotle. Under the Emp. *Julian (361–3) he was ordained a bishop by the Arians without fixed see. He and his followers, also known as *Anomoeans, asserted the total unlikeness of the Son to the Father. A short writing of his (Συνταγμάτιον περὶ ἀγεννήτου θεοῦ καὶ γεννητοῦ) is preserved by *Epiphanius (Haer. 76. 11).

L. R. Wickham, 'The Syntagmation of Aetius the Anomean' in J.T.S., N.S., xix (1968), pp. 532–69, incl. text and Eng. tr. G. Bardy, 'L'Héritage littéraire d'Aétius' in R.H.E., xxiv (1928), pp. 807–27; V. Grumel, 'Les Textes monothélites d'Aétius' in É.O., xxxii (1929), pp. 159–66. E. Venables in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 51–3, s.v.

AFFECTIVE PRAYER. A stage in the development of prayer at which less use of the intellect and imagination is made than by beginners, and the soul is chiefly engaged in making acts of the will, to unite itself more closely to God.

AFFINITY. In moral theology, relationship created by marriage. It arises from a valid marriage, whether consummated or not, and is held to form an impediment to subsequent marriage between the one party and certain blood relations of the other. The impediment is not extinguished by death. In the C of E the sphere of affinity is regulated by the 'Table of *Kindred and Affinity' (q.v.), originally drawn up in 1563 and substantially revised in 1969, which superseded the complicated rules of the medieval canonists. Marriages within the prohibited degrees were voidable in civil law until 1835, when Lord *Lyndhurst's Marriage Act (5 & 6 Will. IV, c. 54) rendered them ipso facto void. The Act of 1907 (7 Edw. VII, c. 47) legalized marriage with a deceased wife's sister (see Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act) and these provisions were considerably extended by Acts of 1921 and 1931, which included notably unions with a niece by marriage. All these provisions refer to marriages terminated by death, and not by divorce. The RC rulings will be found in the Codex Iuris Canonici* (cans. 97, 1042, 1077). RC canon law (CIC, § 1079) still recognizes spiritual affinity, which arises between the godparent and the baptized; but this impediment is easily dispensed.

P. Dib in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 264–85, s.v. 'Affinité'; C. Henry in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 167–71, s.v. See also bibl. to Prohibited Degrees.

AFFIRMATION. In English civil law, a solemn declaration in place of an oath made by those who have conscientious objection to being sworn, either because of their religious convictions or because they have no religious belief. It may only be administered when the oath is refused.

In the 17th cent. *Quakers suffered severe persecution for refusing to be sworn. The *Toleration Act of 1689 began the process of relief by allowing 'certain persons, dissenters from the Church of England', to make an affirmation of allegiance, and in 1691 a similar concession was made in respect of the Oath of Supremacy in *Ireland (2 & 3 Will. & Mary, c. 2). The position was regularized for the 'people called Quakers' by an Act of 1696 (7 & 8 Will. & Mary, c. 34), which expressly granted them the general right of making an affirmation in place of an oath. This permission was limited, however, to official oaths and criminal proceedings were exempted. This last restriction was removed by two Acts of 1833, the 'Quakers and Moravians Act' (2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 49) and the 'Separatists Affirmation Act' (3 Will. IV, c. 82); in 1838 (1 & 2 Vict., c. 77) the exemption was extended to include former adherents of those sects. In 1854 the 'Common Law Procedure Act' (17 & 18 Vict., c. 125) allowed the right of affirmation to all who conscientiously objected to being sworn. This was not construed to include atheists, who, though allowed by the Evidence Act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict., c. 68) and the Evidence Amendment Act of 1870 (33 & 34 Vict., c. 49) to give oral evidence on affirmation, were only finally freed of their disabilities by the 'Oaths Act' of 1888 (51 & 52 Vict., c. 46), which provided for depositions by atheists.

In practice the right to affirm is little used except by Quakers, as the Act requires unbelievers to make public profession of their atheism.

AFFUSION (or, occasionally, 'Infusion'). The method of *baptism now ordinarily practised in the W. Church whereby water is poured over the head of the candidate. It did not become general until the later Middle Ages, *immersion and *submersion being the usual methods in earlier times. The change was doubtless due to the wish to avoid possible dangers to the candidate's health. It was perhaps adopted from the first in cases where immersion was not easily possible, e.g. on the Day of *Pentecost (Acts 2. 41) or in the gaoler's house at Philippi (Acts 16. 33). In the BCP and RC rite of 1969 it is a recognized alternative to immersion. See also Aspersion.

AFRAATES. See Aphraates.

AFRICA. See South Africa, Christianity in; U.M.C.A.; West Africa, Christianity in; and the following entry.

AFRICA, The Church in Roman. How Christianity spread to Roman 'Africa' (i.e. roughly Tripoli, Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco) is unknown. The earliest evidence is that of the '*Acts' of the *Scillitan martyrs (180); and the 'Passion' of St. *Perpetua (203) and the works of *Tertullian (197–c. 220) reveal a Church widespread and organized. While Roman Christians were still speaking Greek, the African Church was already using a Latin Bible and liturgy. By *Cyprian's time (c. 250) there were fully 100 bishops under the primacy of Carthage. The Romanized towns and the coastal regions were the chief, but not the only, areas of evangelization; and, though sees were more frequent in Africa Proconsularis and Numidia, parts of Mauretania had been touched. *Persecution by the Emp. *Decius (250) weakened the Church, leading to controversy over the readmission of lapsed members and to the *Novatianist schism, which in turn produced controversy with Rome over rebaptism. But, led by Cyprian, the faithful recovered strength and withstood fresh persecution under the Emp. Valerian (258). At the end of the century Africa added *Arnobius and *Lactantius to the as yet short roll of Latin theologians.

The 4th cent. saw the partly theological, partly social struggle against *Donatism, arising out of *Diocletian's persecution; the writings of *Tyconius and *Optatus; and the rise of St. *Augustine. Notable features of this period were the war against paganism, the growth of monasticism, African resistance to Papal claims, and the series of African Councils, the canons of which were incorporated into both Greek and Latin *canon law.

Such achievements were ended by the Vandal invaders (429), whose *Arian kings normally repressed Catholic Christianity, with intermittent toleration, as when Hilderic allowed an important council to assemble in 525. The chief writers of this later period were the historian *Victor Vitensis, the poet Dracontius, *Vigilius of Thapsus, and *Fulgentius of Ruspe. The reconquest (534) by *Justinian's general, Belisarius, restored orthodoxy, and some African theologians, notably *Facundus, were prominent in defence of the *Three Chapters; while monasticism became strong and canonists again active. Later still, *Gregory I (590–604) corresponded with African bishops, the Berber tribes were gradually converted, and, in c. 640, Africa strongly challenged *Monothelitism. But at the end of the 7th cent. the Arab conquest (Carthage fell in 698) reduced to a shadow the Church which had bred so many martyrs and thinkers. Its ruined shrines are now being uncovered.

C. Diehl, L'Afrique Byzantine. Histoire de la Domination Byzantine en Afrique (533–709) (1896); H. *Leclercq, O.S.B.,

L'Afrique chrétienne (2 vols., 1904); P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne (7 vols., 1901–23). S. A. Morcelli, Africa Christiana (3 vols., Brescia, 1816–17); J. Mesnage, L'Afrique chrétienne (1912; on topography); E. Buonaiuti, Il cristianesimo nell'Africa romana (Bari, 1928). W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church. A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (Oxford, 1952). C. Courtois, Les Vandales et l'Afrique (1955). J. P. Brisson, Autonomisme et Christianisme dans l'Afrique romaine de Septime Sévère à l'Invasion vandale (1958). J. B. Ward Perkins–R. G. Goodchild, 'The Christian Antiquities of Tripolitania' in Archaeologia, xcv (1953), pp. 1–82. H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 575–775, s.v. 'Afrique'. M. Scaduto in E.C., i (1948), cols. 393–8, s.v. 'Africa, III: Storia cristiana antica'.

AFRICANUS, SEXTUS JULIUS. See Julius Africanus, Sextus.

AGABUS, St., prophet. He is mentioned in Acts as foretelling the famine (A.D. 44–8) under Claudius (11. 28) and St. Paul's imprisonment (21. 10). In the E. Church he is held to be one of the seventy disciples (Lk. 10. 1) and dignified as an Apostle. Feast day, in the E. 8 April; in the W. 13 Feb.

AGAPE (Gk. ἀγάπη, 'love'). (1) The word, which prob. first occurs in the *Septuagint, is believed to have been coined by the sacred authors from the verb ἀγαπάω, to avoid the sensual associations of the ordinary Greek noun ἔρως. It is used only twice in the Synoptics (Mt. 24. 12, Lk. 11. 42), but often in St. John and the Pauline (esp. 1 Cor. 13) and Johannine Epistles, and always of the love of God or Christ, or of the love of Christians for one another. From the Scriptures it passed into the vocabulary of the Greek Fathers; it is usually translated in Latin by 'caritas', hence the original meaning of 'charity' in English.

(2) The term is applied also to the common religious meal which seems to have been in use in the early Church in close relation to the Eucharist. The classic NT ref. is 1 Cor. 11. 17–34, where abuses which accompanied the common meals that preceded the Eucharist are condemned. The most important early documents held to attest the practice are St. *Ignatius' ref. to the Christian love-feasts in his letter to the Smyrnæans (8), and esp. *Pliny's letter to Trajan. The latter contains a description of two separate Christian meetings, the one an early morning assembly for prayer, traditionally regarded as a Eucharistic celebration, the other an ordinary meal, believed to be the Agape. The 'Apologies' of *Justin Martyr, however, deal only with the Eucharist and make no mention of the Agape. On the other hand, *Tertullian seems to refer to it explicitly in his Apology (39). It is generally agreed that the connexion of the Agape with the Eucharist almost ceased from the time of St. *Cyprian, the Eucharist being celebrated fasting in the morning, and the Agape in the evening. The Agape seems also to have become more and more a charity supper and is described as such by St. *Augustine. Though still mentioned at the Trullan Council (692), it had fallen into disuse by the end of the patristic age.

(1) See bibl. s.v. Love.

(2) Apart from 1 Cor. 11, the chief NT texts are Acts 2. 42, 2. 46; Acts 6; Acts 20. 7, 20. 11; 2 Pet. 2. 13; Jude 12. Cf. also Did., 9 and 10 (acc. to F. *Kattenbusch, T. *Zahn, G. *Dix, ref. here to Agape; acc. to P. *Batiffol, H. *Lietzmann, K. Völker ref. to Eucharist); Ignatius, Smyrn., 6. 8, 8. 2, and 12. 2, Trall., 2. 3, Magn., 1. 1, &c.; Pliny, Ep. ad Traj., x. 97; Justin, Apol., i. 65 f.; Epist. Apost.*, 15; Tertullian, Apol., 39; St. *Clement Alex., Paedag., ii. 1; St. Hippolytus, Apost. Trad., xxvi. J. F. Keating, The Agape and the Eucharist in the Early Church (1901); P. Batiffol in D.T.C., i (1901), cols. 551–6, s.v.; id., Études d'histoire et de théologie positive, i (ed. 3, 1904), pp. 283–325; W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (1925), pp. 194–204; H. Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), pp. 197–210, 230–50; K. Völker, Mysterium und Agape. Die gemeinsamen Mahlzeiten in der alten Kirche (1926); J. M. Hanssens, S.J., 'L'Agape et l'Eucharistie' in E.L., xli (1927), pp. 525–48, xlii (1928), pp. 545–74, xliii (1929), pp. 177–98 and 520–9; A. Arnold, Der Ursprung des christlichen Abendmahls im Lichte der neuesten liturgiegeschichtlichen Forschung (1937); G. Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy (1944), pp. 82–102. B. Reicke, Diakonie, Festfreunde und Zelos in Verbindung mit der Altchristlichen Agapenfeier (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1951, part 5; 1951). See also H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1, 1907), cols. 775–848 (holds that the Agape was a funeral meal). J. A. Jungmann in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 180 f., s.v.; C. Bernas in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 193 f., s.v.

AGAPEMONE, Church of the. A small English sect of the 19th cent. It was founded by H. J. Prince (1811–99), a former student of St. David's College, Lampeter, who had been ordained in the C of E in 1840 and served as curate at Charlynch nr. Bridgwater in Somerset. There, together with his rector, Samuel Starky, he started a revivalist movement which soon resulted in illusions of the grossest kind. After being inhibited successively by several bishops, he and Starky left the C of E and began a ministry of their own, asserting that they were the Holy Ghost personified, the Two Witnesses of Rev. 11, or *Elijah. In 1849 they opened the 'Agapemone' in the village of Spaxton, being amply supported by their followers, who believed Prince to be a Divine being. The morals of the sect soon began to give grave scandal and a trial ensued revealing the licentiousness of Prince and his followers. In 1890 there was a period of renewed activity, when the sect conducted a successful campaign at Clapton, calling themselves the 'Children of the Resurrection', under J. H. Smyth-Pigott, the successor of Prince to the leadership, who proclaimed himself to be Christ. The sect vanished in the beginning of the 20th cent.

Material on the Agapemonites is to be found in Prince's own writings, e.g. A Hook in the Nose of Leviathan (1877) and The Man Christ Jesus (1886), as well as in those of his opponents, among which are J. G. Dick, A Word of Warning (1845), and O. Piers, The Door not Shut (1846).

AGAPETAE (Gk. ἀγαπηταί, 'beloved'). Another name for Subintroductae.*

AGAPETUS, St. (d. 536), Pope from 535. He was a strong defender of orthodoxy. In 536 he visited *Constantinople where, in spite of Imperial opposition from *Justinian and Theodora, he deposed Anthimus, the *Monophysite Patr. of Constantinople, and consecrated *Mennas as his successor. He died soon afterwards, after a reign of ten months. Feast day, in the E. 17 April (day of death); in the W. 20 Sept.

Letters and other items in J. P. Migne, PL, lxvi, 35–80. Jaffé, i, pp. 113–15. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 287–9. H. I. Marrou, 'Autour de la bibliothèque du Pape Agapit' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xlviii (1931), pp. 124–69. J. P. Kirsch in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 887–90, s.v.; J. Daniele in E.C., i (1948), col. 428 f., s.v. 'Agapeto I', with bibl.

AGATHA, St. A virgin martyred at Catania in Sicily. In the 5th and succeeding cents. she was held in great veneration. Her name occurs in the *Canon of the Roman Mass and in the ancient *martyrologies; and two early churches were dedicated to her in Rome. The date of her death is quite uncertain, and the *acts of her martyrdom, which derive from the beginning of the 6th cent., are legendary. Besides being the patron saint of the city of Catania and of bell-founders, she is invoked against fire. Feast day, 5 Feb.

'Acta' in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 598–602. S. Romeo, S. Agata, V. e M., e il suo culto (Catania, 1922). V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; Rome, 1938), pp. 169–73; F. di Capua, 'La concezione agonistica del martirio nei primi secoli del cristianesimo e l'introito della messa di S. Agata' in E.L., lxi (1947), pp. 229–40. 'Studi su S. Agata e il suo Culto nella Ricorrenza del xvii Centenario del Martirio' in Archivio Storico per la Sicilia Orientale, IV. v (1953 [for 1952]). On the early Roman church (mentioned by St. *Gregory the Great, Dialog., iii. 30) dedicated to her, see C. Huelsen, C. Cecchelli and others, S. Agata dei Goti (Monografie sulle chiese di Roma, I; 1924). J. P. Kirsch in C.E., i (1907), p. 203 f., s.v.; P. Allard in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 848–50, s.v., with further bibl.; H. Dörrie in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 179–84, s.v.

AGATHANGELOS. The reputed first historian of *Armenia, who professes to be the author of a Life of St. *Gregory the Illuminator (q.v.). Perhaps 'Agathangelos' is only a pseudonym of an Armenian Christian, proclaiming to his countrymen the 'good tidings' of their conversion. The writer asserts that he was a contemporary of St. Gregory and wrote his Life at the command of King Tiridates (c. 238–314). A. von Gutschmid argued that the Armenian text dates from c. 450, and that it made use of earlier sources. The Greek text is secondary to the Armenian.

Armenian text publd. at *Constantinople, 1709; modern ed. at Tiflis, 1909; Eng. tr. by R. W. Thomson (Albany, N.Y., 1976). Greek text in AA.SS., Sept. VIII (1762), pp. 320–402; modern ed. by G. Lafontaine (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, vii; 1973). A. von Gutschmid, 'Agathangelos' in the Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft, xxxi (1877), pp. 1–60. G. Garitte, Documents pour l'Étude du Livre d'Agathange (S.T., cxxvii; 1946), with additional texts.

AGATHIAS (c. 532–c. 582), poet and historian. He practised as an advocate at *Constantinople. His Περὶ τῆς Ἰουστινιανοῦ Βασιλείας is our principal authority for the history of the years 552–8 of the reign of *Justinian. He also made a collection of contemporary epigrams (including several of his own) and wrote erotic myths in nine books of Δαφνιακά. It is doubtful if he was a Christian.

'History' first ed. with notes and Lat. tr. by B. Vulcanius (Leyden, 1594), with 'Epigrammata Graeca' appended. Crit. edd. by B. G. Niebuhr (C.S.H. Byz., 1828; repr. J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxviii, 1269–1596) and R. Keydell (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, ii; Berlin, 1967), with introd. and bibl. Averil [M.] Cameron, Agathias (Oxford, 1970). Krumbacher, pp. 240–3, with bibl.

AGATHO (c. 577–681), Pope from 678. He was a Sicilian by birth. In 680 he held a council at Rome against the *Monothelites, the doctrinal formula set forth at which was adopted at the Sixth Oecumenical Council of *Constantinople. He also took up the cause of St. *Wilfrid of York in his dispute with *Theodore, Abp. of *Canterbury, and the King of Northumbria, and furthered the spread of the Roman Liturgy in England. Feast day, 10 Jan.

Jaffé, i, pp. 238–40. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. cclvii and 350–8. A. Vacant–H. Quentin, O.S.B., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 559–63, s.v.; J. P. Kirsch in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 916–18, s.v.; E. Daniels in E.C., i (1948), cols. 436–8, s.v. 'Agatone, Papa', with bibl.

AGDE, Council of (Concilium Agathense). A Council held in 506 at Agde in the S. of France under the presidency of St. *Caesarius of Arles. Its 47 genuine canons deal with such subjects as clerical celibacy, the canonical age for ordination, the relations of a bishop and his diocesan synod, church property, public peace, and the religious obligations of the faithful.

Hardouin, ii, cols. 995–1006; Hefele–Leclercq, ii (2; 1908), pp. 973–1002. C. Munier, Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 189–228. F. *Cabrol in D.A.C.L., i (1907), 871–7, s.v.

AGE, Canonical. The age, fixed by *canon law, at which a person becomes capable of undertaking special duties, of enjoying special privileges, or of entering specified new states of life. The term is esp. used in connexion with *ordination, for which in the C of E the canonical age for a deacon is 'twenty-three . . . unless he have a *faculty'; for a priest 'twenty-four . . . unless being over twenty-three he have a faculty'; and for a bishop at least thirty.

'AGE OF REASON'. (1) The normal age at which a child may be supposed to be capable of discerning right from wrong and therefore of being responsible for his conduct. In RC moral theology this age is held to be reached at about seven years. The attainment of the age of reason is commonly marked by a child's First Communion.

(2) A name sometimes applied to the 18th cent., when the prevailing tendency in philosophy and religion was rationalistic and opposed to all belief in the supernatural. W. *Cave described it as the saeculum rationalisticum.

AGENDA (Lat.), 'things to be performed'. (1) A term occasionally found in English 17th cent. divines for matters of religious practice as opposed to those of belief (credenda).

(2) In certain primitive (particularly African) liturgies it is used of the central part of the Mass, elsewhere called the Canon, Prex, Anaphora*, &c. In the Council of *Carthage of 390 (can. 9), it is used of the Eucharist as a whole.

(3) Among German-speaking Protestants on the Continent, the term is in regular use for the prescribed forms of service.

AGGIORNAMENTO (Ital., 'renewal'). A term closely connected with the pontificate of *John XXIII denoting a fresh presentation of the faith, together with a recognition of the wide natural rights of man and support of freedom of worship and the welfare state. In his opening speech at the Second *Vatican Council the Pope made it clear that, while a renewal of the method of the presentation of truth was required, a clear distinction had to be drawn between the unchangeable depositum fidei and the form of its enunciation.

AGIOS O THEOS (Gk. ἅγιος ὁ θεός, 'Holy God'). An anthem, so named from its first words, which occurs in the E. liturgies. It has survived, in the original Greek, in the Roman *Good Friday Liturgy, where it has traditionally been sung during the *Veneration of the Cross. See also Trisagion.

AGNELLUS OF PISA, Bl. (c. 1194–1235), founder of the English *Franciscan Province. He was received into the Order at Pisa, his native city, by St. *Francis, who sent him to *Paris to erect a convent. Later he returned to Italy. In 1224 he was despatched to England, and on 10 Sept. arrived at Dover with eight other friars, four of them

English. Shortly afterwards he established friaries at *Canterbury and at *Oxford. He engaged R. *Grossteste to teach in the latter, which (though Agnellus himself was not a scholar) rapidly became a famous centre of learning. He exercised considerable political influence in the conflict between Henry III and the Earl Marshal. Until the Reformation his remains were venerated at Oxford. His cultus was confirmed by *Leo XIII in 1892. His feast used to be observed in some dioceses on 13 Mar.; as this date invariably fell in Lent the English Franciscans now celebrate his memory on 10 Sept., the date of the arrival of the first friars in England.

The principal authority is Thomas of Eccleston, Tractatus de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam (ed. A. G. Little, 'Collection d'Études et de Documents', vii; Paris, 1909; with relevant passages from the Chronicle of Lanercost and Bartholomew of Pisa's Liber Conformitatum in appendices); Eng. tr. of the Tractatus by Father Cuthbert, O.S.F.C. (London, 1903). C. Mariotti, O.F.M., Il B. Agnello da Pisa ed i Frati Minori in Inghilterra (1895); Father Gilbert, O.S.F.C., B. Agnellus and the English Grey Friars (1937). E. Hutton, The Franciscans in England, 1224–1538 (1926), pp. 9–134, passim. Antoine de Sérent, O.F.M., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), col. 907 f., s.v., with further reff.; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), p. 1484, s.v. 'Pisa, Agnellus de'.

AGNELLUS, ANDREAS (805–c. 846), historian of *Ravenna. He had the title of Abbot, but appears to have remained a secular priest. His principal writing, 'Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis', is an elaborate account of the see, modelled on the '*Liber Pontificalis', which traces the history from St. *Apollinaris to his own age. It is full of historical errors, but also embodies valuable information about the buildings and customs of Ravenna, esp. in Agnellus' own time. The work was written largely to support the claims of Ravenna against *Rome. He has often been confused with St. Agnellus, Abp. of Ravenna (c. 556–c. 566).

Editio princeps of the Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis was publ. in 2 vols., Leipzig, 1708; crit. ed. by O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Langobardicarum et Italicarum Saec. VI–IX (1878), pp. 265–391; also ed. A. Testi Rasponi in Rerum Italicarum Scriptores founded by L. A. *Muratori, ed. 2 cont. by C. Carducci–V. Fiorini, II, iii (1924 ff.). F. Lanzoni, 'Il "Liber Pontificalis" Ravennate' in Rivista di Scienze Storiche, i (1909), pp. 345–70, 425–64, and 570–92; also publ. separately. A. Ferrua, S.J., in E.C., i (1948), cols. 465–7, s.v. 'Agnello di Ravenna'.

AGNES, St. She has been venerated as a virgin in Rome since the 4th cent., but the early legends of her martyrdom vary considerably, and nothing certain can be deduced as to the date or manner of her death. A *basilica was built in c. 350 on the Via Nomentana on the site of her remains. Her name occurs in the Roman *Canon of the Mass and in all *martyrologies both in E. and W., though on different days. In art she is represented with a lamb, no doubt on account of the similarity of 'agnus' with 'Agnes', and the archiepiscopal *pallium is made from the wool of two lambs, blessed each year in her basilica on her feast (21 Jan.). In the Roman Calendar a second feast used to be kept on the octave day, 28 Jan.

Lat. text of her Acta, ascribed to St. *Ambrose, in AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 351–4; F. de' Cavalieri, S. Agnese nella tradizione e nella leggenda (R.Q., Suppl. x; 1899), with Gr. texts, pp. 71–92; repr. in Scritti Agiografici, i (S.T., ccxxi; 1962), pp. 293–354; with other artt. on St. Agnes repr. ib., ii (S.T., ccxxii; 1962), pp. 337–64. L. de Kerval, Une Fleur des catacombes. Sainte Agnès dans la légende et dans l'histoire (1901). F. Jubaru, S.J., Sainte Agnès vierge et martyre de la voie Nomentane d'après de nouvelles recherches (1907), on which see F. de' Cavalieri, Hagiographica (S.T., xix; 1908), pp. 141–64. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 173–77. A. J. Denomy, C.S.B. (ed.), The Old French Lives of Saint Agnes and Other Vernacular Versions of the Middle Ages (Harvard Studies in Romance Languages, xiii; 1938), with full introd., pp. 4–38, and hagiographical bibl., pp. 263–5. Popular studies by T. Shearman (on the cult; London, 1904), by A. Smith, C.R.L. (ib., 1906), and by F. Jubaru, S.J. (Paris, 1914). F. W. Diechmann, 'Die Lage der Constantinischen Basilika der heiligen Agnes an der Via Nomentana' in Riv. A.C., xxii (1946), pp. 213–34. A. P. Frutaz, Il Complesso Monumentale di Sant'Agnese e di Santa Costanzia (1960), pp. 5–71, with summary in English, pp. 99–101. P. Allard and H. *Leclercq in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 915–65; A. P. Frutaz in E.C., i (1948), cols. 467–74, s.v. 'Agnese'; E. Josi–R. Aprili in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, i (Rome, 1961), cols. 382–411, s.v. 'Agnese'; all with bibl.

AGNOETAE (Gk. ἀγνοέω, 'to be ignorant of'). A *Monophysite sect founded by Themistius, a deacon of *Alexandria (6th cent.; hence also 'Themistians'). On the basis of Mk. 13. 32, Jn. 11. 34, &c., they attributed ignorance to the human soul of Christ. Till recently it has commonly been supposed, but apparently wrongly, that they ascribed ignorance also to the Godhead of Christ. Their teaching was attacked by Eulogius, Patr. of Alexandria, in 598–9, and also declared heretical by Pope *Gregory I.

P. *Schaff in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 62 f., s.v.; A. Vacant in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 586–96, s.v. 'Agnoètes', with patristic reff.

AGNOSTICISM. The doctrine that only material phenomena can be the subject of real knowledge and that all knowledge of such entities as a Divine Being, immortality, and a supernatural world is impossible. The invention of the word has been commonly ascribed, on the authority of R. H. *Hutton, to T. H. *Huxley, who is said to have coined it, on the basis of Acts 17. 23, in 1869 at a private meeting of a group which later developed into the *Metaphysical Society. The title was esp. affected in the later 19th cent. by persons of sceptical inclinations who wished to avoid professing dogmatic atheism. As an elaborated theory it had close similarities with the doctrine of the *Unknowable of H. *Spencer, and was also akin to the teaching of W. Hamilton (1805–65) on the *Unconditioned. In popular usage the word came to be applied to all forms of scepticism.

J. Ward, Naturalism and Agnosticism (*Gifford Lectures for 1896–8; 1899). R. Flint, Agnosticism (1903). F. *von Hügel, The Reality of God and Religion & Agnosticism, ed. E. G. Gardner (1931), pp. 155–256. A. E. Garvie in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 214–20, s.v.; T. Corbishley, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 49–52, with bibl.

AGNUS DEI. (1) The formula beginning with the words 'O Lamb of God' recited by the priest in the Latin liturgy shortly before the Communion. The Scriptural basis is Jn. 1. 29 (itself derived from Is. 53. 7), but the repetition is first found in the *Gloria in excelsis, introduced at Rome for episcopal Masses by Pope Symmachus (498–514). Its independent use is ascribed by the Liber Pontificalis to *Sergius I (687–701), a Syrian, who ordered it to be sung at the time of the Fraction. Its origin may have been a practical protest by Sergius against can. 82 of the *Trullan Council (692) forbidding the representation of the Lord under the form of a lamb. Originally recited once only, by the beginning of the 11th cent. it was said three times, though the third 'have mercy upon us' was changed to 'grant us peace', whether as a preparation for the *Kiss of Peace or, as *Innocent III says, because of the calamities afflicting the Church, is uncertain. By the regulations for the Ordo Missae 1969 it may be repeated any number of times. In the Middle Ages the Agnus, like the *Kyrie, was extensively interpolated. In *Requiems 'grant them rest' used to be substituted for the second part. It is now not uncommonly used in the C of E, where its legality was upheld by the *Lincoln Judgement; it is included in both Holy Communion rites in the ASB.

(2) A wax medallion bearing the figure of a lamb, blessed by the Pope in the first year of his pontificate and every 7th year afterwards. These objects of devotion are first heard of early in the 9th cent. at Rome, where the Archdeacon manufactured them on Holy Saturday from the remnants of the previous year's *paschal candle. They may represent a Christian substitute for a pagan charm. Agnus Dei's are also made of a mixture of wax and dust believed to be that of the bones of martyrs.

On (1), L. *Duchesne (ed.), L.P., i, p. 376. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 965–9, s.v., and Jungmann (1958), ii, pp. 413–22; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 332–40.
On (2), E. Mangenot in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 605–13, s.v., with bibl.; W. Henry in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 969–71, s.v.

AGOBARD (c. 769–840), Abp. of Lyons. Appointed coadjutor to Leidrad of Lyons in 813, he succeeded to his see in 816. His opposition to the schemes of the Empress Judith led to his deposition at the Council of Thionville (835), but he was reinstated two years later. He was a versatile scholar whose works were marked by much originality. He attacked the excessive veneration of images, trial by ordeal, belief in witchcraft, and the 'absurd opinion of the vulgar concerning hail and thunder' (that it was due to magic). His theological writings, mainly directed against the *Adoptianist heresy, included a treatise against *Felix of Urgel. He also attacked the liturgical speculations of *Amalarius of Metz. The De Imaginibus Sanctorum, traditionally attributed to Agobard, has been ascribed to *Claudius of Turin (q.v.).

Works first published by P. Masson (Paris, 1605) and re-ed. by S. *Baluzius (2 vols. bound in 1, Paris, 1666), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, civ, 159–352. Crit. edd. of his 'Libri duo pro filiis et contra Iudith uxorem Ludovici Pii' by G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 274–9; of his letters by E. Dümmler, ib., Epistolae, v (1898), pp. 150–239, and of the 'Carmen ad Agobardum Archiepiscopum missum', also by E. Dümmler, ib., Poetae, ii (1883), p. 118 f. [A.] Bressolles, Saint Agobard, évêque de Lyon (L'Église et l'État au moyen-âge, ix, 1949); [J.] A. Cabaniss, Agobard of Lyons (Syracuse, N.Y., 1953); E. Boshof, Erzbischof Agobard von Lyon (Kölner historische Abhandlungen, xvii; 1969).

AGONIZANTS (from Med. Lat. agonizo, 'to be at the point of death'). The fraternity, also known as 'Camillians', which was founded by St. *Camillus de Lellis (q.v.) at Rome in 1586. In 1591 the Order was given a rule by Gregory XIV, and soon grew rapidly in riches and popularity. Its work has always been to minister to the sick and dying.

Heimbucher, ii (ed. 3, 1934), pp. 114–19 and 664 f.

AGRAPHA (i.e. 'unwritten [sayings]'). A name given esp. to the sayings of Christ not contained in the four canonical Gospels. Some occur in various NT MSS. (e.g. Lk. 6. 4 in the *Codex Bezae); one in Acts (20. 35); others are found in apocryphal Gospels, e.g. the 'Gospel acc. to the *Hebrews' and esp. the 'Gospel of *Thomas', and the writings of the Fathers.

A. Resch, Agrapha. Aussercanonische Evangelienfragmente (T.U., v, Heft 4; 1889); id., Agrapha. Aussercanonische Schriftfragmente (ib., xxx, Hfte. 3–4; 1906). J. H. *Ropes, Die Sprüche Jesu die in den kanonischen Evangelien nicht überliefert sind (ib., xiv, Hft. 2; 1896). B. Jackson, Twenty-Five Agrapha (1900; incl. Eng. tr.). M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 33–7. J. Jeremias, Unbekannte Jesusworte (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xvi; 1948; ed. 3, 1963; Eng. tr., 1957 and ed. 2, 1964). R. Dunkerley, Beyond the Gospels (Pelican Books, 1957). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 979–84, s.v.; J. H. Ropes in H.D.B., extra vol. (1904), pp. 343–52, s.v., with good bibl. L. Vaganay in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 158–98, s.v.

AGRICOLA, JOHANN (c. 1494–1566), German Protestant reformer. A native of Eisleben, he studied under M. *Luther at *Wittenberg and in 1519 accompanied him to the *Leipzig Disputation. Afterwards he worked as a reformer at Frankfurt and Eisleben. In 1536 he began to teach at Wittenberg, where he was welcomed by Luther until, after a brief interval, he became a supporter of *Antinomianism and a violent controversy with Luther ensued. In 1540 he removed to Berlin, where he published a recantation which few save Luther refused to accept. Joachim II, Elector of Brandenburg, appointed him to the offices of *General-superintendent and court preacher, which he filled actively and influentially till his death. He was associated with J. von Pflug and M. Helding in the preparation of the *Augsburg Interim of 1548, and tried, but in vain, to conclude the controversy of the *Adiaphorists. He is also remembered as the first person to publish collections of German proverbs (1528, 1529, 1548).

Life by G. Kawerau (Berlin, 1881). J. Rogge, Johann Agricolas Lutherverständnis (Theologische Arbeiten xiv [1960]). G. Loesche, 'Eine Johann Agricola-Urkunde' in Z.K.G., xlii (1923), p. 396 f. L. W. Spitz, The Religious Renaissance of the German Humanists (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), pp. 20–40. Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 5 f. (Nos. 130–49).

AGRIPPA VON NETTESHEIM, HEINRICH CORNELIUS (1486–1535), scholar and adventurer. After studying at *Cologne and *Paris (1506), he fought in the service of the King of Spain in 1508. In 1509 he lectured on occult sciences and Hebrew at Dôle, where he was attacked for teaching heresy, and in 1510 fled to England. From 1511 to 1517 he was in Lombardy. Here he attended the schismatical Council of Pisa (1511) as a theologian in the service of the Emp. Maximilian, and later lectured on the Hermetica at Pavia and Turin. From c. 1518, when he became councillor and orator of Metz, he interested himself in the Reformation, with many of the aims of which he sympathized, though he condemned the excesses of M. *Luther. In 1524 he was appointed physician to Louise of Savoy but soon fell into disgrace. In 1529 he became historiographer of the Emp. *Charles V, and in the next years published his two most important works, De Incertitudine et Vanitate Scientiarum et Artium (1530) and De Occulta Philosophia (1531). The second, which in date of writing is the earlier, having probably been completed c. 1510, attempts to establish the mutual interrelation of all things, the knowledge of which constitutes the true science or 'magic' known only to the chosen few. This knowledge is based simultaneously on nature, Revelation, and the mystic sense of Scripture, and, on condition of detaching ourselves entirely from the world of sense, gives us the key to governing and turning to our use the forces of the universe. The De Incertitudine, on the other hand, written in a profoundly sceptical spirit, is hostile to all science and scholarship. Confining truth to the Bible alone, it violently attacked *Scholasticism, known to Agrippa only in its decadent contemporary form, as well as many institutions of the Church, such as the cult of saints and relics. The publication of these works earned him a year's imprisonment, but his death, in 1535, saved him from further consequences of his audacious doctrines. In his later years he was closely associated with *Hermann of Wied, the reforming Abp. of Cologne.

Works (2 vols., Lyons, no date; repr. Lyons, 1600). H. Morley, The Life of Henry Cornelius Agrippa von Nettesheim (2 vols., 1856); A. Prost, Les Sciences et les arts occultes au seizième siècle. Corneille Agrippa, sa vie et ses œuvres (2 vols., 1881–2); J. Orsier, Henri Cornélis Agrippa (1911); C. G. Nauert, Jr., Agrippa and the Crisis of Renaissance Thought (Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, lv; 1965).

AHIKAR LEGEND. A story which occurs in various forms but in essence tells of a Grand Vizier of Sennacherib, Ahikar the Wise, against whom his adopted son, Nadan, plotted and received appropriate retribution. The legend was widely spread in the East. It is met with in the *Elephantine papyri and in Rumanian, Slavonic, Armenian, Arabic, and Syriac literature. Since G. Hoffmann (1880) pointed out the identity of 'Achiacharus', *Tobit's nephew (Tob. 1. 21), with 'Ahikar', its influence on the Book of Tobit has been universally admitted.

F. C. Conybeare, J. R. Harris, and A. S. Lewis, The Story of Ahikar from the Syriac, Arabic, Armenian, Ethiopic, Greek and Slavonic Versions (1898); R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (Oxford, 1913), pp. 715–84; F. Nau, Histoire et sagesse d'Ahikar l'Assyrien (1909).

AIDAN, St. (d. 651), monk of *Iona and Bp. of *Lindisfarne. At the request of St. *Oswald, King of Northumbria, he was sent from Iona to revive the missionary work of *Paulinus. Consecrated bishop in 635, he established his headquarters on the island of Lindisfarne, whence he made long journeys on the mainland, strengthening the Christian communities and founding new missionary outposts. The Christian practices taught by Aidan were those of the *Celtic Church. He carefully educated a group of twelve English boys to be future ecclesiastical leaders of their people, among them St. *Chad. His asceticism and gentleness won rapid success for his mission, and his personal relations with Oswald (d. 642) and Oswald's successor, St. *Oswin (d. 651), were close and intimate. Feast day, 31 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 3, 5 f., 14–17, 25; notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), esp. pp. 136 and 164–7. A. C. Fryer, Aidan, the Apostle of the North [1884]. J. B. *Lightfoot, Leaders in the Northern Church (Sermons, 1890), pp. 39–54. Elizabeth W. Grierson, The Story of the Northumbrian Saints, S. Oswald, S. Aidan, S. Cuthbert (1913), pp. 45–69. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 134–46 and 163 f.

AILLY, PIERRE D'. See D'Ailly, Pierre.

AILRED, St. (1109–67), also 'Aelred', the 'Bernard of the North', Abbot of *Rievaulx. The son of a Saxon priest of *Hexham, he was for some years at the court of King David of Scotland, son of St. *Margaret. He entered the *Cistercian house at Rievaulx c. 1133, became Abbot of Revesby in 1143, and Abbot of Rievaulx in 1147. In 1142–3 Ailred, at the invitation of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, wrote his first important work, the 'Speculum Caritatis'. His extensive spiritual writings show marked similarity of interest and attitude with those of St. Bernard and *William of St.-Thierry. He shared the latter's concern with psychology, and his analysis of the nature of the 'affections' and of love is in many ways parallel to that of the continental *Cistercians. His devotion was marked by a strong attachment to the suffering humanity of Christ; and his 'De Spiritali Amicitia', a rewriting of Cicero's 'De Amicitia', is the fullest medieval discussion of the theme of friendship. He also wrote a life of *Edward the Confessor. His own biography was written by his pupil, Walter Daniel. Feast day, 12 Jan., also 3 Mar.

Modern ed. of his Opera Omnia by A. Hoste, O.S.B.–C. H Talbot (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, i, &c.; 1971 ff.) 'Opera Ascetica' also in B. Tissier, Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, v (Bono-Fonte, 1662), pp. 162–388; Opera Historica in R. Twysden, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem (London, 1652), cols. 337–422; both repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxcv, 209–796. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., Auteurs Spirituels et textes dévots du Moyen Age Latin (1932), pp. 287–98, (which prints a prayer in Jesus Coll., Cambridge, MS. 34, fol. 97r–99r); Sermones inediti B. Aelredi Abbatis Rievallensis ed. C. H. Talbot (Series Scriptorum S. Ordinis Cisterciensis, i; Rome, 1952). There are also crit. edd. of De Anima by id. (Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, Supplement i; 1952); of De Spiritali Amicitia, with Fr. tr. and notes, by J. Dubois (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité Médiévale, 1948); of Cum factus esset Jesus annorum duodecim by A. Hoste, O.S.B., with Fr. tr. by J. Dubois (S.C., lx; 1958); of De Institutione Inclusarum and Oratio Pastoralis, with Fr. tr. by C. Dumont, O.C.S.O. (ib., lxvi; 1961); and of selected prayers, with introd. by A. Hoste, O.S.B., with Eng. tr. by Sr. Rose of Lima (Steenbrugge, 1965). Eng. trr. by G. Webb and A. Walker of On Jesus at Twelve Years Old (1956), Ailred's Letter to his Sister (1957), and of Speculum Caritatis (1962); also of the Pastoral Prayer by a Religious of C.S.M.V. (1955). F. M. Powicke (ed.), The Life of Ailred of Rievaulx by Walter Daniel (tr. and notes; 1950). A. Hallier, O.Cist.S.O., Un Éducateur Monastique. Aelred de Rievaulx (1959). [K.] A. Squire, O.P., Aelred of Rievaulx. A Study (1969). A. Hoste, O.S.B., Bibliotheca Aelrediana. A Survey of the Manuscripts, Old Catalogues, Editions and Studies concerning St. Aelred of Rievaulx (Instrumenta Patristica, ii; Steenbrugge, 1962). Collectanea Cisterciensia, xxix (1967), pp. 3–99 [special issue to mark the 8th centenary of Ailred's death].

'AIN KARIM. A village about 5 miles W. of *Jerusalem, in the hill country, traditionally regarded as the home of *Zacharias and *Elizabeth, the birthplace of St. *John Baptist, and the scene of the *Visitation.

AISLE (Fr. aile, 'wing'). Commonly any extension of the nave of a church made by the piercing of its side walls with a series of arches and the building on of an extension with a separate and lower roof, for the purpose of increased accommodation. Less frequently a similar extension of the chancel or transept. It is often, but quite wrongly, used of a gangway up the centre of the nave or elsewhere; and the corresponding expression 'centre aisle' is a contradiction in terms.

AKHMÎM FRAGMENT. See Peter, Apocalypse of, and Peter, Gospel of.

AKIBA or AQIBA (c. 50–132), Jewish Rabbi. Akiba ben Joseph was the most influential rabbi of his generation. As teacher of the renowned Rabbi Meir he prob. much influenced the *Mishnah. He actively supported the revolt of *Bar-Cochba, recognizing his claims as Messiah. He was taken prisoner by the Romans and burnt alive. *Aquila's version of the OT was probably a product of the School of Akiba.

L. Finkelstein, Akiba. Saint and Martyr (New York, 1936). P. Benoit, O.P., 'Rabbi Aqiba ben Joseph, sage et héros du Judaïsme' in R. Bibl., liv (1947), pp. 54–89. J. Bornstein in E.J., ii (1928), cols. 7–22, incl. bibl.

AKOIMETAE. See Acoemetae.

AKSUM. See Axum.

ALACOQUE, St. MARGARET MARY. See Margaret Mary Alacoque, St.

ALAIN OF LILLE. See Alan of Lille.

ALAN OF LILLE (d. 1203), poet, theologian, and preacher. He prob. studied and taught at Paris c. 1150–c. 1185. Later he moved to the South of France, prob. to Montpellier, where he continued to teach, and was engaged in combating the *Catharist heresy. Towards the end of his life he entered the abbey of *Cîteaux where he died.

He had a thorough training in the liberal arts before turning his attention to theology, and it is prob. that the De planctu naturae, a mixture of prose and verse, in which Nature personified plays the chief role, is an early work of his. His earliest theological work seems to be the incomplete Summa Quoniam homines and a number of unpublished quaestiones. Not much later are the Regulae caelestis iuris, in which an attempt is made to state theological truths in a series of rules or axioms, and the allegorical poem Anticlaudianus (1182–3). His subsequent works include a set of Distinctiones, a dictionary of biblical terms with literal and moral and allegorical interpretations, an Ars praedicandi, to which was attached a set of twenty-seven model sermons, and a Liber poenitentialis, the earliest of the medieval manuals for confessors. Alan is reckoned among the 'Porretani' or disciples of *Gilbert de la Porrée, but his work has a highly personal character, which is also reflected in his style; the width of his interests is celebrated in his epitaph: 'Qui duo [i.e. the Old and New Testaments], qui septem [the liberal arts], qui totum scibile scivit.' The 'Ars Fidei Catholicae', an attempt to confute non-Christians on rational grounds alone, which until recently was attributed to him, has been shown to be the work of Nicholas of Amiens.

Collections of his works by C. de Visch (Antwerp, 1654) and, with additions, in the Bibliotheca Scriptorum Ordinis Cisterciensis (ib., 1654) and J. P. Migne, P.L., ccx; but these are not all satisfactory, since some still remain unpubld.; see M. T. d'Alverny, Alain de Lille. Textes inédits avec une introduction sur sa vie et ses œuvres (Études de Philosophie médiévale, lii; 1965), with bibl. Summa Quoniam homines ed. P. Glorieux in A.H.D.L.M.A., xx (1954), pp. 113–364; De Virtutibus et Vitiis ed. O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et Morale aux XIIe et XIIIe Siècles, vi (Gembloux, 1960), pp. 27–92. Anticlaudianus ed. R. Bossuat (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Age, i; 1955). Liber poenitentialis: middle and short versions [this last is the work of a follower of Alan] ed. J. Longère in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxxii (1965), pp. 169–242; long version ed. id. (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, xvii–xviii; Louvain, 1965). For editions of sermons and shorter poems, see M. T. d'Alverny, op. cit. Eng. trr. of De Planctu Naturae as The Complaint of Nature by D. M. Moffat (Yale Studies in English, xxxvi; New York, 1908) and, with notes, of Anticlaudianus, by W. H. Cornog (Philadelphia, 1935). M. Baumgartner, Die Philosophie des Alanus de Insulis (B.G.P.M., ii, Hft. 4; 1896); G. R. de Lage, Alain de Lille, Poète du XIIe Siècle (Université de Montréal Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales, xii; 1951). M. Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, ii (1911), pp. 452–76; Überweg, ii, 245–7, with bibl. p. 706. P. Braun in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 656–8; J. M. Canivez in Dict. Sp., i (1927), cols. 270–2, both s.v. 'Alain de Lille'; A. Maier in E.C., i (1948), cols. 622–4, s.v. 'Alano di Lilla'.

ALANE, ALEXANDER. See Alesius, Alexander.

ALAPA. According to W. usage, the light blow formerly delivered by the bishop on the cheek (leviter in maxilla caedit) of those being confirmed. It was perhaps an imitation of the blow with the sword by which a young Teutonic warrior was dubbed a knight and, if so, symbolized the spiritual warfare lying ahead of the candidate. More prob. it is to be associated with the *Kiss of Peace.

ALARIC (c. 370–410), Visigothic chief. A member of one of the noblest Gothic families, he served as general of the barbarian auxiliaries under the Emp. *Theodosius I. On the latter's death, he hoped for a more important and regular position in the Empire, and, being disappointed in this, determined to conquer a kingdom for himself. Both E. and W. emperors failed to deal adequately with him in negotiation and battle, and three times, in 408, 409, and 410, he besieged *Rome. After the last siege, the city was entered on 24 Aug. 410, and thus conquered for the first time by a Gothic king. This event, which caused consternation throughout the Empire, was the immediate occasion of St. *Augustine's City of God. Like most of the Goths, Alaric was an *Arian by religion.

The chief authorities are his contemporaries *Orosius Claudian, *Zosimus, and Jordanus.

À LASCO, JOHN. See Laski, John.

ALB. A white linen garment, reaching from the neck to the ankles with tight-fitting sleeves and held in at the waist by a girdle, worn by the ministers at Mass. It is derived from the under-tunic common in the Roman and Greek world. It has been used in Christian worship from an early date, but it was not regarded as a specifically liturgical garment until long after the other Eucharistic vestments. Sometimes it is ornamented, near the hem, with strips of embroidery or other coloured material, known as 'apparels'. The alb was taken to symbolize purity, and it was customary for the celebrant to say 'Make me white . . .' when putting it on. Albs of silk and in colours have also sometimes been used.

Braun, L.G., pp. 57–92 (ch. 3). C. Callewaert, 'De Alba Liturgica' in Collationes Brugenses, xxv (1925), pp. 370–4, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), No. xx, pp. 211–14.

ALBAN, St., the first British martyr ('Protomartyr Anglorum'). His martyrdom has traditionally been connected with the *Diocletianic persecution (c. 305), but recently many scholars have accepted the reading preserved in a Turin MS. (D. V. 3), according to which he suffered under Septimius Severus (c. 209). According to all sources he was a pagan of Verulamium (now *St. Albans in Herts) who was converted and baptized by a fugitive priest whom he sheltered. When the Emperor sent soldiers to search the house, Alban disguised himself in the priest's cloak, was arrested, and condemned to death. The priest, traditionally named Amphibalus from some confusion with the cloak (amphibalus), is said to have been stoned to death a few days later at Redbourn. St. Alban is commemorated by *Venantius Fortunatus (c. 580) in the line Albanum egregium fecunda Britannia profert. His shrine still stands in St. Albans Abbey. He is not to be identified with the St. Alban venerated at Cologne. Feast day, 22 June (dropped from the RC Calendar of 1969; now observed locally on 20 June); 17 June in the BCP (prob. by a misreading of xxii as xvii).

AA.SS., Jun. IV (1707), pp. 146–70; W. Meyer, 'Die Legende des h. Albanus des Protomartyr Angliae in Texten vor Beda' in Abh. (Gött.), N.F., viii, Nr. 1 (1904). For various forms of the legend see Hardy, i, pp. 3–30. W. Levison, 'St. Alban and St. Albans' in Antiquity, xv (1941), pp. 337–59. J. Morris, 'The Date of Saint Alban' in Hertfordshire Archaeology, i (1968), pp. 1–8.

ALBAN, St., AND St. SERGIUS, Fellowship of. An organization, founded in 1928, which aims at promoting better understanding between Christians, and particularly between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches, by means of prayer, meetings, conferences, and the publication of a periodical Sobornost. It maintains a permanent centre in London and has branches in various parts of England.

The Journal of the Fellowship of S. Alban and S. Sergius. Quarterly (London, 1928–33, typewritten; 1934 printed); Sobornost (ib., 1935 ff.). N. Zernov in R. Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 662–4.

ALBANIA, Christianity in. Christianity probably reached what is now Albania at an early date through traders from Epirus and Macedonia, but with the fall of the W. Empire in the 5th and 6th cents. its influence was largely destroyed. In the Dark Ages, the native Illyrians, who at that time became known as Albanians, were made subject first to the Byzantine court, and so to Eastern Orthodox Christianity (840), and later to Slav invaders from the north. At the religious schism between E. and W. a section of Albanians transferred their religious allegiance from *Constantinople to Rome. In 1389 the medieval Serbian Empire, into which the Albanians were later incorporated, fell to the Turks, who overran the country. Nevertheless, for ninety years resistance was effectively made to the Turkish power, esp. under Iskander Bey (1403–67), a national leader who maintained an independent kingdom in Upper Albania from 1443 till his death. He also encouraged his followers to abandon Orthodoxy for Rome. Many remained faithful to Orthodoxy, however, and under centuries of Turkish rule the proportion of Orthodox to Latins increased. Although the Turks, who finally subjugated Albania in 1521, treated the Albanians as allies rather than subjects, imperial favour was dependent upon the profession of *Mohammedanism, and there was much apostasy. Local Turkish lords indulged for centuries in every kind of persecution. In 1913 Albania became independent and the Orthodox Albanian Church became autocephalous in 1922.

W. Peacock, Albania. The Foundling State of Europe (1914). D. Attwater, The Dissident Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc., [1937]), pp. 155 f. M. Lacko in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 246 f., s.v., with bibl.

ALBERT OF BRANDENBURG (1490–1545), Cardinal Abp. and Elector of Mainz. After studying at Frankfurt-on-Oder, he was successively a prebendary of Mainz (1509), Abp. of Magdeburg (1513), and Abp. of Mainz (1514). In 1518 he was created cardinal. Entrusted by *Leo X in 1517 with the publication in Saxony and Brandenburg of the Indulgence for *St. Peter's in Rome, he secured the services of the notorious Dominican, J. *Tetzel, to preach it. He was himself a man of liberal ideas and a friend of the humanists, notably of *Ulrich von Hutten, even favouring the Reformation in its first stages and encouraging the publication of books in its support. After an admonition from Leo X, Albert gradually changed his attitude. Having again wavered during the Peasant War (1525), he finally threw in his lot with the Papacy at the Dessau Meeting (1525) and was henceforward its resolute defender, though he tried to discourage extreme measures against the Protestants. In 1538 he took part in the Nuremberg Meeting which opposed the League of *Schmalkalden. In 1542 he became, through the influence of the *Jesuit Peter Faber, who resided in his diocese for a year, a warm admirer of the new Order, and in his last years worked strenuously on its behalf.

J. H. Hennes, Albrecht von Brandenburg, Erzbischof von Mainz und Magdeburg (1858); J. May, Der Kurfürst, Cardinal und Erzbischof Albrecht II von Mainz und Magdeburg (2 vols., 1865–75). F. Winkler, Das Gebetbuch des Kardinal Albrecht von Brandenburg (1962). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 306–10, s.v. 'Albrecht von Mainz'. Full bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), pp. 275–8.

ALBERT OF PRUSSIA (1490–1568). The last Grand Master of the *Teutonic Order, and first Hohenzollern Duke of Prussia. He was converted to Protestantism and, supported by the counsel of M. *Luther, determined to make Prussia a hereditary duchy. In 1525 he achieved this end, but he was obliged to recognize the Polish king as suzerain. He encouraged education, established schools in his duchy, and founded the university of Königsberg in 1544, where he appointed A. *Osiander professor in 1549. After the quarrel between the latter and P. *Melanchthon over *justification by faith, a strict form of Lutheranism was established in his dominions.

J. Voigt, Briefwechsel der berühmtesten Gelehrten des Zeitalters der Reformation mit Herzog Albrecht von Preussen (Königsberg, 1841). E. M. Wermter (ed.), Kardinal Stanislaus Hosius Bischof von Ermland und Herzog Albrecht von Preussen. Ihr Briefwechsel über das Konzil von Trient (1560–62) (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, lxxxii; 1957). E. Joachim, Die Politik des letzten Hochmeisters in Preussen, Albrecht von Brandenburg (Publicationen aus den k. Preuss. Staatsarchiven l, lviii; lxi, 1892–95). K. Lohmeyer, Herzog Albrecht von Preussen (Danzig, 1890). P. G. Thielen, Die Kultur am Hofe Herzog Albrechts von Preussen (1525–1568) (1953); W. Hubatsch, Albrecht von Brandenburg-Ansbach (Heidelberg, 1960); H. Freiwald, Markgraf Albrecht von Ansbach-Kulmbach und seine Landständische Politik als Deutschordens-Hochmeister und Herzog in Preussen während der Entscheidungsjahre 1521–1528 (1961). C. F. D. Erdmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 310–23, s.v. 'Albrecht von Preussen', with bibl. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), pp. 412–20. Study by J. R. Fligge (Bonn, 1972).

ALBERTUS MAGNUS, St. (c. 1200–1280), medieval theologian, philosopher and scientist. Born at Lauingen on the Danube, near Ulm, of a lesser noble family, he made his first university studies at Padua, where in 1223 he entered the *Dominican Order. He returned to Germany to study theology and was lecturer in the Dominican houses first at Hildesheim, then at Freiberg, Ratisbon and Strassburg. From this period dates his earliest theological work, the Tractatus de natura boni. About 1241 he was sent to *Paris, and from 1245 to 1248 he held one of the Dominican chairs in theology. He composed a Summa, comprising De creaturis, De quattuor coaequaevis, De homine and De bono, and a Commentary on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard, of which Book IV can be dated 1249. These works reveal a wide knowledge of Greco-Arabic sources. Some scholars are of the opinion that he also began his work on *Aristotle while he was still at Paris. He had St. *Thomas Aquinas as his pupil. In 1248 he was summoned to *Cologne, whither Thomas Aquinas followed him. Here he set up a new Dominican studium generale. Also here, he wrote commentaries on Ps.-Dionysius and on Aristotle's Ethics. From 1253 to 1256 he was Provincial of the German province. He was much in request as a judge in ecclesiastical disputes. In 1256 he went to the papal curia to defend the interests of the friars against the attacks of the secular masters of Paris. At the request of Pope Alexander IV (1254–61), he held a disputation on the unity of the intellect, directed against the views of *Averroes (De unitate intellectus contra Averroem), and lectured on the Gospel of John. Returning to Germany, he resumed his teaching at Cologne. In 1260, at the insistence of the Pope, he was consecrated Bp. of Ratisbon, where the administration was in disorder. After two years, however, he was allowed to resign and was some time in Italy. In 1263–4 he preached a crusade in Germany and Bohemia at the order of Pope Urban IV (1261–4). From 1264 to 1266 he was at the Dominican house in Würzburg, in 1268 at Strassburg and elsewhere. From 1269 until his death he was again at Cologne. In 1277 he went to Paris at the height of the Averroist controversy in a vain attempt to avert the condemnation of the Aristotelian doctrines held by himself and Thomas Aquinas. His later works include Biblical commentaries on Job, certain of the Prophets and on the Gospels (partly a revision of earlier work) and perhaps an unfinished Summa theologica. The De adhaerendo Deo, formerly ascribed to him, is the work of John of Kastl (d. after 1418).

Albert taught at a time when even the most conservative theologians were coming to understand that Aristotle and the Arabic philosophers could not be ignored, and the most significant part of his work is the commentaries, or rather paraphrases, on Aristotle. They covered almost the whole Aristotelian corpus and included certain pseudepigrapha such as the Liber de causis*. In the prologue on the Physics (I, tr. 1, c. 1) he expresses his intention of making the physics, metaphysics and mathematics of Aristotle intelligible to the Latins. He made extensive use of earlier commentators, Greek and Arabic, but also incorporated many observations of his own. Acclaim came at once from his contemporaries. *Roger Bacon complained that he was treated as if he were an ancient authority. *Siger of Brabant recognized that Albertus and Thomas Aquinas were the leading men in philosophy. Modern scholars have judged his achievement variously, some as that of a learned and eclectic compiler, but the increased attention paid to his work in the last generation has caused a much more favourable view to be taken. In theology his influence was not commensurate, but his work was one of the main sources of the Compendium theologicae veritatis of Hugh Ripelin of Strassburg (1268), which circulated very widely, often under the name of Albert himself. One of Albert's pupils, Ulrich of Strassburg (d. 1277), in whose eyes he was 'nostri temporis stupor et miraculum', followed up his treatise on Ps.-Dionysius in a Summa de bono which has been termed the first link in the Neoplatonist chain which binds Albertus with *Nicholas of Cusa.

Albertus has inevitably had to stand comparison with Thomas Aquinas, who was superior to him in power of systematic thought. Their gifts were different, but their fundamental aims were the same. They agreed on the necessity of resolving philosophical problems, not as theologians, but as philosophers, per experimentum et rationem, and on the necessity in scriptural exegesis of putting the literal sense first without neglecting the allegorical. The works of Albertus are much more personal than those of Thomas. It has been said that 'one cannot open his works without meeting him personally with his enthusiasms, his likes and dislikes, and occasionally with his anger against those who sin against the light of reason'.

Already in the 14th cent. Albertus was termed the Great, but his continuing renown in the Middle Ages was in part due to works wrongly attributed to him and to legendary stories of his magical powers. In the 15th cent. there was a revival of interest in his doctrines, and especially at Cologne a group called themselves 'Albertists'. Albertus was beatified in 1622, and canonized and proclaimed a *doctor of the Church by *Pius XI in 1931. Feast day, 15 Nov.

Works ed. P. Jammy (21 vols., Lyons, 1651); mod. edd. A. Borgnet (38 vols., Paris, 1890–9) and B. Geyer and others (Münster i.W., 1951 ff.). Ps.-Albertian De Adhaerendo Deo tr. into Eng. (London, 1654; mod. edd. 1850 and 1949). P. de Loë, O.P. (ed.), 'De Vita et Scriptis Beati Alberti Magni' in Anal. Boll., xix (1900), pp. 257–84, xx (1901), pp. 273–316, and xxi (1902), pp. 361–71. J. Sighart, Albertus Magnus (1857; Eng. tr., 1876). G. von Hertling, Albertus Magnus. Beiträge zu seiner Würdigung (B.G.P.M., xiv, Hfte 5–6; 1914); F. Pelster, S.J., Kritische Studien zum Leben und zu den Schriften Alberts des Grossen (1920), and other artt. G. Meersseman, O.P., Introductio in Opera Omnia B. Alberti Magni O.P. (Bruges, 1931); E. *Gilson, 'L'Ame raisonnable chez Albert le Grand' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xiv (1943), pp. 5–72; H. Ostlender, Studia Albertina (B.G.P.M., Supplementband iv; 1952); B. Korošak, O.F.M., Mariologia S. Alberti Magni eiusque coaequalium (Bibliotheca Mariana Medii Aevi, Textus et Disquisitiones, vii; Rome, 1954); A. Fries, C.SS.R., Die unter dem Namen des Albertus Magnus überlieferten Mariologischen Schriften (B.G.P.M., xxxvii. 4; 1954); id., Die Gedanken des heiligen Albertus Magnus über die Gottesmutter (Thomistische Studien, vii; 1958); F. Ruello, Les "Noms Divins" et leurs "Raisons" selon Saint Albert le Grand, commentateur du "De Divinis Nominibus" (Bibliothèque Thomiste, xxv; 1963). P. Michaud-Quantin, La Psychologie de l'Activité chez Albert le Grand (Bibliothèque Thomiste, xxxvi; 1966). J. Schneider, Das Gute und die Liebe nach der Lehre Alberts des Grossen (Veröffentlichungen des Grabmann-Institutes, ii–iii; 1967). F. J. Nocke, Sakrament und personaler Vollzug bei Albertus Magnus (B.G.P.M., xli, Hft. 4; 1967). F. van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIIIe siècle (Philosophes Médiévaux, ix; 1966), pp. 272–306. J. B. Schneyer, Repertorium der Lateinischen Sermones des Mittelalters, i (B.G.P.M., xliii, 1; 1969), pp. 92–114. J. Sudbrack, S.J., Die geistliche Theologie des Johannes von Kastl (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xxvii, 1–2 [1966–7]). Albertus Magnus and the Sciences. Commemorative Essays 1980, ed. J. A. Weisheipl, O.P. (Toronto, 1980). H. Laurent. O.P.–M. J. Congar, O.P., 'Essai de bibliographie albertienne' in Rev. Thomiste, xxxvi (1931), pp. 422–468; F. J. Catania, 'A Bibliography of St. Albert the Great' in The Modern Schoolman, xxxvii (1959), pp. 11–28, covering the period 1931–58. Gilson, pp. 666–8, for selective bibl. J. A. Weisheipl, O.P., in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 254–8, s.v.

ALBIGENSES. A medieval term for the inhabitants of parts of S. France, and hence applied to the heretics who were strong there in the late 12th and early 13th cents. These were a branch of the *Cathari. Their doctrine in its purest form was strongly dualist, akin to the *Manichaean beliefs, and they rejected the flesh and material creation as evil, affirming two eternal principles of good and evil. There are signs in their writings of both an absolute dualism (of equal and opposite principles) and a 'mitigated' dualism (envisaging the ultimate triumph of God over the devil). It is not clear whether one should think of distinct schools of belief within Catharism, or whether these were different tendencies inside one system of thought. The purpose of redemption was the liberation of the soul from the flesh and the end of the 'mixed' state which had been brought about by the devil. Though retaining the NT and the prophetic parts of the OT, the Albigenses interpreted them as allegories, teaching that Christ was an angel with a phantom body who, consequently, did not suffer or rise again, and whose redemptive work consisted only in teaching man the true (i.e. Albigensian) doctrine. The Catholic Church, by taking the NT allegories literally, had been corrupted and was doing the work of the devil.

Rejecting the sacraments, the doctrines of hell, purgatory, and the resurrection of the body, and believing that all matter was bad, their moral doctrine was of extreme rigorism, condemning marriage, the use of meat, milk, eggs, and other animal produce. As, however, these ideals were too austere for the majority of men and women, they distinguished two classes, the 'perfect', who received the 'consolamentum', i.e. baptism of the Holy Spirit by imposition of hands, and kept the precepts in all their rigour, and the ordinary 'believers' who were allowed to lead normal lives but promised to receive the 'consolamentum' when in danger of death; if they recovered, they were obliged to lead the life of the 'perfect' or die by 'endura'.

The Albigenses were condemned by successive Councils, at Lombers in 1165 and at *Verona in 1184, and at the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215 Catholic doctrine was defined with special reference to their errors. The heresy, however, spread rapidly, since the 'perfect' gained a hold on the people by the austerity of their lives which contrasted with the laxity of many of the Catholic clergy. *Innocent III sought to convert them by several missions, which were all unsuccessful. At last, after the assassination of the Papal legate Peter of Castelnau in 1208, the Pope decided upon a *Crusade against them, the leader of which was Simon de Montfort. The actual Crusade, often conducted with great cruelty, ended in 1218, the year of Montfort's death, the outstanding events being the massacre of Béziers in 1209, and the battle of Muret in 1213, where Simon decisively defeated Peter of Aragon, their leader. From 1219 to the treaty of Paris in 1229 the war was mainly a fight for the incorporation of Languedoc into France. In 1233 *Gregory IX charged the Dominican *Inquisition with the final extirpation of the heresy, of which no trace was left at the end of the 14th century.

The main sources are the records of the prosecutions. C. Douais (ed.), Les Sources de l'histoire de l'Inquisition dans le midi de la France (1881); id., Documents pour servir à l'histoire de l'Inquisition dans le Languedoc (2 vols., 'Société de l'Histoire de France', 1900). Christine Thouzellier, Catharisme et Valdéisme en Languedoc à la Fin du XIIe et au Début du XIIIe Siècle (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris, Série 'Recherches', xxvii; 1966; ed. 2, 1969). Eng. tr. of much primary material, with introd., in W. L. Wakefield–A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxxi; 1969), passim, with extensive bibl. A. Luchaire, Innocent III: ii, La Croisade des Albigeois (1905). A. P. Evans in K. M. Setton (ed.), A History of the Crusades, ii (Princeton, 1962), pp. 277–324. D. Walther, 'A Survey of Recent Research on the Albigensian Cathari' in Church History, xxxiv (1965), pp. 146–77. J. Guiraud in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 1619–94. For their beliefs, see bibl. to Cathari.

ALBRIGHT BRETHREN. See Evangelical Association.

ALCORAN. See Koran.

ALCUIN (c. 735–804), the inspirer of the *Carolingian Renaissance. He was educated in his native *York, at the cathedral school, of which he became master in 766. After meeting *Charlemagne at Parma in 781 he became his adviser in religious and educational matters. As royal tutor he established a palace library, and becoming Abbot of Tours in 796, set up there an important school and library. He used the dialogue method for instruction, and made *Boethius, *Augustine, and the grammarians the chief subjects of study. Among his more famous pupils were *Amalarius of Metz and *Rabanus Maurus. His own works consist of educational manuals, poetry in the style of *Fortunatus (including a history of the church of York), an attack on the *Adoptianist heresy of *Felix of Urgel (who opposed him at the Council of Frankfurt), and letters which give a valuable insight into Carolingian society. He revised the Roman lectionary in Gaul and put together a *Sacramentary which was a combination of *Gregorian and *Gelasian elements. He also composed 18 *votive Masses. The supplement to the Sacramentary sent by Pope *Hadrian I to *Charlemagne, known as the '*Hucusque', which was long attributed to Alcuin, is prob. not his work. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 20 May.

Collected edd. of his works by A. Quercetanus (Paris, 1617) and Frobenius Forster (2 vols., Ratisbon, 1777) repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, c and ci; additions in P. Jaffe (ed. W. Wattenbach–E. L. Duemmler), Monumenta Alcuiniana (Bibliotheca Rerum Germanicarum, vi; Berlin, 1873). There is an early Life written between 823 and 829 printed among his works (J. P. Migne, PL, c, 89–106). E. Dümmler, 'Zur Lebensgeschichte Alchvins' in N.A., xviii (1893), pp. 53–70. K. Werner, Alcuin und sein Jahrhundert (1876); A. Kleinclausz, Alcuin (Annales de l'Université de Lyon, 3e Sér., Lettres, fasc. xv; 1948); G. Ellard, S.J., Master Alcuin. Liturgist (Chicago, 1956). L. Wallach, Alcuin and Charlemagne. Studies in Carolingian History and Literature (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, xxxii; Ithaca, N.Y., 1959). C. J. B. Gaskoin, Alcuin. His Life and Work (1904); E. S. Duckett, Alcuin. Friend of Charlemagne (New York, 1951). M. Roger, L'Enseignement des lettres classiques d'Ausone à Alcuin (1905), pp. 318–402 passim and 440–8; W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (1946), pp. 148–75. B. Fischer, O.S.B., Die Alkuin Bibel (Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, i; Freiburg i.Br., 1957). B. Bischoff, 'Aus Alkuins Erdentagen' in Medievalia et Humanistica, xiv (1962), pp. 31–7; repr. in Mittelalterliche Studien, ii (Stuttgart, 1967), pp. 12–19. H. Barré, C.S.Sp.–J. Deshusses, O.S.B., 'A la recherche du missel d'Alcuin' in E.L., lxxxii (1968), pp. 3–44. P. Moncelle in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 30–40, s.v.; L. Wallach in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 279 f., s.v.

ALCUIN CLUB. An Anglican society founded in 1897 'to encourage and assist in the practical study of ceremonial, and the arrangement of churches, their furniture and ornaments, in accordance with the rubrics of the BCP, strict obedience to which is the guiding principle of the Club'. In recent years its widening sympathies have been recognized by a modification of its expressed aims, which by 1966 were said to be the promotion of 'liturgical studies in general, and in particular a knowledge of the history and use of the Book of Common Prayer'. It has issued several series of publications, most of them dealing with liturgical subjects.

The Alcuin Club's Publications include Tracts (London, 1897 ff.), Collections (ib., 1899 ff.), and Prayer Book Revision Pamphlets (1912 ff.).

ALDHELM, St. (d. 709), first Bp. of *Sherborne. The details of his life are uncertain as they derive from the two late (12th cent.) writers Faricius of Abingdon and *William of Malmesbury. He was a near relation of Ine, King of Wessex. About 675 he became Abbot of Malmesbury and in 705 Bp. of the new diocese of Sherborne, when the old see of Wessex was divided. He took a prominent part in the reforming movement initiated by Abp. *Theodore and the monk Hadrian, and founded some monasteries as well as several churches. According to William of Malmesbury, he built the small church at Bradford-on-Avon dedicated to St. Lawrence; some work of Aldhelm's date survives. Much of his Latin writing, composed in a turgid style and full of crudities, survives to attest his learning. He was held in high repute as a poet, but none of his English poems has been preserved. Feast day, 25 May.

Works, with Vita by Faricius, ed. J. A. Giles (Oxford, 1844), repr. J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxix, 63–314. Modern ed. of Works by R. Ehwald in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xv (1913–19). Riddles ed. with verse tr. by J. H. Pitman (Yale Studies in English, lxvii; 1925). Facsimile of De Laudibus Virginitatis with Latin and Old English Glosses. MS. 1650 of the Royal Library in Brussels, with introd. by G. van Langenhove (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren. Extra Series: Facsimiles, ii; Brussels, 1941). Life by William of Malmesbury, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton, Gesta Pontificum Anglorum, Book v (R.S., 1870), pp. 330–443. G. F. Browne, St. Aldhelm (1903); W. B. Wildman, Life of St. Ealdhelm (1905). Eleanor S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (1948), pp. 3–97. See also A. S. Cook, Sources for the Biography of Aldhelm (Transactions of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, xxviii, 1927).

ALDRICH, HENRY (1647–1710), Dean of *Christ Church. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became Canon of Christ Church in 1682, and in 1689, as an opponent of the High Church party and as a supporter of the Revolution, was appointed to succeed the RC dean, J. Massey. In 1692 he became vice-chancellor. He was remarkable for his versatility. His Artis Logicae Compendium (1691; revised by H. L. *Mansel, 1849) remained a standard textbook until the end of the 19th cent. He was a skilful architect, and Peckwater Quadrangle and other buildings in Oxford are ascribed to him. He also composed several anthems largely based on Italian models, was the author of a manual of heraldry, and learned in chemistry.

W. G. Hiscock, Henry Aldrich of Christ Church 1648–1710 (privately pr., Oxford, 1960). H. L. Thompson, Christ Church (1900), pp. 112–24; E. F. A. Suttle, 'Henry Aldrich, Dean of Christ Church' in Oxoniensia, v (1940), pp. 115–32; W. G. Hiscock, A Christ Church Miscellany (privately pr., Oxford, 1946), pp. 17–37.

ALEANDER, GIROLAMO (1480–1542), humanist scholar. Educated at Venice and Padua, at the suggestion of D. *Erasmus in 1503 he went to seek his fortune in Paris, where he gave lectures on Greek. There he also graduated and in 1513 was chosen Rector of the University. The important part that he took in the history of the Reformation began with his appointment by *Leo X as one of the two Papal envoys commissioned to present M. *Luther with the Bull '*Exsurge Domine', and to negotiate with the Emperor for support against him. In his Ash Wednesday sermon (13 Feb. 1521) at the Diet of *Worms, he vigorously denounced Luther and demanded his condemnation without trial. Unlike many at Rome, Aleander was never in doubt either as to the fact of Luther's popularity in Germany or as to the pressing need for disciplinary reform in the Church. In 1524 he was appointed Abp. of Brindisi and in 1538 a cardinal.

H. Omont, 'Journal Autobiographique du Cardinal Jérôme Aléandre (1480–1530). Notices des Manuscrits de Paris et Udine' in Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, xxxv (1896), pp. 1–116, incl. text. T. Brieger, Aleander und Luther, 1521 (Gotha, 1884). W. Friedensburg (ed.), Legation Aleanders 1538–1539 (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, iii–iv, 1893). P. Kalkoff, Die Depeschen des Nuntius Aleander vom Wormser Reichstage (1886; ed. 2, 1897); A. Hausrath, Aleander und Luther auf dem Reichstage zu Worms (1897). J. Paquier, Jérôme Aléandre de sa naissance à la fin de son séjour à Brindes, 1480–1529 (1900). P. Kalkoff, Aleander gegen Luther (1908); id., 'Zur Charakteristik Aleanders' in Z.K.G., xliii (1924), pp. 209–19. F. Gaeta, Un Nunzio Pontificio a Venezia nel Cinquecento (Civiltà Veneziana, Saggi, ix; 1960). T. Brieger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 328–32. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), pp. 11–13.

ALEMBERT, J. LE R. D'. See D'Alembert, J. Le R.

ALEPH (ℵ). The first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, numerically equivalent to one. Textual critics of the NT use it to denote the *Codex Sinaiticus.

ALESIUS, ALEXANDER (1500–65), alternatively 'Aless' or 'Alane', Scottish *Lutheran divine. A native of Edinburgh, he studied at St. Andrews, where he became a canon. Selected in 1527 to confute Patrick *Hamilton, who had become an adherent of Lutheran doctrines, he was himself won over by Hamilton's arguments and steadfastness at the stake (1528), and shortly after delivered a Latin sermon at St. Andrews attacking the morals of the clergy for which he was imprisoned. In 1532 he escaped to Germany, where in 1533 he made the acquaintance of M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon at *Wittenberg and signed the *Augsburg Confession. In the same year he wrote against a Scottish decree forbidding the laity to read the Bible and in 1534 he was excommunicated at Holyrood. In 1535 he brought a letter to England from Melanchthon to *Henry VIII. On his arrival he was warmly welcomed, esp. by T. *Cranmer, and T. *Cromwell, the new chancellor, made him a divinity lecturer at Cambridge. The opposition to his Protestantism, however, soon caused him to leave Cambridge and for a time he practised in London as a physician, where at Cromwell's request he disputed with J. Stokesly, Bp. of London, on the number of the Sacraments. After the passing of the Act of *Six Articles (1539) he left again for Germany and in 1540 became professor of theology at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder. After various other academic offices and missions in the cause of the Reformation, he revisited England under *Edward VI, when he was employed by Cranmer to translate parts of the First BCP of 1549 into Latin (publd. Leipzig, 1551) for the information of M. *Bucer and *Peter Martyr. He was the author of many exegetical and controversial writings.

J. Thomasius, Orationes (Leipzig, 1683), Oratio XIV, delivered at Leipzig on 20 April 1661, pp. 300–22. A. W. Ward in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 254–9, s.v., with further reff.

ALEXANDER, St. (d. 328), Bp. of *Alexandria from 313. He was actively concerned in putting down the *Melitian and *Arian schisms. At a council of his clergy at Alexandria c. 321 he excommunicated *Arius, one of his presbyters, who shortly before had begun to touch with the leading theologian of the West, Bp. *Hosius of Cordova, and, with the energetic support of his deacon *Athanasius (who was shortly afterwards to succeed him in his see), took a leading part at the Council of *Nicaea. Two of his Epistles survive (*Theodoret, H.E., I. iv; *Socrates, H.E., I. vi). Feast day, in the West, 26 Feb.; in the Greek Church, 29 May; in the *Coptic Church, 22 April.

Other writings ascribed to him, preserved in Syriac or Coptic, include a 'Sermo de Anima et Corpore deque Passione Domini' first ed. from Vat. syr. 368 in Mai, N.B.P., ii, pp. 529–539. Collected ed. of his writings in J. P. Migne, PG, xviii, 523–608. Crit. ed. of Epp. in H. G. Opitz (ed.), Athanasius Werke, Lief. 1–2; 1934–5), pp. 6–11, 19–31. The disputed question of the order of his two Epistles is examined in V. Hugger, 'Wie sind die Briefe Alexanders von Alexandrien chronologisch zu ordnen?' in T.Q., xci (1909), pp. 66–86; G. Loeschcke, 'Zur Chronologie der beiden grossen antiarianischen Schreiben des Alexander von Alexandrien' in Z.K.G., xxxi (1910), pp. 584–6; and elsewhere. G. Bardy, 'Saint Alexandre d'Alexandrie a-t-il connu la Thalie d'Arius?' in Rev. S.R. vi (1926), pp. 527–32. W. Schneemelcher, 'Der Sermo "De Anima et corpore". Ein Werk Alexanders von Alexandrien?' in id. (ed.), Festschrift für Günther Dehn (Neukirchen, 1957), pp. 119–43. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 34–41; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 269.

ALEXANDER II (d. 1073), 'Anselm of Lucca', Pope from 1061. A native of Baggio, nr. *Milan, after studying under *Lanfranc at Bec, he supported the Patarines. In order to dispose of him the Abp. of Milan sent him on a mission to the Emp. Henry III (1039–56). In 1057 he became Bp. of Lucca. Elected Pope in 1061 with the support of Hildebrand (later *Gregory VII), he was enthroned without obtaining the support of the Emp. *Henry IV (1056–1106), who had an anti-Pope (Honorius II) elected. Although the schism continued until Honorius' death (1072), Alexander was generally recognized, except in Parma, after the Synod of Mantua of 1064. As Pope he tried to realize the ideals of the reforming party. He dispatched legates to Lombardy, France, Spain, and England and held four synods at Rome. He renewed the decrees against simony and enforcing clerical celibacy, adding a prohibition against attendance at the Mass of an incontinent priest, laid down regulations for the freedom of episcopal elections, forbade lay investiture and legislated on marriage. He took strong action to enforce these measures, summoning to Rome the Abps. of Mainz and Cologne and the Bp. of Bamberg, and deposing the Abp. of Milan for simony. He strengthened the influence of the Papacy by insisting on personal attendance at Rome before he would confer the *pallium, and he persuaded Philip I of France to accord the same significance to Papal decrees as to canons. His blessing was asked and given to William of Normandy's invasion of England (1066). The last important act of his pontificate was his excommunication of the advisers of the Emp. Henry IV. He is not to be confounded with (St.) *Anselm of Lucca (c. 1036–1088, q.v.).

146 genuine and six doubtful letters or bulls printed in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlvi, 1279–1430. O. Delarc, Saint Grégoire VII et la réforme de l'Église au XIe siècle, ii (1889), pp. 161–526. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, i (S.S.L., fasc. vi, 1924), pp. 341–84; Mann, vi (1925), pp. 261–369; A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1944), pp. 31–54. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 709–11, s.v. 'Alexandre II'; V. Ermoni in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 206–8, s.v. 'Alexandre II'; P. Paschini in E.C., i (1948), cols. 788–90, s.v. 'Alessandro II', each with bibl.

ALEXANDER III (d. 1181), Pope. Orlando ('Roland') Bandinelli was at first a Professor at *Bologna, where he achieved considerable reputation as a canonist. He exercised a strong influence on *Hadrian IV, whom he succeeded in 1159. An *antipope, Victor IV, was immediately set up and supported by the Emp. *Frederick I (Barbarossa). The schism lasted for 17 years and was ended only by the unconditional surrender of the Emperor at Venice in 1177. During the schism, Alexander lived mostly in France, where he was brought into close contact with Henry II of England in the affair of *Becket. The Pope as a subtle diplomatist was embarrassed by the impetuous Archbishop, but showed himself very firm in imposing penance upon Henry for Becket's murder. In 1179 he assembled and presided over the Third *Lateran Council, one of the most important measures of which was to vest the exclusive right of electing a Pope in a two-thirds majority of the cardinals. As a scholar, Alexander's reputation rests upon his commentary on the '*Decretum' of *Gratian and the 'Sententiae Rolandi', the latter a theological work strongly under the influence of *Abelard. He strongly encouraged the scholastic revival of the 12th cent. The city of Alessandria, founded in the plain of Lombardy at this time, was named after him in gratitude for his support of the liberties of the Lombard Communes against Barbarossa.

Much of his Correspondence in J. P. Migne, PL, cc; further letters and information on his part in the Becket controversy in J. C. Robertson–J. B. Sheppard (edd.), Materials for the History of Thomas Becket, v–vii (R.S., 1881–5); see also Jaffé–Wattenbach, ii, pp. 145–418. W. Holtzmann, 'Die Register Papst Alexander III. in den Händen der Kanonisten' in Quellen und Forschungen aus Italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xxx (1940), pp. 13–87. The chief authority up to 1178 is the life by Card. Boson, his favourite Cardinal, in L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 397–446; further life by G. F. Loredano (Venice, 1637; often repr.). H. Reuter, Geschichte Alexanders des Dritten und der Kirche seiner Zeit (3 vols., 1845); H. Kerner, Papst Alexander III (1874); W. Ohnsorge, Die Legaten Alexander III im ersten Jahrzehnt seines Pontifikats, 1159–1169 (Historische Studien, Hft. clxxv; 1928). U. Stutz, Papst Alexander III gegen die Freiung Langobardischer Eigenkirchen in Abh. (Berl.), 1936, No. 6. M. Pacaut, Alexandre III. Étude sur la Conception du Pouvoir Pontifical dans sa Pensée et dans son Œuvre (1956). Mann, x (1925), pp. 1–238, with full reff. E. Portalié, S.J., and H. Moureau in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 711–21, s.v.; V. Ermoni (Lazarite) in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 208–14; F. Liuzzi in E.C., i (1948), cols. 790–2, s.v. 'Alessandro III'.

ALEXANDER V (c. 1339–1410), Pope. Peter of Candia (Crete), also 'Peter Philarges', having become a *Franciscan, studied at Oxford and later was a Master of Theology at Paris (1381), where he lectured on the *Sentences. His academic career was brought to an end by preferment. He became

Bp. successively of Piacenza (1386), Vicenza (1387), Novara (1389), Abp. of Milan (1402); and in 1409 at the Council of *Pisa he was unanimously elected to fill the Papal chair, presumed vacant, despite the two existing claimants. His strong character and extensive learning aroused great hopes; but he died after ten months. RC theologians still dispute whether he can claim a place in the true Papal succession. His importance in medieval thought has recently been increasingly recognized. His surviving 'Commentary on the Sentences' shows marked *nominalistic leanings.

M. Renières, Ἱστορικαὶ μελέται. Ὁ Ἕλλην πάπας Ἀλέξανδρος ε' (Athens, 1881). F. *Ehrle, S.J., Der Sentenzenkommentar Peters von Candia des Pisaner Papstes Alexanders V (Franziskanische Studien, Beiheft ix; 1925). Pastor, i (1891), p. 190 f. L. Salembier in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 772–4; A. Clerval in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 216–18; P. Paschini in E.C., i (1948), col. 794 f., s.v. 'Alessandro V'.

ALEXANDER VI (1431–1503), Pope from 1492. Rodrigo Borgia, a Spaniard by birth and nephew of Pope *Callistus III (1455–8), who created him a Cardinal in 1456, after studying at *Bologna, was appointed Chancellor of the Roman Church in 1457. He exercised considerable influence under Paul II (1464–71), and was largely responsible for the election of *Sixtus IV (1471). His own election having been secured largely through bribery, the course of his pontificate was determined almost solely by political and family considerations, esp. his favouritism of his son, Caesar. Among the most notable acts of his pontificate were the series dividing the New World between *Spain and *Portugal (1493–4), his prosecution and execution of G. *Savonarola in 1498, the *Jubilee which he organized in 1500, and the crusade against the Moors (1499–1500). A man of immoral life, he was an astute politician and generous patron of artists, esp. D. Bramante, G. and A. Sangallo and 'Pinturicchio'. Under him the Leonine city was largely replanned and the castle of Sant' Angelo rebuilt.

P. de Roo (ed.), Materials for a History of Pope Alexander VI, his Relatives and his Times (5 vols., Brussels, 1924). Eng. tr. of the account of his reign from the diary of his Master of Ceremonies, John Burchard (based on ed. of Diary by E. Celani, Città di Castello, 1906), by G. Parker, At the Court of the Borgia (Folio Society, 1963). V. Nemec, Papst Alexander VI (1879); A. Leonetti, Papa Alessandro VI (3 vols., with documents, 1880); L'Abbé Clément de Vebron, Les Borgia, Histoire du Pape Alexandre VI, de César et de Lucrèce Borgia (1882); J. Schnitzer, Der Tod Alexanders VI. Eine quellenkritische Untersuchung (1929); O. Ferrara, El Papa Borgia (1943; Eng. tr. 1942). L. Weckman, Las Bulas Alejandrinas de 1493 y la Teoría Política del Papado Medieval (Mexico, 1949); M. Batllori, S.J., Alejandro VI y la Casa Real de Aragón 1492–1495 (Madrid, 1958). H. Vander Linden, 'Alexander VI and the Demarcation of the Maritime and Colonial Domains of Spain and Portugal, 1493–1494' in American Historical Review, xxii (1917), pp. 1–20. Pastor, v (1898), pp. 375–523, and vi (1898), pp. 3–181. J. F. Loughlin in C.E., i (1907), pp. 289–94; J. Paquier in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 724–7; P. Richard in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 218–29, all s.v.; G. M. Pou y Marti in E.C., i (1948), cols. 795–801, s.v. 'Alessandro VI'.

ALEXANDER VII (1599–1667), Pope from 1655. Fabio Chigi was a native of Siena, where he studied philosophy, law, and theology. In 1626 he entered upon an ecclesiastical career at Rome. After being *Inquisitor of Malta, he became Papal Nuntius at *Cologne in 1639. As such he followed the negotiations of the Peace of *Westphalia and protested against several of its clauses. After his return to Rome (1651), he was created cardinal in 1652 and became Papal secretary of state. During the first year of his pontificate he showed himself an enemy of nepotism, but in 1656 he gave way to the pressure of his advisers, who feared a weakening of the Papal position through the absence of his family, and called his brother and nephews to Rome. As a theologian he was of strongly anti-Jansenist views, and, to make Jansenist subterfuges impossible, condemned in 1656 the five propositions drawn from Augustinus in the sense in which C. *Jansenius had meant them. In this attitude he was supported by Louis XIV, though political troubles arose between the Pope and the King, owing to a dispute between the Papal entourage and the French ambassador. Louis thereupon seized *Avignon and Venaissin, and threatened to invade the States of the Church, and Alexander had to sign the humiliating peace of Pisa in 1664. Following the controversy on *Probabilism, he condemned, in 1665 and 1666, 45 *Laxist propositions, though not the Probabilist system. He was a friend of the *Jesuits, esp. of Cardinal Sforza Pallavicini, the historian of the Council of *Trent, and he procured the readmission of the order to the republic of *Venice. He also did much for the embellishment and modernization of Rome.

V. Borg, Fabio Chigi, Apostolic Delegate in Malta (1634–1639). An Edition of his Official Correspondence (S.T., ccxlix; 1967), with introd. and bibl. S. Pallavicini, S.J., Della vita di Alessandro VII (only to 1659; 2 vols., 1839–40). C. Gérin, 'L'Ambassade de Créquy à Rome et le traité de Pise, 1662–1664' in R.Q.H., xxviii (1880), pp. 79–151. Pastor, xxxi (1940), pp. 1–313. H. Hemmer–E. Deshayes in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 727–47, s.v.; P. Richard in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 229–44, s.v.; C. Incisa della Rocchetta in E.C., i (1948), cols. 801–3, s.v. 'Alessandro VII'; each with bibl.

ALEXANDER VIII (1610–91), Pope from 1689. Pietro Ottoboni, the descendant of a noble Venetian family, studied at Padua, where he became a doctor of canon and civil law in 1627. Having been an auditor of the *Rota for 14 years, he was created cardinal by *Innocent X in 1652, and subsequently became Bp. of Brescia. After his election to the Papacy in 1689, he effected a reconciliation with Louis XIV, who in 1690 gave back *Avignon and Venaissin, which he had taken from *Alexander VII. His most important doctrinal decisions were the condemnations of the Four *Gallican Propositions of 1682 and of 31 propositions of C. *Jansenius, both in 1690. In the same year he also condemned the doctrine of *Philosophical Sin. Despite the condemnation of Gallicanism his relations with France remained satisfactory. During his short pontificate he helped his native city of *Venice against the Turks, and brought about several social improvements in the States of the Church by a diminution of taxes and an increase of cheap food imports. He also enriched the *Vatican Library by the purchase of the valuable MSS. ('Reginenses') of Queen *Christina of Sweden.

S. Freiherr von Bischoffshausen, Papst Alexander VIII und der Wiener Hof, 1689–1691 (1900); C. Gérin, 'Le Pape Alexandre VIII et Louis XIV d'après des documents inédits' in R.Q.H., xxii (1877), pp. 135–210; E. Michaud, La Politique de compromis avec Rome en 1689. Le Pape Alexandre VIII et le Duc de Chaulines d'après les correspondances diplomatiques inédites du Ministère des Affaires étrangères de France (1888). M. Dubruel, 'Le Pape Alexandre VIII et les affaires de France' in R.H.E., xv (1914), pp. 282–302 and 495–514. Pastor, xxxii (1940), pp. 525–60. H. Hemmer and X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., i (1905), cols. 747–63, s.v.; P. Richard in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 244–51, s.v.; P. Dalla Torre in E.C., i (1948), col. 803–5, s.v. 'Alessandro VIII'; each with bibl.

ALEXANDER OF HALES (c. 1186–1245), the 'Doctor Irrefragabilis'. Born at Halesowen, West Midlands, he studied arts and theology at *Paris, and became a doctor c. 1220–21. It was he who took the fateful step of using the Sentences of *Peter Lombard, instead of the Bible, as the basic text for his lectures on theology. His glosses on the Sentences have survived in more than one redaction, as well as collections of quaestiones. After the dispersion of Paris University in 1229 he was one of its representatives to Pope *Gregory IX. In 1231–2 he was in England and was made Archdeacon of *Coventry, but he soon returned to his chair in Paris. In 1236 he joined the *Franciscan Order; he was able to keep his chair, which was henceforth filled by a Franciscan. He is regarded as the founder of the Franciscan school of theology, but the 'Summa theologica' which goes under his name was only begun by him and was continued by William of Melitona and others. He also had some part in the composition of an 'Expositio in Regulam S. Francisci' (1242).

Glossa in quatuor libros Sententiarum ed. by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (Bibliotheca Francescana Scholastica Medii Aevi, xii–xv; 1951–7), with prolegomena in vol. i, pp. 5*–130*. Quaestiones Disputatae 'Antequam Esset Frater' ed. idd. (ib., xix–xxi; 1960). The Summa Theologica, which was first publd. at Venice in 1475, under the name of Thomas of Hales, also ed. idd. (4 vols., Quaracchi, 1924–48), with prolegomena by V. Doucet, O.F.M., in vol. iv, pp. xiii–cclxx. Elisabeth Gössmann, Metaphysik und Heilsgeschichte. Eine theologische Untersuchung der Summa Halensis (Mitteilungen des Grabmann-Instituts der Universität München, Sonderband, 1964). E. Bettoni, Il Problema della Conoscibilità di Dio nella Scuola Francescana (II Pensiero medioevale, Prima Serie, i; Padua, 1950), pp. 1–106. I. Herscher, O.F.M., 'A Bibliography of Alexander of Hales' in Franciscan Studies, xxvi (1945), pp. 435–54. A. Emmen in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 296 f., s.v.

ALEXANDER OF LYCOPOLIS (3rd cent.), writer against *Manichaeism. He was probably a pagan who became a Manichaean and later a Christian, though some modern scholars, notably L. S. Le N. *Tillemont and, more recently, A. Brinkmann, contend that he never embraced Christianity. Acc. to *Photius (Contra Manichaeos, i. 11) he became a bishop. His fame rests on his treatise against the Manichaeans, Πρὸς τὰς Μανιχαίου δόξας, in which he praises the simplicity and efficacy of the Christian philosophy and contrasts it with the illogical and contradictory doctrines of the Manichaeans. Though his style and thought are often obscure, the work is a primary source for the study of Manichaeism.

The treatise, first publd. by F. *Combefis in 1672, is reprinted in J. P. Migne, PG, xviii, 411–48. A. Brinkmann, Alexandri Lycopolitani contra Manichaei opiniones disputatio (1895). L. Troje, 'Zum Begriff ἄτακτος κίνησις bei Platon und Mani' in Museum Helveticum, v (1948), pp. 96–115. M. *Dibelius in R.A.C., i (1950), col. 270 f., s.v.

ALEXANDER NATALIS. See Natalis, Alexander.

ALEXANDER, MICHAEL SOLOMON (1799–1845), first Anglican bishop in *Jerusalem. Born in Schönlanke in Posen, he was trained in strictly orthodox *Judaism and became a teacher of German and the *Talmud. He came to England in 1820 and here was brought into personal contact with Christianity, was suspended from his duties as rabbi, and baptized in 1825. Upon his ordination in 1827 he joined the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews and served as a missionary in Danzig from 1827 to 1830. From 1830 to 1841 he had a mission in London, and from 1832 was also professor of Hebrew at *King's College. Here he took an active part in revising the Hebrew NT and also translated the BCP into Hebrew. On the establishment of the Anglican bishopric at Jerusalem, he was selected and consecrated as first bishop of the see (1841), where his short term of service was successful alike among Arabs and Jews. See also Jerusalem, Anglican Bishopric in.

Autobiogr. account of his conversion appended to J. Hatchard, The Predictions and Promises of God Respecting Israel (sermon, 1825), pp. 37–40. J. F. A. De la Roi, Michael Solomon Alexander, der erste evangelische Bischof in Jerusalem (1897).

ALEXANDRIA. In size and importance, Alexandria in Egypt was the second city of the Roman Empire. It was a centre not only of Hellenism but also of Semitism, with the largest community of Jews in any single city of the ancient world (see *Philo, *Septuagint); and it has therefore sometimes been found surprising that St. *Paul never preached there. The foundation of the Church in Alexandria is traditionally ascribed to St. *Mark. It soon won fame as a centre of Christian thought, esp. in the late 2nd and early 3rd cents. through its celebrated *Catechetical School under *Clement and *Origen, and during the 4th–5th cent. through its bishops *Athanasius and *Cyril. The Council of *Nicaea (325) assigned to Alexandria a place of honour second only to Rome, and superior to *Antioch: but its importance was diminished by the rise of *Constantinople, which was granted precedence over Alexandria by the Councils of Constantinople (381) and *Chalcedon (451). The great majority of Christians in Egypt supported the *Monophysite schism, and by the time Egypt passed under the Persians (616) and then under the Arabs (642), the Greek Patriarchate of Alexandria had lost most of its influence. At the division between E. and W., Alexandria remained on the side of Constantinople. Besides the Greek Patriarch, the head of the *Coptic Church also has the title 'Patriarch of Alexandria'; and since the 13th cent. there has been a Latin Patriarch of Alexandria, but he is purely titular.

M. *Lequien, Oriens Christianus, ii (Paris, 1740), cols. 329–640. J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church. The Patriarchate of Alexandria (2 vols., 1847). C. A. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἀλεξανδρείας (62–1934) (Alexandria, 1935). T. Orlandi, Storia della Chiesa di Alessandria (Coptic texts with Italian tr. and commentary: Milan, 1968 ff.). J. Faivre in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 289–369, s.v. 'Alexandrie'. W. Schubart–A. Calderini in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 271–83, s.v.

ALEXANDRIAN THEOLOGY. The theology of the early Church at Alexandria came markedly under the influence of that Platonic tradition of philosophy which, beginning in the Graeco-Jewish period, was taken into the Christian system of thought by the *Apologists, and later by *Clement of Alexandria, *Origen, and the *Catechetical School. The effect of Origen upon later Alexandrian theologians was overmastering. The Platonic sense of the reality of the spiritual world and the ready tolerance of *dualism are seen in the stress laid by Alexandrian writers upon the transcendence of God, upon the essential Godhead of all Three Persons, and upon the Divine Nature in the Incarnate Christ. Thus it was that the opposition to characteristically *Antiochene heresies, such as the overemphasis on the humanity of Christ which produced *Adoptianism and *Nestorianism, came chiefly from Alexandrians such as St. *Athanasius and St. *Cyril.

The Alexandrians, however, in their anxiety to maintain that the distinction between the Persons of the Trinity was more than purely functional, tended considerably towards tritheism, into which Origen himself is generally held to have fallen. Their emphasis upon the separateness of the Three Persons produced a type of theology called by F. *Loofs 'Pluralist-Trinitarian'. In their account of the Person of Christ they stressed His divinity, and even the orthodox among them (e.g. St. Cyril) did not hesitate to say of the Incarnate Christ that 'God suffered', while the less orthodox, beginning with *Apollinarius, frankly refused to believe in any true humanity in Christ, holding that His highest human faculties were simply replaced by the Divine Nature, so that He could neither be tempted nor suffer. *Monophysitism must be considered an extreme form of the Alexandrian school of thought, which, by verbal adherence to Cyril's language, taught that there was only one nature in Christ, a view which practically nullified His humanity; while *Monothelitism, in the 7th cent., carried on the same tradition in different terms, by asserting the unity of Christ's Divine and Human Will.

In their exegesis of Scripture the Alexandrians were strongly drawn to mystical and allegorical exposition, in contrast with the literal and historical method of Antioch.

See also Codex Alexandrinus.

C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (*Bampton Lectures, 1886; ed. F. E. *Brightman, 1913); R. B. Tollinton, Alexandrine Teaching on the Universe (1932); E. Molland, The Conception of the Gospel in the Alexandrian Theology (Oslo, 1938); R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (1940). P. Brezzi, La Gnosi cristiana di Alessandria e le antiche scuole cristiane [1950]. G. Bardy, 'Aux Origines de l'École d'Alexandrie' in Rech.S.R., xxvii (1937), pp. 65–90; id., 'Pour l'Histoire de l'École d'Alexandrie' in Vivre et Penser [wartime title of R. Bibl.], ii (1942), pp. 80–109. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 1–118, esp. pp. 2–4, with bibl. W. R. *Inge in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 308–19, s.v. See also bibl.to Antiochene Theology and Catechetical School of Alexandria.

ALFORD, HENRY (1810–71), Dean of *Canterbury. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1829, and was elected fellow in 1834. In 1835 he became vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire. From 1853 to 1857 he ministered to a large congregation at Quebec Chapel, Marylebone, and then became Dean of Canterbury, where he remained till his death. His most important work was an edition of the Greek NT (1849–61), in which he united freshness of treatment with wide learning. He also translated the 'Odyssey', wrote several well-known hymns (among them, 'Come, ye thankful people, come' and 'Ten thousand times ten thousand'), edited the writings of J. *Donne (1839), published some original verse, and was the first editor of the Contemporary Review.

Poetical Works, 2 vols., 1845. Life, Journal and Letters, ed. by Fanny Alford, his widow (1873). W. H. Fremantle in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 282–4, s.v.

ALFRED THE GREAT (849–99), King of Wessex from 871. He was born at Wantage. Apart from his defeat of the Danes, which contributed materially to the maintenance of Christianity in England, Alfred is chiefly memorable in Church History for the care with which he promoted ecclesiastical reform and the revival of learning. Himself a man of considerable education, he gathered round him a band of scholars from England, Wales, and the Continent, and with their help translated a number of the most popular Latin works of the time, among them the 'Dialogues' and 'Pastoral Rule' of *Gregory the Great, the 'Consolations' of *Boethius, the 'History' of *Orosius, and the 'Soliloquies' of St. *Augustine. He founded monastic communities at Shaftesbury and Athelney, made plans for one at *Winchester, and seems to have contemplated considerable subdivision of dioceses. This latter scheme, however, did not materialize until ten years after his death, when one of his disciples, Abp. Plegmund, consecrated bishops for *Winchester, Ramsbury, *Sherborne, *Wells, *Crediton, *Dorchester, and also for the South Saxons. The time was not ripe for his proposals for monastic reform and they met with little success, but his literary works had a considerable influence. He has been remembered for a thousand years as one who did his utmost for the education of his clergy and nobles, and, in his own life, the pattern of a Christian king. Feast day, 26 Oct.

Mod. Eng. tr. as The Whole Works of King Alfred the Great, with preliminary essays, ed. J. A. Giles (3 vols. bound in 2, London, 1858), incl. orig. text of poems; crit. edd. of Alfred's versions of Gregory's Pastoral Rule by H. Sweet (E.E.T.S., xlv and l, 1871–2), of Orosius part i by id. (ib., lxxix, 1883), of Boethius's De Consolatione by W. J. Sedgefield (Oxford, 1899), of the Proverbs by E. Borgström (Lund, 1908), and of the Soliloquies of St. Augustine by W. Endter (Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Prosa, xi, Hamburg, 1922). Further edd. and works of criticism in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 85–8. The primary sources for his life are the contemporary biography by Asser (crit. ed. by W. H. Stevenson, Oxford, 1904; new impression, with article on recent work by Dorothy Whitelock, 1959) and the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle', sub annis 853–901. C. Plummer, The Life and Times of Alfred the Great (Ford Lectures for 1901, 1902), with bibl. reff. Other lives by R. Pauli (Berlin, 1851; Eng. tr., 1852) and B. A. Lees (New York and London, 1919). Janet L. Nelson, 'The Problem of King Alfred's Royal Anointing' in J.E.H., xviii (1967), pp. 145–63. On his reign, R. H. Hodgkin, A History of the Anglo-Saxons, ii (1935), pp. 537–688; F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943), pp. 246–73; ed. 3 (1971), pp. 248–76.

ALITURGICAL DAYS. Days on which the Eucharist may not be celebrated. In the Roman rite there are now only two such days, viz. *Good Friday and *Holy Saturday; in the Eastern Church there are many more.

ALL SAINTS' DAY. The feast, kept in the W. on 1 Nov., to celebrate all the Christian saints, known and unknown. Reference to such a feast occurs in St. *Ephrem Syrus (d. 373), while in St. *Chrysostom (d. 407) it is assigned to a definite day, viz. the first Sunday after *Pentecost, that still observed in the E. This same day was apparently associated with the saints also at *Rome in the 6th cent.; but in the W. the feast did not become firmly established until the consecration of the Pantheon at Rome (dedicatio S. Mariae ad martyres) to Christian usage by Boniface IV on 13 May 609 or 610. From then on an annual commemoration of 'All Saints' was made on 13 May. Its observance on 1 Nov. appears to date from the time of Gregory III (d. 741), who dedicated on that day a chapel in the basilica of St. Peter to 'All the Saints'. Gregory IV (d. 844) ordered its universal observance and Sixtus IV (d. 1484) added the Octave (suppressed 1955). In the calendar in the ASB, the Octave Day (8 Nov.) is assigned to the 'Saints and Martyrs of England'.

Serm. of St. *Chrysostom, Laudatio Sanctorum Omnium (J. P. Migne, PG, I, 705–12). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), p. 606 f. G. Löw in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 86–90, s.v. 'Ognissanti'; B. Luykx, O. Praem., in L.W., i (1962), cols. 99–102, s.v. 'Allerheiligen', with further bibl.

ALL SOULS' DAY. The commemoration of the souls of the faithful departed on 2 Nov., the day following *All Saints' Day. (Until 1970, when 2 Nov. was a Sunday, All Souls' Day was 3 Nov.) Its observance became universal through the influence of *Odilo of Cluny, who in 998 commanded its annual celebration in the *Benedictine houses of his congregation. Priests of the Latin rite are permitted to celebrate three Masses on All Souls' Day (a privilege confined to this day and *Christmas). The Mass contains the famous sequence, '*Dies Irae' (since 1969 no longer obligatory).

The 'Statutum Odilonis pro Defunctis' is printed in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlii, 1037 f. The commemoration is first met with at Rome in the 14th cent. (*Ordo Romanus XIV, (Mabillon), no. 101). For the Apostolic Constitution of *Benedict XV (10 Aug. 1915) permitting the three Masses on the day, see A.A.S., vii (1915), pp. 401–4. C. A. Kneller, S.J., 'Geschichte über die drei Messen am Allerseelentag' in Z.K.T., xlii (1918), pp. 74–113.

ALLAH. An Arabic word used by all Moslems as the name of God. The word is a combination of 'al (the definite article) and ilah ('god'), and was probably first used among the Arabs when passing from polytheism to monolatry to indicate that their own God was the supreme God. The Moslem use of the word may be interpreted to mean 'The Only God'. In Moslem belief, God has 99 further names, each of which is represented by a bead on their rosary, the hundredth and largest of them representing the name Allah itself.

ALLATIUS, LEO (1587 or 1588–1669), Greek RC theologian and historian. He was a native of Chios. In 1622 he supervised the transference of the valuable collection of Palatinate MSS. from Heidelberg to the Vatican Library, of which he became custodian in 1661. A zealous advocate of reunion between the Orthodox and RC Churches, he wrote several works seeking to establish the unity in essential doctrine between them, the chief being his De ecclesiae occidentalis atque orientalis perpetua consensione libri III (Cologne, 1648). He also wrote extensively on *patristics.

List of his writings in H. Hurter, S.J., Nomenclator Literarius, iv (ed. 3, 1910), cols. 122–30. MS. Vita by S. Gradi, partly printed in A. *Mai, N.P.B., VI (2; 1853), pp. v–xxviii. C. Mazzi, 'Leone Allacci e la Palatina di Heidelberg' in Propugnatore (Bologna), xxiv (1891: 1), pp. 261–307; xxv (1892: 1), pp. 130–206, 315–88; xxv (1892: 2), pp. 370–400. C. Jacono, Bibliografia di Leone Allacci (1588–1669) (Quaderni dell'Istituto di Filologia Greca della Università di Palermo, ii; 1962). P. R. Argenti, The Religious Minorities of Chios (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 233–69. L. Petit, A.A., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 830–3; L. Bréhier in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 479–84, both s.v.

ALLEGIANCE, Oath of. The oath to the Sovereign taken by the clergy of the C of E under an Act of 1868 (31 & 32 Vic. cap. 72) at their ordination to the diaconate and to the priesthood, and on admission to a benefice. It replaces the acknowledgement of the Sovereign as Supreme Governor in things or causes, spiritual or temporal, which had been required by Canon 36 of 1604 until the canon was amended in 1865. It is now a statutory obligation, imposed by the civil power alone, and not by canon.

ALLEGORY. Acc. to St. *Augustine, a mode of speech in which one thing is understood by another (De Trin, xv. ix. 15). It differs from the *parable in its more systematic presentation of the different features of the idea it illustrates as well as in its contents, which are concerned with the exposition of theoretical truths rather than with practical exhortation. Though not so frequent as parables, there are instances of allegories in the Bible, e.g. that of the vine in Is. 5. 1–6 and Ps. 80. 8–16.

The allegorical interpretation of Scripture is a particular method of exegesis which, acc. to *Philo, was practised in the Palestinian Rabbinical schools. It was frequently applied to the OT by NT writers, the term itself being used by St. Paul in Gal. 4. 24, 'which things contain an allegory' (ἅτινά ἐστιν ἀλληγορούμενα). Acc. to St. Augustine (loc. cit.), the allegories which the NT writers find in the OT are not mere rhetorical figures but historical facts ('non in verbis sed in facto'), God, as the author of Scripture, having foreordained certain facts recorded in the Bible in such a manner as to be, apart from historical reality, also a prophetic announcement of future events. Thus St. Paul sees the relations between the Church and the Synagogue prefigured in the story of Isaac and Ishmael, and Christ in Adam or in the Paschal Lamb. The early Fathers continued to use this method of interpretation which is found, e.g., in the 'Ep. of *Barnabas', St. *Clement of Rome, St. *Irenaeus, and *Tertullian. It was developed and carried to excess by the School of *Alexandria, which would see an allegorical meaning in almost every passage of the Bible and sometimes deny a literal sense altogether. *Clement of Alexandria distinguished a literal, mystical, moral, and prophetical interpretation, and *Origen the literal, moral, and spiritual sense, corresponding to the human body, soul, and spirit. The School of *Antioch, on the other hand, though not completely rejecting the allegorical interpretation, used it very sparingly, preferring the historical sense, e.g. St. John *Chrysostom. The Latin Fathers, esp. St. *Ambrose and St. *Augustine, hold an intermediate position, admitting a literal as well as an allegorical significance for a great number of OT narratives. *Cassian (Collat., xiv. 8), following Clement of Alexandria, established the division which remained classical throughout the Middle Ages, in distinguishing four senses, viz. the literal, the allegorical strictly so called, applying the passage to Christ and the Church Militant, the tropological or moral, understanding it of the soul and its virtues, and the anagogical, applying it to the heavenly realities. This method was taken up by the Schoolmen and is still to some extent used in the RC Church.

The 16th cent. Reformers, M. *Luther, P. *Melanchthon, J. *Calvin, and others, explicitly repudiated all allegorical interpretation, acc. to their guiding principle 'Scriptura scripturae interpres'. This has remained the usual attitude of Protestant exegetes to the present day.

H. de Lubac, S.J., Histoire et Esprit. L'Intelligence de l'Écriture d'après Origène (Théologie, xvi; 1950). J. Pépin, Mythe et allégorie. Les origines grecques et les contestations judeo-chrétiennes (1958). R. P. C. Hanson, Allegory and Event. A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture (1959), pp. 9–129 ('The Sources o Christian Allegory'). D. E. Nineham (ed.), The Church's Use of the Bible, Past and Present (1963), esp. chapters by H. Chadwick, J. N. D. Kelly and Beryl Smalley. J. Geffcken in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 327–31.

ALLELUIA (Heb. הַלְלוּיָהּ, 'Praise ye Yah'), liturgical expression of praise. It occurs in a number of Psalms, esp. in Pss. 111–17, where its position indicated that it was chanted as a kind of *antiphon by the choir of the *Levites. It is found elsewhere in the Bible only in Tobit (13. 18) and the Book of Rev. (19. 1, 3, 4, 6), in both places as the chant of the saints in heaven. It was taken over into the liturgy of the Church at an early date. In the W. it became the characteristic expression of joy and was therefore sung esp. in *Paschaltide, as is witnessed by St. *Augustine (Serm., 252, De diebus paschalibus, xxiii. 9), but whether, as Sozomen (Hist. Eccl., vii. 19) affirms, it was restricted at *Rome to *Easter Day or not, remains doubtful. The Roman usage was regulated by St. *Gregory the Great, who ordered the Alleluia to be said at Mass and the Office throughout the year except in the penitential time between *Septuagesima and Easter. It was later omitted also in funeral offices. In the Greek Church, on the other hand, it remained a part of all offices, and its omission at certain times was made one of the grievances of the E. Church against the W. in the struggle which led to the schism of the 11th cent.

Acc. to the Roman rite the Alleluia is now sung at all Masses except in Lent; formerly it was omitted on some other penitential occasions as well. It is chanted after the Second Lesson and normally consists of a two-fold Alleluia, a verse from Scripture, and another Alleluia. In Paschaltide Alleluias are inserted in many places both in the Mass and in the Divine Office. The name 'Alleluia Saturday' is sometimes applied to *Holy Saturday because, to mark the return of the Alleluia after its absence since the beginning of Lent, the celebrant solemnly intones it three times, each time at a higher pitch. In the E. a hymn called the 'Cherubic Hymn' or '*Cherubicon', which contains the Alleluias, is now sung at the *Great Entrance; and the Alleluia is also sung before the Gospel. In the *Ambrosian Rite the form 'Hallelujah' is used.

On the orig. use of the word, cf. F. H. Woods in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 287. T. Nöldeke, 'Halleluya' in Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxxiii (1918), pp. 375–80. Jungmann, M.S. (ed. 1958), i, pp. 540–57; Eng. tr., i, 1950, pp. 422–36, with refs. E. Wellesz, Eastern Elements in Western Chant. Studies in the Early History of Ecclesiastical Music (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae, Subsidia, ii; 1947), esp. pp. 175–85. Id., 'Gregory the Great's Letter on the Alleluia' in Annales Musicologiques, ii (1954), pp. 7–26. W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958], pp. 375–92. A. G. Martimort, 'Origine et signification de l'Alleluia de la Messe Romaine' in R. Granfield–J. A. Jungmann (edd.), Kyriakon. Festschrift Johannes Quasten, ii (1970), pp. 811–34. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1970), cols. 1226–46, s.v. 'Alleluia (ii: Acclamation liturgique)'. B. Stäblein in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, i (1949–1951), cols. 331–50, s.v., with bibl.

ALLELUYATIC SEQUENCE. A name popularly given to the hymn 'Cantemus cuncti melodum' ('The strain upraise of joy and praise, Alleluia', Eng. Hymnal, No. 494), on account of its frequent repetition of 'Alleluia'. It was written c. the 9th cent., and used before or at *Septuagesima for the 'farewell to Alleluia', since, acc. to traditional liturgical practice, the word Alleluia, as an expression of joy, was not used between Septuagesima and *Easter. The words are based on Ps. 147.

Crit. ed. of text by C. Blume, S.J.–H. Bannister (edd.), Thesauri Hymnologici Prosarium (A.H.M.A., liii; 1911), pp. 60–2. W. A. Shoults and J. Julian in J. Julian (ed.), Dictionary of Hymnology (ed. 2, 1907), p. 203 f., s.v. 'Cantemus Cuncti Melodum Nunc'.

ALLEN, WILLIAM (1532–94), Cardinal. He was a fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. In 1561 he left England for Louvain, returned in the next year, and was finally forced to leave the country in 1565. From that time he concentrated on the work of training RC mission priests for the conversion of England, believing that the majority of English people were still Catholic at heart, and that Protestantism was only a temporary phase of opinion. He founded colleges for this work at *Douai (1568), Rome (1575–8), and Valladolid (1589). From the press at Douai there issued a stream of RC propaganda, and the *Douai version of the Bible was produced under his inspiration. By supporting Philip II's invasion of England in 1588, however, he incurred the serious hostility of many English RCs. Towards the end of his life, he was created a cardinal in 1587 and nominated Abp. of Malines in 1589. He ended his days at the *English college at Rome.

Modern reprint of his Brief History of the Glorious Martyrdom of Twelve Reverend Priests, Father Edmund Campion and his Companions, by J. H. Pollen, S.J. (1908). The Letters and Memorials of William Cardinal Allen (1532–94), ed. with hist. introd. by T. F. Knox, Cong. Orat. (Records of the English Catholics under the Penal Laws, ii, 1882). 'Some Correspondence of Cardinal Allen, 1579–85, from the Jesuit Archives' contributed by P. Ryan, S.J., to the C.R.S., Miscellanea, vii (C.R.S., ix; 1911), pp. 12–105. Life by Bede Camm, O.S.B. (1908). M. Haile, An Elizabethan Cardinal (1914). A. Bellesheim, Wilhelm Cardinal Allen, (1532–1594) und die englischen Seminare auf dem Festlande (1885). T. H. Chancy, Papist Pamphleteers. The Allen–Persons Party and the Political Thought of the Counter Reformation in England 1572–1615 (Chicago, 1964). T. Cooper in D.N.B., i (1885) pp. 314–22, s.v.

ALLESTREE, RICHARD (1619–81), Anglican divine. He was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, where Richard Busby (afterwards Headmaster of Westminster) was his tutor. For a time he served in the royalist forces and throughout his life remained loyal in support of the Stuart cause. During the Commonwealth he assisted J. *Fell in continuing the C of E service in a private dwelling-house in Oxford. From 1663 to 1679 he was Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford and in 1665 he also became Provost of Eton. He is best remembered as the probable author of 'The *Whole Duty of Man'.

Collected ed. of The Works of the Learned and Pious Author of The Whole Duty of Man (2 parts, Oxford, 1684). Anon. life by J. Fell prefixed to Forty Sermons (1684: no pagination); repr. separately, 1848.

ALLIES, THOMAS WILLIAM (1813–1903), theologian. From 1833 to 1841 he was a fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. In 1842 he became Vicar of Launton, near Bicester. He became closely associated with the leaders of the *Oxford Movement, esp. E. B. *Pusey; but having begun to doubt the Anglican position during travels abroad in 1845 and 1847 (described in his Journal in France [1848]), he joined the RC Church after the *Gorham Judgement. He was a man of wide learning, and in his later life a prominent apologist for Roman Catholicism both by lectures and writings. His books include The Church of England cleared from the Charge of Schism (1846) and The See of St. Peter (1850).

Mary H. Allies (daughter), Thomas William Allies (1907; repr., with additional appendices, 1924). W. B. Owen in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, p. 37 f.

ALMACHIUS, St. See Telemachus, St.

ALMERY. An obsolete form of the word '*Aumbry' (q.v.).

ALMONER. An officer who has the duty of dispensing alms. Very frequently he is in holy orders. The Lord High Almoner of the King of England, who has the disposing of the Sovereign's alms and on *Maundy Thursday, in the absence of the Sovereign, normally distributes the royal 'maundy', is usually a bishop. In France aumonier is used in a more general sense of 'chaplain'.

ALMUCE, alternatively 'Amice' or 'Amess'. An item of ecclesiastical costume, usually a cape lined with fur, worn in certain religious orders. Its use can be traced back to the 12th cent. In more recent times it has been worn esp. by canons in *France, who carry their almuce as a mark of dignity over the left arm. The word 'amice' (Lat. almutia) in this sense is independent in derivation from that of the *amice (q.v.) worn at the Eucharist, though the two have often been confused.

ALOGI. A group of heretics in Asia Minor (c. A.D. 170). They seem to have been strongly opposed to *Montanism and to have ascribed the Gosp. and Rev. of St. John to *Cerinthus, but their exact doctrines are not easy to ascertain. Acc. to *Epiphanius (Haer., 51), they denied the divinity of the Holy Ghost and of the Logos. The word 'Alogi' (ἄλογοι) was coined for them by their opponents, who used it in the double sense of 'unreasonable' and 'disbelievers in the Logos'.

V. Rose, O.P., 'Question johannine. Les Aloges asiatiques et les aloges romains' in R. Bibl., vi (1897), pp. 516–34. A. Bludau, Die ersten Gegner der Johannes-Schriften (Biblische Studien, xxii, Hftt. 1 and 2; 1925). G. Bareille in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 898–901, s.v., with further reff.

ALOYSIUS GONZAGA, St. (1568–91), patron of RC youth. Of noble descent, he was destined for a military career, and from 1577 to 1579 was at Florence as a page at the court of Francesco de' Medici, where he first began to feel a vocation to religion. After joining the suite of Mary of Austria in 1581, he followed her to Spain, but in 1584 he returned to Italy, where, in the face of great opposition, he entered the novitiate of the *Jesuits in 1585. He made his vows in 1587, and died, at the age of 23, a victim to his labours among the plague-stricken of Rome. He was canonized in 1726. Feast day, 21 June.

Opera Omnia, partim Italice, partim Latine (incomplete), ed. A. Heuser (Bibliotheca Mystica et Ascetica, iii, Cologne, etc., 1850). Works listed in Sommervogel, iii (1892), cols. 1575–81, and ix (1900), col. 420. Life by his contemporary and associate, V. Cepari, S.J. (Rome, 1606; Lat. tr., Cologne, 1608; Eng. tr., Paris, 1627); ed., with additional matter, by A. Schroeber S.J. (Einsiedeln, 1891; Eng. tr., 1891). The account in AA.SS., Jun. IV (1707), pp. 847–1167, utilizes the process of beatification. C. C. Martindale, S.J., The Vocation of Aloysius Gonzaga (1927), with bibl. Other lives by E. H. Thompson (London, 1867), M. Meschler, S.J. (Paris, 1891; Eng. tr., 1911), F. Crispolti (Mantua, 1924), and A. Koch, S.J. (Innsbruck, 1927; Eng. tr., 1928).

ALPHA AND OMEGA (A and Ω). The first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, used in the Christian Church to denote God's eternity and infinitude. In the NT they are found in Rev. 1. 8, 21. 6, and also in 22. 13 (of Christ). Their adoption is probably derived from the Heb. use of the word 'truth', אמת, the first and last letters of which are the first and last letters of the Heb. alphabet.

G. Kittel in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 1–3, s.v., with reff. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 1–25, s.v.

ALPHEGE, St. (954–1012), also Aelfheah, Abp. of *Canterbury. A monk of Deerhurst and then Abbot of Bath, he became Bp. of *Winchester in 984 and was translated to Canterbury in 1006. He held the Council of Enham (1009?) at which certain disciplinary canons were passed. He was murdered by the Danes during a drunken feast because he would not ransom himself at the expense of his poor tenants, and was therefore regarded as a martyr. Feast day, 19 Apr.

Life by Osbern, monk of Canterbury (d. c. 1090), in [H. Wharton] Anglia Sacra, ii (1691), pp. 122–42, with Osbern's account of translation of Alphege's relics from London to Canterbury (1023), pp. 143–7. E. A. Freeman, The History of the Norman Conquest, i (1867), pp. 387–9, with note on sources in ed. 3 (1877), pp. 673–8.

ALPHONSUS LIGUORI, St. (1696–1787), founder of the *Redemptorists and moral theologian. The son of a Neapolitan noble, Giuseppe dei Liguori, Alfonso Maria dei Liguori was born at Marianella near Naples. After taking the degree of Doctor of Laws at the age of 16, he practised with marked success at the bar for eight years; but in 1723 the loss, by an oversight, of an important suit in which a Neapolitan noble was suing the Grand Duke of Tuscany for £100,000 convinced him of the transitoriness of worldly glory and he withdrew from his profession. He received the tonsure, joined an association of mission preachers, was ordained priest in 1726, and became a successful evangelist in the country around Naples. In 1729 he took up residence in a missionary college in Naples where he made the close friendship of Tomaso Falcoia (1663–1743), of the congregation of the Pii Operarii, who had taken part in the foundation (1719) of a conservatorium for religious women at Scala, near Amalfi, and was to exercise great influence on him. When in 1730 Falcoia became Bp. of Castellamare, the diocese in which Scala was situated, Alphonsus moved to Scala, in 1731 reorganized the nuns (the first house of 'Redemptoristines'), and then in 1732 founded the 'Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer' or 'Redemptorists' (q.v.) for men in a neighbouring hospice. Originally there were seven postulants under Alphonsus' guidance, who devoted themselves to pastoral work among the poor in the country districts. Falcoia was technically their director until his death (1743), when Alphonsus was formally elected Superior-General; but, owing to internal dissensions, growth was slow. In 1745 Alphonsus wrote the first of his many devotional and spiritual works. In 1749 *Benedict XIV approved the rule and institute for men and in 1750 the corresponding ones for women. In 1762 Alphonsus accepted with much reluctance the see of Sant'Agata dei Goti, in the province of Beneventum (he had declined the Archbishopric of Palermo in 1747). Here, continuing to live an austere life, he was largely engaged in literary and missionary labours. In 1775 he resigned his see on the plea of ill-health and retired to Nocera. But he lived another twelve years, and became involved in much controversy arising from the affairs of his Order. His last years were clouded by severe spiritual trials and darkness.

Alphonsus sought to commend the Gospel to a sceptical age by gentle and direct methods. Spurning the florid oratory of his contemporaries, he preached simply and to the heart and believed that the rigorism of the contemporary confessional (largely under *Jansenist influences) repelled rather than won back the sinful. He set out these ideals in a system of Moral Theology, first outlined in his Annotations to Hermann Busembaum (a much esteemed Jesuit casuist, 1600–68), published at Naples in 1748. This teaching he recast in his celebrated Theologia Moralis (2 vols., 1753 and 1755), of which seven further editions appeared before his death, as well as a number of compendiums, e.g. the Homo Apostolicus (1759). In the debate on how far it is allowable to follow any 'probable' opinion in matters of conduct, Alphonsus, in contradistinction to the Jesuits, developed the system known as *Equiprobabilism (q.v.).

His innumerable devotional writings include (Eng. titles) Visits to the Blessed Sacrament and the Blessed Virgin (1745), The Glories of Mary (1750), Novena of Christmas (1758), Novena of the Heart of Jesus (1758), The Great Means of Prayer (1759), The True Spouse of Jesus Christ (1760), and The Way of Salvation (1767). They became very popular and remained in general use down to the later 19th cent. There is no doubt that they fostered devotion; but their exuberance became a frequent target of criticism, esp. by Protestant writers.

Alphonsus was beatified in 1816, canonized in 1839, and declared a doctor ecclesiae* by *Pius IX in 1871. Feast day, 1 (formerly 2) Aug.

Opere Ascetiche (Rome, 1933 ff., with Introduzione Generale by O. Gregorio, G. Cacciatore, and D. Capione, 1960, incl. recent bibl.). His Letters were edited by P. Kuntz, C.SS.R. (3 vols., Rome, 1887). There are many editions of his Theologia Moralis and his popular devotional works. The primary source is A. M. Tannoia, C.SS.R., Della vita ed istituto del venerabile Alfonso Maria Liguori (3 vols., 1799–1802). This should be corrected in its details by the scholarly Life by K. Dilgskron, C.SS.R. (Germ.; Regensburg and New York, 1887). More recent Life by A. C. Berthe, C.SS.R. (Paris, 2 vols., 1900; Eng. trans. with important corrections by H. Castle, C.SS.R., 2 vols., 1905). R. Telleria, C.SS.R., San Alfonso Maria de Ligorio (2 vols., Madrid 1950–51). On Alphonsus' spiritual teaching, see Pourrat, iv, 449–91. A. Palmieri in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), cols. 715–35, s.v., with extensive bibl. to date; C. Henze and others in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, i (Rome, 1961), cols. 837–81, s.v., also with bibl.

ALTANER, BERTHOLD (1885–1964), Patristic scholar. A native of Silesia, he was ordained in 1910 and began to teach Church history at Breslau in 1919. Ten years later he was appointed Prof. of patrology, ancient Church history and Christian archaeology at Breslau. He was the first theologian to be deprived of his university position by the Nazis in 1933. He held a post at Breslau cathedral until expelled in 1945, when he fled to Bavaria. Until he retired in 1950 he was Prof. of patrology and the history of liturgy at Würzburg.

His early works deal with the history of the *Dominican Order: Venturino von Bergamo O. Pr. (1911), Der hl. Dominikus (1922), Die Dominikanermission des 13. Jahrhunderts (1924), and Die Briefe Jordans von Sachsen (1925). He is best known for his one-volume Patrologie. Leben, Schriften und Lehre der Kirchenväter (1938; Eng. tr. based on 5th German ed. of 1958 by H. C. Graef, 1960), which has become a standard text-book and work of reference. A revised edition by A. Stuiber was issued in 1966.

His Kleine patristische Schriften, ed. G. Glockmann (T.U., lxxxiii; 1967). B. Altaner, Verzeichnis meiner Veröffentlichungen 1907–1953 (Würzburg, 1953). List of his works to date in Hist. J., lxxvii (1958), pp. 576–600.

ALTAR (Gk. θυσιαστήριον; Lat. altare, ara). The word was used of the Eucharistic table (if not already in Heb. 13. 10) in *Ignatius, *Tertullian, and *Cyprian, and this usage has been general in Catholic Christianity ever since. At the *Reformation, however, it gave rise to much controversy owing to the disputes concerning the doctrine of the *sacrifice of the Mass, of which the (stone) altar was taken as a natural symbol. The present English BCP avoids the term, but it was never rejected in England by authority.

The earliest altars were doubtless of wood, being the tables in private houses normally used for domestic purposes, and *Optatus, *Augustine, and others mention wooden altars in the 4th and 5th cents. No doubt the custom of celebrating the Eucharist on the tombs of martyrs first caused stone altars to come in. After the persecutions, bodies of martyrs came increasingly to be placed under altars, and until 1977 all altars in RC churches contained relics. For centuries there was only one altar in each Christian church, but the practice of celebrating private *Masses caused others to be added, the original altar being then known as the 'High Altar', and it became customary for each of these additional altars to be dedicated to some saint other than that to which the church itself is dedicated. In the E. Church, where private Masses are unknown, churches commonly have only one altar, though the E. regulation that the Eucharist must always be offered on a 'fasting altar' explains the occasional occurrence of two altars in the same church, to allow for two Masses on a single day. The Roman rite permits the celebration of Mass only on an altar blessed or consecrated by a bishop, except where a temporary altar is set up in a place where Mass is not customarily celebrated. In early times the altar seems to have been normally free-standing in the church, and the celebrant seems to have stood on the far side of the altar facing the congregation. Recently altars have been restored to this position in many places and the celebrant of the Eucharist has adopted a *Westward position.

It was customary for altars to be covered with three cloths (which first appear in the 9th cent.) but since 1969 one is sufficient. Before the 10th cent. the cross and candlesticks were not placed on the altar, but the cross surmounted the *ciborium magnum which covered the altar, and the candles were held round during the Eucharist or suspended in candelabra from the ciborium (see foll. entry).

In the C of E the legality of stone altars was disputed in the 19th cent., but in recent times their use has become fairly common.

Comprehensive collection of material in J. Braun's two works (C.A. and A.G.). Rohault, i, pp. 93–240, with pll. xxiii–lxxxix. E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), No. ii, 'On the History of the Christian Altar', pp. 20–38. W. H. St. J. Hope (ed.), English Altars from Illuminated Manuscripts (*Alcuin Club Collections, i; 1899); P. *Dearmer, Fifty Pictures of Gothic Altars (ib., x; 1910). G. [F.] Webb, The Liturgical Altar (1933; ed. 2, 1939); J. N. Comper, On the Christian Altar and the Buildings which contain it (1950); J. [B.] O'Connell, Church Building and Furnishing: The Church's Way. A Study in Liturgical Law (1955), pp. 127–214. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 3155–89, s.v. 'Autel', with bibl.; J. P. Kirsch–T. Klauser in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 334–54, s.v. 'Altar. III (christlich)'.

ALTAR LIGHTS. The use of candles on the Christian altar seems to derive from the lighted candles which were carried in early times before the Pope as a mark of honour and at first placed on the floor behind the altar. The custom of placing them upon the altar is not definitely attested before c. 1175, when two candles flanking an altar cross are mentioned as 'the present custom' of the Papal chapel. Subsequently mention is made of seven or more candles, acc. to the dignity of the feast, though one candle alone, to light the Missal, was also frequent. Since 1969 it has been permissible to put candles on the altar or on the floor around the altar, and the number is no longer specified in the RC Church. Cranmer's *Visitation Articles (1547) implied the permissibility of two altar lights. *Edward VI's 2nd *Injunction (1549) prohibited them, but they have now been widely restored in England. The *Lincoln Judgement (1890) recognized the legality in the C of E of two altar candles. Ordinarily altar candles are of white wax, but until 1969 the W. rubrics prescribed yellow ('unbleached') candles for *requiem masses and the *Good Friday liturgy.

D. R. Dendy, The Use of Lights in Christian Worship (1959). Braun, A.G., 'Die Altarleuchter', pp. 492–530; E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), 'Of Six Candles on the Altar: An Enquiry', pp. 301–13.

ALTAR RAILS. Rails to protect the altar from profanation were widely introduced into English churches in the early years of *Elizabeth I, when the rood-screens and their protecting doors were removed. The *Puritans disliked them as implying that the altar was specially sacred, and in many cases they were taken out again. In his Archiepiscopal Visitation (1634), W. *Laud ordered altars which had been removed into the body of the church to be restored to the east wall and required their protection by altar rails, at which the communicants were to receive the Sacrament; and many fine examples of altar rails date from this period. Their removal, however, was again ordered by Parliament in 1641, and they finally came back at the Restoration in 1660.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 131–9.

ALTERNATIVE SERVICES. The Prayer Book (Alternative and Other Services) Measure, 1965, provided that for fourteen years the Act of *Uniformity of 1662, as modified by the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act of 1872, should cease to govern the worship of the C of E, and that other services should be sanctioned, initially by the *Church Assembly and subsequently by the General *Synod, for determinate periods. It was repealed by the Church of England (Worship and Doctrine) Measure, 1974, which allows the use of such services on a permanent basis. Of the rites so authorized, Series I in general legalized the use of the Deposited Book of 1928, Series II gave effect to the work of the Liturgical Commission appointed by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in 1955, and Series III introduced modern English.

The Alternative Service Book (1980) was authorized by the General Synod in 1979 for a period of ten years as a supplement to the BCP. It reflects modern study of liturgical origins, esp. in the Eucharist, and the revisions made by other religious bodies, notably the RC Church. The *Calendar includes many new names, moves some saints' days, and makes minor changes in the arrangement of the Seasons (see Year, Liturgical). Morning and Evening Prayer follow the pattern of the BCP, with a wide choice of *Canticles; provision is made for a shortened form of service. In the Eucharist two rites are given, both more traditional in structure than the BCP. Rite A has four forms of Thanksgiving, and throughout there are many options. The Initiation Services include a form of 'Thanksgiving for the Birth of a Child' (see Churching of Women). Baptism and Confirmation may be administered in one service or separately. In Baptism the *sign of the cross, which may be made with blessed oil, is placed after the *renunciation, and a triple administration of the water is recommended. Confirmation is administered with the formula 'Confirm, O Lord, your servant N. with your Holy Spirit', and the candidate may be anointed. In the Marriage Service the traditional pattern is retained, though the changed status of women is recognized. In the Funeral Services prayer may be offered for the dead. The *Ordinal takes account of the rite of the Church of *South India, the *Anglican–Methodist Ordinal, and the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission's Statement on Ministry and Ordination (1973). Stress is laid on the distinction of *orders and the priest's power to consecrate and absolve. On the Liturgical Psalter and the Lectionary, see Psalters (Western) and Lectionary. Services for the Sick and the Blessing of Oils are under consideration. See also Baptism, Burial Services, Confirmation, Evensong and Mattins.

The Alternative Service Book 1980. A Commentary by The Liturgical Commission (1980).

ALUMBRADOS (also 'Illuminati', i.e. 'enlightened'). A loosely knit group of spiritual persons in *Spain in the 16th cent. They led a retired life given to prayer and contemplation, and their practices were propagated esp. by the reformed *Franciscans, St. *John of Avila, and some members of the *Jesuit Order. Whether or not several of them were doctrinally unorthodox is uncertain; but some members of the movement were spiritually unbalanced and exercised an unhealthy influence on those whom they excited by their pretended visions and revelations. They were severely treated by the *Inquisition, though many of their adherents were saintly people and some were later even canonized. In 1527 St. *Ignatius Loyola, while a student at Salamanca, was charged with showing them sympathy.

M. Menéndez y Pelayo, Historia de los heterodoxos españoles, ii [c. 1880], pp. 521–58; E. Colunga, O.P., 'Intelectualistas y misticos en la teologia española del siglo xvi' in La Ciencia Tomista, x (1914–15), pp. 223–42; J. Baruzi, Saint Jean de la Croix et le problème de l'expérience mystique (1924), pp. 251–69; Bremond, viii (1928), pp. 196–227, with bibl. G. Constant in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), s.v., with bibl.

AMALARIUS OF METZ (c. 780–850 [or 851]), liturgical scholar. He is perhaps (so J. *Sirmond and many subsequent historians) to be distinguished from Amalarius, Bp. of Trier (c. 809–16). A pupil and admirer of *Alcuin, he was a prominent figure in the *Carolingian Renaissance, and in 835 he was appointed to administer the see of Lyons after the deposition of its Abp., *Agobard. His principal treatise, the 'De ecclesiasticis officiis' (in four books), which was partly an attempt to further the fusion of Roman and *Gallican ceremonial practices, exercised great influence in the Middle Ages and remains a fundamental source for the history of liturgy. Its explanations of ritual are sometimes very fanciful and artificial, and at the synod of Quiercy in 838 some of its contents were pronounced heretical. Among his other surviving writings are a small treatise on the ceremonies of *Baptism and the 'Eclogae de officio missae', a description of the Roman Pontifical Mass. He compiled an *antiphonary which has not survived.

His 'Regula Canonicorum et Sanctimonialium', 'Eclogae de Officio Missae' and 'Epistolae' in J. P. Migne, PL, cv, 815–1340; crit. edd. of his 'Epistolae' by E. Duemmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, v (1899), pp. 240–724, of his 'Opera Liturgica Omnia' by J. M. Hanssens, S.J. (S.T., cxxxviii–cxl; 1948–50), with bibl. J. Sirmond, S.J., 'De Duobus Amalariis' in Opera Varia, iv (Paris, 1696), cols. 641–7. R. Mönchemeier, Amalar von Metz (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, i, Hft. 3–4; 1893). [J.] A. Cabaniss, Amalarius of Metz (Amsterdam, 1954). G. *M[orin], O.S.B., 'La Question des deux Amalaire' in R. Bén., viii (1891), pp. 433–42; id., 'Amalaire. Esquisse biographique', ib., ix (1892), pp. 337–51; id., 'Encore la question des deux Amalaire. Réponse à l'objection de M. Mönchemeier', ib., xi (1894), pp. 241–3. E. Dabroise in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 1323–30, s.v.

AMALRIC (d. c. 1207), scholastic philosopher. He was a native of Bène, near *Chartres, and taught at *Paris. In a series of *pantheistic treatises, which had many points of contact with those of *Erigena, he maintained (inter alia) that God was the one essence underlying all created beings (deum esse essentiam omnium creaturarum et esse omnium) and that those who remain in the love of God cannot sin. He founded a sect, the 'Amalricians', who further developed his teachings. His leading theses were expressly condemned by a synod at Paris in 1210 and again at the *Lateran Council of 1215. See also David of Dinant.

The principal sources are *Caesarius of Heisterbach, Dialogus Miraculorum (ed. J. Strange, Cologne, 1851, pp. 304–7) and Martin Oppaviensis, Chronicon Pontificum et Imperatorum (ed. L. Weiland in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxii, 1872, p. 438). Eng. tr. of the former, and other primary material, in W. L. Wakefield–A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxxi; 1969), pp. 258–63. C. Baeumker (ed.), 'Contra Amaurianos. Ein anonymer wahrscheinlich dem Garnerius von Rochefort zugehöriger Traktat gegen die Amalrikaner aus dem Anfang des XIII. Jahrhunderts' in B.G.P.M., xxiv (1926), Hfte. 5–6. G. C. Capelle, Autour du décret de 1210, III, Amaury de Bène, étude sur son panthéisme formel (Bibliothèque Thomiste, xvi, 1932). M. T. d'Alverny, 'Un Fragment du Procès des Amauriciens' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xviii (1951), pp. 325–36. N. Cohn, Pursuit of the Millennium (1957), pp. 156–61. See also Überweg, ii, 250 f., with bibl., p. 707 f.

AMANA SOCIETY. A Christian sect, otherwise known as the Community of True Inspiration. It originated in Germany in 1714, under the influence of the writings of E. L. Grüber and J. F. Rock, who were deeply imbued with *Pietist views, but centred all their teaching in the doctrine of present-day inspiration. A large part of the body sailed for America in 1842. In 1855 they finally settled at Amana, Iowa, and were granted a formal constitution under the laws of the state in 1859. They survive as a small communistic community.

W. R. Perkins–B. L. Wick, History of the Amana Society, or Community of True Inspiration (State University of Iowa Publications. Historical Monograph, i, 1891); B. M. H. Shambaugh, Amana. The Community of True Inspiration (Iowa, 1908); id., Amana That Was and Amana That Is (Iowa, 1932). B. M. H. Shambaugh in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 358–369, s.v.

AMANDUS, St. (d. c. 675), Merovingian Apostle of Flanders. Born near Nantes, in early manhood he made his way to Tours, and then to Bourges, where he lived an ascetic life under the direction of St. Austregisilus, the Bishop. In 628, having been consecrated Bishop at the behest of Clothaire II without any fixed see, he began active missionary work in Flanders and Carinthia, and in 633 founded two monasteries at Ghent under the patronage of St. *Peter (one of them taking the name of St. Bavon, the benefactor). Later he founded a large monastery at Elnon, near Tournai, of which he was in his last years Abbot; afterwards it was known as St.-Amand. He is said, but on very doubtful authority, to have been Bp. of Maestricht from 649 to 652. His 'Testamentum' survives, but otherwise the evidence for his life is not very trustworthy. Feast day, 6 Feb.

Testamentum ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, v (1910), pp. 483–5. One recension of the Vita Amandi, attributed to Amandus's disciple, Baudemundus, pr. in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 848–72; another by B. Krusch, op. cit., pp. 428–49; the ascription to Baudemundus is denied by Krusch, who considers the life to be late 8th cent. (ib., pp. 395–428). Further life by Milo, a monk of St. Amand (c. A.D. 845–55), ed. L. Traube, M.G.H. Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 567–610; prose suppl. ed. B. Krusch, op. cit., pp. 450–85. L. Van der Essen, Étude critique et littéraire sur les Vitae des saints mérovingiens de l'ancienne Belgique (1907), pp. 336–49. E. de Moreau, S.J., Saint Amand (Museum Lessianum. Section Missiologique, vii, 1927), with bibl.; id., Saint Amand, le principal évangélisateur de la Belgique (Collection nationale, Brussels, 1942 [more popular]). Id., 'La Vita Amandi Prima et les Fondations monastiques de S. Amand' in Anal. Boll., lxvii (1949), pp. 447–64.

AMAURY. See Amalric.

AMBO. A raised platform in a Christian *basilica, from which the Scriptures could be read to the people and litanies and other public parts of the liturgy conducted. Originally there was only one, but later two were built, one for the Epistle and one for the Gospel, on the south and north sides respectively. Several early examples survive, but after the 14th cent. they were replaced by the pulpit. Recently there has been a tendency in some places to reintroduce them, and a Vatican Instruction of 1964 suggests the use of an ambo for reading the lessons and for preaching unless the pulpit is near the sanctuary.

Rohault, iii (1883), pp. 1–72. D. Hickley, 'The Ambo in Early Liturgical Planning—a study with special reference to the Syrian Bema' in Heythrop Journal, vii (1966), pp. 407–27. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 1330–47, s.v. 'Ambon', with reff.

AMBROSE, St. (c. 339–97), Bp. of *Milan. He was born at Trier, the son of the Praetorian Prefect of Gaul. After practising in the Roman law-courts he was appointed, c. 370, governor of Aemilia-Liguria, with his seat at Milan. On the death in 374 of *Auxentius, the Arian Bp. of Milan, the Catholic laity demanded that Ambrose should succeed him. He was then a Christian by belief, but unbaptized, i.e. only a *catechumen.

With some hesitation he accepted the see, was baptized and ordained, and first devoted himself to the study of theology under the guidance of his former tutor, *Simplicianus. As bishop he was famous as a preacher, and outstanding as a jealous upholder of orthodoxy. To him was partly due the conversion of St. *Augustine (386), who greatly revered him. Events brought him into close touch with the rulers of the Western Empire—Gratian, Maximus, Justina (mother of Valentinian II), and *Theodosius I. He combated paganism and *Arianism, maintained the independence of the Church against the civil power, and championed morality, e.g. in protesting against the execution of *Priscillianist heretics under Maximus, and in excommunicating the Emp. *Theodosius for a massacre at Thessalonica. Apart from the De Sacramentis (q.v.), of which the Ambrosian authorship is now generally recognized, his most notable work is 'De Officiis Ministrorum', a treatise on Christian ethics, based on Cicero, with special reference to the clergy. The rest consist largely of the substance of sermons or instruction given to candidates for baptism, on the Faith and Sacraments. Knowledge of Greek enabled him to introduce much E. theology into the West. He also wrote on ascetical subjects, and did much to encourage monasticism in N. Italy. His Letters are of great historical value. He is also the author of several well-known Latin hymns, and modern scholarship (H. Brewer and A. E. Burn) has occasionally attributed to him the so-called *Athanasian Creed.

With St. *Jerome, St. Augustine and St. *Gregory the Great, St. Ambrose is one of the four traditional Doctors of the Latin Church. Feast day, 7 Dec.; in the BCP calendar, 4 Apr.

Editio princeps of his Works, Venice, 1485. Benedictine ed. [F. du Frische–N. Le Nourry], 2 vols., Paris, 1686–90; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xiv–xvii. Crit. ed. by C. Schenkl, M. Petschenig, &c. (C.S.E.L., 1897 ff.); also of De Virginibus by E. Cazzaniga (Corpus Scriptorum Latinorum Paravianum; Turin, 1948) and of De Virginitate by id. (ibid., 1952). Expositio Evangelii secundum Lucam, with Fr. tr. by G. Tissot, O.S.B. (S.C. xlv and lii; 1956–8). Life by Paulinus, his secretary at the time of his death, in J. P. Migne, op. cit., xiv, 27–46; also ed., with Ital. tr., by M. Pellegrino (Rome, 1961). F. H. Dudden, The Life and Times of St. Ambrose (2 vols., 1935). M. Ihm, Studia Ambrosiana (1890). H. F. v. Campenhausen, Ambrosius von Mailand als Kirchenpolitiker (1929); J. R. Palanque, Saint Ambroise et l'empire romain (1933). Ambrosiana. Scritti di storia, archeologia ed arte pubblicati nel XVI centenario della nascita di Sant'Ambrogio, CCCXL–MCMXL (1942). P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les Confessions de Saint Augustin (1950), pp. 93–174, 211–21. A. Paredi, S. Ambrogio e la sua età (ed. 2, Milan [1960]). J. Pépin, Théologie cosmiaue et théologie chrétienne (Ambroise, Exam. I, 1–4) (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1964). E. Dassmann, Das Leben des hl. Ambrosius (Düsseldorf, 1967). R. H. *Connolly, The Explanatio Symboli ad Initiandos, A Work of Saint Ambrose (Texts and Studies, x; 1952). C. W. Neumann, S.M., The Virgin Mary in the Works of Saint Ambrose (Paradosis, xvii; Fribourg, 1962). E. Dassmann, Die Frömmigkeit des Kirchenvaters Ambrosius von Mailand (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, xxix; 1965). B. Maes, La Loi naturelle selon Ambroise de Milan (Analecta Gregoriana, clxii; 1967). G. Madec, Saint Ambroise et la Philosophie (Études Augustiniennes, 1974); Y.-M. Duval (ed.), Ambroise de Milan (ib., 1974); G. Lazzati (ed.), Ambrosius Episcopus (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, vi etc., 1976 ff.). P. de Labriolle, Histoire de la littérature chrétienne (1920), pp. 351–82 (Eng. tr., 1924, pp. 263–86). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 498–547; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 378–89, both with detailed bibl. See also bibls. to De Sacramentis and Athanasian Creed.

AMBROSE, St., OF CAMALDOLI. See Traversari, Ambrogio.

AMBROSE, ISAAC (1604–64), *Puritan divine. The son of a Lancashire clergyman, he was born at Ormskirk, Lancs, educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and ordained priest before 1627. After serving cures at Castleton, Derby, and Clapham, N. Yorks (from 1629), he became one of the King's four Preachers in Lancashire (from 1634) and resided at Garstang, near Preston. In 1641 he became a *Presbyterian and subsequently took a prominent part in the seventh Lancashire Classis, several times acting as Moderator. He was twice taken prisoner by the royal army, and, on the fall of Bolton in 1644, moved to Leeds. He served on the committee for the ejection of 'scandalous and ignorant ministers and school-masters', but was forced by the deposed ministers to go to London in 1649. In 1650 he was still ministering in Preston. From 1654 he resided at Garstang, whence he was ejected in 1662.

He was a man of peaceful disposition, who spent a month each year in solitary meditation, prayer, and study. After an illness he determined to write a devotional description of what the Lord had done for his soul. Written in 1653, it was published in 1658 under the title, Looking unto Jesus, or the Soul's Eveing of Jesus as Carrying on the Great Work of Man's Salvation. The work, which emphasized the unity of the Person of Christ in the Incarnation, is marked by a deep piety, combined with vividness and freshness of imagination. His other publications include Prima, Media, and Ultima, the First, Middle, and Last Things: in Three Treatises (1650); Redeeming the Time (1658); and War with Devils—Ministration of Angels (1661).

Complete Works ed., London, 3 parts, 1674–89; new ed., 2 vols., Manchester, 1799–1802. A. *Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), iii (1817), cols. 659–61.

AMBROSIAN CHANT. The chant of Milan has, like the *Mozarabic, marked Eastern characteristics; but, unlike it, is singularly deficient in early sources. The oldest MS. of importance is the 12th cent. British Museum MS. Add. 34209. In compensation for this deficiency the fact that the Ambrosian rite has survived in use to the present day means that good modern editions of the Antiphonale Missarum and the Liber Vesperalis are available.

Ambrosian psalm-tones have no mediation, and in comparison with the *Gregorian and Mozarabic, are far more prolix than the Gregorian, and some of them display clearly an unrestrained Oriental spirit. The music was classified in the early Middle Ages under four modes, omitting the plagal modes of the Gregorian system.

The chief primary sources are British Museum MS. Add. 34209, ed. by the Benedictines of *Solesmes (Paléographie Musicale, v–vii; 1896–1900), Antiphonale Missarum iuxta ritum S.E. Mediolanensis (Rome, 1935), and Liber Vesperalis iuxta ritum S.E. Mediolanensis (ib., 1939). [H.] Huglo and others, Fonti e Paleografia del Canto Ambrosiano (Archivio Ambrosiano, vii; 1956). H. Anglès in A. Hughes, O.S.B. (ed.), Early Medieval Music up to 1300 (New Oxford History of Music, ii; 1954), pp. 59–72. R. Jesson in W. Apel, Gregorian Chant (1958), pp. 465–83.

AMBROSIAN RITE. The rite used in the old archiepiscopal province of Milan and one of the very few non-Roman rites which survive in the RC Church in the W. Its name is derived from St. *Ambrose, Bp. of Milan, but there is no definite evidence of connexion with him. Although for many centuries now it has contained the Roman *Canon of the Mass, it differs widely from the Roman rite. Thus, the *offertory takes place before and not after the Creed (as in the Roman rite) and is accompanied by a procession (see Vecchioni). In 1976 the missal was revised in accordance with the principles of the Second *Vatican Council and the traditions of the rite.

Three main theories of the origin of the rite have been put forward: (1) It is merely a development of the present Roman rite; (2) it is an older Western rite which has survived only at Milan; (3) it is an Oriental rite introduced at Milan by the Greek and Arian Bishop *Auxentius (or one of the other six Greek bishops who appear among the ten predecessors of St. Ambrose) which, purged of heresy (it is suggested) by St. Ambrose, became the parent of the whole family of *Gallican rites. This last theory (originated by L. *Duchesne) was widely held in the earlier years of the 20th cent., but the rite is now commonly regarded as of purely Western ancestry.

The Ambrosian Missal was first ed. at Milan in 1475. That in use before 1976 appeared in 1902; crit. ed. by A. Ratti (*Pius XI)–M. Magistretti, Milan, 1913. Eng. tr. by E. G. C. F. Atchley (London, 1909). Corpus Ambrosiano-Liturgicum, ed. O. Heiming (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xlix, li, etc.; 1968 ff.). M. Magistretti (ed.), Beroldus, sive Ecclesiae Ambrosianae Mediolanensis Kalendarium et Ordines Saec. XII (Milan, 1894); id., Monumenta Veteris Liturgiae Ambrosianae (3 vols., ib., 1897–1905) and other works. F. Magani, L'antica liturgia romana (1897–1899). W. C. Bishop, The Mozarabic and Ambrosian Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, xv, 1924), pp. 98–134. A. Paredi, I prefazi ambrosiani (Pubbl. Univ. Catt. del Sacro Cuore, ser. 4, xxv, Milan, 1937). P. Borelli, Il Rito Ambrosiano (Brescia, 1964), with bibl. L. Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), ch. iii, pp. 81–99; Eng. tr. (1903), pp. 86–105. A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 286–456. P. Lejay in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 1373–1442, s.v. 'Ambrosien (Rit)'; J. D. Crichton in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 67–9, s.v.

AMBROSIANA. The Ambrosian Library at Milan, founded c. 1605 by Federico Borromeo (1564–1631), was one of the first large libraries to be open to the public without distinction. The books were originally protected from theft by the severest ecclesiastical penalties, the removal of a book being a sin from which only the Pope could absolve. Borromeo sent agents all over the world to collect MSS., and c. 1803 it received many ancient MSS. from the library at *Bobbio. *Pius XI (Achille Ratti) was Librarian from 1888 to 1912 (Prefect from 1907).

A. Martini and D. Bassi, Catalogus Codicum Graecorum Bibliothecae Ambrosianae (Milan, 2 vols., 1906); A. Rivolta, Catalogo dei Codici pinelliani dell'Ambrosiana (1932). Mai, S.R., v (1841), pp. 24–50, 'De Nonnullis Codicibus Bibliothecae Ambrosianae'; E. Griffini, 'Lista dei manoscritti arabi nuovi fondo della Biblioteca Ambrosiana di Milan' in Rivista degli Studi Orientali, iii (1910), pp. 253–78. A. Saba, 'La biblioteca Ambrosiana' in Aevum, vi (1932), pp. 531–620.

AMBROSIASTER. The name given (first by D. *Erasmus) to the author of a set of Latin commentaries on the thirteen Epp. of St. Paul, ascribed in all the manuscripts but one, and by most medieval writers, to *Ambrose. St. *Augustine and certain Irish authorities quote that on Romans as by 'Sanctus Hilarius'. Their ascription to Ambrose, which was first questioned in modern times by Erasmus, is now universally denied, and various persons have been suggested as their author, e.g. Isaac, an ex-Jew, who relapsed into Judaism, and opposed *Damasus in 374; 'Hilary the Deacon'; Hilary, a layman and Proconsul of Africa; and *Evagrius of Antioch. The commentaries are on the *Old Latin text of the Epistles and thus an important witness to the pre-Vulgate text. The writer avoids allegory, is practical, and has a good sense of history. Ambrosiaster is almost certainly also the author of 'Quaestiones Veteris et Novi Testamenti', wrongly ascribed to Augustine, and possibly of the 'Mosaicarum et Romanarum Legum Collectio'.

Commentaries in J. P. Migne, PL, xvii, 45–508. Crit. ed. by H. I. Vogels (C.S.E.L., lxxxi, 3 parts; 1966–9). 'Quaestiones', ed. A. *Souter (ib., I; 1908). A. Souter, A Study of Ambrosiaster (Texts and Studies, vii, 4; Cambridge, 1905); id., The Earliest Latin Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul (1927). C. Martini, O.F.M., Ambrosiaster. De Auctore, Operibus, Theologia (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, iv; Rome, 1944). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 520–5; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 389 f. Dekkers, Nos. 184–8. G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., i (1928), cols. 225–41, s.v.

AMBULATORY. The 'walking-space' which arises when an apsidal sanctuary in certain churches of the Norman period is surrounded by continuous *aisles. The ambulatory is bounded on one side by the arches of the sanctuary, and on the other may give access to a series of chapels of a later date.

A.M.D.G. ('Ad Maiorem Dei Gloriam', 'To the greater glory of God'). The motto of the *Jesuits, but it also frequently appears elsewhere in Christian use.

AMEN (Heb. אָמֵן; Gk. ἀμήν). A Hebrew word meaning 'verily'. It is used to express assent by Jews (Dt. 27. 15 ff.) and Christians (1 Cor. 14. 16) at the end of religious formulae, prayers, hymns, and creeds. Cf. the *Catechism of the BCP: 'and therefore I say, Amen, so be it'.

H. Schlier in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 339–42, s.v. ἀμήν, with reff.; W. Bauer, Griechisch-deutsches Wörterbuch zu den Schriften des N.T. (ed. 4, 1952), col. 82 f., s.v. ἀμήν, with reff. F. *Cabrol in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 1554–73, s.v.; I. Cecchetti in E.C., i (1949), cols. 1030–2, s.v.

AMERICANISM. A movement propagated in the last decade of the 19th cent. among American RCs by I. T. *Hecker with a view to adapting as far as possible the external life of the Church to supposed modern cultural ideals. Stress was laid on the value of the 'active' virtues (e.g. humanitarianism, eugenic reform, democracy), and the 'passive' attitudes such as humility and subjection to authority were depreciated. It was also urged that the Church should relax as far as possible the rigour of her requirements on converts, emphasize what was held in common by RCs and other Christians, and minimize points of difference. In an Apostolic Letter, 'Testem Benevolentiae' (22 Jan. 1899), addressed to Cardinal J. Gibbons, Abp. of Baltimore, *Leo XIII condemned it in moderate but quite definite terms; and in consequence it quickly disappeared.

'Testem Benevolentiae' in Acta Leonis XIII, vii (1906), pp. 223–33. J. Ireland, The Church and Modern Society (Chicago, 1897); A. J. Delattre, Un Catholicisme américain (Namur, 1898); A. Houtin, L'Américanisme (Namur, 1904); J. Rivière, Le Modernisme dans l'Église (1929), pp. 109–38; [E.] Lecanuet, La Vie dans l'Église sous Léon XIII (1930), ch. xiii, 'L'Américanisme en France', pp. 544–602. T. T. McAvoy, C.S.C., The Great Crisis in American Catholic History 1895–1900 (Chicago, 1957), incl. Eng. tr. of 'Testem Benevolentiae', pp. 379–91, and bibl. See also bibl. under Hecker.

AMES, WILLIAM (1576–1633), *Calvinist moral theologian and controversialist. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where his tutor was W. *Perkins, he became an extreme *Puritan, refusing to wear the surplice in his college chapel and in 1609 attacking card-playing in a sermon. Leaving Cambridge c. 1610, he settled for a time at Colchester and then moved to Holland. Here he took a prominent part in the *Remonstrant controversies and became recognized by the Calvinists as one of their best theologians. In 1622 he became professor of theology at Franeker, where he attracted hearers from all parts of Protestant Europe. A few months before his death he gave up his professorship for reasons of health and took charge of the English congregation at Rotterdam. His most important work, De Conscientia, eius Jure et Casibus (1632), is one of the few Protestant treatises on *casuistry and was long held in high repute for its incisive decisions. Of his theological works, the principal was Medulla Theologiae (ed. 1, 1627), a systematic exposition of Calvinist principles. Among his controversial writings were Bellarminus Enervatus (4 vols., 1628) and Animadversiones in Synodalia (1629).

His Latin Works were edited, with a Life, by M. Nethenus (5 vols., Amsterdam, 1658). K. Reuter, Wilhelm Amesius der führende Theologe der erwachenden reformierten Pietismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, iv; Neukirchen [1940]). K. L. Sprunger, The Learned Doctor William Ames [1972]. J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 355–7, s.v.

AMIATINUS, CODEX. See Codex Amiatinus.

AMICE (Lat. amictus). A linen cloth, square or oblong in shape, with strings attached. In the W. Church it may be worn round the neck by the priest when celebrating the Eucharist, and by other ministers who wear the *alb. Its original significance is obscure. Since the bishop conveyed the amice to the *sub-deacon at his ordination with the admonition that it signified the 'castigatio vocis', it is natural to suppose that it was originally a sort of scarf to protect the throat. But in the prayers which until 1969 were said before Mass when the amice is being put on, it is referred to as 'galea salutis' ('helmet of salvation'), from which it would be natural to deduce that it was originally a head-covering. This view is supported by the fact that certain religious orders still wear the amice in the form of a head-covering when approaching the altar for Mass, and during parts of the service. In some orders (e.g. the *Benedictine) the amice has the shape of a hood and is worn in such a way as to form an outer covering for the hood of the religious habit. In the E. the amice as such is not used, but it is customary for some priests to use an ordinary handkerchief in the same way, as a practical method of preventing the vestments becoming stained by perspiration. See also Almuce.

Braun, L.G., pp. 21–52. V. Ermoni in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 1597–9, s.v. 'Amict'.

AMIDAH. See Eighteen Benedictions.

AMMON, St. (d. c. 350) (also AMUN), Egyptian hermit. One of the most celebrated ascetics of the *Nitrian desert, he is mentioned by St. *Athanasius in his Vita Antonii. On St. *Antony's advice he sought to bring his monks together under his immediate supervision. Feast day, 4 Oct.

Other sources include *Palladius, Lausiac History, ch. 8, and the Historia Monachorum, ch. 29. Introd. by C. Byeus, S.J., to extract from Palladius in AA.SS., Oct. II (1768), pp. 413–21. I. G. Smith in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 102, s.v.

AMMONIAN SECTIONS. Divisions found in the margins of nearly all Gk. and Lat. MSS. of the Four Gospels, devised to illustrate the parallelism between corresponding passages in the different Gospels. Until recently they were generally held to be the work of *Ammonius Saccas, but it is more likely that they were compiled by *Eusebius of Caesarea in connexion with his canons. They were of great use in identifying passages before the now current division into chapters and verses became established.

J. W. *Burgon, The Last Twelve Verses of the Gospel according to St. Mark (1871), pp. 125–32, 295–312. G. H. Gwilliam, 'The Ammonian Sections, Eusebian Canons, and Harmonizing Tables in the Syriac Tetra-evangelium' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, ii (1890), pp. 241–72. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 198–202.

AMMONIUS SACCAS (c. A.D. 175–242). The reputed founder of *Neoplatonism. An Alexandrian by birth, he was held in high repute as a teacher, and appears to have considerably influenced *Plotinus, who, on hearing a discourse of Ammonius, remarked, 'This is the man I was looking for' (τοῦτον ἐζήτουν). Acc. to *Porphyry (in *Eusebius, H.E., v. xix), who also states (probably wrongly) that Ammonius was a lapsed Christian, he had *Origen (but perhaps not the Christian Origen) among his pupils. He is said to have committed none of his teachings to writing. (See also previous entry.)

H. von Arnim, 'Quelle der Ueberlieferung über Ammonius Sakkas' in Rheinisches Museum für Philologie, N.F., xlii (1887), pp. 276–85; E. Zeller, 'Ammonius Sakkas und Plotinus' in Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, vii (1894), pp. 295–312. E. Elorduy, S.J. Ammonio Sakkas (Burgos, [1959] ff. [conclusions not generally accepted]). W. Theiler, Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, x; 1966), pp. 1–45 ('Ammonios der Lehrer des Origenes'). A. H. Armstrong in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), pp. 196–8. Überweg. i, pp. 593–5, with further bilb. p. 188*.

AMOS, Book of. Amos was the first in time of the canonical prophets of the OT. A herdman of Tekoa and a dresser of sycamore trees who exercised his ministry in Israel 'in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel' (1. 1), i.e. between 760 and 750 B.C., he asserted that it was not by descent or profession that he was a prophet and that Jehovah had simply taken him from following the flock (7. 14 f.). His message was delivered at a time when, owing to the prosperity which had come from a period of freedom from outside invasion, the leaders of the nation were given to luxury, wealth was being accumulated in a way that led to injustice and oppression of the poor, and the religion of Jehovah was being debased. Amos found his mission in denouncing these low conceptions of God. He urged the importance of social justice and the threat of coming judgement. Although he apparently did not proclaim belief in an explicit monotheism, he insisted that God was the Lord of nature and of nations, revealing His power in history, particularly in His chosen people. He may thus be regarded as the precursor of *Deutero-Isaiah. Further, he asserted that the covenant-relationship which exists between God and His chosen people is rooted in, and influenced by, the righteousness of God, so that 'the Day of the Lord' to which the Hebrews looked forward as the beginning of a Golden Age would be a day of justice, when Israel would be humiliated and receive the due reward of iniquity.

Modern commentaries by S. R. *Driver (on Joel and Amos, Camb. Bib., 1897, pp. 93–239; revised ed., 1915, pp. 95–245), W. R. Harper (on Amos and Hosea, I.C.C., 1905), E. A. Edghill (West. Comm., 1914), L. Köhler (Zürich, 1917), R. S. Cripps (London, 1929), N. H. Snaith (Study Notes on Bible Books, 2 parts, 1945–6), E. Hammershaimb (Copenhagen, 1946; ed. 3, 1967; Eng. tr., 1970), and J. L. Mays (London, 1969). Further comm. cited under Minor Prophets. A. Weiser, Die Profetie des Amos (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., liii; 1929). K. Cramer, Amos. Versuch einer theologischen Interpretation (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Dritte Folge, xv; 1930). J. Morgenstern, 'Amos Studies' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xi (1936), pp. 19–140, xii–xiii (1937–8), pp. 1–53; xv (1940), pp. 59–304; xxxii (1961), pp. 295–350. A. Neher, Amos. Contribution à l'Étude du Prophétisme (1950). A. S. Kapelrud, Central Ideas in Amos (Oslo, 1956; repr., 1961). Eissfeldt, pp. 395–401, with bibl.

AMPHIBALUM (or -US). (1) A *Gallican name for the *chasuble; (2) the birrus, a garment put on first and covering the head, and perhaps to be identified with the amictus, or *amice. Acc. to tradition, St. Amphibalus was the name of a martyr closely associated with St. *Alban.

AMPHILOCHIUS, St. (c. 340–395), Bp. of Iconium from 373. A cousin of *Gregory Nazianzus, he stood in close personal relations with all the *Cappadocian Fathers. He was present at a council of Iconium in 376 in which the full Divinity of the Holy Spirit was zealously defended, and was head of the Council of Side in 390 which excommunicated the *Messalians. Most of his surviving writings are in a fragmentary condition; but a few are complete, including some sermons and the Iambics for Seleucus, which contains a list of books of the Bible, of some importance for the history of the *Canon. Feast day, 23 Nov.

Writings and life in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxix, 9–130 (incomplete). Crit. ed. of his Iambi ad Seleucum (previously pr. among the works of Gregory of Nazianzus in PG, xxxvii, 1577–1600) by E. Oberg (Patristische Texte und Studien, ix; 1969). Opera ed. C. Datema (C.C., Series Graeca, iii; 1978). K. Holl, Amphilochius von Ikonium in seinem Verhältnis zu den grossen Kappadoziern (Tübingen, 1904); G. Ficker, Amphilochiana, i (Leipzig, 1906, all publd.). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 220–28; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 308 f.; Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 296–300, all with bibl.

AMPLEFORTH ABBEY, N. Yorks. In 1802 a priory was founded at Ampleforth by the English *Benedictine Congregation. A nucleus of the monks came from Dieulouard in Lorraine, from which they had been dispersed in 1793; this community claimed continuity with the pre-Reformation Benedictines at *Westminster Abbey. A large and important boys' school was soon established at Ampleforth, which became an Abbey in 1900. St. Benet's Hall in Oxford is a house of study dependent on Ampleforth. The Abbey library contains some of the MSS. of the works of A. *Baker and many incunabula.

J. C. Almond, O.S.B., The History of Ampleforth Abbey from the foundation of St. Lawrence's at Dieulouard to the present time (1903). J. McCann, O.S.B.–C. Cary-Elwes, O.S.B. (edd.), Ampleforth and its Origins (1952).

AMPULLA. Lat., a globular vessel for holding liquid. The term is used of three classes of objects.

(1) Of certain bottle-shaped vessels, usually of glass, found at tombs in the *catacombs. Such have often been known as 'ampullae sanguinis' from an identification, going back to the 17th cent., of the dark-red sediment frequently found in them with the blood of a martyr. But their date (4th cent. onwards), the proportion found in the graves of small children, the discovery of similar ampullae at Jewish catacombs, e.g. on the Via Labicana, together with the scientific analysis of their contents, have discredited this view. It would appear rather that they were used to preserve drops of the perfume poured on the bodies of the dead.

(2) Of certain coarsely made vases of baked clay often bearing the image or symbol of the saint, which were used to preserve oil from the lights burnt in martyria. A number sent by Pope *Gregory I from the tombs of Roman martyrs are preserved at the Cathedral at Monza. Those brought by pilgrims from the tomb of St. *Menas in Egypt are esp. common.

(3) Of vessels to preserve the sacramental oils. They are referred to e.g. in St. *Optatus of Milevis (Contra Donatistas, ii. 19) and the *Gregorian Sacramentary. The most famous of such ampullae is the 'Sainte Ampoule' which, acc. to a legend in Flodoard (10th cent.), already mentioned by *Hincmar (d. 882), was brought by a dove at the prayers of St. *Remigius for the baptism of Clovis in 496. It was preserved at Reims and used at the coronation of French kings until the Revolution. Although it was broken in 1793, a fragment was preserved and used at the coronation of Charles X (1824). It appears to have been made of a metal similar to tin and engraved with a representation of the Adoration of the Magi and Shepherds. Similar legends of the miraculous origin of ampullae are found elsewhere in Europe. That among the English coronation regalia is in the unusual form of an eagle with outstretched wings. It dates from 1660 and was prob. copied from an earlier one, which, acc. to legend, was entrusted by the BVM to St. *Thomas of Canterbury.

The memorandum prepared by G. B. *De Rossi and circulated privately in 1862 was ed., with other docc., by A. Ferrua, S.J., Sulla Questione del Vaso de Sangue (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xviii; 1944). O. M. Dalton, Catalogue of Christian Antiquities of the British Museum (1901), pp. 154–9; C. M. Kaufmann, Zur Ikonographie der Menas-Ampullen (1910); C. Cecchelli, 'Note iconografiche su alcune ampolle bobbiesi' in Riv. A. C., iv (1927), pp. 115–39. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 1722–78, s.v. 'Ampoules', and E. Josi in E.C., i (1949), cols. 1113–15, s.v. 'Ampolla'. On (3), Sir Francis Oppenheimer, The Legend of the Ste. Ampoule (1953).

AMSDORF, NIKOLAUS VON (1483–1565), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Torgau, he studied at Leipzig and Wittenberg, where he became lecturer in philosophy and theology and canon in 1508. In 1517 he joined M. *Luther, whom he accompanied to the Disputation at Leipzig in 1519 and to the Diet of *Worms in 1521. In 1524 he went to Magdeburg to lead the Protestant opposition against the Catholic clergy and to reform the services on Wittenberg lines. In 1528 and 1531 he did the same for Goslar. In 1534 he was responsible for Luther's renewed dispute with *Erasmus. He later quarrelled with P. *Melanchthon and M. *Bucer and alienated the Emperor during the Colloquy of *Ratisbon in 1541. In the same year he was appointed Bp. of Naumburg by the Elector of Saxony against the candidate of the Cathedral chapter and the wishes of the Emperor, but had to give up the appointment after the war of *Schmalkalden (1547) and went to Eisenach. He was a violent opponent of the Leipzig Interim, and, with *Flacius Illyricus, became a leader of the intransigent Lutheran party against the *Adiaphorists (q.v.). During the *Synergist controversy he maintained against P. Major, J. Pfeffinger, and others not only the uselessness but the actual harmfulness of good works, but did not subscribe to the teaching of Flacius Illyricus on sin as the substance of natural man. His one-sided interpretation of Luther caused a split within the Lutheran party, and his teaching on the harmfulness of good works was criticized in the Formula of *Concord.

Ausgewählte Schriften, ed. O. Lerche (Gütersloh, 1938). Short Life by T. Pressel (Elberfeld, 1862). P. Brunner, Nikolaus von Amsdorf als Bischof von Naumburg (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, clxxix; 1961). C. Eichhorn, 'Amsdorfiana aus dem codex chartaceus Nr. 43 der Dorpater Universität-Bibliothek' in Z.K.G., xxii (1901), pp. 605–46. O. H. Nebe, Reine Lehre. Zur Theologie des Niklas von Amsdorff (1935). Dr. Schwarz–G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 464–7.

AMSTERDAM ASSEMBLY, The (1948). The Assembly in the Concertgebouw, Amsterdam, from 22 Aug. to 4 Sept. which formally constituted the '*World Council of Churches' (q.v.). The Church leaders present included Marc Boegner, Pastor of Passy and President of the Protestant Federation of France; Erling Eidem, *Lutheran Abp. of Upsala; Geoffrey *Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury; Strenopoulos Germanos, Abp. of Thyateira, under the *Oecumenical Patriarch; and J. R. *Mott (q.v.). The theme of the discussions was 'Man's Disorder and God's Design', under the four separate heads 'The Universal Church in God's Design' (by G. *Aulén, K. *Barth, G. *Florovsky, R. *Niebuhr, E. Schlink, O. Tomkins, W. A. Visser 't Hooft, etc.); 'The Church's Witness to God's Design' (by E. *Brunner, W. M. Horton, H. Kraemer, S. C. Neill, P. *Tillich, etc.); 'The Church and the Disorder of Society' (by Kathleen Bliss, E. Brunner, R. Niebuhr, J. H. *Oldham, etc.); and 'The Church and International Disorder' (by E. Brunner, J. F. Dulles, J. L. Hromadka, etc.).

The Official Report, with the 4 vols. under the separate titles named above, was issued in 1948–9. H. G. G. Herklots, Amsterdam, 1948 (1948; popular).

ANABAPTISTS ('re-baptizers', from Gk. ἀνά and βαπτίζω). The comprehensive designation of various groups on the Continent who in the 16th cent. refused to allow their children to be baptized and reinstituted the baptism of believers. Their refusal to admit that infant baptism was true baptism led to the nickname. The main groups to be distinguished are: (1) Thomas *Münzer (1490?–1525) and the *Zwickau Prophets who appeared in *Wittenberg in 1521. Münzer sympathized with the *Peasants' Revolt (1525) and taught a doctrine of the *Inner Light which reappeared later in the *Quakers. (2) The Swiss Brethren, who reintroduced believers' baptism as the basis of Church fellowship in Zürich in 1525 and who also taught doctrines of non-resistance and the rejection of Christian participation in the magistracy. Their views quickly spread in the Swiss valleys, and into the Rhineland and SW Germany. To this group belonged Balthasar *Hübmaier (c. 1485–1528) and, for a time, Hans Denck* (1495?–1527). (3) Communities which found asylum in Moravia and, under the leadership of Jacob Hutter (d. 1536), established settlements based on the common ownership of property. After many sufferings and wanderings certain of their descendants, now known as Hutterites or Hutterian Brethren, are to be found in the United States. (4) Melchiorites or Hoffmanites, that is, Anabaptists influenced by Melchior *Hoffmann (1498–1543), mainly in NW Germany and the Low Countries. Hoffmann taught an unorthodox Christology of a *Docetic kind and probably also encouraged *chiliastic hopes. (5) A group of Anabaptist refugees in Münster who in 1533–5 attempted to establish a Kingdom of the Saints under the leadership first of Jan Mattys (d. 1534) and then of Jan Bockelson (John of *Leyden, 1510–36). During the siege of the city a form of polygamy was introduced, and the grave excesses and fanaticism brought ill odour on the whole of the left-wing movement. (6) The *Mennonites, shepherded and reorganized in Holland and Friesland by Menno Simons after the Münster episode. Their views were similar to those of the Swiss Brethren, with pacifism and non-resistance strongly emphasized. They later became in Holland an influential community of rather liberal theological views and also spread to other continental lands and to America. In all they now number c. 643,000.

Miguel *Servetus is sometimes classed among the Anabaptists, but he was not the organizer of churches as were those listed above. Faustus *Socinus also rejected infant baptism, and Socinian influences are to be traced on some of the later Mennonites.

The Anabaptists were vigorously denounced by M. *Luther, H. *Zwingli, and J. *Calvin and severely persecuted by both Roman Catholics and Protestants. Those put to death probably ran into tens of thousands. Down to modern times they have suffered from too hostile criticism; and Anabaptist hymnology and martyrology are only now receiving sympathetic and scholarly study.

There were Anabaptists in England as early as 1534, but throughout the 16th cent. Anabaptist views seem to have been mainly confined to refugees from the Low Countries. The early *Separatists and *Brownists, however, were probably influenced by them, and John *Smyth was certainly in close touch with the Mennonites. In the 17th and 18th cents. Baptists were often described as Anabaptists, but the name had then become one of abuse with evil associations and was, as such, repudiated.

Quellen zur Geschichte der Wiedertäufer (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, vols. xiii, xvi, xx, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxvi, xxvii, xxix–xxxi, xxxiv, etc.; 1930 ff., incl. H. J. Hillerbrand, Bibliographie des Täufertums, 1520–1630 as vol. x, 1962; also publd. in Eng., Elkhart, Indiana, 1962). H. Fast (ed.), Der linke Flügel der Reformation. Glaubenszeugnisse der Täufer, Spiritualisten, Schwärmer und Antitrinitarier (Klassiker der Protestantismus, iv; Bremen, 1962). Eng. tr. of useful collection of extracts ed. G. H. Williams, Spiritual and Anabaptist Writers (Library of Christian Classics, xxv; 1957), with useful reff. J. Horsch, The Hutterian Brethren 1528–1931. A Story of Martyrdom and Loyalty (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, ii; Goshen, Indiana, 1931). R. J. Smithson, The Anabaptists. Their Contribution to our Protestant Heritage (1935). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia [1962]). F. H. Littell, The Anabaptist View of the Church ([American] Studies in Church History, viii; 1952); R. Friedmann, Hutterite Studies, ed. H. S. Bender (Goschen, Ind., 1961); G. F. Hershberger (ed.), The Recovery of the Anabaptist Vision. A Sixtieth Anniversary Tribute to Harold S. Bender (Scottsdale, Pa., 1957); W. R. Estep, The Anabaptist Story (Nashville, Tenn., 1963); P. J. Klassen, The Economics of Anabaptism 1525–1650 (Studies in European History, iii; 1964); V. Peters, All Things Common. The Hutterian Way of Life (Minneapolis, 1965); J. W. Bennett, Hutterian Brethren. The agricultural economy and social organization of a communal people (Stanford, 1967). J. S. Oyer, Lutheran Reformers against Anabaptists: Luther, Melanchthon and Menius and the Anabaptists of Central Germany (The Hague, 1964). R. Friedmann, Die Schriften der Huterischen Täufergemeinschaften. Gesamtkatalog ihrer Manuskriptbücher, ihrer Schreiber und ihrer Literatur 1529–1667 (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, Denkschriften, lxxxvi; 1965). H. J. Hillerbrand, Die politische Ethik des Oberdeutschen Täufertums (Beihefte der Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, vii; 1962); C. Baumann, Gewaltlosigkeit im Täufertum. Eine Untersuchung zur theologischen Ethik des Oberdeutschen Täufertums der Reformationszeit (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, iii; 1968). C. Krahn, Dutch Anabaptism. Origin, Spread, Life and Thought (1450–1600) (The Hague, 1968). W. E. Keeney, The Development of Dutch Anabaptist Thought and Practice from 1539–1564 (Nieuwkoop, 1968). E. A. Payne in The New Cambridge Modern History, ii, ed. G. R. Elton (1958), pp. 119–33. See also works cited under Mennonites.

ANACLETUS, St. (1st cent.), also 'Anencletus', Gk. ἀνέγκλητος i.e. 'blameless', early Bp. of *Rome. He is probably to be identified with 'Cletus' (so *Irenaeus, *Eusebius, *Optatus, Augustine), though the Liberian Catalogue and the Liber Pontificalis* distinguish them. He followed St. *Linus (the successor of St. *Peter) and preceded St. *Clement of Rome (d. c. 96). Nothing further is known of him, though tradition attributes the division of Rome into 25 parishes to him. The feast of St. Cletus (with St. Marcellinus, d. c. 304) used to be kept on 26 Apr. (suppressed 1969).

Jaffé, i, p. 1 f. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. lxix f. and 125. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., i (1903), col. 1141 f., s.v. 'Anaclet'; J. P. Kirsch in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), col. 1407 f., s.v. 'Anaclet'; P. Goggi in E.C., i (1948), col. 1126, s.v. 'Anacleto'.

ANAKEPHALAIOSIS. See Recapitulation.

ANALECTA BOLLANDIANA. A quarterly review which has been issued since 1882 by the *Bollandists. It is devoted to hagiographical studies and research and from time to time prints hitherto unpublished documents.

ANALOGY. A method of predication whereby concepts derived from a familiar object are made applicable to a relatively unknown object in virtue of some similarity between the two otherwise dissimilar objects (called 'analogues'). Thus it is by 'analogy' that it is possible for the human intellect to speak of the 'justice' of God, for, though God's justice is not totally dissimilar from justice as met with in human experience, it is certainly not identical with it. In this way the employment of analogy enables the theologian and the philosopher to avoid the Scylla of 'anthropomorphism', which by the use of 'univocal' concepts assumes the unqualified similarity between God and man, and the Charybdis of 'symbolism', which by the use of 'equivocal' concepts tends to presuppose their total dissimilarity. It should be noted that theologians in the tradition of St. *Thomas and *Cajetan who employ the method of analogy regard the errors by the 'symbolists' as less grievous than those of the 'anthropomorphists'. The legitimate employment on their view of the via eminentiae presupposes the prior use of the via negativa.

Crit. ed. of Thomas de Vio *Cajetan, De Nominum Analogia (completed 1498, first publ. Venice, 1506) by P. N. Zammit, O.P. (Rome, 1934; revised by P. H. Hering, O.P., ibid., 1952; Eng. tr., Duquesne Studies, Philosophical Series, iv; Pittsburgh, 1953). T. L. Penido, O.P., Le Rôle de l'analogie en théologie dogmatique (1931); B. de Solages, Dialogue sur l'analogie (1946); J. F. Anderson, The Bond of Being. An Essay on Analogy and Existence (1949); E. L. Mascall, Existence and Analogy (1949); H. Lyttkens, The Analogy between God and the World. An Investigation of its Background and Interpretation of its Use by Thomas of Aquino (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1953, 5; 1953); G. P. Klubertanz, S.J., St. Thomas Aquinas on Analogy (Jesuit Studies; Chicago, 1960); R. M. McInerny, The Logic of Analogy. An Interpretation of St Thomas (The Hague, 1961); B. Montagnes, O.P., La Doctrine de l'Analogie de l'Être d'après Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Philosophes Médiévaux, vi; 1963); B. Mondin, S.X., The Principle of Analogy in Protestant and Catholic Theology (The Hague, 1963). A. Chollet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1142–54; J. H. Crehan, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 70–80, s.v. 'Analogy of Being'.

ANALOGY OF RELIGION, The (1736). J. *Butler's famous book, the purpose and scope of which was indicated by its title, The Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature, was addressed to inquirers who, while conscious of order and regularity in Nature (which were ascribed by many of his *Deistical contemporaries to a transcendent Deity who was believed to have no interest in human affairs), were unconvinced of the claims of religion. Its two parts seek to establish the analogy and conformity of Natural and Revealed Religion respectively with what is observable in Nature.

Part I begins with a defence of the immortality of the soul, arguing that changes in the conditions of its life are of a piece with the visible changes experienced by the human body (ch. 1). There follows a defence of rewards and punishments (ch. 2) and of God's moral government of the world (ch. 3), and a discussion of the conditions and purposes of the state of probation that is allotted to each individual (chs. 4 and 5). In ch. 6 it is argued that the doctrine of necessity is no hindrance to religious belief, and in ch. 7 that our ignorance of the whole scheme of Providence should remove the grounds of perplexity concerning the Divine government of the world.

In Part II Butler turns to Revealed Religion. After stressing the importance of Revelation, if it be a fact, for human life (ch. 1), he argues against the supposed objection to it as miraculous (ch. 2). Its supernatural character, however, does not rule out theological speculation about it. It is within the competence of reason to judge not only of the meaning but also of the morality and evidence of Revelation (ch. 3). He goes on to urge that as Conscience, no less than the Bible, is a gift of God, no dictum of Scripture can offer any pretext for evading the demands of the moral imperative. Any apparent immoralities or inconsistencies in the Bible cannot be real (ch. 4). Redemption is wrought by the Death of Christ (ch. 5). The evidence for the Christian Revelation may not amount to demonstration, but this is no objection, for here as elsewhere probability is the guide of life (ch. 6). The work concludes with some account of the particular evidences for Christianity derived from miracles and prophecy (ch. 7) and a final defence of the mode of arguing from analogy (ch. 8).

The book is remarkable for the closely knit texture of its argument. Despite the absence of any direct reference to the Deists, in the long run it did more to discredit the movement than the vast body of polemical literature, now forgotten, which sought to grapple with its upholders directly.

Of modern editions the best is that of W. E. *Gladstone (1896).

ANAMNESIS (Gk. ἀνάμνησις, 'memorial'). The word, which is used in the narrative of the Eucharist in the NT (1 Cor. 11. 24 f., Lk. 22. 19), is employed by liturgists for the commemoration of the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, which in most liturgies is included in the Eucharistic *Canon after the Words of Institution.

O. Casel, O.S.B., 'Das Mysteriengedächtnis der Messliturgie im Lichte der Tradition' in J.L.W., vi (1926), pp. 113–204. N. A. Dahl, 'Anamnesis. Mémoire et commémoration dans le christianisme primitif' in Studia Theologica (Lund), i (1948), pp. 69–95. B. Botte, O.S.B., 'Problèmes de l'Anamnèse' in J.E.H., v (1954), pp. 16–24. Jungmann (1958), ii, pp. 271–81; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 218–26. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 1880–96.

ANANIAS AND SAPPHIRA. The man and his wife who, when the Apostolic Church experimented with community of goods, held back some of their property, and, on being challenged in turn by St. Peter, suddenly fell dead. The story is in Acts 5. 1–11.

ANAPHORA (Gk. ἀναφορά, lit. 'offering'). The central prayer in the Eucharistic Liturgy, containing the *Consecration, the *Anamnesis, and the *Communion. It thus covers more than the *Canon, of which the Communion is not considered to be a part. The traditional order of its parts is *Sursum Corda (usually introduced by some form of benediction), *Sanctus, Memorial of the Incarnation, Words of *Institution, *Epiclesis (not found in traditional Roman and derived Liturgies), and sometimes an Intercession. Among the oldest known Anaphoras are that in the '*Apostolic Tradition' of *Hippolytus and that extensively cited in St. Ambrose's '*De Sacramentis'.

ANASTASIA, St. (c. 304), martyr. A curious liturgical interest attaches to this saint as, though originally unconnected with *Rome, she is mentioned in the Roman *Canon of the Mass and used to be commemorated in the Second Mass for *Christmas Day. She was apparently martyred at Sirmium in Pannonia, whence her relics were translated to *Constantinople by St. *Gennadius (458–71) and interred in the church of the Anastasis, founded by St. *Gregory Nazianzen. Hence the cultus spread, probably through the agency of Byzantine officials, to the ancient church near the Circus Maximus known as the titulus Anastasiae (perhaps from the name of its founder) and the only church near the imperial palace; the dedication was now understood of the Sirmian saint; and the Pope celebrated here the stational Mass of Dawn on Christmas Day. Acc. to later and quite untrustworthy legends, Anastasia was a Roman lady of noble birth, the wife of a pagan Publius and a spiritual disciple of St. *Chrysogonus, and was martyred on the island of Palmaria. Feast day in W. until 1969, 25 Dec.; in E., 22 Dec.

'Acta' discussed in H. *Delehaye, S.J., Étude sur le légendier romain (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxiii; 1936), pp. 151–71. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 183–5. L. *Duchesne, 'Notes sur la topographie de Rome au moyen âge', No. III, 'Sainte-Anastasie', in Mélanges d'archéologie et d'histoire, vii (1887), pp. 387–413; H. Grisar, S.J., 'S. Anastasia di Roma' in Analecta Romana, i (1899), pp. 595–610; J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 18–23 ('Titulus Anastasiae'). P. B. Whitehead, 'The Church of S. Anastasia in Rome' in American Journal of Archaeology, xxxi (1927), pp. 405–20.

ANASTASIS (Gk. ἀνάστασις, 'resurrection'). From the first the word was used of the resurrection both of Christ Himself and of mankind in general. There were early churches dedicated to the Anastasis (of Christ) at *Jerusalem and *Constantinople; and it is possible (but see previous entry) that the present church of 'St. Anastasia' at *Rome, at the foot of the Palatine Hill, originally had that dedication.

ANASTASIUS, St. (d. c. 700) ('Anastasius Sinaita'), abbot of the monastery of St. Catherine on Mount *Sinai. A strong supporter of orthodoxy against all forms of heresy, he is believed to have attacked *monophysitism at *Alexandria as early as 640, and it was against the same heresy that his most important treatise, the 'Hodegos' (Gk. Ὁδηγός, i.e. 'Guide'), was primarily directed. The 154 'Questions and Answers' included in editions of his writings are not in their present form his work. Feast day in E., 21 April.

The fullest collection of his works is in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxix, 35–1288; further works under the title 'Anastasiana' in J. B. *Pitra, Iuris Ecclesiastici Graecorum Historia et Monumenta, ii (1868), pp. 238–94. J. B. Kumpfmüller, De Anastasio Sinaita (Würzburg, 1865). T. Spacil, S.J., 'La teologia di S. Anastasio Sinaita' in Bessarione, xxvi (1922), pp. 157–78, and xxvii (1923), pp. 14–44. G. Bardy, 'La Littérature patristique des "Quaestiones et Responsiones" sur l'écriture sainte: Anastase le Sinaïte' in R. Bibl., xlii (1933), pp. 339–43. M. Richard, 'Anastase le Sinaïte, l'Hodegos et le Monothélisme' in Revue des Études Byzantines, xvi (1958), pp. 29–42. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 41–6; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 524 f., with bibl. G. Bardy in Dict. Sp., i (1937), col. 546 f., s.v.; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., i (1949), col. 1157 f., s.v. 'Anastasio'.

ANASTASIUS BIBLIOTHECARIUS (9th cent.), scholar. Apparently a native of Rome, he was educated by Greek monks with whom he retained close associations. In Aug. 855 he allowed the Imperial party to proclaim him Anti-Pope against Benedict III, but soon proved himself too rash and undisciplined for the office and was disowned by his supporters a month later. He was the best Greek scholar of his age in the W. Nicholas I gave him the Abbacy of S. Maria in Trastevere, while later Popes made him their Librarian (hence 'Bibliothecarius') and rewarded him with important posts in the Chancery, where he tried to stem the threatening schism in the E. He attended the final session of the Eighth *Oecumenical Council (869) and later (871) translated its Acts into Latin. In 873 he translated the Acts of the Seventh Council (787). Among his other writings are a Chronographia Tripartita, based on earlier Byzantine historians, and several works on Dogmatic Theology.

'Epistolae sive Praefationes' ed. E. Perels and G. Laehr in M.G.H., Epistolae, vii (1928), pp. 395–442. A. Lapôtre, De Anastasio Bibliothecario sedis apostolicae (Paris, 1885). E. Perels, Papst Nikolaus I und Anastasius Bibliothecarius (1920), esp. pp. 181–241. U. Westerbergh, Anastasius Bibliothecarius, Sermo Theodori Studitae de Sancto Bartholomeo apostolo. A Study. (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, ix; 1963). P. Devos, S.J., 'Anastase le Bibliothécaire' Sa contribution à la correspondance pontificale. La date de sa mort' in Byzantion, xxxii (1962), pp. 97–115; id.,

'Une Passion grecque inédite de S. Pierre d'Alexandrie et sa traduction par Anastase le Bibliothécaire' in Anal. Boll., lxxxiii (1965), pp. 157–87. C. Leonardi, 'Anastasio Bibliotecario e l'Ottavo Concilio Ecumenico' in Studi Medievalli, 3a Serie, viii (1967), pp. 59–192. Duchesne, L.P., i, p. xxxv (on his reputed authorship of the Liber Pontificalis*). P. Devos, S.J., in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 480 f., s.v. 'Anastasius the Librarian'.

ANATHEMA (Gk. ἀνάθεμα, lit. 'suspended', 'set up above'). It is the equivalent of the Heb. word חֵרֶם, the root meaning of which is 'to cut off', 'curse', 'separate'. In the OT the term is used of votive offerings, e.g. Lev. 21. 5; but more often of things 'devoted to God', and hence 'under a ban' (e.g. in Deut. 7. 26), i.e. not for common use (cf. Lev. 27. 28 f.). Thus people, animals, cities, nations, and things could all become 'anathema', which frequently involved complete extermination (cf. Joshua 6, Deut. 7. 1 f., 1 Sam. 15). The practice was later alleviated, and after the Exile was normally confined to exclusion from the community and loss of goods. In this form it survived until the times of the Lord (e.g. Mt. 18. 17, Jn. 9. 22, though the term itself is not used in these and similar Gospel passages). St. *Paul uses the word to denote separation from the Christian community inflicted for sins such as preaching a gospel other than his (Gal. 1. 8 f.) or for not loving the Lord (1 Cor. 16. 22), whereas in other passages it simply means malediction (e.g. 1 Cor. 12. 3).

In the post-Apostolic Church the earliest recorded instance of anathematizing offenders is at the Council of *Elvira (c. 306). It soon became the regular procedure against heretics. In 431, St. *Cyril of Alexandria issued his famous twelve anathematisms against Nestorius. From the 6th cent. anathematization began to be distinguished from excommunication. *Gratian explained that the latter involved only exclusion from the Sacraments and worship, whereas the former was complete separation from the Body of the faithful (Decretum, Bk. ii, can. 106), a distinction which was closely akin to *Gregory IX's distinction of 'Major' and 'Minor' Excommunication. In practice the distinction lost its meaning, apart from the solemn ceremony which is used for anathemas. Acc. to the *Pontifical ('Ordo excommunicandi et absolvendi'), sentence is pronounced by the Bishop, vested in a purple cope and surrounded by twelve priests who bear lighted candles, which are thrown to the ground when sentence has been uttered.

J. Behm in T.W.B., i (1933), p. 356 f. L. Brun, Segen und Fluch im Urchristentum (Oslo, 1931). A. Vacant in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1168–71, and A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 512–16, with bibl.

ANATOLIUS, St. (d. c. 282), Bp. of Laodicea. He was a native of *Alexandria, where he established a school of *Aristotelian philosophy and obtained a seat in the senate. During the siege of the Alexandrian suburb Brychion, in the revolt under the Prefect Aemilian (262), Anatolius devised a successful stratagem to relieve his fellow-Christians. Soon afterwards he was consecrated, apparently as coadjutor-bishop, by Theotecnus, Bp. of *Caesarea in Palestine, and in 268, on his way to the Synod at *Antioch to deal with *Paul of Samosata, made Bp. of Laodicea. Though a man of great learning and held in high repute by *Eusebius (H.E., vii. xxxii. 6–12) and St. *Jerome (De Viris Ill., lxxiii), his writings were few. They included a treatise on the date of Easter (Περὶ τοῦ Πάσχα), based on the 19-year cycle still used, from which Eusebius (loc. cit.) quotes a passage, and a work in 10 Books on the Elements of Arithmetic (Ἀριθμητικαὶ εἰσαγωγαί), of which fragments survive (J. P. *Migne, PG, x, 231–6). It seems that the attribution to Anatolius of the 'Liber Anatoli de Ratione Paschali' (acc. to B. Krusch, compiled in England in the 6th cent.; acc. to C. H. *Turner, at *Iona between 580 and 600) is mistaken. Feast day, 3 July.

The 'Liber Anatoli de Ratione Paschali' was first published by A. Bucher, S.J., De Doctrina Temporum Commentarius (Antwerp, 1634; reprinted in J. P. Migne, PL, x, 209–32). A new edition was issued by B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie. Der 84-jährige Osterzyklus und seine Quellen (1880). C. H. Turner, 'The Paschal Canon of "Anatolius of Laodicea" ' in E.H.R., x (1895), pp. 699–710; E. *Schwartz, Christliche und jüdische Ostertafeln (1905).

ANCHORITE (m.), ANCHORESS (f.) (Gk. ἀναχωρέω, 'to withdraw'). A person who withdraws from the world to live a solitary life of silence, prayer, and mortification. Technically the term covers *coenobites as well as *hermits, but it is commonly restricted to the latter, i.e. persons who live entirely alone. The word, in distinction from 'hermit', is now used esp. of one who lives in strictly confined quarters (his 'cell'). In the early Church this way of life was at the will of the anchorite, who was free to leave his retirement if necessary, but later it was recognized and ordered acc. to rules by the Church, the bishop himself enclosing the anchorite, who was thenceforward confined within the walls of his cell. In the later Middle Ages an anchorite's cell was sometimes attached to parish churches.

R. M. Clay, The Hermits and Anchorites of England (1914), pp. 73–198 and 203–63.

ANCIENT OF DAYS. A designation of Jehovah found in Dan. 7. 9, 13, and 22. In the original Aramaic (עַתִּיק יוֹמִין) the expression here used should be translated literally 'one aged in days'. It conveyed no idea of eternity, but apparently described the Deity under the figure of an old man.

ANCREN(E) RIWLE (or Ancrene Wisse), 'Rule' or 'Guide of Anchoresses', originally written in English, c. 1220 in the West Midlands (Herefordshire?), for a small group of young women recluses, by a gifted and highly educated cleric, as yet unidentified. Several versions survive: the best text (Ancrene Wisse) is in Corpus Christi College Cambridge MS. 402. Planned as a whole, the Rule consists of 8 parts: parts 1 and 8 constitute the Outer Rule dealing with the religious observances and daily regimen of anchorite life; parts 2–7, the Inner Rule, teach how a strict control of sense-experience, the affections and the mental processes can lead through mortification and penitence to a life of dependent love. The treatment is non-mystical and, except for part 5 on confession, non-technical. The work is central to the English tradition of spirituality, was well known into Tudor times, was often copied, adapted (e.g. by the Lollards), and excerpted; was early translated into French and Latin. The author was familiar with Augustine, Gregory and the text of the Bible, with the devotional writings of *Anselm, the Cistercians (especially *Bernard of Clairvaux and *Ailred of Rievaulx), and with expository works by early scholastics (*Peter Lombard, *Peter Cantor).

His spiritual insight is remarkable, his imaginative power and persuasiveness as a prose writer outstanding.

Corpus Christi Cambridge MS. 402 ('Ancrene Wisse') ed. J. R. R. Tolkien (E.E.T.S., Original Series, cclix; 1962). Eng. tr. by M. B. Salu, with introd. by G. Sitwell, O.S.B. ('Orchard Books', 1955). Ancrene Wisse, parts 6 and 7, also ed., with introd., notes and bibl., by G. Shepherd (London, 1959). Editions of other Middle English texts as follows: B.M. Cotton MS. Nero A. XIV by J. Morton (Camden Society, lvii; 1853), incl. modern English version (modern Eng. version re-issued, with introd. by [F. A.] *Gasquet, The Nun's Rule, 1926) and by M. Day (E.E.T.S., Orig. Ser., ccxxv, 1952); from B.M. MS. Roy. 8 C 1 by A. C. Baugh (ib., ccxxxii, 1956); from Gonville and Caius College MS. 234/120 by R.M. Wilson (ib., ccxxix, 1954); from B.M. MS. Cleopatra C VI by E. J. Dobson (ib., cclxvii; '1972' [1973]); of the Lat. vers. from Merton Coll. MS. 44 and B.M. Cotton MS. Vitellius E. VII, by C. D'Evelyn (ib., ccxvi, 1944), and from B.M. Cotton MS. Titus D. XVIII by F. M. Mack and Bodleian MS. Eng. th. c. 70 by A. Zettersten (ib., cclii, 1963); and of the Fr. vers. from the B.M. Cotton MS. Vitellius F. VII by J. A. Herbert (ib., ccxix, 1944), and from Trinity College Cambridge MS. R. 14. 7 with variants from Bibliothèque Nationale MS. F. Fr. 6276 and MS. Bodley 90 by W. H. Trethewey (ib., ccxl, 1958). Hope Emily Allen, 'On the Author of the Ancren Riwle' in Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, xliv (1929), pp. 635–80; further notes by id. in Modern Language Review, xiv (1919), p. 209 f.; xvii (1922), p. 403; xviii (1923), pp. 1–8, and xix (1924), p. 95; xxiv (1929), pp. 1–15; in T.L.S., 1936, p. 863, and in [P. W. Long, ed.] Essays and Studies in Honor of Carleton Brown (New York, 1940), pp. 183–219; E. J. Dobson, 'The Date and Composition of Ancrene Wisse' in Proceedings of the British Academy, lii (for 1966; 1967), pp. 181–208; id., The Origins of Ancrene Wisse (Oxford, 1976).

ANCYRA (also Angora, now Ankara). Among the important early Church synods held here were:

(1) 314. A council of from 12 to 18 bishops from Asia Minor and Syria. It dealt with the question of the '*lapsi'. In its first nine canons ecclesiastical penalties were allotted acc. to the gravity and scandal of the lapse, but eventual reconciliation was granted to all. The remaining canons (10–25), which were concerned with various other offences, are of importance in the development of the *penitential system. Canon 13 has caused some controversy since it seems to favour ordination by presbyters.

(2) 358. A council of the *Semi-Arians under the presidency of *Basil of Ancyra, which rejected both extreme Arian teaching and also the Nicene *Homoousios ('of one substance'), and asserted that the Son was 'like in substance' to the Father.

On (1), Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 269–82; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 513–40. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 29–34; crit. ed. of Lat. texts in C. H. *Turner, E.O.M.I.A., II, i (1907). Hefele–Leclercq, i (1; 1907), pp. 298–326. R. B. Rackham, 'The Text of the Canons of Ancyra' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, iii (Oxford, 1891), pp. 139–216. C. H. Turner, 'Canon xiii of Ancyra' in C. *Gore, The Church and the Ministry (new ed., 1919), pp. 327–30.

On (2), Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 707–10; Mansi, iii (1759), cols. 265–90. Hefele–Leclercq, i (2; 1907), pp. 903–8.

ANDREW, St., *Apostle. He was the brother of St. *Peter, with whom he appears in the Gospels (Mk. 1. 16–20, 29, &c.). Though not a member of the inner band of three (Peter, *James, and *John), several incidents concerning him are recorded (Jn. 1. 35–42, Mt. 4. 18–20, Jn. 6. 8 f., Mk. 13. 3 f., &c.). *Eusebius (H.E., III. i. 1) states that he later went to Scythia. Acc. to a late and unreliable tradition he was martyred at Patras, in Achaia, in 60. The *Muratorian Fragment connects him with the writing of St. John's Gospel. The tradition of the form of St. Andrew's Cross (a cross like the Gk. X) cannot be traced back further than the 13th cent. Feast day 30 Nov. In the Anglican Communion, St. Andrewstide is widely observed by intercessions for foreign missions. Since c. 750 he has been regarded as the patron saint of Scotland. See also following entry.

P. M. Peterson, Andrew, Brother of Simon Peter. His History and his Legends (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, i; 1958); F. Dvornik, The Idea of Apostolicity and the Legend of the Apostle Andrew (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), pp. 138–299. M. R. James in H.D.B., i (1898), p. 92 f., s.v. On St. Andrew's connexion with Scotland, W. F. Skene, Celtic Scotland, i (1876), pp. 296–99, with reff. to orig. sources. Cf. also foll. bibl.

ANDREW, Acts of St. An apocryphal book dating probably from the early 3rd cent., and once held in great favour among the *Gnostic heretics. In its original form it no longer survives, though a fragment is contained in cod. Vat. gr. 808, a Coptic translation of part survives in a Utrecht papyrus, and *Gregory of Tours gives a long epitome of it. It depicts the apostle as imprisoned at Patras, and prosecuted for his advocacy of ascetic practices. The 'Martyrdom' of St. Andrew, a variant text of part of the work, describes the Apostle's death by crucifixion, but without mention of the 'St. Andrew's cross' (see previous entry).

Texts in R. A. Lipsius–M. Bonnet, Acta Apocrypha, ii, 1 (Leipzig, 1898), pp. 1–127. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 337–63. J. Flamion, Les Actes Apocryphes de l'Apôtre André (1911). G. Quispel, 'An Unknown Fragment of the Acts of Andrew (Pap. Copt. Utrecht N. 1)' in V.C., x (1956), pp. 129–48. Germ. tr., with comm. and further bibl., by M. Hornschuh in Schneemelcher, ii, pp. 270–96; Eng. tr., pp. 390–425. See also works cited in previous entry.

ANDREW OF CRETE, St. (c. 660–740), theologian and hymn-writer. A native of Damascus, he became Abp. of Gortyna in Crete c. 692. In 712 he lapsed into *Monothelitism, but retracted in the following year. He wrote many hymns, notably a series of '*canons', of which form of composition he is said to have been the inventor. His most famous piece, the 'Great Canon' (ὁ μέγας κανών), contains no less than 250 strophes. A considerable number of his homilies have also survived. Feast day, in E., 4 July. (He is not to be confounded with St. Andrew of Crete, 'the Colybite', d. 766; Feast day, 20 Oct.).

Opera, with Lat. tr., ed. by F. Combefis, O.P., Paris, 1644; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG, xcvii, 805–1444. Eng. tr. of the 'Great Canon' by D. J. Chitty (London, 1957). S. Vailhé, A.A., 'St. André de Crète' in E.O., v (1902), pp. 378–87. A. Heisenberg, 'Ein jambisches Gedicht des Andreas von Kreta' in B.Z., x (1901), pp. 505–14. T. Nissen, 'Diatribe und Consolatio in einer christlichen Predigt des achten Jahrhunderts' in Philologus, xcii (1937), pp. 177–98, with further note, pp. 382–5. P. Sanz, 'Ein Fragment eines neuen Kanon des Andreas von Kreta' in Jahrbuch der Österreichischen Byzantinischen Gesellschaft, iv (1955), pp. 1–11, incl. text. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 152–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 534, both with further bibl.

ANDREW OF ST.-VICTOR (d. 1175), biblical exegete. Canon of St.-Victor at Paris, he was first (c. 1147) abbot of the Victorine abbey at Wigmore in Herefordshire. Difficulties arose with the monks and he went back to St.-Victor after a few years, but between 1161 and 1163 he returned to Wigmore, where he died. He wrote commentaries on the *Octateuch, the Prophets, Proverbs and Ecclesiastes. Basing himself on the work of *Hugh of St.-Victor and using Jewish sources, he concentrated on the literal sense of Scripture to an extent not found elsewhere in the Middle Ages.

Commentary on Ecclesiastes ed. G. Calandra (Palermo, 1948); Comm. on Jonah ed. A. Penna in Biblica, xxxvi (1955), pp. 305–31. Beryl Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (ed. 2, Oxford, 1952), pp. 112–95. See also Victorines.

ANDREWES, LANCELOT (1555–1626), Bp. of *Winchester. Born in the parish of All Hallows, Barking, he was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1576 and catechist in 1580. He was a devoted scholar, hard-working and accurate, who became the master of fifteen languages. In 1589 he became vicar of St. Giles, Cripplegate, and in the same year, in succession to W. *Fulke, Master of Pembroke Hall. His incumbency at Cripplegate was attached to a prebend at *St. Paul's, where his remarkable preaching abilities first attracted notice. *Elizabeth I offered him two bishoprics (*Salisbury, *Ely); but he declined both owing to conditions which involved the alienation of some of the revenues. In 1601 he became Dean of *Westminster. Under *James I (1603), who held Andrewes in high esteem, he rapidly rose. He became Bp. of *Chichester in 1605, of Ely in 1609, and of Winchester in 1619. In 1604 he took a leading part in the *Hampton Court Conference, which appointed him one of the translators of the *Authorized Version of the Bible; he was largely responsible for the Pentateuch and the historical Books. In the next years he became involved in the controversy over the Oath of Allegiance, imposed after the *Gunpowder Plot (1605). When St. Robert *Bellarmine, under the pseudonym of 'Matthaeus Tortus' (his almoner), had attacked King James' Apology for the Oath (1608), Andrewes wrote a vigorous and able reply under the title Tortura Torti (1609). After a further attack on the King by Bellarmine, who now wrote in his own name, Andrewes issued a second work, Responsio ad Apologiam Cardinalis Bellarmini (1610). In 1613 he sat on the commission which investigated the Essex nullity suit where he was one of the seven members who voted for the divorce. In 1617 he accompanied James I to Scotland in an attempt to persuade the Scots to accept episcopacy. Later he was put on the commission on the irregularity of G. *Abbot, Abp. of *Canterbury, who had accidentally shot a gamekeeper while hunting (Oct. 1621). He died at Winchester House, *Southwark, on 26 Sept. 1626 and was buried in the parish church which is now Southwark Cathedral. In ASB, feast day 25 Sept.; in American BCP (1979), 26 Sept.

Theologically, Andrewes was one of the principal influences in the formation of a distinctive Anglican theology, which, in reaction from the rigidity of Puritanism, should be reasonable in outlook and Catholic in tone. Convinced that true theology must be built on sound learning, he cultivated the friendship of such divines as R. *Hooker and G. *Herbert, as well as of liberal scholars from abroad, e.g. I. *Casaubon, P. *Du Moulin, and H. *Grotius. He opposed the *Lambeth Articles (1595), though at the time he was chaplain to Abp. J. *Whitgift. Probably his known aversion to Calvinism explains his absence from the Anglican delegation to the Synod of *Dort (1618). He held a high doctrine of the Eucharist, emphasizing that in the sacrament we receive the true body and blood of Christ and constantly using sacrificial language of the rite. He wanted the C of E to express its worship in an ordered ceremonial and in his own chapel used the mixed chalice, incense and altar-lights.

But in his lifetime Andrewes' fame rested esp. on his preaching. He regularly preached at court on the greater Church feasts; and his 'Ninety-Six Sermons', first publd. in a collected edition by W. *Laud and J. Buckeridge in 1629, remain a classic of Anglican homiletic works. They are characterized by verbal conceits, a minute and (to modern feeling) overworked analysis of the text, and constant Greek and Latin quotations. His famous Preces Privatae, a collection of his devotions gradually compiled for his personal use, were first published by R. Drake in 1648. They were issued in a revised and much improved edition by F. E. *Brightman in 1903. His Patterne of Catechisticall Doctrine (1630; also posthumous) was based on lectures delivered at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge.

His Works ed. by J. P. Wilson and J. Bliss in L.A.C.T. (11 vols., 1841–54). Modern selection of his sermons ed. G. M. Story (Oxford, 1967), with biog. introd. Brief life by Henry Isaacson (1581–1654), Andrewes' pupil, amanuensis, and intimate friend (London, 1650 [1651]; new ed. by S. Isaacson, London, 1829; also incl. in works). Other lives and studies by A. T. Russell (Cambridge, 1860), R. L. *Ottley (London, 1894); Florence Higham (ib., 1952), M. F. Reidy, S.J. (Chicago, 1955), and P. A. Welsby (London, 1958). R. W. *Church. 'Lancelot Andrewes' in A. Barry (ed.), Masters of English Theology (1877), pp. 61–112. T. S. *Eliot, For Lancelot Andrewes. Essays on Style and Order (1928), ch. i, pp. 13–32. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 401–5, s.v.

ANENCLETUS, St. See Anacletus, St.

ANGEL (from Gk. ἄγγελος, 'messenger'). The belief in angels is amply attested in the Bible, both in the OT and in the NT. They are represented as an innumerable multitude (e.g. Gen. 32. 1 f., Dan. 7. 10) of beings intermediate between God and man. In the older books interest is chiefly confined to their mission (cf. Gen. 16. 7 ff.; Jgs. 6. 11 ff.), whereas in the later ones their nature is more clearly defined. In Isaiah's vision (Is. 6) and in Job they form the heavenly court and sing the praises of God, whose commands they obediently perform for nations (Dan. 10. 13 and 21, 12. 1) as well as for individuals, and even three proper names, *Michael (Dan. 10. 13), *Gabriel (Dan. 8. 16), and *Raphael (Tob. 7. 8), are recorded. In *Philo and the Jewish apocryphal writings, esp. *Enoch, angelology is highly developed, and angels, being the constant intermediators between God and man, were also regarded as the promulgators of the Law, a view accepted by the NT writers (Acts 7. 53, Gal. 3. 19, Heb. 2. 2). The Lord Himself sanctioned the popular belief. Acc. to His teaching the angels are spiritual beings (Mt. 22. 30) who enjoy always the vision of God in heaven (Mt. 18. 10) and will accompany Him at His Second Coming (Mt. 16. 27). The NT authors represent Christ as surrounded by angels at the most important periods of His life. They announce His Incarnation (Mt. 1. 20, 24) and His Birth (Lk. 2. 9–15); they minister to Him in the desert (Mt. 4. 11), strengthen Him in His agony (Lk. 22. 43), would be ready to defend Him when He is captured (Mt. 26. 53), and are the first witnesses of His Resurrection (Mt. 28. 2–7; Jn. 20. 12 f.). In Rev. the role of angels is paramount; their worship in heaven is the prototype of the worship of the Church, and their ministry at the end of the world is the visionary development of the Lord's teaching. On the other hand, the dangers of an exaggerated cult paid to them by some heretical sects in the early days of Christianity are reflected in St. Paul's Ep. to the Col. (2. 18) and perhaps also in Heb., which lays special emphasis on the superiority of Christ to the angels (1. 4 ff.).

In the first cents., while the great Trinitarian and Christological doctrines were being worked out, interest in angels was comparatively peripheral. Their existence, it is true, was accepted by the Fathers as a truth of faith; their immaterial and spiritual nature, however, was not fully recognized except by *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite and St. *Gregory the Great. *Origen attributed to them an ethereal body, an opinion which seems to have been shared by St. *Augustine. There was similar uncertainty on the subject of their present state. St. *Ignatius of Antioch had affirmed that they must believe in the Blood of Christ in order to be saved (Smyrn. 6. 1), and Origen held the good angels to be no less capable of falling than the demons were of being saved. This teaching was rejected by most of the orthodox Fathers, though traces of it are to be found in *Didymus, *Cyril of Jerusalem, and others. Perhaps the greatest interest was taken in the question of the angelic orders, raised by the two enumerations of St. Paul in Eph. 1. 21 and Col. 1. 16 respectively. By amalgamating both passages five different ranks were arrived at, to which were sometimes added 'Angels' (here understood as a separate species of beings) and '*Archangels' (so *Irenaeus), and also the *Seraphim of Is. 6. 2 and the *Cherubim of Ez. 1. 5; but their number and order were only fixed by Dionysius in his 'Celestial Hierarchies', where they are arranged in three hierarchies containing three choirs each, in the order of Seraphim, Cherubim and Thrones; Dominations, Virtues and Powers; Principalities, Archangels and Angels. Of these only the last two choirs have an immediate mission to men.

In the Middle Ages Dionysius' speculative doctrine was taken over and developed by the Schoolmen, and a treatise on angels became a part of the Commentaries on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard from the 13th cent. onwards. The doctrines of St. *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus were foreshadowed by St. *Albert the Great and St. *Bonaventure respectively. St. Thomas and all the Schoolmen after him are at one on the point that angels are intelligences not destined to be united to a body, and thereby differ from the human soul. Acc. to St. Thomas they are not composed of 'form' and 'matter', but are subsistent forms, each differing from the other and forming a species in himself. From their immateriality follows that they are by nature immortal and incorruptible; having neither extension nor dimensions they cannot be in a place, but can move and act on material beings by applying their power to the place in which they want to be. Duns Scotus, on the other hand, regards angels as composite beings consisting of form and matter, though the latter is not corporeal. There may be several angels in the same species, and several angels may occupy the same place. The angelic mode of knowledge had already been discussed by St. Augustine (Civ. Dei, 11. 29), from whom St. Thomas took over the distinction between 'scientia matutina' and 'scientia vespertina', the former being supernatural knowledge which sees its objects in the Divine Word, and the latter natural, which knows individual things not, indeed, as man, through the senses, but through the intelligible species infused into the angelic intelligence at its creation. St. Thomas held that its proper object was the immaterial, and its mode not discursive reasoning, but the intuitive perception of conclusions in their principles, a view contested by Duns Scotus, and later by F. *Suarez, who held that angels can reason. On the question of the Fall, St. Thomas taught that the angelic will is such that one good or bad act fixes him irrevocably in good or evil, whereas Duns Scotus regarded a succession of acts as necessary. On several other points both schools of thought were in agreement. Thus most Scholastics taught that the angels were created at the same time as the material universe, that they were elevated to a state of grace in order to undergo a test followed either by supernatural beatitude or eternal damnation, and that the chief Divine mysteries, esp. the Incarnation, were then revealed to them. In the question of the hierarchy they all followed Dionysius more or less closely.

The teaching of post-medieval theologians runs on the lines of a Thomist-Scotist synthesis as developed by Suarez. The RC Church has made few pronouncements on the subject. While Catholic Christianity in general teaches the existence of angels, their perfect spirituality, and their creation before man, and enjoins a cult similar to that given to the saints, Protestants have tended to shrink from definition and speculation in the matter. See also Guardian Angels.

F. Suarez, S.J., Summa Theologiae de Deo Rerum Omnium Creatore, pars secunda, 'De Angelis' (Lyons, 1620). J. Turmel, 'Histoire de l'angélologie des temps apostoliques à la fin du Ve siècle' in Revue d'histoire et de littérature religieuses, iii (1898), pp. 533–52; id., 'L'Angélologie depuis le faux Denys l'Aréopagite', ib., iv (1899), pp. 217–38, 289–309, 414–34, 537–62; J. Daniélou, S.J., Les Anges et leur mission d'après les Pères de l'Église (Collection Irénikon, n.s., v; 1952). E. Peterson, Das Buch von den Engeln. Stellung und Bedeutung der heiligen Engel im Kultus (Leipzig, 1935; Eng. tr. 1964). G. Davidson, A Dictionary of Angels (New York and London [1967]). A. Davidson in H.D.B., i (1900), pp. 93–7, s.v.; A. Vacant, G. Bareille, L. Petit, J. Parisot, J. Miskgian in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1189–1272, s.v. 'Anges'; H. L. Pass in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 578–83, s.v. 'Demons and Spirits (Christian)'; A. Lemonnoyer, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 255–262, s.v. 'Angélologie'; J. Duhr in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 580–625, s.v.'Anges', all with bibl. For representation in art, also H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 2080–2161, s.v. 'Anges', with bibl., and J. Villette, L'Ange dans l'art d'Occident du XIIe au XVIe siècle (1940), with bibl.

ANGELA OF FOLIGNO, Bl. (c. 1248–1309), Umbrian mystic. She came of a wealthy family and spent almost her whole life at Foligno. After the death of her husband she was converted to a life of austerity and prayer and later became a *Franciscan tertiary. She was the recipient of frequent visions, esp. relating to the Lord's Passion. The accounts of them, taken down from dictation by her confessor, Brother Arnold, and later circulated as 'Liber Visionum et Instructionum', reflect early Franciscan piety at its highest. Angela was beatified by Innocent XII in 1693. Feast day, 4 Jan. (in the Franciscan Order, 30 Mar.).

Her 'Liber Visionum', publ. at Alcalá 1502, ed. L. P. Rosello (Venice, c. 1510); also Paris, 1598, and Cologne, 1601; ed. with notes by J. H. Lammertz (Bibliotheca Mystica et Ascetica, v, Cologne, 1851). Crit. edd. after the MS. Assisi 342 by P. Doncœur, S.J.–M. Faloci Pulignani (Bibliothèque d'Ascétique et de Mystique ii, Paris, 1925) and, with Fr. tr., ed. M. J. Ferré–L. Baudry (Paris, 1927). Eng. tr. by A. P. J. Cruikshank (anon.; 1871) and M. G. Steegman, with preface by A. Thorold ('1909' [1908]). L. Leclève, Sainte Angèle de Foligno (1936). M. J. Ferré, 'Les Principales Dates de la Vie d'Angèle de Foligno' in Revue d'Histoire franciscaine, ii (1925), pp. 21–33. Hilda Graef in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 501 f., s.v.

ANGELA MERICI, St. (1474–1540), foundress of the *Ursulines. She lived most of her mature life at Brescia. In her early years she was a Franciscan *tertiary. After devoting some years to the education of young girls and the care of sick women, she made a pilgrimage to Palestine in 1524–5 during which she was smitten with blindness for a time. As the result of visions she founded at Brescia in 1535 a religious community for women which she named after her patron, St. Ursula. In 1537 she herself was elected superior. She was canonized in 1807. Feast day, 27 Jan.

The earliest biography, compiled by G. B. Nazari in 1560, is printed as an appendix to G. Bertoletti, Storia di S. Angela Merici, 1474–1540 (Brescia, 1923). Later lives by O. Gondi, S.J. (Sabbia, 1660) and C. Doneda (Brescia, 1768). Ste Angèle Merici et l'ordre des Ursulines, par une religieuse du même ordre (2 vols., 1922); Sister M[ary] Monica, O.S.U., Angela Merici and her Teaching Idea, 1474–1540 (New York, 1927), with bibl.; T. Ledóchowska, Angèle Merici et la Compagnie de Sainte-Ursule (2 vols., Rome, 1968). Other studies by C. M. Salvatori, S.J. (Rome, 1807), V. Postel (Paris, 1878), B. O'Reilly (London, 1880), M. V. Neusee, O.S.U. (Innsbruck, 1893; ed. 2, Freiburg i.Br., 1912), W. E. Hubert (Mainz, 1891), and P. Caraman (London, 1963).

ANGELIC DOCTOR, The. A title applied from medieval times to St. *Thomas Aquinas in reference to 'the almost angelic quality of his intellect' (Motu Proprio, Doctoris Angelici, 29 June 1914). See also Doctors, Scholastic.

ANGELIC HYMN (Lat. hymnus angelicus). Another name for the Gloria in excelsis* (q.v.), the opening words of which were the hymn of the angelic host at *Bethlehem (Lk. 2. 14).

ANGELICO, Fra (1387–1455), Blessed Fra Angelico Giovanni da Fiesole, painter, of the Florentine school. He joined the *Dominican Order in 1407, and did his first work in art in illuminating MSS. Between 1409 and 1418 the struggles of the *Great Schism made it necessary for him to be away from his own community house at Fiesole, and he stayed first at Foligno, and then at Cortona, where are some of his greatest pictures. In middle life he undertook the decoration of the convent of San Marco at Florence and the frescoes of two chapels in the *Vatican. He is said to have been offered the Abpric. of Florence, but to have declined it in order to devote himself wholly to his art. His greatest artistic talents lay in his use of brilliant colour and his powers of decoration.

Studies by L. Douglas (London, 1900; ed. 2, 1902), F. Schottmüller (Klassiker der Kunst, xviii; Stuttgart, 1911), G. Bazin (Paris, 1941; Eng. tr., 1949), J. Pope-Hennessy (London, 1952), and S. Orlandi, O.P. (Florence, 1964), all with illustrations. Collection of colour reproductions by A. Belli (The Gallery of Masterpieces, 1954). S. Fumet, Les Fresques de Fra Angelico au Couvent Saint-Marc de Florence (1948), with collotype reprods. Life by H. Cochin ('Les Saints', Paris, 1906).

ANGELS OF THE CHURCHES. The seven angels of the Churches of *Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea mentioned in Rev. 1–3. To whom or what is the reference is much disputed. If the angels are men they may be bishops occupying their sees; if heavenly beings, they are perhaps the spiritual protectors of the respective Churches.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 69–72. H. M. Gwatkin in H.D.B., i (1900), col. 97, s.v. See also comm. to Rev. cited s.v.

ANGELUS. In the W. Church, the devotion consisting in the repetition thrice daily (early morning, noon, and evening) of three *Ave Marias with *versicles and a *collect as a memorial of the Incarnation. A bell is rung three times for each Ave and nine times for the collect. The name comes from the first word of the opening versicle in the Latin. During *Paschaltide its place is taken by a devotion beginning with the verse, 'Regina coeli laetare, alleluia'. Its history is obscure. The use of a similar devotion, recited at night to a bell, was adopted in Germany in the 13th cent. The morning Angelus first appears in the 14th cent., while the earliest evidence for the midday Angelus is from the 15th cent. The devotion did not come into general use until the 17th cent. The evening Angelus bell is commonly known in Italy as the 'Ave Maria'.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'Our Popular Devotions', Sect. v: 'The Angelus', in The Month, xcviii (1901), pp. 483–99, 607–16; xcix (1902), pp. 61–73, 518–32; also c (1902), p. 89 f. T. Esser, O.P., 'Geschichte des englischen Grusses' in Hist. J., v (1884), pp. 88–116; id., 'Das Ave-Maria-Läuten und der "Engel des Herrn" in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwickelung', ib., xxiii (1902), pp. 22–51, 247–69, 775–825. Hefele–Leclercq, v (2; 1913), Appendice IV, 'Sur la salutation angélique prescrite par le canon 7 du Concile de Béziers en 1246', pp. 1734–59. U. Berlière in D.T.C., i (pt. i; 1903), cols. 1273–7, s.v. 'Angélique (Salutation)'; H. Thurston, S.J., in Dict. Sp., i (1937), col. 1164 f., s.v. 'Ave Maria', both with bibl.

ANGELUS SILESIUS (1624–77), (Johannes Scheffler), mystical poet and controversialist. The son of a Lutheran Polish noble, he became (c. 1649) court physician to the Duke of Oels, in Silesia. In 1653 he became a RC, and thenceforward devoted his time and energies to writing. In 1661 he was ordained priest. His chief fame lies in his mystical poems, published under the titles of Heilige Seelenlust (1657) and Der Cherubinische Wandersmann (1675; 1st ed. with different title, 1657). The former interprets the spiritual life with the imagery of the Song of Solomon: the latter was written under the deep influence of *Eckhart. He also began in 1663 a series of 55 controversial tracts in which he attacked various Christian sects. Some of these were collected in his Ecclesiologia (1677).

Editions of his works by H. L. Held (3 vols., Munich, 1921; ed. 2, 1924) and G. Ellinger (2 vols., Berlin [1924]). J. E. C. Flitch, Angelus Silesius (selected Eng. translations, 1932). G. Ellinger, Angelus Silesius. Ein Lebensbild (Breslau, 1927). Mary H. Godecker, Angelus Silesius' Personality through his Ecclesiologia (Catholic University of America Studies in German, x; 1938). J. Baruzi, Création religieuse et pensée contemplative (1951), pp. 99–239. H. Althaus, Johann Schefflers 'Cherubinischer Wandersmann': Mystik und Dichtung (Beiträge zur deutschen Philologie, ix; 1956).

ANGLICAN AND EASTERN CHURCHES ASSOCIATION. A body founded in 1864, partly on the initiative of J. M. *Neale, to pray and work for the reunion of the Orthodox Church and the Anglican Communion. It was originally known as the 'Eastern Church Association', and in its present form it also embodies another organization, founded in 1906, the 'Anglican and Eastern Orthodox Churches Union'. During 1920–39 and 1950–4 it issued The Christian East, and since 1955 The Eastern Churches News-Letter.

ANGLICAN CHANT. The music of the Psalms, as widely used in the Anglican Communion. It consists of a tune in barred music, harmonized, in which the first part of each half-verse is sung on a reciting note, and the concluding words fitted to a tune in metrical rhythm. It developed out of the plainchant psalm-tones about the end of the 17th cent., harmony and more rigid time being introduced; and it became widely popular about the middle of the 19th, when parish churches began to copy the choral services of cathedrals. In the 20th cent. a movement began to adapt the Anglican chant to a less rigid time, in order to avoid distortion of the words, and various methods, such as rearrangements of verses, the use of speech-rhythm, &c., have been employed to this end. The Anglican chant is still very widely used, but there has been, since the middle of the 19th cent., a parallel revival of *plainchant.

C. H. Phillips, The Singing Church (1945), pp. 112 f. and 201–10. K. R. Long, The Music of the English Church (1972), esp. p. 235 f. R. *Bridges in P.B.D. (1912), pp. 171–81, s.vv. 'Chant, Anglican' and 'Chanting'; P. A. Scholes, The Oxford Companion to Music (1938), pp. 28–32, s.v.; T. Helmore in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5, by E. Blom), ii (1954), pp. 172–4; W. K. Stanton, ib., pp. 174 f., s.vv. 'Chant' and 'Chanting'.

ANGLICAN COMMUNION, The. The Church in communion with, and recognizing the leadership of, the see of *Canterbury, whether in England or abroad. It consists of the *Church of England (the only part still retaining State Establishment), the Church of *Ireland, the Church in *Wales, the Episcopal Church in *Scotland, the (*Protestant) Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., the Anglican Churches of *Canada, *Australia, and of Papua New Guinea, the Churches of the Provinces of the *West Indies, *New Zealand, *South Africa, *West Africa, Central Africa, Tanzania, Kenya, *Burma, Melanesia, the Indian Ocean, Nigeria, Uganda, and of Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire, the Nippon Sei Ko Kwai (*Japan), the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui (*China), the Episcopal Churches of *Brazil and in *Jerusalem and the Middle East, the Province of the Episcopal Church of the Sudan, and various dioceses under the direct jurisdiction of the Abp. of Canterbury or another Anglican Primate (or his see).

For the first 250 years after the *Reformation, the Anglican Communion, except for the Episcopal Church in Scotland (disestablished from the days of William III), consisted solely of the State Church of England, Ireland, and Wales. Efforts to found sees in the colonies were hindered by supposed legal objections, and priests working there, who were for the most part state chaplains rather than missionaries, were placed under the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London. In 1784 the Scottish bishops accepted an invitation to consecrate S. *Seabury as the first bishop of the American Church, and after an Act (26 Geo. III, c. 84[2]) had been passed in 1786 which made possible the consecration in England of bishops for sees abroad, three more American bishops were consecrated by the English Archbishops in 1787. The Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States thus came into being as an autonomous body in full communion with Canterbury, and in 1789 produced its own revised edition of the BCP.

Meanwhile in 1787 the first Bp. of Nova Scotia (C. Inglis) was consecrated, with jurisdiction over British N. America, and new sees were shortly afterwards set up in this area. In 1814 T. F. *Middleton was consecrated the first Bp. of Calcutta, a diocese later extended to cover *India, Ceylon, the E. Indies, and New S. Wales, but soon divided by the creation of the sees of Madras (1835) and Bombay (1837), and the appointment of W. Broughton as first Bp. of Australia in 1836. The diocese of New Zealand was set up in 1841, with G. A. *Selwyn as its first bishop.

In the same year the Colonial Bishoprics' Council, through the efforts of C. J. *Blomfield, Bp. of London, was formed and a great increase in the number of overseas bishoprics followed. Provincial organization began in 1835, when the Bp. of Calcutta became Metropolitan of India; it was extended to Australia in 1847, to S. Africa in 1853, to New Zealand in 1858, and to Canada in 1860. During the same period diocesan and provincial synods began to meet, and towards the end of the 19th cent. the title of Abp. was assumed by some of the metropolitans. In 1855 for the first time an Anglican (non-U.S.) bishop was consecrated outside the British Isles. Gradually complete independence both of the state and of the jurisdiction of Canterbury was secured by those dioceses with provincial organization. Other dioceses, though free from state establishment, depend directly upon Canterbury, and are subject to the Abp. of Canterbury's jurisdiction. The Church of Ireland was disestablished in 1869, that in Wales in 1920, and the Church of India in 1928. Outside the British Empire a few Anglican sees were founded, (e.g.) in China and Japan (where English, Canadian, and American missions worked together); in Jerusalem, Iran, and Egypt; and in scattered places elsewhere, e.g. Madagascar. The diocese of Gibraltar included Anglican chaplaincies in S. Europe until the diocese of Europe was established in 1980. In many former Commonwealth countries (e.g. Nigeria), now independent, new dioceses have been formed.

Anglican bishops meet periodically as a body at the *Lambeth Conference (q.v.), which was instituted in 1867 by Abp. C. T. *Longley. The conference cannot legislate or make decisions in the name of the Church, but its published reports indicate the opinions of the contemporary Anglican episcopate as a whole.

H. Lowther Clarke, Constitutional Church Government in the Dominions beyond the Seas and in other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924). J. W. C. Wand (ed.), The Anglican Communion. A Survey (1948). H. G. G. Herklots, Frontiers of the Church. The Making of the Anglican Communion (1961). The Eucharistic rites of the various branches of the Anglican Communion are collected in B. [J.] Wigan (ed.), The Liturgy in English (1962); C. O. Buchanan (ed.), Modern Anglican Liturgies 1958–1968 (1968). See also works cited under Church of England. For current information see The Official Year Book of the Church of England.

ANGLICAN EVANGELICAL GROUP MOVEMENT. An association of the Anglican clergy and laity who held *Liberal Evangelical views. The movement originated in 1906 as a private body with the title of the 'Group Brotherhood', led by J. C. Wright (then Canon of Manchester), F. S. Guy Warman (then Vicar of Birkenhead, later Bp. of Manchester), and J. E. Watts-Ditchfield (then Vicar of St. James-the-less, Bethnal Green, later Bp. of Chelmsford), and arose from the desire of some of the younger Evangelicals to free Evangelicalism from what they regarded as an unduly conservative interpretation of Christianity, to welcome the help of science and criticism in the search for truth, and to infuse more dignity and beauty into worship. The 1923 annual conference at Coleshill, nr. Birmingham, decided to establish a public body under the title of 'Anglican Evangelical Group Movement' and to issue a public statement of its aims. Its members were pledged to study the social and economic implications of the Gospel, and to work for effective unity among all Christian people. Its activities included group study and the holding of retreats and conventions, esp. an annual conference which for many years from 1928 met at Cromer, for the deepening of spiritual life. Under the leadership of V. F. Storr (d. 1940) the movement saw the heyday of its influence from 1923 to 1939. Attempts to revive the movement after the end of the Second World War were not entirely successful and in 1967 it formally terminated its existence.

T. G. Rogers (ed.), Liberal Evangelicalism. By Members of the Church of England (1923). L. Hickin, 'Liberal Evangelicals in the Church of England' in C.Q.R., clxix (1968), pp. 43–54.

ANGLICAN-METHODIST CONVERSATIONS. In a Cambridge University sermon on 3 Sept. 1946, G. F. *Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury, suggested that as negotiations for constitutional union between the C of E and the Free Churches had come to nothing in the period before the Second World War, a fresh start might be made if the Free Churches would consider accepting episcopacy and coming into communion with the C of E. A conference of delegates appointed by the Archbishop and representatives of the Free Churches met to consider the implications of the sermon and in 1950 issued a Report, Church Relations in England, which outlined a possible course of action but emphasized that it must be left to individual churches to decide whether they wished to pursue the matter. Of the Free Churches only the *Methodists decided to do so. In 1955 the Methodist Conference and the Convocations of Canterbury and York decided to enter into conversations on the basis of the Church Relations in England Report. Twelve representative ministers and lay people were appointed on either side, with G. K. A. *Bell, Bp. of Chichester, and Dr. Harold Roberts as joint-chairmen. Meetings began in July 1956.

It was decided to issue an Interim Report in 1958, mainly because those taking part in the Conversations had concluded that the Abp. of Canterbury's original proposal would be acceptable only if it were viewed as the first stage of a scheme to bring about constitutional union between the two Churches, and it was thought necessary to seek approval for this new aim. This approval was given by the Methodist Conference and the *Lambeth Conference in the summer of 1958 and by the Convocations in Jan. 1959.

The Final Report was issued in 1963. This outlined a plan in two stages. Stage I was to be inaugurated by a Service of Reconciliation, which included a pledge to seek constitutional or organic union and a rite of unification of the existing ministries of the two Churches. The service was to be followed by the consecration of the first Methodist bishops, in which Anglican bishops would take part, and thereafter all ordinations in the Methodist Church would be performed by bishops. In other matters the authority of the Methodist Conference was to remain unimpaired during Stage I, and no time-table was set for the achievement of Stage II.

After debate on the Report of the Conversations, in 1965 outline proposals were approved by the Convocations and the Methodist Conference, and a new Anglican–Methodist Unity Commission was set up under the chairmanship of R. W. Stopford, Bp. of London, and Dr. Roberts. In 1967 it issued an interim statement, Towards Reconciliation, which contained further discussion of some of the doctrinal issues raised, a revision of the Service of Reconciliation, and a draft of an Ordinal. These were further revised in the light of criticisms, and in 1968 the final Report was published in two parts: Part I, The Ordinal, and Part II, The Scheme. The Ordinal contained a Preface on the doctrine of ministry, which had been drawn up in consultation with RC and Orthodox theologians, and represented a wide area of ecumenical agreement. More opposition was aroused by the Scheme, esp. the proposals for the unification of the existing ministries in the Service of Reconciliation.

It was agreed that the Convocations and the Methodist Conference should vote on the Scheme simultaneously on 8 July 1969 and that a 75 per cent majority should be required before it could be implemented. The Methodist Conference produced a 77 per cent vote in favour, the Convocations only a 69 per cent majority. Nevertheless, the Scheme was considered by the Methodist District Synods and was then returned to the Conference of June 1970, where it received a 79 per cent majority. The Standing Committee of the General Synod (which came into being in 1970) set up a working party whose Report was laid before the Synod in Feb. 1971. The Synod gave provisional approval to the Scheme in July 1971 and it was referred to Diocesan Synods for consideration. When it came before the Synod for a final decision on 3 May 1972, it received just under 66 per cent approval and so lapsed.

Alternative proposals to the 1968 Scheme were put forward by C. O. Buchanan and others, Growing into Union. Proposals for a united Church in England (1970).

ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS. Until the subject was removed from the sphere of public discussion in the RC Church by *Leo XIII's Bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896), there was diversity of opinion in that Communion on the *validity of the Orders of *Bishop, *Priest, and *Deacon conferred by the Reformation *Ordinals of the C of E. The grounds on which their validity has been and is attacked fall into two classes: (a) Attacks on the actual historical continuity by the laying-on of hands. These usually assert either that Abp. M. *Parker was not himself consecrated or that his principal consecrator, W. *Barlow, had not been consecrated. Only rarely is either of these theses nowadays maintained by scholars; and even if the succession had been lost with Parker, it would have been restored with W. *Laud, from whom the present English episcopate derives, and who was consecrated by bishops, some of whom were in the undisputed Irish and Italian successions. (b) Attacks on the sufficiency of the Ordinal introduced under *Edward VI. These have been of two kinds: (1) Assertions that the omission of the porrectio instrumentorum (see Instruments, Tradition of the) and other ceremonies renders the rite invalid. The recognition that such ceremonies were not in use in the early Church has led this objection to be abandoned. (2) The arguments of Leo XIII that the *intention of the Anglican Church as expressed in the rite is defective because there are no acts or words explicitly conferring the power for priests to offer sacrifice, and that the acts and words formerly used for this purpose were omitted by the Reformers. To this charge the Abps. of Canterbury and York replied in an Encyclical Letter, dated 29 Mar. 1897, in which they argued that the Anglican Church makes it clear that she intends to confer the Office instituted by Christ and all that it contains; they contended that the C of E teaches the doctrine of the *Eucharistic Sacrifice in terms at least as explicit as those of the *Canon of the Roman Mass; and finally they pointed out that the words and acts required by the Pope are not found in the earliest Roman Ordinals, so that if their omission renders an Ordination invalid, the Orders of the Church of Rome are on no surer footing than those of the C of E. It has also been made a ground of complaint against the Edwardine Ordinal that the formulae for the Ordination of bishop and priest are the same, 'Accipe Spiritum Sanctum'; but to this objection it is replied that the intention to distinguish between the two is sufficiently expressed in the existence of two separate services, the contents of the services themselves, and the Preface to the Ordinal.

The validity of Anglican Orders has been recognized by the *Old Catholics, and many parts of the Eastern Orthodox Church hold that they are as valid as those of the RC Church.

Besides the official documents mentioned, there were several important pamphlets issued by the Church Historical Society (S.P.C.K.) publ. c. 1896. E. Denny–T. A. *Lacey, De Hierarchia Anglicana Dissertatio Apologetica (1895); T. A. Lacey, A Roman Diary and other Documents (1910); Viscount *Halifax, Leo XIII and Anglican Orders (1912); G. *Dix, The Question of Anglican Orders (1944); F. Clark, S.J., Anglican Orders and Defect of Intention (1956); id., Eucharistic Sacrifice and the Reformation (1960; ed. 2, Oxford, 1967); J. J. Hughes, Absolutely Null and Utterly Void. The Papal Condemnation of Anglican Orders 1896 (1968); id., Stewards of the Lord (1970). C. Androutsos, The Validity of English Ordinations from an Orthodox Catholic Point of View (1909); C. Papadopoulos, The Validity of Anglican Ordinations (Eng. tr., 1931); E. R. Hardy (ed.), Orthodox Statements on Anglican Orders (New York, 1946). L. Marchal in D.T.C., xi, 2 (1932), cols. 1154–93, s.v. 'Ordinations anglicanes', with bibl.

ANGLICAN–ROMAN CATHOLIC INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION. A joint commission of 9 representatives each of the Anglican Communion and the RC Church, set up in accordance with the Common Declaration of Pope *Paul VI and Abp. A. M. *Ramsey (1966) and the Report of the Joint Preparatory Commission of the two Churches which met in Malta in 1968. At the end of Conversations (or residential meetings) held in different places, the Commission issued: 'An Agreed Statement on Eucharistic Doctrine' at *Windsor in 1971; 'Ministry and Ordination. An Agreed Statement on the Doctrine of the Ministry' at *Canterbury in 1973; 'Authority in the Church' at *Venice in 1976, and 'Elucidations' at *Salisbury in 1979. The Commission's 'Final Report' (agreed at Windsor in 1981; publd. 1982) included these four documents, adding an Introduction on the Church, a second Agreed Statement on Authority, and a further Elucidation. Where possible, the Commission avoided the conventional method of comparing parallel accounts of the views of the respective Churches, instead formulating statements expressing 'substantial agreement' on the essential points of the doctrines under consideration.

ANGLICANISM. This word properly applies to the system of doctrine and practice upheld by those Christians who are in religious communion with the see of *Canterbury. But it is esp. used, in a somewhat more restricted sense, of that system in so far as it emphasizes its claim to possess a religious outlook distinguishable from that of other Christian communions both Catholic and Protestant. The original formulation of Anglican principles is to be sought in the reign of *Elizabeth I rather than in that of *Henry VIII or Edward VI, for it was under her that a via media between the opposing factions of Rome and Geneva became a political necessity and Anglicanism as a doctrinal system came into existence. Its formularies, in what is substantially their present form, also date from Elizabeth's reign, and the Elizabethan BCP was the focus of the controversies of the 17th cent., the subsequent alterations in the Book being of little theological significance.

The 17th cent., however, was the golden age of Anglicanism, and in the lives and writings of L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, A. *Sparrow, H. *Thorndike, T. *Ken, and many others, often known collectively as the '*Caroline Divines', the Church of England at once confirmed her rejection of the claims of Rome and refused to adopt the theological system of the Continental reformers. The historic episcopate was preserved, even though many, e.g. R. *Hooker (the greatest of the Elizabethans), did not regard it as of divine institution. The legitimacy, and to some degree even the necessity, of ecclesiastical development was not denied, but its extent was held to be limited by the appeal to Scripture, as containing all things necessary to eternal salvation. Truth was therefore to be sought from the joint testimony of Scripture and ecclesiastical authority, which in its turn was to be based on the traditions of the first four centuries.

At the Restoration of 1660 the school of W. Laud (d. 1645) triumphed; but its influence was partly lost to the Church by the secession in 1690 of the *Nonjurors (one archbishop, six bishops, about four hundred of the clergy, and the indeterminate number of lay people who adhered to them), which deprived her of many successors of the men who had shaped her formularies and defended her claim to be something more than a product of the Reformation. From the point of view of historic Anglicanism the loss was the more serious as it took place at a time when the C of E needed all her resources of learning and piety to resist the secular learning of the oncoming 18th cent. Though the attacks of the *Deists and rationalists were in fact repelled, Anglicanism was in decline until the rise of the *Oxford Movement. The *Evangelical Revival did much to renew the spiritual life of the Church, but its ideals departed from those of the traditional ethos of the C of E, though Evangelicals have continued to form a large party in the Church. In the 18th cent. Evangelicalism also took little account of the intellectual atmosphere of its age. It was the leaders of the Oxford Movement who advanced once more, and, indeed, often went beyond, the claims of the Caroline Divines. As the influence of the Movement extended it was in some measure affected by the *Ultramontanism which in the 19th cent. triumphed in the RC Church. In England it issued in a tendency to minimize the distinctive features of the national Church in the endeavour to secure for her a fuller participation in the life of Catholic Christendom at large. On the other hand, the C of E tolerated, esp. in the later years of the 19th cent. and the earlier years of the 20th, a considerable infiltration of *Liberalism.

P. E. More–F. L. Cross, Anglicanism. The Thought and Practice of the Church of England illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935). A. C. *Headlam, The Church of England (1924); H. H. *Henson, The Church of England (1939); C. M. Ady, The English Church (1940); A. T. P. Williams, The Anglican Tradition in the Life of England (1947); C. F. Garbett, The Claims of the Church of England (1947). J. W. C. Wand, Anglicanism in History and Today (1961). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism. A Survey of Anglican Theological Method in the Seventeenth Century (Hale Lectures, 1965). The ethos and spirit of recent Anglicanism can be studied in biographies, e.g. of A. C. *Tait, E. W. *Benson, M. *Creighton, R. T. *Davidson, C. *Gore, C. G. *Lang, W. *Temple, H. H. Henson, and G. K. A. *Bell. See also works cited under Church of England.

ANGLO-CATHOLIC CONGRESSES. A series of congresses held in London in 1920, 1923, 1927, 1930, and 1933, to further the cause of *Anglo-Catholicism. Later Congresses on a more limited scale were held in London in 1948, 1958, and 1968.

Reports issued after each Congress, the first ed. by D. *Stone (1920).

ANGLO-CATHOLICISM. The name given to the more advanced section of the *High Church movement in the C of E. From 1838, when the word first appears, its employment became general. (The *Tractarian designation of their series of reprints of 17th cent. divines as the 'Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology' [1841 ff.] has often led to the erroneous supposition that the word 'Anglo-Catholic' was much older; the Lat. Anglo-Catholicus, however, occurs in the 17th cent.) Anglo-Catholics emphasize the dogmatic and sacramental aspects of the Christian creed and life, and the historic continuity of the existing C of E with that of the Middle Ages; and they have generally wished to establish as close an agreement as was possible without sacrifice of essential principles between the doctrine and practice of the C of E and those of the other Churches of Catholic Christendom. Like other High Churchmen, they have always maintained that their principles alone rightly express the faith of the C of E.

W. L. Knox, O.G.S., The Catholic Movement in the Church of England (1923); D. *Stone, The Faith of an English Catholic (1926); W. J. Sparrow Simpson, The History of the Anglo-Catholic Revival from 1845 (1932); J. Wilkinson (ed.), Catholic Anglicans Today (1968). See also works cited s.v. Oxford Movement.

ANGLO-SAXON CHURCH. By this title is meant the Church in England from the end of the 6th cent. to the Norman Conquest (1066). During the 6th and 7th cents. England was being evangelized from two sides. In 597 the Roman mission of St. *Augustine landed at Thanet in the south and sees were quickly set up at *Canterbury, London, *Rochester, and *York. In the north, the Celtic St. *Aidan established himself at *Lindisfarne c. 635. For a time the work of the missions was hindered by disputes over differences in such customs as the date of observing Easter and the cutting of the *tonsure. But in 664 union between north and south was virtually achieved at the Synod of *Whitby, and in 669 *Theodore of Tarsus arrived as Abp. of Canterbury and began his great work of reform and organization. Further important synods of the English bishops were held at *Hertford in 673 and *Hatfield in 680, and many new dioceses were formed. In 787, at a synod presided over by two papal legates, *Lichfield was made an archbishopric, but the arrangement lasted for only sixteen years. The Danish invasions were a great blow to the Church, although the victory of *Alfred secured the nominal acceptance of Christianity by the invaders. In the 10th cent., reforms were initiated by St. *Dunstan and a closer connexion with the Continent established. At the Norman Conquest, most of the surviving Anglo-Saxon bishops were removed, but the most outstanding of them, St. *Wulfstan, continued at *Worcester till his death in 1095.

Monasticism was very strong in the Anglo-Saxon Church, most of the work of evangelization being done by monks, and it is to this period that we may trace the origin of the English custom of having cathedrals with monastic chapters. Double monasteries of men and women, often under the rule of an abbess, were not uncommon during the period, but most of them had disappeared by the Conquest. The connexion between Church and State was particularly close. The conversion of a district usually began in the royal palace; bishoprics were conterminous with tribal areas; and it is very often difficult to decide whether a particular assembly was primarily ecclesiastical or secular. In some of these respects, however, the Anglo-Saxon Church did not differ from many Continental Churches of the time. Despite a popular belief to the contrary, relations between the Anglo-Saxon Church and the rest of W. Christendom seem to have been constant and good.

W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1873; ed. 3, 1897); W. Hunt, The English Church from its Foundation to the Norman Conquest (1899); F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943). Margaret Deanesly, The Pre-Conquest Church in England (1961); id., Sidelights on the Anglo-Saxon Church (1962); J. Godfrey, The Church in Anglo-Saxon England (1962); F. Barlow, The English Church 1000–1066. A Constitutional History (1963); H. [M. R. E.] Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972). R. R. Darlington, 'Ecclesiastical Reform in the late Old English Period' in E.H.R. lii (1936), pp. 385–428.

ANIMA CHRISTI (Lat., 'Soul of Christ'), the well-known prayer, beginning

Soul of Christ, sanctify me,
Body of Christ, save me, used esp. as a private Eucharistic devotion. From its use at the outset of the Spiritual Exercises* it has been traditionally ascribed to St. *Ignatius Loyola ('Aspirationes S. Ignatii ad Sanctissimum Redemptorem'), but is really very much older. It appears to date from the early 14th cent. (not 12th cent., as L. Eisenhofer). John XXII (d. 1334; probably not its author, despite G. M. Dreves) enriched it with indulgences. Early occurrences of it are in the Brit. Mus. MS. Harl. 1260, f. 158 (A.D.

1370); a prayer-book of Card. Peter of Luxembourg (d. 1387), preserved at *Avignon; and on an inscription of Moorish workmanship on the gates of the Alcazar at Seville (c. 1364).

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Anima Christi' in Month, cxxv (1915), pp. 493–505; repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), ch. iii, pp. 38–53. D. Prideaux, O.S.B., 'A Note on the Prayer "Anima Christi" ' in Laudate, i (1923), pp. 9–21. H. L. Pass, Anima Christi. A Little Treatise on the Spiritual Life (1934), esp. pp. 293–302. P. Schepens, 'Pour l'histoire de la prière Anima Christi' in Nouvelle Revue théologique, lxii (1935), pp. 699–710. P. Leturia, S.J., 'Libros de Horas, Anima Christi y Ejercicios Espirituales de S. Ignacio' in Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, xvii (for 1948; 1949), pp. 3–50, esp. pp. 35–50. B. Fischer, 'Das Trierer Anima Christi. Der bisher unveröffentlichte älteste nichtlateinische Text des Anima Christi aus einer Hs. des frühen XIV. Jhts. in der Trierer Stadtbibliothek' in Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift, lx (1951), pp. 189–96. H. Thurston, S.J., in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 670–2, s.v., with further bibl.

ANIMISM. The belief, widespread among primitive peoples, that certain material objects, e.g. trees and stones, are possessed by spirits which are the cause of their movements and characteristic qualities. Echoes of animism are found in the OT, e.g. *Jacob's treatment of the stone at Bethel as if it were divine (Gen. 28. 22). Anti-Christian writers have sometimes held all worship of a personal god, particularly if connected with special holy places, to be a survival of primitive animism; while the Christian need not deny that in early times animistic ideas assisted, e.g., the growth of such beliefs as that in *immortality.

E. B. Tylor, Primitive Culture (2 vols., 1871), chs. xi–xvii. E. O. James, Prehistoric Religion. A Study in Primitive Archaeology (1957). G. d'Alviella in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 535–7, s.v. E. E. Evans-Pritchard in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), p. 98 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Anthropology.

ANNA COMNENA (b. 1083; d. after 1148). The daughter of the Emperor Alexius I, Comnenus, and Irene, she was one of the earliest women historians and among the most outstanding writers of the Byzantine age. Having conspired unsuccessfully after her father's death to depose her brother, John, in the interests of her husband, Nicephorus Bryennius, she retired to a convent where she wrote a history of her father's reign, the 'Alexiad' ('Αλεξιάς). This work, finished in 1148, is less a history than an apology or panegyric, being full of extravagant adulation and almost devoid of critical judgement. It is, however, of great interest as a representation of the Orthodox hostility to the W. Church and to the *Crusades as a menace to the E. Empire. She praises Alexius's persecution of the *Bogomil heretics which culminated in the execution of Basilius, their leader.

The best edns. of the Alexiad are those of A. Reifferscheid (2 vols., Teubner, 1884) and B. Leib (3 vols., Paris, 1937–45; with Fr. trans.). Eng. trans. of the Alexiad by E. A. S. Dawes (1928). G. Buckler, Anna Comnena (1929).

ANNAS. The Jewish *High Priest from A.D. 6 (or 7) to 15. In the latter year he was deposed by the procurator, Valerius Gratus, and succeeded by his son-in-law, *Caiaphas, though, as appears from Lk. 3. 2, Jn. 18. 13, and Acts 4. 6, he continued to be regarded as having at least a share in his former office, and was perhaps regarded by strict Jews as the lawful High Priest. Acc. to Jn. 18. 13, Jesus, after His arrest, was first brought to Annas and had a preliminary trial in his palace before being sent on to Caiaphas. In Acts 4. 6 he takes a leading part in the trial of the Apostles at Jerusalem.

ANNATES (Lat. annata, from annus, 'year'). The first year's revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice, paid to the Papal curia. The practice became general through the increase of direct Papal nomination to livings in the 13th cent. The actual term 'annata' was at first applied only to the tax paid upon minor benefices, but in the 15th cent. it came to be used also of the 'servitia' paid on bishoprics and the headships of monasteries. The payment of annates from English benefices to the Holy See was conditionally restrained in 1532 and transferred to the crown in 1534 under the Annates Statute (25 Hen. VIII, c. 20). They were finally converted into '*Queen Anne's Bounty' in 1704.

W. E. Lunt, Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages (New York, 2 vols., 1934), esp. vol. i, pp. 93–9, and vol. ii, pp. 315–72, with full refs.; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (Cambridge, Mass., 1962), pp. 307–445, with bibl. refs. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., i (1907), p. 537 f., with bibl.

ANNE, St., Mother of the BVM. Her name (not found in the Bible) and the legend of her life occur already in the *Protevangelium of James (2nd cent.). A church was erected at *Constantinople in her honour by the Emp. *Justinian I (d. 565) and relics and pictures at *Rome (S. Maria Antiqua) date from the 8th cent. In the 10th cent. her feast was observed at Naples and it was widely current in the W. by 1350. Urban VI expressly ordered it for all England, to popularize the marriage of Richard II to Anne of Bohemia (Jan. 1382). By the end of the Middle Ages the cult had become extremely popular and was an object of special attack by M. *Luther and other Reformers. In 1584 it was ordered for the Universal Church, and Gregory XV even made it a *Feast of Obligation. The feast is now observed with esp. devotion in *Canada and also in Brittany (of which country she is Patroness). Feast day in the W., 26 July (with St. Joachim from 1969); in the E., 25 July.

The primary source is the Protevangelium Jacobi, i–viii. B. Kleinschmidt, O.F.M., Die heilige Anna, ihre Verehrung in Geschichte, Kunst und Volkstum (Forschungen zur Volkskunde, 1930). P. V. Charland, La Bonne Sainte, ou l'Histoire de la Dévotion à sainte Anne (Quebec, 1904), and other works of this author. M. V. Ronan, S. Anne. Her Cult and her Shrines (1927). H. M. Bannister, 'The Introduction of the Cultus of St. Anne into the West' in E.H.R., xviii (1903), pp. 107–12. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Sur les Fêtes de la Conception et de Ste Anne. Chants en l'honneur de Ste Anne dans un manuscrit français du XI[e] Siècle' in E.L., xlii (1928), pp. 258–68; repr. in Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du Moyen Age Latin (1932), pp. 46–55.

ANNE (1665–1714), Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. She was the second daughter of *James II, but was brought up as an Anglican, and in 1702 succeeded her brother-in-law, William III, her brother, James, being excluded from the succession as a RC. Her political views varied during her reign, but in religious matters she remained consistently true to the *High Church tradition of her grandfather, *Charles I. Early in her reign (1704) she created for the Church '*Queen Anne's Bounty'. She attempted, by exercise of her right of nominating bishops, to introduce a High Church and Tory element on the Bench, which at her accession was composed almost entirely of Whigs and *Latitudinarians, out of sympathy with the predominantly High Church inferior clergy. She strongly supported the *Occasional Conformity Bill, first introduced into Parliament in 1702, to end the scandal of Dissenters' qualifying for public office by occasional communion in their parish churches; but the bill was not passed till the end of her reign, when there was a decided Tory majority in the Commons. In 1710 she was present at the trial of H. *Sacheverell, which achieved the discomfiture of the Whigs at the ensuing elections, and she was thought by the general public to be a strong supporter of the accused. The Tory ascendancy of 1711–14 was used for political measures against Dissent (such as the *Schism Act of 1714), instead of constructive enactments, and it did not long survive the Queen's death. Though the power of the Latitudinarian party in the Church, dominant at her accession, was somewhat checked during her reign and the Caroline High Church tradition revived, the success of her policy was weakened by the effects of the secession of the *Nonjurors, as well as by the political incompetence of the Tory party, who alone gave it active support. In the next reign it was almost destroyed by the association of High Churchmanship with *Jacobitism.

Beatrice C. Brown (ed.), The Letters and Diplomatic Instructions of Queen Anne (1935). The Life of Her Late Majesty Queen Anne (anon., 2 vols., 1721). A. Boyer, The History of the Reign of Queen Anne (11 vols., 1703–13). G. M. Trevelyan, England under Queen Anne (3 vols., 1930–34). Studies by Agnes Strickland ('Lives of the Queens of England', xi, 1847, pp. 341–440 and xii, 1848), H. Paul (London, 1906), 'L. Melville' (pseud. for L. S. Benjamin, London, 1930), M. R. Hopkinson (ib., 1934), N. Connell (ib., 1937), and E. Gregg (ib., 1980).

ANNE'S BOUNTY, Queen. See Queen Anne's Bounty.

ANNEXED BOOK, The. A name given to the actual BCP annexed to the Act of *Uniformity of 1662, which prescribed the use throughout the realm of 'true and perfect copies' of it. The MS. original was a fair copy made from the 'Convocation Book' (i.e. the text finally approved by Convocation in 1661), which was signed by the members of Convocation, and then presented to Parliament.

A Facsimile of the BCP signed by Convocation, Dec. 20, 1661, and attached to the Act of Uniformity, 1662, was publ. in 1891.

ANNIHILATIONISM. See Conditional Immortality.

ANNO DOMINI (Lat.), 'in the year of the Lord'. The current system of dating by 'A.D.', based on the supposed year of the Birth of Christ, was devised by *Dionysius Exiguus (d. c. 550). It is now commonly held that the actual Birth was several years earlier, between 7 and 4 B.C., since it is established that Herod the Great died (cf. Mt. 2. 19) in the latter year. Some authorities, however, have preferred the date A.D. 6, the date usually given to the great census under Quirinius (Lk. 2. 1 f.). See also Chronology (Biblical).

ANNUNCIATION OF THE BVM. The feast, observed on 25 Mar. ('Lady Day'), commemorates the announcement of the Incarnation by the angel *Gabriel to the Virgin and the conception of Christ in her womb (Lk. 1. 26–38). The date depends on that of Christ's Nativity (25 Dec.), itself not fixed until a comparatively late period in Christian history. The homilies of the Patr. *Proclus of Constantinople may imply its observance in the E. c. 430, but the first authentic reference to the festival in the W. is in the *Gelasian Sacramentary. In the Acts of the Council in Trullo* (692) it is exempted from the ban on feasts in *Lent, while in Spain the observance was long kept on 18 Dec., to prevent its occurrence in Lent. By the 8th cent. its observance in the W. had become universal. In the BCP it is a '*red letter' day and in the Table of Proper Lessons is described as the 'Annunciation of Our Lady', the only place where the Book uses this title of the BVM.

St. *Bernard's famous Homilies 'Super Missus Est' are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxiii, 55–88. On the Lucan narrative see O. *Bardenhewer, 'Maria Verkündigung: ein Kommentar' in Biblische Studien, x (1905), pp. 449–621. On the spread of the Feast, S. Vailhé, A.A., 'Origines de la fête de l'Annonciation' in É.O., ix (1906), pp. 138–45; M. Jugie, A.A., 'La Première Fête mariale en Orient et en Occident: l'avent primitif', ib., xxvi (1923), pp. 130–52. I. Cecchetti, 'L'Annunciazione. Il racconto biblico e la festa liturgica' in Bollettino Ceciliano, xxxviii (1943), pp. 46–8 and 98–114. A. Médebielle in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 262–97, s.v. 'Annonciation'.

ANOINTING. A ceremonial action performed on persons and things to separate them from profane use and obtain on their behalf the infusion of Divine grace. The ceremonial use of oil is common to many religions, e.g. Hinduism, the worship of ancient Greece and Rome, and many primitive peoples. In the OT priests and kings are anointed to symbolize their sanctity and endowment with the Spirit of God; hence the future deliverer of Israel was designated the 'Messiah' or 'Anointed One', and this title was taken over by the Apostles and appears in the NT in its Greek form 'Christ' (Χριστός). In the NT anointing is used as a charismatic means of healing (e.g. Mk. 6. 13) and combined with prayer in Jas. 5. 14 (see Unction). The Church from early times made sacramental use of it in the rites of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and *Ordination (qq.v.), as well as in the consecration of churches, altars, bells, &c. The anointing of kings, which is first met with (in Visigothic Spain) in the 7th cent., was influenced immediately by the OT (see Coronation Rite in England).

See bibl. to Baptism, Chrism, Confirmation, Ordination, and Unction.

ANOMOEANS. The 4th-cent. exponents of a doctrine closely akin to *Arianism. They distinguished God's creative will (his fatherhood) from his absolute and undivided essence. The complete and divine expression of God's will, the Son, is, as relative and caused, unlike (ἀνόμοιος) him in essence. Their leaders were *Aetius and *Eunomius; they were also known as 'Aetians' and '*Exoucontians'.

See bibl. to Aetius.

ANSCHAR, St. See Anskar, St.

ANSELM, St. (c. 1033–1109), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the son of a Lombard landowner and a native of Aosta. After several years of undisciplined life he crossed the Alps into *France in 1056 and in 1059 entered the monastic school at *Bec in Normandy, then directed by *Lanfranc of Pavia, his fellow-countryman. Here he was persuaded by Lanfranc and Maurilius, Abp. of Rouen, to take monastic vows (1060) and in 1063 he succeeded Lanfranc as prior. His strong character and remarkable intellectual abilities gained him a high reputation as a teacher and spiritual director. His earliest writings were prayers to various saints and letters mainly addressed to the Norman monks who followed Lanfranc to Canterbury in 1070. Then followed the Monologion and the Proslogion (1078–9) and a series of philosophical and theological works, De Veritate, De Libero Arbitrio and De Casu Diaboli, as well as an introduction to dialectic entitled De Grammatico. Meanwhile Abbot Herluin of Bec had died in 1078, and Anselm succeeded to the Abbacy of Bec. From now on he paid several visits to England, where he renewed his acquaintance with Lanfranc and won the respect of William I and many of the barons.

On Lanfranc's death (1089) the archbishopric of Canterbury was vacant until 1093, but in March of this year King William II, then gravely ill, was persuaded to appoint an archbishop. He nominated Anselm, who reluctantly consented, and he was consecrated in December 1093. Disputes had already broken out between him and the king over the lands and tenants of the archbishopric, and these disputes continued with increasing violence until 1097. They were further complicated by disputes over the recognition of Pope *Urban II, over the right of the archbishop to hold a council, and finally over Anselm's wish to go to Rome for papal advice. In the end, after a series of violent disputes which are fully described by Anselm's biographer, *Eadmer, the King allowed him to go and he reached Rome in April 1098.

During the previous five years of conflict Anselm had not been unproductive theologically. In 1095 he had completed his De Incarnatione Verbi which he had begun before he left Bec; and in 1098 in Italy he completed the greatest of his theological works, Cur Deus Homo*. In October 1098 he attended the Council of Bari and defended the *Double Procession against the Greeks with arguments later embodied in his De Processione Sancti Spiritus. At the Vatican Council of April 1099 he first learned of the papal decrees against lay *investiture, and when the new king Henry I recalled him to England on William II's death (2 Aug. 1100) he insisted on observing these decrees without compromise. Consequently he refused to renew the homage he had paid to William II or to consecrate bishops whom Henry had invested. After more than two years of argument, in 1103 Anselm agreed to go to Rome again to try to get a papal relaxation of the decrees on Henry's behalf. When this attempt failed he resigned himself to a further period of exile which lasted until 1107, when the Pope and King agreed to a compromise behind Anselm's back. In the last two years of his life Anselm held a council which enforced clerical *celibacy and he became increasingly engaged in the long-standing conflict with York over the primacy of Canterbury. He died on 21 April 1109.

Both as theologian and philosopher, Anselm has a foremost place among the earlier Scholastic thinkers. He was the most luminous and penetrating intellect between St. *Augustine and St. *Thomas Aquinas. He differed from most of his predecessors in preferring to defend the faith by intellectual reasoning instead of employing arguments built on Scriptural and other written authorities. The object of his Monologion was to establish the being of God solely from the consideration of truth and goodness as intellectual notions. In the Proslogion this reasoning was given the more systematic form of the *Ontological Argument (q.v.). Anselm here maintained that if we mean by God (as he held that we do) 'that than which nothing greater can be conceived' (id quo nihil majus cogitari possit), then we cannot conceive of this entity except as existing. His Liber Apologeticus pro Insipiente was a reply to his objector, Gaunilo, a monk of Marmoutier, who had retorted with an argument similar to that later used by *Kant. Like St. Augustine, Anselm saw in faith the precondition of the right use of reason ('credo ut intelligam'); but it yet remains our duty, so far as we can, to exercise our minds on the apprehension of revealed truth. His Cur Deus Homo was the most considerable contribution to the theology of the Atonement in the Middle Ages. It interpreted the doctrine in terms of the satisfaction due to the outraged majesty of God and strongly repudiated the notion, current since *Origen and St. *Gregory of Nyssa, that the devil had rights over fallen man which it was a leading purpose of the Cross to satisfy. He was also the author of many letters. Of these, the earlier ones (before 1093) are important for Anselm's spiritual and monastic teaching, and those written while he was archbishop give a very full account of the ecclesiastical disputes of his pontificate.

Feast day, 21 April. It seems unlikely that he was ever formally canonized, despite several attempts from 1163 onwards, but his cult became firmly established in the later Middle Ages; in 1720 *Clement XI declared him a '*Doctor of the Church'.

First at all satisfactory ed. of Anselm's Works by the *Maurist, G. Gerberon, O.S.B. (Paris, 1675); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clviii and clix. Crit. ed. by F. S. Schmitt, O.S.B. (begun Seckau, 1938; repr. and continued, 6 vols., Edinburgh, 1946–61). Unfinished fragments and reports of Anselm's teaching are printed in Memorials of St. Anselm, ed. R. W. Southern and F. S. Schmitt (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, i; 1969). The principal sources for his life are the 'Historia Novorum' and the 'Vita Anselmi' by his chaplain, Eadmer, ed. M. Rule (Rolls Series, lxxxi; 1884); 'Vita Anselmi' also ed., with Eng. tr., by R. W. Southern (London, [1962]); Eng. tr. of 'Historia Novorum' by G. Bosanquet (ib., 1964). Modern studies by R. W. *Church (London, 1870) and R. W. Southern, Saint Anselm and his Biographer. A study of monastic life and thought 1059–*c.*1130 (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge 1963). M. J. Charlesworth, St. Anselm's Proslogion (Oxford 1965), incl. text, Eng. tr., and an account of recent interpretations of Anselm's argument for the existence of God; there is an older and highly original interpretation by K. *Barth, Fides Quaerens Intellectum (Munich, 1931). D. P. Henry, The De Grammatico of St. Anselm (University of Notre Dame Publications in Medieval Studies, xviii; Indiana, 1964), includes text and Eng. tr.; id., The Logic of Saint Anselm (Oxford, 1967). J. McIntyre, St. Anselm and his Critics. A Re-interpretation of the Cur Deus Homo (Edinburgh, 1954). J. Hopkins, A Companion to the Study of St. Anselm (Minneapolis, 1972). G[illian] R. Evans, Anselm and Talking about God (Oxford, 1978); id., Anselm and a New Generation (ib., 1980). F. S. Schmitt in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 581–3, s.v. See also bibl. to Cur Deus Homo.

ANSELM (ANSELLUS) OF LAON (d. 1117), 'Laudunensis', theologian. It is not known where he studied. The statement usually made that he was educated at *Bec under St. *Anselm lacks foundation. Towards the end of the 11th cent. he was teaching at the cathedral school at Laon, where he was joined by his brother Ralph (d. 1133). Anselm seems to have combined the chancellorship with the office of deacon (c. 1109–14) and archdeacon (1115–17). He was famous as a teacher of the liberal arts as well as of theology. His theological teaching was given in lectures on the Books of the Bible, in the course of which points of interest were discussed as they arose in elementary quaestio form with reference to the authority of the Fathers. After his death these were reworked and enlarged into systematic 'Summae', of which the two most important are the 'Sententiae divinae paginae' and the 'Sententiae Anselmi'. Anselm was traditionalist in his views and stuck close to the Fathers, but his methods were new. In his lectures on the Bible he discussed the substance of the text and so opened the way for systematic enquiry. He was an influential teacher, and among those who came to his school were *William of Champeaux, *Gilbert de la Porrée, and Peter *Abelard.

The corpus of Anselm's work is not yet settled, but it is certain that he arranged commentaries (Glossae) on the Psalter, the Pauline Epistles ('Pro altercatione'), and on the Gospel of St. John, which were the foundation of the *Glossa ordinaria.

The edition of works ascribed to him in J. P. Migne (PL, clxii, 1187–1586) is unsatisfactory. The text of the two commentaries is given in the editions of *Nicholas of Lyra. The Enarrationes in Evangelium S. Matthaei is a work of the middle of the 12th cent., possibly by Geoffrey Babion (see D. van den Eynde, O.F.M., in R.T.A.M., xxvi (1959), pp. 50–84). For his life see G. Lefèvre, De Anselmo Laudunensi Scholastico (Paris thesis; Évreux, 1895), and A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Un commentaire des Psaumes restitué à Anselme de Laon' in R.T.A.M., viii (1936), pp. 325–44 [but this commentary is not his work]. For his work, O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et Morale aux XIIe et XIIIe Siècles, v (Gembloux, 1959), esp. pp. 9–183. F. P. Bliemetzrieder, Anselms von Laon Systematische Sentenzen (B.G.P.M., xviii, Hfft. 2–3; 1919); H. Weisweiler, S.J., Das Schrifttum der Schule Anselms von Laon und Wilhelms von Champeaux in deutschen Bibliotheken (ib., xxxiii, Hfft. 1–2; 1936). Beryl Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (ed. 2, Oxford, 1952), esp. pp. 49–51. M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, ii (1911), pp. 136–68; A. M. Landgraf, Einführung in die Geschichte der theologischen Literatur der Frühscholastik unter dem Gesichtspunkte der Schulenbildung (Regensburg, 1948), pp. 55–60.

ANSELM OF LUCCA, Pope (d. 1073). See Alexander II.

ANSELM OF LUCCA, St. (c. 1036–1086). He is not to be confused with his uncle, *Alexander II (q.v., also 'Anselm of Lucca'), by whom he was nominated to the see of Lucca in 1071. After hesitation he accepted investiture from *Henry IV, but repented, resigned his bishopric, and retired to the reformed monastery at Polirone, near Mantua. Later, at the insistence of *Gregory VII, he returned to his see, where he lived an austere life and sought to impose strict discipline on an unwilling chapter. The resulting friction led to his expulsion by the Emperor and the Anti-pope, Guibert, c. 1080. In his last years he was Papal Legate in Lombardy. He wrote a treatise against lay investiture ('Contra Guibertum et Sequaces ejus') and made a famous collection of canons, later incorporated in *Gratian's 'Decretum'. Feast day, 18 Mar.

His Liber contra Guibertum, Collectio Canonum and extracts from his Collectanea are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxviii, 445–536; crit. ed. of his Collectio Canonum by F. Thaner (Innsbruck, 2 fasce., 1906–11). The principal authority for his life is the Vita attributed to Bardo, *primicerius of Lucca Cathedral; crit. ed. by R. Wilmans in M.G.H., Scriptores, xii (1856), pp. 1–35. There are also two metrical lives, the one by Rangerius, Bp. of Lucca, in 1099, publ. by V. de la Fuente (Madrid, 1870); the other by Donizo, also practically contemporary, ed. W. Arndt in M.G.H., Scriptores, xx (1868), pp. 692–6. A. Overmann, 'Die Vita Anselmi Lucensis Episcopi des Rangerius' in N.A., xxi (1896), pp. 403–40. B. Schmeidler-G. Schwartz, 'Kleine Studien zu den Viten des Bischofs Anselm und zur Geschichte des Investiturstreits in Lucca', ib., xliii (1922), pp. 515–50, esp. pp. 515–43 and 549 f. A. Rota, S.J., Notizie istoriche di S. Anselmo (Verona, 1733). R. Montanari, La 'Collectio Canonum' di S. Anselmo di Lucca e la riforma gregoriana (Mantua, 1941). A. Stickler, 'Il Potere Coattivo Materiale della Chiesa nella Riforma Gregoriana secondo Anselmo di Lucca' in G. B. Borino (ed.), Studi Gregoriani, ii (1947), pp. 235–85; G. B. Borino, 'Il Monacato e l'Investitura di Anselmo Vescovo di Lucca', ib., v (1956), pp. 361–74. P. Fournier-G. Le Bras, Histoire des Collections Canoniques en Occident, ii (1932), pp. 25–37. A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 567–78, s.v. 'Anselme de Lucques (Collection d')'. P. Richard in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 489–493, s.v. 'Anselme de Lucques'.

ANSKAR, St. (801–65), the 'Apostle of the North'. A native of Picardy, he became a monk at *Corbie. Thence he went to Westphalia, and later to *Denmark, whose king had been recently converted. He established a school in Schleswig, but was soon expelled by the local heathen. He then went to *Sweden, where he built the first Christian church. About 832 he was appointed by Gregory IV Bp. of Hamburg and c. 848 first Abp. of Bremen. In 854 he was in Denmark again, converted Erik, King of Jutland, and did much to mitigate the horrors of the slave trade. After his death the Scandinavian countries relapsed completely into paganism. In Germany he is also known as 'St. Scharies'. Feast day, 3 Feb.

The principal authority is the life attributed to Rimbert, his successor in the see of Bremen (crit. ed. by G. Waitz in Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1884; Eng. tr., with introd. notes and bibl., by C. H. Robinson, 1921). W. Levison, 'Die echte und die verfälschte Gestalt von Rimberts Vita Anskarii' in Zeitschrift des Vereins für Hamburgische Geschichte, xxiii (1919), pp. 89–146. G. H. Kippel, Historische Forschungen und Darstellungen, ii, Lebensbeschreibung des Erzbischofs Ansgar (1845), with text of St. Anskar's 'Pigmenta', pp. 230–250, and other important docc. in appendices. A. Tappehorn, Leben des heiligen Ansgar, Apostels von Dänemark und Schweden (1863); E. de Moreau, S.J., Saint Anschaire (Museum Lessianum, Section Missiologique, xii; 1930); P. Oppenheim, O.S.B., Der heilige Ansgar und die Anfänge des Christentums in den nordischen Ländern (1931). G. Allmang in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 435–41, s.v. 'Anschaire'.

ANSON BY-LAW, The. The law allowing a child to be withdrawn from a primary school during any time allotted to religious observance or instruction if the parent so desires and if arrangement has been made for him to attend religious observance or instruction elsewhere. It was so named after Sir William Reynell Anson (1843–1914), who was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education when the Education Act of 1902 was passed. The Education Act of 1936 made the principles of this By-law everywhere applicable, and similar provision was made by the Act of 1944 (7 & 8 Geo. VI, c. 31, sect. 25).

ANTE-CHAPEL. The western end of certain medieval college chapels, which usually projects north and south of the choir, from which it is separated by a screen. It is structurally a truncated nave, added to give technical completeness to the building and thus avoid the architectural anomaly of a chancel in vacuo.

ANTE-COMMUNION. In the C of E the earlier portion of the service of Holy Communion down to and including the Prayer for the Church Militant, esp. when recited without the remainder of the service. The essential parts of the full rite (offering and consecration of the Bread and Wine and the Communion of the celebrant) being omitted, it is in no sense a real Eucharist. Analogies have been found for it elsewhere in the Mass of the *Presanctified and the '*Dry Mass', but liturgically the only real parallel is the 'Mass of the Catechumens' in the early Church.

ANTELAPSARIANISM. See Supralapsarianism.

ANTEPENDIUM. A vesture or *frontal, varying in colour acc. to the ecclesiastical season, which hangs in front of the altar.

ANTHEM. The Anglicized form of the word *antiphon. It was used originally of a hymn sung alternately by two choirs; but in current English it is commonly applied to sacred vocal music set to Scriptural words. In the BCP it has the meanings antiphon (as in the preface 'Concerning the Service of the Church'), *canticle (so applied to the Easter 'Anthems', e.g., and by implication to Ps. 95), and its usual modern sense. In the Anglican service, the proper place for the anthem is after the third collect at Morning and Evening Prayer, as prescribed by the 1662 rubric at this point.

E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941). A. M. Y. Baylay–J. S. Heap–H. Goss-Custard in P.B.D. (1925), pp. 25–9, s.v.

ANTHONY, St. See Antony, St.

ANTHROPOLOGY. In its more exact sense as used by theologians the study of man as contrasted, e.g., with that of God, or of angels, and more particularly the study 'of his creation, elevation to supernatural status, and his fall' (A. *Tanquerey). It enables the Christian apologist to exhibit the true nature and end of man, and his superior status to the animal creation, as against views which represent him as a purely biological species, or an economic unit, or a mass of psychological reflexes. This, the traditional meaning of the word, has been revived in theological discussion in the present century.

In popular usage, however, esp. since the middle of the 19th cent., the word has been widely used for the science which studies the life and environment of primitive man. So understood, it may be considered to consist of two parts, viz. Physical and Cultural Anthropology. The former relates to man's biological history, and for this branch the most valuable evidence includes the few early skeletons and fragments which have escaped disintegration. Cultural Anthropology, on the other hand, studies the remains of man's handicraft-work and the marks he has made upon his surroundings, in order to gain impressions of his social and cultural history in his primitive development.

(1) In the former sense, the subject finds its place in all manuals of dogmatic theology.

(2) From the large modern literature, the foll. items may be mentioned as historically imp.: J. C. Prichard, Natural History of Man (1843); T. H. *Huxley, Man's Place in Nature (1863); E. B. Tylor, Early History of Mankind (1865); id., Primitive Culture (1871); A. de Quatrefages, Unité de l'espèce humaine (1867; Eng. tr., 1879); A. H. Keane, Ethnology (1896); id., Man, Past and Present (1899). E. O. James, An Introduction to Anthropology. A general survey of the early history of the human race (1919); id., Prehistoric Religion. A Study in Primitive Archaeology (1957); id., The Ancient Gods. The History and Diffusion of Religion in the Ancient Near East and the Eastern Mediterranean (1960). E. E. Evans-Pritchard, Social Anthropology (1951); id., Essays in Social Anthropology (1962); id., Theories of Primitive Religion (Oxford, 1965). Popular acct. in R. R. Marett, Anthropology (H.U.L., 1912). R. Munro in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 561–73, and E. J. and E. K. Miller in Chambers's Encyclopaedia (1950), i, pp. 453–8, s.v.

ANTHROPOMORPHISM. The attribution to God of human characteristics. This tendency arises out of the conditions of human knowledge which originates in sense-perception. In its crudest forms it is most prominent in primitive and polytheistic religions, and from the point of view of Greek philosophy it was already ridiculed by Xenophanes. Scripture, esp. in the earlier books of the OT (e.g. Gen. 3. 8, 32. 24 ff., Exod. 4. 24), in order to be intelligible to less developed minds, frequently uses anthropomorphic language, which is in most cases clearly metaphorical. In Christian philosophy, on the other hand, seemingly anthropomorphic conceptions such as personality, will, &c., are predicated of God, though in a way different from that in which they are used of creatures. Without the use of these or similar modes of expression, any developed exposition of the nature and attributes of God would be impossible.

ANTHROPOSOPHY. A religious system evolved by R. *Steiner (q.v.) from neo-Indian theosophy. It aims at leading man by a certain discipline of 'concentration' and 'meditation' towards an 'intuition' in which the lower ego receives the vision of the higher self. Anthroposophy teaches a highly elaborated and fantastic doctrine of the origin of the world, the various epochs of mankind, the 'sun being' ('Sonnenwesen') Christ, reincarnation, and 'Karma'. It has found adherents in most countries of the non-Communist world, esp. among those in search of religious experiences outside the normal channels of Church life. It was condemned by the RC Church in 1919.

G. Kaufmann, Fruits of Anthroposophy (1922); H. Leisegang, Die Grundlagen der Anthroposophie (1924); A. F. Stolzenburg, Anthroposophie und Christentum (1925).

ANTIBURGHER. A member of the group in the Secession Church in Scotland which separated in 1747 from the '*Burgher' group because it refused to admit that an adherent of that Church could take the civil 'Burgess Oath'.

ANTICHRIST. The prince of Christ's enemies. In the NT he is referred to by name only in 1 Jn. 2. 18, 22, 4. 3, and 2 Jn. 7 (where he is identified with those who deny the Incarnation). Many see him, however, in the strange beasts of Rev., sometimes thought to represent Rome, and in 'the man of sin' of 2 Thess. 2. 3–10, who will appear after a great apostasy before 'the day of the Lord' and sit in God's sanctuary, claiming to be God, but will be finally slain by Christ. Some have maintained that there was a Jewish Antichrist legend which was adopted and expanded by Christians; others have connected Antichrist not with a person but with an evil principle; yet others have seen in Antichrist a reference to some historical person—Caligula, *Simon Magus, or *Nero. The attempt of Caligula to set up his statue in the Temple at Jerusalem, and the deification of the Emperor and Emperor-worship, suggested strongly that Antichrist would come from imperial Rome; and the effect of the Neronian persecutions, particularly in view of Rev. 17. 8, 13. 3, and the uncertainty concerning Nero's grave, led men to expect Nero to return from the tomb. Acc. to *Jerome and *Augustine, many believed that St. John the Divine was not dead but sleeping, waiting to testify against Nero redivivus as Antichrist. In the 4th cent. Antichrist was sometimes identified with the *Arian heresy, whilst *Cyril of Jerusalem states that he will be a magician who will take control of the Roman Empire, claim to be Christ, deceive the Jews by pretending to be the Son of David and rebuilding the Temple, and who, after persecuting the Christians, will be slain at the Second Advent by the Son of God (Cat. Lect. xv. 11–15). Since the Reformation, the identification of the Pope with Antichrist has often been made, esp. in the less educated circles of Protestantism.

W. *Bousset, Der Antichrist (1895; Eng. tr., 1896). B. Rigaux, L'Antéchrist et l'Opposition au royaume messianique dans l'Ancien et le Nouveau Testament (Louvain diss., Gembloux–Paris, 1932). [J. E.] C. Hill, Antichrist in Seventeenth-Century England (Riddell Memorial lectures, 1969; 1971). R. K. Emmerson, Antichrist in the Middle Ages (Manchester, 1981). E. Lohmeyer in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 450–7, s.v., with bibl.

ANTICLERICALISM. A liberal movement in politics and religion which affected many parts of Europe in the 19th cent. Although the movement had roots in the religious indifference and scepticism of the 18th cent., it first became an active political force through the French Revolution. In general, it was opposed to any dogmatic or denominational form of Christianity, maintaining that the established order in Church affairs was simply a bulwark of the political reaction and tyranny which it aimed to overthrow. It directed its attack esp. on the RC Church and its civil privileges. In France the establishment of the RC religion was overthrown in 1792–3, although those of the clergy who were prepared to submit to the directions of the State were otherwise left unmolested; but by the *Concordat of 1801 an agreement was reached between Church and State, which, though not fully implemented until after the fall of Napoleon in 1815, restored the full liberty and ascendancy of Catholicism. But a strong anticlerical party remained, which grew in influence after the revolution of 1871, until finally in 1905 the State ceased to recognize the RC religion, or to grant any privileges to its representatives, while in some respects, e.g. the suppression of certain religious orders, a definitely hostile position was taken up. In *Belgium the revolution of 1830 was the joint work of Catholics and liberals, and the result was that, for some years after the independent monarchy had been set up, these parties, in other countries mutually and actively hostile, agreed to work together. But the arrangement broke down, the liberals gradually gaining the upper hand. In 1884, however, the Catholics won a decisive victory at the elections, and the dominant position they then secured has won their freedom from anticlerical restrictions ever since. In *Spain and *Portugal there were various anticlerical movements between 1830 and 1870, which were concerned chiefly to combat the influence of the papal curia and legates, to secure ecclesiastical appointments to the crown, and to suppress various religious orders; while in Spanish America some of the new republics, on gaining their independence, showed a certain anticlerical bias. Both in Spain and in Portugal Church and State came to terms in the latter half of the century, though the revolutions of 1910 in Portugal and 1931 in Spain brought a recrudescence of anticlericalism, as did the establishment of a Communist Government in *Mexico. The growth of the nationalist movement in Italy from c. 1840 to the establishment of the Kingdom of Italy in 1871 went hand in hand with anticlericalism, as the civil Papal State was itself ruled by a reactionary government, which gave active support to the Austro-Hungarian empire and to the local arbitrary rulers; but after 1871 the triumph of the new order led to no strongly anti-ecclesiastical results apart from the suppression of the temporal power of the Vatican, and this was formally restored by the *Lateran Treaty of 1929 within the limits of the Vatican itself, which then became an independent State.

For anticlericalism in France, E. Lecanuet, L'Église de France sous la Troisième République (2 vols., 1907–10), esp. vol. ii, ch. 8; E. Faguet L'Anticléricalisme (1906). Evelyn M. Acomb, The French Laic Laws 1879–1889. The First Anticlerical Campaign of the Third French Republic (New York, 1941). C. Berthelot du Chesnay in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 618–620, s.v., with bibl.

ANTIDIDAGMA, The. The reply issued in 1544 by the cathedral chapter of *Cologne to the plan set out by Abp. *Hermann of Wied in his Consultatio to reform Catholic practice. It was a moderate restatement of traditional principles and apparently mainly the work of J. *Gropper. Its language exercised a certain influence on the BCP of 1549.

The work orig. appeared in German early in 1544 with the title Christliche und katholische Gegenberichtung eines ehrwürdigen Domcapitals zu Köln wider das Buch der genannten Reformation. The Lat. version, which followed soon afterwards, had a long title beginning Antididagma, seu Christianae et Catholicae Religionis per . . . Canonicos Metropolitanae Ecclesiae Colonien. Propugnatio (Cologne, 1544; repr. Paris, 1549). F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, i (1915), p. xlviii f.

ANTIDORON. See Pain bénit.

ANTILEGOMENA (Gk. τὰ ἀντιλεγόμενα). The word is used by *Eusebius of Caesarea (H.E., III. xxv. 3 f.) of those Scriptural books of which the claim to be considered a part of the NT canon was disputed. He subdivided them into: (1) those 'generally recognized' (γνώριμοι), viz. Jas., Jude, 2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn.; and (2) the 'spurious' (νόθοι), viz. the 'Acts of Paul', the 'Shepherd of *Hermas', the 'Apoc. of *Peter', the 'Ep. of *Barnabas', the '*Didache', and (perhaps) Rev.

ANTI-MARCIONITE PROLOGUES, The. Short introductory prologues, prefixed to the Gospels of Mk., Lk., and Jn. (that to Mt., if it ever existed, has been lost), which are contained in some 40 MSS. of the Vulgate. They were written in Greek, but only that to Luke has survived in its original language. D. de Bruyne and A. *Harnack held that they were the earliest of the extant Gospel Prologues, dating from the latter half of the 2nd cent., and thus threw important light on the origins of the Gospels. They are prob. considerably later.

Text in A. *Huck–H. *Lietzmann–F. L. Cross, A Synopsis of the First Three Gospels (Tübingen, 1936), p. viii; also ed., with full discussion, by J. Regul (Vetus Latina. Ergänzende Schriftenreihe aus der Geschichte der Lateinischen Bibel, vi; 1969), with bibl. D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'Les Plus Anciens Prologues latins des évangiles' in R. Bibl., xl (1928), pp. 193–214; A. Harnack, 'Die ältesten Evangelien-Prologe und die Bildung des Neuen Testaments' in Sb. (Berl.), xxiv (1928), pp. 322–41; E. Gutwenger, 'The Anti-Marcionite Prologues' in Theological Studies, vii (1946), pp. 393–409; R. G. Heard, 'The Old Gospel Prologues' in J. T. S., N.S. vi (1955), pp. 1–16.

See also J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), p. 210 f., with further bibl.

ANTIMINSION, also 'Antimension' (Gk. ἀντιμήνσιον, 'instead of a table'). In the E. Church, the portable altar, consisting of a cloth of silk or linen, decorated with representations of the Passion, and usually of the entombment of Christ, and containing relics. It was originally intended for use when there was no properly consecrated altar, but is now always used, even on consecrated altars, in the manner of the Western *corporal, with another corporal, the *eileton, underneath it. It is first met with at about the beginning of the 9th cent.

ANTINOMIANISM. A general name for the view that Christians are by grace set free from the need of observing any moral law. It was attributed to St. *Paul by his opponents (Rom. 3. 8) because of his disparagement of the Mosaic Law in favour of the Law of the New Covenant 'written in the heart'—an internal impulse towards good—and strenuously repudiated by him. The charge of antinomianism was justly made against many of the *Gnostic sects, e.g. the *Nicolaitans and the *Ophites, who held that, as matter was so sharply opposed to spirit, bodily actions were indifferent and therefore licentiousness was wholly admissible. At the Reformation, antinomian teaching was revived, e.g. by the *Anabaptists and J. *Agricola, as following from the *Lutheran doctrine of *justification by faith. In England some antinomian sects developed under the Commonwealth.

ANTINOMY. In philosophy, one of a pair of mutually conflicting laws or sequences of thought ('thesis' and 'antithesis'), each of which possesses, or appears to possess, equal validity. In the Critique of Pure Reason (1781), I. *Kant elaborated four antinomies, the purpose of which was to show the inconsistencies to which the understanding is driven when it applies itself to philosophical speculation and thus to demonstrate the impossibility of theoretical metaphysics. Their subjects are: (1) the spatial and temporal limitations of the physical world; (2) the divisibility of substances; (3) causality and freedom; and (4) the relation of the First Cause to the world.

ANTIOCH. In size and importance, Antioch in Syria was the third city of the Roman Empire. As appears from Acts, a Christian community existed there from almost the earliest days, and it was here that the disciples of Christ were first called 'Christians' (Acts 11. 26). The community strongly supported St. Paul's anti-Judaizing policy. Acc. to tradition, the first bishop of the city was St. *Peter, and by the beginning of the 2nd cent. the Church had a well-established organization, with the celebrated St. *Ignatius as its bishop. By the 4th cent., the see ranked after Rome and Alexandria as the third patriarchial see of Christendom, reaching its greatest extent of jurisdiction at the end of that cent. Gradually, however, the rise in power of the see of *Constantinople, and to a less extent the erection of *Jerusalem into a Patriarchate, reduced the importance of Antioch, and its influence also suffered later from the *Nestorian and *Monophysite schisms (the latter supported by the civil power of the Saracens). At the Schism of 1054, the patriarchate supported Constantinople, but in 1100 the Orthodox Patriarch of Antioch withdrew to Constantinople, and the Crusaders appointed a Latin Patriarch. From the 14th cent. the Latin Patriarchate has been only titular. The Orthodox Patriarch now resides at Damascus, the most important city in Syria. Other patriarchs, *Uniat and Monophysite, take the title of Antioch, though these also do not reside there. A small Turkish township now exists on the site, where excavations were carried out by a Franco-American expedition in 1931–9. See also Antiochene Theology.

M. Lequien, Oriens Christianus*, ii (Paris, 1740), cols. 669–1076, and iii (ib., 1740), cols. 1153–1240. J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church, v, 'The Patriarchate of Antioch' (1873). E. S. Bouchier, A Short History of Antioch, 300 B.C.–A.D. 1268 (1921). V. Schultze, Altchristliche Städte und Landschaften, iii, 'Antiocheia' (1930). R. Devreesse, Le Patriarcat d'Antioche depuis la paix de l'Église jusqu'à la conquête arabe (1945). C. A. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἀντιοχείας (Alexandria, 1951). A. J. Festugière, O.P., Antioche païenne et chrétienne (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxciv; 1959). Virginia Corwin, St. Ignatius and Christianity in Antioch (Yale Publications in Religion, i; 1960). G. Downey, A History of Antioch in Syria from Seleucus to the Arab Conquest (Princeton, 1961). J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Antioch. City and Imperial Administration in the later Roman Empire (Oxford, 1972). C. Cahen, La Syrie du nord à l'époque des croisades et la principauté d'Antioche (1940). G. W. Elderkin–R. Stillwell and others, Antioch-on-the-Orontes (Publications of the Committee for the Excavation of Antioch and its Vicinity; vols. i–iii (Princeton, etc., 1934–41, on excavations of 1934–9); subsequent vols. 1942 ff.). C. R. Morey, The Mosaics of Antioch (1938). C. Karalevskij in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 563–703, s.v. 'Antioche', with detailed bibl.; G. Downey and G. A. Maloney in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 623–7, s.v.

ANTIOCH, Council of (341). The 'Dedication Council' ('concilium in encaeniis') held on the occasion of the consecration of *Constantine's 'Golden Church' at *Antioch, was the first of the many 4th-cent. councils in which efforts were made to abandon strict *Nicene theology. It was attended by 97 bishops besides the Emp. *Constantius himself. No less than four creeds were put forward, all of them defective from the standpoint of orthodoxy since they were intended not to supplement, but to replace, that of *Nicaea. The 25 (mainly disciplinary) 'Canons of Antioch' preserved in many of the ancient collections, both Greek and Latin, are generally supposed to have been the work of this Council, though some historians (e.g. the *Ballerini, L. *Duchesne, and C. H. *Turner) have argued that they really belong to a Council held at Antioch in 330.

Hardouin, i, cols. 589–610; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 1305–50. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 43–50; crit. ed. of Lat. texts in C. H. *Turner, E.O.M.I.A., II, ii (1913), pp. 215–320. Hefele–Leclercq, i (2; 1907), pp. 702–33. E. *Schelstrate, Sacrum Antiochenum Concilium (Antwerp, 1681); P. and H. Ballerini, S. Leonis Opera, iii (1757), pp. xxv–xxx, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lvi, 37–41; L. Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, ii (1907), p. 211 n. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius, IX' in Nachr. (Gött.) 1911, pp. 469–522. G. Bardy in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 589–98, s.v. 'Antioche (Concile et Canons d')'. For the Creeds connected with the Council, see J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950), pp. 263–74; also G. Bardy, Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936), pp. 85–132.

ANTIOCHENE THEOLOGY. The theology of the early Christian Church of Antioch was sometimes complementary, sometimes opposed, to that of *Alexandria. Its tendency was *Aristotelian and historical, in contrast with the more *Platonic and mystical tradition characteristic of Egypt. The tradition is seen in heretics and orthodox alike, from *Paul of Samosata, through *Lucian of Antioch and *Marcellus of Ancyra, down to *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, *Theodoret, and the later anti-Monophysite writers. Antiochene exegesis of Scripture was historical, and, unlike Alexandrian, looked not for a hidden meaning in the text, but for the sense intended by the inspired writer. It was likewise critical, holding some parts of the Bible to be of more value than others. The doctrine of the Trinity prevalent in this school of thought was what F. *Loofs calls the 'Economic-Trinitarian' (from the word οἰκονομία, i.e. 'Divine plan of salvation'), in which the Three Persons are distinguished only by their modes of operation. In such teaching on the Godhead there is an obvious similarity to *Sabellianism, but the Antiochenes hotly rejected the identification of the two views. In spite of their Seleucid history, they had retained much of their original Semitic outlook; and this fact perhaps helps to account for their insistence on the oneness of God and their abhorrence of whatever appeared in the slightest degree to savour of tritheism. They did not use the term 'Son' of the pre-existent *Logos, but restricted its application to the historical Christ. The Holy Ghost, again, is the Spirit of the Son as well as of the Father, but (at least for Paul of Samosata) the Spirit of the Incarnate Son, who is Man as well as God.

The divergence between Antioch and Alexandria is most marked, however, when we come to the Christological controversies of the 5th cent. On this question the historical bent of the former made it emphasize the humanity of Christ. The tendency of the school was to incline towards belief in a loose union of the Divine and human natures in Christ; and this looseness appeared to their opponents to be even greater than it actually was on account of certain terminological ambiguities. The need of human moral effort was strongly urged—a fact which well explains the sympathy of *Nestorius for the *Pelagians—and some interpreted predestination as being due to foreseen merits. The tradition was discredited after the Council of *Ephesus (431), and did not altogether recover its prestige when the opposing tendency, which produced *Apollinarianism and *Eutychianism, fell into disrepute.

H. Kihn, Die Bedeutung der antiochenischen Schule auf dem exegetischen Gebiete (Weissenburg, 1866); J. Philip de Barjeau, L'École exégétique d'Antioche (1898). L. Dennefeld, Der alttestamentliche Kanon der antiochenischen Schule (Biblische Studien, xiv, Hft. 4; 1909). F. Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (T.U., xliv, Hft. 5; 1924); R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (1940). A. Vaccari, S.J., 'La "teoria" esegetica antiochena' in Biblica, xv (1934), pp. 94–101. J. Guillet, S.J., 'Les Exégèses d'Alexandrie et d'Antioche, conflit ou malentendu?' in Rech. S.R., xxxiv (1947), pp. 257–302. E. Boularand, 'Aux sources de la doctrine d'Arius. [II.] La théologie antiochienne' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, lxviii (1967), pp. 241–72. A. van Roey in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 627 f., s.v. 'Antioch, School of'.

ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES (d. 163 B.C.), King of Syria from 175 B.C. (The epithet 'Epiphanes' means 'illustrious'.) His policy of attaining political unity by propagating Greek culture met with violent resistance from the Jews. He succeeded, however, in using as his pawns the high-priests Jason and Menelaus, who had in turn bought the *high-priesthood from him. In 169 B.C. he attacked *Jerusalem and spoiled the Temple, and in 167 B.C. made a renewed and fiercer onslaught in a determination to exterminate Judaism. Jewish customs were forbidden under penalty of death, the Temple defiled and pagan cults instituted. This led to the *Maccabean revolt, after which Antiochus retired to Persia, where he died. His policy and actions are described in the Books of the Maccabees.

The chief Biblical refs. are Dan. 11. 11–45; 1 Macc. 1. 10–64, 2 and 3, and 6. 1–16; and 2 Macc. 4. 7–9. 29. The other authorities include Livy (xli. 20), Polybius (xxvi. 1; xxviii. 18–20; xxix. 24–7; xxxi. 9; etc.), and Diodorus Siculus (xxix. 32, xxxi. 16, and xxxiv. 1), as well as *Josephus. E. R. Bevan, The House of Seleucus, ii (1902), pp. 126–77; id., Jerusalem under the High Priests (1904), pp. 74–90. F. M. Abel, O.P., 'Antiochus Épiphanes' in Vivre et penser, i (1941; war-time title of R. Bibl.), pp. 231–54. H. L. Jansen, Die Politik Antiochos' des IV (Skrifter utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo, 1942. Historisk-Filosofisk Klasse No. 3; 1943). A. Aymard, 'Autour de l'avènement d'Antiochus IV' in Historia. Zeitschrift für alte Geschichte, ii (1953–4), pp. 49–73. O. Mørkholm, Antiochus IV of Syria (Classica et Mediaevalia, Dissertationes '8' [7]; Copenhagen, 1966).

ANTIPAS, HEROD. See Herod Family.

ANTIPHON (Gk. ἀντίφωνον, orig. 'something sung alternately by two choirs'). In the W. Church, sentences, usually from Scripture, recited before and after the *Psalms and *Canticles in the Divine Office. They vary with the season or feast, and are often intended to indicate the spirit in which the (invariable) Psalms and Canticles are sung. They are now recited completely before and after the Psalms or Canticles. The name is also applied to the Four Anthems of Our Lady, sung, according to the season, at the close of *Compline. In the E. Church the word is used in a different sense, and applied to the three anthems sung antiphonally in the early part of the Eucharistic Liturgy, and varying acc. to the feast or season. There are also antiphons at *vespers and *mattins, consisting of psalms sung antiphonally, and at other offices and functions. Such antiphonal singing may be divided either between two choirs or else between a soloist and the choir, and may consist either of verses sung thus in alternation, or of a psalm broken at intervals by a refrain. See also Anthem.

ANTIPHONAL, also 'Antiphonary'. Orig. the liturgical book in the W. Church containing all parts both of the Choir *Office and of the *Mass which were sung by the choir antiphonally. It therefore included the '*Graduale'. In later times the Office ('Antiphonarium officii') and Mass ('Antiphonarium missae') portions were separated, and in current usage the word is restricted to the former book. Down to 1903, the official edition of the antiphonary in the RC Church was the 'Ratisbon edition', commended by *Pius IX and *Leo XIII, when it was ordered to be replaced by the 'Vatican edition'.

ANTIPOPE. A person set up as Bp. of Rome in opposition to the person already holding the see or held to be lawfully elected to it. There have been about thirty-five antipopes in the history of the Church.

A. *Mercati (Eng. tr.), 'The New List of the Popes', Mediaeval Studies, ix (1947), pp. 71–80, incl. list of Popes and Antipopes. A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 598–622, s.v. 'Antipape'

ANTITRINITARIANISM. A term used to denote various professedly Christian systems which agree only in rejecting the Catholic doctrine of the *Trinity. Such were those of the *Ebionite Jewish Christians of the 1st cent., who thought that to recognize Christ as God would involve the abandonment of *monotheism; the *Gnostic sects of the 2nd, who subordinated Christ to God as being merely a manifestation of the Father, instead of a coequal Person (see Subordinationism); and the Monarchian *Modalists who refused to admit distinct Persons within the Trinity, regarding the Son and Holy Ghost as aspects of the Father's Being. The *Arian view of Christ's Person, which in all its forms fell short of conceding Him full divinity, is also antitrinitarian. In the Middle Ages several obscure pseudo-mystical and pantheistic sects held antitrinitarian views. For the better known post-Reformation forms of Antitrinitarianism, see under Socinus and Unitarianism. Unitarianism is the most radical form in which it exists today.

ANTONELLI, GIACOMO (1806–76), Cardinal Secretary of State. He never proceeded beyond the diaconate, to which he was ordained in 1840. After holding various offices under *Gregory XVI, he was created a *cardinal by *Pius IX on his accession (1847). In 1848 he arranged the flight of the Pope to Gaeta, where he was appointed Secretary of State. Returning to Rome in 1850, he influenced the Pope in favour of a reactionary and ultramontane policy, and virtually became the temporal ruler of Rome down to 1870, being nicknamed the 'Red Pope'. He opposed the convening of the *Vatican Council, and while it was sitting advised the Pope to drop the *Infallibility question. After 1870 he was chiefly concerned with maintaining the claims of the papacy in its struggle with the Risorgimento. A statesman rather than a prelate, he was loaded with praise by his friends, but regarded as unscrupulous by his enemies.

Il Carteggio Antonelli-Sacconi (1858–1860), ed. M. Gabriele (2 vols., Rome, 1962). Short biog. sketch by A. de Waal (Bonn, 1876). V. Vetere, I ventidue anni del Cardinale Antonelli (1871). P. Pirri, 'Il Cardinale Antonelli tra il mito e la storia' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xii (1958), pp. 81–120. P. Richard in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 832–7.

ANTONIANS. Several communities claiming the patronage of, or descent from, St. *Antony of Egypt.

(1) The original disciples of St. *Antony in the desert, with whom the present Antonians of the *Maronites [(3) below] in the Near East claim (but on insufficient historical evidence) continuity.

(2) A congregation founded by Gaston de Dauphiné in 1095, which spread through France, Spain, and Italy, and survived till the French Revolution. They were known as the 'Hospital Brothers of Saint Antony'.

(3) An order in the *Armenian Church, founded in the 17th cent. to maintain the connexion with the RC Church. There are also Antonians among the Chaldean and Maronite *Uniats, and the monastery of Mount *Sinai among the Orthodox claims to follow the rule of St. Antony.

(4) A congregation founded in Flanders in 1615.

The name was also taken by an antinomian sect founded in Switzerland in 1802 by a certain Anton Unternäher (1759–1824; hence the name) who pretended to be the redeemer of mankind.

V. Advielle, Histoire de l'Ordre Hospitalier de Saint Antoine le Viennois et ses Commanderies et Prieurés, i (1883). Heimbucher, i, pp. 67–76. C. Karalevskij–F. Tournebize in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 861–73, s.v. 'Antonins'; E. El-Hayek in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 644–6, s.v.

ANTONINUS, St. (1389–1459), also 'Antonino', Abp. of Florence. At the age of 16 he joined the *Dominican Order. After making his novitiate at Cortona in company with Fra *Angelico and Fra *Bartolommeo, he governed in turn the convents of his order at Rome, Naples, Gaeta, Cortona, Siena, Fiesole, and Florence, promoting everywhere the reforms of Bl. John Dominic (1376–1419), with a view to restoring the primitive rule. In 1436 he established the famous Convent of San Marco at Florence, and with the munificence of Cosimo de' Medici, built the adjoining church. In 1446 he was made Abp. of Florence by *Eugenius IV. By his integrity and wisdom he became the counsellor of popes and statesmen, and by his care for the sick and needy in times of plague and famine endeared himself to the people. As a writer he was distinguished for his 'Summa theologica moralis', several treatises on the Christian life, and a general history of the world. As an economist, he was among the first to adapt Catholic traditions to modern conditions, maintaining that money invested in business was true capital and that it was not therefore necessarily wrong to receive interest on it. Feast day, 10 May.

His works are listed in Quétif–Échard, i (1719), p. 818 f., and ii (1721), p. 823. Summa Theologica (first publ. Venice, 1477–9), ed. P. *Ballerini (Verona, 1740). R. Morçay (ed.), Chroniques de Saint Antonin. Fragments originaux du titre xxii, 1378–1459 (1913). Life by Francesco di Castiglione, a member of Antoninus' household, printed in AA.SS., Mai. I (1680), pp. 313–25, with almost contemporary additions by Leonard de Suburti, O.P., pp. 326–34, and account, with extracts, of the Process of Canonization, pp. 335–51. R. Morçay, Saint Antonin archevêque de Florence, 1389–1459 (1914). C. Ilgner, Die volkswirtschaftlichen Anschauungen Antonins von Florenz, 1389–1459 (1904). B. Jarrett, O.P., S. Antonino and Medieval Economics (1914). J. B. Walker, The 'Chronicles' of Saint Antoninus (Catholic University of America Studies in Medieval History, vi, 1933); W. T. Gaughan, Social Theories of Saint Antoninus from his Summa Theologica (Catholic University of America Studies in Sociology, xxxv; '1950' [1951]). C. C. Calzolai, Frate Antonino Pierozzi dei Domenicani Arcivescovo di Firenze (1960). Further lives by A. Masseron ('Les Saints', 1926) and P. Bargellini (Brescia, 1947; popular). J. B. Walker, O.P., in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 646 f., s.v.

ANTONY, St., of Egypt (251?–356), hermit. About 269 Antony gave away his possessions, and devoted himself to a life of asceticism, and c. 285 retired completely into the desert, where he is said to have fought with demons under the guise of wild beasts. The holiness and ordered discipline of his life, seen in contrast to the wickedness of the contemporary world, and also compared with the more eccentric austerities of other solitaries, attracted a number of disciples; and c. 305 he came out of his solitude to organize them into a community of hermits who lived under rule (an innovation) but with little common life comparable to that of the later religious orders. Antony retired again into solitude c. 310, but later exercised his influence in support of the Nicene party in the *Arian controversy, in which he was closely associated with St. *Athanasius. Towards the end of his life the numbers of those who turned to the solitary life of the desert increased and his authority grew correspondingly. The evidence for his life is the 'Vita Antonii' by St. Athanasius, the authenticity of which has sometimes been doubted, but is now generally accepted. Feast day, 17 Jan.

The seven Epp. of Antony, mentioned by *Jerome (De vir. ill., 88) and surviving in toto only in a Lat. tr. printed in J. P. Migne, PG, xl, 977–1000, are prob. genuine; Georgian version with Coptic fragments, ed. G. Garitte (C.S.C.O., cxlviii; 1955, with Lat. tr., ib., clxix, 1956); the collection of twenty Epp. printed PG, xl, 999–1066, a working over of the earlier set through the Arabic, appears to contain nothing further authentic. A letter to Abbot Theodore and his monks 'On proper Repentance' (PG, xl, 1065) seems to be genuine; but the twenty Sermons (xl, 961–78) and the so-called 'Rule of St. Antony' (xl, 1065–79) are spurious. The authenticity of the Vita by Athanasius (PG, xxvi, 835–978) was attacked by H. Weingarten, 'Der Ursprung des Mönchtums im nachconstantinischen Zeitalter', in Z.K.G., i (1877), pp. 1–35, 545–74; but since the reply by A. Eichhorn, Athanasii de Vita Ascetica Testimonia Collecta (Halle, 1886), it has been generally accepted; early tr. by Evagrius of Antioch. Modern Eng. tr. by R. T. Meyer (A.C.W., x; 1950). G. Garitte (ed.), Un Témoin important du Texte de la Vie de S. Antoine par S. Athanase. La Version Latine inédite des Archives du Chapitre de S. Pierre à Rome (Études de Philologie, d'Archéologie et d'histoire ancienne publiées par l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, iii; 1939). H. Hoppenbrouwers, O.S.B., La Plus Ancienne Version latine de la vie de S. Antoine par S. Athanase (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, xiv; 1960). J. List, Das Antoniusleben des hl. Athanasius des Grossen (Athens, 1930); L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Vie de Saint Antoine (1950); B. Steidle, O.S.B. (ed.), Antonius Magnus Eremita 356–1956. Studia ad Antiquum Monachismum Spectantia (Studia Anselmiana, xxxviii; 1956). J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 43–45, 148–53; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 261 f., 276, with further bibl. G. Bardy in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 702–8, s.v.

ANTONY, St., of Padua (1195–1231), *Franciscan friar. Born at Lisbon of noble family, he was educated at Lisbon Cathedral School. In 1210 he joined the *Augustinian Canons near Lisbon, being transferred at his own request in 1212 to Coimbra, where he engaged in study. When the relics of some Franciscans killed in Morocco were brought to Coimbra in 1220, he was filled with a desire for martyrdom. Obtaining his release, in 1220 or 1221 he received the Franciscan habit in the chapel of St. Antony at Olivares, near Coimbra, prob. at this time changing his name from Ferdinand to Antony. He sailed to Morocco, but was forced by illness to return to Europe. He attended the General Chapter at *Assisi in 1221, and was sent to the hermitage of San Paolo near Forlì. When he was suddenly called upon to preach at an ordination at Forlì, his unexpected eloquence and learning were discovered. He was immediately recalled and, with the approval of St. *Francis, appointed lector in theology to the Order, being the first to hold the post. He taught at *Bologna in 1222, Montpellier in 1224, and later at Toulouse. He was appointed Guardian of Le Puy in 1224, Custodian at Limoges in 1226, and possibly Provincial of Emilia or Romagna in 1227, but was released from office in 1230 to devote himself more fully to preaching. He spent the rest of his life near Padua, where his relics have always been venerated. He was canonized in 1232 and declared a *Doctor of the Church in 1946. Feast day, 13 June.

St. Antony's preaching gained a considerable reputation during his life; it was largely directed against the vices of usury and avarice; it also met with notable success among the heretics of France and northern Italy. Possibly during his life, and certainly after his death, he was widely regarded as a worker of miracles. His cultus, always popular, further developed in the late 19th cent. He is chiefly invoked for the return of lost property, possibly because of the incident related in the Chronica XXIV Generalium (no. 21) of the novice who ran away with a Psalter which St. Antony was using and was forced by an alarming apparition to return it. He is also the patron of the poor, alms given to obtain his intercession being known since c. 1870 as 'St. Antony's Bread'; and he is believed to protect the pregnant and travellers. In early art he is usually depicted with a book or lily, symbolizing his knowledge of Scripture, or occasionally with an ass, which is supposed to have knelt before the Bl. Sacrament upheld by St. Antony; later, he is represented holding the Holy Child.

Collections of his sermons were publ. at Paris in 1520 and 1521; collected ed. of his works by J. de la Haye (ed.), Sancti Francisci Assisiatis . . . nec non Sancti Antonii Paduani Opera Omnia (ib., 1641), pp. 97–792; additional sermons ed. A. Pagus, O.F.M. (Avignon, 1684). Crit. ed. of his Sermones Dominicales et Festivi by B. Costa, L. Frasson, J. Luisetto and P. Marangon (3 vols., Padua, 1979). Eng. tr. of his Moral Concordances by J. M. *Neale (London, 1856). The most important source for his life is the Legenda Prima written shortly after his death; crit. ed., with later appendix, by L. de Kerval in Collection d'Études et de Documents, v (1904), pp. 1–157, with notes on other sources, pp. 237–71. Id., L'Évolution et le développement du merveilleux dans les légendes de S. Antoine de Padua (Opuscules de Critique Historique, xii, xiii, and xiv; 1906). E. Gilliat-Smith, Saint Anthony of Padua according to his Contemporaries (1926); R. M. Huber, O.F.M., St. Anthony of Padua, Doctor of the Church Universal (Milwaukee, 1948). S. Clasen, O.F.M., Antonius, Diener des Evangeliums und der Kirche (1959); J. Toussaert, Antonius von Padua. Versuch einer kritischen Biographie (Cologne, 1967). Other lives by A. Lépitre ('Les Saints', 1901; Eng. tr., 1902), V. Facchinetti (Milan, 1925; Fr. tr., 1926), N. Vian (Milan, 1934; Eng. tr., 1936), R. Maloney, O.F.M. (more popular; Dublin, 1931), and Mary Purcell (Dublin, 1960). K. Esser, O.F.M., 'Der Brief des hl. Franziskus an den hl. Antonius von Padua' in Franziskanische Studien, xxxi (1949), pp. 135–51. S. Clasen, O.F.M., in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 595 f., with bibl.

APELLES (2nd cent.), founder of a *Gnostic sect. Our slight knowledge of him comes mainly from fragments of his antagonist, Rhodo (in *Eusebius, H.E., v. xiii), and reff. in *Tertullian's De Praescriptione (xxx; xxxiv). Originally a disciple of *Marcion at *Rome, he taught at *Alexandria and later returned to Rome, where he came under the influence of a visionary, Philumene, whose oracles he collected. He embodied his system in an extended work, Συλλογισμοί. He modified Marcion's dualism in an endeavour to defend a less *Docetic doctrine of the Person of Christ. Christ came down from the good God, who was not himself the creator of the world, however, and really lived and really suffered in a body miraculously formed out of the elements. Those who believed in Christ would gain salvation not by knowledge alone or by faith alone, but by good works. Tertullian wrote a book against him, now lost.

For sources, see A. *Harnack. Marcion (T.U., xlv; 1921), pp. 213–30, and Beilage VII (pp. 323*–339*). G. Bareille in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1455–7. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 272–4.

APHRAATES (early 4th cent.), the first of the *Syriac Church fathers. He was an ascetic, evidently holding some important ecclesiastical office, and lived through the persecution of the Sasanid king, Shapur II (310–79). Our knowledge of him comes from 23 'Demonstrations' (inaccurately known as his 'Homilies'), the first ten of which were completed in 337, the next twelve in 344, and the final one in 345. The first 22 are arranged on an acrostic plan, each beginning with a different letter of the alphabet, and give a survey of the Christian faith. The 23rd, of the nature of an appendix, is a short treatise 'On the berry' (Is. 65. 8). His writings show that he attached importance to asceticism, esp. celibacy, and that, at least in intention, he was orthodox in his theology. His works throw valuable light on early Christianity in Persia and on the text of the NT. He was known as 'the Persian Sage' and at an early date was confused with *Jacob of Nisibis.

Syr. text of Homilies ed. by W. Wright (London, 1869) and, with Lat. tr., by J. Parisot, O.S.B. (Patrologia Syriaca, Pars I, vols. i, ii; 1894–1907). Germ. tr. by G. Bert (T.U., iii, Hftt. 3–4; 1888); Eng. tr. of eight Homm. by J. Gwynn in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, xiii (1898), pp. 345–412. R. H. *Connolly, 'Aphraates and Monasticism' in J.T.S., vi (1905), pp. 522–39; reply by F. C. *Burkitt, ib., vii (1906), pp. 10–15. H. L. Pass, 'The Creed of Aphraates', ib., ix (1908), pp. 267–84. F. Gavin, 'Aphraates and the Jews' in Journal of the Society of Oriental Research, vii (1923), pp. 95–166. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Die Gottheit Christi bei Afrahat (Orientalia Christiana, vol. xxxi, fasc. 1 (Num. 87); 1933). E. J. Duncan, Baptism in the Demonstrations of Aphraates the Persian Sage (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, viii; 1945). A. Vööbus, 'Methodologisches zum Studium der Anweisungen Aphrahats' in Oriens Christianus, xlvi (1962), pp. 25–32. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 327–40; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 46–51, with full bibl. I. Hausherr in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 746–52, s.v.; A. Vööbus, 'Nachträge zum Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum. Aphrahat' in Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, iii (1960), pp. 152–5, with bibl.

APHTHARTODOCETAE. One of the divisions of the *Monophysites (q.v.). They were founded by *Julian, Bp. of Halicarnassus, and are hence known also as 'Julianists'. They taught that from the first moment of the incarnation the earthly body of Christ was in its nature incorruptible (ἄφθαρτος), impassible, and immortal, though this fact did not preclude Him from accepting suffering and death by a free act of His will. The doctrine was attacked (on grounds acceptable also to Catholic orthodoxy) by *Severus, the Monophysite Patr. of Antioch, as incompatible with belief in the true humanity of Christ.

R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère (1924). M. Jugie, A.A., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissentium, v (Paris, 1935), 432–7.

APIARIUS. A priest of the diocese of Sicca in proconsular Africa, who was deposed by his bishop for misconduct. The incident is important in connexion with the growth of Papal jurisdiction. Apiarius appealed to Pope *Zosimus (417–18), who thereupon ordered him to be reinstated. In consequence a council held at *Carthage in May 418 forbade appeals beyond the sea. The Pope protested at this decree, and the case dragged on for some years. About 423 Apiarius was again excommunicated, and again appealed to Rome with the same result. The incident also led to a fresh examination of the authority attaching to the *Sardican Canons and thus indirectly had a decisive influence on the beginnings of the codification of *canon law.

Hefele–Leclercq, ii, pp. 196–215 passim, with bibl. note p. 196. Fliche–Martin, iv, pp. 253 f. and 257 with reff. A. Audollent in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 951–4, s.v., with bibl.

APOCALYPSES. See Abraham, Apocalypse of; Baruch, Apocalypse of; Revelation, Book of.

APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE. The word 'apocalypse' (ἀποκάλυψις) means a 'revelation' or 'unveiling', so that an apocalyptic book claims to reveal things which are normally hidden and to unveil the future. The Jewish Apocalyptic books belong approximately to the period from 200 B.C. to A.D. 100 and deal with the end of the present world order and with the next world. Whereas the Israelite Prophets were primarily preachers, concerned with current problems of their own generation and nation, the Apocalyptists were pre-eminently writers, directing their attention towards the end of things and to the destiny of the world in general. The origins and growth of this literature were due to the history of Palestine's conflicts with other nations and to the conviction that trust in military power was useless. As the nation continued to be subjected to foreign domination, it despaired of ever attaining political supremacy, and the conclusion was drawn that God would eventually intervene, destroy Israel's enemies, and set up His Kingdom on earth.

Apocalyptic literature proper begins with the Book of *Daniel, probably written during the persecution of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175–163 B.C.) to comfort the Jews in their distress and to assure them of the approaching Divine intervention, though the beginnings of Apocalyptic tendencies can be seen in the prophetic writings (e.g. Joel 2, Is. 65, Amos 5. 16–20, 9. 11–15, Is. 24–7, 33, Zech. 12–14, Ezek. 38, 39), where there are frequent references to the approaching 'day of the Lord'. The Apocalyptic writings, in the technical sense, are always pseudonymous and written in the names of Israel's past heroes, a circumstance probably to be ascribed to the fact that, owing to the supremacy of the Law (which was regarded as containing the complete and final revelation of the Divine will), the only way to secure a hearing after the formation of the earliest form of the OT *Canon in the 3rd cent. B.C. was to attribute these writings to some famous person of the pre-legal period.

Important Jewish Apocalyptic writings outside the OT (to which reference has just been made) are the Book of *Enoch, the Book of the Secrets of Enoch, the Apocalypse of *Baruch, the Fourth Book of *Ezra, the Assumption of *Moses, the Book of *Jubilees, the Ascension of *Isaiah, and the *Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs.

In the NT, the element of Apocalyptic appears in various places. The two most important Christian Apocalypses are Rev. and the (non-canonical) 'Apocalypse of *Peter'. Whatever interpretation the Lord Himself wished His disciples to put upon His apocalyptic utterances, it is clear that, at least in the earlier part of the Apostolic age, a speedy Second Coming of Christ was expected (see, e.g., Mt. 24 and 25, Mk. 13, Lk. 21, 1 Thess. 4, 1 Cor. 15 for typical Apocalyptic passages). 2 Pet. and Rev. probably belong to a slightly later period, when severe persecution was troubling the Church.

Eng. tr. of most of the Jewish Apocalyptic writings not in the OT will be found in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (2 vols., Oxford, 1913). H. H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic. A Study of Jewish and Christian Apocalypses from Daniel to Revelation (1944); S. B. Frost, Old Testament Apocalyptic. Its Origins and Growth (1952); J. Bloch, On the Apocalyptic in Judaism (Jewish Quarterly Review, Monograph Series, ii; Philadelphia, 1952); D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (1964). J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 326–54, s.v., with extensive bibl.

APOCATASTASIS. The Greek name (ἀποκατάστασις) for the doctrine that ultimately all free moral creatures—angels, men, and devils—will share in the grace of salvation. It is to be found in *Clement of Alexandria, in *Origen and in St. *Gregory of Nyssa. It was strongly attacked by St. *Augustine of Hippo and formally condemned in the first anathema against *Origenism, probably put out by the Council of *Constantinople in A.D. 543. In more modern times the doctrine has been defended by certain *Anabaptists, *Moravians, *Christadelphians (modified in some of these by a form of *conditional immortality), and also by certain individual theologians, of whom perhaps the most important is F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. Such teaching is also known as *Universalism.

APOCRISIARIUS (from Gk. ἀποκρίνομαι 'to answer, make response'). An ecclesiastical deputy or other official of high rank.

(1) The envoys used by the Patriarchates as their diplomatic representatives in other patriarchal cities or at imperial courts. Apocrisiarii were at first, from the 5th cent., sent on specific missions, but by the 9th cent. at any rate they had acquired the character of permanent legates. In recent years the *Oecumenical Patriarch has appointed an 'apocrisiarius' to the Abp. of *Canterbury.

(2) The title was also used of the senior court chaplains of the Frankish courts, also known as 'archicapellani'.

APOCRYPHA, The (Gk. τὰ ἀπόκρυφα (plur.), 'the hidden [things]'). The Biblical Books received by the early Church as part of the Gk. version of the OT, but not included in the Heb. Bible, being excluded by the non-Hellenistic Jews from their *Canon. Their position in Christian usage has been somewhat ambiguous. In the *Vulgate and versions derived from it they are mostly part of the OT; but in the AV, RV, and other non-Roman modern versions, they either form a separate section between the OT and NT, or are omitted altogether. They comprise (in the order of the AV): 1 and 2 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, the Rest of Esther, the Wisdom of Solomon, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch with the Epistle of Jeremy, the Song of the three Holy Children, the History of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, the Prayer of Manasses, and 1 and 2 Maccabees (qq.v.).

The Church received these writings from Hellenistic Judaism, esp. that of *Alexandria. In the *Septuagint (LXX), which incorporated all except 2 Esd., they were in no way differentiated from the other Books of the OT. The narrative Books (1 Esd., Tobit, Judith, 1 and 2 Macc.) are grouped in the principal MSS. with the later historical Books 1 Chron.–Esth., the Wisdom Books (Wisd., Ecclus.) with Prov., etc., and Pr. of Man. is appended to the Psalter. The three items, Song of III Ch., Susanna, and Bel and Dragon (collectively known as 'the Additions to Daniel'), are here integral parts of the Book of Dan., being the parts of the Gk. text to which nothing corresponds in the Heb. Similarly the disjointed chapters (by no means a complete Book) appearing in the Eng. versions of the Apocrypha as 'the Rest of Esther' are here simply the portions of the Gk. text of Esth. not found in the Heb. Baruch and Ep. of Jer. are appended in LXX MSS. to Jer., though not derived from the Heb. Book. Under the name of 'Esdras' (the Gk. form of Heb. 'Ezra') the LXX contains two Books: one (Ἔσδρας α′, i.e. '1 Ezra') corresponds to portions of (the Heb.) 2 Chron., Ezr., and Neh., but contains also a passage (1 Esd. 3. 1–5. 6.) not found there; the other (Ἔσδρας β′, i.e. '2 Ezra') is a faithful rendering of Ezr. and Neh. The latter therefore is regarded as the LXX version of these OT Books, while the former, which diverges from the Heb., appears among the Apocrypha as '1 Esdras'. The '2 Esdras' of the Apocrypha is a different work altogether. It is not extant in Gk. and found only in Latin MSS.; but it was doubtless translated from the Gk., and is, like the rest, of Jewish origin. This last is also known as the 'Ezra Apocalypse'.

In date of writing, the Books of the Apocrypha derive from the period 300 B.C.–A.D. 100 approx., and mostly from 200 B.C.–A.D. 70, i.e. before the definite separation of the Church from Judaism. In this period, though the *Canon of the Jewish Scriptures was closed as far as the 'Law' and the 'Prophets' were concerned, it was still possible for works which came to be known technically as 'Writings' to claim the status of Scripture, and some of the Canonical Books of the OT (e.g. Dan.) date from this period. Some of the Apocrypha, e.g. Ecclus. (cf. the Prologue to the Book), being written originally in Heb., might have gained canonical status, but did not; others (e.g. 2 Macc.), being written in Gk., were never current among Aramaic-speaking Jews. When the Hebrew Canon of Scripture was settled (c. A.D. 100), the Heb. text of the excluded Books ceased to be copied. With the exception of fragments recovered in modern times, e.g. considerable portions of Ecclus. discovered in an ancient *genizah, this has hence been lost. On the other hand, the Gk. survived because of its use by Christians, who at first received all the Books of the Septuagint equally as Scripture. Though no Book of the Apocrypha is quoted in the NT, *Clement of Rome and other early Fathers, notably *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen, cite them frequently. The considerable use made of them by Christians for apologetic purposes, e.g. of texts held to refer to such Christian doctrines as the Incarnation and the Eternal Generation of the *Wisdom (equated with the Word (*Logos), i.e. Son) of God (Wis. 7. 26), may have contributed to the Jewish rejection of the Books. In the later Gk. version of the Scriptures made by the Jew *Aquila (q.v.), the Heb. Canon was followed exactly.

Down to the 4th cent. the Church generally accepted all the Books of the Septuagint as canonical. Gk. and Lat. Fathers alike (e.g. *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Cyprian) cite both classes of Books without distinction. In the 4th cent., however, many Gk. Fathers (e.g. *Eusebius, *Athanasius, *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Epiphanius, *Gregory of Nazianzus) came to recognize a distinction between those canonical in Heb. and the rest, though the latter were still customarily cited as Scripture. St. *Jerome, through his Eastern contacts and his Heb. studies, accepted this distinction, and introduced the term 'apocrypha' for the latter class, which he also described as the 'libri ecclesiastici' as distinguished from the 'libri canonici'. But with a few exceptions (e.g. *Hilary, *Rufinus), W. writers (esp. *Augustine) continued to consider all as equally canonical. In the E. Church opinion varied, and for some centuries the Books continued to be widely accepted; but at the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672 it was decided that Tobit, Judith, Ecclus., and Wisd. alone were to be regarded as canonical. Opinion in the W. also was not unanimous, some authorities considering certain books uncanonical; but, despite Jerome's distinction, all, including '2 Esdras' (see above), were commonly included in the Vulgate and cited as Scripture. (In the Vulgate, 'I, II Esdras' = Ezr. and Neh. (from the Heb.); 'III Esdras' = '1 Esdras' (i.e. Ἔσδρας α′ (of the LXX); and 'IV Esdras' = '2 Esdras' (the Ezra Apocalypse).)

At the Reformation, Protestant leaders, ignoring the traditional acceptance of all the Books of the LXX in the early Church and desiring to return to Biblical authority purged of medieval tradition, refused the status of inspired Scripture to those Books of the Vulg. not to be found in the Heb. Canon. M. *Luther, however, included the Apocrypha (except 1 and 2 Esd.) as an appendix to his translation of the Bible (1534), and in his preface allowed them to be 'useful and good to be read'. The Geneva translators (see Bible, English versions) translated them, with a preface recognizing their value for 'knowledge of history and instruction of godly manners', and the C of E, in the *Thirty-nine Articles (1562) (Art. VI), stated that 'the Church doth read [them] for example of life and instruction of manners; but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine'. At the Council of *Trent (Sess. IV, 8 April 1548), the full canonicity of the Books was confirmed, with the exception of 1 and 2 (i.e. III and IV) Esdras and Pr. of Man., which were placed henceforth in an appendix to the Vulgate, after the NT. This decision was confirmed for the RC Church by the First *Vatican Council (1870). In the C of E, in accordance with Art. VI, the Apocrypha, as a separate section between the OT and NT, were included as an integral part of the *Authorized Version of 1611. Under Puritan ascendancy, however, it was declared in the *Westminster Confession (1646–7) that the Apocrypha were not 'to be otherwise approved or made use of than other human writings'. The common attitude to them in Great Britain, maintained officially by the Church of *Scotland and favoured by Nonconformists, was of rejection or at least suspicion, and this, perhaps combined with Anglican apathy, and reinforced by the decision of the *British and Foreign Bible Society not to distribute Bibles containing them, led to their general omission from the editions commonly sold. In the BCP of 1662, portions of some of them were included in the Lectionary, and this was continued in the Lectionary of 1871 as far as Wisd., Ecclus., and Baruch were concerned. In the Revised Lectionary of 1922 portions of Pr. of Man., 1 and 2 Macc., and Tobit were also included.

With the growth of a historical perspective in Biblical studies in the 19th cent., and increased knowledge and interest in the Hellenistic and non-biblical background of the NT, the great value of the Apocrypha as historical sources came to be generally recognized, and there came also a new recognition of their religious value. Historically they are invaluable for the light which they throw on the period between the end of the OT historical narrative in Ezra-Neh. (c. 400 B.C.) and the opening of the NT. They witness to the rise of the belief in eternal life and in the resurrection of the body, championed by the Pharisees in the NT period (cf. Mk. 12. 18–27, Acts 23. 6–9), and as touching questions that were very much alive in the Apostolic Age (e.g. the Jewish Law, good works, sin and its origin in the *Fall, eschatology); and as having been read as Scripture by the pre-Nicene Church and many post-Nicene Fathers, they have gained increasing respect even from those who do not hold them to be equally canonical with the rest of the OT.

Revision of AV Eng. tr., with crit. comm. ed. H. *Wace (Speaker's Commentary, 2 vols., 1888), with valuable 'General Introduction' by G. *Salmon, i, pp. ix–xlvi; Eng. tr., with full introd., bibl., and notes, also in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913). RSV Apocrypha with commentary ed. by B. M. Metzger (New York, 1965). W. O. E. Oesterley, The Books of the Apocrypha. Their Origin, Teaching and Contents (1914); id., An Introduction to the Books of the Apocrypha (1935). E. J. Goodspeed, The Story of the Apocrypha (Chicago, 1939). B. M. Metzger, An Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1957). L. H. Brockington, A Critical Introduction to the Apocrypha (1961). C. C. Torrey, The Apocryphal Literature. A Brief Introduction (New Haven, 1945; London, 1963). Eissfeldt, pp. 571–603, with bibl. W. H. Daubney, The Use of the Apocrypha in the Christian Church (1900). H. M. Hughes, The Ethics of Jewish Apocryphal Literature [1909]; R. T. Herford, Talmud and Apocrypha. A Comparative Study of the Jewish Ethical Teaching in the Rabbinical and non-Rabbinical Sources in the Early Centuries (1933). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 233–522. E. *Schürer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 622–53, s.v. 'Apokryphen des Alten Testaments'.

APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT, The. A modern title for various early Christian books outside the *Canon of the NT, which are similar in general form to the corresponding canonical Scriptures. The epithet 'apocryphal' here does not of itself imply inaccuracy, unauthenticity, or unorthodoxy.

Gospels. Many of these exist. It is possible that in a few places some of these embody trustworthy oral traditions, e.g. the *Gospels Acc. to the Hebrews and *Acc. to the Egyptians and that *of Peter. Others such as the *Gospels of Marcion, of the Twelve Apostles, of Thomas, and *of Philip were intended to support heretical and esp. *Gnostic views. A third group set out to satisfy popular curiosity with tales of the childhood of Christ, His passion, and His post-Resurrection life; their contents were often patently garrulous and their ideas not infrequently immoral. To this group belongs the Infancy Gospel of Thomas, the Arabic Gospel of the Childhood, the History of Joseph the Carpenter, and the Departure of Mary; and for the later part the *Gospel of Nicodemus (sometimes called the Acts of Pilate) and the *Legend of Abgar. Most of these works lie between the late 1st and early 3rd cents.

Acts. Of the Apocryphal Acts, the most important are those of *Peter, *Paul, *John, *Andrew, and Thomas, all probably late 2nd cent. They are sometimes known collectively as the 'Leucian Acts', because all were ascribed by *Photius to one Leucius Charinus; but wide differences of style, matter, and doctrinal standpoint forbid the assumption of common authorship. Their subject-matter is partly made up of stories parallel to and perhaps inspired by the canonical Acts of the Apostles, partly credible oral traditions, partly evident romance. The Acts of Paul (from which the Acts of Paul and Thecla, which was current as a separate work, was later extracted) is not markedly heretical; but nearly all the others in varying degrees reflect current heretical influences.

Epistles and Other Writings. Of the non-canonical epistles the best known are those of Clement ('ep. 1') and Barnabas (qq.v.; c. A.D. 100), though these hardly come under the title as ordinarily used. Among others are the spurious Epp. of St. Paul To the Corinthians and To the Laodiceans. There are also various apocryphal apocalypses besides the Revelation of St. John, which itself long remained on the borders of the NT canon.

M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924; the principal texts in Eng. trans.). C. *Tischendorf, ed., Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853; ed. 2, 1876). R. A. Lipsius–M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1891–1903). Germ. tr. by E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen (1904; ed. 3 by W. Schneemelcher, 2 vols., 1959–64; Eng. tr., with tr. of texts from their original languages, 1963–5). M. R. James, Anecdota Apocrypha (Cambridge 'Texts and Studies', 1893 and 1897). J. Hervieux, Ce que l'Évangile ne dit pas ([1958]; Eng. tr. as What are Apocryphal Gospels?, 1960). See also literature under separate items.

APODEIPNON (Gk. ἀπόδειπνον, 'after supper'). In the E. Church, the late evening liturgical service which is the counterpart of *Compline in the West.

APOLLINARIS, St. (date unknown), first Bp. of *Ravenna. The earliest mention of him is in a sermon of St. Peter *Chrysologus (d. c. 450), who styles him a martyr; but the principal authority is some (historically worthless) 7th-cent. acta which put him in the 1st cent. and make him a disciple of St. *Peter at Antioch. His body was venerated in early times at Classe, near Ravenna, the supposed scene of his sufferings, later in the cathedral of Ravenna itself. His name still occurs in the canon of the *Ambrosian Rite. Feast day, 23 July. See also Ravenna.

AA.SS., Jul. V (1727), pp. 328–85, incl. medieval accounts of the translation of his relics. F. Lanzoni, Le origini delle diocesi antiche d'Italia. Studio critico (S.T., xxxv; 1923), pp. 452–75 (on Ravenna, with bibl. reff.). E. Will, Saint Apollinaire de Ravenne (1936); G. Lucchesi, Note agiografiche sui primi vescovi di Ravenna (Faenza, 1941). H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'L'Hagiographie ancienne de Ravenne' in Anal. Boll., xlvii (1929), pp. 5–30.

APOLLINARIS, SIDONIUS. See Sidonius Apollinaris.

APOLLINARIUS, CLAUDIUS (2nd cent.), Bp. of Hierapolis, early Christian *Apologist. His writings included a 'Defence of the Faith', presented to Marcus Aurelius (prob. in 172), treatises 'Against the Pagans' (Πρὸς Ἕλληνας), on 'Truth' (Περὶ Ἀληθείας), and on *Easter (Περὶ τοῦ Πάσχα), and a work against the *Montanists. Apart from a few fragments, all his writings are lost. Feast day, 8 Jan.

The chief authority is *Eusebius, H.E., IV. xxvii, and v. xix. The fragments are collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2), pp. 155–74, and in J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, ix (1872), pp. 479–95.

APOLLINARIUS and APOLLINARIANISM. Apollinarius (or Apollinaris) ('the Younger', c. 310 – c. 390) was the son of a grammarian of Beirut, also named Apollinarius ('the Elder'), in conjunction with whom he rewrote much of the Bible in classical forms when the Emp. *Julian (361–3) forbade Christians to use the pagan classics. A vigorous advocate of orthodoxy against the *Arians, he became Bp. of Laodicea c. 360 and was a close friend of St. *Athanasius (whom he had received on his return from exile in 346). Teaching akin to that of Apollinarius was condemned at the Council of *Alexandria in 362, but soon afterwards he explained himself satisfactorily. His characteristic Christological teaching, which was little known before 371, was explicitly condemned by synods at Rome in 374–380 and by the council of *Constantinople of 381. Apollinarius himself seceded from the Church c. 375, and from 381 the State forbade Apollinarian public worship.

Of Apollinarius' extensive writings, most have been lost. Among his dogmatic works which survive under the false names of orthodox writers are: (1) a Detailed Confession of Faith' (ἡ κατὰ μέρος πίστις), attributed to St. *Gregory Thaumaturgus; (2) 'Quod unus sit Christus', 'De Incarnatione Dei Verbi', and a Profession of Faith addressed to the Emp. *Jovian, all attributed to St. Athanasius; (3) three writings under the name of Pope *Julius (337–52). Another dogmatic work ('Ἀπόδειξις) can be partially reconstructed from St. *Gregory of Nyssa's attack on it in his 'Antirrheticus'. Fragments of his many Commentaries on the OT and NT, as well as of his apologetic works against *Porphyry (in 30 Books) and the Emp. *Julian, have also been preserved, largely in catenae. A Paraphrase of the Pss. in hexameters is of doubtful authenticity.

The objects of Apollinarianism, the first great Christological heresy, were: (1) to assert the unity of Godhead and manhood in Christ, (2) to teach the full Deity of Christ, and (3) to avoid teaching that there was moral development in Christ's life. To gain these ends, Apollinarius asserted that in man there coexist body, soul, and spirit. In Christ, however, were to be found the human body and soul, but no human spirit, the spirit being replaced by the Divine *Logos. Thus, while He possessed perfect Godhead, He lacked complete manhood. It has been argued (G. A. *Dorner, R. L. *Ottley, H. M. Relton), indeed, that Apollinarius may have met the objection that Christ's manhood was not complete by saying that the Logos was the prototype of all human spirits and so could replace the spirit without detriment to the humanity; but this interpretation of his teaching rests mainly on its misunderstanding by St. Gregory of Nyssa (so C. E. Raven, G. L. Prestige). Much confusion was created as the controversy developed through want of agreement over the use of the terms 'Person' and 'Nature', and as to whether the human personality is to be divided into body and soul, or into body, soul, and spirit. The fundamental objection to Apollinarius' teaching from the point of view of Catholic orthodoxy is that if there is no complete manhood in Christ, He is not a perfect example for us, nor did He redeem the whole of human nature, but only its spiritual elements.

Texts in H. Lietzmann, Apollinaris von Laodicea und seine Schule. Texte und Untersuchungen, i (Tübingen, 1904; all publd.); this supersedes the collection of texts in J. Dräseke, Apollinaris von Laodicea (T.U., No. vii, Hftt. 3 and 4, 1892; conclusions generally rejected). Additional texts: A. Ludwich, Metaphrasis Psalmorum (ed. Teubner, 1912); K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 57–82; H. de Riedmatten, O.P., 'Les Fragments d'Apollinaire à l' "Éranistes" ' in Das Konzil von Chalkedon. Geschichte und Gegenwart (ed. A. Grillmeier, S.J., and H. Bacht, S.J.), i (1951), pp. 203–12; id., 'La Correspondance entre Basile de Césarée et Apollinaire de Laodicée' in J.T.S., N.S. vii (1956), pp. 199–210, viii (1957), pp. 53–70; J. Reuss (ed.), Matthäus-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (T.U., lxi; 1957), pp. 1–54; id. (ed.), Johannes-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (ib., lxxxix; 1966), pp. 3–64; R. Devreesse (ed.), Les Anciens Commentaires grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (S.T., cci; 1959), pp. 128–54. G. Voisin, L'Apollinarisme (1901); C. E. Raven, Apollinarianism (1923); G. L. Prestige, Fathers and Heretics (Bampton Lectures for 1940; 1940), Lect. v, pp. 193–246; id., St. Basil the Great and Apollinaris of Laodicea, ed. H. Chadwick (1956). H. de Riedmatten, O.P., 'Some Neglected Aspects of Apollinarist Christology' in Dominican Studies, i (1948), pp. 239–60; id., 'La Christologie d'Apollinaire de Laodicée' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, ii (T.U., lxiv; 1957), pp. 208–34. E. Mühlenberg, Apollinaris von Laodicea (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, xxiii; 1969). R. Aigrain in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 962–82, s.v. On the Psalm Metaphrasis, see J. Golega, 'Verfasser und Zeit der Psalterparaphrase des Apolinarios' in B.Z., xxxix (1939), pp. 1–22 (author perhaps presbyter Marcianus, d. at Constantinople after 471); id., Der Homerische Psalter. Studien über die dem Apolinarios von Laodikeia zugeschriebene Psalmenparaphrase (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, vi; 1960).

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA (d. c. 98), Neopythagorean philosopher. His virtuous life and reforming religious tendencies were constantly exaggerated after his death, so that it became possible for anti-Christian writers to compose biographies of him consciously parallel with the Gospel life of Christ. The Life of him by Flavius Philostratus (c. 220), though perhaps not inspired by this motive, furnished by its exaggeration and pretensions matter for anti-Christians in later times, and in particular for Hierocles, Governor of Bithynia c. 303, who wrote a Life of Apollonius which called forth a refutation from *Eusebius of Caesarea. In modern times opponents of Christianity have occasionally used Philostratus to disparage the uniqueness of the Christian Gospel, but the alleged parallels are generally admitted to be unconvincing.

There is a convenient edition of Philostratus' Vita Apollonii in the Loeb Classical Library (2 vols., 1912, ed. by F. C. Conybeare). Also Eng. tr., with valuable introduction, by J. S. Phillimore (2 vols., 1912). E. Meyer, 'Apollonius von Tyana und die Biographie des Philostratos' in Hermes, lii (1917), pp. 371–424. G. Petzke, Die Traditionen über Apollonius von Tyana und das Neue Testament (Leiden, 1969). Popular account in H. C. Schnur, Mystic Rebels (New York, 1949), pp. 9–84, with refs. K. Gross in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 529–33, s.v., with bibl.

APOLLOS. A 'learned' Jew of Alexandria, 'mighty in the scriptures' (Acts 18. 24). He was originally a follower of 'the baptism of John [the Baptist]', but his Christian education was completed c. 54 at *Ephesus by *Priscilla and Aquila. He then preached at Corinth, where some Christians wished to set him up as a rival to St. Paul (Acts 18. 24, 1 Cor. 3. 4, &c.). It has been supposed by some (e.g. M. *Luther) that he was the author of the epistle to the Hebrews.

APOLOGETICS. The defence of the Christian faith on intellectual grounds by trained theologians and philosophers. Historically this work began with the presentation of the case for Christianity to non-Christians by the 2nd-cent. *Apologists, but its task soon included also the defence of orthodox teaching against those who dissent from it. The present function of Christian apologetics is considered to be esp. dispassionately to set down the rational ground of the faith, without necessarily having any particular antagonist in view. So understood, the scope of Christian apologetics falls into three parts: (1) to show that it is more reasonable to have a religion than not; (2) to show that Christianity can give a more rational account of itself than any other religion; (3) to show that it is more reasonable to profess orthodox Christianity than any other form. It is not generally claimed that the essential truth of Christianity is certainly demonstrable by purely logical or scientific methods, but it is maintained that it is possible to show by these means that its acceptance is entirely in accordance with the demands of reason.

A. B. *Bruce, Apologetics (1892); J. Baillie, Our Knowledge of God (1939); A. Richardson, Christian Apologetics (1947). K. Werner, Geschichte der apologetischen und polemischen Literatur der christlichen Theologie (5 vols., 1861–7); O. Zöckler, Geschichte der Apologie des Christentums (1907). A. d'Alès (ed.), Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique (4 vols., ed. 4, 1911–28). T. W. Crafer, in H.E.R.E., i (1908), cols. 611–22, s.v.

APOLOGIA PRO VITA SUA (1864). J. H. *Newman's 'history of [his] religious opinions' down to his reception into the RC Church, 9 Oct. 1845. It is a primary historical source for the *Oxford Movement, not least because of the letters and other historical documents which it contains. This moving and tragic work, one of the greatest autobiographies in the language, was provoked by a gibe of C. *Kingsley in Macmillan's Magazine for January 1864 (cited s.v. Kingsley). Early in Feb. 1864 Newman published in a pamphlet some correspondence with Kingsley and the publisher over the passage with the title Mr. Kingsley and Dr. Newman. Kingsley promptly issued a reply ('What, then, does Dr. Newman mean?'). The Apologia, Newman's answer, was orig. issued in weekly parts.

Many reprints, e.g. in Everyman's Library (1912). Crit. ed., with introd. by Wilfrid Ward, London, 1913; reissued 1931; more elaborate crit. ed. by M. J. Svaglic (Oxford, 1967). Fr. tr., with introd. and notes, by M. Nédoncelle, Paris, 1939. C. H. Collette, Dr. Newman and his Religious Opinions (1866; anti-Roman critique). W. E. Houghton, The Art of Newman's Apologia (New Haven, 1945). V. F. Blehl, S.J., and F. X. Connolly (edd.), Newman's Apologia. A Classic Reconsidered (New York [1964]).

APOLOGISTS. The name esp. given to the Christian writers who (c. 120–220) first addressed themselves to the task of making a reasoned defence and recommendation of their faith to outsiders. They include *Aristides, *Justin Martyr, *Tatian, *Athenagoras, *Theophilus, *Minucius Felix, and *Tertullian. They belonged to the period when Christianity was first making converts among the educated classes, and was also in conflict with the State over its very right to exist. Their object was to gain a fair hearing for Christianity and to dispel popular slanders and misunderstandings, and to provide for this purpose some account of Christian belief and practice. They had to meet: (1) pagan philosophy and the general outlook which it influenced, and (2) the specifically Jewish objections. They devoted much attention to the application of OT prophecy to Christianity, and to the position of the divinity of Christ in relation to monotheism, and esp. in connexion with the latter doctrine elaborated the teaching on the *Logos and won for it a permanent place in Christian theology. Except for Tertullian, they were not primarily theologians. Their method was to exhibit Christianity to emperors and to the public as politically harmless and morally and culturally superior to paganism.

Collected crit. ed. of texts by J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum (9 vols., Jena, 1847–72; ed. 3 of vols. 1–5 [Justin], 1876–81); more recent text (except Theophilus) in E. J. Goodspeed, Die ältesten Apologeten (1914). Eng. trr. in A.N.C.L. (various authors and dates). E. J. Goodspeed, Index Apologeticus (Leipzig, 1912; vocabulary). J. Geffcken, Zwei griechische Apologeten (1907; Aristides and Athenagoras); A. Puech, Les Apologistes grecs du deuxième siècle de notre ère (1912); M. Pellegrino, Studi su l'antica apologetica (1947). V. A. Spence Little, The Christology of the Apologists (1934). A. L. Williams, Adversus Judaeos. A Bird's-Eye View of Christian Apologiae until the Renaissance (Cambridge, 1935), esp. Book I. See also standard Patrologies and bibls. under separate Apologists.

APOLYSIS (Gk. ἀπόλυσις, 'dismissal'). The concluding blessing in the E. rites, said by the priest at the end of the Liturgy and of the offices.

APOLYTIKION (Gk. ἀπολυτίκιον). In the E. rites, the principal *troparion of the day, celebrating the particular feast or saint commemorated in the calendar. It is sung at the end of Vespers and *Orthros (hence its name, 'dismissal hymn'), and is repeated in the Liturgy and almost all the other offices.

APOPHTHEGM. A designation used by R. *Bultmann and other *Form-critics for those items in the Gospels which M. *Dibelius describes as '*Paradigms'. The term had been used previously for stories of a similar type in secular Greek literature.

APOPHTHEGMATA PATRUM. A collection of sayings of the Egyptian monks, arranged alphabetically acc. to the speakers. It dates from the 4th–5th cents. and throws much light on their lives and ideals. As a large proportion are sayings of one Poemen (who lived well into the 5th cent.), the work may have been compiled by his followers. It was known to John *Moschus (d. 619), to *Cyril of Scythopolis (d. c. 560), and perhaps also to *Socrates Scholasticus (d. after 450) and *Cassian (d. c. 435).

The most widely diffused collection is that first printed by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, i (1677), pp. 338–712 (repr. J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 71–440). Other collections in Cod. Burney 50 of the Brit. Mus. and a Lat. version publd. by H. Rosweyde, S.J., as Bk. vii of his Vitae Patrum (1617; this and other texts repr. in PL, lxxiii and lxxiv). Coptic version in Sahidic dialect ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Chaîne (Cairo, 1960). Eng. tr. of Syriac version by E. A. W. Budge, Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt (1934). W. *Bousset, Apophthegmata. Studien zur Geschichte des ältesten Mönchtums (ed. T. Hermann and G. Krüger, 1923). J.-C. Guy, S.J., Recherches sur la Tradition grecque des Apophthegmata Patrum (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxxvi; 1962). Eng. tr. of PG text by Benedicta Ward, S.L.G., The Sayings of the Desert Fathers (1975).

APOSTASY. In the discipline of the early Church the term was used of the abandonment of Christianity, which was, with murder and fornication, one of the three sins at first accounted unpardonable, if committed by a baptized person, and later pardonable only after public penance. In modern RC usage the word is used in three senses: (a) total defection from the Christian faith; (b) public defection from the RC Church; (c) desertion by a monk or nun who has taken perpetual vows. In non-technical language the word is generally used only of the entire abandonment of Christianity.

On Apostasy in the early Church see bibl. on Lapsi. Modern RC legislation in CIC, cans. 1325 (par. 2) and 1240, and, in the case of religious, cans. 644–6.

APOSTICHA (Gk. ἀπόστιχα). In the E. Church, brief liturgical hymns or *stichera attached to verses from the Psalter. They occur at the end of Vespers, and (except on feast days) of *Orthros.

APOSTIL. See Postil.

APOSTLE (Gk. ἀπόστολος). (1) The title given in the Gospels, and later, to the twelve chief disciples of Christ (e.g. Mt. 10. 2, Lk. 22. 14, Acts 1. 2). The lists of names given in the Gospels and Acts vary slightly, a fact probably to be explained by the application of different names to the same persons, rather than by actual discrepancy. After the suicide of *Judas Iscariot, his place was taken by *Matthias, and the term 'Apostle' is also applied to him, as well as, in the Acts and Epp., to *Paul and *Barnabas. It is possible that the term was used in the second generation of Christians of a wider circle of Church officials. In modern usage the term is sometimes applied to the leader of the first Christian mission to a country, e.g., to St. *Patrick, the 'Apostle of Ireland', Sts. *Cyril and Methodius, the 'Apostles of the Slavs', and many others. Where the traditional beliefs of the operation of grace and authority in the Christian Church are maintained, it is through the original twelve Apostles that this grace and authority are held to descend from Christ, and from them to their lawfully appointed successors. (See Apostolic Succession, Episcopacy.) Acc. to later traditions, all the twelve Apostles, except St. John, were also martyrs.

(2) A name given to the Epistle read in the E. Liturgy. It is always a portion of an epistle of one of the Apostles or is taken from the Acts, and never, as in Western rites on occasion, an extract from the OT. The word is also used for the book which contains these readings set out as appointed.

(3) An official in the *Catholic Apostolic Church.

On (1) J. B. *Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1865), pp. 89–97 ('On the Name and Office of Apostle'). H. Vogelstein, 'The Development of the Apostolate in Judaism and its Transformation in Christianity' in Hebrew Union College Annual, ii (1925), pp. 99–123. G. Saas, Apostelamt und Kirche. Eine theologisch-exegetische Untersuchung des paulinischen Apostelbegriffs (1939); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry. Essays on the History and the Doctrine of Episcopacy (1946); A. Fridrichsen, The Apostle and his Message (Uppsala, 1947); H. von Campenhausen, 'Der urchristliche Apostelbegriff' in Studia Theologica (Lund), i (1948), pp. 96–130. W. Schmithals, Das kirchliche Apostelamt. Eine historische Untersuchung (Göttingen, 1961; Eng. tr., Nashville, 1969; London, 1971); E. Klostermann, Das Christliche Apostolat (Innsbruck, etc., 1962). A. Verheul, 'De Moderne Exegese over ἀπόστολος' in Sacris Erudiri, i (1948), pp. 380–96. K. H. Rengstorf in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 406–48, s.v. ἀπόστολος, with full bibl.

APOSTLE OF ENGLAND, The. St. *Augustine of *Canterbury (q.v.).

APOSTLE OF THE GENTILES, The. St. *Paul. The title does not occur in the NT; but cf. Gal. 2. 7.

APOSTLE OF ROME, The. Title of St. *Philip Neri (q.v.).

APOSTLES' CREED, The. A statement of faith used only in the W. Church. Like other ancient *Creeds, it falls into three sections, concerned with God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit, corresponding to the three Baptismal questions of the primitive Church. Terse in expression, it is less overtly theological than E. Creeds, but it includes such distinctive articles as the *Descent into Hell and the *Communion of the Saints. Though its affirmations can be supported by NT evidence, the formula itself is not of apostolic origin. Its title is first found c. 390 (in Ep., xlii. 5 of St. *Ambrose), by which time the legend of its joint composition by the twelve Apostles was already current. Its present form, first quoted by St. *Pirminius (early 8th cent.), is an elaboration of the shorter *Old Roman Creed (q.v.), which had itself evolved from earlier, simpler texts based on the Lord's threefold baptismal command (Mt. 28. 19). This developed form seems to have had a Hispano-Gallic origin, was given a monopoly in his dominions by *Charlemagne, and was eventually accepted at Rome, where the Old Roman Creed or similar forms had survived for centuries. By the early Middle Ages it was everywhere employed at baptism in the W., and between the 7th and 9th cents. secured a place in the daily offices. The BCP prescribes its use at baptism (in an interrogative form) and daily at *Mattins and *Evensong, except on the thirteen days in the year on which the *Athanasian Creed is to be said in its place at Mattins. In the 20th cent. it has been increasingly treated in discussions about Church union as a binding formulary of faith.

J. *Pearson, An Exposition of the Creed (1659). J. F. Bethune-Baker, The Faith of the Apostles' Creed (1918). A. E. Burn, The Apostles' Creed ('Oxford Church Text Books', 1906); J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950), esp. pp. 368–434. F. *Kattenbusch, Das apostolische Symbol (2 vols., 1894–1900). T. *Zahn, Das apostolische Symbolum-(1893; Eng. tr., 1899); A. *Harnack, 'Apostolisches Symbolum' in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1897), pp. 741–55 (Eng. tr. as sep. work, The Apostles' Creed, 1901); E. Vacandard, 'Les Origines du symbole des apôtres' in R.Q.H., lxvii (1899), pp. 329–77; A. C. McGiffert, The Apostles' Creed (1902); H. *Lietzmann, 'Die Anfänge des Glaubensbekenntnisses' in Festgabe . . . A. Harnack (1921), pp. 226–42. P. Feine, Die Gestalt des apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses in der Zeit des Neuen Testaments (1925). K. *Barth, Credo. Die Hauptprobleme der Dogmatik dargestellt im Anschluss an das Apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (1935; Eng. tr., 1936). E. *Brunner, Ich glaube an den lebendigen Gott (1945; Eng. tr., 1961). O. S. Barr, From the Apostles' Faith to the Apostles' Creed (New York, 1964). J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et moyen-âge, i: Les Recherches sur les origines du symbole des apôtres (1946; ed. 2, 1949), fundamental with full summary of modern literature. H. Lietzmann in R.G.G. (ed. 2) i, (1927), col. 443–446. See also bibl. to Old Roman Creed.

APOSTLES, The Doctrine of the Twelve. See Didache.

APOSTLES, The Epistle of the. See Testament of Our Lord in Galilee.

APOSTLESHIP OF PRAYER, The. A RC pious association under the guidance of the *Jesuit Order, with special devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus. There are three degrees of membership, acc. to the rule of devotion undertaken. It was founded at Vals, France, in 1844 by F. X. Gautrelet, and in 1879 received from the Pope formal statutes, which were revised in 1896.

APOSTOLIC AGE, The. A modern title in use esp. among Biblical scholars for the first period in the history of the Christian Church, approximately falling within the lifetime of the *Apostles (q.v.). Great importance is attached, esp. by Protestants, to the practices and beliefs of the Church during this period.

APOSTOLIC CANONS, The. A series of 85 canons attributed to the Apostles. They form the concluding chapter (viii. 47) of the '*Apostolic Constitutions', the author of which (late 4th cent.) probably compiled them himself. Most of them deal with the ordination, the official responsibilities, and the moral conduct of the clergy, though a few are concerned with the duties of Christians in general. Twenty of the set are based on canons of *Antioch (? 341). The first 50 were translated into Latin in the 6th cent. by *Dionysius Exiguus, and thus became part of the early canon law of the Western Church, while the *Trullan Council (692), though it condemned the 'Apostolic Constitutions' as a whole, secured their formal recognition in the East.

F. X. Funk, Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum (1905), i, 564–93; Eng. trans. in the Ante-Nicene Christian Library, vol. xvii, pp. 257–69.

APOSTOLIC CHURCH ORDER, The. An early Christian document, containing regulations on ecclesiastical practice and moral discipline. It is so named because its contents are ascribed to the various Apostles, who speak at a reputed council at which Mary and Martha are present. It is thought to have been composed in Egypt c. A.D. 300. The document was evidently the work of an eccentric compiler, as it treats 'Peter' and 'Cephas' as different persons and deals with *Readers as though they ranked between *Presbyters and *Deacons. It contains a text of the *Two Ways parallel to, or based on, that in the *Didache. It was originally written in Greek, but it survives also in Latin, Syriac, Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions.

The Greek text was first edited by J. W. Bickell, Geschichte des Kirchenrechts (1843), pp. 107–32; also in T. Schermann (ed.), Die allgemeine Kirchenordnung. Frühchristliche Liturgien und kirchliche Überlieferung, i (Paderborn, 1914), pp. 12–34. Fragments of Latin tr. ed. E. Tidner, Didascaliae Apostolorum Canonum Ecclesiasticorum Traditionis Apostolicae Versiones Latinae (T.U., lxxv; 1963), pp. 107–13. Arabic and Ethiopic texts ed., with Eng. tr., together with Eng. tr. of Coptic text, by G. Horner, The Statutes of the Apostles or Canones Ecclesiastici (1904). A. *Harnack, Die Quellen der sogenannten Apostolischen Kirchenordnung (T.U., ii, Heft 5; 1886; Eng. tr., 1895 [despite misleading title]). E. Hennecke, 'Zur Apostolischen Kirchenordnung' in Z.N.T.W., xx (1921), pp. 241–8; cf. H. *Lietzmann, ib., pp. 254–6. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), p. 119 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 254 f., with bibl.

APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTIONS, The. A collection of ecclesiastical law dating from the latter half of the 4th cent. and almost certainly of Syrian provenance. The full title is 'Ordinances of the Holy Apostles through Clement'. Of its eight books I to VI are based on the '*Didascalia'; VII. 1–32 on the '*Didache'; VII. 33–49 is liturgical material; VIII. 1–2 may be connected with *Hippolytus' 'Concerning Spiritual Gifts'; VIII. 3–27 is an elaborate version of the Antiochene Liturgy; VIII. 28–46 are canons; while VIII. 47 is the '*Apostolic Canons', perhaps added to the work later. There are good grounds for identifying the compiler with the 4th-cent. interpolator of St. *Ignatius' Epp., and there are also some indications that he was an *Arian. The work is a valuable witness to the religious practices and beliefs of its period.

Ed. princeps by F. *Torres, Venice, 1563, repr. by J. B. *Cotelier in Patres Apostolici, i (1672), with new Lat. tr. Later edd. by W. Ueltzen (Schwerin, 1853), P. A. *Lagarde (Leipzig, 1862), and F. X. Funk (Paderborn, 1905). J. P. Migne, PG, i, 555–1156 (from Cotelier). Liturgy in Book VIII also pr. in Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 3–30, with introd. pp. xvii–xlvii. Eng. tr. by J. Donaldson in A.N.C.L., xvii (1870), pt. 2. F. X. Funk, Die apostollschen Konstitutionen (1891), and later works. D. Van den Eynde, 'Baptême et Confirmation d'après les Constitutions Apostoliques VII, 44, 3' in Rech. S.R., xxvii (1937), pp. 196–212. F. Nau in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 1520–1537, s.v. 'Constitutions apostoliques'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 2732–95, s.v. 'Constitutions apostoliques'. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 255 f., with further bibl.

APOSTOLIC DELEGATE. A person appointed by the Pope to keep the *Vatican informed of ecclesiastical matters in the territory which the *Holy See has assigned to him. He is not a diplomatic official, his status being purely ecclesiastical. The Vatican appointed an Apostolic Delegate to Great Britain for the first time in 1938 in the person of Mgr. William Godfrey (1889–1963).

APOSTOLIC FATHERS, The. The title given since the later 17th cent. to those Fathers of the age immediately succeeding the NT period whose works in whole or in part have survived. They are *Clement of Rome, *Ignatius, *Hermas, *Polycarp, and *Papias, and the authors of the 'Ep. of *Barnabas', of the 'Ep. to *Diognetus', of '2 *Clement', and of the '*Didache'. In modern printed editions the 'Martyrdoms' of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp are sometimes included with them. Some of these writings hovered for a time on the edge of the NT canon, Herm. and Barn., e.g., being found in the *Codex Sinaiticus and 1 Clem. in the *Codex Alexandrinus. Though full of reminiscences of the NT, they are on an altogether lower spiritual level.

J. B. *Cotelier, SS. Patrum qui Temporibus Apostolicis floruerunt . . . Opera (Paris, 1672). J. P. Migne, PG, i–ii. Collected modern edd. by O. Gebhardt, A. *Harnack and T. *Zahn (3 vols., Leipzig, 1875–7; ed. minor, ib., 1877); by J. B. *Lightfoot (5 vols., 1885–90, fine ed. of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp only, with full comm. and notes; ed. of texts, with Eng. tr., in one vol., 1891); by F. X. Funk (2 vols., Tübingen, 1878–81); by K. *Lake (Loeb, 2 vols., 1917–19, with Eng. tr.); and by K. Bihlmeyer (Tübingen, 1924). Eng. tr. also in Ante-Nicene Christian Library (1867); by J. A. Kleist (A.C.W., vi; 1948), E. J. Goodspeed (New York, 1950) and M. Staniforth (Harmondsworth, 1968). For edd. and transs. of individual Fathers, see the sep. entries. For vocabulary, E. J. Goodspeed, Index Patristicus sive Clavis Patrum Apostolicorum (Leipzig, 1907). A. *Hilgenfeld, Die apostolischen Väter (1853); D. Völter, Die apostolischen Väter (2 vols., Leiden, 1904–10). The New Testament in the Apostolic Fathers (ed. Oxford Society of Hist. Theology, 1905). T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers (1948). J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (1961). L. W. Barnard, Studies in the Apostolic Fathers and their Background (Oxford [1967]). G. Jouassard, 'Le Groupement des Pères dits apostoliques' in Mélanges de Science Religieuse, xiv (1957), pp. 129–34. A. P. O'Hagan, Material Re-Creation in the Apostolic Fathers (T.U., c; 1968). For doctrine, see also L. J. Tixeront, Histoire des dogmes, i (1905), ch. iii, pp. 115–63 (Eng. tr., 1910, pp. 104–48).

APOSTOLIC KING, The. A title traditionally borne by the King of Hungary. It is supposed to have been conferred on the first King, *Stephen I (d. 1038), by Pope *Sylvester II on account of his apostolic zeal. He was also known as 'His Apostolic Majesty'.

APOSTOLIC SEE, The. The see of Rome, so called from its traditional association with the two Apostles, St. *Peter and St. *Paul.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION. The method whereby the ministry of the Christian Church is held to be derived from the apostles by a continuous succession. It has usually been associated with an assertion that the succession has been maintained by a series of bishops. These bishops have been regarded as succeeding the apostles because: (1) they perform the functions of the apostles; (2) their commission goes back to the apostles; (3) they succeed one another in the same sees, the derivation of which may be traced back to the communion of the apostles; and (4) by some writers because through their consecration to the episcopal office they inherit from the apostles the transmission of the Holy Ghost which empowers them for the performance of their work. The fact of the succession of the ministry from the apostles, and of the apostles from Christ, was strongly emphasized by *Clement of Rome before the end of the 1st cent.; and the necessity for it has been very widely taught within the historic Church. The fact of continuity in the succession has occasionally been disputed; and the necessity has been denied by most Protestant writers, and asserted only with qualifications by some other theologians.

Doubts about the continuity of the Apostolic Succession were among the reasons which led to the condemnation of *Anglican Orders (q.v.) by the see of Rome in 1896; in more recent years the maintenance of the 'historic episcopate' has been among the major issues in schemes for reunion involving Anglican and other bodies. See also Anglican-Methodist Conversations, South India, Church of.

A. W. Haddan, Apostolical Succession in the Church of England (1869); C. *Gore, The Ministry of the Christian Church (1889; ed. C. H. Turner, 1919); A. C. *Headlam in The Prayer Book Dictionary (1912 and 1925); C. H. *Turner in Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry, edited by H. B. *Swete (1918; ed. 2, 1921); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946). A. Ehrhardt, The Apostolic Succession in the First Two Centuries of the Church (1953). E. Benz, Bischofsamt und apostolische Sukzession im deutschen Protestantismus (1953). W. Telfer, The Office of a Bishop (1962), pp. 107–20.

APOSTOLIC TRADITION, The (Gk. ἡ ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσις). The document formerly known as the '*Egyptian Church Order', now generally held to be the work of St. *Hippolytus. The treatise is apparently referred to in the words περὶ χαρισμάτων ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσις which occur in the list of writings attributed to Hippolytus on the statue of him preserved in the *Vatican Library. It contains a detailed description of rites and practices presumably in use at Rome in the early 3rd cent. The main source for the text is a Latin codex at *Verona (lv [53]), though in a much modified form it has been incorporated into many later documents which have survived in a variety of Eastern languages. The Verona text was first published by E. Hauler in 1900, but the credit for establishing its Hippolytan authorship belongs to R. H. *Connolly, and, in a less degree, to E. *Schwartz.

The authorities for the text are in Copt. (Sah. and Bob.), Eth., Arab., and Lat.; also its workings-over in Apostolic Constitutions*, vii, and in Testamentum Domini* (extant in Syr.). The text was first publd. in Eth. in J. *Ludolf, Ad suam Historiam Aethiopicam Commentarius (Frankfurt a. M., 1691), in Lat. in E. Hauler, Didascaliae Apostolorum Fragmenta Veronensia (Leipzig, 1900). E. Schwartz, Über die Pseudo-apostolischen Kirchenordnungen (Strassburg, 1910); R. H. Connolly, The So-called Egyptian Church Order and Derived Documents (Camb. Texts and Studies, viii, 4; 1916). Crit. text (Engl.) ed. G. *Dix, O.S.B., (with textual evidence well set out; S.P.C.K., 1937; ed. H. Chadwick, 1968, with review of recent lit.); other edd. by B. S. Easton (Cambridge, 1934) and B. Botte, O.S.B. (S.C. xi; 1946; also Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxxix; 1963). Coptic text ed., with German tr., by W. Till and J. Leipoldt (T.U., lviii; 1954). H. Elfers, Die Kirchenordnung Hippolyts von Rom (1938). R. Lorentz, De egyptische Kerkenordeningen en Hippolytus van Rome (denies Hippolytean authorship; Haarlem, 1929). J. M. Hanssens, S.J., La Liturgie d'Hippolyte. Ses documents, son titulaire, ses origines et son caractère (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clv; 1959; ed. 2, 1965).

APOSTOLICAE CURAE. The encyclical of Pope *Leo XIII, issued on 13 Sept. 1896, in which Anglican Orders were condemned as invalid through defect of both form and intention. A 'Responsio' was issued in 1897 by the Abps. of Canterbury and York. For the history of the question see Anglican Ordinations.

The text is in Leonis Papae XIII Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, vi (1900), pp. 198–210. Bettenson (ed. 2), pp. 385–6. See also works cited under Anglican Ordinations.

APOSTOLICI (Lat.), 'Apostolics'. Among the several sects and religious bodies to whom this title has been applied, either by themselves or by others, are:

(1) Some *Gnostic communities of the 2nd–4th cents. They are described by *Epiphanius (Haer. 61).

(2) An ascetic body which flourished in the 12th cent. around Cologne and at Périgueux in France. They rejected marriage, oaths, and the use of flesh-meat, and attacked many Catholic doctrines. St. *Bernard of Clairvaux preached against them.

(3) A sect begun at Parma in 1260 by one Gerard Segarelli. It drew its inspiration from the *Franciscan teaching on poverty. It was condemned at Rome in 1286 and again in 1291, and in 1300 Segarelli was burnt to death at Parma. Shortly afterwards the sect was revived under Fra Dolcino, who expounded apocalyptic doctrines derived from *Joachim of Flora. In 1307 he, too, was burnt at the stake.

(4) The name has also been assumed by certain Protestant groups, e.g. some *Anabaptist sects.

APOSTOLICITY. One of the four marks of the Church set forth in the *Nicene Creed ([Credo] in unam sanctam catholicam et apostolicam ecclesiam). On a Catholic view, the word means identifiable with the Church of the Apostles by succession (see Apostolic Succession) and continuity of doctrine, to which RCs would add by communion with the 'see of Peter'. By Protestants it is generally understood to mean 'primitive', in contrast with real or supposed corruptions of post-apostolic times. (See also Notes of the Church.)

APOSTOLICUM. A name given, esp. on the Continent, to the *Apostles' Creed.

APOTHEOSIS (Gk. ἀποθέωσις, from θεός, 'god'). The pagan custom of regarding as gods emperors and certain other persons, at first only after their death, but from time of Domitian (A.D. 81–96) even in their lifetime. This idea of deification has sometimes been thought to be connected with the origins of Christian canonization, a theory which finds a measure of support in the medieval use of the Latin 'divus' as a title of the saints. Theologically, however, there is the essential difference that the saints are not reckoned to be more than human. Rarely in *Gnosticism, and once in *Gregory Thaumaturgus, the word ἀποθέωσις is used in the sense of 'union with God'; but this idea of 'divination' through religious union, though common in Eastern Christian mysticism and theology, is much more generally described as θέωσις or θεοποίησις.

E. Strong, Apotheosis and After Life (1915). F. Cumont, 'L'Aigle funéraire des Syriens et l'apothéose des empereurs' in Revue historique des Religions, lxii (1910), pp. 119–64; repr. with additions in his Études syriennes (1917), pp. 35–118. G. Wissowa, Religion und Kultus der Römer (1902), pp. 282–9 ('Dea Roma und die Divi Imperatores'). F. Cumont, Lux Perpetua (Paris, 1949), pp. 171–88. F. Hiller in P.W., ii (1895), cols. 184–8, s.v., and E. R. Bevan in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 525–33, s.v. 'Deification (Greek and Roman)', with bibl.

APPARITIONS OF THE BVM, The. The eighteen manifestations of the BVM to St. *Bernadette (q.v.) in the grotto near *Lourdes between 11 Feb. and 16 July 1858. They are commemorated in the RC Church on 11 Feb. by a Feast which was of universal observance from 1907 to 1969.

APPARITOR. An officer chosen by an ecclesiastical judge to summon persons to appear before, and to execute the orders and decrees of, his court. When apparitors hold their office by patent, the judge cannot remove them at his discretion. Their number and privileges were restricted by a *canon (138) of 1603. They were also anciently called 'Summoners' or 'Sumners'.

R. Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, i (1763), pp. 38–41; R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, ii (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), pp. 951–4.

APPEALS. Applications from a lower to a higher judicial authority, a term commonly used in connexion with the ecclesiastical courts. Appeals by clergy and laity to authorities higher than their diocesans were based upon Roman civil law and regulated by several councils from *Nicaea (325) to *Trent (1545–63). During the Middle Ages appeal to the Papal *Curia from the English ecclesiastical courts occasioned intermittent friction between Church and State. From the time of Henry II, the Kings of England attempted to limit appeals to Rome, until in 1534 *Henry VIII abolished them, substituting the Court of *Delegates as final arbiter in ecclesiastical causes.

APPEARANCE. A word once popular in philosophy through the use made of it by F. H. *Bradley in his Appearance and Reality (1893). Acc. to Bradley, the only reality is an absolute all-inclusive experience ('the richer for every discord'), and everything other than this, including morality and religion, is convicted on analysis of contradiction and hence assigned to the realm of 'appearance'. In a somewhat different sense, the word is also used of those elements in our knowledge which we obtain through our senses. It is this meaning which is found in the *Platonist emphasis on the need for 'saving the appearances' (σώζειν τὰ φαινόμενα, *Proclus, Hyp. 5. 10), i.e. for securing that the facts of sense-observation have their due place in any rationalized theory or system about the world.

APPELLANTS. (1) The 31 RC secular priests, headed by William Bishop (c. 1553–1624), titular Bp. of *Chalcedon from 1623, who appealed to Rome in 1599 for the cancellation of G. *Blackwell's appointment as *Archpriest and superior of the mission on the ground that his pro-*Jesuit policy was damaging the RC cause in England. Since Card. W. *Allen's death (1594), the English RCs had become divided into an extreme party, mostly Jesuits, under R. *Parsons, who wished to destroy *Elizabeth I's government, and the remainder who were politically loyal; and Blackwell's appointment in 1598 had brought matters to a head. The original Appeal was a failure. But, as Blackwell persevered in his policy, the seculars made further Appeals in 1601 and 1602, the third time with the support of the French ambassador. Blackwell was reprimanded, his connexion with the Jesuits severed, and several Appellant priests put on the controlling council. On his return, Bishop drew up a 'Protestation of Allegiance' to Elizabeth (31 Jan. 1603) in which he and 12 other priests formally repudiated the use of political means for the conversion of England. The controversy came to an end when in 1608 Blackwell himself took the Oath of Allegiance to *James I.

(2) The name assumed by those of *Jansenist sentiments who, after the condemnation by '*Unigenitus' (1713) of 101 of P. *Quesnel's propositions, tried to prevent its acceptance. Their most important representative was Card. L. A. *de Noailles, the Abp. of *Paris, who was joined by 12 bishops, the *Sorbonne, and several other universities. They carried on a prolonged literary controversy by pamphlets and appealed against the Papal decree to a future General Council. In 1718 they were condemned and excommunicated by the bull 'Pastoralis Officii' and from 1720 were attacked also by the French court. With the submission of de Noailles in 1728, the Appellants lost their chief support and soon sank into insignificance.

On (1), T. G. Law (ed.), The Archpriest Controversy. Documents relating to the Dissensions of the Roman Catholic Clergy, 1597–1602 (Camden Society, N.S., lxvi and lxviii; 1896–8).
On (2), see bibl. to Jansenism.

APPIAN WAY, The (Lat. Via Appia). The famous road constructed by the censor Appius Claudius Caecus in 312 B.C. from *Rome to the S. of Italy. It was orig. carried as far as Capua, but later taken through to Brindisi. After disembarking at Puteoli, St. *Paul travelled on the Appian Way on his first journey to Rome, being met (Acts 28. 15) by groups of Christian disciples at 'Appii Forum' (43 miles) and Three Taverns (33 miles from Rome).

Owing to the construction of the Via Appia Nuova, for the first few miles out of Rome the old road remains much as it was in ancient times. It is still flanked by many monuments, mostly tombs. The Christian sanctuaries and remains along it include the '*Domine, Quo Vadis?' chapel (q.v.); the *catacombs of St. *Callistus (the burying-place of most of the Popes in the 3rd cent.) and of Praetextatus; and the basilica of St. *Sebastian (near the reputed resting-place of the remains of St. *Peter and St. Paul during the persecution of Valerian, 258).

APPROPRIATION. The practice common in the Middle Ages of permanently annexing to a monastery the *tithes and other endowments which were intended for parochial use. See also Impropriation.

APRON. The 'apron' which is part of the distinctive dress of Anglican bishops, deans, and archdeacons is really a shortened form of the *cassock, extending to the knees. Formerly this dress was widely worn on the Continent, but in the 19th cent. its use was very much restricted by *Pius IX.

APSE. A semicircular or polygonal eastern end to a chancel. This was a universal feature of the primitive *basilican type of church architecture, adapted from the model of Roman public buildings. The altar stood on the chord of the apse, with the seats of the bishop and presbyters in the curved space behind. It was introduced into England by St. *Augustine's mission, but the Celtic square-ended chancel continued to prevail. The Norman builders again favoured the apse, but in later building there was a general reversion to the indigenous square end, only a few examples of apsidal sanctuaries still remaining, e.g. at *Norwich Cathedral. See Basilica.

A.P.U.C. ('Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom'). A society formed in 1857 in F. G. *Lee's rooms to further the cause of reunion, esp. between the C of E and Rome. Its members were required to say daily the prayer for the unity of the Church in the Latin Missal. It owed its foundation chiefly to A. M. Phillipps *de Lisle, a leading RC layman, who had earlier (c. 1838) established a 'Society for Prayers for the Conversion of England'; and it included Anglicans (among them A. P. *Forbes) and also some Easterns. It was condemned by the *Holy Office in 1864 and RCs were then compelled to withdraw from it.

The organ of the Association was The Union Review (1863–1875). For details see the lives of A. M. P. de Lisle, F. G. Lee, J. H. *Newman (by Wilfrid Ward) and H. E. *Manning.

AQUARIANS (Lat. Aquarii, from aqua, 'water'). A name given by *Philaster (Haer., 77) and *Augustine (Haer., 64) to a sect or sects which, for ascetic or other reasons, used water instead of wine in the Eucharist. They were sometimes known as 'Hydroparastatae' (Gk. Ὑδροπαραστάται, 'those who offer water').

P. *Batiffol in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 2648–54, s.v.; G. Gentz in R.A.C., i (1950), col. 574 f., s.v., with reff. See also works cited under Wine.

AQUAVIVA, CLAUDIUS (1543–1615), fifth General of the *Jesuit Order. The son of the Duke of Atri, in the Abruzzi, he studied civil and canon law at Perugia, and entered the Jesuit novitiate in Rome in 1567. After being provincial at Naples and Rome, he was elected Superior General of the order in 1581. His remarkable gifts, which made him a born ruler and a great statesman, led to the consolidation of the Society and its subsequent far-reaching influence. During the first years of his generalship he was faced with many difficulties, among them the persecutions in England, the *Huguenot troubles in France, the expulsion of the Jesuits from *Venice and other places, and esp. the Spanish schism within the order, organized by G. *Vasquez and supported by *Philip II and the Pope. In the course of the schism the General was denounced in Rome, but he convinced the Pope of the imprudence of the revolt. He again successfully appealed to the Pope when the Inquisition wanted to examine the constitutions of the order. The position became serious, however, when *Sixtus V, who had always been hostile to the order, wished to alter its entire organization; but the plan was frustrated by the Pope's death. During Aquaviva's generalship the Society developed considerably, esp. in its missionary activities. It was implicated in several theological controversies, among them the famous dispute with the *Dominicans on *Grace. Apart from the exterior organization of the order, Aquaviva strengthened its inner life; he ordered the drawing-up of the famous '*Ratio Studiorum' as well as a comprehensive interpretation of St. *Ignatius' 'Spiritual Exercises'; and he fostered their spirit in many encyclical letters, stressing the need of combining the active life with prayer and meditation.

Works listed in Sommervogel, i (1890), cols. 480–91, and viii (1898), col. 1669 f. J. de Guibert, S.J., 'Le Généralat de Claude Aquaviva (1581–1615). Sa place dans l'histoire de la spiritualité de la Compagnie de Jésus' in Archivum Historicum Societatis Jesu, x (1941), pp. 59–93. A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañia de Jesús, vols. iii (1910), pt. 2, and iv (1913). E. Rivière in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 354–8, s.v. 'Acquaviva', and P. Dudon in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 829–34, s.v., both with bibl.

AQUILA, St. See Priscilla, St.

AQUILA, Version of. Greek version of the OT. It was the work of Aquila, a native of Sinope in Pontus, who lived under Hadrian (117–38). Acc. to St. *Epiphanius (Mens. et Pond. 14), he was a relative of the Emperor and was converted to Christianity during a stay in *Jerusalem, but, having refused to give up his astrological studies, he was excommunicated and became a proselyte to Judaism. Having become a disciple of the *Rabbis, from whom he learned Hebrew and the rabbinical method of exegesis, he used this knowledge to make a Greek translation of the OT, intended to replace the *Septuagint which had been adopted by the Christians. This translation, which was finished probably c. 140, was extremely literal, attempting to reproduce individual Hebrew words and phrases exactly. This procedure frequently obscured the sense; but the fidelity of Aquila's version to the Hebrew original was admitted by the Fathers most competent to judge, such as *Origen and *Jerome.

Surviving fragments of Aquila's version ed. F. *Field in Origenis Hexaplorum quae supersunt (2 vols., Oxford, 1871–1875); more recently discovered passages ed. G. *Mercati, Un palimpsesto ambrosiano dei salmi esapli (Turin, 1896), and F. C. *Burkitt, Fragments of the Book of Kings according to the Translation of Aquila (1897, with pref. by C. Taylor; texts from the Cairo Geniza). D. Barthélemy, O.P., Les Devanciers d'Aquila. Première publication intégrale du Texte des Fragments du Dodécaprophéton trouvés dans le désert de Juda (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, x; Leiden, 1963), with introd. M. Abrahams, Aquila's Greek Version of the Hebrew Bible (1919); A. E. Silverstone, Aquila and Onkelos (Publications of the University of Manchester. Semitic Languages Series, No. 1, 1931; claims to identify Aquila with Onkelos). J. Reider, An Index to Aquila. Greek-Hebrew, Hebrew-Greek, Latin-Hebrew with the Syriac and Armenian Evidence, completed and revised by N. Turner (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, xii; 1966). H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 31–42; S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 76–83. See also bibl. to Hexapla.

AQUILEIA, a village on the Adriatic coast which was an important city during the later Roman Empire, and long the seat of a W. patriarchate. Acc. to a 5th-cent. legend it was evangelized by St. *Mark, but in fact the beginnings of the Church cannot be traced beyond the 3rd cent. In 381 its bishop, Valerian, appears as metropolitan of the Churches in the area, holding a synod of bishops directed against *Arianism, over which St. *Ambrose presided. Under Valerian and his successor, *Chromatius, it was a centre of learning, and *Jerome (Chron., s.a. 374), who spent some years there, refers to the 'clerici' of Aquileia as a 'choir of the blessed' (chorus beatorum). In 452 the city was sacked by *Attila, but not destroyed. In the 6th cent. the bishops assumed the title of patriarch. During the dispute over the *Three Chapters (553) the patriarch withstood *Justinian and the Pope and was declared schismatic. Owing to the attacks of the Lombards in 568 the patriarch took refuge in Grado, which is now joined to the mainland by a causeway but was then an island in the lagoon; from the early 7th cent. there were two rival patriarchs, one at Grado ('new' Aquileia) which was eventually transferred to Venice in 1451, and one ('old' Aquileia) at Cormons (later Cividale). The territory of the latter was greatly enlarged north of the Alps in the reign of *Charlemagne under the patriarch *Paulinus. It survived with diminished territory, and came in 1420 under Venetian and in 1509 under Austrian domination. It was suppressed in 1751. The present basilica was reconstructed by the patriarch Poppo (1019–42) on the site of one of the early 4th cent. Its floor, which was revealed by excavation in 1909, is covered with early 4th-cent. mosaics which are among the most remarkable survivals of early Christian art. There has been much speculation by scholars about the rite of Aquileia, but owing to the loss of early material nothing certain is known. The surviving books show only certain local uses.

J. B. M. de Rubeis, Monumenta Ecclesiae Aquileiensis commentario historico-chronologico-critico illustrata ('Argentinae' [either Venice or Verona], 1740). P. F. Kehr, Italia Pontificia, vii (pt. 1, Berlin, 1923), pp. 8–71; (pt. 2; 1925), pp. 27–72. P. Paschini, Storia del Friuli (3 vols., 1934–6; ed. 2, 2 vols., 1953–4). La basilica di Aquileia a cura del Comitato per le cerimonie celebrative del IX° centenario della basilica e del I° decennale dei militi ignoti (Bologna, 1933). G. Brusin, Aquileia e Grado. Guida storico-artistica (ed. 25, Padua, 1964). Mostra di Codici Liturgici Aquileiesi (Udine, 1968). P. Paschini–C. Cecchelli in E.C., i (1948), cols. 1722–7; H. Schmidinger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 780 f.; P. L. Zovatto in Reallexikon zur Byzantinischen Kunst, ed. K. Wessel, i (1966), pp. 293–306, all s.v.

AQUINAS, St. THOMAS. See Thomas Aquinas, St.

ARABIC VERSIONS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. Several are known, but none seems to antedate the age of Mohammed. They were made in some cases direct from the Greek, in others through the *Syriac and Coptic (*Bohairic) versions. The oldest surviving MS. (8th cent.) is a translation from the Syriac *Peshitta. Not until the 13th cent. was an Arabic version sponsored by ecclesiastical authority; but in that cent. two official revisions were made at *Alexandria. The later of these, the so-called 'Alexandrian Vulgate', is that followed in modern printed Arabic editions of the NT.

The NT was ed. by T. Erpenius at Leyden, 1616. The Gospels alone were pr. at Rome, 1590 (colophon, 1591); and, with Lat. tr., 1591; crit. ed. P. de Lagarde (Leipzig, 1864); I. Guidi, 'Le traduzioni degli evangelii in arabo e in etiopico' in Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, Serie Quarta, Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche et Filologiche iv, i (1888), pp. 5–37. C. Peters, 'Proben eines bedeutsamen arabischen Evangelien-Textes' in O.C., Ser. 3, xi (1936), pp. 188–211 (texts, with Germ. tr., pp. 196–211). G. Graf, Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur, i (S.T., cxviii; 1944), esp. pp. 138–85. F. C. *Burkitt in H.D.B., i (1898), 136–8, s.v. For literature on the Arabic version of the Diatessaron, see Diatessaron.

ARAMAIC. The Semitic language which was the vernacular in Palestine in the time of Christ, and which He Himself almost certainly used. It had long been spoken by the Aramaeans in N. Syria and in Mesopotamia, and came to be used increasingly throughout the Levant for commercial and diplomatic transactions (cf. 2 Kgs. 18. 26). In later OT times it more and more ousted Hebrew as the language of Palestine. A few sections of the OT itself (Ezra 4. 8–6. 18, 7. 12–26; Dan. 2. 4–7. 28; Jer. 10. 11) are written in Aramaic and by NT times Hebrew was cultivated only by the learned. To satisfy the needs of the people, the Hebrew Scriptures were issued in the form of Aramaic paraphrases, known as the *Targums. *Syriac (q.v.) is another form of the same language, and Mandaic is closely allied to it. In the NT there are many places where the Greek reflects the Aramaic modes of thought or background of the writers, and occasionally Aramaic words are preserved, e.g. Mk. 5. 41, 7. 34, 15. 34. A few scholars have maintained that some of the NT books, e.g. Jn. (so C. F. *Burney), or even all the Gospels (so C. C. Torrey), were originally written in Aramaic and that our extant text is a translation. See also Chaldee.

C. Brockelmann, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der semitischen Sprachen (2 vols., 1908–13); F. Rosenthal, Die aramaistische Forschung seit Theodor Nöldekes Veröffentlichungen (1939); id., A Grammar of Biblical Aramaic (Porta Linguarum Orientalium, N.S., v; 1961); id. (ed.), An Aramaic Handbook (2 parts in 4; ib., x; 1967). H. Bauer–P. Leander, Grammatik des Biblisch-Aramäischen (1927). H. H. Rowley, The Aramaic of the Old Testament (1929). M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts (Oxford, 1946; ed. 3, 1967). W. B. Stevenson, Grammar of Palestinian Jewish Aramaic (1924; ed. 2, 1962); G. *Dalman, Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch (1894; ed. 2, revised, 1905); id., Die Worte Jesu (1898; ed. 2, 1930). F. Schulthess–E. Littmann, Grammatik des christlich-palästinischen Aramäisch (1924). P. Leander, Laut- und Formenlehre des Ägyptisch-Aramäischen (Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift, xxxiv, 4; 1928). H. Odeberg, The Aramaic Portions of Bereshit Rabba, with Grammar of Galilæan Aramaic (Acta Universitatis Lundensis, Nova Series, xxxvi, 3–4; 1939). F. Altheim–Ruth Stiehl, Die aramäische Sprache unter den Achaimeniden (Frankfurt, 1963 ff.). A. Dupont-Sommer, Les Araméens (1949). For full bibl. H. Fleisch, Introduction à l'étude des langues sémitiques (1947), pp. 71–87.

ARBUTHNOTT, Missal of. A Scottish MS. missal dated 1491, now in the Paisley Museum. It survives complete, on 244 leaves. It corresponds closely with the typical edition of 1498 of the *Sarum Missal, with differences chiefly in the *Propers for Saints. It also contains some *sequences not found in the English pre-Reformation uses. As the only surviving specimen of the Medieval Scottish Use, the MS. is of considerable interest.

Ed. G. H. *Forbes, Liber Ecclesie Beati Terrenani de Arbuthnott (Burntisland, 1864).

ARCHAEOLOGY, Christian. The term 'archaeology' was formerly used to distinguish the description of early Christian institutions (e.g. the officers of the Church, its liturgies, law, social life, financial and territorial organization) from the narrative history of persons and events. Of such work, J. *Bingham's Antiquities of the Christian Church (1708–22) is the classic English example. Nowadays it commonly denotes the study of Christian monuments, as distinct from documents, for the light which they can be made to throw upon Christian antiquity, apart from their aesthetic value or place as works of art. In this context, 'antiquity' may be somewhat arbitrarily determined as the first six centuries of Christianity. As in other branches of archaeology, sites are excavated, inscriptions reconstructed, methods of building studied, forms of ornament and lettering classified, and the pedigree of pictorial themes traced (*iconography); but pottery is much less important, while the *catacombs set special problems. The main classes of early Christian monuments are cemeteries, buildings (chiefly churches, baptisteries, and monasteries), sculpture (including ivories), paintings, mosaic, textiles, liturgical implements, and such miscellaneous objects as glass, lamps, medals, and rings. Epigraphy, the study of *inscriptions, is a special branch of archaeology.

The foundations of Christian archaeology were laid by the study of the Roman catacombs which, almost forgotten for a thousand years, began to be rediscovered in the 16th cent. Its first great achievement, A. Bosio's Roma sotterranea, was published in 1632. Scholars of the next century applied themselves rather to classical monuments; but G. B. *de Rossi, whose great Roma sotterranea cristiana began to appear in 1864, brought truly scientific methods into Christian archaeology. The Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana at Rome is still exploring the catacombs systematically. Their frescoes have been minutely studied by J. Wilpert, who also published a corpus of the ancient mosaics in the Roman churches. The churches themselves are being described in a series of monographs. See also St. Peter's, Rome.

Besides Rome, *Ravenna is a treasure-house of Christian monuments. Syria has proved rich in remains of churches, Egypt in monastic ruins. French excavation in N. Africa, supplemented by Italian research in Tripolitania, has recovered from the sand churches, baptisteries, mosaics, and tombstones in great numbers. Asia Minor, where pioneer work was done by W. M. *Ramsay, has yet much to disclose. The rapid progress of discovery and elucidation can be studied in the Rivista di Archeologia cristiana (from 1924). See also Dura-Europos.

The evidence of monuments alone is limited, but, used with the documents, it considerably increases our knowledge of the early Church. Little is added to the history of particular events and persons, for Christian inscriptions rarely contain the detail found in pagan ones. Yet much can be gleaned which the available literary sources omit. From the size, character, and development of cemeteries and churches we gather some idea of the growth, resources, and even the racial composition of individual communities, while their incidence helps us to trace the expansion of Christianity in each area. Paintings, mosaics, and sarcophagi illustrate beliefs, the pairing of OT and NT subjects being especially noteworthy. Archaeological material also assists liturgical and hagiographical studies, and provides evidence of the strength of Roman or non-Roman influences in regional churches. Early Christian history is not especially dependent upon archaeological methods, but future work should throw increasing light on the religious life of the ordinary layman, too often neglected by ecclesiastical historians, ancient and modern.

W. Lowrie, Monuments of the Early Church (1901); C. M. Kaufmann, Handbuch der christlichen Archäologie. Einführung in die Denkmälerwelt und Kunst des Urchristentums (1905; ed. 3, Paderborn, 1922); H. *Leclercq, Manuel d'archéologie chrétienne (2 vols., 1907); J. Strzygowski, Ursprung der christlichen Kirchenkunst (Leipzig, 1920; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1923); British Museum: A Guide to the Early Christian and Byzantine Antiquities (2nd ed., 1921); O. M. Dalton, Early Christian Art (Oxford, 1925); R. Aigrain, Archéologie chrétienne (1941); M. Laurent, L'Art chrétien des origines à Justinien (Brussels, 1956); P. Testini, Archeologia cristiana. Nozioni generali dalle origini alla fine del sec. VI [1958]. W. Smith and S. Cheetham, Dictionary of Christian Antiquities (2 vols., 1875–80); F. *Cabrol–H. Leclercq, Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (15 vols., 1907–53). J. Quasten in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 761–8.

ARCHANGEL (Gk. ἀρχάγγελος, 'chief angel'). In the NT the word occurs only twice, at Jude v. 9, where *Michael is referred to as 'the Archangel', and at 1 Thess. 4. 16 ('the voice of the archangel'). In Christian tradition *Gabriel and *Raphael are also commonly reckoned with Michael among the archangels. Acc. to traditional angelology, as expounded by Pseudo-*Dionysius the Areopagite, the archangels belong to the third and lowest hierarchy of the angelic beings. See also Angel.

ARCHBISHOP (Gk. ἀρχιεπίσκοπος). In the 4th and 5th cents. the title was applied to the *patriarchs and holders of other outstanding sees. Later its use was extended to *metropolitans (or *primates) having jurisdiction over an ecclesiastical province. In the Latin Church it has now almost become a title of honour for a bishop of a distinguished see.

A. S. Popek, The Rights and Obligations of Metropolitans (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, cclx; 1947). See also bibl. to Bishops.

ARCHDEACON. A cleric having a defined administrative authority delegated to him by the bishop in the whole or part of the diocese. The territory assigned to him is known as an archdeaconry and gives him a territorial title, e.g. 'Archdeacon of Lindsey'. In the C of E and other Churches of the Anglican Communion an Archdeacon is styled 'Venerable'. The duties of archdeacons vary widely but they usually include a general disciplinary supervision of the clergy of their archdeaconry and a more particular care over the temporal administration of its ecclesiastical property. Thus they usually *induct parish priests to new benefices and admit *churchwardens to their offices. Originally, as the name implies, an archdeacon was merely the chief of the *deacons who assisted diocesan bishops in their work. They were in deacon's orders and gradually acquired what was almost a right of succession to the episcopal throne. The transition from this to the present position of archdeacons was accomplished by the 9th cent. but the steps by which it came about are not clear. In England since 1662 an archdeacon must be in priest's orders, and since 1840 must have been so for six years. The Anglican *Ordinal presupposes that among his functions is the examination and presentation of candidates for *Ordination.

J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, Book II, ch. 21 (1708), pp. 287–301. A. Gréa, 'Essai historique sur les archidiacres' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, xii (1851), pp. 39–67 and 215–47; F. X. Glasschröder, 'Zur Geschichte des Archidiakonates' in S. Ehses (ed.), Festschrift zum elfhundertjährigen Jubiläum des Deutschen Campo in Rom (1897), pp. 139–49. A. H. Thompson, 'Diocesan Organization in the Middle Ages. Archdeacons and Rural Deans' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxix (1943), pp. 153–94, esp. pp. 153–84. R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, i (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 194–207 (see also index); H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 28 and 87–93. R. Peters, Oculus Episcopi. Administration in the Archdeaconry of St. Albans 1580–1625 (Manchester, 1963). J. Addy, The Archdeacon and Ecclesiastical Discipline in Yorkshire 1598–1714, The Clergy and the Churchwardens (St. Anthony's Hall Publications, xxiv; York, 1963). J. P. Kirsch in C.E., i (1907), p. 693 f., s.v. E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H., pp. 18–21, s.v. A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 948–1004, s.v. 'Archidiacre', with extensive bibl.

ARCHDIOCESE. A diocese of which the holder is ex officio *Archbishop, e.g. *Canterbury. The word is used esp. of RC Archdioceses, e.g. *Westminster.

ARCHES, Court of. The *Consistory Court of the province of *Canterbury which formerly met in *Bow Church ('S. Maria de Arcubus'). Originally it was presided over by the Archbishop's *Official Principal, but later the office was combined with that of the 'Dean of Arches' (the judge of the Archbishop's 'Court of Peculiars' which sat in the same church) under the second title. In certain types of cases, appeals are allowed from the diocesan Consistory Courts of the Province of Canterbury to the Court of Arches. Formerly an appeal from this Court lay only to the Pope; in 1534, by the Act for the Submission of the Clergy and the Restraint of Appeals, this was transferred to the King in Chancery. The whole system of appeal was materially modified by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure of 1965, q.v.

Very few medieval records of the Court are known; those from the *Restoration to 1914, with a few exceptions, are catalogued in M. D. Slatter, Lists of the Records of the Court of Arches deposited for Temporary Safe Keeping in the Bodleian Library in 1941 (1951; not publd. but widely circulated). M. *Parker, De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae (1605), pp. 30–33. Irene J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration (2 vols., 1933), vol. i, pp. 424–69, and vol. ii, App. i, pp. 186–210.

ARCHIMANDRITE (Gk. ἀρχιμανδρίτης, 'the ruler of a mandra or fold'). This title, which has been in use in the E. Church from the 4th cent., was used originally in two senses: (1) a monastic superior, equivalent to the Greek term '*Hegumenos' and to the western term '*Abbot'; (2) the superior of a group of several monasteries. Thus in 6th-cent. Palestine there were two Archimandrites of this type, one charged with the supervision of all the *coenobitic houses, and the other with that of the hermits. In the Orthodox Church today it is used simply as a title of honour for a member of the monastic clergy, who need not necessarily be the superior of a community.

J. Pargoire in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 2739–61, s.v.

ARCHPRIEST. An ecclesiastic in priest's orders who occupies a position of pre-eminence among other priests. From the early 5th cent. the title was applied to the senior Presbyter of a city, either by years or appointment, who performed many of the Bishop's liturgical and governmental functions in his absence or during a vacancy. In later times, while the *Archdeacon had become responsible for the governmental work of the Bishop, the Archpriest continued to perform the Bishop's sacerdotal duties in his absence. Though there is some doubt as to which was originally superior, by the 13th cent. the Archdeacon had vindicated his position. Gradually, except at *Rome, most of the work of both these officials during a vacancy was taken over by the *Vicar-General. In some continental cathedrals the Archpriest survives as a capitular dignitary.

As Christianity spread in the 4th cent. from the cities to the countryside, the title was also given, esp. in Gaul, to the cleric who presided over the groups of parishes which united for the principal Sunday Mass and other functions previously performed by the Bishop. In this sense the word is first found in the Second Council of Tours (576). With the formation of separate parishes the importance of the Archpriest declined, and most of his duties were taken over by the *rural dean.

In the RC and esp. in the Orthodox Church, the title is still one of honour, which may or may not carry any specific function. In the E. Church it is the highest rank to which a married priest can attain. The title was also given to the superior appointed by the Pope to govern the secular priests sent to England from foreign seminaries between 1598 and 1621 (see foll. entry).

A. Amanieu in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 1004–26, s.v. 'Archiprêtre', with extensive bibl.

ARCHPRIEST CONTROVERSY. The dispute between the pro-*Jesuit and anti-Jesuit RC clergy in England which followed the death of Card. W. *Allen in 1594. For details, see Appellants (1) and Blackwell, G.

ARCOSOLIUM. The word is sometimes used as an equivalent to '*sarcophagus', but properly it is applied to the particular kind of tomb, excavated in the wall of the Roman *catacombs, consisting of two halves, the lower being the actual sarcophagus, on which after the burial a marble slab was placed horizontally, and the upper an arch carved out to a depth equal to the width of this slab. Many of the martyrs, though not the earliest, are buried in such 'arcosolia', the slab coverings having been used as altars. The ornamentations of the 'arcosolia' were often beautiful and elaborate, and, in later times, complicated forms of tomb embodying several 'arcosolia' were sometimes constructed.

G. B. *de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, esp. ii (1877), pp. 419 f. and 492 f. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. ii; 1907), cols. 2774–87, s.v., with full refl.

AREOPAGITE, The. The mystical writer, *Dionysius (6) (? 5th cent.), so named from a wrong identification with the Dionysius who was converted by St. Paul's speech on the *Areopagus (Acts 17. 34).

AREOPAGUS, The (Gk., Ἄρειος πάγος, 'Mars' Hill'), a spur jutting out and separated by a short saddle from the western end of the Acropolis, Athens, prob. so called from a myth that Mars had here cleared himself of the murder of Halirrhothius, the son of Neptune. The name Areopagus was also applied to an oligarchical council which, from very early times, met on the hill. Its functions appear to have been mainly judicial (esp. trials for homicide), though at times it endeavoured to exert political influence. Under the Roman Empire it seems to have been increasingly concerned with religious matters. It is not entirely clear whether, when St. *Paul was brought to the Areopagus to explain his 'new teaching' (Acts 17. 19), it was before the official court or whether the place was merely chosen as convenient for a meeting. The language of Acts suggests the latter view, though a marginal note in some MSS. indicates the other alternative, which was that adopted by St. *Chrysostom. Traces of ancient stone seats on the Areopagus are still visible.

B. Keil, Beiträge zur Geschichte des Areopags (Sb. (Leipz.), xi. 8; 1920). W. S. Ferguson, 'Researches in Athenian and Delian Documents III' in Klio, ix (1909), pp. 304–40, remarks on the Council, pp. 325–30. E. Curtius, 'Paulus in Athen' in Sb. (Berl.), xxvi (1893), pp. 925–38; W. M. *Ramsay, St. Paul the Traveller and Roman Citizen (1895), pp. 243–9, with note p. 260; K. *Lake–H. J. Cadbury, in The Beginnings of Christianity, Part I, The Acts of the Apostles, iv (1933), pp. 212–14; M. *Dibelius, Paulus auf dem Areopag (Sb. (Heid.), 1938–9, Abh. 2; 1939). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 3040–46, s.v. 'Athènes (§ ii); A. Romeo in E.C., i (1949), col. 1854 f., s.v., with further bibl. See also comm. to Acts, cited s.v.

ARGENTINE, Christianity in the. Argentina, originally a Spanish colony, obtained its complete independence in 1816 after the revolution of 1810. The state religion has always been RC, and the president of the republic must be of that faith. Papal mandates, however, are only admitted after leave from the government, and there is complete religious toleration. There are over 50 dioceses divided into 11 provinces under the primacy of the Archbishop of Buenos Aires. Immigration from Europe in recent times has been chiefly from the southern countries, which are RC, so that the predominant official religion has not been changed; but there is a large body of strongly *anticlerical feeling in the country.

There is much relevant material (up to 1852) in V. F. López, Historia de la República Argentina (10 vols., Buenos Aires 1883–93; new ed., 1911), and P. Γ ais, La République Argentine (1920; Eng. tr., 1922), passim. k. Levene, Lecciones de historia argentina (ed. 11, 2 vols., Buenos Aires, 1928), esp. ch. 14 (Eng. tr., The Inter-American Historical Series, i, Chapel Hill, N.C., 1937, pp. 148–56). J. C. Zuretti, Historia eclesiástica argentina (Buenos Aires, 1945). J. L. Mecham, Church and State in Latin America. A History of Politico-Ecclesiastical Relations (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1934), pp. 275–303; ed. 2 (1966), pp. 225–51. E. F. Every, The Anglican Church in South America (1915), pp. 17–40. Latourette, v (1943), pp.

83, 96, 109–11, 113, and 119–21; vii (1945), pp. 169 and 183, with bibl. reff.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 336–40; v (1963), pp. 217–23, with bibl. reff. G. Furlong in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 779–85, s.v.

ARIANISM. The principal heresy which denied the true Divinity of Jesus Christ, so called after its author, *Arius (q.v.).

Arianism maintained that the Son of God was not eternal but created by the Father from nothing as an instrument for the creation of the world; and that therefore He was not God by nature, but a changeable creature, His dignity as Son of God having been bestowed on Him by the Father on account of His foreseen abiding righteousness. This teaching, though condemned by Arius's bishop *Alexander at a synod at *Alexandria (c. 320), continued to spread and to agitate the masses, until the Emp. *Constantine, anxious for the peace of the newly unified Empire, called a General Council at *Nicaea which met in 325. There the opponents of Arianism, largely under the spiritual leadership of St. *Athanasius, then a deacon at Alexandria, defined the Catholic faith in the coeternity and coequality of the Father and the Son, using the famous term '*homoousios' to express their consubstantiality, while Arius and certain heretical bishops, among them *Eusebius of Nicomedia, were banished. Constantine, at first an ardent promoter of the Nicene faith, soon began to waver, probably owing to the influence of his sister Constantia, who favoured Arianism. In 328 the influential Eusebius of Nicomedia and the other exiled bishops were permitted to return and at once began to intrigue against the Nicene party. *Eustathius of Antioch was deposed and banished in 330, and Athanasius, since 328 Bp. of Alexandria, had to go into exile to Trier in 336. Arius himself was to be recognized as orthodox and to be received back into the Church in the same year, when his sudden death prevented his reinstatement.

After the death of Constantine (337), Athanasius and some other Nicene bishops returned to their dioceses. But the new Emperor of the East, Constantius, soon openly embraced Arianism, his zeal being restrained only by his fear of his brother Constans, the ruler of the West, who protected the Catholics. In 339 Athanasius was again deprived of his see and fled to Rome, where his orthodoxy was recognized by a Council held in 341. In the same year a Council was held at *Antioch by the bishops of the East. Here the majority subscribed an attenuated form of Arianism represented by Eusebius of Nicomedia, which recommended itself for political rather than for theological reasons. The Council drew up four different statements of faith of varying admixture of error, which have in common a deliberate doctrinal vagueness, the omission or even rejection of the homoousios, and the condemnation of Arianism in its original crudeness. To restore peace to the Empire another Council was convoked by both Emperors at *Sardica in 343, which, however, the Eusebian bishops left for fear of being defeated. At Sardica Athanasius was again recognized as the rightful Bp. of Alexandria and several Arian bishops were deposed.

A short period of peace followed after Athanasius had returned to Alexandria in 346, but with the death of Constans in 350, which left Constantius sole ruler, new persecutions began for the Catholics. In 351 a Council held by the Eusebians at Sirmium drew up a new and rather vague formula intended to supersede the Creed of Nicaea, which the W. bishops were compelled to reject at Arles in 353 and at Milan in 355, Athanasius, Pope *Liberius, St. *Hilary of Poitiers, and many others being exiled. The Arians, however, now split up into three major groups. The extreme party, usually called '*Anomoeans' (from ἀνόμοιος, 'dissimilar'), pressed the differences between the Father and the Son, who resemble each other at most morally; the middle party, called '*Homoeans' (from ὅμοιος, 'similar'), aimed at avoiding dogmatic precision as far as possible by affirming simply that the Son is similar to the Father 'acc. to the Scriptures'; while a third group, the '*Semi-Arians' (q.v.), favoured the term 'homoiousios' as expressing both the similarity and the distinction between the first Two Persons of the Trinity. To this last group, many of whom were almost orthodox, St. *Cyril of Jerusalem belonged for a long time. These different views were laid down in further formulas of faith. Among them a Homoean formula, drawn up at a further Council of Sirmium (357), was accepted by a double Council of E. and W. bishops who met at Seleucia and *Ariminum respectively in 359. It was of this year that St. *Jerome wrote his well-known comment: 'The whole world groaned and marvelled to find itself Arian' (Dial. adv. Lucif. 19; PL, xxiii. 172 C).

This crowning victory of Arianism was the turning-point of its history, since it frightened the Semi-Arians into the ranks of orthodoxy. With the death of Constantius (361) it lost its chief supporter; Athanasius returned to Alexandria and, in 362, held a Council which facilitated the reconciliation of many of moderate views by demanding of them only the recognition of the Council of Nicaea and the rejection of Arianism. The W. under the Catholic Emp. Valentinian was soon restored to orthodoxy, while in the E. its victory was retarded by the Arian Emp. Valens. Athanasius had died in 373; but the brilliant theological expositions of the Nicene faith by the three Cappadocians, St. *Basil, St. *Gregory of Nazianzus, and St. *Gregory of Nyssa, prepared the way for the final victory of orthodoxy under the Emp. *Theodosius at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. After being driven from the Empire, Arianism retained a foothold among the Teutonic tribes, esp. through *Ulphilas' *Gothic Bible and Liturgy, which prevented their rapid assimilation with their Catholic subjects when they occupied the greater part of the W. Empire and caused persecution of Catholics in N. Africa and Spain. The conversion of the Franks to Catholicism (496) was the prelude to the gradual disappearance of Arianism from the religious creed of the Teutonic tribes.

The subject of necessity fills a central place in all the Church Histories of the 4th cent. (L. *Duchesne, B. J. Kidd, H. *Lietzmann, A. Fliche–V. Martin). H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (1882; ed. 2, 1900); id., The Arian Controversy (1889). L. Maimbourg, S.J., Histoire de l'arianisme (1673; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1728–9). P. Snellmann, Der Anfang des arianischen Streites (Helsingfors, 1904); S. Rogala, Die Anfänge des arianischen Streites (1907). M. Simonetti, Studi sull'Arianesimo (Verba Seniorum, N.S. v [1965]); M. Meslin, Les Ariens d'Occident, 335–430 (Patristica Sorbonensia, viii; 1967). É. Boularand, L'Hérésie d'Arius et la 'Foi' de Nicée (1972 ff.). G. Bardy, Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936). J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius (1900). A. Grillmeier, S.J., 'Die theologische und sprachliche Vorbereitung der christologischen Formel von Chalkedon' in id.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 5–202; revised Eng. tr. as Christ in Christian Tradition. From the Apostolic Age to Chalcedon (1965). G. Rasneur, 'L'Homoiousianisme dans ses rapports avec l'orthodoxie' in R.H.E., iv (1903), pp. 189–206 and 411–31. M. Richard, 'Saint Athanase et la psychologie du Christ selon les Ariens' in Mélanges de Science Religieuse, iv (1947), pp. 5–54. T. E. Pollard, 'The Origins of Arianism' in J.T.S., N.S. ix (1958), pp. 103–11; M. Wiles, 'In defence of Arius', ib., xiii (1962), pp. 339–47; G. C. Stead, 'The Platonism of Arius', ib., xv (1964), pp. 16–31; H. A. Wolfson, 'Philosophical Implications of Arianism and Apollinarianism' in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, xii (1958), pp. 3–28. R. C. Gregg–D. E. Groh, Early Arianism. A View of Salvation (1981). F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 6–45, and X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1779–1863, both with full bibl. See also works cited under Homoousion. R. [D.] Williams, Arius. Heresy and Tradition (1987).

ARIDITY. A term of *Ascetical Theology, denoting a state devoid of sensible fervour in which the soul finds it impossible, or at least very difficult, to produce the normal acts of prayer. This may be the result of either physical causes such as illness, or voluntary moral imperfections and indulgence of the passions, or, lastly (it is held), a Divinely ordained trial, normally leading to contemplation. Acc. to St. *John of the Cross, this last can be distinguished from the other two causes by three marks, viz. the absence of satisfaction in all things, whether Divine or created, a great anxiety to please God, and a continued inability to use reason or imagination in prayer. All spiritual writers agree in enjoining perseverance in prayer despite the trial of aridity and they regard it, if patiently borne, as a means of great advancement to the Christian soul.

The subject is treated in books on prayer. R. Daeschter in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 845–55, s.v. 'Aridité'.

ARIEL. A name used of *Jerusalem in Is. 29. 1. The most probable interpretation appears to be 'altar-hearth' (cf. Ezek. 43. 15).

S. Feigin, 'The Meaning of Ariel' in Journal of Biblical Literature, xxxix (1920), pp. 131–7; W. F. Albright, 'The Babylonian Temple-Tower and the Altar of Burnt Offering', ib., pp. 137–42; H. G. May, 'Ephod and Ariel' in American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, lvi (1939), pp. 44–69, esp. pp. 52–69. See also comm. on Isaiah.

ARIMINUM AND SELEUCIA, Synods of. Two synods to which the Emp. Constantius summoned the Bishops of the W. and E. respectively in 359 in an attempt to settle the *Arian dispute. That at Ariminum (Rimini) was much the larger of the two assemblies, and the great majority of its adherents were orthodox. The Arian minority, however, included a group of skilled diplomats, among them *Valens and Ursacius, who succeeded in undoing the effect of the anti-Arian decision of the Council when it reached the Emperor. In consequence, under imperial pressure, the orthodox Bps. at Ariminum, who had not dispersed, were induced to recant later in the year, and in the interests of peace to subscribe an Arianizing Creed, drawn up at Nice in Thrace.

At Seleucia, under the leadership of the *Anomoeans, Acacius and Eudoxius, the Creed of Nice was also accepted.

It was these and similar events that led St. *Jerome to remark of the year 359 that 'the whole world groaned and wondered to find itself Arian' (ingemuit totus orbis et se Arianum esse miratus est, Dial. adv. Lucif. 19, PL, xxiii, 172).

Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 711–26; Mansi, iii (1759), cols. 293–310 and 315–26. Hefele–Leclercq, i (2; 1907), pp. 929–955. G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iii (1936), pp. 161–9.

ARISTEAS, Letter of. A Jewish pseudepigraphic letter written in Greek which claims to have been written by one Aristeas, an official at the court of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285–247 B.C.). It contains a legend, describing how the *Septuagint came to be miraculously written. Its composition has been variously dated between 200 B.C. and A.D. 33.

Crit. edd. of Gk. text by P. Wendland (Teubn., Leipzig, 1900), H. St. J. Thackeray in H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 499–574, and A. Pelletier, S.J. (Paris, 1962). Eng. trr. by H. St. J. Thackeray (London, 1917) and M. Hadas (New York, 1951). H. G. Meecham, The Letter of Aristeas. A Linguistic Study with special reference to the Greek Bible (Manchester, 1935; with repr. of Thackeray's text). B. H. Stricker, De Brief van Aristeas. De hellenistische Codificaties der praehelleense Godsdiensten (Verhandelingen der koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, Deel lxii, 4; 1956). S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 29–58. Eissfeldt, pp. 603–6, 773.

ARISTIDES (2nd cent.) of Athens, Christian philosopher and Apologist. Until recent times our only knowledge of him came from brief references in *Eusebius and St. *Jerome. In 1878, however, part of his 'Apology' in an *Armenian translation was published at *Venice by the *Mechitarists; and, in spite of the incredulity of E. *Renan and others, its authenticity was established. In 1891 a Syriac translation of the whole work, discovered in 1889 on Mt. *Sinai, was edited by J. R. *Harris; and, in an appendix, J. A. *Robinson gave reasons for believing that the original Greek, somewhat modified and expanded, was to be found in the apology for Christianity in the 'Lives of *Barlaam and Josaphat'. Acc. to Eusebius, Aristides delivered his Apology to the Emp. Hadrian at the same time as another apologist, *Quadratus, viz. in 124. But J. R. Harris advanced strong arguments in favour of the view that these Apologies were in fact both addressed to Antoninus Pius (d. 161) early in his reign.

Aristides sought to defend the existence and eternity of God, and to show that Christians had a fuller understanding of His nature than either the barbarians, the Greeks, or the Jews, and that they alone love acc. to His precepts. Like *Justin and *Tatian, he retained the status and garb of a philosopher after his conversion. He is now credited also with a sermon on Lk. 23. 43. The theory of some scholars (H. Kihn, G. Krüger) that he was the author of the Ep. to *Diognetus has not, however, won general acceptance.

Eusebius, H.E., IV, iii, 3, and Chron., ad a. 2140; Jerome, De vir. illustr., 20. Crit. ed. of Gk. text by J. Geffcken, Zwei griechische Apologeten (1907), pp. 1–96; other attempts at reconstruction of Gk. text by R. Seeberg (Erlangen, 1893); Syr. text ed. J. R. Harris, 'The Apology of Aristides on Behalf of the Christians', with appendix with Gk. text ed. J. A. Robinson, in Camb. Texts and Studies, I (1) (1891); Arm. fragm. in G. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra, iv (1883), pp. 6–10 and 282–6. A papyrus frag. of the Gk. text has also been publd. with Eng. tr. by H. J. M. Milne in J.T.S., xxv (1924), pp. 73–7. Eng. tr. by D. M. Kay in A.N.C.L. Additional vol. (1897), pp. 259–79. P. Friedrich, 'Studien zum Lehrbegriff des frühchristlichen Apologeten Marcianus Aristides aus Athen' in Z.K.T., xliii (1919), pp. 31–77. W. C. van Unnik, 'Die Gotteslehre bei Aristides und in gnostischen Schriften' in Theologische Zeitschrift, xvii (1961), pp. 166–74. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 187–202; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 64 f.; J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 191–5.

ARISTION (1st cent.). Acc. to *Papias, as reported by *Eusebius (H.E., III. xxxix. 4), he was a primary authority, with the Presbyter *John, for the traditions about the Lord. He is certainly to be distinguished from *Aristo of Pella, whom Eusebius (IV. vi. 3) cites as an authority for the *Bar Cochba revolt, though the two are identified by St. *Maximus Confessor. In an *Armenian MS. dated 986, [Mk.] 16. 9–20 (the concluding twelve verses of the Gospel in most texts) is attributed to 'the Presbyter Ariston'. But F. C. *Conybeare's theory that the MS. preserves a genuine tradition which recognized Papias' Aristion as their real author has received little following.

F. C. Conybeare, 'Aristion the Author of the Last Twelve Verses of Mark' in The Expositor, Ser. IV, viii (1893), pp. 241–254; id., 'On the Last Twelve Verses of St. Mark's Gospel' in ib., Ser. V, ii (1895), pp. 401–21; J. *Chapman, O.S.B., 'Aristion, author of the Ep. to the Hebrews' in R. Bén., xxii (1905), pp. 50–64. Bardenhewer, i, p. 448 f. B. W. Bacon in D.C.G., i (1906), pp. 114–18, and E. Peterson in E.C., i (1949), col. 1908 f.

ARISTO of Pella (c. 140), early Christian *Apologist. His work has perished; but it is mentioned, without the author's name, in *Origen's 'Contra Celsum' (iv. 52), where its title is given as 'Disputation between Jason and Papiscus concerning Christ'. Jason, a baptized Jew, converts his fellow-Jew, Papiscus, by proving the fulfilment of the Messianic prophecies in Christ. Origen defends its allegorical interpretation of the OT against the mockeries of Celsus. The 'Disputation' is first ascribed to Aristo by St. *Maximus Confessor (Comm. in Dion. Areop. De Myst. Theol., i, p. 243). Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., IV. vi. 3), Aristo wrote an account of the destruction of *Jerusalem under Hadrian (135).

Bardenhewer, i (ed. 2, 1913), pp. 202–6, with full bibl. E. Peterson in E.C., i (1949), col. 1911 f.

ARISTOBULUS, St. In Rom. 16. 10 St. *Paul sent greeting to the 'household of Aristobulus' (τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου). Nothing further is known of this Aristobulus, unless he be the grandson of *Herod the Great and friend of the Emp. Claudius of this name. It is possible that he came to be considered a Christian merely because of his mention in the NT. Acc. to a Spanish tradition, he made his way to Britain in the second year of the reign of *Nero and finally became Bp. of Britonia (modern Mondoñedo) in Spain. Feast day, 30 or 31 Oct.

He has sometimes been identified with an Aristobulus who, acc. to the Gk. menologies, was one of the seventy disciples (Lk. 10. 1) and brother of St. *Barnabas and whose daughter married St. *Peter. This Aristobulus was believed to have been consecrated Bishop by St. Paul and to have organized a Church in Britain; but the story is without credible authority. He was apparently the Aristobulus, 'the disciple of the Apostles', named in the Roman *Martyrology. Feast day, 15 or 16 March.

Extr. on Aristobulus from Gk. Menology in AA.SS., Mart. I (1668), p. 869; cf. also ib., II (1668), pp. 374–6. R. Aigrain in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), col. 194, s.v.

ARISTOBULUS of Paneas (3rd–2nd cent. B.C.), Jewish philosopher of *Alexandria who most prob. taught c. 170–160 B.C. (so E. *Schürer). His Commentary on the Law, fragments of which are preserved by *Eusebius (Praep. Ev., VIII. x and XIII. xii and H.E., VII. xxxii. 17), seeks to prove that the OT was the source of much Greek philosophy and by an elaborate system of allegorical interpretation to reconcile philosophical conceptions with the Jewish creed. His citation of a *Peripatetic source (in Eus., Praep. Ev., XIII. xii. 10) led *Clement of Alexandria and Eusebius to assign him to that school, but it is clear that he was also influenced by *Plato and the *Pythagoreans. The eclectic character of the work has suggested doubts about its authorship, but the ascription to Aristobulus is now generally accepted. By the early Christian Fathers Aristobulus was regarded as the founder of Jewish philosophy in Alexandria.

N. Walter, Der Thoraausleger Aristobulos. Untersuchungen zu seinen Fragmenten und zu pseudepigraphischen Resten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur (T.U., lxxxvi; 1964). E. Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4, 1909), pp. 512–22 (Eng. tr. II, iii, 1886, pp. 237–43). P. Wendland in J.E., ii (1902), p. 97 f.

ARISTOTLE (384–322 B.C.), Greek philosopher. He was the son of Nicomachus, the court physician to Amyntas II, and born at Stagirus (later Stagira) on the peninsula of Chalcidice. In 367 he went to Athens, where he became a member of the scientific group gathered round *Plato. After Plato's death (347), when Speusippus became head of the Academy, Aristotle left for Asia Minor, where he spent three years with his friend and former fellow-student Hermeias, who had risen to be tyrant of the cities of Assos and Atarneus in the Troad. Here he married Pythias, Hermeias' niece, and c. 344 removed with his wife to Mitylene in Lesbos. After Hermeias' assassination by the Persians (343), Aristotle joined the Macedonian court, and became tutor to the crown prince, afterwards Alexander the Great, then a boy of 13; of his relations with Alexander there is very little contemporary evidence. When Alexander became king (336), Aristotle returned to Athens, where the headship of Plato's Academy happened to be vacant on Speusippus' death. Aristotle, however, was not elected, the choice falling on Xenocrates of Chalcedon. Though he never wholly severed his connexion with the Academy, he opened a rival school at the Lyceum (335), to which he attracted some of the Academy's most distinguished members. Here he devoted himself for the next twelve years to lecturing, organizing the school, fostering scientific research and collecting a large library, the model for those of *Alexandria and *Pergamum. In contrast to the Academy, where the emphasis was on mathematics, Aristotle laid the principal stress on biology. From the circumstance that the instruction was given in a covered portico ('peripatos'), his school obtained the name of 'Peripatetic'. On the death of Alexander (323), the strong anti-Macedonian agitation forced Aristotle to leave Athens, whence he withdrew with his disciples to Chalcis, where he died in the following year.

Aristotle, like Plato, appears to have made regular use of the dialogue in his earliest years; but lacking Plato's imaginative gifts he probably never found the form congenial. Apart from a few fragments in later writers, his dialogues have been wholly lost. The works on which his reputation rests are apparently texts based on his lecture notes and memoranda which he had prepared for his pupils. Among the chief are the two celebrated editions of the Ethics—the Nicomachean Ethics, issued by his son Nicomachus, and the Eudemian Ethics, a recasting by his pupil Eudemus, a mathematician; the Physics, of which the earlier books deal with the science of nature in general, the later ones with motion; the Metaphysics on the science of Being (the title, given to it because it followed the Physics in the Aristotelian corpus, first appears in Nicolaus of Damascus); the celebrated writings on logic (the Categories, De Interpretatione, the Prior and Posterior Analytics, the Topics, De Sophisticis Elenchis) collectively known as the Organon; and a large number of writings on natural science (among others de Caelo, de Generatione et Corruptione, de Anima, de Partibus Animalium); the Politics; the Rhetoric; and the Poetics. In 1890 a lost treatise on the Constitution of Athens (not before 329–328) was found among the Egyptian papyri (1st cent A.D.); it was published in 1891 by F. G. Kenyon and is preserved in the British Museum.

Though a disciple of *Plato, his philosophical position was very different. Whereas Plato set out from the world of 'ideas', entities which he conceived as arranged in a hierarchy, at the head of which was the 'Idea of the Good', and as alone having reality, Aristotle asserted that an idea exists only as expressed in the individual object. Thus he maintained that, so far from there being an idea 'tree' possessing existence in its own right, it is the union of the 'form' tree with 'matter' which makes the real individual tree. This view required a theory of causation to account for the conjunction of form and matter, and Aristotle was thus led to postulate a 'First Cause', though he did not hold this supreme cause to be personal in the Christian sense. In explaining his doctrine he analysed the four senses in which the word 'cause' may be used. A cause, he affirmed, might be 'formal', 'material', 'final', or 'efficient'. The 'material cause' is the matter upon which the form (or in the case of change, the new form) is imposed; the 'formal cause' is the form which in conjunction with matter makes the new object a distinct entity; the 'final cause' is the end which, in processes of growth or change, determines the course of the development; and the 'efficient cause' is the motive power which produces the event. For the world as a whole, Aristotle found the efficient, formal, and final causes in God, Who is the Unmoved Mover (πρῶτον κινοῦν) of all things.

The science of 'Logic' was Aristotle's creation, and within its limits his treatment covered practically the whole field, though since the latter part of the 19th cent., esp. under the influence of G. Frege and Bertrand Russell, the scope of logic has been greatly widened. Aristotle treats of concepts, judgements and propositions, the syllogism, demonstration, the problematic syllogism, and fallacies. His works on Physics have formed the basis of all subsequent study of the subject. His 'Ethics' has also had an enormous influence. He conceived the ideal life as one of moderation, contending that virtue is always a mean between two extremes—courage, e.g., being a mean between cowardice and foolhardiness.

In the early centuries of the Christian Church, Aristotle's philosophy was regarded with suspicion, largely because his teachings were thought to lead to a materialistic view of the world. This attitude was further encouraged by the high repute in which Plato, conceived as the diametrically opposed philosopher to Aristotle, was held by the Christian Fathers. *Boethius (6th cent.), however, vigorously expounded Aristotelian doctrines. In the Middle Ages, when first-hand acquaintance with Aristotle had disappeared for some centuries, knowledge of his teachings was gradually recovered from Arabic translations made by Jews and Moslems. These were translated into Latin in the 12th cent. The Church at first looked upon these works with great suspicion, but this was finally dissipated when such competent Christian philosophers as St. *Albertus Magnus and St. *Thomas Aquinas built up their systems on an avowedly Aristotelian basis. This basis has been that accepted by Latin philosophical theology in the West ever since. The thinkers of the Renaissance (and their eminent precursor, *Nicolas of Cusa) gave Platonism a new lease of life. In modern times, Thomistic Aristotelianism has again become a considerable force.

Editio princeps, by Aldine Press, 5 vols. fol., Venice, 1495–8. The best collected ed. (from which citations are normally given) is that of the Prussian Academy, ed. I. Bekker (5 vols., Berlin, 1831–70; fragments ed. V. Rose, scholia ed. C. A. Brandis, index ed. H. Bonitz). The ancient Gk. commentaries, of various dates between the 1st cent. and 12th cent. A.D., were publd. by the Berlin Academy under the editorship of H. Diels, M. Hayduck, and others (23 vols., 1882–1909); 'Supplementum Aristotelicum', ed. S. P. Lambros and others (3 vols., Berlin, 1885–1903). More recent edd. Gk. text of single works, with modern commentaries, include: Ethics, ed. A. Grant (2 vols., 1857) and J. Burnet (London, 1900); Politics, ed. W. L. Newman (4 vols., Oxford, 1887–1902); De Anima, ed. R. D. Hicks (Cambridge, 1907) and [W.] D. Ross (Oxford, 1961); Metaphysics, ed. id. (2 vols., ib., 1924); Physics, ed. id. (ib., 1936); Prior and Posterior Analytics, ed. id. (ib., 1949); Rhetoric, ed. E. M. Cope (3 vols., Cambridge, 1877); De Generatione et Corruptione, ed. H. H. Joachim (Oxford, 1922); Poetics, ed. with Eng. tr. by S. H. Butcher (London, 1895; ed. 4, 1907), also ed. A. Rostagni (Collezione di Classici Greci e Latini; Turin, 1927; ed. 2, 1945) and R. Kassel (Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca Oxoniensis, 1965); F. G. Kenyon (ed.), Arlstotle on the Constitution of Athens (1891); also ed., with full introd., notes, and Gk. index, by J. E. Sandys (London, 1893). Many items also in O.C.T. Eng. trr. in 12 vols., ed. J. A. Smith and W. D. Ross (Oxford, 1908–52); many of Aristotle's works also tr. in Loeb (various dates). Other Eng. trr. include that of the Politics by E. Barker (Oxford, 1946) and Aristotle's Constitution of Athens and Related Texts by K. von Fritz and E. Kapp (New York, 1950). Introduction, Commentary and Appendixes to the Poetics by D. W. Lucas (Oxford, 1968), and comm. on Eudemian Ethics, by F. Dirlmeier (Aristoteles Werke in deutscher Übersetzung ed. E. Grumach, vi–vii; 1956–62).

On the medieval versions of Aristotle, see G. Lacombe–L. Minio-Paluello, Aristoteles Latinus, in 'Corpus Philosophorum Medii Aevi Academiarum Consociatarum Auspiciis et Consilio Editum' (Codicum descriptio, pars prior, Rome, 1939; pars posterior, Cambridge, 1955; with supplement by L. Minio-Paluello (Bruges–Paris, 1961). The commentaries themselves are also being publd. under the title Aristoteles Latinus in the same series under the general editorship of L. Minio-Paluello (Rome, 1951, and Bruges–Paris, 1953 ff.). M. *Grabmann, Forschungen über die lateinischen Aristoteles-Übersetzungen des XIII. Jahrhunderts (B.G.P.M., xvii, Hftt. 5–6; with bibl.) A. Jourdain, Recherches sur l'âge et l'origine des traductions d'Aristote (1819); E. *Renan, Averroes et l'averroïsme (1852). Further information in Überweg, ii, pp. 342–51.

Modern studies include E. Zeller, Die Philosophie der Griechen. Zweiter Teil, zweite Abtheilung: Aristoteles und die Peripatetiker (Tübingen, 1844; ed. 3, 1879; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1897). W. Jaeger, Aristoteles. Grundlegung einer Geschichte seiner Entwicklung (1923; Eng. tr., 1934, revised 1948); W. D. Ross, Aristotle (1923); G. R. G. Mure, Aristotle (1932);

D. J. Allan, The Philosophy of Aristotle (H.U.L., 1952); E. Berti, La filosofia del Primo Aristotele (Università di Padova, Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, xxviii; 1962); Marjorie Grene, A Portrait of Aristotle (1963); G. E. R. Lloyd, Aristotle. The Growth and Structure of his Thought (Cambridge, 1968).

Works on specific aspects of his thought include E. Barker, The Political Thought of Plato and Aristotle (1906); R. Stark, D. J. Allan and others, La 'Politique' d'Aristote (Fondation Hardt: Entretiens sur l'antiquité classique, xi; Geneva, 1965). J. Łukasiewicz, Aristotle's Syllogistic from the Standpoint of Modern Formal Logic (1951; ed. 2, 1957); W. and Martha Kneale, The Development of Logic (Oxford, 1962), pp. 23–112. O. Hamelin, La théorie de l'intellect d'après Aristote et ses commentateurs (Bibliothèque d'histoire de la philosophie, 1953). A. Mansion, Introduction à la Physique aristotélicienne (Louvain, 1913; ed. 2, 1946); F. [R. H.] Solmsen, Aristotle's System of the Physical World. A Comparison with his predecessors (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, xxxiii; 1960). J. Owens, C.SS.R., The Doctrine of Being in the Aristotelian Metaphysics. A Study in the Greek Background of Mediaeval Thought (Toronto, 1951); V. Décarie, L'Objet de la métaphysique selon Aristote (Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'études médiévales, xvi; 1961). P. Aubenque, Le problème de l'être chez Aristote (Bibliothèque de philosophie contemporaine; 1962). E. Berti, L'Unità del Sapere in Aristotele (Pubblicazioni della Scuola di Perfezionamento in Filosofia dell'Università di Padova, iii; 1965). P. Aubenque, La Prudence chez Aristote (Bibliothèque de Philosophie contemporaine, 1963); J. D. Monan, Moral Knowledge and its Methodology in Aristotle (Oxford, 1968); W. F. R. Hardie, Aristotle's Ethical Theory (ib., 1968). H. von Arnim, Die Entstehung der Gotteslehre des Aristoteles (Sb. (Wien), ccxii, Abh. 5; 1931); W. K. C. Guthrie, 'The Development of Aristotle's Theology' in Classical Quarterly, xxvii (1933), pp. 162–71; V. L. Dowdell, Aristotle and Anglican Religious Thought (Ithaca, N.Y., 1942). W. J. Verdenius, 'Traditional and Personal Elements in Aristotle's Religion' in Phronesis, v (1960), pp. 56–70.

Überweg, i, pp. 347–401, with bibl. pp. 101*–122*. T. Case in E.B. (ed. 11), ii (1911), pp. 501–22. G. E. L. Owen in O.C.D. (ed. 2; 1970), pp. 114–18, s.v., with bibl.

ARIUS (c. 250–c. 336), heresiarch. There is much divergence between the authorities for his life. He was prob. a Libyan by birth and a pupil of *Lucian of Antioch; and, if *Sozomen (H.E., i. 15) can be trusted, was ordained deacon by St. *Peter, Bp. of *Alexandria (d. 312), who later excommunicated him as a member of the *Melitian sect. Under Achillas (312–13), Peter's successor, he was ordained priest and put in charge of Baucalis, one of the principal churches at Alexandria. Here he seems to have met with marked success as a preacher and been revered for his asceticism. Under the next Bishop, St. *Alexander, he came forward prob. c. 319 (not 323, as E. *Schwartz) as a champion of subordinationist teaching about the Person of Christ. The controversy quickly spread, Arius seeking support among other disciples of Lucian, notably *Eusebius of Nicomedia, while a synod at Alexandria under Alexander proceeded to excommunicate him. Shortly after his arrival in the East (Sept. 324), the Emp. *Constantine sent St. *Hosius to Alexandria to attempt a settlement; but the mission failed. Accordingly an *Oecumenical Council was convened (orig. to Ancyra), met at *Nicaea in the early summer of 325, and, largely through the influence of St. *Athanasius, condemned Arius. Arius spent the next few years in banishment in Illyria, but, owing to the Court influence of Eusebius of Nicomedia, he was recalled from exile prob. c. 334. He returned to Alexandria, where Athanasius was ordered to receive him back to communion, but refused. He died suddenly in the streets of Constantinople c. 336.

Arius seems to have written little. He embodied his doctrine in popular songs, known as the Thaleia (Θάλεια, 'Banquet'), one at least composed in an acrostic form; but only fragments survive. There also exist a Letter seeking support from Eusebius of Nicomedia (ap. *Theodoret, H.E., i. 4) and a statement of belief in a letter to Alexander (Athanasius, De Synodis, 16). See also Arianism.

The chief sources for his Life are the writings of Athanasius, supplemented by *Epiphanius (Haer. 69) and the Church Historians, *Rufinus, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Philostorgius. E. Boularand, 'Les Débuts d'Arius' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique (1964), pp. 175–203. See also bibl. to Arianism.

ARK. (1) The Ark of Noah, which the Patriarch was bidden to build of gopher wood to preserve life during the *Flood, is described in Gen. 6. It was borne on the waters and finally rested on the 'Mountains of Ararat' (Gen. 8. 4; acc. to Syr. Bible at Kurdu); and was the means whereby Noah and his family ('eight persons', 1 Pet. 3. 20) and representatives of all the living creatures were saved from the catastrophe. Critics are widely agreed that the Heb. narrative has been influenced by the *Gilgamesh Epic, which describes the building of a similar vessel (tablet 11, lines 48–66). The Babylonian historian, Berossus (c. 300 B.C.), states that remains of the ark were extant in his day in Armenia and used for making amulets and bracelets.

(2) The Ark of the Covenant, the most sacred religious symbol of the Hebrew people and believed to represent the Presence of God. It was in form a rectangular box or chest made of acacia or shittim wood, overlaid with gold inside and out. Its length was two and a half cubits, and its height and breadth one and a half cubits (i.e. c. 45 × 27 × 27 inches). On top of the Ark was a gold plate or *mercy seat (q.v.). It was surmounted, acc. to the account in Ex. 25. 18–21, by two *cherubim, and was carried on gold poles which passed through gold rings on the sides.

Acc. to the traditional accounts the Ark was carried by the Israelites from the time of the *Exodus (?13th cent. B.C.) into the land of Canaan, and, until the *Temple was built, was kept in a holy tent or *tabernacle. It was considered to be of such sanctity that for an unauthorized person to touch it, even accidentally, was sacrilege, punishable by death (cf. e.g. 2 Sam. 6. 6). When it was permanently lodged within the Temple of *Solomon, its home was the 'Holy of Holies', which the High Priest alone entered once a year. The Ark seems at one time to have contained only the Tables of the Law (1 Kgs. 8. 9), but several traditions exist (e.g. Heb. 9. 4) of other things which were kept inside it. The Ark was apparently captured when *Jerusalem fell in 587–586 B.C., and nothing is certainly known of its later history. See also Synagogue.

Both the Ark of Noah and the Ark of the Covenant have been symbolically interpreted by the Christian Fathers and theologians. Acc. to *Tertullian, St. *Jerome, and others, the Ark of Noah typifies the Church, which, like it, is the only means of salvation, containing saints and sinners symbolized by the pure and impure animals, and being tossed about by tempests but never submerged. The Ark of the Covenant, on the other hand, is a symbol of the Lord. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas the gold with which it is overlaid signifies His wisdom and charity; the golden vase it contains represents His soul, Aaron's rod His priestly dignity, and the Tables of the Law His office as law-giver. St. *Bonaventure saw in it a figure of the Eucharist; acc. to a sermon attributed to St. *Ambrose it symbolizes the BVM, in whom was enclosed the heir of the Law as the Law itself was contained in the Ark of the Covenant. In this sense the symbolism is applied in the Litany of *Loreto, where the BVM is called 'Foederis Arca'.

(1) A. Parrot, Déluge et Arche de Noé (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, i; [1953]; esp. pp. 39–51; Eng. tr. (1955), pp. 54–67. E. Mangenot in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), cols. 923–6, s.v. 'Arche de Noé'; G. Rinaldi in E.C., i (1949), cols. 1785–7, s.v. 'Arca di Noe'. See also comm. on Gen.

(2) M. *Dibelius, Die Lade Jahwes (1906); K. *Budde, 'War die Lade Jahwes ein leerer Thron?' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, lxxvii (1906), pp. 489–507. W. R. Arnold, Ephod and Ark (Harvard Theological Studies No. 3; 1917). H. Gressmann, 'Die Lade Jahwes und das Allerheiligste des salomonischen Tempels' (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, xxvi, 1920). K. Budde, 'Ephod und Lade' in Z.A.T.W., xxxix (1921), pp. 1–42. O. Eissfeldt, 'Lade und Stierbild' in Z.A.T.W., lviii (1940–41), pp. 190–215. J. Morgenstern, 'The Ark, the Ephod, and the "Tent of Meeting" ', part I, in Hebrew Union College Annual, xvii (1942–3), pp. 153–266, esp. pp. 153–7, 229–66, with reff. to earlier works of this author. E. Nielsen, 'Some Reflections on the History of the Ark' in Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, vii (1960), pp. 61–74, with reff. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 127–33, with bibl. p. 439 f.; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 297–302, with bibl. p. 540. H. Lesêtre in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), cols. 912–23, s.v. 'Arche d'alliance'.

H. Hurter, S.J., 'De Arca Noe, Ecclesiae Typo, Patrum Sententiae' in Opuscula Patrum Selecta, iii (Innsbruck, 1868), pp. 217–33. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 2709–32, s.v. 'Arche (de Noé)', with reff. H. Lesêtre, op. cit., col. 923. See also bibl. to Flood and Noah.

ARLES (Lat. Arelate), Synods of. At least fifteen Councils were held at Arles between 314 and 1275. Among the more important were:

(1) 314. Summoned by *Constantine to deal with the *Donatist schism. It passed 22 canons dealing with abuses resulting from the persecutions.

(2) 353. An *Arianizing Council.

[(2a). The 25 canons of the so-called 'Second Council of Arles' of the 5th cent. appear to be a private collection of canons based on those of earlier councils held elsewhere and not to have ever received conciliar authority.]

(3) 813. Canons passed concerning preaching and the education of the clergy.

(4) 1234. Canons passed against the *Albigensians.

(5) 1263 (earlier authorities, 1260). Condemned the doctrines of *Joachim of Fiore.

(1) Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 259–70; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 463–512. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 26–9; crit. edd. in Turner, E.O.M.I.A., I. ii. 2 (1939), pp. 372–416, and C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 3–24. Hefele–Leclercq, i (1; 1907), pp. 275–298. F. X. Funk, 'Die Zeit der ersten Synode von Arles' in Theologische Quartalschrift, lxxii (1890), pp. 296–304, repr. in id., Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, i (1897), pp. 352–8; L. *Duchesne, 'La Date du concile d'Arles' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, x (1890), pp. 640–4. H. Schrörs, 'Drei Aktenstücke in Betreff des Konzils von Arles' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, xlii, Kan. Abth., xi (1921), pp. 429–39.

(2) Hardouin, i (1715), col. 697 f.; Mansi, iii (1759), col. 231 f.; C. Munier, op. cit., p. 30. Hefele–Leclercq, i (2; 1907), pp. 869–72.

(3) Hardouin, iv (1714), cols. 1001–6; Mansi, xiv (1769), cols. 55–64. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (2; 1910), p. 1135 f.

(4) Hardouin, vii (1714), cols. 235–40; Mansi, xxiii (1779), cols. 335–42. Hefele–Leclercq, v (2; 1913), p. 1560 f.

(5) Hardouin, vii (1714), cols. 509–16; Mansi, xxiii (1779), cols. 1001–12. Hefele–Leclercq, vi (1; 1914), pp. 113–17.

ARMADA, Spanish. This great fleet was intended by *Philip II of Spain for the invasion of England in the interests of RC-ism and to avenge English attacks upon Spanish trade. Its defeat after a week's fighting in the English Channel (20–27 July 1588) was hailed as a 'great deliverance' by countless Anglican preachers.

ARMAGH (Ard-Macha, 'Height of Macha', a legendary queen). Archiepiscopal see in the North of *Ireland. It was prob. founded by St. *Patrick, but little is known of its early history. Reforms were carried through in the face of much opposition under St. Cellach (or Celsus, 1105–29) and St. *Malachy (1134–7). When Ireland passed under English domination in 1215 the see lost much of its independence. The English kings claimed the temporalities during vacancies and a share in the election of bishops. Under *Henry VIII, Abp. George Cromer (1522–43) refused to recognize the royal supremacy and opposed the reforming measures. His successor, George Dowdall (d. 1558), took the oath of supremacy and hence was not recognized by Paul III, but he too was a zealous supporter of the old faith. Under *Edward VI he left the country, and in 1552 the first Protestant bishop, Hugh Goodacre (d. 1553), was appointed. Henceforward there was both a Protestant and a RC succession, though for many generations bishops of the latter lived in exile or destitution, Oliver *Plunket (1669–81) suffering martyrdom. Among the Protestant archbishops were J. *Ussher, the famous scholar (1624–56), and Richard Robinson, first Baron Rokeby (1765–94), to whose munificence Armagh owes the archbishop's palace, a library, and other public institutions. Towards the end of the 18th cent. the Catholic archbishops resumed their normal way of life. A new RC cathedral, dedicated to St. Patrick, was built (1840–1904), and many religious Orders and Congregations were established in the diocese. The present Anglican cathedral of St. Patrick is on a fortified hill, acc. to tradition given to Patrick by King Daire. It was mainly rebuilt in the 18th cent., but followed in general plan the original 13th cent. structure.

Since the later Middle Ages the Abps. of Armagh's claim to the primacy has constantly been contested by the Abps. of Dublin, both Catholic and Protestant. The long literary feud, which followed the conflict between Oliver Plunket and Peter Talbot, Abp. of Dublin, in 1670, culminated in the learned work of Hugh MacMahon, Jus Primatiale Armacanum (1728). See also following entry.

J. Stuart, Historical Memoirs of the City of Armagh (Newry, 1819; ed. A. Coleman, O.P., Dublin, 1900). R. King, A Memoir Introductory to the Early History of the Primacy of Armagh (ed. 2, Armagh, 1854). J. B. Leslie, Armagh Clergy and Parishes (Dundalk, 1911; Supplement to 1947, ib., 1948). A. Gwynn, S.J., The Medieval Province of Armagh 1470–1545 (ib., 1946). Ambrose Coleman, O.P., in C.E., i (1907), pp. 729–33, with bibl.

ARMAGH, The Book of (Lat. Liber Ar[d]machanus). A celebrated 8th–9th cent. vellum codex. It contains a miscellaneous collection of documents, partly Irish and partly Latin, and some of them of the first importance for the history of Ireland. Of special interest are its two Lives of St. *Patrick, an important text of the Life of St. *Martin of Tours by *Sulpicius Severus, and a complete non-*Vulgate text of the Latin NT, in the order Gospels (Mt., Mk., Jn., Lk.), Pauline Epp., Catholic Epp., Rev., Acts. The scribe was Ferdomnach of Armagh (d. 845 or 846), who wrote at least the first part of the Book in 807 or 808. The MS., which was treated in the Middle Ages with great ceremony and apparently used in giving testimony and in the swearing of oaths, passed into private possession after the Reformation, and is now at Trinity College, Dublin (MS. no. 52). It is thus sometimes referred to by textual critics as the 'Codex Dublinensis'.

Liber Ardmachanus: The Book of Armagh, ed. with Introduction and Appendices by J. Gwynn (Dublin, 1913). Collotype facsimile of the Patrician documents, with introd. by E. Gwynn (Dublin, 1937). P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Analyse du Livre d'Armagh' in Anal. Boll., lxii (1944), pp. 33–41, with reff. For a good brief account, see J. Dunn in C.E., i (1907), p. 733 f.

ARMENIA, Christianity in. The Armenians were the first nation to embrace Christianity officially. They were converted by *Gregory the Illuminator, who had been consecrated bishop by the Metropolitan of Caesarea in Cappadocia in 294, and who baptized their king Tiridates III (238–314). Gregory established the chief see at Etchmiadzin nr. Mount Ararat, and for a time the office of *Catholicos (or Primate) was hereditary in his family, and continued subject to the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan of Caesarea, who consecrated each successor. In 390 Armenia became divided between the Byzantine and Persian empires, and in 430 the monarchy disappeared, since when the Armenians have been subject to Persians, Arabs, Turks, and Russians, and their unity has consisted in the bond of race, language, literature, and religion.

In 374 the Armenians repudiated their dependence on the Church of Caesarea. In the early part of the 5th cent. St. *Isaac the Great (Catholicos c. 390–c. 440) and St. *Mesrob reformed the Church, and the Bible and the Liturgy were translated from the *Syriac into Armenian. Owing to the wars in which they were involved, the Armenians took no part in the *Monophysite troubles and were not represented at the Council of *Chalcedon in 451; but about 50 years later, partly for political reasons, they repudiated that Council, in consequence of which the Armenian Church has since been reputed Monophysite. They have never entered, however, into full communion with churches professing the Monophysite heresy.

The next 700 years was a period of persecution from Persians and Arabs, though there was an independent kingdom of the Bagratids in Armenia from the end of the 9th cent. to the middle of the 11th cent., and the medieval kingdom of Cilicia, or Little Armenia, was an independent entity from the end of the 12th cent. to 1375. During this period of independence the Armenians of Little Armenia were united with Rome. Many W. practices were adopted from contact with the *Crusaders. The whole Armenian Church was influenced in this way. Armenia sent representatives to the Council of *Florence (1438–9), which issued the famous instruction 'Pro Armenis', on the *Sacraments. The decree of reunion, however, had few practical results.

The Armenians have suffered persecution intermittently throughout their history, and a large proportion of the whole nation has been massacred by the Turks, and later also by the Russians, between 1893 and the present time. There are thought to be about 2½ million Armenians, including about 100,000 who are in communion with Rome. The non-Roman Armenians are sometimes distinguished as 'Gregorian Armenians'. There are Armenian churches in London and Manchester, and about 100,000 Armenians in N. America.

The present organization consists of the Patriarchate of Etchmiadzin (the Patriarch being the head of the Armenian Church), the Catholicate of Sis, and the Patriarchates of Jerusalem and Constantinople. There are two classes of priests—the 'vardapets' or doctors, who are unmarried, and the parish priests, who, unless monks, must be married before ordination to the diaconate. The monks are not a distinct class and bishops are usually chosen from among the vardapets.

Their dogmas are similar to those of the Orthodox Church, and their Liturgy is substantially that of St. *Basil, in classical Armenian. The chief vestment is the chasuble (shurtshar), shaped like a cope. For the Eucharist, they use unleavened bread in the form of a large Latin host, and do not mix water with the wine (see Mixed Chalice). They give Communion in both kinds by intinction. They follow the Julian Calendar. They are unique among non-Protestant Christians in not observing *Christmas as a separate feast. Instead, they celebrate the Nativity of the Lord as part of the *Epiphany, from 5 to 13 January. They make the sign of the Cross after the manner of the Latins.

S. Weber, Die katholische Kirche in Armenien. Ihre Begründung und Entwicklung vor der Trennung (1903); M. Ormanian, L'Église arménienne. Son histoire, sa doctrine, son régime, sa discipline, sa liturgie, son présent (1910; Eng. tr., 1912; revised ed., 1954; Eng. tr., 1955). L. Arpee, A History of Armenian Christianity from the Beginning to Our Own Time (New York, 1946). K. Sarkissian, The Council of Chalcedon and the Armenian Church (1965). F. Tournebize, Histoire politique et religieuse de l'Arménie. Vol. I, Depuis les origines des Arméniens jusqu'à la mort de leur dernier roi (l'an 1393) (1910: all publd.). H. E. B. Lynch, Armenia. Travels and Studies (2 vols., 1901); J. J. M. de Morgan, Histoire du peuple arménien (1919; Eng. tr., Boston, Mass. [1949]). F. C. *Conybeare–A. J. Maclean (edd. and trr.), Rituale Armenorum (1905); A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom (Rome, 1948), ch. 10, pp. 521–646. J. Muyldermans, 'Le Costume liturgique arménien. Étude historique' in Le Muséon, xxxix (1925), pp. 253–324. On Armenian theology, M. Jugie, A.A., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissidentium, v (Paris, 1935), pp. 478–89. A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), pp. 383–445; D. Attwater, The Dissident Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc. [1937]), pp. 293–308. K. Sarkissian, A Brief Introduction to Armenian Christian Literature (1960).

ARMENIAN VERSION OF NT. The Gospels, Acts, and Pauline Epp. were translated into Armenian in the early 5th cent., probably from an Old *Syriac version. Traditionally this translation has been ascribed to Sts. *Mesrob and Sahak. After the Council of *Ephesus (431), two Armenians returned from *Constantinople with 'correct' copies of the Greek Bible (i.e. with MSS. of the *Lucianic text) and proceeded to bring the then existing Armenian text into conformity. In one Armenian MS. the concluding 12 verses of Mk. (16. 9–20) are attributed to 'the presbyter *Aristion'.

Editio princeps of whole Armenian Bible, Amsterdam, 1666; first crit. ed. by J. Zohrab, Venice, 1805. NT publd. separately Amsterdam, 1668; ed. J. Zohrab, Venice, 1789. Book of Rev. ed. F. C. *Conybeare (Text and Translation Society, iii, 1907, pp. 1–163). F. Macler, Le Texte arménien de l'Évangile d'après Matthieu et Marc (Annales du Musée Guimet. Bibliothèque d'Études, xxviii; 1919). S. Lyonnet, S.J., Les Origines de la Version arménienne et le Diatessaron (Biblica et Orientalia, xiii; 1950). F. C. Conybeare in H.D.B., i (1900), p. 153 f.

ARMILL. One of the *Coronation regalia. Although the word means 'bracelet', it is applied to a garment resembling a *stole, both in the '*Liber Regalis' and in the modern Coronation Service. It has been held to signify the quasi-priestly character of the anointed king. In former times it was crossed over the breast, and was so found on the body of Edward I, when his tomb was opened in 1774. The *Lambeth MS. of *Charles I's Coronation ordered the words 'Receive the Bracelets of Sincerity and Wisdom' to be said by the prelate who placed the armill on the king. Later it was placed on the king's shoulders by the Dean of *Westminster, as one of the 'garments of salvation'. It is perhaps identical with the Greek λῶρος, a long jewelled scarf worn by the Byzantine emperors. At the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II (1953) the use of armills in the form of bracelets was restored.

A. Taylor, The Glory of Regality. An Historical Treatise on the Anointing and Crowning of the Kings and Queens of England (1820), pp. 81–5. E. C. Ratcliff, The Coronation Service of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II (1953), p. 31 f.

ARMINIANISM. Jacobus Arminius (Jakob Hermans or Harmens), the celebrated Dutch Reformed theologian (1560–1609), was the son of Hermand Jacobszoon, a cutler of Oudewater in S. Holland. He was schooled at Utrecht and later studied for a time at Marburg. On hearing that most of his relatives had been massacred by the Spaniards, he returned to Holland and took refuge at Rotterdam. Here his evident theological abilities won him influential friends and support. He continued his theological studies at *Leyden (1576–82), at Geneva under T. *Beza, and (for a short time) at Basle, as well as at Padua and Rome. On his return to Holland in 1587 he received a call to minister at Amsterdam and was ordained there in the following year. Studies in the Ep. to the Romans having led him to doubt the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination, he was accused of *Pelagianism and disloyalty to the Confessions of his Church. After an unsuccessful attempt of J. Uitenbogaert to mediate, his opposition to Calvinistic doctrines became more pronounced. An extensive correspondence with Francis Junius, professor at Leyden, and an attempted refutation (not published till after Arminius' death) of W. *Perkins' treatise on predestination led him to work out his doctrines with greater precision. He also found himself increasingly drawn into the political struggle in Holland, as his views on the absolute authority of the State brought him the support of J. van Oldenbarnevelt against the military ideals of Prince Maurice of Orange. Appointed professor at Leyden in 1603, he was at once drawn into a conflict with the zealous Calvinist F. *Gomar, who had taught at Leyden since 1594, but after a disputation at The Hague in the presence of Oldenbarnevelt on 6 May 1603, Arminius successfully cleared himself of the charges of Pelagianism and *Socinianism, and obtained possession of his chair. He now found himself at one of the chief centres of learning in Europe, with J. J. Scaliger as his colleague, and provided with wide opportunities for furthering his beliefs. For the rest of his life, though his temper remained conciliatory and he was steadily supported by the curators of the university, he was engaged in controversy. He made it one of his chief ends to obtain the revision of the two chief Calvinistic documents of the Dutch Church, the Belgic Confession and the Heidelberg Catechism*. But though negotiations for a National Synod for this purpose were unsuccessful he commanded widespread respect, and from 1608 H. *Grotius threw in his lot with him. The disputes continued down to the time of his death.

As a system of faith, Arminian doctrines, formally set forth in the *Remonstrance (q.v.) of 1610, were a theological reaction against the deterministic logic of Calvinism. The Arminians insisted that the Divine sovereignty was compatible with a real free-will in man; that Jesus Christ died for all men and not only for the elect; and that both the *Supralapsarian and *Sublapsarian views of *predestination were unbiblical. At first the opposition to Arminianism was led by F. Gomar. The struggle was long and bitter. Suspected of favouring the pro-Spanish party in politics, the Arminians were attacked by Prince Maurice of Orange. After their condemnation at the synod of *Dort (1618–19), many were banished and others persecuted. By 1630 a less rigid policy had been adopted, but it was not until 1795 that the Remonstrants were admitted to full toleration.

As representatives of a more liberal school of theology than the strict Calvinists, the Arminians exercised considerable influence on the formation of modern Dutch and European Protestant theology. In England the anti-Calvinistic trend in 17th-cent. theology, and esp. in the Laudian revival, was widely termed 'Arminian' by its opponents, though it is doubtful if here the direct influence of Arminius' teaching was at all considerable. In the *Methodist movement J. *Wesley held an Arminian position, as contrasted with G. *Whitefield's Calvinist teaching, thus giving rise to the division in theological outlook between *Wesleyan and *Calvinistic Methodists which has persisted down to modern times. On the Continent the reputation of Arminianism sank very low in the 18th cent., owing to the association which grew up between it and Socinianism. More recently the tension between the Arminian and Calvinist trends in theology had been less acute, until the theological revival of Calvinism under the influence of K. *Barth.

J. Arminius' Theological Works, ed. Leyden, 1629 (repr. Frankfurt, 1631, 1635). Eng. tr. by J. and W. Nichols (3 vols., London, 1825–75). Lives by C. Brandt (Amsterdam, 1724; Eng. tr., 1854), J. Nichols (London, 1843), and J. H. Maronier (Amsterdam, 1905). A. W. Harrison, The Beginnings of Arminianism to the Synod of Dort (1926); id., Arminianism (1937). Rosalie L. Colie, Light and Enlightenment. A Study of the Cambridge Platonists and the Dutch Arminians (Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 1–21. C. Bangs, Arminius. A Study in the Dutch Reformation (New York, 1971).

ARNAULD, ANTOINE (1612–94), 'the Great Arnauld', French theologian and philosopher. He was the twentieth son of a bourgeois family, born in Paris, who, after the death of his father in

1619, came increasingly under the influence of his mother and of his sister, Angélique (see foll. entry). In 1633 he entered the *Sorbonne, where the subject of his bachelor's thesis was the doctrine of Grace. For some years he was a prominent figure in the intellectual society of Paris, but, after receiving the subdiaconate in 1638, he began to enter into association with *Port-Royal and *Saint-Cyran. He was priested in 1641 and the following day retired to Port-Royal. In 1643 he published De la fréquente communion, which with its stress on the need for thorough preparation for Communion and its emphasis on the right interior dispositions did much to propagate Jansenist principles among a wide public. The book provoked a storm from the Jesuits which necessitated Arnauld's withdrawal from public life. In the next year he published (anon.) his Apologie de M. Jansenius, a semi-official manifesto of the Jansenist theological position; and Arnauld now became the acknowledged leader of the Jansenists, writing extensively on their behalf. The publication of two outspoken Lettres . . . à un duc et pair, directed against the Jesuit method in the confessional, provoked an attack from the Sorbonne. The support of the *Dominicans and also of B. *Pascal, who sought to justify Arnauld in the first of his Lettres provinciales, failed to save him, and he was censured by the Sorbonne in Jan. 1656 and in Feb. 1656 solemnly degraded; and until the 'Peace of the Church' of 1668 he remained in retirement. In 1669 he was received by Louis XIV, restored to his position as a Doctor of the Sorbonne and treated as a popular hero. With P. *Nicole (q.v.) he then began a major treatise against the *Calvinists, La Perpétuité de la foi catholique touchant l'Eucharistie (1669–74). When the Jansenist controversy began to revive in 1679, Arnauld left France for the Netherlands, where he was joined by P. *Quesnel; and here he continued to write, until his death, against N. *Malebranche, on *Gallicanism, and on various Biblical subjects. If he was less radical than Jansen in his teaching on the all-embracing power of grace, it was to him more than to anyone else that Jansenist principles owed their diffusion.

Arnauld was the author of over 320 works. Many of his letters are in MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Œuvres de Messire Antoine Arnauld (43 vols., Lausanne, 1775–1783; with Life in vol. 43). Modern ed. by P. Clair and F. Girbal of La Logique ou l'Art de Penser by Arnauld and P. Nicole (Paris, 1965). Eng. tr. of the Leibniz–Arnauld Correspondence by H. T. Mason (Manchester, 1967). P. Quesnel, Histoire abrégée de la vie et des ouvrages de M. Arnauld (Cologne, 1695). R. Rapin, Mémoires . . . sur l'Église et la société, la cour, la ville et le jansénisme, 1644–1669 (ed. L. Aubineau, 3 vols., 1865), passim. J. Brucker in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1978–83, and J. Carreyre, P.S.S., in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), cols. 447–85, both s.v. and with bibl.

ARNAULD, JACQUELINE MARIE ANGÉLIQUE (1591–1661), 'Mère Angélique', Abbess of *Port-Royal. She was the sister of Antoine *Arnauld (see preceding entry), and christened Jacqueline, but at her confirmation took the name of Angélique by which she is commonly known. Born at Paris, she was procured succession at the age of seven to the abbacy of Port-Royal, and after residence in the *Benedictine convents of St.-Antoine, Paris, and at Maubuisson, she became Abbess of Port-Royal in 1602. At first she shared without protest in the very relaxed (but not immoral) discipline of the house, until in 1608 she was converted by a sermon from a visiting *Capuchin friar. She promptly introduced drastic reforms (community of goods, enclosure, regular office, uniformity of dress, abstinence, and silence) and also laid great emphasis on the inner discipline of the spirit. In 1618 she carried through similar reforms at Maubuisson. In 1619 she fell in with St. *Francis de Sales and wished to join the *Visitation nuns, but, permission being refused, she returned to Port-Royal in 1622. The community now increased rapidly in numbers and came to include Angélique's four sisters and their mother, and in 1625 Angélique moved it to a larger house in the Faubourg Saint-Jacques in Paris. A proposal of Sébastien Zamet, Bp. of Langres (Bp. 1615–55), to amalgamate the community with the reformed Benedictine house of Tard, nr. Dijon, led to serious differences, and in 1630 her sister Agnès was elected Abbess to replace her, though Angélique continued to exercise considerable influence. In the next years Angélique came under the influence of *Saint-Cyran, under whom the community became an enthusiastic upholder of *Jansenist principles and practice, and Angélique herself for long periods abstained from Communion. From 1642 to 1654 she was again Abbess. She died shortly after the signing of the Formulary of 1661. See also Port-Royal.

Her spiritual doctrines, based on papers written by herself or under her immediate inspiration, may be studied in Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Port-Royal et à la vie de la Révérende Mère Marie-Angélique . . . Arnauld (3 vols., Utrecht, 1742–4), Entretiens ou conférences de la Révérende Mère Angélique Arnauld (3 vols., Utrecht, 1757), and other collections. Modern ed. of her autobiography up to 1638 ed. L. Cognet, Relation écrite par la Mère Angélique Arnauld sur Port-Royal (1949). Lives by G. Dall (pseud., Paris, 1893), M. Reynès-Monlaur (Paris, 1901), E. K. Sanders ('A. K. H.' [authoress' pseud.], London, 1905; new edd. under her name, London, 1914 and 1928), and J. Pannier (Issy-les-Moulineaux, 1931). A. Gazier, Jeanne de Chantal et Angélique Arnauld d'après leur correspondance, 1620–1641 (Paris, 1915). L. Cognet, La Mère Angélique et Saint François de Sales 1618–1626 (1951), and other works of this author.

ARNDT, ERNST MORITZ (1769–1860), German patriot and poet. A native of Schoritz in the island of Rügen and of a strict Protestant family, he studied at Greifswald (1791) and Jena (1793), where he came under the influence of the Aufklärung* and of the Critical Philosophy (esp. J. G. *Fichte). Philosophical doubts led him to give up his intention of becoming a pastor in 1797. In 1800 he became lecturer in history at Greifswald university. His work, Vom Geist der Zeit (1806), directed against Napoleon, endangered his freedom and he fled to Sweden. During the wars from 1812 onwards he exercised a great influence by his patriotic publications. In 1818 he was appointed professor of history at the newly founded university of Bonn. In 1819 appeared a fourth part of Vom Geist der Zeit, in which he attacked the reactionary policy of the German princes. Suspension from his professorship followed in 1820, and for the next 20 years Arndt devoted himself to literary work. In 1840 he was reinstalled in his office by Frederick William IV.

Despite his change-over from theology to history Arndt always retained his religious interests. After a period of doubt, during which he tried to combine *Lutheranism with the contemporary German Idealistic philosophy, he began, in 1817, to occupy himself more with the Bible and the Reformation, and, under the influence of friends, esp. F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he adopted a more definitely Christian attitude. To this period belong his hymns to Christ, among them his popular 'Ich weiss, an wen ich glaube'. His hopes of a union between Protestants and Catholics in a German National Church were disappointed through the growing influence of *Ultramontanism, and in his later years he became one of the sturdiest representatives of German Protestantism, his most important work on the subject being Über den gegenwärtigen Stand des Protestantismus (1844).

Works ed. H. Rösch and others (14 vols., Leipzig and Magdeburg, 1892–1909). Lives by W. Baur (ed. 2, Hamburg, 1863), E. Langenberg (Bonn, 1865), R. Theile (Gütersloh, 1894), E. Muesebeck (vol. i, Gotha, 1914; all publd.), and P. Breitenkamp (Berlin, 1939). R. Wolfram, Ernst Moritz Arndt und Schweden (1933). P. Knauer, Ernst Moritz Arndt. Der grosse Erzieher der Deutschen (1935). A. G. Pundt, Arndt and the National Awakening in Germany (Columbia University thesis; New York, 1935). R. Fahrner, Arndt. Geistiges und politisches Verhalten (1937). G. Heine, Ernst Moritz Arndt. Der Weg eines deutschen Mannes [1939]. U. E. W. Willers, Ernst Moritz Arndt och hans Svenska Förbindelser. Studier i svensk-pommersk Historiografi och svensk Opinionsbildning (1945), with portrait and bibl. G. Ott, Ernst Moritz Arndt. Religion, Christentum und Kirche in der Entwicklung des deutschen Publizisten und Patrioten (Düsseldorf, 1966).

ARNDT, JOHANN (1555–1621), *Lutheran theologian and mystical writer. A devoted follower of P. *Melanchthon, he studied at Helmstedt (1576) and *Wittenberg (1577) and later at Strassburg and Basle. In 1583 he was made pastor of Badeborn, but aroused *Calvinist hostility by his uncompromising Lutheranism. In 1590 he was compelled to move to Quedlinburg and in 1599 to Brunswick. He is chiefly remembered for his Vier Bücher vom wahren Christentum (1606), in which, in contrast to the prevalent forensic view of the Atonement, he dwelt on the work of Christ in the heart of man. Arndt was much venerated by the German *Pietists.

Works ed. by J. J. Rambach (8 vols., Leipzig, 1734–6). H. L. Pertz, De Johanne Arndtio eiusque Libris qui inscribuntur: De Vero Christianismo (Hanover, 1852). C. Ochmann, Essai sur la vie et la doctrine de J. Arndt (1861). F. J. Winter, Johann Arndt, der Verfasser des 'Wahren Christentums' (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, Nos. ci–cii, 1911); W. Koepp, Johann Arndt. Eine Untersuchung über die Mystik im Luthertum (1912), with bibl. F. A. G. *Tholuck–W. Hölscher in P.R.E., ii (1897), pp. 108–12, s.v.

ARNOBIUS (d. c. 330). A Christian apologist who flourished in the time of *Diocletian (284–305). Acc. to *Jerome, he was originally a rhetorician at Sicca in proconsular Africa. In his 'Adversus Nationes' (c. 303–310), a treatise full of curious learning, he defended the consonance of the Christian religion with the best pagan philosophy. *Lactantius was his pupil.

The Adv. Nationes survives in the single MS., Par. Bibl. Nat. 1661. Text first ed. by Faustus Sabaeus [Brixianus] at Rome, 1543; J. P. Migne, PL, v. 349–1374; crit. edd. by A. Reifferscheid in C.S.E.L. iv (1875) and C. Marchesi (Turin, 1934; ed. 2, 1953). Eng. trr. by A. H. Bryce and H. Campbell in A.N.C.L., vol. xix (1871), and G. E. McCracken in A.C.W. (2 vols., 1949). F. Gabarrou, Arnobe, son œuvre (1921); id., Le Latin d'Arnobe (1921); E. Rapisarda, Arnobio (1946); P. Krafft, Beiträge zur Wirkungsgeschichte des älteren Arnobius (Klassisch-Philologische Studien, xxxii; 1966). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, iii (1905), pp. 241–6. Lucille Berkowitz, Index Arnobianus (Hildesheim, 1967). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 517–25; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 183–5. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 383–92.

ARNOBIUS JUNIOR (5th cent.). He was an African monk, who attacked St. *Augustine's doctrine of Grace in Rome c. 450. He wrote allegorizing 'Commentaries' on the Pss., some notes on the Gospels, and an anti-*Monophysite 'Conflictus cum Serapione'. G. *Morin also ascribes to him the '*Praedestinatus' (though this attribution is contested by H. v. Schubert) as well as a 'Liber ad Gregoriam', a letter to an aristocratic lady of Rome.

Editio princeps of his Commentaries by D. *Erasmus (Basle, 1522), of his 'Expositiunculae in Evangelium' by G. Cognatus [i.e. Cousin] (Basle, 1543). Complete text of the latter pr. by G. Morin, O.S.B., in Anecdota Maredsolana, iii (pt. 3, Maredsous and Oxford; 1903), pp. 129–51. Collected ed. in J. P. Migne, PL, liii, 237–692. H. von Schubert, Der sogenannte Praedestinatus (T.U. xxiv, Hft. 4; 1903), pp. 95–114. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 603–6; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 459, both with further bibl. P. de Labriolle in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), cols. 547–9.

ARNOLD OF BRESCIA (d. 1155), reformer. Probably a native of Brescia, Arnold studied at Paris, where, acc. to tradition, he was a pupil of *Abelard. On his return to Italy, he became a *canon regular, and at once began to attack the worldliness of the Church. He proclaimed that confession should be made not to a priest but by Christians to one another, that the sinfulness of a priest destroyed the value of the sacraments which he administered, and that spiritual persons ought not to possess worldly goods or exercise secular authority. His participation in local political disputes at Brescia forced him in 1139 to return to France, and St. *Bernard of Clairvaux secured the condemnation of his doctrines, with those of Abelard, at the Council of Sens in 1140. Arnold later (1145) made his way to Rome and there gave his support to the party which had rejected the temporal dominion of the Pope. The result was his excommunication by *Eugenius III on 15 July 1148. Eventually, after the accession of the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa, who made a treaty with the Papacy on 16 Oct. 1152, the party which Arnold supported in Rome lost control, and Arnold was captured by Barbarossa and condemned to death. He was handed over to the prefect of Rome, now returned to its obedience, and executed, and the ashes of his burnt body were thrown into the Tiber.

The primary sources for his life are the two chronicles of *Otto of Freising, the letters of St. Bernard of Clairvaux, and the Historia Pontificalis of *John of Salisbury; on the last, see text of R. L. Poole (Oxford, 1927), pp. lviii–lxx. R. Breyer, 'Arnold von Brescia' in Historisches Taschenbuch, viii (1889), pp. 121–78; K. Hampe, 'Zur Geschichte Arnolds von Brescia' in Historische Zeitschrift, cxxx (1924), pp. 58–69; W. v. Giesebrecht, 'Ueber Arnold von Brescia' in Sb. (Bayr.), iii (1873), pp. 122–54. A. Hausrath, Arnold von Brescia (1891). G. W. Greenaway, Arnold of Brescia (1931), with discussion of sources, pp. 205–10, of modern studies, pp. 211–17, and full bibl. A. Frugoni, Arnaldo da Brescia nelle fonti del secolo XII (Istituto storico Italiano per il medio evo. Studi storici, viii–ix; 1954).

ARNOLD, GOTTFRIED (1666–1714), German Protestant theologian and devotional writer. A native of Annaberg in Saxony, he studied theology at *Wittenberg from 1685 to 1689, when, following the advice of P. J. *Spener, he accepted a position as private tutor at Dresden. Under Spener's influence he experienced a conversion. In 1693 he went to Quedlinburg, where he wrote his first important work, Die erste Liebe (1696), an enthusiastic account of the life of the first Christians, founded on his *patristic studies and especially the work of W. *Cave. The book earned him a call to Giessen as professor of Church history in 1697, a post which he resigned in the following year because he found it too distracting. He returned to Quedlinburg, where he wrote his principal work, the Unparteiische Kirchen- und Ketzer-Historie (1699–1700). Though not as impartial as its title claims, it is important esp. as a history of Protestant mysticism and for its use of many out-of-the-way documents on the movement. The opposition of the official Lutheran Church led him to form close connexions with representatives of a more personal spirituality such as J. G. *Gichtel. His Geheimnis der göttlichen Sophia (1700) abounds in strange speculations on the androgynous nature of the first man, lost by the Fall, and recovered through Christ. After his marriage, in 1701, he devoted himself increasingly to pastoral work. In 1704 he became inspector and pastor at Werben, and in 1707 at Perleberg. His writings of this later period are devotional and less eccentric, among the most popular being Geistliche Gestalt eines evangelischen Lehrers (1704) and Wahre Abbildung des inwendigen Christentums (1709). He is also well known as an author of hymns, and he published translations of M. *Molinos and Mme *Guyon, and edited the works of *Angelus Silesius.

Modern edd. of his Geistliche Lieder by A. Knapp (Stuttgart, 1845) and R. C. Ehmann (ib., 1856; with Life, pp. 1–43). Selection ed. by E. Seeberg (Munich, 1934). F. Dibelius, Gottfried Arnold. Sein Leben und seine Bedeutung für Kirche und Theologie (1873); E. Seeberg, Gottfried Arnold. Die Wissenschaft und die Mystik seiner Zeit (1923); H. Dörries, Geist und Geschichte bei Gottfried Arnold (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, li; 1963); T. Stählin, Gottfried Arnolds geistliche Dichtung. Glaube und Mystik (Veröffentlichungen der Evangelischen Gesellschaft für Liturgieforschung, xv; 1966).

ARNOLD, MATTHEW (1822–88), poet and literary critic. He was the eldest son of T. *Arnold (q.v.). Born at Laleham, Surrey, he was educated at *Winchester, Rugby, and Balliol College, *Oxford, where he won the Newdigate Prize with his poem Cromwell (1843). In 1845 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College; from 1847 to 1851 he was private secretary to Lord Lansdowne; and from 1851 to 1883 a Government Inspector of Schools. From 1857 to 1867 he was also Professor of Poetry at Oxford. His powers as a poet and a critic developed somewhat slowly. Empedocles on Etna (1852), though poorly constructed as a dramatic work, contained some fine lyrics. In 1853 he published his Poems (including 'Sohrab and Rustum' and 'The Scholar Gipsy'); in 1855 his Poems (Second Series). 'Thyrsis' and 'Rugby Chapel' both first appeared in New Poems (1867). His prose writings include On Translating Homer (1861), Essays in Criticism (1865; second series, 1888), and Culture and Anarchy (1869). For his religious views, St. Paul and Protestantism (1870), Literature and Dogma (1873), God and the Bible (1875), and Last Essays on Church and Religion (1877) are of particular interest.

Matthew Arnold made it his mission to condemn the boorishness of the English, finding in 'culture' the cure for contemporary ills and a potent help towards the formation of human character. Religion, he held, was to be concerned with conduct and not with speculation about the nature of things. The power behind the universe is a moral one, and with it a moral tendency which resides in man is in sympathy. These truths Arnold held to be manifested in the OT belief that righteousness, which God approves, exalts a nation; but he deplored the superstitious *Bibliolatry, alien from the scientific spirit of the age, which interpreted with literalness such poetic images as the hope of the *Messiah. The religion of Jesus had shown advance by laying stress on personal rather than national conduct, and had suffused morality with emotion and, therefore, with happiness.

Collected Works, 15 vols., London, 1903–4 (with bibl. by T. B. Smart); works also ed. R. H. Super (Ann Arbor, 1960 ff.). Several collected edd. of Poems, among them 2 vols., London, 1869, and 2 vols., London, 1877; also ed. K. Allott, ib., 1965. Selected Essays ed. G. K. *Chesterton (Everyman's Library, 1906). Letters, 1848–1888, ed. G. W. E. Russell (2 vols., 1895); Letters to Arthur Hugh Clough, ed. H. F. Lowry (1932). Note-Books, ed. H. F. Lowry, K. Young, and W. H. Dunn, London, 1952. Studies by G. Saintsbury ('Modern English Writers', 1899), H. W. Paul ('English Men of Letters', 1902), W. H. Dawson (New York and London, 1904), G. W. E. Russell ('Literary Lives', 1904), Hugh Kingsmill (pseud., 1928), L. Trilling (New York, 1939), E. K. Chambers (Oxford, 1947), E. K. Brown (Toronto, 1948). C. B. Tinker and H. F. Lowry, The Poetry of Matthew Arnold. A Commentary (1940). W. Robbins, The Ethical Idealism of Matthew Arnold. A Study of the Nature and Sources of his Moral and Religious Ideas (1959). D. G. James, Matthew Arnold and the Decline of English Romanticism (Oxford, 1961); H. C. Duffin, Arnold the Poet (1962); L. Gottfried, Matthew Arnold and the Romantics (1963); W. D. Anderson, Matthew Arnold and the Classical Tradition (Ann Arbor, 1965). Further bibl. in C.B.E.L., ii (1940), pp. 265–70. R. Garnett in D.N.B., Suppl. i (1901), pp. 70–75, s.v.

ARNOLD, THOMAS (1795–1842), Headmaster of Rugby. A fine classical scholar, he was a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, from 1815 to 1819, where he was a contemporary of John *Keble and R. D. *Hampden. In 1828 he was appointed Headmaster of Rugby. Here he aimed at fostering a system of education based on a carefully laid foundation of religious training. He made it his goal to educate the sons of middle-class parents, who began to flock into the public schools towards the close of his lifetime, into a high sense of duty, of public service, and of the importance of personal character. He believed in the essential unity of the secular and religious, of Church and state, and in the universal priesthood of the laity. He objected to the *Tractarians on the ground of their ecclesiasticism, and vigorously attacked them in an article entitled 'Dr. Hampden and the Oxford Malignants' in the Edinburgh Review of 1836. In 1841 he was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford, but died while still in his prime in the following year. His ecclesiastical ideals were epitomized in his Principles of Church Reform (1833). He also issued works on classical subjects and some volumes of sermons.

Miscellaneous Works collected and ed. by A. P. *Stanley (London, 1845). Id., The Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold (2 vols., 1844). Other studies by Emma J. Worboise (London, 1859), J. J. Findlay (ed.; Cambridge, 1897), R. J. Campbell (London, 1927), A. Whitridge (ib., 1928), N. Wymer (ib., 1953), T. W. Bamford (ib., 1960), and E. L. Williamson, Jr. (Alabama, 1964). T. Walrond in D.N.B., ii (1885), pp. 113–17, s.v.

ARNULF, St. (c. 580–before 655), also Arnoul, Bp. of Metz. Descended from a noble Frankish family, he rapidly rose to a high position in the court of Theodebert II, King of Austrasia (595–612), renouncing his early desire for a solitary life in order to undertake the duties of government. He took an active part in securing the accession of Clothaire II in 613. He was consecrated Bp. of Metz c. 614, and from 623 assisted Clothaire's son, Dagobert, in the government of his kingdom in the Ardennes. He took part in the Councils of Clichy (c. 626–7) and of *Reims (c. 627), and was eventually allowed to resign his see. He joined his friend Romaric in retirement in a deserted place near Remiremont in the Vosges, where he spent the rest of his life in meditation and prayer. Before he was consecrated Bishop he had been married to the daughter of the Count of Boulogne. One of his sons, Clodulf, was his third successor in the see of Metz; by the marriage of the other with a daughter of Pepin of Landen, Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia, he became an ancestor of the Carolingian kings of France. Feast day, 18 July or 16 Aug.

The principal authority is an anonymous contemporary Lat. life pr. in AA.SS., Jul. IV (1735), pp. 435–40; a further life, mainly dependent on it, dating from the reign of Louis II (846–79) and attributed to Umno, ib., pp. 440–45; crit. ed. of the former by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, ii (1888), pp. 426–46. J. Depoin, 'Grandes Figures monacales des temps mérovingiens: Saint Arnoul de Metz. Études de critique historique' in Revue Mabillon, xi (1921), pp. 245–58; xii (1922), pp. 13–25, 105–18.

ARTEMON (also ARTEMAS) (3rd cent.), *Adoptionist heretic. All that is known of him is that c. 235 he taught at *Rome and that he was excommunicated for heretical teaching. His doctrine, which seems to have been a later development of that of the two *Theodoti, was that Christ was only a man, though He excelled the Prophets. It was attacked on the twofold basis of Scripture and the earliest Christian tradition by the author of the '*Little Labyrinth'.

The sources are *Eusebius, H.E., v. 28; *Epiphanius, Haer., lxv. 1. 4; *Theodoret, Haer. Fab., ii. 4; and *Photius, Biblioth., xlviii. R. H. *Connolly, O.S.B., 'Eusebius H.E. v. 28' in J.T.S., xlix (1948), pp. 73–79. P. Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 174, s.v.

ARTICLES. See Forty-Two Articles; Irish Articles; Lambeth Articles; Organic Articles; Six Articles; Ten Articles; Thirteen Articles; Thirty-Nine Articles; Twelve Articles.

ARTOPHORION (Gk. ἀρτοφόριον). In the E. Church, the *tabernacle on the altar in which the Blessed Sacrament is reserved.

ARUNDEL, THOMAS (1353–1414), Abp. of *Canterbury. A prominent politician and twice Chancellor under Richard II (1386–9 and 1391–6), he was consecrated Bp. of *Ely in 1374, and translated to *York in 1388 and to *Canterbury in 1396. In 1397 he was impeached in Parliament and banished. At the request of Richard II, Pope Boniface IX deprived him of the see of Canterbury by translating him to St. Andrews (which did not recognize the authority of Boniface). Restored to Canterbury in 1399, he was three times Chancellor under Henry IV, and remained in possession of his see until his death. He was a prominent opponent of the *Lollards, holding a provincial council against them at *Oxford in 1408, seeking out Lollard writings, and showing himself active in the persecution carried out against them.

Margaret [E.] Aston, Thomas Arundel. A Study of Church Life in the Reign of Richard II (Oxford, 1967). K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity [1953], pp. 150–5 and 161–5. J. Gairdner in D.N.B., ii (1885), pp. 137–41, s.v.; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 51–53.

ASAPH, St. (fl. 570), Welsh saint. He is said to have been a disciple of St. *Kentigern, when the latter was in exile at Llanelwy (later called *St. Asaph, q.v.) in Wales. Tradition asserts that when Kentigern returned to Scotland, c. 570, Asaph succeeded him as head of the monastery of Llanelwy, and became the first Welsh bishop of the see. Nothing more is definitely known of him. Feast day, 1 May.

AA.SS., Mai. I (1680), p. 82 f. D. Lleufer Thomas in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 78 f., with bibl.; J. E. Lloyd in The Dictionary of Welsh Biography down to 1940 (1959), p. 15, s.v.

ASBURY, FRANCIS (1745–1816). One of the two first *Methodist bishops in America. Sent to America by J. *Wesley in 1771, he was very soon given supervision of all Methodist work in the country. When the American Methodists became a separate organization in 1784, he and Thomas Coke became joint superintendents. His journal from 1771 has much valuable historical matter. He continued the work of organization and administration until his death.

His Journal was edited at New York, 1862. New ed. of his Journal and Letters by E. T. Clark and others (3 vols., London and Nashville, 1958). Lives by J. Lewis (London, 1927), Herbert Asbury (New York, 1927), and W. L. Duren (ib., 1928).

ASCENSION OF CHRIST, The. The withdrawal of Christ into Heaven, witnessed by the Apostles (Mk. 16. 19, Lk. 24. 51, Acts 1. 9). Acc. to tradition it took place on the Mount of *Olives. Lk. 24. 50–53 has been held to imply that the Ascension happened on the evening of the day of the Resurrection, but acc. to Acts 1. 3 it occurred forty days later. There are also explicit references to it in Jn. (cf. 6. 62, 20. 17), though this Gospel has no account of the event itself, and implicit references in the rest of the NT (cf. Eph. 4. 8–10, Heb. 4. 14, 7. 26, 8. 1, 1 Pet. 3. 22, 1 Tim. 3. 16).

The Ascension marked the solemn close of the post-Resurrection appearances and the exaltation of Christ to the heavenly life after He had spoken to His Apostles of 'the things concerning the Kingdom of God'. Its theological significance consists in the fact that thereby Christ's human nature was taken into Heaven, whence He now exercises all power in Heaven and on earth (cf. Jn. 14. 2, Phil. 3. 21, Heb. 6. 20, Rev. 3. 21).

Ascension Day is one of the chief feasts of the Christian year. It is kept on the sixth Thursday, i.e. the 40th day, after *Easter. There is widespread testimony (e.g. in *Chrysostom, *Etheria, and *Socrates) to its celebration from the later years of the 4th cent. In early times its observance was frequently, if not always, marked by a procession, apparently to commemorate Christ's journey to the Mount of *Olives. Acc. to W. usage, the *Paschal Candle, lighted during more important services in Eastertide, was until 1970 extinguished after the Gospel at Mass on Ascension Day. In the BCP Proper Psalms (8, 15, 21; 24, 47, 108) are appointed for the day itself and a Proper Preface for use throughout the *octave.

W. Milligan, The Ascension and Heavenly Priesthood of Our Lord (1891); H. B. *Swete, The Ascended Christ (1910);

V. Larrañaga, L'Ascension de Notre-Seigneur (Fr. trans., 1938). P. Benoit, O.P., 'L'Ascension' in R. Bibl. lvi (1949), pp. 167–203, with further bibl. reff. J. G. Davies, He Ascended into Heaven. A Study in the History of Doctrine (Bampton Lectures 1958; 1958), with bibl.

ASCENSION OF ISAIAH. See Isaiah, Ascension of.

ASCENT OF MOUNT CARMEL, The. The earliest of St. *John of the Cross's spiritual treatises, written between 1578 and 1580. It expounds the method by which the will, the intellect, and the senses in the Christian soul are purified in its approach to God. The book was written primarily for those entrusted with pastoral responsibilities.

ASCETICAL THEOLOGY. The theological discipline dealing with the so-called 'ordinary' ways of Christian perfection. It is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from *Moral Theology, which treats of the duties indispensable for salvation, and, on the other, from *Mystical Theology, whose subject is the 'extraordinary' or passive ways of the spiritual life. It is thus the science of Christian perfection in so far as this is accessible to human effort aided by grace. Its special object is charity, directed principally towards God and secondarily to one's neighbour. It is, moreover, a practical as well as a theoretical science, and hence treats also of the means to be employed and the dangers to be avoided if the end of the Christian life is to be attained.

As a science, Ascetical Theology is based on the teaching of Scripture and the traditions and decisions of the Church. It is usually divided into three parts corresponding to the three degrees of the spiritual life of 'beginners', 'proficient' and 'perfect', characterized by the *Purgative, *Illuminative and *Unitive Ways respectively. Theologians are divided, however, as to whether the 'Unitive Way' is still a subject of Ascetical Theology or whether it comes under the competence of Mystical Theology. The former opinion, usually held by those tending to a rigid separation of Ascetical from Mystical Theology, postulates two kinds of unitive ways, one belonging to ascetics, the other to mysticism. The latter view is defended by those who admit only one unitive way, which, acc. to them, always belongs to the mystic state and is the normal—though not the most frequent—development of the ascetic life.

The beginning of Ascetical Theology as a science, though not yet separated from Moral and Mystical Theology in the modern sense, goes back to the patristic age (*Clement of Alexandria and esp. *Dionysius the Areopagite). It was developed under the influence of the inquiring spirit of Scholasticism, e.g. by *Hugh of St. Victor, and then further elaborated by the great Schoolmen of the 13th cent., St. *Albert, St. *Thomas Aquinas, and St. *Bonaventure. In modern times a great many treatises on Ascetical Theology have been written. Among the most popular and influential are St. *Ignatius' Spiritual Exercises, St. *Francis de Sales' Introduction to the Devout Life, and St. *Alphonsus Liguori's The True Spouse of Jesus Christ. See also Asceticism.

G. B.* Scaramelli, Direttorio ascetico (1752; Eng. tr., 1870). A. Devine, Manual of Ascetical Theology (1902); A. Saudreau, O.P., Les Degrés de la vie spirituelle (Angers, 1904; Eng. tr. by Bede Camm, O.S.B., 2 vols., 1926); C. *Marmion, Le Christ, vie de l'âme (1914; Eng. tr., 1922), and Marmion's other works; A. *Tanquerey, Précis de théologie ascétique et mystique (1924); A. Farges, Les Voies ordinaires de la vie spirituelle (1925; Eng. tr., 1927). K. E. *Kirk, The Vision of God (1931); F. P. Harton, The Elements of the Spiritual Life (1932); and numerous other manuals. Periodicals specially devoted to the subject include Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique (Toulouse, 1920 ff.), Zeitschrift für Aszese und Mystik (Innsbruck, 1926 ff.), and The Life of the Spirit (Oxford, 1946 ff.; formerly as suppl. to Blackfriars); cf. also Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique (ed. M. Viller, S.J., F. Cavallera and others, fasc. i, 1932; vol. i, 1937; in progress). For literature on the history of the subject, see bibl. to foll. entry.

ASCETICISM (from Gk. ἄσκησις, 'exercise', 'training'). The term, which was already used by the *Stoics and Cynics, denotes a system of practices designed to combat vice and develop virtues, such as were employed not only by many Greek philosophers, but also in some E. religions, esp. Buddhism. In the NT the word occurs only once—as a verb, ἀσκεῖν, 'to strive'—at Acts 24. 16. In 1 Cor. 9. 25 the Christian life is compared to the games in which 'every man that striveth . . . is temperate in all things'. But the idea, present already in the OT, esp. in the *Wisdom books, is prominent throughout the NT. It is summed up in the Lord's call to His disciples: 'If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me' (Mk. 8. 34), with its emphasis on the two sides of Christian asceticism, the negative one of self-denial and the positive one of the following of Christ. This invitation to practise self-abnegation is frequently reiterated, mostly in very strong terms (Mt. 10. 38 f., Jn. 12. 25), being shown to involve constant watchfulness (Mt. 24. 42, 25. 13, &c.) and fasting (Mt. 6. 16–18; Mk. 2. 18–20) and, in many cases, renunciation of all earthly possessions (Mt. 19. 21, Mk. 10. 28, Lk. 9. 57–62) and perpetual chastity (Mt. 19. 12). St. *Paul counsels the same ideal, repeatedly inculcating the necessity of keeping up the struggle against the inclinations of the 'old man' (e.g. Rom. 8. 13, 1 Cor. 9. 26 f., Col. 3. 5).

In the first three cents. Christian asceticism found expression esp. in the preparation of Christians for martyrdom and in the ideal of virginity, which, in its complete consecration of soul and body to God, was put almost on a par with the former. *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen seem to have been the first Fathers to study the theoretical foundations of asceticism. Taking over from the Stoics the idea of ascetic action as a purification of the soul from its passions, they see in it a necessary means for loving God more perfectly and for attaining to contemplation. In the 3rd cent. the ascetic ideal as a particular way of life had gained adherents throughout Christendom, thus leading up to the age of the Fathers of the Desert and the beginnings of monasticism in the 4th cent. From that time the monks both in the East and in the West became leading representatives of asceticism, which was practised not only in such external exercises as abstinences, fasts, and vigils, but also in the interior abnegation required by the virtues proper to the monastic life. The monks, too, became authors of important ascetical treatises, among the most famous of such early writings being the Conferences of *Cassian and of *Dorotheus.

With the growing devotion to the humanity of Christ, esp. to His Passion, in the Middle Ages asceticism underwent a certain modification in that it became increasingly inspired by the desire for conformation to the sufferings of the Redeemer. In contrast to the worldliness and avarice of the secular clergy, the *Mendicant orders practised and spread the ideal of voluntary poverty, and produced many treatises on the ascetical life. Early in the 15th cent. the '*Imitation of Christ' developed a new doctrine of the inner life on the basis of an exacting asceticism.

At the close of the Middle Ages there appeared a twofold reaction against the ascetical ideal, led by the scholars and artists of the Renaissance on the one hand and by the Protestant Reformers on the other. In the humanist revival of pagan antiquity there was little place for the spiritual combat of the Christian ascetic, whereas the *Lutheran doctrine of the total depravity of human nature and justification by faith alone undermined the theological foundations of the medieval ascetic writers. Despite these challenges the ascetical ideal, upheld by the Council of *Trent, continued to find its champions in such austere saints as *Peter of Alcántara, *John of the Cross, and later in the *Curé d'Ars, as well as in new *congregations and reformed branches of old orders such as the *Passionists or the *Trappists. At the same time a more exclusively interior and hidden asceticism of complete renunciation of the will found expression in other modern Institutes, e.g. the *Jesuit Order and the *Visitation Nuns. Among the *Puritans asceticism, in the negative sense of abstinence from particular pleasures or recreations, was widely upheld and practised. In a more positive sense it also found an important place in *Methodism and esp. among the *Tractarian divines and their successors. It led to the wide revival of religious communities in England in the 19th cent. An exaggerated asceticism has been the mark of some sects, e.g. of the *Montanists, *Gnostics, and *Manichaeans of the patristic period, and of the medieval *Cathari and *Waldenses, where it was usually combined with dualistic tendencies in theology.

Acc. to its classical Christian exponents asceticism is a necessary means of fighting the concupiscence of the flesh, of the eyes and the pride of life, mentioned in 1 Jn. 2. 16. It is also of great value as an imitation of the sacrificial life of Christ and as a means of expiation of one's own sins and those of others, in virtue of the doctrine of the Mystical Body. It springs from the love of God and aims at overcoming all the obstacles to this love in the soul. It is thus not an end in itself but essentially a preparation for the life of union with God, since, in its positive aspect, it seeks to foster the interior tendencies that serve to develop the life of charity.

M. J. Rouët de Journel, S.J.–J. Dutilleul, S.J. (edd.), Enchiridion Asceticum (Freiburg i. Br., 1930; mainly patristic); H. Koch, Quellen zur Geschichte der Askese und des Mönchtums in der alten Kirche (1933). O. Zockler, Kritische Geschichte der Askese (1863; ed. 2 as Askese und Mönchtum, 2 vols., 1897). Good historical survey in P. Pourrat, P.S.S., La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1920–8). A Saudreau, La Piété à travers les âges (Angers, 1927). H. Strathmann, Geschichte der frühchristlichen Askese bis zur Entstehung des Mönchtums (1914); M. Viller, S.J.–K. *Rahner, S.J., Ascese und Mystik in der Väterzeit (1939). P. Nagel, Die Motivierung der Askese in der Alten Kirche und der Ursprung des Mönchtums (T.U., xcv; 1966); B. Lohse, Askese und Mönchtum in der Antike und in der alten Kirche (Religion und Kultur der alten Mittelmeerwelt in Parallelforschungen, i; 1969). L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Dévotions et pratiques ascétiques du moyen âge (Collection 'Pax' xxi, 1925; Eng. tr., 1927). J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et Moyen Age, iii (1948), pp. 185–244 (Étude V: Un Programme de lectures spirituelles dans les écrits des pères). O. Zöckler in H.E.R.E., ii (1907), pp. 73–80, s.v. 'Asceticism (Christian)'; H. Windisch in T.W.B., i (1935), pp. 492–4, s. v. ἀσκέω; J. de Guibert, S.J., M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J., M. Viller, S.J., and A. Willwoll, S.J., in Dict. Sp. i (1937), cols. 936–1010, s.v. 'Ascèse, Ascétisme'.

ASEITY (Lat. aseitas, from [ens] a se, 'being from itself'). The quality in virtue of which a being exists of and from itself alone. Acc. to Christian teaching, it is realized solely in God and distinguishes Him from all created beings, whose existence, as it issues ultimately from Him, is derivative from something outside itself (ens ab alio).

ASH WEDNESDAY. The first day of *Lent, six and a half weeks before *Easter. Down to the 7th cent., Lent began with *Quadragesima Sunday, as it still does in the *Ambrosian Rite. The four extra days were added later to secure the exact number of forty week-days for the fast. At one time public penitents at Rome were ceremonially admitted to begin their penance on this day; and when this discipline fell into disuse, between the 8th and 10th cents., the general penance of the whole congregation took its place. This was symbolized by the imposition of ashes, in token of mourning and penitence, upon the heads of clergy and people, a rite still ordered for Ash Wednesday in the Roman Missal. In the BCP of 1549 and in subsequent editions the *Commination Service is prescribed for this day. In the American Books of 1929 and 1979 Ash Wednesday is mentioned as a special fast-day (with *Good Friday), and in the Scottish Book of 1929 it is named (together with the six days before Easter) a 'Greater Fast'. In the RC Church Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are now the only days on which fasting is prescribed.

H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 84–99. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (1910), cols. 3037–44, s.v. 'Cendres', with bibl.

ASHERAH. A Hebrew feminine proper name, used in the OT of a *Canaanite goddess (1 Kgs. 15. 13, 2 Kgs. 21. 7 [RV]) and of the sacred pole erected as her symbol (1 Kgs. 16. 33, 2 Kgs. 13. 6 [RV]). (The AV consistently renders the word 'grove'; cf. LXX ἄλσος, Vulg. lucus.) The poles were set up near the Canaanite altars, which in early times were often built under green trees. The Israelites adopted them, along with other appurtenances of the pagan religion which they found in existence when they settled in Canaan, but their destruction was ordered in the Hebrew legislation (Deut. 7. 5, 12. 3).

P. Torge, Aschera und Astarte (1902). T. S. Frymer in Encyclopaedia Judaica, iii (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 703–5, s.v., with bibl.

ASKE, ROBERT (d. 1537), leader of the '*Pilgrimage of Grace' (q.v.). Descended from an old Yorkshire family, he became an attorney and Fellow of Gray's Inn. On 13 Oct. 1536 he put himself at the head of the 'Pilgrimage' when rebellion broke out in Yorkshire. After treating on equal terms with the royal leaders sent to suppress the rising and obtaining a safe-conduct to *Henry VIII, he returned northwards early in 1537 with a promise that the grievances would be redressed. A fresh outbreak provided a pretext for a change in the outwardly conciliatory attitude of the King, and by May 1537 Aske had been seized and found himself a prisoner in the Tower of London. He was charged and condemned at Westminster for high treason, taken back to the North, and in July 1537 hanged in chains at *York.

Aske's own account of his capture in Lincs., his examination, and other related documents preserved in the Public Record Office are ed. by Mary Bateson in E.H.R., v (1890), pp. 330–45 and 550–73. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., ii (1885), p. 189 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Pilgrimage of Grace.

ASKEW, ANNE (1521–46), Protestant martyr. Of Lincolnshire descent, she came under suspicion of heresy in 1545 on account of her beliefs about the Eucharist. Both Bp. E. *Bonner and Bp. S. *Gardiner examined her, with the purpose of making her recant, but without success. She was burnt at *Smithfield on 16 July 1546. For the facts, the chief authority is two tracts by J. *Bale.

The tracts are J. Bale, The First Examination of the worthy Servant of God, Mistress Anne Askew (Marburg, 1546); id., The Latter Examination of Anne Askew (ib., 1547); cf. also The Account of the Sufferings of Anne Askew . . . written by herself (London, 1849). Charles Wriothesley, A Chronicle of England during the Reigns of the Stuarts, ed. by W. D. Hamilton, i (Camden Society, Second Series, xi; 1875), pp. 155, 167–9. J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, ed. G. Townsend, v (1846), pp. 537–50.

ASPERGES. In the W. Church the ceremony of sprinkling *holy water over the altar and people during the principal Mass on Sundays. During the ceremony a chant from Ps. 51, 'Asperges me, Domine, hyssopo', &c. is ordinarily sung. In *Paschaltide this is replaced by '*Vidi Aquam'. The ceremony certainly goes back to the 9th cent., when it is referred to by *Hincmar of Reims in his 'Epistola synodica'. The sprinkler used for the purpose is known as the 'aspergillum', 'aspersorium', or 'goupillon'. The ceremony may now be omitted.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), pp. 476–80. C. Goeb, O.S.B., 'The Asperges' in Orate Fratres, ii (1927–8), pp. 338–42.

ASPERSION. The method of baptism whereby the candidate is merely sprinkled with the baptismal water. It is a variant of *affusion (in which the water is actually poured on the candidate), and is held to be permissible only in exceptional circumstances.

ASPIRANT. One who aspires to a vocation to the *religious life.

ASSEMANI (Syriac = 'Simon'). The family name of four famous *Maronite Orientalists of the 18th century.

(1) Joseph Simonius (1687–1768). He was a native of Tripoli in Syria, who entered the Maronite College at Rome in 1703. After being ordained priest he obtained a post at the *Vatican Library and was sent to collect MSS. in the East by Clement XI in 1715, and again in 1735. In 1736 he attended the first National Maronite Council, where he used his influence to bring his countrymen into closer connexion with Rome. Shortly afterwards he was nominated Abp. of Tyre and Prefect of the Vatican Library. His principal work, the Bibliotheca Orientalis (4 vols., 1719–28), is a collection of *Syriac documents, esp. on the history of the Churches of Syria, Chaldaea, and Egypt, by which Syriac literature was introduced into the West, and which, for great parts, has not been superseded. He also edited the works of St. *Ephraem Syrus, Opera Ephraemi (6 vols., 1732–46), with Latin and Greek translations, and this is still the only complete edition. Among his other works are the unfinished Kalendaria Ecclesiae Universae (6 vols., 1755), designed as a collection of texts, inscriptions, &c., on all the saints of the world, Italicae Historiae Scriptores (4 vols., 1751–1753), and the Bibliotheca Juris Orientalis Canonici et Civilis (5 vols., 1762–6).

(2) Stephen Evodius (1707–82), nephew of the former. He also studied at the Maronite College in Rome, was appointed missionary of the *Propaganda and travelled in Syria, Mesopotamia, and Egypt as well as in Europe, esp. in England. He assisted his uncle in cataloguing the MSS. of the Vatican Library. At the suggestion of *Benedict XIV he edited Bibliothecae Mediceae-Laurentianae et Palatinae Codicum MSS. Orientalium Catalogus (2 vols., 1742), Acta Sanctorum Martyrum Orientalium et Occidentalium (2 vols., 1748), and Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codicum MSS. Catalogus.

(3) Joseph Aloysius (1710–82). His precise relationship to Joseph Simonius is not clear. He was professor of Syriac, later of Liturgy, at the Sapienza in Rome and edited Codex Liturgicus Ecclesiae Universae (13 vols., 1749–66), a valuable collection for the study of the E. liturgies; Commentarius Criticus de Ecclesiis (1766); and Commentaria de Catholicis seu Patriarchis Chaldaeorum et Nestorianorum (1775).

(4) Simon (1752–1821). He was a grandnephew of Joseph Simonius. After studying at Rome, he went to Syria as a missionary. In 1785 he became professor of Oriental languages at the seminary of Padua, and in 1807 at Padua university. He published several works on Arabic subjects, among them an 'Essay on the Origin, Cult, Literature, and Customs of the Arabs before Mohammed' (1787) and the 'Catalogue of the Naniana Library' (2 vols., 1787–92), both in Italian, containing important MS. extracts and essays on Arabic literature, coins, &c.

(1) J. Notain Daraunis (ed.), Series Chronologica Patriarcharum Antiochiae per Josephum Simonium Assemanum . . . (1881), pp. 1–11. J. Debs, Kitâb tarikh Sûriya, Part 4, vol. viii (Beirut, 1905), pp. 553–68. G. Levi della Vida, Ricerche sulla formazione del più antico fondo dei manoscritti orientali della Bibliotheca Vaticana (S.T., xcii; 1939), passim. P. Mahfoud, Joseph Simon Assimani et la Célébration du Concile libanais maronite de 1736. Traduction française des mémoires d'un témoin avec introduction et notes (Corona Lateranensis, 5; 1965).
(2) J. Debs, op. cit., pp. 568–70. G. Levi della Vida, op. cit., passim.
(3 and 4) J. Debs, op. cit., p. 570 f.
L. Petit, A.A., in D.A.C.L., i (1907), cols. 2973–80, s.vv.; P. Stair in E.C., i (1949), cols. 159–61, s.vv., both with bibl.

ASSEMBLIES OF THE FRENCH CLERGY (Assemblées du Clergé de France). The quinquennial meetings of representatives of the Catholic clergy which from the end of the 16th cent. were an established institution in France. They endured, after the secular States General had been discontinued, until the Revolution. Their functions were primarily to apportion the very heavy financial burdens laid on the clergy by the king, and incidentally to discuss ecclesiastical affairs. A very elaborate and successful technique of procedure enabled them to exercise considerable financial influence. In 1682 they incurred the disapproval of *Innocent XI by approving and adopting, at the behest of Louis XIV, the '*Gallican Articles'.

Collection des Procès-verbaux des Assemblées-générales du Clergé de France, depuis l'année 1560, jusqu'à présent (10 vols., 1767–80). L. Serbat, Les Assemblées du Clergé de France. Origines, Organisation, Développement 1561–1615 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, cliv; 1906). M. Marion in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), cols. 1103–14, s.v. 'Assemblées du Clergé'.

ASSENT, Declaration of. A legal undertaking imposed upon the clergy of the C of E at *Ordination (to both the diaconate and the priesthood), and on entering upon certain specified ecclesiastical offices. By it assent is required to the Book of *Common Prayer, the *Ordinal, and the *Thirty-Nine Articles, in place of the formal subscription demanded before 1865. Assent is generally understood to imply a less definite form of adherence than subscription, but there is apparently no official explanation of precisely what it involves. Perhaps the term may be explained as an undertaking to refrain from teaching anything directly opposed to the standard of doctrine implied, without requiring positive agreement in detail in one's personal opinions. The previous formula, demanding 'that he acknowledgeth all and every the articles . . . being in number nine and thirty', was significantly omitted in 1865. An even less rigid form was introduced in 1975.

ASSES, Feast of (Lat. Festum asinorum). A religious celebration formerly observed at *Christmas (or in some cases on 14 Jan.) in certain French towns (e.g. Rouen, Beauvais), at which the prophecy of Balaam's ass (Num. 22) or alternatively the Flight of the Holy Family into Egypt (Mt. 2. 13–15) was dramatically represented.

T. J. Crowley in C.E., i (1907), p. 798 f., s.v., with reff.

ASSISI. The city in the Umbrian Hills, famous as the birthplace of St. *Francis. At one end of the town is the huge three-storeyed *basilica of San Francesco (1228–53, with the remains of the saint) and at the other, the much smaller one wherein is the body of St. *Clare. A further basilica, Sta. Maria degli Angeli, some 2 to 3 miles to the SW, shelters the little chapel known as the *Portiuncula, where the Franciscan Order originated. Other famous shrines in the neighbourhood are 'San Damiano', the 11th-cent. chapel and the 13th-cent. convent in which St. Clare lived, and the 'Eremo delle Carceri', a favourite retreat of St. Francis in the mountains.

A. Cristofani, Storia della città d'Assisi (1866); L. D. Gordon, The Story of Assisi ('Mediaeval Towns Series', 1900). A. Fortini, Assisi nel Medio Evo. Leggende, Avventure, Battaglie (1940), and other works of this author. B. Kleinschmidt, O.F.M., Die Basilika San Francesco in Assisi (3 vols., 1915–28).

ASSIZES OF JERUSALEM, The. The series of law-books which state the customary law of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem and were compiled by various authors (notably John of Ibelin) at various dates from 1197 onwards. Their ultimate source was the feudal customs of Western Europe at the time of the First *Crusade; the Livre au Roi (compiled 1197–1205) best represents the customs of the 12th cent. Kingdom, in which the monarchy was relatively strong, but the remaining texts describe the institutions of its 13th cent. successor, and reflect the interests of the nobility.

Text ed. G. Thaumas de La Thaumassière (Bourges, 1690); excerpts repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clv, 397–430; also ed. E. H. Kausler (vol. i; Stuttgart, 1839; no more publ.); standard ed. publd. by le Comte Beugnot ('Recueil des historiens des croisades', 2 vols., Paris, 1841–3). F. Monnier, 'Godfrey de Bouillon et les assises de Jérusalem' in Séances et travaux de l'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, c (1873), pp. 73–105, 663–94, and ci, N.S. i (1874), pp. 444–93; M. Grandclaude, Étude critique sur les livres des assises de Jérusalem (1923).

ASSOCIATIONS, Law of. The law promulgated by the French government on 1 July 1901, acc. to which no religious congregations, male or female, could be formed without authorization from the State. The congregations which had been recognized in the past were to be allowed to continue, provided they drew up an annual list of their members, property, and financial status which was to be submitted to the government authorities on request. On the other hand, the authorization of any congregation could be annulled by simple decree of the Council of Ministers, and new foundations of authorized congregations were subject to the permission of the Council of State. All congregations that had not been authorized in the past were declared dissolved, and severe punishments enacted for any circumvention of the law. In the following years the legislation became even more hostile. In 1902 congregations were forbidden to carry on any educational activities whatever. The men's orders then went into exile, while most of the women's transformed themselves into nursing congregations. The final consequence of this legislation was the complete break between Church and State in France in 1905.

Text in the Journal officiel for 2 July 1901, pp. 4025–7; an addendum, making its terms more stringent, ib. 5 Dec. 1902, p. 7901. The law which provoked the final break in 1905 ('Loi concernant la séparation des Églises et de l'État') is printed, ib., 11 Dec. 1905, pp. 7205–9. Extracts in Mirbt, No. 646, pp. 499–501, with bibl.

ASSUMPTION OF THE BVM, The. The belief that the BVM, having completed her earthly life, was in body and soul assumed into heavenly glory ('Immaculatam Deiparam semper Virginem Mariam, expleto terrestris vitae cursu, fuisse corpore et anima ad caelestem gloriam assumptam'; definition Munificentissimus Deus* of 1950).

It is now generally agreed that the belief was unknown in the earliest ages of the Church St. *Ambrose (Exposit. Evan. sec. Luc., 2. 35; PL, xv, 1574) and St. *Epiphanius (Haer., lxxix, 11; PG, xlii, 716) were apparently still ignorant of it. It is first met with in certain NT apocrypha dating from the later 4th cent. onwards, some of them *Gnostic in sympathy. These texts, which bear such titles as 'The Passing Away of Mary' and 'The Obsequies of Mary', survive in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic and are assigned in the MSS. to various authors, e.g. to St. *John the Evangelist and St. *Melito of Sardis. They record the death of the BVM at *Jerusalem amid varying miraculous circumstances, in some cases alleging that her body was assumed on the way to the burial, in others that it was raised after three days. The date of the Virgin's death is variously assigned, e.g. to three or fifty years after the Ascension. It appears that one such work was condemned in the Decretum Gelasianum, though the condemnation may have been directed against its Gnostic teachings rather than specifically against the doctrine of the corporal assumption. A homily attributed in most MSS. to Timothy of Jerusalem (prob. 4th–5th cent.) may imply the alternative belief that the BVM was assumed in body and soul during her natural life.

The doctrine of the corporal assumption was first formulated in orthodox circles in the W. by St. *Gregory of Tours (d. 594), who accepted as historical the account attributed in MSS. to Melito. In the E. a passage in *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite's Concerning the Divine Names (5th–6th cent.) was taken by *Andrew of Crete (d. 740) to mean that *Dionysius (the presumed disciple of St. *Paul) had witnessed the assumption, while the writings of St. *Germanus of Constantinople and other 7th cent. authors testify to the acceptance of the doctrine by this period. In the next cent. St. *John Damascene related that at the Council of *Chalcedon, *Juvenal, Bp. of Jerusalem, had told the Emp. Marcian and his wife *Pulcheria, who wished to possess the body of the BVM, that her death had been witnessed by all the Apostles, but that when her tomb was later opened, it was found empty. This account, which claimed the authority of Dionysius, presented the doctrine as ancient Catholic tradition; it was of particular influence in the West because of its inclusion from the 16th cent. in the Roman Breviary among the lessons for the Feast of the Octave of the Assumption.

Feasts celebrating the death of the BVM were observed in Palestine during the 5th cent., possibly at *Antioch in the 4th cent. The Greek Church was, however, divided as to the date between 18 Jan. (associating it with the *Epiphany) and 15 Aug. (prob. connecting it with the dedication of some church in her honour), until the Emp. Maurice (582–603) ordered that the latter date should be observed. In Rome, unless the Mass for the BVM given under 15 Aug. in the *Gelasian Sacramentary (which does not mention any corporal assumption) be original, it appears that one general feast in honour of Our Lady was observed until the last years of the 7th cent., viz. on 1 Jan. The Byzantine feasts of the BVM, incl. that of the Assumption, seem to have been introduced in the time of Pope *Sergius I (687–701). From Rome they spread to the countries of the Gallican rite, where a feast of Our Lady had previously been kept on 18 Jan. (the other E. date); and by the end of the 8th cent. the feast of the Assumption was universally observed in the W. on 15 Aug. In 847 Pope *Leo IV ordered that the octave be kept and in 863 *Nicholas I made the feast equal to those of *Easter, *Christmas, and *Whitsunday. In the C of E the feast disappeared from the BCP in 1549, and has not been officially restored. It has been retained, however, in the Oxford University Calendar, and is now observed in many places.

The doctrine was prob. first upheld on grounds of deductive theology in an 8th or 9th cent. letter attributed to St. *Augustine (PL, xl, 1141–8) and was later defended by St. *Albertus Magnus, St. *Thomas Aquinas, and St. *Bonaventure. *Benedict XIV declared it a probable opinion. In answer to repeated demands to the Popes from 1870 onwards, on 1 Nov. 1950 Pope *Pius XII in Munificentissimus Deus defined the doctrine and provided a new Mass for the Feast. The Mass was further changed in 1969. In the E. Church belief in the corporal assumption of the BVM is general, though prob. in terms less precise than those of the Roman definition. It is there known as the Koimesis (lit. 'falling asleep').

O. Faller, S.J., De Priorum Saeculorum Silentio circa Assumptionem B. Mariae Virginis (Analecta Gregoriana, xxxvi, Sectio A, n. 5; 1946). M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 194–227, incl. Eng. tr. of main texts, with reff. to original edd. F. Cavallera, 'A propos d'une enquête patristique sur l'Assomption' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, xxvii (1926), pp. 97–116. Sermons by James of Serûg and James, Bp. of Birta, ed. A. *Baumstark, 'Zwei syrische Dichtungen auf das Entschlafen der allerseligsten Jungfrau' in Oriens Christianus, v (1905), pp. 82–125. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'La Fête de l'Assomption dans l'histoire liturgique' in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, iii (1926), pp. 33–45; id., 'La Fête de la Vierge à Jérusalem au Ve siècle' in Le Muséon, lvi (1943), pp. 1–33; id., 'La Messe gallicane de l'Assomption, son rayonnement, ses sources' in Miscellanea Liturgica in Honorem L. Cunibert Mohlberg, i (1948), pp. 33–59; V. Grumel, 'Le Mois de Marie des Byzantins' in E.O., xxxv (1932), pp. 257–69; A. Raes, S.J., 'Aux origines de la fête de l'Assomption' in O.C.P., xii (1946), pp. 262–74. Duchesne, L.P., i (1886), p. 376. A. Wenger, A.A., L'Assomption de la T.S. Vierge dans la tradition byzantine du VIe au Xe siècle. Études et documents (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, vi; 1955), with extensive reff. C. Piana, O.F.M., Assumpio Beatae Virginis Mariae apud Scriptores saec. XIII (1942). M. Jugie, A.A., La Mort et l'assomption de la Sainte Vierge. Étude historico-doctrinale (S.T., cxiv; 1944), with reff. G. Hentrich and R. G. de Moos (edd.), Petitiones de Assumptione Corporea B.V. Mariae in Caelum Definienda ad Sanctam Sedem Delatae (Rome, 2 vols., 1942). V. Bennett–R. Winch, The Assumption of Our Lady and Catholic Theology (1950). F. *Heiler (ed.), Das neue Mariendogma im Lichte der Geschichte und im Urteil der Oekumene (Oekumenische Einheit, 1951, Heft 2; Munich, 1951). H. S. Box in E. L. Mascall–H. S. Box (edd.), The Blessed Virgin Mary (1963), pp. 89–102. Good survey of lit. to date by F. Heiler, 'Assumptio. Werke zur Dogmatisierung der leiblichen Himmelfahrt Marias' in T.L.Z., lxxix (1954), cols. 1–52. H. F. Davis in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 170–9, s.v. See also bibl. to Munificentissimus Deus.

ASSUMPTION OF MOSES, The. See Moses, The Assumption of.

ASSUMPTIONISTS (Augustinians of the Assumption). A religious congregation, founded at Nîmes in 1843 for the active religious life, and approved in 1864 by *Pius IX. Its members follow a modification of the *Augustinian rule. They have spread to many parts of the world, esp. since 1900, when their congregations in France were dispersed by state decree. Their work includes the care of asylums and schools, the dissemination of literature, and missionary work in many parts of the world. Several ancillary orders and confraternities have been formed to support their work. Their house at *Constantinople has esp. fostered the study of the theology and institutions of the E. Church, notably through its review, Échos d'Orient (1897 ff.), and a group of notable scholars (L. Petit, E. Bouvy, F. Cayré, M. Jugie, S. Salaville).

J. Monval, Les Assomptionnistes (1939). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 384–6. R. Janin, A.A., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 947 f.; M. Lombard in D.H.G.E., i (1930), cols. 1136–42, s.v.

ASSYRIAN CHRISTIANS. A small group of Christians of *Nestorian sympathies who have survived to modern times in the Middle East and U.S.A. The name derives from their supposed descent from the Assyrians of Nineveh. Acc. to tradition they were converted to Christianity by St. *Thomas, but the earliest fact certainly known about them is the protection which they afforded to Nestorius after his excommunication at the Council of *Ephesus (431). They held Nestorius in high regard, but claim that they never adopted his heresies and called themselves Nestorians only for political reasons to identify themselves with those who opposed the Church of Rome. After the Moslem invasion of the Middle East they were able to maintain their faith in the mountainous regions of North Kurdistan, where they came to enjoy considerable local autonomy. In 1885 the Abp. of Canterbury, E. W. *Benson, sent out a Mission to Qudshanis (then seat of the Assyrian Patriarchate) to assist the Assyrians in educational and other ways. Partly because of the influence of the 'Archbishop of Canterbury's Mission' they joined the Anglo-Russian side during the First World War and were forced by the Turks to evacuate their country. They were temporarily restored to Kurdistan after 1918 but were again driven out by the Turks and are now exiles in Syria, Iraq, Lebanon, and the U.S.A. A considerable Assyrian community also existed in W. Iran from early times. In the 6th cent. missionaries from the Assyrian Church penetrated as far East as China, and it is possible that *Prester John was a Nestorian Khan. Mongol invasions later confined this missionary Church to N. Mesopotamia.

The language of the Assyrians, liturgical and colloquial, is a form of Syriac akin to *Aramaic, written in East Syrian script. Their liturgies include the primitive rite of '*Addai and Mari' (prob. pre-431), which, with other liturgical texts, was printed at Urmi by the Archbishop of Canterbury's Mission in 1889. Among their literary possessions is the Syriac version of Nestorius's 'Bazaar of Heracleides', originally brought to notice by H. Goussen in 1897 and first published in 1910 by P. Bedjan (Syriac) and F. Nau (Greek). The present Patriarch lives in San Francisco.

W. A. Wigram, An Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church . . . 100–640 A.D. (1910); W. A. Wigram–E. T. A. Wigram, The Cradle of Mankind (1914; ed. 2 with additional chapter on the part of the Assyrians during the First World War, 1922). W. A. Wigram, Our Smallest Ally (1920). H. C. Luke, Mosul and its Minorities (1925), pp. 56–103. W. A. Wigram, The Assyrians and their Neighbours (1929). See also works cited s.v. Nestorianism.

ASTERISCUS (Gk. ἀστερίσκος, from ἀστήρ, 'a star'). In the Byzantine rites, a utensil consisting of two metal strips crossed and bent and placed over the blessed bread during the Liturgy to keep it from contact with the veil that covers it.

ASTERIUS (d. after 341), the 'Sophist', *Arian theologian. He was a pupil of *Lucian of Antioch and was present at the Council of *Antioch of 341. Besides his 'Syntagmation', of which fragments are preserved by St. *Athanasius and *Marcellus of Ancyra, Asterius wrote commentaries and homilies on the Pss., of which considerable portions have been recently recovered by M. Richard and E. Skard. His work throws important light on the early interests and methods of the Arian school.

His writings are listed by St. *Jerome, De Vir. Ill., 94. Commentary on Psalms and Homilies, ed. M. Richard (Symbolae Osloenses. Fasc. Supplet., xvi; 1956; Index by E. Skard, ibid., xvii; 1962). G. Bardy, 'Astérius le Sophiste' in R.H.E., xxii (1926), pp. 221–72; id., Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936), pp. 316–57; E. Skard, 'Asterios von Amaseia und Asterios der Sophist' in Symbolae Osloenses, xx (1940), pp. 86–132; cf. ib., xxv (1947), pp. 80–2, and ib., xxvii (1949), pp. 54–69. H. auf der Maur, Die Osterhomilien des Asterios Sophistes als Quelle für die Geschichte der Osterfeier (Trierer Theologische Studien xix; Trier, 1967), with bibl.

ASTROLOGY. The study of the supposed influence of the stars upon human fortunes. In modern usage the term is confined to 'judicial astrology', i.e. the 'science' which professes to forecast the fortunes of a man, e.g. from the positions of the stars at the moment of his birth. Astrology was much practised in the ancient world, but the influence of Christian teaching, as illustrated in St. *Augustine, De Civ. Dei, v. 1–8, suppressed it in the Empire, until in the 13th cent. it re-entered the West through Jewish and Arabic scholars, who for centuries had studied it in the East. The 16th cent. was the period when its influence was most powerful in Europe, among Catholics and Protestants alike. The scepticism of the 18th cent., with the growth of scientific knowledge, greatly reduced its popularity; and in England its credit was much shaken by a satirical pamphlet by J. *Swift, called Prediction for the Year 1708. In the present century the growth of unbelief and superstition has encouraged the revival of astrology in certain quarters.

ASTRUC, JEAN (1684–1766), physician and Pentateuchal critic. The son of a Protestant pastor, he was converted at an early age to Catholicism. In 1710 he was appointed to a medical professorship at Toulouse, and in 1717 at Montpellier. In 1729 he was nominated physician to the King of Poland, in 1730 to Louis XV of France, and in 1731 professor at the royal college at Paris. In 1753 he published anonymously his celebrated work Conjectures sur les Mémoires originaux dont il paroît que Moyse s'est servi pour composer le Livre de la Genèse, in which he maintained that in its present form the Book of Genesis was a piecing together of earlier documents. He based this view on the varying use of '*Elohim' and '*Jehovah' for the Divine name, and on the duplication of narratives. He did not dispute that it was *Moses who brought the documents together. Astruc also wrote a Dissertation sur l'immortalité et sur l'immatérialité de l'âme (1755).

An adapted Germ. tr. of the Conjectures was publd. at Frankfurt a. M. in 1783. A. Lods, Jean Astruc et la critique biblique au XVIIIe siècle (1924). J. de Savignac, 'L'Œuvre et la Personnalité de Jean Astruc' in Nouvelle Clio, v (1953), pp. 138–47. E. Böhmer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 162–70, s.v. Astruc's many medical publications do not call for mention here.

ASYLUM, Right of. See Sanctuary.

ATHANASIAN CREED, The. A profession of faith widely used in Western Christendom, and also known from its opening words as the 'Quicunque Vult'. It differs from the *Apostles' and *Nicene Creeds in form, as well as in embodying *anathemas, and is not a recognized standard of faith in the E., though it has appeared (without the *Filioque clause) in the Greek *Horologium since c. 1780 and in Russian service books from the 17th cent. Of the Protestant bodies, some (notably the *Lutherans) retain it as a statement of faith; the old *Breviary ordered its recitation at *Prime on most Sundays; and in the Anglican BCP (where it is printed immediately before the Litany) it replaces the Apostles' Creed at Morning Prayer on thirteen holydays, chosen apparently as being at roughly equal intervals apart.

The attribution to St. *Athanasius has been generally abandoned since the researches of G. J. *Voss (1642), chiefly on the ground that the Creed contains doctrinal expressions which arose only in later controversies. Not only is there no early authority for ascribing it to him, but it was evidently composed in Latin, not in Greek, and till modern times it has circulated solely in the W. Most recent scholars incline to the view that it originated in S. Gaul, prob. in the region of *Lérins, although earlier this century the thesis of H. Brewer, S.J., that it was the work of St. *Ambrose, enjoyed considerable vogue. A Gallic origin is confirmed by the fact that the creed first appears in a sermon of St. *Caesarius of Arles and by the remarkable correspondences between it and the recently discovered Excerpta of St. *Vincent of Lérins. The date of the Creed is equally disputed. It used to be held that the terminology employed pointed to a time when the controversy over *Apollinarianism was acute and before the outbreak of the *Nestorian and *Eutychian heresies; a date between 381 and 428 was generally accepted. More recently J. N. D. Kelly has argued that the Christological heresy attacked was not Apollinarianism but Nestorianism, and that therefore the Creed was composed after 428.

Its subject-matter falls into two halves, which expound respectively the doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation. To the latter is added a list of the important events of the Lord's redeeming work in a form resembling that of the Apostles' Creed. The creed is prefaced and concluded with the assertion that belief in the truths it asserts is necessary to salvation.

Since 1867 many efforts have been made in the C of E to have it removed from the service, or truncated, especial objection being made to the 'damnatory clauses' (vv. 2 and 42), but conservative opinion has generally held that, even if it may be considered desirable in the abstract that certain expressions should be explained or retranslated, in present circumstances any alteration would give the impression that something of the traditional faith was being surrendered; and in fact no alteration has been made. The BCP version, however, is in places inaccurate and misleading, partly because of mistranslation, and partly because the Reformers based their rendering on an inaccurate text. In the Anglican Churches outside England its use in worship has been considerably restricted, or even abandoned.

A. E. Burn, The Athanasian Creed ('Oxford Church Text Books', 1912). Fuller treatment, with discussion of authorship, in G. D. W. Ommanney, Early History of the Athanasian Creed (1880); A. E. Burn, The Athanasian Creed and Early Commentaries (Texts and Studies, iv, No. 1; Cambridge, 1896). G. D. W. Ommanney, A Critical Dissertation on the Athanasian Creed (1897). The standard work now is J. N. D. Kelly, The Athanasian Creed. The Paddock Lectures for 1962–3 (1964). H. Brewer, S.J., Das sogenannte Athanasianische Glaubensbekenntnis ein Werk des hl. Ambrosius (1909). G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'A propos du Quicumque. Extraits d'homélies de S. Césaire d'Arles sous le nom de S. Athanase' in R. Bén., xxviii (1911), pp. 417–24. J. Stiglmayr, S.J., 'Das Quicunque und Fulgentius von Ruspe' in Z.K.T., xlix (1925), pp. 341–57 [Ath. Creed, work of Fulgentius]. A. E. Burn, 'The Authorship of the Quicumque Vult' in J.T.S., xxvii (1925–6), pp. 19–28. G. Morin, O.S.B., 'L'Origine du symbole d'Athanase: témoignage inédit de S. Césaire d'Arles' in R. Bén. xliv (1932), pp. 207–219. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 177–94; J. [Giuseppe] Madoz, S.J., in E.C. x (1953), col. 411 f., s.v. 'Quicumque Vult', with bibl.

ATHANASIUS, St. (c. 296–373), Bp. of *Alexandria. Probably educated at the *Catechetical School in his native city, he became deacon and secretary to *Alexander, Bp. of Alexandria, and attended him at the Council of *Nicaea (325), succeeding him as bishop in 328. By his refusal to compromise with *Arianism he incurred the enmity of the powerful Arianizing party in the reigns of *Constantine and Constantius. They procured his deposition and exile to Trier in 336; he returned on the death of Constantine in 337; but in 339 he was forced to flee to *Rome, where he established close contacts with the W. Church, which continued throughout his life to support him. He was restored in 346 by the influence of Constans, the Western Emperor, against the will of Constantius, who in 356 again drove him from the see. He remained in hiding near Alexandria till the accession of *Julian (361), who, however, exiled him again in 362. He returned on Julian's death in 363, and, after yet another brief exile (365–6), helped for the rest of his life to build up the new Nicene party by whose support orthodoxy triumphed over Arianism at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. He died at Alexandria on 2–3 May 373. See also Melitian Schism (1).

Before c. 318, while still in his twenties, he wrote two short treatises, the second of them the famous 'De Incarnatione'. In it he expounds how God the Word (Logos), by His union with manhood, restored to fallen man the image of God in which he had been created (Gen. 1. 27), and by His death and resurrection met and overcame death, the consequence of sin. (Some scholars, however, date the two treatises 15–20 years later.) As bishop he was the greatest and most consistent theological opponent of Arianism. From 339 to 359 he wrote a series of works in defence of the faith proclaimed at Nicaea—viz. the true deity of God the Son—both meeting the Arians in theological controversy and exposing the tricks of their ecclesiastical politics. From about 361 onwards he especially sought the reconciliation of the large semi-Arian party to the Nicene term homoousios ('of one substance'), which they were reluctant to accept. The Council of Alexandria (362), under his direction, greatly furthered this end, by clearing up misunderstandings of the terms ὑπόστασις (translated 'person') and οὐσία ('substance'). He was also concerned to uphold the deity of the Holy Spirit and the full manhood of Christ against *Macedonian and *Apollinarian tendencies. As the friend of the monks *Pachomius and *Serapion, and the biographer of *Antony, he aided the ascetic movement in Egypt and he was the first to introduce knowledge of monasticism to the W. His resolute character as well as his theology was the outstanding obstacle to the triumph of Arianism in the E. Feast-day, 2 May.

Ed. princeps of Gk. text 'ex officina Commeliniana', 2 vols., Heidelberg, 1600–1. All earlier edd. superseded by the Maurist text, ed. B. *Montfaucon, 3 vols., Paris, 1698; repr., with additions, by N. A. Giustiniani, Bp. of Padua, 4 vols., Padua, 1777; with further additions in J. P. Migne, PG, xxv–xxviii. Crit. text ed. H. G. Opitz [–W. Schneemelcher and

M. Tetz] for the Berlin Academy, in progress, Berlin, 1934 ff. Sep. edd. of De Incarnatione by A. *Robertson (London, 1882; ed. 2, 1893), F. L. Cross (ib., 1939), and, with Fr. tr. by C. Kannengiesser (S.C., cxcix; 1973), and, with Contra Gentes, by P. T. Camelot, O.P. (S.C., xviii; 1947) and R. W. Thomson (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1971); of Orations against Arians by W. *Bright (Oxford, 1873) and Historical Writings by id. (ib., 1881); of the Apologies by J. M. Szymusiak, S.J. (S.C., lvi; 1958); and of Five Homilies, Expositio fidei and Sermo Maior by H. Nordberg (Societas Scientiarum Fennica. Commentationes Humanarum Litterarum, xxx. 2; Helsinki, 1962); of Contra Gentes by L. Leone (Collana di Studi greci, xliii; Naples, 1965). Syriac text of Festal Epp. ed. W. *Cureton (London, 1848); Coptic text ed. L. T. Lefort (C.S.C.O., cl, with Lat. tr., cli; 1955). Syriac texts of other works, with Eng. tr., ed. as Athanasiana Syriaca by R. W. Thomson (ib., cclvii, cclviii, cclxxii; cclxxiii; 1965–7). On the text, H. G. Opitz, Untersuchungen zur Überlieferung der Schriften des Athanasius (1935); indispensable. Eng. trr. of 'Select Treatises [against] the Arians' by J. H. *Newman (L.F., 2 vols., 1842–4; ed. 2, much revised, 1881); A. Robertson in N.P.N.C.F. (1892). Fr. tr. of Epp. to Serapion, with introd. and notes, by J. Lebon (S.C., xv; 1947); Eng. tr. by C. R. B. Shapland (London, 1951).

There is no contemporary Life. Important is the 'Vita Acephala' publd. in 1738 by F. S. *Maffei (q.v.). Brief modern Life by G. Bardy ('Les Saints', Paris, 1914); also F. Lauchert, Leben des heiligen Athanasius des Grossen (1911). J. A. *Mohler, Athanasius der Grosse und die Kirche seiner Zeit (2 vols., 1827; ed. 2, 1844); L. Atzberger, Der Logoslehre des hl. Athanasius (1880); H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (1882; ed. 2, 1900), passim; A. Stülcken, Athanasiana (T.U. xix. 4; 1899). Fundamental is series of papers by E. *Schwartz in Nachr. (Gött.) ('Zur Geschichte des Athanasius', various dates, 1904–11); collected and repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, iii (1959). F. L. Cross, The Study of St. Athanasius (1945; lecture). E. P. Meijering, Orthodoxy and Platonism in Athanasius. Synthesis or Antithesis? (Leiden, 1968). J. Roldanus, Le Christ et l'Homme dans la Théologie d'Athanase d'Alexandrie (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, iv; ib., 1968). P. Merendino, O.S.B., Paschale Sacramentum. Eine Untersuchung über die Osterkatechese des hl. Athanasius von Alexandrien in ihrer Beziehung zu den frühchristlichen exegetisch-theologischen Überlieferungen (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xlii; 1965). G. Mueller, Lexicon Athanasianum (Berlin, 1952). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 44–79; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 271–279, both with further bibl. For material on his life of St. Antony, see s.v. Antony, St.

ATHANASIUS, St. (c. 920–1003), the Athonite. A native of Trebizond, he became a monk in Bithynia, but migrated thence to Mount *Athos, where he established (961) the first of its famous monasteries (the *Lavra). His foundation, though resisted by the eremites already settled on Athos, prospered through the support of the Emperors Nicephorus Phocas and John Tzimisces (969–76). He became Abbot-General (πρῶτος) of all the communities on the Mount, of which 58, including Iveron, Vatopedi, and Esphigmenou, were in being by his death. Feast day, 5 July. (He is not to be confused with the Athanasius mentioned in the Roman Martyrology for this date, a 5th cent. deacon of *Jerusalem.)

His Typicon and Testament are pr. in P. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (1894), pp. 102–22 and 123–30 respectively. Early Gk. life by a monk named Athanasius, ed. J. Pomialovsky (St. Petersburg, 1895); further Gk. life, based on an earlier text, ed. L. Petit, A.A., in Anal. Boll., xxv (1906), pp. 5–89, with Fr. tr. by Hiéromoine Pierre in Irénikon, viii (1931), pp. 457–99, 667–89, ix (1932), pp. 71–95 and 240–64; also publ. separately, with notes, Chevetogne, 1963. P. Lemerle, 'La Vie ancienne de Saint Athanase l'Athonite composée au début du XIe Siècle par Athanase de Lavra' in Le Millénaire du Mont Athos 963–1963, i (Chevetogne, 1963), pp. 59–100. J. Leroy, O.S.B., 'Les deux vies de saint Athanase l'Athonite' in Anal. Boll., lxxxii (1964), pp. 409–29. Id., 'S. Athanase l'Athonite et la Règle de S. Benoît' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xxix (1953), pp. 108–22. R. Janin in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), cols. 1376 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Athos, Mt.

ATHEISM (from Gk. ἄθεος, 'without God'). The word was originally used in Greece of all those who, whether they believed in God or not, disbelieved in the official gods of the state. Of such men Socrates was the classic instance. In the Roman Empire the term was applied in a similar sense by the pagans to Christians, but sometimes Christians, like St. *Polycarp, would turn the term against their persecutors.

Until the expression '*agnosticism' came into general use in the 19th cent., the term 'atheist' was used, at least popularly, to describe also those who thought of the existence of God as an unprovable thesis. Of such there are three chief divisions: philosophical agnostics, materialists, and *pantheists. Any of these may be atheists in the strict sense of the word, but none need be. The philosophical agnostic normally says that the evidence is not sufficient to compel us either to assert or to deny the existence of God; but it is only if he adds further that the assertion of God's existence is meaningless, and not merely rash, that he is strictly to be called an atheist. The materialist, similarly, is strictly to be called an atheist only if he asserts that nothing can exist outside a closed system of matter; but often he will not say more than that for practical purposes it is necessary to treat the material world as a closed system. The pantheist view, also, has taken many forms; but it does not become truly atheistic until it makes its immanent divinity into such a limited being that he is no longer recognizable as God in any ordinary sense of the word.

The philosophical non-theist of the present day is most frequently either a 'logical positivist' (i.e. a particular kind of agnostic) or a materialist, and it is under these two headings that we must look for current atheism. The logical positivist holds that since assertions about God are not capable of empirical verification they are meaningless; and though he may escape the charge of formal atheism in the way already suggested, he is commonly virtually open to the charge. The atheism of present-day materialism is also often practical, not speculative. An exception must be made, however, in the case of the Dialectical Materialism of Communism, which is consciously and avowedly atheist.

R. Flint, Anti-Theistic Theories (Baird Lecture, 1879); F. A. Lange, Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart (1866; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1877–81); F. Mauthner, Der Atheismus und seine Geschichte im Abendlande (4 vols., 1920–3). A. B. Drachman, Atheism in Pagan Antiquity (1922). H. de Lubac, S.J., Le Drame de l'Humanisme athée (1945; Eng. tr., 1949). On the pagan attacks on the early Christians as 'atheists', see A. *Harnack, Der Vorwurf des Atheismus in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (T.U., xiii. 1; 1905). For a modern philosophical defence of Atheism, see J. Laird's Gifford Lectures, I, Theism and Cosmology (1940); II, Mind and Deity (1941). C. B. Upton in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 173–83; J. Murray, S.J., in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 182–9, s.v., with bibl.

ATHENAGORAS (2nd cent.), Christian *Apologist. He is described in the earliest MS. of his works as 'the Christian Philosopher of *Athens'. His 'Apology' or 'Supplication', addressed c. 177 to *Marcus Aurelius and his son Commodus, sought to rebut current calumnies against the Christians, viz. *atheism (cc. 4–30), Thyestian banquets and Oedipean incest (cc. 31–36). A treatise 'On the Resurrection of the Dead' has traditionally been ascribed to him, but the attribution has been challenged. In this work the author endeavours to refute objections (cc. 1–10) and then to defend the doctrine positively. As a writer Athenagoras was one of the ablest of the Apologists, lucid in style and forceful in argument. He was the first to elaborate a philosophical defence of the Christian doctrine of God as Three in One. He upheld the indissolubility of marriage, even by death.

The Gk. text is preserved in the 'Arethas Codex' (Par. gr. 451), written in A.D. 914, on which all the other MSS. depend. Ed. princeps by H. *Stephanus (Paris, 1557). Later edd. by P. *Maran (Paris, 1742; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, vi, 887–1024), E. *Schwartz in T.U., iv. 2 (1891), P. Ubaldi and M. Pellegrino (Corona Patrum Salesiana, Serie Greca xv; Turin, 1947) and, with Eng. tr., by W. R. Schoedel (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972). Eng. trr. in A.N.C.L. ii (1867), pp. 371–456, and by J. H. Crehan, S.J. (A.C.W., xxiii; 1956). A. Puech, Les Apologistes grecs du IIe siècle de notre ère (1912), pp. 172–206. E. J. Goodspeed, Die ältesten Apologeten (1914). H. A. Lucks, The Philosophy of Athenagoras. Its Sources and Value (Catholic University of America Philosophical Studies, xxxii; 1936). M. Pellegrino, Studi su l'antica apologetica (1947), pp. 67–105. R. M. Grant, 'Athenagoras or Pseudo-Athenagoras' in H.T.R., xlvii (1954), pp. 121–9. L. W. Barnard, Athenagoras. A Study in Second Century Christian Apologetic (Théologie historique, xviii [1972]). J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 229–36, with good bibl.

ATHENAGORAS (1886–1972), Patr. of *Constantinople. Born at Vasilikon near Ioannina in N. Greece, he studied at Constantinople in the Theological School at Halki (1903–10). In 1922 he became Metropolitan of Corfu and in 1930 Greek Abp. of N. and S. America, where he brought to an end a schism dividing the Greek Church in the U.S.A. and thoroughly reorganized the archdiocese. In 1948 he became *Oecumenical Patriarch. During his tenure of this office he did much to counteract attempts by the Patriarchate of Moscow to assume leadership in the Orthodox world. In his work as Patriarch he was inspired by two major aims: (1) closer co-operation between the *autocephalous Churches of the Orthodox communion: on his initiative the 'Panorthodox Conferences' met in Rhodes in 1961 and the years following; (2) better understanding between divided Christians: here his most striking achievements were his meeting with Pope *Paul VI at *Jerusalem in 1964, and the revocation of the *anathemas between Rome and Constantinople in 1965.

ATHENS. By the 1st cent. A.D. Athens had become a provincial city of the Roman Empire, important only for its schools of philosophy, to which upper-class Romans went as to a university. Its first known Christian connexion was the visit (prob. A.D. 51) of St. *Paul on his second missionary journey (Acts 17. 15–18. 1). His sermon to the *Epicureans and *Stoics, as given in Acts 17. 22–31, took the form of an academic discourse and the preacher evidently did not meet with his usual success. Among his few converts was St. *Dionysius the Areopagite (q.v.: 17. 34). Apart from this passage, the NT has no other references to Christianity at Athens, except the passing mention in 1 Thess. 3. 1.

The earliest evidence for a Christian community comes from the middle of the 2nd cent. Acc. to *Melito of Sardis (*Eusebius, H.E., IV. xxvi. 10), Antoninus Pius (138–61) endeavoured to check the unofficial, and possibly riotous, persecution of Christians in Athens and elsewhere. At or about this time Publius, Bp. of Athens, was martyred and the Church almost extinguished; but it was revived under his successor, Quadratus. Athens appears to have been one of the earliest centres of a philosophical interpretation of Christianity and was the home of the *Apologists, *Quadratus (prob. to be distinguished from the Bishop just mentioned), *Aristides, and *Athenagoras.

In the next centuries the history of the city was uneventful. The philosophical schools continued and the city was twice visited by *Origen, who is said to have combated an outbreak of heresy there. St. *Basil and St. *Gregory of Nazianzus both studied at Athens. In 529 *Justinian closed its schools as exponents of surviving paganism, and shortly afterwards the Parthenon and other temples were converted into churches. In the Byzantine period many churches and monasteries were built. After the Latin Conquest in 1204 (Fourth *Crusade) the Parthenon became the cathedral of a Western bishop using the Latin rite, while a Greek bishop and the Greek rite were allowed to continue in the lower town for the native population. When the city fell to the Turks (1456), its conquerors turned the Parthenon into a mosque, expelling all Western influence but tolerating, as elsewhere, the Greek Church. They remained in possession of the Acropolis until 1833 when the Kingdom of Greece was set up and the Orthodox Church of Greece became *autocephalous with Athens as the metropolitical see.

M. *Lequien, Oriens Christianus, ii (Paris, 1740), cols. 169–178, iii (1740), cols. 837–44. A. Mommsen, Athenae Christianae (Leipzig, 1868). F. *Gregorovius, Geschichte der Stadt Athen im Mittelalter von der Zeit Justinians bis zur türkischen Eroberung (2 vols., 1889). N. T. Philadelpheus, Ἱστορία τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἐπὶ Τουρκοκρατίας ἀπὸ τοῦ 1400 μέχρι τοῦ 1800 (2 vols., Athens, 1902). Ida T. Hill, The Ancient City of Athens. Its Topography and Monuments (1953). D. Sicilianos, Old and New Athens (revised Eng. tr., 1960: orig. Greek in three vols., 1953–5). V. Laurent, A.A., 'La Liste épiscopale de la métropole d'Athènes' in Mémorial Louis Petit (Bucarest, 1948), pp. 272–91. R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 15–42, s.v.

ATHON, JOHN. See Ayton, John.

ATHOS, Mount. The 'Holy Mountain'. The peninsula which projects into the Aegean Sea from the coast of Macedonia and terminates in Mount Athos has long been entirely the property of monasteries of the Eastern Orthodox Church. The first monastic settlement of which there is reliable evidence is the foundation of the monastery of the '*Lavra' by St. *Athanasius the Athonite in 961. There are now 20 virtually independent monasteries on the peninsula. Such matters as are of common concern to the whole mountain are legislated for by a council, made up of one representative from each monastery, and an executive committee of four members. The monasteries contain many valuable MSS. and works of art. A curious rule of the Athonite monks forbids women, or even female animals, to set foot on the peninsula.

R. Curzon, Visits to Monasteries in the Levant (1849), pt. 4, pp. 327–449. A. Riley, Athos, or the Mountain of the Monks (1887); P. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (1894). G. Smurnakes, Τὸ Ἅγιον Ὄρος (Athens, 1903); R. M. Dawkins, The Monks of Athos (1936). E. Amand de Mendieta, La Presqu'île des Caloyers. Le Mont-Athos (Bruges [1955]). P. Sherrard, Athos. The Mountain of Silence (1960). Le Millénaire du Mont Athos 963–1963. Études et mélanges (2 vols., Chevetogne [1963–4]), with bibl. G. Millet (ed.), Monuments de l'Athos: i, les peintures (Monuments de l'art byzantin, v, 1927). Archives de l'Athos (Paris, 1937 ff.). Catalogues of MSS. include S. P. Lambros, Catalogue of the Greek Manuscripts on Mount Athos (2 vols., Cambridge, 1895–1900) and those of S. Eustratiades–Arcadios (MSS. of the Monastery of Vatopedi; Harvard Theological Studies, Cambridge, Mass., xi, 1924) and Spyridon–S. Eustratiades (MSS. of the Lavra; ib., xii, 1925). G. A. Maloney in N.C.E., i (1967), pp. 1008–10, s.v.

ATONEMENT (i.e. 'at-one-ment'). In Christian theology, man's reconciliation with God through the sacrificial death of Christ.

The need for such reconciliation is implicit in the OT conception of God's absolute righteousness, to which nothing impure or sinful can approach. Its achievement is here represented as dependent on an act of God Himself, whether by the Divine appointment of the sacrificial system through which uncleanness, both ritual and moral, may be purged by the shedding of blood (cf. Heb. 9. 22), or, in a Prophetic view, by the future Divine gift of a New Covenant to replace the old covenant which sinful Israel has broken (Jer. 31. 31), or, in certain passages of the Book of Is., by the action of a Divinely-sent *Servant of the Lord who was 'wounded for our transgressions' and 'bare the sin of many' (Is. 53. 5, 12). But the Prophets also insisted that without repentance the offering of sacrifice for sins was futile (Is. 1. 10–17, Hos. 6. 6).

Christ Himself, like *John the Baptist, began His ministry with a call to universal repentance for sin (Mk. 1. 4, 15). While He proclaimed the uselessness of blood-sacrifices considered as a substitute for repentance (Mt. 9. 13), He spoke also of giving His life 'a ransom for many' (Mk. 10. 45) and at the institution of the *Eucharist declared the shedding of His blood to constitute 'the new covenant' (Lk. 22. 20, 1 Cor. 11. 25) and to be 'unto remission of sins' (Mt. 26. 28). He also applied to Himself the words of Is. 53 relating to the Suffering Servant (Lk. 22. 37). In St. *John's Gospel Christ is set forth as 'the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world' (Jn. 1. 29) and His death shown in a sacrificial light by being placed in juxtaposition to the sacrifice of the *Paschal Lamb at the *Passover (Jn. 19. 14, 36). Hence in the earliest Christian preaching His death was already proclaimed to be 'for our sins' (1 Cor. 15. 3) and His work expounded on the basis of Is. 53 (Acts 8. 32–35).

For the elaboration of the doctrine, the Church owed a unique debt to St. Paul. Christ's death and resurrection were the means by which we are redeemed from the effects of Law and its transgression, namely sin, from God's condemnation, and from death. By baptism the Christian mystically shares in Christ's death and His victory over it (viz. the resurrection), and acquires, by God's free gift, a new status of sonship or justification; and peace was made between God and man 'through the blood of His cross' (Col. 1. 20). Hence the death of Christ was a propitiation (ἱλαστήριον, Rom. 3. 25). Of the other NT writers, St. Peter speaks of our redemption 'with precious blood' (1 Pet. 1. 18 f.), and the author of Hebrews makes constant use of sacrificial language in the same connexion (cf. esp. ch. 9).

The Fathers took up and developed the doctrine of the NT, and posed problems which did not come within the purview of the Biblical writers. For *Origen the death of Christ was the ransom paid to Satan, who had acquired rights over man by the Fall. This view, though rejected by St. *Gregory of Nazianzus, was accepted with various modifications by many of the Latin Fathers, among them St. *Hilary of Poitiers, St. *Augustine, and St. *Leo. But while maintaining that the devil had rights over sinful man, the exponents of this doctrine also commonly stressed the other aspect, that in trying to exercise them on the sinless Christ he abused them, and was thus himself conquered by the power of the Resurrection. Another, and to modern ideas more congenial, doctrine is that God the Son, by taking our nature upon Him, has effected a change in human nature as such. It is typified in such a saying as St. *Athanasius' 'He became man that we might be made divine' (De Inc., 54). The general Patristic teaching is that Christ is our representative, not our substitute; and that the effect of His sufferings, His perfect obedience, and His resurrection extends to the whole of humanity and beyond.

In the 11th–12 cents. with St. *Anselm's Cur Deus Homo the emphasis shifted. The role of Satan receded and its place was taken by the idea of satisfaction. Sin, being an infinite offence against God, required a satisfaction equally infinite. As no finite being, man or angel, could offer such satisfaction, it was necessary that an infinite being, viz. God Himself, should take the place of man and, by His death, make complete satisfaction to Divine Justice. Hence the death of Christ was not a ransom paid to the devil but a debt paid to the Father. *Abelard, on the other hand, sought the explanation in terms of love. Christ's atoning death was effective primarily through its exemplary value, namely through the response of love that Calvary evoked in the sinner. This break with tradition, too radical to meet with much acceptance, was violently criticized by St. *Bernard. The later Scholastic teaching set out from Anselm. *Thomas Aquinas, while accepting Anselm's satisfactional view as a correct account of what took place, denied that the method of satisfaction was imperative. However 'convenient' the method, it had no intrinsic necessity, because God might have redeemed us without exacting full satisfaction. In the circumstances, however, the satisfaction was not only adequate but superabundant, for whereas the offence against God, being perpetrated by a finite being, was only morally infinite, the satisfaction, being the work of a divine Person, was objectively, as well as morally, infinite. This teaching, which became the current opinion among Catholic theologians, was challenged by the *Scotists and *Nominalists, who held that the Atonement was adequate, not because of its own intrinsic value, but because of its 'extrinsic acceptance' by God.

The Reformers, though leaving the core of the traditional doctrine intact, developed it in a different direction. M. *Luther rejected the Scholastic satisfaction theory and taught that Christ, in bearing by voluntary substitution the punishment due to man, was reckoned by God a sinner in his place. J. *Calvin went even further in teaching that the Saviour 'bore in His soul the tortures of a condemned and ruined man'. In reaction against the exaggerations of this 'penal theory' arose the doctrine, first defended by the *Socinians, which denied the objective efficacy of the Cross and looked upon the death of Christ as primarily an example to His followers. Notable modern exponents of this view in England were B. *Jowett and H. *Rashdall. More recently there has been a return to traditional views. The 'Patristic doctrine' has been persuasively upheld by G. *Aulén (Christus Victor, 1931), for whom it is the 'classical' idea of the redemption. Under the influence of the *Barthian theology there has been a renewed stress on the objectivity of the Atonement and a determination to put the Cross rather than the Manger at the centre of the Christian Creed. It should be added finally that there has never been any official formulation in orthodox Christianity of the mystery of the Lord's redemptive work and that there is every likelihood that a variety of emphases and interpretations will continue.

For the history of the doctrine, see J. Rivière, Le Dogme de la Rédemption: Essai d'Étude Historique (1905; Eng. trans., 1909); id., Le Dogme de la Rédemption. Études Critiques et Documents (1931); J. K. Mozley, The Doctrine of the Atonement (1915); R. S. Franks, The History of the Doctrine of the Work of Christ (2 vols., 1918); H. Rashdall, The Idea of Atonement in Christian Theology (1919); L. W. Grensted, A Short History of the Doctrine of the Atonement (1920). H. E. W. Turner, The Patristic Doctrine of Redemption. A Study of the Development of the Doctrine in the First Five Centuries (1952); id., The Meaning of the Cross (1959). L. Richard, Le Mystère de la Rédemption (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série I. Théologie dogmatique, i; 1959).

For the NT teaching, see J. *Denney, The Death of Christ. Its Place and Interpretation in the New Testament (1902); V. Taylor, Jesus and His Sacrifice. A Study of the Passion-Sayings in the Gospels (1937); id., The Atonement in New Testament Teaching (1940); id., Forgiveness and Reconciliation. A Study in New Testament Theology (1941); id., The Cross of Christ (1956); L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross (1955).

For systematic presentations, see J. McLeod Campbell, The Nature of the Atonement (1856); R. W. *Dale, The Atonement (1887; orthodox *Congregationalist); J. Scott Lidgett, The Spiritual Principle of the Atonement (1901); R. C. *Moberly, Atonement and Personality (1901; worked out on the basis of Vicarious Penitence, Anglican); P. T. Forsyth, The Work of Christ (1910); J. Rivière, Le Dogme de la Rédemption. Étude théologique (1914; RC); J. Denney, The Christian Doctrine of Reconciliation (1917; posthumous); The Atonement in History and in Life, ed. by L. W. Grensted (1929; Anglican Liberal Evangelical); H. Maynard Smith, Atonement (1925); K. E. Kirk, 'The Atonement', in Essays Catholic and Critical (1926; Anglican); The Atonement. Papers from the Summer School of Catholic Studies held at Cambridge, July 31–Aug. 9, 1926 (1928); R. S. Franks, The Atonement (1934); E. *Brunner, Der Mittler (1927; Eng. tr., The Mediator, 1934); id., Das Gebot und die Ordnung (1932; Eng. tr., The Divine Imperative, 1937); L. S. Thornton, C.R., The Doctrine of the Atonement (1937); O. C. *Quick, The Gospel of the New World (1944). L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Atonement (Hale Lectures, 1950; 1951); S. Lyonnet, S.J., De Peccato et Redemptione (Theologia Biblica Novi Testamenti; Rome, 1957 ff.), with reff. R. S. Paul, The Atonement and the Sacraments. The Relation of the Atonement to the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper (Nashville, 1960; London, 1961; Congregationalist). F. W. Dillistone, The Christian Understanding of Atonement (1968; Anglican).

ATONEMENT, Day of. The annual Jewish fast day (יום הכפרים, ἡμέρα ἐξιλασμοῦ) which falls on the 10th day of the 7th month (Tishri), i.e. roughly in Oct. It is commonly called 'Yom Kippur'. Its observance is regulated by Lev. 16. 23, 27–32, and Num. 29. 7–11 (acc. to the critical view of the OT, all post-Exilic). Its purpose is the cleansing of sanctuary, priesthood, and people from sin and the re-establishment of good relations between God and His chosen ones. It is the only fast which the Mosaic Law provides. Much of the ritual ordered in the OT has necessarily lapsed, e.g. the entry of the priest into the Holy of Holies in the *Temple, the offering of incense before the Mercy Seat and its sprinkling with blood, and the scapegoat for *Azazel dispatched to the wilderness. The basis of present observance is to be found in the Tractate 'Yoma' of the *Mishnah, wholly devoted to the subject. The Day is still observed by strict abstinence from food, and many Jews who rarely attend public worship on other occasions attend the synagogue. The imagery of the Day of Atonement deeply influenced the NT author of the Ep. to the Heb., who saw in Christ the Great High Priest whose Atonement on the Cross abolished the need for the annual repetition of the observance.

S. Landersdorfer, Studien zum biblischen Versöhnungstag (1924). I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913), pp. 149–54. A. Z. Idelsohn, 'The Kol Nidre Tune' in Hebrew Union College Annual, viii–ix (1931–2), pp. 493–509. J. Morgenstern, 'Two Prophecies from the Fourth Century B.C. and the Evolution of Yom Kippur', ib., xxiv (1952–3), pp. 1–74. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 415–20, with bibl. p. 459 f.; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 507–10, with bibl. p. 552. S. R. *Driver–H. A. White in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 199–202, s.v., and M. D. Herr–J. Milgrom in Encyclopaedia Judaica, v (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1376–87. s.v. 'Day of Atonement'.

ATRIUM. The main court of the Roman house. From an early date the word was used of the forecourt attached to Christian churches, which usually consisted of a colonnaded quadrangle with a fountain in the middle. It was connected with the interior of the church by a *narthex or portico, which ran the length of one side, and by which from c. the 6th cent. it was replaced as the main way of approach from without. An atrium with porticoes attached to the church erected by St. *Paulinus at Tyre is described by *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., x. iv. 39).

ATTERBURY, FRANCIS (1662–1732), Bp. of *Rochester. He was a Tory High Churchman. After some years of academic controversy at Christ Church, Oxford, he became Lecturer of St. Bride's, London, chaplain to William III and Mary, and preacher at Bridewell Hospital. In his (anonymous) Letter of a Convocation Man (1697) and his Rights and Privileges of an English Convocation Stated and Vindicated (1700), he became the champion of *Convocation against the Crown and of the inferior clergy against the bishops. In 1701 he became Archdeacon of Totnes, in 1704 Dean of Carlisle, in 1711 Dean of Christ Church, and in 1713 Bp. of Rochester and Dean of *Westminster. In 1723 he was deprived of all his offices and banished from the country for alleged complicity in a Jacobite plot, and he died in exile. He was regarded as the best preacher of his day.

His Memoirs and Correspondence were edited by F. Williams (2 vols., 1869). H. C. Beeching, Francis Atterbury (1909). Study by G. V. Bennett (Oxford, 1975). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., ii (1885), pp. 233–8.

ATTICUS (d. 425), Patr. of *Constantinople. A native of Sebaste in *Armenia, he was brought up in the *Pneumatomachian heresy, but after making his way to Constantinople he was converted to orthodoxy. Here he became a bitter opponent of St. *Chrysostom. On the death of Arsacius, who had held the see of Constantinople for little more than a year after Chrysostom's expulsion (June 404), Atticus succeeded to the patriarchate. After Chrysostom's death (Sept. 407), however, he made concessions to the party of his supporters and eventually readmitted Chrysostom's name to the *diptychs, much to the annoyance of St. *Cyril of Alexandria. By obtaining a rescript from Emp. *Theodosius II which put the whole of Illyria and the 'Provincia Orientalis' under his authority, he enlarged the influence of his see, though these extended rights were lost later. His writings, which are of little merit, are chiefly directed against heresy (*Nestorianism, *Pelagianism, the *Messalians). The Latin version of the recension of the *Nicene canons which he sent to the Council of *Carthage of 419 goes under his name. In the E. he is venerated as a saint. Feast days, 8 Jan. and 11 Oct.

The Lat. Version of the recension of the Nicene canons under his name is printed in Turner, E.O.M.I.A., I. ii (1904), pp. 104–42; letters in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 649 f., 716–21, with further reff. 651 f.; the Syriac text of a sermon on the BVM ed., with Fr. tr., M. Brière, in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, xxxiv (1933–4), pp. 160–86, and, with Lat. tr., and other material, J. Lebon, in Le Muséon, xlvi (1933), pp. 167–202. The principal authorities for his life are *Socrates, H.E., vii. 2, *Sozomen, H.E., viii. 27, and *Palladius, Dialogus de Vita S. Johannis Chrysostomi, ix–xi. Life from various sources printed in AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 473–82; also ib., Aug. I (1753), p. 32 f. J. *Hergenröther, Photius, i (1867), pp. 43–8. G. Bardy, 'Atticus de Constantinople et Cyrille d'Alexandrie' in Fliche-Martin, iv (1937), pp. 149–62. Bardenhewer, iii (1912), p. 361 f. C. Verschaffel in D.T.C., i (1903), col. 2220 f., s.v.; M. T. Disdier in D.H.G.E., v (1930), cols. 161–6, s.v.

ATTILA (d. 453), King of the Huns from 433. In 451 he invaded Gaul, but was checked by a defeat near Troyes. (The story that he spared the town at the request of its bishop, Lupus, is unhistorical, however.) In the next year he attacked Italy, and after ravaging the cities of the North he desisted only at the prayers of *Leo I from attempting to capture Rome. He is known in Christian legends of Latin origin, from his savagery, as the 'Scourge of God' (flagellum Dei), i.e. as a minister of divine vengeance. Teutonic legends, on the other hand, represent him as hospitable and magnanimous.

T. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, ii (1880), pp. 39–202. E. Hutton, Attila and the Huns (1915); M. Brion, La Vie d'Attila (1928; Eng. tr., 1929); E. A. Thompson, A History of Attila and the Huns (1948), with bibl.; F. Altheim, Attila und die Hunnen (1951).

ATTO (c. 885–961), Bp. of Vercelli from 924. He was a canonist and theologian remarkable for his great erudition in an unlearned age. His writings included a long commentary on the Pauline Epistles (dependent on *Augustine, *Jerome, *Claudius of Turin, and others) and a collection of ecclesiastical canons. Some of his letters and sermons have also survived.

Works ed. C. Buronzo del Signore (2 vols., Vercelli, 1768), repr. J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxiv, 9–916. Modern ed. of his 'Polypticum', an incisive critique of affairs in N. Italy in his day (but doubtfully the work of Atto himself), with Germ. tr. by G. Goetz (Abh. (Sächs.), xxxvii, Hft. 2; 1922). E. Pasteris, Attone di Vercelli ossia il più grande vescovo e scrittore italiano del secolo X. Vita ed opere con uno studio sulle sue prose ritmiche recentemente scoperte dall'autore (1925). J. Schultz, Atto von Vercelli, 924–961 (Diss., Göttingen, 1885). A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, i (S.S.L., vi, 1924), pp. 61–74.

ATTRITION. The sorrow for sin which proceeds from fear of punishment or a sense of the ugliness of sin. It is contrasted with *contrition (q.v.), which is held to proceed from the love of God. Its value was denied by M. *Luther and upheld by the Council of *Trent. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas and most medieval scholastics and moral theologians, attrition is a sufficient disposition for forgiveness within the sacrament of *penance. Some theologians, such as *Peter Lombard, however, insisted on the need for perfect contrition. In 1667 *Alexander VII terminated this dispute by declaring that either opinion could be held without heresy.

J. Périnelle, O.P., L'Attrition d'après le Concile de Trente et d'après Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Bibliothèque Thomiste, x; 1927); H. Dondaine, O.P., L'Attrition suffisante (ib., xxv; 1943). J. McDonald in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, i (1962), pp. 206–9, with further bibl.

AUBIGNÉ, J. H. M. d'. See Merle d'Aubigné J. H.

AUBURN DECLARATION, The (1837). A statement issued in 1837 in which the principal doctrines of the American *Presbyterians of the 'New School' were set forth. It was compiled by the Rev. Baxter Dickinson (d. 1876) in reply to the charges made by the 'Old School' against the 'New School' to the effect that they had departed from the traditional *Calvinist teaching as embodied in the *Westminster standards. The statement, which was accepted in Aug. 1837 at Auburn, New York State, was made the theological basis on which the 'New School' was organized as a separate body. In 1868 the Declaration was admitted by the General Assembly of the 'Old School' to contain 'all fundamentals of the Calvinistic Creed' and thus paved the way for the reunion of 1870. Its 16 propositions are concerned rather to rebut a number of imputed soteriological and anthropological errors than to frame a set of positive beliefs.

The text is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom (1877) vol. iii, pp. 777–80.

AUCTOREM FIDEI. The bull of *Pius VI, dated 28 Aug. 1794, which condemned 85 articles of the Synod of *Pistoia (1786).

Text in A. Barbèri–R. Segreti (edd.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, ix (Rome, 1845), pp. 395–418; the greater part, incl. the propositions condemned, is repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 32; 1963), pp. 517–44 (Nos. 2600–2700). See also bibl. to Pistoia Synod of, and Pius VI.

AUDIANI. A 4th cent. rigorist sect founded by a layman, Audius, which separated from the Church on the ground that the clergy were too secularized. They were also accused of holding an *anthropomorphic view of the Godhead. Banished by *Constantine to Scythia, they there carried on missionary activity among the Goths.

The principal authorities are *Epiphanius, Haer., 70, and *Theodoret, H.E., iv. 10. L. E. Iselin, 'Audios und die Audianer' in Jahrbücher für protestantische Theologie, xvi (1890), pp. 298–305. G. Bareille in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 2265–7, s.v. 'Audiens', with further patristic reff.; H. C. Puech in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 910–15, s.v. 'Audianer', with reff.

AUDIENCE, Court of. Formerly the ecclesiastical court of the province of *Canterbury. Originally the Archbishop exercised his legatine jurisdiction in person, but later was assisted by assessors ('Auditors'), who were gradually reduced to one. Later still, this remaining Assessor sat at *St. Paul's as judge of the Court. In 1536 an attempt was made to abolish the Court; but it survived until the next century, when it was merged in the Court of *Arches.

M. *Parker, De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae (1605), pp. 30–3. W. S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, i (1903), p. 371 f. Irene J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration, i (1933), pp. 470–99, with reff.

AUDIENCES, Pontifical. Receptions given by the Pope to visitors to Rome and to officials having business with the Holy See. They are for the most part private, but the general public are received in large numbers three or four times a week.

AUDIENTES (Lat., 'hearers'). In the early Church, those belonging to the first stage of the *catechumenate. When they definitely desired to commit themselves to immediate prebaptismal instruction, they were admitted to the higher order of '*competentes'.

AUDOIN, St. See Ouen, St.

AUDRY, St. See Etheldreda, St.

AUFER A NOBIS. In the Roman Mass the collect for purity formerly said by the celebrant at the end of the *Preparation as he went up to the altar. The text is first found in the *Leonine Sacramentary as the collect in the fourth of a collection of Masses headed 'In Natale Episcoporum'. The use of the collect was dropped in the Ordo Missae of 1969.

Jungmann (1952), i, esp. pp. 378 f. and 401 f.; Eng. tr., i, pp. 291–3 and 308 f.

AUFKLÄRUNG (Germ., 'Enlightenment'). The term is applied in a technical sense to a movement of thought which appeared in an esp. clear-cut form in 18th-cent. Germany and is connected with the names of H. S. *Reimarus, G. E. *Lessing, and J. G. *Herder. Set within the world-wide tendency to Rationalism, characteristic of the period, the 'Aufklärung' combines opposition to all supernatural religion and belief in the all-sufficiency of human reason with an ardent desire to promote the happiness of men in this life. One of its chief ideals was religious toleration, represented by Lessing's Nathan der Weise and the policy of Frederick the Great. Most of its representatives preserved the belief in God, freedom, and immortality as consonant with reason, but rejected the Christian dogma and were hostile to Catholicism as well as to Protestant orthodoxy, which they regarded as powers of spiritual darkness depriving humanity of the use of its rational faculties. Their fundamental belief in the goodness of human nature, which blinded them to the fact of sin, produced an easy optimism and absolute faith in the progress and perfectibility of human society once the principles of enlightened reason had been recognized. The spirit of the 'Aufklärung' penetrated deeply into German Protestantism, where it disintegrated faith in the authority of the Bible and encouraged Biblical criticism on the one hand and an emotional '*Pietism' on the other. In German Catholicism it had its exponents among the educated laity and the higher clergy, being favoured by the policy of *Joseph II. It directed itself esp. against the religious orders, the celibacy of the clergy, devotion to the saints, and such popular expressions of piety as pilgrimages and the veneration of relics.

See also Enlightenment.

AUGSBURG, The Confession of (1530). The Lutheran confession of faith, mainly the work of P. *Melanchthon, which, after receiving M. *Luther's approval, was presented at Augsburg to the Emp., *Charles V, on 25 June 1530. To make the Lutheran position as inoffensive as possible to the Catholic party, its language was studiously moderate. In form it is divided (apart from an introductory preface) into two parts. The first epitomizes in 21 articles the essential Lutheran doctrines. Of these the 20th, which expounds the Lutheran doctrines on faith and good works, is the most elaborate. The second half reviews the abuses for which remedy is demanded, among them communion in one kind, clerical celibacy, private masses, monastic vows, and compulsory confession. After receiving it, the Emperor transmitted it to a body of RC theologians which included J. *Eck, J. *Faber, and J. *Cochlaeus, and their reply, designated the 'Confutatio pontificia', was read on 3 Aug. Melanchthon answered this with an 'Apology for the Confession', which the Emperor refused to receive.

The Confession was, from the first, an authoritative Lutheran document, and in the spring of 1531 (with a few slight changes) the editio princeps was published. In the ensuing years it was issued in a number of forms which varied somewhat in doctrine. In 1580, when the 'Book of *Concord' was drawn up, an endeavour was made to revert to the text presented to the Diet in 1530, and this 1580 text, the so-called 'Invariata', though it differs in over 450 places (mostly of no significance) from that of the Diet, remains the chief standard of faith in the Lutheran Churches. The considerably revised text issued by Melanchthon in 1540 (the 'Variata') is accepted by the Reformed (i.e. Calvinist) Churches in certain parts of Germany.

Crit. edd. of text (Germ. and Lat.) by P. Tschackert (Leipzig, 1901) and by H. Bornkamm in Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutheranischen Kirche herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (ed. 2, Göttingen, 1952), pp. 19–137, with 'Apology', pp. 139–404. Lat. text also in Kidd, pp. 259–89 (No. 116); Lat. text, with Eng. tr., in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii (1882), pp. 3–73, with discussion, i (1881), pp. 225–44. Eng. tr. also in T. G. Tappert (ed.), The Book of Concord (Philadelphia [1959]), pp. 23–96, with 'Apology', pp. 97–285. W. Gussmann, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Augsburgischen Glaubensbekenntnisses (2 vols., 1911). A. F. C. *Vilmar, Die Augsburgische Confession erklärt (ed. K. W. Piderit, Gütersloh, 1870). J. Ficker, Die Konfutation des Augsburgischen Bekenntnisses (on the 'Confutatio'; 1891). W. E. Nagel, Luthers Anteil an der Confessio Augustana (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xxxiv, Hft. 1; 1930). H. Bornkamm, Der authentische lateinische Text der Confessio Augustana (1530) (Sb. (Heid.), 1956, Abh. 2). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), pp. 35–45 (Nos. 34504–679), and on the Confutation, p. 45 f. (Nos. 34680–87a). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 242–50, s.v.; H. Bornkamm in E.K.L., i (1956), cols. 254–8, s.v. 'Augsburger Konfession und Apologie'; id., in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), cols. 733–6, s.v. 'Augsburger Bekenntnis', all with bibl.

AUGSBURG, The Interim of. The doctrinal formula accepted as the provisional basis of religious settlement between Catholics and Protestants in 1548. After a joint commission of both groups, appointed by *Charles V in Feb. 1548, had failed to reach agreement, the Emperor had a formula prepared by J. *Pflug, Bp. of Naumburg, M. Helding, suffragan Bp. of Mainz, and J. *Agricola. This doctrinal compromise in 26 articles was designed as a provisional basis till the Council of *Trent made a final settlement. The chief points yielded to the Protestants were clerical marriage and communion in both kinds. After being secretly circulated, it was accepted at the Diet of Augsburg, 30 June 1548, and rigidly executed in parts of S. Germany. In the more Protestant parts of Germany, where the Augsburg Interim failed to obtain assent, a less Catholic edict, the so-called 'Leipzig Interim', put forth by the Elector Maurice in Dec. 1548, was adopted.

Text in B. J. Kidd, No. 148, pp. 359–62. L. *Pastor, Die kirchlichen Reunionsbestrebungen während der Regierung Karls V (1879), ch. ix, pp. 345–417.

AUGSBURG, Peace of (1555). The settlement of religious affairs in the German Empire between Ferdinand I and the Electors at Augsburg on 25 Sept. 1555. It recognized the existence of both Catholicism and Lutheranism (but not Calvinism) in Germany, providing that in each land subjects should follow the religion of their ruler (cuius regio eius religio). Those not content with this settlement were permitted, after selling their property, to migrate to other lands. In the Imperial cities, both religions, if already established, were to continue. The official standard of Lutheran faith was the '*Augsburg Confession' of 1530 or any of its later recensions. Though Lutheranism then secured official recognition it was a victory for territorialism, not toleration. All property in the hands of Protestants at the time of the Passau Treaty (1552) was to be confirmed to them. This 'Peace' continued the basis of the ecclesiastical settlement in the Empire until the Treaty of *Westphalia of 1648.

Crit. ed. of text in A. Druffel, Beiträge zur Reichsgeschichte 1553–1555 (revised ed. by K. Brandi; Briefe und Akten zur Geschichte des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts, iv; 1896). Eng. tr. of the main clauses is repr. in Kidd, p. 363 f. (No. 149) and Bettenson (ed. 2; 1963), p. 301 f. C. W. Spieker, Geschichte des Augsburger Religionsfriedens von 26 September 1555 (Schleiz, 1854). G. Wolf, Der Augsburger Religionsfriede (Stuttgart, 1890). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 34 f. (Nos. 34481–503).

AUGUSTEUM. The building erected at *Wittenberg in 1564–83 on the site of the *Augustinian monastery at which M. *Luther in his early life had taught. It at first served University purposes, but after many vicissitudes in the 18th cent. eventually became a Lutheran theological seminary.

AUGUSTINE, St., of Canterbury (d. 604 or 605), missionary to Kent and first Abp. of *Canterbury. The prior of St. Andrew's monastery at Rome, he was in 596 dispatched by St. *Gregory the Great, then Pope, to refound the Church in England. He wished to turn back while in Gaul, but, encouraged by letters from Gregory, he finally landed in Kent in the summer of 597. He was favourably received and given every opportunity for his work, and after a few months Christianity was formally adopted by *Ethelbert, King of Kent, whose wife Bertha had been a Christian before marriage. The work being thus established, Augustine went to *Arles to be consecrated as Abp. of Canterbury. His capacity for organization seems to have been limited, for he wrote to ask for Gregory's direction on the smallest points. About 603 Augustine, with Ethelbert's assistance, attempted to reach an agreement with representatives of the ancient *Celtic Church, which still survived in Britain and was at variance with Rome on questions of discipline and practice; but the attempt was a failure. The final act of Augustine, prob. in 604, was to send *Justus to preach west of the Medway, with the title of Bp. of *Rochester, and *Mellitus to work, as Bp. of London, among the East Saxons. Feast day, 26 May; in the RC Church since 1969, 27 May.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., i. 23–ii, 3; notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 37–81. Life by Goscelin in AA.SS., Mai. VI (1688), pp. 375–95. Docc. of primary importance for his mission and episcopate in A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland (1871), pp. 3–60. G. F. Browne, Augustine and his Companions (lectures, 1895). A. J. Mason (ed.), The Mission of St. Augustine to England according to the Original Documents (1897). A. Brou, S.J., S. Augustin de Canterbury et ses compagnons (1897; Eng. tr., 1897). H. Howorth, Saint Augustine of Canterbury (1913). Margaret Deanesly, Augustine of Canterbury (1964). For a defence of the genuineness in the main of the correspondence of Pope Gregory I with Augustine and others, preserved in Bede, H.E., i. 23–32, see Margaret Deanesly and P. Grosjean, S.J., 'The Canterbury Edition of the Answers of Pope Gregory I to St. Augustine' in J.E.H., x (1959), pp. 1–49 (against the criticisms of S. Brechter); cf. also P. Meyvaert, O.S.B., 'Les "Responsiones" de S. Grégoire le Grand à S. Augustin de Cantorbéry' in R.H.E., liv (1959), pp. 879–94. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (Oxford History of England, ii, 1943), pp. 103–12; ed. 3 (1971), pp. 102–13. M. *Creighton in D.N.B., ii (1885), pp. 255–7.

AUGUSTINE, St., of Hippo (354–430), Bp. of Hippo Regius and one of the '*Doctors of the Church'. Born at Tagaste in N. Africa, of a pagan father and a Christian mother (*Monica), he received a Christian education. He was sent to the University of Carthage, where he studied rhetoric with a view to becoming a lawyer, but he soon decided to devote himself exclusively to literary pursuits. Here he gradually abandoned what little Christianity he possessed, and also took a mistress, to whom he remained faithful for fifteen years. A new stage was reached in 373, when a reading of Cicero's (lost) 'Hortensius' aroused in him a passionate interest in problems of philosophy. Shortly afterwards he became a *Manichaean, and to this religion he remained attached for nine years. In 383 the failure of Faustus, a celebrated Manichaean, to solve many problems which had been puzzling him eventually disillusioned him, and when shortly afterwards Augustine migrated to *Rome and opened a school of rhetoric, he had ceased to be openly a member of the sect though he was still held captive by some of their doctrines. Disgusted by the behaviour of his pupils at Rome, he left the capital for a professorship at Milan, where he soon came under the influence of the bishop, *Ambrose. By the time he arrived at Milan, his philosophy was probably already that of the 'Academics', which denied the possibility of attaining absolute truth; but a little later he became a *Neoplatonist and gradually drew nearer to Christianity. The sermons of St. Ambrose attracted him both by their literary quality and the answers they afforded to many of his objections to the Bible. *Simplicianus, Ambrose's tutor, recounted the conversion of the Neoplatonist, *Victorinus, and it soon became apparent that the only thing that held Augustine back was his inability to live in continence. In the summer of 386 he heard from Pontitian the story of the two civil servants who had become monks after reading the Life of St. *Antony, and very soon afterwards a glance at Rom. 13. 13 f. (in response to a Divine oracle, 'Tolle lege'), gave him the final victory.

After some months spent in seclusion at Cassiciacum, Augustine was baptized on Easter Eve, 387. In 388 he returned to Africa and established with some friends a kind of monastery at Tagaste. While visiting the town of Hippo Regius he was suddenly seized by the people and presented to the aged bishop, Valerius, for ordination. He became a priest in 391, and although he continued to live a monastic life he soon acquired considerable influence in the affairs of the African Church. In 395 he was consecrated coadjutor bishop to Valerius, Bp. of Hippo, and from c. 396 until his death presided as sole bishop over the see. He died on 28 Aug. 430, when the Vandals were besieging Hippo.

Augustine's abiding importance rests on his penetrating understanding of Christian truth. During his episcopate he was called upon to deal with three heresies, all of which were confronting the Church with problems of the greatest moment; and it was mainly through his struggle with these three systems that his own theology was formulated. The least dangerous was Manichaeism, for its doctrines were too obviously remote from historic Christianity to have any real hope of success at that period. But in his attack on it, Augustine laid the basis of the metaphysic which moulded the thought of the Schoolmen. He defended, against the Manichaean attempt to solve the problem of evil by positing the existence of an evil agency eternally opposed to the good God, the essential goodness of all creation. He maintained that God was the sole creator of all things and alone sustained them in being, and that evil is, properly speaking, the privation of some good which ought to be had. In the case of physical evil this results from the imperfect character of creatures; in the case of moral evil it springs from free-will.

More urgent on the practical side was the *Donatist controversy on account of the deep divisions into which it rent the African Church. It forced Augustine to carry the doctrines of the Church, the Sacraments, and Sacramental grace to a stage beyond that reached by any of his predecessors, and thereby to influence all subsequent Western theology. The Church, he maintained, was 'one' through the mutual charity of its members, and 'holy', not because her members, but because her purposes, are holy. She contains within her fold both good and evil men, and not till the last day will the latter be rooted out; and while he acknowledged that there were good men outside the Church, he seems to have thought that all who were to be saved would become members of the Church before they died. His teaching also greatly furthered the development of the distinction between 'validity' and 'regularity' in the administration of the Sacraments. In another department of theology, the same controversy forced him to consider the relation of the coercive authority of the state to the Church. He accepted the civil power as part of God's Providence, but held that it was good only in so far as it was founded on justice, which included the worship of the true God. As a corollary, he came to accept the aid of the state to punish and suppress heresy and schism, but deprecated the use of the death-penalty.

His later years were taken up largely with the *Pelagian controversy. It was c. 410 that Augustine received news that Pelagius had been attacking a sentence of his (Da quod iubes et iube quod vis) in the '*Confessions' (x. 29 [40]). A fierce controversy ensued which evoked his teaching upon the *Fall, *Original Sin, and *Predestination. Augustine maintained that man was created with certain supernatural gifts which were lost by the Fall of Adam. As a result, man suffers from a hereditary moral disease, and is also subject to the inherited legal liability for Adam's sin; and from these evils we can be saved solely by the grace of God. At times Augustine shows himself to be frankly Predestinarian. The whole human race is one mass of sin (massa peccati), out of which God has elected some souls to receive His unmerited mercy. There is no other explanation of the elect and non-elect than the inscrutable wisdom of God, and babies who die unbaptized go into everlasting perdition. This side of Augustine's teaching was strongly affected by his personal experience of the overpowering grace of God. It found its most extreme formulation in the writings which he issued at the end of his life, and exercised a great influence upon J. *Calvin and some of the other Reformers, though its details have won only limited approval from some of the most illustrious theologians both before and since the 16th century.

In consequence of these controversies, a large proportion of Augustine's writings take a polemical form. Of his other works, the two most celebrated are the 'Confessions' and the 'City of God'. The former, the greater part of which is autobiographical and carries the story of his life down to his conversion, was written shortly before 400. The marked differences in temper between the 'Confessions' and his philosophical writings roughly contemporary with his conversion seem to compel the conclusion that in the 'Confessions' he has imposed on the facts, probably unintentionally, a considerable element of interpretation. In its power of analysing the emotional side of Christian experience in the face of sin it is unsurpassed. The impulse to the writing of the 22 books of the 'City of God', which was spread over several years (413–26), arose out of the fall of Rome to *Alaric in 410. The event had caused consternation throughout the civilized world, and Augustine, who himself was profoundly moved, conceived the book as a reply to pagans who maintained that the fall of the city was due to the abolition of the heathen worship. It led him to deal with the fundamental contrast between Christianity and the world, and has made it the supreme exposition of a Christian philosophy of history. Among his other writings are a philosophical treatise 'De Trinitate' in 15 books, a large collection of epistles (including an interesting correspondence with St. *Jerome), many sermons, and, from his earlier Christian years, a collection of philosophical dialogues. Shortly before his death he published his 'Retractations', in which he reviewed his literary work.

Augustine's influence on the course of subsequent theology has been immense. He moulded the whole of that of the Middle Ages down to the 13th cent., and even the reaction against Augustinianism with the rediscovery of *Aristotle in the 13th cent., e.g. in St. *Thomas Aquinas, was less complete than has widely been supposed. The Reformers also appealed to elements of Augustine's teaching in their attack on the Schoolmen; and later the *Jansenists invoked his authority. Without St. Augustine's massive intellect and deep spiritual perception Western theology would never have taken the shape in which it is familiar to us. Feast day, 28 Aug.

St. Augustine's earliest writings are his Dialogues (no doubt an idealization of the actual conversations in which he took part at Cassiciacum), which include Contra Academicos, De Beata Vita, De Ordine, Soliloquia, and De Immortalitate Animae (all A.D. 386–7; J. P. Migne, PL, xxxii). Among his Anti-Manichaean writings are Acta contra Fortunatum Manichaeum (397–8), Contra Faustum Manichaeum (33 Bks., 397–8), and Contra Secundinum Manichaeum (405), all in PL, xlii; among his works against the Donatists, Psalmus contra Partem Donati (394), Contra Epistolam Parmeniani (400), De Baptismo contra Donatistas (400), and Breviculus Collationis cum Donatistis (411), all in PL, xliii; among those against the Pelagians, De Peccatorum Meritis et Remissione (411), De Spiritu et Littera (412), De Natura et Gratia (415), De Gestis Pelagii (417), Contra Julianum (6 Bks., 421), all in PL, xliv; among those against the *Semipelagians, De Gratia et Libero Arbitrio (420), De Correptione et Gratia (426), De Praedestinatione Sanctorum (428), and De Dono Perseverantiae (428), in PL, xliv and xlv. He also wrote a short general treatise, De Haeresibus (428; PL, xlii, 21–50). Of his Biblical writings the chief are De Genesi ad Litteram (12 Bks., 401–15; PL, xxxiv), De Consensu Evangelistarum (4 Bks., 400; PL, xxxiv), Tractatus CXXIV in Joannis Evangelium and Tractatus X in Ep. Joannis (c. 416, PL, xxxv), and Enarrationes in Psalmos (PL, xxxvi and xxxvii). His chief dogmatic works include De Diversis Quaestionibus ad Simplicianum (397; PL, xl), De Trinitate (15 Bks., 400–16; PL, xlii), Enchiridion ad Laurentium (423–4; PL, xli, 229–90), and De Civitate Dei (22 Bks., 413–26; PL, xli). The Confessions are in PL, xxxii, 583–656. Augustine also wrote many important letters, nearly all on dogmatic subjects, of which some 220 survive. To his large collection of Sermons many additions have been made in recent times, esp. through the researches of G. *Morin, O.S.B., C. Lambot, O.S.B., and A. *Wilmart, O.S.B. At the end of his life Augustine reviewed his several works in his Retractationes (426; PL, xxxii, 659–868).

First collected ed. of his Works by J. Amerbach (9 vols. Basle, 1506). Other imp. early edd. by D. *Erasmus (10 vols. Basle, 1528–9) and the 'Theologi Lovanienses' (11 vols., Antwerp, 1577). All previous edd. were superseded by that of the *Maurists (J. Blampin, P. *Coustant, and others; 11 vols., Paris, 1679–1700, with valuable index in vol. xi); repr. frequently, incl. J. P. Migne, PL, xxxii–xlvii (unfortunately with varying pagination in the several Migne reprints); on the Maurist ed. see J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et Moyen Âge, iii (1948), pp. 339–484 (Etude viii: Une Édition patristique célèbre). Since 1887 crit. ed. of individual works in the C.S.E.L. (some items, however, not up to the usual standard of this series); also in C.C., Series Latina, 1954 ff.

Eng. trr. in the *Library of the Fathers by Marcus Dods and by P. *Schaff in 'Nicene and Post Nicene Christian Fathers' (8 vols., 1887–92) and by various contributors in 'Fathers of the Church' (1948 ff.).

Contemporary Life by his friend and disciple, Possidius, Bp. of Calama (PL, new ed. with Eng. tr. by H. T. Weiskotten, Princeton, N.J., 1919; Germ. tr. by A. *Harnack, Berlin, 1930). Full modern Life in ed. Ben. (repr. PL, xxxii, 65–578). Le N. *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire Ecclés., xiii (ed. 2, 1710). Modern Lives by A. G. Kloth (2 vols., Aachen, 1840), J. J. F. Poujoulat (3 vols., Paris, 1845–6), P. Schaff (Berlin, 1854; Eng. tr., 1854), F. and P. Böhringer (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1877–8), J. Martin ('Les Grands Philosophes', Paris, 1901), G. Frhr. von Hertling (Mainz, 1902), L. Bertrand (Paris, [1913]; Eng. tr., 1914), W. Montgomery (London, 1914), H. Pope, O.P. (London, 1937), G. Bardy (Montpellier, 1940), G. [I.] Bonner (London, 1963), P. [R. L.] Brown (ib., 1967), and A. Mandouze (Paris, 1968).

Studies on his early Christian period, with discussions on the contrast between the Dialogues and the Confessions, include H. A. Naville, St. Augustin. Étude sur le développement de sa pensée jusqu'à l'époque de son ordination (Geneva, 1872); F. Wörter, Die Geistesentwicklung des hl. Aur. Augustinus bis zu seiner Taufe (Paderborn, 1892); H. Becker, Augustin. Studien zu seiner geistigen Entwicklung (1908); P. Alfaric, L'Évolution intellectuelle de S. Augustin. I: du manichéisme au néoplatonisme (all publd., 1918); C. Boyer, S.J., Christianisme et néoplatonisme dans la formation de Saint Augustin (1921); J. Nörregaard, Augustins Bekehrung (Tübingen, 1923); A. Pincherle, La formazione teologica di Sant'Agostino [1947]; P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les 'Confessions' de S. Augustin (1950); M. Testard, S. Augustin et Cicéron (2 vols., 1958); R. Holte, Béatitude et sagesse (1962); O. du Roy, L'Intelligence de la foi en la Trinité selon Saint Augustin (1966); R. J. O'Connell, Saint Augustine's Early Theory of Man (Cambridge, Mass., 1968).

Edd. and monographs on individual treatises include: (1) DE CIVITATE DEI: Ed. princeps, Subiaco, 1467. Ed. J. E. C. Welldon, 2 vols., S.P.C.K., 1924. Eng. trr. by John Healey (London, 1610); reissued, with introd. by E. Barker, London, 1931; ed. R. V. G. Tasker, Everyman's Library, 2 vols., 1945. J. N. *Figgis, The Political Aspects of St. Augustine's 'City of God' (1921); J. H. S. Burleigh, The City of God. A study of St. Augustine's Philosophy (1949); R. H. Barrow, Introduction to St. Augustine 'The City of God' (1950); H. I. Marrou, L'Ambivalence du Temps de l'Histoire chez Saint Augustin (1950); F. G. Maier, Augustin und das antike Rom (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, xxxix; 1955); A. Wachtel, Beiträge zur Geschichtstheologie des Aurelius Augustinus (Bonner historische Forschungen, xvii; 1960); J. C. Guy, S.J., Unité et structure logique de la 'Cité de Dieu' de saint Augustin (1961); P. R. L. Brown, 'Saint Augustine' in Beryl Smalley (ed.), Trends in Medieval Political Thought (Oxford, 1965), pp. 1–21. (2) SERMONS: A. Regnier, De la latinité des sermons de St. Augustin (1886); Christine Mohrmann, Die altchristliche Sondersprache in den Sermones des hl. Augustin (Latinitas Christianorum primaeva, iii; 1932). M. Pontet, L'Exégèse de S. Augustin prédicateur (Théologie, vii; 1945); Annie M. La Bonnardière, Recherches de chronologie augustinienne (1965). (3) EPISTLES: Excellent ed. by A. Goldbacher in C.S.E.L., 34 (1), 1895; 34 (2), 1898; 44, 1904; 57, 1911. W. Thimme, Augustin. Ein Lebens- und Characterbild auf Grund seiner Briefe (1910). (4) CONFESSIONS. See bibl. s.v.

On his place in the history of Western civilization, cf. E. *Troeltsch, Augustin, die christliche Antike und das Mittelalter im Anschluss an die Schrift, De Civitate Dei (1915); H. I. Marrou, St. Augustin et la fin de la culture antique (1938), id., Saint Augustin et l'Augustinisme (1955; Eng. tr., 1957).

On his theology and outlook generally A. Dorner, Augustinus, sein theologisches System und seine religionsphilosophische Anschauung (1873); W. Cunningham, S. Austin and his Place in the History of Christian Thought (1886); O. Rottmanner, Der Augustinismus (1892); K. *Adam, Die Eucharistielehre des hl. Augustin (1908); J. Mausbach, Die Ethik des hl. Augustinus (2 vols., 1909); T. A. *Lacey, Nature, Miracle and Sin. A Study of St. Augustine's Conception of the Natural Order (1916); P. *Batiffol, Le Catholicisme de S. Augustin (2 vols., 1920); A Monument to St. Augustine. By various authors, London, 1930; J. Burnaby, Amor Dei. A Study of the Religion of St. Augustine (1938); F. van der Meer, Augustinus de Zielzorger (1947; Eng. tr., 1961). J. Ratzinger, Volk und Haus Gottes in Augustins Lehre von der Kirche (Münchener Theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, vii; 1954); G. Nygren, Das Prädestinationsproblem in der Theologie Augustins (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, v; 1956); E. TeSelle, Augustine the Theologian (1970).

C. Andresen, Bibliographia Augustiniana (Darmstadt, 1962); T. van Bavel, O.E.S.A., Répertoire Bibliographique de Saint Augustin 1950–1960 (Instrumenta Patristica, iii; The Hague, 1963).

Of the artt. in all dictionaries and encyclopaedic works, one of the fullest is that by E. Portalié, D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 2268–472, with bibl.; separate Eng. tr. by R. J. Bastian, S.J., A Guide to the Thought of St. Augustine (1960).

AUGUSTINE OF HIPPO, Rule of St. A title formerly applied to several documents but properly limited to that 'Regula Sancti Augustini' made famous through its adoption by the *Augustinian Canons (q.v.). From at least the 6th cent. this was in two parts—a short prologue laying down certain precise monastic observances (the 'Regula Secunda') and a longer and more general consideration of the common life (the 'Regula ad servos Dei'). This latter was traditionally thought to have been an adaptation for the use of a religious community of men of St. Augustine's Ep. 211 (A.D. 423; addressed to nuns); but the question whether it was originally designed for men or women is at present the subject of detailed and inconclusive discussion among scholars. The Rule was prob. drawn up by one of Augustine's followers, possibly during the lifetime and with the co-operation of the saint himself. Little used in the early Middle Ages, the Rule was resuscitated in the late 11th cent. by the regular canons and quickly became the recognized standard of their order, though after the early 12th cent. the archaic prologue was often abbreviated or omitted.

The sanity of the Rule, its adaptability, and the repute of its supposed author led to its adoption by a number of monastic bodies, active and contemplative, including the *Dominicans, the *Augustinian Hermits, the *Servites, and the *Ursuline and *Visitation nuns.

The text of the 'Regula Secunda' is repr. from Augustine's Opera, ed. Ben., in J. P. Migne, PL, xxxii, 1449–52; that of the 'Regula ad Servos Dei', ib., 1377–84. Crit. edd. with discussion, by A. C. Vega (Escurial, 1933) and L. Verheijen, O.S.A. (Études Augustiniennes, 2 vols., 1967), incl. extensive bibl. A third rule ('Regula Consensoria'), which long went under Augustine's name, was thought by D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'La Regula consensoria, une règle des moines priscillianistes' in R. Bén., xxv (1908), pp. 83–8, to be a *Priscillianist work; details of this view have been challenged by C. J. Bishko, 'The Date and Nature of the Spanish Consensoria monachorum' in American Journal of Philology lxix (1948), pp. 377–95, who finds its origin in 7th or early 8th cent. Spain, but there is general agreement that it is not the work of Augustine. F. Weninger, Die Regula des hl. Augustinus (Innsbruck, 1929). In Eng. there is a useful summary of the controversies to date in J. C. Dickinson, The Origins of the Austin Canons and their Introduction into England (C.H.S., 1950), pp. 255–72.

AUGUSTINIAN CANONS. (They were also known as 'Austin', or 'Black' or 'Regular Canons'). Though the ideal of the *Canons Regular had been foreshadowed by various attempts in the early Church to establish a full common life for houses of clerks (notably that by St. *Augustine of Hippo), as a family of religious in the W. Church they date from the first years of the movement later known as the Gregorian Reform.

Their origin is to be found in certain communities of clerks in Northern Italy and the S. of France, who in the middle decades of the 11th cent. sought to live the common life of poverty, celibacy, and obedience, in accordance with what they believed to be the example of the early Christians. Their way of life received official approval at *Lateran synods in 1059 and 1063 and in the following cent. was widely adopted in W. Europe. By the opening decades of the 12th cent., members of these communities had come to be known as 'regular canons' (canonici regulares) and had generally adopted the Rule of St. Augustine (which half a cent. before was almost unknown to them; see previous entry). From now on a regular canon is almost synonymous with an Augustinian canon, i.e. one who follows the Rule of St. Augustine. From the early 12th cent., a number of independent Augustinian congregations were established, of which some of the more influential, e.g. the *Victorines and the *Premonstratensians, were much influenced by *Cistercian customs. In subsequent times Augustinian canons suffered considerably from the disorders and changes of the later Middle Ages and the disturbances of the *Reformation, and many houses were suppressed and replaced by other orders, esp. the *clerks regular. But certain of the older congregations still survive in the RC Church, notably the 'Canons Regular of the Lateran' (C.R.L.), whom Pope *Alexander II (1061–73) instituted in his cathedral church.

Of clerical origin, the Augustinian canons were liable to episcopal visitation and able to undertake parochial responsibilities, though this was a privilege of which they did not always make extensive use in the Middle Ages. The flexibility of their rule enabled regular canons to follow various vocations, active and contemplative. They had a notable connexion with hospitals; in London St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas's Hospitals were formerly both Augustinian houses.

E. Amort, Vetus Disciplina Canonicorum Regularium et Secularium ex Documentis magna parte hucusque ineditis a Temporibus Apostolicis usque ad Saeculum xvii critice et moraliter expensa (2 vols., Venice, 1747). La vita comune del clero nei secoli XI e XII (Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, iii; Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore. Serie Terza, ii; 2 vols., Milan, 1962). H. E. Salter (ed.), Chapters of the Augustinian Canons (Canterbury and York Society, xxix; 1922). J. C. Dickinson, The Origins of the Austin Canons and their Introduction into England (C.H.S., 1950). N. Widloecher, La Congregazione dei Canonici Regolari Lateranensi. Periodo di Formazione: 1402–83 (Gubbio, 1929). L. Hertling, S.J., 'Kanoniker, Augustinusregel und Augustinerorden' in Z.K.T., liv (1930), pp. 335–359; C. Dereine, S.J., 'Vie commune, règle de Saint Augustin et chanoines réguliers au XIe siècle' in R.H.E., xli (1946), pp. 365–406. Heimbucher, i, pp. 392–413. J. C. Dickinson in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 62–4, s.v. 'Canons Regular of St. Augustine'.

AUGUSTINIAN HERMITS or FRIARS. A religious order founded in the Middle Ages. It was formed from several Italian congregations of hermits which, in the interests of ecclesiastical efficiency were banded together under the Rule of St. *Augustine by Pope Alexander IV in 1256, with a constitution modelled on that of the *Dominicans. The order, which had at first made its settlements in remote places, soon tended to concentrate their work in towns, and became widely established in W. Europe. The later Middle Ages saw the rise of certain local reformed congregations of the order, to one of which, the German Reformed Congregation (1493), M. *Luther belonged. Augustinian hermits suffered considerably from the effects of the Reformation and the secularizations of later times, but they still survive—notably in parts of W. Europe and also in South America, where they undertake extensive pastoral and educational work. The 'Discalced Augustinians' (also known as 'Augustinian *Recollects') are a reformed congregation living under very severe constitutions; their first house was founded in 1589.

L. Empoli, O.E.S.A. (ed.), Bullarium Ordinis Eremitarum S. Augustini, in quo plures Constitutiones Apostolicae . . . ab Innocentio Tertio usque ad Urbanum Octavum ad eundem Ordinem spectantes collectae sunt (Rome, 1628). Their constitutions were publ. at Venice, 1508; Rome, 1625; Rome, 1686; and subsequently. Henry of Friemar [c. 1243–1340], 'Treatise on the Origin and Development of the Order of the Hermit Friars and its true and real title', ed. R. Arbesmann, O.S.A., in Augustiniana, vi (1956), pp. 37–145. Jordan of Saxony [c. 1299–c. 1370 or 1380], Liber Vitasfratrum, ed. id.–W. Hümpfner, O.S.A. (Cassiciacum, i; New York, 1943). A. de Romanis, L'Ordine Agostiniano (Florence, 1935). D. A. Perini, O.E.S.A., Bibliographia Augustiniana, cum notis biographicis. Scriptores Itali (4 parts, [1929]–1937). A. Gwynn, S.J., The English Austin Friars in the Time of Wyclif (1940). F. Roth, O.S.A., The English Austin Friars 1249–1538. A History (Cassiciacum, vi; New York, 1966). Heimbucher, i, pp. 536–65, ii, p. 660, with bibl. Augustiniana. Tijdschrift voor de Studie van Sint Augustinus en de Augustijnenorde (Louvain, 1951 ff.) has numerous artt. on the Order. M. T. Disdier, A.A., in D.H.G.E., v (1930), cols. 499–595, s.v. 'Augustin (Ier Ordre dit de Saint) (Érémites)', with full bibl.; W. Hümpfner, O.E.S.A., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), cols. 1084–8, s.v. 'Augustiner-Eremiten', with bibl.

AUGUSTINIANS OF THE ASSUMPTION. See Assumptionists.

'AUGUSTINUS'. The title of the treatise by Cornelius *Jansenius (d. 1638) on grace and human nature. It was published at Louvain in August 1640. Based on the anti-Pelagian works of St. *Augustine, and embodying many of the conclusions of M. *Baius, it was directed against the neo-scholastic theologians. It became the accepted exposition of the dogmatic principles of *Jansenism.

After the 'privilège' necessary for publication had been granted on 13 Feb. 1640, the work appeared at Louvain later in the same year (repr. Paris, 1641, and Rouen, 1643). Full analysis by J. Carreyre in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 330–448 (useful). N. J. Abercrombie, The Origins of Jansenism (1936). R. Rapin, S.J. [1621–87], Histoire du jansénisme depuis son origine jusqu'en 1644 (first ed. E. Domenech, Paris, 1861).

AULÉN, GUSTAF (1879–1977), Bp. of Strängnäs. He was appointed professor of systematic theology at Lund University in 1913. He was Bp. of Strängnäs from 1933 to 1952. With A. Nygren (1890–1978), he was a leader of the Motivsforschung school, which seeks to see the essential Christian truth behind a doctrine rather than to stress the actual form in which it is presented. His most important works are Den allmänneliga kristna tron ('The Faith of the Christian Church', 1923; ed. 4, 1943, tr. into Eng., Philadelphia, 1948, London, 1954; Eng. tr. of ed. 5, 1961), Den kristna gudsbilden ('The Christian Idea of God', 1927), and his Olaus *Petri Lectures for 1930, published as Den kristna försoningstanken ('The Christian Idea of the Atonement'), of which an abridged version has been produced in English by A. G. Hebert under the title of Christus Victor (1931). In these lectures Aulén defends a modified version of the 'ransom to the devil' theory of the *Atonement. His numerous later works include För eder utgiven (1956; Eng. tr. Eucharist and Sacrifice, Philadelphia, 1958; Edinburgh, 1960) and Reformation och Katolicitet (1959; Eng. tr. Reformation and Catholicity, 1962).

AUMBRY, also 'Ambry'. A small recess in the wall of a church or sacristy in which, in medieval times, sacred vessels, books, and sometimes, but not usually, the reserved Sacrament might be kept. Its use for the last-named purpose was formerly forbidden by the RC Church, but it has long been common in the Anglican Communion.

G. *Dix, A Detection of Aumbries (1942); E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (1942); S. J. P. van Dijk, O.F.M.–Joan H. Walker, The Myth of the Aumbry (1957; critique of G. Dix).

AURELIUS, St. (d. c. 430), Bp. of *Carthage from c. 391. He presided over a long series of ecclesiastical councils, mostly at Carthage. Some of the letters addressed to him by St. *Augustine (Aug. epp. 22, 41, 60, 174), who held him in high honour, survive. Feast day, 20 July.

AA.SS., Oct. XI (1864), pp. 852–60. A. Audollent in D.H.G.E., v (1930), cols. 726–38, s.v., with bibl.

AUREOLE (Lat. aureolus, 'golden'). In sacred pictures, the background of gold, typifying glory, which often surrounds the figure, as distinct from the 'nimbus' (or halo), which covers only the head.

AURICULAR CONFESSION. Confession 'to the ear' [Lat. ad auriculam, sc. of a priest], i.e. the confession of sins to God in the presence of a priest authorized to forgive them in His Name. See also Penance.

AUSCULTA FILI (Lat., 'Listen, my son'). The opening words (1) of the Rule of St. *Benedict and (2) of *Boniface VIII's bull of 5 Dec. 1301 to Philip the Fair of France.

AUSONIUS (c. 310–c. 395), Roman poet. Decimus Magnus Ausonius was a native of Burdigala (Bordeaux), where he established a school of rhetoric. About 365 he became tutor to the future Emp. Gratian, who in 379 raised him to the consulship. To judge by a few of his poems, he made at least some profession of Christianity in his mature years, though the letters (in verse) which he addressed to his former pupil, *Paulinus of Nola, to dissuade him from his project of giving up his wealth to the poor and becoming a monk, reveal little of the Christian sense of vocation. Of his 'Epigrams', three—the 'Versus paschales pro Augusto', the 'Oratio Matutina', and the 'Oratio versibus rhopalicis'—are ostensibly the work of an orthodox Christian. Of his many secular poems, perhaps the most successful was his 'Mosella', a poem describing the region of the Moselle and the city of Trier.

Ed. princeps, Venice, 1472. Crit. edd. by C. Schenkl (M.G.H., Auct. Ant. V, 2; 1883), R. Peiper (ed. Teubn., 1886), and H. G. E. White (Loeb, 2 vols., 1919–21); of his Mosella, by C. Hosius (Marburg, 1894). Text also in J. P. Migne, PL, xix, 817–958. Marie J. Byrne, Prolegomena to an Edition of the Works of Decimus Magnus Ausonius (New York, 1916). S. Prete, Ricerche sulla Storia del Testo di Ausonio (Temi e Testi, vii; 1960). M. J. Pattist, Ausonius als Christ (Amsterdam and Paris, 1925). Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 47–62 (chap. ii: 'Ausonius and his circle'). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 436–40; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 406 f. F. Marx in P.W., ii (1896), cols. 2562–80; P. de Labriolle in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 773–9; M. Pellegrino in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 416–18.

AUSTIN. An older English form of '*Augustine'.

AUSTRALIA, Christianity in. A last-minute intervention by W. *Wilberforce led to the inclusion of a C of E chaplain in the first convict fleet, which reached New South Wales in 1788. Prisoners were compelled to attend C of E services, although in 1803 a convict RC priest was for a while permitted to say Mass. By 1820 two RC priests were on the government payroll, and early RC chaplains included W. B. *Ullathorne (q.v.). Wesleyan ministry started in 1815 and Presbyterian in 1823. Free settlement from the U.K. and Europe developed quickly, especially during the period of the gold-rush 1851–6; this, combined with the large numbers of Irish among the emancipated convicts, made toleration inevitable.

It is disputed whether the C of E was ever legally established in Australia. In fact, the first RC bishop, J. B. Polding, O.S.B. (1794–1877), arrived in Sydney in 1836 some months before the first C of E bishop, W. G. Broughton (1788–1853), who had previously been Archdeacon of New South Wales. For about six years up to 1832, the C of E in New South Wales was granted one-seventh of the land for building churches and schools, but this and a similar scheme in Tasmania met with strong opposition from such figures as the fiery Free Presbyterian, J. D. Lang (1799–1878), as well as from the RCs, all of whom were suspicious of any real or imagined attempt by the C of E to gain special status. This anomalous situation was rectified in 1836–7 through the liberal attitudes of Governor Bourke and successive Colonial Secretaries, when New South Wales and Tasmania granted general subsidies for church building (and shortly afterwards for schools). But even as late as the 1850's, when all colonies except Western Australia were acquiring self-government, some C of E bishops could still object to 'Roman usurpations', or to 'the support of error' by subsidies to all the main denominations whether in accordance with their fund-raising abilities or with their numerical strength.

By the 1850s many of all denominations had begun to espouse the view that the state should tolerantly abstain from religious matters. In addition, the 'mutual hostility of the sects' and the science–religion controversies of the day helped to increase the popularity of the view that church education was economically and socially divisive. Hence, by the 1870s, religion was no longer aided, and a system of state schools was developing in which religious teaching consisted of 'undogmatic', unexpounded scriptural passages, with time sometimes provided for denominational instruction. The RCs, however, remained outside this system.

The Methodists and Presbyterians were the first to establish autonomous Australian institutions. The tone of the RC church soon became predominantly Irish, and the Home Rule question often occupied its attention. In line with its sociological composition, this Church was closely involved with the formation of the Australian Labour Party in the 1890s, particularly through Cardinal P. F. Moran (Abp. of Sydney, 1884–1911). In the first World War Abp. D. Mannix (Abp. of Melbourne, 1917–63) was a key figure in the campaign against conscription, and many hold that the RC Church's influence is to be discerned in the split in the Australian Labour Party in the 1950s. The C of E tended to be upper class and heavily dependent upon England.

But by the end of the Second World War the pattern had changed. There is now little significant occupational difference between the various denominations, although Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Baptists and Congregationalists (c. 17 per cent of the whole population in the 1976 census) tend to cluster in rural areas. South Australia has a higher proportion of these, however, as it was designed initially as a place of free settlement for Protestant dissenters. The C of E (c. 28 per cent, without allowance for 'nominal Anglicanism') became autonomous in 1962. The RCs number c. 26 per cent.

Australian Churches have been responsible for missionary work in Papua and New Guinea and parts of Melanesia; in addition there are Aboriginal mission stations dating from the 1820s. The vast inland distances present problems which the Bush Brotherhoods, the first of which was founded in 1897, and the Australian Inland Mission (founded 1912), with its famous 'flying doctor' service, are designed to meet.

Two early RC women social pioneers are regarded by many as worthy of canonization, and ten Anglican priests and laymen who were martyred in New Guinea in 1942 are commemorated on New Guinea Martyrs' Day (2 Sept.).

E. Symonds, The History of the Australian Church ('Colonial Church Histories', 1898); R. A. Giles, The Constitutional History of the Australian Church (1929); [J. T.] R. Border, Church and State in Australia 1788–1872. A Constitutional Study of the Church of England in Australia (1962). P. F. Moran, History of the Catholic Church in Australasia (Sydney [1894]); E. M. O'Brien, The Dawn of Catholicism in Australia (2 vols., Sydney, 1928); H. N. Birt, Benedictine Pioneers in Australia (2 vols., 1911); T. [C.] Truman, Catholic Action and Politics (Melbourne, 1957; revised ed. London, 1960); H. Mayer (ed.), Catholics and the Free Society (Melbourne, 1961); T. L. Suttor, Hierarchy and Democracy in Australia 1788–1870. The Formation of Australian Catholicism (1965); P. Ford, Cardinal Moran and the A.L.P. A Study of the Encounter between Moran and Socialism, 1890–1907 (Melbourne, 1966). D. Pike, Paradise of Dissent. South Australia, 1829–1857 (1957; ed. 2, Melbourne, 1967). A. G. Austin, Australian Education 1788–1900 (Melbourne, 1961). M. Roe, Quest for Authority in Eastern Australia 1835–1851 (Parkville, 1965); J. Barrett, That Better Country. The Religious Aspect of Life in Eastern Australia, 1835–1850 (1966).

J. S. Gregory, 'Church and State, and Education in Victoria to 1872' in Melbourne Studies in Education, ii; 1958–9 (1960), pp. 1–88; L. Webb, 'Churches and the Australian Community', ib., pp. 89–131; K. Grose, '1847: The Educational Compromise of the Lord Bishop of Australia' in Journal of Religious History, i (1961), pp. 233–48; K. S. Inglis, 'Religious Behaviour' in A. F. Davies–S. Encel (edd.), Australian Society. A Sociological Introduction (Melbourne, 1965; London, 1966), pp. 43–75. There are also entries on individual Australian Churchmen in P. Serle, Dictionary of Australian Biography (2 vols., 1949). Latourette, v, pp. 130–76, with bibl. pp. 471–506, passim, and vii, pp. 186–90, with bibl. pp. 507–31, passim; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 353–70, and v (1963), pp. 241–52.

AUTHORITY. Religious or ecclesiastical authority should be distinguished from civil. The latter is concerned to enforce obedience to the laws and regulations of the state, while the former is mainly a power to influence belief or conduct. It may be objected that opinion should be formed and the conscience guided by reason alone. But Christianity claims to be based upon revelation, i.e. it professes to know truths transcending man's natural capacities of apprehension and revealed directly or indirectly by God. These truths are not, acc. e.g. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, contrary to reason, but their discovery is for the most part beyond its reach, and, as made known by God, they have the authority of God.

The utterances of the OT prophets have authority as inspired by the Spirit of God. To Christians, who believe that Jesus Christ is God incarnate, the revelation given through Him is final and His teaching has absolute authority, though some would maintain that even here the limitations inherent in His human nature must be taken into account. This revelation, it is held, was apprehended by the Apostles and transmitted to the Christian Church both by word of mouth and by the Apostolic writings which survive in the New Testament. As inspired by the Holy Spirit of God or Christ, their teaching has an authority second only to the utterances of Christ Himself.

This teaching is handed on by the Church, both through *Tradition (q.v.) and also through Scripture. Catholics hold that this teaching has absolute authority for the further reason that the Church is divinely guided into the whole truth of the Christian revelation by the Holy Spirit (Jn. 16. 13), and that the organs of this authoritative teaching include *General Councils and (for RCs) the Pope in his *ex cathedra pronouncements. Protestants, however, until quite recent times, have commonly confined this authority to the Bible, guaranteed by its appeal to the individual conscience rather than by the consent of the Church. Some have gone further and recognized no teaching as authoritative unless approved in each case by the Divine Spirit operating in the individual. See also Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission.

Church authority has been enforced in the past by temporal penalties, but it is now generally imposed, as in primitive times before the conversion of the Roman Empire, by spiritual censures alone, esp. that of *excommunication.

J. *Martineau, The Seat of Authority in Religion (1890); J. *Oman, Vision and Authority, or the Throne of St. Peter (1902); A. *Sabatier, Les Religions d'autorité et la religion de l'esprit (1903; Eng. tr., 1904); A. E. J. Rawlinson, Authority and Freedom (1924); T. A. *Lacey, Authority in the Church. A Study of Principles (1928). R. R. Williams, Authority in the Apostolic Age (1950). J. M. Todd (ed.), Problems of Authority (1962). J. Iverach in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 249–54, s.v.

AUTHORIZED VERSION OF THE BIBLE. At the *Hampton Court Conference (1604) Dr. John *Rainolds (or Reynolds, 1549–1607), the *Puritan President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, suggested that there should be a new translation of the Bible. R. *Bancroft, Bp. of London, having reluctantly concurred, *James I ordered that the work should be begun, and a strong body of revisers was formed, including the professors of Hebrew and Greek at Oxford and Cambridge and other leading scholars, about 50 in all, who sat in six groups, two at Oxford, two at Cambridge, and two at Westminster. Their instructions were to take the *Bishops' Bible as their basis, to consult all earlier versions, esp. the *Reims NT (see Douai) and the *Geneva Bible, to retain the old ecclesiastical terms (such as 'Church' for 'Congregation' and 'Baptism' for 'Washing'), and to exclude all marginal notes, unless required to explain some Hebrew or Greek word. Each group worked separately at first, with a special portion of the Bible assigned to it. They then sent their work to all the others for criticism, and final settlement was made at a general meeting of the chief members of each group, learned men from outside being called in to discuss cases of special difficulty. William *Tyndale's influence through various versions down to the Bishops' Bible fixed the general tone of the translation, which is also indebted to J. *Wycliffe. The work, which began in 1607, took two years and nine months to prepare for the press, and was paid for at 30s. each man per week, and by preferment. The final MS. (now lost) was bought by Robert Barker (d. 1645), the King's Printer, for £3,500, which included the copyright. It was seen through the press by Dr. Miles Smith (d. 1624) and Bp. T. Bilson (1547–1616), and first appeared in large folio volumes, including the *Apocrypha, printed in black letter, with headings and chapter-summaries in Roman type, at 25s. in sheets, 30s. bound, in 1611. The 'Preface of the translators', probably by Dr. Miles Smith, explains that it is a revision, not a new translation, and that the revisers, who had the original Hebrew and Greek texts before them, steered a course between the Puritan and Roman versions. On the title-page are the words 'Appointed to be read in Churches', but it has never otherwise been officially 'authorized'. It immediately superseded the Bishops' Bible, and won favour by its intrinsic merits rather than by official backing. Modern editions often omit the Preface and the Apocrypha, and the current text differs considerably in orthography from the first edition of 1611. In the U.S.A. it is commonly known as the 'King James Version'.

F. H. [A.] Scrivener, The Cambridge Paragraph Bible (1873), Introd., pp. ix–cix; largely repr. with revisions, id., The Authorized Edition of the English Bible, 1611. Its Subsequent Reprints and Modern Representatives (1884). B. F. Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (ed. 3 by W. A. Wright, 1905), pp. 107–21 and 255–78; A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 37–76, with documents pp. 331–77. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 196–227. R. C. *Trench, On the Authorized Version of the New Testament in Connection with some Recent Proposals for Revision (1858). Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), pp. 130–3, with reff. See further bibl. s.v. Bible (English Versions).

AUTO-DA-FÉ (Portug., 'act of faith'). The ceremony of the Spanish Inquisition at which, after a Procession, Mass, and Sermon, sentences were read and executed. Heretics were clad in the ceremonial san-benito (if unrepentant, grotesquely embroidered), with yellow mitre. Those sentenced to death were handed over to the secular power with an exhortation to mercy, though by *Innocent IV's bull 'Ad Extirpanda' (1252) execution had to follow within five days, and, until the last case at Seville in 1781, this was carried out by burning at the stake.

AUTO SACRAMENTAL (Sp. auto, 'ordinance'). A form of entertainment formerly common in Spain, analogous to the English *morality plays. These plays date from well into the medieval times, but the classical period was the 15th–16th cents., when the chief writers were J. de la Enzina, G. Vicente, and, best known of all, Pedro Calderón (1600–81). By this period the autos were always associated with the feast of *Corpus Christi, and in their later development took the form of allegorical treatments of the mystery of the Eucharist. They were preceded by a procession of the Host through the streets of the town to a space outside the house of some dignitary, where the performance was given. The procession and whole performance were at the public expense, and their magnificence was limited only by the resources of the city or town producing the play, which were strained to the utmost. Many of the plays are of considerable artistic merit, and they had a wide popularity. They were officially prohibited in 1765 by King Charles III, but for many years after this date they continued to be shown in the remoter districts.

E. González Pedroso (ed.), Autos sacramentales desde su origen hasta fines del siglo XVII (Biblioteca de Autores Españoles [lviii], 1865), with introd. pp. vii–lxi. H. A. Rennert, The Spanish Stage in the Time of Lope de Vega (New York, 1909), esp. pp. 297–333. A. A. Parker, 'Notes on the Religious Drama in Medieval Spain and the Origins of the "Auto Sacramental" ' in Modern Language Review, xxx (1935), pp. 170–82. Id., The Allegorical Drama of Calderón. An Introduction to the Autos Sacramentales (1943), with reff. N. D. Shergold, A History of the Spanish Stage from Medieval Times until the End of the Seventeenth Century (Oxford, 1967), esp. pp. 85–112 and 415–504, with extensive bibl.

AUTOCEPHALOUS (Gk. αὐτοκέφαλος, lit. 'himself the head'). A term used in the early Church to describe bishops who were under no superior authority and thus independent both of *Patriarch and *Metropolitan. Such were the bishops of *Cyprus, the bishops of *Armenia and Iberia down to the time of *Photius, and probably the British bishops before 597. The bishops of *Ravenna may also have had such autonomy for a time. In another sense, the word was used of Eastern bishops who were directly dependent on the Patriarch, without intermediate reference to a Metropolitan, as well as of priests belonging to patriarchal dioceses. Its principal later and current use, however, is for the modern national Churches that make up the Eastern Orthodox Church which, though normally in communion with *Constantinople, are governed by their own national synods. In the same connexion it is used of the independent monastery on Mount *Sinai.

AUXENTIUS (d. 373 or 374), Arian Bp. of Milan. A Cappadocian by birth, he was ordained c. 343 by Gregory, the intruded Bp. of *Alexandria, and soon became the most prominent supporter of *Arianism in the West. Though ignorant of Latin, he was appointed to the see of Milan by Constantius in 355. Despite condemnations for heresy at Councils at *Ariminum (359) and *Paris (360), he continued to hold his bishopric. Neither the approaches of *Hilary of Poitiers to *Valentinian on the subject in 364–5 nor *Athanasius's attack on him in 369 nor his condemnation by a synod held at Rome in 372 dislodged him, and he continued in possession of his see till his death. This was largely due to the fact that the Emperor found in him a useful instrument for maintaining a policy of doctrinal neutrality. He was succeeded by the orthodox St. *Ambrose. L. *Duchesne held that the *Ambrosian Liturgy, in his opinion the parent of the *Gallican Liturgies, owed its Eastern characteristics to Auxentius' practice.

Our knowledge of Auxentius derives from scattered reff. in St. Athanasius, St. *Basil, St. Hilary of Poitiers, and St. *Eusebius of Vercelli. L. Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), pp. 84–9 (Eng. tr., ed. 1903, pp. 90–5).

AUXILIARY SAINTS (Lat. auxilium, 'assistance'). A group of fourteen saints, also known as the Fourteen Holy Helpers, venerated for the supposed efficacy of their prayers on behalf of human necessities. They are: Sts. *George (23 Apr.), *Blaise (3 Feb.), *Erasmus (2 June), *Pantaleon (27 July), *Vitus (15 June), *Christopher (25 July), *Denys (9 Oct.), Cyriacus (8 Aug.), Acacius (8 May), *Eustace (20 Sept.), *Giles (1 Sept.), *Margaret (20 July), *Barbara (4 Dec.), *Catherine of Alexandria (25 Nov.). These are the traditional dates of their festivals, many of which have now been suppressed.

AVANCINI, NIKOLA (1611–86), *Jesuit ascetic writer and theologian. A native of Bretz, near *Trent, he entered the Society of Jesus in 1627 and held teaching appointments at Trieste (1634), Laibach (1635) and Vienna (1641). He became successively rector of the Colleges of Passau (1644), Vienna (1666) and Graz (1672). In 1675 he was appointed Visitor of Bohemia, in 1676 Provincial of the Austrian Province and in 1682 Assistant for the German Provinces. He had just been nominated temporary Vicar-General of the Order at his death. He wrote extensively on philosophy and theology, esp. during the earlier years of his life. His Vita et Doctrina Jesu Christi ex Quattuor Evangelistis Collecta (Vienna, 1665), a collection of terse and pithy daily meditations, deservedly established itself as a classic. It has been translated into most modern European languages and is still widely used, esp. by the clergy. His other published works include Poesis Lyrica (1659) and Orationes (3 vols., 1656–60).

There is a modern Eng. tr. (somewhat adapted) of Avancini's Vita et Doctrina Jesu Christi by K. D. Mackenzie (S.P.C.K.; 1937). Works listed in Sommervogel, i (1890), cols. 668–80, and viii (1898), col. 1711 f. E. Lamalle, S.J., in D.H.G.E., v (1931), col. 991 f., s.v., with bibl.; A. Fiocchi in E.C., ii (1949), col. 506, s.v., with bibl.

AVE MARIA. See Hail Mary.

AVE MARIS STELLA. One of the most popular Marian hymns, dating at least from the 9th cent. It is contained in the 9th cent. Codex Sangallensis 95 and has been attributed to various authors, one of the most probable assignations being that to *Paul the Deacon. The rhythmical hymn is a prayer of great simplicity and beauty for the maternal intercession of the BVM. In the Roman breviary it is one of the hymns for the Second Vespers of the Common of Feasts of the BVM. It has frequently been paraphrased and translated, perhaps the best-known version being that by E. *Caswall, 'Hail Thou Star of Ocean'.

Crit. text, with notes, in C. Blume, S.J. (ed.), Die Hymnen des Thesaurus Hymnologicus H. A. Daniels und andere Hymnen-Ausgaben (A.H.M.A., li, 1908), pp. 140–2. F. B. Plaine, O.S.B., 'Hymni Marialis Ave Maris Stella Expositio' in Studien und Mittheilungen aus dem Benedictiner- und Cistercienser-Orden, xiv (1893), pp. 244–55; G. M. Dreves, S.J., 'Der Hymnus vom Meeresstern' in Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, l (1896), pp. 558–69; A. dal Zotto, 'Ricerche sull'auctore dell'"Ave, Maris Stella"' in Aevum, xxv (1951), pp. 494–503; S. de Ibero, O.F.M.Cap., J. Garcia Garcia, E. R. Panyagua, C.M., 'Estudio del "Ave Maris Stella"' in Helmantica, viii (1957), pp. 421–75. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), p. 219 f., with further reff.

AVE VERUM CORPUS. Short anonymous Eucharistic hymn, probably dating from the 14th cent., beginning 'Ave verum corpus, natum Ex Maria Virgine' ('Jesu, Word of God Incarnate, Of the Virgin Mary born'). It was sung, esp. in Italy, France and Germany, after the *Preface or during the *Consecration at Mass, and is still frequently chanted, e.g. at *Benediction (settings by W. A. Mozart, C. Gounod, and others).

Crit. text in C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister (edd.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (A.H.M.A., liv; 1915), No. 167, p. 257 f. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, ii (1965), p. 298 f.

AVENCEBROL. See Avicebron.

AVERROISM. Averroes (Ibn Rushd, 1126–98) was the descendant of a good Mohammedan family at Cordova, where he studied theology and law, later also medicine, mathematics, and philosophy. After being cadi at Cordova and Seville, he became the friend and, in 1182, the physician of the caliph, Abu Jacub Jusuf, and also enjoyed the favour of his son, Al Mansur, until in 1195 he was accused of heresy and exiled, but recalled shortly before his death. His chief claim to fame rests on his Commentaries on *Aristotle, for which he was known in the Middle Ages as 'The Commentator'. Though generally a faithful interpreter of the philosopher, whom he venerated as the greatest genius of all times, his Aristotelianism, like that of most Arabic philosophers, is tinged with *Neoplatonist ideas. Acc. to him God, the Prime Mover, is entirely separated from the world, in which He exercises no Providence, while the celestial spheres are intelligences, emanating from God in a descendent series until they reach man. He taught, further, the eternity and potentiality of matter and the unity of the human intellect ('monopsychism'), i.e. the doctrine that only one intellect exists for the whole human race in which every individual participates, to the exclusion of personal immortality. He consequently interpreted the Koran allegorically, though retaining the literal interpretation as the only one suitable for the common people.

The theories of Averroes became known in Catholic Europe c. 1230. At first the danger to the Catholic faith was not recognized. Both Roger *Bacon and, in his earlier work, *Albert the Great misunderstood the doctrine of Averroes on the intellect. There is no certain evidence before 1256 that the bearing of the views of Averroes on the personal immortality of man was understood. In that year Pope Alexander IV commanded Albert the Great, then at the papal court, to examine the question. Albert did this in his 'De Unitate Intellectus contra Averroem'. A year earlier, in Paris the Faculty of Arts had prescribed the study of Aristotle's 'Metaphysics' and of his works on natural science. As a result, within a decade, there were members of the Faculty who were teaching doctrines of Aristotle and his commentators which were destructive of the Christian faith. Their leader was *Siger of Brabant. A reaction to their teaching is clearly seen in the later works of St. *Bonaventure, and also in the 'De Unitate Intellectus contra Averroistas' which St. *Thomas Aquinas, who had returned to Paris in 1269, directed chiefly against Siger. In the year of its publication (1270) Stephen Tempier, Bp. of Paris, condemned a series of 13 errors, dealing with the eternity of the world, the denial of the universal providence of God, the unity of the human intellect, and the denial of free will. In 1277 he issued a more comprehensive list of errors. In the preamble he accused Siger and his followers of saying that 'things are true according to philosophy but not according to the Catholic faith, as though there were two contradictory truths'. This is the doctrine known as that of the double truth. After 1277 Averroism could no longer be taught in the University of Paris, but it infiltrated again in the 14th cent., when it was proclaimed e.g. by John of Jandun. It survived in Italy, esp. at Padua, until the time of the Renaissance.

The standard ed. of the Lat. tr. of Averroes' commentary on Aristotle is still that pr. in the Works of Aristotle, 11 vols., Venice, 1550–2, repr. several times during the 16th cent. Modern ed. by H. A. Wolfson and others (Mediaeval Academy of America publications, liv, lix, lxii, lxv, lxxi, lxxviii, lxxix, etc.; Cambridge, Mass., 1949 ff.). German tr., with commentary, of other works by M. Horten, Die Metaphysik des Averroes (1198†), nach dem Arabischen übersetzt und erläutert (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und ihrer Geschichte, xxxvi; 1912); id., Die Hauptlehren des Averroes nach seiner Schrift. Die Widerlegung des Gazali, aus dem arabischen Originale übersetzt und erläutert (1913). E. *Renan, Averroès et l'averroïsme (1852). L. Gauthier, La Theorie d'Ibn Rochd (Averroès) sur les Rapports de la Religion et de la Philosophie (Paris, 1909); id., Ibn Rochd (Averroès) ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1948). M. *Grabmann, Der lateinische Averroismus des 13. Jahrhunderts und seine Stellung zur christlichen Weltanschauung (Sb. (Bayr.), 1931, Hft. 2). R. de Vaux, O.P., 'La Première Entrée d'Averroës chez les Latins' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, xxii (1933), pp. 193–245; D. Salmon, O.P., 'Note sur la première influence d'Averroès' in Revue Néoscolastique de Philosophie, lx (1937), pp. 203–12. M. Alonso, S.J., Teologia de Averroes (Madrid, 1947). B. Nardi, Saggi sull'aristotelismo padovano dal secolo XIV al XVI (Florence, 1958), passim; id., Studi de filosofia medievale (1960), passim. F van Steenberghen, 'Une Légende tenace: la théorie de la double vérité' in Académie royale de Belgique, Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences morales et politiques, Sér. 5, lvi (1970), pp. 179–96. M. Fakhry, Islamic Occasionalism and its Critique by Averroès and Aquinas (1958). M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 1032–92, s.v.

AVESTA. The Sacred Books of the *Zoroastrians or Parsees, which set forth the theology and religious system of the ancient Persians. The title used by earlier modern scholars, 'Zend-Avesta', rests on a misunderstanding. The work, which was based on much older matter, was put together under Shapur II (310–79), when it reached substantially its present outline. Considerable additions were made after the Arab Conquest of Persia (637–51) and a very great deal has been lost since. The main subjects dealt with are the ritual, hymns, liturgy, and law of the Parsees, and it is divided into five sections. The comparatively short portion known as the Gathas (versified sermons), written in a slightly different dialect, appears to be the oldest part of the work and perhaps goes back to Zoroaster himself. Knowledge of the work was first brought to the W. by a French scholar, Anquetil du Perron, who journeyed to India in 1754 with the express purpose of procuring the text, and after many difficulties returned with a copy for publication in 1771.

The standard edition is that of K. F. Geldner (Stuttgart, 1885–96). Eng. trans. in The Sacred Books of the East (ed. F. Max Müller), iv, xxiii, xxxi, by J. Darmesteter and L. H. Mills. See also works cited under Zoroastrianism.

AVICEBRON (c. 1020–c. 1070). The name commonly given to the Spanish Jewish philosopher, Salomon ben Gabirol (i.e. Gabriel). He was also known as 'Avencebrol'. Medieval Christian writers wrongly supposed him to be an Arabian (Mohammedan). His system, which contained both *Aristotelian and *Neoplatonist elements, was in essence *pantheistic, and St. *Thomas Aquinas directed against him his Opusculum 15, 'De substantiis separatis'. His chief treatise, the 'Fons Vitae', was an Arabic work, written in dialogue form, which in a Latin translation became very popular in the Middle Ages. He also wrote poems and hymns.

The Arabic original of the Fons Vitae has been lost; extracts surviving in medieval Heb. tr. were rediscovered and ed., with Fr. tr. and important introd. on his life and works, by S. Munk, Mélanges de philosophie juive et arabe (1859); 12th cent. Lat. tr. ed., with introd., by C. Baeumker (B.G.P.M., i, Hftt. 2–4; 1892–5); abridged Eng. tr. of vol. iii by H. E. Wedeck (New York, 1962; London, 1963). Arabic text of 'The Improvement of Moral Qualities', ed., with Eng. tr. and introd., by S. S. Wise (Columbia University Oriental Studies, New York, 1901). Modern ed. of his poems, written in Heb., by H. N. Bialik–J. H. Ravnitzki (3 vols., Berlin and Tel-Aviv, 1924–32). J. Guttmann, Die Philosophie des Salomon ibn Gabirol (Avicebron) dargestellt und erläutert (1889); M. Wittmann, Die Stellung des hl. Thomas von Aquin zu Avenceb ro (Ibn Gebirol) (B.G.P.M., iii, Hft. 3; 1900); id., Zur Stellung Avencebrol's (Ibn Gebirol's) im Entwicklungsgang der arabischen Philosophie (ib., v, Hft. 1; 1905). J. M. Millás Vallicrosa, Selomó ibn Gabirol como poeta y filósofo (Biblioteca Hebraicoespañola, i; 1945); E. Bertola, Salomon ibn Gabirol (Avicebron). Vita, opere e pensiero (1953); F. Brunner, Platonisme et aristotélisme. La Critique d'ibn Gabirol par Saint Thomas d'Aquin (1965). A. Geiger, Salomo Gabirol und seine Dichtungen (1867). I. Husik, A History of Mediaeval Jewish Philosophy (New York, 1916), pp. 59–79. M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 1104–7, s.v., with bibl.

AVICENNA (980–1037), Arabian philosopher, who also acted as the court physician to a number of Persian princes. His full name was Abu 'Ali al Hosain ibn 'Abdallah ibn Sina. His teaching exercised a great influence on the earlier *Schoolmen. His philosophy was in the main *Aristotelian, but it was also much influenced by *Neoplatonism.

He held that there was a hierarchy of emanations from the Godhead which mediate between God and man. Of these the most important is the 'active intellect', which Avicenna conceived as an entity in a Platonic world of ideas. The 'passive intellect', which is his name for the individual mind, can acquire ideas only by contact with the active, and is thus secondary. He distinguished, in the usual Aristotelian fashion, between necessary and contingent being, holding that God was necessary and the universe contingent; but between the two he set the world of ideas, which he held to be necessary, though not of itself, but because God has made it so. He was the author of c. 100 treatises, including a Canon of Medicine, which long enjoyed a great reputation, and an immense encyclopaedic work, Ash-Shifa or 'Sanatio'.

His works, which were written mainly in Arabic, were known to the Middle Ages in Hebrew and (esp.) Latin trr. (the latter often made from the Heb.). Collections of his works were publ., in Lat. tr., at Venice, 1495, 1508, and 1546. A. M. Goichon, Lexique de la langue philosophique d'Ibn Sinā (Avicenne) (1938). C. de Vaux, Avicenne ('Les Grands Philosophes'; 1900); G. M. Wickens (ed.), Avicenna: Scientist & Philosopher (1952); S. M. Afnan, Avicenna. His Life and Works (1958). A. M. Goichon, La Distinction de l'essence et de l'existence d'après Ibn Sinā (Avicenne) (1937); id., La Philosophie d'Avicenne et son Influence en Europe médiévale (1944). M. C. Hernández, La metafísica de Avicena (Granada, 1949); L. Gardet, La Pensée religieuse d'Avicenne (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, xli; 1951), with reff. to recent edd. of his religious works. W. Klein, Die Substanzlehre Avicennas bei Thomas von Aquin auf Grund der ihm zugänglichen lateinischen Übersetzungen (1933). E. Gilson, 'Avicenne et le point de départ de Duns Scot' in A.H.D.L.M.A., ii (1927), pp. 89–149; 'Les Sources gréco-arabes de l'augustinisme avicennisant', ib., iv (1930), pp. 5–158. O. Chahine, Ontologie et Théologie chez Avicenne (1962). O. C. Gruner, A Treatise on the Canon of Avicenna, incorporating a translation of the first Book (1930). G. Sarton, Introduction to the History of Science, i (Baltimore, 1927), esp. pp. 709–13, with further bibl. S. H. Nasr, Three Muslim Sages (Cambridge, Mass., 1964), pp. 9–51, 131–47, with reff. Überweg, ii, pp. 307–10. C. Brockelmann, Geschichte der arabischen Litteratur, i (ed. 1943), pp. 589–99, and suppl. i (1937), pp. 812–28. Details of modern edd. and further lit. in P. J. Menasce, O. P., Arabische Philosophie (1948), pp. 35–8. Full bibl. of MSS. by G. C. Anawati, O.P. (Cairo, 1950; in Arabic). On Lat. MSS., M.-T. d'Alverny, 'Avicenna Latinus' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxviii (1962), pp. 281–316; xxix (1963), pp. 217–33; xxx (1964), pp. 221–72; xxxi (1965), pp. 271–86; xxxii (1966), pp. 257–302, xxxiii (1967), pp. 305–27; xxxiv (1968), pp. 315–43; xxxv (1969), pp. 301–35; xxxvi (1970), pp. 243–80. M. M. Gorce in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 1107–19, s.v., with detailed bibl.

AVIGNON. Acc. to tradition, its first Bp. was St. Rufus, a disciple of St. *Paul. It was in the 12th cent. a centre of the *Albigenses, and for this reason its defences were dismantled by Louis VIII in 1226. From 1309 till 1377 it was the residence ('*Babylonian Captivity') of the Popes, though it did not become Papal property until 1348, when Clement VI bought it from Joanna, the Queen of Naples. After the Papal court had returned to Rome, two *antipopes, Clement VII and Benedict XIII, lived in Avignon, the latter being finally expelled in 1408.

T. Okey, The Story of Avignon ('Medieval Towns Series', 1911). E. Duprat, Les Origines de l'église d'Avignon. Des origines à 879 (1909). J. Girard-P. Pansier, La Cour temporelle d'Avignon aux XIVe et XVIe siècles (Recherches Historiques et Documents sur Avignon, le Comtat-Venaissin et la Principauté d'Orange, i; 1909). G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon, 1305–1378 (1912; Eng. tr. of 1949 ed., 1963; ed. 10 [1965]); Y. Renouard, La Papauté à Avignon; (1954; Eng. tr., 1970). B. Guillemain, La Cour Pontificale d'Avignon (1309–1327). Étude d'une société (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cci; 1962). H. Labande, Les Palais des papes et les monuments d'Avignon au XIVe siècle (2 vols., Marseilles, 1925). H. Hoberg (ed.), Die Inventare des päpstlichen Schatzes in Avignon 1314–1376 (S.T., cxi; 1944). J. Girard in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 1121–53, s.v.

AVITUS, St. (d. c. 519), Bp. of Vienne from c. 490. Alcimus Ecdicius Avitus was born in Auvergne of a Roman senatorial family. Succeeding to the see of Vienne in Gaul on the death of his father, Isychius (490), he exercised an enduring influence on the ecclesiastical life of Burgundy and won the Arian King Sigismund to the acceptance of Catholic orthodoxy. He was also a strong advocate of the movement for the closer ecclesiastical union of Gaul with Rome. His deserved reputation for learning greatly impressed King *Clovis, then still a pagan. Among his surviving writings are five poems De Mosaicae Historiae Gestis, two complete homilies (and fragments of many others), a poem De Virginitate, and some 100 epistles. Feast day, 5 Feb.

Works ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J., Paris, 1643 (repr., via A. *Gallandi, in J. P. Migne, PL, lix. 191–388). Revised text by R. Peiper in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi VI (ii; 1883); also by U. Chevalier (Lyons, 1890). Study by A. Charaux (Paris, 1876). H. Goelzer, Le Latin de S. Avit (1909); M. Burckhardt, Die Briefsammlung des Bischofs Avitus von Vienne (1938). E. Delaruelle, 'Saint Avit' in J. R. Palanque (ed.), Le Christianisme et l'Occident Barbare (1945), pp. 75–107. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 337–45; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 475. F. Vernet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 2639–44.

AVRILLON, JEAN BAPTISTE ÉLIE (1652–1729), French theologian and spiritual writer. He made his profession as a *Minim in 1761. Among his writings were Réflexions théologiques, morales et affectives sur les attributs de Dieu (1705) and manuals for the observance of *Lent and *Advent. E. B. *Pusey published in 1844 adapted English versions of A Guide for passing Advent holily and A Guide for passing Lent holily, and, in 1845, of The Year of Affections.

Pourrat, iv (1928), pp. 333–6; J. de Guibert in Dict. Sp., i (1937), col. 1185 f.

AXUM, also Aksum. The ancient religious and political capital of Abyssinia (*Ethiopia). Christianity was established here in the 4th cent. under St. *Frumentius. The city is still held in great veneration as a religious centre.

J. T. Bent, The Sacred City of the Ethiopians. Being a record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia in 1893 (1893), esp. pp. 152–97 and 238–85. Deutsche Aksum-Expedition hg. von der Generalverwaltung der königlichen Museen zu Berlin (by E. Littmann, T. von Lüpke, D. Krencker, and R. Zahn; 4 vols. bound in one, Berlin, 1913). U. Monneret de Villard, Aksum. Ricerche di topografia generale (Analecta Orientalia, xvi; 1938). S. Puglisi, 'Primi risultati delle indagini compiute dalla missione archeologica di Aksum' in Africa Italiana, viii (1941), pp. 95–153. C. Conti Rossini in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 1257–9, s.v. 'Axoum'.

AYLIFFE, JOHN (1676–1732), English jurist. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford. His strong Whig sympathies brought him into conflict with the dominant Jacobitism of Oxford, and his Ancient and Present State of the University of Oxford (2 vols., 1714) led to expulsion from the university and loss of his degrees. In 1726 he published his Parergon Iuris Canonici Anglicani (ed. 2, 1734), arranged alphabetically, which remains a treatise of high authority. In 1734 his New Pandect of the Civil Law (vol. i, on Roman law; all publd.) appeared posthumously.

S. Gibson, 'A Neglected Oxford Historian' in Oxford Essays in Medieval History Presented to Herbert Edward Salter (1934), No. XI, pp. 234–41. G. P. Macdonell in D.N.B., ii (1885), pp. 279–81, s.v.

AYTON, JOHN (d. before 1350), English canonist. His name occurs in several forms, among them 'Acton' (so in D.N.B.), 'Athone', 'Achedune'. He was a pupil of Abp. J. *Stratford and became a canon of *Lincoln. He wrote a commentary on the 'Constitutions' of the Papal legates Otto and Ottobon, which was printed in the 1496 and later editions of W. *Lyndwood's Provinciale.

Besides the prefaces to the various edd. of Lyndwood, see also F. W. *Maitland, Roman Canon Law in the Church of England (1898), pp. 6–14, 55 and 76. S. L. Lee in D.N.B., i (1885), p. 67; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 11–12; B.R.U.C., p. 2, all s.v. 'Acton, John'.

AZAZEL (עֲזָאזֵל). In OT theology, the demon—originally probably a goat-deity—dwelling in the desert, to whom the 'scapegoat' of the sin-offering was dispatched (Lev. 16. 1–28). In Enoch 6, 8, 10 he is a leader of the fallen angels, a Prometheus-like instructor of mankind in crafts, and the author of all sin. In later Jewish, *Gnostic, and *Mohammedan traditions, he is a leader of demons.

T. K. *Cheyne, 'The date and origin of the ritual of the "Scapegoat"' in Z.A.T.W., xv (1895), pp. 153–6; G. R. *Driver, 'Three Technical Terms in the Pentateuch' in Journal of Semitic Studies, i (1956), pp. 97–105, esp. p. 97 f. J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough, vi, The Scapegoat (1913), p. 210, note 4. T. K. Cheyne in E.Bi., i (1899), cols. 393–8, s.v.; S. R. *Driver in H.D.B., i (1898), p. 207 f., s.v.

AZYMITES (also Lat. 'Infermentarii'). The name given to the W. Church by the Easterns at the time of the schism of 1054, with reference to their use of unleavened bread (τὰ ἄζυμα) in the Liturgy, which, on the E. view, invalidated the rite. See also Bread, Leavened and Unleavened.

B

BAAL (Heb. בַּעַל, Gk. Βάαλ or Βαάλ). The word, which means literally 'lord' or 'owner', e.g. of a house (Ex. 22. 7, Jgs. 19. 22), was used esp. of the Semitic deities who were held to produce agricultural and animal fertility. The older view that there was a supreme Deity, Baal, to be identified with the sun god, rests on insufficient evidence. The debased rites which arose in connexion with Baal nature worship caused it to be vigorously attacked by the Hebrew prophets, who constantly found themselves compelled to resist attempts to fuse the worship of Jehovah with that of the local Baalim. The 'high places' at which the cultus was centred were finally destroyed through the efforts of such men as *Elijah and King Josiah. It was the abhorrence of Baal worship that in later times led the Jews to read the word 'Bosheth' ('shame') as a substitute wherever Baal occurred in the sacred text; hence the two forms of the same name, 'Eshbaal' (1 Chr. 9. 39) and 'Ishbosheth' (2 Sam. 2. 8). See also Bel.

W. R. *Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (ed. 3, by S. A. *Cook, 1927), passim. L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'Le Ba'al cananéen de Beïsan et sa parèdre' in R. Bibl., xxxvii (1928), pp. 512–43; id., 'La Notion biblique du haut-lieu', pt. i, ib. lv (1948), pp. 245–78. R. Dussaud, 'Le Vrai Nom de Ba'al' in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, cxiii (1936), pp. 5–20. A. S. Kapelrud, Baal in the Ras Shamra Texts (Copenhagen, 1952). A. S. *Peake in H.D.B., i (1900), pp. 209–11, s.v.; F. Nötscher, T. Klauser, H. Bacht, S.J., A. *Baumstark, and O. Eisenfeldt in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1063–1113, s.v., with extensive reff.

BABEL, Tower of. Acc. to Gen. 11. 1–9, the tower reaching to heaven, the presumptuous construction of which was frustrated by Jehovah through confusion of languages among its builders. The story was probably inspired by the famous Babylonian temple-tower ('ziggurat') of Etemenanki, which symbolized for the Israelites the pride of the Gentile powers, destined by God to dissolution from within. The immediate purpose of the narrative, which plays upon the words Babil (Babylon) and the Heb. בָּלַל (balal, 'to confuse'), seems to have been to account for the division of languages.

Besides comm. on Genesis, cited s.v., K. *Budde, 'Einheitlichkeit und Erhaltung von Gen. 11. 1–9' in Vom Alten Testament Karl Marti zum siebzigsten Geburtstage gewidmet (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xli; 1925), pp. 45–51. Recent archaeological reconstructions include R. Koldewey, Der Babylonische Turm (Mitteilungen der deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft zu Berlin, No. 59; 1918); H. Gressmann, The Tower of Babel (Hilda Stroock Lectures for 1927; posthumously ed. J. Obermann, New York, 1928); T. Dombart, Der Babylonische Turm (Der Alte Orient, xxix, Hft. 2; 1930); G. Contenau, Le Déluge babylonien suivi de Ishtar aux enfers, la Tour de Babel (Bibliothèque Historique; 1941), pp. 255–87 (revised ed. 1952, pp. 226–58, with bibl. p. 265). L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'De la tour de Babel au temple' in R. Bibl., liii (1946), pp. 403–40; A. Parrot, La Tour de Babel (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, ii; 1953; Eng. tr., 1955). A. Romeo in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 619–21, for further bibl.

BABYLAS, St. (d. c. 250), Bp. of *Antioch. He succeeded Zebinus in the see of Antioch c. 240. St. *Chrysostom relates that he once refused an emperor (prob. *Philip the Arabian, 244–9, nominally a Christian) access to a church on the ground of an unrepented crime. He was imprisoned in the *Decian persecution and died in bonds. In 351 his remains were translated to Daphne, a suburb of Antioch, to hallow a former temple of Apollo for Christian worship. In 362 *Julian the Apostate ordered their removal when unable to obtain a reply from the oracle of Apollo, and they were brought back to Antioch with Psalms ridiculing the heathen idols. Babylas became the object of a devoted cultus at Antioch, and St. Chrysostom preached two panegyrics (untrustworthy as historical sources) in his honour. Later his cultus extended to the W., and he was celebrated in both prose and verse by St. *Aldhelm of Sherborne. Feast day, 24 Jan. in W., 4 Sept. in E.

*Eusebius, H.E., VI. xxix. 4 and xxxix. 4; *Sozomen, H.E., v. 19; *Theodoret, H.E., iii. 6. Chrysostom's sermons on Babylas are in PG, I, 527–72; on their slight historical value see H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 209 and 232. Three series of Acta (all late) are printed in AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 569–78; P. Peeters, S.J., 'La Passion de S. Basile d'Épiphanie', in Anal. Boll., xlviii (1930), pp. 302–23, incl. text and reff. to Georgian material on St. Babylas. Aldhelm, De Virginitate Prosa, xxxiii, ed. R. Ehwald in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xv (1919), p. 274 f., and id., De Virginitate Carmen, 11, 1035–70, ib., p. 397 f. 'Les Deux Saints Babylas' in Anal. Boll., xix (1900), pp. 5–8. A. P. Frutaz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 1169, s.v., for further bibl.

BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY. The captivity in Babylon, whither under Nebuchadnezzar (604–562 B.C.) the Jews were deported in two batches in 597 and 586 B.C. respectively (2 Kgs. 24. 14–16; 25. 11). Acc. to Ez. 2, they were permitted to return after the Persian ruler, Cyrus, had captured Babylon in 538 B.C., though many of them did not return till at least a hundred years later (Neh. 1 ff.).

The expression was used metaphorically by F. *Petrarch and subsequent writers of the exile of the Popes at *Avignon from 1309 to 1377. M. *Luther's treatise on the Babylonish Captivity of the Church (1520) was a sustained attack on the 'bondage' in which the Church had been held by the withdrawal of the chalice from the laity, the doctrine of *transubstantiation, and the *Sacrifice of the Mass.

BACH, JOHANN SEBASTIAN (1685–1750), German composer. After being court organist at Weimar (1708–17) and court 'kapellmeister' at Cöthen (1717–23), he became cantor at the Thomas school at Leipzig in 1723, a post he retained till his death. His chief religious works belong to his Leipzig period, notably the two great Passions acc. to St. Matthew and to St. John and the Mass in B minor. The music, which in consummate contrapuntal art expresses deep spiritual realities, was originally used at Protestant services but is now performed almost exclusively outside Divine worship. The Passions, based upon the liturgical narratives, are interspersed with arias and chorales; the Masses are divided up into a series of separate numbers, acc. to the custom of the time, and permeated with a mysterious symbolism. The Protestant German chorale has inspired many of his motets and esp. the cantatas, designed to be musical accompaniments and interpretations of the sermon. Among Bach's other choral works the 'Magnificat' and the Christmas Oratorio are the most famous. Bach's music remained forgotten after his death until it was rediscovered in the 19th cent. by F. Mendelssohn and other 'Romantic' composers. It is now generally recognized to belong to the same great timeless tradition as that of G. P. *Palestrina and W. A. Mozart, and, though it was composed in the service of the German Lutheran Church, its religious depth is confined to no denomination.

Collected ed. of his works publd. for the Bachgesellschaft (59 vols.+index 2 vols., 1851–'1899' [1900]); new ed., Kassel, &c., 1954 ff.). Letters ed. H. U. E. H. Müller von Asow (Ratisbon, 1938; ed. 2, 1950). Other docc. in H. T. David–A. Mendel (edd.), The Bach Reader (New York, 1940; London, 1946; revised ed., 1966). Primary life by J. N. Forkel (Leipzig, 1802; Eng. tr., 1820; modern Eng. tr., 1920). Other lives by P. Spitta (2 vols., Leipzig, 1873–80; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1884–5), R. L. Poole (London, 1882), A. *Schweitzer (in Fr., Leipzig, 1905; Eng. tr., 1911), A. Pirro (Paris, 1906; Eng. tr., 1956), C. H. H. Parry (London, 1909), and C. S. Terry (ib., 1928); also other works by the last author. K. Geiringer–Irene Geiringer, Johann Sebastian Bach. The Culmination of an Era (New York, 1966; London, 1967). J. Chailley, Les Passions de J.-S. Bach (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris. Série 'Études et Méthodes', ix; 1963). J. A. Westrup, Bach Cantatas (BBC Music Guides, 1966). C. S. Terry in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), i (1954), pp. 293–321.

BACON, FRANCIS (1561–1626), Viscount St. Albans, philosopher, essayist, orator, and lawyer. He was the eighth and youngest son of Sir Nicholas Bacon (1509–79), *Elizabeth I's first Lord Keeper, and of a daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke (1504–76), at one time tutor to *Edward VI. Born at York House in the Strand, London, he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1573, was admitted to Gray's Inn in 1576 and, after abandoning an intended diplomatic career, decided to make law his profession. Elizabeth used him as her 'learned counsel', but, in spite of frequent petitions to his uncle, Lord Burghley, and his friendship (from 1591) with Essex, he did not rise to office during her reign. In 1584 he became M.P. for Melcombe Regis and later for Taunton (1586), Liverpool (1589), Middlesex (1593), and Southampton (1597). In 1601 he played a leading part in the trial and condemnation of his former friend, issuing at the Queen's behest A Declaration of the Practices and Treasons attempted and committed by Robert, late Earl of Essex, and his Complices (1601).

In the Parliament of 1604, in which Bacon defended the Union and the King's retention of feudal rights, *James I realized his worth. In 1607 he became Solicitor-General, in 1608 Clerk of the Star Chamber, in 1613 Attorney-General, and in 1617 Lord Keeper. For several years there was strong rivalry between Coke and Bacon through the conflicting claims of the Courts of Common Law and Chancery. In 1618 he was made Lord Chancellor and also Viscount St. Albans. It became clear, however, that his position depended increasingly on the personal pleasure of Buckingham; and when in 1620 Parliament set up a committee to examine abuses in the Courts of Justice, Bacon was seized on as a referee for the legality of Crown patents, and, at the instigation of Coke, accused of bribery and corruption. In 1621 he was disgraced and retired into private life.

Throughout his life Bacon was strongly attracted to the problems of philosophy. His Proficience and Advancement of Learning (1605) was designed to sum up the stock and deficiencies of human knowledge and to insist that since man's power to control nature was in his own hands, success rested on applying the right methods. By inductions from the simplest facts of experience man could reach forward to the discovery of fundamental principles, which in turn would issue in beneficial practical results. In the Novum Organum (1620) he expounded these ideas more systematically. Here he outlined what he termed the 'Great Instauration' and developed his well-known analysis of the fallacies which beset human thought (idola tribus, idola specus, idola fori, idola theatri). In 1623 followed his De Augmentis Scientiarum, an expanded Latin version of the book of 1605. His New Atlantis (1627, posthumous) described the ideal State, in which the New Philosophy would be carried through by political machinery and State guidance, aided by a college of science ('Solomon's House'). Meanwhile Bacon's Essays had been appearing with additions in each new edition (1597, 1612, 1625); the famous one on 'Atheism' first saw the light in 1612.

Bacon carried his empiricism into the realm of morals. He denied the existence of absolute rules of conduct or of a 'summum bonum'. But though his philosophy of experience, with its grandiose claims, attracted much attention among his contemporaries, it is less clear that it exercised the influence on later thought commonly attributed to it. It stood, however, in the main stream of English philosophical tradition. His religion was that of a discriminating, yet orthodox, member of the Church of England.

Opera Omnia, publ. in 6 vols., Amsterdam, 1661–84; standard ed. by J. Spedding–R. L. Ellis–D. D. Heath (14 vols., London, 1857–74), of which the last 7 vols. comprise the Letters and Life of Francis Bacon (incl. his Occasional Works, ed. J. Spedding). Philosophical Works, partly repr. with introd. by J. M. Robertson (London, 1905). Modern edd. (with introd. and notes) of his Essays by E. A. *Abbott ('London Series of English Classics', 2 vols., 1876) and of his Novum Organum by T. Fowler (Oxford, 1878). Studies by T. Fowler ('English Philosophers', 1881), R. W. *Church ('English Men of Letters', 1884), E. A. Abbott (London, 1885), G. W. Steeves (ib., 1910), I. Levine (ib., 1925), Mary Sturt (ib., 1932), C. [W. S.] *Williams (ib., 1933), B. Bevan (ib., 1960), and C. D. Bowen (ib., 1963). F. H. Anderson, The Philosophy of Francis Bacon (Chicago, 1948); id., Francis Bacon. His Life and Thought ([Los Angeles] 1962); J. G. Crowther, Francis Bacon, the first Statesman of Science (1960). P. Rossi, Francesco Bacone: dalla magia alla scienza (Bari, 1957; Eng. tr., 1968). A. Levi, Il pensiero di Francesco Bacone considerato in relazione con le filosofie della natura del rinascimento e col razionalismo cartesiano (1925). A. E. *Taylor, Philosophical Studies (1934), ch. vii ('Francis Bacon', Henriette Hertz Lecture, 1926). R. W. Gibson, Francis Bacon. A Bibliography of his Works and of Baconiana to the Year 1750 (Oxford, 1950; supplement, privately issued, 1959).

BACON, ROGER (c. 1214–c. 1292), 'Doctor mirabilis', *Franciscan philosopher. Born, according to late evidence, at either Ilminster in Somerset or Bisley in Glos., he possibly studied at *Oxford, and certainly in *Paris. His earliest writings are a series of quaestiones on *Aristotle's 'Physics' and 'Metaphysics', on the Pseudo-Aristotelian 'De Plantis', and on the '*Liber de Causis'. They are among the earliest lectures on these books, and may be assigned to the years between 1240–1 and 1245–6. He possibly also began the study of theology. He returned to England c. 1247, and for the next ten years devoted himself to the study of languages, mathematics and experimental science, under the influence of Robert *Grossteste. About 1257 he entered the Franciscan Order, probably under the misapprehension that he would have freedom to pursue his chosen studies.

A new stage in Bacon's career was reached in the middle 'sixties. Back in Paris at the Franciscan convent, he had a chance of expounding his ideas on the defects which he saw in the theological education to a clerk in the household of Cardinal Guy le Gros de Foulques, who not long after (Feb. 1265) became Pope Clement IV. The Pope bade him dispatch to Rome an account of his doctrines 'secretly and without delay', under the mistaken belief that they were already fully developed in writing. Bacon set to work to write, and in 1267 sent to the Pope an encyclopaedic work, known as the 'Opus maius', in seven parts: causes which have hindered the progress of philosophy among the Latins, the services that philosophy can render to theology, the importance of the study of languages for a proper understanding of the text of the Bible, mathematics, optics, experimental sciences ('domina omnium scientiarum et finis totius speculationis'), and moral philosophy. Shortly afterwards he wrote two briefer works, the 'Opus minus' and 'Opus tertium', which were partly synopses and partly elaborations of sections of the 'Opus maius'.

The death of Pope Clement IV in Nov. 1268 brought to an end any hope of a papal commendation for his ideas. Bacon lived more than twenty years longer, and was able to continue writing. The 'Compendium Studii Philosophiae' (c. 1272), 'Communia Naturalium', 'Communia Mathematica' and 'Compendium Studii Theologiae' (1292) are all later than the 'Opus maius'. In 1277 he is said to have been condemned by the General of the Franciscan Order for 'suspect novelties' and 'dangerous doctrine' and imprisoned for a time. The background to this condemnation is not known. According to the Oxford chronicler, John Rous, he was buried in the Franciscan convent at Oxford.

Bacon's place in the history of thought is hard to assess. Increasing knowledge of the work of his contemporaries has shown that the claims once made for his originality cannot be sustained. In philosophy and in science he had an exceptionally wide knowledge of works translated from Greek and Arabic, but he was never able to construct a unified system. His irascible nature and his intemperate criticism of those who disagreed with him worked against the acceptance of his proposals for the reform of theological studies. Nevertheless he was a man of wide vision. The history of his posthumous reputation remains to be written. Never entirely forgotten in the Middle Ages, his real achievement was submerged in that of a man of magical powers and imaginary mechanical inventions. More recently misguided attempts have been made to represent him as a martyr of science and of the freedom of thought.

'Opus Maius', ed. J. H. Bridges (3 vols., Oxford, 1897–1900); 'Opus Minus', 'Opus Tertium', and 'Compendium Studii Philosophiae', ed. J. S. Brewer in Rogeri Bacon Opera quaedam hactenus inedita, i (all publd., London, 1859). 'Opus Tertium', ed. P. Duhem (Quaracchi, 1909). Bacon's 'Moralis Philosophia', ed. F. Delorme, O.F.M.–E. Massa (Zürich, 1953). 'Compendium Studii Theologiae', ed. H. *Rashdall (British Society for Franciscan Studies, Aberdeen, 1911; in an appendix in the vol., A. G. Little attempts the difficult task of listing Bacon's complete works, pp. 71–122). Many items ed. (not very satisfactorily) by R. Steele and others in Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi (London and Oxford, 1905 ff.; (16 vols. to 1940). His Gk. grammar and fragments of Heb. grammar ed. E. Nolan and S. A. Hirsch (Cambridge, 1902). A. G. Little (ed.), Roger Bacon (Commemorative Essays, 1914). Dorothea E. Sharp, Franciscan Philosophy at Oxford in the Thirteenth Century (British Society of Franciscan Studies, xvi; 1930), pp. 115–71. T. Crowley, Roger Bacon. The Problem of the Soul in his Philosophical Commentaries (Louvain–Dublin, 1950). S. E. Easton, Roger Bacon and his Search for a Universal Science (1952). E. Massa, Ruggero Bacone. Etica e poetica nella storia dell'Opus Maius' (Uomini e Dottrine, iii; 1955). F. Alessio, Mito e scienza in Ruggero Bacone (Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Filosofia e Lettere dell'Università di Pavia; Milan, 1957). Id., 'Un Secolo di Studi su Ruggero Bacone (1848–1957)' in Rivista Critica di Storia della Filosofia, xiv (1959), pp. 81–102. D. A. Callus, O.P., in Chambers's Encyclopædia (ed. 1950), ii, p. 38 f.

BAEDA. See Bede.

BAEUMER, SUITBERT. See Bäumer, Suitbert.

BAGOT, RICHARD (1782–1854), Bp. successively of *Oxford and of *Bath and Wells. He was educated at Rugby and at *Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1804 elected a Fellow of All Souls. From 1829 to 1845 he was Bp. of Oxford. His relations with the *Tractarians are his chief interest to the historian. When in a charge of 1838 he reproved them for practices 'which hitherto had ended in superstition', E. B. *Pusey addressed to him an Open Letter. After the publication of Tract 90 in 1841, Bagot induced J. H. *Newman to cease issuing the tracts altogether, but in a charge of 1842 he defended the Tractarians against current attacks, though he denounced the 'lamentable want of judgement' of the rank and file of the Movement. In 1845 he was translated at his own desire to the see of Bath and Wells, where the closing months of his life were taken up by a controversy with G. A. *Denison, Vicar of East Brent, on Eucharistic doctrine.

S. Lee in D.N.B., ii (1885), p. 339 f., s.v., with bibl.

BAINBRIDGE, CHRISTOPHER (c. 1464–1514), Abp. of *York and cardinal. He was born at Hilton, near Appleby, in Cumbria, and educated at The Queen's College, Oxford, of which he was appointed provost in 1496. He held a number of benefices and was made Dean of *Windsor in 1505. In 1507 he was consecrated Bp. of *Durham, and translated to York in 1508. *Henry VIII sent him to Rome as ambassador in 1509 and *Julius II created him cardinal in 1511. As such, Julius II entrusted him with a military expedition against Ferrara. In the same year (1511), Henry chose him to inform the Pope of England's adhesion to the Holy League against France. Bainbridge died of poison administered by one of his chaplains, who accused Sylvester de Gigli, Bp. of *Worcester and resident English ambassador at Rome, of instigating him to the murder from motives of rivalry (though de Gigli was finally acquitted). A man of violent temper, Bainbridge proved himself a courageous defender of English interests at the Curia.

Liber Pontificalis Chr. Bainbridge Archiepiscopi Eboracensis, ed. W. G. Henderson (Surtees Society, lxi, 1875). D. S. Chambers, Cardinal Bainbridge in the Court of Rome 1509 to 1514 (Oxford, 1965). J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., ii (1885), p. 433 f.; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 91–93.

BAIRD LECTURES. A series of at least six lectures established in 1871 on the benefaction of James Baird (1802–76), a wealthy ironmaster, for the defence of orthodox *Presbyterian teaching and delivered annually at Glasgow, and also if required at one other Scottish university. The lecturer must be a minister of the Church of Scotland.

BAIUS, MICHEL (1513–89), Flemish theologian. He was educated at Louvain, became principal of Standonk College in 1541, and held various appointments in the University of Louvain in the years following. Shortly after 1550 he joined John Hessels (1522–66) in asserting theological propositions on the subjects of grace and sin which were held to be unorthodox, and met with the displeasure of the Chancellor of the University and the Abp. of Malines. In 1560 eighteen of his propositions were censured by the *Sorbonne. Even so, Baius and Hessels were chosen to represent the University in 1563 at the Council of *Trent, and received the powerful protection of the King of Spain. Further publications by Baius resulted in the bull 'Ex omnibus afflictionibus' (1 Oct. 1567), in which a large number of propositions from his writings, or embodying his doctrine, were condemned, but which did not mention him by name. For the rest of his life he seems to have hesitated between loyalty to his principles and the desire to remain in the RC Church, and to have been seeking ways of verbal reconciliation between his teaching and official pronouncements. In 1579 the bull 'Provisionis Nostrae' reaffirmed that of 1567, and Baius made a formal recantation of his main views, but his subsequent writings appear to show that they still underlay his teachings.

His system, 'Baianism', is often considered an anticipation of *Jansenism. It is contained in a series of small works, in which Baius interprets in his own way the anti-*Pelagian teaching of St. *Augustine. Its main principles were: (1) That in the primitive state, innocence was not a supernatural gift of God to man, but the necessary complement of human nature itself. (2) That *original sin is not merely a privation of grace, but habitual *concupiscence, transmitted by heredity, and so even in unconscious infants is a sin or moral evil of itself. (3) That the sole work of *redemption is to enable us to recover the gifts of original innocence and live moral lives; and that this end is achieved by the substitution of charity for concupiscence as the motive for each meritorious act. The grace conferred by redemption was thus not considered to be supernatural.

Opera, ed. G. Gerberon, O.S.B., Cologne, 1696. The 18 censured propositions, together with Baius' annotations, and a further explanation of his doctrine made to the Theology Faculty at Louvain, and part of a letter of 1569, were repr. by H. Lennerz, S.J. (Pontificia Universitas Gregoriana, Textus et Documenta. Series Theologica, xxiv; 1938). J. B. Du Chesne, S.J., Histoire du baianisme ou l'hérésie de Michel Baius (Douai, 1731). F. X. Linsenmann, Michael Baius und die Grundlegung des Jansenismus (Tübingen, 1867). F. X. Jansens, S.J., Baius et le baianisme (Museum Lessianum, Section Théologique, xviii; Louvain, 1927). G. Fourure, Les Châtiments divins. Étude historique et doctrinale (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série II, Théologie Morale, v [1959]). G. Galeota, S.J., Bellarmino contro Baio a Lovanio. Studio e testo di un inedito bellarminiano (Aloisiana. Scritti Pubblicati sotto la Direzione della Pontificia Facoltà Teologica Napoletana "S. Luigi", v; Rome, 1966), with extensive bibl. H. de Lubac, S.J., 'Deux Augustiniens fourvoyés, Baïus et Jansénius; I, Baïus' in Rech. S.R., xxi (1931), pp. 422–43; id., Surnaturel. Études historiques (Théologie, viii; 1946), esp. pp. 15–37; repr. and enlarged in id., Augustinisme et théologie moderne (ib., lxiii; 1965), pp. 15–48; Eng. tr. (1969), pp. 1–33. A. Lanz, S.J., 'La dottrina "De Locis Theologicis" di M. Baio in una celebra controversia del secolo XVI' in Gregorianum, xxii (1941), pp. 44–79 and 467–96. É. van Eijl, O.F.M., 'L'Interprétation de la Bulle de Pie V portant condamnation de Baius' in R.H.E., l (1955), pp. 499–542. N. J. Abercrombie, The Origins of Jansenism (1936), pp. 87–93, 137–42 and passim. X. Le Bachelet, S.J., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 38–111, s.v.; J. F. Sollier, S.M., in C.E., ii (1907), pp. 209–12, s.v. See also works cited under Jansenism.

BAKER, AUGUSTINE (baptismal name, David) (1575–1641), *Benedictine writer on ascetical theology and history. He became a RC, entered the Benedictine Order at Padua in 1605, and was ordained priest c. 1615. He worked at Cambrai and *Douai, and as a chaplain in England. Of his ascetical writings the most famous survive in Sancta Sophia, or Holy Wisdom (2 vols., 1657), a collection made posthumously. It expounds the way of contemplation, under the headings 'Of an Internal Life in General', 'Of Mortification', and 'Of Prayer'. His important researches into the history of the origins of the Benedictine Order in England were published in Apostolatus Benedictinorum in Anglia (Douai, 1626). He also left in MS. a Life of Dame Gertrude *More (q.v. for details).

Confessions, ed. J. McCann, O.S.B. (1922). Lives by P. Salvin [O.S.B.] and S. Cressy [O.S.B.], ed. by J. McCann (1933); 'Memorials' incl. his autobiography and life by Fr. Leander Prichard in Memorials of Father Augustine Baker and other Documents relating to the English Benedictines, ed. J. McCann and [R.] H. *Connolly (Catholic Record Society, xxxiii, 1933), pp. 1–154. J. N. Sweeney, O.S.B., The Life and Spirit of Father Augustine Baker (1861). [M.] D. Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 151–87. F. G. Sitwell, O.S.B., in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 21 f., s.v.

BAKER, SIR HENRY WILLIAMS, Bart. (1821–1877), hymn-writer. The son of Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Loraine Baker, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. From 1851 until his death he was Vicar of Monkland, near Leominster. His many hymns, written under the influence of the High Church Movement, of which he was a devoted supporter, were marked by simplicity of expression and smoothness of rhythm. Among those which have become well known are 'The King of Love my Shepherd is' (paraphrase of Ps. 23), 'Lord, Thy Word abideth', 'There is a blessed home', and 'Shall we not love thee, Mother dear?' He was also the promoter and compiler of the original edition (1861) of Hymns, Ancient and Modern (q.v.) as well as the editor of other hymn-books and a devotional manual.

A. H. Grant in D.N.B., iii (1885), p. 11.

BALDACHINO (from Ital. Baldacco, 'Bagdad', whence came the materials used in its construction). A canopy used to cover an altar, also called Umbraculum or Ciborium. It may be made of wood, stone, or metal, in which case it is supported on pillars, or of silk or velvet when it is suspended from the ceiling or attached to the wall. It was originally surmounted by a cross, which was later placed on or behind the altar. The oldest existing example is of the 9th cent., at *Ravenna; the largest and most famous is G. L. Bernini's canopy on twisted pillars over the high altar of *St. Peter's at Rome. The baldachino is required in the RC Church by the *Caeremoniale Episcoporum (I. xii. 13 and xiv. 1), though its use is by no means general. The Reformers objected to it on the ground that it tended to make the Lord's Table a fixture, and J. *Jewel, Bp. of *Salisbury, made it a subject of controversy with Thomas Harding (1516–72). The word is also used of the canopy over a bishop's throne, over statues, and of the movable canopy carried in processions, e.g. of the Blessed Sacrament.

Braun, C.A., ii, pp. 185–9 and 262–71. O. Treitinger in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1150–53, s.v., with reff.

BALDWIN (d. 1190), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of *Exeter, he entered the *Cistercian abbey of Ford, Devonshire, where he was elected abbot within a year. In 1180 he was appointed Bp. of *Worcester. In 1184 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury, but his election was contested by the monks of Christ Church, who disliked his austere ideals. When he decided to erect a college of secular priests at Hakington, nr. Canterbury, from some revenues due to Christ Church, the monks appealed to the Pope, who decided in their favour. Baldwin, upheld by the King, refused to submit, and a compromise was reached in 1189, after a long struggle, at the end of which the monks made their submission and the archbishop agreed to found his college on a site near *Lambeth. In 1190 he took part in the Crusade, but his grief at the lack of discipline of the Christian armies probably hastened his death. He bequeathed his whole fortune to the liberation of the Holy Land. Among his works, which were printed in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium' (1662), are a treatise on faith, 'De commendatione Fidei', and one on the Eucharist, 'De Sacramento Altaris'. He was the first Abp. of Canterbury to secure the supremacy of his see over *Wales.

His works are repr. from B. Tissier, Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, in J. P. Migne, PL, cciv, 401–774. Some of his correspondence is ed. W. *Stubbs, Epistolae Cantuarienses (Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard I, ii; R.S., 1865, pp. 4–329 'Tempore Baldewini', with introd. pp. xxxiii–lxxx passim and cxiii f.). Crit. ed. of De Sacramento Altaris by J. Morson, O.C.S.O., with Fr. tr. by E. de Solms, O.S.B., and introd. by J. Leclercq, O.S.B. (S.C., xciii–xciv; 1963). P. Guébin, 'Deux Sermons inédits de Baldwin, archevêque de Canterbury 1184–1190' in J.T.S., xiii (1912), pp. 571–4. His tour of Wales was described by *Giraldus, Itinerarium Kambriae (Works, ed. J. F. Dimock, vi, R.S., 1868, pp. 3–152). W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, ii (1862), pp. 539–73. C. Duggan, Twelfth-century Decretal Collections and their Importance in English History (1963), pp. 110–15. W. Hunt in D.N.B., iii (1865), pp. 32–4, s.v.

BALE, JOHN (1495–1563), Bp. of Ossory, 'Bilious Bale'. At the age of 12 he entered the *Carmelite monastery at Norwich. Later he renounced his vow of celibacy, became a vigorous and unscrupulous defender of Reformed doctrines and a writer of miracle plays, and thereby attracted the attention of T. *Cromwell, who took him under his protection. On Cromwell's fall in 1540, he fled to Germany, where he continued writing. Returning to England on *Edward VI's accession (1547), he became Rector of Bishopstoke, Hants, and in 1552 was made Bp. of Ossory. In Ireland much controversy was aroused by his refusal to be consecrated by the Roman rite and his insistence on the use of the Edwardine BCP. Soon after *Mary's accession he set off for Scotland, but was captured by pirates and landed in Holland. He did not return until after *Elizabeth I's accession in 1559, when, feeling too old to return to Ossory, he settled at *Canterbury, where he resided till his death. Though he possessed great learning, his writings are extremely coarse and bitter. The most important of his numerous plays, King John (c. 1548), marks the transition from the older *morality plays to the later historical dramas. His Illustrium Majoris Britanniae Scriptorum, hoc est, Angliae Cambriae ac Scotiae Summarium (1548–9) is an indispensable catalogue of British authors and their writings, though often inaccurate and biased.

Select Works, ed. H. Christmas (Parker Society, 1849), with biogr. notice, pp. vii–xii; Dramatic Works, ed. by J. S. Farmer (Early English Dramatists, 1907). His 'Index Britanniae Scriptorum' has been ed. by R. L. Poole–M. Bateson (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Med. and Mod. Series, ix; 1902), his King John repr. by J. H. P. Pafford (Malone Society, 1931). Much autobiographical material in The Vocation of John Bale to the Bishopric of Ossory in Ireland, his Persecutions in the same and final Deliverance (1553; repr. in the Harleian Miscellany, vi [1745], pp. 402–28); short life appended to that of Leland in The Lives of John Leland, Thomas Hearne and Antony Wood (1772; separate pagination). Modern studies by J. W. Harris (Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, xxv, pt. 3; 1940), H. McCusker (Bryn Mawr, Pa., 1942), and L. P. Fairfield (West Lafayette, Indiana, 1976). W. T. Davies, 'A Bibliography of John Bale' in the Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, v (1940), pp. 201–79.

BALFOUR, ARTHUR JAMES (1848–1930), British statesman and philosopher. In 1879 he published a work intended as an apology for religious faith with the somewhat misleading title, A Defence of Philosophic Doubt. It endeavoured to show that all forms of human knowledge, including the natural sciences with their boasting claims, left certain basic residual problems which defied intellectual solution, and that the ultimate convictions of mankind rested on the non-rational ground of religious faith. This position Balfour developed in his Foundations of Belief (1895), which, in view of the eminence to which he had then risen as a statesman, attracted very wide attention. He worked out his position somewhat further in two sets of *Gifford Lectures, Theism and Humanism (1915) and Theism and Thought (1923). In public affairs, his Education Bill of 1902 provoked keen hostility from Nonconformists and in defence he published a Letter on the Criticisms of an Opponent [J. *Clifford] (subsequently included in his Essays and Addresses, ed. 3, 1905). He was a communicant in both the C of E and the Church of Scotland.

His biography was written by Blanche E. C. Dugdale, his niece (2 vols., London, 1936). Further life by [C.] K. Young (ib., 1963). D. Judd, Balfour and the British Empire (1968). A. Cecil in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 41–56, s.v.

BALL, JOHN (d. 1381), priest, implicated in the insurrection of Wat Tyler. Little is known of his early life. Acc. to his own account he was first at *York and later at Colchester. In 1366, when living in Essex, he was summoned before the Abp. of *Canterbury for preaching *Wycliffite doctrines of property, and the faithful were forbidden to attend his sermons. In 1376 his arrest as an excommunicated person was ordered, but his popularity continued, esp. through his teaching of the equality of bondsmen and gentry. During Tyler's insurrection (1381) he was in custody in the Archbishop's prison at Maidstone, but was freed by the rebels and brought in triumph to Canterbury. At Blackheath he preached on the famous rhyme 'When Adam dalf and Eve span, Who was then a gentilman?' and incited the populace to kill the nobles and all others opposed to his ideal of social equality. He was present at the death of Abp. *Simon of Sudbury in the Tower, and also at the meeting of Wat Tyler and the King at *Smithfield. After Tyler's death he fled to the Midlands. He was captured at Coventry and brought before Richard II at *St. Albans, where he was executed as a traitor.

The chief authorities for his life are the Fasciculi Zizaniorum (ed. W. W. Shirley, Rolls Series, 1858), p. 273; Thomas Walsingham, Historia Anglicana, ii (ed. by H. T. Riley, R.S., 1864), pp. 32–4; Henry Knighton, Chronicon, ii (ed. by J. R. Lumby, R.S., 1895), pp. 131 f. and 139 f. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., iii (1885), p. 73 f.

BALLERINI, PIETRO (1698–1769), Patristic scholar and canonist. He was the son of a surgeon, born at *Verona, and educated by the *Jesuits there. Ordained priest in 1722, he shortly afterwards became principal of a classical school in the same city. Attention was drawn to his work on moral theology when his extreme views on *usury were condemned by Pope *Benedict XIV in his bull Vix pervenit (1745). In 1748 he was sent by the republic of *Venice to defend its interests at Rome in a dispute over *Aquileia. He was then commissioned by the Pope to prepare a new edition of the works of St. *Leo the Great to replace that of P. *Quesnel (1675), which had been written in the interests of *Gallicanism. This edition (3 vols., Venice, 1753–7), published in conjunction with his brother Girolamo Ballerini (1702–81), has remained the standard text of Leo; the last vol. contains a valuable collection of documents (not publd. elsewhere) and dissertations on the early history of *canon law. The joint work of the two brothers, which owed much of its success to their fruitful co-operation, also included Henrici Norisii Veronensis . . . Opera (4 vols., Verona, 1729–32), with valuable material on ecclesiastical history, S. Zenonis, Episcopi Veronensis, Sermones, with notes (Verona, 1739), S. Antonini, Archiepiscopi Florentini, Summa Theologica, with life of the author (Verona, 4 parts, 1740–1) and Ratherii, Episcopi Veronensis, Opera (Verona, 1765). Pietro alone also published, among other items, Il Metodo di S. Agostino negli studi (Verona, 1724), a history of *probabilism which seemed rather to defend the theory of *probabiliorism (Verona, 1736), an edition of the S. Raymundi de Pennafort Summa (Verona, 1744), a treatise on usury (Bologna, 1747) and, against *Febronianism, the De Vi ac Ratione Primatus Romanorum Pontificum (Verona, 1766) and the De Potestate Ecclesiastica Summorum Pontificum et Conciliorum Generalium (ib., 1768).

Count Giammaria Mazzuchelli, Gli scrittori d'Italia, ii (pt. 1; 1758), pp. 178–85, s.vv. T. Facchini, Il Papato principio di unità e Pietro Ballerini di Verona (Padua, 1950). W. Telfer, 'Additional Note B. The Ballerini' appended to art. 'The Codex Verona LX (58)' in H.T.R., xxxvi (1943), p. 231 f. C. Verschaffel in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 131 f., s.v.; A. de Meyer in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 339–41, s.v.

BALSAMON, THEODORE (c. 1140 – after 1195), Greek canonist. He was born in *Constantinople and held several ecclesiastical appointments in the capital. Before 1191 he became Greek Patriarch of *Antioch, but he never exercised his official functions, as the *Crusaders put in a Latin Patriarch, and he continued to reside at Constantinople. His Scholia, his most important work, consists of: (1) a commentary on the 'Nomocanon' of *Photius, and (2) one of the principal collections of the *canon law of the East. In the latter he expounds how the civil legislation is to be treated when it conflicts with the ecclesiastical canon.

Extant works repr. from W. *Beveridge's Συνοδικόν (2 vols., Oxford, 1672) in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxxvii and cxxxviii. V. N. Beneshevich, A Study of the Tradition of the Nomocanon of Photius and the Version of Balsamon (in Russ.; 2 parts, St. Petersburg, 1905). Krumbacher, pp. 607–9. L. Petit, A.A., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 135–7, s.v., with bibl.; E. Herman in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 76–83, with reff. to Russian lit.

BALTIMORE, Councils of. A series of ecclesiastical councils, three plenary (1852–84) and ten provincial (1829–69), by which many details of the administration and discipline of the RC Church in the U.S.A. were settled. Little was decreed on doctrinal matters; but the Second Plenary Council (1866) issued some warnings against the teachings which were later generally known as *Americanism and condemned by *Leo XIII in the letter 'Testem benevolentiae' (1899).

Acts and Decrees of the three Plenary Councils publd. at Baltimore in 1853, 1868, and 1886; Decrees and other documents of the Provincial Councils in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentium Collectio Lacensis, iii (Freiburg, 1875), cols. 9–122, 155–82, and 575–600 (also text of first two Plenary Councils, cols. 129–54 and 323–574). P. Guilday, A History of the Councils of Baltimore: 1791–1884 (New York, 1932). W. H. W. Fanning in C.E., ii (1907), pp. 235–41, s.v.; J. Hennesey in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 38–43, with further bibl.

BALUZE, ÉTIENNE (1630–1718), 'Balusius', ecclesiastical historian. Born at Tulle, where he was brought up in the *Jesuit College, he studied at Toulouse. In 1656 he was called to *Paris as secretary to Peter de *Marca (d. 1662), in 1662 he became librarian to J. B. Colbert (1619–83), in 1670 professor of canon law at the Collège de France and in 1707 Director of the Collège. The political views expressed in his history of the House of Auvergne (1708) led to his banishment from Paris (1710–13). His writings include Capitularia Regum Francorum (1677), an edition of the Epistles of *Innocent III (1682; incomplete, since Baluze was denied access to the Vatican archives), Conciliorum Nova Collectio (1683), an edition of *Marius Mercator (1684), Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (1693; put on the Index for alleged *Gallicanism, 1698), and Historia Tutelensis (a history of Tulle, 1717).

New ed. of his Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat (4 vols., Paris; 1914–28). R. Fage, Les Œuvres de Baluze, cataloguées et décrites (Tulle, 2 pts., 1882–4). C. Godard, De Stephano Baluzio Tutelensi, Libertatum Ecclesiae Gallicanae Propugnatore (Paris thesis, 1901). G. Mollat, Étude critique sur les Vitae Paparum Avenionensium d'Étienne Baluze (1917). J. Rambaud-Buhot, 'Baluze, bibliothécaire et canoniste' in Études d'histoire du droit canonique dédiées à Gabriel Le Bras, i (1965), pp. 325–42). H. *Quentin, O.S.B., Jean-Dominique Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 32–8 and 204–69. G. Mollat in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 439–52, s.v.

BAMPTON LECTURES. By the will of John Bampton, Canon of Salisbury (d. 1751), an endowment was created for eight annual lectures to be delivered in St. Mary's, Oxford. Their subject is the exposition and defence of the Christian Faith as expressed in the Creeds, on the authority of Scripture and the Fathers. The first series was given in 1780. Since 1895 they have been delivered biennially. In recent times notable courses have been delivered by W. R. *Inge (1899), H. *Rashdall (1915), A. C. *Headlam (1920), N. P. *Williams (1924), K. E. *Kirk (1928), R. H. *Lightfoot (1934), A. M. Farrer (1948), E. L. Mascall (1956), and others. Another series of lectures ('Sarum Lectures'), open to non-Anglican speakers, was established in 1952 from the Bampton fund; notable lecturers have included C. H. *Dodd (1954–5), J. Daniélou, S.J. (1956–7), B. *Capelle, O.S.B. (1958–9), D. Knowles, O.S.B. (1964–5) and

C. Butler, O.S.B. (1966–7). In 1968 a 'Bampton Fellowship' was established for research into the subjects prescribed for the Bampton Lectures.

BANCROFT, RICHARD (1544–1610), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Christ's College, and later at Jesus College, Cambridge. He first became well known between 1580 and 1590 as a stern opponent and persecutor of the *Puritans. In 1586 he was made treasurer of *St. Paul's Cathedral, and in 1587 Canon of *Westminster. In a sermon preached on 1 Jn. 4. 1 in 1589 at St. Paul's Cross in defence of the divine origin of episcopacy, he outspokenly condemned not only Puritanism but also *Presbyterianism. In 1597 he was appointed to the see of London, from which date, owing to J. *Whitgift's age and incapacity, he virtually possessed archiepiscopal powers. On Whitgift's death in 1604, he was translated to Canterbury. His refusal to compromise, not overtactfully expressed, was one cause of the failure of the *Hampton Court Conference. The canons of 1604 were principally his work, and he secured their passage through *Convocation. As Abp., besides continuing relentlessly his anti-Puritan policy, he endeavoured, but without success, to secure the complete independence of the ecclesiastical courts from secular control. Shortly before his death, he assisted in the re-establishment of episcopacy in Scotland.

A. Peel (ed.), Tracts ascribed to Richard Bancroft (1953). R. G. Usher, Reconstruction of the English Church (2 vols., 1910). S. B. Babbage, Puritanism and Richard Bancroft (1962). W. D. J. C. Thompson, 'A Reconsideration of Richard Bancroft's Paul's Cross Sermon of 9 February 1588/9' in J.E.H., xx (1969), pp. 253–66, with further refs.

BÁÑEZ, DOMINGO (1528–1604), *Thomist theologian. In his youth he studied philosophy at Salamanca, and in 1547 made his profession in the *Dominican Order. For some years he studied under Domingo *Soto, and held professorships in the Spanish universities of Ávila, Valladolid, and elsewhere. In 1577 he returned to Salamanca, was elected to the chief chair in 1580, and acquired a great reputation as an exponent of the traditional Scholastic theology, in which he usually followed St. Thomas down to the smallest details; and he took a prominent part in the Jesuit–Dominican controversy on *Grace. He was the director and confessor of St. *Teresa of Ávila, who relied on his counsel in her own interior life, and in her reform of the *Carmelites.

Works listed in Quétif–Échard, ii (1721), p. 352 f. Comentarios inéditos a la prima secundae de Santo Tomás, ed. V. Beltrán de Heredia (Consejo superior de investigaciones científicas, Institutos Francisco Suárez, 3 vols., 1942–48); Comentarios inéditos a la tercera parte de Santo Tomás, ed. id. (ib., 1951 ff.). M. Midali, S.D.B., Corpus Christi Mysticum apud Dominicum Báñez eiusque fontes (Analecta Gregoriana, cxvi, 1962). V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., 'Actuación de Maestro Domingo Báñez en la universidad de Salamanca' in La Ciencia Tomista, xxv (1922), pp. 64–73, 208–40, xxvi (1922), pp. 63–73, 199–223, xxvii (1923), pp. 40–51, 361–74, xxviii (1923), pp. 36–47; id., 'El Maestro Fray Domingo Báñez y la inquisición española', ib., xxxvii (1928), pp. 289–309, xxxviii (1928), pp. 35–58, 171–86; id., 'Valor doctrinal de las lecturas del P. Báñez', ib., xxxix (1929), pp. 60–81; id., 'Vindicando la memoria del Maestro fray Domingo Báñez', ib., xl (1929), pp. 312–22; id., 'El Maestro Domingo Báñez', ib., xlvii (1933), pp. 26–39, 162–79. M. Lépée, Báñez et Sainte Thérèse (1947), esp. pp. 34–74, with bibl. p. 7 f. P. Mandonnet, O.P., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 140–5, s.v.; V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), col. 1219 f., s.v. with list of works and edd.

BANGOR. Of the many places of this name, the three best known are:

(1) 'Bangor Fawr' in Gwynedd. The see was traditionally founded by the abbot-bishop, St. *Deiniol (d. 584?), but scarcely anything is known of it till Norman times. The cathedral was rebuilt by Bp. Anian (1267–1305), who baptized Edward II, but was burnt in 1402 by Owen Glendower, and lay in ruins until Bp. Henry Deane (d. 1503) began to rebuild the choir. The work was completed by Bp. Thomas Skevington (d. 1533), who had previously been Abbot of *Beaulieu. From 1716 to 1721 the see was filled by the notorious B. *Hoadly. (See also Bangor, Use of.)

(2) 'Bangor Iscoed' in Clwyd. Here stood the greatest monastery of Wales, which at one time held 2,000 monks. The early history of this Bangor is also uncertain; but its monks are known to have refused to co-operate with St. *Augustine at the close of the 6th cent. In 603 the Saxons under Ethelfrid of Northumbria put to death 1,200 of its monks. Little or nothing of the abbey exists today.

(3) Bangor in Co. Down, Ireland. St. *Comgall founded an abbey in 555 or 559, from which many daughter monasteries arose, so that at his death (c. 601) he ruled 3,000 monks. It was the original home of St. *Columbanus and St. *Gall. After it had been plundered by the Danes in 824 it remained derelict until rebuilt on a magnificent scale in the 12th cent. It soon decayed again, however. From 1469 *Franciscans were in possession, and a century later the *Augustinians. Very little of the abbey remains.

See also foll. entries.

On (1), B. Willis, Survey of the Cathedral Church of Bangor (1721). A. I. Pryce, The Diocese of Bangor in the XVIth Century, being a Digest of the Registers of the Bishops, 1512–1646 (Bangor, 1923); id., The Diocese of Bangor during the Three Centuries, 1600–1899 (Cardiff, 1929). Rose Graham in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), col. 494 f., s.v. See also works cited under Wales, Christianity in.

On (2), Rose Graham in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), col. 502, s.v.

On (3), A. Gwynn, S.J., 'The Irish Monastery of Bangor' in Irish Ecclesiastical Record, Fifth Series, lxxiv (1950), pp. 388–97. F. O'Briain, O.F.M., in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 497–502, s.v.

BANGOR, Antiphonary of. This *Antiphonary, written in the monastery at the Irish Bangor between 680 and 691, passed to *Bobbio, whence Federigo Borromeo transferred it in 1609 to the *Ambrosiana at Milan (where it is now Cod. C. 5 inf.). It is the only surviving liturgical authority for the choir office in the Celtic Church. The familiar hymn 'Sancti venite, Christi Corpus sumite' (Eng. trans. by J. M. *Neale, 'Draw nigh and take the body of the Lord', English Hymnal 307) is taken from this source.

Crit. ed. by F. E. Warren (H.B.S., iv and x; 1893–5). On the text of the Creed in the Bangor Antiphonary, D. S. Nerney, S.J., 'The Bangor Symbol' in Irish Theological Quarterly, xix (1952), pp. 369–85, xx (1953), pp. 273–86, 389–401. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 183–91. See also bibl. to Celtic Church.

BANGOR, Use of. Of the pre-Reformation liturgical 'Use of [Welsh] Bangor' referred to by T. *Cranmer in the preface to the 1549 BCP (see Concerning the Service of the Church) nothing definite can be discovered. It is likely that it preserved ancient Celtic elements and a calendar rich in Welsh saints. Earlier liturgists thought that it had survived in a MS. Missal in use at Oswestry

(then in the diocese of St. Asaph) in 1554; but it now seems clear that this missal attests a predominantly *'Sarum Use'.

BANGORIAN CONTROVERSY, The. The dispute which followed the sermon preached by B. *Hoadly, Bp. of *Bangor, on 31 Mar. 1717 before George I on 'The Nature of the Kingdom of Christ', endeavouring to prove from the text, 'My kingdom is not of this world' (Jn. 18. 36), that the Gospels afford no warrant for any visible Church authority. The subject is said to have been suggested by the King. The sermon, which was immediately published, provoked a large number of pamphlets attacking Hoadly. Among his more formidable antagonists were W. *Law, in his Three Letters to the Bishop of Bangor (1717–19), and T. *Sherlock. On 3 May 1717 the Lower House of *Convocation appointed a committee to consider the sermon, which reported on 10 May. When the Lower House resolved to send its findings to the Upper House, the King, to save Hoadly from synodical condemnation, which would have emphasized the opposition of the clergy to the government, prorogued Convocation, which did not meet again, except formally, until 1852.

The fullest bibliography is that by T. Herne, 'An Account of all the considerable pamphlets that have been published on either Side in the Present Controversy between the Bishop of Bangor, and Others to the End of the Year MDCCXIX' in The Works of Benjamin Hoadly, publd. by his son John Hoadly (1773), ii, pp. 381–401, and i, pp. 689–701. See also ib., ii, pp. 379–990 and passim; J. O. Nash–C. *Gore, William Law's Defence of Church Principles (Westminster Library [1893]).

BANNERS, Processional. A banner was originally the standard of a king or prince providing a rallying-point for his forces in battle. Christians of the 6th cent. had seen the symbolism of this, and were using crosses with red streamers (vexilla) attached for street processions in Rome. (Cf. the contemporary hymn Vexilla Regis prodeunt.*) Medieval banners bore the armorial designs of knights and were not apparently used exclusively for Church functions.

BANNS OF MARRIAGE. The custom of announcing a forthcoming marriage during Divine Service was probably taken over from pre-Christian practice, but it seems to have developed esp. after *Charlemagne's order for inquiry before marriage into possible consanguinity between the parties. The practice was enjoined by the Synod of *Westminster of 1200 and the *Lateran Council of 1215. The BCP regards the publication of banns as the normal prelude to marriage, though the obtaining of a licence is a civil and canonical equivalent. Under the Marriage Act of 1823 they must be published in an audible manner in the parish church or in some public chapel on three Sundays preceding the marriage. If the persons to be married dwell in different parishes or chapelries, publication must take place in both. The clergyman is entitled to seven days' notice of the first publication; and if the marriage is not solemnized within three months, republication is necessary. In certain circumstances, banns may be published by a *lay reader. See also Marriage Licences.

J. B. Roberts, Banns of Marriage. An historical Synopsis and commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, lxiv; 1931). H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 540–7 and 551. P. M. Smith, '"I publish the Banns of Marriage . . ."' in Modern Churchman, N.S., xii (1969), pp. 299–308.

BAPTISM. The *Sacramental rite which admits a candidate to the Christian Church. Acc. to Jn. 3. 5, Christ announced the necessity of a spiritual regeneration 'of water and the Spirit' in His conversation with Nicodemus, and it has been commonly held that He instituted the Sacrament either at an unspecified date before His Passion or after His Resurrection, when He gave the disciples the command to baptize in the threefold Name (Mt. 28. 19). Many modern critics, indeed, have denied the institution of the Sacrament by Christ, together with the historicity of Mt. 28. 19, and even in a few cases the authenticity of the text. Orthodox Christians, however, have from the beginning attached the highest importance to Baptism and believed that in baptizing they were carrying out the command of Christ. Counterparts to Christian Baptism in its outward form have been found in the initiation rites of Jewish proselytes as well as of the mystery religions, and Christians have often seen the Sacrament foreshadowed in the Flood, in the passage through the Red Sea, in the rite of circumcision, and in other OT figures. The two constituent parts of the Sacrament, water and the Trinitarian formula, are both contained in the NT (Jn. 3. 5, Mt. 28. 19). It has been suggested on the basis of several passages in Acts (2. 38, 10. 48, 19. 5) that Baptism in the primitive Church was 'in the Name of the Lord Jesus'. The fact, however, that at least from the end of the 1st cent. Baptism has been regularly administered in the threefold Name has led many theologians to another interpretation acc. to which these passages are not a baptismal formula but are intended to distinguish between the Christian Baptism and that of John. From the Lord's words to Nicodemus it would seem that Baptism is necessary for salvation. It must be preceded by faith (Acts 8. 13, 10. 33) and repentance (Acts 2. 38), and acc. to St. Paul effects and represents the believer's union with Christ through which he participates in His death and resurrection (Rom. 6. 4), is cleansed from his sins (1 Cor. 6. 11), and incorporated into the Body of Christ (1 Cor. 12. 13). Though Infant Baptism is not mentioned in the NT it is perhaps implied in passages such as Mt. 19. 14, Acts 16. 33, and 1 Tim. 2. 4. See Infant Baptism.

The rites of Baptism were developed in the early Church. In the 'Two Ways' of the Didache* the principal duties of the candidates for Baptism and the method of administering it by triple immersion or affusion on the head are outlined. This triple immersion is also attested by *Tertullian (Adversus Prax., 26), who in his De Baptismate and De Corona Militis describes the other parts of the rite, such as the preparatory fast and vigil, the confession of sins, the renunciation of the devil and, after the immersion, the imposition of hands and the symbolic meal of milk and honey. In the early Church Baptism was normally conferred by the Bishop, and closely associated with *Confirmation and the Eucharist. From the 2nd–4th cents. it was given only at *Easter and *Pentecost; in the 4th cent. the Feast of the *Epiphany was introduced as an additional date in the East, whence it passed to Sicily, Africa, and Spain. In Spain and Gaul *Christmas and certain other Feasts were also added, though the Popes St. *Siricius and St. Leo protested against these innovations. In cases of necessity, however, Baptism might be administered at any time and by any Christian, though, acc. to Tertullian, the Apostolic Constitutions, and the 'Fourth Council of *Carthage', not by women. A practice which was very general in the first four or five cents. was the delay of Baptism till death was believed to be imminent, for fear of the responsibilities incurred by it. In this case Baptism was conferred without ceremonies, but regarded as inferior to regular Baptism and constituted a canonical impediment debarring the persons thus baptized, who were called 'clinici' (Gk. κλίνη, 'bed'), from ordination to the priesthood. Clinical Baptism gradually fell into desuetude owing esp. to the increasing practice of Infant Baptism and the development of the penitential system.

The theology of Baptism was elucidated by the 3rd cent. controversy on the validity of heretical Baptism. The general practice of the Church in the West came to be to admit persons baptized in heretical sects by mere imposition of hands. Probably on account of a passage from Tertullian (De Baptismo, 15), which asserted that the true Baptism was to be found only in the Catholic Church, the Church in N. Africa followed the custom of re-baptizing heretics. This practice was strongly supported by St. *Cyprian and confirmed by two Councils at Carthage in 255 and 256. When the decisions of the latter were submitted to Pope *Stephen I he refused to sanction rebaptism and also threatened the African bishops with excommunication if they continued the practice. The controversy was stopped by the deaths of Stephen (257) and Cyprian (258) and a fresh outbreak of persecution, though each party continued to follow its own custom. The dispute was revived in the beginning of the 4th cent. by the *Donatists, who held Baptism to be invalid if conferred by a heretical or even an unworthy Catholic minister. The Council of *Arles in 314 opposed this view by declaring heretical Baptism valid if conferred in the name of the Trinity, and this teaching came to be generally accepted by the whole Church, esp. through the influence of St. Augustine. He established the dependence of the validity of the Sacrament on the correct form prescribed by Christ, regardless of the faith or worthiness of the minister ('non cogitandum quis det, sed quid det'*). In defending the propriety of Infant Baptism against the *Pelagians, he also maintained that one of the chief effects of the Sacrament was the removal of the stain of *Original Sin on the soul which bars even the new-born child from the Kingdom of Heaven, thereby developing earlier teaching from NT times, acc. to which the remission of Actual Sins, the infusion of grace, and the incorporation into the Church had been generally recognized as results of Baptism. The doctrine of the Baptismal *character (Gk. σφραγίς) marking the baptized soul in a special way, which had been adumbrated by *Hermas and in the 'Acts of *Thomas' and developed in the 4th cent. by St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, was also perfected by St. Augustine. He held that the Holy Spirit produced in Baptism an effect independent of sanctifying grace. This 'character' marked the soul as the property of the Trinity, remained even with the apostate as the royal seal remained on a coin, and allowed the Christian soul to be recognized even in hell. The effects of Baptism were produced by God independently of the minister, 'ex opere operato', by the application of the merits of Christ. St. Augustine allowed, however, the 'baptism of blood' by martyrdom and the 'baptism of desire' in certain cases as equivalents of the Sacrament.

The Augustinian doctrine was taken up and developed by the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas Aquinas, who distinguished between the 'remote matter' of water and the 'proximate matter' of *immersion or affusion. Though remitting both Original and Actual Sin and their punishment, Baptism did not efface the consequences of Original Sin in the natural order such as ignorance, suffering, concupiscence, and death. It conferred habitual grace, the infused virtues and the gifts of the Holy Ghost. The Baptismal character formed the Christian in the image of Christ and bestowed on him a certain participation in His priesthood.

The 16th cent. Reformers did not leave the medieval teaching on Baptism intact. The *Augsburg Confession contented itself with stating that Baptism was necessary to salvation, that by it the grace of God was offered, and that children were to be baptized and thus received into God's favour. M. *Luther sought to combine belief in the necessity of Baptism with his doctrine of justification by faith alone. Baptism was a promise of Divine grace after which a man's sins are no longer imputed to him. H. *Zwingli, on the other hand, denied the necessity of Baptism, seeing in it only a sign admitting man to the Christian community. J. *Calvin, though holding that Baptism gave man an assurance of pardon and of participation in the gifts of Christ, taught that it was efficacious only for the elect, since they alone have the faith without which the rite is worthless. The BCP preserved the traditional Catholic teaching. In the Orders for the Administration of Baptism it maintained the doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration, asserting that man is washed and sanctified with the Holy Ghost, delivered from the wrath of God, received into the ark of Christ's Church, accorded remission of sins, and made an heir of everlasting salvation. In the *Thirty-Nine Articles the teaching is less explicit, but they clearly exclude the Zwinglian view and regard Baptism as a 'sign of Regeneration' by which 'the promises of forgiveness of sin, and of our adoption to be the sons of God by the Holy Ghost, are visibly signed and sealed'. The doctrine of the RC Church was restated at the Council of *Trent, particular stress being laid on the fact that Baptism is not merely a sign of grace, but actually contains and confers it on those who put no obstacle (obex) in its way, and that, further, it is the instrument used by God for the justification of infidels. The modern RC legislation concerning Baptism is contained in the CIC, cans. 737–79.

The rationalism of the 18th cent. contributed largely to the indifference towards Baptism in the Continental Protestant Churches as well as in the C of E. The revival of the Catholic doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration in the latter is due to the *Tractarian Movement, esp. E. B. *Pusey's three Tracts, Nos. 67–9. The *Gorham Case (q.v.) in 1850 attracted the attention of the general public to the question, and, though the secular authorities decided against the Catholic view, the latter has since become increasingly prevalent in the C of E. In recent times the need for some restatement of Baptismal theology has been widely felt. This has been esp. prompted by the custom of presenting for Baptism children from homes where there is little prospect of a Christian upbringing.

The forms of the rite used in the RC Church are still the most elaborate found in the W. The Ordo Baptismi Parvulorum of 1969 governs present practice. After an undertaking from the parents that the child shall be brought up in the Christian faith, the priest reads one or more passages from Scripture and delivers a homily. A prayer of *exorcism is followed by the anointing of the candidate's breast with the 'oil of catechumens', unless a local conference of bishops has authorized the omission of the latter rite. The priest then blesses the water, except in *Eastertide when the water blessed at the Easter Vigil is used. Both parents and *godparents renounce Satan and evil and make a declaration of faith. The priest baptizes the child, either by immersion or *affusion, using the traditional formula. He then anoints him with *chrism and the child is clothed with a white garment. The child's father lights a candle from the Paschal Candle in the Baptistery and holds it. The rite of *Ephphatha may follow. The ceremony is concluded at the sanctuary with a recital of the *Lord's Prayer and a three-fold blessing of the mother, father, and all present, which replaces the *Churching of Women. If Baptism is administered by a *catechist, the anointings are omitted; a form still further simplified is provided for use in danger of death. The Ordo Initiationis Christianae Adultorum (1972) provided a new Order for the Baptism of adults, which is not very different from that for the Baptism of children. The sacrament is celebrated during the Easter Vigil or at least during Mass (after the homily); the rite consists of the *Litany of Saints, blessing of the water, the renunciation of evil and profession of faith (by the candidate answering for himself), the baptism and other post-baptismal ceremonies, except for the chrismation. It is immediately followed by confirmation. Adult Baptism in the RC Church is the conclusion of the restored catechumenate (q.v.).

The rite of the C of E is much simpler. Acc. to the BCP, Baptism should be administered after the Second Lesson at Morning or Evening Prayer. After several prayers recited by the priest and a reading from the Gospel there follows the renunciation of the devil, the world, and the flesh, the confession of faith, the naming of the child by the godparents and the immersion in or affusion of water, accompanied by the Baptismal formula, followed by a signing with the cross and concluding prayers. The ASB provides, alternatively, for Baptism to be administered during the Eucharist, either at the beginning of the service or after the Sermon. It also makes other modifications, including changes in the form of renunciation, a more elaborate formula for the signing with the cross, and the practice of giving a lighted candle to the parent or godparent of the child.

In conditional Baptism, which is given both in the RC Church and the C of E, when it is doubtful whether the candidate has already previously been validly baptized, most of the ceremonies are omitted and the Baptismal Formula is pronounced in a conditional form, beginning in the C of E 'If thou art not already baptized, I baptize thee'. See also foll. entry.

The chief Patristic authorities are Didache, vii; Ep. Barnabae, xi; Tertullian, De Baptismo; Cyprian, Epistulae; ps.–Cyprian, De Rebaptismate; Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses, xix–xxi; Ambrose, De Mysteriis and De Sacramentis; several treatises of Gregory of Nyssa and St. Augustine; *Pacian, De Baptismo; *Maximus of Turin, De Baptismo; *Ildefonsus, De Cognitione Baptismi. The classical medieval treatment is in St. Thomas Aquinas, S.T., III, qq. 66–71; cf. also *Alexander of Hales, S.T., IV, qq. 1–8, and St. *Bonaventure, In quarto dist., 1–6.

G. *Cassander, De Baptismo Infantium Testimonia Veterum (1563); J. Busaeus, S.J., De Baptismi Necessitate (1589); W. *Wall, The History of Infant Baptism (2 vols., 1705); J. W. F. Höfling, Das Sacrament der Taufe (2 vols., 1846–8; Lutheran); E. B. Pusey, Scriptural Views of Holy Baptism (Tracts for the Times, Nos. 67, 68, 69; all 1835); J. B. *Mozley, The Primitive Doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration (1856); id., A Review of the Baptismal Controversy (1862).

J. Corblet, Histoire dogmatique, liturgique et archéologique du sacrement de baptême (2 vols., 1881–2); D. *Stone, Holy Baptism (Oxford Library of Practical Theology, 1899); H. Windisch, Taufe und Sünde im ältesten Christentum bis auf Origenes (1908); W. Heitmüller, Taufe und Abendmahl im Urchristentum (1911); J. Warns, Die Taufe (1913; Eng. tr., 1957); A. d'Alès, Baptême et confirmation (1928; Eng. tr., 1929); R. *Reitzenstein, Die Vorgeschichte der christlichen Taufe (1929); P. Lundberg, La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Semin. Neotest. Upsal. X, 1942); K. *Barth, Die kirchliche Lehre von der Taufe (1943; Eng. tr., 1948); O. *Cullmann, Die Tauflehre des Neuen Testaments (Zürich, 1948; Eng. tr., 1950); R. Schnackenburg, Das Heilsgeschehen bei der Taufe nach dem Apostel Paulus (Münchener Theologische Studien I. Historische Abteilung, i; 1950; Eng. tr., 1964). J. [H.] Crehan, S.J., Early Christian Baptism and the Creed (Bellarmine Series, xiii; 1950). G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit (1951); A. Benoît, Le Baptême chrétien au second siècle. La théologie des pères (1953). G. W. Bromiley, Baptism and the Anglican Reformers (1953). The Biblical Doctrine of Baptism. A Study Document issued by the Special Commission on Baptism of the Church of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1958). A. Stenzel, S.J., Die Taufe. Eine genetische Erklärung der Taufliturgie (Innsbruck, 1958). A. Gilmore (ed.), Christian Baptism. A Fresh Attempt to Understand the Rite in terms of Scripture, History, and Theology (1959). R. E. O. White, The Biblical Doctrine of Initiation (1960). E. C. Whitaker, Documents of the Baptismal Liturgy (1960; ed. 2, 1970). G. R. Beasley-Murray, Baptism in the New Testament (1962). J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation: Baptism in the Medieval West. A Study in the Disintegration of the Primitive Rite of Initiation (Alcuin Club Collections, xlvii; 1965); id., Christian Initiation. The Reformation Period (ib., li; 1970), pp. 3–156; P. J. Jagger, Christian Initiation 1552–1969 (ib., lii; 1970); L. L. Mitchell, Baptismal Anointing (ib., xlviii; 1965).

Various authors in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 367–412 (on Christian and non-Christian Baptism), and in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 167–378; P. de Puniet, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1, 1910), cols. 251–346; A. Oepke, βάπτω, βαπτίζω, βαπτισμός, βάπτισμα, βαπτιστής in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 527–44; J. Coppens in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 852–924, all with bibl.

See also bibl. to Confirmation and Infant Baptism

BAPTISM OF CHRIST, The. This event is recorded by the first three Evangelists and implied also by Jn., but each has significant differences of detail. Acc. to Mk. 1. 9–11, now usually considered the primary source for the event in the Gospels, Christ came to hear St. *John the Baptist and, like others, received baptism at his hands. The implied motive seems to be the deep, sympathetic interest which Jesus felt in the work of John and the fitting character of such baptism as a public profession of moral integrity. The vision of the opened heavens and the Divine Voice were the token of the Lord's Messiahship.

Among Patristic writers who regard the Lord's Baptism as instituting Christian Baptism are *Ambrose, In Luc., ii. 83, and *Chrysostom, Hom. in Mt. 12. 3; cf. also St. *Thomas Aquinas, S.T., III, lxvi, 2. J. Bornemann, Die Taufe Christi durch Johannes in der dogmatischen Beurteilung der christlichen Theologen der vier ersten Jahrunderte (1896).

BAPTISTERY. The building or part of the church in which *Baptism is administered. At least from the 3rd cent. onwards, esp. in Mediterranean lands, this was often a separate building west of the church and polygonal in plan. But the spread of infant Baptism (by *affusion) led to the increasingly common use of *fonts, quite often placed at the west end of the church. In modern churches, however, the fonts are sometimes placed below floor-level, to emphasize the Pauline doctrine of Baptism, and the RC Ordo of 1969 envisages that in some baptisteries there may be running water.

The earliest known baptistery is that at *Dura Europos (before A.D. 256). Another example is that at the *Lateran at Rome, which has traditionally been held to date from the time of *Constantine I (much altered later). It is octagonal, with a low font in the centre, surrounded by eight columns and an ambulatory. The church of S. Costanza, orig. built as a tomb for the daughter of Constantine, is another round Roman edifice which was also formerly used as a baptistery. There are later examples at Pisa, *Ravenna, Florence, Nocera, Tebessa, el-Kantara, Poitiers, and elsewhere.

J. Corblet, 'Des Lieux consacrés à l'administration du baptême' in Revue de l'Art Chrétien, xxiii (1877), pp. 276–81, xxiv (1877), pp. 112–82, 300–10, xxv (1878), pp. 26–49, 275–316. C. F. Rogers, 'Baptism and Christian Archaeology' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, v (Oxford, 1903), pp. 239–361, esp. pp. 321–59, passim. F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, iv (1934), pp. 153–87 ('Zur Symbolik des altchristlichen Taufhauses'). J. G. Davies, The Architectural Setting of Baptism (1962). A. Khatchatrian, Les Baptistères Paléochrétiens. Plans, notices et bibliographie (1962). On the famous Baptistery at the Lateran, see also G. B. Giovenale, Il Battistero Lateranense nelle recenti indagini della Pont. Commissione di archeologia sacra (1929); on that at Ravenna, S. K. Kostof, The Orthodox Baptistery at Ravenna (Yale Publications in the History of Art, xviii; 1965). A. Nesbitt in D.C.A., i (1875), pp. 173–8; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 382–469; E. Josi and E. Lavagnino in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1050–56; F. W. Deichmann in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1157–67, s.v. 'Baptisterium', with extensive reff.

BAPTISTS. One of the largest Protestant and Free Church communions, to be found in every Continent. The total membership in 1981 was well over thirty million, with a community strength probably three times as large. They trace their origins in modern times to the action of John *Smyth, a *Separatist exile in Amsterdam who, in 1609, reinstituted the baptism of conscious believers as the basis of the fellowship of a gathered Church. But Smyth was under *Mennonite influence, and Baptist origins have often been traced back through the *Anabaptist wing of the Continental Reformation to the protests of medieval sects against prevailing baptismal theory and practice and thence to the days of the early Church and the New Testament. Smyth and his associates were concerned to re-establish the rite of baptism acc. to its NT meaning, in the interests of a true doctrine of the nature of the Church.

The first Baptist Church in England consisted of certain members of Smyth's Church who returned to London in 1612 under the leadership of Thomas *Helwys. From this a number of other Churches sprang in Stuart and Commonwealth times. They were *Arminian in theology and their polity was of a connexional kind. They became known as 'General Baptists'. In 1633 the adoption of believers' baptism by a group of *Calvinistic London Separatists, who were members of the Church which had had Henry Jacob as pastor, led to the rise of 'Particular Baptist' Churches in many parts of the country. About the same time *immersion became the usual mode of baptism, instead of *affusion or sprinkling, again in obedience to the NT. Calvinistic Baptist Churches were in general independent or congregational in polity, but from Commonwealth times Associations of Churches covering wide areas of the country became general, and these Associations have continued a vital part of Baptist Church life.

Many Baptists were associated with the more radical spiritual and political movements of the 17th cent. They were pioneers in pleas for freedom of conscience and religious liberty. After the Restoration they moved closer in spirit and temper to the *Presbyterians and *Independents and became recognized as one of the *Three Denominations of Protestant Dissenters. John *Bunyan was an outstanding figure among them and was important not only for his writings but because he stood for local Church fellowships which should include Baptists and Paedobaptists. From the middle of the 17th cent. there were Baptist churches in the American colonies. The settlement of Roger *Williams at Providence, Rhode Island, and the Church formed there in 1639 on Baptist principles is generally regarded as the beginning of American Baptist history. A small 17th cent. group who became known as Sabbatarian or Seventh Day Baptists, and whose descendants are still represented in both England and America, regarded the Fourth Commandment as requiring services on the seventh, not the first, day of the week.

In the 18th cent. many of the General Baptist Churches in England came under *Unitarian influences and ultimately ceased to maintain their witness to believers' baptism. But Dan Taylor (1738–1816), under the stimulus of the *Evangelical Revival, formed a so-called New Connexion among them, which maintained a vigorous life in the eastern midlands, and a century later united with the main stream of Baptist witness. The *Baptist Missionary Society, formed in 1792 by ministers of the Northamptonshire Association of Particular Baptist Churches at the call of William *Carey, initiated the modern movement of missionary expansion among Protestant Churches. Northamptonshire Baptists had been stirred by reports of the *Great Awakening in New England. This revival quickened the Baptist Churches of America and led to the beginnings of the rapid and spectacular growth of Baptists in that continent. Baptist preachers were in the van as the frontier was carried westwards. As a result of their missionary zeal Baptists became the largest religious community in many of the southern States and by 1980 there were over 26,000,000 Baptists in N. America. They are organized in four Conventions: the Southern Convention (the strongest and most conservative) and the American, and two Negro Conventions. Over 66 per cent. of the total negro Church membership is Baptist. American Baptists have also shown enthusiasm for foreign missions, in which matter Adoniram *Judson, of *Burma, was their pioneer. K. S. Latourette, the historian, Billy *Graham, and Martin Luther *King have all belonged to the Baptist community. In S. America there are now some 700,000 Baptists.

The rigid Calvinism of the 18th cent. was gradually modified not only in America, but in England, though not without some protests. There remained a number of so-called Strict Baptist Churches, strongly Calvinist in theology, and unwilling to open even the Lord's Table to other than baptized believers. In the 19th cent., however, most Baptist Churches adopted open communion; many also adopted 'open membership', thus maintaining and extending the tradition which went back to Bunyan. The increase in their numbers more than kept pace with the growth in population, and from their ranks came outstanding preachers such as Robert *Hall, C. H. *Spurgeon, Alexander *Maclaren, and John *Clifford. The Baptist General Union, formed in 1813, was gradually transformed into the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. Its modern developments owed much to the leadership of J. H. *Shakespeare (1857–1928), who was secretary for twenty-five years. There are in Britain some 218,000 Church members, organized into 2,777 Churches, with nearly 2,000 ministers. Baptists shared in the *Free Church Council movement and are members of the Free Church Federal Council, the *British Council of Churches, and the *World Council of Churches. They have shown hesitation about schemes for organic union, partly because of their concern regarding their witness to believers' baptism; but they have always been eager for co-operation and fellowship with their fellow Christians. The Baptists of Scotland were much influenced by the life and teaching of Archibald McLean (1733–1812). He and his followers attempted a very close following of the NT in doctrine and practice and were at one time known as 'Scotch Baptists' or '*Sandemanian Baptists'. Their work provided one of the sources of the *Disciples of Christ. Baptists have been numerous in Wales since John Myles or Miles (1621–84) organized the first church at Ilston (1649) and Vavasour Powell (1617–70) acted as the leader of a band of itinerant evangelists. Their most famous preacher was Christmas Evans (1766–1838). There has been a considerable emigration of Baptists from Wales to the United States. Both Scottish and Welsh Baptists have, on the whole, been more conservative theologically and in Church practice than those of England.

In 1834 a Baptist Church was formed in Hamburg under the leadership of J. G. Oncken (1800–1884) and from this came a widespread Baptist movement on the Continent of Europe. It spread from German-speaking to Slav-speaking peoples. Baptists were severely persecuted in Czarist Russia. They increased in numbers in the early years of the Soviet régime, but have more recently suffered from the general restrictions on religious freedom. Their present strength is uncertain, but probably considerable. Almost all the Baptist groups on the continent of Europe are strongly Biblicist. In 1905 a Baptist World Alliance was formed at a congress in London, with the aims of promoting unity and fellowship among the Baptists of the world, securing and defending religious freedom, and proclaiming Baptist principles. Its present headquarters is in Washington, D.C.

In spite of their variety and individualism, most Baptists have remained strongly attached to the truths of evangelical Christianity. In their worship they follow in general the Reformed tradition. Their polity is a modified form of independency. Their ministers, or pastors, receive, in most lands, a careful training. Their oldest college in Britain traces its history back to the 1679 bequest of a Bristol writing-master. Regent's Park College, of which H. Wheeler *Robinson was principal from 1920 to 1942, is now a Permanent Private Hall of Oxford University. Many colleges and universities in America are under Baptist auspices, and in India Carey's college at Serampore remains the only institution able to confer divinity degrees. The Southern Baptist Convention has not joined the World Council of Churches and this has influenced a number of other groups, but, in addition to those from Britain, the Baptists of New Zealand, Denmark, Russia, Hungary, Burma, Cameroon, and the Telugu Convention in India are members.

T. Armitage, A History of the Baptists, traced with their Vital Principles and Practices, from the Time of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to the Year 1886 (New York and London, 1888). R. G. Torbet, History of the Baptists (Philadelphia, Pa., 1950; London, 1966). T. Crosby, The History of the English Baptists from the Reformation to the Beginning of the Reign of King George I (4 vols., 1738–40). J. Ivimey, A History of the English Baptists (4 vols., 1811–30). B. Evans, The Early English Baptists (2 vols., 1862–4). W. T. Whitley, A History of the British Baptists (1923); A. C. Underwood, A History of the English Baptists (1947). W. T. Whitley, The Baptists of London, 1612–1928 [1928]. E. A. Payne, The Baptist Union. A Short History (1959). J. H. Rushbrooke, The Baptists in the Continent of Europe (1923); id., Some Chapters of European Baptist History (1929; new material on Russia). R. Donat, Entstehung und Ausbreitung der Baptistengemeinden in Deutschland (2 vols., Kassel, 1958–60). A. H. Newman, A History of the Baptist Churches in the United States (American Church History, Series ii; New York, 1894). R. G. Torbet, Venture of Faith. The Story of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society . . . 1814–1954 (Philadelphia, Pa., 1955). W. W. Barnes, The Southern Baptist Convention, 1845-1953 (Nashville, 1954). E. R. Fitch, The Baptists of Canada (Toronto, 1911). H. J. Batts, The Story of 100 Years, 1820–1920. The History of the Baptist Church in South Africa (Cape Town, 1922). B. S. Brown, Members One of Another. The Baptist Union of Victoria, 1862–1962 (Melbourne, 1962). W. L. Lumpkin, Baptist Confessions of Faith (Philadelphia, Pa., [1959]). H. Wheeler Robinson, 'Baptist Principles before the Rise of Baptist Churches' in The Baptists of Yorkshire. Being the Centenary Memorial Volume of the Yorkshire Baptist Association (1912), pp. 3–50. E. A. Payne, The Fellowship of Believers. Baptist Thought and Practice Yesterday and Today (1944; ed. 2, 1952). A. Gilmore (ed.), Christian Baptism (1959). W. T. Whitley, A Baptist Bibliography (2 vols., 1916–22).

See also publications of the Baptist Historical Society, 1908 ff.; for German Baptists, see also bibl. to Tunkers, and works cited under Anabaptists.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY. It was founded at Kettering, Northants, on 2 Oct. 1792. The first secretary was Andrew Fuller (1754–1815). Its first missionary, W. *Carey, to whose earnest pleading the Society owed its origin, went in 1793 to India, where the major part of the work of the Society is still done. The other main fields have been: (1) Jamaica, where William Knibb (1803–45) and other missionaries gave vigorous support to the cause of slave emancipation, (2) China, where Timothy Richard (1845–1919) was an outstanding pioneer, and (3) Cameroons and Congo. George Grenfell (1849–1906) and Holman Bentley (1855–1906) played notable parts in the opening up of the Congo. The Society now has about 200 missionaries engaged in evangelistic, educational, and medical work.

Essays in J. B. Myers (ed.), The Centenary Volume of the Baptist Missionary Society (1892); others in the B.M.S. commemorative vol., Ter-Jubilee Celebrations, 1942–4 (1945).

BARABBAS. The 'robber' (λῃστής, Jn. 18. 40) whom *Pilate released from prison to the Jews instead of Christ (Mk. 15. 6–15). It is possible

(on the evidence of certain MSS.), but unlikely, that his real name was 'Jesus Barabbas', Barabbas in that case being a patronymic.

H. A. Rigg, 'Barabbas' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxiv (1945), pp. 417–56. See also comm. to Mark, St., Gospel of, cited s.v.

BARBARA, St. Acc. to tradition, the daughter of a pagan of Nicomedia, who on being converted to the Christian faith was handed over by her father to the prefect and martyred. A circumstantial account of her martyrdom is contained in the Golden Legend*. She is one of the fourteen *Auxiliary Saints. Her prayers are sought esp. as a protection against thunderstorms and fire; and, by an obvious extension of this idea, she is venerated as the patroness of artillerymen and firemen. Feast day, 4 Dec., suppressed in Roman Calendar of 1969.

The earliest accounts, apparently written in Gk., are now lost; various versions in Syr., Lat., and other languages survive. A late Gk. text is printed in J. P. Migne, PG, cxvi, 301–16; another, prob. earlier, ed. A. Wirth, Danae in christlichen Legenden (Prague, etc., 1892), pp. 103–12. Syr. text ed. Agnes Smith Lewis, Studia Sinaitica, ix (1900), pp. 101–10, with Eng. tr., x (1900), pp. 77–84; W. Weyh, Der syrische Barbara-Legende (1912). Lat. text in P. Paschini, S. Barbara. Note agiografiche ('Lateranum', 1927), pp. 38–52, with reff. B. de Gaiffier, S.J., 'La Légende latine de Sainte Barbe par Jean de Wackerzeele' in Anal. Boll., lxxvii (1959), pp. 5–41. S. Peine, St. Barbara, die Schutzheilige der Bergleute und der Artillerie, und ihre Darstellung in der Kunst (1896). Comte de Lapparent, 'Sur quelques représentations de Sainte Barbe' in Bulletin Monumental, lxxxvi (1927), pp. 149–53.

BARBAROSSA. See Frederick I.

BARBE (Fr. 'uncle', lit. 'the bearded'). A title of respect used by the *Waldenses of their preachers.

BARBERINI. A Roman family of Tuscan descent, several of whose members filled important offices in the Church in Italy in the 17th cent. In 1623 Maffeo Barberini was elected Pope as *Urban VIII. Francesco Barberini the elder (1597–1679), who built the fine Palazzo Barberini in Rome, founded in 1627 the 'Biblioteca Barberina', containing the famous collection of MSS. which passed to the Vatican Library in 1902. Their reckless plundering of ancient monuments for their designs, e.g. Urban VIII's conversion of the brass tubes supporting the roof of the Pantheon into the canopy for the high altar at St. Peter's and cannon for the Castel S. Angelo, gave rise to the mot 'Quod non fecerunt barbari, fecerunt Barberini'.

P. Pecchiai, I Barberini (Archivi d'Italia e Rassegna Internazionale degli Archivi, Quaderno doppio v; 1959). T. H. Didier and F. Bonnard in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 640–5, s.v.; G. Graglia in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 825–7, s.v., with bibl.

BARCLAY, JOHN (1734–98), founder of the '*Bereans' (q.v.) or 'Barclayites'. The son of a farmer at Muthill in Perthshire, he was educated at St. Andrews university, where he came under the influence of Archibald Campbell (1691–1756), prof. of Church history, whose teaching was attracting attention through its denial of natural theology. In 1759 Barclay was licensed by the presbytery of Auchterarder, and soon afterwards became assistant to James Jobson, the incumbent of Errol, a strong Evangelical. Differences of opinion with Jobson led him to move to Fettercairn, Kincardine, in 1763, where he was appointed assistant to A. Dow and won the hearts of the parishioners through pastoral zeal and eloquence. In 1766 Barclay published Rejoice Evermore, or Christ All in All, in which he expounded a doctrine of immediate Divine revelation. Censure for heresy by the presbytery followed, and in consequence, despite a petition to the Crown from virtually all the parishioners, he was not appointed to succeed Dow on his death in 1772. Barclay then made his way to Edinburgh, where he gained only a small following. Unable to procure ordination in Scotland, he went to Newcastle, and here he succeeded in being regularly ordained in 1773. Returning soon afterwards to Edinburgh, he constituted a new Church, known as the Berean Assembly, from its zeal for study of the Bible (cf. Acts 17. 10 f.). He laboured on behalf of the community in considerable poverty, but with great earnestness, and continued to publish writings. The chief was a collected work (1776) containing inter alia his earlier The Psalms, paraphrased according to the New Testament Interpretation (1766), illustrating Barclay's beliefs on Scripture. In 1776 Barclay went to London to propagate his doctrines; here he seems to have met with considerable success, and established Berean communities both in London and at Bristol. He returned to Scotland in 1778, continuing to work and travel for his cause, despite very straitened conditions, till his death.

The Works of John Barclay [i.e. his Essays], ed. J. Thomson–D. McMillan (Glasgow, 1852), with 'A Short Account of the Early Part of the Life of Mr. John Barclay', pp. 11–21. A. Miller in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 519–23, s.v. 'Bereans'.

BARCLAY, ROBERT (1648–90), Scottish *Quaker apologist. He was the son of David Barclay (1610–1686), who served as a soldier under *Gustavus Adolphus, assisted in the defeat of Montrose before Inverness (1646) and was one of the thirty Scottish Members of Parliament under O. *Cromwell (1654 and 1656). Robert was born at Gordonstown, Morayshire, and educated at the (RC) Scottish College at *Paris. His father having declared his adhesion to the Quakers in 1666, Robert followed his example in 1667. He soon acquired a wide learning which, combined with considerable intellectual powers, made him the most weighty of all Quaker theologians. In 1673 he published his Catechism and Confession of Faith. In 1676 there followed his principal work, his 'Apology', written to support fifteen Quaker 'Theses Theologiae' which he had defended at Aberdeen and circulated in English, Latin, French, and Dutch. It was originally printed in Latin at Amsterdam as Theologiae Verae Christianae Apologia (1676); the English version, Apology for the True Christian Religion, as the same is set forth and preached by the People called in Scorn 'Quakers', first appeared in 1678. Its impressive and eloquent defence of the doctrine of the '*Inner Light' against the sufficiency of external authorities, including the Bible, made it the classical exposition of Quaker principles. The work also included a strong attack on *Calvinism. During his travels in Holland and Germany (1676) Barclay won the sympathy of Elizabeth, the Princess Palatine, for Quaker principles; and on his return he came into favour with the Duke of York (later *James II), whom he believed to be a genuine advocate of toleration. He was thus able to be of service to W. *Penn in his foundation of Pennsylvania, and in 1683 Barclay was himself appointed governor of East New Jersey (U.S.A.), which was given a constitution on Quaker principles. In the course of his life Barclay often suffered imprisonment for his doctrines. His other writings include The Anarchy of Ranters (1676), The Apology Vindicated (1679), and The Possibility and Necessity of an Inward and Immediate Revelation (1686).

His works were issued in 1692 in a collected folio volume, with the title Truth Triumphant. They were republd. in 3 vols. in 1717–18. The Apology has often been reprinted. M. Christabel Cadbury, Robert Barclay. His Life and Work (1912). L. Eeg-Olofsson, The Conception of the Inner Light in Robert Barclay's Theology (Lund, 1954).

BAR-COCHBA (Aram. בר כוכבא, i.e. 'son of a star'; cf. Num. 24. 17). The leader of a Jewish rebellion in Palestine in A.D. 132. Its purpose was to resist the project of the Emp. Hadrian to rebuild *Jerusalem as a Graeco-Roman city, with a temple of Jupiter on the site of the former Jewish Temple. See Aelia Capitolina. Bar-cochba claimed to be, and was accepted as, the Messiah. A fierce guerrilla war was waged from 132 to 135 in which both sides suffered severe losses. The name Bar-cochba is found only in Christian sources. By the Jews the name is given as Simeon.

E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, i (ed. 3, 1901), pp. 682–5 and 695 (Eng. tr., i, div. 2 (1890), pp. 297–300 and 311). On a MS. identified as his autograph, see J. T. Milik, 'Une Lettre de Siméon Bar Kokheba' in R. Bibl., lx (1953), pp. 276–94.

BARDENHEWER, OTTO (1851–1935), *Patristic scholar. Born at München-Gladbach, he was educated at Bonn and Würzburg universities, lectured at Munich from 1879 to 1884, and was professor of OT Exegesis at Münster i.W. from 1884 to 1886 and of NT Exegesis at Munich from 1886 to 1924. His Patrologie in a single volume appeared in 1894 (Eng. trans., 1908). This was followed by his more ambitious Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (i, 1902, ed. 2, 1913; ii, 1903, ed. 2, 1914; iii, 1912, with additions, 1923; iv, 1924; v, 1932), which for its completeness, soundness of judgement and clarity of presentation is unsurpassed; it remains a standard work of reference. His other works include Des heiligen Hippolytus von Rom Commentar zum Buche Daniel (1877), Polychronius, Bruder Theodors von Mopsuestia und Bischof von Apamea (1879), and many contributions to Biblische Studien.

J. Sickenberger, Erinnerungen an Otto Bardenhewer (1937). E. Peterson in E.C., ii (1949), col. 839 f.

BARDESANES (154–222), correctly 'Bar-Daisan', heretic. Acc. to Oriental writers, he was a native of *Edessa, who was converted to Christianity in 179, later excommunicated, and fled to Armenia c. 216. He probably taught a kind of astrological fatalism and was not, as traditionally supposed, a *Gnostic dualist. With the help of his son, Harmonius, he wrote a large collection of Syriac hymns through which he diffused his doctrines; and he may thus be considered the father of Syriac hymnology. A 'Dialogue of Destiny, or the Book of the Laws of the Lands' from which *Eusebius and other Christian Fathers preserve fragments (as from Περὶ εἱμαρμένης), has come down in the orig. Syriac. It is not impossible that the 'Acts of *Thomas' came from circles under his influence. Bardesanes held that Christ's Body was a phantom and that there would be no future resurrection, and apparently taught a form of emanationism. His disciples maintained a precarious existence for several centuries.

His 'Dialogue of Destiny', ed. W. *Cureton, Spicilegium Syriacum (London, 1855), pp. 1–21 (Syr.), with Eng. tr., pp. 1–34; later ed. F. Nau (Paris, 1899) and by id. in Patrologia Syriaca, ii (1907), pp. 492–657. A single quotation from his Hymns (150) is preserved by *Ephrem Syrus (Opera, ii, 483). Early sources include Eusebius, H.E., iv. xxx, *Epiphanius, Haer., lvi, and *Moses of Chorene (ii. 66). A. Hilgenfeld, Bardesanes, der letzte Gnostiker (Leipzig, 1864); F. Haase, Zur Bardesanischen Gnosis (T.U., xxxiv, 4; 1910); H. H. Schaeder, 'Bardesanes von Edessa in der Überlieferung der griechischen und syrischen Kirche' in Z.K.G., li (1932), pp. 21–73. H. J. W. Drijvers, Bardaisan of Edessa (Studia Semitica Neerlandica, vi; Assen, 1966), with extensive bibl. H. E. W. Turner, The Pattern of Christian Truth (1954), pp. 90–4. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 364–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 101 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), p. 263 f. F. *Hort in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 250–60, s.v.; F. Nau in D.T.C., ii (1904), cols. 391–401, s.v.

BAR HEBRAEUS (1226–86). The name by which Abû-l-Farağ, a *Jacobite Syrian bishop and philosopher, is commonly known. He was the son of a physician of Jewish descent who was converted to the Christian faith. After studying medicine at Antioch and Tripoli, he was consecrated bishop in 1246, and in 1264 he became Primate of the East, with his residence at the monastery of Mar Mattai near Mosul. His travels as primate enabled him to consult libraries in many distant parts, and out of the vast erudition thus acquired he composed a large corpus of writings in which he transmitted his predecessors' learning by condensation or reproduction. Most of his works were written in *Syriac, by that date a dead language, but a few in Arabic. They include the 'Granary of Mysteries' ('Horreum Mysteriorum'), a collection of *scholia on the Bible; the 'Cream of Science' (most of it still unedited), a vast encyclopaedic work in which he shows himself an Aristotelian of the school of *Avicenna and the Arabs; and the 'Chronicle' which professes to give a complete history of the world from the creation.

His commentary on the liturgy ed. for the first time, with useful introd. and bibl. reff., by R. Kohlhaas, O.S.B., Jakobitische Sakramententheologie im 13. Jahrhundert (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxxvi; 1959). Autobiography publ. by J. S. *Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, ii (Rome, 1721), pp. 248–63. J. Göttsberger, Barhebräus und seine Scholia zur heiligen Schrift (Biblische Studien, v, Hftt. 4–5, 1900). H. F. Janssens, L'Entretien de la sagesse. Introduction aux œuvres philosophiques de Bar Hebraeus (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, lxxv; 1937). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 136. F. Nau in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 401–6, s.v., with further bibl.

BARLAAM AND JOASAPH, Sts., two subjects of a popular medieval legend. It having been prophesied in the infancy of *Joasaph (or 'Josaphat'), the son of a heathen Indian king, that he would be converted to Christianity, he was shut up in a palace so that he should know nothing of the facts or evils of life. Thence he escaped, and was found and won to the Christian faith by the hermit Barlaam. For a time he ruled the kingdom with his father, but later retired to the wilderness with Barlaam.

The story, which dates apparently from the 8th cent., was written to glorify Christian monasticism. It is divided into three parts: (1) narrative; (2) speeches, containing expositions of Christian doctrine and quotations from early Christian writers, including the 'Apology' of *Aristides; and (3) the 'Apologues', fables or parables. It seems established that it is based on Buddhist sources. Traditionally it has been attributed (prob. rightly, acc. to J. M. Hoeck, O.S.B.) to St. *John of Damascus. See also Josaphat, St.

The names of Barlaam and Josaphat were added to the *Roman Martyrology by C. *Baronius. Their feast is observed on 27 Nov. In W. calendars another St. Barlaam, a martyr, is commemorated on 9 Nov.

Ed. princeps of Gk. text in J. F. Boissonade, Anecdota Graeca, iv (1832), pp. 1–365; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xcvi, 857–1250. Modern ed., with Eng. tr., by G. R. Woodward and H. Mattingly (Loeb, 1914). Georgian text ed. E. Takaishvili (Tiflis, 1895); Eng. tr. of different Georgian text by D. M. Lang (1966); Eth. text from MS. B.Mus., Or. 699, ed. E. A. Wallis Budge (2 vols., Cambridge, 1923). R. L. Wolff, 'Barlaam and Joasaph' in H.T.R., xxxii (1939), pp. 131–9 (ascribes work to St. Euthymius, a monk of Mt. *Athos, d. 1028). J. M. Hoeck, O.S.B., 'Stand und Aufgaben der Damaskenos-Forschung' in O.C.P., xvii (1951), p. 32 f. F. Dölger, Der griechische Barlaam-Roman, ein Werk des H. Johannes von Damaskos (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, i: Ettal, 1953). S. I. Nuçubiże, K proishoždeniju grečeskogo romana 'Varlaam i Ioasaph (Tiflis, 1956); cf. P. Devos, S.J., 'Les Origines du "Barlaam et Joasaph" grec' in Anal. Boll., lxxv (1957), pp. 83–104. H. Peri, Der Religionsdisput der Barlaam-Legende, ein Motiv abendländischer Dichtung (Acta Salmanticensia, Filosofia y Letras, xiv, No. 3; 1959). J. van den Gheyn in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 410–16; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2, 1927), cols. 2539–54; H. Bacht, S.J., in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1193–2000, with bibl. to date.

BARLOW, THOMAS (1607–91), Bp. of *Lincoln. At *Oxford he became Librarian of the *Bodleian (1642), Provost of Queen's (1657), and Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity (1660). Theologically he was a definite *Calvinist, but, by persistent trimming, he kept his offices through the many changes of the century. He became Bp. of Lincoln in 1675, but there is reason to doubt whether he ever visited his cathedral. His violent anti-Papalism found full scope in the *Popish Plot, but, on the accession of *James II, he professed his loyal affection. Undismayed, he took the oath to William III without demur. His published works include a treatise on natural theology entitled Exercitationes aliquot metaphysicae de Deo (1637), Plain reasons why a Protestant of the Church of England should not turn Roman Catholic (1688), and Cases of Conscience (1692).

The Genuine Remains of . . . Dr. Thomas Barlow (1693, ed. P. Pett). A. *Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. 3, P. Bliss), iv (1820), cols. 333–41. S. Levy, 'Bishop Barlow on the "Case of the Jews"' in Transactions of the Jewish Historical Society of England, iii (1899), pp. 151–6. E. Venables in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 224–9.

BARLOW, WILLIAM (d. 1568), Bp. of *Chichester. In early life he was an *Augustinian canon, and an opponent of T. *Wolsey. He showed Protestant tendencies as early as 1529, when a series of his tracts was condemned, but he was reconciled to the court and used on diplomatic business. He became successively Bp.-elect of *St. Asaph (1535–6), Bp. of *St. Davids (1536), and Bp. of *Bath and Wells (1548). Under Mary he fled abroad, but was appointed Bp. of Chichester on her death. His position as chief consecrator of Abp. M. *Parker has given rise to controversy, since there is no record of his own consecration (really not surprising, however, in view of the careless keeping of the Canterbury Register; see Anglican Ordinations). His views on Church and state were *Erastian in the extreme. In his Dialogue (1531; reprinted, 1553; new ed. by J. R. Lunn, 1897) he expressed his strong disapproval of *Lutheran opinions. He translated part of the *Apocrypha for the *Bishops' Bible.

A. S. Barnes, Bishop Barlow and Anglican Orders. A Study of the Original Documents (1922). C. Jenkins, 'Bishop Barlow's Consecration and Archbishop Parker's Register. With some new Documents', J.T.S., xxiv (1922–3), pp. 1–32. Christina H. Garrett, The Marian Exiles (Cambridge, 1938), p. 80. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 229–31.

BARLOW, WILLIAM (c. 1565–1613), Bp. of *Lincoln. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, he was a Fellow of Trinity Hall from 1590 to 1596, when he was made chaplain to Abp. *Whitgift. He became Dean of *Chester in 1602, Bp. of *Rochester in 1605, and Bp. of Lincoln in 1608. He attended the *Hampton Court Conference in 1604 and is best known for his Summe and Substance of the Conference . . . at Hampton Court (1604), which, despite contemporary and later criticism, remains the most satisfactory account. He took part in the Cambridge dispute about *predestination in the late 1590's, and in his report to Whitgift criticised J. *Overall, then regius professor of theology, for indulging the *Calvinist faction; his own views seem to anticipate those of the Dutch *Arminians.

Barlow was an able preacher and an ardent supporter of *Divine Right. In 1606 he was employed by *James I to preach before A. *Melville in an attempt to urge the acceptance of episcopacy and the royal supremacy on the Church of Scotland. Two years later he replied to R. *Parsons's attack on the Oath of Allegiance. He was one of the translators of the AV.

His Summe and Substance is repr. in E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences (Oxford, 1840), pp. 167–212. E. Venables in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 231–3.

BARMEN DECLARATION, The (1934). The statement drawn up at the first Synod of the *Confessing Church at Barmen from 29 to 30 May 1934, to define the belief and mission of the Church in the face of the liberal tendencies of the Nazi *German Christians. The foundation of the Church was held to be the Revelation of God in Jesus Christ and not any subordinate revelation in nature or history, and her primary mission was defined as to preach the Gospel of the free Grace of God. The Synod and its Declaration were deeply under the influence of K. *Barth.

Text, with full bibl., in K. D. Schmidt, Die Bekenntnisse und grundsätzlichen Äusserungen zur Kirchenfrage, ii (1935), section 42, pp. 91–8. G. Niemöller, Die erste Bekenntnissynode der Deutschen evangelischen Kirche zu Barmen (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes, v–vi; 1959).

BARNABAS, St. A Jewish *Levite of *Cyprus who became one of the earliest Christian disciples at *Jerusalem. His original name was Joseph, but he was 'surnamed Barnabas by the Apostles', the word 'Barnabas' being interpreted by St. Luke as 'son of consolation' (υἱὸς παρακλήσεως, Acts 4. 36). It was he who introduced St. *Paul, perhaps an acquaintance of long standing, to the Apostles after his conversion (Acts 9. 27), and was sent by them to inquire into the situation at *Antioch, where Christianity was being preached to Gentiles on a new scale (11. 22 ff.). Having approved, he fetched St. Paul from Tarsus to help him in the first 'missionary journey' which followed (Acts 13 and 14; see Paul, St.), beginning with Cyprus. Indeed, in this he was originally the leader, though St. Paul very soon became the more prominent. At the Council at Jerusalem (Acts 15) he defended the claims of the Gentile Christians, and after it returned to Antioch with St. Paul (15. 30). Owing to a dispute with St. Paul over John *Mark, 'they parted asunder one from the other' (15. 39), and Barnabas sailed for Cyprus. He probably continued to travel widely, as later St. Paul mentions him as if he were known to the *Galatians (Gal. 2. 1, 2. 13), the *Corinthians (1 Cor. 9. 6), and possibly the *Colossians (Col. 4. 10). He is the traditional founder of the Cypriot Church, and legend asserts that he was martyred at Salamis in A.D. 61. Acc. to another tradition he was one of the seventy of Lk. 10. 1, and to a third the founder of the church of Milan and its first bishop. *Tertullian attributes to his authorship the Ep. to the *Hebrews. Feast day, 11 June.

AA.SS., Jun. II (1698), pp. 420–60. Crit. ed. of his Acta by M. Bonnet, Acta Philippi et Acta Thomae accedunt Acta Barnabae (Leipzig, 1903), pp. 292–302. O. Braunsberger, S.J., Der Apostel Barnabas. Sein Leben und der ihm beigelegte Brief (Mainz, 1876). L. *Duchesne, 'Saint Barnabé' in *Mélanges G. B. de Rossi. Supplément aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, xii (1892), pp. 41–71. J. D. Burger, 'L'Énigme de Barnabas' in Museum Helveticum, iii (1946), pp. 180–93.

BARNABAS, Epistle of. An epistle of early Christian times ascribed by *Clement of Alexandria to the Apostle *Barnabas. Its Greek text was first discovered entire in the *Codex Sinaiticus. It contains a strong attack on Judaism, explaining animal sacrifices, the distinctive enactments of the Mosaic Law, and the material Temple as mistakes due to Jewish blindness and denying that they were ever God's will. The writer also maintains that the Hebrew Scriptures, so far from enjoining Judaic practices, had an esoteric sense, which he professes to reveal. In this way he succeeds in finding in the OT convincing testimonies for Christianity and against Judaism. It is very improbable that the author was really the Apostle Barnabas. He was probably a Christian of Alexandria who wrote between A.D. 70 and 100.

For edd. and transs. of text, see bibl. to Apostolic Fathers. Also ed. T. Klauser (Florilegium Patristicum, fasc. i, new ed., 1940). P. Haeuser, Der Barnabasbrief (1912); H. Windisch, Der Barnabasbrief (1920; Handbuch zum N.T., Ergänzungsband, Die apostolischen Väter). J. A. *Robinson, Barnabas, Hermas and the Didache (1920), pp. 1–25. A. L. Williams, 'The Date of the Epistle of Barnabas' in J.T.S., xxxiv (1933), pp. 337–46, incl. further bibl. reff. P. Prigent, L'Épître de Barnabé I–XVI et ses sources (Études Bibliques, 1961). L. W. Barnard, Studies in the Apostolic Fathers and their Background (Oxford, 1966), pp. 73–135. K. Wengst, Tradition und Theologie des Barnabasbriefes (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xlii; 1972).

BARNABAS, Gospel of. A writing in Italian, apparently forged not earlier than the 15th cent. by a native of Italy who had renounced Christianity for Islam. An 'Evangelium secundum Barnabam' is also listed in the '*Decretum Gelasianum' among the spuria; but this is prob. an independent work, now wholly lost.

Ital. text ed. with Eng. tr. by Lonsdale and Laura Ragg (Oxford, 1907). Cf. also W. E. A. Axon, 'On the Mohammedan Gospel of Barnabas' in J.T.S., iii (1901–2), pp. 441–5, and Lonsdale Ragg, 'The Mohammedan "Gospel of Barnabas"', ib., vi (1904–5), pp. 424–33.

BARNABITES. A small religious order founded at Milan in 1530 by St. Antonio Maria Zaccaria (d. 1539). Officially known as the 'Clerks Regular of St. Paul', its members obtained their popular name from their church of St. Barnabas at Milan. Besides the usual monastic obligations, their rule provides for the study of St. Paul's Epistles and for education and mission work. About 1950 some 35 Barnabite houses existed, mostly in Italy.

O. Premoli, Barnabite, Storia dei Barnabiti nel cinquecento (1913), nel seicento (1922), dal 1700 al 1825 (1925). L. M. Levati and others, Menologio dei Barnabiti (12 vols., Genoa, 1932–8). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 106–10. O. Premoli in Enciclopedia Ecclesiastica, i (1942), pp. 202 f., s.v. 'Barnabiti', with further bibl.; V. M. Colciago in E.C. iv (1950), cols. 298–301, s.v. 'Congregazione di S. Paolo'.

BARNETT, SAMUEL AUGUSTUS (1844–1913), Anglican social reformer. After studying law and modern history at Wadham College, *Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1867. In 1869 he founded the Charity Organization Society. From 1873 to 1894 he was vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, where his unorthodox methods (evening schools, entertainments, serving on the Board of Guardians) at first aroused much criticism, but soon led to his recognition as a loyal priest, devoted to the religious and cultural improvement of the East End. He encouraged tutors from Oxford to come to lecture to his parishioners, and from 1884 to 1896 was the first Warden of Toynbee Hall. In 1884 he helped to found the Education Reform League, and in 1885 he became a promoter of the Artisans' Dwellings Act. Throughout his life he was active in initiating projects directed to the reform of social conditions on Christian principles and urging Christians to study them. In 1906 Barnett became a Canon of *Westminster. He was much assisted in his work by his wife (Henrietta Octavia, née Rowland), who before marriage had been a co-worker with Octavia Hill (1838–1912). 'Barnett House', for the study of social problems, was founded at Oxford in his memory. His writings include Practicable Socialism: Essays on Social Reform (1888), The Service of God: Sermons, Essays, and Addresses (1897), and Religion and Politics (1911).

His Life was written by his wife in 2 vols. (1918). J. Wells in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 31 f.

BARO, PETER (1534–99), anti-*Calvinist divine. Born at Étampes, he studied for the law at Bourges, where he came under the influence of the recently introduced Protestant doctrines. Abandoning law for divinity, he made his way to *Geneva, where J. *Calvin admitted him to the ministry. After returning to France, he found himself compelled to flee to England. In 1574, mainly through the influence of Burghley, he was appointed Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge. Here, despite his earlier personal associations with Calvin, he became a critic of the more predestinarian of the Calvinist doctrines. The *Lambeth Articles seem to have been drafted partly to rebut his teaching, but Baro put an anti-Calvinist sense on them and thus justified his formal assent. He also challenged W. *Perkins's teaching on predestination, then in high repute at Cambridge. But though Burghley had interposed in his favour and J. *Overall and L. *Andrewes had given him their support, Baro found it expedient to flee from Cambridge in 1596. He lived for the rest of his life in London. He can be regarded as an early leader of the movement in Anglican theology later popularly termed '*Arminianism'. His writings include Praelectiones on Jonah (1579), De Fide ejusque Ortu et Natura plana ac dilucida Explicatio (1580) and De Praestantia et Dignitate Divinae Legis Libri Duo (n.d.).

Abridged version of his autobiography from a Baker MS., vol. xxxix, p. 185, and other material pr. by R. Masters, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Rev. Thomas Baker (1784), pp. 127–31. H. C. Porter, Reformation and Reaction in Tudor Cambridge (Cambridge, 1958), esp. pp. 376–97.

BAROCCO. See Baroque.

BARONIUS, CESARE (1538–1607), ecclesiastical historian. He became a member of the *Oratory under St. *Philip Neri in 1557, and Superior in 1593. In 1596 he was made Cardinal and in 1597 Librarian of the *Vatican. His most important work, the Annales Ecclesiastici (12 folio volumes, 1588–1607), is a history of the Church in chapters each corresponding to a year, undertaken as a RC reply to the Centuries of Magdeburg*. At his death this work had only reached the year 1198, and various attempts, all worthless, were made to continue it, one by the Oratorians themselves. Baronius was at some pains to secure accuracy, as is clear from the long list of authorities he cites and compares. But on many matters, particularly where the E. Church is concerned, his information was scanty and in error, and throughout his critical powers failed to support his good intentions. In the 11th volume, published in 1605, he included a note supporting Papal claims in Sicily against Spain, which was published as a separate treatise after his death (Paris, 1609; Leyden, 1619), and gave much offence to Philip III. At the time of the original publication it is said to have lost Baronius the Papacy, owing to Spanish opposition. He also published two new and corrected editions of the *Roman Martyrology (1586 and 1589).

The standard ed. of his Annales Ecclesiastici, with the various additions and an index to the whole, is that of J. D. *Mansi and D. Georgius (38 vols., Lucca, 1738–59). Early life by H. Barnabeus, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1651). G. Calenzio, La vita e gli scritti del Cardinale Cesare Baronio (1907); V. Simoncelli (ed.), Per Cesare Baronio. Scritti vari nel terzo centenario della sua morte (1911); G. De Libero, Cong. Orat., Cesare Baronio, padre della storia ecclesiastica (1936). A. Roncalli [*John XXIII], Il Cardinale Cesare Baronio. Conferenza tenuta il 4 decembre 1907 nel Seminario di Bergamo ricorrendo il terzo centenario della morte (1961). Scritti Vari [ed. F. Caraffa], A Cesare Baronio (Sora, 1963). A. Molien in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 871–82, s.v.

BAROQUE (Portug. barocco, a 'rough pearl'). The ornate style of art and architecture which flourished in Italy during the 17th and early 18th cents., and spread throughout the Continent, esp. in France and Spain. With its lofty grandeur and richness of decoration it attempted to infuse new life and religious feeling into the cold correctness of the later Renaissance, but purity of form was sometimes sacrificed to an unrestrained love of ornament. Its most notable Italian exponents were G. L. Bernini (1598–1680), C. Maderna (1556–1629), and F. Borromini (1599–1667). In Germany and Austria baroque art achieved some of its most distinguished examples in the buildings of Balthasar Neumann (1687–1753) and Fischer von Erlach (1656–1723). Owing to the fantastic exuberance of some architects, the term 'baroque' came to signify anything florid or bizarre. See also Rococo.

W. Weisbach, Der Barock als Kunst der Gegenreformation (1921), with plates; id., Die Kunst des Barock in Italien, Frankreich, Deutschland und Spanien (1924). J. Weingartner–F. Filser, Der Geist des Barocks (Augsburg, 1925), with plates. H. Wölfflin, Renaissance und Barock. Eine Untersuchung über Wesen und Entstehung des Barockstils in Italien (1888). S. Sitwell, Southern Baroque Art (1924), with bibl.; id., German Baroque Art (1927), with bibl. R. Wittkower, Art and Architecture in Italy 1600 to 1750 (Pelican History of Art, 1958; revised ed., 1965); E. Hempel, Baroque Art and Architecture in Central Europe, translated by Elisabeth Hempel–Marguerite Kay (ib., 1965). G. Bazin, The Baroque. Principles, Styles, Modes, Themes, tr. by Pat Wardorfer (1968). A. E. Brinkmann, Barockskulptur (Handbuch der Kunstwissenschaft, 1919). B. *Croce, Storia della età barocca in Italia (1929). H. Hatzfeld in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 106–13, s.v.; S. Galigani, ib., pp. 113–22, s.v. 'Baroque Art'; H. A. Millon in E.B., iii (1968 ed.), pp. 185–90, s.v. 'Baroque and post-Baroque Architecture'; W. Fleming, ib., pp. 190–92, s.v. 'Baroque Art'.

BARRIER ACT. The Act passed on 8 Jan. 1697 by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which requires that proposals to make any important alteration in the constitution of the Church shall first be presented in the form of overtures to the Assembly, and if passed in this form shall then be sent down to presbyteries for their consideration and opinion, and thence remitted to a future Assembly. Its purpose was to prevent hasty legislation that might prejudice the doctrine, worship, or government of the Church. The Act is still in force.

Text in Acts of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, M.DC.XXXVIII.–M.DCCC.XLII. [ed. T. Pitcairn] (1843), p. 260 f.

BARRINGTON, SHUTE (1734–1826), Bp. of *Durham. He was the youngest son of John Shute, first Viscount Barrington (1678–1734), a strong advocate of complete religious freedom for the Protestant dissenters. Educated at Eton and at Merton College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1756, and in 1761 became a canon of Christ Church. After other appointments he filled successively the sees of *Llandaff (1769), *Salisbury (1782), and Durham (1791), and was one of the most influential bishops of his age. He made generous distribution of his large episcopal revenues. In his attitude to the Nonconformists he was less liberal than his father, deprecating any relaxation of subscription on the ground that precise articles of faith were indispensable in an Established Church. Besides issuing an edition of his father's Miscellanea Sacra (3 vols., 1770) he published the Life of his brother, William Wildman, Viscount Barrington (1814), a collection of Sermons (1811), and some minor works.

Brief Memoir by G. Townsend in his ed. of The Theologica Works of the first Viscount Barrington, i (1828), pp. xliv–lix. A. H. Grant in D.N.B., iii (1885), p. 294.

BARROW, HENRY (c. 1550–93), also Barrowe, *Congregationalist. Educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, he was converted c. 1580 from the profligate life of a courtier to a strict *Puritanism of a Brownist type. In 1586, when visiting in prison J. *Greenwood, the separatist leader, with whom he had earlier come into association, he was detained by order of Abp. J. *Whitgift, and kept in confinement till his death. He wrote in defence of separatism and congregational independence, and also engaged in controversy with R. *Browne, the Congregationalist, who sought separation from the Established Church only as a means to a spiritual democracy, whereas Barrow appears to have held that any idea of Church order was completely corrupt. He was charged in 1590 with circulating seditious books, and three years later sentenced to be hanged. Most of his writings were printed in Holland by his friends. They included A True Description of the Visible Congregation of the Saints, &c. (1589) and A Brief Discovery of the False Church (1590). It has been argued, though with little show of probability, that Barrow was the author of the *Marprelate Tracts.

The Writings of Henry Barrow 1587–1590, ed. L. H. Carlson (Elizabethan Nonconformist Tracts, iii; 1962); The Writings of Henry Barrow, 1590–1591, ed. id. (ib., v; 1966); The Writings of John Greenwood 1587–1590, together with the joint writings of Henry Barrow and John Greenwood 1587–1590, ed. id. (ib., iv; 1962), pp. 95–273; The Writings of John Greenwood and Henry Barrow 1591–1593, ed. id. (ib., vi; 1970), pp. 93–291. F. J. Powicke, Henry Barrowe, Separatist, and the Exiled Church in Amsterdam (1900).

BARROW, ISAAC (1630–77), Anglican divine, classical scholar, and mathematician. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1643, and though a royalist and the son of a royalist, became a scholar in 1647, and a Fellow in 1649. From 1655 to 1659 he travelled in France, Italy, and the Near East, and on his return to England was ordained. He was appointed Professor of Greek at Cambridge in 1660, Professor of Geometry at Gresham College, London, shortly after, and the first Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge in 1663. The last post he resigned in 1669, in favour of his pupil, I. *Newton, whose greater ability he recognized, while he himself had come to doubt whether his mathematical studies left him sufficient time for theology. Soon after this, *Charles II made him his chaplain, and in 1673 Master of Trinity. The precision of a mathematician's thought is reflected in his theology, and his Treatise on the Pope's Supremacy (1680, posthumous) remains a work of outstanding ability. He was also one of the most successful (and lengthy) preachers of his day.

Collected ed. of his Theological Works by J. *Tillotson (4 vols., London, 1683–7), incl. 'Some Account of the Life of Dr. Isaac Barrow' by A. H[ill]. Modern ed. by A. Napier (9 vols., Cambridge, 1859) incl. life by A. Hill, vol. i, pp. xxxvii–liv, and 'Barrow and his Academical Times as Illustrated in his Latin Works' by W. Whewell, vol. ix, pp. i–lv. Mathematical Works ed. W. Whewell (Cambridge, 1860). Further biographical Memoir by T. S. Hughes prefixed to his ed. of Barrow's Theological Works (7 vols., London, 1831), vol. i, pp. ix–xc. P. H. Osmond, Isaac Barrow, His Life and Times (1944). His Sermon 'Of Submission to the Divine Will' is repr. in [H.] H. *Henson (ed.), Selected English Sermons (World's Classics, 1939), pp. 165–84. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 299–305.

BARSUMAS (d. 458), *Monophysite archimandrite. He was one of the leaders of the Eutychian party at the Synod of *Constantinople of 448, at the *Latrocinium (449), and at the Council of *Chalcedon (451). To the Latrocinium, where he represented the Oriental monks at the invitation of Emp. *Theodosius II (d. 450) and sat among the Bishops, he is said to have brought a turbulent body of monks to support him; later (at Chalcedon) he was charged with responsibility for *Flavian's death. After Chalcedon he spent the rest of his life in exile.

Text of Eth. Life, with Fr. tr., ed. S. Grébaut, 'Vie de Barsoma le Syrien', in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, xiii (1908), pp. 337–45, and xiv (1909), pp. 135–42, 264–75, and 401–14. There is also a Life in Syr. by his pupil, Samuel; short extracts ed., with Fr. tr. by F. Nau, ib., xviii (1913), pp. 272–6, 379–89, and xix (1914), pp. 113–34, 278–89; an ed. of the full text by J. Jarry in P.O. is announced. E. Honigmann, Le Couvent de Barsaumā et le patriarcat jacobite d'Antioche et de Syrie (C.S.C.O., cxlvi, Subsidia, vii; 1954), esp. pp. 6–23. F. Nau in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 434 f., s.v.

BARSUMAS (c. 420 – c. 490), *Nestorian Bp. of Nisibis. A disciple of *Ibas of Edessa, he was present at the *Latrocinium (449), where his banishment was demanded. At an unknown date after the death of Ibas (457) he became Metropolitan of Nisibis, where with the aid of the Persian King, who welcomed him to his court, he became a keen propagandist of Nestorianism. He also strove to make his see of Nisibis independent of Seleucia-Ctesiphon. To this end he secured the deposition of Babowaï, the *Catholicos of Seleucia, and the intrusion of Acacius, his fellow-pupil at Edessa, into the see (484). But the relative position of Seleucia and Nisibis remained unsettled and caused him much trouble in the next years. He established at Nisibis an influential theological school; and when the celebrated school of *Edessa (also Nestorian) was closed in 489, Barsumas welcomed its exiles. Six of his Epistles survive.

Epp. of Barsumas, ed. O. Braun, 'Des Barsauma von Nisibis Briefe an den Katholikos Akak', in Actes du Xe Congrès des Orientalistes, Genève, 1894 (Leyden, 1896), pt. 3, sect. 2, pp. 83–101; Ger. tr. by id., Das Buch der Synhados (1900), pp. 75–83. J. Labourt, Le Christianisme dans l'empire perse sous la dynastie sassanide (224–632) (1904), pp. 131–52. Bardenhewer, iv (1924), p. 411; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1968), pp. 118–20. F. Nau in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 430–4, s.v.

BARTH, KARL (1886–1968), Protestant theologian. He was the son of Fritz Barth (1856–1912), Prof. of NT Theology at Berne. After studying at Berne, Berlin, *Tübingen, and *Marburg, Karl Barth began as a minister at Geneva (1909–11) and was then for ten years (1911–21) pastor at Safenwil (Aargau). Here, under the shadow of the war of 1914–18 and in direct relation to his pastoral responsibility, he was led to a radical questioning of current theological notions, and wrote his 'Commentary on Romans' (Der Römerbrief, 1919). The originality, critical power, and actuality of its message, particularly in the pessimism of the post-war situation, at once gave him a very wide hearing among German-speaking Protestant theologians. In 1921 he became extraordinary professor at Göttingen and later Professor at Münster i.W. (1925) and Bonn (1930).

On Hitler's accession to power and the outbreak of the 'Church Struggle' (1933), Barth at once threw in his lot with the *Confessing Church. As a Swiss subject he enjoyed a liberty of speech not open to a German and he had a strong backing. None the less his action demanded much courage. The formulation of Confessional theology in the *Barmen Declaration of 1934 was largely Barth's work. At the outset he held that National Socialism, being purely a matter of secular politics, was irrelevant to the Christian, provided the freedom of the Gospel was maintained. Later he came to the view that such neutrality was not possible, and vigorously attacked Nazism. On his refusal to take an oath of unconditional allegiance to the Führer, he was deprived of his chair. He left Germany and in 1935 became professor of Theology at Basle, where he continued to teach until he retired in 1962.

Barth's primary object was to lead theology away from what he believed to be the fundamentally erroneous outlook of modern religious philosophy, with its positive attitude to science, culture, and art, its sympathy with mysticism and its stress on feeling, and to bring it back to the principles of the *Reformation. It was to be a return to the Prophetic teaching of the Bible, of which he believed that the Reformers were the most authentic exponents. Among those who specially influenced him were S. *Kierkegaard, F. M. *Dostoievski, F. *Overbeck, and the *Blumhardts. The Christian message, he held, affirmed the Supremacy and Transcendence of God, whose infinite superiority to all human aspirations meant the worthlessness of human reason. Since the *Fall, which brought man wholly under the dominion of sin, his natural capacities, including his reason, had been radically perverted, so that all 'natural theology', as expounded e.g. by the *Scholastics and the modern RC Church, as well as all religion grounded in experience, as found in, e.g., F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and the *Hegelians, has now become impossible. God's sole revelation is in Jesus Christ and the Word of God is His one and only means of communication with man. Since man is utterly dependent on Divine grace, all his boasted cultural achievements are rooted in sin.

These doctrines Barth proclaimed with passionate fervour in a style at once graphic and forceful, and in language deeply influenced by the Bible. He made them the theme of innumerable sermons and addresses, as well as of more continuous writings. In 1927 he published the beginnings of a systematic exposition of his theology in Die christliche Dogmatik im Entwurf, I, 'Die Lehre vom Worte Gottes'; but he abandoned this work and a few years later began again on a vast scale. In 1932 there appeared the first vol. of Die kirchliche Dogmatik, on which he was destined to be engaged for most of the rest of his life. After his retirement and a serious illness, the plan of the work was modified, and the final section appeared in 1967.

In 1945 Münster University restored the doctorate of which it had deprived Barth in 1939. In politics he now declined to take up the same hostile attitude to Communism as he had hitherto done to Nazism on the ground that the Church, which must be essentially detached from politics, cannot decide in advance that Communism is necessarily evil. He continued to act as a potent astringent influence in Protestant theology, on secondary matters (e.g. *infant baptism) often taking up provocative and sometimes unexpected positions.

In English-speaking countries, the greatest impact of 'the Barthian Theology' was in the 1930s. By the 1950s, though Barth still had professed disciples, his theological influence had become widely diffused among many who did not share his particular views or comprise a specifically 'Barthian' movement. At the same time his personal prestige, based largely on his distinctive and forthright standpoint, gave him the position of the outstanding Protestant theologian, and perhaps the most notable Christian prophet, of his time.

Barth's other works include Das Wort Gottes und die Theologie (collected lectures, 1924; Eng. tr., 1928), Die Theologie und die Kirche (further lectures, 1928); Credo (an outline of dogmatics based on the *Apostles' Creed, 1935; Eng. tr., 1936); The Knowledge of God and the Service of God (*Gifford Lectures, 1937–8; publd. 1938; based on the Scottish Confession of 1560); Dogmatik in Grundriss (Lectures delivered in Bonn, 1946; publd. 1947; Eng. tr., 1949); Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (1947; Eng. tr. of part as From Rousseau to Ritschl, 1959; Eng. tr. of the whole, 1972); Die kirchliche Lehre von der Taufe (1947; Eng. tr., 1948); Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (1948; Eng. tr., 1964).

See also Brunner, E., and Dialectical Theology.

The Eng. tr. of Barth's Römerbrief by E. C. *Hoskyns (1932) did much to spread knowledge of his doctrines in Britain. Eng. tr. of his Kirchliche Dogmatik by G. T. Thomson, T. F. Torrance, G. W. Bromiley, and others, 13 vols., 1936–69. Festschriften were issued in honour of his 50th birthday, ed. E. Wolf (Munich, 1936); of his 60th birthday (Cahiers Théologiques de l'Actualité Protestante, Hors Série, 2; Neuchâtel–Paris, 1946) and ed. F. W. Camfield (London, 1947); of his 70th birthday, ed. E. Wolf and others (Zürich, 1956, with list of his works to date, pp. 945–60), ed. T. H. L. Parker (London, 1956) and a special issue of Theologische Zeitschrift, xii, Hftt 2–3 (1956); and for his 80th birthday, ed. E. Busch and others (Zürich, 1966, with list of his works from 1956 onwards, pp. 709–23) and ed. J. I. McCord–T. H. L. Parker (London, 1966). R. B. Hoyle, The Teaching of Karl Barth (1930); J. MacConnachie, The Significance of Karl Barth (1931); id., The Barthian Theology and the Man of Today (1933). A. Keller, Der Weg der dialektischen Theologie durch die kirchliche Welt (1931; Eng. tr. as Karl Barth and Christian Unity [1933]). C. van Til, The New Modernism. An Appraisal of the Theology of Barth and Brunner (1946). O. Weber, Karl Barth's Kirchliche Dogmatik (1950; Eng. tr., 1953). H. von Balthasar, Karl Barth. Darstellung und Deutung seiner Theologie (1951). J. Hamer, O.P., Karl Barth. L'Occasionalisme théologique de Karl Barth. Étude sur sa méthode dogmatique (1949; Eng. tr., 1962). G. C. Berkouwer, De Triomf der Genade in de Theologie van Karl Barth (Kampen, 1955; Eng. tr., 1956). H. Bouillard, Karl Barth (Théologie, xxxviii and xxxix; 2 vols. in 3, 1957). H. Küng, Rechtfertigung. Die Lehre Karl Barths und eine katholische Besinnung (Einsiedeln, 1957; Eng. tr., 1964). T. F. Torrance, Karl Barth. An Introduction to his Early Theology, 1910–1931 (1962). H. Hartwell, The Theology of Karl Barth. An Introduction (1964). F. Schmid, Verkündigung und Dogmatik in der Theologie Karl Barths. Hermeneutik und Ontologie in einer Theologie des Wortes Gottes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Zehnte Reihe, xxix; Munich, 1964). C. O'Grady, M.C.S., The Church in the Theology of Karl Barth (1968); id., The Church in Catholic Theology: Dialogue with Karl Barth (1969). E. Busch, Karl Barths Lebenslauf: nach seinen Briefen und autobiographischen Texten (Munich, 1975; Eng. tr., 1976). S. W. Sykes (ed.), Karl Barth. Studies of his Theological Method (Oxford, 1979).

BARTHOLOMEW, St. One of the twelve Apostles. He is mentioned only in the Synoptic Gospels (Mk. 3. 18, Lk. 6. 14, Mt. 10. 3) and in Acts (1. 13). The name is a patronymic, meaning 'son of Tolmai', so that he may have had another (personal) name, and he is sometimes identified with *Nathanael (Jn. 1. 45–51, 21. 2). Acc. to *Eusebius, when *Pantaenus of Alexandria visited *India between A.D. 150 and 200, he found there 'the Gospel according to Matthew' in Hebrew, left behind by 'Bartholomew, one of the Apostles' (H.E., V. x. 3). Bartholomew is traditionally said to have been flayed alive at Albanopolis in Armenia. Feast day in W., 24 Aug.; in E., 11 June.

A. Romeo in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 916–18, s.v. 'Bartolomeo, Apostolo (I)', with bibl. See also bibl. to Nathanael.

BARTHOLOMEW, Gospel of St. An apocryphal Gospel whose existence was known to *Jerome and *Bede. It has perhaps been incorporated into the 'Questions of Bartholomew' which survives in a number of Greek, Latin, and Slavonic MSS. These 'Questions' treat of the descent of Christ into hell, the Virgin's account of the Annunciation, a vision of the bottomless pit, the summons to the Devil to judgement, questions about the deadly sins, and other subjects. Their theological standpoint is Gnostic. There also exists, in Coptic, a 'Book of the Resurrection of Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle'.

A. *Wilmart, O.S.B.–E. Tisserant, 'Fragments grecs et latins de l'Évangile de Barthélemy' in R. Bibl., N.S., x (1913), pp. 161–90, 321–68, incl. text of Latin and Greek and reff. to scattered edd. of other versions; U. Moricca, 'Un nuovo testo dell'"Evangelo di Bartolomeo"', ib., xxx (1921), pp. 481–516, and xxxi (1922), pp. 20–30, incl. text. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 166–81. F. Haase, 'Zur Rekonstruktion des Bartholomäusevangeliums' in Z.N.T.W., xvi (1915), pp. 93–112. The Coptic 'Book of the Resurrection' ed., with Eng. tr., by E. A. W. Budge, Coptic Apocrypha in the Dialect of Upper Egypt (1913), pp. 1–48, 179–230, Eng. summary in M. R. James, op. cit., pp. 181–6. Germ. tr. of both docc., with useful introd. by F. Scheidweiler and W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 359–76; Eng. tr., pp. 484–508. A. Romeo in E.C., ii (1949), col. 919 f., s.v. 'Bartolomeo, Apostolo V: Vangelo di B.', with bibl.

BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY, Massacre of St. The massacre that took place on the night of 23–24 Aug. 1572 and the two following days in which, chiefly, it appears, at the instigation of *Catherine de' Medici, between 5,000 and 10,000 *Huguenots, including G. de *Coligny, were put to death in Paris and other large French cities.

The massacre is discussed from different angles in all lives of Catherine de' Medici and Coligny, Gaspard de, cited s.vv. J. W. Thompson, The Wars of Religion in France, 1559–1576 (1909), pp. 448–53; F. Rocquain, La France et Rome pendant les guerres de religion (1924), pp. 121–45 passim. Sylvia L. England, The Massacre of Saint Bartholomew (1938). H. White, Massacre of Saint Bartholomew: preceded by a history of the religious wars in the reign of Charles IX (1868); H. Bordier, La Saint-Barthélemy et la critique moderne (1879); H. Wuttke, Zur Vorgeschichte der Bartholomäusnacht (1879); H. Baumgarten, Vor der Bartholomäusnacht (1882). H. Noguères, La Saint Barthélemy (1959; Eng. tr., 1962). J. H. Mariéjol in E. Lavisse, Histoire de France, vi (1904), pp. 125–33, with bibl. to date, p. 114 f. H. Butterfield, Man on his Past (Cambridge, 1955), pp. 171–201. Study by N. M. Sutherland (London, 1973).

BARTHOLOMEW OF THE MARTYRS (1514–90), Portuguese theologian. Bartholomew Fernandez, who owes his surname 'A Martyribus' to the church in which he was baptized, entered the *Dominican monastery at Lisbon in 1527. After teaching philosophy and theology in various houses of his order, he was made Bp. of Braga in 1548. In 1561 he went to *Trent, where he took a prominent part in the last nine sessions, esp. in the drafting of the decrees on the reform of the clergy, which he did his best to put into practice after his return to his diocese. In 1582 he resigned his charge and retired to the Dominican convent at Viana. He was much esteemed for his personal holiness as well as for his energy in carrying out the Tridentine reforms. Among his works is the Stimulus Pastorum (1564) and a Compendium Spiritualis Doctrinae (1582), which was translated into many languages. In 1845 he was declared Venerable by *Gregory XVI.

Opera Omnia, ed. J. D. (in religion Dom Malachie) d'Inguimbert (Rome, 2 parts bound in 1, 1734–5). Lives by *Luís of Granada and Luís de Sousa, incorporated into the Lives by L. de Cacegas (Vienna, 1619), L. Muñoz (Madrid, 1645), I. L. Le Maistre de Sacy (Paris, 1663; Eng. tr., 1880), and J. D. d'Inguimbert (Rome, 1727). R. de Almeida Rolo, O.P., O Bispo e a sua miss ão pastoral segundo D. Frei Barto lomeu dos Mártires (1964; Fr. tr., Lisbon, 1965).

BARTHOLOMEW OF PISA (c. 1260–1347), *Dominican theologian. He is also sometimes called 'of San Concordio' after his native place. He entered the Dominican Order in 1277, and, after studying at *Bologna and Pisa, he taught at several Dominican houses and was soon held in high reputation as a scholar. He is chiefly famous for his alphabetically arranged 'Summa de Casibus Conscientiae' (1338), also called 'Summa Pisana' or 'Summa Bartholomea'. It was much used during the 14th and 15th cents. and was later also frequently printed.

There is a description of him in 'Chronica Antiqua Conventus Sanctae Catherinae de Pisis' pr. in Archivio Storico Italiano, vi, par. ii, sez. iii (1845), pp. 397–633, pp. 521–9. Quétif–Échard, i, pp. 623–5.

BARTHOLOMITES. (1) Armenian. A community of *Armenian monks who fled from Armenia when the Sultan of Egypt invaded the country in 1296, and settled in 1307 at Genoa, where a church dedicated to St. Bartholomew was built for them, hence their name. Others from Armenia joined them, and they spread throughout Italy. At first they retained the Armenian Liturgy and the Rule of St. *Basil, but later, with the approval of Innocent VI (1356), they adopted the Roman Liturgy and the Rule of St. *Augustine, and wore a habit similar to that of the *Dominicans, whose privileges they were granted by Boniface IX. In the 17th cent. they began to decline and were finally suppressed by *Innocent X in 1650.

(2) German. A congregation of secular priests, 'Institutum clericorum saecularium in communi viventium', known also as 'Bartholomaeans', 'United Brethren', and 'Communists'. They were founded in 1640 at Tittmoning by Bartholomew Holzhauser (1613–58), a German parish priest and ecclesiastical writer, in order to revive the morals and discipline of the clergy and laity, after the decline due to the *Thirty Years War (1618–48). They lived in community under obedience to a superior, but without vows, and were entrusted with many seminaries. After receiving formal approbation from Innocent XI in 1680, they spread into England, Poland, Italy, and other European countries. Their extinction was brought about by the secularization of the German ecclesiastical states under Napoleon in 1803; and recent attempts at restoration have been without effect.

(1) M. A. van den Oudenrijn, O.P. (ed.), Les Constitutions des Frères Arméniens de Saint Basile en Italie (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxvi; 1940). [P. Hélyot], Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, i (1714), pp. 243–8. Heimbucher, i, p. 104 f. J. M. Besse in C.E., ii (1907), p. 317, s.v.; C. Korolevskij in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), col. 1038 f., s.v.
(2) J. P. L. Gaduel, Vie du vénérable serviteur de Dieu Barthélemy Holzhauzer . . . fondateur de l'Institut des clercs séculiers vivant en communauté, avec une étude sur cet Institut (Orleans, 1861). F. Busan, O.S.B., 'Das Leben und Institut des ehrwürdigen Bartholomäus Holzhauser' in Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benediktiner- und Cistercienser-Orden, xxiii (1902), pp. 403–31 and 634–55. Heimbucher, ii, pp. 595–7. J. Wenner in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 1039–41, s.v. with bibl.

BARTIMAEUS. The blind beggar healed by Christ at or near *Jericho on His last journey to *Jerusalem. He is said to have afterwards 'followed Him in the way' (Mk. 10. 46–52).

BARTOLOMMEO, FRA (c. 1475–1517), Florentine painter. He was an admirer and follower of *Savonarola, whose portrait he painted several times. After the latter's death, Fra Bartolommeo entered the *Dominican Order at San Marco in Florence (1498), where, except for brief absences in *Venice and Rome, he remained for the rest of his life. He became a close friend of *Raphael. Among the most famous of his works are the fresco of the 'Last Judgement' in Sta. Maria Nuova (in which he collaborated with Mariotto Albertinelli) and his 'Descent from the Cross' in the Pitti, both at Florence, where between 1509 and 1517 he was the principal exponent of the High Renaissance style.

F. Knapp, Fra Bartolommeo della Porta und die Schule von San Marco (1903). H. von der Gabelentz, Fra Bartolommeo und die Florentiner Renaissance (2 vols., 1922). J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle, A History of Painting in Italy, vi (1914), ch. iii, pp. 50–104; A. Venturi, Storia dell'Arte Italiana, ix, Parte 1 (Milan, 1925), pp. 223–347. L. Scott, Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto (The Great Artists, 1881), pp. 1–70.

BARTON, ELIZABETH (c. 1506 – 34), the 'Maid of Kent'. She was a servant girl who, after an illness in 1525, had trances and claimed to utter prophecies. After inquiries and a public examination by the prior of Christ Church, Canterbury (1526), she was admitted as a nun at St. Sepulchre's Convent in the city. Her prophecies then took a political turn, consisting in personal attacks on *Henry VIII for his intention to divorce his queen. In 1533, under examination by Abp. T. *Cranmer, a confession, true or false, was extorted from her that her trances were feigned, and she was prosecuted by Bill of Attainder and executed in 1534.

The main sources for her life are the Act of Attainder by which she was condemned (25 Hen. VIII, c. 12) and J. *Gairdner (ed.), Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic of the Reign of Henry VIII, vi (1882) and vii (1883), passim. Some material from the *Cottonian MSS. is printed by T. Wright, Three Chapters of Letters Relating to the Suppression of the Monasteries (Camden Society, xxvi, 1843), pp. 13–34. J. R. McKee, Cong. Orat., Dame Elizabeth Barton, O.S.B. The Holy Maid of Kent (1925). S. L. Lee in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 343–6.

BARUCH, Book of. A Book of the *Apocrypha to which is attached the 'Epistle of Jeremy', the two together, with *Lamentations, forming appendices to the Book of *Jeremiah. The book consists of (a) an introduction, which professes to have been written by Baruch, the disciple of Jeremiah, and read by him to the Jewish captives in Babylon in the 6th cent. B.C. (1. 1–14); (b) a liturgical confession (1. 15 – 3. 8); (c) a sermon (3. 9 – 4. 4); and (d) a set of canticles (4. 5 – 5. 9). On a critical view, the unmistakable dependence of the work upon *Daniel has led scholars to date it in post-Maccabaean times, and its liturgical use has suggested to some that it was either written or adapted for use in the cycle of sabbaths commemorating national disasters which began to be observed after the fall of *Jerusalem in A.D. 70. It is generally held that at any rate the earlier sections of the book were originally written in Hebrew.

Commentaries by F. H. Reusch (Freiburg i.Br., 1853) and J. J. Kneucker (Leipzig, 1879). O. C. Whitehouse in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 569–95. R. R. Harwell, The Principal Versions of Baruch (Yale Diss., New Haven, 1915). B. N. Wambacq, O.Praem., 'Les Prières de Baruch (1, 15 – 2, 19) et de Daniel (9, 5–19)' in Biblica, xl (1959), pp. 463–75. Eissfeldt, pp. 592–5, with bibl. J. Le Moyne, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., viii ('1969'), cols. 729–36, s.v. 'Prophètes d'Israël'. See also bibl. to Apocrypha.

BARUCH, II. The Syriac Apocalypse. A Pharisaic work which professes to have been written by Baruch, Jeremiah's secretary. Opinions about the date of its composition vary, but since it describes the capture of *Jerusalem by the Chaldeans in 586 B.C., it has been inferred that it was written after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, to encourage the Jews after the destruction of the Temple. A reference to the 'twenty-fifth year' (in ch. 1) has led P. Bogaert to suggest that it dates from A.D. 95; other scholars have placed it variously between A.D. 70 and c. 135. In language and ideas it has striking resemblances to IV Ezra (II *Esdras). The Apocalypse was originally composed in Greek, but the bulk of it is extant only in a single 6th cent. Syriac MS. in the *Ambrosiana at Milan. The theory that the book in its latest form was the work of a Christian has not been generally accepted.

Syr. text ed. by A. M. Ceriani in Monumenta Sacra et Profana, v (pt. 2; Milan, 1871), pp. 113–80; also by M. Kmosko in Patrologia Syriaca (ed. R. Graffin), ii (1907), cols. 1056–1207. Crit. study of textual tradition and presentation of text in B. Violet, Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch in deutscher Gestalt (G.C.S., xxxii, Leipzig, 1924). Eng. tr. with introd., notes, and indices by R. H. *Charles (London, 1896); id., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 470–526. Fr. tr., with introd. and commentary, by P. Bogaert, O.S.B. (S.C., cxliv–cxlv; 1969). Eissfeldt, pp. 627–30. R. H. Charles in H.D.B., i (1898), 249–251, s.v. 'Baruch, Apocalypse of'; J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., i (1928), cols. 418–23, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament. 9: L'Apocalypse syriaque de Baruch'.

BARUCH, III and IV. 'The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch' (traditionally numbered III Baruch) is an apocryphal work, apparently of Jewish origin, but worked over by a Christian hand. It may date from the 2nd cent., and it was certainly known to *Origen (De princ. 2. 3. 6). The only known MS. of the Greek text is a 16th cent. minuscule in the British Museum (Add. 10073). The Apocalypse described the visions of the seven heavens which were granted to Baruch, though the last two are wanting as the MS. is defective. A Slavonic version also exists.

'The Rest of the Words of Baruch' (traditionally called IV Baruch) also dates from the 2nd cent., and may be earlier than the above. It is prob. the work of a Jewish Christian and deals with the end of *Jeremiah's life. The Greek text appears to be the original, but there are also Ethiopic and Armenian translations.

The numbering of III and IV Baruch is sometimes interchanged.

Gk. text of the 'Greek Apocalypse' ed. M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota. Second Series (Texts and Studies, v, No. 1, Cambridge, 1897), pp. 84–94; also ed. by J. C. Picard in Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, ii (Leyden, 1967), pp. 61–96. Slavonic text ed. S. Novaković (Zagreb, 1886); Eng. tr. of Slavonic text by W. R. Morfill in M. R. James, op. cit., pp. 95–102. Introduction, ib., pp. li–lxxi. Eng. tr. of Gk. text, with introd. and notes, in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 527–41.

Gk. text of the 'Rest of the Words of Baruch' first pubd. by A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, v (Milan, 1868), pp. 9–18; standard ed. with introd. by J. R. Harris (London, 1889). Ethiopic text ed. A. *Dillmann, Chrestomathia Aethiopica (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 1–15. G. Delling, Jüdische Lehre und Frömmigkeit in den Paralipomena Jeremiae (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., c; 1967), with bibl.

BASEL, Confessions and Council of. See Basle, Confessions and Council of.

BASHMURIC. See Fayumic.

BASIL, St., 'the Great' (c. 330 – 79). One of the three *Cappadocian Fathers. He was the brother of St. *Gregory of Nyssa and St. *Macrina. After being educated at Caesarea in Cappadocia, *Constantinople, and *Athens in the best pagan and Christian culture of his day, he forsook the world for the monastic life, and, after a brief period in Syria and Egypt, settled as a hermit by the river

Iris near Neo-caesarea (358). Here his early friendship with St. *Gregory of Nazianzus was renewed, and they preached missions together. The Emp. *Julian (361–3), his former fellow-student at Athens, made an unsuccessful attempt to bring him to the court, but only in c. 364 did he leave his retirement when called by his bishop, Eusebius of Caesarea in Cappadocia, to defend orthodoxy against the Arian emperor, Valens. In 370 he was appointed to succeed Eusebius in the see of Caesarea, and held this office for the rest of his life. It brought him into the thick of further controversies with the extreme *Arian party led by *Eunomius, as well as with the *Pneumatomachi, who denied the divinity of the Holy Ghost, and with the Bps. of Rome (*Damasus) and Alexandria (*Athanasius), who refused to recognize his revered supporter, St. *Meletius, as Bp. of Antioch.

In character Basil, besides being eloquent, learned, and statesmanlike, was possessed of great personal holiness. His nature was at once sensitive and pugnacious. To these qualities he added an unusual talent for organization, and impressed on Eastern monasticism the structure and ethos which it has retained ever since. The vast series of buildings he established on the outskirts of Caesarea, which included, besides the church and episcopal residence, hospitals and hostels for the poor, who were cared for by a carefully planned system of relief, long remained a monument to his memory.

His more important writings include a large collection of letters, his treatise 'On the Holy Spirit', and his three 'Books against Eunomius'. In conjunction with Gregory of Nazianzus he compiled the Philocalia*, a selection of passages from the works of *Origen. In the field of doctrine he made a strong effort to reconcile the *Semiarians to the formula of *Nicaea, and to show that their word Homoiousios ('like in substance to the Father') had the same implications as the Nicene Homoousios* ('of one substance'). The virtual termination of the Arian controversy at the Council of *Constantinople in 381/2 shortly after his death is a tribute to his success. In some quarters he was suspected of *Apollinarianism, because he corresponded with Apollinarius, and also because in his writings he stressed the unity of the Person of Christ more than the separateness of the two natures. Feast day in W., 2 Jan. (formerly 14 June, as now in parts of the Anglican Communion); in E., 1 Jan. See also the following entries.

Collected Works first ed. at Basle, 1532; best ed. that of J. *Garnier, O.S.B., P. *Maran, O.S.B., Paris, 1721–30, repr., with additions, 'apud Gaume', 3 vols. in 6, Paris, 1839, and in J. P. Migne, PG, xxix–xxxii. Crit. edd. of De Spiritu Sancto, by C. F. Johnston (Oxford, 1892) and B. Pruche, O.P. (S.C., xvii; 1947); of Epp. by R. Deferrari (Loeb, 4 vols., 1926–34) and Y. Courtonne (Collection des Universités de France, Paris, 3 vols., 1957–66); of Hom., 22 ('Ad adolescentes'), by E. Sommer (Paris, 1903), A. Nardi (Turin, 1931), and F. Boulenger (Paris, 1935); of Hom. in Hexaëm., by S. Giet (S.C., xxvi, 1950); of Hom. on 'Observe-toi toi-même' by S. Y. Rudberg (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, ii [1962]); of Comm. in Is., by P. Trevisan (2 vols., Turin, 1939). Valuable studies on text and edd. by D. Amand, O.S.B., in R. Bén., lii (1940), pp. 141–61, liii (1941), pp. 119–51, liv (1942), pp. 124–44, lvi (1945), pp. 126–73. Eng. tr. of selected works by Blomfield Jackson (N.P.N.C.F., 1895). W. K. L. Clarke, The Ascetic Works of St. Basil (S.P.C.K., 1925). AA.SS., Jun. II (1698), pp. 807–958. E. Fialon, Étude historique et littéraire sur Saint Basile (1865); P. Allard, Saint Basile (1903); W. K. L. Clarke, St. Basil the Great. A Study in Monasticism (1913); M. M. Fox, The Life and Times of St. Basil the Great as revealed in his Works (Patristic Studies, lvii, Washington, 1939). A. Cavallin, Studien zu den Briefen des hl. Basilius (Lund, 1944); Y. Courtonne, Saint Basile et l'hellénisme (1934). P. *Batiffol, 'L'Ecclésiologie de S. Basile' in É.O., xxv (1922), pp. 9–30; G. F. Reilly, Imperium and Sacerdotium according to St. Basil the Great (Washington, 1945); D. Amand, O.S.B., L'Ascèse monastique de Saint Basile (Maredsous, 1949). J. Gribomont, O.S.B., Histoire du texte des Ascétiques de S. Basile (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xxxii, 1953); S. Y. Rudberg, Études sur la tradition manuscrite de Saint Basile (Stockholm, 1953). H. Dörries, De Spiritu Sancto. Der Beitrag des Basilius zum Abschluss des trinitarischen Dogmas (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, xxxix, 1956). G. L. Prestige, St. Basil the Great and Apollinaris of Laodicea, ed. H. Chadwick (1956). T. Spidlík, S.J., La Sophiologie de S. Basile (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clxii; 1961). H. Dehnhard, Das Problem der Abhängigkeit des Basilius von Platon. Quellenuntersuchungen zu seinen Schriften De Spiritu Sancto (Patristische Texte und Studien, iii; 1964). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 130–62 and 670 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 290–98. J. Gribomont, O.S.B., in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 143–6, with bibl.

BASIL, Liturgy of St. The Liturgy still used in the Eastern Church on a few days in the ecclesiastical year in place of the ordinary 'Liturgy of St. *Chrysostom', viz. on the Sundays in *Lent (except *Palm Sunday), on *Maundy Thursday, and on the Eves of *Easter, of *Christmas, of *Epiphany, and on the Feast of St. *Basil (1 Jan.). In its general structure it may possibly be the work of St. Basil the Great, as there are indications that it is based on early Cappadocian practice. It has been subjected, however, to considerable modification between the date of the earliest MSS. (c. 9th cent.) and the present day, and it is likely that such changes had been going on continuously since its first compilation. Apart from some of the prayers, it agrees closely with that of St. Chrysostom (q.v.).

Text in Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 309–44, 400–11; also in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxi. 1629–56. H. Engberding, O.S.B., Das eucharistische Hochgebet der Basileiosliturgie (1931). S. Euringer, Die äthiopische Anaphora des hl. Basilius (Rome, 1934; ed., with tr. and notes, from four MSS.). J. Doresse–E. Lanne, Un témoin archaïque de la liturgie copte de S. Basile, with appendix by B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Les Liturgies "basiliennes" et saint Basile' (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xlvii; 1960). A. Raes, S.J., 'Un nouveau document de la Liturgie de S. Basile' in O.C.P., xxvi (1960), pp. 401–11. W. E. Pitt, 'The Origin of the Anaphora of the Liturgy of St. Basil' in J.E.H., xii (1961), pp. 1–13. H. Engberding, O.S.B., 'Das anaphorische Fürbittgebet der Basiliusliturgie' in Oriens Christianus, xlvii (1963), pp. 16–52, xlix (1965), pp. 18–37. P. de Meester, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2, 1925), cols. 1596–1604 ('Authenticité des liturgies de Saint Basile et de Saint Jean Chrysostome'), s.v. 'Grecques (Liturgies)'.

BASIL, Rule of St. The monastic Rule put forward by St. *Basil the Great in 358–64, which is the basis of the usual Rule still followed by religious in the E. Church. The Rule is in two forms, the 'Regulae fusius tractatae' (55 items) and the 'Regulae brevius tractatae' (313 items), in each case set out in the form of questions and answers. While strict, it avoided giving encouragement to the more extreme austerities of the hermits of the deserts. It conceived of asceticism as a means to the perfect service of God, to be achieved in community life under obedience. Hours of liturgical prayer were laid down, and manual and other work, in the form of set tasks, enjoined. Poverty and chastity similar to those later prescribed in the West were also imposed. Children were to be trained in classes attached to the monasteries, and were to be given an opportunity of testing their vocation to the religious life. The monks were enjoined also to care for the poor. The Rule owes its present form to a revision by St. *Theodore of Studios (d. 826).

The text of the Regulae, together with that of the Constitutiones Monasticae, is in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxi, 889–1428. Eng. tr. by W. K. L. Clarke, The Ascetic Works of Saint Basil (1925). See also E. F. Morison, St. Basil and his Rule. A Study in Early Monasticism (1912). G. Bardy in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 218–24, s.v. 'Basile (Règle de Saint)', with bibl.

BASIL OF ANCYRA (4th cent.), *Arian Bp. He was a typical representative of the more moderate party of the Arians. Elected in 336 to succeed *Marcellus in the see of *Ancyra, he was himself deposed by the Council of *Sardica in 343, but reinstated by Constantius c. 348. He took part in the Arianizing Synods of Sirmium (351), of *Ancyra (358), and Seleucia (359). His constantly increasing criticisms of the more extreme Arian doctrines, however, led their exponents to remove him from his see in 360, and banish him to Illyria, where he died. A short dogmatic treatise which he composed in conjunction with *George of Laodicea has been preserved by *Epiphanius in his Haer., 73. 12–22. He was also perhaps the author of the treatise 'On Virginity' (so F. Cavallera) included among the works of St. *Basil the Great.

For the writings mentioned, see J. P. Migne, PG, xlii. 425–444, and xxx. 669–810. Old-Slav text of De Virginitate ed., with Fr. tr., by A. Vaillant (Textes publiés par l'Institut d'Études Slaves, iii; 1943). J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius (1900), pp. 121–34. F. Cavallera, 'Le "De Virginitate" de Basile d'Ancyre' in R.H.E., vi (1905), pp. 5–14. J. J. Cuesta, 'Dieta y virginidad: Basilio de Ancira y san Gregorio de Nisa' in Miscelánea Comillas, xiv (1950), pp. 187–97, esp. pp. 189–93. R. Janin in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 1104–7.

BASIL OF SELEUCIA (d. c. 459), Abp. of Seleucia from c. 440. He is remembered chiefly for his vacillating part in the events which preceded the Council of *Chalcedon in 451. Having condemned *Eutyches, the heresiarch, in 448, he acquiesced in his rehabilitation by the *Latrocinium in 449, but recanted shortly after and signed the *Tome of St. *Leo I in 450. A series of 41 sermons of Basil on the Scriptures (two not genuine) have been preserved; and there are a few other writings, some of them spurious, that have come down under his name.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv. 1–618; P. [T.] Camelot, O.P., 'Une Homélie inédite de Basile de Séleucie' in Mélanges offerts à A. M. Desrousseaux (1937), pp. 35–48. B. Marx, 'Der homiletische Nachlass des Basileios von Seleukia' in O.C.P., vii (1941), pp. 329–69. On his 'De Vita et Miraculis S. Theclae Libri II' (Migne, l.c., 477–618), cf. H. *Delehaye, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xliii (1925), pp. 49–57. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 300–4; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 335. P. Godet in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 459 f.

BASILICA. An early form of the building used for Christian worship, especially common in W. Europe in the centuries which immediately followed the recognition of Christianity by *Constantine. It seems to have been modelled on the Roman building of the same name, which served as a law court and a commercial exchange; but some features were apparently derived from the Roman house and others from the chapels of the *catacombs, both of which had served as places of Christian worship before the conversion of the empire. The building was often approached by an '*atrium', or outer courtyard, with its colonnaded cloister. The church itself consisted of a '*narthex', or narrow porch, leading by three or more doorways into the main building. This was built with a nave and two (or even four) narrower aisles with pillars supporting horizontal architraves at first, but in later times arches. Above these rose the clerestory pierced by windows. The building was usually orientated, with the east end completed by an arch and semicircular apse, with mosaics in its vaulting. The altar, which stood out from the wall on the chord of the apse, was raised on a platform and surmounted by a canopy. Directly underneath the altar and partly below the level of the floor was the 'confessio' or chapel which sometimes contained the body of the patron Saint. While the basilica was being used for worship the bishop sat on a throne in the centre of the wall of the apse, with his clergy in a semicircle on either side. In celebrating Mass he faced towards the people.

Today the title of 'basilica' is given by the Pope to certain privileged churches. Such basilicas are 'major' or 'minor'. The four 'Major Basilicas' are the Roman churches of St. John *Lateran (for the 'Patriarch of the West', the Pope), St. Peter's at the *Vatican (for the Patriarch of *Constantinople), *St. Paul's outside the Walls (for the Patriarch of *Alexandria), and *Santa Maria Maggiore (for the Patriarch of *Antioch). Each has a Papal altar, the use of which is restricted to the Pope or his immediate delegate. There are a number of 'Minor Basilicas' in Rome and others throughout the world.

R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae. The Early Christian Basilicas of Rome, IV–IX Cent. (Monumenti di Antichità Pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, Ser. II, ii; 5 vols., 1937–77). G. Dehio, 'Die Genesis der christlichen Basilika' in Sb. (Bayr.), Jg. 1882, Hft. 2 (1882), pp. 301–41; R. Lemaire, 'L'Origine de la basilique latine' in Annales de la Société d'Archéologie de Bruxelles, xxv (1911), pp. 5–130; L. Bréhier, 'Les Origines de la basilique chrétienne' in Bulletin Monumental, lxxxvi (1927), pp. 221–49. J. G. Davies, The Origin and Development of Early Christian Church Architecture (1952), pp. 12–50. R. Krautheimer, Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture (Pelican History of Art, 1965). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 525–602, s.v. 'Basilique'; E. Langlotz–F. W. Deichmann in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1225–59, s.v. 'Basilika'.

BASILIDES. A theologian of *Gnostic tendencies who taught at *Alexandria in the second quarter of the 2nd cent. He wrote a biblical commentary, the Exegetica, in 24 books; perhaps also a work entitled 'the Gospel' (contents unknown); and some Odes. Besides biblical material he used secret traditions supposedly deriving from St. *Peter and St. *Matthias, some Gnostic doctrines, and elements of Platonic and Stoic philosophy. His system is difficult to reconstruct, since only fragments of his writings survive, and conflicting accounts are given by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Hippolytus. Acc. to Hippolytus, Basilides taught a wholly transcendent God, who created an evolving universe and planted in it an elect race. All parts of the world are good, and are administered by good world-rulers, one of whom is the God of the Jews. In due time a heavenly light descended and raised up Jesus to summon the elect; these will ascend to the highest heaven, while other beings come to rest in destinations appropriate to their capacities. Other sources accuse Basilides of teaching *Docetism, *Metempsychosis, and other doctrines later condemned. His followers soon formed a separate sect; but his own teaching may perhaps have been typical of an ill-defined and speculative theology prevalent at Alexandria in his day.

The chief authorities are Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., i. 24; Clement of Alexandria, Strom., passim; Hippolytus, Ref., vii. 20–7. Important art. by F. J. A. *Hort in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 268–81, s.v. P. J. G. A. Hendrix, De Alexandrijnsche Haeresiarch Basilides (Amsterdam, 1926). W. Foerster, 'Das System des Basilides' in New Testament Studies, ix (1963), pp. 233–55. A. S. *Peake in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 426–33; J. H. Waszink in R.A.C., i (1950), cols. 1217–25, both s.v.

BASILIKON DORON (Gk. Βασιλικὸν Δῶρον, 'a royal gift'). The title of *James I's book addressed to his eldest son, Henry (d. 1612). Its professed purpose was to guide Henry in his duties when he succeeded to the throne, but its real object was to rebuke ministers of religion who meddled in state affairs. James had a private edition of seven copies printed in 1599, but published it openly in 1603 on the death of *Elizabeth I. It was immediately popular and within three years translations had been printed in French (two versions), Dutch, Latin, German, Welsh, and Swedish.

Crit. ed. by J. Craigie (Scottish Text Society, Third Series, xvi, xviii; 1948–50).

BASLE, Confessions of. The [first] 'Confession of Basle', which was compiled by Oswald *Myconius (1488–1552) on the basis of a shorter formula put forward by J. *Oecolampadius in 1531, was made the basis of the reform introduced at Basle in 1534. Its theological standpoint represents a compromise between the positions of M. *Luther and H. *Zwingli. The 'First *Helvetic Confession' of 1536 is sometimes known also as the 'Second Confession of Basle'.

The text of the two confessions is in H. A. Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum in ecclesiis reformatis publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 78–122; Eng. tr., with introd. and bibl., in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 89–111.

BASLE, Council of (1431–49). The Council, which inherited both the tasks and the difficulties of the Council of *Constance (q.v.), was convoked by *Martin V and opened in 1431. It was presided over by Card. G. *Cesarini, who was confirmed in this office by the new Pope, *Eugenius IV. When the latter, acting on unfavourable reports, dissolved it by a bull of 18 Dec. 1431, the Council disregarded the Pope's action, which was also opposed by Cesarini, and reaffirmed the decrees of Constance on the superiority of a *General Council over the Pope. The assembly at that time consisted of only 14 bishops and abbots, apart from the inferior clergy, and, in order to enhance its authority, it introduced new regulations for procedure which gave the lower grades a majority over the bishops. It was, moreover, widely supported by the princes and the great universities, one of its best-known members being *Nicholas of Cusa, the humanist.

The Pope, pressed by the Emperor and the German princes and beset by political difficulties in Italy, by the bull 'Dudum sacrum' of 15 Dec. 1433 revoked his former decision and recognized the Council. The Council continued, however, in its anti-Papal attitude, reasserted once again the decrees of Constance, imposed many restrictions on the Papal legates, and prescribed an oath to be taken by the Pope after his election. It also attempted to regulate the nominations of cardinals and other affairs of the *Curia. In 1436 Eugenius IV denounced the usurpations of the Council in a memorandum to all Catholic princes. In 1437 the *Hussite question was settled against the Papal views by the ratification of the 'Compactata', thereby conceding to the Bohemians Communion in both kinds and several other demands. In the same year occurred the final break with the Orthodox Church over the place of the proposed council for the union. As the Pope, the Greek envoys, and the Papal minority of the Council preferred a place in Italy, Eugenius transferred the Council to *Ferrara; while those who remained at Basle deposed the Pope as a heretic and elected Amadeus VIII of Savoy as antipope (Felix V) in 1439. The renewal of the schism cost the Council its prestige, and the nations submitted one by one to Eugenius. In 1448 the Council was driven from Basle and moved to Lausanne, where Felix V abdicated, and in 1449 it submitted to the legitimate Pope.

The oecumenicity of the Council of Basle has been an object of much discussion. The *Gallicans were in favour of it, at least until its transfer to Ferrara, whereas modern RC theologians either restrict their recognition to the first 16 sessions, or, more generally, reject it altogether on the grounds of its not representing the Universal Church and the absence of Papal recognition of its acts. See also Conciliar Theory.

Texts in Hardouin, viii–ix; Mansi, xxix (1788)–xxxi (1798). Crit. texts in Concilium Basiliense. Studien und Quellen zur Geschichte des Concils von Basel (ed. J. Haller and others, 1896 ff.; 8 vols. to 1936); other contemporary material in Monumenta Conciliorum Generalium Seculi Decimi Quinti, ed. by F. Palacky and others (3 vols., Vienna and Basle, 1857–1932; vol. iv, indices, Basle, 1935). Hefele–Leclercq, vii (pt. 2, 1916), pp. 663–1137, with extensive bibl. reff. M. Creighton, A History of the Papacy, ii (1882), esp. pp. 92–194. N. Valois, Le Pape et le Concile (1418–1450) (2 vols., 1909), passim. P. Lazarus, Das Basler Konzil. Seine Vorbereitung und Leitung, seine Gliederung und seine Behördenorganisation (Historische Studien, Heft 100; 1912). A. Zellfelder, England und das Basler Konzil. Mit einem Urkundenanhang (Historische Studien, Heft 113; 1913). Theodora von der Mühll, Vorspiel zur Zeitenwende. Das Basler Konzil 1431–1448 (1959). J. Gill, S.J., Constance et Bâle–Florence (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, ix; 1965), pp. 119–209 and 332–51. G. Pérouse, Le Cardinal Louis Aleman, président du concile de Bâle (1904). E. Delaruelle, E. R. Labande–F. Ourliac in Fliche–Martin, xiv (1962), pp. 227–92, with extensive bibl. p. 227 f. A. Baudrillart in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 113–29, s.v. 'Bâle (Concile de)'; J. Gill, S.J., in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 141 f. s.v. 'Basel, Council of'.

BASNAGE, JACQUES (1653–1723), *Calvinist theologian and church historian. Having become in 1676 a minister at Rouen, his native town, he retired to Holland in 1685 after the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes. He later took a prominent part in Dutch affairs of state. His two most important writings are his Histoire de la religion des églises réformées (2 vols., 1690) and his Histoire de l'église (2 vols., 1699), both publd. at Rotterdam. He also wrote against J. B. *Bossuet.

A. Maihlet, Jacques Basnage, théologien, controversiste, diplomate et historien. Sa Vie et ses écrits (Geneva, 1880). G. Loirette in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 1251–3, s.v.

BASNAGE, SAMUEL (1638–1721), theologian and historian, cousin of the preceding. He also retired to Holland in 1685, where he became minister of the Walloon community at Zutphen. His two chief writings are his De rebus sacris et ecclesiasticis exercitationes (1692) and his Annales politico-ecclesiastici (3 vols., 1706), both directed against C. *Baronius.

BASSENDYNE BIBLE, The. The earliest edition of the Bible in English to be published in Scotland. In July 1575 Thomas Bassendyne (or Bassinden; d. 1577) was granted a licence by the Privy Council to print the Bible, with the stipulation that it should be ready in nine months, and in 1576 the NT appeared. The Bible was not completed, however, till 1579.

W. T. Dobson, History of the Bassendyne Bible (Edinburgh, 1887), esp. pp. 101–57. Darlow–Moule, i, ed. A. S. Herbert (1968), No. 158, p. 88 f.

BATH AND WELLS. A see of the Province of *Canterbury, roughly equal to the historical county of Somerset. It was founded in 909 by King Edward the Elder as the diocese of *Wells. In 1088 the see was moved from Wells to Bath by King William II and Bp. John de Villula (1088–1112), and John and his successors styled themselves Bishops of Bath until Bp. Savaric (1192–1205), having obtained the abbacy of *Glastonbury, changed the title to 'Bath and Glastonbury'. In 1219 *Honorius III dissolved the union of Glastonbury with Bath and authorized the title 'Bath and Wells', though Bp. Jocelin (1206–42) did not assume it. A protracted dispute between the canons of Wells and the monks of Bath over the right to elect the bishop was resolved by *Innocent IV in 1245. He confirmed the title of 'Bath and Wells' (which was then taken by Bp. Roger, 1244–7, and all his successors), and ordered that elections should be made alternately in Wells and Bath by the two chapters jointly, and that enthronements should be at the place of election. This arrangement came to an end with the dissolution of Bath Abbey in 1540; since then, Wells has been the sole cathedral of the diocese, but the title of the see and the bishop has remained unchanged. Notable holders of the see have included R. *Fox (1492–4), T. *Wolsey (1518–23), W. *Barlow (1549–54), T. *Ken (1685–90) and R. *Bagot (1845–54). The present abbey-church at Bath has served since the *dissolution of the monasteries as a parish church.

The following Episcopal Registers have been publd. by the Somerset Record Society: Walter Giffard, 1265–6 (xiii; 1899), John de Drokensford, 1309–29 (i; 1887), Ralph of Shrewsbury, 1329–63 (ix and x; 1896), Henry Bowett, 1401–7 (xiii; 1899), Nicholas Bubwith, 1407–24 (xxix and xxx; 1914), John Stafford, 1425–43 (xxxi and xxxii; 1915–16), Thomas Beckington, 1443–65 (xlix and l; 1934–5), Robert Stillington, 1466–1491, and Richard Fox, 1492–4 (lii; 1937), Oliver King, 1496–1503, and Hadrian de Castello, 1503–18 (liv; 1939), Thomas Wolsey, 1518–23, John Clerke, 1523–41, William Knyght, 1541–7, and Gilbert Bourne, 1554–9 (lv; 1940). A Survey of the Diocesan Archives, carried out by a committee appointed by the Pilgrim Trust in 1946, was circulated in typescript among the principal record libraries of England. H. Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i (1691), pp. 551–77. S. H. Cassan, Lives of the Bishops of Bath and Wells from the Earliest Times to the Present Period (1829). Phyllis M. Hembry, The Bishops of Bath and Wells, 1540–1640. Social and Economic Problems (1967). T. S. Holmes in W. Page (ed.), V.C.H., Somerset, ii 1911), pp. 1–67. On Bath Abbey, see W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, ii (ed. 1819), pp. 256–73; T. S. Holmes in V.C.H., loc. cit., pp. 69–81. C. L. Marson in D.E.C.H., pp. 44–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Wells.

BATH QOL (Heb. בַּת קוֹל, 'daughter of a voice'). The term in *Rabbinic theology for a voice from Heaven such as was believed to be a regular means of God's communication with men. Such a voice is referred to in the NT at Christ's *Baptism (Mk. 1. 11) and *Transfiguration (Mk. 9. 7) and before His Passion (Jn. 12. 28), and also in Acts (9. 4, cf. 10. 13).

BATIFFOL, PIERRE (1861–1929), Church historian. A pupil of G. B. *de Rossi, from 1889 till his death he was at the École de Ste.-Barbe at *Paris, except from 1898 to 1908 when he was rector of the Institut Catholique at Toulouse. His first important writings were a critical edition of the Syntagma Doctrinae ad Monachos included among the writings of St. *Athanasius (1890), and an important bibliographical work, L'Abbaye de Rossano, contribution à l'histoire de la Vaticane (1891). These were followed in 1893 by his Histoire du Bréviaire romain (1893; much improved ed., 1911), which exercised considerable influence on the revival of liturgical studies in France. For some years he was closely associated with the group of scholars later condemned as *Modernists. In 1902 he published the first series of his Études d'histoire et de théologie positive (1902), which included studies on the *Disciplina Arcani, the origins of penance, and the *Agape. A second volume, dealing with the *Eucharist, which appeared in 1905, created such a storm by its unorthodox views that Batiffol was forced to resign from his rectorship at Toulouse, and in 1911 it was placed on the *Index. In 1913 he issued a much revised edition with the separate title L'Eucharistie, la Présence réelle et la Transubstantiation. His later years were mainly taken up with a history of the Church and esp. of the growth of Papal power to the time of St. *Leo, of which the successive volumes were L'Église naissante et le catholicisme (1909; Eng. trans. Primitive Catholicism, 1911), La Paix constantinienne et le catholicisme (1914), Le Catholicisme de Saint Augustin (1920), and Le Siège apostolique, 359–451 (1924). In 1928 followed Saint Grégoire le Grand (Eng. trans., 1929). His writings, if unequal in originality and historical penetration to those of his great contemporary, L. *Duchesne, with whom he shared many common interests, did much to encourage critical studies in France and esp. to introduce to his country recent German work in patristics.

J. Rivière, Monseigneur Batiffol (1929). Id. in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 1327–30, s.v.

BAUER, BRUNO (1809–82), German theologian and historian. He was at first a conservative *Hegelian, but, after moving from Berlin to Bonn in 1839, he adopted a position even more extreme than that of D. F. *Strauss and attributed the Gospel story to the imagination, not, like Strauss, of the Christian community, but of a single mind. In 1842 he was deprived of his teaching post. The guiding principle of his many writings was a belief that the origins of Christianity were to be found in Greco-Roman philosophy. He assigned the 'original Gospel' to the reign of Hadrian (117–38) and the Epp. of St. Paul to that of *Marcus Aurelius (161–80). Besides his work on NT criticism, he wrote on the history of the 18th cent.

M. Kegel, Bruno Bauer und seine Theorien über die Entstehung des Christentums (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und ihrer Geschichte, vi; 1908). E. Barnikol, 'Bruno Bauers Kampf gegen Religion und Christentum und die Spaltung der vormärzlichen preussischen Opposition' in Z.K.G., xlvi (1928), pp. 1–34. A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu Forschung (ed. 2, 1913), pp. 141–61. W. Schmidt–J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 444–7; E. Barnikol in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), cols. 922–4, s.v., with further bibl.

BÄUMER, SUITBERT (1845–94), liturgical scholar. After studying at Bonn and *Tübingen, he took the *Benedictine habit at *Beuron in 1865. From 1875 to 1890 he was in exile at *Maredsous, through the *Kulturkampf. He wrote extensively on liturgical subjects, esp. in Der Katholik of Mainz. His chief work, Die Geschichte des Breviers (Freiburg i.Br., 1895; Fr. trans. by R. Biron, 2 vols., 1905), was the fruit of long and patient researches in the principal libraries of Europe. Among its theses were the liturgical importance of St. *Gregory I and the widespread influence of *Gregory VII's rite in the Papal chapel through its subsequent adoption by the *Franciscans. In his later years he collaborated closely with E. *Bishop. His other works include a Life of J. *Mabillon (1892) and a treatise on the *Apostles' Creed (1893).

U. Berlière, O.S.B., 'Dom Suitbert Baeumer, O.S.B.' in R. Bén., xi (1894), pp. 481–99 (incl. list of works; pp. 497–9). R. Biron, O.S.B., 'Notice biographique' prefixed to his tr. of Bäumer's Geschichte des Breviers ('Histoire du bréviaire'), i (1905), pp. xiii–xiv. R. Proost in D.A.C.L., ii (1910), cols. 623–6, s.v.; P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., vi (1932), cols. 1474–81, s.v.

BAUMSTARK, ANTON (1872–1948), Semitic scholar and liturgist. A native of Constance, he habilitated at Heidelberg in 1898 in both Classical and Oriental Philology. From 1899 to 1905 he resided at the German Campo Santo at Rome (with J. Strzygowsky, J. Wilpert, and J. P. Kirsch as his colleagues). Later he was a schoolmaster at Sassbach in Baden (1905–21); then, simultaneously, Professor at Bonn (from 1921), Nijmegen (from 1923), and Utrecht (from 1926); and from 1930 to 1935 Professor Ordinarius in Oriental Studies at Münster i.W. In 1901 he began the periodical Oriens Christianus* (3 series; to 1941) in which he published much of his best work. He was also a constant contributor to the *Maria Laach Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (from 1921). His separate works include: Die Messe im Morgenland (1906), Festbrevier und Kirchenjahr der syrischen Jakobiten (1910), Die christlichen Literaturen des Orients (2 vols., Sammlung Göschen, 1911), Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), Die älteste erreichbare Gestalt des 'Liber sacramentorum anni circuli' der römischen Kirche (with C. Mohlberg, 1927), Missale Romanum (1930), and Liturgie comparée. Conférences faites au Prieuré d'Amay (1940; new ed. by B. Botte, O.S.B., 1953; Eng. ed. by F. L. Cross, 1958).

Short obituary by T. Klauser in E.L., lxiii (1949), pp. 185–7, followed by full bibliography by H. E. Killy (1894–1948; 546 items), pp. 187–207.

BAUR, FERDINAND CHRISTIAN (1792–1860), German Protestant theologian, founder of the *Tübingen School (q.v.). A native of Schmiden in Württemberg, he was educated at Tübingen university. From 1817 to 1826 he taught history and philology at Blaubeuren and in 1824–5 published his work, Symbolik und Mythologie. From 1826 until his death he was Prof. of Theology at Tübingen. A disciple of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher in his early years, he developed his characteristic doctrines under the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel's conception of history. In his work on the Pastoral Epistles, Untersuchungen über die sog. Pastoralbriefe des Apostels Paulus (1835), Hegelian principles were for the first time applied to the NT, primitive Christianity being represented as a struggle between divergent views, the synthesis of which was the Catholic Church. In the following years he applied these same principles to the development of Christian doctrine, esp. to that of the Atonement, the Trinity and the Incarnation (Die Lehre von der Versöhnung, 1838; Die christliche Lehre von der Dreieinigkeit, 1841–3), breaking new ground by treating his subject no longer systematically but historically, and thus becoming one of the fathers of the modern history of dogma. In 1845 appeared his monograph on St. *Paul, Paulus, der Apostel Jesu Christi (Eng. trans., 1873–1875), which roused a storm of controversy. Setting out from the thesis that the Gentile Apostle was throughout his life in violent opposition to the older disciples, Baur denied the authenticity of all Pauline Epistles except Gal., 1 and 2 Cor., and Rom., as well as the Apostolic origin of Acts. In 1847 he concluded his researches into the NT canon with a work on the Gospels, Kritische Untersuchungen über die kanonischen Evangelien, in which he assigned the earliest date to Mt., as representing the Judaizing party, and the latest to Jn., as depicting the final reconciliation. This last Gospel reflected the *Gnostic and *Montanist controversies of the 2nd cent. and was devoid of historical value. In his later years he devoted himself chiefly to Church history, which he carried from the beginnings of Christianity to the 19th cent., the last vols. being published posthumously. Among his other writings were Lehrbuch der christlichen Dogmengeschichte (1847), Das Christenthum und die christliche Kirche der drei ersten Jahrhunderte (1853) and his Vorlesungen über die christliche Dogmengeschichte (ed. by his son, F. F. Baur, 4 vols., 1865–7).

Ausgewählte Werke in Einzelausgaben, ed. K. Scholder (Stuttgart, 1963 ff.). Eng. tr. of some of his writings on Church History, with introd. by P. C. Hodgson (New York, 1968), and bibl. Life by G. Frädrich (Gotha, 1909). E. Zeller, Vorträge und Abhandlungen, i (ed. 2, 1875), pp. 390–479 (No. 11: F. C. Baur). E. Schneider, Ferdinand Christian Baur in seiner Bedeutung für die Theologie (Munich, 1909). W. Geiger, Spekulation und Kritik. Die Geschichtstheologie Ferdinand Christian Baurs (1964). P. C. Hodgson, The Formation of Historical Theology. A Study of Ferdinand Christian Baur (New York [1966]). H. Schmidt-J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 467–83, with full list of Baur's writings (pp. 467–9) and bibl. (p. 469 f.).

BAVON, St. (d. c. 653), also called Allowin. The patron saint of the cathedral and diocese of Ghent (Feast days, 1 Oct. and 1 Aug.) and of the diocese of Haarlem (Feast days, 9 Aug. and 10 May).

Three Lives are printed in AA.SS., Oct. I (1765), pp. 229–253; the first, and a short extract from the third, ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iv (1902), pp. 527–46. R. Podevijn, O.S.B., Bavo (Bruges, 1945). M. Coens, S.J., 'S. Bavon était-il évêque?' in Anal. Boll., lxiii (1945), pp. 220–41, with reff.; id., 'Translations et miracles de Saint Bavon au XIe siècle', ib., lxxxvi (1968), pp. 39–66. L. van der Essen in D.H.G.E., vii (1934), col. 14 f., s.v., incl. full bibl.

BAXTER, RICHARD (1615–91), *Puritan divine. Born at Rowton, Salop, he was largely self-educated. He studied first at the free school of Wroxeter, next under the nominal tutelage of Richard Wickstead, Chaplain at Ludlow Castle, and finally (1633) in London under the patronage of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels. In disgust at the frivolity of the Court he returned home to study divinity, in particular the Schoolmen. In 1634 he came into intimate contact with Joseph Symonds and Walter Cradock, two devout Nonconformist divines, who awakened his sympathies for the positive elements in dissent. In 1638 he was ordained by John Thornborough, Bp. of *Worcester, and in 1639 nominated assistant minister at Bridgnorth, where he remained for two years, increasing his knowledge of the issues between Nonconformity and the C of E. After the promulgation of the 'Et Cetera Oath' (1640) he rejected belief in episcopacy in its current English form. In 1641 he became curate of the incumbent of Kidderminster, where amongst a corrupt and unhealthy population of hand-loom workers he continued to minister with remarkable success until 1660. So far as possible he ignored the differences between Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Independent, and secured co-operation among the local ministers in common pastoral work. In the early part of the Civil War he temporarily joined the Parliamentary Army, preaching at Alcester on the day of the Battle of Edgehill (23 Oct. 1642). A champion of moderation, he was opposed to the *Solemn League and Covenant (1643) and also disliked O. *Cromwell's religious views. After the Battle of Naseby (14 June 1645) he became Chaplain to Colonel Edward Whalley's regiment, seeking to counteract the sectaries and to curb republican tendencies. On leaving the army (1647) he retired for a time to Rouse Lench, where he wrote his devotional classic, The Saints' Everlasting Rest (1650). In 1660 he played a prominent part in the recall of *Charles II; but his dissatisfaction with episcopacy led him to decline the Bishopric of *Hereford. This refusal debarred him from ecclesiastical office and he was not permitted to return to Kidderminster or to hold any living. He took a prominent part at the *Savoy Conference (1661; q.v.), for which he had prepared a 'Reformed Liturgy'; here he presented the *Exceptions to the BCP. Between 1662 and the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1687 he endured persecution, suffering at the hands of the notorious Judge Jeffreys on the questionable charge of having 'libelled the Church' in his Paraphrase on the New Testament (1685). He took part in the overthrow of *James II and readily complied with the Toleration Act of William and Mary. He died on 8 Dec. 1691.

Baxter left nearly 200 writings. They breathe a spirit of deep unaffected piety and reflect his love of moderation. Gildas Salvianus; The Reformed Pastor (1656) illustrates the great care he took in his pastoral organization, and the Reliquiae Baxterianae (ed. Matthew Sylvester, 1696) is a long and careful autobiography. He also wrote several hymns, among them 'Ye holy angels bright' and 'He wants not friends that hath Thy love'.

The Practical Works of . . . Richard Baxter (London, 4 vols., 1707); new ed. with Life and examination of Baxter's writings by W. Orme (23 vols., 1830). Many of his works were reprinted in the 19th cent. Modern abridged edd. of The Saints' Everlasting Rest, by M. Monckton (Reunion edition [1928]), Gildas Salvianus; the Reformed Pastor, by J. T. Wilkinson (1939) and of his autobiography, the Reliquiae Baxterianae, by J. M. L. Thomas (1925; and in Everyman's Library, 1931). Chapters from a Christian Directory, selected by J. Tawney with a preface by C. *Gore (1925). F. J. Powicke (ed.), with introduction by G. Unwin, 'The Reverend Baxter's last Treatise' in the Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, x (1926), pp. 163–218; F. J. Powicke (ed.), 'Some Unpublished Correspondence of the Rev. Richard Baxter and the Rev. John Eliot, "The Apostle to the American Indians", 1656–1682', ib., xv (1931), pp. 138–76 and 442–66. Various MSS. in Dr. Williams's Library pr. in R. Schlatter, Richard Baxter & Puritan Politics (New Brunswick [1957]). F. J. Powicke, A Life of the Reverend Richard Baxter, 1615–1691 (1924); id., The Reverend Richard Baxter Under the Cross, 1662–1691 (1927); A. R. Ladell, Richard Baxter. Puritan and Mystic (Studies in Church History, 1925); I. Morgan, The Nonconformity of Richard Baxter (1926); G. F. Nuttall, Richard Baxter (1965). A. B. Grosart, Annotated List of the Writings of Richard Baxter (1868). J. T. Wilkinson, Richard Baxter and Margaret Charlton. A Puritan Love Story. Being the Breviate of the Life of Margaret Baxter, by Richard Baxter, 1681 (1928). H. Martin, Puritanism and Richard Baxter (1954), esp. pp. 122–92. A. H. Wood, Church Unity without Uniformity. A Study of Seventeenth-Century English Church Movements and of Richard Baxter's Proposals for a Comprehensive Church (1963). W. M. Lamont, Richard Baxter and the Millennium (1979). A. B. Grosart in D.N.B., iii (1885), pp. 429–37.

BAY PSALM BOOK, The. The metrical version of the Psalms produced at Cambridge, Massachusetts (popularly known in the U.S.A. as 'Bay State'), in 1640, and the first book to be printed in British America. It was the work of a body of *Congregationalists, among them Richard Mather (1596–1669).

Z. Haraszti, The Enigma of the Bay Psalm Book (Chicago [1956]), publd. together with facsimile repr. B. F. Swan, 'Some Thoughts on the Bay Psalm Book of 1640, with a Census of Copies' in The Yale University Library Gazette, xxii (1948), pp. 51–176.

BAYEUX TAPESTRY, The. An embroidered band of linen, 231 ft. by 20 in., preserved at Bayeux in Normandy, which depicts the Norman invasion of England and the events preceding it. It was probably made for Bp. *Odo of Bayeux for use in his cathedral. In it appear Odo himself, Abp. *Stigand, and *Edward the Confessor's *Westminster Abbey, for the architecture of which it is a valuable authority. It is also an important witness to the ecclesiastical dress of the epoch.

E. Maclagan, The Bayeux Tapestry (King Penguin Books, 1943; ed. 2, 1945), with bibl., p. 29. F. R. Fowke, The Bayeux Tapestry, reproduced in autotype Plates with historical Notes (1875; smaller ed., 1898). Full bibl. in J. J. Marquet de Vasselot, Bibliographie de la tapisserie (1935). Excellent reproduction, with essays and bibl., in F. M. Stenton (ed.), The Bayeux Tapestry (Phaidon Press, 1957; ed. 2, 1965). S. Bertrand, La Tapisserie de Bayeux et la manière de vivre au onzième siècle [1966].

BAYLE, PIERRE (1647–1706), sceptical writer. The son of a French Protestant minister, he became professor of philosophy and history at Rotterdam in 1681. In his Pensées sur la comète (1682) he argued inter alia that, religion and morality being independent of one another, all the private and social virtues may be equally practised by atheists. By such views, and by his championship of universal toleration (in connexion with the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes, 1685), he incurred the antagonism of influential French Protestants, and was deprived of his chair in 1693. His most famous work was his Dictionnaire historique et critique (1695–7; 2nd edition, enlarged, 1702). His accuracy, encyclopaedic knowledge, and sceptical temper made his work invaluable to the anti-Christian *Deists and philosophes of the 18th cent., both in France and in England.

Selections of his letters ed. by P. Des Maizeaux (3 vols., Rotterdam, 1714; 3 vols., Amsterdam, 1729; and 2 vols., The Hague, 1739), J. Rou (2 vols., Paris, 1857), and E. Gigas (Copenhagen, 1890). Life by P. Des Maizeaux prefixed to the Dictionnaire historique et critique, i (ed. 4, 1730), pp. xvii–cviii, issued separately (2 vols., 1732). Studies by L. Feuerbach (Leipzig, 1838), C. Lenient (Paris, 1855), E. Jeanmaire (Strassburg, 1862), J. Devolvé (Paris, 1906), E. Smith (Albany, N.Y., 1912), E. Lacoste (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres &c., Mémoires. Collection in-8vo, xxiv, fasc. 3, 1929), H. Robinson (New York, 1931), ed. P. Dibon (Paris, 1959), Élisabeth Labrousse (2 vols., The Hague, 1963–1964), and W. Rex (ib., 1965). Élisabeth Labrousse, Inventaire critique de la correspondance de Pierre Bayle (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1961). H. T. Mason, Pierre Bayle and Voltaire (Oxford, 1963).

BAYLY, LEWIS (d. 1631). The author of The Practice of Piety. He was educated at Oxford, probably at Exeter College, and became chaplain to Henry, Prince of Wales. His *Puritan opinions gave offence at court; but he returned to favour and in 1616 became chaplain to *James I and later in the year Bp. of *Bangor. As a bishop, his opinions again made him unpopular; continual trouble with the Council led to his imprisonment in the Fleet (1621); and his laxity in ecclesiastical discipline was attacked constantly until his death. His Practice of Piety (ed. 3, 1613; the date of its original publication is not known) enjoyed remarkable popularity, esp. among the Puritans, and was translated into several languages; John *Bunyan regarded it as a great influence in his life.

Biog. Preface (inaccurate) by G. Webster to the 1842 ed. of Bayly's Practice of Piety. J. E. Bailey, 'Bishop Lewis Bayly and his "Practice of Piety"' in Manchester Quarterly, ii (1883), pp. 221–39, repr. separately, 1883. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., iii (1885), p. 448 f.

B.C.M.S. ('Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society'). A society formed out of the *C.M.S. when a group broke away from the parent body in 1922 in order to assert its fidelity to the traditional doctrines of the Evangelical party (in particular, to the belief in the complete inerrancy of the Scriptures), as opposed to any reinterpretation or alteration of emphasis adopted by *Liberal Evangelicals.

W. S. Hooton–J. Stafford Wright, The First Twenty-Five Years of the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society, 1922–47 (1947).

BEAD (Mid. Eng. 'bede'). Originally the word meant a prayer (cf. Germ. beten, 'to pray'), but later it was transferred to the small spherical bodies used for 'telling beads' (i.e. counting the beads of a *rosary), and hence also applied, e.g., to the parts of a necklace. 'To bid a bead' thus means 'to offer a prayer'. See also Bidding Prayer.

BEADLE. In the Church of Scotland an official appointed by the *session to care for the place of worship and to perform other similar functions. He is subject to the minister for direction in his duties, and hence used frequently to be known as 'the minister's man'. One of his most conspicuous tasks is to bear the books to the pulpit before divine service begins. In the newer branches of Presbyterianism he is generally called by the ambiguous title 'church officer'.

BEARD. See Beards, Clerical.

BEARD, CHARLES (1827–88), *Unitarian divine. From 1867 he was in charge of Renshaw Street chapel, Liverpool, and from 1864 to 1879 was editor of the Theological Review. Besides some fine sermons and addresses, he published several historical works. Of these the best known is his series of Hibbert Lectures for 1883, The Reformation in its relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge, in which, in accordance with his own sympathies, he stressed the humanistic, as against the more definitely theological, aspects of the Reformers' work.

Study in H. McLachlan, Records of a Family, 1800–1933 (Publications of the University of Manchester, No. ccxxxix; 1935), pp. 36–75. A. Gordon in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 154 f.

BEARDS, Clerical. The wearing of beards by clerics has remained the practice of the E. Church since apostolic times. From the 5th cent. onwards, however, largely under monastic influence, W. clerics adopted the practice of being clean-shaven, and at the time of *Photius, the beardlessness of the W. clergy became one of the chief points of controversy between E. and W. From the 12th cent. a long series of prohibitions were issued by W. Councils against clerics wearing beards, but in the 15th cent. they widely came in again under the influence of secular fashion, being worn, e.g., by 16th and 17th cent. Popes. They are still worn by *Capuchins.

C. J. Seghers, 'The Practice of Shaving in the Latin Church' in American Catholic Quarterly Review, vii (1882), pp. 276–310. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 478–93, s.v. 'Barbe'. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., ii (1907), p. 363, s.v.; S. Marsilio, O.S.B., in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 798–801, s.v. 'Barba'.

BEATIFIC VISION, The. The vision of the Divine Being in heaven which, acc. to Christian theology, is the final destiny of the redeemed. Its nature and conditions were a subject of much dispute in the later Middle Ages. *Benedict XII (1336) formally defined that the Divine Essence would be seen by direct intuition and face to face (visione intuitiva et etiam faciali), while against the *Beghards and *Beguines the Council of *Vienne of 1311 laid down that it transcended man's natural capacities and hence was supernatural, and that it was through the Divine gift of the 'light of glory' (lumen gloriae) that it was made accessible to him. Whereas its primary object is the vision of the Divine essence itself, it is held that the vision also extends in a secondary and complementary sense to cover all that the blessed may have a reasonable interest in knowing. Acc. to some theologians the vision is bestowed in exceptional circumstances for brief periods in this life, e.g. St. *Thomas Aquinas held that it was granted to *Moses (Ex. 34. 28–35) and St. *Paul (2 Cor. 12. 2–4).

BEATIFICATION. In the RC Church, the act by which the Pope permits the public veneration after his death of some faithful Catholic in a particular church, diocese, country, or religious order. Very occasionally the permission to venerate a particular person in this way is extended to the whole of the RC Church. Before the 12th cent., and less generally from that date to the 17th cent., it was customary for local bishops to beatify people for their own dioceses. A person who has been beatified receives the title of 'Blessed'. In the Russian Church there is a similar process, although not bearing the same name, for authorizing the local cult of deceased Christians. See also Canonization.

*Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et de Beatorum Canonizatione (Bonn, 4 vols. bound in 5, 1734–8), passim. R. Naz in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 10–37, s.v. 'Causes de béatification et de canonisation'; G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1090–6, s.v. 'Beatificazione'. See also bibl. to Canonization.

BEATING OF THE BOUNDS. A ceremony common in medieval England, and associated with the *Rogationtide procession round the parish. When written maps, showing parish boundaries, were hardly known, this annual perambulation was a means of impressing these limits on the minds of the young. The bounds were solemnly beaten with willow rods, and on occasion boys of the parish were also beaten or bumped on the ground at the boundary. The custom is known to date back to the end of the 9th or beginning of the 10th cent., and lasted on long after the religious part of the procession was abolished under *Elizabeth I. In modern times it has been revived in some parishes.

The *Injunctions of Elizabeth I (No. 18). J. H. MacMichael, 'Beating the Bounds: Its Origin' in Notes and Queries, 10th Series, ii (1904), p. 113 f., with short bibl. Further bibl. by J. T. Page, ib., iii (1905), p. 390 f., and by G. Potter, ib., iv (1905), p. 31.

BEATITUDES, The. Christ's promises of coming blessings in the '*Sermon on the Mount' (Mt. 5. 3–11) and the 'Sermon on the Plain' (Lk. 6. 20–22). In Mt. there are eight (or nine) blessings of a spiritual nature, applicable to all, whereas in Lk. there are four blessings, spoken to the disciples, which relate to external conditions. In Lk. they are accompanied by four 'Woes'. The Beatitudes describe the qualities of Christian perfection and have analogies in the OT (e.g. Is. 32. 20, Ps. 1. 1) and elsewhere in the NT (e.g. Lk. 12. 37, Mt. 13. 16).

J. Dupont, O.S.B., Les Béatitudes: Le problème littéraire, le message doctrinal (Louvain, 1954; ed. 2 of chs. 1–2: Les Béatitudes, vol. i: Le problème littéraire: les deux versions du Sermon sur la montagne et des Béatitudes, 1958; of ch. 3 as Les Béatitudes, vol. ii: La bonne nouvelle, 1969; of chs. 4–5 as Les Béatitudes, vol. iii: Les Évangélistes, 1973), with bibl. See also comm. to Matthew and Luke, Gospels of, cited s.vv.

BEATITUDES, The Mount of the. The name traditionally given to the place where the *Sermon on the Mount is believed to have been delivered (cf. Mt. 5. 1). It has been identified since Crusading times with the mountain Karn Hattin, W. of the Sea of *Galilee.

BEATON (or BETHUNE), DAVID (c. 1494–1546), Cardinal Abp. of St. Andrews. He became Abbot of Arbroath in 1523, and was sent by James V on various missions to France. In 1528 he became Keeper of the Privy Seal, Cardinal in 1538, and succeeded his uncle as Abp. of St. Andrews in 1539. On the death of James (1542) he made a bid for the regency, and in spite of his failure to secure it, acquired considerable influence over his successful competitor, the Earl of Arran. It was largely through his influence that the English plans for the subjugation of Scotland were defeated; but after his death his countrymen preferred to remember and exaggerate his actions as a persecutor, and in particular his trial and condemnation of the propagandist G. *Wishart, whose zeal for the Reformation seems to have been involved with political plottings, and designs on the Cardinal's life. He was assassinated by John Leslie at St. Andrews on 29 May 1546.

The main sources for his life are J. *Knox's History of the Reformation, Book i, passim, and J. *Spottiswoode, History of the Church of Scotland (1847–51 ed.), i, pp. 134–65. Life by J. Herkless (London, 1891). Margaret MacArthur in D.N.B., iv (1885), p. 17 f. See also works on the Scottish Reformation cited s.v. Scotland, Christianity in.

BEAUDUIN, LAMBERT (1873–1960), Belgian liturgist and founder of *Chevetogne. After ordination in 1897, he worked with a society of priests devoted to the care of working men and in 1906 entered the *Benedictine Abbey of Mont-César at Louvain. Here he took part in the organization of Liturgical Weeks in 1909, established the periodical La Vie liturgique (since 1911 Les Questions liturgiques), and wrote La Piété de l'Église (1914), which popularized the aims of the *Liturgical Movement. In 1921 he was sent to the Anselmo in Rome and became interested in E. liturgy. After Pope *Pius XI had urged that Benedictines should pray for Christian unity (Equidem verba, 21 March 1924), Dom Beauduin founded a monastery of Union at Amay-sur-Meuse (see Chevetogne). He attended Cardinal *Mercier at the *Malines Conversations and in a report to him expressed the desire that the Anglican Church should be 'united to Rome, not absorbed' ('unie non absorbée'). When this phrase was published considerable criticism was directed against him. In 1928 he had to leave Amay and in 1930 he was condemned by a Roman tribunal. His preaching in 1942 was one of the factors leading to the establishment of the Centre de Pastorale Liturgique in Paris. In 1950 he was able to return to his community, now at Chevetogne. The validity of his approach to questions of reunion was recognized by Pope *John XXIII.

Mélanges Liturgiques collected in honour of his 80th birthday (Louvain, 1954). 1054–1954. L'Église et les Églises, neuf siècles de douloureuse séparation entre l'Orient et l'Occident. Études et travaux sur l'Unité Chrétienne offerts à Dom Lambert Beauduin (2 vols., Chevetogne, 1954). Lives by L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat. (Tournai, 1964) and Sonya A. Quitslund (New York, 1973). Beauduin's memorandum on 'L'Église Anglicane unie non absorbée' is pr. in The Conversations at Malines 1921–1925. Original Documents, ed. Lord Halifax (1930), pp. 241–61; Eng. tr. in G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity. Third Series 1930–48 (1948), pp. 21–32 (no. 149).

BEAUFORT, HENRY (c. 1375–1447), Cardinal and Bp. of *Lincoln and *Winchester. He was born at Beaufort, Anjou, the son of John of Gaunt and Catherine Swynford. His parents having been married in 1396, he was declared legitimate in 1397. He was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and at Queen's College, Oxford. After holding various benefices, incl. a prebend at Lincoln from 1389, he became Dean of *Wells in 1396 and in the following year Chancellor of the University of Oxford. In 1398 he was provided to the see of Lincoln. In 1403 he became Chancellor until he was translated to Winchester in 1404, succeeding *William of Wykeham. During most of the reign of Henry IV, however, he supported the party of the Prince of Wales in opposition to the King and Abp. *Arundel. In 1407 he was declared debarred from the succession. With the accession of Henry V in 1413 he was appointed Chancellor, but resigned in 1417, ostensibly to go on pilgrimage. On the way he attended the Council of *Constance. Here he was largely responsible for the election of Oddo Colonna as *Martin V, who issued a bull creating him Cardinal and legatus a latere and prob. granted him permission to hold the see of Winchester in commendam for life. Henry V, however, prevented him from accepting these favours. Appointed in 1421 as one of the guardians of Henry VI, he became Chancellor in 1424 and virtually ruled the realm for the next two years. After a serious quarrel with the Duke of Gloucester, he sought leave to go on pilgrimage again in 1426. In the same year he accepted a cardinalate, and led an unsuccessful expedition against the *Hussites; but his new office, which rendered his position ambiguous, made him very unpopular in England. In spite, however, of continued attacks by the Duke of Gloucester, esp. in 1439, he played a considerable part in foreign policy, being present at the Council of Arras in 1435 and the subsequent negotiations. He also took part in the trial of *Joan of Arc. After the fall of Gloucester (1441) his party was left supreme, but he personally seems to have taken little further part in politics. He died at Wolvesey Palace on Palm Sunday, 1447.

At Winchester Beaufort completed the transformation of the nave of the Cathedral, and greatly extended the Hospital of St. Cross. But he stands out by his financial ability and shrewd statesmanship rather than as a Churchman. By lending money to the King at opportune moments and high rates of (disguised) interest, he amassed a fortune which made his support indispensable to the government. In general he upheld the ideals of constitutional government and strove for peace.

L. B. Radford, Henry Beaufort. Bishop, Chancellor, Cardinal (1908). K. B. McFarlane, 'Henry V, Bishop Beaufort and the Red Hat 1417–1421' in E.H.R., lx (1945), pp. 316–348; id., 'At the Death-Bed of Cardinal Beaufort' in Studies in Medieval History presented to F. M. Powicke, ed. R. W. Hunt, W. A. Pantin, and R. W. Southern (1948), pp. 405–28. See also K. H. Vickers, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester (1907). B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 139–42; B.R.U.C., pp. 46–49, s.v.

BEAUFORT, MARGARET. See Margaret, Lady.

BEAULIEU, Abbey of. This *Cistercian abbey in Hampshire was founded and endowed in 1204 by King *John for 30 monks from *Cîteaux, and dedicated in 1246 in the presence of Henry III and his Queen, Eleanor. The abbey was from the first 'exempted' by *Innocent III, with right of sanctuary, which was sought by Ann Neville, wife of Warwick the King-Maker, Perkin Warbeck, and others. At the time of the suppression (1539) there were 32 sanctuary-men with their wives and families within the precincts. Among the portions still standing are the Early English refectory (now used as the parish church), the gatehouse (now a private residence), the guesthouse dormitory, and parts of the cloisters and chapter-house. Beaulieu (Bellus locus) has preserved its original Norman-French pronunciation of 'Bewley'.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, v (ed. 1825), pp. 680–4. W. J. St. John Hope and H. Breakspear, 'The Cistercian Abbey of Beaulieu' in Archaeological Journal, lxiii (1906), pp. 130–86. J. K. Fowler, A History of Beaulieu Abbey A.D. 1204–1539 [1911]. J. C. Cox in V.C.H. Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, ed. H. A. Doubleday–W. Page, ii (1903), pp. 140–46.

BEC, Abbey of. This celebrated Norman abbey, situated between *Rouen and *Lisieux, was founded by Bl. Herluin (Feast day, 26 Aug.) and consecrated by Mauger, Abp. of Rouen and uncle of William the Conqueror, in 1041. In 1060 it was rebuilt on a much larger scale. Its notable monks included *Lanfranc (Prior, c. 1045–63; later Abp. of *Canterbury), St. *Anselm (Prior, 1063–78; Abbot, 1078–93; also Abp. of Canterbury); *Alexander II (Pope, 1061–73), Gundulf (Bp. of *Rochester, 1077–1108), Ernulf (also Bp. of Rochester, 1114–1124) and Gilbert Crispin (Abbot of *Westminster, 1085–1117). It long enjoyed royal patronage and was visited by Henry I (1106) and Henry II (1152, 1159, 1178), Kings of England. A fire in 1263 destroyed most of the abbey; the new church built soon afterwards lasted until the 19th cent. In 1467 the Tour St. Nicholas, still extant, was constructed. After the concordat between Francis I and *Leo X in 1516, the government of the abbey passed into the hands of commendatory abbots. In 1626 it was taken over and largely rebuilt by the *Maurists. It was suppressed in 1790 and partly demolished from 1810 onwards. In the latter part of the 19th cent. the buildings attracted the interest of historians and in 1948 the Benedictine life (*Olivetan Congregation) was re-established. The abbey at one time had considerable property in England (cf. Tooting Bec); and the modern community actively promotes religious relations between France and England.

M. P. Dickson, O.S.B. (ed.), Consuetudines Beccenses (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, iv; Siegburg, 1967). A. A. Porée, Histoire de l'abbaye du Bec (2 vols., Évreux, 1901). Select Documents of the English Lands of the Abbey of Bec, ed. Marjorie Chibnall (Camden Society, third series, lxxiii, 1951). Marjorie [McC.] Morgan, The English Lands of the Abbey of Bec (Oxford Historical Series; Oxford, 1946). La Varende, L'Abbaye du Bec-Hellouin, vingt-quatre photographies de J. M. Marcel (Paris, 1951). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire Topo-Bibliographique des Abbayes et Prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 316–19. P. Cousin in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 209–11, s.v., with further bibl.

BECKET, St. THOMAS (?1118–70), Abp. of *Canterbury. A son of Norman settlers, Thomas studied at Paris, where *Robert of Melun was among his teachers. About 1141 he became a member of the household of Abp. *Theobald of Canterbury, who sent him to study law at *Bologna and Auxerre and, after ordaining him deacon, appointed him Archdeacon of Canterbury in 1154. In 1155 Henry II made him his chancellor, and his influence was enhanced by an intimate friendship with the King. He liked hunting and the display of pomp, and during a military expedition to France took a personal part in the fighting. His policy as a chancellor was generally in harmony with the wishes of the King, often against the interests of the Church; and when, in 1162, he was elected Abp. of Canterbury at the instigation of the King, he accepted the office with reluctance, knowing a break to be inevitable.

From now onwards Becket adopted a very austere style of life, resigned the chancellorship, and soon found himself in open opposition to Henry on a matter of taxation. The crucial dispute arose over the jurisdiction over criminous clerks, then reserved to the ecclesiastical courts. In 1163 Henry required the bishops to sanction beforehand his so-called 'grandfather's customs', a set of articles shortly to be drawn up, one of its objects being to transfer the trial of criminous clerks to secular courts. When the articles were made public in 1164 under the name of the 'Constitutions of *Clarendon' (q.v.), Becket firmly refused his acceptance and was immediately subjected to a series of reprisals culminating in the demand for a large sum of money in settlement of the accounts during his chancellorship. When Thomas refused, the King required a council of bishops and barons held at Northampton to pass sentence on him, but he escaped to France, appealing for justice to *Alexander III, then at Sens. During the following negotiations between the Pope, Henry, and the Archbishop, Thomas stayed at first at the *Cistercian abbey of Pontigny in Burgundy, and when the King threatened to expel all Cistercians from his dominions (1166), he moved to the *Benedictine abbey of Ste.-Colombe at Sens, which was under the special protection of the French King. After he had excommunicated two of his disobedient bishops and threatened England with the interdict in 1169, a reconciliation was at last effected between him and Henry in 1170. The King promised to make amends for the coronation of his son by the Abp. of *York (Roger of Pont-l'Évêque), a flagrant infringement of the prerogatives of Canterbury, while Thomas sent Papal letters of suspension to the bishops who had assisted at the ceremony.

Becket crossed to England on 30 Nov., where he was received with popular enthusiasm. He refused, however, to absolve the Bishops, unless they swore obedience to the Pope. Henry, naturally furious, uttered some words in a fit of rage which were enough to inspire four Knights (Hugh de Morville, William de Tracy, Reginald Fitz-Urse, Richard le Breton) to make their way to Canterbury in revenge. Becket was assassinated in his cathedral in the late afternoon of 29 Dec. 1170.

The murder provoked great indignation throughout Europe. Miracles were soon recorded at Becket's tomb and a widespread cultus developed. On 21 Feb. 1173 he was canonized by Alexander III and on 12 July 1174 Henry did public penance at the shrine. Becket's remains were translated to their place in the choir (the 'Trinity Chapel') in 1220 and until the destruction of the shrine under Henry VIII (1538) it remained one of the principal pilgrimage centres of Christendom. Feast day, 29 Dec.; of his translation, 7 July.

J. C. Robertson and J. B. Sheppard, Materials for the History of Thomas Becket (R.S., 7 vols., 1875–85); The Life and Death of Thomas Becket . . . based on the account of William fitzStephen his clerk, with additions from other contemporary sources, translated and ed. G. Greenaway (Folio Society, 1961). A. L'Huillier, St. Thomas de Cantorbéry (2 vols., 1891); E. A. *Abbott, St. Thomas, His Death and Miracles (1898; rationalistic); W. H. *Hutton, Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury (1910; rev. ed., 1926); E. Walberg, La Tradition hagiographique de Saint Thomas Becket avant la fin du XIIe siècle. Études critiques (1929); R. Foreville, L'Église et la royauté en Angleterre sous Henri II Plantagenet, 1154–1189 (1943); id., Le Jubilé de Saint Thomas Becket du XIIIe au XVe siècle (1220–1470). Étude et documents (1958); M. D. Knowles, 'Archbishop Thomas Becket. A Character Study' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxxv (1949), pp. 177–205, repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 98–128; id., The Episcopal Colleagues of Archbishop Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures for 1949; 1951). Modern studies by A. Duggan (London, 1952), P. Compton (ib., 1957), Nesta Pain (ib., 1964), R. Winston (ib., 1967), and [M.] D. Knowles (ib., 1970). Dramatic interpretation in T. S. *Eliot, Murder in the Cathedral (1935). M. D. Knowles in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 212–14, s.v.

BECON, THOMAS (c. 1511 – 67), Protestant Reformer. A native of Norfolk, he was educated at Cambridge, perhaps at St. John's College, studied under H. *Latimer, and was ordained priest in 1533. He was arrested c. 1540 for preaching Protestant doctrines at Norwich and forced to recant. Having retired to Kent, he began writing copiously under the name of Theodore Basille. On the accession of *Edward VI (1547) he was appointed Chaplain to the Lord Protector; was made by T. *Cranmer one of the *Six Preachers of *Canterbury and a chaplain of Cranmer's own household; and was invited to contribute to the 'Book of *Homilies'. In 1548 he was presented to the living of St. Stephen, Walbrook. Expelled from his living on the accession of *Mary (1553), he went to Strassburg (1554) and later to Frankfurt (1555). From 1556 to 1559 he appears to have taught at *Marburg University. Returning to England soon after the accession of *Elizabeth I, he was installed as a Canon of Canterbury Cathedral in 1559 and in his last years held a succession of benefices.

Becon's writings enjoyed a very wide popularity. At first they were moderate in tone, devotional in intent, and much under *Lutheran influence. During and after his exile they grew coarser and their standpoint became *Zwinglian. Becon was usually prepared, however, to compromise on less important points, and perhaps influenced Cranmer to accept the Memorial on Kneeling at Communion (see Black Rubric). For the 'Book of Homilies' he wrote that 'Against Whoredom and Uncleanness' (usually known as the 'Homily against Adultery'). His numerous other works include The Jewel of Joy (prob. written 1547–8; earliest extant copy 1553), The Sick Man's Salve (composed before 1553; earliest copy 1561), and A New Catechism (first printed in his works). He revised them for a folio edition (3 vols., 1560–4).

Modern ed. of most of his works by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 3 vols., 1843–44). D. S. Bailey, Thomas Becon and the Reformation of the Church in England (1952).

BEDA, The ('Collegio Beda'). The college at Rome where English candidates for the RC priesthood who have discovered their vocation late in life, including converts from non-Roman ministries who wish to be ordained in the RC Church, are trained.

J. J. Curtin in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 215 f., s.v.

BEDE (prayer). See Bead.

BEDE, St. (c. 673 – 735), 'The Venerable', Biblical scholar and 'Father of English History'. At the age of 7 he was sent to the monastery of *Wearmouth under the rule of St. *Benedict Biscop and transferred to Jarrow, prob. at the time of its foundation c. 681. He was ordained deacon c. 692 (at an age much earlier than was customary) and priested when he was about 30. He visited *Lindisfarne and *York, but it is unlikely that he went outside Northumbria. From the time of his entry into the monastic life he devoted himself to the study of Scripture and to teaching and writing, becoming famous for his learning in his lifetime. His earliest works, the De Orthographia and the De Arte Metrica ad Cuthbertum Levitam, appear to have been written for the pupils of the monastery. The former is an alphabetically arranged glossary, the latter a collection of verse forms with explanations. His next work, the De Temporibus, was prob. written to make clear to the clergy the principles for the calculation of *Easter acc. to the Roman usage adopted by the Synod of *Whitby (664). To it he appended a chronicle of the six ages of the world, mostly adopted from St. *Isidore, which brought upon him a ridiculous charge of heresy. The work was important because, together with the De Temporum Ratione (written in 725) and his own historical works, it did much to establish the practice of dating events from the Incarnation. His other important scientific treatise, the De Natura Rerum, was prob. written about the same time; it is a cosmography based on Isidore, supplemented from Suetonius and the younger Pliny.

In the intervening period he produced the greater part of his Biblical work, for which he used both the *Vulgate and *Old Latin texts and often the Greek as well. His expositions, which were highly appreciated by his contemporaries and immediate successors, were founded on the writings of St. *Augustine, St. *Jerome, St. *Ambrose and St. *Gregory, but embodied some original comment. They include works on Rev., Acts, the *Catholic Epistles, Lk., Sam., Mk., Kgs., Gen. 1–20, Ez. and Neh., Exod. 24. 12 – 30. 21, the Song of Songs and Tobit. His historical works, for which he is in modern times best known, include the Vita Beatorum Abbatum Benedicti, Ceolfridi, Eosterwini, Sigfridi atque Hwaethberti (commonly called the Historia Abbatum), which traces the history of his monastery from its foundation to 716, his metrical De Miraculis Sancti Cuthberti and the more important prose De Vita et Miraculis S. Cuthberti, Episcopi Lindisfarnensis and, of supreme interest, his Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum (completed 731). This last, a primary source for early English history, owes its value to Bede's care in collecting information from those most likely to know, his meticulous listing of his authorities and the separation of historical fact from hearsay and tradition. Its interest is enhanced by the vividness of his descriptions. The Martyrologium which goes under his name has been so much interpolated that it is hard to distinguish the work of Bede. He also wrote a considerable amount of verse, though much that is commonly accredited to him is prob. the work of others.

To the end of his life Bede was occupied in teaching and in the recitation of the Divine Office. In a letter to *Egbert (Bp. of York 735–66) he emphasized the importance of episcopal visitation, confirmation and frequent Communion as the remedy for the ills of the time. Less than a century after his death he was honoured with the title of Venerable, and in the 11th cent. his bones were translated to *Durham; a stone in the cathedral still commemorates him. In 1899 *Leo XIII declared him a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day, 27 (in parts of the Anglican Church, 25) May.

Complete Works publd. Paris, 1521; ed. with Eng. tr. by J. A. Giles (Patres Ecclesiae Anglicanae, ii–xiii, 12 vols., London, 1843–44); Lat. text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xc–xcv. Crit. ed. in Corpus Christianorum, 1955 ff. Other edd. of his Opera Historica, by J. Stevenson (2 vols., London, 1838–1841) and C. Plummer (with notes, 2 vols., Oxford, 1896) and of his Historia Ecclesiastica by B. Colgrave–R. A. B. Mynors (ib., 1969); of his prose life of St. Cuthbert by B. Colgrave, Two Lives of St. Cuthbert (1940), pp. 142–307 and 341–59; of his metrical life of St. Cuthbert by W. Jaager (Palaestra, cxcviii; 1935); of his Expositio Actuum Apostolorum et Retractatio, by M. L. W. Laistner (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication xxxv; 1939), and of his Opera de Temporibus, by C. W. Jones (ib., xli; 1943). M. L. W. Laistner–H. H. King, A Hand-list of Bede Manuscripts (1943). C. W. Jones, Baedae Pseudographia. Scientific Writings falsely ascribed to Bede (1939). A. Hamilton Thompson (ed.), Bede. His Life, Times and Writings. Essays in Commemoration of the Twelfth Centenary of his Death (1935). Three essays by B. *Capella, O.S.B., M. Inguanez, O.S.B., and Beda Thum, O.S.B., S. Beda Venerabilis (Studia Anselmiana, fasc. vi; 1936). G.[I.] Bonner (ed.), Famulus Christi. Essays in Commemoration of the Thirteenth Centenary of the Birth of the Venerable Bede (1976). B. Colgrave, The Venerable Bede and his Times (Jarrow Lecture, 1958), with bibl.; several later Jarrow lectures are also devoted to Bede. Sr. M. Thomas Aquinas Carroll, The Venerable Bede. His Spiritual Teachings (Catholic University of America Studies in Mediaeval History, New Series, ix; 1946). E. S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (New York, 1948), pp. 217–336. Dekkers, Nos. 1343–84. I. Cecchetti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ii (Rome, 1962), cols. 1006–74, s.v. 'Beda', with extensive reff.

BEDLAM (='Bethlehem'). Originally the name given to the 'Hospital of St. Mary of Bethlehem', in Bishopsgate, which the Sheriff of London founded in 1247 for the housing of the clergy of St. Mary of Bethlehem when they visited Britain. It is uncertain when insane persons were first received here, but the house is mentioned as a hospital for the sick in 1330 and lunatics are definitely stated to have been there in 1402. On the *dissolution of the monasteries it passed to the London civic authorities, and in 1547 became a royal foundation for the reception of lunatics. Its place was taken in 1675 by a new hospital in Moorfields, and this again was transferred to the Lambeth Road in 1815. By an extension in meaning, the word 'Bedlam' has come to be applied to any lunatic asylum or any scene of disorder within doors.

R. M. Clay, The Medieval Hospitals of England ('The Antiquary's Books'; 1909), pp. 32–4, 210, and 238. E. G. O'Donoghue, The Story of Bethlehem Hospital from its Foundation in 1247 (1914).

BEELZEBUB. The name applied to 'the prince of devils' in the Gospels, where Christ's enemies accuse Him of 'casting out devils by Beelzebub' (Mk. 3. 22–26; cf. Mt. 12. 24–28, Lk. 11. 15–20), i.e. of acting by the power of, or of being an agent of, the evil one (cf. Mt. 10. 25), not of God. It is this direct and deliberate calling of good 'evil' which leads to the Lord's words on the sin that 'hath never forgiveness' (Mk. 3. 29, etc.).

In all the Gk. MSS. of the Gospels the form is 'Beelzebul' (Βεελζεβούλ); the form 'Beelzebub' is due to the influence of the OT, where 'Baal-zebub' is the god of the Philistine city of Ekron mentioned in 2 Kgs. 1. Neither name is found elsewhere in the Bible or in contemporary sources, Jewish or pagan. 'Baal-zebub' appears to mean in Heb. 'lord of flies' and the word is so explained by ancient commentators; but the exact connexion between this and the 'Beelzebul' evidently current in *Galilee in the time of Christ and regarded as practically equivalent to '*Satan' (Mk. 3. 23), is uncertain. 'Beelzebul' is variously regarded as (a) a mere corruption in pronunciation of 'Baal-zebub', possibly influenced by an *Aramaic word meaning 'enmity', which suggested the use of this OT name for the arch-fiend; (b) derived from a Heb. word meaning 'dung', i.e. 'lord of filth'; or (c) derived from an uncommon Hebrew word for house or mansion, i.e. 'lord of the underworld'. This last suggestion, though it would give added point to the references to 'a house divided' and 'the strong man's house' in the Gospel passages (cf. 'master of the house', Mt. 10. 25), seems etymologically very improbable. The *Mishnah contains one reference to Beelzebub, understood as 'fly-god'. From the general absence of other references from Jewish literature it would seem that the term was of only local or temporary currency.

A. *Loisy, 'Béelzeboul' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, ix (1904), pp. 434–66. E. *Nestle in D.C.G., i (1906), p. 181 f., s.v.; W. Foerster in T.W.B., i (1933), p. 605 f., with bibl. reff.

BEGUINES, BEGHARDS. The Beguines were members of certain sisterhoods, founded in the Netherlands in the 12th cent. They lived a semi-religious and somewhat austere communal life without vows, but they were free to hold private property and to leave the community and marry. Their male counterparts were the Beghards, who were usually weavers, dyers, or fullers, but who had a common purse and held no private property. These communities are said to have derived their names from Lambert le Bègue ('the stammerer'; d. 1177), a revivalist preacher at Liége. Though found mainly in the Netherlands, Beguines established themselves also in *Paris (where *Louis IX founded a Beguinage in 1264), on the Rhine, and elsewhere. The main aims of all these communities were philanthropic, esp. the service of the sick and needy, but they also devoted time to religious contemplation. They had no common rule, mother house, or superior-general. Their social doctrines, their mysticism, and their sympathies with the *Spiritual Franciscans led them to be suspected of heresy by the ecclesiastical authorities, and their teaching was condemned by the Council of *Vienne in 1311. Many of the Beghards, however, adopted a Reform and were allowed to continue by *John XXII in 1321. These survived until the French Revolution. The Beguines, on the other hand, after surviving a century of persecution, had become little more than charitable institutions by the 15th cent., and were almost suppressed during the 16th cent. and again at the French Revolution, although some still exist in the Low Countries, esp. in *Belgium (Bruges, Ghent, &c.).

J. L. *Mosheim, De Beghardis et Beguinabus Commentarius (Leipzig, 1790), with documents. J. Greven, Die Anfänge der Beginen (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, viii; 1912). G. Kurth, 'De l'origine liégeoise des Béguines' in Bulletin de l'Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres (1912), pp. 437–62; J. Greven, 'Die Ursprung des Beginenwesens. Eine Auseinandersetzung mit Godefroid Kurth' in Hist. J., xxxv (1914), pp. 26–58 and 291–318. L. J. M. Philippen, De Begijnhoven (1918), with bibl. A. Mens, O.F.M.Cap., Oorsprong en Betekenis van de Nederlandse Begijnen- en Begardenbeweging (Verhandelingen van de Koninklijke Vlaamse Academie voor Wetenschappen, Letteren en Schone Kunsten van België. Klasse der Letteren, Jaargang ix, No. 7; Antwerp, 1947). E. W. McDonnell, The Beguines and Beghards in Medieval Culture (New Brunswick, 1954). R. Manselli, Spirituali e Beghini in Provenza (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, xxxi–xxxiv; 1959). Eva G. Neumann, Rheinische Beginen- und Begardenwesen. Ein Mainzer Beitrag zur religiösen Bewegung am Rhein (Mainzer Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, iv; Meisenheim am Glan, 1960). G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, i (1967), esp. pp. 195–230 and 310–407. J. van Mierlo, S.J., in D.H.G.E., vii (1934), cols. 426–41 and 457–73, s.vv. 'Bégardisme' and 'Béguinages', with bibl.

BEHEMOTH (Heb. בְּהֵמוֹת). This Heb. word, which occurs several times in the OT, is translated 'beast' except in Job 40. 15, where both AV and RV retain the form 'behemoth'. Here it means a particular beast, the greatest of all land animals (probably the hippopotamus), and the counterpart of the sea-beast, *Leviathan.

BEHMEN. See Boehme, Jacob.

BEL. Another form of 'Baal' (q.v.). In Jer. 50. 2, 51. 44 and Is. 46. 1, he is the tutelary god of Babylon, the empire which held the Jews captive.

BEL AND THE DRAGON. Two stories attached to the Book of *Daniel in certain Gk. MSS. (*Septuagint and *Theodotion) of the OT and hence included (as a single item) in the *Apocrypha of the English Bible. The former recounts (vv. 1–22; [Vulg.] Dan.13. 65 – 14. 21) how Daniel convinced the Babylonian king that the lectisternia which were daily set before the image of Bel were not really consumed by the god but removed secretly by the priests, leading to the execution of the priests and the destruction of the image. The latter story (vv. 23–44; [Vulg.] Dan. 14. 22–42), which appears to be based on an ancient Semitic myth, describes how Daniel, having obtained the king's consent to attack the dragon, put him to death by throwing a large bolus into his throat. The people in their rage insisted that Daniel should be cast into a den of seven lions, whence, with the aid of the prophet *Habakkuk, who was miraculously transported from Judaea to feed him, he was saved from death and liberated. In consequence the king became a worshipper of Jehovah.

The occurrence of these stories in the Septuagint led them to be accepted by *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Origen, and others, but they were already questioned by *Julius Africanus. *Jerome incorporated them into the *Vulgate, though he did not conceal his doubts about them. In the AV they are entitled 'The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon, cut off from the End of Daniel'. In 1894 M. Gaster announced the discovery of a story of the Dragon in *Aramaic which appeared to underlie the Gk.; his arguments were widely challenged, but many now hold, on other grounds, that the narratives are based on a Semitic original.

M. Gaster, 'The Unknown Aramaic Original of Theodotion's Additions to the Book of Daniel' in Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, xvi (1894), pp. 280–90 and 312–17. F. Zimmermann, 'Bel and the Dragon' in Vetus Testamentum, viii (1958), pp. 438–40. Good account by T. Witton Davies in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 652–64. J. A. Montgomery, 'Daniel' (I.C.C.; 1927), p. 8 f. See also bibl. to Apocrypha.

BELGIC CONFESSION, The (1561). The 'Confession de Foi des Églises Réformées Wallonnes et Flamandes', originally drawn up in French by Guido de Brès (1522–67) on the basis of the *Gallican Confession (1559). In an attempt to conciliate the Netherlands' government it specially repudiated *Anabaptist doctrines. Its adoption in synod at Antwerp in May 1566 marked the final acceptance of Calvinistic principles in the Netherlands. It was again adopted by the Synod of *Dort in 1619.

Text (as revised in 1619) and Eng. tr. in P. *Schaff, Creeds of the Evangelical Protestant Churches (1877), pp. 383–436. Eng. tr., with introd., also in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 185–219.

BELGIUM, Christianity in. The independent history of Belgium begins with the Revolution in 1830 when she was liberated from the Netherlands. In the previous fifty years the Church had been sorely tried, first under the government of Napoleon and then under William I of *Holland (reigned 1813–44), during whose rule a Dutch Calvinist minority imposed severe restrictions on Catholics. The Revolution of 1830 had been carried through by the 'Union' of 1828 between the Belgian Liberals, a political group whose principles were based on religious free thought, and the Catholics. This Union continued to work for some years, and its last fruit was the Education Act of 1842, which allowed denominational teaching in state schools. From 1847 to 1884 the Liberals pursued an anti-Catholic policy, esp. in educational matters, which was reversed again by the elections of 1884, when the Catholics once more secured the chief voice in the government. The population of Belgium has always been predominantly Catholic. Cardinal *Mercier (1851–1926) gained a wide reputation as a national leader during the war of 1914–18, and was largely responsible for the *Malines Conversations of 1921–5 between RCs and Anglicans. In the following period, *Jocism was a powerful influence in Belgian Church life.

E. de Moreau, S.J., Histoire de l'Église en Belgique (5 vols., Museum Lessianum, Sec. Hist., i, ii, iii, xii, and xv; 1940–52). U. Berlière, O.S.B., and others, Monasticon Belge (Bruges and other places, 1890 ff. [vol. iii, fasc. 1, 1960]). E. Michel, Abbayes et monastères de Belgique: leur importance et leur rôle dans le développement du pays (1923). H. Haag, Les Origines du catholicisme libéral en Belgique (1789–1839) (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philosophie, 3ème Série, xxxvi; 1950). H. Pirenne, Histoire de Belgique (7 vols., 1900–32), passim. There are also many important monographs in the Cahiers Bijdragen of the Centre Interuniversitaire d'histoire contemporaine (Louvain and Paris, 1957 ff., esp. the works of A. Simon). E. de Moreau, S.J., in D.H.G.E., vii (1934), cols. 519–756, s.v. 'Belgique'; M. Dierickx in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 239–49, s.v., with further bibl.

BELIAL. A Heb. word (בְּלִיַּעַל) of uncertain etymology, probably meaning 'worthlessness', 'wickedness', or 'destruction'. It is usually found in combination with a noun, e.g. 'sons of Belial' (Deut. 13. 13, 1 Sam. 2. 12, 10. 27, 25. 17, 2 Chr. 13. 7, &c.). In 2 Cor. 6. 15, the only NT ref. (where the best MSS. read Βελίαρ not Βελίαλ), St. Paul uses the word of Satan. In J. *Milton it is the name of the fallen angel who represents impurity (Paradise Lost, 1. 490–505, Paradise Regained, 2. 150).

BELL, GEORGE KENNEDY ALLEN (1881–1958), Bp. of *Chichester. The son of a clergyman, Bell was educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford. He was ordained deacon in 1907, priest in 1908. After a curacy at Leeds and a brief period as tutor and lecturer at Christ Church (1910–14), he became secretary to Abp. *Davidson. In 1920 he acted as assistant secretary to the *Lambeth Conference. During the period when he was Dean of *Canterbury (1924–9), various reforms were introduced, incl. the abolition of visitors' fees and the establishment of the *Friends of the Cathedral. In 1928 he arranged for the production of John Masefield's The Coming of Christ, the first dramatic performance in an English cathedral in modern times. As Bp. of Chichester from 1929 to 1958 he pursued a forward-looking policy, but it was in the field of ecumenical and international affairs that his chief contribution lay.

His interest in the *Ecumenical Movement dated from 1919, when he went as part of the British delegation to the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches in Holland. He became one of the leaders of the *Life and Work movement and played a prominent part at the first conference at *Stockholm in 1925. He was chairman of the Council from 1932 to 1934 and of the administrative committee from 1934 to 1938. He supported the *Confessing Church in its struggle against the Nazi government. His outspoken condemnation of indiscriminate Allied bombing of German towns during the Second World War was prob. a major factor in preventing his succession to William *Temple as Abp. of Canterbury in 1944. His contacts with German and other Churches after the war facilitated the first meeting of the *World Council of Churches in 1948. He was chairman of its central committee from 1948 to 1954 and then honorary president until his death. He was also a staunch supporter of the Church of *South India and acted as joint-chairman of the *Anglican-Methodist Conversations which began in 1956. He edited several volumes of Documents on Christian Unity (1924–58) and wrote other works on the subject. His life of Randall Davidson (2 vols., 1935) is a notable contribution to contemporary English Church history. He resigned from the see of Chichester in Jan. 1958 and died later in the same year.

R. C. D. Jasper, George Bell, Bishop of Chichester (1967). Id. in D.N.B., 1951–60, pp. 80–2.

BELLARMINE, St. ROBERT (1542–1621), theologian and controversialist. Roberto Francesco Romolo Bellarmino was born at Monte Pulciano in Tuscany. In 1560 he entered the *Jesuit Order and was ordained priest in 1570. As professor of theology at Louvain (1570), where he came into contact with non-Roman thought, he soon gained a reputation for learning and eloquence; but, partly owing to the cold climate of the north, he moved to Rome in 1576 where he became professor of controversial theology at the newly founded 'Collegium Romanum'. He was made a cardinal in 1599 and from 1602 to 1605 was Abp. of Capua. His later years were spent in the composition of works of spirituality.

His life was largely devoted to scholarship and controversy. He proved himself a vigorous and successful opponent of the Protestants, whom he sought to vanquish by reason and argument rather than by dogmatic assertion and abuse; and *James I of England engaged in controversy with him. His chief work was the Disputationes de Controversiis Christianae Fidei adversus hujus temporis Haereticos (3 vols., Ingolstadt, 1586–93), a systematic and clear apologia for the RC position. He also took a prominent part in the production of the revised edition of the *Vulgate, known as the Sixto-Clementine, in 1592. As regards the Papacy, he supported *Paul V in his struggle against *Venice and wrote a book against that of W. Barclay of Aberdeen (c. 1547 – 1608) denying the temporal authority of the Pope; but Bellarmine held that the Pope had only an indirect, not a direct, power in temporal matters, a view which had previously brought him into disgrace with *Sixtus V. Finally his sympathetic interest in G. *Galileo reflects his reasonableness. He was undoubtedly one of the greatest and most saintly figures in the RC Church in the latter years of the *Counter-Reformation.

He became entitled to the appellation of 'Venerable' in 1627, but further recognition was long delayed, despite frequent attempts to secure it, owing to his minimizing view of Papal authority. He was eventually canonized in 1930 and declared to be a *Doctor of the Church in 1931. Feast day, 17 Sept. (formerly 13 May).

Collected ed. of his works publd. in 7 vols., Cologne, 1617–1621, vol. vii being ed. by S. Rychius; modern edd., 12 vols., Paris, 1870–4, and 8 vols., Naples, 1872; suppl. to his works ed. X. M. Le Bachelet, S.J., Auctarium Bellarminianum (Paris, 1913); Opera Oratoria Postuma, adiunctis Documentis Variis ad Gubernium Animarum Spectantibus, ed. S. Tromp, S.J. (10 vols., Rome, 1942 ff. [9 vols. to 1950]). G. Galeota, S.J., Bellarmino contro Baio a Lovanio. Studio e Testo di un inedito Bellarminiano (Aloisiana. Scritti Pubblicati sotto la Direzione della Pontificia Facoltà Teologica Napoletana 'S. Luigi', v; Rome, 1966). His autobiography, written in 1613, was pr. at the time of his attempted beatification, Rome, 1676; repr. Louvain, 1753. The primary authorities for his life are the biographies of J. Fuligatti, S.J. (Rome, 1624), D. Bartoli, S.J. (ib., 1678), and N. Frizon, S.J. (Nancy, 1708). X. M. Le Bachelet, S.J., Bellarmin avant son cardinalat, 1524–1598 (1911), with important docc.; id., Bellarmin et la bible sixto-clémentine (1911), also with docc. J. Brodrick, S.J., The Life and Works of Blessed Robert Cardinal Bellarmine (2 vols., 1928); id., Robert Bellarmine, Saint and Scholar (1961). Other modern lives by J. P. Couderc, S.J. (2 vols., Paris, 1893), and A. M. Fiocchi (Isola del Liro, 1930). F. X. Arnold, Die Staatslehre des Kardinals Bellarmin. Eine Beitrag zur Rechts- und Staatsphilosophie des konfessionellen Zeitalters (Munich, 1934). E. A. Ryan, S.J., The Historical Scholarship of Saint Bellarmine (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux publiés par les Membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, 2e Sér., xxxv; 1936); A. Bernier, S.J., Un Cardinal humaniste. Saint Robert Bellarmin . . . et la musique liturgique (Montreal and Paris, 1939). Sommervogel, i (1890), cols. 1151–1254. R. Dudon, S.J., in D.H.G.E., vii (1934), cols. 798–824, s.v. 'Bellarmin'.

BELLOC, JOSEPH HILAIRE PIERRE (1870–1953), RC historical writer and critic. Half French, he was born at St.-Cloud (nr. Versailles), educated at the *Oratory School in Birmingham under *Newman, served for a year with the French artillery, and then entered Balliol College, Oxford (1892). In 1906 he was elected Liberal M.P. for South Salford, but his fervent individualism and fear of state dominance made him critical of his party's alliance with the Socialists and he did not stand for the Second Election of 1910. He then joined G. K. *Chesterton and his brother, Cecil Chesterton, in a series of political broadsides popularly known as the 'Chesterbellocs'; and for the rest of his life he was a well-known figure in journalism, expounding Catholic economic liberalism and upholding the traditional values of European civilization as the true inheritance of the medieval system. On this general topic his chief work was Europe and the Faith (1912). He was the author of many historical writings which commanded attention by their brilliant and provocative style, though they were seldom contributions to serious knowledge. They include The French Revolution (1924), a History of England (1925–7), and lives of *Joan of Arc (1929), *Richelieu (1930), *Wolsey (1930), Napoleon (1932), *Charles I (1933), *Cromwell (1934), and *Milton (1935). He also wrote the popular travel-book, The Path to Rome (1902), some volumes of light essays, and some successful light and satirical verse.

D. Woodruff (ed.), For Hilaire Belloc. Essays in Honour of his 72nd Birthday (1942), incl. an essay by D. Jerrold, 'On the Influence of Hilaire Belloc', pp. 9–17. Life by R. Speaight (London, 1957), with bibl. Other studies by P. Braybrooke (London, 1924), [J.] R. Hamilton (ibid., 1945), F. Wilhelmsen (ibid., 1954), J. B. Morton (ibid., 1955), and Eleanor and Reginald Jebb (ibid., 1956).

BELLS. The tradition that *Paulinus, Bp. of Nola in Campania, was the first to introduce the bell into Christian worship (c. 420) rests on slender evidence, but it has given us two Latin words for a bell, campana and nola, unless (as is more likely) the story was invented to account for the words. St. *Gregory of Tours is the first Christian writer who mentions them frequently (c. 585). They were much used in Ireland from the 6th cent., and the famous bell of St. *Patrick survives in Dublin. Bells were used in Scotland from the 6th, and in England from the 7th cent.; and they came into general use in the Church in the 8th cent. About the 9th cent. *Crowland Abbey seems to have had a peal of bells, one of the earliest in this country, and St. *Dunstan (924–88) is known to have given bells to churches in the W. of England. From the 8th cent., bells have been blessed by a bishop with *holy water and *chrism (a ceremony popularly called the 'baptism of bells'). For centuries it has been customary to ring bells to summon the people to church and on other occasions, e.g. to announce the passing of a parishioner (the 'passing bell') or his death (still ordered in the 1604 Canons of the C of E, can. 67), or for the ringing of the '*Angelus' or the '*De profundis'. From medieval times to the present day it has been customary for bells to bear inscriptions, sometimes in the form of a hexameter line, such as Stella Maria maris succurre piissima nobis. In size they vary very widely from the quite small treble to the large tenor. Thus the Great Bell of St. Paul's Cathedral (1716) weighs 17½ tons, and the bell in the Cathedral of Cologne, made out of French cannon, nearly 27 tons. Small bells are sometimes used at the altar and rung at the Eucharist at the *Elevation and the *Communion.

T. North, English Bells and Bell Lore (1888); G. S. Tyack, A Book about Bells [1898]. J. J. Raven, The Bells of England (The Antiquary's Books, 1906); H. B. Walters, The Church Bells of England (1913), with bibl. of English and foreign books, pp. ix–xx. J. R. Nichols, Bells Thro' the Ages. The Founders' Craft and the Ringers' Art (1928). E. Morris, The History and Art of Change Ringing (1931); id., Bells of All Nations (1951); id., Towers and Bells of Britain (1955). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 1954–77, s.v. 'Cloche, clochette'.

BELL-TOWER. See Campanile.

BEMA (Gk. βῆμα, 'platform'). Acc. to E. usage, the space raised above the level of the *nave of a church which is shut off by the *iconostasis and contains the *altar, i.e. the counterpart of the *sanctuary in the W. The word is also used, less correcly, for the altar itself.

BENEDICAMUS DOMINO (Lat. 'Let us bless the Lord'). In the Roman rite a formula used from the 11th cent. until modern times to mark the end of the choir *office and in some circumstances also the end of Mass. It is now used only at the conclusion of the *Office of Readings and the mid-day office. The response is 'Deo gratias' ('Thanks be to God').

The formula is first found in Gallican sources. Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 538–40; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 435–7.

BENEDICITE (Lat., 'Bless ye [the Lord]'). The canticle or song of praise put into the mouths of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, as they stood in the 'fiery furnace' before King Nebuchadnezzar. It forms part (vv. 35–66) of the '*Song of the Three Holy Children', which is added in the *Septuagint to the Hebrew *Daniel. It has been used in Christian liturgical worship from early times. *Rufinus, writing c. 406, says that it was sung by Christians throughout the world, and the Fourth Council of Toledo (633) decreed that it should be said before the *Epistle at every Mass in Spain and Gaul. It is used at *Lauds on some Sundays and festivals in the RC Church. In the BCP it is an alternative to the *Te Deum at *mattins, the 1549 Book having expressly ordered the use of this alternative in *Lent.

F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (1910), cols. 660–4. See also works cited under Song of the Three Children.

BENEDICT, St. (c. 480 – c. 550), of Nursia, the 'Patriarch of Western monasticism'. Little is known of his life. Born at Nursia, he was educated at Rome, where the licentiousness of contemporary society led him to withdraw from the world and retire c. 500 to a cave at Subiaco. Here he lived as a hermit for some years. A community gradually grew up round him and he established twelve monasteries of twelve monks each, with abbots appointed by himself. Local jealousy prompted him to leave Subiaco, and, c. 525, he moved with a small band of monks to *Monte Cassino, where he remained till his death. It was here that he elaborated his plans for the reform of monasticism and composed his Rule (see foll. entry). He does not appear to have been ordained or to have contemplated founding an order. He was buried at Monte Cassino in the same grave as his sister, St. *Scholastica. Feast day, in W., 11 July (formerly 21 Mar.); in E., 14 Mar.

Practically the sole source for his life is the Dialogues of St. *Gregory (J. P. Migne, PL, lxxvii, 149–430). B. Sauter, O.S.B., Der heilige Vater Benediktus, nach St. Gregor dem Grossen (1904), with text pp. 237–82. L. Tosti, O.S.B., Della vita di San Benedetto (1892; Eng. tr., 1896). I. Herwegen, O.S.B., Der heilige Benedikt (1917; ed. 4 by E. von Severus, O.S.B., Düsseldorf, 1951; Eng. tr., 1924); P. Renaudin, O.S.B., Saint Benoît dans l'histoire [1924]. J. *Chapman, O.S.B., Saint Benedict and the Sixth Century (1929); F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., Saint Benoît (1933; Eng. tr., 1934); J. McCann, O.S.B., Saint Benedict (1937); I. Schuster, O.S.B., La Storia di San Benedetto e dei suoi Tempi (Milan, 1943; Eng. tr., St. Louis, Mo., 1951; London, 1953). R. Molitor, O.S.B. (ed.), Vir Dei Benedictus. Eine Festgabe zum 1400. Todestag des heiligen Benedikt, dargeboten von Mönchen der Beuroner Kongregation (Münster, 1947); H. S. Brechter, O.S.B. (ed.), Benedictus der Vater des Abendlandes 547–1947. Weihegabe der Erzabtei St. Ottilien zum vierzehnhundertsten Todesjahr (Munich, [1947]). T. Leccisotti and others, Il Spolcro di S. Benedetto (Miscellanea Cassinese, xxvii; Montecassino, 1951).

BENEDICT, Oblates Regular of St. See Oblates Regular of St. Benedict.

BENEDICT, Rule of St. The monastic Rule drawn up by St. *Benedict of Nursia c. 540 for his monks, mostly laymen, of *Monte Cassino. Drawing freely from the earlier Rules of '*Basil' (i.e. *Rufinus' fusion of Basil's two regulae) and John *Cassian, as well as from the Fathers of the Desert, *Augustine, and Caesarius of Arles (see also Regula Magistri), St. Benedict created a taut, inclusive, and individual directory of the spiritual as well as of the administrative life of a monastery. The Rule is marked by prudence and humanity, and leads by observance and obedience to the perfect following of Christ. It is safeguarded and applied by a patriarchal *abbot, chosen by his monks, with full authority, who is directed to take counsel and to care for the individual. The vow requires stability of residence, obedience, and monastic zeal. The chief task and central act of the community is the Divine Office (opus Dei) which with private prayer, spiritual reading and work fills the day. All possessions are held in common; the regime is austere but not exacting. Alone among Rules, this provides both principles and an outline of the monastic way of life.

There is an immense literature. Crit. edd. of the Rule include those of [E.] C. Butler, O.S.B. (Freiburg i.Br., 1912; ed. 3, 1935, with full bibl.), and, with Fr. tr. and comm., J. Neufville, O.S.B.–A. de Voguë, O.S.B. (S.C., clxxxi–clxxxvi; 1971–2). R. Hanslik (C.S.E.L., lxxv; 1960). Facsimile of text in Bodleian MS. Hatton 48 (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, xv; Copenhagen, 1968), with introd. by D. H. Farmer, pp. 11–29. Text and Eng. tr. by J. McCann, O.S.B. (London, 1952). On the textual history, L. Traube, 'Die Textgeschichte der Regula S. Benedicti' in Abh. (Bayr.), xxi [Hist. Kl.] (1898), pp. 559–731; ed. 2 by H. Plenkers, ib., xxv, Abh. 2 (1910); P. Meyvaert, O.S.B., 'Problems concerning the "Autograph" manuscript of Saint Benedict's Rule' in R. Bén., lxix (1959), pp. 3–21. Commentaries by P. Delatte, O.S.B. (Paris, 1913; Eng. tr., 1921), G. Herwegen, O.S.B. (Einsiedeln, 1944), and B. Steidle, O.S.B. (Beuron, 1952). Full bibl. in A. M. Albareda, O.S.B., Bibliografía de la regla benedictina (Montserrat, 1933; pp. xviii+661, 902 items). See also works cited s.v. Regula Magistri.

BENEDICT OF ANIANE, St. (c. 750 – 821), abbot. After serving under *Pepin and his son, *Charlemagne, he became a monk at St.-Seine, near Dijon, in 773. In 779 he founded on his own property at Aniane in Languedoc a monastery which became the centre of an extended reform of all the French monastic houses. His systematization of the *Benedictine Rule received official approval as the 'Capitulare Monasticum' at the Synod of Aachen of 817. He also made a collection of all known monastic Rules (Codex Regularum monasticarum et canonicarum). Some scholars have recently suggested that he was the author of the *Hucusque (q.v.). From c. 795 he took a vigorous part in opposing the teaching of the *Adoptianist, *Felix of Urgel. His personal life was one of severe asceticism. Feast day, 11 Feb.

His writings are in J. P. Migne, PL, ciii, 393–1440, with life by his disciple and friend, Ardo, repr. from the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti*, ib., cols. 335–84; crit. ed. of the life by G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 198–220. Relevant decrees of the Synod of Aachen, incl. text of 'Capitulare Monasticum', ed. J. Semmler in K. Hallinger, O.S.B. (ed.), Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, i (Siegburg, 1963), pp. 451–81; so-called 'Regula Sancti Benedicti Abbatis Benedicti Anianensis', ib., pp. 501–36, and 'Modus Penitentiarum', ib., pp. 563–82. P. J. Nicolai, Der heil. Benedict, Gründer von Aniane und Cornelimünster (1865). J. Narberhaus, Benedikt von Aniane (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xvi; 1930), with bibl. W. Williams, 'St. Benedict of Aniane' in The Downside Review, liv (1936), pp. 357–74. Suzanne Dulcy, La Règle de Saint Benoît d'Aniane et la réforme monastique à l'époque carolingienne (Montpellier thesis; Nîmes, 1935). J. Winandy, O.S.B., 'L'Œuvre monastique de Saint Benoît d'Aniane' in Mélanges bénédictins publiés à l'occasion du XIVe Centenaire de la Mort de Saint Benoît par les Moines de l'Abbaye de Saint Jérôme de Rome (Wandrille, 1947), pp. 235–58; P. Schmitz, O.S.B., 'L'Influence de Saint Benoît d'Aniane dans l'histoire de l'Ordre de Saint-Benoît' in Il monachesimo nell'alto medioevo e la formazione della civiltà occidentale (Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, iv; 1957), pp. 401–15. Id. in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 177–88, s.v. 'Benoît d'Aniane', with bibl. J. Semmler in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 179 f., s.v. Benedikt v. Aniane', with detailed bibl.

BENEDICT BISCOP, St. (c. 628 – 689 or 690), *Benedictine monk. Of noble Northumbrian birth, he spent his youth at the court of King Oswy. After two journeys to *Rome (the first, 653, with St. *Wilfrid), in 666 he became a monk of *Lérins. In 669 he accompanied Abp. *Theodore to *Canterbury, where he became Abbot of the monastery of St. Peter and St. Paul (later St. *Augustine's). In 674 he founded the monastery of St. Peter at *Wearmouth and in 682 that of St. Paul at Jarrow. An enthusiast for learning and art, Benedict brought back from his journeys to Rome (five in all) many paintings, relics and MSS. He also secured the services of John, the archcantor of St. Peter's, Rome, to teach in England the Roman chant. He is further reputed to have introduced into England the use of glass windows and churches built in stone. He was an enthusiastic advocate of Roman liturgical practice. His Life was written by *Bede, who was entrusted to Benedict's care at the age of seven. Feast day, 12 Jan. He is the patron of the English Benedictines.

Bede, H.E., iv. 18 and v. 19, and Historia Abbatum, i; *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, iv. 186, ed. by N. E. S. A. Hamilton (R.S., 1870), pp. 327–9. T. Allison, 'Benedict Biscop' in C.Q.R., cvii (1928), pp. 57–79. Eleanor S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (New York, 1948), pp. 217–24, 230–38.

BENEDICT JOSEPH LABRE, St. See Labre, St. Benedict Joseph.

BENEDICT XII (d. 1342), Pope from 1334. Jacques Fournier was the third of the *Avignon Popes. Of humble origin, he entered as a youth the *Cistercian abbey of Boulbonne and was later transferred to Fontfroide. Having studied at *Paris and become Master of Theology, he was installed Abbot of Fontfroide in 1311, appointed Bp. of Pamiers in 1317, and translated to Mirepoix in 1326. Created cardinal in 1327, he took part in the dogmatic controversies of the time, esp. on the questions of the poverty of Christ and on the *Beatific Vision. After being elected Pope in 1334, he at once inaugurated several ecclesiastical reforms. Himself entirely free from nepotism, he fought esp. the rapacity of the clergy, many of whom he sent back from Avignon to their dioceses without conferring benefices on them. He forbade the holding of benefices *in commendam except in the case of cardinals and was a zealous reformer of the religious orders. He also ordered the establishment of houses of studies in every country and improved the training of novices, many of his measures being later adopted by the Council of *Trent. In the political field, where he tended to commit himself to the policy of Philip VI of France, he was less successful. French influence led his conciliatory attitude towards Louis of Bavaria to fail, and hence to the declaration of the Electors assembled at Rense to the effect that the Emperor holds his rights not through confirmation by the Pope but through the fact of his election. Louis himself, though allying himself with France in 1341, finally wrecked all hopes of better relations between Pope and Emperor by ignoring the Pope's remonstrations and giving his son, Louis of Brandenburg, in marriage to Margaret Maultasch, who had separated from her husband without ecclesiastical dispensation. Through the war between England and France Benedict's plan for a Crusade came to nothing, and his contemplated return to Rome was frustrated by the opposition of Philip VI and the unrest in Italy, though after 1339 *Verona, *Bologna, and *Milan returned to the Papal allegiance. He also began the building of the famous palace of the Popes at Avignon. Benedict XII was a competent theologian, though his works have remained unpublished. His chief doctrinal pronouncement is the constitution 'Benedictus Deus' (1336) in which he defined the Catholic doctrine that the souls of the just who have no faults to expiate enjoy the Beatific Vision immediately after death.

M. Vidal (ed.), Lettres communes des papes d'Avignon. Benoît XII, 1334–1342 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. III, No. 9; 3 parts, 1899–1920); G. Daumet (ed.), Benoît XII, 1334–1342. Lettres closes, patentes et curiales se rapportant à la France (ib., No. 2; 3 vols., 1902–11). A. L. Tautu (ed.), Acta . . . e regestis Vaticanis allisque fontibus (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis. Fontes, Series III, vol. viii, 1958). J. Duvernoy (ed.), Le Registre d'Inquisition de Jacques Fournier, évêque de Pamiers (1318–1325) (Bibliothèque Méridionale, 2e Série, xli; 3 vols., Toulouse, 1965). He also wrote a Commentary on Mt., part of which was publd. by G. Lazarus (Venice, 1603) under the name of 'Benedict XI'. S. *Baluse, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. G. Mollat, i, 1914, pp. 195–240 and 576–80). C. Jacob, Studien über Papst Benedikt XII (1910). J. B. Mahn, Le Pape Benoît XII et les Cisterciens (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, ccxcv; 1950); B. Guillemain, La Politique Bénéficiale du Pape Benoît XII (ibid., ccxcix; 1952); C. Schmitt, O.S.B., Un Pape réformateur et un défenseur de l'unité de l'Église. Benoît XII et l'Ordre des Frères Mineurs (Florence, 1959). J. M. Vidal, 'Notice sur les œuvres du Pape Benoît XII' in R.H.E., vi (1905), pp. 557–65 and 785–810. H. Otto, 'Benedikt XII als Reformator des Kirchenstaates' in R.Q., xxxvi (1928), pp. 59–110. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912), esp. Book i, ch. 4, and Book ii, ch. 1, pt. iv (ed. 9, 1949, pp. 68–83 and 192–204; Eng. tr., 1963, pp. 26–36 and 110–19). Pastor, i (1891), pp. 83–5; X. Le Bachelet, S.J., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 653–704, s.v. 'Benoît XII'; L. Jadin in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 116–35, s.v. 'Benoît XII'.

BENEDICT XIII (d. 1423), *Antipope at *Avignon from 1394 to 1417. Pedro de Luna was a doctor of Canon Law of great learning and austerity of life. Created *cardinal in 1375 by *Gregory XI, he took part in the election of Gregory's successor, *Urban VI, but later became a partisan of his Antipope, Clement VII. After Clement's death (1394) he himself was elected Antipope, largely because he promised to put an end to the schism, even if it meant abdicating. After his enthronement, however, he refused to resign, and even sustained a long siege and subsequent imprisonment in the Papal castle of Avignon in defence of his dignity. Personal negotiations with the Roman Pope, Boniface IX, and his successors Innocent VII and Gregory XII were equally unsuccessful. The Council of *Pisa, against which he had called a synod at Perpignan, deposed him in 1409, and the Council of *Constance confirmed his deposition in 1417. After this even his last adherents (Scotland, Aragon, Castile, and Sicily) left him. He shut himself up in his castle at Peñiscola near Valencia, where he still claimed to be the rightful Pope until his death. As RC historians deny his rightful place in the Papal succession, the title of 'Benedict XIII' is attached to P. F. Orsini (d. 1730; see foll. entry).

Martin de Alpartil, Chronica Actitatorum Temporibus Domini Benedicti XIII, ed. F. Ehrle, S.J. (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, xii; 1906). S. Puig y Puig, Episcopologio barcinonese. Pedro de Luna, último papa de Aviñon, 1387–1430 (Barcelona, 1920). G. Pillement, Pedro de Luna, dernier pape d'Avignon (1955). A. Glasfurd, The Antipope (Peter de Luna, 1342–1423). A Study in Obstinacy (1965), with bibl. F. Ehrle, S.J., 'Aus den Akten des Afterkonzils von Perpignan 1408' in Archiv für Literatur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, v (1889), pp. 387–492, and vii (1900), pp. 576–696; id., 'Neue Materialien zur Geschichte Peters von Luna (Benedikt XIII)', ib., vi (1892), pp. 138–308, and vii (1900), pp. 1–306; id., 'Die kirchenrechtlichen Schriften Peters von Luna (Benedikt XIII)', ib., vii (1900), pp. 515–75. G. Mollat, 'Épisodes du siège du palais des papes au temps de Benoît XIII (1398–1399)' in R.H.E., xxiii (1927), pp. 489–501. J. A. Rubio, La política de Benedicto XIII desde la substracción de Aragón a su obediencia hasta su destitución en el concilio de Constanza, enero de 1416 a julio de 1417 (Freiburg i.Br. diss. 1926). N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme d'occident (4 vols., 1898–1902), passim. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 165–201 passim. É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 2020–9, s.v. 'Pierre de Luna'; F. Baix–L. Jadin in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 135–63, s.v. 'Benoît XIII', with bibl.

BENEDICT XIII (1649–1730), Pope from 1724. Pietro Francesco Orsini, who entered the *Dominican Order in 1667, became a cardinal in 1672 and Abp. of Benevento in 1686. As Pope, he presided at the provincial Lateran Council of 1725, which sought to reform clerical morals; but though well-intentioned and scholarly, he was of weak character, and his policy was determined by his unscrupulous favourite, Cardinal Coscia. In 1725 he confirmed the bull '*Unigenitus', though he suffered the *Dominicans to preach a doctrine of *grace verging on that of the *Jansenists.

Quétif–Échard, ii (1721), pp. 814–17. G. B. Pittoni, Vita del sommo pontifice Benedetto Decimoterzo (Venice, 1730); A. Borgia, Benedicti XIII, Romani Pontificis Vita Commentario Excerpta (Rome, 1741). Pastor, xxiv (1941), pp. 98–299. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 704 f., s.v., with bibl.; J. Carreyre in D.H.G.E., vii (1935), col. 163 f.; C. Castiglioni in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1279–81, s.v. 'Benedetto XIII'.

BENEDICT XIV (1675–1758), Pope from 1740. A native of *Bologna, Prospero Lorenzo Lambertini was educated at Rome at the Collegium Clementinum. He became Consistorial Advocate in 1701, *Promotor Fidei in 1708, and assessor of the Congregation of *Rites in 1712. In 1718 he was appointed secretary of the Congregation of the Council, in 1727 Bp. of Ancona, in 1728 cardinal, and in 1731 Abp. of Bologna. On the death of Clement XII (6 Feb. 1740), after a conclave lasting six months he was elected to the Papacy on 17 Aug.

Of wide sympathies, a clear sense of order and proportion, and a real interest in science and learning, Benedict did much to commend his office to the Aufklärung*. He was an exemplary administrator, conciliatory in his dealings with the secular powers, and esp. concerned to strengthen the moral influence of the Papacy; and his prudence and ability were respected in the courts of Europe, Protestant as well as Catholic. His De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et Beatorum Canonizatione (1734–8; often reprinted), which grew out of his practical experience as 'Promotor Fidei', has remained the classic treatise on the subject. Book I contains extensive material on the history of *beatification and *canonization; Books II and III treat of the successive stages in the process, including the testimonies, virtuous life and special graces (gratis datae) to be sought in the candidate; and Book IV deals with the requisite miracles (pt. i) and with various liturgical questions (Office and Mass of the Saint, insertion in the *Roman Martyrology, and adoption as Patron; pt. ii). Benedict also compiled an extensive work of hardly less authority on Diocesan *Synods (De Synodo Diœcesana, Rome, 1748; often reprinted). His own Bulls, collected in Bullarium Benedicti XIV (1768), frequently embodied scientific disquisitions. His other writings included an elaborate treatise on the Sacrifice of the Mass (De Sacrosancto Missae Sacrificio, 1748) and further works on canon law; and in 1752 he issued a standard edition of the Caeremoniale Episcoporum* (q.v.). His Bulls dealt, inter alia, with the suppression of pagan practices admitted into Christianity, notably by the *Jesuits in *China ('Ex quo singulari', 1742) and *Malabar ('Omnium sollicitudinum', 1744); *usury ('Vix pervenit', 1745); *mixed marriages ('Magnae nobis admirationis', 1748); and *Jansenism ('Ex omnibus christiani orbis', 1756). To encourage historical studies, Benedict also founded a number of academies at Rome. He was buried in St. Peter's, Rome, where he is commemorated by a striking monument by Pietro Bracci.

Opera*, ed. E. de Azevedo, S.J. (12 vols., Rome, 1747–8), and, with Bullarium, ed. J. Silvester (17 vols., Prato, 1839–1849); Opera Omnia Inedita, ed. F. Heiner (Freiburg i.Br., 1904); Correspondance, ed. E. Heeckeren (2 vols., Paris, 1912). Lettere . . . al Card. de Tencin, ed. E. Morelli (Rome, 1955 ff.). Modern Eng. tr. of extracts of his De Synodo Diœcesana (London, 1926). Life by [L. A. de] Caraccioli (Paris, 1783). A. M. Beltanini, Benedetto XIV e la repubblica di Venezia (Milan, 1931). E. Morelli, Tre Profili (1955), pp. 1–45. Pastor, xxxv ('1949' [1950]) and xxxvi (1950), pp. 1–142, with bibl. to date. R. Naz in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 752–61, s.v. 'Benoît XIV'; J. Carreyre, P.S.S., in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 164–7, s.v. 'Benoît XIV'; L. Oliger, O.F.M., in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1281–5, s.v. 'Benedetto XIV'.

BENEDICT XV (1854–1922), Pope from 1914. Giacomo P. G. B. della Chiesa was born at Pegli in the diocese of Genoa, and studied at Genoa and at the *Gregorian University, Rome. From 1883 to 1887 he was in Spain as secretary to Cardinal Rampolla, then Papal Nuncio at Madrid; and when the latter was recalled in 1887, della Chiesa returned to Rome with him, and remained there until appointed Abp. of *Bologna in 1907. On the death of *Pius X shortly after the outbreak of the war of 1914–18 he was elected to succeed him. While endeavouring to preserve the neutrality of the Holy See, he protested against inhuman methods of warfare and made several strenuous efforts to bring about peace. During his pontificate, a British representative was accredited to the Papal court for the first time since the 17th cent.

Official acts of his pontificate in A.A.S., vi (1914), p. 473–xiv (1922), p. 92 (incl. the accounts of his election and funeral). Among the many lives of the Pope the fullest studies in English are those by H. E. G. Rope (London, 1941) and W. H. Peters (Milwaukee [1959]). E. de Moreau, S.J., in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 167–72, s.v. 'Benoît XV', with good bibl.; G. Dalla Torre in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1285–94, s.v. 'Benedetto XV', with further bibl.

BENEDICTINE ORDER. St. *Benedict of Nursia founded no order. His Rule, which in general reflected contemporary practice, made its way gradually, and for almost two centuries was merely one of several rules from which an abbot chose what observance he wished. There is no evidence that the Rule was followed in Rome before the 10th cent., or that *Gregory the Great followed it, or that St. *Augustine brought it to England, though the oldest extant MS. of the Rule (Oxford, Bodleian Hatton 48) is English, prob. written at Worcester c. 690. In Gaul and to a lesser extent in England the more austere rule of St. *Columbanus was gradually superseded; by the time of *Charlemagne (c. 780) the Rule of St. Benedict was ubiquitous. It was brought to N. England by St. *Wilfrid c. 690 and was familiar to *Bede. When Winfrid (St. *Boniface) set out early in the 8th cent. to evangelize Germany, he proceeded to establish there the Benedictine ideal. The consecration of Boniface as Abp. of Mainz (743), his foundation of *Fulda (744), and his crowning of Pepin (751) were variously significant of his achievement. His mission was one of ecclesiastical reform, and was undertaken partly by a reconstruction, on Benedictine lines, of Continental monasticism, and partly by the exaltation of the reformed regular clergy at the expense of the corrupt seculars. Until this time the Rule of St. Benedict was the only visible link between the multitude of wholly autonomous abbeys; but *Benedict of Aniane pursued an ideal of closer uniformity and, with the approval of the Emp. *Louis, imposed upon the monks and nuns of the empire as a whole his 'Capitulare Monasticum' (817), tending to reform Benedictine life in the direction of greater austerity.

Henceforward, successive temporary relaxations of Benedictine discipline were invariably countered by attempts at collective reform. Such was the method of *Cluny (10th cent.), all later Cluniac houses depending upon the central policy and control of the abbots of Cluny. One consequence of this tendency was the formation of separate orders, in which the twin principles of austerity and centralization were carried further than the primitive Rule of Benedict admitted. A number of such orders appeared in the 11th cent., notably the *Camaldolese, the *Carthusian, and (chiefly through the personal influence of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux) the *Cistercian. Popes and Councils throughout the Middle Ages attempted to bring the Benedictines under one centralized constitution, on the lines of the newer orders, the fourth *Lateran Council (1215) and the bull 'Benedictina' (1336) being important moments in this development. The Benedictines themselves preferred to found local congregations as instruments of reform. The abbeys of such congregations (e.g. that of Saint Justina in Italy, founded 1412; the Bursfeld Union in Germany, founded 1446; and later the *Maurists in France) sacrificed some degree of autonomy, but the congregations themselves remained independent of any wider organization. The *Reformation put an end to monastic life in N. Europe and the British Isles, and two centuries later the ecclesiastical policy of such rulers as *Joseph II, and the French Revolution, resulted in the suppression of all but a score or so of the Benedictine foundations; but since 1830 there has been a remarkable revival of the Rule in Europe and America. Today the English Congregation alone includes over 500 choir monks, and a number of houses of other Congregations, founded in England in recent times, also continue to flourish, while modified forms of the Rule have been adopted by monks outside the Roman communion. Apart from the spiritual function of the Rule of Benedict, representing throughout the W. the norm of monastic piety, the Black Monks have rendered invaluable services to civilization, not only in preparing the social organization of the Middle Ages during the chaos of barbarian rule after the fall of the Roman Empire, but also in preserving (for instance, through the 18th cent. in France) the ideals and practice of true scholarship, and in maintaining or restoring the use of good art in the liturgical worship ('opus Dei') to which they are esp. devoted. Benedictine abbeys today are autonomous, but are grouped in Congregations, the whole forming a Confederation.

The Benedictine nuns, established by St. Benedict himself and his sister St. *Scholastica, live acc. to the same Rule. In the Middle Ages they were strictly enclosed; but in modern times the Benedictine Rule has also become the foundation of many convents whose sisters are not enclosed and devote themselves to all kinds of charitable and educational work, as well as of enclosed orders. Their habit is black, like that of the monks. Among their Saints are St. *Hildegard and St. *Gertrude, surnamed 'the Great'.

There is an immense literature. Good introductory accounts by P. Schmitz, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., vii (1934), cols. 1062–1234; S. Hilpisch, O.S.B., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), cols. 184–92, s.v. 'Benediktiner', and J. Leclercq, O.S.B., A. G. Biggs, and others in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 205–303; also [E.] C. Butler, O.S.B., Benedictine Monachism (1919; ed. 2, 1924). Standard sources are J. *Mabillon, O.S.B. (contd. by R. Massuet, O.S.B., T. *Ruinart, O.S.B., and E. *Martène, O.S.B.), Annales Ordinis S. Benedicti [480–1157] (6 vols., Paris, 1703–39), and id., Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti* (9 vols., Paris, 1668–1701). C. R. F. *Montalembert, Les Moines d'occident (7 vols., 1860–77; Eng. tr., 7 vols., 1861–79). Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens (Hftt. i–xxii, ed. I. Herwegen, O.S.B.; 1912–41; Hftt. xxiii ff., ed. S. Hilpisch, O.S.B.–E. v. Severus, O.S.B.; 1959 ff.). S. Hilpisch, O.S.B., Geschichte des Benediktinischen Mönchtums in ihren Grundzügen (Freiburg, 1929); id., Das Benediktinertum im Wandel der Zeiten (St. Ottilien, 1950). U. Berlière, O.S.B., Mélanges d'histoire bénédictine (4 vols., Maredsous, 1897–1902). P. Schmitz, O.S.B., Histoire de l'ordre de St. Benoit (7 vols., Maredsous, 1942–56). H. von Zeller, O.S.B., The Benedictine Idea (1959). K. Hallinger, O.S.B., 'Papst Gregor der Grosse und der hl. Benedikt' in Studia Anselmiana, xlii (1957), pp. 231–319. Heimbucher, i, pp. 154–314, and ii, pp. 650–5. On Benedictine life in England, W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (1655–73; new ed., 1817–30); [M.] David Knowles, O.S.B., The Monastic Order in England. A History of its Development from the Times of St. Dunstan to the Fourth Lateran Council, 943–1216 (Cambridge, 1940; ed. 2, 1963, with bibl.); id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., ib., 1948–59), passim; [M.] D. Knowles–R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses, England and Wales (1953; catalogue, with maps). [M.] D. Knowles and J. K. S. St Joseph, Monastic Sites from the Air (Cambridge Air Surveys, No. 1, 1952).

BENEDICTIO MENSAE. A liturgical form of grace developed in monastic circles from verses of the Psalms. Reference to it is found as early as *Cassian (Inst. coenob. 7. 12) and St. *Benedict (Regula 43). Today the grace consists of a verse which varies acc. to the feasts, short prayers, and a blessing. After meals the prayers are preceded by a psalm and concluded by intercessions for benefactors and the dead, and the *Paternoster.

BENEDICTION. See Blessing.

BENEDICTION WITH THE BLESSED SACRAMENT. For more than a thousand years of the Church's history it was not customary in the W. Church to show public devotion for the Reserved Sacrament. The Sacrament was reserved, usually in private, chiefly for Communion of the sick. From c. the 11th cent., however, began public manifestation of faith in and love of the sacramental presence of Christ in the Eucharist. It showed itself in the desire of the people to look at the Sacred Host when elevated during Mass; to have it exposed for veneration outside Mass, and carried in solemn procession. This function was normally brought to a close by blessing the congregation with the Sacred Host. This was in keeping with the practice of the Middle Ages of concluding popular devotions by blessing with a sacred object (e.g. a crucifix, a relic) those who took part in them. As a completely separate function Benediction with the Blessed Sacrament was not common until the 16th cent.

Nowadays Benediction has two forms: (1) the solemn, public form when the Host is exposed to view in a monstrance, placed on or above an altar, surrounded by lights and often by flowers; the Host is incensed and hymns are sung and prayers recited (especially directed to the Second Divine Person), sometimes followed or preceded by readings from Scripture and a homily. The ceremony is concluded by blessing the congregation with the Host. (2) The simple form, when the Host is not exposed to view in a monstrance but the ciborium containing the Hosts for Communion is shown at the open door of the tabernacle, and, after hymns, prayers, and readings, the people are blessed with the veiled ciborium. A similar blessing is given, silently, by the priest who bears Communion to the sick, when he returns to the church, if he still carries a Host in the pyx. This blessing is for those who may have accompanied him or who may be present in the church on his return.

In recent years under the influence of the liturgical movement Benediction has come to play a less prominent part in RC devotion, partly because of fears of the excesses to which it was thought to lead, and partly because an alternative form of service for the latter part of the day was provided by the introduction of *Evening Masses. It is unknown in the Orthodox Church, and in the C of E it is forbidden in some dioceses, allowed in modified form (as 'Adoration' or 'Devotions') in others, and in a few parts of the Anglican Communion tolerated or actively encouraged.

Series of articles by H. Thurston, S.J., in The Month, xcvii (1901), pp. 587–97, xcviii (1901), pp. 58–69, 186–93, 264–76, and cvi (1905), pp. 394–404. Id., 'Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament' in Report of the Nineteenth Eucharistic Congress, held at Westminster from 9th to 13th September 1908 (1909), pp. 452–64. A. Molien in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 382–94, s.v.

BENEDICTIONAL. In the W. Church the liturgical book containing the formulae of the bishop's blessings formerly pronounced at Mass, esp. in Spain, France, and England, before the 'Pax Domini'. The oldest extant copy appears to date from the 7th cent.

BENEDICTUS. The Song of Thanksgiving (Lk. 1. 68–79) uttered by *Zacharias at the birth of his son, St. *John Baptist. The hymn is addressed to God in thanksgiving for the fulfilment of the Messianic hopes, and to the child who is to be the Lord's forerunner. In the W. Church it is sung liturgically at *Lauds, whence it was taken over in the BCP, where it finds a place in Morning Prayer. The rubric orders it to be read after the Second Lesson 'except when [it] shall happen to be read in the chapter for the day, or for the Gospel on St. John Baptist's Day', and provides Psalm 100 as an alternative. In the E. Church it is prescribed to be sung daily at the morning office (*Orthros), but in practice it is usually omitted.

P. Vielhauer, 'Das Benedictus des Zacharias' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, xlix (1952), pp. 253–72. L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 956–62, s.v. See also comm. to Luke, Gospel of St., cited s.v.

BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT. The Latin form of Mt. 21. 9: 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord'. In most of the ancient liturgies, including the Roman *Mass, it is said or sung immediately after the *Sanctus. It was included, in a slightly altered form, in the BCP of 1549, but dropped in the 1552 revision. It is allowed in the ASB and other modern Anglican rites.

It is first found in Gaul, viz. *Caesarius of Arles, Serm. 73. 4. Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 170–3; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 136–8.

BENEFICE. A term originally used for a grant of land for life as a reward (beneficium) for services. Under *canon law it came to imply an ecclesiastical office which prescribed certain duties or conditions ('spiritualities') for the due discharge of which it awarded certain revenues ('temporalities'). Parochial benefices in the C of E are of three kinds: rectories, vicarages, and perpetual curacies. In each case the duties of the incumbent include observance of the promises made at *Ordination, the showing of proper respect for his office, and due solicitude for the moral and spiritual welfare of his parishioners. In the RC Church the Second *Vatican Council called for the abandonment or reform of the system of benefices.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. The exemption from trial by a secular court on being charged with felony which was accorded to the clergy in the Middle Ages. It was granted to all who were tonsured as well as to nuns. In later times benefit of clergy was allowed on a first conviction for certain offences to all who could read, on the ground that ability to read was the accepted test of a cleric. The privilege was finally abolished in England in 1827 by 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 28.

F. Pollock–F. W. Maitland, The History of English Law before the Time of Edward I, i (1895), pp. 424–40. L. C. Gabel, Benefit of Clergy in England in the Later Middle Ages (Smith College Studies in History, xiv, Nos. 1–4; Northampton, Mass., 1929). G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 53, s.v.

BENET, St. An older English form of the name of St. *Benedict.

BENGEL, JOHANNES ALBRECHT (1687–1752), *Lutheran NT scholar. He entered the Lutheran ministry in 1707, and in 1713 became professor at the seminary of Denkendorf. In 1741 he was made *General-superintendent at Herbrechtingen, and in 1749 at Alpirspach. He did some work on classical and patristic literature, but his chief importance is as a textual critic and expositor of the NT. His text and *critical apparatus (1734) mark the beginning of modern scientific work in that field. Hardly less celebrated was his penetrating and pithy exegesis of the NT, published in his Gnomon Novi Testamenti (1742). It was much used and admired by J. *Wesley, and remains a classic.

Correspondence ed. J. C. F. Burk (great-grandson; Stuttgart, 1836). Life, also by Burk (ib., 1831; Eng. tr., 1837). Later studies by O. Wächter (Berlin, 1865), F. Nolte (Gütersloh, 1913), R. B. Evenhuis (Wageningen, 1931), and E. Ludwig (Stuttgart, 1952). A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 597–601, s.v.

BENNETT, WILLIAM JAMES EARLY (1804–1886), Anglican *High Churchman. An upholder of *Tractarian principles, he became in 1840 priest-in-charge of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and in this capacity built St. Barnabas's, Pimlico (opened 1850), where he introduced what was then regarded as very advanced ceremonial. This provoked fierce opposition and mob rioting; and C. J. *Blomfield, Bp. of London, despite a certain sympathy with Bennett, became alarmed, and induced him to resign. He was instituted, however, to the vicarage of Frome Selwood, in Somerset, in 1852. In 1867 a public letter to E. B. *Pusey (A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England), in which he dealt with the *Real Presence in the *Eucharist, led to a series of legal actions which were significant as showing the inadequacy of the existing courts to deal with matters of doctrine. The legitimacy of his Eucharistic teaching, however, was allowed. He published many controversial and other writings.

Life by F. Bennett (London, 1909). W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), pp. 169–71.

BEN SIRA (i.e. 'the son of Sira'). Jesus ben Sira, the author of *Ecclesiasticus (q.v.). 'Sirach' is the Greek form, the termination 'ch' indicating that the word was indeclinable.

BENSON, EDWARD WHITE (1829–96), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham (where he made a lifelong friendship with his fellow-pupil, J. B. *Lightfoot), and Trinity College, Cambridge, he became at first an assistant master at Rugby (1852), and then Master of the newly founded school at Wellington (1859). In 1877 he went as its first bishop to *Truro, where his vigorous and forceful character was well suited to the needs of the new diocese. In 1883 he succeeded Abp. A. C. *Tait at Canterbury, where he was intensely zealous and active in the Church's interests, but intolerant of opposition and criticism. A strong Tory, he vigorously upheld the Establishment; yet he remained a friend of W. E. *Gladstone, to whom he owed his appointment, and it was while on a visit to him that he died in Hawarden church. To deal with the ritual charges brought against E. *King, Bp. of *Lincoln, he revived the 'court of the Abp. of Canterbury', which based its decisions on the rubrics of the BCP and traditional practice in the C of E (see also Lincoln Judgement). His great devotion to St. *Cyprian bore fruit in Cyprian, his Life, his Times, his Work (1897), published a few months after his death.

His Life (2 vols., London, 1899–1900) by his son, A. C. Benson. Id., The Trefoil. Wellington College, Lincoln, and Truro (1923). A. J. Mason in D.N.B., Supp., i (1901), pp. 171–9.

BENSON, RICHARD MEUX (1824–1915), founder of the *Society of St. John the Evangelist ('S.S.J.E.'). Educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was a Student from 1846 to 1915, he was ordained in 1848 and in 1850 appointed Vicar of Cowley, then a village, some two miles from *Oxford, where he lived a studious, devoted life. In 1859 he was on the point of going to India on missionary work when Bp. S. *Wilberforce induced him to remain to take charge of the new suburb developing at the Oxford end of his parish. A sermon preached by J. *Keble inspired him to found the S.S.J.E. in 1865. In 1890 he resigned his superiorship of the Society. His religious writings, mostly based on his sermons, reveal his penetrating originality and deeply spiritual mind.

'Letters' ed. G. Congreve, S.S.J.E.–W. H. Longridge, S.S.J.E. (Oxford, 1916); 'Further Letters' ed. by idd. (1920). M. V. Woodgate, Father Benson. Founder of the Cowley Fathers (1953). M. [L.] Smith, S.S.J.E. (ed.), Benson of Cowley (1980). S. L.Ollard in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 38 f.

BENSON, ROBERT HUGH (1871–1914), RC apologist. The youngest son of E. W. *Benson, Abp. of Canterbury, he was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1894 Benson was ordained, then served in the Eton mission at Hackney Wick and elsewhere, and in 1898 went to the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield, where he was professed in 1900. In 1903 he was received into the RC Church. After (re-)ordination in 1904, he devoted most of the remainder of his life to preaching and literary work, residing, from 1908, at Buntingford. His novels, remarkable for their vivid characterization and fervent creed, include The Light Invisible (1903), By What Authority? (1904), The King's Achievement (1905), The Queen's Tragedy (1906), The Sentimentalists (1906), The Papers of a Pariah (1907), The Lord of the World (1907), The Necromancers (1909), and None other Gods (1910). His published sermons include Christ in the Church (1911) and The Friendship of Christ (1912).

Spiritual Letters, with preface by A. C. Benson (brother; London, 1917). Life by C. C. Martindale, S.J. (2 vols., ibid., 1916). Short Memoir by A. C. Benson (ibid., 1915). C. C. Martindale, S.J., in D.N.B., 1912–1921, pp. 39–41.

BENTLEY, RICHARD (1662–1742), English classical scholar. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, at the early age of 14. After a year as headmaster of Spalding Grammar School, he became tutor to the son of E. *Stillingfleet. In his *Boyle Lectures (1692) on the Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, as in his attack (1713) on the freethinker A. *Collins, he appeared in the role of an able apologist for Christianity. But it was as a classical scholar that he made his real mark. Before his 24th year he had started a Hexapla dictionary and in 1691 he issued a Latin letter to John *Mill as an appendix to an edition of the 'Chronicle' of *John Malalas. His brilliant restoration in this appendix of many passages where the text was corrupt revealed his great powers as a critic to the few capable to judge. In 1699 his attack on Charles Boyle in his Dissertation on the Epistles of Phalaris was a still more remarkable performance. During the coming years an astonishing array of works, among them his notorious re-editing of J. *Milton's Paradise Lost, came from Bentley's pen. Nearly all the time, too, Bentley, who had been admitted Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1700, was engaged in a bitter feud, largely provoked by his high-handed methods and reforms, with the Fellows of the College. They tried repeatedly, and almost successfully, to get their Master deposed from office, but he held it till his death.

Works, ed. Alex. Dyce (3 vols., 1836–8); J. H. Monk, Life of Bentley (2 vols., 1833); R. C. Jebb, Life of Bentley (1882); E. Hedicke, Studia Bentleiana (1902); R. J. White, Dr. Bentley. A Study in Academic Scarlet (1965). M. L. W. Laistner, 'Richard Bentley: 1742–1942' in Studies in Philology, xxxix (1942), pp. 510–23, repr. in Intellectual Heritage of the Early Middle Ages, ed. C. G. Starr (Ithaca, N.Y., 1957), pp. 239–54. A. T. Bartholomew and J. W. Clark, Bibliography of Richard Bentley (1908).

BERAKAH (Heb. בְּרָכָה, 'blessing'). The characteristic Jewish prayer, which takes the form of a blessing or thanksgiving to God. Hence the name 'Berakoth' is applied to the tractates of the *Talmud which contain directions about prayer, both public and private. The OT provides many examples of this type of prayer (e.g. Gen. 24. 27, Job 1. 21, Ps. 28. 6), which was carried over into Christian usage (2 Cor. 1. 3, 1 Pet. 1. 3), and there are parallelisms in ideas and phraseology between early Christian prayers and Jewish berakoth (cf. 1 Clem. 59 and the second of the *Eighteen Benedictions). It has been suggested that the use of 'Eucharist' (Gk. εὐχαριστία, one of the two translations of Heb. berakah) for the central Christian rite arose from the fact that the eucharistic prayer was a Christian adaptation of the Jewish berakah which was recited over a cup of wine.

BERDYAEV, NICOLAS (1874–1948), Russian philosopher and author. Originally a sceptic, of Marxist leanings, he found his way back to the Orthodox Church after the Revolution of 1905. From 1922 onwards he lived as an émigré in Paris. After Christianity and Class War (Eng. trans., 1933), The Bourgeois Mind (Eng. trans., 1934), and The Fate of Man in the Modern World (Eng. trans., 1935), he published his important Freedom and the Spirit (written 1927; Eng. trans., 1935). In it he attempts to adapt Christianity to the requirements of modern intellectuals and proclaims a 'spiritual Christianity' which has no need of doctrinal definitions, bourgeois morality and set worship. His teaching has been accused of pantheist and theosophist tendencies and as essentially the religion of an aristocratic élite. The Destiny of Man (Eng. trans., 1937) contains valuable contributions to social philosophy and diagnosis. His social ethics were further elaborated in Solitude and Society (Eng. trans., 1938). Spirit and Reality (Eng. trans., 1939) is an important analysis of the spiritual needs of modern man. His autobiography, Dream and Reality (Eng. trans., 1950), appeared posthumously.

Studies by M. Spinka (Philadelphia [c. 1949]), O. Fielding Clarke (London, 1950), G. Seaver (ibid., 1950), E. Porret (Neuchâtel–Paris, 1951), D. A. Lowrie (London, 1960), M. A. Villon (ibid., 1961), J.-L. Segundo (Paris [1963]), M. M. Davy Paris, 1964; Eng. tr., 1967), and F. Nucho (London, 1967).

BEREANS, also known as Barclayans or Barclayites. A religious sect founded at Edinburgh in 1773 by J. *Barclay (q.v.). The name was derived from the characteristics of the Bereans mentioned in Acts 17. 10 f. Barclay taught a modified form of *Calvinism, stressing at once its supernatural and mystical aspects. Natural theology he held to be impossible, since every attempt to prove the existence of God rests on a petitio principii. The sole fount of truth is Holy Scripture, which speaks throughout of Christ. The Christian, who is enabled to understand it by faith illuminated by the Holy Spirit, will find, e.g., that every single verse in the Psalms points forward to Christ or His Church. The act of faith implanted in the believer conveys assurance of salvation to him. It is thus the highest gift of God to man, and the 'blasphemy against the Holy Ghost' mentioned in the Gospels is unbelief. Any idea of a covenant-renewal at the Lord's Supper was repudiated as leading to the Romish doctrine of the Mass.

Barclay's doctrines won for a time an enthusiastic reception in a few widely scattered congregations in Scotland. Berean communities were also established in London and Bristol. After Barclay's death (1798), however, they soon melted away, and were for the most part merged in the *Congregationalists.

A. Miller in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 519–23, s.v.

BERENGAR OF TOURS (c. 1010 – 88), scholastic theologian. Berengar's family was associated with St. Martin's, Tours, and by 1030 he was a canon there. After studying at *Chartres, c. 1028, when *Fulbert was bishop, he took service with Geoffrey Martel, count of Anjou (1040–60). By 1040 he was archdeacon and by 1047 treasurer of Angers cathedral. By 1053 he had ceased to be treasurer, but he remained archdeacon until 1060. The new count (Geoffrey the Bearded) was hostile, and Berengar returned to St. Martin's, where he appears as 'master of the schools' from c. 1070. Some time after 1080 he retired to the island hermitage of St. Côme, three miles west of Tours, where he died.

Berengar was much criticised for his teaching on the *Eucharist. His case was discussed twice by *Leo IX in 1050, and again at a legatine synod at Tours in 1054; by Nicholas II in 1059; and at last definitively by *Gregory VII in 1079. Tractates were written against him in all parts of Europe, but esp. in Normandy. They include: John of Fécamp, Confessio Fidei, iv (P.L., ci. 1085–91); Durand of Fécamp, De Corpore et Sanguine Christi (ib., cxlix. 1375–1424); *Lanfranc of Bec, De Corpore et Sanguine Domini (ib., cl. 407–42); and Guitmund of La Croix-St-Leofrey, De Corporis et Sanguinis Domini Veritate (ib., cxlix. 1427–94). Berengar's main surviving work, the De Sacra Coena, is a reply to Lanfranc. Here he maintains the fact of the Real Presence, but denies that any material change in the elements is needed to explain it.

Berengar's position was never diametrically opposed to that of his critics, and he was prob. never excommunicated. But the controversy that he aroused forced men to reconsider the Carolingian discussion of the Eucharist, as *Paschasius had left it, and to clarify the doctrine of *transubstantiation. Further, when both Berengar and his critics used the secular disciplines of logic and grammar to express a matter of Christian doctrine, the way was open to the *scholasticism of the 12th cent.

The text of Berengar's De Sacra Coena was discovered by G. E. *Lessing and ed. by A. F. and F. T. Vischer (Berlin, 1834). Crit. ed. by W. H. Beekenkamp (Kerkhistorische Studien, ii; The Hague, 1941). Letters ed. C. Erdmann in id.–N. Fickermann (edd.), Briefsammlung der Zeit Heinrichs IV. (M.G.H. Die deutschen Geschichtsquellen des Mittelalters 500–1500, v; 1950), pp. 132–72. M. Matronola, O.S.B. (ed.), Un testo inedito di Berengario di Tours e il Concilio Romano del 1079 (Orbis Romanus, vi; 1936). H. Sudendorf (ed.), Berengarius Turonensis, oder eine Sammlung ihn betreffender Briefe (Hamburg, 1850). A. J. Macdonald, Berengar and the Reform of Sacramental Doctrine (1930). O. Capitani, Studi su Berengario di Tours (Lecce [1966]). J. de Montclos, Lanfranc et Bérenger. La controverse eucharistique du xie siècle (S.S.L., xxxvii; 1971), esp. pp. 3–245. C. Erdmann, 'Gregor VII. und Berengar von Tours' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xxviii (1937–8), pp. 48–74. R. W. Southern, 'Lanfranc of Bec and Berengar of Tours' in Studies in Medieval History Presented to Frederick Maurice Powicke, ed. R. W. Hunt, W. A. Pantin, and R. W. Southern (Oxford, 1948), pp. 27–48. D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Eucharist, i (1909), pp. 244–59. M. Cappuyns in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 385–407, s.v., with detailed bibl.

BERESHITH (Heb. בְּרֵאשִׁית, 'in the beginning'). The first word of the Hebrew text of *Genesis and hence the Hebrew name for the Book.

BERGGRAV, EIVIND (1884–1959), Bp. of Oslo. Born at Stavanger, the son of a bishop and Minister for Church and Education in the Norwegian Government, he studied at Oslo, Oxford, Cambridge, Marburg, and Lund. In 1909 he was made editor of the monthly journal Kirke og Kultur, and began ten years' work as a teacher. In 1919 he became pastor at Hurdalen, in 1925 prison chaplain in Oslo, and in 1929 Bp. of Hålogaland in the extreme north of Norway. In 1937 he returned to Oslo as Primate of the Norwegian Church. In earlier years he had been influenced by N. *Söderblom, Abp. of Upsala, and at Oslo he rapidly won leadership in the *Ecumenical Movement, being elected President of the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship through the Churches in 1938 and calling a conference of Scandinavian Church leaders on the outbreak of war in 1939. After the occupation of Norway by the Nazis (9 Apr. 1940) Berggrav took an active part in organizing resistance to the Quisling Government. With six other Norwegian bishops he resigned (24 Feb. 1941) 'what the state has committed to my charge', at the same time declaring that 'the spiritual calling which has been ordained to me at the altar of God remains mine by God and by right'. Arrested on 9 Apr., he remained a solitary prisoner in a log cabin on the outskirts of Oslo until the defeat of Hitler (1945). After the war he took an active part in the foundation of the *World Council of Churches and its work. He retired from his see in 1950. His writings include With God in the Darkness (1943), an account in English of the Norwegian Church Conflict.

Study by A. Johnston (Oslo, 1959; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1960).

BERGSON, HENRI (1859–1941), French philosopher. He was born at Paris and of Jewish descent, and after gaining distinction at school in classics and the natural sciences alike, he proceeded to the École Normale Supérieure, where he fell under the spell of the activist doctrines of L. Ollé-Laprune (1839–98) and É. Boutroux (1845–1921) and in 1889 submitted for his doctorate his celebrated Essai (see below). In 1900 he accepted a professorship at the Collège de France, remaining there until his retirement in 1924. His intellectual brilliance and daring gained him the hearing of large audiences in many countries. In 1914 he was honoured with election to the French Academy and in 1928 with the Nobel Prize.

Believing that the way to reality was by intuition, Bergson aimed at a radical criticism of all forms of intellectualism. He held that in real life the function of the intellect is subordinate; and that in man it is intuition which accomplishes those purposes which in the lower animals are carried out by instinct. All intellectualist conceptions of reality rest on spatial patterns akin to the diagrams and clock-time of the physicist, which distort the truth and must be abandoned for a new view of time (durée). Reality is evolutionary and progressive. Hence the traditional philosophic systems, which in the end can never escape a static and pantheistic determinism, must give way to a new philosophy of creativity and free will in which 'the gates of the future lie ever open'. At the root of moral action lies a 'life-force' (élan vital), which is an impulse found at its fullest development in heroes and prophets. Bergson's doctrines thus had close affinities with the thought of W. *James and the *Pragmatists generally.

Bergson's chief works were Essai sur les données immédiates de la conscience (1889; Eng. trans., Time and Free Will, 1910); Matière et mémoire (1896; Eng. trans., 1911); L'Évolution creatrice (1907; Eng. trans., 1911); Les Deux Sources de la morale et de la religion (1932; Eng. trans., 1935). His influence extended far beyond professed philosophers. His ideas, in whole or in part, were welcomed by many religious thinkers (notably the RC *Modernists) who were dissatisfied with the dominating position which traditional theology assigns to the human intellect.

Œuvres complètes d'Henri Bergson (7 vols., Geneva, 1945–6) Sympathetic interpretation by a disciple in H. W. Carr, Henr. Bergson. The Philosophy of Change (1912) and id., The Philosophy of Change (1914). A. D. Lindsay, The Philosophy of Bergson (1911); D. Balsillie, An Examination of Professor Bergson's Philosophy (1912); A. Farges, La Philosophie de Bergson (1912); E. Le Roy, Une Philosophie nouvelle. Henri Bergson (1912; Eng. tr., 1913); J. *Maritain, La Philosophie bergsonienne. Études critiques (1914; Eng. tr., with additional material from Ransoming the Time, as Bergsonian Philosophy and Thomism, New York [1955]); F. Olgiati, La filosofia di Enrico Bergson (1914); J. A. Gunn, Bergson and his Philosophy (1920); A. Thibaudet, Le Bergsonisme (2 vols., ed. 4, 1923); J. Chevalier, Bergson (1926); R. Jolivet, Essai sur le bergsonisme (1931); A. Cresson, Bergson (1950). H. Sundén, La Théorie bergsonienne de la religion (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1947); Lydie Adolphe, La Philosophie religieuse de Bergson (1946); id., La Dialectique des images chez Bergson (1951); id., L'Univers bergsonien [1955]. J. Chevalier, Entretiens avec Bergson [1959]. Madeleine Barthélemy-Madaule, Bergson et Teilhard de Chardin [1963]; id., Bergson adversaire de Kant (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1966).

BERKELEY, GEORGE (1685–1753), philosopher and divine. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became Fellow in 1707. After some time spent in travelling abroad, he was appointed Dean of Derry in 1724. From 1728 to 1732 he was in America, attempting to found a missionary college in Bermuda, but the refusal of the home government to support his plan led him to abandon it. In 1734 he was made Bp. of Cloyne, a position he held until his death in Oxford, where he spent the last five months of his life. His most important philosophical works, all of them the works of his youth, were A New Theory of Vision (1709), Principles of Human Knowledge (1710), and Hylas and Philonous (1713).

Berkeley is celebrated for his metaphysical doctrine, which was a form of Subjective Idealism. He held that, when we affirm material things to be real, we mean no more than that they are perceived (esse est percipi). Material objects, on Berkeley's view, continue to exist when not perceived by us solely because they are objects of the thought of God. The only things that exist in a primary sense are spirits, and material objects exist simply in the sense that they are perceived by spirits.

Berkeley was a philosopher rather than a theologian, but in a small work called A Discourse on Passive Obedience (1712) he upheld an ethical utilitarianism of a theological rather than a philosophical kind. He also wrote various short treatises on practical matters of the day.

Berkeley's chief writings have often been reprinted. New ed. by A. C. *Fraser (4 vols., incl. 'Life, Letters and Dissertation' in vol. iv, Oxford, 1871); much revised reissue, 4 vols., 1901. Crit. ed. by A. A. Luce and T. E. Jessop ('Bibliotheca Britannica Philosophica', 9 vols., 1948–57). Study of Berkeley's 'Common Place Book' (Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 39305) by G. A. Johnston (London, 1930); excellent ed. of text by A. A. Luce (ib., 1944; under title Philosophical Commentaries). Studies of Berkeley's life and philosophy by A. C. Fraser ('Blackwood's Philosophical Classics', 1881), G. A. Johnston (London, 1923), R. Metz (Stuttgart, 1925), J. M. Hone and M. M. Rossi (London, 1931), G. D. *Hicks (ib., 1932), J. Wild (Cambridge, Mass., 1936); on the biographical side, all superseded by A. A. Luce's Life (London, 1949); also by A. L. Leroy (Paris, 1959). B. Rand, Berkeley's American Sojourn (1932); A. A. Luce, Berkeley and Malebranche (1934); id., Berkeley's Immaterialism (1945); id., The Dialectic of Immaterialism. An Account of the Making of Berkeley's Principles (1963); C. D. Broad, Berkeley's Argument about Material Substance (Henriette Hertz Lecture, 1942); E. A. Sillem, George Berkeley and the Proofs for the Existence of God (1957). A. D. Ritchie, George Berkeley. A Reappraisal, ed. G. E. Davie (Manchester, 1967). T. E. Jessop, A Bibliography of George Berkeley (1934). L. Stephen in D.N.B., iv (1885), pp. 348–56.

BERNADETTE, St. (1844–79), peasant girl of *Lourdes. She was the daughter of François Soubirous, a miller, and the eldest child of a family of six. She was baptized as 'Marie Bernarde', but became affectionately known to her family and neighbours as 'Bernadette'. After a childhood lived in a context of poverty, at the age of 14 she received eighteen *Apparitions of the Bl. Virgin at the Massabielle Rock, near Lourdes. The first was on 11 Feb. 1858 and the last on 16 July of the same year. The Virgin, who manifested herself as the 'Immaculate Conception', revealed her presence by supernatural occurrences (esp. a miraculous spring of water) and commands (the building of a church). After a period in which Bernadette suffered much from constant questionings and publicity, she joined the Sisters of Notre-Dame at Nevers, where she lived for the rest of her life. She was beatified by *Pius XI in 1925 and canonized in 1933. Feast day in France, 18 Feb. (not in the universal calendar). Her feast has also been observed on 16 Apr.

The principal collection of primary documents is ed. by R. Laurentin, B. Billet, and P. Galland, Lourdes. Documents authentiques (Paris, 1958 ff.). Smaller collection by L. [J.] M. Cros, S.J., and P. M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J., Lourdes 1858 (Paris, [1957]). Les Écrits de Sainte Bernadette et sa voie spirituelle, ed. A. Ravier, S.J. (1961). H. Petitot, Histoire exacte des apparitions de N.-D. de Lourdes à Bernadette [1935]; id., Histoire exacte de la vie intérieure et religieuse de Ste Bernadette [1935]. The many popular Lives include those of F. Duhourcau (Paris, 1934; Eng. tr., 1934); E. Guynot (Paris, [1937]); Margaret G. Blanton (London, 1939); F. Trochu (Paris, 1954; Eng. tr., 1957), and Margaret Trouncer (London, 1958). See also bibl. to Lourdes.

BERNARD, St. (1090–1153), Abbot of *Clairvaux. Born of noble parents at Fontaines near Dijon, he early showed an inclination towards the monastic profession, and in 1112 with thirty other young noblemen of Burgundy, including his own brothers, he entered the monastery of Cîteaux. When three years later he was bidden by the abbot, St. *Stephen Harding, to choose a place for a new monastery, he established a house at Clairvaux, which under his direction soon became one of the chief centres of the *Cistercian Order. Before long, Bernard was one of the most influential religious forces in Europe. In 1128 he acted as secretary to the Synod of Troyes and there obtained recognition for the Rules of the new order of Knights *Templar, which he is said himself to have drawn up. In the disputed election which followed the death of Pope Honorius II in 1130, Bernard sided with Innocent II against the antipope, Anacletus, and was eventually successful in securing Innocent's victory. As a reward the Pope showered privileges on the Cistercian Order. His power became even greater with the election of a Cistercian monk, a former pupil of his, as Pope *Eugenius III in 1145. During the next few years he attacked the heretical teachings of *Henry of Lausanne in Languedoc and preached the Second *Crusade. The failure of the latter was a bitter disappointment to him. He was canonized in 1174, and created a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1830. Feast day, 20 Aug.

Bernard was above all else a monk. The austerities and self-mortification which he practised drew upon him the remonstrations of his friend, *William of Champeaux, but they did not avail to change his manner of life. The severely orthodox cast of his character led him to condemn *Abelard at the Council of *Sens (1140) and to attack *Gilbert de la Porrée. Indeed it was his saintliness and personality rather than the force of his intellect which made him so powerful in the Europe of his day, and found visible expression in the rapid growth of the Cistercian Order in the 12th cent. under his influence. Bernard's writings reveal a clear and penetrating grasp of theological problems, a fine eloquence of which his sermons give some suggestion, an extraordinarily intimate acquaintance with the Bible, and, above all, a faith inspired by the sublimest *mysticism. It was in his prose that his poetic feeling found expression, the widespread attribution to him of the *Rosy Sequence ('Jesu dulcis memoria') being almost certainly erroneous. In his 'De Diligendo Deo', one of the most outstanding of all medieval books on mysticism, he insisted that God should be loved simply and purely because He is God, and in his treatise 'De gratia et libero arbitrio' (in which he was much influenced by St. *Augustine) he wrote: 'Remove free-will, and there is nothing to be saved; remove grace, and there is left no means of saving. The work of salvation cannot be accomplished without the co-operation of the two.' Thus the love and the grace of God, and the resultant activity of man, together made the central theme of Bernard's message to his age. If at times he appeared somewhat impetuous and obstinate, nothing could conceal the caritas which illumined his character and writings, and caused him to denounce the persecution of the Jews, and to insist that prayer, preaching, and the life of self-denial and worship should be the militia of Church and state, monk and layman, alike.

Editio princeps by A. Bocard (Paris, 1508). The classic ed. is that of J. *Mabillon, O.S.B. (2 vols. fol., Paris, 1667), repr., with additions, in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxii–clxxxv. Modern ed. of his works by J. Leclercq, O.S.B., C. H. Talbot, and H. M. Rochais, O.S.B. (Rome, 1957 ff.). Eng. tr. (Cistercian Fathers Series, i, iv. etc.; 1970 ff.). J. Leclercq, O.S.B., Études sur Saint Bernard et le texte de ses écrits (Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, ix, fascc. 1–2; Rome, 1953); id., Recueil d'études sur Saint Bernard et ses écrits (Rome, 1962). The chief sources for our knowledge of the saint are some contemporary Lives, pr. in J. Mabillon (also PL, clxxxv), esp. the 'Vita Prima' (ib., cols. 225–455) and the 'Vita Secunda' (cols. 469–524). Eng. tr. of 'Vita Prima' by G. Webb and A. Walker (1960). Standard modern Life by E. Vacandard (2 vols., Paris, 1895); others by J. A. W. Neander (Berlin, 1813; Eng. tr., 1843), J. C. Morison (London, 1863), G. Goyau (Paris, 1929), W. W. Williams (Manchester, 1935), J. Leclercq, O.S.B. (Paris, 1948 and 1966), B. S. James (London, 1957), H. Daniel-Rops ([Tours] 1962; Eng. tr. [1964]) and Irénée Vallery-Radot (Paris [1963]). W. W. Williams, Studies in St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1927); E. *Gilson, La Théologie mystique de Saint Bernard (1934; Eng. tr., 1940). Saint Bernard théologien. Actes du Congrès de Dijon 15–19 Septembre 1953 (Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, ix, fasc. 3–4: Rome, 1953); Bernard de Clairvaux (Commission d'histoire de l'Ordre de Cîteaux, Abbaye N.-D. d'Aiguebelle, par Grignan, Drôme, France, iii [1953]), with preface by T. Merton. Jean de la Croix Bouton, Bibliographie Bernardine 1891–1957 (ib., v; 1958). A. V. Murray, Abelard and St. Bernard (Manchester, 1967). A. H. Bredero, 'Études sur la "Vita Prima" de Saint Bernard' in Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, xvii (1961), pp. 3–73, 215–60, xviii (1962), pp. 3–59. É. Vacandard in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 761–84; J. M. Canivez, O.Cist., in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 610–44, s.v. 'Bernard (90)'.

BERNARD OF CHARTRES (d. c. 1130). The elder brother of *Thierry of Chartres (q.v.), he was the chief formative influence on the *Platonist tradition of the school of *Chartres.

The principal authority is *John of Salisbury, esp. his Polycraticus, vii. 13, and Metalogicon, i. 5, 24, ii. 17, iii. 2, 4, and iv. 35. E. *Gilson, 'Le Platonisme de Bernard de Chartres' in Revue néoscolastique de Philosophie, xxv (1923), pp. 5–19.

BERNARD OF CLUNY (c. 1140), also Bernard of Morval or Morlass or (wrongly) Morlaix. He was a monk of *Cluny during the abbacy of *Peter the Venerable. In his day he was famous as an author of sermons and other writings, but his most enduring work is a long poem of some 3,000 lines, 'De Contemptu Mundi', written in a difficult metre (dactylic with internal and end rhymes), in which he attacks the monastic disorders of his time and stresses the transitoriness of life on earth. It is the source of many famous hymns, of which 'Brief life is here our portion', 'The world is very evil' ('Hora Novissima'), and 'Jerusalem the Golden' ('Urbs Sion aurea') are the best known. He was perhaps also the author of the 'Mariale', a celebrated poem in praise of the Blessed Virgin.

The 'De Contemptu Mundi' is pr. by T. Wright, The Anglo-Saxon Poets and Epigrammatists of the Twelfth Century, ii (R.S., 1872), pp. 3–102. Eng. tr. by S. M. Jackson (Chicago, 1910); also ed. by H. C. Hoskier (London, 1929). Carmina de Trinitate et de Fide Catholica, De Castitate Servanda, in Libros Regum, de Octo Vitiis, ed. Katarina Halvarson (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, xi; 1963). R. C. Petry, 'Mediaeval Eschatology and Social Responsibility in Bernard of Morval's De Contemptu Mundi' in Speculum, xxiv (1949), pp. 207–12. G. J. Engelhardt, 'The "De Contemptu Mundi" of Bernardus Morvalensis' in Mediaeval Studies, xxii (1960), pp. 108–35, xxvi (1964), pp. 109–42, and xxix (1967), pp. 243–72. Raby, pp. 315–19.

BERNARD, JOHN HENRY (1860–1927), successively Abp. of *Dublin and Provost of *Trinity College, Dublin. He came of a Kerry family and was born in Bengal. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was elected to a fellowship in 1884 and an important lectureship in Divinity in 1886. In his earlier years, when his interests were as much philosophical as theological, he collaborated with his colleague, J. P. Mahaffy (1839–1919), in his second edition of Kant's Critical Philosophy for English Readers (1889); and in 1892 he published the first English version of Kant's Kritik der Urtheilskraft. Theologically a High Churchman, he came to fill, as time went on, a prominent place in the life of the Church of *Ireland. In 1911 he became Bp. of Ossory, and in 1915 Abp. of Dublin; and he played a notable part in the Convention on the self-government of Ireland, where he was one of the official representatives of the Protestant Church (1916–18). In 1919 he succeeded Mahaffy as Provost of Trinity College, successfully piloting the College through the revolution and its aftermath. His scholarly editions and commentaries include an English version of 'The Pilgrimage of Silvia' (see Etheria) for the Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society (1891), the Irish Liber Hymnorum (with R. Atkinson, H.B.S., xiii and xiv, 1898), and commentaries on the *Pastoral Epp. (Camb. Bible, 1899) and, his most considerable work, on St. John's Gospel (posthumously ed. A. H. McNeile, 2 vols., I.C.C., 1928). His work was marked by accuracy and sound judgement rather than originality.

Life by R. H. Murray (London, 1931). On his family, see Bernard's own work, The Bernards of Kerry (Dublin, 1922). E. J. Gwynn in D.N.B., 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 78–91.

BERNARDINES. The title popularly given to the 'Reformed Congregation of St. *Bernard', i.e. the Italian branch of the *Feuillants (q.v.).

BERNARDINO OF SIENA, St. (1380–1444), *Franciscan reformer, 'the Apostle of the Holy Name'. Born at Massa di Carrera, a town of which his father was then governor, he became a Franciscan friar at the age of 22 and in 1438 was elected Vicar General of the Friars of the Strict *Observance in Italy. A preacher of great eloquence, to whom, said *Pius II, men listened as they might have listened to St. Paul, he made it his chief aim to regenerate the age in which he lived. He was responsible for moral reforms in many cities, and by the time of his death, although accused of heretical views on many occasions, he was perhaps the most influential religious force in Italy. He was a great promoter of devotion to the Holy *Name of Jesus. Feast day, 20 May.

Works ed. P. Rodulphius, 4 vols., Venice, 1591, and J. de la Haye, O.F.M., 4 vols., Paris, 1635; crit. ed. studio et cura PP. Collegii S. Bonaventurae (9 vols., Quaracchi, 1950–65). D. Pacetti, O.F.M., De Sancti Bernardini Senensis Operibus. Ratio Criticae Editionis (ib., 1947), with details of edd. of vernacular works to date. AA.SS., Mai., V (1685), pp. 257*–318*. Life by Leonard Benvoglienti, dated 8 May 1446, ed. F. Van Ortroy, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xxi (1902), pp. 53–80; 'Vie inédite de S. Bernardin de Sienne par un frère mineur, son contemporain', ed. id., ib., xxv (1906), pp. 304–38. Amadio Maria da Venezia, Vita di S. Bernardino da Siena (Venice, 1745; various later edd.). Modern lives by P. Thureau-Dangin (Paris, 1896; Eng. tr., 1906), F. Alessio (Mondovi, 1899), K. Hefele (Freiburg i. Br., 1912), A. G. F. Howell (London, 1913), V. Facchinetti, O.F.M. (Milan, 1933), and P. Bargellini (Brescia, 1933). M. Sticco, Il pensiero di S. Bernardino da Siena [1924]. B. Stasiewski, Der heilige Bernardin von Siena. Untersuchungen über die Quellen seiner Biographien (Franziskanische Studien, Beiheft xiii; 1931). M. Sticco and others, S. Bernardino da Siena. Saggi e ricerche pubblicati nel quinto centenario della morte, 1444–1944 (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, N.S. vi; 1945). Iris Origo, The World of San Bernardino (1963), with bibl. V. Facchinetti, O.F.M., 'Bollettini bibliografici: San Bernardino di Siena' in Aevum, iv (1930), pp. 319–81; H. Schmidt, O.F.M., 'Bernhardin-Literatur, 1939–1949' in Franziskanische Studien, xxxii (1950), pp. 388–418. J. Heerinckx in Dict. Sp., i (1927), cols. 1518–21, s.v., with details of edd. of individual works; D. Pacetti in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 345–7.

BERNE, Theses of. Ten theological propositions, compiled by B. *Haller and F. Kolb, two Berne pastors, and others, and revised by H. *Zwingli, which were made the basis of a convocation of the Swiss clergy and laity at Berne from 6 to 26 Jan. 1528. They were drawn up in defence of the Reformed theology against a set of seven theses put forward by J. *Eck in 1526. The first insists on the supremacy of the Word of God; and the remaining nine are directed against (2) *Tradition, (3) *Satisfaction, (4) the *Real Presence in the *Eucharist, (5) the *Sacrifice of the Mass, (6) Mediation through the Saints, (7) *Purgatory, (8) *Images, (9) and (10) *Celibacy. They were embodied in a decree which enforced the Reformation in Berne, 7 Feb. 1528.

Orig. Swiss-German text in E. F. K. Müller, Die Bekenntnisschriften der reformierten Kirche (1903), p. 20 f.; Lat. tr. (by Zwingli) in Kidd, pp. 459 f. (No. 217); Eng. tr. in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, i (1877), p. 365 f., with introd. and bibl., p. 364 f.; also, with introd., in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 45–50.

BÉRULLE, PIERRE DE (1575–1629), cardinal, diplomatist, theologian, and reformer. A native of the French province of Champagne, he was ordained priest in 1599, and from the first directed his attention to the guidance of souls and the conversion of Protestants. After much difficulty he established the reformed *Carmelites in France, and in 1611 founded the *Oratory, inspired by, but independent of, that founded in 1564 by St. *Philip Neri. He secured the necessary dispensation for the marriage of Princess *Henrietta Maria to *Charles I of England in 1625, and accompanied her to England. Contrary to the wishes of *Richelieu, he reconciled Louis XIII with his mother. He was made Cardinal in 1627. His chief fame rests upon his spiritual teaching, which showed such devotion to Christ as God-made-Man that Urban VIII called him the 'Apostolus Verbi Incarnati'. The best of his writings is the Grandeurs de Jésus (1623).

Works ed. F. Bourgoing, Cong. Orat. (Paris, 1644), repr., with additions, by J. P. *Migne (ib., 1856). J. Dagens (ed.), Correspondance du Cardinal Pierre de Bérulle (Bibl. de la R.H.E., xvii, xviii, and xix; 1937–9), with Essai biographique in vol. i, pp. ix–xlv. G. Habert, La Vie du Cardinal de Bérulle (1646). M. Tabarand, Histoire de Pierre de Bérulle (2 vols., 1817). [J. F.] Nourrisson, Le Cardinal de Bérulle (1856). M. Houssaye, M. de Bérulle et les Carmélites de France, 1575–1611 (1872); id., Le Père de Bérulle et l'oratoire de Jésus, 1611–1625 (1874); id., Le Cardinal de Bérulle et le Cardinal de Richelieu, 1625–1629 (1875). A. Molien, Cong. Orat., Le Cardinal de Bérulle (2 vols., 1947). J. Dagens, Bérulle et les origines de la restauration catholique [1952]. R. Bellemare, Le Sens de la créature dans la doctrine de Bérulle [1959]. M. Dupoy, Bérulle. Une Spiritualité de l'adoration [1964]; id., Bérulle et le sacerdoce. Étude historique et doctrinale (1969), incl. unpublished texts. J. Orcibal, Le Cardinal de Bérulle. Évolution d'une spiritualité (1965). Bremond, iii, pp. 3–279; Pourrat, iii, pp. 491–515. A. Molien in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 1539–1581, s.v.

BESSARION, JOHN (1403–72), Cardinal, Greek scholar and statesman. He became a monk in 1423; and after studying under *Gemistos Plethon (1431–6), he was made Abp. of *Nicaea in 1437 by the Emp. John VII Palaeologus. Accompanying the latter to the Council of Ferrara-*Florence in 1438, he showed great ardour for the union of the Greek and Latin Churches, a policy which made him unpopular at *Constantinople. Though the union was repudiated by many of the Greeks, he remained in communion with Rome and made his home in Italy. Here he gained the patronage of *Eugenius IV and his successors, was made Cardinal (1439), fulfilled important ecclesiastical missions, and was nearly elected Pope. Bessarion was an enthusiastic scholar and patron of scholars, and among his protégés were T. Gaza, D. Chalcondyles, and the two Lascares, all of whom played a prominent part in the revival of Greek studies in the Italian Renaissance. He himself translated into Latin *Aristotle's 'Metaphysics' and Xenophon's 'Memorabilia', and among other works he wrote a treatise 'in Calumniatorem Platonis', directed against the Aristotelian views of George of Trebizond, and a treatise on the Eucharist. Bessarion bequeathed his library, notable for its large collection of Greek MSS., to the Senate of Venice, where it is preserved in the *Marciana.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG, clx, 11–744. L. Mohler, Kardinal Bessarion als Theolog, Humanist und Staatsmann (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, xx, xxii, and xxiv; 1923–42), incl. Gk. text, with a Lat. tr. of his 'In Calumniatorem Platonis libri IV' and 'De Sacramento Eucharistiae'. His 'Oratio Dogmatica de Unione' ed., with introd., by E. Candal, S.J. (Consilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, Series B, vii, fasc. 1; Rome, 1958); and his 'De Spiritus Sancti Processione ad Alexium Lascarin Philanthropinum' ed. id. (ib., vii, fasc. 2; 1961). H. Vast, Le Cardinal Bessarion (1403–1473). Étude sur la chrétienté et la renaissance vers le milieu du XVe siècle (1878). H. D. Saffrey [O.P.], 'Notes Autographes du Cardinal Bessarion dans un Manuscrit de Munich' in Byzantion, xxxv (1965), pp. 536–563. Lotte Labowsky, Bessarion's Library and the Biblioteca Marciana. Six Early Inventories (Sussidi Eruditi, xxxi; 1979). L. Bréhier in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 1181–99; L. Labowsky in Dizionario biografico degli Italiani, ix (1967), pp. 686–96, with extensive bibl.

BETH (Heb. בית, a 'house'). A word often occurring in Biblical place-names. See following entries.

BETHABARA. Acc. to Jn. 1. 28 (AV), the place 'beyond *Jordan' where St. *John the Baptist baptized, and thus presumably the scene of Christ's *Baptism. It is possibly the modern ford 'Abarah', N. of Bēisan; but (a) 'abarah' means only 'crossing', and (b) many important MSS., followed by the RV, read '*Bethany beyond Jordan', and this is probably the correct text.

F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 264 f. C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 153–66; Eng. tr. as The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 113–29. A. Barrois, O.P., in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., i (1928), cols. 968–70, s.v. 'Béthanie'.

BETHANY. The village of Sts. *Martha and *Mary and *Lazarus (Jn. 11. 1), about two miles (Jn. 11. 18) from *Jerusalem, on the SE slopes of the Mount of *Olives (Mk. 11. 1). There Christ supped with Simon (Mk. 14. 3), and lodged during the week before His Passion (Mt. 21. 17). Its modern name is El 'Azeriyeh, i.e. 'the place of Lazarus'. 'Bethany beyond Jordan' (Jn. 1. 28 RV) is another village.

F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 266 f., with reff. P. Benoit, O.P., and M. E. Boismard, O.P., 'Un Ancien Sanctuaire chrétien à Béthanie' in R. Bibl., lviii (1951), pp. 200–51. S. J. Saller, O.F.M., Excavations at Bethany (1949–1953) (Publications of the Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, xii; Jerusalem, 1957). C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 332–8; abridged Eng. tr., The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 278–81.

BETHEL (lit., Heb., 'House of God'). (1) Formerly the chief sanctuary in Palestine of the *Israelite (i.e. non-Judaean) tribes. Acc. to Gen. 28. 10–22, God appeared here to *Jacob in a dream, who thereupon erected the stone on which his head had rested as a sacred pillar. On the division of the Hebrew kingdom after the death of *Solomon (1 Kgs. 12), Jeroboam I set up a 'golden calf' here (12. 28 f.), the worship continuing (cf. Am. 7. 10–13) until King Josiah abolished sacrificial worship at all sanctuaries in the kingdom except *Jerusalem in 621.

(2) The small town near Bielefeld in Westphalia which gives the popular name to the Bodelschwinghsche Stiftungen. These consist of homes for epileptics, training centres for deaconesses and male nurses, and a college for Protestant theological students. The aim of their founder, the *Lutheran pastor Friedrich Bodelschwingh (1831–1910), was to relieve the lot of the mentally defective by giving them a share in the work of the community acc. to their capacity and by providing for their spiritual needs. At the same time Bethel furnished a staff of men and women willing and able to help in the social activities of the Lutheran Church. See also Innere Mission.

(3) A name used, esp. by certain *Methodists and *Baptists, for a place of religious worship.

On (1) F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 270 f., with reff. to earlier litt. W. F. Albright, 'A Trial Excavation in the Mound of Bethel' in Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, xxix (1928), pp. 9–11; id., 'The First Month of Excavation at Bethel', ib., lv (1934), pp. 23–25; id., 'The Kyle Memorial Excavation at Bethel', ib., lvi (1934), pp. 2–15, with further note, ib., lvii (1935), pp. 27–30; J. L. Kelso, 'The Second Campaign at Bethel', ib., cxxxvii (1955), pp. 5–10; id., 'The Third Campaign at Bethel', ib., cli (1958), pp. 3–8; id., 'The Fourth Campaign at Bethel', ib., clxiv (1961), pp. 5–19. Full report in preparation.

BETHESDA. A pool at *Jerusalem (Jn. 5. 2; but three important MSS. (ℵ L D) read 'Bethzatha') believed to have possessed miraculous healing properties connected with a periodical disturbance of the water. It has been variously identified, e.g. with the 'Virgin's Pool' SE of the *Temple, where a spring still bubbles intermittently.

L. H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem. Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, ii (1926), pp. 669–77, with reff. to earlier lit., and text, p. 680. C. Pronobis, 'Bethesda zur Zeit Jesu' in Th.Q., cxiv (1933), pp. 181–207. J. Jeremias, Die Wiederentdeckung von Bethesda, Johannes 5, 2 (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, N.F., xli; 1949; revised Eng. tr., New Testament Archaeology Monograph, i; Louisville, Ky., 1966). L. Heidet in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), cols. 1723–32, s.v. 'Bethsaïde 3'.

BETHLEHEM. The small town five miles S. of *Jerusalem which was the native city of King *David and the birthplace of Christ. It is now an almost exclusively Christian place. It contains one of the oldest churches in Christendom, the 'Church of the Holy Nativity', built by *Constantine in 330 upon the supposed site of the Holy Birth. In spite of rebuilding by *Justinian in the 6th cent., much of the original church survives, including a mosaic pavement unearthed in 1934. Both the Orthodox and Latin Churches have rights within it. For the Council of Bethlehem (1672), see Jerusalem, Synod of.

L. H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Bethléem. Le Sanctuaire de la Nativité (1914). L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'Bethléem. Le Sanctuaire de la Nativité d'après les fouilles récentes' in R. Bibl., xlv (1936), pp. 544–74, and xlvi (1937), pp. 93–121. A. M. Schneider, 'Zur Baugeschichte der Geburtskirche in Bethlehem' in Zeitschrift des deutschen Palästina-Vereins, lxiv (1941), pp. 74–91. B. Bagatti, O.F.M., Gli antichi Edifici Sacri di Betlemme (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, ix; Jerusalem, 1952). R. W. Hamilton, The Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem. A Guide (Jerusalem, 1947). C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 11–85; abridged Eng. tr., The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 1–47.

BETHLEHEMITES. The name of several orders of religious, none of which now survives. *Matthew Paris attests the existence at Cambridge of a military order dedicated to Our Lady of Bethlehem in 1257. Two centuries later *Pius II founded a military order, dedicated to the 'Blessed Virgin Mary of Bethlehem', for the defence of the Aegean against the Turks after the fall of *Constantinople in 1453. Another order of Bethlehemites, or 'Belemites', was established c. A.D. 1655 in Guatemala for the purposes of tending the sick and education. See also Bedlam.

Heimbucher, i, pp. 608 f., 613 f. J. M. Besse, O.S.B., in C.E., ii (1907), pp. 534–6; M. T. Disdier, A.A., in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), col. 1254 f., s.v.

BETHPHAGE. A village near *Bethany, with which it is usually associated in the NT (Mt. 21. 1, Mk. 11. 1, Lk. 19. 29). Its exact site is uncertain.

F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 279, with reff. S. J. Saller, O.F.M.–E. Testa, O.F.M., The Archaeological Setting of the Shrine of Bethphage (Publications of the Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, Smaller Series, i; Jerusalem, 1961). C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 323–32; abridged Eng. tr., The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 267–77.

BETHSAIDA (lit. 'House of Fishing'). A town on the E. bank of the *Jordan at the point where it enters the Sea of Galilee. It was a predominantly Gentile city, and rebuilt by Herod Philip the tetrarch (d. A.D. 33 or 34), who renamed it 'Julias' in honour of the Roman Imperial house. Christ visited it in the course of His ministry (Mk. 8. 22, Lk. 9. 10). It has been suggested that 'Bethsaida of Galilee' (Jn. 12. 21), the home of the disciples *Philip, *Peter, and *Andrew (Jn. 1. 44), was a different place, and that, if so, this would be the city referred to at Mk. 6. 45.

F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 279 f., with reff. C. Kopp (Eng. tr. by J. Watt), 'Christian Sites around the Sea of Galilee. II. Bethsaida and El-Minyeh' in Dominican Studies, iii (1950), pp. 10–40, with extensive bibl.

BETHUNE, DAVID. See Beaton, David.

BETROTHAL. A free promise of future marriage between two persons. In origin the Christian betrothal ceremonies date back, both in their Jewish and Roman counterparts, to the custom of 'wife purchase'. The giving of a ring is an earnest of the man's good faith. In many countries formal betrothal before witnesses is still the custom, but in England the Church has ceased to exercise any authority in the matter.

BETTING and GAMBLING. A gamble is a contract whereby the loss or gain of something of value is made wholly dependent on an uncertain event. If either of the contracting parties is in a state of certainty about the event, the gamble is invalid and fraudulent. The common forms of a gamble are bets, games of chance, and lotteries. The morality of gambling, considered as a species of recreation, is debated. Some hold it to be always illicit, but the majority of Christians regard it as permissible, though highly open to abuse. It is held on all hands, however, that for a gamble to be allowable it must conform to certain conditions. It must not be about an unlawful matter, e.g. one may not bet someone that he will not get drunk; the stake must not be excessive; and it must be for some end other than mere avarice, e.g. recreation. There is no explicit Church law proscribing it, except that in the RC Church habitual gambling is forbidden to the clergy. The Council of *Elvira (can. 79) condemns dice, perhaps because of their pagan associations. St. *Alphonsus Liguori considers every bet at least a venial sin; but this not the view of most RC theologians. The peculiar nature of the gambling contract and its doubtful morality are recognized by most civil codes of law, which do not allow the winner to sue at law for his gains. On the other hand they recognize it to the extent that they do not allow the loser, once he has paid, to sue for the recovery of his losses.

R. C. Mortimer, Gambling (1933). Gambling, an Ethical Discussion. A Report of the Social and Industrial Commission of the Church Assembly (1950).

BEUNO, St. (d. c. 640), Abbot of Clynnog. He is the subject of many legends and superstitions, from which it seems impossible to disentangle any certain history. He is said to have founded monasteries in Herefordshire, but his chief mission work is believed to have been in N. Wales, where his tomb was long venerated at Clynnog Faur (Gwynedd). He is supposed to have restored to life St. *Winifred, his niece. He is the titular saint of the modern Jesuit College at St. Asaph, Clwyd. Feast day, 21 Apr.

There is a Welsh life of St. Beuno (Buchedd Beuno), of which the earliest MS. dates from 1346; Eng. tr. with notes by A. W. Wade Evans, 'Beuno Sant' in Archaeologia Cambrensis, lxxxv (1930), pp. 315–41. J. H. Pollen, S.J., 'Traces of a Great Welsh Saint' in The Month, lxxx (1894), pp. 235–47.

BEURON, Abbey of. The mother abbey of the 'Beuron Congregation' of *Benedictine monks in Hohenzollern, on the upper Danube. The present abbey and congregation were constituted in 1863, though *Augustinian Canons were established at Beuron as far back as the 11th cent. It has become famous through its work for *liturgical reform, in which it has been esp. assisted by its daughter abbey of *Maria Laach, and the creation of a school of religious art. Until 1920 the now separated Belgian abbeys of *Maredsous and Mont-César (at Louvain) belonged to the Beuron Congregation.

K. T. Zingeler, Geschichte des Klosters Beuron im Donauthale (1890; on the Augustinian foundation). The present Benedictine Monastery is described in O. Wolff, O.S.B., Beuron. Bilder und Erinnerungen aus dem Mönchsleben der Jetztzeit (1889; ed. 6, 1923). 'Regula S. Patris Benedicti, Abbatis et Monachorum Patriarchae, cum Constitutionibus congregationis Beuronensis' in Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, liv (1885), pp. 78–144. J. Kreitmaier, Beuroner Kunst. Eine Ausdrucksform der christlichen Mystik (ed. 3, 1921). S. Mayer, O.S.B., Benediktinisches Ordensrecht in der Beuroner Kongregation (4 vols., Beuron, 1929–30). Id., Beuroner Bibliographie. Schriftsteller und Künstler während der ersten hundert Jahre des Benediktinerklosters Beuron 1863–1963 (ib., 1963). Festschrift zum hundertjährigen Bestehen der Erzabtei St. Martin, Beuron (ib., 1963). The periodical Benediktinische Monatsschrift zur Pflege religiösen und geistigen Lebens is publd. from Beuron (1919 ff.). Heimbucher, i, pp. 259–64, and ii, p. 653. H. S. Mayer in L.Th.K., ii (1931), cols. 268–70, s.v.

BEVERIDGE, WILLIAM (1637–1708), Bp. of *St. Asaph. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon and priest in the same month (Jan. 1661) and at once became Vicar of Ealing. In 1672 he published his Συνοδικόν, a collection of Greek canons, which contained an abundance of (in places misguided) erudition. In the same year he became Vicar of St. Peter's, Cornhill, where he had a daily service and a Eucharist every Sunday. In 1681 he became Archdeacon of Colchester and in 1684 Prebendary of *Canterbury. When T. *Ken was deprived in 1691, Beveridge was offered (but through his *nonjuring sympathies declined) the vacated see of *Bath and Wells; and was not again offered a bishopric until 1704, when he became Bp. of St. Asaph. His principal theological work was an Exposition of the Thirty-Nine Articles (posthumous, 1710). Though in general a High Churchman, he embraced much of J. *Calvin's teaching on *predestination, maintaining that the number of the saved would be very small.

Collected edd. of his Works [by T. Gregory] (2 vols., fol., London, 1720), T. H. Horne (9 vols., ib., 1824), and J. Bliss (L.A.C.T., 12 vols., 1843–8); all incomplete. A. B. Grosart in D.N.B., iv (1885), p. 447 f., s.v.

BEVERLEY MINSTER. The minster, which stands on the site of a Saxon church founded by St. *John of Beverley (d. 721) and is held to be one of the finest examples of early Gothic architecture in Britain, is now a parish church. In the 10th cent. a college of secular canons was established here. The existing building was constructed after the destruction of the earlier church by fire in 1188. At the *Reformation the minster was not dissolved until the Colleges and Chantries Act of 1547, as it was in the hands of secular canons. In 1713 a restoration prevented it from falling into ruin.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, ii (ed. 1819), pp. 128–30, and vi (pt. 2; 1830), pp. 1306–12. G. Poulson, Beverlac, or the Antiquities and History of the Town of Beverley, in the County of York, and of the Provostry and Collegiate Establishment of St. John's: with a minute description of the present Minster and the Church of St. Mary, and other Ancient and Modern Edifices, ii (1829); G. Oliver, The History and Antiquities of the Town and Minster of Beverley (1829). A. Hamilton Thompson, in V.C.H., Yorkshire, ii (1913), pp. 353–9.

BEYSCHLAG, WILLIBALD (1823–1900), German Evangelical theologian. In 1856 he became Court Preacher at Karlsruhe and in 1860 Professor of Pastoral Theology at Halle. One of the leading exponents of the '*Vermittlungstheologie', he rejected the *Chalcedonian Christology, but strongly attacked the rationalistic doctrines of E. *Renan and D. F. *Strauss. In his later years he took a prominent part in ecclesiastical politics. After 1870 he helped to draw up the new constitution of the Prussian Church, and he supported the Prussian Government in the *Kulturkampf, partly by lending his aid to the cause of the '*Old Catholics'. He was also one of the chief agents in founding the *Evangelischer Bund. His writings include Karl Immanuel Nitzsch (1871), Der Altkatholizismus (ed. 3, 1883), Leben Jesu (2 vols., 1885–6), Neutestamentliche Theologie (2 vols., 1891; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1895) and Aus meinem Leben. Erinnerungen und Erfahrungen der jüngeren Jahre (2 vols., Halle, 1896–9).

K. H. Pahncke, Willibald Beyschlag. Ein Gedenkblatt zur 5jähr. Wiederkehr seines Todestages (am 25. xi. 1900). Auf Grund von Tagenbüchern, Briefen und eigenen Erinnerungen (Tübingen, 1905). Id., in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxiii (1913), pp. 192–203.

BEZA, THEODORE (1519–1605), *Calvinist theologian. De Besze (thus the original form of his name) came from an old Catholic family of Vézelay in Burgundy. He was educated by his tutor M. Wolmar, first at Orléans, later at Bourges, where Wolmar became a Protestant and made his house a centre of the new religion, J. *Calvin being one of its frequent guests. In 1534 Wolmar returned to Germany, and from 1535 to 1539 Beza studied law at Orléans with a view to embracing an ecclesiastical career. Having soon abandoned this plan he went to *Paris, where he wrote Latin poetry and led an irregular life, as is witnessed by his Poemata Juvenilia (1548), the later editions of which he partly expurgated. In 1548 he officially renounced the Catholic religion and went to Geneva, where he formally married Claude Desnoz, with whom he had concluded a clandestine marriage in 1544. In 1549 he became professor of Greek at Lausanne. In 1554 he defended the burning of M. *Servetus at Geneva in his treatise De Haereticis a civili Magistratu Puniendis. In 1556 he published an annotated Latin translation of the Greek NT which has often been reprinted, the best edition being that of Cambridge, 1642. In 1558 Calvin offered him a professorship at the newly founded academy at Geneva, where he published his Confessio Christianae Fidei (1560), a popular exposition of Calvinist beliefs. In 1561 he completed the edition of the Psalms begun by C. *Marot, and in the same year took a prominent part in the colloquy between Catholics and Protestants at *Poissy. Soon afterwards civil war broke out between Catholics and Protestants in France, during which he tried to procure men and arms from the Protestant German princes. In 1563 he returned to Geneva, and on the death of Calvin in the next year he became the leader of the Swiss Calvinists. In the same year (1564) he published his Vita Calvini, which is more in the nature of a panegyric than of a historically accurate biography. In 1565 he brought out his first edition of the Greek text of the NT, to which were added the Vulgate and his own Latin translation. This is the first critical edition of the Greek NT, for which he had consulted 17 MSS. as well as variants collected by H. *Stephanus and the edition published by R. *Stephanus in 1550. In 1571 he presided over the National Synod of La Rochelle, and in 1580 published the Histoire ecclésiastique des Églises réformées au royaume de France, which, however, acc. to R. Reuss, Notice bibliographique (1889), is not his own work, but a compilation of memoirs sent him from all parts of France. In 1582 Beza brought out a 2nd edition of his NT, supplemented by the '*Codex Bezae', which he had discovered at Lyons (1562), the *Peshitta, and a Latin trans. of the Arabic version. In 1597 he was visited several times by St. *Francis de Sales, who endeavoured in vain to bring him back to the RC Church.

Beza's theological opinions, which are contained esp. in the Tractationes Theologicae (1570–82), are permeated with the Calvinist spirit, and are rigidly determinist in character. He teaches the necessity of all temporal events, so that even the Fall, by which free will was completely destroyed, belongs to the eternal plan of God.

See also Codex Bezae.

New edd. of the Histoire ecclésiastique, by G. Baum and E. Cunitz (3 vols., Paris, 1883–9), of his Chrestiennes Méditations by M. Richter (Textes Littéraires Français, 1964), of Abraham Sacrifiant by K. Cameron, Kathleen M. Hall, and F. Higman (ib., 1967), and of De Iure Magistratuum by K. Sturm (Texte zur Geschichte der Evangelischen Theologie, i; Neukirchen, 1965). Correspondance collected by H. Aubert and publd. by F. Aubert, H. Meylan and A. Dufour (Geneva, 1960 ff.). Modernized ed. of Confessio by M. Réveillaud, La Confession de la foi du chrétien (La Revue réformée, vi, Nos. 23–24; 1955). Lives by F. C. Schlosser (Heidelberg, 1809), J. W. Baum (only to 1563), 2 vols., Berlin, 1843–51), H. Heppe (Elberfeld, 1861), C. van Proosdij (Leyden, 1895), H. M. Baird (Heroes of the Reformation, No. 4, 1899), and P.-F. Geisendorf (Geneva, 1949). W. Kickel, Vernunft und Offenbarung bei Theodor Beza. Zum Problem des Verhältnisses von Theologie, Philosophie und Staat (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, xxv; 1967). F. Gardy, Bibliographie des œuvres théologiques, littéraires, historiques et juridiques de Théodore de Bèze (Geneva, 1960). On Beza and the Bible, see B. Heurtebize in Dict. Bibl., i (1895), col. 1772 f., s.v. E. Choisy, L'État chrétien à Genève au temps de Théodore de Bèze (1903). E. Choisy in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ii (1897), pp. 677–86.

B.F.B.S. See British and Foreign Bible Society.

BIASCA SACRAMENTARY. The oldest surviving MS. (10th cent.) of the *Ambrosian Rite. It is preserved at Milan in the *Ambrosiana (A. 24 bis inf.).

Crit. ed. by O. Heiming (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, li, etc.; 1969 ff.), with bibl.

BIBLE. (1) Word. The word 'Bible' is derived through the Fr. and Lat. from the Gk. βιβλία, 'books', used in the *Septuagint in such expressions as 'the Books of the Law' (1 Macc. 1. 56) and 'the holy Books' (1 Macc. 12. 9). The usual Gk. word (NT, *Philo, *Josephus) for the Jewish sacred writings, however, was not βιβλία but γραφαί ('scriptures'). But whereas γραφαί was translated into Lat. (scripturae), βιβλία was transliterated; and 'Biblia' thus became a new and distinctive term for the Holy Scriptures, denoting, as its plural form shows, a collection of books. As the Biblical books were increasingly considered a unity, the word (orig. neut. pl.) came to be understood as a fem. sing., whence the Eng. 'Bible', Fr. la Bible, etc.

(2) The Jewish Scriptures. The Jews classified their Scriptures in three groups: (1) the Law (*Torah), (2) the Prophets, and (3) other Books, known collectively as the 'Writings'. The Law comprised the *Pentateuch or 'Five Books of Moses' (Gen., Exod., Lev., Num., Deut.), regarded as on a higher level than all the rest. The 'Prophets' fell into two groups, the 'Former Prophets' (Josh., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., and 1 and 2 Kgs.) and the 'Latter Prophets' (Is., Jer., Ezek., and the Twelve *Minor Prophets). The inclusion of the 'Former Prophets', properly historical Books, among the Prophets so far accords with the modern view which sees in them history written from an essentially prophetic point of view. The 'Writings' comprised all the remaining books of the English OT (Ruth, 1 and 2 Chron., Ez., Neh., Est., Job, Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, and Dan.) as well as some others, e.g. Ecclus., Tob., Macc., which the Jews later rejected. By the time of Christ, Jews everywhere recognized the Law and the Prophets as holy Scripture, but the exact compass of the 'Writings' was still undefined. While some, e.g. the Pss., were universally received, others, e.g. Est., which were later officially accepted, were still disputed, and others again, e.g. Ecclus., which were later rejected, were not yet definitely excluded. The *Canon of the Jewish Scriptures was prob. settled at about the end of the first century, certainly by the end of the 2nd century.

(3) The Greek Old Testament. Before the Christian era the Hebrew Scriptures, including some which were later rejected from the canon, had been translated into Greek for the use of Greek-speaking Jews. This Greek Bible was extended by the inclusion of other Jewish writings of a similar kind, e.g. Wisd. Sol., which were not translations but original Greek compositions. The version of this Greek Bible in most general use was the *Septuagint (q.v.). As soon as Christianity won its footing in the Hellenistic world, this was the version in which Christians received the Jewish Scriptures; hence it was the first Christian Bible. The early separation of Christianity from Judaism caused the Christian canon before long to differ from that of the Jews. The Jewish rejection of certain books c. A.D. 100 was unheeded by the Church, which continued to reckon all books in the Septuagint as Scripture. It was only at a later date that the Church became generally conscious of its divergence here from Judaism. Then the Church designated those Books (or parts of Books) which were not in the Hebrew Canon as 'Deutero-canonical' or (as in the AV and RV) as *Apocrypha. They include some, e.g. Ecclus., Tob., Judith, 1 Macc., which it is fairly or quite certain were translations from the Heb. and others, e.g. Wisd. Sol. and 2 Macc., which are more probably original compositions by Jewish authors in Greek. Besides the Septuagint, other versions (*Symmachus, *Aquila, *Theodotion) also circulated to some extent among the Greek-speaking Jews and in the early Christian Church.

(4) The New Testament. At an early date the Christian Church came to regard certain of her own writings, esp. if of Apostolic origin, as of equal authority and inspiration to those she had inherited from Judaism (cf. the collocation of St. Paul's Epp. with 'the other scriptures' in 2 Pet. 3. 16). The *Canon (q.v.) of the NT, based on the Four Gospels and the Epp. of St. Paul, came into existence largely without definition. It was prob. formally fixed at *Rome in 382, when the Christian OT Canon (based on the Septuagint) was also defined. At *Alexandria the present Canon is already found in St. *Athanasius's Festal Ep. for 367.

(5) The Latin Bible, the Apocrypha, and other Versions. Many early Latin versions of parts of the Bible ('*Old Latin') came into use in the Christian Church, esp. in Africa and Italy. The OT Books were translated, not from the Hebrew but from the Greek. To remedy the confusion created by a variety of translations, St. *Jerome, encouraged by Pope *Damasus, revised the Gospels and subsequently made a fresh translation of the OT, wherever possible from the Hebrew original. St. Jerome's version (the '*Vulgate', q.v.), which was given formal recognition at the Council of *Trent (sess. IV), became the authoritative Bible of the RC Church.

Jerome's task necessarily drew his attention to the Deutero-canonical Books not found in the Heb. Bible. He himself sought to exclude them from the Christian canon ('libri canonici') as 'libri ecclesiastici' or Apocrypha. But though frequent doubts as to their status continued to be raised, the Latin Church retained them and finally settled their authority at Trent (sess. IV). At the Reformation, the Protestants in their vernacular versions either omitted the Apocrypha altogether or placed them in a separate section between the OT and the NT. At the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672 the E. Church, which had hitherto continued to use the Septuagint canon, but with some doubts about certain of the Deutero-canonical Books, rejected all but four (Tob., Judith, Ecclus., and Wisd.).

For the ancient versions other than the Septuagint and Vulgate, see Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic; for the principal English versions, see foll. entry and reff. there given; for translations into other modern languages, see under the names of the translators (M. *Luther, T. *Beza, &c.).

(6) Authority and Interpretation. The respect shown by Christ and the Apostolic Church to the Scriptures of Judaism forms the basis of the Christian attitude to the Bible. These OT Scriptures, regarded as inspired by the Holy Spirit (Lk. 24. 44, 2 Tim. 3. 15 f.), were an imperfect and partial revelation of God and a preparation for the coming of Christ, which in various ways they foretold (Heb. 1. 1 f.). If many of the ordinances which Judaism regarded as permanently valid were superseded in the Christian dispensation, the OT as a whole retained its authority, while its message was completed by the NT, so that the two together formed a single and final record of God's revelation of Himself. Hence the OT was ordained as the possession of the Church, to whom (and not to the Jews) Christians held that since the Coming of the Lord it primarily belonged.

In Patristic times the only serious challenge to this view of the Bible was that of *Marcion (q.v.), who repudiated the OT and accepted only part of what later came to constitute the NT. After the failure of Marcion's challenge the authority of the Bible was everywhere accepted. The other great heretics (e.g. *Arius) took a common stand with the orthodox and appealed (wrongly, as the Church believed) to both OT and NT in support of their doctrines. In the matter of interpretation, *allegorical methods were much in use in the Patristic, Medieval and Reformation periods. Apart from the latitude allowed by such methods of exegesis, the Divine inspiration of the Bible was generally held to require belief in the truth of all its assertions on matters not only of history, doctrine and ethics, but also of cosmology and natural science. In the earlier phases of the modern scientific movement (16th and 17th cents.) this view of inspiration was shared by Catholics and Protestants alike; and on these grounds the heliocentric teaching of *Galileo was condemned as heretical.

The difficulties in the way of maintaining this view of the Bible gave encouragement to 18th cent. *rationalism and *deism, and it was not until well into the 19th cent. that the critical study of the Bible was seriously undertaken. At first it met with much opposition, but in the later 19th and 20th cents. it was gradually accepted in the W. by most clergy and thoughtful laity outside the RC Church. More recently, despite the rigidity of earlier official pronouncements (see Biblical Commission), it has come to be widely welcomed also among RCs. It is still resisted by a certain school of Protestants (*Fundamentalists). It sets out from the belief that an ancient writing must be interpreted in its historical perspective, and related as far as possible to the circumstances of its composition and its meaning and purpose for its author and first readers. The tradition of a document's date and provenance must be weighed against the evidences of internal analysis and considerations of historical probability. This means comparing the Biblical books or their parts with one another, with evidence from non-Biblical writings, including the *Pseudepigrapha, and from archaeology, a process which has been assisted by the fact that external evidence became increasingly abundant and better understood in the 19th cent. By such methods many traditional opinions have been virtually overthrown, e.g. the Pentateuch is no longer attributed to the personal authorship of Moses, but ascribed to a much later period in the history of Israel (prob. 9th–5th cent. B.C.). In the NT the differences in historical value between St. *John's Gospel and the *Synoptics have been recognized. The Fourth Gospel is probably not the report of an eye-witness (John, the son of Zebedee) nor is its author to be identified with the writer of Rev. The more important critical conclusions are now so widely accepted by those qualified to judge as to be reckoned virtually assured. They are generally recognized as the only firm foundation for a true interpretation of the Scriptures.

Since the World War of 1914–18 the approach of scholars to the NT has shifted. A 'post-critical' period has begun, in which the interest in literary and historical questions has declined. More attention is paid to the theology of the Bible and to the interrelation of different parts of the OT and the NT. There is a revived interest in the typology of the Scriptures both in Great Britain (L. S. Thornton, A. M. Farrer) and in France (J. Daniélou). Many of the Liberal assumptions regarding 'lower' and 'higher' elements in religion have been discarded before a fresh assessment of the ritual and sacramental ('priestly') elements, which it is no longer felt necessary to depreciate in contrast to the ethical ('prophetic').

See also Textual Criticism.

TEXTS. Editions of the Hebrew OT by R. Kittel (1905–1906; ed. 8, 1952); Greek NT by B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. *Hort (1881); E. B. *Nestle (1898, ed. 26 by K. Aland, 1979); A. *Souter (1910; 2nd ed. 1947; text that underlying RV, apparatus only due to Souter); K. Aland–M. Black–B. M. Metzger–A. Wikgren (1966; ed. 3, 1975). For editions of the Septuagint and Vulgate, see s.vv. For English versions see foll. entry.

DICTIONARIES. W. Smith (1860–5; still useful); J. Hastings (4 vols., 1898–1902, and Extra vol., 1904, unsurpassed); Encyclopaedia Biblica (4 vols., 1899–1903; with some excellent and original articles, but often erratic); F. Vigouroux, Dictionnaire de la Bible (5 vols., 1891–1912) and Supplément (ed. L. Pirot 1928, in progress).

COMMENTARIES. Complete Commentaries ed. by J. R. Dummelow (1909) and A. S. *Peake (q.v., 1919; the 1962 ed. is a completely new book under the editorship of M. Black and H. H. Rowley). Also the New Commentary, ed. C. *Gore, H. L. Goudge, A. Guillaume (SPCK, 1928; includes the Apocrypha); Abingdon Bible Commentary, ed. F. C. Eiselen, E. Lewis, D. G. Downey (New York, 1929). A Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture, ed. B. Orchard, O.S.B., R. C. Fuller and R. Russell, O.S.B. (London, 1953; revised ed., 1969). Comm. on separate books in 'Cambridge Bible', 'Century Bible', 'International Critical Commentary', 'Moffat N.T.', 'New Century Bible', 'New Clarendon Bible', 'Black's N.T. Comm.'.

GENERAL WORKS. T. W. Manson (ed.), A Companion to the Bible (1939); H. Wheeler *Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940); G. F. Moore, The Literature of the Old Testament (H.U.L., 1913; new ed., L. H. Brockington, 1948); W. O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson, Introduction to the Books of the Old Testament (1934); O. Eissfeldt, Einleitung in das Alte Testament unter Einschluss der Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen (1934; ed. 3, 1964; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1965); W. O. E. Oesterley, Introduction to the Books of the Apocrypha (1935); A. H. McNeile, Introduction to the New Testament (Oxford, 19 7, ed. 2 by C. S. C. Williams, 1953); C. H. Dodd, The Bible To-day (1946); A. Richardson, Preface to Bible Study (1943); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., The Authority of the Old Testament (1947); R. H. Pfeiffer, Introduction to the Old Testament (New York, 1948; London, 1952). J. Burnaby, Is the Bible Inspired? (1949); F. F. Bruce, The Books and the Parchments (1950; ed. 3, 1963); J. K. S. Reid, The Authority of Scripture. A Study of the Reformation and Post-Reformation Understanding of the Bible (1957); G. W. Anderson, A Critical Introduction to the Old Testament (1959). The Cambridge History of the Bible, ed. S. L. Greenslade and others (3 vols., Cambridge, 1963–70). A. Robert and A. Tricot, Initiation biblique (1939).

BIBLE (English Versions). 1. PRE-REFORMATION VERSIONS. No complete Anglo-Saxon Bible, or even NT, exists. Translations of this period comprise (a) interlinear glosses (forming a crude word-by-word translation) of the Gospels and Pss., and (b) versions, sometimes abridged, of separate portions of the Bible, e.g. parts of Exod. 20–23 in the introductory section of King *Alfred's Laws, a prose version of Pss. 1–50 (possibly by Alfred himself), and the four Gospels in West Saxon (perhaps 10th cent.). Free renderings of OT narrative passages occur in the homilies of *Aelfric (c. 992), who also translated Gen. 1–35 (36–50 having been done by another hand previously) and (with considerable omissions) Exod. 1–Josh. 11. There are also numerous detached quotations and free renderings of other parts of the Bible in homilies.

In Middle English, from c. 1250 onwards, metrical versions of certain Books (esp. Gen. and Exod.), of Biblical history generally, and of the Psalter, were made. There followed in Midland and in Northern dialect prose versions of the Psalter, the latter by Richard *Rolle of Hampole.

In the 14th cent. several anonymous translations of NT books in various dialects were produced, apparently in connexion with *Lollardy and under the influence of J. *Wycliffe. But the popular view that Wycliffe himself was the first English translator of the complete Bible seems to be without foundation. There are two 'Wycliffite' versions:

(i) Early Version. The most important MS. is Bodley 959, which covers the greater part of the OT (i.e. as far as Bar. 3. 20, in Vulgate order). This early version is prob. the work of *Nicholas of Hereford, c. 1390. It was very literal, and was soon revised.

(ii) Later Version. This was produced on the basis of an intermediate version, prob. under John *Purvey's leadership. In the prologue the translator explains his method of working 'with divers fellows and helpers' and with 'many good fellows and cunning at the correcting of the translation'. It is more idiomatic than the early version.

Both these versions, esp. the former, follow the Vulgate (then the only text available), often so closely as to be detrimental to the clarity of the English. At the Council of Oxford in 1407 the making of any fresh translations of the whole or any portion of the Bible and the use of any translation made 'in the times of John Wycliffe or since' without diocesan or synodical sanction were forbidden. Nevertheless many MSS. of the Wycliffite versions (esp. the Purvey text) continued to be made and used until the appearance of W. *Tyndale's and M. *Coverdale's work.

2. THE REFORMATION PERIOD. The Wycliffite versions, being under ecclesiastical censure, were not printed. New facilities for textual study and translation of the Bible were opened up by the printing of the Vulgate (first in 1456), the Hebrew text (1488), Erasmus's Greek Testament (1516, with four revisions by 1535), the Complutensian Polyglot (1522), and S. *Pagninus's literal Latin rendering of the Hebrew OT (1528). The plan of a translation of the NT from the Greek is due to W. Tyndale and dates from c. 1523. He failed to obtain the patronage of C. *Tunstall, Bp. of London, but for a short while was supported by Humphrey Monmouth, a London merchant. In 1524 he fled to Germany, where he probably met at *Wittenberg M. *Luther, whose German NT had appeared in 1522. The printing of Tyndale's NT (in 4to) was begun at *Cologne in 1525; but before it was complete Tyndale was forced to flee to Worms, where it was restarted and finished (in 8vo) in 1526. Subsequent editions were printed in Holland, and copies soon reached England. Tyndale then translated the *Pentateuch, which was printed at Antwerp in 1529–30. His translation of Jonah appeared in 1531 and a revision of Gen. and of the NT in 1534, and of the NT again in 1535. He also translated, but never published, Josh.–2 Chron. inclusive. His NT and Pentateuch contained marginal notes, described by *Henry VIII as 'pestilent glosses', expressing his strongly Protestant views. In his prefaces, prologues, marginal references, etc., Tyndale is greatly dependent on Luther, but his translation is an independent and pioneer work, using Erasmus's Latin version of the NT, the Vulgate, and Luther's German, as well as his own interpretation of the original. His final version of the NT contains much which has passed unchanged into the Authorized Version.

In 1534 Canterbury *Convocation petitioned Henry VIII that the whole Bible might be translated into English. Though no royal command to this effect was issued, Miles *Coverdale published in 1535 a complete Bible, dedicated to the king. He based his rendering on Tyndale's where available; the other OT books he translated from the German of Luther and the Zürich version of H. *Zwingli and Leo Juda, with guidance from Pagninus and the Vulgate. He does not appear to have known Hebrew. His Psalter has remained in constant use until modern times in the BCP version of the Psalms. In 1537 a revised English Bible known as '*Matthew's Bible' appeared. It was the first to bear the King's authorization and was printed (probably in Antwerp) for the London printers, R. *Grafton and E. *Whitchurch. The ascription to 'Thomas Matthew' was nominal (the suggested identification with one Thomas Matthew of Colchester is improbable), its real editor being John *Rogers. The text consisted of Tyndale's Pentateuch, a version of Josh.–2 Chron. made from the Hebrew and hitherto unpublished (prob. also Tyndale's, cf. above), Tyndale's NT of 1535, and the remainder in Coverdale's version. Rogers's work was confined to careful editing and adaptation. For the Prayer of Manasses, omitted by Coverdale, he translated the French version of *Olivetan, from whom also he took some editorial matter. At about the same time Coverdale's Bible, previously printed abroad, was for the first time printed in England.

Further revisions of the whole Bible followed. The '*Great Bible' of 1539, printed in Paris, was issued under T. *Cromwell's patronage. In 1540 it was revised and reissued with a preface by T. *Cranmer and a notice identifying it with the 'Bible in the largest volume in English' which the *Injunction of 1538 ordered to be set up in churches. Both these revisions, which claimed on the title-page of 1539 to have been made from the Hebrew and Greek 'by the diligent study of divers excellent learned men', were by Coverdale, though they did not bear his name. Among the 'learned men' whom Coverdale had consulted was S. *Munster, who in 1534–5 had issued a literal German translation of the Hebrew. All notes and controversial matter were deliberately excluded. In 1539 R. *Taverner also published a revision of 'Matthew's Bible' based on careful attention to the Greek and to the Vulgate OT. In 1542 S. *Gardiner, Bp. of *Winchester, headed a reaction in favour of the Vulgate, and in 1546 the use of Tyndale's or Coverdale's NT was forbidden by royal decree. Under *Edward VI this policy was reversed by the Protestant movement and the English versions were again reprinted.

In the reign of *Mary, W. *Whittingham issued at Geneva in 1557 a new English NT for the Protestant exiles (for the first time divided into verses and printed in roman type). Then followed in 1559 the Psalms, and in 1560 a complete Bible, dedicated to Queen *Elizabeth I. This version (the '*Geneva Bible' (q.v.), also popularly the '*Breeches Bible') was based on Tyndale and the Great Bible, but influenced by J. *Calvin and T. *Beza, as well as by the French Bibles of Lefèvre and Olivetan. It had marginal notes written from an extreme Protestant viewpoint. Many of its renderings, not found in previous English versions, were later adopted into the AV.

In the reign of Elizabeth I the Geneva Bible obtained great popularity in England, although it lacked the royal and ecclesiastical authorization still possessed by the Great Bible. In 1566 Abp. M. *Parker undertook a revision of the latter in co-operation with other Bishops. This new translation (the '*Bishops' Bible') was published in 1568 and revised in 1572. It copied the Geneva Bible in the adoption of verse-divisions, but the rendering was explicitly based on the Great Bible, with attention to the Greek and to the Hebrew, for which Pagninus and Munster were taken as authorities. Phrases which savoured of 'lightness or obscenity' were altered and passages considered unedifying were marked for omission in public reading. All comment, in the form of marginal notes, was eschewed. As the several revisers worked without much co-ordination, this translation varies in quality from book to book.

Though not yet acknowledging the right of the laity to read the Bible in the vernacular without special ecclesiastical sanction, the RC Church also felt the need for an acceptable English version. The NT was translated by members of the English College at Reims, largely at the instigation of W. (later Cardinal) *Allen. The chief translators were Gregory *Martin and Richard Bristow, and it was issued in 1582. The OT followed from Douai in 1609–10 (see Douai-Reims Bible). Both NT and OT were translated from the Vulgate, in acc. with the Council of Trent's endorsement of this version; but in the NT at least the original language was consulted. Many words and turns of phrase show the close adherence (also deliberate) of the translators to their standard, e.g. 'Pasch' (Passover), 'Azymes' (Unleavened Bread), 'supersubstantial bread' (Mt. 6. 11), 'legates of Christ' (ambassadors). But in many places the English is vivid and direct. The Reims NT was among the versions consulted by the makers of the AV.

3. The Authorized Version (1611) and its Successors. At the *Hampton Court Conference a new version of the Bible was suggested to *James I, who in the same year appointed for the task fifty-four divines, among them the Puritan J. *Rainolds, J. Bois of Cambridge, H. *Savile, J. *Overall, L. *Andrewes, and W. *Barlow. The 'Bishops' Bible' was used as a basis, but earlier English versions were taken into consideration, and the new Bible was designedly a revision rather than a completely original work. Careful marginal notes on matters of text and translation (not theology) were provided and the best resources of contemporary scholarship were utilized. The result, published in 1611, was a version of great felicity, which within a generation displaced all previous versions, and became the only familiar, and in most cases the only known, form of the Bible to generations of English-speaking people. Beyond the royal authority under which it was made, and the statement on the title-page 'Appointed to be read in churches', no formal authorization was given to it. In the BCP of 1662 it was adopted as the text for the Epistles and Gospels, though the Psalter remained in Coverdale's version. It was carried from England to the American Colonies, and it continues in use in the U.S.A., where it is known as the 'King James Version', and in other English-speaking countries. See also Authorized Version.

The Authorized Version was not accepted entirely without criticism, but projects for further revision, e.g. that of the Long Parliament of 1653, came to nothing. Modifications in spelling, punctuation, use of capitals, etc., were unobtrusively made by editors, esp. Dr. Paris at Cambridge (1762) and B. Blayney at Oxford (1769), and the headlines of pages and the marginal references altered in different editions. The only new translations or revisions from this period were private ones. J. *Wesley's Explanatory Notes on the New Testament (1755) embodied a conservative revision of the AV. Other 18th-cent. translators (e.g. D. *Mace, 1729) went further in the introduction of colloquialisms or in free paraphrase into the style of contemporary elegance, esp. E. Harwood's A Liberal Translation of the NT (1768). Among scholarly translations of individual books was R. *Lowth's Isaiah (1778). The Reims-Douai version was revised by Bp. R. *Challoner (1749–50); and versions of the Pentateuch were issued by the Jewish scholars I. Delgado (1785) and D. Levi (1787).

4. The Revised Version (1881–5) and American Standard Version (1901). The growth of Biblical scholarship and the availability of new versions for comparison, as well as changes in English usage since 1611, led to occasional expressions of dissatisfaction with the AV from the early 19th cent., e.g. in H. Hallam's Literature of Europe (1839) and in the Edinburgh Review (1855). From the middle of the century proposals for the revision of the AV were both advocated and opposed.

In 1870 the Convocation of Canterbury took the matter up and a committee of revisers, to which non-Anglican scholars were co-opted, was appointed. They were instructed 'to introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the AV, consistently with faithfulness' and 'to limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the Authorized and earlier English versions'. No change in the text was to be finally approved except by a two-thirds majority; changes supported by only a simple majority were to be noted in the margin. The NT Company included F. J. A. *Hort, J. B. *Lightfoot, W. *Milligan, W. F. *Moulton, F. H. A. *Scrivener, B. F. *Westcott; the OT Company E. H. *Browne, A. B. *Davidson, F. *Field, C. D. Ginsburg, J. J. S. Perowne, E. H. Plumptre, N. C. *Thirlwall, and C. *Wordsworth (Bp. of Lincoln). The NT was published in 1881, the OT in 1885. The *Apocrypha was undertaken after the main work, and issued in 1895.

The Revisers followed stricter canons of translation than their predecessors of 1611, esp. in the constant use, as far as practicable, of the same English word or phrase for the same Greek or Hebrew. Though this principle caused many minor and apparently unnecessary changes, esp. in the NT, it facilitated the study of the original through the medium of the English. The Pss. and other poetical OT books were printed in lines acc. to their original structure, the rest of the text in paragraphs instead of in separate verses. The RV was widely criticized on publication and for some years after, but the work was well done within the limits set. The American Standard Version, publd. in 1901, incorporated into the text of the RV those renderings preferred by the American scholars who had co-operated (by correspondence).

5. Modern Translations. Since the publication of the RV and its American counterpart there have been numerous translations of single books produced as parts of learned commentaries and separately. There have also been a number of private translations of the complete NT or the whole Bible, aiming increasingly at making the Bible intelligible to the common man. These have included, on the Protestant side, the NT of R. F. Weymouth (1902); the NT (1913) and OT (1924) of J. *Moffatt (whole Bible, revised, 1935); The Bible. An American Translation by E. J. Goodspeed (NT, 1923, and Apocrypha, 1938) and J. M. Powis Smith (OT, 1935); The New Testament in Modern English (1958) by J. B. Phillips, a parish priest of the C of E, originally publd. as Letters to Young Churches (1947), The Gospels (1952), and The Young Church in Action (Acts, 1955); two versions in completely non-ecclesiastical English: The Good News Bible: Today's English Version publd. by the American and other Bible Societies (NT, New York, 1966; in Britain, slightly adapted, 1968; whole Bible in both editions, 1976), and The Living Bible paraphrased by K. N. Taylor (Wheaton, Illinois, NT, 1967; adapted British version, 1969; complete Bible in both editions, 1971); and the much more traditional NT version by W. Barclay (2 vols., 1968–9). There have also been two RC translations: the Westminster Version of the Holy Scriptures, ed. by C. Lattey and J. Keating (NT, 1935; OT incomplete), translated from the original languages, with attention to the Vulgate, and the version of R. A. *Knox (NT, 1945; OT, 1948–9; whole Bible, 1955), made from the Vulgate with due attention to the Greek and Hebrew. The latter, which was commissioned by the English RC hierarchy, after some hesitation received ecclesiastical sanction and has gained some approbation from non-RCs for its literary merit.

The most important Biblical translations of this century, as in the past, have been corporate ventures. A version in Basic English (i.e. using a restricted vocabulary advocated for teaching English to foreigners) of the NT (1941) and of the complete Bible (1949) was made by a committee under the chairmanship of S. H. Hooke. Of far greater significance was the Revised Standard Version (NT, 1946; OT, 1952; Apocrypha, 1957). This was a revision of the American Standard Version, intended to stand 'in the Tyndale–King James tradition', undertaken by a committee representing the major Protestant Churches of North America; the revisers took account of current scholarship and changes in language to produce a rendering more accurate than the American Standard Version and free from archaisms thought to be misleading, unintelligible, or unnecessary, but preserving a dignity suitable for public worship. The RSV is widely used not only in America but also in Britain (where it is printed in editions with British spellings) and other English-speaking countries. Its faithfulness to the original, and relative caution in modernization, have given it a wide appeal among all traditions, including conservative evangelicals (see *Fundamentalism). In 1965 the NT, and in 1966 the whole Bible (in Vulgate order) appeared in a 'Catholic edition' bearing the *imprimatur; it had slight textual changes and some adaptation in the notes for RC readers. An annotated edition of the original RSV was given the imprimatur in the U.S.A. in 1965. This official acceptance of the RSV in the RC Church implies a virtual end to the Council of *Trent's ruling that the Vulgate text and interpretation should be accorded supreme authority for RC translators.

The New English Bible (NT, 1961; whole Bible, with slightly revised NT, 1970) was made under the direction of a Joint Committee of the non-RC Churches of the British Isles, established in 1947 on the initiative of the Church of Scotland, with the co-operation of the *British and Foreign Bible Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland, to arrange for a new translation of the Bible in contemporary English, to be made from the original languages and drawing on the best scholarship and literary judgement. The panels of translators, from 1950 to 1965 under the direction of C. H. *Dodd and from 1965 that of C. H. Dodd and Sir Godfrey R. *Driver jointly, included H. H. Rowley (d. 1969), B. J. Roberts, A. R. Johnson, W. D. McHardy, G. D. Kilpatrick, C. F. D. Moule, and G. S. Duncan (d. 1965). In 1966 observers appointed by the hierarchies of England and Scotland joined the Committee, but no RC translators took part in the work. In 1971 a smaller continuation committee was constituted with full RC participation.

The Jerusalem Bible (1966) is an English parallel, made by a group of English-speaking RCs, of La Bible de Jérusalem, a French rendering, with notes, of the original texts, made by members of the Dominican École Biblique in Jerusalem and published in France (1948–54; first one-volume edition, 1955). The English text generally follows the interpretation established by the French but was made with reference to the original languages and is accompanied by revised notes. It follows the Vulgate order, but has the traditional (AV/RV) English forms of Biblical names rather than those of the Douai version long used by RCs (e.g. Hosea, not Osee); it uses 'Yahweh' not 'the LORD' to represent the *tetragrammaton in the OT, and is enterprising in its use of cross-headings, the typography of poetic passages, and general modernity. It has been accepted by many outside the RC Church.

In the C of E, the liturgical reading of the AV is assumed in the BCP, but the legality of reading the RV was established in 1899. In 1965 the Prayer Book (Versions of the Bible) Measure authorized the optional use, for any scriptural passage, of the RSV or NEB, to which the Jerusalem Bible was added in 1969. In the RC Church in England, since 1954 the Knox translation, and since 1964 the Jerusalem Bible and several other versions have been permitted.

The principal editions of the pre-Reformation versions are: W. W. Skeat (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint Mark in Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Versions (Cambridge, 1871); id. (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint Luke . . . (ib., 1874); id. (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint John . . . (ib., 1878); id. (ed.) The Gospel according to Saint Matthew in Anglo-Saxon, Northumbrian, and Old Mercian Versions (ib., 1887); J. W. Bright (ed.), The Gospel of Saint Luke in Anglo-Saxon (Oxford, 1893); H. Sweet (ed.), The Oldest English Texts (E.E.T.S., lxxxiii; 1885), pp. 183–420 [Vespasian Psalter]); G. P. Krapp (ed.), The Paris Psalter (New York, 1932); K. D. Bülbring (ed.), The Earliest Complete English Prose Psalter, part i (E.E.T.S., xcvii; 1891); H. R. Bramley (ed.), The Psalter or Psalms of David and Certain Canticles with a Translation and Exposition in English by Richard Rolle of Hampole (Oxford, 1884); Anna C. Paues (ed.), A Fourteenth Century English Biblical Version (Cambridge, 1904); J. Forshall–F. Madden (ed.), The Holy Bible . . . in the Earliest English Versions made from the Latin Vulgate by John Wycliffe and his Followers (5 vols., Oxford, 1850); C. Lindberg (ed.), MS. Bodley 959 (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, vi, viii, x, xiii, xx; 1959–69). Margaret Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and other Medieval Biblical Versions (1920). S. L. Fristedt, The Wycliffite Bible, pt. i (Stockholm Studies in English, iv; 1953); id., 'New Light on John Wycliffe and the First Full English Bible' in Studier i modern Språkvetenskap, New Series, iii (1968), pp. 61–86. The English Hexapla of the NT Scriptures [Wycliffe, Tyndale, Cranmer, Genevan, Anglo-Rhemish, Authorized] (1841). B. F. Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (1868; 3rd ed., revised W. A. Wright, 1905); A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911); F. H. A. Scrivener, The Authorized Edition of the English Bible (1611). Its subsequent reprints . . . (1884); H. W. *Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940); C. C. Butterworth, The Literary Lineage of the King James Bible 1340–1611 (Philadelphia, 1941); H. Pope, O.P., English Versions of the Bible (St. Louis, Mo., 1952); F. F. Bruce, The English Bible. A History of Translations (1961; ed. 2, 1970); F. C. Grant, Translating the Bible (1961). S. L. Greenslade (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible. The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (1963), esp. pp. 141–70 and 361–82. G. [N. S.] Hunt, About the New English Bible (1970). For printed edd., see list in Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968). Margaret T. Hills (ed.), The English Bible in America. A Bibliography of Editions of the Bible & New Testament Published in America 1777–1957 (New York, 1961).

BIBLE CHRISTIANS. One of the bodies, also known as 'Bryanites', which went to form the *United Methodist Church in 1907. It traces its origin to William O'Bryan (1778–1868), a local preacher of the *Wesleyan Methodist Church. Finding many of the villages of Devon and Cornwall in almost complete ignorance of the Gospel, he extended his very successful evangelism beyond the limits of his own circuit. In the conflict with the local Wesleyan authorities which ensued, O'Bryan, not without hesitation and regret, separated himself, and in 1815 he founded the first society of a new community at Shebbear, in N. Devon. Although faced by much opposition and persecution the new movement spread rapidly. At the end of the first year there were 567 members, and after only five years of work in the west, missionaries were sent to Kent and London. In 1831 missions were founded in Canada and Prince Edward Island; in 1846, in the United States; in 1850, in Australia.

For several years O'Bryan, as the founder of the movement, was accepted as the natural head of the Society and president of its annual Conference. His assumption of autocratic control of the property and affairs of his Churches gradually led to disputes, which were temporarily settled in 1827 by the Conference being the recognized organ of government with O'Bryan continuing as president. O'Bryan, however, was dissatisfied and in 1829 left his society; in 1831 he went to America. Later he was reconciled to the Conference, though he never rejoined it.

The Bible Christians held the doctrines common to all the branches of Methodism. When the Conference was officially constituted in 1831 provision was made for the inclusion of lay representatives. Women were admitted to the ministry equally with men, esp. in the earliest period. As it grew the movement did notable missionary work, e.g. that of Samuel Pollard in South-West China.

In 1907 the Bible Christians united with the *Methodist New Connexion and the *United Methodist Free Churches to form the *United Methodist Church.

G. Eayrs in W. Townsend–H. B. Workman–G. Eayrs (edd.), A New History of Methodism, i (1909), pp. 502–13, 521–4, 543–5, ii (1909), pp. 222 f., 225 f., 474–82, and passim.

BIBLE CHURCHMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY. See B.C.M.S.

BIBLE SOCIETY, British and Foreign. See British and Foreign Bible Society.

BIBLIA PAUPERUM (Lat., 'the Bible of Poor Men'). Though also used from the early Middle Ages to describe various other short biblical summaries for elementary instruction, the title Biblia Pauperum gradually came to denote specifically a Bible picture-book in which on each page a set group of figures illustrates a NT antitype flanked by two corresponding OT *types, with short explanatory texts. More than eighty MS. examples are known from the 14th cent.; they can be grouped into separately recognizable traditions from Austria and S. Germany. Soon after the invention of printing in the mid-15th cent., the Biblia Pauperum enjoyed a short vogue in the Netherlands and Germany in the form of various blockbook (xylographic) editions, each page of pictures and text being printed from a single woodcut, or mixture of woodcut and type. A number of these blockbook editions have been reproduced in facsimile.

Description and discussion of MSS. in H. Cornell, Biblia Pauperum (Stockholm, 1925). H. Engelhardt, Der theologische Gehalt der Biblia Pauperum (1927). G. Schmidt, Die Armenbibeln des XIV. Jahrhunderts (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, xix; 1959). Elizabeth Soltész (ed.), Biblia Pauperum. Facsimile ed. of the forty-leaf blockbook in the Library of Esztergom Cathedral (Budapest, 1966; with notes and introd. tr. into Eng., ib., 1967). R. L. P. Milburn in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, ii (1969), pp. 280–308.

BIBLIANDER (=Buchmann), THEODOR (c. 1504–64), Zwinglian theologian. He succeeded to H. *Zwingli's chair at Zürich University on the Reformer's death in 1531. His leanings were towards humanism. He maintained, e.g., that the heathen possessed by the law of nature a knowledge of God and attacked the *Calvinistic doctrine of *predestination. Among his chief works were a Hebrew grammar (1535), editions of the *Koran (1543) and of the *Protevangelium Jacobi (1552), and some studies in chronology (1551; 1558).

E. Egli, Analecta Reformatoria, ii (1901), pp. 1–144. R. Pfister, 'Das Türkenbüchlein Theodor Biblianders' in Theologische Zeitschrift, ix (1953), pp. 438–54. E. Egli in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 185–7, s.v.

BIBLICAL COMMISSION. Originally a committee of cardinals, assisted by consultors, created as an organ for the study of the Bible in the RC Church. It was instituted by *Leo XIII in the Apostolic Letter 'Vigilantiae' (30 Oct. 1902) to further Biblical studies in conformity with the requirements of modern scholarship and to safeguard the authority of Scripture against the attacks of exaggerated criticism. In 1904 it was empowered to confer academic degrees. One of its chief tasks was to answer questions on Biblical matters. Among its most notable decisions were those on the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch (1906), on the authenticity and historicity of the Fourth Gospel (1907), and on the Synoptic Problem (1912). Its responses were considered binding in conscience. A somewhat more liberal attitude to Biblical criticism was reflected in *Pius XII's encyclical 'Divino Afflante Spiritu' (30 Sept. 1943). In two reviews of the second edition of the Enchiridion Biblicum (1954) the Commission's Secretary, A. Miller, and its Subsecretary, A. Kleinhans, suggested that RC scholars could discuss the matters of literary and historical criticism involved in the Commission's earlier responses 'with full freedom'. The Commission's instruction 'De historica evangeliorum veritate' (1964) recognized three stages in the development of the Gospel tradition and approved the prudent use of *form criticism. In 1971 the Commission was reorganized as part of the Congregation for the *Doctrine of the Faith. It is composed of 20 RC scholars who meet once a year and advise the Congregation and the Pope on Biblical aspects of current theological issues.

The responses of the Commission are printed in Enchiridion Biblicum. Documenta Ecclesiastica Sacram Scripturam Spectantia auctoritate Pontificiae Commissionis de Re Biblica edita (ed. 4, Rome–Naples, 1961), Nos. 160 f., 181–4, 187–9, 276–80, 324–39, 383–416, 513–21, 534–7 and 621; two letters ib., Nos. 522–33 and 577–81; they are mainly repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 32, 1963), Nos. 3372 f., 3394–400, 3505–9, 3512–9, 3521–8, 3561–78, 3581–93, 3628–30, 3750 f., 3792–6, and 3862–4. The instruction 'De historica evangeliorum veritate' is pr. in A.A.S., lvi (1964), pp. 712–18. Reviews of Enchiridion Biblicum (ed. 2) by A. Miller, O.S.B., in Benediktinische Monatschrift, xxxi (1955), pp. 49 f., and by A. Kleinhans, O.F.M., in Antonianum, xxx (1955), pp. 63–5. B. N. Wambacq in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 551–4, s.v. 'Pontifical Biblical Commission'.

BIBLIOLATRY. Excessive veneration for the letter of Scripture, as found in certain *Protestants in *Reformation times and since. Cf. the cry that 'The Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants' (based on a misunderstanding of W. *Chillingworth).

BICKELL, GUSTAV (1838–1906), Orientalist and Patristic scholar. A convert to the RC Church (1865), he was ordained priest in 1867 and was elected to professorships at Innsbruck (1874) and Vienna (1892). His Patristic writings include editions of St. *Ephraem's Carmina Nisibena (1866) and the works of Isaac of Antioch (2 vols., 1873–1877). In Messe und Pascha (1872) he maintained that the Christian Eucharistic rite had its basis in the Jewish ritual, the Liturgy of the Catechumens corresponding with the morning prayer in the synagogue and the Canon of the Mass with the Jewish passover ritual.

Biog. sketch by D. M. Müller in Almanach der kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, lvi (Vienna, 1906), pp. 347–51.

BIDDING PRAYER. The form of prayer interceding for the Universal Church, the State, Clergy, Nobility and Commons, and commemorating the departed, which the Anglican Canon 55 (1604) ordered to be used by preachers before the sermon. In origin it derives from the group of intercessions, usually in Litany form, which in ancient liturgies occurred after the Sermon or the Gospel. These survive in the Roman Solemn Prayers ('the Collects') of the *Good Friday Liturgy and in the isolated 'Oremus' in the ordinary Latin Mass (at the beginning of the 'Mass of the Faithful').

By the 9th cent. the priest prayed for all conditions of men and made commemoration of the departed after the sermon at Mass on Sundays and festivals. In England during the Middle Ages this was called 'Bidding the *Bedes'. These Biddings formed part of the vernacular devotions, instructions, and notices attached to the sermon, and together were known in France (where they survive in certain places) as the Prône (a word of uncertain origin). At first they were left to the discretion of the priest but gradually tended to assume fixed forms. The Bidding Prayer is now seldom used except in the universities, at Assize sermons, and on state occasions.

In the Liturgical Constitution of the Second *Vatican Council (4 Dec. 1963), provision was made for the restoration of the 'Community Prayer' or 'Prayer of the Faithful' in the Roman Mass, esp. on days on which there is a homily. 'By this prayer, in which the people are to take part, intercession will be made for Holy Church, for the civil authorities, for those oppressed by various needs, for all mankind and for the salvation of the entire world' (sect. 53). In the C of E a similar prayer, in the form of a series of biddings, has been incorporated in the Eucharist in the ASB.

F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, ii (1915), Appendix I, pp. 1020–45. P. de Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, lxii; 1977).

BIDDLE, JOHN (1615–62), English *Unitarian. Graduating in 1638 at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, he became shortly afterwards master of the free school at *Gloucester, where he wrote his 'XII Arguments' against the deity of the Holy Ghost. In 1645 the MS. was seized and Biddle was imprisoned for a time. In 1647, however, the 'XII Arguments' were published, and on 6 Sept. they were ordered to be burned by the hangman. Notwithstanding the ordinance of 1648, visiting with death all who denied the Trinity, he published two anti-Trinitarian tracts, but he was saved by his friends among the *Independent Parliamentarians and retired to Staffordshire, where he preached and helped to edit an edition of the *Septuagint. On the passing of the act of oblivion of 1652, his adherents ('Biddellians', '*Socinians' or 'Unitarians') began regular Sunday worship. Biddle now published two catechisms, for which he was summoned before Parliament (1654) and again imprisoned. On release he was again put on trial, but banished by Cromwell to the Scilly Isles (1655). Returning to London on his release (1662), he was arrested, fined, and sent to prison, where he died.

Vita, said to be by J. Farrington (anon., London, 1682). J. Toulmin, A Review of the Life, Character and Writings of the Rev. John Biddle, M.A. (1791). H. J. McLachlan, Socinianism in Seventeenth-Century England (Oxford, 1951), esp. pp. 163–217. A. B. Grosart in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 13–16.

BIEL, GABRIEL (c. 1420–95), scholastic philosopher. Educated at Heidelberg, Erfurt, and Cologne, he later joined the *Brethren of the Common Life at Marienthal and became first provost of the house at Butzbach, and in 1479 was appointed provost of the house at Urach. With Count Eberhard of Württemberg, he was responsible for founding the University of Tübingen, where he held the professorial chair of theology. One of the last great scholastic thinkers, he was a follower of the *nominalist thought of *William of Ockham, though he showed himself tolerant of opposite systems. His views on the relationship between the economy of commercial life and theology reflect the transitional nature of his age. Thus he held that the 'just price' was determined by supply and demand rather than by theological maxims, and that the merchant is a useful and necessary member of society. His works included a 'Commentary on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard', an exposition of the *Canon of the Mass, and a treatise 'De potestate et utilitate monetarum'.

Most of his works exist only in edd. of 15th and 16th cents.; list in Überweg, ii, p. 604. Mod. ed. of his 'Quaestiones de Justificatione', by C. Feckes (Opuscula et Textus, Series Scholastica, iv; Münster i.W., 1929), of his Canonis Misse Expositio by H. A. Oberman and W. J. Courtenay (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, xxxi–xxxiv; 1963–7), and of his Defensorium Obedientiae Apostolicae, with Eng. tr., by H. A. Oberman, D. E. Zerfoss, and W. J. Courtenay (Cambridge, Mass., 1968). Eng. tr. of his Treatise on the Power and Utility of Moneys, by R. B. Burke (Philadelphia and Oxford, 1930). M. *Luther, Randbemerkungen zu Gabriel Biels Collectorium in Quattuor Libros Sententiarum und zu dessen Sacri Canonis Missae Expositio (Lyons, 1514; repr. 1933). F. X. Linsenmann, 'Gabriel Biel und die Anfänge der Universität zu Tübingen' in Th. Q., xlvii (1865), pp. 195–226; id., 'Gabriel Biel, der letzte Scholastiker, und der Nominalismus', ib., pp. 449–81 and 601–76. G. Plitt, Gabriel Biel als Prediger geschildert (1879). K. Feckes, Die Rechtfertigungslehre des Gabriel Biel und ihre Stellung innerhalb der Nominalistischen Schule (1925); id., 'Gabriel Biel, der erste grosse Dogmatiker der Universität Tübingen, in seiner wissenschaftlichen Bedeutung' in Th. Q., cviii (1927), pp. 50–76. H. A. Oberman, The Harvest of Medieval Theology. Gabriel Biel and Late Medieval Nominalism (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), with bibl. Überweg, ii, pp. 611–13, with bibl., p. 786; M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 1429–35, s.v., with bibl.; V. Heynck in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 552, s.v., with further refl.

BIGAMY. (1) A 'second marriage' contracted by a person whose 'first' husband or wife is still alive, when the 'first' marriage has not been declared null. The traditional view of the W. Church is that such a union is no marriage. English civil law takes the same view if a divorce has not been obtained, and, moreover, regards bigamy in such circumstances as a criminal offence. See also Divorce.

(2) Acc. to older usage, the term relates to a second marriage after the death of one of the partners to the first marriage. In this sense it is also known as 'digamy' (q.v.).

J. Vergier-Boimond in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 853–88, s.v. 'Bigamie (l'Irrégularité de)', with extensive bibl.; R. Naz, ib. cols. 888 f., s.v. 'Bigamie (le Délit de)'.

BIGG, CHARLES (1840–1908), Church historian. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was in his early life a college tutor and schoolmaster. In 1886 he delivered and published his *Bampton Lectures on The Christian Platonists of Alexandria, one of the finest works of English theology in the 19th cent. From 1887 to 1901 he was rector of Fenny Compton, and in 1901 succeeded W. Bright as Regius Prof. of ecclesiastical history at Oxford. Among his other writings are Neoplatonism (1895) and The Origins of Christianity (a history of the pre-Nicene Church, posthumous, ed. by T. B. *Strong, 1909). He also edited The Confessions of St. Augustine (1898) and *The Imitation of Christ (1898).

A. Clark in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i (1912), p. 162 f., s.v.

BILNEY, THOMAS (c. 1495–1531), Protestant martyr. A member of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, he is said to have converted H. *Latimer to the doctrines of the Reformation, as well as to have had some influence on M. *Parker, the future archbishop. In 1527 he was arrested for heresy, but escaped death by recanting. Four years later he was again on trial for *Lollardy; and after recanting and relapsing he was burnt at *Norwich on 19 Aug. 1531. The grounds of his condemnation are obscure. He seems to have been perfectly orthodox on such things as *Transubstantiation and the *Sacrifice of the Mass, but to have aroused hostility by preaching violent sermons against *relics, *pilgrimages, and the cult of the Saints.

The principal authority is J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments (ed. G. Townsend, iv, 1846, pp. 619–56 and 755–63). J. Y. Batley, On a Reformer's Latin Bible. Being an Essay on the Adversaria in the Vulgate of Thomas Bilney (Cambridge, 1940), with biographical sketch, pp. 1–12. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 40–3, s.v.

BILOCATION. The presence of a person in more than one place at the same moment. Certain Saints, e.g. *Alphonsus Liguori, *Antony of Padua, and *Philip Neri, are supposed to have been granted this gift on occasion.

BINATION. The celebration of two Masses on the same day by one priest. In the RC Church it is forbidden, except by special dispensation granted by the local bishop if pastoral necessity requires it. In the Middle Ages the custom gave rise to scandals through priests who multiplied their Masses to obtain additional Mass stipends. The present legislation is to be found in the Codex Iuris Canonici*, c. 806, para. 1, combined with the *Motu Proprio 'Pastorale Munus' (A.A.S., lvi (1964), pp. 5–12).

K. Holböck, Die Bination. Rechtsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Rome, 1941). É. Jombart in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 889–98, s.v. 'Binage'.

BINDING AND LOOSING. The power given by Christ to St. *Peter (Mt. 16. 19) and later to all the Apostles (Mt. 18. 18). It seems to be a general authority to exercise discipline over the Church, and, while some have identified it with the power of forgiving or retaining sins (Jn. 20. 23), others hold it to be a wider and more inclusive authority.

H. Vorgrimler, 'Das "Binden und Lösen" in der Exegese nach dem Tridentinum bis zu Beginn des 20. Jahrhunderts' in Z.K.T., lxxxv (1963), pp. 460–77, with reff. F. Büschel in T.W.B., ii (1935), p. 59 f., s.v. δέω; J. Jeremias, ib., iii (1938), pp. 749–53, s.v. 'κλείς. B. Die Schüsselgewalt'; O. Michel in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 374–80, s.v. 'Binden und Lösen', with extensive bibl. See also comm. to John, Gospel of St., and Matthew, Gospel of St.

BINGHAM, JOSEPH (1668–1723), author of The Antiquities of the Christian Church. He was educated at Wakefield Grammar School and University College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1689. He was delated to the Vice-Chancellor for a sermon preached in St. Mary's, Oxford, on 28 Oct. 1695 and on being condemned (with scant justice) for teaching the tritheistic doctrines of W. *Sherlock, resigned his Fellowship. In the same year he became rector of Headbourne Worthy, near *Winchester, and in 1712 also rector of Havant, holding the livings in plurality until his death. In 1706 he argued in The French Church's Apology for the Church of England that the real affinities of the *Huguenots were with the C of E and not with the English Dissenters. He also took an active part in the controversy on lay-baptism, of which he was a strong advocate. His most famous work, the Origines Ecclesiasticae; or the Antiquities of the Christian Church (10 vols., 1708–22), with its wealth of systematically arranged information, on the hierarchy, organization, rites, discipline, and calendar of the early Church, was the fruit of some twenty years' labours and has not been superseded. In the preface to a projected 2nd edition he advocated the reunion of the Churches on the basis of primitive episcopacy. A Latin version was published at Halle in 1724–8 by the *Lutheran, J. H. Grischow, and a RC abridgement at Augsburg in 1788–96.

Works in 2 vols., fol., 1726; in 9 vols., with Life by his great-grandson, Richard Bingham, 1821–9. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 48–50; F. E. *Brightman in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 55 f.; N. Sykes in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), cols. 1506–8, s.v.

BINITARIANISM. The belief that there are only two Persons in the Godhead instead of the three of the *Trinity, thus involving the denial of the deity of the Holy Spirit. It has been held that a few early Christian theologians, e.g. *Tertullian before he became a *Montanist, had an imperfect apprehension of the Trinity and thought in binitarian terms. The word appears to have been coined by F. *Loofs in 1898.

W. Macholz, Spuren binitarischer Denkweisen seit Tertullian (1902).

BIRD, WILLIAM. See Byrd, William.

BIRETTA. The hard square cap sometimes worn by clergy in the W. Church. In origin it was apparently a soft hat, the use of which was originally confined to the higher graduates of universities; but in the 16th cent. its use was allowed to all the clergy. Its colour is black for *priests, purple for *bishops, red for *cardinals, and white for *Premonstratensian canons and Cistercian abbots. In recent times the biretta has tended to go out of use.

Braun, L.G., pp. 510–14. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., ii (1907), p. 577 f., with reff.

BIRGITTA, St., of Sweden. See Bridget, St., of Sweden.

BIRINUS, St. (d. 649 or 650), first Bishop of *Dorchester, near Oxford, and Apostle to the West Saxons. He was consecrated bishop by Asterius at Genoa and landed in Wessex in 634. In the following year he converted and baptized the King, Cynegils, who gave him Dorchester as his episcopal see. It had been intended that he should evangelize the more remote parts of Britain, but he remained in Wessex. Feast day, 3 Dec. (in some places, 5 Dec.).

The MS. Lives are listed in Hardy, i, pp. 235–9. J. E. Field, St. Berin, the Apostle of Wessex. The History, Legends, and Traditions of the Beginning of the West Saxon Church (1902); includes discussion of primary sources. T. Varley, St. Birinus and Wessex. From Odin to Christ (1934). Rose Graham in D.H.G.E., viii (1935), col. 1530 f., s.v.

BISCHOP, SIMON. See Episcopius.

BISHOP (Gk. ἐπίσκοπος, lit. 'overseer'). The highest order of ministers in the Christian Church. The word is an Anglo-Saxon corruption of episcopus.

In Catholic Christendom (incl. the Anglican Communion) Bishops are held to be distinguished from priests chiefly by their power to confer holy *Orders and to administer the rite of *Confirmation. They normally receive consecration at the hands of a *Metropolitan and two other bishops, and are consecrated to rule a particular diocese or part of the Church within that Metropolitan's *province. In addition to consecration two further things are necessary: election and mission. Election is the choosing of a particular person. The candidate must be of mature age (30 years in the C of E), of legitimate birth, have spent a certain period in priest's orders, and be of good character and sound doctrine. In the Roman Church election is normally performed by the Pope, who in any case has the final decision in the choice of a candidate. Elsewhere the usual method is for a Bishop to be chosen by the dean and chapter of the cathedral of the diocese or some other ecclesiastical body existing specially for this purpose. Throughout the history of the Church secular rulers have from time to time secured the right to nominate candidates to vacant sees, but theoretically this has always been subject to ecclesiastical approval. In the C of E at the present day the crown gives leave to the *dean and chapter to proceed to an election (the document containing this permission is known as the congé d'élire) and also nominates the person to be elected. After the election the royal assent is given to it. Should the chapter elect a person other than the one nominated, the royal assent would, presumably, be refused and the electors become subject to certain pains and penalties. When there is no recognized chapter in the diocese the crown appoints a person directly by letters patent. Mission is the conveying of the powers of a Bishop. In the C of E the Metropolitan of the province confirms the election and at the direction of the crown proceeds to the consecration. If the candidate is nominated directly by the crown there is no confirmation. After consecration the new Bishop is enthroned in his cathedral and takes possession of his see. Acc. to Anglican theory this is the result of his acceptance into their company by the other Bishops. In the Roman Church a Bishop receives mission either directly from the Pope or through the Metropolitan, and every diocesan Bishop is required either in person or by an approved deputy to visit Rome every five years and report on the state of his diocese. (See Ad Limina Apostolorum.)

The chief duties of a modern Bishop consist in administering those Sacraments which he alone is competent to confer (Confirmation, Ordination), and in the general oversight of his diocese, incl. such matters as the supervision of the clergy. The Diocesan Bishop may be assisted by other Bishops who are subordinate to him and known as *suffragans (q.v.), auxiliaries, coadjutors, or assistants. In the E. Church the position and spiritual powers of the Bishop are similar to those in the West, with the exception of the additional requirement that bishops, unlike other priests, are required to be celibate. This practice virtually necessitates their recruitment from the monastic communities.

In the C of E the Diocesan Bishop exercises jurisdiction either through his *Consistory Court, over which he himself presides in theory (though he usually delegates the presidency nowadays to his *chancellor), or through commissaries appointed under the Church Discipline Act of 1840. From medieval times the English Bishops have had seats in the House of Lords; but under the Bishoprics Act of 1878 only twenty-six English Bishops (viz. the two Archbishops and the Bps. of London, *Durham, and *Winchester ex officio, and twenty-one others senior by nomination to an English see) enjoy this privilege. The Bishop's connexion with his Cathedral Church, which is governed by the statutes of the various Cathedrals, varies considerably from diocese to diocese.

Among the insignia traditional to the Bishop (most of them now widely in use in the Anglican Communion) are the throne in his cathedral (usually on the Gospel side of the sanctuary; at Norwich behind the high altar; see Cathedra), *mitre, *pastoral staff, *pectoral cross, *ring, and caligae (i.e. stockings and sandals). In England he is addressed as 'Right Reverend', if an Archbishop, as 'Most Reverend'. In the RC Church he is styled 'Reverendissimus et Illustrissimus'. Here, and often elsewhere, he is mentioned throughout his diocese by name in the Eucharistic prayer.

The beginnings of the Episcopate in early times have long been debated, partly because of the inconclusiveness of the NT evidence by itself, partly on account of its relevance to the many contemporary forms of Church government. It seems that at first the terms 'episcopos' and 'presbyter' were used interchangeably (cf. e.g. Acts 20. 17 and 20. 28). But for St. *Ignatius (early 2nd cent.), Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons are already quite distinct. On the other hand, elsewhere, notably in Egypt, the threefold ministry does not seem to have established itself until considerably later. By the middle of the 2nd cent. all the leading centres of Christianity would appear to have had their Bishops, and from then until the Reformation, Christianity was everywhere organized on an episcopal basis.

The title of Bishop was retained after the Reformation in certain *Lutheran Churches, notably those of *Denmark, *Norway, *Finland, *Sweden, and Transylvania. It was temporarily restored in Prussia in 1701 and was customary in certain other German provinces such as Schleswig-Holstein; it was generally adopted for the *'Superintendents' of the German Lutheran Church in 1927. In the case of Lutheran Bishops, however, with the exception of Sweden, and Finland until 1884, the title implied no claim to Apostolic Succession or any of the peculiar powers deriving therefrom, such as are normally connected with the Catholic use of the word. The title is also in use among certain other Protestant bodies such as the *Moravians and the *Methodist Episcopal Churches of America and Africa: the former claiming Apostolic Succession although it is Presbyterian in government; the latter derives its succession from the appointments made by J. *Wesley.

See also Apostolic Succession, Chorepiscopus, Suffragan Bishop.

A. Barbosa, Pastoralis Solicitudinis, siue de Officio, et Potestate Episcopi Tripartita Descriptio (2 vols., Lyons, 1628); C. Ziegler, De Episcopis, eorumque Juribus, Privilegiis et Vivendi Ratione (Nuremberg, 1686). D. Bouix, Tractatus de Episcopo, ubi et de Synodo Diocesana (2 vols., Paris, 1859). R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, i (ed. 2, by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 18–86; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8, by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp.

70–86. G. Coulton in D.E.C.H., pp. 58–63, s.v. The main duties and rights of modern RC bishops are laid down in CIC, canons 329–62. E. Valton in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1701–25, s.v. 'Évêques. Questions théologiques et canoniques', with refr. F. Claeys-Bouuaert in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 569–89, s.v. 'Évêques', with bibl.

There is an extensive literature on the origins of the episcopate, much of it of a high standard. For the chief original texts on the early growth of episcopacy, D. *Stone, Episcopacy and Valid Orders in the Primitive Church (1910). J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, Book II, chh. 1–18 (1708), pp. 49–257. The chief modern books on the subject include F. C. *Baur, Über den Ursprung des Episcopats (1838); J. B. *Lightfoot, 'The Christian Ministry' in id., St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (1868), pp. 179–267; E. *Hatch, The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (1881); C. *Gore, The Church and the Ministry (1889; new ed., revised by C. H. *Turner, 1919); J. Réville, Les Origines de l'épiscopat (1894); R. C. *Moberly, Ministerial Priesthood (1897); J. *Wordsworth, The Ministry of Grace (1901); W. M. Lindsay, The Church and the Ministry in the Early Centuries (1902); A. *Harnack, Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Kirchenverfassung und des Kirchenrechts in den zwei ersten Jahrhunderten (1910; Eng. tr., 1910). A. J. Mason, The Church of England and Episcopacy (1914). H. B. *Swete (ed.), Essays on the Early History of the Church and Ministry (1918); B. H. *Streeter, The Primitive Church (1929); C. Jenkins–K. D. Mackenzie (edd.), Episcopacy, Ancient and Modern (1930); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946); N. Sykes, The Church of England and Non-Episcopal Churches in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (1948); E. R. Fairweather–R. F. Hettlinger, Episcopacy and Reunion (Toronto, 1952; London, 1953); F. Benz, Bischofsamt und apostolische Sukzession im deutschen Protestantismus (1953); K. M. Carey (ed.), The Historic Episcopacy in the Fullness of the Church (1954; ed. 2, 1960); N. Sykes, Old Priest and New Presbyter. Episcopacy and Presbyterianism since the Reformation with especial relation to the Churches of England and Scotland (Cambridge, 1956); W. H. G. Simon (ed.), Bishops (1961); W. Telfer, The Office of a Bishop (1962); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., Apostle and Bishop (1963); J. Colson, L'Épiscopat catholique. Collégialité et primauté dans les trois premiers siècles de l'Église (Unam Sanctam, xliii; 1963), and other works of this author. J. A. *Robinson in E.Bi., i (1899), cols. 578–84, s.v.; D. Stone in H.E.R.E., v (1912), pp. 332–7, s.v. 'Episcopacy'; F. Prat, S.J., in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1656–1701, s.v. 'Évêques (origines de l'épiscopat)'; A. Piolanti and E. Josi in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1312–20, s.v. 'Vescovo'.

BISHOP, EDMUND (1846–1917), liturgist and historian. A native of Totnes, Devon, he had his schooling at *Exeter and in *Belgium. After a short time as secretary to T. *Carlyle, he held a government post from 1864 to 1885 in the Education Office, when he spent most of his leisure in research in the British Museum. In 1867 he was received into the Church of Rome. After leaving the Education Office he hoped to become a monk at *Downside Abbey; but his intention was frustrated by weak health. He continued, however, to maintain close connexions with Downside, where he made the friendship of F. A. *Gasquet, who shared his liturgical interests. In 1890, in conjunction with Gasquet, he published Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer; in 1908 a study of the early English calendars in the Bosworth Psalter; and in 1909 studies in various liturgical subjects in an appendix to R. H. *Connolly's Liturgical Homilies of Narsai. He also made notable contributions to the early history of the Roman liturgy, esp. the text of the canon missae* and the history of the *Gregorian Sacramentary. Perhaps his most widely known writing was his paper on 'The Genius of the Roman Rite', originally delivered to the Historical Research Society on 8 May 1899, in which he maintained that the two chief characteristics of the Roman rite (when divested of *Gallican accretions) were 'soberness' and 'sense'. This and many of his other papers were collected in Liturgica Historica (1918; posthumous).

Life by N. [J.] Abercrombie (London, 1959). A. R. Vidler, A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures, 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), pp. 134–52.

BISHOPS' BIBLE, The. A new English translation of the Bible, compiled at the direction of Abp. M. *Parker, and first published in 1568. It was a revision of the *Great Bible version. All *churchwardens were ordered by *Convocation to obtain a copy for their churches in 1571, and in the following year it was republished with some corrections. A novel feature of this edition was the placing of each translator's initials at the end of his part. It remained the official English version till the publication of the *Authorized Version in 1611, but despite numerous editions by the Queen's Printers it won less popularity than the unauthorized *Calvinist translation known as the *Geneva Bible.

Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), p. 70 f. (No. 125).

BISHOPS' BOOK, The (1537). Under the title 'The Institution of a Christen Man', this book was an exposition of the *Creed, the *Seven Sacraments, the *Decalogue, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Ave Maria, compiled by a committee of English bishops and divines in 1537. It also dealt with certain other vexed questions, among them the doctrines of *justification and *purgatory and the relation of the C of E to the Roman see. The book never received the authority of the King, who used it rather to test the temper of the people. In 1543 a revised edition was published by *Henry VIII which came to be known as the *King's Book.

The book was repr. in Formularies of Faith set forth by Authority during the Reign of Henry VIII (ed. C. *Lloyd, 1825), pp. 21–212. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), Introd. (see index, p. 1064).

BISHOPS' WARS. The two brief campaigns in Scotland in 1639 and 1640. After the attempt of *Charles I to enforce the use of the Prayer Book in Scotland, the Scots had broken out into rebellion, and their avowed aim was to abolish episcopacy. The military importance of these campaigns was inconsiderable, but the need for money to conduct them obliged the King to summon the English Parliament, which had not met since 1629, and so gave his enemies in England a chance to gather their forces.

BLACK CANONS. See Black Monks.

BLACK FRIARS. Friars of the Order of Preachers, founded by St. *Dominic, and more generally known as '*Dominicans'. They are so named from the black cappa or mantle which is worn over their white habits and *scapulars.

Walter Gumbley, O.P., 'On the Name Blackfriars' in Blackfriars, i (1920–1), p. 54 f.

BLACK LETTER DAYS. The lesser (mainly non-Scriptural) Saints' Days (printed in black), as distinct from the major festivals, which formerly appeared in red letters in the BCP calendar. They were omitted in 1549, but four appeared in the 1552 Book and the remainder in 1561 save for St. Evurtius (added, 1604), St. Alban, and the Ven. Bede (added, 1662). In 1662 their purpose was defined by the revising bishops as the commemoration of Saints and the provision of useful calendrical notes for business purposes. The practice of distinguishing important feasts by the use of red letters goes back to the pre-Reformation service books. The Black Letter days were excluded from the Irish (1878) and American (1786) Prayer Books. A much extended list found its way into the Revised Prayer Book of 1928.

[W. *Sanday], Minor Holy Days in the Church of England. Primary Authorities for the Early Names [1901]. V. Staley, The Liturgical Year. An Explanation of the Origin, History and Significance of the Festival Days and Fasting Days of the English Church (1907), ch. xii, pp. 129–58.

BLACK MASS. The expression is used as a popular name for: (1) a *Requiem, or Mass for the Dead, so called from the custom of using black vestments; and (2) a parody of the Mass celebrated with blasphemous intention, in honour of the devil.

BLACK MONKS. A name given in medieval England to the *Benedictine monks, as they were distinguished by wearing black habits. The analogous term 'Black Canons' is also found as a designation of *Augustinian canons.

BLACK RUBRIC, The. The name now commonly given to the 'Declaration on Kneeling' printed at the end of the Holy Communion service in the BCP. It is first found in the Book of 1552, when it was inserted at the last moment without Parliamentary authority. The Elizabethan edition of 1559 removed it; but it was replaced in the Book of 1662, with the significant change, however, that the words 'real and essential' were altered to 'corporal' presence, thereby indicating that its purpose was rather to guard against popular and debased medieval ideas of Eucharistic doctrine than to deny altogether Christ's presence in the Sacrament. The expression 'Black Rubric' dates only from the 19th cent. when the practice of printing the BCP with the rubrics in red was introduced and the fact that the 'Declaration' was really not a rubric at all was marked by printing it in black. In modern two-colour reprints of the BCP it will be found, however, printed in red.

J. G. Simpson in P.B.D. (1912), p. 105 f., s.v. See also F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), index (p. 1062), s.v. 'Declaration on Kneeling'.

BLACKWELL, GEORGE (c. 1545–1613), RC *Archpriest. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he was elected to a fellowship in 1566, which he subsequently gave up through his RC sympathies. In 1574 he entered the English College at *Douai and was ordained priest in 1575. He returned to England on the RC mission in 1576. After the confusion in RC discipline that followed Card. W. *Allen's death (1594) through the absence of a supreme authority in England, Blackwell was put in control of the secular clergy by *Clement VIII, with the title of Archpriest and with 12 assistants to help him. Though not himself a *Jesuit, Blackwell pursued a strongly pro-Jesuit policy hostile to the interests of the secular clergy, who aimed at political rapprochement with the crown. A group of 31 *Appellants (q.v.), headed by W. Bishop, sought redress from Rome, but on 6 Apr. 1599 a reply was issued in Blackwell's favour. On the strength of it Blackwell continued his previous policy, but after two further appeals he was reproved by Clement in a letter of 5 Oct. 1602. After imprisonment for a time in 1607, he took the Oath of Allegiance to *James I, which had been formally condemned by *Paul V in 1606 and 1607, and in 1608 the Pope appointed George Birket in his place.

Reff. to Blackwell will be found in the documents of the Archpriest Controversy (q.v.). T. Cooper in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 144–6.

BLAISE, St. See Blasius, St.

BLAKE, WILLIAM (1757–1827), poet, artist, and visionary. Apprenticed to an engraver from 1771 to 1778, he became, through frequent work in *Westminster Abbey, imbued with the spirit of Gothic art which remained his guiding ideal throughout his life. In 1789 he finished his Songs of Innocence, a collection of poems of childlike simplicity which included 'The Divine Image', where God and His image, man, are hymned as 'Mercy, Pity, Peace, and Love'. The book was engraved by hand and illustrated by coloured drawings, a technique adopted in most of his subsequent works. It was followed by The Book of Thel (1789) and The Marriage of Heaven and Hell (1793), allegorical poems full of obscure though often beautiful imagery, which Blake used to express his religious convictions. The Songs of Experience (1794) are a kind of complement to the Songs of Innocence, though on a sterner note and penetrated by a deep sense of the darker side of life, e.g. in the famous 'Tyger'. His later poetical works, written in something like free verse, are increasingly given over to theosophical speculations and unintelligible allegories. At the same time his compositions gained in artistic maturity. About 1795 he produced a series of large colour prints of much imaginative power, including the magnificent 'The Elohim creating Adam', and in 1797 his illustrations of Edward Young's Night Thoughts. In 1804 he published his poem Milton, the proem of which consists of the famous lines 'Jerusalem', much used (with the music of Hubert Parry) as a national hymn. In the following years he produced engravings for Robert Blair's Grave of high visionary qualities, but, like most of his drawings, not without flaws in technique. From 1808 to 1818 he was occupied with writing and illustrating his great allegorical poem Jerusalem, in which St. *Teresa and Mme *Guyon figure among 'the gentle souls who guide the great wine-press of Love'. His unconventional religious beliefs found fresh expression in an unfinished poem, The Everlasting Gospel, which rejects the traditional picture of a meek and humble Christ. His greatest work, the Illustrations to the Book of Job, completed in the last years of his life (1821–1825, publd. 1826), consists of 21 engravings showing the dealings of God with Job from the peaceful contentment of the opening scene, through the despair of the tormented Job accusing his Creator, to the rapturous bliss of his final restoration. The figures, often of elemental strength and beauty, move in the atmosphere of crude black and white contrasts which invests Blake's works with their characteristic impression of haunting unreality.

Blake's art, which spurns reason as well as nature and lives solely in the realm of imagination, was inseparable from his religion, which was itself a religion of art. Opposed to both dogma and asceticism, it flowed from a boundless sympathy with all living things which Blake identified with the forgiveness of sins proclaimed by the Gospel. Though he was little understood by his contemporaries, his visionary genius, both as a poet and an artist, has been increasingly admired since its discovery by A. C. Swinburne and interpretation by W. B. Yeats. His insistence on the supremacy of the spiritual world, though unbalanced by reason and a sound sense of reality, has acted as a powerful antidote to 19th cent. materialism.

Best ed. of Blake's Works by G. Keynes (3 vols., Nonesuch Press, 1925; repr., with additional material, London, 1966). G. E. Bentley, Jr., Blake Records (Oxford, 1969). Life by A. Gilchrist (2 vols., London, 1863), repr. in Everyman's Library (1942). Modern studies by B. de Selincourt (London, 1909), G. K. *Chesterton (ibid. [1910]), C. Gardner (ibid., 1919), E. H. Short (ibid., 1925), O. Burdett ('English Men of Letters', London, 1926), Mona Wilson (ibid., 1927), T. Wright (2 vols., Olney, Bucks, 1927), B. Blackstone (Cambridge, 1949), H. M. Margoliouth (H.U.L., 1951), R. F. Gleckner (Detroit, 1959), P. F. Fisher, ed. N. Fryde (Toronto, 1961), E. D. Hirsch (New Haven and London, 1964), and K. [J.] Raine (London, 1970). G. L. Keynes, Blake Studies (1949); G. W. Digby, Symbol and Image in William Blake (Oxford, 1957); G. M. Harper, The Neoplatonism of William Blake (Chapel Hill and London, 1961). P. Berger, William Blake. Mysticisme et poésie (1906; Eng. tr., 1914); J. G. Davies, The Theology of William Blake (1948). S. F. Damon, A Blake Dictionary (Providence, R.I., 1965). G. Keynes, A Bibliography of William Blake (New York, 1921); also id. in C.B.E.L., ii (1940), pp. 347–50.

BLANDINA, St. A virgin slave girl martyred in 177 at Lyons, together with *Pothinus, the bishop of the city. Feast day, 2 June; in E., 25 or 26 July.

Her heroic courage is described in the 'Letter of the Churches of Lyons and Vienne', preserved in *Eusebius, H.E., V. i. 3–63.

BLASIUS, St. Acc. to a late and historically worthless, but widely distributed legend, St. Blasius (Blaise) was Bp. of Sebaste in Armenia and martyred under *Licinius in the early 4th cent. He is said to have miraculously saved the life of a young child who was nearly choked by a fish-bone, and hence his intercessions have been sought by the sick, and esp. those with throat trouble. He is also invoked for the cure of diseases of cattle and is the patron saint of woolcombers. He is one of the fourteen *Auxiliary Saints, and his cult used to be very popular in Germany. His feast is observed in the W. on 3 Feb. (formerly 15 Feb.), in the E. on 11 Feb.

AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 331–53. His Gk. Legend is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxvi, 817–30. G. Garitte, 'La Passion de S. Irénarque de Sébastée et la Passion de S. Blaise' in Anal. Boll., lxxiii (1955), pp. 18–54. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., ii (1907), p. 592, with bibl.; P. Wiertz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 525 f., with further bibl.

BLASPHEMY (Gk. βλασφημία, from βλάπτω, 'to damage', and φήμη, 'reputation'). Speech, thought, or action manifesting contempt for God. In moral theology it is commonly regarded as a sin against the virtue of religion, though St. *Thomas Aquinas defined it as a sin against faith. It may be directed either immediately against God or mediately against the Church or the saints, and is by its nature a mortal sin. Blasphemy was punished by stoning in the OT (Lev. 24. 16, 1 Kgs. 21. 10), and the Code of *Justinian, as well as the medieval canon law, also prescribed severe punishments. Thus the Council of Aachen of 818 re-established the death penalty. In post-Reformation England, Blasphemy laws were passed in 1558 and reinforced in 1698. From the time of the *Enlightenment the secular authorities in most countries have regarded Blasphemy no longer as a crime against God but as an offence against society and punished it as such. In recent times repeated attempts have been made in many countries to abolish the laws against Blasphemy altogether. Thus in Great Britain only scurrilous attacks on Christianity can be sustained under the Blasphemy laws, as calculated to offend believers or even to cause a breach of the peace. Acc. to the 1917 RC canon law Blasphemy is to be punished acc. to the decision of the *Ordinary (CIC, can. 2323).

BLASS, FRIEDRICH WILHELM (1843–1907), German classical scholar, who also contributed much to the philology and *textual criticism of the NT. Besides editions of Matthew (1901), Luke (1897), John (1902), and Acts (1895), he published a Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Griechisch (1896; Eng. trans. by H. St. J. Thackeray, 1898; Eng. trans. of 9–10th ed., incorporating notes by A. Debrunner, by R. W. Funk, Cambridge, 1961) and a Philology of the Gospels (London, 1898). He maintained that the *Western and non-Western texts of Lk. and Acts were different recensions both deriving from the same author (St. Luke), a view, however, which has found little favour among most textual critics.

W. Crönert, 'Friedrich Blass' in Biographisches Jahrbuch für die Altertumswissenschaft, xxxii (1909), pp. 1–32 (with list of Blass's works, pp. 30–2). For his theory of Luke-Acts, see L. J. M. Bebb in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 164 f. A. Romeo in E.C., ii (1949), col. 1716 f.

BLASTARES, MATTHEW (fl. 1335). A monk of Thessalonica who composed an alphabetical handbook of *canon law (Σύνταγμα κατὰ στοιχεῖον) as well as treatises against 'the Latins' (i.e. W. Catholics) and the Jews.

The first-named in J. P. Migne, PG, cxliv, 960–1400. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 786 f., with reff. J. Herman in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 920–25, s.v.

BLEEK, FRIEDRICH (1793–1859), German Biblical scholar. A pupil of W. M. L. *De Wette, J. A. W. *Neander, and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he became professor at Bonn in 1829. He wrote a long series of critical studies on the Bible, esp. the NT, from a position on the whole conservative, strongly arguing, e.g., for the traditional authorship of St. John's Gospel. His most celebrated commentary was that on Heb. (in 3 parts, 1828, 1836, and 1840).

A. Kamphausen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 254–7, s.v.

BLEMMYDES, NICEPHORUS (1197–1272). A Greek theologian who took an active part in the attempts to reunite the E. and W. Churches in the 13th cent. From 1215 to 1221 he practised as a physician; and in 1223 was ordained priest. He wrote on a variety of subjects, including theology, physics, and geography, and also produced some poems and a monastic Rule.

His theological writings are in J. P. Migne, PG, cxlii, 527–1622. Curriculum Vitae et Carmina ed. A. Heisenberg (Teubn., 1896). P. Canart, 'Nicéphore Blemmyde et le Mémoire adressé aux envoyés de Grégoire IX (Nicée, 1234)' in O.C.P., xxv (1959), pp. 310–25, incl. text. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 671–3, with lit. to date.

BLESSED (as title). See Beatification.

BLESSED SACRAMENT. A term used of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and applied both to the service itself and more esp. to the consecrated elements.

BLESSED VIRGIN, The. See Mary, The Blessed Virgin.

BLESSING. The authoritative pronouncement of God's favour. Instances in the OT are the blessing of Isaac (Gen. 27) and the prayer of Balaam (Num. 23 f.), both of which presuppose the automatic action of a blessing, independently of moral considerations. Later we see liturgical blessings of persons (Num. 6. 22 ff.) and of things, such as food (1 Sam. 9. 13, cf. Mt. 14. 19). In Christian practice blessing finds a frequent place in the liturgy, esp. in the blessing of the elements in consecration (so Mt. 26. 26). The blessing of the people at the end of the Mass did not become general until the later Middle Ages. Blessings are frequently given to individuals, e.g. the deacon who is to sing the Gospel, the penitent about to make a confession, and less formally outside liturgical services, by bishops and priests, and by parents to their children. The *Rituale Romanum also provides blessings for a wide range of objects, from vestments to typewriters. In many places a custom has arisen of concluding all services with a blessing, often given at the altar. The right hand is raised to bless, and usually the *sign of the cross is made, though occasionally this is omitted. See also Berakah.

A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter (1909). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, ii (1933), pp. 447–74.

BLOMFIELD, CHARLES JAMES (1786–1857), Bp. of London. He was the son of a schoolmaster at Bury St. Edmunds, and, after a distinguished career at Trinity College, Cambridge, was ordained in 1810. In the next fourteen years he was appointed to a succession of benefices culminating in his nomination in 1824 to the see of *Chester. Here he set himself to raise the standard of clerical life and to root out abuses, esp. those of non-residence, though he himself retained his former living of St. Botolph's, Aldgate, *in commendam. In 1828 he became Bp. of London. During his episcopate some 200 new churches were built and consecrated in his diocese, chiefly through his zeal and interest. In politics his position wavered. Though nominally a Whig, he resisted Catholic Emancipation (1829), and absented himself in the early stages of the Reform Bill, but he finally voted in its favour. His Churchmanship also seemed inconsistent. While he drove W. J. E. *Bennett from St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and supported the *Jerusalem Bishopric scheme of 1841, he signed the protest against R. D. *Hampden's appointment to the see of *Hereford, and dissented from the judgement of the Privy Council in the *Gorham case. He was an active member of the *Ecclesiastical Commission. In 1856 he was forced by paralysis to resign his see. He was held in repute as a classical scholar and issued editions of Prometheus Vinctus (1810), Callimachus (1815), Euripides (1821) and other texts.

Memoir by his son, Alfred Blomfield (2 vols., 1863).

BLONDEL, DAVID (1590–1655), French ecclesiastical historian. A native of Châlons-sur-Marne, he was educated at Sedan and at the *Genevan Academy. For most of his life he was a country pastor at Roucy, where his devotion to his flock led him to decline (1631) an offer of a chair in theology at Saumur. In 1645 he was created an 'Honorary Professor' of Saumur, with a generous annual financial grant, and in 1650 finally left Roucy to succeed G. J. *Voss at the École Illustre at Amsterdam, where he came into prominence through his liberal sympathies. He was at once a learned historian and effective controversialist. His Pseudo-Isidorus et Turrianus Vapulans, perhaps his most important work, finally discredited the historicity of the '*False Decretals'. His De la primauté en l'Église (1641) was a defence of the Reformed ecclesiastical polity and his Apologia pro Sententia Hieronymi de Presbyteris et Episcopis (1646) an attack on episcopacy. He also wrote an erudite and successful criticism of the myth of Pope *Joan (in two writings, 1647 and 1657) which aroused hostility among many of his fellow Protestants.

All his works were on the *Index. G. Bonet-Maury in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), p. 261 f.; A. Lambert in D.D.C., ii (1937), col. 926 f.

BLONDEL, MAURICE (1861–1949), French philosopher. He was a native of Dijon, where he was educated at the École Normale, and later held professorships of philosophy at Montauban, Lille, and Aix-Marseille. The work that first placed him in the front rank of contemporary thinkers was L'Action (1893), with the significant subtitle, 'Essai d'une critique de la vie et d'une science de la pratique'. In it Blondel attempted to construct a 'philosophy of action', conceiving 'action' in its widest sense and all its ramifications, and to develop also a philosophy of the idea, as well as to expound the relations between science and belief and between philosophy and religion. His analysis of action led him to conclude that the human will which produces action cannot satisfy itself, because its fundamental desire is never fulfilled by any finite good. From this point of departure he developed an argument for the being of God resting on volition, in the light of which he modified the old Scholastic proofs. God imposes Himself on the will as the first principle and the last term; we must, therefore, 'opt' either for or against Him.

The teaching of L'Action was amplified in several later works, e.g. Histoire et dogme (1904), Le Procès de l'intelligence (1922), and esp. Le Problème de la philosophie catholique (1932) and La Pensée (2 vols., 1934). The last-named work states his final position with regard to the intellectual aspects of experience. He here accords a greater place to abstract conceptions than in L'Action and affirms the legitimacy of methodical argumentation, e.g. in the rational proofs of the existence of God. Yet his position is not that of *Aristotle and St. *Thomas, but follows rather the *Platonic tradition as continued in St. *Augustine, R. *Descartes, and G. W. *Leibniz. For Blondel it is not that knowledge of creatures precedes knowledge of God, but rather it is the existence of an obscure yet positive affirmation of God that is the very condition which makes the Aristotelian and Thomist proofs possible. The problem of the supernatural also played a large part in the thought of Blondel, who was a devout Catholic. He held that the whole mental life of man was directed to the possession of God in the Beatific Vision, and consequently he attributed to unaided human reason the capacity of demonstrating its positive possibility.

Blondel's thought has been of considerable influence in modern philosophy. For several years he was closely associated with the leading figures in the *Modernist Movement, which welcomed the pragmatist aspects of his teaching; and many recent thinkers, incl. R. Eucken (1846–1926), G. *Gentile, and F. *von Hügel, have been indebted to him.

K. Gilbert, Maurice Blondel's Philosophy of Action (Univ. of North Carolina Studies in Philosophy, i; 1924); P. Archambault, L'Œuvre philosophique de Maurice Blondel: vers un réalisme intégral (Cahiers de La Nouvelle Journée, xii; 1928); T. d'Eypernon, S.J., Le Blondélisme (Museum Lessianum, section philosophique, xv: 1933); B. Romeyer, S.J., La Philosophie religieuse de Maurice Blondel (1943); J. Riog Gironella, S.J., Filosofia blondeliana (Biblioteca Filosófica de Balmesiana, Ser. 2, ii, 1944), with bibl.; H. Duméry, La Philosophie de l'action. Essai sur l'intellectualisme blondélien ('Philosophie de l'Esprit', 1948), with preface by Blondel; H. Bouillard, Blondel et le christianisme [1961]; H. Duméry, Raison et religion dans la philosophie de l'action [1963]; C. Tresmontant, Introduction à la métaphysique de Maurice Blondel [1963]. R. Saint-Jean, S.J., Genèse de l'Action. Blondel 1882–1893 (Museum Lessianum, section philosophique, liii; 1965); id., L'Apologétique philosophique. Blondel 1893–1913 (Théologie, lxvii; 1966). J. J. McNeill, S.J., The Blondelian Synthesis. A Study of the Influence of German Philosophical Sources on the Formation of Blondel's Method and Thought (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, i; Leiden, 1966). G. Baum, Man Becoming. God in Secular Experience (New York, 1970), esp. ch. I.

BLOUNT, CHARLES (1654–93), English *Deist. He is best known by his Anima Mundi (1679), a sceptical discussion of the subject of immortality, and The Two First Books of Philostratus concerning the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus (1680). The notes of the latter gave offence, by their attacks on 'priestcraft' and sympathy with the free thought of T. *Hobbes.

The Miscellaneous Works of Charles Blount . . . to which is prefixed the life of the author [signed Lindamour a pseudonym of Charles Gildon] (5 parts, 1685).

BLOW, JOHN (1648–1708), composer and organist. He became one of the Children of the *Chapel Royal at the Restoration, and at an early age distinguished himself as a composer of anthems. Already in 1669 he was appointed organist of *Westminster Abbey, an office which he gave up in 1680 in favour of his greater pupil, H. *Purcell. He also held the offices of Gentleman of the Chapel Royal (1673), private musician to *James II (1685), choirmaster of *St. Paul's (1687), organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster (1695), and composer to the Chapel Royal (1699). Of his works over 100 anthems and 14 services besides secular compositions survive.

W. H. Cummings, 'Dr John Blow' in the Quarterly Magazine of the International Music Society, Year 10 (Leipzig, 1909), pp. 421–30; F. Bridge, Twelve Good Musicians, from John Bull to Henry Purcell [1920], XI, pp. 108–17. Select list of his works in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, i (ed. 5, by E. Blom, 1954), pp. 772–5.

BLOXAM, JOHN ROUSE (1807–91), Anglican ceremonialist and historian. Educated at Rugby School and at Worcester and Magdalen Colleges, *Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1833 and elected a Fellow of Magdalen in 1836. He held a succession of offices at Magdalen until appointed vicar of Upper Beeding, W. Sussex (1862), where he remained till his death. He associated himself closely with the *Tractarian Movement and from 1837 to 1840 was J. H. *Newman's curate at Littlemore. A careful and learned ecclesiologist, Bloxam was the real originator of the ceremonial revival in the English Church. He introduced various ornaments into Littlemore church (gilded candlesticks, wooden alms-dish, black silk stole, credence table, litany desk, &c.), which were soon afterwards copied by F. *Oakeley at the Margaret Chapel in London and thence spread and came into general use. He was also one of the first Tractarians to establish relations with RCs, though these seem to have been abruptly terminated by the secession of R. W. Sibthorp in Oct. 1841. Deeply devoted to his college, he published a Magdalen College Register (7 vols., 1853–81) and also compiled a valuable (unpublished) collection of college papers.

R. D. Middleton, Magdalen Studies (1936), pp. 31–79; id., Newman and Bloxam: An Oxford Friendship (1947). W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 224 f.

BLUMHARDT, JOHANN CHRISTOPH (1805–1880), Protestant evangelist. The nephew of Christian Gottlieb Blumhardt (1779–1838), who founded the Protestant 'Basel Mission', he was born at Stuttgart, studied at *Tübingen, taught at Basel from 1830, and in 1838 became pastor at Möttlingen in Württemberg, where his evangelical work attracted much attention, largely through the physical cures by which it was sometimes accompanied. As his motto he took the words 'Jesus is Conqueror' (Jesus ist Sieger). From 1852 until his death he worked at Bad Boll, near Göppingen, which became a centre of influential international missionary work. Blumhardt's theology was developed under the influence of Swabian *Pietism (J. A. *Bengel, P. M. Hahn), but its eschatological emphasis also anticipated some elements in the *Dialectical Theology. His collected works were published in 3 vols., 1886–8.

His son, Christoph Friedrich Blumhardt (1842–1919), who took over the direction of Bad Boll after his father's death, was also a zealous missioner and a considerable theologian. Active sympathy with the needs of the working classes led him to become from 1900 to 1906 a Social Democrat member of the Württemberg diet.

F. Zuendel, Pfarrer J. C. Blumhardt. Ein Lebensbild (Zürich, 1880). L. Ragaz. Der Kampf um das Reich Gottes in Blumhardt, Vater und Sohn (ib., 1922). E. Jäckh, Blumhardt, Vater und Sohn und ihre Botschaft (1924). E. Grin, Jean-Christophe Blumhardt et son fils. Guérison des corps, guérison des âmes (Geneva [1952]). G. Sauter, Die Theologie des Reiches Gottes beim älteren und jüngeren Blumhardt (Zürich–Stuttgart, 1962). E. *Thurneysen, Christoph Blumhardt (1926).

BOANERGES. The surname given by Christ (Mk. 3. 17) to *James and *John, the sons of Zebedee. The word is there stated to mean 'sons of thunder', but the derivation is quite uncertain.

BOBBIO. A small town in the Apennines, some 40 miles NE of Genoa, once the seat of an important abbey founded in 612 by St. *Columbanus (who died there in 615). Its celebrated collection of early MSS. (many of them dating from the 10th cent.) has mostly passed to the *Vatican Library, the *Ambrosiana at Milan, and Turin (several of these were destroyed in the fire of 1904). The 'Bobbio Missal', now in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (B.N. 13246), is an important collection of liturgical texts, apparently of *Gallican provenance with Irish influence and dating from the 8th cent.

L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 400–2, s.v. A. Ratti (*Pius XI), Le ultime vicende della Biblioteca e dell'Archivio di S. Colombano di Bobbio (1901). C. Cipolla, Codici bobbiesi della Biblioteca Nazionale Universitaria di Torino (Collezione paleografica bobbiese, i, 2 vols., 1907); id.–G. Buzzi, Codice diplomatico del Monastero di San Colombano di Bobbio fino all'anno MCCVIII (3 vols., 1918); P. Collura. La Precarolina e la Carolina a Bobbio (1943), with reff. These works are mainly superseded by G. *Mercati's 'Prolegomenon de Fatis Bibliothecae Monasterii S. Columbani Bobiensis' to his ed. of M. Tulli Ciceronis De Re Publica Libri e Codice Rescripto Vaticano Latino 5757 Phototypice Expressi (Codices e Vaticanis Selecti, xxiii; Vatican, 1934), pp. 1–174. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, iv (Oxford, 1947), esp. pp. xx–xxviii; cf. J. Hammer in Scriptorium, ii (1948), pp. 298 f. P. Engelbert, 'Zur Frühgeschichte des Bobbieser Skriptoriums' in R. Bén., lxxviii (1968), pp. 220–60. P. Verrua, Bibliografia bobbiese (Piacenza, 1936). The 'Bobbio Missal' ed., with facsimile reproduction, by E. A. Lowe (H.B.S., liii, lviii; 1917–20), with notes and studies by A. *Wilmart, O.S.B.–E. A. Lowe–H. A. Wilson (ib., lxi; 1924). A. Wilmart in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 935–9, s.v. 'Bobbio (Manuscrits de)'; id., ib., cols. 939–62, s.v. 'Bobbio (Missel de)'.

BOCHART, SAMUEL (1599–1667), Biblical scholar. A native of Rouen, he studied philosophy at Sedan and theology at Saumur and in 1628 became pastor at Caen. In 1652 he accompanied P. D. *Huet to the court of *Christina of Sweden. After his return he became a member of Caen Academy. His chief works are his Geographia Sacra (2 pts., 1646, 1651) and the Hierozoicon, sive Historia Animalium S. Scripturae (2 vols., 1663); the latter esp. was drawn on by later Biblical commentators. He was a very learned oriental linguist, though his long preoccupation with Phoenician and other Semitic languages sometimes overburdened his judgement and led him to fantastic etymological conclusions.

Works publ. in 2 vols., Leyden, 1675; also ed. by J. Leusden–P. de Villemandy, with life by E. Morin (3 vols., ib., 1692). E. H. Smith, Samuel Bochart. Recherches sur la vie et les ouvrages de cet auteur illustre (Caen, 1833).

BODLEIAN LIBRARY. The library of the University of *Oxford. The oldest portion (15th cent.), over the Divinity School, is known as 'Duke Humphrey's Library'; but the 600 MSS. presented by Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester (d. 1447), son of Henry IV, were dispersed in the 16th cent. The library was restocked and endowed early in the 17th cent. by Sir Thomas Bodley (d. 1613), a retired diplomat, who added the E. wing. Between 1635 and 1640 W. *Laud presented about 1300 MSS., including the 'Codex Laudianus' of Acts. Its other benefactors have included J. *Selden; Richard Rawlinson (a *non-juring bp.; d. 1755), who bequeathed nearly 5000 MSS., besides printed books and pictures; and Francis Douce (d. 1834), who left to the Bodleian his collection of illuminated service-books and other rarities. The library possesses a good collection of Patristic MSS., Oriental as well as Greek and Latin. It is one of the seven libraries which under the Copyright Acts can claim a presentation copy of every new work published in Great Britain and Ireland.

F. Madan and H. H. E. Craster (ed.), Summary Catalogue of the Western Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (6 vols. bound in 11, 1895–1937). W. D. Macray, Annals of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, with a notice of the Earlier Library of the University (1868, ed. 2 enlarged, 1890); [H. H.] E. Craster, History of the Bodleian Library 1845–1945 (1952). G. W. Wheeler (ed.), Letters of Sir Thomas Bodley to Thomas James (1926); The Bodleian Library in the Seventeenth Century. Guide to the Exhibition held during the Festival of Britain, 1951 (1951). A. Clark, A Bodleian Guide for Visitors (1906); F. Madan, The Bodleian Library at Oxford (1919).

BODMER PAPYRI. A collection of unusually important MSS., most on papyrus (see Papyrology), some on parchment, all with one exception codices and all with two exceptions containing works of Christian literature, acquired by purchase for his library in Geneva by M. Martin Bodmer. The earlier MSS. are in Greek, the later in Coptic (Sahidic). Their provenance is uncertain, but may well have been Panopolis (Akhmim); there are grounds for thinking that they and the *Chester Beatty Papyri come from the same site, in which case they may represent the remains of an ancient church or early monastic library, surviving in a *Geniza when no longer required for use. This would explain both the widely varying dates of the MSS. (ranging from c. A.D. 200 to the 7th cent.) as well as the relatively good state of preservation. If the texts of Iliad I and the Menander Codex belong to the same find, these are among the pagan authors whom Christians might be expected to read.

The most important Christian MSS. are those of the fourth Gospel (P. 66) of c. A.D. 200 which survives nearly complete and another of a codex containing both the third and the fourth Gospels (P. 75), written in the 3rd cent., of which more than four-fifths remain, a nearly contemporary MS. of the original Greek of the Acts of *Phileas and a copy of *Melito, 'On the Pasch'.

Edition of text and plates, volumes i–xxii, ed. V. Martin, M. Testuz, R. Kasser (Cologny–Geneva, 1954 ff.). The codex of the fourth Gospel was re-issued with a supplement in 1962. On the provenance of the collection and its relation with the Chester Beatty Papyri, see E. G. Turner, Greek Papyri (Oxford, 1968), p. 52 f.

BODY OF CHRIST, The. (1) The natural or human Body which the Lord took of Mary, and which, acc. to orthodox Christian theology, was changed but not abandoned at the Resurrection and remains for ever His in heaven.

(2) The Church (q.v.), as the community whose members are incorporated into His life in Baptism (see 1 Cor., Eph., Col., &c.), and which since *Pentecost has formed the vehicle of His redemptive activity on earth.

(3) The consecrated Bread in the *Eucharist (q.v.).

(4) The Latin form, '*Corpus Christi' (q.v.), has been used as the title of a feast which since the 13th cent. has been kept in the W. Church on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday in honour of the *Blessed Sacrament; and as a designation of churches and colleges dedicated in honour of the *Eucharist.

BOEHME, JAKOB (1575–1624), German *Lutheran theosophical author, known as 'philosophus Teutonicus'. He was the son of a farmer. At first a shepherd, he was later apprenticed to a shoemaker, and from 1599, when he was married, till 1613 followed that trade at Görlitz in Silesia. The recipient of mystical experiences, he claimed that in his writings he described only what he had learnt personally from Divine illumination. In 1612 he published his first work, Morgenröte im Aufgang oder Aurora, which aroused the opposition of the Lutheran pastor, Gregorius Richter, who forced the municipal authorities to intervene; and Boehme was ordered to cease writing. In 1618, however, he began a series of devotional treatises which were published under the title Der Weg zu Christo in 1623. As Richter continued his opposition, Boehme left Görlitz in 1624 and went to Dresden and later to the houses of several friends in Silesia, where he was much appreciated. He died soon after his return to Görlitz in the same year. His writings, most of them published posthumously, include Die drei Prinzipien göttlichen Wesens, an inquiry into the Divine essence; Signatura Rerum, containing his cosmological theories; Mysterium Magnum, an allegorical explanation of the Book of Genesis; and Von Christi Testamenten, a treatise on Baptism and the Eucharist.

Boehme is a very obscure and difficult writer who made abundant use of abstruse terminology, borrowed largely from *Paracelsus, the mystics, alchemy, and astrology; and his critics are still divided as to whether the foundation of his thought is pantheistic or dualist. Having lived from childhood in a state of religious exaltation, he believed himself called to penetrate the deepest mysteries concerning God, man, and nature. Acc. to him God, the Father, is the 'Ungrund', the indefinable matter of the universe, neither good nor evil, but containing the germs of either, unconscious and impenetrable. This 'abyss' tends to know itself in the Son, who is light and wisdom, and to expand and express itself in the Holy Ghost. The Godhead has two wills, one good and one evil, 'love' and 'wrath', which drive Him to create nature, which unfolds itself in the seven nature spirits or 'Quellgeister'. They represent: (1) the desire to resist, (2) the tendency to expand, (3) the struggle between these two, (4) the transition from the inorganic to the organic world, (5) the vegetative life of the plants, (6) the animal life, and (7) man, who sums up in himself all the others. Though evil, being part of God, is necessary, yet man, whose character depends on the constellation of the stars under which his body is formed, can avoid hell by uniting himself to Christ by faith. He will then be a conqueror on earth and will ultimately replace Lucifer, the fallen angel, in the heavenly city.

Boehme has exercised a far-reaching influence, esp. in Germany and the English-speaking countries. The thinkers of German Romanticism, such as G. W. F. *Hegel, F. W. J. von *Schelling, and F. X. von Baader, acknowledge their debt to him; and in England he was a source of inspiration to P. *Sterry, the Cambridge Platonist, to the 17th–18th cent. '*Philadelphian Society', and to W. *Law. I. *Newton also wrestled with his writings for three months. His teaching was propagated by circles of disciples called 'Behmenists', who later amalgamated with the *Quakers.

A modern German edition of his Works is that by K. W. Schiebler (1831–47, reprinted 1922); reprint of J. W. Ueberfeld's 1730 ed. by A. Faust and W. E. Peuckert (11 vols., Stuttgart, 1955–60). A complete Eng. trans. was made by J. Ellistone and J. Sparrow (1644–62, re-edited 1762–84). C. J. Backer, Prerequisites for the Study of Jacob Boehme (1920); P. Hankamer, Jakob Böhme (1924); R. Schrey, Die Lehre des Jakob Böhme (1925); H. Grunsky, Jacob Boehme (Stuttgart, 1956). J. J. Stoudt, Sunrise to Eternity. A Study in Jacob Boehme's Life and Thought (Philadelphia [1957]). E. Benz, Der Prophet Jakob Boehme. Eine Studie über den Typus nachreformatorischen Prophetentums (Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur [in Mainz]. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, Jahrgang 1959, Hft. 3). For his philosophical views, E. Nobile, Jacob Boehme ed il suo dualismo essenziale (1928) and A. Koyré, La Philosophie de Jacob Boehme (1929). S. Hutin, Les Disciples anglais de Jacob Boehme aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles [1960]. F. W. Dibelius in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 272–6; G. W. Allen in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 778–84. See also bibl. to Martensen, H. L.

BOETHIUS, ANICIUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS SEVERINUS (c. 480–c. 524), philosopher and statesman. The son of Flavius Manlius Boethius, who was a consul in 487, he became the friend and adviser of Theodoric, and himself held the consulship in 510. His humanity and practical statesmanship are reflected in his intercession with Theodoric to avert a forced requisition of grain (coemptio) in Campania, and his defence of Albinus, an ex-consul, against a charge of treason. Largely as a result of the latter action he was himself accused of treason and imprisoned at Ticinum, where he was executed.

Boethius's most famous work, his 'De Consolatione Philosophiae', in five books, which was written in prison, describes how the soul attains through philosophy to knowledge of the vision of God. Despite the apparent absence of specifically Christian teaching, the treatise became very popular in the succeeding centuries, and was translated into Anglo-Saxon by King *Alfred. His more technically philosophical writings include translations of, and commentaries on, *Aristotle's Περὶ ἑρμηνείας and 'Categories', and a commentary on *Victorinus Afer's translation of *Porphyry's 'Isagoge', all of them a main source of Aristotelian knowledge in the early Middle Ages. He also wrote several original works on logic and school handbooks on the *quadrivium, including a textbook on music, based on Pythagoras, which retained its place in education until modern times.

It used to be much disputed whether Boethius was a Christian. But the question seems settled by the now generally admitted authenticity of the short theological treatises ascribed to him. Among these is a work on the Trinity ('De sancta trinitate') and a defence of the *Chalcedonian Christology ('Liber contra Eutychen et Nestorium'). The fact that Theodoric was an Arian caused Boethius to be regarded as a martyr of the Catholic faith. He was canonized as 'St. Severinus', and his tomb is honoured at San Pietro in Ciel d'Oro in Pavia.

Works first ed. Venice, 1492. Several later edd. and reprr., incl. J. P. Migne, PL, lxiii and lxiv. Mod. edd. of Consolatio by R. Peiper (Bibl. Teubn., 1871), A. *Fortescue–G. Smith (London, 1926) and G. Weinberger (C.S.E.L., 67, 1934); of comm. on Aristotle's Περὶ ἑρμηνείας by C. Meiser (Bibl. Teubn., 1887–80); of In Isagogen Porphyrii Commenta, by S. Brandt (C.S.E.L., 48, 1906); of De Institutione Arithmetica and De Institutione Musica by G. Friedlein (Bibl. Teubn., 1867); theological Tractates, ed. with Eng. tr. by H. F. Stewart and E. K. Rand (Loeb, 1918). Lane Cooper, A Concordance of Boethius (Medieval Academy of America, 1928). H. R. Patch, The Tradition of Boethius. A Study of his Importance in Medieval Culture (1935); Helen M. Barrett, Boethius. Some Aspects of his Times and Work (1940). E. Rapisarda, La crisi spirituale di Boezio (Florence [1947]). H. Potiron, Boèce, théoricien de la musique grecque (Travaux de l'Institut Catholique de Paris, ix; [1961]). G. Schrimpf, Die Axiomenschrift des Boethius (De Hebdomadibus) als philosophisches Lehrbuch des Mittelalters (Studien zur Problemgeschichte der antiken und mittelalterlichen Philosophie, ii; Leiden, 1966). P. Courcelle, La Consolation de Philosophie dans la tradition littéraire. Antécédents et postérité de Boèce (1967). Margaret [T.] Gibson (ed.), Boethius. His Life, Thought and Influence (Oxford, 1981). E. K. Rand, Founders of the Middle Ages (Cambridge, Mass., 1928), pp.

135–80. Dekkers, Nos. 878–95. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 348–80, s.v. '2. Boèce'.

BOETTICHER, PAUL ANTON. See Lagarde, Paul Anton de.

BOGOMILS. A medieval Balkan sect of *Manichaean origin. In the 8th cent. the Byzantine Emperors settled a number of *Paulicians in Thrace, and under their influence the heresy known as Bogomilism after its founder, Bogomil (the Bulgarian for Theophilus, 'beloved of God'), was introduced into the Balkans. The earliest description of the heresy is found in a reply to the Bulgar Tsar Peter by the Patriarch Theophylact (c. 950), who described it as 'Manichaeism mixed with Paulicianism'. The Bogomils were denounced c. 972 by the Bulgarian priest Cosmas in his Sermon against the Heretics, which mentioned their refusal to obey authority, civil or ecclesiastical.

The Bogomils, whose doctrines are known principally through the writings of *Euthymius Zigabenus, taught that the world and the human body were the work of Satan, only the soul being created by God. The true Christian conquered matter by abstaining from marriage, meat and wine, and by the renunciation of all possessions. Such an ideal was in practice possible only for the 'Perfect'; the ordinary faithful might sin but were under obligation to obey the Perfect and would receive 'spiritual baptism' on their death-beds. Like other dualist sects, they accepted only the NT and the Psalms, holding the rest of the OT to be the work of the Devil. They held the *Docetic view that Christ did not have a human body but only the appearance of one. They rejected the Sacraments, churches and relics, but retained a hierarchy of their own.

Bogomilism spread rapidly in the Balkans and Asia Minor in the 11th cent., as well as in France and Italy. The leader of a Bogomil organization in Constantinople was burnt at the stake c. 1110, and strong measures were taken against the Bogomils in Serbia c. 1180 and in Bulgaria in 1211. In the 13th cent. Bosnia became the centre of the movement, despite the alleged recantation of the leaders before the legate of Pope *Innocent III in 1202. With the Tartar invasions of Hungary, Bogomilism became the national religion. Catholicism was nominally restored in 1450, but many Bogomils fled to Herzegovina, and when the Turks conquered Bosnia in 1463 and Herzegovina in 1482, large numbers of the people adopted Mohammedanism, which was found to have many affinities with Bogomilism. No traces of the heresy remain in the Balkans except perhaps tombstones with symbolic decorations going back to Manichaeism.

D. Obolensky, The Bogomils. A Study in Balkan Neo-Manichaeism (1948), with full bibl. H. C. Puech and A. Vaillant, Le Traité contre les Bogomiles de Cosmas le Prêtre. Traduction et Étude (1945). S. Runciman, The Medieval Manichee. A Study of the Christian Dualist Heresy (Cambridge, 1947), esp. pp. 63–115. E. Werner, 'Die Bogomilen in Bulgarien. Forschungen und Fortschritte' in Studi Medievali, Serie Terza, iii (1962), pp. 249–78. A. V. Soloviev in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 633 f., s.v.

BOHAIRIC (see also Sahidic). One of the principal dialects of *Coptic; the name, from the Arabic 'Bohaïrah', indicates an origin in the northern part of the Nile Delta. The former popular designation of this dialect, 'Memphitic' (from Memphis, the great Egyptian city at the southern apex of the Delta) was misleading, since it referred to a stage in its history when its use had spread far south of its place of origin. Such literature as may have been written in it while it was merely a local dialect is almost wholly lost; but texts in Bohairic become very plentiful after (at a comparatively late date) its use became general throughout Egypt, supplanting other dialects, particularly *Sahidic. As knowledge of Greek was widespread in Lower Egypt, the translation of the Scriptures was a less pressing need than further south; the Bohairic version which we have is much later than the Sahidic, dating probably from the 6th–7th cents., and has long been, and still is, the official version of the *Coptic Church. The extant NT MSS. for the most part follow the '*Neutral' text, the oldest completely preserved MS. being a copy of the Gospels at *Oxford, dated 1173–4.

There is a critical edition of the Bohairic NT by G. Horner (4 vols., Oxford, 1898–1905). The best known grammar of the Bohairic dialect of Coptic is A. Mallon, Grammaire copte (Beyrouth, 1904; ed. 4, revised by M. Malinine, ib., 1956). See also works cited under Coptic.

BOHEMIAN BRETHREN, later known as '*Moravian Brethren' and 'Unitas Fratrum'. They were a group of *Utraquists (q.v.) who, having for some years led an existence apart within that religious body, separated formally under the leadership of 'Brother Gregory' in 1467, in order to follow more closely the teaching of Peter Chelčický (d. c. 1460). They rejected oaths and military service, depreciated town life and private property, stressed Christian discipline, and stood for a simple, pure, and unworldly Christianity. The Brethren were organized as a Church by Lukaš of Prague, who broke with the tradition of uncompromising asceticism of the earlier Brethren, exalted faith without works, and in 1494 had the writings of Chelšický and Gregory condemned by the Synod of Rychnov. Under Lukaš's leadership the sect spread rapidly, though persecuted by the Utraquists. Their efforts to join the *Lutherans, frustrated at first by refusal to give up the celibacy of the priesthood, the Seven Sacraments, and a strict Church discipline, were successful only in 1542, after the death of Lukaš (1528), when they accepted justification by faith alone and the *Real Presence, but retained their discipline of public and private confession of sins. After the victory of Mühlberg (1547) the Emp. Ferdinand took repressive measures against them and some emigrated. Many eventually settled in Poland, where they united with the *Calvinists at the Synod of Kozminek (1555). Those who remained in Bohemia obtained the freedom to practise their cult from Maximilian II in 1575, but fixed their principal seat in Moravia, hence the other name under which they are known. In 1609 Rudolf II handed over to them the university of Prague and gave them many other rights, but after the Battle of the White Mountain (1620) they were exiled, together with their last bishop, the famous educationist A. *Comenius. The remains of the sect survived for a hundred years, and in 1721 accepted an offer of N. L. von *Zinzendorf to join the *Herrnhuter, with whom they amalgamated. Their doctrine rested on the authority of Scripture, the interpretation of which is entrusted to the community. Each member was to realize the ideal of the Sermon on the Mount by a life of poverty and renunciation under the strict supervision of the elders. They rejected the veneration of the saints and held that the efficacy of the Sacraments depends on the dignity of the minister and the faith of the recipients. The Bohemian Brethren laid special emphasis on Church services, organization, and education. Their schools were famous and their contribution to Czech literature considerable, esp. through their complete translation of the Bible (6 vols., 1579–93). They greatly influenced *Methodism in its earlier stages.

For their later history, see under Herrnhut and Moravian Brethren.

For the bulk of the literature see bibl. to Moravians. J. Goll (ed.), Quellen und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Böhmischen Brüder (2 vols., Prague, 1878–82). J. T. Müller, Geschichte der Böhmischen Brüder (3 vols., Herrnhut, 1922–1931). V. L. Tapié, Une Église tchèque au XVe siècle. L'Unité des frères (thesis, Paris, 1934); R. Říčan, Die Böhmischen Brüder. Ihr Ursprung und ihre Geschichte, tr. into Germ. by B. Polelár (1961); E. Peschke, Die Böhmischen Brüder im Urteil ihrer Zeit (Arbeiten zur Theologie, I. Reihe, xvii; 1964). P. Brock, The Political and Social Doctrines of the Unity of Czech Brethren in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries (Slavistic Printings and Reprintings, xi; The Hague, 1957), with bibl. M. Spinka, 'Peter Chelčický, the Spiritual Father of the Unitas Fratrum' in Church History, xii (1943), pp. 271–291.

BOHEMOND I (c. 1052–1111), Prince of Antioch. He was the eldest son of Duke Robert Guiscard, the Norman conqueror of Apulia, on whose death (1085) he was passed over in favour of his half-brother. As leader of the S. Italian contingent Bohemond played an important part in the success of the First *Crusade. In return for his undertaking to secure the surrender of Antioch, the other leaders promised Bohemond possession of that city, which should, however, as a recent Byzantine possession, have been returned to the Emperor Alexius I (June 1098). Bohemond remained in Antioch during the march on Jerusalem, received investiture from the new Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem, and was enlarging his new principality when he was captured by the Turks (August 1100–May 1103). After losses of territory to Alexius he left Antioch to raise an expedition in the West against the Emperor, but his enterprise, which received Papal backing, ended in humiliating defeat (Treaty of Devol, 1108) and he died at Canosa in 1111 in relative obscurity, his great ambitions disappointed.

Bohemond's expulsion of the Greek Patriarch from Antioch and his appointment of a Latin successor (1100), together with his hostility towards Byzantium, contributed much to the hardening of the schism between Rome and the E. Churches.

The most important primary authority for Bohemond's career in 1097–9 is the Gesta Francorum et aliorum Hierosolimitanorum, written by an unknown knight in his army, separately ed. by H. Hagenmeyer (2 parts, Heidelberg, 1889–1890), L. Bréhier (Paris, 1924), B. A. Lees (Oxford, 1924), and with Eng. tr., R. Hill (London, 1962); it must be compared with other Western chronicles of the First Crusade written from different viewpoints. *Anna Comnena, Alexiad (ed. E. A. S. Dawes, 1928), who as the 14-year old daughter of Alexius I was clearly fascinated by Bohemond in 1097, gives a hostile Byzantine view. Ralf of Caen, 'Gesta Tancredi in expeditione Hierosolymitana', in Recueil des historiens des Croisades, Historiens occidentaux, iii (Paris, 1856), pp. 587–716, is an apologia for Bohemond's nephew and lieutenant Tancred. The standard modern biography is R. B. Yewdale, Bohemond I, Prince of Antioch (Princeton, 1924); cf. also Evelyn Jamison, 'Some Notes on the Anonymi Gesta Francorum, with special reference to the Norman Contingent from South Italy and Sicily in the First Crusade' in Studies in French Language and Mediaeval Literature presented to Professor Mildred K. Pope (Manchester, 1939), pp. 183–208; E. Pontieri, Tra I Normanni nell'Italia Meridionale (ed. 2, Naples, 1964), pp. 359–408 ('I Normanni d'Italia meridionale e la prima Crociata'). L. Bréhier in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 484–98, s.v.

BOLLANDISTS. The *Jesuit editors of the '*Acta Sanctorum', so called after John van Bolland (1596–1665), the founder and first editor of the work. The plan for a critical edition of the lives of the Saints, based on authentic sources, had been conceived by Heribert Rosweyde (1569–1629), who, however, did not live to see any of it published. Under Bolland and his successors nearly all the archives and libraries of religious houses were systematically combed for material, for which a special museum was founded at Antwerp. Work by the Bollandists was suspended when the Jesuits were suppressed in Belgium in 1773, but resumed in 1837. Among the most outstanding of recent Bollandists is H. *Delehaye. Since 1882 the '*Analecta Bollandiana' (q.v.) have been published as supplements.

H. Delehaye, S.J., A travers trois siècles. L'œuvre des Bollandistes, 1615–1915 (1920; Eng. tr., 1922; revised ed. with additional bibl., 1959); P. Peeters, S.J., L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres. Mémoires. 2e Sér. (8vo), xxxix, fasc. 4; 1942; ed. 2, liv, fasc. 5; 1961). Id., Figures bollandiennes contemporaines (Collection Durandal No. 73; 1948). [M.] D. Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 1–32. R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie (1953), pp. 329–50. C. De Smedt, S.J., in C.E., ii (1907), pp. 630–9, s.v.; M. Scaduto, S.J., in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1782–90, s.v.

BOLOGNA. The ancient Bononia, in N. Italy. In the Middle Ages its university (founded in the 12th cent.) was the chief centre in Europe for the study of canon and civil law. The city has retained since the 5th cent. its devotion to St. *Petronius (d. c. 450), an early bishop. The first general chapter of the *Dominican Order was held in the town in 1220, and in the church of S. Domenico lies the body of St. *Dominic (d. 1221).

H. *Rashdall (ed. by F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden), The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, i (1936), ch. iv, pp. 87–268, with bibl. A. Sorbelli and L. Simeoni, Storia della università di Bologna (2 vols., 1940). Storia di Bologna: vol. i: I Tempi Antichi, by P. Ducati (Bologna, 1928); vol. ii: Dalle Origini del Cristianesimo agli Albori del Comune, by A. Sorbelli (ib., 1938). Edith E. C. James, Bologna. Its history, antiquities and art (1909). F. Bonnard in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 645–60, incl. further bibl.

BOLOGNA, Concordat of (1516). The agreement between Pope *Leo X and Francis I of France which ended the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges. The French king was to nominate ecclesiastics to metropolitan and cathedral churches, to abbeys, and to conventual priories, and, if certain rules were complied with, Papal confirmation was not to be refused. After two invalid nominations, however, the appointment was to lapse to the Pope.

Orig. indult, 'Primitiva illa Ecclesia', in Hardouin, ix (1714), cols. 1810–25; Leo X's supplementary bull, 'Pastor Aeternus' (19 Dec. 1516), which finally abrogated the Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges, ib., cols. 1826–31; extracts in Mirbt, No. 414, p. 252 f. L. Madelin, 'Les Premières Applications du concordat de 1516 d'après les dossiers du château Saint-Ange' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire de l'École Française de Rome, xvii (1897), pp. 323–85

BOLSEC, HIERONYMUS HERMES (d. 1584), Reformation theologian. Orig. a *Carmelite friar at Paris, he was obliged through the hostility to his Protestant preaching to flee to Italy, where he took refuge with the Duchess of Ferrara and began to practise as a physician. Later he took up residence in the Chablais, was brought into personal relations with J. *Calvin, and became keenly interested in the Reformer's doctrines. Soon, however, he found himself unable to accept Calvin's teaching on predestination, and after challenging it at Geneva on 16 Oct. 1551, was handed over to the secular powers and imprisoned. When the City Council referred the matter to the three neighbouring Swiss Churches of Basle, Zürich, and Berne, these towns gave Calvin only moderate support. But though their attitude was in fact a triumph for Bolsec, the Genevan Council dared not force Calvin's resignation, and on 22 Dec. 1551 Bolsec was banished from Geneva for ever. Calvin deemed the challenge sufficiently grave to reformulate his doctrine of predestination in the '*Consensus Genevensis'. Bolsec now began an unseemly personal attack on Calvin, carrying on his defence in the Chablais, at Berne, and at *Paris. He was present at the National Synod of Orléans in 1562, and his doctrines were again condemned at Lyons in the following year. In his last years Bolsec returned to the RC Church. His writings include very hostile Lives of Calvin (1577)—the one act of Calvin of which he approved was the burning of M. *Servetus—and of T. *Beza (1582).

E. Choisy in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), p. 281 f., s.v. J. Dedieu in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 676–9, s.v., with ref.

BOLSENA, The Miracle of. The traditional story, familiar through *Raphael's paintings in the *Vatican stanze, has it that when a German priest on pilgrimage to Rome was once celebrating Mass in the church of St. Cristina in the little Umbrian town of Bolsena, he was disturbed by doubts about the transubstantiation of the bread and wine, which were suddenly resolved when he saw Blood issue from the Elements and bathe the corporal. It is also narrated that when Pope Urban IV had been shown the corporal, which had been conveyed to Orvieto where he was staying, he at once determined to institute the Feast of Corpus Christi and also enjoined work to begin on the cathedral of Orvieto to enshrine such a precious relic. There is no contemporary evidence for the miracle, and there is no trace of it in Urban's bull instituting the Feast.

The Miracle is first mentioned by St. *Antoninus of Florence (Chronica, III, tit. xix, c. 13). It is found in a fuller form in *Benedict XIV, Commentarii duo de D.N. Jesu Christi Matrisque Eius Festis, I (Lat. tr., 1745), p. 212.

BOMBASTUS VON HOHENHEIM, THEOPHRASTUS. See Paracelsus.

BONAVENTURE, St. (c. 1217–74). Giovanni di Fidanza, *Franciscan theologian, 'Doctor seraphicus'. An Italian by birth, he studied in the Faculty of Arts in the University of *Paris. Probably in 1243 he entered the Franciscan Order and then studied theology under *Alexander of Hales. In 1248 he began to teach publicly; in 1253–4 he became doctor in theology; he continued teaching until 1257, with a short interruption due to the quarrel between the secular masters and the mendicant orders. On 2 Feb. 1257 he was elected Minister General of his order, and in this capacity he took a prominent part in settling the internal dissensions by which the order was then rent. His Life of St. *Francis was approved by his order in 1263 as the official biography of their founder, and in 1266 a general chapter at Paris decreed the destruction of all other 'legends' of the Saint. In 1271 he was mainly responsible for securing the election of *Gregory X to the Papacy. In 1273 he was created Cardinal Bp. of Albano. He took a prominent part in the events of the Council of *Lyons of 1274 and died while it was still sitting. Feast day, 14 July.

As a theologian he remained faithful to the tradition which derived from St. *Augustine and was reasserted by St. *Anselm, and had only limited sympathy with the new *Aristotelian doctrines, though he acknowledged that Aristotle's description of the facts was often correct. As against St. *Thomas, who gave a far more ready hearing to the new doctrines, St. Bonaventure held that the creation of the world in time could be demonstrated by the light of reason. He emphasized that all human wisdom was folly when compared with the mystical illumination which God sheds on the faithful Christian; and this essentially mystical theory of knowledge he set forth in his 'Itinerarium Mentis in Deum'. His most extensive and systematic work is his 'Commentary on the *Sentences' of *Peter Lombard. He denied the doctrine of the *immaculate conception of the BVM. As a spiritual writer he had a great and lasting influence.

Crit. ed. of his Works by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (10 vols.; sep. index to vols. i–vi, Quaracchi, 1882–1902). Opera Theologica Selecta, ed. idd., Editio Minor (5 vols., ib., 1934–64) [vols. i–iv contain his commentary on the Sentences, vol. v various smaller works]. A different recension of the Collationes in Hexaëmeron from that in the complete works was ed. by F. Delorme, O.F.M. (Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, viii; ib., 1934). Modern Eng. tr. of his works by J. de Vinck (5 vols., Patterson, N.J., 1960–70). Modern life, by L. Costelloe, O.F.M. ('The Friar Saint Series', 1911). É. Gilson, La Philosophie de Saint Bonaventure (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, iv, 1924; Eng. tr., 1938), with bibl. J. G. Bougerol, O.F.M., Introduction à l'Étude de Saint Bonaventure (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série i, Théologie dogmatique, ii [1961]). C. H. Tavard, A.A., Transiency and Permanence. The Nature of Theology according to St. Bonaventure (Franciscan Institute Publications, St. Bonaventure, N.Y., 1954); J. Ratzinger, Die Geschichtstheologie des heiligen Bonaventura (1959), with bibl.; A. Gerken, O.F.M., Theologie des Wortes. Das Verhältnis von Schöpfung und Inkarnation bei Bonaventure (1963). R. Guardini, Systembildende Elemente in der Theologie Bonaventuras. Die Lehren vom Lumen Mentis, von der Gradatio Entium und der Influentia Sensus et Motus, ed. W. Dettloff (Studia et Documenta Franciscana, iii; Leiden, 1964). E. Longpré, O.F.M. in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 741–88, s.v.; id. in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 1768–1843, s.v., both with bibl. I. C. Brady, O.F.M., in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 658–64, s.v., with details of Eng. trr. to date.

BONHOEFFER, DIETRICH (1906–45), Lutheran pastor. The son of a Professor of Psychiatry at Berlin, Bonhoeffer studied at *Tübingen and Berlin, but was deeply influenced by K. *Barth. After his ordination, he worked in Barcelona and at the *Union Theological Seminary in New York (1928–9), and then returned to a university lectureship and pastoral work in Berlin in 1931, a year in which he also began his enduring connexion with the *ecumenical movement. Opposed to the Nazi movement from the first, he sided with the *Confessing Church against the *German Christians, and signed the *Barmen Declaration in 1934. After serving as Chaplain to the Lutheran congregation in London, he returned to Germany in 1935 to become head of a seminary for the Confessing Church at Finkenwalde in Pomerania; here he put into practice ideas learnt in England at Kelham and *Mirfield. He was forbidden by the Nazis to teach, banned from Berlin and dismissed from his lectureship there in 1936; in 1937 the seminary at Finkenwalde was closed by the government. On the outbreak of the Second World War Bonhoeffer was in America on a lecture-tour, but he felt it his duty to return to Germany. In 1942 he tried to mediate between the Germans opposed to Hitler and the British government through his friendship with G. K. A. *Bell. He was arrested in 1943 and after imprisonment in Buchenwald he was hanged by the Gestapo at Flossenbürg in 1945.

His best known work, Widerstand und Ergebung (ed. E. Bethge, 1951; Eng. tr. as Letters and Papers from Prison, 1953), needs to be read in the context of his surroundings and other writings. His first work, Sanctorum Communio (1930; Eng. tr., 1963), on the structure of the Church, is much modified by his second, Akt und Sein (1931; Eng. tr., Act and Being, 1962). This centres on the concept of revelation, which to him demanded a continuity to be found in Christ preached in the Church; the individual thus experiences revelation only in relation to the community. In Widerstand und Ergebung he is concerned with the growing secularization of modern man and the necessity of speaking in a secular way about God. Though writers of the Death of God school have taken up his idea of religionless Christianity, his teaching represents a search for the beyond in the midst, and a demand for a radical reform of the Church, which in its existing form he thought to have no message for the present day. In its place he sought a form of Christianity capable of dispensing with traditional religion as a prerequisite of biblical faith. His other works include Die Nachfolge (1937; Eng. tr., The Cost of Discipleship, 1948) and Ethik (ed. E. Bethge, 1949; Eng. tr., 1950).

Gesammelte Schriften ed. E. Bethge (4 vols., Munich, 1958–61). Eng. tr. of Letters, Lectures and Notes 1928–1936, under the title No Rusty Swords, by E. H. Robertson–J. Bowden (1965) and of Letters, Lectures and Notes, 1935–1939 as The Way to Freedom by idd. (1966). E. Bethge, Dietrich Bonhoeffer. Theologe, Christ, Zeitgenosse (Munich, 1967; Eng. tr., 1970). Other studies by R. Marlé (Paris, 1967; Eng. tr., 1968), W. Kuhns (Dayton, 1967, London, 1968), Mary Bosanquet (London, 1968), and A. Dumas (Geneva, 1968; Eng. tr., 1972). J. D. Godsey, The Theology of Dietrich Bonhoeffer (1960); H. Müller, Von der Kirche zur Welt. Ein Beitrag zu der Beziehung des Wortes Gottes auf die Societas in Dietrich Bonhoeffers theologischer Entwicklung (Hamburg, 1966); J. A. Phillips, The Form of Christ in the World. A Study of Bonhoeffer's Christology (1967). R. Mayer, Christuswirklichkeit. Grundlagen, Entwicklung und Konsequenzen der Theologie Dietrich Bonhoeffers (1969). E. Bethge and others, Die Mündige Welt. Dem Andenken Dietrich Bonhoeffers (5 vols., Munich, 1955–69). Useful collection of essays on Bonhoeffer in Eng. in R. G. Smith (ed.), World Come of Age (1967).

BONIFACE, St. (680–754), the 'Apostle of Germany'. Wynfrith, as he was originally called, was born at *Crediton, in Devon. In 716 he made a first, but unsuccessful, missionary journey to Frisia. Undaunted, he journeyed to Rome two years later, where he was forthwith armed with Papal authority, and in 719 on a second visit to Germany met with success in Bavaria and Thuringia and converted many of the Hessians. News of his work caused *Gregory II to demand his presence in Rome in 722, and Boniface from now on received the fullest Papal support. (The tradition that it was on this occasion that his name was changed to Boniface on the feast of St. Boniface, the Roman martyr, seems incorrect, as he apparently used the name Boniface earlier.) On his return to Germany, his courage in felling the Oak of Thor at Geismar, near Fritzlar, won him instant success, and not much later he was able to lay the foundations of a settled ecclesiastical organization for Germany. After the death of *Charles Martel (741), Boniface was given authority to carry through a reform of the whole Frankish Church, a task which he accomplished in a series of councils. He played some part in the founding of *Fulda. About 747 he became Abp. of Mainz, but after a few years he resigned the see to return to his old mission in Frisia, where he met with martyrdom. His devotion to the Papacy, coupled with the success of his work, greatly assisted the spread of Papal influence N. of the Alps. Feast day, 5 June.

Opera Omnia, ed. J. A. Giles (2 vols., London, 1844); J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxix, 597–892. Epp. by E. Dümmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), improved ed. by M. Tangl in ib., Epistolae Selectae, i (1916). Letters tr. by E. Kylie ('The King's Classics', 1911); later ed. with introd. by E. Emerton (Columbia Univ. Press, New York, 1940). Of early Lives (ed. W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1905), the most trustworthy is that by St. *Willibald. Eng. tr. of life by St. Willibald and a selection of Boniface's letters in C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 23–149. The many modern Lives (mainly Germ. and of varying merit) include those of J. C. A. Seiters (Mainz, 1845), J. P. Müller (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1869–1870), G. Pfahler (Ratisbon, 1880), O. Fischer (Leipzig, 1881), B. Kuhlmann (Paderborn, 1895), G. Kurth ('Les Saints', Paris, 1902), J. M. Williamson (Ventnor, 1904), G. F. Browne (London, 1910), J. J. Laux (Freiburg i.Br., 1922), W. Lampen (Amsterdam, 1949), G. W. Greenaway (London, 1955), and T. Schieffer (Freiburg, 1954). E. S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (1948), pp. 339–455. 'Gedenkgabe' for the 12th centenary of his death (Fulda, 1954). See also W. Levison's Ford Lectures (1946), esp. ch. iv.

BONIFACE I, St. (d. 422), Pope from 418. Before his election to the Papacy, he had been a presbyter at Rome. Immediately on the death of *Zosimus on 26 Dec. 418, both Boniface and the archdeacon Eulalius, a rival candidate, were elected and both were consecrated on the same day (29 Dec. 418). In consequence of the dispute, Boniface did not obtain possession of the see till 10 Apr. 419, after the Emp. Honorius had decided in his favour a week earlier at *Ravenna. He did much to restore the authority of the Papacy after the hesitating and unpopular rule of Zosimus, e.g. he firmly condemned *Pelagianism and restored the rights of the metropolitans in the S. of Gaul. He also secured the prefecture of Illyricum for his own jurisdiction when the E. Emp. *Theodosius II was endeavouring to transfer it to the obedience of the Patr. of *Constantinople. Feast day, 4 Sept.

L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 227–9. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 988 f., s.v., with bibl. J. Chapin in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 668 f., s.v.

BONIFACE VIII (c. 1234–1303), Pope from 1294. Benedict Gaetani was a native of Anagni. After studying at Todi and Spoleto he became a canon at *Paris, Rome, and elsewhere, and in 1276 entered upon his career at the Curia, being appointed consistorial advocate and *Notary Apostolic. Having been created cardinal-deacon in 1281 and cardinal priest in 1291, he was employed on important missions to France and Italy and took a decisive part in the abdication of St. *Celestine V. Elected Pope at Naples in 1294, he immediately went to Rome, and from the first strove to realize his double aim of the pacification of Europe and the liberation of the Holy Land from the Turks. His exertions, however, were destined to failure. After trying without success to reconcile Genoa and *Venice (1295), and to prevent the election of Frederick of Aragon as king of Sicily (1296), he became involved in his great struggle with Philip the Fair of France, which was to last until his death. In a professed attempt to stop the war between England and France by depriving the belligerents of their main financial resources, he issued the bull '*Clericis laicos' (q.v.; 25 Feb. 1296), forbidding the King to demand or receive extraordinary taxes from the clergy without Papal assent. When Philip replied by stopping all transports of gold and valuables to Rome, the Pope had to modify his claims and to concede to Philip the right to decide for himself cases of necessity in which he might levy taxes without consulting him, in the letter 'Ineffabilis Amoris' (20 Sept. 1296). At the same time the Papal position was aggravated by his difficulties with the powerful family of Colonna, with whom sided the *Fraticelli, whose exaggerated teachings Boniface had proscribed. The Papal armies, however, razed the Colonna fortresses to the ground, many members of the family finding refuge in France. In 1300 the Pope was able to celebrate the Jubilee with great pomp, despite the absence of nearly all European princes. But in 1301 the struggle between Boniface and Philip broke out again when the King brought to trial the Papal legate, Bp. Bernard de Saisset, demanding his degradation and delivery to the secular power. The Pope replied by the bull '*Ausculta Fili' (5 Dec. 1301), in which he enunciated the doctrine of Papal supremacy over princes and kingdoms, attacked Philip's government, and summoned the King or his representative to a synod in Rome. It was followed by the famous bull '*Unam Sanctam' (q.v.; 18 Nov. 1302), in which Boniface defended, with numerous patristic quotations, the jurisdiction of the Pope over all creatures. The struggle with Philip came to a head in 1303, when Philip refused to restore communications with Rome and endeavoured to bring the Pope to trial. Boniface replied by preparing a bull of excommunication, but Philip forestalled him, and William de Nogaret, at the head of a band of mercenaries, took the Pope prisoner at Anagni. Though Italian troops released him after three days, he was now broken in health and died at Rome a month later.

One of the great upholders of the absolute power of the Papacy, Boniface was the true successor of *Gregory VII and *Innocent III, but failed to understand the growth of national feeling which had taken place in the latter part of the 13th cent., and which increasingly diminished the political influence of the Popes. Among his many achievements is the compilation of the *Sext (q.v.), the embellishment of the Roman churches, and the foundation of the Roman university, the 'Sapienza' (1303).

G. Digard–M. Faucon–A. Thomas–R. Fawtier (edd.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2e Série, iv; 4 vols., 1904–39). L. Tosti, Storia di Bonifazio VIII e de' suoi tempi (2 vols., 1846); H. Finke, Aus den Tagen Bonifatius VIII (1902); T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933). F. M. Powicke, 'Pope Boniface VIII' in History, N.S., xviii (1934), pp. 307–29. M. Seidlmayer, 'Papst Bonifaz VIII und der Kirchenstaat' in Hist. J., lx (1940), pp. 78–87. J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'État au temps de Philippe le Bel (S.S.L., viii, 1926), passim, G. Digard, Philippe le Bel et le Saint-Siège de 1285 à 1304; ed. Françoise Lehoux (2 vols., 1936). G. Pou y Marti, O.F.M., in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1866–75; B. Tierney in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 671–3, both with bibl.

BONIFACE OF SAVOY (d. 1270), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the son of Thomas I, Count of Savoy, and through his sister's marriage became nearly related to Henry III. Having entered the *Carthusian Order while still a boy, in 1234 he was elected Bp. of Belley in Burgundy. In 1241 he was elected to succeed St. *Edmund of Abingdon as Abp. of Canterbury, but Papal confirmation was delayed and he did not reach England until 1244, when he promptly carried through several important financial reforms. In the same year he left to attend the Council of *Lyons (1245), where he was consecrated by *Innocent IV. He did not return until 1249, when he was enthroned at Canterbury on *All Saints' Day. He instituted a metropolitical visitation of his province which met with strong resistance from the clergy generally, and he retired to Rome until 1252. In his later years he was frequently abroad, returning to England for the last time in 1265. In 1269 he set out with Edward I on a crusade, but died on the way at St. Helena, Savoy. He became the subject of a cultus in Savoy (confirmed in 1830), where his feast is kept on 13 Mar.

G. Strickland, 'Ricerche storiche sopra il B. Bonifacio di Savoia, arcivescovo di Cantorbery 1207–70' in Miscellanea di Storia Italiana, Ser. 3, i (No. xxxii della Raccolta, 1895), pp. 349–432. Raymonde Foreville, 'L'Élection de Boniface de Savoie au Siège Primatial de Canterbury (1241–1243)' in Bulletin Philologique et Historique . . . du Comité des Travaux Historiques et Scientifiques, i (1960), pp. 435–50. M. *Creighton in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 350–2, s.v.

BONIFATIUSVEREIN (Ger., 'Boniface Society'). A society founded in 1849 under the patronage of St. *Boniface for the support of Catholics living in those parts of Germany where the population is mainly Protestant. Its work is centred at Paderborn in Westphalia.

H. Butterwegge in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 595 f., s.v.

BONN REUNION CONFERENCES. Two international conferences held at Bonn in 1874 and 1875 under the presidency of J. J. I. von *Döllinger to foster reunion between Churches which had retained the faith and order of historic Christianity. Their direction was in the hands of the newly separated *Old Catholics (though Döllinger himself never formally joined them). Others present included German Evangelicals, members of the E. Churches, and many theologians from Great Britain (including E. H. *Browne [Bp. of Winchester], H. P. *Liddon, and E. S. *Talbot) and America.

The Reports were publd. in English (London, 1875, 1876).

BONNER, EDMUND (c. 1500–1569). The last Bp. of London to die in communion with the Papacy. He was chaplain to T. *Wolsey and the only bishop who remained faithful to him till his death (1530). Despite this loyalty he retained the King's favour, and in 1538 he was appointed to the see of *Hereford, and in 1539 to that of London. During the successive changes in Church and state he was uncompromising in defending the traditional doctrines. Under *Edward VI he was deprived for maintaining *Transubstantiation. Restored by *Mary, he played a prominent part in reconciling the country with Rome and in enforcing the laws against heresy. Under *Elizabeth I he refused to take the oath under the Act of *Supremacy of 1559 and ended his days in the Marshalsea prison.

S. R. Maitland, Essays on Subjects Connected with the Reformation in England (1849), Nos. 17 f. and 20, pp. 345–95 and 406–76. L. B. Smith, Tudor Prelates and Politics 1536–1558 (Princeton Studies in History, viii; 1953), passim. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 356–60, s.v., with bibl. J. P. Whitney in D.E.C.H., p. 67 f., s.v.

BONOSUS (d. c. 400). A Bp. of Naïssus who denied the perpetual virginity of the BVM. His teaching was examined at a council at Capua in 391 and subsequently condemned; but Bonosus refused to submit and founded a sect (the 'Bonosians') which survived down to the 7th cent.

The earliest authority is Pope *Siricius, ep. 9 (ad Anysium, epis. Thessalonicensem); by an error, this letter is also ascribed to Ambrose ('ep.* 79'). Other sources include *Innocent I, epp. 16 and 17; *Marius Mercator (who, prob. mistakenly, describes Bonosus as Bp. of Sardica); Council of *Orange (538), can. 31, and *Vigilius, ep. 15. J. R. Palanque, St. Ambroise et l'empire romain (1933), pp. 259–63. E. Venables in D.C.B., i (1877), p. 330 f.; F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 314–17, with further reff. to sources; X. Le Bachelet, S.J., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1027–31.

BOOK ANNEXED, The. See Annexed Book, The.

BOOK OF ADVERTISEMENTS, The. See Advertisements, The Book of.

BOOK OF ARMAGH. See Armagh, Book of.

BOOK OF COMMON ORDER [COMMON PRAYER]. See Common Order [Common Prayer], The Book of.

BOOK OF CONCORD, The. See Concord, The Formula and Book of.

BOOK OF JUBILEES. See Jubilees, Book of.

BOOK OF KELLS. See Kells, The Book of.

BOOK OF LIFE. The phrase occurs in six passages in the NT: Phil. 4. 3, Rev. 3. 5, 13. 8, 17. 8, 20. 12, 15 and 21. 27. (In AV, also at 22. 19, but here all the best MS. evidence is for 'tree of life'.) The conception of a heavenly register of the elect is based on ideas found in the OT (e.g. Exod. 32. 32, Is. 4. 3, Ps. 69. 28) and in the Book of *Enoch (47. 3).

BOOK OF SPORTS. See Sports, Book of.

BOOKS OF DISCIPLINE, The. See Discipline, The Books of.

BOOTH, WILLIAM (1829–1912), founder and first General of the *Salvation Army (q.v.). A native of Nottingham and of partly Jewish origin, he was apprenticed to a pawnbroker in 1842. He became a *Methodist soon after, and in 1844 he had an experience of conversion. Two years later he became a revivalist preacher. In 1849 he went to London, and in 1855 married Catherine Mumford (1829–90), who shared his aspirations and became herself a famous preacher. In 1861 he left the Methodists, with whom he had come into conflict on account of his violent preaching, and established a revivalist movement of his own, called the Christian Mission, in Whitechapel, which undertook evangelistic, social, and rescue work. From 1880, when the Army spread to the U.S.A., Australia, the Continent, and elsewhere, he spent much of his life travelling and organizing and addressing meetings. In 1890 he published In Darkest England and the Way Out in collaboration with W. T. Stead, in which he suggested a number of remedies for the social evils of the times, including farm colonies and rescue homes. His work was encouraged by Edward VII as well as by several foreign authorities.

Booth's chief characteristic was his love for the poor, whose souls he sought to save by his preaching while at the same time ministering to their bodily needs. Though he was ignorant of theology and of a rather narrow outlook, the strength of his emotions and sympathies, combined with a shrewd commercial sense, made of his movement one of the most successful religious revivals of modern times.

In 1912 he was succeeded by his son, William Bramwell Booth (1856–1929), as General.

The Life of General Booth, by various authors (1912); H. Begbie, Life of William Booth (2 vols., 1920); St. John Ervine, God's Soldier (2 vols., 1934); R. Collier, The General next to God (1965). H. Begbie in D.N.B., 1912–1921, pp. 50–2.

Life of Catherine Booth by her son-in-law, F. de L. Booth-Tucker (2 vols., London [1892]); modern life by her granddaughter, Catherine Bramwell Booth (ib., 1970). Life of William Bramwell Booth by id. (ib., 1933).

BOOTHS, Feast of. See Tabernacles, Feast of.

BORBORIANS. A sect of libertine *Gnostics which flourished from the 2nd to the 5th cents. Their doctrines and practices are described by *Epiphanius (Haer., 26).

BORDEAUX PILGRIM, The. The earliest known Christian pilgrim from W. Europe to the *Holy Land. He made his pilgrimage in A.D. 333–4, visiting *Constantinople and finishing his journey at Milan. His account ('Itinerarium Burdigalense') is for the most part only a list of the stages in his route, but there is a brief description of some of the sites of Palestine.

Itinerarium first publ. by P. *Pithou (n.p., 1589); crit. edd. by P. Geyer, C.S.E.L., xxxix (1889), pp. 1–33, with introd. pp. iv–viii, and O. Cuntz, Itineraria Romana, i (Leipzig, 1929), pp. 86–102. Ed. based on those of Geyer and Cuntz, C.C., Series Latina, clxxv, 1965, pp. 1–26. Eng. tr. by A. Stewart, with notes by C. W. Wilson (Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society, 1887). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1853–8, s.v. 'Itinéraires', with notes of edd. and comm.; id., ib., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 76–8, s.v. 'Pèlerinages aux lieux saints'.

BORGIA, CESARE (1475–1507), Italian prince. The illegitimate son of Pope *Alexander VI, he was appointed to the Abpric. of Valencia and the cardinalate before he was 20 years of age. A few years later (1499) he was dispensed from the obligations of his orders so that he might marry Charlotte d'Albret, the sister of the King of Navarre. Soon after, King Louis XII created him Duke of Valentinois and his father made him 'Captain General of the Church'. A picturesque and able soldier, Cesare proved himself unscrupulous and merciless in securing his ends, though he ruled his subjects, once they were conquered, with justice and firmness, and on his activities N. Machiavelli is said to have based his portrait of The Prince. Cesare recovered many of the Papal provinces which had broken away from the Holy See, and was himself proclaimed Duke of Romagna. On his father's death, an illness precluded his taking part in the elections of his successors, Pius III (who lived only a few weeks) and *Julius II. The new Pope was a resolute enemy of the Borgia family, and Cesare fled to Naples, where he was arrested and taken to Spain by order of *Ferdinand of Aragon. He escaped to Navarre, where he was employed on military service by his brother-in-law and killed while besieging the rebel castle of Viana.

E. Alvisi, Cesare Borgia. Duca di Romagna. Notizie e documenti (1878). Studies by C. Yriarte (2 vols., Paris, 1889; Eng. version (shortened), 1947), R. Sabatini (London, [1911]), J. L. Garner (ib., 1912), W. H. Woodward (ib., 1913), G. Sacerdote (Milan, 1950), and C. Fusero (ib., 1958).

BORGIA, St. FRANCIS (1510–72), *Jesuit. The son of the Duke of Gandia, to whose title he succeeded in 1543, Francis early showed an inclination towards the religious life. *Charles V appointed him Viceroy of Catalonia, but on the death of his wife, Leonora de Castro, in 1546 he joined the Society of Jesus and in 1551 was ordained priest and disposed of his estates. He was the friend and adviser of St. *Ignatius Loyola and St. *Teresa, and proved a most active and zealous Churchman. Thus he was responsible for establishing many colleges and schools, and helped with the foundation of the 'Collegium Romanum'. He also used his influence to gain for the Jesuits a favourable reception in France. He soon won a widespread reputation for piety, was appointed Commissary General of the Jesuits for Spain, Portugal, and the Indies, and in 1565, on *Lainez's death, became the third General of the order. He died in 1572 and was canonized in 1671. Feast day, 10 Oct.

Opera Omnia, publd. at Brussels, 1675. Letters and other material in the Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu (5 vols., Madrid, 1894–1911). Modern ed. of his Tratados espirituales, with introd., by C. de Dalmases, S.J. (Espirituales Españoles, Serie A, Textos, xv; Barcelona, 1964). Contemporary Lives by P. Ribadeneira, S.J. (Rome, 1596) and D. Vásquez, S.J. (unpubld.). Modern biographies by P. Suau ('Les Saints', Paris, 1905; more substantial work, Paris, 1910); O. Karrer, S.J. (Freiburg i.Br., 1921), with bibliography, and Saint-Paulien (Paris, 1959). M. Yeo, The Greatest of the Borgias (1936). C. de Dalmases, S.J.–J. F. Gilmont, S.J., 'Las obras de San Francisco de Borgia' in Archivium Historicum Societatis Iesu, xxx (1961), pp. 125–79. C. de Dalmases, S.J., in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1019–32, s.v. 'François (5) de Borgia'; id. in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 709 f., s.v.

BORROMEO, St. CHARLES. See Charles Borromeo, St.

BORROW, GEORGE HENRY (1803–81), philologist and traveller. After education at Norwich Grammar School, he was articled to a firm of solicitors. His ambition was to be a writer, and soon he left the law to seek his fortune in London. He went on tramp as a tinker for several years; and from the wide experience thus gained he wrote later the descriptions of gypsy life in Lavengro (1851) and The Romany Rye (2 vols., 1857). As an agent of the *British and Foreign Bible Society he travelled widely, distributing copies of the Bible. His The Bible in Spain (3 vols., 1843) became widely popular through its picturesque and vivacious narrative. He was also a considerable linguist, who made several translations of portions of the Scriptures into little-known tongues.

W. I. Knapp, The Life, Writings and Correspondence of George Borrow (1899). Studies by R. A. J. Walling (London, 1908), H. Jenkins (ibid., 1912), E. Thomas (ibid., 1912), C. K. Shorter (ibid., 1913, including unpublished letters; also ibid. [1919]), R. T. Hopkins (ibid., 1922), S. Dearden (ibid., 1939), Eileen Bigland (ibid., 1951), and B. Vesey-FitzGerald (ibid., 1953).

BOSANQUET, BERNARD (1848–1923), idealist philosopher. Educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he came under the influence of T. H. *Green and R. L. Nettleship, he was elected a Fellow of University College in 1870 and remained there until 1881. For most of the rest of his life he lived privately in London, except from 1903 to 1908 when he was professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrews. With F. H. *Bradley he was the leading exponent of *Absolute Idealism in England. Like Bradley, he showed in his teaching close affinities with G. W. F. *Hegel; but his interests were wider and his outlook more conciliatory. In logic, as for Bradley, the judgement and not the concept was the fundamental form. In his political theory he ascribed to the state, as the 'general' or 'rational will', almost limitless powers, a doctrine which met with severe criticism from L. T. Hobhouse among others. His understanding of religion was essentially *pantheistic. He conceived of it as only a stage towards metaphysics, and correspondingly of the God of religion as not more than the highest of the appearances of the Absolute; and the Incarnation at a moment in history he found meaningless. Among his many writings the chief are: Logic, or the Morphology of Knowledge (2 vols., 1888), A History of Aesthetic (1892), *A Companion to Plato's Republic (1895), The Philosophical Theory of the State (1899), The Principle of Individuality and Value (1912), The Value and Destiny of the Individual (1913), What Religion Is (1920), and The Meeting of Extremes in Contemporary Philosophy (1921).

His Life was written by his wife, Helen Bosanquet (1924). J. H. *Muirhead, B. Bosanquet and his Friends: Letters (1935). C. Le Chevalier, Éthique et idéalisme. Le Courant néo-hégélien en Angleterre, Bernard Bosanquet et ses amis (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1963). C. C. J. *Webb, 'Bernard Bosanquet's Philosophy of Religion' in the Hibbert Journal, xxii (1923–4), pp. 75–96. A. D. Lindsay in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 91–93.

BOSCO, St. JOHN (1815–88). The founder of the *Salesian Order (q.v.). The son of Piedmontese peasants, he was brought up in and around Turin, where he spent most of his life. A vision received at the age of nine (the first of many more throughout his life) aroused in him a keen interest in winning lads to the Christian faith, and in 1859 he founded the 'Pious Society of St. *Francis de Sales', commonly known as the 'Salesians'. His influence over his boys was achieved by using a minimum of restraint and discipline, combined with a careful watch over his pupils' development and the use of personal and religious encouragement. Don Bosco also actively promoted industrial schools and evening classes where young men could be apprenticed for secular vocations in a religious background. In the latter part of his life he did much to foster missionary work. He was beatified in 1929 and canonized in 1934. Feast day, 31 Jan.

Epistolario, ed. E. Ceria (Turin, 1955 ff.). G. B. Lemoyne–E. Ceria, Memorie biografiche di don Giovani Bosco (19 vols., ib., 1898–1939; Eng. tr., New Rochelle, 1964 ff.). C. d'Espiney, Don Bosco (Nice, 1881; ed. 10 with additional material, 1888). Other lives by A. Auffray, S.C. (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1930), H. L. Hughes (London, 1934,) H. *Ghéon (Paris, 1935, Eng. tr., 1935), and L. C. Sheppard (London, 1957). L. Castano, S.D.B.–C. Testore, S.J., in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 620–3, s.v. 'Giovanni Bosco'.

BOSIO, ANTONIO (c. 1576–1629), Italian archaeologist, dubbed by G. B. *de Rossi the 'Columbus of the Catacombs'. A native of Malta, he was sent to school at Rome. After preliminary studies in philosophy and law, he gave himself up at the age of 18 to archaeology, to which he devoted the rest of his life. He was the first to recognize the significance of an accidental discovery on 31 May 1578 of a subterranean burial-place on the Via Salaria. Bosio's first descent was on 10 Dec. 1593 at the Catacomb of Domitilla (though Bosio could not yet name it) on the Via Ardeatina, when, through inexperience, he lost himself and only just succeeded in finding his way out. His very extensive discoveries were described in his Roma sotterranea (finished 1620; not published until '1632', actually 1634 owing to delays with printing), which remained the standard work until G. B. de Rossi's researches. It was a remarkable achievement, the least satisfactory part of it being the engravings, which Bosio had entrusted to colleagues.

A. Valeri, Cenni biografici di Antonio Bossio con documenti inediti (1900); G. Ferretto, Note storico-bibliografiche di archeologia cristiana (1942), pp. 132–62. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 1084–93.

BOSSEY, Switzerland. An Ecumenical Institute of the *World Council of Churches was opened at the Château de Bossey, 12 miles from Geneva, in Sept. 1946. It owed its existence largely to the generosity of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. The Institute runs courses and conferences which aim at fostering characteristics of Christian leadership, as well as bringing together members of different Churches. By arrangement with the University of Geneva, it constitutes a Graduate School of Ecumenical Studies.

BOSSUET, JACQUES BÉNIGNE (1627–1704), French preacher and Bp. of Meaux. The fifth son of a judge in the Parlement of Dijon, he was educated first at the *Jesuit school at Dijon, later at Metz (whither his father had removed), and at the age of 13 appointed to a canonry in Metz cathedral. In 1642 he went to *Paris, where he entered the Collège de Navarre to train for the priesthood. His oratorical gifts attracted notice through a sermon with which as a boy of 16 he entertained a salon at the Hôtel de Rambouillet. In 1649 he was ordained deacon and, after preparation under St. *Vincent de Paul, priest at Metz in 1652. After seven years at Metz, spent in study, controversy with the Protestants, and preaching, in 1659 he moved to Paris. Here his fame rapidly grew and he was a frequent preacher before the court. He was mainly responsible for the conversion of Marshal Turenne from Protestantism in 1668. In 1669 he was appointed Bp. of Condom in Gascony and in the same year delivered the first of his great 'Funeral Orations' (on *Henrietta Maria), which revealed to the full his powers as a pulpit orator. For the next eleven years he was tutor to the Dauphin (1670–81). During this period he published his Exposition de la doctrine catholique sur les matières de controverse (1671), and also wrote (in the first place for his pupil's instruction) his Traité de la connaissance de Dieu et de soi-même (publd. 1722) and his Discours sur l'histoire universelle (1681). The latter was a compelling presentation of the Christian view of Divine overruling in history. On the completion of his duties as preceptor he was translated to the see of Meaux (1681), and now came to take an increasingly prominent part in French ecclesiastical affairs. At the Assemblée générale du Clergé of 1682 he was mainly instrumental in securing the support of the French clergy for the moderate *Gallicanism of the Four *Gallican Articles (q.v.), which he himself drew up. In his zeal for the Catholic faith he approved of the Revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) and also directed many publications against the Protestants, among which his Histoire des variations des Églises protestantes (2 vols., 1688) was the most notable. At the same time Bossuet hoped that Christian reunion might be furthered by peaceful methods, and to this end conducted a long correspondence (1683–1700) with G. W. *Leibniz. His Méditations sur l'Évangile (publd. 1731) and his Élévations sur les mystères (publd. 1727), written in the concluding decade of his life, rank as classics of French devotional literature. In his last years the case of Mme *Guyon led him into a bitter controversy on mysticism with F. *Fénelon, and Bossuet was mainly responsible for his condemnation in 1699. His views were embodied in his Relation sur le quiétisme (1698). He was also a vigorous opponent of R. *Simon's theories of the Bible, notably in his Défense de la tradition et des saints pères (publd. 1763).

By common consent Bossuet is among the greatest preachers of all time. Not only did he possess the outward gifts which belong to the successful orator (an impressive presence, a pleasing voice, ease of manner, fitness of phrase); he also combined with them precision of thought, complete grasp of the subject and, above all, a strong hold on dogmatic truth; and to the dry light of argument he added the fire of passion. The fact that he was at his best on a large canvas made the funeral oration a form specially suited to his talents. The three on Henrietta Maria (1669), Henriette Anne d'Angleterre (1670), and the Prince de Condé (1687) will remain classics. But his real greatness as a preacher rests on the distinction he showed on less formal occasions.

Complete Works, ed. F. Lachat (31 vols., Paris, 1862–6). Œuvres oratoires, ed. J. Lebarq (7 vols., Lille and Paris, 1890–1921). Correspondence, ed. C. Urbain and E. Levesque (15 vols., Paris, 1909–12). Lives by L. F. de Bausset (4 vols., Paris, 1814), A. Réaume (3 vols., ib., 1869–70), G. Lanson (ib., 1891), A. Rébelliau ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1900), E. K. Sanders (London, 1921), G. Baumann (Paris, 1929), W. J. Sparrow Simpson (London, 1937), and J. Calvet (Paris, 1941). A. Rébelliau, Bossuet, historien du protestantisme (1891); C. E. Freppel, Bossuet et l'éloquence sacrée au XVIIe siècle (2 vols. 1893); A. M. P. Ingold, Bossuet et le jansénisme (1897; ed. 2, 1904); G. Truc, Bossuet et le classicisme religieux (1934); A.-G. Martimort, Le Gallicanisme de Bossuet (Unam Sanctam, xxiv, 1953); R. Schmittlein, L'Aspect politique du différend Bossuet–Fénelon (Bade, 1954); L. Cognet, Crépuscule des mystiques. Bossuet. Fénelon (Tournai [1958]); J. Truchet, La Prédication de Bossuet (2 vols., 1960); id., Bossuet panégyriste (1962); id., Politique de Bossuet (1966). Thérèse Goyet, L'Humanisme de Bossuet (2 vols. in 1; [1965]). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., 'Bossuet, ses relations avec l'Angleterre' in R.H.E., xxvii (1931), pp. 535–71. A.

Largent in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1049–89; A. Levesque in D.H.G.E., ix (1937), cols. 1339–91.

BOTULPH, St. (mid. 7th cent.), also Botolph, Botwulf. Acc. to the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle the founder and first abbot of a monastery at Icanhoe (or Ox-island) in 654; but it is uncertain whether this was Iken in Suffolk, where the church is dedicated to St. Botulph, or Boston (i.e. Botulph's town) in Lincs. During the Middle Ages the cult of the Saint was very popular, esp. in E. Anglia and the North, and some 70 English churches have been dedicated to him. Feast day, 17 June.

*Bede, Historia Abbatum Auctore Anonymo, cap. 4; notes in ed. by C. Plummer, ii (1896), p. 372. Life by Folcard printed in AA.SS., Jun. III (1701), pp. 402 f. For MSS., editions and value of Folcard and other lives, Hardy, i, pp. 373–6. F. S. Stevenson, 'St. Botolph (Botwulf) and Iken' in Proceedings of the Suffolk Institute of Archaeology and Natural History, xviii (1922), pp. 29–52.

BOUNDS, Beating of the. See Beating of the Bounds.

BOURCHIER, THOMAS (c. 1410–86), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Oxford, of which University he later became Chancellor, he was appointed to the see of *Worcester in 1433, of *Ely in 1443, of Canterbury in 1454, and created cardinal in 1467. He became much involved in the political affairs of the time, maintaining an even balance between the conflicting interests of Lancaster and York, and retaining the favour of Edward IV. In 1457 he took a leading part in the trial of R. *Pecock, Bp. of *Chichester, for heresy. He lived to crown Henry VII king.

Registrum Thome Bourgchier Cantuariensis Archiepiscopi A.D. 1454–1486 ed. F. R. H. du Boulay (Canterbury and York Society, liv; 1957). W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, v (1867), pp. 268–386. J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., v (1886), pp. 15–18, s.v.; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 230–32, s.v. 'Bourgchier, Thomas'; both with reff. For his part in Pecock's condemnation see also V. H. H. Green, Bishop Reginald Pecock (1945), pp. 49–60.

BOURDALOUE, LOUIS (1632–1704), French preacher. He entered the *Jesuit Order in 1648, and was for many years employed in teaching humanities and morals in various provincial Jesuit houses. In 1666 he began to preach. His courses of sermons, twelve in all, delivered in Advent and Lent before Louis XIV and his court in and after 1670, earned him the reputation of the best preacher of his time. His published sermons, though somewhat dry, exhibit excellent qualities of clarity and logical construction. Notes taken at the time of their delivery tend to confirm the impression of rhetorical power which he made upon his contemporaries. For the most part he was concerned with the moral applications of Christianity, combining an inflexible austerity of principle with a remarkable psychological tact and insight, perfected in the practice of spiritual direction.

Sermons et autres œuvres, ed. by F. Bretonneau (16 vols., Lyons, etc., 1707–34). Œuvres complètes (18 vols., Toulouse, 1818); also ed. by E. Griselle (vols. i–ii only, Paris, 1919–22), P. M. Lauras, S.J., Bourdaloue, sa vie et ses œuvres (2 vols., Paris, 1881). Other lives by A. Feugère (Paris, 1874), A. A. L. Pauthe (ib., 1900), F. Castets (2 vols., ib., 1901–4), and E. Byrne (ib., 1929). E. A. Blampignon, Étude sur Bourdaloue avec quelques documents inédits, suivie d'un choix de sermons (1886). D. N. Tarrou, Étude sur Bourdaloue, prédicateur (1857); E. de Ménorval, Bourdaloue, vie d'un jésuite de la maison professe de la rue Saint-Antoine au XVIIe siècle (1897); E. Griselle, Bourdaloue, histoire critique de sa prédication d'après les notes de ses auditeurs et les témoignage contemporains (3 vols., 1901–6).

BOURIGNON, ANTOINETTE (1616–80), Flemish enthusiast and adventuress. She tried to found a new ascetic order, and to run an orphanage at Liège as an *Augustinian house, both unsuccessfully. After 1662 she was estranged from organized Christianity, and came to conceive herself to be the 'woman clothed with the sun' of Rev. 12. The 'Bourignonians', a sect which believed in her pretensions, flourished in Scotland in the early part of the 18th cent.

Her collected works were issued at Amsterdam (19 vols., 1686). A. v. d. Linde, Antoinette Bourignon. Das Licht der Welt (Leiden, 1895); A. R. Macewen, Antoinette Bourignon, Quietist (1910). R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm. Chapters in the History of Religion (Oxford, 1950), pp. 352–5.

BOUSSET, WILHELM (1865–1920), NT scholar. In 1916 he became professor of NT theology at Giessen. He made extensive investigations into the connexions of later *Judaism and early Christianity with the contemporary Hellenistic religions, and the growth of the so-called '*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule' owed much to his researches. Among his chief writings were Der Antichrist (1895), Die Religion des Judentums im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter (1903; ed. 3 by H. Gressmann, 1926), Die Hauptprobleme der Gnosis (1907), Kyrios Christos (1913), and Apophthegmata, Studien zur Geschichte des ältesten Mönchtums (1923, posthumous).

Bousset edited, with W. Heitmüller, the Theologische Rundschau, 1897–1917, and with H. *Gunkel the Forschungen zur Religion und Geschichte des AT und NT, 1903 ff. L. Thomas in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 989–92, s.v.

BOW CHURCH. The church of St. Mary-le-Bow ('S. Maria de Arcubus') in Cheapside, so named from the stone arches of the original 11th cent. church on the site. The present church, which was badly damaged in an air raid in 1940, was built by C. *Wren after the Great Fire of 1666. It gave its name to the 'Court of *Arches' which formerly met in the vestry of the church. The confirmation of those elected bishops in the province of *Canterbury still takes place here.

See bibl. to Arches, Court of.

BOWDEN, JOHN WILLIAM (1798–1844), *Tractarian. A close friend and contemporary at Trinity College, Oxford, of J. H. *Newman, with whom he collaborated on a poem on 'St. Bartholomew's Eve' (1821), he became a warm supporter of the Oxford Movement. He wrote some of the Tracts for the Times (Nos. 5, 29, 30, 56 and perhaps 58), many articles for the British Critic* and a Life of *Gregory VII (1840). He also contributed six hymns to 'Lyra Apostolica' (1836).

C. Kent in D.N.B., vi (1886), p. 41, s.v.

BOWING. From very early times Christians have bowed 'at the name of Jesus', on the authority of Phil. 2. 10. How far back the custom of bowing at other times, particularly to the altar, can be traced, is disputed. In the C of E, despite *Puritan objections, bowing at the Holy *Name was enjoined in Canon 18 (1604), and the practice of making their reverence and obeisance on entering and leaving the church was recommended to the people in Canon 7 (1640). The statutes of *Winchester Cathedral require that the clergy on entering and leaving the church shall 'severally bow themselves towards the altar, devoutly worshipping the Divine Majesty'.

BOY BISHOP. In medieval times it was a widespread custom, in many English monasteries, schools, and country parishes, to elect on St. *Nicholas's Day (6 Dec.) a boy who should execute till *Holy Innocents' Day (28 Dec.) various functions in church ordinarily performed by a bishop. The practice was abolished by *Henry VIII, revived by *Mary, and finally abolished by *Elizabeth I. On the Continent it was never so common, though analogous celebrations sometimes took place, esp. in Germany, on the Feast of St. *Gregory the Great (12 Mar.). The intention was to express in dramatic form the reverence for childhood shown in the Gospels.

E. K. Chambers, The Medieval Stage (1903), i, pp. 336–71. G. Cyprian Alston, O.S.B., in C.E., ii (1907), p. 725, s.v.

BOYLE, ROBERT (1627–91). One of the leading scientists of the 17th cent., 'the father of chemistry and son of the Earl of Cork'. He took a prominent part in the foundation of the Royal Society in 1662. Besides his scientific works he wrote a long series of diffuse, but lucid, religious treatises, in which he sought to vindicate the harmony between the new scientific methods and the Christian faith. He left in his will the sum of £50 per annum for a series of eight lectures to be given in some church in London against unbelievers (the 'Boyle Lectures').

Boyle's collected works, with life, were publd. by T. Birch (5 vols., London, 1744). Considerable extracts from his writings in P. E. More–F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), nos. 56, 89, 103, 104, 124, 350, 351. Lives, besides the primary work of T. Birch, include those of R. Boulton in his ed. of Boyle's Theological Works . . . Epitomized (3 vols., 1715), i, pp. 1–374, Flora Masson (London, 1914), L. T. More (London–New York, 1944), M. S. Fisher (Philadelphia, 1945), and R. Pilkington (London, 1959). R. McM. Hunt, The Place of Religion in the Science of Robert Boyle (Pittsburgh, 1955). J. F. Fulton, A Bibliography of the Honourable Robert Boyle (orig. publd. in Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, iii (1933), pp. 1–172 and 339–65; ed. 2, Oxford, 1961).

BRABOURNE, THEOPHILUS (1590–c. 1661), English *Puritan author. In early life he appears to have officiated as a clergyman at *Norwich. In 1628 and 1631 he published two pamphlets maintaining that Saturday, not Sunday, ought to be kept as the Christian Sabbath, and for the second of these, the Defence . . . of the Sabbath Day, he was imprisoned for eighteen months at Newgate. The stir thus aroused was one of the reasons for *Charles I's reissue in 1633 of the 'Book of *Sports'. Under the Commonwealth Brabourne again took up the Sabbath question in a dispute with John Collings, a Presbyterian writer. At the Restoration he wrote three pamphlets in defence of the royal supremacy against the *Quakers.

B. Brook, The Lives of the Puritans, ii (1813), pp. 362–4. A. Gordon in D.N.B., vi (1886), pp. 139–41, s.v.

BRACHIUM SAECULARE. See Secular Arm.

BRADFORD, JOHN (c. 1510–55), Protestant martyr. He was a native of Manchester and for a time secretary to Sir John Harrington, paymaster of the English forces in France. Seeking a more settled career, c. 1547 he began the study of law, taking chambers in the Inner Temple. Soon he abandoned this for theology and moved to St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. in 1549, and shortly afterwards was elected Fellow of Pembroke Hall, where J. *Whitgift was among his pupils. He was ordained deacon in 1550 by N. *Ridley, Bp. of London, who, finding him a strong supporter of the Protestant cause and a good preacher, made him his chaplain. Soon after Mary's accession (1553) he was imprisoned on a charge of sedition in the Tower, where during 18 months he carried on an extensive correspondence and wrote The Hurt of Hearing Mass (first publd. 1580). In a trial before S. *Gardiner and others, he remained steadfast to his Protestantism and was burnt at *Smithfield on 1 July 1555.

A complete edition of his writings was published by the Parker Society (2 vols., 1848, 1853). A. H. Bullen in D.N.B. vi (1886), pp. 157–9.

BRADLAUGH, CHARLES (1833–91), freethinker. He was born at Hoxton, London, the eldest son of a solicitor's clerk, and brought up in the C of E. Through contact with the followers of Richard Carlile (1790–1843), a follower of T. *Paine, he became an *atheist, lost his job, and served in the army from 1850 to 1853. On leaving the army he was taken on as a lawyer's clerk. In his spare time he made a name for himself as a lecturer under the title of 'Iconoclast', becoming President of the London Secular Society (1858–90) and conducting constant lecture tours. In 1858 he supported the publishers of a defence of Felice Orsini (1819–58) for attempting to assassinate Napoleon III. From 1860 he conducted the National Reformer in defence of free thinking. Prosecution for its alleged sedition, followed by a legal contest as to whether Bradlaugh as an atheist could give evidence (1867–69), led to the passage of the Evidence Amendment Act in 1869. In 1866 he became a member of the Parliamentary Reform League. He also composed the first draft of the Fenian proclamation issued in 1867. In 1876, together with Mrs. A. Besant (1847–1933), who was his co-editor of the National Reformer from 1874 to 1885, he entered the lists in support of a Bristol publisher who had issued an American pamphlet, Fruits of Philosophy, and been lightly sentenced for its indecency. When Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant reissued the pamphlet, both were sentenced heavily, but the indictment was quashed on a technical point.

In 1868 Bradlaugh stood for Parliament at Northampton, but was defeated. After two further defeats he was elected M.P. for Northampton in 1880. On the refusal of his plea to affirm or to be allowed to take the oath, he was several times excluded from the House of Commons and re-elected. He was finally allowed to take his seat under the Parliamentary Oaths Act (see Affirmation). In his last years he was actively interested in promoting social and political reform in *India and attended the Indian National Congress of 1889. He dissociated himself from Mrs. Besant after she became a *theosophist.

His writings, mostly in pamphlet form, include The Bible: What it is! (1861), The Impeachment of the House of Brunswick (1872), Autobiography (1873), Perpetual Pensions (1880), John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough (1884), and The Rules, Customs and Procedure in the House of Commons (1889).

Modern ed. of Humanity's Gain from Unbelief and Selections from other Works (Thinker's Library, 1929). H. B. Bonner (daughter), Charles Bradlaugh. A Record of his Life and Work, with an Account of his Parliamentary Struggle, Politics and Teachings, by J. M. Robertson (2 vols., 1894). Other Lives by A. S. Headingley (London, 1880; rev. ed., 1883), J. M. Robertson (ib., 1920), and studies issued by the Centenary Committee (Champion of Liberty. Charles Bradlaugh, 1933). W. L. Arnstein, The Bradlaugh Case. A Study in late Victorian Opinion and Politics (Oxford, 1965).

BRADLEY, FRANCIS HERBERT (1846–1924), exponent of *Absolute Idealism. He was born at Clapham and educated at Marlborough and at University College, Oxford. From 1870 till his death he was a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. His first important publication was his brilliant Ethical Studies (1876). Next followed The Principles of Logic (1883) and, ten years later, Appearance and Reality (1893), the most original work in British metaphysics in the 19th cent. Bradley argued that everywhere in the fields of natural science, ethics, religion, &c., contradictions are patent, and that therefore these realms cannot be conceived of as reality. The only true reality is to be found in an all-inclusive experience, the Absolute, wherein all contradictions, including the gulf between subject and object, are finally transcended. As the notions of personality and selfhood are riddled with contradictions, Theism and personal immortality must be rejected. In an essay on 'The Presuppositions of Critical History' (1874) he examined the foundations of historical credibility and rejected the historicity of the Gospels on the ground that their facts were without parallel in our experience. Bradley always maintained that he was indifferent to the sources of his ideas; but he was, like B. *Bosanquet, deeply indebted to G. W. F. *Hegel, partly through the medium of T. H. *Green, who had done much to encourage constructive interest in German Idealism in Oxford. Among his later works are Essays on Truth and Reality (1914) and a revised edition of The Principles of Logic (1922).

His Essays were collected in 2 vols., Oxford, 1935. C. A. Campbell, Scepticism and Construction: Bradley's Sceptical Principles (1931); R. Kagey, The Growth of F. H. Bradley's Logic (1931); R. W. Church, Bradley's Dialectic (1942); W. F. Lofthouse, F. H. Bradley (1949); R. Wollheim, F. H. Bradley (Harmondsworth, 1959); S. K. Saxena, Studies in the Metaphysics of Bradley (Muirhead Library of Philosophy, 1967). T. S. *Eliot, Knowledge and Experience in the Philosophy of F. H. Bradley (1964; doctoral thesis written 1911–16). A. E. *Taylor in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 101–3.

BRADSHAW SOCIETY. See Henry Bradshaw Society.

BRADWARDINE, THOMAS (c. 1290–1349), Abp. of *Canterbury. Acc. to his own testimony he was a native of *Chichester. He was a Fellow, first of Balliol College, and then of Merton College, Oxford. About 1335 he became chaplain to Richard of Bury, Bp. of *Durham, and in 1337 chancellor of *St. Paul's Cathedral. About the same time he was made confessor to Edward III, whom he sometimes accompanied on his travels on the Continent during the wars with France. In 1346 he was one of the commissioners who tried to bring about peace between England, France, and Scotland. In 1349 he was consecrated Abp. of Canterbury at *Avignon, and, having returned to England, died in the same year of the Black Death.

Bradwardine was held in esteem by his contemporaries for his learning, esp. in mathematics and theology. His principal work, De Causa Dei contra Pelagium (completed by 1344), earned him the title of 'Doctor Profundus'. Under the influence esp. of St. *Augustine, St. *Anselm, and *Duns Scotus, he sought to build up a theological system on evident propositions, utilizing esp. the *Ontological Argument. Against the *Pelagian ideas prevalent among some contemporary theologians, he insisted on the necessity of grace and the 'irresistible' efficacy of the Divine Will, which is the cause of all action, whether necessary or contingent. By this theological Determinism he paved the way for the predestinarian thought of John *Wycliffe. He also made original and influential contributions to a number of theoretical problems in mathematics and physics, notably in his treatment of geometry, of continuity and infinity, of proportions, and of motion.

His De Causa Dei contra Pelagium, ed. H. *Savile (London, 1618), with biogr. introd. (no pagination). De Proportionibus ed. H. L. Crosby, Jr. (Madison, Wis., 1955). S. Hahn, Thomas Bradwardine und seine Lehre von der menschlichen Willensfreiheit (B.G.P.M., v, Hft. 2; 1905). Gordon Leff, Bradwardine and the Pelagians (Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 1–124. H. A. Oberman, Archbishop Thomas Bradwardine. A Fourteenth Century Augustinian (Utrecht diss., 1957). Überweg, ii, p. 622 f., with bibl., p. 788. B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 244–6, with further reff.

BRADY, NICHOLAS (1659–1726). See Tate (Nahum) and Brady (Nicholas).

BRAGA, Rite of. The form of the Latin rite still in use in the cathedral of Braga (Civitas Bracarensis) in the N. of Portugal. There is documentary evidence for its existence from the 14th cent. and it may have owed its compilation to St. Giraldus c. 1100. It differs only in its details from the Roman rite. In 1924 *Pius XI confirmed the use of it throughout the archdiocese.

P. R. Rocha, L'Office Divin au Moyen Age dans l'Église de Braga (1980). A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 155–285.

BRAMHALL, JOHN (1594–1663), Abp. of *Armagh. Born near Pontefract, W. Yorks, he was educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, and ordained c. 1616. In 1633 he went to Ireland as Strafford's chaplain and in 1634 became Bp. of Derry. Here he helped in strengthening episcopacy and maintaining the revenues of the Church of Ireland. In 1642 he retired to England and in 1644 to the Continent, returning for a brief spell to Ireland in 1648. On his permanent return at the *Restoration, he became Abp. of Armagh (1661) and exercised moderation in enforcing the Conformity Laws. He devoted his exile to replying to attacks upon the English Church from three quarters. In Serpent Salve (1643) he upheld episcopal and monarchical government against the democratic and presbyterian system of the Puritans, returning to the attack in Fair Warning against the Scottish Discipline (1649). His Vindication of True Liberty (1655) was directed against the philosophical materialism and determinism of T. *Hobbes, whom he had met in *Paris; to Hobbes's Animadversions in reply, Bramhall answered with Castigations of Hobbes' Animadversions (1658), with an appendix on 'The Catching of Leviathan, the Great Whale'. In a third sphere of controversy, with Rome, he published (1653) a reply to T. B. de la Milletière's defence of *Transubstantiation (1651), upholding the Anglican doctrine of the *Real Presence. His attacks on *Ultramontanism were widely welcomed by French Catholics. In 1654 he published his celebrated A Just Vindication of the Church of England from the Unjust Aspersion of Criminal Schism. In response to the RC reply to this by Dr. Richard Smith, titular Bp. of *Chalcedon, Bramhall issued his Replication (1656), a prayer that he might live to see the Reunion of Christendom.

Collected ed. of Works, with life by H. Vesey (Dublin, 1676); modern ed. by A. W. Haddan in the L.A.C.T. (5 vols., 1842–5), with life from Biographia Britannica (vol. i, pp. iii–xv). Much of Bramhall's Correspondence, with other material on his episcopate, is printed in the Report of the Manuscripts of the late Reginald Rawdon Hastings, ed. F. Bickley (Historical MSS. Commission, lxxviii), iv (1947), pp. 55–152. W. J. Sparrow Simpson, Archbishop Bramhall (1927). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 368–85.

BRANCH THEORY OF THE CHURCH. The theory that, though the Church may have fallen into schism within itself and its several provinces or groups of provinces be out of communion with each other, each may yet be a 'branch' of the one Church of Christ, provided that it continues to hold the faith of the original undivided Church, and to maintain the *Apostolic Succession of its bishops. Such, it is contended by many Anglican theologians, is the condition of the Church at the present time, there being now three main branches, the Roman, the Eastern, and the Anglican Communions. The theory in this precise form was apparently first put forward in the 19th cent. under the inspiration of the *Oxford Movement. It is the basis of W. *Palmer's Treatise on the Church of Christ (1838), but only became general and popular later.

BRASSES. A form of monument in which the figure of the dead man, engraved on a flat brass panel, was let into a wall or pavement. These monuments, besides being almost imperishable, had the advantage of taking up much less room than a sculptured figure. They were much used between the 13th and 16th cents. in England, France, Germany, and the Netherlands. Many of them were destroyed by iconoclasts or carried off by plunderers at the Reformation period, but very many still remain, and give much valuable information for the history of their times, esp. about dress, vestments, &c.

H. Haines, A Manual of Monumental Brasses comprising an Introduction to the Study of these Memorials and a List of those . . . in the British Isles (2 vols., 1861); M. Stephenson, A List of Monumental Brasses in the British Isles (1926; Appendix, 1938), incl. bibl. W. F. Creeny, A Book of Facsimiles of Monumental Brasses on the Continent of Europe with Brief Descriptive Notes (1884). Oxford Portfolio of Monumental Brasses, published by the Oxford University Brass Rubbing Society, Parts i–v (1898–1901); Series II, published by the Oxford University Archaeological Society, 1950 ff. H. W. Macklin, The Brasses of England ('The Antiquary's Books', 1907); A. C. Bouquet, Church Brasses, British and Continental. With some Notes on Incised Stone Slabs and Indents (1956), with bibl.; J. Franklyn, Brasses (1964; with further plates, 1969). H. Druit, A Manual of Costume as illustrated by Monumental Brasses (1906). More popular works include H. W. Macklin, Monumental Brasses (1890; frequently republd.); W. E. Gawthorp, The Brasses of our Homeland Churches ('The Homeland Pocket Books, No. 14', 1923).

BRAWLING. The offence of creating a disturbance in a church or churchyard. Technically the word applies to any kind of speaking in a church other than that prescribed by the BCP. Brawling has been a punishable offence in England under ecclesiastical jurisdiction since 1551, and under civil procedure since 1860. The services of non-Anglican Churches are similarly protected by the Liberty of Worship Act (1855).

BRAY, THOMAS (1656–1730), founder of the *S.P.C.K. and of the *S.P.G. (qq.v.). A native of Marton in Salop, he was educated at Oswestry School and All Souls College, Oxford. In 1690 he became rector of Sheldon, West Midlands. When an appeal from Maryland reached Henry *Compton, Bp. of London, for assistance in the colony's ecclesiastical organization, the Bishop selected Bray and made him his commissary; but legal complications long delayed his departure. Meanwhile Bray sought out missionaries to accompany him and (in view of the poverty of the clergy) worked out a scheme for the provision of free libraries in the colony. This last project met with such support that he determined to promote it also at home, where before his death he had been instrumental in establishing some 80 parochial libraries. Other of his educational and literary projects took shape in the foundation of the 'Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge' (1698). In 1699 he finally set sail for Maryland. Though well received by the governor, Bray soon found that he could better promote his purposes from Great Britain and before long returned home. Here the work of the S.P.C.K. had developed to such dimensions that Bray founded the 'Society for the Propagation of the Gospel' as a separate society for foreign missions (1701). His endeavours for the appointment of a Bishop for New England, however, were unsuccessful. In 1706 he became vicar of St. Botolph Without, Aldgate. To put the libraries on a permanent basis he created the 'Associates of Dr. Bray' (1723), which is still active. His most widely circulated work was A Course of Lectures upon the Church Catechism (4 vols., 1696). In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 15 Feb.

H. P. Thompson, Thomas Bray (London, S.P.C.K., 1954), with bibl. W. K. Lowther Clarke, Eighteenth Century Piety (1944), ch. viii, pp. 96–100. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., vi (1886), pp. 239–41.

BRAY, The Vicar of. The hero of the well-known ballad whose pretended zeal for each new form of established religion from *Charles II to George I assured his tenure of his benefice. The song, which appears to date from 1720, is apparently based on an anecdote of a certain Vicar of Bray, Berks, to be read in T. *Fuller's 'Worthies' (1662. 'This vicar, being taxed by one for being a turncoat and an inconsistent changeling, "Not so", said he, "for I always kept my principle, which is this,—to live and die the Vicar of Bray"'). Attempts to identify Fuller's cleric have not been successful. Simon Aleyn (Vicar, 1540–88) and Simon Simmonds (his predecessor, afterwards Canon of Windsor) alone seem to fit Fuller's dating; but there is no contemporary evidence that either was the sort of cleric portrayed in the song. The suggestion that he belongs to Bray, near Dublin, is a modern conjecture wholly without support. The ballad is said to have been composed by an army officer in the time of George I.

C. Kerry, The History and Antiquities of the Hundred of Bray, in the County of Berks (privately printed, London, 1861), with text of ballad, ib., p. 185. An anecdote reported on p. 145 suggests that an incidental remark made by *James I to the then Vicar of Bray whom he happened to fall in with at the Bear Inn, Maidenhead ('You shall be Vicar of Bray still, I promise you'), may have been the source of the story.

BRAZEN SERPENT, The. The image set up by Moses in the wilderness, on looking at which those who had been bitten by serpents were healed (Num. 21. 8, 9). Acc. to 2 Kgs. 18. 4 it was destroyed by Hezekiah because the Israelites had been in the practice of burning incense to it. It is mentioned once in the NT as a type of the crucified Christ (Jn. 3. 14).

BRAZIL, Christianity in. The conversion of Brazil was effected by the major orders of friars (*Franciscans, *Dominicans, *Augustinians), but principally by the *Jesuits, who founded the city of São Paulo in 1554. They mastered the native languages and were pioneers in education; among their members who worked in Brazil was António *Vieira (1608–97, q.v.). Brazil gained her independence from Portugal in 1822, and the 19th cent. saw a movement for independence from *ultramontanism among clergy and politicians. The conflict between Church and State came to a head in 1874 with the conviction and sentence of the two anti-masonic bishops of Olinda-Recife and Belém do Pará. With the establishment of the Republic in 1889, the Church was disestablished and her endowments discontinued. Freedom of worship was guaranteed to all bodies. In 1905 South America received her first *Cardinal with the elevation of the Abp. of Rio. In the forty years following the establishment of the Republic, NE Brazil saw two popular religious movements, one led by the mystic, Antonio Conselheiro (1828–1897), who preached in his holy city of Canudos (Bahia), and the other at Joaseiro (Ceará), led by the suspended RC priest Padre Cicero. In recent years Protestantism (esp. *Baptists and *Seventh Day Adventists), *Spiritualism, and Candomblés (Afro-Brazilian voodoo rites) have increased their adherents. A movement for social reform in the spirit of the Second *Vatican Council is inspired by Dom Helder Camara (b. 1909), Abp. of Olinda and Recife.

S. Leite, S.J., Páginas de história no Brasil (1937), esp. ch. 1, 'Influência religiosa na formação do Brasil' ,pp. 11–34, and passim. Id., História da Companhia de Jesus no Brasil (10 vols., Lisbon and Rio de Janeiro, 1938–50). E. da Cunha, Os Sertões (Rio de Janeiro, 1902; Eng. tr. as Rebellion in the Backlands, Chicago, 1944). A. Montenegro, António Conselheiro (Fortaleza, 1954). M. I. P. de Queiroz, O Messianismo—no Brasil e no mundo (São Paulo, 1965). J. Lloyd Mecham, Church and State in Latin America. A History of Politico-Ecclesiastical Relations (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1934), pp. 305–30 (ed. 2, ib., 1966, pp. 261–83). R. Bastide, 'Religion and the Church in Brazil' in T. L. Smith–A. Marchant (edd.), Brazil. Portrait of Half a Continent (New York, 1951), ch. xv, pp. 334–55, with bibl. Latourette, iii (1940), pp. 160–7, 236; v (1943), pp. 85 f., 96 f., 106 f., 120–3; and vii (1945), pp. 169 f., 173, 181 f.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 343–9, v (1963), pp. 226–37, with bibl. J. Serrano in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 565–89, s.v. 'Brésil'; M. C. Kiemen–B. Kloppenburg in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 762–772, s.v.

BREAD, Leavened and Unleavened. In the *Eucharistic rite, the Eastern Churches (except the *Armenian) customarily use leavened bread, whereas Catholics in the W. use unleavened bread. The difference in practice developed gradually; but by the time of the Schism of 1054, the divergence between E. and W. was a leading cause of dissension. In the C of E the BCP of 1549 ordered the continuance of unleavened bread, while that of 1552 permitted ('it shall suffice'), without enjoining, leavened. The '*Injunctions' of Queen *Elizabeth (1559) attempted to enforce again the use of unleavened bread, but the Book of 1661 left the rubric of 1552 practically unaltered. The *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, however, has twice ruled that common bread is directed by the rubric. Recent revisions in various parts of the Anglican Communion expressly allow the use of either. Leavened bread is generally used by Nonconformists.

Among the earliest undisputed witnesses for unleavened bread are *Alcuin (ep. 90, ad fratres Lugdunenses, A.D. 798; PL, c, 289) and his pupil, *Rabanus Maurus (Instit. Cler. i. 31). J. *Sirmond, S.J., 'Disquisitio de Azymo', first publd. in his Historia Poenitentiae Publicae (Paris, 1651). R. M. Woolley, The Bread of the Eucharist (Alcuin Club Tracts, xi; 1897). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 3254–60, s.v. 'Azymes', with good bibl.

BREAKSPEAR, NICOLAS. See Hadrian IV.

BREASTPLATE OF ST. PATRICK. An ancient Irish hymn, generally familiar through Mrs. C. F. Alexander's translation (1889), beginning 'I bind unto myself today The strong Name of the Trinity'. It was probably the 'Canticum Scotticum', mentioned in a note in the 'Book of *Armagh' as current before the 9th cent. Its ascription to St. *Patrick (q.v.), though possible, is unlikely. The author invokes the Trinity, Angels, Prophets, the powers of heaven and earth, and finally Christ Himself to protect him against the dominion of evil. Attention was first drawn to the hymn by G. Petrie in 1839. It was issued in a metrical English rendering, mainly the work of Whitley Stokes (1830–1909), in J. H. Todd, St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1864).

The text survives in three ancient MSS.: (1) the 11th cent. Irish Liber Hymnorum at *Trinity College, Dublin, (2) a 14th or 15th cent. copy of the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick in the *Bodleian Library, Oxford (Rawl. B. 592), and (3) a MS. in the British Museum (Egerton 93). It was first publd., with an Eng. tr., by Dr. G. Petrie in 'On the History and Antiquities of Tara Hill' in Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, xviii (1839), pp. 56–68; crit. edd. with metrical Eng. trr. in J. H. Bernard–R. Atkinson (edd.), The Irish Liber Hymnorum (H.B.S., xiii–xiv; 1898), i, pp. 133–6, and ii, pp. 49–51, with notes, pp. 208–12, and W. Stokes–J. Strachan (edd.), Thesaurus Palaeohibernicus, ii (1903), pp. 354–8, repr. in The Works of St. Patrick, tr. by L. Bieler (A.C.W., xvii; 1953), pp. 67–72, incl. introd.; Eng. tr. by W. Stokes repr. in J. H. Todd, St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1864), pp. 426–9; Eng. tr., based on that of R. Atkinson, with notes, in N. J. D. White, St. Patrick. His Writings and Life (1920), pp. 61–7. D. A. Binchy, 'Varia III. No. 4. The date of the so-called "Hymn of Patrick"' in Ériu, xx (1966), pp. 234–6, with reff. See also works cited under Patrick, St.

BREDA, Declaration of. The declaration made by *Charles II at Breda (Holland) on 4/14 Apr. 1660, immediately before the Restoration. He expressed inter alia his readiness to grant his subjects a 'liberty to tender consciences' in matters of religion not affecting the peace of the kingdom.

Text in Gee–Hardy, No. cxiv, pp. 585–8. See also general works on Charles II (q.v.).

BREECHES BIBLE, The. A popular name for the *Geneva Bible of 1560 from its rendering of Gen. 3. 7, where AV has 'aprons'.

BREMOND, HENRI (1865–1933), French spiritual writer. He entered the *Jesuit Order in 1882, and after spending his novitiate in England was ordained priest in 1892. In 1899 he was appointed editor of the Jesuit periodical Études. In 1904 he left the order to devote himself entirely to literary activities. He soon experienced difficulties with the ecclesiastical authorities, notably in 1907 in connexion with his essay on J. H. *Newman (publd. in 1906), and his life of *Jane Frances de Chantal (publd. in 1912) was put on the *Index in 1913. His principal work, his voluminous Histoire littéraire du sentiment religieux en France (11 vols., 1915–32 + index, 1936), is a history of French spirituality, chiefly in the 17th cent., in the form of a series of essays on outstanding religious personalities. Its original and penetrating descriptions of the life of souls are illustrated by numerous quotations, often from forgotten and almost inaccessible contemporary sources. A brilliant stylist, Bremond draws captivating pictures esp. of less well-known personalities such as Mme B. A. *Acarie, J. *Surin, or the Ursuline nun *Mary of the Incarnation. His judgement on representatives of a more active and ascetical type was in general less sympathetic. Among his other works is an exquisite little study, Prière et poésie (1926).

H. Hogarth, Henri Bremond. The Life and Work of a Devout Humanist (S.P.C.K., 1950). M. Martin Du Gard, De Sainte-Beuve à Fénelon: Henri Bremond (1927); A. Autin, Henri Bremond (Publicistes Chrétiens, 1947). F. Hermans, L'Humanisme Religieux de l'Abbé Henri Bremond 1865–1933 (1965). Entretiens sur Henri Bremond sous la direction de M. Nédoncelle–J. Dagens [27–31 Aug. 1965] (Décades du Centre Culturel International de Cerisy-la-Salle, nouvelle série, iv [1967]). A. Blanchet, Histoire d'une mise à l'index. La "Sainte Chantal" de l'Abbé Bremond d'après des documents inédits [1967]. A. *Loisy, George Tyrrell et Henri Bremond (1936). A. Blanchet (ed.), Henri Bremond et Maurice Blondel. Correspondance (3 vols., 1970–71). A. Guinan, 'Portrait of a devout humanist, M. l'Abbé Henri Brémond' in H.T.R., xlvii (1954), pp. 15–53.

BRENDAN, St. (484–577 or 583), also 'St. Brenainn', Abbot of Clonfert. The legend of the 'Navigation of St. Brendan' (c. 1050), widely popular in the Middle Ages, describes his visit to the 'northern and western islands', perhaps the Orkneys and Hebrides. The tradition that he founded the monastery of Cluain Fearta (Clonfert, in Co. Galway) may quite well be true. The churches of Brendon in Devonshire and Brancepeth in Co. Durham are dedicated to him. Feast day, 16 May. [He is to be distinguished from his contemporary St. Brendan of Birr (c. 490–573), whose feast is kept on 29 Nov.]

Lat. text of the 'Navigation of St. Brendan' pr. from ancient Paris MSS. by A. Jubinal, La Légende latine de S. Brandaines (1836), pp. 1–56; also ed. C. Schröder (Erlangen, 1871), and, with other material, by [Card.] P. F. Moran, Acta Sancti Brendani (Dublin, 1872); modern ed., with introd. and bibl., by C. Semler (Notre Dame, Ind., 1959). Old Ital. versions ed. by P. Villari, Antiche leggende e tradizioni che illustrano la Divina commedia (1865), pp. 82–120, repr. in G. Battelli, Le più belle leggende cristiane (1924), pp. 471–92. Comparative ed. of texts by C. Wahlund, Die altfranzösische Prosaübersetzung von Brendans Meerfahrt (Skrifter utgifna af K. Humanistiska Vetenskaps-Samfundet i Upsala, iv, 3; 1900). Tours MS. (Bibl. Municip., 1008) of Ital. version ed. E. G. R. Waters, An Old Italian Version of the Navigatio Sancti Brendani (Publications of Philological Society, x; 1931), with reff. D. O'Donoghue, Brendaniana. St. Brendan the Voyager in Story and Legend (Dublin, 1893); G. A. Little, Brendan the Navigator. An Interpretation (1945); G. Ashe, Land to the West. St. Brendan's Voyage to America (1962), with bibl.

BRENT, CHARLES HENRY (1862–1929), Anglican '*Faith and Order' leader. Born at Newcastle, Ontario, Canada, he studied at Trinity College, Toronto, and was ordained priest in 1887. From 1888 to 1891 he was engaged in pastoral work in Boston, Mass. In 1901 he became the Protestant Episcopal Bp. of the Philippine Islands, and in 1918 of Western New York. From 1917 to 1919 he was the Chief of Chaplains of the American Expeditionary Force in Europe. From his first months in the Philippines Brent energetically combated the opium traffic. In 1909 he was President of the Opium Conference at Shanghai and in 1923 represented the U.S.A. on the League of Nations Narcotics Committee. In his later years his chief work was for the *Ecumenical (Faith and Order) Movement, in which he was one of the most ardent spirits. On returning from the *Edinburgh Conference of 1910 to the U.S.A. he induced the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church to convene a 'World Conference on Faith and Order', and when the Conference ultimately met at *Lausanne in 1927, Brent was its President. Feast day in the American BCP (1979), 27 Mar.

F. W. Kates, Charles Henry Brent (1948).

BRENTANO, FRANZ (1838–1917), Austrian philosopher. Ordained to the RC priesthood in 1864, he was appointed Privatdozent at Würzburg in 1866. In 1873, chiefly owing to intellectual difficulties about the Trinity, he separated himself from the Church. Through lectures at Vienna from 1880 to 1915 he exercised great influence on some of the leading philosophers of the next generation, among them E. Husserl and A. von Meinong. His high regard for *Scholastic and *Aristotelian doctrines, which he had inherited from his RC training, led him to be critical of all forms of Idealism, and some of the anti-idealistic currents in 20th cent. philosophy in German-speaking countries derived directly from his teaching. His main works were Psychologie vom empirischen Standpunkt (vol. i [all issued], 1874) and Vom Ursprung sittlicher Erkenntnis (1889; Eng. trans., 1902).

A number of Brentano's works have been posthumously publd. under the editorship of O. Kraus, A. Kastil, and F. Mayer-Hillebrand, at Leipzig, and after the Second World War, at Berne. Some are still unpubld. A. Kastil, Die Philosophie Franz Brentano. Eine Einführung in seine Lehre (Bern, 1951); I. Srzednicki, Franz Brentano's Analysis of Truth (The Hague, 1965); A. C. Rancurello, A Study of Franz Brentano. His Psychological Standpoint and his Significance in the History of Psychology (New York and London, 1968). C. P. Svoboda in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 785 f., s.v.

BRENZ, JOHANN (1499–1570), reformer of Württemberg. He was born at Weilderstadt, studied at Heidelberg under *Oecolampadius, and in 1518 came under the influence of M. *Luther. In 1522 he was appointed Preacher at the church of St. Michael in Schwäbisch Hall and from now on actively supported the Reformation, preaching against the Mass and the cult of the saints. He was so successful that by the Hall Kirchenordnung of 1526 the Reformation in Württemberg was completed. In 1525 he refused, like Luther, to support the insurgents in the Peasants' War. Against Oecolampadius he insisted in his Syngramma Suevicum (21 Oct. 1525) on the *Real Presence in the Eucharist and thus ensured the acceptance of the Lutheran teaching over the greater part of Württemberg. At the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529) he made the acquaintance of Duke Ulrich of Württemberg, who from now on gave him active support. Brenz took a leading part in the reconstitution of the university of Tübingen (1536–7). After the *Augsburg Interim (1548) Brenz was forced to leave Württemberg for a time. He was invited by T. *Cranmer to England but he refused. In 1553 he became Provost of the Stiftskirche at Stuttgart. He became involved in controversies with some of the leading *Calvinists (T. *Beza, H. *Bullinger), though in matters of Church Order he inclined to the Calvinist position. He was the author of two Catechisms (1527, 1535), many published sermons, and several controversial writings.

Works ed. M. Brecht–G. Schäfer (Tübingen, 1970 ff.). Incomplete early ed., 8 vols fol., ib., 1576–90. T. Pressel, Anecdota Brentiana. Ungedruckte Briefe und Bedenken von Johannes Brenz (Tübingen, 1868). Life by J. Hartmann and C. Jaeger (2 vols., Hamburg, 1840–2). W. E. Köhler, Bibliographia Brentiana (Berlin, 1904); id., Brentiana und andere Reformatoria (Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, Jahrgg. 9–11, 13, 14, 16, 19, 21, 22, 24, 26; 1912–29). T. Wotschke, Brenz als Katechet (1900). M. Brecht, Die frühe Theologie des Johannes Brenz (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xxxvi; Tübingen, 1966). J. M. Estes, 'Church Order and the Christian Magistrate according to Johannes Brenz' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, lix (1968), pp. 5–24. J. Hartmann and G. Bossert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 376–88, and H. Fausel in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), col. 1400 f., both with bibl.

BREST-LITOVSK, Union of. The union concluded in 1596 between the *Ruthenian and the RC Churches, with the approbation of Pope *Clement VIII and Sigismund III of Poland. By it, the Metropolitan of Kiev, the Ruthenian bishops, and some millions of Christians, all of the Byzantine rite, joined the RC Church, with permission to retain their liturgy. During succeeding years the union was opposed both by Russia, which succeeded in bringing large numbers of Ruthenians back to the Orthodox Church, and also by the Latin Poles, who despised and feared Byzantine Ruthenians.

The official documents are printed by A. Theiner, Vetera Monumenta Poloniae et Lithuaniae Gentiumque Finitimarum Historiam Illustrantia, iii (Rome, 1863), No. clxxxv, pp. 232–249; further papal letters, pp. 269–73. E. Likowski, Historya Unii Kościoła Ruskiego z Kościolem Rzymskim (in Polish, Poznań, 1875); id., Union de l'Église grecque-ruthène en Pologne avec l'Église romaine, conclue à Brest, en Lithuanie, en 1596 (1903); J. Pelesz, Geschichte der Union der ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom von den aeltesten Zeiten bis auf die Gegenwart (2 vols., 1881). J. Ostrowski in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 615–618.

BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE, The (Lat. 'Fratres Communis Vitae'). An association founded in the 14th cent. to foster a higher level of Christian life and devotion. The original leader was G. de *Groote (q.v.), a canon of Utrecht, who resigned his prebend to travel through the Netherlands and preach against clerical abuses and call men to repentance. He demanded no vows from his disciples but left them free, whether clerics or laymen, to continue in their ordinary vocations. His followers developed a lofty spirituality. They laid great stress on teaching, founding schools all over the Netherlands, and later in Germany, where a general education was offered, unsurpassed in quality and without fees. To supply books for their schools, many of their members engaged in copying MSS., and later in printing. On the death of de Groote (1384), the leadership of the Brethren was assumed by *Florentius Radwijns. Before long a group of these disciples adopted a rule and organized themselves as *Augustinian Canons. Among the 'Brethren' were I. *Busch, *Thomas à Kempis, Pope *Hadrian VI, and Gabriel *Biel. *Nicholas of Cusa and Rudolph Agricola (1443–1485) also studied in their schools, and thus the movement exercised considerable influence on the New Learning. By the end of the 17th cent. the rise of modern universities and diocesan seminaries had led to their extinction. See also Devotio Moderna and Windesheim.

W. J. Alberts (ed.), Consuetudines Fratrum Vitae Communis (Groningen, 1959). S. Kettlewell, Thomas à Kempis and the Brethren of the Common Life (2 vols., 1882). K. Grube, Gerhard Groot und seine Stiftungen (1883). E. Barnikol, Studien zur Geschichte der Brüder vom gemeinsamen Leben (1917). A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance. A History of the 'Devotio Moderna' (New York, 1925), with bibl. pp. 477–494; ed. 2, with additional material (Hamden, Conn., 1965); id., Brethren of the Common Life (Grand Rapids, Michigan, 1950). R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion. Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, iii; Leiden, 1968). E. F. Jacob, Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (Manchester, 1943), pp. 121–38 ('The Brethren of the Common Life'). Pourrat, ii, pp. 381–9. S. H. Gem in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 839–42, with bibl. L. Schulze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 472–507, s.v. 'Brüder des gemeinsamen Lebens', with full bibl.

BRETHREN OF THE FREE SPIRIT. A name often applied by medieval writers to the members of various mystical sects which professed to be independent of ecclesiastical authority and live in the freedom of the Spirit. The teaching of these sects was usually more or less *pantheistic. They appear to date from the 13th cent., but the widespread view that they derived from *Amalric of Bena is very disputable. Probably they never had more than a rudimentary organization, if, indeed, they possessed any at all.

G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, i (Manchester–New York, 1967), pp. 308–407, with reff. N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (1957), pp. 149–94. R. E. Lerner, The Heresy of the Free Spirit in the Later Middle Ages (1972). R. Guarnieri in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1241–68, s.v. 'Frères du Libre Esprit', with extensive bibl.

BRETHREN OF THE LORD, The. References to 'the Lord's brethren', who include *James, Joseph, Simon, and *Jude, occur at Mk. 6. 3, &c., Jn. 7. 3, Acts 1. 14, 1 Cor. 9. 5. They may have been (a) sons of the Virgin *Mary and *Joseph, born after Christ. This is the most natural inference from the NT, and was accepted by *Tertullian and probably by *Hegesippus. But when put forward by *Helvidius, c. 382, it was rejected by St. *Jerome, who, apparently voicing the general opinion of the Church, maintained the perpetual virginity of the Virgin Mary. Hence St. Jerome held that (b) the Lord's 'brethren' were the sons of *Mary, 'the mother of James and Joses' (Mk. 15. 40), whom he identified with the wife of Clopas and sister of the Virgin Mary (Jn. 19. 25, RV). They may have been, however, (c) sons of Joseph by a former marriage (the view of St. Epiphanius and the E. Church), or (d), acc. to a modern suggestion, sons of Mary, 'mother of James and Joses' (not here identified with the Virgin Mary's sister), and Clopas, who acc. to Hegesippus was the brother of Joseph. See Marys in the NT (3) and (4), and Cleopas.

J. B. *Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1865), pp. 241–74, with reff. to earlier literature. J. B. Mayor, The Epistle of St. James (1892), pp. v–xxv. Id., in H.D.B., i (1898), pp. 320–6, s.v., with bibl.; T. *Zahn, 'Brüder und Vettern Jesu' in Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altkirchlichen Literatur, vi (1900), 2, pp. 225–364.

BRETSCHNEIDER, KARL GOTTLIEB (1776–1848), German theologian. In 1816 he became

*General-Superintendent at Gotha. Of his many writings, the only one of permanent interest is his Probabilia (1820), in which he anticipated later NT criticism by questioning the historicity of the Fourth Gospel on the grounds of its divergence from the other three. In 1834 he founded the Corpus Reformatorum, a series of reprints of the works of the 16th cent. Reformers, for which he himself edited the works of P. *Melanchthon.

Autobiography posthumously ed. Horst Bretschneider (Gotha, 1851); id. (ed.), Anhang zu Karl Gottlieb Bretschneider's Selbstbiographie (1852). K. R. Hagenbach in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 389–91, s.v.

BRETT, THOMAS (1667–1744), *Nonjuror. He was educated at Queens' and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1690. After holding several livings he was appointed rector of Ruckinge in 1705. Having so far had no scruples in taking the oath, he resolved, after H. *Sacheverell's trial, never to do so again. On the accession of George I (1714) he consequently resigned his living (1715) and was received as a Nonjuror by G. *Hickes, after whose death he was consecrated bishop in 1716. From 1716 to 1725 he took part in the abortive negotiations for reunion of his party with the Greek Church. He was involved in several controversies, esp. in that on the *Usages which broke out in 1715 among the Nonjurors themselves. As an eminent liturgical scholar with a particular interest in the E. liturgies, he insisted on the explicit oblation of the Eucharistic elements to the Father and on the *Epiclesis of the Holy Ghost, but reckoned the other two controversial points, viz. prayer for the dead and the mixed chalice, as of minor importance. His principal work is his Dissertation on the Ancient Liturgies (1720), which is still valuable, though it regards the so-called *Clementine Liturgy (i.e. *Apostolic Constitutions VIII) as authentic. Among his other works are The Divine Right of Episcopacy (1718), Discourses concerning the Ever Blessed Trinity (1720), and answers to J. *Bingham's History of Lay Baptism (1712) and to B. *Hoadly's Plain Account of the Sacrament (1735).

L. Stephen in D.N.B., vi (1886), p. 285 f., s.v.

BREVIARY. The liturgical book containing the Psalms, hymns, lessons, prayers, &c., to be recited in the Divine Office of the RC Church. In early times the various parts of the *hours were distributed in different books, such as the *Psaltery, *Hymnary, *Lectionary &c., but from the 11th cent. they began to be combined in one book. Modern breviaries are usually divided into four volumes, each covering part of the year.

The primitive office prob. consisted almost exclusively of Psalms and Scriptural lessons. St. *Ambrose composed hymns for use at Milan, and under St. *Benedict these began to form part of the normal office, together with *responsories, *canticles, *collects and other elaborations. The spread of monasticism led liturgical prayer to develop rapidly, and by the 8th cent. the cycle of daily hours from *Lauds to *Compline for the Day Office, and *Mattins for the Night Office, had become fixed. At least from the time of St. Benedict the Office allowed for the recitation of the complete Psalter each week and the greater part of Holy Scripture during the year. But by the later Middle Ages the lives of saints tended to replace the Scripture readings, readings both from Scripture and other sources were shortened (partly in the interests of having portable books), and the increasing number of feast days interfered with the daily succession of the Psalms. In the early 16th cent. attempts at reform were made, notably by Cardinal F. de *Quiñones, but his Breviary (Breviarium S. Cruce, 1535) was never formally adopted in the RC Church. The Council of *Trent ordered the abolition of the more apocryphal legends and the Breviarium Romanum issued by *Pius V in 1568 reduced the interruption of the ferial office by saints' days. Smaller reforms were made by several later Popes, of which the most important was the Breviary issued by *Pius X in 1911; this shortened the Office, redistributed the Psalms, and altered the rubrics so that only the most important feasts were allowed to interfere with the regular recitation of the Psalter. In 1971, as a result of the recommendations of the Second *Vatican Council, a completely new Breviary was issued by *Paul VI. This provides for an *Office of Readings, which may be said at any time during the day, *Lauds, a mid-day office (see Terce), *Vespers, and Compline, which is to be said immediately before retiring. The Psalter (apart from three Psalms omitted altogether) is distributed over a month, and most parts of the Bible (except the Gospels, which are included in the Mass lectionary) are read each year. There are also readings from the Fathers and later writers. The general shape of the Offices follows the pattern of the older breviaries, though the hymn now always comes at the beginning of the Office; in Lauds and Vespers a short responsory has been introduced after the reading and these two Offices now always include 'Preces' or Prayers, in the case of Vespers of an intercessory character.

All RC priests and clerics in *major orders, as well as all professed religious whose rule requires it, are obliged to the daily recitation of the Breviary. Clerics with pastoral responsibility are urged to arrange that at least some of the Offices are recited in church and the laity encouraged to attend. In the past Mattins and Lauds were frequently said on the previous day by anticipation, but it is now required that Lauds and Vespers be said at the appropriate time of day. Various religious Orders have their own breviaries which differ somewhat from the Roman, esp. in the matter of saints' days, and some religious are also bound to recite a Night Office. See also Monastic Breviary.

J. Grancolas, Commentaire historique sur le bréviaire romain (2 vols., 1727). F. *Probst, Brevier und Breviergebet (1854); P. *Batiffol, Histoire du bréviaire romain (1893; Eng. tr., 1898); S. *Bäumer, O.S.B., Geschichte des Breviers (1895; Fr. tr. with addition by R. Biron, O.S.B., 2 vols., 1905); C. Callewaert, De Breviarii Romani Liturgia (ed. 2; Liturgicae Institutiones, ii; Bruges, 1939); P. Parsch, Brevier-Erklärung im Geiste der liturgischen Erneuerung (1940; Eng. tr., 1952); J. Pascher, Das Stundengebet der römischen Kirche [1954]; J. A. Jungmann, S.J. (ed.), Brevier Studien [1958]; P. Salmon, O.S.B., L'Office divin. Histoire de la formation du bréviaire (1959); id., L'Office divin au moyen âge. Histoire de la formation du bréviaire du IXe au XVIe siècle (1967). Mgr. Cassien-B. Botte, O.S.B., and others, La Prière des heures (Lex Orandi, xxxv; 1963). P. F. Bradshaw, Daily Prayer in the Early Church (*Alcuin Club Collections, lxiii; 1981). M. Righetti, U.J.D., Manuale di storia liturgica, ii (ed. 2, 1955), pp. 471–715. P. Salmon in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (ed. 3, 1965), pp. 809–902, with bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1, 1910), cols. 1262–1316, s.v.

BRIDE, St. (d. c. 523), also 'Brigid', Abbess of Kildare, 'the Mary of the Gael'. Though she is always regarded with great veneration in *Ireland, the traditions about her are conflicting and little can be said with certainty. Acc. to the common view, she was born at Faughart, near Dundalk, of parents baptized by St. *Patrick, and showed marks of sanctity from her early years. Under the direction of the Bishop St. Mel (acc. to others St. Machalleus) she took the veil, acc. to one account received episcopal orders, and founded the first nunnery in Ireland at 'Cill-Dara' (the Church of the Oak), now Kildare. By her prayers and miracles she is reputed to have exercised a potent influence on the growth of the early Irish Church. She is accounted with St. Patrick the Second Patron Saint of Ireland, and her name in the form Brigid or Bridget has become a very common Irish girl's name. Feast day, 1 Feb.

Irish life from the Book of *Lismore, ed. W. Stokes (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Mediaeval and Modern Series, v; Oxford, 1890), pp. 34–53, with Eng. tr., 182–200; Lat. lives in J. Colganus, O.F.M. (ed.), Trias Thaumaturga (Louvain, 1647), pp. 515–640, and in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 99–185. The hymn composed by St. Broccan Cloen (d. 650) in her honour, which is the only early authority, is ed. by J. H. *Bernard–R. Atkinson, The Irish Liber Hymnorum, i (H.B.S., xiii; 1898), pp. 112–28; introd. in ii (H.B.S., xiv; 1898), pp. 37 f., with Eng. tr., pp. 40–6. M. Esposito, 'On the Earliest Latin Life of St. Brigid of Kildare' in Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, xxx, Section C (1912), pp. 307–26. J. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (Records of Civilization, New York, 1929), pp. 356–63. T. Olden in D.N.B., vi (1886), pp. 340–2, s.v. 'Brigit, St.'

BRIDGES, ROBERT SEYMOUR (1844–1930), poet laureate. Educated at Eton and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he practised for some years as a physician, holding various hospital appointments. Meanwhile he had been writing poetry, and in 1882 abandoned medicine to devote himself to literary interests and music. For most of the rest of his life he lived at Yattendon, Berks (1882–1904), and on Boar's Hill, Oxford (1907–30). In 1913 he became Poet Laureate. Already as a boy at Eton, he had been attracted to Catholic ideals through the influence of V. S. S. Coles (later Principal of Pusey House, Oxford) and D. M. Dolben. In mature life he tended to reject all rigid dogmatic belief, but retained strong Christian sympathies. His most considerable work, The Testament of Beauty (1929), was a philosophical poem in 'loose Alexandrine' metre, which sought, in language at once elevated and allusive, to reconcile scientific knowledge with Christian faith. He was also interested in Church music, and did much to raise the standard of hymnody in the English parish churches; in the Yattendon Hymnal (1895–9), which embodied his ideals, he revived many fine 16th and 17th cent. melodies. His hymn-book was extensively drawn on in the English Hymnal* (1906) and the Oxford Hymn Book (1908). He was also one of the founders of the 'Society for Pure English'. His other publications include The Spirit of Man (1915), an anthology; and the first collected edition (1918) of the Poems of his friend G. M. *Hopkins.

Poetical Works publ. in 6 vols., London, 1896–1905; also, omitting the eight dramas, but with other new material, ib., 1912; enlarged ed., 1936; and, incl. Testament of Beauty, 1953. E. Thompson, Robert Bridges, 1844–1930 (1944); A. Guérard, Jr., Robert Bridges. A Study of Traditionalism in Poetry (Cambridge, Mass., 1942); J.-G. Ritz, Robert Bridges and Gerard Hopkins 1863–1889. A Literary Friendship (1960). N. C. Smith, Notes on The Testament of Beauty (1931); G. S. Gordon, Robert Bridges (The Rede Lecture for 1931; 1946). N. C. Smith in D.N.B., 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 115–19. G. L. McKay, A Bibliography of Robert Bridges (New York and London, 1933); S. N. Smith in C.B.E.L., iii (1940), pp. 323–5.

BRIDGET OF SWEDEN, St. (c. 1303–73), founder of the *Brigittines. The daughter of one of the wealthiest landowners of Sweden, she married at the age of 13 and had eight children, one of whom was St. *Catherine of Sweden. Between 1341 and 1343 she made a pilgrimage to *Compostela with her husband, who shortly after their return died in the *Cistercian monastery at Alvastra. Thus freed from worldly ties, Bridget devoted herself assiduously to religion. About 1346 she founded the Order of Brigittines at Vadstena in Sweden. In 1349 she went to Rome to obtain confirmation for her order from the Pope, and resided there, except for occasional pilgrimages, till her death. She aided St. *Catherine of Siena in preparing the way for the return of *Gregory XI from *Avignon to Rome (1377). The revelations which she was held to have received in visions were held in great repute during the Middle Ages. She was canonized in 1391. Feast day, 23 July (formerly 8 Oct., though she died 23 July). See also Brigittine Order.

Her 'Revelations' were publd. at Lübeck, 1492. A better and more accessible ed. is that of C. Durante (2 vols., Rome, 1628). Modern crit. ed. of the last book, Reuelaciones Extrauagantes, by L. Hollman (Samlingar utgivna av Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, Ser. 2, Latinska Skrifter, v; Uppsala, 1956), and of Book VII by B. Bergh (ib., vii. 7; 1967). 14th-cent. Swedish tr., with other material, ed. by G. E. Klemming, Heliga Birgittas Uppenbarelser (5 vols. bound in 4, Samlingar af Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, 1857–84); 15th-cent. Eng. selection of extracts ed. P. Cummings (E.E.T.S., clxxviii, 1929). Life by Skänning and Peter of Alvastra, her confessors, ed. C. Annerstedt, Scriptores Rerum Suecicarum Medii Aevi, iii, pt. 2 (Upsala, 1871), pp. 185–206. Life by Birger, Abp. of Upsala, in AA.SS., Oct. IV (1780), pp. 485–93. I. Collijn (ed.), Acta et Processus Canonizationis Beate Birgitte (Samlingar utgivna av Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, Ser. 2. Latinska Skrifter, i; Uppsala, 1924–31). Best modern life is that of a Brigittine, Helen Redpath, God's Ambassadress—St. Bridget of Sweden (Milwaukee, 1947). Other lives by F. J. M. A. Partridge (Quarterly Series, lxv, London, 1888), C. de Flavigny (Paris, 1892), E. Fogelkou (Stockholm, 1919; Germ. tr., 1929), and E. Peacy (member of the Brigittine Order, London, [1934]). E. Colledge, O.S.A., 'Epistola solitarii ad reges: Alphonse of Pecha as Organizer of Birgittine and Urbanist Propaganda' in Mediaeval Studies, xviii (1956), pp. 19–49, with bibl. F. Vernet in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 1943–58, s.v. 'Brigitte de Suède'; I. Cecchetti, Maria C. Celletti and Maria V. Brandi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, iii (Rome, 1956), pp. 439–533, s.v. 'Brigida di Svezia'.

BRIDGEWATER TREATISES, The. Eight treatises, published between 1833 and 1840, upon various aspects of 'the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, as manifested in the Creation'. They were produced under the will of F. H. *Egerton, 8th Earl of Bridgewater (1756–1829), who left a sum of £8,000 to the President of the Royal Society, to be paid to one or more authors selected by him to write and publish treatises on this subject. The eight authors chosen were: T. *Chalmers, J. Kidd, W. Whewell, Sir C. Bell, P. M. Roget, W. *Buckland, W. Kirby, W. Prout. The 'Ninth Bridgewater Treatise' (1837) by C. Babbage does not properly belong to the series.

D. W. Grundy, 'The Bridgewater Treatises and their authors' in History, N.S., xxxi (1946), pp. 140–52.

BRIGGS, CHARLES AUGUSTUS (1841–1913), OT scholar. After graduating at *Union Theological Seminary, New York, he studied in Berlin, was for some years a Presbyterian pastor, and in 1874 became professor of Hebrew at Union Seminary. As editor (1880–90) of the Presbyterian Review he became known as a vigorous exponent of *Higher Criticism of the OT on the lines of W. R. *Smith in Scotland. His inaugural address as professor of Biblical theology in 1891 led to his trial for heresy; and though acquitted by the New York presbytery, he was suspended by the General Assembly in 1893 from clerical functions. After taking orders in the *Protestant Episcopal Church in 1899, he devoted much energy to advocating Christian reunion. He was one of the editors both of the International Critical Commentaries and of the standard Hebrew Lexicon.

Essays in Modern Theology and Related Subjects gathered and published as a Testimonial to Charles Augustus Briggs . . . on the Completion of his Seventieth Year, January 18, 1911 (New York, 1911), with bibl. of his chief works (to 1909) by C. R. Gillett, pp. 327–47. His lectures on the History of the Study of Theology (delivered at the Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1912–13) were posthumously publd. by his daughter, Emily Grace Briggs (2 vols., London, 1916). Obituary notices by H. P. Smith in American Journal of Theology, xvii (1913), pp. 497–508, and in Expository Times, xxv (1913–14), pp. 294–8. A. C. McGiffert in Dict. Amer. Biog., iii (1929), p. 40 f., s.v., with further bibl.

BRIGHT, WILLIAM (1824–1901), Church historian and hymn-writer. He was Fellow of University College, Oxford, from 1847 to 1868, Tutor of Trinity College Glenalmond, from 1851 to 1858, and (in succession to H. L. *Mansel) Regius professor of ecclesiastical history and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, from 1868 until his death. He was a devoted student of the Fathers and a keen High Churchman. He wrote several well-known hymns, among them, 'We know Thee, Who Thou art' and the fine Eucharistic hymn, 'And now, O Father, mindful of the love'. He was also a forceful and vivid lecturer. His historical writings include A History of the Church, 313–451 A.D. (1860), Early English Church History (1878), and The Age of the Fathers (2 vols., ed. W. *Lock, 1903).

Selected Letters . . . with a Memoir, ed. B. J. Kidd (1903). A. Clark in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, p. 224 f.

BRIGHTMAN, FRANK EDWARD (1856–1932), liturgist. From 1884 to 1903 he was a librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, and from 1902 until his death a Fellow of Magdalen. A meticulously exact scholar, he issued in 1896 Liturgies Eastern and Western, Vol. I, 'Eastern', a new edition of the sections on the E. Church in C. E. Hammond's book (1878) on the subject. Its learned notes were the fruit of extended researches and several journeys to monasteries in the East. (Vol. II was never published.) His English Rite (1915) is a laborious and valuable edition of the different versions of the BCP, arranged in parallel columns. From 1904 to 1932 he was joint-editor of the Journal of Theological Studies, where his wide knowledge was constantly at the disposal of the contributors. Brightman was a strong High Churchman, whose counsel was much sought after by the leaders of the C of E.

Obituary by H. N. Bate in Proceedings of the British Academy, xix (1933), pp. 345–50. S. L. Ollard in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 103.

BRIGID, St., of Ireland. See Bride, St.

BRIGITTINE ORDER (Ordo Sanctissimi Salvatoris). The order founded by St. *Bridget of Sweden (q.v.). Its members were originally organized in double communities of men and women, using the same chapel, and living in separate parts of the monastery; but this arrangement was given up in the 16th cent. The Brigittines are bound to poverty like other religious, except that they may possess any number of books for study. The few surviving houses are in Germany, Holland, England, and Spain. Those in Spain consist of 'Brigittines of the Recollection', who live under a special modification of the Rule made to suit Spanish conditions by the Venerable Marina de Escobar in the 17th cent. A famous English Brigittine house was that of Syon, founded at Isleworth, Middlesex, by Henry V in 1415.

[P. Helyot], Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux, militaires et des congrégations séculières de l'un et de l'autre sexe, qui ont esté établies jusqu'à présent, iv (1715), pp. 25–44. J. R. Fletcher, The Story of the English Bridgettines of Syon Abbey (1933). B. Williamson, The Bridgettine Order. Its Foundress, History and Spirit (1922; brief). Heimbucher, i. pp. 620–5. P. Debongnie, C.SS.R., in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 728–31, s.v. 'Brigittins', with bibl.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY. One of the largest Bible Societies. It was founded in London in 1804 for the printing and distribution of the Bible at home and abroad, on account of representations made to the *Religious Tract Society by Thomas Charles, a *Calvinist Methodist minister of Bala. A strictly interdenominational body, by its constitution its committee is composed of 36 laymen (including 6 foreign members), the English members consisting of 15 Anglicans and 15 members of other denominations. It resisted both Bp. Herbert Marsh's wish to include the circulation of the BCP in its work, and also the Baptist bias which William *Carey sought to introduce. It has published translations of the Bible (excluding the *Apocrypha) in very many languages.

J. Owen, The History of the Origin and First Ten Years of the British and Foreign Bible Society (3 vols., 1816–20); W. Canton, A History of the British and Foreign Bible Society (5 vols., 1904–10); J. M. Roe, A History of the British and Foreign Bible Society 1905–1954 (1965). G. Browne, The History of the British and Foreign Bible Society, from its Institution in 1804 to its Jubilee in 1854 (2 vols., 1859). H. Morris, The Founders and First Three Presidents of the Bible Society [1895]; J. A. Patten, These Remarkable Men (1945). T. H. Darlow and H. F. Moule, Historical Catalogue of the Printed Editions of Holy Scripture in the Library of the British and Foreign Bible Society (2 vols., bound in 4, 1903–11; ed. A. S. Herbert, 1968 ff.).

BRITISH CHURCH. See Celtic Church.

BRITISH COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. An organization created in 1942 to further common Christian action and promote the cause of unity among the Churches of Great Britain. On the foundation of the *World Council of Churches in 1948 it became an 'Associated Council'. Its 'Articles of Amalgamation' (23 Sept. 1943) provided for 112 members, with official representatives of the C of E, the Church of *Scotland, the *Free Churches, the Churches of *Ireland and *Wales, the *Salvation Army, the Society of *Friends, and the *Unitarian and Free Christian Churches. The Friends and the Unitarians are now (1982) 'Associate Members'. Since 1965 the Greek Orthodox Church in Great Britain has been a member, and since that year also the RC Church has sent observers. It meets twice a year; its resolutions have no binding force but considerable moral authority. 'Christian Aid' is an organ of the British Council of Churches. The first three presidents have been W. *Temple, G. *Fisher and A. M. *Ramsey.

Articles of Amalgamation in G. K. A. *Bell, Documents on Christian Unity. Third Series, 1930–48 (1948), No. 187.

'BRITISH CRITIC, The'. A theological quarterly which ran from 1827 to 1843. It supported the cause of the *Tractarian theologians, most of whom contributed articles to it. In its later years it came increasingly under the influence of those in the Tractarian Movement most in sympathy with Rome.

BRITISH ISRAEL THEORY. The theory that the British people is ultimately descended from the ten Israelite tribes which were taken captive into Assyria in 722–721 B.C., and thereafter wholly disappeared from Hebrew history. It was often found in conjunction with pronounced imperialist views; and though the numbers and influence of those who defend it are small, they often hold it with a persistence and enthusiasm which refuse to give a dispassionate consideration to objections urged against it. The theory meets with no support from serious ethnologists or archaeologists.

For a criticism, see H. L. Goudge, The British Israel Theory (1922).

BROAD CHURCH. A popular term, coined on the analogy of *High Church and *Low Church, and current esp. in the latter half of the 19th cent., for those in the C of E who objected to positive definition in theology and sought to interpret the Anglican formularies and rubrics in a broad and liberal sense. The expression appears to have been proposed originally by A. H. Clough. The existence of Broad Churchmen as a distinct party owed much to the influence of T. *Arnold and R. D. Hampden. Characteristic representatives of the school were most of the writers for Essays and Reviews (1860) and A. P. *Stanley. Their successors are more commonly designated *Modernists (q.v.).

F. W. Cornish, The English Church in the Nineteenth Century (2 vols., 1910), esp. vol. i, pp. 186–96 and 299–316, and vol. ii, pp. 201–44. The movement is best studied, however, in the biographies of its adherents, e.g. T. Arnold, A. P. Stanley, B. *Jowett, M. *Pattison.

BROAD STOLE. A broad band of material formerly worn *stole-wise by the deacon during part of *High Mass in certain penitential seasons. In origin it was not a stole at all, but represented a *folded chasuble, and thus went back to the days when the deacon as well as the celebrant wore a chasuble, and folded it thus to facilitate movement. Indeed, the rubrics of the Roman Missal continued to enjoin the use of a real folded chasuble, the broad stole being permitted for reasons of convenience. It was finally given up in 1960.

Braun, L.G., p. 150.

BROADCASTING, Religious, in Great Britain. In 1922 on the initiative of J. Reith (1889–1971), acting on behalf of the British Broadcasting Company, Anglican, RC, Presbyterian, and Free Church leaders formed a committee (later the 'Central Advisory Committee') which has been consulted by the Company (since 1927 Corporation) on all matters of religious broadcasting. It is now assisted by six regional religious advisory committees.

Beginning cautiously with hymns and sermons, religious broadcasting has come to include most types of worship. On 22 Dec. 1922 the first broadcast sermon was delivered by Preb. J. A. Mayo, rector of St. Mary's, Whitechapel. On 6 Jan. 1924 H. R. L. *Sheppard conducted in St. Martin-in-the-Fields the first service broadcast from a church. The Service of the Nine Lessons has been broadcast at Christmastide since 1928. In 1939 the First Mass of Christmas was broadcast from *Downside Abbey. On 26 Dec. 1948 the Holy Communion acc. to the rite of the C of E was first broadcast in full. On 25 Dec. 1949 the first televised service was broadcast from the chapel of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea.

Since 2 Jan. 1929 a daily service has been broadcast. Besides such regular programmes as 'Lift Up Your Hearts' (since 1965 replaced by 'Ten to Eight'), 'Epilogue', and 'Sunday Half-hour', the B.B.C. broadcast talks, services for schools, and religious drama. Dorothy L. Sayers' The Man Born to be King was written for broadcasting and first heard in 1942. Religious topics also play a considerable part in serious discussions and talks broadcast in Great Britain. Both the B.B.C. and independent television companies devote several hours a week to religious subjects, including at appropriate seasons programmes for Jews and other minority groups.

Publications which have been issued in connexion with the daily service broadcast by the B.B.C. include Services for Broadcasting (1930), New Every Morning (1936; Welsh ed., 1938), Each Returning Day (1940) and The B.B.C. Hymn Book (1951). A. Briggs, The History of Broadcasting in the United Kingdom (3 vols., 1961–70), esp. i, pp. 272–5, ii, pp. 227–49, iii, pp. 621–34. M. Dinwiddie, Religion by Radio. Its Place in British Broadcasting (1968).

BROMPTON ORATORY. The house and church of the *Oratorians in London. The first Oratory, in King William Street, was founded in 1849, principally through the efforts of J. H. *Newman. In 1854 its members moved to Brompton Road. The present church in a somewhat florid Italian style was consecrated in 1884. It is one of the most important RC centres in London.

The London Oratory, 1849–1949 (1949); H. M. Gillett, The Story of the London Oratory Church (1946), incl. bibl. See also J. E. Bowden, Cong. Orat., The Life and Letters of Frederick William Faber (1869).

BROOKE, STOPFORD AUGUSTUS (1832–1916), *Broad Church theologian and author. He was born at Glendowan, nr. Letterkenny, Co. Donegal, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. Having been ordained in 1857, he became curate of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, in 1859, where he made a name as a preacher. His Broad views brought him into conflict with the ecclesiastical authorities, and in 1863 he went to Berlin as chaplain to the Princess Royal and to the British embassy. The post, however, proved unsatisfactory; he returned to London in 1864, and in 1865 he published his widely read *Life and Letters of the Late Frederick W. Robertson. The book reflects the outlook of the Broad Church party and was sharply attacked by the Evangelicals. In 1866 he was appointed minister of the proprietary chapel of St. James, York Street, where his preaching drew large congregations. In 1867 he became chaplain-in-ordinary to the Queen. In 1876 he published his Primer of English Literature, which became one of the most popular works on the subject. In the same year he moved to Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, where he continued to engage in pastoral work even after he had left the C of E in 1880. Among the publications of this period are a Life and Writings of Milton (1879), a History of Early English Literature (1892), and volumes of sermons. In 1895 he gave up Bedford Chapel owing to ill-health, but continued his literary activities and sometimes preached in the chapels of the *Unitarians.

L. P. Jacks, Life and Letters of Stopford Brooke (2 vols., 1917). G. V. Jacks in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 68 f.

BROOKS, PHILLIPS (1835–93), Bp. of Massachusetts. A native of Boston, Mass., he studied at Harvard and after a short period of teaching was ordained in the *Protestant Episcopal Church in 1859. From 1862 to 1869 he was rector of Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, where he became much attracted to the liberal religious outlook of such English theologians as F. D. *Maurice and F. W. *Robertson. In 1869 he became rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and in 1891 Bp. of Massachusetts. The most considerable American preacher of his generation, he owed his influence to his impressive personality, wide sympathies and passionate sincerity. In 1877 he published his Yale Lectures on Preaching and from 1878 onwards several volumes of sermons. He was the author of the well-known carol 'O little town of Bethlehem' (1868). Commemorated in U.S.A. on 23 Jan.

His Life and Letters were published by A. V. G. Allen (2 vols., New York, 1901). An abridged ed. was issued in 1907. R. W. Albright, Focus on Infinity. A Life of Phillips Brooks (New York, 1961).

BROTHER LAWRENCE of the Resurrection (Nicolas Herman) (c. 1605–91), *Carmelite lay brother and mystic. After being a soldier and later a hermit, he entered the Carmelite monastery at *Paris in 1649, where he was given charge of the kitchen, and led a life of almost constant recollection. Lawrence's writings were edited by the Abbé de Beaufort after his death in two volumes entitled Maximes spirituelles (1692) and Mœurs et entretiens du F. Laurent (1694). They recommend a very elevated form of prayer consisting in the simple practice of the presence of God, whether by the imagination or by the intellect. His maxims, which were highly appreciated by his contemporaries, were frequently quoted by *Fénelon in his Défenses.

Good modern edd. of selections of his prayers and letters under the title La Pratique de la présence de Dieu, with introd. and notes, by L. Van Den Bossche (Bruges, 1934) and S. M. Bouchereaux (Paris, 1948). Convenient Eng. tr. by D. Attwater (Orchard Books, Extra Series, iii; 1926).

BROTHERS HOSPITALLERS. The Order, whose members are for the most part laymen, developed out of the work for the sick of St. *John of God (d. 1550; q.v.). It began at Granada; then with the support of *Philip II hospitals were established in Madrid, Cordova, and elsewhere in Spain; and in 1572 *Pius V formally approved the Order, which adopted the *Augustinian rule. In the next decade the Hospital of St. John Calybita, established in 1584 in Rome, became the mother-house of the Order. In addition to the three usual vows a fourth is taken to serve for life the sick in hospitals. In more recent times the Order has flourished esp. in Italy, Spain, France, and Central Europe. At present they conduct over 100 hospitals. See also Hospitallers.

J. Monval, Les Frères Hospitaliers de Saint-Jean de Dieu (1936); G. Russotto, F.B.F., L'ordine ospedaliero di S. Giovanni di Dio ('Fatebenefratelli') (1950); N. McMahon, O.S.J.D., The Story of the Hospitallers of St. John of God (Dublin, 1958). Heimbucher, i, pp. 600–11. G. Russotto, F.B.F., in E.C., ix (1952), col. 416 f., s.v. 'Ospedalieri di San Giovanni di Dio', with bibl.

BROTHERS OF THE COMMON LIFE. See Brethren of the Common Life.

BROWN, WILLIAM ADAMS (1865–1943), *Presbyterian theologian. From 1898 to 1930 he was Roosevelt professor of systematic theology at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. Belonging to the more liberal wing of American Presbyterianism, he took a prominent part in the *Ecumenical Movement and in Christian social work. His writings include The Essence of Christianity (1902), Christian Theology in Outline (1906), Modern Theology and the Preaching of the Gospel (1914), The Church in America (1922), and Imperialistic Religion and the Religion of Democracy (1923).

S. McC. Cavert and H. P. van Dusen (edd.), The Church Through Half a Century. Essays in Honor of William Adams Brown (1936), with biographical material pp. 3–90.

BROWNE, EDWARD HAROLD (1811–1891), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated at Eton and Emmanuel College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1836 and priest in 1837. After some parochial charges and the Vice-Principalship of St. David's College, Lampeter (1843–9), he became Norrisian professor of divinity at Cambridge in 1854, continuing to hold the living of Kenwyn (1849–57), which he exchanged in 1857 with that of Heavitree, *Exeter, and a canonry in Exeter cathedral. In 1864 he became Bp. of *Ely, and in 1873, in succession to S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of Winchester. Had he been younger he would probably have succeeded A. C. *Tait at Canterbury in 1882. In 1890 he resigned his see. He was a moderating influence in the fierce conflicts aroused by Essays and Reviews (1860) and J. W. *Colenso's work on the *Pentateuch (1862 ff.). His theological beliefs were embodied in his Exposition of the Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1850–3), long a standard work among theological students. He also contributed an article on 'Inspiration' in Aids to Faith (1861; a reply to Essays and Reviews).

G. W. Kitchin, Edward Harold Browne, D.D. (1895).

BROWNE, GEORGE (d. 1556), Abp. of *Dublin and promoter of the Reformation in Ireland. He was originally an *Augustinian friar, but nothing is known of his life until, as Provincial of his order, he had to administer the oath of royal supremacy to the friars. In 1535 he was appointed Abp. of Dublin, and as such took an active part in the suppression of the Irish monasteries and in the union of the Irish Church with the C of E under the supremacy of the King. After the introduction of the Prayer Book of 1549 into Ireland, Browne became the head of those members of the Irish clergy who accepted the new religion and introduced the English service into Dublin Cathedral. In 1550 he found himself Primate of Ireland, owing to the translation of the primacy from the ancient see of *Armagh to that of Dublin. On the accession of *Mary, Browne had to resign his see because he was married; he was later dispensed and allowed to hold a benefice. Of a harsh and arrogant character, Browne made many enemies and incurred the hatred of the people.

Historical Collections of the Church in Ireland during the Reigns of Kings Henry VIII, Edward VI and Queen Mary . . . set forth in the Life and Death of George Browne (1681). B. Bradshaw, S.M., 'George Browne, First Reformation Archbishop of Dublin, 1536–1554' in J.E.H., xxi (1970), pp. 301–26. R. W. Dixon in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 43–45, s.v.

BROWNE, ROBERT (c. 1550–1633), *Puritan separatist. He was a relative of William Cecil, Lord Burleigh, who more than once afforded him protection. Born at Tolethorpe, nr. Stamford, Lincs, Browne studied at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and while there came under the influence of T. *Cartwright, then advocating a *Presbyterian polity for the Church. Feeling a call to action forthwith, Browne established independent congregations at *Norwich and elsewhere. For this schismatic act he was promptly imprisoned. Having been freed by Cecil, he migrated with his Norwich flock to Middelburg in Holland; and there issued A Book which sheweth the Life and Manner of all True Christians (Middelburg, 1582) and A Treatise of Reformation without Tarrying for Any (ib., 1582). Before long Browne, who was of a quarrelsome nature, fell out with many of his congregation, and left for Scotland. Not finding the welcome he had looked for from the Scottish Church, he returned to England and published An Answer to Mr. Cartwright's Letter for joining with the English Churches (London, c. 1584). He then made a formal submission to the C of E, and became Master of St. Olave's School, *Southwark, in 1586. His changed standpoint is reflected in the title of a paper, A Reproof of Certain Schismatic Persons (1588), of which a MS. copy is preserved at *Lambeth Palace. None the less it appears that while at Southwark he ministered to separatist congregations. In 1591 he received episcopal ordination and became Rector of Achurch, Northants. He held the benefice until his death, though there is an unexplained period (1616–26) when the entries in the parish register are in a different hand. He died in Northampton Gaol, whither he had been committed for assaulting a police constable. Browne was clearly mentally unstable; but he exercised an important influence on the beginnings of *Congregationalism, so much so that its early members were often termed 'Brownists'.

The Reproof mentioned in the text, a MS. of 31 pages, was discovered by Champlin Burrage in 1905 and publd. as The 'Retractation' of Robert Browne, Father of Congregationalism (1907). A. Peel–L. H. Carlson (edd.), The Writings of Robert Harrison and Robert Browne (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, ii; 1953), pp. 150–531. C. Burrage, The True Story of Robert Browne (1906), with full list of Browne's writings and bibl. reff. Important art. by F. J. Powicke in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 874–8, s.v. 'Brownism'. A. Jessop in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 57–61.

BROWNE, SIR THOMAS (1605–82), physician and author. After studying medicine at Oxford, Montpellier, and Padua, and receiving a doctorate at Leyden, he began to practise as a physician, and in 1637 settled at *Norwich, where he spent the rest of his life. His chief fame is due to his writings, of which the most celebrated are Religio Medici (1642) and Hydriotaphia, or Urn-Burial (1658). The former of these expounds his religious outlook, while the latter is a learned treatise on burial customs in different parts of the world. His religious views manifest a remarkable independence of judgement and 'attempt to combine daring scepticism with implicit faith in revelation' (A. H. Bullen), while he shows, probably as a result of his wide travels and sympathies, a freedom from insular prejudice rare in Englishmen of his day. But, in spite of exceptional learning and wide experience, he shared the beliefs of his age in witchcraft and alchemy, and in the Ptolemaic astronomy. He also wrote Pseudodoxia Epidemica (1646), Certain Miscellany Tracts (1683), A Letter to a Friend upon the Occasion of the Death of his Intimate Friend (1690), and Christian Morals (1716).

First collected ed. of Works, 1686; more complete ed., with Memoir by S. Wilkin (4 vols., 1835–6). Modern crit. ed. by G. [L.] Keynes (6 vols., London, 1928–31, and 4 vols., ib., 1964). Religio Medici and [some] Other Writings of Sir Thomas Browne, ed. with introd. by L. C. Martin (Oxford, 1964). Christian Morals (ed. 2, with Life by S. *Johnson, 1756; re-edited by R. S. Roberts, 1927). Studies by E. Gosse ('English Men of Letters', London, 1905), W. P. Dunn (New York, 1925), O. Leroy (Paris, 1931), J. J. Denonain (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines d'Alger, xxxiii; Paris, 1959), Joan Bennett (Cambridge, 1962), F. L. Huntley (Ann Arbor [1962]), R. R. Cawley–G. Yost (Eugene, Oregon, 1965), and L. Nathanson (Chicago and London, 1967). G. [L.] Keynes, A Bibliography of Sir Thomas Browne (Cambridge, 1924, ed. 2, 1968); id. in F. W. Bateson (ed.), C.B.E.L., i (1940), p. 834 f. A. H. Bullen in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 64–72.

BROWNISTS. See Browne, Robert.

BRUCE, ALEXANDER BALMAIN (1831–1899), Scottish divine. Educated at Edinburgh University, he entered the Free Church ministry, and in 1875 was appointed professor in the Free Church Hall at Glasgow. In 1871 he issued his Training of the Twelve, the first of many books in which he sought to use the method of Gospel exegesis to present the substance of the Christian faith. This was followed by The Humiliation of Christ (1876), a thorough examination of the '*Kenotic theory', and The Kingdom of God; or Christ's Teaching according to the Synoptic Gospels (1889). The latter was much criticized in the General Assembly of the Free Church for its adoption of new principles of Biblical Criticism, but no formal censure was passed. Among Bruce's later writings were Apologetics; or, Christianity Defensively Stated (1892), and two series of *Gifford Lectures for 1896–7 and 1897–8 (publd., 1897 and 1899), St. Paul's Conception of Christianity (1894), 'With Open Face' (1896), commentaries on the Synoptic Gospels (Expos. Gk. Test., 1897), and The Epistle to the Hebrews (1899). He also worked actively for the encouragement of Church music.

E. I. Carlyle in D.N.B. Suppl., i (1901), p. 321 f., s.v.

BRÜGGLERS. A small Swiss sect founded at Brügglen, near Berne, c. 1745, by two brothers, Christian and Hieronymus Kohler, probably both impostors from start to finish. They proclaimed several fantastic doctrines, asserting, e.g., that they themselves and one of their disciples, Elizabeth Kissling, were respectively incarnations of the three Persons of the Trinity, and foretold that the world would end at Christmas 1748. Their excesses and immoralities led to their exile by the Berne government in 1749, and in 1753 Hierony-mus Kohler was burnt. The sect survived for a short time in remote mountainous regions.

W. Hadorn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 638–41, s.v. 'Kohler, Christian und Hieronymus', with bibl.

BRUNNER, EMIL (1889–1966), Swiss *Dialectical theologian. A native of Winterthur, from 1916 to 1922 he was a pastor at Obstalden. From 1922 to 1953, apart from several visits to America, he taught at Zürich, and then until 1956 at the International Christian University at Tokyo. He supported K. *Barth in opposing theological liberalism, but he was sharply divided from him by the influence of M. *Buber and by his acceptance of the Catholic doctrine of *analogy, by which a limited knowledge of God may be gained from creation. This, though it did not, like revelation, provide a personal meeting, was a necessary condition of Christian thought. In this he was fiercely opposed by K. Barth in his pamphlet Nein! Antwort an Emil Brunner (1934). His writings include Die Mystik und das Wort (1924); Religionsphilosophie evangelischer Theologie (1926; Eng. tr., The Philosophy of Religion from the Standpoint of Protestant Theology, 1937); Der Mittler (1927; Eng. tr., The Mediator, 1934); Das Gebot und die Ordnungen (1932; Eng. tr., The Divine Imperative, 1937); Der Mensch im Widerspruch (1937; Eng. tr., Man in Revolt, 1939), Dogmatik (1946–60; Eng. tr., 1946–62), and Christianity and Civilisation (*Gifford Lectures for 1947–8; 1948–9). For a short time he professed his adherence to the *Oxford Group Movement.

Festschrift for his 60th birthday (Zürich, 1950); for his 70th birthday (Stuttgart [1959]). P. K. Jewett, Emil Brunner's Concept of Revelation (1954). C. W. Kegley (ed.), The Theology of Emil Brunner [1962], with list of Brunner's works to date.

BRUNO, St. (c. 925 – 65), Abp. of *Cologne. The youngest son of the Emp. Henry I ('the Fowler'), he was ordained deacon in 941 or 942 and subsequently appointed abbot of the monasteries of *Lorsch near Worms and of Corvei on the Weser. In 953 he became Abp. of Cologne, and as such took a leading part in furthering the ecclesiastical and temporal policy of his brother, the Emp. Otto. He exercised considerable influence on imperial policy, was a true patron of learning, and by a strong policy secured the internal peace of his domains. His Life was written by the monk Ruotger. Feast day, 11 Oct. (though on other days at certain places).

Life by Ruotger pr. in AA.SS., Oct. V (1786), pp. 765–86; ed. by G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), pp. 252–275, and I. Ott (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, Nova Series, x, 1951; new ed., 1958). H. Schrörs, 'Ruotgers Lebensgeschichte des Erzbischofs Bruno von Köln' in Annalen des Historischen Vereins für den Niederrhein insbesondere die alte Erzdiözese Köln, lxxxviii (1910), pp. 1–95; id., 'Die Vita Brunonis des Ruotger', ib., xc (1911), pp. 60–110; id., 'Erzbischof Bruno von Köln (953–965), eine geschichtliche Charakteristik', ib., c (1917), pp. 1–42. F. Lotter, Die Vita Brunonis des Ruotger. Ihre historiographische und ideengeschichtliche Stellung (Bonner historische Forschungen, ix; 1958). R. Haass, 'Bruno I. Erzbischof von Köln' in Rheinische Lebensbilder, i (1961), pp. 1–11. Full bibl. in W. Wattenbach–R. Holtzmann, Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter. Deutsche Kaiserzeit. Band I, Hft. i (1938), pp. 88–94.

BRUNO, St. (c. 1032 – 1101). The founder of the *Carthusian Order. Educated at *Cologne and Reims, he became a canon of St. Cunibert's in Cologne, whence he was recalled to be 'scholasticus' of the important cathedral school of Reims (c. 1057). Here he had among his pupils the future Pope *Urban II. He was made chancellor of the diocese in 1075 by Manasses, the new Archbishop, a man of scandalous character, with whom he soon came into conflict. In the course of a long struggle Bruno was forced to leave his school (1076), but he returned in 1080 when Manasses was deposed from his see. Shortly after, Bruno turned to the religious life and for a time placed himself under the direction of St. *Robert, who later founded *Cîteaux. Before long he left Robert, and with six companions went into the mountainous district near Grenoble, where, under the protection of the bishop, St. *Hugh, he laid the foundations of the Carthusian Order (1084). In 1090 he was summoned by Pope Urban II to live in Italy and assist him with his counsel. He obeyed, but refusing the archbishopric of Reggio, retired to the wilds of Calabria and founded the monastery of La Torre, where he died. He was never formally canonized, but in 1514 his order obtained Papal leave to keep his festival (6 Oct.). The observance of the Feast was imposed on all Westerns in communion with Rome in 1623.

His Expositions on the Psalms and on the Epp. of St. Paul have been repr. by the Carthusians of Montreuil-sur-Mer, 1891–2; also in J. P. Migne, PL, clii and cliii; their authenticity is still a matter of dispute; see A. Stoelen, O.Carth., 'Les Commentaires scripturaires attribués à Bruno le Chartreux' in R.T.A.M., xxv (1958), pp. 177–247; id., 'Bruno le Chartreux, Jean Gratiadei et la "Lettre de S. Anselme" sur l'Eucharistie', ib., xxxiv (1967), pp. 18–83. 3 letters, with Fr. tr. and introd., in Lettres des Premiers Chartreux, ed. by Un Chartreux, i (S.C., lxxxviii; 1962), pp. 9–93. Extracts from anon. 13th cent. life (Vita Antiquior), together with other primary material, in AA.SS., Oct. III (1700), pp. 491–777. A. P. F. Lefebvre, Saint Bruno et l'ordre des Chartreux (2 vols., 1883); H. Löbbel, Der Stifter des Carthäuser-Ordens, der heilige Bruno aus Köln (1899); M. M. Gorse, Saint Bruno. Son action et son œuvre (1902); A. Ravier, S. Bruno, le premier des ermites de la Chartreuse (1967). S. Autore, O.S.B., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2274–82, s.v. 'Chartreuse', with full bibl. Y. Gourdel, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 705–10, s.v. 'Chartreux'. See also works cited under Carthusian Order.

BRUNO, GIORDANO (1548–1600), Italian philosopher. In 1562 he joined the *Dominican Order at Naples, but on being censured for unorthodoxy, he fled in 1576. For seventeen years he moved from place to place under constant suspicion, and was in England from 1583 to 1585. Captured at Venice in 1592 by the emissaries of the *Inquisition, he was in confinement at Rome from 1593 till, on 17 Feb. 1600, he was burnt at the stake on the Campo dei Fiori.

Under Renaissance influences Bruno became a fierce opponent of *Aristotelian doctrines and a warm admirer of N. *Copernicus. His enthusiasm for nature, however, led him to hold an extreme form of pantheistic immanentism. God was the efficient and final cause of everything, the beginning, middle, and end, the eternal and infinite. He developed this philosophy in its many consequences in his two Italian metaphysical treatises of 1584, De la Causa, Principio, ed Uno and De l'Infinito, Universo, e Mondi. In his Latin treatises, written somewhat later, he slightly modified this extreme pantheism. In the latter half of the 19th cent. the name of Bruno came to be identified with *anticlerical elements in the movement for Italian nationalism.

Latin works ed. F. Fiorentino [F. Tocco and others] (8 vols., Florence and Naples, 1879–91); Italian works ed. G. *Gentile (2 vols., Bari, 1907–8). Studies by A. Riehl (Leipzig, 1900), J. L. McIntyre (London, 1903), L. Olschki (Halle, 1924; Italian tr. Bari, 1927), A. Corsano (Florence, 1940), A. Guzzo (Bibliotheca del 'Giornale di Metafisica', v; Turin, 1948), L. Firpo (Quaderni della Rivista Storica Italiana, i; Naples, 1949), L. Cicuttini (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Nuova Serie, xxxi; Milan [1950]), Dorothea W. Singer (New York, 1950), G. Fraccari (Milan, 1951), N. Badaloni (Saggi di Cultura Moderna, xii; Florence, 1955), A. Guzza (Turin, 1960), P. H. Michel (Paris, 1962), and Hélène Védrine (ib., 1967). A. Mercati, Il Sommario del Processo di Giordano Bruno (S.T., ci; 1942, with documents). V. Salvestrini, Bibliografia delle opere di Giordano Bruno (1926; ed. 2 by L. Firpo [to 1950], 1957).

BRUYS, PIERRE DE. See Peter de Bruys.

BRYANITES. See Bible Christians.

BRYENNIOS, PHILOTHEOS (1833–1914), the discoverer of the '*Didache'. A native of *Constantinople, he studied at several German universities, became professor of Church history and exegesis at Halki in 1861, director of the school in the *Phanar at Constantinople in 1867, Metropolitan of Serrae in Macedonia in 1875 and of Nicomedia in 1877. In 1873 he discovered in the library of the Hospice of the Jerusalem Monastery of the Holy Sepulchre at Constantinople a MS. (no. 456) written in 1056 which contained some early Christian documents of the first importance, among them the Greek texts of the Ep. of *Barnabas, the 1st and 2nd Epp. of *Clement to the Corinthians, and, the most celebrated, the Didache. He published the two Clementine Epistles in 1875 and the Didache in 1883. In 1875 he was a delegate of the E. Church at the *Bonn Reunion Conference.

Brief notice by N. Turchi in E.C., iii (1950), col. 163. P. *Schaff, The Oldest Church Manual called the 'Teaching of the Twelve Apostles' (1885), pp. 279–96 (with autobiogr. letter from Bryennios).

BUBER, MARTIN (1878–1965), Jewish religious thinker. He was a native of Vienna, where he took his doctor's degree in 1900, and played an active part in the Zionist Movement, which he had joined in 1898. From 1906 onwards he devoted himself chiefly to religious studies. These led him to preoccupation with *Chasidism, whence he derived many of his ideas, e.g. those on a kind of activist mysticism and the sanctification of daily life. From 1916 to 1924 he was editor of Der Jude, a leading monthly of German-speaking Jewry. In 1923 he received a call to Frankfurt university, where he lectured on Jewish theology and ethics. In 1926 he started a periodical, Die Kreatur, with Catholic and Protestant collaborators. In 1933 he was deprived of his chair by the government, though he stayed in Germany until 1938. In that year he went to Palestine to become Professor of Sociology at the Hebrew University of *Jerusalem, where, apart from lecture tours in the U.S.A., he spent the rest of his life.

Among his more important writings are Die Legende des Baalschem (1908), Vom Geist des Judentums (1916), Die Schrift (from 1925, translation of the Bible), and Königtum Gottes (1932, Eng. tr., 1967), a study of the Messianic idea. The book which has exercised the greatest influence on Protestant theologians as well as on the German Youth Movement is his small treatise Ich und Du (1923; Eng. tr., 1937). Written in poetical language, it contrasts the 'I–Thou' relationship, which involves the whole person and is usually one's relationship with another person or with God, and the 'I–It' relationship, which never involves the whole person and is typically one's relationship to a thing.

The influence of Buber's ideas is evident esp. in the German Protestant theologians F. *Gogarten and K. *Heim, but also in English thinkers such as J. H. *Oldham.

Werke, 3 vols., Munich, 1962–4, incomplete. Festgabe für Martin Buber zum 50. Geburtstag (Berlin, 1928). Studies by H. Kohn (Hellerau, 1930), M. S. Friedman (London, 1955), A. A. Cohen (ibid., 1957), H. U. von Balthasar (Cologne and Olten, 1958; Eng. tr., 1961), M. L. Durand (New York, 1960), Grete Schaeder (Göttingen, [1966]), and ed. P. A. Schilpp and M. Friedman (Library of Living Philosophers, xii: La Salle, Ill. and London, 1967), incl. Eng. tr. of Buber's autobiographical fragments and his replies to criticism, and bibl. of his works. Correspondence ed. G. Schaeder (3 vols., Heidelberg, 1972–5).

BUCER, MARTIN (1491–1551), also spelled 'Butzer', German divine. Having entered the *Dominican Order in 1506, he began in 1518 to correspond with M. *Luther, whom he had heard dispute, and in 1521 secured Papal dispensation from his monastic vows. He was one of the first priests among the German Reformers to marry (1522). In 1523 he began publicly to preach Lutheranism in Alsace, and was excommunicated by the Bp. of Speyer. During the years which followed, his views developed, and on the subject of the *Eucharist they came nearer to those of H. *Zwingli than to those of Luther, though he attempted to mediate between the two. After the death of Zwingli in 1531 he became the leader of the *Reformed Churches in Switzerland and S. Germany, and took part in the unsuccessful conferences between Catholics and Protestants at *Hagenau (1540), *Worms (1540), and *Ratisbon (1541). He then spent some years assisting *Hermann of Wied in his vain effort to introduce the Reformed doctrines at Cologne. After unavailing opposition to the *Interim of 1548, arranged by the Emp. *Charles V to maintain religious peace in the empire, Bucer came in 1549 to England, where he was received with much honour by *Edward VI and T. *Cranmer, and made Regius professor of divinity at Cambridge. Cranmer is said to have asked his advice on many points, and Bucer had a marked influence on parts of the Anglican *Ordinal of 1550. He died on 28 Feb. 1551, and was buried in Great St. Mary's church at Cambridge. In 1557 his body was exhumed and publicly burnt on Market Hill.

Scripta Anglicana fere omnia a C. Huberto collecta (Basel, 1577). Collected ed. of his works by François Wendel, F. Staehelin, R. Stupperich and others (Paris–Gütersloh, 1954 ff.). Modern Eng. tr. of 'De Regno Christi' in W. Pauck (ed.), Melanchthon and Bucer (Library of Christian Classics, xix; [1969]), pp. 174–394, with introd., pp. 155–73. Lives by G. Anrich (Strassburg, 1914) and H. Eells (Yale, 1931). J. W. Baum, Capito und Butzer (Strassburg, 1860); A. Lang, Der Evangelienkommentar Martin Butzers und die Grundzüge seiner Theologie (Leipzig, 1900); A. E. Harvey, Martin Bucer in England (Marburg, 1906); G. Klingenburg, Das Verhältnis Calvins zu Butzer (Bonn, 1912); W. Pauck, Das Reich Gottes auf Erden. Eine Untersuchung zu Butzers De Regno Christi (Berlin, 1928); C. Hopf, Martin Bucer and the English Reformation (Oxford, 1946); H. Bornkamm, Martin Bucers Bedeutung für die europäische Reformationsgeschichte (1952). J. V. Pollet, O.P., Martin Bucer. Études sur la Correspondance (2 vols., 1958–62). J. Müller, Martin Bucers Hermeneutik (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, xxxii; 1965). W. P. Stephens, The Holy Spirit in the Theology of Martin Bucer (Cambridge, 1970). B. Thompson, 'Bucer Study since 1918' in Church History, xxv (1956), pp. 63–82. P. Polman in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 1015–19, s.v., with extensive bibl. to date.

BUCHANAN, CLAUDIUS (1766–1815), Bengal chaplain. After conversion and a period spent under the personal influence of the famous Evangelical, J. *Newton, Buchanan entered Queens' College, Cambridge, in 1791, where he made the close acquaintance of C. *Simeon. On being ordained priest in 1796, he accepted a chaplaincy in Bengal, proceeded to Calcutta shortly afterwards, and was for several years vice-provost of a cultural college which Lord Wellesley had established at Fort William. Though his official position in the East India Company restricted the amount of active mission work he could do, he used his influence to the utmost to further the cause of Christianity in native India; and it was largely through his instrumentality after his return to England (1808) that an Indian episcopate was created, T. F. *Middleton, the first Bp. of Calcutta, being appointed in 1814.

Works (incomplete) in two parts, New York, 1812. H. N. Pearson, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Claudius Buchanan (2 vols., 1817). A. J. Arbuthnot in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 182–4.

BUCHMAN, FRANK (1878–1961), founder and director of the *Oxford Group (q.v.). Born of a *Lutheran family of Swiss descent at Pennsburg, Pa., U.S.A., he graduated at Muhlenberg College, studied at Mount Airy Seminary, Philadelphia, and entered the Lutheran ministry. After a year of graduate study abroad he was in charge of a parish in Philadelphia for three years and subsequently of a hostel for poor young men. In 1908 he resigned this work in a spirit of disillusionment and on a visit to England attended the *Keswick Convention, where an address on the Atonement in a small church in the neighbourhood convinced him that his previous ministry had been wholly unprofitable and he experienced conversion. On the advice of J. R. *Mott he took up evangelistic work among the students of Pennsylvania State College. In 1915 and 1917–19 he visited *India and the Far East, and in 1920—with introductions from two Anglican missionary bishops whom he met in China—Cambridge, after which some Cambridge undergraduates joined him in a visit to Oxford. Out of this last visit the Group movement grew. In 1929 he visited South Africa as leader of the movement and subsequently travelled widely, including tours to Canada and U.S.A. in 1932–3 and 1933–4, Scandinavia in 1934–5, Utrecht in 1937, the Near East and Geneva in 1938. In 1938 in London he inaugurated the *Moral Rearmament movement, a phase of the Group movement which stressed national and social morale in place of the largely individual emphasis of the earlier teaching. World Assemblies of this later movement were held at Caux, Switzerland, in 1946 and subsequent years.

See bibl. to Oxford Group.

BUCHMANN, THEODOR. See Bibliander, Theodor.

BÜCHNER, KARL FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN LUDWIG (1824–99), German materialist philosopher. While lecturer in medicine at *Tübingen (from 1852), he published in 1855 his celebrated Kraft und Stoff, in which he defended a purely materialistic doctrine of the natural world, seeking on the bases of the conservation-laws of energy and of matter to reduce everything in the universe, whether mental or physical, to a single non-spiritual source. The book became a sort of Bible for the materialists and aroused such bitter opposition that Büchner was forced to retire. For the rest of his life he lived at Darmstadt, where he published several other widely read treatises. He maintained that his doctrinaire materialism was not incompatible with idealism in practical life.

List of his writings in Überweg, iv, p. 288 f.

BUCKFAST ABBEY, Devon. The first Abbey was founded in 1018 by Earl Aethelweard and was ceded to the abbot of *Savigny in 1136. Together with a number of other Savigny houses in England it adopted the rule of Cîteaux in 1147 and remained *Cistercian until its *dissolution in 1539. In the early years of the 19th cent. a private house was built on the site and it was to this that a group of exiled French monks from the abbey of La Pierre qui Vire came in 1882. Buckfast was again raised to the rank of abbey in 1902, with Dom Boniface Netter as abbot. After his death in a shipwreck in 1906 he was succeeded by Dom Anscar Vonier (d. 1938), who decided to rebuild the monastic buildings. The Abbey Church, built by the community in gothic style, was opened in 1922 and consecrated in 1932. The monastery was affiliated to the English *Benedictine Congregation in 1960; a preparatory school was started by the community in 1967.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, v (ed. 1825), pp. 385–7. J. Stéphan, O.S.B., Buckfast Abbey. A Historical Guide (Buckfast, 1922). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 525. J. M. Canivez, O.Cist., in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 1034–6, s.v.

BUCKLAND, WILLIAM (1784–1856), Dean of *Westminster from 1845, and geologist. He was elected to a fellowship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1808, and in 1819 became the first University reader in geology. He saw in the vestiges of the ice age striking proof of the Biblical story of the Flood, defending his views in Reliquiae Diluvianae, or Observations on the Organic Remains attesting the Action of a Universal Deluge (1823). In 1836 he issued an ambitious contribution to the *Bridgewater Treatises on Geology and Mineralogy considered with Reference to Natural Theology.

Mrs. Gordon [E. O. Buckland, daughter], The Life and Correspondence of William Buckland (1894).

BUDDE, KARL (1850–1935), OT scholar. He was professor of OT from 1889 to 1900 at Strassburg and from 1900 to 1921 at Marburg. He did much to further OT criticism on the lines laid down by J. *Wellhausen. Besides many commentaries, his writings include a concise and widely read Religion of Israel (1899; Ger. ed., 1900).

Karl Budde's Schrifttum bis zu seinem 80. Geburtstage (Beiheft liv of the ZATW, 1930).

BUGENHAGEN, JOHANN (1485–1558), 'Pomeranus', *Lutheran theologian. In early life he was a *Premonstratensian canon of Treptow (in Pomerania), where he was appointed rector of the city school in 1504. After his marriage in 1522, M. *Luther secured his appointment as pastor in *Wittenberg in 1523, and here he remained till his death, acting as Luther's confessor. He took a leading part in the organization of the Lutheran Church in N. Germany and *Denmark, and the 'Brunswick Church Order' of 1528 was mainly his work. In 1537 Bugenhagen made his way to Denmark, where his presence had been sought by King Christian III, to rearrange ecclesiastical affairs on a Protestant basis, and on 12 Aug. he crowned both King and Queen. He then proceeded to consecrate seven men to be superintendents or 'bishops', and in this way the Danish Church lost the episcopal *Apostolic Succession. He also reorganized the University of Copenhagen, arranging for lectures on St. *Augustine's 'De Spiritu et Littera', Luther's 'Commentary on Galatians', and the 'Loci Communes' of P. *Melanchthon. He also assisted Luther in his translation of the Bible.

Collections of sermons ed. G. Buchwald (Halle, 1885; Leipzig, 1909); Correspondence ed. O. Vogt (Stettin, 1888). Life by H. Hering (Halle, 1888). G. Geisenhof, Bugenhagiana (Halle, 1908). W. Leege, Bugenhagen als Liturgiker (Diss., Schneidemühl, 1925). W. Rautenberg (ed.), Johann Bugenhagen. Beiträge zu seinem 400. Todestag [1958]. J. H. Bergsma, Die Reform der Messliturgie durch Johannes Bugenhagen (1485–1558) (Hildesheim, [1966]). G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 525–32; O. Thulin in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), col. 1504.

BUGIA (also scotula, palmatorium). A portable candlestick containing a lighted candle which is sometimes held beside a RC bishop (and other prelates by special privilege) while he reads or sings certain prayers. In 1968 its use was restricted to such times as circumstances made it of practical necessity.

BULGAKOV, SERGIUS (1871–1944), Russian theologian. The son of a Russian priest, he was intended for the priesthood but under the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel became a philosophical and religious sceptic and active in Marxist political movements. Disillusioned after the 1905 Revolution, he slowly retraced his steps to the Church. In the Moscow Sobor of 1917, which restored the patriarchate, Bulgakov took a prominent part as a layman. He became a priest shortly afterwards. Expelled from Russia, he was Dean of the Orthodox Theological Academy at *Paris from 1925 till his death. He was a man of remarkable personality and intellectual power, well known in W. Europe and America through his participation in the *Ecumenical Movement, of which he was a warm but critical supporter. Theologically he is best known for his contributions to Sophiology, a body of thought claiming descent through V. *Soloviev and P. Florensky from the E. Fathers, which seeks to solve the problems of the relation between God and the world by the concept of the Divine Wisdom or sophia. His teaching was condemned, largely it would seem on political grounds, by the Moscow patriarchate in 1935 but without much practical result. His chief works translated into English are The Orthodox Church (1935) and The Wisdom of God (1937). Two of his major works are available in Fr. tr.: Du Verbe incarné (1943) and Le Paraclet (1947).

J. Pain and N. Zernov (edd.), A Bulgakov Anthology (1976), with bibl. N. Zernov, The Russian Religious Renaissance of the Twentieth Century (1963), pp. 138–50. Study by S. Świerkosz, S.J. (Rome, 1980).

BULGARIA, Christianity in. The official introduction of Christianity into Bulgaria occurred in 864–5, with the baptism of the Prince, Boris. Both Byzantine and German missionaries were at work in the country, and Boris wavered for a time between Constantinople and Rome, finally deciding c. 870 in favour of the former. Under Tsar Simeon (893–927) the Bulgarian kingdom attained great cultural brilliance, with a rich Christian literature in Slavonic; and during his reign the Bulgarian Church became *autocephalous, its head assuming the title '*Patriarch', with his seat first at Preslav and then, from 971, at Ochrid. On the defeat of Bulgaria by the Byzantines in 1018, the Bulgarian Patriarchate was suppressed, but it was restored during the years 1235–1393, its seat being now at Trnovo. During the Turkish period the Bulgarian Church became increasingly subject to Constantinople, finally losing all traces of independence in 1767; and from then until 1870 the episcopate was generally filled with Greeks (compare the similar position of *Rumania and *Serbia). The Bulgarians, on attaining political independence, created an autocephalous *Exarchate in 1870; but they acted without the consent of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, which excommunicated them in 1872 for the heresy of 'philetism' (nationalism), the schism remaining unhealed until 1945. In 1953 the Metropolitan of Sofia, as head of the Bulgarian Church, assumed the title 'Patriarch', being recognized as such by the *Oecumenical Patriarch in 1961. Besides the Orthodox, there is a very small RC community in Bulgaria, and a more substantial Mohammedan minority (c. 10% of the population).

M. Spinka, A History of Christianity in the Balkans. A Study in the Spread of Byzantine Culture among the Slavs (Chicago [1933]), esp. pp. 1–72 and 91–128. I. Sofranov, Histoire du mouvement bulgare vers l'église catholique au XIXe siècle (Bibliothèque Catholique Belge, 1960 ff.). A. *Fortescue, The Orthodox Church (1907), pp. 316–23. M. Rinvolucri, Anatomy of a Church. Greek Orthodoxy Today (1966), pp. 174–83 ('Report on the Orthodox Church in Bulgaria'). R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 1120–1194; M. Lacko in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), cols. 764–5, both with bibl.

BULL (Lat. bulla, 'seal'). A written mandate of the Pope, of a more serious and weighty kind than a 'brief'. Such documents were sealed in earlier times with the Pope's signet-ring, but from the 6th cent. either seal-boxes of lead or signets stamped in wax were used. Since 1878 only the most important bulls ('consistorial bulls') are sealed in this way, others being sealed merely with a red stamp. Consistorial bulls are signed not only by the Pope, but also by the *Cardinals, and are sent out in copy, the original being retained at Rome.

For collections of bulls see Bullarium. N. Valois, 'Étude sur le rythme des bulles pontificales' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, xlii (1881), pp. 161–98 and 257–72. R. L. Poole in D.E.C.H., pp. 72–4, s.v. 'Bulls, Papal'; G. Battelli in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1778–81, s.v. 'Bolla', with bibl.

BULL, GEORGE (1634–1710), Bp. of *St. Davids and theologian. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and was ordained deacon and priest on the same day in 1655. In 1659 he became Rector of Suddington, in 1686 Archdeacon of *Llandaff, and in 1705 Bp. of St. Davids. In theology he was a staunch High Churchman. His Harmonia Apostolica (1669–70) was an attack on the more Protestant theories of *justification, its thesis being that the passages where St. Paul seems to imply human incapacity for moral attainment must be interpreted in the light of St. James' Epistle. In his celebrated treatise, Defensio Fidei Nicaenae (1685; he added later several other works by way of postscript), he maintained, largely in criticism of the *Jesuit D. *Petavius, that the teaching of the pre-Nicene Fathers on the Trinity completely agreed with that of orthodox theologians of Nicene and post-Nicene times. The work greatly commended itself to J. B. *Bossuet and other contemporary French theologians, and, after the publication of one of its sequels, the Judicium Ecclesiae Catholicae, in 1694, Bull received the unusual tribute of the formal thanks of the French clergy at their Synod at St. Germain in 1700. In answer to their subsequent inquiries why, in view of so masterly a defence of Catholic doctrine, he did not become a RC, Bull wrote a popular and vigorous work, The Corruptions of the Church of Rome (1705). A posthumous work of Bull, popular in later times, was A Companion for the Candidates of Holy Orders, or the Great Importance of the Priestly Office (1714). His Life was written by R. *Nelson, who had been a pupil of Bull's at Suddington.

Works, ed. E. Burton (6 vols., Oxford, 1827). R. Nelson, The Life of Dr. George Bull . . . with the history of those Controversies in which he was engaged (1713). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 236–8, s.v.

BULLARIUM. A term said to have been invented by the canonist, Laertius Cherubini (d. 1626), for a collection of Papal *bulls and other similar documents. Such 'bullaria', being the collections of private individuals, have no authority beyond that attaching to their component pieces. Among the best known are those of L. Cherubini (1586); the 'Luxemburg Bullarium' (stated to have been really printed at Geneva) (1727–30); Mainardi's 'Roman Bullarium' (1733–62); and the 'Turin Bullarium' (1857–85).

T. Ortolan in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1243–55, s.v. 'Bullaire', with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2977–82, s.v. 'Lettres des papes'.

BULLINGER, JOHANN HEINRICH (1504–75), Swiss reformer. He was led by the reading of the Bible and the Fathers, the study of the writings of M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon, and the preaching of H. *Zwingli, to adopt the principles of the Reformation. In 1529 he was made pastor of Bremgarten, and on the death of Zwingli in 1531 appointed to succeed him as chief pastor of Zürich. In 1549 he joined with J. *Calvin in producing the '*Consensus Tigurinus' on the Lord's Supper; and the Second *Helvetic Confession of 1566 was also his work. A voluminous letter-writer, his correspondents included *Henry VIII and *Edward VI of England, as well as many of the leaders of the Edwardine reforms. In the time of *Elizabeth I he became something of an oracle among many of the English higher clergy who had enjoyed his hospitality during the reign of *Mary. Elizabeth herself found his prestige a valuable support against the more rigidly Calvinistic Puritans for her settlement of Church affairs; and when, in 1570, *Pius V made the final breach between the Papacy and the English Church, it was to Bullinger that she turned to prepare her reply to the Papal charges.

Full ed. of his works ed. by F. Büsser and others (Zürich, 1972 ff.). Autobiography pr. in Miscellanea Tigurina, i, Ausg. 2 (Zürich, 1772), pp. 1–103. The Decades of Henry Bullinger, tr. and ed. by T. Harding (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1849–1852), with biogr. notice, vol. iv, pp. vii–xxxi; also modern Eng. tr. of his sermon 'Of the Catholic Church', with introd. notes and bibl., in G. W. Bromiley (ed.), Zwingli and Bullinger (Library of Christian Classics, xxiv; 1953), pp. 283–325, 349–352, and 356 f. C. Pestalozzi, Heinrich Bullinger (1858). A. Bouvier, Henri Bullinger . . . le successeur de Zwingli, d'après sa correspondance avec les réformés et les humanistes de langue française (1940), with bibl. W. Hollweg, Heinrich Bullingers Hausbuch. Eine Untersuchung über die Anfänge der reformierten Predigtliteratur (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, viii; 1956). H. Fast, Heinrich Bullinger und die Täufer (Schriftenreihe des Mennonitischen Geschichtsvereins, vii; 1959). J. Staedkte, Die Theologie des jungen Bullinger (Zürich, 1962). J. Heer–E. Egli in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 536–49.

BULTEEL, HENRY BELLENDEN (1800–1866), Protestant controversialist. A native of Devonshire, Bulteel was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of Exeter in 1824. In 1826 he became curate of St. Ebbe's Church in Oxford; he resigned his fellowship on his marriage in 1829. In 1831 he preached a University Sermon on predestination and free will, in which he was outspoken about the state of the University and the C of E. Later in the year, partly on account of this sermon and partly because of his preaching in dissenting chapels, the Bp. of Oxford revoked his licence. He left the C of E and conducted services in a chapel of his own. His followers were known as Bulteelers. In 1832 he attended the chapel of E. *Irving in London and adopted some of his tenets. He also became convinced of the doctrine of universal redemption, which he propounded in his appendix to The Unknown Tongues by E. Irving and N. Armstrong (1832). In his Doctrine of the Miraculous Interference of Jesus on Behalf of Believers (1832) he claimed to have healed three women. His other works include an anonymous denunciation of the Tractarians in 1845.

G. C. Boase in D.N.B., vii (1886), p. 261.

BULTMANN, RUDOLF (1884–1976), NT scholar and theologian. After studying at *Marburg, *Tübingen, and Berlin he became Privatdozent at Marburg in 1912, Extraordinary Professor at Breslau in 1916, and professor at Giessen in 1921. From 1921 until 1951 he was professor of NT studies at Marburg.

Bultmann carried the methods of *Form-criticism initiated by H. *Gunkel and developed about the same time by others (e.g. M. *Dibelius, K. L. Schmidt, and M. Albertz) to the point of radical methodological scepticism, notably in Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition (1921, enlarged 1931 and reprinted with supplement 1957; Eng. tr., 1963). In his Jesus (1926; Eng. tr., 1934) he discovered the mission of Jesus in His summoning men to a decision (Entscheidung) to accept His proclamation and to obey His radical demand. This call for a decision meant that Jesus understood Himself as the one in whom God was finally and savingly present, that is to say, it implied a Christology. With his historical scepticism Bultmann combined the insights of dialectical theology (K. *Barth) and of the Lutheran sola fide carried over into the sphere of epistemology to make an almost complete hiatus between history and faith, leaving only the bare fact (dass) of Christ crucified as necessary for Christian faith. In his later work this developed into a programme for the *demythologizing of the NT message. He maintained not merely that particular narratives or incidents (e.g. the Virgin Birth) embodied mythological elements, but that the whole framework of the kerygma presupposed an obsolete conception of the Universe (a three-storied heaven, earth, and underworld) and the mythological concepts of Jewish Apocalyptic and Hellenistic *gnosticism, and cannot be accepted in its prima facie meaning. These mythological elements must be reinterpreted (for Bultmann, in terms of the existentialist philosophy of the younger M. *Heidegger), so that the kerygma may become meaningful address to modern man.

After the publication of his doctoral thesis, Der Stil in der paulinischen Predigt und die kynisch-stoische Diatribe in 1910, Bultmann developed his views on the NT and theology in a number of writings. Besides those already mentioned, they include Die Erforschung der synoptischen Evangelien (1925; Eng. tr., 1930), Das Evangelium des Johannes (1941; Eng. tr., 1971), Offenbarung und Heilsgeschehen (1941), Theologie des Neuen Testaments (3 fascc., 1948–53; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1952–5), Das Urchristentum im Rahmen der antiken Religionen (1949; Eng. tr., 1956), and his *Gifford Lectures for 1955 entitled History and Eschatology (1957), as well as contributions to G. Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch on γινώσις (separate Eng. tr., 1952), ἐλπίς (Eng. tr., 1963), ζωή and θάνατος (Eng. tr., 1965), and πίστις (Eng. tr., 1961).

Bultmann publd. a collection of essays, Glauben und Verstehen (4 vols., Tübingen, 1933–65; Eng. tr. of most of vol. i as Faith and Understanding, i, 1969; of vol. ii as Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955); and a collection of his sermons (Tübingen, 1956; Eng. tr., 1960). There is a further collection of his essays ed. and tr. into Eng. by S. M. Ogden (Cleveland, Ohio, 1960; London, 1961). Festschriften in honour of his 65th birthday, ed. E. Wolf (Stuttgart, 1949), with list of his works, pp. 241–51; in honour of his 70th birthday, ed. W. Eltester (Berlin, 1954); and in honour of his 80th birthday, ed. E. Dinkler (Tübingen, 1964). R. Marlé, S.J., Bultmann et l'interprétation du Nouveau Testament (Théologie xxxiii; 1956, ed. 2, 1966). G. Miegge, L'evangelo e il mito nel pensiero di Rudolf Bultmann (1956; Eng. tr., 1960); C. Braaten–R. A. Harrisville (edd. and trr.), Kerygma and History. A symposium on the theology of Rudolph Bultmann (Nashville–New York, 1962). A. Malet, Mythos et Logos. La Pensée de Rudolf Bultmann (Geneva, 1962; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1969); C. W. Kegley (ed.), The Theology of Rudolf Bultmann (1966); W. Schmithals, Die Theologie Rudolf Bultmanns (Tübingen, 1966, ed. 2, 1967; Eng. tr., 1968). See also Demythologization.

BUNSEN, CHRISTIAN CARL JOSIAS VON, also known as 'Chevalier Bunsen' (1791–1860), German diplomatist and amateur theologian. From 1823 to 1839 he was minister at the Prussian legation at Rome, where he proved himself a masterly diplomat and settled delicate matters connected with the relations between Germany and the Holy See. After two years as minister at Berne, he held the same office in London from 1841 to 1854. Here he was regarded as the most distinguished representative of European Protestantism in England and was the chief instrument in the scheme for a joint Lutheran and Anglican Bishopric in *Jerusalem. His voluminous and verbose theological writings, for the most part of little enduring value, include a treatise on the Epp. of St. *Ignatius (1847); Hippolytus and his Age (4 vols., 1852); Christianity and Mankind (7 vols., 1855, an English version of some earlier writings, then first published as one work); Gott in der Geschichte (3 vols., 1857–1858); and Vollständiges Bibelwerk für die Gemeinde (9 vols., 1858–70).

Memoir by Frances, Baroness Bunsen, widow (2 vols., London, 1868). L. von *Ranke, Aus dem Briefwechsel Friedrich Wilhelms IV. mit Bunsen (1873). B. Baehring, Bunsen's Bibelwerk nach seiner Bedeutung für die Gegenwart beleuchtet (1861); id., Christian Karl Josias Freiherr von Bunsen (1892). R. A. D. Owen, Christian Bunsen and Liberal English Theology (University of Wisconsin thesis, 1924). W. Höcker, Der Gesandte Bunsen als Vermittler zwischen Deutschland und England (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, i; 1951).

BUNTING, JABEZ (1779–1858), Wesleyan *Methodist minister. A native of Manchester, he was received on trial into the Methodist ministry in 1799 and admitted into full connexion in 1803 as minister at Oldham Street Chapel, Manchester. He worked in several large towns until in 1833 he was permanently attached to the Methodist headquarters in London. In 1835 he became president of the first Wesleyan Theological College, established at Hoxton. His main work was to transform the Methodist society into a Church, possessed of a sound and consolidated organization, independent of the C of E. He was anxious, however, to work in harmony with the Established Church. He also took a keen interest in foreign missions and was for 18 years secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Despite his love of political and religious freedom, he distrusted the more radical forms of democracy that commended themselves to many Nonconformists of the 19th cent.

Life by his son, Thomas Percival Bunting (2 vols., London, 1859–87). Correspondence, 1820–29, ed. W. R. Ward (Camden Society, 4th Series, xi; 1972); Correspondence, 1830–58, ed. id. (Oxford, 1976).

BUNYAN, JOHN (1628–88), author of *The Pilgrim's Progress. Of the external details of his life comparatively little is known. Born at Elstow in Bedfordshire, he was the son of poor parents (his father was a brazier, a trade he himself followed—hence the loose description of him as a 'tinker'), and probably acquired his knowledge and mastery of the English language from reading the Bible. He took part in the Civil War on the Parliamentary side (1644–6). About 1649 he married a woman of piety who introduced him to A. Dent's Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven and Bp. L. *Bayly's Practice of Piety; and these, together with the Bible, the BCP, and J. *Foxe's Book of Martyrs, seem to have been his sole reading. In 1653 he was received into an *Independent congregation at Bedford, and after being formally recognized as a preacher in 1657, he soon became well known in that capacity. He suffered much from the repressive measures of the Royalists after the Restoration of 1660, and spent most of the years 1660–72 in Bedford gaol. During and after his imprisonment he wrote extensively, including some verse compositions. Of his prose works, the chief and most famous are his autobiography, Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners (1666); The Pilgrim's Progress (q.v.; 1678 and 1684); and The Holy War (1682). For the rest of his life after his release in 1672, he worked among the Independents at Bedford, and took part in evangelistic work in other parts of the country. One of his last writings was a treatise, Antichrist and her Ruin (1692, posthumous), against the Church of Rome, whose influence in England under *James II he much feared. If history and biography furnish little aid in understanding the personality of Bunyan, his chief writings demonstrate that to him the world was exclusively the scene of a spiritual warfare and that nothing mattered save the salvation of the soul. In the ASB, feast day, 31 Aug.

First ed. of collected Works, vol. i (all printed), London, 1692. Later edd. by G. Offor (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1852–3) and H. Stebbing (4 vols., London, 1859–60). Crit. edd. of Miscellaneous Works under the general editorship of R. Sharrock (Oxford, 1976 ff.), of Grace Abounding by id. (ib., 1962) and The Holy War by id.–J. F. Forrest (ib., 1980). Lives by R. *Southey (London, 1830), J. A. Froude ('English Men of Letters', 1880), J. Brown (London, 1885; new ed. F. M. Harrison, 1928), W. H. *Hutton (ib., [1928]), H. Talon (Paris, 1948; Eng. tr., 1951), and R. Sharrock (H.U.L., 1954). Study of his theology by R. L. Greaves (Sutton Courtenay, 1969). F. M. Harrison, A Bibliography of the Works of John Bunyan (1932). E. Venables in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 275–85.

BUONARROTI. See Michelangelo.

BURCHARD (c. 965 – 1025), Bp. of Worms from 1000. He was one of the most influential bishops of his time, and was successful in asserting episcopal authority in the secular affairs of his diocese, in building new churches, in forming new parishes, and in disciplining his clergy. Between c. 1008 and 1012 he compiled his Decretum, a collection of *canon law, which exercised great influence until it was superseded by the collections of the Hildebrandine Reform.

Decretals [ed. B. Questenburgh] (Cologne, 1548); also pr Paris, 1549, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxl, 537–1058. A Life, approx. contemporary, ed. G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), pp. 829–46; repr. J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 505–36. Crit. ed. H. Boos, Monumenta Wormatiensia. Annalen und Chroniken (Quellen zur Geschichte der Stadt Worms, iii; 1893), pp. 97–126, discussion p. xxvi f. Two later lives ed. O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (1; 1887), pp. 44–62, of which one has been re-edited by F. J. Bendel (Paderborn, 1912). Studies by H. Grosch (Jena, 1890) and A. M. Koeniger (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, II. Reihe, Nr. 6; Munich, 1905), P. Fournier in Mélanges Paul Fabre (1902), pp. 189–214, and in R.H.E., xii (1911), pp. 451–73 and 670–701, with bibl. notes. Id.–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en Occident depuis les Fausses Décrétales jusqu'au Décret de Gratien, i (1931), pp. 364–421. O. Meyer, 'Überlieferung und Verbreitung des Dekrets des Bischofs Burchard von Worms' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lv, Kanonistische Abteilung, xxiv (1935), pp. 141–83. J. Pétrau-Gay in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 1141–57. C. Munier in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 887 f., 'Burchard, Decretum of'.

BURCKARD (or BURCHARD), JOHN (d. 1506), Papal Master of Ceremonies. A native of the region of Strassburg, he was appointed Canon of St. Thomas's, Strassburg, in 1477. He went to Rome c. 1481 and practised there as an advocate until he was appointed Master of Ceremonies in 1483. He collected a large number of benefices and in 1503 he was created Bp. of Orte and Cività Castellana; he became a Cardinal in the same year.

Burckard assisted his predecessor, Agostino Patrizzi, with an extensive revision of the Pontificale romanum (1485) and with the production of a new Ceremoniale romanum (completed 1488; publd. 1516). His principal work, however, was a collection of rubrics giving detailed instructions for the celebration of Mass. The Ordo servandus per sacerdotem in celebratione Missae was originally published at Rome in 1502 and later inserted in printed texts of the Missal. It was the first attempt to lay down the details of ceremonial and was largely followed in the Ritus Celebrandi of *Pius V. Burckard's diary, originally begun in 1483 as a series of notes on papal ceremonial, increased in scope and with its singular objectivity provides a primary source for the history of the papacy in the late 15th and early 16th cents.

His Diarium sive Rerum Urbanarum Commentarii (1483–1506) ed. L. Thuasne (3 vols., Paris, 1883–5), with 'notice biographique' in vol. iii, pp. i–lxviii. Eng. tr. of vol. i, 1910. Modern repr. of Ordo Missae in J. W. Legg, Tracts on the Mass (H.B.S., xxvii; 1904), pp. 121–78, with introd. pp. xxv–xxviii. F. Wasner, 'Eine unbekannte Handschrift des Diarium Burckardi' in Hist. J., lxxxiii (1964), pp. 300–31; id., 'Ein unbekannter liturgischer "Libellus" des päpstlichen Zeremonienmeisters Johannes Burckard' in E.L., lxxx (1966), pp. 294–308. E. Vansteenberghe in D.H.G.E., x (1938), cols. 1249–51, s.v.

BURDETT-COUTTS, ANGELA GEORGINA (1814–1906), heiress and philanthropist. She was a granddaughter of Thomas Coutts, the banker, from whom she inherited in 1837 nearly £2,000,000. In 1871 she was raised to the peerage. She included among her many public benefactions some munificent gifts to the C of E, building and endowing the churches of St. Stephen, Rochester Row, *Westminster (1847), St. John, Limehouse (1853), St. James, Hatcham (1854), St. John, Deptford (1855), and St. Stephen, *Carlisle (1865). She was led by her interest in colonial expansion and in religion to endow as dependent sees of the Church at home the Anglican bishoprics of Cape Town, South Africa (1847), and Adelaide, Australia (1847), and of British Columbia (1857).

Baroness Burdett-Coutts. A Sketch of her Public Life and Work prepared for the Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition by Command of H.R.H. Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck (1893). E. Johnson (ed.), Letters from Charles Dickens to Angela Burdett-Coutts, 1841–1865 (1953). Clara Burdett Patterson (great-niece), Angela Burdett-Coutts and the Victorians (1953). J. P. Anderson in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, pp. 259–66.

BURGHER. A member of the group in the Scottish Secession Church which defended in 1747 the lawfulness of the religious clause in the civil Burgess Oath and thus separated from the '*Antiburghers'.

BURGON, JOHN WILLIAM (1813–88), Dean of *Chichester. Educated at Worcester College, *Oxford, he became a Fellow of Oriel in 1846, Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, in 1863, and Dean of Chichester in 1876. He was an old-fashioned High Churchman who was famous for his support of a long series of lost causes. He fiercely denounced the disestablishment of the Irish Church in 1869, the appointment of A. P. *Stanley as a Select Preacher in 1872, and the new BCP lectionary of 1879. He was also a strenuous upholder of the *Textus Receptus of the NT, publishing in 1871 The Last Twelve Verses of the Gospel according to St. Mark Vindicated, and in 1883 The Revision [i.e. the RV] Revised; two further works on the subject were published posthumously. His widely read Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888) contained vivid sketches of 19th cent. High Churchmen, often enlivened by Burgon's provocative judgements on his contemporaries.

Life by E. M. *Goulburn (2 vols., London, 1892). A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), pp. 335–8.

BURIAL ACTS. A series of enactments passed between 1852 and 1900, giving to local authorities powers to deal with the increasing overcrowding of churchyards, and to supervise all burial grounds to secure decency of burial and adequate sanitary precautions. Authority was given for the closing of burial grounds, or their conversion to recreation grounds (in towns), and for the opening of new ones. Various provisions were also made as to the manner of burial, the fees payable, the rights and obligations of the curate of the parish, and disinterment. By the Local Government Act of 1894 permission was given to transfer the powers and duties of the Burial Boards, formerly elected by the vestry, in towns to district councils, and in rural districts to the parish councils. By the Burial Laws Amendment Act of 1880, parishioners who by rubric and canon are forbidden burial acc. to the Prayer Book rite have nevertheless the right to burial in the parish churchyard or cemetery, with or without any form of Christian service.

On the law concerning rights to and duty of burial, see R. Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, i (ed. 2, 1895), pp. 650–701; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 564–89.

BURIAL SERVICES. Burial is the traditional Christian method of disposing of the dead, and in the 4th cent., which is the earliest period of which we have information, the burials were occasions of joy, and those attending them wore white. But from about the 8th cent., when the prevalence of merely nominal Christianity made such joy not always fitting, the service became 'black', and the prayers petitions for speedy purification and for deliverance from hell. By the later Middle Ages the form had become fixed. The burial itself, at which the rite consisted of the committal prayers, was preceded overnight by *Vespers (or *Placebo), after which *Mattins and *Lauds (Dirige or *Dirge) were said in the night, and in the morning *Requiem Mass, with prayers for the absolution of the dead. Requiems were also said on the 3rd, 9th, and 30th day after death, and on anniversaries. In the RC Church the Exsequiarum Ordo of 1969 provides for an optional service in the house of the deceased and an also optional procession to the church. The Requiem Mass now concludes with a final commendation in place of the absolution of the dead. The 1969 Ordo also provides an alternative form of service for use in a cemetery chapel and makes provision, where the *Ordinary permits, for the funeral rites, including the Mass, to take place in a house. In the BCP the Dirge in a modified form (sentences, psalm, and lesson) is ordered, followed at the graveside by the committal prayers, and is to be used for all except those under (greater) excommunication, the unbaptized, and deliberate suicides. Modern Anglican revisions make alterations of phrasing, allow other alternative psalms and different lessons. In some revisions special forms are provided for the burial of a child. (In the Irish BCP a form is given for an unbaptized child of Christian parents, as well as for an adult who had desired but not received baptism. The ASB makes no mention of any categories for whom its Funeral Service is not to be used; it has special prayers for use at the burial of a still-born or newly-born child, who would presumably be unbaptized.) Modern Anglican rites also recognize *cremation, and the ASB has a Form which may be used at the Interment of Ashes. Except in modern Protestantism, prayer for the dead, inherited from Judaism, has been a universal Christian custom, and from very early times the Eucharistic Liturgy was offered for the dead as well as the living. Provision for an (optional) Eucharist is made in modern Anglican Burial Services. See also Requiem Mass.

W. Gresswell, A Commentary on the Order for the Burial of the Dead (2 vols., 1836). G. Rowell, The Liturgy of Christian Burial (Alcuin Club Collections, lix; 1977). D. Sicard, La liturgie de la mort dans l'église latine des origines à la réforme carolingienne (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, lxiii; 1978).

BURIDAN'S ASS. The famous 'case', traditionally (but wrongly, it appears) ascribed to the Paris philosopher John Buridanus (c. 1300–1358), acc. to which an ass, set between two heaps of hay, absolutely equal in respect of quality and quantity, through having no motives to choose one rather than the other, died of starvation. The problem which it poses on the psychology of moral action goes back (with other examples) to *Aristotle.

Buridan's name is also connected, and here too erroneously, with the logical problem known as the inventio medii or 'Pons Asinorum', i.e., the bridge by which stupid scholars can find their way from the minor or major to the middle term of a syllogism. In fact the 'Pons Asinorum' is first found in the *Scotist, Peter Tartaretus (rector of Paris university, 1490).

The problem will be found stated in Aristotle, De Caelo, II, 13, p. 295 b 32. Überweg, ii, p. 597.

BURKHARDT, GEORG. See Spalatin, Georg.

BURKITT, FRANCIS CRAWFORD (1864–1935), NT, Semitic, and Patristic scholar. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and from 1905 till his death he was Norrisian (from 1934 'Norris-Hulse') professor of divinity at Cambridge. He was esp. attracted to some of the more out-of-the-way fields in the history of early Christianity, and did important original work on the *Syriac versions of the NT, putting on a wholly new footing the study of the relation of the *Peshitta to the *Old Syriac Gospels. He also made valuable discoveries in the allied field of Syriac liturgies. Among his more important writings, nearly all of which reflect his brilliant and unconventional mind, are The Old Latin and the Itala (1896), *St. Ephraim's Quotations from the Gospel (1901), the art. 'Text and Versions' in the Encyclopaedia Biblica (vol. 4, 1903), Evangelion da-Mepharreshe (2 vols., 1904), The Gospel History and its Transmission (1906), Christian Beginnings (1924), The Religion of the Manichees (1925), Palestine in General History (Schweich Lectures, 1929) and Church and Gnosis (1932).

E. C. Ratcliff, 'Francis Crawford Burkitt' in J.T.S., xxxvi (1935), pp. 225–53, with note by G. G. Coulton, ib., p. 253 f., and list of his writings pp. 337–46. J. F. Bethune-Baker in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), p. 124 f., s.v.

BURMA, Christianity in. The kingdoms of Ava and Pegu, subsequently united under British rule as Burma, received their first missionaries from the RC Church, a *Barnabite mission being sent in 1722. This mission, which was transferred to various orders, was abandoned in 1852 but has since been restarted. In 1807 English *Baptists opened a mission, but the first permanent Baptist mission arrived in 1813 from America under Adoniram *Judson. The *SPG has done considerable work (Anglican) among English-speaking Burmese, particularly in education. Wesleyan and Methodist Episcopal missions were also established between 1879 and 1889. Christianity has been most readily welcomed by the Karens (since 1828), a hill tribe with a tradition that they had once possessed and then lost the knowledge of the true God, and that foreigners would help them to find it. In 1930 the Anglican Church of India, Burma and Ceylon became legally independent of the C of E, and in 1970 Burma became a separate Province of the Anglican Communion.

W. C. B. Purser, Christian Missions in Burma (S.P.G., 1911). P. A. Bigandet, An Outline of the History of the Burmese Catholic Mission, 1720–1887 (Rangoon, 1887). A. McLeish, Christian Progress in Burma (1929). H. P. Thompson, Into All Lands. The History of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1701–1950 (1950), pp. 384–93, with further bibl. p. 732. Latourette, vi (1944), pp. 225–35, and vii (1945), pp. 319–323, both with bibl. reff.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), p. 419 f., v (1963), pp. 338–42. G. B. Tragella in E.C., ii (1949), cols. 1669–71, s.v. 'Birmania', with further bibl.

BURNET, GILBERT (1643–1715), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was a native of Edinburgh, educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and in 1661 became a *probationer in the ministry of the Church of Scotland. He travelled widely, was the minister of Saltoun 1664–9, and professor of divinity at Glasgow University from 1669 to 1674, when he settled in England. He enjoyed influence at the English and Scottish royal courts, and from 1675 to 1684 was Chaplain to the *Rolls. In 1685 he went abroad after the collapse of the *Exclusion agitation had led to the execution and exile of some of his friends. There he was much in the confidence of William of Orange and Mary, sailed with William in 1688, and was made Bp. of *Salisbury in 1689. A staunch Whig in politics and a *latitudinarian in theology, he endeavoured to carry through plans which would allow of the incorporation of the Nonconformists into the C of E. His episcopate was a model of zeal and activity, pastoral and administrative. He was also a voluminous author and a determined political controversialist, his most noteworthy writings being his History of the Reformation in England (3 vols., 1679–1714), his Exposition of the XXXIX Articles (1699), and his History of My Own Time (2 vols., 1723–34).

Burnet's History of My Own Time, ed. M. J. *Routh (6 vols., Oxford, 1823) and O. Airy (2 vols., reign of *Charles II only; Oxford, 1897–1900; suppl. from unpubld. MSS. by H. C. Foxcroft, ib., 1902). The best study is that of T. E. S. Clarke–H. C. Foxcroft–C. H. Firth (Cambridge, 1907). O. Airy in D.N.B., vii (1886), pp. 394–405.

BURNEY, CHARLES FOX (1868–1925), OT and Semitic scholar. In 1899 he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and in 1914 Oriel professor of the interpretation of Holy Scripture. He was one of the most original OT scholars of his generation. Among his more important writings are his Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Book of Kings (1903), his Schweich Lectures for 1917 on Israel's Settlement in Canaan (1918), and his commentary on Judges (1918). In his Aramaic Origin of the Fourth Gospel (1922) and his Poetry of Our Lord (1925), he emphasized the importance of the *Aramaic background of the Gospels for their proper understanding.

BURNING BUSH, The. The scene of *Moses' call, where the Angel of Jehovah appeared to him 'in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush' (Ex. 3. 2–4 [*J]). The burning bush has frequently been used by Christian writers as a type of the Blessed Virgin.

BURROUGH, EDWARD (1634–63), *Quaker. Having heard G. *Fox preach in Westmorland in 1652, he determined to become a *Friend and began to preach himself, travelling up and down the country. In 1656 or 1657 he defended Quaker doctrines against an attack by J. *Bunyan. In 1660 he took up with *Charles II the cause of the Quakers in New England, who were then being persecuted by the Puritans, but without much success. In 1662 he was arrested in London for holding a meeting illegal under the Quaker Act and committed to Newgate Prison, where he died. He issued a large number of writings, most of them very brief.

His writings (mainly hortatory treatises and polemical letters) were publd. as The Memorable Works of a Son of Thunder and Consolation namely, That True Prophet, and Faithful Servant of God, and Sufferer for the Testimony of Jesus (1672). [F. Howgil, G. Whitehead and others,] A Testimony concerning the Life, Death, Trials, Travels and Labours of Edward Burroughs, That Worthy Prophet of the Lord ('1662' [1663]). 'A Memoir of the Life and Religious Labours of that Eminent Servant of Christ and Minister of the Gospel, Edward Burrough' in W. and T. Evans (edd.), The Friends' Library, xiv (Philadelphia, 1850), pp. 380–491. E. Brockbank, Edward Burrough. A Wrestler for Truth, 1634–1662 (1949).

BURSE. A cover consisting of two squares of stiffened material in which the *corporal is kept. Its liturgical use in the Eucharist has been general only since the 17th cent. In earlier times the corporal was kept either in the *Missal or in some form of box or bag.

Braun, L.P., pp. 215–17.

BURTON, EDWARD (1794–1836), Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (from 1829). He was a scholar of wide and exact learning, and his writings include Testimonies of the Ante-Nicene Fathers to the Divinity of Christ (1826), an edition of the works of Bp. G. *Bull (1827), Lectures on Ecclesiastical History (2 vols., 1831, 1833), an edition of Bp. J. *Pearson On the Creed (1833), and an edition of *Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History (1838, posthumous).

The Theological Works of Edward Burton, incl. Memoir of the author (5 vols., 1837).

BUSCH, JAN (1399 – c. 1480). One of the principal members of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He was a native of Zwolle, and from 1420 to 1424 was professor at *Windesheim. In 1424 he was ordained priest at Bödingen, near Cologne, and thereafter filled a variety of offices in the Netherlands and Germany. His ideals were those of the Brotherhood at their best. He took a prominent part in reforming the monasteries in the spirit of the Council of *Basle and for a time worked in close co-operation with *Nicolas of Cusa, who appointed him 'Visitor Apostolic' of the *Augustinian houses of Saxony and Thuringia. He also wrote the history of the Brethren's house at Windesheim.

His Chronicon was first publd. by the *Bollandist, H. Rosweyde, S.J., at Antwerp, 1621, while a treatise 'De Reformatione Monasteriorum quorundam Saxoniae' first appeared in G. W. *Leibniz's Scriptores Rerum Brunsvicensium, ii (1710), pp. 476–506 and 806–972. New ed. of both by K. Grube (Halle, 1886). Lives by K. Grube (Freiburg i.Br., 1881) and S. van der Woude (Diss. Edam, 1947). L. Schulze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 577–81.

BUSHNELL, HORACE (1802–76), American *Congregationalist divine. Born at Bantam, nr. Litchfield, Conn., U.S.A., he graduated at Yale University in 1827 and was assistant editor of the New York Journal of Commerce from 1828 to 1829. In 1829 he became a tutor at Yale, at first studying law until, throwing off his religious doubts during a college revival, he entered the theological department of Yale College in 1831. From 1833 to 1859 he was pastor to the North Congregational Church of Hartford, Conn. Owing to ill-health he held no official position in his later years, though he continued active as a writer. In 1856 he assisted in the organization of the College of California at Oakland.

Bushnell was the pioneer of liberal theology in New England. Characteristic was his restatement of the doctrine of the Trinity. On the ground that language was essentially symbolic and relative to the subject, he held that while this doctrine might be true for man in that God was experienced under three different aspects, it did not give him real information as to the inner nature of the Godhead or require the existence of eternal distinctions in His Being. He also stressed the immanence of God in creation, explaining miracles as part of the Divine law of nature, and he interpreted the Atonement in terms of moral influence to the rejection of theories of satisfaction. Among his chief works were Christian Nurture (1847), God in Christ (1849), Christ in Theology (1851), Nature and the Supernatural (1858), Work and Play (1864), The Vicarious Sacrifice (1866), Sermons on Living Subjects (1872), and Forgiveness and Law (1874).

Selection of his writings, ed. H. S. Smith (Library of Protestant Thought; New York, 1965), with introd. and bibl. M. B. Cheney (his daughter), Life and Letters of H. Bushnell (New York, 1880); T. T. Munger, H. Bushnell, Preacher and Theologian (Boston, 1899; with bibl.). Modern study by Barbara M. Cross (Chicago, 1958).

BUTLER, ALBAN (1710–73), author of The Lives of the Saints. Educated at Douai, he was ordained priest in the RC Church in 1735. After long studies and many travels on the Continent, in search of hagiographical material, he published in 1756–9 The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs and other principal Saints, compiled from original Monuments and other authentic records, illustrated with the remarks of judicious modern critics and historians. The Lives (over 1,600) are arranged acc. to the Church calendar, and, though their chief purpose was edification, and history and legend are not discriminated, they remain a monument of wide research. From 1746 to 1766 Butler was a mission priest in England in the Midland District. From 1766 until his death he was President of the English College at St. Omer, where he was a frequent counsellor of the French clergy.

Drastically revised ed. of The Lives of the Saints, by H. Thurston, S.J., Norah Leeson, and D. Attwater (12 vols., 1926–38). A Dictionary of Saints to serve also as index to the rev. ed. has been compiled by D. Attwater (London, 1938), and suppl. vol. by id. (ib., 1949). New Revision of Lives (abbreviated, but further improved) by D. Attwater, incl. substance of Dictionary and of suppl. vol. (4 vols., 1956). [Charles Butler, nephew,] An Account of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Alban Butler (1799). E. H. Burton, The Life and Times of Bishop Challoner, i (1909), pp. 166 f., 221–4, 331 f., ii (1909), p. 161, incl. extracts from his letters and a portrait. T. Cooper in D.N.B., vii (1886), p. 43 f.

BUTLER, JOSEPH (1692–1752), Bp. of *Durham. A native of Wantage, Oxon, and the son of *Presbyterian parents, he studied at the dissenting academy at Tewkesbury, where T. *Secker was his fellow-student. At an early age he entered into a correspondence with S. *Clarke on his 'Boyle Lectures' which revealed his remarkable powers of reasoning. Abandoning Presbyterianism he entered Oriel College, Oxford, in 1714, was ordained deacon and, two months later, priest, at *Salisbury in 1718, and from 1718 to 1726 was preacher at the Rolls Chapel. Here he delivered the sermons which won him his reputation. Fifteen were published in 1726, with an important preface, to which six others were added in later editions. In 1722 he had been presented to the rectory of Haughton-le-Skerne, nr. Darlington, and this he exchanged in 1726 for the wealthy benefice of Stanhope, Co. Durham. Here he lived in seclusion, engaged in pastoral duties and preparing his famous Analogy of Religion (1736; q.v.). In 1736, through Secker's influence, he was appointed Clerk of the Closet and from now on was constantly in attendance on Queen Caroline till her death (20 Nov. 1737). Commended to George II by the Queen on her death-bed, Butler was rewarded in 1738 with the poorly endowed see of Bristol, where he came into hostility with J. *Wesley and G. *Whitefield. To supplement his income, he was preferred in 1740 to the deanery of *St. Paul's in commendam, and in 1750 he was translated to the bishopric of Durham. He is said (apocryphally) to have declined the see of *Canterbury in 1747 as he believed it 'too late to try to support a falling Church'. In American BCP (1979), feast day, 16 June.

Butler ranks among the greatest exponents of natural theology and ethics in England since the Reformation. His writings, which were esp. directed against attacks on the Christian conception of the world and the fundamental grounds of morality, stand out by their firm grasp of principle, sustained reasoning, caution, moral force, and, at times, irony. Their elevated tone is in marked contrast with that of the writings which they oppose; and, though his works make considerable demands on the reader, their moral qualities have won for them a permanent place in English literature.

Butler's moral philosophy, developed in his Fifteen Sermons and in the 'Dissertation on Virtue', appended to the Analogy, is directed esp. against the theories of T. *Hobbes, which had risen to popularity in the 18th cent. He maintained that true morality consisted in living in accordance with one's nature and that the primary constituent principles in human nature were self-love, benevolence, and conscience. Actions whose motives lie in the natural passions and instincts do not conform with the interests either of self-love or of benevolence. In criticism of the hedonists of his age, Butler argued that the desire for an object was evoked by the desired object itself, and not by any anticipation of the resulting satisfaction, and that true benevolence or love of one's neighbour was strictly disinterested. To conscience attached a supreme authority which compelled in those who admitted it an obedience which could not consider consequences. The principles of morality were intuitively evident and errors of moral judgement arose only from superstition and self-deception. Belief in Providence, however, convinced Butler that in the end the dictates of conscience and the demands of self-love will be found to have pointed to the same conclusion. (For the argument of the Analogy of Religion see s.v.)

The writings of Butler went through a number of editions in the 18th cent., but for a long time did not attract the serious attention which they merited. Throughout the 19th cent. they were widely studied by Anglican candidates for Ordination. J. H. *Newman acknowledged his great debt to the teaching of the Analogy on probability and the sacramentalism of nature. More recent students of Butler include H. *Rashdall, A. E. *Taylor and C. D. Broad (1887–1971).

The best edition of his Works is that by W. E. *Gladstone (2 vols., 1896), with a suppl. vol. of Subsidiary Studies (also 1896). T. Bartlett, Memoirs of Joseph Butler (1839); R. W. *Church, Pascal and other Sermons (1895), pp. 25–51; W. A. Spooner, Bishop Butler (1901); C. D. Broad, Five Types of Ethical Theory (1930), pp. 53–83; A. E. Taylor, 'Some Features of Butler's Ethics' in Philosophical Studies (1934), pp. 291–329; E. C. Mossner, Bishop Butler and the Age of Reason (New York, 1936); A. Duncan-Jones, Butler's Moral Philosophy (1952). P. A. Carlsson, Butler's Ethics (1964). A. Jeffner, Butler and Hume on Religion (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Studia Doctrinae Christianae Upsaliensia, vii; 1966). L. Stephen in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 67–72.

BUTLER, JOSEPHINE ELIZABETH (1828–1906), social reformer. She was the daughter of John Grey of Dilston, and in 1852 married George Butler (1819–90), sometime Canon of *Winchester. Her main interest was in the reclamation of prostitutes and the suppression of the 'white slave' trade. To this end she formed in 1869 the 'Ladies' National Association for the Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts', and in 1875 called a meeting at Geneva which resulted in the establishment of the International Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice. Her inspiring work can best be studied in her Personal Reminiscences of a Great Crusade (1896). Behind her activities as a reformer lay a life of almost continuous prayer in which she took as her model St. *Catherine of Siena (whose Life she published in 1878). In the ASB, feast day, 30 Dec.

G. W. and L. A. Johnson, Josephine E. Butler. An Autobiographical Memoir (1909). Other studies by L. Hay-Cooper (London, 1922), A. S. G. Butler (grandson; ibid., 1954), and E. Moberly Bell (ibid., 1962). Edith S. Hooper in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, pp. 282 f.

BUTLER, WILLIAM JOHN (1818–94), Dean of *Lincoln. Educated at Westminster and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1841, and in 1846 became vicar of Wantage. Here through a long incumbency he was a model parish priest of the High Church school and trained several curates who later became famous (A. H. *Mackonochie, V. S. S. Coles, W. C. E. Newbolt, H. P. *Liddon, &c.). In 1848 he founded in his parish St. Mary's Sisterhood, which as the Community of St. Mary the Virgin (C.S.M.V.) has grown into one of the largest and most active of the Anglican religious communities. In 1864 he was elected to the bishopric of Natal after J. W. *Colenso's deposition; but owing to Abp. C. T. *Longley's disapproval, declined the invitation. In 1880 he became a canon of *Worcester and in 1885 Dean of Lincoln. He remained warden of the C.S.M.V.

Life and Letters of William John Butler [ed. by A. J. Butler (son)] (1897); [A. L. Hoare] C.S.M.V., Butler of Wantage. His Inheritance and his Legacy [1948]. T. Seccombe in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 359 f.

BUTTERFIELD, WILLIAM (1814–1900), architect. A keen Churchman who had come under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, Butterfield was inspired by the architectural ideals of the *Cambridge Camden Society. His better-known works include: St. Augustine's College, Canterbury (1845); All Saints', Margaret Street, London (1859); St. Alban's, Holborn (1863); the new buildings at Merton College, Oxford (1864) (subsequently much altered); and *Keble College, Oxford (1870–6). He also built several Anglican cathedrals in the colonies and dominions.

Study by J. Summerson in Architectural Review, xcviii (1945), pp. 167–75. P. Waterhouse in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), pp. 360–3.

BUTZER, MARTIN. See Bucer, Martin.

BYE PLOT, The (1603). Also known as the Priests' Plot. The lesser of two plots (the 'Main' and the 'Bye' plots) against *James I of England at his accession. William Watson and William Clarke, two RC priests, conspired with George Brooke and Lord Grey of Wilton, two Protestants out of sympathy with the new régime, to kidnap the King's person and extort concessions from him, partly on behalf of the *recusants. The plot was revealed by a Jesuit and another RC priest; Watson, Clarke, and Brooke were executed, and Lord Grey died in prison.

BYRD, WILLIAM (c. 1543–1623), English composer, 'Parent of British Music'. Prob. born at *Lincoln and a pupil of T. *Tallis at the *Chapel Royal, he was appointed organist of Lincoln Cathedral in 1563. In 1570 he was sworn as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, where he became organist with Tallis. In 1575 he and Tallis were jointly granted a monopoly of printing music. He resided at Stondon Place, Essex, from c. 1593.

Though he was a practising Catholic and involved in frequent litigation for recusancy, Byrd's religion never seems to have prevented him executing his duties in the Chapel Royal. Besides his three superb Masses (prob. publd. 1602), which, although written for the Latin rite, are used in the C of E, and his two books of Gradualia (1605 and 1607), he set to music the Preces and Responses and Litany of the English liturgy and composed at least two complete Services ('Short Service' and 'Great Service'). In addition to writing various sacred songs and setting to music Latin motets, he was one of the pioneers of the verse anthem. His many anthems include 'Sing Joyfully', 'Sing Merrily' and 'Bow Thine Ear'. He also wrote a large body of string music, keyboard music and secular choral music, esp. madrigals. His publications include Cantiones Sacrae (jointly with T. Tallis, 1575), Psalms, Sonnets and Songs (1588), Songs of Sundry Natures (1589), two further books of Cantiones Sacrae (1589 and 1591) and Psalmes, Songs and Sonnets (1611).

Complete Works ed. E. H. Fellowes (20 vols., London, 1937–50). The best study is that of id. (Oxford, 1936); earlier lives by id. (Oxford, 1923) and F. Howes ('Masters of Music', London, 1928). H. K. Andrews, The Technique of Byrd's Vocal Polyphony (1966). W. H. Hadow, 'William Byrd, 1623–1923' in Proceedings of the British Academy, x (1921–3), pp. 395–413. W. B. Squire in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 123–6; E. H. Fellowes in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, i (ed. 5 by E. Blom; 1954), pp. 1055–60, with bibl. details, pp. 1060–8.

BYZANTINE TEXT OF THE NT, The. The form of the Greek NT text which has become the standard one in the Greek-speaking Church, now more generally known as the 'Lucianic Text' (q.v.). It is to be found in the great majority of the extant Greek MSS. of the NT, and was closely followed by D. *Erasmus in his 'Greek Testament' (1516) and in the *Textus Receptus. It is probably in essentials the text of *Lucian of Antioch, somewhat corrupted, and perhaps also further 'revised', in the course of transmission. See also Syrian Text.

BYZANTIUM. See Constantinople.

C

CABASILAS, NICHOLAS (b. c. 1322), Byzantine mystical writer. The nephew of Nilus Cabasilas, Abp. of Thessalonica (with whom he has often been confused), he appears to have remained a layman throughout his life. The date of his death is unknown. In the *Hesychast controversy he supported the monks of Mount *Athos, though he held the theory of the *Uncreated Light in a moderated form. In his principal work, a set of seven discourses 'Concerning the Life in Christ' (Περὶ τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ ζωῆς), he explained how, through the three mysteries of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and the *Eucharist, spiritual union with Christ was to be achieved. He also wrote an 'Interpretation of the Divine Liturgy' (Ἑρμηνεία τῆς θείας λειτουργίας).

His 'Sacrae Liturgicae Interpretatio', his Life in Christ, a Sermon 'Contra Feneratores', and his Life of St. Theodore in J. P. Migne, PG, cl, 367–772. Three sermons on the Nativity, Annunciation and Dormition of the BVM ed., with Lat. tr. and introd., by M. Jugie, A.A., in Patrologia Orientalis, xix (1926), pp. 456–510. Eng. tr. of his Interpretation of the Divine Liturgy by Joan M. Hussey and P. A. McNulty, with introd. by R. M. French (1960); Fr. tr. by S. Salaville, A.A. (S.C., iv; 1943; revised ed., with Gk. text, by R. Bornert, O.S.B., and others, ib., iv bis; 1967). Eng. tr. of his Life in Christ by C. J. deCatanzaro (New York, 1974). Myrrha Lot-Borodine, Un Maître de la spiritualité byzantine au XIVe siècle, Nicolas Cabasilas [1958]. W. Völker, Die Sakramentsmystik des Nikolaus Kabasilas (Wiesbaden, 1977). S. Salaville, A.A., 'Vues sotériologiques chez Nicolas Cabasilas' in Études Byzantines, i (1943), pp. 5–57. J. Gouillard in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 14–21, and S. Salaville, A.A., in Dict. Sp. ii (1953), cols. 1–9, both s.v., with bibl.

CABBALA (Rabbinic Heb. קַבָּלָה, qabbālāh, 'tradition'). A system of Jewish *theosophy which, by the use of an esoteric method of interpretation of the OT, including cyphers, was believed to reveal to its initiates hidden doctrines, e.g. the creation of the world by means of emanations from the Divine Being. It was a development of tendencies akin to *Gnosticism, and reached the height of its influence in the later Middle Ages and at the Renaissance. A Christian form of it also had considerable vogue in the 15th–16th cents., its Christian exponents such as J. *Reuchlin and *Paracelsus professing to deduce by its means such doctrines as the Trinity, the Atonement, and the Divinity of Christ.

The Zohar tr. into Eng. by H. Sperling–M. Simon–P. P. Levertoff (5 vols., 1931–4). G. G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (Jerusalem, 1941; ed. 2, New York, 1946); id., Zur Kabbala und ihre Symbolik (Zürich, 1960; Eng. tr., 1965); id., Ursprung und Anfänge der Kabbala (Studia Judaica, iii; 1962). C. D. Ginsburg, The Kabbalah. Its Doctrine, Development and Literature (1865); J. Abelson, Jewish Mysticism (1913). J. L. Blau, The Christian Interpretation of the Cabala in the Renaissance (New York, 1944). L. Ginzburg in J.E., iii (1902), pp. 456–79; G. G. Scholem in E.J., ix (1932), cols. 630–732, s.v. 'Kabbala'. Id., Bibliographia Kabbalistica (Berlin, 1933; additions in Kirjath Sepher, Jerusalem, 1933 ff.). H. Loewe in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 622–8, s.v. 'Kabbala'.

CABROL, FERNAND (1855–1937), liturgical scholar. In 1877 he was professed a Benedictine monk at *Solesmes, and in 1896 elected prior of the projected monastery at Farnborough in England, of which in 1903 he became Abbot. In conjunction with H. *Leclercq he edited the Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (1903–53) and the Monumenta ecclesiae liturgica (1900–13). His own writings include Le Livre de la prière antique (1900; Eng. tr. Liturgical Prayer, its History and Spirit, 1922), Les Origines liturgiques (1906), and L'Angleterre chrétienne avant les Normands (1909). His edition of the Roman Missal, with Eng. tr. and notes [1921], was widely used.

L. Gougaud, O.S.B., in R.H.E., xxxiii (1937), pp. 919–22, with reff. to other obituary notices. F. [Philip] Oppenheim, O.S.B., in E.C., iii (1950), col. 265, s.v.

CAECILIAN (d. c. 345), Bp. of Carthage from 311. His importance lies in his part in the opening stages of the *Donatist controversy. As archdeacon he had supported Mensurius, Bp. of Carthage, in his efforts to suppress the fanatical desire of many Christians for martyrdom and the uncritical veneration for *confessors, and on Mensurius's death in 311 he was elected to succeed him. The opposing rigoristic party at Carthage then consecrated a rival bishop, urging that Caecilian's own consecration was invalid on the ground that he had received his orders from one Felix of Aptunga, a '*traditor'. He is the only bishop from Latin Africa who is known to have attended the Council of *Nicaea (325).

The chief sources are *Eusebius of Caesarea, St. *Optatus of Milevis, and St. *Augustine. P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, iv (1913), passim. See also bibl. to Donatism. For the Lat. version of the Nicene Canons which goes under his name ('Interpretatio Caeciliani', also 'Vetus Interpretatio'), see Turner, E.O.M.I.A. (1899–1939), passim, and F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, i (1870), pp. 8–11; there are no sufficient reasons, however, for the common assumption that Caecilian himself was the author of the version, cf. E. *Schwartz, 'Über die Sammlung des Cod. Veronensis LX', in Z.N.T.W., xxxv (1936), p. 11 f.

CAEDMON (d. c. 680), the earliest English Christian poet. Acc. to *Bede, the source of almost all our knowledge of him, Caedmon was a labourer at the monastery at Whitby, who received in a vision the gift of composing verses in the praise of God, and as a result became a monk. He was instructed in the Scriptures, which, as Bede also tells us, he turned into verse. He was the first Anglo-Saxon writer of popular religious poetry. Prob. Caedmon's only surviving work is a hymn which he is said to have composed in a dream, and which appears in an 8th cent. hand on a blank leaf in the Moore MS. of Bede. Many other traditional poems are ascribed to him, with doubtful justice. He was venerated as a saint at *Jarrow, and his feast kept on 11 Feb.

The principal source for his life is Bede, H.E., iv. 22 [24]; notes in ed. C. Plummer (2 vols., Oxford, 1896), vol. i, pp. cxiii and cxxiv; vol. ii, pp. 248–54 and 257 f. Modern edd. of his Hymn, in two versions, in W. J. Sedgefield, Anglo-Saxon Verse Book (Publications of the University of Manchester, cliii; 1922), p. 80 f., and in A. H. Smith, Three Northumbrian Poems (1933), pp. 38–41. Eng. tr. from Junius MS. by C. W. Kennedy, The Cædmon Poems (1916), p. 1. E. van K. Dobbie, The Manuscripts of Cædmon's Hymn and Bede's Death Song (New York, 1937), pp. 1–48. C. L. Wrenn, 'The Poetry of Cædmon' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxxii ('1946' [1951]), pp. 277–95, with bibl. D. W. Fritz, 'Cædmon: a traditional Christian Poet' in Mediaeval Studies, xxxi (1969), pp. 334–7. Further bibl., incl. that of Caedmon School and notes of other works attrib. to him, in C.B.E.L., i (1940), pp. 73–5.

CAEREMONIALE EPISCOPORUM. In the RC Church the liturgical book containing the rites and ceremonies for a bishop. A much revised edition of an existing text (De Caeremoniis cardinalium et episcoporum in eorum dioecesibus, 1587) was promulgated by *Clement VIII in 1600, and this has since undergone a number of further changes. In spite of its name, it also deals with much non-episcopal ceremonial, e.g. it orders the cathedral ceremonies celebrated in the absence of the bishop. As the official ceremonial handbook in the RC Church, its regulations were, until recently, of authority in settling matters not covered by the rubrics of the *missal and other service books, but the promulgation of new liturgical texts has superseded it.

The Caeremoniale, which is in three Books (1. The duties of the Bishop at his elevation, on entering his diocese and in his cathedral; the pontifical ornaments; his duties when assisting in choir and at Low Mass. 2. His duties at Pontifical and Solemn Mass and Office. 3. The marks of honour due to the Bishop), has been constantly reprinted. The classic commentary is that of J. Catalani (2 vols., Rome, 1744). Modern commentary, with further bibl., by L. Gromier (Paris, [1959]). On the constitutive liturgical books, see the fundamental work of M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du haut moyen-âge (S.S.L., xi, xxiii, xxiv, xxviii, xxix; 1931–61). –. Le Vavasseur, Les Fonctions pontificales selon le rit romain (2 vols., 1865; ed. 3, 'R. P.' Haegy, 1904). F. Mostardi in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1317–19, s.v. 'Cerimoniale dei vescovi'.

CAEREMONIALE ROMANUM. (1) A Latin service book, compiled c. 1275 at the command of *Gregory X, which contains the rite for the investiture of a newly elected Pope. It was first published by J. *Mabillon in 1689 as *Ordo Romanus XIII.

(2) A treatise, also known as the 'Caeremoniale Capellae Pontificiae', which describes the ceremonial of the Papal curia. It was composed in 1488 by P. Piccolomini, Bp. of Pienza (1483–96), on the basis of the *Ordines Romani, and was first published by Christophorus Marcellus, Abp. of Corcyra, in 1516.

On (1) J. Mabillon, O.S.B., Museum Italicum, ii (Paris, 1689), pp. 221–41; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxviii, 1105–22. Crit. ed. by M. Andrieu, Le Pontifical Romain au moyen âge, ii (S.T., lxxxvii; 1940), pp. 525–41, with introd. pp. 277–88 and 317–19.

CAERULARIUS, MICHAEL. See Michael Cerularius.

CAESAR. The word, which was virtually a title of the Roman emperors in the 1st–3rd cents. A.D., occurs several times in the NT (e.g. Mk. 12. 14–17, Jn. 19. 12, Acts 25. 8–12). To the inhabitants of Palestine and the provinces, the name denoted the Imperial throne rather than the person occupying it. The emperors contemporary with the NT were: Augustus, 27 B.C.–A.D. 14; Tiberius, A.D. 14–37; Gaius (Caligula), A.D. 37–41; Claudius, A.D. 41–54; Nero, A.D. 54–68; Galba, A.D. 68–9; Otho, A.D. 69; Vitellius, A.D. 69; Vespasian, A.D. 69–79; Titus, A.D. 79–81; and Domitian, A.D. 81–96.

CAESAREA (Palestine). Originally known as 'Straton's Tower', the city on the coast of Palestine north of Jaffa (to be distinguished from the '*Caesarea Philippi' of Mt. 16. 13, Mk. 8. 27, the modern Banias south of Mount Hermon) was rebuilt by *Herod the Great, c. 25 – 13 B.C., prob. as a port for Sebaste (Samaria), and renamed in honour of the Emp. Augustus. It became the capital of Palestine (c. 13 B.C.). In the Apostolic Church it was visited by *Philip the Evangelist (Acts 8. 40), who took up his residence here (21. 8), and by St. *Peter who, in obedience to a vision, made himself known to Cornelius and was the instrument through whom the Holy Spirit was first given to the Gentiles (10. 44 f.). St. *Paul was brought from *Jerusalem to Caesarea after his conversion and sent on thence to Tarsus (9. 30); he landed here on his way from *Ephesus to Jerusalem (18. 22); and he was imprisoned here for two years 23. 23, 24, 27), during which period he possibly (so H. E. G. *Paulus, F. *Spitta) wrote his '*Captivity Epistles'. Under Vespasian it became a colony (A.D. 70). Prob. the scene of a small Council regulating the celebration of *Easter c. 196 (*Eusebius, H.E., v. 25), it became 'Metropolis Provinciae Syriae Palestinae' under Alexander Severus (d. 222). In consequence its Bishop became metropolitan of Palestine (recognized at the Council of *Nicaea, can. 7) and held this dignity until the Council of *Chalcedon (451) subordinated him to the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

The home of *Origen from 231, Caesarea became noted as a seat of learning, with its episcopal library which contained many of Origen's works (incl. his Hexapla). Its most notable Bishop was Eusebius (Bp., 315 – c. 340), the most learned man of his age. St. *Jerome also studied here. The city suffered severely in the 7th cent. It was captured by the *Crusaders in 1101, when a chalice was found among the spoil, believed to have been used at the Last Supper. Important during the Crusades, the city was demolished in 1265 and remained in ruins until the 19th cent.

L. Haefeli, Cäsarea am Meer. Topographie und Geschichte der Stadt nach Josephus und Apostelgeschichte (1923). F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 296 f., s.v. 'Césarée de Palestine', with reff. R. Janin, A.A., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 206–9, s.v. 'Césarée de Palestine', with bibl.

CAESAREA PHILIPPI. The scene of St. *Peter's confession of Christ's Messiahship (Mk. 8. 27, Mt. 16. 13). It was the ancient Paneion, now Banias, at the foot of Mount Hermon. Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., vii. 28), it was the home of the woman with the issue of blood (Mt. 9. 20), where a house was shown in his day with statues commemorating the event.

C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg [1959]), pp. 291–4; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 231–5. W. Ewing in H.D.B., i (1900), p. 337 f., s.v.; R. Janin in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 209–11, s.v. 'Césarée de Philippe'.

CAESAREAN TEXT. A form of the Greek text of the Gospels (analogous, e.g., to the *Neutral and *Western texts) which B. H. *Streeter identified and described in The Four Gospels (1924). It is represented notably in the MSS. Θ (the 'Koridethi MS.', now at Tiflis) and the two families of *minuscules, 13–69–124–346 (the '*Ferrar Group') and 1–118–131–209; but as the text of the MSS. containing it had been very considerably assimilated to the *Lucianic standard, its existence was masked until Streeter isolated it. From a study of the text of Mk. used by *Origen in his Commentary on John, the earlier part of which he is known to have written at *Alexandria and the later part at *Caesarea in Palestine (after 231), Streeter deduced that it was the text in use at Caesarea in the 3rd cent.

More recent study, notably by K. *Lake and his colleagues, has thrown doubt on the existence of the Caesarean Text as a distinct entity. It was certainly not confined to Caesarea, since Origen used a form of the text ('pre-Caesarean') in some of his other writings dating from his Alexandrian period.

B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), ch. iv, pp. 77–108. McNeile, pp. 387–91. K. Lake–R. P. Blake–S. New, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospel of Mark' in H.T.R., xxi (1928), pp. 207–404; T. Ayuso, 'Texto cesariense o precesariense? Su realidad y su trascendencia en la crítica textual del Nuevo Testamento' in Biblica, xvi (1935), pp. 369–415; B. M. Metzger, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospels' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxiv (1945), pp. 457–89; repr., with additional notes, in his Chapters in the History of New Testament Textual Criticism (New Testament Tools and Studies, iv; 1963), pp. 42–72; E. F. Hills, 'Harmonizations in the Caesarean Text of Mark', Journal of Biblical Literature, lxvi (1947), pp. 135–52.

CAESARIUS, St. (c. 470–542), Abp. of Arles from 502. In 489 he entered the monastery at *Lérins. He took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical administration of S. Gaul, and with the help of Alaric II and Theodoric the Great succeeded in establishing the claim of Arles to be the primatial see in Gaul. He was largely instrumental in securing the condemnation of *Semi-pelagianism at the Council of *Orange in 529. A large collection of canons, known as the '*Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua', has, prob. mistakenly, been ascribed to him by many modern scholars. He was a celebrated preacher, and several of his sermons have survived. His life was written by St. *Cyprian of Toulon in conjunction with some of his other pupils. Feast day, 27 Aug.

Several of his writings ed. J. P. Migne, PL, lxvii, xxxix, &c. Crit. ed. G. Morin, O.S.B., 2 vols., Maredsous, 1937–42 (vol. i: Sermones; vol. ii: Concilia a Caesario habita, Regulae Monasticae, Opuscula Theologica, Testamentum, with Vita Caesarii in appendix; ed. 2 in C.C., 1953 ff.), which supersedes all earlier texts. Eng. tr. of his Sermons by M. M. Mueller, O.S.F. (Fathers of the Church, xxxi, xlvii, lxvi; 1956–73) and of his 'Rule of Nuns' by Maria C. McCarthy, S.H.C.J. (Washington, D.C., 1960). Monographs by C. F. Arnold (Leipzig, 1894), A. Malnory (Paris, 1894) and M. Chaillan ('Les Saints', Paris, 1912); also S. Cavallin, Studien zur Vita Caesarii (Lund, 1934) and several studies by G. Morin preparatory to his edition. Bardenhewer, v (1932), pp. 345–56; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 475–7. Dekkers, Nos. 1008–19a. P. Lejay in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2168–85; E. Peterson in E.C., iii (1950), col. 1353 f.; G. de Plinval in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 186–96, s.v. 'Césaire d'Arles'; H. G. J. Beck in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 1046–8, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua.

CAESARIUS, St., of Nazianzus (d. 369). He held various offices at court, including that of physician. There exists a set of four dialogues attributed to him, but they are much later in date. Our knowledge of him derives mainly from a panegyric delivered at his funeral by his elder brother, St. *Gregory of Nazianzus. Feast day in the W, 25 Feb.; in the E, 9 Mar.

J. P. Migne, PG, xxxviii, 851–1190.

CAESARIUS OF HEISTERBACH (c. 1180–1240), ecclesiastical writer. Born in or near *Cologne, in 1199 he entered the *Cistercian Order at the monastery of Heisterbach (near Königswinter, on the Rhine). His best known writings are his 'Dialogus Miraculorum' (c. 1223), a collection of spiritual anecdotes for the edification of novices, full of supernatural incident, and his eight books (not all extant) 'On Miracles'. They both throw important light on the events and popular beliefs of his age, as well as on the history of the Cistercian Order. He also wrote a Life of St. *Elizabeth of Hungary and a number of sermons.

Dialogus Miraculorum, ed. J. Strange (2 vols., Cologne, etc., 1851; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1929). For the work On Miracles, see A. Hilka (ed.), Die Wundergeschichten des Caesarius von Heisterbach, iii (Bonn, 1937): Books i–ii ed. A. Hilka, pp. 1–222; Books iv–v (the life and miracles of St. Engelbert, murdered at Cologne in 1225) ed. F. Zschaeck, ib., pp. 223–328. Life of St. Elizabeth ed. A. Huyskens, ib., pp. 329–90. 'Vita, Passio et Miracula S. Engelberti' ed. also A. Poncelet, S.J., in AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), pp. 644–81; with useful introd., by K. Langosch (Münster i.W.–Cologne, 1955). Sermons printed at Cologne, 1615; the 'exempla' (or stories) ed. A. Hilka, op. cit., i (1933), with full introd. A. E. Schönbach, 'Studien zur Erzählungsliteratur des Mittelalters. Teil IV: Ueber Caesarius von Heisterbach' in Sb. (Wien), cxliv (1902), Abh. ix. Matilde Hain, 'Lebendige Volkssage im "Dialogus Miraculorum" des Caesarius v. Heisterbach' in Archiv für Mittelrheinische Kirchengeschichte, ii (1950), pp. 130–40; B. Griesser, O.Cist., 'Ein Himmeroder Liber Miraculorum und seine Beziehungen zu Caesarius von Heisterbach', ib., iv (1952), pp. 257–74. J. M. Canivez, O.Cist., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 430–2, s.v. 'Césaire d'Heisterbach'.

CAESAROPAPISM. The system whereby an absolute monarch has supreme control over the Church within his dominions and exercises it even in matters (e.g. doctrine) normally reserved to ecclesiastical authority. The term is most generally used of the authority exercised by the Byzantine emperors over the E. patriarchates, esp. in the centuries immediately preceding the Schism of 1054.

CAIAPHAS. The Jewish *High Priest before whom Christ was tried (Mt. 26. 3, &c.), and at whose instigation He was condemned (Jn. 11. 49 ff.). He was appointed High Priest c. 18 and deposed in 37. He was son-in-law of *Annas.

CAINITES. A *Gnostic sect mentioned by *Irenaeus and other early writers which, regarding the God of the OT as responsible for the evil in the world, exalted those who withstood him, e.g. Cain, Esau, and Korah. They are said to have had an apocryphal Gospel of *Judas Iscariot. The mention of Cain in the NT (1 Jn. 3. 12, Jude 11–19) suggests a very early, perhaps pre-Christian, origin of the sect.

St. Irenaeus, Haer., i. 31; St. *Hippolytus, Haer., viii. 20; Ps.-*Tertullian, De Praescr. Haer., xxxiii; St. *Epiphanius, Haer., xxxviii. Further reff. in artt. by G. Bareille in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1307–9, and G. Bardy in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 226–8, s.v.

CAIRD, EDWARD (1835–1908), Scottish philosopher and theologian. In 1866 he became professor of moral philosophy at Glasgow and in 1893 succeeded B. *Jowett as Master of Balliol College, Oxford. He was one of the chief representatives of the Neo-*Hegelian movement in British philosophy. In The Evolution of Religion (1893) and The Evolution of Theology in the Greek Philosophers (*Gifford Lectures, 2 vols., 1904) he maintained that the religious principle was a necessary element in consciousness, and that Christianity, in that it overcame the antithesis of the real and the ideal, was the absolute religion. 'In Christianity religion has risen to its own true form.' He also published two important works on I. *Kant, A Critical Account of the Philosophy of Kant (1877) and The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant (2 vols., 1889, a recasting of the previous book) and a monograph on G. W. F. Hegel (1883).

H. Jones and J. H. Muirhead, The Life and Philosophy of Edward Caird (1921). Obituary note by B. *Bosanquet in Proceedings of the British Academy (1907–8), pp. 379–86. D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, pp. 291–5 (unsigned).

CAIRD, JOHN (1820–98), elder brother of the preceding, divine and philosopher. In 1845 he entered the ministry of the Church of Scotland and in 1862 was elected professor of divinity at Glasgow. In 1873 he became Principal of Glasgow University. Like his brother, he came under the influence of the Neo-Hegelian Movement; but his teaching on the nature of the religious consciousness was somewhat nearer Christian orthodoxy. His chief writings were An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion (1880) and a posthumously published set of *Gifford Lectures on The Fundamental Ideas of Christianity (1899).

Memoir by E. Caird (brother) prefixed to Fundamental Ideas of Christianity, i (1899), pp. ix–cxli. C. L. Warr, Principa Caird (The Scottish Layman's Library, 1926). T. Bayne in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 368 f.

CAIUS. See Gaius.

CAJETAN, St. (1480–1547), founder of the *Theatine Order. A native of Vicenza, he was ordained priest at Rome in 1516. From the first he exerted himself to spread a fresh spirit of devotion among the clergy and to that end founded in 1524 with Pietro Caraffa (afterwards *Paul IV) and two other priests the congregation known as the Theatines, for clerics bound by vow and living in common, but engaged in pastoral work. He was beatified in 1629 and canonized in 1671. Feast day, 8 (formerly 7) Aug.

F. Andreu, C.R. (ed.), Le lettere di San Gaetano da Thiene (S.T., clxxvii; 1954). Life by Antonio Caraccioli, O.Theat., orig. publ. in Cajetan's De Vita Pauli IV . . . Collectanea Historica (Cologne, 1612), pp. 176–260; repr. in AA.SS., Aug. II (1735), pp. 282–301. Another early life by G. B. Cataldo, O.Theat. (Rome, 1616). P. Chiminelli, San Gaetano Thiene (1948), with full bibl. Other modern studies include those by G. M. Magenis (Venice, 1726; Germ. tr., 1754), M. A. R. Maulde la Clavière ('Les Saints', 1902; Eng. tr., 1902), O. Premoli (Crema, 1910), Silvestro da Valsanzibio, O.F.M.Cap. (Padua, 1949, with documents), and A. Veny Ballester (Barcelona [1950], with bibl.). P. Paschini, S. Gaetano Thiene, Gian Pietro Carafa e le origini dei chierici regolari teatini (1926). B. Mas in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 30–48, s.v. 'Gaetan de Thiene', with reff.

CAJETAN, THOMAS DE VIO (1469–1534), theologian. He was called Gaetano ('Cajetan') from his birthplace, Gaeta. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1484, and taught philosophy and theology at Padua (where contemporary philosophical movements were represented by P. *Pomponazzi and others), Pavia, and Rome. As *General of his order (1508–18), Cardinal (1517), and Bp. of Gaeta (1519) he played an important part in ecclesiastical affairs, urging the cause of reform before the fathers of the *Lateran Council of 1512, reasoning with *Luther in 1518, contributing to the elections of the Emp. *Charles V (1519) and the Pope *Hadrian VI (1522), and opposing the projected divorce of *Henry VIII (1530). Except for some years during the pontificate of *Clement VII, he was seldom free from onerous duties, but he contrived to study and write continually. In philosophy and theology his acute but conservative Commentary on St. *Thomas's 'Summa theologica' (1507–22) was the first monument of a great revival of *Thomism in the 16th cent., and remains to-day one of the chief classics of scholasticism. Finding that Humanists and Protestants alike were making polemical use of the Scriptures, he subsequently turned to Biblical exegesis, for which he sought the assistance of scholarly philologists; and his commentaries on the Bible contain much enlightened criticism of an unexpectedly 'modern' kind.

There are modern crit. texts of many of his works, as well as some Eng. trr. Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 14–21 and 428. A. Cossio, Il Cardinale Gaetano e la riforma, i (all publd., Cividale, 1902). J. M. Vosté, O.P., Thomas de Vio, O.P., Cardinalis Cajetanus, Sacrae Paginae Magister (Rome, 1935). J. F. Groner, O.P., Kardinal Cajetan (Louvain, 1951), with bibl. G. Hennig, Cajetan und Luther. Ein historischer Beitrag zur Begegnung von Thomismus und Reformation (Arbeiten zur Theologie, II. Reihe, Band vii; Stuttgart, 1966). Nos. 86 and 87 of the Revue Thomiste, N.S. xvii (1935), also contain artt. specially devoted to his life and teaching. D. A. Mortier, O.P., Histoire des maitres généraux de l'ordre des Frères Prêcheurs, v (1911), pp. 141–230. P. Mandonnet, O.P., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1313–29; s.v.; J. R. Volz, O.P., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 145–8, s.v.; U. degl'Innocenti, O.P., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1506–9, s.v. 'De Vio, Tommaso', with further bibl.

CALAMY, EDMUND (1) (1600–66), 'the Elder', English *Presbyterian divine. Of *Huguenot descent, he was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he was excluded from a fellowship on account of his opposition to *Arminian teaching. From 1626 to 1636 he was lecturer at Bury St. Edmunds, and from 1639 perpetual curate of St. Mary Aldermanbury in London. He took a leading part in the production of the composite work Smectymnuus directed against J. *Hall's apology for a moderate episcopacy. As an active member of the *Westminster Assembly of 1643, he sought to defend presbyterianism as a middle course between prelacy and congregationalism. During the Commonwealth he worked for the return of *Charles II, and at the Restoration was offered as a reward for his services, but did not accept, the see of *Coventry and Lichfield. At the *Savoy Conference of 1661 he continued to take a moderate line, and hopes were entertained by the Bishops of his conforming; but he refused to yield, and in 1662 he was ejected from his preferments. In 1663 he was committed for a short time to Newgate Prison for disobeying the Act of *Uniformity. Several of his sermons were published.

His Sermon preached on 17 Aug. 1662 is pr. in Farewell Sermons of Some of the Most Eminent of the Nonconformist Divines, Delivered at the Period of their Ejection by the Act of Uniformity in the Year 1662 (1816), pp. 1–13, with biogr. introd. p. vi f. Cromwell's Soldiers' Bible . . . compiled by Edmund Calamy, and issued for the Use of the Commonwealth Army in 1643, was repr. in facsimile (London, 1895). A. Gordon in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 227–30.

CALAMY, EDMUND (2) (1671–1732), historian of Nonconformity, the only son of Edmund Calamy 'the Younger' (1635?–85), who was himself the son of Edmund *Calamy 'the Elder' (1600–1666). His works threw much light on the history of Nonconformity. Esp. valuable is a chapter (ix, nearly half the first volume) in his *Abridgement of Baxter's History (1702; new ed., 2 vols. 1713) entitled 'A Particular Account of the Ministers, Lecturers, Fellows of Colleges, etc., who were silenced and ejected by the Act for Uniformity; with the characters and works of many of them'.

A. G. Matthews, Calamy Revised. Being a revision of Edmund Calamy's Account of the Ministers and others ejected and silenced, 1660–2 (1934). A. Gordon in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 230–5.

CALCED (Lat. calceatus, 'shod'). A term applied to some branches of certain religious orders to distinguish them from their '*Discalced' brethren (q.v.). Thus the unreformed *Carmelites, who wear shoes, are called 'calced' as opposed to the Discalced members of the *Teresian reform, who wear sandals; the same applies to the 'calced' Conventual *Franciscans.

CALDERWOOD, DAVID (1575–1650), Scottish Church historian. He was educated at Edinburgh University and ordained to the charge of Crailing, Roxburgh, in 1604. A vigorous opponent of the ecclesiastical policy of *James VI and I (esp. of his attempts to reintroduce episcopacy into Scotland), in 1608 he was prohibited from attending Church courts or synods. He then devoted himself to the study of the origins of civil and ecclesiastical authority. When the king visited Scotland in 1617, Calderwood was summoned to the royal presence and put up a fearless defence of his views. He was deprived, imprisoned and subsequently exiled until after James's death. In 1641 he obtained the charge of Pencaitland in Lothian and not long afterwards co-operated with A. *Henderson in drawing up the 'Directory of Public *Worship'. His most important work, The True History of the Church of Scotland, was commissioned by the *General Assembly, which provided an annual pension of £800 during the last years of his life. It is characterized by anti-Erastian bias and a spirited defence of the liberties of the Church, but is still a valuable source of information on ecclesiastical history in Scotland during the 16th and 17th cents. He also wrote a number of polemical works.

Editio princeps of The True History of the Church of Scotland, pr. in Holland, 1678, is incomplete. Fuller, but still incomplete, ed., based on MS. in the British Museum, by T. Thomson (Wodrow Society, 8 vols., 1842–9), with life in final vol. [separate pagination]. Reprint of 1678 ed., with introd. by R. Peters (Menston, Leeds, 1971). W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 244–6.

CALDERWOOD, HENRY (1830–97), Scottish philosopher. He studied at Edinburgh, and in 1856 was ordained minister of Greyfriars Church at Glasgow. In 1868 he became professor of moral philosophy at Edinburgh. He made it his aim to refute the doctrine of W. *Hamilton (whose pupil he had been) that the human mind cannot know ultimate truth, arguing that a religious faith based on God's unknowableness was little more than a piece of superstition. He held that an important place in religion and ethics must be ascribed to intuition, which puts the soul into immediate contact with God. His writings include The Philosophy of the Infinite (1854), published while he was still a student, and some books on the philosophy of the natural sciences.

Life by his son [W. L. Calderwood] and D. Woodside, with account of his philosophical works by A. S. Pringle-*Pattison (London, 1900). T. B. Johnstone in D.N.B., Suppl., i (1901), p. 373 f.

CALDEY ISLAND, off the south coast of Wales, near Tenby, the seat of a monastery as far back as the 5th cent. In 1906 an abbey for Anglican Benedictines was established on the ancient ruins by Aelred Carlyle (1874–1955). In 1913 nearly the whole community transferred their allegiance to the RC Church. In 1928 they left Caldey for their present house at Prinknash, near *Gloucester, and the island was taken over by *Trappists from Chimay in Belgium.

The Benedictines of Caldey Island (Caldey, 1907). P. F. Anson, The Benedictines of Caldey. The Story of the Anglican Benedictines of Caldey and their Submission to the Catholic Church (1940). Id., Abbot Extraordinary. Memoirs of Aelred Carlyle, O.S.B. (1958), pp. 65–179. F. L. Cross, Darwell Stone (1943), pp. 108–12.

CALEFACTORY (Lat. calefactorium, 'warming place'), the room in a medieval (esp. *Cistercian) monastery in which a fire or fires were maintained for the use of the monks. Where it existed, it was generally placed, as at *Fountains, between the refectory and the eastern range.

CALENDAR. The calendar in use at the time when Christianity began was the Julian, devised by Julius Caesar in 46 B.C., in which the length of the years was almost but not quite accurately calculated. By A.D. 325 the error was enough to cause the vernal equinox to fall on 21 instead of 25 Mar., so that the 21st was then fixed as the earliest date for the Paschal full moon. The system was reformed by *Gregory XIII, who in 1582 caused ten days to be omitted from that year to balance the current error, and by altering the leap-year rules prevented its recurrence. The Gregorian Calendar was adopted in England in 1752. Certain parts of the Orthodox Church have not adopted it, and here the year now runs 13 days behind the Western.

The beginning of the Christian Era with the date of the Incarnation was suggested at Rome by *Dionysius Exiguus in the 6th cent., and in due course adopted throughout Christendom. Calculation began from 25 Mar. A.D. 1, the supposed date of the *Annunciation, which was taken to be New Year's Day. The Gregorian Calendar restored New Year's Day to 1 Jan.

The observance of commemorations dates from early times. *Easter and *Pentecost were both observed from the very first as Jewish festivals with a new Christian significance, and like the Jewish Passover they were movable according to the moon, the calculations proving at times a source of controversy. Later the fixed festivals grew up, as well as further movable feasts depending for their date upon Easter. Of Saints' Days, those of the Martyrs were the first and most obvious; others followed. So also the periods of fasting were gradually fixed by custom. At a very early stage the Jewish custom of a seven-day week produced regularly recurring fasts on *Wednesdays and *Fridays, an arrangement later modified but in substance preserved; while the observance of *Sunday as a festival dates from the Apostles, though it was only in 321 that an order of *Constantine forbade unnecessary Sunday work.

The new Roman Calendar of 1969 did much to bring out again the importance of the great feasts of Christmas, Easter and Pentecost, and to restore the primacy of Sunday over the feasts of saints; the number of saints' days was reduced, while an attempt was made to give the calendar a universal significance both in time (by including modern saints) and place. See also Year.

The study of chronology was put on a scientific footing for the first time by J. *Scaliger, De Emendatione Temporum (Paris, 1583), and D. *Petavius, S.J., De Doctrina Temporum (ib., 1627). Important works of more recent date include the Benedictine L'Art de vérifier les dates de faits historiques, des chartes, des chroniques et autres anciens monumens, depuis la naissance de Notre-Seigneur [by M. F. Dantine, O.S.B., C. Clémencet, O.S.B., and U. Durand, O.S.B.] (Paris, 1750; ed. 2 [rev. by N. V. de Saint-Allais], 18 vols. + index, 1818–19; further continuation from 1770 to date by J. B. P. J. de Courcelles and F. d'Urban, 4 vols., 1821–38; another complete ed., 18 vols., 1821–44). C. L. Ideler, Handbuch der mathematischen und technischen Chronologie (2 vols., 1825–6). B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie (1880). H. Grotefend, Zeitrechnung des Mittelalters und der Neuzeit (2 vols., 1891–8). J. Gerard, S.J., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 738–42, s.v. 'Chronology (General)', and H. Thurston, S.J., ib., pp. 158–66, s.v. 'Calendar'. P. Harvey, Oxford Companion to English Literature, ed. 4 (1967), pp. 932–61, gives miscellaneous calendrical data. See also bibl. to Chronology (Biblical), Year (Liturgical), and Gregorian Calendar.

CALFHILL (or CALFIELD), JAMES (c. 1530–1570), *Calvinistic divine. Educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, in 1548 he became one of the early Students of Christ Church, Oxford. In 1560 he was ordained priest, and in the same year appointed to a canonry at Christ Church. In 1564 he became Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Oxford, in 1565 Dean of Bocking, and in 1570 he was elected to the see of *Worcester, but died before consecration. One of the leading Elizabethan Calvinists, he published in 1565 his principal work, an Answer to the 'Treatise of the Cross' [by John Martiall, 1534–97].

His Answer to John Martiall's Treatise of the Cross was ed. by R. Gibbings for the *Parker Society, 1846, with biogr. note on Calfhill, p. vii f. Unsigned art. in D.N.B., viii (1886), p. 252 f.

CALIXTINES. The moderate party of the *Hussites of Bohemia and Moravia, also known as the 'Utraquists' (q.v.). They were so named from their contention that the laity should receive Communion in both kinds—i.e. from the chalice ('calix'*) as well as under the species of bread. Both Calixtines and Subunites (sub una specie) received ecclesiastical recognition at the Prague Compacts of 1433 (confirmed at Iglau, 1436).

G. Constant, Concession à l'Allemagne de la communion sous les deux espèces. Étude sur les débuts de la réforme catholique en Allemagne, 1548–1621 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxxviii; 2 vols., 1923).

CALIXTUS, GEORG (1586–1656), Protestant theologian. He was educated at the university of Helmstedt, where he became an exponent of eirenic tendencies and conceived a high regard for P. *Melanchthon. He then spent four years (1609–1613) travelling in RC and *Calvinist countries. On his return to Helmstedt he was appointed professor of theology (1614), and held the office till his death. He endeavoured to build up a theological system which should lead to reconciliation between *Lutherans, Calvinists, and Catholics. The basis of the proposed reunion was to be the Scriptures, the *Apostles' Creed, and the faith of the first five cents., interpreted in the light of the *Vincentian Canon. He expounded his position (which became known as '*Syncretism') in a long series of writings, of which perhaps the most important was his treatise Judicium de controversiis theologicis quae inter Lutheranos et Reformatos agitantur, et de mutua partium fraternitate atque tolerantia propter consensum in fundamentis (1650). He took part at the Colloquy of *Thorn in 1645.

E. L. T. Henke, Georg Calixtus und seine Zeit (2 vols., Halle, 1853–60). Shorter life by W. Gass (Breslau, 1846). W. C. Dowding, German Theology during the Thirty Years' War. The Life and Correspondence of George Calixtus (1863). H. Schüssler, Georg Calixt, Theologie und Kirchenpolitik. Eine Studie zur Ökumenizität des Luthertums (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, xxv; 1961), with bibl. E. L. T. Henke–P. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 643–7.

CALLING. As a technical theological term the word came into use in Reformation theology for the Divine act whereby those destined for salvation are persuaded to accept the Gospel. It was used in this sense, e.g., in the 'Shorter *Westminster Catechism' of 1647. *Calvinist theologians have commonly held that the Divine Calling is in itself efficacious, whereas *Lutherans have held that it requires a voluntary response. In much Evangelical Christianity of more recent times the Call of God takes a very important place in the immediate and conscious conversion which is considered normal and necessary in the religious life of every Christian.

CALLISTUS I, St. (d. c. 222), Bp. of *Rome from c. 217. He was apparently originally a slave. Acc. to *Hippolytus, his first appearance in history was in connexion with some fraudulent banking operations, which finally led to his being sent to the mines of Sardinia. After his release at the request of Marcia, the mistress of the Emp. Commodus (180–92), he was given a pension by *Victor I. In 217 he succeeded *Zephyrinus, whose chief minister he seems to have been. His pontificate was marked by acute controversy. He was attacked by Hippolytus for countenancing *Sabellianism and for his laxity, esp. in readmitting to communion those guilty of adultery or fornication; but some of the charges against him may be discounted as based solely on the evidence of his adversary. The catacombs of 'San Callisto' on the *Appian Way are named from his having been in charge of them under Zephyrinus. Callistus himself was originally buried on the Aurelian Way. Feast day, 14 Oct.

Hippolytus, Haer., IX, xii. L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), p. 141 f. J. J. I. von *Döllinger, Hippolytus und Callistus (1853; Eng. tr., 1876). Bardenhewer, ii (ed. 2, 1914), pp. 636–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 159, 164, 169. That Callistus was the pontifex maximus quod est episcopus episcoporum who issued an edict on penance (edictum peremptorium) attacked by *Tertullian in De pudicitia, 81, has been maintained by many modern scholars, incl. O. *Bardenhewer and A. d'Alès, L'Édit de Calliste (1914); on the other side, see B. *Altaner and C. B. Daly, 'The "Edict of Callistus"' in Studia Patristica, ed. F. L. Cross, iii (T.U., lxxviii; 1961), pp. 176–82. C. Cecchelli–E. Josi in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 386–91, s.v. 'Callisto I'.

CALLISTUS II (d. 1124), Pope from 1119. Guido of Burgundy was a descendant of the counts of Burgundy and closely connected with almost all the royal houses of Europe. He was made Abp. of Vienne by *Urban II in 1088, became Papal legate in France in 1106, and took part in the Lateran Council of 1112, which declared null and void the *investiture privileges which Henry V had extorted from *Paschal II. In the same year he himself presided at a Council held at Vienne, which condemned lay investiture as a heresy. Having been elected Pope at *Cluny, he excommunicated Henry at the Council of *Reims in 1119, but the intervention of the German princes, esp. Henry of Bavaria, facilitated a peaceful solution. The long-drawn-out struggle between Pope and Emperor was brought to a conclusion by the Concordat of *Worms (q.v.) in 1122, which was promulgated at the *Lateran Council of 1123, where the Pope also issued a series of decrees concerning simony, the marriage of priests, and the election of prelates. In the quarrel between his old see of Vienne and that of Grenoble, Callistus took the side of the former and authenticated a collection of forged privileges of which, however, the larger part dates from earlier times.

U. Robert, Bullaire du Pape Calixte II (1119–1124). Essai de restitution (2 vols., Paris, 1891): id., Histoire du Pape Calixte II (1891). Studies by M. Maurer (Munich, 2 vols., 1886–9) and G. Ender (Greifswald, 1913). Mann, viii (1910), pp. 139–227. É. Jordan in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 424–38, s.v., with bibl.

CALLISTUS III (1378–1458), Pope from 1455. A native of Valencia, Alfonso de Borgia enjoyed considerable reputation as a jurist both at the university of Lérida and at the court of Alfonso V of Aragon (King, 1416–58). He originally supported the cause of Benedict XIII (anti-Pope 1394–1417), but eventually induced his successor Clement VIII (anti-Pope 1423–9) to submit to Pope *Martin V in 1429. He was thereupon appointed Bp. of Valencia in the same year and created a *Cardinal in 1444. The main efforts of his papacy were directed to the organization of a crusade against the Turks, to which project he had been esp. devoted since the fall of *Constantinople in 1453. In spite of the victory of St. *Giovanni Capistrano (q.v.) at Belgrade in 1456, his plans met with little success, largely owing to the unsettled state of Europe, which his attempts to arrange peace did little to allay. After the death of Alfonso V (1458), he refused to recognize the claims of his illegitimate son to the throne of Naples, of which Alfonso was overlord. His intervention in the subsequent dynastic disputes lent substance to the charge of nepotism already raised by his elevation to the cardinalate of two of his nephews (incl. the future *Alexander VI) and the appointment of a third as Duke of Spoleto. Prob. the most interesting event of his pontificate was the revision of the trial of *Joan of Arc by the annulment of the sentence and a declaration of her innocence. He was also responsible for the canonization in 1457 of *Osmund, Bp. of *Salisbury.

Regesto Ibérico de Calixto III, ed. J. Rius Serra (Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Cientificas. Escuela de Estudios Medievales. Textos, x, xxix, etc., 1948 ff.). Vita a Bartholomæo Sacho, printed by L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, iii, pt. 2 (Milan, 1734), cols. 961–66. Pastor, ii (1891), pp. 317–495. E. Vansteenberghe in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 438–44, s.v., incl. bibl.; M. Batllori in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 1081 f., s.v., with detailed bibl.

CALOVIUS, ABRAHAM (1612–86), German *Lutheran theologian. In 1650 he was appointed to the chair of theology at *Wittenberg, and in 1652 General-superintendent. A man of great learning, he took part in many controversies, and as a strenuous defender of rigid Lutheran orthodoxy opposed G. *Calixtus's policy of reuniting the Confessions. He also made vigorous attacks on *Socinianism and *Pietism and controverted the liberal views of H. *Grotius on Biblical inspiration. In his doctrine of the 'Unio Mystica', however, he departed (probably far more than he was aware) from the Reformation doctrine of justification. His chief dogmatic work, Systema locorum theologicorum (12 vols., 1655–77), is a monument of Lutheran scholasticism.

J. W. Kunze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 648–54, incl. bibl.

CALOYER (Gk. καλόγηρος, from καλός, 'fine', + γῆρας, 'old age'; i.e. 'venerable'). A designation for Greek monks.

CALVARY, Mount (Lat. Calvaria, Gk. Κρανίον, Heb. 'Golgotha', all meaning 'skull'). The place of Christ's crucifixion, just outside *Jerusalem. It may have been originally a place of public execution where the skulls of the executed were to be seen, or the name may have been derived from a neighbouring cemetery or connected with the shape of the ground (traditionally a hill) which may have resembled a skull. Acc. to tradition it was the burial place of *Adam's skull. See also Holy Sepulchre.

CALVIN, JOHN (1509–64), French reformer and theologian. Born at Noyon in Picardy, he was intended for an ecclesiastical career, and obtained his first benefice at the age of 12. On this occasion he received the tonsure, the only order ever conferred on him. From 1523 to 1528 he studied theology at *Paris, but from 1527 he seems to have had doubts on his priestly vocation and probably also on matters of faith. From 1528 he studied law at Orléans and later at Bourges, where he came under the influence of Melchior Wolmar and a circle of Protestants. In 1532 he issued a Latin commentary on Seneca's 'De Clementia'. His final break with the RC Church appears to have taken place in 1533 after a religious experience in which he believed he had received a mission to restore the Church to its original purity.

In 1534 he went to Noyon, where he resigned his benefices and seems to have been imprisoned for a short time. Danger from an outbreak of persecution under Francis I led to his flight to Basle in 1535, where he intended to devote his life to study. The first edition of the Institutes* (in Latin; q.v.), which were to be rewritten and improved throughout his life, followed in March 1536. On a passing visit to Geneva in July 1536 he reluctantly relinquished his plans for a scholar's life and yielded to G. *Farel's urgent appeals to become his co-adjutor in organizing the Reformation at Geneva. He was appointed preacher and professor of theology and in 1536 published his Articuli de Regimine Ecclesiae. They contained severe regulations concerning admission to the Lord's Supper and required from all Genevan citizens a profession of faith approved by the town council, the refusal of which was to be punished by exile. Despite strong resistance all citizens had accepted the oath by 1538; but his next step, the discipline of excommunication, together with his refusal to conform the usages of the Church at Geneva to those of the more powerful city of Berne, led to the expulsion of both Farel and Calvin later in that year.

For the next three years Calvin was minister of the French congregation and lecturer in the theological school at Strassburg. Here he became a close friend of M. *Bucer, whose influence is visible in the fresh edition, in 1539, of his Institutes. He also published a commentary on Romans (1539) and wrote his famous Epistle to Cardinal *Sadoleto, then endeavouring to bring Geneva back to the RC Church, in which he defended the principles of the Reformation with great vigour. In 1539 he attended the Conference of Frankfurt and in 1540 represented Strassburg at *Hagenau and in 1541 at

*Worms. At the Diet of *Ratisbon (1541) he formed a friendship with P. *Melanchthon.

In 1541 Calvin returned to Geneva, where his party had gained the upper hand, and during the next 14 years he devoted himself to establishing a theocratic régime on OT lines. This was effected by a series of 'Ordinances' which placed the government of the new Church in the hands of four classes of men, called pastors, doctors, elders, and deacons. They were assisted by a '*consistory' of ministers and laymen which, under Calvin, was chiefly a tribunal of morals. It wielded the power of excommunication and had far-reaching powers over the private lives of the citizens. These were enforced by new legislation, which inflicted severe punishments even for purely religious offences and prohibited all pleasures such as dancing and games. This régime was resisted by a party incorrectly described as 'Libertines', which Calvin succeeded in overcoming by force. Among the opponents executed after torture were Jacques Gruet (1547), Raoul Monnet (1549), and, best known, Michael *Servetus (1553). By 1555, however, all resistance had ceased and Calvin was the uncontested master of the city. At the same time he also took the lead in the affairs of other Protestant communities. In 1548 he addressed a letter to the Protector *Somerset indicating the changes which he wished to see introduced in England; in 1555 he gave shelter to English Protestant refugees; and he actively supported the French Protestants. All his NT commentaries appeared during this period, as well as a number of writings on the Reformation and his treatise on Predestination (1552).

From 1555 to his death he was the unopposed dictator of Geneva, which, through him, had become a city of the strictest morality. He continued his literary activities, commented on most of the OT Books, and in 1559 founded the Academy of Geneva to continue his teaching.

In his revolt from Rome Calvin was more logical and systematic and a greater organizer than Luther, but without the human attractiveness of the German reformer. He was disinterested, simple and austere in his private life, but his vindictiveness and his claim to be the supreme authority to decide what is true Christianity and what is not was resented even by many of his followers. His work as a Church reformer is not to be measured by the part he played in a small republic. During his ministry at Geneva his reputation and influence as an ecclesiastical statesman, as a religious controversialist, educationist, and author was widespread. His theological insight, his exegetical talents, his knowledge of languages, his precision, and his clear and pithy style, made him the most influential writer among the reformers, and his Institutes are still of the highest authority in the non-Lutheran Protestant Churches.

The standard ed. of Calvin's works is that by H. W. Baum, E. Cunitz, E. Reuss, P. Lobstein, and A. Erichson (Corpus Reformatorum, xxix–lxxvii; 59 vols., Brunswick, 1863–1900); more modern ed. in Les Textes français, Paris, 1936 ff. Opera Selecta, ed. P. Barth (5 vols., Munich, 1926–36). Many of his works were translated into Eng. in the 19th cent. under the auspices of the Calvin Translation Society. The collection of Tracts and Treatises by H. Beveridge (1844) was repr., with notes and introd. by T. F. Torrance (3 vols., 1958). Other modern trr. into Eng. include that of his Theological Treatises by J. K. S. Reid (Library of Christian Classics, xxii; 1954), of a selection of his Commentaries by J. Haroutunian (ib., xxiii; 1958), of his Commentaries on the NT by T. H. L. Parker and others, ed. D. W. Torrance and T. F. Torrance (1959 ff.), and of his Commentary on Seneca's De Clementia by F. L. Battles–A. M. Huglo (Leiden, 1969). The lives of Calvin by T. *Beza, orig. prefixed to Calvin's Comm. on Joshua (posthumously publd., Geneva, 1564; Eng. tr. of the life, London, 1564), and that prefixed to the ed. of Calvin's letters publd. Geneva, 1575, together with that attributed to Beza (the work of Nicolas Colladon) prefixed to ed. 2 of the Comm. on Joshua (Lyons, 1565), are pr. among his works. E. Doumergue, Jean Calvin. Les hommes et les choses de son temps (5 vols., 1899–1917; comprehensive but uncritical). W. Walker, John Calvin (New York and London, 1906); H. Y. Reyburn, John Calvin (London, 1914). B. B. Warfield, Calvin and Calvinism (New York and London, 1931). Q. Breen, John Calvin. A Study in French Humanism (Grand Rapids, 1931; ed. 2, 1968). E. Stickelberger, Calvin. Eine Darstellung (Gotha, 1931; Eng. tr., Richmond, Va., 1954; London, 1959). R. N. Carew Hunt, Calvin (London, 1933), with bibl.; J. Mackinnon, Calvin and the Reformation (1934). R. Freschi, Giovanni Calvino. Vita (Milan, 1934); J. Rilliet, Calvin 1509–1564 (Paris, 1963). F. W. Kampschulte (*Old Catholic), Johann Calvin, seine Kirche und sein Staat in Genf (2 vols., 1869–99). E. Choisy, Calvin, éducateur des consciences (Neuilly [1926]); J. D. Benoît, Calvin, directeur des âmes [1949]. W. Niesel, Die Theologie Calvins (Munich, 1938; ed. 2, 1957; Eng. tr., 1956); H. Olsson, Calvin och Reformationens Teologi (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. 1, xl, fasc. 1, etc., 1943 ff.). T. F. Torrance, Calvin's Doctrine of Man (1949). E. A. Dowey, The Knowledge of God in Calvin's Theology (New York, 1952). F. Wendel, Calvin. Sources et évolution de sa pensée religieuse (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses publiées par la faculté de théologie protestante de l'université de Strasbourg, xli; 1950; Eng. tr., 1963). T. F. Torrance, Kingdom and Church. A Study in the Theology of the Reformation (1956), pp. 90–164. H. Quistorp, Die Letzten Dinge in Zeugnis Calvins (Gütersloh, 1955; Eng. tr., 1955); P. [M.] van Buren, Christ in Our Place. The Substitutionary Character of Calvin's Doctrine of Reconciliation (1957). R. S. Wallace, Calvin's Doctrine of the Christian Life (1959). J. Boisset, Sagesse et Sainteté dans la Pensée de Jean Calvin (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études. Section des Sciences Religieuses, lxxi; 1959). W. Nijenhuis, Calvinus Oecumenicus. Calvijn en de Eenheid der Kerk in het Licht van zijn Briefwisseling (Kirkhistorische Studien, iii; 1959). J. Moltmann (ed.), Calvin-Studien 1959 (Neukirchen, 1960). H. J. Forstman, Word and Spirit. Calvin's Doctrine of Biblical Authority (Stanford, 1962). A. Ganoczy, Le Jeune Calvin. Genèse et évolution de sa vocation réformatrice (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte, Mainz, xl; Wiesbaden, 1966). K. McDonnell, O.S.B., John Calvin, the Church, and the Eucharist (Princeton, 1967). B. C. Milner, Jr., Calvin's Doctrine of the Church (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, v; Leiden, 1970). A. Erichson, Bibliographia Calviniana. Catalogus Chronologicus Operum Calvini (Berlin, 1900); W. Niesel, Calvin-Bibliographie 1901–1959 (Munich, 1961). See also bibls. to Calvinism and Institutes.

CALVINISM. The theological system of J. Calvin, formulated chiefly in his Institutes, and accepted with some modifications by most non-Lutheran reformed Churches. It holds certain of the doctrines characteristic of *Lutheranism, as well as other elements peculiar to itself. Among the former are the doctrine of Scripture as the only rule of faith, the denial of human free-will after the Fall of Adam, and justification by faith without works. To these Calvin added the doctrine of the inamissibility of grace, the certitude of salvation, and absolute predestination. He also modified Luther's teaching on the Church and the Sacraments.

Acc. to Calvin the Bible contains all that is necessary to know God and our duties towards Him and our neighbour. The authority of Scripture is assured by the 'testimonium Spiritus Sancti', an interior persuasion whereby we can also distinguish the canonical Books of Scripture from others. In the state of innocence it was possible for man to attain to beatitude through his own natural powers; but the Fall, which was willed by God, substantially changed human nature so that now all man wills and does is sin. Hence he is no longer free but follows necessarily either the attractions of concupiscence or of grace. All human works outside the Christian faith are sins; and even the good works of Christians are intrinsically evil, though covered and not counted as sins through the imputed merits of Christ. This trust ('faith' in the Protestant sense) extends not only, as in Lutheranism, to the certitude of having obtained justification but to the perfect assurance of eternal salvation, and from this follows the specifically Calvinist doctrine of the inamissibility of grace.

The extreme emphasis on the omnipotence of God, which takes no account of His justice and mercy or of the freedom which this very omnipotence can leave to His creatures, led Calvin to formulate his doctrine of absolute predestination. Acc. to him, before the Fall and even before creation, God, in His eternal counsels, predestined some of His creatures to salvation and others to damnation. This entails that God wills not only the reprobation of the damned but also the sin which leads to it, as he who wills the end must will the means. This doctrine was later, however, rejected by the more moderate Calvinists.

Calvin's attitude to the Church differs from that of Luther. He defended a theocratic polity, subjecting the State to the Church, as contrasted with Luther who upheld the supremacy of the State. In the question of the Sacraments, esp. the Lord's Supper, Calvin attempted a compromise between Luther's belief in the *Real Presence, expressed in his doctrine of *consubstantiation, and H. *Zwingli's view of a mere symbolism. His language is at times ambiguous, but his thought seems to tend more in the direction of Zwingli, sometimes regarding the Sacraments as a testimony of God's grace, confirmed by an external sign.

The most influential document of strict Calvinism is the Second *Helvetic Confession of 1566, which was accepted in many reformed countries. The *Huguenots were Calvinists, and in 1622 Calvinism became the State religion in the Netherlands, where there occurred a split over the predestinarian issue which led to the formation of the parties of the *Supralapsarians (*Gomarists) and *Sublapsarians (*Arminians). In England, though Calvinist doctrines infiltrated into the *Thirty-Nine Articles, the spirit of the Episcopalian system was opposed to it, but it gained a firm foothold in the Nonconformist Churches. It found its most congenial soil in Scotland, esp. through J. *Knox, one of its most rigid representatives. From Great Britain it spread to N. America, where many sects profess it in a more or less modified form. In Germany it replaced Lutheranism in several places, e.g. Brandenburg and the Palatinate. Calvinism suffered severe setbacks through the rationalism of the 18th and 19th cents., but recently it has once more come to the fore, esp. through the works of K. *Barth, whose influence has been considerable not only in the Protestant Churches on the Continent but also in the C of E. Its attraction for the modern religious mind is probably due to the stress it lays on the omnipotence of God and the nothingness of man as a reaction against the easy humanitarianism of 19th cent. liberal Protestantism.

Dogmatic Confessions in E. F. K. Müller, Die Bekenntnisschriften der reformierten Kirche (Leipzig, 1903). A. Kuyper, Calvinism (L. P. Stone Lectures [in Eng.], Amsterdam and New York, 1899); W. Hastie, The Theology of the Reformed Church (ed. W. Fulton, Croall Lectures for 1892; 1904); T. M. *Lindsay, A History of the Reformation, ii (1907); A. Dakin, Calvinism (Studies in Theology, 1940); J. T. McNeill, The History and Character of Calvinism (New York and London, 1954); G. L. Hunt (ed.), Calvinism and the Political Order (Philadelphia, 1965). A. Schweizer, Die Glaubenslehre der evangelisch-reformirten Kirche dargestellt (2 vols., Zürich, 1844–7); id., Die protestantischen Centraldogmen in ihrer Entwicklung innerhalb der reformierten Kirche (2 vols., Zürich, 1854–6). H. Clavier, Études sur le Calvinisme (1936). A. A. van Schelven, Het Calvinisme gedurende zijn bloeitijd (3 vols., 1943–65). K. Barth, Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (Zürich, 1948). J. Orr in H.E.R.E., iii (1901), pp. 146–55. A. Baudrillart in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1398–1422.

CALVINISTIC METHODISM. The Church which was established in Wales through the revivalist preaching of Griffith *Jones of Llanddowror (1683–1761), Howel *Harris of Trevecca (1714–73), and Daniel Rowlands of Llangeitho (1713–90). They had contacts with English *Methodists and their first Association was held in 1743 (eighteen months before Wesley's first Conference), but there was no wish to separate from the C of E. At the time of the revival of 1762 Rowlands, whose licence had been suspended by the Bp. of *St. Davids, built a meeting-house at Llangeitho to which his preaching drew great numbers. In 1770 an annotated Welsh Bible was published by Peter Williams. The movement was brought to North Wales by Thomas Charles, who joined the Methodists in 1784. Separation from the Establishment began in 1795 as a result of persecution. Since poor preachers, hampered by heavy fines, were obliged to seek the protection of the *Toleration Act, their meeting-houses were registered as Dissenting Chapels. The first ordinations of ministers in the Connexion took place only in 1811. The Confession of Faith (based on the *Westminster Confession) was drawn up in 1823 and the Constitutional Deed was formally completed in 1826. The first college for candidates for the ministry was founded at Bala in 1837 with Lewis Edwards as principal, and in 1842 the South Wales Association opened a college at Trevecca, David Charles being principal. In 1905 the South Wales Association founded a college at Aberystwyth, and gradually staff and students were transferred here from both Trevecca and Bala. In 1840 a Missionary Society was formed, to work in Brittany and India. By the Calvinistic Methodist or Presbyterian Church of Wales Act of 1933, the autonomy of the Church in spiritual matters was secured and a Properties Board established.

By the constitution local churches report to their district meeting, which in turn reports to the Presbytery, which is the monthly meeting of a group of districts. The Presbyteries then appoint delegates to the Associations, which are the main legislative courts of the Church. There are three Associations, the North and the South being Welsh-speaking, and the East being English-speaking. Ministers are ordained by the Associations. A General Assembly of the Associations was established in 1864; it meets annually and is a deliberative body which helps to co-ordinate the doctrinal, legislative and financial policies of the Associations. The ministry is not now itinerant, but ministers often have several churches within their pastoral care. While deacons of a church have a certain latitude in inviting ministers to occupy the pulpit, the Presbyteries now operate a rota system, whereby all churches within their areas receive a regular ministry. Over three quarters of its 1169 churches are Welsh-speaking and many of its ministers and members are zealous defenders of Welsh nationality and language. Many of its members are much involved in education, politics and social service.

The Church was a founder member of the World Presbyterian Alliance and is a member of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Its membership in 1980 was 82,653.

The Rules of Discipline (in Welsh) were first publd. at Caerleon, 1801; the Confession of Faith (also in Welsh), preceded by a brief history of the Movement, was publd. at Aberystwyth, 1824; Eng. tr. under the title The History, Constitution, Rules of Discipline and Confession of the Calvinistic Methodists in Wales (London, 1827; revised Welsh ed., 1876; Eng. tr., 1877). The Constitutional Deed of 1826 is pr. in the Legal Hand-Book for the Calvinistic Methodist Connexion (ed. 2, Wrexham [1911]), pp. 57–135. There is a considerable literature in Welsh. Works in English include W. Williams, Welsh Calvinistic Methodism. A Historical Sketch of the Presbyterian Church of Wales (London, 1872). M. W. Williams, Creative Fellowship. An Outline of the History of Calvinistic Methodism in Wales (Caernarvon, 1935). R. R. Williams, Flames from the Altar. Howell Harris and his Contemporaries (ib., 1962). R. B. Knox, Voices from the Past. History of the English Conference of the Presbyterian Church of Wales, 1889–1938 (1969). D. E. Jenkins, Calvinistic Methodist Holy Orders (Caernarvon, 1911). A representative picture is given in E. Price, The History of Penuel Calvinistic Methodist Church, Ebbw Vale (Wrexham, 1925). Journal of the Calvinistic Methodist Historical Society (Caernarvon, 1916 ff.). F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), p. 792 f., with bibl., p. 750, s.v. 'Methodismus', with further reff. See also lives of H. Harris, cited s.v.

CAMALDOLESE. A religious order founded c. 1012 by St. *Romuald at Camaldoli (Campus Maldoli) near Arezzo. Its ideal was the barest minimum of communal ties. This primitive severity was gradually relaxed in a number of the daughter hermitages, and in 1102 a monastery was founded at Fontebuono on ordinary *coenobitic lines. St. Romuald left no written rule, and practice in the different congregations has varied considerably to the present day. The habit is a white tunic, with hood and *scapular of the same colour. There is also an order of Camaldolese nuns.

L. Schiaparelli–F. Baldasseroni–E. Lasino (edd.), Regesto di Camaldoli (Regesta Chartarum Italiae, ii, v, xiii, xiv, 1907–22). M. Ziegelbauer, O.S.B., Centifolium camaldulense, sive Notitia Scriptorum Camaldulensium (Venice, 1750). J. B. Mittarelli, O.S.B.–A. Costadoni, O.S.B., Annales Camaldulenses Ordinis Sancti Benedicti (9 vols., Venice, 1755–73). Cenni storici del sacro eremo di Camaldoli (ed. 2, Florence, 1864). A. Giabbani, O.S.B., L'Eremo. Vita e spiritualità eremitica nel monachismo camaldolese primitivo (Studi e Documenti di Storia religiosa; Brescia, 1945). A. Pagnani, O.S.B., Storia dei Benedettini Camaldolesi Cenobiti, Eremiti, Monache ed Oblati (Sassoferrato, 1949). G. Tabacco, 'Romualdo di Ravenna e gli inizi dell'eremitismo camaldolese' in L'Eremitismo in occidente nei secoli XI e XII (Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, iv; Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi. Serie Terza, Varia, iv; 1965), pp. 73–119. Heimbucher, i, pp. 315–20, and ii, p. 655, with bibl. reff. A. Des Mazis, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 512–36, with bibl.; A. Giabbani, O.S.B., in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 1095–7, s.v.

CAMBRIDGE CAMDEN SOCIETY. A society founded in May 1839 by J. M. *Neale and B. *Webb for the study of ecclesiastical art. Its first president was T. Thorp, Archdeacon of Bristol and Webb's tutor at Trinity; and in 1841 it began to issue its monthly periodical, The Ecclesiologist. In 1846, when its headquarters removed to London, its name was altered to the 'Ecclesiological Society', under which title it survived till 1868. It greatly stimulated interest in church architecture and traditional Catholic worship, and thus assisted the liturgical and ceremonial revival in the C of E in the later 19th cent.

A Report containing Lists of Officers and Members, 'Laws', Lists of Churches Visited, Publications, etc., was publd. annually at Cambridge from 1840 to 1844, at less frequent intervals at London from 1845 to 1864. In all 189 numbers of The Ecclesiologist were issued (Nov. 1841–Dec. 1868). J. F. White, The Cambridge Movement. The Ecclesiologists and the Gothic Revival (Cambridge, 1962).

CAMBRIDGE PLATONISTS. They were a group of influential philosophical divines who flourished at Cambridge between 1633 and 1688. They stood between the Puritans and High Anglicans and consistently advocated tolerance and comprehension within the Church, basing their demand on their conception that reason was the arbiter both of natural and of revealed religion. They held that it could judge the data of revelation by virtue of the indwelling of God in the mind, since 'the spirit in man is the candle of the Lord' (B. *Whichcote). This mystical view of reason was derived principally from *Neoplatonism, though the Cambridge Platonists interpreted it not so much as ecstasy as an abiding direction of will and affection alike. They were in many ways uncritical, discovering, e.g., affinities between *Platonism and the OT. The chief modern influence on their philosophy was R. *Descartes, whose intellectualism appealed to them, though they sought to purge his doctrines from his materialist view of the inanimate world by combining with them belief in an immanent divine soul, and supplementing his mechanism by teleology. They applied their Platonism in the sphere of ethics and epistemology to establish the identity of the Will of God and the 'Summum Bonum' and of the worlds of sense and thought.

The most important of the Cambridge Platonists were B. Whichcote (1609–83), N. Culverwel (d. 1651?), John Smith (1618–52), R. *Cudworth (1617–88), H. *More (1614–87).

Collections of extracts by E. T. Campagnac (Oxford, 1901), G. R. Cragg (Library of Protestant Thought, New York, 1968) and C. A. Patrides (Stratford-upon-Avon Library, v; 1969). J. Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the 17th Century (2 vols., 1872); F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926). Rosalie L. Colie, Light and Enlightenment. A Study of the Cambridge Platonists and the Dutch Arminians (Cambridge, 1957). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 81–155.

CAMELAUCUM. The original name of the Papal tiara (q.v.), found, e.g., in the Life of Pope Constantine (d. 715) in the Liber Pontificalis, and in the '*Donation of Constantine' (8th–9th cent.).

CAMERARIUS, JOACHIM (1500–74), German classical scholar and reformer. In 1530 he sat in the Diet of *Augsburg as deputy for Nuremberg, and took part in drawing up the famous Confession. In 1535 he undertook the reorganization of the University of *Tübingen, and in 1541 that of Leipzig. A personal friend of the eirenic P. *Melanchthon, whose biography he wrote in elegant Latin, he acted as a moderating influence in Lutheranism; and he discussed in 1535 with Francis I and in 1568 with Maximilian II the possibility of reunion between Catholics and Protestants.

Study by F. Stählin (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, clix. 1936). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 687–9, s.v., with bibl. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 104 (Nos. 2545–62).

CAMERLENGO (Lat. camerarius). The chamberlain of the Papal court, who administers the properties and revenues of the Holy See, and during a vacancy in the Papacy those of the whole RC Church. One of his duties is to assemble and direct the *conclave. He is always a *cardinal.

J. Raffalli in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 1275–8, s.v.

CAMERON, JOHN (d. 1446), Bp. of Glasgow and Chancellor of Scotland. In 1424 he became secretary to James I and in the next year keeper of the Privy Seal. Appointed chancellor c. 1426, he supported the King in his attack on the ecclesiastical courts, taking a prominent part in the Council of Perth in 1427 and in drawing up the anti-ecclesiastical Act of Parliament of the same year. In 1428 he was elected Bp. of Glasgow. When *Martin V summoned Cameron to Rome on account of his political activities, the King informed the Pope (1429) that he could not spare his Chancellor. On Cameron's refusal to obey a fresh summons to Rome in 1433, he was excommunicated by *Eugenius IV. He took part, however, in the Council of *Basle as one of the two Scottish representatives. In 1436 he went to Rome, where he obtained the Pope's promise to take steps for the reform of the Church in Scotland. In 1445 he was a member of the commission which had to decide the dispute on the testamentary powers of bishops.

T. A. Archer in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 293–5, s.v., with reff.

CAMERON, JOHN (c. 1579–1625), Protestant theologian. He was educated at Glasgow university, and in 1600 went to France, where he taught classics at the college of Bergerac and philosophy at the university of Sedan. He later was a private tutor at Paris, Geneva, and Heidelberg, at the same time pursuing his studies. In 1608 he was appointed a minister of the Protestant Church at Bordeaux, and in 1618 he succeeded F. *Gomar as professor of divinity at Saumur. In 1620 religious conditions in France caused him to return to England, and in 1622 he was made principal of the university of Glasgow. He was a supporter of *James (VI and) I and his exalted views on the prerogatives of the royal power, but the unpopularity of these views compelled him to return to Saumur in 1623. In 1624 he became professor of divinity at Montauban, where his doctrine of passive obedience to the secular authorities roused such hostility that he was assaulted in the street and his health severely injured. He died in the following year. Cameron was a very gifted linguist as well as a learned theologian. Among his writings are treatises on Grace and Free-Will (1618) and on the Satisfaction of Christ for sin (1620), in which he upheld that God's action on the will was moral, not physical, and thus was considered by stricter *Calvinists as inclining to *Pelagianism. His doctrines were accepted by a school of contemporary theologians ('Cameronites'), which included S. *Bochart and J. *Daillé.

G. B. Maury, 'John Cameron: A Scottish Protestant Theologian in France (1579–1625)' in Scottish Historical Review, vii (1910), pp. 325–45. T. F. Henderson in D.N.B., viii (1886), p. 295 f., s.v.

CAMERON, RICHARD (d. 1680), Scottish *Covenanting leader. In his youth he was a schoolmaster under the episcopal incumbent of Falkland, Fife, but was won by the Covenanting cause and became a field-preacher, influencing thousands by his eloquence. In 1678 he went to Holland, returned in 1680, and shortly afterwards joined with a few other poor men in the 'Sanquhar Declaration', which disowned allegiance to *Charles II and declared war upon him, attacking strongly all Covenanters who accepted the royal indulgence then offered. He fell in an affray with some royal troops at Airds Moss in Ayrshire on 22 July 1680.

Lives by J. Herkless (London [1896]) and A. Veitch (ib., 1948).

CAMERONIANS. A term applied at the end of the 17th cent. to extreme *Covenanters, such as the followers of R. *Cameron (q.v.) and esp. the 'Reformed Presbyterians' who declined the settlement of the Established Church of Scotland made in 1690 under William and Mary, though they themselves repudiated the name.

J. H. Burton, The History of Scotland from Agricola's Invasion to the Revolution of 1688, vii (1870), pp. 527–76 passim. J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960), esp. pp. 250–53, 262 f. F. *Kattenbusch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 691–3, s.v. 'Cameronianer', with bibl. See also bibl. to Covenanters and Reformed Presbyterian Church.

CAMILLUS OF LELLIS, St. (1550–1614), founder of the 'Ministers of the Sick'. He was a native of the kingdom of Naples, and early joined the Venetian army against the Turks. His passion for gambling having reduced him to great poverty, he was employed as a labourer by the *Capuchins at Manfredonia in 1574, where, in 1575, he was converted and began to embrace a very penitential life. He tried his vocation with the Capuchins and again with the *Franciscan *Recollects, but an incurable disease in his legs compelled him to leave both and he became a nurse at the hospital of St. Giacomo in Rome. Under the guidance of St. *Philip Neri he grew to great holiness, and resolved to found an order for the care of the sick. He was ordained priest in 1584, and about the same time established a congregation, also called 'Camillians', who take a fourth vow to devote themselves to the service of the sick, esp. the plague-stricken. The congregation was approved by the Pope in 1586 and elevated to an order with the privileges of the *Mendicants by *Gregory XIV in 1591. Despite several painful illnesses Camillus remained its superior-general till 1607, when he resigned the government of his order to devote himself more fully to the care of the sick. His striking reforms in this field envisaged both the spiritual and the material needs of the sick, such as the separation of those afflicted with contagious diseases, well-aired wards, special diet, and, particularly, an effective spiritual assistance to the dying, whence his order is also called 'Fathers of a Good Death' or 'Agonizantes'. He was canonized in 1746, made patron of the sick by *Leo XIII in 1886, and of nurses and nursing associations by *Pius XI in 1930. Feast day, 14 (formerly 18) July.

The principal authority is the life by S. Cicatelli, for 26 years his companion and later general of the order, publd. at Viterbo, 1615; Eng. tr. by F. W. *Faber, 2 vols., 1850–51. Further life by G. B. de Rossi, S.J. (Rome, 1644). M. Vanti, S. Camillo de Lellis 1550–1614, apostolo di carità infermiera (Turin-Rome, 1929). A. C. Oldmeadow, The First Red Cross, Camillus de Lellis, 1550–1614 (1923; popular). Other lives by T. Blanc (Paris, 1858), W. Baeumker (Frankfurt, 1887), M.

Amici (Rome, 1913), C. C. Martindale, S.J. (London, 1946), and H. Pannell (Paris, 1964). M. Vanti, Lo spirito di S. Camillo de Lellis (ed. 2, Rome, 1944), and other works by this author. Id.–P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, iii (Rome, 1963), cols. 707–22, s.v., with bibl. On the Order see also Heimbucher, ii, pp. 114–19 and 664–6.

CAMISARDS. A group of fanatical French Protestants, who rose in revolt in the Cévennes district in 1702 after the rigorous steps taken by Louis XIV to suppress their religion. They often fell under ecstatic inspiration and fought with a frenzy that neither gave nor expected quarter. Considerable cruelty was shown on both sides, and the revolt was suppressed in 1705. A further outbreak in 1709 was quickly checked. In England, where some of them found sanctuary, the Camisards were known as 'French Prophets'. The word 'Camisard' is of uncertain origin. It may be from camise (a 'shirt'—from the fact that they are said to have worn shirts over their clothes as a disguise during night attacks), camis (a 'road', from their practice of waylaying people), or camisade (a 'nocturnal attack').

C. Tylor, The Camisards (1893). C. Bost, Les Prédicants protestants des Cévennes et du Bas-Languedoc, 1684–1700 (2 vols., 1912). A. Ducasse, La Guerre des camisards. La résistance huguenote sous Louis XIV (1946). F. Puaux, 'Origines, causes et conséquences de la guerre des camisards' in Rev. Hist., cxxix (1918), pp. 1–21 and 209–43. R. A. Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), pp. 356–71. F. Vernet in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1435–43, s.v.; C. Anderson Scott in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), p. 175 f., s.v.; J. Dedieu in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 607–14, s.v., with bibl.

CAMPAGUS (Late Lat.). Originally a kind of military boot, the word came into current usage for episcopal *sandals (q.v.).

CAMPANELLA, TOMMASO (baptized Giovanni Domenico) (1568–1639), Italian philosopher. In 1582 he became a *Dominican and in 1590 published his first important work, a defence of the philosopher Bernardino *Telesio (d. 1588), called Philosophia Sensibus Demonstrata. His open disavowal of the *Aristotelian philosophy aroused the suspicions of his ecclesiastical superiors, while his suspected complicity in anti-Spanish plots provoked the civil authorities of Naples. In 1603 he was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment, but he was finally released in 1629. In 1634 he withdrew to France in disguise, and spent the rest of his life at the convent of St.-Honoré in Paris.

His philosophy was in the *Platonist tradition. Anticipating R. *Descartes, he held that individual consciousness was the fundamental fact of experience, and that the existence of God could be deduced from the presence of the idea of God in human consciousness. His political philosophy owed much both to *Plato and to St. *Augustine. He advocated a reconstruction of the political order closely modelled on Plato's 'Republic', with society under the control of philosopher-priests who would submit the government of the state to the supreme authority of the Pope. His most important work in this field is the Civitas Solis (1623). Campanella was also a poet of some ability.

Lettere ed. by V. Spampanato (Bari, 1926); Poesie ed. G. Gentile (Florence, 1939), and L. Firpo (Rome, 1944); Opuscoli Inediti ed. id. (Florence, 1951), and ed. of complete works by id. (Verona, 1954 ff.). Eng. tr. of his 'Apologia pro Galileo', by G. McColley in Smith College Studies in History, xxii (Northampton, Mass., 1937), Nos. 3 and 4. M. Baldacchini, Vita di Tommaso Campanella (Naples, 1847). L. Amabile, Fra Tommaso Campanella. La sua congiura, i suoi processi e la sua pazzia (3 vols., 1882) and other works. L. Blanchet, Campanella (Paris, 1920; repr. New York [1964]); L. Firpo (ed.), Ricerche campanelliane (Biblioteca Storica Sansoni, N.S., xiii, 1947); G. di Napoli, Tommaso Campanella (Problemi d'Oggi, Ser. II, x, 1947); A. Corsano, Tommaso Campanella (Bari 1961). E. G. Gardner, Tommaso Campanella and his Poetry (Taylorian Lecture, 1923). L. Firpo, Bibliografia degli scritti di Tommaso Campanella (1940). Further bibl. in Überweg, iii, p. 631 f.

CAMPANILE. In general, any bell-tower or bell-steeple; but the name is esp. applied to the detached bell-tower which originated in Italy. The earliest examples of the latter are those of S. Apollinare in Classe and S. Apollinare Nuovo at *Ravenna, both 6th cent. Other famous campaniles are at S. Francesco, Assisi, at S. Front, Périgueux, at S. Marco, *Venice, at S. Zeno Maggiore, *Verona, at Siena Cathedral and the Leaning Tower of Pisa.

CAMPBELL, ALEXANDER (1788–1866), founder of the 'Campbellites'. The son of Thomas Campbell (1763–1854), a *Presbyterian minister of the 'Secession Church', he emigrated in 1809 from Glasgow to the U.S.A., whither his father had gone two years earlier. At first he joined the *Baptist Communion, having become convinced of the necessity for baptism by *immersion; but differences of belief separated him from this body, and in 1827 he founded a congregation known as the '*Disciples of Christ' or Campbellites. He advocated Christian union on the basis of NT teaching, believing that it would usher in a period of Divine blessing. In 1841 he founded 'Bethany College' as a training college for which the Bible was to be the sole fundamental textbook. He edited, and himself wrote nearly the whole of, The Christian Baptist (7 vols., 1823–30), besides writing numerous other works. See also Disciples of Christ.

Christianity as it was, being a Selection from the Writings of A. Campbell and others (1867); The Christian Hymn Book, compiled from the Writings of A. Campbell and others (1869). Memoirs ed. by R. Richardson (2 vols., Philadelphia, Pa., 1871). R. F. West, Alexander Campbell and Natural Religion (New Haven, 1948). G. C. Boase in D.N.B., viii (1886), p. 310 f.

CAMPBELL, JOHN McLEOD (1800–72), Scottish theologian. Educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, he was appointed in 1825 to the cure of Row in Strathclyde. Here, in 1826, he became convinced of the doctrine of 'assurance of faith', which, in conjunction with his belief in the universality of the Atonement, aroused much opposition from his congregation and others as at variance with *Presbyterian principles. In 1831 the *General Assembly found him guilty of heresy and deprived him of his cure. Campbell maintained, however, a successful ministry to an independent congregation at Glasgow from 1833 until 1859, when ill-health forced his retirement. The main thesis of his principal work, The Nature of the Atonement and its Relation to Remission of Sins and Eternal Life (1856), was that the spiritual context of the sufferings of Christ, rather than their penal character, made atonement for sin.

J. McL. Campbell, Reminiscences and Reflections (ed. by his son, Donald Campbell, 1873). Study by J. McL. Campbell [grandson] in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 155–67.

CAMPEGGIO, LORENZO (1472–1539), Abp. of *Bologna. After the death of his wife (by whom he had had five children), he was ordained in 1510. He was presented with the Bpric. of Feltre in 1512; and from 1513 to 1517 he was *nuncio at the Imperial court. In 1518 he was sent to England by *Leo X to try to gain *Henry VIII's support for a crusade against the Turks, but without success. He was subsequently made protector of England in the Roman *curia, and in 1524 Henry created him Bp. of *Salisbury, while in 1523 the Pope had made him Abp. of Bologna. At this time he also contended on behalf of Papal interests in Germany, but with little success. In 1528 he came back to England in the matter of Henry's projected divorce. He was provided with a document which merely defined the relevant ecclesiastical law and asserted that the question of fact must be settled in England by himself and T. *Wolsey, though the Pope had secretly pledged him to refer the matter to Rome before passing final judgement. Failing to satisfy the King, he left England in 1529 and took part in the coronation of *Charles V in the following year. In 1535 he was deprived by Act of Parliament of the see of Salisbury. He was created a cardinal in 1537.

Primary docc. concerning his part in the divorce case ed. S. Ehses, Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII von England, 1527–1534 (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte in Verbindung mit ihrem historischen Institut in Rom herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, ii, 1893), with introd. on Campeggio's life up to 1528, pp. xvi–xxxi; id., 'Kardinal Lorenzo Campeggio auf dem Reichstage von Augsburg, 1530' in R.Q., xvii (1903), pp. 383–406, xviii (1904), pp. 358–84, and xix (1905), pp. 129–225, with docc. Early life by C. Sigonio (Bologna, 1581). E. V. Cardinal, C.S.V., Cardinal Lorenzo Campeggio, Legate to the Courts of Henry VIII and Charles V (Boston, 1935). J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., viii (1886), p. 398 f.; E. V. Cardinal, C.S.V., in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 1113, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to Henry VIII.

CAMPION, St. EDMUND (1540–81), *Jesuit. The son of a London bookseller, he was educated at the expense of the Grocers' Guild at a London grammar school, Christ's Hospital, and St. John's College, Oxford, where he became a Junior Fellow in 1557. He was distinguished by his powers of leadership and his oratorical ability; in 1566 he was chosen by the university to welcome Queen *Elizabeth I to Oxford. Although already Catholic in sympathy, he was ordained deacon in the C of E in 1569, but being troubled in conscience left Oxford in 1570 for *Dublin, hoping for the revival of the university. Returning to England in disguise in 1571, he joined W. *Allen at *Douai in the same year and was received into the RC Church. Proceeding to Rome as a pilgrim, he entered the Jesuit Order in 1573 and was ordained in 1578. After a novitiate spent in Brünn, Bohemia, he taught at Prague until in 1580 he joined R. *Parsons in the first Jesuit mission to England. He preached extensively and with considerable effect in London and Lancs. In 1581 he secretly published a pamphlet entitled Decem Rationes, defending the RC position. He was arrested later in the year, but appears to have been offered his life if he would return to the C of E. On his refusal he was charged with conspiracy against the Crown, put on the rack and executed at Tyburn (1 Dec. 1581). He was among the *Forty Martyrs canonized in 1970.

[W. *Allen,] A Brief History of the Glorious Martyrdom of Twelve Reverend Priests (1582; new ed. by J. H. Pollen, S.J., 1908). R. Simpson, Edmund Campion (1867). Modern life by L. I. Guiney ('The St. Nicholas Series', 1908); study by E. Waugh (London, 1935). A. De Bil in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 650–56, s.v.

CAMP MEETING. A religious revivalist meeting held out of doors and lasting for several days, during which those taking part live in tents or temporary huts. This kind of meeting, first tried in 1799, has on occasion been adopted by several religious bodies, but is most frequently used by *Methodists, esp. in the U.S.A.

CANAAN. The land, later known as Palestine, which the Israelites occupied and conquered by degrees in the latter part of the second millennium B.C. or, acc. to some views, rather earlier. Of the original inhabitants (called Canaanites) some survived, and appear to have had a reactionary influence upon the development and maintenance of Hebrew monotheism.

L. H. Vincent, O.P., Canaan d'après l'exploration récente (1907). C. F. Burney, Israel's Settlement in Canaan (Schweich Lectures for 1917; 1918); F. Schmidtke, Die Einwanderung Israels in Kanaan (1933). Kathleen M. Kenyon, Amorites and Canaanites (Schweich Lectures, 1963; 1966). A. Barbois, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 997–1022, s.v., with bibl.; A. Bea, S.J., and E. Josi in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 480–7, s.v. 'Canaan e Cananei', with further bibl.

CANADA, Christianity in. The early settlements of Champlain (Port Royal, Acadia, 1605; Quebec, Canada, 1608) were inspired by two objects: the pursuit of the trade in fur and the conversion of the Indians. Though the *Recollects undertook the first organized missionary efforts, leadership passed early to the *Jesuits, whose explorations and martyrdoms form a heroic chapter in Canadian history. They and Bishop Laval (in Canada, 1659–1688) devoted themselves to curbing the excesses of the fur trade and to building up a purely RC and *ultramontanist colony, free of *Gallicanism and *Jansenism as well as *Huguenots—who were totally excluded from an early date. After the British conquest in 1759 immigrants from the American colonies and later from the British Isles introduced a variety of religious denominations, and frontier revivalists contributed a strong evangelical tradition. The Church of England was at first established, but the numerical preponderance of other groups led to its loss of special status. The United Church of Canada was formed in 1925 by the union of *Methodists, *Congregationalists, and most *Presbyterians. Today the chief denominations are RC, United, and Anglican, with numerous smaller churches and sects, reflecting the varied origins of the people. In the Canadian Council of Churches, formed in 1944, most non-Roman churches collaborate to meet the challenges of modern society. RCs and Anglicans are most active in missionary work among Indians and Eskimos. Education is controlled by the provinces. In the creation of provincial systems religion was a crucial issue, with the result that in most provinces education is secular in varying degrees, with the notable exceptions of Quebec and Newfoundland.

A. Gosselin, La Mission du Canada avant Mgr de Laval, 1615–59 (Évreux, 1909); id., L'Église du Canada depuis Monseigneur de Laval jusqu'à la conquête (3 vols., Quebec, 1911–1914); id., L'Église du Canada après la conquête (2 vols., ib., 1916–17). H. H. Walsh, The Church in the French Era. From Colonization to the British Conquest (Toronto, 1966). R. Rumilly, Histoire de la Province de Québec (36 vols., Montreal, [1940–66]). A. G. Morice, O.M.I., History of the Catholic Church in Western Canada (2 vols., Quebec, 1910). R. G. Thwaite (ed.), The Jesuit Relations and Other Documents.

Travels and Explorations of the Jesuit Missions in New France, 1610–1791 (73 vols., Cleveland, 1896–1901; selections by Edna Kenton, London, 1927). J. Hulliger, L'Enseignement social des évêques canadiens de 1891 à 1950 (Montreal, 1958).

P. Carrington, The Anglican Church in Canada (Toronto, 1963). T. C. B. Boon, The Anglican Church from the Bay to the Rockies. A History of the Ecclesiastical Province of Rupert's Land and its dioceses, 1820–1950 (ib., 1962). W. B. Heeney (ed.), Leaders of the Canadian Church (3 vols., ib., 1918–43). H. P. Thompson, Into All Lands. The History of the S.P.G., 1701–1950 (1951), pp. 128–55, 242–73, and 502–14, with bibl., p. 726.

W. Gregg, History of the Presbyterian Church in the Dominion of Canada from the Earliest Times to 1834 (Toronto, 1885; ed. 2, 1905). J. T. McNeill, The Presbyterian Church in Canada, 1875–1925 (ib., 1925). A. Sutherland, Methodism in Canada. Its Work and Its Story (1903). C. E. Silcox, Church Union in Canada. Its Causes and Consequences (New York, 1933). J. W. Grant, The Canadian Experience of Church Union (1967). A. G. Dorland, A History of the Society of Friends (Quakers) in Canada (Toronto, 1927). E. R. Fitch, The Baptists of Canada. A History of their Progress and Achievements (ib., [1911]). C. R. Cronmiller, A History of the Lutheran Church in Canada (1961 ff.).

H. H. Walsh, The Christian Church in Canada (Toronto, 1956). J. S. Moir (ed.), The Cross in Canada (ib., 1966). J. W. Grant (ed.), The Churches and the Canadian Experience (ib., 1963). S. D. Clark, Church and Sect in Canada (ib., 1948). C. B. Sissons, Church and State in Canadian Education (ib., 1959). R. T. Handy, A History of the Churches in the United States and Canada (Oxford, 1976), esp. pp. 116–35, 228–61, and 344–76.

Latourette, iii, pp. 168–85, with bibl. pp. 458–85 passim, v, pp. 3–45, with bibl. pp. 471–506 passim, and vii, pp. 157–62.

CANDLE. Candles are widely used in Christian worship, both in E. and W., esp. as ornaments of the *altar. They are lighted during liturgical services and at certain other times. The use of candles on the altar seems to have developed out of processional lights which were stood in earlier times beside or on the altar; and in the RC Church since 1969 it has been permissible to place the candles either on or around the altar. (See Altar Lights.) Votive candles are candles lit before statues in church as personal offerings. In the C of E the use of lights is governed by the *Ornaments Rubric, the *Lincoln Judgement (1890), and the *Lambeth Opinion of 1899. The last of these condemned portable lights, but the prohibition is now seldom if ever enforced. See also Altar Lights, Candlemas, Paschal Candle.

W. Mühlbauer, Geschichte und Bedeutung der (Wachs-) Lichter bei den kirchlichen Funktionen (1874); Rohault, vi (1888), ch. i, pp. 1–33. See also bibl. to Altar Lights.

CANDLEMAS. The feast commemorates the purification of the BVM and the presentation of Christ in the *Temple which took place, acc. to Lk. 2. 22–39, forty days after His birth, as the Jewish Law required (Lev. 12. 1–4). It was kept locally at *Jerusalem from c. 350 on 14 Feb. and later on 2 Feb. In 542 the Emp. *Justinian ordered its observance at *Constantinople as a thanksgiving for the cessation of plague, and it thence spread throughout the E., where it was called 'The Meeting' (ὑπαπαντή), i.e. of Christ with *Simeon. Somewhat later it began to be widely kept in the W.

A procession with lighted candles is the distinctive rite in the W. Acc. to the 1970 Roman Missal, the candles are to be blessed, if possible, somewhere other than where the Mass is to be celebrated. After an antiphon, during which the candles held by the people are lighted, a short homily and the prayer of blessing, there is a procession to the church; during it the *Nunc Dimittis, with the antiphon, 'Lumen ad revelationem' (Cf. Lk. 2. 32) or some other chant, is sung, commemorating Christ's entrance to the Temple. In the Liber Pontificalis, the institution of the procession is connected with the pontificate of Pope *Sergius (687–701).

In the RC Church from 1960 onwards it has, as in the E., been accounted a feast of the Lord, and is now officially designated the Presentation of the Lord; its proper title in the BCP is 'the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, commonly called the Purification of Saint Mary the Virgin'.

The feast is first described by *Etheria, Peregrinatio, 26. Other early refs. are in sermons by St. *Gregory of Nyssa (J. P. Migne, PG, xlvi, 1151–82), *Theodotus of Ancyra (J. P. Migne, op. cit., lxxvii, 1389–1412) and Abraham of Ephesus (6th cent.; P.O., xvi, 448–54). It owes its introduction to Rome, with three other feasts of the BVM, to Pope Sergius I; cf. L.P. (Duchesne), i, p. 376. See also L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), p. 462 (Eng. tr., 1903, p. 479), who prints the description of the Feast in the 'Ordo Romanus of St. Amand'. A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (ed. 3, 1953), p. 166 f. (Eng. ed., 1958, p. 150 f.). D. De Bruyne, O.S.B., 'L'Origine des processions de la chandeleur et des rogations à propos d'un sermon inédit' in R. Bén., xxxiv (1922), pp. 14–26, esp. pp. 18–26. E. de Moreau, S.J., 'L'Orient et Rome dans la fête du 2 février' in Nouvelle Revue Théologique, lxii (1935), pp. 5–20.

The use of candles is already mentioned in the Life of Abbot Theodosius by *Cyril of Scythopolis (ed. E. *Schwartz, T.U., xlix, Hft. 2, 1939, p. 236). On the blessing of the candles, A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter, i (1909), pp. 445–55. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 1, i, 1913), cols. 207–10, s.v. 'Chandeleur'. G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 341–5, s.v. 'Purificazione'.

CANGE, CHARLES DUFRESNE, SIEUR DU.

See Ducange, Charles Dufresne.

CANISIUS, St. PETER (1521–97), *Jesuit theologian. After studying theology at Cologne and Mainz, where he came under the influence of the Jesuit Pierre Lefèvre, he returned to Cologne. Here he founded a Jesuit colony, and attacked the Protestant views of Abp. *Hermann of Wied. From 1549 onwards he was working in Bavaria, Vienna, and Prague, preaching and lecturing against Protestantism. He secured the patronage of the Archduke, afterwards the Emperor, Ferdinand, by whom he was offered the bpric. of Vienna, an offer which the General of his Order commanded him to refuse. A vigorous exponent of the RC, and esp. the Jesuit, position, he compiled a number of catechisms of which the chief was the Summa Doctrinae Christianae (or Catechismus Major), published in 1554 with 211 questions and answers. Over 130 editions have since been issued. In 1556 he was made *Provincial of Upper Germany and was himself very largely responsible for the foundation of colleges at Augsburg, Munich, and Innsbruck, and the spread of Jesuit influence to Poland. To him, more than to any other, was due the remarkable success of the *Counter-Reformation in the south German lands. He was canonized in 1925 and at the same time (the first occasion that such an honour had coincided with a canonization) declared to be a *Doctor of the Church. Feast day, 21 Dec. (formerly 27 Apr.).

Works listed in Sommervogel, ii (1891), cols. 617–87, and viii (1908), cols. 1974–83. O. Braunsberger, S.J. (ed.), Beati Petri Canisii societatis Jesu Epistolae et Acta (8 vols., Freiburg i.Br., 1896–1923); modern ed. of his Catechisms by F. Streicher, S.J. (Societatis Jesu Selecti Scriptores, ii; 2 vols., Rome, 1933–6), and Meditationes seu Notae in Evangelicas Lectiones by id. (ib., iii; 2 vols. in 3, Munich, 1957–'1961' [1963]). J. Brodrick, S.J., Saint Peter Canisius, S.J., 1521–1597 (1935). Other lives and studies by L. Michel, S.J. (Lille, 1897), O. Braunsberger, S.J. (Freiburg i.Br., 1917), J. Metzler, S.J. (Münster i.W., 1927), J. H. M. Tesser, S.J. (Amsterdam, 1932), and W. Reany (London, 1931). X. Le Bachelet, S.J., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1507–37, s.v.

CANO, MELCHIOR (1509–60), Spanish theologian. In 1523 he entered the *Dominican Order at Salamanca, where he studied under F. *Vitoria. In 1533 he began to teach at Valladolid; in 1543 he was appointed to the first theological professorship at Alcalá; and in 1546 he succeeded Vitoria himself at Salamanca. He took an active part in the debates on the *Eucharist and on *Penance at the Council of *Trent. In his later years he became deeply involved in Spanish ecclesiastical politics, zealously opposing the *Jesuits and defending in his Consultatio theologica (1556) Philip II's anti-papal policy. In 1557 he was elected Provincial of the Dominican Order, but his appointment was not confirmed at Rome; and when re-elected in 1559, confirmation was again refused at first, though eventually granted. As a theologian his reputation rests on his posthumous De locis theologicis (Salamanca, 1563), in which he defended the unusual thesis that the consent of the parties is merely the *matter of the sacrament of matrimony, the *form being the sacerdotal blessing (see Marriage), a view which gave rise to considerable controversy at the Council of Trent and later.

Opera publd. Cologne in 1605. Life by F. Caballero (Madrid, 1871). A. Lang, Die Loci Theologici des Melchior Cano und die Methode des dogmatischen Beweises (1925). E. Marcotte, La Nature de la théologie d'après Melchior Cano (Ottawa, 1949), with bibl. M. Jacquin, O.P., 'Melchior Cano et la théologie moderne' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, ix (1920), pp. 121–41. F. Marín-Sola, O.P., 'Melchior Cano et la conclusion théologique' in Revue Thomiste, Nouvelle Série, iii (1920), pp. 1–13 and 101–15. Quétif-Échard, ii, pp. 176–8. P. Mandonnet, O.P., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1537–40, s.v.; E. Lamalle, S.J., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 532–4, s.v., with bibl.; F. Courtney, S.J., in N.C.E., iii (1967), p. 28 f., s.v.

CANON. The Greek word κανών meant a straight rod or bar. Metaphorically the term came to be used of the rules of an art or a trade or to signify a list or catalogue. In Christian language it was adopted to denote the list of inspired books which the Church regarded as composing Holy Scripture (see Canon of Scripture), liturgical rules, esp. that part of the Mass which includes the *consecration (see Canon of the Mass), and rules concerning the life and discipline of the Church. In law, the word 'canon' was gradually used exclusively of ecclesiastical enactments, and *Justinian distinguishes (civil) laws from (ecclesiastical) canons. In the Middle Ages the law of the Church came to be known as 'Canon Law' as distinct from 'Civil Law'. In the Councils of the early Church the term was usually reserved for disciplinary decisions; but since the 15th cent. Councils have more often used it for their dogmatic definitions. Generally speaking *Canon Law to-day covers the rules of the Church for her own organization, government, and administration.

H. Oppel, 'ΚΑΝΩΝ. Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte des Wortes und seiner lateinischen Entsprechungen', Philologus, Suppl., xxx (1937), pp. 1–108; L. Wenger, Canon in den römischen Rechtsquellen und in den Papyri. Eine Wortstudie (Sb. (Wien), ccxx, Abhandlungen 2; 1942).

CANON (ecclesiastical title). Though first applied to all clergy on the official staff of a diocese (excluding monks, private chaplains, &c.), the word was gradually limited to those secular clergy belonging to a cathedral or collegiate church. They had a share in the revenues of the Church and were bound to a common life there, though in the early Middle Ages this was not very uniformly interpreted. Before the 11th cent., a canonry was often consistent with the holding of private property and periods of non-residence; but from then onwards those continuing to maintain this mode of life came to be known as 'secular canons' to distinguish them from the *Augustinian or 'regular' canons (q.v.) who lived under a semi-monastic rule.

'Residentiary canons' form the permanent salaried staff of a cathedral and are responsible for the maintenance of its services, fabric, &c. In the C of E they have the right of electing or refusing to elect the Crown's nominee to a vacant episcopal see (but see Congé d'Élire). A 'non-residentiary canon' (often 'honorary canon') is one who holds an unsalaried post, which may entail certain privileges and responsibilities. '*Minor canons' are clerics usually chosen for their ability to sing the services in a cathedral, and in general have no say in its government. See also Prebend and Prebendary.

J. Molanus, De Canonicis Libri Tres (Cologne, 1587). E. Amort, Vetus Disciplina Canonicorum Regularium et Saecularium (2 vols., Venice, 1747). The legislation governing the main duties and prerogatives of canons in the RC Church is embodied in the CIC, cann. 397–421. On canons in the C of E, H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), esp. pp. 137–42. The most readily accessible discussions of the subject are in dictionary artt. D. Dunford in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 252–5, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 223–48, s.v. 'Chanoines', with bibl.; P. Torquebiau in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 471–88, s.v. 'Chanoines'; id., ib., cols. 530–95, s.v. 'Chapitres de chanoines', with bibl.; C. Dereine in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 355–405, s.v. 'Chanoines', passim (mainly on 'canons regular'). See also bibl. to Chapter.

CANON (hymnological). In the E. Church, the series of nine 'odes' or canticles, often acrostics, used chiefly at *Orthros. In practice there are normally only eight odes, the second being omitted except in Lent. The canon originates from the practice of singing the nine Biblical *Canticles during the second part of Orthros. At first the Biblical canticles were sung by themselves: then in the 7th cent. stanzas of poetry or *troparia began to be inserted between the verses of each canticle, and it is these sets of troparia that comprise the canon as we know it. In course of time the practice of reading the actual text of the canticles disappeared, being continued only in certain monasteries esp. on *Athos; and so the nine (in practice, eight) odes of the canon are now sung by themselves, with a brief refrain between the troparia. The text of the *Magnificat, however, is always included in full, except on a few great feasts. The introduction of canons is ascribed to St. *Andrew of Crete. Other famous authors of canons are St. *Cosmas Melodus, St. *John of Damascus, and St. *Theodore of Studios.

E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949), esp. pp. 168–209; ed. 2 (1961), pp. 198–239, with reff. Krumbacher, pp. 673–9 (on Andrew of Crete, John of Damascus, and Cosmas of Jerusalem). W. Christ, 'Über die Bedeutung von Hirmos, Troparion und Kanon in der griechischen Poesie des Mittelalters' in Sb. (Bayr.), 1870 (ii), pp. 75–108. O. Heiming, O.S.B., Syrische 'Eniânê und griechische Kanones (1932). A. *Fortescue in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2, 1910), cols. 1905–10, with bibl.

CANON EPISCOPALIS. In the Latin Rite, the bishop's liturgical book containing the *Ordinary of the Mass, with the form of episcopal blessing and other prayers and forms used by bishops.

CANON LAW. The body of ecclesiastical rules or laws imposed by authority in matters of faith, morals, and discipline.

This corpus of law grew up very gradually. Its beginnings are to be traced to the practice of convening Councils to settle matters of uncertainty or dispute and their issue of a considerable number of ad hoc pronouncements on matters of doctrine and discipline. Such pronouncements had varying degrees of authority, acc. to the importance of the Council and the area of the Church which it represented. The series of 20 miscellaneous canons promulgated at *Nicaea (325) came to possess a certain primacy in both East and West, owing to the unique authority enjoyed by this Council. To these were added the sets of canons of other Councils. As it happened, in the E. these Councils were often Arianizing assemblies (though this circumstance did not affect the orthodoxy of their canons), while in the W. the canons of the orthodox Council of *Sardica (343) were often attached to those of Nicaea and, owing to a confusion, sometimes supposed to be Nicene. The practice of the African Church of holding plenary Councils with exceptional frequency brought into being a large body of canons from its provinces. Evidence of the existence of canonical collections by the middle of the 5th cent. is provided by the citation at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) of the Antiochene canons of 341 (or possibly 330). Notable private collectors of canons were *John Scholasticus (who arranged the Greek canons known to him under subject-headings) in the E. and *Dionysius Exiguus and the unknown author of the *Hispana Collection in the W.

Side by side with the Councils the decrees of influential Bishops were another source of early ecclesiastical legislation. St. *Dionysius of Alexandria, St. *Gregory Thaumaturgus, St. *Basil of Caesarea, and St. *Amphilochius of Iconium all issued canonical letters. Special authority came to be enjoyed by the letters of the Popes (*Decretals) beginning with that of Pope *Siricius to Himerius of Tarragona (385). The 4th–5th cents. also saw the ascription of collections of canons to fictitious authors, such as the '*Apostolic Canons' (q.v.) and those attributed to St. *Hippolytus and other names of repute. Under *Charlemagne much standardization took place and by the next generation, as is shown by the *Forged Decretals, a trained body of canonists had come into being.

In the Middle Ages a decisive stage was reached when *Gratian issued his Decretum (c. 1140). Though in essence a private collection, the appearance of this work marked an epoch in the history of the subject and students have come to regard Gratian's work as the dividing line between ius antiquum and ius novum. (The law established later than *Trent has hence come to be termed ius novissimum.) The authority accorded to Gratian's Decretum led to its supplementation by a series of later collections (among them the *Extravagantes), as described in the entry *Corpus Iuris Canonici (q.v.). In the RC Church this last-named Corpus continued to enjoy authority right down to the present century. It was only the issue of a motu proprio by *Pius X on 19 Mar. 1904 which led to its being completely overhauled and codified. The standard text is now the Codex Iuris Canonici (q.v.), issued in 1917.

Together with laws accepted as universally binding, there have always been others of only local authority. While in general the Roman canon law was binding in England in the Middle Ages, this was supplemented to some extent by the local provincial decrees of Canterbury. In 1433 the Synodal Constitutions of the province from S. *Langton (1222) to H. *Chichele (1416) were issued by W. *Lyndwood in his famous Provinciale. In post-Reformation times these have been modified by the canons of 1603–4 and 1969 (see Canons, The).

Older works include J. Pignatelli, Consultationes Canonicae (3 vols., Rome, 1675; and many later edd.), and the writings of *Benedict XIV (q.v.), the greatest of modern canonists. J. F. von Schulte, Das katholische Kirchenrecht (2 vols., 1860, 1856; ed. 4, 1876); R. von Scherer, Kirchenrecht (1886). For texts of the Conciliar canons see the Concilia of J. *Hardouin, S.J., J. D. *Mansi, E. *Schwartz, and C. H. *Turner (qq.v.); convenient modern ed. of the early collections in F. Lauchert, Die Kanones der wichtigsten altkirchlichen Concilien (1896). On the history of early canon law in the West, the standard work is F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des kanonischen Rechts im Abendland, i (1870; all publd.); for the later history, J. F. von Schulte, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts von Gratian bis auf die Gegenwart (3 vols., 1875–80). P. Fournier–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident depuis les fausses décrétales jusqu'au décret de Gratien (2 vols., 1931–2). F. Cimetier, P.S.S., Les Sources du droit ecclésiastique (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses, 1930). R. Naz (ed.), Traité de droit canonique (4 vols., 1948–9). S. G. Kuttner, Harmony from Dissonance. An Interpretation of Medieval Canon Law (Latrobe, Pa., 1960). C. Duggan, Twelfth-Century Decretal Collections and their Importance in English History (1963). A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in C.I.C. (Malines, 1928 ff.; esp. I. i, 'Prolegomena', ed. 2., 1945). A. Villien, E. Magnin, A. Amanien, R. Naz (edd.), Dictionnaire de droit canonique (7 vols., 1935–65). C. Vogel and others in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 34–50, s.v. 'Canon Law, History of'.

CANON OF THE MASS (from Gk. κανών, 'measuring rod', 'rule', because fixed and unchanging), the consecratory prayer in the Roman Mass. A prayer of this kind is found in all the Eucharistic liturgies, Gk. and Lat. It always (with the possible exception of the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari) contains the Words of *Institution (q.v.).

Though the Roman Canon must be based ultimately on Gk. models, it is unlikely (agst. A. *Baumstark) that it was a translation from a Gk. original. It existed as early as the 4th cent. in a nearly related form, which is quoted by St. *Ambrose (d. 397) in his '*De Sacramentis' (q.v.). It received modifications at the hands of St. *Gregory the Great (590–604), by whose period it had assumed virtually its present form. Some early occurrences of it are in the *Gelasian Sacramentary (q.v.), the *Bobbio Missal, and the '*Missale Francorum' (7th cent.). The variations in the text, though they attract the attention of specialists, are of relatively minor importance; the remarkable fact is the universal acceptance of a virtually identical prayer throughout the West.

Its position in the rite is immediately after the *Preface and the *Sanctus, with the former of which it was prob. originally connected, the present Sanctus being an interpolation. It is now commonly held to begin at the words '*Te Igitur' (q.v.). It is a succession of short prayers, viz. (from their opening words) 'Te Igitur', 'Memento [vivorum]', *Communicantes (intercession, slightly variable at the chief feasts), 'Hanc Igitur', 'Quam Oblationem', 'Qui Pridie' (the actual words of Consecration; accompanied since the Middle Ages by the elevation of the Elements), 'Unde et Memores' (corresponding to the Gk. *Anamnesis, q.v.), 'Supra Quae', 'Supplices Te Rogamus' (possibly the remains of an ancient *Epiclesis, q.v.), 'Memento [defunctorum]', '*Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus', and 'Per Quem Haec Omnia' (concluding Doxology). The want of any clear sequence of thought, the existence of two separate lists of saints, and other considerations have suggested that its text was seriously dislocated at an earlier stage in its history; but none of the many modern attempts to reconstruct the original order has won wide acceptance.

From c. 800 until 1967 the Canon was recited silently, only the words 'Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus' and the concluding 'Per omnia saecula saeculorum' being said aloud. In 1967, however, audible recitation of the Canon and the use of the vernacular were authorized. In 1969 some semblance of literary unity was restored to the Canon when it became permissible to omit the conclusions to each of the component prayers except that preceding the doxology; at the same time most of the names in the 'Communicantes' and 'Nobis Quoque Peccatoribus' could be left out. See also Eucharistic Prayers.

Crit. edd. by B. Botte, O.S.B., Le Canon de la messe romaine (Louvain, 1935), with notes, and L. Eizenhöfer, O.S.B. (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Minor, i [Traditio textus] and vii [Textus propinqui]; Rome, 1954–66). B. Botte, O.S.B., and Christine Mohrmann (edd.), L'Ordinaire de la messe (Études Liturgiques, 2, 1953), esp. pp. 74–85. The best summary of the position at time of writing in Jungmann, ii (1952), pp. 127–340, with full bibl. reff.; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 101–274. Older theories on the history of the Roman Canon (some finally disproved by the identification of St. *Hippolytus as author of the Apostolic Tradition) summarized in A. *Fortescue, The Mass (1912), pp. 138–71. The large literature includes G. *Bickell, Messe und Pascha (1872); P. Drews, Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Kanons in der römischen Messe (1902); A. Baumstark, Liturgia romana e liturgia dell'esarcato. Il rito detto in seguito patriarchino e le origini del Canon Missae romano (Rome, 1904); P. Batiffol, Leçons sur la messe (1920), pp. 166–275; P. Oppenheim, O.S.B., Canon Missae Primitivus (Rome, 1948); B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Innocent Ier et le Canon de la Messe' in R.T.A.M., xix (1952), pp. 5–16, repr. in Travaux Liturgiques, ii (1962), pp. 236–47, and other artt. in this vol.

CANON OF SCRIPTURE (from Gk. κανών, 'measuring rod', 'rule'). The term, used also in a larger sense for a list or catalogue, gradually acquired a technical meaning for the Books which were officially received as containing the rule of the Christian faith. In this sense the words 'canon' and 'canonical', which had already been employed by *Origen, came into general use in the 4th cent. The idea of a Canon of Scripture, however, goes back to OT times.

In Judaism the sacred literature was known as books 'that defile the hands'. Acc. to the legend told in the apocryphal IV *Esdras and preserved in the *Pirqe Aboth, the Hebrew canon was closed by the 'Great Synagogue' starting with Ezra after the return from Exile. Modern scholars, however, agree that it was formed gradually at a later period, and was probably finally closed in the latter part of the 1st cent. A.D. The Jews of the *Dispersion regarded several additional Greek Books as equally inspired, viz. most of the Books printed in the AV and RV among the *Apocrypha. During the first three cents. these were regularly used also in the Church. In the 4th and 5th cents., however, several E. Fathers, e.g. St. *Gregory of Nazianzus and St. *Epiphanius, questioned their canonicity, and in the W. St. *Jerome esp. would admit only the Hebrew books as canonical. Though St. *Ambrose, St. *Augustine, and others placed them on the same footing as the other OT books, through St. Jerome's influence doubts as to their canonicity persisted in the W. throughout the Middle Ages, though they continued to be used in the Liturgy. In the 16th cent. they were rejected by the Reformers, whereas the Council of *Trent in its Fourth Session (8 Apr. 1546) imposed their acceptance as de fide on all RCs, a decision confirmed by the First *Vatican Council (1870). For the attitude of the Orthodox Churches of the E., see Apocrypha.

The formation of the NT Canon also had its vicissitudes. Its kernel, the Four Gospels and the 13 Epistles by St. Paul, had come to be accepted c. 130 and were placed on the same footing with the OT between 170 and 220. The other NT writings were received later. Doubts persisted, esp. in the case of Heb., Jude, 2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn. and Rev., as is shown, e.g., by a list drawn up by *Eusebius. On the other hand, certain writings, such as the Ep. of *Barnabas or the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas, were admitted by individual Churches, though rejected by the majority. St. *Athanasius in his Festal Ep. for 367 is the earliest exact witness to the present NT Canon. A Council prob. held at *Rome in 382 under St. *Damasus gave a complete list of the canonical books of both the OT and the NT (also known as the '*Gelasian Decree' because it was reproduced by Gelasius in 495), which is identical with the list given at Trent. In the early stages of this long history an important part was played by the controversy with *Marcion, whose canon consisted of a mutilated Gospel of St. Luke and ten of St. Paul's Epistles (also modified to square with his theology). Other notable early lists of NT Scriptures were the *Muratorian Fragment (q.v.) and can. 60 of the Council of *Laodicea (4th cent.).

The Canon of Scripture thus came to be defined as the collection of inspired writings, made by the tradition and authority of the Church, which contain the rule of Divine Faith. The principle that only the Church has the right to declare a book canonical is recognized by the RC Church, the Orthodox Churches, and the C of E, though the canon of the last-named Communion differs in excluding from the OT those books not contained in the Hebrew Bible. On this last point see also art. Apocrypha.

S. M. Zarb, O.P., De Historia Canonis Utriusque Testamenti (Rome, 1934). F. V. Filson, Which Books belong to the Bible? A Study of the Canon (Philadelphia [1957]). H. W. Howarth, 'The Influence of St. Jerome on the Canon of the Western Church' in J.T.S., x (1908–9), pp. 481–96; xi (1909–1910), pp. 321–47; xiii (1911–12), pp. 1–18. H. Höppl in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1022–45, s.v. 'Canonicité'. F. Schroeder in N.C.E., ii (1967), pp. 386–96, s.v. 'Bible, III (Canon)'.

On the OT Canon, W. R. *Smith, The Old Testament in the Jewish Church (1881); F. Buhl, Den gammeltestamentlige Skriftovering (Copenhagen, 1885), pt. 1 (Eng. tr., 1892, pp. 1–75); G. Wildeboer, Het Onstaan van den Kanons des Ouden Verbonds (Groningen, 1889; Eng. tr. by B. W. Bacon, The Origin of the Canon of the Old Testament, 1895); H. E. Ryle, The Canon of the Old Testament (1892). G. Ostborn, Cult and Canon. A Study in the Canonization of the Old Testament (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1950, pt. 10). P. Katz, 'The Old Testament Canon in Palestine and Alexandria' in Z.N.T.W., xlvii (1956), pp. 191–217. H. H. Rowley, The Growth of the Old Testament (Hutchinson's University Library, 1950; ed. 3, 1967), esp. pp. 165–9. A. C. Sundberg, The Old Testament of the Early Church (Harvard Theological Studies, xx; 1964). K. *Budde in E.Bl., i (1899), cols. 647–74 and 681 (bibl.), s.v. 'Canon'; F. H. Woods in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 604–16, s.v. 'Old Testament Canon'; H. L. Strack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1901), pp. 741–68, s.v. 'Kanon des Alten Testaments'.

On the NT Canon the most ambitious work is T. *Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (2 vols. in 3 pts., 1888–92), to be suppl. by the same scholar's Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altchristlichen Literatur (8 pts., 1881–1907). Other treatises include B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the Canon of the New Testament (1855; ed. 4, 1875). A. H. Charteris, Canonicity. A Collection of Early Testimonies to the Canonical Books of the New Testament (1880). W. *Sanday, Inspiration (*Bampton Lectures, 1893); J. Leipoldt, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (2 pts., 1907–8); E. Jacquier, Le Nouveau Testament dans l'Église chrétienne, i (1911); A. *Souter, The Text and Canon of the New Testament (1913), pp. 149–204; M. J. Lagrange, Introduction à l'étude du Nouveau Testament, i: Histoire ancienne du canon du Nouveau Testament (1933); C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament (Black's NT Comm., 1962). McNeile, pp. 310–72. V. H. Stanton in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 529–42, s.v. 'New Testament Canon'; T. Zahn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1901), pp. 768–96, s.v. 'Kanon des Neuen Testaments'.

CANONESS. The name was first applied to members of certain communities of women founded in the *Carolingian period. Though they lived in common and took vows of celibacy and obedience, they did not bind themselves to poverty, and thus were bound by less severe restrictions than contemporary nuns. After the 11th cent. many orders of *canons regular had a similar order for women, whose members were known as 'canonesses regular'. As in the case of *regular canons, a number of congregations of these canonesses survive in the RC Church and undertake a variety of functions.

P. Torquebiau in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 488–500, s.v. 'Chanoinesses'.

CANONIZATION. In the RC Church the definitive sentence by which the Pope declares a particular member of the faithful departed, previously beatified, to have already entered into eternal glory, and ordains for the new 'Saint' a public cult throughout the whole Church. In the Orthodox Church canonizations are usually made by the synod of bishops within a particular *autocephalous Church, though in certain instances a cultus comes to be accepted without any formal act of canonization. In the RC Church canonization is today distinguished from *Beatification, which allows only a restricted public veneration of the person beatified, but in the early centuries such a distinction was almost, if not quite, unknown.

In the primitive Church, martyrs were the first to be publicly venerated by the faithful. From the 4th cent. onwards a cultus was extended also to *confessors. Local bishops began to control the various cults in their own dioceses and councils also dealt with the subject. Frequently the veneration of certain saints spread far beyond the limits of their own diocese or country. This raised the problem of the regulation of these cults, and negligence and abuses brought about Papal intervention. The first historically attested canonization is that of *Ulrich of Augsburg by Pope John XV in 993. About 1170 *Alexander III, in a letter to King Canute of Sweden, asserted that no one should be venerated as a saint without the authority of the Roman Church; and by the inclusion of this passage in the *Decretals of *Gregory IX, it became part of W. canon law. This Papal authority is generally given nowadays only after a long legal process provided for in the *Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 1999–2141), in which the *Promotor Fidei brings forward arguments against the canonization of the person in question. The classical treatise on the whole subject is the De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et Beatorum Canonizatione of *Benedict XIV (Prosper Lambertini), first published at Bologna in 1734–8.

Canonization is held to confer a sevenfold honour: (1) the name is inscribed in the catalogue of saints, i.e. public recognition is enjoined; (2) the new saint is invoked in the public prayers of the Church; (3) churches may be dedicated to God in the saint's memory; (4) the Mass and Office are publicly offered to God in the saint's honour; (5) festival days are celebrated in the saint's memory; (6) pictorial representations are made in which the saint is surrounded by a heavenly light of glory; (7) the saint's relics are enclosed in precious vessels and publicly honoured.

See also Rites, Congregation of.

L. Hertling, S.J., 'Materiali per la storia del processo di canonizzazione' in Gregorianum, xvi (1935), pp. 170–95; T. Klauser, Anhang to 'Die Liturgie der Heiligsprechung' in O. Casel, O.S.B. (ed.), Heilige Überlieferung (Suppl. vol. to I. Herwegen, O.S.B. (ed.), Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 1938), pp. 229–33. E. W. Kemp, Canonization and Authority in the Western Church (1948). R. Naz in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 10–37, s.v. 'Causes de béatification et de canonisation'; G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 569–607, s.v. 'Canonizzazione', with full bibl.; P. Molinari in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 55–59, s.v. 'Canonization of Saints (History and Procedure)', with further modern bibl.

CANONS, Apostolic. See Apostolic Canons.

CANONS, The. In the C of E the principal body of canonical legislation since the Reformation was long the Book of Canons, a collection of 141 canons passed under the influence of Abp. R. *Bancroft by the *Convocation of *Canterbury in 1604 and of *York in 1606. The individual canons were based on a number of sources. Some were a reaffirmation of medieval prescriptions, others depended on M. *Parker's 'Book of *Advertisements' and the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The many subjects with which they dealt included the conduct of Divine service and the administration of the sacraments, the duties and behaviour of clerics, the furniture and care of churches, *churchwardens, the ecclesiastical courts, and marriage regulations; and several of them were directed against the *Puritans, who were endeavouring in the early 17th cent. to achieve a drastic reconstruction of the C of E. They were drawn up in Latin by Bancroft when he was still Bp. of London, and the Latin version alone has authority.

In 1939 the Abp. of Canterbury, in conjunction with the Abp. of York, appointed a 'Canon Law Commission' under the chairmanship of C. F. Garbett (Bp. of *Winchester) to consider the status of canon law in England and, if it deemed it expedient, to prepare a revised body of canons for submission to Convocation. The meetings of the Commission were delayed until 1943, but in 1948 it issued a report, including a proposed set of new canons. After prolonged debate the new Code was promulgated in two parts, three sections in 1964 and four in 1969. It covers much the same areas of Church life as earlier Canons and, like them, presupposes both the Common and Statute Law and the pre-Reformation Canon Law of the W.

Church, except where the latter has been affected by contrary statute or custom in England. As part of the process of promulgation of the new Code, the 17th cent. and other subsequent canons were repealed, with two exceptions. The part of Canon 113 dealing with the *seal of confession, on which it was feared that new legislation might encounter difficulties with the secular authorities, was retained, and Canon 143 (made in 1921) on membership of the Lower Houses of *Convocation was left until it was superseded by the establishment of *Synodical Government. In order that the canons should not again become out of date, in 1968 the Abps. of Canterbury and York appointed a Standing Canon Law Revision Committee to keep them under review.

The Lat. text was publd. at London, 1604; Eng. tr., ib., 1604. There have been numerous subsequent edd. of the Eng. tr.; modern ed. of Eng. and Lat. texts by J. V. Bullard (London, 1934). The Canon Law of the Church of England. Being the Report of the Archbishops' Commission on Canon Law, together with Proposals for a Revised Body of Canons (1947), with bibl. The new Code was publd. by S.P.C.K. under the title The Canons of the Church of England (1969). E. W. Kemp, An Introduction to the Canon Law of the Church of England (1957); E. G. Moore, An Introduction to English Canon Law (Clarendon Law Series; Oxford, 1967).

CANONS REGULAR (Lat. canonici regulares). A body of canons living under rule, which originated in the 11th cent. in close connexion with the Reform movement of *Gregory VII. In the 12th cent. they largely adopted the Rule of St. *Augustine and have since come to be known as *Augustinian (Austin) Canons (q.v.).

See bibl. to Canon (ecclesiastical title), also to Augustinian Canons.

CANOPY, Processional. An awning supported by poles at the corners and carried over the Blessed Sacrament in processions, and formerly over certain high ecclesiastical dignitaries, in the RC Church.

CANOSSA, near Reggio in N. Italy, the scene of the public humiliation and submission of the Emp. *Henry IV to Pope *Gregory VII (Hildebrand) in 1077. The Emperor is said to have stood for three days in the snow outside the Pope's lodging before absolution from excommunication was granted; but, even if this story be true, the statement by *Lambert of Hersfeld that he went as a penance, under the Pope's orders, is contradicted by other sources. The incident may be interpreted as really a victory for Henry, for by it he regained the moral authority over his rebellious subjects which he had lost when excommunicated.

The principal authorities for the event are a letter of Gregory VII (Register IV, 12, pr. J. P. Migne, PL, cxlviii, 465–6) and Lambert of Hersfeld, Annales, a. 1077 (ed. by O. Holder-Egger in Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1894, pp. 290–8). Studies by O. Holder-Egger in N.A., xix (1894), pp. 537–63; G. Meyer von Knonau in Deutsche Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaft, xi (1894), pp. 359–63; W. Sachse, Canossa. Historische Untersuchung (1896); H. Otto in Mitthellungen des Instituts für oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung, xviii (1897), pp. 615–20; F. Schneider, 'Canossa', in Z.K.G., xlv (1927), pp. 163–75. A. Fliche, 'Grégoire VII, à Canossa, a-t-il réintégré Henri IV dans sa fonction royale?' in Studi Gregoriani, i (1947), pp. 373–86; H. X. Arquillière, 'Grégoire VII, à Canossa, a-t-il réintégré Henri IV dans sa fonction royale?', ib., iv (1952), pp. 1–26. K. F. Morrison, 'Canossa: a revision' in Traditio, xviii (1962), pp. 121–48, with further reff. The incident is discussed in works on Gregory VII, cited s.v.

CANTATA. A form of musical composition which in its classical period usually consisted of a series of recitatives and arias for solo voices concluding with a chorale, sung in parts by a choir. Sometimes the cantata opened with a very elaborate chorus-piece. The later *oratorio is a development of the cantata—indeed, the 'Christmas Oratorio' of J. S. *Bach is simply a set of six originally separate cantatas. The age of Bach (early 18th cent.) was the greatest period of the cantata; and his own two hundred 'Church Cantatas', with some by G. F. *Handel such as 'Silete Venti', are among the best examples. Cantatas were at this time used instead of the *gradual in the Lutheran Ante-Communion service.

E. J. Dent in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. 5 by E. Blom, ii (1954), p. 45 f., s.v., with bibl.

CANTATE DOMINO (Lat., 'O sing unto the Lord'), Ps. 98, from its first words. In the 1552 and subsequent editions of the BCP it is an alternative to the canticle '*Magnificat' at Evening Prayer. Since 1662 it has been ordered that it shall not be used here on the 19th evening, when it is read among the psalms for the day. In the American Prayer Book of 1789 the 'Magnificat' was entirely omitted and replaced by the 'Cantate'; but in the revision of 1892 the old arrangement of the English book was restored.

CANTERBURY. The history of the present see begins in 597 with the arrival of St. *Augustine, who with the assistance of his companions established his first church in the city. Augustine had been ordered to organize England in two ecclesiastical provinces with archbishops at London and *York. The place of London, however, was from the first taken by Canterbury, which has since then been the see of the archbishop of the southern province, who is *Primate of All England. The northern boundary of the province of Canterbury is now formed by the northern boundaries of the dioceses of *Lincoln, Leicester, Derby, and *Lichfield. In 1920 the Welsh dioceses and Monmouth (which at that time formed part of the diocese of *Llandaff) were taken from Canterbury to form the newly constituted province of the 'Church in *Wales'. From 1375 to 1558 Calais and the surrounding district formed part of the diocese of Canterbury; and the Channel Islands are still in the province, being part of the diocese of *Winchester. From the time of Abp. Stephen *Langton (d. 1228), the archbishops held the title of 'legatus natus', i.e. they were recognized as ex-officio permanent Papal legates. The struggle for precedence between the archiepiscopal sees of Canterbury and York ended in the middle of the 14th cent. with a victory for the former. The principal residence of the Abp. of Canterbury is at *Lambeth Palace in London, but he also has a palace at Canterbury. See also Anglican Communion; and Cathedrals, Friends of the.

Acc. to *Bede (H.E., i. 33) an already existing Roman basilica was consecrated by St. Augustine as the Cathedral Church of Christ. Destroyed by a fire in 1067, the church was rebuilt in Norman style by Abp. *Lanfranc, extended under Abp. *Anselm and consecrated in 1130. After a disastrous fire in 1174 the choir was rebuilt in the transitional style under the guidance of William of Sens and William the Englishman. Under Abp. *Sudbury the nave was pulled down and later rebuilt in perpendicular style. The Chapter House and Cloisters are of the same period. The Chichele Steeple (also Oxford or Dunstan Steeple) was erected by Abp. *Chichele; the central Tower ('Bell Harry Tower') was built between 1495 and 1503. The chief glory of the Cathedral during the Middle Ages was the shrine of St. Thomas *Becket, dedicated on 7 July 1220. The former archiepiscopal throne of Purbeck marble ('St. Augustine's Chair') is perhaps as late as c. 1280. The crypt is mainly Norman with Roman and Saxon fragments. Since 1575 part of the crypt has been used by Walloon and Huguenot refugees and their descendants.

In c. 598 (acc. to Thorne and Elmham) St. Augustine, with King *Ethelbert and his Queen, established a monastery in the east of the city, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, to accommodate the bodies of future bishops and kings of the region. In 613 the new conventual church was consecrated by Abp. Lawrence (Abp. 604–19), the body of St. Augustine being reinterred in the N. Porch. The first ten Abps. and several kings were buried there before Abp. Cuthbert (Abp. c. 740–58) left instructions that the tradition should be broken. The first outbreak of the chronic enmity between the monks and the Cathedral Chapter ensued. In 978 St. *Dunstan rededicated the conventual church in honour of Sts. Peter and Paul and St. Augustine, it being commonly known by the title of the latter saint. The church was largely rebuilt in the 13th cent.

From its foundation the abbey was richly endowed and seems to have enjoyed a position of favour. It contended that St. Augustine had granted it exemption from the jurisdiction of his successors, but the claim caused friction with the Abps., esp. from the 13th cent. onwards. In c. 673 the abbey received, among other gifts from Rome, two MS. copies of the Gospels which may be the oldest books read in England. In 1051 *Leo IX granted the abbots precedence over all others except that of *Monte Cassino; in 1061 *Alexander II made to them the first grant of the right to wear a mitre and other episcopal insignia. Of considerable importance throughout the Middle Ages, in 1538 the monastery, then inhabited by some thirty monks and the Prior, was dissolved. In 1848 a college for the training of missionaries was founded (under the patronage of St. Augustine) on the ruins. In 1952 this was reconstituted as a central house of study for the Anglican Communion. From 1969 to 1976 the buildings were occupied by a theological college associated with *King's College, London.

The archiepiscopal registers are extant from 1278 to 1326 and from 1349 onwards: description in [H. J. Todd, A Catalogue of the Archiepiscopal Manuscripts in the Library at Lambeth Palace (1812), p. 266 f. The following have been publd.: that of J. *Peckham ed. C. T. Martin (R.S., 3 vols., 1882–5), more complete ed. by the *Canterbury and York Society (1908 ff.); those of R. *Winchelsea ed. Rose Graham (Canterbury and York Society, li–lii, 1952–6); of Simon Langham ed. A. C. Wood (ib., liii, 1956); of H. Chichele ed. E. F. Jacob (ib., xlii, xlv–xlvii, 1937–47); of T. *Bourgchier ed. F. R. H. Du Boulay (ib., liv, 1957); and of M. *Parker ed. E. M. Thompson–W. H. *Frere (ib., xxxv, xxxvi, xxxix, 1907–1933). The Acta of S. Langton ed. Kathleen Major (ib., l, 1950). E. H. W. Dunkin–C. Jenkins–E. A. Fry, Index to the Act Books of the Archbishops of Canterbury, 1663–1859 (Index Library, lv, lxiii, 1929–38). W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury [to Abp. *Juxon] (12 vols., 1860–76). E. [F.] Carpenter, Cantuar. The Archbishops in their Office (1971). Irene J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration. The Administrative Machinery of the Archbishopric of Canterbury Illustrated from Original Records (C.H.S., New Series, xv; 2 vols., 1933); B. L. Woodcock, Medieval Ecclesiastical Courts in the Diocese of Canterbury (Oxford Historical Series, 1952). F. R. H. Du Boulay, The Lordship of Canterbury (1966). J. W. Lamb, The Archbishopric of Canterbury, from its Foundation to the Norman Conquest (1971).

On the Priory and Cathedral, The Statutes of the Cathedral and Metropolitical Church of Christ, Canterbury (Canterbury, 1925). J. B. Sheppard (ed.), Literae Cantuarienses. The Letter Books of the Monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury (3 vols., R.S., 1887–9). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 81–119. R. Willis, The Architectural History of Canterbury Cathedral (1845). A. P. *Stanley, Historical Memorials of Canterbury (1855). C. E. Woodruff–W. Danks, Memorials of the Cathedral and Priory of Christ in Canterbury (1912). S. A. Warner, Canterbury Cathedral (1923), with bibl. C. S. Phillips, Canterbury Cathedral in the Middle Ages (1949). B. Rackham, The Ancient Glass of Canterbury Cathedral (1949). R. A. L. Smith, Canterbury Cathedral Priory. A Study in Monastic Administration (Cambridge Studies in Economic History; 1943), with bibl. R. C. Fowler in V.C.H., Kent, ii (1926), pp. 113–21. W. Urry, Canterbury under the Angevin Kings (University of London Historical Studies, xix; 1967). On St. Augustine's Monastery, W. Dugdale, op. cit., pp. 120–52. R. J. E. Boggis, A History of St. Augustine's Monastery, Canterbury (1901). R. C. Fowler in V.C.H., loc. cit., pp. 126–33, with bibl. refft. R. J. E. Boggis, A History of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury (1907). W. H. Hutton in D.E.C.H., pp. 90–5, s.v. 'Canterbury, See of'. W. A. Pantin in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 785–812; s.v. 'Cantorbéry'.

CANTERBURY AND YORK SOCIETY. A society founded in 1904 for the printing of episcopal registers and other ecclesiastical records.

Lists of the Society's publications are included in its annual reports.

CANTERBURY CAP. A soft flat cloth cap sometimes worn by English clerical dignitaries and others. Like the college cap and the *biretta, it is simply a later form of the ordinary medieval black cloth head-dress.

CANTICLE (Lat. canticulum, dim. of canticum, a 'song'. In the rubrics of the *Breviary, however, the non-diminutive form is used). Song or prayer (other than one of the *psalms) derived from the Bible, which is used in the liturgical worship of the Church. In the E. Church nine canticles or 'odes' are prescribed for daily use at *Orthros, eight from the OT, viz. the two 'Songs of *Moses' (Ex. 15. 1–19 and Dt. 32. 1–43); the 'Song of Hannah' (1 Sam. 2. 1–10); the 'Song of *Habakkuk' (Hab. 3. 2–19); the 'Song of *Isaiah' (Is. 26. 1–21); the 'Song of *Jonah' (Jon. 2. 2–9); the 'Song of the Three Children' (S. of III Ch. 3–22); and the *Benedicite. The ninth ode consists of two NT canticles, *Magnificat and *Benedictus. In present practice all the canticles except the Magnificat are normally omitted. The *Nunc Dimittis is used daily at *Vespers.

According to the Roman Breviary, the Benedictus is said daily at *Lauds, the Magnificat at Vespers, and the Nunc Dimittis at *Compline. Varying from day to day, some 44 OT canticles are used at Lauds, and nine other NT canticles at Vespers, viz. Eph.1. 3–10; Phil. 2. 6–11; Col. 1. 12–20; 1 Tim. 3.16; 1 Pet. 2. 21–4; Rev. 4. 11, 5. 9, 10. 12; 11. 17–18, 12. 10b–12a; 15. 3–4; 19. 1–17. The Roman Breviary also includes the *Te Deum among its canticles.

In the BCP the word 'canticle' is applied only to the Benedicite, but in common speech it is used of many of the others named above, as well as of the *Jubilate, the *Cantate, and *Deus misereatur.

H. Schneider, Die Altlateinischen Biblischen Cantica (Texte und Arbeiten, I. Abteilung, xxix–xxx; 1938). Id., 'Die biblischen Oden in christlichen Altertum' in Biblica, xxx (1949), pp. 28–65, 239–72; id., 'Die biblischen Oden in Jerusalem und Konstantinopel', ib., pp. 433–52; id., 'Die biblischen Oden im Mittelalter', ib., pp. 479–500.

CANTICLE OF THE SUN, The (Lat. 'canticum solis' or 'laudes creaturarum'). A hymn of St. *Francis in praise of the Divine revelation in nature, traditionally supposed to have been composed in 1225 in the garden of San Damiano at *Assisi. It receives its name from the second stanza, 'Be thou praised, my Lord, with all thy creatures, above all Brother Sun'.

Crit. ed. of text by E. Monaci, Crestomazia italiana dei primi secoli con prospetto delle flessioni grammaticali e glossario, fasc. i (1889), pp. 29–31. Ital. text with Eng. tr. and discussion in H. Goad, Greyfriars. The Story of St. Francis and his Followers (1947), pp. 137–41. J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of S. Francis of Assisi (Manchester, 1940), pp. 17–19, incl. reff. to other discussions.

CANTICLES, Book of. See Solomon, Song of.

CANTILUPE, St. THOMAS DE (c. 1218–82), also St. Thomas of Hereford, Bp. of *Hereford. The descendant of a noble family of Hambledon in Bucks, he was educated at *Oxford, *Paris, and Orléans, and became chancellor of Oxford university in 1261. As chancellor he aided the barons against King Henry III, and in 1265, after the defeat of the King at Lewes, became Chancellor of England. After the collapse of the baronial power in 1265 he retired to Paris as a lecturer, but returned to Oxford, where he was chancellor a second time in 1273. In 1275 he was elected Bp. of Hereford and became the confidential adviser of Edward I. Exercising his influence esp. against simoniacal practices and the vice of nepotism, he firmly suppressed encroachments on the rights of his see by the neighbouring lords. His later years were filled with disputes with John *Peckham, the Franciscan Abp. of Canterbury, on questions of jurisdiction, which led to his excommunication by the Archbishop in 1282. He immediately appealed against the sentence at the Papal court at Orvieto, but died before judgement had been pronounced. Despite the excommunication, the fame of his sanctity and of the miracles that took place at his tomb led to his canonization in 1320. Feast day, originally 2 Oct.; in modern RC calendars, 3 Oct.

The chief source for his life is the Process of Canonization preserved in the Vatican MS. 4015, part of which is printed in the AA.SS., Oct. I (1765), pp. 599–705. Other MS. sources are listed in Hardy, iii, pp. 217–20. His Register, transcribed by R. G. Griffiths with introd. by W. W. Capes, was publd. in 1906 by the 'Cantilupe Society' and reissued by the *Canterbury and York Society, ii (1907). T. F. Tout in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 448–52; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 347–9, s.v. 'Cantelupe, Thomas de'.

CANTILUPE, WALTER DE (d. 1266), Bp. of *Worcester, and uncle of St. Thomas de *Cantilupe. He was elected Bishop in 1236, and consecrated by *Gregory IX in person in 1237. He supported many of the actions of R. *Grossteste, Bp. of *Lincoln; but, despite this, was held to be one of the chief 'friends of the Pope' in England. In the war between King and barons (1258–65) he took the barons' side, and this fact is said to have been the only hindrance to his canonization. He was among the greatest figures of his day both as a diocesan bishop and as a national leader.

The chief sources for his life are the Annales Monastici, ed. H. R. Luard (R.S., 5 vols., 1864–9, esp. i, pp. 101–52, and iv, pp. 428–56); *Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard (R.S., 1876–82), passim; The Chronicle of William of Rishanger, ed. by J. O. Halliwell (Camden Society, old series, xv, 1840), and the letters of R. Grossteste, ed. by H. R. Luard (R.S., 1861). H. R. Luard in D.N.B., viii (1886), pp. 452–4; B.R.U.O., i (1957), pp. 349–50, s.v. 'Cantelupe, Walter de'.

CANTOR. A singer who pre-intones and leads in the liturgical music of the choir office and in liturgical processions. Acc. to W. usage the number of cantors may be one, two, or four, acc. to the day, and they may be either clerics or laymen. They wear surplices and, on more solemn occasions, copes. See also Precentor and Succentor.

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 1; 1913), cols. 344–65, s.v. 'Chantres'; S. Corbin in N.C.E., iii (1967), p. 71, s.v. 'Cantor in Christian Liturgy', with further bibl.

CANTORIS [sc. sedes] (Lat.), 'the place of the cantor'. As the traditional place of the cantor is on the north side of the choir of a cathedral or church, the term (also 'cantorial' or 'cantoral') is used to indicate those who in antiphonal singing sit on that side. The opposite side is known as '*Decani'.

CAPELLE, BERNARD (1884–1961), Abbot of Mont-César. A native of Namur, he was ordained priest in 1906 and professed a *Benedictine monk at *Maredsous in 1919. In 1928 he was elected coadjutor Abbot of Mont-César, Louvain, becoming full Abbot on his predecessor's death in 1942. In 1936 he became Maître de Conférences (History of Liturgy) in the university of Louvain. His many original and important contributions to the history of liturgy, early Christian literature and the Latin Bible, all marked by solidity and sound judgement, include Le Texte du psautier latin en Afrique (Collectanea Biblica Latina, iv; 1913), Pour une meilleure intelligence de la Messe (1946), *An Early Euchologium. The Der-Balizeh Papyrus enlarged and re-edited (with C. H. Roberts, 1949), and a long series of articles in Revue Bénédictine, Recherches de Théologie Ancienne et Médiévale, Questions Liturgiques et Paroissiales, Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, and other periodicals.

Collected Travaux liturgiques de doctrine et d'histoire (3 vols., Louvain, 1955–67). Obit. notice by Fr. Vandenbroucke, O.S.B., in E.L., lxxvi (1962), pp. 43–51.

CAPERNAUM. A town near the Sea of Galilee of uncertain site, probably Khân Minyeh or Tell Hûm. It was the headquarters of Christ after His rejection from *Nazareth, and the scene of many of His miracles. The correct form of the name is 'Capharnaum' (Kfar-Nahum, city of Nahum), found in the best Gk. MSS. and the *Vulgate.

W. *Sanday–P. Waterhouse, Sacred Sites of the Gospels (1903), pp. 36–48; W. Sanday, 'The Site of Capernaum' in J.T.S., v (1904), pp. 42–8. B. Meistermann, O.F.M., Capharnaüm et Bethsaïde (1921), pp. 1–38 and 104–291. G. Orfali, O.F.M., Capharnaüm et ses ruines d'après les fouilles accomplies à Tell-Houm par la Custodie Franciscaine de Terre Sainte, 1905–1921 (1922). C. Kopp (Eng. tr. by J. Watt), 'Christian Sites around the Sea of Galilee. I. Capernaum' in Dominican Studies, ii (1949), pp. 213–35. W. Sanday in D.C.G., i (1906), p. 269 f.; F. M. Abel, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1928), cols. 1045–64, s.v. 'Capharnaüm', with detailed bibl.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. The infliction of death by judicial sentence of the State. St. Paul in Rom. 13. (esp. 1–5) appears to recognize its legitimacy, and no religious body as such holds it to be immoral except the Society of *Friends, although individual Christians have sometimes held that it contravenes the 6th commandment. In the C of E the 37th Article recognizes that it may be inflicted 'for heinous and grave offences'. Its abolition in many countries, however, and the great diminution since 1800 of the number of crimes punishable by death in others, may legitimately be ascribed to Christian enlightenment. In Great Britain the 1965 Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act substituted life imprisonment for capital punishment for a trial period of five years, and in 1969 this was made permanent.

CAPITILAVIUM (Lat., 'washing of the head'). A name given to *Palm Sunday in the early Middle Ages, acc. to *Isidore of Seville in reference to the custom of washing the heads of children in preparation for the anointing which took place at baptism on the ensuing *Holy Saturday.

CAPITO, WOLFGANG (1478–1541), Protestant reformer. His real name was Köpfel. He was educated at Freiburg im Breisgau. After ordination he became associated with D. *Erasmus in his projects for ecclesiastical reform, and for a time was an ardent admirer of M. *Luther. In the early stages of the Reformation at Strassburg, before M. *Bucer's rise to influence, Capito was its leading figure in that city, and later he assisted with the compilation of the *Tetrapolitan Confession. He was usually on the side of those who favoured the propagation of Reformation principles by gentle methods and toleration.

J. W. Baum, 'Capito und Butzer von ihrer Geburt bis zu ihrer Ankunft in Strassburg 1478–1522' in K. R. Hagenbach (ed.), Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der Reformirten Kirche, iii (1860). P. Kalkoff, W. Capito im Dienste Erzbischof Albrechts von Mainz (1907); O. E. Strasser, Capitos Beziehungen zu Bern (1927); id., La Pensée théologique de Wolfgang Capiton dans les dernières années de sa vie (Mémoires de l'Université de Neuchâtel, xi, 1938). J. M. Kittelson, Wolfgang Capito. From Humanist to Reformer (Leiden, 1975).

CAPITULAR MASS. The public Mass sung or said in RC cathedrals and collegiate churches, and attended by the whole chapter. It is the parallel of the *Conventual Mass in religious communities, and is sometimes itself so described.

CAPITULARY (Lat. capitulare). (1) A collection of civil statutes, esp. those made by the Merovingian and Carolingian kings. The first official use of the word in this sense is in an enactment of the *Charlemagne of the year 779.

(2) A compilation of previously enacted laws made by the bishops for the practical guidance of the clergy and laity of their dioceses. These 'episcopal capitularies' also date chiefly from Frankish times.

(3) In Biblical MSS. a brief summary of the contents, put at the head of the several books. These capitularies are based on classical models, and date from the 3rd cent. onwards. In some cases a single book is prefaced by several independent capitularies. By the Greeks they were known as κεφάλαια or τίτλοι, by the Latins as tituli, breves, breviaria, capitula, or capitulationes.

CAPPA MAGNA. In the RC Church, a cloak with a long train and large hood and lined with silk or sometimes fur, the use of which is reserved to cardinals, bishops, and certain other dignitaries. Its colour is ordinarily violet, except for cardinals, whose cappa magna is scarlet. Its use dates from the end of the Middle Ages, but has recently been much restricted; its form has also been simplified.

CAPPADOCIAN FATHERS, The. The three brilliant leaders of philosophical Christian orthodoxy in the later 4th cent., namely St. *Basil the Great, Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia, St. *Gregory, Bp. of Nazianzus, and St. *Gregory, Bp. of Nyssa (qq.v.). They were the chief influence which led to the final defeat of *Arianism at the Council of *Constantinople of 381. They were all Cappadocians by birth.

Besides general Patrologies, Church Histories and Histories of Doctrine, and works listed in this Dict. under the individual Fathers, see also H. Weiss, Die grossen Kappadozier Basilius, Gregor von Nazianz und Gregor von Nyssa als Exegeten (Brunsberg, 1872); id., Die Erziehungslehre der drei Kappadozier (1903).

CAPREOLUS, JOHN (c. 1380–1444), 'Thomistarum princeps', *Thomist philosopher and theologian. A native of Languedoc, he entered the *Dominican Order at Rodez. From 1408 he lectured on the *Sentences at Paris, where he was granted the licentiate in 1411. Later he was Regent of Studies at Toulouse. His principal work was a defence of St. Thomas's teaching in four books ('Defensiones', 1409–33) against the attacks of *Henry of Ghent, *Duns Scotus, *Durandus of St.-Pourçain, *William of Occam, and others, which, after more than a century of eclipse, did much to revive the authority of Thomism.

Modern ed. of his Works by C. Paban and T. Pègues, O.P. (7 vols., Tours, 1900–8). Series of articles by T. Pègues, O.P., in Revue Thomiste, vii (1899), pp. 63–81, 317–34, 507–29, viii (1900), pp. 50–76, 288–309, 505–30, and xiii (1905), pp. 530–53. J. Ude, Doctrina Capreoli de Influxu Dei in Actus Voluntatis Humanae secundum Principia Thomismi et Molinismi collata (1904). U. Degl' Innocenti, O.P., 'Il Capreolo e la questione sulla personalità' in Divus Thomas, xliii (xvii, Ser. IIIae, Piacenza, 1940), pp. 27–40. M. *Grabmann, 'Johannes Capreolus O.P. der "Princeps Thomistarum" († 7 April 1444) und seine Stellung in der Geschichte der Thomistenschule. Ein Gedenkblatt zu seinem fünfhundertjährigen Todestag' in Divus Thomas. Jahrbuch für Philosophie und Spekulative Theologie, III. Serie, xxii (1944), pp. 85–109, 145–170; repr. in Mittelalterliches Geistesleben, iii (Munich, 1956), pp. 370–410. K. Forster, Die Verteidigung der Lehre des heiligen Thomas von der Gottesschau durch Johannes Capreolus (Münchener Theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, ix; 1955). Further bibl. in Überweg, ii, p. 788.

CAPTIVITY EPISTLES, The. The four epistles —Phil., Col., Eph., Philem.—generally believed to have been written by St. Paul towards the end of his life when he was in captivity at *Rome. References to his bondage occur, e.g., at Phil. 1. 7, Col. 4. 18, Eph. 4. 1, Philem. 9. G. S. Duncan argued that they date from a captivity earlier in his life at *Ephesus. See artt. on the individual epistles.

Besides Commentaries, see G. S. Duncan, St. Paul's Ephesian Ministry (1929), whose conclusions, however, have been widely challenged.

CAPUCHINS. An offshoot of the *Franciscan Order, founded by Matteo di Bassi of Urbino (d. 1552), an *Observant Friar, who desired to return to the primitive simplicity of the order. Its members wear a pointed cowl (capuche), similar to that of St. *Francis, sandals, and a beard. The Rule, drawn up in 1529, strongly re-emphasized the Franciscan ideals of poverty and austerity. At first the order encountered considerable opposition from the other Franciscans, and the secession in 1541 of the third general, Bernardino *Ochino, to Protestantism nearly led to its suppression. But their enthusiastic preaching and missionary work gained them popular support, and made them one of the most powerful weapons of the *Counter-Reformation. Though the severity of the Rule has been gradually mitigated in practice, the order long remained the strictest of the Franciscan families. Its members have usually been men of action rather than scholars. The official title of the order is the 'Ordo Fratrum Minorum S. Francisci Capuccinorum' (O.F.M.Cap.).

Bullarium Ordinis FF. Minorum S.P. Francisci Capucinorum, ed. M. a Tugio, O.Cap. (7 vols., Rome, 1740–52); contd. by Petrus Damianus of Münster, O.Cap. (3 vols., Innsbruck, 1883–4). Their constitutions were publd. at Paris in 1645. Z. Boverio, O.Cap., Annales seu Sacrae Historiae Ordinis Minorum S. Francisci qui Capucini nuncupantur (2 vols., Lyons, 1632–9); contd. by Marcellinus of Pisa, O.Cap. (Lyons, 1676), Silvester Draghetta of Milan, O.Cap. (Milan, 1737), and P. Pellegrino of Forli, O.Cap. (Milan, 4 vols., 1882–5). Other material in Fr. Cuthbert [Hess], O.S.F.C., The Capuchins (2 vols., 1928). Melchior a Pobladura, O.F.M.Cap., Historia Generalis Ordinis Fratrum Minorum Capuccinorum (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, Sectio Historica, vii–x; Rome, 1947–51). T. Graf, Die Kapuziner (Freiburg, Switzerland, 1957). Heimbucher, i, pp. 724–60 and 824–7, and ii, p. 663 f. Ilarino da Milano, O.F.M.Cap., in E.C., v (1950), cols. 1738–1742, s.v. 'Frati Minori'; Bonaventura v. Mehr, O.F.M.Cap., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 1332–9, s.v. 'Kapuziner'; T. MacVicar, O.F.M.Cap., in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 65–67, s.v. 'Franciscans, Capuchin'; all with bibl. The Analecta Ordinis Minorum Capuccinorum has been publd. at Rome, 1884 ff., and the Monumenta Historica Ordinis Capuccinorum at Assisi, 1937 ff.

CARAFFA. See Paul IV.

CARBONARI (Ital., 'charcoal-burners'). A secret political society, in some ways resembling the Continental Freemasons (with whom they had friendly relations), which came into existence at the beginning of the 19th cent. They flourished chiefly in France and Italy, and were last heard of c. 1840. Their aims were the advancement of liberal ideas in politics and religion. They rejected all forms of Divine revelation, and looked to *natural religion as a sufficient basis for virtue and brotherhood, while in politics their avowed aim was the destruction of absolutism in every form and by any means. In 1820 they and their supporters gained possession of Naples for a brief period. The July Revolution of 1830 in France was also largely inspired by their influence. Many were absorbed in the Young Italy Movement of G. Mazzini (1831).

R. J. Rath, 'The Carbonari: Their Origins, Initiation Rites, and Aims' in American Historical Review, lxix (1964), pp. 353–370, with extensive reff. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., iii (1908), p. 330 f., s.v.; P. Pirri, S.J., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 765–70, s.v. 'Carboneria', with good bibl.

CARDINAL (Lat., cardo, 'hinge'), a title first applied to any priest permanently attached to a church (in which sense it still survives in the two cardinals among the minor canons at *St. Paul's Cathedral, London) and then restricted to the clergy of *Rome, i.e. the parish priests, the bishops of the *suburbicarian dioceses, and the seven (later fourteen) district *deacons.

The Cardinals at Rome gradually formed a college, ranked as Roman princes immediately after the Pope, and became (when assembled in *Consistory) his immediate counsellors. They assumed the government of the RC Church during the vacancy of the *Holy See. In the Middle Ages they came to rank with princes of the royal blood.

The three ranks of Cardinals originated at different periods. The Cardinal-Priests were the parish priests of various Roman churches. Cardinal-Deacons had the care of the poor in the seven districts of Rome. Cardinal-Bishops were created c. the 8th cent., when the increase of Papal business made it necessary to invoke the help of neighbouring Bishops to act from time to time as the Pope's representatives. The terms 'Cardinal-Subdeacon' and 'Cardinal-Acolyte' were occasionally used of the Subdeacons and Acolytes at Papal ceremonies; but this usage did not persist.

The present functions of Cardinals are chiefly administrative. They are nominated by the Pope. In 1586 their number was fixed at 70 by *Sixtus V, but Pope *John XXIII expressly derogated from this rule in 1958 and there is now no upper limit. By 1969 there were 134 Cardinals. The *Codex (CIC, cans. 230–41) requires all Cardinals to be at least in Priest's orders (though in the last century E. *Consalvi and G. *Antonelli were only Deacons); since 1962 all priests raised to the cardinalate have been given episcopal ordination. Their duties are to reside in Rome, unless excused or Bishops of foreign dioceses, to act as heads of *curial offices and Roman *Congregations, and to preside over ecclesiastical *commissions. They are given the title of 'Eminence' and have various rights in all dioceses, such as the use of a *portable altar everywhere, and they may use all episcopal ornaments in their titular churches. Their insignia have traditionally included the *red hat (abolished in 1969), red *biretta (which is now used at the ceremony of admission), red skull cap, the 'sacred purple', a *ring with a sapphire stone, the *pectoral cross and, on certain occasions, the use of the *ombrellino. Every cardinal resident in Rome has the right to a revenue (piatto cardinalizio) if without sufficient private means.

On a vacancy in the Apostolic See they meet in secret session to elect a Pope (see Conclave), a privilege that has been exclusively theirs since the Third *Lateran Council of 1179 (can. 1). Only those under 80 may now vote.

From time to time the Pope creates a cardinal in petto, i.e. privately, but the creation is without effect unless publication follows. The nominee, however, retains his place of seniority.

J. B. Sägmüller (ed.), Zur Geschichte des Kardinalates. Ein Traktat des Bischofs von Feltre und Treviso Teodore de' Lelli über das Verhältniss von Primat und Kardinalat (R.Q., Suppl., ii; 1893). Id., Die Thätigkeit und Stellung der Cardindle bis Papst Bonifaz VIII (1896). V. Martin, Les Cardinaux et la curie, tribunaux et offices, la vacance du siège apostolique (1930). H. W. Klewitz, 'Die Entstehung des Kardinalkollegiums' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, xxv (1936), pp. 115–221; repr. in Reformpapsttum und Kardinalkolleg (Darmstadt, 1957), pp. 11–134. M. Belardo, De Juribus S.R.E. Cardinalium in Titulis (Vatican City, 1939). S. Kuttner, 'Cardinalis: The History of a Canonical Concept' in Traditio, iii (New York, 1945), pp. 129–214; M. Andrieu, 'L'Origine du titre de cardinal dans l'Église romaine' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, v (S.T., cxxv; 1946), pp. 113–44. G Mollat, 'Contribution à l'histoire du Sacré Collège de Clément V à Eugène IV' in R.H.E., xlvi (1951), pp. 22–112, 566–94. K. Ganzer, Die Entwicklung des auswärtigen Kardinalats im hohen Mittelalter. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Kardinalkollegiums von 11. bis 13. Jahrhundert (Bibliothek des deutschen historischen Instituts in Rom, xxvi; 1963). C. G. Fürst, Cardinalis. Prolegomena zu einer Rechtsgeschichte des römischen Kardinalskollegiums (Munich, 1967). J. Forget in Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique, i (ed. 4 by A. d'Alès, 1911), cols. 851–62, s.v. 'Curie Romaine (Cardinaux)'. A. Molien in D.D.C., ii (1937), cols. 1310–39, s.v.; P. Paschini, P. Ciprotti and V. Bartoccetti in E.C., iii (1949), cols. 779–84, s.v. 'Cardinale'.

CARDINAL VIRTUES. The four 'cardinal virtues' are prudence, temperance, fortitude, and justice. The chief Christian moral theologians, e.g. St. *Ambrose, St. *Augustine, and St. *Thomas Aquinas, took over this classification from *Plato and *Aristotle. In Christian writers the 'cardinal' are contrasted with the '*theological' virtues of *faith, *hope, and *charity.

St. Thomas, S. Theol. I–II, qu. 61 ('De Virtutibus Cardinalibus'). F. M. Utz, O.P., De Connexione Virtutum Moralium inter se secundum Doctrinam S. Thomae Aquinatis (Vechta, 1937). J. Rickaby, S.J., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 343–5.

CARDWELL, EDWARD (1787–1861), ecclesiastical historian. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he became Camden Professor of Ancient History in 1825, and Principal of St. Alban Hall in 1831, in succession to R. *Whately, an office which he held till his death. He issued through the University Press, in the administration of which he took a prominent part, several collections of documents still of great value to the student of English Church history, notably Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England (2 vols., 1839), A History of Conferences . . . connected with the Revision of the BCP (1840), and Synodalia (2 vols., 1842).

C. W. Sutton in D.N.B., ix (1887), p. 42 f., s.v.

CAREY, WILLIAM (1761–1834), *Baptist missionary. Born in humble circumstances in Northamptonshire and baptized an Anglican, he was apprenticed in 1777 to a shoemaker, but, after his conversion (1779), he became convinced of Baptist teaching (1783) and spent part of his time as a preacher. For many years he continued his cobbling by night, whilst running a school by day and acting as pastor of a church. During this time he taught himself Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Dutch, and French. His attention was directed towards the unevangelized tracts of the world, and, at the ministers' meeting at Nottingham in 1792, he promulgated the watchword, 'Expect great things from God and attempt great things for God', which led to the founding of the *Baptist Missionary Society. Sailing for India in 1793 in a Danish vessel, as the East India Company had put a ban on missionaries in British ships, he arrived in Bengal in Nov. 1793, where he was put in charge of an indigo factory at Malda, which became his mission station. In five years he translated the NT into Bengali and visited 200 villages. When the factory was closed (1799), he left for Serampore, where he was joined by four new missionaries, with whose assistance he was able to bring his Bengali New Testament into print in 1801. At this time Fort William College was opened at Calcutta, and Carey was appointed professor of Sanskrit, Bengali, and Marathi—a position that he held for 30 years. His many labours included a translation of the whole Bible in Bengali (1809), and its translation, in whole or part, into 24 other languages and dialects. In addition, he published philological works (grammars and dictionaries) in Sanskrit, Marathi, Punjabi, and Telugu. It was his agitation that was largely responsible for the abolition in 1829 of suttee, the ancient custom that had meant the death of every widow at the time of her husband's funeral.

Facsimile of his Enquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use means for the Conversion of the Heathens (first publd. 1792), with introd. by E. A. Payne (1961). J. Taylor, Biographical and Literary Notices of William Carey (1886). Lives also by J. C. Marshman (2 vols., London, 1859), G. Smith (ib., 1885), and S. Pearce Carey (ib., 1923).

CARLILE, WILSON (1847–1942), founder of the *Church Army. After a successful business career (1862–78), he entered the London College of Divinity, was ordained in 1880, and served an assistant curacy in Kensington. In 1882 he founded the Church Army, and combined his work as its honorary Chief Secretary with various parochial appointments. He continued to take part in its administration until a few weeks before his death. From 1949 to 1960 his grandson, Edward Wilson Carlile (b. 1915), was General Secretary of the Church Army.

E. Rowan, Wilson Carlile and the Church Army (1905; ed. 5 by A. E. Reffold, 1956); S. Dark, Wilson Carlile (1944); M. Burn, The Pearl Divers. Pictures from the Life and Work of Prebendary Carlile (1920); A. E. Reffold, Seven Stars. The Story of a Fifty Years' War. A Résumé of the Life and Work of Wilson Carlile and the Church Army (1931; reissued as 'The Audacity to Live', 1938). Id. in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 134–6.

CARLISLE. The see was erected in 1133 by Henry I, when he turned the Earldom of Carlisle (founded by William II, and including most of the northern part of Cumbria) into a bishopric, with Aethelwold, Prior of Nostell and possibly of Carlisle, as first bishop. The church, which had been served by Regular Canons since c. 1102 (*Augustinians after 1122), became the new cathedral, the only one in England in the charge of this order. A new choir, built c. 1250, was burnt down in 1292. Rebuilding was begun c. 1300, and in 1392 there was another fire. The N. transept and central tower were rebuilt by Bp. William Strickland (Bp. 1400–1419). The Augustinian priory was dissolved in 1540, and its revenues used to endow the cathedral. It nevertheless fell into a ruinous state during the 17th cent. and six bays of the nave were demolished after the Civil War. In consequence Carlisle Cathedral is one of the smallest in England. Its chief glory is the great E. window. In 1856 the see was enlarged by the addition of most of the southern part of Cumbria.

The Register of John de Halton, Bishop of Carlisle A.D. 1292–1324, transcribed by W. N. Thompson, with an introd. by T. F. Tout (*Canterbury and York Society, xii and xiii; 1913). Extracts from various later Registers in J. Raine (ed.), Historical Papers and Letters from the Northern Registers (R.S., 1873), passim. Extant records of the see listed in the Ninth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, part i (1863), pp. 177–97. The Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Carlisle ed. with introd. by J. E. Prescott (Carlisle, 1879). J. Nicolson–R. Burn, The History and Antiquities of the Counties of Westmorland and Cumberland, ii (1777), pp. 243–310. J. Wilson in V.C.H., Cumberland, ii, ed. id. (1905), pp. 131–51. J. C. Dickinson, 'The Origins of the Cathedral of Carlisle' in Transactions of the Cumberland & Westmorland Antiquarian & Archaeological Society, New Series, xlv (1946), pp. 134–43; C. G. Bulman, 'The Norman Priory at Carlisle', ib., xxxvii (1937), pp. 56–66; id., 'Carlisle Cathedral and its development in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries', ib., xlix (1950), pp. 87–117. J. E. Prescott in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 95–8, s.v.; H. Dauphin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 1050–8.

CARLOVINGIAN SCHOOLS. See Carolingian Schools.

CARLSTADT (c. 1480–1541), German reformer. He was so named from his birthplace, his real name being Andreas Bodenstein. After studying at Erfurt and *Cologne, he began to teach in 1505 at the newly founded University of *Wittenberg, where he soon became famous as an upholder of the philosophical doctrines of St. *Thomas Aquinas against the current *nominalism. A visit to Rome in 1515 led to a spiritual crisis, and in 1516, after his return, he repudiated his Thomist beliefs and became a vigorous exponent of the *Augustinian doctrine of the powerlessness of the human will. In answer to J. *Eck's theses, Carlstadt himself published in 1518 a set of theses maintaining 'Protestant' doctrines; and in 1519 he disputed in public with Eck at Leipzig. From that time onwards Carlstadt was recognized as the most extreme of all the Reformers. On Christmas Day 1521 he celebrated the first Protestant Communion Service, with neither *vestments nor *canon nor *elevation, the laity being communicated under both species. On the day following he carried his attack on clerical celibacy into effect by announcing his engagement to be married. His views became increasingly violent, and he often found himself in very sharp conflict with M. *Luther, who after his release from the Wartburg and return to Wittenberg in March 1522 directed ecclesiastical affairs there on lines which to Carlstadt savoured of compromise. In 1524 Luther attacked the new 'Judas', as he termed him, in his tract Wider die himmlischen Propheten, and Carlstadt was forced to renounce his professorship and flee. Allowed to return in 1525 on condition that he did not lecture, he was again forced to leave in 1528–9, and after many travels eventually reached Zürich. He remained in Switzerland for the rest of his life, from 1534 to his death holding a professorship at Basle.

Karlstadts Schriften aus den Jahren 1523–25 ed. E. Hertzsch (2 vols., Halle, 1956–7). His commentary on St. Augustine's De Spiritu et Litera ed., with introd., by E. Kähler, Karlstadt und Augustin (ib., 1952). J. Eck, 'Defensio contra Amarulentas D. Andreae Bodenstein Carlostatini Invectiones (1518)' ed. J. Greving (Corpus Catholicorum, i; Münster i.W., 1919). H. Barge, Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt (2 vols., 1905); K. Müller, Luther und Karlstadt (1907); H. Barge, Frühprotestantisches Gemeindechristentum in Wittenberg und Orlamünde. Zugleich eine Abwehr gegen Karl Müllers Luther und Karlstadt (1909); F. Kriechbaum, Grundzüge der Theologie Karlstadts (Hamburg, 1967). [E.] G. Rupp, Patterns in Reformation (1969), pp. 49–153. H. Barge in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 73–80, s.v. 'Karlstadt, Andreas', with older bibl.; E. Hertzsch in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), col. 1154 f., s.v. 'Karlstadt, Andreas Bodenstein'. R. J. Sider, Andreas Bodenstein von Karlstadt. The Development of his Thought 1517–1525 (Leiden, 1974).

CARLYLE, THOMAS (1795–1881), Scottish historian, essayist, and moral teacher. Educated at Edinburgh University, he later was elected its rector (1866). His religious influence (which alone can be referred to here) has been widespread, for though he hated creeds, churches, and theologies, he had a profound belief in God and was convinced that 'the Religious Principle lies unseen in the hearts of all good men'. As an idealist who believed that matter exists only spiritually, he was the relentless foe of all materialistic philosophy and, through such works as Sartor Resartus (1833–4), On Heroes, Hero-worship, & the Heroic in History (1841) and Past and Present (1843), which exposed worldly pleasure-seeking and money-making, he became the religious teacher of thousands. His independent, critical outlook rejected organized Christianity, but there was as much of the prophet as the poet in him and he consistently preached that the 'Everlasting Yea' is to love God.

Collected Works in 15 vols. (1857–8), in 17 vols. (1885–8), and 'Centenary Edition' by H. D. Traill in 30 vols. (1896–9). Letters, 1814–26, ed. C. E. Norton (2 vols., 1886), and 1826–36 (id., 2 vols., 1888); id., *The Correspondence of Thomas Carlyle and Ralf Waldo Emerson, 1834–72 (2 vols., 1883), and Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle (1887); A. Carlyle, New Letters of Thomas Carlyle (2 vols., 1904) and Letters of Thomas Carlyle to John Stuart Mill, John Sterling and Robert Browning (1923); Letters to his Wife, ed. Trudy Bliss (1953). Correspondence of Emerson and Carlyle also ed. J. Slater (New York–London, 1964). J. A. Froude (ed.), Reminiscences by Thomas Carlyle (2 vols., 1881) and Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle (3 vols., 1883). Id., Thomas Carlyle, 1795–1835 (2 vols., 1882); id., Thomas Carlyle, 1834–1881 (2 vols., 1884). Life by D. A. Wilson (6 vols., 1923–34). S. Sagar, Round by Repentance Tower. A Study of Carlyle (1930); J. Symons, Thomas Carlyle. The Life and Ideals of a Prophet (1952), with select bibl. F. F. Yandell, and penance. The latter are enclosed and follow the same severe rule as the men, abstaining perpetually from flesh-meat and fasting from the Feast of the *Exaltation of the Cross (14 Sept.) until *Holy Saturday. The order propagates a special devotion to Our Lady and to the Child Jesus, and in the Middle Ages Carmelite theologians were among the earliest defenders of the *Immaculate Conception. The order has produced some of the greatest of Christian mystics, notably, besides St. Teresa and St. John of the Cross, the Calced Carmelite St. *Mary Magdalen of Pazzi (1566–1607; feast day, 25 May [formerly 29 May, except in the order]). The popular saint of modern times, St. *Teresa of Lisieux, was also a Sister of the Teresian Reform.

The habit of the order is dark brown with a brown scapular and a white mantle (therefore these religious were popularly called 'Whitefriars'). The nuns wear a black veil.

J. B. de Lezana, O.C.C., Annales Sacri, Prophetici et Eliani Ordinis Beatae Virginis Mariae de Monte Carmeli (4 vols., Rome, 1645–56). [C. de Villiers de St.-Étienne,] Bibliotheca Carmelitana. Notis Criticis et Dissertationibus Illustrata (2 vols., Orléans, 1752; repr. with supplementary material by G. Wessels, O.C.C. (Rome, 1927)). B. Zimmerman, O.D.C. (ed.), Ordinaire de l'ordre de Notre-Dame du Mont-Carmel par Sibert de Beka, vers 1312 (Paris, 1910). L. van den Bossche, Les Carmes (1930); H. Peltier, Histoire du Carmel [1958]. R. McCaffrey, O.C.C., The White Friars. An Outline Carmelite History with special reference to the English-Speaking Provinces (Dublin, 1926); L. C. Sheppard, The English Carmelites (1943). P. W. Janssen, O.C.C., Les Origines de la réforme des Carmes en France au XVIIe siècle (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, iv; The Hague, 1963). Monumenta Historica Carmelitana (Lirinae, 1905 ff.). Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum (Rome, 1908 ff.). Textus et Studia Historica Carmelitana (Rome, 1954 ff.). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 54–95, with bibl. B. Zimmerman, O.D.C., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 354–70, s.v.; Melchior de Ste-Marie, O.C.D., in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 1070–1104, s.v. 'Carmel (Ordre de Notre-Dame du Mont-Carmel)', with bibl.; T. Brandsma, O.C.C., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 156–71, s.v. 'Carmes'.

On the Discalced Carmelites see also Constitutiones Fratrum Discalceatorum Congregationis S. Eliae Ordinis Beatissimae Virginis Mariae de Monte Carmelo (Paris, 1638). Chroniques de l'ordre des Carmélites de la réforme de Sainte-Thérèse depuis leur introduction en France (5 vols., Troyes, 1846–65; Deuxième Série, 4 vols., Poitiers, 1888–9). Silverio de Santa Teresa, O.C.D., Historia del Carmo Descalzo en España, Portugal y América (15 vols., Burgos, 1935–52). E. A. Peers, Handbook to the Life and Times of St. Teresa and St. John of the Cross (1954). Études carmélitaines (Paris, 1911 ff.); Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum Discalceatorum (Rome, 1926 ff.); Ephemerides Carmeliticae (Florence, 1947 ff.), with supplementary Archivum Bibliographicum Carmelitanum (Rome, 1956 ff.). Gabriel de Sainte-Marie-Magdaleine, O.C.D., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 171–209, s.v. 'Carmes Déchaussés', with bibl.

CARNIVAL. Popular etymology derives the word from caro vale, i.e. 'good-bye flesh'; but more probable is the derivation from carnem levare, 'to put away flesh-meat'. It is the name given in RC countries to the period before *Lent, whether it be the three days immediately previous, or the whole period between 3 Feb. and *Ash Wednesday. Such seasons of feasting and dancing early degenerated into riots, hence the transference of the word to secular festive occasions.

CAROL. A song of joy, originally accompanying a dance; now applied esp. to traditional and popular songs of a religious character. The word is from the Italian carola, a 'ring dance' (from carolare, 'to sing'). Historically the carol differs from the hymn in being a popular, and often unpolished, reflection on a religious theme, composed for informal singing, whereas the hymn was written by skilled and educated churchmen for formal use in Divine Service. Modern practice in England, where the 19th and 20th cents. have seen a considerable revival of the popularity of carols, has tended to confine the singing of them to Christmastide, and also to break down the distinction between carols and hymns, carols being often sung in church, and hymns outside the liturgy. A service of carols and lessons, introduced by E. W. *Benson, Bp. of *Truro, in 1880, was adopted by King's College, Cambridge, in 1918; as modified in the following year, it has become widely popular. There are many traditional carols for seasons other than Christmas.

P. *Dearmer–R. Vaughan *Williams and M. Shaw (ed.), The Oxford Book of Carols (1928); R. L. Greene (ed.), The Early English Carols (Oxford, 1935); id. (ed.), A Selection of English Carols (ib., 1962); R. Nettel (ed.), Carols 1400–1950. A Book of Christmas Carols (1956). E. Routley, The English Carol (1958), with bibl.

CAROLINE BOOKS, The (Libri Carolini). A treatise compiled c. 790–92, which purports to have been written by *Charlemagne, but is manifestly the work of a skilled theologian. It was an attack on the *Iconoclastic Council of 754 (for forbidding images altogether) and *Nicaea II of 787 (for allowing excessive reverence to be paid to them). Its true purpose may be explained by Charlemagne's known irritation with the Greek empress, Irene, and his wish, by discrediting Greek authority of whatever kind, to have the more justification for assuming the Imperial title. It was long supposed that *Alcuin was its real author, but recent research has made it seem very probable that it was the work of *Theodulf of Orleans.

Text in J. P. Migne, PL, xcviii, 989–1248; modern ed. by H. Bastgen in M.G.H., Legum Sectio III, Concilia II, Supplement (1924). Id., 'Das Capitulare Karls d. Gr. über die Bilder oder die sogenannten Libri Carolini' in N.A., xxxv (1911), pp. 631–66, and xxxvi (1912), pp. 15–51 and 455–533. W. von den Steinen, 'Karl der Grosse und die Libri Carolini. Die tironischen Randnoten zum Codex Authenticus', ib., xlix (1931), pp. 207–80. D. de Bruyne, 'La Composition des Libri Carolini' in R. Bén., xliv (1932), pp. 227–34. Ann Freeman, 'Theodulf of Orleans and the Libri Carolini' in Speculum, xxxii (1957), pp. 663–705; id., 'Further Studies in the Libri Carolini', ib., xl (1965), pp. 203–89, and xlvi (1971), pp. 597–612. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 1061–91. K. Baus in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 1020 f., s.v. 'Libri Carolini', with bibl.

CAROLINE DIVINES, The. The Anglican divines of the 17th cent., esp. when considered as exponents of High Church principles. The term is not ordinarily restricted (as the word would imply) to those who wrote esp. or solely during the reigns of *Charles I (1625–49) and *Charles II (1660–85), but it is taken to include such theologians as L. *Andrewes (d. 1626). See also Anglicanism.

Many of their writings are reprinted in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology, 1841 ff. See also P. E. More–F. L. Cross, Anglicanism. The Thought and Practice of the Church of England, illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism. A Survey of Anglican Theological Method in the Seventeenth Century (1965); C. F. Allison, The Rise of Moralism. The Proclamation of the Gospel from Hooker to Baxter (1966).

CAROLINGIAN SCHOOLS. The reign of *Charlemagne (768–814) stimulated an intellectual Renaissance within his domains which continued down to the dark days of the Norsemen's invasions and left its mark upon the future history of education. The responsibility for this revival largely rested with Charlemagne himself, and his advisers

*Alcuin and *Theodulf of Orléans. By establishing new schools and patronizing scholars he hoped to diminish the illiteracy of the Frankish clergy. In 787 he issued a *capitulary to Baugulf, Abbot of *Fulda, ordering that in all monasteries and bishops' houses there should be study and 'let those who can, teach'. This prescription, which has been termed the 'charter of modern education', was followed in 789 by another capitulary ordering that 'there may be schools for reading-boys; let them learn psalms, notes, chants, the computus and grammar, in every monastery and bishop's house'. Further capitularies (e.g. that of 805) confirmed and elaborated Charlemagne's educational legislation. Through his initiative a Palace School was formed for the cultivation of the *seven liberal arts, which was attended by members of the court as well as the boy lectors of the royal chapel, children of the nobility, and even plebeians. It was probably the first school to give a classical education to members of the laity in any number.

During this period the chief schools were connected with cathedrals and monasteries, the school of Alcuin at Tours being the model for the rest. Of the episcopal schools, those at Orléans (under Theodulf) and at *Reims (later to be under *Hincmar and *Remigius of Auxerre) were the most distinguished. Of the schools more directly connected with monasteries, the schools at Fulda under *Rabanus Maurus, a breeding-ground for scholars, at *Corbie under Adalhard and *Paschasius Radbertus, at Ferrières under *Lupus Servatus, at St. Wandrille, at St. *Gall, and at St. Riquier, were all notable for their scholarship.

The Carolingian Schools were not outstanding for originality of thought. Alcuin's primers, on orthography, grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic, are by modern standards very crude productions. The main purpose, for instance, why he taught mathematics was to enable pupils to calculate the dates of Church festivals. Even his interpretation of theology was quite elementary. There are many indications (e.g. decrees of the Councils of Paris, 824; of Mainz, 847; of Savonnières, 859) that the educational legislation of Charlemagne was not effectively carried out in the declining years of the Carolingian era. Nevertheless many schools (e.g. St. Gall), thus stimulated by the Carolingian revival, maintained a high reputation through the early Middle Ages as educational centres. Finally the responsibility for restoring Latin to the position of a literary language and the formation of a more accurate orthography largely rests with the scholars of these schools, whilst editions and copies of the classics, both Christian and pagan, were produced which to some extent were to form in a later period the bases of Renaissance scholarship itself.

J. B. Mullinger, The Schools of Charles the Great and the Restoration of Education in the Ninth Century (1877); L. Maître, Les Écoles épiscopales et monastiques de l'occident depuis Charlemagne jusqu'à Philippe-Auguste (1866), passim. On the Carolingian renaissance in general, the following may be consulted: G. Monod, Études critiques sur les sources de l'histoire carolingienne (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, cxix; 1898), ch. 2, 'La Renaissance carolingienne', pp. 37–67; Erna Patzelt, Die karolingische Renaissance (Vienna, 1924; ed. 2, with additional material by C. Vogel, Graz, 1965). Further, G. Paris, Histoire poétique de Charlemagne (1865); K. Strecker, 'Studien zu karolingischen Dichtern' in N.A., xliii (1922), pp. 479–511, and xliv (1922), pp. 209–51; R. Hinks, Carolingian Art (1935). M. R. James, 'Learning and Literature till Pope Sylvester II' in C.Med.H., iii (1922), pp. 514–38. M. L. W. Laistner, Thought and Letters in Western Europe, A.D. 500–900 (1931), pp. 147–325; ed. 2 (1957), pp. 187–386. É. Amann in Fliche–Martin, vi (1947), pp. 71–106. Manitius, i, pp. 243–718. See also bibl. to Alcuin, Charlemagne, and Theodulf of Orléans.

CARPENTER, JOSEPH ESTLIN (1844–1927), English *Unitarian divine. The grandson of Lant *Carpenter (q.v.), he was educated at University College, London. After some years as Unitarian minister at Clifton, Bristol (1866–9) and Mill Hill, Leeds (1869–75), he became lecturer at *Manchester New College, first at London (1875–89) and then at Oxford (1889–1906). From 1906 to 1915 he was principal of Manchester College. One of the chief figures in modern Unitarianism, he was widely respected for his extensive knowledge in comparative religion, Semitic literature, and other religious subjects. His writings include The First Three Gospels (1890), *The Composition of the Hexateuch (1902), Comparative Religion (in the Home University Library, 1913), and The Johannine Writings (1927). He was also the English translator of vols. iii to v of G. H. A. *Ewald's History of Israel.

Joseph Estlin Carpenter. A Memorial Volume, ed. by C. H. Herford (1929). J. H. Weatherall in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 161 f.

CARPENTER, LANT (1780–1840), *Unitarian minister. Educated at dissenting schools and at Glasgow university (1798–1801), he became a Unitarian minister, and from 1802 to 1805 was librarian of the Liverpool Athenaeum. Afterwards he was headmaster and pastor at boarding schools, first at *Exeter (1805–17) and then at Bristol (1817–1829), where Harriet and James *Martineau were among his pupils. He was drowned near Naples on 5–6 Apr. 1840.

Carpenter did much to foster a more liberal spirit in English Unitarianism. In 1825, on the amalgamation of three older societies into the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, he was instrumental in expunging from the constitution of the new body a preamble branding Trinitarianism as idolatrous. He continued, however, to regard baptism as superstitious, substituting a form of dedication of infants. Among his many works were Unitarianism, the Doctrine of the Gospels (1809), and Systematic Education (2 vols., 1815).

Russell Lant Carpenter (son), Memoirs of the Life of the Rev. Lant Carpenter, LL.D. (1842). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lx (1887), pp. 157–9.

CARPENTER, WILLIAM BOYD (1841–1918), Bp. of *Ripon. Educated at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, he held a succession of parish appointments in which he rapidly gained a great reputation as a preacher. Much liked by Queen Victoria, he was appointed a Royal Chaplain in 1879, Canon of Windsor in 1882, and Bp. of Ripon in 1884 (resigned, 1911). In 1898 he founded the Ripon Clergy College, which moved in 1919 to Oxford (where it was renamed 'Ripon Hall') and in 1933 to a site just outside Oxford on Boars Hill. From 1911 until his death he was a Canon of *Westminster. His influence in the later 19th cent. was far-reaching, but his prolific writings have little permanent interest.

H. D. A. Major, The Life and Letters of William Boyd Carpenter (1925). Id. in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 94.

CARPOCRATES (2nd cent.), *Gnostic teacher. He was probably a native of *Alexandria. His disciples, the 'Carpocratians', who survived till the 4th cent., preached a licentious ethic, the transmigration of souls, and the doctrine that Jesus was born by natural generation. His son, Epiphanes, wrote a treatise 'On Justice', in which, under the influence of *Plato's 'Republic', he advocated a community of women and goods. However, the tradition about Carpocrates has been disputed, and may possibly rest on a confused account of a cult of the Egyptian deity Harpocrates.

*Irenaeus, Adv. haer. I. xxv; *Hippolytus, Ref. vii. 32; *Clement, Strom., III. 2–6. Texts conveniently pr. in W. Völker (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (1932), pp. 33–38. H. Liboron, Die Karpokratianische Gnosis. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Anschauungswelt eines spätgnostischen Systems (Studien zur Religionswissenschaft, iii; 1938). H. Kraft, 'Gab es einen Gnostiker Karpokrates?' in Theologische Zeitschrift, viii (1952), pp. 434–43. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 407–9, s.v.; G. Bareille in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1800–1803, s.v.

CARPZOV. A family of German theologians and lawyers. Among those most distinguished in ecclesiastical affairs were:

(1) BENEDIKT (1595–1666), who founded the earliest complete system of Protestant ecclesiastical law, in his Jurisprudentia ecclesiastica seu consistorialis (1649).

(2) JOHANN BENEDIKT I (1607–57), his brother, who first systematized the *Lutheran creeds in his Isagoge in libros ecclesiarum Lutheranarum symbolicos (1665).

(3) JOHANN BENEDIKT II (1639–99) and (4) SAMUEL BENEDIKT (1647–1707), his sons, who were engaged in the *Pietist controversy, Johann maintaining the traditional position and Samuel supporting the Pietists, until won over by his elder brother.

(5) JOHANN GOTTLOB (1679–1767), son of (4), who was among the foremost orthodox OT scholars of his day in Germany, and attacked the Pietists, the *Moravians, and the first liberal Biblical critics. (See esp. Introductio in libros Veteris Testamenti (1714–21) and Critica sacra (1728).)

(6) JOHANN BENEDIKT III (1720–1803), grandson of (3). A classical scholar and theologian, he attacked the *rationalism of W. A. Teller (1734–1804) in his Liber doctrinalis theologiae purioris (1768); he was also an authority on the NT and on *patristics.

CARROLL, JOHN (1735–1815), Abp. of Baltimore and first bishop of the RC hierarchy in the U.S.A. A native of Upper Marlborough, Maryland, he was educated at *St.-Omer in Flanders. He entered the *Jesuit Order in 1753, was ordained priest in 1769, and during the next four years taught philosophy and theology at St.-Omer and Liège. After the suppression of the Jesuits in 1773 he returned to Maryland in 1774, where he led the life of a missionary, and actively supported the movement for political independence. In 1776 he took part in the embassy of B. Franklin to Canada, and, partly through Franklin's influence, was appointed by the Pope in 1784 Superior of the Missions, a step which made the Church in the U.S.A. independent of the *Vicars Apostolic in England. The priests of Maryland having petitioned *Pius VI in 1788 for a bishop for the U.S.A., Carroll was appointed in 1789. In 1790 he was consecrated in the chapel of Lulworth Castle, Dorset, to the see of Baltimore. Here he did a great work in consolidating the RC Church. In 1808 he was made an archbishop, and his enormous diocese was divided into four sees. See also United States of America, Christianity in.

P. Guilday, The Life and Times of John Carroll (New York, 1922), incl. full bibl.; Annabelle M. Melville, John Carroll of Baltimore (ibid. [1955]). R. J. Purcell in Dict. Amer. Biog., iii (1929), pp. 526–8. A. M. Melville in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 151–4, s.v.

CARSTARES, WILLIAM (1649–1715), statesman and *Presbyterian divine. He was educated at Edinburgh University from 1663 to 1667, and at Utrecht from c. 1669 to 1672, and was probably ordained in the Dutch Reformed Church. While in Holland he was introduced to William of Orange, who was already looking for agents in Great Britain. From 1674 to 1679 he was imprisoned in the Tower and at Edinburgh without specific charge, and although he was certainly involved in the plots against *Charles II in 1683–4, escaped severe punishment, probably by acting as an informer. He was the principal adviser of William of Orange in Scottish matters, and won a great reputation for wisdom, integrity, and fearlessness. Although completely intolerant of episcopalianism, he showed considerable benevolence to individual episcopalians. In 1703 he was made Principal of Edinburgh University, and he was *Moderator of the Established Church of Scotland in 1705, 1708, 1711, and 1715. He took a prominent part in bringing about the Act of Union in 1707.

R. H. Story, Character and Career of W. Carstares (1874); A. I. Dunlop, William Carstares and the Kirk by Law Established (Chalmers Lectures, 1964; Edinburgh, 1967). J. B. P. Bulloch in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 94–106. Æ. Mackay in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 187–90.

CARTA CARITATIS. The 'Charter of Love', so called in opposition to the obligatory charters of the *Cluniac Order, was the document outlining the constitution of the *Cistercian Order, and was presented in 1119 to Pope *Callistus II. In its final form, c. 1155, it is a masterly and novel outline of a religious order of autonomous houses forming a family; it established annual visitation of each house by the abbot of the house which founded it, and an annual General Chapter with legislative and judicial powers. There are also instructions for abbatial elections and the correction of delinquent abbots and monasteries. The Charter, short as it is, has in recent years been subjected to intensive textual criticism, and it has been divided with great probability into a nucleus, the work of *Stephen Harding, and successive additions, but controversy continues.

The official text is ed. P. Guignard, Les Monuments primitifs de la Règle cistercienne (Dijon, 1878), pp. 76–84; crit. ed. by J. B. Van Damme, O.C.R., Documenta pro Cisterciensis Ordinis Historiae ac Juris Studio (Westmalle, 1959), pp. 15–21. Account of controversy, with refl., in [M.] D. Knowles, The Monastic Order in England (ed. 2, Cambridge, 1963), pp. 752 f.

CARTER, THOMAS THELLUSSON (1808–1901), sub-*Tractarian divine. Educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, he left Oxford before the *Oxford Movement began; but when, after a succession of parochial appointments, he became Rector of Clewer, near Windsor, in 1844, he had come deeply under Tractarian influence. In 1849 he founded at Clewer a House of Mercy for the rescue of fallen women, and in 1852 a sisterhood, the Community of St. John the Baptist (C.S.J.B.), to take charge of it. Throughout the rest of his life he continued to take a prominent part in the High Church Movement, esp. through the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, the *English Church Union, and the Society of the Holy Cross. He was the author a long series of spiritual and controversial writings, including the widely used Treasury of Devotion (1869).

W. H. Hutchings, Life and Letters of Thomas Thellusson Carter (1903). A. R. Buckland in D.N.B., 1901–1911, i, pp. 319–21, s.v.

CARTESIANISM. The set of philosophical principles embodied in the teaching of R. *Descartes (1596–1650).

CARTHAGE, Councils of. The early ecclesiastical Councils held at Carthage fall naturally into four groups:

(1) Those under St. *Cyprian in 251, 252, 254, 255, and 256. At the earlier of these Councils the chief subject was the reconciliation of those who had lapsed during the *Decian Persecution, at the later ones the dispute with Rome about the re-*baptism of heretics.

(2) Those under Gratus c. 348 and Genethlius 390. These are the earliest African Councils of which collections of canons survive.

(3) Those under *Aurelius. There is a long series extending from 393 to 424, the most celebrated being that of May 419, when the claims of Rome to exercise jurisdiction over Africa were strongly contested (see Apiarius). To this Council belongs the extended collection of canons (most of them taken over from earlier Councils) known as the 'Codex Canonum Ecclesiae Africanae'.

(4) Those under Boniface, Bp. of Carthage, in 525 and 534. The canons of only the former of these Councils survive.

The texts will be found in the standard collections of J. *Hardouin and J. D. *Mansi. F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechtes in Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters, i (1870), pp. 149–85. F. L. Cross, 'History and Fiction in the African Canons' in J.T.S., N.S., xii (1961), pp. 227–47.

CARTHUSIAN ORDER. This strictly contemplative order was founded by St. *Bruno, in 1084, at the *Grande Chartreuse (whence its name). At first it had no special Rule, though it demanded perfect mortification and renunciation of the world. The monks were vowed to silence and, by Bruno's orders, each lived in his own cell within the monastery, working and devoting several hours daily to mental prayer, and meeting his brethren for the *office, for the conventual *Mass, and for meals only on feast days. In 1127 Guigues de Châtel, Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, compiled as their Rule the 'Consuetudines Carthusiae', which received in 1133 the approbation of Innocent II. This with the resolutions made by the General Chapters since 1127 constituted the 'Statuta Antiqua' (1259). Further additions were made in 1368 ('Statuta Nova'), 1509 ('Tertia Compilatio'), and in 1581 ('Nova Collectio Statutorum'). The elaboration of the Carthusian Rule, however, has hardly modified (except in the number of fasts) the austerity and self-denial characteristic of the order from the beginning. The basis of Carthusian custom was and is a combination of *Benedictine monachism and eremitical *asceticism.

The history of the order has been comparatively uneventful, the most notable incident being a division within the order caused by the *Great Schism (1378–1409), which was healed by the resignation of the two *Generals and the election of a third in their place. The order was one of the least affected by the decline of monasticism in the late Middle Ages. During the Reformation a number of English Carthusians were put to death by *Henry VIII, but in Spain, France, and Italy the order was prosperous. The Carthusians suffered badly during the French Revolution, and though much of their property was restored in 1816, the *anti-clerical legislation of 1901 once again drove them from the Grande Chartreuse. Most of them found refuge in Spain. In 1940 they returned to the Grande Chartreuse. The headquarters of the English Carthusians is now the Charterhouse at Parkminister, Partridge Green, in W. Sussex (est. 1883). Their habit is white, with a white leather belt.

The Carthusians have numbered among their members many mystics and devotional writers. The most famous of English Carthusians is St. *Hugh, the real founder of the first English Charterhouse at Witham in 1175–6, and later Bp. of *Lincoln.

The order also includes a few houses of nuns who live under a similar Rule to the monks. The government of the order rests with the General, who is the Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, elected by the monks of his house, and a General Chapter, consisting of the visitors and priors, which meets every year.

Annales Ordinis Cartusiensis ab anno 1084 ad annum 1429, begun by C. Le Couteulx, Ord. Cart. ('Correrea', 1687), ed. and contd. by Carthusians of Montreuil (8 vols., 1887–91). L. Vasseur, Ord. Cart., Ephemerides Ordinis Cartusiensis (ed. by Carthusians of Montreuil, 4 vols., 1890–92). V. M. Doreau, Les Éphémérides de l'ordre des Chartreux (4 vols., Montreuil, 1897–1900). C. Bohič, Ord. Cart., Chronica Ordinis Carthusiensis, ab anno 1084 ad annum 1510 (4 vols., Parkminster, 1911–54). A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'La Chronique des premiers Chartreux' in Revue Mabillon, xvi (1926), pp. 77–141. E. Baumann, Les Chartreux ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques', 1928). H. Élie, Les Éditions des statuts de l'ordre chartreux (Lausanne, 1943). Lettres des premiers Chartreux, ed. by Un Chartreux (S.C., lxxxviii, etc., 1962 ff.). Anon., Maisons de l'ordre des Chartreux: vues et notices (4 vols., 1913–19). E. M. Thompson, The Carthusian Order in England (C.H.S., N.S., iii, 1930); id., A History of the Somerset Carthusians ('Catholic Standard Library', 1895). B. Bligny, L'Eglise et les ordres religieux dans le royaume de Bourgogne aux XIe et XIIe siècles (1960), pp. 245–318, with bibl., p. 490 f. J. Dubois, O.S.B., 'Quelques problèmes de l'histoire de l'Ordre des Chartreux à propos de livres récents' in R.H.E., lxiii (1968), pp. 27–54. Heimbucher, i, pp. 376–91, and ii, p. 656. A. Autore, Ord. Cart., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2274–318, s.v. 'Chartreux', with bibl.; Y. Gourdel, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 705–76, s.v. 'Chartreux'. See also bibl. to Bruno, St., and Grande-Chartreuse.

CARTOUCHE. A type of mural memorial tablet widely introduced into English churches in the 17th and 18th cents. Usually of marble, it is provided with a surface, made to resemble a somewhat bent piece of paper, for the inscription, and surrounded with ornamentation. It is often surmounted with the coat of arms of the deceased.

Katharine A. Esdaile, English Church Monuments, 1510–1840 (1946), Plates Nos. 25, 28–30.

CARTWRIGHT, THOMAS (1535–1603), *Puritan divine. Elected in 1550 a scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, which at that date strongly supported Reformation doctrines, he was forced to leave the university on *Mary's accession (1553), and did not return to Cambridge till after her death, when he became a Minor Fellow of Trinity. He took an active part in the theological disputes at the university in the early years of *Elizabeth I's reign and, apparently to escape from them, retired to Ireland from 1565 to 1567. In 1569 he was appointed Lady Margaret professor at Cambridge, a triumph for his friends, and then began vigorously to criticize the constitution of the C of E. He was deprived of his professorship in 1570 and of his fellowship in 1571, and made his way to Geneva, where he established contact with T. Beza. In Nov. 1572 he returned, but his sympathies with the Admonition to the Parliament involved him in a long controversy which ended in his taking flight again and not returning till 1585. From now onwards he took an active part in furthering *Presbyterianism and fostering the Puritan cause. When he was arrested and tried in 1590 by the Court of *High Commission he successfully evaded condemnation and was set free again in 1592. On *James's accession he drew up the *Millenary Petition (1603), but did not survive till the *Hampton Court Conference, at which it had been intended that he should be the leading Presbyterian spokesman. He was the most gifted. able, and learned of the 16th cent. Puritans.

A. Peel–L. H. Carlson (ed.), Cartwrightiana (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, i, 1951). A. F. Scott Pearson, Thomas Cartwright and Elizabethan Puritanism, 1535–1603 (1925). J. F. H. New, 'The Whitgift–Cartwright Controversy' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, lix (1968), pp. 203–11. R. G. Usher in D.E.C.H., p. 101 f., s.v.; J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 226–30. See also works cited under Puritans.

CASAUBON, ISAAC (1559–1614), classical scholar. Born and educated at Geneva, he became professor at the university there in 1581. In 1586 he married the daughter of the French scholar-printer H. *Stephanus [II]. In 1596 he was appointed to a professorship at Montpellier, but in 1599 he migrated to Paris, where King *Henry IV gave him a pension and, in 1604, appointed him his sub-librarian. His religious opinions, which were greatly influenced by patristic studies and were opposed both to RC-ism and extreme *Calvinism, had long been unsettled, and after Henry's death (1610) he decided to leave for England. Appointed to a prebendal stall at *Canterbury and assigned a pension of £300 a year by *James I, he determined to make England his permanent home; but he died a few years later and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Casaubon's devotion to scholarship, both in classics and theology, was unwearied. His most important classical works were his editions of *Suetonius (which first led J. J. *Scaliger to appreciate his merits), Athenaeus, and Polybius. But if he ranks higher as a classical scholar than as a theologian, he was in fact more interested in theology than in classical literature. He wrote in defence of *Anglicanism, and in 1614 issued a severe criticism of C. *Baronius's annals. He also published (1587) a translation of the NT.

His son, Méric Casaubon (1599–1671), also an eminent scholar, was the editor of *Marcus Aurelius and other classical authors.

Ephemerides (Casaubon's diary, ed. J. Russell, 2 vols., 1850); M. *Pattison, Isaac Casaubon (1875; ed. 2, ed. H. Nettleship, 1892). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 257–61.

CASEL, ODO (1886–1948), liturgist. He became a Benedictine monk at *Maria Laach in 1902 and from 1922 until his sudden death he was spiritual director of the nuns at Herstelle. He was esp. concerned to expound the theological aspects of liturgy and saw in the Eucharist a re-enactment of the mysteries of Christ by his Church (Mysterienlehre). In this way he anticipated the paschal understanding of the Eucharist which was stressed a generation later during the Second *Vatican Council. He elaborated his teaching in a large number of papers, esp. in the Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft. His teaching is summarized in English in The Mystery of Christian Worship (Eng. adaptation, 1962).

A. Mayer–J. Quasten–B. Neunheuser, O.S.B. (edd.), Vom Christlichen Mysterium. Gesammelte Arbeiten zum Gedächtnis von Odo Casel O.S.B. (Düsseldorf, 1951), with list of his works, pp. 363–75. T. Filthaut, Die Kontroverse über die Mysterienlehre (Warendorf, Westf., 1947). B. Neunheuser, O.S.B., in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 176 f., s.v.

CASHEL, Synod of (1171 or 1172). A synod held under Henry II after his invasion of Ireland. It completed the work of bringing the usages of the Celtic Church into conformity with those of the rest of W. Christendom; and in particular revised the rite of *Baptism and introduced an organized system of *tithes. See Ireland, Christianity in.

Hardouin, vi, pt. 2, cols. 1627–32; Mansi, xxii (1778), cols. 131–6; Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 2; 1913), p. 1053 f., with bibl. note.

CASPARI, CARL PAUL (1814–92), German-Norwegian theologian. Of Jewish descent, he was converted to Christianity in 1838. In 1847 he was appointed lector, and in 1857 professor, at the University of Christiania (Oslo). Here he made some important researches into the history of the early Church, esp. the development of the Baptismal *Creeds, which he published as Quellen zur Geschichte des Taufsymbols und der Glaubensregel (vols. 1–3, 1866–75; addit. vol., 1879).

J .Belsheim in P.R.E., iii (ed. 3, 1897), pp. 737–42, s.v.

CASSANDER, GEORG (1513–66), eirenic Catholic theologian. He was born at Pitthem, nr. Bruges, studied at Louvain, taught at Bruges c. 1541 and then at Ghent, and from c. 1549 lived at *Cologne. In his numerous writings he sought to mediate between the Catholics and the Protestants. His chief work, De Officio Pii ac Publicae Tranquillitatis vere amantis Viri in hoc Religionis Dissidio (publd. anonymously, Basle, 1561), which took as its basis the Scriptures and the Fathers of the first six centuries, was esp. concerned to show that abuses were no sufficient reason for leaving the Catholic Church, though Cassander did not conceal his dislike of certain exaggerated Papal claims. When submitted to the Colloquy of *Poissy (1561), it gave offence to both sides. In 1564 the Emp. Ferdinand I invoked Cassander's aid in the official attempt at reunion, and to this end Cassander wrote his Consultatio de Articulis Religionis inter Catholicos et Protestantes Controversis (posthumously published in 1577), seeking to put a Catholic interpretation on the official Protestant formularies. The work met with strong disapproval from both sides. His other writings include Hymni Ecclesiastici (1556), De Baptismo Infantium (1563; against the *Anabaptists), and De Sacra Communione Christiani Populi in utraque Panis et Vini Specie (1564). A collected edition of his works (incomplete) was issued at Paris in 1616 and put on the *Index in the next year.

M. Birck, Georg Cassanders Ideen über die Wiedervereinigung der christlichen Confessionen in Deutschland (1876); P. Bröder, Georg Cassanders Vermittlungsversuche zwischen Protestanten und Katholiken (Diss., Marburg, 1931); Maria E. Nolte, Georgius Cassander en zijn oecumenisch Streven (1951), with English summary. C. Weizsäcker in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), p. 742 f., s.v.; J. Baudot in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2334–40, s.v. 'Cassandre'.

CASSIAN, JOHN (c. 360–435), monk. Though *Gennadius calls him 'natione Scytha', Cassian's birthplace is very uncertain. As a young man he joined a monastery at *Bethlehem, but left soon after (c. 385) to study monasticism in Egypt, where he was much influenced by *Evagrius Ponticus. We next hear of him as a deacon of the Church of *Constantinople, whence he was sent by St. *Chrysostom on an embassy to Pope *Innocent I. After this he seems to have established himself permanently in the W. About 415 he founded two monasteries near Marseilles; and there he wrote his two books, the 'Institutes' and the 'Conferences', out of the material collected during his years in the E. The 'Institutes', which sets out the ordinary rules for the monastic life and discusses the eight chief hindrances to a monk's perfection, was taken as the basis of many W. Rules, being drawn on, e.g., by St. *Benedict. The 'Conferences' recount his conversations with the great leaders of E. monasticism. Cassian was apparently the founder of *Semi-pelagianism (q.v.). He also wrote c. 430 a work in seven books 'De Incarnatione Domini' at the instance of St. *Leo to acquaint the W. with the teachings of *Nestorius. The E. Church treats him as a saint, but in the W. he has never been officially canonized, Marseilles only keeping his feast on 23 July. Feast day in E., 29 Feb. (when this occurs).

Cassian's 'Conferences' were pr. in 1476–8 at Brussels by the *Brethren of the Common Life; other early edd., with the 'Institutes', at Basle, 1485, Venice, 1491, and Basle, 1497. Ed. of his Works by A. Gazaeus (Gazet), 2 vols. in 3, Douai, 1616, repr. J. P. Migne, PL, xlix and l. Crit. ed. by M. Petschenig in C.S.E.L., xiii ('Collations', 1886) and xvii ('Institutes', &c., 1888). Petschenig's text of the 'Conferences' repr. with slight modifications, full introd. and Fr. tr. by E. Pichery, O.S.B. (S.C., xlii, liv, lxiv; 1955–9); 'Institutes' ed., with Fr. tr. by J. C. Guy, S.J. (ib., cix; 1965). Eng. tr. with good prolegomena and notes by E. C. S. Gibson in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, xi (1894), pp. 161–641. [W.] O. Chadwick, John Cassian. A Study in Primitive Monasticism (1950; ed. 2, 1968). E. *Schwartz, Konzilstudien (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft in Strassburg, Hft. xx; 1914), I (pp. 1–17, 'Cassian und Nestorius'). S. Marsili, O.S.B., Giovanni Cassiano ed Evagrio Pontico. Dottrina sulla carità e contemplazione (Studia Anselmiana, v; 1936). L. Cristiani, Jean Cassien, ou la spiritualité du désert (2 vols., 1946). O. Loorits, Der heilige Kassian und die Schaltjahrlegende (FF Communications, No. 149; Helsinki, 1954). H.-O. Weber, Die Stellung des Johannes Cassianus zur ausserpachomianischen Mönchstradition. Eine Quellenuntersuchung (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xxiv; 1961); J. C. Guy, S.J., Jean Cassien. Vie et doctrine spirituelle (1961). V. Codina, S.J., El aspecto cristológico en la espiritualidad de Juan Casiano (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clxxv; 1966). H. I. Marrou, 'Jean Cassien à Marseille' in Revue du Moyen-Age Latin, i (1945), pp. 5–26. P. Munz, 'John Cassian' in J.E.H., xi (1960), pp. 1–22. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 558–65; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 452–4; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2348–57; M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 1319–48, s.v. 'Cassien, 15 (Jean)'; M. Olphe-Galliard in Dict. Sp., i (1953), cols. 214–76.

CASSINESE CONGREGATION. A *Benedictine Congregation which owed its origin to a reform of the monasteries of the Order, instituted by Ludovico Barba at Padua in 1409. The aim of the reformers was to overcome the evil of appointing abbots 'in *commendam', and the congregation was characterized by the overall authority of the General Chapter and the centralized system of appointing abbots on a temporary basis. It spread throughout Italy and was at first called the 'Congregation of Unity' (1421). After the accession of *Monte Cassino in 1504 it became known as the 'Cassinese Congregation'. Its system had a deep effect on the reformed congregations of France and Spain which mark this period of Benedictine history. At its height it had 70 houses, some of them outside Italy. A decline set in during the 18th cent. At the time of the French Revolution the monks were driven out and their properties taken over by the government. When *Pius VII, himself a Cassinese monk, called on them to return to their monasteries relatively few remained, but a partial restoration took place.

The Cassinese Congregation today includes Monte Cassino, Cava, *St. Paul's outside the Walls (Rome) and a number of other famous monasteries. Its English province has abbeys at Ramsgate in Kent and Prinknash in Glos.

The 'Cassinese Congregation of the Primitive Observance' was a 19th cent. offshoot, of international character. It originated from the stricter observance initiated at Genoa under Abbot Peter Casaretto in 1851. The monasteries desiring to embrace this form, which included *Subiaco itself, were formed into a congregation in 1872; it was later known as the 'Congregatio Sublacensis'.

Heimbucher, i, pp. 217–19, 267 f.

CASSINO. See Monte Cassino.

CASSIODORUS, SENATOR, FLAVIUS MAGNUS AURELIUS (c. 485 – c. 580), Roman author and monk. He was a member of a noble Roman family, and at an early age became legal assessor (consiliarius) to his father. He was quaestor in 507, consul in 514, chief of the civil service (magister officiorum) by 526, and praetorian prefect in 533. He took a prominent part in reconciling *Theodoric, who, like all the Goths, was an Arian, with the Romans, and exercised a beneficial influence on his rule. He founded two monasteries on *Benedictine lines at Vivarium, where he became a monk when he retired from public affairs in 540. Having tried in vain to establish a theological school in Rome on the model of *Alexandria, he made of his monastery a kind of academy and encouraged secular as well as religious learning and the copying of MSS., and thereby established the monastic tradition of scholarship that preserved the classical culture of Europe during the Dark Ages. The most important of his publications while still a Roman official is the 'Variae' (sc. epistolae). They contain twelve books of Imperial edicts and decrees drawn up by himself, and served as a model for the medieval chanceries. His 'De Anima', in which he establishes the spirituality of the soul, not generally recognized in the philosophical writers of his age, forms a link between his secular and religious writings. His 'Institutiones Divinarum et Saecularium Litterarum' was a classic. The work was much influenced by St. *Augustine's 'De Doctrina Christiana' and advocated the union of sacred and profane studies in Christian education. The first part, an introduction to the study of theology, contains a long list of all the books which he recommends for the purpose, whereas the second part is a manual of studies of the Seven Liberal Arts. His 'Complexiones in Psalmos', based on St. Augustine's 'Enarrationes', are remarkable for their extensive use of allegorical exegesis. His 'Historia Ecclesiastica Tripartita', a compilation from *Socrates, *Sozomen, and *Theodoret, whose Church Histories his friend Epiphanius had translated for the purpose into Latin, was designed to continue and supplement *Rufinus's adaptation of *Eusebius. Despite many errors, it was much used throughout the Middle Ages as a manual of Church history. His other writings include a working-over of *Pelagius's Commentaries on the Pauline Epp., a chronicle from Adam to A.D. 519, a history of the Goths, and a treatise 'De Orthographia'.

Opera Omnia ed. by J. Garet (2 vols. bound in 1, Rouen, 1679), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxix, 421–1334, and lxx. Variae ed. by T. *Mommsen in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xii (1894); Institutiones, ed. R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1937); Eng. tr. by L. W. Jones (Records of Civilization, No. xl; New York, 1946). Complexiones in Psalmos ed., after Maurist text, by M. Adriaen (C.C., Series Latina, xcvii–xcviii; 1958). Historia Ecclesiastica Tripartita ed. W. Jacob–R. Hanslik (C.S.E.L., lxxi; 1952). Selection of his letters ed. with introd. by T. Hodgkin (London, 1886). Monographs by A. Franz (Breslau, 1872), G. Minasi (Naples, 1895), A. Van de Vyver in Speculum, vi (1931), pp. 244–92, and G. Ludwig (Frankfurt, 1967). E. Schwartz, Zu Cassiodor und Prokop (Sb. (Bayr.) 1939, Heft 2; 1939). G. Bardy, 'Cassiodore et la fin du monde ancien' in L'Année Théologique, vi (1945), pp. 383–425; A. Momigliano, 'Cassiodorus and Italian Culture of his Time' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xli (1955), pp. 207–45, with extensive bibl. reff. W. Jacob, Die handschriftliche Überlieferung der sogenannten Historia Tripartita des Epiphanius-Cassiodor (T.U., lix; 1954). J. J. O'Donnell, Cassiodorus (1979). Dekkers (1951), Nos. 896–911, pp. 156–8. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xi (1949), cols. 1349–1408, s.v. 'Cassiodore'; R. Helm in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 915–26, s.v., with bibl.

CASSOCK. The long garment, now usually black (formerly of various colours), worn by the clergy. It originated in vestis talaris or ankle-length dress, which was retained by the clergy when, under barbarian influence in the 6th cent., shorter garments became usual for secular use. Its use was already ordered by the Council of Braga (572) and subsequent legislation has continued the tradition. The RC Church long insisted upon its use by clerics both out of church and inside, but in many countries coats of varying length are allowed for outdoor wear. The Anglican Canons of 1604 forbade beneficed clergy to go out in public 'in their doublet and hose, without coats or cassocks' (can. 74). The E. 'rason', the normal dress of clergy and monks, corresponds with the W. cassock. The cassocks of bishops in the W. are violet in colour, those of cardinals red, and that of the Pope white.

CASTEL GANDOLFO. A small town in the Alban Hills, some 18 miles south-east of Rome, not far from the Via Appia Nuova. Since the 17th cent. it has been the site of the Pope's summer residence. Under the *Lateran Treaty of 1929, the Papal palace and gardens were assigned to the extra-territorial (i.e. non-Italian) domains of the Holy See.

E. Bonomelli in E.C., iii (1949), cols. 1014–17, s.v.

CASTELLIO, SEBASTIAN (1515–63), *Calvinist theologian and humanist. A native of Savoy, he went to Strassburg in 1540 where he met J. *Calvin, who converted him to Protestantism and procured him a post as rector at the college at Geneva. Humanist influences brought him into conflict with Calvin, and in 1544 theological differences, such as the rejection of the Song of *Solomon from the Canon and an unorthodox view of the descent of Christ into hell, caused their separation. Castellio then went to Basle, where, in 1551, he published his principal work, a Latin translation of the Bible, Biblia Sacra Latina, which aimed at classical elegance, though frequently to the detriment of the vigour of the original. It aroused much opposition, esp. on account of its annotations, with their unecclesiastical attitude to religious truth and their demand for unrestricted religious toleration. In 1552 he was given the professorship of Greek at Basle. In 1554 he published De Haereticis, a condemnation of the execution of M. *Servetus and a plea for tolerance, which completed his break with Calvin and T. *Beza. In 1555 he brought out a French translation of the Bible, which, however, was less successful than his Latin version. His later writings, Contra Libellum Calvini (1612) and De Praedestinatione (1578), could be published only after his death, owing to the hostile attitude of the Calvinists.

Eng. tr. of De Haereticis (with excerpts from other works of Castellio and David Joris on Religious Liberty) by R. H. Bainton (Records of Civilization, No. xxii; New York, 1935). F. Buisson, Sébastien Castellion, sa vie et son œuvre (1515–1563). Étude sur les origines du protestantisme libéral français (2 vols., 1892). Monographs by É. Broussoux (Strassburg, 1867), E. Giran (Haarlem, 1914), and P. Hemmi (Zürich, [1937]). S. Zweig, Castellio gegen Calvin (1936; Eng. tr., 1936); R. H. Bainton and others, Castellioniana. Quatre études sur Sébastien Castellion et l'idée de la tolérance (1951); B. Becker (ed.), Autour de Michel Servet et de Sebastien Castellion (Haarlem, 1953), pp. 142–302; H. R. Guggisberg, Sebastian Castellio im Urteil seiner Nachwelt vom Spathumanismus bis zur Aufklärung (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, lvii; 1956).

CASUISTRY. The art or science of bringing general moral principles to bear upon particular cases. Its exercise is always called for in moral issues, whether the particular decision is made by individual judgement or in accordance with an established code, though the word 'casuistry' is generally restricted to the latter. The introduction of universal private *penance was the natural cause of the rise of formal casuistry in the Church, and by the 7th cent. 'Libri Poenitentiales' were common. Later these were replaced by various 'Summae de Poenitentia' which formed complete legal digests. From the 16th cent. onwards various systems of casuistry, such as *Probabilism, *Probabiliorism, and *Equiprobabilism, developed in the RC Church in competition with each other; the first of these systems, in modified form, eventually won most popularity, largely through the advocacy of St. *Alphonsus Liguori in the 18th cent. Notable Anglican casuists of the 17th cent. were J. *Taylor and R. *Sanderson (qq.v.).

For bibl. see under Moral Theology.

CASWALL, EDWARD (1814–78), hymn-writer. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he was Perpetual Curate of Stratford-sub-Castle, Wilts, from 1840 to 1847. In 1847 he was received into the RC Church, and in 1850 (after the death of his wife) became a member of the *Oratory at Edgbaston under J. H. *Newman. Among his many successful and popular translations of Latin hymns were 'Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding' (A.M. 47, E.H. 5), 'Bethlehem, of noblest cities' (E.H. 40), and 'Jesu, the very thought of thee' (A.M. 178, E.H. 419). He published Lyra Catholica (1849), besides devotional writings and other collections of poems.

T. Cooper in D.N.B., ix (1887), p. 276 f., s. v.

CATACOMBS. This term for the subterranean early Christian burial-places is prob. derived from Gk. κατὰ κύμβας ('at the ravine'). It was applied to the cemetery of San Sebastiano by the *Chronographer of 354 and by the 9th cent. widely used of similar burial-places.

Subterranean burial was practised not only at *Rome, but also in other Italian localities, Malta, N. Africa, Asia Minor, and some northern European cities, e.g. *Paris and Trier. The most famous and extensive catacombs, however, are those of Rome, where they extend several hundred miles. Since Roman legislation regarded every burial-place as sacrosanct, Christians could use the catacombs in the era of the persecutions and their violation was extremely rare. In acc. with the law which required that they should be built outside the walls, they are esp. found along the great roads leading from the City. Some forty in all survive, mainly to the N.E. and S. of the capital. The most important are those named after Sts. *Callistus (with papal crypt), Praetextatus, and *Sebastian, all on the Via Appia; after St. *Domitilla on the Via Ardeatina; after St. *Agnes on the Via Nomentana; after St. *Pancras on the Via Aurelia Vetus; and after St. Commodilla on the Via Ostiensis.

The catacombs consist of labyrinths of galleries and connecting chambers, often arranged in two to four stories one above the other. The bodies were placed in niches (loculi*) hewn in the side-walls, each of which could hold two or three bodies and was closed by stone slabs or large tiles. For the more important members of the community, burial was in spaces hewn out of the wall and surmounted by semicircular recesses (arcosolia*), the body being sometimes placed in a *sarcophagus. The stucco paintings which often covered the walls, esp. later, are the first examples of Christian art. The chief services in the catacombs were the Eucharistic celebrations on the anniversaries of the martyrs. When in the 4th cent. attendance at these services increased, shafts (luminaria) were fitted to let in light and air. Pope *Damasus (366–84) did much for the embellishment of the catacombs. During the 5th cent., esp. after the siege of Rome by Alaric (410), fear of barbarian invasion caused burials in them to cease, though the anniversary services continued. In the following centuries, however, these services were also abandoned and the relics of the martyrs gradually transferred to the City churches.

All through the Middle Ages the existence of the catacombs was completely forgotten until an accidental discovery in 1578 renewed interest in them. An important stage was the publication of A. *Bosio's Roma sotterranea (1632). Much damage was done in the 17th and 18th cents. by the removal of supposed martyr bones and wall paintings. In the 19th cent. scientific investigation was resumed, esp. by G. B. *de Rossi, whose Roma sotterranea cristiana (3 vols., 1864–77) became a classic. Since then experts, encouraged and assisted by the ecclesiastical authorities, have continued to work systematically on the subject. Besides the exploration of the catacombs themselves, many paintings, sarcophagi, and other objects of art have been discovered and published.

Besides older items mentioned in text, M. Armellini, Gli antichi cimiteri cristiani di Roma e d'Italia (1893); O. *Marucchi, Le catacombe romane secondo gli ultimi studi e le più recenti scoperte (1903; ed. 3, 1933, with memoir of author by E. Josi); J. P. Kirsch, Le catacombe romane (1933); P. Styger, S.J., Die römischen Katakomben. Archäologische Forschungen über den Ursprung und die Bedeutung der altchristlichen Grabstätten (1933); id., Römische Märtyrergrüfte (2 vols., 1935); L. Hertling, S.J.–E. Kirschbaum, S.J., Le catacombe romane e i loro martiri (1949; Eng. tr., 1956); P. Testini, Le Catacombe e gli Antichi Cimiteri Cristiani in Roma [Bologna, 1966]. J. Wilpert, Die Malereien der Katakomben Roms (2 vols., 1903). F. de Visscher, 'Le Régime juridique des plus anciens cimetières Chrétiens à Rome' in Anal. Boll., lxix (1951), pp. 39–54. N. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 794–877, s.v. 'Koimeterien, die altchristlichen Begräbnisstätten'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2, 1910), cols. 2376–2486, with bibl., cols. 2447–50; E. Josi in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1617–37, s.v. 'Cimiteri cristiani antichi'; U. Fasola in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 20–44, s.v. 'Katakomben', with further bibl.

CATAFALQUE. An erection, resembling a bier and covered with a *pall, formerly used at *Requiem Masses to represent the corpse in its absence. The derivation of the word is quite uncertain, but its first syllables prob. came from the Gk. κατά, 'alongside'. The term is now also used in a more general sense of the coffin and all its appurtenances.

CATAPHRYGIANS (Gk. Καταφρυγασταί, Καταφρύγας). An alternative title found in a few early Christian writers, e.g. St. *Epiphanius, for the *Montanists in reference to their Phrygian origin.

Epiphanius, Haer., xcviii. i. 3 (PG, xli, 856B); cf. *Jerome, Comm. in Gal., iii (PL, xxvi. 356C).

CATECHESIS. Instruction given to Christian *catechumens preparing for *Baptism, esp. in the primitive Church. The word was also used of the books containing such instruction, of which the most celebrated is that of St. *Cyril of Jerusalem.

CATECHETICAL SCHOOL OF ALEXANDRIA, The. From the later 2nd cent. onwards a theological School existed at *Alexandria, which addressed itself to the propagation of the Christian faith among the more cultured classes. Its first known teacher was *Pantaenus (d. c. 190); but it rose to its highest influence under his successors *Clement (c. 190 – c. 202) and *Origen (c. 202 – 31). After the conflict between Origen and *Demetrius, his Bishop, and Origen's permanent retirement to *Caesarea in 231, the School appears to have come more directly under episcopal control. Among its later heads were Heraclas (231 – c. 233), St. *Dionysius [4] (c. 233 – 48), *Theognostus (248–82), Pierius (282 – c. 290), and *Peter (c. 295 – 300), and, in the 4th cent., *Didymus the Blind. Side by side with the Christian faith, the profane sciences were taught. The School had great influence on the development of Christian theology alongside the University (Museum) of Alexandria and attracted many Christians from distant parts.

H. E. F. Guerike, De Schola quae Alexandriae floruit Catechetica (Halle, 1825). W. *Bousset, Jüdisch-christlicher

Schulbetrieb in Alexandria und Rom (1915). G. Bardy, 'Pour l'histoire de l'école d'Alexandrie' in Vivre et Penser [war-time title of R. Bibl.], ii (1942), pp. 80–109. A. de La Barre in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 805–24. See also works cited s.v. Alexandrian Theology.

CATECHISM (from Gk. κατηχέω, 'to make hear', hence 'to instruct'). A popular manual of Christian doctrine. Originally the term was applied to the oral instruction on the principal Christian truths given to children and adults before baptism. From this usage the name passed to the book containing such instructions. The term seems first to have been used in the early 16th cent., but the idea is much older. In the Middle Ages prescriptions for catechizing the faithful were frequently issued, e.g. at the Council of *Lambeth (1281), and books were produced containing explanations of the Pater Noster and the Creed, lists of mortal sins, &c., arranged preferably in groups of seven. Thus the seven petitions of the Pater Noster were connected with the Seven *Beatitudes and the *Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost, and the *Seven Deadly Sins were opposed to the Seven Principal Virtues and the Seven Works of Mercy. One of the most active propagators of catechisms before the Reformation was J. *Gerson, whose 'ABC des simples gens' became very popular at the end of the 15th cent. Other widely used works of the type were the catechism of J. *Colet in England and the 'Christenspiegel' in Germany.

The *Reformation, with its insistence on religious instruction, brought a flood of new catechisms. The most famous is M. *Luther's Kleiner Katechismus (1529), which is still the standard book of the Lutheran Church not only in Germany but also in other Protestant countries. The Heidelberger Katechismus (1563) occupies a similar position in the *Calvinist communions. The short catechism of the C of E (see foll. entry) is printed in the BCP as a preparation for *Confirmation, and the *Presbyterian Churches generally follow the 'Humble Advice' of the *Westminster Assembly of 1647. In competition with the Protestants the RC Church, too, produced a number of new catechisms. The most famous of these is St. Peter *Canisius' Summa Doctrinae Christianae (1554). The so-called 'Roman Catechism', Catechismus ex Decreto Concilii Tridentini (1566), is not a catechism in the ordinary sense, but a doctrinal exposition on the Creed, the Sacraments, the Decalogue, and Prayer for the use of priests. During the following centuries a flood of RC catechisms appeared; in many countries, e.g. in France, there was a different one approved for each diocese; in England one superseded all others: A Catechism of Christian Doctrine, first issued in 1898, popularly called the 'Penny Catechism'. This was based on R. *Challoner's Abridgement of Christian Doctrine, first published in 1759. Catechisms, whether Catholic or Protestant, normally contain the Creed, the *Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments with explanations; RC ones also add instructions on the *Hail Mary, the three theological virtues, the *Commandments of the Church, the Sacraments, and the Virtues and Vices.

See also Geneva Catechism, Heidelberg Catechism, Westminster Catechisms.

T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith. The Catechisms of the Reformed Church, tr. and ed. with introd. (1959). For early Protestant Catechisms see also F. Cohrs, Die evangelischen Katechismusversuche vor Luthers Enchiridion in Monumenta Germaniae Paedagogica, ed. C. Kehrbach, vols. xx–xxiii and xxxix (1900–7); id. in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 135–64, s.v. 'Katechismen und Katechismusunterricht'.

On the 'Roman Catechism', G. Bellinger, Der Catechismus Romanus und die Reformation. Die katechetische Antwort des Trienter Konzils auf die Haupt-Katechismen der Reformatoren (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, xxvii; 1970).

CATECHISM, THE PRAYER BOOK, the 'Instruction' in the BCP in the form of a series of questions and answers 'to be learned of every person before he be brought to be confirmed by the Bishop'. The inclusion of such a body of teaching in an authorized service book was an innovation in 1549. It consisted of an explanation of the nature of *Baptism akin to that found in the service itself, the *Apostles' Creed followed by a brief explanation of the doctrine of the *Trinity, the Ten *Commandments (in abridged form in 1549, but since 1552 in full and with a prefatory introduction) followed by an explanation of man's duty to God and his neighbour, and the *Lord's Prayer with an explanation of its meaning. In 1604, in response to the Puritans' request at *Hampton Court for a clearer statement of doctrine, a section was added on the Sacraments of Baptism and Holy Communion. In 1689 it was proposed to add two further questions on the Creed and the Church, and in 1887 the Lower House of the *Convocation of Canterbury approved a considerable series of additions on the nature of the Church and Ministry, but neither of these amendments was authorized. From 1549 to 1661 the Catechism was printed at the beginning of the *Confirmation service, presumably with the intention that the Bp. should ask these questions before confirming the candidates. It has since been printed as a separate item before the Confirmation service. In the Form and Manner of Making of Deacons it is said to appertain to the office of a *deacon 'to instruct the youth in the Catechism', but the rubric appended to the Catechism lays that duty on the Curate of the Parish. In 1549 he was to do this at least once every six weeks for half an hour before *Evensong; in 1661 the time was moved to follow the second lesson at Evensong and the frequency left unspecified. In modern times instruction seldom, if ever, takes place during the service.

The authorship of the Prayer Book Catechism is a matter of dispute. The similarity it bears to the 'Small Catechism' (publd. in 1572) by A. *Nowell suggests that the earlier part is his work; the 1604 addition is commonly attributed to J. *Overall, but it prob. incorporates much of Nowell's work. Others to whom the authorship has been attributed include J. Poynet (d. 1556; Bp. of *Rochester and *Winchester), who published a Catechism in 1553; and T. Goodrich (d. 1554; Bp. of *Ely). There were innumerable manuals of instruction on the Ten Commandments, Creed and Lord's Prayer in the preceding period, but it seems clear that the Prayer Book Catechism was influenced by Martin's Prymer (publd. 1534), the *Bishops' Book and the *King's Book, as well as by Calvin's *Geneva Catechism of 1541.

The revision of the Catechism, left untouched by the proposed Prayer Book of 1928, was entrusted to a Commission of the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in 1958. The Revised Catechism, published in 1961, was in 1962 commended by the Convocations for use during a period of seven years; this was later extended to the end of 1985. It widened the scope of the Prayer Book Catechism by adding material on the Church and Ministry, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, the lesser Sacraments, and *Eschatology. While the catechetical form was retained, the language was extensively modernized.

G. *Burnet, An Exposition of the Church Catechism for the Use of the Diocese of Sarum (1710). W. C. E. Newbolt, The Church Catechism (1903). M. Stevenson in P.B.D. (1912), pp. 160–3, s.v.

CATECHIST. (1) In the primitive Church, a teacher of *catechumens, or a lecturer in a *catechetical school.

(2) In modern usage, occasionally, a person appointed to give instruction in Christianity, e.g. to children.

(3) In the mission field, a native Christian teacher.

CATECHUMENS (Gr. κατηχούμενοι). In the early Church those undergoing training and instruction preparatory to Christian *Baptism. They were assigned a place in the church, but solemnly dismissed before the *Eucharist proper began. Since F. X. Funk's researches, the older view that they were divided into several grades, corresponding to the well-known stages of those undergoing penance, has been generally abandoned. Only those who had reached the stage of awaiting Baptism at the coming Easter formed a separate group (φωτιζόμενοι). There was an elaborate ritual of preparation, with a succession of *scrutinies, in the preceding *Lent, the candidates being finally admitted at the Paschal Mass. Illustrations of early catechetical instruction survive in St. *Cyril of Jerusalem's Lectures (c. 350) and St. *Augustine's De Catechizandis Rudibus (c. 400).

In 1962 the catechumenate was restored in the RC Church, when provision was made for the elements surviving in the Rituale Romanum (enrolment, exorcisms, pre-baptismal anointings) to be administered on separate occasions. The revived catechumenate was of special importance in the mission field, but the increasing number of adult baptisms led to its establishment in other countries, e.g. France. By the Ordo 'De Initiatione Christiana Adultorum' (The Christian Initiation of Adults) of 6 Jan. 1972, the restored catechumenate became a necessary prelude to all adult baptisms. On entering the catechumenate, candidates are marked with the sign of the cross. In the following period, which may be lengthy, they are encouraged to attend services of Bible reading and instruction. They enter the 'Time of Purification and Enlightenment' with their election for sacramental initiation; this election normally takes place on the first Sunday in Lent, and is followed by scrutinies on the third, fourth and fifth Sundays of Lent. On appointed weekdays explanations, known as 'traditions', of the Creed and the *Lord's Prayer are given (see Traditio Symboli), and on Holy Saturday (or earlier in Holy Week) the final ceremonies take place, viz. the 'reddition' or recitation of the Creed, the *Ephphata, and the anointing of the candidates with oil. (National conferences of bishops may, however, decide to omit the last two ceremonies.) The Baptism, Confirmation and Communion of the candidates during the *Paschal Vigil Service is followed during Eastertide by a period of 'mystagogy', during which frequent attendance at Mass, etc., is urged.

F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, Bd. i (1897), esp. papers vi, vii, and viii; E. *Schwartz, Bussstufen und Katechumenatsklassen (Strassburg, 1911). A. Dondeyne, 'La Discipline des Scrutins dans l'Église Latine avant Charlemagne' in R.H.E., xxviii (1932), pp. 5–33, 751–87. T. Maertens, Histoire et Pastorale du Rituel du Catéchuménat et du Baptême (Bruges, 1962); M. Dujarier, Le Parrainage des Adultes aux trois premiers siècles de l'Église. Recherche historique sur l'évolution des garanties et des étapes catéchuménales avant 313 (1962). T. Ohm, Das Katechumenat in den katholischen Missionen (Münster, 1959).

CATECHUMENS, Mass of the. The Ante-Communion, or first part of the *Eucharist. It is so named because in the early Church it was the part of the service which catechumens, who were dismissed before the *Anaphora, were allowed to attend.

CATEGORICAL IMPERATIVE. In the ethical theory of I. *Kant, the absolute moral law, given in reason, and therefore unconditionally binding upon every rational being. It is contrasted with the 'hypothetical imperative', which, being either a counsel of prudence or a rule of skill, implies a hypothesis, or condition under which alone it is operative.

H. J. Paton, The Categorical Imperative. A Study in Kant's Moral Philosophy (1947). See also works cited s.v. Kant, I.

CATENA (Lat.), 'chain' (Gk. σειρά). A word applied to the Biblical commentaries dating from the 5th cent. onwards, in which the successive verses of the Scriptural text were elucidated by 'chains' of passages derived from previous commentators. In a wider sense the word was used of any collection of passages from different authors bearing on a single subject. Among the most celebrated of Biblical catenae was St. *Thomas Aquinas' 'Catena Aurea' on the Gospels.

J. A. *Cramer, Catenae Graecorum Patrum in Novum Testamentum (8 vols., 1838–44); H. *Lietzmann, Catenen (1897); M. *Faulhaber, Hohelied, Proverbien- und Prediger-Catenen (1902); K. Staab, Die Pauluskatenen nach den handschriftlichen Quellen untersucht (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici; Rome, 1926); id., Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xv; 1933); J. Reuss, Matthäus-, Markus- und Johannes-Katenen (ib., xviii, 4–5 Heft; 1941); id., Matthäus-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche aus Katenenhandschriften gesammelt (T.U., lxi; 1957); id., Johannes-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (ib., lxxxix; 1966). R. Devreesse, Les anciens commentateurs grecques de l'Octateuque et des Rois (Fragments tirés des Chaînes) (S.T., cci; 1959). Id., 'Chaînes exégétiques grecques' in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1084–1233; K. Staab in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 56 f., s.v. 'Katenen', with further bibl.

CATESBY, ROBERT (1573–1605), English *recusant and conspirator. In 1601 he suffered a heavy fine for his part in the conspiracy of the Earl of Essex, and allied himself with the extreme RC party, who would make no compromise with the state. He was the original mover of the *Gunpowder Plot, which he first devised in the winter of 1603–4, and with which he persevered even after he knew that it had been betrayed. After the failure of the plot he took refuge at Holbeche, near Dudley, in West Midlands, where he was killed on 8 Nov. 1605 while resisting arrest.

M. W. Jones, The Gunpowder Plot and Life of Robert Caiesby (1909), pp. 1–53. A. Jessopp in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 281–4.

CATHARI (Gk. καθαρός, 'pure'). The name has been applied to several sects, e.g. to the *Novatianists by St. *Epiphanius and other Greek Fathers, and, acc. to St. *Augustine, in the form 'Catharistae' to a group of *Manichaeans. But it is mostly used for a medieval sect, which first came to be so known in Germany in the second half of the 12th cent. It was later applied to this sect also in Italy, whereas its adherents in S. France are commonly called '*Albigenses' (q.v.).

In France they first appeared at the beginning of the 11th cent., when a group of heretics was condemned at a Council at Orleans in 1022. From this time to the 13th cent., Catharist influences spread widely, being particularly strong in N. Italy and S. France. The origin of the movement is obscure. Their doctrines were similar to those of the *Bogomiles of Bulgaria, and from c. 1160 there is clear E. influence on the W. Catharists. It is, however, difficult to find evidence of this during the early history of the movement, and it remains a matter of doubt whether W. dualism was an import from the Balkans or an independent development. They posed a major threat to the Catholic Church, which reacted both by preaching and, through the *Inquisition, by persecution. By 1300 the combined effect of force and persuasion had greatly weakened the Catharists, and thereafter they did not play a major part in the history of the W. Church. For an account of their doctrine, see Albigenses.

There is much primary material in the records of the Inquisition, and some valuable treatises on Catharism written by both supporters and critics. These include the Summa de Catharis of Rainer Sacconi, O.P., and the Liber de Duobus Principiis, prob. by John de Lugio, both ed. A. Dondaine, O.P. (Rome, 1939); Moneta of Cremona, O.P., Adversus Catharos et Waldenses, ed. T. A. Ricchinius, O.P. (Rome, 1743); and Christine Thouzellier (ed.), Un traité cathare inédit du début du XIIIe siècle d'après le Liber contra Manicheos de Durand de Huesca (Bibliothèque de la R. H. E., xxxvii; 1961). Eng. tr., in whole or part, of these four documents in W. L. Wakefield–A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxxi; 1969), pp. 329–46, 511–91, 307–29, and 494–510, with other material and extensive bibl. Studies by C. Schmidt, Histoire et doctrine de la secte des Cathares ou Albigeois (2 vols. in 1; 1849); H. Söderberg, La Religion des Cathares (Uppsala, 1949); A. Borst, Die Katharer (Schriften des M.G.H., xii; Stuttgart, 1952); D. Roché, Études manichéennes et cathares (Arques, 1952). R. Nelli, Le Phénomène Cathare (1964). Cathares en Languedoc, with introd. by M. H. Vicaire, O.P. (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, iii; 1968). Survey of views of the origins of Catharism by J. Russell, 'Interpretations of the Origin of Medieval Heresy' in Mediaeval Studies, xxv (1963), pp. 26–53. S. Runciman, The Medieval Manichee (Cambridge, 1947), pp. 116–70. Cahiers d'Études Cathares (Arques, 1949 ff.).

CATHARINUS, AMBROSIUS (c. 1484–1553), *Dominican theologian. Lancelot Politi, who was born at Siena, studied canon and civil law at his native town and at other Italian universities, and was made doctor in 1500. Influenced by the works of G. *Savonarola, he entered the Dominican convent of San Marco at Florence in 1517, taking the name Ambrosius Catharinus in honour of the two Sienese saints of his order, Bl. Ambrosius Sansedoni and St. Catherine. His superiors soon employed him as a controversialist against the Lutheran doctrines. In 1520 appeared his Apologia pro Veritate Catholica, and in 1521 the passionate Excusatio Disputationis contra Lutherum. He soon estranged many prominent members of his order, however, esp. T. *Cajetan, by defending the *Immaculate Conception and other opinions opposed to the Dominican tradition. For a time he seems to have lived in a kind of exile in France, where he published his Opuscula Magna (1542), which includes treatises on the prescience and providence of God, on Predestination, and on the Immaculate Conception. His views on predestination esp. earned him the probably undeserved reputation of being a Molinist before L. de *Molina. He seems to have distinguished between two kinds of men—those predestined by God in a special way, such as the BVM and the Apostles, who, without losing their freedom, received such strong graces from God that they could not resist them, and the majority of men, who receive what may be called 'sufficient grace', which they may either accept or refuse, though in accordance with the Divine decrees 'ante praevisa merita' (before their foreseen merits). He also held that Original Sin was contained directly in the will of every man and that the destiny of unbaptized infants was an abode of bliss where they were consoled by angels.

Catharinus took a prominent part in the Council of *Trent, where his views brought him into conflict with his fellow Dominicans, B. Carranza, D. *Soto, and B. Spina, and drew him more closely to the *Jesuit theologians, J. *Laynez and A. Salmeron, e.g. on the question of absolute Papal authority. He further defended the opinion that the testimony of the Holy Ghost permits every man to know whether or not he is in a state of grace, against the traditional Thomist view upheld esp. by D. Soto. Despite his doctrinal audacities he was made Bp. of Minori in 1546, and in 1552 his former pupil, *Julius III, appointed him Abp. of Conza.

Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 144–51, 332, and 825, with list of his works. Modern ed. of his Apologia pro Veritate by J. Schweizer (Corpus Catholicorum, xxvii; Münster i. W., 1956). Id., Ambrosius Catharinus Politus (1484–1553), ein Theologe des Reformationszeitalters (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Hftt. 11 and 12; 1910). F. Lauchert, 'Die Polemik des Ambrosius Catharinus gegen Bernardino Ochino' in Z.K.T., xxxi (1907), pp. 23–50; id., Die italienischen literarischen Gegner Luthers (1912), pp. 30–133. D. Scaramuzzi, 'Le idee scotiste di un grande teologo domenicano del' 500: Ambrogio Catarino' in Studi Francescani, Ser. 2, iv (1932), pp. 296–319, and v (1933), pp. 197–217. L. Scarina, O.S.B., Giustizia primitiva e peccato originale secondo Ambrogio Catarino, O.P. (Studia Anselmiana, xvii; Rome, 1947). M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2418–34, s.v. 'Polito, Lancelot'. See also works cited under Trent, Council of.

CATHEDRA. Properly the bishop's chair or throne in his cathedral church. Its original position was in the centre of the apse behind the *high altar; in the Middle Ages it was often placed in the chancel, but the primitive position, which survived in some places, is again becoming common. The phrase 'ex cathedra' (i.e. 'from the throne') is used esp. of the pronouncements uttered by the Pope with the full formal weight of his office as the supposed divinely appointed guardian of Christian faith and morals, and such are held by RCs to be *infallible. No authoritative statement exists as to which particular Papal pronouncements are 'ex cathedra'.

CATHEDRAL. The church which contains the 'throne' (Gk. καθέδρα, Lat. cathedra) or official seat (Lat. sedes) of the Bishop of the Diocese, and hence, since the throne is one of the most important and oldest of the episcopal insignia, its 'mother church' (matrix ecclesia). Though not necessarily the largest or most splendid church in the diocese (e.g. at *Rome, where the *Vatican basilica has long outshone St. John *Lateran, the cathedral church), it is usually of outstanding size and grandeur. In rare instances the Bishop has two thrones and hence two cathedrals (e.g. in the Protestant diocese of *Dublin, q.v.). The original position of the Bishop's chair was at the East end of the church so that he faced West, looking over the high altar; see previous entry.

Originally the cathedral church, being in the immediate vicinity of the Bishop's residence, was served by the Bishop himself and his household or familia. But as the Bishop's pastoral and administrative responsibilities grew and became more exacting and the worship in the cathedral church also became more elaborate, the responsibility for the administration of the cathedral was gradually delegated to a separate body of clergy. The Bishop, who now used his own oratory for his regular private worship, came to visit his cathedral for official worship only on greater occasions, e.g. on the chief ecclesiastical feasts. The result was that those directly responsible for the cathedral came to be a separate ecclesiastical corporation or *chapter with its own privileges and rights.

In medieval England the cathedrals were of two kinds according as their chapter was a secular or monastic body. The nine secular foundations were *Chichester, *Exeter, *Hereford, *Lichfield, *Lincoln, London, *Salisbury, *Wells, and *York; the eight religious ones were *Canterbury, *Carlisle, *Durham, *Ely, *Norwich, *Rochester, *Winchester, and *Worcester. These last were all in the custody of *Benedictine monks except Carlisle, which was served by *Augustinian Canons.

With the *Dissolution of the Monasteries under *Henry VIII, the religious foundations naturally came to an end. On these eight cathedrals new constitutions were imposed by the king; they have hence become known as the 'New Foundations' in contrast with the other nine which, retaining their medieval statutes, are known as the 'Old Foundations'. Besides these, five further 'New Foundations' survived out of the six new Bishoprics which Henry VIII created from the monastic spoils, viz. Bristol, *Chester, *Gloucester, *Oxford, and *Peterborough (Henry's sixth creation, that of Westminster (see Westminster Abbey), was suppressed again in 1550). Here in every case an earlier (usually monastic) church was constituted the cathedral; and all except Oxford had a body of statutes imposed on them.

The creation of new English dioceses in modern times, beginning with *Ripon in 1836, has brought a corresponding growth of cathedrals. Here again already existing churches have been adapted to use as a cathedral, e.g. collegiate churches at Ripon and Manchester, originally monastic churches at *Southwell and *St. Albans and parish churches at *Southwark and Bradford. New churches, however, have been built at *Truro (here, however, incorporating a small portion of the old parish church of St. Mary), Guildford and *Coventry, while that at *Liverpool is still under construction.

In the RC Church the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850 was naturally followed by the foundation of cathedrals in England. The most notable are those of *Westminster and Liverpool (qq.v.).

English cathedrals are normally governed by a body of clergy consisting of from three to six residentiary canons presided over by a Dean (or, in the case of recent foundations, a Provost). The degree of authority possessed by the Dean in his chapter varies from place to place, in general being considerably greater in the 'New' than in the 'Old' 'Foundations'. Besides the Dean and residentiary canons there is generally also a larger body of non-residentiary canons, sometimes known as *prebendaries or honorary canons. The staff of a cathedral also includes a body of *minor canons whose primary duties are to render the priest's parts of the musical service. There is also a choir to render the daily office, consisting of an organist, choirmen (sometimes known as 'lay clerks'), and choristers. In the older cathedrals there has been a long tradition of high musical performance; and the type of service now general in parish churches was borrowed in the middle of the 19th cent. from the cathedrals and hence at first known as a 'cathedral service'. In most cases the cathedral statutes make provision for all these officials, who sometimes have a considerable degree of independence accorded to them.

A. Barbosa, Tractatus de Canonicis et Dignitatibus aliisque Inferioribus Beneficiariis Cathedralium (ed. 3, Lyons, 1640); M. A. Frances de Urrutigoyti, De Ecclesiis Cathedralibus, eorumque Privilegiis et Praerogativis Tractatus (Lyons, 1665). J. de Bordenhave, L'État des églises cathédrales et collégiales (1643). E. A. Freeman, History of the Cathedral Church of Wells as Illustrating the History of the Cathedral Churches of the Old Foundation (1870). E. W. *Benson, The Cathedral. Its Necessary Place in the Life and Work of the Church (1878). A. H. Thompson, The Cathedral Churches of England (1925), with bibl. Kathleen Edwards, The English Secular Cathedrals in the Middle Ages (Publications of the University of Manchester, ccci; 1949; revised ed., 1967). H. Sedlmayr, Die Entstehung der Kathedrale (Zürich, 1950). O. von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral. The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (New York–London, 1956). J. Fitchen, The Construction of Gothic Cathedrals. A Study of Medieval Vault Erection (Oxford, 1961).

Much information about the cathedrals of England is to be found in W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (q.v.). Among modern works dealing with English cathedrals collectively are those of F. Bond (London, 1899), P. H. Ditchfield (ib., 1902), T. F. Bumpus (3 vols., ib., 1905–6; revised ed. 1922), J. Sibree (2 vols., ib., 1911), and T. D. Atkinson (English and Welsh Cathedrals, ib., 1912); photographic studies include those of H. Batsford–C. Fry (Batsford, London, 1934), H. Felton–J. Harvey (ib., 1950), M. Hürlimann–P. Meyer (London, 1950), and A. Clifton-Taylor (ib., 1967). E. S. Prior, The Cathedral Builders in England (1905). E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941; revised ed. by J. A. Westrup, 1969).

CATHEDRAL SCHOOLS. Schools established in medieval or later times for the education of the choir-boys of cathedral churches. They sometimes served also the purposes of a grammar-school, providing free education for poor boys living in the cathedral city. Most of these schools have in later times admitted fee-paying pupils, both day boys and boarders, and many of them are now represented on the Headmasters' Conference. The oldest school of this kind is probably that at *York, which claims to have been founded in the 7th cent.

CATHEDRALS, Friends of the. Voluntary organizations designed to support the work and fabric of the English cathedrals. The first such society, the Friends of *Canterbury Cathedral, was founded in 1927 under the auspices of G. K. A.

*Bell, then the dean; its objects were defined as 'to gather round the cathedral in association with the Dean and Chapter a body of supporters who are prepared to take some share in caring for it and in preserving it for posterity'. This precedent has since been followed in the case of many other ancient English (and esp. cathedral) churches.

CATHERINE, St., of Alexandria. Acc. to tradition, she was a virgin martyred at *Alexandria in the early 4th cent.; but though she is among the most widely venerated of women saints, she is not mentioned before the 10th cent. Legend represents her as of a noble family and of exceptional learning, who, as a result of her protest against the persecution of Christians by Maxentius, was tied to a wheel, tortured, and finally beheaded. Her body was said to have been discovered c. 800 on Mount *Sinai, whither, acc. to her *acts, it was transported by angels after her death. The monastery near the site, however, goes back to 527, and the earlier pilgrims knew nothing of its connexion with St. Catherine. There was great devotion to her in the Middle Ages, notably in France during the *Crusades. Her symbol is a spiked wheel; and she is patroness of young women, wheelwrights, attorneys, and scholars, and is one of the '*auxiliary saints'. Feast day, 25 Nov., suppressed in 1969.

She has sometimes been identified, but on insufficient grounds, with the unnamed woman mentioned in *Eusebius, H.E., VIII. xiv. 15. There are a number of versions of the legend: four Gk. texts ed. J. Viteau, Passions des Saints Écaterine et Pierre d'Alexandrie (1897), pp. 2–65; the legend acc. to *Simeon Metaphrastes is also pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxvi, 276–301; further texts in H. Kunst, Geschichte der Legende der h. Katherina von Alexandrien und der h. Maria Aegyptiaca (1890), pp. 1–109, passim; two metrical Lat. versions ed. H. Varnhagen (Erlangen, 1891); A. Poncelet, S.J. (ed.), 'Sanctae Catharinae Virginis et Martyris Translatio et Miracula Rotomagensia Saec. XI' in Anal. Boll., xxii (1903), pp. 423–38; full details of edd. of Lat. MSS., to date, in B.H.L., i, pp. 250–5 (Nos. 1657–1700), and suppl., p. 70 f. P. Peeters, S.J. (ed.), 'Une Version arabe de la passion de Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie' in Anal. Boll., xxvii (1907), pp. 5–32, incl. Lat. tr. R. Fawtier, 'Les Reliques rouennaises de Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie', ib., xli (1922), pp. 357–68. Life by Clemence of Barking ed. W. MacBain (Anglo-Norman Texts, xviii; 1964). J. A. *Robinson, 'The Passion of Saint Catharine and the Romance of Barlaam and Joasaph' in J.T.S., xxv (1924), pp. 246–53. E. Weigand, 'Zu den ältesten abendländischen Darstellungen der Jungfrau und Märtyrin Katherina von Alexandria' in Pisciculi. Studien zur Religion und Kultur des Altertums Franz Joseph Dölger ... dargeboten (Antike und Christentum. Ergänzungsband, i, 1939), pp. 279–290, with reff. A. Zachou, Σινᾶ καὶ ἁγία Αἰκατερίνη (1937). On iconography, H. *Bremond, Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie (L'Art et les saints, 1917). Tito da Ottone, O.M.Cap., La leggenda di Santa Caterina vergine e martire di Alexandria (Genoa, 1940), incl. information on the growth of the cult. A. P. Frutaz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 60 f., s.v. 'Katharina', with further bibl.

CATHERINE, St., of Genoa (1447–1510), mystic. Caterinetta Fieschi was of a noble Ligurian family, who at the age of 16 married Giuliano Adorno. Ten years later she was suddenly converted; and, though she found continued life with her pleasure-loving husband burdensome, she succeeded in reaching great heights of spirituality. Later he was also converted, and after this assisted her in her selfless care of the sick in a hospital in Genoa. Eventually Giuliano became a Franciscan *tertiary, but Caterinetta joined no order. She underwent a number of remarkable mental and at times almost pathological experiences, which were the subject of F. *von Hügel's well-known study and evaluation. Her spiritual doctrine is contained in the book published in 1551 as the Vita e dottrina, though perhaps she did not herself put this account of her visions and convictions into their present literary form; this is the source of her 'Dialogues on the Soul and the Body' and of her 'Treatise on Purgatory' which have often been issued separately. From 1475 she received communion almost daily, a practice extremely rare except for priests in the later Middle Ages. In 1944 St. Catherine was proclaimed by *Pius XII Patroness of the Hospitals in Italy. Feast day, 15 Sept.

Modern Eng. tr. of Catherine's 'Treatise on Purgatory' and 'Dialogue' by C. Balfour and H. D. Irvine (London, 1946). F. von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion as studied in St. Catherine of Genoa and her Friends (2 vols., 1908). Von Hügel's contention that neither the 'Dialogue' nor the 'Treatise' received literary shape until a late date has been severely criticized by Umile [Bonzi] da Genova, O.M.Cap., in an imp. art. in Dict. Sp., ii (1938), s.v. 'Catherine de Gênes', cols. 290–321, with bibl. col. 324 f.; more recently, id., S. Caterina Fieschi Adorno (2 vols., 1961–62), with critical text of 'opus Catharinianum'. L. Sertorius, Katherina von Genua (Munich, 1939). Gabriele da Pantasina, Vita di Santa Caterina Fieschi Adorno con ricordi e documenti (Genoa, 1929). P. Debongnie, C.SS.R., in D.H.G.E., x (1949), cols. 1506–15, s.v. 'Catherine de Gênes'; F. Casolini in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1145–8.

CATHERINE, St., dei Ricci (1522–90), Italian visionary. Her baptismal name was Alessandra Lucrezia Romola. She entered the *Dominican Order at Prato in 1535, where she was professed in the following year and remained till her death. She is chiefly remarkable for an ecstasy into which she was rapt for 28 hours every week (from noon Thursday until 4 p.m. Friday) over a period of several years. These extraordinary experiences, combined with her fame for sanctity, brought pilgrims of all ranks to visit her. She was beatified in 1732 and canonized in 1746. Feast day, 13 Feb.

Le lettere spirituali e familiari di S. Caterina de' Ricci ed. C. Guasti (Prato, 1861); Lettere inedite ed. Sisto da Pisa, O.M.C. (Florence, 1912). Acta Canonizationis ... Catharinae de Ricci were publd. at Rome, 1749; other docc. concerned with the process publd. ib., 1713, 1729, 1731, and 1742. The principal early authorities are the life by S. Razzi, O.P. (Lucca, 1594, modern ed. in Collana Ricciana, Fonti, iv; 1965 [see below]), and F. Guidi (Florence, 1617). Collection of material in G. M. di Agresti, O.P. (ed.), Santa Caterina de' Ricci, O.P. (Collana Ricciana, Fonti, i ff.; 1963 ff.). H. Bayonne, Vie de Sainte Catherine de Ricci de Florence (2 vols., 1873); F. M. Capes, St. Catherine de' Ricci. Her Life, her Letters, her Community [1905]; G. Bertini, Santa Caterina de' Ricci. Con lettere inedite della santa (1935).

CATHERINE, St., of Siena (1347 [?1333]–1380), *Dominican tertiary. Caterina Benincasa was the daughter of a Sienese dyer. From her earliest years she received visions and lived a life of mortification among many difficultics at home. At the age of 16 she joined the Third Order of St. Dominic, and for three years gave herself to contemplation and the service of the sick and poor and the conversion of sinners. Her extraordinary sanctity won her a large band of followers, including many of noble rank. Her chief spiritual director seems to have been the English *Augustinian friar, William Flete, who had gone into voluntary exile at his Order's house at Lecceto outside Siena. In 1376 she undertook a journey to *Avignon to plead with *Gregory XI on behalf of Florence, which was in arms against the Pope, and to persuade him to return to Rome. She then returned to Siena and her former way of life, gathering around her a devoted group of supporters. They were attracted by her spirituality, her gifts of infused, ecstatic prayer, her quite extraordinary devotion to the *Precious Blood, and her exceptional apostolic powers, especially in the reconciling of sinners. When the *Great Schism in the Papacy broke out on Gregory's death in 1378, she became active in support of *Urban VI, urging cardinals and monarchs to return to his obedience. Many of her letters are extant as well as the 'Dialogo', a spiritual work of some importance. She was canonized in 1461 and declared a *Doctor of the Church in 1970. Feast day, 30 Apr., changed to 29 April in 1969.

Works ed. G. Gigli (4 vols., Lucca, 1707–21). Modern edd. include those of the Dialogo by I. Taurisano, O.P. (Rome, 1947); of its 15th cent. Eng. tr., The Orcherd of Syon, by Phyllis Hodgson–Gabriel M. Liegey (E.E.T.S., cclviii; 1966), and of her letters by N. Tommaseo–P. Miscatelli (6 vols., Siena, 1913–21, and Florence, 1939–47). There have been various Eng. trr. of individual works. The principal sources for her life are the 'Legenda Major' by Raymond of Capua, her confessor, a suppl. to it by Thomas Caffarini, and the 'Legenda Minor' by Thomas Caffarini. An Eng. tr. of the Legenda Major was publd. by W. *Caxton c. 1493; editio princeps of the Lat. text by T. Löher (Cologne, 1553), repr. in AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 853–959. Modern Eng. tr. by G. Lamb, London, 1960. The supplement has not yet been publd.; an edition is being prepared for the Fontes Vitae S. Catharinae Senensis Historici (vid. inf.). The Legenda Minor was ed. B. Mombritius, Sanctuarium, i (Milan, c. 1480), pp. 168–88; also ed. R. Fawtier, 'La Légende mineure de Sainte Catherine de Sienne' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxxii (1912), pp. 397–509; and ed. E. Franceschini (Fontes Vitae, etc., x, Milan, 1942); an early Italian tr. was ed. F. Grottanelli (Bologna, 1668) and by E. Franceschini (Pubblicazioni dell' Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, Ser. 4, xxxviii; Milan, 1942). H. Laurent, O.P.–F. Valli, and others (edd.), Fontes Vitae S. Catharinae Senensis Historici (Florence and Milan, 1936 ff.). R. Fawtier, Sainte Catherine de Sienne. Essai de critique des sources (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxxi and cxxxv; 1921–30). Modern lives include those of A. Capecelatro (2 vols., Naples, 1856), Augusta T. Drane (London, 1880; with bibl.), E. G. Gardner (ib., 1907), Alice Curtayne (Paris, 1929), A. Lennoyer, O.P. ('Les Saints', 1934), A. Levasti (Turin, 1947; Eng. tr., 1954), M. de la Bedoyere (London, 1947; popular), J. Wilbois (Tournai–Paris, 1948), I. M. Taurisano, O.P. (Rome, 1948), and S. Undset (Oslo, 1951; Eng. tr., 1954). A. Grion, O.P., Santa Caterina da Siena. Dottrina e Fonti (1953). R. Fawtier–L. Canet, La Double Expérience de Catherine Benincasa (1948). G. Kaftal, St. Catherine in Tuscan Painting (1949). A. Dondaine, O.P., 'Sainte Catherine de Sienne et Niccolò Toldo' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xix (1949), pp. 169–207 (critique of R. Fawtier). E. Jordan, 'La Date de naissance de Sainte Catherine de Sienne' in Anal. Boll., xl (1922), pp. 365–411. L. Zanini, 'Bibliografia analitica di Santa Caterina da Siena 1901–1950' in Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medievali, i (Pubblicazioni dell' Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, lviii [1956]), pp. 325–74; ii (Pubblicazioni, lxii [1958]), pp. 265–367. B. Hackett, O.S.A., 'William Flete and St. Catherine of Siena' (unpubld. thesis, National University of Ireland, Dublin, 1955). M. M. Gorce, O.P., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 327–48, s.v.; A. C. Oddasso in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, iii (Rome, 1963), cols. 996–1044, s.v. 'Caterina Benincasa', both with bibl.

CATHERINE, St., of Sweden (1331–81). The daughter of St. *Bridget, she herself early showed signs of great sanctity. After her mother's death in 1374, she succeeded her as head of the Order of St. Saviour, the so-called *Brigittines. The remainder of her life was largely spent in Italy, obtaining confirmation of the order, and unsuccessfully seeking her mother's canonization. Like St. *Catherine of Siena, she supported the party of *Urban VI during the *Great Schism. Feast day, 22 Mar.

Life by Upho, a monk of Gotland (d. 1433), pr. in AA.SS., Mar. III (1668), pp. 505–17; crit. ed. by C. Annerstedt (Scriptores Rerum Suecicarum Medii Aevi, iii, pt. 2, Upsala, 1871), pp. 244–63. I. [G. A.] Collijn (ed.), Processus seu Negocium Canonizacionis B. Katerine de Vadstenis (Corpus Codicum Suecicorum Medii Aevi, ii, Copenhagen, 1943). She is also mentioned in the biographies of St. Bridget.

CATHERINE DE' MEDICI (1519–89), Queen-Consort of France from 1547, and Queen-Mother from 1559. A relative of Pope *Clement VII, she was married in 1533 to Henry, son of Francis I of France, in order that French support might free the Pope from the control of the Emp. *Charles V. Through the reigns of Francis I and her husband (Henry II), she had little influence on politics; but during those of her sons, Francis II (1559–60), Charles IX (1560–74), and Henry III (1574–89), she exercised much power, and for most of Charles's reign was the real ruler of the country. In the wars of religion then raging in France she advocated at first a policy of toleration, since she wished to use the Protestants as a check upon the dominant Catholic party, without allowing them to gain any control of affairs. Between 1567 and 1570, however, she took violent measures in face of a Protestant rebellion, and, after a brief interval of mildness in a vain effort to gain the support of *Elizabeth I of England, attempted to re-establish her position, which seemed threatened, by the murder of G. *Coligny, the Protestant leader, and the Massacre of St. *Bartholomew (23 Aug. 1572), for which she must bear the chief responsibility. After 1574 she returned to a policy of compromise, but her influence on affairs grew steadily less.

Letters ed. by les Ctes Hector de la Ferrière and Baguenault de Puchesse (Paris, 10 vols., 1880–1909; Index by A. Lesort, 1943). E. Sichel, Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation (1905); J. H. Mariéjol, Catherine de Médicis (1519–1589) (1920); P. Van Dyke, Catherine de Medicis (2 vols., 1923). J. Héritier, Catherine de Médicis (1959; Eng. tr., 1963). F. Watson, The Life and Times of Catherine de' Medici (1934); R. Roeder, Catherine de' Medici and the Lost Revolution (1937); J. E. Neale, The Age of Catherine de Medici (1943).

CATHOLIC. A word derived from the Gk. καθολικός, and meaning 'general' or 'universal'. It is first met with in Christian literature in St. *Ignatius of Antioch (Ep. ad Smyr. 8. 2). In Christian terminology it has come to have various uses: (1) Of the universal Church as distinct from local Christian communities. It is applied thus to the faith of the whole Church, i.e. the doctrine believed 'everywhere, always, and by all' (see Vincentian Canon). (2) In the sense of 'orthodox', as distinct from 'heretical', or (later) from 'schismatical'. (3) In historical writers, of the undivided Church before the final schism of E. and W. in 1054. Thereafter the W. Church usually referred to itself as 'catholic', the E. preferring to describe itself as 'orthodox'. (4) Since the *Reformation RCs have come to use it of themselves exclusively. *Anglicans, and later *Old Catholics, have also adopted it to cover besides themselves and the RC Church also the E. Orthodox in the belief that these Communions together represent the undivided Church of earlier ages. (5) In general, in present-day usage, it is employed of those Christians who claim to be in possession of a historical and continuous tradition of faith and practice, as opposed to Protestants, who tend to find their ultimate standards in the Bible as interpreted on the principles of the Reformation of the 16th century.

J. H. Maude in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), pp. 258–61, s.v. 'Catholicism, Catholicity'. G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), p. 690 f., s.v. καθολικός.

CATHOLIC ACTION. Organized religious activity, esp. of a social, educational, or quasi-political kind, on the part of the RC laity, particularly when conceived as an extension of the apostolate of the hierarchy. A powerful impetus was given to such work when *Pius XI, in the encyclical 'Ubi Arcano' (23 Dec. 1922), encouraged the creation of elastic organizations for the purpose, under the direction of the clergy, in many European countries. Among such organizations are the *Jocists (q.v.), begun in Belgium, the 'Legion of Mary', founded in Ireland in 1921, and the 'Grail Movement', founded in Holland in 1929. Subsequent papal pronouncements, esp. those of *Pius XII in his later years, have insisted less on the organizational aspects of Catholic Action and more on the vocation of every member of the Church to spread the kingdom of God on earth. The Second *Vatican Council in its Constitution on the Church and the Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity emphasized the role of the laity as co-workers with Christ and their part in spreading the Gospel and sanctifying society.

The vast literature includes L. Civardi, Manuale di azione cattolica secundo gli ultimi ordinamenti (1924; Eng. tr. of vol. i, ed. 17, by C. C. Martindale, S.J., 1935); E. Guerry, Code de l'action catholique (1928); J. Fitzsimons, O.P.–P. McGuire, Restoring All Things (1939); C. K. Murphy, The Spirit of Catholic Action (1943). The Constitution on the Church is pr. in A.S.S., lvii (1965), pp. 5–71, and the Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity, ib., lviii (1966), pp. 837–64; Eng. tr. of both in W. M. Abbott, S.J. (ed.), The Documents of Vatican II (1966), pp. 14–96 and 489–521.

CATHOLIC APOSTOLIC CHURCH. A religious body partly inspired in its origins by the teaching of E. *Irving (q.v.), its members also being known as Irvingites. It developed out of a revivalist circle which had gathered round H. *Drummond and counted Irving among its members. They believed in the near approach of the Second Coming of Christ, in preparation for which they resolved to re-establish the primitive offices of the Church, viz., those of Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, to which others, e.g. 'angels' (bishops) and deacons, were added later. J. B. Cardale, the earliest of the 'Apostles', was 'called' in 1832. In 1835 the full 'College of Apostles', numbering twelve, held its first 'council' in London, and in 1836 addressed memoranda to the bishops of the C of E and to William IV stating their mission. Shortly afterwards they undertook missionary journeys to the Continent and to America, each 'Apostle' being assigned one or more countries for his activities. The effect on them of their travels, perhaps helped by the spread of *Tractarianism in England, was an increasing inclination towards Catholic doctrines and practices. It was expressed in their service book of 1842, a mixture of RC, Greek, and Anglican rites. Their 'priests' wore vestments and used incense; later Anointing of the Sick, a ceremony called 'Sealing' based on Rev. 7. 3 ff., *Reservation in the Tabernacle, and the use of *holy water were also introduced . In 1853 they built a large church in Gordon Square, London (since 1963 used by the Anglican chaplaincy to London University). On the Continent they carried on a vigorous though mostly secret propaganda, esp. in *Holland and Germany, where in the beginning they gained the adherence of several Catholic priests. Their chief successes, however, were obtained in the Protestant north, where they were favoured by the Prussian nobility. Their influence in Britain diminished considerably after the death, in 1901, of the last 'Apostle', who had been expected to survive till the *Second Advent. They have still a number of adherents in the U.S.A. and in Germany.

P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom (1877), pp. 909–15, with bibl., p. 905. E. Miller, The History and Doctrines of Irvingism (2 vols., 1878). W. A. Curtis, A History of Creeds and Confessions of Faith in Christendom and Beyond (1911), pp. 377–88. P. E. Shaw, The Catholic Apostolic Church (New York, 1946), with bibl. R. A. Davenport, Albury Apostles. The Story of the Body known as the Catholic Apostolic Church (1970). J. G. Simpson in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 422–8, s.v. 'Irving and the Catholic Apostolic Church'.

CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION, The. An association created by D. *O'Connell for the defence of RC interests in Ireland. It was founded in May 1823, but did not come into effective existence till the following February. Through the exertions of the RC clergy a branch of it was established in nearly every parish in the country, and it greatly encouraged the Irish peasantry. In Feb. 1825 the government suppressed it, but this did not prevent its work being continued under a new name. Its influence largely contributed to the passing of the Catholic Emancipation Act in 1829.

Proceedings of the Catholic Association in Dublin from May 13, 1823, to February 11, 1825 (London, 1825). T. Wyse, Historical Sketch of the late Catholic Association of Ireland (2 vols., ib., 1829). See also lives of D. O'Connell, cited s.v.

CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACTS. See Catholic Relief Acts.

CATHOLIC EPISTLES, The. A title used properly of the NT Epp. of Jas., 1 and 2 Pet., 1 Jn., and Jude, because they were 'general' (i.e. universal) epistles, and (unlike those of St. *Paul) not addressed to specified Churches or individuals. It is usual, however, to include 2 and 3 Jn. among them, though these are addressed respectively to 'the elect lady and her children' and to Gaius. On this reckoning they thus total seven in all. The word 'catholic' may originally have been applied to some or all of these epistles for a different reason, viz. to indicate that their *canonicity was accepted. See also artt. on separate epistles.

CATHOLIC MAJESTY, His. A traditional title of the Kings of *Spain, said to have been granted by *Alexander VI to *Ferdinand of Aragon in 1494 in recognition of his conquest of Granada. In earlier times it had been borne by certain Kings of France, e.g. *Pepin in 767.

The precise circumstances in which the title arose are obscure. It is the subject of a letter dated 5 Feb. 1495, by Peter Martyr (Ital. historian, 1455–1526), pr. in his Opus Epistolarum (Amsterdam and Paris, 1670), p. 88 f. (No. 157). W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, ii (ed. J. F. Kirk, 1902), p. 283 f., for note on the subject; P. de Roo, Material for a History of Pope Alexander VI, v (Bruges, 1924), p. 2 f., with reff.

CATHOLIC RECORD SOCIETY. An organization, founded in 1904, to print and circulate records bearing on the history of English RC-ism since the 16th cent. It has issued a long series of publications.

F. A. *Gasquet, Introduction to Miscellanea, i (Publications of the C.R.S., i, 1905), pp. vii–xv. Annual reports and lists of members are printed in most vols. of the Society's Publications.

CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS (also 'Catholic Emancipation Acts').

(1) In 1778 by 17 & 18 Geo. III, c. 49 [Ireland]

Catholics were allowed henceforward to own landed property on taking an oath not involving a denial of their religion; priests ceased to be subject to persecution at the denunciation of the common informer; and life-long imprisonment for keeping a Catholic school was abolished. The Act was followed by the *Gordon Riots (q.v.).

(2) In 1791 those who took the prescribed oath were freed from the Statutes of Recusancy and the Oath of Supremacy; Catholic worship and schools were tolerated; and certain posts in the legal and military professions were opened to RCs.

(3) In 1793 Catholics in Ireland were admitted to the franchise, the universities, and the professions.

(4) In 1829, when the Irish situation was critical, the most decisive of the Emancipation measures, the 'Roman Catholic Relief Act' (10 Geo. IV, c. 7), was passed. Almost all disabilities were removed and Catholics were admitted to most public offices. The unrepealed restrictions, some of which were from the first a dead letter, included the prohibition of public religious celebrations and of taking the title of the ancient episcopal sees and the invalidity of marriage before a priest.

(5) Most of these remaining disabilities were removed by an Act of 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. V, c. 55). Among those still retained is the law which restrains either the King or the Queen of England from being a RC. The same applies to the offices of Regent, Lord Chancellor, and Keeper of the Great Seal. The disability of priests sitting in the House of Commons is shared with the clergy of the C of E (but not with ministers of the Free Churches). RCs are also still disabled from presenting or nominating to any benefice, the right passing by 3 & 4 Jas. I, c. 5, to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge acc. to a geographical distribution.

CATHOLIC TRUTH SOCIETY. A RC society formed at the suggestion of Dr. (later Cardinal) Herbert *Vaughan in 1884 for the printing of cheap literature, chiefly leaflets and tracts, of a devotional, educational, or controversial nature.

G. E. Anstruther and P. E. Hallett, Catholic Truth Society, The First Fifty Years (1934); C. Collingwood, 'The Catholic Truth Society' in Clergy Review, xxxvii (1952), pp. 641–58.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA. The university was founded at Washington, D.C., in 1889, for the education of clergy and laity under RC direction, and as a centre of learning in the U.S.A. It is governed by trustees appointed by the RC hierarchy, and presided over by the Abp. of Washington, who is ex officio Chancellor. Many religious communities, particularly teaching orders, are attached or affiliated to it, and it has taken an important part in the reorganization of RC schools and in education generally.

J. T. Ellis, The Formative Years of the Catholic University of America (Washington, 1946); P. H. Ahern, The Catholic University of America, 1887–1896. The Rectorship of John J. Keane (ib., 1948); P. E. Hogan, S.S.J., The Catholic University of America, 1896–1903. The Rectorship of Thomas J. Conaty (ib., 1949); C. J. Barry, O.S.B., The Catholic University of America, 1903–1909. The Rectorship of Denis J. O'Connell (ib., 1950). R. J. Deferrari, Memoirs of the Catholic University of America, 1918–1960 [Boston, 1962]. J. T. Ellis in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 332–4, s.v.

CATHOLICOS (Gk. καθολικός). A title now restricted to the two *Patriarchs of the *Nestorian and *Armenian Churches. In secular usage it was originally applied to certain high financial officials, and then in early Christian usage to the head of a number of monasteries in the same city. At one period it was used of certain bishops of metropolitical rank, in addition to the two patriarchs named. The head of the *Georgian Church bears the title 'Catholicos-Patriarch'.

CATON, WILLIAM (1636–65), one of the early *Quakers. He became a Quaker in 1652 under the influence of G. *Fox and was chosen as a preacher for the Swarthmore district, where he received much harsh treatment. He then became an itinerant missioner, and attempted to plant his doctrines first in France and then in Holland, where he spent some years. He wrote a good deal in a simple style and his Journal (ed. by G. Fox himself, 1689) is still much read among Friends.

List of his writings, among them an 'Abridgement' of *Eusebius' Chronologies (n. pl., 1661), in D.N.B., ix (1887), p. 322, s.v.

CAUSSADE, JEAN PIERRE DE (1675–1751), ascetic writer. In 1693 he joined the *Jesuit Order at Toulouse, was professed in 1708, and later travelled widely, being much appreciated as a preacher. From 1729 until 1740 he resided mainly in Lorraine. His last years were passed at Perpignan (1741–3), Albi (1744–6), and Toulouse (1746–51). His extensive correspondence with the *Visitandines at Nancy is a leading source of our knowledge of his doctrines.

His influence did much to rehabilitate *mysticism at a time when its claims were still suffering from the condemnation of *Quietism. Caussade tried to show that it had justification in the teaching of J. B. *Bossuet, whose authority here was of the highest in view of his part in the Quietist controversy. His principal writings, apart from his letters of spiritual direction, were his Instructions spirituelles en forme de dialogue sur les divers états d'oraison (1741; Eng. tr. with introduction by J. *Chapman, 1931) and a treatise on abandonment to God's will, which was first published by H. Ramière as L'Abandon à la providence divine (1867; Eng. tr., Abandonment to Divine Providence, 1921).

Good edition of his Lettres spirituelles by M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J. (2 vols., 1962–4); earlier Eng. tr. by A. Thorold (1934). L'Abandon à la providence divine also ed. M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J. (1966). Madeleine Huillet d'Istria, Le Père de Caussade et la querelle du pur amour [1964], with bibl. Sommervogel, ii (1891), cols. 900–2. Pourrat, iv, pp. 341–6. M. Olphe-Galliard in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 354–70, incl. full bibl.

CAUTEL. A rubrical direction for the correct administration of the Sacraments. The word is used esp. of those prefixed to the Roman *Missal of 1570 to give the celebrant guidance in the case of accidents or defects during the service.

CAVE, WILLIAM (1637–1713), *Patristic scholar. He was incumbent successively of Islington (1662), All Hallows the Great, Thames Street, London (1679), and Isleworth (1690). His principal writings were his Apostolici (1677), a history of the chief figures in the first three hundred years of the Church's existence; his Ecclesiastici (1682), a continuation of the Apostolici for the 4th cent.; and his Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Historia Literaria (part i, 1688; ii, 1698), a history of ecclesiastical writers down to the 14th cent. His works were all erudite and lucidly arranged.

J. H. Overton in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 341–3, s.v.

CAXTON, WILLIAM (c. 1422–91), the first English printer. After spending his early years in commerce in London, Antwerp, and Bruges, where he was Governor of the English Merchant Adventurers, he entered the service of his compatriot, Margaret, Duchess of Burgundy, for whom he made several English translations. Tiring of copying these by hand, he learnt the new art of printing at Cologne (1471–2), and introduced it into Bruges in 1473–4, producing the first book ever to be printed in English, his own translation of Raoul LeFèvre's 'The Recuyell of the Histories of Troye'. In Sept. 1476 he set up his printing press at the Almonry, Westminster, and before 13 Dec. 1476 he had published an *indulgence of *Sixtus IV (the first of his known works in England). Other works printed by Caxton include Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers (1477), Ordinale secundum Usum Sarum [1477] and Horae ad Usum Sarum [1477/8], *Boethius's Consolatio Philosophiae (before 1479), G. *Chaucer's Canterbury Tales [c. 1484], the Golden Legend* [c. 1483/5] and St. *Bonaventure's Speculum Vitae Christi [1486]. He was not only a printer but also a translator, editor, and moralist, and an enthusiast for standardizing the English language.

Good modern reprints exist of several of Caxton's books. His important and informative Prologues and Epilogues have been ed. by W. J. B. Crotch (E.E.T.S., clxxvi; 1928). The standard study is W. Blades, The Life and Typography of William Caxton (2 vols., 1861–3; revised ed., 1877). N. F. Blake, Caxton and his World (1969). List and descriptions of his publications in E. G. Duff, Fifteenth Century English Books (1917). A. W. Pollard, 'The New Caxton Indulgence' in The Library, Ser. 4, ix (1928/9), pp. 86–9. A comprehensive annotated bibl. in W. L. Heilbronner, Printing and the Book in Fifteenth-Century England. A Bibliographical Survey (Charlottesville, 1967).

C.C.C.S. ('Commonwealth and Continental Church Society'). A society founded in 1838 to enable *Evangelicals of the C of E to take an active part in the work of Church extension in the British colonies. It continues to work in several missionary dioceses, and also provides Anglican chaplains at many places on the Continent. It was originally called the 'Colonial and Continental Church Society'.

CEADDA, St. See Chad, St.

CECILIA, St. (2nd or 3rd cent.). One of the most venerated martyrs in the early Roman Church. Acc. to her acts, which are apocryphal and date from about the end of the 5th cent., she converted her pagan husband, Valerian, and his brother, Tibertius, both of whom were then martyred before her, and, after herself dying for the Christian faith, was buried in the *catacomb of St. Callistus. When her relics were discovered in the catacomb of Praetextatus by Paschal I (817–24), they were moved to the church which bears her name in Trastevere in the city of Rome. Here her body is said to have been found entire and uncorrupted when the church was being repaired in 1599. She is frequently represented as playing on the organ, and is the patroness of church music. Feast day, 22 Nov.

J. P. Kirsch, Die heilige Cäcilia in der römischen Kirche des Altertums (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, iv, Heft 2; 1910). P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, iv (S.T., xxiv; 1912), pp. 3–38 ('Recenti studi intorno a S. Cecilia'). H. *Delehaye, S.J., Étude sur le légendier romain. Les saints de novembre et de décembre (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxiii, 1936), pp. 77–96, incl. full bibl. reff. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 178–82. H. *Quentin, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2712–38, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., ib., cols. 2738–79, s.v. 'Cécile (Crypte et Basilique de Sainte-)'.

CEDD, or CEDDA, St., Bp. of the East Saxons and brother of St. *Chad (q.v.). Two of his other brothers were priests. He was brought up with St. Chad at *Lindisfarne under St. *Aidan and in 653 was one of the four priests sent by Oswy, King of Northumbria, to evangelize the Middle Angles. Shortly afterwards he was recalled for a similar mission to Essex and consecrated Bp. of the East Saxons in 654. Here he founded many churches and established monasteries at West Tilbury and Ythancester (Bradwell-on-Sea, the Roman Othona). On a visit to Northumbria he also founded the abbey of Lastingham, N. Yorks, of which he became the first Abbot. At the Synod of *Whitby (664) he accepted the Roman Easter. Shortly afterwards he died of the plague at Lastingham (26 Oct. 664). He is reckoned by Florence of Worcester and *William of Malmesbury (on no sufficient grounds) the second Bp. of London. Feast day, 7 Jan.

The primary authority for his life is *Bede, H.E., iii. 21–3, 25, and iv. 3 (see also notes in ed. C. Plummer, esp. ii, pp. 176–181 and 190). T. F. Tout in D.N.B., ix (1887), p. 413 f., with reff.; C. P. S. Clarke in D.E.C.H., p. 102 f.

CEDRON. The valley or gorge on the east of *Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of *Olives. It was the scene of the burning of an *Asherah by Asa (1 Kgs. 15. 13) and of another by Josiah (2 Kgs. 23. 6). It is mentioned only once in the NT (Jn. 18. 1; RV, 'Kidron'), as the 'brook' crossed by Christ in the night before His Passion. The spelling 'Kidron' is consistently that of the English versions of the OT (AV and RV). Since the 4th cent. A.D. it has been identified with the 'Valley of *Jehoshaphat' (q.v.).

CEILLIER, REMI (1688–1763), ecclesiastical historian. In 1705 he joined the *Benedictine monastery of Moyen-Moutier in the Vosges, in 1718 was elected prior of that of St.-Jacques de Neufchâteau, and, having moved to that of Flavigny-sur-Moselle in 1724, was prior there from 1733 till his death. His Histoire générale des auteurs sacrés et ecclésiastiques (23 vols., 1729–63) is a remarkably full record of what is known of Christian writers down to the middle of the 13th cent. (esp. complete for the *Patristic period), though somewhat diffuse in treatment.

A. Beugnet, Étude biographique et critique sur Dom Remi Ceillier (Mémoires de la Société des Lettres, Sciences et Arts de Bar-le-Duc, Sér. 2, x; 1891). Id. in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2049–51, s.v.

CELEBRET (Lat.), 'let him celebrate'. In the RC Church a certificate from a competent source, normally the priest's *ordinary, authorizing its possessor to say Mass. Generally it possesses validity only for a certain period. In its absence a priest is not permitted (except in rare circumstances) to celebrate Mass in a church where he is unknown.

G. F. Schorr, The Law of the Celebret. A historical synopsis and a commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, cccxxxii; 1952). F. Jombart in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 126–31, s.v.

CELESTINE I, St. (d. 432). Pope from 422. He continued the theological policy of his predecessor, *Boniface I, by sending *Germanus of Auxerre to Britain in 429 to combat *Pelagianism, and by writing to S. Gaul in 431 against the *Semi-pelagian teaching of John *Cassian. His support of the African presbyter *Apiarius, who had appealed to Rome from the Church authorities in Africa, led a Council of *Carthage of c. 424 to protest against what they held to be an infringement of their rights. At a Roman Synod in Aug. 430, he formally condemned *Nestorius and charged St. *Cyril of Alexandria with carrying through his excommunication and deposition. Feast day, in the E., 8 Apr.; in the W., formerly 6 Apr., after 1922 27 July, and now suppressed.

Letters, mostly dealing with Nestorian conflict, collected in J. P. Migne, PL, l, 417–558. Crit. ed. by E. *Schwartz in A.C.O., I, i (pt. 7; 1929), pp. 125–37, and I, ii (1925–6), pp. 5–101. E. Portalié in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2052–61; G. Bardy in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 56–58, both s.v. For the text of the spurious 'Capitula Caelestini' against Semi-pelagianism, from the early 6th cent. attributed to this Pope, but prob. the work of *Prosper of Aquitaine, see Denz.-Schön. (ed. 32; 1963), pp. 88–92 (Nos. 238–49); M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., 'L'Origine des capitula pseudo-célestiniens contre le semi-pélagianisme' in R. Bén., xli (1929), pp. 156–70. On the synod of 430, Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 260–4. H. Hemmer in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 2051 f.

CELESTINE III (c. 1106–98), Pope from 1191. Giacinto Bobo was a member of the Roman family of the Orsini. He defended *Abelard at the Council of *Sens (1140), and, after becoming a cardinal in 1144, advocated a conciliatory policy towards *Frederick Barbarossa, and urged St. Thomas *Becket to adopt a less intransigent attitude towards Henry II of England. He was elected Pope in his 85th year. His reign was marked by indecision. One of his first Papal acts was the coronation as Emperor of King Henry VI, who, having failed to conquer Sicily, oppressed the Church in Germany, and caused Richard the Lion-hearted to be imprisoned on his return from the Crusade. The aged Pope failing to take prompt action, Henry once more invaded Sicily after the death of King Tancred in 1194. Having blinded Tancred's young successor, William III, committed many other cruelties, and united Sicily with the Empire, Henry calmed the Pope with feigned promises of a *Crusade. The Pope was firmer in his dealings with the matrimonial affairs of the European princes. He forced King Alfonso IX of León to give up his plan of a marriage with a Portuguese princess within the forbidden degrees, and declared invalid a divorce conceded to King Philip Augustus by his complacent French bishops. He favoured the idea of a Crusade and approved the orders of the Knights *Templar, the *Hospitallers, and the newly founded *Teutonic Order.

His registers are lost, but 330 of his letters are printed in J. P. Migne, PL, ccvi, 867–1240, and a few further documents in N.A., ii (1877), p. 218; xi (1886), p. 398 f., and xii (1887), pp. 411–14. Study by J. Leineweber (Jena, 1905). V. Pfaff, 'Pro posse nostro. Die Ausübung der Kirchengewalt durch Papst Coelestin III' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxxiv, Kanonistische Abteilung, xliii (1957), pp. 89–131, and other works of this author. Mann, x (1914), pp. 383–441. L. Spätling, O.F.M., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1256–8, s.v.; P. Zerbi in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 1254 f., s.v. 'Coelestin III'; R. Mols in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 62–77, incl. further bibl.

CELESTINE V, St. (c. 1215–96), founder of the *Celestine Order and, for some months in 1294, Pope. At the age of 17 he became a *Benedictine, but his love of solitude led him to retire to Monte Morrone in the Abruzzi, where the many disciples who collected around him became the nucleus of the Celestine Order. He became very celebrated as an ascetic and seems to have had some connexions with the widespread religious movement of which the '*Spiritual Franciscans' were a part. When nearly 80 he was elected Pope on 5 July 1294, through an impasse at a Papal *Conclave. His pontificate was astonishing and disastrous. Naïve and ignorant of all procedure, he became a tool in the hands of Charles II of Naples, and, after alienating his supporters, abdicated on 13 Dec. of the same year. His acts were abrogated by his ambitious successor, *Boniface VIII, who also had him arrested and imprisoned in the castle of Fumone, where he died. Partly because of his sanctity, and partly as a political move against Boniface's pontificate, Celestine was canonized by *Clement V in 1313. His baptismal name was Peter, whence he is sometimes known as 'St. Peter Celestine'. Feast day, 19 May, no longer in the universal calendar.

Two versions of a 14th cent. Life in Anal. Boll., ix (1890), pp. 149–200, x (1891), pp. 385–92, and xvi (1897), pp. 393–487, with discussion of sources, xvi, pp. 365–92, and xviii (1899), pp. 34–42. F. X. Seppelt, Monumenta Coelestiniana (1921); F. Baethgen, Der Engelpapst. Idee und Erscheinung (Leipzig, 1943); A. Frugoni, Celestiniana (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, fasc. 6–7; 1954). J. Hollnsteiner, 'Die "Autobiographie" Celestins V' in R.Q., xxxi (1923), pp. 29–40. Mann, xvii (1931), pp. 247–341. L. Oliger, O.F.M., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1258–61, s.v., with bibl.; R. Mols in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 79–101, incl. full bibl.

CELESTINE ORDER. This branch of the *Benedictine Order, founded by Pope *Celestine V (q.v.) in 1250 on Monte Morrone, rapidly rose to great influence and its founder even imposed their constitutions for a time on the mother Benedictine house of *Monte Cassino. The severity of its discipline did not prevent its numbering at one time as many as 150 monasteries. It came to an end in 1785, when the last surviving house at Calavino, near *Trent, was closed.

C. Gérin, 'Les Bénédictins français avant 1789 [xii: Célestins]', in R.Q.H., xix (1876), pp. 509–12. Heimbucher, i, pp. 212–14. P. Schmitz, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 102–4, s.v. 'Célestins', with further bibl. The foundation of the Order is also discussed in lives of Pope Celestine V.

CELESTIUS (5th cent.), heretic. A native of Britain, he was practising as an advocate in *Rome when he met *Pelagius, who induced him to turn from secular pursuits. The two men, alarmed by the low morality of their day, became convinced that it could be reformed only by stressing the responsibility of men for their actions, and so began teaching a doctrine of freewill which left no room for *grace. Celestius went so far as to deny that *baptism is for the remission of sins, and indeed that *original sin ever existed. He was condemned in Africa (whither he had migrated c. 410) by the Council of *Carthage of 412, and retired to *Ephesus. The condemnation was reaffirmed by the Council of Diospolis (Lydda) in 415, and by two African councils in 416. Pope *Innocent I upheld this decision, but his successor, *Zosimus (417), was inclined to favour the two friends, and reversed Innocent's decree, though he was constrained to retract his decision by an Imperial decree of banishment against them. The chief opponents of Celestius and Pelagius were St. *Augustine and St. *Jerome. His teachings were condemned at the Council of Ephesus (431) (cans. 1 and 4).

See bibl. to Pelagius.

CELIBACY OF THE CLERGY. In the E., many early councils asserted or implied the right of the clergy to be married, and this position was stabilized by the Council in *Trullo of 692 (can. 13). At the Council of *Nicaea (325) a proposal to compel all clergy to give up cohabitation with their wives was rejected, and the legal position in the E. has always been the same—priests and deacons may marry before ordination, but not after. Bishops, on the other hand, must be celibate.

In the W., a legal position was gradually reached by which all the higher clergy must be celibate. The earliest canonical enactment is can. 33 of the Council of *Elvira (c. 306). In 386 a *decretal of Pope *Siricius ordered celibacy for 'priests and levites'; this was repeated by *Innocent I (402–17). Similar legislation was introduced in Africa, which even extended to *subdeacons. *Leo the Great (440–61) forbade men to put away their wives on receiving Holy *Orders; they were to go on living with them as brother and sister. This course was open to obvious objections, and it was not long before Gallican councils refused to ordain married men before mutual vows of continence had been exchanged between them and their wives. The wives then retired to a monastery, or were enrolled in the orders of *widows or *deaconesses. Throughout the Middle Ages there were repeated efforts to enforce celibacy on those in Holy Orders, and the Second *Lateran Council of 1139 (can. 7) made the marriage of clerics not only unlawful but invalid. This legislation was repeated at the Council of Trent and incorporated in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici, which also forbade the ordination of married men (cans. 132, 1072).

Practice has not always kept pace with legislation in this matter and there have been periods in the history of the W. Church when clerical concubinage has been rife, e.g. the 10th and 15th cents. It was a matter of debate among the Schoolmen whether celibacy was enjoined on the clergy by the law of God or the law of the Church; and was decided in favour of the latter (St. *Thomas, Sum. Theol. II, ii, q. 88, a. 11). The relation of this law of the Church to the vow of perfect chastity required of subdeacons since the 11th cent. is still the subject of dispute among canonists. The importance of the debate lies in the degree of difficulty in granting dispensations which would follow from the answer. In practice, dispensations have in the past very rarely been given, except for deacons or subdeacons who, being at the point of death, wished for conscience' sake to have their unions ratified. In recent years, however, many dispensations have been granted to priests and deacons who, having left the ministry, wished to marry, and there has been little difficulty for subdeacons who did not propose to proceed to further orders. Since the Second *Vatican Council, which reaffirmed the need for celibacy for those in major orders, there has been much discussion and even agitation to have the law changed so that celibacy might become a genuinely free choice. A vigorous restatement of the traditional position by Pope *Paul VI in his encyclical Sacerdotalis Caelibatus (of 24 June 1967) failed to halt the discussion. The traditional discipline of the *Uniat Churches (a married clergy except for bishops) was specifically exempted from the Vatican Council decree and the encyclical of 1967. Popes have also allowed priests to continue in marriage who contracted marriage during schism, e.g. *Pius VII to priests who married in the French Revolution, and *Julius III to English priests who married in the reign of *Henry VIII.

In the C of E the obligation to celibacy of the clergy was formally abolished in 1549, and thereby the marriage of Abp. T. *Cranmer was technically legalized.

H. C. Lea, History of Sacerdotal Celibacy in the Christian Church (2 vols., 1907; hostile and uncritical in details). F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, i (1897), pp. 121–55 ('Coelibat und Priesterehe'); E. Vacandard, Études de critique et d'histoire religieuse (1905), pp. 69–120 ('Les Origines du célibat ecclésiastique'). The encyclical Sacerdotalis Caelibatus is pr. in A.A.S., lix (1967), pp. 657–97. Works in the recent debate incl. E. Schillebeeck, O.P., Het ambts-celibaat in de branding (Bilthoven, 1966; Eng. tr., 1968); G. H. Frein (ed.), Celibacy: The Necessary Option (New York, 1968); J. Blenkinsopp, Celibacy, Ministry, Church (New York, 1968; London, 1969); and J. F. Colaianni (ed.), Married Priests & Married Nuns (1969). E. Vacandard in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2068–88, s.v. 'Célibat ecclésiastique'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2, 1910), cols. 2802–2832, s.v. 'Célibat', with extensive bibl.; E. Jombart–E. Herman, S.J., in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 132–56, s.v. 'Célibat des clercs', also with bibl. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 481–8, s.v.; P. Delhaye in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 369–74, s.v. 'Celibacy, History of'.

CELL. (1) The private room or apartment of a *religious of either sex. A hermit's cell and those of monastic orders leading eremitical lives, such as the *Camaldolese, were usually separate from each other. In major orders of *Benedictines and *Augustinians the stress on common life long militated against private accommodation, though under modern social conditions it is common. The cell usually contains only bare necessities.

(2) A monastic house dependent on its mother house, e.g. in the choice of its superior and control of its personnel and property. Such establishments were generally small, though some cells of the order of *Cluny were sizable.

(3) In quite recent times the word has come into use for small groups of Christians, mainly lay people, who have pledged themselves to intensive work for the propagation of the Christian faith in the secular surroundings in which their lot is cast. The members of such cells commonly meet together frequently for prayer, study, and mutual counsel and encouragement.

CELLA (also cella coemeterialis). A small chapel erected in cemeteries in early Christian times, and intended primarily for commemorating the departed buried there. Cellae were often also used as places of ordinary worship.

CELLARER. One of the officials or *obedientiaries in a medieval monastic community. In theory he was responsible for the catering, and his chief duty was to see that there was always sufficient food and drink ready at hand. In practice, however, the cellarer was usually responsible for almost the whole of the monastery's dealings with outside tradesmen. Items such as coal, iron, nails, wood, or wax are frequently found in his accounts. For the performance of his duties he was allowed considerable freedom from the Rule, including non-attendance at the Divine *Office and leave of absence to visit the neighbouring markets and fairs.

CELSUS (2nd cent.), pagan philosopher. His 'True Discourse' ('Αληθὴς Λόγος) is the oldest literary attack on Christianity of which the details have survived (c. 178). We know of it from *Origen's reply, 'Contra Celsum', in eight books, which dates from the middle of the 3rd cent. and preserves about nine-tenths of the 'Discourse'. Celsus' attitude is that of a detached pagan observer, interested in, but with no strong feelings about, religion. He praised the *Logos Doctrine and the high Christian code of morals, but he objected to the exclusive claims of the Church. Making his own some of the Jewish objections to Christianity, he criticized much in Biblical history for its miracles and absurdities, and expressed his repugnance to the Christian doctrines of the Incarnation and Crucifixion. Objecting that Christians, by refusing to conform to the State, undermined its strength and powers of resistance, he made an impassioned appeal to them to abandon their religious and political intolerance. All extant MSS. of the 'Contra Celsum' go back to a 13th cent. archetype in the *Vatican Library (No. 386), apart from sections of the first two books preserved in a papyrus found at Toura, near Cairo, in 1941; they derive from the same line of textual tradition.

Reconstruction of 'Αληθὴς Λόγος by O. Glöckner (Kleine Texte, cli; 1924); also by R. Bader (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, xxxiii; 1940). Editio princeps of the 'Contra Celsum' by D. Hoeschel, Augsburg, 1605. Crit. edd. by P. Koetschau in G.C.S. Origenes Werke, i (Leipzig, 1899), pp. 49–374, and ii (ib., 1899), and with Fr. tr. by M. Borret, S.J. (S.C., cxxxii, cxxxvi, cxlvii, and cl; 1967–9). Papyrus text found at Toura ed. J. Scherer (Institut français d'Archéologie orientale, Bibliothèque d'études, xxviii; 1956). Eng. tr. of Contra Celsum, with valuable introd., by H. Chadwick (Cambridge, 1953); also by F. Crombie in A.N.C.L., vols. x and xxiii. The large bibl. includes T. Keim, Celsus' Wahres Wort (Zürich, 1873); E. Pélagaud, Un Conservateur au second siècle. Étude sur Celse (1878); A. Miura-Stange, Celsus und Origenes (Beihefte zur Z.N.T.W., iv; 1926); W. Völker, Das Bild vom nichtgnostischen Christentum bei Celsus (1928); C. Andresen, Logos und Nomos. Die Polemik des Kelsos wider das Christentum (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxx; 1955). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 161–6; J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 52–7, both with further bibl. P. Merlan in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 954–65, s.v.

CELTIC CHURCH, The. The name generally applied to the Church which existed in the British Isles before the mission of St. *Augustine from *Rome in 596–7. It was founded by the 2nd or 3rd cent. at latest by missions from Rome or Gaul. In the 4th cent. it was sufficiently organized and established to send bishops to the Synod of *Arles in 314 and the Council of *Ariminum in 359. It would appear that by the 4th cent. Christianity had extended even beyond the limits of Roman Britain, but from the poverty of the delegates to Ariminum and the fact that there is very little evidence of Christian remains in the rich villas of the period, it seems that it was confined to the poorer people until late in the century, when there are evidences that it spread to the upper classes and the army. A small undated Celtic church has been unearthed at Silchester.

There are few signs that Britain was affected by the heresies of the 4th cent. Although Pelagius was himself a native of the country *Pelagianism did not gain a footing in Britain till 421, when a number of Pelagians sought refuge there, and began to teach their opinions. St. *Germanus of Auxerre paid two visits to Britain in 429 and 447 to check the growth of this heresy. During this period, in spite of the retirement of the Romans, the Celtic Church was in frequent contact with the Church of the Continent, and immediately adopted the arrangements of *Leo I for keeping Easter (455). Similar Continental influence marked the first missions to *Scotland, *Wales, and *Ireland (for which see individual articles).

The coming of the Saxons in the course of the 5th cent. submerged Celtic culture, and with it the Celtic Church in England. The towns, where earlier in the cent. Christianity had had strongest footing, were destroyed or abandoned, and the Christian communities that survived in Cornwall, Wales, and elsewhere, were cut off from intercourse with Rome and the Continent. The Celtic Christians therefore found it hard to approve of the Roman Christianity to which St. Augustine summoned them in 603 to submit; but agreement was effected at the Synod of *Whitby (664) and the Churches of Scotland, Ireland and Wales eventually conformed to Roman usages.

L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Les Chrétientés celtiques (1911; Eng. tr., revised, 1932). F. E. Warren, Liturgy and Ritual in the Celtic Church (1881); W. Stokes, Ireland and the Celtic Church (1907). W. *Bright, Early English Church History (1878); H. Williams, Christianity in Early Britain (1912). W. D. Simpson, The Celtic Church in Scotland. A Study of its Penetration Lines and Art Relationships (Aberdeen University Studies, cxi; 1935). Nora K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958). Nora K. Chadwick, The Age of the Saints in the Early Celtic Church (1961). J. Bulloch, The Life of the Celtic Church (Edinburgh, 1963). L. Gougaud in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2969–3032, s.v. 'Celtiques (liturgies)'; H. Jenner in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 493–504, s.v. 'Celtic Rite'. See also bibl. to Wales, Christianity in.

CEMETERY. A place set apart for the burial of the dead. The Gk. word (κοιμητήριον) means a 'sleeping-place', and seems to have been used exclusively of Christian burial-grounds. RC canon law still insists that, where circumstances allow, the Church should always have its own cemeteries (CIC, 1206), from which the burial of infidels, apostates, heretics, and schismatics is to be excluded. See also Burial Acts.

CENACULUM, The. The 'upper room' or 'cenacle' in *Jerusalem (Mk. 14. 15, Lk. 22. 12, ἀνώγεον; Acts 1. 13, ὑπερῷον) in which the *Last Supper was celebrated and the Holy Ghost descended at *Pentecost. Acc. to St. *Epiphanius, a small Christian church (which appears to have been the only church in Jerusalem until the early 4th cent.) existed on the spot from the time of Hadrian (117–38). A large *basilica on the south-west hill of Jerusalem was erected later on, presumably, the same site. After being several times destroyed and rebuilt, it fell into Muslim hands in the middle of the 16th cent., and has since remained their property. The lower part of the present building is now known as 'David's tomb'.

H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem. Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, ii, Jérusalem nouvelle (1926), pp. 421–81. E. Power, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1064–84, s.v. 'Cénacle'.

CENOBITES. See Coenobites.

CENSER. See Thurible.

CENSURES, Ecclesiastical. Punishments imposed upon an offender against the law of the Church for the good of his soul and for the well-being of the community. Some of the most important are (a) deposition from Holy Orders, i.e. the reduction of an offending cleric to the ranks of the laity; (b) deprivation, i.e. removal of a cleric from a particular office in the Church; (c) public *penance; (d) *excommunication. These censures are imposed only by a competent authority in a public tribunal and for open and notorious offences.

A. Bride in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 169–233, s.v., with bibl.

CENTRE PARTY (Ger. Zentrum). The party founded by the Prussian Catholics in 1870–1 to counteract the anti-Catholic policy of the Conservatives and esp. of the National Liberals. Under the leadership of L. *Windthorst (q.v.) it was the most effective opponent of Bismarck in the '*Kulturkampf'. In the closing phases of the struggle the party had become so strong that the Chancellor could no longer be certain of a majority against it. After the war of 1914–18 the Centre Party became one of the chief bulwarks against the growing numbers of Communists on the left and National Socialists on the right. Under the chancellorship of its member, H. Brüning (1930–2), it made a last effort to stem the rising tides of exaggerated nationalism and open paganism. It was suppressed by A. Hitler together with the other German parties in 1933.

J. K. Zeender in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 397–9, s.v. 'Center Party', with bibl.

CENTURIATORS OF MAGDEBURG, The. The authors of a Church history from its beginnings down to 1400, divided by 'centuries', which was publd. (in Lat.) as the Historia Ecclesiae Christi at Basle, 1559–74. The work, which was dominated by the rigid *Lutheranism and anti-Romanism of M. *Flacius (q.v.), its principal author, depicted the pure Christianity of the NT as coming progressively under the power of the 'Papal Antichrist' until liberated by M. *Luther. In its breadth of conception the work was a landmark in ecclesiastical history; but its inaccuracies, and esp. the liberties it took with the texts of original documents, made it an easy target for C. *Baronius in his Annales Ecclesiastici.

P. Polman, O.F.M., 'Flacius Illyricus, historien de l'Église' in R.H.E., xxxvii (1931), pp. 27–73. J. Massner, Kirchliche Überlieferung und Autorität im Flaciuskreis. Studien zu den Magdeburger Zenturien (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, xiv; 1964). H. Scheible, Die Entstehung der Magdeburger Zenturien (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, clxxxiii; Gütersloh, 1966). See also bibl. to Flacius, Matthias.

CERDO (2nd cent.), Syrian *Gnostic teacher who taught in *Rome c. 140. He maintained that the Creator God revealed in the Law of Moses and the Hebrew Prophets was to be distinguished from the Father of Jesus Christ, and also that only the soul, and not the body, will share in the resurrection. Acc. to *Irenaeus, *Marcion was one of his disciples.

The chief sources include Irenaeus, Haer., i. 27 and iii. 4, *Hippolytus, Haer., vii. 37 and x. 19, and *Tertullian, Adv. Marc., I. ii. Also (Ps.-)Tertullian, Adv. omn. haer., vi (xvi); Epiph., Haer., xli. G. Bareille in D.T.C., ii (1905), col. 2138 f.; E. Peterson in E.C., iii (1950), col. 1313 f., both s.v.

CERE CLOTH (Lat. cera, 'wax'). Acc. to W. usage a cloth impregnated or smeared with wax (also known as a 'chrismale'), which is laid on the surface of the altar to prevent the linen cloths above from becoming soiled, e.g. by the holy oils used in the consecration of the *mensa.

CEREMONIAL. In ecclesiastical usage, the performance of Divine worship with prescribed and formal actions. Strictly 'ceremonial' is concerned with action only, the term '*ritual' being used of the form of words, but the two are often used interchangeably.

CERINTHUS (fl. c. 100), *Gnostic heretic. The source of his opinions is uncertain, but he seems to have had connexions both with the *Ebionites and with Alexandrine Gnosticism. He is said to have taught that the world had been created, not by the supreme God (who, he held, transcended the universe completely), but either by a *Demiurge, a far less exalted being, or by angels, who had produced it out of formless matter. Jesus, he held, began His earthly life as a mere man, though at His baptism 'the Christ', a higher Divine power, descended upon Him, only to depart from Him again before the crucifixion. His doctrines distressed the orthodox. *Polycarp, e.g., is said to have related that John, 'the disciple of the Lord', on hearing that Cerinthus was in the bath-house at *Ephesus, ran out, fearing that the house would fall on the enemy of truth (Eus., Hist. Eccl. III. xxviii. 6). *Irenaeus (Adv. haer. III. xi. 1) asserts that St. John wrote his Gospel to refute Cerinthus, while the *Alogi held the curious belief that Cerinthus was himself the author of Jn. and Rev.

The chief source is Irenaeus, Haer., i. 26; cf. also Hippolytus, Haer., vii. 33. T. *Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, i (1888), pp. 220–62; ii (pt. 2; 1892), pp. 973–91. G. Bardy, 'Cérinthe' in R. Bibl., xxx (1921), pp. 344–73. J. M. Fuller in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 447–9, with bibl.; E. Peterson in E.C., iii (1950), col. 1319 f.

CERNE, Book of. A 9th cent. collection of non-liturgical prayers, largely Celtic in origin. The MS., which once belonged to Cerne Abbey in Dorset, is now in the Cambridge University Library (Ll. i. 10).

The Prayer Book of Aedeluald the Bishop, commonly called the Book of Cerne, ed. by Dom A. B. Kuypers (Cambridge, 1902).

CERTOSA. The Italian name for a *Carthusian religious house.

CERULARIUS. See Michael Cerularius.

CESARINI, JULIAN (1398–1444), cardinal. A member of a noble Roman family, he studied at Perugia and Padua, where he became a friend of *Nicholas of Cusa. He later entered the service of the *Curia and was employed on several diplomatic missions. In 1419 he accompanied Branda de Castiglione on his mission against the *Hussites, and later represented Papal interests in France (1425) and England (1426). He was created cardinal in 1426, and in 1431 was sent as the legate of *Martin V on a crusade against the Hussites. In the same year he was appointed president of the Council of *Basle, where he at first sought to induce the Pope, *Eugenius IV, to adopt a more conciliatory attitude. After the transfer of the Council to Ferrara and *Florence he took a prominent part in the negotiations for the union between the Roman and Greek Churches. In 1442 he was sent to Hungary to preach the Crusade against the Turks. Through his influence King Ladislaus repudiated the Peace of Szegedin (July 1444). The war was then resumed and ended with the total defeat of the Christians at the hands of the Turks at Varna (in Bulgaria) on 10 Nov. 1444, Cesarini being killed in the flight.

Cesarini's correspondence with *Pius II on the Council of Basle is printed among the latter's works (Basle, 1551). E. Hofmann, S.J. (ed.), 'Ein Brief des Kardinals Julian Cesarini an Cosimo von Medici' in O.C.P., v (1939), pp. 233–5. R. C. Jenkins, The Last Crusader. The Life and Times of Cardinal Julian (1861). H. Fechner, Giuliano Cesarini (1398–1444) bis zu seiner Ankunft in Basel am 9. September 1431 (Marburg diss., 1907); R. Becker, Giuliano Cesarini (Münster diss., Kallmünz, 1935). R. Mols, S.J., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 220–49, s.v., with detailed bibl.

CHABURAH (cf. Heb. חָבֵר, 'friend'). In Jewish practice a group of friends formed for religious purposes. The *Talmudic directions suggest that the chief object of such groups was to secure strict observance of the laws of ritual cleanness and of tithe, but there are indications, e.g. in the Berakôth of the *Mishnah and *Tosephta, that they also served a wider social purpose as a common weekly meal, usually on the eves of sabbaths or holy days. It has been argued that the Lord and His disciples formed such a chaburah and that the *Last Supper was a chaburah meal; the thanksgiving or blessing over the bread would then be the Jewish *berakah used when the bread was broken at the beginning of the meal, and that over the cup the berakah at the end. Further support is sought in the Gospel of St. John, which avoids connecting the Last Supper with the Passover meal and asserts that the Crucifixion took place before the feast (18. 28, 19. 14), as well as in the reff. in Acts to weekly (20. 7) or daily (2. 46) Christian assemblies for the breaking of bread; these would be the continuation of the regular chaburah meal of Jesus with His disciples, but with the new significance He had given it at the Last Supper. See also Kiddush.

On such Jewish meals, cf. I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913). Close study of the primary sources, however, leaves it uncertain how far these groups of 'Chaburoth' had any formal organization. Scholars for whom the 'Chaburah' provides the setting of the Last Supper include: W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (1925), pp. 156–93; H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), p. 250; R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934), p. 235 f. (Eng. tr., 1938, p. 278 f.); and G. *Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy (1944), pp. 50–96. For a critique of this view, see J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (ed. 3, 1960), pp. 23–5; Eng. tr. (1966), pp. 29–31.

CHAD, St., also Ceadda (d. 672), Bp. of *Lichfield and brother of St. *Cedd. He was a native of Northumbria and a pupil of St. *Aidan at *Lindisfarne. In 664 on his brother's death he became Abbot of Lastingham, N. Yorks. Shortly afterwards he was irregularly made Bp. of the Northumbrians, with his see at *York, by King Oswy, the King having become impatient at the absence of St. *Wilfrid, who had originally been appointed to the see but had gone to France to receive consecration. On Wilfrid's return Abp. *Theodore denied the legitimacy of Chad's appointment, and he nobly accepted this decision and in 669 retired to Lastingham. In the same year he was sent to be Bp. of the Mercians and fixed his see at Lichfield. He was tireless in spreading the Gospel and journeyed as far afield as S. Humberside, where he is said to have founded the monastery of Barrow. Feast day, 2 Mar.

The main source for his life is *Bede, H.E., iii. 23, 28, and iv. 2 f.; ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 198 f., 206 f., with reff. AA.SS., Mar. I (1668), pp. 143–5. R. H. Warner, Life and Legends of St. Chad, Bishop of Lichfield 669–672 [1871]. Old English homily on the life of St. Chad, first publd. by A. Napier in Anglia, x (1888), pp. 131–56; ed. R. Vleeskruyer (Amsterdam, 1954). Short study by H. E. Savage (York Minster Historical Tracts, iv [1928]). W. R. W. Stephens in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 391–3, s.v. 'Ceadda'.

CHALCEDON, Council of (A.D. 451). The Fourth *Oecumenical Council, held in the city of Chalcedon in Asia Minor, nearly opposite Byzantium. It was convoked by the Emp. *Marcian to deal with the *Eutychian heresy. At the first meeting, held on 8 Oct. 451, some 500–600 bishops were present, all of them Easterns except two bishops from the province of Africa and the two Papal legates, *Paschasinus and Boniface. The decisions of the *Latrocinium (449) were annulled and Eutyches was condemned. The Council then drew up a statement of faith, the so-called *Chalcedonian Definition, and made a large number of important enactments. All the dogmatic decisions of the Council were accepted by the W. Church, but can. 28, which gave the Bp. of *Constantinople the title of *Patriarch and made his see second only to Rome (a canon which had been opposed by the Roman legates), was rejected in the W., in order (it was stated) to protect the interests of the older E. patriarchates. See also foll. art.

Hardouin, ii, 662–772. Mansi, vi (1761), cols. 529–1230, vii (1762), cols. 1–872. Crit. ed. of Acta ed. E. *Schwartz, A.C.O., II (1932–8: 1. Acta Graeca. 2. Versiones Particulares. 3. Versio Antiqua a Rustico Correcta. 4. Leonis Papae I Epistolarum Collectiones. 5. Codex Encyclicus. 6. Indices). Hefele–Leclercq, II (2) (1908), pp. 649–857, with full bibl., p. 650 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 511–531. A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalcedon (3 vols., 1951–54), with many imp. artt. Eng. tr. of art. by A. Grillmeier, S.J., 'Die theologische und sprachliche Vorbereitung der christologischen Formel von Chalcedon', ib., i, pp. 5–205, much expanded, by J. S. Bowden, Christ In Christian Tradition (1965). R. V. Sellers, The Council of Chalcedon (1953). H. M. Diepen, O.S.B., Les Trois Chapitres au Concile de Chalcédoine. Une étude de la Christologie de l'Anatolie ancienne (Oosterhoot, 1953). P.-T. Camelot, O.P., Éphèse et Chalcédoine (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, ii; 1962), pp. 79–182 and 209–235. J. Bois in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 2190–2208, s.v. 'Chalcédoine (Concile de)'; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 324–8; P.-T. Camelot, O.P., in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 423–6, s.v.

CHALCEDON, The Definition of. The statement of the Catholic Faith made by the Council of Chalcedon of 451, and eventually accepted in both E. and W., except by the *Monophysite Churches. It reaffirms the definitions of *Nicaea and *Constantinople, asserting them to be a sufficient account of the orthodox faith about the Person of Christ, but declares that the new errors of *Nestorius and Eutyches must be formally repudiated. It therefore expressly excluded the views (1) of those who deny the title Theotokos ('God-bearer') to the Virgin *Mary, thereby implying that the Humanity of Christ is separable from His Divine Person; and (2) of those who confuse the Divine and Human natures in one, and therefore hold that the Divine nature is by this confusion passible. The synodical Epistles of *Cyril to Nestorius and to the Easterns, and the Epistle of *Leo to *Flavian (the *Tome), are reasserted; the duality of Sons, the passibility of the Godhead, any mixture or confusion of the two natures, the thesis that the Human nature in Christ is of a heavenly or any other essence, and the doctrine which holds two natures before the Incarnation, which became one at the Incarnation, are rejected; and the existence of One Person in Two Natures, which are united unconfusedly, unchangeably, indivisibly, inseparably (ἀσυγχύτως, ἀτρέπτως, ἀδιαιρέτως, ἀχωρίστως), is affirmed.

It seems clear that its purpose was to define the limits of legitimate speculation rather than to make an exact and final statement of a theological position. Even so, it did not prove universally acceptable, and for two centuries after the Council Christendom was torn by the Monophysite and *Monothelite heresies. From the end of the 7th cent., however, it has been generally received both in E. and W., except among the small Monophysite bodies; and its theological standpoint was in the 8th cent. expressed in systematic form by St. *John of Damascus in his 'De Fide Orthodoxa'.

The text is included in all edd. of the Acta (see previous bibl.). Only crit. ed. of Gk. text in A.C.O., II, 1 (2), 1933, pp. 126–30; the early Lat. versions (Versio Antiqua, Versio Rustica) are also printed by E. Schwartz, ib. 2 (3). F. E. *Brightman, 'Six Notes. vi: The Definition of Chalcedon', in J.T.S., xxix (1927–8), p. 164 f. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., 'Das Glaubenssymbol von Chalcedon. Sein Text, sein Werden, seine dogmatische Bedeutung' in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J., Das Konzil von Chalcedon, i (1951), pp. 389–418. On the theology of the Definition, see, besides Histories of Doctrine and several essays in A. Grillmeier–H. Bacht, op. cit., also J. S. Macarthur, Chalcedon (1931), and R. V. Sellers, The Council of Chalcedon (1953), esp. pp. 207–350.

CHALDEAN CHRISTIANS. The convenient, if not very appropriate, title applied to the descendants of the ancient *Nestorian Churches now in communion with the see of Rome. They fall into two main groups, those of Turkey and Persia and those of *Malabar. When in the 13th cent. the Nestorians of Turkey and Persia came into contact with RC missionaries, negotiations for reunion were begun which lasted over centuries, and in 1830 a Chaldean body was established by Pius VIII, with George Hormizd as the first *Uniat 'Patriarch of Babylon'. Their customs and discipline have been increasingly assimilated to those of the Latin rite, and they follow the Gregorian Calendar; but they preserve the use of Syriac as their liturgical language. The total number in this Turco-Persian group is probably some 250,000. For the Indian group, see Malabar Christians.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc. [1935]), pp. 227–41. J. Tfinkdji, 'L'Église chaldéenne autrefois et aujourd'hui' in Annuaire Pontifical Catholique, xvii (1914), pp. 449–69. G. Beltrami, La chiesa caldea nel secolo dell'unione (Orientalia Christiana, xxix, fasc. 83; 1933), with bibl. S. Bello, La Congrégation de S. Hormisdas et l'Église chaldéenne dans la première moitié du XIXe siècle (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, fasc. cxxii; 1939). H. W. Codrington, 'The Chaldean Liturgy' in The Eastern Churches Quarterly, ii (1937), pp. 79–83, 138–52, 202–9; A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom, ii (Rome, 1948), ch. 8, pp. 251–415, with bibl. J. Labourt in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 559–61, s.v.; E. Tisserant in D.T.C., xi (1931), cols. 225–323, s.v. 'Nestorienne (l'Église)'; R. Rabban and C. K. von Euw in N.C.E., iii (1967), pp. 427–32, s.v. 'Chaldean Rite', with bibl. On Chaldean canon law see J. Dauvillier in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 292–388, s.v. 'Chaldéen (droit)'.

CHALDEE. An alternative, but misleading, name for *Aramaic (the language used in a few passages in the OT). The word appears to go back to St. *Jerome and probably owes its origin to an incorrect identification of the languages referred to in Dan. 1. 4 and 2. 4 respectively. In recent times it has practically gone out of currency in this sense.

CHALICE (Lat. calix, 'cup'). In eccl. usage, the cup used to contain the wine consecrated in the Eucharist. The earliest Christian chalices were commonly of glass, though other materials were sometimes used. By the 4th cent. the precious metals had become general, and valuable chalices of gold or silver set with precious stones are mentioned by St. *Augustine and St. *Chrysostom. The use of materials other than metal was not forbidden, however, till the 9th cent., and has again been allowed in the RC Church since 1969. The earliest form of chalice, frequently depicted in the catacombs, consists of a bowl with two handles but without stem. In Carolingian times two types were known: ministerial chalices, used for the communion of the people at times of general communion (corresponding to the earlier type), and sacrificial chalices, for the use of the priest. From the 14th cent. the stem was gradually elongated, and the bowl of the chalice made smaller as communion in one kind became universal, though a chalice of unconsecrated wine was often offered to the communicant as he left the altar. In England after the Reformation the restoration of communion in both kinds caused the chalices of the 17th and following cents. to be made considerably larger than before.

Rohault, iv [1887], pp. 45–153, with plates cclxx–cccxiv; Braun, C.A. (1932), pp. 17–196, with plates 1–40. V. H. Elbern, 'Der eucharistische Kelch im frühen Mittelalter' in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Vereins für Kunstwissenschaft, xvii (1963), pp. 1–76, 117–88. W. W. Watts, Catalogue of Chalices and other Communion Vessels (Victoria and Albert Museum, 1922), pp. 1–38 and 47–70. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 1595–1645, s.v. 'Chalice', with reff.

CHALICE VEIL. A square of material, usually silk, normally corresponding in colour to the Eucharistic vestments, used in the W. to cover the *chalice and *paten during those parts of the *Mass when they are not in use, i.e. until the *offertory and after the *ablutions. It is a comparatively late ornament; even in the 16th cent. the chalice was commonly brought to the altar in a 'sacculum' or small bag. The chalice was previously covered only with a second folded *corporal, which was spread over it after the Communion. The rubric of the BCP, ordering that the chalice be covered with a 'fair linen cloth', may more nearly correspond to this usage. The *Carthusians still use instead a large corporal and draw one end over the vessels. See also Humeral Veil.

N. F. Robinson, S.S.J.E., 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use' in Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society, vi (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 140–53. Braun, L.P., pp. 213–15.

CHALLONER, RICHARD (1691–1781), author of *The Garden of the Soul. Born at Lewes of *Presbyterian parents, Challoner became a RC while still a boy, and at the age of 14 was sent to *Douai to be trained for the priesthood. Here he was successively student, professor, and vice-president, and did not return to England till 1730.

In 1738 he deemed it wise to leave England again for a short time, owing to Conyers Middleton's resentment at a preface in which Challoner had attacked him. In 1741 he was consecrated at Hammersmith Bishop (in partibus) of Debra and coadjutor to the *Vicar Apostolic, Dr. Petre, whom he succeeded in 1758. Challoner was the author of many books, both controversial and devotional, including a new translation of the Bible. His Garden of the Soul, first issued in 1740 as a prayer-book for the laity, long remained one of the favourite devotional books of English RCs, though its sober liturgical content was much diluted in some later editions. His Meditations for Every Day of the Year (1753) also enjoyed popularity.

Life by J. Barnard (London, 1784). E. H. Burton, The Life and Times of Bishop Challoner, 1691–1781 (2 vols., 1909). Later study, based on Burton, by M. Trappes-Lomax (London, 1936). E. Duffy (ed.), Challoner and his Church (1981). T. Cooper in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 440–3. P. Chauvin, O.S.B., in D.H.G.E., xii (1953), cols. 282–4, s.v.

CHALMERS, JAMES (1841–1901), *Congregationalist missionary to New Guinea. Born in the Scottish Highlands, he intended to enter the ministry of the *United Presbyterian Church, but, after acceptance by the *L.M.S., he pursued his studies at Cheshunt College. After ordination, he left England in 1866, and, after a long and adventurous voyage, reached Rarotonga in the New Hebrides. There he did much to render the Church indigenous before sailing (in 1877) for New Guinea. In what was then an unknown land, full of savagery and human degradation, he slowly won the confidence of the people, so that he was able to facilitate the establishment of British rule in the northern part of the country in 1888. He vigorously opposed any move to westernize the dress or customs of the natives. Like D. *Livingstone, Chalmers stands out as a missionary-explorer, and his two books, Work and Adventure in New Guinea (1885) and Pioneering in New Guinea (1887), contained much new geographical detail. His sphere of activity was constantly extending, taking in a visit to Samoa, where he made contact with R. L. Stevenson. His last ten years were devoted to the task of establishing peaceful relations with the many wild tribes, and to this end he sailed for Dopima off the south coast of Papua, where he and some of his party were brutally put to death.

R. Lovett, James Chalmers, his Autobiography and Letters (1902). A. R. Buckland in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 343–5.

CHALMERS, THOMAS (1780–1847), theologian, preacher, and philanthropist. In 1823 he became professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrews, and in 1828 of theology at Edinburgh. He was known in his early days as an able evangelical preacher, a formidable intellectual defender of Christianity, a brilliant mathematician, and a pioneer of popular education and modern methods of poor relief. But his chief importance lies in his leadership of the movement for the choice of ministers in the Established Church of Scotland by the people, and of the Free Church schism of 1843 which followed its failure. In that year he left the Established Church with a considerable body of followers, and founded the *Free Church of Scotland, becoming in the same year principal and professor of divinity at New College, Edinburgh. His theology was Calvinistic, with the stress rather on the needs of man than on the election of God. His many writings include the first of the *Bridgewater Treatises. See also Disruption.

W. Hanna, The Life and Writings of T. Chalmers (4 vols., 1849–52); H. Watt, Thomas Chalmers and the Disruption (1943). W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., ix (1887), pp. 449–54.

CHAMBERS, JOHN CHARLES (1817–74), author of *The Priest in Absolution (q.v.). Educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1842 to a curacy at Sedbergh, Cumbria. On his ordination as priest in 1846 he proceeded to Perth, where he worked till 1855. From 1856 till his death he was incumbent of St. Mary's, Crown Street, and warden of the 'House of Charity', both in Soho. Here he was remarkably successful as a mission priest, working esp. among the ragged children in his cure. Besides various religious writings issued under his own name, he was the anonymous author of the celebrated Priest in Absolution (Part i, 1866; Part ii, 1870).

See W. Wroth in D.N.B., x (1887), p. 19 f., where, however, all reference to The Priest in Absolution has been avoided. J. Embry, The Catholic Movement and the Society of the Holy Cross (1931), ch. v, pp. 97–127.

CHAMBERS, ROBERT (1802–71), Scottish publisher and author. In 1818 he began business with a bookstall in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and eventually joined his brother, William Chambers (1800–1883), in the publishing firm of W. & R. Chambers. He was the part or sole author of a great mass of encyclopaedic works. His most famous production, the Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation (1844), was a popular handbook of the natural sciences (geology, zoology, &c.), defending an evolutionary (essentially Lamarckian) theory of man's origin. The work attracted much controversy; but it helped to prepare the public for the Darwinian theory. Great pains were taken to preserve anonymity—it was ascribed to the Prince Consort, Charles Lyell, and others—but in Chambers's later years his authorship was widely accepted, and publicly avowed by Alexander Ireland in a posthumous edition of 1884. Chambers himself appears to have been a man of sincere piety, and to have regarded the question at issue as purely one of science.

William Chambers (brother), Memoir of Robert Chambers (1872). A. Ireland, 'Story of the authorship of the "Vestiges" told for the first time' prefixed to his ed., the twelfth, of Chambers, Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation (1884), pp. vii–xxvii. M. Millhauser, Just Before Darwin. Robert Chambers and Vestiges (Middleton, Conn. [1959]). F. Watt in D.N.B., x (1887), pp. 23–5. C.B.E.L., iii, p. 709 f.

CHANCEL (Lat. cancellus). Originally the part of the church immediately about the altar, now called the 'sanctuary'. When further space was reserved for clergy and choir westward from the sanctuary, the word was applied to this area as well, and hence is now normally employed for the entire area within the main body of the church east of the nave and transepts. In medieval times a screen often separated chancel and nave, and some modern churches have followed this arrangement. In England, the repair of the chancel, unlike that of the rest of the church, usually falls upon the incumbent, or upon the *lay rector, where such exists, but custom occasionally makes the parishioners responsible. Where a lay rector is responsible, he probably has the right of access to the chancel at all times, but not that of excluding the incumbent.

Francis Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916).

CHANCELLOR, Diocesan. The chief representative of the *Bishop in the administration of the temporal affairs of his diocese. In particular he is the usual president of the *Consistory Court (q.v.). The office was orig. that of a private secretary; but as the *Archdeacon's responsibilities extended and he lost his personal connexion with the Bishop, many of his former duties passed to the chancellor. In the C of E he nowadays performs the duties of the Bishop's *Official Principal and of his *Vicar-general (qq.v.). The extent of his jurisdiction varies somewhat acc. to the terms of the Bishop's letters patent appointing him. Normally his chief function is the hearing of applications for and granting of *faculties, *dispensations, etc. He is statutorily responsible for the fixing of tables of fees in new parishes, also for hearing, with assessors, complaints against clerics under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure of 1963, provided that these do not involve matters of doctrine, ritual or ceremonial. Through his surrogates, he also issues *marriage licences. In the C of E the chancellor must be 'at least thirty years old and either a barrister at law of at least seven years' standing or a person who has held high judicial office' (can. G 2 of the 1969 Canons). He is not ordinarily in *Holy Orders, but must be a communicant. If the Bishop fails to appoint a chancellor, it falls to the *Metropolitan to do so.

In the RC Church the Diocesan Chancellor, who is invariably a priest, is responsible for the preservation and arrangement of the diocesan archives (CIC, can. 372). In addition he is sometimes the confidential secretary of the Bishop and does much of the work otherwise executed by vicars general.

In England the title of chancellor is also held by one of the four principal dignitaries of *cathedrals of the Old Foundation. He was responsible for the Cathedral School and also the library. In modern times he is often assigned wider educational functions.

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. by W. G. F. Phillimore), ii (1895), pp. 914, 916 f., 929–33, 938 f.; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 62, 143–7, 151, and 153 f.

CHANCERY, Papal, the name attached, in the late 12th cent., to the Pope's secretariat. Arrangements for drafting papal letters and keeping archives are traceable to the 4th cent. and to classical models, but the titles of officers changed over the centuries. In 819 the headship passed to the Librarian, and late in the 11th cent. to the Chancellor. He was always a *Cardinal. After vacancies, 1187–91 and 1197–1205, the office lapsed in 1216 until *Pius X revived it in 1908. Instead, a Vice-Chancellor (after 1295 a Cardinal) ruled the Chancery. The growth of papal power depended much upon the impressive muniments in its registers and the scribal and legal expertise of its secretariat. By *John XXII's time (1316–34) Regulae cancellariae determined the terms on which papal graces were granted and gave the Chancery quasi-legislative power. From the 15th cent. chancery control of papal correspondence diminished and its influence was restricted by the development of new offices.

H. Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre für Deutschland und Italien (2 vols. + index, 1889–1960), esp. i, pp. 158–252; ed. 2 (1912), pp. 192–352. R. L. Poole, Lectures on the History of the Papal Chancery down to the Time of Innocent III (1915), incl. reff. to earlier work. P. Herde, Beiträge zum päpstlichen Kanzlei- und Urkundenwesen im dreizehnten Jahrhundert (Münchener Historische Studien, Abteilung Geschichtl. Hilfswissenschaften, i; 1961, ed. 2, 1967). C. R. Cheney, The Study of the Medieval Papal Chancery (Lecture; Glasgow, 1966), with bibl. reff. F. Claeys-Bouuaert in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 454–7, s.v. 'Chancelier (1). De la sainte Église romaine', and ib., cols. 464–71, s.v. 'Chancellerie'.

CHANNEL ISLANDS, Christianity in the. Christianity was apparently introduced into the Channel Islands about the 5th–6th cent., largely by the saints who are commemorated in many of the place-names of the islands. In 933 the islands became the property of the Dukes of Normandy, but after the Norman Conquest, when England and Normandy were united under the same sovereign, it was doubtful for some time to which part of his dominions they were conceived to belong. After the separation of England and Normandy (1204) they were annexed by *John to England. Between 1482 and 1486 the islands were granted neutrality in the English-French wars; but this neutrality was annulled by William of Orange in 1689. These changes in political status affected ecclesiastical history. Before the Reformation the islands had formed part of the diocese of Coutances (on the neighbouring mainland), except for a time under King John, when they had belonged to *Exeter, and under *Henry VI (d. 1471), when they had been attached to *Salisbury. In 1568 they were finally annexed to *Winchester. In the 16th cent. Protestant refugees from France and elsewhere induced the islanders to adopt *Presbyterianism; but Episcopalian polity and canons agreeable to the standards of the C of E were imposed at the end of the reign of *James I and this has been the official creed since that time, though even now *Huguenot Protestantism is strong. The two large islands of Jersey and Guernsey have each a dean, who is also a parochial incumbent.

French trr. of the BCP for use in the Channel Islands were authorized and publd. at London in 1616 and 1667, the latter being a rendering of the 1662 Book by J. Durel. P. Falle, An Account of the Island of Jersey (1694), pp. 115–92 (ed. E. Durell, 1837, pp. 175–262); J. Duncan, The History of Guernsey (1841), pp. 314–404. On the introd. of Christianity into the Channel Islands, M. Pégot-Ogier, Histoire des iles de la Manche (1881), pp. 37–49; E. F. Carey, The Channel Islands (1904), pp. 22–32. M. Lelièvre, Histoire du méthodisme dans les iles de la Manche, précédée de l'histoire de la réformation huguenote dans cet archipel (1885).

CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY (1780–1842), American *Unitarian pastor. He graduated at Harvard in 1798, became regent there in 1802, and in 1803 was appointed pastor of the Congregational Church in Federal Street, Boston. In the schism some time later between conservative and liberal *Congregationalists in America, Channing espoused the liberal or Unitarian cause, and preached against the doctrines of the *Trinity, the *Atonement and *total depravity. From about 1820 he was considered to be a Unitarian, and is often reckoned the greatest American Unitarian theologian; but he disapproved of Unitarianism as a sect, and regarded himself as belonging 'not to a sect, but to the community of free minds'. He 'desired to escape the narrow walls of a particular church'.

Works (5 vols., Boston, 1841; 2 vols., London, 1865). Memoir by William Henry Channing (3 vols., London, 1848). Other Lives by Elizabeth P. Peabody (Boston, Mass., 1880), J. W. Chadwick (ib., 1903), A. W. Brown (Syracuse, N.Y., 1957), and M. H. Rice (New York, 1961). R. L. Patterson, The Philosophy of William Ellery Channing (New York, 1952).

CHANTAL, St. JANE. See Jane Frances de Chantal, St.

CHANTRY. A term applied to the office or the benefice maintained to sing or say Mass for the souls of the founder and his friends, and also to any little chapel in which such masses were usually said. The chapel usually took the form either of an altar erected in a space partitioned off for the purpose within the parent building, or of a building constructed as a 'chantry chapel', annexed to the church or detached from it. In the latter case, the chantry chapel, which was often close to the churchyard or at the entrance of a bridge, might have an extra story, designed for the more secular duties of the chantry priest.

The creation of a chantry chapel in the later Middle Ages in England required a monetary endowment for its erection and upkeep, the permission of the *ordinary, the consent of the crown for the alienation of lands held in *mortmain, and a guarantee to the priest of the parish that the chantry priest would not interfere with his rights.

Although the erection of chantries and the endowment of chantry priests dates back to the early Middle Ages, it was only in the 14th and 15th cents. that chantries became numerous. In addition to his purely ecclesiastical duties the chantry priest often had to act as schoolmaster, curate, or chaplain. At the Reformation the fate of the chantries was not long in the balance. In 1545, owing to the financial needs of the French war, an Act was passed stating that the possessions of chantries were generally misapplied and vesting them in the King for the term of his life; and commissioners were appointed to inquire into their property. Although some surrendered voluntarily it seems doubtful if any chantries were suppressed before the death of Henry VIII. In 1547 a new Act was passed suppressing some 2,374 chantries and guild chapels. Though it was provided that the money should be applied to public and charitable purposes, much of it merely went into the pockets of Edward VI's advisers. It was laid down, however, that pensions should be paid to the chantry priests. One of the chief losses to religious life was educational. The chantries had frequently been educational centres, and indeed, many of them later evolved into the 'Edwardian' grammar schools.

F. R. Raines (ed.), A History of the Chantries within the County Palatine of Lancaster, being the Reports of the Royal Commissioners of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Queen Mary (Chetham Society, lix and lx; 1862); A. Hamilton Thompson (ed.), 'The Chantry Certificates for Leicestershire returned under the Act of 37 Henry VIII., cap. iv., with an Introduction and Supplementary Documents' in Associated Architectural Societies' Reports & Papers, xxx (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 463–570; id., 'The Certificates of the Chantry Commissioners for the College of Southwell in 1546 and 1548, with an Introduction and Notes' in Transactions of the Thoroton Society, xv (1912), pp. 63–158; id., 'The Chantry Certificate Rolls for the County of Nottingham', ib., xvi (1913), pp. 91–133, xvii (1914), pp. 59–119, xviii (1915), pp. 83–184; C. W. Foster–A. H. Thompson (edd.), 'Chantry Certificates for Lincoln and Lincolnshire, returned in 1548 under the Act of Parliament of 1 Edward VI' in Associated Architectural Societies' Reports & Papers, xxxvi (pt. 2; 1922), pp. 184–294, xxxvii (pt. 1; 1923), pp. 18–106; J. E. Ray, Sussex Chantry Records (Sussex Record Society, xxxvi; 1931); A. Hussey (ed.), Kent Chantries (Kent Archæological Society, Records Branch, xii; 1936). K. L. Wood-Legh, Perpetual Chantries in Britain, based on the Birkbeck Lectures 1954–5 (Cambridge, 1965), with bibl. A. Hamilton Thompson, The Historical Growth of the Parish Church (1911), ch. 2, pp. 24–50; F. Bond, An Introduction to English Church Architecture from the Eleventh to the Sixteenth Century, i (1913), pp. 102–12; G. H. Cook, Mediaeval Chantries and Chantry Chapels (1947). A. Kreider, English Chantries. The Road to Dissolution (Harvard Historical Studies, xcvii; 1979).

CHAPEL. The word, which is first found in Marculfus (7th cent.), seems to derive from the temporary structure in which the Kings of France housed the 'cape' (late Lat. cappella, dim. of cappa) of St. *Martin (q.v.) when carrying it on their military campaigns as a sacred relic. By an extension of use it was applied to shrines containing other relics (cf. esp. the '*Sainte-Chapelle' at *Paris, built to receive the *Crown of Thorns), and then to a variety of buildings which in various ways were less than churches. They include the following:

(1) Chapels of a private institution, such as a school, college, or hospital. Such chapels are often of imposing dimensions, e.g. those of some of the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. (2) RC and dissenting places of worship, in distinction from the English parish churches. Before the 19th cent. the word 'church' was rarely applied to such buildings. Hence 'Church and Chapel' was a common phrase for 'Members of the C of E and Nonconformists'. In Ireland the term is still current for RC churches, though these are often larger than the Protestant churches in the same town. (3) A part of a large church, or cathedral, with a separate altar. The dedication of such chapels is commonly other than that of the main church. One of them (frequently the most considerable of them) is often dedicated to the BVM and hence known as the '*Lady Chapel' (q.v.). (4) The '*Chapels Royal' (q.v.), which differ from cathedral and parish churches in being under the direct jurisdiction of the Sovereign. (5) A '*Chapel of Ease' (q.v.), a building for the ease of parishioners who live too far from the parish church. (6) A '*Proprietary Chapel' (q.v.), a church in private hands; there are very few, if any, now surviving in England.

On the Continent the word is often used for the chancel of a church. It has hence come to be applied to a (musical) choir, whether religious or secular, e.g. in Kapellmeister ('the master of a choir').

See also Oratory, esp. for the RC legislation on chapels, and Chantry.

O.E.D., ii (1893), pp. 274–6, s.v.

CHAPEL OF EASE. A chapel subordinate to a mother church, for the ease of parishioners in prayers and preaching. From the 12th cent. such chapels were frequently founded, and many by custom or express licence rose to parochial status and were used for the administration of the Sacraments and for burials. They proved esp. useful in the vast parishes of N. England, where distance and natural obstacles made attendance at the mother church difficult, if not impossible, for many parishioners. Some of these foundations disappeared during or shortly after the Edwardian dissolutions (c. 1548) and many have become independent parish churches. In modern times chapels of ease have usually been served by the parish clergy as opportunity allows, without the appointment of a separate priest-in-charge.

CHAPEL ROYAL. A private chapel attached to a Royal court. In England these chapels are not subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated, but to the 'Dean of the Chapels Royal'. They are now regularly served by priests-in-ordinary appointed by the Crown. The present English Chapels Royal are (or are situate at) St. James's Palace; Buckingham Palace; Windsor Castle; Sandringham; Chapel Royal, Windsor Great Park; Hampton Court; Balmoral; The Royal College of St. Katherine by the Tower; the Chapels Royal of St. John the Evangelist and St. Peter ad vincula within H.M. Tower of London and The Queen's Chapel of the Savoy. Several of these have had a distinguished tradition of choral music. The *Sainte-Chapelle at Paris was formerly a Chapel Royal of the French court.

E. F. Rimbault (ed.), The Old Cheque-Book, or Book of Remembrance, of the Chapel Royal, from 1561 to 1744 (Camden Society, N.S., iii, 1872). J. H. Denton, English Royal Free Chapels (1970). W. H. G. Flood, 'The Beginnings of the Chapel Royal' in Music & Letters, v (1924), pp. 85–90; E. S. Roper, 'Music at the English Chapels Royal c. 1135–Present Day' in Proceedings of the Musical Association, xliv (1928), pp. 19–33. D. W. Stevens in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), ii (1954), pp. 176–80, s.v.

CHAPLAIN. Orig. a priest or minister who has the charge of a *chapel (q.v.). He is ordinarily a cleric who performs non-parochial duties.

Chaplains are often appointed to monarchs, to bishops and other high ecclesiastical dignitaries; they are also appointed to serve in various institutions, such as schools, colleges, prisons, hospitals, cemeteries, and at embassies, legations, and consulates abroad. The Indian Civil Service used to appoint a number of chaplains. In the armies, navies, and air forces of most Christian countries chaplains are appointed, both permanent and temporary. In Great Britain Army and R.A.F. chaplains are given permanent or temporary commissions, and rank equivalent to captain or above according to seniority; in the Navy they do not hold official rank; and in all the services these chaplains are drawn from all the larger religious bodies. Chaplains appointed by the State are paid by the State, those by private persons by their employers.

CHAPLET (Fr. chapelet, dim. of Old Fr. chape, 'headgear'; hence a 'crown' or 'wreath'). The name given to the three parts into which the devotion of the *Rosary is divided, each corresponding to a set of five of the fifteen *Mysteries. It thus consists of five *decades, each concerned with one Mystery, and forms a complete devotion in itself. The word is also used of the string of beads constructed to count the prayers of one complete chaplet of the Rosary devotion and sometimes to denote the devotion as a whole. (Chapelet is the word most commonly used in France in this last sense.) The name has also been adopted for a devotion of Rosary type taught in the C of E by Fr. M. W. T. Conran, S.S.J.E., entitled A Chaplet of Prayer and sanctioned by certain bishops for public use in their dioceses. It uses different prayers and Mysteries from the customary ones.

CHAPMAN, JOHN (1865–1933), NT and Patristic scholar. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and ordained deacon in the C of E in 1889. In 1890 he joined the RC Church and in 1892 entered the *Benedictine Order. In 1913 he was sent for a year as Superior to *Caldey Island after the community there had joined the RC Church. He became Prior of *Downside in 1922 and Abbot in 1929.

In his John the Presbyter and the Fourth Gospel (1911) he sought to disprove the existence of a '*John the Elder' distinct from St. John the Apostle, and in Matthew, Mark, and Luke (ed. J. M. T. Barton; 1937) to show the priority of St. Matthew's Gospel to the other *Synoptists. He also endeavoured to rehabilitate the supposed interpolations in the text of St. *Cyprian's 'De Unitate Ecclesiae', which appear to tell in favour of the primacy of the Pope. His other writings include Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), St. Benedict and the Sixth Century (1929), and his valuable Spiritual Letters (1935).

The Spiritual Letters of Dom John Chapman, O.S.B., ed. with introd. memoir by R. Hudleston, O.S.B. (1935). Id. in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 488–92, s.v.

CHAPTER (Lat. capitulum). The word is in current use in a variety of ecclesiastical senses:

(1) Orig. it denoted a section of the monastic rule, such as was daily read publicly in religious houses.

(2) The assembly of the members of a religious house to listen to this reading or for similar purposes (receiving the abbot's instructions, transacting the business of the monastery, &c.). (See also Chapter House.) By extension the assembly of the monks or their representatives of a whole province or order came to be referred to as a 'provincial chapter' or 'general chapter'.

(3) The members of a religious house in their corporate capacity. Hence

(4) The members of any corporate body responsible for an ecclesiastical institution. In England esp. of the body responsible for the spiritual and temporal concerns of a cathedral church. In some cathedrals two capitular bodies (the Lesser and Greater Chapters) exist, with different functions, the smaller body usually consisting of the residentiary members and being included in the larger body (whose members are commonly known as 'Prebendaries' or 'Honorary Canons').

The duties of cathedral chapters in the RC Church are laid down in CIC, cans. 391–444. On chapters in the C of E, H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 127–46. A. H. Thompson in D.E.C.H. (ed. 1948), pp. 103–5; L. R. Misserey, O.P., in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 595–610. See also bibl. to Canon.

CHAPTER, Little. A short lesson of a verse or two of Scripture, included in each of the *Breviary Offices except the *Office of Readings. In the 1971 Breviary it is called the 'Lectio Brevis' ('Short Reading').

CHAPTER HOUSE. A building used for meetings of a cathedral or monastic chapter. Separate buildings for such purposes appear early in the 9th cent. They are usually rectangular in shape, but a small number of polygonal ones were built in England, mainly c. the end of the 13th cent.

CHARACTER. In the Catholic theology of the Sacraments, the indelible quality which *Baptism, *Confirmation, and *Ordination are held to imprint on the soul. As this character is indelible and, even after the gravest sins, including apostasy, therefore remains, none of these Sacraments can be received more than once by the same person. The doctrine received explicit formulation, largely under the influence of St. *Augustine, by the Scholastics, but it was foreshadowed from an early date by such expressions as 'the Lord's seal' (σφραγὶς τοῦ Κυρίου) applied by *Clement of Alexandria to Baptism, itself based on such NT passages as Eph. 1. 13.

CHARDON, LOUIS (c. 1596–1651), French mystical author. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1618 at the reformed Convent S. Annuntiationis at *Paris, where most of his life was spent in the offices of novice master and spiritual director. His greatest work, La Croix de Jésus (1647), for a long time remained almost forgotten, until the study of H. *Bremond directed the attention of a wider public to it. Drawing from the teaching of Pseudo-*Dionysius and J. *Tauler, as well as from the *Thomist theology of grace, he builds his doctrine of the mystical life on the action of *Sanctifying Grace in the soul and the presence in it of the Three Divine Persons. Like St. *John of the Cross, he lays great emphasis on the salutary effects of spiritual desolation. Among his minor works are La Vie de saint Samson d' Yore (1647), Raccourci de l'art de méditer (1649), and Méditations sur la passion de Jésus-Christ (1650), as well as translations of St. *Catherine of Siena and J. Tauler.

Modern ed. of 'La Croix de Jésus' by F. Florand, O.P. (Paris, 1937); review by H. D. Simonin in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, vii (1937), pp. 337–40. Eng. tr. of 'La Croix de Jésus' by R. T. Murphy, O.P., and Josepha Thornton (2 vols., St. Louis, Mo., and London, 1957–9). Bremond, viii (1928), pp. 3–77. Series of articles by F. Florand, O.P., in La Vie spirituelle, Suppl., xlii (1935), pp. 15–57, 108–27; xliv (1935), pp. 17–55, 85–96; xlv (1936), pp. 22–35, 100–20; lviii (1939), pp. 33–43, incl. reff. to other works. F. Florand, O.P., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 498–503.

